APOLLODORUS. A great Number of Perſons, of different Profeſſions, and great Merit, have been called by this Name. Scipio Tetti (a), a Neapolitan, compoſed a Treatiſe of the Apollodorus's, which was printed at Rome, in the Year 1555, with the Bibliotheca of Apollodorus tranſlated into Latin by Benedictus Ægius (b). Dr Thomas Gale re-touched this Subject above an Hundred Years after (c). Mr Moreri has given us many Articles under this Name, which ſtand in need of being reviſed. He forgot one Illuſtrious Apollodorus, the only Perſon of the Name, whom I propoſe to ſpeak of.

(a) Moreri calls him Tattius, inſtead of Tettius.

(b) See Nicodemo's Additions to the Bibliotheque of Naples.

(c) See his Apollodorus, printed at Paris, with other Treaties, in 1675.

APOLLODORUS, a famous Architect, in the Days of Trajan, and Adrian, was of Damaſcus. He had the Direction of the Stone Bridge, which Trajan cauſed to be built over the Danube, in the Year 104; and which paſſed for the moſt magnificent of all the ſumptuous Buildings of That Emperor. Procopius mentions it (a); and it is probable, Apollodorus left a Deſcription of it in Writing. Adrian, who piqued himſelf on underſtanding all Arts and Sciences to Perfection, ſo far as to entertain a Jealouſy, and Ill-Will, towards thoſe, who acquired an eminent Reputation in their Profeſſions, had particular Reaſons to hate Apollodorus; for, as Trajan diſcourſed, one Day, with this great Architect, about ſome Buildings, which he deſigned to erect in Rome, Adrian would needs give his Opinion, and did it, like one, who underſtood nothing of the Matter (b). Apollodorus ſaid roughly to him, Go, and paint Citruls *, As for theſe Matters, we are now diſcourſing of, you are intirely ignorant of them. Adrian, in thoſe Days, ſpent his Time in painting Citruls, or Gourds, and even boaſted of it. This Inſult of Apollodorus coſt him dear; Adrian never forgot it; and, when he came to be Emperor, took care to be revenged. He would not employ Apollodorus; He baniſhed him; and, at laſt, cauſed him to be accuſed of ſeveral Crimes, and, upon this Pretence, put him to Death. He was aſhamed to acknowledge the true Cauſe of this Severity. Apollodorus had, to his old Offence, added a new Provocation, which touched the Emperor to the quick; he had criticiſed, and, which is worſe, very juſtly, on a ſumptuous Structure, which Adrian had cauſed to be built. This Prince, to ſhew Apollodorus that he did not want his Aſſiſtance, ſent him a Plan of the Temple of Venus, and aſked his Opinion of it; but not before the Building was finiſhed. Apollodorus wrote to him very frankly, what he thought of the Structure; and found very (1) De ædific. lib. 4, cap. 6, pag. 81, apud Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 2, pag. 302.

(b) Xiphilin. in Hadriano.

* Great Gourds; or Lumps of Fleſh.

Digitized by Google

very essential Faults in it [A]; which the Emperor could neither deny, nor repair. This raised the Emperor's Indignation to the utmost, and pushed him upon getting rid of Apollodorus (c). This last Piece of Ingenuity was much more excusable than the first. Men know not whom they shock, when they reprehend the Ignorance of Those, who would pass for Artists in the Presence of greater Masters. They may chance to affront a Person, whose Subjects they will one Day be [B], or whose Favour they may stand in need of. This confirms my Conjecture in relation to the Conversations between Apelles and Alexander [C].

(c) Ex Xiphilino in Hadr.

[A] Apollodorus - - - - found very essential Faults in the Plan of the Temple of Venus.] He made it appear, by good Reasons, that it was neither large, nor lofty, enough; and that the Statues placed in it were not justly proportioned to the Size of the Temple; for the Goddesses, said he, if they have a mind to rise, and go out of it, cannot accomplish this Desire (1). An Author of our own has paraphrased this Thought thus. "The Architect Apollodorus, seeing some Statues of the Gods in the Temple of "Venus, said; These Gods will do well to continue "sitting as they are; For, should they stand up, they "would push off the Roof of the Temple, unless they "stoop very low; and it will be still worse, if they "have a mind to go out of it; for, the Doors being too "low for them, they must be obliged to stoop in an in- "convenient and indecent Manner (2)." I have some where read, that the Critics found the same Fault with the Olympian Jupiter of Phidias. But others have built a pious Reflexion on it. Let us hear Bardin. "They say, that Phidias, being to make a Statue of "Jupiter Olympius, chose to carve him in a sitting Po- "sture, and so disproportionate to the Size of the Tem- "ple, that, if he were to stand up, the Roof would be "too low for him. Thus we may say, that God en- "ters our Souls, which are his Temples; but that "he cannot be contained in them at his full ex- "tent (3)."

(1) Ex Xiphilino, in Hadriano.

(2) Costar. Apolog. pag. 90.

(3) Bardin's Lyceum, cap. 2.

[B] May chance to affront a Person, whose Subjects they will one Day be (4).] The Relation between Trajan and Adrian might have warned Apollodorus of this: But here lies the Failing of those, who think themselves necessary, and whom an uncommon Capacity introduces into Favour; they imagine it is not necessary to pay their Court to young Princes; and that the great Patron is sufficient. Times change; and they find, that their magisterial Behaviour to all, who speak impertinently before them, in their own Profession, is great Folly.

(4) See the Text of the Article ANTONIA- NO, towards the end.

[C] This confirms my Conjecture in relation to the Conversations between Apelles and Alexander.] I have declared above (5), that I could not persuade myself, that this great Painter would dare to take so gross a Liberty of censuring the young Conqueror, as some Authors pretend. I am very sensible, that They, who excel in certain Arts, are sometimes of such a capricious Humour, that they are not able to contain themselves within the Bounds of Respect, when the Fit is upon them; but I know too, that Apelles is said to have been very modest and polite. But the strongest Reason I have for it is this. Alexander, the most impatient Man that ever lived, would not have let so scornful a Censure past unpunished: Now, we do not read, that Apelles ever lost the Favour of This Prince. The Argument à fortiori, from the greater to the less takes place here. Adrian was not so haughty, as Alexander, nor was he a King, when he was affronted; yet the Censure of the Architect was a mortal Offence.

(5) In Remark [D], of the Article APELLES.

APOLLO, a Pagan Deity. Look for PHŒBUS.

APOLLONIUS, of Perga, a City in Pamphylia, was a famous Geometrician (a), in the Reign of Ptolomy Evergetes, which reaches from the second Year of the CXXXIIId Olympiad, to the third Year of the CXXXIXth. He studied, a long time, in Alexandria, under the Disciples of Euclid (b), and composed several Books; none of which are come down to us, but his Conic Sections [A]. It is much esteemed, and several ancient and modern Authors have taken the pains to comment upon, or translate, it [B]. Mr Des Cartes had no favourable Opinion of it [C].

(a) Eutocius Ascalonita initio Commentar. in Conica Apollonii, ex Heraclio in vita Archimedis.

(b) Pappus in Proœmio ad lib. 7, Mathem. Collect.

[A] Composed several Books, none of which are come down to us, but his Conic Sections.] Two Books περὶ λόγου ἀποτομῆς, de proportionis sectione. Two περὶ χωρίου ἀποτομῆς, de spatii sectione. Two διωρισμένης τομῆς, determinatæ sectionis. Two ἐπαφῶν, tactionum. Two νεύσεων, inclinationum. Two τόπων ἐπιπέδων, planorum locorum (1). And eight of Conic Sections. There can be no doubt, that this last Work contained eight Books; the Author's Epistle Dedicatory to a Geometrician of Pergamus, whose Name was Eudemus, makes it plainly appear. The Public has not yet seen the last of these eight Books: Only the four first are in Greek; the three following have been translated into Latin, from an Arabic Version. See the following Remark. We find cited the Books of Apollonius, de cochlea, & de perturbatis rationibus (2). I cannot tell, whether we ought not to ascribe to the same Author the Commentary on the Phænomena of Aratus, which is attributed by the Ancients to Apollonius the Geometrician (3).

(1) Vossius de Scient. Mathem. cap. 16, pag. 55, ex Pappo, lib. 7. Mathematicæ collectionis.

(2) Apud Proclum in Euclidem. See the Epitomy of Gesner's Bibliotheque, pag. 71.

(3) See Vossius ib. cap. 32, pag. 166. and de Hist. Græcis, pag. 505.

[B] Several ancient and modern Authors have taken the Pains to comment upon, or translate, it.] It is said, that Hypatia, the Daughter of Theon, wrote a Commentary on the Conics of Apollonius. We have still That, which Eutocius of Ascalon composed on the first four Books of This Work, with Lemma's and Corollaries. He promised to comment on the other four also: See his Epistle Dedicatory to Anthemus.

(4) Claudius Richardus Præf. ad Apollon. Pergæum sect. 10.

We have also (5), to the Number of Sixty five, the Lemma's, which Pappus drew up on the Conics of Apollonius. The Catalogue of the Works of Francis Maurolycus, printed at Venice, informs us, that this ingenious Mathematician wrote a Book entituled, Apollonii conica elementa libris quatuor & demonstrationibus & lineamentis opportunis instaurata (6). - - - Apollonius's Principles of Conic Sections, in four Books, and illustrated with Demonstrations and suitable Schemes. John Baptista Memus (7), a noble Venetian, and Mathematical Professor at Venice, translated into Latin the four first Books of Apollonius; which were printed in the Year 1537 (8). This Translation is of no Value; he did not understand the Subject; and this was the Reason, why he passed over the most visible Faults of the Greek Manuscript. "Eos pri- "mos transtulit, says Vossius (9), Joan. Baptista Mem- "mius; sed infeliciter, eo quod argumentem operis "non intelligeret: unde non vidit sat manifestas "Græci codicis mendas, ac sæpe pueriliter alucina- "tur: sicut monitum Francisco Maurolyco Præfati- "one in Cosmographiam suam. —— John Baptista "Memmius was the first, who translated them; but "without Success; since he understood not the Design "of the Work; whence it was, that he overlooked "the plainest Errors of the Greek Copy, and is often "guilty of childish Mistakes; as is observed by Fran- "cis Maurolycus, in the Preface to his Cosmography." Frederic Commandin (10) made a new Translation of it, much better than the former, which he published at Bologne, in the Year 1566. He added to it a Translation of Eutocius's Commentary, and several Notes. But, having made use of a very faulty Greek Manuscript, his Version was not so good as could be wished; for which Reason Martin Ghetaldus (11) resolved to trace the Evil to it's Source. He endeavoured

(6) Claud. Richardus. Præf. ad Apollon. Pergæum. sect. 4.

(7) Moreri calls him de Mesmes; he undoubtedly believed that he was a Frenchman of the Family, which bears this Name.

(8) Claud. Richardus, ubi supra, sect. 15.

(9) Vossius de Scient. Math. pag. 55.

(10) And not Commandon, as Moreri calls him.

(11) He was a Patrician of Ragusa.

Digitized by Google

it [C]. Some have thought, that Apollonius appropriated the Writings and Diſcoveries of Archimedes to himſelf [D]. He had a Son, whoſe Name was Apollonius, and who ed to correct the Manuſcript according to the Senſe of the Author, and to reſolve the Problems; and by this means believed he had reſtored Life to this ancient Geometrician (12). See the Book, which he entituled Apollonius redivivus, ſeu reſtituta Apollonii Pergæi inclinationum geometria, and his Supplementum Apollonii Galli, ſeu exſuſcitata Apollonii Pergæi tactionum geometricæ Pars reliqua, printed at Venice, in the Year 1607, in 4to. Claudé Richard, a Jeſuit of the Franche Comte, and Royal Profeſſor of Mathematics in the Imperial College of his Order at Madrid, in the Year 1642, explained, in his public Lectures, the firſt four Books of Apollonius, and, in the Year 1643, four other Books, of which himſelf was the Author, and in which he had ſupplied the other Part of this ancient Geometrician's Work (13). His Explications of the four firſt were printed at Antwerp, in 1655, in Folio. He declares that, after having finiſhed theſe two Pieces, he read the Conics of Claudé Middorge (14) with Pleaſure and Admiration, as alſo the Quadrature of the Circle of Gregory of St Vincent; in which are many things relating to thoſe Books of Apollonius, which are wanting. In quibus (de quadratura circuli duobus tomis) præter elementa conica peculiari ordine diſpoſita, inumera prodit, ſicuti Middorgius, quæ ſpectant ad poſtremos quatuor Apollonii libros injuriâ temporum ſuppreſſos, in lucem revocandos (15). Ferdinand I. Great Duke of Florence, propoſed to get ſeveral Arabian Manuſcripts, which were in his Library, tranſlated. John Baptiſta Raimond, who was the Principal among thoſe, to whom this Prince gave Penſions for this Undertaking, had promiſed to tranſlate Apollonius, which was in Arabic, in that Library; and ſome Authors have ſaid, that this Tranſlation was finiſhed (16); but nothing of it has been found among his Papers (17). At laſt the Great Duke, Ferdinand II, and his Brother Prince Leopold de Medicis, caſt their Eyes on Abraham Ecchellenſis, Profeſſor of the Oriental Languages at Rome, and employed him in this Work. By the Aſſiſtance of Alfonſo Borelli, Mathematical Profeſſor at Piſa, he tranſlated the fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh Books of Apollonius into Latin. This Tranſlation was printed at Florence, in the Year 1661, in Folio, with the Commentary of the ſame Borelli; who maintains, in his Preface, that theſe Books are not ſpurious, but the genuine Works of our Apollonius. He anſwers the Difficulties of Claudé Middorge, who imagined, that the three Books, which Golius brought from the Levant (18), were the Work of an Arabian, who conceal'd himſelf under the celebrated Name of Apollonius. Father Merſennus mentions this Opinion of Claudé Middorge, but does not approve of it; he believes that the eighth Book of the Conics of Apollonius, and all the other Works of the ſame Author, as alſo thoſe which Pappus has not quoted, are ſtill extant, and actually tranſlated into Arabic (19). He produces Aben Nedin as his Voucher, who wrote a Book De Philoſophis Arabibus (20). i. e. Of the Arabic Philoſophers. Obſerve, I. That it was remarked, at the bottom of the Manuſcript of Golius, that the eighth Book of Apollonius had not been tranſlated into Arabic, becauſe it was wanting in the Greek Copies, from which the Tranſlation of the others had been made (21). II. That the Manuſcript, from which the Tranſlation of Ecchellenſis was made, came from the Oriental Library, which Ignatius Neama, Patriarch of Antioch, had left by Will to the Great Duke Ferdinand I. (22). III. That Abalphat Aſphahanenſis is the Author of the Arabic Tranſlation, which ſerved Ecchellenſis for an Original, and which he made for King Aboicaligiar, who aſcended the Throne in the Three hundred ſeventy ſecond Year of the Hegira. From whence it follows, that this was not the firſt Tranſlation in that Language; for Gregory Barhebræus notes, that ſeven Books of the Conics of Apollonius were tranſlated into Arabic in the time of Almamun. Now Almamun was inaugurated in the Two hundred and third Year of the Hegira (23). IV. That Abalphat ſtill pretended, that his Tranſlation was the firſt, and that only ſome Fragments of Apollonius had been rendred before, from the eaſieſt Places. This would induce one to think, that either he had not ſeen the Tranſlation, which was made in the time of Almamun, or that That Tranſlation contained only ſome Fragments of the Conics of Apollonius (24).

This is what I had to ſay, by way of Comment on the Text of this Remark. I ſay nothing of the Apollonius Batavus of Willibrord Snellius, ſeu exſuſcitata geometria Apollonii Pergæi περὶ διωρισμένης τομῆς, a Book printed at Leyden, 1608, in 4to. I omit, likewiſe, Vincentio Viviani, Author of the Treatiſe De maximis & minimis, geometrica divinatio in quintum librum Conicorum Apollonii Pergæi, at Florence, 1659, in Folio.

[C] Mr Des Cartes had no favourable Opinion of it.] "He was not ſurprized, that others ſhould demonſtrate the Conic Sections with more eaſe than Apollonius; becauſe That ancient Author is very tedious and intricate; and yet all, that he has demonſtrated, is, of itſelf, very plain (25)." He compared what he had done in Metaphyſics "to the Demonſtrations of Apollonius, in which there is nothing, but what is very clear, and certain, when each Point is ſeparately conſidered. But, as they are ſomewhat long, and ſince one cannot readily perceive the Neceſſity of the Concluſion, without exactly remembering all that went before, ſcarce one Man in a City, or a Province, can be found, who is able to comprehend them: However, on the Teſtimony of thoſe few, who underſtand them, and vouch for their Truth, every one gives Credit to them (26)."

[D] Some have thought, that Apollonius appropriated the Writings and Diſcoveries of Archimedes to himſelf.] Heraclius affirms, that Archimedes was the firſt, who applied himſelf to the Doctrine of Conic Sections; and that his Compoſitions on that Subject fell into the Hands of Apollonius, who publiſhed them as his own (27). Eutocius confutes this by two Reaſons; one is, that Archimedes, in ſeveral Parts of his Works, ſpeaks of Conics as a Science not new; the other is, that Apollonius does not pretend, that he is the Inventor of what he writes; he only ſays, that he has treated the Subject more amply, than had been done by any Author before him (28). This ſeems to me but an indifferent Juſtification of him, as to the Crime of Plagiariſm; for a Man may appropriate the Writings of another to himſelf, though they are not Works, on which the Author pretends to ſay nothing, but what is new. The Honour of explaining a difficult Subject better, than had been done before, is ſufficient to tempt a Man to get into his Poſſeſſion A Work, which may procure him this Honour. This might be the Caſe of Apollonius, for any thing that appears in his Apology. There is ſomething farther ſtill; he boaſts ſometimes in the general Summaries of his eight Books, that what he advances is new (29). Judge, then, whether this might not be a powerful Motive to induce him to arrogate ſuch a Work to himſelf. Upon the whole, Eutocius defends him but ill; and his beſt Juſtification is the Silence of Pappus, his Cenſor, and a Cenſor not a little prejudiced againſt him. Obſerve too, that Pappus not only does not accuſe him of Plagiariſm, but expreſsly allows him to be the true Author of the eight Books of Conic Sections, though he pretends, that Euclid had wrote four Books on the ſame Subject before (30). He defends Euclid, againſt Apollonius, who had remarked, that this famous Geometrician had ſucceeded very indifferently in a certain Point. He excuſes Euclid, by what Apollonius himſelf had acknowledged; to wit, that, before the Diſcoveries of Apollonius, it was impoſſible to treat clearly on this Subject; the Principles made uſe of before not being ſufficient. He pretends, that Euclid, being very good-natured, and modeſt, had confined himſelf to the Diſcoveries of Ariſtæus, in relation to Conics, without either overthrowing, or improving, what the other had begun; and that he had ſtopt, where he found them incapable of carrying him farther; but that he was cautious of ſaying, that this was the Point of Perfection; for he had been to blame in that (31). Note, by the way, that this demonſtrates the Falſeneſs of Heraclius's Pretenſion, that Archimedes was the firſt, who wrote concerning Conics. Voſſius has taken no notice of the (12) Ex Voſſio de Scient. Mathem. pag. 434.

(13) Cl. Rich. Præf. in Apollon. ſect. 11.

(14) Tres Conicorum libros Claudii Middorgii - - - nova methodo ex Apollonianis fontibus petitos & proprio ingenio appoſite digeſtos. Claud. Rich. ubi ſupra.

(15) Id. ib.

(16) As Jerome Lunadorus, in libro de Romana curia. See Borelli, in his Preface.

(17) Abrah. Ecchellenſis, in Præfat. verſionis Apollon.

(18) The 5th, 6th, and 7th of Apollonius's Conic Sections.

(19) Merſennus Præfat in Apollonii Conica, quæ ſunt in ejus συνόψει Mathemat.

(20) See Voſſius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 55.

(21) Id. ib.

(22) Borellus, in Præfat.

(23) Abrah. Ecchellenſis, in Præfat.

(24) Id. ib.

(25) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. pag. 39.

(26) Id. ib. pag. 102.

(27) Heraclius, in vita Archimedis apud Eutocium, init. Comment. in Apollonii Conica.

(28) Eutocius, ibid. See Claud. Richardus, Præf. ad Apollon. ſect. 7.

(29) See the Letter of Apollonius to Eudemus, in the beginning of his 1ſt Book. See likewiſe his Letter to Attalus, at the beginning of the 4th Book.

(30) Pappus in Proœmio, lib. 7. Mathem. Collect.

(31) You will find the Words of Pappus, in the Remark of the Article of ARISTÆUS, the Geometrician.

Digitized by Google

who was the Meſſenger, who preſented the ſecond Book of the Conic Sections to the Perſon, to whom the Author had dedicated it (c). The Arabians have diſcovered great Ignorance in Chronology, with regard to Apollonius [E]. Mr Moreri has been guilty of many Blunders on this Head [F].

(c) Apollon. Epiſt. Dedicat. lib. 2. apud Eutocium.

the Proofs, which overthrow this Pretenſion. He obſerves, as ſomething in juſtification of Heraclius, that Archimedes ſometimes refers to a Treatiſe of Conics; and That in a Style, which he generally makes uſe of, in referring to his own Writings (32). He adds, that Guido Ubaldus has proved, againſt Eutocius, that Archimedes was not ignorant, that Cones may be be cut by Planes differently inclined to the Side of the Cone (33). But how does this prove the Point in Queſtion? We may allow, that Archimedes had wrote an excellent Treatiſe of Conic Sections; but does this imply, that no one before him had treated of this Matter, or that this Work was ſtolen by the Plagiary Apollonius?

(32) Voſſius, de Scient. Mathem. in Addendis, pag. 434.

(33) Initio Commentarii in Secundum ἰσοῤῥοπικῶν Archimedis.

[E] The Arabians have diſcovered great Ignorance in Chronology, with regard to Apollonius.] They have ſaid, that he lived in the time of Abaz, King of Judah, and that his Writings on Conic Sections induced Euclid to write on that Subject a long time after (34). This is ſo ſtrange a Miſtake, that it is ſurprizing Ecchellenſis treats it with ſo much Lenity. He ſeems unwilling to ſay, that the Arabian Author was miſtaken; he only ſays, that this Chronology is very wide of the common Account. "In his longe vide-"tur diſcrepare Gregorius à communi Chronologo-"rum ſententia & opinione, qui Apollonium floru-"iſſe ſcribunt anno periodi Julianæ 4474 —— diſ-"crepat præterea ab iiſdem Chronologis in ætate Eu-"clidis, quem Apollonio juniorem agnoſcit, ubi illi "eum collocant in anno periodi Julianæ 4430 (35). "—— In this Gregory ſeems to differ widely from "the common Sentiment and Opinion of Chronologers, "who write, that Apollonius flouriſhed in the Year "4474, of the Julian Period. —— He diſſents like-"wiſe from the ſame Chronologers, in relation to "the Age of Euclid, whom he ſuppoſes to be later "than Apollonius; whereas they place him in the "4430*th Year of the* Julian Period." Ecchellenſis leaves us, as it were, at Liberty, to chuſe between theſe two Opinions: He would have done better, to have determined, that the Arabian Author was miſtaken; for this is moſt certain. And obſerve, that his Error is not a Difference of ſome few Years; Abaz began to reign in the Year 3970 of the Julian Period. Ptolomy Evergetes, in whoſe time Apollonius flouriſhed, ſucceeded the King, his Father, in the Year 4468, of the ſame Period. The miſtake, then, is very great, ſince it includes a Difference of about five Centuries.

(34) Gregorius Barhebræus, lib. 3. Chronicor. in Achaz, apud Abrah. Ecchellenſem Præfat. in Apollon.

(35) Ecchellenſ. ibid.

[F] Mr Moreri has been guilty of many Blunders on this Head.] I. He has, ſimply and abſolutely, given our Apollonius the Sirname of the Great Geometrician; whereas he ſhould have uſed a Reſtriction, and contented himſelf with ſaying, that his Cotemporaries called him ſo, on account of his Skill in Conics. This is preciſely what Eutocius of Aſcalon ſays of him (36). II. Moreri pretends, that this Sirname is the ſame with that of ὁ Κράνος; which is a great Miſtake, treat it as favourable as you pleaſe; for, in ſhort, the Apollonius, who had the Sirname of Κράνος, was not the Geometrician; he was born at Cyrene (37), and never had any Reputation (38). III. Eutocius does not treat of Heraclius's Book of the Life of Archimedes; he cites it only. IV. To ſay, That we have the Treatiſe of Cones, Conicorum, tranſlated by John Baptiſta de Meſmes, is to be guilty of a Barbariſm, and tends to perſuade the Reader, that this John Baptiſta tranſlated the whole Work; whereas he tranſlated only the four firſt Books. V. It is not true, that Men of Learning know, that theſe (39) four firſt Books of Apollonius belong to Euclid of Megara (40). VI. No one has ſaid, that Apollonius was the Diſciple of Eubulides, a Scholar of Euclid; and it is not probable, that he ever was; ſince Eubulides applied himſelf almoſt wholly to the Sophiſtry of Logic, and never taught in Alexandria, where our Apollonius ſtudied under the Diſciples of Euclid. VII. After having ſaid, that Euclid is the true Author of the four firſt Books of Apollonius, ought he to add, that this Author wrote Commentaries on the four firſt Books of That Philoſopher's Conics? What Confuſion, or rather what Contradictions are here! VIII. It is not true, that Golius tranſlated the fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh Books of Apollonius out of Arabic into Latin. Mr Moreri, who affirms it, is without Excuſe, ſince he had read in Voſſius no more than this; viz. that Golius had brought theſe three Arabic Books from the Levant, and that the Mathematics would ſoon be much indebted to him, eſpecially when theſe three Books ſhould be printed (41). IX. The Apollonius, who was the Maſter of Diodorus, is not the ſame with him, who is the Subject of this Article. Two more of Mr Moreri's Errors may be ſeen above (42).

(36) Eutoc. Aſcalon. initio Comm. in Conica Apollonii. He builds upon the Teſtimony of Gemini, lib. 6. Mathematicarum Præceptionum.

(37) Strabo, lib. 17. pag. 576.

(38) Id. lib. 14. p. 453.

(39) Note, that Moreri has ſaid nothing, to which the word THESE can relate; which makes it an inſufferable Jargon.

(40) See Diogenes Laërt. l. 2. n. 111.

(41) Voſſius, de Scient. Mathemat. c. 16. p. 55.

(42) In Remark [B], Citations (9) and (10).

APOLLONIUS Tyanæus, was One of the moſt Extraordinary Perſons, that ever appeared in the World. I had reſolved to make a very long Article of him; but, having ſeen That, which Mr de Tillemont has already given us, I thought it better to employ my time in other Enquiries, than to take a great deal of Pains to ſay nothing, but what he has ſaid before me, or only to copy him. His Book will paſs through more Hands, than this, and every one will more readily conſult Him, than My Dictionary. It will be ſufficient therefore to advertiſe my Reader, That, in the ſecond Volume of his Works (a), he will find a full and exact Collection of what moſt remarkably concerns Apollonius Tyanæus. However, if but for Form's ſake, let me obſerve, That he was born at Tyana, in Cappadocia, towards the beginning of the Firſt Century; That, at Sixteen Years of Age, he ſet up for a rigid Obſerver of the Rules of Pythagoras, renouncing Wine, Women, and all manner of Fleſh, wearing no Shoes, letting his Hair grow at full length, and cloathing himſelf only in Linnen (b); that, a little while after, he ſet up for a Reformer; that he fixed his Reſidence in a Temple of Æſculapius, whither many ſick Perſons reſorted to be cured by Him; that, being come to Age, he gave part of his Eſtate to his elder Brother; that he diſtributed another part to his poor Relations, and kept but a very ſmall Share to himſelf; That he lived ſix Years without ſpeaking a Word; that, notwithſtanding, during this Silence, he quelled ſeveral Seditions [A], in Cilicia, and Pamphilia (c):

(1) It was the third City of Pamphylia.

(2) Quintil. Declamat. 12. The French have a Proverb, that a hungry Belly has no Ears. The Ancients had ſuch another. See Eraſmus's Chiliads. Venter non habet aures. Cato began an Oration with theſe Words, Ardnum eſt ad ventrem verba facere, qui careat auribus. --- It difficult to perſuade the Belly, which has no Ears. The Buſineſs was to appeaſe the People, who demanded Corn.

(a) Pag. 200. Edit. of Bruſſels.

(b) Philoſtr. in Vita Apollon. l. 1.

[A] That, notwithſtanding, during this Silence, he quelled ſeveral Seditions.] That, which he put a ſtop to at Aſpenda (1), was the moſt difficult to appeaſe, becauſe the Buſineſs was to make thoſe hearken to Reaſon, whom Famine had driven to Revolt, fames magiſtra peccandi, duriſſima neceſſitatum (2). The Cauſe of this Commotion was, ſome rich Mens having engroſſed the Corn, which occaſioned an extraordinary Scarcity in the City. Apollonius ſtopped this popular Commotion, without ſpeaking one Word. Was there ever a more eloquent, active, and perſuaſive Silence known! His Talent was very different from That of the Perſon, whom Virgil deſcribes.

Tum pietate gravem ac meritis ſi forte virum quem
Conſpexere, ſilent, arrectiſque auribus aſtant:

Digitized by Google

philia (c): That he travelled, and turned Legiſlator; that he pretended to underſtand all Languages, without ever having learned them; to know the Thoughts of Men (d), and to explain the Oracles, which Birds delivered by chirping (e); that he condemned Dancing, and other Diverſions of that kind; that he recommended Works of Charity (f); that he travelled over almoſt all the Countries of the World (g); that, at Cadiz, he prevailed with the Intendant of the Country to revolt againſt Nero (b) [B], and that he died at a very great Age, without it's being certainly known where, or in what manner (i). His Life has been fully related by Philoſtratus [C]. It contains no doubt a Thouſand fabulous Relations; but, if the Facts were true, we muſt not impute them to the Power of Magic. The Pagans very readily oppoſed the pretended Miracles of this Man to Thoſe of our Saviour [D], and drew a Parallel between them. It is obſervable, that St Auſtin confeſſed, that Apollonius, at the worſt, was greatly ſuperior to the Jupiter of the Gentiles (k). It cannot be denied, that this Philoſopher received very great Honours, both during his Life, and after his Death [E]; and that his Reputation continued

(c) Id. ibid.

(d) Id. ibid.

(e) Id. ibid. cap. 14.

(f) Id. ibid. lib. 4. cap. 1, & 2.

(g) See the 153d Letter of St Jerome.

(b) Philoſtr. in Vita Apollon. lib. 5. cap. 3, & 12.

(i) In the Reign of Nerva, in the Year of our Lord 96, or 97.

(k) See Remark [F]. Citat. (28).

(3) Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 148.

Ille regit DICTIS animos ac pectora mulcet (3).

If then ſome grave and pious Man appear,
They huſh their Noiſe, and lend a liſtening Ear.
He ſooths with ſober WORDS their angry Mood,
And quenches their innate Deſire of Blood.
DRYDEN.

Such an one muſt ſpeak, if he hopes to ſtop the Fury of a mutinous People. Apollonius had no need of Words; his Pythagoric Silence did all that the fineſt Figures of Oratory could effect.

[B] That, at Cadiz, he prevailed with the Intendant of the Country to revolt againſt Nero.] "Philoſtratus, thinks it for his Honour, that he induced "the Governor of Cadiz, and the Country about "it, to rebel againſt Nero; nor did the other Phi-"loſophers make any more ſcruple of this than He. "[There being no Inſtitution but the Chriſtian Reli-"gion, which teaches us to conſider Men, not as they "are in themſelves, but in the Order, wherein God "has placed them, nor ever to violate the Fidelity, "which has once been ſworn to them (4)]" Mr de Tillemont might very well have omitted this moral Reflexion, and indeed the whole Parentheſis. Chriſtianity has certainly the moſt real and ſublime Advantages above all Philoſophy; but, as to the Point here in queſtion, I cannot ſee that it has had any Right, for theſe thouſand Years paſt, to inſult the Philoſophers. The Chriſtians, and They, have been pretty even, on this ſcore, for a long time. We may ſay of this Engagement, Never to violate the Faith, which has once been pledged, what the Poet ſaid of Chaſtity;

(4) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 208.

Credo pudicitiam Saturno rege moratam
In terris, viſamque diu - - - - -
Quippe aliter tunc orbe novo cœloque recenti
Vivebant homines (5).

(5) Juvenal. Sat. 6. init.

In Saturn's Reign, at Nature's early Birth,
There was That Thing, call'd Chaſtity, on Earth.
- - - - - - - - -
For when the World was buckſome, freſh, and young,
Her Sons were undebauch'd. - - - - - -
DRYDEN.

It continued no longer than the three firſt Centuries. Mr de Tillemont obſerves, that Apollonius uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to raiſe the whole World againſt the Emperor Domitian (6). He, who wrote this Philoſopher's Life, eſteems it as an Heroic Exploit in him (7). This Impoſtor had mimicked the Son of God in ſeveral Inſtances; but, on the Article of Submiſſion and Patience, he pulled off the Mask; and, indeed, there was no room for a Parallel on this Head.

(6) Tillemont, Tom. 2. pag. 210.

(7) Philoſtr. lib. 7. c. 2.

[C] His Life has been fully related by Philoſtratus.] That which Damis, originally of Nineveh, the moſt devoted to him of all his Diſciples, had compoſed, was properly no more than Memoirs, and ill enough written (8). They fell into the Hands of the Empreſs Julia, the Wife of Severus. "She gave "them to Philoſtratus, who, from them, and by "the help of what he could gather from Apollonius "himſelf, and from other Memoirs, compoſed the "Hiſtory we at preſent have of Him. He men-"tions one Maximus of Eges, who had written a "Book on Apollonius, and one Mœragenes, who had "written four Books concerning him; but would "have no Credit to be given to the latter (9)." See, in the Remark [I], ſome other Authors of the Life of Apollonius. As for the Life, which Philoſtratus himſelf compoſed, it was firſt printed, in Greek, at Venice, by Aldus Manutius, with the Treatiſe of Euſebius againſt Hierocles. This Treatiſe was rendered into Latin by Zenobius Acciaioli. The Life of Apollonius was tranſlated into the ſame Language by Allemannus Rhinuccius, a Florentine. The Latin Verſion of theſe two Pieces, with ſeveral Corrections, and ſmall marginal Notes of Gisbert Longolius, was printed at Cologne, in the Year 1532, in 8vo. The Paris Edition of all the Works of Philoſtratus, publiſhed by Frederick Morel, is better than any of the preceeding Editions; but it were to be wiſhed, that ſome Perſon well ſkilled in Greek would correct the Latin Tranſlation; he would find many things in it, which require the Hand of a skilful Operator. See the Remark [I].

(8) Tillemont, pag. 201. ex Philoſtr. lib. 1. cap. 3.

(9) Philoſtr. lib. 1. cap. 2, & 3. apud Tillemont, ibid.

[D] The Pagans very readily oppoſed the pretended Miracles of This Man to Thoſe of our Saviour.] We need only read a Work of Euſebius (10) againſt one Hierocles, a great Enemy of the Goſpel, in the Reign of the Emperor Dioclefian. It appears, that Hierocles's Deſign, in the Treatiſe, which Euſebius confutes, was to draw a Parallel between JESUS CHRIST and Apollonius Tyanæus, and that he gives the Preference to the latter. Theſe Words of Lactantius confirm what I have ſaid. "Item cum facta "Jeſu Chriſti mirabilia deſtrueret, nec tamen nega-"ret, voluit oſtendere Apollonium vel paria vel etiam "majora feciſſe (11): —— Likewiſe when he would "have overthrown the Miracles of Jeſus Chriſt, but "could not deny them, he pretended to ſhew, that "Apollonius had wrought the like, or even greater." What Mr de Tillemont has obſerved is remarkable, "Apollonius, ſays he (12), by the ſeeming Innocen-"cy of his Life, and his pretended Miracles, was "one of the moſt dangerous Enemies the Church "had in it's Infancy. It ſeemed, according to his "own Panegyriſts, as if the Devil † had ſent him in-"to the World, about the ſame time that Jeſus "Chriſt was to appear, either to ‖ counter-ballance "his Authority in the Minds of thoſe, who ſhould "take the Illuſions of this Magician for real Miracles, "or that They, who ſhould diſcover him to be an "arrant Impoſtor and Magician, might thereby be "brought to doubt of the Miracles of Jeſus Chriſt "and his Diſciples."

(10) In the Volume de Demonſtrat. Evangel. pag. 511.

(11) Lactan. Divinar. Inſtitut. lib. 5. cap. 3.

(12) Tillemont, pag. 200.

* Godeau's Hiſt. of the Church, p. 245.

† Philoſtr. in Apollon. Vit. lib. 8. cap. 2.

‖ Godeau, ubi ſupra, pag. 246.

[E] Very great Honours, both during his Life, and after his Death.] Mr de Tillemont juſtly reproaches him with not having † diſclaimed the Style and Title of God, which his Followers aſcribed to him; and with ſuffering himſelf to be adored as a Deity. And if, on certain occaſions, he refuſed to receive Divine Honours in public ; it was, ſays his Hiſtorian, for fear of Envy (13). The Inhabitants of Tyana built a Temple to their Apollonius after his Death (14). His Statue was erected in ſeveral other Temples (15). The Emperor Adrian collected as many of his Letters as he could, and kept them in his fine Palace of Antium, with a little Book of This Philoſopher concerning the Anſwers he had received from the Oracle of Trophonius. This little Book was to be ſeen at Antium, during Philoſtratus's Life; nor did any ‡ Philoſtr. in Apollon. Vita, lib. 8. cap. 2. pag. 376.

 Ib. lib. 7. cap. 10. pag. 340. See alſo lib. 1. c. 15. pag. 25.

(13) Tillem. Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 2. p. 216.

(14) Philoſtrat. lib. 1. cap. 4. p. 6. See likewiſe lib. 8. cap. ult.

(15) Vopiſcus, in Aureliano, cap. 24.

Digitized by Google

continued as long as Paganism [F]. He left some Works, which have been long since any Curiosity render this small Town so famous as Apollonius's Book (16). Antonius Caracalla had an extraordinary Veneration for Apollonius, and built a Temple to him as to an Hero (17). The Emperor Severus kept the Image of this Philosopher, in a particular Place, in his Palace, among Those of Jesus Christ, Abraham, and the best Princes (18). Aurelian, having resolved to sack Tyana, was prevented by Apollonius's appearing to him in a Vision, and forbidding it; and he not only obeyed this Order of Apollonius, but vowed an Image, a Temple, and a Statue to him. Vopiscus, in relating this, declares himself his Admirer and Votary, with a Promise to write his Life. The Passage, though somewhat long, deserves a Place here; it being almost all of it a Proof of the Text of this Remark. "Taceri non debet res, quæ ad famam venerabilis viri pertinet. Fertur enim Aurelianum de Thyanæ civitatis eversione vera dixisse, vera cogitasse: verum Apollonium Thyanæum celeberrimæ famæ autoritatisque sapientem, veterem philosophum, amicum verum deorum, ipsum etiam pro numine frequentandum, recipienti se in tentorium ea forma, qua videtur, subito astitisse, atque hæc Latine, ut homo Pannonius intelligeret, verba dixisse. Aureliane, si vis vincere, nihil est quod de civium meorum nece cogites. Aureliane, si vis imperare, à cruore innocentium abstine. Aureliane, clementer te age, si vis vincere. Norat vultum philosophi venerabilis Aurelianus, atque in multis ejus imaginem viderat templis. Denique statim attonitus imaginem & statuas & templum eidem promisit, atque in meliorem rediit mentem. Hæc ego à gravibus viris comperi, & in Ulpiæ bibliothecæ libris relegi, & pro majestate Apollonii magis credidi. Quid enim illo viro sanctius, venerabilius, antiquius, diviniusque inter homines fuit? Ille mortuis reddidit vitam. Ille multa ultra homines & fecit & dixit, quæ qui velit nosse, Græcos legat libros, qui de ejus vita conscripti sunt. Ipse autem, si vita suppetat, atque ipsius viri favori usquequaque placuerit, breviter saltem tanti viri facta in literas mittam: non quo illius viri gesta munere mei sermonis indigeant, sed ut ea, quæ miranda sunt, omnium voce prædicentur (19). ------ We must not omit a Circumstance, which tends to the Honour of this venerable Man. It is related, that Aurelian had come to a Resolution, and had declared his Intention, of demolishing the City of Tyana; but that Apollonius of Tyana, an ancient Philosopher of great Renown and Authority, a true Friend of the Gods, and himself honoured as a Deity, appeared to him in his usual Form, as he retired into his Tent, addressed him thus in Latin, so as to be understood by a Native of Pannonia. Aurelian, if you desire to be victorious, think no more of the Destruction of my Fellow-Citizens. Aurelian, if you desire to rule, abstain from the Blood of the Innocent. Aurelian, if you would conquer, be merciful. Aurelian was acquainted with the Looks of this venerable Philosopher, and had seen his Image in several Temples. In the Suddenness of his Surprize, he vowed to erect a Temple and Statues to him, and altered his Resolution. This Account I have from Men of Credit; and have met with it in Books in the Ulpian Library, and am the more inclined to believe it on account of the Dignity of Apollonius. For was there ever any thing among Men more Holy, Venerable, Noble, and Divine, than this Person? He restored Life to the Dead; He did and spoke many Things beyond human Reach; which whoever would be informed of, may meet with Accounts of them in the Greek Histories of his Life. I myself propose to write a short Account of this great Man's Actions, if I live long enough, and this Philosopher himself shall permit me; not that his Actions want the Ornaments of my Words; but that such Wonders, as he performed, may be more generally known." The Words of Lampridius, concerning the manner of the Emperor Severus's Worship, are no less worthy of a place here. He informs us, that, when this Emperor was fitly disposed, that is, when he had not lain with his Wife the Night before, he began the Day with Acts of Devotion. He went, early in the Morning, into his Oratory, to practise religious Ceremonies in Honour of the Patrons he had made choice of; of which Apollonius was one. "Usus "vivendi eidem hic fuit: Primum ut, si facultas esset, id est si non cum uxore cubuisset, matutinis "horis in larario suo (in quo & divos principes, "sed optimos electos & animas sanctiores, in queis & "Apollonium, &, quantum scriptor suorum temporum "dicit, CHRISTUM, Abraham, & Orpheum, & hujusmodi deos habebat, ac majorum effigies) rem divinam faciebat (20) -- The same Emperor's manner of Life was This. First, if he was duly prepared, that is, if he had not lain with his Wife, he performed, early in the Morning, religious Ceremonies, in his Chapel, in which he kept the Effigies of the best Emperors, and of Those, who had been the most remarkable for Sanctity; among which was Apollonius, and, if we may believe the Historian of his own Times, CHRIST, Abraham, and Orpheus, and the like kind of Gods, together with the Effigies of his Ancestors." Eusebius tells us, that, in his Time, there were Persons, who pretended to Inchantments, by invoking the Name of Apollonius (21).

[F] His Reputation continued as long as Paganism.] Mr de Tillemont, who denies this, alledges the Testimonies of Lactantius, and Eusebius. "From the beginning of the fourth Century, says he (22), no "Person whatever worshipped Apollonius, as a God; "though it is pretended, that the Ephesians still continued to reverence his Statue, under the Name "of Hercules, but not under his own; because it "is certain, that he was no more than a mere Man, "and an Impostor." Eusebius affirms, likewise, "that, at That Time, scarce any one acknowledged Apollonius as a God, or even as an extraordinary and wonderful Man, but only as a meer "Philosopher." Mr de Tillemont cites the third Chapter of the fifth Book of Lactantius, and the Four hundred sixty eighth Page of Eusebius's Treatise against Hierocles. I confess, Lactantius supposes, that no one honoured Apollonius as a God; For he asks, "Cur igitur, ô delirum caput, nemo Apollonium pro "Deo colit? nisi forte tu solus, illo scilicet Deo dignus, cum quo te in sempiternum verus Deus puniet. ----- Why therefore, O Madman, does no one honour Apollonius as a God? Unless, perhaps, You alone; a worthy Votary of such a Deity, together with whom The True God will punish you for ever." But he does not deny, what the Author, whom he confutes, had advanced, that a consecrated Statue of Apollonius was still honoured at Ephesus, under the Name of Hercules: "Simulacrum ejus sub Herculis Alexicaci nomine constitutum ab Ephesiis "etiam nunc honorari (23)." He thinks it sufficient, that Apollonius was not honoured under his own, but a borrowed Name; "Ideo alieni nominis titulo "affectavit divinitatem, quia suo nec poterat, nec "audebat. ----- He, therefore, affected Divinity "under a borrowed Name, because he neither could, "nor dared, do it under his own." This is more subtle, than solid; for, when the Ephesians consecrated the Statue, they had no other Intention, than to honour Apollonius, and only made use of the Title of Hercules ἀποπρόπαιος, or Alexicacus, to denote, that Apollonius had delivered them from a Plague. It is probable there was no Artifice in this: Apollonius did not endeavour to conceal himself under a borrowed Name, for fear his own should raise Scruples in the Minds of the People. Here, then, is a fair Testimony produced by Lactantius, in proof of the Worship, which was still paid to our Apollonius, in the beginning of the fourth Century. But, with all the Respect due to this Father of the Church, I cannot persuade myself, that the Inhabitants of Tyana had discontinued their Veneration, or that the Images of Apollonius were removed out of all the Temples (24). I find, in Eusebius, that, in his Time, a Report was spread, that many things were performed, by invoking the Name of Apollonius. Αὐξικα τῶν νῦν εἰσιν, οἱ περιέργως μηχανὰς τῇ τῶ ἀνδρὸς ἀναχειμένας προσηγορία καὶ ειλημφέναι λέγουσιν (25). Neque vero hodie quoque desunt, qui expertos se dicant ejus nomini invocato magicas inesse virtutes, ad superstitiosa quædam peragenda. He calls them

(16) Philostrat. ubi supra, lib. 8. cap. 8.

(17) Ἡρῶων Dio. lib. 77. pag. 878. C. apud Tillem. pag. 219.

(18) Lamprid. p. 123. apud eund.

(19) Vopisc. in Aurelian. cap. 24.

(20) Lampril. in Alexandro Severo, c. 29.

(21) In Hierocl. p. 476, 477. apud Tillemont, pag. 220.

(22) Tillem. ibid.

(23) Lactan. Divin. Institut. l. 5. c. 3.

(24) See the Passage of Vopiscus, in the foregoing Remark.

(25) Euseb. in Hierocle, p. 541.

Digitized by Google

since lost [G]. Mention is made of another Philosopher, called likewise Apollonius of Tyana [H], who lived in the Reign of the Emperor Adrian. I know not of what Sect he was; but every one knows, that our Apollonius was a rigid Pythagorean. He made such an open Profession of his Belief of a Metempsychosis, that he caused a Lion to be adored, under pretence, that the Soul of Amasis (l) was united to the Body of That Beast (m). His Life is translated from the Greek of Philostratus (n) into French by Blaise de Vigenere, with a very ample Commentary by Artus Thomas, Lord of Embry, a Parisian. It is not long, since an English Translation of This Life, with Notes, (l) A King of Egypt.

(m) Philostr. lib. 5. c. 15.

(n) The Translator informs us, that Fed. Morel, Reader and Interpreter to the King, revised and corrected this Version, exactly, by the Greek Original. It was printed at Paris, 1611, in two Vols in 4to.

them magical or superstitious; but there can be no doubt, that many Pagans took them for real Miracles. I find, in St Austin, that, in his Time, the Christians were so pressed with the chimerical Parallel between the Miracles of Apollonius, and Those of JESUS CHRIST, and by the ridiculous Pretence, that the first equalled, or even surpassed, the latter, that they had recourse to this great Light of the Church for a Solution of this Difficulty. "Sed "tamen etiam ego in hac parte qui PLURIMIS, "quicquid rescripseris, PRO FUTURUM esse "confido, precator accesserim, ut ad ea VIGILANTIUS respondere digneris, in quibus nihil "amplius Dominum, quam alii homines facere potuerunt, feciisse vel gessisse mentiuntur. APOLLONIUM siquidem suum nobis & Apuleium aliosque magicæ artis homines in medium proferunt, "quorum majora contendunt extitisse miracula (26). "----- On this Occasion, I add my Request, that "you, whose Reply, whatever it be, will be of use "to many, would condescend to exert your utmost Efforts "in refuting the false Pretences of these Objectors, "who would place the Works of Our LORD on a "Level with the Actions of meer Men. For they "produce against Him Their APOLLONIUS, and "Apuleius, and other Dealers in Magic, whose Mi- "racles they assert to have been greater than His." Then it was, that St Austin declared, what you have read in the Body of the Article (27), that Apollonius Tyanæus was superior to Jupiter; which, by the way, ought to put some modern Divines to the Blush, who will not allow, that the want of the Knowledge of God was a less Evil, than the Worship of the abominable Pagan Deities, who, in St Austin's Opinion, were even worse than Magicians. 'Quis autem vel risu dignum non putet, quod APOLLONIUM & Apuleium cæterosque magicarum artium "peritissimos conferre CHRISTO vel etiam præferre conantur, quamquam TOLERABILIUS ferendum sit quando illos ei potius comparent quam "Deos suos: multo enim melior, quod fatendum est, "Apollonius fuit, quam tot stuprorum actor & perpetrator, quem Jovem nominant (28).----- But "who does not think it even Matter of Laughter, "that they should pretend to compare APOLLONIUS "and Apuleius, and others, skilful in Art Magic, "to CHRIST, and even to give them the Prefe- "rence; though the Comparison of such Persons with "CHRIST is more tolerable, than That of their "Gods: for we must confess, that Apollonius was "much better, than Their Jupiter, as they call him, "the Author and Perpetrator of so many Acts of "Lewdness." The same Father observes, that "the "Pagans, who laughed at the History of Jonas, "would have believed a like Adventure to be true, "if reported of Apuleius, or Apollonius Tyanæus, or "any of Those, to whom they gave the Name of "Magicians, or Philosophers." "Si hoc quod de "Jona scriptum est, Apuleius Madaurensis, vel Apol- "lonius Tyanæus, fecisse diceretur, quorum multa "mira, nullo fideli auctore, jactitant------ si de "istis ut dixi, quos Magos vel Philosophos laudabili- "ter nominant, tale aliquid narraretur, non jam in "buccis creparet risus, sed typhus (29). Upon the whole, I find, that, in the beginning of the fifth Century, "Eunapius wrote, that Apollonius was not "so much a Philosopher, as something between a "God and a Man; and that Philostratus ought to "have entituled the History, which he wrote of "him, The Descent of a God upon Earth (30). Am I to blame then, in affirming, that Apollonius's Honour continued as long as Paganism?

(26) Marcellin. ad Augustin. Epist. III. inter Augustini Epistolas.

(27) Citation (k).

(28) August. Epist. 4. pag. 23.

(29) Id. Epist. 49. p. 208.

(30) Eunap. de Vit. Philosoph. Præf. pag. 11. I make use of Tillemont's Words, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. p. 22..

It remains only, that I answer Eusebius's Authority, by which Mr de Tillemont endeavours to support himself. And this is easily done; since it is plain, from the Facts now alledged, that Eusebius gives into an Hyperbole, which has not the least shadow of Truth. How can it be true, that, in Eusebius's Time, no one did Apollonius the Honour to call him a Philosopher, when Ammianus Marcellinus, in the same Century, occasionally speaking of a Fountain, which was near Tyana, failed not to remember Apollonius with this Elogy, "Ubi amplis-"simus ille Philosophus Apollonius traditur natus (31). "—— Where the most celebrated Philosopher Apol-"lonius is reported have been born." I should chuse, for the Honour of Eusebius, to say, that he was speaking of Philostratus; so that his meaning will be, that it is not necessary to refute at large the Dreams of Philostratus, since he is an Author of no Repute, and not so much as ranked in the Number of Philosophers. I confess there is some Difficulty in this Explication; but it is plain, that Eusebius's Design was to attack the Phantom of Philostratus, and not the true Apollonius. Does he not declare, that he had always esteemed Apollonius as a learned Man, and allow, that he deserves to be ranked, with all imaginable Honour, among the Philosophers? That he only rejects the fabulous and supernatural Virtues, which Philostratus, and some other Panegyrists, ascribed to him, and that, in direct Opposition to Philostratus, he will shew, that Apollonius, as described by Him, is unworthy to be ranked, not only among the Philosophers, but even among Men of moderate Virtue; So far is he from coming into any Competition with JESUS CHRIST. Μόνην ἐπισκεψώμεθα τὴν τῦ Φιλοστράτυ γραφὴν δι' ἧς εὐδυνήσομεν ὡς ἔχ ὅτι γε ἐν φιλοσόφοις ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐν ἐπιεικέσι καὶ μετρίοις ἀνδράσιν ἄξιον ἐγκρίνειν, ἔχ ὅπως τῷ σωτῆρι ἡμῶν Χριστῷ παραστῆναι τὸν Ἀπολλώνιον (32). Unam modo pensitemus Philostrati historiam, ex hac enim certis rationibus convincemus Apollonium non inter Philosophos locum, ac ne inter mediocris quidem ac usitatæ probitatis viros dignum sortiri, nedum sit ille Salvatori nostro ratione aliqua conferendus.

(31) Amm. Marcell. lib. 23. cap. 6. pag. 370.

(32) Euseb. in Hierocl. pag. 514.

[G] He left some Works, which have been long since lost.] He wrote four Books of Judicial Astrology (33), and a Treatise On Sacrifices, shewing what was to be offered to each Deity (34). This last Piece became very famous: Eusebius cites it (35): Suidas also mentions it, and adds to it a Testament, a Collection of Oracles and Letters, and The Life of Pythagoras (36). The Theology, of which Eusebius cites a Passage (37), is perhaps the same Piece, with the Treatise On Sacrifices. Apollonius wrote a great Number of Letters, some of which Philostratus has inserted in his History; all of them very short. The Hymn on Memory was not composed by Apollonius, as Mr de Tillemont pretends. He cites the eleventh Chapter of the first Book of Philostratus, pag. 18. I have not met with any such thing, there; but only, that Apollonius, at the Age of an hundred Years, had a better Memory, than Simonides; and that he often sung the Hymn, which Simonides had composed in the praise of Memory. Suidas reports this so confusedly, that he seems to say, that Apollonius composed This Piece. Konig was deceived by it. See the Forty ninth Page of his Bibliotheca. The Testament, mentioned by Suidas Διαθήκη, is, without doubt, the same Book, which Philostratus cites in these Words: Καὶ διαθήκας δὲ τῷ Ἀπολλωνίῳ γεγράφαται παρ' ὧν ὑπάρχει μαθεῖν ὡς ὑποθεσζων τὴν φιλοσοφιαν ἐγένετο (38). Apollonius wrote likewise some Memoirs, from whence we may learn how rapturously fond he was of Philosophy.

(33) Περὶ μαντείας ἀςέρων. De Divinatione Astrorum. Philostr. in Vita Apoll. lib. 3. c. 13.

(34) Id. ib. See likewise lib. 4. cap. 6.

(35) Euseb. Præpar. Evang. lib. 4. cap. 13. pag. 150.

(36) Suid. in Ἀπολλώνιος, p. 376.

(37) Euseb. Demonstr. Evang. lib. 3. cap. 3. pag. 105.

(38) Philostrat. in Vit. Apollon. lib. 1. cap. 3.

[H] Mention is made of another Philosopher, called likewise Apollonius of Tyana.] Suidas is the Author, who mentions him, on the Credit of Agresphon, who wrote a Book concerning Persons of the same Name, περὶ ὁμωνύμων, de homonymis. This brings to my Mind, that a learned Man, whom I have already cited (39),

Digitized by Google

Notes, gave great Offence to pious Minds [I]. It has been condemned, prohibited, and anathematized, and not without Reaſon. I take notice of it in my Remarks. Had we what a cotemporary Philoſopher, named Euphrates, ſatirically wrote againſt Apollonius, we ſhould be furniſhed with an ample Detail of Scandal; for, when ſuch Rivals once declare War againſt each other, they bring many Secrets to Light. Philoſtratus has reaſon to alledge This Euphrates's Silence, as an Argument to convince thoſe of Calumny, who reproached Apollonius with Unchaſtity, and boldly to maintain, that Apollonius, even in the Vigour of his Youth, triumphed over Nature, and always lived in a ſtate of ſtrict Continency (o). Sidonius Apollinaris has given us a Deſcription of Apollonius, which repreſents him as the greateſt of Heroes in Philoſophy [K]. The Author of this Deſcription does not forget to make his Excuſes to the Catholic Church.

(o) Philoſtr. lib. 1, cap. 8.

(39) Mr de Sallo. See Remark [F], of the Article ALLATIUS.

cited (39), queſtions, whether the Ancients wrote any Books, like thoſe of Leo Allatius, de Simeonibus, de Pſellis, &c. He ought not to have queſtioned it; for, beſides Agreſphon, we can appeal to Demetrius Magnes. Some learned Men would add Dionyſius of Sinope, and Simariſtus; but they are miſtaken. See the Remark [B], of the Article DEMETRIUS (MAGNES).

[I] An Engliſh Tranſlation of this Life, —— gave great Offence to pious Minds.] The Author of this Tranſlation proceeded no farther, than the third Book excluſively. If he had done nothing more than tranſlate, there would have been no juſt Cauſe of Complaint; but to this Tranſlation he has ſubjoined a great Number of Annotations, which he borrowed, for the moſt part, from a Manuſcript of the famous Baron Herbert, a great Deiſt, if we may believe many Perſons. They, who have read theſe Annotations, have aſſured me, that they are full of Poiſon; that they tend to deſtroy Revealed Religion, and to bring the Holy Scriptures into Contempt. The Author does not carry on this Deſign by Arguments, gravely and ſeriouſly propoſed, but almoſt continually by prophane Jeſts, and little Subtilties; ſo that it was not without Reaſon, and Juſtice, that this Book, which was printed in London, in the Year 1680 (40), was prohibited under ſevere Penalties. This new Tranſlator of Philoſtratus was an Engliſh Gentleman, whoſe Name was Charles Blount. In the Year 1693, he publiſhed a Treatiſe, the Title of which was, The Oracles of Reaſon, and accompanied it with ſome other ſmall Pieces of the ſame Stamp. The ſame Year he died a tragical Death. He was greatly in Love with his Brother's Widow; and pretended, he might marry her without committing Inceſt; and even wrote a Treatiſe to prove it; but, ſeeing no likelihood of obtaining the Church's Conſent, he fell into Deſpair, and killed himſelf. See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned (41). To return; Mr de Tillemont, ſpeaking of thoſe, who had wrote the Life of Apollonius, ſtops at Philoſtratus. Let us advance farther. Nicomachus, who lived in the Reign of Aurelian, wrote the Life of Apollonius, on That, which Philoſtratus had compoſed; Tuſcius Victorianus wrote another upon That of Nicomachus. Sidonius Apollinaris wrote a third, and followed the Plan of Victorianus, rather than That of Nicomachus (42). We read, in Suidas, That Soterichus, a Native of Oaſis in Egypt, had compoſed the Life of Apollonius. This Author lived in the Reign of Aurelian. I cannot imagine on what Ground Savaron builds, when he reckons Plutarch among thoſe, who had written the Life of our Apollonius (43).

(40) The Title ſpecifies the Year 1680. It muſt have lain concealed for ſeveral Years; for it was not condemned 'till 1693.

(41) Month of November, 1693, pag. 135, 136.

(42) Ex Sidonii Apollinaris Epiſt. 3, lib. 8.

(43) Savaro, in Sidon. Apollin. pag. 491.

[K] Sidonius Apollinaris has given us a Deſcription of Apollonius, which repreſents him as the greateſt of Heroes in Philoſophy] That every one may judge of this, let us here produce the Words of Sidonius Apollinaris. He had written the Life of Apollonius; and, ſending it to a Counſellor of Evarigus, King of the Goths, he addreſſes him after this manner. "Lege virum (fidei Catholicæ pace præfata) in plurimis ſimilem tui, id eſt, à divitibus ambitum, nec divitias ambientem; cupidum ſcientiæ, continentem pecuniæ; inter epulas abſtemium, inter purpuratos linteatum, inter alabaſtra cenſorium: Concretum, hiſpidum, hirſutum, in medio nationum delibutarum; atque inter ſatrapas regum tiaratorum myrrhatos, pumicatos, malobatratos, venerabili ſqualore pretioſum. Cumque proprio nihil eſui aut indutui de pecude conferret, regnis ob hoc, quæ pererravit, non tam ſuſpicioni, quam fuiſſe ſuſpectui: & fortuna regum ſibi in omnibus obſecundante, illa tantum beneficia poſcentem, quæ mage ſit ſuetus, oblata præſtare, quam ſumere (44). —— Read (by the Catholic Church's Permiſſion) this Life of a Perſon, in many things not unlike yourſelf; that is, one courted by the Rich, but not courting Riches; covetous of Science, but moderate in his Deſire of Wealth; at Banquets, abſtemious; amidſt thoſe in Purple, habited himſelf in Linnen; amidſt ſweet Ointments and Perfumes, a rigid Cenſor of Manners; amidſt a Race of Fops, rough and unpoliſhed; and amidſt perfumed and ſmooth Courtiers, valuable for his venerable Unattire. And, as he was not indebted to his own Flock either for Food or Raiment, he was the Admiration, rather than Jealouſy, of the Countries he travelled over; and, having the Fortunes of Kings ever at his Command, he aſked no other Favours, than ſuch as he was wont rather to beſtow, when offered, than receive."

(44) Sidon. Apollin Epiſt. 3, lib. 8. pag. 486.

(a) Some call him Peter d'Avana.

APONA (a) (PETER of) in Latin PETRUS APONENSIS, or APONUS, one of the moſt famous Philoſophers, and Phyſicians, of his Times, was born in the Year 1250 (b), in a Village ſituated four Miles from Padua. He ſtudied a long time at Paris, where he was promoted to the Degrees of Doctor in Philoſophy and Phyſic [A]. I cannot tell whether he died very rich; but I have read

(b) Jacobus Philippus Tomaſinus, Elog. illuſtr. Vir. p. 22.

[A] He ſtudied a long time at Paris, where he was promoted to the Degrees of Doctor in Philoſophy and Phyſic.] Naudé takes notice of this, in a Speech, in which he extols the ancient Glory of the Univerſity of Paris, as much as poſſible. Let us produce his Words at length, becauſe they incidently inform us, that Peter of Apona compoſed That great Work at Paris, which procured him the Apellation of The Reconciler. "Prodeat tandem Petrus Aponenſis ab "inſigni libro, quem, dum veſtras ſcholas frequentaret, edidit, Conciliatoris nomen adeptus: Certe "latebat in Italia, nulli propè cognita, nullis aliis "diſciplinis, nullis artibus, nedum propriis, exculta, "nulla denique, vel linguarum cognitione, vel Philoſophiæ nitore, decorata Medicina; cum ecce tutelaris illius genius, ex Aponenſis balnei pago, Italiam ab ignorantiæ barbarie, velut alter Camillus Romam à Gallorum obſidione, liberaturus, diligenter inquirit, ubinam gentium humaniores literæ feliciùs excolerentur, Philoſophia ſubtilius traderetur, Medicina puriùs & ſolidiùs edoceretur: cumque reſciviſſet uni Lutetiæ hanc laudem deberi, in eam ſtatim involat, illius gremio totum ſe tradit, Philoſophiæ, Medicinæque myſteriis ſedulò incumbit, gradum & lauream in utraque conſequitur, utramque poſtea celeberrime docet, & poſt diuturnam annorum moram divitiis veſtris onuſtus, imo Philoſophus, Medicus, Aſtrologus, Mathematicus ſuæ tempeſtatis præſtantiſſimus, in patriam ſuam revertitur, & primus omnium Scardæoni viri graviſſimi judicio, ſynceram Philoſophiam, & Medicinam illi reſtituit. Unde gratitudinis read, that he made his Patients pay exorbitant Fees [B]. He was ſuſpected of Magic, and proſecuted on that Account by the Inquiſition [C]; and it is probable, that,

Digitized by Google

" dinis ergo compellandus venit, & à vobis merita " gratia proſequendus Michael, Angelus Blondus Me- " dicus Romanus, quòd ſuperiori ſæculo Aponenſis " veſtri Conciliationes Phyſiognomicas elegantioribus " typis demandare volens, cum vidiſſet eas à doctore " veſtro, Pariſiiis, & in Facultate veſtra fuiſſe elabo- " ratas, has idcirco veſtri Collegii nomine & auſpi- " cio in lucem prodire voluerit (1). —— Let us next " produce Peter of Apona, called The Reconciler, " on account of the famous Book, which he publiſhed " during his Reſidence in your Univerſity. It is cer- " tain, that Phyſic lay buried in Italy, ſcarce known " to any one, uncultivated, and unadorned; when lo! " it's Tutelar Genius, a Villager of Apona, deſtin- " ed to free Italy from Barbariſm and Ignorance, as " once Camillus freed Rome from the Seige of the " Gauls, made diligent Enquiry, in what part of the " World polite Learning was moſt happily cultivated, " Philoſophy moſt ſubtily handled, and Phyſic taught " with the greateſt Purity and Solidity; and, being " aſſured, that Paris alone laid claim to this Ho- " nour, thither he preſently flies; gives himſelf up " wholly to her Tutelage; applies himſelf diligently " to the Myſteries of Philoſophy and Medicine; obtains " a Degree and the Laurel in both; afterwards " teaches them both with great Applauſe; and, after " a ſtay of many Years, loaden with the Wealth ac- " quired among you, and become the moſt famous Phi- " loſopher, Phyſician, Aſtrologer, and Mathematician, " of his Times, returns to his own Country; where, " in the Opinion of the judicious Scardeon, he was " the firſt Reſtorer of true Philoſophy and Phyſic. " Gratitude, therefore, calls upon you to acknowledge " your Obligations to Michael Angelus Blondus, a " Phyſician of Rome, who, in the laſt Century, un- " dertaking to publiſh the Conciliationes Phyſiogno- micæ of your Aponenſian Doctor, and finding, that " they had been compoſed at Paris, and in your Uni- " verſity, choſe to publiſh them in the Name, and under " the Patronage, of your Society."

(1) Gabriel Naudé, de Antiquitate Scholæ Medicæ Pariſienſis, pag. 44, &c.

[B] He made his Patients pay exorbitant Fees.] We have no account of what he exacted for the Viſits he made, in the Place of his Reſidence; but it is affirmed, that he would not go out of Town to viſit the Sick, under an Hundred and fifty Livers a Day (2). They add (3), that, being ſent for by Pope Honorius IV, he demanded Four hundred Ducats a Day. This we find in the Abridgment of his Life, inſerted in the new Edition of Vander Linden, de ſcriptoribus Medicis. Camerarius relates the ſame thing (4), but without naming the Pope, who ſent for this Phyſician. He does not obſerve the ſame Silence in relation to the Place, where Peter of Apona reſided; he ſays it was at Bologne. He mentions, indeed, Pope Honorius IV, but ſays, that the Phyſician, who exacted ſo vaſt a Sum from this Pope, was not Peter of Apona. Theſe are his Words. " In the Days of " our Fathers, there was a Phyſician of Florence, " whoſe Name was Thadeus, who acquired ſuch a " Reputation, that, by his Practice out of Town, " he gained fifty Crowns a Day; and, being ſent " for by Pope Honorius IV, received an hundred " Crowns a Day from him; inſomuch, that, at his " return from Rome, he brought away Ten thou- " ſand Crowns (5)." If he had conſulted Chronology, he would not have ſaid in the Days of our Fathers; for this Pope was elected in the Year 1285, and died in the Year 1287. Lancelot of Perouſa, quoting Ciaconius (6), ſays, that this Thadeus, a Florentine, and Profeſſor at Bologne, made the Meſſengers of Pope Honorius IV promiſe, that he ſhould be paid an hundred Crowns a Day; and adds, that this Journey was worth to him Ten thouſand Crowns; but obſerves, that others write, that Peter of Apona had Four hundred Crowns a Day from this Pope (7). He had ſaid, that this Peter never went out of Town to Viſit a Patient under a Fee of fifty Florins. You will find, in the Theatrum of Paul Freherus, that he was Profeſſor of Phyſic at Bologne, and that he was ſent for from all parts of Italy, though he exacted fifty Florins a Day (8). You will find, likewiſe, that he bargained, with Honorius IV, for the Sum of an Hundred Florins a Day, and that, having cured this Pope, he received a thouſand Crowns. Theſe are very different Accounts.

(2) See Merclinus in Lindenio renovato. pag. 878.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) Camerarius, Medit. tions Hiſtoriques, Tom. 1. cap. 4.

(5) Id. ibid.

(6) In vita Honorii IV.

(7) Secondo Lancelot da Perugia, l'Hoggidi. Parte II. Diſinganno 18, pag. 377.

(8) Freher. in Theatro Viror. Illuſtr. pag. 1269. Hectes Bernardus Scardeonus, lib. 2, cluſe 9. Hiſtoriæ Patavinæ.

[C] He was ſuſpected of Magic, and proſecuted on that account by the Inquiſition.] This Suſpicion continues ſtill; nay, many do more than ſuſpect, and are even firmly perſuaded of it. " The general " Opinion of almoſt all Authors is, that he was the " greateſt Magician of his Time; that, by means of " ſeven familiar Spirits, which he kept incloſed in " Cryſtal, he had acquired the Knowledge of the " ſeven liberal Arts; that, like another Paſetes, he " had the Art of making the Money, which he " had ſpent, return into his Pocket (9)." The Author, who furniſhes me with theſe Words, adds, " That it was certain he was accuſed of Magic, in " the eightieth Year of his Age (10), and that, " dying in the Year 1305 (11), before his Trial " was over, he was yet condemned, as Caſtellan " reports *, to the Fire; and that a Bundle of " Straw, or Oſier, repreſenting his Perſon, was pub- " lickly burnt at Padua; that, by ſo rigorous an " Example, and by the fear of incurring a like Pe- " nalty, they might ſuppreſs the reading of three ſu- " perſtitious and abominable Books, which he had " compoſed on this Subject; the firſt of which was " the Heptameron, now printed at the end of the " firſt Volume of the Works of Agrippa; the ſecond, " That, which Trithemius calls Elucidarium Necro- " manticum Petri de Albano; and a third, called by " the ſame Auhor, Liber experimentorum mirabilium " de annulis ſecundum 28 manſiones Lunæ (12)." Theſe ſeem to be ſtrong Proofs; yet Naudé lays no Streſs upon them. He refutes them immediately by obſerving, that Peter of Apona was a Man of prodigious Wit and Learning, in an Age of Darkneſs; which was ſufficient to render him ſuſpected of Magic; being, beſides, much addicted to curious and divinatory Sciences. " He was one, ſays he (13), " who appeared as a Prodigy and Miracle, amidſt " the Ignorance of that Age; and who, beſides his " Skill in Languages, and Phyſic, had carried his " Enquiries ſo far into thoſe leſs common Sciences, " that, after having given moſt ample Proofs, by " his Writings concerning Phyſiognomy, Geomancy, " and Chiromancy, what he was able to perform in " each of theſe, he quitted them all, together with " his youthful Curioſity, to addict himſelf wholly " to the Study of Philoſophy, Phyſic, and Aſtrolo- " gy; which Studies proved ſo advantageous to him, " that, not to ſpeak of the two firſt, which intro- " duced him to the Favour of all the Popes and " ſovereign Pontiffs of his Time, and acquired him " the Reputation, which he enjoys at preſent among " learned Men; it is certain, that he was a great " Maſter in the latter, as appears not only by the " Aſtronomical Figures, which he cauſed to be " painted in the great Hall of the Palace of Pa- " dua, and the Tranſlations he made of the Books of " Rabbi Abraham Aben Ezra, added to thoſe which " he himſelf compoſed on critical Days, and the " Improvement of Aſtronomy, but by the Teſtimo- " ny likewiſe of the renowned Mathematician Re- " gio-Montanus, who made a fine Panegyric on him, " in quality of an Aſtrologer, in the Oration, which " he delivered publickly at Padua, when he explain- " ed there the Book of Alfraganus." Naudé obſerves afterwards, that Peter of Apona was very much addicted to Aſtrology (14); whence it is, that many Authors maintain " a quite contrary Opinion to the " preceeding; to wit, that he did not undergo this " Sentence on the Score of Magic, but becauſe he " endeavoured to account for the wonderful Effects, " which often happen in Nature, by the Influences " of the Celeſtial Bodies, without attributing them " to Angels or Dæmons. Which is very evident " from the Collection, which Symphorian Champier * " has made, of the Paſſages of his Differences, which " muſt not be read without Caution; and from the pe- " remptory Authority of Francis Picus, who, ſpeak- " ing of them, ſays expreſsly †, Ab omnibus ferme " creditus eſt Magus; verum conſtat quam oppo- " ſitum dogma ei aliquando tributum ſit, quem etiam " hæreſeum inquiſitores vexaverunt, quaſi nullos eſſe " Dæmones crediderit. —— It was the ſettled " Opinion of every one, that he was a Magician; " but it is certain, that the quite contrary Opinions " were aſcribed to him; ſince he was even accuſed of " Hereſy

(9) Naudé's Apology for great Men accuſed of Magic, cap. 14, pag. 380.

(10) This is falſe. See Remark [F].

(11) This is likewiſe falſe. See the ſame Remark.

(12) Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 380.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 382.

(14) This appears from all his Works, and eſpecially in the 15th Diſputation of his Conciliator. Id. ib. pag. 384.

* In vitis Illuſtr. Medicorum.

* III. Parte, lib. Cribrat.

† Lib. 7. de Prænot. cap. 7.

Digitized by Google

that, if he had lived to the End of his Trial, he would have suffered, in Person; what he was sentenced to suffer in Effigie after his Death. We shall relate (c), what his Apologists observe, that His Body, being privately taken out of it's Grave, by his Friends, escaped the Vigilance of the Inquisitors, who would have condemned it to be burnt [D]. He was removed from Place to Place, and at last deposited in St Augustin's Church, without Epitaph, or any other Mark of Honour (d). His Accusers ascribed inconsistent Opinions to him; they charge him with being a Magician, and yet with denying the Existence of Devils [E]. He had such an Antipathy to Milk, that the very seeing any one drink it turned his Stomach (e). He died

(c) In Remark [C].

(d) Tomasin. Elog. Vir. Illustr. pag. 24.

(e) Mercklinus, in Liuidenio renovato, pag. 879. Freherus, in Theatro, pag. 1203. He cites Marcellus Donatus, and Math. de Gradibus.

" Heresy by the Inquisition, as one, who opposed the " Doctrine of Spiritual Beings. To which may be " added, that, upon this account, Baptista Mantuanus ‖ calls him, Virum magnæ, sed nimium audacis temerariæque doctrinæ. —— One, whose Doctrine was great, but too bold and rash; That Cusmannus ‡ reckons him in the Number of those, who ascribed all Miracles to Nature, and that le Loyer affirms, in his Apparitions , that he laughed at Sorcerers, and their Nocturnal Meetings: Whence one would wonder, why the same Authors reckon him frequently among the Inchanters and Magicians; if it were not the Practice of those, who write on such Subjects, so to swell their Books, by copying all they find in Authors, that it is with Difficulty they observe the Precept of the Poet;

‖ Lib. 1. de Patientia. cap. 3.

‡ Angelogr. Parte II. cap. 21. Quæst. 2.

 Book 4, chap. 3.

(15) Horat. Art Poet. Primo ne medium, medio ne discrepet imum (15).

All should be uniform and of a Peice.

After this, his Apologist declares, That " he can justify him both from the Crimes of Magic and Atheism, " as well by the Testimony, which the illustrious and religious Frederick, Duke of Urbin, " has been pleased to give to his Merit, by placing " his Statue among those of the famous Men, which " are to be seen in his Citadel; as also by the public Attestation of the City of Padua, which has " set up his Effigies over the Gate of it's Town-house, with those of Livy, Albertus, and Julius Paulus, and with this Inscription on the Base. " Petrus Aponus Patavinus Philosophiæ Medicinæque scientissimus, ob idque Conciliatoris nomen " adeptus; Astrologiæ vero adeo peritus, ut in Magiæ suspicionem inciderit, falsoque de hæresi postulatus, absolutus fuerit (16). —— Petrus Aponus of Padua, very learned in Philosophy and Physic; whence he had the Name of The Reconciler; " and so expert in Astrology, that he was suspected of Magic, and being accused of Heresy, was acquitted. —— But, adds he (17), fully to expose the Falshood of these Objections, we may reply to what Ludwigius †† has said of the seven Spirits, " which taught him the seven Liberal Arts, that this fabulous Report took it's Rise from what the same Peter of Apona ‖‖ affirms, after Albumazar, " that the Prayers, which are made to God, when the Moon is in Conjunction with Jupiter, in the Head of the Dragon, are infallibly heard; and that, having requested for himself, (to use his own Terms) sapientiam à primo, visus est sibi in illa amplius proficere. Upon which account, many Authors justly deride him for so indiscreetly disowning all his Watchings and Labours, and for ascribing his Knowledge wholly to the Superstition of this Prayer; which cannot but be vain, and fruitless, in whatever Sense it be taken. For if you say, it is addressed to the Planets, it is gross Stupidity to believe, that they can hear it; if to God, I would willingly know, whether he was deaf before this Conjunction, or whether he will not hear our Prayers without it, or whether it can force and necessitate him to condescend to the Petitions, which are then made to him. And hence it is, that John Picus ‡‡, speaking of this new Solomon, had reason to say, Consulerem Petro isti ut totum quod profecit suæ potius industriæ ingenioque acceptum referret, quam Joviæ illi suæ supplicationi. —— I would advise this Peter to confess himself indebted, for all his Knowledge, to his own Industry and Genius, rather than to this Planetary Prayer. It may be said, likewise, in answer to the Proofs, which are brought for the three Books, published under his Name, that they are no less falsely ascribed to him, than many others are to almost all other great Wits; witness Trithemius's * not allowing them to be genuine, on account of the many Fables, which have been forged, in relation to this Author; and his having said before, in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers, that he did not believe what was said of the Magic Art of Petrus Aponensis, because he had never seen any Book of his on this Subject. If to this you will farther add the Silence of all the Librarians, and the Confirmation, which Symphorian Champier † gives to this Authority of Trithemius, when he affirms, that he had never seen any of his magical Books, excepting only some Disputations, in which he treats of it incidentally; I believe nothing can prevent our acknowledging his Innocence, and supposing, with the better Sort, that all the Suspicions of Magic Art, which have been thrown upon him, proceed, as from their true Spring and Origin, from the Power, which he attributes to it, in the CLVI Disputation of his Conciliator, and from the Predictions, which he might make by Virtue of Astrology; on which, by Length of Time, All These Fables and Chimera's have been grafted; according to the true Observation of Propertius.

(16) This Inscription is in Tomasin, in Elog Illustr. viror. pag. 23.

(17) Naudé ubi supra, pag. 338.

†† Dæmonomagiæ, Quæst. 16.

‖‖ Differentia CLVI.

‡‡ Lib. 4. adverf. Astrolog. cap. 8.

* Antipali, lib. 1. cap. 3.

† Tractat. 4, lib. de claris Medicinæ Scriptoribus.

Omnia post obitum pingit majora vetustas *.

* Eleg. 1. lib. 3.

Time magnifies each Object, after Death.

Remark the following Errors of Mr de Clavigni de Sainte Honorine. He pretends, that the Effigies of Peter of Apona, made by Order of the Duke of Urbin, stands in the Market-Place of Padua, with Those of Livy, Albertus, and Julius Paulus, and that the Inscription contains Astrologiæ adeo peritus, ut in magiæ suspicionem venerit (18). I. The Statue, under which these Words are inscribed, is not in the Market-Place of Padua, but over one of the Gates of the Town-house. In Unæ Portarum Prætorii Patavini (19). II. The Statue, which the Duke of Urbin caused to be erected, was not set up in Padua, but in the Castle of This Duke. III. The Words, which Mr de Clavigni mentions, are not on it's Pedestal. See TOMASINI (20).

(18) Clavigni de St. Honorine, Lecture des livres suspects, pag. 101, 102.

(19) Tomas. Elog. Viror. Illustr. pag. 23.

(20) Ibid.

[D] The Inquisitors, who would have condemned his Body to be burnt.] Peter of Apona, being accused of Magic and Heresy, died during his Trial, and was buried in the Church of St Antony. All the Zealots were scandalized at it: The Inquisitors continued the Process, and, having convicted him, by his Writings, of Impiety, they condemned his Body to the Flames; but, when they could not find it, they ordered his Effigies to be publickly burnt. This is what we read in Spondanus (21). But how can we reconcile this with the Inscription, which the Magistrates of Padua caused to be put under the Statue of This Physician, and in which they declare, that he was acquitted. Petrus Romauldus reports, that the Inquisitors, having publickly read the Sentence of Condemnation against Peter of Apona, caused his Effigies to be burnt. He observes likewise, that they could not find his Body; his Concubine Mariette having privately taken him out of his Grave by Night, and hid him a ruinous Sepulchre (23).

(21) Spondanus Annal. Eccles. ad ann. 1316, n. 8. He cites Scardeon. Hist. Patavin, lib. 2, class. 9.

(23) Pet. Romuald, Journal Chronol. & Historique. Decemb. 31. He cites Bernard Scandeo He means, no doubt, Bernardin Scardeon.

[E] They charged him with being a Magician, and yet with denying the Existence of Devils.] We have seen (24) what Advantage his Apologist makes of this Contradiction; but he ought to have taken notice, that Bodin ranks Peter of Apona among those Sorcerers, who, to elude judicial Proceedings, maintain, that all that is said of Devils, and Magic, is a Chimera. Bodin declares, that he wrote his Book of

(24) In Remark [C].

Digitized by Google

died in the Year 1316, in the Sixty ſixth Year of his Age [F]. One of his principal Books was That, to which he gave the Title of Conciliator. They tell a very ridiculous Story of him; namely, that, having no Well in his own Houſe, and a Neighbour forbidding his Servant Maid to fetch any more Water at His Well; he cauſed the Devils to remove his Neighbour's Well into the Street (f). He had much better have employed his Devils in making a Well to his own Houſe, and ſtopping up his Neighbour's, or at leaſt in removing his Neighbour's Well into his own Yard, rather than into the Street.

(f) Tomaso Garſoni, Piazza univerſale di tutte le Profeſſioni, diſcorſo 135 fol. 365. verſo.

of the Demonomania of Sorcerers, among other Reaſons, "to ſerve as an Anſwer to thoſe, who endeavour, by printed Books, as far as poſſible, to excuſe Sorcerers; inſomuch that it ſeems as if they were influenced by the Devil himſelf, to publiſh theſe fine Books; ſuch was Peter of Apona, a Phyſician, who endeavoured to demonſtrate, that there were no Spirits; and yet it was afterwards affirmed, that he was one of the greateſt Sorcerers of Italy (25)."

(25) Bodin's Preface to his Demonomanie des Sorciers, pag. 5. See alſo chap. 5. pag. 71.

[F] He died in the Year 1316, in the Sixty ſixth Year of his Age.] So we read, in an Inſcription mentioned by Tomaſini (26). If this be true, it muſt be confeſſed, that Naudé is miſtaken, when he ſays, that Peter of Apona, being accuſed at the Age of eighty Years, died in the Year 1305. Freherus ſays the ſame thing, upon the Authority of Bernardin Scardeon (27). Let us obſerve, likewiſe, that Geſner is miſtaken in making Peter of Apona flouriſh in the Year 1320 (28). Konig has copied This Error (29). But Father Rapin is much more groſly miſtaken than any of them, when he places him in the ſixteenth Century. "Peter of Apona, ſays he (30), a Phyſician of Padua, who flouriſhed under Clement VII, debauched his Imagination ſo far by reading the Arabian Philoſophers, and by too frequent poring on the Aſtrology of Alfraganus, that he was put into the Inquiſition on Suſpicion of Magic." Voſſius has followed Geſner, and makes an Obſervation, which deſerves to be conſidered. He ſays, that Peter of Apona ſent his Book de Medicina omnimoda to Pope John XXII, who was elected in the Year 1316, and held the Chair ſeventeen Years (31). By this we know the Age of This Phyſician. But, if the Year 1316 was That of his Death, the Concluſion is not juſt, nor does it acquit Voſſius of an Error.

(26) Tomaſini, in Elog. Viror. Illuſtr. pag. 22.

(27) Paulus Freher. in Theatro, pag. 209.

(28) Geſner, in Biblioth. fol. 544.

(29) Konig. Bibl. vet. & nova, pag. 49.

(30) Rapin. Reflex. ſur la Philoſophie, n. 28. pag. 360.

(31) Voſſius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 182.

APROSIO (ANGELICO) born at Vintimiglia, on the River of Genoa, the Twenty ninth of October 1607, was well eſteemed among the Learned, and wrote a great Number of Books. His Family produced ſeveral learned Men (a). He was but Fifteen Years of Age, when he entered himſelf in the Order of the Auguſtins; where his Abilities procured him the Office of Vicar-General of the Congregation of our Lady of Conſolation at Genoa (b). When he had finiſhed his Studies, he was thought ſufficiently qualified to teach others; accordingly he taught Philoſophy for Five Years, and afterwards travelled into ſeveral Parts of Italy; and, in the Year 1639, fixed his Reſidence at Venice, in St Stephen's Convent, where he taught polite Literature (c). One thing, which contributed very much to his Renown, was the Bibliotheque of the Auguſtins of Vintimiglia, which was intirely his own Work, and a ſingular Proof of his Love of Books, and the Care he took to underſtand them thoroughly (d). He publiſhed a Book concerning this Bibliotheque, which is much eſteemed by the Curious [A]. Beſides he took great Pleaſure in diſguiſing himſelf under fictitious Names in the Front of his Works. Perhaps he durſt not write, in his own Name, on Matters ſo little conformable to a Religious Life, as the Conteſts

(a) See the following Article.

(b) Michel Juſtiniani, Scrittori Liguri, pag. 63.

(c) Philippus Elſius, in Encomiaſtico Auguſtiniano, apud Juſtinianum, pag. 67.

(d) Raffael Soprani, li ſcrittori della Liguria, pag. 21.

[A] He publiſhed a Book concerning this Bibliotheque, which is much eſteemed by the Curious.] Mr Morhof had heard much talk of this Book, but did not know, that it was printed. He mentions it in ſeveral Parts of his Polyhiſtor (1), publiſhed in the Year 1688; but always as one, who believed, that this Piece had not yet appeared from the Preſs. It is, nevertheleſs, certain, that the Bibliotheca Aproſiana was printed at Bologne, in the Year 1673; and that Martin Fogelius (2), Profeſſor at Hamburgh, had a Copy of it, as Mr Morhof might have ſeen in the Catalogue of That Profeſſor's Books; for he cites this Catalogue (3), which was printed in the Year 1678. This is what Placcius obſerves in his Invitatio Amica, publiſhed at Hamburgh, in the Year 1689. He adds, that he has mentioned this Work of Aproſio among his Pſeudonymous Pieces (4), and refers us to the Annotations on the Catalogue of Rhodius (5). In Effect, he informs us, in the One hundred and fiftieth Page of his Pſeudonymous Pieces, that he was informed, by a Letter from Mr Magliabecchi to Martin Vogelius, that Aproſio, diſguiſed under the Name of Cornelio Aſpaſio Antivigilmi trai i Vagabondi di Tabbia detto L'Aggirato, had publiſhed a Book in 12mo, in the Year 1673, intituled Bibliotheca Aproſiana, paſſa tempo Autonnale. In the Annotations on the Catalogue of Rhodius, there is a Doubt raiſed on what Scævenius had ſaid, that Aproſio had compoſed a Book entituled, Bibliotheca Apocryphorum, in which he reſtored many Pieces to their true Authors (6). The Reaſon of this Doubt is, that the Book, intituled Bibliotheca Apocryphorum, is not to be found in the Catalogues of the Works of Aproſio, but only the Bibliotheca Aproſia. Now it is ſuppoſed, that Scævenius might, by a natural Miſtake, metamorphoſe Aproſia into Apocrypha. It is ſomething ſtrange, that Father Oldoini has not mentioned the Bibliotheca Aproſiana, paſſa tempo Autonnale, ſince he did not publiſh his Athenæum Liguſticum 'till the Year 1680. It is true, he places the Bibliotheca Aproſiana & Antiquitates Abintimillienſes among the Works of Aproſio; but in ſuch a manner, as to perſuade us, that this Work had never been printed. Mr Teiſſier, in the Year 1686, leaves more room for doubt, than for deciding any thing in this Matter (7). Mr Morhof obſerves, that Mr Leti quotes an Author, who has cited the ſecond Volume of the Bibliotheca Aproſiana. "Producit Idem Leti, ex Abbate Libanoro, pag. 379, "locum quo tomus ſecundus Bibliothecæ Aproſianæ "citatur, quo multi continentur ab Hieron. Sava- "norola manuſcripti libri (8).——The ſame Leti pro- "duces a Paſſage, from the Abbot Libanorus, p. 379. "where the ſecond Volume of the Bibliotheca Aproſiana "is cited, in which are contained many manuſcript "Works of Jerome Savanorola."

This Citation of Leti is very juſt; and for this, and other Reaſons, I am ſtrongly perſuaded, that Morhof does not alledge the Italia regnante on the Credit of others, but that he had read it himſelf. How comes it, then, that he does not know, that the Bibliotheca Aproſiana was printed at Bologne, by the Manoleſſi, in the Year 1673, in 12mo? Does not Mr Leti poſitively affirm it, in the Three hundred ſeventy ſeventh Page of the fourth Part of his Italia regnante, and does he not cite ſufficiently long Paſſages out of This Work of Aproſio? He adds, that the Author, having carried on the Relation of his own Life as far as the Two hundred ſixty ſecond Page, mentions afterwards, to Page 666, ſeveral Authors, who had given in their Works to him (9); and that this firſt Volume contains only the Writers, whoſe Names begin either with the Letters A, B, or C.

(1) Pag. 38, 59, 144.

(2) Or Vogelius.

(3) Polyhiſt. pag. 37.

(4) N. 74.

(5) Pag. 27, 28.

(6) See Remark [D].

(7) Catalog. Auctor. Bibliothecar. pag. 18.

(8) Morhof. Polyhiſt. pag. 38.

(9) Narrando la ſua vita con l'inſerirvi varie curioſità intorno ad Amici ſuoi. Leti, Ital. Regn. Parte IV. pag. 378.

Digitized by Google

teſts between the Wits about the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini [B], or ſuch like Matters [C]. Or, perhaps, he was naturally fond of inventing different Alluſions, and in puzzling thoſe, who are eager to unmaſk a diſguiſed Author. He loved this Employ well enough himſelf [D]. Be that as it will, if you conſult the Authors, who have given us a Catalogue of the Ligurian Writers (e), you will find, by the Titles of his Works, that he gives himſelf an hundred fictitious Names, ſometimes That of Maſoto Galiſtoni, ſometimes That of Carlo Galiſtoni, ſometimes That of Scipio Glareano, ſometimes That of Sapricio Saprici, and at other times That of Oldauro Scioppio, &c. His Life is to be met with in the Work intituled Bibliotheca Aproſiana. Several Authors have given him great Commendations; and ſome perhaps have exceeded the Bounds of Reaſon (f). He was admitted, among other Academies, into That of the Incogniti of Venice; as appears by the Book [E] intituled, Le Glorie de gli Incogniti, overo gli Huomini illuſtri dell' Academia de' i Signiori Incogniti di Venetia; —— The Glory of The Incogniti, or the Illuſtrious Men of the Academy of the Incogniti at Venice; where his Elogy appears at large. He was living in the Year 1680, when Oldoini publiſhed his Athenæum Lyguſticum.

(e) Raffael Soprani, & Michel Juſtiniani in 1667. Auguſtin Oldoini in 1680.

(f) Magnifica eius & plane invidenda Elogia adferuntur à Gregorio Leti, Italia regnante, part. 4. l. b. 3. pag. 377. Morhof Polyhiſt. p. 38. See alſo pag. 144.

He believes, that the following Volumes will ſpeedily be printed; but he had been aſſured, that the ſecond was not; from whence he concludes, that Father Libanori, who quotes it, had only ſeen it in Manuſcript (10). This Work of Mr Leti was printed in the Year 1676.

(10) Id. ib. p. 379, 380.

[B] He durſt not write in his own Name - - - - concerning the Conteſts between the Wits about the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini.] The Cavalier Stigliani, having publiſhed the Book of the Ochiale, or The Spectacle, which is a ſevere Cenſure of the Adonis, found himſelf attacked on all ſides (11). It appeared plainly, upon this Occaſion, how much Italy was infatuated with the Adonis; They run to this Controverſy as it were to put out a Fire: But, among the many Perſons, who took Pen in Hand in Defence of the Cavalier Marini, none ſhewed more Zeal for the Adonis, nor more Heat againſt the Enemies of That Poem, than Father Aproſio de Vintimiglia, Hermit of St Auguſtin (12). He publiſhed the Occhiale Stritolato di Scipio Glareano per riſpoſta al Signor Cavaliere Frà Tomaſo Stigliani (13). - - - - - La Sferza poëtica di Sapricio Saprici, lo ſcantonata Accademico Heteroclito, per riſpoſta alla prima cenſura dell' Adone dell Cavalier Marino, fatta dall Cavalier Tomaſo Stigliani (14) —— Del Veratro, Apologia di Sapricio Saprici, per riſpoſta alla ſeconda cenſura dell' Adone del Cavalier Marino, fatta dal Cavaliere Frà Tomaſo Stigliani. —— The Spectacles broke to pieces of Scipio Glareano, in Anſwer to Father Thomaſo Stigliani. —— The Poëtical Whip of Sapricio Saprici, in Anſwer to the Cenſure of the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, made by the Cavalier Tomaſo Stigliani. —— Hellebore &c. An Apology of Sapricio Saprici, in Anſwer to a ſecond Cenſure of the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, made by the Cavalier Tomaſo Stigliani. This Work is divided into two Treatiſes (15); it was Hellebore given in two Doſes. He had wrote againſt the ſame Stigliani, Il Vaglio Critico di Maſoto Galiſtoni da Terama ſopra il mondo nuovo del Cavalier Frà Tomaſo Stigliani da Matera (16). —— Il Burato, Replica di Carlo Galiſtoni al Molino del Sig. Carlo Stigliani (17). —— The Poëtical Sieve &c. and The Bolting-Cloth &c.

(11) See Baillet Jugem. ſur les Poët. Tom. 4 pag. 198.

(12) Ibid. pag. 200.

(13) Printed at Venice, in 1641.

(14) Printed at Venice, in 1643.

(15) One printed in 1645; the other in 1647, at Venice.

(16) Printed at Treviſa in 1637.

(17) Printed at Venice in 1642.

Obſerve, that Maſoto Galiſtoni da Terama is the Anagram of Tomaſo Stigliani da Matera, and that, inſtead of putting in the Title in Trevigi per Girolamo Righettini, it is put in Roſtoch per Willerno Wallop, becauſe this Righettini was a Bookſeller of ſmall Repute. Aproſio mentions this in the Hundred and twelfth and Hundred and thirteenth Pages of the Bibliotheca Aproſiana (18).

(18) Apud Leti, ubi ſupra, p. 360.

[C] Or ſuch like Matters.] I do not think, that the Diſputes, concerning the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, were more foreign to a Monaſtic Profeſſion, than the following Works. Annotationi di Oldauro Scioppio all' Arte degli Amanti dell' Illuſtriſſimo Signor Pietro Michele Nobile Veneto (19). —— Lo Scudo di Rinaldo, overo lo ſpecchio del diſinganno, Opera di Scipio Glareano (20). —— Le Bellezze della Beliſa Tragedia dell' Illuſtriſſimo Signor D. Antonio Muſcettola, abbozzate da Oldauro Scioppio Accademico Incognito, Geniale, &c. (21). —— Annotations of Oldauro Scioppio on The Art of Love of the moſt Illuſtrious Signor Peter Michael, a Noble Venetian —— The Shield of Rinaldo, or the The Undeceiving Mirror, by Scipio Glareano. —— A Sketch of the Beauties of Beliſa, a Tragedy compoſed by the moſt Illuſtrious Signor D. Antonio Muſcettola, by Oldauro Scioppio, of the Academy of the Incogniti, Geniales &c. There are ſeveral ſuch like Compoſitions among the Manuſcript Writings of Angelico Aproſio. But it muſt not be diſſembled, firſt, That there are alſo among them the Lectures, which he read on the Prophet Jonas, in the Church of our Lady of Conſolation at Genoa, in the Year 1649, and 1650 (22). Secondly, That, in the Year 1643, he publiſhed the Italian Tranſlation, which he had made, of the Spaniſh Sermons of Auguſtin Oſorius, under the Name of Oldauro Scioppio.

(19) Printed at Venice in 1642.

(20) The ſame.

(21) Printed at Lovano or Loano, in 1614.

(22) Soprani, Scrittori della Liguria, pag. 23.

[D] He loved this Employ well enough himſelf.] It is not altogether without Reaſon, that Scavenius relates, that Aproſio had wrote a Work, entituled, Bibliotheca Apocryphorum, in which he reſtored ſeveral Works to their true Authors; for two Pieces are attributed to him; one under the Title of La viſiera alzata Necataſte di alcuni Scrittori che andarono in Maſchera fuori del tempo di Carnevale, — The Viſor pulled off from certain Authors, who appeared in Maſquerade out of the Time of the Carnival; the other, which is only a Sequel of the foregoing, is called Pentecoſte di alcuni Autori anonimi è pſeudonomi, ſcoperti per Mantiſſa della Necataſte della viſiera alzata, - - - The Pentecoſt of certain Anonymous or Pſeudonymous Authors, diſcovered by Mantiſſa della Necataſte in The Viſor pulled off. Father Oldoini does not inform us, whether theſe two Pieces were printed, or no; he only ſays, that Aproſio wrote them under a borrowed Name; and by what he quotes in the following Page, La viſiera alzata, evulgata ſub nomine Friani Forbottæ, - - - The Viſor pulled off, publiſhed under the Name of Friani Forbotta; we cannot conclude, that they were printed; for he plainly ſhews, that this Forbotta is a different Perſon from Angelico Aproſio (23). It cannot reaſonably be doubted, that the two Pieces, which he attributes to our Aproſio, are the ſame with thoſe mentioned in the Journal of Leipſic (24). They were printed at Parma in 1689. The Name, which appears in the Front, is John Peter Villani, de Sienne, Academicien Humoriſte, Infecond, & Genialis. It appears, that they were dedicated, in the Year 1678, to Meſſieurs Magliabecchi.

(23) Oldoinus, in Append. Athen. Ligaſt.

(24) July, 1690. pag. 363.

[E] As appears by the Book,] It was printed at Venice in the Year 1647, in 4*to*. Father Labbé believed, that John Francis Loredano was the Author of it (25); but others are of a contrary Opinion, for this among other Reaſons, that the Elogy of Loredano in this Book is too pompous to be attributed to Loredano himſelf (26). It is thought, that the Verſes at the beginning of this Work, and which do not congratulate Loredano, as the Author of it, but as the Founder of the Academy of The Incogniti, were the Cauſe of Father Labbé's Error.

(25) Labbé's Biblioth Bibliothecar. pag. 118. Edit. 1678.

(26) Placcius de Anonym. pag. 115. See in the ſame Volume the Catalogue of Rhodius, pag. 23, 26.

APROSIO (PAULO AUGUSTINO) a Lawyer, and Member of the Academy of the Apatiſti at Florence, was born, at Vintimiglia, of one of the chief Families of the Town, and which can boaſt of having produced Nine Doctors of Law, and One of Phyſic, from the beginning of the XVIIth Century to the Year 1667. He, whom I here mention, having ſtudied under the Jeſuits, at Genoa, went to Rome, to ſtudy the

Digitized by Google

Law. He was admitted Doctor there, in the Year 1449, and afterwards returned home, bought a Collection of curious Books, and retired to a Country Houſe, that he might the more quietly enjoy the Pleaſure of reading and compoſing. He wrote Annotations on the Beliſa of D. Antonio Muſcetola, which were printed with the Bellezze delle medezima abozzate da Oldauro Scioppio, in the Year 1664. When Soprani, from whom I borrow this Article, publiſhed his Catalogue of the Ligurian Writers, in 1667, our Aproſio was preparing a large Moral Treatiſe, concerning the Overthrow of Capital Vices by their oppoſite Virtues (a). Oldoini informs me, that this Work was printed at Genoa, in the Year 1674, and dedicated to the Prince of Monaco.

(a) Strage de Vitii capitali trionfati dalle Virtu oppoſte.

APULEIUS (Lucius) a Platonic Philoſopher, publickly known by the famous Work of the Golden Aſs, lived in the IId Century under the Antonines [A]. He was a Native of Madaura, a Roman Colony in Africa [B]. His Family was conſiderable [C]. He had been well educated, and had a graceful Perſon; he had Wit, and Learning; but was ſuſpected of Magic; an Infamy, which to this day does great Injury to his Memory. He ſtudied, firſt at Carthage, then at Athens; and afterwards

[A] Lived in the ſecond Century under the Antonines (1).] Peter Pithæus rejecting all Thoſe, who ſay, that Apuleius lived after Theodoſius, proves, that he lived about the time of Antoninus Pius, and ſome time after (2). This Opinion is ſupported by ſuch good Reaſons, that it is generally embraced. It is plain, that Scipio Orphitus, Lollianus Avitus, Claudius Maximus, and Lollius Urbicius, of whom Apuleius ſpeaks, as Perſons then alive, lived under the Antonines. Father Norris is miſtaken in his Criticiſm on Elmenhorſt; he charges him with having acknowledged his Ignorance as to the Time when Apuleius lived (3), and refers him to two Paſſages of Apuleius's Apology; in one of which Antoninus is not ſtiled Divus, and in the other mention is made of the Proconſul Lollianus Avitus, who was Conſul in the Year 144. The Omiſſion of Divus is a ſufficient Proof, that Antoninus was yet living. Father Norris would not have been ſo much miſtaken, if the Author, whom he criticiſes, had not expreſſed himſelf as follows: "Quo anno natus (Apuleius) non liquido liquet. Veriſimiliter tamen poſſumus adſerere eum "temporibus Antonini Pii Divorumque fratrum vixiſſe. Meminit enim Lolliani Aviti, Lollii Urbicii "Pudentis, & Scipionis Orphiti, Coſſ. qui ſub Antonino præcipue floruerunt, ſummis macti honoribus, ut conſtat ex L. 3. ff. de his qui teſtamentis, &c. L. 3. ff. de Decurion (4). - - - - WHEN "Apuleius lived, is not certainly known; yet it is probable, it was in the times of Antonius Pius, "and his Brothers, who preceeded him. For he mentions the Conſuls, Lollianus Avitus *, Lollius "Urbicius Pudens †, and Scipio Orphitus ‖, who flouriſhed chiefly under Antoninus, having been advanced to the greateſt Honours, as appears from "L. 3. de his qui teſtamentis, &c." The Paſſage, in which Antoninus is not ſtiled Divus, contains the Reproaches, which Apuleius made to his Wife's Son, on his expoſing his Mother's Love-Letters. "Hucuſque à vobis miſerum iſtum puerum depravatum, "ut matris ſuæ epiſtolas, quas putat amatorias, pro "tribunali Proconſulis recitet apud virum ſanctiſſimum Claudium Maximum, ante has Imperatoris "Pii ſtatuas filius matris ſuæ pudenda exprobret ſtupra, & amores objectet (5). - - - - - - So far has "this wretched Youth been ſpoiled by you, that he has "not been aſhamed to recite his Mother's Love-Letters "before the Proconſul's Tribunal, in the hearing of the "venerable Claudius Maximus, and even to reproach "her with her Amours before theſe Statues of the "Emperor Antoninus Pius." Jonſius is doubly miſtaken, when, in order to prove, that Apuleius lived in the time, which I aſſign him, he ſays, that our Philoſopher gives the Elogy of Divus to Antoninus Pius (6). The Fact is falſe; and the Conſequence drawn from it inconcluſive.

(1) And not under Domitian, with Apollonius Tyanæus, as Anaſtaſius of Nicæa affirms, Quæſt. 23. In Scripturam. Note, that others attribe this Work to Anaſtaſius Sinaita.

(2) Pithæus, Adverſ. lib. 2. cap. 10.

(3) Norris, Cenotaph. Piſan. p. 33.

(4) Elmenh. in Vita Apulii.

* Apolog. pag. 283. Capitolin. Antonino 27.

† Apolog. pag. 274. Capitolin. Pertinace 74.

‖ Floridor. Apuleii, p. 357, 358.

(5) Apul. Apolog. pag. 267.

(6) Jonſ de Script. Hiſt. Philoſ. p. 267.

[B] He was a Native of Madaura, a Roman Colony in Africa.] This Town, which had belonged to Syphax, was given by the Romans to Maſſiniſſa. "Neque hoc eo dixi, quo me patriæ meæ pœnite"ret, etſi adhuc Syphacis oppidum eſſemus: quo "tamen victo, ad Maſiniſſam regem conceſſimus, "munere populi Romani, ac deinceps veteranorum militum novo conditu ſplendidiſſima colo"nia ſumus (7). - - - - - - My Meaning is not, that "I ſhould have been aſhamed of my Country, though "we had ſtill continued a Town belonging to Syphax; after whoſe Defeat, however, we fell under the Power of King Maſſiniſſa, by Gift of the Roman People, and at laſt became a moſt flouriſhing Colony." A little before, he had ſaid, that he was not aſhamed, like Cyrus, to partake of two different Nations. "De patria mea vero, quod eam ſitam "Numidiæ & Gætuliæ in ipſo confinio meis ſcripſiſti oſtendiſti, quibus memet profeſſus ſum - - - - - "Seminumidam, & Semigætulum, non video quid "mihi ſit in ea re pudendum, haud minus quam "Cyro majori, quod genere mixto fuit, Semimedus "ac Semiperſa. - - - - - As for the Place of my Birth, "which you have ſhewn to have been ſituated on "the very confines of Numidia and Gætulia, from "my own Writings, in which I profeſs myſelf a Semi-Numidian and a Semi-Gætulian; I cannot ſee, "why I have any more reaſon to be aſhamed of it, "than Cyrus the Elder had of being of a mixed "Race, half a Mede, and half a Perſian." A certain Author, who pretended to ſet up for a general Cenſurer, towards the end of the ſixteenth Century, falls here into our Hands. After having ſaid, that Lucian, under the pretended Form of an Aſs, teaches a thouſand Impurities he adds, "Apulcius hunc imitatus, "ut vir Græcus ſe Latine neſciviſſe ingenue con"feſſus, in Aſino aureo plane rudit (8). - - - - Apu"leius, imitating this Writer, and ingenuouſly con"feſſing, that, being a Greek, he was ignorant of "the Latin Tongue, downright brays in his Golden "Aſs." Firſt of all, it is not true, that Apuleius confeſſes he does not underſtand Latin: He only ſays, I. That he did not underſtand it upon his firſt Arrival at Rome. II. That he learnt it without a Maſter. In the ſecond Place, it is not true, that he was a Greek. Madaura was a Roman Colony; and, when he would juſtify himſelf by the Example of other Poets, he cites the Greeks as Strangers, and the Latins as his Countrymen. "Fecere tamen & alii talia, & - - - - - "apud Græcos Tejus quidam - - - APUD NOS vero, "Ædituus, & Portius, & Catulus (9). - - - - Others "have done the like, and - - - - - - A Teian Poet "among the Greeks - - - - - but among OUR OWN "Writers, Ædituus, and Portius, and Catulus, &c." The Truth is, the Latin Tongue was not common at Madaura. Apuleius, the Son of one of the chief Magiſtrates, underſtood nothing of it, when he came to Rome. The Son of his Wife Pudentilla underſtood only the Carthaginian, and a little Greek, which his Mother, who was originally of Theſſaly, had taught him. Loquitur nunquam niſi Punicè, & ſi quid adhuc à matre græciſſat: Latine enim neque vult neque poteſt (10).

(7) Apul. Apol. pag 289.

(8) Claudius Verderius, in Auctores pene omnes Cenſion, pag. 73. This Book was printed at Lyons in 1586.

(9) Apolog. pag. 278.

(10) Ibid. pag. 336.

[C] His Family was conſiderable.] His Father's Name was Theſeus. Theſe Words are our only Authority. "Si, contentus lare parvulo, Theſei illius "cognominis Patris tui virtutes æmulaveris (11). - - - - - If, ſatisfied with a moderate ſupport, you "ſhall emulate the Virtues of your Father Theſeus." He had exerciſed the Office of Duumvir at Madaura. It was the firſt Dignity of a Colony. "In qua "colonia patrem habui loco principe Duumviralem "cunctis honoribus perfunctum (12). - - - - In which "Colony, I had a Father, who, having gone through "all inferior Offices, arrived to the Dignity of Duumvir, the principal Poſt of Honour." His Mother, whoſe

(11) Apul. Metamorph. lib. 1. pag. 112.

(12) Id. Apolog. p. 289.

Digitized by Google

wards at Rome [D]; where he acquired the Latin Tongue without any Assistance. An insatiable Curiosity to know every thing induced him to make several Voyages, and enter himself in several Religious Fraternities [E]. He would see the bottom of their whose Name was Salvia (13), was originally of Thessaly, and descended from the Family of Plutarch. He says this himself, at the beginning of his Romance. St Austin had heard, that Apuleius was of a good Family, as appears from his fifth Letter. See, below, the Remark [E], Citation (18).

(13) Id Metam. lib. 2. pag 115.

[D] He studied, first at Carthage, then at Athens; and afterwards at Rome.] This Gradation is a secret to those, who stop at the Prologue of his Romance; since he makes no mention there of Carthage. He is satisfied with saying, that his first Studies were Those of the Greek Tongue in Greece, and that afterwards he came to Rome, where he studied Latin, without the Assistance of a Master. "Ibi linguam Attidem "primis pueritiæ stipendiis merui, mox in urbe Latia "advena studiorum Quiritium indigenam sermonem "ærumnabili labore, nullo magistro præunte, ag- "gressus excolui." This Narration is deceitful, and imperfect, and must be rectified by other Passages of Apuleius. Is it at all surprizing, that Authors should relate the Actions of others imperfectly? Do they not sometimes report their own very confusedly? Let us produce other Passages of our Author. He tells the Carthaginians, that, in his Infancy, he studied with them, and that he had begun, likewise, to embrace the Platonic Sect among Them. "Sum vobis "nec lare alienus, nec pueritia invisitatus, nec ma- "gistris peregrinus, nec secta incognitus. - - - - - E- "nimvero & pueritia apud vos, & magistri vos, & "secta, licet Athenis Atticis confirmata, tamen hic "inchoata est (14). - - - - - - I am no Stranger to "you, either as to my Family, my Education, or "my Opinions. - - - - - For my Childhood was spent "among you; you were my Instructors; and the Sect, "of which I am a follower, though confirmed in it at "Athens, was first embraced by me here." To which he adds; "Hanc ego vobis mercedem, Carthagi- "nienses, ubique gentium dependo, pro disciplinis "quas in pueritiâ sum apud vos adeptus. Ubique "enim me vestræ civitatis alumnum fero (15.) - - - - "This Acknowledgment, O Carthaginians, wherever "I am, I pay you, in return for that Instruction I "acquired among you: I every where acknowledge "myself the Pupil of your State." Some Pages after, he reckons up the Sciences he had studied at Athens. "Prima cratera Litteratoris ruditatem exi- "mit: Secunda Grammatici doctrinâ instruit: Ter- "tia Rhetoris eloquentiâ armat. Hactenus à pleris- "que potatur. Ego & alias crateras Athenis bibi; "Poëticæ commentam, Geometricæ limpidam, Mu- "sicæ dulcem, Dialecticæ austerulam, enimvero uni- "versæ philosophiæ inexplebilem, scilicet nectare- "am (16). - - - - The first Cup of Knowledge, which "we drink at the Hands of our Præceptors, removes "entire Ignorance; the second infuses Grammatical "Learning; the third arms us with the Eloquence "of the Rhetorician. Thus far many drink. But I "drank of still more Cups at Athens, the fabulous "of Poetry, the Limpid of Geometry, the sweet of "Music, the unpleasant of Logic; indeed the never "satiating, and truly nectareous, Cup of universal Phi- "losophy." Some will have it, that he studied, at two several times, in Greece; the first time, before he studied at Carthage, and the second after his Studies in That City. They take no notice of Rome; they pretend, that he acquired the Latin Tongue at Carthage (17): This latter Fact is expressly contradicted in the Prologue to the Golden Ass.

(14) Apul. Floridor. pag. 359.

(15) Id. ib. pag. 361.

(16) Id. ib. pag. 363.

(17) He passed the first Years of his Childhood in Greece, and the following at Carthage, where he learnt Latin without a Master. He likewise began to learn Philosophy there. Afterwards he went to Athens, where he studied Poetry, &c. Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 722.

[E] And enter himself in several Religious Fraternities.] He introduces himself speaking the following Words, in the third Book of the Golden Ass. "Paveo & formido solide domus hujus operta de- "tegere, & arcana dominæ meæ revelare secreta. "Sed melius de te doctrinaque tua præsumo, qui "præter generosam natalium dignitatem, præter sub- "lime ingenium, sacris pluribus initiatus, profecto "nosti sanctam silentii fidem (18). - - - - - I dread to "make a full Discovery of the Practices of this Fra- "ternity, and to reveal the Secrets of my Mistress. "But I have a better Opinion of you, and your Learn- "ing, who, besides an high Birth, and elevated Ge- "nius, know how to guard a Secret inviolably, having "been yourself initiated in many Mysteries." He concludes his Romance with an account of his Admission into the Religion of Osiris. This Honour was conferred on him at Rome. He did not continue long among the Herd of the Initiated, he soon raised himself to the highest Degrees. "Deni- "que per dies admodum pauculos, Deus Deûm mag- "norum potior, & majorum summus, & summo- "rum maximus, & maximorum regnator, Osiris, non "in alienam quampiam personam reformatus, sed "coram suo illo venerando me dignatus afflamine, "per quietem præcipere visus est. - - - - - Ac, ne "sacris suis gregi cætero permixtus deservirem, in "collegium me Pastophororum suorum, imo inter "ipsos Decurionum quinquennales, elegit. - - - - - "Lastly, in a very few Days after, Osiris, the greatest "of the Gods, appeared to me in a Dream, not in "a borrowed Shape, but in his own venerable Person. "- - - - - And, that I might not administer his Sa- "cred Rites, amidst the Herd of his Votaries, he "chose me into the College of his Pastophori, and "even appointed me one of his Decuriones." Before his Arrival at Rome, he had been initiated into the Mysteries of Isis; these were the first Fruits of his recovered Humanity. In the Descriptions of these Ceremonies he intermixes several sublime Sentiments, which are only worthy of the true Religion. As for Example: "Te jam nunc obsequio religio- "nis nostræ dedica, & ministerii jugum subi volun- "tarium, nam, cum cœperis Deæ servire, tunc ma- "gis senties fructum tuæ libertatis (19). - - - - De- "dicate yourself immediately to the Obedience of our "Religion, and take upon you the voluntary Yoke of "Ministering in it; for, when you shall begin to serve "our Goddess, you will be the more sensible of the "Fruit of your own Liberty." They, who accused him of Magic, objected, among other things, that he kept something, I know not what, in a Handkerchief, with a singular Superstition. His Answer was: "Vin dicam cujusmodi illas res in sudario obvolutas "laribus Pontiani commendarim? Mos tibi geretur. "Sacrorum pleraque initia in Græcia participavi. "Eorum quædam signa & monumenta tradita mihi "à sacerdotibus sedulo conservo. Nihil insolitum, "nihil incognitum dico. Vel unius Liberi patris "symmistæ, qui adestis, scitis quid domi conditum "celetis, & absque omnibus profanis tacite venere- "mini. At ego, ut dixi, multijuga sacra, & plu- "rimos ritus, varias ceremonias, studio veri, & of- "ficio erga Deos, didici. Nec hoc ad tempus com- "pono, sed abhinc ferme triennium est, cum primis "diebus, quibus Oëam veneram, publice differens de "Æsculapii majestate, eadem ista præ me tuli, & quot "sacra nossem percensui. Ea disputatio celebratis- "sima est, vulgo legitur, in omnium manibus ver- "satur - - - - - Etiamne cuiquam mirum videri po- "test, cui sit ulla memoria religionis, hominem tot "mysteriis Deûm conscium, quædam sacrorum cre- "pundia domi adservare, atque ea lineo texto in- "volvere, quod purissimum est rebus divinis vela- "mentum (20). - - - - - Shall I tell you what kind "of Things, wrapt up in an Handkerchief, I have "entrusted with the House of Pontianus? you shall "be satisfied. I was initiated into several sacred "Rites in Greece. Some Tokens and Remembrances "of them, delivered me by the Priests, I carefully "preserve. What I say, is no uncommon, or unknown, "Practice. I need go no farther, than you, ye Vo- "taries of Bacchus, who are here present; who are "conscious of what you keep concealed at Home, and "adore in private, without any Prophanation. But "I, as I have already said, prompted by a Love of "Truth, and out of Duty to the Gods, have learned "the Mysteries of different Religions, and been ini- "tiated in various Rites and Ceremonies. Nor is "this a new-invented Apology; for it is now almost "three Years, since, in a public Oration on the Ma- "jesty of Æsculapius, on the first Day of my Arri- "val at Oëa, I made the same Declaration, and reckoned "up how many Religions I had been initiated in. "This Disputation is very famous, is commonly read, "and is in every one's Hands. - - - - - And can any "one

(18) Apuleii Metam. lib. 11. p. 264.

(19) Apol. p. 309, 310.

(20) Id. ib. pag. 312.

Digitized by Google

their pretended Myſteries. He ſpent almoſt all his Eſtate in travelling [F], inſomuch, that, being returned to Rome, and having a Deſire to dedicate himſelf to the Service of Oſiris, he wanted Money to defray the Expence of the Ceremonies of his Reception. He pawned even his Cloaths to make up the neceſſary Sum (a). After this he gained his Livelihood by Pleading: And, as he was eloquent, and ſubtle enough, he did not want Cauſes; ſome of which were very conſiderable (b). But he improved his Fortunes much more by a lucky Marriage, than by Pleading. A Widow, whoſe Name was Pudentilla, neither young nor fair, but who ſtood in need of a Huſband, and had a good Eſtate, thought him for her Purpoſe [G]. He was

(a) See Remark [F].

(b) Quæ res ſummum peregrinationi meæ tribuebat ſolatium, nec minus etiam victum uberiorem ſubminiſtrabat. Quidni? ſpiritu faventis eventus quæſticulo forenſi nutrito, per patrocinia ſermonis Romani --- quam nunc incontanter glorioſa in foro redderem patrocinia. Apul. Metam. lib. 11. pag. 272. Edit. Elmenhorſii 1621. in 8vo.

(21) See St Auſtin's Diſputation againſt the Opinion of Apuleius, in the 8th Book de Civitate Dei, cap. 19. and the following.

(22) Auguſt. Epiſt. 5.

(23) Apuleii Floridor. pag. 361.

(24) Apuleius, Metam. lib. 11. pag. 271.

(25) Ibid.

" one be ſurprized, who has any Remembrance of " Religion, that a Man, acquainted with ſo many " Myſteries of the Gods, ſhould lay up at Home ſome " few ſacred Trinkets, and conceal them in a Piece of " Linnen, which is the pureſt covering for Divine " Things." It is probable, that, if Apuleius was a Magician, his Crime was incomparably leſs, than That of the Magicians of theſe Times; becauſe he was ignorant, that only bad Genii apply themſelves to certain Operations, in conſequence of the Performance of certain Ceremonies. He believed, with the Platoniſts, that good Genii might do the ſame (21). I have quoted St Auſtin, in the Text of this Article, who teſtifies, that Apuleius had a religious Dignity, which gave him the Superintendance of the Gladiatorial Shews. Sacerdos Provinciæ pro magno fuit, ut munera ederet, venatoreſque veſtiret (22). Laſtly, I find, that our Author had dedicated himſelf to the Worſhip of Æſculapius, one of the chief Divinities of the Carthaginians, and that he had alſo an eminent Station in His College. " Principium mihi apud veſtras aureis auſpicatiſſimum ab Æſculapio Deo capiam, qui " arcem veſtræ Carthaginis indubitabili numine propitius reſpicit. Ejus Dei hymnum Græco & Latino carmine vobis ſic canam, jam illi à me dedicatum. Sum enim non ignotus illius SACRICOLA, nec recens cultor, nec ingratus ANTISTES (23). ------ I ſhall beſpeak your favourable Attention, by reciting an Hymn in Greek and " Latin Verſe, which I have juſt dedicated to the " God Æſculapius, the tutelar Divinity of the Citadel " of your Carthage. For I am no unknown SACRIFICER of This God, no recent Worſhipper, nor " ungrateful MASTER of his CEREMONIES."

[F] He ſpent almoſt all his Eſtate in travelling.] This was not the only Cauſe of the Poverty, into which he fell; he was expenſive upon more commendable Occaſions; at leaſt he pretended to have been ſo, when he replied to thoſe, who reproached him with his Poverty. " Ad iſtum modum deſponſus ſacris, " ſumptuum tenuitate contra votum meum retardabar: " nam & viriculas patrimonii peregrinationis attriverant impenſæ (24). ----- Thus betrothed to Religi- " on, I was unwillingly retarded by the Narrowneſs of " my Circumſtances; for the Expences of travelling had " weakened the little Strength of my Patrimony." Thus he ſpeaks, when he repreſents the Difficulties he laboured under at Rome, in relation to his Admiſſion into the Fraternity of Oſiris. He had mortgaged himſelf, as it were, to this myſterious Congregation; he had given his Note of hand; but, as nothing is ever done for nothing, ſomething was to be paid for the Inaugural Ceremonies; and he had not wherewithal to ſupply the Expence. He was forced, as one may ſay, to ſell his very Shirt; the Divinity, which inſpired him, pointed out no other Reſource. " Jam- " que ſæpicule non ſine magna turbatione ſtimulatus, " poſtremo juſſus, veſte ipſa mea quamvis parvula " diſtracta, ſufficientem corraſi ſummulam, & idipſum " præceptum fuerat ſpecialiter. An tu, inquit, ſi " quam rem voluptati ſtruendæ molireris, laciniis " tuis nequaquam parceres, nunc tantas ceremonias " aditurus impœnitendæ te pauperiei contaris committere (25). —— Being often prompted, not with- " out great Emotion of Mind, and at laſt commanded, " I ſcraped together, by making Money of my very " Cloaths, mean as they were, a ſufficient Sum; for " this was particularly required of me. What! ſays " he, would you nor ſpare your Fringes, if you were " in purſuit of your Pleaſures, and are you unwilling, " when you are to be initiated into ſuch Ceremonies, " to encounter a Poverty not to be repented of?" At that time he aſcribed his Indigence only to the Expences of his Travels; but, on another occaſion, which I have mentioned, he ſays he was at great Expences in good Works, ſuch as aſſiſting his Friends, rewarding the Care of thoſe, who had inſtructed him, and portioning ſome of their Daughters. He adds, that he ſhould have made no Difficulty to purchaſe, at the Price of his Patrimony, a thorough Contempt of it; a Contempt, which is a much more valuable Treaſure, than a Patrimony itſelf. This is ſpeaking like a Philoſopher indeed. " Si tamen neſcis, he ad- " dreſſes himſelf to his Accuſer (26), profiteor mihi ac " fratri meo relictum à patre H. S. vicies, paulo ſe- " cus; idque à me longa peregrinatione, & diutinis " ſtudiis, & crebris liberalitatibus modice imminu " tum. Nam & amicorum pleriſque opem tuli, & " magiſtris plurimis gratiam retuli, quorumdam etiam " filias dote auxi. Neque enim dubitaſſem equidem " vel univerſum patrimonium impendere, ut adquire- " rem mihi, quod majus eſt, contemptum patrimonii. " If you know it not, I aſſure you, that my Father " left my Brother and myſelf an Hundred thouſand " Seſterces, or little leſs; which I have ſomething " diminiſhed by my long Travels, continued Studies, " and frequent Bounties. For I have aſſiſted ſeveral " of my Friends, and gratified many of my Pre- " ceptors; ſome of whoſe Daughters I have even " portioned. Nor ſhould I make the leaſt Scruple " of expending my whole Fortune in acquiring, what " is much more valuable, a Contempt of it." He had made very ſolid, and very moral, Reflexions on Poverty (27).

(26) Apolog. pag. 288.

(27) Ibid. pag. 285, 286, 287.

[G] A Widow, — neither young, nor fair, but who ſtood in need of a Huſband, and had a good Eſtate, thought him fit for her Purpoſe.] Apuleius's Accuſer affirmed, ſhe was ſixty Years of Age (28): He had his Deſign in it; for his Aim was to prove, that the Paſſion, ſhe had conceived for the Accuſed, was not Natural, but the Effect of Magic. Apuleius made it appear (29), that ſhe was not much above forty Years of Age; and that, if ſhe had paſt fourteen of them in a State of Widowhood, it was not out of any Averſion to Matrimony, but from her Father-in-law's oppoſing it: that, at length, a State of Continency had ſo far impaired her Health, that the Phyſicians and Midwives agreed, that the beſt Remedy for the Diſeaſes, which were the Conſequence of it, was Matrimony. A Lady, to whom ſuch Advice was given, and who had no time to loſe, if ſhe deſired to make the beſt uſe of her teeming Years, wanted not to be conſtrained by Magic Art to make choice of a Spouſe. This was Apuleius's Argument, and it is of great Force. " Eo ſcrupulo liberata, cum à principibus viris in " matrimonium peteretur; decrevit ſibi diutius in vi- " duitate non permanendum. Quippe ut ſolitudinis " tædium perpeti poſſet, tamen ægritudinem cor- " poris ferre non poterat. Mulier ſanctè pudica, tot " annis viduitatis ſine culpa, ſine fabula, abſuetudine " conjugis torpens, & diutino ſitu viſcerum faucia, " vitiatis intimis uteri, ſæpe ad extremum vitæ diſ- " crimen doloribus obortis exanimabatur. Medici " cum obſtetricibus conſentiebant, penuria matrimo- " nii morbum quæſitum. Malum indies augeri, æ- " gritudinem ingraveſcere: dum ætatis aliquid ſuper- " ſit, nuptiis valetudinem medicandam (30). —— " This Scruple being removed, and, being courted by " Perſons of the higheſt Rank, ſhe determined to con- " tinue no longer a Widow. For, though ſhe might " have ſupported the Solitude of a ſingle Life, " yet the ill State of her Health ſhe could not. " This Lady, religiouſly Modeſt, and pining, during " ſo many Years of Widowhood, for want of an Huſ- " band, was brought almoſt to Death's Door, through " Pains ariſing from a ſtoppage of the Matrix. The " Phyſicians and Midwives agreed, that the Diſtemper " was owing to the Want of an Husband; that it in- " creaſed daily, and gained ground; and that, if ſhe " made

(28) Apolog. p. 317, 330.

(29) Ibid. pag. 330.

(30) Ibid. pag. 318.

Digitized by Google

was not coy; nor was he ſollicitous to keep his fine Perſon, his Neatneſs [H], his Wit,

Why ſome Judicial Proceedings are diſagreeable to the Fair Sex.

"made haſte, Matrimony might cure her." Some kind of Proceedings are very unfortunate for the Ladies; where ſeveral things muſt neceſſarily be revealed to a full Audience, which one would wiſh to conceal, whether owing to natural or moral Infirmity (31). Had it not been for this Trial, Apuleius would never have revealed the Diſtemper, with which Pudentilla was afflicted, during her Widowhood. However, ſhe had this Satisfaction, that, though ſhe had ſuffered ſo much, it was a Proof, that ſhe had not had recourſe to the true Remedy. This Conſequence was not urged to the Judges; but it was alledged, that ſhe had always lived chaſtly, and that her Conduct had never been called in queſtion. To return to her Age; there is no doubt, that Apuleius was younger than She; for ſhe had a Son, who had been Apuleius's Companion at Athens (32); but I add, that he did not marry without Hopes of having Iſſue by her. This he declares, in anſwer to the Reproach thrown on him, of going into the Country to be married. After having replied, that the Reaſon of this was to avoid the Expence, which a Wedding in the City would have put them to; he adds, that "the Country is naturally more favourable to Pro-"creation, than the City; and that, to lie down up-"on the Graſs, and under the Shade of Elms, amidſt "numberleſs Productions, which ſpring out of the "fruitful Boſom of the Earth, cannot but be lucky "to a new married Couple, who deſire to have "Children." He ſhould have kept this Thought for his Florida, I mean for his rhetorical Declamations, in which he gives a Looſe to the falſe Flights of his Imagination. This Paſſage ſpoils his Apology. It is unworthy of the Judges, before whom he ſpoke, and of the Cauſe, which he was pleading. "Immo, "ſi verum velis, uxor ad prolem multo auſpicatius "in villa quam in oppido ducitur; in ſolo uberi, "quam in loco ſterili; in agri ceſpite, quam in ſo-"ri ſilece: mater futura in ipſo maturno ſi nubat "ſinu, in ſegete adulta ſuper fœcundam glebam. "Vel enim ſub ulmo marita cubet in ipſo gremio "terræ matris inter ſoboles herbarum, & propagines "vitium, & arborum germina (33)." We ſhall ſee hereafter (34), that it was declared in open Court, that Pudentilla was not handſome; and that her Contract of Marriage contained Clauſes, which ſuppoſed her to be ſtill of teeming Years.

(31) See, below, Remark [I].

(32) Apulei, Apolog. pag. 320.

(33) Ibid. pag. 329.

(34) In the Remark [I].

[H] His fine Perſon, his Neatneſs.] I ſhall here give ſome touches of his Picture. "At illa obtutum "in me converſa, En, inquit, ſanctiſſimæ Salviæ "matris generoſa proles. Sed & cætera corporis in-"explicabiliter ad regulam congruentia; inenormis "proceritas, ſucculenta gracilitas, rubor temperatus; "flavum & inaffectatum capillitium; oculi cæſii "quidem, ſed vigiles, & in aſpectu micantes prorſus "aquilino, quoquo verſum floridi; ſpecioſus, & im-"meditatus inceſſus (35). —— But She, turning her "Eyes upon me, ſaid, behold the worthy Son of the "moſt virtuous Salvia; contemplate the juſt Propor-"tions of his bodily Parts; his proper Stature, his "moderate Size, and his healthful Aſpect; his yel-"low, careleſs, Locks; his Eyes, blue indeed, but "lively, and ſparkling, like thoſe of an Eagle; "laſtly, his beautiful and unaffected Gait." His Accuſers reproached him with his Beauty (36); his fine Hair; his fine Teeth; and his Looking-glaſs. He anſwered to the two firſt Particulars, that he was ſorry the Accuſation was falſe. "Quod utinam tam "gravia formæ & facundiæ crimina vere mihi expro-"braſſet! non difficile ei reſpondiſſem, quod Ho-"mericus Alexander Hectori:

(35) Metamorph. lib. 2. pag. 115. See alſo lib. 1. pag. 112.

(36) Accuſamus apud te Philoſophum Formoſum, & tam Græcè quam Latinè, proh nefas! diſertiſſimum. Apolog. p. 275.

Οὔτι ἀπόβλητ' ἐσὶ θεῶν ἐρικύδεα δῶρα,
Ὅσσα κεν αὐτοὶ δῶσιν, ἑκὼν δ' ὐκ ἄν τις ἕλοιτο.

Munera deum glorioſiſſima nequaquam aſpernanda: Quæ tamen ab ipſis tribui ſueta, multis volentibus not obtingunt.

"Hæc ego de forma reſpondiſſem. Præterea, licere "etiam Philoſophis eſſe vultu liberali. Pythagoram, "qui primum ſeſe Philoſophum nuncuparit, eum ſui "ſæculi excellentiſſima forma fuiſſe: item Zeno-"nem. —— Sed hæc defenſio, ut dixi, aliquam-"multum à me remota eſt: cui, præter formæ me-"diocritatem, continuatio etiam literati laboris om-"nem gratiam corpore deterget, habitudinem tenuat, "ſuccum exſorbet, colorem obliterat, vigorem de-"bilitat. Capillus ipſe, quem iſti aperto mendacio ad "lenocinium decoris promiſſum dixere, vides quam "non ſit amœnus ac delicatus, horrore implexus at-"que impeditus, ſtupeo tomento aſſimilis, & inæ-"qualiter hirtus, & globoſus, & congeſtus: prorſus "inenodabilis diutina incuria, non modo comendi, "ſed ſaltem expediendi & diſcriminandi (37). —— How do I wiſh, that theſe heavy Accuſations of "Beauty and Eloquence were juſt! I ſhould, without "Difficulty, reply, as Paris, in Homer, does to Hector.

(37) Ibid. & pag. 276.

- - - - - nor thou deſpiſe the Charms,
With which a Lover golden Venus arms.
Soft moving Speech, and pleaſing outward ſhow,
No Wiſh can gain them, but the Gods beſtow.

POPE.

"Thus would I reply to the Charge of Beauty. Be-"ſides, that even Philoſophers are allowed to be of a "liberal Aſpect; that Pythagoras, who ſtiled himſelf "the firſt of Philoſophers, was the handſomeſt Man "of his Time; and Zeno. —— But, as I obſerved, "I am far from pretending to this Apology; ſince, "beſides that Nature has beſtowed but a moderate "Degree of Beauty on me, my continual Application "to Study wears off every bodily Grace, and impairs "my Conſtitution. My very Hair, which I am falſely "accuſed of curling, and dreſſing by way of Ornament, "is, as you ſee, far from being beautiful and delicate; "on the contrary, it is perplexed and entangled, "like a bundle of Flocks or Tow; and ſo knotty, thro' "long neglect of combing, and even of diſentangling, "as never to be reduced to Order." As to the third Particular, he did not deny his having ſent a Powder for the Teeth to a Friend, together with ſome Verſes, containing an exact Deſcription of the Effects of the Powder. He alledged, that All, eſpecially they, who ſpoke in public, ought to be particularly careful to keep their Mouths clean. This was a fine Field for Defence, and for turning his Adverſary into ridicule; though, in all Probability, he had given occaſion enough for Cenſure, by too great an Affectation of diſtinguiſhing himſelf from other learned Men. Obſerve with how much Eaſe ſome Cauſes are defended, though the Defendant be a little in the wrong. "Vidi ego dudum vix riſum quoſdam "tenenteis, cum mundicias oris videlicet orator ille "aſpere accuſaret, & dentifricium tanta indignatione "pronunciaret, quanta nemo quiſquam venenum. "Quidni? crimen haud contemnendum Philoſopho, "nihil in ſe ſordidum ſinere, nihil uſpiam corporis "apertum immundum pati ac fœtulentum; præſer-"tim os, cujus in propatulo & conſpicuo uſus ho-"mini creberrimus: ſive ille cuipiam oſculum ferat, "ſeu cum cuiquam ſermocinetur, ſive in auditorio "diſſeret, ſive in templo preces alleget. Omnem "quippe hominis actum ſermo præit: qui, ut ait "Poëta præcipuus, è dentium muro proficiſcitur (38). I obſerved, that ſome could ſcarce forbear laughing, "when our Orator angrily accuſed me of keeping my "Mouth clean, and pronounced the Word Tooth-Powder "with as much Indignation, as any one ever pro-"nounced the Word Poiſon. But, ſurely, it is not "beneath a Philoſopher to ſtudy Cleanlineſs, and to let "no part of the Body, which is ſeen, be naſty, or "of an ill ſavour; eſpecially the Mouth, the uſe of "which is the moſt frequent and conſpicuous; whether "a Man kiſſes another, or converſes, or ſpeaks in "public, or ſays his Prayers in a Temple. For Speech "is previous to every Action of a Man, and, as an ex-"cellent Poet ſays, proceeds from the Wall of the "Teeth." We may make the ſame Obſervation upon the laſt Head of his Accuſation. It is no Crime in a Doctor, of what Faculty ſoever, to have a Looking-glaſs; but, if he conſults it too often in dreſſing himſelf, he is juſtly liable to Cenſure. Morality, in Apuleius's Time, was much ſtricter, than at preſent, as to external Behaviour; for he durſt not avow his making uſe of his Looking-glaſs. He maintains,

(38) Ibid. pag. 277.

Digitized by Google

Wit, and his Eloquence for ſome young Girl; he married the rich Widow, chearfully, at a Country-houſe near Oëa, a Maritime Town of Africa. This Marriage drew upon him a troubleſome Law-Suit: The Relations of this Lady's two Sons pretended he had made uſe of Magic, to poſſeſs himſelf of her Heart and Money [I]: They that he might do it, and proves it by ſeveral Philoſophical Reaſons; which, to ſay the truth, are much more ingenious, than judiciouſly applied; but he denies, that he really conſulted his Looking-glaſs. "Sequitur de ſpeculo longa illa & cenſoria oratio, "de quo pro rei atrocitate pœne diruptus eſt Pudens, "clamitans, Habet ſpeculum philoſophus, poſſidet ſpe- "culum philoſophus. Ut igitur habere concedam, ne "aliquid objeciſſe te credas, ſi negaro, non tamen "ex eo me accipi neceſſe eſt, exornari quoque ad "ſpeculum ſolere. —— Plurimis rebus poſſeſſu ca-"reo, uſu fruor: quod ſi neque habere utendi argu-"mentum eſt, neque non utendi non habere, & "ſpeculi non tam poſſeſſio culpatur quam inſpectio, "illud etiam doceat neceſſe eſt quando & quibus "præſentibus in ſpeculum inſpexerim, quoniam, ut "res eſt, majus piaculum decernis ſpeculum philoſo-"pho, quam Cereris mundum profano videre (39). "—— Next follows the long and bitter Harangue a- "bout the Looking-glaſs; in which, ſo heinous is the "Crime, Pudens almoſt burſt himſelf with bawling "out, A Philoſopher has a Looking-glaſs, A Philo-"ſopher is in poſſeſſion of a Looking-glaſs. Suppoſe "I ſhould confeſs that I have, that you may not be- "lieve there is really ſomething in your Objection, if "I ſhould deny it; it does not follow from hence, "that I muſt neceſſarily make a Practice of dreſſing "myſelf at it. —— In many things, I want the Poſ- "ſeſſion, but enjoy the Uſe of them. Now, if nei- "ther to have a thing be a Proof, that it is made "uſe of, nor the want of it of the contrary; and, as "I am not blamed for poſſeſſing, but for making uſe "of, a Looking-glaſs; it is incumbent upon him to "prove farther, at what Time, and in the Preſence "of whom, I made uſe of it; ſince you determine it "to be a greater Crime in a Philoſopher to ſee a Look- "ing-glaſs, than for the Prophane to behold the Attire "of Ceres."

(39) Ibid. pag. 281, 282.

Read Juvenal's Invective againſt the Emperor Otho, who reckoned his Looking-glaſs as one of the principal Parts of his Equipage of War.

Ille tenet ſpeculum pathici geſtamen Othonis,
Actoris Aurunci ſpolium: quo ſe ille videbat
Armatum, cum jam tolli vexilla juberet.
Res memoranda novis annalibus, atque recenti
Hiſtoria, Speculum civilis Sarcina Belli (40).

(40) Juven. Sat. 2. ver. 99.

One holds a Mirrour, pathic Otho's Sheild,
In which he view'd, before he marched to Field;
Nor Ajax with more Pride his ſeven-fold Targe
did wield.
O noble Subject, for new Annals fit,
In muſty Fame's Records unmention'd yet!
A Looking-glaſs muſt load th' Imperial Car,
The moſt important Carriage of the War.

TATE.

By the way, I cannot but think (though I dare not affirm it) that Apuleius had his Law-ſuit in view, when, in one of his Speeches, he deſcribed the Conteſt between Apollo and Marſyas. He ſuppoſes, that Marſyas begins with praiſing his own buſhy Hair, his ſqualid Beard, and hairy Breaſt; and then reproaches Apollo with extream Neatneſs: "Marſias, quod ſtul-"titiæ maximum ſpecimen eſt, non intelligens ſe de-"ridiculo haberi, priuſquam tibias occiperet inflare, "prius de ſe & Apolline quædam deliramenta bar-"bare effutivit; laudens ſeſe quod erat & coma reli-"cinus, & barba ſquallidus, & pectore hirſutus, & "arte tibicen, & fortuna egenus; contra Apollinem, "ridiculum dictu, adverſis virtutibus culpabat. Quod "Apollo eſſet & coma intonſus, & genis gratus, & "corpore glabellus, & arte multiſcius, & fortuna opu-"lentus. —— Riſere Muſæ, cum audirent hoc genus "crimina, ſapienti exoptanda, Apollini objectata (41), "& tibicinem illum certamine ſuperatum, velut ur-"ſum bipedem, corio execto nudis & laceris viſceri-"bus reliquerunt (42). —— Marſyas, which was the "greateſt Inſtance of Folly, not perceiving, that "he expoſed himſelf to ridicule, before he began to "play upon his Pipe, made an abſurd Compariſon "between Apollo and Himſelf; praiſing himſelf for "his buſhy Hair, his ſqualid Beard, his hairy Breaſt, "his Skill in playing on the Pipe, and his Poverty; "and abſurdly reproaching Apollo with the contrary "Virtues. Apollo, he ſaid, had long Hair, a beau- "tiful Face, and a ſmooth Body; that he was a great "Scholar, and very rich. —— The Muſes laughed, "when they heard ſuch Crimes, as a wiſe Man would "wiſh to be guilty of, objected to Apollo, and left "the poor Piper, overcome in the Conteſt, like ſome "two-footed Bear, mangled and torn, with his Skin "ſtript over his Ears." Obſerve, that Apuleius affirms, his Accuſer was a huge ill favoured Peaſant: "Mihi "iſtud crede, quamquam teterrimum os tuum mi-"nimum à Thyeſta tragico demutet, tamen pro-"fecto diſcendi cupidine ſpeculum inviſeris, & ali-"quando relicto aratro mirarere tot in facie tua ſul-"cos rugarum. At ego non mirer, ſi boni conſulis "me de iſto diſtortiſſimo vultu tuo dicere, de mo-"ribus tuis multo truculentioribus reticere (43). —— "Take this from me; though That rueful Countenance "differs but little from That of Thyeſtes in the Tra- "gedy; yet would you ſometimes, for the ſake of "Information, viſit the Looking-glaſs; and, leaving "the Plow, ſtand amazed at the many Furrows in "your own Face. You will take it in good part, I "doubt not, that I mention the Deformities of your "Face, but am ſilent on your more hideous Morals."

(41) See the Application of this Paſſage in the Nouvelles de la Republ. des Lettres, Septemb. 1685. Article 7.

(42) Apul. Florid. pag. 341.

(43) Apul. Apol. pag. 284.

[I] Made uſe of Magic to poſſeſs himſelf of her Heart and Money.] Apuleius had no need of any great Juſtification, on the firſt Article; for ſince Pudentilla, for Reaſons of Health, was reſolved on a ſecond Marriage, before ſhe had ſeen this pretended Wizard, Apuleius's Youth, good Mien, fair Speech, Wit, and other Accompliſhments, were more than a ſufficient Charm to ingage this Lady's Affections. He had the moſt favourable Opportunities of gaining her Eſteem; he lodged for ſome time at her Houſe; Pudentilla's eldeſt Son would abſolutely have it ſo; and it was He who ſollicited Apuleius to marry her (44). Apuleius managed his Advantages artfully; and turned his Accuſers into ridicule by Smart and ſurprizing Turns of Wit. "You wonder, ſaid he, that a Woman "ſhould marry again, after having been thirteen "Years a Widow; it is more ſurprizing, that ſhe did "not marry much ſooner. You believe there was "need of Witchcraft, to induce a Widow of her "Age to marry a young Fellow; whereas, on the "contrary, this is a Proof, that Witchcraft was "unneceſſary." "Cur mulier libera tibi nupſit poſt "annos tredecim viduitatis? quaſi non magis miran-"dum ſit quod tot annis non nupſerit. —— At enim "major natu non eſt juvenem aſpernata. Igitur hoc "ipſum argumentum eſt nihil opus magia fuiſſe, ut "nubere vellet mulier viro, vidua cœlibi, major "juniori (45)." If the Decree of the Judges had been founded on a Sentence pronounced, in nearly a like Caſe, by the Mother of Alexander the Great, it would have been admirable. Ὁ βασιλεὺς Φίλιππος ἤρα Θεσσαλῆς γυναικὸς ἀϊλίαν ἐχούσης καταφαρμακεύειν αὐτὸν· ἐσπέδασε δὲ ἡ Ὀλυμπιὰς λαβεῖν τὴν ἄνθρωπον ὑποχείριον. ὡς δὲ εἰς ὄψιν ἐλθοῦσα, τό, τε εἶδος ἐυπρεπὴς ἐφάνη, καὶ διελέχθη πρὸς αὐτὴν οὐκ ἀξιόνως οὐδὲ ἀσυνέτως, Χαιρέτωσαν (εἶπεν ἡ Ὀλυμπιὰς) αἱ διαβολαί· σὺ γὰρ ἐν σεαυτῇ τὰ φάρμακα ἔχεις (46). —— King Philip fell in Love with a Theſſalian Lady, who was ſaid to have influenced him by Magic Charms. Olympias contrived to get her into her Power. As ſoon as ſhe was brought into the Preſence of the Queen, and not only appeared very beautiful, but ſpoke with Modeſty and good Senſe; away with ſuch Calumnies, cried Olympias; the Magic Charms you employed are all in your own Perſon. Thus much for the Conqueſt of the Heart. The other Article, which relates to the Money, begets ſome Suſpicion, not of Witchcraft, but of Avarice. It is hard to believe, that this Marriage was not a Sacrifice to Reaſons of Intereſt. But let us not condemn Apuleius, without

(44) Apol. pag. 320.

(45) Ibid. pag. 291.

(46) Plutarch. in Præcept. Conjug. pag. 141. B. See the Remark [I]. of the Article GRANDIER.

Digitized by Google

They accuſed him of being a Wizard (c), not before Chriſtian Judges, as a Commentator pretends that St Auſtin affirms (d), but before Claudius Maximus, Proconſul of Africa, and by Religion a Pagan. He defended himſelf with great Vigour: We have his Apology, which he ſpake before the Judges. It is a very fine Piece (e); and furniſhes us with Examples of the moſt ſhameful Artifices, that the Villainy of an impudent Calumniator is capable of putting in Practice [K]. It has been obſerved, (c) His Accuſer was called Sicinius Æmilianus. He was Brother to Pudentilla's firſt Huſband. Apul. Apolog. init.

(d) Leon. Coqueus, in Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8, c. 19, p. 740. Edit. Franc. 1661, in 4to. But he is miſtaken. St Auſtin ſays quite the contrary.

(e) Auguſtin. ubi ſupra, lib. 18, cap. 18.

out hearing him. He offers to prove, by his Marriage-Contract, that he had deſired nothing of Pudentilla, for the preſent, but only the promiſe of a moderate Sum, in caſe he ſurvived her, or had Children by her. He makes it appear, by ſeveral of his Actions, how diſintereſted his Conduct was, and how reaſonable it was to demand That Sum from his Wife, which ſhe had promiſed him. Here he was obliged to make ſuch Confeſſions in open Court, as Pudentilla could very well have diſpenſed with. He ſays (47), that ſhe was neither fair, nor young, nor in any reſpect ſo tempting, as to induce a Man to have recourſe to Witchcraft; and that it ought not to be wondered at, that ſhe had given great Encouragement to ſuch a Perſon as himſelf was. "Quod inſtitui pergam diſ-
"putare, nullam mihi cauſam fuiſſe Pudentillam ve-
"neficiis ad nuptias prolectandi. Formam mulieris
"& ætatem ipſi ultro exprobraverunt, idque mihi
"vitio dederunt talem uxorem cauſa avaritiæ con-
"cupiſſe, atque adeo primo dotem in congreſſu gran-
"dem & uberem rapuiſſe —— Quamquam quis om-
"nium vel exigue rerum peritus culpare auderet, ſi
"mulier vidua & mediocri forma, at non ætate me-
"diocri, nubere volens, longa dote & molli condi-
"tione invitaſſet juvenem neque corpore, neque ani-
"mo, neque fortuna pœnitendum. (48).—— To go on
"with my intended Defence; There was no Neceſſity,
"that I ſhould have recourſe to Magic, to induce
"Pudentilla to marry me. My Accuſers have volun-
"tarily reproached her with Age, and want of Beau-
"ty; and have taxed me with Avarice, in deſiring
"ſuch a Woman, and with having obtained from her,
"upon our firſt coming together, a large and plentiful
"Settlement. ——Though what Man, of the leaſt Ex- "perience, would find fault, that a Widow Lady, of "little Beauty, and advanced in Years, who has a
"mind to marry, ſhould tempt a young Fellow, not
"contemptible either in Perſon, Mind, or Fortune,
"by a large Settlement, and an eaſy Condition of
"Life." Pontianus, the Son of Pudentilla, (he tells his Judges) propoſed the Marriage of his Mother to him, no otherwiſe than as an Incumbrance, and as the Act of a Friend and a Philoſopher; that is, an Act more becoming a good Friend to Pontianus, and a Philoſopher, than the ſtaying for a Match, where he might find both Riches and Beauty. Conſidere ſeſe, fore ut id onus recipiam, quoniam non formoſa pupilla, ſed mediocri facie mater liberorum mihi offeratur. Sin hæc reputans formæ & divitiarum gratia me ad aliam conditionen reſervarem, neque pro amico neque pro philoſopho facturum (49), He magnifies greatly the Advantages of a Maid, above a Widow. "How poor ſoever a fair Maid is,
"ſaid he, ſhe brings you a great Dowry, the Flower
"and firſt Fruits of her Beauty, an Heart intirely
"new. It is with great Reaſon, that all Husbands
"ſet ſo great a value on a Maidenhead; all other
"Treaſures, which a Woman brings, are of ſuch a
"Nature, that an Husband may reſtore them back,
"if he is unwilling to be obliged to his Wife for "them; ſhe may withdraw them; ſhe may recover
"them at Law; Virginity alone cannot be reſtored,
"but remains always in Poſſeſſion of the firſt Huſ-
"band. If you marry a Widow, and ſhe leaves you,
"ſhe carries away all ſhe brought with her; you
"cannot boaſt of retaining any thing, which belongs
"to her." He obſerves ſeveral other Inconveniences in marrying Widows; and concludes, that "Puden-
"tilla would not eaſily have been married a ſecond
"time, if ſhe had not met with, in him, the Tem-
"per of a Philoſopher." Virgo formoſa, etſi ſit oppido pauper, tamen abundè dotata eſt. Affert quippe ad maritum novam animi indolem, pulchritudinis gratiam, floris rudimentum, Ipſa virginitatis commendatio jure meritoque omnibus maritis acceptiſſima eſt. Nam quodcunque aliud in dotem acceperis, potes cum libuit ne ſis beneficio obſtrictius omne ut acceperas retribuere, pecuniam renumerare, mancipia reſtituere, domo demigrare, prædiis cedere. Sola virginitas cum ſemel accepta eſt reddi nequitur: ſola apud maritum ex rebus dotalibus remanet. Vidua autem qualis nuptiis venit, talis divortio digreditur. Nihil affert irrepoſcibile, ſed venit jam ab alio præflorata; certe tibi, ad quæ velis, minime docilis; non minus ſuſpectans novam domam, quam ipſa jam ob unum divortium ſuſpectanda; ſive illa morte amiſit maritum, ut ſcævi ominis mulier, & infandi conjugii, minime appetenda; ſeu repudio digreſſa eſt, utramvis habebat culpam mulier: quæ aut tam intolerabilis fuit ut repudiaretur, aut tam inſolens, ut repudiaret. Ob hæc & alia viduæ dote auctæ proces ſolicitant. Quod Pudentilla quoque in alio marito feciſſet, ſi Philoſophum ſpernentem dotis non reperiſſet (50).

(47) Apul. Apolog. pag. 321.

(48) Apol. pag. 332.

(49) Ibid. 320.

(50) Ibid. pag. 352.

This Diſcourſe of Apuleius is a noble Field for Reflexions, were there leiſure to purſue them; however, in haſte as I am to paſs on to other Articles, I ſhall ſtay to make two Obſervations; one is, that this Eſtate, of which the Husband can never be diſſeized, is a meer Chimera; no Baker, or Butcher, would truſt you for Six-pence upon this imperiſhable Poſſeſſion. The other is, that Apuleius had not conſidered every Diſadvantage of Widowhood. He has ſaid nothing of Widows, who have never had any Children; nor, indeed, was That his Caſe. A Prebend of Paris, who made a trip to Geneva, in 1672, with a Deſign of embracing the Proteſtant Religion, happened, ſoon after his Arrival, to ſingle out a young, rich, and handſome, Widow, among other Women in the ſame Church. He ſoon found an Opportunity of ſpeaking to her; and, the more he ſaw her, the more he fancied ſhe would ſuit his purpoſe. But, having brought with him from, France, nothing but the good Plight of Perſons of his Profeſſion, and ſome Inſight into the Abuſes of Popery, he was repulſed with Scorn. He communicated to me the Secret of his Repulſe, and complained leſs of the Diſappointment, than of the manner, in which he was treated (51). I repreſented ingenuouſly to him, that he was in the wrong to propoſe any ſuch thing, conſidering the preſent Condition of his own Fortune, and the Circumſtances of the Lady. He confeſſed ſhe was too rich for ſuch a Perſon as he; But, continued he, much of her Riches muſt be abated, on the ſcore of her never having had a Child; this alone is a Drawback upon it of Thirty or Forty thouſand Livres; at leaſt I ſhould have eſteemed her by ſo much a better Fortune, than I do now, ſince there is a Preſumption of her being barren; eſpecially, when I conſider, that my only Brother has no Heirs, and that our Family is in danger of being extinct, if I leave no Poſterity. I would not enter into a farther Diſpute with a Man, who had calculated the Matter ſo nicely. I left him to eſtimate the Buſineſs by himſelf; and was ſatisfied with believing, that the Care he had at Heart of preſerving his Family had contributed greatly to the opening his Eyes.

REFLEXION of a Convert Prieſt on a Widow, who had had no Children.

(51) He never talk'd of the Affair, without repenting, Eſt modus in rebus.

[K] Furniſhes us with Examples of the moſt ſhameful Artifices, that the Villany of an impudent Calumniator is capable of putting in Practice.] I ſhall inſtance but in one; to ſhew, that, in all Ages, the Spirit of Calumny has put Men upon forging Proofs by falſe Extracts from what a Perſon has ſaid, or written. To convict Apuleius of practiſing Magic, his Accuſers alledged a Letter, which his Wife had wrote during the Time of his Courtſhip, and affirmed that ſhe had confeſſed, in this Letter, that Apuleius was a Wizard, and had bewitched her. It was no hard matter to make the Court believe, that ſhe had written ſo; for they only read a few Words of her Letter, detached from what preceeded, or followed; and no one preſſed them to read the whole. At laſt Apuleius covered them with Confuſion, by reciting the whole Paſſage of Pudentilla's Letter. It appeared, that, far from complaining of Apuleius, ſhe juſtified him, and artfully ridiculed his Accuſers. Theſe are his Words: You will find, that preciſely the ſame Terms may either condemn, or juſtify, Apuleius, according as they are taken with, or without, what preceeds them. Βαλομένην γὰρ μὲ δι' ἃς εἶπον αἰτίας γαμηθῆναι, ſerved, that Apuleius, with all his Magic Art, could never raiſe himſelf to any Poſt of Authority, though he was of a good Family, had been very well educated, and was much eſteemed for his Eloquence (f). It was not, purſues my Author, out of a Philoſophical Contempt, that he was never in Public Employs; for he thought it an Honour to be inveſted with the Prieſtly Office, which gave him the Superintendence of the Public Games; and contended ſtrongly againſt Thoſe, who oppoſed the erecting of a Statue, with which the Inhabitants of Oëa would have honoured him (g). Nothing is a more ſenſible Proof of the impertinent Credulity of the Pagans, than their ſaying, that Apuleius had wrought many Miracles [L], that they equalled, or even ſurpaſſed, Thoſe of JESUS CHRIST. No doubt many Perſons took all he had ſaid in his Golden Aſs for true Hiſtory. I wonder St Auſtin could be in any Uncertainty about it (h), or that he was not convinced, that Apuleius intended this Book only as a Romance (i). He was not the Inventor of it; the Story is of ancient Date, as Mr Moreri diſcovered in the Words of Voſſius [M]; which yet he did not thoroughly underſtand. Some Pagans have mentioned this Romance with (f) St Auſtin makes this Remark, in his ſixth Epiſtle. See Remark [I.] at the end.

Digitized by Google

(g) Pro ſtatua ſibi apud Oëenſes locanda, ex qua civitate habebat uxorem, adverſus contradictionem quorundam civium litigaret, quod populeros ne lateret ejuſdem litis orationem ſcriptam memoriæ commendavit. Auguſtin. Epiſt. 5.

(h) Id. de Civit. Dei, lib. 18. cap. 18.

(i) Sermone iſto Mileſio varias Fabulas conſeram. Apul. in Prologo.

γαμηθῆναι, αὐτὸς τὸν ἔπεισας ἀντὶ πάντων αἱρεῖσθαι, θαυμάζων τὸν ἄνδρα, καὶ σπουδάζων αὐτὸν οἰκεῖον ἡμῖν δι' ἐμὲ ποιῆσαι. νῦν δὲ ὡς μοχθηροί σοι ὑμᾶς κακοηθεῖς τε ἀναπείθουσιν, αἰφνίδιον ἐγήγερσο Ἀπολλὶ μάγε, καὶ ἐγὼ μεμάγευμαι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ. ναὶ ἥρω. καὶ ἦλθες νῦν πρὸς ἐμὲ, ἕως ἔτι σωφρονῶ (52). Being inclined to marry for the Reaſons, which I have mentioned, you yourſelf perſwaded me to make choice of this Man, being fond of him, and deſirous, by my means, to make him one of our Family. But now, at the Inſtigation of wicked Men, Apuleius muſt be informed againſt as a Magician, and I forſooth am enchanted by him. I certainly love him. Come to me, before my Reaſon fails me. He aggravates this kind of Fraud as it deſerves. His Words deſerve to be engraved in Letters of Gold in a thouſand Places, to deter, if poſſible, all Calumniators in all Countries, and in all Ages, who practiſe the like Cheats. "Multa ſunt quæ ſola prolata ca- "lumniæ poſſunt videri obnoxia. Cujavis oratio "inſimulari poteſt, ſi ea quæ ex prioribus nexa ſunt "principio ſui defraudentur, ſi quædam ex ordine "ſcriptorum ad libidinem ſupprimantur, ſi quæ ſimu- "lationis cauſa dicta ſunt, adieverantis pronunciatione "quam exprobrantis legantur (53). - - - There are ma- "ny things, which, produced alone, may ſeem liable to "Calumny. Any Diſcourſe may furniſh matter of Accu- "ſation, if what is connected with foregoing Words be "robbed of it's Introduction, if ſome Things be ſuppreſſed "at Pleaſure, and if what is ſpoken by way of Reproach "to others, for inventing a Calumny, be pronounced by "the Reader as an Aſſertion of the Truth of it."

(52) Apul. Apol. pag. 326.

(53) Ibid.

[L] The Pagans pretended, that Apuleius wrought many Miracles] We ſhould ſcarce believe, that this had ever been ſaid, if credible Perſons did not atteſt it; But we find, that this Impertinence of the Pagans was ſuch a Cant in St Auſtin's Time, that this great Prelate was requeſted to refute it. "Pre- "cator acceſſerim ut ad ea vigilantius reſpondere "digneris, in quibus nihil amplius Dominum quam "alii homines facere potuerunt feciſſe vel geſſiſſe "mentiuntur. Apollonium ſiquidem ſuum nobis & "Apuleium alioſque magicæ artis homines in me- "dium proferunt, quorum majora contendunt exti- "tiſſe miracula (54). - - - - - On this Occaſion I re- "queſt of you, that you will exert your utmoſt Efforts "in refuting the falſe Pretences of theſe Objectors, "who would place the Works of OUR LORD on "a Level with the Actions of meer Men. For they "produce againſt him their APOLLONIUS and APU- "LEIUS, and other Dealers in Magic, whoſe Miracles "they aſſert to have been greater than His." St Auſtin contented himſelf with anſwering, that, if Apuleius had been ſo great a Magician, he would not have lived in ſo mean a Condition, as he did, conſidering his Ambition; That, beſides, he had denied the Charge of Magic, which he allowed to be a great Crime (55). His pretended Miracles were ſpoken of long before St Auſtin; for Lactantius expreſſes his Surprize, that the Author, whom he confuted, had not joined Apuleius with Apollonius Tyanæus. "Voluit oſtendere Apollonium "vel paria, vel etiam majora feciſſe. Mirum quod "Apuleium prætermiſit, cujus ſolent & multa mira "memorari (56). - - - - - He pretended to ſhew, that "Apollonius had wrought as great, or even greater. "It is ſurprizing he ſhould forget Apuleius, who is "reported to have wrought many Miracles." Apu-

(54) Marcellinus ad Aug. Epiſt. 4. inter Epiſt. Auguſtini. See alſo the 49th Letter of St Auguſtin, pag. 208.

(55) Auguſt. Epiſt. 5.

(56) Lactant. Divin. Inſtitut. lib. 5. cap. 3. See alſo St Jerome in Pſal lxxxi.

leius has had the Fate of many other Perſons: His Miracles were not ſpoken of 'till after his Death; his Accuſers objected nothing but Trifles againſt him; or brought the worſt Proof in the World of what might have the Appearance of Magic. But I know not how to reconcile St Auſtin with Apuleius. The one ſays, that Apuleius could never arrive at any Poſt of Judicature, ad aliquam judiciariam Reipublicæ poteſtatem (57). The other boaſts, that he had enjoyed the ſame Poſt, which his Father had held; who had been Duumvir, and had paſſed through every honourable Employment in the City, where he lived. "In qua colonia patrem habui loco principe Duum- "viralem cunctis honoribus perfunctum. Cujus ego "LOCUM in ea repub. exinde ut participare CURIAM "cœpi nequaquam degener pari ſpero honore & "exiſtimatione tueor (58)."

(57) Auguſt. Epiſt. 5.

(58) Apul. Apolog. pag. 289.

[M] The Story is of ancient Date, as Mr Moreri diſcovered in the Words of Voſſius.] Let us firſt ſet down his own Words. "The Metamorphoſis of the "Golden Aſs is a Paraphraſe of what he had taken "from Lucian, as Lucian had done before from Lu- "cius of Patras, mentioned by Photius - - - - - It "is even probable, that Apuleius borrowed, from "the ſame Source, the very Subject of the Fable, "which he has given his own turn to. For he "underſtood the Greek and Latin Tongues very "well." To judge whether Mr Moreri deſerves Criticiſm, we muſt compare what he has ſaid with the Paſſage of Voſſius, which was his Original. "De ætate Lucii Patrenſis non liquet, niſi quod an- "tiquior credatur Luciano, quippe qui inde com- "pilaſſe videatur Aſinum ſuum, uti ex Luciano po- "ſtea aſinum ſuum aureum exſcripſit Appuleius. "Niſi is potius ex eodem Lucii fonte ſua hauſit, "& hoc ſanè veriſimilius eſt. Nempe ut Lucium "in epitomen redegit Lucianus, ita paraphraſin Lucii "ſcripſit Appuleius, ſed ille Græcè, hic Latinè (59). "- - - - - - It is uncertain, when Lucius Patrenſis "lived; only he is thought to have been older than "Lucian, who ſeems to have borrowed from him his "Aſs, in like manner as Apuleius afterwards copied "his Golden Aſs from Lucian; unleſs perhaps he "copied it from Lucius himſelf; which is moſt pro- "bable. So that, as Lucian epitomized Lucius, "Apuleius paraphraſed him; but the one in Greek, "the other in Latin." It is plain Mr Moreri miſtook Voſſius's Thought, and that he ought not to have ſaid, that Apuleius's Work is a Paraphraſe on That of Lucian. He ſhould have ſaid, that Lucius Patrenſis had been abridged by Lucian, and paraphraſed by Apuleius. The Argument, which Mr Moreri includes in theſe Words, for he underſtood the Greek and Latin Tongues very well, is good for nothing. Put this Reaſoning into Form, and you will raiſe this Enthymema from it: He underſtood the Greek and Latin Tongues very well; therefore he took the Subject of this Fable, which he dreſt up after his own way, from the Fountain-head; that is to ſay, therefore he has not paraphraſed Lucian, but Lucius Patrenſis. This Enthymema is ridiculous. A Knowledge of the Greek Tongue is as neceſſary in making uſe of Lucian, as of Lucius; and the Latin Tongue is of no help towards dreſſing up in one's own way a Subject borrowed from Lucius. Cannot Mr de la Fontaine dreſs up a Tale of Ouville after his own way? It would be of greater Uſe, than we are aware of, to criticiſe on the falſe Logic of Authors. Young with Contempt [N]. Apuleius was extreamly laborious [O], and compoſed ſeveral Books [P], ſome in Verſe, and others in Proſe; of which but a ſmall Part has reſiſted the Injuries of Time. He delighted in making publick Speeches, in which he gained the Applauſe of all his Hearers. When they heard him at Oëa, the Audience cried out with one Voice, That he ought to be honoured with the Freedom of the City (k). Thoſe of Carthage heard him favourably, and erected a Statue in Honour of him (l): Several other Cities did him the ſame Honour (m). It is ſaid, that his Wife held the Candle to him, whilſt he ſtudied; but This, I think, muſt not be taken literally; it is rather a Figure of Gallic Eloquence in Sidonius Apollinaris; Legentibus meditantibuſque candelas & candelabra tenuerunt (n). Several Critics have publiſhed Notes on Apuleius [Q]. I have never met with any modern French Tranſlation of the Golden Aſs [R]. This Work ought to be conſidered as a continued Satire on the (k) Id. Apol. pag. 320.

Perſons,

Digitized by Google

(l) Id. Floridor. pag. 355, & ſeq.

(m) Ibid. pag. 356.

(n) Sidon. Apollin. Epiſt. 10. l. 2.

Perſons, who are born to be Authors, would profit much, and betimes, by ſuch Criticiſms.

[N] Some Pagans have mentioned this Romance with Contempt.] I deſire no other Proof of this, than the Letter, in which the Emperor Severus complains to the Senate of the Honours paid to Clodius Albinus. Among other Elogiums, they had given him That of Learning. The Emperor could not bear, that they ſhould give ſuch a Character to a Man, who had filled his Mind with nothing but the Tales and Rhapſodies of Apuleius. "Major fuit dolor quod "illum pro literato laudandum plerique duxiſtis, quum "ille næniis quibuſdam anilibus occupatus inter "Mileſias punicas Apuleii ſui, & ludicra literaria "ſeneſceret (60)." Macrobius has conſigned over all ſuch Romances, as Apuleius's Golden Aſs, to Nurſes. "Vel argumenta fictis caſibus amatorum referta, "quibus vel multum ſe Arbiter exercuit, vel Apu"leium nonnunquam luſiſſe miramur. Hoc totum "fabularum genus, quod ſolas aurium delicias pro"fitetur, è ſacrario ſuo in nutricum cunas ſapientia "eliminat (61). - - - - - - We are ſurprized to find, "that even Apuleius ſometimes diverted himſelf with "Love-Tales, in which Arbiter chiefly exerciſed him"ſelf. This kind of Fable, which profeſſes only to "pleaſe the Ear, Learning baniſhes from her Temple "to the Cradles of Nurſes."

(60) Capitolin. in Clodio Albino, cap. 12.

(61) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 1. cap. 2.

[O] Apuleius was extreamly laborious.] Hear what he ſays himſelf, in his Anſwer to his Adverſary, on the Subject of Eloquence. "De eloquentia vero, "ſi qua mihi fuiſſet, neque mirum neque invidio"ſum deberet videri, ſi ab ineunte ævo unis ſtudiis "literarum ex ſummis viribus deditus, omnibus aliis "ſpretis voluptatibus, ad hoc ævi, haud ſciam anne "ſuper omneis homines impenſo labore, diuque no"ctuque, cum deſpectu & diſpendio bonæ valetu"dinis, eam quæſiſſem (62). - - - - - As to Eloquence, "if I ever had any, it ought not to be thought "ſtrange or odious, that, from my Youth to this Time, "I have endeavoured after it, applying myſelf ſolely to "the Study of Letters, and contemning all other Plea"ſures, with greater Application of Mind, than per"haps any Man ever did, and even to the Ruin of "my Health."

(62) Apul. Apolog. pag. 276.

[P] And compoſed ſeveral Books.] See the Diſſertation de Vita & Scriptis Apuleii, which Wower has printed at the beginning of his Edition, and Mr Fleuri, the Dauphin Scholiaſt, has prefixed to His. It may be ſaid, that Apuleius was an Univerſal Genius: There are but few Subjects, which he has not handled. He tranſlated the Phædo of Plato, and the Arithmetic of Nicomachus: He wrote a Treatiſe de Republica; another de Numeris; and one de Muſica: They quote his Table-Queſtions; his Letters to Cerellia, which are a little too free; his Proverbs; his Hermagoras; and his Ludicra. He mentions the latter himſelf: Legerunt, ſays he (63), è Ludicris meis Epiſtolium de dentificio, verſibus ſcriptum. - - - - They read, out of my Ludicra, a ſhort Epiſtle in Verſe, concerning a Powder for the Teeth. We have ſtill his Golden Aſs in eleven Books; his Apology; his Treatiſes of Natural Philoſophy; of Moral Philoſophy; de Syllogiſmo categorico; de Deo Socratis; de Mundo; and his Florida. As to his Letters to Cerellia, I muſt not omit the Judgment of a learned Critic (64) on them. He believes, that the Name of Cicero ought to be inſerted in That Paſſage of Auſonius, where theſe Letters are mentioned; for Cicero was the Perſon, who was reproached with having been too familiar with Cerellia, and writing to her too freely. On this Suppoſition, we muſt read the Paſſage in Auſonius thus: "Eſſe Apuleium "in vitâ Philoſophum, in Epigrammatis amatorem; "Ciceronis in præceptis omnibus exſtare ſeveritatem, "in Epiſtolis ad Cerelliam ſubeſſe petulantiam. - - - - "Apuleius was, in his Life, a Philoſopher; in his E"pigrams, a Lover; Cicero's Precepts are all rigidly "moral; his Epiſtles to Cerellia, looſe and wanton."

(63) Id. ib.

(64) Fredericus Gronovius in Auſon. Cent. Nuptial. in Editione Auſonii. Amſtelod. 1671. pag. 516.

[Q] Several Critics have publiſhed Notes on Apuleius.] Philippus Beraldus publiſhed very large Notes on the Golden Aſs, at Venice, in Folio, Ann. 1504, which were reprinted, in 8vo, at Paris, and at ſeveral other Places. Godeſcalk Stewechius, Peter Colvius, John Wower, &c. have written on all the Works of Apuleius. Priceus has publiſhed the Golden Aſs, and the Apology, ſeparately, with a great many Obſervations (65). The Annotations of Caſaubon, and Thoſe of Scipio Gentilis, on the Apology, are much valued. The firſt appeared in the Year 1594, and the latter in the Year 1607. The beſt Edition of the Book de Mundo, is That of Leyden, 1591, in 8vo. We are indebted for it to Bonaventure Vulcanius. Let me obſerve, by the way, that This Treatiſe is almoſt the ſame with the Tranſlation of a like Work, attributed to Ariſtotle. The Book de Deo Socratis has appeared with the Annotations of Joſias Mercerus (66). The Author, whom I quote, will give you a more ample Account of the Editions of Apuleius (67). He has made no particular mention of That of Baſil, apud Henricum Petri, 1560, in three Volumes, in 8vo; nor of That of the ſame Town, apud Sebaſtianum Henrici Petri, 1620; nor of That of Lyons, 1614, in two Volumes in 8vo; which perfectly reſembles That of Leyden, the Pieces of which he particularly ſpecifies, placing it in the Year 1614. Perhaps he miſtook the Lugdunum of France (Lyons), for the Lugdunum Batavorum (Leyden).

(65) The Apology; Paris, 1635, in 4*to.* The Golden Aſs; Goudæ, 1650, in 8*vo.*

(66) At Paris, 1624, in 12mo.

(67) Joh. Albertus Fabricius in Bibliotheca Latina, pag. 135, & ſeq.

[R] I have never met with any modern French Tranſlation of the Golden Aſs.] If I am not miſtaken, John Louveau is the Author of the firſt old Tranſlation: La Croix du Maine mentions it, without ſetting down the Year, in which it appeared (68). He only ſays, that it was printed at Lyons. It was reprinted, at Paris, by Claudius Micard, in 1584. One J. de Montlyard publiſhed a Tranſlation of the ſame Book, with a Commentary. One of the two Editions, which I have ſeen, was according to the Copy, printed at Paris by Abel l'Angelier, 1612; the other, at Paris, by Samuel Thibouſt, 1623. The Preface is long; and contains a Criticiſm on ſeveral Errors of John Louveau.

(68) La Croix du Maine Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 238.

I find, that La Croix du Maine, and du Verdier Vau-Privas, have mentioned a Tranſlation, which may very well be older, than That of John Louveau. They ſay, that George de la Bouthiere, or de la Boutier, a Native of Autun, rendered the Metamorphoſis, or Golden Aſs of Apuleius into French (69). The one ſays, that this Verſion was printed at Lyons, by John de Tournes and William Gazeau, in the Year 1553. The other, that it was printed by John de Tournes, in 1516 (70). There is an Error of the Preſs in the laſt Date; and it is evident, that, to put the Figures in their right Places, it ought to be 1556: Now, as the ſame Author has ſaid, that the Tranſlation by John Louveau was printed in the Year 1558 (71), there is Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that it was later than That of George de la Bouthiere.

(69) Ibid. pag. 118. Du Verdier, pag. 446.

(70) Du Verdier, Bibl. Françoiſe, pag. 440.

(71) Id. pag. 716.

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, Part of a Tranſlation of the Golden Aſs has appeared at Paris. The Journal des Sçavans of the ninth of January, 1696, mentions it. Monſ. the Baron des Coutures publiſhed, with Notes, in 1698, his French Verſion of the Treatiſe de Deo Socratis.

Digitized by Google

the Diſorders, which the Magicians, Prieſts, Pandars, Thieves, &c. filled the World with at That time [S].

[S] This Work ought to be conſidered as a continued Satire on the Diſorders, which Magicians, Prieſts, &c. filled the World with at That Time.] This Obſervation occurs in Mr Fleuri's Annotations. "Tota "porro hæc metamorphoſis Apuleiana & ſtilo & ſen- "tentia Satyricon eſt perpetuum (ut recte obſervavit "Barthius Adverſ. lib. 51. cap. 11.) in quo magica "deliria, ſacrificulorum ſcelera, aduiterorum crimi- "na, furum & latronum impunitæ factiones, palam "differuntur (72)." He adds, that Thoſe, who are in ſearch of the Philoſopher's Stone, pretend to find it in the Myſteries of the Grand Operation. A Perſon, who would take the Pains, and had the requiſite Qualifications (and he muſt, indeed, have a great many) might draw up a very curious and inſtructive Commentary on This Romance, and might inform us of ſeveral Things, which the preceeding Commentaries, how good ſoever, have never touched upon. There are ſome very obſcene Paſſages in this Book of Apuleius. It is believed, that the Author has inſerted ſome Epiſodes in it of his own Invention; and, amongſt others, That of Pſyche. Horum certe noſter ita imitator fuit, ut è ſuo penu innumerabilia protulerit, atque inter cætera venuſtiſſimum illud Pſyches Ἐπεισόδιον (73). This Epiſode furniſhed Moliere with Matter for an excellent Dramatic Piece, and Mr de la Fontaine for a fine Romance.

(72) Julius Floridus, Comment. ad Uſum Delph. in Apuleium.

(73) Julius ubi ſupra, pag. 2.

AQUÆUS (STEPHEN), in French de l'Aigue *, Lord of Beauvais (a), in Berry, his Native Country, made himſelf famous by his Military Actions [A], and his Writings, in the Reign of Francis I. Not that his Commentary on Pliny, which is the beſt of his Works, is good in the Main [B]; but it was extraordinary, in thoſe Times, for a Gentleman to perform ſo much. This Commentary was printed in 1530. Father Hardouin was not well acquainted with it's Date [C].

(a) Du Verdier. Biblioth. Franc. pag. 278.

* So the Gaſcons call Water. This Author writes himſelf Stephen de l'Aigue dict Beaulnois, at the beginning of a Tranſlation of Cæſar, Edit. of Paris, 1546, in 12mo.

[A] Famous for his Military Actions, and his Writings.] Father Hardouin gives him this Elogium. Vir nobilis in primis, ac militia quoque exacta egregie fordidus (1). - - - - A Perſon very famous, and, after War, remarkably ſordid. The Works, he publiſhed, are A ſingular Treatiſe concerning the Properties of Tortoiſes, Snails, Frogs, and Artichokes, at Lyons, in 8vo (2). Julius Cæſar's Commentaries on the Roman Wars, and other Military Exploits, performed by him in Gaul, and Africa, at Paris 1531, in Folio. Du Verdier cites this Edition (3). La Croix du Maine takes notice of the Edition at Paris, in 1539 (4), but not of That in 1546. We are going to take notice of his Commentary on Pliny.

(1) Harduinus, Præfat. in Plinium.

(2) Du Verdier, Bibl. Françoiſe, pag 2-8. Le Croix du Maine points out the Edition of Paris, in 1530.

(3) Du Verdier, ubi ſupra.

(4) La Croix du Maine, Bibl. Fr. pag. 76.

[B] His Commentary on Pliny - - - - is not good in the main.] It is more conſiderable, for it's Size, than it's Learning. The Author corrects only as a Plagiary, and paſſes over almoſt all the difficult Places. This is Father Hardouin's Judgment of it. "Commentarios ſcripſit in omnes Plinii libros: Sed mole "magis quam eruditione inſignes. Nec vero emen- "dationes ullas habet, quam quas à Rhenano mu- "tuatus eſt: Et ea fere in quibus ſalebrarum eſt ali- "quid aut ambagis, ſolet is, ceu foveam, ſecurus præ- "tergredi (5)." He is guilty of the ſame Fault with ſeveral other Writers; he makes uſe of the Property of other Men, without mentioning his Benefactor; and names him only when he intends to cenſure him. Rhenanus made this Complaint, in a Letter to a Phyſician of the Cardinal of Weſtphalia: "Hoc mirum, quod quum ex meis caſtigationibus "nonnihil ſit adjutus, nuſquam tamen mei mentio- "nem facit, niſi quoties vult reprehendere (6)." The general Judgment, which he paſſes on this Work, deſerves to be reported. "In primis ipſum volumen "non eſt exiguum, ex variis congeſtum autoribus, "quod uſui pauperculis eſſe poſſit, qui non habent "bibliothecam inſtructam, puta Ariſtotelem, & Alber- "tum de Animalibus, Raphaelem Volaterranum, ex "quo integra ſerme capita autor tranſcripſit bona "fide, hoc eſt, una cum ipſis mendis, ne ſyllaba "quidem mutata, Cœlium Rhodiginum, Columel- "lam etiam, Palladiumque, & ſimileis, ſcriptores. "Nam hoc præcipue habet ſtudio, citare teſtimonia "autorum, qui cum Plinio faciunt, de verbis ipſis mi- "nimum ſollicitus, quod illi penitus puerile videtur. "In ſumma liber talis eſt, qui ſi non magnopere ju- "vet, excitet tamen literas, & Plinium ipſum vulgo "fortaſſis commendet, quæ mihi res in primis grata "eſt (7). - - - - - In the firſt Place, it is a bulky "Volume, compiled from various Authors (upon which "account it may be uſeful to poorer Students, who "have not a well furniſhed Library) from Ariſtotle, "and Albertus de Animalibus; Raphael Volaterran, "from whom the Author has fairly tranſcribed whole "Chapters, not omitting the very Faults, nor alter- "ing a Syllable; from Cœlius Rhodiginus, Columel- "la, Palladius, and the like Writers. For his chief "Aim is, to cite the Teſtimonies of Authors, who "favour Pliny, unconcerned as to the Words them- "ſelves, which he thinks deſerve the Regard of "Boys alone. In ſhort, the Work is ſuch, that, if it be "not very entertaining, it may yet promote Learning, "and perhaps recommend Pliny to a more general "Reading which I am particularly pleaſed with."

(5) Harduin. Præfat. in Plinium.

(6) See the 50th Letter of the Centuria Epiſtolarum Philologicarum, publiſhed by Goldaſt, p. 196. Edit. 1674.

(7) Ibid.

[C] Father Hardouin was not well acquainted with the Date of the Edition of Aquæus's Commentary on Pliny.] He obſerves, that Sigiſmond Gelenius publiſhed a Volume of Corrections on Pliny, in the Year 1535; and that, the Year following, Beatus Rhenanus publiſhed his Work on the ſame Author; and that, at the end of four Years, our Aquæus publiſhed his Commentary (8). He muſt therefore have publiſhed it in 1540. Now it is certain, that he publiſhed it in the Year 1530. I ſuppoſe Father Hardouin's Miſtake proceeded from his not knowing, that Gelenius had twice employed his Pen on Pliny, before the Edition of 1635 (9). Perhaps the Book of Aquæus was later, by five Years, than the firſt Corrections of Gelenius.

(8) Hardouin. Præfat. in Plin.

(9) See the 69th Letter of the 3th Book of Eraſmus, pag. 1957.

AQUAVIVA (ANDREW MATTHEW) Duke of Atri, in the Kingdom of Naples, and Son of Julius Aquaviva, Count of Converſano [A], added, to the Splendor of his Birth, an Erudition, which rendered him highly illuſtrious, towards the End of the XVth, and Beginning of the XVIth Centuries. He was not ſatisfied barely with ſtudying, and converſing with the Learned; he employed himſelf in writing Books, and acquitted himſelf with Reputation; as appears by his Work intituled, Encyclopædia; and another, in which he treats of Moral Virtue [B]. He wrote a Book

(1) See the Hiſtory of Mahom. II. by Guillet, Tom. 2. pag. 373.

(2) See the Verſes which Marullus addreſſes to him, Epigram. lib. 1. pag 16.

[A] The Son of Julius Aquaviva, Count of Converſano.] This Count ſignalized himſelf by his Valour, on ſeveral Occaſions, and commanded the Army of Naples, when he was killed in a Skirmiſh, during the Siege of Otranto by the Turks, in 1480 (1). His Son, of whom we ſpeak in this Article, was a long time inconſolable for this Loſs (2)."

[B] A Work, in which he treats of Moral Virtue.] One would think, that P. Jovius looked upon it to be a Commentary on Plutarch's Treatiſe of Moral Virtue; and the modern Author of the Annotations on the Latin Poems of Sannazarius had the ſame Thought. "Librum nempe nobilem, cui "Encyclopædia nomen, itemque Commentarium in "Plutarchum de Virtute morali (3). - - - - To wit, "an excellent Work, entituled Encyclopædia, and a "Commentary on Plutarch, Of Moral Virtue." But the Words of Paul Jovius are not clear enough to determine me to this Senſe; I ſhould rather keep to a more indefinite Idea. He expreſſes himſelf thus: "Nemo

(3) Notæ ad Sann. Eleg. pag. 188. Edit. Amſtel. 1689.

Digitized by Google

likewiſe de Re Equeſtri. Before he applyed himſelf with ſo much Ardour to s, he had paid That Debt to Arms, which his high Birth claimed, and had ized himſelf that way; tho' Fortune had been ever averſe. He had been engaged in two unſucceſsful Battles, and was wounded, and taken Priſoner, in both. Study ſupported him in his Confinement; and he was ſo happy, as to obtain his Liberty from Ferdinand, King of Aragon, when Gonſalvo, ſirnamed the Great Captain, would have ſent him, with other Priſoners, into Spain. From that Time, He betook himſelf to the Pleaſures of a private Life, amidſt his Books, and in the Company of learned Men, by whom he was highly praiſed, and honoured [C]. He inſpired his Brother Beliſarius with the ſame Love of Learning, who became likewiſe an Author [D]. Our Aquaviva would have been more happy, if he had managed his Eſtate a little better; but his too great Expences for ſeveral Years at laſt exhauſted his Fortunes. He died at Converſano, at Seventy two Years of Age; when the French Troops, under the Conduct of Lautrec, ravaged Apulia (a) in 1582.

(a) Ex Jovio, Elog. Doctor. Vir. cap. 73.

" Nemo ex his, qui illuſtribus orti familiis ætate " noſtra claruerunt - - - - - Andrea Matthæo Aqua- " vivio - - - - - ſe luculentius optimis diſciplinis ex- " ornavit; uti præclare conſtat eo libro nobili pa- " riter ac erudito qui Encyclopædia inſcribitur, & " de morali virtute Plutarchi plenior liber ſubtili & " copioſo commentario perſimilis oſtendit (4). - - - - - (4) P. Jovius, Elog. cap. 63. pag. 158.

" No one, among thoſe of great Birth, who have flouriſhed in our Times, - - - - - made a greater Figure " in the learned World, than Andrew Matthew Aqua- " viva; as is evident from his excellent and learned " Book, entitled Cyclopædia, and his larger Work, " not unlike a ſubtile and copious Commentary, con- " cerning Plutarch's Treatiſe of Moral Virtue." This ſeems to intimate a laborious Paraphraſe on this Work of Plutarch.

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, I have had an Opportunity of diſcovering, that Paul Jovius has expreſſed himſelf ill; for this is the Title of the Book of our Aquaviva, in the Edition of Naples 1526, in Folio. Commentarii in tranſlationem libelli Plutarchi Chæronei de Virtute Morali - - - - - liber primus. - - - -Commentaries on the Tranſlation of Plutarch of Chæronea's Treatiſe of Moral Virtue - - - Book the firſt. The Title of the German Edition, 1609, in 4to, is longer. Illuſtrium & exquiſitiſſimarum diſputationum libri quatuor. Quibus omnes divinæ & humanæ ſapientiæ, præſertim animi moderatricis Muſicæ atque Aſtrologiæ arcana in Plutarchi Chæronei de Virtuti Morali præceptionibus recondita ſummo ingenii acumine retecta pateſiunt, & figuris quæque ſuis illuſtrantur, &c. - - - - - Four Books of noble and moſt exquiſite Diſputations. In which all the Secrets of divine and human Knowledge, particularly of Muſic, which commands the Paſſions, and of Aſtrology, couched under the moral Precepts of Plutarch of Chæronea, are very ingeniouſly diſcovered, and diſtinctly explained. Neither Toppi, from whom I have borrowed this (5), nor Leonard Nicodemo make any mention of the Book, entituled Encyclopædia.

(5) Toppi Biblioth. Napolet. pag. 144

[C] He was highly praiſed and honoured by learned Men.] Alexander ab Alexandro dedicated his Dies Geniales to him. Pontanus dedicated to him his firſt Book de Rebus Cœleſtibus, and his Treatiſe de Magnanimitate. Sannazarius ingeniouſly celebrates him for having been (as was ſince ſaid of Mr de Montauzier) a Favourite of Pallas, whether under the Name of Minerva, or That of Bellona.

Favori de Pallas quelque nom qu'on lui donné,
Ou celui de Miverve, ou celui de Bellone.

See the laſt Elegy of the ſecond Book, towards the end, and the ſecond Epigram of the ſecond Book. As to the Forty fourth Epigram of the ſame Book, I queſtion, whether it be in praiſe of our Aquiviva, as the Author of the Annotations on Sannazarius (6) fancied; it is addreſſed ad Neritinorum Ducem, who, according to Paul Jovius, was Beliſarius Aquaviva, the Brother of Andrew Matthew. It ſeems to me likewiſe, that the firſt Elegy of the third Book has no relation to this latter, but to his Father Julius Aquaviva. See, in the Author, whom I quote, the Names of ſeveral Writers, who have celebrated our Andrew Matthew.

(6) Notæ in Sannaz. pag. 188.

(7) Nicodemo, Addiz. alla Bibl. Napolet. p. 11, 12.

[D] His Brother Beliſarius - - - - - became likewiſe an Author.] He compoſed a Treatiſe de Venatione, which he dedicated to his Brother John Matthew; another de Aucupio; another de Principum liberis educandis; another de Re Militari; and another de Singulari Certamine. Theſe Works, firſt printed at Naples, in Folio, in the Year 1519, were reprinted at Baſil, in 8vo, in the Year 1578, by the Care of Leonclavius, with the Manuel Palæologus of Royal Education.

AQUINAS, or AQUINIUS, (PHILIP), acquired a great Reputation by his Skill in the Hebrew Tongue, which he taught, at Paris, in the Reign of Lewis XIII; and by his Works, which he publiſhed [A]. He was originally of Aquino, in the Kingdom of Naples (a), and from thence derived his Name; but he was born in the County of Avignon. He was a Convert from the Jewiſh Religion, and had a Penſion (b) allowed him from the Clergy of France. He is mentioned in the Trial of the Marſhal d'Ancre [B]. Simeon de Muis has greatly commended him [C];

(a) I have only this from Hearſay.

(b) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Interpretation of the Tree of the Cabala.

[A] He acquired a great Reputation - - - - - by the Works, which he publiſhed.] The Catalogue of them is as follows; Dictionarium Hebræo-Chaldæo-Thalmudico-Rabbinicum, fol. printed at Paris in the Year 1629; The Roots of the Sacred Language, ad formam Cubi Hutteriani, at Paris, 1620, 16mo; A Tranſlation, in Italian, of The Apophthegms of the ancient Doctors of the Jewiſh Church, collected by Rabbi Simeon, Son of Gamaliel; The Expoſition of The thirteen Ways, which the ancient Rabbies made uſe of to explain the Pentateuch, (1). An Interpretation of the Tree of the Cabala, enriched with it's Figure, taken from the ancient Hebrew Authors, at Paris, at the Expence of the Author, 1620, in 8vo; A Diſcourſe of the Camp, and Tabernacle of the Iſraelites, at Paris, by Th. Blaiſe, 1625, in 4to; Literal, Allegorical, and Moral Explications of the Tabernacle, which God commanded Moſes to build; of the Prieſts Veſtments, and the manner how they conſulted the Rationale of the ancient Law, together with the Form of the Jewiſh Sacrifices; all curiouſly collected, and faithfully tranſlated from the moſt learned and ancient Hebrew Authors, with a Diſcourſe concerning the Camp of the Iſraelites; and a Deſcription of the Jewels of the High Prieſt's Breaſt-Plate, added at the end of the ſecond Edition, reviſed by the Author; at Paris, at the Author's Expence, 1624, in 4to; Becchinas Olam, or An Examination of Rabbi Jacob's World's Moral Sentences of the ancient Hebrews, and the thirteen Ways, which they made uſe of to interpret the Bible, in 8vo, at Paris, by John Lacquchay, 1629. Phil. Aquinatis Hebraicæ Linguæ Profeſſ. Lacrymæ in obitum Illuſtriſſ. Cardinalis de Berulle, Pariſiis, apud Joannem Beſſin, 1629, in 8vo.

(1) Printed at Paris in 1620. in 4to.

[B] He is mentioned in the Trial of the Marſhal d'Ancre.] This Fact is too ſingular to be omitted. " Item, It is proved, by Informations, as alſo by the " Depoſition of Philip Aquinas, formerly a Jew, but " now a Chriſtian, whom Conchini and his Wife had " ſent for to Moulins, where the ſaid Aquinas was at " the Lieutenant Criminal's Houſe (2), that Conchini " and

(2) Perhaps he was Tutor, there, to Gilbert Gaulmin, who confeſſes that he had been a Diſciple of Philip Aquinas; interim MS. librum, ſays he, ad libros de Vita & Morte Moſis, pag. 305. ex Philippi Aquinatis Præceptoris olim mei ΑΠΟΜΝΗΜΟΝΕΥΜΑΤΑ deſcripſimus.

Digitized by Google

him [C]; on the other hand, Valerian de Flavigni has ſpoken ill of him [D]. There was one LEWIS-HENRY AQUINAS, his Cotemporary, who was alſo well ſkilled in the Oriental Languages. I cannot tell, whether he was his Son, or his Brother (c). He tranſlated ſomething out of the Hebrew into the Latin (d) [E]. He had likewiſe been a Jew, and was afterwards a Penſioner of the Clergy. ANTONY AQUINAS, who had been First Phyſician to Lewis XIVth, was Grandſon of Philip.

(c) Mr Colomiès believes he was his Son.

(d) See Colomiès Galliæ Orient. pag. 254, 256.

" his Wife had made uſe of the Cabala, and the " Jewiſh Books. It being to be obſerved, what this " Aquinas had farther depoſed, viz. that Conchini, " in the Preſence of his Wife, had taken away a " Chamber-pot on account of it's Impurity, and " removed a Crucifix out of the Room, for fear it " ſhould hinder an Effect, which They, Conchini and " his Wife, expected from reading ſome Verſes " of the Fifty firſt Pſalm, Meſereri mei, in He- " brew: which Reading they cauſed to be per- " formed by Aquinas, in the ſame Manner as it " had been ſome times performed before them by " Montalto."

[C] Simeon de Muis has greatly commended him.] He expreſſes himſelf thus concerning a Verſe of the Thirty fifth Pſalm: " Cum hic hærerem dubius, " Philippus Aquinas è Judæo Chriſtianus, vir raræ " & exquiſitiſſimæ in Hebraicis literis doctrinæ, & " quem nunquam fruſtra conſulas, forte venit ad me " viſendi gratia, & venit quidem optatus. Ille ſtatim " atque de re communicavi, ut ſingulas Bibliorum " verſus imo & voces ſingulos in numerato habet, " ac tanquam digitos tenet, indicavit locum ex " Eſaiæ 66. ver. 13. - - - - - Being at a loſs for the " Senſe of this Paſſage, Philip Aquinas, a converted " Jew, a Man of uncommon and exquiſite Skill in " the Hebrew Tongue, and whom you can never con- " ſult in vain, came accidentally to pay me a Viſit, " and came opportunely to my wiſh. For no ſooner " had I communicated the Matter to him, but He, " who has every Verſe, and even every Word, of Scrip- " ture at his Fingers ends, referred me to Eſaiah " 66. ver. 13.

[D] Valerian de Flavigni - - - - - has ſpoken ill of him.] He was Profeſſor of Hebrew in the Royal College, at Paris. He ridiculed the Bible of Mr le Jai unmercifully, and maintained, that the Hebrew Text had been miſerably corrupted by Philip Aquinas. " Tot ac tantis conſpurcatum maculis atque " ſordibus, obſtetricantibus impuriſſimis manibus Phi- " lippi Aquinatis Avenionenſis ex Judæo Chriſtiani, " ut à planta pedis uſque ad verticem non ſit in " eo ſanitas (3). - - - - - - Defiled with ſo many and " great Blots and Filth by the impure Hands of " Philip Aquinas, of Avignon, a converted Jew, " that, from the Sole of the Foot to the Crown of " the Head, there is no whole Part in it."

(3) In Epiſt. de Heptaplis Pariſienſibus, apud Colomeſium Gall. Orien. pag. 256.

[E] He tranſlated ſomething out of Hebrew into Latin.] Read what follows: Commentarius Rabbi Levi filii Gerſonis in librum Jobi, ſeu in V. prima capita, interprete Ludovico Henrico Aquino Lutetiæ. —— A Commentary of Rabbi Levi, the Son of Gerſon, on the Book of Job, or on the five firſt Chapters, tranſlated by Lewis Henry Aquinas, of Paris. Paris, by Thomas Blaiſe, 1620, in 4to. Scholia Rabbi Salomonis Jarchi in librum Eſther: item excerpta quædam ex Talmudo & Jalcut in eundem librum, interprete Lud. Henr. Aquino. —— The Scholia of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi on the Book of Eſther; likewiſe Extracts from the Talmud and Jalcut on the ſame Book, tranſlated by Lewis Henry Aquinas. Paris, 1622, in 4to.

ARAGON (ALPHONSO, fifth of the Name, King of). See, under the Word NAPLES, Alphonſo, firſt of the Name, King of Naples.

ARAGON (JOAN of) the Wife of Aſcanio Colonna, Prince of Tagliocozzi, was the moſt Illuſtrious Lady of the XVIth Century. She was born at Naples, and deſcended from the Kings of Aragon. The Wits of thoſe Times celebrated her Praiſes after an extraordinary manner [A]. The Philoſopher Auguſtin Niphus was one

THE Poetical Deification of this Lady.

[A] The Wits of thoſe Times celebrated her Praiſes in an extraordinary manner.] I have not ſeen any Dictionary, in which the Article of this Lady is to be met with: It is a Sin of Omiſſion moſt worthy of Cenſure; for, perhaps, there never was a Man or Woman in the World, whoſe Merit has been celebrated by more fine Wits, or in more Languages, than That of Joan of Aragon, in the XVIth Century. The Poems, wrote in her Praiſe, were collected by Jerom Ruſcelli, and publiſhed at Venice, in 1555, under the Title of TEMPIO ALLA DIVINA SIGNORA DONNA GIOVANNI d'ARAGONA, fabricato da tutti i piu gentili Spiriti, & in tutte le lingue principali del mondo. —— A Temple to the Divine Lady Donna Joanna of Aragon, erected by the greateſt Wits, and in all the principal Languages of the World. The Poëtical Deification of this Lady was performed with Ceremonies, not unlike Thoſe made uſe of in the Canonization of Saints.. In the firſt Place, ſeveral great Wits, of their own meer Motion, determined to teſtify their Devotions to this Divinity, and to prepare her a Temple; afterwards, in the Year 1551, the Matter paſſed into a Decree in the Academy of the Dubbioſi, at Venice. After ſeveral Deliberations and Conſultations, on a Queſtion, which was ſtarted, to wit, whether this Temple ſhould be jointly dedicated to Donna Joanna of Aragon, and her Siſter, the Marchioneſs du Guaſt; the Decree imports, That, conſidering the Oppoſition anciently made by the Pontiffs to Marcellus's Deſign of building a Temple jointly to Honour and Virtue, the Marchioneſs du Guaſt could have no Part, nor Intereſt, in her Siſter's Temple; except by Means of ſome particular Interpretations. Not only the Poets, whoſe Verſes Ruſcelli has collected, but Himſelf likewiſe, in the Proſe of his Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Cardinal of Trent, and in his Preface, employs the Terms of Adoration and Divinity; it is true, he adds this Corrective, that the Adoration, paid to this Lady, was only relative, and terminated in the Supream Being, who had conferred ſo many Perfections upon her. Theſe are his Words. " Queſta conoſ- " cenza—— ha fatto queſti anni à dietro che conoſ- " cendoſi in univerſale & in particolare da ogni piu " raro giudicio i gran meriti, & il ſommo valore, " & la bellezza infinita di corpo & d'animo della Il- " luſtriſſima & Excellentiſſima Signora DONNA " GIOVANNA d'ARAGONA, ſi ſieno tutti " i piu begli ſpiriti di commune conſentimente po- " ſti à ſacrarle un Tempio, come à Donna intera- " mente divina, & la quale, come nobiliſſima fat- " tura & ſembianza del ſommo Iddio, meriti ve- " ramente d' eſſer con la lingua & col cuore adorata " per immenſo honore del fattor ſuo; potandoſi deg- " namente da ciaſcuno far guidicio, quanta ſia infinito " il ſapere, il potere, & l' amor verſo di noi di chi " coſi (alla capacita della mente noſtra) infinitamente " bella & perfetta & degna d' eſſer' adorata creatura " habbia potuto, ſaputo, & degnatoſi di voler fare in " queſta eta noſtra. —— This Knowledge —— has " been the Cauſe, of late Years, that, the great Me- " rit, Worth, and infinite Beauty, both of Body and " Mind, of the moſt Illuſtrious and moſt Excellent " DONNA JOANNA OF ARAGON, being " univerſally and particularly known to every one of " the leaſt Judgment, all the Men of Wit unani- " mouſly agreed to dedicate a Temple to her, as to a " Lady entirely Divine; and who, as being the moſt " noble Production and Reſemblance of the Supream " Being, deſerves to be adored with Tongue and Heart, " in honour of her great Creator; every one being ca- " pable of judging of the infinite Wiſdom, Power, and " Love

Digitized by Google

one of the forwardeſt in paying his Homage to her. He repreſented her as ſo wonderfully beautiful, and particularized the Perfections of her Body [B], in ſuch a manner, that ſome Authors have ſaid he flattered her [C], and that Love inſpired him with thoſe high Strains. It has been ſaid likewiſe, that his Quality of Phyſician gave him Privileges, which fired him with Love [D]. To me theſe Conjectures appear trifling

" Love of God towards us, in condeſcending to form " out of our own Species (within the Sphere of human " Capacity) ſo beautiful, perfect, and adorable a Crea- " ture, in this our Age." He tells us, in the Preface, that the Subſtance of his whole Collection imports, " Che queſta gran Donna, come perfettiſſima di corpo " & d' animo, & come particolariſſima fattura del " ſommo Iddio, meriti d' eſſere adorata ad honore " del fattor ſuo. Overo che chiaſcuno partitamente " l' offeriſce il ſuo voto, à là purita dell' affetto ſuo. " ——— That this great Lady, as being moſt per- " fect, both in Body and Mind, and the moſt ſingular " Production of the Supream Being, deſerves to be a- " dored in honour of her Creator; or, that every one " ought, in particular, to offer up his Vows to her, " according to the Purity of his Affection towards " her." The leaſt poetical, and the moſt unknown, Languages, were employed in erecting this Temple; as the Sclavonian, the Poliſh, the Hungarian, the Hebrew, and the Chaldaic; and, perhaps, Mr de Peireſc (1) was the only Perſon, in whoſe Favour a like, or a greater, Concourſe of Languages, had ever been employed.

(1) See Remark [C] of this Article.

[B] And particularized the Perfections of her Body.] Niphus dedicated his Treatiſe of Beauty to this Lady; and, to confute the ancient Philoſophers, who maintained, that there is no perfect Beauty in the Univerſe, he alledges, in his fifth Chapter, the Inſtance of Joan of Aragon. He enters into ſo minute a Detail, in drawing the Picture of this fair one, that, among the great Numbers of Deſcriptions, which the Romances of Mademoiſelle de Scudery brought in faſhion, thirty or forty Years ago (2), there is not one, we may venture to ſay, but falls ſhort of his. He is not ſatisfied with deſcribing the Beauties, which are viſible to every Eye, but paſſes to thoſe, quas ſinus abſcondit, and to the Proportions between the Thigh and Leg, and between the Leg and Arm. Ventre ſub pectore decenti, & latere cui ſecretiora correſpondeant. Amplis atque perrotundis coxendicibus, coxa ad tibiam & tibia ad brachium ſeſquialtera proportione ſe habente (3). In the beginning of this Treatiſe, there is a Letter of Cardinal Pompeius Colonna to Auguſtin Niphus, vouching for the incomparable Beauty, and other great Qualifications, of Joan of Aragon. Now, no one is ignorant, how far a Cardinal of Quality is a competent Judge, and even a Critic, in theſe Matters, quàm elegans formarum ſpectator ſiet. Theſe are the Words of his Letter. " Non Vulgo ſpe- " cioſiſſima quæque exponit natura: noſtro tamen ævo " parens officioſa ac liberalis, veluti divinitatis æmu- " la, ut perfectum admirandumque aliquid, Diiſque " immortalibus quam ſimillimum, gentibus proferret, " Joannam Aragoniam Columnam procreavit, atque " ab incunabulis ad hanc uſque ætatem, in qua eſt " florentiſſima per omnes pulchritudinis & venuſtatis " numeros, provexit, ut facile principem locum in- " ter formoſiſſimas vindicarit. Animum præterea ſin- " gularibus & dotibus & virtutibus inſignivit, &c. " ——— The finer Productions of Nature are rare, and " uncommon; yet this diligent and bountiful Mother " of all things, in Emulation, as it were, of Divi- " nity, and deſirous of producing a perfect and ad- " mirable Creature, and nearly reſembling the immor- " tal Gods, gave the World Joan of Aragon, of the " Family of Colonna, and added daily new Charms " to her, from Infancy to her preſent Years, in which " ſhe is a conſummate Beauty, and may juſtly claim " the Preference to all other the moſt beautiful Wo- " men. Nature, likewiſe, adorned her Mind with " ſingular Gifts and Virtues, &c."

(2) This is written in 1692.

(3) Niphus pag. 213. Opuſcul. Edit. Pariſ. 1645.

[C] Some Authors have ſaid, he flattered her.] Lewis Guyon cannot be perſuaded, that all the Beauties, which Auguſtin Niphus aſcribes to the Princeſs Joan of Aragon, of the illuſtrious Family of the Colonnas, were real: " But, ſays he (4), I fancy he was in " Love with her, and was drawn into it by having " ſeen, touched, and handled her, in ſeveral parts of her " ſick Body, as Phyſicians have a Privilege to do; " and that, ambitious of obtaining her good Graces, " he publiſhed the Book, which he dedicated to her; " nothing being more likely to gain, either on Wo- " man or Maid, than a Perſuaſion that their Beauty " has inſpired us with Love." After which he remarks, " that, if ſo, the Phyſician had forgotten " the Oath he had taken, upon receiving his De- " gree, which, among other things, enjoyned him, " not to luſt after the Maids, or Women, he ſhall " have under Cure." In the Table of Matters, he ſays poſitively, that Niphus fell in Love with the Princeſs Joan of Aragon, when ſhe was his Patient. This is going a little too far; he ought, at moſt, to have ſtopt at a Conjecture. I confeſs, Niphus, who was one of the beſt Philoſophers of the laſt Age, was of a very amorous Complexion; ſo far, that neither Age, nor the Gout, could break his Chains, which ſometimes made him act a very ſhameful Part, and even dance to the Sound of a Flute. Suſceptis liberis, & ſeneſcente uxore, ſeptuagenarius Senex puellæ citra libidinem impotenti amore correptus eſt uſque ad inſaniam, ita ut plerique Philoſophum Senem & podagricum ad tibiæ modos ſaltantem miſerabili cum pudore conſpexerint (5). I confeſs likewiſe, that, being in Love with a Lady of Honour, belonging to Joan of Aragon (6), he might have a near View of this fair Lady, and warm himſelf, at a ſmall Diſtance, by this great Fire; but it is not certain, that he forgot himſelf ſo far, as to raiſe his Thoughts ſo high. Beſides, as he did not practiſe Phyſic (7), tho' he had taken the Degree of Doctor, it is not probable, that he was Phyſician to this Princeſs; for Perſons of her Quality make uſe, in their Sickneſs, of an experienced, rather than a ſpeculative, Phyſician, who, like Niphus, applies himſelf chiefly to the Philoſophical Part; ſo that, upon the whole, I ſhould chuſe to ſay, that, Judgment not being his Talent, he took the Liberty to ſpeak of things he had never ſeen, and to repreſent them according to his own Ideas. What Lewis Guyon remarks, that this Princeſs was of the Family of the Colonnas, might be true on the Mother's Side; however, he has not expreſſed himſelf as he ought to have done. We have ſeen, that Cardinal Pompeius Colonna calls her Joannam Aragoniam Columnam; probably becauſe ſhe was married to Aſcanio Colonna. Perhaps Auguſtin Niphus might have been cenſured upon better Grounds, in relation to the Sixty eighth Chapter of his Treatiſe de Pulchro; where, having ſaid, that there was none, in thoſe Times, who deſerved the Name of Happy, but Joan of Aragon, ſince ſhe was poſſeſs'd of Both the Ingredients of Woman's Felicity, viz. Beauty and Chaſtity; he ſpeaks, immediately after, of Victoria Colonna, Marchioneſs of Peſcara, as a ſhining Example of the Union of Beauty and Chaſtity.

(4) Guyon, Diverſ. Leçons, Vol. 3. lib. 3. c. 12.

(5) Jovius Elog. c. 92.

(6) Naudæus, in Judicio de Aug. Nipho.

(7) Medicinam licet circitoris inſtar aut periodeutæ nunquam exercuerit, optimè tamen callebat. Id. ib.

NIPHUS cenſured.

[D] It has been ſaid, likewiſe, that his Quality of Phyſician gave him Privileges, which fired him with Love.] The Poets, and others, have long ſince made Reflexions on this Privilege of Phyſicians. Thus Ovid makes the Amorous Acontius ſpeak.

A REMARK on the Privileges of a Phyſician.

Me miſerum! quod non Medicorum juſſa miniſtro,
Aſtringoque manus, inſideoque thoro.
Et rurſus miſerum! quod me procul inde remoto,
Quem minime vellem, forſitan alter adeſt.
Ille manus iſtas aſtringit, & aſſidet ægræ,
Inviſus ſuperis, cum ſuperiſque mihi.
Dumque ſuo tentat ſalientem pollice venam,
Candida per cauſam brachia ſæpe tenet,
Contrectatque ſinus, & forſitan oſcula jungit,
Officio merces plenior iſta ſuo eſt *.

* Ovid. Heroid. Epiſt. 20. ver. 133.

Why ſit I not by your Bed-ſide all Day,
My mournful Head in your warm Boſom lay,
'Till with my Tears the inward Fires decay?
Why preſs I not your melting Hand in mine,
And from your Pulſe of my own Health divine?

Digitized by Google

trifling (a). It was not for her Beauty alone, that this Lady was ſo much admired; her Courage, her Prudence, and Capacity for great Affairs, diſtinguiſhed her extreamly from other Women of Quality (b). In the Pontificat of Paul the IVth, ſhe had a ſhare in the Reſolutions, taken by the Colonna's, againſt the Intereſts of That Pope. She would have been impriſoned, had it not been in regard to her Sex; but ſhe was only commanded not to ſtir out of Rome. However ſhe dextrouſly contrived to make her Eſcape (c) [E], that ſhe might be the better able to ſecond the Enterprizes of her Son, the Famous Marc Antony Colonna, who afterwards acquired ſo much Honour in the Battle of Lepanto. It does not appear, that ſhe was upon good Terms with her Huſband at that time; for ſhe was entirely in her Son's Intereſt: Now there was ſo great a Miſunderſtanding between the Father and Son [F], that the latter contributed to the Impriſonment of the former for Crimes of State. Unhappy, that a Lady, of ſo much Merit, ſhould be at variance with her Huſband. This is not ſo uncommon a Caſe, as it ought to be, among Perſons of her Sex, who are poſſeſſed of the greateſt Qualities. She ſhewed a great deal of Conſtancy, when ſhe loſt her Eldeſt Son, in 1551. What Aretin wrote to her, on that Occaſion, is mixed with the higheſt Commendations. See the Sixth Book of his Letters, Page fifth (a) See Remark [C].

(b) See Remark [E].

(c) In 1556. See the Life of the Duke of Alba, and the Remark [I].

But Oh! theſe Wiſhes are all vain, and He,
Whom moſt I fear, may now ſit cloſe by Thee,
Forgetful, as thou art, of Heav'n and Me.
He That lov'd Hand does preſs, and oft does feign
Some new Excuſe to feel thy beating Vein.
Then his bold Hand up to your Arm does ſlide,
And in your panting Breaſt itſelf does hide;
Kiſſes ſometimes he ſnatches too from thee,
For his officious Care too great a Fee.

Mr Duke.

Remi Belleau, in his Commentary on the ſecond Book of the Amours of Ronſard, ſays, that the Forty ſixth Sonnet was taken from this Epiſtle of Ovid. Theſe are the Words of Ronſard.

Ha! que je porte & de haine & d'envie
Au Medicin qui vient ſoir & matin
Sans nul propos taſtonner le tetin,
Le ſein, le ventre, & les flancs de m'amie.
Las! il n'eſt pas ſi ſoigneux de ma vie
Comme elle penſe, il eſt mechant & fin:
Cent fois le jour il la viſite, afin
De voir ſon ſein, qui d'aimer le convie.

Ah! how my jealous Heart, by turns,
With raging Hate, and Envy, burns,
'Gainſt Him, who pleads a Doctor's Right
To ſee my Miſtreſs, Morn and Night;
Who feels her ſnowy Breaſt, her Arm,
And handles every ſecret Charm.
Know you what makes the Doctor pay
An hundred Viſits in a Day;
'Tis not as you believe, my Fair,
To guard That precious Life with Care;
But, with a Lover's eager Eyes,
To ſee your Boſom fall and riſe.

But this Difference ought to be obſerved, that He, whom Acontius complains of, was contracted to the ſick Perſon. Without this, ſhe durſt not have confeſt, in her Anſwer to Acontius, that his Rival kiſſed her but ſeldom;

- - - - - - - Oſcula rara Accipit.

Brantome quotes this Sonnet of Ronſard, ſomewhere in his Memoirs, and ſays ſome good Things on the Occaſion.

[E] She was only commanded not to ſtir out of Rome. However, ſhe dextrouſly contrived to make her eſcape.] The Paſſage of Antony Maria Gratiani, which I am going to produce, contains, in expreſs Terms, the Proof which I want. "Joanna Arragonia, Marci Antonii mater, virilis audaciæ femina, quæ virorum quoque conſiliis apud filium habitis interfuerat, continere ſe domi, neque pedem inde efferre fuerat juſſa; id enim ſic indulſerat dignitati ejus pontifex, ne in carcerem duceretur. Ea cum rem ſpectare ad arma bellumque, & primum Pontificiorum impetum in oppida filii fore intelligeret, veſtibus mane ſummo commutatis, cum filia & nuru, corruptis aut deceptis portæ cuſtodibus, egreſſa Urbe, conſcenſis quos ad id præparaverat equis, protinus Neapolim aufugit. Pontifex, quanquam deceptum ſe deluſumque à femina graviter ferebat, acerbius tamen Hiſpanis, quorum ea conſiliis adminiſtrarentur, iraſcebatur (8). —— Joan of Aragon, Mother of Marc Antony, a Lady of manly Reſolution, and who was preſent at the Conſultations held at her Son's Houſe, was commanded to confine herſelf to her own Houſe; for the Pope, in regard to her Dignity, had remitted the Sentence of Impriſonment. This Lady, perceiving that all things tended to War, and being ſenſible that the firſt Attack of the Pontifical Forces would be upon the Towns in poſſeſſion of her Son, diſguiſed herſelf early one Morning, together with her Daughter, and Daughter-in-law; and, bribing, or deceiving the Keepers of the Gates, eſcaped out of the City; and, mounting Horſes, which ſhe had prepared for their Flight, eſcaped to Naples. The Pope, though vexed to be out-witted by a Woman, yet was more angry with the Spaniards, by whoſe Councils theſe Affairs were directed." It was on occaſion of this Eſcape, and ſome other Provocations, that the Pope was ſo much exaſperated againſt the Colonna's, that "he ſent a Monitory (9), "to Joan of Arragon, by which he forbad her to "marry any of her Daughters without his Conſent; "in default whereof, the Marriage, though after "Conſummation, ſhould be void (10)."

(8) Gratian. de Caſibus Virorum Illuſtrium, pag. 322.

(9) On the ſecond of January 1556.

(10) F. Paul's Hiſtory of the Council of Trent.

[F] There was ſo great a Miſunderſtanding between the Father and Son.] Cardinal Palavicini remarks, that Aſcanio Colonna had offered ſuch Violence to his Creditors, that the Procurator Fiſcal cited him, to give an Account of his Conduct. Aſcanio, not appearing, was condemned for Contumacy, and his Lands confiſcated. His Son Marc Antony, having been a long time at Variance with his Father, took this Opportunity to ſtrip him, by ſeizing on the confiſcated Eſtates, and driving off the Miniſters of Juſtice, a little before the Death of Pope Julius III. In ipſa rei confectione Marcus Antonius ejus filius, cui cum parente veteres & nunquam ſatis compoſitæ controverſiæ intercedebant, vim interpoſuit, eodemque tempore patrem oppidis ſpoliavit, ab iiſque iiſci miniſtros procul habuit (11). He quitted Rome contrary to the Prohibition of Paul IV. This Diſobedience, together with ſome former Diſturbances, obliged this Pope to publiſh Letters Monitory againſt the Father and Son. The Father excuſed himſelf, on his being detained a Priſoner at Naples, from having endeavoured to excite a Revolt there; the Son alledged, that he had ſequeſtered the Lands into the Hands of Mendoza, who could not be diſſeized of them, without the Emperor's Order. I am ſurprized, that Palavicini ſays nothing of Aſcanio Colonna's Wife: But ſince we know, from another Hand, that ſhe was engaged in her Son's Intrigues at Rome, and that the Son was at variance with his Father, we may ſafely ſuppoſe, that ſhe was not upon very good Terms with her Husband. Gratiani ſpeaks more poſitively of Marc Antony's ſcandalous Conduct towards his Father. "Ante omnes, ſays he (12), Colonniorum familia, "magna

(11) Pallavic. Hiſt. Concil. Trident. lib. 13. cap. 14. n. 9.

(12) Gratian. ubi ſupra, pag. 320.

Digitized by Google

fifth (d). She had a Siſter, who was very handſome even in her old Age, and who had a famous Daughter-in-Law [G].

(d) Of the Edition of Paris 1609.

Every Remark on This Lady's Article might be ſpun out to a greater Length. For which reaſon, I ſhall add, in this Edition, by way of Supplement to what I have already ſaid of her Deification (e), that, ſoon after the erecting of her Temple by the Care of Jerom Ruſcelli, a certain Gallant Author dedicated many Statues to it (e) In the Remark [A].

" magna in civitate pollenſque pro illo (Cæſare) ſta-
" bat, cujus princeps Marcus Antonius cum paulo an" te Aſcanium patrem, a quo hoſtili odio diffidebat,
" inſimulatum majeſtatis in cuſtodiam tradendum Nea-
" poli curaſſet, aliquot oppidis intra fines Romanæ
" Eccleſiæ haud longe ab Urbe imperitabat. —— " The great and powerful Family of the Colonna's de- " clared for Him, whoſe Head Marc Antony, having,
" not long before, procured his Father, with whom
" he was at irreconcileable Variance, to be impriſoned
" at Naples for Treaſon, was in poſſeſſion of ſome
" Towns within the Territories of the Roman Church,
" not far from the City."

[G] She had a Siſter, who was very handſome, even in her old Age, and who had a famous Daughter-in-law.] A Spaniſh Author ſpeaks of theſe three Ladies thus: " Que coſas no podrian dezirſe en laude y
" exaltation de la hermoſiſſima Duqueſa de Tallacoza,
" Donna Joana de Aragon, muger de Sangre Real,
" y en ſummo grado caſta, y buena? Y ainſi de
" Donna Maria ſu Hermana Marqueſa del Vaſto? Y
" de Donna Iſabel de Gonzaga, ſu nuera (13). —— (13) Joan. de Spinoſa, Dialog. in laudes de las Mugeres. fol. 98. verſo.
" What Praiſe may not be beſtowed on the moſt beau-
" tiful Ducheſs of Tallacoza, Donna Joanna of Ara-
" gon, a Lady of the Blood Royal, and chaſt and
" good to the higheſt Degree; likewiſe of Donna Ma-
" ria, Marchioneſs of Vaſto; and of Donna Iſabella
" de Gonzaga, her Daughter-in-law? Donna Ma- ria of Aragon, Siſter of Joanna, was Wife of Alphonſo d'Avalos, Marquis del Vaſto, one of Charles the Fifth's beſt Generals. Sorbiere calls her Marchioneſs of Vaſco, and ranks her among the learned Women (14). Brantome, who praiſed her highly, has placed her among the laſting Beauties; for, after having repeated the fine things, with which the Grand Prior of France entertained her in a numerous Aſſembly; That her Autumn ſurpaſſed all the Springs and Summers then in the Room, he adds, and indeed ſhe was ſtill fairer, and more deſireable, than either of her two Daughters, though both fair and young; and tho' ſhe was, then, near ſixty Years of Age (15). The Grand Prior (16), was immediately ſmitten with her; but, though he loved the Mother, yet he took her eldeſt Daughter for his Miſtreſs, por adombrar la coſa. —— By way of a Blind. After ſix Years, or more, Brantome, returning to Naples, found her but very little altered, and ſtill ſo fair, that he ſaid ſhe could hardly fail of occaſioning a mortal Sin to be committed, either in Thought, or Deed. She died at Chiaia, in the Houſe of Don Garcias de Toledo, the ninth of November, 1658 (17). I do not rememember to have obſerved, that he ever mentions her Siſter. It is true, he ſpeaks ſomewhere of the Wife of one Aſcanio Colonna, who paſſed for one of the greateſt Beauties of Italy, and whom Barbaroſſa endeavoured to carry off, in order to make a preſent of her to the Grand Signior; but he calls her la Signora Livia (18) Gonzaga (19). It is not the ſame, then, who is concerned in this Article; though the manner, in which Auguſtin Niphus has ſpoken of her Beauty, may create a Belief, that ſhe was not leſs likely, than the other, to prompt Barbaroſſa to ſuch an Attempt. Thuanus has mentioned this Mary of Aragon; he ſays, that the Iſland of Iſchia was chiefly remarkable for having been the place of this Lady's Retreat. " Dragutes
" —— Ænariam Inſulam Arce munitiſſima, quæ in" ter duas terras ſaxo impoſita eſt, ſed maxime Mariæ
" Arragoniæ Alfonſi Avali Vaſtii viduæ ſeceſſu no-
" bilem, petit (20). —— Dragutes ſeeks the Iſland
" of Iſchia, famous for it's ſtrong Citadel, built, be- " tween two Necks of Land, on a Rock, but chiefly
" for the Retreat of Mary of Aragon, Widow of Al-
" phonſo d'Avalos, Marquis of Vaſto." The ſame Jerom Ruſcelli, of whom I have ſpoken above, and who took ſo much pains to immortalize Joan of Aragon, was at a great Expence likewiſe in ſpreading the Praiſes of Mary. He was not ſatisfied with uſing the livelieſt Expreſſions, his Imagination could ſuggeſt, to ſet off the Perfections of this Lady, but collected all the Pieces of Poetry, in which ſhe had been celebrated by the fineſt Wits of the Times, and printed them at the end of his Commentary, on a Song of John Baptiſt d'Azzia, Marquis della Terza. This Song was written in praiſe of " (Illuſtriſſima & Ex-
" cellentiſſima Signora, la Signora Donna Maria d'Ara-
" gonna, Marcheſa del Vaſto).—The moſt Illuſtrious
" and moſt Excellent Lady, the Lady Donna Maria of
" Aragon, Marchioneſs of Vaſto." This Commentary of Ruſcelli was printed at Venice, in 1552, in 4to, by John Griffius, and contains Seventy three Leaves. The Marchioneſs is repreſented in it as the Archetype of Beauty, the Criterium Formæ; inſomuch that, (according to the Commentator) the true way of knowing, whether other Women are more beautiful, one than another, is to examine, whether they reſemble her more or leſs. " Secondo che in
" altre vedra le fattezze del volto & di tutto il corpo
" che habbian ſomiglianza, ò s'avicino poco ò molto
" à quelle di lei, coſi giudicare, che le Belleze di
" quelle tali, ſieno piu ò meno perfette, come del
" Paragon dell' oro habbiam detto. Et da tale eſ-
" ſempio, ò idea, ò piu toſto vero Archetipo qui in " terra della vera Bellezza corporale, formar poi le re-
" gole, le ragioni, le miſure, i gradi, & le propor-
" tioni della Bellezza intera & perfetta (21). —— (21) Ruſcelli, Lettura ſopra un Sonetto, &c. fol. 57.
" According as, in other Women, you ſee the correſpon-
" dent Lineaments of the Face and Body reſemble more
" or leſs the Beauties of this Lady, to judge from " thence, that ſuch Women are more or leſs fair; as " I have obſerved of this Paragon of Beauty. And
" from this Copy, or Idea, or rather true Archetype
" on Earth of corporeal Beauty, to form the Rules,
" Reaſons, Meaſures, Degrees, and Proportions, of
" entire and perfect Beauty." He makes her no leſs beautiful in Soul, than Body; and ſays, that Giraldi having had the Honour to ſee her, and hear her ſpeak, was ſtruck dumb for ſome time, not knowing whether ſhe was more deſireable for her Beauty, or adorable for her Wit. " Al coſpetto di queſta diviniſſima ſignora
" condotoſſi gia il Signor Giovan Battiſta Giraldi
" Cinthio, & contemplando attentiſſimamente l' una
" & l' altra Bellezza che à gli occhi del corpo, & à " qui della mente gli ſi rappreſentavano dalla vera
" Bellezza del volto, dalla ſplendor de gli occhi, dal-
" la ſoavita della favella, dalla leggiadria & maeſta
" del ſembiante, & dalla maraviglia de' modi & delle
" maniere veramente angeliche, ſtette lunga pezza
" tra ſe ſteſſi attonito, & ſtupefatto, & dalla ſomma
" Belleza del Corpo, che primieramente s' offeriva
" à gli occhi ſuoi, dovea toſto reſolverſi, che queſta
" foſſe da lui da amarſi ſopra ogn' altra coſa mortale.
" Poi paſſando ſubito col penſiero à quella dell' ani-
" mo, che gli ſi rappreſentava per quei modi & per
" quelle maniere gia dette, ſi mutava di opinione,
" & riſolveaſi, che quella ſola Bellezza dell' animo,
" doveſſe come coſa divina & celeſte, con intera hu-
" milta & divotione adorarſi (22). —— This Signior (22) Ruſcelli, ibid.
" John Baptiſta Giraldi Cinthio, being conducted to
" the ſight of this divine Lady, and attentively
" conſidering the Charms both of her Mind and
" Body, ſtood long aſtoniſhed at the true Beauty of " her Countenance, the Luſtre of her Eyes, the ſweet-
" neſs of her Voice, the Comelineſs and Majeſty of
" her Appearance, the Wonderfulneſs of her Manners,
" which were truly Angelical; and, from the great
" Beauty of her Body, which firſt ſtruck his Sight,
" immediately thought her worthy of his Love, be-
" beyond all other Women. Afterwards, paſſing in " thought to the Beauties of her Mind, which appear-
" ed to him in the manner we have already deſcribed,
" he changed his Opinion, and determined, that this
" Beauty of the Mind alone deſerved to be worſhipped
" with perfect Humility and Devotion, as divine and
" cæleſtial." —— Then follows the Madrigal, which he compoſed on this Problem.

(14) Sorbiere Lettre xv. pag. 73.

(15) Brantome, Dames Galantes, Tom. 2. pag. 243, 245.

(16) Francis of Lorrain, General of the Gallies, Son to Claude, firſt Duke of Guiſe. This Journey to Naples was taken in 1559.

(17) Tomaſo Coſto, Compendio dell' Iſtoria del Regno di Napoli. Part. 3. fol. 59.

(18) He ſhould have ſaid Julia; we ſhall ſpeak of her under the Article GONZAGA.

(19) Brantome, Dames Illuſtr. pag. 283.

(20) Thuan. Hiſt. ad Ann. 1552. pag. 222.

[H] A

Digitized by Google

it [H]. The Life of the Duke of Alba will furniſh me with ſome new Particulars relating to the Diſturbances, which obliged this Lady to fly from Rome, in the Year 1556 (f) [I]. She was then very old, according to the Duke of Alba's Hiſtorian. She muſt therefore have enjoyed a long Life; for She died in the Month of October, 1577 (g). In the Year 1575, She made a Preſent to the Capuchins of the Holy Sacrament of the Place, where the Monaſtery, which they had at Rome, was built (b). She was a Benefactreſs to the Jeſuits; for ſhe rebuilt the Church of St Andrew, which the Biſhop of Tivoli made them a preſent of in the Year 1566 (i). Hitherto I have ſaid nothing of her Genealogy; it is Time I ſhould obſerve, that ſhe was Daughter of Ferdinand of Aragon, Duke of Montalto [K], third Natural Son of Ferdinand I, King of Naples.

(f) See the Remarks [E] and [F].

(g) Tomaſo Coſto, Compendio dell' Iſtoria di Napoli, part 3. fol. 168.

(b) See la Ritratto di Roma Moderna, 541, Edit. of Rome 1653.

(i) Ibid. pag. 540.

[H] A gallant Author dedicated many Statues to it] He was Joſeph Betuſſi. He publiſhed, at Florence, in 1566, a Dialogue, entituled, Le Imagini del Tempio della Signora Donna Giovanna Aragona. —— Statues of the Temple of the Lady Donna Joanna of Aragon. The Book conſiſts of an Hundred and twenty one Pages; in which the Praiſes of ſeveral of the fair Sex are artfully intermixed with thoſe of the Goddeſs of the Temple.

[I] New Particulars relating to the Diſturbances, which obliged this Lady to fly from Rome, in the Year 1556.] The following is an Abſtract from the Hiſtory of the Duke of Alba, printed in Latin, at Salamanca, in 1669, and in French, at Paris, in 1699. "Joanna of Aragon, Mother of Marc Antony "Colonna, ſtaid behind at Rome, ; and the Caraffa's, "who kept her always in Sight, detained her, if I "may ſo ſay, as an Hoſtage. As the Truce, in "ſome meaſure, removed their Suſpicions, and the "Roads were open, the Ducheſs went out of Rome, "with her two Daughters, on Foot, pretending ſhe "was going to divert herſelf in a Vineyard, at ſome "Diſtance from the Ramparts. Though ſhe was now "very aged, ſhe continued walking, 'till ſhe was out "of ſight of the Centinels, who kept the Gates; "after which ſhe got on Horſe-back, and mounted "her two Daughters behind two Cavaliers. With "this Equipage, unworthy of her, but very agreeable to her preſent Fortune, ſhe fled away to the "Camp. The Duke of Alba received her with in-"expreſſible Joy. As the great Age of this Lady "could give no room for Suſpicion, he embraced "her; but contented himſelf with ſaluting her two "Daughters, who uncovered themſelves out of Re-"ſpect. I fancy, ſays he, addreſſing himſelf inſtantly to her, that I ſee the famous Clelia, who fled, "not from the Enemies Camp in her own City, in-"fluenced by the ſole Love, of her Country, but from "the City in the Camp, induced to this Flight by the "force of maternal Affection. The Ducheſs was "charmed with the Generoſity of the Spaniſh Gene-"ral, and expreſs'd her Senſe of it by a thouſand "thanks; however, ſhe could not reſolve to continue "in the Camp; the Age of her Daughters not permitting her. The Duke conſented to it; and "ſhe retired into Campania, accompanied by her "Son, and eſcorted by a Party of Horſe, which "the Vice-Roy aſſigned her, out of Reſpect, not ne-"ceſſity (23).

(24) Life of the Duke of Alba, Book 4. chap. 19. pag. 381.

We muſt ſay a Word or two of the Misfortunes of her Husband. "He was a Priſoner in the Caſtle of "Naples, accuſed by his own Son of Hereſy, and a "Conſpiracy againſt his Catholic Majeſty (24); and "when the Duke of Alba arrived at Naples, in the "Year 1556, he viſited him in Priſon (25), and heard "all he had to ſay. —— He comforted the good "old Man as much as poſſible, and aſſigned him the "Caſtle for his Priſon; whereas before he had been "confined to a very ſtrait Tower. He relieved the "Diſtreſs, to which he was reduced, not only by "giving him Money, but by appointing him an "handſome Penſion out of his Son's Eſtate. —— "However he did not give him his Liberty; the "Accuſations againſt him were ſupported by too "many Probabilities; and many People thought them "too well grounded. Beſides he would have diſobliged Philip, who kept Aſcanio in Priſon the "remainder of his Days, without, however, depriving him of thoſe Advantages, which the Duke "had had the Goodneſs to grant him."

(24) Ibid. pag. 341.

(25) Ibid. pag. 342.

The Hiſtorian remarks, that this Affair (26) was never thoroughly examined into; and he blames Noel le Compte, who accuſes the Duke of Alba of having rigorouſly treated the Father of Marc Antony Colonna.

(26) The Accuſation of Aſcanio Colonna.

[K] She was Daughter of Ferdinand of Aragon, Duke of Montalto.] Antony, his Son, ſucceeded him in the Duchy of Montalto, and eſpouſed Hippolita of Rovera, and afterwards Antoinette of Cardona, and was the Father of another Antony. This latter, fourth Duke of Montalto, was married to Maria de la Cerda, Daughter to the Duke de Medina Celi, and afterwards to M. Louiſa de Luna. He had ſeveral Children, who all died young, except one Daughter, named Maria, who was Heireſs of the Duchy of Montalto, and married, in Sicily, to Don Francis de Moncade, Prince of Paterno (27).

(27) Taken from a Memoir communicated by Minutoli.

ARAGON (Isabella of) Daughter of Alphonſo, Duke of Calabria, Son of Ferdinand King of Naples, was the Wife of John Galeazzo Sforza, Duke of Milan. This Duke, before his Marriage, was under the Tuition of his Uncle Lewis Sforza; nor was he leſs ſo, after he had been married, with great Magnificence [A], to Iſabella of Aragon, in 1489 (a). The Counſels of this Princeſs, who was as Ambitious as Fair, encouraged him to let the World ſee he was reſolved fully to enjoy all his Rights (b); but he had a ſtrong Party to deal with. The Protector was the moſt intriguing Man in the World, and the beſt able to ſupport himſelf againſt the juſt Pretenſions of his Nephew. He had fallen in Love with the Princeſs Iſabella at firſt ſight; and, as ſhe had been married to John Galeazzo only by Proxy, he did not deſpair of marrying her himſelf, in excluſion of his Nephew. He diſcovered his Deſign to the Princeſs; aſſuring her, that ſhe might more certainly depend upon Commanding, if ſhe married him, than if ſhe was the Wife of John Galeazzo, his Nephew. This Propoſal was rejected with ſcorn. The Protector was not diſcouraged; but ordered Matters ſo, that his Nephew could not conſummate his Marriage; and

(a) Corio, Hiſtor. di Milano, parte 6. pag. 879. Edit. 1646. in 4*to*.

(b) Varillas, Hiſt of Char. VIII. lib. 2. pag. 157.

[A] After he had been married ------ with great Magnificence.] Read Triſtan Chalchus, an Author of thoſe Times (1), in Nuptiarum Mediolanenſium deſcriptione. Father Menetrier quotes a very long Paſſage from him, which contains a Deſcription of the magnificent Supper, which Bergonça Botta, a Gentleman of Lombardy, gave to Duke Galeazzo and his new married Ducheſs, when he entertained them at his Houſe at Tortona. "Each Ser-"vice was uſhered in with a kind of an Opera, "which Novelty at that Time rendered agreeable, "rather than the Graces, which have been ſince "added to theſe Muſical Entertainments (2)."

(1) Konig is greatly miſtaken, in making him live in 1672.

(2) Menetrier, Repreſentat. en Muſique, pag. 160. & ſeq.

[B] His

Digitized by Google

and to effect this, as was commonly said, had recourse to some Magic Ligature [B]. In the mean time, he caused his own Marriage with Isabella to be negotiated at the Court of Naples. Ferdinand seemed inclined to grant his Request; but the Duke of Calabria would never consent to it (c). So that Lewis Sforza was obliged to deliver up the Prey to John Galeazzo; but he was resolved to be revenged, and destined Isabella of Aragon to be his Principal Victim. He denied her several things, which flattered either her Taste, or her Diversion (d), and married a Princess, who thwarted her in every thing. The Young Isabella underwent so many Vexations in this Conflict, and kind of Civil War, which is well worth the pains of describing [C], that she sent her Father and Grandfather Word, that, if they did not release her out of this miserable Condition, she should attempt her own Life (e). These Princes were not in a Condition to bring Lewis Sforza to Reason, who was instrumental in drawing the French into Italy; which overwhelmed the whole House of Aragon, which then reigned in Naples. He carried his Villiany so far, as to murthur his Nephew (f) [D]. It is in vain

(c) Varillas, History of Char. VIII. lib. 3. pag. 210, 211.

(d) Ibid. lib. 2. pag. 157.

(e) See Remark [C].

(f) Conjuge Joanne Galeacio orbata est, eo quidem luctuosius ac miserius, quod is veneficio sublatus crederetur. - - - She was deprived of her Husband John Galeazzo, in a manner so much the more afflicting and unhappy, as he was thought to have been taken off by Poison. Jovius Elogior. lib. 5. pag. 422.

[B] His Nephew could not consummate his Marriage - - - - - to effect which he is said to have had recourse to some Magic Ligature] Guicciardin affirms, that there was such a Report, and that all Italy was persuaded of it: "E manifesto che quando "Isabella figlivola d' Alfonso andò a congiugnersi col "marito, Lodovico come la vidde, innamorato di "lei, desidero ottenerla per moglie dal padre: e a "questo effetto opero (così fu allhora creduto per "tutta Italia) con incantamenti, e con malie, che "Giovan Galeazzo fu per molta mesi impotente "alla consummatione del matrimonio: alla qual "cosa Ferdinando harebbe acconsentito, ma Alfonso "repugno, onde Lodovico escluso di questa speranza, "presa altra moglie & havutone figlivoli, volto tutti, "i pensieri a trasferire in quegli il Ducato di Mi-"lan (3). - - - - - It is certain, that, when Isabella, "the Daughter of Alphonso, went to meet her Husband, Lewis, seeing her, fell in love with her, "and desired her of her Father for himself; to which "end, as it was then generally believed all over Italy, he so contrived it, by Enchantments and "Witchcraft, that John Galeazzo was for many "Months incapable of consummating his Marriage; "upon which account Ferdinand would have consented, "but Alphonso refused; whence it was, that Lewis, "being disappointed, and having married another Lady, and had Children by her, employed all his "Thoughts to transfer the Duchy of Milan to Them." Mr Varillas, as far as I can perceive, does not touch upon this Particular; he only says, that Lewis Sforza hindered the Consummation of this Marriage for three Months (4). He proves clearly enough, that the Reason was, because the Parties were kept from each other; for he says (5), that the Father of the Bride thought himself obliged in Honour - - - - - not to suffer Lewis Sforza to keep the new married Couple any longer asunder. That he threatened to complain of it to all Europe, and to arm in revenge of his Quarrel. This was a strange Piece of Malice, and an insufferable Act of Violence in the Protector.

(3) Guicciard. lib. 1. pag. 15.

(4) Varillas, History of Lewis XIII. book 1. p. 47.

(5) Ibid. lib. 3. pag. 211.

[C] A kind of Civil War, which is well worth the Pains of describing.] As Varillas seems to have succeeded very well in his Description of this Matter, I believe I shall oblige the Reader with a curious Fragment, by inserting his very Words in this Place. It is a Piece so much the more necessary to this Article, as it serves to discover the Humour, Spirit, and internal Qualities of Isabella of Aragon. "Lewis "Sforza gave up Isabella to his Nephew ——— "and, to give her a Rival, who should controul "her on every Occasion, he addressed himself to "the Princess Alphonsina, Daughter of Hercules "d' Este, Duke of Ferrara. Alphonsina resembled "Isabella in all things, except in Beauty. Both "were conceited of their Births, and both without "Reason; since they had nothing to reproach each "other with on that Score, and since there was "Bastardy in the Genealogies of both *. They were "both haughty to excess; and their Pride was owing to a most refined Ambition. They were both "Chaste, more from a Principle of Pride, than Constitution. Isabella resolved to marry, and Alphonsina aspired to it, rather to partake of their Husband's Power, than their Beds. Both were Luxurious; and, though both had been educated in Families, in which nothing recommended itself so much as Parsimony, yet they were naturally Prodigal, and their Inclinations led them to all possible Expences. The Duke of Ferrara did not deliberate a Moment, whether he should give Alphonsina to Lewis Sforza. He had no Dower to give her; and there was Reason to hope she might one Day be Duchess of Milan. She was therefore sent away immediately to Lewis Sforza, who had two Sons successively by her. This Fruitfulness made her insult Isabella, who had been delivered a second time only of a Daughter; But Jealousy had before sowed Discord between them. Alphonsina could not bear the Praises bestowed on Isabella's Beauty; she looked upon them as a Reproach to her own Homeliness; nor could Isabella see with Patience the extrordinary Honours paid Alphonsina, as believing they were due only to herself. They both lived in the same Palace, and eat constantly together. They had new Opportunities every Day of encreasing their Aversion; and the Courtiers furnished the greatest Part of them. They paid diligent Court to Alphonsina; because her Husband distributed all the Favours; and attended in Isabella's Apartment for meer Form's Sake. She was perfectly distracted at it, and it was this Solitude, no less than the short Allowance for her Court, which made her write to her Father, and Grandfather, that she would make an Attempt upon her own Life, if they did not not deliver her from this Captivity. On the other hand, Alphonsina was so tired of Isabella, that, to get rid of her, she sollicited her Husband to make her a Duchess, as he had promised, and add the Quality of Duke of Milan to That of Administrator of the Duchy (6). Varillas had said, in this very History (7), that Isabella had "written to the Duke of Calabria her Father, and "to the King of Naples, her Grandfather, certain "Letters, the greater Part of which are still extant (8); in which she complained of her Unhappiness, in the most pathetic Terms then in use; "she described it in such lively Colours, as would "have made the hardest Heart relent; she told them "she had made herself a Slave, purely in Obedience "to their Commands; and she threatned to destroy "herself with her own Hands, if she was not immediately set at Liberty.

(6) Varillas, History of Char. VIII. book 3. pag. 211.

(7) Pag. 158.

(8) He cites in the Margin, L'Histoire de Bernardin Corio.

[D] He carried his Villany so far, as to murthur his Nephew.] I shall again make use of the very Words of Varillas. Thus he speaks, under the One thousand Four hundred and Ninety fourth Year, after having conducted his King as far Pavia. "Lewis "Sforza, being persuaded, that it was time to make "away with Duke John Galeazzo, his Nephew, "caused, they say, one of those lingering Doses of "Poison to be given him, which produce Symptoms of a Consumption and wasting in the Body; "in order to confirm a Report, which was spread "about at that time, that this Prince's Illness proceeded from the too strong Incitements of his "Wife's Beauty. The Physicians had given him "over, when the King, passing by Pavia, where "he lay sick, could not dispense with paying him "a Visit. His Majesty did not speak to him concerning any Business; because Lewis Sforza had "earnestly desired to be present at the Interview, "which they durst not refuse him: He only expressed his Sorrow to see his Cousin German * "in so weak a Condition, and endeavoured to "flatter him with some Hopes of Recovery; but "John Galeazzo, who found himself a dying, and

* Berso d' Este, Great-Great Grandfather by the Father's side, to Alphonsina; and Ferdinand Grandfather by the Father's side to Isabella, were both Bastards.

* They were two Sons of two Sisters, Princesses of Savoy.

Digitized by Google

vain to pretend, that John Galeazzo died of over-careſſing his Wife [E]; the Tradition, which imputes his Death to his Uncle's Ambition, has prevailed. After the French had taken Milan, the Princeſs Iſabella retired to Naples, and appeared the moſt afflicted of all the Princeſſes her Relations, who were in great Numbers in the Iſland of Iſchia, when King Frederic was obliged to ſurrender at Diſcretion to Lewis the XIIth, in the Year 1501 (g). She ſpent a long time in exchanging one Mourning for another; for, in the ſpace of a few Years, ſhe loſt her Grandfather, Huſband, Father, Brother, Uncle, and Son [F]. The only Conſolation left her was to ſee her Perſecutor Lewis Sforza expiate his Crimes, in France, by an hard Captivity, which ended but with his Life. She had yet another Conſolation, which affected her perhaps more than the former; which was to ſee her only Daughter, Bonna Sforza, married to Sigiſmond, King of Poland; She retired to a Town in the Kingdom of Naples, which had been aſſigned her for her Dower (h), where ſhe lived in ſuch a manner, as ſhewed, that Adverſe Fortune had not ſunk That Air of Royal Grandeur, in which ſhe had been Educated. She died of a Dropſy; but had time enough to take a Journey of Devotion to Rome, in the Pontificat of Leo the Xth. She walked on foot to the Vatican, followed by a great Number of Ladies, dreſſed like Brides. The whole Town ran to ſee this Sight (i). It were to be wiſhed, for her Memory's ſake, that we could finiſh her Article here, without an Appendix much to her diſadvantage; but we are not Maſters of theſe Things. Her very Panegyriſts have made uſe of the Concluſion we are about to make. This Lady, who, in the Bloom of her Youth, had been ſo famed for Virtue, gave an handle to Slander in the Decline of her Age, and admitted the Gallantries of Proſper Colonna, with (g) Gratian. de Caſibus Viror. Illuſtrium, pag. 41.

(h) Beri g See the laſt Remark.

(i) Jovius, Elog. p. 422.

" and did not doubt but it was owing to the " Wickedneſs of his Uncle, laid hold of this Con- " juncture. He conſidered not himſelf; but, calling " to mind his Son and Daughter, he recommended " them to the King with a flood of Tears; plainly " importing, that, if his Majeſty did not take par- " ticular care of them, he foreſaw they would be " poiſoned as well as himſelf. To conclude the " Tragedy, the Ducheſs, his Wife, caſt herſelf at " the King's Feet, as the Italian Authors ſay, who " are more to be credited in this, than Philip de " Commines, who will have it to be at the Feet " of Lewis Sforza. She was too high ſpirited to " act ſuch a Part; and, could ſhe have conquered " her Pride, ſhe was but too well convinced, that " her Submiſſion would be all in vain. She did " not mention her Children, becauſe ſhe ſuppoſed " her Husbands Tears would be effectual in that " Point: She reſerved her's for her Father; and " the King made her no other Anſwer, than that " the Expedition of Naples was too far advanced, " to be left unfiniſhed (9)."

(k) Varillas, ubi ſupra, pag. 253.

[E] It is in vain to pretend, that John Galeazzo died of over careſſing his Wife.] Guicciardin affirms, that this was reported; but gives it as the general Opinion of Italy, that this Prince died of Poiſon, which Lewis Sforza had given him. " Fu publicato " da molti la morte di Giouan Galeazzo eſſere pro- " ceduta da coito immoderato, non dimeno ſi cre- " dette univerſalmente per tutta Italia, che e' fuſſe " morto non per infermita naturale ne per incon- " tinentia, ma di veleno: e Teodoro da Pavia uno " de' Medici Regii, il quale era preſente quando " Carlo lo viſito, affermo haverne veduto ſegni ma- " niſeſtiſſimi. Ne fu alcuno, che dubitaſſe che ſe " era ſtato veleno, non gli fuſſe ſtato dato per opera " del zio (10). ------ It was reported by many, " that the Death of John Galeazzo proceeded from " immoderate Coition; nevertheleſs it was univerſally " believed by all Italy, that he died, not of any " natural Infirmity, or of Incontineney, but of Poi- " ſon; and Theodore of Pavia, one of the King's " Phyſicians, who was preſent, when Charles viſited " him, affirmed, that he had diſcovered manifeſt " Symptoms of it. Nor did any one doubt, that, if " there was Poiſon in the Caſe, it was given him " by the Contrivance of his Uncle," Jovian Pontanus affirms, that People talked publickly of this abominable Crime of Lewis Sforza. " Ludovicum " Sforciam, qui pubeſcentem primo, dein adoleſ- " centem jam ætatem Joannis Galeatii fratris filii " Mediolanenſis Ducis procuratione haſtenus ac pa- " trocinio tutatus eſt ſuo, veneno illum e medio " ſuſtuliſſe cives, advenæ, peregrini paſſim atque " impune omnes prædicant ------ Fora, porticus, " plateæ, circulique infimorum cujuſque generis ho- " minum nefandi criminis accuſationibus ----- im- " precationibus etiam maxime diris plena undique " circumſonant (11). ------ Citizens, Foreigners, " and Travellers, cry out every, and with Impunity, " that Lewis Sforza had poiſoned his Nephew John " Galeazzo, Duke of Milan, who had been educated " from his Youth under his Care and Protection. ---- " The Market-places, Portico's, Streets, and Aſſem- " blies of People of the loweſt Rank, reſound with " Accuſations of this wicked Action, and the moſt " dreadful Imprecations on it's Author." A Crowd of Hiſtorians concur in this, as Bernardin Corio (12), Peter Bembo (13), Vianoli (14), &c.

(10) Guicciard. lib. 1. pag. 27. ad Ann. 1494.

(11) Jovian. Pontan. de Prudentia, lib. 4. init.

(12) Corio, Hiſtor. Mediolan. Part. 7.

(13) Petr. Bembus, Hiſt. Venet. lib. 2. fol. 30.

(14) Vianoli Hiſtor. Veneta Part. 2. pag. 20.

[F] In the Space of a few Years, ſhe loſt her Grandfather, Husband, Father, Brother, Uncle, and Son] Paulus Jovius (15) deſcribes this Series of Misfortunes with great Eloquence, but does not always obſerve Order; for he has placed the Death of the Husband, before That of the Grandfather. As to the Son of our Princeſs, he ſays, that the French took him away from his Mother, and carried him into France, to make a Monk of him, and that he died of a fall from an Horſe. " In venatione " currentis equi lapſu in Heduis exanimatus eſſe " nunciaretur. Hunc enim vel invita depoſcentibus " Gallis tradiderat, à quibus cucullati ſacerdotis ha- " bitu in opulenti ſacerdotii cœnobium idcirco con- " jectus fuerat, ne Sforziani Regni legitimæ prolis " hæres ſupereſſet." Bernardin Corio gives us a very moving Deſcription of the Sorrow of this Princeſs, when, all at once, ſhe ſaw her Husband carried to his Grave, her Son excluded from the Duchy of Milan, and the Wife of Lewis Sforza on the Throne. " Li ſuoi fautori cridando duca, viſito " (Ludovico) il templo di Divo Ambroſio, e le cam- " pane in ſegno de letitia fece ſonare, il morto cor- " po di Giovanne Galeazo anchora eſſendo nel Do- " mo ſcoperto, e quaſi univerſalmente da tutti " pianto e condoluto il miſerando e pietoſo caſo. " Iſabella ſua mugliere a Pavia con li poveri fig- " lioletti veſtiti de lugubre veſtimenti, come pre- " gionera ſi recluſe entro una camera, e gran tem- " po ſtette giacendo ſopra la dura terra, che non " vide aëre. Doverebbe penſare ogni lettore l'acerbo " caſo de la ſconſolata Duciſſa, e ſe piu duro il cuore " haveſſe che diamante, piangerebbe a conſiderare " qual doglia dovea eſſere quella de la ſciagurata e " infelice mugliere, in uno punto vedere la morte " del giovenetto e belliſſimo conſorte, la perdita de " tutto lo imperio ſuo, e li figlioletti a canto orbati " de ogni bene, il patre e fratello con la caſa ſua " expulſi dal Neapolitano Reame, e Ludovico Sforza " con Beatrice ſua mugliere uel modo dimoſtrato " havergli occupata la ſignoria. ——— Thoſe of his " Party ſaluting him Duke, he viſited the Temple " of St Ambroſe, and ſet the Bells a ringing for " Joy; the dead Body of John Galeazzo being yet " in the Houſe uncovered, and his unfortunate End " univerſally

(15) Jovius, Elog. lib. 5. pag. 422.

Digitized by Google

with very little regard to her Reputation [G]. Her Daughter, the Queen Dowager of Poland, having retired to the ſame place, in the Kingdom of Naples, followed there the Example of her Mother [H]. So true it is, that Love is the ordinary and almoſt unavoidable Rock of the Honour and Merit of Women, who have converſed much in the grand monde. Sooner or later they ſplit upon it. Serius ocius ſors exitura. Our Iſabella died the eleventh of February, 1524, as is remarked in her Epitaph, reported by Mr Miſſon, in the ſecond Volume (k) of his Travels into Italy.

(k) Pag. 41. 3*d Edition.*

" univerſally lamented. Iſabella, his Wife, with her " poor Children, dreſſed in Mourning, ſhut herſelf up " at Pavia, in a dark Chamber, and lay a long Time " proſtrate on the hard Ground. Every Reader will " imagine the melancholy Condition of the diſconſolate " Ducheſs; and, though his Heart be harder than " Adamant, muſt relent, when he conſiders what " muſt have been the Grief of this unhappy Lady; " to behold, at one Inſtant, the Death of her young " and beautiful Conſort; the Loſs of all her Power, " and her little Sons, at her Side, deprived of all " their Eſtate; her Father and Brother, with all " her Family, expelled the Kingdom of Naples; and " Lewis Sforza, with Beatrice, his Wife, poſſeſſed, " in the above-mentioned Manner, of the Dukedom."

[G] She gave a handle to Slander in the decline of her Age, and admitted the Gallantries of Proſper Colonna, with very little regard to her Reputation.] Paul Jovius informs us of this, in the Elogy he made on this Princeſs: " Ceterum in hac eximiæ " virtutis fœmina improbæ plebis rumor non medio- " criter pudoris decus perſtrinxit, ob id gravior, " quod cum florente ætate impenetrabilem pudici- " tiam prætuliſſet, in ipſo demum ætatis flexu Proſ- " perum Columnam ſibi cultum, & officium aſſidue " tribuentem, ſæpeque procacem ad urbaniores jocos " admitteret (16). —— Yet even this Lady of exemplary Virtue ſuffered her Reputation to be not a little ſullied by common Fame; and the more ſo, as ſhe, who in her Youth had preſerved an inviolable Chaſtity, in the decline of her Age, admitted the Addreſſes of Proſper Colonna, and often admitted him to jeſt and toy with her."

(16) Jovius, Elog. p. 424.

[H] The Queen Dowager of Poland ------ followed the Example of her Mother.] Thuanus reflects more upon the Daughter, than Paul Jovius does upon the Mother; every one may judge of this by comparing the Paſſages. " Eodem tempore Bona " Sforzia Sigiſmundi Auguſti Poloniæ regis parens " - - - -filii pertæſa, Sarmatia relicta, in Italiam " venit, & honorifice Venetiis excepta eſt ----- " unde paratam triremem conſcendens in Apuliam " ad Barium navigavit, cujus urbis poſſeſſio gentili- " tio Arragoniæ gentis jure dotale & hæreditarium " illi erat. Ibi ſolute & diſſentiente a priore vita " ratione poſtea vixit, conſuetudine cujuſdem Papa- " caudæ non ſatis honeſte uſa, cui & omnia bona " teſtamento præteritis liberis reliquit, & fama ac " bonis decoctis haud multo poſt in ſumma egeſtate " & infamia deceſſit (17). ----- At the ſame time " Bona Sforza, Mother of Sigiſmund Auguſtus, King " of Poland, being tired of her Son, left Sarmatia, " and came into Italy, where ſhe was honourably re- " ceived at Venice ------ whence, going on board " a three-oared Veſſel, prepared for her, ſhe ſailed " to Bari, of which Town ſhe was in Poſſeſſion, as " being her Dower, in right of the Houſe of Aragon (18). There ſhe lead a diſſolute Life, contrary to what ſhe had 'till then done, carrying " on a criminal Correſpondence with a young Gallant, " to whom, in excluſion of her Children, ſhe left all " her Effects by Will; and, having ruined her Reputation and Eſtate, died in extream Poverty and " Infamy." This is what Thuanus ſays of the Queen Dowager of Poland. Can any thing be added to this Elogy?

(17) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 16. ad Annum 1555. p. 326.

(18) Mr Varillas, in the Life of Lewis XIII. l. 1. p. 47. ſays, that Lewis Sforza, finding himſelf conſtrained to quit the Dutchy of Milan, made over to the Ducheſs Iſabella the Dutchy of Bari, and the Principality of Roſſano, which had been given him in Recompence for having reeſtabliſhed the Houſe of Aragon on the Throne of Naples.

ARAGON (MARY of) Wife of the Emperor Otho the Third, and Daughter of a King of Aragon, became infamous for her Lewdneſs; which at laſt brought her to the Puniſhment of the Fire. She artfully diſguiſed a young Fellow, whom ſhe was in love with, in Woman's Apparel, and made him paſs for her Chamber-maid (a). We need not aſk, whether ſhe uſed any Moderation; her Temper, and perpetual Opportunities, give us ſufficiently to underſtand, that her pretended Chamber-Maid wanted no Employ, and that ſhe made one in all the Progreſſes, which the Court took. The Emperor, having diſcovered this abominable Cheat, was reſolved the Empreſs ſhould have her full ſhare of the Shame; and, for that Purpoſe, cauſed the Young Man to be ſtripped in the Preſence of a great many Witneſſes, and, upon the flagrant Diſcovery of his Sex, condemned him to be burnt. He was gracious enough not to puniſh his Wife, and hoped ſhe would behave her ſelf better for the future; but he was miſtaken. She fell deſperately in Love with a young Count near Modena, and ſoon declared her Paſſion to him; for ſhe was in a much properer Station no ſollicit, than be ſollicited, in Affairs of this kind. The Count, as Chaſte, as he was Beautiful, reſiſted all the Advances, or, to ſay better, all the violent Attacks made upon him; but, if, in this, he imitated Joſeph, he had not his good Luck, to come off only with Impriſonment. The Empreſs complained to her Huſband, that the Count had made Love to her, and hoped ſuch Inſolence would not go unpuniſhed. The credulous Otho ordered the Accuſed to be Beheaded. But mark, how the Accuſer was caught in her turn. The Count, ſeeing himſelf condemned, and expecting no Favour, and yet unwilling to reveal the whole Myſtery, made his Wife promiſe ſhe would juſtify him, in the beſt manner ſhe could, to the Emperor. She kept her Word, preſerved her Huſband's Head, and took her Opportunity, when the Emperor adminiſtred Juſtice in a General Aſſembly, held in the middle of a great Plain, near Placentia. She took, I ſay, this Opportunity of demanding Juſtice againſt the Murtherer of her Huſband. The Emperor, not knowing who ſhe was, promiſed to do her Juſtice to the utmoſt Rigor of the Law. Upon which the Counteſs produced her Huſband's Head, and offered to prove his Innocency by the Fiery Tryal. Her offer was accepted; a red hot Iron was ordered; ſhe took, and held it in her Hand, as long as they pleaſed, without being burnt; then boldly demanded the Emperor's Head, as being convicted of the Murther of her Huſband: At laſt ſhe was ſatisfied with the Puniſhment of the Empreſs, whom Otho condemned to be burnt (b). This happened towards the end of the Xth Century.

(a) Secum muliebri habitu circumduxit juvenem, quo cum congrediebatur quotidie, quandoquidem eo pro cubicularia utebatur. ---- She carried about with her, a young Fellow in Woman's Cloaths, with whom ſhe had daily Opportunities of being familiar; ſince ſhe made him paſs for her Chamber-maid. Munſteri Coſmographia, l. 3.

(b) Gotfr'd. Viterb. Chron. Parte 17. Alb. Krantz Cuſpinian. in Othone III. Sigon. apud Maimb. Decadence de l'Empire p. 178.

ARAMONT

Digitized by Google

ARAMONT (GABRIEL) Ambaſſador of France to Conſtantinople, in the Reign of Henry II, was a Gentleman of Gaſcony, who acquitted himſelf worthily of his Employ. The Conſtable de Montmorency, examining the Overture, which Pope Paul III had made, that the only means to recover Placentia out of the Emperor's hands was to cauſe the Turkiſh Fleet to appear upon the Coaſts of Naples and Sicily, adviſed the King his Maſter to negotiate with Soliman about it. Aramont was choſen to tranſact this Affair. He was neither leſs Artful, nor leſs experienced, than la Foret, Rincon, and Paulin, who had preceeded him in This Embaſſy. He made Friends at the Porte, who procured him free acceſs, and private Audiences; and he knew ſo well how to turn and wind Matters, that he reconciled Soliman to the French, who had been greatly prejudiced againſt them. The only queſtion now was, how his Highneſſes Fleet ſhould act: Whereupon Aramont returned ſpeedily to France, to conſult with his Maſter in what manner the Grand Signior's Aſſiſtance might be moſt uſefully applied. The King and the Conſtable informed him, that they had Intelligence in the Iſland of Corſica, and that it might eaſily be taken, if the Turkiſh Fleet, and That of France, ſhould at once attack it. He ſet out again for Conſtantinople, to communicate this Project to the Grand Signior; But, landing at Malta, was inſtantly requeſted by the Grand Maſter (a) to repair to the Turkiſh Generals, who had beſieged Tripoli in Barbary, and employ his Credit, and the Authority of Henry the Second, to oblige them to raiſe the Siege. He yielded to their Intreaties, and reached the Turkiſh Camp by the time their Batteries were in readineſs to play (b). He had ſeveral Conferences with Sinan Baſſa, and Dragut, in which he remonſtrated to them, that they engaged in an Undertaking altogether oppoſite to the Treaty, which Soliman was going to conclude with France, ſince his Highneſs had agreed to attack the Emperor only, and that Tripoli belonged to the Order of Malta. They replyed, That the Knights of Malta were perjured Perſons; who, notwithſtanding the Oath they had taken to Soliman, when they were treated with ſo much Civility at their Departure out of Rhodes, committed continual Hoſtilities againſt the Turks; adding withal, that they had Orders to drive them out of Africa; and that they could not ſuſpend the Execution of this Order. Aramont wanted neither Excuſes nor Replies; and, finding he could not prevail with Sinan Baſſa, he reſolv'd to depart with all ſpeed for Conſtantinople, if poſſible to obtain from Soliman, that Tripoli might not be taken. But, as his Credit and Intrigues were not unknown to the Baſſa, he could not obtain Leave to continue his Journey, till after the Taking of Tripoli. He ſaved the Lives and Liberties of the French, who were in the Place; nor did he decline coming to a Feaſt, to which Sinan and Dragut invited him after their Conqueſt. Charles the Fifth was too politic to overlook this Event; he took occaſion from it to give out, that France had contributed to the taking of Tripoli. Henry the Second did what he could to anſwer this Complaint [A]. I have not had time to trace the Negotiations and Adventures of Aramont farther. I know, that his Diſpatches were ſometimes intercepted, and that the Emperor made uſe of them to (a) He was a Spaniard, called Omeda.

(b) See the Judgment Mr Wiquefort paſſes upon this Conduct, in his Treatiſe of the Ambaſſador, lib. 2. §. 5. pag. 110.

[A] Henry II. did what he could to anſwer this Complaint (1).] The Grand Maſter of Malta accuſed our Aramont of having induced the Governor of Tripoli to capitulate. Thuanus, refuting this Accuſation, tells us, that the Conſtable de Montmorency, who had all the Power at that time, had charged this Ambaſſador to teſtify to the Grand Maſter the particular Affection, which He, the Conſtable, had for the Intereſts and Proſperity of the Order. This Hiſtorian adds, that he had ſeen Letters, in which the Conſtable expreſſes great Concern at the taking of Tripoli; and that his Letters ought not to be ſuſpected of any Diſſimulation, ſince they were written to a Perſon, to whom the Conſtable ſpoke his Thoughts very freely (2). But when Henry II. found, that the Emperor's Partizans accuſed the Ambaſſador of France of having contributed to this Conqueſt of the Ottomans, he diſpatched a Gentleman to the Grand Maſter to complain of the Reports, which were ſpread abroad, and to enquire of him, how Aramont had behaved himſelf in That Affair. He declared, that, if he found him guilty of any Miſconduct, he would cauſe him to be puniſhed according to the Exigence of the Caſe; but he deſired, that, if his Ambaſſador was Innocent, the Grand Maſter would give a public Teſtimony of it. The Grand Maſter's Anſwer fully juſtified Gabriel Aramont. " Quo in negotio nullum officium prætermiſiſſet ut Ordini ea " in re noſtro gratificaretur, hoc enim a V. M. " enixe ac religioſe ſibi injunctum. Præterea, ut " quorum culpa ea clades accepta eſſet certo cunctis " conſtaret, undique probationes collegimus, & in" quiſitione diligenti ſuper ea re habita nihil com" perimus quo Aramontium cladi cauſam dediſſe, " aut deditionis auctorem fuiſſe credi debeat. Quin " imo ex equitibus captivis — didicimus eum non ſo" lum omni culpa vacare, ſed multis benefactis totum " ordinem ſibi devinxiſſe, ac proinde non recte nec " ſecundum rationem factum exiſtimamus ut is rumor " ſparſus ſit (3). — In which Affair he uſed his utmoſt " Endeavours to oblige our Order, as your Majeſty had " earneſtly and ſolemnly commanded him. Beſides, we " have collected Proofs from all Sides, to make it ap" pear to the World, to whom This Loſs is to be impu" ted; and, upon diligent Enquiry into this Matter, " we find no reaſon to ſuſpect Aramont of occaſioning " this Loſs, or of adviſing the Surrender. We have " likewiſe been informed by ſome Captive Knights, that " he is not only free from all Blame, but that he has " obliged the Order by repeated good Offices. For which " reaſon we think this Rumor to be unjuſtly ſpread." The King of France did not fail to publiſh this Anſwer in all the Courts of Europe, to ſhew that his Enemies ſpread Reports right or wrong, without any Foundation, on purpoſe to make him odious. " Eas " litteras —— poſtea Rex per oratores ſuos paſſim " publicari juſſit, qua publicatione compreſſis Cæſa" rianorum querelis ac rumoribus, evulgata in Gal" lici nominis invidiam fama pariter conquievit (4). " —— Theſe Letters the King afterwards ordered " to be publiſhed by his Ambaſſadors; by the Pub" lication of which, the Complaints of the Imperialiſts " being put a ſtop to, the Report, which was ſpread " to the Diſhonour of the French Name, ceaſed." This might indeed perſuade ſome, that the Partizans of Charles V. were deceived in this Matter; but the Enemies of France eaſily excuſed them. When it ſuits our Inclinations, we imagine it allowable to interpret every thing in a certain Senſe, agreeable to a Syſtem, which was once built on very probable Reaſons.

(1) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henri II. liv. 2. p. 198, &c. ad Ann. 1551. See likewiſe Thuanus, l. 7. p. 155.

(2) Mr Briſſac, who commanded in Piedmont.

(3) Thuan. lib. 7. ſub fin.

(4) Id. ibid.

Digitized by Google

to reproach the French with their ſtrict Correſpondence with the Porte [B]. The Relation of his Embaſſy is in Manuſcript in the Library of Mr de Lamoignon (c).

(c) Varillas, Hiſtoire de Henri II. pag. 200.

I have juſt read a Particular, which may ſerve by way of Supplement to this Article. The Golden Iſles in Provence were erected into a Marquiſate by Letters of Henry II, confirmed by the Parliament of Aix; and this Marquiſate Aramont, Ambaſſador of France to Conſtantinople, was inveſted with, and ſeized of, to hold in Fief of the King, with expreſs Orders to build, in theſe Iſles, Caſtles, Towers, and Fortreſſes, to the Expence of Fifty Thouſand Crowns (d).

(d) St Lazar. Hiſtoire de Dignit. Honorar. de France, pag. 400. Edit. of Paris, 1635, in 8*vo*.

Reaſons. This is without doubt an inexhauſtible Spring of erroneous Judgments; but, provided they are uſeful to us, we are not much in pain about them.

[B] His Diſpatches were ſometimes intercepted; and the Emperor made uſe of them to reproach the French with their ſtrict Correſpondence with the Porte.] In a Letter, which Charles V. wrote, in the Year 1552, to the Princes and States of the Empire, he expreſſes his wonder, that the Ambaſſador of France ſhould pretend to juſtify his Maſter as to the Engagements with Soliman: "Have not I, ſays he, the "Memorials of Aramont drawn up at Conſtantinople, "which prove the reality of an Alliance negociated "between the Porte and France againſt a Chriſtian "Prince?" Jam quod de communicatis cum Turco conſiliis obiter perſtringit, quaſi abunde purgatum exiſtimet, qua fronte excuſare poteſt? atque penes me habeo Aramontii Gallici legati commentarios Byzantii ſcriptos, & ad regem per Coſtam centurionem quemdam miſſos, qui ſocietatis cum Turcis in Chriſtiani nominis Principem initæ plenam fidem faciunt (5). Mr Varillas obſerves (6), "That the Pope, and "the Emperor, had agreed to accuſe the King of "France, in full Council, of an Intelligence with "the Infidels, and to produce thereupon Mr Ara"mont's intercepted Letters, to which a wrong "Turn might eaſily be given, becauſe the Truth "was but half explained." But what occaſion was there for giving a wrong Senſe, ſince Aramont undoubtedly negociated a Treaty between France, and the Porte, againſt the Houſe of Auſtria? Was not That alone ſufficient to prove the Intelligence, with which they would accuſe Henry II? The beſt Way, France could take, was, not to conteſt the Fact, but to juſtify the Reaſonableneſs of it, by ſhewing, that, where Religion is not concerned, we may make what Alliances we pleaſe. If Charles V. had not been always ſupported by good Allies among the Chriſtian Princes, Papiſts, or not Papiſts, he would not have ſtuck at forming Alliances with Infidels; and he would have improved them much better, than France did. He was much more cunning, and had greater Abilities than Francis I. The Turkiſh Fleet, in concert with him, would not have been uſeleſs, as it was with the French, who concerted Matters ſo ill, that one is moved to Shame, or Pity, or Laughter, who reads the Hiſtory of thoſe Times. Sincerity had nothing to do in this Caſe. That would have prevented the Emperor from reproaching his Enemy with entering into Alliance with Heretics and Infidels, when He himſelf was ready to do the ſame, had Maxims of State required it. What would have become then of Thoſe, who could make pathetic Harangues, preſent plauſible Memorials, diſcuſs an hundred fine Common-Places? All this muſt have been laid aſide; now this would have been very prejudicial; there would have been no blinding the People, no animating them to any Purpoſe; a thouſand exquiſite Praiſes, and pompous Titles, muſt have been given up.

A Reflection on Alliances with Heretics or Infidels.

(5) Idem lib. 10. pag. 213.

(6) Varill. Hiſt. de Henri II. liv. 2. pag. 202.

------- accuſat Manilia, ſi rea non eſt (7).

(7) Juven. Sat. 6. ver. 243.

People ſeldom fail to make Reproaches on theſe Occaſions, but when they are guilty themſelves.

ARBRISSEL (Robert d') Founder of the Order of Fontevraud. Look for FONTEVRAUD.

ARCESILAS, or ARCESILAUS, one of the moſt renowned Philoſophers of Antiquity, was born at Pitane in Æolia [A]. He was a Diſciple of the Mathematician Autolycus, his Country-man, and followed him to Sardes. Afterwards he came to Athens; where he was a Diſciple of Xanthus, then of Theophraſtus, and laſtly of Crantor [B]. He learned Geometry under Hipponicus (a). He had ſome Inclination

(a) Taken from Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 32.

[A] Was born at Pitane in Æolia.] Diogenes Laërtius is not the only one, who affirms this (1). Read theſe Words of Pomponius Mela, in the Chapter, where he deſcribes the Country of the Æolians. "Caicus inter Eleam decurrit, & Pitanem illam "quæ Arceſilam tulit, nihil affirmantis Academiæ "clariſſimum Antiſtitem (2). ------ The River "Caycus runs between Elea and That Pitane, "where Arceſilas was born, the celebrated Founder "of the Academy, which affirmed nothing." See alſo Strabo; Πιτάνη πόλις Αἰολικὴ - - - - ἐκ δὲ τῆς Πιτάνης ἐστὶν Ἀρκεσίλαος (3). Pitane, a City of Æolia ------ and Arceſilaus was of Pitane; but give no Credit to Solinus, who makes Pitane, a Town in Laconia, the Birth-place of this Philoſopher (4). Salmaſius (5), and Mr Menage (6), refute him. I cannot tell, whether it is through Inadvertency of the Author, or the Correctors, that Arceſilaus Pritanæus occurs in Mr Gaſſendi (7); it ſhould have been Pitanæus.

(1) Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 20.

(2) Pompon. Mela, lib. 1. cap. 18. pag. 20.

(3) Strabo lib. 13. pag. 422. in fin.

(4) Solin. cap. 7. pag. 22.

(5) Salmaſ. Exercit Plin. pag. 138.

(6) Menag. in Diog. Laërt. pag. 176.

(7) Gaſſend. Oper. Tom. 1. pag. 18.

[B] A Diſciple of Xanthus, then of Theophraſtus, and laſtly of Crantor (8).] I am ſurprized, that Diogenes Laërtius, after having clearly inſinuated, in ſeveral Places, that Arceſilas was a Diſciple of Polemon, does not expreſsly ſay ſo in the Life of Arceſilas. The following are the Paſſages, where he affirms it. Arceſilas, ſays he, having left Theophraſtus's School to follow Polemon and Crates, declared, that they were Gods, or the Remains of the Golden Age. Ἔνθεν καὶ Ἀρκεσίλαον μεταθέντα παρὰ Θεοφράστου πρὸς αὐτὸς λέγειν, ὡς εἶεν θεοί τινες ἢ λείψανα τοῦ χρυσοῦ γένους (9). Hinc & Arceſilaum, cum ad eos à Theophraſto diverteret, dixiſſe ferunt, illos Deos eſſe quoſpiam, aut aurei ſeculi reliquias. He obſerves, a little lower, that Crantor and Arceſilas lodged together, and that Polemon and Crates, who lodged together with a Citizen, whoſe Name was Lyſicles, went and ſupped very often with Crantor, and that Crates was the Minion of Polemon, as Arceſilas was the Favourite of Crantor. The Tranſlator of Diogenes Laërtius has confounded all this; for he ſuppoſes, that Polemon was the Minion of Crates, and Crantor of Arceſilas. Let us produce the Greek: Ἦν δὲ ἐρώμενος, Κράτης μέν, ὡς προείρηται, Πολέμωνος, Ἀρκεσίλαος δὲ Κράντορος (10). That is: Erat autem amaſius, ut quidem prædictum eſt, Polemonis quidem Crates, Crantoris autem Arceſilas. The Latin Tranſlation, which no Commentator has cenſured, puts amator, where it ſhould have been amaſius: There has been no notice taken of the paſſive Signification of ἐρώμενος. Neither has any one obſerved the Contradiction, which follows a little after; for, as the Greek orders the Matter, Arceſilas is repreſented under the Character of the Pathic. Ἀρκεσίλαος θέλων ὑπ' αὐτοῦ (Κράντορος) συναθῆναι Πολέμωνι, καίπερ ἐρώντος (11). Arceſilaus volens ab illo (Crantore) ſe Polemoni commendari, quanquam amatore ſuo. Let us here reject all the impure and abominable Ideas, which This Author, and many others, ſeem willing

(8) Diog. Laërt. n. 28, 29.

(9) Id. in Cratete, lib. 4. pag. 240. n. 22.

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Id. ib. n. 22.

Digitized by Google

tion to Poetry; and took great delight in reading Homer [C]; but his Paſſion for Philoſophy was ſuperior to all others. He ſucceeded Crates in the Regency of the Platonic School [D], and introduced new Opinions into it; for he founded a Sect, which was called the Second Academy, to diſtinguiſh it from That of Plato. He ſtrongly oppoſed the Dogmatiſts; he affirmed nothing; he doubted of every thing; he diſcourſed pro and con; and ſuſpended his Judgment: This I do, ſaid he, becauſe nothing is to ſuggeſt in the like Caſe. When they ſpeak of a Philoſopher, and his Diſciples, they almoſt always obſerve, that he was fond (or a Lover) of ſuch or ſuch an one. This, I confeſs, may, on ſome Occaſions, be underſtood in a wicked Senſe, but on an hundred others, ought, I think, to be underſtood only of a virtuous and honourable Affection. Among ſeveral Diſciples, One was his Maſter's Favourite. It was He, who was deſigned for his Succeſſor; he, who had moſt Docility, Reſpect, or Genius, &c. Ought this to be expreſſed by the Term ἐρώμενος? But to return to the Fact; The laſt Paſſage, which I cited from Diogenes Laërtius, informs us, that Arceſilas deſired Crantor to recommend him to Polemon. The Hiſtorian adds, that Crantor, who was ſick, did not take it ill; but, on the contrary, as ſoon as he was recovered, went likewiſe himſelf to Polemon's Lectures. Ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸν ὑγιαίνοντα διακέειν Πολέμωνος (12). Ipſe quoque, cum ſanus factus eſſet, ſe ad audiendum Polemonem contulit. This is a Proof, that Arceſilas was one of That Philoſopher's Auditors, or Diſciples. He was ſo far ſo, that Cicero gives him no other Maſter. "Arceſilas tuus, etſi ſuit in differendo pertinacior, "tamen noſter fuit, erat enim Polemonis (13). - - - - "Your Arceſilas, though ſtiff in his Opinions, was "yet one of us, having been a Diſciple of Polemon." Numenius aſſigns him ſeveral other Maſters. He makes him ſucceſſively the Diſciple of Polemon, Theophraſtus, Diodorus, and Pyrrho (14). He adds, that he learnt of Crantor Perſuaſion, of Diodorus Sophiſtry, and of Pyrrho to turn about like a Weather-Cock, and be nothing at all. Ὧν ὑπὸ μὲν Κράντορα πιθανουργικὸς, ὑπὸ Διόδωρα δὲ σοφιστὴς, ὑπὸ δὲ Πύρρωνα ἐγένετο πανταδαπὸς, καὶ ἴτης καὶ ὑδέν (15). Et à Crantore quidem ad perſuadendum callidus, à Diodoro autem ſophiſta, denique à Pyrrhone cum omnem in partem verſatilis ac temerarius, tum etiam nullus eſſe didicit. He fixed himſelf in the Pyrrhonian Inconſtancy, and wanted only the Name of a Pyrrhonian; he was called an Academic; a Name which he kept only in reſpect to the Philoſopher Crantor, his Maſter, and Lover. Πλὴν τῆς προσρήσεως ἐνέμεινε Πυρρώνι ὡς τῇ πάντων ἀναιρέσει - - - - - αἰδοῖ τε ἔρωτος ὑπέμεινε λέγεσθαι Ἀκαδημαϊκὸς ἔτι. ἦν μὲν τοίνυν. Πυρρώνειος πλὴν τῷ ὀνόματος. Ἀκαδημαϊκὸς δ' οὐκ ἦν, πλὴν τῷ λέγεσθαι (16). In Pyrrhone, ſi appellationem excipias, tanquam in omnium everſione acquievit - - - - - is pro ſua in amatorem obſervantia Academicum ſe vocari adhuc paſſus eſt. Ita qui Pyrrhonicus, excepto nomine, totus erat, idem Academicus præter nomen habebat nihil. Numenius had but juſt before ſaid, that Arceſilas, a beautiful Youth, being beloved by Crantor, conſtantly adhered to him. Διὰ τὸ καλὸς εἶναι ἔτι ὢν ὥραῖος τυχὼν ἐρασῆ Κράντορος τῷ Ἀκαδημαϊκῷ προσεχώρησε μὲν τότε. (17). - - - - Eleganti forma & commoda adhuc ætate cum eſſet, Crantorem Academicum amatorem nactus, ejus conſuetudine uſus eſt ille quidem. He adds, that Menedemus's Lectures made him a more warm Diſputant; for which he quotes Timon (18). Thus we ſee ſeveral Omiſſions in the Liſt, which Diogenes Laërtius has left us, of Arceſilas's Maſters. I have ſupplied this Defect.

[C] He took great Delight in reading Homer.] He preferred him to all other Authors: Every Evening, he read ſome part of him, before he went to Sleep, and, when he roſe in the Morning, he uſed to ſay, I am going to pay a Viſit to my Miſtreſs (19), meaning, that he was going to read this Poet. Ἀπεδέχετο δὲ πάντων μᾶλλον Ὁμήρου ἃ καὶ εἰς ὕπνου ἰὼν πάντως τι ἀνεγίνωσκεν· ἀλλὰ καὶ ὀρθρὸν λέγων ἐπὶ τὸν ἐρώμενον ἀπεῖναι, ὁπότ' ἂν βούλοιτο ἀναστῆναι (20). Amplectebatur Homerum maximè ex omnibus, cujus adeo ſtudioſus erat, ut ſemper ante ſomnum ejus aliquid legeret. Mane quoque cum ſurgeret, dicens, ſe ad amaſium ire, cum ſe velle legere innueret.

[D] He ſucceeded Crates in the Regency of the Platonic School (21)]. Several Authors place our Arceſilas immediately after Polemon, without mentioning Crates. See a Note of Aldrobandinus on a Paſſage of Diogenes Laërtius (22), where you will find, that this learned Commentator had no where diſcovered, that Crates ſucceeded Polemon. You will likewiſe meet with theſe Words of St Auſtin; "Moritur Polemon, "ſuccedit ei Arceſilas, Zenonis quidem condiſcipu- "lus, ſed ſub Polemonis magiſterio (23). —— Po- "lemon dies; to him ſucceeds Arceſilas, a Fellow- "Diſciple indeed of Zeno, but under the Tuition of "Polemon." To this Paſſage may be added That of the Fifty ſixth Letter. "Iidem quippe Academici, "qui Platonici, quod docet Auditorum ipſa ſucceſ- "ſio; Arceſilas enim, qui primus occultata ſententia "ſua nihil aliud iſtos quam refellere ſtatuit, quære "cui ſucceſſeret; Polemonem invenies; quære cui "Polemon; Zenocratem; Zenocrati autem diſ- "cipulo Academiam Scholam ſuam reliquit Pla- "to (24). —— The Academics are the ſame with "the Platoniſts; as appears from the very Suc- "ceſſion of their Diſciples. For Arceſilas, who firſt "taught them to have no Opinions of their own, but "to refute every other, you will find to have been "the Succeſſor of Polemon; Polemon of Zenocrates; "and Zenocrates, Succeſſor, in the School of the Aca- "demy, to his Maſter Plato." We muſt not here depend upon St Auſtin's Authority; for he has not ſtrictly obſerved Exactneſs; and, as he skips over one Step between Plato and Xenocrates (25), he may have done the like between Polemon and Arceſilas. I do not inſiſt on his Silence as to Crantor, the famous Academic (26), who ſeems to have been the immediate Succeſſor of Polemon, and who died before him, and before Crates (27). If the Word Succeſſor diſpleaſes you, ſay, that Crantor taught in Polemon's Life-time. The ſame thing is affirmed of Crates; and from hence it comes to paſs, that ſometimes it is ſaid, that Crantor ſucceeded Polemon; ſometimes, that Crates ſucceeded him; ſometimes, that both of them were his Succeſſors; but generally Crates is placed after Crantor (28). Again; I do not object the Omiſſion of Crantor to St Auſtin; I imagine it is wrong to reckon this Philoſopher as Polemon's Succeſſor: He died before his Maſter; and I find, that Lacydes, the Succeſſor of Arceſilas, was the firſt, who reſigned the Succeſſion of his Chair in his Life-time (29). Let us ſay then, that Crates alone ſucceeded Polemon, and reject this Period of Father Rapin; Crates and Crantor, who were ſucceſ- ſively Heads of Plato's School, altered nothing in his Doctrine (30). He would not have been ſo much miſtaken, if he had named Crantor firſt; Crantor, I ſay, who died before Crates. A celebrated Critic (31), in correcting a Paſſage of Nonius Marcellus (32), has ſupplied us with an Authority, which wonderfully favours the Text of this Remark. According to his Correction, we are to believe, that Lucilius had ſaid, "Polemon & amavit Cratem, & "huic tranſmiſit ſuam ſcholam, quam dicunt. —— "Polemon loved Crates, and tranſmitted to him his "School, as they call it." The Greek of Diogenes Laërtius carries the ſame Senſe. Κράτης —— καὶ ἀκροατὴς ἅμα καὶ ἐρώμενος Πολέμωνος. ἀλλὰ καὶ διεδέξατο τὴν σχολὴν αὐτός (33). Crates auditor ſimul amaſiuſque (34) Polemonis, illiuſque ſcholæ ſucceſſor. I do not depend on theſe Words of Cicero; "Speuſippus autem, & Xenocrates, qui primi "Platonis rationem autoritatemque ſuſceperant, & "poſt eos Polemon & Crates unaque Crantor, in Aca- "demia congregati, diligenter eis quæ à ſuperioribus "acceperant, utebantur (35). —— Speuſippus and "Xenocrates, the immediate Succeſſors of Plato, and "after them Polemon and Crates, together with "Crantor, taught the ſame Doctrines in the Academy,

(12) Id. ib. n. 25.

(13) Cicero, de Finib. lib. 5. cap. 31. See alſo de Oratore lib. 3. cap. 18.

(14) Numenius, apud Euſebium Præpar. Evang. lib. 14. cap. 5. pag. 729.

(15) Id. ib.

(16) Numenius, ubi ſupra, cap. 6. pag. 731.

(17) Id. ib.

(18) The two Verſes of Timon, which he cites, are more correct, than in Diogenes Laërtius.

(19) To adapt myſelf to the Style of the Times, I have departed from the Literal Tranſlation.

(20) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 31.

(21) Id. ib. n. 34.

(22) In the beginning of the Life of Crates, l. 4. n. 21.

(23) St Auguſt. contra Academicos, lib. 3.

(24) Auguſt. Epiſt. 56. pag. 267. Euſeb. in Præp. Evan. lib. 14. c. 4. pag. 726, ſays, it was ſaid, that Arceſilas ſucceeded Polemon.

(25) Speuſippus, Son of a Siſter of Plato, governed the School before Xenocrates.

(26) Crantor ille in noſtra Academia vel in primis fuit nobilis. Cicer. Tuſc. Quæſt. lib. 3. cap. 6.

(27) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 27.

(28) See Gaſſendi, Operum Tom. 1. pag. 18. & Jonſius de Script. Hiſtor. Philoſoph. pag. 52. or rather Diog. Laërt. cited below, Citat. (35).

(29) Diog. Laërt. in Lacyde, lib. 4. n. 60.

(30) Rapin. Compar. de Platon & Ariſtote, Part 4. cap. 1. p. 365.

(31) Petrus Victorius. See the Notes of Joſias Mercerus on Nonius Marcellus, pag. 193.

(32) Nonius Marcellus, voce Tranſmittere, p. 414, cites the 28*th Book of* Lucilius.

(33) Diogen. Tranſlation.

(34) And not Amator, as the printed has it; A Fault which the Commentators do not correct.

(35) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. lib. 1. cap. 9.

Laërt lib. 4. n. 21.

" which

Digitized by Google

is certain. He attacked with great force whatever the other Sects affirmed [E]; for which

" which they had received from their Predeceſſors." They are not poſitive enough, nor ſo expreſs, as this Paſſage of Diogenes Laërtius. Πλάτων ὁ τὴν ἀρχαίαν Ἀκαδημίαν συνεστάμενος ὃς Σπευσιππῳ καὶ Ξενοκράτης, ὃ Πολέμων, ὃ Κράντωρ, καὶ Κράτης, ὃ Ἀρκεσίλαος, ὁ τὴν μέσην Ἀκαδημίαν εἰσηγησάμενος (36). —— Plato, who founded the old Academy; after Plato, Speuſippus and Xenocrates; then Polemon; after Polemon, Crantor, and Crates; to whom ſucceeded Arceſilas, who inſtituted the middle Academy. Caſaubon, in his Note on this Paſſage, quotes Galen, who ſays, that the Old Academy ended in Crantes; and that Arceſilas, the Diſciple of Crantes, founded the leſſer Academy (37). This Commentator is ignorant, who the Crantes of Galen is (38); but it is eaſily to be ſeen, either that the Tranſcribers have put Crantes inſtead of Crates, or that Galen himſelf does not ſpell the Name of Arceſilas's Predeceſſor right. It happens daily, that the moſt learned Perſons either add, or retrench, ſome Letter of the Author's Name, whom they quote; they intend to name the ſame Perſon, whom others alledge, according to the true Orthography. I could give an hundred Inſtances of it, and am ſurprized, that Caſaubon makes any Difficulty here. We muſt not forget, that he wonders Galen has made no mention of Crantor. Quis vero non miretur omiſſum à Galeno Crantorem (39)?

(36) Diogen. Laërt. in Præmio, n. 14. pag. 10.

(37) Galen. in Hiſt. Philoſophorum.

(38) Ego quiſnam ſit Crantes Galeni planè ignoro. Caſaub. in Diog. Laërt. Proœm. n. 14.

(39) Id. ib.

[E] He attacked with great Force whatever the other Sects affirmed.] It would be wrong to pretend, that he did not juſtly deſerve the Name of an Innovator; but Diogenes Laërtius is miſtaken, when he takes him for the firſt, who introduced the Cuſtom of Diſputing pro and con. Πρῶτος δὲ καὶ ἐς ἑκάτερον ἐπεχείρησε (40). Primuſque in utramque diſſerere partem aggreſſus eſt. It was the Taſte of Socrates; and Plato continued it. We ſhall quote Cicero, who informs us, that Arceſilas's Method of controverting every thing, which was propoſed to him, was the ſame with That of Socrates; and that Arceſilas was inſtructed in Pyrrhoniſm (41) by Plato's Books, and by the Diſcourſes, which Socrates was ſuppoſed to have held. " Arceſilas primum, qui Polemonem audierat, ex variis Platonis libris, ſermonibuſque Socraticis, hoc maxime arripuit, nihil eſſe certi, quod aut ſenſibus, aut animo percipi poſſit: quem ferunt eximio quodam uſum lepore dicendi, aſpernatum eſſe omne animi ſenſuſque judicium, primumque inſtituiſſe (quamquam id fuit Socratieum maxime) non quod ipſe ſentiret oſtendere, ſed contra id quod quiſque ſe ſentire dixiſſet diſputare (42). —— Arceſilas, the Diſciple of Polemon; the firſt, who gathered this Doctrine, chiefly from the Writings of Plato, and the Diſcourſes of Socrates, that there is no Certainty in Objects, either of the Senſe, or the Mind. This Philoſopher is ſaid to have had a moſt graceful manner of ſpeaking; to have rejected all Judgment of the Mind and Senſes; and to have been the firſt, who taught his Followers (tho' it had been the conſtant Practice of Socrates before him) not to declare their own Opinions, but to controvert thoſe of all others." He ſays, in another Book, that Socrates's Method, which had been in a manner diſuſed, was revived by Arceſilas. It is in this, that the Innovation of the latter conſiſts; and therefore the Expreſſions of Diogenes Laërtius are not exact; for it is plain, that a Philoſopher, who profeſſes to diſpute every thing, which is advanced in anſwer to his Queſtions, puts in practice the Method of maintaining both ſides of the Queſtion. Obſerve theſe Words: " Is (Socrates) " percontando atque interrogando elicere ſolebat eorum opiniones, quibuſcum diſſerebat, ut ad ea quæ " hi reſpondiſſent, ſi quid videretur, diceret. Qui " mos, quum à poſterioribus non eſſet retentus, Arceſilas eum revocavit, inſtituitque, ut hi, qui ſe audire vellent, non de ſe quærerent, ſed ipſi dicerent, " quid ſentirent. Quod quum dixiſſent, ille contra; " ſed, qui audiebant, quoad poterant, deſendebant " ſententiam ſuam: apud cæteros autem philoſophos, " qui quæſivit aliquid, tacet, quod quidem jam fit " etiam in Academia (43). —— He (Socrates) was wont, by asking Queſtions, to make thoſe, with whom he diſcourſed, diſcover their own Opinions; that, if he thought proper, he might reply to their Anſwers. Which Practice, having been diſcontinued afterwards, was revived by Arceſilas; who inſtituted, that they, who would be his Hearers, ſhould not ask his Opinion, but declare their own; which when they had done, he oppoſed them; yet his Hearers were allowed to defend their own Sentiments. With other Philoſophers it was otherwiſe; the Enquirer was ſilent himſelf; which is now practiſed even in the Academy." If This Teſtimony be not expreſs enough, what think you of This, in which it is affirmed, that the Academy of Arceſilas was no other, than That of Plato? " Hanc Academiam " novam appellant, quæ mihi vetus videtur. Siquidem Platonem ex illa vetere numeramus, cujus in " libris nihil affirmatur, & in utramque partem multa diſſeruntur, de omnibus quæritur, nihil certi " dicitur (44). —— They call this the New Academy, which to me ſeems to be the Old. For we reckon Plato to have been of the Old, in whoſe Books nothing is affirmed, and many things are diſcuſſed on both ſides of the Queſtion; every thing is matter of Enquiry, and nothing certainly pronounced." I cite, elſewhere (45), another Paſſage of no leſs Force than this. If any one requires a Scrap of Greek, for variety's ſake, I can fit him. I have read, ſomewhere, that Epicurus could not ſee, without Chagrin, the great Reputation of Arceſilas, the moſt renowned Philoſopher of thoſe Times; and that he upbraided him with having acquired a Reputation among the Ignorant, without drawing any thing from his own Stock. Τὸ δὲ Ἀρκεσιλάου τὸν Ἐπικούρου ἐκ μελίτεως ἔοικεν ἡ δόξα παροξύνειν, ἐν τοῖς τότε χρόνοις μάλιστα τῶν φιλοσόφων ἀσπαθέντα (46). Arceſilai autem Gloria videretur Epicuro haud mediocrem attuliſſe ægritudinem, qui inter ejus temporis Philoſophos maximi fiebat. It is true, Arceſilas did not ſet up for Invention. He aſcribed to Socrates, Plato, Parmenides, and Heraclitus, the Honour of inventing the Epoché *, and the Acataleptia †. Ὁ δὲ Ἀρκεσίλαος τοσοῦτον ἀπέδει τὸ καινοτομίας τινὰ δόξαν ἀσπάσαι καὶ ὑποποιεῖσθαι τῶν παλαιῶν, ὥστε ἐγκαλεῖν τοὺς τότε σοφιστὰς ὅτι παρρησιάζεται Σωκράτει καὶ Πλάτωνι καὶ Παρμενίδῃ καὶ Ἡρακλείτῳ τὰ περὶ τῆς ἐποχῆς δόγματα καὶ τῆς ἀκαταληψίας, εὐλόγως δεόμενος, ἀλλὰ οἷον ἀναλώσων καὶ βεβαιώσων αὐτῶν εἰς ἄνδρας ἐνδόξους ποιούμενος (47). Arceſilas was ſo far from any Deſire of innovating, or arrogating old Opinions to himſelf, that the Sophiſts of his Times even reproached him with aſcribing to Socrates, Plato, and Parmenides, the Doctrines of witholding the Aſſent, and Incomprehenſibility; not out of Neceſſity, but to ſtrengthen, as it were, and confirm them, by inſcribing them to theſe great Men. Pray obſerve, that, by the Confeſſion of Diogenes Laërtius himſelf, our Arceſilas only rendered the Platonic Method more Contentious; this was all the Change he made in it. Πρῶτον τὸν λόγον ἐκίνησε τὸν ὑπὸ Πλάτωνος παραδεδομένον, καὶ ἐποίησε δι' ἐρωτήσεως καὶ ἀποκρίσεως ἐπιτηδειότερον (48). Primus orationis genus quod Plato tradiderat movit effecitque per interrogationem & reſponſionem contentioſius. It may, nevertheleſs, be ſaid, that he was the firſt Diſturber of the public Peace among the Philoſophers; for, beſides his reviving a Practice, which had been almoſt forgotten, he purſued the Method of Socrates with more Ardor, than had ever been done before; and ſhewed himſelf more eager, more obſtinate, and more impatient, than the firſt Inventors. And, for this Reaſon, what I am going to produce, was ſaid of him. " Nonne jam, quum philoſophorum diſciplinæ graviſſimæ " conſtitiſſent, tum, ut exortus eſt in optima Republica Tiberius Graccus, qui ocium perturbaret, " ſic Arceſilas, qui conſtitutam philoſophiam everteret, & in eorum autoritate deliteſceret, qui negaviſſent quicquam ſciri, aut percipi poſſe (49). —— " Did not Arceſilas, like another Gracchus, who diſturbed the Repoſe of the beſt of Commonwealths, ariſe to overthrow the eſtabliſhed Philoſophy, and ſheltered himſelf under Their Authority, who denied all Knowledge and Perception of Things?"

(40) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 28.

(41) I make uſe of this Phraſe without any Regard to the Perſon of Pyrrho.

(42) Cicero de Oratore, lib. 3. c. 18.

(43) Id. de Finibus, l. 2. cap. 1.

(44) Id. Academ Quæſt. l. 1. cap. ult.

(45) In Remark [C] of the Article CARNEADES, Citation (5). The Paſſage is in the firſt Book of Cicero de Natura Deorum, cap. 5.

(46) Plutarch. adv. Colotem, p. 1121. E.

* Withholding the Aſſent.

† Incomprehenſibility.

(47) Id. ib.

(48) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 28.

(49) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. l. 4. cap. 5.

(50) Id. ib. lib. 1. c. 9. Numenius, apud Euſebium, Præp. Evang. lib. 14 cap. 6. p. 732, 733.

(51) Numenius, ubi ſupra.

Some have enquired into the Reaſon of Arceſilas's Conduct; and it was generally aſcribed to That warm Emulation, which grew up between Him and his Fellow Diſciple Zeno. Both had been Polemon's Scholars (50); and they ſtrove to ſurpaſs each other (51). Now Zeno took part with the Dogmatiſts; he which reaſon, he was looked upon, in Matters of Philoſophy, as a Diſturber of the Public Peace (b). Some pretend, that, finding no Evidence, which might prevent his floating equally between the Affirmative and Negative, he would write no Books (c); but others affirm, that he did write ſome; and then differ about the Queſtion, whether he publiſhed any. Some affirm it, and others ſay, that he condemned all he had compoſed to the Flames (d). It is obſervable, however, that he dedicated ſome Books to Eumenes, Prince of Pergamus, and to no one elſe (e). We ſhall ſee

Digitized by Google

(b) See Remark [E] Citation [49].

(c) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 34.

(d) Id. ibid.

(e) Id. n. 38.

be laid down Definitions, and Axioms, which Arceſilas vigorouſly oppoſed; and, to gain his Point, did not ſtick at overthrowing the very Foundation of all Science, and reducing every thing to Uncertainty. The Paſſage I am going to cite, gives us this Account, as alſo of the little Succeſs of his Undertaking (52), tho' ſupported by the moſt pleaſing Eloquence. "Fuerint illa vetera ſi vultis incognita: nihil ne eſt ergo actum quod inveſtigatum eſt poſteaquam Arceſilas, Zenoni, ut putant, obtrectans, nihil novi reperienti, ſed emendanti ſuperiores immutationes verborum, dum hujus definitiones labefactare vult, conatus eſt clariſſimis rebus tenebras obducere; cujus primo non admodum probata ratio quanquam floruit, tum acumine ingenii, tum admirabili quodam lepore dicendi, proxime à Lacyde ſolo retenta eſt (53)." Others ſay, that the fear of being nonpluſs'd by the Objections of certain Perſons, who took a pleaſure in puzzling the Philoſophers, obliged Arceſilas to affirm nothing. He placed the Epoché before him as a Rampart; this was a Darkneſs, under favour of which he hoped to eſcape the Purſuits of the Sophiſt Bion, and the Followers of Theodoret, perpetual Sticklers againſt the Philoſophers. Numenius, who obſerves, that Diocles, the Cnidian, had adopted this Conjecture, rejects it; and, in my Opinion, not without Reaſon; for though, by not deciding pro or con, we may ſecure ourſelves from a thouſand perplexing Difficulties, yet we are greatly expoſed by ſo doing; and if, on the one hand, grave and ſerious Objections, Retortions, and Arguments ad hominem, the ordinary and inevitable Rock of the Dogmatiſts, are the leſs to be feared; on the other, we are much more expoſed to the Raillery and Inſults of Banterers. Now it is certain, that Bion, the greateſt Sneerer of his Time, was leſs formidable, when he reaſoned, than when he turned things into ridicule. Generally ſpeaking, That is a very inconvenient Situation, which expoſes a Man to Ridicule. Arceſilas himſelf was wont to rally thoſe, who rejected the Teſtimony of Senſe (54). However, let us ſee the Words of Numenius. Οὐ γὰρ πείθομαι, τὸ Κνιδίου Διοκλέους φάσκοντος ἐν ταῖς ἐπιγεγραμμέναις Διατριβαῖς, Ἀρκεσίλαον φόβῳ τῶν Θεοδωρείων τε καὶ Βίωνος τοῦ Σοφιστοῦ, ἐπισχόντων τοῖς φιλοσοφοῦσι, καὶ ἐδὲν ὑπολαμβάνειν ἀπὸ παντὸς ἐλέγχειν, αὐτὸν ἐξυλαβηθέντα, ἵνα μὴ πρᾶγμά ἔχῃ, μηδὲν γε δόγμα ὑπεπτεῖν φαινόμενον, ὥσπερ γὰρ τὸ μέλαν τὰς σηπίας, προβαλέσθαι πρὸ ἑαυτῆς τὴν ἐποχήν. Τῆτ' ἂν ἐγὼ ὁ πείθομαι (55). Neque enim Cnidium illum Dioclem audio, qui in ſuis, ut eas inſcripſit, Diatribis, Arceſilam docet, Theodoreorum ac Bionis Sophiſtæ metu, qui, Philoſophis infeſti, nullam non eas coarguendi occaſionem arriperent, ita ſibi, ne quid ab iis moleſtiæ pateretur, caviſſe, ut nec certi quicquam ſtatueret; nam ut ſepias effuſo atramento, ſic illum ſeſe objecta hac aſſenſionis retentione tegere ac tueri. Verum hoc, dixi, ut minus credo. Note, that one of Cicero's Interlocutors affirms, that Arceſilas did not make uſe of the Epoché, in contradiction to Zeno, but through a Deſire of finding out Truth. Arceſilam vero non obtrectandi cauſa cum Zenone pugnaviſſe, ſed verum invenire voluiſſe ſic intelligitur (56). He ſays (57) that Arceſilas was the firſt, who diſcovered, and approved this Propoſition; It is poſſible, that a Man may neither affirm, nor deny, any thing, in uncertain Matters; and it is the Part of a wiſe Man ſo to do. Nemo ſuperiorum non modo expreſſerat, ſed ne dixerat quidem, poſſe hominem nihil opinari, nec ſolum poſſe, ſed ita neceſſe eſſe ſapienti, viſa eſt Arceſilæ cum vera ſententia, tum honeſta & digna ſapiente. He ſays likewiſe, that this Philoſopher asked Zeno, What will be the Conſequence, if a wiſe Man can diſcern nothing clearly, and if he ought not to admit of any thing, which is not clearly true? And that Zeno anſwered, The Conſequence will be, that he will clearly comprehend ſome things; and thus will admit of nothing obſcure. He was obliged afterwards to give the Marks of thoſe Things, which might be clearly comprehended; but thoſe, which he gave, were conteſted by Arceſilas, who maintained, againſt him, that Falſhood may appear in the ſame Guiſe as Truth; and that, conſequently, Truth could not be diſcerned from Falſhood. Zeno granted, that there was no comprehending any thing, if That, which Is not, can appear to us under the ſame Form with That, which Is; but he denied the Conformity of Ideas, in regard to that which Is, and that which Is not. Arceſilas inſiſted upon this Conformity. Incumbit in eas diſputationes ut doceret nullum tale eſſe viſum à vero, ut non ejuſmodi etiam à falſo poſſit (58). The Diſpute between them turned upon this Point. It had been ſaid before, in this Work of Cicero, that the Obſcurity of Things, and not Obſtinacy, or a Deſire of Victory, engaged Arceſilas to diſpute with Zeno (59).

(52) This does not agree with what will be reported in Remark [G].

(53) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. l. 4. cap. 6.

(54) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 34.

(55) Numenius, apud Euſeb. Præp. Evang. l. 14. cap. 6. pag. 731. C.

(56) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. l. 4. cap. 24.

(57) Id. ib.

(58) Id. ib.

(59) See, below, Citation (62).

I have ſaid, that he carried the Hypotheſis of Uncertainty farther than Socrates, and I had reaſon to ſay ſo; for he would not ſo much as confeſs, with Socrates, that he knew his own Ignorance (I know, that I know nothing). He ſuſpended his Judgment in every thing, and diſputed only to convince himſelf, that the Affirmative Reaſons were no better than the Negative. "Arceſilas negabat eſſe quicquam quod "ſciri poſſet, ne illud quidem ipſum, quod Socra"tes ſibi reliquiſſet. Sic omnia latere cenſebant in "occulto, neque eſſe quicquam quod cerni, aut in"telligi poſſit. Quibus de cauſis nihil oportere ne"que affirmare quenquam, neque aſſertione appro"bare, cohibereque ſemper, & ab omni lapſu conti"nere temeritatem; quæ tum eſſet inſignis, quum "aut falſa, aut incognita res approbaretur, neque "hoc quicquam eſſet turpius, quam cognitioni & "perceptioni aſſertionem approbationemque præ"currere. Huc (rationi quod erat conſentaneum) "faciebat, ut contra omnium ſententias dies jam "pleroſque deduceret, ut quum in eadem re paria "contrariis in partibus momenta rationum inveni"rentur, facilius ab utraque parte aſſertio ſuſtinere"tur (60). —— Arceſilas denied, that there was any "thing which could be known, not even That Point of "Knowledge, which Socrates left himſelf. Thus theſe "Philoſophers thought every thing lay concealed, and "that nothing could be either perceived, or underſtood. "Upon which account, they believed, that no one ought "to affirm or approve any thing by an Aſſertion, but "reſtrain himſelf from giving a raſh Judgment, "which would then be notorious, when either a falſe "or unknown thing ſhould be aſſented to; and that "nothing was more ſcandalous, than to ſuffer the "Affirmation, and Approbation, to out-run the Know"ledge, and Perception, of a thing. This general "Oppoſition to every Opinion was with this View, "that, if the Arguments on both ſides of the ſame "Queſtion ſhould be found to be equally ſtrong, the "Aſſertion on both Sides might be the more eaſily "ſupported." It was He, who taught the Acatalepſia, or Incomprehenſibility of things, more expreſsly than was ever done before; and carried it to ſuch an Extremity, that Carneades, who was able to ſupport it better than He, was obliged to have recourſe to ſome Limitation (61); but it is certain, that Arceſilas only enlarged upon, and unfolded, what the greateſt Maſters had ſaid before him. "Cum Zeno"ne —— Arceſilas ſibi omne certamen inſtituit —— "earum rerum obſcuritate, quæ ad confeſſionem ig"norationis adduxerant Socratem, &, veluti amantes "Socratem, Democritum, Anaxagoram, Empedo"clem, omnes pene veteres, qui nihil cognoſci, nihil "percipi, nihil ſciri poſſe dixerunt, anguſtos ſenſus, "imbecillos animos, brevia curricula vitæ, & (ut De"mocritus) in profundo veritatem eſſe demerſam, "opinionibus & inſtitutis omnia teneri, nihil teneri, "nil veritati relinqui, deinceps omnia tenebris cir"cumfuſa eſſe dixerunt (62). —— Arceſilas oppoſed "Zeno,

(60) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. l. 1. cap. 12.

(61) See the Article CARNEADES.

(62) Cicero, ubi ſupra.

Digitized by Google

see how he has been attacked by a Father of the Church [F]. As he was Master of

" Zeno, induced to it by the Obſcurity of thoſe things, " which brought Socrates to confeſs his Ignorance, as " alſo Democritus, Anaxagoras, and Empedocles, " Lovers, as it were, of Socrates, and all the ancient " Philoſophers; who taught, that nothing could be " known, perceived, or underſtood; that our Senſes " were narrow; our Minds weak; the Courſe of our " Lives ſhort; that Truth (as Democritus ſaid) lay " deep; that all things depended on Opinion, and po- " ſitive Appointment; that nothing was left to Truth; " and that all things were ſurrounded with Dark- " neſs." It was under the Authority of theſe great Names, that he attacked the Dogmatiſts (63). He might have alledged ſeveral others, as you may ſee in the ſecond Book of the Academical Queſtions (64). Nevertheleſs, Numenius, who is paſſionately tranſported againſt him, grounds his Quarrel on the Revolt, which he imputes to him (65). You will find ſome Strokes of his Indignation in the Deſcription he gives of this Philoſopher's Inconſtancy. He tells us, " he was a Man, who denied and af- " firmed the ſame things; he ran blindfold to the " right and left; he gloried in being ignorant of the " Difference between Good and Evil; he uttered " the firſt Notion which came into his Head, and " immediately overthrew it by a greater Number " of Arguments, than he had brought to eſtabliſh " it. He was an Hydra, which devoured itſelf." The Original is more expreſſive and full. Ἔλεξε, καὶ ἀνῄρει, καὶ μεῖκνυσθαι ἔτο κἀκεῖθεν, κἀνταῦθεν, ἐκαίνετο, ὀπόθεν τύχοι, παλινάγρετος, καὶ δύσκριτος, καὶ παλίμβολός τε ἅμα, καὶ παράκεκινδυνευμένος, ὡδέν τε εἰδὼς, ὡς ἀνθρώπος ἔφη, γεννατὸς ὤν (66). - - - - - Καὶ ἐχαίρε τῷ ὀνείδει, καὶ ἠμφῄνετο θαυμασῶς, ὅτι μήτε τί αἰσχρὸν ἢ κωλὺν, μήτε ἀσεβὲς, μήτε αὖ κακὸν ἔστι τί, ἤδει· ἀλλ' ὁπότερον εἰς τὰς ψυχὰς πέσοι, τοῦτο εἰπών, αὖθις μεθαλών, ἀνέτρεπεν ἓν πρὸς ἓν ἀχῶς, ἢ δὶ ὅσων καθεσκευάκει. Ἦν ἓν ὕδρα τέμνων ἑαυτὸν, καὶ τεμνόμενος ὑφ' ἑαυτῆ, ἀμφότερα ἀλλήλων δυσκρίτως, καὶ τὸ δέον ἀσκέπτως (67). Affirmans ſimul idem, idemque negans, hinc, illinc, utrinque, vel undique potius ſubito ſe temereque verſans ac revocans, incerti ambiguique ſenſus, veterator, præceps, atque ut ipſemet, adeo ingenuus eſt, confitetur, nihil omnino ſciens - - - - - hoc ut probro jucundiſſime frueretur, eoque ſe nomine mirum in modum circumſpiceret, quod quid turpe quidve honeſtum, quid bonum quidve malum eſſet, ignoraret: ſed potius, ubi quod primum in mentem venerat effutiiſſet, tum repente mutatus, id ipſum pluribus quam ante ſtabilierat, everterct. Se ipſum igitur ille quaſi Hydram ſecabat & ſecabatur à ſe ipſo, dum ſic in utramque partem loqueretur, ut nec quid ſibi vellet intelligeret, nec ullam ipſe decori rationem haberet. On the whole, he acknowledged the Finger of God, in the Ignorance of Man; for he was much pleaſed with a Verſe of Heſiod, where it is ſaid, That the Gods keep human Underſtanding behind the Veil (68).

Κρύπτουσι γὰρ ἔχυσι θεοὶ νόον ἀνθρωπόισι.

Ignaras hominum ſuſpendunt numina mentes.

[F] How he has been attacked by a Father of the Church.] I mean Lactantius: He pretends to deſtroy all Philoſophy, by maintaining, with Socrates, that we can know nothing, and, with Zeno, that nothing is to be believed, but what we know. Si neque ſciri, ſays he, (69) quicquam poteſt, ut Socrates docuit, nec opinari oportet, ut Zeno, tota Philoſophia ſublata eſt. He confirms his Pretence by the great Number of Sects, into which Philoſophy was divided. Each engroſſed Truth and Wiſdom to it ſelf, and made Error and Folly the Portion of all the reſt. So that whatſoever particular Sect we would condemn, we have the Suffrages of all the other Philoſophers, who are not of That Sect. You are ſure, then, of a Majority, in condemning them all; for each in particular approves your Judgment as to all the reſt; and has nothing to oppoſe, in bar againſt a general Sentence, but the Teſtimony it gives it ſelf; in which caſe it is a Judge in it's own Cauſe, and conſequently unworthy of Credit. See how Lactantius deſtroys all the Sects of the Ancient Philoſophy by each other: " They deſtroy each other, like Cadmus's Brood; " not one of them is left alive; and the Reaſon is, " becauſe they have, indeed, each a Sword, but no " Buckler: They have Arms for an Offenſive, but " not for a Defenſive War. Pereunt igitur univerſi hoc modo, &, tanquam Spartiatæ illi (70) poëtarum, ſic ſe invicem jugulant, ut nemo ex omnibus reſtet. Quod eo fit, quia gladium habent, ſcutum non habent. Si ergo ſingulæ ſectæ multarum ſectarum judicio ſtultitiæ convincuntur, omnes igitur vanæ, atque inanes reperiuntur. Ita ſe ipſam philoſophia conſumit, & conficit (71). He goes on; " Arceſilas obſerving this, took up " Arms againſt them all, and founded a new Sect of " Philoſophy, which conſiſted in not philoſophizing " at all." Quod cum intelligeret Arceſilas, Academiæ Conditor, reprehenſiones omnium inter ſe collegit, confeſſionemque ignorantiæ clarorum Philoſophorum, armavitque ſe adverſus omnes. Ita conſtituit novam non philoſophandi philoſophiam (72). From That Time there aroſe two Parties; one aſpiring to perfect Science, the other deſtroying all Certainty. The firſt falls to the Ground, if the Nature of Things cannot be known; the Latter is loſt, if it can: Suppoſing their Pretenſions equal, ſtill Philoſophy muſt fall, becauſe divided. " If, as I have taught, our miſerable " State does not admit of any Science, properly " ſpeaking, in Man, then Arceſilas gains the Victory; " but he cannot maintain it; becauſe it is impoſſible " we ſhould not know ſome things; we ſhould of " Neceſſity periſh, if we did not know what is uſe- " ful or pernicious to Life. Si autem (ut docui) nulla poteſt eſſe in homine interna & propria ſcientia ob fragilitatem conditionis humanæ, Arceſilæ manus vicit. Sed ne ipſa quidem ſtabit, quia non poteſt omnino nihil ſciri. Sunt enim multa, quæ natura ipſa nos ſcire, & uſus frequens, & vitæ neceſſitas cogit. Itaque pereundum eſt niſi ſcias quæ ad vitam ſunt utilia, ut appetas, quæ periculoſa, ut fugias, & vites (73). After this, Lactantius gives us a detail of ſeveral Things, which Men know, and inſults Arceſilas, who could not degrade the reſt of the World, without degrading himſelf; ſince they might have reply'd to him, If you prove, that we have no Knowledge, and that conſequently we are no Philoſophers, neither are you one, for you confeſs that you know nothing. So that he cuts his own Throat with the ſame Dagger, which he employs to kill others. Quid ergo promovit Arceſilas, niſi quod confectis omnibus philoſophis ſe ipſum mucrone transfixit (74). Lactantius does not blame him in every Thing; he praiſes him for having diſcern'd the Folly of thoſe, who believe, that Conjectures about Truth are Science. Recte vidit Arceſilas arrogantes vel potius ſtultos eſſe, qui putant ſcientiam veritatis conjectura poſſe comprehendi (75): But he does not dwell long on his Praiſe; he proceeds immediately to the Contradiction, ſo often objected to the Pyrrhonians; for this very Reaſon, that you know nothing, you know one thing. " Arceſilas —— introduxit genus Philo- " ſophiæ ἀσύστατον, quod latinè inſtabile, ſive incon- " ſtans poſſumus dicere. Ut enim nihil ſciri poſſe " ſciendum ſit, aliquid ſcire neceſſe eſt, nam ſi omni- " no nihil ſcias, id ipſum nihil ſciri poſſe tolletur. " Itaque qui velut ſententiæ loco pronunciat nihil " ſciri, tanquam præceptum profitetur, & cognitum, " ergo aliquid ſciri poteſt. Huic ſimile eſt illud, " quod in ſcholis proponi ſolet in aſſiſtatr generis ex- " emplum, ſomniaſſe quendam, ne ſomniis crederet. " Si enim crediderit, tum ſequitur, ut credendum " non ſit; ſi autem non crediderit, tum ſequitur, " ut credendum ſit. Ita ſi nihil ſciri poteſt, neceſſe " eſt id ipſum ſciri, quod nihil ſciatur. Si autem " ſcitur, poſſe nihil ſciri, falſum eſt ergo quod dici- " tur nihil ſciri poſſe. Sic inducitur dogma ſibi ipſi " repugnans, ſeque diſſolvens (76). Arceſilas in- " troduced a kind of wavering, uncertain, Philoſophy. " For, in order to know, That nothing can be known, " we muſt neceſſarily know ſomething; for if you " know nothing at all, this very knowledge, that no- " thing can be known, will be deſtroy'd. He, there- " fore, who gives it as his Opinion, that Nothing is " known, profeſſes to know ſomething; ſomething " therefore may be known. A-kin to this is That Ex- " ample of this kind of Philoſophy uſually propos'd " in the Schools; that a certain Perſon dreamt, that " he ought not to believe in Dreams. For if he did " believe in them, it follows, that he ought not to " believe in them; but if he did not believe in them, " it follows, that he ought to believe in them. Thus, " if

(63) Id. ib. lib. 2. cap. 5. See, above, Citat. (49).

(64) Cap. 24.

(65) Numenius, apud Euſeb. Præp. Evang. l. 15. c. 5. p. 731.

(66) Id. ib. c. 5. p. 730. A.

(67) Id. ib. cap. 6. pag. 730. C.

(68) Euſeb. ib. cap. 4. pag. 726, D.

(69) Lactant. Divin. Inſt. lib. 3. c. 4. pag. 153.

(70) Thyſius's Note on this Expreſſion is ridiculous. Qui ſe invicem conficiunt, ſays he, ſicut Cleomedes & ſocii, apud Spartanos, teſte Plutarcho. Could he not ſee, that Lactantius ſpeaks not of the Hiſtorical, but the Fabulous Times, and of thoſe Men, who ſprung from the Teeth of a Dragon, ſown by Cadmus.

(71) Lactan. lib. 3. c. 4. pag. 154.

(72) Id. ib.

(73) Id. ib. pag. 155.

(74) Id. ib. cap. 5. pag. 156.

(75) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(76) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

of a very perſuaſive Eloquence, which never wandered too far from the main Subject, and had moreover an happy Talent at anſwering Objections, he drew a great Number of Diſciples to his Auditory [G], though he was ſevere in his Cenſures. In general, the World was perſuaded of his Integrity; and he filled his Scholars with great Expectations; which made them ſubmit the more readily to his Rebukes, though a little too ſevere (f). Some affirm, that he play'd the Sceptic, only to try his Scholars [H]; and that, after this Probation, he taught them in another manner. He diſtributed his Money as freely as any Man in the World; and very great things are ſaid of his Liberality [I]. He is accuſed of Vanity, and of affecting Popularity too

(f) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 37.

" if nothing can be known, we muſt neceſſarily know " this very thing, that nothing is known. But, if it " be known, that nothing can be known, it is falſe, " which is pretended, that nothing can be known. " Thus an Opinion is advanc'd, which is repugnant " to, and deſtructive of, itſelf". Laſtly, Lactantius confeſſes, that, with relation to Phyſics, there is no ſuch thing as Science, and that it ought not to be ſo much as ſought after. — " Quanto faceret ſapientius ac " verius, ſi exceptione facta diceret cauſas rationeſ- " que duntaxat rerum cœleſtium ſeu naturalium, " quia ſunt abditæ, neſciri poſſe, quia nullus do- " ceat, nec quæri oportere, quia inveniri quærendo " non poſſunt (77). —— How much more wiſely and " truly wou'd he have reaſon'd, if he had ſaid only, " that the Cauſes and Reaſons of Heavenly or Natu- " ral Things, as being hid, cou'd not be known; ſince " there is no Teacher to inſtruct us in them; and that " we ought not to enquire after them, ſince no Enquiry " will diſcover them?

(77) Id. ib. pag. 158.

Let us now make ſome ſhort Remarks on this Diſpute. I. The Argument, he makes uſe of, to overthrow all the Sects of Philoſophy, by each other, proves too much. An Atheiſt, who ſhould make uſe of it, at preſent, to overthrow the Chriſtian Religion, would reaſon ill; the Chriſtian Sects mutually condemn each other; I grant it; but if you ſhould condemn any one of them in all it's Doctrinal Points, you would not have the Suffrages of all the reſt. II. Lactantius contradicts himſelf wretchedly. He confeſſes, that, if there be no Science among Men, Arceſilas gains the Victory; and he pretends to have demonſtrated, that we are too frail to attain to Science. Why then does he preſently add, that Arceſilas loſes the Victory, becauſe there are actually ſeveral Sciences among Men? III. The Examples he alledges are nothing to the purpoſe: For, in the Senſe, in which the Word is taken in this Diſpute, it is not Science, to diſcern Good from Bad; nor has this kind of Knowledge been call'd in queſtion by the Acataleptics. IV. The Charge of Contradiction has leſs of Solidity in it than of falſe Luſtre; it is rather a Subtilty, than a convincing Reaſon; good Senſe ſoon unravel the Difficulty. If I dream, that I ought not to believe in Dreams, I am caught in a Trap; for, if I do not believe in them, I do believe in them; and, if I do believe in them, I do not believe in them. Who ſees not, that, in this caſe, the particular Dream, which adviſes me not to believe in Dreams, muſt be excepted from all other Dreams? See, in Sextus Empiricus, what the Sceptics reply'd to this Objection. V. Lactantius's Conceſſion, as to Phyſics, was not at all proper to his Deſign: An Advantage might be drawn from it againſt his own Cauſe.

(78) Cicero, de Natura Deorum, lib. 1. cap. 5.

[G] He drew a great Number of Diſciples to his Auditory.] An Attempt to run down all Science, and to reject not only the Teſtimony of Senſe, but That of Reaſon too, is the boldeſt, that ever was form'd in the Republick of Letters. It is like That of the Alexanders, and other Conquerors, who would ſubdue all Nations; It requires much Wit, much Eloquence, much Reading, and deep Meditation. " Si " ſingulas diſciplinas percipere magnum eſt, quanto " majus omnes? quod facere iis neceſſe eſt, quibus " propoſitum eſt veri reperiendi cauſa, & contra om- " nes Philoſophos pro omnibus dicere (78). —— If " it be a great attainment to be Maſter of a ſingle Sci- " ence, how much a greater is it to underſtand All? " which they muſt neceſſarily do, who propoſe to inveſti- " gate Truth, and to defend All the Philoſophers " againſt All the Philoſophers". Arceſilas was as fit for ſuch an Undertaking, as a Man could be. Nature and Art had concurr'd to qualify him compleatly. He was naturally of a happy Genius, and of a ready and lively Wit (79); his Perſon and Preſence were engaging; he ſpoke with a good Grace; the Charms of his Countenance admirably ſeconded thoſe of his Voice; and he had learnt, under good Maſters, all that was moſt proper to perfect his Natural Abilities; I mean to extend their Force by the Combination of ſeveral different Powers. You will find This Detail in Numenius; but deliver'd with an odious Turn. Numenius did not love Arceſilas; yet could not forbear expreſſing himſelf thus; Πλὴν τοῖς ἀκούσιν ἤρκεσεν, ὁμῶ τῇ ἀκροάσει εὐπρόσωπον ὄντα θεωμένοις· ἦν ἐν ἀκούμενῳ καὶ βλεπόμενῳ ἥδιςῳ, ἐπεί τοι πεφυκὸς ἦν ἀποδέχεσθαι αὐτῶν τοὺς λόγους ἡσυχίας ἀπὸ καλῆς προσώπου τε καὶ στόματος, οὐκ ἄνευ τῆς ἐν τοῖς ὄμμασι φιλοφροσύνης (80). Yet he engaged the Attention of his Hearers; whilſt, as he ſpoke, they beheld the greateſt Dignity of Aſpect. For he charm'd both the Eyes and Ears; for which Reaſon what he ſaid was favourably hear'd, as it flowed from pleaſing Lips, attended with a certain Native Sweetneſs in his Locks. He ſays likewiſe, that Arceſilas thunderſtruck the Stoics by his various ways of confuting his Antagoniſts. Let us repeat the whole Paſſage; it will ſhew the great Dexterity of our Philoſopher, and the great Eſteem he had acquired. Οἱ Στωϊκοὶ δὲ ὑπήκουον ἐκπεπληγμένοι. ἡ μᾶσα γὰς αὐτοῖς ἐδέ τότε ἦν φιλολόγῳ, οὐδ' ἐργάτις χαρίτων, ὑφ' ὧν ὁ Αρκεσίλαος, τὰ μὲν περιεῖρκεν, τὰ δὲ ὑπολέμενον, ἄλλα δ' ὑποσκελίζων, καλεγλωττίζετο αὐτὲς, καὶ πιθανὸς ἦν. Τοιγαρῶν πρὸς ὃς μὲν ἀντέλεγεν, ἡττωμένοις, ἐν οἷς δὲ λέγων ἦν, καταπεπληγμένοις, δεδογμένον πως τοῖς τότε ἀνθρώποις ὑπῆρχε, μηδὲν εἶναι μήτ' ἐν ἔπος, μήτε πάθος, μήτε ἔργον ἐν ζεαχῦ, μηδὲ ἄχρηςον τοιαυτίον ὀφθῆναι ποτ' ἂν εἰ τι μὴ Αρκεσιλάῳ δοκεῖ τῷ Πιτανάτῃ (81). The Stoics hear'd theſe things with Aſtoniſhment. For their Muſe was as yet unſkilled, nor Miſtreſs of that Addreſs, by which Arceſilas, variouſly confuting and baffling Zeno's Arguments, o'erwhelmed them with a torrent of Words, and eſtabliſhed his Credit. Thus when They, with whom he diſputed, were overcome, and They, before whom he ſpoke, remain'd aſtoniſh'd and confounded, it was evident to the World at that time, that no Opinions were right or wrong, but ſuch as were approved, or condemned, by Arceſilas of Pitane. The preceeding Remarks might have been ſufficient to eſtabliſh the Merit of Arceſilas. But here is a new one. Some one, in Cicero, ſays, that no one would ever have followed This Philoſopher's Opinion, if the manifeſt Abſurdity of it had not diſappeared under the Eloquence and Dexterity of the Teacher. Quis iſta tam aperte perſpicueque & perverſa & falſa ſequutus eſſet, niſi tanta in Arceſila ---- & copia rerum, & dicendi vis fuiſſet (82).

(80) Numenius, apud Euſeb. Præp. Evang. l. 14. cap. 6. pag. 730, D.

(81) Id. Ib. p. 733. C.

(82) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. l. 4. cap. 18. fin.

[H] Some affirm, that he play'd the Sceptic, only to try his Scholars.] Sextus Empiricus, having ſaid, that Arceſilas did not ſeem to differ from the Pyrrhonians; adds, that, if certain Reports were to be credited, he was a Pyrrhonian only in Appearance; who, in the main, followed the method of the Dogmatiſts. The Queſtions he propoſed to his Auditors, to diſcover whether they had Genius enough to comprehend the Doctrine of Plato, made him looked upon as a Philoſopher, who affirmed nothing; but he deliver'd Plato's Doctrine, in a Dogmatical way, to Thoſe, in whom he had diſcovered a ſound Underſtanding (83). It is difficult to know whether this Relation be true. See the Diſſertations of Mr Foucher on the Philoſophy of the Academics (84), and the Annotations of Thomas Aldobrandinus, to which I refer you (85).

(83) Sextus Empiricus, Pyrrhon. Hyp typoſ. lib. 1. c. 33.

(84) Foucher. lib. 1. pag. 32. & lib. 3. pag. 154, &c.

(85) Th. Aldrobrand. in Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 28.

[I] Very great things are ſaid of his Liberality.] He did good, and endeavoured to conceal it. Ἐυεργετῆσαι προθύμως ἦν, καὶ λαθεῖν τὸν χάριν ἀτυφόταλος (86). Erat ad ferenda beneficia promptus; latere quoque gratiam omni ſtudio quærebat, juſtum ejuſmodi maxime exhorrens. This was practiſing the Goſpel

(86) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 37.

(79) Τὸν Θεόφραςον πυνθανόμενον φασὶν εἰ πεῖν ὡς εὐφυὴς καὶ ευστιχειρητος ἀπεδημηθὼς τῆς διατριβῆς εἴη νεανίσκος. -- Theophraſtus, they ſay, was grieved at his Departure, and ſaid, How ingenious and ready a Youth has left the School. Diog. Laërt. ubi ſupra, n. 30. See alſo n. 37.

Digitized by Google

too much (g). The other Philoſophers took a Pleaſure in cenſuring him (b); but did they equal him in Modeſty, and a Freedom from Jealouſy? Did they exhort their Diſciples to hear other Profeſſors? This He did (i). One of his Pupils having ſignified, that he ſhould chuſe to be the Diſciple of a certain Peripatetic, he carried him to the Profeſſor, and recommended him to his Care (k). Another time, he expelled a Diſciple his School for having affronted Cleanthes, in a Verſe of a Comedy; and would not reſtore him to Favour, 'till the Perſon offended had received Satisfaction (l). The Merit of this Action will appear the greater, when it is known, that Cleanthes was the Succeſſor of Zeno, who had been Arceſilas's Adverſary. This Perſon was very free from the failing of moſt Plagiaries; for he declared openly, that he taught nothing but what he had found in Books (m). It is probable he acted thus to give the greater Authority to his Opinions, and to take off the Odium, which the Name of Innovator drew upon him. He had no Inclination to meddle with Politics (n): Nevertheleſs, when he was appointed to go to Demetrias to negotiate ſome Affairs with King Antigonus, in Favour of his Country, he accepted the Deputation. He returned without Succeſs; probably becauſe he never would compliment that Prince, or go to Court, or write Conſolatory Letters to him after the Loſs of a Sea-Fight (o), as ſeveral others had done (p). He had a great ſhare in the Friendſhip of the Governor of the Pireum (q), and received ſeveral fine Preſents from Eumenes, Prince of Pergamus (r). He had a very fine Thought concerning Death; for he ſaid, that, of all human Evils, this was the only one, whoſe Preſence is never troubleſome to any one, and which makes us uneaſy only by it's Abſence (s). His Doctrines tended to overthrow all Precepts of Morality; and yet it is obſervable, that he practiſed them. The Teſtimony given him, on this occaſion, by the Stoic Cleanthes, his Anſwer, and the other's Reply, are very curious [K]. He was never married (t); though he was of an amorous Conſtitution; and followed the bent of his Inclinations but too freely, and even to ſhameful Exceſſes [L]. He flouriſhed about the CXXth Olympiad (u), and died of a Delirium, occaſioned by exceſſive Drinking, at Seventy five Years of Age (x), in the fourth Year of the CXXXIVth Olympiad (y). He boaſted of his great Patience during a Fit of the Gout [M]. Diogenes Laërtius has not given him Bion for his Succeſſor: Father Rapin imagined this without the leaſt ground [N]. I have but one Fault to charge Mr Moreri

(g) Id. ib. n. 41.
(b) Id. ib.
(i) Id. ib. n. 42.
(k) Id. ib.
(l) Plut. de Diſcrim. Adulat. & Amici, pag. 55. C.
(m) See Plutarch, cited above, Citation (47).
(n) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 40.
(o) Ibid. n. 39.
(p) Id. ib.
(q) Id. ib.
(r) Id. ib. n. 38.
(s) Plutarch. de Conſolat. ad Apollon. p. 110, A.
(t) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 43.
(u) Apollod. apud Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 45.
(x) Id. ib. n. 44.
(y) Diogen. Laërt, n. 61, places the beginning of the Regency of Lacydes, Succeſſor to Arceſilas, in the ſame Year.

Goſpel Precept, before it was declared. "Having "made a Viſit to Cteſibius, who was Sick, and wan- "ted Neceſſaries, he dexterouſly convey'd a Purſe of "Money under his Pillow (87)." Seneca tells us this. Arceſilaus, ut aiunt, amico pauperi, & paupertatem ſuam diſſimulanti, ægro autem, & ne hoc quidem confitenti deeſſe ſibi in ſumptum ad neceſſarios uſus, cum clam ſuccurrendum judicaſſet, pulvino ejus ignorantis ſaculum ſubjecit, ut homo inutiliter verecundus, quod deſiderabat, inveniret potius quam acciperet (88). Plutarch relates the ſame Fact more at large, but ſuppoſes, that the ſick Perſon was not Cteſibius; he calls him Apelles of Chio (89). Let us add, that Arceſilas, having lent ſome Silver Plate to a Friend, who was to make a Feaſt, would never demand it afterwards, ſuppoſing that it was given, not lent. Some ſay, that, conſidering the Neceſſity of his Friend, he refuſed to receive it again, when it was returned to him (90).

(87) Id. ib.
(88) Seneca de Benef. l. 2. cap. 10. pag. 25.
(89) Plut. de Diſcrim. Amici & Adul. p. 63.
(90) Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 38.

[K] The Teſtimony given him, on this Occaſion, by Cleanthes, His Anſwer, and the other's Reply, are very curious.] When once a Man affirms, that there is nothing certain, and that all is incomprehenſible, he in effect declares, that it is uncertain whether there be any ſuch thing as Virtue or Vice. Now ſuch a Tenet ſeems calculated to inſpire an Indifferency for Probity and for all the Duties of Civil Life. For which Reaſon Arceſilas's Adverſaries tax'd him with having neglected all thoſe Duties. They pretended, that he lived according to his Principles. But Cleanthes, though of a Sect very oppoſite to This Philoſopher, took his part. Hold your Tongue, ſaid he to one of theſe Cenſurers, condemn not Arceſilas; he overthrows the Duties by his Words, but eſtabliſhes them by his Actions. Παῦσαι, ἔφη, καὶ μὴ ψεγε, εἰ γὰρ καὶ λόγῳ τὸ κάθηκον ἀναιρεῖ, τοῖς γοῦν ἔργοις αὐτο τιθεῖ (91). Quieſce, inquit, neque vituperes; ille enim etſi verbis officium tollit, operibus tamen id ponit. Arceſilas anſwer'd, That he did not love to be flatter'd; Is it Flattery, replied Cleanthes, to maintain, that you ſay one thing, and do another (92)? This Repartee is ſmart enough. Probably he alluded to a Verſe of Homer, which imports, that Hypocrites and Diſſemblers, whoſe Thoughts are contrary to their Words, ought to be deteſted as Hell (93). However, at the bottom, This was a great Commendation of the good Life of Arceſilas. By the way, there was a Theory in the Doctrine of the rigideſt Pyrrhonians favourable to Virtue; for, whatever the real Nature of things might be, they taught, that, as to Practice, Men ought to behave according to Appearances. Be that as it will, the true Principle of our Morals depends ſo little upon the ſpeculative Judgment, which we form of the Nature of things, that nothing is more common, than Orthodox Chriſtians, who live ill, and Free-Thinkers, who live well.

(91) Diog. Laërt. in Cleanth. lib. 7. n. 171.
(92) Id. ib.
(93) Homer. Iliad. lib. 9. ver. 312.

[L] He followed the Bent of his Inclinations - - - - even to ſhameful Exceſſes.] The good Qualities, mentioned in the Body of this Article, and in the preceeding Remark, were joined, in his Perſon, with the moſt criminal Lewdneſs. So true it is, that Vice and Virtue are ſometimes in Alliance. He publickly viſited Theodota and Phileta, two common Women. Καὶ Θεοδότῃ τε καὶ Φιλαίτῃ, Ἡλιαίαις ἑταίραις, συνώκει φανερῶς (94). Theodotæ item ac Philetæ, Elienſibus ſcortis, palam congrediebatur. The worſt is, He was addicted to the Sin againſt Nature. Φιλομειράκιός τε ἦν καταφερής. ὅθεν οἱ περὶ Ἀρίστωνα τὸν Χῖον Στωϊκοὶ ἐπεκάλουν αὐτὸν φθορέα τῶν νέων, καὶ κιναιδολόγον καὶ θρασὺν ἀποκαλοῦντες (95). He was fond of Boys, and of an amorous Complexion; inſomuch, that the Stoic Ariſto of Chios was wont to call him A Corrupter of Youth, and an impudent Boaſter of his unnatural Amours.

(94) Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 40.
(95) Id. ib.

[M] He boaſted of his great Patience during a Fit of the Gout.] Nothing aſcends from thoſe Parts hither, ſaid he to Carneades the Epicurean, afflicted to ſee him in ſo much Torment, Nothing, ſaid he, pointing at the ſame time to his Feet, and Breaſt. Is quum arderet podagræ doloribus, viſitaſſetque hominem Carneades Epicuri perfamiliaris, & triſtis exiret, mane quæſo, inquit, Carneades noſter, nihil illinc huc pervenit, oſtendens pedes & pectus (96). This was talking like a Stoic, tho' Arceſilas was The Antagoniſt of The Founder of That Sect.

(96) Cicero de Finibus, lib. 5. c. 31. in fine.

[N] Diogenes Laërtius has not given him Bion for Succeſſor. Father Rapin imagined this, without the leaſt Ground.] Theſe are his Words: "Cicero, "who knew Plato's Succeſſors very well, ſays no- "thing of This Bion, whom Diogenes gives Arce- reri with; to wit, his saying, that Arcesilas studied under Xanthus, and under Theophrastus, before he came to Athens. I have observed a very gross Error in Sidonius Apollinaris [O].

"ſilas

Digitized by Google

"silas for his Successor, and who made himself "famous by the Vehemency of his Satires, accord-"ing to Horace (97)." The only ground Father Rapin can have for what he says, is, that The Life of Bion immediately follows That of Arcesilas, in the Works of Diogenes Laërtius. This Reason is void; since the Author expresly says, That Lacydes was the Successor of Arcesilas (98), and that Bion, being also a Hearer of Crates, despised the Opinions of the Academy, and afterwards embraced another Sect (99).

(97) Rapin. Compar. de Platon & d'Aristote, parte 4. c. 1. pag. 369.

(98) Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 59. in Lacyde, init.

(99) Id. ib. n. 51, 52. in Bione.

[O] I have observed a very gross Error in Sidonius Apollinaris.] He pretends, that, according to Arcesilas, who preceeded Socrates, God is the Efficient Cause of the Universe, and Atoms the Material Cause of it.

Post hos Arcesilas divina mente patratam
Conjicit hanc molem, confectam partibus illis
Quas atomos vocat ipse leves. Socratica post hunc
Secta micat, quæ de naturæ pondere migrans
Ad mores hominum limandos transtulit usum (100).

(100) Sidon. Apollin. Carm. 15. ver. 94. pag. 152.

Next these, Arcesilas supposed the World
Form'd, by a Mind divine, of lightest Atoms.
The Sect of Socrates succeeded next,
Which, quitting nat'ral Things, applied Philosophy
To polish and inform the Human Mind.

Savaro, without taking notice of this Mistake in Chronology, is contented with observing, that every one ascribes to Epicurus, and Democritus, the Doctrine, which Sidonius Apollinaris attributes to Arcesilas (101). This Observation is wrong; for no one ever pretended, that Democritus and Epicurus taught, that the Universe was the Work of God.

(101) Savaro in hunc locum Sidonii Apollinaris.

ARCHELAUS. Diogenes Laërtius mentions Four Persons, who bore this Name (a); to wit, ARCHELAUS, the Philosopher (b); ARCHELAUS, the Author of a Description of all the Countries, through which Alexander carried his Arms; ARCHELAUS, who described the marvellous Properties of certain things in Verse (c); and ARCHELAUS, the Orator, who wrote a Treatise of Rhetoric. Mr Menage adds, to these Four, ARCHELAUS, King of Cappadocia; ARCHELAUS, King of Sparta; ARCHELAUS, General of Mithridates; ARCHELAUS, the Dancer; ARCHELAUS, the Musician; and ARCHELAUS, the Comedian (d). He observes, that Lucian mentions the latter in his Treatise, de conscribenda Historia; That Athenæus, in his first Book, speaks of him, who played upon Instruments of Music (e); and that Clemens Alexandrinus mentions the Dancer [A], in the seventh Book of the Stromata. He forgot ARCHELAUS the Astrologer (f), and several other Archelaus's, of some of whom I shall speak in the following Articles.

(a) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. in Archelao.

(b) He, who is the Subject of the following Article.

(c) See Remark [C] of the following Article.

(d) Menag. in Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 17.

(e) See Remark [H] of the Article ABDERA.

(f) Cicero de Divinat. lib. 2. c. 42. some Manuscripts have it ARCHIALUS.

[A] He observes — that Athenæus, in his first Book, speaks of him, who played upon Instruments of Music, and that Clemens Alexandrinus mentions the Dancer.] Mr Menage understood the Rules of a just and learned Method of Citation, but he does not observe them upon this Occasion. He should have quoted the first Book of Athenæus, in relation Archelaus the Dancer; not the seventh of the Stromata of Clemens Alexandrinus: For, besides that the Right of Seniority does not belong to the latter, we find some Particulars in Athenæus, but none in the Stromata. Athenæus relates, that King Antiochus had no Favourite, whom he esteemed more, than Archelaus the Dancer (1). This Author had observed, in the same Page, that the Inhabitants of Miletum dedicated a brazen Statue to Archelaus the Fiddler; if I may be permitted thus to translate Ἀρχελάῳ τῷ κιθαεισῷ, Archelai Citharistæ.

(1) Athen. lib. 1. c. 16. pag. 19.

ARCHELAUS, a Greek Philosopher, and Disciple of Anaxagoras, was, as some say, of Athens, or, as others will have it (a), of Miletum. What is very certain, is, that he taught at Athens. It is said too, that he was the first, who brought over Philosophy thither [A]. He made but little Alteration in the Doctrine of Anaxagoras

(a) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 16.

[A] He was the first who brought over Philosophy to Athens.] Several Critics have observed, on this Head, the Opposition, which is found between Diogenes Laërtius, and Clemens Alexandrinus. The one attributes this Translation to Archelaus, the other to Anaxagoras. Οὗτος (Ἀρχέλαος) πρῶτος ἐκ τῆς Ἰωνίας τὴν φυσικὴν φιλοσοφίαν μεθήγαγεν Ἀθήναζε (1). Archelaus was the first, who brought Natural Philosophy from Ionia to Athens. These are the Words of Diogenes Laërtius; the following belong to Clemens Alexandrinus; Οὗτος (Ἀναξαγόρας) μεθήγαγεν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰωνίας Ἀθήναζε τὴν διαλεκτικήν (2). Anaxagoras translated the School from Ionia to Athens. No Person, that I know of, has endeavoured to reconcile these two Opinions, or discover the Origin of this Diversity. To me it seems obvious enough, from what I am going to observe. Anaxagoras came a very young Philosopher to Athens, and lived there thirty Years (3). It is not impossible, but that his Master Anaximenes continued to philosophize in Ionia during part of This Interval (4). We may likewise suppose, that Diogenes, his other Disciple, succeeded him. Now if Thales's Chair in Ionia was not vacant, whilst Anaxagoras philosophiz'd at Athens, it is false, that he transported Thales's School to That City. Such a Translation supposes, that the Succession failed, upon Anaxagoras's Removal. All that can be said, with Truth, is, that, before This Philosopher read Lectures at Athens, no Disciple of the Sect of Ionia had taught among the Athenians. Perhaps Clemens Alexandrinus, and the Authors he followed, meant no more; but did not take the trouble of expressing themselves more exactly. Be That as it will, I think, by Casaubon's good leave (5), that Diogenes Laërtius has expressed himself with more Exactness. For you must know, that Anaxagoras, leaving Athens, retired to Lampsacus, where he taught 'till his Death. His Chair in Lampsacus was filled by his Disciple Archelaus (6), who went afterwards to philosophize at Athens (7). Archelaus, then, was properly the Person, who transported the School of Thales from Ionia to Athens: This was a true Translation: But it could not be deemed so before; since, perhaps, this School had never been vacant during the time, which past between Anaxagoras's Journey to Athens, and his Retirement to Lampsacus; or, if it suffered any Interruption, it was speedily repaired by That Philosopher's Return into Ionia. It will be in vain to object, that no Writer remains, who has affirmed, that Diogenes was the Successor of Anaximenes: For I may reply, I. That we have nothing exact in the History of the ancient Philosophers; and consequently, This Silence does not take away the Right of supposing what I do.

(1) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 16.

(2) Clem. Alexandr. Stromat. lib. 2. pag. 302.

(3) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 7.

(4) What Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 3, says concerning the time of the Death of Anaximenes is ridiculous.

(5) Casaubon, on this Passage of Laërtius, censures him, and declares for Clem. Alexandr. Mr Menage does the same.

(6) Euseb. Præpar. Evang. l. 10. cap. ult. pag. 504.

(7) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

Anaxagoras (b); he held, with him, that the Similar Parts were the Material Principle of all Things, and the Divine Wiſdom the Cauſe of the Formation of Bodies. He alſo taught, like him, that all Animals, not excepting Men, were produced out of (b) See Remark [C].

do. II. That, Anaxagoras having been more famous than Diogenes, and having had a Diſciple, who continued the Succeſſion; having alſo, as is probable enough, ſurvived Diogenes; the Succeſſion of the Ionian Sect is with more reaſon continued in him, than in the other. It is very probable, that Sidonius Apollinaris aſſociates theſe Diſciples of Anaximenes, as two Colleagues, who were the Support of That School:

Quartus Anaxagoras Thaletica dogmata ſervat:
Sed divinum animum ſentit, qui fecerit orbem.
Junior huic junctus reſidet collega, ſed idem
Materiam cunctis creaturis aëra credens
Judicat inde Deum, faceret quo cuncta (8), tuliſſe (9).

The Fourth in order, Anaxagoras
Subſcribed to Thales' Doctrine; yet acknowledg'd
A Mind Divine, Creator of the World.
His younger Colleague taught, that Air contained
The ſole Materials of creating Art.

(8) This, compared with what Cicero, de Nat. Deor. lib. 1. pag. 46, and St Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8, cap. 2, ſay of Diogenes of Apollonia, ſhews that this Diogenes is the Perſon meant here.

(9) Apollin. Carm. 15, ver. 89.

I proceed to other Conjectures. Our learneded Critics (10) take for the ſureſt Foundation of Anaxagoras's Age, what Diogenes Laërtius ſays; that, at the Time of the Expedition of Xerxes, That Philoſopher was twenty Years old. From whence they take the Liberty to infer, that, ſince he lived Seventy two Years, he died in the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad. I ſhall not diſpute this Point. But I have Difficulties to raiſe againſt what Laërtius ſays, that Anaxagoras began his Journey to Athens at twenty Years of Age, and lived in That City thirty Years. It ſeems very unlikely to me, that he ſhould make choice of the time of Xerxes's Expedition for This Journey, when the Aſiatics in general did not doubt, but the Republic of Athens would be deſtroyed. However, not to inſiſt on this, let us paſs on to ſtronger Inſtances. If Diogenes Laërtius be right, it muſt follow, that Anaxagoras lived at Athens only 'till the ſecond Year of the LXXXIId Olympiad; for Xerxes's Expedition fell out in the laſt Months of the LXXIVth Olympiad, and the beginning of the LXXVth. But does not Diodorus Siculus affirm, that This Philoſopher was accuſed of Impiety, at Athens, in the ſecond Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad (11)? He deſtroys, then, the Account of Diogenes Laërtius; Yet not without being himſelf embaraſſed in another Point; for what will become of the Story, that Socrates, after the Condemnation of Anaxagoras, became the Diſciple of Archelaus (12)? What will become of a Fact, which others have vouched, viz. that Euripides forſook the Study of Natural Philoſophy, and applied himſelf to the Theatre, on account of the Proceſs againſt Anaxagoras (13)? Could Socrates, who was near forty Years of Age, according to the Chronology of Diodorus Siculus, at the time of That Trial, ſtand in need of another Maſter? Obſerve likewiſe, that, according to Porphyry, he began to follow the Philoſopher Archelaus, at about ſeventeen Years of Age (14). Had not Euripides, who was above fifty Years of Age, at the time of the ſame Trial, began to write Tragedies 'till That Time? So far was He from delaying it ſo long, that he wrote one at eighteen (15). To clear up this Matter a little, and find ſome Method to reconcile theſe Accounts, we muſt return to Diogenes Laërtius, and quit Diodorus Siculus; for, ſuppoſing that Anaxagoras was accuſed in the LXXXIId Olympiad, we ſhall find the pretended Conſequences of this Trial, with regard to Euripides and Socrates, very poſſible. We may preſuppoſe, that This Poet, having jointly ſtudied Natural Philoſophy, and wrote Tragedies, 'till he ſaw the Danger of Anaxagoras, confined his Studies afterwards to the Theatre alone. But what ſhall we do with Euſebius, who tells us, that Archelaus ſucceeded Anaxagoras, at Lampſacus, before he became a Philoſopher in Athens? This cannot be true, if Anaxagoras lived to the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad; a time, when Socrates, a greater Maſter than Archelaus, had no occaſion to ſubmit to his Diſcipline. Perhaps we ought to ſuppoſe, I. That Archelaus, having ſtudied ſome Years at Athens, under Anaxagoras, aſſumed the Profeſſor's Chair, upon his Maſter's retiring from thence. II. That, ſome time after, he rejoined him at Lampſacus, and was his Succeſſor there; and that, afterwards, returning from thence to Athens, he entirely tranſplanted Thales's School thither. It may be proper likewiſe to ſuppoſe, that Anaxagoras was accuſed more than once at Athens; and that, having withdrawn into Ionia about the Time of the firſt Trial, he was ſome time after recalled by Pericles, and accuſed a-new after ſome Years Abode there. We have ſeen (16), that certain Authors relate, that he was accuſed by Thucydides, the Adverſary of Pericles, and condemned to Death for Contumacy. Now, after the Baniſhment of this Thucydides, the Authority was in Pericles's Hands for fifteen Years (17); which ſhews, that Thucydides was baniſhed fifteen Years before the Death of Pericles. From whence it ſhould follow, that Anaxagoras had been condemned for Contumacy, at leaſt fifteen or ſixteen Years before the Death of Pericles: But, according to Diodorus Siculus (18), and Plutarch (19), he was accuſed a little before the beginning of the Peloponneſian War; that is, two or three Years before the Death of Pericles. We may therefore ſuppoſe, that he was twice accuſed; and, if we place his Return into Ionia, and his ſecond Return to Athens, in the Interval between theſe two Accuſations; a very conſiderable Difficulty will be removed by this means. Socrates was not a Diſciple of Anaxagoras, though Diogenes Laërtius affirms it (20). I have proved this (21) by a very ſtrong Reaſon; and can confirm it not only by the Silence of Plato and Xiphilin, when the Circumſtances of the Subject obliged them to mention it, but alſo by the Silence of the Accuſers of Socrates, and by the Anſwers, which Socrates made to them. Would they have failed to reproach him with being inſtructed by a Philoſopher, who had been condemned for Impiety? Would not this have rendered him more ſuſpected? Would they have forgot this Circumſtance? Would they have been ſatisfied with reproaching him, in general, that he philoſophized like That impious Man? And, if he had actually been his Scholar, would he have replied as he did (22)? Let us conclude, then, that he was no Diſciple of Anaxagoras. But how can we imagine, that he was not, if we ſuppoſe, that Anaxagoras did not leave Athens, 'till the Time, which Diodorus Siculus and Plutarch mention. In this caſe, would not Anaxagoras have flouriſhed at Athens, when Socrates was at the propereſt Age to chuſe him for his Profeſſor; and, if ſo, can any one conceive, that Socrates would attend the Lectures of Archelaus, and not Thoſe of This Philoſopher? Is it probable, that the former ſhould ſet up a School at Athens, whilſt Anaxagoras flouriſhed in the ſame City? Or, if he did, that Socrates would preſer his Lectures before Thoſe of Anaxagoras? Theſe Difficulties may all be ſolved, if it be ſuppoſed, that this latter was twice baniſhed; and that, in the Time, which paſſed between the two Condemnations, Archelaus philoſophized at Athens.

(10) Scalig. in Euſeb. n. 1554, pag. 103. Petavius Ration. Temporis, Pars I. lib. 3, cap. 8, pag. 140. Voſſius de Scient. Mathem. cap. 33, n. 4. p. 148.

(11) Diod. Sicul. lib. 12, cap. 39, pag. 433.

(12) Dieg. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 19.

(13) See the Article EURIPIDES, in the Text.

(14) See the Life of Socrates, by Mr Charpentier, pag. 5.

(15) Aulus Gellius, lib. 15, cap. 20.

(16) Citation (147) of the Article ANAXAGORAS.

(17) Plut. in Pericle, pag. 161, E.

(18) Lib. 12, cap. 39, pag. 433.

(19) Plut. in Pericle, pag. 169.

(20) Diog. Laërt. in Socrat. lib. 2. n. 19, 45.

(21) At the end of the Remark [R], of the Article ANAXAGORAS.

(22) See Citation (29), of the Article ANAXAGORAS.

There remains one Obſervation to be made againſt Plutarch. It muſt not be imagined, that he believed Anaxagoras died in the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad; For, when he relates the Prodigies, which preceded the Defeat of the Athenians at the River Ægos (23); he ſays, that, according to the Predictions of this Philoſopher, a great Stone fell from Heaven. This Misfortune of the Athenians happened in the fourth Year of the XCIIId Olympiad. It would be abſurd, to ſuppoſe, that Plutarch meant, that Anaxagoras had predicted the Fall of ſuch a Stone twenty Years before: He believed, then, that This Philoſopher lived 'till the XCIIId Olympiad. Now this is a great Error. I ſuſpect him much of an Anachroniſm, in placing the Fall of the Stone in the XCIIId Olympiad. Pliny, Euſebius, and the Arundelian Marbles, confute this. They place This Event in the LXXVIIIth Olympiad (24).

(23) Ibid. Citation (13).

(24) Pliny, in the ſecond Year. See Citation (138) of the Article ANAXAGORAS. Euſebius, in the fourth, and the Arundelian Marbles, in the fifth Year. See Hardouin, in Plin. Tom. 1, pag. 275.

Digitized by Google

of a Terreſtrial Matter, Hot and Moiſt [B]. He applied himſelf principally to Natural Philoſophy, as his Predeceſſors had done; but intermixed Morality with it a little more than They had done. He was not very Orthodox in this Point; ſince he maintained, that Human Laws were the Spring and Origin of Moral Good and Evil; that is, He did not admit a Natural, but only a Poſitive Right, and conſequently believed, that all Actions were indifferent in their own Nature, and became Good or Evil, according as Mankind is pleaſed to declare them ſuch by certain Laws (c). He wrote a Treatiſe of Natural Philoſophy, according to Suidas; and He paſſed for the Author of ſome Elegies, deſigned to comfort Cimon, who was very much afflicted for the Death of his Wife (d). Socrates, the moſt famous of his Diſciples, was his Succeſſor (e). It will be proper to take ſome Notice of a Poet, whoſe Name was ARCHELAUS [C]. Diogenes Laërtius mentions him; but he is contented with preſerving to us the Title of one of his Compoſitions.

(c) Τὸ δίκαιον εἶναι καὶ τὸ αἰσχρὸν οὐ φύσει, ἀλλὰ νόμῳ. Juſtum & turpe non natura conſtare ſed lege. Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 16.

(d) Plut. in Cimone, pag. 481.

(e) Cicero, Tuſcul. lib. 5. Diog. Laërt. ubi ſupra. Clem. Alexandr. Strom. lib. 1. pag. 301. Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2.

Such is the wretched State, in which the ſo much boaſted Ancients have left the Hiſtory of the Philoſophers. A thouſand Contradictions throughout, a thouſand inconſiſtent Facts, and a thouſand falſe Dates. Note, that I have not met with any Modern, who confutes thoſe, who place the Death of Anaxagoras in the LXXVIIIth Olympiad (25); I ſay, who confutes them by Diodorus Siculus, and Plutarch, who both affirm, that this Philoſopher was accuſed a little before the firſt Year of the Peloponneſian War (26).

(25) Diogenes Laërtius, lib. 2. n. 7, does ſo. Euſebius places it in the fourth Year of the 79th Olympiad.

(26) That is, in the ſecond Year of the 87th Olympiad.

[B] He alſo taught, like him, that all Animals, not excepting Men, were produced out of a Terreſtrial Matter, hot and moiſt.] The Accounts, preſerved to us, of theſe Opinions, in the Authors, who report them, are ſo conciſe, that it is difficult to form any diſtinct Idea of them. Γεννᾶσθαι δέ φησι τὰ ζῶα ἐκ θερμῆς τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἰλὺν παραπλησίαν γάλακτι, οἷον τροφὴν, ἀνιέσης. Οὕτω δὲ καὶ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ποιῆσαι (27). He taught, that Animals ſprung from a warm Earth, which ſent forth a kind of milky Subſtance, by way of Nouriſhment; and that Men had the ſame Original. Thus Diogenes Laërtius expreſſes himſelf. He had ſaid, that, according to this Philoſopher's Opinion, the two Cauſes of Generation were Heat and Moiſture (28). He had alſo explained, how Water, Air, Earth, and Fire, proceeded from theſe two Principles; but I own, I cannot comprehend the meaning of his Words, and therefore will not be at the Pains of tranſcribing them. Mr Menage, who inſerted them in his Commentary, without any Note upon them, ſeems to have been ignorant of their Meaning. Other Commentators have not been more ſucceſsful. They leave them to their Native Obſcurity. Let us do the ſame, and have recourſe to Plutarch, who has ſaid, that, according to Archelaus, the infinite Air, the Condenſation and Rarefaction of the Air, the one Fire, the other Water, were the Principles of all Things (29). Juſtin Martyr attributes very near the ſame Opinion to him (30). This ſeems to me to imply, that he held the Air to be the firſt Matter, and Fire and Water to be the Elements; but this was not his Opinion, if we may believe St Auſtin; for That Father attributes to him the Doctrine of Anaxagoras, concerning the Homœomeriæ, and the Intelligence, which combined them. "Anaxagoræ ſucceſſit auditor ejus Archelaus: etiam ipſe de particulis inter ſe diſſimilibus, quibus ſingula quæque fierent, ita omnia conſtare putavit, ut inceſſe etiam mentem diceret, quæ corpora diſſimilia, id eſt illas particulas, conjungendo & diſſipando, ageret omnia (31). —— To Anaxagoras ſucceeded his Scholar Archelaus; who held, likewiſe, ſuch an Opinion concerning the diſſimilar Particles, out of which all things were made, as to allow the Superintendency of a Mind, which, by uniting and diſperſing the diſſimilar Corpuſcles, formed every thing." I believe St Auſtin is in the right; for Simplicius obſerves, that Archelaus, endeavouring to give an Explication diſtinct from all others, did nevertheleſs run into the ſame Principles with Anaxagoras, to wit, an Infinity of ſimilar Particles (32). It is probable, that, as to the firſt Formation of Animals, they held the ſame Doctrines. We have ſeen what Archelaus's Opinion was; This was the Doctrine of Anaxagoras: Ζῶα γενέθαι ἐξ ὑγρῦ καὶ θερμῦ καὶ γεώδης. Ὕστερον δὲ ἐξ ἀλλήλων (33). Animals ſprung originally from Moiſture, Heat, and Earth; afterwards from one another. Since they admitted an Intelligence, which drew the Homœomeriæ out of the Confuſion, in which they originally were, we muſt believe, that they ſuppoſed, it to preſide over the Production of Animals; for, if there be any Creature, the Formation of which ſtands in need of being directed by a Spirit, it is certainly the Machine of Animals. If what I ſuppoſe be true, They have ſaid nothing on this Head, but what may be reconciled with the Holy Scripture; But if they believed, as many others have done, that, in the beginning, Men ſprung out of the Earth by the mere Power of Moiſture and Heat, &c. they believed the moſt ridiculous Thing in the World; nor could they know how to anſwer the Queſtion, why, in ſucceeding Ages, Men were never ſeen to be produced the ſame way. The Queſtion would not have puzzled them in the other Caſe, ſince they might have anſwered, as a Chriſtian would do, that the Intelligence, having once formed Animals, endowed with neceſſary Parts of Generation, had no need to create any more; the Conſervation of the Species being ſecured by the Inſtinct of Copulation in Male and Female.

(28) Inſtead of ψυχρὸν frigidum, it ought to be read ὑγρὸν, humidum. See Mr Menage on this Paſſage. But, note, that Hermias, in Philoſophorum deriſione, pag. 177, affirms, that Archelaus gave, as Principles of all Things, θερμὸν καὶ ψυχρὸν, Hot and Cold.

(29) Plutarch. de placit. Philoſ. lib. 1, cap. 3. pag. 876.

(30) Juſt. Martyr. Admonit. ad Græcos, p. 4.

(31) Aug. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8, cap. 2. See alſo Clem. Alex. in Protr. pag. 43.

(32) Simplicius, in I. Libr. Phyſic. Ariſt.

(33) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 9.

[C] It will be proper to take ſome notice of a Poet, whoſe name was ARCHELAUS.] He compoſed a Work on the particular Nature of Things, that is, on the Singularities and Properties, which diſtinguiſh them. What has been cited from it, will not ſuffer us to doubt, that this was the true Character of the Work. Diogenes Laërtius deſcribes it by theſe Words; Ὁ τὰ ἰδιοφυῆ ποήσας (34). Qui quæ cuique rei natura ſunt propria, verſu prodidit. Caſaubon ſhould not have cenſured this Latin Tranſlation, under pretence, that, according to the Teſtimony of Antigonus Caryſtius, this Book of Archelaus was a Collection of Epigrams, in which the extraordinary and wonderful Properties of things, τὰ παράδοξα, τὰ θαυμάσια (35), are recorded; for this may very well agree with the Title given it by Diogenes Laërtius; and, in any Caſe, the Tranſlator ought not to have given the Title a leſs general import, than that of the Greek Phraſe. Voſſius was not of Caſaubon's Opinion; ſince he has tranſlated the Words of Diogenes Laërtius by, qui carmen fecit de propria cujuſque rei natura (36). The Senſe he gives theſe Words does not ſeem very juſt; he underſtands by them, that Archelaus had ſearched after things, the Nature of which was ſingular; quæ propriæ ac ſingularis naturæ ſunt; as that Goats are never without a Fever, and that they breathe through the Ears, and not the Noſtrils. Auribus capras ſpirare, non naribus, nec unquam febri carere, Archelaus auctor eſt (37). Athenæus has cited one Archelaus, ἐν τοῖς ἰδιοφυέσσιν, and given him the Sirname of Cherſoneſian (38). Dalechamp has rendred this Greek by, ſua propriaque ſtirpe genitis (39); and I wonder Voſſius has not made uſe of the ſame Words in tranſlating this Paſſage, as in That of Diogenes Laërtius (40): He has rendered it de proprietate naturæ, and yet believes, that Athenæus, and Diogenes Laërtius, mean the ſame Author. This is very probable; though Antigonus Caryſtius tells us, that Egypt was the Birth-place of Archelaus, who compoſed Epigrams on the wonderful Singularities of certain Things, and dedicated them to Ptolomy. It is poſſible, that One Archelaus, a Native of Cherſoneſus, might paſs for an Egyptian; it is enough that he dwelt a long time in Egypt (41). Mr Menage, who pretends, that, inſtead of ἰδιοφυῆ, it ought to be read διφυῆ, in Diogenes Laërtius (42), ſeems to me to be miſtaken; he founds it on this, that the Scholiaſt of Nicander cites Archelaus, ἐν τοῖς διφυέσσι, that is to ſay, in libro de iis, quæ ſunt ancipitis naturæ.

(34) Ibid. lib. 2, n. 17.

(35) Caſaub. in Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 17.

(36) Voſſius de Hiſt. Græcis, lib. 3. pag. 329.

(37) Plin. lib. 8. cap. 50.

(38) Athen. lib. 9. cap. ult. p. 409.

(39) Dalech. Annot. in Athen. pag. 766. Father Hardouin, in indice Autorum Plinii, pag. 97, tranſlates the Words of Athenæus by de rebus quæ ſingulis in locis propria gignuntur.

(40) Voſſius, ubi ſupra.

(41) There are Examples of this kind. See Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 451.

(42) Menag. in Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 17.

Digitized by Google

naturæ. This Foundation is not ſolid; for, as the Book of Archelaus was not confined to that kind of Singularity, which diſtinguiſhes amphibious Animals, produced by the Copulation of Males and Females, of different Species, it is unreaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Author made uſe of a Title confined to this Senſe. We ſhould either correct the Scholiaſt by Diogenes Laërtius, or ſay, that Archelaus, having divided his Work into ſeveral Treatiſes, gave a particular Title to each Treatiſe; for Example, That of Διφυῆ to the Epigrams, in which he treats of amphibious Animals. On this Suppoſition, we may believe, that They, who cite Archelaus, Lib. I. περὶ ποταμῶν, de fluviis (43), Lib. I. περὶ λίθων, de lapidibus (44), cite part of a Work, the general Titie of which was Ἰδιοφυῆ. But I ſhould chuſe to ſay, that another Archelaus is meant in theſe Places. I do not paſs the ſame Judgment on the Citations of Artemidorus (45); I believe they relate to the Author of the Ἰδιοφυῆ.

(43) Stobæus, Serm. I. de morbis & moleſtiarum in eis ſolutione. Plutarch. de fluminib. pag. 1148, cites the 13*th Book of* Archelaus, περὶ ποταμῶν.

(44) Plutarch, ibid. pag. 1153.

(45) Artemidor. de Somn. lib. 4. cap. 24.

Let us, here, wonder at the Frailty of human Memory. Voſſius, in his Treatiſe of the Greek Hiſtoſtorians, ſpeaks learnedly of this Author; he ſets down what he finds of him in Varro, Pliny, Athenæus, Antigonus Caryſtius, &c. but remembers nothing of the Matter, when he afterwards comes to treat of the Greek Poets; where we read what follows: "Idem "(Archelaus Phyſicus) ut ait Suidas, συνέταξε φυ-"σιολογίαν *. Id ſic Lilius Gyraldus vertit in III. "Dialogo de Poëtis †: quæ naturæ propria ſunt, "multis verſibus collegit. Itaque & Archelaum inter "Poëtas recenſet. Sed addit, Poëtam phyſicum eſſe "alium ab Socratis magiſtro. At unde id aſtruat, "non video. Nam Suidas clare ait φυσιολογίαν "conſcriptam ab Archelao Phyſico, Socratis magi-"ſtro. Imò nec video, unde colligat, quempiam "Archelaum carmine ſcripſiſſe de rerum natura. Sal-"tem ex verbo συνέταξεν, quo Suidas utitur, id "colligi nequit. Et Laërtius, cùm dicat tres præ-"terea Archelaos fuiſſe, non tamen Poëtam in iis me-"morat (46). —— The ſame (Archelaus the Natura-"liſt), according to Suidas, compoſed a Treatiſe of Na-"tural Philoſophy; or, as Lilius Gyraldus underſtands "the Greek of Suidas, collected in many Verſes the "Properties of Nature. Therefore he reckons Arche-"laus among the Poets. But he adds, that the Phi-"loſophical Poet is not the ſame with the Preceptor of "Socrates. But how he can prove this, I am at a Loſs "to know. For Suidas expreſsly ſays, that the Treatiſe "of Natural Philoſophy was compoſed by Archelaus "the Naturaliſt, the Maſter of Socrates. Nay, I "cannot conceive, whence he gathers, that any Arche-"laus wrote of the Nature of Things in Verſe. At leaſt "it does not follow from the Word συνέταξεν, made "uſe of by Suidas. And Diogenes Laërtius, where he "ſays there were three Archelaus's beſides, yet men-"tions no Poet among them." Behold a very learned Man, who imagines, I. That Gyraldus had in view the Greek Words of Suidas, and not thoſe of Diogenes Laërtius, ὁ τὰ Ἰδιοφυῆ ποιήσας (47): II. That there was no Room to acknowledge a Poet Archelaus, different from the Naturaliſt: III. Nor to ſuppoſe, that an Archelaus wrote Verſes on the Nature of Things: IV. That Diogenes Laërtius does not mention any Archelaus, who compoſed Verſes. This muſt ſurprize us, if we conſider it by itſelf; but it is much worſe, when compared with the Three hundred and twenty ninth Page of the Book De Hiſtoricis Græcis. Mr Colomies has corrected the firſt of theſe four Faults of Voſſius, and advanced ſome good things beſides (48); but he is miſtaken in ſuppoſing, that Plutarch's Words, in the Life of Cimon, concern Archelaus the Poet, for they relate to the Naturaliſt, to whom Socrates was a Diſciple. He might have cenſured Gyraldus, who believed, that Archelaus, Author of the Ἰδιοφυῆ, was a Philoſopher. Mr Moreri ſays the ſame without the leaſt Ground; for a Perſon, who collects the ſingular and wonderful Properties of Animals, or Metals, &c. may well be called a Naturaliſt, or a Natural Hiſtorian, but not a Natural Philoſopher; unleſs to the Facts he ſubjoins the Reaſons of them, and a Diſcuſſion of their Cauſes. We do not find, that the Poet Archelaus did this. Mr Moreri affirms, that Diogenes Laërtius often cites him. Say rather, that he never cites him.

(47) Gyraldus has tranſlated them Quæ naturæ propria ſunt, multis verſibus collegit. This Verſion is not better, than thoſe below, Citat. (39).

(48) Colomeſius, Notæ in Gyrald. de Poëtis, pag. 147. Edit. Operum Gyraldi, 1696.

(46) Voſſius de Poët. Græcis, pag. 34.

* Compoſuit Philoſophiam.

† Pag. 108.

ARCHELAUS, Firſt of the Name (a), King of Macedon, and a Natural Son of King Perdiccas, having aſcended the Throne, ſupported himſelf in it by the moſt enormous Crimes. His Mother was a Servant of Alcetas, the Brother of Perdiccas [A]; ſo that, according to the Laws (b), he ought to have been himſelf no more than the Servant of Alcetas; but, inſtead of paying him the Submiſſion he owed him, he cauſed him to be treacherouſly murthered. He invited him to his Houſe, promiſing to reſtore to him the Crown, which Perdiccas had taken from him; he entertained him ſumptuouſly, and, having made him drunk, cauſed him to be carried out of Town by Night in a cloſe Chariot, with Orders to put him to Death. Alexander, the ſon of Alcetas, was treated in the ſame manner; He was conveyed drunk in the ſame Chariot, and murthered, with his Father. Archelaus ſoon after cauſed his own Brother, the Legitimate Son of Perdiccas and Cleopatra, and but ſeven Years of Age, to be put to Death, and thrown into a Well; making his Mother Cleopatra believe, that the Child fell in, as he was running after a Gooſe (c). He applied himſelf diligently to whatever might render Macedon formidable; he fortified ſeveral Places, cauſed high Roads to be made; providing himſelf alſo with great Quantities of Arms, Horſes, and all warlike Stores; exceeding the Kings his Predeceſſors in theſe Preparations (d). One Thing he put in practice, which They never did; to wit, the fitting out of Fleets, and engaging in Sea-Fights (e). He loved Learning and polite Arts [B], and had always the greateſt Poets, the moſt famous Painters, and the beſt Muſicians, about him (f). He was at a great Expence in having his Houſe painted by Zeuxes [C], and doubtleſs was very angry,

(a) Note, there are, who allow of but one Archelaus among the Kings of Macedonia.

(b) See Remark [A].

(c) Taken from the Gorgias of Plato, pag. 321.

(d) Thucydid. lib. 2. pag. 142.

(e) Solinus, cap. 9.

(f) See Remark [C].

[A] His Mother was Servant of Alcetas, Brother of Perdiccas (1).] Ælian calls her Simicha (2): But, after all, ſince Archelaus was the Son of the King of Macedon, it ought not to have been ſaid, that, from the Condition of a Goat-herd, he raiſed himſelf to the Throne. Yet this is what Diogenes the Cynic affirms, in a Speech of Dion Chryſoſtom. Αἰπόλῳ ἦν Ἀρχέλαος (3). Caprarius erat Archelaus. Obſerve theſe Words of Plato, which inform us, what Archelaus ought to have been according to the Laws. Κατὰ μὲν τὸ δίκαιον δούλῳ ἦν Ἀλκέτᾳ, καὶ εἰ ἐβούλετο τὰ δίκαια ποιεῖν ἐδούλευσεν ἄν Ἀλκέτᾳ (4). He was by right the Servant of Alcetas; if therefore he would have acted juſtly, he ſhould have ſerved Alcetas.

(1) Plato, in Gorgia, pag. 321.

(2) Ælian. Var. Hiſtor. lib. 12. cap. 43.

(3) Dio Chryſoſt. Orat. 4. de Regno.

(4) Plato, in Gorgia, pag. 321.

[B] He loved Learning, and polite Arts.] Solinus tells us this (5). I have cited his Words, in the Remark [N] of the Article EURIPIDES, at the Beginning. Add to them this Paſſage of Ælian. Ἦν δὲ ἄρα ὁ Ἀρχέλαος ἐρωτικὸς οὐκ ἧττον ἢ καὶ φιλόμουσος (6). Archelaus was no leſs amorous, than fond of Learning.

(5) Solin. cap. 9.

(6) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 21.

[C] He was at a great Expence in having his Houſe painted by Zeuxes.] Socrates plays the Cenſor upon this Occaſion; he ſays, that this Prince, who had been at ſuch a vaſt Expence in beautifying his Palace, had been at none at all in adorning his Mind. We know likewiſe, adds he, that many Strangers make it their Buſineſs to go to Macedon, to ſee this Prince's Houſe, but none to ſee the Prince himſelf, except angry, that Socrates, whom he endeavoured to draw to his Court, would never come near him [D]. He might have learnt from him not to be frightned at Eclipſes; and he wanted greatly to be ſet right in That Matter (g). The Eſteem he had for Euripides is ſhewn in another Place (b). By the way, his Liberality to ingenious Men was not extraordinary; but this might proceed from his finding them too free in asking [E]. He inſtituted Sacrifices, and Stage-Plays, in Honour of Jupiter, and the Muſes; which were celebrated for nine Days together; each Muſe had it's Day (i). He ſent Chariots with four Horſes, which carried the Prizes at the Olympic and Pythian Games (k). Authors agree as to his being killed, but not as to the Circumſtances of his Death, or the Length of his Reign [F]. Scaliger himſelf met (g) See Remark [D].

Digitized by Google

(b) In the Article EURIPIDES, Remarks [N], [O], [P], &c.

(i) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 17, cap. 16.

(k) Solinus, cap. 9.

except thoſe he draws thither by his Preſents. Now theſe are Things, which never influence an honeſt Man (7). I believe he had taken no Pains to conquer his lewd Inclinations, by cultivating the Muſes; but I am certain, that he made no mean Progreſs in adorning his Mind. And, by one of his Sayings, he ſeems to have made ſome Progreſs in Practical Virtue. One of his Courtiers animating him one Day againſt a Perſon, who had thrown ſome Water upon him; he anſwered, he has not wetted me, but the Perſon for whom he took me (8). Never Philoſopher, diſcourſing on the Privileges of an erroneous Conſcience, ſaid a more ſenſible Thing. All Princes would treat involuntary Faults in this manner, were they but equitable, or if the Intereſt of the Public would permit the regulating their Practice according to the Ideas of Reaſon (9). Let us leave this, and return to Socrates. In the foregoing Words, he declared ſeveral Men of Wit, who went to Macedon, only for Archelaus's Sake (10) errant Raſcals. Did Euripides go thither upon any other Account? Did not the fair Agathon, That illuſtrious Poet, and his Inamorato Pauſanias, and ſo many others, go thither purely upon this Account? Οὕτω ὁ Ἀγάθων - - - - - Ἀρχελάῳ τῷ βασιλεῖ μίσχει τελεύτης μέτα ἄλλων πολλῶν συνὴν ἐν Μακεδονίᾳ (11). This Agathon, with many others, reſided at the Court of Archelaus, 'till his Death.

(7) Taken from Ælian, lib. 14. Var. Hiſt. cap. 17.

(8) Plut. in Apophthegmat. pag. 177.

(9) See, in the New Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, thoſe, which treat of an erroneous Conſcience.

(10) Ælian. Var. Hiſtor. lib. 2. cap. 21.

(11) Schol. Ariſtoph. in Ranas.

[D] Socrates, whom he endeavoured to draw to his Court, would never come near him] There were two other Perſons, whom this Philoſopher treated after the ſame manner; he would neither viſit them, nor accept of Preſents from them. Ὑπερεφρόνησε δὲ καὶ Ἀρχελάου τοῦ Μακεδόνος, καὶ Σκῶπα τοῦ Κραννωνίου, καὶ Εὐρυλόχου τοῦ Λαρισσαίου, μήτε χρήματα προσιέμενος αὐτῶν, μήτε παρ' αὐτοὺς ἀπελθών (12). In the greatneſs of his Soul, he deſpiſed Archelaus the Macedonian, Scopa the Crannonian, and Eurylochus the Laryſſæan; nor would ever accept of the Preſents, which they ſent him, or the Invitation they gave him. Seneca has preſerved to us the Excuſe, which Socrates made to our Archelaus; he ſaid, "I will not viſit a Man, "from whom I may receive Benefits, without be- "ing able to return them." Archelaus rex Socratem rogavit, ut ad ſe veniret: dixiſſe Socrates traditur, nolle ſe ad eum venire, à quo acciperet beneficia, cum reddere illi paria non poſſet (13). This Anſwer of Socrates has been related by Marcus Aurelius, agreeably to the ſame Senſe (14); but Ariſtotle relates it in terms, which are not Philoſophical. He ſuppoſes Socrates to have replied, that It is as great an Affront to confer a Benefit on a Perſon, who cannot return it, as to injure a Perſon, who cannot revenge himſelf. Τὸ γὰρ εἶναι τὸ μὴ δύνασθαι ἀμύνεσθαι ὁμοίως εὖ πάσχοντα ὥσπερ καὶ κακῶς (15). Contumeliam eſſe dixit, non poſſe referre eum qui accepit beneficium, perinde ac eum qui injuriam. This Maxim ſuppoſes, that we ought to revenge ourſelves on thoſe, who injure us. It is not, therefore, becoming the Morality of a Philoſopher, eſpecially ſuch a Philoſopher as Socrates. Seneca has taken pains to ſhew, that it was eaſy for this Philoſopher to requite Archelaus. Among other things, he ſays, that the Favours of That Monarch could not have been of equal Value with the Inſtruction he might have received concerning Eclipſes alone, and which would have prevented his falling a ſecond time into ſuch a Conſternation, as he was one day in, when the Sun was eclipſed. He ſhut up his Palace Gates; he caus'd his Son's Hair to be cut off. "Quid "tantum erat accepturus (Socrates) quantum dabat, "ſi —— regem in luce media errantem ad rerum "naturam admiſiſſet, uſque eo ejus ignarum, ut, quo "die ſolis defectio fuit, regiam clauderet, & filium "(quod in luctu ac rebus adverſis moris eſt) tonderet? "Quantum fuiſſet beneficium, ſi timentem è latebris "ſuis extraxiſſet, & bonum animum habere juſſiſſet, "dicens; Non eſt iſta ſolis defectio, ſed duorum ſide- "rum coitus, cum luna humiliore currens via infra "ipſum ſolem orbem ſuum poſuit, & illum objectu "ſui abſcondit (16). —— What Benefit cou'd So- "crates have receiv'd ſo valuable as what he wou'd "have conferr'd; if he had explain'd the Nature of Things "to the miſtaken King; who was ſo ignorant of them, "that, upon the day of an Eclipſe of the Sun, he "ſhut up his Palace, and (as is practiſed in Affliction "and Adverſity) ſhaved his Son? What an Advantage "wou'd it have been to him, had the Philoſopher drag- "ged him trembling from his Concealment, and bad him "be of good Courage; telling him, This is no Failure "of the Sun, but the effect of the Moon's interpoſing be- "tween the Sun and Us, and by that means intercepting "it's Light?" Seneca ſays, that Socrates made this Excuſe by way of Irony only (17), and that, in reality, he refuſed to go to the Court of Macedon, becauſe he would not be abridged of his Liberty. "Vis "ſcire quid verè noluerit? Noluit ire ad voluntariam "ſervitutem, is, cujus libertatem civitas libera ferre "non potuit (18). —— Wou'd you know what in rea- "lity he refuſed? He refuſed to go to voluntary Ser- "vitude; He, whoſe Liberty a Free State could not "bear". Some ſay, that Ariſtophanes (19) compoſed the Comedy of the Clouds out of ſpite to Socrates, becauſe Archelaus, King of Macedon, had a better Opinion of This Philoſopher than of himſelf. Obſerve, that another turn has been given to Socrates's Anſwer. It has been ſaid, that he excus'd himſelf from going to Archelaus's Court, becauſe Bread was at a low Price, and great Plenty of Water at Athens (20).

(12) Diogenes Laërtius, lib. 2. n. 25.

(13) Seneca de Benef. lib. 5, cap. 6, pag. 96.

(14) Marcus Antoninus, τῶν εἰς ἑαυτὸν, lib. 11. §. 25. Note, that he ſuppoſes this Anſwer was made to Perdiccas.

(15) Ariſtot. Rhetor. lib. 2. cap. 23.

(16) Seneca de Benefic. lib. 5.

(17) Ibid.

(18) Ibid. pag. 95.

(19) Charpentier's Life of Socrates, pag. 57. He cites the Commentators on Ariſtophanes, in argumento illius Comœdiæ.

[E] His Liberality to ingenious Men, was not extraordinary, but this might proceed from his finding them too free in asking.] Plutarch tells us, that "Archelaus, King of Macedon, was a little too back- "ward in giving, or making of Preſents; which the "Muſician Timotheus gave him an Hint, by often "repeating, as he ſung to his Lute, this ſatirical "Sentence. You are too fond of This Son of the "Earth, Silver. But Archelaus immediately repli- "ed, genteely and with a good grace; And "You demand it of me too faſt (21)". In another Book he relates what I am going to tranſcribe. A certain Perſon once, who thought, that nothing was more genteel, than to ask and receive, being at Supper with Archelaus, King of Macedon, asked of the King a Golden Cup, out of which He drank. The King commanded his Page to preſent it to Euripides, who by accident was then at Table; and, turning to the Perſon, who had ask'd it, ſaid, "As for you, you deſerve to "ask, and be refuſed, becauſe you ask; but Euripides "deſerves to receive, even though he does not ask (22)". Perhaps he ſet bounds to his Liberality upon a Principle like That of Charles the IXth (23); But it is more probable he was of the Taſte of Cardinal Richlieu, who never gave any thing to the Poet Mainard, partly —— becauſe he did not love to be ask'd, but would have the Honour of giving of his own meer Motion (24).

(20) See Stobæus, Serm. 237.

(21) Plutarch. de Fortuna Alexandri. lib. 2.

(22) Id. de vitioſo pudore.

(23) See the Article DAURAT, Remark [F].

(24) Pelliſſon, Hiſt. de l'Acad. Françoiſe, pag. 278.

[F] Authors are not agreed —— As to the Circumſtances of his Death, or the Length of his Reign.] Some ſay, That, being a Hunting, he was accidentally wounded by his Favourite Craterus; and that he died of his Wound (25). Others ſay, that he was killed by Conſpirators, urged on by Decamnichus to commit This Parricide (26). Quintus Curtius favours this Opinion. He ſays, "Quis proavum hu- "jus Alexandrum, quis deinde Archelaum, quis Per- "diccam occiſos ultus eſt? (27) — Who ever reverged "the murthur of This Perſon's Great-Grand Father "Alexander, (25) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 14, cap. 38. I ſhall cite his Words in the laſt Remark.

(26) Ariſtot. lib. 5. de Repub. cap. 10. I have cited his Words in the Remark [N], of the Article EURIPIDES.

(27) Quintus Curtius, lib. 6. cap. 11.

Digitized by Google

met with so much Obscurity in these Points, as led him into gross Mistakes (l). Probably Archelaus led an impure Life, which occasion'd his Downfal [G]. I have a few Observations to make against Moreri [H].

(l) See Remark [F].

" Alexander, of Archelaus, or Perdiccas ?" —— I shall speak farther of This in the following Remark. As for the Length of his Reign, some make it Twenty Four Years (28); others Sixteen (29); others Fourteen (30); and others but Seven (31). This latter Opinion seems to me the most probable: It is That of Diodorus Siculus; and I am surpriz'd at Calvisius's citing this Historian, after having said, that Archelaus reign'd Sixteen Years (32). A misinterpreted Passage in Athenæus has occasion'd a great deal of Confusion. We read, in the Editions of That Author, that Pericles and Perdiccas died in the third Year of the Peloponnesian War, and that Archelaus ascended the Throne immediately after (33). It is impossible Athenæus should say this; for his Design is to convict Plato of a Mistake; Plato, I say, who, in the same Dialogue, where he supposes, that Archelaus was then on the Throne, affirms, that Pericles died but a little before. It is plain, that his Censor renders himself ridiculous; and does not know what he says, if he really advances what we read in his printed Works. Casaubon justly thinks it strange, that The Translators of Athenæus took no notice of so manifest an Absurdity, or could digest so hard a Morsel. Cum hæc clarissime disputentur ab Athenæo, quis interpretum stomacho non invideat, qui vulgatam loci hujus scripturam adeo εὐστομάχως tulerint (34)? For his own part, he confesses himself incapable of it, and, in spite of all the Manuscripts, maintains, that the Copyists of Athenæus have omitted a Period in That Place. He seems to me to have guessed very happily at what the Author really said; Namely, that Alexander, King of Macedon, who died at the same Time with Pericles, was succeeded by Perdiccas, who reign'd till the Archonship of Callias; and that Perdiccas, dying in That Archonship, Archelaus took possession of his Throne. In this Case, Athenæus criticises on Plato's Discourse not without some Foundation; for there is a considerable Interval between the Death of Pericles, and the Reign of Archelaus. Observe, by the way, that Casaubon has answered This Censure (35); but take particular notice, that Diodorus Siculus, in assigning to Archelaus Seven Years Reign, places his Death in the Second Year of the XCVth Olympiad, under the Archonship of Aristocrates. His Reign, then began, the third Year of the XCIIId Olympiad, under the Archonship of Callias. It must be said then, that Perdiccas died under the same Archonship. Now, among the Diversity of Opinions concerning the Time of the Reign of This Perdiccas, That of Marsyas and Philocorus, who determined it to Twenty three Years, was made choice of by Athenæus, in reasoning against Plato: He must, then, have supposed, that Perdiccas came to the Crown the same Year that Pericles died, that is, in the fourth Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad. All this is so strong a Confirmation of Casaubon's Opinion, that, instead of saying his Conjecture is very probable, we may affirm, without Hesitation, that the Period he restores did actually proceed from the Pen of Athenæus: And, as it contains the same Words twice or thrice at the end of a Sentence, we may easily apprehend, how the Transcribers might pass it over, and the Reader not perceive the Omission. Most People read to be instructed without Fatigue; so that they seldom are sensible of an Error in reasoning, which requires some Attention, or Reflexion on what went before; contenting themselves with saying, This is obscure, This is beyond my Comprehension. But this brings no Remedy; The Fault remains still where it was. Critics, and especially Critical Translators, act otherwise. They perceive Mistakes in the Sense; they endeavour to correct them; they collate Manuscripts; and exert their Talent for Conjecture. But in this Passage of Athenæus, as Casaubon reproaches them, the Edge of their Genius was greatly blunted.

(28) Euseb. in Chron. n. 1585. Helvicus embraces this Opinion.

(29) Calvis. ad Ann. Mundi, 3534.

(30) Petavius, Ration. Tempor. Pars II, lib. 2, sub fin. ex Dexippo.

(31) Diod. Sicul. lib. 14. cap. 38.

(32) Calvis. ad Annum Mundi, 3550, pag. 156, col. 2.

(33) Athen. lib. 5, cap. 18, p. 217.

(34) Casaub. in Athen. pag. 384.

(35) Casaub. ibid. pag. 385.

FAULTS of Scaliger.

The great Scaliger shall be my Proof, that the Genius of the most learned Persons may sometimes be very much confined. He did not perceive the manifest Error of the Author, on whom he commented and criticised; and has made This Error the Foundation of a Criticism on Diodorus Siculus, to whom he has imputed what is only to be met with in Athenæus. To explain This; Eusebius has ranged three Things under the first Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad; The Death of Perdiccas, The beginning of the Reign of Archelaus, and The beginning of the Peloponnesian War. Scaliger passes over this, and contents himself with observing, that the first Year of This War is generally placed under the second Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad, because, the Rupture falling out towards the end of the Archonship of Pythodorus, it was thought it ought to be dated from the Archonship of Euthydemus (36), the Successor of Pythodorus (37). According to this Usage, he confesses, that the Year of the Death of Pericles is the fourth of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad, and the third of the Peloponnesian War; and he cites a Greek Passage, which imports, that, in the Year of Pericles's Death, Perdiccas King of Macedon died also, and Archelaus ascended the Throne. He attributes this Passage to Diodorus Siculus; and, accordingly, censures him for an Anachronism of three Years. This proceeds from his supposing, that Eusebius is neither mistaken as to the Death of Perdiccas, nor the Accession of Archelaus. He was ignorant, then, that Thucydides had expressly said, that King Perseus was living in the sixteenth Year of the Peloponnesian War (38). Besides, he was ignorant, that the Words, which he ascribes to Diodorus Siculus, belong to Athenæus: He knew not, that these Words of Athenæus were corrupted; he did not perceive, that they are maimed, and that they ought to be read as Casaubon has restored them. Note, that Salmasius acknowledges for good Chronology the placing the Death of Perdiccas, and the beginning of Archelaus's Reign, in the fourth Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad (39). He was ignorant, then, of some things, which he might have learned from Casaubon; but note still more carefully, that, by a favourable Interpretation, one of the Points of my Criticism on Scaliger may be eluded, if not confuted. I have observed, that he has censured Diodorus Siculus; which I gathered from these Words: Diodoro ergo prochronismus fuerit triennii (40). - - - Diodorus therefore has anticipated three Years. They follow the Greek Passage, falsely ascribed by Scaliger to That Author; where we also find, that Perdiccas, dying in the third Year of the Peloponnesian War, was succeeded by Archelaus. Now, whereas Eusebius affirms, that Archelaus ascended the Throne in the first Year of the Peloponnesian War, it may be pretended, that Scaliger meant no more, than that the Doctrine of Eusebius contains an Anachronism or Anticipation of three Years, according to Diodorus Siculus. If this be his true meaning, he has not censured this latter Historian; he was satisfied with suspending Judgment, deciding neither in favour of him, nor of Eusebius: It will be a great Pleasure to me, if This Recantation be allowed to pass. A Critic, who takes Advantage of an equivocal Expression, ought not to omit the favourable Sense: He shews, by this means, what may be said for, or against, Authors: He sustains alternately the Character of Council for the Plaintiff and Defendant.

(36) It belongs to the second Year of the 87th Olympiad.

(37) Scaliger, Animadv. in Euseb. n. 1585, pag. 106.

(38) Thucydides, lib. 6, pag. 341.

(39) Salmas. Exercitat. Plin. pag. 256, 257.

(40) Scaliger, ubi supra.

[G] Probably Archelaus led an impure Life, which occasioned his Downfal.] Aristotle, having said, that several Conspiracies have been formed against Monarchs, on Account of their Impurities, immediately alledges the Attempt of Crateüs (41). This Man never could brook the Dishonour Archelaus had done him, in satisfying his Brutal Lust upon him. Accordingly a New Affront, which would not of itself have been a just Pretence for Conspiracy, being added to the former, he resolved to get rid of his Master. The Affront was this; the King had promised him one of his Daughters, and yet married the eldest to the King of Elymæa, and the youngest to the Son of Amyntas. Reasons of State occasioned this Breach of Promise. Finding himself embroiled in a War with Sirras, and Arrabeüs, he had a Mind to gain over the King of Elymæa to his Party. Fearing, on the other hand, that the Son of Amyntas would raise Disturbances, he made him his Son-in-law too; hoping (41) Aristot. lib. 5 de Republica, cap. 10. pag. 305.

Digitized by Google

hoping, that this Alliance would keep them united, and produce the ſame Effect with regard to the Son of Cleopatra. Upon this, Crateüs gave a looſe to his Reſentment; but the principal Source of his Hatred proceeded from the Injury he had received in his Body. Ἀλλὰ τῆς γε ἀλλοιεότητος ὑπῆρχεν ἀρχὴ τὸ βαρέως φέρειν πρὸς τὴν ἀφροδισιαστικὴν χαριν (42). Sed alienationis origo & principium fuit, quod graviter tuliſſet ſe ejus libidini ad res venereas fuiſſe obſecutum. Hellanocrates of Lariſſa joined with him in this Conſpiracy on the like Motives; for, having given up the Flower of his Youth to the Paſſions of Archelaus, and perceiving, that This did not avail towards recalling him from Exile, as That Prince had made him hope, he concluded, that his Perſon had not been made uſe of, from an Effect of Love, but meerly to diſhonour him. Διὰ ὕβριν καὶ ὃτι ἐρωτικὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ὥετο εἶναι τὴν γενηθεῖσαν ὁμιλίαν (43). Conſuetudinem illam ſecum eſſe inſtitutam non propter cupiditatem amatoriam ſed propter contumeliam exiſtimavit. Obſerve, that Plutarch informs us, That Crateüs, the Minion of Archelaus, killed That Prince (44). Plato ſays the ſame; but without naming this Murderer, and Catamite; he only ſays, that the Murderer committed This Crime, in order to ſeize on the Crown, and that it was wreſted from him again in three or four Days by other Conſpirators (45). I wonder Diodorus Siculus ſhould relate the Death of This King of Macedon, and it's Conſequences, in a manner ſo different from This. Plato and Ariſtotle, who lived nearer the Time and Place, where theſe Things were tranſacted, probably knew the Truth much better than He.

(42) Id. ib.

(43) Id. ib.

(44) Plut. in Amatorio, pag. 768, F.

(45) Plat. in Alcibiad. poſteriore, pag 453. See alſo Ælian. Var. Hiſtor. lib. 8, cap. 9.

I have obſerved ſome Faults in the Commentary of Giſanius on this Paſſage of Ariſtotle. I. This Author affirms, that Suidas takes notice, in the Article of Euripides, that Cratevas took away the Life of his Lover, King Archelaus (46). This is not true: Suidas mentions Cratevas only as a Poet, who, together with Arrhideus, another Poet, contrived the Death of Euripides. II. Inſtead of ſaying, that Plutarch, in Alcibiade poſteriore, and Plato, in commentario de rebus amatoriis (47), have mentioned the Murther of Archelaus, The Alcibiades poſterior ſhould have been aſcribed to Plato, and The Commentary de rebus amatoriis to Plutarch. III. It is not true, that Thucydides, in his fourth Book, mentions Archelaus's War with Sirras and Arrhibæus (48): He ſpeaks only of the War, which King Perdiccas, and Braſidas, made againſt Arrhibæus, King of Macedonia, ſirnamed Lyncestes. IV. It is falſe, that Suidas has any where placed Arrhibæus in the Number of the Conſpirators againſt the Life of Archelaus; he only ſays, that the Poet Cratevas was aſſiſted by another Poet, whoſe Name was Arrhibæus, to deſtroy Euripides. V. He ſhould not have called the firſt Son-in-law of Archelaus King of Elibæa, but King of Elimæa (49).

(46) Obertus Giſanius, in cap. 10, lib. 5, Politic. Ariſtot. pag. 669.

(47) Id. ib.

(48) De hoc bello Archelai adverſum Sirram & Arribæum —— videatur Thucyd. lib. 4. Giſan. in Polit. Ariſtot. pag. 669.

(49) Id. ib.

[H] A few Obſervations —— againſt Moreri.] I. It is not true, that Archelaus ſucceeded Perdiccas, in the Year of the World 3641. For, according to Moreri, This Year of the World anſwers to the Three hundred fifty firſt Year of Rome. Now This Year of Rome anſwers to the ſecond Year of the XCIVth Olympiad; and we have already ſeen, that, according to Diodorus Siculus, Archelaus muſt have begun to reign in the third Year of the XCIIId Olympiad. II. It is not true, that Juſtin mentions our Archelaus: He, whom he mentions, was Uncle of Alexander the Great, and never was King. We need not, therefore, be ſurprized, that he does not ſpeak of the time of his Reign. III. It is not true, that he reckons him among the Sons, which Perdiccas had by Eurydice: He reckons him among the Sons of Amyntas and Gygea; Of Amyntas, I mean, the Father of Philip, and Grandfather of Alexander the Great. IV. Neither what Juſtin has ſaid, nor what he has omitted, are a Proof, that he has confounded Archelaus, the Grandfather, with Archelaus, the Grandſon; for he ſpeaks only of an Archelaus, who was not the Grandſon of our's. V. It is a ſtrange Miſtake to place the Death of our Archelaus in the CXVIIth Olympiad, and to make This Olympiad correſpond with the Three hundred ſixty fifth Year of Rome. VI. It ought not to have been affirmed, that The Archelaus, who reigned after Oreſtes, was his Son, and Grandſon of Archelaus; for, beſides that Euſebius is little followed in regard to This Archelaus, Second of the Name, he does not mention any Degree of Conſanguinity. What follows, concerns the Supplement of Moreri. There we find, that Socrates would not come near Archelaus on account of his Tyranny and Inhumanity. Count This for the VIIth Miſtake; for we have ſeen above (50), that this was not the Reaſon, which prevented Socrates from going to the Court of Macedon. The VIIIth Miſtake conſiſts in charging Thucydides, and Diodorus Siculus, with ſaying, that Euripides, being deſired to write a Tragedy on the Subject of Archelaus, declined it, as being unwilling to deſcribe the Cruelties of This Tyrant. It is very certain, that neither Thucydides, nor Diodorus Siculus ſay any thing like this; and I queſtion, whether any good Author among the Ancients gives any Hint of it; Did ever any Prince deſire a Tragedy to be wrote on himſelf? Cannot a Court Poet write a Tragedy to pleaſe his Maſter, by omitting the Cruelties of This Maſter? IX. The Favourite, who killed Archelaus, is called Craterus in Diodorus Siculus (51); This, then, is the Name, which ought to have been given him, and not That of Crateüs, or Cratevas; ſince Diodorus Siculus is the only Author quoted concerning him. X. For the ſame Reaſon, I aſſert, it ought not to have been ſaid, that he form'd a Conſpiracy againſt Archelaus, and that he killed him in revenge for a Breach of Promiſe. The Continuator of Moreri ſays, that Archelaus promis'd his Daughter to this Favourite, and afterwards married her to another. Since he quotes only Thucydides and Diodorus Siculus; the firſt of which has not ſaid a Word of this Matter, and the latter relates, that this Favourite wounded his Maſter inadvertently (52); he deſerves a little Cenſure; for I confeſs had he quoted Ariſtotle, he would have been ſufficiently juſtified. See the Preceeding Remark. XI. Diodorus, whom he quotes, calls Him, who reigned after Archelaus, Oreſtes (53): why then are we told, that This Prince had a Son of the ſame Name, who ſucceeded him? XII. This Hiſtorian adds, that Oreſtes was yet a Child, and that he was killed by his Tutor Æropus, who afterwards reigned Six Years. Why then do they make him ſay, that Archelaus the Second, Son of Archelaus the Firſt, ſucceeded his Father, and reigned but four Years; and was kill'd in Hunting, by Craterus, one of his Confidents, who afterwards took poſſeſſion of the Crown; tho' he enjoyed it but Three Days? So many Words, ſo many Faults.

(50) In Remark [C].

(51) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 14, cap. 38.

(52) Ἀρχέλαος ὁ βασιλεὺς ὑπό τινι κυνηγίῳ πληγεὶς ἀκουσίως ὑπὸ Κρατεροῦ τοῦ ἐρωμένου. Archelaus rex venationi indulgens à Cratero quem in deliciis habebat IMPRUDENTER ſauciatus. Id. ibid.

(53) Id. ib.

ARCHELAUS, King of Cappadocia, in the Reign of Auguſtus, was Great Grandſon to Archelaus, a Cappadocian by Nation (a), and General of Mithridates's Army, in Greece, againſt Sylla. This General, who had ſo ſignalized himſelf in Defence of the Pirœum (b), quitted Mithridates's Party in the ſecond War, and went over to the Romans. He left a Son of his own Name, who, upon notice, that the Romans deſigned to attack the Parthians, repaired to Gabinius, Governor of Syria, to engage himſelf in That Expedition (c). The Senate laid aſide the Deſign, and Gabinius's Army marched to reſtore the King of Egypt (d), who had implored the Aſſiſtance of the People of Rome, to recover his Crown from his own Daughter Berenice. Archelaus accompanied Gabinius to This War; but, afterwards, left him, to go to Alexandria, where he married Berenice [A]. He did not long enjoy the Crown, which

(a) Plutarch. in Sylla, pag. 466, C.

(b) Appian. in Mithridate. See the laſt Remark.

(c) Strabo, lib. 12, pag. 384. and lib. 17, pag. 547. Dio, lib. 39.

(d) His Name was Ptolomy Auletes.

[A] He married Berenice.] We ſhall make an Article of This Princeſs, and there examine, whether Father Norris ought to have ſaid, that ſhe gained over Archelaus to her Party, by promiſing to marry him.

[B] He

Digitized by Google

which he acquired by This Marriage; for, about six Months after, he lost his Life (c), in a Battel against the Troops of Gabinius, in the Year of Rome 698 [B]. He had obtained from Pompey a very honourable Dignity [C]; namely the Pontificat of Comana, in Cappadocia (f). His Son Archelaus enjoyed it after him (g), until Cæsar turned him out in the Year of Rome 707, in order to give it to another [D]. The rest of his Adventures are unknown; except that he was married to a very beautiful Woman, whose Name was Glaphyra; and had two Sons by her, one called Sisinna, and the other Archelaus. The first disputed the Kingdom of Cappadocia with Ariarathes, who was in Possession of it. Marc Antony was made Judge of this Dispute, in the Year of Rome 713; and gave it in favour of Sisinna (b). The Fair Sex had too great an Influence over him, and Glaphyra was too beautiful for This Tryal to have any other Issue. Some Historians treat her as a Courtezan (i); which makes it the easier to apprehend, why Marc Antony gave Judgment in favour of Sisinna. But, how probable soever This Calumny may seem, it is not impossible, that the Friendship Marc Antony had for That Archelaus, who married Berenice (k), might induce him act as he did. It is not known what became of Sisinna; but it is certain, that Ariarathes re-ascended the Throne of Cappadocia; for Marc Antony was obliged to dispossess him a second Time, in the Year of Rome 718; and, then, conferred the Kingdom on ARCHELAUS, the Son of Glaphyra (l). This is He, who appears at the Head of this Article. He became very powerful (m), and expressed his Acknowledgments to his Benefactor Marc Antony, by supplying him with fine Troops during the Attic War (n). He was so happy, as not to disoblige Augustus by it; so that he remained in Possession of Cappadocia, and was almost the only Person, to whom so much Favour was shewn (o). He assisted Tiberius, in the Year 734, to re-establish Tigranes in Armenia (p), and obtained the lesser Armenia, and a good Part of Cilicia, from Augustus (q). He fixed his Residence in the Island of Eleusa [E], near the Coast of Cilicia; and, having married Pythodoris, the Widow of Polemon, King of Pontus, he encreased his Power considerably; for, as the Sons of Polemon were yet but Infants, he had, without Doubt, the Administration of the Kingdom, jointly with the Queen, their Mother [F]. He signalized himself, after an extraordinary manner, in making his Court to Caius Cæsar, when sent into the East by his Grandfather Augustus (r). This proved very fatal to him in the end [G]; for

(c) Strabo, lib. 17, pag. 547.

(f) Id. lib. 17, pag. 384.

(g) Id. ib.

(b) Appian. lib. 5. Belli Civilis, pag. 675.

(i) See the Article GLAPHYRA.

(k) Plutarch. in Anton. pag. 917.

(l) Dio, lib. 49, pag. 409.

(m) See Remark [I], towards the end.

(n) Plutarch. in Anton. pag. 944.

(o) Dio, lib. 51, init.

(p) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 15, cap. 5.

(q) Dio, lib. 54, ad Ann. 734. See also Strab. lib. 12, pag. 368, 382, and lib. 14, pag. 461.

(r) In the Year of Rome, 755.

[B] He lost his Life, in a Battle against the Troops of Gabinius.] This does not agree with the Seventeenth Book of Strabo, where we read, that Ptolomy, being restored to his Kingdom, put his Daughter, and Son-in-law Archelaus, to Death. I shall make it appear, in the Article Berenice, that Strabo is mistaken in this, and that he has contradicted himself. You may boldly pronounce these Words of Moreri to be false; Ptolomy, being restored in 699, put Archelaus and Berenice to Death.

[C] He obtain'd from Pompey a very honourable Dignity.] Father Norris says, that the Pontiff of Comana was Sovereign of the Place. "Hunc Archelaum Pompeius Sacerdotem Bellonæ, ac Comanorum principem (utraque enim dignitas uni eidemque conferebatur) constituerat, cuivis Dynastæ parem opibus, ex Appiano in Mithridat. p. 252. (1)". "—— Pompey appointed This Archelaus Priest of Bellona, and Prince of Comana (for both Dignities were conferred upon one and the same Person) A Post, equal in Revenue to That of a Dynast, according to Appian, in Mithridat, p. 252". We shall examine in another Place, whether this be Right (2).

(1) Norris, Cenotaph. Pisan. pag. 255.

(2) In the Article COMANA.

[D] Cæsar turned him out —— to give his Post to another.] Hirtius relates, that Cæsar disposed of this Benefice in favour of Nicomedes, who made it appear, that he had very just Pretensions to it. "Id homini nobilissimo Nicomedi Bythinio adjudicavit, qui regio Cappadocum genere ortus, propter adversam fortunam majorum suorum jure minimè dubio, vetustate tamen intermisso, sacerdotium id repetebat (3)". —— He adjudged it to an illustrious Person, Nicomedes of Bythinia, who, being descended from the Kings of Cappadocia, justly laid claim to This Priest-hood, which, thro' the misfortunes of his Ancestors, had been for a long time lost to his Family". Father Norris affirms, that Cæsar conferr'd this Dignity on Lycomedes, after his Victory over Pharnaces; but They, who think fit to consult Hirtius, will easily find, that it was disposed of before the Battle. As for the Name of Lycomedes, it is to be found in the Editions of Strabo (4). It is also certain, that, in Dion, we meet with a Lycomedes, divested of his Estate by Augustus, after the Flight of Marc Antony (5), and, perhaps, the Same, whom Cæsar raised to the Pontificate of Comana; for he reigned in a Part of Cappadocia. The Epithet Bythinius, which Hirtius makes use of, favours more the Reading Nicomedes (6), than Lycomedes.

(3) Hirtius de bello Alexandrino, pag. 416.

(4) Lib. 12. pag. 384.

(5) Lib. 54. init.

[E] He fix'd his Residence in the Island of Eleusa.] This we learn from Strabo, and Josephus. "Post Corycum Eleusa insula est continenti propinqua. Eam Archelaus condidit, ac regiam sibi fecit, cum totam Ciliciam excepta Seleucia esset nactus (7). —— Next to Corycus is the Island Eleusa, close by the Continent. Archelaus fixed his Residence there, after having made himself Master of All Cilicia, except Seleucia". Josephus observes, that Herod, having landed at Eleusa in Cilicia, found Archelaus King of Cappadocia there (8). It was there that the Envoys of Herod received Orders to carry the Letter, which he wrote to Archelaus (9). The same Historian observes, that Eleusa was called Sebasta (10). Might not Archelaus, in compliment to Augustus, make this Alteration in the Name?

(6) It is that of the Edition of Appian, in Mithridat. sub. fin.

(7) Strabo, lib. 14, pag. 461.

(8) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 16, cap. 8.

(9) Ibid. cap. 16.

[F] He had, without doubt, the Administration of the Kingdom jointly with the Queen their Mother.] Father Norris positively affirms this (11); I have chosen to make use of an Expression, which imports, not that this Fact is to be found in the Ancient Writers, but that it appears to be very agreeable to Reason. What makes me express my self with some Caution, is, that Strabo says nothing more, than that Pythodoris lived with her Husband Archelaus, during his Life. Αὐτὴ δὲ συνώκησεν Ἀρχελάῳ καὶ συνέμεινεν ἐκείνῳ μέχρι τέλους (12). Ipsi Archelao nupsit, & cum eo dum is in vivis permansit vitam exegit. She knew how to command; it is not impossible, then, that she might have governed The Estates of her Children Alone. Γυνὴ σώφρων καὶ δυναμένη πράττειν τὰ δέοντα (13). Prudens mulier & præesse rebus gnara.

(10) Ibid. cap. 8.

(11) Norris, Cenotaphy Pisan. pag. 227. He quotes no Authority.

(12) Strabo, lib. 12, pag. 383.

(13) Idem. pag. 382.

[G] This proved very fatal to him in the End.] I have observed more than once, that Persons, whom we slight, are often destined by Providence to the highest Stations (14). Unhappy for Those, who have treated them with Contempt. Few are so reasonable, as Lewis the XII, who said, that a King of France ought not to revenge the Injuries done to a Duke of Orleans. Our Archelaus acted like a Politician: He knew, that Augustus loved his Grandson tenderly; And, in all probability, That young Prince was to succeed

(14) See the end of the Text, and Remark [B] of the Article APOLLODORUS the Architect.

Digitized by Google

for Tiberius, recollecting, that he had paid him no Civilities during his Stay at Rhodes; and that, on the other ſide, Caius Cæſar had received a thouſand Marks of Reſpect from him, reſolved to be revenged, as ſoon as he found himſelf Maſter of the Empire; accordingly he ſummoned him to appear at Rome, and appointed the Senate as Judge [H] of the Accuſations, which ſhould be brought againſt him. But Age, the Gout, and, above all, the Indignity of the Treatment he met with, ſoon broke his Heart, before the Senate had pronounced any Sentence againſt him. Some believe, that he eſcaped the Sentence of the Senate, by feigning himſelf mad [K]. He died in the Year of Rome 770, and the Fifty ſecond of his Reign; after which Cappadocia became ceed his Grand-father. Tiberius was in ſome kind of Diſgrace, in the Iſland of Rhodes, which did not ſeem to preſage him the Empire. Archelaus believed he hazarded nothing in neglecting Him, and, beſides, had intimations, that it might be dangerous to cultivate his Friendſhip. He look'd upon all the Honours he paid to Caius Cæſar as a ſure Fund of Advantages, and Rewards for Life. But he was miſtaken; and little conſidered the Artfulneſs of Livia, in paving her Son's way to Empire. Caius, and his Brother, did not live long; and probably ſhe knew the Reaſon of it. After all, it is often the trueſt Policy to pay One's court, even when They are in Diſgrace, to Thoſe, whom we ſee in the Road to High Preferment (15). Let us produce Authorities, which inform us of Tiberius's Reſentment. "Rex Archelaus, "ſays Tacitus (16), quinquageſimum annum Cappado- "cia potiebatur, inviſus Tiberio, quod eum Rhodi "agentem nullo officio coluiſſet: Nec id Archelaus "per ſuperbiam omiſerat, ſed ab intimis Auguſti "monitus, quia florente Caio Cæſare, miſſoque ad "res Orientis, intuta Tiberii amicitia credebatur.—— "King Archelaus had reigned fifty Years in Cappa- "docia, being odious to the Emperor Tiberius, to "whom he had neglected to pay his Court, when in "the Iſland of Rhodes. Not that Archelaus's omiſſi- "on was the Effect of Pride, but owing to the Ad- "vice of Thoſe about Auguſtus; who thought it not "ſafe for him to cultivate the Friendſhip of Tiberius, "whilſt Caius Cæſar was in ſuch high Favour, and "had the Command of Affairs in the Eaſt." Dion Caſſius ſays almoſt the ſame thing. "Tiberius Cap- "padociæ regem Archelaum, infenſus ei, quia, cum "olim ſibi is ſupplicaſſet, ſuoque patrocinio uſus, cum "ab incolis apud Auguſtum accuſaretur, fuiſſet, Rho- "di ſe neglexiſſet, ac Caium in Aſia venientem "officioſe coluiſſet, inſimulatum, quaſi novis rebus "ſtuderet, evocavit Romam (17). —— Tiberius, be- "ing incenſed againſt Archelaus, King of Cappadocia, "who, notwithſtanding the Protection he had afforded "him, when his Subjects accuſed him to Auguſtus, "had yet neglected him at Rhodes, and officiouſly paid "his Court to Caius Cæſar, upon his arrival in "Aſia, cited him to appear at Rome, where he was "accuſed of plotting againſt the State." We learn from this Paſſage, that Tiberius complained, not only of Archelaus's want of Reſpect, but alſo of his Ingratitude. The Circumſtance of the Place might contribute to exaſperate the Emperor; for the Iſland of Eleuſa, where Archelaus reſided, was but Fifteen thouſand Paces * diſtant from Rhodes (18).

[H] He ſummoned him to appear at Rome, and appointed the Senate as Judge.] Dion relates this; Inſimulatum, quaſi novis rebus ſtuderet, evocavit Romam, ac Senatus judicio tradidit (19). He was accuſed of a Crime againſt the State. Tacitus does not ſeem to be of this Opinion; he intimates very plainly, that Tiberius complained only of Archelaus's Incivility, and encouraged him, by Letters from his Mother, to hope, that, by his Preſence and Intreaties, he might obtain Pardon. Ut verſa Cæſarum ſobole imperium adeptus eſt, elicit Archelaum matris literis, quæ non diſſimulatis offenſionibus clementiam offerebat, ſi ad precandum veniret (20). This Frankneſs, with regard to Perſonal Offences, covered a moſt dangerous Snare. Either the King of Cappadocia did not perceive it, or durſt not act, as if he did. He repair'd immediately to Rome; was very coldly received by Tiberius; and found himſelf ſoon after in the hands of Juſtice. Ille ignarus doli, vel ſi intelligere crederetur vim metuens, in urbem properat, exceptuſque immiti à principe, & mox accuſatus in Senatu (21). Suetonius (22) has ſpoken of this Action of Tiberius only in general Terms. "Reges infeſtos "ſuſpectoſque comminationibus magis & querelis "quam vi repreſſit: quoſdam per blanditias atque "promiſſa extractos ad ſe non remiſit, ut - - - Archelaum Cappadocem. —— Thoſe Kings, whom he "hated and ſuſpected, he repreſſed by Threatning and "Complaints, rather than by Force. Some, whom he "got into his Power by Soothing and Promiſes, he "never ſent back —— as Archelaus the Cappado- "cian." I Queſtion whether Archelaus, notwithſtanding his Age, was not tempted to raiſe ſome Commotions after the Death of Auguſtus; for mention is made of One of his Plots (23), which could only relate to That time.

[I] His Age, the Gout, but, above all, the Indignity of the Treatment he met with, broke his Heart.] Let us hear Tacitus. "Mox accuſatus in Senatu, "non ob crimina quæ fingebantur, ſed angore, ſimul "feſſus ſenio, & quia regibus æqua nedum infima "inſolita ſunt, finem vitæ ſponte an fato implevit.— "Being afterwards accuſed in the Senate, tho' he was "not condemned for the Crimes alledged againſt him, "which indeed were fictitious; yet Affliction of Mind, "together with Old Age, and a Fate uncommon to "Kings, put an end to his Days; whether by a volun- "tary or natural Death, is uncertain." This Hiſtorian does not know, whether Archelaus killed himſelf, or only ſunk under the Weight of his Misfortunes; but from his Relation it appears, that This Prince was not condemned, and conſequently not put to Death. Dion will inform us of more Circumſtances.

[K] Some believe, that he eſcaped the Sentence of the Senate, by feigning himſelf mad.] Dion affirms, that Archelaus, bending under the Weight of Years, paſſed for a Dotard; that, nevertheleſs, he had all his Senſes perfect; but counterfeited the Madman, becauſe he ſaw no other means of ſaving his Life (24); that he would yet have ſuffered Death, had not a falſe Witneſs accuſed him of Threatning Words, and of ſaying, that, when he ſhould return to his Kingdom, he would ſhew Tiberius, that he did not want Courage. This occaſioned Laughter, and diverted Tiberius from his Deſign of putting him to Death. He was ſo weak, and worn out, that they were obliged to carry him in a Litter to the Senate-Houſe. Dion adds, that, for this Time, Archelaus eſcaped Death; but that he died ſoon after. Dion does not contradict the Text of this Remark; for, if the falſe Witneſs ſaved Archelaus's Life, it was only becauſe it was judged, that the Threats of a ſuperannuated, decay'd, old Man, were certain Proofs of a Delirium, of Dotage, and a ſecond State of Childhood, &c. By this it appears, that Xiphilin had not the beſt Judgment, when he ſuppreſſed the the feigned Madneſs of Archelaus. This is a Fact which ought not to be omitted by the moſt conciſe Writers. David, Brutus, and others, have ſucceſsfully put in practice this kind of Diſſimulation; They are, therefore, remarkable Adventures, and ſuch as an Abbreviator ought to retain. Let us not omit what Dion obſerves, that Archelaus had really been next to an Idiot, ſome time before; witneſs Auguſtus's appointing him a Governor, who was Regent of his Kingdom. I cannot ſay, whether it was on This Occaſion, that he had recourſe to the Protection of Tiberius. He ſued for it, when he was accuſed by his Subjects: But might they not have repreſented him as a Fool, at a Time, when he had Reaſon enough left to deſire not to be put under Tuition; and to maintain, that it was out of Malice alone, that his Subjects endeavoured to repreſent him as unfit to govern? It is difficult to clear up this Matter. The Ancient Hiſtorians ſo accuſtomed themſelves to relate Things only in the Groſs, that they afford but little Light into ſome of the more minute Particulars. Their Method is very good; however, there is an Art

(15) This was Pomponius Atticus's Rule. See the Remark [A] of his Article.

(16) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 24.

(17) Dion. lib. 57.

* Fifteen Miles.

(18) Strab. lib. 14, pag. 448.

(19) Dion, ubi ſupra.

(20) Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 42.

(21) Id. ib.

(22) Suet. in Tiber. cap. 37. See alſo Eutropius, l. 7.

(23) Philoſtr. in Vit. Apoll. lib. 1. cap. 7.

(24) Mr de Tillemont. Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 1, pag. 107, falſely charges Dion, with ſaying, that Archelaus was acquitted by the Senate, upon his counterfeiting Madneſs.

Digitized by Google

came a Province [L]. His Family boaſted of a moſt Ancient and Noble Extraction [M]. We ſhall take ſome notice of his Poſterity in the Article of Glaphyra. There is reaſon to think, that he was Author of ſome books [N]. His Addreſs, in appeaſing Herod's fierce Anger againſt his Son Alexander, is a proof of his Abilities on ſome Occaſions (s). Some have confounded him with ARCHELAUS, the Son of Herod [O]. I cannot find, that Eutropius ſays, what a modern Author imputes to him, that ARCHELAUS, at his Death, bequeath'd his Kingdom to the people of Rome; and that Cappadocia was reduc'd into a Province by this Title (t). Mr de Tillemont might have been very certain of a thing, which he ſeems to doubt of; to wit, that the ſame ARCHELAUS, who was King of Cappadocia, obtain'd, by the Favour of Auguſtus, Part of Cilicia, and the leſſer Armenia. Mr Moreri has been guilty of ſeveral Faults of Omiſſion in this Article. His Continuator has been guilty of but One of Commiſſion; but ſuch an one, as will match with any Four

(s) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 16, cap. 12, & de bello Jud. lib. 1, cap. 17.

(t) Noldius, de vita & geſtis Herodum, pag. 194.

(u) Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 1, pag. 33.

Art of ſpecifying Facts in few Words, and by the by; which would be of great Uſe, if Writers had the Will, or the Skill, to practiſe it. One Hiſtory in Folio, might, by the Help of this Art, prevent numberleſs Diſputes, and clear up a great Variety of Particulars, without conſiſting of above fifty Pages.

[L] After which Cappadocia became a Province]. Velleius Paterculus, Tacitus, Dion, and ſeveral others, expreſsly aſſert this (25). The proper Terms of the three firſt are theſe. " Tib. Cæſar —— ut has armis, ita auctoritate Cappadociam populo Romano Stipendiariam fecit (26). —— Tiberius Cæſar —— as he reduced theſe by Force, ſo by his Authority he made Cappadocia tributary to the Romans. —— Regnum in Provinciam redactum eſt (27). —— The Kingdom was reduced into a Province. —— Paulo poſt obiit (Archelaus), ac inde Cappadocia quoque Romanorum juris effecta eſt, Equitique regenda data eſt (28). —— Soon after, Archelaus died; from which time Cappadocia likewiſe became a Roman Province, and was under the Government of a Knight." It was Germanicus, who executed this Order (29). Appian was very much miſtaken, in ſaying, that the Kingdom of Cappadocia, was reduced into a Province under Auguſtus (30). Father Norris, who corrected this Miſtake of Appian, has diſcovered two very conſiderable Faults in Riccioli, one in point of Genealogy, the other in point of Chronology (31). The Words, which he produces from That Author, are theſe: " Summoto Mithridate, creatus eſt Cappadocum conſenſu à Romanis Ariobarzanes; tandem Archelao pronepote mortuo Romæ, Conſulibus C. Cælio Ruſo & L. Pomponio, ut ait Tacitus, id eſt anno 84 ante Chriſtum, deſiit regnare in Cappadocia *. —— Mithridates being ſet aſide, Ariobarzanes was created by the Romans, with the Conſent of the Cappadocians; at length, Archelaus, his Nephew's Son, dying at Rome, in the Conſulſhip of C. Cælius Rufus, and L. Pomponius, according to Tacitus, that is, Eighty four Years before CHRIST, Cappadocia ceaſed to be a Kingdom." Theſe Words carry the Air of a mutilated Paſſage: It is no uncommon thing for Printers to omit whole Lines. Be that as it will, Archelaus did not deſcend from Ariobarzanes; this is the Genealogical Error of Riccioli; and the Conſulate of C. Cælius Rufus, and L. Pomponius, in which he died at Rome, fell out in the ſeventeenth Year of JESUS CHRIST; this is his Chronological Error. Strabo witneſſes in expreſs Terms, that Archelaus was not related to Ariobarzanes. " Ita rex ab iis factus eſt Ariobarzanes, cujus in tertia ſtirpe genus defecit. Exinde Archelaus ab Antonio rex eſt conſtitutus, NULLA AFFINITATE ipſis conjunctus (32). —— Thus Ariobarzanes was made King by them; whoſe Race was extinct in the third Generation. Upon which, Archelaus, who was of a quite DIFFERENT FAMILY, was appointed King by Antony." The Error, which Noldius imputes to Jornandes, is very different from this of Appian. He will have it, that Cappadocia became a Province in the time of the Emperor Claudius, by virtue of the laſt Will and Teſtament of Archelaus (33). By the way, the Revenues of Cappadocia were ſo conſiderable, when Archelaus died, that Tiberius thought himſelf, by this new acquiſition, in a condition to remit one moiety of a Tax, which he had order'd to be levy'd. Regnum (Archelai) in provinciam redactum eſt, fructibuſque ejus levari poſſe centeſimæ vectigal profeſſus Cæſar, ducenteſimam in poſterum ſtatuit (34). He eas'd This Province likewiſe; and would not exact from it as much as it had paid to the laſt King (35).

(25) Strabo, lib. 12, pag. 368. Sueton in Tib. cap. 37. Eutrop. lib. 7. cap. 6.

(26) Paterc. lib. 2. cap. 39.

(27) Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 42.

(28) Dion, lib. 57, pag. 614.

(29) Suet. in Calig. cap. 1. Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 56.

(30) Appianus, in Mithridaticis, pag. 244. apud Norris, Cenot. Piſan. p. 241.

(31) Norris, ibid. p. 226.

* Riccioli Chron Reformat. Tom. 1, lib. 5, cap. 9, n. 5.

(32) Strabo, lib. 12, pag. 273.

(33) Jornand. de Regnor. & Temp. Succeſſ. pag. 641, apud Noldium, de Vit. Herod. pag. 194.

(34) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 42.

(35) Id. ib. cap. 56.

[M] His Family boaſted of a moſt ancient and noble Extraction] Glaphyra, the Daughter of the laſt Archelaus, and Wife of Alexander, the Son of Herod, ſpoke often of her Family, and boaſted, that ſhe was deſcended from Temenus, by the Father's Side, and from Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes, by the mother's (36).

[N] There is reaſon to think, that he was Author of ſome Books.] Pliny ſeems to intimate this. He quotes Archelaus ſeveral Times; and it is thought, that, in two Places, he means our Archelaus, king of Cappadocia. He gives him This very Title in one of theſe two Quotations; Archelaus, ſays he, qui regnavit in Cappadocia (37); and, as the Diſcourſe there turns upon ſome Particulars relating to Amber, Father Hardouin makes no queſtion, but that the ſame Archelaus is meant in the ſeventh Chapter of the Thirty ſeventh Book of Pliny; where one Archelaus is quoted concerning the Properties of a kind of Precious Stone (38). Neither does he doubt, that this is taken from the Book de lapidibus, cited by Plutarch (39). To relate ſomething more certain, I ſhall point out a Paſſage of Pliny, where Archelaus is reckon'd among the Kings, who had written concerning Agriculture (40). I have already mention'd (41) another Archelaus, often quoted by Pliny.

(36) Joſeph. de bello Jud. lib. 1. c. 17.

(37) Plin. lib. 37, cap. 3, pag 371.

(38) Hardouin. in Indice Autor. Plin. See alſo Malincrot. Paralip. pag. 60.

[O] Some have confounded him with Archelaus, the Son of Herod.] Father Norris has convicted Riccioli of this Error (42). Riccioli had ſaid, that, in the Trial between Archelaus, and his brother, concerning Herod's Succeſſion, Tiberius pleaded his Cauſe before Auguſtus, and pretends to prove it from this Paſſage of Suetonius; " Civilium officiorum rudimentis Archelaum, Trallianos, & Theſſalos varia quoſque de cauſa, Auguſto cognoſcente, defendit (43). —— He was yet a young Pleader, when he undertook the different Cauſes of Archelaus, the Tralliani, and Theſſalians, before the Tribunal of Auguſtus." And, as Velleius Paterculus informs him, that Tiberius left Rhodes, to return to Rome, in the year 755, he concludes, that Archelaus was made Ethnarch in That Year, and not in 751, or before. Father Norris ſhews him, from the Paſſage of Dion quoted above (44), that the Words of Suetonius muſt be underſtood of Archelaus, King of Cappadocia. He might have added an Inſtance, which deſtroys the Hypotheſis of Riccioli; to wit, that Tiberius defended Archelaus's Cauſe, before he went to Rhodes. This is plain from Dion's Words; and may clearly be inferr'd from Thoſe of Suetonius; who makes Tiberius's Defence of Archelaus the Firſt in the Liſt of Cauſes undertaken by Him, when (if I may ſo ſpeak) he made his firſt Campaign at the Bar, civilium officiorum rudimenta. Torrentius is of the ſame Opinion with Riccioli; to wit, that Suetonius meant the great Cauſe of Archelaus, the Son of Herod; and refers us to Joſephus (45). But how came they not to perceive, that, in this Caſe, Joſephus could not poſſibly be ignorant of this good Office of Tiberius; and, if he knew it, that he could not well have omitted it? I am ſurpriz'd that Father Norris, who makes ſuch frequent and vigorous Attacks upon the Jeſuit Salian, has ſpar'd him on this Occaſion. This Jeſuit fell into the ſame miſtake with Riccioli; he has cenſur'd Caſaubon for applying (46) the Paſſage of Suetonius to Archelaus, King of Cappadocia; he repreſents to him, that the Cauſe of this Prince was debated in the Reign of Tiberius; and maintains, that Archelaus, the Son of Herod,

(41) In Remark [C], of the Article ARCHELAUS, the Philoſopher.

(42) Cenot. Piſan. pag. 148.

(43) Suet. in Tiber. cap. 8.

(44) Citation (17).

(45) Torrent. in Suet. Tiber. cap. 8. He refers us to Euſeb. in Chron. & Eccleſ. Hiſt. lib. 1, and to Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 17, cap. 11.

(46) Comment. in Sueton.

Digitized by Google

Four; it is so very grosſ [P]. We ſhall ſee what it is, in the laſt Remark of this Article.

Herod, muſt conſequently be underſtood in this Place; to prove which, he ſuppoſes, that JESUS CHRIST ſtaid Two Years in Egypt: For, ſays he, Tiberius did not return to Rome in the Second Year of JESUS CHRIST; but he was at Rome, when Archelaus diſputed Herod's Succeſſion with his Brothers; ſince he honour'd him with his Protection (47). Behold how Faults are heap'd upon Faults, when the foundation is ill laid. It is as clear as the Day, that the King of Cappadocia's Cauſe was adjudged by Auguſtus, before Tiberius retir'd to the Iſland of Rhodes (48).

(47) Salian. Annal. in Schol. ad Ann. Chriſti 3, n. 7.

(48) See Noldius, de vita & geſtis Herodum, pag. 194, & ſeq.

[P] His Continuator has been guilty of but One of Commiſſion; but ſuch an One, as will match with any Four; it is ſo groſs.] He ſays, that Scylla (it is his own Orthography) after having taken the City of Athens, kill'd Archelaus, General of Mithridates's Army, with his own Hand, at the Foot of the Altar, to which he had fled for Refuge. He quotes Aulus Gellius, lib. 14. It is certain, that Aulus Gellius ſpeaks, in the Firſt Chapter of his Fifteenth Book, of a Particular, which the Continuator has mention'd; I mean of an expedient, which Archelaus made uſe of, to hinder the Romans from firing a Tower of Wood, which defended the Pyreum: We ſhall ſee below what it was; but that he has ſaid, that Archelaus took Refuge in a Temple, and that Sylla kill'd him with his own hand at the Foot of an Altar, is moſt falſe. I believe no Author, worthy of Credit, has ſaid this; for it is notorious, that Archelaus, having conſtrain'd Sylla to give over attacking the Pyreum, and to bend all his Force againſt the City, had time to retire, when it was taken by aſſault (49). Sylla purſued him, gain'd great Victories over him, and obliged him to make a Diſadvantageous Peace. Archelaus, finding himſelf ſuſpected of ſome Miſdemeanors (50), durſt not truſt Mithridates, but went over to Murena, who commanded the Romans. He was receiv'd with Honour, as Strabo has obſerv'd in more Places than one. Ἦν δὲ ἐτῷ Ἀρχέλαος υἱὸς μὲν τοῦ ὑπὸ Σύλλα καὶ πρὸς συγκλήτου τιμηθέντος (51). This Archelaus was the Son of Him, who receiv'd Honours from Sylla and the Senate.

(48) See Appian. in Mithridaticis.

(49) See Appian. in Mithridaticis.

(50) The Epitome of Livy ſays, that Archelaus delivered up the Fleet of Mithridates to the Romans. Aurelius Victor ſays, that Sylla claſſem Mithridatis proditione Archelai intercepit --- intercepted the Fleet of Mithridates, by the Treachery of Archelaus.

(51) Strab. lib. 12, pag. 374. See alſo lib. 17, pag. 547.

The Secret of preſerving his Tower of Wood conſiſted in cauſing it to be well rubb'd with Allum. Quadrigarius, I think, is the only Hiſtorian, who has mention'd this. Others ſay, that His Tower, and Machines were ruin'd by the Beſiegers. It is certain, that Allum has not the virtue Quadrigarius ſpeaks of. Theſe are his words: "Tum Sulla conatus eſt, & tempore magno eduxit copias, ut Archelai turrim unam, quam ille interpoſuit, ligneam incenderet. Venit, acceſſit, ligna ſubdidit, ſubmovit Græcos, ignem admovit, ſatis ſunt diu conati, nunquam quiverunt incendere: ita Archelaus omnem materiam oblevérat alumine, quod Sulla atque milites mirabantur; & poſtquam non ſuccendit, reduxit copias (52). —— Sylla, upon this, made an Attempt, and haſtily drew out his Forces, in order to ſet Fire to a Tower, which Archelaus had built to oppoſe him. He came, He approached it, He made the Greeks retreat; His Men attempted a long Time to ſet it on Fire; but Archelaus had ſo dawb'd it with Allum, that Sylla and his Soldiers were ſurpriz'd; and, not being able to ſet it on Fire, be drew off his Forces." If the Abbot de la Roque had been appriz'd of this Paſſage of Aulus Gellius, he would not have ſaid, "That Hiſtory "mentions, that Sylla formerly undertook to burn a "Tower of Wood, which was defended by one of "Mithridates's Lieutenants, but could not execute "his Deſign, becauſe it was dawb'd over with a "certain Drug, THE NAME OF WHICH IS NOT "COME TO OUR KNOWLEDGE, and which had the "Virtue to repel the Activity of Fire (53)." Two Things ſurprize me; The One is, that, ſince Quadrigarius has mention'd ſo extraordinary an Event, all other Hiſtorians ſhould be ſilent concerning it; The other is, that, ſince ſo many Hiſtorians have not ſaid a Word of it, Quadrigarius ſhou'd mention it in ſo expreſs a manner. Facts of this kind ſtrike the mind ſo forcibly, that an incombuſtible Wooden Tower would have been the laſt Thing omitted by an Hiſtorian. Sylla would infallibly have inſerted it in his Memoirs; Plutarch, who cites them ſo often (54), would have met with it in them, and would not have forgotten to mention it. Let us conclude from his Silence, and That of ſo many other Hiſtorians, that the Fact is falſe. But from whence had Quadrigarius this Account? I believe it is impoſſible to trace the Original of his Error. It is true indeed, that Plum-Allum will reſiſt Fire, and will not be conſumed by it; but to rub a Tower of Wood with it, and thence to render it incombuſtible, is a Thing which, I conceive, is impracticable.

(52) Apud Aul. Gell. lib. 15. c. 1.

(53) Journ. des Sçav. of the 15th of Feb. 1677, pag. 54.

(54) Plut. in Vita Syllæ.

WHETHER ARCHELAUS could make Wood proof againſt Fire.

ARCHILOCHUS, a Greek Poet, Native of the Iſland of Pharos (a), and the Son of Teleſicles [A], flouriſh'd in the XXIXth Olympiad [B]. An uncommon Torrent

(a) Herodot. lib. 1, cap. 12, Lucianus, in Pſeudol.

[A] The Son of Teleſicles] This we find, not only in Suidas, but in Oenomaus likewiſe, quoted by Euſebius (1).

(1) Euſeb. lib. 6, cap. 7. Præp. Evang. pag. 256. item lib. 5, cap. 33, pag. 227.

[B] He flouriſh'd in the XXIXth Olympiad.] Authors differ a little in this. Tatian, and St Cyril, place Archilochus in the XXIIId Olympiad (2). Clemens Alexandrinus places him the XXth; Others in the XVth, XVIIIth, and XIXth (3). Cicero ſuppoſes him to have lived in the Reign of Romulus (4). Cornelius Nepos places him in the time of Tullus Hoſtilius (5). Herodotus not only affirms, that he wrote Verſes on the Adventures of Gyges, and Candaules; but that he lived likewiſe at the ſame time (6). Euſebius makes him flouriſh in the XXIXth Olympiad. It is eaſy to reconcile ſome of theſe Authors, but not all; for the Revolution, which happened in Lydia by the Death of Candaules, and the Inauguration of Gyges, fell out in the XXVIIth Olympaid (7). The Death of Romulus happened in the preceding Olympiad. The Reign of Tullus Hoſtilius takes in the ſpace of time between the firſt Year of the XXVIIth Olympaid, and the firſt Year of the XXXVth. Salmaſius, who was very happy in correcting a Miſtake in Solinus, did not perceive one of his own. Solinus has been raſh enough to place the Three Orators of the Family of the Curio's, Archilochus, and Sophocles, in the ſame Age. "Plurimi ſays he (8), inter Romanos "eloquentia floruerunt, ſed hoc bonum hereditarium "nunquam fuit niſi in familia Curionum, in qua "tres ſerie continua oratores fuere; magnum hoc "habitum eſt ſane eo ſæculo, quo facundiam præci-"pue & humana & divina mirata ſunt: quippe tunc "percuſſores Archilochi poetæ Apollo prodidit, & "latronum facinus Deo coarguente detectum; cum-"que Lyſander Lacedæmonius Athenas obſideret, "ubi Sophoclis tragici inhumatum corpus jacebat; "identidem Liber Pater ducem monuit per quietem, "ſepeliri delicias ſuas ſineret, nec prius deſtitit, &c. "—— Many among the Romans were famous for Eloquence; but This Talent was never Hereditary, except in the Family of the Curio's, in which were Three ſucceſſive Orators. This was look'd upon as very Extraordinary even in That Age, in which Eloquence was held in great Admiration both by Gods and Men; for, at that time, Apollo diſcover'd the Murthurers of Archilochus the Poet, and the Robbers were convicted of their Guilt by the Evidence of a God; and, when Lyſander the Lacedemonian beſieg'd Athens, where the Body of Sophocles the Tragedian lay unburied, Bacchus admoniſh'd the Chief in a Dream, to ſuffer his Favourite to be buried; nor did he deſiſt till, &c." Salmaſius obſerves (9), that One of theſe Curio's lived in the time of Julius Cæſar; that Archilochus liv'd in the time of Tarquinius Superbus; and that Sophocles did not flouriſh till above two Centuries after Archilochus. He has reaſon, then, to laugh at Solinus, but is in the wrong to place Archilochus in the time of Tarquinius Superbus, who reign'd from the third Year of the LXIſt Olympaid to the laſt Year of the LXVIIth: I ſay, he is in the wrong to place him in this Time, ſince he, elſewhere, fixes him under the XXIXth Olympaid. Circiter vigeſimam nonam Olympiadem inclaruit Archilochus (10). Having been guilty of This Error,

(2) See Voſſius, de Poët. Gr. pag. 14.

(3) Anonymus, in Deſcrip. Olymp. apud Voſſium, ubi ſupra.

(4) Tuſculan I. cap. 1.

(5) Corn. Nep. apud Gellium, lib. 17. cap. 21.

(6) Herod. lib. 1, c. 13.

(7) See Sethus Calviſius ad Ann. Mundi 3239, p. 65.

(8) Solin. cap. 2, ſub fin.

(9) Salmaſ. Plin. Exercit. pag. 52.

(10) Id. ib. pag. 854.

Digitized by Google

Torrent of Scandal was the Characteriſtic of his Poetry [C]. Terrible was the Power of it; ſince Lycambes hang'd himſelf, upon a virulent Satire, which ARCHILOCHUS wrote againſt him. The Indignation of this Poet proceeded from a Breach of Promiſe; Lycambes, had promis'd him his Daughter, and afterwards refuſed her to him. ARCHILOCHUS took this ſo to heart, either becauſe he lov'd the Maid, or that ſome particular Inſtance of Contempt had been added to the Refuſal, that he diffamed Lycambes with all imaginable Virulency. Probably he involved the whole Family in his Paſquinades; for it is ſaid, that the Daughter followed her Father's Example; and ſome pretend, that three of Lycambes's Daughters died at the ſame Time of Grief and Deſpair [D]. Perhaps he revealed ſome Adventures, equally ſcandalous, and a Secret to the Public. There ſeem, at leaſt, to have been ſome very obſcene Paſſages in his Poem; for it was on occaſion of this Satire, that the Lacedemonians, taking into Conſideration, that the reading ſuch Obſcenities was offenſive to chaſte Ears, prohibited the Verſes of Archilochus of making Archilochus, and the laſt King of Rome, Cotemporaries, he ſhould not have reckon'd Two hundred Years between Archilochus, and Sophocles; for the Death of the latter fell out in the XCIId Olympaid, or thereabout. Another Great Man (11), has ſuffer'd himſelf to be too much led away by the Spirit of finding Fault, when he charges Herodotus with having made uſe of a pitiful Argument, to prove, that Archilochus liv'd in the time of Gyges; to wit, that Archilochus mention'd This King. I confeſs this Argument would be an abſurd One; but it is not true, that Herodotus makes uſe of it; he has only ſuppos'd it; but drawn no conſequence from it. Τῷ καὶ Ἀρχίλοχος ὁ Πάριος καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον γενόμενος ἐν ἰάμβῳ τριμέτρῳ ἐπεμνήσθη (12). Whom Archilochus, who lived at the ſame Time, mentions in a Trimeter Iambic.

(11) Scalig. in Euſeb. pag. 57, 58. Edit. 1658.

(12) Herod. lib. 1. c. 12.

[C] An uncommon Torrent of Scandal —— was the Characteriſtic of his Poetry.] Hence it was that Horace conſidered Archilochus as a Madman;

(13) Hor. de Arte Poëticâ, ver. 79.

Archilochum proprio rabies armavit Iambo (13).

Rage with Iambics arm'd Archilochus.

ROSCOMMON.

and, when he would give an Idea of the ſevereſt kind of Satire, he compares it to That of Archilochus.

In malos aſperrimus
Parata tollo cornua
Qualis Lycambe ſpretus infido gener (14).

(14) Id. Epod. 6. v. 13.

- - - - - to Rogues a deadly Foe,
I'm ſtill prepared to ſtrike the Blow;
As ſharp, as fierce Archilochus his Song.

CREECH.

Ovid, in the ſame Spirit, uſes this Threat;

Poſtmodo ſi pergas, in te mihi liber Iambus
Tincta Lycambeo ſanguine tela dabit.

To new Injuſtice ſhould'ſt thou ſtill proceed,
The keen Iambic ſhall revenge the Deed,
And, in thy Wounds, again Lycambes bleed.

This occurs in his Poem in Ibin, ver. 51; a Work ſo full of Scandal, that, they who fancied he wrote it in Imitation of Archilochus (15), would be excuſable, were it not apparent, from theſe two Verſes, (15) Johannes Tortellius Aretinus, in Commentariis de Orthographia; & Jacobus Lanius, lib. 2. Subſeciv. Lect. cap. 4. apud Dionyſ. Salvagnium Boëſſium Comment. in Ibin. pag. 25.

Nunc, quo Battiades inimicum devovet Ibin,
Hoc ego devoveo teque tuoſque modo.

Thoſe Curſes, all, on hated Ibis thrown
By Battus Son, accumulated fall
On thy devoted Head.

that Ovid propoſed to imitate the Poet Callimachus. There are numberleſs Proverbs, which perpetuate the ſlanderous Diſpoſition of our Poet; Archilochia edicta, ἀρχίλοχον παλεῖς. Archilochum teris, &c. The firſt is to be found in Cicero; who made uſe of it to repreſent the Edicts, which the Conſul Bibulus ordered to be fixed up. This poor Conſul, not daring to ſtir out of his Houſe, retained no Shadow of Authority, but in revenging himſelf by Paſquinades; in which he diſplayed the infamous Debaucheries of Cæſar, and the vile Practices of his Enemies, in their proper Colours: In eam coëgit deſperationem, ut, quoad proteſtate abiret domo abditus, nihil aliud quam per edicta nuntiaret (16). The Edicts, which he publiſhed, Cicero calls Archilochia Edicta; which pleaſed the People ſo extremely, that there was no getting through the Preſs, in the Streets, where they were fixed up; for the People ran in Crowds to read them; which made Pompey ready to burſt with Spleen. Archilochia in illum Bibuli Edicta ita populo ſunt jucunda, ut eum locum ubi proponuntur, præ multitudine eorum qui legunt, præterire nequeamus, ita ipſi acerba ut tabeſcat dolore, mihi mehercule moleſta, quod & eum quem ſemper dilexi nimis excruciant (17). Plutarch ſpeaks thus of theſe Edicts of Bibulus. Βίβλῳ μὲν εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν καταλειόμενος ὅλῳ μηνῶν ὀκτὼ περιῆλθεν ὑπαγορεύων ἀλλ' ἐξεπεμπε διαγράμματα βλασφημίας ἀμφοῖν ἔχοντα καὶ καταφορίας (18). Bibulus did not ſtir out of his own houſe during the eight Months of his Conſulſhip; he only publiſh'd Edicts, full of Reproaches againſt them both; viz. Pompey and Cæſar. As to the Proverb, Archilochum teris, I do not believe it ſignifies, as Eraſmus imagined, a Slanderer, who treads in the ſteps of Archilochus, or ſtudies his Books; but One, who, having offended Archilochus, ought to fear the Deſtiny of Him, who, having trod on a Serpent, immediately receives a mortal Sting. See what Lucian puts into Archilochus's Mouth againſt a certain Perſon, who had ſlander'd him; Alis cicadam comprehendiſti (19); —— You have taken a Graſſhopper by the Wings *; and you will be convinced, that the Explication of Eraſmus, how conformable ſoever to Suidas's Sentiment, is falſe. At the ſame time I do not deny, that πατεῖν is ſometimes taken, as well as terere, for lectitare. Ariſtophanes ſays, in his Birds (20), ἐδ' αἰσωπον πεπάτηκας. There are ſome Epigrams in the Anthologia, which give us a very ſtrong Idea of the Calumny of this Poet. Cerberus, in one of them, is exhorted to keep a ſtricter Watch than ever, and to take heed of being bit, ſince Archilochus was gone to Hell (21). We ſhall ſee in the Remark [G], that he ſlandered even himſelf.

(16) Suet. in Cæſ. cap. 20. See alſo cap. 49.

(17) Cicer. ad Attic. Epiſt. 21. l. 2.

(18) Plutarch. in Pomp. pag. 644.

(19) Lucian, in Pſeudolog. Tom. 2. pag. 548. See the Article TETTIX.

* [Τέττιγα πτερῷ συνείλημφας. If you preſs the Graſshopper's Wings, it frets and makes a Noiſe. So the Poet, when attacked, is put in a Violent Paſſion. Hence Horace, Genus irritabile Vatum. REM. CRIT.]

[D] Some pretend, that three of Lycambes's Daughters died at the ſame time of Grief and Deſpair.] I have ſaid, that Archilochus took the matter to heart; but his Grief was nothing in compariſon to what his Father-in-law, and Miſtreſs, ſuffered. He gave himſelf Eaſe by a bitter Invective, but Lycambes, and his Daughters, found their Conſolation only in an Halter. Horace mentions only the Father's Deſtiny, and That of the Daughter, who was promiſed to Archilocus.

(20) This has been communicated to me by Mr de la Monnoie.

- - - - - non res & agentia verba Lycamben;
- - - - - - - - - -
Nec ſocerum quærit, quem verſibus oblinet aris;
Nec ſponſæ laqueum famoſo carmine nectit (22).

(21) Anthol. lib. 3. c. 25. See alſo Salmaſius, Exercit. Plinian. pag. 394, 395.

I match'd Archilochus; I ſhow'd the Age
His Numbers; but forbore his murth'ring Rage.
- - - - - - - - -
With no black Lines I daub, no envious Breath
Doth ſoil Men's Fame, or rhime a Spouſe to Death.

CREECH.

(22) Horat. Epiſt. 19, lib. 1, ver. 25, 30, 31.

But,

Digitized by Google

chus [E]. Some have ſaid, that he himſelf was baniſhed from Lacedemon (b); but the Reaſon they give for it is taken from a Maxim, which he inſerted in one of his Poems, That it is better to throw down one's Arms, than to loſe one's Life. He wrote This in his own Juſtification (c). His Calumny, which was ſometimes an Inconvenience to him in his Affairs [F], and which extended even to his own Perſon [G], did not deprive him of the Favour of Apollo; for, upon his being killed in Battel, the Oracle of Delphi drove his Murtherer out of the Temple [H]; nor could it be appeaſed but by dint of Excuſe and Prayer; and even, after this, ordered him to repair to a certain Houſe, and there appeaſe the Ghoſt of Archilochus.

(b) Plutarch. Inſtit. Laccon. p. 239.

(c) See Remark [C].

But, in the Anthologia, we read, that two, or even three, Daughters of Lycambes hanged themſelves (23). See, in the Article HIPPONAX (24), ſome Inſtances of the tragical and mortal Effects of Satire. Let us not omit what a Scholiaſt on Horace obſerves; to wit, that Neobula (ſo he calls the Daughter, who was contracted to Archilochus) did not hang herſelf on account of her Gallant's Satire, but out of Grief for the miſerable Cataſtrophe of her Father's Life (25). Moſt Readers will take part with the Anthologia; in which Archilochus is repreſented as the immediate Cauſe.

(23) Anthol. lib. 3, c. 25.

(24) Remark [F].

(25) Schol. in Horat. Epod. 6.

[E] It was on occaſion of This Satire, that the Lacedemonians - - - - - prohibited the Verſes of Archilochus.] Valerius Maximus affirms this in expreſs Terms. "Lacedæmonii libros Archilochi è civitate "ſua exportari juſſerunt, quod eorum parum vere- "cundam ac pudicam lectionem arbitrabantur. No- "luerunt enim ea liberorum ſuorum animos imbui, "ne plus moribus noceret, quam ingeniis prodeſſet. "Itaque maximum poëtam, aut certe ſummo proxi- "mum, quia domum ſibi inviſum obſcenis maledi- "ctis laceraverat, carminum exilio multarunt (26). "- - - - - - The Lacedemonians ordered the Books of "Archilochus to be baniſhed from their State, eſteem- "ing the reading of them to be vicious and immodeſt. "They were unwilling the Minds of their Youth "ſhould be tinctured with them, leaſt their Morals "ſhould be more injured, than their Genius im- "proved, thereby. They therefore puniſhed the greateſt "of Poets, or next to the greateſt, for an obſcene "Satire on a Family, whom he hated, by baniſhing "his Verſes."

(26) Val. Max. lib. 6, cap. 3.

[F] His Calumny - - - - - - was often an Inconvenience to him in his Affairs.] Pindar informs me of this particular; for he aſſirms, that, though Archilochus fattened upon Slander, yet was he often put to his Shifts.

Εἶδον γὰρ ἐκὰς ἐὼν τὰ πολλ' ἐν ἀμαχανίᾳ
Ψογερὸν Ἀρχίλοχον, θαρυκό-γοις ἔχθεσιν πιαινόμενον (27).

(27) Pind. Pythior. Od. 2.

Vidi enim procul exiſtens ſæpe in anguſtiis conviciatorem Archilochum, dum maledicis odiis pinguefieret.

Aretius did not underſtand this Paſſage; ſince he took it to mean, that Archilochus was a Gainer by his Calumny, and raiſed himſelf by it from a low Eſtate to Honour and Riches (28). The Word πιαίνεσθαι, which ſignifies to fatten, deceived him; he ſhould have remember'd, that, to this day, to feed, or grow fat, upon any thing ſignifies, figuratively, to take an extraordinary Pleaſure in it. No doubt Ovid had an Eye to this Paſſage of Pindar, when, in his Poem in Ibin, he ſays, (28) See Benedictus, in Pindar. Od. 2. Pythior.

Utque repertori nocuit pugnacis Iambi,
Sic ſit in exitium lingua proterva tuum.

Like His, who firſt the keen Iambic gave,
May thy abuſive Tongue thy Ruin prove.

(29) Leſcalopier, in Ciceron. lib. 3. de Nat. Deor. pag. 703. Roſſius, in Indice Comment. in Ibin.

We ſhall ſee in the Remark [H], that they, who pretend, that Calumny coſt Archilochus his Life (29), are miſtaken.

(30) See the Paſſage of Plutarch, which ſhall be cited in the Remark [M], Citation (55).

[G] His Calumny - - - - - - extended even to his own Perſon.] This Poet took ſuch ſtrange Delight in Slander, that, not content to pull his Neighbour to pieces, he could not forbear defaming himſelf (30). For which Critias blames him (31); ſaying, that, had it not been for his own account, we ſhould not have known, that his Mother Enipone was a Slave; that meer Poverty forced him to quit the Iſle of Paros, and remove to That of Thaſus; that he rendered himſelf odious there by ſlandering both Friends, and Foes; that he was extreamly addicted to Women, and very inſolent; and, what is worſt of all (32), that he had thrown away his Buckler in Fight. The Scholiaſt on Ariſtophanes informs us, that it was in the War againſt the Saians, a People of Thrace, that Archilochus threw down his Arms, and fled (33). Ariſtophanes has borrowed a Diſtich of This Poet's concerning this Adventure (34); upon which his Scholiaſt gives us this Gloſs. Plutarch repeats the ſame Verſes, and ſomething more.

(31) Apud Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 10, cap. 13.

(32) It is Critias, who ſpeaks.

(33) Schol. Ariſtoph. in Comœd. de Pace. See alſo Strabo, lib. 12. pag. 378.

(34) In Comœd. de Pace, circa finem.

(35) Plut. in Inſtit. Lacon. p. 239.

Ἀσπίδι μέν Σαΐων τις ἀγάλλεται ἣν παρὶ θάμνῳ
Ἐνθὸς ἀμώμητον κάλλιπον ἐκ ἐθέλων.
- - - - - - - - - - Ἀσπὶς ἐκείνη
Ἐρρέτω. ἐξαῦθις κτήσομαι ἐ κακίω (35).

One of the Saians, perhaps, now prides himſelf in wearing my Shield; which I unwillingly left behind me, unhurt, amidſt the Briers. No matter for the Loſs of This Shield; I ſhall ſoon purchaſe as good an one.

Yet our Run-away valued himſelf more upon being a Soldier, than a Poet.

Εἰμὶ δ' ἐγὼ θεράπων μεν Ἐνυαλίοιο ἄνακτος,
Καὶ μουσέων ἐραῖον δῶρον ἐπισάμενος (36).

(36) Athen. lib. 14, cap. 6, p. 627, C.

I am a Follower of the God of War, and ſkilled in the amiable Gift of the Muſes.

Alcæus ranged the Poſts of Honour after the ſame manner; he gave the firſt Place to Arms; and, in deſcribing his Houſe (37), he makes no mention of Books, but of Helmets and Bucklers; all ſavours of the Arſenal, and not of the Library. Yet it is well known, that he ſaved himſelf in Battel by the help of his Heels, and not his Arms. See the Remark [B] of his Article.

(37) Apud. Athen. lib. 14, cap. 5.

[H] Apollo - - - - drove his Murtherer out of the Temple (38).] The Name of Him, who ſlew Archilochus, was Callondas Corax (39), a Native of the Iſle of Naxos. The Prieſteſs of Delphi drove him out of the Temple, becauſe he had killed a Man conſecrated to the Muſes. Ἐκβληθεὶς ὑπὸ τῆς Πυθίας, ὡς ἱερὸν ἄνδρα τῶν μουσῶν ἀνηρηκώς (40). And yet he had killed him in War, and in fair Combat; as appears more plainly from Suidas, than Plutarch. For this Reaſon we cannot ſuppoſe, that Pliny, upon this Occaſion, is ſufficiently exact, when he ſaid, in the plural Number, Archilochi poëtæ interfectores Apollo arguit Delphis (41). - - - - Apollo at Delphi accuſed Thoſe, who had ſlain Archilochus the Poet. His Copyer Solinus, affecting the Paraphraſt, has left himſelf without excuſe; ſince he has the boldneſs to ſay, that this Poet was killed by Robbers; "Percuſſores Archilochi poëtæ Apollo prodidit, & "latronum facinus Deo coarguente detectum (42). "- - - - - - Apollo diſcovered the Murtherers of Ar- "chilochus the Poet; thus the Villany of certain "Robbers was detected by the Evidence of a God." Euſebius cites a Greek Author, called Oenomaus, who gives the Name of Archias to the Murtherer of Archilohus; "Quare qui Archilochum occidit Archias "à templo quaſi ſceleſtus exire ab Apolline juſſus "eſt: muſarum enim amicum occiderat (43). - - - - - "Wherefore Archius, who ſlew Archilochus, was "commanded by Apollo to depart from the Temple, "as one guilty of Impiety; for he had ſlain a Friend "of the Muſes." Galen has reported the Words of the Oracle.

(38) Plut. de iis qui ſero à numine puniuntur, pag. 560. and Suidas fuse in Ἀρχίλοχος.

(39) Id. ib. See alſo Plut. in Numa. pag. 62.

(40) Plut. ubi ſupra.

(41) Plin. lib. 7, c. 29.

(42) Solin. cap. 1, p. 11.

(43) Euſeb. Præp. Evang. lib. 5, cap. 33, cited by Father Hardouin, in Plin. Tom. 2, pag. 124. They are not the very Words of Oenomaus, but only his Thought.

Μυζάων

Digitized by Google

Archilochus (d). And yet this Perſon had killed him in a fair Combat [I]. Iambic Verſe was what this Poet excelled in; he was the Inventor of it [K], and one of the three Poets, whom Ariſtarchus approved of in this kind of Poetry (e). Quintilian places him, in ſome Reſpects, above the other two. Ariſtophanes, the Grammarian, was of Opinion, that Archilochus's Iambic Poems, the longer they were, were the finer [L]. The Hymn, he compoſed on Hercules and Iolaus, was ſo diſtinguiſhed, as to be conſtantly ſung three times, in honour of thoſe, who gained the Victory in the Olympic Games (f). Scarce any thing remains of his Works; which, for the ſake of Morals, is rather a Gain, than a Loſs, [M]. They, who ſpeak of ſeveral

(d) See the Art. de TETTIX.

(e) See Remark [K].

(f) Pindar. Olymp. Ode 9, & ibi Jo. Benedictus. See Ep. in the Ch. hads of Erſmus, Archilochi melos.

Μυζάων θεράποντα κατέκτανες, ἔξιθι νηοῦ (44).

You have ſlain a Servant of the Muſes; depart from the Temple.

(44) Galen, in Suaſoria, Tom. 2, cap. 9, pag. 10, apud Hermann, ubi ſupra.

Apollo has been much blamed for acknowledging as a Son of the Muſes, and extreamly commending, a Poet, who had written ſo obſcenely. Oenomaus reproached This God with This (45): Origen and Euſebius make uſe it to ſhame the Pagans. Τούτοις προσθῶμεν, ſays Euſebius (46), καὶ δι' ὧν αὖθις ὁ Ἀπόλλων θαυμάζει τὸν Ἀρχίλοχον, ἀνδρα πανοίαις καὶ γυναικῶν αἰσχρορρημοσύναις καὶ ἀρρησιολογίαις ἂς ἐδ' ἀκοῦσαί τις σώφρων ἀνὴρ ὑπομείνειεν, ἐν τοῖς οἰκείοις ποιήμασι κεχρημένον. Let me add what greatly recommended Archilochus to the Favour of Apollo; a Poet ſo infamous and obſcene, that no good Man can bear to hear him. I omit the Paſſage of Origen; it may be found in his third Book againſt Celſus, in the hundred and twenty fifth Page of the Cambridge Edition, 1677.

(45) Apud Euſebium, ibid.

(46) Ibid. cap. 32, pag. 22.

[K] This Perſon had killed him in a fair Combat.] I have already obſerved, that Suidas informs us more clearly of this Matter, than Plutarch; but I have ſomething to add, which is worth our notice. There is a ſmall Treatiſe Of Republics, attributed to Heraclides; in which the Order of the Prieſteſs is to be found, commanding the Murtherer of Archilochus to depart the Temple, together with the Murtherer's Anſwer. This Anſwer is an inexplicable Riddle in the Latin Tranſlation. The Tranſlator ſuppoſes, that the Murtherer anſwered, I am innocent, for I killed him at a Diſtance, as the Law commands. Read the Greek, and the Tranſlation of it (47). Ἀρχίλοχον τὸν ποιητὴν Κόραξ ὄνομα ἔκτεινε, πρὸς ὃν φασιν εἰπεῖν τὴν Πυθίαν, ἔξιθι νηοῦ. τοῦτον δὲ εἶπεν, ἀλλὰ καθαρός εἰμι ἄναξ, ἐκ χειρῶν γὰρ νόμῳ ἔκτεινα. Quidam Corax dictus Archilochum poëtam interfecit. Itaque Pythia ad eum aiebat, exi templo. Cui is reſpondit, at purus ſum Rex, eminus enim, ut lex jubet, interfeci (Archilochum). A Friend of mine, who is well verſed in Philological Learning (48), has confeſſed to me, that he never heard of an Edict, acquitting Murtherers, who killed at a Diſtance; and that he did not believe ἐκ χειρῶν ſignified eminus. As he was an intimate Friend of Mr Gronovius's, he conſulted him on this Difficulty; and This was the learned Anſwer of That learned Profeſſor. "Ἐν "χειρῶν νόμῳ, locutio eſt propria in præliis occi- "ſorum & occidentium. Quem in illo fervore vel "gladius, vel alia machina deprehendens ad Orcum "mittit, is trucidatur ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ. Ita omnes "Græci, & preſertim Polybius, ut libro 1. cap. 34. "Καταλεμένοι σωρηδὸν ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ διεφθείροντο. Ο πάνυ (49) illic pugnantes: quod "quidem non ſufficit, nam & in prælio multi poſ- "ſunt non pugnantes occidi, & tamen ἐν χειρῶν "νόμῳ. Rurſus eodem libro cap. 57. τότας γὰρ αὐτὸς ἀεὶ συνέβαινε διαφθείρεσθαι καλὰ τὰς "συμπλοκὰς τὸς ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ περιπεσόντας. "- - - Ἐν χειρῶν νομῳ is a Phraſe belonging to Thoſe "who kill, or are killed, in Battel. Whoever, in "the Heat of Battel, is killed by a Sword, or any "other Engine, is ſaid to be killed ἐν χειρῶν νό- "μῳ. So all the Greek Authors; particularly Po- "lybius, lib. 1. cap. 34. καταλεμένοι, &c. Ca- "ſaubon renders it pugnantes; which is inſufficient; "for many may die in Battel, not fighting, and yet "ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ. Again, in the ſame Book, cap. "57. τότας γὰρ αὐτὸς, &c." There remains no further Difficulty, after this learned Anſwer; whereby it appears, that Corax meant no more, than that he had killed Archilochus in Battel, according to the Laws of War.

(47) Juxta Editionem Nicolai Cragii, ad calcem Tractatus de Republica Lacedæmonorum, pag. 19.

(48) Monſ. HENRICIUS, whoſe Elogy may be ſeen in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Treatiſe, which Gronovius published at Leyden, in 1693, entituled, Diſquiſitio de Iuncula Smetiana, &c. It is the Opportunity of full cloſing the Memory Mr Henricius for the Life of his excellent Library.

(49) That is, Caſaubon.

[K] He was the Inventor of Iambic Verſe.] This appears from theſe Lines of Horace, in the nineteenth Epiſtle of the firſt Book, ver. 23.

------parios ego primus Iambos
Oſtendi Latio, numeros animoſque ſecutus
Archilochi; -----

I firſt the Romans keen Iambics taught.
In numerous Smoothneſs, and in height of Thought
I match'd Archilochus; CREECH.

But yet more clearly from this Paſſage of Paterculus. "Neque quemquam alium cujus operis primus auctor "fuerit in eo perfectiſſimum præter Homerum & "Archilochum reperiemus (50). ----- Homer and "Archilochus alone arrived at Perfection in thoſe "Species of Poetry, of which they were the reſpective "Inventors." It is certain, that Iambics were This Poet's Maſter-piece. "Ex tribus receptis Ariſtarchi "judicio ſcriptoribus Iamborum ad ἕξιν maxime "pertinebit unus Archilochus. Summa in hoc vis "elocutionis; cum validæ tum breves vibranteſque "ſententiæ; plurimum ſanguinis atque nervorum; "adeo ut videatur quibuſdam, quod quoquam minor "eſt, materiæ eſſe non ingenii vitium (51). ---- Of "the three received Writers of Iambics, (in the Opi- "nion of Ariſtarchus) Archilochus alone arrived at "Perfection. This Poet was Maſter of the greateſt Force "of Expreſſion; his Sentences were ſhort and ſprightly; "inſomuch, that many think, if he fell ſhort of any Poet, "it was owing to the Defect of his Subject, not of his "Genius." Paterculus, then, made him the Inventor of Iambics. But he muſt alſo have been the Inventor of Epic Poetry, if what is imputed to Terentianus be true; "Doctrinæ laudem ei Terentianus tribuit, ut & "Epicorum verſuum inventionem, libr. de metris, pag. "86.—Terentianus, in his Book Of Metres, aſcribes to "him the Praiſe of Learning, as alſo the Invention "of Epic Poetry." Thus they ſpeak in the Theſaurus Fabri, in the Article of Archilochus; but, when we conſult the Paſſage of Terentianus Maurus, it is eaſy to perceive, that the Matter in hand there is the Epode, not the Epic Poem; nor yet would it be certain, that the Paſſage, which relates to Archilochus, declares him the Inventor of the Epode, if This Truth were not learnt elſewhere (52). This Paſſage might paſs for a Citation alledged as an Example of the Epode, ſpoken of in this Place, which is an Hexameter Verſe followed by one half of a Pentameter.

(50) Paterc. lib. 1. cap. 5.

(51) Quintil. lib. 10, cap. 1.

(52) In Marius Victorinus, l. 3, de Arte Grammat.

Hoc doctum Archilochum tradunt geneiſſe Magiſtri,
Tu mihi Flacce ſat es.

Lorenzo Fabri obſerves, that "the Greeks for ſix "hundred Years knew no other than Hexameter "Verſe; 'till Archilochus taught other kinds with "ſo much Succeſs, that all began to try their Skill "in Verſes of different Meaſures; which made the "Greek Poety ſo fine by this Variety of Verſifica- "tion (53).

(53) Menetrier, Repreſentat. en Muſique, pag. 245.

[L] Archilochus's Iambics ------- the longer they were, were the finer.] Cicero informs us of this Particular, where he applies it to his Friend Atticus's Letters; "Ut Ariſtophani Archilochi Iambus, "ſic Epiſtola longiſſima quæque optima videtur (54). "----- As the Iambics of Archilochus appeared "to Ariſtophanes, ſo the longeſt of your Epiſtles ſeem "to me the beſt." The ſame Judgment has been paſſed upon Demoſthenes's Orations.

(54) Cicero Epiſt. 11, lib. 16, ad Atticum.

[M] Scarce any thing remains of his Works; which, for the ſake of Morals, is rather a Gain, than a Loſs.] The Verſes of Archilochus afforded no Ex-several Archilochus's, multiply Beings without Neceſſity [N]. If we had the Dialogue composed by Heraclides (g) on the Life of our Poet, we might, in all Probability, find several Particulars in it concerning him; and doubtleſs we might there find, how he conducted a Colony of Parians into the Iſland of Thaſus (h). It was ſome Honour to be choſen for ſuch a Truſt.

Digitized by Google

(g) Diog. Laërt. in Heracle.

(b) Oenomaus apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evang. lib. 6, cap. 7.

amples, but what were vitious. He had expreſſed a deep Sorrow at the loſs of his Siſter's Husband, who died at Sea. This Tenderneſs might have been improved to an excellent Leſſon; but in him it degenerated into a moſt pernicious Maxim, viz. that he would fly for Conſolation to Wine, and other ſenſual Pleaſures, ſince his Tears could do his Brother-in-law no good, nor his Pleaſures harm.

Οὔτέ τι γὰρ κλαίων ἴσομαι, οὔτε κακίον
Θήσω, τετραλὰς καὶ θαλίας ἑφέπων (55).

(55) Plut. de audiend. Poët. pag. 33.

The worſt is, that he never ſcrupled to defame himſelf, and fill his Poems with a thouſand ſcandalous Reflexions on the Sex. Τῶν ὑπ' Ἀρχιλόχου πρὸς τὰς γυναῖκας ἀπρεπῶς καὶ ἀκολάτως εἰρημένων, ἑαυτὸν παραδείγματίζοντος (56). See the uſe, which Theodore Beza makes of this laſt Sentence in his Notes on the firſt Chapter of St Matthew.

(56) Plut. de Curioſit. pag. 520.

[N] They, who ſpeak of ſeveral Archilochus's, multiply Beings without Neceſſity.] A Paſſage of Euſebius, miſunderſtood, occaſion'd the mention of an Archilochus, an Hiſtorian and Chronologer, on whom the Impoſtor of Viterbo had the boldneſs to father a ſmall Book. Thus Euſebius ſpeaks, according to the Latin Tranſlation, Licet Archilochus viceſimam tertiam Olympiadem ——— ſupputet (57). It is pretended, that the meaning of this is, that, according to Archilochus's Computation, Homer lived in the XXIIId Olympiad. But Scaliger has ſhewed, that the Greek of Euſebius ſignifies no more, than that ſome Authors made Homer and Archilochus flouriſh at the ſame time. Goropius Becanus had cleared up this Matter before, in the great and curious Collection relating to Archilochus, which he made on purpoſe to confute the Impoſtures of Annius of Viterbo (58). Thus the pretended Chronologer Archilochus comes to nothing. Voſſius would have done better to have followed this Correction, than to place Archilochus among the Greek Hiſtorians (59). He adds, that Scaliger places him in the Reign of Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes (60), without producing any Proof for it. I cannot find in Scaliger's Notes, what Voſſius imputes to him; neither do I believe he has ſaid any ſuch thing. Voſſius, having made mention of our Poet Archilochus, in another Book (61), under the XXIXth Olympiad, promiſes another under the XCIVth. But, when we look for him there, we meet with only An Antilochus. Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman, have given us a Lacedemonian Poet Archilochus, who flouriſhed at Rome, in the Reign of Tullus Hoſtilius, and another Archilochus, the Son of Neſtor, who was kill'd by Memnon at the Siege of Troy. Theſe are all Chimæra's; This laſt was call'd Antilochus; and there needed but little Attention, to diſcover, that the Court of the firſt Kings of Rome was no fit Theatre for Greek Poets. Moſt of theſe laſt Faults are to be found in Calepin.

(57) In Chron. ad Ann. 908.

(58) Goropus Becanus Origin. Antverp. lib. 4, What he ſays thereupon is to be found in the Bibl. Hiſpanica, of Schottus, pag. 375, &c.

(59) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Græcis, p. 5.

(60) He came to the Throne in the third Year of the LXIVth Olympiad. Voſſius, ib. pag. 6.

(61) Voſſ. de Poët. Græc. pag. 14.

ARCHIMELUS, a Greek Poet, flouriſhed in the Reign of Hiero, King of Syracuſe [A]. This appears by the Preſent, which he received from That Monarch. He had made an Epigram in praiſe of a prodigious large Ship, which Hiero had ordered to be built (a). This Epigram was worth to him above Five thouſand Quarters of Corn, which this Prince ſent him to the Pyreum (b). Behold, then, a Poet, who may be ranked among the Few, who have met with Admirals de Joyeuſe (c).

(a) See a Deſcription of it in Athenæus, lib. 5. pag. 206.

(b) Athen. pag. 209.

(c) The Admiral of this Name, gave an Abby for a Song. Balzac. Entret. VIII.

[A] He flouriſh'd in the Time of Hiero, King of Syracuſe.] That is about the Year of Rome 520, and the CXXXVIth Olympiad. It is probable, that he lived at Athens; ſince this Preſent of Corn was carried to the Pyreum. I wonder Voſſius could forget this Poet: The Reward of his Epigram makes him remarkable. Athenæus has preſerved the Eighteen Verſes, which were ſo amply paid for (1). Mr Catherinot has not faithfully reported the Circumſtances of This Recompence; he ſays, that (2), Archimelus was rewarded by King Hiero with Thirty thouſand Quarters of Corn, for an Epigram of Twenty Verſes, written on his Ship.

(1) Athen. lib. 5, pag. 209.

(2) Catherinot, Traité de la Marine, pag. 6.

ARCHIROTA (ALEXANDER) [A] Abbot of the Olivetans (a), was of Naples. He compoſed, among other Books, A Collection of the Actions of the Kings, mentioned in the Scripture [B], and dedicated it to the Queen of Poland, Bonna Sforza, who reſided, then, at Bari. In return, ſhe gave him a Penſion for Life of Three hundred Crowns per Annum. He lived an Hundred and twenty Years (b). Konig makes him flouriſh in 1636, and aſcribes to him A Commentary on the Books of Samuel and Kings, and A Treatiſe on the Vow of Poverty.

(a) A kind of Monks in Italy.

(b) Lancel. de Perouſa, at Page 987 of a Book entituled, Chi l' indovina è Savio.

[A] ALEXANDER.] Lancelot of Perouſa, in the Body of his Work, entitled, Chi l'indovina, e ſavio — The Soothſayer or Philoſopher — tells us, that This Perſon's Name was Alexander; but in the Margin, and Table of Matters, he calls him Agoſtino, Auguſtin.

[B] A Collection of the Actions of the Kings, mentioned in the Scripture] This Work was compoſed in Italian. I know not whether it be the ſame with That entitled, Diſcorſi ſopra diverſi Luoghi della ſacra Scrittura —— Diſcourſes on different Paſſages of Holy Writ. The Catalogue of Oxford remarks, that it is divided into two Parts; the firſt of which was printed at Florence, in 1581, in 8*vo*; and the ſecond, in the ſame City, in 1583, in 8*vo*. We find, in the ſame Catalogue, that the Treatiſe De Voto Paupertatis, Of the Vow of Poverty, appeared at Florence, in 1580, in 8*vo*; and that the Author of theſe three Works was called Alexander Archirola. I believe it ſhould be Archirota.

ARETIN (CHARLES) was of Arezzo in Tuſcany, as his Sirname teſtifies (which apply to the other Aretin's). He held a conſiderable Rank among the Learned of the XVth Century. Poggius gives him great Encomiums (a); but they ought to be ſuſpected, becauſe Charles Aretin was a great Enemy of Philelphus, whom Poggius mortally hated. Philelphus complains bitterly of our Aretin, and repreſents him as a wicked Man, full of Frauds and malicious Arts (b). This likewiſe ought to be ſuſpected, as coming from ſuch an Enemy as Philelphus; who, being naturally given to ſlander, became much more ſo, on account of the Conteſts he had with ſome other learned Men. Be that as it will, there are diſintereſted Perſons, sons, who say, that Charles Aretin understood the Latin and Greek Tongues perfectly well, and that he shewed it by some Translations from the Greek (c). He was, besides, a tolerable good Poet [A], and wrote Comedies in Prose; some Parts of which are inserted by Albert Eyb, in his Marguerite Poëtique (d). But, what discovers his Abilities most, is, his having been chosen to succeed in the Post of Secretary to the Republic of Florence, after the Death of Leonard Aretin, in 1443 [B]. We do not know the Year of his Death; but Mr Moreri is certainly mistaken, when he places it in the Year 1443 [C]. The Authors, he quotes, do not say, that our Aretin left a Volume of Letters. Some have thought he was the Brother of John Aretin (e), of whom we shall speak in his Place. But they are mistaken: He was very ambitious of equalling the Reputation of Leonard Aretin, his Predecessor (f).

(a) Poggius init. Hiſtor. Diſcept. & II. Invect. in Philelph.

(b) Philelphi Epiſt. ad Carol. Aretin. Ann. 1433, & Epiſt. ſeq.

Digitized by Google

(c) Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital. pag. 96.

(d) Gesneri Biblioth.

(e) Vossius de Histor. Lat. pag. 579.

(f) See Remark [H], of the Article ARETIN (Leonard).

[A] He was a tolerable Poet.] This must be understood in regard to those Times; and I question not, with this Restriction, to establish my Text; for thus Mr de la Monnoie writes to me: Lilius Gyraldus, who had seen Charles Aretin's Poems, did not find them good; and in Truth, from the Quotations to be seen of them in the Dictionary of Tortellius, there is Reason to judge, that they are little worth. Note, that Tortellius quotes nothing of Him but Elegiac Verses; but Father Labbe, * in two or three Places, cites a Translation of the Batrachomyomachia, in Hexameter Verse, by Charles Aretin.

* Labbé, Nouvelle Biblioth. de MSS.

[B] He was chosen to succeed Leonard Aretin.] This we have from Leander Albertus. "Diem functus est (Leonardus Aretinus) anno post C. N. "MCCCCXL, ætatis suæ LXXIV, Florentiæ, "cum illi Reipub. diu à secretis fuisset, & successorem in eo munere habuit Carolum item Aretinum, "& Græcis Latinisque literis eruditissimum, qui etiam ipse quædam de Græcis Latina fecit (1). —— "Leonard Aretin died in the Year of Christ 1440, "aged Seventy four Years, at Florence; having been "a long time Secretary to That Republic; and was "succeeded in That Employ by Charles Aretin, a Person well skilled in Greek and Latin, and who had "translated some Pieces out of Greek into Latin". To this Testimony let us add That of Æneas Silvius, tho' somewhat long; because it will serve as a Proof of more than one Thing; "Commendanda "est, says he (2), multis in rebus Florentinorum prudentia, tum maxime quod in legendis Cancellariis "non juris scientiam, ut pleræque civitates, sed "oratoriam spectant, & quæ vocant humanitatis studia. Norunt enim recte scribendi dicendique artem non Bartolum aut Innocentium, sed Tullium "Quintilianumque tradere. Nos tres ex ea urbe cognovimus, Græcis & Latinis & conditorum operum "fama illustres, qui Cancellariam alius post alium "tenuere, Leonardum & Carolum Aretinos, & Poggium ejusdem reipublicæ civem, qui Secretarius "Apostolicus tribus quondam Pontificibus dictarat "Epistolas. —— The Prudence of the Florentines is "to be commended in many things; particularly in the "Choice of their Secretaries; in whom they do not "require, as many States do, a knowledge of Law, "but Oratory and Polite Learning. For they are "sensible, that the Art of Writing and Speaking "well is not to be learned from Bartolus, or Innocentius, but from Cicero. I have been acquainted with "Three successive Secretaries of That City, all famous "for their knowledge in Greek and Latin, and the "Works they have composed; to wit, Leonard and "Charles Aretin, and Poggius, a Citizen of the same "Republic, who had formerly, in quality of Apostolical "Secretary, dispatched the Briefs of three successive "Popes." By this Passage the Obscurity, or Error, of another Passage of Æneas Silvius, which gave Vossius a great deal of trouble, may be corrected. It is this: "Leonardum Aretinum ex te primum "sensi obiisse, qui Latium ornavit literis, quo nemo "post Lactantium Ciceroni proximior fuit. Gaudeo Poggium ejus locum apud Florentinos tenere. "Sed maluissem potius locum non vacasse, ne tanto "splendore caruisset Hetruria (3). —— You first in- "form me of the Death of Leonard Aretin, who, by "his Learning, was an Ornament to Italy; and "who, after Lactantius, came the nearest to Cicero. "I rejoice, that Poggius succeeds him at Florence; "but should have been better pleased, that the Post "had not been vacant, that Hetruria might not have "lost so great an Ornament." See the Remark [A] of the Article ARETIN (Leonard).

(1) Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital. pag. 96.

(2) Æn. Silvius Histor. de Europa. cap 54.

(3) Id. ibid.

[C] Moreri is mistaken, when he places it in the Year 1443.] It is certain, that Poggius succeeded our Aretin in the Employ of Secretary at Florence. Now it appears by the Speech, in which he congratulates Nicholas the Fifth on his Promotion to the Papacy, that he had no Employ at Florence in 1447 (4). It must be supposed, then, that Charles Aretin was Secretary of Florence in 1447; for his Predecessor Leonard Aretin died in 1443. But there is a more Demonstrative Proof of Mr Moreri's Error. Poggius, in a Letter written in the Pontificate of Nicholas V, says, that Charles Aretin had paid him a Visit; at the same time, when Nicholas V. had retired for fear of the Plague, and himself and Family had left Rome. Quo primum anno, says he (5), Nicolaus Pontifex quintus, pestis causa, Fabrianum, Piceni oppidum, secessit, cum me ad Terram novam natalem patriam cum familia contulissem, venit eo postmodum rogatus à me, qui Florentiam ob negotia publica adibat, Carolus Aretinus. What lead Mr Moreri into a Mistake, was his finding, that (6) Vossius does not refute the German Author, whom he quotes, and who had said, in his Collections of the Days of Death, and of Nativity, that Charles Aretin, the Orator and Historian, died in 1443, at Seventy Four Years of Age. All this agrees so well with Leonard Aretin, that, in all Probability, the German Author has confounded Charles with Leonard: However Vossius ought to have shewn him his Mistake in relation to the Year of our Aretin's Death.

(4) The Year of the Election of Nicolas V.

(5) Poggius init. Disceptat. k.

(6) Voss. de Hist. Lat. pag. 578.

ARETIN (Francis) lived in the XVth Century. He was a Man of great Reading, and understood the Greek Tongue. He translated the Commentaries of St Chrysostom on St John, and twenty of the same Father's Homilies, into Latin. He translated also the Epistles of Phalaris into Latin [A]. There is still extant a Treatise of his, de Balneis Puteolanis; —— of the Baths of Puteoli. John Antony Campanus, who was a Favourite of Pius II, and Sixtus IV, was one of his intimate Friends (a). Erasmus did not esteem our Aretin's Translations of St Chrysostom [B].

(a) Taken from Aubertus Miræus, Auctar de Script. Eccles. pag. 268.

Some

[A] He translated also the Epistles of Phalaris into Latin.] I have met with several curious Reflexions on these Letters in a Book printed in Germany, in 1689 (1); but I must not suppress, that what is only due to Francis, is attributed to Leonard Aretin. "Latinè emisit Leonhardus Aretinus Florentiæ "MCCCC LXXX. —— Published by Leonard Are"tin, at Florence, 1480". We shall see, in its Place (2) that Leonard was not living at the Time of That Edition.

(1) Decas Decadum J. Alberti Fabricii. n. 8.

(2) In Remark [G], of the Article ARETIN (Leonard).

[B] Erasmus did not esteem our Aretin's Translations.] He observes, in two Places, the Error, which This Translator is guilty of, in relation to the Word οἶνος, in translating the Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians. "Quod attinet ad fidem bene reddendi Græca, magis peccatum est ab Aniano, Aretino, & cæteris, quam ab "Oecolampadio, qui magis peccat festinatione quam "imperitia. Versionem Francisci Aretini in priorem "ad Corinth. habemus usque ad cap. 30. Cepi gustum

Digitized by Google

Some believe, that our Francis Aretin is the ſame with the famous Lawyer Franciſcus Aretinus, of the Family of the Accolti. But others can ſcarce believe, that the Tranſlator of ſome of St Chryſoſtom's Works, &c. is the ſame Francis Aretin, whoſe Works of Law ſavour of the groſſeſt Barbarity, without the leaſt Shadow of Knowledge in the Greek Tongue. I have ſome Obſervations to offer on this Head, which may ſerve to convince many People, that there is but one Francis Aretin in the Caſe [C]. Be that as it will, let us here ſpeak of Aretin the Lawyer. He ſtudied

" ſtum quam ſcitè tractaſſet rem, & ecce in ipſo " ſtatim limine, quod eſt τὸν τύφον καθαλε καὶ " καμαὶ ἐρέτ-ψε κατὰν αὐτὸν οἰησιν, cinosin opinio-
(3) Erasm. Epiſt. 50, lib. 26, pag. 1473. See alſo Epiſt. 2, lib. 28, pag. 1591.
" nem vertit pro arrogantia (3). —— As to tranſlating Greek faithfully, Anianus, Aretin, and others, are more guilty in this reſpect, than Oecolampadius, who offends more thro' Haſte, than Unskilfulneſs. We have the tranſlation of Aretin on the firſt to the Corinthians, as far as the 30*th Chapter. I immediately perceived how haſtily he performed this Work; for, in the very beginning of it, he renders* οἰησις by Opinio (Opinion) inſtead of Arrogantia (Arrogance)." He obſerves, in another Place (4), that Aretin had tranſlated the Commentaries on the Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians to the Twentieth Homily.

(4) Pag. 1591.

[C] I have ſome Obſervations to offer on this head, which may ſerve to convince many People, that there is but one Francis Aretin in the caſe.] Let us firſt propoſe Panzirolus's Doubt. " Liberalibus artibus " imbutus, non ſolum Latinis, ſed etiam Græcis literis operam dediſſe creditur, & Joannis Chryſoſtomi in D. Joannem & epiſtolam primam Pauli ad " Corinthios commentaria Latina feciſſe; vereor tamen ne is ſit Accoltus, cum quæ in jure ſcripſit, " illum ſtylum non oleant, neque ullum ſervent lin-
(5) Panzir. de Claris legum Interpr. lib. 2, cap. 103, pag. 247.
" guæ Græcæ veſtigium (5). —— Being a polite Scholar, he is ſaid not only to have ſtudied the Latin, but the Greek Tongue likewiſe, and to have tranſlated into Latin St Chryſoſtom on St John, and St Paul's Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians; tho' I much queſtion whether he be the Accoltus Aretinus, ſince what That Author has wrote in the Law does not favour of this Style, nor preſerves the leaſt Traces of the Greek Tongue." Next let us ſee what Mr de la Monnoie writes to me on occaſion of this Doubt (6). " Francis Accolti d' Arezzo, having written his " Concilia, and other Works of the Law, in a Stile, " which diſcovers not only an entire Ignorance of " the Greek, but of the Latin likewiſe; I have " been in doubt, as well as Panzirolus, whether " This was the ſame Francis d' Arezzo, who has " given us Greek Tranſlations, and whoſe Style is " not inferior to That of moſt of the Humaniſts of " his time. I knew, that the Lawyer took the " Name of Accolti, and the Titles of Doctor and " Knight, whereas the Humaniſt was ſimply called " Franciſcus Aretinus. In the mean time, having " lately had the Sight of a Copy of Francis Philelphus's Epiſtles, printed at Venice, in Folio, in the " Year 1502; a very ſcarce, and much ampler Edition, " than the Others, by Twenty one Books; I found " a way of reſolving my Doubt, upon Reading ſe-
(6) Mr de la Monnoie, Remarques MSS.
" veral of Thoſe Epiſtles, in which the Author " ſpeaks of one Francis d' Arezzo, his Diſciple, " equally learned in the Law, and in polite Literature. The Time and Circumſtances make it evi- " dently appear, that he is the ſame, whom Volateran, an almoſt Cotemporary Writer, mentions, at " the End of his 21ſt Book. Beſides his Law Compoſitions, his Tranſlations of St Chryſoſtom, of the " Epiſtles of Phalaris, and of Thoſe of Diogenes the " Cynic, they attribute to him a Treatiſe of the " Baths of Puteoli; tho' he is not the Author of it, " nor was any farther concern'd, than in dedicating " it to Pope Pius the Second, by a Letter conceived in mean Expreſſions enough. He had alſo " compoſed a Book of the Life and Manners of " St Antonin, Archbiſhop of Florence. Philelphus " ſpeaks with praiſe of this Work, in the Twelfth " Letter of his Seventeenth Book. In the Twenty " Eighth Book of Letters of the ſame Philelphus, " there are Six addreſſed Franciſco Aretino Equiti " aurato ac Juriſconſulto, then Profeſſor of Law " in the Univerſity of Sienna. In moſt of theſe " Letters, he gives him high Commendations, a " great part of which might have been ſpared. " Quaſi dubitandum ſit, ſays he to him in the Firſt " Letter, minus tibi eſſe apud florentiſſimam iſtam " Rempub. ſecunda omnia, qui vir in omni eruditio- " nis ac ſapientiæ genere præſtantiſſimus ſis, atque ea " virtute præditus, qua non modo ex hominibus hu- " juſce tempeſtatis nemini cedis, ſed potes jure cum " univerſa antiquitate de laude contendere. —— As " if there were any room to doubt of your Succeſs in " That moſt flouriſhing Republick; you, who excel " in every branch of Learning and Knowledge, and " whoſe extraordinary Virtues not only raiſe you above " the Moderns, but equal you to the moſt ſhining " Characters of Antiquity." " It appears by the " Third, dated the 8th of March 1468, that Francis " of Arezzo was then ſomewhat above Fifty Years " of Age; a Reaſon he made uſe of to excuſe him- " ſelf from marrying; Whereupon Philelphus tells " him merrily: " Nam quod ais ſenture te debilita- " tas tibi eſſe corporis vires, cum ſis quinquagenari- " us, aut paulo amplius, id nulla tibi cauſa acci- " dit alia, quam quod ætatis robur remiſeris, ut, " quo tempore tendendus erat arcus, tum eum tu " maxime relaxaveris. Quod ſi eam ſervaſſes mediocritatem, quam & Philoſophi probant, & ego ſe- " cutus ſum, conſuluiſſes tu ſane & poſteritati & " tibi. —— As to what you plead, that you find your " Strength decay'd, being now fifty Years of Age, or " upwards, this proceeds from your not having ex- " erted the Strength of your Youth; inſomuch, that, " when the Bow ought moſt to have been bent, you gave " it the greateſt Relaxation. Had you obſerved That " Mediocrity, which the Philoſophers approve of, " and I have follow'd, it would have been for the " Advantage both of your Self and Poſterity." In " the Fourth of the 28th, he enquires after his Studies: Cœterum cupio ex te noſſe quid rerum agas? " Non enim ſatis tuo præſtanti ingenio, ſingularique " doctrinæ eſſe duco, quod doceas leges, & jus civile, " nam hæc jam tibi nullius ſunt induſtriæ, cujus " memoria divina eſt potius quam humana. Majora " quædam te arbitror meditari, nec enim in eodem " ſemper verſaris ludo, itaque fieri non poteſt, quin " aliquid novi ſemper cudas excudaſque. —— I " deſire you would inform me how you are employ'd? " for your great Abilities and uncommon Learning " cannot, I think, be ſatisfied with Teaching the " Laws; a Study, which now requires no Induſtry in you, the memory of which is rather di- " vine, than human: I cannot help believing, that " your Thoughts are employ'd on ſomething greater; " for, as you do not confine your ſelf to One Branch of " Science, you muſt neceſſarily ſtrike out ſomething " New". " In the Fifth he deſires him to get the " the Hiſtory of Ammianus Marcellinus copied for " him in Parchment. In a Letter of the 29th Book, " he propoſes the getting Demetrius Caſtrenus, of " Conſtantinople, entertain'd at Sienna, at the Charge " of the Republick, to inſtruct the Youth in the " Greek Tongue. In another Letter of the 31ſt " Book, he informs him of a Deſign the Se- " nate of Venice had to get him from Sienna, and " give him a Chair at Padua; and adds, " Ad hæc " ego contra locutus ſum, & quæ vera eſſe novi, & " quibus te delectari exiſtimavi, quippe qui non " eſſem oblitus quæ mecum nuper, cum ad Octobrem " Senæ fuiſſem, & de temperamento corporis tui, & " de iſtius cœli, quantum ad te attinet, intemperie " locutus fueras. —— This Deſign I oppoſed, and declared what I knew, and what I thought was " agreeable to your Inclinations; for I had not forgot the Converſation, which paſs'd between us at Sienna, in the Month of October, in which you " mentioned the State of your own Conſtitution, and the " inconſiſtency of That Air with your Health." " What is ſurprizing in this, is, his ſaying in the " ſame Letter, that Francis of Arezzo was an Enemy " to a barbarous Stile: " Nec illud ſane prætere- " undum cenſui, Appianum Alexandrinum eſſe jam " a me magna ex parte Latinum factum, quoniam ſtudied at Sienna, about the Year 1443 (b), and afterwards taught the Civil Law there, with ſuch a Vivacity of Genius, that he was nick-named the Prince of Subtilties; and that the Subtilty of Aretin paſſed into a Proverb. He ſignalized this fine Talent chiefly in Diſputation; for no one could reſiſt him. He gave his Advice with ſuch Confidence, that he made his Clients ſure of their Cauſe: His Experience did not deceive him; for it was commonly ſaid in Court, Such a Cauſe is condemned by Aretin, therefore it will be loſt. He taught alſo in the Academy of Piſa, and in That of Ferrara. He went to Rome in the Pontificate of Sixtus IV, but continued not long there; for he quickly perceived, that the great Hopes he had built on his Reputation would be greatly diſappointed. That Pope declared he would willingly give him the Dignity of a Cardinal, were he not loth to injure the Public, by taking ſo excellent a Profeſſor from his School. When Age would not permit him to exerciſe all the Functions of his Employ, he was diſpenſed with from reading of Lectures; but his Salary was continued. Nevertheleſs he ſometimes mounted the Chair; and, though his Lectures had loſt their wonted Spirit, yet he had a great many Hearers; which was attributed to his Reputation. One Day, his Scholars being run to a public Shew, he perceived, that there were but forty Perſons in his Auditory; and was in ſuch a Paſſion, that he threw away his Book, and cried out aloud, Aretin will never explain the Myſtery of the Law to ſo few. He went away abruptly, and would teach no more. He was naturally ſevere, and never kept a Servant above a Month or two; for he ſaid, that thoſe, who were newly hired, ſerved with moſt Diligence. He was honoured with the Quality of a Knight; lived always a ſingle Life, and very frugally; which gave him an Opportunity of acquiring a great Fortune. He was no leſs honoured for his Chaſtity, than for his Learning. The Reader will be pleaſed to know the Wile he employed to make his (b) Panzirol. de Claris Legum Interpret. lib. 2, cap. 103, pag. 249, &c.

Digitized by Google

" tu nulla barbaria linguæ delectaris. —— Nor did I " think proper to omit, that I had tranſlated into " Latin the greateſt part of Appianus Alexandrinus, " becauſe you are diſpleaſed with All Barbariſm of " Style." Is it then to the Practice of the Age, " that the barbarous Expreſſions of Francis of Arezzo, " in his Writings on the Law, are to be imputed? " To me it ſeems, that there is ground to believe, " he induſtriouſly affected them; leſt, endeavouring " to paſs for a more Polite Writer, he ſhould not " be thought ſo profound a Lawyer. I have peruſed " ſome of his Pleadings, which are Barbariſm it " ſelf. The CXLIId has been much ridiculed; " where, in Conſequence of the Agreement, made " between Francis Sforza, Duke of Milan, and Lewis " de Gonzaga, Marquis of Mantua, that, in caſe " Dorothy, the Daughter of the Marquis, ſhould be " found without Deformity of Body, at the Age " of Fourteen Years, ſhe ſhould be married to Ga- " leazzo, the Duke's Son; he maintains, that the " Duke had a Right to demand a Search by the Phy- " ſicians, who ſhould ſee, and feel, the Princeſs " ſtark naked, wherever the Exigency of the Caſe " might require. It appears, however, that this " Examination, how grievous ſoever in the Execu- " tion, was demandable by Law; and it was ac- " cordingly demanded by the Duke, but refuſed by " the Marquis."

Having examin'd theſe Obſervations of Mr. de la Monnoie, I propos'd ſome other Doubts to him; and he confirm'd his opinion a-new in this manner. You ought not to doubt in any wiſe, but that Francis d'Arezzo, Tranſlator of ſome Greek Works, and Francis d'Arezzo, the Lawyer, whoſe Comments on the Law, and Pleadings, are extant, are one and the ſame Author. Volaterran, who might have ſeen the Lawyer, allows him, beſides his Learning in the Law, a conſiderable Attainment in the Belles Lettres (7). Philelphus, who wrote ſome Years before, ſays the ſame Thing. It appears by the Teſtimony of the Epiſtles, I have cited to you, that, in his Time, there was one Franciſcus Aretinus, or Arretinus (as he himſelf, and others, always write) his Diſciple, Knight, Lawyer, Profeſſor of Civil Law in the Univerſity of Sienna, and One, who excell'd in all manner of Literature. I add this following Paſſage, to thoſe I have already ſent you. It is in the Firſt Epiſtle of the Twenty ſixth Book, which is an Invective againſt Leodriſio Crivello. " At laudas Franciſcum Arretinum, & jure quidem, " ſed, ut arbitror, dormitans. Egiſti enim præter " ingenium, & conſuetudinem tuam. At meretur " Franciſcus Arretinus, cum ſit tum Jureconſulto- " rum omnium præſtantiſſimus, tum nullius præclaræ " diſciplinæ ignarus. Tamen laudari à te flagitiorum " omnium ſcelerumque ſentinâ dedecoroſum eſt. " Jubes ab illo ut diſcam: rectè mones; nam non ab " illo ſolum, ſed etiam abs te ipſo, ſi quid boni af- " ferre poſſes, non invitus diſcerem. Sed cur, quem " tantopere laudas, non item imitaris? Ille prædicat " apud omnes diſcipulum ſe meum extitiſſe, mihique " tribuit tantas laudas, quantis vellem me non carere. " At eſt te, inquis, omni doctrina præſtantior. Non " eo inficias, neque fero graviter me à multis etiam " diſcipulis meis ſuperari, id quod ſine aliqua mea " laude fieri non potuerit, ſiquidem hi grati eſſe vo- " luere. —— You commend Francis Arretin, and juſt- " ly; tho' ſure you was aſleep, when you did ſo; for " your Diſpoſition and Practice never lead you to " Panegyric. Francis Arretin deſerves Commendation, " as being a moſt skillful Lawyer, and a compleat " Scholar. But it is a Diſgrace to him to be praiſed " by you, who are a Sink of all Villany and Wicked- " neſs. You bid me learn of him; your Advice is " good; for I ſhould readily receive Inſtruction, not " only from him, but even from you, were it poſſible " to learn any Good of you. But why do you not imi- " tate a Man, whom you ſo greatly commend? He " publickly declares himſelf to have been my Diſciple, " and beſtows ſuch Commendations on me, as I wiſh " were due to me. But he excels me, you ſay, in " every Branch of Learning. I confeſs it, nor am I " diſpleaſed, that many of my Scholars ſurpaſs me; " which very Thing cannot but tend in ſome Degree " to my Praiſe; ſince They acknowledge themſelves in- " debted to me for it." This Letter is dated the Firſt of Auguſt 1465. At the ſame time Janus Pannonius, who ſtudied, then, in Italy, addreſs'd an Epigram to our Francis d'Arezzo; the Two firſt Verſes of which were theſe:

Franciſce, interpres legum, ô Aretine, Sacrarum,
Nec minus Aonia nobilis in cithara.

Learn'd in the Sacred Laws, O Aretin,
Nor leſs renown'd on the Aonian Lyre.

It is certain, then, that this Profeſſor of Civil Law at Sienna, call'd Francis d'Arezzo or Aretin, was ſkill'd in polite Literature; and it is no leſs certain, that the Name of the ſame Profeſſor's Family was Accolti. You may believe himſelf: For he ſubſcribes himſelf at the Bottom of his 118*th Pleading,* " Decretorum Doctor, Senis ordinarie legens, & il- " luſtris D. Marchionis Eſtenſis Conſiliarius; —— Do- " ctor of Decretals, Profeſſor at Sienna, and Coun- " ſellor of the Illuſtrious Marquis d'Eſte." The Times agree. Volaterran ſays, That Francis Aretin, Humaniſt, and Civilian, was at Rome in the Pontificate of Sixtus IV. Francis Accolti wrote his Hundred and Sixty ninth Plea againſt the ſame Sixtus, in Favour of

(7) Theſe are the Words of Volaterran, at the end of the 21*ſt Book*, pag. 782. Alexander Imolenſis, & Franciſcus Aretinus, ambo ſcriptis excellentibus nuper relictis in memoria poſteritatis vivent. Franciſcus, præter jura, cæteras etiam liberales artes eſt adeptus, princeps ſeculi hujus habebatur. Xiſti tempore magna expectatione in hanc urbem venit, pauloque poſt ſpe fruſtratus remigravit impari doctrinæ ſapientia vitæque inſtituto, cum in cœlibatu vixerit, ac opibus inhiaverit, quas cumulatiſſimas cognatis demum reliquit.

Digitized by Google

his Disciples sensible, of how great Importance it is to keep a fair Reputation [D]. Though he had designed his Estate for the Maintenance of a College, yet he left it to his Relations (c). He had a Brother, who became very famous under the Name of BENEDICTUS ACCOLTUS ARETINUS [E]. I shall speak of him in one of the Remarks.

(c) Ibid.

of Lorenzo de Medicis, and the Florentines, whom That Pope had excommunicated for the Murther of the Archbishop of Pisa, and the Imprisonment of the Cardinal, his Great-Nephew. Volaterran observes, That Francis Aretin, having gone to Rome with great views, stay'd there but a little while, finding that the Success did not answer his Expectation. From whence I infer, that Francis Accolti, who is the same with the Francis Aretin of Volaterran, undertook the more freely to write against Sixtus in Defence of the Florentines, as remembring, that this Pope had let him depart Rome, without acknowledging his Merit. Perhaps, likewise, the Reason of his not marrying was the Hopes he had entertain'd of some Ecclesiastical Dignity, as has been said of the Civilian Jason. There only remains the Doubt, arising from the Difference between the Style of Aretin, the Professor of Law, and That of Aretin, the Translator. It is true This Difference is very great; and, tho' the Translations be has left us are not, indeed, the most elegant Latin, yet, in comparison of his Civil-Law Works, they may be reputed more than Ciceronian. Had he endeavoured (as some Authors to divert themselves have) to write in a Macaronic * Style, he could not have succeeded better. Sunt etiam multi testes, says he, Concil. 83. qui viderunt aquam bene ire ad molendinum, & ipsum bene molere, & stechariam lignaminis bene in perfecto. And, Concil. 13. Probatur per duos testes nostros, quod ista mulier gessit portaturam capitis secundum habitum nuptarum à sex annis citra. The whole Book abounds with these Elegancies. The Orthography of the Words taken from the Greek is strangely perverted in it. We there find Economus, emologatio, cyrothecæ, Grisogonus, emphitheota. I have insinuated the Reason, which this Lawyer might have, for making use of these barbarisms, viz. that his Brethren did not write, or express themselves, otherwise; if his Language had been more correct, it would not have been understood by those of the Trade. Francis Aretin, or Accolti, which you please, could have express'd himself better; but he loved Money; and, if he had affected to employ the Papinian Style, he might have danced attendance in vain, and would have been generally abandon'd. The same Barbarism reign'd at that Time among the Divines and Physicians. They among them, who first attempted to introduce Politeness, were reckoned neither Divines, nor Physicians, but only Grammarians. They were scarce cured of this Prejudice in the Days of Ludovicus Vives. His Words are worth transcribing. " Quæ Lyranus, & Hugo scribunt (says he, lib. 1. de " causis Corruptar. Art.) Theologia est, quæ Erasmus, " Grammatica. Idem de Hieronymo, Ambrosio, Au- " gustino, Hilario dicturi, nisi nomina obstarent; tam- " etsi hic etiam nescio quid mussant: Quod si Joan- " nes Picus apologiam suam corrupto illo non scrip- " sisset sermone, haud quaquam haberetur Theolo- " gus, sed Grammaticus. Alciatus, Zasius, Canti- " uncula, Grammatici sunt, cum de jure disputant; " Accursius est Jurisconsultus, vel cum interpretatur, " que, id est, &; ait, id est, dixit; seu, id est, aut. " ------What Lyranus and Hugo write is Divinity; " What Erasmus, Grammar. They would say the " same of Jerom, Ambrosius, Austin, and Hilarius, " did not the Greatness of their Names silence them; " tho' even here they mutter I know not what. But if " Joannes Picus had not written his Apology in that " corrupt Style, he would have been considered, not " as a Divine, but a Grammarian. Alciatus, Zasius, " Cantiuncula, are Grammarians, when they dispute " concerning Law; Accursius is a Lawyer, when he " interprets que by et; ait by dixit; and seu by aut." So that, Sir, there was a Kind of Necessity on Francis Aretin, the Lawyer, to conform to the Practice of his Time; and I think these Reflexions, together with the Proceeding, may suffice to persuade you, that he only differs from the Humanists in Point of Elocution.

* Burlesque.

[D] The Wile he employed to make his Disciples sensible, of how great Importance it is to keep a fair Reputation.] When he found, that the frequent Exhortations he gave them to preserve a good Reputation, availed nothing, he made use of the following Stratagem. Ubi (Ferrariæ) studiosos ad famam boni nominis conservandam sæpe hortatus, cum nihil proficeret, ridiculum commentum excogitavit, ut quam vim maximam haberet existimatio ostenderet (8). The Butchers of Ferrara left their Meat all Night in the Shambles. He went thither with his Lacquey before Day, and, having broke open their Boxes, carried off all the Meat. Two of his Scholars, who were reputed the most unlucky, were accused of This Action, and imprisoned. Aretin waited upon Duke Hercules, to desire their Liberty, taking the Fact upon himself. But, the more obstinately he insisted, that He had done it, the more it was believed, that the Prisoners were guilty. For no one durst suspect a Professor, whose Gravity and Wisdom were so well known, of such an Action. The Affair being at last terminated, he openly declared, that he had gained his Point; which was to shew the Weight and Authority of a good Reputation. Quo constantius se facti autorem fatebatur, eo magis qui in vinculis erant rei credebantur, cum ob viri gravitatem nemo id de eo suspicari auderet. Re demum composita, id se Aretinus ad demonstrandum hominis bonæ opinionis auctoritatem feciſſe dixit (9). It is well known, that reputed Liars, are never believed, even when they speak Truth. It is quite contrary with those, who pass for sincere Men; They are believed, even when they lie. See, in Valerius Maximus (10), what a good Opinion once conceived of a Man can do.

(8) Panzir. de Claris Legum Interpret. pag. 250.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 251.

(10) Valer. Maxim. lib. 3, cap. 7, n. 8.

[E] He had a Brother, who became very famous under the Name of BENEDICTUS ACCOLTUS ARETINUS.] He was born in the Year 1415, and, having gone thro' the Studies of Humanity, he applied himself to That of the Law, with so much Ardor, that, in a short Time, he arrived to the Degree of Doctor; and, soon after, by his Public Lectures, and by his Opinions and Advice (11) in difficult Cases, equalled the most famous Civilians of his Time. He did not bid adieu to Polite Learning; but wrote Treatises, which shewed, that this Branch was not indifferent to him. His Dialogue, de præstantia virorum sui ævi, was printed at Parma, in the Year 1692, from the Manuscript, which Mr Magliabecchi produced. During the last Seven Years of his Life, he was Secretary to the Republic of Florence; where he died, in the Year 1466, in the Fifty first Year of his Age. His Son, Peter, a great Civilian, having been Auditor of the Rota Twenty five Years, was honoured with a Cardinal's Cap by Pope Julius II. He had another Son, whose name was Michael, and who was the Father of Benedictus Accoltus. This Son was Secretary to Clement VII, and afterwards Cardinal (12). See Moreri's Dictionary, at the Word Accolti.

(11) Some of them have been printed.

(12) Taken from the Life of Benedict Accoltus, prefixed to the Dialogue de Præstantia virorum sui ævi.

ARETIN (Guy), a Monk of the Order of St Benedict, lived in the XIth Century. He became famous by discovering a new Method of teaching Music. He published a Book on this Subject, entituled, Micrologus, and a Letter, which Cardinal Baronius has inserted in his Annals, under the Year 1022. He published his Micrologus, at the Age of Thirty four Years, in the Pontificate of John XX; and had been three times called to Rome by Pope Benedict VIII. This Pope had examined the Antiphonary of Aretin, and was fond of several Things, which he had learned from this Author. Possevin gives us this Account of him, in his Apparatus (a). To say something concerning this Invention of Guy Aretin, I must observe, that it was he, who invented the six Notes, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la. The Names of these six Notes are said to be taken from an Hymn, which contains these Sapphic Verses.

(a) Pag. 694.

that

Digitized by Google

UT queant laxis REsonare fibris
MIra gestorum FAmuli tuorum
SOLve pollutis LAbiis reatum (b).

(b) See Vossius de Musice, pag. 40.

For this Purpose, you need only take the first and sixth Syllable of each Verse. Some pretend, that the Word Gammut, so common in Music, comes from Guy Aretin's having, in making use of the first Letters of the Alphabet, to specify his Notes, employed the Letter G, which the Greeks call Gamma; and that he did this to shew, that Music came from Greece (c). They, who attribute to him a Book against Berengarius are mistaken [A].

(c) Furetiere, at the Word Gammut.

[A] They, who attribute to him a Book against Berengarius, are mistaken.] Vossius fell into this Mistake; and thence infers, that he flourished in the Reign of the Emperor Conrad the Younger; and that, therefore, they, who place him an Hundred Years later, are mistaken (1). The Error, I speak of, arose from hence, that they have confounded Guy Aretin with another Monk, whose Name was Guitmond, a Brother of the Convent of St Leufred, of the Order of St Benedict, in the Diocese of Evreux; who became Cardinal, and Bishop of Aversa in Italy. They were very near Cotemporaries; for Guitmond died about the Year 1080. He is the Author of Three Books, "De veritate corporis & "sanguinis Christi in Eucharistia, adversus Berengarium; —— Of the real Presence of the Body "and Blood of Christ in the Eucharist; against Berengarius; which have been printed separately, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum (2). The Cause I assign for this Error is so plain, that the same Vossius says expressly, in another Place, that, in 1070, in the Pontificate of Gregory VII, flourished Guido or Guidmont, born at Arezzo, Patria Aretinus, first a Monk in the Monastery of St Leufred, in the Diocese of Evreux, in Normandy, and afterwards Cardinal, and Bishop of Aversa; that, while he was a Monk, he composed Two Treatises of Music, one in Verse, and the other in Prose, and is the same, who wrote Three Books against Berengarius (3).

(1) Voss. de Musice, pag. 40.

(2) Vide Labbé, de Script. Eccles. Tom. 1, pag 402.

(3) Voss. de Scient. Mathem. p. 95.

ARETIN (John), surnamed Tortellius, passes for one of the learnedest Men of the XVth Century. He composed the Life of St Athanasius [A], at the Request of Pope Eugenius IV. He was admitted to the Confidence of Nicolas V, whose Chamberlain he was (a). He was a Man of an agreeable Conversation, and honourably distinguished himself from other learned Men, his Cotemporaries, by never dishonouring the Profession of Learning by fierce and injurious Disputes. He was chiefly skilled in the Knowledge of Grammar; as he has shewn by his Book De Potestate Literarum [B]. Gesner's Bibliotheca gives us the Titles of several other Works of Tortellius, excepting a Lexicon, which he composed, and which is cited by Magius (b). Laurentius Valla was much his Friend, and dedicated to him his Books De Latina Elegantia [C]. Vossius, who affirms (c), that he was the Brother of Charles Aretin, would be much mistaken, had he no other Proof for it, than the Words

(a) Jovius Elog. c. 108.

(b) Magius, Miscel. lib. 2, cap. 14.

(c) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 579.

[A] He composed the Life of St Athanasius.] Paul Jovius intimates plainly enough, that Tortellius only translated it into Latin (1); Divi Athanasii vitam Eugenio expetenti Latinam fecit. Gesner says so more expressly; Athanasii Alexandrini vitam ad Eugenium Pontificem in Latinum transtulit (2). But Vossius allows him much more than the Task of a Translator; He makes him the Compiler of it; Athanasii vitam ex variis, Eugenii postulato, consarcinavit; and quotes Paul Jovius, and Volaterran (3). The Quotation of Paul Jovius cannot be altogether exact, as any one may see by comparing the Words. That of Volaterran is not more so, than the former; these are his Words. "Joannes (Aretinus) cognomento "Tortellius, Romanæ Ecclesiæ subdiaconus, apud "Eugenium quartum fuit. Orthographiam, vitam- "que Athanasii, ac nonnulla alia conscripsit (4). —— "John Aretin, surnamed Tortellius, Subdeacon of "the Roman Church, was in the Court of Eugenius "IV. He wrote a Treatise of Orthography, the Life "of St Athanasius, and some other Works." Vossius affirms, that Wincelius has inserted This Life of St Athanasius in his Hagiologia. He conjectures, that Tortellius is the Author of the Life of St Zenobius, Bishop of Florence, inserted in the Collections of Surius, under the Twenty fifth of May. The reason of this Conjecture is taken from the Circumstances of Time, and from the Name, which the Author of This Life, assumes; to wit, Joannes Archipresbyter Aretinus.

(1) Jovius, Elog. cap. 108, p. 251.

(2) Gesn. Biblioth. fol. 458.

(3) Voss. de Hist. Lat. pag. 579.

(4) Volat. lib. 21, pag. 773.

[B] His Knowledge of Grammar is shewn in his Book de Potestate Literarum.] "That, which Vola- "terran calls Orthographia; Paul Jovius, a Book "de potestate literarum; Gesner, Commentarii linguæ "Latinæ; and Magius, Lexicon; is but One and "the same Volume of Tortellius in Two Parts: "The First of which, which is very short, contains "some Chapters on the Invention, Number, Figure, "Pronounciation, and Joyning of the Letters of "the Alphabet. The second, which is very long, "contains an Alphabetical Catalogue of Latin Words, "chiefly taken from the Greek, of which he "teaches, or endeavours to teach, the Orthogra- "phy (5)."

(5) Mr de la Monnoie, Remarques, manuscript.

[C] Laurentius Valla dedicated to him his Books de Latina Elegantia.] From the manner, in which Gesner had expressed himself, no One but would judge, that Tortellius dedicated this Work to Laurentius Valla: These are Gesner's words; "Joannes Tor- "tellius, natione Aretinus, Laurentii Vallæ amicis- "simus, ad quem elegantiarum linguæ Latinæ sex "libros perscripsit. Nicolai postmodum pontificis "contubernalis, & studiorum ejus intimus comes "(6). —— Johannes Tortellius, of Arezzo, an in- "timate Friend of Laurentius Valla, to whom he "dedicated Six Books, of the Elegancies of the Latin "Tongue. He was afterwards Chamberlain and Con- "fident of Nicolas V, and an intimate Companion of "his Studies." Those Compliers, who, thro' an Ambition of writing a large Book in a short Time, or for any other Reason, never seek for the necessary Instruction beyond the Page in Sight, would easily commit Three gross Faults, if they applied their own Conjectures to this Text of Gesner. I. They would say, that Tortellius wrote six Books of the Elegancies of the Latin Tongue, and that he dedicated them to Laurentius Valla. II. That, afterwards, he became a Domestic of Pope Nicholas V, and his Oracle of Learning; and that the great Success of his Book procured him This Honour. III. That Nicholas V. held the Chair in the Year 1420; for, since Gesner places the flourishing State of Tortellius in this time, and common Sense tells us, that this flourishing State must be referred to the time, when Tortellius was in

(6) Gesn. Biblioth. fol. 458, ex Trithemio.

Digitized by Google

Words of Volaterran, to whom he ſeems to refer us. Volaterran ſays nothing of this pretended Brotherhood [D].

(d) See, in one of the Remarks of the Article NICOLAS V, the Paſſage in the Letter of the 26th Book of Philelphus.

Some very good Judges believe, that Tortellius was but moderately learned, even for the Age he lived in; but, as he was naturally officious, and held a conſiderable Poſt about the Pope's Perſon, the Wits of thoſe Times gave him great Praiſes, which ſome of them retracted afterwards. Philelphus was of this Number [E]. I ſhall obſerve, in another Place (d), that Tortellius was Library-Keeper to Nicholas V.

in Favour with Nicholas V, it follows, that, according to Geſner, This Pope ſat in the Chair at the time I have ſaid. The Truth is, that he was elected in 1447; and that Tortellius had been his Man of Learning, and his Chamberlain, before; when Laurentius Valla dedicated his Elegantiæ to him. I cannot gueſs what Mr Moreri would be at, in this Article, with his indefinite Citation from Valerius Andreas. Why did he not conſult Voſſius, and Paul Jovius, who would have furniſhed him with a Cure for Leanneſs.

[D] Volaterran ſays nothing of this pretended Brotherhood.] I have very good Reaſon to call it ſo; ſince Tortellius, ſpeaking of Charles and Leonard d' Arezzo, ſtyles them only his Countrymen. A doctiſſimis viris noſtræ ætatis, & conterraneis meis Leonardo & Carolo Arretinis *. And, when he mentions Charles, he always ſtyles him either Carolus Arretinus conterraneus meus, or Carolus noſter Arretinus †. This was communicated to me by Mr de la Monnoie. Let us ſet down the Words of Volaterran, and Thoſe of Voſſius; and we ſhall ſee, whether the latter could build upon the former. " Carolus & Joannes Aretini nobilia temporis illius " ingenia, quorum alter ſcriba Florentinorum Leo- " nardo ſucceſſit; Alter Joannes, cognomento Tor- " tellius, Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſubdiaconus, apud Eu- " genium quartum fuit (7). - - - - - - - Charles and " John Aretin, celebrated Wits of That Time; the " former of which ſucceeded Leonard, as Secretary at " Florence; The latter, John, ſirnamed Tortellius, " Sub-deacon of the Roman Church, was retained by " Eugenius IV." Voſſius expreſſes himſelf thus: " Joannes Aretinus, cognomento Tortellius, Caroli " Aretini, qui poſt Leonardum Aretinum ſcriba Floren- " tinorum fuit, frater, Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſubdiaconus " apud Eugenium IV. - - - - - - præter grande de " orthographia volumen, etiam Athanaſii vitam - - - - " conſarcinavit, ut præter Jovium auctor eſt Vola- " terranus lib. XXI. Anthropol. ubi & hoſce Are- " tinos fratres nobilia illius temporis ingenia appel- " lat (8). - - - - - John Aretin, ſirnamed Tortellius, " Brother of Charles Aretin, who ſucceeded Leonard " as Secretary at Florence, Subdeacon of the Roman " Church, and Domeſtic of Eugenius IV. - - - beſides " a large Volume de Orthographia - - - - - wrote the " Life of Athanaſius; as, beſides Jovius, Volaterran " informs us, lib. 21. Anthropol. where he calls the " Brothers, Aretins, Celebrated Wits of That Time." If they had contented themſelves with ſaying, they were Relations, they might have ſome ground for it in theſe Words of Philelphus, " Putabam Ca- " rolum Arretinum rediiſſe mecum in gratiam. Ita " enim Joannes Arretinus ejus NECESSARIUS tuis " verbis mihi renunciarat (9). - - - - - I thought that " Charles Arretin had been reconciled to me; for ſo " John Arretin, his Relation, informed me from you." For though neceſſarius be ſometimes taken for an intimate Friend, yet Philelphus, and moſt of the Writers of thoſe times, never uſed it but in the Senſe of a Relation by Blood, or allied by Marriage. I am indebted for this Obſervation to Mr de la Monnoie.

(9) Philel. Epiſt. lib. 9.

[E] Philelphus was of the Number of Thoſe, who retracted the Praiſes, they had beſtowed on J. Aretin.] I ſhall cite, in the Article NICOLAS V, a Letter of Philelphus, dated the firſt of Auguſt 1465, in which he greatly commends Tortellius for his Skill in Greek and Latin. But ſee what the ſame Philelphus wrote, the twenty ninth of May, 1473. " Video quoſdam noſtræ tempeſtatis homines, qui " cum magnum de ſe quiddam voluerunt in " arte grammatica profiteri, in maximos errores " devenerunt. E quorum numero principatum " mihi tenere viſus eſt Joannes Tortellius Are- " tinus, qui cum & Græcam & Latinam litteratu- " ram noviſſe videri vult, utramque ignoraviſſe aper- " tiſſime declarat (10). - - - - - I know ſeveral Per- " ſons of our Age, who, pretending to great Skill " in Grammar, have fallen into the greateſt Errors. " Among Theſe John Tortellius Arretinus claims the " firſt place; who, at the ſame time that he would " ſeem to be verſed both in the Greek and Latin Li- " terature, plainly diſcovers his Ignorance of both."

(10) Mr de la Monnoie ſupplies me with this.

* In the 4th Part of his Work, at the Chapter of the Greek T.

† In the ſecond Part, which contains the Words in an Alphabetical Order.

(7) Volaterr. lib. 21, pag. 773.

(8) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 579.

ARETIN (LEONARD), is more known by This Name, which was given him as he was a Native of Arezzo, than by That of Brunus, or Bruni, which was his Family Name. He was one of the moſt conſiderable Men of the XVth Century [A]. He learned Greek under Emanuel Chryſolorus, as he himſelf informs us (a); and, his Merit being made known to Pope Innocent VII, he obtained of him, though very young, the Place of Secretary of the Briefs, of which he acquitted himſelf worthily under That Pontificate, and the four following (b). He was afterwards Secretary to the Republic of Florence (c), and raiſed a large Fortune (d), as well, becauſe he always lived a ſingle Life (e), as on account of his Extraordinary Œconomy. He tranſlated ſome of Plutarch's Lives [B], and Ariſtotle's Ethics, from the Greek into Latin. He compoſed three Books of the Punic War, which may ſerve to ſupply ſome of thoſe, which are wanting in Livy [C]. He compoſed alſo an Hiſtory of the Tranſactions

(a) Leon. Aretin. Hiſtor. Rerum Italicar. See alſo Jovius, Elog. c. 23.

(b) Jovius, ibid. cap. 9.

(c) Leand. Albert. Deſcript. Ital.

(d) Jovius, ubi ſupra.

(e) Volaterr. lib. 21, pag. 772.

[A] He was one of the moſt conſiderable Men of the XVth Century.] Paul Jovius ſays, that Leonard Aretin was the firſt, who reſtored the Purity of the Greek Tongue in Italy (1). Philelphus allows him great Eloquence, and a great Depth of Genius and Learning (2). Poggius (3) and Laurentius Valla (4) have ranked him above all his Cotemporaries in point of Eloquence and Learning; but Floridus Sabinus is more moderate in his Commendations of him, and gives us no advantageous Idea of his Latin (5); in which Eraſmus ſeems to agree with him (6). Æneas Silvius praiſes our Aretin highly in his Fifty firſt Letter, and informs us, that the Florentines had conferred his Office on Poggius. Voſſius obſerves, that Æneas Silvius and Leander Albertus differ in this; the latter ſaying, in his Deſcription of Italy, that Charles Aretin ſucceeded Leonard in the Poſt of Secretary to the Republic of Florence. See, above, the Article (CHARLES) ARETIN (7), where we prove, from Æneas Silvius himſelf, that Leander Albertus is in the right.

(1) Jovius, Elog. cap. 9, pag. 2-.
(2) Philelph. Convivior. lib. 2, & Epiſt. ad eum ſcripta.
(3) Pogg. in Philelph. Invect. 2.
(4) Apud Philelph. Invect. 1, in Vallam.
(5) Flor. Sabinus adverſ. Calumn. Ling. Lat.
(6) Eraſm. in Ciceroniano.

(7) In Remark [B].

[B] He tranſlated ſome of Plutarch's Lives.] To wit, That of Paulus Emilius, That of the two Gracchi, of Pyrrhus, of Sertorius, of Demoſthenes, of Marc Antony, and That of Cato Uticenſis (8). The Printers have been guilty of a ſtrange Miſtake in Moreri's Dictionary, in putting (vers de Plutarque) Plutarch's Verſes, inſtead of (vies de Plutarque) Plutarch's Lives.

(8) Geſner. in Bibl.

[C] He compoſed three Books of the Punic War; which may ſerve to ſupply - - - - - Livy.] The two firſt of theſe three Books treat of the firſt Punic War, which is wanting in Livy. The third treats of the Confuſions, into which the Carthaginians fell by the Mutiny of the Soldiers, and Revolt of the People; as alſo of the War againſt the Gauls, and againſt

Digitized by Google

Tranſactions of his own Times in Italy [D], That of the Republic of Florence, That of ancient Greece [E], and That of the Goths. But this latter, which procured him great Honour, whilſt it was not known, that he had only tranſlated it from the Greek of Procopius, drew a kind of Infamy on his Memory (f), when it was diſcovered, after his Death, by the Care of Chriſtopher Perſona, that Procopius, whoſe Name he had ſuppreſſed, in appropriating his Labours to himſelf, was the true Author of this Hiſtory of the Goths [F]. He compoſed ſeveral other Books; a Catalogue of which is to be ſeen in Geſner's Bibliotheca; and died, at Florence, in the Year 1443, aged Seventy four Years [G]. His Body lies in a Marble Tomb, in the Church of the Holy Croſs (g). Poggius was one of thoſe, who criticiſed on him [H]. In the Year 1653, Mr de la Mare, Counſellor of the Parliament of Dijon, publiſhed a Catalogue of Leonard Aretin's Books, which he deſigned to have printed. But I believe it was never done. I have heard ſay, that, among the Manuſcripts of the Library at Oxford, there was lately found a Copy of Leonard Aretin's Letters, in which there were forty, that had never been printed; which, perhaps, may be the Occaſion of a new Edition of them.

(f) Jovius, ubi ſupra.

(g) Ibid. cap. 9.

againſt Thoſe of Illyria; Particulars, which are all wanting in the Roman Hiſtory (9). Aretin has done little more than tranſlate the Greek of Polybius, though he denies it in his Preface; which is the Reaſon, why Badius Aſcentius has placed the Name of Polybius at the head of the Work, in his Edition of Paris (10).

(9) Geſn. in Bibl.

(10) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Lat. p. 557.

[D] He compoſed alſo an Hiſtory of the Tranſactions of his own Times in Italy.] This Work begins with the Schiſm, which was raiſed againſt Pope Urban VI, in 1378, and goes down to the Victory obtained by the Florentines, in the Year 1440, near Anglara.

[E] — That of ancient Greece.] This Work reaches from the Generalſhip of Theramenes, and Thraſybulus, over the Athenians, to the death of Epaminondas, which comprehends Forty five, or Fifty Years.

[F] It was diſcovered by the Care of Chriſtopher Perſona ------ that Procopius was the true Author of This Hiſtory of the Goths.] Perſona had determined, according to Voſſius, to tranſlate Agathias, when he detected the Inſincerity of our Aretin (11). Voſſius alledges Paul Jovius in proof of this; but it is certain, that Jovius makes no mention of Agathias, either in the place, where he is cited (12), or in any other (13), where he may be cited; but ſpeaks there expreſsly of Procopius. I allow, that Perſona alſo tranſlated Agathias; but the Tranſlation of Procopius is what Voſſius ought to have taken notice of in the Place, where he mentions the Plagiariſm of Aretin. So I think it ought to be called, and not Plagianiſm, after a modern Author, from whom I ſhall cite the entire Paſſage, becauſe it is full of Errors. He ſays (14), "We are indebted to David Heſchelius for the Greek "Hiſtory of Procopius. Leonard Aretin had already "given it in the Gothic Language, but ſuppreſt the "Author's Name. But, after Aretin's Death, Chri- "ſtopher Perſona accuſed him of Theft, having him- "ſelf found another Copy of This Hiſtory in the "ſame Language, which he publiſhed under the "Name of it's Author, and thereby convinced Aretin "of Plagianiſm." What Monſter does he here ſpeak of? Procopius in Gothic, publiſhed firſt by Aretin, and afterwards by Perſona, is ſuch a Chimera, as never was, or ever will be, ſeen. Beſides, it is ſpeaking very inaccurately, to ſay, that Leonard Aretin and Perſona have given us the Hiſtory of Procopius, for they have only tranſlated Part of That Hiſtory. The Printers of Moreri's Dictionary have committed a ſtrange Blunder, in ſaying, that the Hiſtory of the Goths was properly but a Tranſlation of Plutarch.

(11) Ibid. pag. 558.

(12) The 116*th Chapter of the Elogies.*

(13) The 9*th Chapter of the Elogies.*

(14) Le Gallois, Traité des plus belles Biblioth. pag. 169. Edit. of Paris, 1680.

[G] And died, at Florence, in 1443, aged Seventy four Years (15)]. Leander Albertus ſays, indeed, that he died at Seventy four Years of Age; but places his Death in the Year 1440. His Calculation does not agree with Matthew Palmerius, who places the Year of the Birth of Leonard Aretin in 1370 (16). And, beſides, as I find in Volaterran, that our Aretin died in 1443 (17), (on the ninth of March, according to Bucholcer), I chooſe not to follow Leander Albertus. I have, above, obſerved (18) the Miſtake of a Modern, who believed, that Leonard Aretin was living in the Year 1480.

(15) Varill. in his Anecdotes of Florence, pag. 162, is miſtaken in making him live above eighty Years.

(16) In Chronico, ad Ann. 1370. The Printers of Voſſius, Hiſt. Lat. pag. 567, have, by miſtake, put CIↃCCCC. LXX.

[H] Poggius was one of Thoſe, who criticiſed on him.] Theſe Words of Philelphus inform us of it; They are to be found in a Letter, which he wrote to Lorenzo de Medicis, the ninth of May, 1473. "Quod eo feci accuratius, quonium & Leonardus "Arretinus familiaris noſter, vir ſane facundiſſimus, "adverſus Blondum Flavium multa diſſeruit, & poſt "Leonardi obitum Poggius Carolo gratificatus Ar- "retino, quem diſertiſſimi concivis gloria offenderet, "libellum etiam contra illius ſcripta contexuit, cum "neuter ſuo ſit functus officio (19). - - - I have been "the more careful in doing This, becauſe both Leo- "nard Aretin, my intimate Friend, and a very elo- "quent Man, wrote many Diſſertations againſt Blon- "dus Flavius, and, after the Death of Leonard, "Poggius, out of complaiſance to Charles Aretin, who "was diſguſted at the Reputation of his ingenious "Countryman, drew up a Treatiſe likewiſe againſt "his Works; when neither of them acquitted them- "ſelves well." This Paſſage was communicated to me by Mr de la Monnoie.

(17) Volat. lib. 21, pag. 772.

(18) In Remark [A], of the Article ARETIN (FRANCIS).

(19) Philelphus, Epiſtol. lib. 37.

ARETIN (PETER), A Native of Arezzo, renowned for his obſcene and ſatirical Writings, lived in the XVIth Century. They, who deſire to know what the Medal was, which it is ſaid he ſtruck, to inform the World how much the greateſt Princes ſtood in fear of his Satires, may be informed by Mr Moreri's Dictionary; in which Medal Aretin values himſelf on having laid Thoſe, to whom other Men pay Tributes and Impoſts, under Contribution. This Tradition is ſo general, that he is as well known under the Title of The Scourge of Princes, as under the Name of Aretin, or That of Peter Aretin [A]. He had another very glorious Appellation given

[A] He was as well known under the Title of the Scourge of Princes ------ as That of P. Aretin.] He boaſted of having This Character all the World over. Read the Letter, which he wrote to Herſilia del Monte, a Kinſwoman of Pope Julius III, you will find theſe Words in it. "In tanto è manifeſto, "ch'io ſono noto al Sophi, à gli Indiani, & il mon- "do al paro di qualunche hoggi in bocca de la "fama riſuoni: che piu? i Principi da i popili tri- "butati di continuo, tuttavia me loro ſchiavo, & "flagello tributano (1). ------ Inſomuch, that it "is plain I am known to the Perſians, the Indians, "and every Nation in the World? Would you have "more? Princes themſelves, to whom their People pay "tribute, are under Contribution to me, who am "both their Slave, and their Scourge." In another Letter, he ſays, that one would ſwear, that Princes paid him Tribute, not that he might praiſe them, but for fear of his Reproaches; adding, that they were Fools for their Pains; for, ſince moſt Great Men were not afraid of the Wrath of God, why, continues he, ſhould they fear my Pen? Impero che la maggior parte de i gran maeſtri non temono l'ira di Dio, e temeranno il furore de la mia penna (2). This reaſoning is not concluſive: The fear of Men makes us abſtain from a thouſand things, which we ſhould

(1) Aretin, in the ſixth Book of his Letters, fol. 115.

(2) Id. ibid. fol. 120. verſo.

Digitized by Google

given him; the same, with which all Antiquity has honoured the great Merit of Plato; to wit, That of Divine; il Divino Aretino [B]: He has been stiled on Medals, Divus Petrus Aretinus (a). Some have thought, that he gave himself this Title, to signify, that he performed the Office of a God upon Earth, by the Thunderbolts, which he darted at the most eminent Heads [C]. He boasted, that his Libels were of more Benefit to the World, than Sermons [D]. He was complimented, in Letters, with having subjected more Princes by his Pen, than the greatest Kings had ever subdued by their Arms [E]; and was exhorted to persevere in this kind of Writing, to the end, that Monarchs might learn to amend [F]. Our Age has produced as bold and virulent Satirists, as Aretin could be; and yet I believe none of them ever settled Contributions in an Enemy's Country. Some misinformed Writers make Aretin pass for the Author of the Book De Tribus Impostoribus.

(a) Spizelius Scrutin. Atheismi, pag. 19. affirms he had seen some of them.

should not abstain from, if we had no other Fear upon us, but That of the Divine Vengeance (3).

(3) See the Thoughts on Comets, n. 162, &c.

[B] He had a very glorious Appellation, viz. - - - - - That of Divine; il divino Aretino.] It will not be amiss to see Montagne's Opinion of this Elogy: "Plato, says he (4), had the Sirname of Divine by "general Consent, and no one envied him; and "the Italians, who boast, with Reason, of having "generally a more refined Wit, and better Expression, than other Nations, bestow it on Aretin, "in whom I see nothing beyond the common Authors of his Age, except a manner of uttering "lofty, frothy, Bombast, or Jests, which are ingenious indeed, but far-fetched and whimsical; so "far is he from approaching That ancient Divinity."

THE Judgment of Montagne on Aretin.

(4) Montagne's Essays, lib. 1. chap. 57, towards the end.

[C] He gave himself this Title, to signify, that he performed the Office of a God upon Earth, &c.] I have met with this Thought in an Italian Author, quoted by a German. "Cur vero sibi arrogaverit aliorum consensu divinitatem, nescio, nisi forte DEI munus "exercuisse dicendus sit, cum summa capita velut "celsissimos montes fulminaverit, lingua corrigens "& mulctans quæ ab aliis castigari nequeunt (5). "- - - - - Why, with the Consent of others, he arrogated this Title to himself, I know not, unless, perhaps, he may be said to have exercised the Function of a GOD, in darting his Thunder on the highest Heads, as on the loftiest Mountains, correcting and punishing those Faults with his Tongue, which others cannot chastise."

(5) Jacobus Gaddius de Scriptoribus non Ecclesiasticis, Tom. 1, pag. 13, apud Spizelium, in Felice Literato, pag. 112.

[D] He boasted, that his Libels were of more Benefit to the World than Sermons] He says, in his Epistle dedicatory to the second Part of his Raggionamenti, that "if he does not merit Esteem on the "Score of his Inventions, yet ought he to receive "some Honour for the Service he had done to Truth, "in conveying it into the Chambers and Ears of "great Persons, to the Confusion of Flattery and "Falshood.". He takes notice of what one of Duke Urbino's Ambassadors had said, That "if the Ministers of Princes and Courtiers were rewarded for "their Services, they were obliged for it to the Pen "of Peter Aretin." He adds, what another had said; "Aretin is more useful to human Life, than "Sermons; because Sermons instruct only the Ignorant; but his Writings reform great Men." These are his Words in Italian. "Quando io non "fossi degno di honor veruno, merce de le inventioni con le quali do l'anima à lo stile, merito pur "qualche poco di gloria per havere spinto la verita ne le camere, e ne le orecchie de Potenti ad "onta de l'adulatione, e de la menzogna: e per "non disfraudere il mio grado, usero le parole stesse "del Singulare M. Gianiacopo, Ambasciadore d'Urbino: noi che spendiamo il tempo ne servigi de "Prencipi insieme con ogni huomo di Corte, e non "ciascun virtuoso, siamo riguardati, e riconosciuti "da nostri padroni, bonta de gastighi che gli ha dati "la penna di Pietro. E lo sa Milano, come cadde "de la sacra bocca di colui, che in pochi mesi mi "ha arricchito di due Coppe d'oro: l'Aretino è "piu necessario a la vita humana, che le predicationi, è che sia il vero esse pongono in su le "dritte strade le persone semplici, & i suoi scritti "le signorili, & il mio non è vanto, ma un modo "di procedere per sostener se medesimo osservato da "Enea, dove non era conosciuto."

(6) It is in a Collection, published in 1558, at Venice, appresso Dominico Giglio, in 8vo, at the 128*th Page of the first Book.*

[E] He was complimented, in Letters, with having subjected more Princes by his Pen, than the Greatest Kings had subdued by their Arms.] This I have read in a Letter, written to him by Baptista Tornielli (6). He tells him, that he merits the Titles Germanicus, Pannonicus, &c. as formerly the Emperors took the Names of the Provinces, over which they had triumph'd. "Non sapete voi, che con la penna vo"stra in mano havete soggiogato piu Principi, ch' "ogni altro potentissimo Principe con l'arme? La "penna vostra à qual non mette terrore, à quale non "è formidabile, à chi anche non grata, à chi non "cara, ove si monstra amica? La penna vostra si "puo dir, che v'ha fatto trionfator quasi di tutti i "Principi del mondo; che quasi tutti vi sono tributarii, & come infudati. Meritareste esser chiamato "Germanico, Pannonico, Gallico, Hispanico, & "finalmente insignito di quei titoli, quali si davano à "gli antichi Imperadori Romani, secondo le provincie "per loro soggiogate: che se quelli soggiogavano le "province per forza d'arme, & per esser piu di loro "potenti, non era gran meraviglia; maggior meraviglia, assai è, che un privato, inerme, haggio soggiogato infiniti potenti: che l'un potente l'altro, "non e meraviglia. —— Are you not sensible, that, "with Pen in hand, you have subdued more Princes, "than ever the most powerful Monarch did by force of "Arms? To whom is not your Pen a Terror? To "whom is it not formidable? and who is not pleased "with it, when it has the Appearance of a Friend? "With your Pen you have, as it were, triumph'd over "all the Princes in the World; who are almost all "tributary, and as it were feudatory, to you. You "merit the Titles of Germannicus, Pannonicus, Gallicus, Hispanicus; Lastly, all the Titles given to "the antient Roman Emperors, according to the Provinces they had conquer'd; for that These shou'd subject Provinces by force of Arms, and superior Power, "is no wonder; it is much more surprizing, that "a private, unarm'd, Man should conquer numberless, powerful, Men".

[F] He was exhorted to persevere in this kind of Writing, to the end, that Monarchs might learn to amend.] The Marquis del Guasto sent him this Exhortation, in a Letter, which he wrote to him with his own Hand (7). He desired no Exemption for himself; but that his Faults might be censured by Aretin; and exhorted him to do it. It is probable he was pretty sure, he should not be taken at his Word. Aretin did not confound his Friends with his Enemies; he only exercised his Satire upon those, who neglected to buy it off. "Seguite dico "col solito, says the Marquis, e se in me vostro "amico alcuna cosa men che laudabile conoscete; "ricordatevi di non lasciar di riprenderla: accioche "fatto accorto dell' error, come desidero, lo fugga, "e divenga migliore. Seguite lo stil vostro, che "di nuovo ve ne prego: accioche, se i defetti con "verita saranno in altri trovati, si vergognino, & "& vergognandosi, & mendandosi suggano dal vitio alla virtu. Onde i rei divenuti buoni, abbraciati con essa virtu, si confermino nel bene. Del "che quanto in cio l'humana Repub. si avanzi; "lo giudichino quelli, che lo sanno meglio intender, ch'io no'l so esprimere. —— Follow, I say, "your usual manner; and, if you see any thing "faulty even in me your Friend, forget not to reprove "me for it, that I may profit by your Admonitions, "and become better. Persevere in Satire, I once "more entreat you; that others may blush at their "Imperfections, and, by blushing, and growing better, "may fly from Vice to Virtue; and, being once reformed, may be confirm'd in Good. What Advantages human Society will from hence receive, let "those judge, who understand it better, than I am "able to express it.

(7) It is at the 44*th Page of the second Book of the same Collection.*

[G] Some

Digitized by Google

bus [G]. I cannot believe, that the Epitaph, mentioned by Moreri, was engraved on his Tomb [H], in St Luke's Church, at Venice. The Author of this Epitaph, no

[G] Some misinformed Writers make Aretin pass for the Author of the Book De tribus Impostoribus.] We shall, perhaps, have occasion to examine this Matter more fully, in another Place, and to make it appear, that it is very improbable there ever was such a Book. The Abbot Nicaisius, one of the worthiest Persons of this Age (8), who is acquainted with all the most learned Men in Europe, among whom he holds a very considerable Rank, was so kind as to send me, last Year (9), a very curious Dissertation of Mr de la Monnoie, his Countryman (10), on the Book De tribus Impostoribus *. It is full of very curious Observations, and deserves exceedingly to be printed. Mr de Beauval has lately given a small Extract from it (11). The Author shews, by very strong Reasons, that This Book is a meer Chimera. Grotius believ'd, but perhaps without Reason, that This very Book had been taken notice of, before Aretin was born. He says, that the Enemies of Frederic Barbarossa accused him of having composed this Book (12). He should have said, that Frederic II was accused of having said, that the World had been deceived by Three Impostors (13). The good Father Mersennus pretends, that one of his Friends, who had read the Book in question, had discovered in it the Stile of Peter Aretin (14). Meer Cant! Yet one would hardly imagine how much this Notion of Father Mersennus has been propagated.

[H] I cannot believe, that the Epitaph, mentioned by Mr Moreri, was engraved on his Tomb] He does not say positively and precisely, that this Epitaph was engraved on the Tomb of Peter Aretin, in St Luke's Church; but every one must suppose, that this is what he meant; for he expresses himself after this manner: "He died at Venice, where he is "buried in St Luke's Church. This is his Epi-"taph.

Condit Aretini cineres lapis iste sepultos,
Mortales atro qui sale perfricuit.
Intactus Deus est illi, causamque rogatus
Hanc dedit, ille, inquit, non mihi notus erat (15).

Here Aretin entomb'd doth lye,
Whose Satire lash'd both High, and Low:
His God alone It spared; and why?
His God, he said, he did not know.

"It is more ingenious in the Italian:

Qui giace l' Aretin Poëta Tosco,
Che d' ognun disse malo che (16) di Dio,
Scusandosi col dir' io no'l conosco.

There is nothing in the Thread of Moreri's Narrative, which gives the least Intimation, that these four Verses are not the very Inscription on Aretin's Tomb. It is imposing on every Reader, who has not the Ability to rectify a Mistake by his own Reflexions. It is particularly laying a Snare for Protestants, who, unless they believe with caution, will be apt to infer, that there is no Object so scandalous, which the Italians do not admit in their Churches. Several, then, amongst them, might easily believe, on Mr Moreri's Word, that the Patriarch of Venice not only suffered an Atheist to be buried in Consecrated Ground; but also, that the Epitaph of This Atheist was exposed, in the Church, to the View of all the World, in four Verses, which turn the matter into a Jest. For my own part, I cannot believe, that the Corruption and Negligence of the Clergy was ever at such an height, as to suffer Sepulchral Inscriptions of this kind in a Church. I am of Opinion, then, that the Four Verses produced by Mr Moreri, are one of Those Satirical Banters, made on the Death of certain Persons, under the Title and Form of an Epitaph. How many of this kind were made on the Cardinals of Richlieu, and Mazarine? They, who write the Elogies of Illustrious Men, and who, after the Example of Paul Jovius, take a pleasure in relating their Epitaphs, ought always to explain, whether they are Verses actually engraved on their Tombs, or only meer Sallies of Wit. If this Precaution had been used with regard to Aretin, we should not at present read in the Theatrum of Paul Freherus, and the Felix Literatus of Spizelius (17), that the four Verses in Question are inscrib'd on the Tomb of this Personage at Venice (18). A Divine of Utrecht affirms (19), that the Epitaph of Peter Aretin, inserted in the Elogies of Paul Jovius, and That, which Pazzi has reported, testific, that he was a grand Apostle of Atheism; "Aretini epitaphium apud Jo-"vium in Elogiis virorum doctorum, says he, & al-"terum apud Guizeppe Pazzi, indicat qualis & quan-"tus Atheismi præco fuerit; sic enim Pazzi in lib."cui tit. Continuatione della monstruosa farina,"Venetiis 1609. Qui giace l' Aretini poeta Tos-"ca (20), Che disse mal d'ogn'un fuor che di Dio;"ma si scuso dicendo, no'l (21) conosco. Aliter"sic. Qui giace estinto quell' amaro Tosco Ch'ogn'"huom vivendo col mal' dir trafisse. Vero e che"mal di Dio giamai non disse, Che si scuso dicen-"do io no'l conosco". Upon this let me observe, first, that Paul Jovius does not mention the Epitaph of Peter Aretin. How should He, since he died before him? He mentions That of Leonard Aretin, but it contains nothing which in the least reflects on the Faith of the Deceased; it has nothing to do with Religion. In the second Place, there is no depending on the Two Italian Epitaphs; for they were wrote without Approbation, and were never engraved on the Tomb. They were Sallies of Wit of some Satirical Poet. Spizelius has copied the whole Passage of Voëtius, almost Word for Word, without citing it (22). Note, that Lorenzo Crasso (23) insinuates yet more clearly, than Moreri, that the Four Latin Verses are inscribed on the Tomb of This Atheist, in St Luke's Church.

Let me here set down a considerable Supplement"(24). It is a Custom, among the Catholics, to affix"to some Pillar, or other Place, near the Tomb of"the Deceased, especially if a Person of Reputation,"Funeral Inscriptions, written on Paper. The"Truth is, these Inscriptions are, and always ought"to be, in Honour of the Deceased. But, Aretin"having been a noted Libertine, it is very possible,"that some Jester convey'd the Epitaph, mentioned"by Mr Moreri, and many others, into St Luke's"Church, at the Time of, or after, the Funeral."Thus the Words of Ghilini must be understood,"who has himself likewise explain'd them clearly"enough to the same Effect; when, after having"said; e sopra il suo sepulchro fu posto questo Epi-"taffio: Condit Aretini cineres, &c. —— Over his"Tomb was hung up This Epitaph, Condit Aretini"cineres, &c. he immediately adds; fù parimente"appeso alla sua tomba quest' altro, quasi tradotto"d'al suddetto, che va attorno nella bocca fino delle"persone idiote, Qui giace l' Aretin, &c. —— This"other was hung up likewise at his Tomb, translated"as it were from the foregoing, which is That which"is most commonly repeated; Qui giace l' Aretin, &c."The Italian Epitaph, as Ghilini delivers it, is much"correcter, than That in le Pazzi, Voëtius, or"Moreri; and I cannot comprehend this latter,"when he says, that it is more ingenious, than the"Latin. Both He, and Ghilini, seem to me to be"mistaken, in taking the Italian for a Transcript"of the Latin. The contrary, in my Opinion, is"the Truth; and what inclines me to believe so,"is, because the Italian is to be found in the New"Recreations, printed at Paris, in 1572, in 16mo"*, under the Name of Bonaventure de Periers, and"the Latin is not to be met with in any Book so"Ancient —— There are Faults in the Italian Epi-"taph of Aretin, produced by Moreri and Voëti-"us —— The most correct is That, which you read,"in these Terms, in Ghilini:

Qui giace l' Aretin amaro tosco
Del sem' human, la cui lingua trafisse
Et vivi, & morti: d' Iddio mal non disse,
Et si scuso, co'l dir, io no'l conosco.

This is so far from weakening my Criticism on Moreri, that it rather confirms it.

(8) See the Elogy given him in the Menagiana, Tom. 2, pag. 68, Edition of Paris.

(9) That is, the Year 1693.

(10) They are of Dijon.

* [It was printed in 1715, at the end of the fourth Tom. of the Menagiana. Edit. of Paris.]

(11) Hist. des Ouvrages des Scavans, mois de Fevrier, 1694, pag. 278, 279. He transcribes the Elogy, given in the Menagiana, to Mr de la Monnoie.

(12) Grot. Append. ad Comment. de Antichristo, p. 133.

(13) See Deckherus, de Scriptis Adespotis, pag. 374. Edit. 1686.

(14) Mersennus in Genesim, pag. 1830.

(15) Voët. Disput. Vol. 1, pag. 206, & Spizelius, Atheismi Scrutinio, pag. 18.

(16) He should have said mal fuor che.

(17) At the 111*th Page.*

(18) Venetiis sepultus jacet cum hoc Epitaphio, condit Aretini, &c. Paulus Freh. in Theatr. pag. 1461.

(19) Voët. Disput. Tom. 1, pag. 206.

(20) It should be Tosco.

(21) It should be io no'l.

(22) Spizel. Scrutinium Atheismi, pag. 18.

(23) At the 378*th Page of the* 1*st* Tom. of his Elogies.

(24) Mr de la Monnoie, Remarques MSS.

* I cite this Edition, because, in the first, which is of Lyons, in 8vo, by Robert Granjon, 1558, Aretin's Epitaph is not recorded.

Digitized by Google

no doubt, exceeded his Commiſſion. If there was reaſon to think, that Aretin did not love God, there was none to ſay, that he did not know him; his Works of Piety plainly teſtify the contrary [I]. I do not believe, that any one Tenet of Atheiſm is In the Converſations, which I had, in the Year 1696, with Father Coronelli, who accompanied the Ambaſſador of the Republic of Venice to England, I ask'd him what he thought of Aretin's Epitaph. He anſwered, that he did not believe it was ſuch as Moreri gives it; and promis'd me to make enquiry. He wrote to me from Venice, the 2d of November of the ſame Year, that it was very true, that Aretin was buried in St Luke's Church, but that he could not, as yet, diſcover any thing concerning the Epitaph. He ſent me a Paſſage, taken out of the (25) Venetia deſcritta dal Sanſovino, coll' additioni del Martinioni; which, after informing us, that Aretin was interr'd in That Church, ſays, that he loſt all his Reputation after Death, and would have been buried in Oblivion, had not Arioſto undeſervedly perpetuated his Memory, by crying out in his Orlando Furioſo; Behold the Scourge of Princes, the divine Peter Aretin! " Vi dorme parimente in un depoſito poſto " in aria quel Pietro Aretino, il quale fù cognomi- " nato flagello de' Prencipi, per la licentioſa preſun- " tione della ſua mordaciſſima penna, & il quale " morendo perde del tutto il nome: pioche eſſendo " ignaro di lettere, e operando per forza di natura " ne' ſuoi caprici, hebbe dopo morte il meritato pre- " mio della ſua petulantia: concioſia che eſſendo le " coſſe ſue reputate dalla Chieſa poco Criſtiane, fu- " rono vietate del tutto à Lettori, e ſi ſarebbe affat- " to cancellata la memoria, ſe l' Arioſto burlandoſi " del titolo ch' egli ſi haveva preſo indebitamente, " non haveſſe detto nel Furioſo;

(25) At Page 120.

Ecco il flagello
De Prencipi, il divin Pietro Aretino.

Obſerve, pray, theſe Words of Mr Miſſon; " I can " ſcarce believe, what ſome have affirm'd to me, " that the ſevere Epigram, made upon Aretin, is " turn'd into an Epitaph. However, I will, at a " venture, ſet down the Copy, which was given " me of it (26)". It is pity he could never find St Luke's Church open; he went ſeveral times thither on purpoſe to ſee Aretin's Tomb. If he had ſeen it, he might eaſily have decided the Diſpute. The Journaliſts of Utrecht, ſpeaking of his Travels, mention the Four Verſes, Condit Aretini cineres, &c. and declare, that they are engraved on the Tomb of This Satiriſt. Cujus ſepulchro ſequentes verſus inſcripti eſſe dicuntur (27). Once more I believe nothing of it.

(26) Miſſon, Nouveau Voiage d' Ital. Tom. 1. pag. 181, Edition of the Hague, 1698.

(27) Bibl. Librorum Novorum, Tom. 3, pag. 630.

[I] His Works of Piety plainly teſtify the contrary.] Paul Freherus relates, that certain Italian Princes, bad Imitators of the Emperor and King of France, who brib'd Aretin with Preſents not to attack them, caus'd an hundred Strokes of a Cudgel to be given him, and that This Puniſhment had ſuch an Effect, that the Author renounc'd all Defamatory Satires and Libels, and wrote nothing afterwards but pious Books. " Quidam principes Italiæ " minus ſibi convenire exiſtimantes donis eum affi- " cere, fuſtibus ad mortem uſque cædere per alios " curarunt, & hoc modo linguam ejus maledicam " refrenarunt, qui deinceps à ſcriptis ſatiricis abſti- " nens ſacra ſcripſit, non ſicut priora per Inquiſiti- " onem prohibita (28)". So that he was, with ſome little difference, in the caſe of thoſe, whom Horace mentions in the Firſt Epiſtle of the Second Book; ver. 154.

(28) Freherus, ubi ſupra. Ghilini ſays the ſame, at the 192*d Page of the firſt Part of his* Theatre.

——vertêre modum formidine fuſtis
Ad bene dicendum delectandumque redacti.

Fear made them civil, and deſign to write
With Modeſty; ſpeak well, and to delight.

CREECH.

I ſhall mention but Two Circumſtances, in which the Caſes differ. The firſt is, that he did not come off with Fear alone; the Cudgel effectually play'd upon his poor Shoulders. The ſecond is, that he did not greatly entertain the World by changing his Stile; He was got out of his Element. Wit diſtinguiſhes itſelf very little, when applied, late, in writing Books of Devotion. This I ſay, agreeably to the Hypotheſis of the Sieur Freher, which I ſhall examine hereafter. But the beſt of it is, that, in the Opinion of ſeveral Perſons, the Books he wrote of this kind ſavour of a true Convert. It is no Secret, what a thorough Converſion That of the famous Aretin was; every thing in him was changed, even to his very Name; and ſome pretend, that he ſucceeded ſo happily, that it is almoſt impoſſible to diſcover, in the Books of Partenio Etiro (29), the leaſt Marks of the old Man, which are ſo ſtrongly imprinted in the Works of Pietro Aretino (30). We find, in the Converſations of Mr Menage, a Particular, which deſerves a Place here. " Aretin wrote " Books of Devotion, which gave occaſion to a " Saying concerning him, Ubi bene, nemo melius; " ubi male, nemo pejus —— Where well, no one, " better; where ill, no one worſe". The following Epi- " gram was wrote on the Paraphraſe of the Seven " Penitential Pſalms, by Peter Aretin.

(29) He prefixed this Anagram of his Name to his Books of Devotion.

(30) Baillet. Jugem. ſur les Poëtes, Tom. 2, pag. 133.

Si ce livre unit le deſtin
De David & de l'Aretin
Dans leur merveilleuſe ſcience,
Lecteur, n'en ſois pas empêche,
Qui paraphraſe le peche,
Paraphraſe la penitence (31).

(31) Menagiana, pag. 26.

Start not, that here unite in every Line,
The Fate of David, and of Aretin;
He, who before had paraphraſed his Sins,
To paraphraſe his Penitence begins.

Note, that, in the ſecond Edition of the Menagiana, they have omitted the ubi bene, nemo melius, and have ſaid, that, in Works of Devotion, the Style of Aretin is inſufferable; and that nothing can be more mean, than his Lives of Chriſt, the Virgin, St Thomas Aquinas; his Geneſis, and Paraphraſe on the Pſalms; whether we conſider the Thoughts, or the Expreſſion. It appears from the Paſſage of Freherus, which I have cited, that the Books of Libertiniſm, and Thoſe of Devotion, were compoſed by Aretin at different Seaſons of his Life; the firſt before his Converſion, the laſt after. Mr Moreri ſays, he wrote his pious Works towards the latter end of his Days: I queſtion this much; for he ſays himſelf, in his Epiſtle dedicatory of the ſecond Part of his Raggionamenti, that he endeavoured chiefly to write quick, and from his own Stock; and, to prove the Fertility and Quickneſs of his Pen, he ſets forth the Titles of ſeveral Works, ſome on Subjects of Devotion, and others on Matters of Gaiety, which he had compoſed in a very ſhort time; as His Pſalms; His Hiſtory of Chriſt; His Comedies; His Dialogue; all which were wrote, as it were, in a Day, with a view of proving the Strength of his own Genius. " Tutto e ciancia, eccetto il far toſto, e del " ſuo. Eccovi la i Salmi, eccovi la hiſtoria di Chriſto, " eccovi le Comedie, eccovi il Dialogo, eccovi i vo- " lumi divoti & allegri, ſecondo i ſoggetti, & " ho partorito ogni opera ubaſi in un di, è per " che ſi forniſca di vedere cio che ſa far la dote, " che ſi ha ne le faſce, toſto udiranſi i furori de " l'armi e le paſſioni d'amore, che io doverei laſciar di " cantare per deſcriveri i geſti di quel Carlo Auguſto." His Paraphraſe on the Penitential Pſalms was tranſlated into French, and printed at Lyons, in 1540. His Paraphraſe on Geneſis, with the Viſion, in which Noah diſcovered the Myſteries of the Old and New Teſtament, was printed at Lyons in the Year 1540, tranſlated from the Italian (32). Who dares pretend, that This Author had, then, renounced his Sins, and his Libels? However it be, theſe are the Titles of ſome of his Works of Devotion. " Specchio delle " opere (32) Bibliot. de du Verdier.

Digitized by Google

is to be found in his Writings; but, since many of his Libels severely lashed the Disorders of the Clergy, and described, in an impious and libertine Stile, the many Vices imputed to a Monastic Life, no wonder he is made to pass for an Atheist. Add to this, that a Man, who had any Respect for Religion and good Manners, would never have published Dialogues on such Subjects, as Aretin made choice of, nor express them in Language so obscene. It is easy to see, that I mean his Ragionamenti [K]. They were printed in his Life-time; but it is difficult to discover the opere di Dio. - - - - Parafrasi sopra i sette Salmi. - - - Vita della beata Virgine. - - - - Humanita del figliuolo di Dio. - - - - - Vita di Santo Tomaso d'Aquino. - - - - - Vita di Santa Catarina Vergine & Martire (33). - - - - - A Mirrour of the Works of God. - - - - - A Paraphrase on the seven Psalms. - - - - - The Life of the Blessed Virgin. - - - - - - The Human Nature of the Son of God - - - - The Life of St Thomas Aquinas. - - - - - The Life of St Catharine, Virgin and Martyr.

(33) Fasher. Theatr Virror. Illustr. ex Theatro Ghilini.

The following is a full Confirmation of what I here advance (34). "Aretin composed his Works "of Piety, to exercise his Imagination and to shew, "that he was capable of any Thing; to appease "likewise the Devotees, who were exasperated a- "gainst him, and to reap the Liberality of some "great Ladies, to whom he sent Copies of this "kind of Books. He was not a whit the soberer "Man for this; since, after having published his "Paraphrase on the seven Psalms, and his Humanita di Christo, in 1535. he bethought himself, at the "end of 1537, of dedicating Those Infamous Postures, which have been so much spoken of, to "Baptista Zatti, of Bresse, a Roman Citizen, with "a Sonnet at the bottom of each, no less obscene, "as M. Felibien observes, than the Posture repre- "sented. The Epistle dedicatory to This Baptista "Zatti is in the first Volume of Aretin's Letters. "It appears also, by the Description, which This "Author gives of his own Manners, in the Two "hundred and ninetieth Letter of the fourth Volume, dated in December 1547, that, though he "was, then, in the Fifty seventh Year of his Age *, "he led a Life no less licentious, than he had ever "done. The Passage, in which he mentions the Interruption he was obliged to suffer in writing "This Letter, has something in it very singular (35). "- - - - - - - We may appeal likewise to the Four "hundred and thirty ninth Letter of the same Volume, where it appears, that he made open Profession of a Morality far from scrupulous."

(34) Mr de la Monnoie, Rem. MSS.

* This is proved from his saying, in a Letter to P. Jovius, in May, 1545, that he was then 54 Years of Age.

(35) It is omitted, as being too loose.

It is, therefore, a Mistake to pretend, that he composed his pious Works, after he had, by a serious Repentance, renounced his licentious Courses. He composed Works of Piety, and of Libertinism, by turns; being always a debauched Liver, and sunk in Corruption; and if, with regard to Men, he did less Mischief, whilst he exercised his Wit on pious Subjects, than when he employed it on lewd; yet was he more criminal in the Sight of God, on Account of the former Compositions, than the latter. It did not belong to so prophane a Wretch to treat of things sacred. He did them more Injury, by explaining them, with a depraved Heart, and from bad Motives, than if he had openly insulted them. We may apply to him That thundering Censure, contained in these Words of the Psalmist.

But to the Wicked thus saith God,
How dar'st thou teach my Laws abroad,
Or in thy Mouth my Cov'nant take?
For stubborn thou, confirm'd in Sin,
Hast Proof against Instruction been,
And of my Word didst lightly speak.
When thou a subtle Thief didst see,
Thou gladly didst with him agree,
And with Adult'rers didst partake.
Vile Slander is thy chief Delight,
Thy Tongue, by Envy mov'd and Spight,
Deceitful Tales does hourly spread:
Thou dost with hateful Scandals wound
Thy Brother, and with Lyes confound
The Offspring of thy Mother's Bed.
These things didst thou, whom still I strove
To gain with Silence and with Love;
Till thou didst wickedly surmise,
That I was such a one as thou;
But I'll reprove and shame thee now,
And set thy Sins before thine Eyes (36).

(36) Psalm 50th, Brady's Version. [BAYLE makes use of That of Marot.]

I confess, the Generality of Men are not offended at Works of Devotion, composed by Indevout and Prophane Writers; but Persons of nice and delicate Taste are more scandalized at them, than at Pieces, in which such Authors deliver their genuine Thoughts. Chose one side; would such Persons say; be one thing, or other; give not the Printer a Work of Piety to Day, and to morrow a Bawdy Book; we cannot bear such a Farce; since you persist in evil Courses, we had rather you would always appear in your proper Colours.

—— quanto constantior idem
In vitiis, tanto levius miser, ac prior ille
Qui jam contento, jam laxo fune laborat (37).

(37) Horat. Sat. 7. lib. 2. ver. 18.

He that is constant in his vitious Race,
Runs the same Course, and keeps an equal Pace,
Is certainly not half so great a Wretch,
As he, who now rides loose, and now on stretch.
CREECH.

It were to be wished, that no one would presume to write Books of Devotion, without being persuaded of what he says, and without practising it; for to People of Thought and Reflexion it is matter of Scandal to see such Contradiction between the Thoughts and Words, and much more between the Actions and Writings, of such Authors.

[K] I mean his Ragionamenti *.] They are divided into Three Parts; the last of them, which treats of the Court, and Card-playing, is much more tolerable, than the others. The first treats of the disorderly Practices of Nuns, married Women, and Misses. It is sufficient to say, in general, that the Second is the Spirit and History of Whoredom. How abominable soever these Dialogues are, yet are they much less so, than the Book generally ascribed to him, de omnibus Veneris Schematibus.

* DIALOGUES.

The following Remark was communicated to me (38): "This Book (De omnibus Veneris Schematibus "†) which is here ascribed to Aretin, and which "many perhaps believe to have been composed by "him in the Latin Tongue, because, out of Modesty, "you give it a Latin Title, is only a Collection, "containing Sixteen lewd Figures, engrav'd by the "Famous Marc Anthony of Bologna, after the Designs "of Julio Romano, with a Sonnet of Aretin's at the "bottom of each. He mentions them, in a Letter "of the Twenty ninth of November 1527, in which he "writes to Signor Cæsar Fregosa, that he sends him "il libro de i Sonetti e de le Figure lussuriose. —— The "Book of Sonnets, and Wanton Figures. Le Vassari, "and M. Felibien after him, have said, that these "Figures and Sonnets were Twenty in number. But "Aretin himself, in his Dedication of them, in 1537, "to Baptista Zatti, before-mentioned, makes them "but Sixteen. There is a Dialogue between Mag- "dalena, and Julia; the Title of which is, la Pu- "tana errante; —— The Whore-errant; wherein he "treats at length, de i diversi conjungimenti —— "Of the different Ways of C--p--l--t--n, to "the number of Thirty five. This is to surpass four "fold the ancient Debauchery;

(38) By Mr de la Monnoie.

† Usually called Aretin's Postures.

Quales nec Didymæ ‖ sciunt puellæ,
Nec molles Elephantidos libelli, ——
Sunt illic Veneris novem ‡ figuræ.

‖ Others read Didymi.

‡ Others read Novæ.

Such Lines, as Harlots never read,
Nor Elephantis cou'd indite;

Digitized by Google

the Year of their first Impression [L]. We have Six Volumes of his Letters, which are Nine Postures Venus there assumes,

To vary the obscene Delight.

" Though the Work has always been printed under " Aretin's Name; yet he disowns it; and says it is " the Work of One of his Scholars, called le Veniero. " This he tells us, in his Capitolo, addressed to the " Duke of Mantua; in which he assures him, that " his Pupil greatly exceeds him in Obscenity.

Ma perch' io sento il presente all' odore,
Un' operetta in quel cambio galante.
Vi mando hora in stil ladro traditore
Intitolata la Putana errante.
Dal Veniero composta mio creato,
Che me in dir mal quatro giornate inante.

I add to this a fine Passage of Mr Chevillier: " It " was about the Year 1525, that Julio Romano, the " most Famous Painter of Italy, instigated by the " Enemy of our Salvation, invented Designs, to be " engraved on Copper-Plates. The Subjects of them " are so lewd, that they are not so much as to be " named. Peter Aretin, a notoriously infamous Wri- " ter, and known in the World for a Profligate and " an Atheist, composed Sonnets for each Design. " George Vasari, who relates this, in his Book of the " Lives of the Painters, says, he knows not which " would be most immodest, to cast one's Eyes on the " Designs of Julio, or to read the Sonnets of Aretin. " Io non so qual fusse piu o brutto le spettacolo de i De- " signi di Giulio all' ochio, o le parole dell' Aretino à " gl' orecchi. 3. Part. pa. 302. An Engraver, whose " Name was Marc Anthony, ventured to employ his " Tool in engraving these infamous Designs on " Twenty Copper-Plates. Pope Clement VII threw " him into Prison; but the Cardinal de Medicis saved " his Life. And, as great as Julio's Fame was in Paint- " ing, he would have been very severely punished, " if he had not escaped to Mantua. It happened " in the Year 1527, that Rome was plundered by the " Army of Charles V. It was this Engraver's For- " tune to lose all his Estate, and be obliged to leave " the Town; soon after which he died. Mr. Che- " villier adds, that Mr Jollain, a Merchant in St " James's street in Paris, being informed where " some of these infamous Plates lay, which contained " these abominable Designs of Julio, and the lewd " Sonnets of Aretin, went thither, and bought them " for an hundred Crowns, with a Design to destroy " them; which accordingly he did — He always be- " lieved, that They were the Original Plates, en- " graved by Marc Anthony, which he had destroyed " (40)."

(40) Chevillier, of the Origin of Printing, at Paris, pag. 224.

[L] His Ragionamenti were printed in his Life Time; but it is difficult to discover the Year of their first Impression.] The Preface to the Edition, in 1584, does not suffer us to doubt of the first Fact. The Bookseller, under the fictitious Name of Barbagrigia, declares, that " the Author had resolved to " publish his Dialogues, divided into Days, after the " manner of Boccace," and as they now stand in the Edition I have cited: " But that others had prevent- " ed him, and published This Work, against his Will, " and in great Disorder."----- Hoggi vi presento di loro una buona parte — da me ridotte ne la maniera ch' egli le compose, e ne la medesima maniera ch' egli haveva determinato di farle la prima volta stampare, s' altri (contra sua voglia) non havessero prima di lui date per mezzo de la stampa in luce assai male acconcie: conciosia cosa che Giornate questo nomasse per seguitare l' alte pedate del gran Giovanni Boccaccio. I add something still more express to this; and I do it with so much the more Satisfaction, because, at the same Time, I acquit myself of an indispensible Duty towards Mr Minutoli, by the Publick Testimony I give him of my singular Esteem, and the great Value I set on the Friendship, with which he honours me. I have consulted This ingenious Professor of Geneva; and here present the Reader with an Extract of a Letter, which he communicated to me, and which was sent to him from Dijon. " I must now, Sir, " mention to you a Book very opposite to this (41), " to wit, the Ragionamenti of Peter Aretin: You " desire me to clear up some Points, concerning " them. The Ragionamenti, or Humorous Dialogues, " of Aretin were published before his Death. This " cannot be doubted of; since, in 1551, there ap- " peared an Invective of Joachim Perion, a Bene- " dictin Monk, against the Author of the Ragiona- " menti, who did not die till the Year 1556 (42). " Antonio Francisco Doni, in the first Part of his " Bibliotheque, published in 1550, which contains " only the printed Books, speaks of Two Dialogues, " Delle Donne (43), which differ from the Ragiona- " menti, of which he says not a Word, because it is " most certain they were not printed at that time. " As for the Letters, The first Volume alone deserves " to be read, though it contains scarce any thing sa- " tirical: The other Five are very flat; you may " take Mr Menage's Word for it, in the Menagiana; " who honours them but too much, when he " esteems them for the Stile." In another Letter, Mr Minutoli had the Goodness to communicate to me Two Observations, which he had made, in reading the Letters of Illustrious Men, published by John Mi- chel Brutus. He found these Words in a Letter of John Maludanus to Dionysius Lambinus pag. 369. " Penè me fugerat, quod scribendum in primis fuisse " arbitror. A Perionio editam esse audio orationem " adversus Petrum Aretinum. Periculum est, ne, ut " jampridem principum, ita posthæc & μοναχῶν fla- " gellum esse & nominari velit lacessitus Aretinus.--- " I had almost forgot what I ought particularly to ac- " quaint you with. I am informed, that Perionius has " published an Oration against Peter Aretin. It is " to be feared, lest Peter Aretin, thus provoked, should " become, and desire to be called from henceforth, the " Scourge of Monks, as formerly of Princes." There is only the Date of the Day in this Letter; Nonis Maiis; but as Lambinus's Answer is dated Nonis Junii, anno CIↃ IↃ LI. it is easy to conjecture in what Year Maludanus wrote to him. My Reader will be pleased to find here what Lambinus, who was then at Rome, thought of Perionius's Harangue. " Perionii oratio- " nem in Petrum Aretinum jampridem legeramus, " sed multo non sine risu. Quid enim magis ridicu- " lum excogitari potest quam hominem Benedicti- " num, Philosophum, Ciceronianum, Theologum, " cum P. Aretino verbis decertare? Omnino suæ exi- " stimationi parum consuluisse judicatur; nam quod " arguit illum esse impurum, sceleratum, impium, " quid tum postea? Tales homines non verbis aut " scriptis castigandi, sed legibus & pœnis sunt coercen- " di. Sed hac de re alias plura. - - - - I had already " read Perionius's Oration against Peter Aretin, but " not without much laughter. For what can be con- " ceived more ridiculous, than for One, who is " a Benedictin, a Philosopher, an Orator, and a Di- " vine, to contest, in Words, with Peter Aretin? He " can gain but little Reputation by such a Controversy; " for, suppose that he proves him to be an impure, " wicked, and impious Fellow; What then? Such Men " are not to be corrected by Words, or by Writing, but " to be restrained by Laws and Punishments. But more " of this hereafter."

(42) See Remark [N].

(43) Freherus reckons the e two Dialogues among the Works of Aretin, and says nothing of the Ragionamenti. Perhaps these two Dialogues were the first Edition, which was publish'd without the Knowledge, and against the Will, of the Author, and in a different Method from his own.

As to the Second Part of the Text of this Remark, read what follows; and you will admire the Accuracy and Extent of the Enquiries of the ingenious Gentleman, whom I quote (44). " It is difficult to " determine the exact Time of the first Edition of " the Ragionamenti, as well because it is become so " scarce, that it is hardly possible to meet with a Copy " of it, as because the Dialogues, which compose the " Two Parts of this Work, did not appear at the " same Time. The first Part preceeded the other " some Years; but what is certain, is, that they were " both in Print in 1537; the Epistles Dedicatory to " both Parts being inserted in the Edition of the " first Volume of Aretin's Letters, at Venice, in Fo- " lio, by Francis Marcolini, in the same Year. The " Title of These Ragionamenti has varied. In the " Epistle Dedicatory to the Second Part of These " Dialogues, the Author calls the first i tre Giorni di " caprici, and even simply dialogo; for this is what " he understands by these Words, eccovi il dialogo, " which nevertheless are not to be found in this " same Epistle, inserted among the Letters of the " first Volume; in which there is a farther conside- " rable Variation. Which is, that, after the Words " e per non difraudare il mio grado, all which follows, (44) Mr de la Monnoie.

(41) He had been speaking of Mr Baillet's Book, concerning the Worship due to the Blessed Virgin.

Digitized by Google

are but of little Value [M]. His Works of Devotion were not much enquired after (b); yet they met with ſome, who gave them great Commendation (c). His Comedies in Proſe are much better in their kind. He died about the Year 1556, at the Age of Sixty five Years, more or leſs [N]. It is ſaid, that he fell into ſo violent a fit of Laughter, upon liſtening to ſome obſcene Diſcourſe, that he overturned the Chair, on which he ſat; and that, in the Fall, he bruiſed his Skull, and died upon the Spot [O]. It was unlucky for him, that he wrote Lampoons againſt Peter Strozzi; for this brave Man threatned to have him aſſaſſinated in his very Bed; which ſo terrified our Poet, that he durſt not admit any Perſon into his Houſe, nor ever ſtir out of the Doors himſelf, during Strozzi's ſtay in the State of Venice. For this I ſhall quote my Author [P]. Obſerve, that This ſo ſatirical Poet was laviſh of his Praiſes to exceſs. We find the moſt pompous Hyperboles, and extravagant Flatteries, in his Letters to Kings, Princes, Generals of Armies, Cardinals, and other eminent Men: So far are they from carrying the Air of an Author, who makes himſelf dreaded, or exacts Contributions, that, on the contrary, there appears in them the Meanneſs of a Writer, who humbly intreats for a Piece of Bread. He employs the moſt moving Expreſſions to repreſent his Poverty, ſo far as to uſe the Language of Canaan, I mean a Scripture-Cant, as likelieſt to raiſe Compaſſion, and excite thoſe to Charity, who expect a Reward of their good Works from God. It muſt not be forgot, that one of the Subjects of his Importunities was the Dowry of (b) See Remark [I].

(c) See Remark [I].

" as far as è lo ſa Milano come cadde incluſively, is entirely omitted; inſtead of which there is: Ujaro le parole cadute della ſacra bocca del magno Antonio de Leva, l' Aretino è piu, &c." Sometimes, inſtead of Dialogo, he ſays all along, as in his Epiſtle to his Ape, il Dialogo de la Nanna & de la Antonia. Sometimes, as in his Dialogue della corte, by his Nanna he means the firſt Part of the Ragionamenti, and by La Pippa the ſecond. In a letter of the 15th of May, 1537, to Franceſco de l'Orme, he ſtyles both Parts Dialoghi, as Anthony Franceſco Doni likewiſe does*. It is certain Theſe Dialogues were never entituled Ragionamenti by This Author. They bear this Title only ſince the Edition of the Year 1584. The true Title was Caprici. Perionius confeſſes it, in his Invective againſt Aretin. " Scripſit enim, ſays he, atque edidit nefarium librum quemdam, quem Capricium a Caprarum laſcivia & libidine inſcripſit. ----- He wrote and publiſhed a vile Book, which he called Caprici from the Wantonneſs of (Capræ) Goats. And a little lower; Galli plerique jam Italice ſciunt, quo quidem ſermone iſtius Capricius, aliique libri, ſcripti ſunt —— The French almoſt in general underſtand Italian, in which Language his Caprici, and other Books, are written. Le Bandel is miſtaken, when, in the Thirty fourth of his Novels, pag. 235, of the firſt Part, he ſays, that la Zanina read la Nanna; They are his own Words; O ſia Raffaella de l' Aretino. In effect, La Nanna and la Raffaella are diſtinct Pieces, and by different Authors. By La Nanna ſhould be underſtood the firſt Part of Aretin's Ragionamenti, and by la Raffaella, the Dialogue of Madona Raffaella, and Margareta, entituled della bella creanza delle Donne; which inſtructs Women in the Arts of Gallantry. It is written by Aleſſandro Piccolhuomini under his Academical Name of Stordito Intronato. This Quotation of la Nanna by le Bandel ſerves however to make it appear, that the firſt Part of the Ragionamenti had been extant at leaſt from the Year 1535; ſince, at the end of the ſame Novel, in which la Nanna is quoted, mention is made of du Bernia, as being then living, who certainly died in the Month of May, 1535; though M. Baillet places him after the Poets, who died in 1606. Il Bernia Vicario Poeta d'Aretino mori apoplectico, ſays Paul Jovius in a Letter, of the laſt of May, 1535, to Ridolfo Pio, Biſhop of Faiance, afterwards Cardinal of Carpi, then Nuncio in France. Mr Menage, who has made a Chapter expreſsly of Bernia, in the firſt Part of his Antibaillet, has not corrected this Error."

* Libraria del Doni. Parte I. pag. 39.

(45) Above, immediately after Citation (43).

(46) Menage, p. 306, of the firſt Edition of Holland.

[M] We have ſix Volumes of his Letters, which are but of little Value.] We have already ſeen the Judgment of a learned Man of Dijon on this Subject (45): That of Mr Menage may be added to it. " I have read, ſays he (46), all the Letters of Peter Aretin, without ever having found any thing in them, worthy of an Extract. There is nothing in them but Stile." One cannot convey a more expreſſive Idea of a Work, which is barren and dry; like an unfurniſhed Houſe, or heathy, ſandy, uncultivated Ground; for Mr Menage knew how to make the moſt of his Reading, and had an happy Talent at varying his Application of it.

[N] He died about the Year 1556, at the Age of Sixty five Years, more or leſs (47).] " The Reaſon for conjecturing, that Aretin died either towards the end of 1555, or in 1556, is, that, from the Month of October, 1555, (the Date of the Epiſtle dedicatory to the laſt Volume of his Letters), it does not appear, that he had written any thing; and that Ruſcelli, who wrote his Rimario in 1577, mentions Aretin therein, as a Perſon lately dead. At the Word Roſta, in the Vocabulary at the end of the Rimario, he ſays Onde il mio Aretino di buona memoria. That This Rimario was compoſed in the Year 1557, appears by a Paſſage, I have obſerved from it, above (48), on occaſion of Silvio Antoniano (49)." Paul Freberus is miſtaken, in ſaying, that Aretin died towards the Year 1566 (50).

(47) See Citation *, between (34) and (35).

(48) At the end of the Remark [D] of the Article ANTONIANO.

[O] He fell into ſo violent a fit of Laughter, ---- that he overturned his Chair ------ bruiſed his Skull; and died upon the Spot.] " Infandas obſcenitates de meretricibus, ut aiunt, ſororibus ſuis, cum audiret, ex riſu ſellam, in qua ſedebat, everſiſſe, occiputque vehementer graviterque ad terram affixiſſe, atque atque alliſiſſe, ut extemplo nequiſſime interiret (51)."

(49) Mr de la Monnoie. Rem. MSS.

(50) Freherus in Theatro, p. 1461.

[P] I ſhall quote my Author.] He is Remi of Florence. " Volſe Pietro Aretino, ſays he (52), burlare & motteggiare il Sig. Pietro Strozzi, quando egli diede Marano a Venetiani, e gli fece un Sonetto, che cominciava;

(51) Ant. Laurent. Politianus, in Dialogo de Riſu. p. 78.

Mentre il gran Strozzi Arma virumque cano, &c.

" Ma il Signor Pietro come huomo valoroſo, & che non voleva ſue burle ne ſuoi motti gli fece intendere, che attendeſſe ad altro, perche lo farebbe ammazzare infin nel letto. Onde il povero Aretino, che conoſceva il Signor Pietro huomo piu da farlo che da dirlo, ſi miſe tanto ſpavento, che ſerrato in caſa, ne dando ingreſſo à perſona alcuna, guardava pure ſe i pugnali piovevano, & meno giorno e notte una vita infeliciſſima, e per fin che lo Strozzi ſtette in paeſe de' Veneziani, non ardi mai uſcir di caſa. ----- Peter Aretin had a Mind to banter Peter Strozzi, upon his delivering up Marano to the Venetians; and made a Sonnet, which began thus;

(52) Remig. Florent. Conſiderat. Civil. ſopra Guicciardini. c. 6. fol. 8. verſo. See le Rime Piacevoli, Parte II. fol. 12.

Mean time Great Strozzi, &c.

" But Peter, as a Man of Valour, and who deſired none of his Jokes, gave him to underſtand, that he had better mind ſomething elſe, if he expected to be ſafe in his Bed. Poor Aretin, who knew that he was a Man of Deeds, more than Words, was ſo frightned, that he kept himſelf locked up in his Houſe, of his dear Daughter Adria [2]. He took a great deal of Pains to marry her; but saw her so unhappy in this State, that he heartily repented of his Impatience [R]. A Fatality too common among Men! for how many things are there, which make us extremely uneasy, before they are accomplished, but much more so after Accomplishment?

Digitized by Google

" House, and admitted no one to enter; he even watched " to see, whether it did not rain Poignards, and led a " miserable Life, Night and Day, during Strozzi's Resi- " dence in the Venetian State, not daring to stir out of " his Doors." I fancy, when he found himself out of Danger, he behaved like the Sow, that is washed.

[2] One of the Subjects of his Importunities, was the Dowry of his dear Daughter Adria.] He loved her very affectionately, and had engaged himself to give a thousand Ducats to the Person, who was to marry her. This future Son-in-law was not to be put off to the next Dedication: such an Assignment, which some Authors have put their Creditors off with, would not satisfy him; he articled, that a thousand Ducats should be paid him down, before he gave the Ring to the Bride. Mille ducati e la promessa da me fatta allo sposo in contanti, prima che se le dia l'anello (53). The Gold Chain, which Aretin had received from the Prince of Spain (54), was forced to go towards the Payment of this Sum. He addressed himself to the Cardinal of Lorrain for Assistance in this Necessity. I cannot tell, whether he received any thing from him; but I know, that he was assisted by the Duke of Florence. The Bill of Exchange, which That Prince sent him (55), imported, that the Money should not be paid, but on good Attestations that the Marriage was consummated (56). This Condition hastened the Wedding; the Father would have deferred it; for he fancied his Daughter Adria was too Young; but this Consideration must now be past by. When she was laid in the nuptial Bed, he said, that she looked like a spotless Victim laid on the sacred Altar: Per importarmi piu l' honore della parola obligata, che il rispetto della etade tenera; consentii, che la innocentia si copulasse co'l sacramento. Ella, nello entrare nel letto, parue una ostia pura, posta sopra l'altare sacro (57). It appears, that the Son-in-law did not rigorously exact the Payment of the whole Sum before Marriage; he was satisfied with the Gold Chain, which the Emperor's Son, had given Aretin, as Security for what was wanting of the thousand Ducats; but this did not make the Father-in-law a jot the easier; who had a great Desire to keep his Gold Chain; and yet could not get rid of his Daughter, until all the Money was paid: For his Son-in-law refused to take her Home to his own House, without the full Portion. The Duke of Florence was again importuned, and disburst something more (58).

[R] He saw her so unhappy in this State, that he repented of his Impatience.] It was a very unhappy Match; poor Adria was so ill treated by her Husband, that she was obliged to return to her Father (59); but, her Husband promising her better Usage, she was persuaded to a Reconcilement; but was still as unhappy as ever. She was still denied the Power of the Keys; a Power, which never falls to the Petticoat in the Church, but is the Woman's Right in the Management of a Family. She could neither eat, nor drink, but when it pleased others to dispose of the Keys in her Favour: She was perpetually teized about her Dress. Her Husband would not suffer her to wear Jewels, and obliged her to sell a Diamond, which her Father had given her: Thus she was attacked in the most sensible Part; this was tearing her very Heart out. Aretin implored for her the Protection of the Duchess of Urbino (60). What a Heart-breaking must it be to him, to find himself treated so contemptuously by his Son-in-law, whilst his Fame was spread as far as the Court of Persia (61)! What a Domestic Bitter was This amidst the fancied Sweets of a great Reputation! Could it be any Consolation, to consider, that this Brute at the same time despised the Duke of Florence, who had earnestly recommended it to him to treat his Wife well? On the contrary this was a new Subject of Confusion to the Person, who had made so ill a Choice of a Son-in-Law. " Benche en quanto al non fare nissuna stima " di me simil' cane, non e maraviglia, e ben' da stu- " pire del si poco rispetto che mostra d'havere lo asi- " naccio al gran' Duca, la cui benignita mansueta, us- " cendo noi di Pesaro, per il viaggio di Roma, cosi " qual era a cavallo, chiomollo, & dissegli; Se tu " vuoi che non ti si manchi di gratie, tratta la mog- " lie tua, si come di me nata fusse (62). —— As to " this Brute's little regard for me, it is not to be " wondered at; but it is astonishing that This Ass " should be so wanting in Respect to the Great Duke; " who was so kind, at our Departure from Pesaro to " Rome, as to call him back, when on Horseback, and " say; if you expect the Continuance of my Favour, " treat your Wife as if she were my Daughter." Note, That Peter Aretin had another Daughter, whom he was very desirous of marrying (63).

(53) Aretin, Letter 145, Book 5. fol. 72. Edit. of Paris 1609.

(54) Id. ib.

(55) See the 24*th Letter of the same Book. It is dated at* Venice, 1548.

(56) See the 22*cth Letter of the* 5*th Book. It is dated* March 1549.

(57) Ibid. fol. 102.

(58) See the 6*th Book of the Letters of* Aretin, fol. 121.

(59) See the 16*th Book of his Letters,* fol. 281.

(60) His Letter to the Duchess of Urbino is dated from Venice in November 1554.

(61) See Remark [A].

(62) Aretin, pag. 282, of the 6*th Book of his Letters.*

(63) She was called Austria. See the 210*th Letter of the* 5*th Book.*

(a) And not ARGIROPHILUS, nor ARGYROPHILUS, as in Moreri.

ARGYROPYLUS (a) (JOHN), a Native of Constantinople, retired into Italy, while the Turks were overturning all Greece [A]. He was very kindly received by Cosmo de Medicis, who made him Preceptor to his Son Peter, and his Grandson Lorenzo (b), and Professor of Greek at Florence. He testified his Gratitude in a Translation of Aristotle's Physics and Ethics. He was attended with a very particular piece of good Fortune in This Work; for Theodore Gaza, who had finished a like Translation, threw it into the Fire, that he might not prejudice the Fortune of his good Friend Argyropylus. Gaza surpassed him in Eloquence, and his Translation would infallibly have eclipsed the other; but, as he was not ignorant of Argyropylus's Ambition, and was, besides, a good-natured Man, he made a Sacrifice, which cost him but little; for he was one, who valued neither Praise, nor Money. Argyropylus's Conversation disgusted and tired Men of Learning, especially when he took upon him to maintain, that Cicero did not

(b) And not his Nephew, as in Moreri.

[A] He retired into Italy, while the Turks were overturning all Greece.] I dare not say, with Moreri, that he retired into Italy, after the Conquest of Constantinople by the Turks; for Two Reasons make me doubt it. One is, Paul Jovius's saying, that Argyropylus was driven into Italy by the same Tempest, which forced Theodore Gaza thither (1). Now he observes, that This Theodore took refuge there, while Amurath shook all Greece with his Victorious Arms. Amurathe Græciam omnem victricibus armis quatiente, in Italiam venit (2). This inclines me to believe, that Argyropylus left his Country before the Ottomans had taken Constantinople. My second Reason is, because he addressed a Treatise of Consolation to the Emperor of Constantinople. To make this a good Argument, it must, I confess, be proved, that he composed this Piece in Italy; and I own I cannot prove this; so that I only offer this Observation, as a motive to keep my Reader in suspence. Paul Jovius is to blame, in having neglected Chronology, so much as he has done, in his Elogies; for he might easily have discovered the date of the Offices, Travels, and Deaths, of his Illustrious Persons. This by the way. Vossius observes, that This Treatise of Argyropylus, his Monodie, his Book de Regno, and his Parallels between the Ancient and Modern Princes, are in the Library of the most Christian King (3). Mr Moreri, who never saw these Works, affirms, nevertheless, that the Author dedicated them to the House of Medicis. Why was he not satisfied with affirming this concerning the Translations of Aristole only? his Guide goes no farther (4).

(1) Paulus Jovius, Elog. cap. 27. pag. 64.

(2) Id. ib. cap. 26. pag. 61.

(3) Vossius, de Histor. Græcis, lib. 4, cap. 19, pag. 493.

(4) Paulus Jovius, Elog. cap. 27.

[B] What

Digitized by Google

not understand Greek. He left Tuscany, in the time of a Plague, and went to Rome, where he read Lectures on the Greek Text of Aristotle. His Salary was considerable; but, as he loved good Eating and Drinking, and as his Constitution was able to bear Intemperance, he spent all his Income. So that what has been said of his Gluttony, is not incredible [B]. He died of a Fever, which he got by eating too many Melons, at seventy Years of Age (c). He discovered great Constancy of Mind, when one of his Sons was killed at Rome (d). See, concerning the Order, which Pope Paul III gave for pursuit of the Murtherers, and for the Funeral of the deceased, the 200th Letter of the Cardinal of Pavia, pag. 620. It has been remarked, that he was the first Greek, who taught Philosophy in that City [C]. He disputed with much Vivacity, and had a very extensive Knowledge. He left a Son, who was an excellent Musician (e). The Judgments, which have been passed upon his Translations, differ extreamly [D].

(c) Thus says Paul Jovius, Elog. cap. 27.

(d) Petrus Alcyonius, in Medice Legato prioræ, pag. 25.

(e) Obiit relicto filio Musico, nobili Musico. Volaterran. lib. 21. p. 776.

[B] What has been said of his Gluttony is not incredible] Let us quote Paul Jovius. "Vini & cibi "æque avidus & capax, & multo abdomine ventri- "cosus, immodico melopeponum esu autumnalem "accersivit febrem, atque ita septuagesimo ætatis "anno ereptus est (5). —— Being equally desirous, and "capable, of eating and drinking, and having a very "large Belly, he got an autumnal Fever by eating too "many Melons; and thus was taken off in the Seven- "tieth Year of his Age." To die of excessive eating is scandalous in any one; much more in Men of Letters. It had been more for the Honour of Argyropylus to have died of Hunger. Let us not, however, look upon the enormous Size of his Belly as a good Argument against those, who represent him as a Person of great Abilities: The Event of such a Dispute would be very uncertain. See the Collections, which shall be produced in the Remaks of the Article GORGIAS.

(5) Jovius, ibid. p. 65.

[C] It has been remarked, that he was the first Greek, who taught at Rome] His Disciple Politian is now to be quoted; read these Words of Hornius. "Primus ex Græcis Romæ philosophiam professus "fuit Argyropylus, cujus sectatorem se fuisse me- "morat Angelus Politianus, Miscel cap. 1. eumque "cum literarum Latinarum minime incuriosum, tum "sapientiæ decretorum, disciplinarumque adco cun- "ctarum, quæ Cyclicæ à Martiano dicuntur, erudi- "tissimum illis temporibus habitum, atque in dispu- "tando acerrimum (6). — Argyropylus was the First "of the Greeks, who professed Philosophy at Rome; "whose Follower Politian was, as he informs us, Mis- "cell. ch. 1. as also that, he was not only well versed "in the Latin Tongue, but skilled likewise in the "Learning of Decretals, and esteemed the greatest "Scholar of his Times, in all those Sciences, which by "Martian are called Cyclic, and a strenuous Dispu- "tant."

(6) Hornius, Historia Philosoph. l. 6. c. 6. p. 304, 305.

[D] The Judgments, which have been passed upon his Translations, differ extreamly.] Thuanus observes, that Perionius, intending to avoid the Method of Argyropylus, fell into another Extreme. He found, that Argyropylus had translated Aristotle more faithfully, than elegantly; and therefore undertook a Translation, which should please those, who admire good Latin; but, labouring too much at Elegancy of Style, he lay open to the Charge of departing from the Sense of the Author. "Is (Joachimus Perionius) cum Ari- "stotelem hactenus a Johanne Argyropylo fideliter po- "tius quam ornate versum auribus Latinis propo- "nendum statuisset, dum elegantioris stili potius quam "veri rationem plerumque Ciceroni suo addictus ha- "bet, in contrariam ab Argyropylo reprehensionem "incidit (7). Which Judgment amounts to this: Argyropylus's Translation is faithful, but without Grace or Ornament. Others judge of it quite otherwise; They say there is more of Elegancy, than Faithfulness, in it; and blame him for not translating his Original Word for Word, according to the Duty of those, add they, who translate the Holy Scripture, and Aristotle. Aliquot Aristotelis libros convertit magis eleganter quam fideliter, cum in hoc philosopho haud aliter quam in sacris literis verbum verbo reddere oporteat (8). If we consult a Professor of Louvain, we shall find this Judgment of Volaterran but ill grounded, and that Argyropylus confined himself more servilely to Aristotle's Words, than Thoughts; and that his Translation can pass for neither faithful nor elegant. See the words of This Professor: "Superiori sæculo, quidam verba ver- "bis ita admensi sunt, ut sententiam depravarint, non "aliter quam indocti pictores, qui, operosi in cultu effin- "gendo, membra secundum vestem distorquent: quum "Apelles, Parrhasiique, prius nudum corpus effor- "mare, quam amictum superinducere soleant. In- "quorum numero Argyropylum reponas, & Ruffi- "num, alterum interpretem Aristotelis, alterum Gre- "gorii Nazianzeni, de quibus vere id hemistichii dici "potest: Dant sine mente sonum. Fit autem illud "vel ex inscitia, vel ex κακοζηλία; quum enim sen- "tentiam apprehendere nequeunt, verba reddunt, "quasi quod ipsi non intellexerint, alius ex illorum "verbis intelligere queat, cum verba non minus ex "sententia vim suam, & significatum accipiant, quam "sententiam constituant. Aliqui rursus fidem exisli- "mant à numero verborum non discedere (9). ---- In "the last Age, some Writers so scrupulously adhered "to the Words of an Author, as to spoil the sense; like "unskilful Painters, who, taking a great Deal of "Pains about the Drapery, neglect the Proportions and "Symmetry of the Figure: Whereas Apelles, and the "Parrhasii, always drew the naked Figure, before "they cloathed it. In the number of these may be "ranked Argyropylus, and Rufinus, The One a Trans- "lator of Aristotle, the Other of Gregory of Nazi- "anzen; to whom may justly be applied the Hemistic, "Dant sine mente sonum; They give a Sound with- "out a meaning. This proceeds either from Ignorance, "or false Emulation; for, when they cannot comprehend "the Sense, they render the Words; as if another "could apprehend from their Words what They them- "selves understand not; whereas Words no less re- "ceive their Force and Signification from the Sentence, "than constitute the Sentence. Others again think "it the business of a Faithful Translator to keep to "the very number of the Words." Some Learned Men imagine, that Argyropylus is here accused of confining himself verbatim to the Original, and, where he cannot comprehend his Author's Sense, of having recurred to a jingle of Words without any meaning (10). I question whether this is exactly what Nannius aims at. Huetius agrees in his Judgment with Thuanus (11), and consequently condemns That of Volaterran. He condemns Paul Jovius likewise, who preferred the Translation of Gaza before That of Argyropylus, and declares, that, if the first be more Eloquent, the latter is more faithful. Non efficies quin major quidem eloquentia laus Gazæ, accurate autem interpretandi Argyropylo debeatur (12). See, above, Remark [B] of the Article ACCIAIOLI (DONATO), and wonder at the Diversity of these Opinions.

(7) Thuan. Histor. l. 23. pag. 4-3, ad Ann. 1559.

(8) Volaterr. lib. 21. pag. 776.

(9) Petrus Nannius, Alcmarianus in Collegio Bullriano apud Lovanienses Latinus Professor, συμμικτων, lib. 1. c. 3. pag. 6.

(10) See Mr Baillet, Jugem. des Sçavans, Tom. 4. n. 814. p. 356.

(11) Huëtius de claris Interpret. pag. 239.

(12) Id. ib.

ARIARATHES. The Name of several Kings of Cappadocia. See the Article CAPPADOCIA.

ARIGONI (POMPEIO), Cardinal and Archbishop of Benevento, was born at Rome, in the Year 1552. During the Time, that he was one of the Consistorial Advocates, he was retained in all the Causes relating to Philip II of Spain. In the Pontificate of Sixtus Quintus, he make a Speech, to shew the Reasonableness of canoni-zing the bleſſed Diego d'Alcala. He was made Auditor of the Rota, in the Year 1591, and Cardinal in 1596, and exerciſed the Office of Chancellor under Leo XI, and Paul V. The Archbiſhopric of Benevento was conferred upon him by This laſt Pope. He died, the fourth of April, 1616, in the Greeks Tower near Naples, whither he had retired for change of Air. His Body was carried to Benevento, where his Nephew erected a Marble Tomb over him, in the principal Church. There are ſome Latin Letters of our Pompey, among thoſe of John Baptiſta Lauri, beſides the Speech beforementioned, which was printed by Peter Galeſini (a). As to his Deciſions of the Rota, they are only Manuſcripts in the Cabiners of ſome learned Men. Charles Carthari gave him great Commendations in his Liſt of the Conſiſtorial Advocates (b).

Digitized by Google

(a) In Libello pro Canonizatione B. Didaci Complutenſis. See alſo Franciſcus Pegna, in vita ejuſdem Didaci.

(b) Ex Bibl. Romana Proſperi Mandoſii.

ARIMANIUS, one of the chief Deities of Perſia. That Nation was indebted to Zoroaſter for it's Philoſophy; one principal Tenet of which was revived by the Manicheans; to wit, That there are two firſt Principles, one of Good, and the other of Evil. The Perſians called the Deity, which they acknowledged as the Principle of all Good, and Author of the State, in which Things were firſt produced, Oroſmades; and the Divinity, which they acknowledged as the Principle of Evil, and Author of the Corruption, into which the Original Nature is fallen, They called Arimanius. They ſaid, that Oroſmades, having produced the good Spirits, and the Stars, encloſed them in an Egg [A]; and that Arimanius produced the bad Genii, who broke This Egg; from whence proceeded Confuſion, and a mixture of Good and Evil. They add, that, at laſt, after divers Conflicts, in which the Victory would be various, Oroſmades ſhould totally vanquiſh Arimanius, and deſtroy him beyond retrieve; which would be followed by a State of great Happineſs to Mankind, and by a very commodious Transformation, by which the Bodies of Men would become tranſparent, and be preſerved without any Nouriſhment (a).

(a) Taken from Burnet's Theory of the Earth, lib. 2. c. 10. p. 289, 290. who cites Plutarch de Iſide & Oſiride.

What I have here ſaid is borrowed from an Author, who had it from Plutarch, whoſe entire Paſſage I ſhall produce elſewhere (b). It is remarkable, that the King of Perſia, when Themiſtocles fled to him for Refuge, prayed to Arimanius, that he would always influence his Enemies to baniſh their braveſt Men (c). This is a Proof, that the Perſians conſidered Arimanius as a Divinity, which took a Pleaſure only in Evil [B]. The ſame Divinity, doubtleſs, was meant, when, upon Darius's complaining of the Deity of Perſia, when he was informed, that the Queen his Wife was dead a Priſoner in the Camp of Alexander; he was anſwered; With regard to Funeral Honours, &c. you have no reaſon to accuſe the Bad Genius of the Nation (d). Your Wife, Your Mother, and Your Children, have loſt nothing of their former Fortune, but the Opportunity of ſeeing your Glory reſtored by Oroſmades (e). We ſee, in theſe Words, the Oppoſition, which the Perſians ſuppoſed to be between Oroſmades and Arimanius.

(b) In Remark [C] of the Article MANICHEANS; and Remark [E] of the Article ZOROASTER.

(c) Plut. in Themiſt. pag. 126.

(d) Τὸν πόνηρον Δαίμονα. Plut. in Alexandro, p. 682.

(e) Id. ib.

[A] Encloſed them in an Egg.] I promiſed, in another Place (1), that I would ſay ſomething here concerning the Egg, which, according to the Ancient Theology of the Pagans, had been employed in the Production of Beings, when the Chaos was reduced. I ſay, then, that it was the Opinion of the Phœnicians, that the obſcure Air, and the Chaos, were the Principle of all Things. This obſcure Air is without doubt the ſame, which others call Night, and to which they attribute the Production of an Egg, out of which proceeded Love, and Human-kind. Τίκτει πρώτιστον νὺξ μελανόπτερος ὠόν (2). This may be ingeniouſly explained of the Earth, and compared with the Words of Moſes; by ſuppoſing, that the groſſer Parts of This obſcure and thick Air, ſubſiding, met with a fat and glewy Subſtance, with which, incorporating they formed a kind of Slime; which, being hardened, became an habitable Earth (3). Some of the Ancients ſaid, that a Dove, brooding on an Egg, produced Venus, or Love. "Verba citat Grotius ex "Nigidio in Scholiaſten Germanici, ovum miræ "Magnitudinis, quod volventes ejecerunt in terram, "atque ita columbam inſediſſe, & poſt aliquot dies "excluſiſſe Deam Syriæ, quæ vocatur Venus (4)." Lucius Ampelius pretends it was the Egg of a Fiſh; Ovum piſcis columbam adſediſſe dies plurimos, & excluſiſſe Deam benignam (5). By the Egg Dr Burnet underſtands the Chaos, the Holy Ghoſt by the Dove, and by Venus the Earth (6). But I think we ſhould not limit This Venus, which came out of the Egg, to the Production of the Earth alone, but underſtand it of the whole Machine of the World. The Doctor obſerves, that the Egg was ſacred in the Myſteries of Bacchus, becauſe of it's Reſemblance to That Being, which ingenders and includes every thing in it's ſelf. Ὡς μίμημα τοῦ τὰ πάντα γεννῶντος καὶ περιέχοντος ἐν ἑαυτῷ (7). He does not forget to obſerve, that Moſes's Expreſſion relates to the Action of Hens in brooding. "Huic doctrinæ "de Ovo mundano datæque interpretationi tacite ſa-"vere mihi videtur incubatio Spiritus Sancti in "abyſſum, de qua Moſes in prima telluris productio-"ne, ubi ad ovum manifeſto alluditur (8). - - - - - "This Moving (or Brooding) of the Holy Spirit "upon the Face of the Waters, which Moſes ſpeaks "of in the Hiſtory of the Creation, where he plainly "alludes to an Egg, is a tacit Confirmation of This "Doctrine of the Mundane Egg, and the Ex-"plication I have given of it."

(1) Above, Remark [A] of the Article ADAM.

(2) Ariſtophanes apud Burnetium, Tell. Theor. Sacr. lib. 2. cap. 7. pag. 243.

(3) This is Dr Burnet's Explication, ibid. p. 244.

(4) Id. ib. pag. 259.

(5) Ibid.

(6) Ibid.

(7) Ex Plutarchi Symp. lib. 2. Quæſt. 3.

(8) Burnet's Theory, p. 286.

[B] The Perſians conſidered Arimanius as a Divinity, which took a Pleaſure only in Evil.] If any one is inclined not to grant me this, he may object, that the King of Perſia was greatly pleaſed to have gained Themiſtocles; he believed, therefore, the Exile of ſuch Perſons to be a fortunate Event for his own Country, and that it was his Intereſt they ſhould take Refuge in his Court: when, therefore, he prayed to Arimanius to inſpire his Enemies with a Reſolution to baniſh their braveſt Citizens, he demanded a very great Favour of him; and, conſequently, he looked upon him as a Principle of Good, upon ſome Occaſions, with regard to the Perſians. I anſwer, that This Reaſoning is invalid. This Monarch agreed in Opinion with his Divines; he conſidered Arimanius only as a malignant Being; he petioned for the Exile of the great Men of Greece, only inaſmuch as it was prejudicial to That Country. It was an Action within the Juriſdiction, and to the Taſte, of Arimanius, as far as it was unjuſt and pernicious, with reſpect to the Towns, which baniſhed them. But, as far as it was beneficial to the Perſians, it was by no means agreeable to him; nor was it under this Notion, that his Aſſiſtance was intreated. In a Word, to ſolve this Objection, it is ſufficient to ſay, that the Affairs of this World being ſo interwoven with each other, that, generally ſpeaking, one Country profits by the Misfortunes of another, Arimanius could ſcarce effect any thing ſimply and abſolutely pernicious; ſome Advantage would always reſult from it, either by accident, or otherwiſe. Now, as He did nothing, but on account of the Evil, which he diſcovered in it, it could never be pretended, that he was the Principle of any Good. It is true, then, that the Prayer, we are ſpeaking of, is no Proof, that he was conſidered otherwiſe, than as a Being, who took a Pleaſure only in hurting.

Digitized by Google

ARIMINI (GREGORY of) See RIMINI.

ARION, a wonderful Horſe, and famed in Poetical Story on a different account from Bucephalus in the Hiſtory of Alexander. His Origin has been variouſly ſpoken of; though all allow it Divine. Some ſay (a), that Neptune, being deſirous to procure to Men all the Conveniences, which Horſes could afford them, ſtruck the Earth in Theſſaly with his Trident; and immediately out ſtarted a couple of Horſes; one of which was our Arion. Others ſay, that Neptune, diſputing with Minerva, which of them ſhould give a Name to the City of Athens, it was ordered by the other Gods, that which ever of the Two ſhould make the beſt Preſent to Men ſhould give a Name to The City. Whereupon, Neptune ſtruck the Beach with his Trident, and cauſed an Horſe to iſſue forth of it [A]; but Minerva produced an Olive-Tree; and gained the Victory; for it was judged, that Peace, of which the Olive is an Emblem, was better than War, in which the Horſe was moſt uſeful. Now there are, who pretend, that the Horſe, which Neptune produced on this Occaſion, was named Arion. Others ſay, that This Horſe ſprung from Ceres and Neptune (b). This Goddeſs, as ſhe was wandring through the World in queſt of her Daughter, met Neptune, who made fierce Love to her; but, not being diſpoſed to gratify his Paſſion, ſhe thought fit to aſſume the Form of a Mare. This paſt near the City of Oncium in Arcadia. Ceres in vain endeavoured to conceal herſelf among the Studd; Neptune ſoon diſcovered her, and enjoyed her in the Shape of an Horſe. She was vext at it at firſt; but was, afterwards, appeaſed, and waſhed herſelf in a neighbouring River. She had, by this Adventure with Neptune, not only a Daughter, whoſe Name it was not lawful to declare to prophane Perſons, but likewiſe Our Horſe Arion. There are, who ſay, that ſhe was in the Form of a Fury, when Neptune begot this Horſe on her, or that, in effect, a Fury conceived him, from the Act of Neptune [B]. The Poet Antimachus, cited by Pauſanias, gives him no other Origin, than the Soil of Arcadia: But Quintus Calaber makes him the Son of Zephyrus, and a Harpy [C]. However it be, it was believed, that he was brought up by the Nereids [D], and that, being ſometimes harneſſed, with other of Neptune's Horſes, to the Chariot of That God, he drew him with incredible Swiftneſs over all the Seas (c). He had this peculiar to him, that his Feet, on the off ſide, were like thoſe of a Man (d). Hercules mounted him, when he took the City of Elis, and afterwards preſented him to Adraſtus. This Pauſanias informs us of; who adds, that Antimachus made Adraſtus the third Owner of him [E]. Heſiod repreſents him as belonging to Hercules, in his Combat with Cygnus (e). Statius ſays, in general, that he ſerved Hercules in his Travels, and that, afterwards, the Gods gave him to Adraſtus (f). Probus aſcribes the whole Honour of This Preſent to Neptune (g). Under this

(a) Lutatius in Statii Thebaid. lib. 4. v. 43.

(b) Pauſan. lib. 8. pag. 257.

(c) Stat. Thebaid. l. 6. ver. 308.

(d) Lutatius, in Statii Theb. l. 6. ver. 302.

(e) Heſiod. in Clypeo Herculis.

(f) Stat. ubi ſupra.

(g) Probus, in Virgil. Georgic. I.

[A] Neptune, diſputing with Minerva - - - - ſtruck the Beach - - - - - and cauſed an Horſe to iſſue forth of it.] Servius informs us of this, on theſe Words of Virgil.

------ tuque ô, cui prima frementem
Fudit equum magno tellus percuſſa tridenti,
Neptune (1).

(1) Virgil. Georgic. lib. 1. ver. 12.

And Thou, whoſe Trident ſtruck the teeming Earth,
And made a Paſſage for the Courſer's Birth.

DRYDEN.

See likewiſe Probus on the ſame Paſſage of Virgil.

[B] She was in the Form of a Fury, when Neptune begot this Horſe on her; or - - - - - a Fury conceived him by Neptune.] They are the Opinions of Apollodorus and Heſychius. Theſe are their Words. Τοῦτον ἐκ Ποσειδῶνος ἐγέννησε ἐπικασθεῖσα Ἐρινύϊ κατὰ τὴν συνουσίαν (2). Ceres, under the Form of a Fury, conceived this Horſe by Neptune. Ἀρίων ὁ ἵππος Ποσειδῶνος καὶ μιᾶς τῶν Ἐρινύων (3). The Horſe Arion, the Son of Neptune and one of the Furies. Barthius has confounded This Opinion of Apollodorus with That of Heſychius. " Unius ex Erynnibus, ſays he (4), ſobolem aſſen- " titur Apollodoro Heſychius Lexicographus. - - - - " Heſychius the Lexicographer agrees with Apollo- " dorus, in making him the Offſpring of one of the " Furies." This is to make Apollodorus ſay, that Arion was foaled by one of the Furies; but he has ſaid no ſuch thing; he expreſsly obſerves, that Ceres was the Mother of This Horſe, and that ſhe had aſſumed the Form of a Fury, only at the Time of Copulation. Lloyd has ſtolen from Barthius in this Place, without correcting him.

(2) Apollod. Bibl. lib. 3.

(3) Heſychius.

(4) Barth. in Stat. Tom. 2. pag. 899.

[C] Quintus Calaber makes him the Son of Zephyrus, and a Harpy.] Behold a ſecond Fault of Barthius, which Lloyd has tranſplanted into his Lexicon, juſt as he found it. " Intercedit Quintus, ſays Bar- " thius (5), Harpyiæ patronus, cujus fuerit potius " ſeminio oriundus patre Zephyro, ingratiis etiam " Neptuni. - - - - - - Quintus Calaber interpoſes, " making him to have been begot upon a Harpy by " Zephyrus, againſt the Will of Neptune." There " is nothing in That Poet which remarks, that it was with, or without, the Approbation of Neptune, that Zephyrus and the Harpy produced Arion (6).

(5) Id. ib.

(6) Q. Calaber. lib. 4. ver. 571.

[D] It was believed, that he was brought up by the Nereids.] I ſhall cite only Claudian.

Si dominus legeretur equis, tua poſceret ultro
Verbera, Nereidum ſtabulis nutritus, Arion (7).

(7) Claudian. Conſul. IV. Honorii ver. 555. Lloyd cites this twice.

To chuſe a Maſter were the Courſers free,
Arion, once the Nereids Care, would be Subject to thy Command, and court the Whip from thee.

[E] Adraſtus was his third Owner.] This is true, according to the Hiſtory, which the Scholiaſt of Homer makes of it, on the Three hundred and forty ſixth Verſe of the Twenty third Book of the Iliad. He ſays, that Neptune, falling in Love with Erinnys, this laſt Maſter it was, that Arion ſignaliz'd himſelf moſt; he won the Prize of the Race in the Nemean Games [F], which the Princes, who undertook the Siege of Thebes, inſtituted in Honour of Archemorus, and was the means of preſerving Adraſtus from periſhing, with all the other Chiefs, in This famous Expedition. This Apollonius teſtifies in his third Book.

Digitized by Google

Neptune forbad, that, in his whirling Car,
Cygnus the Prize, ſhould from Arion bear;
Hence the Steed gain'd the Honour of the Day,
The Prize Amphiaraus bore away.

Apollodorus confeſſes, that Amphiaraus carried it in in the Chariot Race, ἅρμα; which his Latin Tranſlator ought to have rendered by curru, and not curſu, as Barthius has obſerved (10). As for the Diſtich of Propertius, which makes Arion a ſpeaking Animal,

Quis & Adraſti fuerit vocalis Arion,
Triſtis ad Archemori funera victor equus (11).

——— ſuch Arion was,
Adraſtus' vocal Horſe, who, at the Games
Sacred to dead Archemorus' Fame,
Was crown'd victorious in the duſty Race.

I do not believe he attributes That Grief to Him, which Paſſerat imagines; The Word triſtis I take to relate to the fatal Accident of Archemorus, for whom Theſe Games were celebrated, and not to the Grief of Arion, on finding another Maſter beſides Adraſtus (12).

(8) That is, One of the Furies.

nys (8), metamorphoſed himſelf into a Horſe, and enjoyed her in Bœotia, near the Fountain Tiphouſa; that he got an Horſe on her, which was called Ἀρείων, becauſe he excelled all others; that he gave him to Copreus, King of Aliartus; who preſented him to Hercules; who won the Prize of the Race with This Horſe, againſt Cygnus, the Son of Mars, near Træzene, and that, afterwards, Hercules preſented him to Adraſtus.

[F] He won the Prize of the Race in the Nemean Games.] Apollodorus, in his third Book, ſays, that Adraſtus was Victor in the Chariot-Race; but Statius pretends, that This Prince gave Arion to his Son-in-law Polynices; and that Arion threw his new Driver, and, continuing his Courſe, outſtript all the reſt; which did not prevent Amphiaraus from carrying the Crown: For, though he did not diſtance Arion, yet it was ſufficient, that he carried it from his Competitors, and that Polynices, being thrown, could pretend to nothing in virtue of the ſuperior Fleetneſs of his Horſe.

Forſitan & victo prior iſſet Arione Cygnus,
Sed vetat æquoreus vinci pater: hinc vice juſta
Gloria manſit equo, ceſſit victoria vati (9).

(9) Stat. Theb. lib. 6. ver. 528.

(10) Barth. in Stat. Tom. 3. p. 537.

(11) Propert. lib. 2. Eleg. ult.

(12) Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres, July 1702, pag. 110.

ARIOSTA (Lippa), Concubine of Opizzo, Marquis of Eſt and Ferrara, improved ſo well the Impreſſions which her Beauty had made on the Heart of the Marquis, by her Fidelity and artful Management, that, at laſt, he owned her for his lawful Wife, in the Year 1352. He died the ſame Year, and left her the Adminiſtration of his Eſtates; of which ſhe acquitted herſelf very well, during the Minority of her eleven Children. From this Lady is deſcended The Houſe of Eſt, which ſubſiſts, at this Time, in the Branches of the Dukes of Modena and Rhegio (a). The Author, from whom I borrow this, obſerves, that Lippa Arioſta brought more Honour to her Family, which was one of the nobleſt of Ferrara, ——— than ſhe had taken from it [A]. The Reader will meet with ſome Reflexions on This in the Remark, which I ſubjoin to this Article.

(a) Le Laboureur, Relation du Voiage de Pologne, Part. 3. pag. 372.

[A] She brought more Honour to her Family - - - - than ſhe had taken from it.] I have diſcourſed, in another Place (1), of the ſingular Efficacy of Marriage. It cannot be ſufficiently admired; for, in ſhort, it changes the Nature of the three Diſtinctions of Time; the paſt is no leſs affected by it's Influence, than the preſent and the future. "Do "you not admire at the force of Cuſtom, and the Au- "thority it has in the World? With three Words, "pronounced by a certain Perſon, Ego conjungo vos, "you privilege a young Man and a Maid to go to "bed together, in ſight, and with the conſent, of "all the World; and this is called a Sacrament "adminiſtered by a conſecrated Perſon. The ſame "Action, without theſe Words, is an enormous "Crime, which diſgraces a poor Lady; and He, "who conducts the Affair, is called, an pleaſe you, "a Pimp. In the firſt Caſe, the Father and Mother "make merry, dance, and conduct their Daughter "themſelves to bed. In the other they are at their "Wits end, get her ſhaved, and away with her to "a Convent. It muſt be confeſſed that the Law "is a very merry Affair (2)." This is not the Marvellous of the Matter: The chief ſingularity conſiſts in the retroactive Effect. Our Arioſta had been a Concubine; her Children were Baſtards; this was a Stain to her Honour, and her Family; but all was effaced, waſhed out, and annihilated, by three Words of the Prieſt, Ego conjungo vos. The Marquis of Ferrara, by marrying this Miſtreſs, a little before he left the World, metamorphoſed her from a Concubine into an honeſt Wife, and legitimated her Children. Such Metamorphoſes happen daily; and ſome have pretended, that Children, born at a time, when their Father and Mother could not marry for want of a Diſpenſation, ought to be legitimated by a ſubſequent Marriage; but the Parliament of Paris gave Judgment againſt this Pretence in the Year 1664 (3). It may perhaps be asked, why the Marquis did not comply before the Year of his Death. I anſwer, that a Fornicator, who finds himſelf near his end, is more diſpoſed to ſuch a Conduct, than if he were in hopes of living longer. The Checks of Conſcience, excited of themſelves, or by the Diſcourſe of a Caſuiſt, are more lively at the approach of Death; leſs Difficulty is then made in paſſing through a vexatious Ceremony, which may quiet them. Add to this, that a great Lord, ſolicited to marry by a Miſtreſs, whom he enjoys, may imagine, that ſhe will be a thouſand times more obliging, and faithful, while ſhe flatters herſelf with the Hopes of attaining to the Quality of his Wife, but that, after having attained to it, ſhe will diſcover her Pride and ill Humour, &c. He may, therefore, think proper to keep her in conſtant Expectation; but, when he is paſt Hopes of Recovery, he will think it time to give over this Piece of Management. However it be, ſome are ſo ſevere, that they cannot be reconciled to the Conduct of the Marquis of Ferrara, and his Imitators: They would have a Woman, who has diſhonoured herſelf, and been a long time a Scandal to a whole Country, remain all her Life-time in Diſgrace; that the Example of her being reſtored to Honour and Reputation may not ſerve as an Allurement to other Maids, and, under the like Proſpect, conceal from them the Infamy of Concubinage (4).

(1) In the Article ALESIUS, Remark [D].

(2) Buſſi Rabutin, Lettre 136, Part. IV, pag. 192. Edit. of Holl.

(3) See the Journal des Sçavans, for Jan. 12, 1665, pag. 46.

(4) See Remark [D] of the Article ALESIUS.

ARISTANDER, a famous Soothſayer in the Days of Alexander the Great, was Native of a certain City in Aſia, where almoſt all were born with a Diſpoſition to Prophecy (a). He followed Alexander to the Conqueſt of Perſia, and acquired (a) TELMESSUS. See its Article. Plutarch, Arrian, Lucian, Clemens, Alexandrinus, and ſeveral others, ſay, that Ariſtander was of this City.

Digitized by Google

quired a wonderful Aſcendant over the Mind of This Monarch [A], by the great Succeſs of his Art [B]. He had been formerly in the ſame Employ at the Court of King Philip; and it was He, who explained That Prince's Dream, after his Marriage with Olympia, more to the King's Satisfaction, than any of his Brethren. Philip dreamed, that he had ſealed the Queen's Belly with a Seal, on which was engraved a Lion,

[A] He acquired a wonderful Aſcendant over the Mind of This Monarch.] It is certain, on the one hand, that, in all the Macedonian Army, there was no Soothſayer of ſuch great Reputation and Authority, as Ariſtander: Peritiſſimus vatum (1). Cui maxima fides habebatur (2). Cui tum plurimum credebatur ex vatibus (3). It is, on the other hand, moſt certain, that Alexander was very ſuperſtitious: Erat non intactus ea ſuperſtitione mentis (4). Superſtitionis potens non erat (5). It is eaſy, then, to conclude, that Ariſtander had a great Aſcendant over him. Quintus Curtius obſerves, that This Prince had an implicit Faith in him. "Qui poſt Darium victum "ariolos & vates conſulere deſierat, rurſus ad ſuper-"ſtitionem humanarum gentium ludibria revolutus, "Ariſtandrum, CUI CREDULITATEM SUAM "ADDIXERAT, explorare eventum rerum ſacrificiis "jubet (6). ----- He, who, after the Conqueſt of "Darius, had left off to conſult with Soothſayers and "Diviners, relapſing into the Follies of Superſtition, "commanded Ariſtander, in whom he had an im-"plicit Faith, to enquire by Sacrifice the Event of "Things." If, in any critical Juncture, he was to beg a ſingular Favour of the Gods, he ſhut himſelf up with Ariſtander. With him he ſhut himſelf up, to perform the moſt myſterious and ineffable Ceremonies of Religion. Plutarch informs us of this, where he mentions the Preparations for the Battle of Arbela. Ἀλέξανδρος δὲ τῶν Μακεδόνων ἀναπαυομένων, αὐτὸς πρὸ τῆς σκηνῆς μετὰ τῆς μαντέως Ἀριστάνδρου διέτριβεν ἱερουργίας τινὰς ἀπορρήτους ἱερουργῶν καὶ τῷ Φοίβῳ σφαγιαζόμενος (7). Alexander, whilſt the Macedonians ſlept, performed certain myſterious Ceremonies before his Tent, with Ariſtander the Soothſayer, and ſacrificed to Apollo. Quintus Curtius ſays, that Alexander, being much troubled on this Occaſion, ſent for Ariſtander, to implore the Aſſiſtance of the Gods, and that Ariſtander, in his Habit of Ceremony, dictated the Forms of Prayer to him. "Alexander non alias magis territus ad "vota & preces Ariſtandrum vocari jubet. Ille in "candida veſte, verbenas manu preferens, capite ve-"lato precibus regi, Jovem, Minervam, Victo-"riamque propitianti (8)." It is no wonder, that This Prince had ſuch a Value for his Soothſayer; for he did him more ſervice than any of his Generals. By his Aſſiſtance he inſpired his Army with Hopes and Courage; which greatly contributed to the Succeſs of his Enterprizes. Do but conſider This Ariſtander in the Heat of the Battle of Arbela, habited in white, and carrying a Branch of Laurel in his Hand, crying out to the Soldiers, that he ſaw an Eagle pearched on Alexander's Head, a certain Pledge of Victory, and that They might ſee it as well as he. Conſider this, and reflect how much this muſt promote the Victory, without it being neceſſary, that the Soldiers ſhould really ſee it? They truſted to the Eyes of the Soothſayer; if they themſelves ſaw nothing, they imputed it to their bad Eye-ſight, or the ſmall time they had to look about for ſuch an Object in the Air. "Vates Ariſtander "alba veſte indutus, & dextra preferens lauream "militibus in pugnam intentis avem monſtravit, haud "dubium victoriæ auſpicium. Ingens ERGO alacri-"tas ac fiducia paulo ante territos accendit ad pug-"nam (9)." Plutarch obſerves, that Alexander lent a helping Hand to his Soothſayers (10), and, leaſt the Event ſhould juſtify Thoſe, who laughed at Ariſtander's Promiſe, that the City of Tyre ſhould be taken before the end of the Month, he ordered, that That Day, which was the laſt of the Month, ſhould, for the future, be counted as the Twenty eighth. He would give his Prophet time; who had nevertheleſs not much exceeded it; for the City was taken upon That Day, if we may believe Plutarch, an Author much to be ſuſpected in Theſe Matters. Let us not omit, that no one knew the Art of comforting his Maſter ſo well as our Ariſtander. He uſed very little Rhetoric in recovering him from the moſt oppreſſive Melancholy. A Dream ſerved him inſtead of every thing elſe, upon theſe Occaſions. Alexander, perfectly in Diſtraction at his having killed Clitus, had almoſt broke his Heart with groaning and weeping. It was feared, he would dye of Sorrow; the Door of his Chamber was forced open; he would hear no Body; but, no ſooner had Ariſtander put him in Mind of a Dream, which related to the Death of Clitus, and repreſented to him, that That unfortunate Man was from the beginning predeſtinated to This End, Our Prince receives immediate and perfect Conſolation. Ἀριστάνδρᾳ δὲ τῷ μάντεως ὑπομιμνήσκοντος αὐτὸν τήν τε ὄψιν ἣν εἶδεν περὶ τῆ Κλείτῳ, καὶ τὸ σημεῖον ὡς δὴ πάλαι καθημαρμένων τῶν ἔδοξεν ἐκδίδοναι (11). At quum vates Ariſtander viſum illi quod de Clito fuerat ei repreſentatum & prodigium ſubjiceret, jamdudum hæc in fatis fuiſſe, viſus eſt animum relaxare.

[B] By the great Succeſs of his Art.] They, who ſet up for Prediction, are happy, when they ſerve a Prince, whom the Providence of God deſigns for great Purpoſes. A thouſand human Reaſons induce them to foretel all manner of Succeſs, coſt what it will; and they have the pleaſure to ſee the Event juſtify their Temerity. This was Ariſtander's Caſe. He ventured to foretel Things at all Adventures; and Alexander's good Fortune ſtill ſaved his Credit. The Prophet had reaſon to be fond of ſuch a Conqueror; and the Conqueror was excuſable in truſting to a Man, who divined ſo rightly. I have formerly wondered, that Alexander ſhould be ſo ſuperſtitious; at preſent I ſhould wonder, if he had been otherwiſe; and it is ſurprizing to me, that his Reſpect for the Soothſayers was interrupted in the Time of his higheſt Proſperity (12). He could not be ignorant, that his good Fortune exceeded the Foreſight of his own Prudence, and the Greatneſs of his Courage. He muſt, then, neceſſarily have believed, that an inviſible and moſt powerful Virtue took particular Care of his Affairs: He muſt, therefore, morally ſpeaking, have been always diſpoſed to cultivate the Favour of That Power, by all thoſe Means, which the Soothſayers ſuggeſted to him; I ſay, the Soothſayers, whom he conſidered as the proper Judges of the Time, in which Fortune was in a good or bad Humour, and as Arbitrators of the Means to appeaſe This Goddeſs, and render her propitious. It would be found to be leſs ſtrange, that certain Princes ſhould ſlight the Counſels of thoſe, who are Directors of their Devotions: I ſay, certain Princes, who ſucceed in their Undertakings, only in proportion to the human Means, which they make uſe of to render theſe Enterprizes almoſt infallible; and who fail of Succeſs, whenever their Prudence has not taken all neceſſary Meaſures. They are the Antipodes of great Conquerors. But I confeſs there ſtill remains matter of Wonder in the Caſe. Could ſuch a Great Soul, as That of Alexander, repreſent God to itſelf under the Idea, which Superſtition gives of him? He had his lucid Intervals; as, when he diſmiſſed one of his Prophets from his Preſence, who came to diſſuade him from an Attack, for which every thing was prepared; telling him, that nothing could be more impertinent, in the midſt of ſuch Preparations, than a ſuperſtitious Soothſayer." "Si quis, inquit, arti tuæ intentum & exta "ſpectantem ſic interpellet, non dubium quin in-"commodus ac moleſtus videri tibi poſſit. Et cum "ille ita prorſus futurum reſpondiſſet; cenſeſne, in-"quit, tantas res non pecudum fibras ante oculos "habenti, ullum eſſe majus impedimentum quam va-"tem ſuperſtitione captum (13)? — Should any One "thus interrupt you, whilſt buſied in your Art, and "contemplating the Entrails, I queſtion not but you "would think him troubleſome and impertinent. To "which when the Soothſayer aſſented; The King ad-"ded; Do you think then, that to me, who have ſuch "great Things, not the Entrails of Beaſts, in view, "any thing can be a greater Interruption, than a ſu-"perſtitious Diviner." The Confidence, which he had in his good Fortune, hindred him ſometimes from ſubmitting to the Advice of Ariſtander. He found himſelf deſigned for great Things; an Opinion, which is one of the moſt powerful Springs of Providence;

(1) Curtius, lib. 4, cap. 2.
(2) Ibid. cap. 6.
(3) Ibid. lib. 5, cap. 4.
(4) Ibid. lib. 4, cap. 6.
(5) Ibid. lib. 7, cap. 7.
(6) Ibid.
(7) Plut. in Alex. pag. 683.
(8) Q. Curt. lib. 4, c. 13.
(9) Ibid. lib. 4, cap. 15.
(10) Διπτορημένον αὐτὸν ἰδὼν ὁ βασιλεὺς καὶ συμφιλοτιμούμενος (the Edition of Frankfort, 1620, reads it συμφιλοτιμούμενον, which quite alters the Senſe) ἀεὶ τοῖς μαντεύμασιν, ἀκέλευε. Cernens rex perplexum, favenſque ſemper vaticiniis vetuit. Plut. in Alex. pag. 675.
(11) Id. ib. pag. 694.
(12) See what has been cited from Q. Curtius in the foregoing Remark, Citation (5).
(13) Quint. Curtius, lib. 9, cap. 4.

Digitized by Google

a Lion. The other Soothſayers, upon this, adviſed him to have his Wife's Conduct more carefully obſerved [C]; but Ariſtander maintained, that the Dream ſignified, that the Queen was pregnant with a Son, who ſhould have the Heart of a Lion (a). She was, then, with Child of Alexander. King Philip pretended to expound the Dream himſelf [D], but could make nothing of it. Though Ariſtander had applied himſelf chiefly to the Interpretation of Dreams; and though he is One of the Authors, who have wrote the moſt learnedly on This Subject (b), yet he exerciſed his Talent on all kinds of Prodigies. If News was brought, that a Statue of Orpheus had ſweated, he would ſay, that it foreboded, that the Poets would one Day ſweat in ſinging the Victories of Alexander (c). If a Swallow fluttered about this Prince, or perched upon his Head, Ariſtander ſaid, it was a Sign of a Conſpiracy againſt the King; which, however, would be diſcovered (d). If, during the Preparations for the Siege of Tyre, Blood, iſſuing out of a Soldier's Loaf, diſmays the King; Ariſtander recovers him, and tells him, ſince the Blood proceeded from the internal parts of the Bread, it was a fatal Omen to the City, which was to be beſieged (e). On another Occaſion, he interpreted the Preſage of a Raven, which had let fall ſomething on Alexander's Head, and afterwards reſted upon a Tower, where it was taken (f). The Entrails of Victims were new Matter of Foreſight to This great Soothſayer (g); He explained likewiſe what the Actions of Men portended [E]. Probably, then, he was (a) Plut. in Alexand. init. p. 665.

(b) Artemidor. lib. 1. c. 33. p. 30.

(c) Plut. in Alexandro, pag. 671.

(d) Arrian. lib. 1. c. 8.

(e) Q. Curtius, lib. 4. cap. 2.

(f) Ib. c. 6.

(g) Quintus Curtius, lib. 7. cap. 7. Plut. in Alex. pag. 679.

dence; and by That he kept up the Courage of This Soothſayer. "Rex juſſum conſidere felicitati ſuæ remiſit. Sibi enim ad alia gloriam concedere Deos (14). —— The King ſent him back, bidding him truſt to His good Fortune, and telling him, that the Gods reſerved him for ſtill greater Glory."

(14) Quintus Curtius, lib. 7. cap. 7.

If any one thinks theſe Remarks too prolix, let him know, that I have my Reaſons for it. My deſign was to eaſe another Article (15), which abounds but too much with Matter. Four Articles are read with more Pleaſure than One, though That one be ſhorter than the other four. This obliges me to ſcatter many Things here and there, which naturally belong to one and the ſame Subject. What are we not obliged to do to humour a capricious Age?

(15) That of Alexander the Great.

[C] Adviſed him to have his Wife's Conduct more carefully obſerved.] Their Reaſons were at leaſt as good as Thoſe of Ariſtander; for thus the latter reaſoned. Men do not ſeal up an empty Box; the Queen muſt therefore be with Child; ſince the King has dreamt, that he ſealed up her Womb (16). But hear the Reaſons of the other Diviners. Men do not ſeal up a Box, when there is no danger, that any Perſon ſhould open it; it is ſealed only as a Precaution againſt Thoſe, who may approach it. The Queen's Box, then, is in danger, ſince the King has dreamt, that he ſealed up it: The Lyon, engraven on the Seal, ſignifies the Neceſſity there is of being upon his Guard. This imports, that the Place is beſieged, and begins to think of ſurrendring; and that, unleſs a ſtrong and faithful Garriſon be kept in it, the Beſiegers will quickly enter the Place. Cicero, to ridicule the Interpretation of Dreams, alledges the different Explications, which were given in much ſuch another Caſe. "Parere "quædam matrona cupiens, dubitans eſſetne prægnans, viſa eſt in quiete obſignatam habere naturam: "ad conjectorem retulit: Negavit eam, quoniam obſignata fuiſſe, concipere potuiſſe. At alter prægnantem eſſe dixit; nam inane nihil obſignari ſolere (17). "—— A certain Matron, who deſired to be a Mother, but was in doubt, whether ſhe was with Child or not, dream'd, that her Natural Parts were ſealed up. She applied to an Interpreter of Dreams; who told her ſhe could never conceive, as being ſealed up. But another aſſured her ſhe was actually pregnant, ſince it was not the Cuſtom to ſeal up an empty Thing." But it may be ſaid, that Ariſtander was more ſucceſsful in his Conjecture, and therefore argued better. I deny the Conſequence; a Perſon may be happier in his Conjectures, without being conſequently a Man of more Skill: And might not both Parties have Reaſon of their ſide? Does Pregnancy and Chaſtity always go together? Olympia might reſemble Julia a little, who ſaid, Nunquam niſi navi plena tello vectorem (18). We are going to ſee another Explication of this ſame Dream.

(16) Plut. in Alexandro.

(17) Cic. de Divin. lib. 2. cap. 70.

(18) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 2. cap. 5.

[D] King Philip pretended to expound this Dream himſelf.] Neither Plutarch, nor any other Pagan Author informs us of this; but a Father of the Church. I ſhall ſet down all he ſays concerning it; ſince ſeveral things may be learned from it. "Philippus Macedo nondum Pater Olympiadis Uxoris naturam "obſignaſſe viderat annulo. Leo erat ſignum: crediderat præcluſam genituram, opinor, quia leo ſemel pater eſt. Ariſtodemus vel Ariſtophon conjectans immo nihil vacuum obſignari, filium & quidem maximi impetus portendi. Alexandrum qui ſciunt leonem annuli cognoſcunt (19). —— Philip of Macedon, not yet a Father, dreamt, that he had ſealed up the Natural Parts of his Wife Olympia. The Seal was a Lion: he believed ſhe would never have a Child; I ſuppoſe, becauſe the Lion is but once a Father. Ariſtodemus, or Ariſtophon, interpreted the Dream to portend the Birth of a very brave Son. They, who know Alexander, know the Lion on the Seal." Hence it appears, 1. That the Seal, applied in a Dream to Olympia's Womb, made her Husband believe, that ſhe would have no Children. There was ſome ground for this Thought; and we may almoſt ſuppoſe, that Philip was One of thoſe Pagans of Europe, who, as it is ſaid, had read the Holy Scriptures: I ſay, this might be ſuppoſed, if the Ideas of common Senſe did not naturally enough lead to This Prince's Conjecture. But it is certain, that the Word of God repreſents the Barrenneſs of Women under This Idea. If the cloſing of the Womb repreſents, in Scripture, the Puniſhment of Sterility (20) inflicted by God, the opening of it repreſents the Bleſſing, by which he cauſes This Evil to ceaſe (21). In the Second Place, it appears, that Tertullian made no Reflexion on This Idea, which the Scripture furniſhes, and which Nature itſelf dictates. He conſiders only the Lyon engraved on the Seal, and believes, that Philip built all his Conjecture on That. Tertullian ſuppoſes wrong in this Place, and concludes ill. It is falſe, that the Lyon is but once a Father (22); and, beſides, would not a Man who thought ſo, be ridiculous in arguing from it, that he ſhould never have a Child; he ought at leaſt to conclude that he ſhould have One. It appears, in the Third Place, that Tertullian had forgot the Name of the Soothſayer, who hit upon the beſt Explication; he does not know, whether he ought to call him Ariſtophon, or Ariſtodemus. He remembered only the two firſt Syllables of his Name, and could not properly ſupply the reſt; in a word, he had forgotten the Name of Ariſtander. In the Fourth Place, we ſee that he was very well ſatisfied with the Explication of the Dream: It is One of Thoſe, which he alledges, to prove the Excellency of the Soul. Let us finiſh this Comment, with obſerving, that, perhaps, King Philip contended a long time with his Diviners for the Explication, which he gave of his own Dream; and perhaps Ariſtander ſaid to him, upon this Occaſion, what a Muſician ſaid, one Day, to the ſame Prince, in a like Caſe; God forbid, that your Majeſty ſhould ever be ſo unhappy, as to underſtand theſe things better than myſelf. Μη γένοιτο σοι ὅτως, ὦ βασιλεῦ, κακῶς, ἵνα ἐμοῦ ταῦτα βέλτιον εἰδῇς (23). Abſit, O Rex, ut eo tu infortunio devolvare, ut harum rerum ſcientia me ſis prior.

(19) Tertul. de Anima. cap. 40.

(20) Geneſ. xx. 18.

(21) Ibid. chap. xxx, ver. 22. See alſo chap. xxix, ver. 31.

(22) See the Notes of Rigaltius on this Paſſage of Tertullian.

(23) Plut. de diſcrim Adulat. & Amici, pag. 67.

[E] He explained likewiſe what the Actions of Men portended.] For Example; he foretold, that Lyſimachus, one of Alexander's Lifeguard, ſhould attain to Royalty, but not without much Difficulty (24). His Reaſon was This: Alexander being mounted on a good Horſe, (24) Appian. in Syriacis.

Digitized by Google

was the Author of the Book, mentioned by Pliny, so full of prodigious Events [F]. But, as for the Books of Agriculture, mentioned by Varro and Columella (b), I am apt to believe they were written by another ARISTANDER, especially since Varro has given the Sirname of Athenian to the Author of them. Our Aristander survived the King his Master; and his Remonstrances brought the People in good earnest to think of burying him. I know not whether this Particular has been touched upon by any other than Ælian, who mentions it in the last Chapter of the twelfth Book of his Various History.

(b) Father Hardouin, in Indice Auctorum, takes for the same Aristander Him mentioned by Varro, and Columella, and Him mentioned by Pliny.

Horse, Lysimachus, who was not able any longer to follow him on foot, had taken hold of the Horse's Tail, that he might not quit his Master. Alexander had, by chance, wounded him in the Forehead with his Lance, and having, for want of Linnen, made use of his Diadem to bind up the Wound, it happened, that the Diadem was stained with Blood: And upon this Aristander grounded his Prediction.

[F] Probably he was the Author of the Book, mentioned by Pliny, so full of prodigious Events.] These are his Words: "Prodigio autem fiunt ex dulcibus acerba poma, aut dulcia ex acerbis; gravi ostento cum in deteriora mutantur ex olea in oleastrum, ex candida uva & fico in nigras: ut Laodiceæ, Xerxis adventu, platano in oleam mutata: qualibus ostentis Aristandri apud Græcos volumen scatet; apud nos vero C. Epidii Commentarii, in quibus arbores locutæ quoque reperiuntur (25). —— It is a Prodigy, when bitter Apples become sweet, or sweet bitter; it is of dire Portent, when things are changed into worse, The Olive into the wild Olive, or the white Grape or Fig into black; as at Laodicea, upon the Arrival of Xerxes, the Plane-Tree was changed into an Olive; with which kind of Prodigies the Work of Aristander, among the Greeks, abounds; among our own Authors, the Commentaries of Caius Epidius, in which we read even of speaking Trees." Compare with this the Passage of Cicero concerning the Inhabitants of Telmessus, mentioned in the Article of That City (26), and wonder at the incredible Facility of the Ancient Pagans in multiplying Prodigies.

(25) Plin. lib. 17, cap. 25.

(26) Remark [C].

ARISTARCHUS, a Greek Philosopher, and Native of Samos, was one of the first, who maintained, that the Earth turned upon it's Center, and described annually a Circle round the Sun [A]. He invented one kind of Sun-Dials (a). It is not constantly agreed, at what Time he lived. It is only certainly known, that he was born before the Death of Archimedes [B]. There are extant of his Works only A Treatise of the Magnitude and Distance of the Sun and Moon, translated into Latin, and commented on, by Frideric Commandin, and published with the Explications of Pappus, in the Year 1572. Dr Wallis published it in Greek, with the Latin Version of Commandin, in 1688, and inserted it in the third Tome of his Mathematical Works, printed at Oxford, in 1699. The System of the World, which appeared under his Name, is a Work of Roberval (b). We shall remark a Fault, which has crept into the Text of Plutarch (c).

(a) Vitruv. lib. 9, cap. 9.

(b) See Menage, in Diog. Laërt. lib. 8, n. 85, pag. 389.

(c) In Remark [A], Citation (4).

[A] Was one of the first, who maintained, that the Earth turned upon it's Center, and described annually a Circle round the Sun.] Sextus Empiricus, speaking of the Hypothesis of the Motion of the Earth, intimates plainly, that Aristarchus was the chief Inventor of it; for he mentions only Him. Οἱ γε μὲν τὴν τῷ κόσμῳ κίνησιν ἀνέλοντες, τὴν δὲ γῆν κινεῖσθαι δοξάσαντες, ὡς ὁ περὶ Ἀρίσαρχον τὸν μαθηματικὸν, ἐκωλύοντο νοεῖν χρόνον (1). —— They, who denied the Motion of the World, but believed, that the Earth moved, as Aristarchus the Mathematician, could easily form an Idea of Time. Plutarch, intending to clear up a Thought of Plato, and, considering with himself, whether That Philosopher did not believe the Motion of the World, adds, That This Opinion was afterwards That of Aristarchus and Seleucus; and that Aristarchus taught it Hypothetically, and Seleucus Dogmatically. Ὡς ὕστερον Ἀρίσαρχος καὶ Σέλευκος ἀπεδείκνυσαν· ὁ μὲν ὑποτιθέμενος μόνον· ὁ δὲ Σέλευκος, καὶ ἀποραινόμενος (2). Ut postmodo Aristarchus & Seleucus ostenderunt. Sane hoc ille ita ut supponeret tantum, hic etiam pronuntians. This is intimating, that Aristarchus was looked upon as the Author of this Opinion. Archimedes intimates this more plainly. These are his Words: Ταῦτα γὰρ ἐν ταῖς γεγραμμέναις παρὰ τῶν Ἀστρολόγων διαιρήσας Ἀρίσαρχος ὁ Σάμιος, ὑποθέσεών τινων ἐξέδωκεν γράμματα, ἐν αἷς, ἐκ τῶν ὑποκειμένων συμβαίνει τὸν κόσμον πολλαπλάσιον εἶναι τοῦ νῦν εἰρημένου· ὑποτίθεται γὰρ τοὺς μὲν ἀπλανεῖς τῶν ἄστρων, καὶ τὸν ἥλιον, μένειν ἀκίνητον. τὴν δὲ γῆν περιφέρεσθαι περὶ τὸν ἥλιον, κατὰ κύκλου περιφέρειαν, ὃς ἐστιν ἐν μέσῳ τῷ δρόμῳ κείμενος (3). —— Aristarchus the Samian, confuting these Notions of the Astrologers, laid down certain Positions; from whence it follows, that the World is much larger, than what we just now mentioned; for he lays it down, that the fixed Stars, and the Sun, are immoveable; and that the Earth is carried round the Sun, in the Circumference of a Circle. Probably the Transcribers have falsified the Passage of Plutarch, where we read, that Aristarchus pretended, that Greece ought to have entered a Process against Cleanthes for Irreligion, in believing the Motion of the Earth. Μόνον (εἶπεν) ὦ τὰν, μὴ κρίσιν ἡμῖν ἀσεβείας ἐπαγαγεῖν, ὥσπερ Ἀρίσαρχος ἔδει Κλεάνθη τὸν Σάμιον ἀσεβείας περικαλεῖσθαι τοὺς Ἕλληνας, ὡς κινοῦντα τὸ κόσμου τὴν ἑστίαν, ὅτι φαινόμενα σώζειν ἀνὴρ ἐπειράτο, μένειν τὸν οὐρανὸν ὑποτιθέμενος, ἐξελίττεσθαι δὲ καθ' ὁξῦν κύκλου τὴν γῆν ἅμα καὶ περὶ τὸν αὐτῆς ἄξονα δινουμένην (4). —— Bring not an Action of Impiety against us, as Aristarchus thought Greece ought to have done against Cleanthes the Samian, as a Disturber of the Lares of the Universe; For he endeavoured to preserve the Appearances of the Heavenly Bodies, by supposing, that the Heavens themselves stood still; but that the Earth revolved in an Oblique Circle, and at the same Time round it's own Axis. The Transcribers seem to me to have transposed the Names; it should be read; Cleanthes was of Opinion, that Greece ought to have tried Aristarchus the Samian for Irreligion, &c. This is a Conjecture of Gassendus (5), and a Correction, which Mr Menage adopts as certain. In verbis Plutarchi, says he (6), legendum omnino ὥσπερ Ἀρίσαρχον τὸν Σάμιον ἔδει Κλεάνθης δεῖν ἀσέβειας περικαλεῖσθαι τοὺς Ἕλληνας. Amist did not perceive this Fault.

(1) Sextus Empiricus adversus Mathem. pag. 410. Mr Menage in Diog. Laërt. lib. 8, n. 85, cites this Passage twice in the same Page, first as Sextus Empiricus's, and secondly as Pyrrho's.

(2) Plut. in Quæst. Plat. p. 1006, C.

(3) Archimedes in Psammite, pag. 410, apud Menagium, in Diog. Laërt. lib. 8, pag. 389.

(4) Plut. de facie in Orbe Lunæ, pag. 922, F.

(5) Gassend. Phys. sect. 2, lib. 3, cap. 5, pag. 617, Tom. 1, Oper.

(6) Menage, ubi supra.

[B] It is not constantly agreed, at what Time he lived; it is only certainly known, that he was born before Archimedes's Death.] The Words, I have quoted (7), prove, that, at the latest, our Aristarchus could be but cotemporary with Archimedes. Now we know, that Archimedes lost his Life, when Syracuse was taken by the Romans, in the First Year of the CXLII Olympiad, during the Second Punic War. Observe, that, according to Plutarch, quoted above, Timeus the Locrian lived before Aristarchus; for the Sentiment, which he would have explained, is found in Plato, as if Timeus had spoken it in Conversation. Now, since Plato was a Disciple of This Timeus (8), and That, after having seen Egypt; we must conclude, that, if Plutarch has well observed Chronology, Aristarchus flourished after Plato. We are sure, then, that he did not flourish after Archimedes, nor before Plato; and I believe it is not easy to fix on any thing more exact. Blancanus has placed Aristarchus Two Centuries earlier, than Hipparchus, and has placed the latter an Hundred Years after the Death of Alexander, that is, an Hundred Years after the First Year of the CXIVth Olympiad (9). He believed, then, that Aristarchus flourished about the LXXXIXth Olympiad,

(7) In the foregoing Remark.

(8) Cicer. de Finib. lib. 5, c. 29. & Tuscul. lib. 1.

(9) Blanc. in Mathematicor. Chronol. ad calcem libri de Arist. locis Mathem. pag. 46, 49.

Digitized by Google

Olympiad, a little after the Birth of Plato. This does not agree with the Paſſage of Plutarch, which I have alledged. Simler's Opinion agrees with it as little. That Author makes Ariſtarchus flouriſh in the Reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, which reached from the firſt Year of the LXXIXth Olympiad to the laſt Year of the LXXXVIIIth (10). Libertus Fromondus is yet more oppoſite to Plutarch's Opinion; ſince he knew not whether Ariſtarchus preceeded, or followed, Pythagoras (11). I believe Voſſius (12) would have confuted This Uncertainty by the Authority of Plutarch, if he had remembred the Words I have quoted. John Stadius believes, that Ariſtarchus ſurvived Archimedes; for he makes him flouriſh in the CXLIVth Olympiad (13). Note, that Vitruvius, naming ſome Mathematicians, who were Inventors, places Ariſtarchus in the firſt Rank (14). If this were the Rule to judge by, he muſt be ſuppoſed later than Philolaus, and Archytas of Tarentum.

(10) Simler. in Epit. Bibl. Geſneri.

(11) Lib. Fromond. de Orbe Terræ Immobili, pag. 1. He has entituled this Book Ant-Ariſtarchus.

(12) Voſſ. de Scient. Math. pag. 157.

(13) Joh. Stadius, in Præf. Tabularum Bergenſium, apud Voſſ. ubi ſupra.

(14) Vitruvius, de Architect. lib. 1, cap. 1.

ARISTARCHUS, a famous Grammarian, was born in Samothracia, and choſe the City of Alexandria for his adopted Country (a). He was much eſteemed by Ptolomy Philometor, who entruſted him with the Education of his Son [A]. He applied himſelf diligently to Criticiſm, and reviſed Homer's Poems with incredible Exactneſs, but a little too magiſterially; for, whenever a Verſe diſpleaſed him, he treated it as ſuppoſititious [B]. This Edition of Homer was much eſteemed, as alſo much

(a) Ἀριστάρχος μὲν θέσει, τῇ δὲ φύσει Σαμοθρᾴξ.

[A] Ptolomy Philometor entruſted him with the Education of his Son.] This appears plain in the Words of Suidas. Γέγονε, ſays he (1), καὶ τὴν ρυς ὀλυμπιάδα, ἐπὶ Πτολεμαίου τοῦ Φιλομήτορος, ᾧ καὶ τὸν υἱὸν ἐπαίδευσεν. He lived in the CLVIth Olympiad, in the Reign of Ptolomy Philometor, whoſe Son he alſo educated. The Olympiad, which he ſpecifies, anſwers very well to the Reign of This Ptolomy; but This however may be ſaid, that it does not appear, that this Prince had any Sons: Hiſtorians give him but one Daughter, and make his Brother ſucceed him. This Objection is of no force; for, on the one ſide, if the Son, whom he cauſed to be inſtructed by our Ariſtarchus, died in his Youth, the Hiſtorians might think, that there was no need of mentioning him; on the other hand, it is falſe, that They are all ſilent in the Matter. Juſtin gives Ptolomy Philometor a Son; and ſays likewiſe, that Ptolomy, his Uncle, cauſed him to be put to death (2). The learned Leo Allatius has not taken notice of this; he will have it, that the Diſciple, which Suidas gives Ariſtarchus, was the ſecond Ptolomy Evergetes: Cujus (Ptolomæi Philometoris) filium ſecundum Evergetem erudiit, Olympiade CLVI, ut Suidas tradit (3). This is wrong; the ſecond Ptolomy Evergetes was the Brother, and not the Son, of Ptolomy Philometor. Voſſius was no leſs miſtaken, in believing, that Ptolomy Philometor made choice of Ariſtarchus for Preceptor to his Son Ptolomy Lathyrus (4); he ſhould have known, that Ptolomy Lathyrus, or Latharus, was the Son of the ſecond Ptolomy Evergetes. What Suidas obſerves, that Ariſtarchus was a Diſciple of Ariſtophanes, the Byzantian, does not furniſh a reaſonable Objection; for it is well known, that a very great Error has crept into That Paſſage of Suidas, where we read, that Ariſtophanes of Byzantium flouriſhed in the XLVth Olympiad; it ſhould be read the CXLVth Olympiad; as Allatius, and Jonſius, have obſerved (5). "Ariſtophanis meminit Suidas, in quo obiter Libriariorum "error in Olympiade notandus eſt. Ipſe namque "habet, Γέγονε δὲ κατὰ τὴν με Ολυμπιάδα, "quæ Hieronymus Wolphius vertit, Vixit Olympiade "XLV, cum omnino ſcribendum ſit ρμέ, id eſt, "CXLV (6). - - - - - Suidas mentions Ariſtophanes, "in which Author, by the way, a Miſtake of the "Tranſcribers, with regard to the Olympiad, deſerves "to be taken notice of. For Suidas has it Γέγονε "δὲ καὶ με Ὀλυμπιάδα, which Jerom Wolfius renders by Vixit Olympiade XLV (he lived "in the XLVth Olympiad); whereas it ought certainly to be red ρμέ. i. e. 145. The Anonymous Author of the Deſcription of the Olympiads places Ariſtophanes the Byzantian, under this Olympiad. Suidas, in ſaying, that the ſame Ariſtophanes was, in his Youth, a Diſciple of Callimachus, does not contradict this. Μαθητὴς Καλλιμάχου καὶ Ζηνοδότου, ἀλλὰ τοῦ μὲν νέος, τοῦ δὲ παῖς ἤκουσε (7). A Diſciple of Callimachus and Zenodotus, but of the former in his Youth, of the latter in his Childhood. A Perſon, who flouriſhed in the CXLVth Olympiad, might have been a Diſciple of Callimachus; for That Poet lived 'till the Reign of Ptolomy Evergetes, the Son of Ptolomy Philadelphus; and we know, that Ptolomy Evergetes reigned to the end of the CXXXIXth Olympiad. Now, if Ariſtarchus was a Diſciple of Ariſtophanes the Byzantian, it is pointing out the exact time, in which he flouriſhed, to place him, as Suidas has done, in the CLVIth Olympiad. They, who will weigh theſe ſeveral Particulars, will find ſome Difficulty in aſſenting to this Propoſition: Ariſtarchus ——— lived in the time of Ptolomy Philadelphus, at the ſame time with Callimachus (8). The learned Heinſius obſerves, that ſome Perſons ſay this (9); and, ſince he does not cenſure them, we may ſuppoſe, that he approves of their Opinion. He would have done better to have condemned it. Faber is more to be credited in this, than his Son-in-law: He places Ariſtarchus in the Reign of Ptolomy Philometor (10). See the Remark [G], where we ſhall prove the Truth of This Opinion, from the Conſideration, that Crates and Ariſtarchus were Cotemporaries. A Paſſage of Athenæus might induce ſome to believe, that our Critic lived under Ptolomy Philadelphus; it is, where Athenæus relates, that Ptolomy Evergetes was one of Ariſtarchus's Diſciples (11). For want of examining the whole, one might be perſuaded, that This Ptolomy Evergetes was the Son of Ptolomy Philadelphus; but it is certain, that he muſt be taken for Ptolomy Phyſcon (12), Brother of Philometor. In effect, Athenæus ſpeaks of one Ptolomy, who wrote Books, and who muſt neceſſarily be the ſame with Him, whom he cites in the twelfth Book (13), and whom he reckons the ſeventh King of Egypt.

There are ſtill farther Proofs againſt Mr Dacier's Opinion. It is well known, that Demetrius Scepſius (14) lived at the ſame time with Ariſtarchus. This Strabo teſtifies: Κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον γεγονὼς Κράτητι καὶ Ἀριστάρχῳ (15), æqualis Cratetis & Ariſtarchi. Voſſius did not conſider theſe Words with Attention, when he ſaid, that Strabo affirms, that Demetrius Scepſius was a Diſciple of Crates and Ariſtarchus (16). Now This Demetrius was Cotemporary with one Metrodorus (17), whom Mithridates cauſed to be put to death in the Year of Rome 681 (18). Judge then, whether One, who flouriſhed under Ptolomy Philadelphus, could be cotemporary with This Metrodorus. The Death of That Ptolomy falls in with the Year of Rome 506. Note, that it may be collected from Diogenes Laërtius, that Demetrius was elder than Metrodorus, and, if ſo, there is no retorting the Reaſon; for it cannot be ſaid, that I prove too much. Obſerve likewiſe, that the Son of a Diſciple of Ariſtarchus was ſtill living (19), when Strabo was old enough to aſſiſt at the public Lectures (20). Now, ſince Strabo lived to Tiberius's Time, he could not hear the Lectures of the Son of one of Ariſtarchus's Diſciples, if Ariſtarchus flouriſhed under Ptolomy Philadelphus.

[B] Whenever a Verſe diſpleaſed him, he treated it as ſuppoſititious.] Cicero certifies this in theſe Words: "Si, ut ſcribis, eæ litteræ non fuerunt diſertæ, ſcito "meas non fuiſſe. Ut enim Ariſtarchus Homeri ver"ſum negat, quem non probat, ſic tu (libet enim mihi "jocari) quod diſertum non erit, ne putaris meum "(21). - - - - - If, as you write, thoſe Letters were "inelegant, be ſure they were not mine. For, as "Ariſtarchus denied thoſe Verſes, which did not "pleaſe him, to be Homer's, ſo I deſire, that what "is not elegant (allow me to jeſt) you would believe "not to be mine." To this may be added another Paſſage of the ſame Author: "Niſi forte ſcire vis, me "inter Niciam noſtrum & Vidium judicem eſſe. Pro"ſert

(1) Suidas in Ἀρίσταρχος.

(2) Juſtin. lib. 38, c. 8.

(3) Leo Allatius, de Patria Homeri, pag. 103, 104.

(4) Voſſ. de Poëtis Græcis, pag. 6. Note, that, in the 21st Chapter of the firſt Book, De Hiſtoricis Græcis, he ſays, that Ptolomy Evergetes, the ſecond, was Son to Philometor.

(5) Jonſ. de Script. Hiſt. Philoſ. pag. 166, 167.

(6) Allat. ubi ſupra, pag. 103.

(7) Suidas in Ἀριστοφάνης. Portus has tranſlated theſe Words wrong: Hunc quidem, ſays he, adoleſcens, illum vero puer audivit.

(8) Dacier's Remarks on Horace's Art of Poetry, ver. 430, pag. 371. Edit. Holl.

(9) Heinſius, in Prolegomenis Ariſtarchi Sacri, fol. 3.

(10) Faber's Lives of the Greek Poets, pag. 7.

(11) Athen. lib. 2, ſub finem, pag. 71. B.

(12) The ſame as the ſecond Evergetes.

(13) Pag. 549. He cites him in ſeveral other Places.

(14) That is, a Native of Scepſis, a City of Myſia.

(15) Strabo, lib. 13, pag. 419.

(16) Voſſ. de Hiſtor. Græcis, pag. 135.

(17) Diog. Laërt. lib. 5, n. 84, ſays, that Demetrius Scepſius preferred his Countryman Metrodorus. It is he, whom Mithridates put to Death.

(18) Plut. in Lucullo, pag. 506. See alſo Strabo, lib. 13, pag. 419, who leaves it undecided, whether Mithridates put him to Death.

(19) His Name was Ariſtodemus; His Father, whoſe Name was Menecrates, had been the Diſciple of Ariſtarchus. See Strabo, lib. 14, pag. 447.

(20) Strabo, ibid.

(21) Cicero, Epiſt. 11, ad Famil. lib. 3, pag. 169.

Digitized by Google

much criticiſed (b). He play'd the Critic upon Pindar (c), and Aratus (d), and other Poets; and it is not true, that, in order to criticiſe on every one, without Fear of being cenſured in his Turn, he had the Addreſs not to publiſh any thing of his own

(b) See Remark [B].

(c) See the Anti Baillet Tom. 1. p. 80, 81.

(d) See Voſſ. de Scient. Mathem. pag. 156.

" fert alter (ut opinor) duobus verſiculis expenſum " Niciæ: alter Ariſtarchus hos ὀβελίζει. Ego, tam- " quam criticus antiquus, judicaturus ſum, utrum ſint

(22) Id. ib. lib. 9. Epiſt. 10. pag. 23, 24.

" τὰ ποιητᾶ, an παρεμβεβλημένοι (22). —— Unleſs, perhaps, you would know, that I am Umpire " between our Friend Nicias and Vidius. The one " acknowledges certain Verſes to be genuine, the other, " like an Ariſtarchus, condemns them. I, as ſome " ancient Critic, am to decide, whether they really " are the Poet's, or are ſpurious." It is ſaid, that Ariſtarchus marked, over againſt the Verſes, which he condemned as ſpurious, the Figure of a Spit, from whence it came, that ὀβελίζειν ſignifies to condemn. " Tranſlatum ab Ariſtarcho, qui Homeri carmina in " corpus redegit, atque in libros digeſſit, verſus no- " thos, hoc eſt adulterinos & ſubdititios, qui non " videntur ſapere venam illam Homericam, ὀβελίσ- " κοις, id eſt minutis verubus prænotatis, damnans: " contra, qui viderentur inſignes ac genuini ἀστε- ρίσκοις, id eſt ſtellis, illuſtrans (23). ------ Borrowed from Ariſtarchus, who reduced the Poems of " Homer into a Body, and divided them into Books; condemning thoſe Verſes as ſpurious, which ſeemed " not to reliſh of Homer's Vein, by prefixing an obe- " liſk, or Spit; on the contrary diſtinguiſhing thoſe, " which appeared to be excellent and genuine, with an " Aſterisk, or little Star." See Auſonius's Poem, entituled Ludus ſeptem Sapientum; where he deſires a rigorous Cenſure of his Poems from Drepanius Pacatus. He would be treated, as Ariſtarchus had treated Homer, and expreſſes himſelf thus:

(23) Eraſm. Adag. chil. 2. cent. 5. n. 57. pag. 178.

Mæonio qualem cultum quæſivit Homero
Cenſor Ariſtarchus, normaque Zenodoti.
Pone obelos igitur ſpuriorum ſtigmata vatum,
Palmas non culpas eſſe putabo meas (24).

(24) Auſon. in Ludo ſeptem Sapientum, circa init. p. 265.

As Ariſtarchus and Zenodotus poliſhed Homer; ſo affix the Spits, the Brands of ſpurious Poets; I eſteem them as my Palms, not as my Faults.

It is thought, that he means Ariſtarchus in the laſt of theſe two Verſes.

Quique Sacri lacerum collegit corpus Homeri,
Quique notas ſpuriis verſibus appoſuit (25).

(25) Id. Epiſt. 18. p. 649.

He, who collected the ſcattered Poems of Homer, and he who branded the ſpurious Verſes.

Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman affirm, in their Dictionaries, that Ælian obſerves, that Ariſtarchus's Criticiſms were ſo exact, that, whenever he condemned a Verſe, as not being Homer's, it was looked upon, of courſe, as ſuppoſititious. Ælianus tradit hunc tam caſtigato fuiſſe judicio, ut Homeri verſus non putaretur, quem ipſe non probaſſet. Quenſtedt affirms the ſame thing (26). I do not think Ælian ſays ſo, and, if he did, he muſt have been miſtaken; for we learn from Athenæus, that the Taſte of This great Critic (27) was often condemned; ſome Verſes of Homer, which he rejected, were ſtill received, and he and his Reaſons laughed at. His Confidence alone was ſufficient to bring his Judgment in queſtion: He decided, in ſome Caſes, that ſuch and ſuch Verſes of the Iliad ought to be transferred to the Odyſſey (28). Allatius was not ignorant, that the Criticiſms of Ariſtarchus were often cenſured; and, upon this Occaſion, quotes Athenæus (29), Plutarch, and the Scholiaſt of Homer. He informs us, that the Grammarian Ptolomy of Aſcalon publiſhed a Book de Ariſtarchi correctione in Odyſſæa (30), and that Zenodotus of Alexandria was ſent for to reviſe Ariſtarchus's Criticiſms. " Zenodotus alter Alexandri- " nus ideo advocatus eſt, ut de reprobatis ab Ari- " ſtarcho Homericis carminibus judicium ferret (31)." Idem (Suidas); Ζηνόδοτος Ἀλεξανδρεὺς γραμματικὸς ὁ ἐν ἄστει κληθεὶς πρὸς τὰ ὑπ' Ἀριστάρχου ἀθετούμενα τῆ Ποιητῆ. Nevertheleſs, he affirms, that Antiquity paid ſo great regard to Ariſtarchus's Judgment, that it was believed, that thoſe Verſes, which diſpleaſed him, were not really Homer's. Ariſtarchi porro judicium adeo probavit antiquitas, ut Homeri verſus non putarentur, quos ipſe non probaret (32). Does not this betray great want of Judgment? Elias Vinetus deſerves Cenſure upon this Occaſion: " Cujus (Ariſtarchi), ſays he, veteres " tanti fecerant judicium, ut, quem non probaret, " Homeri verſum non crederent. Ita Cicero, Sui- " das, Eraſmus (33). ------ The Ancients had ſo " great a Regard for Ariſtarchus's Judgment, that " they looked upon whatever Verſe he diſapproved " of not to have been Homer's; as we find in Ci- " cero, Suidas, and Eraſmus." It is falſe, that Cicero ſays any ſuch thing (34); he only tells us, that Ariſtarchus took thoſe alone for Homer's Verſes, which he himſelf approved of. Nor does Suidas ſay, what Vinetus imputes to him. I can affirm the ſame of Eraſmus, in regard to the Place, from whence I have borrowed what has been cited above (35). Saldenus, deſiring to make ſome Alteration in the Words of Charles Stephens, which I have quoted, has greatly offended againſt the Reaſoning Part. He has not quoted Ælian, nor has he affirmed, that Ariſtarchus's Criticiſm was exact; he is ſatisfied with ſaying, that This Cenſor believed it ſo. Thus far all is well; he deſerts Charles Stephens upon a falſe Quotation, and will anſwer but for one thing, which is very probable, to wit, that the Corrector of Homer thought himſelf a very able Man; but here is the Miſchief of it: From this advantageous Opinion, which he had of his own Wit, Saldenus concludes, that Antiquity received none for Homer's Verſes, but ſuch as pleaſed Ariſtarchus. This is a falſe Inference. Grammaticus ille, qui hoc nomen (Ariſtarchi) geſſit, tam caſtigato ſe putavit eſſe judicio, ut Homeri verſus nullus haberetur, quem ipſe non probaret (36). Thus Saldenus argues; and, to confirm his Argument, he cites us the Words, where Cicero ſays, that Ariſtarchus rejected all the Verſes of Homer, which were not to his Taſte, as ſuppoſititious. This Proof is no better, than the Poſition itſelf, which was to be proved. I have read, in the Commentary of a modern Author, that Ariſtarchus had ſo refined and penetrating a Genius for Criticiſm, that he was generally called the Prophet, or Diviner, from his wonderful Sagacity (37). I have been ſurprized not to find any Footſteps of this Elogy in a vaſt number of Writers, whom I have run over, in the Places, where this Grammarian is mentioned. At laſt I found, in a Note of Corradus on Cicero's Epiſtles, the following Words: Hunc illum (Ariſtarchum) μάντιν ἐκάλει Παναίτιος ὁ Ῥόδιος φιλόσοφος διὰ τὸ ῥᾳδίως καταμαντεύεσθαι τῆς τῶν ποιημάτων διανοίας. Athen. lib. 14. (38). I have ſearched in vain in the fourteenth Book of Athenæus. However it be, there is a great Difference between This Quotation of Corradus, and That of Mr Dacier. The Greek Words ſignify only, that Panetius gave the Name of Diviner to our Ariſtarchus; and not that it was the common Style of Antiquity.

(26) Quenſtedt. de Patriis Viror. Illuſtr. pag. 433.

(27) See Athenæus, l. 4. paſſim, & ibi Caſaub. item lib. 5. p. 188, 189. See alſo Plutarch de audiendis Poët. pag. 26.

(28) Athen. lib. 4, c. 28, pag. 180.

(29) He cites only the 5*th Book of* Athenæus.

(30) Ἔγραψε περὶ τῆς ἐν Ὀδυσσείᾳ Ἀριστάρχου διορθώσεως. Suidas, apud Allatium, de Patria Homeri, p. 105.

(31) Id. ib.

(32) Id. ib. pag. 104.

(33) Elias Vinetus, in Auſonii Ludum ſeptem Sapientum, init. p. 265.

(34) See, above, Citation (21), the Words of Cicero.

(35) Citation (23).

(36) Saldenus de Libris, p. 388.

(37) Dacier's Remarks on Horace's Art of Poetry, p. 371, 372.

(38) Corradus, in Epiſt. 14. Ciceron. ad Atticum, lib. 1.

Note, that it is the Opinion of many, that Ariſtarchus was He, who divided each of Homer's Great Works into as many Books, as there are Letters in the Alphabet, and inſcribed each Book with a particular Letter. " Plutarch. lib. de Homero. Ilia- " dem & Odyſſeam Homeri ab Ariſtarcho Gramma- " tico in numerum librorum diviſam ad ordinem & " numerum Græcarum literarum. Euſtathius in Iliad. " A. tradit, Ariſtarchum & Zenodotum confuſum an- " tea Homeri opus digeſſiſſe in certos libros, eoſque " literis diſtinxiſſe. Unde non ſolùm primus tàm " Odyſſeæ, quàm Iliadis, liber α vocatur, ſecundus β " & ſic deinceps; Verum etiam ipſum opus γράμ- " μα nominatur. Et ſane verum eſt, hanc per li- " teras diviſionem recentiorem. Nam antiqui nun- " quam eâ uſi, ut patet ex Ariſtotele de Poëtica, Cap. " 24. (39). —— Plutarch, in his Book de Homero, " tells us, that the Iliad and Odyſſey of Homer were " divided by Ariſtarchus, the Grammarian, into a Num- " ber of Books, anſwering to the Order and Number of " the Greek Letters. Euſtathius, upon the firſt Iliad, " informs us, that Ariſtarchus and Zenodotus digeſted " the Work of Homer, which was before confuſed, " into (39) Joannes à Wower de Polymathia, cap. 18. pag. 153, 154.

Digitized by Google

own [C]. They, who make him cotemporary with Piſiſtratus, are groſly miſtaken [D]. His Reputation continued a long time. Cicero and Horace employed his Name, when they would deſcribe a too rigid Critic [E]. Some aſcribe to him a Thought, which

" into a certain Number of Books, and diſtinguiſhed " them by Letters. Whence it is, that not only the " firſt Books both of the Iliad and Odyſſey are called " A, the ſecond B, and ſo on; but the whole Work is " ſtyled Γράμματα, The Letters. And indeed This " Diviſion by Letters is of modern Date. For the " Ancients never made uſe of it, as appears from " Ariſtotle, De Poëtica, Cap. 24."

[C] It is not true, that, in order to criticiſe on every One, without Fear of being cenſured in his Turn, he had the Addreſs not to publiſh any Thing of his own.] Saldenus, under the borrowed Name of Chriſtianus Liberius, tells an untruth, when he ſays, " Sic Ari- " ſtarchus Grammaticus nullum non reprehendebat, " nihil ipſe ſcribens ne ab aliis reprehendi poſſet (40). " —— Thus Ariſtarchus the Grammarian cenſured " every one; but publiſhed nothing himſelf, for fear of " being cenſured by others." I know not whether he relates it with the ſame Correctives, as in the Work, which he publiſhed in his own Name, in 1688. If he has, Mr Menage has not cited him juſtly; for he has dropped an Eſſential Part of the Paſſage, which he reports. Theſe are Saldenus's Words, in the Work, which he publiſhed, in 1688. " Sicuti Ari- " ſtarchus Grammaticus neminem non reprehendebat, " nihil interim ipſe ſcribens, ne reprehendi ab aliis poſſet " ut nonnulli volunt: licet alii ſint, ac plerique qui- " dem, qui πολυγράφοις ipſum accenſent, ut ſupra " diximus (41). —— As Ariſtarchus the Grammarian " cenſured every one; but publiſhed nothing himſelf, " leſt he ſhould be cenſured by others; as ſome will " have it; tho' others reckon him among the Volumi- " nous Writers; as I have obſerved above. We may add, upon this Occaſion, what Mr Faber addreſſed to a Journaliſt (42). If you had publiſhed any thing of your own, we ſhould be upon the Square; but, as the Caſe ſtands, you play with too much advantage; it is mockery to bett a Farthing againſt a Guinea; I know not who will play with you upon ſuch Terms.

(40) Chriſtianus Liberius, in Bibliophilia, pag. 21. apud Menage, Anti-Baillet Tom. 1. pag. 81.

(41) Guill. Saldenus de Libris, pag. 43. He had ſaid, p. 13. Ariſtarchus Grammaticus ſupra mille Commentarios literis conſignavit; He ſhould have ſaid, as Suidas does, ſupra octingentos.

(42) Faber. ſecond Journal. pag. 48. Edit. Holl.

[D] They, who make him cotemporary with Piſiſtratus, are groſly miſtaken.] This is a very ancient Error. Allatius cites a long Paſſage (43), in which one of the Commentators of Dionyſius of Thrace affirms, that Piſiſtratus ordered it to be publiſhed over all Greece, that They, who brought him any of Homer's Verſes, ſhould receive a Reward, at ſo much per Verſe. When he had collected as many as he could, he ſent for ſeventy Grammarians, to each of whom he gave a Copy of this Collection. They were deſired, each of them ſeparately, to range theſe Verſes in the beſt Order they could. After each had done his Beſt, they met again, by Piſiſtratus's Order, and ſhewed their Works to each other. They agreed, unanimouſly, that the Work of Ariſtarchus and Zenodotus deſerved the preference, and afterwards declared, that Zenodotus's Work ought to yield to That of Ariſtarchus. This Story contains This, among other Falſeſhoods, that Ariſtarchus and Piſiſtratus lived at the ſame Time. It was eaſy to diſcover this miſtake; yet the Commentators on Dionyſius of Thrace have perſuaded a great many into a Belief of it. Euſtathius has vented it, and, after him, Genebrard, and Jaſon de Nores. Read this Paſſage of Allatius: " Multis " aliis recentioribus fucum fecerunt. Nam Euſtathius " in A Iliados idem aſſerit. Οἱ δὲ συνθέμενοι ταύ- " την κατ' ἐπίλαγὴν, ὡς φασι, Πισιστράτῳ τῷ τῶν " Ἀθηναίων τυράννῳ Γραμματικοι, καὶ διορθωσά- " μενοι καλὰ τὸ ἐκεινοις ἀρέσκον, ὧν κορυφαίῳ Α- " εισαρχῳ, καὶ μετ' ἐκεῖνον Ζηνόδοτῳ. Id eſt: " Qui vero eam compoſuerunt Grammatici, juſſu, ut tra- " dunt, Piſiſtrati Athenienſium Tyranni, & ut ſibi me- " lius viſum eſt correxerunt, quorum Princeps Ariſtarchus, " & poſt eum Zenodotus. Et inferius: Τὸ δὲ ἀπαγ- " γέλλειν τὴν Ὁμήρου ποίησιν σκεδασθεῖσαν ἀρ- " χὴν ἐποιήσατο Κινναίθῳ ὁ χῖος. Ἐλυμήναν- " το δὲ, φασιν, αὐτὴν πάμπολλα οἱ περὶ τὸν " Κίναιθον. καὶ πολλὰ τῶν ἐπῶν ἀυτοὶ ποιη- " σαντες παρενέβαλον. Διὸ καὶ διωρθώθησαν " ὑπ' Ὀμηρικαὶ βιβλοι, ὡς ἀνωτέρω εἰρηται. Id eſt: " Homeri vero poëſim diſperſam recitandi principium " fecit Cinæthus Chius. Verum illam multis modis " Cinæthi ſectatores depravarunt, multaque à ſe con- " ſcripta carmina indiderunt. Quare libri Homerici " correcti ſunt, ut ſuperius diximus. Gilbertus Gene- " brardus Chron. lib. 2. Piſiſtrati juſſu Ariſtarchus " Homeri rapſodiam recenſuit, & in 24 partes pro " numero elementorum diſtribuit. Jaſon de Nores in " artem Poëticam Horatii, Ariſtarchus miro quodam " acumine caſtigabat veterum ſcripta, atque ideo colli- " gendis Homeri verſibus præpoſitus fuit. In quibus " vides miros Anachroniſmos. Primus, qui Ariſtar- " chum ſub Piſiſtrato collocat. Secundus, qui Cinæ- " thum Chium aſſerit primum Homeri poëſim diſ- " perſam recitaſſe. Cum uterque poſt Piſiſtrati tem- " pora floruerit. Cinæthus enim, ſi Pindari Scholi- " aſtæ credimus, in Nemeon, Od. 2. ſub Olympiade " ſexageſima nona apud Syracuſas Homeri carmina " ἐξεφώνησε (44). —— They have deceived many " others of the Moderns; for Euſtathius, on the firſt " Iliad, aſſerts the ſame Thing. Οἱ δὲ συνθέμενοι, " &c. i. e. The chief of the Grammarians, who diſ- " poſed and corrected it, by order of Piſiſtratus, " Tyrant of Athens, were Ariſtarchus, and after " him Zenodotus. And a little lower, τὸ δὲ ἀπαγ- " γέλλειν, &c. i. e. Cinæthus the Chian was the " Firſt, who recited the ſcattered Poems of Homer. " But the Followers of Cinæthus corrupted them " ſeveral Ways, and foiſted in ſeveral Verſes of their " own. For which reaſon the Books of Homer were " corrected, as I have ſaid above. Gilbert Gene- " brard, Chron. lib. 2. ſays, that Ariſtarchus, by " order of Piſiſtratus, reviſed the Rhapſody of Homer, " and divided it into Twenty four Parts, according to " the Number of the Letters. Jaſon de Nores, upon " Horace's Art of Poetry, tells us, that Ariſtarchus " with wonderful Judgment corrected the Writings " of the Ancients, and was therefore appointed to " collect Homer's Poems. In theſe Paſſages you ſee " ſurprizing Anachroniſms. The firſt places Ari- " ſtarchus in the Reign of Piſiſtratus; The ſecond aſ- " ſerts Cinæthus the Chian to have been the firſt, " who recited the ſcattered Poems of Homer; Where- " as both of them flouriſhed after the Time of Piſiſtra- " tus. For Cinæthus, if we may believe the Scholiaſt " on Pindar, Nem. Od. 2. collected together the Ver- " ſes of Homer, at Syracuſe, in the LXIXth Olym- " piad."

(43) Allatius, de Patria Homeri, pag. 93, & ſeq. he ſays, that theſe Commentaries are not printed.

(44) Id. ib. p. 96, 97.

[E] Cicero and Horace employed his Name, when they would diſcribe a too rigid Critic.] Conſult the Oration againſt Piſo, where you will find the following Words: " Verum tamen, quoniam te non Ariſtar- " chum, ſed Phalarim Grammaticum, habemus, qui " non notam apponas ad malum verſum, ſed Poëtam " armis perſequare, ſcire cupio quid tandem iſto in " verſu reprehendas, Cedant Arma togæ (45). —— I " deſire to know of you, who are not an Ariſtarchus, " but a Phalaris, and who, inſtead of affixing a Mark " to a bad Verſe, purſueſt the Poet himſelf, ſword in " Hand; inform me, I ſay, what you diſlike in That " Verſe, Cedant Arma Togæ, &c." The ſame Orator declares, that he was afraid of his Friend Atticus's Nails. Noſtrum opus tibi probari lætor; ex quo ἄνθη ipſa poſuiſti, quæ mihi florentiora ſunt viſa tuo judicio. Cærulas enim tuas miniatulas illas extimeſce-bam (46). Thus we ſhould expreſs ourſelves at preſent to denote the Cenſures, which a Reader might mark down in the Margin of a Book, and the cærulas miniatulas of the Paſſage, which I have quoted. Atticus was one of thoſe ſincere Perſons, who examine the Compoſitions of their Friends with Strictneſs, and therefore Cicero calls him his Ariſtarchus. Quid multa? totum hunc locum, quem ego varie meis orationibus, quarum tu Ariſtarchus es, ſoleo pingere, de flamma, de ferro, (noſti illas λυκόθας*) valde graviter pertexuit* (47). The Verſes of Horace, which I am going to quote, furniſh an Idea, which is a ſtrong Proof of my Text.

(45) Cicero, Orat. in L. Piſon, c. 30.

(46) Cicero ad Attic. lib. 16. Epiſt. 10.

(47) Ibid. lib. 1. Epiſt. 10.

Vir bonus & prudens verſus reprehendet inertes
Culpabit duros: incomptis allinet atrum
Tranſverſo calamo ſignum: ambitioſa recidet
Ornamenta: parum claris lucem dare coget:
Arguet ambigue dictum: mutanda notabit:
Fiet Ariſtarchus: nec dicet, Cur ego amicum
Offendam in nugis (48)?

(48) Horat. de Arte Poëtica, ver. 445.

Digitized by Google

which others impute either to Theocritus, or Isocrates [F]. He had several Contests, in Pergamus, with Crates the Grammarian [G]; and died in the Island of Cyprus, at Seventy two Years of Age. He was seized with a Dropsy, and found no better Remedy for this Distemper, than starving himself to Death. There proceeded out of his School to the Number of forty Grammarians [H]. He left two Sons, whose only Merit was their great Simplicity. He, who bore his Father's Name, had been sold

The prudent Care of an impartial Friend
Will give you notice of each idle Line;
Shew what sounds harsh, and what wants Ornament,
Or where it is too lavishly bestow'd;
Make you explain all that he finds obscure,
And with a strict Enquiry mark your Faults;
With Freedom, Aristarchus-like, will judge *,
Nor for these Trifles fear to lose your Love.

Lord ROSCOMMON.

* This Line is not Lord Roscommon's, but necessary upon the present Occasion.

[F] Some ascribe to him a Thought, which others impute either to Theocritus, or to Isocrates.] This Saying of Aristarchus is upon Record; I cannot write, what I would; and I will not write, what I can (49). Mr Dacier tells us this, on these Words of Horace:

Si quantum cuperem, possem quoque (50).

Did but my Pow'r rise equal to my Wish.

(49) Dacier's Remarks on Horace, Epist. 1. l. 2.

(50) Horat. Epod. 1. l. 2. ver. 256.

The Authors, whom I have hitherto consulted, have not led me to the Source; and my Enquiries have been less successful in this Point, than in That of Aristarchus's Divination. This makes me passionately wish, that Mr Dacier, and others like him, would have the goodness to leave off the Practice of not quoting their Authors. Are they afraid, that the Great and Polite World, for whom they labour, should look upon Citations as too pedantic? I can scarce believe, that a Count de Guiche (51), for Example, would be displeased to know, where we may find, that Aristarchus was the Author of this fine Saying, and was treated as a Prophet. Any Lady, who loves Learning, would be better pleased to know, that Plutarch, or Aristotle, vouch such a Fact, than, in general, that it is reported. This by the way: To return to our Text; we read, in the Collections of Stobæus, that Theocritus, being asked, why he did not write, answered, because I cannot do it as I would and I will not do it, as I can. Ἐρωτηθεὶς διὰ τί ὁ συγγράφει, ὅτι, εἶπεν, ὡς μὲν βούλομαι οὐ δύναμαι, ὡς δὲ δύναμαι οὐ βούλομαι (53). Isocrates, being at Table with Nicocreon, King of Cyprus, was desired to say something, but would not; and gave this Reason; What I do know, is not seasonable, and, what may be seasonable, I do not know. Οἷς μὲν ἐγὼ δεινὸς οὐκ ὁ νῦν καιρὸς· οἷς δὲ ὁ νῦν καιρὸς, οὐκ ἐγω δεινὸς (52). This puts me in mind of The Thought of Seneca; "I never endeavoured to please the "People; for they do not approve of what I do "know, and I do not know what they do approve "of. Nunquam volui populo placere, nam quæ ego "scio, non probat populus, quæ probat populus, ego "nescio (54)."

(51) We find, in the Continuation of the Menagiana, pag. 6, Edit. of Holland, that this Count, in the midst of the Pleasures and Avocations of the Court, never omitted studying regularly, at least three hours a day.

(52) Stobæus, Serm. XXI. de cognosc. seipso.

(53) Plut. in Vita Isocr. p. 838. F. See Id. in Sympofiac. l. 1. c. 1. p. 613. A.

(54) Senec. Epist. 29. pag. 219.

[G] He had Contests, in Pergamus, with Crates the Grammarian (55)] The Words of Suidas are express to this Purpose: Κράτητι τῷ γραμματικῷ περγαμηνῷ πολεῖσα διημιλλήσατο ἐν περγάμῳ (56). Cum Cratete Grammatico Pergameno Pergami sæpissime contendit. By virtue of this Passage, Casaubon maintains, that Crates Mallotes was not the Antagonist of Aristarchus; but another Crates, born at Pergamus (57). As this Crates Mallotes was cotemporary with Aristarchus, and very well known to the King of Pergamus, it might easily be supposed, that he was the same, who disputed on several Occasions with Aristarchus. It is proper therefore to observe, that Suidas gives the Sirname of Pergamenian to Aristarchus's Adversary. Perhaps he is mistaken; for They, who quote Crates of Pergamus, represent him rather as an Historian, than Grammarian (58); and it is certain, that Grammar was the chief Study of Crates Mallotes. Read this Passage: "Primus quantum opinamur Studium Gram- "maticæ in Urbem intulit Crates Mallotes, Ari- "starchi æqualis, qui missus ad senatum ab Attalo "rege, inter secundum ac tertium bellum Punicum, "sub ipsam Ennii mortem, quum in regione Pa- "latii prolapsus in cloacæ foramen crus fregisset, "per omne legationis simul & valetudinis tempus "plurimas ἀκροάσεις subinde fecit, assidueque disse- "ruit, ac nostris exemplo fuit ad imitandum (59). "- - - - - - - It is believed, that Crates Mallotes, "Cotemporary with Aristarchus, first introduced the "Study of Grammar at Rome; who, being sent to the "Senate by King Attalus, between the second and "third Punic War, about the Time of Ennius's "Death, and having the Misfortune to fall, and "break his Leg, near the Palatine Hill, continu- "ed, during the whole Time of his Embassy and "Recovery, to read several Lectures, and to hold "Disputations; in which he set the Romans an Ex- "ample worthy of Imitation." This Passage of Varro is generally understood of Crates Mallotes. Cra- "tes nobilis Grammaticus, qui fretus Chrysippo "homine acutissimo, qui reliquit sex libros περὶ "τῆς ἀνομαλίας; heis libreis contra analogiam "atque Aristarchum est nixus (60). - - - - - - Crates, "a celebrated Grammarian, who relied on Chrysip- "pus, a Man of great Subtilty, who left six Books "concerning Anomaly; by the help of these Books, "he opposed Analogy and Aristarchus." If Varro speaks here of Crates Mallotes, it is probable, that Suidas mistook the one for the other; I mean, that Crates Mallotes, and not Crates of Pergamus, was the Rival of our Aristarchus. I know not whether the Commentators on Suetonius have ever thought of criticising him on a Point of Chronology, which I shall mention. He says, that Crates Mallotes came to Rome in the Name of King Attalus, about the time that Ennius died. The Death of That Poet happened in the Year of Rome 585. Now He, who reigned at that Time at Pergamus, was called Eumenes: He began his Reign in the Five hundred and fifty sixth Year of Rome, and died in the Year 596, leaving the Tuition of his Son, and the Regency, to his Brother Attalus. If Crates Mallotes, then, was deputed to the Romans by This Attalus, Chronology will not allow us to say, that he took this Journey about the time of Ennius's Death. However, Suetonius supplies us wherewith to confirm the Opinion of Those, who make Aristarchus flourish under Ptolomy Philometor, in the CLVIth Olympiad (61). Eusebius and Suidas are of This Number.

(55) Suidas in Ἀρίσταρχος.

(56) Id. ib.

(57) Casaub. in Sueton. de Illustr. Gramm. c. 2.

(58) See Vossius de Histor. Gr. pag. 347.

(59) Sueton. de Illustr. Grammat. cap. 2.

(60) Varro, de Lingua Latina, l. 8. init. See also lib. 7. p. 97. See in Voss. ubi supra, several Authorities, which prove, that Crates Mallotes was a Grammarian.

(61) It answers to the end of the sixth Age of Rome.

Vossius has not followed Suetonius; for, instead of saying, that Aristarchus, and Crates Mallotes, were Cotemporaries, he makes Crates Mallotes, and Apollodorus, the Disciple of Aristarchus, Cotemporaries (62). I do not pretend, that this is false; for a Person may be cotemporary both with the Master and the Disciple; but I observe, by the way, that he is mistaken in another Point: He believed, that a Drammatic Piece, which had been translated by Ennius, and was called the Achilles of Aristarchus, had this Name given it, only because That great Critic had corrected it. Ab hoc & vetus quædam Comœdia, quam Ennius postea transtulit, dicebatur Achilles Aristarchi. Meminit ejus Plautus (63). At sic non alia de caussa vocabatur, quam quod ab eo esset emendata. It is a Mistake. This Piece was a Tragedy of Aristarchus of Tegeas, cotemporary with Euripides. See Scaliger (64).

(62) Voss. de Arte Gram. l. 1. c. 6. p. 24.

(63) Plaut. in Prologo Pœnuli, ver. 1.

(64) Scalig. Animadv. in Eusseb. n. 1563. pag. 103.

[H] Forty Grammarians proceeded out of his School.] He may be reckoned the Head of a Sect; witness the Words of Varro: "Relinquitur de casibus, "in quo Aristarchei suos intendunt nervos (65). "Hoc in oratione diligentius quam alii ab Aristar- "cho Grammatici (66). - - - - - It remains to speak "of the Cases, in which the Followers of Aristarchus "exert themselves. - - - - - - This Part of Speech "they more carefully observe, than the rest of the "Grammarians since Aristarchus." See likewise the Railleries

(65) Varro, de Lingua Lat. lib. 7. pag. 96.

(66) Id. ib. lib. 9. pag. 134.

Digitized by Google

(e) Taken from Suidas in Ἀρίσταρχος.

fold for a Slave; but the Athenians ranſomed him (e). I have ſomething to offer againſt Moreri [I].

(67) Apud Athenæum, lib. 5. in fine.

(68) Suidas in Ἀμμώνιος.

(69) Voſſ. de Poët. Gr. pag. 67.

(70) It is Cretes in the Edition of 1688.

(71) Diog. Laërt. in Vitis Philoſoph. l. 4. n. 23.

Railleries of Herodichus (67). It appears from Suidas, that Ariſtarchus's School ſubſiſted for ſome Ages in Alexandria (68).

[I] I have ſomething to offer againſt Moreri.] I. He ſuffered himſelf to be impoſed upon by Voſſius, when he ſaid, that Ariſtarchus was of Samos (69). II. Nothing is more impertinent, than to obſerve, that Ariſtarchus was Cotemporary with Crates (70). It is explaining an obſcure point by one, which is more obſcure, obſcurum per obſcurius. There have been ſeveral Crates's; Diogenes Laërtius reckons up ten, ſome Philoſophers, others Poets, or Grammarians, or Orators, or Geometricians, &c (71). They did not all flouriſh at the ſame time; nor were they all of the ſame Country; what then can be more inſignificant, than to remark, that Ariſtarchus flouriſhed in the Time of Crates? The moſt famous of theſe Crates's was the Cynic Philoſopher. The moſt natural Senſe, therefore, of Mr Moreri's Words is, that Ariſtarchus was Cotemporary with That Cynic: Now this is falſe; there is a great Interval of Time between them (72). This Cenſure does not affect Suetonius, who ſays, that Crates Mallotes was Cotemporary with Ariſtarchus; for there were few learned Perſons in Suetonius's Age, who were ignorant at what time Ariſtarchus lived. III. I believe no one has ſaid, that This Grammarian compoſed nine Books of Corrections on the Iliad, and the Odyſſey. Suidas affirms it of Crates Mallotes (73), as Voſſius obſerves (74). Moreri did not underſtand Voſſius's Words. IV. It is falſe, that Ptolomy Lathurus was the Son of Ptolomy Philometor. V. I believe it to be true, at the bottom, that our Ariſtarchus was living in the CLVIIIth Olympiad; but, ſince Euſebius and Suidas make him flouriſh in the CLVIth, this ought to have been remarked. Voſſius falſly imputes to Euſebius the placing of him in the CLVIIIth (75).

(72) Diog. Laërt. l. 5. n. 87, ſays, that Crates the Cynic flouriſhed about the CXIIIth Olympiad.

(73) Suid. in Κράτης.

(74) Voſſ. de Poët. Gr. pag. 67.

(75) Id. de Hiſtor. Gr. lib. 1. c. 18. pag. 119.

ARISTEUS, the Son of Apollo and Cyrene [A]. His Article is very imperfect in Moreri, who confines himſelf to the informing us, I. That, by purſuing Eurydice, the Wife of Orpheus, from place to place, he occaſioned her Death, by the bite of a Serpent. II. That the Nymphs, to be revenged of Ariſteus, killed all his Bees. III. That, having offered a Sacrifice of Bulls, he recovered what he had loſt (a). IV. That

(a) All this is to be found in Virgil's Georgics, Book 4.

[A] The Son of Apollo, and Cyrene] This is the general Tradition; and there are very few Traditions in Mythology more conſtant than this. Yet Cicero mentions another; he ſays, that the Greeks make Ariſteus the Son of Bacchus; and adds, that, in Sicily, he was honoured in the Temple of That Deity. He addreſſes himſelf to Verres. "Quid! "ex æde Liberi Simulacrum Ariſtei non tuo im-"perio palam ablatum eſt? —— Ariſteus, qui "UT GRAECI FERUNT, liberi filius, inventor olei "eſſe dicitur, una cum libero patre apud illos eodem "erat in templo conſecratus (1). ------ What! "was not the Image of Ariſteus openly taken away "from the Temple of Bacchus by your Command? "—— Ariſteus, who being, as the Greeks relate, "the Son of Bacchus, is ſaid to have invented Oyl, "and was conſecrated by them in the ſame Temple "with his Father Bacchus." In another Book, he takes up with the common Opinion, and ſays, that Apollo was the Father of Ariſteus, the Inventor of Oyl. Quid Ariſteus qui olivæ dicitur inventor Apollinis filius (2). Let us next ſpeak of Cyrene: She was the Daughter of Hypſeus, King of the Lapithæ, who was the Son of Peneus and Creuſa (3). Creuſa was the Daughter of the Earth; and Peneus was Son of the Ocean. Cyrene deſpiſed the Employments of other Maidens, and their Houſe-hold Amuſements (4), and riſing, early (5), was extreamly fond of Hunting, and making great Deſtruction among the wild Beaſts. Apollo, encountring her, as ſhe was fighting ſingly with a Lyon, demanded of Chiron, who ſhe was, and whether he might not uſe force, and enjoy her.

(1) Cicero in Verrem, Orat. 9. c. 57.

(2) Id. de Nat. Deor. lib. 3. c. 18.

(3) Pindar. Ode 9. Pyth. pag. 433.

(4) Pind. ib. pag. 434.

(5) Τὸν δὲ σύγκοιτον γαμετὸν παῦρον ἐπὶ βλεφάροις ὕπνον ἀναλίσκουσα, ῥέοντα πρὸς ἀῶ. Exiguum autem ſomnum concubitorem ſuavem in palpebris impendens, quum adventaret aurora. Id. ib.

------ Ὅσια
Κλυδὰν χειρά οἱ προσενεγκεῖν;
Ἦ ῥα καὶ ἐκ λεχέων
Κεῖρεν μελισσόεα ποίαν (6).

Fas-ne eſt illuſtrem manum ei admovere? Utrum & ex ſtratis tondere mellitam herbam?

(6) Id. ib. pag. 437.

Chiron, beginning with an Anſwer to the laſt Queſtion, repreſented, that Lovers ought to make uſe of the Key of the Heart; that is of ſoft and tender Words, to perſuade the Fair to grant what they requeſt; adding, that, among both Gods and Men, Modeſty oppoſes the Precipitation, with which ſome fall to downright Enjoyment; and explained himſelf very nicely upon this Subject.

------ καὶ ἔν τε θεοῖς
Τοῦτο κἀνθρώποις ὁμῶς
Αἰδέομαι τ' ἀμφαδὸν ἀδείας τυχεῖν τὸ πρῶτον εὐνᾶς (7).

(7) Id. id.

Et inter Deos & homines pariter verecundanter aperte poſtulato dulci frui primum cubili.

"By the way, continues he, it is a viſible effect of "your great Civility, that you, who know all "things, ſhould do me the Honour to enquire of "me concerning this Maid's Extraction." This is Pindar's Senſe; I pretend not to give a Tranſlation Word for Word; it is ſufficient to repreſent his Thought. Now, if this be his Meaning, who can ſee, without Indignation, the Liberty, which a French Author takes of making him expreſs himſelf thus? "Is it lawful to ſee her? May I approach her? "Shall I not be thought raſh, if I take her fair "Hand, and gather one of thoſe Vermillion Roſes, "which I ſee painted on her Lips? But the Cen-"taur, ſmiling, anſwered him thus: A chaſt Love, "Apollo, ought always to be concealed; and the "Fair Sex, among the Gods, as well as among "Mortals, do not grant their Favours in the Eyes "of the World. This is without doubt the Reaſon, "which makes you ſpeak with ſo much reſerve. A "Lover leſs chaſt than you, would not have had "ſo much Reſpect; and it is to your own good Man-"ners, rather than to my Inſtruction, that you owe "this Modeſty (8)." This Tranſlation is repugnant to the Original, and inconſiſtent with itſelf; for, ſhould we ſuppoſe, that Apollo did not expreſs himſelf groſly, but modeſtly and chaſtly, Chiron's Anſwer is ridiculous and contradictory. The Event was, that Apollo enjoyed Cyrene, without delay, and tranſported her into Africa.

(8) Notes on the Ariſtæus of Virgil, tranſlated into French, and printed at Lyons, in 1668, pag. 28, 29.

Ὠκεῖα δ' ἐπειγομένων ἤδη Θεῶν πρᾶξις, ὁδοί τε βραχεῖαι.
κεῖνο κεῖν' ἅμαρ διαίσσειν. θαλάμῳ δὲ μίγεν ἐν πολυχρύσῳ Λιβύας (9).

Celer autem eſt properantium jam Deorum actio, viæ quæ breves. Illud illa dies peregit. In thalamo autem Libyæ divite auri congreſſi ſunt.

(9) Pindar. Od. 9. Pyth. pag. 443.

Chiron would have had him ſay tender things to her, and proceed in a way of honourable Love; but, as Pindar obſerves, the Gods of the Poets could not away with delays; they diſpatched Matters in a trice; they went the ſhorteſt Way to work; they boarded briskly, and enjoyed either by fair, or by foul Means. They took the Romance by the tail (10), and ſaid, with Boreas in Love,

(10) Compare with this the 4*th Scene of the* Precieuſes Ridicules.

Apta mihi vis eſt (11).

By Force and Violence I chiefly live.

(11) Ovid. Metam. lib. 6. ver. 690.

CROXAL.

Cyrene

Digitized by Google

That he invented the Secret of extracting Honey, making Oyl, and Cheese [B]. There are several other Things, which should have been said concerning This Son of Apollo; it should have been observed, that he was born in That Part of Lybia, where the City of Cyrene was built; that he was brought up by the Nymphs; that, having taken a Journey to Thebes, he there married Autonoë, the Daughter of Cadmus; that he had by Her Actæon, who was torn in Pieces by his own Dogs; that, after the Death of This Son, he consulted the Oracle of Apollo; that, upon the Strength of the Answer, which was given him, concerning the Honours he should receive in the Island of Cea, he made a Voyage thither [C]: That, a Plague ravaging all Greece, he offered Sacrifices, which put a stop to it; that, leaving his Family in the Island of Cea, he re-passed into Lybia; from whence he sailed with the Fleet, which his Mother had Cyrene conceived, and brought our Aristeus into the World. Observe, that Virgil (12) and Hyginus (13), who make her the Daughter of Peneus, follow an Ancient Tradition in this (14). Wherefore we may say, that Frischlinus was much in the wrong to blame Boccace, and to be ignorant of what They had affirmed. "Constat non recte scripsisse Bocatium, l. 7. Geneal. "c. 28. dum asserit Cyrenem Penei fuisse filiam (15). "—— Boccace was certainly mistaken, in asserting, "that Cyrene was the Daughter of Peneus." Apollonius supposes, that she was a Shepherdess, and had resolved to lead a single Life, but that Apollo, who carried her away by force, would not suffer her to preserve her Virginity (16).

(12) Virgil. Georgic. lib. 4. ver. 355. See also Servius, on ver. 317.

(13) Hygin. cap. 161.

(14) Schol. Apoll. in lib. 2. Argon. v. 502.

(15) Frischlin. in Callimach. Hymn. 2, pag. 397, Edit. Ultraj. 1697.

[B] He invented the Secret of extracting Honey, making of Oyl, and Cheese.] Diodorus Siculus relates, that Aristeus, having learnt of the Nymphs, who nursed him, the Art of curdling Milk, and making Bee-hives, and cultivating Olive-Trees, was the first, who communicated these three Inventions to Men. The Conveniences, which they received thereby filled them with so great Acknowledgment, that they paid the same Divine Honours to Him, as they did to Bacchus. This Historian adds, that the Nymphs imposed three Names on him, That of Nomius, That of Aristeus, and That of Agreus (17). This agrees well enough with Pindar (18). But observe, that he says, that the Hours and the Earth, to whom Mercury carried this Infant, fed him with Nectar and Ambrosia: Others say, that Aristeus, having invented the making of Honey, and Oyl, in the Island of Cea, and having caused the Winds, which are called Etesian, to blow, was surnamed Jupiter Aristeus (19), and Apollo Agreus, and Nomius (20). The Surname of Nomius suited him (21), because of the Care he took of his Herds; and That of Agreus was proper, because he applied himself to Hunting. The following is a curious Authority for this Interpretation: They, who take Wolves and Bears in Traps and Gins, put up Prayers to Aristeus, because he was the first, who invented the Art of taking them with Snares, and running Nooses. It is a Passage of Plutarch. This is the Original. Εὔχονται δ' Ἀριστάῳ δολεύουσι ὀρύγμασι καὶ βρόχοις λύκους καὶ ἄρκτους, ὃς πρῶτος θήρεσσιν ἔπηξε ποδάγρας (22). Aristæo vota faciunt foveis actis, aut laqueis positis, qui lupis aut ursis insidiantur, ille feris primus pedicas quia tendere cepit. The Scholiast of Apollonius does not explain the Etymology of these two Names after this manner. He founds That of Nomius on Cyrene's having to do with Apollo, while she was a Shepherdess, and That of Agreus on the Act being performed in the Fields. He adds, that, according to others, the Etymology came from Aristeus's teaching the Shepherds the Art of Tilling and Manuring the Ground. Ἀγρέα καὶ νόμιον, τὸ μέν, ὅτι ἐν ἀγρῷ ἐμίγη τῇ μητρὶ αὐτοῦ ὁ Ἀπόλλων. νόμιον δέ, ὅτι νεμέσῃ ἐμίγη. οἱ δὲ, ὅτι τὴν καλὰ τὰς ἀγρὰς θεραπείαν τοῖς νομεῦσι εἰσηγήσατο (23). The Passage, where Apollonius says, that the Inhabitants of Thessaly gave these two Surnames to Aristeus, contains Particulars, which deserve to be produced here. We there find, that Aristeus was brought up in Chiron's Cave, and that, when he was come to Age of Maturity, the Muses gave him a Wife, and taught him Physic, and the Science of Divination, and set him over all their Flocks (24). We find, in another Passage of the same Poet, that he invented Honey, and Oyl (25). He hints, in Virgil, that the Pains he had taken in perfecting Agriculture, and feeding of Cattle, had procured him all the Glory he enjoyed.

(16) Apoll. Argon. lib. 2, ver. 502. & seq.

(17) Diod. Sicul. lib. 4, cap. 83, pag. 267.

(18) Pindar. Od. 9. Pyth. pag. 441.

(19) Schol. Apoll. Argon. lib. 2, ver. 500.

(20) Apoll. ibid. lib. 4, ver. 1218. mentions a Temple of Apollo Nomius.

(21) Benedictus, in Pindarum ubi supra, pag. 442.

(22) Plut. in Amator. p. 757.

(23) Scholiast. Apoll. in lib. 2. ver. 509.

(24) Apoll. Argon. l. 4. ver. 512, &c.

(25) Id. ib. ver. 1132.

En etiam hunc ipsum vitæ mortalis honorem,
Quem mihi vix frugum & pecudum custodia solers
Omnia tentanti extuderat, te matre relinquo (26).

(26) Virgil. Georg. lib. 4. ver. 326.

Lost are the Honours; of my Herd and Plough
Honours, which scarce my utmost Toils allow;
So wretched is thy Son, so hard a Mother Thou.

He is one of the Deities, whom Virgil invokes, when he undertakes to write on Agriculture.

— et cultor Nemorum, cui pinguia Cææ
Ter centum nivei tondent dumeta juvenci (27).

(27) Id. ib. lib. 1. v. 14.

And Thou, for whom the Cæan Shore sustains
The milky Herds, that graze the flowery Plains.
DRYDEN.

Oppian (28), Nonnus (29), the Scholiast of Pindar, and Apollonius, &c. all agree, in making him the Inventor of Those Things, which I have specified. Some Passages on the same Subject will occur below. The following is One of them, in which the City of Athens is made the Place of his Birth. Oleum & trapetas Aristeus Athenienses. Idem mella (30). By trapetas are to be understood the Mills for squeezing the Olives (31). Let us not forget, that he invented the Aromatic Gum Benjamin. This is asserted by an Ancient Author, quoted by the Scholiast of Aristophanes (32), as you may see in the Three Hundred and Fifty sixth Page of Salmasius's Commentary on Solinus.

(28) Oppian. Cyneg. l. 4.

(29) Nonnus, Dionys. l. 5.

(30) Plin. l. 7. c. 56. p. 99.

(31) Varro de Ling. Lat. l. 4. p. 34.

(32) Ἀριστάιος πρῶτον τὴν ἐργασίαν τοῦ σιλφίου ἐξεῦρεν ὥσπερ καὶ τοῦ μέλιτος.

Note, that Justin (33) relates, that Cyrene, being got with Child by Apollo, a Deo repleta, had four Sons, Nomius, Aristeus, Authocus, and Argæus (34). This is making of the two Surnames of Aristeus two Men (35).

[C] He made a Voyage to the Island of Cea.] The Greek of Diodorus Siculus is εἰς Κῶ νῆσον; and a little after, ἐν τῇ Κῷ. Rhodoman translates it in Co insulam, and in Co This rendering puzzles the Reader; for it inclines him to believe, that the Greek Historian is speaking of the Island of Cos, the Country of the great Hippocrates, and not of the Island of Cea, as other Authors do, when they speak of Aristeus. However, we may be certain, that he means the Island of Cea, whether it be necessary to correct the Text, by putting Κέῳ, instead of Κῷ (36), or that the Rules of Contraction allow us indifferently to make use of Κῷ or Κέῳ, in speaking of This Island (37). Let us take notice of these Words of Diodorus; παρὰ τῶν Κείων τιμαῖς, de honoribus apud Ceos (38). They shew plainly, that he does not design to speak of the Island of Cos. However, let us produce some Authors, who have affirmed, that Aristeus settled in the Island of Cea; and let us begin with the Commentator Servius, on these Words of Virgil;

(33) Justin. lib. 13, c. 7.

(34) It should be read Agræus.

(35) See Vossius de Theolog. Gentil. lib. 7, cap. 10, pag. 350.

(36) It is the Opinion of Voss. ubi supra.

(37) And not, apud Coos, as Rhodoman has translated it.

—— et cultor nemorum, cui pinguia Ceæ, &c.

cited above (39). "Aristeum invocat, id est Apol- "linis & Cyrenes filium —— hic (ut etiam Sallustius "docet) post laniatum à canibus Actæonem filium "Thebas reliquit, & Ceam insulam tenuit primo ad- "huc hominibus vacuam (40). —— He invokes Aristeus, i. e. the Son of Apollo and Cyrene. —— This "Aristeus (as Sallust also informs us) after his Son "Actæon was torn in pieces by Dogs, left Thebes, "and took possession of the Island of Cea, which, 'till "then, had been uninhabited." Apollonius informs us, that Aristeus, being sent for by the Inhabitants of the Cyclades, to put a stop to the Plague, went from Thessaly into the Island of Cea.

(38) It is the Opinion of Salmasius in Solinum, pag. 144, 145.

(39) Citation (27).

(40) Servius in Georg. lib. 1, v. 14.

Digitized by Google

had given him, to Sardinia [D]; that he fixed upon an Habitation there; that he cultivated This Country with great Care; that he baniſhed Barbarity from thence, and civilized the Place; that he viſited ſome other Iſlands; that the plentiful Harveſts, and vaſt Stocks of Cattle, induced him to ſtay ſome time in Sicily; where he taught his rare Secrets to the Inhabitants; that, by way of Acknowledgment, they honoured him as a God, eſpecially Thoſe, who cultivated Olive-Trees; that, at laſt, he went into Thrace; that he was admitted there by Bacchus into the Myſteries of the Orgies; and that, by his Familiarity with That God, he learnt many things, which were uſeful to human Life; that, having lived there, ſome time, near Mount Hemus, he diſappeared; and that not only the Barbarous People of the Country, but the very Greeks inſtituted to him Divine Honours (b). Mr Moreri falſly obſerves, that Diodorus Siculus mentions another Ariſteus, in the Eighty fourth Chapter of the Fourth Book; for That Chapter, and the preceeding, contain what I have now delivered. I am ſurprized, that we meet with nothing there concerning Arcadia, which was one of the principal Stations of Ariſteus [E]. In the Remarks, you will find the different Opinions of Authors, the Impertinence of ſome Cenſures, with other Particulars; nor ſhall I omit the Aſtronomical Diſcovery, which is aſcribed to Ariſteus [F]; nor his worſhipping the Dog-Star; nor his Daughter Macris

(b) Taken from Diodorus Siculus, lib. 4. cap. 83, 84.

Λίπεν δ' ὅγε πατρὸς ἐφετμὴ
Φθίην, ἐν δὲ Κέῳ καλεναίσαλο λαὸν ἀρείους
Παῤῥάσιον (41).

Commanded by his Sire, the Son obey'd,
And, leaving Phthia, the Parrhaſians led To Cea's Iſle.

(41) Apoll. Argon. lib. 2. ver. 521.

The Scholiaſt on this Poet affirms, as I have already obſerved, that Ariſteus taught the Art of making Honey, and Oyl, in the ſame Iſland. Ἀρισταῖον δὲ ἐν τῇ Κέῳ εὑρὼν τὰ μελισσουργικὰ πρῶτον καὶ τὴν τε ἐλαίας καλεργασίαν (42). We ſhall ſee, in the Remark [F], that he eſtabliſhed there the Worſhip of the Dog-Star. Varro Atacinus relates, in his Poem of the Argonauts, that, a great Mortality among the Cattle afflicting That Iſland, Ariſteus went thither, by Apollo's Direction, and delivered it from That Calamity, after he had ſacrificed to Jupiter Icmæus. The Winds, and Heats, which occaſioned the Mortality, ceaſed. After Ariſteus's Death, the Inhabitants of the Iſland of Cea obeyed an Oracle, which commanded them to place him in the Number of the Gods, and called him Nomius and Agræus, becauſe of the Service he had done them, by his Induſtry in feeding their Flocks, and manuring their Lands (43). Be not ſurprized, to find, in this Place, that he cauſed the Mortality to ceaſe, by calming the Winds; and to find, hereafter, that he cauſed it to ceaſe, by raiſing the Winds; for thus ancient Traditions are contrived; one confutes, what the other affirms; one forgets the only Particular, which the other remembers. A compleat Narrative might have informed us, that, by changing the Wind, he reſtored Health; but They, who knew not how to expreſs the whole, obſerved only, that the Wind ceaſed; you muſt not expect the reſt; or, perhaps, that the Wind roſe; you are to know no more of it; they will not inform you, that the peſtilential Wind ceaſed, and the healthy ſucceeded. The Correction, which I have read in Salmaſius, of a Paſſage in Heraclides, ſeems to me an happy one; in the mean while I would not ſwear, that it is not ſaid in the Original, that the Peſtilence in the Iſland of Cea proceeded from the Wind. Φθορᾶς οὔσης φυτῶν καὶ ζωῶν διὰ τὸ πνεῖν ἐτησίας (44). A Plague happening on Plants and Animals, occaſioned by the Eteſian Winds. Salmaſius corrects the Paſſage thus. Διὰ ἠτήσαλο τὸ πνεῖν ἐτησίας (45). He prayed to Jupiter, that the Eteſian Winds might blow. Which agrees with what I ſhall obſerve in the Remark [F].

(42) Schol. Apoll. in lib. 2, ver. 500.

(43) Voſſ. de Theol. Gentil. lib. 7, cap. 10, pag. 350.

(44) Heraclides, de Politiis, pag. 20.

(45) Salmaſ. in Solin. pag. 144.

[D] He failed - - - - - towards Sardinia.] Diodorus Siculus ſays, that he ſettled in the Iſland of Cea, after the Death of Actæon, and afterwards went into Lybia, and from thence to Sardinia (46); but others pretend, that his Grief for the Death of Actæon gave him ſuch a Diſtaſte for Bœotia, and the reſt of Greece, that he went to reſide in foreign Countries (47). They ſay, it was then, that he led a Colony into Sardinia. It is ſaid, that Dædalus, having made his Eſcape from the Iſland of Crete, joined him in conducting this Colony (48); but Chronology refutes this invincibly. Dædalus was Cotemporary with Oedipus, King of Thebes (49); he could not, therefore, be concerned with Ariſteus, the Son-in-law of Cadmus. However it be, Accounts differ greatly. Pauſanias ſays, that a Company of Lybians had ſettled themſelves in Sardinia, and incorporated with the Natives of the Country, before Ariſteus came thither; but Ariſtotle relates, that Ariſteus was the firſt, who cultivated That Iſland; and that, before his Time, it ſerved only as a Dwelling to great Numbers of monſtrous Birds (50). Conſult Bochart, who maintains, that This Voyage of Ariſteus is a Fable (51).

(46) Diod. Siculus, lib. 4, cap. 84.

(47) Pauſan. lib. 10, pag. 332. See likewiſe Silius Italicus, lib. 12, pag. 498.

(48) Id. ib.

(49) Id. ib.

(50) Ariſtot. de Mirab. Auſcult. pag. 881. Oper. Tom. 1.

(51) Bochart. Geograph. ſacr. Part. II. lib. 1, cap. 31, pag. 632, 633.

[E] Arcadia, —— was one of the principal Stations of Ariſteus.] For This reaſon Virgil gives him the Epithet Arcadius, where he mentions the Invention of hiving new Bees:

Tempus & Arcadii memoranda inventa Magiſtri
Pandere, quoque modo cæſis jam ſæpe juvencis
Inſincerus apes tulerit cruor (52).

'Tis time to touch the Precepts of an Art,
Th' Arcadian Maſter did of old impart;
And how he ſtock'd his empty Hives again,
Renew'd with putrid Gore of Oxen ſlain.

DRYDEN.

(52) Virgil. Georg. lib. 4, ver. 283.

This Art was an Invention of Ariſteus, and cauſed him to be honoured as a God in Arcadia "Poſt eâ "(Cea) relicta, cum Dædalo ad Sardiniam tranſitum "fecit. Huic opinioni Pindarus refragatur, qui eum "ait de Cea inſula in Arcadiam migraſſe, ibique vi- "tam coluiſſe. Nam apud Arcadas pro Jove coli- "tur, quod primus oſtenderit qualiter apes debeant "reparari (53). —— Afterwards, leaving this Iſland "(Cea), he paſſed over with Dædalus to Sardinia. "Pindar contradicts this Opinion, who ſays, that he "paſſed from the Iſland Cea to Arcadia, and there "reſided. For the Arcadians worſhip him as Jupiter; "becauſe he firſt taught the Art of repairing the loſs "of Bees." Juſtin gives Ariſteus a large Kingdom in Arcadia: I ſhall quote his Words in the following Remark. It is not true, what Mr Lloyd affirms, that Apollonius makes Ariſteus go from Arcadia to the Iſland of Cea. He has copied this Miſtake from Salmaſius (54).

(53) Servius in Georg. Virg. lib. 1. ver. 14.

(54) Salmaſ. in Solin. p. 99.

[F] The Aſtronomical Diſcovery, which was aſcribed to Ariſteus.] If we conſider Juſtin's Words only ſuperficially, we may be induced to think, that he aſcribes the firſt Diſcovery of the Solſtices to Ariſteus; but They, who read him with attention, will eaſily perceive, that he ſpeaks of the riſing of the Dog-Star. "Ariſteum in Arcadia late regnaſſe, eumque pri- "mum & apium & mellis uſum & lactis ad coagula "hominibus tradidiſſe, Solſtitialeſque ortus ſideris pri- "mum inveniſſe (55). ——— Ariſteus reigned "over all Arcadia; and was the firſt, who taught "Mankind the uſe of Bees, Honey, and Cheeſe, and "diſcovered the riſing of the Dog-Star." The moſt learned Critics have obſerved, that it ſhould either be read Solſtitialiſque ortus Sideris, or Solſtitialiſque ortus Sirii (56). Either of theſe two Readings mean the Dog-Star, as they pretend. It is certain, that This Star had a particular relation to our Ariſteus.

(55) Juſtin. lib. 13. cap. 7. pag. 313, 314.

(56) See the Juſtin, Variorum, of Mr Grævius, on this Paſſage.

The

Macris [G]. It has been ſaid, that, in reward for the Services he had done Mankind by his Knowledge of all the uſeful Arts, the Gods placed him among the Stars, and that he was the Aquarius of the Zodiac (e). The Conformity of his Hiſtory with That of Moſes has been curiouſly and learnedly ſhewn by Huetius (d). Almoſt all that Lloyd has added to Charles Stephens, on this Article, he has taken Word for Word from the Commentary of de la Cerda (e) ; yet without quoting him.

(d) Huetius, Demonſtr. Evang. Propoſ. IV. cap. 8. n. 17. pag. 110.

(e) See the Commentary of Germanicus, in Aratea Phænomena, cap. de Aquario, pag. 118.

(e) In lib. 4. Georgic. Virgilii.

The Foundation of it was this. The Heats of the Dog-Days had laid waſte the Cyclades, and produced a Plague, which the Natives intreated Ariſteus to put a ſtop to. Upon which, he went into the Iſland of Cea, and, cauſing an Altar to be built to Jupiter, offered Sacrifices to That God : He offered likewiſe Sacrifices to the peſtilential Star, and eſtabliſhed an anniverſary Worſhip of it. This produced a very good Effect ; for from thence the Eteſian Winds took their Original ; Winds, which continue for forty Days, and which temper the Heat of the Summer :

Καὶ βωμὸν ποίησε μέγαν Διὸς ἰκμαίοιο.
Ἱερά τ' εὖ ἔρρεξεν ἐν ὑψόθι ἀκρείῳ κείνῳ
Σειρίῳ, αὐτῷ τε κυνὶ δηΐ. τοῖο δ' ἔκητι
Γαῖαν ἐπιψύχουσιν ἐτήσιοι ἐκ Διὸς αὖραι
Ἡμαθα τεσσαράκοντα. Κέῳ δ' ἔτι νῦν ἱερῆες
Ἀπολλέων προπάροιθε κυνὸς ῥέζουσι θυηλάς (57).

(57) Apoll. lib. 2. Argon v. 524.

To Jove, the God, who bids the Dews deſcend,
An Altar on the Mountain's Brow he raiſed.
To Sirius, then, and Saturn's Son he pray'd.
Eteſian Gales hence fan the glowing Earth ;
And hence, e'er Sirius lifts his ſcorching Rays,
The Coan Prieſts the ſacred Rites perform.

Diodorus Siculus does not expreſsly enough declare, that the Eteſian Winds were the Effect of Ariſteus's Sacrifices (58). He ſeems to ſay, that, this Sacrifice having been made about the beginning of the Dog-Star, which falls in with the Seaſon of The Eteſian Winds, the Plague ceaſed. But it is certain, he pretends, that the raging Heat of That Star was abated by the religious Acts performed by Ariſteus. He finds matter of Wonder in it, that the ſame Perſon, whoſe Son was torn to pieces by Dogs, ſhould correct the Malignity of a Star, which is called the Dog. I leave out his Greek, and give only the Tranſlation of Rhodoman. Singularem hanc rerum converſionem, ſi quis penitius examinet, meritò demiretur. Qui enim filium à canibus diſcerptum vidit, is cœleſte ſidus canis nomine appellatum, quod hominibus exitium adferre putatur, mitigavit, & mortalibus non paucis auctor ſalutis exſtitit (59). Other Authors ſay, in plain and expreſs Terms, that Ariſteus's Devotions were the Cauſe of theſe Winds. " Canicula exoriens æſtu " eorum (60) loca & agros fructibus orbabat : & ip- " ſos morbo affectos pœnas ſufferre cogebat, eo quod " latrones recepiſſent. Quorum Rex Ariſteus, Apol- " linis & Cyrenes filius, Actæonis pater, petit à pa- " rente quo facto à calamitate civitatem poſſet libe- " rare : quem deus jubet multis hoſtiis expiare Icarii " mortem, & ab Jove petere, ut, quo tempore Cani- " cula exoriretur, dies quadraginta ventum daret, qui " æſtui caniculæ mederetur. Quod juſſum Ari- " ſteus confecit, & ab Jove impetravit ut Eteſiæ fla- " rent (61). —— The Dog-Star, riſing with great " Heat, deſtroyed the Fruits of their Ground, and " brought a Plague upon the Inhabitants, as a Pu- " niſhment for their having given reception to Thieves. " Their King Ariſteus, the Son of Apollo and Cyrene, " and Father of Actæon, enquired of his Father, by " what means he might remove this Calamity from " the State ; whom the God commanded to expiate, " with many Sacrifices, the Death of Icarius, and to " beg of Jupiter, that, at what time the Dog-Star " aroſe, he would ſend a Wind for forty Days, which " ſhould temper the Heat of the Dog-Star. Ariſteus obey- " ed, and obtained of Jupiter, that the Eteſian Winds " might blow." The Scholiaſt of Apollonius ſays expreſsly, that the Eteſian Winds began to blow upon Ariſteus's Prayers. Ὅτι ηὔξαντο ἐπνεῦσαν Αἰτησίαι ἀνήσαμένου (62). Conſult likewiſe Germanicus's Commentary on the Phænomena of Aratus (63). Let us ſpeak of the Anniverſary, which he eſtabliſhed. He ordered (64), that, every Year, the Prieſts of Cea ſhould offer Sacrifices, before the riſing of the Dog-Star, and that the Inhabitants ſhould arm themſelves to obſerve the riſing of This Conſtellation, and offer Sacrifice to it. Ἐνομοθέτησε γὰρ τοῖς κώοις (read κείοις) κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν μεθ' ὅπλων ἐπιτηρεῖν τὴν ἐπιτολὴν τῦ κυνὸς, καὶ θύειν αὐτῷ (65). Cicero ſays, that they expected to foreſee, by obſerving This Planet, whether the Year would prove healthful, or not. Ceos accepimus ortum caniculæ diligenter quotannis ſolere ſervare, conjecturamque capere, ut ſcribit Ponticus Heraclides, ſalubriſne an peſtilens annus futurus ſit (66). Manilius imputes the ſame to the Cilicians (67). I know not whether the Inhabitants of Calabria, who offered up Vows to This Star, borrowed This Act of Religion, mediately or immediately, from Ariſteus :

—— ſic cum ſtabulis & meſſibus ingens
Ira deum & Calabri populator Sirius arvi
Incubuit, coit agreſtum manus inſcia priſcum
In nemus, & miſeris dictat pia vota Sacerdos (68).

(65) Schol. Apollon. in lib. 2. ver. 528.

(66) Cicero, de Divinat. l. 1. cap. 57.

(67) Manil. Aſtronom. lib. 1. p. 13.

(68) Valer. Flaccus, Argon. lib. 1. ver. 682.

So when the Dog-Star o'er Calabria reigns,
And parches with exceſſive Heat her Plains,
The ſtupid Peaſants, ſtruck with annual Fear,
Aſſembled in ſome ancient Grove appear ;
In ſuperſtitious Rites they paſs the Day,
And, as the Prieſt directs, the Wretches pray.

What Superſtition ! and yet This was not the moſt extravagant in Paganiſm. By the way, the Paſſage of Juſtin, which I have cited in the beginning of this Remark, will furniſh us with an Incident here. Mr Faber thought himſelf the firſt, who underſtood it. " Juſtin, ſays he, does not pretend to ſay, that " Ariſteus taught the uſe of Milk ; That would have " been contrary to Truth, and all Antiquity ; he " ſpeaks only of the Art of curdling Milk : Sed " oſtendiſſe hominibus qua arte coagulum ex lacte con- " fici conformarique poſſet (69). Neither does he " pretend, that Ariſteus invented the uſe of Honey ; " Milk and Honey ſerved to nouriſh the greateſt of " the Gods. Nam Jupiter, pater ille hominumque " Deumque, melle nutritus eſt & lacte (70). He " ſpeaks, then, of the Art of curdling Milk with Ho- " ney." Ergo aliud docuit Ariſteus, ſcilicet coagulum fieri ex mixtura, ſeu, ut Græci vocant, cramate mellis & lactis. Hunc locum à nemine hactenus intellectum arbitror (71). This Explanation ſeems to me very ingenious ; but the Reaſons, on which it is grounded, prove too much ; for, if the ancient Tradition concerning the Food, with which Jupiter was nouriſhed during his Infancy, prevented Juſtin from ſaying, that Ariſteus taught Men the uſe of Honey, he would not have affirmed, that Gargoris, King of the Cynetes (72), or Cunetes, was the firſt Inventor of Honey ; and yet he has ſaid ſo plainly, and without leaving room to give two different Senſes to his Words ; Quorum (Cunetum) Rex vetuſtiſſimus Gargoris mellis colligendi uſum primus invenit (73). It cannot, I think, be pretended, that Juſtin paid ſuch a Regard to poetical Traditions, that he was cautious of advancing things, which confute them. A great Number of Authors have ſaid, that Ariſteus invented Honey ; their Words imply ſo much expreſsly, and cannot admit of this Signification, he invented a Mixture of Honey and Milk, which formed a Curd. It may reaſonably, then, be concluded, that Juſtin meant as They did, and that he conſidered not what the Poets had ſaid concerning Jupiter's Milk and Honey. Obſerve, by the way, that Ariſteus's Inventions conſiſted ſometimes in Mixtures ; for he was the firſt, who taught the Thracians to mix Honey with Wine. Ariſteum primum omnium in eadem gente mel miſcuiſſe vino, ſuavitate præcipua utriuſque naturæ ſponte provenientis (74).

(69) Tanaq. Faber. Not. in Juſtin. l. 13. cap. 7.

(70) Id. ib.

(71) Id. ib.

(72) A People of Spain.

(73) Juſtin. lib. 44, c. 4.

(74) Plin. l. 14. c 4. pag. 127.

[G] His Daughter Macris.] Very few Authors mention her ; but This is Apollonius's Account of her (75). It was She, who ſet little Bacchus upon her knee, after Mercury had reſcued him from the Flames ; and it was ſhe, who fed him with Honey. She lived at that time in the Center of the Iſland of Eubœa ; ſhe expoſed herſelf to the Indignation of Juno, by the good

(75) Apoll. Argon l. 4. ver. 1131, & ſeq.

(59) Id. ib. pag. 268.

(60) So it ſhould be read, and not eorum. See Salmaſ. in Solin. p. 144.

(61) Hygin. Poët. Aſtron. lib. 2. cap. 4. pag. 365.

(62) Schol. Apoll. in lib. 2. ver. 500.

(63) German. in Aratea Phænom. in Aquar. p. 118, 119.

(64) Apoll. lib. 2. ver. 528. you will find his Words, above, Citat. (57).

Digitized by Google

good Offices ſhe performed to This Child, and was forced to leave the Country, and hide herſelf in a Cave, in the Iſland of the Pheacians, where ſhe was a great Benefactreſs to the Inhabitants.

—— Καὶ πόρεν ὄλβον ἀθέσφατον, ἐννάετησιν.

(76) Id. ib. ver. 1140.

Et infinitis inſularios opibus beavit (76).

Let us conclude from hence, that Ariſteus, Uncle-in-Law to Bacchus (77), was much elder than Bacchus himſelf. This does not confute what Diodorus Siculus ſays concerning the Admiſſion of Ariſteus into the Orgies, &c. nor, what others ſuppoſe, that he commanded ſome Troops in Bacchus's Army (78); for Order requires, that the Superiority ſhould ever belong to a Son of Jupiter, tho' the Younger Perſon.

(77) He was the Husband of Autonoë, Siſter of the Mother of Bacchus.

(78) Nonnus, Dionyſiacor. lib. 13.

ARISTEUS, the Geometrician, lived before Euclid, and compoſed Works, which met with Eſteem. See, below, a fine Paſſage of Pappus [A].

[A] A fine Paſſage of Pappus.] I term it ſo, becauſe it informs us of a very curious Particular relating to Euclid; which is, that this great Geometrician, (contrary to what Apollonius Pergæus had alledged) out of reſpect to Ariſteus, and having a particular Eſteem for All, who had contributed to the Improvement of the Mathematical Sciences, would not ſeem to be more expert in the Knowledge of Conics than He. I have taken Notice of this before (1). Let us produce the Words of Pappus. " Ariſteus " autem, qui ſcribit ea quæ ad hoc uſque tempus " tradita ſunt ſolidorum libros quinque, conicis " cohærentes vocavit ----- Euclides autem ſecutus " Ariſteum ſcriptorem luculentum in iis quæ de " conicis tradiderat, neque antevertens, neque volens " eorum tractationem deſtruere, cum mitiſſimus " eſſet & benignus erga omnes, præſertim eos qui " mathematicas diſciplinas aliqua ex parte augere " & amplificare poſſent, ut par eſt, & nullo modo " infenſus ſed accuratus, non arrogans velut hic " (Apollonius Pergæus) quantum oſtendi potuit de " loco per ejus conica memoriæ prodidit (2).

(1) In Remark (D) of the Article APOLLONIUS (PERGÆUS), Citat. (31).

(2) Pappus, in Procemio Mathemat. Collect.

ARISTEAS, the Proconneſian. Mr Moreri, contenting himſelf with telling us, that he lived in the Time of Cyrus [A], and that he compoſed the Hiſtory of the Arimaſpians, and a Treatiſe of the Origin of the Gods, the whole filled with Fables [B], has omitted what was moſt ſingular in This Article. Let us therefore ſupply it as follows, and ſay, That This Ariſteas, dying in his own Country (a), was ſeen, the very ſame Day, and Hour, reading Lectures in Sicily. This Prodigy being ſeveral times renewed, and during ſeveral Years, obliged the Sicilians to build a Temple, and offer Sacrifices, to Him (b). Herodotus has ſpoken at large of this Miracle [C]. Pliny relates, that, in the Iſland of Proconneſus, the Soul of Ariſteas

(a) The Iſland of Proconneſus in the Propontis.

(b) Taken from Apollonius Dyſcolus Hiſtor. Comment. cap. 2.

[A] He lived in the Time of Cyrus.] This is proved by the Teſtimony of Suidas. Note, that Cyrus began to reign in Perſia in the LVth Olympiad. Voſſius infers from hence, that Suidas, in ſaying, on the one ſide, that Ariſteas flouriſhed in the Lth Olympiad, and, on the other, that This was in the Time of Cyrus, has not obſerved exactneſs (1). The Anonymous Author, who has ſettled the Olympiads, places Ariſteas in the Lth. This does not agree with what others have ſaid; viz. that Homer was his Diſciple (2). Tatian makes him later than Homer (3), and was cenſured for it by Voſſius, as too favourable, in this Point, to the Good Cauſe, to wit, that Homer's Age was conſiderably later than That of Moſes (4). This Cenſure ſeems to me to be but weakly founded; for Tatian might juſtly make uſe of a Tradition, which was eſtabliſhed among the Pagans. It has been ſaid, we ſee, that our Ariſteas was the Preceptor of Homer; and we read, in Herodotus, that Ariſteas appeared in the World, three Ages after he had compoſed a Poem (5); ſo that it was not agreed, that he flouriſhed in the Time of Cyrus. Obſerve, that Herodotus was born in the firſt Year of the LXXIVth Olympiad, and that he does not mention this laſt Appearance of Ariſteas as a thing which had lately happened; but on the contrary, intimates, that the Tradition of the Metapontines, concerning this Adventure, was of long ſtanding; for he does not ſay, that they marked the Time of it.

(1) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Græc. lib. 4. cap. 2, pag. 433.

(2) Strab. lib. 14, pag. 439.

(3) Tatian. Orat. ad Græcos, apud Voſſ. ib. lib. 1, cap. 1. pag. 7.

(4) Voſſ. ib. pag. 6.

(5) Herod. lib. 4. c. 14.

[B] The whole filled with Fables.] Aulus Gellius relates, that, being at Brunduſium, he ſaw ſeveral Bales of Books expoſed to ſale, and that he was permitted to purchaſe as many as he pleaſed at a low Price; that They were all the Works of Greek Authors, who had collected ſeveral ſurprizing and incredible Fables; as Ariſteas, Iſigonus, Cteſias, Oneſicritus, Polyſtephanus, and Hegeſias; that he bought ſeveral of them; out of which he made ſeveral Extracts, which he inſerted in his Work. Faſces librorum venalium expoſitos vidimus. Atque ego avidè ſtatim pergo ad libros. Erant autem iſti omnes libri Græci miraculorum fabularumque pleni: res inauditæ, incredulæ: ſcriptores veteres non parvæ auctoritatis, Ariſteas Proconneſius, & Iſigonus Nicæenſis, & Cteſias, & Oneſicritus, & Polyſtephanus, & Hegeſias. Ipſa autem volumina ex diutino ſitu ſqualebant, & habitu adſpectuque tetro erant. Acceſſi tamen, percunctatuſque precium ſum: &, adductus mira atque inſperata vilitate, libros plurimos ære pauco emo; eoſque omnes duabus proximis noctibus curſim tranſeo: atque in legendo carpſi exinde quædam, & notavi mirabilia & ſcriptoribus fere noſtris intentata; eaque his commentariis adſperſi (6). The reſt of this Chapter of Aulus Gellius is full of Chimerical Narrations, which he had read in Thoſe Authors, or in Pliny. You are to know, that the Hiſtory of the Arimaſpians, compoſed by Ariſteas, was a Poem (7). You will perhaps ſay, how do we know but the Author wrote it without intending it ſhould be taken for Truth? Arieſto had no ſuch Intention. Why do we not judge of the Ancient Poets, as of Him in this Point? I reply, that Ariſteas had no Intention of diverting his Readers with Reports, which he deſigned ſhould be looked upon as Fables, becauſe his Aim, in theſe Stories, was to cure the Incredulity he had obſerved in the People. No One believed he was a Philoſopher; and the Reaſon was, becauſe he denied having ever been inſtructed (8). He removed this objection, by pretending, that his Soul had left his Body, and that, taking it's flight towards Heaven, it had ſurveyed all the Greek and Barbarian Countries, and finiſhed its Courſe in the Hyperborean Climates. He boaſted to have, by this means, diſcovered the Situation of Places, the Cuſtoms of the Inhabitants, the natural Qualities of the Elements, &c. and alſo to have obſerved the Heavens more exactly, than the Earth. Was not this producing his Tales as ſo many credential Letters? Did he not, by this, endeavour to eſtabliſh an Authority, which ſhould give credit to every thing elſe he had to ſay? He muſt, then, have propoſed theſe Facts as true. And they were received as ſuch; for more Credit was given to This Man, than to thoſe Philoſophers, who dogmatized without any diſguiſe (9). Note, that Dionyſius Halicarnaſſenſis obſerves, that it was not univerſally believed, that our Ariſteas was Author of the Books, which went under his Name (10).

(6) Aulus Gellius, lib. 9, cap. 4. pag. 229. Note, that Huetius, in Demonſt. Evangel. Prop. 9, cap. 142, pag. 103?, cites this Paſſage of Aulus Gellius, as importing, that what had been ſaid of Ariſteus was falſe. This is not the Thought of Aulus Gellius.

(7) Herodot. lib. 4, c. 13, 14. Strabo, lib. 1, pag. 15. & l. 13, pag. 405.

(8) Max. Tyrius, Diſſert. 22, pag. 223.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 224.

[C] Herodotus has ſpoken at large of this Miracle] This is the Sum of his Relation. Ariſteas, one of the chief Men of the Iſland of Proconneſus, went one Day into a Fuller's Houſe, and died there. The Fuller ſhut up his Doors, and went and informed Ariſteas's Relations of his Death. This News was ſoon ſpread all over the City; but, whilſt this was the common Diſcourſe, there came one, who affirmed, that he had met Ariſteas going to Cyzicus (11), and that he had ſpoken with him. His Relations went to the Fuller's Houſe, with Neceſſaries for his Funeral, but found him not, either dead, or alive. He appeared at the end of ſeven Years, and compoſed the Poem of the Arimaſpians; after which he

(10) Dionyſ. Halicarn. in judicio de Thucyd. cap. 25, pag. 384.

(11) According to Plutarch, in Romulo, pag. 36, there were, who affirmed, that they ſaw him on the Road to Crotona.

Digitized by Google

Aristeas was seen to come out of his Mouth, in the Shape of a Raven (c). Others say, that his Soul went in and out of his Body at Pleasure [D]. Strabo makes This Aristeas one of the greatest Sorcerers that ever was (d). Some say, that, to overcome the Incredulity of the People, with Regard to his Doctrine, he persuaded them, that his Soul had travelled into several Countries, separate from his Body (e). Six of his Verses are found in the Treatise of Longinus (f). Some others are found in the Chiliads of Tzetzes (g). He is twice cited in Pausanias (h). By the way, They, who pretend, that he was not quite dead, when his Soul was travelling (i), do not much lessen the Wonderfulness of the Prodigy. It is unnecessary to observe, that Plutarch laughed at this fine Story (k). Gyraldus has been guilty of some Mistakes [E].

(c) Plin. lib. 7. cap. 52. pag. 85.
(d) Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 405.
(e) See Remark [B].
(f) Longin. περὶ ὕψους, §. 9. p. 20.
(g) Tzetzes chil. 7. Hist. pag. 144. See Casaub. on Athenæus, lib. 1. pag. 13.
(h) Pausan. lib. 1. p. 22. & lib. 5. pag. 154.
(i) Maxim. Tyrius, Orat. 28. p. 282.
(k) Plut. in Romulo, p. 35.

he disappeared. Two or three Ages after, he shewed himself to the Inhabitants of Metapontus (12), and commanded them to build an Altar to Apollo, and to erect a Statue, near it, in honour of Aristeas the Proconnesian. He told them, that they were the only Italians, whom Apollo had honoured with a Visit, and that he had accompanied him in That Journey, not in the Shape of Aristeas, but in That of a Raven; and, having said this, he disappeared. The Metapontines enquired of the Oracle at Delphi what this meant: They were answered, that they would do well to obey; accordingly they executed his Orders (13). The Historian testifies, that, in his Time, there was a Statue of Aristeas in the Market-Place of Metapontus, near the Altar of Apollo, surrounded with Lawrel Trees. Let us add to this a Fact reported by Athenæus. After the return of Aristeas (14), the Metapontines dedicated a brazen Lawrel to Apollo. This Lawrel having spoken, at the Time when a Dancer of Thessaly approached the Market-Place of Metapontum, the Soothsayers, who were present, were immediately seized with such Fury, that they tore the Woman in Pieces. Note, that she had received a sacred Present from Philomelus, which was a golden Crown of Lawrel; which the Inhabitants of Lampsacus had consecrated in the Temple of Delphi (15). Note also, that Ænæas Gazæus, citing the Narrative of Herodotus, adds this Circumstance; that the Sacrifices of the Metapontines were esteemed to belong in common to Apollo and Aristeas, as two Deities (16). Origen observes, that Apollo commanded This Aristeas to be honoured as a God by the Inhabitants of Metapontus (17). Meursius pretends, that Athenagoras reproached the Pagans with having honoured Aristeas in the Island of Chios, and with having taken him for the same God as Apollo and Jupiter (18). Χίοι Ἀρισέαν τὸν Δυσίου καὶ Δία καὶ Ἀπόλλω νομίζοντες (19). Chii Aristeam, quem & Jovem arbitrantur & Apollinem. Huetius imagines, with much probability, that, instead Χίοι, it should be read Χεῖοι, and that the Passage relates to Aristeus, the Son of Apollo and Cyrene (20); for this latter was worshiped in the Island of Cea (21). Suffridus understands the Passage of Athenagoras of this latter (22). Huetius shews, that ARISTEUS and ARISTEAS have been often mistaken one for the other (23).

They, who will have all Romances founded on some true Story, may suppose, that Aristeas, having counterfeited the dead Man in the Fuller's House, found means to get out, in the Master's Absence, and to convey himself privately out of the Town; and that, having hid himself for some Years, he returned thither again, and produced a Poem, in which he celebrated his Extasies (24); which he was very well pleased should be taken in the literal, and not in the poetical Sense, in which we understand these Verses of Horace:

Quo me Bacche rapis tui
Plenum, quæ in nemora aut quos agor in specus
Velox mente nova (25).

God of Wine, resistless Pow'r,
Whither will you hurry me,
Full of the Deity,
Transported with a Rage unknown before?
Whither, whither, must I rove?
To what wild Cave, what distant Grove?
Anonym.

(12) A Town of Italy.
(13) Herod. l. 4. c. 14.
(14) He said, that he had been as far as the Country of the Hyperboreans. Athen. lib. 13. pag. 605.
(15) Id. ib.
(16) Æneas Gazæus, in Theophrast. apud Meurs. Not. in Apollon. Dyscol. pag. 87.
(17) Orig. contra Cels. lib. 3.
(18) Meurs. Not. in Apoll. Dysc. pag. 87.
(19) Athen. Legat. pro Christianis, pag. 28.
(20) Huet. Demonstr. Evang. Prop. 9. cap. 142. pag. 1037. Voss. de Theolog. Gent. lib. 7. cap. 10. p. 349, has the same Thought
(21) See Remark [C] of the foregoing Article, Citation (23).
(22) Suffridus, Not. in Athen. Legat. p. 242.
(23) Huet. ubi supra, & pag. 212.
(24) Ἔφη δὲ Ἀριστέας — ἀτιμασθεὶς ἐς Ἰσσηδόνας Φοιβόλαμπτος γενόμενος. Aristeas memoravit se Phœbo instinctum venisse ad Issedonas. Herod. lib. 4. cap. 14.
(25) Horat. lib. 3. Od. 25.
(26) Huet. ubi supra pag. 1038.
(27) Id. ib. pag. 1039.
(28) Citations (8) and (9).
(29) Hesychius Illustr. de his qui Eruditionis fama claruere.
(30) Suidas in Ἀρίστεος.
(31) Greg. Girald. Dial. III. de Historia Poetarum pag. 85.
(32) Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 405.
(33) In the Remark [C] from the beginning to Citation (13).

and several others, which Huetius mentions (26). I cannot easily agree with him, that Maximus Tyrius confirms the Conjecture, to wit, that Aristeas did not expect to be understood in a literal Sense (27). Maximus Tyrius supposes quite the contrary; as we have seen before (28). As for his Appearance to the Metapontines, we may suppose, that an Impostor persuaded them of what Herodotus relates; for they were Pythagoreans, and consequently believed the Transmigration of Souls.

[D] Others say, that his Soul went in and out of his Body at Pleasure.] This was said by Hesychius Illustrius, and, after him, by Suidas. These are their Words. Ἀρίστεα τὸ Προκοννήσιόν φασὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἐξιέναι ὁτὲ ἐθέλοι, καὶ ἐπανιέναι πάλιν (29). Aristeæ Proconnesii animam è corpore excessisse, ubi vellet, rursusque rediisse fabulantur. Τοῦτον φασὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ὅταν ἐθέλοι ἐξιέναι καὶ ἐπανιέναι πάλιν (30). Hujus animam, quoties voluisset, exiisse & rediisse dicunt.

[E] Gyraldus has been guilty of some Mistakes.] I. He makes Strabo say, that the Eloquence and Address of Aristeas were of great Force. Strabo Aristeam facundia & blanditiis vehementem fuisse prodidit (31). This is to understand nothing of This Greek, ἀνὴρ γόης εἴ τις ἄλλος, second to none in Sorcery. II. He makes Herodotus say, that Aristeas, having ordered the Metapontines to erect, at the same time, an Altar to Apollo, and a Statue to himself, and having at last declared to them, that he was a Raven, was translated before their Eyes. This is misunderstanding Herodotus's Relation. I refer you to it (33). III. He says, that Plutarch approves of Herodotus's Narrative. This is false; Plutarch touches upon it but lightly, and makes a remarkable Change in the Circumstances of the Place; and then rejects the whole as a Fable.

ARISTIDES, surnamed the Just, flourished at Athens at the same time with Themistocles. They were greatly at variance; and it appeared, in their Case, that the being superior to another in Virtue is not always the Means of being so in Reputation [A]. The Vehemence of Themistocles's Eloquence made him triumph over the Justice of his Rival. It is remarkable, that one of Those, who voted for the Banishment

[A] The being superior to another in Virtue is not always the means of being so in Reputation.] This Thought is borrowed from Cornelius Nepos; "In his "cognitum est, quanto antistaret eloquentia innocen-"tiæ; quamquam enim adeo excellebat Aristides ab-"stinentia, ut unus post hominum memoriam, quod "quidem nos audierimus, cognomine Justus sit "appellatus, tamen à Themistocle collabefactus testula "illa exilio decem annorum multatus est (1). - - - - -
"In Them was seen the Advantage of Eloquence above "Innocence; for, though Aristides was so remarkably "Virtuous, as alone (at least as far as I can remem- "ber) to have obtained the Sirname of Just, yet, "through the Influence, and by the Vote, of Themi-"stocles, he suffered a ten Years Banishment." Be as honest as you please; if you are not Master of a noisy, blustering, Eloquence, you may depend upon being foiled, though you come in Competition with the basest Fellow of the Town.

(1) Corn. Nepos, in vita Aristidis.

Digitized by Google

niſhment of Ariſtides, gave as his Reaſon the great Reputation for Integrity, which he ſaw him enjoy [B]. But there is ſomething ſtill more remarkable. This great Man, who ſo exactly obſerved the Rules of Equity, in private Affairs, and between Man and Man, did not ſcruple to prefer the Uſeful to the Honeſt, in Affairs relating to the State [C]. He lived in great Poverty, and gloried in it [D]. He left neither ſufficient to portion his Daughters, nor to defray the Expences of his Funeral. The Commonwealth was at the Expence of both (a). He was ſo generous, as not to join with the Enemies of Themiſtocles at a time, when there was Reaſon to believe they would cruſh him (b): For Themiſtocles, was condemned to Baniſhment, without Ariſtides's appearing againſt him. Authors differ about Ariſtides's Death (c); but Seneca has undoubtedly committed a groſs Error in relation to it [E]. We ſhall obſerve, in the Article ARTEMIDORUS, that a Grandſon of Ariſtides gained his Living by telling Fortunes by Dreams.

(a) Plut. in Ariſtide, pag. 335.

(b) Ib. pag. 334.

(c) He died the ſecond Year of the LXXVIIIth Olympiad; which was the fourth after the Baniſhment of Themiſtocles. Cornel. Nepos, in ejus vita.

[B] One of Thoſe, who voted for the Baniſhment of Ariſtides, gave as his Reaſon, the great Reputation for Integrity he ſaw him enjoy.] A Citizen of Athens, who gave his Vote that Ariſtides ſhould be baniſhed, being asked his Reaſon by Ariſtides himſelf, anſwered very frankly; I have no Knowledge of the Man; but he diſpleaſes me by aſpiring to the Sirname of Juſt. "Cedenſque animadverteret quemdam ſcribentem, ut patria pelleretur, quæſiſſe ab eo dicitur; Quare id faceret, aut quid Ariſtides commiſiſſet, cur tanta pœna dignus duceretur. Cui ille reſpondit; Se ignorare Ariſtidem, ſed ſibi non placere, quod cupide elaboraſſet, ut præter cæteros Juſtus appellaretur (2)." Thouſands think like this Athenian, but have not his Candor. Every thing, which excels, diſpleaſes them: They have a more favourable Regard for a Common, than a diſtinguiſhed, Virtue. The Reputation of Ariſtides, which the Athenians, one Day, gave ſuch authentic Teſtimony of, in his Preſence (3), has not experienced the Injury of Time, but has preſerved itſelf in all Ages; Read this Paſſage of Auſonius:

(2) Id. ib.

(3) See the beginning of Remark [H] of the Article AMPHIARAUS.

Nec ſola antiquos oſtentat Roma Catones:
Aut unus tantum juſti ſpectator & æqui
Pollet Ariſtides, veteresque illuſtrat Athenas (4).

Nor Rome alone her ancient Catos boaſts;
Nor He *, whoſe Virtues raiſed the Athenian Name,
Claims the ſole Merit, to be Good, and Juſt.

(4) Auſon. in Moſellâ, ver. 386. pag. 415.

* Ariſtides.

[C] He did not ſcruple to prefer the Uſeful to the Honeſt, in Affairs relating to the State.] This is a freſh Example of what we have before (5) obſerved concerning PUBLIC RELIGION. Ariſtides had made the Athenians ſwear to perform a certain thing, and had himſelf taken an Oath in their Name. Afterwards he counſelled them to act as they ſhould think fit for the Publick Good, and leave the Weight of Perjury to him alone, whilſt they themſelves took Advantage of the favourable Circumſtances, which Fortune preſented them. This was his general Maxim, as Theophraſtus obſerves: Καθ' ὅλην δ' ὁ Θεόφραστος φησι τὸν ἄνδρα τοῦτον περὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα καὶ τὰς πολίτας ἁπλῶς ὄντα δίκαιον, ἐν τοῖς κοινοῖς πολλὰ πράξαι πρὸς τὴν ὑπόθεσιν τῆς πολιτείας ὡς συχνῆς ἀδικίας δεομένην (6). This Great Man, ſays Theophraſtus, in private Affairs, and towards his Fellow-Citizens, was Juſtice itſelf; But, in Affairs, which regarded the Commonwealth, he did many Things not ſtrictly juſt, in compliance with the Exigencies of the State. Unhappy Condition of Thoſe at the Helm! The Good of the State requires more than one or two unjuſt Actions in a Man's Life; perhaps Ariſtides did not come off for an hundred. Obſerve, that Cicero gives us a quite different Idea of him (7).

(5) In Remark [H] of the Article AGESILAUS II.

(6) Apud. Plutarch. in Ariſt. pag. 334. A.

(7) Cicero de Officiis, lib. 3. cap. 11. pag. 318.

[D] He lived in great Poverty, and gloried in it.] He had a very rich Relation, whoſe Name was Callias, who, finding himſelf publickly accuſed of not ſupplying him, wherewith to ſupport Life (8), deſired him to declare, before the Judges, whether it was not true, that he never would receive the Sums, he had offered him, at ſeveral Times, and whether he had not always replied, that he gloried more in his Poverty, than Callias in his Riches; he declared it was true. His Reaſon was, that there were numbers, who made either a good or a bad uſe of their Riches, but that it was rare to find a Perſon, who bore his Poverty with a noble Mind (9). It was a Principle, then, of Pride, or Singularity, will ſome ſay, which made him deſpiſe Riches. It is a pleaſure to covetous and ambitious Perſons to be able to object This to Thoſe, who are not like themſelves. But what do they gain by it? If it ſhould be granted, that all Men act from a Principle of ſelf-love, is it nothing to draw one's Glory rather from This Action or Conduct, than from That? And is not This a ſufficient Motive to admire the one, and deſpiſe the other? Ælian relates a Particular, which, at firſt Sight, ſeems inconſiſtent with the notorious Poverty of Ariſtides: He ſays, that Thoſe, who were betrothed to his Daughters, refuſed to marry them after his Death, when his extream Poverty came to be known (10). He ſeems to me to be miſtaken in his Reaſoning; Ariſtides's Poverty was known in his Life time, but it was known, at the ſame time, that he was in great Credit. Now the moſt mercenary and intereſted Minds think it no diſadvantageous Match, to marry the Daughter of a Favourite, in her very Shift, who has many profitable Poſts at his Diſpoſal. This might make Ariſtides's Daughters find Matches in his Life time without a Penny of Portion; but, after his Death, there was no more to hope for; ſo that they were caſt off for want of Money. A Great Wit (11) puts this Judicious Reflexion in the Mouth of a Favourite; Such a Perſon would think himſelf honoured with my Alliance upon equal Terms, and yet thinks he makes a Sacrifice my to Favour, in demanding my Niece. So true it is, that, when any one courts the Alliance of a Perſon in great Credit, he conſiders more his own Advancement, than what Money he may gain by Marriage.

(8) The People concluded, from ſeeing Ariſtides ſo ill clad, that he wanted Bread Plut. pag. 334

(9) Id. ib.

A REFLEXION on Self-love, and on the Deſire of marrying the Daughters of Favourites.

(10) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 10. c. 15.

(11) La Demoiſelle des Jardins, in her Exiles of the Court of Auguſtus.

[E] Seneca has undoubtedly committed a groſs Error in relation to his Death.] Ariſtides, according to him, was condemned to die: All, who met him going to the Place of Execution, ſighed, and turned down their Eyes to the Ground, except one Raſcal, who ſpit in his Face. Ariſtides ſmiled, and ſaid to the Officers, who guarded him; Adviſe that Fellow never to open his Mouth ſo villainouſly again. Thus Seneca relates the Matter. Ducebatur Athenis ad ſupplicium Ariſtides, cui quiſquis occurrerat, dejiciebat oculos, & ingemiſcebat, non tanquam in hominem juſtum, ſed tanquam in ipſam juſtitiam animadverteretur. Inventus eſt tamen, qui faciem ejus inſpueret: poterat ab hoc moleſte ferre, quod ſciebat neminem id aujurum puri oris. At ille abſterſit faciem, & ſubridens ait comitanti ſe magiſtratui, admone iſtum ne poſtea tam improbe oſcitet (12). Lipſius has very judiciouſly obſerved, on this Paſſage, that Seneca has miſtaken one Perſon for another, and has aſcribed to Ariſtides, what he ſhould have applied to Phocion. It was Phocion, who was condemned to die; it was He, who was ſpit on, as they were leading him to Priſon, where he was to drink Poiſon; and it was He, who, turning himſelf to the Officers, who attended him, demanded, if none of them would chaſtize the Inſolence of the Fellow (13). Seneca has given theſe Words his own Turn: Verba noſter etiam per argutiolam invertit (14). Probably this is not the firſt time he has altered both the Subject and the Words; it were to be wiſhed he were the only Perſon, who has taken this Liberty. People are very apt to report a good Saying, not as it was ſpoken at firſt, but according to the Form, which they believe to be the beſt. That he is deceived in the main, is plain from Plutarch's Account. That Hiſtorian confeſſes, that ſome one had ſaid, that Ariſtides died in exile, but he confutes it (15); what Seneca ſays, may be rejected, then, with much greater Reaſon, as a Fable. Note, that Lancelot of Perouſa has not cenſured this Miſtake: perhaps (12) Senec. Conſol. ad Helviam, cap. 13. pag. 785.

(13) Plut in Phocione.

(14) Lipſ. in Seneca, Conſol. ad Helviam, pag. 785.

(15) Plut. in Ariſtide, pag. 335.

Digitized by Google

perhaps he was aware of it, but chose to take it for granted, that he might have ground to maintain, that That Age was extreamly unjust, since the Senate of Athens caused a Man of such eminent Virtues to be put to death (16).

(16) See l'Hoggidì del Padre secondo Lancello da Perugia, Tom. 2. pag. 399, &c.

ARISTO, a Native of the Isle of Chios, departed a little from the Sentiments of his Master Zeno, who was Head of the Stoics, as may be seen in Moreri's Dictionary, together with some of his Doctrines. Not to repeat what is to be found there, I shall content my self with observing, that the Reason, why he rejected Logic and Natural Philosophy, was, because he judged That Logic was useless, and that Natural Philosophy was beyond our Comprehension (a). I add, that, having espoused Moral Philosophy at first, he afterwards retrenched much of it: For he would not have People teach any thing concerning the particular Duties of a Husband to his Wife, or a Father to his Children, or a Master to his Servants; but confine themselves to Lectures upon Wisdom in general. Seneca justly blames him for this [A]; and shews, that particular Precepts, and Sentences, may be of wonderful Use [B]. Aristo said, that the Nature of God was inconceiveable [C]. This induces us to believe, that he absolutely neglected the Contemplation of Divine Matters. He opposed

(a) Λέγων τὸν μὲν εἶναι ὑπὲρ ἡμᾶς, τὸν δ' οὐδὲν πρὸς ἡμᾶς. Dicens alterum quidem esse supra nos, alterum vero nihil ad nos. Diog. Laert. lib. 7. n. 161.

[A] He afterwards retrenched much of it: —— Seneca justly blames him for this.] Read these Words: " Aristo Chius non tantum supervacuas esse dixit na- " turalem & rationalem, sed etiam contrarias: mo- " ralem quoque, quam solam reliquerat, circumcidit. " Nam eum locum, qui monitiones continet, sustu- " lit, & pædagogi esse dixit, non Philosophi: tan- " quam quidquam aliud sit sapiens quam humani ge- " neris pædagogus (1). —— Aristo the Chian said, " that Natural and Rational Philosophy were not only " superfluous, but contradictory; and Moral Philosophy, " the only Branch he left, he curtailed. For he took " away the preceptive Part of it, saying, it belonged " to Pædagogues, not to Philosophers; as if a Philo- " sopher were any thing else, than a Pædagogue of hu- " man kind." He confutes him at large in another place (2).

(1) Seneca, Epist. 89. pag. 376. See also Epist. 94. & Sextus Emp. adverf. Mathem. lib. 7.

(2) Ib. Epist. 94.

[B] Particular Precepts, and Sentences, may be of wonderful Use.] They strongly affect the Mind, he says, when they are contracted in Verse or in Prose, and kindle the Seeds of Honour, which are natural to our Souls. " Ipsa, quæ præcipiuntur, per se " multum habent ponderis: utique si aut carmini " intexta sunt, aut prosa oratione in sententiam co- " arctata. Sicut illa Catoniana: Emas, non quod opus " est, sed quod necesse est. Quod non opus est, asse " carum est. Qualia sunt illa, aut reddita oraculo, aut " similia: Tempori parce; Te nosce. Numquid ratio- " nem exiges, cum tibi aliquis hos dixerit versus?

Injuriarum remedium est oblivio.
Audentes fortuna juvat.
Piger sibi ipse obstat.

" Advocatum ista non quærunt: affectus ipsos tan- " gunt, & natura vim suam exercente proficiunt. " Omnium honestarum rerum semina animi gerunt, " quæ admonitione excitantur: non aliter quam scin- " tilla, flatu levi adjuta, ignem suum explicat (3). - - - - " Precepts are of great Weight, when they are com- " prehended in a Verse, or reduced to a Sentence in " Prose. Such is That of Cato; Buy, not what is " expedient, but what is necessary; and What is use- " less, is dear at the smallest Price. Such likewise are " these, either delivered by an Oracle, or seemingly " such; Improve Time; Know yourself. Do you " demand a Reason, when such Sentences as these are " repeated to you?

(3) Id. ib. pag. 387.

Injuries are repaired by being forgot.
Faint Heart never won fair Lady.
Lazy Folks take most Pains.

" Such Sayings want no Advocate. They touch the " Passions, and operate by the force of Nature. The " Seeds of Virtue are implanted in the Mind, and are " excited by Precept; in like manner as a Spark of " Fire is kindled, by a Breath of Air, into a Flame." He adds, that, sometimes, they discover their Force in the most ignorant; and that, Agrippa, the Favourite of Augustus, acknowledged himself very much indebted to an Apophthegm on Concord. " Quis " negaverit feriri quibusdam præceptis efficaciter " etiam imperitissimos? velut his brevissimis vocibus, " sed multum habentibus ponderis;

- - - - - - - - nihil nimis.
Avarus animus nullo satiatur lucro.
Ab alio expectes, alteri quod feceris.

" Hæc cum ictu quodam audimus, nec ulli licet du- " bitare, aut interrogare - - - - - M. Agrippa, vir " ingentis animi, qui solus, ex his, quos civilia bella " claros potentesque fecerunt, felix in publicum fuit, " dicere solebat, multum se huic debere sententiæ: " Nam concordia parvæ res crescunt; discordia maximæ " dilabuntur. Hac se alebat & fratrem, & amicum, " optimum factum (4). - - - - - Who will deny, that " the most ignorant have been effectually struck by cer- " tain Precepts; such as these short, but weighty, " Sayings.

(4) Id. ib. pag. 388.

Too much of one thing is good for nothing.
A covetous Mind is never satisfied with Gain.
The Measure you mete to others, expect to have measured to you again.

" We are struck, when we hear such Sayings, nor is " there any room for Doubt, or Question. - - - - - - - " Marcus Agrippa, a Person of a great Soul, and the " only one, among those, who have rose by Civil Wars, " who was successful to the Public Good, was wont " to say, that he was much indebted to this Saying; " By Concord small Things encrease; by Discord " the greatest fall to Ruin. This, he said, made him " the best of Brothers and of Friends." This strongly confirms a Sentiment of mine in the Plan of this Work (5). I observed there, that a Sentence, taken out of Livy, or Tacitus, and delivered, as having formerly been serviceable in uniting the Senate of Rome, is capable of saving a State, &c.

(5) See Paragraph IX. at the end of Vol. IV.

[C] Aristo said, that the Nature of God was inconceiveable.] As he gave up Natural Philosophy, because he could not conceive the Divine Nature, it is probable he quitted Theology for the same Reason. Divinarum rerum parum studiosus videtur fuisse, cum istud sæpe jactaret, quæ supra nos nihil ad nos, ut mirum sit Aristonem Theologos inter hic à Velleio ascribi. These are the Words of a Jesuit, who has given us a Comment on Cicero's Work de Natura Deorum (6). He commits a Fault, when he wonders, that Velleius, one of the Interlocutors, placed Aristo among the Theologists; for This Philosopher deserved That Rank as much as Those others, whose Opinions Velleius has mentioned. This is Aristo's Doctrine: " Cujus (Ze- " nonis) discipuli Aristonis non minus magno in er- " rore sententia est: qui neque formam Dei intelligi " posse censeat, neque in diis sensum esse dicat, du- " bitetque omnino Deus animans nec ne sit (7). —— " The Opinion of Aristo, the Disciple of Zeno, is no " less erroneous; who thinks, not only that the Form " of God is incomprehensible, but even that the Gods " have no Sense; and doubts, whether the Deity has " Animal Life, or no." Minucius Felix has mentioned the same Tenet, and said, that Xenophon, and Aristo, perceived the Greatness of God by this very Circumstance, that they despaired of ever comprehending it. Socraticus Xenophon formam dei veri negat videri posse, & ideo quæri non oportere; Aristo Chius comprehendi omnino non posse: uterque majestatem dei intelligendi

(6) Le Clerc pier in Ciceron. de de Nat. Deorum lib. 1. pag. 60.

(7) Cicero ib. pag. 60.

Digitized by Google

ſed Arceſilas on the Hypotheſis of Uncertainty: But, if any Credit may be given to Diogenes Laërtius, Scepticiſm ſeems to have been but poorly attacked, and as poorly defended [D], in thoſe Times. It is ſaid, that Ariſto was bald, and that his Baldneſs was the Cauſe of his Death; the Sun having ſcorched his Head (b). He was voluptuous in his Old Age: Eratoſthenes, and Apollophanes, his Diſciples, inform us of this Particular, in Athenæus (c). I cannot tell, whether it was that he ſtooped to flatter a Philoſopher (d), at That time, who was in great Credit at Antigonus's Court (e). His Sect continued but a ſhort Time [E]. He was the Author of a Saying, which might render (b) Id. ib. n. 164.

(c) Athenæus, lib. 7. cap. 6. pag. 281.

(d) He was called Perſeus.

(e) Athen. lib. 6. pag. 251.

intelligendi deſperatione ſenſerunt (8). A certain Commentator is guilty of a childiſh Error upon this Occaſion: He believes there is a Difference between the Perſon mentioned by Cicero, and him mentioned in the Paſſage of Minucius; I ſay, he believes it, becauſe he ſuppoſes, that Minucius is ſpeaking of one, whoſe Name was Ariſtus. "Quod Minucius Ariſto Chio, "id Cicero de Naturâ Deorum, lib. 1. tribuit Ari- "ſtoni (9). —— What Minucius imputes to Ariſtus "the Chian, That Cicero, de Naturâ Deorum, lib. 1, "aſcribes to Ariſto." Elemenhorſt, for want of Attention, believed, that the Ariſto of Minucius was a Dative or Ablative; whereas it is a Nominative. By the way, it is not impoſſible, but that Father Leſcalopier has imputed That to our Ariſto, which belongs to Socrates. "Celebre hoc proverbium Socrates ha- "buit, quod ſupra nos, nihil ad nos (10). ------ It "was a celebrated Proverb of Socrates; What is above "us, is nothing to us." Lactantius inferred from hence, that Socrates deſpiſed all Religion. Ejus viri (Socratis) quoties de cœleſtibus rogabatur, nota reſponſio eſt, quod ſupra nos, nihil ad nos (11). Note, that, generally ſpeaking, They, who acknowledge, that the Nature of God is inexplicable, are not to be ſuſpected of neglecting Divine Worſhip, for it is a Reaſon with many for adoring God with the greater Humility and Reverence. So that the Obſervation, made againſt Ariſto, has ſomething perſonal in it, and is founded on it's being well known, that Incomprehenſibility was, with him, a Motive of Neglect. I would not poſitively affirm, that he neglected Religion. I ſtop at Probability; for, with Lactantius's leave, Socrates's Maxim, which I have juſt mentioned (12), did not induce That Philoſopher to neglect Theology. His Doctrine thereon was as good as could be expected from a Pagan (13); and it looks, as if he only deſired to ſet Bounds to human Curioſity, by ſuch Reaſons, as our moſt pious Doctors make uſe of; namely, that we ought willingly to be ignorant of what God would conceal from us; for there is Danger in ſuch profound Enquiries. "In a Word, "he would not adviſe a too curious Enquiry "into the admirable Art, with which the Gods have "diſpoſed the Univerſe, &c. (14)." You will find the reſt of this Paſſage in the Remark [S] of the Article ANAXAGORAS (15), where you will likewiſe find, that by Cœleſtial Things, the Study of which Socrates diſſuades from, he does not mean matters of Religion, but Aſtronomy.

(8) Minucius Felix pag. 154.

(9) Elmenhorſt. in Minucium Felicem, pag. 154.

(10) Lact. Divin. Inſtitut. lib. 3. cap. 19.

(11) Minucius Felix. pag. 112.

(12) Above, Citation (10).

(13) See Xenoph. Memorab. lib. 1.

(14) Ib. lib. 4.

(15) Citation (22).

[D] Scepticiſm ſeems to have been but poorly attacked, and as poorly defended.] Ariſto maintained the Doctrine of Evidence againſt Arceſilas; and, ſeeing a Monſter, I mean a Bull with a Womb, he believed his Adverſary would draw a very good Argument from thence in favour of Incomprehenſibility. Wretch that I am, cry'd he, behold here a ſtrong Proof for Arceſilas (16)! This informs us, that the Dogmatiſts, in order to maintain, that the Nature of Animals was clearly known, alledged, that the Males and Females of each Species are plainly diſtinguiſhable; there being certain Parts ſo proper to the one, that they are never met with in the other. If they argued after this manner, it is certain, that the Bull, which I have mentioned, ſerved to confute them; but it muſt be allowed, that they employed a very weak Argument; for the Sceptics did not deny, that, according to Appearances, there was a diſtinction between the Males and the Females; they maintained only, that it was not known, whether their Nature was ſuch, as it appeared to be. Now it ſignifies nothing to inſtance the Example of the Bull in this caſe. Might they not have replied, We cannot tell whether it is really a Womb, or not; it may be ſo only in Appearance. Ariſto asked an Acataleptic one Day; Don't you ſee That Rich Man, who ſits near you? the other anſwered, No: Who has put out your Eyes, ſaid Ariſto again (17)? This was a childiſh Defence; ſince the Doctrine of Incomprehenſibility does not ſuppoſe a Perſon deprived of the uſe of Sight. He might have replied to Arceſilas; The Reſemblance of a rich Man ſitting near me ſtrikes my Sight; nevertheleſs I do not comprehend certainly, that This Man exiſts, or what his Nature is. It is obſervable, that, among all the Tenets of the Stoics, Ariſto adhered chiefly to This, The Wiſe Man has no Opinion. There was a Philoſopher in his Days, whoſe Name was Perſeus, who, to attack him upon this Point, ſuborned Twin-Brothers; one of which truſted Ariſto with a Depoſit, and the other came, ſome time after, to demand it; and Ariſto, being in ſuſpence, was therefore confuted by Perſeus (18). I can ſcarce comprehend the meaning of This. Did theſe Twins reſemble each other ſo perfectly, that it was impoſſible to know them aſunder; or were they as unlike, as generally Twins are? Diogenes Laërtius ſays nothing to this. His Brevity is ſometimes ſo intolerable, that it may be ſaid, we have only ill-digeſted Extracts of his Hiſtory of the Philoſophers. If theſe Twins were diſtinguiſhable; from whence could Ariſto's Suſpence proceed? If it was difficult to diſtinguiſh them, his Suſpence was not to be blamed, and could not be alledged to confute him; for this very ſuſpence was a Proof of his Regard for the Maxim above; The Wiſe Man has no Opinion.

(16) Diog. Laërt. lib. 7. n. 162.

(17) Id. ib. n. 163.

(18) Id. ib. n. 162.

[E] His Sect continued but a ſhort Time.] Cicero mentions it as One, whoſe Tenets were loſt: "Sen- "tentiæ ------ Ariſtonis, Pyrrhonis, Herilli, non- "nullorumque, aliorum evanuerunt (19). ------ We "hear no more of the Opinions of Ariſto, Pyrrho, "Herillus, and ſome others. Sive, ſays he elſewhere, "Ariſtotelem & Theophraſtum ------ ſequuti ſunt, "ſive ------- etiam Ariſtonis difficilem atque ardu- "am, ſed jam tamen fractam & convictam, ſectam ſe- "quuti ſunt (20). ------- Whether they followed "Ariſtole and Theophraſtus ----- or the difficult and "arduous, but now broken and confuted, Sect of Ariſto. Such extravagant Opinions as his could hardly laſt long; he made no difference between any two things, except Vice and Virtue; and ſaid, that other things were all alike, nor one preferable to another: His contrarius Ariſto Chius præfractus, ferreus, nihil bonum, niſi quod rectum atque honeſtum eſt (21). He went farther, than his Maſter Zeno; for Zeno did not deny but there were things diſtinct from Virtue, which were to be wiſhed for, though they were of no uſe towards attaining to the Supream Good. This Tenet was far from juſt, though it was leſs to be rejected, than That of Ariſto; For who cannot apprehend, that Health is more to be deſired, than Sickneſs? "Ut "Ariſtonis eſſet exploſa ſententia dicentis, nihil dif- "ferre aliud ab alio, nec eſſe res ullas præter virtu- "tes & vitia, inter quas quicquam omnino intereſſet; "ſic errare Zenonem, qui nulla in re niſi in virtute "aut vitio propenſionem, ne minimi quidem mo- "menti, ad ſummum bonum adipiſcendum eſſe dice- "ret. Et quum ad beatam vitam nullum momen- "tum ea res haberet, ad appetitionem autem rerum "eſſe in his momenta diceret: quaſi vero hæc appe- "titio non ad ſummi boni adeptionem pertineret (22). "----- As Ariſto was miſtaken, in ſaying, that there "is no difference of Things, except between Virtue and "Vice; ſo Zeno erred, who thought, that nothing, ex- "cept Virtue and Vice, had the leaſt tendency towards "procuring the Supream Good; yet that Thoſe Things, "which had not This Tendency, were to be deſired; as "if the Accompliſhment of This very Deſire were not "Part of the Supream Good". It is no wonder, then, that This Sect did not continue long; ſince Ariſto himſelf deſerted it at an Age the moſt favourable to his Maxims. He became a Friend to Pleaſures in his old Age (23), when it would have become him much better to have been rigid, and inflexible, præfractus & ferreus.

(19) Cicero Tuſcul. lib. 5. fol. 276. D.

(20) Id. Lib. 1. de Legibus, cap. 13.

(21) Id. in Hortenſio, apud Nonium voce Præfractum.

(22) Id. de Finibus, lib. 4. cap. 17.

(23) Athen. lib. 7. pag. 281.

Digitized by Google

render Aristippus's Doctrine less odious, than it generally is [F]. Some Works were ascribed to him, which belonged to Aristo of Cea, a Peripatetic Philosopher [G]. We shall have some Mistakes of Vossius to remark [H].

[F] He was Author of a Saying, which might render Aristippus's Doctrine less odious than it generally is.] He said, that a Philosopher might be of Prejudice to his Hearers, who should misunderstand his Words; that, for example, The Followers of Aristippus might become dissolute; Those of Zeno morose. Is not this to declare, that the Doctrine of These Philosophers did not produce such Effects, but when misunderstood? Aristo Chius dicere solebat, nocere audientibus Philosophos iis, qui bene dicta male interpretarentur; posse enim ægros ex Aristippi, acerbos e Zenonis Schola exire (24). He should have added that every Teacher is, therefore, obliged to avoid ambiguous Maxims, and to prevent false Glosses.

(24) Cicero de Natura Deorum, lib. 3, c. 31.

[G] Some Works were imputed to him, which belong to Aristo of Cea.] Diogenes Laërtius, having given the Titles of several Works of our Aristo, adds, that Panætius, and Soficrates, ascribe them all, except one, to the Peripatetic Aristo (25). He does not say, that This Peripatetic was a Native of the Island Cea; but I conjecture, that we ought to suppose him of That Country, because it cannot be understood of Aristo the Alexandrian, another Peripatetic Philosopher, who lived under Augustus, and of whom, consequently, Panætius could say nothing; for it can be proved, that he was not living in the Six Hundred and Fiftieth Year of Rome (26). So that Mr Moreri is deceived, when he says, that many have imputed the Works of Aristo of Chios to Aristo of Alexandria. The former wrote a Treatise de Senectute, which Diogenes Laërtius has not mentioned; perhaps it was but part of Another Book. "Hunc librum de Senectute ad te misi-
" mus: omnem autem sermonem tribuimus non Ti-
" thono, ut Aristo Chius, parum enim esset auctorita-
" tis in fabula, sed M. Catoni seni, quo majorem au-
" ctoritatem haberet oratio (27). —— I send you this
" Treatise Of Old Age; The whole Discourse, to add
" the greater Weight to it, I put in the Mouth of Old
" M. Cato; not of Tithonus, as Aristo the Chian did;
" for Fable would have added but little Authority to
" it." Aldobrandinus quotes this Passage of Cicero, as if it should be read Aristo Ceus (28); but the best Editions give Aristo Chius. He is mistaken, then, in pretending, that Aristo of Cea, the Peripatetic Philosopher, was Author of the Book de Senectute. He might with more reason have applied this Passage of Cicero to Him. "Hujus (Stratonis) Lysias & oratione locuples,
" rebus ipsis jejunior; Concinnus deinde & elegans
" hujus Aristo: Sed ea, quæ desideratur à magno Phi-
" losopho, gravitas in eo non fuit. Scripta sanè, &
" multa & polita; sed nescio quo pacto autoritatem
" oratio non habet (29). ----- After Strato, Lysias
" was copious in words, but, barren of Sense. His Dis-
" ciple Aristo was Witty and Elegant; but, wanted,
" what is essential to a great Philosopher, Dignity:
" He wrote indeed much and politely; but, I know not
" how, what he says wants Weight." This can only be understood of a Peripatetic Philosopher Aristo; Mr Menage therefore is to blame, in believing, that these Latin Words relate to our Aristo (30).

(25) Diog. Laërt. lib. 7, n. 163.

(26) See Jonsius de Scriptor. Hist. Philos. pag. 179, 180.

(27) Cicero, de Senect. cap. 1.

(28) Aldobrand. in Diog. Laërt. lib. 7, n. 163.

(29) Cicero, de Finib. lib. 5, cap. 5.

(30) Menag. in Diog. Laërt. lib. 7. n. 163. This Note is approved of in the Commentary on Cicero de Senectute, Edit. Grævian.

[H] Some Mistakes of Vossius, &c.] He says, that Aristo of Alexandria, a Peripatetic Philosopher, in the time of Augustus, was Author of a Treatise concerning the River Nile (31). His Reason is, because Strabo observes, that he had seen two Books, in his Time, concerning That River; one of them composed by Eudoxes, and the other by Aristo the Peripatetic (32). But, continues Vossius, there having been two Aristos of the Peripatetic Sect, one of Alexandria, and the other of the Island of Cea; Why do I maintain, that he of Alexandria composed the Treatise of the Nile? because it is more probable, that an Egyptian should write of this River, than an Islander of the Egean Sea. He destroys This Reason immediately; for he confesses, that it is probable Aristo of Chios, or He of Cea, wrote a Book of the Nile; because the Scholiast on Apollonius quotes the Opinion of Aristo of Chios, concerning the Source of This River (33). He confounds, adds Vossius, Chius with Ceus. This Reasoning is not exact. But, This Learned Man may be farther censured, for not knowing the true Reason, why the Treatise of the Nile, mentioned by Strabo, ought rather to be ascribed to Aristo the Alexandrian, than Aristo of the Island of Cea; namely, that Strabo speaks of a Book, which was published in his Time. Now Aristo of Cea flourished a long Time before Strabo, as Vossius himself acknowledges; for he affirms, after Diogenes Laërtius, that Pantiæus and Soficrates (34) ascribed to This Aristo almost all the Books, which passed under the Name of Aristo the Stoic. Lloyd and Hofman have copied this long Passage of Vossius, word for word, not forgetting even to put Socrates instead of Soficrates.

(31) Vossius de Hist. Gr. lib. 2, c. 4. pag. 179.

(32) Strabo, lib. 17, pag. 544.

(33) Schol. Apollonii in IV. Argon.

(34) In Vossius it is Socrates.

ARISTO (TITUS) a Roman Lawyer, in the Reign of Trajan, was so Excellent and so Learned a Person, that he ought not to have been omitted by Moreri. He was perfectly skilled in Common and Civil Law, in History, and Antiquity [A]. If he did not readily answer to the Questions, which were put to him, it was because he would consider the Matter thoroughly, before he gave his Opinion. He was, besides, an Enemy to Luxury, and free from all Ostentation; one, who sought the Reward of a good Action in the Action itself, and not in the Applause of the Multitude

[A] He was perfectly skilled in —— Law, in History, and in Antiquity.] What Pliny says upon this (1), and on Aristo's Virtue, is so fine, that I shall not lose one Word of it. "Nihil est illo (Tito Aristone) gra-
" vius, sanctius, doctius: ut mihi non unus homo,
" sed literæ ipsæ, omnesque bonæ artes, in uno ho-
" mine summum periculum adire videantur. Quàm
" peritus ille & privati juris & publici (2)? quantum
" rerum? quantum exemplorum? quantum antiqui-
" tatis tenet? nihil est, quod discere velis, quod ille
" docere non possit. Mihi certe quoties aliquid ab-
" ditum quæro, ille thesaurus est. Jam quanta ser-
" monibus ejus fides? quanta authoritas? quàm pressa
" & decora cunctatio? quid est quod non statim
" sciat? & tamen plerumque hæsitat. Dubitat diver-
" sitate rationum: quas acri magnoque judicio ab
" origine causisque primus repetit, discernit, expen-
" dit: Ad hoc quam parcus in victu? quam modicus
" in cultu? Soleo ipsum cubiculum ejus ipsumque
" lectum, ut imaginem quandam priscæ frugalitatis,
" aspicere. Ornat hæc magnitudo animi, quæ nihil
" ad ostentationem, omnia ad conscientiam refert:
" rectèque facti, non ex populi sermone, mercedem,
" sed ex facto, petit. —— So excellent a Person is Ti-
" tus Aristo, that not the Life of one Man alone, but " Learning itself, and all useful Arts, seem to be " greatly endangered in one Man. How skilled is he
" in every Branch of Law? How versed in Things,
" in Examples, in Antiquity? Whatever you
" can desire to learn, he can teach. For my own Part,
" whenever I would enquire into any abstruse Point, He
" is my Oracle. How securely may we rely upon his " Opinion? What Authority has He? and how becom- " ing is his Deliberation? What is there, which he " does not immediately apprehend? yet he generally be-
" sitates. His Doubts arise from the Variety of Rea- " sons, which may be assigned; all which, with great
" Judgment, he traces to their Source, distinguishes
" and weighs. Add to this his great Temperance and " Modesty in Dress. I am wont to consider his Bed-
" Chamber, and his very Bed, as a Kind of Repre- " sentation of the Ancient Frugality. These Quali-
" fications are set off by a Greatness of Mind, which
" avoids all Ostentation, and is satisfied with the Con- " sciousness of having acted well; and which seeks the " Reward of a good Action, not from the Applause of
" the People, but from the Action itself."

(1) Plinius, Epist. 22, lib. 1, pag. 65, 66.

(2) Add to this these Words of the 14*th Letter of the* 8*th Book, which* Pliny wrote to Aristo: Cum sis peritissimus & privati juris & publici -- peto ut medearis scientia tua, cui superfuit curæ sic jura publica ut privata, sic antiqua ut recentia, sic rara ut assidua tractare.

Digitized by Google

titude (a). He did not profeſs himſelf a Philoſopher [B]; but ſome of Thoſe, who did, fell very ſhort of him in the Practice of Virtue. He ſhewed an unparalleled Firmneſs of Mind in a tedious Fit of Sickneſs [C], and at laſt deſired his Friends to aſk the Phyſicians, whether it was poſſible for him to recover; and declared, that, if they judged him incurable, he would kill himſelf; but, if he might eſcape by ſuffering his Pains ever ſo long, he was reſolved to live; this he agreed to, at the Intreaties of his Wife, the Tears of his Daughter, and the deſire of Thoſe, with whom he converſed (b). Pliny, the Younger, who was one of Them, made a good Reflexion upon this, and excellently deſcribes the Tenderneſs of his Friendſhip [E]. The Phyſicians gave him good Hopes of his Recovery (c). Some affirm, that Ariſto attained to a very great Age [F]; but the Proof they bring for it is weak enough. He was the Author of ſome Books [G].

(a) See the Proof of this in the Remark [A].

(b) Plin Epiſt 22, lib. 1, pag. 67.

(c) Id. ibid.

[B] He did not profeſs himſelf a Philoſopher.] His Philoſophy was put in practice two Ways; for his Manners were like Thoſe of a true Philoſopher; and he did not ſpend his Life in the Solitude of a Cloſet, or College, but in the Functions of the Bar. Let us hear Pliny. "In ſumma, non facile quis quen-"quam ex iſtis, qui ſapientiæ ſtudium habitu corpo-"ris præferunt, huic viro compararit. Non quidem "gymnaſia ſectatur, aut porticus, nec diſputationi-"bus longis aliorum ocium, ſuumque delectat: ſed "in toga, negociiſque verſatur: multos advocatione, "plures conſilio juvat. Nemini tamen iſtorum caſti-"tate, pietate, juſtitia, fortitudine, etiam primo loco "ceſſerit (3). ----- Upon the whole, it is not eaſy to "draw a parallel between Thoſe, who carry an out-"ſide ſhew of Philoſophy, and this Great Man. In-"deed, he is not a Follower of the Schools, or Por-"ticos; nor does he entertain the Leiſure of others, and "his own, with tedious Diſputations; but is converſant "at the Bar, and in Buſineſs; is helpful to many, as "an Advocate, to more by his Advice. Yet will he "give the Preference to none of the Philoſophers "in Point of Chaſtity, Piety, Juſtice, and Greatneſs "of Mind."

(3) Id. Epiſt. 20. lib. 1. pag. 66, 67, &c.

[C] He ſhewed an unparalleled Firmneſs of Mind in a tedious Fit of Sickneſs (4). "He lay ſtill, and covered, "in the Height of his Fever, and forbore drink-"ing, though he had a violent Thirſt upon him. "Mirareris, ſi intereſſes, qua patientia hanc ipſam "valetudinem toleret, ut dolori reſiſtat, ut ſitim diſ-"ferat, ut incredibilem febrilem ardorem immo.us "operuſque tranſmittat (5)."

(4) See Remark [E].

(5) Plin. Epiſt. 22, lib. 1, pag. 67.

[D] Pliny ------ makes a good Reflexion upon this, &c.] "It is common, he ſays, to fly to Death "through an Impetuoſity of Spirit; but a great "Mind, having deliberated whether to live or die, "weighs the Motives on both ſides exactly, and "by the Weight of Reaſon is determined to the "one or the other. Id ego arduum in primis, & "præcipua laude dignum puto. Nam impetu quodam, "& inſtinctu, procurrere ad mortem, commune cum "multis: deliberare vero, & cauſſas ejus expendere, "utque ſuaſerit ratio, vitæ mortiſque conſilium ſuſ-"cipere, vel ponere, ingentis eſt animi (6)."

(6) Id. ib.

[E] Pliny admirably expreſſes the Tenderneſs of his Friendſhip for Ariſto.] "He had a paſſionate Deſire to "retire to his Country-Houſe at Laurentium, and to "ſtudy there; but deprived himſelf of This Plea-"ſure to keep Ariſto Company, who had been ſick "a long time; and he ſuffered a thouſand Diſ-"quietudes at the Sight of this Object, which "robbed him of the Leiſure, and even Deſire of "returning to his Studies." Let us hear himſelf. *Diu jam in urbe hæreo, & quidem attonitus. Per-*turbat me longa & pertinax valetudo Titi Ariſtonis, quem ſingulariter & miror & diligo (7). This is the beginning of his Letter. He goes on. Et medici quidem ſecunda nobis pollicentur: Supereſt, ut promiſ-ſis deus adnuat, tandemque me hac ſolicitudine exolvat. Qua liberatus, Laurentinum meum, hoc eſt libellos & pugillares, ſtudioſumque otium, repetam. Nunc enim nihil legere, nihil ſcribere, aut aſſidenti vacat, aut anxio libet. Habes, quid timeam, quid optem, quid etiam in poſterum deſtinem (8). I cite this whole Paſſage, as well for the Honour of Ariſto, as for That of Pliny the Younger; for there appear in it Marks, of a good-natured Diſpoſition; and it is a Proof, that Virtue has always found a Place of Retreat in Cities, which have been the moſt corrupted by long Proſperity, followed by tedious and cruel Civil Wars, and the Eſtabliſhment of Tyranny; which was the Caſe of Rome at that Time.

(7) Id. ibid.

(8) Epiſt. 24, lib. 1, pag. 67.

[F] Some affirm, that Ariſto attained to a very great Age; but the Proof they bring for it is weak enough.] This Proof is taken from Ariſto's having aſſiſted at the Pleadings of Caſſius; that is, of Caius Caſſius Longinus, who was Conſul in the Reign of Tiberius. Now they reckon ſixty Years between Tiberius and Trajan; and it is certain, that Trajan conſulted Ariſto in a Point of Law. This is Bertrand's Argument (9). He is confuted from hence; that Caſſius lived till the Reign of Veſpaſian (10); and that, between the beginning of his Reign, and That of Trajan, there are at moſt but Twenty eight Years (11)

(9) See Bertrand in Vitis Juriſperitorum, l. 2, p. 295, 297.

(10) Pomponius affirms it; ſee Grotius in Vitis Juriſconſ. l. 2, c. 3, pag. 123.

[G] He was the Author of ſome Books.] The Pandects make mention of this; and you may ſee the Titles of them in both the Authors, whom I cite (12). See alſo Aulus Gellius, who had read, in a Work of Ariſto, that *all manner of Theft was allowed a-*mong the ancient Egyptians, a People famous for the Invention of Arts and Sciences. Id etiam memini legere me in libro Ariſtonis jureconſulti haudquaquam indo-cti viri. apud veteres Ægyptios, quod genus hominum conſtat & in artibus reperiendis ſolertes extitiſſe, & in cognitione rerum indaganda ſagaces, furta omnia fuiſſe licita & impunita (13). Bertrand ſuppoſes it to be a Treatiſe Of Theft, ſince Aulus Gellius quotes it particularly, as knowing, that Ariſto was Author of ſeveral Books.

(11) Grotius, ubi ſupra.

(12) Bertrand, and Grotius.

(13) Aulus Gellius, lib. 11, c. 18, pag. 302.

(14) Bertrand ubi ſupra, p. 299.

ARISTOTLE, commonly called the Prince of Philoſophers, or The Philoſopher, by way of Excellence, was the Founder of a Sect, which ſurpaſſed, and at length ſwallowed, up all the reſt (a). Not but that It has had it's Reverſe of Fortune (b) in it's turn; eſpecially in This XVIIth Century, in which it has been violently ſhaken; though the Catholic Divines, on the one ſide, and the Proteſtant, on the other, have run (as to the quenching of a Fire) to it's Relief; and fortified themſelves ſo ſtrongly, by the Secular Arm, againſt the New Philoſophy, that it is not like to loſe it's Dominion of a long time. Mr Moreri met with ſo many good Materials in a Work of Father Rapin (c), that he has given a very large Article of Ariſtotle, enough to diſpence with my Aſſiſtance. Accordingly, I deſign not to enlarge upon it as far as the Subject might allow, but ſhall content myſelf with obſerving, in the Remarks, ſome of the Errors, which I have collected, concerning This Philoſopher. I think I have diſcovered ſome in Father Rapin's Account [A]. It is not a certain, that (a) Ariſtoteles, more Ottomanorum, regnare ſe haud tuto poſſe putabat, niſi fratres ſuos omnes contrucidaſſet. ---- Ariſtotle, like the Turkiſh Emperors, thought he could not reign in Safety, 'till he had ſlain all his Brethren. Bacon, de Augment. Scient. lib. 3, cap. 4.

(b) See Mr Launoi's Book, de Varia Ariſtotelis fortuna.

(c) Comparison of Plato and Ariſtotle.

[A] I have diſcovered ſome Errors in Father Rapin's Account of Ariſtotle.] This Remark will be pretty long; I ſhall therefore divide it.

I. To ſay that, Ariſtotle, though he had forſaken his Studies, out of meer Libertiniſm, and had abuſed his Tutor's Indulgence for ſome time, ſucceeded nevertheleſs in that Aristotle exercised Pharmacy in Athens, while he was a Disciple of Plato (d); nor is it more certain, that he did not. Very little Credit ought to be given to a current Tradition, that he learnt several Things of a Jew [B], and much less to the Story in Poetry; witness the Poem, which he composed on the Death of the Heroes, who were killed at the Siege of Troy (1); is no just way of Reasoning; for, if Eustathius and Porphyry, who mention This Poem, do not expressly say, that Aristotle composed it in his Youth (2), we may imagine, that he wrote it after his return to his Studies; and then this Poem can be no longer alledged as a Proof, of the Progress which he made in Poetry, notwithstanding his Libertine Courses.

Digitized by Google

(d) See Remark [A]. n. 2.

(1) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 33.

(2) Father Rapin does not say, that they make this Remark.

II. To say, that, having by his Debaucheries consumed part of the Estate, which his Father had left him, he listed himself in the Troops of the Republic (3); is an improper, and a very indeterminate, Way of Expression. If the question were concerning a Person, who was born at Athens, or Lacedemon, the Expression might be proper enough, but it relates to a Native of Macedonia. Athenæus knew of but one Author, who had said, that Aristotle, having consumed his Patrimony, listed himself; and, finding, that the Profession of Arms was not his Talent, set up to sell Drugs (4). The sole Author of This Story was Epicurus. It is very probable, that Ælian had it from him (5). Aristocles, who rejected it, quotes only Epicurus (6). Be this as it will, none of the Authors, whom Father Rapin quotes, specify in what Troops Aristotle served; and all of them range Matters in this Order. First, Aristotle spent his Estate, then he went to the Wars, afterwards he set up a Shop, and at last addicted himself to Plato's Lectures. Father Rapin will have it, that he was at the same both a Druggist, and a Disciple of Plato. The Authors, whom he quotes (7), say nothing of this Union of the two Professions. But he ought not, I think, to be censured for this; for it seems probable enough, that Aristotle, after he had spent his Estate, was forced to drive a small Trade in sweet Powder, and Medicines, at Athens, to subsist himself for some time. This Father Rapin says, in relation to the time when Aristotle studied Philosophy. Frantis Patricius goes much farther; he believes, that Aristotle was Plato's Disciple till the Age of forty Years, and that he exercised Pharmacy all That Time for a Livelihood. Satis constat inter omnes ad quadragesimum usque ætatis annum Platonis fuisse auditorem; quo universo tempore pharmacopolii arte nec non etiam medica victum quæritasse satis est & historiæ & rationi consonum (8). He adds, that, formerly, Physicians exercised the Apothecaries Trade; and that three Reasons induce us to believe, that Aristotle was a Physician. He was of a Family for such a Profession; He composed a Book concerning Health and Sickness; and he excited Alexander to the Study of Physic, in which That Monarch acquired no small Skill, both in the Theory, and in the Practice (9). Lastly, Patricius alledges the Testimony of Timeus. This Historian has spoken very ill of Aristotle, and reproached him expressly with shutting up a Shop of most excellent Medicines. Τὸ πολυτίμητον ἰατρεῖον ἀποκεκλεικότα (10). Qui pretiosam tabernam medicam clausit. I know not whether I may be permitted to conjecture, that Timeus sneered in making use of the Epithet πολυτίμητον. Without which, I cannot see how this Passage of Suidas is to be reconciled with what Eusebius cites from the same Timeus. He gives us a Fragment, in which a Peripatetic answers several Calumnies published against Aristotle, and particularly That of the Historian Timeus, who had said, that Aristotle, in his old Age, shut up his Shop of Medicines, which was grown into Contempt: Ἡ πῶς ἄν τις ἀποδέξατο Τιμαίου τοῦ Ταυρομενίτου λέγοντος ἐν ταῖς ἱστορίαις, ἀδόξως ἐξ ὑρᾶς αὐτὸν ἰατρείου καὶ τὰς τυχούσας, εἴτε τῆς ἡλικίας, κλείσασαι (11). This Passage has been very ill translated; for the Latin Translation makes Timeus say, that Aristotle, in his old Age, was hired to shut up the Shop of an Apothecary of small Reputation. Quis Timæum Tauromenitanum audiat dum suis in historiis illum ait affecta jam ætate, neglectis obscuri cujusdam Medici officinæ claudendis furious præfuisse. Is not this an Employ highly worthy of Aristotle's old Age? What Honour to be Porter to an Apothecary, or Physician, scarce known to his next Neighbours!

(3) Id. ib.

(4) Athen. lib. 8. pag. 354.

(5) Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 5, c. 9.

(6) Apud Euseb. Præp. lib. 15, c. 2, pag. 791.

(7) Aristocles Messen. ex. Epist. Epicuri. Ælian. lib. 5. cap. 9. Athen. l. 8.

(8) Fr. Patricius, Discuss. Peripat. Tom. 1. p. 3.

(9) Plutarch. in Alexandro.

(10) Timæus, apud Suidam, in Ἀριστοτέλης.

(11) Aristocles, apud Euseb. Præpar. lib. 15, cap. 2, pag. 791.

III. Father Rapin (12) tells us, that Clemens Alexandrinus affirms, that Aristotle had Conferences at Athens with a Jew, with a Design of being instructed in the Religion of the Egyptians. Eusebius has said the same; and both believe it on the Testimony of Clearchus the Peripatetic. These Words stand in need of being greatly qualified; for, I. All that Clemens Alexandrinus affirms amounts only to this, that Clearchus the Peripatetic had said, that he knew a Jew, who had conversed with Aristotle. Κλέαρχος ὁ Περιπατητικὸς εἰδέναι φησί τινα Ἰουδαῖον ὃς Ἀριστοτέλει συνεγένετο (13). Clearchus Peripateticus dicit se nosse quemdam Judæum, qui cum Aristotele versatus est. As for the Place, and Subject, of these Conversations, you must enquire of any one else, rather than of Clemens Alexandrinus. II. It is not true, that Eusebius affirms any thing upon this Head; he only cites the Words of Clemens Alexandrinus. III. Clearchus, to whom he directs us, as the first Source, does not say, that Aristotle had any Conversation with a Jew at Athens, but on the contrary, that it was in Asia (14); neither does he say, that they discoursed concerning the Religion of the Egyptians, or any other particular Subject. I believe, if we had his Book, we should find an exact Account of this Matter in it; but we have only a Passage of it, which was cited by Josephus, in his first Book against Apion, to shew, that the Jewish Nation was not unknown to the Greeks. If Father Rapin had consulted the Originals, would he have said, that, to avoid the loss of time, which must have been spent in travelling into Egypt, which was then believed necessary towards the acquisition of Learning, it is probable, that Aristotle was satisfied with being instructed in the Mysteries and Religion of the Egyptians? Was he not actually travelling in Asia, when he had these Conversations, if we may believe Clearchus? We shall see, in the Remark [B], whether he deserves Credit.

(12) Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 304.

(13) Clem. Alex. Stromat. lib. 1. pag. 304.

(14) Τότε διατριβόντων ἡμῶν περὶ τὴν Ἀσίαν. Nobis tum in Asia forte degentibus. It is Aristotle, who speaks, in this Book of Clearchus, de Somno, apud Josephum, lib. 1. contra Apionem, & apud Eusebium. Præp. l. 9, c. 5, p. 410.

IV. It is not true, that Hermias gave his Sister Pythias in Marriage to Aristotle (15). See towards the end of the Remark [F].

(15) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 306.

V. Father Rapin's other Faults, which I have observed, are distributed in the following Remarks.

[B] Very little Credit ought to be given to a current Tradition, that he learned several Things of a Jew.] This Tradition has no other Foundation than the above mentioned Passage of Clearchus. This Passage would be of no small Authority, did it certainly belong to That Clearchus, who was one of Aristotle's most famous Disciples. But, according to all Appearances, it belongs to another Clearchus: For, first of all, the Author, quoted by Josephus, says, that Aristotle met with a Jew in his Travels in Asia, who had afterwards several Conferences with him, and with some other Men of Letters. ἡμῖν τε καὶ τισιν ἑτέροις τῶν σχολαστικῶν. Learned Men pretend, that, in Aristotle's Time, the Word σχολαστικὸς was not used to signify a Scholar, a Disciple, or a Student (16). However it be, as this Journey into Asia cannot be reconciled with Aristotle's History, it is not probable, that one of his Disciples should have invented a Story of This kind, which he himself, and others, knew to be false. It is therefore a more modern Clearchus, who supposed this Journey; and he might do it sincerely; for it is well known, that Solinus asserts, that Aristotle followed Alexander in his Wars against Darius (17). The anonymous Author of the Life of Aristotle (18) says the same thing. II. If it were true, that Aristotle had had many Conferences with so able a Jew, as He, who is mentioned in the Passage of Clearchus, would he have believed, what he says concerning the Origin of the Jews? Would he have said, that the Jews were descended from the Calains, a People of the Indies, and that they took the Name of Jews in Syria, because they possest a Province, which was called Judea? That is what Aristotle says, in the Passage of Clearchus, quoted by Josephus. Would his Jew have left him in such a childish Error? And should we have found so few Traces of Judea, and the Jewish Nation, in all Aristotle's Writings, after such full Information, as the

(16) Jonsius, de Script. Hist. Philos. pag. 99.

(17) Cap. 14. apud Jonsium, ib. pag. 100.

(18) Ammonius, according to some; Philoponus, according to others. See the Notes of Nunnesius on this Life, n. 44.

Digitized by Google

Story of his pretended Converſion to Judaiſm. They, who pretend, that he was born a Jew, are much more groſsly miſtaken [C]. The wrong Pointing of a certain Paſſage occaſioned this Miſtake (e). They are deceived, who ſay, that he was a Diſciple of Socrates for Three Years ſucceſſively [D]; for Socrates died Twelve or Fifteen Years before Ariſtotle was born. Ariſtotle's Behaviour towards his Maſter Plato is variouſly related [E]. Some will have it, that, through prodigious Vanity and Ingratitude, he

(e) See Remark [C].

the Jew might have given him? III. We read, in Diogenes Laërtius, that the Gymnoſophiſts deſcended from the Magi, and that there were ſome, who gave the Jews the ſame Original (19). Theſe are two different Facts: As to the firſt, it is delivered on the Teſtimony of Clearchus, the Diſciple of Ariſtotle; but no Authority is produced for the ſecond. Was not This the moſt favourable Opportunity, and the moſt indiſpenſable, for quoting Clearchus concerning This pretended Indian Original of the Jewiſh Nation, mentioned by Joſephus? If the Book de Somno, in which Ariſtotle ſpeaks of their Indian Origin, had been the ſame Clearchus's, who is cited by Diogenes Laërtius (20), would he not have been alledged? I paſs over Jonſius's other Reaſons; theſe three are ſufficient to perſuade me (21), that Ariſtotle never ſaid what the Clearchus of Joſephus would make him ſay. I muſt therefore agree in Opinion with thoſe, who think it wrong in Cunæus to treat Ariſtotle ſo ill for a Piece of Folly, which he never was guilty of. "Petrus Cunæus lib. 1. de Repub. Hebr. cap. 4. "Ariſtotelem ſalſe nimis & temere perſtringit, quod "hic apud Clearchum ſtatuat Judæos ab Indiæ ſapientibus eſſe propagatos: Verba Cunæi hæc ſunt. "Portentoſum eſt & cum ſumma injcitia conjunctum "quod Ariſtoteles apud Clearchum autumavit, Judæos eſſe ab Indiæ ſapientibus propagatos, ſed nomen "mutaviſſe. Quippe philoſophos illos, qui apud Indos "Callani appellantur, in cava Syria Judæos dici. "Pudet me antilitatis, adeo hoc nihil eſt (22). ---- Petrus Cunæus, in Book 1. of the Hebrew Republic, Chap. 4. cenſures Ariſtotle too ſeverely and unjuſtly, for pretending, as cited by Clearchus, that the Jews ſprung from the Indian Philoſophers. Cunæus's Words are: It is monſtruous, and attended with the greateſt Ignorance, what Ariſtotle, in Clearchus, conjectures, that the Jews were deſcended from the Philoſophers of India, but had changed their Name; for that Thoſe Philoſophers, who, among the Indians, are called Callani, in Cœlo-Syria are called Jews." It may be objected, that Clearchus was acquainted with the Jew, who had converſed with Ariſtotle; ſo that he muſt have been cotemporary with him; but I deny, that Clearchus had any Knowledge of him. Joſephus does not ſay it; it is Clemens Alexandrinus, who adds this Clauſe; perhaps he quotes by Memory, which is the ſureſt way to pervert a Paſſage, even as to the moſt eſſential Circumſtances. See the Careleſſneſs of Tranſlators! He, who tranſlated Euſebius (23), renders εἰδέναι by vidiſſe; and the Tranſlator of Clemens Alexandrinus is content with noſſe. It is not a neceſſary Conſequence, that an Author lived at the ſame time with another Perſon, becauſe it is ſaid, that he knew one, who had done, or ſaid This, or That; ſince his meaning might be, that he knew the Books, in which ſuch Perſons had ſaid ſo or ſo; but when it is ſaid, that an Author had ſeen ſuch or ſuch a one, the Conſequence then is plain, that they muſt have been Cotemporaries (24). This admits of no Difficulty; and, conſequently, the Tranſlator of Euſebius has taken a Liberty, which, being added to That of Clemens Alexandrinus, ſtrangely falſifies the Conſequences, which may be drawn from the Paſſage of Clearchus, as cited by Joſephus. There are Jews, who affirm, not only that Ariſtotle had copied Solomon's Works, but that he became likewiſe a Proſelyte of Righteouſneſs (25).

(19) Diog. Laërt. in Proœmio, n. 19.

(20) That is of Him, who was the Diſciple of Ariſtotle.

(21) Note, that Schoockius, Fabulæ Hamelenſis, part. 2. cap. 12. alledges, almoſt Word for Word, the fineſt Obſervations of Jonſius, without citing him.

(22) Jonſius, de Script. Hiſt. Phil. pag. 98.

(23) De Præp. lib. 13, p. 410.

(24) Provided always, that the Witneſs be ſincere.

Not ſatisfied with this, They produce a Letter, which they ſuppoſe he wrote to Alexander to give him an Account of his Converſion. This Letter you will find in a Work of Rabbi Gedalia Ben Jachija, and in the Moderna Theologia (26) Judaica of Mr Lent, Profeſſor of Divinity at Herborn. Read alſo this Paſſage of Mr Couſin. Father Bartolocci, pag. 471, of the firſt Volume of his Bibliotheca magna Rabbinica "relates a Story, void of all probability, which "the Rabins tell us of Ariſtotle. Some of them "pretended, that he was born of the Seed of Iſrael, "and deſcended from the Children of Coha, of the "Tribe of Benjamin. Others of them ſay, that he "was not originally a Jew, but that, towards the "end of his life, he embraced their Religion. They "add, that he borrowed all his Philoſophy from Solomon's Books, which were found in the City of "Jeruſalem, when it was taken by Alexander, and "that he, afterwards, burnt them, to have all the "Honour of the Wiſdom, they contained. They "add farther, that, to juſtify the change of his "Religion, he wrote a Letter to Alexander, which "is inſerted entire in That Part of the Great Bibliotheque; and in which the Rabins make him ſay, "that Logic is an Iniquity, that Philoſophy is "Falſhood and Deceit, and that Misery attends "Thoſe, who ſtudy it; becauſe that, by means of "the Diſputes, which it leads them into, they go "down to Hell (27)." Selden quotes Jewiſh Authors, who have affirmed, firſt, That, a little before Ariſtotle died, he communicated to his Diſciples the Doctrine, which he had learnt from the Hebrews, concerning the Immortality of the Soul, and the Puniſhments and Rewards of a future State. Secondly, That, as to the Points, in which his Doctrine contradicted the Law, he was converted, and became another Man, by the Inſtructions of the High-Prieſt, Simon the Juſt (28).

(25) Apud Buxtorf citante Konig. Bibl. p. 61.

(26) This Book was printed at Herborn, in 1694.

(27) Journal des Sçavans, of the 14*th of* July, 1692, pag. 463. Edit. of Holland.

(28) See Seldenus, de Jure Naturæ & Gentium, lib. 1, cap. 1, pag. 14, 15. Edit. Lipſ. 1695.

[C] They, who pretend, that he was born a Jew, are groſsly miſtaken.] The Foundation of This Miſtake is this. The Ancient Tranſlation of Joſephus by George of Trebizond runs thus; atque ille, inquit, Ariſtoteles Judæus erat, inſtead of atque ille, inquit Ariſtoteles, Judæus erat. Upon this Marſilius Ficinus ventured to ſay, that, according to the Teſtimony of Clearchus, Ariſtotle was a Jew. Clearchus Peripateticus ſcribit Ariſtotelem fuiſſe Judæum (29). Genebrard fell into the ſame Miſtake. Ea de cauſa fortaſſe Clearchus Peripateticus ſcribit Ariſtotelem fuiſſe Judæum (30). This Jonſius informs me of (31). I ſhall not imitate Schoockius, who has adorned himſelf with theſe Spoils, without giving the Honour where it is properly due (32). But, if we underſtand a Jew by Religion, and not by Birth, the Source of This Miſtake muſt be ſearched for higher.

(29) Marſil. Ficin de Chriſt. Relig. cap. 26.

(30) Genebrardi Chronol. ad Ann. 2670.

[D] They are deceived, who ſay, that he was a Diſciple of Socrates for three Years ſucceſſively.] The Life of Ariſtotle, aſcribed to Ammonius, or to John Philoponus, contains this Error. The Learned Nunneſius, who wrote Obſervations on This Life, ſays, that he met with no one among the Ancients, except Olympiodorus, who ſays, that Ariſtotle had been a Diſciple of Socrates *. He adds, that Cardinal Beſſarion † fell into the ſame Miſtake, and that Leonard Aretin, in the fifth Book of his Letters, and Octavian Ferrarius, in his Work de Sermonibus exotericis, have ſhewed the Anachroniſm.

(31) Jonſ. de Script. Hiſt. Philoſ. pag. 100.

(32) Schoock. ubi ſupra.

* Praxi XLII. in Gorgiam Platonis.

† Lib. 1. Adverſ. Calumniator.

[E] Ariſtotle's Behaviour towards his Maſter Plato is variouſly related.] Diogenes Laërtius ſays, that Plato, ſeeing that Ariſtotle had deſerted him, ſaid; He kicks againſt us, as Colts do againſt their Dams (33). Ælian explains this Thought of Plato. The Colt, he ſays, kicks the Dam after being filled with her Milk: So Ariſtotle, having learnt the firſt Rules and Principles of Philoſophy from Plato, and, finding himſelf well fed with the excellent Paſture, which his Maſter had ſupplied him with, ſpurned at him, and ſet up a School, to rival His (34). Conſult Helladius, who changes the Ideas a little; for he employs the Compariſon of a Horſe, which bites his Sire. Ἀριστοτέλης ὁ τοῦ περιπάτου προσάτης ὑπὸ Πλάτωνος ἵππος ἐπωνομάζετο. ἐναντιοῦσθαι δοκῶν τῷ διδασκάλῳ· καὶ γὰρ ὁ ἵππος τὸν ἑαυτοῦ φιλεῖ πατέρα δάκνειν (35). Ariſtotle, Head of the Peripatetic School, was called by Plato The Horſe, becauſe he oppoſed his Maſter; it being common for the Horſe to bite his Sire. But there is ſtill ſomething worſe. Ælian relates, in another Place (36), that Ariſtotle offended Plato by going too magnificently

(33) Diog. Laërt. lib. 5, n. 2, in vita Ariſtot.

(34) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 4, cap. 9.

(35) Helladius, apud Photii Biblioth. pag. 1589.

(36) Ælian. lib. 3, c. 19.

Digitized by Google

he set up Altar against Altar; that is, erected a School in Athens, during Plato's Life, and in opposition to him; others say, that he did not set up for a Professor till after his Master's Death. We are told some things concerning his Amours [F], which are not altogether to his Advantage. It was pretended, that his Conjugal Affection was Idolatrous; and that, if he had not retired from Athens, the Process for Irreligion, which the Priests had entered against him [G], would have been attended with the same Consequences, as That against Socrates. Though he deserved very great Praise, yet it is certain, that most of the Errors concerning him magnificently habited, by an Air of Raillery, and by talking a little too much; which made Plato transfer his Friendship to some other of his Disciples. Aristotle, having formed a Party, made use of an Opportunity, which the Absence of Xenocrates, and the Sickness of Speusippus offered him. These were Plato's Sword and Buckler, as we may say. It was easy, in the Absence of these, to insult him. Accordingly he went with a great Number of Disciples to Plato's School. The good old Man, being eighty Years of Age, had almost lost his Memory: Aristotle, taking Advantage of his Master's Infirmity, put several captious Questions to him, pushed him through every Retreat of his Logic, and proudly triumphed over him. After This Affront, the good Man taught no more in public, but kept at home with his Disciples. Aristotle took Possession of his Place: But Xenophon, at his Return to Athens, finding how things had passed, reprimanded Speusippus severely, for having suffered Aristotle to take Possession of the School; and gave the Usurper so much Disturbance, as obliged him to quit the Post, and re-established the first Master. If Aristotle acted thus, he deserved to be detested; but I believe the Story to be false. His Followers have maintained, that he wanted neither Respect nor Gratitude towards his Master. His having been the Author of another Sect of Philosophy was no Argument, that he was deficient in either. The other Platonists would have been in the wrong to have expected him to follow Plato in every thing. Did Plato add nothing to the Lights, which he received from Socrates? However this be, it is affirmed, in the Life of Aristotle, that he did not set up a School in the Lycæum during his Master's Life-time; and for this Reason, because Chabrias and Timotheus, who were both of them related to Plato, and at that Time very powerful in Athens, would not have suffered it. They add, that Aristotle erected an Altar to Plato, with an honourable Inscription, and that he did not teach in Athens, 'till after the Death of Speusippus, who succeeded Plato. Lastly, it is observed, that he did not take this Employ upon himself of his own mere Motion, but at the Sollicitation of the Athenians, who sent Deputies to him for that Purpose. The old Latin Translation of This Life of Aristotle is sometimes more ample than the Original. As for Example; in the Place, where the Author denies, that Aristotle set up a School during Plato's Life, the Translation remarks, that it was a Calumny of Aristoxenus, and Aristocles. The Greek has nothing of This. See what Eusebius cites from the seventh Book of This Aristocles; you will there find a Passage of Aristoxenus, which seems to contain This Accusation against Aristotle, in general, and somewhat obscure, Terms; and likewise see, that Aristocles, having refuted several other Accusations, drops the Cause, as to the Ingratitude of This Disciple (37). So that Father Rapin was much deceived (38), when he said, that Eusebius justifies him entirely from This Reproach (39). I cannot conceive, why this Jesuit has joined Ammonius and Philoponus, as two different Apologists, with Eusebius; for the Life of Aristotle, which he cites, belongs but to one Author; to Ammonius according to some, to Philoponus according to others.

(37) Eusebii Præpar. Evangel. lib. 15. cap. 2.

(38) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, pag. 305.

(39) It cannot be Eusebius, who justified him; it must have been Aristocles. But neither one nor the other justify him.

(40) Diog. Laert. in vit. Arist. n. 3.

[F] We are told some things concerning his Amours.] There is a strange Complication of Impurities on this Head. His Calumniators report, that He retired to Hermias, who commanded in Atarnus, a small Town of Mysia, near the Hellespont; and that Hermias had a very criminal Complaisance for him; Ὃν οἱ μὲν φασὶ παιδικὰ γένεσθαι αὐτῷ (40); Quem alii quidem delicias ac lusus ipsius fuisse tradunt; that he gave him his Daughter, or his Niece, in Marriage; that, finding him to be in Love with his Concubine, he made a Present of her to him (41); that Aristotle was so doatingly fond of This Lady, that, having married her, he offered a Sacrifice to Her, like That, which the Athenians offered to Ceres; and that he testified his Acknowledgment to Hermias, by an Hymn, which he composed in his Honour.

(41) Athenæus in primo de antiquis deliciis libro apud Laërtium, ubi supra.

My Readers need not be told, that these Calumnies did not proceed from one and the same Pen; some told one Story, some another. One of Aristotle's Apologists has observed, that they did not all agree in charging him with one and the same Accusation; but that each Censor came with his particular Satire (42). This, it may be said, is a Sign they did not act in Concert; let me add, that it is a Sign they had no good Proof of any thing; for when a serious Accusation is once proved, all, who write against the accused, eternally reproach him with it. The same Apologist observes, that the particular Accusations, which were drawn up against Aristotle, amounted to so great a Number of Crimes, that, if but one of them had been true, he would certainly have been punished by the Judges then in being. His Enemies gave out, among other things, that he had betrayed his Country, and that Letters were intercepted, which he had written to the Prejudice of the Athenians (43). To return to Aristotle's Wife; some pretend, that it was after her Death, that her Husband offered such Sacrifices to her, as the Athenians offered to Ceres. Φησὶ θύειν Ἀριστοτέλη θυσίαν τελευτηκυῖα τῇ γυναικὶ τοιαύτην Ἀθηναῖοι τῇ Δήμητρι (44). Scribit (Lycon Pythagoræus) Aristotelem idem sacrificii genus, quod Cereri ab Athenientibus fiebat, demortuæ uxori facere solitum. Aristocles answered, I. That Apellicon's Books, concerning the Intercourse of Hermias with Aristotle, fully justified these two Friends. II. That Aristotle had sufficiently justified himself as to his Marriage with Pythias, in the Letters, which he wrote to Antipater. This Pythias was the Sister of Hermias, and his adopted Daughter. Aristotle made it appear, that he did not marry her, 'till after the Death of Hermias; that she was a very virtuous Woman, but reduced to so deplorable a Condition, by the Death of her Brother, that he thought himself obliged to marry her out of a regard to Hermias.

(42) Aristocles, apud Euseb. Præp. lib. 15. cap. 2.

(43) Id. ib.

(44) Id. ib.

[G] The Process for Irreligion, which the Priests had entered against him.] The Circumstances of this Affair are not known. Diogenes Laërtius has only told us (45), that Eurymedon, the Priest, accused Aristotle of Impiety, on account of an Hymn, which he had composed in Honour of Hermias, and an Inscription, engraved on the Statue of the same Hermias, in the Temple of Delphi. Phavorinus imputes the Accusation to Demophilus (46). It cannot be conceived by what Querks of Law the Accusers could draw the least Shadow of a Proof from the Inscription to Hermias. It consists of four Verses, which have no Relation to Things Sacred, but are only levelled against the Perfidiousness of the King of Persia to This unhappy Friend of Aristotle. Athenæus informs us, that the Ground of the other Accusation, to wit, the Hymn composed for Hermias, was unjust, since it was no Religious Poem, nor sacred Piece, as Demophilus pretended (47). Athenæus adds, that, to give the greater weight to the Accusation, Eurymedon had suborned Demophilus (48). It is probable, that Demophilus was some Person of Quality, and of great Authority in Athens. Perhaps he did not see to the Bottom of the Sacerdotal Craft; nor apprehend, that Eurymedon, the Priest, desired his Countenance, only to render poor Aristotle the more suspected. He expected, that People would Reason after this manner; If only the Priests had accused Aristotle, the Evil might be born with a!; their great Piety makes them subject

(45) In vita Aristot. lib. 5. n. 5.

(46) Phavorin. in omnimoda Historia, apud Laërtium, ibid.

(47) Athen. lib. 15. cap. 16. pag. 696.

(48) See the Notes of Casaubon on Athenæus, pag. 584.

WHY Aristotle had Reason to fear the Priests, his Accusers.

Digitized by Google

him are to be looked for in the extravagant Commendations, which have been heaped upon him: As for Example; Is it not a downright Falſhood, to ſay, That, if Ariſtotle ſpoke, in his Natural Philoſophy, like a Man, he ſpoke, in his Moral Philoſophy, like a God (f): And that it is a queſtion, whether, in his Moral Philoſophy, he partakes more of the Lawyer, than of the Prieſt; more of the Prieſt, than of the Prophet; more of the Prophet, than of the God (g)? I ſhall, in the Remarks, touch upon ſome Praiſes beſtowed on him, which are ſtill greater than theſe [H]. Cardinal Pallavicini ſcruples not, in ſome meaſure, to confeſs, That, if it had not been for Ariſtotle, the

(f) Father Pardies, in a Letter from a Peripatetic to a Carteſian, ſays, that this is the Opinion of a great Wit; and cites in the Margin, Corn. à Lapide, Præf. in Eccleſ.

(g) This is the Opinion of another great Wit, according to Father Pardies, ib.

ſubject to be alarmed at the leaſt Thing, which affects Religion: but here is Demophilus, who is ſo ſcandalized at Ariſtotle's Impieties, that he openly demands Juſtice againſt him; the Evil muſt needs be very great. The Hymn in queſtion is preſerved. It is to be found in Athenæus, and in Diogenes Laërtius; and there is not the leaſt Trace of Irreligion in it. But, doubtleſs, his Accuſers alledged, that Ariſtotle prophaned the uſe of Divine Hymns, by employing them in the Praiſes of a Mortal Man. They maintained, that he ſung This Hymn daily at his Meals (49). Ariſtotle, not willing to rely on the good Conſtruction, which might be made of his little Poem, retired quietly to Chalcis, in Eubea, and pleaded his Cauſe, in writing, at a Diſtance. Athenæus reports ſome Words of This Apology; but does not warrant them to be really Ariſtotle's (50). Phavorinus affirms, in Diogenes Laërtius, that Ariſtotle wrote a Speech, at that time, in the Judiciary Style, and that he was the firſt, who compoſed ſuch Speeches in his own Cauſe; or that this was the firſt time he made them for himſelf (51). Nunneſius affirms, that Seneca, de vita beata, obſerves, that Ariſtotle made but This one in his whole Life-Time (52). However it be, his ſafeſt way was to plead his Cauſe at a Diſtance; for his Accuſers were Men, who would never have given him any Quarter, but have ſet all Engines at Work, till they had found one, which would have done the Buſineſs. It was impoſſible ſo great a Wit as He ſhould not ſometimes laugh at the Impertinence of the publick Worſhip of the Athenians, and ſpeak his Sentiments of Prieſt-Craft. All, that he had ever ſaid in Converſation, would have been raked up; Witneſſes would have been heard; in a Word, he would have been effectually cruſhed. Beſides, who knows, but, at ſome time or other, a Real Impiety might have eſcaped him; when, intending to ſpeak only of the immutable Greatneſs of the Supremely-Perfect Being? Origen ſays, that The Action of Impiety, which his Accuſers would have brought againſt him, was founded on ſome of his Doctrines (53). He ſays, in another place, that it is a Tenet of the Peripatetics, that Prayers and Sacrifices are uſeleſs (54). It is probable they built this Doctrine on This falſe Principle; that infinite Wiſdom knows, at all times, what is fit to be done; and that it does not alter it's purpoſe according to the Deſires or Intereſts of Men; as if the Divinity ſtood in need of our Prayers, as Notices or Hints, not to do That, which we believe he is prepared to do. Such a Principle, if not rectified by the Lights of Religion, is a real Impiety. Ariſtotle could never have eſcaped the Athenian Prieſts, if they had held him to This Point. His Anſwer to thoſe, who demanded the Reaſon of his Retreat, ſhews, that he feared, they would find good, or bad, Proofs againſt him. I would not willingly be the Cauſe of the Athenians being guilty of a ſecond Injuſtice againſt Philoſophy. The firſt Injuſtice was the Death of Socrates. Πρὸς τὸν ἐρόμενον διὰ τὶ ἀπέλιπε τὰς Ἀθήνας, ἀπεκρίναλο ὅτι ἠ βέλεται Ἀθηναίης δὶς ἐξαμαρ]εῖν εἰς φιλοσοφίαν· τὸ περὶ Σωκράτην παύ]ω αἰνιτ]όμενο], καὶ τὸν κατ' αὐτὸν κίνδυνον (55). Interroganti cur reliquiſſet Athenas, reſpondit; quoniam noluiſſet committere, ut Athenienſes bis peccarent in Philoſophiam: obſcure Socratis mortem innuens, & ſuum periculum. He made uſe of one of Homer's Verſes, to ſignify, that it was not ſafe living in a City, where the Race of Informers never decreaſed, but one regularly ſucceeded another. We may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that he acknowledged himſelf guilty of having perſonally offended Eurymedon, the Prieſt of Ceres (56), by ſome Stroke of Raillery; which kindled the Zeal of this Perſonage, who had ſuffered the pretended Impiety of the Hymn to lie dormant for twenty Years. It is more dangerous to offend theſe Gentlemen in their own Perſons, than in the Perſons of their Gods. See the Remark [R], where we ſhall relate the Opinions of ſome Authors concerning the Cauſe of Ariſtotle's Flight. I have obſerved, at the End of the Article, that Heſychius affirms, that he was actually condemned, and executed at Athens. I uſe no Hyperbole in the Expreſſion of twenty Years; ſince Ariſtotle had taught thirteen Years at Athens, when the Proceſs for Irreligion obliged him to retire to Chalcis (57). He did not return to Athens, 'till he had inſtructed Alexander, whoſe Preceptor he was not, 'till after the Death of Hermias.

(49) Athen. pag. 696. B.

(50) Id. pag 697. A.

(51) Diog. Laërt. vit. Ariſtot. n. 9.

(52) Nunneſ. Not. in vit. Ariſt. pag. 147.

(53) Origen. contra Celſum, lib. 1.

(54) Ibid. lib. 2.

(55) Ælian. lib. 3 cap. 36. See alſo Ammonius in vita Ariſtot. Origen. contra Celſum, lib. 1. Diog. Laërt. in Ariſtot. n. 9.

(56) Diog. Laërt. in vit. Ariſt. n 8.

(57) Ammon. in ejus vita.

[H] I ſhall touch upon ſome Praiſes, beſtowed on him, which are ſtill greater than theſe.] "Averroes has "ſaid, that, before Ariſtotle's Birth, Nature was in-"compleat; that, in him, it received it's laſt Accom-"pliſhment, and the Perfection of it's Being; that "it could go no farther; that here was the Extre-"mity of it's Power, and the Limits of human Un-"derſtanding. Another Philoſopher has outdone "Averroes, by ſaying, that Ariſtotle was a ſecond "Nature." Thoſe are Balzac's Words, in the Four hundred and fifty ninth Page of the Diſcourſes, which were printed after his Chriſtian Socrates. This puts me in mind of the Scruples of an Author, who, ſeeing that Nature herſelf ſubſcribed to Ariſtotle's Opinions, durſt never doubt of what he had ſaid. Recte & hoc Ariſtoteles, ut cetera; nec poſſum non aſſentiri viro, cujus inventis nec ipſa natura diſſentit (58). A Spaniſh Divine ſays, that, without the particular Aſſiſtance of an Angel, or Genius, the Wit of Man cannot penetrate ſo far into the Secrets of Nature, as Ariſtotle has done (59). He muſt have believed, then, that Ariſtotle had a good, or an evil, Angel, which inſtructed him in a thouſand things, to which human Underſtanding could not attain. William, Biſhop of Paris, mentains, "in ſeveral Parts of his "Works (60), that This Philoſopher had a Familiar "Spirit, who directed all his Actions, whom he "cauſed to deſcend from the Sphere of Venus, by "ſacrificing a ſtrangled Lamb, and ſome other Ce-"remonies." Others have ſaid, that he ſtood in no need of ſuch Aſſiſtance. It was the "Opinion of "the famous Divine Henry de Aſſia (61), that Ari-"ſtotle could have acquired as perfect a Knowledge "in Theology, by the Light of Nature, as That, "which was diſcovered to our firſt Father, when "he fell aſleep in the Terreſtrial Paradiſe (62), or to "St Paul, when he was ſnatched up into the Third "Heaven." A Council, which was held in France, under Philip Auguſtus, ordered Ariſtotle's Metaphyſics to be burnt. An Engliſh Doctor, of the Order of St Auguſtin (63), has left in Writing, that it was commonly believed, in thoſe Times, that none but Antichriſt ſhould be able thoroughly to underſtand Ariſtotle's Books; which he would make uſe of, to convince all thoſe, who ſhould enter into Diſpute with him. Let us end this little Collection, with a Paſſage of Agrippa, who informs us, that the Divines of Cologn maintained, that Ariſtotle was the Fore-runner of the Meſſias, in the Myſteries of Nature, as St John Baptiſt was, in the Myſteries of Grace. "Digniſſi-"mus profecto hodie Latinorum gymnaſiorum Doctor, "& quem Colonienſes mei Theologi etiam divis ad-"numerarent, librumque ſub prælo evulgatum ede-"rent, cui titulum facerent de Salute Ariſtotelis (64); "ſed & alium verſu & metro de vita & morte Ari-"ſtotelis, quem Theologica inſuper gloſſa illuſtra-"runt, in cujus calce concludunt, Ariſtotelem ſic "fuiſſe Chriſti præcurſorem in Naturalibus, quemad-"modum Joannes Baptiſta in Gratuitis (65). —— "A moſt worthy Doctor of the Latin Schools, and whom "my Countrymen, the Divines of Cologn, would even "exalt to Divinity, and would publiſh a printed "Work Of the Salvation of Ariſtotle; beſides another "in Verſe Of the Life and Death of Ariſtotle; which "they have illuſtrated with a Theological Commentary, "at the end of which they conclude, that Ariſtotle was "the Fore runner of Chriſt in Natural Things, as John

(58) Micreb. Saturnal. lib. 7. c. 6.

(59) Medina, in 1 hom. Aquin. I. Secundæ Quæſt. 109. Art. I. cited by Naudé, in his Apology for great Men. pag. 327.

(60) De Univerſo Spiritu, Part. I. cap. 92, 153. & Part. II. cap. 6. cited by Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 328.

(61) Apud Sibillam I. Decad. peregrin. Quæſt. cap. 8. Quæſt. I. Quæſtiunc. IV. cited by Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 319.

(62) See Citation (11) of the Article ADAM.

(63) Alexander Neccam, Lib. de Natura Rerum, cited by la Mothe le Vayer, of the Virtue of the Pagans. Oper. Tom. 5. pag. 102. Edit. in 12mo.

(64) See the Remark [R].

(65) Agrippa, de Vanit. Scientiar. cap. 64. pag. 95. Baleus has copied this, Cent. 14. pag. 220. See, below, the Remark [U].

Digitized by Google

the Church would have wanted ſome of it's Articles of Faith [I]. The Chriſtians are not the only People, who have authorized his Philoſophy; the Mahometans (b) are little leſs prejudiced in it's Favour; and we are told, that, to this Day, notwithſtanding the Ignorance, which reigns among them, They have Schools for this Sect [K]. It will be an everlaſting Subject of Wonder to Perſons, who know what Philoſophy is, to find, that Ariſtotle's Authority was ſo much reſpected in the Schools, for ſeveral Ages, that, when a Diſputant quoted a Paſſage from This Philoſopher, He, who maintained the Theſis, durſt not ſay Tranſeat, but muſt either deny the Paſſage, or explain it in his own way [L]. It is in this manner we treat the (b) See Rapin's Compariſon of Plato and Ariſtotle, pag. 403.

" John Baptiſt was in thoſe of Grace." To ſpeak impartially, and without any Prejudice, it may be ſaid, that theſe extravagant Panegyriſts do Ariſtotle's Memory more harm than good. Theſe Words of Tacitus may, in ſome reſpect, be applied to them: " Peſ-
(66) Tacit. in vita Agric. cap. 41. " ſimum inimicorum genus laudantes (66). ——— " Panegyriſts are the worſt of Enemies." So many juſt Praiſes may be beſtowed on Ariſtotle (67), that they are inexcuſable, who, not ſatisfied with them, have added others, which are hyperbolical.

(67) You will find many ſuch, in the Speeches of Corringius, entitled Ariſtotelis Laudatio.

Why were they not ſatisfied with ſaying, that he dipt his Pen in good Senſe (68)? This is what all Philoſophers ought to do, if the chief of the Stoics may be believed. Ὁ Ζήνων ἔλεγεν ὅτι δεῖ τὸν φιλόσοφον εἰς νῦν ἀποδάπλουλα πεφορέσθαι τὴν λέξιν (69). Zeno ait mente tinctum proferre Philoſophum ſermonem debere. They, who would ſee a Collection of the Praiſes given to Ariſtotle, would do well to read George of Trebizond (70). Pererius, in the firſt Chapter of the fifth Book de Principiis; Juſtus Lipſius, in the fourth Diſſertation of the firſt Book Manuductionis ad Philoſophiam Stoicam; Theodorus Angelutius, in his Anſwer to Francis Patricius, &c.

(68) See the Words of Suidas, below, Remark [Z], at the beginning.

(69) Plut. in Vita Phocionis, pag. 743. E.

(70) De Comparat. Platonis, & Ariſtotelis.

[I] Cardinal Pallavicini ſcruples not, in ſome meaſure, to confeſs, That, if it had not been for Ariſtotle, the Church would have wanted ſome of it's Articles of Faith.] The Author of the new Goſpel of Cardinal Pallavicini does not fail (71) to make the moſt of theſe Words of the nineteenth Chapter of the eighth Book, n. 13. " Di cio ſi doveva in gran parte l'ob-
" ligatione ad Ariſtotele, il quale ſe non ſi foſſe ado-
" perato in diſtinguer accuratamente i generi delle
" ragioni, noi mancavamo di molti articoli di fede.
" — Great Thanks is due for this to Ariſtotle, who, if " he had not taken the Pains to diſtinguiſh accurately the
" ſeveral kinds of reaſoning, we ſhould have wanted
" many Articles of Faith." This Encomium puts me in mind of a Paſſage of Nicius Erythræus, as great a Flatterer of Ariſtotle as any of them: He ſays, that it was a vain Attempt, in the Subtle and Learned Patricius, to oppoſe the Doctrine of the Lycæum; a Doctrine, which can never be ſhaken, and which will always triumph over it's Rivals. " Altius Ariſtotelis
" auctoritas radices egit, quam ut cujuſquam vim
" impetumque pertimeſcat: viget, ſemperque vige-
" bit, hominis diſciplina; tantumque quis exiſtima-
" bitur ſcire, quantum ex doctrinæ ejuſdam fontibus
" hauſtum, intelligentia comprehenſum habuerit; ac
" nemo, cui cor ſapiat, non ſatius eſſe ducet in iis,
" quæ ad Philoſophiam pertinent, cum deo, ut ita
" dicam, philoſophorum errare, quam cum aliis recte
" ſapere, minorum gentium magiſtris. Itaque ille,
" omnibus in gymnaſiis, ad ſapientiam properantibus,
" dux ſemper habebitur: ille Theologorum quaſi mi-
" litiæ, adverſus religionis noſtræ hoſtes, definitiones,
" argumentorum copiam, & alia præclare dicta multa,
" tanquam amentatas haſtas elargietur, quas illa Theo-
" logicis lacertis ac viribus, de cœlo ſuppeditatis, tor-(72) Pinacoth I. pag. 204. " queat ac vibret (72). ——— Ariſtotle's Authority has " taken too deep root, to fear the Attacks of any one.
" The Doctrine of that great Man flouriſhes, and will
" for ever flouriſh; and each one will be eſteemed
" learned, in proportion as he is verſed in the Wri-
" tings of this Philoſopher; and indeed no Man of
" Senſe, but would chuſe, in Matters of Philoſophy,
" to err with this God of the Philoſophers, if I may
" be allowed to call him ſo, than to think right with " Maſters of an inferiour Claſs. For this reaſon, he " will be the Head of every School, which is in pur-
" ſuit of true Wiſdom; he will equip our militant Di-
" vines, againſt the Enemies of our Religion, with
" Definitions, Arguments, &c. which, as ſo many " Weapons from Heaven, they may brandiſh by the " Strength of their Theological Arms." To deal fairly, I think myſelf obliged to ſay, that Cardinal Pallavicini does not advance the Maxim alledged as from himſelf, nor as an Obſervation, of which he would inform the World, but only as a malicious Jeſt of Father Paul. He treats this Raillery as impertinent, and ſays, that the Councils, in which Subſtance, Perſon, and Hypoſtaſis, were ſo ſubtily diſtinguiſhed, were equally expoſed to it. In a Word, he does not deny the Fact, and is content to laugh at Thoſe, who laugh at it (73). Father Paul, having ſet down the Decree of the ſixth Seſſion, ſhews what it was that had been cenſured in it, and, among other things, ſays, that they, who were verſed in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, obſerved, that all the other Councils, put together, had not decided ſo many Articles, as That ſingle Seſſion, in which Ariſtotle had a great ſhare, in having diſtinguiſhed between the ſeveral kinds of Cauſes; and, that, without his Help, we ſhould have wanted many Articles of Faith. In chi haveva una gran parte Ariſtotele, coll' haver diſtinto effattamente tutti i generi di cauſe, a che, ſe egli non ſi foſſe adoperato, noi mancavamo di molti articoli di Fede (74). The Remonſtrances of the Sorbonne, upon which the Parliament of Paris made an Order againſt Chymiſts, in the Year 1629, imported, that no one could oppoſe the Principles of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, without interfering with the Scholaſtic Divinity received in the Church (75). In the Year 1624, the Parliament of Paris baniſhed three Perſons, who ventured publickly to diſpute againſt Ariſtotle's Philoſophy; and forbad all Perſons to vent the Propoſitions contained in their Theſes, on pain of corporal Puniſhments, and to teach any Maxims contrary to ancient and approved Authors on pain of Death (76).

(73) Ma quale ſtoltizia è quello Scherno, che di cio ſi doveva in gran parte l'obligatione ad Ariſtotele, &c. See Rapin's Reflexions on Philoſophy, pag. 449.

(74) Father Paul's Hiſtory of the Council of Trent. lib. 2. ad ann. 1545, pag. 224, Edit. of 1629.

(75) Rapin's Compariſon of Plato and Ariſtotle, p. 413.

[K] To this Day the Mahometans - - - - - have Schools for This Sect.] " The Peripatetic Philoſophy
" is ſo eſtabliſhed every where, that no other is read
" in all Chriſtian Univerſities. Even They, who " are forced to receive the Impoſtures of Maho-
" met, teach the Sciences no otherwiſe than
" according to the Principles of the Lycæum, to " which they are ſo attached, that Averroes, Alfa-
" rabius, Almubaſſar (77), and ſeveral other Arabian
" Philoſophers, often ſwerve from the Opinions of " their Prophet, that they may not contradict Thoſe
" of Ariſtotle, whom the Turks have tranſlated into
" the Turkiſh and Arabic Languages, as Belonius *,
" relates (78)." The Author, from whom I borrow theſe Words, ſays in another Volume (79), that, according to Olearius's Relation, the Perſians have all Ariſtotle's Works, explained by ſeveral Arabian Commentators, who are wont to call his Philoſophy the Goblet, or Drinking-Cup, of the World. " Ber-
" geron, ſays he, obſerves, in his Treatiſe of the " Tartars, that they had Ariſtotle's Books tranſlated
" into their Language, teaching his Doctrine, with " as much Submiſſion, as can be done here, at Sa-
" marcand, an Univerſity of the Great Mogul, and
" at preſent the chief City of the Kingdom of
" Usbec."

(76) Mercure François, Tom. 10. p. 504.

(77) It ſhould be Albumaſſar, or Almubaſſar.

* Lib. 3. cap. 14.

(78) La Mothe le Vayer, of the Virtue of the Pagans, Tom. 5. p. 101.

(79) The 12th, pag. 245.

[L] Where a Diſputant quoted a Paſſage from This Philoſopher, He who maintained the Theſis, durſt not ſay Tranſeat, but muſt either deny the Paſſage, or explain in it his own Way.] If any one think fit to conteſt this Fact, I refer him to ſeveral Courſes of Philoſophy, printed in the XVIth Century, where This Method is found to have been in uſe. The Author proves his Theſis, firſt by Authority, and afterwards by Reaſon. The Authoritative Proof are Paſſages out of Ariſtotle. The Anſwer to the Objections conſiſts alſo of two Parts. Firſt, Satisfaction given as to the Paſſages of Ariſtotle, which ſeem to oppoſe the Theſis, and which are Authoritative Proofs for the other Party: Afterwards an Anſwer is given to the Reaſons; but great Care is taken never to ſay, I own that the Holy Scriptures in the Divinity Schools. The Parliaments, which have proſcribed all other Philoſophy, but That of Ariſtotle (i), are more excuſable than The Doctors: For, whether the Members of Parliament were really perſuaded, as is very probable, that This Philoſophy was the beſt of any, or were not, the Public Good might induce them to prohibit New Opinions, leaſt the Academical Diviſions ſhould extend their malignant Influence to the Tranquillity of the State. What is moſt aſtoniſhing to Wiſe Men, is, that the Profeſſors ſhould be ſo ſtrongly prejudiced in Favour of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy. Had This Prepoſſeſſion been confined to his Poetry, and Rhetoric, it had been leſs wonderful; but they were fond of the weakeſt of his Works; I mean his Logic, and Natural Philoſophy [M]. This Juſtice however muſt be done to the blindeſt of his Followers, that they have deſerted him, where he claſhes with Chriſtianity [N]. And this he did in Points of the greateſt Conſequence; ſince he maintained the Eternity of the World, and did not believe, that Providence extended itſelf to ſublunary Beings. As to the Immortality of the Soul, it is not certainly known, whether he acknowledged it or no [O]. We ſhall take notice, in another Place, of the long Diſputes, which have reigned in Italy, on This Subject. In the Year 1647, the Famous Capuchin Valerian Magni publiſhed a Work concerning the Atheiſm of Ariſtotle. About One Hundred and thirty Years before, Marc Anthony Venerius publiſhed a Syſtem of Philoſophy, in which he diſcovered ſeveral Inconſiſtencies between Ariſtotle's Doctrine, and the Truths of Religion. Campanella maintained the ſame, in his Book de reductione ad Religionem, which was approved at Rome, in the Year 1630. It was, not long ſince, maintained, in Holland, in the Prefaces to ſome Books, that the Doctrine of This Philoſopher differed but little from Spinoziſm (k). In the mean time, if ſome Peripatetics that Ariſtotle believed ſo and ſo; nevertheleſs I deny, that my Theſis, wherein I maintain another Doctrine, is falſe. All Endeavours are made uſe of to give the objected Paſſages ſuch a Senſe, as may agree with the Matter in queſtion. The ſame Method is ſtill in uſe among Thoſe of the Church of Rome, in the Divinity Schools, with regard to St Auſtin, and Thomas Aquinas.

Digitized by Google

(i) See Remark [I], at the end.

(k) Hiſſel, in the Preface to the Anti-Spinoza of Wittichius, printed in 1690; and in the Preface to the Inveſtigatio Epiſtolæ ad Hebræos of the ſame Author, printed in 1691.

[M] The weakeſt of his Works; I mean his Logic, and Natural Philoſophy.] To be convinced of the Weakneſs of theſe Works, we need only read Gaſſendus in his Exercitationes paradoxicæ adverſus Ariſtoteleos (80). He ſays enough there againſt Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, in general, to perſuade every unprejudiced Reader, that it is very defective; but he particularly ruins this Philoſopher's Logic. He was preparing likewiſe a Criticiſm on his Natural Philoſophy, his Metaphyſics, and Ethics, in the ſame way; when, being alarmed at the formidable Indignation of the Peripatetic Party againſt him, he choſe rather to drop his Work, than expoſe himſelf to their vexatious Perſecutions.

(80) They are to be found in the third Volume of his Works.

Note, that no one pretends to deny, but that, in Ariſtotle's Logic, and Natural Philoſophy, there are many things, which diſcover the Elevation and Profoundneſs of his Genius. This we may grant, and, at the ſame time, judge that Caſaubon's Elogium on him is ſomewhat too hyperbolical. "Ego pueros "puto fuiſſe (ſocios in Logica) præ divino Ariſtotele; "& eorum in hoc genere ſcripta ὄθλον καὶ φλήναφον præ Ariſtotelis Organo; quo opere omnia "mortalium ingenia (divina aut de rebus divinis ſemper excipio) longe ſuperavit (81). —— I look upon "the Logicians as Children, in Compariſon of the Divine Ariſtotle, and their Writings on this Subject "to be Trifles, when compared with Ariſtotle's Organum; in which Work he has ſurpaſſed all the Wit "of Man; divine Subjects ever excepted. The ſame may be ſaid of This Paſſage of Father Rapin; "Nothing appears to have been regular or ſettled in "Logic before *Ariſtotle. This great Genius, fraught "with Reaſon, and Knowledge, ſearched ſo deep "into the Abyſs of Human Wit, that he penetrated "all the Secrets of it by his nice Diſcernment of it's "Operations. This vaſt Depth of human Thoughts "had never yet been ſounded: Ariſtotle was the firſt, "who diſcovered a new Way of attaining to Science, "by the Evidence of Demonſtration, and by proceeding geometrically to Demonſtration in the way of "Syllogiſm, the moſt finiſhed Production, and greateſt Effort, of human Wit. This is, in Miniature, "the whole Art and Method of Ariſtotle's Logic; "which is ſo very ſure a one, that there can be no "perfect Certainty in reaſoning but by this Method, "which is a certain Rule for thinking right on what "ever ought to employ our Thoughts (82)." This Philoſopher's Treatiſe of Syllogiſms may be commended as it deſerves, without employing any ſuch extravagant Expreſſions. There are ſeveral very ſublime Queſtions in his Phyſics, which he diſcuſſes, and clears up, in a very maſterly Way; but, in ſhort, the main, the Groſs, of this Work is good for nothing; infelix operis ſumma. The chief Reaſon of This Defect is Ariſtotle's forſaking the Path, which the moſt excellent Naturaliſts took, who had philoſophized before him. They believed, that all the Alterations, which happen in Nature, are only new Diſpoſitions of the Particles of Matter; they admitted no Generation, properly ſpeaking. This was the Doctrine, which he rejected (83); and, in ſo doing, was bewildered. For he was obliged to teach, that new Beings are produced, and others deſtroyed; he diſtinguiſhed them from Matter; he gave them unheard-of Names, he affirmed, or ſuppoſed, things, of which he had no diſtinct Ideas. Now it is as impoſſible to philoſophize juſtly without the Evidence of Ideas, as to ſail without the Polar Star, or the Compaſs. To abandon this Evidence is to be beſide one's ſelf; it is to imitate a Traveller, who, in a ſtrange Country, ſhould diſmiſs his Guide; it is to feel one's Way in a ſtrange Houſe by Night without a Candle. Every one knows the many Forms, and Qualities diſtinct from Subſtance, which Ariſtotle's Followers have introduced; he had opened to them This Labyrinth: And if, in the XVIIth Century, Natural Philoſophy began to appear again with new Luſtre, it was by reſtoring the Ancient Principles, which he had forſaken, and by recurring to Evidence: In ſhort, it was by excluding the great Number of Entities, of which our Mind has no manner of Idea, out of the Doctrine of Generation, and ſticking to the Figure, Motion, and Situation of the Particles of Matter: Things, of which we have a clear and diſtinct Conception.

(83) See the firſt Book of Ariſtotle, De Generatione & Corruptione.

[N] This Juſtice however muſt be done to the blindeſt of his Followers, that They deſerted him, where he claſhes with Chriſtianity.] I intend not to enter into Diſpute with Luther, in behalf of the Divines of Cologne: He reproaches Them, and Thoſe of Louvain alſo, with defending, or ſoftening, Ariſtotle's greateſt and moſt impious Abſurdities, by their forced Interpretations. Ariſtotelem ipſis in ſummo eſſe pretio, & nihil ab eo dictum eſſe tam abſurde vel aliene à noſtra religione quod non defendant, quod non aliqua interpretatione quantumvis longe petita circumveſtiant, quò ſuus ille conſtet honos atque nominis exiſtimatio (84). What is not Prejudice capable of!

(84) Apud Sleidanum, de Statu Relig. & Reip. lib. 2. fol. 33.

[O] As to the Immortality of the Soul, it is not certainly known, whether he believed it or no.] Pomponatius, and Niphus, had a great Quarrel on this Subject. The firſt maintained, that the Immortality of the Soul was inconſiſtent with Ariſtotle's Principles; the latter undertook to defend the contrary.

See

* Ariſtoteles utriuſque partis dialecticæ princeps. ----- Ariſtotle, the Head of both the Parts of Logic. Cicero Topic. cap. 2.

(81) Caſaub. in Perſium, Sat. 5. ver. 86. p. 415.

(82) Rapin's Reflexions on Logic, n. 4. pag. 374, 375.

Digitized by Google

patetics may be believed, He was not ignorant of the Mystery of the Trinity [P]. He made a very good End [Q], and enjoys Eternal Happiness [R]. He composed a very great Number of Books, a great Part of which is come down to us. It is true, some Critics raise a thousand Scruples about them. We shall say something of the Fate of these Books, in the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION (l). He was extremely honoured in his own City [S]; and there were Heretics, who worshipped His Image jointly with That of JESUS CHRIST. I no where find, that the Antinomians bore greater Respect to This wise Pagan, than to the uncreated Wisdom

(l) See, above, Remarks [B], [C], [D], of the Article ANDRONICUS.

(95) Father Rapin's Comparison of Aristotle and Plato, pag. 310; who cites Justin. in Adm. ad Gentes. Greg. Naz. contra Jul. See also Rhodigin. lib. 29. c. 8. as to the Citations of Rapin, see the Remark [Z].

See the Discourse of la Mothe le Vayer on the Immortality of the Soul (85); and Bodin, in the fifteenth Page of the Preface to the Demonomania.

(85) It is in the fourth Tome of the Edition of his Works in 12mo.

[P] According to some Peripatetics, Aristotle was not ignorant of the Mystery of the Trinity.] Emanuel de Moura, disputing against Those, who accused Aristotle of Atheism, says, I. That a Woman wheedled him to that Degree, that she made him consult the Oracle of Apollo (86). II. That he ordered, by his last Will, that the Effigies of certain Animals, which he had vowed for the Health of Nicanor (87), should be dedicated to Jupiter and Minerva. III. That he confesses, in the first Book de Cœlo & Mundo (88). Se cum aliis obtuliſſe Diis trina ſacrificia, in recognitionem trinæ perfectionis in eis inventæ (89). -- That He, and Others, had offered to the Gods triple Sacrifices, in acknowledgment of the triple Perfection found in them. From these Passages it is inferred, not only that he believed the Existence of Devils, and was superstitious, but that he was acquainted likewise with a Trinity of Persons in an Unity of Substance; as Salmeron would have it (90); and George Trapezontius before him (91); which last wrote a whole Book concerning the Conformity of Aristotle's Doctrine with the Holy Scripture. Naudé, from whom I borrow this, observes, That Emanuel de Moura evidently misrepresents Philoponus, who says no more, according to the Greek Text, and the Old Translation, which agrees with That of Nunnesius, than that Aristotle, having attained to the Age of sixteen Years, was advised, by the Pythian Oracle, to addict himself chiefly to Philosophy —— Naudé says, that the Three Sacrifices, which he offered to the Gods, and the Knowledge of the Trinity, which many Catholic Doctors ascribe to him, "are meer Chimera's, which "owe their Original to what he says in his first Book de "Cœlo, speaking of the Trinary Number; Διὸ πάρα τῆς φύσεως ειληφότες ὥσπερ νόμος ἐκείνης καὶ πρὸς τὰς ἁγιστείας τῶν Θεῶν χρώμεθα τῷ ἀριθμῷ τούτῳ. That is, Wherefore, even in "sacrificing to the Gods, we make use of this Num-" ber, which seems to be dictated by Nature herself." From which Passage nothing more can be inferred, "than that Aristotle says, that, in his Time, they "made use of the Number Three in Sacrifices; "which is also testified by Theocritus." Afterwards Naudé observes, that Cardinal Bessarion (93) laughs at Trapezontius for taking so much Pains to prove, from this Text, that Aristotle had a full Knowledge of the Trinity. The modern Schoolmen will bate nothing of these Pretensions. See Piccinardi, Professor at Padua, in his Dogmata Philosophiæ Peripateticæ. The Journal of Italy mentions it under the Thirty first of August, 1674.

(86) He cites Philoponus, in the Life of Aristotle.

(87) He cites Plutarch and Diog.

(88) Sect. II. cap. ii. n. 10. cited by Naudé, in his Apology for Great Men.

(89) Eman. de Moura, lib. de Essl. §. II. cap. iii. n. 19. apud Naudé, ubi supra, pag. 328.

(90) Tom. II. Tract. XXIII. n. 3. apud Naudé, ibid. p. 329.

(91) Lib. II. de Comparat. Aristot. & Plat. cited by Naudé, ibid.

(92) The Circumstance of Age would enervate the whole Proof of Moura; for they, who should pretend, that Aristotle had denied the Existence of Spirits, would not take him at the Age of 17 Years.

[Q] He made a very good end.] Finding himself near his Death, he shed a Flood of Tears, and, full of Grief and Hope, implored the Mercy of the Supream Being. He approved a Sentence of Homer extreamly, which says, That it does not misbecome the Gods to assume the Nature of Man, to the end that they may enlighten Human Kind. These were Glimpses of the future Incarnation of the Son of God. "Proditum & illud monumentis est, quum "philosophus hic extrema sibi ingruere præsensisset, "dolore ac spe in lacrymas amplius profusum pri-"mæ causæ misericordiam intentius imploras-"se. Quin & Homeri sententiam ex Odyssea ve-"hementer approbasse, qua non esse immortalibus "diis indecorum pronuntiatur hominis induere na-"turam, quo ab erroribus sevocentur mortales. Qua "in re CHRISTI præsensisse adventum augurantur nonnulli ejus viri gloriæ in primis addicti." This we read in Cœlius Rhodiginus (94). His Authority in Matters of this Nature is good for nothing. Others speak very differently of Aristotle's last Hours. "They say, that he died of Vexation, because "he could not comprehend the Cause of the Ebbing "and Flowing of the Euripus. Upon which some Moderns have invented a Fable, which has been greatly "in vogue, viz. that this Philosopher threw him-"self into the Euripus, with these Words, Let the "Euripus receive me, since I cannot comprehend the "Euripus (95)." Diogenes Laërtius quotes an Author, called Eumelus, who said, that Aristotle, having fled to Chalcis, poisoned himself there, at seventy Years of Age (96). Apollodorus seems to me more worthy of Credit, who says, that This great Man died of Sickness, at the Age of Sixty three Years (97).

(93) Lib. de Natura & Arte, cited by la Mothe le Vayer, ibid.

(94) Cœl. Rhodig. l. 27. c. 34.

(96) In Diog. Laërt. in Arist. n. 6.

(97) Apollod. apud Laërt. ibid. n. 10.

[R] Enjoys Eternal Happiness.] Sepulveda, one of the most learned Men of the XVIth Century, made no Scruple to rank him among the Blessed, and maintained his Opinion publickly in Writing (98). The Jesuit Gretserus rebuked him for his Presumption, but confessed, that he was inclined to favour Aristotle as much as Sepulveda, whom he disapproves only for his confident manner of Speaking (99). Add to this, what I have quoted from Cœlius Rhodiginus (100), and what considerable Persons have observed concerning the Reason, which obliged Aristotle to leave Athens. Albertus Magnus maintained, that they expelled him thence for his good Qualities; Propter morum rectitudinem pulsus Athenis (101): Gretser, in his Dispute with Sepulveda, about Aristotle's Salvation, does not question, but he intended, by this voluntary Banishment, to avoid the Necessity, which they would have laid upon him, of paying That Worship to Idols, which he believed to be due to God alone (102). Thus we have, in his Person, an illustrious Refugee for the true Religion. Origen has given a favourable Interpretation to this Flight of Aristotle (103); for, in explaining the Precept, which our Saviour gives his Apostles, when persecuted in one City, to fly to another (104), he tells Celsus, who derided it with his usual Prophaneness, That Aristotle's withdrawing himself, as we have mentioned, was conformable to the Gospel Morality, and that, being injuriously persecuted, he acted, as JESUS CHRIST had advised his Disciples to do (105).

(98) Sepulveda, lib. de Anima, cited by la Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 5. pag. 114.

(99) Gretserus, cited by la Mothe le Vayer, ibid.

(100) Above, Citation (94).

(101) Albertus Magnus, lib. 5. Ethic. cap. 1. cited by Rapin, pag. 310.

(102) Gretserus, de variis cæl. Luth. cap. 12. cited by la Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 5. pag. 109.

I have quoted (106) a Passage of Agrippa, where he mentions a Book de Salute Aristotelis. Voëtius, who had so extensive a Knowledge of Books, had never seen it; but knew pretty exactly the Time of it's Impression. He says, in a Thesis, maintained by him on the fifteenth of December, 1638, that it was printed at Oppenheim, about One hundred and forty Years before, and that Francis Junius had seen a Copy of it (107). He adds, that one Lambertus Montanus Author, of a Commentary on Aristotle's Physics, (where, in the Year 1486, he is stiled Doctor of Divinity) had wrote concerning This Philosopher's Salvation, and had made it probable from Scripture, and the Opinion of learned Men, that the Stagyrite was saved. Quæstionem Magistralem satis acutam scripsisse, ostendentem per autoritates scripturæ divinæ, quid juxta saniorem doctorum sententiam probabilius dici possit de salvatione Aristotelis Stagiritæ (108). You will find, in a Treatise de Pietate Aristotelis erga Deum & hominem, which Fortunius Licetus dedicated to Innocent X, and which was approved by two general Inquisitors, several Reasons, by which he endeavours to prove, that Aristotle is not damned.

(103) Orig. contra Celsum. lib. 2. cited by la Mothe le Vayer.

(104) Matt. cap. X. ver. 23.

(105) La Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 5. pag. 109.

(106) In the Remark [H].

(107) Gisb. Voët. Disp. Theol. Tom. 2. pag. 662.

(108) Idib. ex Append. II. ad Trithem. de Script. Eccles. Edit. Col. 1546.

[S] He was extreamly honoured in his own City.] It had been ruined by King Philip, but, at Aristotle's Request, was rebuilt by Alexander. In acknowledgment of so great a Benefit, the Inhabitants consecrated a Festival to This Philosopher; and, when he died at Chalcis, in the Island of Eubœa, they transported his Bones from thence; they built an Altar over his Tomb; they called the Place Aristotle's, and held their Assemblies there (109). Mandeville, in his fabulous Account of his Travels, says, that this subsisted in his Time, to wit, in the XIVth Century (110).

(109) Ammon. in Vita Aristot.

(110) Itinerar. cap. II. apud Hornium Hist. Philosoph. lib. iii. cap. xv. p. 137.

Digitized by Google

dom [T], nor that the Aëtians were excommunicated, for giving their Disciples Aristotle's Categories for a Catechism (m). But I have somewhere read, that, before the Reformation, there were Churches in Germany, in which Aristotle's Ethics were read every Sunday to the People, instead of the Gospel [U]. There are but few Instances of Zeal for Religion, which have not been shewn for the Peripapetic Philosophy. Paul de Foix, famous for his Embassies and his Learning, would not see Francis Patricius at Ferrara, because he was informed, that That Learned Man taught a Philosophy different from the Peripatetic (n). This was treating the Enemies of Aristotle as Zealots treat Heretics. After all, it is no wonder, that the Peripatetic Philosophy, as it has been taught for several Centuries, found so many Protectors [X], or that the Interests of it are believed to be inseparable from Those of Theology (o); for it accustoms the Mind to acquiesce without Evidence. This Union of Interests may be esteemed as a Pledge to the Peripatetics of the Immortality of Their Sect, and an Argument to abate the Hopes of the New Philosophers; considering withal, that there are some Doctrines of Aristotle, which the Moderns have rejected, and which must, sooner or later, be adopted again (p). The Protestant Divines have very much altered their Conduct; if it be true, as we are told, that the first Reformers clamoured so loudly against the Peripatetic Philosophy [Y]. The kind of Death, which

(m) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, pag. 392.

(n) Thuan. de vita sua, lib. 1.

(o) See the Remark [I].

(p) Such is the Hypothesis of moving for the rest; for the Doctrine of Vortices, under what general Law soever, and without a ruling and directing Virtue pecul iar to each Plant, can never satisfy the Mind.

[T] There were Heretics, who worshipped his Image with That of JESUS CHRIST, &c.] Read this Passage of Father Rapin (111). "The Carpo- "cratians were condemned, for placing This Philo- "sopher's Image next to That of JESUS CHRIST, "and for adoring him, through an extravagant Zeal "for his Doctrine *. The Aëtians were excom- "municated by the Church, and by the Arians "themselves, from whom they sprung, for giving "Aristotle's Categories to their Disciples, instead of "a Catechism †. And the Antinomians proceeded to "such Excess of Impiety, as to pay more Respect to "This wise Pagan, than to the Uncreated Wisdom ‖." I never was so much convinced, as by this Passage, that This entertaining Writer did not give himself the Trouble of consulting Originals. I confess, Baronius says, under the Year, which Father Rapin quotes, that the Carpocratians had Images, and, among others, That of JESUS CHRIST, (which they said was procured by Pilate) That of Pythagoras, That of Plato, and That of Aristotle; and that they paid them the same Veneration as the Pagans do to their Idols. But this should not have been alledged: For, besides that Baronius no where says, that These Heretics were condemned on this Account, it does not appear, that They had more Zeal for Aristotle's Doctrine, than for That of the other Philosophers, whose Images they venerated. My Edition of Baronius (112) does not contain one Word of what Father Rapin mentions under the Year 208: Nor is it possible, that Persons, who sprung from the Arians, should be driven from the Communion of the Church, in the beginning of the third Century. It is under the Year 356, that Baronius speaks of Aëtius: he quotes a long Passage of Suidas, in which we find, not that This Heretic gave his Followers Aristotle's Categories for a Catechisin; but that he explained things to them, according to the Method of Aristotle's Categories; meaning, that he was well versed in Logical Disputations and Subtilties. Just, as if, at present, a Spanish Schoolman, who undertook to explain a Point of Faith, should follow the Method of the Schools. Could it be said, that he substituted Aristotle's Works in the room of our Books of Religion? To quote Eusebius, in the Twenty seventh Chapter of his History, is an unwarrantable way of Citation. I do not believe That Author has said one Word of the Antinomians.

(111) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 392.

* Baronius Annal. Eccles ad Ann. 120.

† Ibid. ad Ann. 208.

‖ Eusеb. Hist. c. 27.

(112) That of Antwerp, in 1597.

[V] In some Churches of Germany, Aristotle's Ethics were read - - - - - instead of the Gospel.] I shall quote my Author; he is Spanhemius, the Father, in the Secular Oration, delivered by him at Geneva, in the Year 1635 (113). "Quin & Phi- "lippus Melancthon, says he (114), vir candidissi- "mus testatur diebus Dominicis, variis in locis, pro "thematibus Dominicalibus, inde à Karoli M. ætate "opera P Guarenfridi, seculo octavo, in Cathedras "Ecclesiasticas introductis, Ethica Aristotelis publice "populo prælecta, & à se Tubingæ in agro Wir- "tenburgico audita. - - -.- - - Philip Melancthon, a "Man of great Candor, affirms, that, in several "Places, instead of the Sunday Lectures, introduced "into the Churches, from the Time of Charles the "Great, in the VIIIth Century, by the Care of "Guarenfridus, the Ethics of Aristotle were publickly "read to the People, and that he himself had been "present at the reading of Them, at Tubingen, in "the Country of Wirtemburgh." If another Witness be demanded, and Magirus may be admitted, I shall produce him. "Tubingæ quondam Mona- "chus, says he (115), pro concione Aristotelis li- "brum Ethicorum explicavit, & vulgo dicebat, "quemadmodum Johannes Baptista Christi præcursor "fuit in Theologicalibus, ita Aristoteles fuit præ- "cursor Christi in Physicalibus (116). - - - - - A "certain Monk, formerly, at Tubingen, explained "Aristotle's Book of Ethics publickly to the People; "and was wont to say, that, as John the Baptist "was the Forerunner of CHRIST in Divine Things, "so Aristotle was in Natural Things."

(113) It is intituled Geneva Restituta.

(114) Pages 17, 18.

(115) Magirus in Eponymol. Critico, pag. 81, 82.

(116) He cites Greg. Michael in Not ad Jac. Gaffarelli, Curiosit. inaudit. pag. 109.

[X] It is no wonder, that the Peripatetic Philosophy found so many Protectors.] If All, who have embraced the Philosophy of Descartes, had been endued with That wise Moderation, which makes a Man stop, when he has attained to a certain Point; if they could have discerned, what was fit to be divulged, and what kept secret (117), they would not have raised such a Clamour against the Sect in general. The Method of the ancient Philosophers was founded on good Reasons. They had Tenets for the Vulgar, and Tenets for Disciples initiated into their Mysteries. Be that as it will, the applying, or endeavouring to accommodate, Descartes's Principles to the Doctrines of Religion, has been of great Prejudice to His Sect, and retards the Progress of it. This is an almost unavoidable Case. The ancient Fathers complained heavily of the Aristotelian Sect (118); and it is almost a general Complaint, that Philosophy does injury to Religion. But, on the other side, it is certain, that Divinity wounds Philosophy: They are two Faculties, which would seldom agree about their just Boundaries, did not the Secular, or Ecclesiastical, Powers, which are always in the Interest of the former, take the necessary Precautions, to reconcile them?

(117) Finita Poreas denique cuique quanam sit ratione utque altè terminus hærens, Luc. lib. 1. v. 77.

(118) See in Mr de Launoi, de varia Aristotelis Fortuna, cap. 1, a long List of their Passages.

[Y] The first Reformers clamoured loudly against the Peripatetic Philosophy.] Here is another Passage of Father Rapin (119); "Nothing did more honour "to This great Man's (120) Doctrine in the last "Century, than the bitter Invectives of Luther, Me- "lancthon, Bucer, Calvin, Postel, Paul Sarpi (121), "and all Those, who wrote against it, and against "the Church of Rome. For Their Complaints against "Aristotle are only because the solidity of his Method "gives the Catholics great Advantage in discovering "the Subtilty and Artifice of the false Reasonings, "which Heresy makes use of to disguise Error, and "destroy the Truth." In another Piece, This Author does not speak so much at random, and with so few Proofs. "St Thomas, says he (122), made use of A- "ristotle's Method, with so great Success, in explain- "ing the Doctrines of the Church of Rome, that "Bucer, one of the greatest Enemies of our Church, "used to say; Suppress Thomas's Works, and I will "destroy the Church of Rome *. It was This Method, "borrowed from Aristotle, which rendered the Do- "ctrines of our Religion so formidable to all the Inno- "vators of these last Centuries; who, being unable to "resist it, endeavoured to cry it down, by declaiming

(119) Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, pag. 412.

(120) He speaks of Aristotle.

(121) How can it be said, that he wrote against the Church of Rome, in the XVIth Century.

(122) Reflexions on Philosophy, pag. 450.

* Tolle Thomam, & Ecclesiam Romanam subvertam. Bucer. Father Rapin would have done well to have cited the Book and Page of Bucer.

Digitized by Google

which, in ſome Reſpects, does moſt Honour to the Memory of Ariſtotle, is That, which ſome have reported; viz. that his Vexation at not being able to diſcover the Cauſe of the Flux and Reflux of the Euripus occaſioned the Diſtemper, of which he died [Z]. Some ſay, that, being retired into the Iſland of Eubœa, to avoid a Proceſs againſt him for Irreligion, he poiſoned himſelf (q). But why ſhould he quit Athens, to free himſelf from Perſecution this way? Heſychius affirms, not only that Sentence of Death was pronounced againſt him, for an Hymn, which he made in Honour of his Father-in-Law, but alſo that he ſwallowed Aconite, in execution of The Sentence (r). If this were true, it would have been mentioned by more Authors. See the Remarks [G] and [Z].

(q) Eumelus, apud Diog. Laërt. lib. 5. n. 6.

(r) Heſych. in vita Ariſtot.

The Number of Ancient and Modern Writers, who have exerciſed their Pens on Ariſtotle, either in Commenting on, or Tranſlating, Him, is endleſs. A Catalogue of them is to be met with in ſome of the Editions of his Works (s), but not a compleat one. See alſo a Treatiſe of Father Labbé, intituled, Ariſtotelis & Platonis Græcorum Interpretum typis hactenus editorum brevis conſpectus; —— A ſhort View of the Greek Interpreters of Ariſtotle and Plato hitherto publiſhed; printed at Paris, in the Year 1657. in 4to. Mr Teiſſier names four Authors, who have compoſed the Life of Ariſtotle; Ammonius, Guarini of Verona, John James Beurerus, and Leonard Aretin (t). He forgot Jerome Gemuſæus, Phyſician, and Profeſſor of Philoſophy, at Baſil, Author of a Book, de Vita Ariſtotelis, & ejus Operum Cenſura. —The Life of Ariſtotle, and a Critique on his Works.

(s) In That of Geneva, 1605; and in That of Paris, 1629, procured by William du Val, and which is the beſt of all.

(t) Teiſſier, Catal. Aut. Bibliothec. pag. 367.

" againſt the Schoolmen, and chiefly againſt Ariſtotle, " whoſe Method they had formerly borrowed, and " which has been adopted in the Schools ever ſince " St Thomas's Days. The Anabaptiſts were the " firſt, who began to render the uſe of Philoſophy, " in general, ſuſpected to Thoſe of Their Sect, in " all the Northern Parts, where they had Autho- " rity; and to this end they alledged St Paul's Words " to the Coloſſians, in order to interdict it in their " Schools †. Luther declared himſelf with ſo much " heat againſt Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, that, in ſome " Theſes, which he maintained at Heidelbourgh, in the " Year 1518, he advanced, that they could not rea- " ſon according to This Pagan's Principles, without " forſaking the Maxims of the Wiſdom of JESUS " CHRIST ‖; and took every opportunity, in his " Works, of inveighing againſt This Philoſopher: In " which he was followed by Zuinglius, Peter Mar- " tyr, Zanchius, Melanchon (123), and all Thoſe, " who have oppoſed the Doctrines of the Church of " Rome: Which made Melchior Camo, Biſhop of the " Canaries, the moſt eloquent of all the Schoolmen, ſay, " That the Lutherans had a great Contempt for the " Philoſophy, which was then taught in the Schools *. " Calvin never mentions Ariſtotle, but with all " That Sharpneſs and Bitterneſs of Stile, with " which his Genius, naturally Violent and Slande- " rous, inſpired him. As did alſo all Thoſe, who " wrote, in the late Centuries, againſt the Church " of Rome."

† Ex Nicolao Bleſdikio, in Hiſtor. Davidis Georgii. Ex Horn. Hiſt. Philoſoph.

‖ Qui in Ariſtotele vult philoſophari, prius oportet in Chriſto ſtultificari.

(123) We ſhall ſhew in it's proper place, that Melanchon favoured Ariſtotle.

* Nullo apud Lutheranos Philoſophiam eſſe in pretio. Lib. 9. Locor. Theol. cap. 3.

[Z] His Vexation, at not being able to diſcover the Cauſe of the Flux and Reflux of the Euripus, is ſaid to have occaſioned the Diſtemper, of which he died.] This Kind of Death would be a Proof of Ariſtotle's inſatiable Deſire to dive into the Secrets of Nature. It would denote an extraordinary Ambition in him to teach Mankind the moſt hidden Myſteries. And would not this be dying in the Bed of Honour? Would it not be applying himſelf to his Function, with a firm Reſolution to compaſs his Point, or die in the purſuit of it? I am of Opinion, that they, who have ſaid, that Ariſtotle's Genius had no other Bounds, than Thoſe of Nature, or that he had been admitted to the moſt intimate Confidence, and the very Secretaryſhip of Nature (124), ought to admit of no other Tradition concerning his Death, than That we are ſpeaking of. A Confident, who finds himſelf diſgraced, and a Secret concealed from him in his old Age, ought not to ſurvive ſuch a Misfortune. To ſpeak ſeriouſly; I do not believe, that Ariſtotle was Fool enough to die of ſuch a Vexation. Is it probable, that ſo conſiderate a Man, as He, ſhould reſolve —— to give himſelf up to Vexation and Deſpair, only becauſe he could not account for the Tide; He, who found his Underſtanding limited in reſpect to ſo many other things, of which he was ignorant, without being diſquieted at it (125)?

(124) Ἀριστοτέλης τῆς Φύσεως γραμματεὺς ἦν, τὸν κάλαμον ἀποβρέχων εἰς νοῦν. Ariſtotle was Nature's Scribe, dipping his Pen in Senſe. Suidas. See, above, the Remark [H] at the end.

(125) Rapin's Compariſon, &c. pag. 310.

By the way, Writers often aſcribe to Juſtin Martyr, and Gregory Nazianzen, what they never ſaid concerning the Death of Ariſtotle. They have not ſaid, that he threw himſelf into the Euripus. Juſtin ſays only, that Shame and Vexation, at not being able to diſcover the extraordinary Effects of Nature, particularly the Ebbing and Flowing of the Euripus, broke his Heart. Οὐδὲ τὴν τοῦ Εὐρίπου φύσιν τοῦ ὄντος ἐν Χαλκίδι γνῶναι δυνηθεὶς διὰ πολλὴν ἀδοξίαν καὶ αἰσχύνην λυπηθεὶς μεθέσει τοῦ βίου (126). Cum neque Euripi Chalcidici naturam cognoſcere poſſet, unde propter ingens probrum & pudorem in mœrorem conjectus morte vitam commutavit. St Gregory does not, in reality, ſay ſo much; he is ſatisfied with not contradicting Julian, who had alledged Ariſtotle as an Inſtance of a Paſſion for Knowedge, ſo great, that it was the Cauſe of his Death. Ἡ καὶ τὴν Ὁμήρου φιλομάθειαν περὶ τὸ Ἀρκαδικὸν ζήτημα· καὶ τὴν Ἀριστοτέλους φιλοσοφίαν καὶ περισσοῦ ἐπὶ ταῖς τοῦ Εὐρίπου μεταβολαῖς, ὑφ' ὧν τεθνήκασι (127). You commend, in Homer, his eager Enquiry into the Arcadian Queſtion; and, in Ariſtotle, his Philoſophy, and continued Obſervation of the Flux and Reflux of the Euripus; both of whom died Martyrs to their Enquiries. This is very remarkable, and I queſtion, whether any one has hitherto obſerved it. Too many, not having a due reſpect for the Fathers of the Church, are apt to tax them with a blind Credulity. They accuſe them particularly of diffaming Ariſtotle, in regard to the Euripus. But there is reaſon to think, that Julian the Apoſtate confeſſes the Fact, which Juſtin Martyr ſpeaks of; for it appears, by the Anſwer of St Gregory, that That Emperor had joined Homer with Ariſtotle, as two Inſtances of a Paſſion for Knowledge, which had occaſioned Death. Now Homer, according to the Tradition concerning him, died of Grief, becauſe he could not underſtand the Anſwer, which certain Fiſhermen gave him. We may, therefore, ſuppoſe, that Julian had adopted a like Tradition concerning Ariſtotle, and the Euripus. But, perhaps, he meant no more, than that Ariſtotle had ſtudied the Ebbing and Flowing of the Euripus, with ſuch Intenſeneſs of Thought, and meditated ſo deeply on the Subject, that it deſtroyed his Health, and brought on him the Sickneſs, of which he died. This I am inclined to believe was really the Caſe. It does not appear, that Euſtathius meant any thing more, where he ſpeaks of the Euripus after this Manner. Ἑπτάκις τὸ ὅλον νυχθήμερον μεταβάλλει ὁ περὶ Εὔβοιαν Εὐρίπος, περὶ ὃν φασι διαφθεῖραι τὸν Ἀριστοτέλην καταλύσαι τὸν βίον. The Eubœan Euripus ebbs and flows ſeven times in a Natural Day; during his Enquiries into which, Ariſtotle died. See the following Paſſage of Mr Faber, in which, after giving the Preachers a rub by the Way, he imputes to Juſtin Martyr, and ſtill more to Gregory Nazianzen, what they never ſaid. " Videlicet in Græ- " cia, quemadmodum hodieque fit, oratores ſacri, ſi " tamen tanto nomine illa pulpitorum crepitacula, & " plebeculæ cymbala, cohoneſtari oporteat, vulgo di- " ctitabant Ariſtotelem, cum illius ſeptenæ in dies " ſingulos reciprocationis cauſam non potuiſſet cog- " noſcere, ibi tum miſellum ſeſe in Euripum dediſſe " præcipitem, & in maximam malam crucem abiiſſe. " Juſtinus

(126) Juſtin. Cohort. ad Græcos, pag. 34.

(127) Greg. Naz. Orat. III. p. 79.

AN APOLOGY for Juſtin Martyr, and Greg. Nazianzen.

Digitized by Google

" Juſtinus cognomento Martyr, & Gregorius Nazianzenus, qui primi, aut inter primos, hanc fabulam olim in ſcripta ſua retulerunt, id vel ſtudio Philoſophiæ Chriſtianæ (ita enim iſti Græculi Chriſtianiſmum vocare ſolent) fecere; dum videlicet inſanientem veterum Græcorum ſapientiam obſcurandam & premendam exiſtimarunt; vel fortaſſe etiam, (quidni enim veris locus ſit?) priſcæ hiſtoriæ ignoratione. Nam ex Eumolpi, Apollodori, Favorinique ſcriptis, quæ illa etiam tempeſtate ſuperfuiſſe ſcimus, facile didiciſſe Boni Viri poterant, rem longe ſe ſecus habuiſſe, quam prodiderunt (128). —— In Greece, as is done even at this Day, the Sacred Orators, if this Name be applicable to thoſe noiſy Haranguers of the Mob, commonly gave out, that Ariſtotle, when he could not diſcover the reaſon, why the Euripus ebbed and flowed ſeven times in a Day, took it ſo to Heart, that he threw himſelf headlong into That River. Juſtin Martyr, and Gregory Nazianzen, who firſt adopted this Fable in their Writings, did it for the ſake of the Chriſtian Philoſophy, as They love to ſtile Chriſtianity; being, forſooth, of Opinion, that the pretended Philoſophy of the ancient Greeks ought to be eclipſed, and kept under; or, perhaps, through Ignorance of ancient Hiſtory. For the good Men might eaſily have learned from Eumolpus, Apollodorus, and Favorinus, whoſe Writings we know were extant at that Time, that the Matter was quite otherwiſe, than as they have related it."

(128) Tanaq. Faber. Epiſt. part. I. pag. 49, 50.

Gyraldus had fathered it upon them before, and made a pious Reflexion upon the whole. I. He ſays, that Juſtin Martyr affirms, that Ariſtotle died, becauſe he could not diſcover the Cauſe of the Ebbing and Flowing of the Euripus. II. That Procopius has ſaid the ſame, in the fourth Book of his Hiſtory. III. That Gregory Nazianzen, having obſerved, that Homer's not knowing how to reſolve a Queſtion proved fatal to him, immediately contemns Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, with regard to the Variation of the Euripus, which was the Cauſe of his Death. IV. That the Greek Commentator on That Father relates, that the Philoſopher caſt himſelf into That Arm of the Sea, with theſe Words, Let the Euripus receive me, ſince I cannot comprehend the Euripus. Ἐπειδὴ Ἀριστοτέλης οὐκ εἶλε τὸν Εὔριπον, Εὔριπος ἐχέτω τὸν Ἀριστοτέλην· Poſtquam Ariſtoteles non prehendit Euripum, Euripus habeat Ariſtotelem (129). V. That from hence we may conclude, that Fortune has been unpropitious to the impious, not only in the true, but alſo in the falſe Religions.

(129) Lilius Gregor. Gyraldus Dialogiſ. xxx. pag. 912. Tom. II. Oper. Edit. 1696.

ARISTOTLE, a famous Architect in the XVth Century, was of Bologne, and of the Family of the Alberti (a). One of the moſt remarkable things related of him, is, that he could tranſport an entire Stone Tower from one place to another [A]. John Baſilides, Great Duke of Muſcovy, ſent for him (b), and employed him in building of ſeveral Churches. There are Names, which are difficult to be ſupported. That of Ariſtotle is one of them. Yet we meet with above Thirty Ariſtotles [B].

(a) Leand. Alberius in Deſcript. Italiæ, pag. 516.

(b) See the Account of Muſcovy, by Hercules Zani, in the Journal of Leipſic, 1681, pag. 476.

[A] He could tranſport an entire Stone Tower from one Place to another.] Jonſius cites two Teſtimonies, Beroaldus, and Matthew Palmerius (1). The firſt expreſſes himſelf thus: " Non diu eſt, quod Ariſtote" les civis noſter, mechanicus longe omnium præ" ſtantiſſimus, turrim ex ſede ſua movit, motamque " arte mechanica in alium haud longe diſſitum locum " tranſportavit. Non eſt mendacio locus, cum ad" huc ſuperſint qui vidêre (2). —— It is not long " ago, that our Countryman Ariſtotle, the moſt excellent of Mechanics, moved a Tower from it's Place, " and tranſported it, by Mechanic Art, to a Place not " far off. The Truth of this is vouched by ſeveral, " who were Eye-witneſſes of it." Theſe are the Words of Palmerius: " Ariſtoteles Bononienſis Ar" chitectura inſignis habetur, qui lapideas turres in" tegras illæſas ſubjectis fundamento lapidibus ad ali" um traduxit locum (3).——Ariſtotle of Bologne is " famous for Architecture; who tranſported Stone " Towers, entire and unhurt, from one place to ano" ther, placing Stones under the Foundation."

(1) Jonſius de Scriptor. Hiſt. Philoſ. pag. 68.

(2) Beroald. in Sueton. Veſpaſ. cap. 18.

(3) Matth. Palmer. Chron. ad Ann. 1455.

[B] We meet with above thirty Ariſtotles.] See the Diſſertations of Jonſius de Hiſtoria Peripatetica; and you will find Twenty one Ariſtotles in the firſt of them. The Author believed, at that time, that he had ſummed them all up (4); but he found, that Knowledge increaſes with Years. For, when he publiſhed his Treatiſe de Scriptoribus Hiſtoriæ Philoſophiæ, he had eleven Ariſtotles more to add to the former. He had likewiſe ſomething more to ſay of ſome of the Twenty one. What has been related in the preceeding Remark, is one of theſe Additions.

(4) See the 12th Chap. of the Treatiſe of Jonſius, juſt cited.

ARIUS, the Head, and Founder, of ARIANISM, a Sect which denied the Eternal Divinity, and Conſubſtantiality, of the WORD, lived in the IVth Century. He was born in Africa near Egypt. Euſebius, Biſhop of Nicomedia, much in Favour with Conſtantia, Siſter of the Emperor Conſtantine, and Wife of Licinius, contributed greatly to the Propagation of this Hereſy (a). He was a Man of a ready Wit, a true Court-Biſhop, in ſhort, perfectly well qualified to make the Fortune of a new Doctrine. He took Arius into his Protection; and brought him into favour with Conſtantia. For it has been always thought, that unleſs Women concern themſelves in the Intereſts of a Sect, it can never make any conſiderable Progreſs. Arius's Party viſibly gained Ground: There were Biſhops, who publickly embraced it: Diſputes were frequent in the Cities; and ſometimes from Words they came to Blows: It was abſolutely neceſſary, that the Emperor ſhould remedy This Diſorder. This he did, by convening the Council of Nice, in which the Doctrine of Arius was condemned in 325. This Hereſiarch was baniſhed by the Emperor, who, likewiſe, ordered his Books to be burnt; and prohibited them under Pain of Death [A]. Some pretend, that Arius, having abjured his Hereſy in the Preſence of the Council,

(a) Hieron. ad Cteſiphont.

[A] The Emperor —— prohibited his Books under Pain of Death] Socrates gives us the Letter, in which Conſtantine ordered, that All, who ſhould find any Book compoſed by Arius, and not burn it, ſhould be immediately puniſhed with Death. Ἐκεῖνο μέντοι προσαγορεύω, ὡς εἴ τις σύγγραμμα ὑπὸ Ἀρείου συνταγὲν φωραθείη κρυπτὰς, καὶ μὴ εὐθέως προσενεγκὼν πῦρ καταναλώσῃ, τοῦτο θάνατῳ ἔσται ἡ ζημία, παραχρῆμα γὰρ ἄλλης ἐπὶ τοῦτο κεφαλικὴν ὑποσπᾶσθαι τιμωρίαν (1). Illud etiam denuntio, quod ſi quis Librum ab Ario compoſitum occultaſſe deprehenſus ſit, nec eum ſtatim oblatum igne cum-buſſerit, mortis pœnam ſubibit. I do not remember to have read any Author, who has remarked this ſtrange and ſurprizing Extravagance of Conſtantine. He is ſatisfied with baniſhing this Arch-Heretic; he does not condemn thoſe to Death, who adhered to Arianiſm; and yet threatens with Death Thoſe, who ſhould conceal any of Arius's Works. Was there ever a wider Diſproportion between Puniſhments and Crimes? May not a Man be very Orthodox, and yet curious enough to ſee what Heretics can ſay for themſelves, and to preſerve ſcarce Books, as thoſe generally are, which are condemned to the Flames? And yet, if an

(1) Socrat. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. lib. I. cap. 9. pag. 32.

Orthodox

Digitized by Google

cil, avoided the Sentence of Baniſhment [B]; but others aſſert, that he ſuffered Exile [C], and that the Emperor did not recal him 'till Ten Years after [D] (b). They contend, that ſome had induced That Prince to believe, that Arius was Orthodox at the bottom. They add, that Conſtantine, being confirmed in this Opinion by the Profeſſion of Faith, which Arius preſented to him, wrote in his Favour to the Biſhops, who were aſſembled at Jeruſalem, for the Dedication of the Temple; That the Biſhops, who ſtill remained in That City, when Arius arrived with the Emperor's Letter, were for the moſt part concealed Arians; ſo that they did not fail to declare his Doctrine Orthodox, and to re-admit him to the Communion of the Church; That, to compleat the Triumph, they were of Opinion, that Arius ought to be re-eſtabliſhed in Alexandria, where he had received the firſt Strokes of the Church's Anathema; And that, as St Athanaſius, who was it's Patriarch, and Arius's grand Adverſary, was in Exile, they believed, that, in His Abſence, it would be no difficult matter to re-inſtate Arius in the Communion of the Church of Alexandria; But that they were deceived; and that the People would never re-admit him; That Conſtantine, being informed of the Continuance of the Troubles, cited Arius to Conſtantinople, and prevailed upon him to ſubſcribe the Formulary of Nice; That, afterwards, he ſent him back to the Biſhops, who were then aſſembled at Conſtantinople; I ſay, ſent him back to them, to be received into the Communion of the Church, in That Imperial City; That He, who was then Biſhop of Conſtantinople, would never give his Conſent to it, though it was repreſented to him, that Arius had ſigned all that was required of him; That, notwithſtanding, Euſebius procured, that the Sacrament of the Church ſhould be adminiſtred to his Friend in the great Church of Conſtantinople; That he conducted him thither in a kind of Triumph, attended by a great Number of his own Party; but that, as they drew near the Great Square, Arius, preſſed by a natural Neceſſity, retired in haſte to a Public Houſe of Office, and died immediately, all his Bowels guſhing out, together with his Liver and Spleen, in the Year 336 (c). Some very Learned Men reject this Chronology [E]. Arius's Sect did not die with him; it ſubſiſted a long time, and with Credit, in ſeveral Parts of the World. It cannot ſufficiently be wondered at, that a Miniſter, who paſſes for a Learned Man, ſhould be ignorant of ſo notorious a Fact

(b) See Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Arianiſm, lib. 1, 2.

(c) Taken from Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Arianiſm.

Orthodox Chriſtian had been found with a Book of Arius in his keeping, though upon ſuch a Principle, he would have been immediately hanged; whilſt one, who made open Profeſſion of Arianiſm, was ſuffered to live. What more ridiculous? Not to ſay, that it is a Contradiction to let Heretics live, and yet forbid them, on pain of Death, to keep the Books of their Founder. To this may be added, that Arius, and ſome Biſhops, his Adherents, being baniſhed, their Converſation was ſtill more dangerous, than the reading of their Books. How came it then, that They, who ſhould converſe with theſe Exiles, were not threatned with the Puniſhment of Death?

[B] Some ſay, that Arius ——— avoided the Sentence of Baniſhment.] Baronius affirms, on the Credit of St Jerom, that Arius made a ſhew of Repentance; and that, having ſubſcribed to the Council of Nice, he was admitted to the Peace of the Church by That Council, and was not baniſhed. It cannot be denied, but that St Jerom ſays, that Arius made his Peace with the Council of Nice (2); but much greater Credit is due to the Letter of That Council, than to the Opinion of a ſingle Perſon, who lived after That Time. In This Letter is ſet forth how Arius's Opinions had been examined, and condemned; but as to what had been acted againſt his Perſon, and what became of him, they forbear to mention it, that they might not be thought to inſult him in his Diſgrace. Would they have ſpoken thus of One, in whoſe Recantation they had acquieſced? The learned Henry Valeſius, reaſoning on This Letter of the Council, commends their Moderation, becauſe they did not anathematize Arius by Name, but Thoſe in general, who taught ſuch and ſuch Hereſies; and becauſe that, inſtead of ſoliciting the Emperor to baniſh the Heretics, they expreſſed their Concern at their Baniſhment (3).

(2) Hieron. in Dialogo contra Luciferianos.

(3) Valeſ. in Sozomenum, lib. II. cap. 16, pag. 208.

[C] Others aſſert, that he ſuffered Exile.] Sozomen is of this Number; for he affirms (4), that Arius was recalled, a little after the Separation of the Council. Ἄρειος ἐπὶ τὴν ἐξορίαν ἀπαγόμενος ἀνεκλήθη (4). Non multo poſt Synodum Nicænam Arius ab exilio revocatus eſt. The Submiſſion of the two Biſhops, who were deprived of their Churches, is a Proof of Arius's Baniſhment. I mean Euſebius, and Theognis. Philoſtorgius informs us, that theſe two Prelates were baniſhed by Conſtantine, three Months after the breaking up of the Council (5); and affirms, that they obtained their Recal, three Years after. Now they obtained it by ſubmitting to the Deciſions of the Council in a Writing, which they ſent to the Biſhops; wherein they took notice, that He, who was the Principal in theſe Diſputes, had been recalled from his Baniſhment; and that it would be abſurd to pretend, that, after His Reconciliation, They could not make their own Innocence appear (6). Thus we have two Facts cleared up; one, that Arius was baniſhed; the other, that he made his Peace with the Biſhops, and that he obtained his Recal, before Euſebius and Theognis procured theirs; which fell out, according to Philoſtorgius, in 328; whoſe Opinion agrees very well with the Hiſtory of thoſe Times. It is falſe, then, that Arius was not recalled before the Year 335.

(4) Sozom. lib. II, cap. 16, Valeſius obſerves, that, according to the Force of theſe Words, ἐπὶ τὴν ἐξορίαν, we muſt underſtand, that Arius was recalled, as he was going to the Place of his Baniſhment.

(5) Apud Valeſ. in Hiſt. Eccleſ. Socrat. lib. I, cap. 14, pag. 20.

(6) Sozomen. lib. II, cap. 16.

[D] That the Emperor did not recal him 'till ten Years after.] Father Maimbourg has followed This falſe Chronology. We have already proved him to have been in an Error.

[E] He died in the Year 336 —— very learned Men reject This Chronology.] Valeſius proves, that Arius was not living at the time of the Council of Jeruſalem, which received Letters from Conſtantine, concerning the Reconciliation of ſome principal Members of Arianiſm. "Arius Hæreſiarches diu ante Sy- "nodum Hieroſolymitanam e vita exceſſerat; ut cer- "tiſſimis argumentis probavi in libro ſecundo Obſer- "vationum Eccleſiaſticarum, Capite II (7). — Arius "the Hæreſiarch died long before the Council of Jeru- "ſalem, as I have proved by invincible Arguments in "the ſecond Book of my Eccleſ. Obſerv. Ch. II. It was not, therefore, Arius, the Arch-Heretic, who was recommended to This Council by Conſtantine, and who found the Biſhops, aſſembled at Jeruſalem, ſo favourable to him. In the mean time, Socrates ſays expreſsly, that the Council, which was transferred from Tyre to Jeruſalem, for the Dedication of the Temple, received Arius and his Adherents into the Communion of the Church, by virtue of Letters from Conſtantine, which teſtified, that He was perſuaded of the Orthodoxy of Arius, and Euzoius. Ἄρειον μὲν καὶ τοὺς περὶ αὐτὸν ἐδέξαντο τοῖς βασιλέως γράμμασι πειθαρχεῖν λέγοντες, δι' ὧν δεδηλώκει αὐτοῖς πεπεῖσθαι περὶ τῆς πίστεως Ἀρείου καὶ Εὐζωΐου (8). Arium quidem una cum ſociis in communionem recipiunt, obtemperare ſe dicentes Imperatoris literis, quibus certiores ipſos fecerat fidem ſe

(7) Valeſii Notæ in Socrat. lib. I, cap. 33.

(8) Socrat. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. lib. I, cap. 33.

Digitized by Google

a Fact [F]. He was ignorant likewiſe of another no leſs evident; for he pretends, that no Penal Laws were enacted againſt This Sect [G]. Another Thing, which he has advanced, has not a little perplexed him; for great Advantage has been made of what ſe Arii & Euzoii penitus perſpectam habere. Conſtantine had ſent the Confeſſion of Faith, which Arius and Euzoius had preſented to him (9), to the Biſhops, aſſembled at Jeruſalem; and St Athanaſius plainly ſays, that the Synod of Jeruſalem received Arius and his Followers into it's Communion. Γράφουσες δεῖν δέχθηναι Ἄρειον καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτῷ (10). Scribentes ſuſcipiendos eſſe Arium & Socios. Valeſius ſolves the Difficulty, by ſaying there were two Arius's; one the Arch-Heretic; the other his Follower; they had both been excommunicated by Alexander, Biſhop of Alexandria. He, who preſented a Confeſſion of Faith, with Euzoius, to Conſtantine, and was reconciled by the Council of Jeruſalem, was not the Arch-Heretic, but the Other Arius. Valeſius proves this, not only by Reaſons, which ſhew, that the Arch-Heretic was dead long before the Year 335, but alſo by the Petition of Euſebius, and Theognis. Theſe two Biſhops implored Pardon, proteſting their Innocence, in the Year 328, and alledged, that the Head and Author of theſe Controverſies was reconciled and reſtored. This could not be ſaid of That Arius, who was re-united to the Church, by the Synod of Jeruſalem; for the Petition, or Confeſſion of Faith, which He, and Euzoius, preſented to Conſtantine, a little before That Synod, that is about the Year 335, teſtifies, that they were then in Exile and excommunicated. The ſudden Death of Arius, in which the Orthodox have found ſo many Myſteries, happened after the Council of Jeruſalem. It follows, then, that The Arius, who died in this manner, was not the Hereſiarch, and that they have transferred to one Point of Time what happened at another Conjuncture. It is ſtrange there ſhould be ſo little Order, and Exactneſs, in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory; one cannot aſcertain Arius's Exile, the Duration of it, and ſuch like Particulars, but by arguing from different Facts, ſome atteſted by This, others by That Author. One good Hiſtorian might ſuffice to give the Thread of the principal Events, though all the reſt were loſt.

(9) It is inſerted at length in Sozomen, lib. 2, cap. 27.

(10) Athanaſ. in libro de Synodis, apud Valeſium in Socrat. lib. 1, cap. 33, pag. 16.

[F] Arius's Sect did not die with him; it ſubſiſted a long time, —— a Miniſter, who paſſed for a learned Man, was ignorant of ſo notorious a Fact.] See what he ſays: "I am perſuaded, that Arianiſm never "made a great Party in the World. It is true, ſe- "veral Biſhops made profeſſion of it; but this He- "reſy did not ſpread among the People (11)." What he ſays elſewhere, is much ſtronger; for he aſſerts, that Arianiſm only paſſed through the Church like a Torrent. It cannot be pleaded, in his excuſe, that This is one of thoſe Errors, which eſcape by Surprize, and through want of Attention; for he remarks this Fact as fundamental and eſſential to his Syſtem. His Opinion, on the one ſide, is, that Hereſies againſt the Myſtery of the Trinity are fundamental and damnable; and, on the other, that GOD has never ſuffered ſuch kind of Hereſies to continue long, or make any conſiderable Figure in the World. "GOD, ſays he (12), cannot permit "large Chriſtian Societies to fall into damnable Er- "rors, and perſiſt A LONG TIME in them; at "leaſt, to judge by Experience, we cannot believe "it poſſible, ſince ſuch a thing never yet happened." Mr Nicolle was the firſt, who read him a Lecture on the Words of the Hundred and forty ninth Page. This he did without Bitterneſs, or Inſult, in theſe Terms: "What Mr Jurieu ſays, is very true, if un- "derſtood of the great Blaze of Arianiſm, which "paſſed, indeed, like a Flaſh of Lightning: But "it is leſs exact, when applied to the Times, which "ſucceeded. Though the Church had recovered "it's former Splendor in moſt Parts of the World, "yet there were ſeveral conſiderable Bodies, as the "Vandals in Africa, the Goths in Aſia, in Italy, in "part of France, and in Spain, who openly profeſſed "Arianiſm, and where the Controverſy was ſuf- "ficiently enough cleared, for the People to take part "in it (13)." Mr Pelliſſon came next to the Charge, in this manner. "Thoſe Arians gave him ſome "Trouble, as well as the Phanatics and Socinians of "theſe Times, and Thoſe, whom he calls Photinians of Poland, and Tranſylvania. Some Remains "of Modeſty hindered him from aſſociating himſelf "with them, in one and the ſame Church. He "found the means to get rid of them, without enter- "ing upon This Diſcuſſion, or calling in Maſter "Workmen, to know whether the Foundation was "ruined wholly, or but in part. He does not pre- "tend, he ſays, to comprehend, in This one exten- "ſive Church, Any but Thoſe Societies, which form "a viſible Body. The Arians, it ſeems, never be- "came a Body, at leaſt a Creat Body, (and this a- "gainſt the Faith of all Hiſtory, which every where "mentions their Communion, their Aſſemblies, their "Βασίλικα, or Churches, as wholly diſtinct from "Thoſe of the Orthodox). The Phanatics, the "Socinians, the Photinians of theſe Times, have not, "as yet, any regular Aſſemblies, or Polity, or Union "with each other. They are, therefore, of no Ac- "count. But if, for the Puniſhment of our Sins, "and unhappy Diviſions, GOD ſhould permit theſe "common Enemies to multiply, and to regulate "and form themſelves into a Body, they are, then, "agreeably to his own Principles, upon the ſame "Foot with others; and there will be no Difficulty "in ſuppoſing, that a Man may be ſaved among "them (14)." The Author, in reply to Mr Nicolle, confeſſes, "That the Arians formed a GREAT Body, "but maintains, that they continued but a very ſhort "Time, and that GOD ſuffered their Communion "to periſh, becauſe it did not preſerve the Funda- "mental Truths (15)." A third Cenſor has ariſen, who maintains, like the two former, that Arianiſm was not only of great Extent, but alſo of conſiderable Duration, and that it was an Hereſy, which ſpread among the People. See the Book, entituled, Janua Cœlorum reſerata (16). The Author makes it appear (17), that Arianiſm ſubſiſted above Three hundred Years in ſplendor; that it was, for almoſt two Ages, the eſtabliſhed Religion in Spain; that it was on the Throne in the Eaſt, and Weſt, and that it reigned in Italy, France, Pannonia, and Africa. Never was Author driven from one vexatious Conſequence to another more vexatious, as was the Author of the Syſtem, by the pretended Carus Larebonius (18). He plainly ſhews him, that, if GOD never ſuffered great Chriſtian Societies to run into damnable Errors, and continue in them long, and if GOD deſtroyed Arianiſm, becauſe it did not preſerve the Fundamental Truths; it neceſſarily follows, I. That the Errors of the Church of Rome are not damnable. II. That Mahometaniſm has preſerved the Fundamental Truths. The Author of the Syſtem pretends, that Mahometaniſm is not a Sect, which aroſe from Chriſtianity, and therefore that he has nothing to do with it's Extent or Continuance. Theſe are Objections, which the utmoſt Chicanery can never anſwer. The Synods cannot pretend Ignorance, and yet they have never cenſured this Doctrine of the Syſtem; though it fully juſtifies the Church of Rome, and conſequently convicts the Reformed of being Schiſmatics.

(11) Jurieu's True Syſtem of the Church, pag. 149.

(12) Ibid. pag. 236.

(13) Nicolle, pag. 15, 16, of his Preface to the Unity of the Church.

[G] He pretends, that no Penal Laws were enacted againſt this Sect.] Let us cite a fine Paſſage of the Preſervative againſt a Change of Religion. The Miniſter, of whom I ſpeak, publiſhed this Book, whilſt he was in France (19), and oppoſed it to the Catholic Expoſition of the Biſhop of Condom. See what he ſays at the eleventh Page (20). "The Church has "ſuffered Perſecutions, but never exerciſed any. "She has had the upper Hand of Paganiſm, as Pa- "ganiſm has had of her; but never returned her like "for like. She did not employ the Authority of "the Conſtantines, and the Theodoſius's, to embrue "the Temples of the falſe Gods with the Blood of "their Worſhippers, as the Pagans did the Swords "of their Nero's, Maximin's, Decii, and Diocleſian's, "to drench the Earth with the Blood of Chriſtians. "One muſt be very little verſed in the Hiſtory of the "Church, to be ignorant, that, in all the Conteſts "ſhe had with the Arians, Eutychians, and other "Heretics, ſhe made uſe only of Exhortations, Rea- "ſons, Councils, and ſuch like Arms." The Author

(14) Reflexions on the Diſputes in Religion. Part. II, pag. 429, 430.

(15) Jurieu of the Unity of the Church, pag. 364.

(16) It was printed at Amſterdam, in 1692.

(17) Pag. 87.

(18) This is the Name, which the Author of Janua Cœlorum reſerata aſſumed.

(19) The firſt Edition, I believe, was of Rotterdam, in 1680, there have been others ſince, in Holland.

(20) Edition of the Hague, 1682.

Digitized by Google

what he says concerning the Faith of the Fathers, who preceeded the Rise of Arianism [H]. This Sect has been, by turns, Persecuting, and Persecuted [I], and fell at last by the Way of Human Authority [K]. I scarce meet with any Author, who does not esteem it a Crime in Arius, that he put his Opinions into Verse, to be sung by his Disciples. Both the Matter, and the Form, of the Poem, which he intituled Thalia thor of the Philosophical Commentary had reason to wonder, that a Professor of Divinity, who passed in France for a Man well versed in Ecclesiastical History, should betray such Ignorance as this (21). But he was still more astonished, that, after Father Thomassin had set this Matter in the clearest Light, another French Writer, addressing himself to the Bishop of Meaux, should say, "One thing I must tell you, "my Lord, That, throughout ancient and modern "History, all Acts of Violence, exercised by Princes "on the Score of Religion, have ever been looked "upon as Spectacles of Horror, and that the Names "of such Princes are never mentioned, even to "this Day, without Execration." I add here the Reflexion of the Commentator. "What! Are the "Constantine's, the Theodosius's, the Honorius's, the "Marcian's, the Justinian's, who put in Execution "so many Penal Laws against Sectaries, who con"demned to Death those, who persevered in Pagan "Idolatry, in Manicheism, &c. and even those, who "read, or were in possession of, the Books of He"retics; are These, I say, Names, which are never "mentioned, at this Day, without Execration? How "will he prove this (22)?" The Divine, who published the Preservative, has, it seems, studied Ecclesiastical Antiquity better, since his Transplantation into Holland. He has there learned to refute Toleration, by the Authority of the Constantines, the Theodosius's, and the Charlemagnes. "Paganism, says "he (23), would have been still in being, and three "parts of Europe would still have been Pagan, if "Constantine, and his Successors, had not made use "of their Authority to abolish it." In France he took it very ill, that the Secular Power should be made use of; and in Holland he takes it very ill, that it should not be imployed. And now, after this, who dares pretend, that, by changing of Climate, one does not change Opinion?

(21) Pag. 354, of the Supplement.

(22) Ibid. pag. 355.

(23) Droits de deux Souverains, pag. 280.

Cœlum, non animum, mutant, qui trans mare currunt (24).

They, that beyond-sea go, shall sadly find,
They change their Climate only, not their Mind.
CREECH.

(24) Horat. Epist. 11, lib. 1, v. 27.

There is a local Faith, and a temporary Faith, which have not yet been mentioned in the Division of the Genus into it's Species See the Remark [H], of the Article St AUGUSTIN.

[H] Great Advantage has been made of what he says concerning the Faith of the Fathers, who preceeded the Rise of Arianism.] He maintained, in his Pastoral Letters, that Those Fathers did not believe an Equality of Persons in the Trinity; and that they admitted a Temporal Generation of the WORD, which had conferred on the Second Person his entire and perfect Existence. It is plain, that this Opinion differs in nothing from Arianism; and that it overthrows the Eternal Trinity of Persons. The Bishop of Meaux pressed Mr Jurieu so home upon this Point (25), that he obliged him to break the Silence, to which he had reduced him on some other Points: But his Reply did him more harm, than his Silence could have done; he was forced to contradict himself, and retract several Things, and still got nothing by it. The Bishop returned to the Charge; drove his Adversary before him, and obliged him to enter the Lists no more: So that, among the most distinguishing Elogies, which were bestowed on this Prelate, it was not forgot, that he had stopped the Mouth of the most daring Critic of the Age (26). Mr Jurieu was scarce got out of the Bishop's Hands, when he fell into those of Carus Larebonius, who shewed him, that if the Fathers of the three first Centuries held That Opinion of the Trinity, and the Generation of the WORD, which he imputes to them, it must necessarily follow, that neither the Heresy of the Arians, nor That of the Socinians, were Damnable, or Fundamental (27). It must be carefully remarked, that the Victories, gained over this Minister, concern only his particular Opinions, and in no wise the Doctrine of his Church; of which The History of the Works of the Learned (28) advertised the Public. This is no Foreign Matter; it belongs of right to a Critical Dictionary; for it is false in Fact, that the Heresy of Arius was implicitly taught by the Fathers of the three first Centuries. It is something strange, that Mr Jurieu, having considered Arianism in so many Lights, should always view it in the wrong. It would be more difficult to find a Fencer, who could never hit a Bull. Taurum toties non ferire difficile est (29). We must not omit, that, as to the Matter of Fact, in relation to the Penal Laws of Constantine, and the Continuance and Extent of Arianism, the Authors, I have already cited, have shewn him his Error very civilly, and without having recourse to the Insults, and hard Language he himself would have made use of, in the like Case, against an Adversary.

(25) In his Avertissemens.

(26) See the Speech, made by Mr Bruyere, when he was admitted a Member of the French Academy.

(27) See the Janua Colorum reserata, pag. 119, &c.

(28) For the Month of May, 1692, Article 9, pag. 391, &c.

(29) See Trebellius Pollio, in the Life of Gallienus.

[I] This Sect has been, by turns, persecuting, and persecuted.] It cannot be denied, that the Orthodox were the Aggressors; for we have seen, that Constantine banished the Ringleaders of Arianism, and threatened those with Death, who should not burn all the Writings of That Arch-Heretic; but it is certain, that Constantius, his Son, and Valens, who raised Arianism to the Throne, treated the Orthodox with more Rigor, than Constantine had done the Arians. Upon all other Occasions, the latter seem to have been of a more tolerating Spirit, than the former; and it is a Thesis, which the Philosophical Commentator has undertaken to prove, in the Supplement to his Work (30). Among other Reasons, he alledges this; that, at the time, when Recaredus extirpated Arianism in Spain, the Catholic Bishops were much more numerous than the Arian, though the Arian had been the predominant Religion, for near Two hundred Years before: A strong Presumption, that the Catholics were but little molested.

(30) The 30*th and* 31*st Chapters.*

[K] And fell, at last, by the way of human Authority.] Mariana passes lightly over the Rigors, which Recaredus must needs have exercised, and excuses them from hence, that the Case required Severity, and that the People were not displeased with it. "Contigit "autem Recaredo, quod haud scio an regum ulli, "ut religione permutanda, quod propemodum ne"cesse erat, motus existerent, sed neque diuturni "admodum neque graves; & severitas animadver"sionis non modo invidiosa non esset, quia necessa"rio suscipiebatur, sed etiam popularis, &, cum bo"nis omnibus, tum infimo cuique gratissima (31).—— "It happened to Recaredus, as to scarce any other "King, that, though the Change of Religion, in his "Dominions, which was almost necessary, was at"tended with some Disturbances, yet were they nei"ther of long Continuance, nor of ill Consequence; "and so far was the Severity, which he exercised "upon this Occasion, from being odious, that it was "popular, and pleasing, not only to good Men, but to "the meanest of the People." The Author, beforementioned, observes, that, if the Complaints, which the Arians made, had been preserved to us, it is probable we should find in them a very long Detail of Acts of Violence; and that, after all, it was purely by Accident, that Arianism was ruined, without Persecution: For, as Mariana says, since Punishments were not made use of, but when Necessity required, we must conclude; I. That, if they were not often put in practice, it was because the Arians were not obstinate. II. That, had the Difficulties been ever so great, yet they would have been reduced, either by fair, or foul Means, to a Compliance (32). By the way, This Author (33) is guilty of a very gross Contradiction, into which Writers, who undertake to speak of Conversions, are apt to fall. They lay it down, as a general Maxim, that Obstinacy is the Character of Heresy; and yet, to cover the Violence of

(31) Mariana, lib. V, cap. 14. Consult the Supplement to the Philosophical Commentary, pag. 373.

(32) Supplement to the Philosophical Commentary, P. 375, 376.

(33) Ibid. pag. 377.

Digitized by Google

Thalia, have met with Cenſure [L]. There might perhaps be ſome Prepoſſeſſion in This. A Modern Author, who favoured This Heretic's Opinions, has wrote ſome Treatiſes to ſhew, that the Fathers of the three firſt Centuries held the ſame Opinions [M]. He was at no great trouble to compile Paſſages; for he found them ready collected to his Hand in the Dogmata Theologica of Father Petavius. Two Engliſh (d), and one French Divine (e), have wrote an Apology for the Ancient Fathers againſt Him.

(d) Gardiner, and Bull.

(e) Mr le Moine, Profeſſor at Leyden.

of the Converters, they tell us, that the Converſions were made with eaſe; and from this Facility draw a Proof of the Hereſy of thoſe converted. For the true Church, ſay they, is not ſo eaſily deſerted; the Reſiſtance, which the Arians made to King Recaredus, was ſo weak, and ſhort, that this alone is enough to ſhew, that they contended for Falſhood, and not for Truth, which alone is able to govern reaſonable Minds, and inſpire them with Fortitude (34).

(34) Thomaſſin, de l'Unité de l'Egliſe, pag. 449.

[L] Both the Matter, and the Form, of the Poem, which he intituled Thalia, have met with Cenſure.] There has been great Reaſon to condemn Hereſies; to pity Thoſe, who profeſs them in good earneſt, and to abominate thoſe, who teach them, without believing them; for ſuch Teachers are Monſters of Ambition, and Wickedneſs: but I cannot conceive, why it ſhould be imputed as a Crime peculiar to heretical Teachers, that they make uſe of Methods ſuited to the Capacities of the Ignorant, in inſtructing them according to the falſe Lights of their Conſciences. "After Arius had forſaken the Church, he formed "a Deſign of compoſing ſeveral Songs for Seamen, "Travellers, and Thoſe, who work at the Mill; he had "alſo ſet ſuch of them to Tunes, as he thought were "proper to affect his Followers, according to their "different Diſpoſitions, endeavouring, by the Melody of Theſe Songs, to infuſe his Impiety into the "moſt ignorant and ſtupid among the People —— "But his Thalia was much more celebrated, than his "other Works. He borrowed the Title, and Model, of it from an ancient Poet, called Sotades —— "This Burleſque Poet affected ſo wanton a Style in "his Song, and the Numbers of it were ſo effeminate, that the Pagans themſelves treated him with "the utmoſt Contempt; nor is this at all aggravated "in the words of St Athanaſius; ſince the moſt unchaſte Poets, and They, who write moſt licentiouſly, "bluſh at the Impurity of the Songs of this Infamous Author. It was in imitation of this Poet, "that Arius gave his Work the Name of THALIA; "which properly ſignifies a Banquet, and Aſſembly "of young People, or a Song made to be ſung in "Thoſe kind of Feaſts (35)." Afterwards Mr Hermant cites a very long Paſſage of St Athanaſius, in which Arius is called an I know not what Sotades; ridiculous even to the Pagans themſelves —— and an Heretic, who had no emulation for any thing, but the ridiculous Diſcourſes of Sotades (36). In the ſame Place we meet with the beginning of the Thalia, and another Fragment, which contains the Hereſy of Arius concerning JESUS CHRIST. One cannot but condemn the ridiculous and inſufferable Pride, which appears in the Exordium of the Thalia; but, once more, let us condemn Arius for being an Heretic, and not, upon this Suppoſition, for having put a Formulary of his Belief into Verſe; otherwiſe we muſt allow Heretics and Infidels to condemn the Orthodox, not only for profeſſing the true Goſpel, but likewiſe for ſinging, beſides the Pſalms of David, ſeveral Hymns and Canticles, whoſe Verſes and Airs may chance to reſemble the moſt prophane and wanton Songs of an Opera. To ſpeak in general, it is fitter, that every one, be his Religion what it will, ſhould ſing Pious, than wanton and ſatirical, Songs. The Sailor, and the Miller, under the Misfortune of being Arians, did better to ſing their Catechiſm, than their Amours. To ſay, that the Pagans themſelves laughed at Arius's Songs, is alledging a very weak Reaſon; for I believe the Gentiles made no great difference between the Arians, and the Orthodox, but hated them both alike; the Arians were no more favourable to Pagan Idolatry, than the Orthodox. I cannot tell whether Mr Hermant had Reaſon to ſay, that the Pagans themſelves treated Arius with the utmoſt Contempt as a ridiculous Fellow. For the words, which he cites a little after, ſhew plainly, that it was Sotades, and not Arius, whom St Athanaſius meant, when he ſaid, that he was ridiculous to the Pagans themſelves. I ſay it, and repeat it; it is allowable to compoſe pious Verſes in the ſame Metre, and of the ſame Meaſure, with the Songs of an Opera; conſequently one might compoſe Hymns to the Sotadic Meaſure. The Evil does not lie in this Conformity; it is rather in the Handle, which is given to Scoffers to laugh at Pſalmody. I ſet aſide the Subject of the Poetry. And, to let the Proteſtants, in particular, ſee what Judgment they ought to make of the Invectives againſt the Thalia of Arius, they muſt be informed of what Father Maimbourg publiſhed concerning the Pſalms, tranſlated into Verſe by Clement Marot. He ſpeaks as ill of them, as of the Thalia of Arius. What he ſays of the Thalia, is to be found in the Eighty firſt Page of the firſt Tome of his Hiſtory of Arianiſm (37). What he ſays of the Pſalms, in his Hiſtory of Calviniſm (38), is This: "Theſe "were the Pſalms, which they ſung at That time; "to which Beza afterwards added the reſt of the "Pſalter; and which were ſet to Tunes of a ſoft and "effeminate Air, which have nothing in them of the "Devotion and Majeſty of the Muſic of the Catholic "Church." We cannot deny what Varillas ſays (39), that the Airs were taken from the beſt Songs of the Times. See Jeremiah de Pours, in his ſecond Book of Divine Melody, pag. 577. It is not without Reaſon, that I alledged the Songs of an Opera, as my Example: I would inſinuate, that we ſhould carefully avoid imitating the Airs of a Ballad in Spiritual Songs; otherwiſe Religion is too much expoſed to Contempt and Laughter; as appears by the Book, which the Author of the Court Biſhop ſo much ridicules (40). It is a Collection of Spiritual Songs, compoſed by a Jeſuit, and by Father Martial de Brive, a Capuchin, and ſet to the moſt burleſque Ballad-Tunes; I fancy the Thalia of Arius might vie with the Impertinence of This Collection, printed with the Approbation of two Doctors of Divinity.

(35) Hermant's Life of St Athanaſius, lib. I, cap. 13, pag. 61.

(36) Ex Orat. II, contra Arianos.

(37) Tom. I. pag. 81, Edit. of Holl.

(38) Pag. 99.

(39) Varill. Hiſtory of Herely, Book XXI, pag. 49. ad Ann. 1559.

(40) See his third Dialogue, pag. 86, &c. Edit. of Holl.

WHETHER we are to condemn Spiritual Hymns and Songs, which are ſet to the ſame Airs with prophane Ballads.

[M] A Modern Author —— wrote ſome Works, to prove, that the Fathers of the three firſt Centuries held the ſame Opinions.] His Name was Sandius. What he wrote on this Subject is entituled Nucleus Hiſtoriæ Eccleſiaſticæ, in 1668, in 8vo. The ſame Book was much enlarged in the Year 1676, in 4to. Appendix addendorum, confirmandorum, & emendandorum, ad Nucleum Hiſtoriæ Eccleſiaſticæ, cum reſponſionibus ad Gardinerum, in 1678, in 4to.

ARMINIUS (JAMES) Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden, was born at Oudewater (a) in Holland, in the Year 1560 [A]. His Father died during his Infancy; and he was indebted for his firſt Inſtructions to a good Prieſt, who had reliſhed the Opinions of the Reformed, and who, to avoid being obliged to ſay Maſs, changed his Abode often. He followed his Studies at Utrecht, when Death bereft him of his

(a) This Word in Dutch ſignifies Old Water, and from hence the Name of Arminius's Country in the Titles of his Books is Veteraquinas.

[A] He was born in the Year 1560.] Bertius amuſes himſelf with giving the Year of Arminius's Birth two Characters, which no doubt he thought worthy of Reflexion. He obſerves, that Philip Melancthon died in That Year, and that the Conference of Poiſſi was held in the ſame Year, in which the Proteſtant Deputies pleaded the Cauſe of two Thouſand one Hundred and Ninety Churches, who humbly ſued to the King for Liberty of Conſcience (1). To ſay nothing of his Calculation, which, perhaps, is not the moſt exact, He is miſtaken as to the Year; the Conference of Poiſſi began in the Month of September 1561. Begin the Year either at Eaſter, or on the firſt of January, you will never juſtify Bertius.

(1) Bertius, in Orat. Funebr. Jacobi Arminii.

[B] He

Digitized by Google

his Patron. This Loſs would have plunged him into great difficulties, if he had not fortunately met with aſſiſtance from his Countryman, Rodolphus Snellius, who brought him with him to Marpurgh, in 1575. Scarce was he arrived there, when he received the News that Oudewater was pillaged by the Spaniards. This News threw him into a deep Melancholy; nor could he forbear returning into Holland, to be himſelf a Witneſs of the State of things there; but, finding, that his Mother, Siſter, Brothers, Relations, and almoſt all the Inhabitants of Oudewater, had been put to the Sword, he returned to Marpurgh, travelling all the way on Foot. Having heard, that an Univerſity was founded at Leyden, he ſoon returned to Holland, and ſtudied in this new Academy with ſo great Application and Succeſs, that he acquired a very particular Eſteem. In 1582, he was ſent to Geneva, at the Expence of the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam, to perfect his Studies in the Colleges there, where he chiefly followed the Lectures of Theodore Beza, who at that time expounded the Epiſtle to the Romans. He had the misfortune to diſpleaſe ſome of the Principal Members of the Academy, by publickly maintaining the Philoſophy of Ramus; and That with much heat; and even teaching it in private; for this he was obliged to retire, and went to Baſil, where he was received with Applauſe. He read public Lectures there [B], and acquired ſuch Credit, that the Faculty of Divinity would have given him the Degree of Doctor without any Expence. He modeſtly declined the Offer, and returned to Geneva, where, finding the Adverſaries of the Ramiſts ſomewhat cooled, he moderated his own heat likewiſe. He had a great deſire to ſee Italy, and particularly that he might hear the Philoſophical Lectures of the famous James Zabarella, at Padua. He ſatisfied This Curioſity, and paſſed ſix or ſeven Months in his Travels; after which he returned to Geneva, and from thence to Amſterdam, where he found he had been ſufficiently cenſured in relation to his Journey into Italy [C], which had a little cooled the Affection of the Magiſtrates, his Patrons

[B] He read public Lectures at Baſil.] "The Pro- "feſſor James Grynæus came often to them, and "gave him great Commendations. Nor did he "ſcruple, in maintaining a Theſis, to refer it to "Him to anſwer Thoſe Objections, which ſeemed "the ſtrongeſt; and was wont upon thoſe Occaſions "to ſay, Let my Hollander anſwer for me." Solent Baſileæ feriis vindemialibus doctiores ſtudioſi publicè interdum in Academia exercitii gratiâ aliquid extra ordinem docere. Eum laborem Arminius noſter haud invitus ſuſcepit, laudatus ob id à reverendo viro D. Jacobo Grynæo, qui etiam lectiones ipſius præſentia ſua aliquoties coboneſtavit: idem quoque in diſputationibus publicis, ſi quid gravius proponeretur, aut dignus vindice nodus occurreret, non eſt veritus, honoris cauſſâ Arminium noſtrum media in ſtudioſorum turba ſedentem citare, & (ut Grynæi candorem agnoſcas) dicere, Reſpondeat pro me Hollandus meus (2). Note, that he obſerved in him a Spirit too much inclined to refine upon things, and that he gave him very good Advice thereupon. Bertius is not the Author, who informs me of this, but Philip Pareus. He relates, that Theodore Beza adviſed one of his Friends to reſtrain the Subtilty of his Genius, as what Satan had often taken advantage of to delude great Perſons. "Do "not ingage yourſelf, continued Beza, in vain Sub- "tilties; and, if ſometimes certain new Thoughts "ariſe in your Mind, approve them not, without "firſt examining them to the bottom, how pleaſing "ſoever they may be at the firſt View. Calvin "gave me this Advice; I have followed it; and have "found the benefit of it." Sicut magnopere te hortor, ut Dei dona in te collata omni ſtudio excolas: ita cum te ἀγχινοίᾳ non vulgari donatum eſſe videam, qua ſæpe ad maximos decipendos viros non irrito conatu Satanas eſt abuſus, velim te diligenter cavere, ut nullis inanibus argutiis te ipſum irretias, & quoties nova quædam tibi in mentem venient, diligenter illa, quantumlibet in initio tibi illa arriſerunt, excutere, priuſquam approbes. In omnibus denique iſtis prompto & alacri ingenio tibi conceſſo modereris. Ego quidem certe per Dei gratiam non prorſus bebes de hoc ipſo à magno illo viro beatæ memoriæ JOHANNE CALVINO admonitus ita facere ſtatim ab initio ſtudui, cum ad ſacra ſtudia me totum converterem. Neque me hujus conſilii unquam pœnituit: nec, ut ſpero, pœnitebit (3). Philip Pareus had the Original of This Letter of Theodore Beza; and he adds, that "JAMES GRYNÆUS "had given the ſame Advice to ARMINIUS, the "Founder of the New Pelagianiſm, at the time when "he ſtudied Divinity at Baſil; as Grynæus himſelf "had informed him." In quam ſententiam clariſſimum & ſagaciſſimum JACOBUM ARMINIUM, novi Pelagianiſmi inſtauratorem in Belgio, cum juvenis operam daret S. Theologiæ in Academia Baſilienſi, graviter quoque admonitum fuiſſe à venerando ſene D. JACOBO GRYNÆO, cujus memoria ſit in benedictione! Ipſemet mihi, quando ad pedes ejus in Raurica diſcentium Synagogia ſederem, narravit (4). If any one accuſes me of inſerting theſe Paſſages at length, only as Helps to ſwell out a large Book, he will betray a want of Judgment; for they are very fit to ſuggeſt uſeful Reflexions to ſeveral Perſons, and very neceſſary for ſome Readers. Remember St Paul's Maxim, Knowledge puffeth up (5); but take notice, that there is another Talent which puffs up yet more. A Man of an unbounded Memory, and Reading, applaudes himſelf on his Knowledge, and grows proud; but he prides himſelf, and preſumes much more, when he fancies he has invented a new Method of explaining, or treating, Matters. We do not eſteem ourſelves ſo much Proprietors of That Knowledge, we have drawn from Books, as we do of an Explanation, or Doctrine, of which we are the Inventors. It is for ſuch Inventions that we feel all the Force of Paternal Love and Tenderneſs. It is here we find the moſt bewitching Charms; it is This, which blinds us; it is This, which makes us loſe Ground. This is a Rock, of which young Perſons of a ſubtle Wit cannot be too frequently warned.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Beza, apud Philippum Pareum, in vita Davidis Parei, pag. 57. See alſo a Letter of the ſame Beza, among theſe of Arminius, pag. 26, Edit. 1684.

(4) Philippus Pareus, ibid.

(5) 1 Cor. viii. 1.

[C] He had been ſufficiently cenſured in relation to his Journey into Italy.] Among the ſeveral Epidemical Diſtempers of the Human Mind, I know of none more blameable, and productive of bad Effects, than the Practice of giving the Reins to Suſpicion. It is a very ſlippery Road. We are ſoon got a great Way from the Place we ſet out from. We eaſily paſs from one Suſpicion to another; we ſeldom ſtop at Poſſibility; we run forward to Probability, and to the greateſt Probability; and, preſently after, That which paſſed only for Probable, is reported as certain and inconteſtable; and in a little time, This pretended Certainty is ſpread over a whole Town. Great Cities are more ſubject to This Diſorder, than others. It was reported, in Amſterdam, that "Arminius had kiſſed the Pope's Toe, "whom he had ſeen only in a Croud; that he had "contracted an Intimacy with Jeſuits, whom he "had never heard of; that he had made himſelf "known to Bellarmine, whom he had never ſeen; "and that he had abjured the Reformed Religion, "for which he was prepared to die." Theſe Reports were all falſe; and yet They made an Impreſſion on the Minds of the Magiſtrates, who ſupported This young Man. Let us hear the Author of his Funeral Oration. "Inter damna (itineris Italici "ponebat) quod in ampliſſimi Senatus Amſterdamen- "ſis offenſiunculam ob id factum tunc temporis in- "curriſſet, trons and Mecenas's. He eaſily juſtified himſelf with Perſons of Underſtanding; but there were ſome weak and ſuſpicious Spirits, who could not get over this Stumbling-Block (b), till he had made the whole Church ſenſible of his fine Talent at Preaching; by the means of which he regained the Love and Eſteem of all the World. His own Colleagues paid Homage to his Underſtanding, and confeſſed, that his Sermons were uſeful and inſtructive even to Them. Martin Lydius, Profeſſor of Divinity at Franeker, judged him a proper Perſon to anſwer a Writing, in which the Doctrine of Theodore Beza, concerning Predeſtination, was oppoſed by ſome Miniſters of Delft. Arminius, in compliance with his Requeſt, undertook to refute This Work; but, during the Examination, and whilſt he was ballancing the Reaſons on both ſides, he went over to the Opinion, he was to refute, and even carried it farther than the Miniſters of Delft. He condemned, with Them, the Supralapſarian Beza, and afterwards acknowledged no other Election, but That, which was grounded on the Obedience of Sinners to the call of God by JESUS CHRIST. He was brought into trouble for This at Amſterdam; he was accuſed of departing from the received Doctrine; but the Authority of the Magiſtrates ſuppreſſed This Conteſt. He was advanced to the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity, at Leyden, in the Year 1603; and it was with no ſmall difficulty he obtained his Diſmiſſion from Thoſe of Amſterdam. After he had removed the ill Impreſſions, which had been given of his Doctrine, he was admitted Doctor of Divinity at Leyden (c), and inſtalled in the room of the Profeſſor Francis Junius. He had exerciſed his Miniſtry in the Church of Amſterdam fifteen Years. The Diſputes about Grace ſoon after grew hot in That Univerſity; and the States of the Province were obliged to appoint Conferences between Him and His Adverſaries. He was ſummoned ſeveral times to the Hague, and went thither to give an account of his Doctrine. This Conteſt, his great Application to Buſineſs, and the Vexation to find his Reputation ſullied by ſeveral Calumnies (d), impaired his Health in ſuch a manner, that he fell into a Diſtemper, of which he died, the nineteenth of October, 1609 [D], with great Sentiments of Piety and Patience (e). It were to be wiſhed he had made a better uſe of his Knowledge [E]; for, tho' his Intentions probably were good, yet it may be ſaid, that he innovated

Digitized by Google

(b) Infirmi quidam fratres factum illud perpetuo inſectari, & in circulis ſuggillare. Bertius in Orat. Funebr. Jac. Arminii.

(c) He was the firſt, on whom this Title was ſolemnly conferred in the Univerſity of Leyden. Bertius, ubi ſupra.

(d) Not on account of his Morals, but for his Opinions.

(e) Taken from his Funeral Oration, ſpoken by Peter Bertius.

" curriſſet, ſuffundentibus frigidam quibuſdam, quos " omnino præſtitiſſet judicia in ipſius reditum ſuſ- " pendere. Hinc ergo, ſumpta occaſione, ſpargebatur " in vulgus, illum Pontificis ſoleam deoſculatum, " quem non niſi in conferta turba, ut reliqui ſpe- " ctatores, vidiſſet, nec ſoleat bellua honorem iſtum " niſi Regibus ac Principibus deferre: Jeſuitis ad- " ſueviſſe, quos nunquam audiviſſet: Bellarmino in- " notuiſſe, quem nunquam conſpexiſſet: Religio- " nem orthodoxam abjuraſſe, pro qua paratus eſſet " ad ſanguinis uſque profuſionem decertare (6)."

(6) Bertius in Orat. Funebr. J. Arminii.

[D] The Vexation to find his Reputation ſullied ----- impaired his Health, and brought him into a Diſtemper, of which he died, the nineteenth of October, 1609.] There is reaſon to think, that this Vexation contributed more to his untimely Death, than any thing elſe. It was a bad Leaven, which ſoured the peccant Humours, and which complicated his Diſtemper a thouſand Ways. " Quum in- " domita mali pertinacia ipſi quoque arti (Medicinæ) " faceret opprobrium: Altius enim defixa quam ut " evelli poſſet, nova indies excitabat ſymptomata, fe- " bres, tuſſim, hypocondriorum extenſionem, exſpi- " randi difficultatem, oppreſſionem à cibo, laborioſos " ſomnos, atrophiam, arthritidem; nullamque ægro " pauſam vel requiem concedebat: acceſſere poſtea " dolores in inteſtinis, ilio, & colo, cum obſtructione " nervi optici ſiniſtri, & ejuſdem oculi obfuſcatione. " ----- The Stubborneſs of his Diſeaſe baffled all " the Art of Medicine; for, being paſt cure, it every " Day brought on new Symptoms; Fevers, a Cough, " an Extenſion of the Hypochondria, Difficulty of " Breathing, Oppreſſion of Food, reſtleſs Sleep, Con- " ſumption, and Gout; nor had he any reſpite from " his Diſtemper; afterwards he felt Pains in his In- " teſtines, with an Obſtruction of the left optic Nerve, " and a Dimneſs in the left Eye (7)." Sometimes he was heard to ſigh, and cry out, as formerly the Prophet did, Wo is me, my Mother, that thou haſt born me a Man of Strife, &c. Let us produce a long Paſſage of Bertius. " Quid mirum, ſi commo- " tus fuerit famæ ſuæ, ſalutis, & laborum diſpendio; " quum neque viro bono quicquam fama ſua ſit an- " tiquius, neque Chriſtiano ſalute, neque S. Theo- " logiæ doctori petitis ex ſcriptura demonſtrationi- " bus? Oppreſſio, inquit Siracides, inſanire facit ſa- " pientem. Eadem hujc dolorem, ex dolore morbum " conciliavit, ex morbo mortem. O tetrum, & vi- " perinum, exque imo tartaro excitatum malum! " Quoties illum ex Propheta privatim etiam cum " gemitu exclamantem audivimus! Væ mihi, mater " mea, quare genuiſti me virum diſcordiæ in uni- " verſa terra? Nec fœneravi, nec fœneravit mihi " quiſquam; & tamen omnes maledicunt mihi. Re- " vocavit tamen ſeipſe ad rationis & tranquillitatis " ſepta (8). --- What Wonder, if the loſs of his Reputa- " tion, his Health, and his Labour, affected him; ſince " a good Man ſets the greateſt Value on his Fame, " a Chriſtian on his Health, and a Divine on Proofs " fetched from Scripture? Oppreſſion, ſays the Son " Sirac, maketh a wiſe Man mad. It was This very " Thing, which firſt afflicted him; Affliction next " impaired his Health; and at laſt a Diſtemper killed " him. O Thou Black, Poiſonous, and moſt Helliſh " Evil! How often have we heard him exclaiming " to himſelf, with a Sigh, in the Language of the Pro- " phet; Wo is me, my Mother, that Thou haſt born " me a Man of Strife, and a Man of Contention " to the whole Earth! I have neither lent on Uſury, " nor Men have lent to me on Uſury; yet every " one of them doth curſe me. However, by the " help of Reaſon, he recovered his Peace of Mind." This we cannot reflect on, without deploring the Vanity of human Things. We look upon Stupidity as a great Misfortune; and Fathers, who are not blind to the Dulneſs of their Sons, are ſenſibly afflicted at it: They want to diſcover in them a great Genius, a ſublime Underſtanding; and, if they find them thus qualified, their Joy is inexpreſſible. This is to wiſh we know what. Arminius had much better have been an errant Blockhead, than ſo great a Wit; for the Honour of giving his Name to a Sect, which makes a Figure in the World, and which has produced able Men, was but a chimerical Good, in compariſon of the real Evils, the Vexations, the Pains, and Bitterneſs, which he felt in his Life-time; which ſhortened his Days; and which he had eſcaped, had he been but an ordinary Divine, a little Wit, or a Blockhead; in ſhort, had he been One of That Claſs of Men, of whom it is proverbially ſaid, He will broach no Hereſies *. Juvenal would have alledged an Example of this kind in his Tenth Satire, if there had been Religious Diſputes in his Times, which had cauſed the Death of one of the Diſputants.

(7) Bertius, ubi ſupra, fol. ij, verſo.

(8) Id. ibid. fol. , verſo.

* A Proverb in France, to denote a dull Wit.

[E] It were to be wiſhed he had made a better uſe of his Knowledge.] I mean, that he had governed himſelf by St Paul's Rule. This great Apoſtle, inſpired

Digitized by Google

innovated without neceſſity, and under Circumſtances, in which his Innovation proved a Source of Diſorders, which ended in a Schiſm. He left ſeven Sons, and ſome Daughters, and a great number of Diſciples, who continued the Diſpute ſo warmly, that it was thought neceſſary to have recourſe to a National Synod. They were condemned in it; but did not ſubmit, and ſoon formed a ſeperate Sect, which ſtill continues, and which, by Degrees, has engaged itſelf in ſeveral other more conſiderable Errors. The Moreri of Amſterdam mentions ſome of the Authors, who give an account of this famous Quarrel. I add to them the Hiſtories of Triglandius, and Boxbornius, and a new Work of a Profeſſor of Tubingen (f). This grand Diſpute produced Multitudes of Books on both Sides. A Profeſſor of Divinity at Cologne, diſguiſed under a fictitious Name (g), gives a Liſt of them according to the order of Years, in a Work, which he intituled Pacificatorium diſſecti Belgii. I queſtion (f) Johan. Wolfgangus Jager. His Work is intituled Hiſtoria Eccleſiaſtica Sæculi XVII. The firſt Decad was printed in 1692.

(g) Ægidius Aſhackerius. He aſſumed the Name of Salomo Theodotus. See Val. Andreas, Bibl. Belg. p. 22.

ſpired by God, and immediately directed by the Holy Ghoſt in all his Writings, raiſed to himſelf the Objection, which the Light of Nature forms againſt the Doctrine of Abſolute Predeſtination; he apprehended the whole Force of the Objection; he propoſes it without weakening it in the leaſt. God hath Mercy on whom he will have Mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth (9). This is St Paul's Doctrine; and the difficulty, which he ſtarts upon it, is This; Thou wilt ſay then unto me, why doth he yet find fault? For who hath reſiſted his Will (10)? This Objection cannot be puſhed farther: Twenty Pages of the ſubtileſt Miniſt could add nothing to it. What more could they infer, than that, upon Calvin's Hypotheſis, God wills Men to commit Sin? Now This is what St Paul knew might be objected againſt him. But what does he reply? Does he ſeek for Diſtinctions and Qualifications? Does he deny the Fact? Does he grant it in part only? Does he enter into Particulars? Does he remove any Ambiguity in the Words? Nothing of all this; he only alledges the Sovereign Power of God, and the Supream Right, which the Creator has, to diſpoſe of his Creatures as it ſeems good to him. Nay but, O Man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? Shall the Thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus (11)? He acknowledges an Incomprehenſiblity in the thing, which ought to put a ſtop to all Diſputes, and impoſe a profound Silence on our Reaſon. He cries out, O the Depth and the Riches both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his Judgments, and his Ways paſt finding out (12)! All Chriſtians ought to find here a definitive Sentence, a Judgment final and without Appeal, in the Diſpute about Grace; or rather they ſhould learn, from this Conduct of St Paul, never to diſpute about Predeſtination, and immediately to oppoſe This Bar againſt all the Subtilities of Human Wit, whether they ariſe of themſelves in meditating on This great Subject, or whether others ſuggeſt them. The beſt, and the ſhorteſt, Way is early to oppoſe this ſtrong Bank againſt the Inundations of Reaſoning, and to conſider this definitive Sentence of St Paul as Thoſe Rocks, immoveable in the midſt of the Waves, againſt which the proudeſt Billows beat in vain; They may foam and daſh; but are only broken againſt Them. All Arrows, darted againſt this Shield, will have the ſame Fate, as That of Priam.

(9) Rom. ix. 18.

(10) Ibid. ver. 19.

(11) Ibid. ver. 20.

(12) Ibid. chap. xi, ver. 33.

Sic fatus Senior, telumque imbelle ſine ictu
Conjecit; rauco quod protinus ære repulſum,
Et ſummo clypei nequicquam umbone pependit (13).

(13) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 2, ver. 544.

This ſaid, his feeble Hand a Javelin threw;
Which, flutt'ring, ſeemed to loiter as it flew:
Juſt, and but barely, to the Mark it held,
And faintly tingled on the brazen Shield.

DRYDEN.

Thus ought Men to behave, when the Diſpute is between Chriſtian and Chriſtian. And, if ever we think proper to exerciſe our Wit on Points of this Nature, we ought at leaſt to ſound a Retreat betimes, and retire behind the Bank I have juſt mentioned. Had Arminius acted thus, as often as his Reaſon ſuggeſted to him Difficulties againſt the Hypotheſis of the Reformers, or whenever he found himſelf called upon to anſwer any Diſputants, he would have taken a perfectly Wiſe and Apoſtolic Courſe, and employed the Lights of his Underſtanding juſt as he ought to have done. If he believed there was ſomething too harſh in the received Doctrine; or, if he found it an eaſe to himſelf to adopt a leſs rigid Opinion, he might have enjoyed his particular Notion; but then he ſhould have been content to have enjoyed it in Silence; I mean, without diſturbing the Rights of Poſſeſſion; ſince he could not do this, without raiſing a dangerous Storm in the Church. His Silence would have ſaved him a great deal of Trouble; and he ſhould have remembered the old Apologue.

Sed tacitus paſci ſi poſſet Corvus, haberet
Plus dapis, & rixæ multo minus invidiæque (14).

(14) Horat. Epiſt. 17, lib. 1, v. 50.

But, could the talking Crow in quiet eat,
His Envy had been leſs, and more his Meat.

CREECH.

See the Remark [D] of the Article HALL (JOSEPH).

But, ſay ſome, would he not have been a Prevaricator, and unworthy of the Miniſtry, if he had neglected to inſtruct his Auditors, whom he believed to be ingaged in a falſe Doctrine? I anſwer; That two capital Reaſons would have excuſed his ſpeaking out: one was, that he did not believe the Hypotheſis, which he diſapproved, to be contrary to Salvation; the other, that his new Method was uſeleſs towards removing the principal Difficulties, which occur in the Doctrine of Predeſtination. We may grant, that the leaſt Truth, abſolutely ſpeaking, deſerves to be propoſed, and that there is no Error ſo inconſiderable, which it is not better we ſhould be cured of, than retain; but, when the Circumſtances of Time and Place will not permit any Novelties to be propoſed, be they ever ſo true, without occaſioning a thouſand Diſorders, in Univerſities, in Families, and in the State itſelf; it is infinitely better to leave Things as they are, than undertake to reform them: The Remedy is worſe than the Diſeaſe. Our Conduct in this Caſe ſhould reſemble That towards certain ſick Perſons, to whom no Phyſic can be adminiſtred, without ſtirring ſeveral bad Humours, the agitation of which would be more pernicious, than the Coagulation (15). I except one Caſe; viz. where the ſaving of Souls is concerned, and the ſnatching them out of the Jaws of the Devil; for, in this caſe, Charity will not ſuffer us to ſtand idle, how great ſoever the Commotions may be, which by this means are accidentally raiſed: we muſt ſubmit the Conſequences to the Care of Providence. Upon this foot, Arminius was no ways obliged to oppoſe the common Doctrine; he did not believe, that any one endangered his Salvation, by following the Hypotheſis of Calvin. Let us conſider the other Circumſtance, which rendered him inexcuſable. To a Syſtem, full of great Difficulties, he ſubſtituted another Syſtem, which, to ſpeak truly, involves no leſs Difficulties, than the former. One may ſay of his Doctrine, what I have obſerved of the Innovations of Saumur (16). It is better connected, and leſs forced, than the Opinion of Mr Amyraut; but, after all, it is but a palliative Remedy; for the Arminians have ſcarce been able to anſwer ſome Objections, which, as they pretend, cannot be refuted on Calvin's Syſtem; beſides, they find themſelves expoſed to other Difficulties, which they cannot get over, but by an ingenuous Confeſſion of

(15) Expediebat quaſi ægræ ſaucieque Reipublicæ requieſcere quomodocunque ne vulnera curatione ipſa reſcinderentur. ---- It was expedient for the Commonwealth, ſick and wounded as it were, to reſt any how; leaſt the very Cure ſhould tear open it's Wounds. Florus, lib. 3. cap. 23.

(16) See Remark [E], of the Article AMYRAUT.

Digitized by Google

I queſtion whether his Catalogue be compleat. It is difficult not to omit ſome in ſuch a number of Pieces. As to the Works of Arminius [F], ſee our laſt Remark.

the weakneſs of human Reaſon, and the Conſideration of the incomprehenſible Infinity of God. And was it worth while to contradict Calvin for this? Why was Arminius ſo very difficult at firſt, when, at laſt, he was obliged to fly to This Aſylum? Why did he not begin here, ſince here he muſt come ſooner or later? He is miſtaken, who imagines, that, after entering the Liſts with a great Diſputant, He ſhall be allowed to triumph, only for ſome ſmall Advantage, which he had over him at firſt. An Athletic, who throws out his Antagoniſt in the middle of the Race, but has not the Advantage of him at the End, is not entituled to the Palm. It is the ſame in Controverſy; it is not ſufficient to parry the firſt Thruſts. Every Reply, and Rejoinder, muſt be ſatisfied, and every Doubt perfectly cleared up. Now this is what neither the Hypotheſis of Arminius, nor That of the Moliniſts, nor That of the Socinians, is able to do (17). The Syſtem of the Arminians is only calculated to gain ſome few Advantages, in Thoſe Preludes to War, in which the forlorn Hope is ſent out, to skirmiſh; but, when it comes to a general and deciſive Battle, This Detatchment muſt retire, as well as the reſt, behind the Intrenchments of Incomprehenſible Myſtery.

(17) See Mr Jurieu, in his Judgment on the rigid and Latitudinarian Methods of explaining the Doctrine of Grace.

[F] The Works of Arminius.] Theſe are the Titles of them: "Diſputationes de diverſis Chriſtianæ "Religionis capitibus. --- Orationes, itemque Tracta- "tus inſigniores aliquot. --- Examen modeſtum li- "belli Guilhelmi Perkinſii, de Prædeſtinationis modo "& ordine, itemque de amplitudine gratiæ divinæ. "----- Analyſis capitis IX. ad Romanos. ---- Diſſer- "tatio de vero & genuino ſenſu cap. VII. Epiſtolæ "ad Romanos. ----- Amica collatio cum D. Fran- "ciſco Junio de Prædeſtinatione, per litteras habitæ. "---- Epiſtola ad Hippolytum à Collibus, &c. —— "i. e. Diſputations on the ſeveral Heads of the Chri- "ſtian Religion. —— Orations, together with ſome "more remarkable Tracts. ----- A Modeſt Examination "of a Book of William Perkins, concerning the Man- "ner and Order of Predeſtination, and concerning the "Extent of Divine Grace. ---- An Analyſis of the "ninth Chapter to the Romans. —— A Diſſertation "concerning the true and genuine Senſe of the Seventh "Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans. —— A "Friendly Conference with Francis Junius concerning "Predeſtination, held by Letter. —— *An Epiſtle to "*Hippolytus à Collibus, &c."

ARNAULD, a Noble and Ancient Family of Auvergne. It is above Two Hundred Years, ſince a Daughter of this Houſe was married to a Lord de la Fayette, the Grandſon of Him, who was Marſhal of France under Charles VIth. About the Year 1480, HENRY ARNAULD married Catherine Bariot, a Kinſwoman of Him, who was Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, and Maſter of the Requeſts in the Reign of Lewis XI (a). Soon after this Marriage, He ſettled at Riom, whither he was invited, with ſeveral other Perſons of Merit, by Peter de Bourbon, Count of Beaujeu [A], who kept his ordinary Reſidence there. This Prince was married to Anna of France, Daughter of Lewis XI, who had an abſolute Power over the Mind of her Brother Charles VIII, and was Regent during his Minority. Henry Arnauld inſinuated himſelf into the Eſteem of the Count and Counteſs of Beaujeu. He was made Maſter of the Horſe to the Count, and Governor of the Town and Caſtle of Hermant. It was the Place of his Birth, and about eight Leagues diſtant from Riom, on the Frontiers of the Marche of Limouſin, near Uſſel. This Government was continued to him by the Conſtable of Bourbon, Son-in-Law to the Count de Beaujeu. The Office of Maſter of the Horſe was alſo continued to him. He did great Service to the Conſtable, by cauſing his Horſes to be ſhod backwards (b), when Francis I, who conſidered him as a Rebel, ſent a Guard to take him. They, ſuppoſing by the Horſes Tracks, that he was gone quite the contrary Way from the Place, where he had concealed himſelf, loſt their time in ſearching for him where he was not. Henry Arnauld had contracted a very ſtrict Friendſhip with Florimond de Robertet, Secretary to the Count de Beaujeu, and afterwards Secretary of State under Francis I; and it was wholly his own fault, that he did not procure a very advantageous Match for his Son, by the Generoſity of this Friend; but he would return one Act of Generoſity by another [B]. He left two Sons John and Anthony. The firſt died without Children: In the Pariſh Regiſter of the City of Riom, in the Year 1542, he is ſtiled Commander of Hermant. His younger Brother, ANTHONY ARNAULD kept up the Family. His firſt Wife was Margaret Moſnier-Dubourg, a near

(a) From Him deſcend Mr Bariot, Marquis of Mouſſy, and Mrs Bariot, Counteſs of Honneüil and Mazy.

(b) We find in the Galanteries des Rois de France, printed in Holland, in 1694, pag. 189, of the firſt Tome, that the Family of Arnauld was ſtripped of all for this Stratagem.

[A] He was invited to Riom, with ſeveral other Perſons of Merit, by Peter de Bourbon, Count of Beaujeu.] In Riom are yet to be ſeen the Houſes of Montboiſſier, Montmorin, Chazeron, Florat, Chaſteaugay, Mariliac, Dubourg, Duprat, Forget, and Robertet; who were all chief Officers, and Favourites, of the Count and Counteſs of Beaujeu, and of their Son-in-Law, the Conſtable of Bourbon; by whom they were all ſucceſſively advanced to the chief Dignities of the Sword, and of the Gown (1). Thus you ſee by what Accident it happened, that ſo many Auvergnates appeared at the Court of France in the higheſt Poſts, under Charles VIII, Lewis XII, and Francis I. The Counteſs of Beaujeu had drawn them out of their Province, and had put in their Power to make their own Fortunes. Had it not been for her, they might all have died in obſcurity; their great Talents would never have ſhone beyond their own Country. Conclude from hence, that the particular Glory of a Province, at certain times, depends wholly on Patronages of this kind. You will find a Supplement to This in the Continuation of the Menagiana, pag. 304, and 305, of the Edition of Holland.

(1) Taken from a Memoir, inſerted in the Mercure Galant of December, 1693, pag. 42.

[B] He would return one Act of Generoſity by another.] The Affair was this: Florimond de Robertet, leaving Montbriſon, his native Place, ſettled at Riom, and became Secretary to the Count de Beaujeu. He governed him abſolutely; as he afterwards did Charles VIII, and Lewis XII, after the Death of the Cardinal d'Amboiſe; and laſtly, Francis I, to whom he was Secretary of State. He had ſuch an Affection for Henry Arnauld, that, when he left Riom, to reſide at the Court of Charles VIII, he took all his Children along with him, except his Eldeſt Daughter Jane de Robertet, whom he left at Riom with the Wife of Henry Arnauld, deſigning, that they ſhould marry her to their Eldeſt Son John Arnauld, when ſhe came of Age. But the Guardians did not think their Son a Match good enough for her; ſo they married her to the richeſt young Man of Riom, whoſe Name was Amable de Ceriers, the Son of one Mariliac (2).

(2) Taken from the ab.ve Memoir.

[C] He

Digitized by Google

a near Relation of the Chancellor of That Name, Sister of the famous Annas Dubourg, Counsellor in Parliament, and of John Dubourg, Lieutenant-Criminal of Riom. He had but one Son by This Marriage, viz. JOHN DE LA MOTTE-ARNAULD, whom Thuanus mentions with so much Praise in his History; and who, at the Head of a Troop of Horse, of which he was Captain, shut himself up in the Town of Issoire, which held for the King against the League, and maintained the Siege of it a long time with the Lords of Chabanes, and of Chazeron; after which he made a vigorous Sally at the Head of thirty Troopers, and killed the Count of Randam (c) with his own Hand, who was Chief of the League in Auvergne. The Death of This Person occasioned the raising of the Siege, and the winning of a Battle, which was fought some time after, and which secured all Auvergne to Henry IV, on the same Day, and in the same Year, that he gained the Victory in the Battle of Yvri. The Father of this John Arnauld had followed the Profession of Arms from the beginning. He had raised a Company of Light-Horse, and was in several Actions. But Catherine de Medicis, knowing him to be an able and faithful Person, made him her Attorney-General, and the King's Attorney in the Presidial Court of Riom, which, at that time, had above forty Leagues of Extent (d). He distinguished himself greatly in these two Employs. In all the Acts remaining of him, he styles himself Lord of la Motte, Chantegrenelle, Fontainebleau, Pessac, and Bonnefilles, all Fiefs, and Castles, not above half a League from Riom. His second Wife was Anne Forget, Daughter of the Steward of the Household to the Constable of Bourbon (e). He lived to the Age of an Hundred and One Years, and died at Paris; whither Queen Catherine de Medicis had called him. He was buried in the Church of St Sulpice, and in the first Chapel, that had been built in it, of which he himself was the Founder. The Title of the Foundation imports, that he had the Office of Auditor of the Accompts, and Comptroller-General [C], and that he was Lord of Corbeville near Paris. From his second Marriage proceeded twelve Sons (f), one of whom was ANTHONY ARNAULD: I shall mention him in a separate Article; ISAAC ARNAULD, who was Intendant of the Finances: DAVID ARNAULD, a Captain, who was killed at the Siege of Jerzeau; LEWIS ARNAULD, Receiver-General of the Finances at Riom; another LEWIS ARNAULD, the King's Secretary at Paris; and PETER ARNAULD, who was the youngest of the twelve Brothers, and who distinguished himself most in the Profession of Arms. He was Marshal of the Camps, and Armies, of King Lewis XIII; Governor of Fort Lewis, and Colonel of the Regiment of Champaigne. He it is, of whom the Sieur de Pontis makes such honourable mention; who ventures to equal him to the most famous Commanders among the Greeks and Romans. He says, that he understood the Ancient Military Discipline the best of any Man, and made his Soldiers strictly observe it, who loved him even to Adoration. Isaac Arnauld, above-mentioned, was the Father of another ISAAC ARNAULD, who was Governor of Philipsburg, and Camp Master to the Carabineers, one of the bravest Men, and finest Wits, of the Age: He is celebrated in the Works of Voiture. His Sister was married to Manasses de Feuquiers, who commanded the King's Army before Thionville, in the Year 1639 (g).

(c) Madame de Senecey, Governess of the King, was his Daughter.

(d) The Presidial Courts of Gueret, of Clermont, and of Aurillac, were not as yet dismembered from it.

(e) Mons. Forget, Secretary in the Reign of Henry IV, was of the same Family.

(f) The Historical Discourse of the Life of Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, mentions only eight Sons, which John de la Motte Arnauld had by two Wives, pag. 2, Edit. of Liege, 1702.

(g) Taken from a Memoir, communicated to the Author of the Mercure Galant, Decemb. 1693.

[C] He was Auditor of the Accompts, and Comptroller-General.] Since the first Edition of this Work, I received a small Memoir, written by one of the principal Genealogists of Europe; in which I find as follows: "Anthony Arnauld, Sieur de la Mothe, and "Villeneuve, His Majesty's Attorney in the Seneschal's Jurisdiction of Auvergne, at Riom; Solliciter-General to the Parliament in 1568, and 1570; afterwards Auditor of the Accompts at Paris, and Attorney-General of Catherine de Medicis; was ennobled, in December 1577, by the Title of Auditor of the Accompts. He was the Son of Henry Arnauld, Bailiff of the Town of Harmant, in Auvergne, and of N. Colonges. He had married Anne Forget, Daughter of John Forget, Sieur de Bidoigne, the King's Attorney in Auvergne, and of Jane Godinet; and he died at the Age of an Hundred and One Years, about the Year 1591. See the Memoirs of Sully, Tom. IV. fol. 27." Read also the Continuation of the Menagiana, pag. 305, Dutch Edition.

(a) Konig calls him Marc Anthony. The Letter M, which He, and Others, met with before Anthony, in some French Books, in which it stands for Maitre, or Monsieur, was, probably, the Cause of this Mistake.

ARNAULD (ANTHONY) (a) Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, the Son of another Anthony, whom I have mentioned in the preceeding Article, acquired a wonderful Reputation by his Eloquence. Henry IV, intending to shew the Duke of Savoy the Parliament, made Choice of a Day, when Arnauld was to plead a fine Cause (b). He gave this able Man a Breviate for Counsellor of State. The Queen Mary de Medicis made him her Advocate-General, and would have made him her Secretary of State; but he declined this Office, and told her Majesty, he could do Her more Service, in quality of Advocate, than if he was Secretary of State. This Fact is intimated in his Epitaph [A]. One Day the Advocate-General, Marion, was so well

(b) The Question was, concerning the Punishment due to Slanderers. See in Matthieu's History of Henry IV. Tom. I. pag. 455, an Argument on this Subject.

[A] He refused to be Secretary of State —— This Fact is intimated in his Epitaph.] Mr le Maitre, Grand-Son, and God-Son of Anthony Arnauld, the Advocate, was Author of the Epitaph. They, who would read it, need look no further than this Page; and They, who have no such Curiosity, may pass it over.

Passant, du grand Arnauld revere la memoire.
Ses vertus à sa race ont servi d'ornement,
Sa plume à son pais, sa voix au Parlement,
Son esprit à son siecle, & ses faits à l'histoire.
Contre un second Philippe Usurpateur des lis
Ce second Demosthene anima ses écrits,
Et contre Emmanuel arma son éloquence.

Digitized by Google

well satisfied with hearing him plead, that he took him home in his Coach to Dinner, and seated his Eldest Daughter Catherine Marion near him. After Dinner, he took him aside, and asked him what he thought of his Daughter; and, being answered, that she seemed to him a Lady of great Merit, he gave her to him in Marriage (c). One of the most famous Causes, which Anthony Arnauld ever pleaded, was That of the University against the Jesuits, in the Year 1594. We shall see hereafter how he was rewarded for it [B]. Some say, that he published a Book in 1602, to prevent their Re-call [C]. But, foreseeing, that they would return, and become formidable, he endeavoured to suppress it. He had been Counsellor and Attorney-General to Queen Catherine de Medicis. They, who have reported, that he was of the Reformed Religion, have reported a very great Falshood [D]. He had Twenty (c) Taken from the Memoir, in the Mercure Galant, for Decemb. 1693.

Il vit comme un neant les hautes dignitez,
Et prefera l'honneur d'oracle de la France
A tout le vain éclat des titres empruntez.

Passenger, whoe'er thou art, revere the Memory
Of the Great ARNAULD.
His Virtues were the Ornament of his Family,
His Pen of his Country, His Voice of the Parliament,
His Wit of the Age, and his Actions of History.
Against a second Philip, Usurper of the Lilly,
This second Demosthenes
Animated his Writings;
And arm'd his Eloquence against Emmanuel.
He despised the highest Dignities,
And preferr'd the Honour of being
The Oracle of France
To all the vain Splendor of borrowed Titles.

[B] How he was rewarded for it.] He sent back the Present, which the University had ordered him; He would have it said, that so famous a Cause was pleaded gratis. The University drew up an Act in the most authentic Form, by which it engaged itself to an eternal Acknowledgment, not only to himself, but to his Posterity. These are the Terms of the Decree: "Quapropter, cum Consultorum disertissimus & Disertorum consultissimus D. ANTONIUS "ARNALDUS, in Foro Parisiensi spectatus à multis "annis Patronus, pro Defensione juris Academici "—— tantopere desudarit: & longa comptaque Oratione, quæ Doctorum manibus teritur, probarit "—— Cumque idem pro Defensionis laboribus & "Patrocinii jure oblatum sibi ab Academia honorarium remiserit, gratuitamque suam operam esse "voluerit; ne apud Nos ingrati animi culpa resideat, "placuit Rectori, quatuor Facultatibus, & singulis "Nationibus, ut perpetua tanti beneficii memoria "publicis Tabulis consignata & testata apud posteros existaret, huicque Sacramento se omnes Academiæ Ordines obstringerent, se ea officia, quæ à "bonis clientibus fido Patrono solent deferri, omnia "IN ILLUM EJUSQUE LIBEROS ac posteros "studiosè collaturos, nec eorum unquam honori, "commodis, famæque defuturos (1). —— Wherefore, since the most famous Lawyer, ANTHONY ARNAULD, many Years a celebrated Advocate in the Courts of Paris, has so greatly exerted himself in Defence of the Rights of the University; and proved, in a long and beautiful Oration, which is in the Hands of the Learned, &c. And, whereas the said Lawyer has declined accepting the Present, sent him by the University, in consideration of the Pains of his Defence, and as justly due to his Patronage; and desires to bestow his Labour gratis; Therefore, least the Imputation of Ingratitude should rest upon us, it hath pleased the Rector, the Four Faculties, and every Order, that the Memory of so great a Benefit shall be preserved upon Record to Posterity, and that every Member of the University shall oblige himself, by an Oath, to discharge every Instance of Duty, usually paid by good Clients to a faithful Patron, to HIM and his CHILDREN, nor ever to be wanting to their Honour, Advantage, and Fame." You will find This at large in the Preface of a Book printed at Liege, in 1699, and entituled "Causa Arnaldina, seu Antonius Doctor & Socius Sorbonicus à censura Anno 1656, sub nomine Facultatis Theologicæ Parisiensis vulgata, vindicatus. "—— The Arnaldian Case; or Anthony Arnauld, "Doctor and Fellow of the Sorbonne, vindicated from the Censure, published, in 1699, in the Name of the Faculty of Divinity at Paris."

(1) Præfat. Causæ Arnaldinæ, pag. xcvii.

[C] He published a Book, in 1602, to prevent their Re-call.] It is a small Book, entituled, Le Franc & Veritable Discours. Father Richeome refutes him, in his Apologetical Complaint, in which he refutes likewise the Jesuits Catechism, which appeared at the same Time, and came from the Pen of Stephen Pasquier. I have read a Particular, in the Remarks on the Catholic Confession of Sancy (2), which I shall here transcribe: "The Advocate Arnauld re- "turned no Answer; not that the Book entituled, "The Truth defended (3), had stopped his Mouth; "but because he perceived, that the Interest of the "Jesuits with Henry IV would carry it in the end "against all the Reasons, which could be alledged "for establishing the Decree of their Banishment. In "effect, the poor Man was so much afraid, that "he had gone too far in his little Book, that I "have seen a Copy of it, wherein an able Man "of those Times had made the following Observa- "tion with his own Hand. This Book (The Free "and True Discourse) composed by Mr Anthony Ar- "nauld, their good Friend: And a little lower, The "Copies suppressed by the Author."

(2) Book II, chap. 6, pag. 535.

(3) The Author of the Remarks hath said, p. 534, that Richeome, under the Name of Francis de la Montagne, had answered, in 1594, Pasquier's Plea, in a Book, entituled, La verite Defenduë.

[D] They, who have reported, that he was of the Reformed Religion, were greatly mistaken.] The Author of the Amphitheatrum Honoris, disguised under the Name of Clarus Bonarscius, which is the Anagram of Carolus Scribanius, his true Name, speaks of the Advocate Anthony Arnauld as a known Calvinist. The Imago Primi sæculi Soc. Jesu does the same. The Author of the Apology of John Chatel says, pag. 205, that the Name of Arnauld comes from ἀρνέομαι, which signifies to deny or apostatize, and that it approaches near to That of Antichrist, in which is found the Name of the Beast. And, p. 206, A worthy Minister of him, to whom a Mouth is given, speaking great Things and Blasphemies, Rev. xiii. (4). Du Pleix had related the same Falsehood, but retracted it publickly. He had said, in the first Edition of his History of Henry IV, speaking of the Trial, which the Jesuits had with the University of Paris, in 1564; "That Anthony Arnauld making "Profession of Calvinism, the Choice, which the "Agents of the University had made of him, was "esteemed highly scandalous and unbecoming." But thus he recants. "Anthony Arnauld, a most eloquent "Man, was Council for the Plaintiff (5). I for- "merly believed, upon false Information, that he "was a Protestant; but, in truth, he never was. He "left behind him most virtuous Children, and most "zealous for the Catholic Religion." It is strange, that an Historian, who was none of the meanest, could be deceived, as to the Religion of so famous a Lawyer, who had taken the whole Parliament to witness of his Catholicism, in the same Plea, which gave Du Pleix occasion to speak of him. This is what he says in That Plea. "If perhaps They, and "Their Favourers, have the Impudence to assert, "that the Sorbonne was Heretical in the Year 1554, "when it published This Decree against Them: "Just as they have the Assurance to give out, among "the Women of their Congregations, that all, who "prosecute This Cause, are Heretics, sprung either "from Geneva, or from England. If I myself, who "speak, were not known to have been brought up, "from my Infancy, in the Royal College of Navarre; and if my Profession, so notorious, and "my Admission into such public and honourable "Employs, in the Years 80, and 85, did not too "manifestly secure me from their Impostures; they would

(4) Taken from the Question curieuse si Mr Arnauld est Heretique, pag. 13. i. e. A curious Enquiry, whether Mr Arnauld be an Heretic,

(5) That is, the University.

Digitized by Google

Twenty two Children by his Marriage with Catherine Marion (d) [E], and died about the Year 1618. Obſerve, that one of his Daughters reformed the Abbey of Port-Royal [F].

He acquitted himſelf at the Bar, "with ſo much Honour (e), and in ſo extraordinary

(d) Taken from the Memoir, inſerted in the Mercure Galant. December, 1693.

(e) Perrault's Hommes Illuſtres, pag. 54, 55. Edit. of Holl.

"dinary "would no doubt pretend, that I came from thence "likewiſe to plead againſt them." Experience convinced him, and convinces to this Day, that he was miſtaken, in fancying himſelf ſheltered from their Impoſtures; for, beſides the Writers I have cited, there have lately ariſen two new Accuſers; the firſt is Father Hazart; the ſecond, though the Name he gives himſelf be a fictitious one (6), produces a Letter from a Gentleman, whoſe Name is Mr de Heucourt (7), who affirms, that the Father of Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, was born, and died, a Huguenot. I have reaſon to ſay, that Father Hazart has renewed the Accuſation; for theſe are his Words, "The Recantation of Mr du Pleix does not "affect me, nor debar me of the Liberty of taking "his firſt Sentiment for the Legitimate Iſſue of his "beſt Information, and the ſecond as the Offspring "of his Complaiſance for the Relations of the Sieur "Arnauld, who had Credit enough, at that Time, "to gain over, or oblige, an Author, to any thing "of This Nature (8)." It was replied, that one muſt be of a very perverſe Spirit "to prefer, what "an Hiſtorian acknowledges he had ſaid on falſe "Suggeſtions, to what he aſſerts, as certain and "indiſputable, upon better information. Were "there many Perſons of ſo wicked a Character, "the Prejudice, which an Hiſtorian might do by "publiſhing, from bad Memoirs, Falſehoods to the "Diſhonour of his Neighbour, would be irreparable, "ſince his Recantation would ſignify nothing (9)." It is but flying to Father Hazart's Anſwer. "See, by "the way, concludes he, howwell Mr du Pleix is re-"warded for having been ſo partial to the Jeſuits. They "ſhew how much they love him, whilſt they make "him have ſo little Conſcience, as that, having "ſaid nothing but the Truth, when he affirmed, "that the Advocate, who pleaded againſt them, was "an Huguenot, he ſhould notwithſtanding retract "this afterwards, and eſtabliſh a Lie out of meer "Complaiſance." I know not (10) of any Reply, which has been made to the Challenge of Him, who publiſhed Mr d'Heucourt's Letter: The Summons was very preſſing; for thus the Author addreſſed himſelf to Mr Arnauld: "This Letter, the Original "of which is put into my Hands to be ſent to you, "abſolutely requires you to produce the Certificate "of your Baptiſm; for the Jeſuits, your Enemies, "are not, it ſeems, the only Perſons, who reproach "you with being born a Huguenot." But the Puoliſher of this Letter was greatly confounded, when the World was informed, that Mr d'Heucourt diſclaimed it.

(6) That of St Foi, in the important Advice to Mr Arnauld, on the Project of a new Bibliotheque of Janſeniſt Authors. This is a Letter, dated from Paris, the 28*th of* September, 1691.

(7) It ſhould be ſo, and not Reucour, as in the printed Copy.

(8) See the IVth Factum or Caſe of the great Nephews of Janſenius, pag. 20.

(9) Ibid.

(10) This was wrote in 1694.

The Public has ſeen This in the Journal of Mr Baſnage (11), and in a Book, which has appeared ſince the firſt Impreſſion of this Article; I mean the Abridged Hiſtory of the Life and Writings of Mr Arnauld. Obſerve how the Author treats this Matter, in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Pages. "We ſhall not "here loſe time in confuting the impertinent Author "of the Important Advice to Mr Arnauld, &c. wherein "an Extract is produced of a pretended Letter of the "Marquis d'Heucourt, to prove, that Mr Arnauld "and his Father were born Calviniſts. All this is down-"right Impoſture. For not only the Extract of the "Certificate of Baptiſm, which the Adviſer required "might be produced, is at Hand, but alſo an Inſtru-"ment in Form under The Marquis's Hand, dated "from Brompton, near London, the $\frac{1}{2}\frac{2}{2}$th of May, "1692, wherein he declares, that he knows nothing "of it, that the Letter never came from him, and "that it is a Piece maliciouſly and falſly compoſed." It is very probable, that one of our Advocate Arnauld's Brothers turned Huguenot (12); for one, who muſt have known this very well, has informed me, that Madam de Feuquiers (13), and Madam d'Heucourt, her Siſter, who were This Advocate's Nieces by the Father's Side, were of the Reformed Religion to their Death. The ſame Perſon informed me likewiſe, that ISAAC ARNAULD, Miniſter of Rochel, and Author of a Book, entituled The Contempt of the World, was of the ſame Family with Mr Arnauld. This Work was printed more than once; for the Edition of Roüen in 1637, imports, that it had been Reviſed, Corrected, and Augmented with three other Treatiſes by the ſame Author; to wit, Virtuous Reſolutions; Of the Obedience due to the King; and Meditations on old Age.

(11) That is, in the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, for the Month of Novemb. 1692, pag. 134.

(12) See Remark [A], of the Article DRANT (SAMUEL).

(13) The Wife of Him who was beaten before Thionville.

[E] He had Twenty Two Children by his Marriage.——] The Name of the Eldeſt was Robert; The ſame, who became ſo famous by the Name of ARNAULD d'ANDILLI: See the following Article. The ſecond died Biſhop of Angers, in the Month of June, 1692. His Name was HENRY ARNAULD; who had acquired a great Eſteem under the Name of the Abbot of St Nicholas, before he attained to the Mitre. Being at Rome, he ſaved, by his Dexterity and Courage, the Honour and Eſtates of the Barberini, from the Attempts of the Creatures and Relations of Pope Innocent X. In acknowledgement of which, the Prince of Paleſtrina, and the French Cardinals, Anthony and Charles Barberini, not only cauſed a Medal to be ſtruck, and his Picture to be drawn, which they hung up in all their Houſes, but erected likewiſe a Statue to him in their Palace at Rome, with an Inſcription, which Fortunatus had compoſed for St Gregory of Tours (14). He died in the Odour of Sanctity in his Dioceſs at Angers; which he had never left for near Forty four Years that he was Biſhop of it. CATHERINE ARNAULD, the Eldeſt Daughter of Anthony, was married to Mr le Maitre, one of his Majeſty's Council, and Maſter of the Accompts at Paris, by whom ſhe had Anthony le Maitre, the Famous Advocate, and Iſaac le Maitre of Sacy, known by his Tranſlation of the Bible, by That of the Imitation of JESUS CHRIST, the Life of Dom. Barthélemi des Martyrs, and his ſacred Poems. ANGELICA ARNAULD, another Daughter of Anthony, perpetual Abbeſs of Port-Royal in the Fields, reformed That Abbey on the ſame Foot with That of Clairvaux, and made it Elective and Triennial. Five of her Siſters, with their Mother, took the Religious Habit in this Convent, and led a very auſtere Life there till their Death (15).

(14) It is This. Alpibus Arvernis veniens mons altior ipſis. The Barberini alluded to the Arms, and Country of the Arnaulds. This Family is of Auvergne, and has for it's Arms a Mountain. Memoire du Merc. Galant, Decemb. 1693.

(15) Taken from the ſame Memoir.

Obſerve, that, in the Abridged Hiſtory of the Life of Mr Arnauld, pag. 20, it is aſſerted, I. That he was the Twentieth and laſt of the Children of Anthony Arnauld, and of Catherine Marion. This does not agree with the Memoir (16), which I have quoted, and which gives them Twenty Two. II. That, when the Father of ſo many Children died, there were but Ten of them alive, Four Sons, and Six Daughters.

(16) That in the Mercure Galant, for December, 1693.

[F] One of his Daughters reformed the Abbey of Port-Royal.] The Name of Port-Royal makes ſo much noiſe, the Arnaulds are ſo much concerned in it, and the Particulars of all this ſo little known, that I may well ſuppoſe the Curious will receive with pleaſure any Information on this Subject. For this Reaſon I believe it will not diſpleaſe my Reader, if I here inſert what I have read in a printed Caſe (17). Pieces of this kind are ſeldom known to many Perſons.

(17) The IVth Factum of the Great Nephews of Janſenius, againſt Father Hazart.

HISTORICAL Facts concerning the Abbey of PORT-ROYAL.

"Port-Royal is originally a Monaſtery of Bernardin Nuns, ſix Leagues from Paris. One of Mr "d'Andilli's Siſters was made Abbeſs of it, in the "beginning of this Century, when ſhe was but Eleven Years of Age. This was a common Abuſe at "that time; from which God drew great Good. "For, at the Age of Seventeen Years, God inſpired "her with ſo earneſt a Deſire to reform her Abbey, "tho' there were none, either Men or Women, "reformed in the whole Order of the Ciſtertians, "that ſhe reſolved and performed it with eaſe enough, "God giving an extraordinary Bleſſing to her good "Deſigns. She baniſhed all Property from thence; "all the Nuns, after her Example, bringing into the "common Stock what they had before in their private "Poſſeſſion. She eſtabliſhed an exact recluſe Life, perpetual Abſtinence, the Office of the Night, Faſtings, Labour, and Silence, according to the "Rules of St Benedict. And it was this Odour of "Sanctity, like the Perfume of the Spouſe, which "drew her Siſters, Nieces, and her Mother likewiſe, "in their turns, to this Houſe. The Deſign of ſo "perfect a Reformation, undertaken ſo courageouſly, "and executed ſo happily, acquired her ſo great an "Eſteem with the whole Order, that, when ſhe was "but Twenty ſeven, or Twenty eight, Years of Age, "ſhe was choſen to reform the famous Abbey of Mau- "buiſſon.

Digitized by Google

" dinary a manner, that no Perſon ſince, except his Grandſon Mr le Maître, " has been known to appear there with ſo much Reputation and Dignity. His " Houſe was continually filled with Princes, and great Lords, who came to conſult " him about their moſt important Affairs, and he was every where held in ſuch Ve- " neration, that, after his Death, they were forced to expoſe his Body for ſome " time on a Bed, to ſatisfie the People, who preſſingly demanded it." They are miſtaken, who impute to him an Apology for Phalaris [G].

" buiſſon. She paſt Four or Five Years there; which " obliged her to leave to her Siſter, who was after- " wards called Mother Agnes, the Care of her Houſe " of Port-Royal, as her Coadjutrix. It was about this " time, and while ſhe was at Maubuiſſon, that ſhe ſaw " St Francis de Sales, who was come to Paris, to " found there an Houſe of the Viſitation. She ſent " to deſire he would viſit her, and put herſelf under " his Conduct; and it appears by this Saint's Letters " what an Eſteem he had for his dear Daughter the " Abbeſs of Port-Royal."

The Author of the Factum adds, that the Widow of Antony Arnauld, Mother of This Abbeſs, had a ſtrong Deſire to become a Nun, under the Conduct of her own Daughter; and that, as God had inſpired her with this Deſire, about the ſame time that the Abbeſs was adviſed to transfer her Monaſtery of the Fields to Paris; " She bought a very fair and large " Houſe, and Gardens, in the Suburbs of St James, " which ſhe beſtowed on the Abbeſs, Convent, and " Nuns of Port-Royal, that they might ſettle there; " which they actually did, having, at a great Expence, " put the Houſe at Paris into the Condition it is at " preſent in, by the Bleſſing of God on their Charity " and Diſintereſtedneſs. There it was, that this " happy Mother of ſo many pious Children took her " own Daughter for a Mother, conſecrating herſelf " to God by a Religious Profeſſion to live under her " Diſcipline: And, having done ſo for the ſpace of " fourteen or fifteen Years, with very edifying Fer- " vour and Humility, ſhe had the Conſolation, before " her Death, to give her Bleſſing to ſix Daughters, " and ſix Grand-Daughters, who were all in the " Monaſtery, and all Nuns, except one, who died " young, and had been only a Penſioner." Laſtly, it appears by This Factum, that the Abbeſs of Port-Royal was Incumbent for Life, and one of her Siſters Coadjutrix; but that both of them, having only the good of their Houſe in view, willingly parted with their Titles, and ſettled a triennial Election. Mr d'Andilly obtained the neceſſary Permiſſion from the King, tho' it deprived him of the Means of keeping this Abbey always in his own Family. Add to this what we ſhall obſerve in his Article.

[G] They are miſtaken, who impute to him an Apology for Phalaris.] The Words of Father Abram, which I am going to cite, have a viſible Relation to our Arnauld. " De Phalaridis Agrigentorum Ty- " ranni immani crudelitate ſupervacaneum fuerit di- " cere, cum & pleni ſunt aliorum libri, & ipſe ſe " nefarium, immanem, & ſceleratiſſimum in epiſtolis " ſæpe fateatur. Unus inventus eſt Arnaldus, qui " non ita pridem orationem dicam, an nugas? de " ejus laude conſcripſerit. Videlicet ex eodem cala- " mo Phalaridis Apuleiique laudatio & Societatis no- " ſtræ criminatio manavit, ut quibus ſe ſimilem eſſe " malit, liquidius oſtenderet. ——— It will be ſu- " perfluous to ſay any thing of the monſtrous Cruelty " of Phalaris, Tyrant of Agrigentum, ſince other Au- " thors have given a full Account of it, and Pha- " laris often acknowledges himſelf to be monſtrouſly " wicked in his Epiſtles. Arnauld alone is found, " who lately wrote an Oration in his Praiſe. From " the ſame Pen flowed the Panegyric of Phalaris and " Apuleius, and the Accuſation of our Society; that " the Author might more plainly ſhew, whom he would " reſemble." The Miſtake is a groſs one; for the Author of the Apology for Phalaris was an Arnauld of Provence. See the Remark [M] of the Article EPICURUS.

(19) Abram. in Ciceron. Orat. Tom. 1, pag. 103.

ARNAULD d'ANDILLI (ROBERT), Eldeſt Son of the preceeding, was a Perſon of great Merit. See his Elogy in Moreri's Dictionary, and in the Illuſtrious Men of Mr Perrault. He married Mademoiſelle de la Broderie, the Daughter of Him, who had been ſo long Ambaſſador in England, and Grand-Daughter to a Siſter of the Chancellor de Silleri. This Marriage produced five Daughters, all Nuns at Port-Royal, (the Eldeſt of which, Siſter Angelica of St John, paſſed for a Prodigy of Wit, Knowledge and Virtue) and three Sons. The Eldeſt is the Abbot ARNAULD, Commendatory * Abbot of Chomes (a), who, after having born Arms a long time in the King's Service, in the Regiment of his Couſin Iſaac Arnauld, Camp-Maſter of the Carabineers, retired to his Uncle, the Biſhop of Angers. The ſecond is HENRY ARNAULD, Lord of Luzancy, who paſſed his Life in Solitude. The third is SIMON ARNAULD, Marquis of Pompone, formerly Miniſter and Secretary of State, and ſtill a Miniſter of State, known by his Embaſſies into Holland and Sueden (b). Mr Arnauld d'Andilli was ſent early into the World. He had ſeveral Employs, which attached him to the Court, and to an Attendance on the deceaſed King; but he never ſuffered himſelf to be corrupted by the bad Air, which is uſually breathed in ſuch Stations [A]. The Difference he had with the Preſident de Grammond, who had mentioned him, in his Latin Hiſtory, otherwiſe than he ought to have done, may be ſeen in the Collection of his Letters. They, who forged the Romance of the Aſſembly of Bourg-Fontaine, denoted by the Letters A. A. one of the pretended Accomplices of the Deſign, which was ſuppoſed to have been taken there, of introducing Deiſm; and, when they perceived, that theſe Letters could not belong to Mr Arnauld, the Doctor, they applied them to

* One, who enjoys a Benefice in Commendam.

(a) He died in February, 1699.

(b) Memoir of the Mercure Galant, for December, 1693.

[A] He never ſuffered himſelf to be corrupted by the bad Air, which is uſually breathed in ſuch Stations.] " He was a Frenchman, who, all the time he lived " at Court, in Paris, and in the Country, had the " beſt eſtabliſhed Reputation, and was the moſt ge- " nerally talked of for his Piety and Probity; there " being no one, who would not willingly ſubſcribe " to what a famous Author wrote of him above fifty " Years ago, That he was never aſhamed of the Goſpel " Truths, nor made an Oſtentation of the Practice " of it's Precepts." This is what we find in the fourth Factum of Janſenius's Great Nephews (1). Where we likewiſe find (2), " That, before he for- " ſook the World, and during his Reſidence at Court, " he dedicated his whole Genius for Poetry to the " Honour of his Saviour, and to the Deſign of giving " a Reliſh for the Chriſtian Truths; for he had not " as yet retired from the World, when he wrote " his Poem (3) on the Life of JESUS CHRIST, and " his Stanzas on the Nobleſt and moſt Edifying " Truths of Religion."

(1) At the 12th Page.

(2) At Page 18.

(3) See, below, the Remark [C], Citation (9).

[B] The

Digitized by Google

to another Person, to wit, Arnauld d'Andilli, as was at last fairly explained (c). But the Author of the Facta, or Cases, of Jansenius's Great-Nephews, made it appear by solid Reasons, that the second Application of the two A. A. was absurd [B]. Mr d'Andilli retired to the Monastery of Port-Royal in 1644, where he passed the Remainder of his Life in a continued Application to Works of Piety. He composed several Books there (d), which the Public received favourably, and which are so numerous, that they make eight Volumes in Folio (e). He died there on the 27th of September 1674, in the Eighty sixth Year of his Age (f).

He lost his Wife in the Year 1637. Balzac's Reflexion on this Loss is worth knowing [D].

(c) In the Answer of Father Hazir to the Case of the Great Nephews of Jansenius. See their IVth Factum, p 14.

(d) See the Catalogue of them, at the end of his Eloy, in the Journal des Scavans of September, 1675.

(e) Perrault, Illustrious Men, p 142. Edit of Holl.

(f) Moreri, pag. 346.

[B] The second Application of the two A. A. was absurd.] I shall not repeat all the Reasons alledged to prove this; I shall only remark, that it is observed, among other things, that he had been present in all the Expeditions, which King Lewis XIII made, both before, and after, the Time of the chimerical Cabal of Bourg-Fontaine (4), "to quell Those of his "Subjects, whom their false Religion had engaged "in Rebellion (5). These were Occasions, continue "they (6), of enflaming more and more his Zeal "for the Catholic Religion, by the Aversion, which "these kind of Wars inspire against Heresy; but it "was not the way to become a Divine, having "never studied Theology, as he could not have "done, to sustain the Part, which they make the "Authors of the Fable of Bourg-Fontaine act. He "knew as much of Religion, as a Man of great "Parts could learn of it, from his Catechism, from "pious Books, from the Conversation of holy Per-"sons, from reading the Word of God, and hearing "it preached; but the less he knew of what was "taught in the Schools, the more incapable was he "of raising Doubts concerning the Truth of our "Mysteries (7), having accustomed himself early to "captivate his Understanding to the Divine Autho-"rity, which is visibly lodged in the Church; "and sure never any Person was farther from cavil-"ling with God, or pretending, by his weak "and self-conceited Reason, to comprehend what "we ought to believe with Faith and Humility."

(4) In the Year 1621.

(5) IVth Factum, &c. pag. 18.

(6) Ibid.

(7) These Words are very remarkable, and confirm what many suspect, that there are no Persons less persuaded, than They, who employ the most Time in disputing and teaching in the Schools.

[C] He retired to the Monastery of Port-Royal.] Let us continue to quote the fourth Factum. "It "was to Port-Royal in the Fields, that he retired in "the Year 1644; whither his Nephews, the Ad-"vocate Mr le Maitre, and one of his Brothers, "who was a Soldier, had retired five or six Years "before, when there were yet no Religious "there; for it was not 'till the Year 1648, that "the House of Paris obtained leave of the Archbi-"shop to send Part of their Religious to their Coun-"try House." My Reader may choose between the Author of this Factum, and Mr Richelet (8), who says, that Mr Arnauld d'Andilli made his own House of Pompone his Retreat. I am satisfied with confronting these two Authorities; and pass on, with Pleasure, to cite what you are now going to read; because it contains some of Those Particulars, relating to the Lives of great Men, which so many are curious to know. "Arnauld d'Andilli ----- served the King "and the State twenty Years. As a Reward of his "Services, he had a Pension of Eight thousand "Livres settled on him, which were afterwards re-"duced to six; with this he retired to Pompone, a "Village seven or eight Leagues distant from Paris, "where, forsaking the Vanities of the World, and "leading a truly Christian Life, he composed se-"veral Works: His Letters, and a Poem on the Life "of Jesus Christ (9). ------ Josephus's Hi-"story of the Jews, the Works of St Thereса, and "Those of Davila, translated, are the Fruits of his "Solitude. ----- The best of his Translations is "That of Josephus (10). Some time after it had been "published, Richelet went, one Day, to see him at "Pompone; after some Discourse, the Conversation "fell on the manner of some Authors composing. "And, knowing that Richelet was particularly ac-"quainted with the famous D'Ablancourt, he asked "him, how many times That excellent Man re-"vised each Piece before he gave it the Publick: "Richelet replied six times; and I, replied Mr Ar-"nauld, revised the History of Josephus ten times; I "carefully corrected the Stile of it, and polished it "more than any of my other Works. Arnauld d'An-"dilli ----- in his Retirement, after seven or eight "Hours Study, every Day, used to divert himself "with the Pleasures of the Country, and, above all "others, with That of pruning his Trees. He had "generally so good Fruit, that, every Year, he sent "Presents of it to Queen Anne of Austria; and That "Princess was so well pleased with it, that every "Season she desired to have some." This Application to Gardening, and philosophizing profoundly on the Nature of Trees, is attested by Mr Perrault, in his Illustrious Men, pag. 143, Edition of Holland.

(8) See his Judgment of Mr Arnauld d'Andilli, at the beginning of the Collection of Letters, published at Amsterdam, in 1694.

(9) This is contrary to what has been said, above, in the Remark [A], Citation (3).

(10) The Critics find great Fault with it. See the Opinion of some Divines of Holland. I have heard say, that Mr le Moine was desired by the Friends of Mr d'Andilli, to mark the Places, which he thought the Translator might mistake, and that he declined, it for fear of remarking too many.

[D] Balzac's Reflexion on this Loss is worth knowing.] What he wrote concerning it is much for the Honour of our Robert Arnauld, and his Family. "The News of Madam d'Andilli's Death affected "me sensibly. I interest myself in all the good and "bad Success, of a Family which ought to be dear "to France, and which arose for the Honour of "the French Name. But I pity our Friend parti-"cularly, who, having never had any unlawful Pas-"sion, loses all his Mistresses and Pleasures, at "once, in his Wife. He is, nevertheless, so well "skilled in the Christian Doctrine, and has so many "learned Men of his Family about him, that he "needs no Stoic Philosophy, nor any foreign Assi-"stance, to defend himself against the Attacks of "Fortune. All Reason, all Preach, all Persuade, in "That Family, and One Arnauld is worth a Dozen "Epictetus's (11)."

(11) Balzac's Letters to Chapelain, Book 2, Lett. 19, dated 14 Aug. 1637, p. 82.

ARNAULD (Anthony) Doctor of the Sorbonne, Son of Anthony Arnauld the Advocate [A], was born at Paris, the sixth of February, 1612, being the twentieth Offspring of his Father's Marriage with Catherine Marion. He studied Humanity and Philosophy

[A] Son of Anthony Arnauld the Advocate.] This Descent is undoubtedly the Origin of the great Hatred of the Jesuits towards Mr Arnauld, and of Mr Arnauld towards the Jesuits. The Author of the Question Curieuse (1) does not absolutely deny this, since he speaks in this manner. (2): "Mr Arnauld was "born the sixth of February, in the Year 1612. His "Father was Mr Anthony Arnauld, so famous at the "Bar, and known in the History of the Jesuits, by "the famous Plea, which he made against them, for "the University of Paris, in 1594. ----- For the "Reason, which I have mentioned, Mr Arnauld was "born with a second Original Sin, which no Sacra-"ment could efface; and, the Crime of the Plea having "made the Father a Calvinist, and Minister of An-"tichrist, in the Minds of the Jesuits (3), though a "good Catholic, and a good Christian, every where "else, the Son, in their Opinion, must necessarily "be born a Child of Wrath, and be yet worse than "a Heretic, before he could be a Christian." One of the Protestant Authors, who wrote against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, believed, that Mr Arnauld's Aversion to the Jesuits proceeded from Education. These are his Words (4). "I have "formerly compared him to Hannibal, too obsti-"nately persecuted by the Romans (5). I cannot tell "whether I may not compare him to the same Han-"nibal,

(1) See, in the Margin of the Text of this Article, Cit. (b), what Book this is.

(2) Pag. 12.

(3) See Remark [D], of the Article Arnauld (Anthony) the Advocate

(4) New Letters against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, pag. 125.

(5) It is in the Vth Letter of the Critique Generale. Quand je me figure, &c. i. e. When I represent to myself this great Man, reduced to the hard Necessity of concealing himself, I recollect the famous Hannibal, and the last Words, which the unjust Persecutions of the Romans extorted from him. Liberemus diuturna cura populum Romanum, quando mortem senis expectare longum censent, &c. --- Let us free the Romans from a long Anxiety, since they wait with Impatience for the Death of an old Man, Livy, lib. XXXIX.

Digitized by Google

Philoſophy in the College of Calvi (a), and afterward began to ſtudy the Law; but he was ſoon taken from this Study, and turned to That of Divinity, by the Care of his Mother, ſeconded by the Abbot of St Cyran. After this Determination, he applied himſelf to ſtudy in the College of the Sorbonne (b), and went through a Treatiſe of Grace under Mr l'Eſcot: But, not finding This Profeſſor of the Sorbonne's Lectures conformable to the Doctrine of St Paul, he reſolved to ſtudy This Point in St Auſtin himſelf, and preferred This Father's Syſtem to That of Mr l'Eſcot. This he teſtified publickly in a Probation Theſis, which he maintained, in the Year 1636, in order to be admitted to his Degree of Bachelor (c). He employed an Interval of Two Years, which, according to the Laws of the Faculty at Paris, muſt paſs between the Probation, and the Licence, in hard Study; after which, he began the Acts of his Licence, about the Eaſter of the Year 1638, and continued them till Lent 1640. He went thro' the Act of Veſperies the eighteenth of December 1641, and, the Day following, received the Doctor's Cap. While he was a Licentiate, he compoſed, and publickly taught, A Courſe of Philoſophy (d). At the end of this Courſe of Philoſophy, which he taught at Paris, in the College of Mans, he cauſed Theſes to be maintained, wherein he gave a remarkable Inſtance of his Integrity, Docility, and Humility [B]. He was ordained Prieſt in the Ember Week of September, of the Year 1641, and celebrated his firſt Maſs on All Saints Day, of the ſame Year, after a Retirement of Forty Days——He had began his Licence, without any deſign of becoming a Member of the Sorbonne—— He would have been ſatisfied with enjoying the Rights of Hoſpitality, which gave him the liberty of lodging in the Houſe (e). But The principal Doctors preſſing him to think ſeriouſly of entring into it, and promiſing him, that, provided he would read a Courſe of Philoſophy, no notice ſhould be taken of the Circumſtance of Time, he undertook the Affair without any regard to the Obſtacles, which lay in his way, to wit, that, while he was performing the Acts of his Licence, the Time, in which the Statutes preſcribed that the Courſe of Philoſophy ſhould be gone thro', was elapſed——The two Years of this painful Work being ended, he petitioned the Houſe, that they would admit him to the Proof of his Courſe, and deliberate on the Honour he demanded of being received into That illuſtrious Body. Mr l'Eſcot found an Opportunity at this time of being revenged on him. As he had not taught his Penitent Cardinal Richelieu to forgive, He had himſelf learned of his Penitent never to forgive (f). He prevented Mr Arnauld's Admiſſion into the

(a) It ſubſiſts no Longer, the new Edifices of the Sorbonne being built on it's Ruins.

(b) In the Year 1633.

(c) This Theſis was dedicated to the Clergy of France, aſſembled, at that time, at Paris.

(d) Obſerve one thing, which the Author, whom I copy, does not diſtinguiſh; which is, that Mr Arnauld did not begin to teach this Courſe of Philoſophy, 'till the 2d Year of his Licence.

(e) He was admitted the 21ſt of October, 1636. Præfat. Cauſæ Arnald. pag. xxvi.

(f) He was Confeſſor to Cardinal Richelieu, and afterwards Biſhop of Chartres.

" nibal, promiſing his Father, in his tender Years, " that, as ſoon as he ſhould be of Age to bear Arms, " he would wage War againſt Thoſe mortal Enemies of his Country. It is well known, that Mr Arnauld is the Son of the famous Anthony Arnauld, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who pleaded ſo eloquently, for the Univerſity, againſt the Jeſuits, in the Year 1594, and who omitted nothing to perſuade the Judges, that they ought not to be tolerated in the Kingdom. This Action rendered him as odious to the whole Society, as the whole Society was to him, or more. It is very probable, that he inſpired the ſame Sentiments, with regard to the Jeſuits, into his Sons; it is very certain, at leaſt, that in this they have not degenerated from the Virtue of their Father."

[B] He gave a remarkable Inſtance of his Integrity, Docility, and Humility] " At the end of the " Courſe of Philoſophy, which he taught in the College of Mans, in the Univerſity of Paris, he made " ſeveral of his Scholars maintain Theſes: Among " whom, was the Sieur Barbey, ſince a famous Profeſſor of Philoſophy in the ſame Univerſity, and " Mr Wallon de Beaupuis, an Eccleſiaſtic of Beauvais, a Perſon of great Piety, who is ſtill alive, " and has delivered this Fact in Writing. This latter " maintaing his Theſis, on the Twenty fifth of July, " 1641, Mr de la Barde, a learned Prieſt of the Oratory, and at that Time Canon of the Cathedral " Church at Paris, took up the Diſpute, and preſſed " his Arguments ſo home, that the Profeſſor was " obliged to come in to the Aſſiſtance of his Scholar. " But he was himſelf ſo hard preſſed by the illuſtrious Diſputant, that he found himſelf unable to " Reply. It had been eaſy for him to have got off " by ſome Diſtinction or other, as Profeſſors often do. " But this did not agree with his Sincerity, and Love " of Truth. He told him, therefore, publickly, " and without Ceremony, that he believed him " to be in the right; that his Opinion appeared, " in His Judgment, to be the moſt true, and that " he himſelf would follow it for the future. He " was as good as his Word; for, about three Years " after, This ſame Diſciple being to perform his Probation-Lecture in the Sorbonne, for his Degree of " Bachelor, he deſired Mr Arnauld to compoſe his " Theſis for him. He did ſo, and laid down the " contrary Opinion to That in his own Philoſophi- " cal Theſes (6)." An eſſential Part is wanting in This Narrative. We are not told what Opinion Mr Arnauld had maintained, when he confeſſed his Error, upon the ſtrong Objections of his Opponent. Let us ſupply this, and ſay, that the Theſis, which Mr de la Barde attacked, was this: Ens ſynonymè convenit Deo & creaturæ (7). The Author of the Narrative judges right, when he ſays, that this Action of Mr Arnauld was Great before God, and Rare among Men, and that That, which proceeds from Integrity of Heart, from a conſtant and uniform Love of Truth, from a Greatneſs of Soul, which is above the Deſire of Victory, and the Fear of leſſening a Reputation, - - - - - is always great (8). But he ſeems to me to treat the Solutions, which may be given of Their Arguments, who maintain, that the Idea of Being is not applicable, ſynonymouſly, to God and his Creatures, with a little too much Diſdain. I formerly examined this Diſpute, which is very famous in the Schools, and was of Opinion, that They, who deny the Univocation of Being, have the Crowd, the Many, on their Side;

(6) Abridged Hiſtory of Mr Arnauld, pag. 46.

(7) Præfat. Cauſæ Arnaldinæ, pag. xviii.

(8) Abridged Hiſtory of Mr Arnauld, pag. 47.

- - - - - - - - - illos
Defendit numerus, junctæque umbone phalanges (9);

(9) Juven. Sat. 2, ver. 45.

but not the moſt ſolid Reaſons; wherefore I choſe the Opinion, which they oppoſe. I have maintained it often in public Diſputations, but never found, that any Objection of Difficulty was propoſed to me. My Adverſary preſently flew to the common Objection, that God is a Being κατ' ἐξόχην, a ſelf-exiſtent Being, Infinite, and ſupremely Perfect; whereas the Being of Creatures is only precarious. I found no manner of Difficulty in this Objection; for the very Rudiments of the Doctrine of Univerſals inſtruct us, that the Ideas of the Genus are entirely diſtinguiſhed from the Specific Properties, by an Abſtraction of the Mind. But had I known, that Mr Arnauld, having once been of this Opinion, had renounced it in Diſputation, I ſhould have ſuſpected, that there were ſome Difficulties in it, which I had not met with in any of the Spaniſh School-men, whom I had examined. Let us remember, that it has been obſerved, that he was not neceſſitated to alter his Opinion. This imports

Digitized by Google

the Society of the Sorbonne [C]. He had not the ſame Credit after the Death of the Cardinal: But, if he had the mortification to ſee this young Doctor admitted into That Society, in the Year 1643, He did not fail to promote his Excluſion, when an Opportunity offered. The Book concerning Frequent Communion, publiſhed by Mr Arnauld in 1643, greatly diſpleaſed the Jeſuits. They repreſented it, both in their Sermons, and in printed Books, as fraught with the moſt pernicious Doctrines. The Controverſy about Grace, which grew warm at that time in the Univerſity of Paris, ſerved only to foment the Animoſities between the Jeſuits and Mr Arnauld. This Doctor ſtrongly defended Janſenius, both by refuting the three Sermons of Mr Habert, and the Apology of this Preacher for them, and by replying to Mr le Moine, Profeſſor of the Sorbonne (g), and ſome others. There was no room for a Judicial Cenſure, till he publiſhed Two Letters on an Adventure of the Duke de Liancour, a great Friend of the Port-Royal [D]. Two Propoſitions were found in the ſecond of theſe Letters, which the Faculty of Divinity condemned in the Year 1656. Mr Arnauld was at the ſame time declared excluded from the Faculty. There were many Irregularities in the Proceedings againſt him [E]. He had not appeared publickly for ſeveral Years before; for, from the time that he had been cited to Rome, on occaſion of the Diſputes about his Book concerning Frequent Communion, the Queen-Mother being with difficulty prevailed on to revoke the Orders ſhe had given him to depart immediately, he paſſed his Time, either abſconding here and there, or in Solitude at Port-Royal. This retired Life continued near twenty five Years, till the Peace of Janſeniſm, concluded in 1668. Mr Arnauld was included in This Peace; and, accordingly, went to pay his Duty to the King, and the Nuncio, and appeared as much as he pleaſed in Public, till 1679, when he voluntarily quitted the Kingdom, being informed, that his Enemies rendered him ſuſpected to the King (b). It is not doubted, but he has lived ever ſince in the Low-Countries; tho' he has diſcovered himſelf but to a very few of his truſty Friends. He was put to Trouble at Liege in the Year 1690 [F]. The Reflexion, which was made on This Enterprize, deſerves

(g) The Title of this Refutation is, An Apology for the Holy Fathers of the Church, Defenders of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.

(b) Taken from a Book, printed in 1690, and entituled, Queſtion curieuſe ſi Mr Arnauld Docteur de Sorbonne eſt heretique. --- A curious Enquiry, whether Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, be an Heretic; or from a Book, which is a ſecond Edition of this, much augmented, and publiſhed in 1695, with the Title of Hiſtoire Abregé de la vie & des Ouvrages de Mr Arnauld. --- An abridged Hiſtory of the Life and Writings of Mr Arnauld. See alſo the Preface to the Cauſa Arnaldina. --- Mr Arnald's Caſe.

ports, that he did not find his firſt Tenet indefenſible; but only, that the Analogy of Being ſeemed to him a better Doctrine, than the Univocation. Erudito diſcipulo ſub validiſſimorum argumentorum mole fatiſcente (10), ſuppetias venit Magiſter, diuque conflictatus, non cedendi neceſſitate coactus, ſed veritate & veritatis amore victus, victum ſe ultrò profeſſus eſt, & à ſententia ſua diſceſſurum publice ſpopondit. Promiſſis ſtetit, &c. (11).

(10) Obſerve, that, in France, they, who preſide in a Diſpute, do not ſpeak, 'till their Diſciple has done. In other Countries, they ſpeak inceſſantly, and ſcarce allow him time to repeat the Argument.

(11) Præfat. Cauſæ Arnald. pag. xix.

[C] Mr l'Eſcot prevented Mr Arnauld's Admiſſion into the Society of the Sorbonne.] There were but two Doctors, who oppoſed Mr Arnauld's Requeſt: "They alledged Statutes, and Cuſtom, which required, that the Courſe ſhould be performed before the Licence. And, as to this Difference, which was to be decided by a Plurality of Voices, they were of Opinion, that Cardinal Richelieu, Patron of the Sorbonne, ſhould be appealed to, as Judge of what was againſt the Laws and Liberty of the Houſe; and it would have been a Crime, at that Time, to have refuſed ſuch a Judge. Monſ. Hardiviliers, Archbiſhop of Bourges, and Mr Habert, Doctor of Divinity, of the Church of Paris, were deputed to him (12). —— The Cardinal did not judge it proper, that the Society ſhould do any thing againſt their Statutes and Cuſtoms. But it was not ſo much a Zeal for the Orders and Rules of the Houſe, which made him act in this manner, as the Knowledge he had of the ſtrict Union between Mr Arnauld, and Mr de St Cyran; as Reſentment, becauſe Mr Arnauld had not ſought his Protection, during his Licence; and, laſtly, as the Influence, which Mr l'Eſcot had on his Penitent, the Cardinal. For This Doctor was One of the Two Oppoſers, and, as I have obſerved, had conceived a ſtrong Prejudice againſt Mr Arnauld, from a meer Spirit of Jealouſy, and Revenge. It was certainly more honourable for Mr Arnauld to be excluded the Society in this manner, than received into it, as moſt others are. He was, however, admitted after the Cardinal's Death; the Sorbonne, as well as other Societies, having, then, recovered it's Liberty (13)." Mr l'Eſcot, "made himſelf amends ſome time after, by getting him excluded both the Houſe, and Faculty, by the Cenſure of 1656, of which He was the Promoter, together with Mr le Moine, who ſucceeded him, both in his Chair, and his Opinions (14).

(12) Abridged Hiſtory of Mr Arnauld, pag. 50.

(13) Ibid. pag. 51, 52.

(14) Ibid. pag. 33.

[D] He publiſhed two Letters on an Adventure of the Duke de Liancour, a great Friend of the Port-Royal.] This Duke ſent his Grand-Daughter to be educated at Port-Royal, and kept the Abbot de Bourzeys in his Houſe. In the Year 1655, he came to Confeſſion to a Prieſt of St Sulpice, his own Pariſh, who declared, "that he could not give him Abſolution, unleſs he promiſed to break off all Commerce with Thoſe Gentlemen, to withdraw his Grand-Daughter from the Port-Royal, and diſmiſs The Abbot. —— This Affair making a great Noiſe at Paris, and all over France, Mr Arnauld was deſired to publiſh a Letter, in Juſtification of this Lord. —— A great Number of Anſwers being publiſhed to this Letter, Mr Arnauld thought himſelf obliged to refute the Calumnies, with which they were filled, by publiſhing a ſecond Letter, in which he anſwered nine of thoſe Pieces (15)."

(15) Queſtion curieuſe, pag. 58, 59.

[E] There were many Irregularities in the Proceedings againſt him.] "Commiſſioners were appointed in Mr Arnauld's Cauſe, who were his declared Enemies, againſt whom he had written on theſe Subjects, and who were known by every one to have been the moſt zealous for his Ruin; and all the Repreſentations he could make thereupon ſignified nothing (16). All the Doctors of the Community of St Sulpice, againſt whom Mr Arnauld's Letter was written, were ſo unjuſt as to continue his Judges, notwithſtanding his Exceptions; whereas they wanted only a little Honour to have made them voluntarily decline it, as good Men do even in Lay-Tribunals (17)." You will find ſeveral other Irregularities, Innovations, Contraventions to the Order, always obſerved on theſe Occaſions, and Violations of Natural Right, in the Proceſt of Mr Arnauld againſt the Faculty (18).

(16) Ibid. pag. 69, 70.

(17) This Expreſſion will be a Jeſt to ſome Perſons, who think, that Civil Tribunals can be compared with Eccleſiaſtic, only as God with Worſe.

The Book, which was printed at Leige in the Year 1699, under the Title of Cauſa Arnaldina, may ſerve as a compleat Account of the Proceedings of the Divines of Paris, and the Subſtance of the Doctrines, which they cenſured. Several Pieces are collected in This Work, which Mr Arnauld, and his Party, publiſhed at that Time, to ſupport the Juſtice of his Cauſe.

(18) At Page 71 of the Queſtion curieuſe. See in the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, for June, 1686, Art. III. what Mr de Launoi thought of this Cenſure of the Sorbonne.

[F] He was put to Trouble at Leige in the Year 1690.] Six Superiors aſſembled to iſſue out Canonical Warrants againſt him. Theſe were the Guardian of the Franciſcans, the Guardian of the White-Friars, the Sub-Prior Vicar of the Auguſtins, the Rector of the Jeſuits, the Vicar of the Dominicans, and the Prior of the Jacobins. They ſtiled him One Arnauld; but, with ſubmiſſion, This did no Honour to their Communities; It was either an Ignorance unpardonable in Men of Letters, or an Affectation of Contempt unbecoming Perſons, who are

A Reflexion on Mr Arnauld's being contemptuouſly ſtiled One Arnauld.

Digitized by Google

deſerves the Conſideration of Thoſe, who govern (i). He continued his Exploits of the Pen againſt the Jeſuits with great force to his Death, as he did for ſome time againſt Thoſe of the Reformed Religion; but a Miniſter, who was the moſt expoſed to his Attacks, had recourſe to a Stratagem, in the Year 1683, which put a ſtop to his Incurſions on the Proteſtant Party. I mean the Author of the ESPRIT DE MR ARNAULD [G]. We might give a long Liſt of Falſhoods in point of Fact relating to This Doctor; but we ſhall content our ſelves with mentioning a Few of them. It has been pretended, that he was born an Huguenot (k). He has been

(i) See Remark [A], of the Article BOSSU (JAMES).

(k) See Remark [D], of the Article ARNAULD (ANTHONY) the Advocate.

are dedicated to the Service of the Altar, and who make Decrees concerning the Faith. No Man of Letters can ſay, without expoſing himſelf to the Laughter of the Learned, One Scaliger, One Sirmond, One Petavius, One Salmaſius, One Grotius, One Selden, and (if the Queſtion be about a Doctor of the Sorbonne) One Arnauld. The Diſputes, in which this latter was engaged, have made ſo much Noiſe, and are remarkable for ſo many great Exploits on both ſides, that all Men of Letters, who ſhould but think themſelves ſuſpected of being ignorant of them, would have reaſon to oppoſe the four following Lines of Virgil to Suſpicions ſo injurious.

Quis genus Æneadum, quis Trojæ neſciat urbem,
Virtuteſque, viroſque, aut tanti incendia belli?
Non obtuſa adeo geſtamus pectora Pæni,
Nec tam averſus equos Tyria ſol jungit ab urbe (19).

(19) Æneid. lib. 1, ver. 569.

Who has not heard —— ——
The Name and Fortune of your Native Place,
The Fame and Valour of the Phrygian Race?
We Tyrians are not ſo devoid of Senſe,
Nor ſo remote from Phœbus' Influence.

DRYDEN.

Be this as it will, I cannot forbear producing here the Decree of the ſix Regulars of Leige (20); the Latinity of it is ſo exquiſite, that it may ſerve to unbend my Reader a little. "Nos infra ſcripti Superiores Conventuales Regularium in Civitate Leodienſi, certiorati de Conventiculis, quæ habentur apud CERTUM ARNOLDUM, doctrinam ſuſpectam ſpargentem, cenſemus D. Vicarium charitativè certiorandum, ut ſimilia Conventicula diſſipare, & prohibere non dignetur, etiam cum dicto Arnoldo converſationes. Datum in Conventu Minorum hac 25. Auguſti 1690. Ad quem effectum commiſimus R. P. M. Ludovicum Lamet, Priorem Dominicanorum, ad nomine noſtro accedendum D. Vicarium, & exponendum intentionem noſtrum. —— We, the underwritten Conventual Superiors of Regulars in the City of Leige, being certified of Meetings held at ONE ARNAULD's, a Spreader of ſuſpected Doctrine, are of Opinion, that the Vicar be charitably certified, that he would condeſcend to diſperſe and prohibit ſuch Meetings, and even all Converſation with the ſaid Arnauld. Given at a Meeting of the Minors this Twenty fifth of Auguſt 1690. To which effect we have commiſſioned Father Lewis Lamet, Prior of the Dominicans, to go, in our Name, to the Vicar, and declare to him our Intention." The Author of the Queſtion Curieuſe ſays indeed, that Father d'Iſerin had boaſted of having a Commiſſion, or Permiſſion, from his Highneſs the Biſhop of Leige, to cauſe Mr Arnauld to be arreſted wherever he ſhould find him in his Dioceſs (21); but he treats it as an egregious Lye (22).

(20) This Story is told at the 128th Page of the Queſtion curieuſe.

(21) Ibid. pag. 198.

(22) Ibid. pag. 200.

[G] I mean the Author of the ESPRIT DE MR ARNAULD.] An hundred things may be ſaid of This Work; but, as it is probable, I ſhall have other Occaſions of mentioning it, I ſhall confine myſelf here to a very few Obſervations. The Author of This Book had publiſhed a Work, which met with great Succeſs. They, who had the Care of the Impreſſion, at the Hague, entituled it, The Politics of the Clergy of France. They are Dialogues, in which there is a great deal of Beauty and Politeneſs, but little Solidity of Argument, and very little Caution in the vending of ſeveral Facts, which are notoriouſly falſe. Monſ. Arnauld refuted this Book (23) in a little too contemptuous a way, and in a manner ſo much the more diſobliging, as he manifeſtly convicted his Adverſary of having argued very weakly, and publiſhed ſeveral Untruths. He began with another Book of the ſame Author (24); and ſeemed inclined to reply to the Apology for the Morality of the Reformed concerning the Inamiſſibility * of Grace: In a Word, the Author of the Politics of the Clergy fore-ſaw, that he was like to have ſuch an Adverſary in Mr Arnauld, as would never allow him any Reſpite, nor ever paſs by a Contradiction, a falſe Reaſoning, or falſe Matter of Fact. This by no means agreed with one, who was determined to publiſh a great many Books, and who ſeldom gave himſelf the Trouble of reviſing what he had once written. He gave himſelf up to the Fire of his Imagination; and This was an inexhauſtible Fund to him of falſe Logic, and groſs Contradictions. He conſidered with himſelf, in what manner he might beſt prevent Mr Arnauld from ſticking thus in his Skirts, and judged, that none could be more effectual, than to attack him perſonally; I mean, to impute all manner of perſonal ill Qualities to him. He executed this Deſign with all imaginable Paſſion, and, being in the full Carreer of Scandal, he ſtuck at nothing; he caſt about to the Right and Left, to find ſtill more ſubject for Satire; ſo that we may apply to him, in regard to Slander, what was ſaid of Voiture, in reſpect to Love; he extended it from the Scepter to the Sheephook, from the Crown to the woolen Cap. Mr Arnauld, not thinking proper to engage with a Perſon, who fought with ſuch Weapons, reſolved to be abſolutely ſilent in relation to the Reformed; and thus, what the whole Society of the Jeſuits could not compaſs, one ſingle Miniſter contrived, and executed ſucceſsfully; I mean the Secret of ſilencing This Doctor. This was not the only Advantage, which the Author of the Eſprit de Mr Arnauld drew from his Satire; he ſtruck ſuch a terror into an hundred other Authors, who would have attacked him, and into ſeveral other Perſons, to whom he was not the moſt agreeable, that they were afraid of drawing his Indignation upon them. This ought not to ſurprize us; for, in ſhort, there are few Families, which may not be reproached with ſome Adventure (25), or who have not ſome Enemies malicious enough to publiſh ſome ſcandalous Story or other, eſpecially if they can privately get it printed. The Eſprit de Mr Arnauld ſeems to promiſe Publication to every little ſcandalous Story, which may be ſent by the Poſt; whether it concerns a private Perſon, as Father Soulier, or a public Miniſter, as the late Mr Colbert.

(23) In an Apology for the Catholics, printed in 1682.

(24) Entituled, A Preſervative againſt a Change of Religion.

* Impoſſibility of lying.

(25) The Spaniards have a Proverb; No ay generacion, do no aya puta ô ladron.

A young Janſeniſt, conſidering the Effect of this Satire, compared Mr Arnauld to the ancient City of Troy, which the braveſt Warriors, and a thouſand Ships, could not conquer; but which fell by the Artifice of a Deſerter, and a wooden Horſe.

Talibus inſidiis, perjurique arte Sinonis,
Credita res, captique dolis - - - - -
Quos neque Tydides, nec Lariſſæus Achilles,
Non anni domuere decem, non mille carinæ (26).

With ſuch Deceits he gain'd their eaſy Hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious Arts.
What Diomede, nor Thetis' greater Son,
A thouſand Ships, nor ten Years Siege had done,
Falſe Tears, and fawning Words, the City won.

DRYDEN.

(26) Virgil. Æn. lib. 2, ver. 195.

(27) Hue delecta virum ſortiri corpora furtim
Includunt cæco lateri, penituſque cavernas
Ingentes, uterumque armato milite complent. Id. ibid. ver. 18.

" It is true, added he, this Compariſon will not " hold in all Points; for the Eſprit de Mr Arnauld " does not reſemble the wooden Horſe, which had " the chief Captains of the Army in it's Belly (27); " but rather Thoſe Ships, which, by Hannibal's Ad- " vice, were provided with earthen Pots, filled with " Serpents."

Digitized by Google

been reckoned One of the Cabal of Bourg-Fontaine [H]. He has been made to go to Nocturnal Witch-Meetings [I]: He has been sent to command the Troops of the Vaudois [K]: He has been advanced to the Poſt of Squire to the Goliah Peter Juricu

" Serpents." See Cornelius Nepos in the Life of That Carthaginian General.

[H] He has been reckoned one of the Cabal of Bourg Fontaine.] Du Pleix's Calumnies, with regard to the Father, are nothing in compariſon of the Falſhood, which Mr Filleau, the King's Advocate in the Preſidial Court of Poictiers, publiſhed concerning the Son, in the Year 1654; for there is no doubt, that he reckoned Mr Arnauld in the Number of the ſeven Doctors of the Aſſembly of Bourg-Fontaine (28). The Caſe, in ſhort, was this: Mr Filleau, publiſhing a Judicial Relation, in the Year 1654, of what had paſſed at Poictiers, on occaſion of the new Doctrine of Janſenius, declared, that an Eccleſiaſtic had aſſured him, that, in a Conference, which ſeven Perſons had held at Bourg-Fontaine, in the Year 1621; They had conſulted about the Means to aboliſh Chriſtianity; that This Eccleſiaſtic had himſelf been one of the ſeven; that, ſome time after, he broke with the other ſix, only one of whom was then living, and whoſe Names were (J. D. V. D. H.) (C. J.) (P. C.) (P. C.) (A. A.) (S. V.) By certain Circumſtances, attending this Narrative, and by the Character of certain Books, which we are given to underſtand were publiſhed purely in execution of the Engagements entered into at Bourg-Fontaine, every one believed, that the Letters of the firſt Name denoted John du Verger de Hauranne, Abbot of St Cyran; Thoſe of the ſecond Cornelius Janſenius, Biſhop of Ypres; thoſe of the third Philip Coſpian, Doctor of the Sorbonne, Biſhop of Nantes, and ſince of Liſieux; thoſe of the fourth Peter Camus, Biſhop of Belley; thoſe of the fifth Anthony Arnauld, the Subject of this Article; and thoſe of the ſixth Simon Vigor, Counſellor in the Great Council. Mr Filleau affirms, " That it was reſolved, in this Aſſembly, to attack the two Sacraments, which are the moſt frequented by Adults, " to wit, Thoſe of Penance, and the Euchariſt; " and the Means, propoſed for attaining this end, " was, to introduce a diſuſe of them; not by diſcovering any direct Deſign of making them leſs " frequented, but by rendering the Practice of them " ſo difficult, and clogged with Circumſtances ſo " incompatible with the Condition of the Men of " Thoſe Times, that they ſhould remain in a manner " inacceſſible, and that, by this diſuſe of them, " founded on ſuch plauſible Appearances, All Belief " in them would by degrees be loſt." The Public thought, that This was pointed at Mr Arnauld, becauſe of his Book of Frequent Communion, and that therefore Mr Filleau certainly meant him, by the fifth of thoſe dangerous Conſpirators againſt the Chriſtian Religion, marked (A. A.) (29).

As we are not concerned, in this Place, to examine into the Truth, or Falſhood, of this Conſpiracy, I ſhall content myſelf with ſaying, that Mr Arnauld looked upon this as one of the higheſt Exceſſes of Calumny, that had ever been known, and that; in particular, he perfectly cleared himſelf from the Accuſation of being found in the Conference of Theſe Deiſts (30). For he made it appear, that, having been born in 1612, he could be but nine Years of Age, when it was pretended, that this Conference was held. This Juſtification is ſo ſtrong, that not only the Silence of the Accuſer, but even the formal Confeſſion of one of the Accuſer's Friends, made it appear, that nothing could be replied to it. On the other ſide, Father Meynier, pretending, that Mr Filleau's Account of the Conference of Bourg Fontaine contained nothing but what was very certain, confeſſes, " that Mr Arnauld had given " convincing Proofs, that he was not of this Aſ" ſembly; but, adds he, he is deceived, in believing, " that Anthony Arnauld is the Perſon meant by the " Letters A. A. I aſſure him, in behalf of the Au" thor of the Judicial Relation, that Thoſe Letters " denote Another, who is yet living, and is too " good a Friend of Mr Arnauld's to be unknown " to him (31)." Mr Paſcal, who was then writing the Provincial Letters, preſſed the Jeſuits to name the private Betrayer of the Conference, the ſix Doctors, who had aſſiſted at it, and particularly the Perſon denoted by the Letters A. A. and who, tho' not Mr Arnauld himſelf, was too intimate a Friend of his to be unknown to him. But theſe Challenges were diſregarded; and it is but a few Years ſince, that a very famous Jeſuit of Antwerp declared to the Public, that This Friend of Mr Arnauld was his own Brother Arnauld d'Andilli (32). This has been already confuted. See the Remark [B] of the Article ARNAULD d'ANDILLI.

[I] He has been made to go to Nocturnal Witch-Meetings.] I cannot tell in which of the two Aſſemblies Mr Arnauld would rather have been preſent, That of Bourg-Fontaine, or That, which the late Mr Maupas, Biſhop of Evreux, has ſomewhere ſpoken of. " It is certain, that he affirmed to ſeve" ral Perſons, that he had been informed by a con" verted Wizard, that he had ſeen Mr Arnauld, " and a certain Princeſs of the Blood (33), at " Nocturnal Witch-Meetings, and that Mr Arnauld " had made a very fine Speech to the Devils (34)." If he muſt have a choſen between theſe two Extreams, and if the Speech might have tended only to excite the Devils to ſome Amendment of Life, I make no doubt, but the Doctor would much rather have harangued in this Meeting, than have given his Opinion in the Charter-houſe of Bourg-Fontaine, for the Aboliſhment of Chriſtianity, and the Propagation of Deiſm.

It were to abuſe the Patience of my Readers to expoſe the ridiculouſneſs of this Tale, which this Prelate related to ſeveral Perſons; it is one of Thoſe Falſhoods, which Mr Arnauld thinks no one ought ever to give himſelf the Trouble of confuting. Theſe are his Words (35): " The Intereſt of Honour may " be conſidered two Ways; either with regard to " the Calumny itſelf, which poſſibly may be very " heinous, of with regard to Thoſe, who, being " once prepoſſeſſed with it, may afterwards have a " very ill Opinion of the Perſon calumniated. It " is properly the latter Conſideration, which obliges " a Man to defend himſelf; for, how enormous ſo" ever it be in itſelf, it may ſafely enough be ſlight" ed, if it is of ſuch a Nature, that no ſober Perſon " will give Credit to it. As for Example; what the " late Mr de Maupas, Biſhop of Evreux, had for" merly ſaid, that he was told, by a converted Wi" zard, that Mr Arnauld had been at their Noctur" nal Meetings, and that the Devils had admired the " Speech he made to them, was in itſelf an horrible " Calumny; in the mean time, if any impertinent " Fellow had inſerted this in a Libel, would any one " have the Doctor give himſelf the trouble of con" futing it; and, in default of this, would there be " any Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that it was the Impoſſi" bility of anſwering it, which forced him to be ſilent, " and that he had, in Effect, confeſſed it?"

[K] He has been ſent to command the Troops of the Vaudois.] This Falſhood has little more of Probability in it, than the former. There have been, of late, Manuſcripts, which poſitively affirm, that the Arnauld, who is at the Head of the Vaudois, is Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, who has at laſt declared himſelf, and does Wonders in Savoy, at the Head of the Troops of That Party (36). It would be a very ſurprizing Metamorphoſis, if, at the Age of Seventy eight Years, a Doctor of the Sorbonne, who has employed his whole Life in Study, and who has wrote ſo much againſt the Proteſtant Clergy, ſhould himſelf become a Miniſter militant, and exchange his Pen for a Sword, and a brown Musket, endeavouring to make Arnauld's Carabineers ſtill more talked of, than Thoſe of One of his Uncles, very well known to the Rochellers, under the Reign of Lewis XIII (37). The late Biſhop of Leige was told, at his own Table, That Mr Arnauld had abjured the Catholic Faith at Boiſleduc, and that he was married there (38). The greateſt part of Thoſe, who are called Zealots, fear nothing more than the Orthodoxy of Thoſe, whom they accuſe. They do not imitate God, who deſires not the Death of a Sinner, but that he may be converted, and live. They would have the Perſon, they have once accuſed, apoſtatize in good earneſt; and are angry, that he does not go over to the Enemies Party, to make their Accuſations good. They would much rather

(28) A Charter-Houſe, within 16 or 17 Leagues of Paris.

(29) The IVth Factum for the Relations of Janſenius, pag. 11, and 12, ſhews, that he was the Perſon deſigned in the Judicial Relation.

(30) In his Letter to a Duke and Peer, in 1655. See alſo the firſt Part of the IVth Factum for the Relations of Janſenius.

(31) Father Meynier, in the Book, entituled, Le Port-Royal & Geneve d'intelligence contre le St. Sacrement de l'Autel. printed at Poitiers, in 1656.

(32) Father Hazart, in his Anſwer to the Factum for the Relations of Janſenius. See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, 1688, and the 2d Part of the IVth Factum for the Relations of Janſenius.

(33) Probably the late Ducheſs of Longueville.

(34) Fourth Factum, above mentioned.

(35) See Tom. III, de la Morale Pratique, cap. XI, pag. 257.

(36) Queſtion curieuſe, pag. 4.

(37) See the Memoirs of the Sieur de Pontis.

(38) Troiſéme Plainte de Mr Arnauld, p. 8.

Digitized by Google

Jurieu [L]. It has been ſaid, that he was baniſhed from France [M]; and that He wrote the Apology for the Catholics only to recover his Benefice [N]. Several Books rather another ſhould damn himſelf, than that themſelves ſhould paſs for notorious Calumniators. See what a Modern Author ſays upon this (39).

(39) General Criticiſm on Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, pag. 584, ſecond Edition.

[L] He has been advanced to the Poſt of Squire to the Goliah Peter Jurieu.] They, who place Mr Arnauld at the Head of the Vaudois, certainly affront him leſs, than They, who repreſent him as Squire to the Goliah Jurieu. This the Biſhop of Malaga did, in his Catholic Complaint, by applying, as well as he could, to theſe two famous Writers, a Thought of St Bernard, in relation to Peter Abelard, and Arnauld of Breſſe (40); which gives him an opportunity of drawing this Concluſion: "Iſti qui modo ſurrexe-"runt, novus Golias, & ejus armiger, PETRUS "ſcilicet, & ARNALDUS, facili negotio exter-"minabuntur. — They, who have lately ariſen, The new "Goliah, and his Armour-Bearer, to wit, PETER, and "ARNAULD, will be eaſily exterminated." The Public has ſeen the Letter, which Mr Arnauld wrote to This Prelate, wherein he tells him, that his Highneſs (41) muſt needs have been ſtrangely impoſed upon, to be told "that Dr Arnauld was Squire to Mr Jurieu, "the Goliah of the Proteſtants againſt the Catholic "Party; for, continues he, if your Highneſs had "known This Arnauld, you could not have been "capable of ſo great an Error in Judgment, as to "take Two of the moſt declared Enemies in the "World to be of the ſame Party, and to miſtake "Him, who has zealouſly ſupported the Cauſe of the "Church againſt That Miniſter, for his Aſſociate and "Confident in the cruel War, which he wages a-"gainſt the Church." It is certain, that the two Authors, who have been taken, the one for a Goliah, and the other for his Squire, are both ſo far from being ſuch, that it is not more falſe, that Mr Arnauld aſſiſted at the Conference of Bourg-Fontaine, or at the Nocturnal Meetings of the Wizards, or at the Irruptions of the Vaudois, than that he is the Squire of the Goliah Peter Jurieu. Nothing, then, can be more cold, or more remote from Truth, than the Alluſions borrowed from the Paſſage of St Bernard.

(40) Father Maimbourg has play'd upon the ſame equivocal Name of Arnauld of Breſſe, in his Decad. di l'Empire; and Theoph. Raynauld has wrote a Book, entituled, Arnaldus de Brixia redivivus in Arnaldo de Lutetia. — i. e. Arnauld of Breſſe revived in Arnauld of Paris.

(41) This Title was given him, becauſe he was a Natural Son of Philip IV of Spain.

This is what the pretended Goliah has reproached the Author of the Catholic Complaint with, no leſs than the pretended Squire. "If This Biſhop, ſays he "(42), had been of a diſcerning Taſte, his violent "Invectives would not have turned upon the ſilly "Alluſion to the Names of Arnauld of Breſſe, and "Peter Abelard; meaning, that Monſieur Arnauld "is the Succeſſor of Arnauld of Breſſe, and the Mi-"niſter Peter Jurieu of Peter Abelard. He would "not have called That Miniſter the Goliah-Enemy of "the Church, and Arnauld his Squire. That Ar-"nauld and This Miniſter are too much at variance, "to conſpire together: Beſides, Mr Arnauld is of a "fitter Age, Size, and Strength, to be the Goliah, "than the Squire. This He alſo pretends to, and no "one will diſpute the Honour of it with him."

(42) Religion of the Jeſuits, p. 59.

I muſt here note a ſmall Defect of Memory in Mr Arnauld. He complains (43), that, after the weak Compariſon of Arnauld of Breſſe with Arnauld of Paris, and of Peter Abelard with Peter Jurieu, they make the Biſhop of Malaga ſay, that This Doctor was the Goliah of the Party, and the Miniſter his Squire. We have ſeen, that he has been made to ſay quite the contrary.

(43) Morale Pratique, Tom. 3. pag. 773.

[M] It has been ſaid, that he was baniſhed France.] A Doctor of the Sorbonne (44), a Savoyard by Nation, maintained, in a Book intituled Reaſonable Prejudices againſt Janſeniſm, printed at Geneva in 1686 (45), that Mr Arnauld had been baniſhed France by the King's Order. The following Words, in the Advertiſement to the Reader, import this; I thought I could not ſpeak the whole Truth, without blaming the Conduct of this old Puritan, WHO, BY THE JUSTICE OF THE MOST CHRISTIAN KING, IS A FUGITIVE in Holland. It is, nevertheleſs, certain, that he voluntarily quitted the Kingdom; and it cannot be doubted, after the Letters, which he wrote, in 1679, to the Chancellor, Mr le Tellier, and to the Archbiſhop of Paris, printed in the firſt Volume of the Eſprit de Mr Arnauld, in the Year 1684. So that it is ſtrange, that, two Years after, the Abbot de Ville ſhould be ignorant of a Truth, expoſed to public View, in a Satire, for which there has been ſo great a Demand. But it is yet more ſtrange, that, in the Year 1690, Mr Arnauld ſhould be obliged to get Theſe two Letters printed, in order to confute Thoſe, who publiſhed every where, that he was a Rebel to his King, and that he had been baniſhed France, as a turbulent Fellow (46). I believe the Author of the Eſprit has reported a no leſs Falſhood, in maintaining, That he was expelled Flanders. Tho' this good Man, continues he (47), thinks his Adventures are unknown, yet we have certain Intelligence, that he was expelled the Netherlands by order of The Governour. The Term Chaſſer, which the Author of the General Criticiſm on Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm makes uſe of, is a little equivocal. They have reported, ſays he (48), that Mr Arnauld's Houſe was a Rendezvous of diſcontented Perſons; that cabalཀ ling and factious Conferences were held there, that they prepared Memoirs there for the Court of Rome; in a word, they have gained their Point, which was to expel him * with the reſt of the Cabal. This means no more, than that they procured certain Orders to be ſent to Mr Arnauld, which were the cauſe that he made choice of a Retreat in a foreign Country.

(44) He is called Abbé de Ville. See Nouvell. de la Repub. des Lettres, for July 1686. Art. 8.

(45) The Title imports, that it was at Cologne, by Abraham du Mois.

(46) Queſt. Curieuſe, pag. 212.

(47) Eſprit de Mr Arnauld, Tom. I. pag. 38.

(48) Letter V.

* le CHASSER.

[N] He is ſaid to have wrote an Apology for the Catholics, only to recover his Benefice.] Mr Jurieu was groſsly miſtaken, when he ſaid, that Mr Arnauld had wrote the Apology for the Catholics, in hopes of being reſtored to his native Country, that he might peaceably enjoy his Eſtate, and Benefices (49), and that the fear of having his Benefices confiſcated engaged him in ſome falſe Steps. This could not be better refuted by a Geometrical Demonſtration, than by the public Declaration, which Mr Arnauld made, that he never had a Benefice; for it can never enter into the Mind of a reaſonable Man, that a Doctor ſo jealous of his Reputation, as he is, and who could not expect to eſcape the moſt mortifying Confuſion, if he falſly denied, that he ever had a Benefice, when he really had enjoyed one, ſhould venture to publiſh ſuch a Falſhood in a printed Work. We need, then, only caſt our Eyes on theſe Words of Mr Arnauld, to be demonſtratively convinced of his Adverſary's Falſhood. "The ſeditious manner, ſays he (50), in which they "preſumed to ſpeak of the Affairs of That Country, "obliged the Ambaſſador of his Britannic Majeſty to "demand of the States a Condemnation of the moſt "Vehement of their Libels, to which they were "pleaſed to give the Title of Eſprit de Mr Arnauld; "tho' perhaps I am the leaſt ill treated in it of a great "Number of Perſons, whom they pull to pieces, "without their having any relation to me, but what "is either Ridiculous or Imaginary; having almoſt "nothing to reproach me with, but ſecret Intentions, "often grounded on manifeſt Falſhoods: As, when "they ſay, that it was not out of Regard to Religion, "that I wrote the Apology for the Catholics, but up-"on a Proſpect of Intereſt, and for fear of loſing my "Benefice; I, WHO, ALL THE WORLD KNOWS, "HAVE NONE." Thus he ſpeaks, in a Letter dated the Twentieth of October 1684. He ſpeaks no leſs poſitively in a Work printed in 1689. "As for the "Book falſely entituled Eſprit de Mr Arnauld, he (51) "never had any thoughts of anſwering it; for, it "having been ſent him ſome time after it appeared, "in opening each Volume in ſeveral places, he met "with ſuch things, as ſufficiently acquainted him "with This Miniſter's Genius; for inſtance, That "idle Calumny (52), that they ſuffered the Children "of Quality of twelve or thirteen Years of Age, "who ſtudied Humanity at Port-Royal, to read the "Socinian Books; and another no leſs ridiculous, "tho' leſs heinous; that Mr Arnauld, WHO HAS "NO BENEFICE, AND WHO NEVER SOUGHT ANY, "wrote the Apology for the Catholics to preſerve "his Benefices. He concludes from hence, that ſo "paſſionate and unreaſonable a Calumniator, being "unworthy of Credit, deſerved no anſwer, and "from that time till now he never read a word in "the Book, before your Defence appeared (53)." So that what the Latins expreſs by the Proverb, Cantherius in porta, has happened to the Author of the Eſprit de Mr Arnauld: He has ſtumbled at the very Threſhold.

(49) Eſprit de Mr Arnauld, Tome I. pag. 34, 36, 44.

(50) The ſecond Addition to the Apology for the Catholics, p. 14.

(51) It is of Himſelf that Mr Arnauld ſpeaks.

(52) See the Refutation of this Story in Mr Arnauld's Diſſertation on the pretended Happineſs of the Pleaſures of Senſe, printed in 1687.

(53) Tom. III. de la Morale Pratique.

Note, That Mr Arnauld had once a Canonſhip in the Cathedral of Verdun, when he began his Licence

Digitized by Google

Books have been aſcribed to him, which he never wrote [O]. I ſhall take notice of ſome of them; and I doubt not but many others may be pointed out. His Silence has in the Year 1638 (54), but he quitted This Benefice a little before he received Deacons Orders in the Year 1641 (55).

(54) Præfat. Cauſæ Arnaldinæ, p. vii.

(55) Ibid. pag. xix.

[O] Several Books have been aſcribed to him, which he never wrote.] I ſhall divide this Remark into four Sections.

I. Without obſerving the Order of Time; As the firſt Falſhood in relation to the Books aſcribed to him, I ſhall mention That, which regards The Perpetuity of the Faith. For This Book has given occaſion to the moſt famous Diſpute, that was ever raiſed between the Roman Catholics and Proteſtants. Mr Claudé, who was Advocate for the latter, has gained the greateſt Honour by it, that ever Miniſter gained: And Mr Arnauld, who was principal Advocate for the former, perhaps never exerted the whole Force of his Genius with more Application, than on this Occaſion. All that vaſt Wit, Eloquence, Reading, and Logic, can furniſh of ſhining and ſtrong, appeared on both ſides in the Courſe of the Diſpute; Each Party claims the Victory; nor can all the Pains and Expence, which the Port-Royal has been at, to procure a great Number of Atteſtations from the Levant, avail any thing againſt the Perſuaſions of the Reformed, touching the Faith of the Chriſtians of Thoſe Parts, with regard to the Euchariſt. The Ignorance, which reigns among Thoſe Chriſtians, the ill Character of the Greek Nation, Time out of Mind, in Point of Sincerity, the mercenary Subſcriptions, of which they are thought capable (56), &c. enervate, in the Eyes of Proteſtants, all the Atteſtations, which the Port-Royal has produced. But this does not prevent the Controverſy's being looked upon (ſetting aſide the Prejudices of Party) as one of the moſt memorable and glorious Tranſactions of Mr Arnauld's Life. I had reaſon, then, to begin this Remark with the firſt Exploit of this great Conteſt.

PERPETUITE de la Foi.---Perpetuity of the Faith. A Diſpute between Meſſ. Arnald and Claudé.

(56) See, below, Remark [S].

I could wiſh, that the Author, who has given us a good Abridgment of the Life of Mr Claudé (57), had, with the utmoſt Exactneſs, noted the Epoch of This War, ſince Mr Claudé has not dated the Preface of his firſt Book. This Defect may deceive ſeveral Perſons; for example, I have Mr Claudé's firſt Anſwer, printed at Paris, by Stephen Lucas, in 1672. The Title does not inform me, whether it be the firſt or ſecond Edition; and, in the firſt Line of the Preface, I find, that the Diſpute had been depending about four Years, and that it was a Year ſince the Manuſcript, which had been communicated at that time to Mr Claudé, was printed. Till I have better information, I find myſelf almoſt invincibly inclined to paſs this falſe Judgment, that the Perpetuity of the Faith was printed the firſt time, in the Year 1671. In ſaying This, I am aware, that One is often miſtaken in Conjectures of this kind, when the requiſite Date is not prefixed to the Prefaces. My Edition of the Perpetuity of the Faith is the Fourth, and is of the Year 1666; but I am informed by it of the Date of the firſt; for I find, at the bottom of the Abſtract of the Licence, that the firſt Edition of This Book was finiſhed the fifteenth of July 1664. Mr Claudé's firſt Anſwer ſeems to me to be of the Year 1666 (58). The Author of his Life, not thinking exact Dates neceſſary in an Abridgment, was the Occaſion, that the learned Men, who wrote the Journal of Leipſic, to the great Benefit of the Republic of Letters, and with much Honour to their City, which may juſtly be called the Athens of Germany, were miſtaken with regard to the firſt Writings of this Miniſter. They pretend, that his firſt Anſwer to the Perpetuity of the Faith was printed, before he ſerved the Church of Montauban (59); but the Truth is, The Firſt and Second were both printed at the ſame time, after the firſt had been handed about, for four or five Years, in Manuſcript, and after he had left Montauban. But to return to the Fact;

(57) A. B. R. D. L. D. P. that is, Abel Rotolp, de la Deveze, Paſteur. He was formerly Miniſter at Caſtres, and now at the Hague.

(58) That is, according to the Bookſeller's anticipated Date; for I believe the Book came out in 1665.

(59) Acta Eruditorum Lipſienſ. 1683, pag. 659.

Mr de la Deveze does not affirm, that the Perpetuity of the Faith is a Work of Mr Arnauld; but is ſatisfied with ſaying, that he is ſuppoſed to have been the Author of it. The Journaliſts of Leipſic keep within the ſame Bounds (60); but, in the Supplement of Moreri, in which is a very long Article of CLAUDE, taken in part from the Abridgment of his Life, it is poſitively affirmed, that Mr Arnauld is the Author of the Perpetuity of the Faith. In the mean time, the moſt common and probable Opinion aſcribes This Work to Mr Nicolle, the Three large Volumes of the Perpetuity defended to Mr Arnauld, and the General Anſwer to the ſecond Book of Mr Claudé to Mr Nicolle. The Queſtion curieuſe ſays nothing poſitively of it; becauſe the Catalogue, which we find in it, of the Writings of the Gentlemen of Port-Royal againſt the Proteſtants, does not diſtinguiſh Thoſe of Mr Nicolle from Thoſe of Mr Arnauld.

(60) Acta Erudit. Lipſ. Ibid. But in 1613, pag. 442. they affert it.

Obſerve, that the firſt Volume of the Perpetuity defended was printed in the Year 1669, and that the Author, having heſitated for a Year, whether he ſhould anſwer Mr Claudé's Book, began to do it in January 1667, and finiſhed The firſt Volume in June 1668 (61). Obſerve alſo, that It is aſcribed to Mr Arnauld in ſome of the Approbations at the Head of the Work. This is ſufficient to remove all uncertainty.

(61) See the Preface.

II. The Author of the Eſprit de Mr Arnauld aſcribes the ſecond Volume of the Moral Pratique to This Doctor, but gives no manner of reaſon for it. Mr Arnauld gave him the Lye publickly. "It is certain, ſays he (62), that Mr Arnauld is not the Author of the Moral Pratique. The Jeſuits have aſcribed it to him —— on the Faith of Mr Jurieu only; a Perſon decried for his Falſhood and Lying, and who alone aſcribes This Book to Mr Arnauld, as he does many other Pieces, in which every one elſe knows he never had the leaſt ſhare." From That time the Accuſer never endeavoured to juſtify what he had ſaid; ſo that Equity muſt judge it to be a falſe Imputation. The Proofs muſt needs be very difficult, ſince the Biſhop of Malaga ſpeaks but doubtfully of it, on the ſole Authority of Mr Jurieu; for he ſays (63): modo ſit ARNALDUS, ut innuit PETRUS JURIEU in ſuo SPIRITU. —— If ARNAULD be the Perſon, as PETER JURIEU intimates in his SPIRITUS. The Author of the Defence of the new Chriſtians, who is thought to be Father le Tellier, one of the beſt Pens of the Order, was more deciſive, than the Prelate, though he ſeems to have no other Authority than Mr Jurieu: For which Mr Arnauld gives him a ſmart Reprimand, and accuſes him of judging raſhly; which wounds Charity and Juſtice, if the Circumſtances of it be well conſidered. The only Reaſon, adds he (64), why you make him the Author of it, is the Teſtimony of a Man, who, in your own Eſteem, is unworthy of Credit, and ſo notorious for his Falſhoods, that he is only fit to call the cleareſt Truths in queſtion, when he advances them.

THE ſecond Tome of the Morale Pratique---- Practical Morality.

(62) Letter of a Divine, on the Defence of the new Chriſtians, pag. 2.

(63) Catholic. Querim. pag. 103.

(64) Morale Pratique, Tom. III. pag. 36.

III. The Journal of Leipſic aſcribes The Lawful Prejudices againſt the Calviniſts to Mr Arnauld (65). Yet, according to the general Opinion of Thoſe, who are beſt informed in theſe Particulars, Mr Nicolle is the Author of it; and the Abbot de Ville aſcribes it to him by Name (66), in the Preface of the Book beforementioned; where he retorts on the Gentlemen of Port-Royal the Prejudices, which they made uſe of againſt the Reformed. The Proof, which the Gentlemen of Leipſic employ, is not a good one; for, tho' the Biſhop of Condom, and He of Grenoble, give their Approbation, in One and the ſame Act, to the Prejugez Legitimes, and three other Books, one of which is certainly Mr Arnauld's, yet they do not ſuppoſe, that the others are ſo too. They were joined together, becauſe they came all four from the Port-Royal at the ſame time. Theſe four Books; are the Prejugez Legitimes—Lawful Prejudices; the Reponſe Generale à M. Claudé,—General Anſwer to Mr Claudé; the Renverſement de la Morale,—Overthrow of the Morality; and the ſecond Volume of the Perpetuite defenduë,—Perpetuity defended.

PREJUGEZ Legitimes--- Lawful Prejudices.

(65) Acta Erudit. Ann. 1683. pag. 438, 450. and in the Index, p. 561. Ann. 1690. pag. 18, 595.

(66) By miſtake he calls him Nicol. which is juſtly aſcribed, ſays he, to Mr Nicol, one of the moſt polite Writers of Port-Royal.

IV. In the Year 1669, A Work called A Defence of the Church, againſt Mr Claudé's Book, intituled, A Defence of the Reformation, was printed at Antwerp (67). The Journaliſts of Leipſic conjectured, that it was a Piece of Mr Arnauld's (68); but it came from another Hand, viz. from Peter d'Antecourt, a Religious of St Genevieve, and Chancellor of the Univerſity of Paris, as another excellent Journaliſt informs us (69).

THE Defence of the Church.

(67) The Title Page imports, at Cologne, for Peter Marteau.

(68) Acta Erudit. Ann. 1690, pag. 18, and in the Index, pag. 611. (69) Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Auguſt, 1689, pag. 514; September, 1689, pag. 34.

I paſs

has been imputed to a falſe Reaſon [P]. Some have given him Spectacles, and a faithleſs Servant [Q]. The chief Works, written by him, ſince his quitting France, relate to the Syſtem of Nature and Grace, by Father Mallebranche; the Philoſophical Sin; the Practical Morality of the Jeſuits; and ſome Propoſitions of Mr Steyaert. In this laſt Book, he vigorouſly attacks Father Simon, in defence of the New-Teſtament of Mons, and in relation to the Inſpiration of the Sacred Writers, and the Tranſlations of the Scripture into the Vulgar Tongue [R]; as alſo in favour of the Atteſtations

I paſs by an Error of the Jeſuit Papebroch; which is That of aſcribing the Books, which have appeared under the Name of Petrus Aurelius, to Mr Arnauld. Petrus Aurelius vero nomine eſt Antonius Arnaldus (70). I know not what to ſay to a Fact, which I have met with in a Pamphlet (71), intituled, A Defenſe of the Mandate of my Lord the Biſhop of Arras, of the thirtieth of December, 1697, againſt a Libel intituled, The ancient Hereſy of the Jeſuits renewed, &c. The Author of the Defence pretends to prove, that the Janſeniſts have acknowledged the Authority of the Church in determining the Senſe of a Book. And This is what he ſays at the Twenty fourth Page; "Among ſeveral, whom I could produce, I ſhall "content myſelf with one Author, who may ſerve "inſtead of all the reſt. It is Mr Arnauld, the "Head and Oracle of Janſeniſm. After having, "in the fourth Part of the Apology for the Nuns "of Port-Royal, exceeded all that ever has been "ſaid againſt the Infallibility of the Church, in aſ"certaining the Senſe of Books; and, in a new "Work, in defence of the Apology, and others of "his Writings, being reduced to an Impoſſibility of "juſtifying himſelf from the Reflexion caſt upon "him, that his Arguments tended to deſtroy the "Certainty of Tradition; he found himſelf neceſ"ſitated, in ſpite of himſelf, to make this important "and deciſive Acknowledgment, which ruined, in "a few Lines, all his Labours for ſo many Years. "There are certain Matters of Fact, ſays this Writer *, "from which the Truth of a Doctrine muſt neceſſa"rily be concluded: And theſe are They, which con"tain the Tradition of the Church. For inſtance; "from the Fathers having unanimouſly taught, that "ſuch a Doctrine is Matter of Faith, it follows, that "This Doctrine is Matter of Faith —— and thus "it is plain, that the Church being infallible in "the Deciſion of Doctrines, ſhe is likewiſe ſo in "the Deciſion of ſuch Facts, as neceſſarily follow from "Thoſe Doctrines, and which are the neceſſary means, "by which ſhe attains to the Knowledge of the Truths "of Faith." Thus far Mr Arnauld." This is clear and expreſs. It is poſitively affirmed, that The Apology for the Nuns, and the Confutation of one of Father Annat's Books are two of our Doctor's Pieces. I do not pretend to deny it; though, on the one ſide, the Stile of the Apology ſeems to me more correct than His, and on the other, leſs lively, and leſs vehement. This Apology is a pretty large Quarto, divided into four Parts, and printed in 1665. Obſerve, by the way, the Fate of Diſputes: It ſcarce ever happens, in ſupporting an Opinion, that we are at full Liberty to make uſe of Maxims, which are purely univerſal. We have ſome other Opinions to manage, which oblige us to Reſtrictions; but This is a very inconvenient Reſtraint; for The Adverſary makes his Advantage of our Exceptions. This ſupplies him with Arguments ad hominem, and gives him great Advantage; and it is, generally, by this Means, that he recovers himſelf, after he has been fairly thrown. The Janſeniſts are an Example of This in the Apology for the Mandate of the Biſhop of Arras. I would willingly ſee how they will get off. Both Parties are Sufferers in this Affair. The Infallibility of the Church cannot be maintained as to Facts; and, unleſs this be admitted, one is expoſed to a thouſand Inconveniences. As to the Book des deux chefs qui n'en font qu'un ; —— Of two Heads, which make but one; I ſhall ſpeak of it in another Place. It is a Work falſely aſcribed to Mr Arnauld. This Imputation is in an anonymous Piece, printed in the Year 1688, and ſuppoſed to be Father le Tellier's. The Title of it is An Apologetical Letter for Mr Arnauld, &c. It would be more reaſonable to ſay, that the Doctrine itſelf, of the two Heads which make but one, was maintained by the Doctor of the Sorbonne, in the Preface to his Book of Frequent Communion; but even This wants Proof. See the Abridged Hiſtory of his Life (72).

(70) Papebroch. Elucid. Hiſtor. Aſſor. in Controverſia Carmelitana, pag. 135.

(71) Printed at Cologne, by Van Buning, 1698. It contains 50 Pages in 12mo.

* Refutation of a Book of Father P. Arnat, &c. pag. 3.

[P] His Silence has been imputed to a falſe Reaſon.] The Difficulties propoſed to Mr Steyaert make it appear, that the Author of the Voyage to the World of Des Cartes had not exactly conſulted the Period of Time, as to the Quarrel between Mr Arnauld and Father Mallebranche, when he ſaid, that the firſt engaged in it purely to have a Pretence for not anſwering two Books, which had appeared againſt him, one compoſed by a Miniſter, and the other by a Jeſuit. It muſt be confeſſed, that the Public is ſcarce yet recovered from the Aſtoniſhment, which the firſt Year's Silence of this Doctor raiſed with regard to theſe two Books; but it is certain, whatever the ſubtile and polite Traveller to the New World may ſay of it, that he was engaged with Father Mallebranche, before the Eſprit de Mr Arnauld, and the Obſervations of Father le Tellier, appeared (73). I muſt not diſſemble, that the Reaſons Mr Arnauld gave for this Silence pleaſed ſome; but they are very far from pleaſing all Readers. I have already cited a Paſſage, which relates to theſe Reaſons (74); here is another; "As for Mr Jurieu, he is become "ſo famous all over Europe for Slander and Calum"ny, that he is no longer able to hurt Thoſe, "whom he attacks. I know that two Perſons, both "Proteſtants, have wrote to Mr Arnauld about him, "as a Man decried among his own Party, and whoſe "Paſſions have made them aſhamed of him; and "that they have offered to ſend him Memoirs, "which would diſcover what he is. But it is no "wonder Mr Arnauld did not take them at their "Word, or that he would not throw away his "Time in writing againſt a Man formidable only "by Abuſe and Slander (75)." He immediately produces ſome Facts, which he pretends were nothing but monſtrous Calumnies, publiſhed by This Miniſter. The Reaſons he gives for his Silence, as to Father le Tellier (77), have ſatisfied but few Perſons.

(72) Pag. 85, &c.

(73) See the Difficulties propoſed to Mr Steyaert, Part 1, pag. 59, &c.

(74) Above, Citat. (53).

(75) It is at the 23-th Page of the 3*d* Tome of the Morale Pratique.

(76) Diſſertation on the pretended Happineſs of the Pleaſures of Senſe, pag. 12.

(77) Morale Pratique, Tom. III, p. 266, 267.

[Q] Some have given him Spectacles, and a faithleſs Servant.] The Writings publiſhed on a Correſpondence by Letter between a pretended Arnauld, and a Profeſſor of Douay, contain Matters, which may be thought à propos to a Work of this kind; however I ſhall only obſerve the manner, in which Mr Arnauld refutes the Complaint imputed to him of having been robbed by his Servant, and being ſcarce able, by reaſon of his great Age, to read a ſmall Character. How could I complain of a Servant, ſays he, who robbed and betrayed me; I, who never had any, but what were very faithful, and who have had none at all for twelve Years paſt, ſince I left Paris (78). In a Note on Mr de Ligny's Letter, it is ſaid, That Mr Arnauld never made uſe of Spectacles, and that he could read the ſmalleſt Character as eaſily as the largeſt. Theſe are little Particulars, which deſerve to be communicated to Thoſe, who are curious in the Hiſtory of illuſtrious Perſons. As to the Intrigue of the Falſe Arnauld, it is one of the fineſt Comedies, has ever been acted; and had as much Succeſs as the Authors could expect. Perhaps there is no Inſtance of a Mortality, which, in ſo ſhort a Time, ſwept away ſo many Profeſſors in an Univerſity, as This Affair did in That of Douay; perhaps no Diſcharge ever cleared the Ranks ſo well. This may ſerve to put us in Mind of theſe Words of the Pſalmiſt; And Thou ſhalt renew the Face of the Earth.

(77) Morale Pratique, Tom. III, p. 266, 267.

(78) Premiere Plainte, pag. 9.

[R] He vigorouſly attacks Father Simon, in Defence of —— The Inſpiration of the Sacred Writers, and the Tranſlations of the Scripture.] I have elſewhere (80) produced two Propoſitions of the Jeſuits, which were cenſured by the Faculties of Divinity of Louvain and Douay. They are Propoſitions, which ſeem to limit or qualify the Inſpiration of the Scriptures. Upon this, Mr Simon took part againſt the Cenſors (81), and was refuted

(80) In the Article Father ADAM, a little before Citation (9).

(81) See Chap. 23, 24, of The Critical Hiſtory of the New Teſtament.

Digitized by Google

Atteſtations of the Greeks [S], &c. ——— He died in the Night between the eighth and ninth of Auguſt 1694, Aged Eighty two Years, ſix Months, and two Days. At this great Age, he received two ſignal and uncommon Favours from Heaven; for the Sickneſs, of which he died, continued but a Week, more or leſs, and never prevented his ſaying, or hearing, Maſs, and rehearſing his Breviary almoſt at the ordinary Hours (l). His Agony was mild, calm, and ſhort. On the other Hand, he had as great ſtrength of Mind, and Memory, and wrote as well the laſt Year of his Life, as at forty or fifty Years of Age. Theſe are Bleſſings, which rarely attend learned Men. Some few Months before his Death, he wrote four Letters againſt Father Mallebranche (m), and one to his old Friend Mr du Bois, full of Reflexions on the Eloquence of Preachers (n). The Public has ſeen theſe laſt Works, and found no ſigns in them of a declining Judgment. Mr du Bois did not long ſurvive either his Admiſſion into the French Academy, or the reading of theſe Reflexions, from which he might have learned, that he underſtood nothing of St Auſtin's Rules concerning the Eloquence of the Pulpit (o). I queſtion whether the Public will ever ſee what Mr Arnauld wrote, about the ſame time, in Favour of Mr Boileau [T]; I doubt not but his Letter to him is admirable. There (l) Abridg'd Hiſtory of Mr Arnauld, pag. 279.

(m) See the Journal des Sçavans, of the 28th of June, 1684.

(n) Abridg'd Hiſtory, pag. 294.

(o) What he has ſaid on this Subject, is to be found in the Preface to his French Tranſlation of ſome Sermons of St Auſtin. See the Journal des Sçavans, of the 7th of June, 1694.

refuted by Mr Arnauld, from page 113, to page 236, of the Difficulties propoſed to Mr Steyaert. He defended himſelf in his New Obſervations on the Text and Verſions of the New Teſtament (82), from Page 33, to 91. Many Things may be learned, by exactly comparing the Reaſons of the one with Thoſe of the other. It is well known, that, of all the Catholic Writers, Mr Arnauld was the Man, who moſt learnedly and ſolidly ſupported the Uſefulneſs of the Tranſlations of The Scripture. What he ſaid, as to the Reaſon of the thing, on this Subject, is admirable: And what he has ſaid as to Fact; I mean, to ſhew, that, in the Intention of the Church, the Laity were never excluded from reading the Word of God in the Vulgar Tongue, is fine and curious; but if you read Mr Simon's Anſwer (83) attentively, you will not know what to think as to the Church's Opinion in This Matter. The Sentiments of Doctors, the Judgments of Univerſities, and Mandates of Prelates, in a Word, the public Acts alledged on both ſides, form ſuch a ſtrange Variety, and eſpecially when we examine the Motives and Principles laid down by Thoſe who condemn, and Thoſe who allow of, the reading the Tranſlations, that, upon the whole, the People, according to the Church's Intention, ought to be both forbid, and permitted, to read the Holy Scriptures. There are few Facts, which may be more eaſily reduced to hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm, than This Queſtion; Does the Church diſapprove, or approve, the reading of the Scripture, in the Vulgar Tongue, by the Laity? How ſtrange is it, that no poſitive Deciſion can be given of this Queſtion, either in the Negative or Affirmative? Should not a Body, which boaſts of Infallibility, be more uniform in it's Proceedings? Mr Arnauld would, with the Torrent of his Eloquence and Learning, carry away a great Number of Readers to a Belief, that the Church of Rome was calumniated, when it was ſo often reproached with prohibiting the Laity the reading of the Word of God; I ſay he would induce them to believe this, did not Mr Simon oppoſe his Banks to Theſe Torrents. Thus, in the ſame Communion, one Doctor defeats the Labours of another: The common Enemy makes his Advantage of this, and has reaſon to cry out;

Sæpe, premente Deo, fert Deus alter opem.

Oppreſs'd by One, Another God befriends.

(82) Printed at Paris, in 1695, in 4to.

(83) In the New Obſervations on the Text, and Verſions, of the New Teſtament, from pag. 463, to pag. 584.

[S] —— As alſo in favour of the Atteſtations of the Greeks.] I have obſerved before (84), that the Proteſtants deſpiſed them, as things eaſily obtained from That mercenary Nation. "Emendicatis undique "per Legatos Regios, Conſules, Miſſionarios, Græculorum hac de re teſtimoniis, a quibus nihil non "pretio extorqueas (85). — Atteſtations of the Greeks, "of whom Money will buy any thing, having been "begged up and down by Ambaſſadors, Conſuls, and "Miſſionaries. Mr Arnauld produced ſeveral Atteſtations from Greek Prieſts, to ſhew, that, in this "Point, they followed the Doctrine of the Romiſh "Church; but it is, nevertheleſs, true, that moſt "of them were obtained by Money. Mr Wheeler "affirms, that, in his Travels thro' Greece, he ſpoke "with ſeveral Papas, whom Mr de Nointel, Nephew of Mr Arnauld, endeavoured to corrupt in "this manner (86)." Here are two Evidences of the Fact I had aſſerted. Note, that Mr de Nointel was not Mr Arnauld's Nephew. They call him ſo there, in all probability, from having read, in Mr Claudé's Anſwer (87), that Mr de Pompone, Nephew to Mr Arnauld, and at that time Ambaſſador in Sweden, had procured him Materials. However it be, Mr Simon confeſſed, that there were even Catholics, who did not rely on this great Number of Atteſtations (88), and he aſſigns the reaſon of their Doubts. Mr Arnauld examines all this with extraordinary Zeal, and gives the Sum of what he had replied to Spanhemius, in his Apology for the Catholics (89).

(84) In Remark [O], n. I, immediately after Citat. (56).

(85) Spanhem. Strictur. in Expoſit. Epiſc. Condom.

(86) Bibliothec. univerſ. Tom. XI, pag. 445.

(87) Claudé's Anſwer to Perpetuity Defended, Book IV, chap. III, pag. 438.

(88) In his Critical Hiſtory of the Faith of the Levant.

(89) Difficulties propoſed to Mr Steyaert, Part. 6, pag. 275, 276, &c.

[T] What Mr Arnauld wrote in Favour of Mr Boileau *.] The Criticiſm on the tenth Satire of Boileau (90), falling into Mr Arnauld's Hands, put him upon "writing a Diſſertation, in the form of a Let"ter, in which he undertook the Defence of the "Satire, with That Force of Wit, and Style, which "never failed him: The Party for the Ancients was "proud of it; and this occaſioned Boileau's writing "Thoſe fine Verſes on Mr Arnauld, in which he "prefers the Apology, which This Doctor wrote, for "his Satire to all the Honours he enjoyed, and even "to That of being the King's Hiſtoriographer. —— "The rigid Janſeniſts, or the Rigoriſts, were not "pleaſed with this laſt Piece of Mr Arnauld. What! "a Doctor, grown grey in ſerious and grave Diſ"putes, to write, at above Eighty Years of Age, of "Poetry, Women, and Romances! How unbecom"ing! The Party were vexed at it, and whiſpered, "that their Head demeaned himſelf. Poetry, as "they repreſented it, was a frivolous Art, which "ought not to have employed the Thoughts of ſo "great a Genius for a Moment. This came to Boi"leau's Ears; upon which he ſet about his Poem Of "the Love of God, to ſhew, that Poetry can reach "the moſt ſublime Subjects." Theſe Particulars have been communicated to me by a Perſon of great Wit and Learning (91), very well known to Boileau. Let us here produce a Paſſage, in the tenth Epiſtle of This great Poet, where he addreſſes himſelf to his own Verſes.

* Boileau inſerted it in his Edition of 1702. This Piece has appeared ſince, in all the ſubſequent Editions.

(90) It is his Satire againſt Women.

(91) Mr Marais, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris.

Mais des heureux regards de mon Aſtre étonnant
Marquéz bien cet effet encor plus ſurprenant;
Qui dans mon ſouvenir aura toüjours ſa place:
Que de tant d'Ecrivains de l'Ecole d'Ignace
Etant, comme je ſuis, ami ſi declaré,
Ce Docteur toutefois ſi craint, ſi reveré,
Qui contre Eux de ſa plume épuiſe l'énergie,
Arnaud, le grand Arnaud, fit mon apologie (92).
Sur mon tombeau futur, mes Vers, pour l'énoncer (93),
Couréz en lettres d'or de ce pas vous placer.
Alléz juſqu'ou l'Aurore en naiſſant void l'Hydaſpe,
Chercher, pour l'y graver, le plus précieux jaſpe.
Sur-tout à mes Rivaux fachéz bien l'étaler.

(92) Mr Arnauld wrote a Diſſertation, in which he juſtifies me againſt my Cenſurers, and it is his laſt Work.

(93) It is thus in the Edition I make uſe of, publiſhed in ſome Town of the United Provinces.

But obſerve the ſtill more ſurprizing Effect of the happy Influence of my wonderous Star; an Effect, which ſhall ever hold it's Place in my Memory; that, being a declared Friend, as I am, to ſo many Writers of St Ignatius's

Digitized by Google

There is another Happineſs to be conſidered in his Life, which ſurpaſſes Thoſe I have obſerved; to wit, his having always been very exact in the Practice of the Exerciſes of Piety, which his Prieſthood required of him; and, what is yet more difficult, his abſtaining, in his very Youth, from ſenſual Pleaſures, and ever preſerving a Purity of Manners, without Taint or Blemiſh (p). It does not appear, that his Adverſaries ever attacked him on this Head; tho', in point of Orthodoxy, they have endeavoured to defame him all manner of ways. If the reading of bad Books could produce the ſame Effect in the Minds of all young Perſons, as it did in his, it would not be amiſs to recommend it to them [U]. The Proteſtations he has made of his Adherence to the true Faith, and of his Zeal for God, appear in ſeveral parts of his Works, particularly in the Spiritual Teſtament [X], which he made, the ſixteenth of September 1679, wherein he calls God to witneſs with what Diſpoſitions he engaged in writing ſuch and ſuch Books. The Court of Rome did, at laſt, acknowledge his Merit [Y]; and it was purely his own fault, that he was not a Cardinal. It is unneceſſary to obſerve, that he oppoſed all relaxation of Morality, and that he was always a Teacher and Director of Auſterity. It appeared, indeed, that he ſwerved a little from the ſtrait Path, in an Affair, which gave occaſion to a Factum, or Caſe, of Mr Des-Lyons [Z]. Note, that the Place, where he died, is unknown. It is believed to tius's School, This Doctor, ſo ever dreaded, and revered, who exhauſts the whole Force of his Pen againſt them, Arnauld, I ſay, the Great Arnauld, writes my Apology. My Muſe, inſcribe this Event in Letters of Gold on my future Tomb. Fetch from the diſtant Eaſt, where Aurora, riſing, ſalutes the Hydaſpes, the moſt precious Jaſper, to engrave it. But be particularly careful to diſplay it to my Rivals.

(p) Præfat. Cauſæ Arnald pag. IX. See the Abridg'd Hiſtory of his Life, pag. 20.

[U] If the reading of bad Books could produce the ſame Effect in the Minds of all young Perſons, as it did in his, it would not be amiſs to recommend it to them.] This is his own Account of this Matter. "I remember to have formerly read (when I "was very young) in a Book, entituled, if I re- "member right, The Muſes Rally'd, ſomething very "wicked on this Subject. The Poet glories in "having obtained, what he could not ask without a "Crime; and the Reaſon he gives for obtaining his "Deſire is altogether abominable. It was, Becauſe, "ſays he, the Lady had too ſolid a Judgment, not to "look upon Thoſe old Stories of Honour, which ariſe "in the Brains of married Men and Mothers, as "meer Chimeras. I am certain, that what is here "in Italic was in His Verſes. For I was ſo greatly "ſhocked at it, that it has ever ſince remained in my "Mind. This Poet, then, muſt have ſuppoſed, "that nothing but the Conſideration of Honour "could have prevented This Lady's ſatisfying his "Deſires; and that ſhe had got over This Conſide- "ration by the Force of Reaſon (94)."

(94) Arnauld's Cinquieme denonciation du peché philoſophique, pag 57, 58.

[X] His Spiritual Teſtament.] I have a Copy of it, publiſhed at Liege, in 1696. There is a Preface to it; in which the preceeding Edition is diſclaimed.

[Y] The Court of Rome did, at laſt, acknowledge his Merit.] Pope Clement X, having read ſome of Mr Arnauld's Works, commended them extreamly, and declared, that the Author would do him a great Pleaſure, if he would ſend him Copies of them, or deliver them to his Nuncio (95). Cardinal Altieri, who had ſhewed the Pope theſe Books, could not ſufficiently commend the Author, and often concluded his Praiſes with this honourable Teſtimony: Mr Arnauld has done the Church great Service; it were to be wiſhed, that Death would never deprive it of ſuch a Man.—— De Eccleſia optime meritus eſt Arnaldus; optandum eſſet, ut talem virum mors illi nunquam ereptura eſſet (96). The Eſteem and Affection of Innocent XI for This Doctor is not unknown to the Public. See the Letter, which he cauſed to be written to him by Cardinal Cibo, the ſecond of January, 1677; it is printed at the end of the Letter, which Mr Arnauld wrote to the Biſhop of Malaga, the ſecond of December, 1688. There is alſo a Letter of Mr Favoriti, That Pope's Secretary, dated from Rome the third of April, 1680, which contains great Commendations of him, and lively Expreſſions of the Pope's Grief, on account of the Perſecutions of Mr Arnauld (97). He had an Intention of promoting him to the Purple; and it was wholly the Doctor's Fault, that it was not done, "De Arnaldo in purpuratorum Procerum "Ordinem adlegendo aliquando Sanctitatem ſuam co- "gitaſſe, etſi certum eſt & pluribus notum, nollem "tamen hic commemorare, niſi Eminentiſſimus Car- "dinalis intimorum Romanæ Aulæ conſiliorum teſtis "locuples, id nuper Pariſiis evulgaſſet, aſſeruiſſetque "per unum Arnaldum ſtetiſſe quominus is Eminen- "tiſſima illa dignitate ornaretur (98). —— Though "the Intention of his Holineſs to have made Arnauld "a Cardinal be certain, and known to many, yet I "ſhould have taken no Notice of it here, had not "a very Eminent Cardinal, who is perfectly acquainted "with the Councils of the Court of Rome, of late "publickly declared it at Paris, and aſſerted, that "Arnauld might, if he pleaſed, have been inveſted "with That high Dignity." Alexander VIII, who had a great Kindneſs and Eſteem for Mr Arnauld, before he was Pope, did not alter his Diſpoſitions, after he was raiſed to St Peter's Chair. He granted him ſome Favours, and would have done him many more, if he had lived longer, and Mr Arnauld had given him Opportunities of doing it (99).

(95) Præfat. Cauſæ Arnaldinæ, p. LIX.

(96) Ibid. pag. LX.

(97) Ibid.

(98) Ibid. pag. LXI.

Take notice, that the Biſhop of Malaga cauſed almoſt all the Copies of the firſt Edition of his Querimonia Catholica to be burnt, as ſoon as he underſtood, that, without his Privity, Mr Arnauld was called an Heretic in it. He, who burnt the Copies with his own Hand, gave a formal Atteſtation of this (100).

(99) Ibid. pag. LXI, LXII.

(100) Ibid. pag. LXIV.

[Z] He ſwerved a little from the ſtrait Path, in an Affair, which gave occaſion to a Factum, or Caſe, of Mr Des-Lyons.] A Niece of Mr Des-Lyons, Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Dean of Senlis, dexterouſly engaged Mr Arnauld in a Conduct, not altogether to his Honour. She ſued her Father; and Arnauld patronized her in the Suit as much as poſſible. This did not become a rigid Caſuiſt. Beſides, ſhe was ſo whimſical in her Devotions, and of ſo wrong a Turn, that Mr Arnauld had but little of That Faculty, which is called The Diſcernment of Spirits, when he ſuffered himſelf to be deceived by This Hypocrite. Mr Jurieu, who had heard of the Factum of Mr Des-Lyons, paſſionately deſired to procure a Copy of it, and applied ſeveral Times to a Perſon, who might have lent it him. He chiefly employed the Bookſeller's (101) Interceſſion, who printed his Juſtification of the Morality of the Reformed, at the Hague, in the Year 1685. This was applying himſelf to a proper Perſon; for, if any one could have obtained it, it was doubtleſs This Bookſeller; but The Perſon, who had the Factum in his Hands, would never part with it to a Writer, whom he knew diſpoſed to draw from it whatever new Matter he could for Inſult, and Invective. He was not ignorant, in what manner This Author poiſoned every thing, when the Buſineſs was to pull Mr Arnauld to pieces. Obſerve the Artifice of Mr Jurieu! Having failed this way, he would perſuade the Public, that he ſet no Value on the Advantage he might have made of This Factum, and had even been ſo moderate, as voluntarily to renounce it. Theſe are his Words; "To convince the World, that "we are not very ſollicitous in enquiring after every "thing, which may ſerve to render Mr Arnauld "odious, we omit all that the Factum of Mr Des-Lyons "might have ſupplied us with againſt him (102)." There are ſeveral Falſhoods in Prefaces, which paſs for

(101) He is alive, and perfectly in Health; and any one may enquire of him, whether I ſpeak the truth. I write this on the 2d of April, 1699

(102) Jurieu's Preface to the Juſtification de la Morale des Reformez. Edit. of the Hague, 1685.

Digitized by Google

to be a Village in the Country of Leige. It is ſtill leſs known, where he was buried; and this is one point of Conformity, which his Friends have obſerved, between His Fate, and That of Moſes (q). He deſired, that his Heart might be carried to Port-Royal (r). This was accordingly done; but Mr Santeüil's Verſes on this Subject raiſed a furious War [AA]; which gave great Diverſion to ſeveral Perſons. There was (q) See the Abridg'd Hiſtory of his Life, pag. 303.

(r) Perrault's Illuſtrious Men, p. 57.

for venial Sins, not only at the Bar of the Republic of Letters, but even at the Bar of the Church; but This can plead Privilege at neither of Theſe Tribunals. The Jeſuits did not let the Factum of Mr Des-Lyons fall to the Ground; they maliciouſly weighed the Circumſtances of it, and drew Matter of much Reflexion and Raillery from it. See a Piece, which is ſuppoſed to have come from Father le Tellier, and which appeared in the Year 1688, entituled; An Apologetical Letter for Mr Arnauld, written to an Abbot, a Friend of His, on three of the laſt Books, which were written againſt That Doctor. I. The Eſprit de Mr Arnauld. II. Obſervations on the New Defence of the French Tranſlation of the New Teſtament printed at Mons. III. An Anſwer of Mr Des-Lyons, Doctor of the Sorbonne, Dean and Prebend of Senlis, to Mr Arnauld's Letters.

[AA] Mr Santeüil's Verſes on this Subject raiſed a furious War.] The Ladies of Port-Royal received Mr Arnauld's Heart, "with all imaginable Tranſ- "ports of Joy, and depoſited it in the moſt honour- "able Place they could think of. The Heart being "thus diſpoſed of, an Epitaph was wanting. No "Perſon was thought more capable of writing one, "than Mr Santeüil. —— As the Buſineſs was of a "delicate Nature, the Nuns conſidered, that they "muſt take Mr Santeüil at an Advantage. For this "Purpoſe, they invited him to come and paſs a "few Days at Port-Royal, with one of his Brethren, "who was it's Superior (103); and, during his "Abode there, he compoſed the following Verſes.

(103) Hiſtory of the Troubles, cauſed by Mr Arnauld, after his Death; or The Quarrel between Mr Santeüil and the Jeſuits, pag. 5, Edit. 1696.

Ad Sanctas rediit ſedes ejectus & exeul:
Hoſte triumphato, tot tempeſtatibus actus,
Hoc portu in placido, hac ſacrâ tellure quieſcit,
Arnaldus, veri defenſor, & arbiter æqui.
Illius oſſa memor ſibi vindicet extera tellus;
Huc cœleſtis amor rapidis cor tranſtulit alis,
Cor nunquam avulſum, nec amatis ſedibus abſens (104).

(104) Ibid. pag. 40.

Mr de la Fémas gave this French Tranſlation of it.

Enfin, après un long voyage,
Arnauld revient en ces ſaints lieux:
Il eſt au Port malgré les envieux,
Qui croyoient qu'il feroit naufrage.
Ce Martir de la verité
Fut banni, fut perſecuté,
Et mourut en terre étrangere;
Heureuſe, de ſon corps d'être depoſitaire,
Mais ſon cœur toûjours ferme, & toûjours innocent,
Fut porté par l'amour, à qui tout eſt poſſible,
Dans cette retraite paiſible,
D'où jamais il ne fut abſent (105).

(105) Ibid. pag. 41.

In Engliſh thus.

Here reſts in hallowed Earth, ſecure from Spight, Arnauld, great Arbiter of Truth and Right;
Arriv'd in Port, and landed ſafe on Shore,
The Foe ſubdued, and the wild Tempeſt o'er.
Tho' in ſome diſtant Land his Bones be laid,
His Heart, on rapid Wings by Love convey'd,
Enjoys the dear Retreat, from which it never ſtray'd.

No ſooner were theſe two Pieces printed together, and diſperſed in the World, but the Jeſuits complained of Mr Santeüil's Proceedings. —— He turned a deaf Ear to them, flattering himſelf, that the Murmurs, then raiſed, would inſenſibly die of themſelves (106). But, finding himſelf attacked in a Piece, ſuppoſed to be ſent out of the Country (107), —— he began to think of making Satisfaction. "He was Thunder-ſtruck, "and ran immediately to the Jeſuits College, to "beg Pardon in the moſt humble and moving "Terms, conjuring all Thoſe he met with not to "undo him; that he had always been a Friend "to the Society, and that the Epitaph in queſtion "was not His, but had been forged in his Name "by his Enemies, to ruin him with the Jeſuits. "They replied, that they wiſhed what he ſaid were "true, but that bare Proteſtations were not ſuffi- "cient; and that he muſt undeceive the Public by "an authentic Confeſſion; which they required of "him, as an Earneſt of his Sincerity. He pro- "miſed all they would have him; but the Difficulty "was how to perform his Promiſe (108)." The Flattering Panegyric, which he wrote, on their Society, did not ſerve his turn (109); they perceived, "the little "Artifice, he made uſe of, to elude his Promiſe; "they treated him as a double Dealer, and a Knave; "in a Word, he found himſelf overwhelmed with "Epigrams, which came pouring upon him from "all Parts; and in which the young Jeſuits of the "College, whom he ſomewhere calls Pubes Jeſuitica Sagittaria, had no ſmall Share. On the other "hand, the Janſeniſts took no leſs Offence at his "Cowardice, than the Jeſuits at his Inſincerity; and "they gave him Marks of it, in a Piece in Burleſque Verſe, which they publiſhed againſt him, "and which begins,

(106) Ibid. pag. 7.

(107) Entituled, Santolius Vindicatus.

(108) Hiſtory of the Troubles, cauſed by Mr Arnauld, after his Death.

(109) Ibid. pag. 10.

Santeüil, ce renommé Poëte, &c.

Santeüil, That far fam'd Bard, &c.

"Thus he found himſelf ſadly out in his Reckon- "ing, and perceived, that, by endeavouring to keep "fair with all the World, he had diſobliged all." Having thoroughly conſidered the whole Affair, He reſolved to ſacrifice the Janſeniſts to the Jeſuits, and made an humble Confeſſion of his Fault to Theſe, by Letter; but This would not ſatisfy them; they demanded a Recantation (110). He was peſtered with Epigram upon Epigram, which he received Day after Day (111). He wrote a Letter to Father la Chaiſe; in which he interpreted ſome Terms of the Epitaph in the ſofteſt manner he could. The Anſwer, he received from this Jeſuit, encreaſed his Diſquiet (112). He was obliged to think of a ſecond Apology (113). The Tendereſt Point, and That, in which all the Difficulty lay, was his having ſaid of Mr Arnauld;

(110) Ibid. pag. 11.

(111) Ibid. pag. 14.

(112) Ibid. pag. 17.

(113) Ibid. pag. 20.

—— Ictus illo fulmine (Vaticano)
Trabeate Doctor, jam mihi non amplius
Arnalde, ſaperes.

"That is; If you had been ſtruck with the Thunder of "the Vatican, I ſhould abſolutely have diſclaimed you. "Now this was ſaying nothing at all. The Jeſuits "would have had him put Sapies, inſtead of Saperes "(for all was brought to the Teſt, before the Copies "were printed off). To have put Sapies would have "been to have declared Mr Arnauld excommunica- "ted and condemned. One of his Friends, with "whom he adviſed about it, gave him a Hint for "finding out a Medium between Saperes and Sapies; "which was to put Sapias, which might equally be "taken in the ſenſe of the other two Words; but he "found, that he could not give up the Saperes, "without offending the Janſeniſts. At laſt, after "long Deliberation, he reſolved to pleaſe each Party "as near as poſſible. He got two kinds of Copies "printed; in ſome of which was Sapias, for the "Jeſuits; telling them, viva voce, that he took it in "the ſenſe of the Sapies; and Saperes in the others, "to pleaſe the Janſeniſts." To this he added an Explanation of ſome other Parts of the Epitaph. But he neither ſatisfied the Jeſuits, nor the Janſeniſts. The latter publiſhed a very bitter Piece againſt him (114), and the latter attacked him no leſs vigorouſly. At laſt Father Commire entered the Liſts. He had lain by hitherto, as a Body of Reſerve, "but at laſt ap- "peared (114) Extitul'd, Santolius pœnitens. See the Hiſtory of the Troubles, &c. p. 20.

Digitized by Google

was a great Clamour raiſed againſt the Jeſuits, for procuring an Order, that Mr Perrault ſhould be obliged to ſuppreſs the Sheet, in which he celebrated Mr Arnauld, in his Collection of the Portraits and Elogies of the Illuſtrious Men of the French Nation [B B]. I muſt not forget the Eſteem, which this Doctor of the Sorbonne gained with

" peared in the Field of Battle; and, to break off " a Diſpute, which there was no end of, and to pre- " vent Mr Santeüil from ſo often contradicting him- " ſelf, he ſeized him, and put a Gag in his Mouth, " which has ever ſince been very troubleſome to him. " I mean the Linguarium, which all the Learned aſ- (115) Ibid. pag. 33. " cribe to This great Poet (115)." A Poet of the Univerſity, and no Friend to the Jeſuits, entred the Liſts, and wrote a Piece entituled Santolius pendens, Santeüil on the Gibbet. It is One of the beſt, which appeared during This long Poetical War. I think Three Accounts have appeared of this Quarrel: I have not ſeen the firſt; That, which I have quoted, is the ſecond: The third is of the Year 1697, and poſterior to the Death of Mr Santeüil: It contains the Letters, which were written to This Poet by ſeveral Jeſuits, and differs from the ſecond in ſome Circumſtances.

It is certain, that This Quarrel made a great noiſe; for which reaſon the Author of the Relation thought (116) Ibid. pag. 3, 4. himſelf obliged to make uſe of this Preamble (116). " It is the Fate of Thoſe, who have occaſioned great " Troubles in their Life-time, to occaſion others " after their Death. That of Alexander did nor ex- " tinguiſh the War in Aſia; on the contrary, it broke " out again with greater fury, thro' the Ambition of " his Lieutenants, who long diſputed the Crown. " Something like this happened to Mr Arnauld; if " it be proper to compare a Doctor with a Con- " queror. His Death, which ſeemingly ought to " have put an end to all the Troubles, he had oc- " caſioned in his Life-time, on the contrary raiſed " new ones. Every one knows, in how unworthy " a manner the Janſeniſts exclaimed againſt an Holy (117) The Abbot de la Trappe. " Abbot (117), for explaining himſelf too freely on " this Occaſion, and ſaying, with regard to the great " Head of a Party, which fell in the Perſon of Mr " Arnauld, Happy is He, who has no other than JESUS " CHRIST. This was what the firſt News of Mr " Arnauld's Death produced. But, his Heart being " afterwards carried back to France, could not re- " enter it without ſcattering ſtill farther Seeds of " Diſſention, by the Quarrel, which it occaſioned " between Mr Santeüil and the Jeſuits." Many will here recollect a Complaint of Balzac againſt Father (118) See Remark [M], of the Article P. GOULU, General of the Bernardine Mendicants. Goulu's Epitaph (118); but if the Jeſuits, on the one ſide, might ſay, that the very Tomb of Mr Arnauld inſulted them, the Janſeniſts might exclaim, on the other, that They did not ſuffer this Divine to reſt even in his Grave.

Et ce n'eſt pas aſſez de paier en la vie,
Il faut encor paier au dela du trepas (119).

(119) Thoſe are two Lines of the Opera, which was acted in 1674, entituled, as I take it, Le Triomphe d'Alceſte. --- The Triumph of Alceſtes.

Even Death from farther Payment cannot ſave;
The Debt muſt be diſcharged beyond the Grave.

[B B] Mr Perrault was obliged to ſuppreſs the Sheet, &c.] The following Paſſage we meet with in a Letter, publiſhed in the Year 1697 (120). " Mr Perrault, of " the Academy, has preſented the Public with a Book " intituled, The Elogies of the Illuſtrious Men of this " Reign. Mr Arnauld and Monſ. Paſcal juſtly had a " Place in it. Baptiſte, and Moliere, hold their Rank " in it, as illuſtrious Perſons of their kind: The Book " was printed by Authority; the Portraits engra- " ven. It was to have been publiſhed four Months " ago; but the Fathers Jeſuits have applied ſo ſtrong- " ly to the higher Powers, that they have ordered the " Author and Bookſeller to retrench Monſieur Ar- " nauld and Monſieur Paſcal's Articles, and ſuppreſs " their Elogies. —— Monſieur Arnauld was one of " the greateſt Men of This Age: He did the Church " ſervice in oppoſing Calviniſm, and defending the " Faith of the Euchariſt. He lived and died in the " Communion of the Church, and in perfect Obe- " dience to the Holy See, which would certainly " have rewarded his great Deſerts, if the profound " Humility of This learned Perſon had not ſeveral " Times made him refuſe one of the moſt eminent " Dignities of the Church. Moliere lived impiouſly, " and died excommunicated, like a Reprobate: In (120) Letter of a Lady of Quality to another learned Lady, pag. 24, 25.

" the mean time Monſieur Arnauld is ſtruck out of " the Number of Illuſtrious Men, and Moliere holds " his Rank among them." Such Reflexions were made all over France, and in foreign Countries; and what Tacitus ſaid, on the Statues of Caſſius and Brutus not appearing at Junia's Funeral, was not forgot on this Occaſion; Præfulgebant Caſſius atque Brutus eo ipſo quod effigies eorum non viſebantur (121). —— Caſſius and Brutus outſhone the reſt for this very Reaſon, becauſe their Statues were not expoſed. This Thought was applied to Meſſ. Arnauld and Paſcal. The Verſes, which were made on this Occaſion, have been ſpread all the World over; for they have been inſerted in the Nouvelles Hiſtoriques & Politiques, printed every Month at the Hague. Let us add, that ſeveral were of Opinion, that the Jeſuits did not act over prudently in this Affair; ſince the ſureſt way to draw the Eyes and Attention of the Public on Theſe two famous Perſons, was to oblige Mr Perrault to ſuppreſs their Elogies and Portraits. This Conduct ſerved only to enhance the Merit, which it ſtrove to efface; it led directly to the Paſſage of Tacitus; and could only occaſion Exclamations, and Cenſures, in favour of the Perſons ſuppreſs'd, and againſt the Inſtruments of their Suppreſſion. But all are not agreed as to the ſuppoſed Imprudence in this Point. Skillful Perſons have maintained, that the Faction, which all along oppoſed Mr Arnauld, did nothing but what favoured of the juſteſt and moſt refined Policy. What! ſay they; do you think Tiberius did not foreſee the Reflexions, which would be made, on his not expoſing the Statues of Brutus and Caſſius, among ſo many others, in a Funeral Ceremony? He knew the Advantage, which their Abſence might give them; but thought the Inconvenience greater in letting theſe two Aſſaſſins of Julius Cæſar appear among the Images of his Family; this would have been in ſome meaſure vindicating their Memory; and it was not his Intereſt to make the leaſt ſtep that way. There is no queſtion, but the Jeſuits likewiſe foreſaw the Advantage, which Mr Perrault's ſuppreſſing the Elogies of theſe two great Men would give them. But, all things conſidered, they thought this would be a much leſs Inconvenience to themſelves, than the giving the oppoſite Faction room to make their Advantage of Mr Arnauld and Mr Paſcal's appearing, with Privilege, on the Theatre of Illuſtrious Men. By procuring them to be ſtruck out, they armed themſelves with a new Act, which might be uſeful in the Courſe of the Proceſs: They kept them in Diſgrace; and prevented any one's alledging the Licence, obtained by Mr Perrault, as a Proof of their being reſtored; but, what was more conſiderable, the Public was prevented from imagining, that the Jeſuits had not the ſame Credit as formerly. The Public would ſcarce conclude, that, if the Characters and Elogies of Theſe two Gentlemen had full liberty to appear in a privileged Book, it was becauſe the Jeſuits had no Inclination to make any Oppoſition to it. It would be much more natural to think, that it was out of their Power to prevent it. Now ſuch an Opinion is to be guarded againſt; the Effects of it may be of ill Conſequence; for the Influence of Reputation is of great Efficacy, either in advancing or retarding Events. Who knows not, that, in Matters of Trade, a Merchant, who paſſes for rich, and is not ſo, is generally more ſucceſsful, than One, who is really rich, but paſſes for poor? All other Conditions of human Life are the ſame in this reſpect. If it be Imprudence to engage in certain things, it is ſtill greater Imprudence to abandon them, after having once engaged in them. Upon the whole, Honour and Glory are here both concerned. This Principle is no leſs active in the Wars at the Bar, than in thoſe properly ſo called (122). Laſtly, every one knows, that, in all Suits of great Importance, each Party provides againſt all the Proceedings of the other. Good Policy, then, required, that They ſhould not, by their Silence, acquieſce in any Proceedings of the Janſeniſts. They were to guard againſt Epitaphs, and the Authors of Elogies, the better to maintain the grand Proceſs, and ſup- port (121) Tacit. Annal. Lib. III, in fine.

(122) Marcellus multa magnis ducibus ſicut non aggredienda, ita ſemel aggreſſis non dimittenda eſſe dicendo, quia magna famæ momenta in utramque partem fierent, tenuit ne incepto abiretur. —— Marcellus confirmed him in his Undertaking, by ſaying, that, many things, as they ought not to be undertaken by great Generals, ſo, when once undertaken, are not to be dropped. Titus Livius, lib. IV, Decad III.

Digitized by Google

Mr Des Cartes [C C]. I have heard ſome, who were admitted to an Intimacy with him, ſay, that he was of great Plainneſs of Manners, and that, unleſs ſome Queſtion was propoſed to him, or ſome Information deſired, he ſaid nothing out of the Road of common Converſation [D D], or which might create a Suſpicion of his being a learned Man; but, when he was obliged to anſwer Thoſe, who put him upon ſome Point of Learning, he ſeemed to be quite another Man; he ſaid an hundred fine Things, with all the readineſs imaginable, and had a particular Gift of making himſelf intelligible to the meaneſt Capacity. I propoſe, in part of my Work (s), to inſert a Letter, which it is ſuppoſed the King wrote to him, in the Year 1678. By the way, They, who were the occaſion of his reſolving on a voluntary Exile, loſt more than they gained by it; for he never wrote againſt them in Paris, but religiouſly obſerved the Conditions of Peace; till ſeeing himſelf driven by force out of the Kingdom, he publiſhed a great number of Pieces, which have done the Jeſuits no ſmall Prejudice (t). It is pretended, that he became the Apoſtle of Janſeniſm in Holland [E E].

(s) See Remark [A] of the Article YPRES.

(t) See the Abridg'd Hiſtory of his Life, pag. 179.

port the Diſcuſſion of the Problem, or Curious Enquiry, whether Mr Arnauld be an Heretic; a ſtrange Queſtion indeed, and which ſome Roman Catholics affirm, and others deny daily, with Impunity. This ſhews, there is a Source of Anarchy in the State of Man, which can never be wholly rectified. It is chiefly to be ſeen in Eccleſiaſtical Bodies; for, ſince the Church of Rome has not the Secret of determining between the Affirmative and the Negative, what other Church can ever expect to have it? Other Churches have not, like That, Tribunals, which are acknowledged to be infallible. They are not governed with ſuch an Air of Authority, and high Reputation, as That is. It is, therefore, leſs to be wondered at, that the Proteſtant Miniſters accuſe each other of Hereſy in printed Books, than that a Doctor of the Sorbonne ſhould be torn to pieces, as an Heretic, by the Faction of the Moliniſts, whilſt three Popes honoured him with their Friendſhip, Eſteem, and Praiſes, and the moſt famous Prelates ſet their ſolemn Approbations at the Head of his Works. It is near ſixty Years, ſince this Diſpute began (123); and there is ſtill as much room as ever to deny or affirm. Proteſtant Controverſies are not of ſuch long Continuance. They are generally adjuſted after three or four Pamphlets of a Side, and the Reputation of Orthodoxy, which they would take from each other, is ſecured to both. But even this ſmells a little of Anarchy, and of That State of Nature, in which the Aggreſſor has nothing more to fear, than the Reſiſtance of the Attacked, and not the Puniſhment of a common Judge. Bodies Politic are not ſubject to ſuch Diſorders. No one is permitted to call another Knave, or Raſcal; Thief, Traitor, Murderer, Proſtitute, or Liar (124). Reputation is here ſomething better fixed.

(123) This was wrote in 1699.

(124) This muſt be underſtood with regard to publick Accuſations.

For the reſt, the Suppreſſion, enjoined Mr Perrault, hindered not, but that the Copies of his Book, publiſhed in Holland, contained the Elogies of Meſſieurs Arnauld and Paſcal. It only occaſioned ſome ſmall Confuſion in the figuring the Pages, which the Edition of Holland has ſet right.

[C C] The Eſteem, which Mr Arnauld gained with Mr Des Cartes.] He was the Author of four Objections againſt This Philoſopher's Speculations; and they are judged by all to be the ſolideſt, that have been propoſed againſt That Work. Mr Des Cartes himſelf gave this Judgment of them: ſee his Life compoſed by Mr Baillet (125). I muſt obſerve, that Mr Arnauld had taught the ſame Philoſophy at Paris, with That of Mr Des Cartes, before the latter had publiſhed his firſt Eſſays (126). So that he was as falſely called a Carteſian, as a Janſeniſt. Read what follows: "He had fetched his Opinion of Grace "from the Source; that is, from St Auſtin's Works, "before ever the Book of Mr d'Ypres appeared. "He had publickly maintained them, in the Preſence "of Biſhops, four or five Years before That Prelate's "Book was publiſhed (127). He had embraced "them without ſo much as knowing, that Janſenius "was writing on Grace ——." Scarce did he know, that there was ſuch a Man, as Janſenius, in the World (128).

(125) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. pag. 124, &c. See alſo Perrault's Illuſtrious Men, pag. 57, 58.

(126) Id. ib. pag. 544. See alſo pag. 328.

(127) Abridged Hiſtory of Mr Arnauld, pag. 35.

(128) Ibid. pag. 31.

[D D] He ſaid nothing out of the Road of common Converſation.] This muſt be underſtood with ſome Reſtriction; otherwiſe it cannot be reconciled with what we find in the Account of his Life; we there meet with ſome Hours of Converſation after Meals, "in which much was to be learned from him; be-"cauſe, being qualified for Reflexion, he always made "ſuch as were very ſolid, either on human Events, "on the Conduct of Life, on the Rules of Morality, "or on Matters of Learning, and public Affairs. "Theſe Converſations were often employed in peru-"ſing new Books; and he always judged ſo rightly "of them, that the Opinion he gave (tho' rarely "with a deciſive Air) was deciſive of itſelf, and with-"out Appeal. His Memory, as things were read or "ſpoken in Company, ſupplied him always with "ſomething of what the beſt Authors had ſaid on "the ſame Subject: And it was ſurprizing to hear "him repeat a great number of Latin, and French, "Verſes, which he had read only in his Youth, or "ſeveral Years before. He was a Maſter of the La-"tin Poets, and applied the fineſt Paſſages of them "with great Juſtneſs, and a great Preſence of Mind, "according as occaſion offered in Converſation (129)." Let us ſay, then, that his Converſation was plain and vulgar, only when he was with Perſons, who were not intimate with him, or who did not engage him by their Queſtions to exert his Talents.

(129) Ibid. p. 287, 288.

[E E] It is pretended, that he became the Apoſtle of Janſeniſm in Holland.] There appeared a ſmall Book (130) in the Year 1698, in which it is affirmed (131), that Mr Arnauld "having wandered for ſome time "in the Catholic Netherlands, at laſt took Refuge in "Holland. Mr Neerkaſſel, Biſhop of Caſtoria, and "Apoſtolical Vicar in the United Provinces, received "him as a Man of God, and lodged him in his "Nunnery of Delft; where Mr Arnauld lived ſome "Years without being known to any, but his inti-"mate Friends. In this Place he governed the Mind "of That Prelate abſolutely, who took great delight "in recommending all the young Divines, in whom "he diſcovered any Genius, to Him for Inſtruction. "His moſt conſtant Companions were Mr de Codde, "the preſent Archbiſhop of Sebaſta, and Succeſſor of "the Biſhop of Caſtoria in the Apoſtolical Vicarſhip; "Mr van Huyſſen - - - - So that Janſeniſm in Holland "proceeded, properly ſpeaking, from the Nunnery "of Delft, about the Year 1689.

(130) Intituled Memoirs concerning the Progreſs of Janſeniſm in Holland.

(131) Pages 8, and 9.

ARNGRIMUS, a learned Man, and a Native of Iſeland. Look for JONAS.

ARNISÆUS (HENNINGUS) born at Halberſtadt, and Profeſſor of Phyſic in the Univerſity of Helmſtadt, was a Philoſopher, and Phyſician, very much eſteemed towards the beginning of the XVIIth Century. His Political Works are in great Repute, in which he has eſtabliſhed a Tenet directly oppoſite to That of Althuſius [A]. He was invited to Denmark, and went thither; where he had the Honour to be

(1) See the Article ALTHUSIUS.

[A] He eſtabliſhed, in his Political Works, a Tenet directly oppoſite to That of Althuſius (1).] For he maintained, that the Authority of Princes ought never to be violated by the People. See his Book de Authoritate be the King's Counſellor, and Phyſician (a). The Univerſity of Helmſtadt loſt greatly by this Retreat [B]. It is falſely pretended, that he was Profeſſor at Jena [C], and that he left his Library to the Univerſity of That Place. It might have been ſaid, without a Falſhood, that he read Lectures in the Univerſity of Francfort on the Oder, before he read Any in That of Helmſtadt (b). He had travelled into France and England (c). He died in the Month of November 1635 (d). I ſhall give the Titles of ſeveral of his Works [D].

Digitized by Google

(a) Witte, in Diario Biogr. ad Ann. 1635.

(b) Arniſæus, Præf. Introd. de Jure Majeſt.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Witte, ubi ſupra.

ritate Principum in populum ſemper inviolabili, printed at Francfort, in the Year 1612. See alſo his three Books de Jure Majeſtatis, printed at the ſame Place in 1610, and his Prælectiones Politicæ, printed alſo at Francfort, in the Year 1615. He did not finiſh this laſt Piece, which however appeared to be very fine. Opus præclarum, ſed imperfectum (2). He gave a Catalogue of Thoſe, who have maintained, that the Sovereignty reſided in the People; a moſt pernicious Doctrine, in the Opinion of Boeclerus, and the Hinge of Rebellion. A fatali hoc & peſtilenti errores —— ſuſpenſa eſt omnis illa rebellandi licentia, quam variis vocabulis præſcribunt (3). Boeclerus adds, that it is a deplorable Conſideration, that there are very great Men in This Liſt, and remarks the different Paſſions, which lead them to take this Side. "Patronos & Præcones nefariæ philoſophiæ recen- "ſuit Arniſæus principio libri de auctoritate prin- "cipum in populum ſemper inviolabili. Fuiſſe in illis "magnos viros, dolendum: quorum aliquos animus "arrogans, elatus, indomitus, ad fingendam & pin- "gendam libertatem ſtoico ſupercilio forte impulerit: "alios metus oppreſſionis & tyrannidis eo evibraverit, "ut poteſtatem civilem bene conſtitutam negarent, "niſi populo ſubjiciatur: nonnullis commentitiæ ſa- "pientiæ ſpecies placuerit, ut tali tanquam terricu- "lamento reges, ne in tyrannidem elaberentur, reten- "tatos cuperent (4). —— Arniſæus, in the begin- "ning of his Book, Of the Inviolable Authority of "Princes over the People, reckons up the Patrons "and Preachers of the contrary wicked Doctrine. It "is melancholy to conſider, that there are many "great Men among Them; ſome of whom, perhaps, "were prompted, by an Arrogant, Elate, Unconque- "rable Diſpoſition, to conceive and deſcribe Liberty "with all the Pride of Stoicism; others were driven, "by the fear of Oppreſſion and Tyranny, to deny any "Government to be well conſtituted, which is not "ſubject to the People; and ſome were pleaſed with "a kind of pretended Philoſophy, which taught them, "that Kings ſhould be kept in Awe, leaſt they de- "generate into Tyrants." If ſuch a Catalogue were to be made in this preſent Year 1699, it would be much larger; for the Doctrine of the Supream Authority of the People is of late grown into Faſhion. Grotius praiſes a Political Piece of Arniſæus very highly (5).

(2) Boſius de comparanda Prudentia Civili, n. 20.

(3) Boeclerus in Grot. de Jure Belli & Pacis, lib. I. cap. 3. n. VIII. pag. 236.

(4) Id. ib.

(5) Grot de Imperio Summar. Poteſtatum circa Sacra, cap. III. n. 8.

[B] The Univerſity of Helmſtadt loſt much by His Retreat.] This is teſtified by Conringius, who ſtyles Arniſæus, æternum Juliæ Academiæ & incomparabile ornamentum (6), —— The Perpetual and Inimitable Ornament of the Julian Academy. "Vir incompara- "bilis, ſays he, in another Book (7), à quo civilis "philoſophiæ in Academia Julia, ut alibi nuſquam, "fuit exculta, & ſimul Imperii quoque, ut aliarum "Rerum publicarum veterum recentiumque, hiſtoria "etiamſi ſparſim quidem, accurate tamen ſatis eſt "inculcata —— illius in Daniam diſceſſu ſimul u- "trumque hoc ſtudiorum genus fuerit heic quaſi "conſepultum. —— An Incomparable Man; who "cultivated Politics in the Univerſity of Helmſtadt, "beyond what it had ever been elſewhere; and, at "the ſame Time, inculcated the Hiſtory of the Empire, "as alſo of other Republics both ancient and modern, "accurately enough, though ſcattered here and there. "—— By his Departure to Denmark both theſe "kind of Studies were at once buried in this Uni- "verſity."

(6) Conring. de Civili Prudentia, cap. 14.

(7) Id. in Dedicat. Exercitat. de Rep. Imperii German.

[C] It is falſely pretended, that he was Profeſſor at Jena.] This we find in an Edition of a Work of Boſius, de comparanda prudentia civili. But This Edition was diſclaimed by Boſius's Widow. See the Advertiſement, which ſhe inſerted at the beginning of this Book, when ſhe publiſhed it free from the Errors, which diſfigured the former Edition.

[D] The Titles of ſeveral of his Works.] Beſides the Poetical Treatiſes, which I have already mentioned (8), he wrote a Book de Subjectione & Exemptione Clericorum ——Of the Subjection and Exemption of the Clergy: Another de poteſtate temporali Pontificis in Principes —— Of the Temporal Authority of the Pope over Princes: Another de Tranſlatione Imperii Romani —— Of the Tranſlation of the Roman Empire: Another de Republica —— Of Civil Society: Another de Jure Connubiorum (9) —— Of the Rights of Marriage: The Title of another is Doctrina Politica in genuinam methodum, quæ eſt Ariſtotelis, reducta & ex probatiſſimis quibuſque Philoſophis, Oratoribus, Juriſconſultis, Hiſtoricis, &c. breviter comportata & explicata (10) —— Political Inſtitutes reduced to Ariſtotle's Method, and briefly compiled and explained from the moſt approved Philoſophers, Orators, Lawyers, Hiſtorians, &c. He wrote alſo on Phyſic: His Obſervationes aliquot Anatomicæ —— Some Anatomical Obſervations; were printed at Francfort in the Year 1610, in 4to. His Diſpute de Lue Venerea cognoſcenda & curanda —— Of the Knowledge and Cure of the Veneral Diſeaſe; was printed the ſame Year at Oppenheim, in 4to. I do not know the date of the firſt Edition of his Diſquiſitiones de partus humani ligitimis terminis —— Enquiries into the lawful Bounds of Human Birth; nor of his Books de Præſervatione à Peſte —— Of a Preſervative againſt the Plague: de Hydropum eſſentia & curatione —— Of the Eſſence and Cure of Dropſies: de apoplexia & epilepſia cognoſcendis & curandis (11) —— Of the Knowledge and Cure of the Apoplexy and Epilepſy. As for his Philoſophical Writings, we are to know, that he wrote Annotations on Crellius's Logic: Epitome Metaphyſices ad mentem Ariſtotelis —— An Abridgment of Metaphyſics according to the Principles of Ariſtotle: De conſtitutione & partibus Metaphyſicæ —— Of the Conſtitution and Parts of Metaphyſics: Vindiciæ pro Ariſtotele de ſubjecto Metaphyſicæ & Natura Entis —— Ariſtotle vindicated on the Subject of Metaphyſics, and the Nature of Being: Diſputationes VIII Metaphyſicæ —— Eight Metaphyſical Diſputations: Epitome doctrinæ Phyſicæ —— An Epitome of Natural Philoſophy.

(8) In Remark [A].

(9) See the Diarium Biograph. of Witte ad Ann. 1635.

(10) See Lindenius renovatus, pag. 390.

(11) Witte, ubi ſupra.

ARNOBIUS, Profeſſor of Rhetoric, at Sicca, in Numidia, towards the end of the IIId Century, was brought over to the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity by Dreams (a). He applied himſelf to the Biſhops for admiſſion into the Church; but They, remembring how violently he had always oppoſed the true Faith, diſtruſted him, and, before his admiſſion into the Number of Catechumens, would have him give Proofs of his Sincerity [A]. To ſatisfie them, he wrote a Book againſt the Gentiles, wherein

(a) See Remark [A].

[A] The Biſhops — before his Admiſſion into the Number of Catechumens, would have him give Proofs of his Sincerity.] St Jerom furniſhes us with theſe Particulars. "Arnobius Rhetor, ſays he (1), clarus in Africa habe- "tur: qui quum in civitate Siccæ ad declamandum "juvenes erudiret, & adhuc Ethnicus ad credulitatem "ſomniis compelleretur, neque ab Epiſcopo impetra- "ret fidem quam ſemper impugnaverat, elucubravit "adverſus priſtinam religionem luculentiſſimos libros, "& tandem velut quibuſdam obſidibus pietatis fœdus "impetravit. —— Arnobius is a famous Rhetorician "of Africa; this Perſon taught Oratory in the City of "Sicca, and was converted from Heatheniſm by "Dreams; but being diſtruſted by the Biſhops, as ha- "ving hitherto oppoſed the Faith, he wrote an excel- "lent Work againſt his former Religion, and, at laſt, "upon

(1) Hieron. in Chronico Euſebii ad Ann. II. Olymp. 276.

Digitized by Google

in he very powerfully confuted the Abſurdity of their Religion, and the Ridiculouſneſs of their falſe Gods. He employed all the Flowers of his Rhetoric, and diſplayed much Learning, in it; but, as he had a laudable Impatience to be admitted into the Body of the Faithful, He made a little too much haſte in compoſing this Work [B]; which is the true Reaſon, why It is not ſo juſtly and beautfully diſpoſed, as could be wiſhed. The worſt is, that, not having a full Knowledge of the Chriſtian Truths, he vented very dangerous Errors [C]. It is not known what became of him afterwards, nor at what time he died. His Work contains Seven Books, and

" upon giving theſe Hoſtages of his Sincerity, was " admitted to the Peace of the Church." He was looked upon as an Enemy, who had a Mind to enter into a Treaty of Peace; but, before the Concluſion of it, they expected Security for his good Behaviour; Hoſtages were demanded, and he gave them: Theſe were Seven Invectives againſt the Pagans: He was afterwards looked upon as a good Brother; and received into the Peace of the Church.

[B] He made a little too much haſte in compoſing this Work.] Let us Comment upon this by a Paſſage of Baronius. " Quod verò opus illud, ut in- " ter Fideles admitteretur, quaſi fidei ſuæ vadem " feſtinus abſolvit; hinc planè eſt quòd in eo (ut ait " Hieronymus) fuiſſe viſus eſt inæqualis & nimius, " & abſque operis ſui partitione confuſus. Rurſum " verò quòd nondum plenè eſſet ſcientia rerum Chri- " ſtianarum imbutus, utpote cùm non ſolùm non " fuerit baptiſmate illuſtratus, ſed nec in Eccleſiam " inter catechumenos acceptus; venia dignus eſt, ſi " aliquibus nævis viſus eſt commentarius ille eſſe reſ- " perſus (2). —— The Reaſon of That Inequality, Pro- " lixity, and Confuſion, which St Jerom obſerved in " This Work, which he wrote as a Pledge of his Faith, " in order to be admitted among the Faithful, was " the haſte, with which he compoſed it. Again, if this " Commentary be interſperſed with ſome Errors, the " Author may in excuſe ſay, that he had not as yet a " full Knowledge of Chriſtianity, having neither been " enlightened by Baptiſm, nor received into the Church " among the Catechumens (3)."

(2) Baronius ad Ann. 302. n. 67. pag. 733.

(3) Mr du Pin is not of this Opinion. He compoſed, ſays he, (Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccleſ. Tom. I. pag. 203.) when he was but a Catechumen, VII Books.

[C] He vented very dangerous Errors.] We have juſt ſeen, that Baronius imputes the Heterodoxy of the Seven Books of Arnobius to the Precipitation, with which they were written: For the Author could not defer writing them, 'till he had leiſure to be better inſtructed in all the Points of the Chriſtian Faith. The Annaliſt would have us excuſe the Errors of Arnobius, as being of no Conſequence; but it is certain, that the Inquiſition would, at this Day, condemn Thoſe to be burnt, who ſhould publiſh ſuch Doctrines. I own, we ought to make great Allowances for Arnobius; but it is no leſs true, that his Opinions concerning the Origin of the Soul, and the Cauſe of Natural Evil, together with ſome other capital Matters, are very pernicious. This I have obſerved elſewhere (4). In regard to our Myſteries, he might have pleaded what Perſius confeſſes with Regard to Poetry, that he ventured to write, before he underſtood his Subject.

(4) Conſult the Table of This Dictionary, at the Word ARNOBIUS.

Nec fonte labra prolui Caballino:
Nec in bicipiti ſomniaſſe Parnaſſo
Memini, ut repente ſic Poëta prodirem.
Heliconidaſque, pallidamque Pyrenen
Illis remitto, quorum imagines lambunt
Hederæ ſequaces. Ipſe ſemipaganus
Ad ſacra Vatum carmen affero noſtrum (5).

(5) Perſius, in Prologo.

I never did on cleft Parnaſſus Dream,
Nor taſte the ſacred Heliconian Stream;
Nor can remember when my Brain inſpired
Was by the Muſes into Madneſs fired.
My Share in pale Pyrene I reſign,
And claim no part in all the mighty Nine.
Statues, with winding Ivy crown'd, belong
To nobler Poets, for a nobler Song:
Heedleſs of Verſe, and hopeleſs of the Crown,
Scarce half a Wit, and more than half a Clown,
Before the Shrine I lay my rugged Numbers down.

DRYDEN.

Read here Mr Du Pin's Judgment. " It is plain he was " not as yet thoroughly inſtructed in the Myſteries of " our Religion. He attacks the Religion of the " Pagans more ſolidly, than he defends That of the " Chriſtians. He diſcovers the Folly of Paganiſm " more happily, than he proves the Truth of Chri- " ſtianity. But this ought not to be thought ſtrange; " for it is common to all new Converts, who, being " as yet full of their own Religion, are better able to " detect the Errors and Folly of it, than to diſplay " the Proofs and Excellency of That, which they " embrace (6)." I meet with no Author, who ſpeaks ſo tenderly of Arnobius's Errors, as Dr Cave. He ſays, that, perhaps, there are Doctrines in him ſomething different from the True Faith. " Dogmata quædam " habet FORSAN minus Catholica, quæ homini è " Gentilium tenebris recens erumpenti, & nondum " Chriſtianæ fidei elementis ſatis inſtructo, condonanda " ſunt (7). —— He advances ſome Doctrines perhaps " not altogether Catholic, which may be pardoned in " one but juſt emerged from the Darkneſs of Paganiſm, " nor yet fully inſtructed in the Elements of Chriſtian " Faith." This is carrying the Indulgence much farther, than was done in the Preface to the Edition of Leyden in 1651, where it was thought ſufficient to ſay, that Arnobius ſwerved a little from Orthodoxy. " Aliis in locis à veritate Chriſtiana NONNIHIL rece- " dit. Sed hoc condonandum illi, qui ex Ethniciſmi " tenebris recens ad veritatem Chriſtianam pervenerat. " Idem huic Autori evenit, quod iis ſolet, qui ex " carcere tenebricoſo in lucem perducti viſum adhuc " dubium habent (8). —— In other places, he recedes " a little from Chriſtian Truth. But he is excuſeable " in this, being then but juſt arrived from the Darkneſs " of Heatheniſm to Chriſtian Truth. Our Author's " Caſe is the ſame with Theirs, who, being brought out " of a dark Dungeon into Light, cannot immediately " diſtinguiſh Objects with certainty." Once again; let us excuſe This Father, but not be ſo ſimple, as to call the Doctrines, he advanced, by the ſoft Name of Small Errors. If we conſider them right, they merit the ſame Treatment as would be given them, at this Day, if any Doctor ſhould at preſent advance them. It muſt be owned, without a Cavil, that a Modern Author read a good Lecture to his Cenſor upon this Subject. Let us hear him. " Mr Jurieu weighs " Errors in a falſe Balance. He judges of the Do- " ctrine by the Perſons, and not the Perſons by the " Doctrine. One and the ſame Error alters it's Na- " ture, according to the Circumſtances of Place, and " Time. It is monſtrous Hereſy, according to the " Subject in which it is found, and the Age in which " it reigns. This Partiality of Mr Jurieu appears " in all his Diſputes againſt the preſent Sectaries, in " whom he pardons nothing; at the ſame time that " he carries his Indulgence for the Fathers to a prodi- " gious Exceſs —— (9). The reſpect we have for " Perſons ſhould not make us reſpect their Errors, " when they are capital. On all occaſions of the " like Nature, we ſhould call A Spade, a Spade, &c." Mr Jurieu willingly excuſes Origen's Errors, on account of his great Zeal; but, if any Modern ſhould preſume to put us off with the Dreams of the Ancients, Mr Jurieu would not think himſelf obliged to bear with them. " If Theſe viſionary Notions " be Hereſy and Impiety, which change Hell into " a Purgatory, and by this means deſtroy the Dread " of Eternal Puniſhment, and the Fear of God, why " ought they to be ſuffered in Origen (10)? —— " The Tenderneſs, with which Mr Jurieu ſpeaks of " St Hilary's, and St Jerom's Errors, is certainly " not edifying." He excuſes them, by ſaying they are Miſtakes, and Overſights. " But, ſhould a Divine " of this Age think fit to maintain the ſame Opinions," Mr Jurieu would think himſelf obliged to call them Extravagancies, and Impieties. " What a notorious " Partiality is This! The ſame Things, which are " Extravagancies, and Impieties, in our Age, are " only excuſable Miſtakes, and Overſights, in the " IVth

(6) Du Pin, Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccleſ. Tom. I. pag. 204. Col. 2. Edit. of Holland.

(7) Guliel- mi Cave Hiſtor. Literar. pag. 112.

(8) Præf. Arnobii in Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1651.

(9) Saurin, Examen de la Doctrine de Mr Jurieu, pag. 681.

(10) Id. ib. pag. 683.

Digitized by Google

and not Eight, as was believed for ſome time [D]. They have been commented on by learned Men, and printed ſeveral times [E].

" IVth Century. Why ſo (11)?" This Author pretends to have diſcovered the ſource of theſe double Weights. Let us hear him again (12). " Mr Jurieu " forgives them Thoſe Errors, as light and trifling " Faults, which, in Perſons of our own Age, would be " Infernal Hereſies. It is common for us to ſhew " great Reſpect, and an high Eſteem, for Thoſe, " who have had the happineſs to live ſeveral Centuries " before us; tho' we diſcover in them all Thoſe " Weakneſſes, and bad Qualities, which we cannot " ſuffer in the Moderns. If we cannot eſteem the " Ancients, we think ourſelves at leaſt obliged to " love them; and, by judging with Chriſtian Charity, to put the moſt favourable Conſtruction we " can upon their Words. Whereas, on the contrary, " we glory in an enflamed Zeal againſt our Cotemporaries; we forgive them nothing, but are laviſh of " our Anathema's againſt them. And yet, the Intereſts of Religion once preſerved, Charity ſhould " rather be exerciſed towards the Living, than Thoſe, " who have been dead for ſeveral Ages paſt. The " Charity, we have for Theſe, coſts us little; becauſe their Merit does not excite our Jealouſy and " Envy, nor do we conſider them as our Rivals. But " we muſt mortify Self-love not a little, to judge " charitably of an Adverſary, who ſpeaks and writes " againſt us, and whoſe Reputation eclipſes our " Glory; and this is a Sacrifice, which we do not " eaſily make. As Mr Jurieu had no Quarrel againſt " Origen, and as he has perſonal Enemies in the Socinian Party, no wonder, if he has more indulgence " for the former, than the latter."

[D] Seven Books, and not Eight, as was believed for ſome time.] Every one knows, that the Title of the ſmall Work of Minucius Felix is Octavius. It is found, in ſeveral ancient Manuſcripts, joyned with the Books of Arnobius, which occaſioned it's paſſing for One of His; and, without doubt, the Word Octavius, taken for Octavus, miſlead many a Reader. Let us cite the following Words of Mr du Pin. " This " Book (13) paſſed a long Time for the eighth Book " of Arnobius; for, being found in an ancient Manuſcript of the Vatican, with the ſeven Books of " Arnobius, it was four times printed under That " Name *, without any one's knowing it's true Author. The learned Civilian Baudouin was the firſt, " who diſcovered This vulgar Error, and cauſed This " little Treatiſe, with a learned Preface, in which " he reſtores it to it's proper Author, to be ſeparately printed at Heidelberg, in the Year 1560. Now, " tho' the Honour of having made the firſt Diſcovery " be due to This famous Civilian, yet, Thirty three " Years after, Urſinus, cauſing Arnobius's Works to " be printed at Rome, whether he had not ſeen Baudouin's Edition, or would aſſume the Honour of " This Remark to himſelf, ſeparated Minucius's Book " from Thoſe of Arnobius, without any Intimation " that it had been done before, thus aſcribing to himſelf the Honour of the Diſcovery (14)." We find much the ſame thing in the Preface (15) to the Minucius Felix, printed at Leyden in the Year 1652. We there find likewiſe, that, almoſt at the ſame time that Francis Baudouin made it appear, that the pretended eighth Book of Arnobius was the Work of Minucius Felix, another Critic had ſome Suſpicion of the Miſtake. " Eodem fere tempore id ipſum " ſuboluit etiam Hadriano Junio (16). —— About the " ſame time Hadrian Junius began to ſuſpect the ſame " Thing." This is not exact: It ſhould have been ſaid, that Francis Baudouin was not the firſt, who diſcovered it; for He did not publiſh what he knew of the Matter, till four Years after another had communicated This Thought to the Public. His Minucius appeared in the Year 1560. Now we find the following Paſſage concerning this Matter, in a Piece, which Hadrian Junius publiſhed in the Year 1556. " Arnobio, qui ſeptem duntaxat adverſum gentes libros " edidit, octavus accrevit, quum ſit Minucii Felicis " Octavius, ab interlocutorum uno ita vocitatus, nova " ratione obliterandi auctoris (17). —— An Eighth " Book was inſenſibly tacked to the ſeven Books of Arnobius againſt the Gentiles, which was indeed the " Octavius of Minucius Felix, ſo called from one of " the Interlocutors; a new Way of concealing the Au- " thor." The following Year, Baudouin was not cured of the common Error; for he cited the Treatiſe of Minucius as the eighth Book of Arnobius. " Sic " ille apud Arnobium Cecilius Chriſtianos dictitat cum " coëunt infantis occiſi ſanguinem lambere (18). —— " Horribilis profecto eſt oratio Cecilii illius leguleii " Romani qui apud Arnobium libro octavo hæc ad- " huc Chriſtianis objicit (19). —— Thus the Cecilius " in Arnobius pretends, that the Chriſtians, when " they come together, drink the Blood of a murthured " Infant. —— It is a ſhocking Speech of That Cecilius, " the Roman Lawyer, who, in the eighth Book of " Arnobius, ſtill charges the Chriſtians with This " Practice." Lewis Carrio aſcribed to Junius the Honour of being the firſt, who had reſtored the Octavius to it's True Author; and, in a Book, which he publiſhed, at Paris, in the Year 1583, he ſpeaks thus. " Illi (Minucio) Octavum adverſus gentes " librum Junius noſter in Animadverſis ſuis princeps " jam olim vindicavit (20).---- Our Junius, the Firſt, " who made the Diſcovery, had before, in his Animad- " verſions, reſtored the eighth Book againſt the Gen- " tiles to it's True Author, Minucius Felix." Read theſe Words of Mr Joly: " Minutii Felicis vetuſtiſ- " ſimi ſcriptoris Chriſtiani dialogus elegantiſſimus " contra idolorum vanitatem tàm diu pro octavo " Arnobii adverſus gentes libro habitus eſt, quia Mi- " nutius eum ſub nomine Octavii protulerat, donec " à Franciſco Balduino Juriſconſulto, anno 1560, " Arnobio abductus, & genuino Autori redditus eſt, " veluti Nicolaus Rigaltius in præfatione ad eundem " Minutium obſervavit (21). —— The moſt elegant " Dialogue of Minucius Felix, againſt the Vanity of " Idolatry, was ſo long thought to be the eighth Book " of Arnobius, adverſus gentes, becauſe he had in- " ſcribed it Octavius; till Francis Baudouin, the " Lawyer, took it from Arnobius, and reſtored it to " the true Author, as Nicolas Rigaltius obſerved in " the Preface to the ſame Minucius." Here are two learned Men, who were ignorant, that Junius was before-hand with Baudouin in the Diſcovery of the true Author of the Octavius. However I think Mr Joly had no reaſon to place This Book in the Liſt of the Pſeudonymous. He pretends, that, in publiſhing it, the Author diſguiſed himſelf under the Name of Octavius; I think it were better to ſay, that Octavius is the Title of the Book, and not the ſuppoſed Name of it's Author. It would be improper, to ſay, that Plato's Dialogues were publiſhed under the Falſe Names of the Perſons, from whom they are entituled. Minucius Felix imitated Plato; he would have his Dialogue carry, for it's Title, the Name of The principal Interlocutor.

[E] His Works——have been printed ſeveral times.] If I had the neceſſary Books, I would give an exact account of the Editions of Arnobius; but I muſt give up this Deſign, and confine myſelf to ſome critical Obſervations on Thoſe, who have given us Catalogues of theſe Editions. The Author of the Preface to the Arnobius, printed at Leyden, in the Year 1651, ſays, I. That the firſt Edition of This Father is That, which Francis Priſcianenſis, a Florentine, publiſhed at Rome; but does not ſay in what Year; a Fault of Omiſſion, which cannot be excuſed. II. That Sigiſmund Gelenius altered ſeveral things in this Edition, not by the Aſſiſtance of Manuſcripts, but by truſting to the Conjectures of his own Genius. III. That Theodore Canterus, in publiſhing Arnobius with Additions, complained of Gelenius's Boldneſs. IV. That Godeſcalc Stewechius laboured with Succeſs on This Father. V. That Elmenhorſt added to his Commentary the various Readings, collected as well from the Manuſcripts, and the Edition publiſhed at Rome, in the Year 1542, from an ancient Manuſcript of Francis Sabæus (23), as from the Edition of Fulvius Urſinus. VI. That Deſiderius Heraldus publiſhed Annotations on the Seven Books of Arnobius. I have three things to offer againſt all this: In the firſt Place, the Liſt of the Editions is very imperfect; in the ſecond Place, the Edition of Rome, 1532, is the ſame with the Firſt, though it be mentioned here as different from it. In the third Place, it is not true, that the Annotations of Deſiderius Heraldus followed the Edition of Elmenhorſt. The latter is of the Year 1610, and Heraldus's Edition appeared at Geneva, in the Year 1597, and at Paris in the Year 1605.

(11) Id. id. pag. 684.

(12) Id. ib. pag. 687.

(13) To wit, That of Minucius Felix.

* The firſt by Sabæus, from the Manuſcript of Rome, in 1542. The ſecond, in Germany by, Gelenius. The third in Holland, at Leyden, in 1552. The fourth at Baſil by Eraſmus in 1560.

(14) Du Pin Bibl. des Auteurs Eccleſ. Tom. I. pag. 119, col. 2.

(15) Written by James Ouzelius.

(16) Jacob. Ouzelius in Præf. Minucii Felicis.

(17) Hadrianus Junius, Animadverſ. lib. VI. c. 1.

(18) Franciſcus Balduinus ad edicta veterum principum Rom. de Chriſtianis, pag. 47. Edit. Baſil. apud Oporinum, 1557.

(19) Id. ib. pag. 50.

(20) Ludov. Carrio, Emendat. lib. II. cap. 18, fol. 52.

(21) Claudius Joly, Diſſertat. de Verbis Uſnardi, pag. 134. This Book was printed in 1663.

(22) Rigaltius, and Joly.

(23) His Name was Fauſtus, and not Francis.

Digitized by Google

Let us now examine Mr du Pin's Liſt (24). I obſerve, in the firſt Place, that the proper Names in it are very much diſguiſed (25). There we find Canerus, inſtead of Canterus; Hermenborſtius, inſtead of Helmenborſtius; Stevuchius, inſtead of Stewechius. Beſides, I obſerve, that he mentions one Theodorus Priſcianenſis, as the Printer of the firſt Edition. This is certainly a miſtake. We have ſeen, that the Florentine Franciſcus Priſcianenſis was the firſt, who publiſhed the Works of Arnobius. Now he was no Printer. Pocciantius does not give him this Appellation; he only makes him a good Philologiſt, and Author of ſome Italian Books (26). I am perſuaded, that Fauſtus Sabæus, Library Keeper of the Vatican, communicated the Manuſcript to him, from which the Edition of Rome was printed, in 1542. Therefore, in the Preface of the Edition of Leyden, it was wrong to make a Diſtinction between the Edition of Franciſcus Priſcianenſis, and That, which was publiſhed from the Manuſcript of Sabæus. Note, that Lewis Carrio is of Opinion, that the Manuſcript of Arnobius, which is in the Library of the King of France, is That, which was employed in the firſt Edition (27). He imagines, that, becauſe it was dedicated to Francis I, the Manuſcript was likewiſe ſent him. In the third Place, I obſerve, that it is not true, that the ſeven Books of Arnobius were printed with the Notes of Heraldus, in 1583; nor that the Edition of Hamburgh, in 1610, ought to be diſtinguiſhed from That before-mentioned; I mean from That, which was accompanied with the Commentary of Elmenhorſt. Laſtly, I obſerve, that Stewechius did not publiſh an Edition of Arnobius, at Doüay, in the Year 1634; his Edition is of Antwerp, in 1686, and he had been dead a long time, when his Electa in Arnobium were reprinted at Doüay, in the Year 1634, Cum paratitlis ſeu Summariis Leandri de Sancto Martino. You will find a like Miſtake at Citation * of the Remark [D], where Mr Du Pin ſays, that Eraſmus publiſhed Arnobius in 1560; whereas He died in 1536.

Let us take ſome Notice of Father Labbé (28). He thinks the Edition of Leyden a very good one; but wonders, that The Undertakers of it, did not inſert the Arnobianus Criticus of Meurſius, which was printed at Leyden, in the Year 1598, cum Hypercritico Minutiano. He would at leaſt have had them take Notice of it. They, who ſhould retort upon him, that he himſelf ought to have remembered the Eclogæ ad Arnobium of Julius Cæſar Bulenger (29), would not have the ſame Reaſon; for That Book is of no uſe, either in correcting the Text of Arnobius, or in unfolding the literal Senſe; it is nothing but a Series of Quotations, explaining ſome Thoughts of Arnobius. The ſame Jeſuit reflects upon the great Salmaſius, for promiſing a Commentary on This Author, and not keeping his Word. Salmaſiani autem illi Commentarii tamdiu expectati, tam ſæpe ejus amicorumque literis promiſſi atque jactati, in fumum tandem ventoſque evanuerunt (30). I believe ſuch a Piece of Salmaſius would have made finer Diſcoveries, than his learned Commentary on the Treatiſe of Tertullian de Pallio.

(24) It is at the 205th Page, Col. 1. of the firſt Tome of his Bibliotheque Edit. Holl.

(25) I make uſe of the Edition of Holland.

(26) Pocciantius de Scriptor. Florentinis, pag. 69.

(27) Ludov. Carrio Emendat. lib. I. cap. 9. fol. 18. Mr Du Pin affirms it, pag. 110, Tom. I. Biblioth.

(28) Labbé, Diſſert. de Scriptor. Eccleſ. Tom. I, pag. 105.

(29) Printed at Toulouſe, in 1612, in 8vo.

(30) Labbé, ubi ſupra.

ARNOLDUS (NICHOLAS) Profeſſor of Divinity at Franeker, was born at Leſna, a City of Poland, the Seventeenth of December 1618. His Mother being left a Widow, when he was but three Years of Age, took all imaginable Care of his Education, and dedicated him to Learning. He went through his Humanity Studies in the College of Leſna, under Comenius, among other Regents, who at that time read his Janua Linguarum to his Scholars. He was ordained Acolyth (a), in the Synod of Oſtrorog, at Fifteen Years of Age, and, in this Station, accompanied Orminius (b), for two Years, in viſiting the Churches of Poland; after which, he was ſent to Dantzic, in the Year 1635, and there applied himſelf to the Study of Eloquence and Philoſophy. He ſometimes experienced the ill Humour of John Botſac, who was grieved, that a young Man of ſuch Hopes ſhould be a Calviniſt. In the Year 1638, he returned into Poland, and ſtudied Sermonary Theology *, under the Direction of Orminius, and, a Year after, was ſent to Podalia, to be Rector of the School of Jablonow. Having exerciſed This Employ during three Months, he diſcharged the Miniſterial Functions at the Houſe of a great Lord (c) for two Years ſucceſſively. It being obſerved, that his Talents might be of great Uſe to the Church, it was thought proper to give him an Opportunity of improving them in the moſt famous Univerſities. He began his Travels in the Year 1641, and came firſt to Franeker, where he made a great Progreſs under his Countryman Maccovius, and under Cocceius. The Year 1643 he ſpent in the Univerſities of Groningen, Leyden, and Utrecht, and ſoon after returned to Franeker; where he applied himſelf to ſtudy French and Engliſh. The following Year he went over into England; but, finding it impoſſible to get to Oxford, the Roads being ſtopped by the King's Forces, or by Thoſe of the Parliament, he went on Foot to Cambridge; but could hear no Divinity Lectures there, the Profeſſors being all under Confinement in Trinity College. Being on his Return to Franeker, he applied himſelf to Preaching, even in Dutch; and his Sermons were ſo well reliſhed, that, in hopes of retaining him in Frieſland, they diſſuaded him from reviſiting Poland. He was judged very capable of the Miniſtry by the Claſſical Synod of Franeker, who had examined him; and the Praiſes they gave him induced a young Gentlewoman of That Country to accept of him for a Huſband [A]. He was married to her in the Year 1645, and ſoon after (a) The Reformed Churches of Bohemia retain'd this Part of Ancient Diſcipline.---- An Acolyth is an Under Deacon, the loweſt Order of Prieſts.

(b) Superintendant of the Churches of Great Poland.

* A Syſtem of Divinity compiled from Sermons.

(c) Johannes de Potock Potocki, Succamerarius Terræ Halicienſis.

[A] The Praiſes they gave him induced a young Gentlewoman of That Country to accept of him for a Huſband.] This we are informed of by the Author of his Funeral Oration. "Fecit paulo poſt, ſays "he (1), tanta omnium laus, ut nobiliſſima in Friſiis "Virgo Remigia à NITZEN facilis in conjugales "ejus rueret amplexus anno 1645. —— Soon after, "This general Approbation induced a Noble Lady of "Frieſland, Remigia of NITZEN, readily to meet "his Embraces in Wedlock, in the Year 1645." This Lady was to be commended for preferring Reputation and Merit to Riches. There are other Examples of Matches of this Nature; for it is certain, that many Proteſtant Divines, recommended only by the Credit of their Eloquence, or Learning, have married to great Advantage, and rendered themſelves very conſiderable by the Rank of the Family, into which they have married. The great Probability, that they may, ſooner, or later, be raiſed to diſtinguiſhed Benefices, or conſiderable Profeſſorſhips, may have contributed towards it. Be this as it will, the Wife of our Arnoldus is to be commended. She died in the beginning of the Year 1652, and left no Children. In the Year 1653, he married again to the Widow of an Advocate of Leewaerden, whoſe Name was Anne Pybinga, the Daughter of a Burgo Maſter of Franeker, who brought him nine Children, five Sons (2) and four Daughters, and ſurvived him. He

(1) Marckius, in Orat. Funebr. Arnoldi, p. 32.

(2) The ſecond and third were Twins. See the Programma of the Rector of the Univerſity. It is printed before the Orat. Funebr.

Digitized by Google

after had an Invitation from the Church of Beetgum. He ſerved it faithfully and conſtantly, till the Year 1651, without liſtening to the Invitations addreſſed to him from other Churches; but, That Year, he complyed with the Inſtances of the States of Frieſland, who choſe him to ſucceed Cocceius, as Divinity-Profeſſor at Franeker (d). He diſcharged This Office with great Abilities 'till his Death, which happened on the Fifteenth of October 1680, after a tedious Sickneſs, in which he gave ſeveral Marks of his Piety, and Reſignation to the Orders from above (e). I ſhall mention ſome Journies which he took after his Promotion to the Profeſſorſhip [B] of Divinity; and ſhall not forget the Books, which he publiſhed [C].

(d) Cocceius had been invited by the Univerſity of Leyden.

(e) Taken from his Funeral Oration, pronounced, the 22d of October, 1680, by Mr Marck, then Profeſſor of Divinity at Franeker, and ſince at Groningen and Leyden.

He had but three Sons, and one Daughter, living, when he died (3).

(3) Taken from the ſame Programma, and the Orat. Funebr.

[B] Some Journies, which he took after his Promotion to the Profeſſorſhip.] In the Year 1652, he paid a Viſit to his Relations at Leſna, and paſſed a Month pleaſantly with his Uncle by the Mother-ſide, Martin Gertichius, Miniſter of the Place, and famous for ſeveral Works. He travelled again, in the Year 1656, in the Retinue of the four Ambaſſadors Extraordinary, which the States General ſent to the King of Sueden, and to the King of Poland. Their Excellencies would have him for their Preacher, and were very well pleaſed with the Sermons he made, either in Dutch, German, or Poliſh, as occaſion required. This Journey laſted two Years. In this time Arnoldus gained the Eſteem of Stephen Corycinsky, Chancellor of Poland, John Oxenſtiern, Great Marſhal of Sueden, Douglas, General of the Troops, and the Elector of Brandenburgh, who offered him the Poſt of Public Preacher. In the Year 1666, he was deputed to Heidelberg, to perſuade Spanhemius to accept of a Profeſſorſhip of Divinity in the Univerſity of Franeker, but returned without Succeſs.

[C] The Books, which he publiſhed.] I omit the Diligence, with which he collected and methodized the Works of Maccovius, which he put to the Preſs; and the Verſion, which he made, and publiſhed, of an Engliſh Book of Jeremiah Dykes (4); but I ſhall mention his Confutation of the Catechiſm of the Socinians; his Anti-Bidellus; his Anti-Echardus; his Book againſt Brevingius; his Apology for Ameſius againſt Ebermannus, Defender of Bellarmin; his Theological Diſputes on ſelect Subjects; his Commentary on the Epiſtle to the Hebrews; his Lux in tenebris; and what he publiſhed againſt John Amos Comenius. Read this Paſſage of his Funeral Oration concerning theſe Works: "Quis eſt qui non ---- "prædicet Raccovianæ Catecheſeos, in qua religionis "dicam an impietatis Socinianæ pleniſſimum eſt com- "pendium, curatiſſimam refutationem, quæ ſupra "fidem impiis ſeductoribus moleſta, doctis grata eſt? "Cujus non laudem meretur tum Anti-Bidellus, quo "Pneumatomachi furorem, & fatuam Comenii (5) lu- "cem extinxit; tum Anti-Echardus, cujus conquiſitum "& malè colligatum faſciculum ita diſſolvit, ut diſſo- "lutarum ſcoparum hactenus retinuerit nomen? Imo "quem non in mille detorſionum tenebris ineffa- "biliter delectat doctiſſimarum illa vindiciarum lux, "quam publico toties recuſam dedit, & cujus ope "tuta Eccleſia errorum evitat devia? Sed ne in hoc "quidem labore acquieſcere potuit, qui in Eccleſiæ "voluit conſumi bonum. Brevingii ab eo tempore "feliciter demolitus eſt tribunal, Erbermannum Bel- "larmino adverſus Ameſium ſuppetias ferentem con- "fodit, &c. (6). —— Who does not extol the ac- "curate Confutation of the Raccovian Catechiſm, "which is the fulleſt Compendium of the Religion, "or rather Impiety, of the Socinians; and which "is, beyond Expectation, irkſome to thoſe impious "Seducers, but highly acceptable to the Learned? "Whoſe Praiſe is not due to the Anti-Bidellus, in "which he extinguiſhed the Rage and falſe Light "of the Socinian Comenius; next the Anti- "Echardus, which ſo ruins That Author's Miſcel- "laneous and ill-connected Fardel, that it ſtill "retains the Name of The Broom pulled to pieces? "In ſhort, who is not inexpreſſibly pleaſed, in the "Darkneſs of a thouſand Turnings and Windings, "with the Light of thoſe learned Vindications, "which he ſo often publiſhed, and by the Help of "which The Church avoids the devious Paths of "Error? But he did not ſtop here; he deſired to lay "himſelf wholly out for the Good of the Church. "From that Time the Tribunal of Brevingius was "happily demoliſhed, and Erbermannus, who aſſiſted "Bellarmin againſt Ameſius, wholly vanquiſhed in "Diſpute, &c." Thus you have ſome ANTI's not in Mr Baillet's Liſt.

(4) Dykii Tranſlata Euchariſtica. Marchius, in Funebr. Orat. Arnoldi, pag. 35.

(5) I cite a Piece of Arnoldus againſt Comenius, in the Remarks [D], [I], &c. of the Article COMENIUS.

(6) Marckius, in Orat. Funebr. Arnoldi, p. 35.

ARODON (BENJAMIN d') a German Jew, Author of a Book full of Precepts for the Ladies. It was tranſlated from the German into Italian, by Rabbi Jacob Alpron. This Tranſlation was printed at Venice, in the Year 5412, according to the Jewiſh Calculation (a), after it had been carefully corrected by Rabbi Iſaac Levita. This Book is filled with Obſervances, not only in regard to Cleanlineſs of Body, but likewiſe with reſpect to the Practice of Prayer, and good Works. The Obſervances of the firſt kind contain ſeveral Niceties and ſuperſtitious Regularities; and there is ſometimes a great deal of Rigour in Thoſe of the ſecond [A]. This will be more fully ſeen in the Remark, which accompanies This Article.

(a) This I take to anſwer to our 1652.

[A] There is ſometimes a great deal of Rigour, in the Obſervances of the ſecond Order] For Example; "The Husband and Wife muſt not ſpeak a Word "in the Act of Conjugal Duty, and entertain only "pious Thoughts, without any Conſideration of the "Pleaſure, and in purſuance only of the Divine Will;" "and they are aſſured that, "if they act other- "wiſe, their Children will be born deformed, lame, "dumb, or ſquint-ey'd" "Ogni perſona deve eſſer "auvertita tanto l'huomo, come la donna, nel tem- "po che ſi congiungono inſieme, non devono par- "lar, nè haver niun cattivo penſiere, ne debbano "ſcopriere li luochi occulti é vergognoſi, perche "quelli che parlano in quel tempo che ſe congiun- "gono inſieme, quella creatura che viene conceputa "in quell' iſtante, riuſciſſe dal ventre della madre "con qualche נקדה ò zoppo, ò muto, ò guercio, "ò ſimili mancamenti, ò del tutto diſtrutto, è mal "conditionato —— non devono haver intentione "in quell' iſtante alli piaceri ma ſolo per adempir "il voler divino (1) —— ambidoi devono penſar "in quell' inſtante che queſto non lo fanno per il "lor giovamento & adempir il precetto —— ogn' "huome da bene ſa quello, che deve penſare in "quell' inſtante, perche ſi deve penſar ſolo à pen- "ſieri ſanti è pii (2)." This Precept is both very refined, and very rigid. See what is ſaid, in the News from the Republic of Letters (3), concerning a Book of Mr Yvon, a Miniſter of the Labadiſts. Such great Purity in this kind of Pleaſure is rather to be wiſhed, than hoped, for; nevertheleſs, the Caſuiſts are to be commended, for inſiſting upon it, and endeavouring to introduce Purity, where the Paſſion of Brutal Luſt has but too much ſway. Had our Rabbi believed, as the Church of Rome does, that Marriage is a Sacrament, he could not have required more Holy Diſpoſitions from the Married, than Thoſe he demands. He impoſes upon them at once the Law of favete linguis * (4), the Obſervation whereof the Pagans recommended in their greateſt Myſteries, and That of ſurſum corda †, which the ancient Church never forgot to preſcribe in the Celebration of it's moſt ſolemn Ceremonies. In a word, it is certain, that, had he received the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt with a true Faith, and been animated with the Spirit of Grace, he could not have given Advice more worthy of Evangelical Purity. This ought to ſhame the looſer Caſuiſts, who are ſo common among Chriſtians.

(1) Precetti da eſſer imparati dalle Donne Ebree cap. 13. pag. 41, 42.

(2) Ibid. cap. 71. p. 43.

(3) For Nov. 1685. pag. 1290.

* Keep Silence.

(4) Horat. Od. 1. lib. 3. See his Commentators on this Paſſage.

† Lift up your Hearts.

Note,

Digitized by Google

Note, that the Precepts of This Rabbi do not at all agree with the Advice of Phyſicians; who pretend, that a Child, conceived under Diſtraction of Mind, I mean under ſerious, grave, and ſpiritual Thoughts, will be ſimple, fooliſh, and weak (5). They give very different Advice to Thoſe, who deſire Children (6); but any Man of tolerable Senſe muſt grant, that They lead Mankind into a very bad School of Chaſtity; Their Precepts are calculated only for Thoſe, who would confine every thing to Animal, Earthly, Senſual, and Epicurean Life. We muſt go to our Rabbi's School, if we would learn to demean ourſelves, in this part of our Duty, like Creatures endowed with a Spiritual Soul, and not deſerve the Cenſure;

(5) See Remark [C] of the the Article ASSISA (Francis d').

(6) See Roderic de Caſtro, de Natura Mulierum, lib. 3. cap. 5.

O curvæ in terras animæ, & cœleſtium inanes (7)!
O ſordid Minds, of Heavenly Thoughts devoid!

(7) Perſius, Sat. II. ver. 36.

We ſhall the better comprehend how excellent and ſublime the Morality of This Jew is, if we remember, that it is directly oppoſite to the Maxims of Thoſe Doctors of Impurity, who have filled their Poems with ſo much Wantonneſs. Theſe dangerous Poiſoners are far from adviſing Silence; and it is This, which furniſhed a Modern with a Confirmation of the Interpretation he has given of the Words of a Greek Poet, which contain a Deſcription of the Grotto of the Nymphs. As for the agreeable Murmurings, ſays he (8), mentioned by Homer, they are without doubt the obliging Words of Lovers, the ohi me cor mio (Oh! my Heart!) of the Italians; the ζωὴ καὶ ψυχὴ (My Life and Soul!) of the Greeks; and the alma de mi alma (Soul of my Soul!) of the Spaniards; ſuch as attend upon the moſt favourable Privacies, and which made the moſt knowing, of all the Poets, in the Art of Love, to ſay;

(8) Hexameron Ruſtique, IV Journée, p. 212, &c.

Accedant queſtus, accedat amabile murmur,
Et dulces gemitus, aptaque verba joco *.

* Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. II. ver. 723.

And, whilſt in Bliſs together you expire,
Let Sighs, and gentle Murmurs, fan the Fire.

Hear what he ſays in another Place;

Et mihi blanditias dixit, dominumque vocavit,
Et quæ præterea publica verba juvant †.

† Id. Amor. Lib. III. Eleg. 6. ver. 81.

She liſp'd ſoft Flatt'ry, my Deſires to move,
And try'd the Force of Words, to kindle Love.

I will not inform you, that the Term juvare is altogether Erotic, and conſecrated to the laſt Delights of Love, which are again expreſſed, as well as the Murmurs, in theſe two Verſes of the ſame Author;

Me voces audire juvat ſua guadia faſſas,
Utque morer, me, me, ſuſtineamque roget ‖.

‖ Id. de Arte Amandi, Lib. II.

Give me the Girl, who dies upon the Kiſs,
In Murmurs ſoft, expreſſive of the Bliſs;
Who courts my Stay; whoſe Beauties never cloy,
Inſpire new Raptures, and revive the Joy.

—— The famous Epithalamium of the Emperor Gallienus, which Trebellius Pollio perſers to Thoſe of an hundred other Poets, who all exerciſed their Pens on the ſame Subject, wonderfully expreſſes theſe ſoft and obliging Murmurs, and the Careſſes, which are inſeparable from them. It is ſaid, that, holding the Hands of two of his Brother's Children, when he married them, he pronounced theſe Verſes of his own Compoſition;

Ite, ite, o pueri, pariter ſudate medullis
Omnibus inter vos, non murmura veſtra columbæ,
Brachia non hederæ, non vincant oſcula conchæ.

Now go, my Children! prove the Toils of Love;
In Murmurs ſoft ſurpaſs the cooing Dove;
Cling, like the Tendrils of the curling Vine;
And cloſe each Kiſs, as ſticks the Shell-fiſh, join.

It is difficult to conceive any thing more pathetic, or paſſionate, on this Head. To be diametrically oppoſite to Theſe falſe Doctors, the Bane of Youth, is no ſmall Praiſe; it is a juſt Preſumption, that the Morality, which one advances, is of admirable Purity. Add to all this the judicious Anſwer of the famous Mr Drelincourt to a Biſhop, who had made an Obſervation altogether unbecoming, I will not ſay a Perſon of his Character, but even a Layman, who is not over fond of a wanton Stile. Theſe are Mr Drelincourt's Words (9); "Inſtead "of waſhing out, with his Tears, thoſe ways of "ſpeaking, that the Virgin Mary is the Spirit and "Life of Chriſtians, he defends them with a Rail-"lery, which would better become Thoſe, who "tread the Stage. You Gentlemen, ſays he, Paſtors "of the Proteſtant Church, who have your dear "Counterparts, not ſo much inſeparable Accidents of "your Subſtance, as Bone of your Bone, and Fleſh "of your Fleſh, nay, who are but one Fleſh in two "Perſons, uſe indeed much more endearing Terms to "Thoſe Souls of your Souls, Thoſe Lives of your Lives, "Thoſe Lives of your Hearts and Souls, Thoſe Souls of "your Lives and Hearts, than the World knows of; for "you are Thoſe Spiritual Perſons, who judge the whole "World, nay the very Angels, and with much more "Reaſon the Romaniſts, without being ſubject to be "judged by any. I know not whence he had his In-"formation, and ſhall not anſwer for the Expreſſions "of Thoſe, who have Wives by ſtealth. But a "grave Perſon, who lives in a chaſte Marriage, "does not ſtudy ſuch extra-agant Rhetoric." The Prelate replied in a manner ſo Burleſque, that nothing could exceed it (10).

(9) Drelincourt's Avant-coureur de la Replique à Mr le Camus, Evêque de Belley, pag. 36, 37.

(10) See his Anſwer to the Avant-coureur of Mr Drelincourt, pag. 156.

ARRERAC (John d') Counſellor in the Parliament of Bourdeaux, towards the end of the XVIth Century, is Author of a Book, which I ſhall take notice of below [A].

[A] He is Author of a Book, which I ſhall take notice of below] It is entituled La Philoſophie Civile & d'Etat, diviſé en l'Irenarchie & la Polemarchie. —— Civil and Political Philoſophy, divided into Irenarchy and Polemarchy; and was printed at Bourdeaux, by Simon Millanges, in the Year 1598, in 8vo. It conſiſts of two Volumes, only the firſt of which I have ſeen (1). The Author gives us this Idea of it (2). "I have borrowed my Subject from the "Laws of the firſt Book of the Pandects, which "the Doctors univerſally deſpiſe, either becauſe "They do not underſtand them, or becauſe they "look upon them as of but little uſe toward Chi-"canery, of which they are more Slaves, on "account of the Gain they hope from it, "than Lovers of Virtue and Honour. This Book "is ſo rich and fruitful of excellent Laws, that I "am much miſtaken, if I do not prove in mine, "that it contains the greateſt Part of the Laws of "Nature, and of both Moral and Civil Philoſophy, "together with the Order of the Roman Magiſtracy "and Juriſdiction. I have added to this firſt Book "the two firſt Titles of the ſecond, upon which "I have diſcourſed of the Rights of Juriſdiction, as "well according to the Roman Policy, as our own "French and Eccleſiaſtical Law; and of This Law "of Nature; quod quiſque juris in alium ſtatuerit, "ut ipſe eodem jure utatur." This relates to the firſt Tome, or the Irenarchy, that is, State of Peace: what follows concerns his Polemarchy, or State of War. It is a ſmall Volume, containing, in four Books, the Qualities and Perfections of the General of an Army, the Artifices and Stratagems of ancient Commanders, the Uſes to be made of Occurrences in War, and the Way to preſerve a Victory, after it is obtained (3). This Author had read much, and is not ſparing of his Quotations; but, generally ſpeaking, he ſays but little on each particular Subject, which gives him room to treat of a great Number. He frequently attacks the moſt celebrated Lawyers, as Accurſius, Alciatus, Budæus, Cujacius, &c. and, from Time to Time, he makes uncommon Obſervations.

(1) It contains 721 Pages.

(2) J. d'Arrerac, Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Cardinal de Joyeuſe.

(3) Ibid. pag. 1.

ARRIA,

Digitized by Google

ARRIA, the Name of ſome Roman Ladies, whom I ſhall mention in the Remarks of the Article PAETUS.

ARRIAGA (RODERIC d') a Spaniſh Jeſuit, was born at Lucrona, the Seventeenth of January, 1592. He entered into the Society on the Seventeenth of September, 1606, and taught Philoſophy, with great Applauſe, at Valladolid, and Divinity at Salamanca; and, being informed, by Letters from the General of The Order, that it would be more for the Glory of God, that ſome Spaniſh Jeſuits ſhould go into Bohemia (a), to teach the ſublimer Sciences there, he offered himſelf for This Employ. He arrived at Prague in the Year 1624. He taught Scholaſtic Divinity there for the ſpace of thirteen Years, and was Director-General of the Studies twenty Years ſucceſſively, and Chancellor of the Univerſity for twelve Years. He ſolemnly received the Cap of Doctor of Divinity, and acquired much Reputation. The Province of Bohemia deputed him three times to Rome, to aſſiſt there at the general Congregrations of the Order (b). He was ſeveral times intreated to return into Spain, but to no purpoſe. He was very much eſteemed by Urban VIII, Innocent X, and the Emperor Ferdinand III. He died at Prague on the Seventeenth of June 1667 (c). He publiſhed ſeveral Books [A], in which he diſcovered much Subtility, and Wit. He ſeems to have ſucceeded much better in confuting what he denyed, than in defending what he affirmed; and it is pretended, that thereby he became a Favourer of Pyrrhoniſm, tho' he always declared, that he was no Pyrrhoniſt [B]. It would certainly be the higheſt Injuſtice to ſuſpect him of the leaſt Prevarication, or of betraying the Dogmatiſts; for, if, on one hand, he exerted all his Strength in confuting a great number of Opinions; he employed it on the other, in ſupporting the Opinions, which he had embraced: It was eaſy to ſee, that he acted with Sincerity, and exerted himſelf to the utmoſt; and, if his Proofs are weaker than his Objections, the blame muſt be laid on the nature of the Things. The Diligence, with which he confuted the Subtilties, which have been invented by the Schoolmen, to prove, that two contradictory Propoſitions are ſometimes true, and ſometimes falſe [C], is a ſufficient Demonſtration, that he was paſſionately in the Intereſt

(a) The Jeſuits had newly made this Country a Province of their Order, diſtinct from That of Auſtria. Sotuel, Bibl. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 728, 729.

(b) At the 8th, 10th, and 11th.

(c) Taken from Sotuel, ubi ſupra.

[A] He publiſhed ſeveral Books.] A Courſe of Philoſophy, in one Volume; and a Courſe of Divinity, in eight Volumes. The Courſe of Philoſophy, printed in Folio, at Antwerp, in the Year 1632, has been reprinted ſeveral times. The Edition of Lyons is augmented. The firſt and ſecond Volume of his Courſe of Divinity were printed in the Year 1643; the Third and Fourth in the Year 1644; the Fifth in the Year 1649; the Sixth in Year 1650; the Seventh and Eighth in the Year 1655. They are All in Folio, printed by Balthazar Moret, at Antwerp (1). He had The ninth Volume in hand, when he died: It was That de Jure & Juſtitia (2). Don Nicolas Antonio makes Arriaga the Author of a Book, De Oratore, printed at Cologne in the Year 1637, and of The Brevis Expoſitio Literæ Magiſtri Sententiarum, cum Quæſtionibus quæ circa ipſam moveri poſſunt, & Authoribus qui de illis diſputant. —— A Brief Expoſition of the Letter of the Maſter of the Sentences, with the Queſtions, which may be ſtarted thereupon, and the Authors, which controvert them; printed at Lyons, in the Year 1636, in 8vo, after other Editions (3); but, as Father Sotuel does not mention Theſe two Books, tho' the firſt was aſcribed to This Jeſuit by Alegambus, there is reaſon to believe, that Don Nicolas Antonio is miſtaken.

(1) Nicolas Antonio, Biblioth. Hiſpan. Tom. II. pag. 209. obſerves, that ſeveral of theſe Volumes were printed likewiſe at Lyons.

(2) Taken from Sotuel, in Biblioth. Script. Soc. Jeſu, p. 729.

(3) Nicol. Anton. Biblioth. Script. Hiſpan. Tom. II. p. 209.

[B] It is pretended, that thereby he became a Favourer of Pyrrhoniſm, tho' he always declared, that he was no Pyrrhoniſt.] This is the Opinion of Mr de Villemandy: "Sunt alii, ſays he (4), qui periculoſius "adhuc ſollicitant (ſacratiora fidei dogmata) cujuſ- "modi Arriaga ſuis in diſputationibus Theologicis; ni- "hil enim non moliuntur ut aliorum quorumcunque "placita reflexionibus & objectionibus ſuis deſtruant, "ipſi autem nihil fere adſtruunt — Celebris eſt inter "Romanenſes Scholaſticos Rodericus ille Arriaga — "Is multis Volum. Fol. & Philoſophiam & Theolo- "giam eſt perſecutus; jam autem ſingula quæque ſic "tractat ut aliorum ferè omnium opiniones variis "rationibus infirmare ſtudeat, ſuas autem leviſſime "ſuffulciat. Si ex hac methodo ingenii conditio "dijudicetur, verè Pyrrhonius poteſt haberi; cum ta- "men placita ſua quantum poteſt firmet, iiſque con- "ſtanter inhæreat, non poteſt legitime eo nomine do- "nari (5). — There are ſome, who yet more dangerouſly "ſhake the moſt ſacred Articles of our Faith, ſuch as "Arriaga, in his Theological Diſputations; for they "take a great deal of Pains to overthrow the Opi- "nions of others, but eſtabliſh nothing themſelves —— "This Roderic Arriaga is famous among the Roman "Catholic Schoolmen. He treats of Philoſophy, and Di- "vinity, in many Folio Volumes; but handles them in "ſuch a Manner, that he endeavours to weaken the "Opinions of almoſt all others by a Variety of Argu- "ments, but makes but a poor Defence of his Own. "If the Author's Way of Thinking may be judged of by "this Method of Proceeding, he is a thorough Pyrrho- "nian; but, when he labours to eſtabliſh his own "Opinions, he cannot fairly lay claim to This Appella- "tion." It may be affirmed, that, if the Reading this Jeſuit's Writing inclines us to think him a Pyrrhoniſt, it is purely by Accident, and againſt his Intention; for he is as Dogmatical as any One, and as zealous to confirm his Deciſions; but, whether thro' the Weakneſs of human Underſtanding, or the Difficulty of the Subjects, he found himſelf in the Caſe of a great numbers of Authors, who can diſcover the weak Side of a Doctrine to admiration, but never where the Force of it lies. They are like Thoſe Generals, who deſtroy the Enemy's Country with Fire and Sword, without being able to put their own Frontiers in a Poſture of Defence. Mr Ancillon thought This Jeſuit "very ſingular in his Way of Writing, and "much freer than others, who, thro' a baſe Servi- "tude, dare not forſake the Opinions of the Writers "of Their Society, and who ſcrupulouſly follow "them as infallible —— Reporting the Opinion of "Vaſquez, he ſays plainly, that, in the main, he "lays but little ſtreſs on Father Vaſquez's Solutions "(6). Mr Ancillon adds, "In reading Arriaga and "Oviedo, I have obſerved, that, when one of theſe "two Jeſuits maintains the Affirmative of a Propo- "ſition, the other maintains the Negative; which "is not very uſual among the Doctors of the Romiſh "Religion in general, and which I have ſeldom ob- "ſerved, except in Cornelius à Lapide, and Eſtius." It is no uncommon thing for the Jeſuits to confute each other on a great number of Queſtions, as well in Philoſophy, as School-Divinity. Witneſs Suares and Vaſquez.

(4) Petrus de Villemandy in Sceptici mo debellato, cap. II. pag. 13.

(5) Id. ib. cap. IV. p. 32.

(6) See the Mélange Critique de Litterature, Tom. I. p. 208.

[C] The Subtilties of the Schoolmen, to ſhew, that two contradictory Propoſitions are ſometimes true, and ſometimes falſe.] He has very well diſtinguiſhed Theſe Sophiſms; See his ſecond Diſputation on the Summulæ of Logic (7). I have ſeen ſome Profeſſors very much puzzled, when theſe Objections were made to them; which, in truth, ought only to paſs for Cavils, unluckily invented by Perſons of too much leiſure,

(7) Sect. V. Subſect. III, & IV. p. 19, &c. Edit. Pariſ. 1639.

Digitized by Google

Intereſt of the Dogmatiſts, againſt the Pyrrhonians. He gave up moſt of the received Opinions of the Schools in Points of Natural Philoſophy, ſuch as the Compoſition of the Continuum, Rarefaction, &c. and therefore undertook to defend The Innovators in Philoſophy (d). It is pity ſo refined and penetrating a Genius had not had a better Notion of right Principles; for he might have carried them very far. A ſmall knowledge in Hydroſtatics would have diſcovered to him the reaſon of a Phænomenon, in the Explanation of which he took a great deal of Pains to no purpoſe. His Efforts, and his Zeal in this Matter, make it lamented, that he ran with ſuch force out of the right Way.

(d) In the Preface to his Courſe of Philoſophy.

leiſure, but who never pretended, like Heraclitus, that one and the ſame thing effectually is, and is not. They only intended to exerciſe their Wit. Obſerve, that Ariſtotle does not believe, tho' Heraclitus ſaid this, that he really thought ſo. Ἀδύνατον γὰρ ὀντινοῦν ταὐτὸ ὑπολαμβάνειν εἶναι καὶ μὴ εἶναι, καθάπερ τινὲς οἴονται λέγειν Ἡράκλειτον. οὐ γὰρ ἀναγκαῖον ἃ τις λέγει, ταῦτα καὶ ὑπολαμβάνειν (8). — It is impoſſible for any One to think, that the ſame Thing is and is not, as ſome believed Heraclitus to have affirmed. For it is not neceſſary we ſhould believe every thing we ſay.

(8) Ariſtot. Metaphyſ. lib. III, cap. 3, pag. 667. G.

[D] The Reaſon of a Phænomenon, in the Explanation of which he took a great deal of Pains to no purpoſe.] The Phænomenon was, that a Piece of Timber, which is lighter than Water, does, nevertheleſs, not float on the Water, with regard to it's whole bulk, or thickneſs. A Beam, floating in a River, lies partly under, and partly above, the Water. This cannot be explained according to the common Principles of Gravity and Levity, and hence proceeded the Vanity of the Efforts of Arriaga (9). The new Philoſophers find no difficulty in this. See the Syſtem of Mr Gadrois.

(9) Arriaga Diſputat. 4. de Generat. Sect. 5, de Element. Subſect. VI. pag. 519.

ARSENIUS, a Deacon of the Roman Church, famous for the Nobility of his Family, but much more for his great Learning, and Piety, was choſen by Pope Damaſus to be ſent to the Emperor Theodoſius, who wanted a Preceptor for his Son Arcadius. He came to Conſtantinople in the Year 383, and was very well received by the Emperor, who was offended, one Day, both at the Diſciple and the Maſter, becauſe he found the latter ſtanding, and the other ſitting, at his Leſſon. He ordered, that his Son, tho' he had already been declared Auguſtus, ſhould ſtand uncovered, while Arſenius inſtructed him, and lay aſide the Marks of Imperial Dignity during That time. Arſenius, employing all his Endeavours to accompliſh his Diſciple in Learning and Virtue, found himſelf at laſt obliged to add Chaſtiſement to Cenſure. Young Arcadius was ſo incenſed at it, that he deſired one of his Officers to rid him of his Preceptor (a). The Officer advertiſed Arſenius of it, who retired privately into the Deſarts of Ægypt, where he paſſed ſeveral Years with the Anchorets of Scetis, in the moſt fervent and auſtere Exerciſes of Devotion. He died there at the Age of ninety five Years [A]. Theodoſius, hearing with grief of Arſenius's Retreat, ordered him to be ſought for every where, without being able to diſcover him (b). There are ſome Faults in Moreri's Dictionary relating to this Article [B]. I have met with ſome likewiſe in other Writers [C].

(a) Taken from the Annals of Baronius, ad Ann. 383, n. 22, 23. He cites Metaphraſtus under the 8th of May, and Suriu. under the 19th of July.

(b) Flechier his Hiſtory of Theodoſius, pag. 273, 274.

Several

[A] He died there at the Age of Ninety five Years.] Hear how Mr Arnauld d'Andilli (1) divides this long Life of Arſenius. He ſays, that, "He paſſed forty "Years in the Court of the Emperor Theodoſius, "forty in Scetis, ten in Trochè, which is above "Babylon, over againſt the City of Memphis, three "in Canopus of Alexandria, and two in the ſame "Town of Trochè, whither being returned he fi- "niſhed his Courſe in the fear of God." This Expreſſion, He paſt forty Years in the Court of Theodoſius, is very improper; for, unleſs we will find a notorious Error in it, it muſt be taken in this Senſe; He was forty Years old, when he quitted the Court of Theodoſius. In effect, to take it in the proper and natural Signification of the Words, Arſenius muſt have lived to above One hundred and twenty Years of Age. His Age, at the time when he went to Conſtantinople, upon being choſen Preceptor to Arcadius by Damaſus, ought to have been added to the Ninety five Years. This Pope would not have choſen a young Man of twenty: Beſides, Theodoſius reign'd but about ſixteen Years, and he did not receive Arſenius 'till the fourth Year of his Reign.

(1) D'Andilli's Lives of the Fathers Soliteary, p. 204.

(2) Baron. ad Ann. 383, n. 22.

[B] There are ſome Faults in Moreri's Dictionary.] I. Arſenius could not have been ſent to Theodoſius, in the Year 383, to be Preceptor to Arcadius and Honorius, ſince Honorius was not born before the Year 384. Baronius had remarked this Fault to Thoſe, who wrote the Life of Arſenius, and aſcribed it to one, who knew, in general, that Theodoſius had two Sons; aliquis quod ſciret duos fuiſſe Theodoſio filios, adjecit Honorium (2). This Error remained in the Life of Arſenius, written by Mr d'Andilli (3), who quotes Rufinus (4) as his Authority. II. I confeſs, that Baronius (5), on the Credit of the Lives of the Fathers, ſays (6), that Arſenius was Godfather to the two Sons of Theodoſius; but this does not agree with Rufinus, who ſays, that they were put into Arſenius's Hand preſently after their Baptiſm (7). Beſides, Baronius himſelf has obſerved, that it is a Miſtake in the Life of Arſenius, where it is ſaid, that he was ſent by Damaſus to be Preceptor to Arcadius and Honorius. The latter was not yet born; and the other was but about eight Years old. And it is not probable, that Arſenius continued at the Court of Theodoſius, 'till the Time that Honorius ſtood in need of a Preceptor. III. Mr Flechier ſays plainly, that Theodoſius ordered Arſenius to be ſearched for throughout the whole Empire. It is very improbable then, that Arſenius did not leave the Court 'till after the Death of Theodoſius, in the Year 395. I ſay, this is very improbable, tho' it be advanced as a certain Fact, in the firſt and third Volume of The Dictionary. IV. He ſhould not have ſuppreſſed the Circumſtances, which Mr Flechier had expreſsly remarked, to wit, that the Officer, whom Arcadius employed to kill Arſenius, gave This Preceptor notice of it. The Supplement to the Dictionary ſuppoſes, that Arſenius was divinely forewarned of it. V. Arcadius was not aſſociated to the Empire at ſix Years of Age, but at the Age of ſeven or eight; as Baronius, and Flechier obſerve. "Erat tunc Arcadius annum ætatis agens octavum, "natus nimirum ſub conſulatu Gratiani quarto & "Merobaudis, triennio ante Theodoſii patris Impe- "rium (8). —— Arcadius was then eight Years "of Age, having been born in the fourth Conſul- "ſhip of Gratian and Merobaudes, three Years be- "fore the Acceſſion of his Father Theodoſius to the "Empire." VI. Socrates ſhould not have been quoted; for what he ſays of Arſenius has ſcarce any relation to the Article of the Supplement. However, if any, the Twenty third Chapter of the third Book ſhould have been alledged.

(3) It is in the IId Tome of the Lives of the Fathers Solitary, by Arnauld d'Andilli, p. 178, of the Edit. in 8vo. of 1676.

(4) Lib. III, n. 37.

(5) Ad Ann. 395, n. 26.

(6) Part II, cap. 36.

(7) Apud Arnauld d'Andilli, ubi ſupra.

(8) Baron. ad Ann. 383, n. 22.

[C] Some Miſtakes in other Writers.] Matthias, in his Hiſtorical Theatre (9), ſuppoſes perpetually, that

(9) Pag. 713. Edit. Amſtel. 1668.

Digitized by Google

Several of Arſenius's Actions, and Sayings, are to be found among the Apophthegmata Patrum, publiſhed by Mr Cotelier (c).

(c) See the firſt Volume, printed at Paris, in 1677.

that Arſenius was Preceptor to Honorius, as well as to Arcadius, and That at the ſame Time. He does not conſider, that Honorius was not born, when Arſenius was ſent to Theodoſius, to inſtruct Arcadius: He never ſo much as dreamt, that Honorius, being nine Years younger than his Brother, was very unfit to aſſiſt at the Lectures, which were read to Arcadius, during the Life of Theodoſius. Obſerve this Circumſtance well; becauſe Matthias was not ignorant, that Arſenius abſconded before the Death of the Emperor; for he remarks, that Theodoſius ordered him careſully to be ſearched for. He quotes the Twenty third Chapter of the fourth Book of Socrates, where nothing of what he ſays is to be found. He adds, that Arcadius, after the Death of his Father, was informed where Arſenius lay concealed, and ſent to deſire his Pardon for what had paſſed, and his Holy Benediction. Doujatius, being carried away with the Stream, joins Honorius with Arcadius (10). Charles Stephens knew our Arſenius only under the Quality of Patrician; and ſuppoſes him not to forſake the Court, but only his Eſtate, to go into a Monaſtery, being admoniſhed by a Voice from the Clouds, commanding him to fly, and live in Silence and Peace. Hofman has added to this only the Poſt of Preceptor to Arcadius. Lloyd has ſuppreſſed the whole Article. Obſerve, that Nicephorus, the Son of Calliſtus, affirms, that Theodoſius appointed Arſenius Preceptor to his Sons (11).

(10) Arſenius, non ille Arcadii & Honorii Præceptor.--Arſenius, not the Preceptor of Arcadius, and Honorius. Doujatius Prænot. Canon. p. 429.

(11) Nicephor. Hiſtor. lib. XII, cap. 23.

ARSENIUS, Patriarch of Conſtantinople in the XIIIth Century, was a Native of That City. He was educated in a Monaſtery of Nice, and was likewiſe Superior of it: But he renounced This Dignity to addict himſelf wholly to a Monaſtic Life, either in the Monaſteries of Apolloniade, or Thoſe of Mount Athos. He was taken from this way of Life, in the Year 1255, by the Emperor Theodorus Laſcaris, who made him Patriarch of Conſtantinople. Four Years after, the ſame Emperor, before his Death, declared him one of the two Preceptors of his Son John. The other Preceptor was George Muzalon; who, diſcovering Deſigns very contrary to the true Intereſt of the Young Prince, gave Arſenius a diſlike to his Employment, which was the cauſe of his returning to a Monaſtic Life. But, in the Year 1261, when the Greeks had recovered Conſtantinople, under the Conduct of Michael Palæologus, Arſenius was recalled to reſume the Patriarchate, and fill That See, from which the Patriarchs had been excluded for above fifty Years. The next Year, the Emperor Michael Palæologus cauſed the Eyes of John Laſcaris, Son of the Emperor Theodorus, to be put out. Arſenius, offended at ſo barbarous an Action, committed on his Pupil, excommunicated Michael, who, to diſperſe theſe Eccleſiaſtical Storms, aſſembled a Council, and, on falſe Accuſations, cauſed Arſenius to be depoſed, and baniſhed him to the Iſland of Proconneſus. He lived a long time in This Exile; but it is not certainly known in what Year he died. He was a good Man, but wholly unqualified for Buſineſs (a). He is an Author [A].

(a) Taken from Cave's Hiſtoria Literaria Scriptor. Eccleſ. p. 725.

[A] He is an Author.] He wrote a Nomo-Canon, or Collection of Canons, divided into One hundred and forty one Titles, to each of which he adds ſome Articles or Heads of the Imperial Laws. It is inſerted in Greek and Latin in the Bibliotheque of Canon-Law, publiſhed by Meſſieurs Juſtel and Voel. We have alſo the Teſtament of Arſenius, publiſhed in Greek and Latin, by Mr Cotelier, in the ſecond Volume of his Monuments of the Greek Church (1).

(1) Cave's Hiſtor. Literar. p. 726. Doujat. Prænot. Canon. pag. 429.

ARSENIUS, Archbiſhop of Monembaſia, or Malvaſia, in the Morea, in the XVIth Century, paſſed for a learned Philologiſt. He was an intimate Friend of Paul III, and wrote very elegant Letters to him; in one of which he complains of the little Affection of the Church of Rome for the Greek Nation [A]. He ſubmitted to the Church of Rome, which made him ſo odious to the Greek Schiſmatics, that Pachomus, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, excommunicated him; and the Greeks reported, that Arſenius, after his Death, was Broukolakas, that is, that the Devil hovered about his Corps, and re-animated him (a). We have ſome Works of His [B].

(a) See Guillet, Lacedemon Ancienne & Nouvelle, p. 527, and Cruſius in his Turco-Græcia.

[A] He complained of the little Affection of the Church of Rome for the Greek Nation.] See the Words of Mr Guillet. "Arſenius wrote ſome elegant Letters to Pope Paul III, which are ſtill extant. In one of them he complains much of the little Affection the Church of Rome has for the Greek Nation, in that it hath not raiſed any of them to the Dignity of Cardinal. Paul was made Pope in the Year 1535 (1). If this Complaint be taken for general, Arſenius is guilty of a Falſhood; for it is certain, that Cardinal Beſſarion was a Greek: we muſt, then, believe, that Arſenius's Reproaches were like Thoſe of Muſurus. The latter complains bitterly, that not one Greek had a Share in the numerous Promotions, which Leo X. had newly made (2). Paul III. was elected Pope in the Month of October, 1534.

(1) Guil. Laced. Anc. & Nouv. pag. 327.

(2) See the Article MUSURUS.

I have been informed by Mr de la Monnoie, "That no Letter of Arſenius to That Pope is to be "found, except That, which ſerves as a Dedication "to the Scholia of Euripides. It is there he com- "plains, that, among ſo many Cardinals of all Na- "tions, there are not, at leaſt, two or three Greeks. "Καίτοι εἰ̓ ἀποιχὸς ἦν ἕνα ἢ δύο τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἐν τοσούτοις παν[οδαποῖς ἐναριθμεῖσθαι τῶν Καρδιναλέων." Nothing is more uſeful, or neceſſary, than to have recourſe to the Fountain-head.

[B] We have ſome Works of his.] A Collection of Apophthegms, printed at Rome, in Greek: Another Collection of Scholia on ſeven Tragedies of Euripides, printed at Venice, 1534. He ſays, in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to Pope Paul III, that he had compoſed it in the Iſle of Candy, at Venice, and at Florence. See the Bibliotheque of Geſner.

ARSENIUS, A Greek Monk, wrote a Letter againſt Cyrillus Lucar, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, which was publiſhed in Greek and Latin, at Paris, in the Year 1643, with the Acts of the Council, wherein Parthenius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, cauſed the Confeſſion of This Cyril to be condemned in the Year 1642. Every one knows, knows, that the Confeſſion of Cyril was conformable to the Opinions of Geneva. Mr Claudé maintained (a), that This Condemnation was a ſpurious Piece. The Catalogue of the Library of Oxford has confounded Arſenius, Author of the Nomo-Canon, with our Greek Monk.

Digitized by Google

(a) Claudé's Anſwer to Mr Arnauld, lib. III, cap. 12, p. 473.

ARSINOE. There have been ſeveral Queens of This Name. Mr Moreri has mentioned the Principal, not without ſome Miſtakes. He is a little too ſhort on Arſinoe, the Siſter of Cleopatra: We ſhall make amends for this Brevity in the Article PTOLOMY AULETES (a).

(a) Remark [A].

ARSINOE, the Wife of Magas, King of Cyrene [A], diſhonoured herſelf by her Laſciviouſneſs. A little before Magas died, he contracted their only Daughter Berenice to the Son of Ptolomy, King of Ægypt. Immediately after his Deceaſe, Arſinoe, who was not pleaſed with this Contract, conſidered how to break it. She cauſed Berenice, with the Kingdom of Cyrene, to be offered to Demetrius, Brother of Antigonus (a). This Offer was accepted: Demetrius immediately embarked, and had ſo favourable a Paſſage, that he ſoon came to the ſight of Berenice. He was a handſome Man, and valued himſelf the more upon it, as he ſoon perceived the Impreſſion, which his Beauty had made on the Heart of Arſinoe. He neglected the Daughter, to make himſelf more acceptable to the Mother: He treated the Soldiery with Contempt; in ſhort, he rendered himſelf ſo odious, that the whole People turned their Thoughts on the Son of Ptolomy. It was reſolved to make away with Demetrius; and the Means of doing it were concerted with Berenice (b). Ruffians were ſet to murther him, at a Time when he had appointed to lie with Arſinoe [B]. This Lady, hearing her Daughter's Voice, who ſtood at the Door, and commanded them to ſpare her Mother, covered her Gallant's Body with her own, as well as ſhe could; but her Endeavours were in vain. He loſt his Life; after which the Marriage of Berenice with the Son of Ptolomy was conſummated (c). Juſtin, if I miſtake not, is the only Hiſtorian, who informs us of this: I am ſurprized at it; for an Action of this Nature highly deſerved to be taken notice of. What is ſtill more ſtrange, is, that no one informs us what became of Arſinoe, nor whence ſhe ſprung, nor what became of Berenice; and, ſo far from any one's relating, that Ptolomy Evergetes, the Son of Philadelphus, married her, it is on the contrary affirmed, that he married Cleopatra (d). Note, that Ptolomy Evergetes had a Son, called Magas (e), from whence it may be conjectured, that his Wife's Father's Name was Magas, as Juſtin reports. I ſhall remark ſome Errors of Mr Moreri [C], and one of Mr Menage [D].

(a) He was King of Macedon.

(b) This may be inferred from the Words of Juſtin.

(c) Taken from Juſtin, lib. XXVI, cap. 3.

(d) See Matthias Theatr. Hiſtor. pag. 363. He cites no Author; but we find in Joſephus Antiq. lib. XII, cap. 4, that the Wife of Ptolomy Evergetes was called Cleopatra.

(e) Plut in Agide & Cleomene, pag. 820.

[A] The Wife of Magas, King of Cyrene.] In the Editions of Juſtin, he is called Agas; but good Critics have obſerved, long ago, that it muſt be read Magas; they add, that Pauſanias, Poliænus, and Athenæus call him ſo (1). It may be objected, perhaps, that He, whom Pauſanias mentions, was not the Husband of our Arſinoe; for He was Brother, by the Mother's ſide, of Ptolomy Philadelphus; whereas the Husband of Arſinoe was the Brother of Ptolomy Evergetes. This is the Hiſtory of Magas, according to Pauſanias. He was the Son of Berenice, and of Philip, a Macedonian of mean Extraction. Eurydice, Antipater's Daughter, having been married to Ptolomy, the Son of Lagus, carried This Berenice into Egypt; who lay with Ptolomy, and, among other Children, brought him Ptolomy Philadelphus, who reigned after his Father. She cauſed the Government of Cyrene to be given to her Son Magas; who married Apama, the Daughter of King Antiochus, and had a great Difference with Ptolomy Philadelphus. This is the Magas of Pauſanias (2). Is it not plain, then, may any one ſay, that This cannot be the Magas of Juſtin, who was married to Arſinoe, and who died about the time that the Son of Pyrrhus was reſtored to the Kingdom of Epirus (3). The Critics may reply, that Magas, King of Cyrene, having reigned fifty Years (4), he might very well have lived till the Reſtoration of the Son of Pyrrhus, which the beſt Chronologers place in the Year of Rome 493 (5), which was the Twenty fifth of the Reign of Ptolomy Philadelphus. So that, inſtead of ſaying, as is commonly done, that Juſtin (6) ſpeaks of Ptolomy Evergetes in his Twenty ſixth Book, it muſt be aſſerted, that he ſpeaks of Ptolomy Philadelphus; and that it is to him that he gives Magas, King of Cyrene, as a Brother: that, if he calls Arſinoe the Wife of Magas, it is no proof, that His Magas differs from This of Pauſanias; ſince the ſame King of Cyrene might have been ſucceſſively married to Apama, the Daughter of Antiochus, and to our Arſinoe. By the way, the Wars, wherein he was engaged againſt Ptolomy Philadelphus, according to Pauſanias, agree very well with the Magas mentioned by Juſtin. " Rex " Cyrenarum Agas decedit, qui, ante infirmitatem, " Berenicen unicam filiam, ad finienda cum Ptolomæo " fratre certamina, filio ejus deſponderat (7). —— " Agas, King of Cyrene, died, who, before his Weakneſs, had betrothed his only Daughter Berenice to the Son of his Brother Ptolomy, in order to put an End to all Conteſts." I confeſs, this does not ſeem to agree with the Magas, mentioned by Athenæus; for he was one, who, enjoying Peace, was immerſed in Pleaſure and Idleneſs, and grew ſo fat with eating, that his very Greaſe choaked him (8). But this Objection is not unanſwerable; may not a Prince, in the ſpace of fifty Years Reign, be engaged in ſome Wars, and live afterwards in a long Repoſe?

(1) See the Commentary on Juſtin, in the Edition of Grævius, at Leyden, 1683.

(2) Pauſanias, lib. I, pag. 6.

(3) Juſtin, lib. XXVI, cap. 3.

(4) Athen. lib. XII, pag. 550.

(5) See Calviſius ad Ann. Mundi, 3690.

(6) See the Index of the Juſtin of Grævius; and obſerve, that Biſſelius, in Decade IV Ruinarum Illuſtrium, pag. 1534, ſuppoſes, that Juſtin ſpeaks of one Agas, Brother to Ptolomy Evergetes.

(7) Juſtin, lib. XXVI, cap. 3.

(8) Athen. lib. 12, pag. 550.

[B] Ruffians were ſet to murther him, at a Time when he had appointed to lie with Arſinoe.] The Jeſuit Biſſelius thought this Circumſtance matter of Admiration. " Adulteris autem, ſays he (9), duobus illis, Berenicâ filiâ mœchæ conſcia, tenſæ per diſpoſitos percuſſores ita ſunt inſidiæ (quod mireris) ut in ipſo flagrantis ſceleris ardore deprehenſis ſuperveniens adulteræ filia, mæchique conjunx, Berenice pro thalami nefandi foribus ſubſiſtens, &c.——The Two Adulterers (which is ſurprizing) were ſo betrayed into the Hands of Aſſaſſins by Berenice the Daughter, who was conſcious of the Intrigue, that, in the very Ardor of their enormous Guilt, Berenice, the Daughter of the Adultereſs, and betrothed to the Adulterer, ſurprizing them, and ſtanding at the Door, &c." But neither the Circumſtances of Time, nor Place, have any thing wonderful in them. It was eaſy to obſerve, when Demetrius went to Arſinoe's, Chamber, and it was the moſt plauſible Opportunity that the Conſpirators could take.

(9) Biſſelius, Ruinar. Illuſtrium Decade IV, pag. 1536. Juſtin ſays, Cui (Demetrio) cum in lectum ſocrus conceſſiſſet, percuſſores immittuntur.

[C] Some Errors of Mr Moreri.] I. This way of expreſſing himſelf is not exact; Magas gave his Daughter Berenice in Marriage to Ptolomy: The Latin ſays Berenicem —— filiam deſponderat (10). —— Betrothed his Daughter Bernice. Moreri's Words conceal a Fact, which is not unravelled in the Sequel of his Narrative; to wit, that Berenice continued with her Father and Mother. Quite a different thing was intended, where we read, that he was given in Marriage to the Son of a King of Egypt. That he might not therefore miſlead his Readers, he ſhould have

(10) Juſtin, ubi ſupra.

Digitized by Google

have used the word despondere in the strictest Sense. This Observation is small in itself; but the Application of it may be of Importance to Those, who Translate. They can never too scrupulously follow This Rule; to wit, that they should avoid equivocal Expressions, and all that may hinder the Reader from entertaining the Ideas best suited to the Nature of each Subject. II. It is not true, that Justin says, that our Arsinoe was Daughter of Antiochus Soter. III. Nor, that her Husband's Name was Magus (11). IV. Nor, that this pretended Magus was the Son of Ptolomy Lagus (12). V. Nor, that she obliged her Daughter to marry Demetrius. VI. Nor, that she had a Design of setting the Crown on his Head. VII. Nor, that she was deposed. Can we sufficiently censure so bold a Liberty? This Narrative is at pleasure, without any Authority. And yet he quotes his Author. I know, that, in taking an Historian of so little Judgment, as Justin, for a Guide, there is a Necessity of supplying several Circumstances; but then notice should be given, that they are supplied, and not imposed on us as a Translation of Justin. I have often said, that this Abbreviator had but little Judgment; and I am certain, that Trogus Pompeius would exclaim a thousand times against him, did he but know in what a sad Condition his Work is left by this Epitomizer. He would lose himself in the Errors of his Abbreviator. Almost all the Antiochus's, the Ptolomy's, and the Antigonus's, appear in his History without their Marks of Distinction: It is uncertain, whether he speaks of the Father, or the Son, or the Grand-Son; and it must be guessed at for the most part: He has not taken the Trouble to tells us, whether This Marriage of Berenice was consummated or no. A fine Question, you will say! And yet he ought expressly to have affirmed, or denied, it; for it is not improbable, that One, who observed, with Joy, that he was beloved by the Mother, should readily agree, to defer his Marriage with the Daughter. You will answer me, perhaps, that Justin gives Arsinoe the Title of Mother-in-Law to Demetrius; nimis placere socrui cœperat; but I reply, that, after this, he gives Berenice the Title of Virgin; quæ res suspecta primo virgini; and, consequently, one of these Phrases overthrows the other; which is a shrewd Suspicion, that he does not employ his Terms in the most exact Sense: Justin's Index, in the Edition of Mr Grævius, gives Berenice only the Title of Betrothed (13). However that be, Justin, and many other Epitomizers, never consider, that Abridgments ought to resemble Pygmies, who have all the Parts of a perfect human Body, tho' each of them in Miniature. Contract the Parts of a Narration in an Abridgment as much as you please, but cut off none. Let us reckon Mr Moreri's contradicting himself for the eighth Fault. He will have it here, that Berenice, the Wife of Ptolomy Evergetes, was the Daughter of Magus, and yet affirms elsewhere (14), that she was this Ptolomy's own Sister.

(11) His Name, in the Editions of Justin, is Agas; his true Name is Magas.

(12) He was the Son of one Philip, and the Mistress of this Ptolomy.

(13) Demetrius à SPONSA sua Interficitur, 26, 3, 7.

THE Qualifications of a good Abridger. See Remark [A] of the Article DOMITIA.

(14) In the 2d Article BERENICE.

[D] I shall observe one Error of Mr Menage.] It is in his Annotation on these Words of Diogenes Laërtius: Δημητρίῳ τῷ πλεύσαντι εἰς Κυρήνην, ἐπὶ πλέον ἐφθάρθαι λέγεται (Ἀρκεσίλαος) (15). Demetrium qui Cyrenem (16) navigavit amasse plurimum dicitur (Arcesilaus). "I do not wonder, says "Mr Menage, that This Philosopher, who was so "fond of young Boys, should fall in love with De"metrius, whose Beauty seems to have been very "extraordinary, and was, at last, fatal to him, for he "was killed in the Embraces of his Mother-in-law." In novercæ concubitu cæsus est. Justin, cited by Mr Menage, gives no Authority for saying, that Arsinoe had such a Relation to the Minion of Arcesilaus. It had been much better for him to have taken notice of the Faults of the Latin Interpretation (17).

(15) Diog. Laërt. in Arcesila, lib. 4, n. 41.

(16) The Editions have it, cum is Cyrenem navigasset; which is false; for the Amour of Arcesi as did not commence after the Voyage to Cyrene.

(17) See the preceeding Marginal Note.

ARTABANUS, the Son of Hystaspes [A], and Brother of Darius I, of That Name, King of Persia, is represented to us, by Herodotus, as a wise Man, who always opposed those pompous Expeditions, which were so fatal to the Persian Monarchy (a). He was not of Opinion that Darius ought to attack the Scythians (b); and much less that Xerxes should ingage himself in a War with the Greeks. Herodotus has preserved to us the solid Reasons, on which his Advice was grounded [B], and the Judgment he gave on the prodigious Army both for Sea and Land Service, with which Xerxes prepared to pass from Asia into Europe (c). The Difficulties, which Artabanus represented to him, made the King choose to send him back into Persia, to command there in his Absence, rather than have his Attendance in the Expedition (d). The Event demonstrated how judiciously, and faithfully, he had advised. He did not however always preserve This Fidelity; for he conspired against Xerxes, and slew him (e); and afterwards drew in Artaxerxes, the Son of Xerxes, to make away with his Brother Darius: he drew him into it, I say, by making him believe, that Darius was the Murtherer of Xerxes. But Artaxerxes discovered the Truth soon after, and killed Artabanus as he was pulling off his Cuirass (f). Diodorus Siculus differs from Justin, as to the manner of Artabanus's being punished for his Crime (g). We shall see, in the Remark [B], how This Prince reasoned on Dreams, and upon the Duration of human Life.

(a) Herod. lib. 4, cap. 83.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Ibid. cap. 49, & seq.

(d) Id. lib. 7. c. 52, 53.

(e) Diodor. lib. 11. Justin. lib. 3, cap. 1.

(f) Just. ib.

(g) Diod. Sicul. l. XI.

[A] The Son of Hystaspes.] I cannot imagine where Mr Moreri had read, that Artabanus was a Native of Hircania. The two Authors he has quoted (1) say nothing like it. Ctesias makes the Father of Artabanus to have been a Favourite of Cambyses, named Artasyras, who, at first, favoured the Usurpation of the Magus, and afterwards the Design, formed by the seven great Lords, to expel the Magus (2).

(1) Diodorus Siculus, lib. 11, and Justin. lib. 2. It should have been Justin. lib. 3. cap. 1.

(2) In Persic. cap. 13, 14, 20.

[B] Herodotus has preserved to us the solid Reasons, on which his Advice was grounded (3).] One would think Herodotus had made it his Business to do Honour to Artabanus's Prudence and fine Sense. He never indulges his Imagination more, than when he makes This Prince argue. Xerxes, after putting himself into a great Passion, and violently abusing him, submitted to his Reasone, and thought no more of the Expedition; but two Dreams, one upon another, pushed him on to prosecute it (4). He went to Artabanus, and told him his Dreams; adding, withal, I will try whether you will have the like; take my Robes, sit on my Throne, lie in my Bed. Artabanus answers, That he was not worthy of so much Honour; and then reasons very judiciously upon Dreams, saying, That, if there be any thing Divine in these Dreams of Xerxes, his Majesty had Reason to think, that he should have the like; "for what could we "think, if a God, who had a War at Heart, and "came at Night to injoin it some Monarch, who "had resolved to live in Peace, should not appear, "and give the same Orders, to his first Minister of "State, when nothing less can make it certain whe"ther this God does indeed desire the War? But, "continues he, do not imagine, that it is therefore "necessary I should take your Habit, and lie in your "Bed. That I know not what to call it, which "appeared to you in a Dream, is not so ignorant a "Being, as to mistake me for you, by seeing me "dressed in your Robes; and, if he does not think "fit to address himself to Me, your Garments will "no more influence him to do so, than my own." Xerxes would be absolutely obeyed: Artabanus dreamed in Conformity with his Master, and opposed the War no longer, but became the Promoter of it, though he remained greatly diffident of the Success (5). If these Things were true, ought we not to conclude, that they had for their Author That Spirit, which was a Liar and a Murtherer from the beginning; for Xerxes was threatened with great Disgrace,

(3) Herod. lib. 3, c. 10.

(4) Id. lib. 7. cap. 15, & seq.

(5) Herod. lib. 7, c. 47.

A REFLEXION of Artabanus on Dreams, and on the Duration of human Life.

Digitized by Google

Disgrace, if he desisted from That Enterprize (6). At another Time, Artabanus reasoned, in a very uncommon manner, on the Shortness of human Life; a Subject, which had caused Xerxes to weep, at the Sight of his numberless Army (7). "We live but too "long, says he; our Life, short as it is, is long "enough to turn our Brain, and make us often wish "for Death, as an easy Refuge from the Miseries "that overwhelm us. If Life is, nevertheless, "seasoned with an agreeable Relish, it is an Argu"ment, that God is envious of human Happiness." Would not the Greek Philosophers have said of this way of thinking, as Pyrrhus, upon his viewing the Roman Army; The Order of Battle of these Barbarians, said he, and their Manner of encamping, have nothing of the Barbarian in them (8)? Christianity only can rectify this. It is to be observed, that Herodotus was very well acquainted with the Vanities, and Miseries, of Mankind; but he affected a little too much to trace the Causes of them in the Envy, or Malignity, of the Gods. Plutarch has condemned him for it (9).

(6) Id. ib. cap. 14.

(7) Id. ibid. cap 46. See Remark [L], of the Article PERICLES, at the End.

(8) Plutarch. in Pyrrho, pag. 393.

(9) See Remark [K], of the Article PERICLES, towards the End.

ARTABANUS I, King of Parthia, the seventh from Arsaces, Founder of the Monarchy (a), was the Son of Priapatius, and Brother of Phrahates and Mithridates [A], who had all three reigned successively over the Parthians. He succeeded his Nephew Phrahates, and died soon after of a Wound in the Arm, which he received in the War he made against the Thogarians (b).

(a) About 249 Years before CHRIST.

(b) Justin. lib. 42. c. 2.

[A] He was the Son of Priapatius, and Brother of Phrahates, and Mithridates.] Mr Moreri makes him the Son of Phrahates I, and Uncle to Phrahates II; but these are two incompatible Relations; for Phrahates II was the Son of Mithridates, who was Brother to Phrahates I; how then could a Son of Phrahates I be Uncle to Phrahates II? This is the Reason, why, though Justin gives Priapatius but two Sons, I have given him a third, namely, Artabanus I. When Authors explain themselves ill, we must take this Liberty with them. Justin relates two Things (1). I. That Priapatius, dying in the Twenty fifth Year of his Reign, left two Sons, the elder of whom, named Phrahates, reigned before his younger Brother Mithridates. II. That Phrahates, the Son of Mithridates, reigned after his Father, and that his Paternal Uncle Artabanus was his Successor (2). How confused is this! He mentions Mithridates, and Phrahates, as the only Sons of Priapatius, and yet intimates, that he had another, since, otherwise, Artabanus could not be Paternal Uncle to Mithridates's Son. I have, in vain, searched for a Solution of this Difficulty, in several Commentators on Justin, and also in the Notes of the last French Translator (3).

(1) Justin, lib. 41, c. 5.

(2) Id. lib. 42, cap. 1, 2.

(3) He takes the Title of Monsieur D. L. M. His Translation was printed at Amsterdam, 1694, from the Paris Edition of 1693.

ARTABANUS II, King of Parthia, when he was only King of the Medes [A], was called by the Parthians, to reign over them, in Exclusion of Vonones, whom they had sent for to Rome, and whom Tiberius had very freely granted them (a). Artabanus was of the Race of the Arsacidæ as well as Vonones, and had this farther Advantage, that he was not become obnoxious to That People by a Roman Education (b). The first Battle was fortunate to Vonones; but he came off so ill in the second, that he was forced to fly into Armenia [B]. The victorious Artabanus would not let him rest there; and, as Tiberius had not promised Vonones the necessary Protection (c), he was forced to quit Armenia, and retire to Silanus, Governor of Syria. This contributed greatly to secure the Crown on the Head of Artabanus, which he received about the Seven Hundred and sixty ninth Year of Rome, and sixteenth of the Ist Century. However, he was not easy at the Continuance of his Rival in Syria (d); for the Communication of Intelligence, being quick and easie, kept up the Spirit of Faction: He therefore sent an Embassy to Germanicus to renew the Alliance between them, and insisted, at the same time, that Vonones should be obliged to leave Syria. The Success of This Embassy is not known; but it is certain, that, after the Death of Germanicus, the King of the Parthians grew very haughty towards the Romans, and cruel to his own People (e). He was so elated with his good Fortune in the Wars he had waged with several neighbouring Nations, that, without any regard to Tiberius, whose grey Hairs he despised, he seized upon Armenia [C], and (a) Joseph. Antiq lib. 18. cap. 3.

(b) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap 2.

(c) Id. ib. cap. 4.

(d) Id. ib. cap. 58.

(e) Id. ib. lib. 6. c. 31.

[A] When he was only King of the Medes.] Moreri and Hofman have both said, that Tacitus makes him King of the Dacians. This is what That Historian never dreamed of; he only says, that Artabanus had been educated among the Dahæ; Artabanus Arsacidarum è sanguine apud Dahas adultus excitur (1). There is a great deal of Difference between the Dahæ and the Dacians; and he must have his Thoughts otherwise employed, (to say no worse,) who could believe, that a Parthian Prince had been educated near the Danube.

(1) Tacit. Ann. lib. 2, cap. 3.

[B] Vonones —— his Competitor came off so ill in the second Battle, that he was forced to fly into Armenia.] Mr Moreri has published two other Falsities. He has made Vonones obtain two Victories over the Parthians, who yet had the better of his Competitor but once (2); and he attributes one Defeat of Artabanus's Army to Vitellius; a Defeat, I say, followed by other Losses of Artabanus, towards the Year 36. But I. It is false, that Vitellius defeated the Troops of this King of the Parthians; II. It is certain, that the Mischief Vitellius did him, by Intrigues and Money, was not 'till after other Losses. Mr Hofman also ascribes two Victories to Vonones, and one to Vitellius, which, he says, was the Cause of Artabanus's abandoning Armenia. A Mistake; yet infinitely more excusable, than what this Writer has committed after Lloyd and Charles Stephens, in saying, that Artabanus, being a great Enemy to Tiberius, seized upon Armenia, and was killed by a Persian Soldier, whose Name was Artaxerxes; after whom there were no more Kings of the Parthians, but only of Persia. A prodigious Anachronism! See the Article ARTABANUS IV.

(2) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 3. Tacit. ibid.

[C] Without any regard to Tiberius —— he seized upon Armenia.] It is impossible to be more insulted, than This Emperor was by Artabanus; who no sooner perceived, that his Invasion of Armenia was an Injury, which Tiberius did not revenge, but he attacked Cappadocia (3). But what can be more severe, than the Letters he wrote to him? Let us here Suetonius; "Quin & Artabani Parthorum regis "laceratus est literis, parricidia & cædes & ignaviam "& luxuriam objicientis, monentisque ut voluntaria morte maximo justissimoque civium odio quam "primum satisfaceret (4). —— He was also stung "with Letters from Artabanus, King of the Parthians, reproaching him with his Indolence, Luxury, "Murthers, and Parricides, and advising him, by "laying violent Hands on himself, to give immediate "Satisfaction to the extream Hatred, and just Resentment of his Subjects." There was, certainly, some personal Aversion in the Case; for Artabanus behaved very civilly, and even very humbly, towards Tiberius's Successor. Let us hear Suetonius again. "Artabanus Parthorum rex odium semper contemptumque

(3) Dion, lib. 58, sub. fin.

(4) Suet. in in Tiber. cap. 66.

Digitized by Google

and gave it to his Eldeſt Son Arſaces [D]. He ſent to demand all the Treaſures, which Vonones had depoſited in Syria and Cilicia (f), and, in rodomontade, gave out, that, if all that Cyrus and Alexander had been poſſeſt of were not reſtored to him, he would come and take it by force. The Malecontents at Court deputed private Meſſengers to Tiberius, deſiring him to ſend them Phrahates, the Son of King Phrahates (g). This was readily granted; and, when it was known, That this Prince, endeavouring to live after the manner of the Parthians, to which he had been a long time diſuſed, had fallen ſick, and was dead, Tiridates, who was of the Houſe of the Arſacidæ, and nearly related to Phrahates, was ſubſtituted in his Place. Another Adverſary was at the ſame time ſtirred up againſt Artabanus, namely Pharaſmanes King of Iberia. Artabanus was worſted from this Quarter; for, after his Son, King of Armenia, had been poiſoned, his other Son Orodes, whom he had ſent into Armenia, was defeated there by Pharaſmanes. Some time after, he was beaten there himſelf, and being obliged to advance towards the Provinces, which Vitellius, Governor of Syria, threatened (b), there remained no Obſtacle to hinder Mithridates, Brother of Pharaſmanes, from becoming King of Armenia (i). This Loſs of Artabanus was ſoon followed by a greater. Vitellius, by his Money and Intrigues, obliged him to quit That Country, and retire into Hircania, where he was reduced to live upon what he could get by Hunting (k), while Vitellius put Tiridates in Poſſeſſion of his Kingdom. But ſo powerful a Party was formed againſt the new King, that it was no hard matter for Artabanus, who was recalled, to compel ſo weak a Prince as Tiridates, to retire (l). This happened in the thirty ſixth Year of the Iſt Century. Artabanus's former Pride was now ſufficiently mortified: He courted the Friendſhip of Caligula (m), and when he found that his Deſign of carrying the War into Syria (n), was in danger of miſcarrying thro' the Diligence of Vitellius, he agreed to an Interview with This Roman, and to a Treaty of Peace, the Conditions of which were to the Advantage of Caligula. Ten Years after, he was depoſed, and forced to retire to Izates, King of Adiabene (o), by whom he was received in a moſt generous manner, and not with bare Compliments. For Izates negotiated the Matter with the Parthians, in ſuch a manner, that he obliged them to ſet him again upon the Throne; and Cinnamus himſelf, who had been advanced in his Room, was the Perſon, who replaced the Diadem upon his Head. There is Reaſon to believe, that Artabanus died a little after; but whether by the Treachery of Gotarzes his Son, or Brother [E], or otherwiſe, is uncertain.

(f) In the Year of Rome 788.

(g) Tacit. lib 6, cap. 32, & ſeq.

(b) Id. ib. cap. 36.

(i) Dio, l. 8. ſub fin.

(k) In Hircanis repertus eſt inluvie obſitus, & alimenta arcu expediens. Tacit. Annal. lib. 6. cap. 42.

(l) Id ib. cap. 44.

(m) Sueton. in Calig. cap. 14. See the Remark [C].

(n) Dio, lib. 59.

(o) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 20, cap 2.

" tumque Tiberii præ ſe ferens, amicitiam Caligulæ " ultro petiit, venitque ad colloquium legati conſu- " laris, & tranſgreſſus Euphratem aquilas & ſigna Ro- " mana Cæſarumque imagines adoravit (5). —— Ar- " tabanus, King of the Parthians, always diſcovering " an Hatred and Contempt of Tiberius, induſtriouſly " ſought the Friendſhip of Caligula, and came to con- " fer with the Conſular Embaſſador; and paſſing over " the Euphrates, he paid Adoration to the Roman " Eagles and Standards, and to the Images of the Cæ- " ſars." Dion remarks, that Vitellius obliged Artabanus to ſacrifice to the Statues of Auguſtus and Caligula, and to give his Children for Hoſtages, after having agreed to the Treaty of Peace, which he preſcribed to him (6). This ſhews Joſephus to be miſtaken, in believing the Interview between Vitellius and Artabanus, with all it's Conſequences, to have happened under Tiberius (7). According to Him, it was to Tiberius, that Darius, the Son of Artabanus, was ſent as an Hoſtage, with rich Preſents, and a Giant, a Jew by Nation, and Eleazar by Name, who was ſeven Cubits high.

(5) Id. in Calig. c. 14.

(6) Dio, lib. 59.

(7) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 18. cap. 6.

[D] He gave Armenia to his Eldeſt Son Arſaces.] Thus Tacitus and Dion name him. Joſephus calls him Orodes (8), confounding one of Artabanus's Children with the other. His Son Orodes was not King of Armenia, but was ſent thither to revenge the Death of his elder Brother Arſaces, and had like to have been killed in the Attempt; for having, in the Battle, engaged perſonally with Pharaſmanes, King of Iberia, he was dangerouſly wounded, but not killed, as was immediately given out, to the great Diſcouragement of the Parthians (9), and as Joſephus has ſince affirmed, in his Jewiſh Antiquities (10).

(8) Id. ib. cap. 3.

(9) Fama occiſi falſo credita exterruit Parthos, victoriamque conceſſere. Tacit. Annal. lib. 6. c. 35.

(10) Joſeph. lib. 18. c. 3.

[E] Artabanus died —— by the Treachery of Gotarzes, his Son, or Brother.] The manner, in which the exact Mr de Tillemont expreſſes himſelf, is fallacious. Artabanus, ſays he (11), died ſoon after, by the Treachery of Gotarzes, his Brother, according to Tacitus, or rather his Son, as Joſephus affirms. Every Reader will imagine, from theſe Words, that Joſephus ſays, that Artabanus was put to death by his Son Gotarzes, when not a Syllable is to be met with to this Purpoſe. So far from it, he mentions Artabanus as dying of a Diſtemper, and ſucceeded by his Son Varadanus, whoſe Succeſſor he makes to be Artabanus's other Son, Gotarzes. It is ſtrange, that Tacitus and Joſephus ſhould agree ſo little in the main Circumſtances of Matters ſo near their own Time! The latter gives Artabanus a peaceable Death, and ſeveral Sons: The former makes him periſh with his Wife and Son by the Treachery of his Brother; which ſeems to import, that Artabanus had but one Son. One cannot tell which ſide to take, conſidering that Tacitus is not wholly free from Contradiction. Firſt, he will have Gotarzes to be the Brother of Artabanus; a little after he makes him the Brother of Bardanes, and intimates very clearly, that Bardanes was the Son of Artabanus; for he repreſents him in a great Rage with the Seleucians, not ſo much becauſe they did not ſubmit to him, as becauſe they had been Rebels againſt his Father. In quos, ut patris ſui quoque deſectores, ira magis quam ex uſu præſenti accenſus (12). Who is this Father, if not Artabanus? I ſhould be almoſt tempted to believe, that this Artabanus, mentioned by Tacitus (13), was the Son, who had already ſucceeded, or who was to ſucceed King Artabanus, and that Gotarzes, another Son of King Artabanus, murthered this Brother, to make his own way to the Throne, and, for the greater Security, involved the Mother and Son in the ſame Deſtruction with the Father. This Conjecture clears all Contradictions. But there are other Differences between Joſephus and Tacitus. The latter makes Gotarzes die a natural Death, and gives him Vonones for Succeſſor, and his Son Vologeſes after him (14). Joſephus makes Gotarzes periſh by the Treachery of his Subjects, and his Brother Vologeſes to be his immediate Succeſſor (15).

(11) Tillem. Hiſt. des Emper. ad Ann. 47. pag. 56. Edit. de Bruxelles.

(12) Tacit. Annal. l. 11. cap. 8.

(13) Inter Gotarzis pleraque ſæva (qui necem fratri Artabano coniugique ac filio ejus properaverat, [others read præparaverat] unde metus ejus in cæteros) acciverе Bardanem. Id. ibid.

(14) Idem, lib. 12. cap. 14.

(15) Joſeph. lib. 20. c. 2.

ARTABANUS III, King of the Parthians, Succeſſor, and perhaps Son, of Vologeſes, whom Suetonius mentions as a great Friend of Nero and Veſpaſian, lived in the Reign

Digitized by Google

Reign of the Emperor Titus. This is what Zonaras informs us of after this manner (a). He ſays, that an Aſiatic, whoſe Name was Terentius Maximus, pretending to be Nero, prevailed with ſome of his own Countrymen, and a great many other Perſons towards the Euphrates, to believe it, and at laſt retired to Artabanus, King of the Parthians, who, being then diſpleaſed with Titus, received the Impoſtor very kindly, and prepared to re-inthrone him [A].

(a) Zonaras in Tito ad Ann. circiter, 80.

[A] Received the Impoſtor very kindly, and prepared to re-inthrone him.] Although there were more than one counterfeit Nero, yet few will believe this Terentius Maximus to have been any other, than the Impoſtor, mentioned by Suetonius. And, if it be objected, that the latter did not appear 'till twenty Years after the Death of Nero, that is, in the ſeventh Year of Domitian; it may be anſwered, that Zonaras is not incapable of confounding one Reign with another; and that, after all, it muſt be ſomething ſurprizing, that, in ſo ſhort a time, two Impoſtors ſhould meet with ſo great Encouragement in the ſame Country, or, if they did, that they ſhould not both be recorded by the Hiſtorian, who ſpeaks of One of them, as of a ſingular Adventure. The Impoſtor, mentioned by Suetonius, was very powerfully protected by the Parthians. "Cum poſt viginti "annos adoleſcente me extitiſſet conditionis incertæ "qui ſe Neronem eſſe jactaret, tam favorabile no- "men ejus apud Parthos fuit, ut vehementer adjutus "& vix redditus ſit (1). —— Twenty Years after "the Death of that Emperor, when I was a Lad, "a Perſon, of unknown Condition, gave out, that "he was Nero, and was ſo ſtrongly ſupported in his "Pretenſions by the Parthians, that he was defeated "with great Difficulty."

(1) Sueton. in Neron. ſub. finem.

ARTABANUS IV. was the laſt King of the Parthians; for Artaxerxes, a Perſian by Nation, having deprived him of his Crown and Life in the Year 229, took upon him the Title of King of Perſia, which his Succeſſors continued as long as That Monarchy laſted. The Reign of Artabanus had been glorious enough, and had given ſome Trouble to the Romans, who were not at all behind hand in making ſuitable Returns. He was ſo imprudent as not to keep upon his Guard, while the Emperor Severus ravaged the Neighbouring Countries; and was taking his Reſt under the Security of a Peace, when he found the Roman Forces on a ſudden pouring in upon his Dominions. All that he could do was to ſave himſelf with a ſmall Guard (a). The City of Cteſiphon, in which he kept his Reſidence, was plundered, and all his Treaſures and Moveables fell into the Hands of the Enemy (b). But this foul Play was nothing in compariſon of the perfidious Trick, which Caracalla played him. This Emperor ſent Ambaſſadors to him with rich Preſents to demand his Daughter in Marriage, and alledged an hundred fine Things, which would reſult from That Alliance, to the Honour and Advantage of both Nations (c). Artabanus at firſt rejected the Propoſal, foreſeeing no Concord in This Marriage, conſidering the Difference of Language and Cuſtoms, between his Daughter and a Roman Emperor. At laſt Caracalla's repeated Inſtances, his Oaths, his Proteſtations of Love for his future Empreſs, obtained the Father's Conſent. But, all this while, Caracalla was meditating ſuch a Scene of Villany, as may be taken for the Model, or at leaſt the rough Draught, of the St Bartholomew of Catherine de Medicis. He marched with his Army into the Country of the Parthians, and was every where received as the King's Son-in-Law; and, upon his advancing towards the Capital, Artabanus went out to meet him, accompanied with an infinite Number of his People. The Parthians thought of nothing but ſhewing their Joy, in Feaſting, Singing, and Dancing, when Caracalla gave the Signal to his Soldiers to fall on This unarmed Multitude. They killed as many of them as they pleaſed, there not being any in a Condition to reſiſt. Artabanus had much ado to ſave himſelf. From that Day Caracalla did nothing but plunder and burn; till, tired with his Ravages, he returned into Meſopotamia, where he was aſſaſſinated. Artabanus, being eager to revenge the Injury which he had ſuffered, marched with all poſſible Expedition againſt the Roman Army, which had elected Macrinus in the room of Caracalla. The Battle, having continued two whole Days from Morning till Night, was renewed upon the Third, and, in all probability, would have laſted till one or other Army had been quite deſtroyed, if Macrinus had not found means of acquainting Artabanus with the tragical End of Caracalla, and of declaring, that he himſelf diſapproved what had paſſed, and was willing to reſtore all the Priſoners and Booty then in his Poſſeſſion, and to live in Peace with him. Artabanus accepted theſe Offers, and a Peace was concluded between Him and the New Emperor in the Year 217. He was the firſt, who took upon him the Title of The Great King, and wore a double Diadem [A]. His evil Deſtiny

(a) Herodian. lib. 3, cap. 9.

(b) In the Year 220, according to Calviſius.

(c) Herodian. lib. 4. cap. 10, & ſeq.

[A] He was the firſt, who took upon him the Title of the Great King, and wore a double Diadem (1).] I have cited my Author, and it is very true, that Herodian, in the place cited, has theſe Words; Ἀρτάβανόν τε τὸν πρότερον καλέμενον τὸν μέγαν βασιλέα, καὶ δυσὶ διαδήμασι χρώμενον ἀποκτεῖναι (2). Atque Artabano, qui rex magnus primus appellatus eſt, duplicique diademate utebatur, necem intuliſſe. But I believe his Meaning is, that, before Artabanus IV. no King of Parthia aſſumed this Title of The Great King; and he would be much miſtaken, if he ſhould ſay abſolutely, that he was the firſt Prince, who called himſelf ſo; it being certain, that the ancient Kings of Perſia uſed This Style, as appropriated to themſelves. See the Twenty fourth Verſe of Æſchylus's Perſians, and Stanley's Obſervations upon It. He quotes the Teſtimonies of Dion Chryſoſtome, Orat. 3. of Joſephus, in Antiquit. lib. 11. cap. 6. of Herodotus, lib. 8. and lib. 5. of Xenophon, in Expedit. lib. 1. of Ariſtides, in Romæ Encomio. of Suidas, in μέγας βασιλεύς. Mr du Rondel informed me of This Paſſage of Stanley. We may add, to theſe Authors, Plato, in Gorgia, pag. 321. C. Plutarch, in Vita Cimonis, pag. 485. E. The Book of Eſther, cap. xvi. ver. 1. Read alſo the Panegyric of Iſocrates, and you will find in it the Complaint of That Orator againſt the Greeks of his Time, who, in their common Diſcourſe, gave the pompous Title

(1) Herodian. lib 2. cap. 2. pag. 257.

(2) Id. ibid.

Digitized by Google

Destiny raised him up a formidable Enemy in the Year 226; I mean That Artaxerxes, who maintained his Rebellion with such Courage and Success, that, in three Years Time, he put an end to the Parthian Monarchy.

of The Great King to the Monarch of Persia. Οὐ βασιλέα τὸν μέγαν αὐτὸν προσαγορεύομεν, ὥσπερ αἰχμάλωτοι γεγονότες (3). Do we not call him the Great King, as though we were his Captives? Note, that the Kings of Persia were not the first, who assumed this Title. The Kings of Assyria had used it, as may be collected from the eighteenth Chapter of the second Book of Kings (4), where we find the Words of the Ambassadors of Sennacherib. I remember the Answer, which Father Goulu made to a Criticism upon a Passage of his Translation of Socrates's Apology. Let us first produce the Words of the Critic. " Je ne sçay de quoy l' accuser; si ce n' est d' une ignorance volontaire, en un passage de son Apologie de Socrates, où il lui fait dire: Je m'assure que quand ce seroit le Grand Seigneur, & non pas une persone de basse condition, qu'il préféreroit une nuit semblable à celle-là à toutes les nuits & à tous les autres jours de sa vie, &c. Je voudroy bien luy demander si ce Grand Seigneur n'est pas le Turc; & si c'est lui, comment Socrates en pouvoit parler, si ce n'estoit par prophétie, puis qu'il n'y peut pas avoir huit cent ans que les Ottomans ont commence leur Tyrannie, & qu'l y en a plus de treize cens du siecle de Socrates au leur, à conter depuis l'année quatriesme où il est nay dans la soixante & dixseptiesme Olympiade (5). —— I am at a loss how to charge him, except with wilful Ignorance, in a Passage of the Apology of Socrates, where he makes Socrates say: I am perswaded, that, were he the Grand Seignor, and not a Person of mean Condition, he would prefer a Night like That before all other Nights and Days of his Life, &c. I would fain know of him whether this Grand Seignor of his be not the Turk; and, if he be, how Socrates could speak of him, except by way of Prophecy; since the Turks began their Empire not quite Eight hundred Years ago, and the Age, in which Socrates lived, was above Thirteen hundred before That, reckoning from the fourth Year (in which he was born) of the LXXVIIth Olympiad." Here follows the Refutation of this Criticism. " Un habile Homme m'auroit épargné une réponse, en ne me faisant pas une demande si sotte. Mais, Patience; répondons à cet ignorant. Ouy, Paladin (6), le Turc est aujourd'hui celui qu'on nomme Grand Seigneur. Mais, du tems de Socrates, c'étoit le Roy des Perses, qu'on appelloit de la sorte, & qu'on ne nommoit point autrement. Aus autres Rois, dit Suidas, on donne la titre des Etats & des pais qui sont de leur Obeissance, & pour ce on dit le Roi de Macedoine, & le Roi des Lacedemoniens. Celui des Perses se qualifie simplement le Grand Roi, ou le Grand Seigneur, μέγας βασιλεὺς, μέγας δεσπότης. Et, comme il portoit le titre de Grand Seigneur, ses Sujets prenoient le qualité d'esclaves, & sa Cour s'appelloit la Porte, ses Courtisans οἱ ἐπὶ θύραις βασιλέως, ceux qui estoient à la porte du Roi. L'Empereur de Turcs lui a succédé au Titre de Grand Seigneur, aussi bien qu'en la meilleure partie de ses Roiaumes, & en la forme de son Gouvernement. De façon que, sans révélation & sans prophétie, Socrates à pu parler du Grand Seigneur, de quoi le Paladin ne l'à pu reprendre sans decouvrir son ânerie. Mais, de le renvoier à Herodote, à Thucydide, & aus autres bons Auteurs, pour apprendre la vérité de ce que je dis, ce seroit à moi péne perduë. Car le pauvre malheureux confesse qu'il n'a point de livres, ni d'argent pour en acheter; & à péne ceux qui ont des Bibliotheques lui voudroient confier les leurs: & puis, il n'y entend du tout rien. Je me contenterai donc de l'envoier étudier l'Histoire des Turcs au bout de pont neuf; où les colporteurs estallent leurs images, à fin que, sans qu'il lui coûte rien, il apprenne dans les Cartes, où les Empereurs des Turcs sont figurez en taille douce, depuis quel temps les Ottomans sont devenus Grand Seigneurs, s'il y a 800 ans, comme dit le Paladin, ou bien si c'est depuis trois siecles seulement (7). —— A Man of tolerable Sense would have spared me an Answer, by not asking so foolish a Question. But, Patience; let us answer this ignorant Fellow. Yes, most renowned Don Quixote, the Turk is at this Time called the Grand Seignor. But, in Socrates's Time, the King of Persia was called so, and by no other Name. Other Kings, says Suidas, take their Titles from the Dominions and Countries under their Obedience; and therefore we say, the King of Macedonia, and the King of the Lacedemonians. The Persian Monarch calls himself only the Great King, or the Grand Seignor, μέγας βασιλεὺς, μέγας δεσπότης. And, as he bore the Title of Grand Seignor, his Subjects took upon them the Quality of Slaves, his Court was called the Port, and his Courtiers οἱ ἐπὶ θύραις βασιλέως, They who stood at the King's Gate. The Emperor of the Turks has succeeded him in the Title of Grand Seignor, as well as in the best part of his Dominions, and in the Form of his Government. So that Socrates might speak of the Grand Seignor, without Revelation or Prophecy; and our Don's Criticism does but discover him to be an arrant Ass. But it would be loss of Time for me to refer him to Herodotus, Thucydides, and other good Authors, for the truth of what I say; because the poor unhappy Creature confesses he has no Books, nor Money to buy any; and they, who have Libraries, will hardly trust him with the use of them, nor does he understand any thing at all of the Matter. I shall content myself therefore with sending him to study the History of the Turks, at the Foot of the Pontneuf, among the Printsellers, where, without any Charge, he may learn, from the Prints of the Turkish Emperors, how long it is since the Ottomans became Grand Seignors, whether Eight hundred Years ago, as this de la Mancha Knight pronounces, or only Three hundred." I have copied this long Passage, that the Reader, at a small Expence, and without consulting the Pieces of this famous Controversy of the General of the Feuillans, may see the coarse, rude, Manner of the Paper Wars of Those Times (8). But we must not let pass the Legerdemain of Father Goulu, who, not finding his Account in μέγας βασιλεὺς, cunningly adds μέγας δεσπότης as the Words of Suidas. This will never acquit him with learned Readers; it only serves to impose on the ignorant, and brands him with Forgery in the Opinion of all others. Upon the whole, the Criticism upon his Grand Seignor appears to be just.

To conclude; The Pride of Eastern Monarchs was not so well flattered with the lofty Title of King of Kings, as with That of The Great King; for we see, that Artabanus IV, to enhance his former Character, caused himself to be styled the Great King, rather than continue That of King of Kings, which he had received from his Predecessors. In Pompey's Time, This was commonly given to the King of Parthia; and, if Pompey did not observe This Form in writing to him, it was from a Regard to those other Kings, who were come to pay him Homage (9). Phrahates assumed it in a Letter, which he wrote to Augustus (10). Suetonius has given it to the King of Parthia, who was Cotemporary with Germanicus, in the Place, where he mentions the Sorrow, which was expressed for the Death of That illustrious Roman. " Regulos quosdam barbam posuisse, & uxorum capita rasisse ad indicium maximi luctus. REGUM ETIAM REGEM & exercitatione venandi & convictu Megistanum abstinuisse, quod apud Parthos justitii instar est (11). — Several petty Kings had their Beards taken off, and their Wives Heads shaved, as a Mark of the deepest Mourning. The KING OF KINGS also abstained from Hunting and Feasting with his Nobles, which, among the Parthians, is like shutting up the Courts of Justice, in some public Calamity." I do not wonder at Artabanus's Taste, when I consider, that the Title of King of Kings had been much more common, than That of the Great King. The Title of King of Kings was given to Agamemnon (12). Diodorus Siculus affirms, that Osmanduas and Sesostris were so styled, the one in his Epitaph (13), the other in Inscriptions on Pillars (14). Both had reigned gloriously in Egypt. The same Title was given to Cyrus in

OF the Title of King of Kings.

(3) Isocrates in Panegyr. pag. 96. See the Article AGESILAUS II. Citat. (38).

(4) Verses 19, and 28.

(5) Discours d'Aristarque à Nicandre sur les fautes de Phyllarque, p. 120, 121.

(6) He makes use of this word, because he had to do with Javersac, against whom a Satire had appeared intitled, La defaite de Paladin Javersac, i. e. Javersac the Knight-Errant defeated. See his Article.

(7) Achates à Palemon pour la Defence de Phyllarque, pag. 43.

(8) i. e. 1628.

(9) Plut. in Pompeio, p. 639. C.

(10) Dion, lib. 55. ad ann. 748, pag. 636.

(11) Sueton. in Caligula, cap. 5.

(12) Cicer. Epist. 14. lib. 9. ad famil. p. 31. Livius, lib. 45. c. 27.

(13) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 1. cap. 47.

(14) Id. ib. cap. 55.

Digitized by Google

in his Epitaph (15); and also to Tigranes, King of Armenia (16). The Holy Scriptures apply it to Nabuchodonosor (17). Note, that the Kings of Persia, who succeeded the Kings of Parthia, continued to style themselves Kings of Kings. See Sapor's Letter to Constantius, in Ammianus Marcellinus (18), and the Annotations of Valesius on That Place. See also Trebellius Pollio, in the Life of Aurelian, and the Notes of the Commentators. Some Authors will have it, that the Emperors of Constantinople carried this Title still farther. They bore, in their Atchievement of Arms, four B's, termed in Heraldry Fusils (19), which stood for βασιλεὺς βασιλέων βασιλευόντων βασιλεύσι, that is to say, King of Kings, reigning over Kings: Let us note, by the way, that the giving the Title of King to a tributary Prince was out of pure Pride.

(15) Strabo lib. 15. pag. 502.

(16) Plut. in Lucullo, pag. 500. C.

(17) Ezech. chap. xxvi. ver. 7.

(18) Ammian. Marcell. lib. 17. cap. 5. pag. 163. ad. ann. 357. Bisselius, Ruinarum Illustr. dec. 4. pag. 545, asserts falsly, that Capitolinus has taken Notice of this Letter.

(19) Bodin, de la Republique, liv. 1. ch. 9. sub. fin. pag. 211.

ARTABAZUS, the Son of Pharnaces, commanded the Parthians, and the Chorasmians, in the Expedition of Xerxes (a). It was He, who, after the Battle of Salamis, escorted the King his Master as far as the Hellespont with 60000 select Soldiers (b). As soon as Xerxes was passed into Asia, Artabazus returned back, and, in his way, thought himself obliged to punish the City of Potidæa, which had cast off the Persian Yoke on the News of their ill Fortune. He besieged it a very long time, without being able to take it, by reason of Innundations, arising from tempestuous Weather. He was more fortunate in the Siege of Olinthus. He disapproved the Resolution taken to leave Mardonius in Europe (c), and it was wholly against his Advice, that Mardonius engaged in the Battle of Platea, which was so fatal to the Persians. Artabazus, who had foreseen what happened, preserved the 40000 Men, whom he commanded, and with much Prudence brought them back into Asia [A]. Mr Moreri shews no Discernment in this Matter. See the Remark.

(a) Herodot. lib. 7. c. 66.

(b) Id. lib. 8. cap. 126.

(c) Id. lib. 9. cap 65, 88.

[A] Preserved the Forty Thousand Men, whom he commanded, and with much Prudence brought them back into Asia.] Mr Moreri says, that Artabazus gathered together the broken Remains of the Army. This is not understanding the Author, whom he quotes. Herodotus plainly informs us, that Artabazus kept these Forty Thousand Men apart as a Body of Reserve, and that, when he was going to lead them to Battle, he perceived, that Mardonius was routed, and fled another way. If Mardonius had survived the Loss of That Battle, he would not have failed to have said, in his Vindication, that Artabazus had sacrificed him; that he had either been a Spectator only, or a Run-away; that, having given his Advice against the Battle, he had contributed what lay in his Power to the Loss of it, in order to raise a Trophy to his own Prudence. Artabazus would not have been the only Person, who, by such a Conduct, had maintained the Opinion he had given in a Council of War. It is a strange Oversight to say, as Mr Moreri does, that the Greeks lost That Battle. And The Siege of Potidæa, naked and unfurnished of all manner of Circumstances, what does it do there? Of what use is it to a Reader?

ARTAVASDES I, King of Armenia, Son and Successor of That Tigranes, who was conquered by Lucullus and Pompey, in the War with Mithridates, betrayed the Romans basely, in the Expedition of Crassus (a); for, after having been to wait upon That General with 6000 Horse, and promising him a Supply of 40000 Men, he broke his Word, and excused himself on Pretence of the War he was obliged to maintain in his own Country against the Parthians (b). Crassus, finding himself abused, threatned very severely (c), but was not in a Condition to punish This Treachery; on the contrary, Artavasdes had a great Share in the Rejoicings, which were afterwards made, at the Court of the King of Parthia, for the Destruction of the Roman Army. He had fixed the Marriage of his Sister with Pacorus, the Son of Orodes, King of the Parthians (d), and was at the Court of Orodes, during the excessive Joy occasioned there by so great a Victory. He saw a thousand Diversions full of Insults on the Romans; he was present at their Feasts and Comedies, and heard Euripides's Verses applied to the Disaster of Crassus, whose Head was brought in upon the Stage, while the Bacchantes of That Poet was represented. This gave Plutarch occasion to say, that Orodes understood Greek, and that Artavasdes composed Tragedies, Orations, and Histories [A], some of which were preserved to his own Time. I take This Artavasdes to have been the same, who deceived Marc Antony [B]. He persuaded him to turn his Arms against

(a) Dio, lib. 40.

(b) Plutarch. in Crasso, pag. 554.

(c) Id. pag. 556.

(d) Id. pag. 564. Cicero Epist. ad Famil. 3. l. 15.

[A] Artavasdes composed Tragedies, Orations, and Histories.] Here is a Greek Poet and Historian, who has been forgot by Vossius, as a Poet, but not as an Historian (1); tho' Mallincrot places him in his Collection of Historians never before taken notice of. Mallincrot observes, that Appian has cited the History of our Artavasdes, but has differed a little as to the Author's Name. He adds, that he was the first Prince of That Name, who reigned in Armenia (2). This may be true, altho' the Conjecture of several Critics on a Passage of Justin should be good. They pretend, that we ought to read Artavasdes, and not Ortoadistes, in the second Chapter of the Forty second Book. So that there must have been a King of Armenia called Artavasdes, in the time of Mithridates the Great, King of Parthia. This Mithridates was deposed, and succeeded his Brother Orodes, who obtained That memorable Victory over the Romans. Our Artavasdes, indeed, reigned at the same time with Orodes; yet nothing hinders, but he might have began to reign before him, and his Father Tigranes be dead before the deposing of Mithridates the Great; in which Case Artavasdes might have been at War with the latter. It is true, that, to make Justin agree with Plutarch (3), and Dion (4), it must be supposed, that His Mithridates the Great is the Phrahates, These make to reign in the Time of Tigranes.

(1) Voss. de Hist. Græc. pag. 154.

(2) Malincrot, Paralipom non de Histor. Gr. pag. 11, & 8, calls him, with Vossius, Artoadistes. Mr Ryck, upon Tacit. pag. 28, pretends, that Plutarch calls him Artabazus, but it is certain he calls him oftener Ἀρταβάσδης.

(3) Plut. in Pompejo.

(4) Dio, lib. 37.

[B] I take this Artavasdes to have been the same, who deceived Marc Antony.] My Reasons are these; He, who betrayed Crassus, was the Son of Tigranes, as Dion affirms (5). He, who deceived Marc Antony, was the Son of Tigranes, as Josephus says (6), whose Testimony, if there were occasion for it, might be confirmed by Strabo, who not only affirms, that He, whom Marc Antony punished for his Perfidy, reigned after Tigranes (7), but also that he was His Son (8). So then He, who deceived the Romans in the Time of Crassus, is the same, who deceived them in the Expedition of Marc Antony. Mr Moreri did not understand it so; He would have us acknowledge Two Artavasdes's. Had he stopt here, his Opinion would not have been thought so strange; but what follows can never be enough wondered at. He will have it, that One of These Artavasdes's was He, who composed Histories and Poems, and that the other was He, whom Marc Antony led in Triumph to Alexandria, in the Year of Rome 720. He says, that the latter left a Son of his own Name, the same, perhaps, mentioned by Plutarch, who had

(5) Id. ib. lib. 40.

(6) Joseph. lib. 15. c. 5.

(7) Strabo, lib. 11. sub finem.

(8) Id. ib. lib. 11. pag. 365.

SEVERAL Mistakes of Mr Moreri.

Digitized by Google

against the King of Media (e), and by that means engaged him in an Enterprize, which had a very bad Iſſue, and in which he never ſeconded him (f). Marc Antony, deferring his Revenge till a more convenient Seaſon, diſſembled for the preſent; but, two Years after, viz. in the Seven Hundred and twentieth Year of Rome, he uſed ſo many Artifices and fine Promiſes, that at laſt he drew him to a Conference, and then, keeping him Priſoner, loaded him with Silver Chains [C], and led him in Triumph to Alexandria. Artavaſdes's Wife and Children were alſo forced to adorn Marc Antony's Triumph. They were all led in Chains of Gold, through the midſt of the People, to Cleopatra; but neither Promiſes nor Threats could prevail on them to fall on their Knees before her, or make Supplications to her: they called her only by her Name, which was the occaſion of their being more ſeverely treated. Some time after, Artavaſdes was put to Death, and his Head ſent to the King of the Medes. It was Cleopatra, who ſent him This Preſent upon her return to Alexandria, after the loſs of the Battle of Actium (g). She fancied, That this Head would induce the King of Media to enter into a ſtricter Alliance with Marc Antony againſt Auguſtus. We ſhall find, in the following Article, what became of the Sons of Artavaſdes. He had a Daughter, married to King Dejotarus (b).

(e) He was called Artavaſdes.

(f) Dio, lib. 49 Strabo, lib. 11. pag. 361, 366. Plutarch. in Anton. pag. 933.

(g) Dio, lib. 51. See Remark [G] Citation (11).

(b) Cicer. ad Attic. Epiſt. 21. l. 5.

had ſo much Wit (9), and betrayed Craſſus. What Blundering is here! Craſſus was betrayed in 701; He, who betrayed him, was actually King of Armenia; how then could he be the Son of a King of Armenia, who was dethroned in the Year 720? Mr Moreri remarks, that This dethroned Prince died ſome time after in Priſon. This is forgetting a very eſſential Circumſtance; for he was killed. Ἀρτλάβη συναπολου]θῆσαι τῇ Ἀκ]τιακῇ πολέμῳ (10). - - - - - He was taken off upon the breaking out of the War of Actium. Cleopatra, according to Dion, was returned to Alexandria, from the Battle of Actium, when this Murther was committed (11). He adds, that he left a Son named Artavaſdes. No ſuch thing; his eldeſt Son, who ſucceeded him, was called Artaxias; his other Son Tigranes. And as to That other Artavaſdes, who, according to Mr Moreri, quoting Tacitus, ſoon loſt Armenia, which Tiberius had given him, he was not the Son of the former, but the third, or fourth, King after him. It is moreover falſe, that Tacitus ſays, that Tiberius gave him Armenia. What he ſays is this: "Dein juſſu Auguſti impoſitus Artavaſdes, & non ſine clade noſtra dejectus. Tum C. "Cæſar componendæ Armeniæ deligitur: Is Ario"barzanem origine Medum ob inſignem corporis "formam & præclarum animum volentibus Armeniis "præfecit (12). —— Afterwards, by Auguſtus's Or"der, Artavaſdes was ſet over them, who loſt not "his Kingdom, without the Defeat of our Forces. "Then C. Cæſar was appointed for the ſettling Ar"menia. He pitched upon Ariobarzanes, of Median "extract, and excellent Endowments both of Body "and Mind, to be their King, whom the Armenians "very willingly received." Laſtly, what Mr Moreri ſays, that Auguſtus ſent a Son of Agrippa thither, who was ſoon dethroned, is very falſe; for Caius Cæſar, the Son of Agrippa, was not ſent into Armenia 'till after the Deſtruction of the laſt Artavaſdes. Nor was he ſent to take it for himſelf, but only to ſettle That Kingdom: accordingly he placed Ariobarzanes on the Throne, and afterwards continued to viſit the Eaſt with a Magnificence becoming the preſumptive Heir to the whole Roman Empire. If one would endeavour to commit Miſtakes, is it poſſible to make more than Mr Moreri has done, who has been guilty of ſeven or eight in ſixteen Lines? Mr Hoſman makes but three, in this Article. He ſays, I. That Artavaſdes aſſiſted Craſſus againſt the Parthians (13). II. That Tiberius gave Armenia to another Artavaſdes. III. That Auguſtus had before given it to Artabazus, the Son of Agrippa, who was ſoon depoſed. Mr Lloyd has ſuppreſſed this whole Article, tho' it ſtood very fair in Charles Stephens.

(9) Plutarch does not ſay, that he had much, or ſo much, Wit.

(10) Strabo, lib. 11, ſub finem.

(11) See Tacitus, Ann. lib. 2. c. 3.

(12) Id. ib.

(13) Charles Stevens ſays ſo too.

[C] Marc Antony —— loaded him with Silver Chains.] Dion remarks, that the Choice of this Metal was to avoid diſhonouring Royal Majeſty with Chains of Iron (14). Paterculus ſays, that, in order to render them more honourable, they were made of Gold. "Catenis, ſed ne quid honori deeſſet, aureis "vinxit (15). —— He ordered Chains to be put on, "but, that they might be as honourable as poſſible, they "were of Gold." The ſame Ceremony had been uſed to Darius (16). But what ſhall we ſay to Mr Ryck, who treats a Fact, advanced by Lewis d'Orleans to reconcile Paterculus with Dion, as a meer Fiction (17)? The Fact is this; that Artavaſdes was loaded with Silver Chains in Priſon, and with Chains of Gold on the Day of Triumph. Mr Ryck maintains, that neither of theſe two Hiſtorians have mentioned either Priſon or Triumph, and therefore can never admit of any ſuch Reconciliation. But yet it is very true, that Dion, in the ſame Page, where he ſpeaks of Silver Chains, mentions alſo thoſe of Gold, which were put upon Artavaſdes, and his Family, on the Day of Triumph. The Slips of Memory are ſometimes very ſurprizing.

(14) Dio, lib. 49. circa fin.

(15) Paterc. lib. 2. cap. 82.

(16) Curt. lib. 5. cap. 12. Vide ibi Freinſhemium.

(17) Ryck, Animadv. ad Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 3. pag. 28, 29.

ARTAVASDES II. was eſtabliſhed King of Armenia by Auguſtus. Between the Death of Artavaſdes I, and this time, had preceeded Artaxias, Tigranes, and the Children of Tigranes. Artaxias, the Eldeſt Son of Artavaſdes I, had made his Eſcape, when his Father was put in Chains (a); but not before he had endeavoured to maintain himſelf on the Throne, with his Troops, and the Towns, which had proclaimed him King, after his Father was taken (b). He had the Misfortune to be beaten by Marc Antony, and then took Refuge among the Parthians, by whoſe Aſſiſtance he reigned at laſt in Armenia (c); but, upon the Complaint of his Subjects, and their Requeſt to have his Brother Tigranes, who was educated at Rome, Auguſtus ordered Tiberius to depoſe Artaxias, and confer the Kingdom on Tigranes (d). Artaxias was murthered by his own Subjects, before the Approach of Tiberius [A], ſo that he had no

(a) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 5.

(b) Dio, lib. 49.

(c) Arſacidarum vi ſeque regnumque tutatus eſt. Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 6.

(d) Dio, lib. 54.

[A] Artaxias was murthered — before the Approach of Tiberius.] Dion, who informs us of this Circumſtance, is miſtaken in the Name; for he calls him Artabazes, inſtead of Artaxias (1). Tacitus imputes the Death of Artaxias to the Treachery of his Relations; occiſo Artaxiâ per dolum propinquorum (2); but Horace aſcribes it to the Valour of Tiberius.

—— Claudî virtute Neronis
Armenius cecidit (3).

By brave Tiberius' Arms Armenia's Monarch fell.

This is no wonder; Poets know too well how to give an agreeable turn to Events: Every thing, in their Hands, becomes Matter of Panegyric, and furniſhes Flowers to crown Princes with. Joſephus ſays only, that Artaxias was depoſed by Archelaus, and Tiberius (4). Suetonius, without mentioning Artaxias, contents himſelf with obſerving, that Tiberius placed Tigranes on the Throne. "Ducto ad orientem exer"citu regnum Armeniæ Tigrani reſtituit, ac pro Tri"bunali diadema impoſuit (5). —— Leading the "Army into the Eaſt, he reſtored the Kingdom of "Armenia to Tigranes, and on a Throne inveſted him "with

(1) See Lipſius on Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. c. 3.

(2) Tacit. ibid.

(3) Horat. Epiſt. 12. lib. 1. v. 26.

(4) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 5.

(5) Suet. in Tiber. c. 9.

Digitized by Google

(e) Id. ib.

no hard Task to inſtal Tigranes (e). This happened in the Year of Rome 734. Neither Tigranes, nor his Sons, enjoyed their Royalty long (f); they gave place to Artavaſdes II [B], whoſe Reign was alſo ſhort (g). Auguſtus, who had advanced him, being made acquainted with the Confuſions of Armenia, diſpatched thither his Grandſon Caius Cæſar, to compoſe them. This young Prince made Ariobarzanes their King, with Univerſal Satisfaction.

(f) Nec Tigrani diuturnum Imperium fuit, nec liberis ejus. Tacit. ubi ſupra.

(g) Id. ib.

(6) Παρεσχήσατο, armis ſubjugavit, recepit, ad deditionem compulit.

(7) Scaliger in Euſeb. pag. 170.

(8) He calls him Artabazes by miſtake, in imitation of Dion. Fratre ejus Artabzae, ſays he, regni inſeſſore ab Armeniis occiſo. ---- His Brother Artabazes, who had uſurped the Throne, being killed by the Amenians.

(9) Redacta Armenia in poteſtatem populi Romani, regnum ejus Artavaſdi tradidit. ---- Having reduced Armenia under the Power of the Roman Empire, he made Artavaſdes their King. Paterc. lib. 2. cap. 96.

FAULTS of Moreri's Supplement.

" with the Diadem." The Term reſtored does not ſeem properly applied, becauſe Tigranes, who was the younger Brother of Artaxias, had never been in poſſeſſion of the Crown of Armenia, nor could he have any Right to it during the Life of his Elder Brother. Scaliger, who very rightly obſerved the Miſtake of Euſebius, in uſing an Expreſſion, which implies the Conqueſt of Armenia by Tiberius (6), when the Armenians deſired nothing more, than to have Tigranes for their King: I ſay, Scaliger, who juſtly cenſures this Impropriety of Eusebius (7), ought himſelf to have avoided The reſtituit of Suetonius, and not given Artaxias the Title of Uſurper (8). There is another Impropriety, or Miſtake, in Euſebius, and in his Tranſlator St Jerome, which has not been noted by Scaliger. They affirm, that Tiberius ſeized on Armenia, παρεσήσατο, occupavit Armeniam: Now he only gave the Armenians the Maſter they deſired. It is alſo certain, that he inthroned him, and put the Diadem upon his Head, and, if there had been occaſion for it, would have aſſiſted him with his Forces; how comes it then, that Scaliger ſays, Armenia was given to Tigranes without any Act of Tiberius? What does he mean in maintaining, that St Jerom, when he affirms, that Tiberius ſeized on Armenia, occupavit, ought to have believed, that it belonged already to the Romans? I confeſs I underſtand nothing of this Logic. But why does he not condemn Paterculus, as well as Theſe two Fathers of the Church? Paterculus, tho' an Hiſtorian, flatters Tiberius like a Poet, and has complimented him upon having reduced Armenia under the Power of the Roman Empire (9). This is not his only Error; he calls Him Artavaſdes, whom Tiberius crowned King of Armenia, when his true Name was Tigranes.

[B] Tigranes and his Son --- gave place to Artavaſdes II] Here the Authors of The Supplement to Moreri have been no leſs faulty, than Moreri himſelf. I omit their aſſerting, that our Artavaſdes was the Son of Artaxias, and conſequently the Nephew of Tigranes: There is nothing of this in the ſecond Book of Tacitus's Annals, the only Author whom they have quoted; but let that paſs. They add, that the Sons of Tigranes were ſtiled Kings by Tiberius, and that Artavaſdes II, their Couſin, ſucceeded ſoon after to the Crown, by the Order of the ſame Emperor. Tacitus, their only Evidence, confutes them; for he expreſsly ſays, that all this was done by Auguſtus. Inſtead of affirming with them, that the Romans took Arms againſt this Artavaſdes, and at laſt deſtroyed him, his Words are, non ſine clade noſtra dejectus, which rather ſignify the contrary, that he was depoſed in ſpite of the Romans, who ſupported him, and by the Defeat of their Succours. See the Article ARTAVASDES, King of Media. Laſtly, they ſay, that Tigranes, the Uncle of our Artavaſdes, was beheaded at Rome, under the Emperor Tiberius. This is abſurd; for the Inſtalling of Tigranes, whom they would have to be the Uncle of Artavaſdes II, was performed in the Seven hundred thirty fourth Year of Rome, and his Reign laſted but a very ſhort time. The Execution of Tigranes under Tiberius happened in the Year 789: So that, according to theſe Gentlemen, That Prince muſt have lived above fifty Years after he was depoſed, and attained to ſuch an Age, as would not have eſcaped the Obſervation of the Hiſtorian, who mentions the Indignity of his Death. It is to be obſerved, that Tigranes, created King of Armenia in the Year 734, had been taken Priſoner, together with his Father, by Marc Antony in 720, and was then a Youth full grown (10). Obſerve alſo, that, a little after his Coronation, he married his Children to one another (11), according to the Cuſtom of thoſe Nations. But, what is yet more obſervable, He, whom Tiberius cauſed to be put to Death, was Herod's Grandſon. Joſephus tells us, that Alexander, the Son of Herod, had, by his Wife Glaphyra, the Daughter of Archelaus King of Cappadocia, two Sons, one of whom, named Tigranes, reigned in Armenia, and was impeached before the Romans (12). This without doubt was He, of whom Tacitus ſpeaks in this manner. " Ne Tigra- " nes quidem Armenia quondam potitus, ac tunc " reus, nomine regio ſupplicia civium effugit. —— " Not even Tigranes, who had been King of Armenia, " when accuſed and ſentenced as a Criminal before the " Romans, could eſcape Puniſhment on account of his " Royal Dignity (13)." Mr de Tillemont's Conjecture, that This Tigranes was King of the leſſer Armenia, which Auguſtus had given to Archelaus (14), might be admitted, if it could be reconciled with Joſephus, who ſays, that the Deſcendants of Alexander and Glaphyra reigned in the greater Armenia. Ἡ δὲ Ἀλεξάνδρου γενεὰ τῆς μεγάλης Ἀρμενίας ἐβασίλευσε (15).

(10) See Joſephus, lib. 15. cap. 5.

(11) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 3.

(12) Joſeph. lib. 18. c. 7.

(13) Tacit. Ann. lib. 6. cap. 40.

(14) Hiſt. des Emper. Tome I. not. 11. ſur Tibere.

(15) Joſeph. de Bello Jud. lib. 2. c. 19.

ARTAVASDES, King of Media, was attacked by Marc Antony, at the Sollicitation of another Artavaſdes, King of Armenia. This Enterprize proved very fatal to Marc Antony; and, as he believed himſelf betrayed by the Adviſer of it, he turned all his Rage againſt him, and entered into an Alliance with the King of Media. He gave him part of Armenia, as ſoon as he had taken it from the other Artavaſdes, and cemented This Peace by the Marriage of his Son Alexander with Jotape, Daughter to the King of the Medes. The Troops, with which he ſupplied him, made him victorious over the Parthians, and over Artaxias, the Son of Artavaſdes, King of Armenia; but, as ſoon as he recalled them, and detained thoſe which his Ally had lent him, This Prince, unable to reſiſt his Enemies, fell into their Hands. Dion relates this under the Seven Hundred and twenty firſt Year of Rome (a). It is probable he was not long a Captive, and that he was the ſame King of Media, to whom Cleopatra ſent the Head of Artavaſdes, King of Armenia, in the Seven Hundred and twenty fourth Year of Rome (b). The Supplement to Moreri is here very erroneous [A].

(a) Dio, lib. 49.

(b) Id. lib. 51.

[A] The Supplement to Moreri is here very erroneous.] We find there I. That this Artavaſdes, King of Media, Son and Succeſſor of Darius, maintained a vigorous War both againſt Artavaſdes, King of Armenia, and againſt Pompey: II. That he was at laſt defeated by the Parthians, and that he took Refuge at Rome under Auguſtus, who conferred on him the leſſer Armenia, inſtead of Media, which he had loſt. Plutarch is quoted, and Dion in his Forty ninth Book. But, to confute this the retrograde way, by one obvious Remark; Does not the bare citing Plutarch look like bantering the World, and reſolving to aſſert Falſities with Impunity? For who would not much rather give over criticizing, than read two great Volumes in Folio, to diſcover the Truth of one inconſiderable Fact? It is certain, Dion, in his Fourty ninth Book, no where ſays, that This Artavaſdes fled to Rome, nor that Auguſtus made him a Preſent of the leſſer Armenia. I know of no Author, who ſays ſo. I find indeed, in Tacitus, that Auguſtus ordered one Artavaſdes to reign in Armenia after the Son of Tigranes; but not that it was to make him amends for Media. It is likely, That they, who wrote the third Volume of Moreri, have made uſe of this Paſſage of Tacitus

Digitized by Google

Tacitus for a double Purpoſe; on the one ſide, to aſſert, that Tiberius gave Armenia to an Artavaſdes, the Son of Artaxias, and Nephew of Tigranes (1); and on the other, that Auguſtus conferred it on Artavaſdes, the depoſed King of Media. Laſtly, how careleſs is it to ſay, that he maintained a vigorous War againſt the King of Armenia, and againſt Pompey? This War againſt the King of Armenia had no ſuch need of being vigorouſly maintained, conſidering that the Treachery of That Prince to Marc Antony, was later than the War, which Pompey made in That Country, by about Thirty Years. Nor have I obſerved, either in Plutarch, or Appian, that any Artavaſdes, King of Media, was attacked by Pompey: I find only, in Appian, that Pompey ſubdued Darius King of Media (2).

(1) See Remark [B] of the Article ARTAVASDES II.

(2) Appian. in Mithrid.

ARTAXATA [A] was the Capital City of Armenia, on the River Araxes. Hannibal was the Perſon, who not only drew the Plan, but alſo ſurveyed the Building of it, at the Requeſt of Artaxias, King of Armenia, to whom he retired after the Defeat of Antiochus (a). We may be ſure, that a Situation, made choice of by ſo able a General, was very advantagious [B], both in time of War and of Peace. This City was burnt by Corbulo, in the Eight Hundred and eleventh Year of Rome (b). That great Captain would not have proceeded to ſuch Extremity againſt the Inhabitants, who brought him the Keys of their City, upon his firſt inveſting it, if the Laws of War had not made it abſolutely neceſſary [C]. For ſo great a City could not be kept without a great Garriſon, which he could not ſpare without weakening his Army to ſuch a degree, as muſt have diſabled him from any farther Enterprize; And, to have abandoned it in the Condition he found it, would have been giving up both the Glory and Advantage of the Conqueſt. He reſolved therefore to raze it, and was encouraged thereto by a great Miracle [D], ſi credere dignum eſt. The City was covered all on a ſudden with a thick Cloud, from whence iſſued abundance of Lightning, while the Sun continued to ſhine all round it to the very Compaſs of the Walls. Some time after, This City was rebuilt by Tiridates, who called it Neronea in Honour of Nero (c), from whom he had received at Rome a thouſand Civilities, upon his going thither to pay him Homage in the Year of Rome 819.

(a) Plut. in Lucull. pag. 513. Strabo, lib. II. pag. 364. See the Article ARTAXIAS I. Citation (c).

(b) i. e. 58 of CHRIST.

(c) Xiphil. in Neron.

[A] ARTAXATA.] Plutarch obſerves, that this City took it's Name from That of King Artaxas, (or Artaxias), to whom Hannibal propoſed the Building of it (1). What Meſſ. Lloyd and Baudrand note, that Tacitus calls it Artaxia, is not true; for he calls it conſtantly Artaxata. What they add, that Strabo names it Artaxiaſata (2), is not accurate; for this is plainly inſinuating, that he calls it nothing elſe, or, at leaſt, that it is the principal Name he gives it. Now it is certain, that he commonly calls it Artaxata, and only once obſerves, that it was alſo called Artaxiaſata. Pinedo had reaſon to alter Ἀρταξιάσωτα to Ἀρταξιάσατα in Stephanus Byzantinus, who doubtleſs uſed the Expreſſion of Strabo, ſince he quotes him. It is certain, at leaſt, he never called This City Artaxia, as Ortelius falſely affirms both of Him, and of Tacitus. The Omiſſion, which Pinedo accuſes this Stephanus of, is indeed inexcuſable; for that Hannibal, a Refugee in Armenia, obſerving a very advantagious Situation, adviſed the Prince, whoſe Gueſt he was, to build a City there, and took upon himſelf the Direction of the Work, is a Circumſtance, which ought not to have been ſuppreſt in a Dictionary of Cities. I am inclined to believe, that Stephanus Byzantinus, having Strabo before his Eyes, when he compoſed the Article of Artaxata, did not overlook what he found there concerning Hannibal; but that his Epitomizer, a Perſon of much leſs Judgment, ought to be charged with this Neglect, which Pinedo ſo juſtly complains of. There is, perhaps, no Work, which requires more Diſcernment, or a better Taſte, than the abridging a large Book (3). I cannot forbear making this Remark, becauſe I am myſelf daily perplexed by the Negligence of Abreviators; while by their means I meet with Difficulties and Obſcurities in an hundred Places, which probably were intelligible in the Authors, whom they have abridged. See what Mr Gronovius obſerves of the Authors of the Synopſis Criticorum (4).

(1) Plut. in Lucull. pag. 583.

(2) It is probably through an Error of the Preſs, that we read Arraxiaſata, in M. Baudrand.

(3) See Remark [C] of the Article ACHILLES, at the end; and Remark [C], No VII. of the Article ARSINOE

(4) Gronovius in Tractatu, de Judâ proditore. Conſult the Nouvell. de la Rep. des Lettres, May 1684, Art. 6. pag. 270.

[B] It's Situation was very advantagious.] Strabo informs us, that Artaxata was built in a Place, where the River made a Peninſula; ſo that the Walls were ſurrounded with the River, in form of a Circle, wanting but little of being perfect. His Tranſlator entirely miſtakes his Meaning, and is juſtly reprimanded for it by Pinedo (5). If the Verſion only be conſulted, we muſt believe this City to have been without Walls, except in the Place, where the River did not ſurround it; Cincta muri loco flumine, niſi qua iſthumus eſt. — It was encompaſſed by the River inſtead of a Wall, except only at the Iſthmus. The Greek tells us quite another ſtory; Τὸ τεῖχος κύκλῳ περιβεβλημένον τὴν πολιὰν πλὴν τῷ ἰσθμῷ. — The Wall was ſurrounded by the River in form of a Circle, except only at the Iſthmus.

(5) Pinedo in Stephan. de Urbib. pag. 117.

[C] It was burnt by Corbulo, — which the Laws of War made abſolutely neceſſary] The more we conſider the inevitable Conſequences of War, the more we ſhall deteſt Thoſe, who are the Cauſes of it. Here is Corbulo, who reduced a great and fine City to Aſhes, and made an infinite Number of Women, Children, and old Men, miſerable, who never did him any Injury. Inquire of Thoſe, who underſtand the Trade of War beſt, whether he did well, they will tell you, he did very well; and that, in caſe he had not acted ſo, he muſt have been eſteemed a very weak General, for the Reaſons alledged by Tacitus. "Artaxatis ignis immiſſus "deletaque & ſolo æquata ſunt, quia nec teneri "ſine valido præſidio ob magnitudinem mœnium, "nec id nobis virium erat quod firmando præ"ſidio & capeſſendo bello divideretur, vel ſi in"tegra & incuſtodita relinqueretur, nulla in eo uti"litas aut gloria quod capta eſſent (6). — Artaxata "was burnt down, and razed to the Ground, becauſe "ſo large a City could not be defended without a "ſtrong Garriſon, which was not to be ſpared out "of an Army, but juſt ſufficient for carrying on the "War; and, to leave it entire, and ungarriſoned, "would have been throwing away both the Honour, "and Benefit, of taking it." The Inſults, which a General ſuffers, when he leaves his Conqueſts without putting them out of a Condition to hurt him, or keeps them to the too great weakening of his Army, make him ſo deſpicable, that, to maintain his Reputation, one of the main Springs of War, he muſt give occaſion to no ſuch Inſults. So that it is by a fatal and an unhappy Neceſſity, that the hard Laws of War oblige us to deprive an Enemy of That, which can be of no Advantage to ourſelves.

(6) Tacit. Ann. lib. 13. cap. 41.

[D] And was encouraged thereto by a great Miracle.] Tacitus, with all his great Wit, has ſwallowed the Marvellous with as much Reliſh, as Thoſe of meaner Capacities are uſed to do ſuch ſort of Dainties. Doubtleſs the Inhabitants of Artaxata endeavoured to comfort themſelves on the Deſtruction of their City, among other Reaſons, by ſome Miracle, which might aſſure them, that the Gods were diſpleaſed with it; and therefore every thing, which could be repreſented in this Light, was eaſily believed. But what Notions they had of this Matter we want ſome Hiſtorian of theirs to inform us of. The Romans, on their Part, did not want Perſons, who knew how to turn the Tables in favour of their Country. For this Particular we are obliged to Tacitus. "Adjicitur Miraculum velut numine oblatum, nam "cuncta

Digitized by Google

" cuncta extra tectis hactenus sole inlustria fuere,
" quod mœnibus cingebatur ita repente atrâ nube
" coopertum fulguribusque discretum est, ut quasi
(7) Id. ibid. " infensantibus Deis exitio tradi crederetur (7). ——
" Heaven itself seemed also to appear in it by a Mi-
" racle; for, while all without the Walls continued
" to enjoy the brightest Sunshine, all within was so
" suddenly covered with a black Cloud, darting forth
" Lightning on all Sides, that the City was thought
" to be marked out for Destruction by the Anger of
" the Gods."

ARTAXIAS I, King of Armenia, while he was only one of the Generals of Antiochus the Great, made a Partition of Armenia between himself, and another of That King's Generals [A]. That Prince suffered them both to enjoy their Sovereign Authority (a). They took Advantage of his Complaisance; and, when he was defeated by the Romans, they submitted to the Victors, and obtained from them the Title of King (b); after which, They endeavoured to inlarge their Dominions, as much as they could, at the Expence of their Neighbours. Tigranes, who made himself so famous in the Wars of Mithridates, whose Daughter he had married, was descended from Artaxias. Plutarch relates, that Hannibal, being retired to Artaxias, after the Defeat of Antiochus, gave him a great deal of good Advice; and that, having found out a Place, which no account was made of, very proper for building a City, he drew a Plan for it, shewed Artaxias the Ground, and persuaded him to build it. Artaxias was very much pleased with the Proposal, and desired Hannibal to undertake the Direction of the Work. His Request was complied with, and hence arose a large and beautiful City, which, in Honour of the Founder, was named Artaxata (c). This is all I find, in the two Authors, quoted by The Supplement to Moreri (d): As to his rebelling against his lawful Prince, upon a Confidence in the Friendship of the Romans (e), I find no shadow or trace of it, any more than of his practising all possible Methods, to maintain himself in his Usurpation, or of his dying in Prison under Antiochus Epiphanes. These are meer Chimeras, without the least support from any Quotation.

(a) Strabo, lib. 11. pag. 366. See also pag. 364.

(b) Plut. & Strabo pag. 364. & Stephanus in Ἀρτάξατα, gives this Title to Artaxias.

(c) Plut. in Lucullo, pag. 513, calls it Ἀρτάξας. See also Strabo, pag. 364.

(d) Plut. in Lucullo. Strabo, lib. 11.

(e) Strabo says expressly, ἦρχον ὑπὸ τῷ βασιλέως ἐπιτράπευτος. These commanded by Permission of the King.

(1) Pag. 364. Edit. 1587.

(2) Pag. 366.

[A] He made a Partition of Armenia between himself, and another of the Generals of Antiochus the Great] In the Editions of Strabo, he is called Θαεισάδης in one Place (1); and Ζαρίαδεις, or Ζαδριάδης, in another (2). It was easy for those, who had the Direction of these Editions, to have inserted the same Word every where; and I wonder Casaubon has made no Remark upon this, since he has made some, which are not more material.

(a) In Artaxias II.

(b) Dio, lib. 49.

ARTAXIAS II, King of Armenia, Eldest Son of Artavasdes, as we have already said (a), was proclaimed King by his Father's Army [A], upon his Father's being taken Prisoner with his Queen, and other Children (b). This Eldest Son endeavoured to support himself against Marc Antony, and gave him Battle; but was defeated, and forced to fly into the Country of the Parthians. He returned some time after into Armenia, and reigned there. This was undoubtedly after the taking of Artavasdes, King of Media: For, before the Parthians took That King (c), they were beaten by him, and Artaxias bore a share in the Disgrace. He disgusted his Subjects in such a manner, that they impeached him at Rome, and desired his younger Brother Tigranes for their King (d). Augustus, having this Tigranes in his Custody, sent him to them, and ordered Tiberius to in-throne him. But Artaxias was murthered by his Relations, before the arrival of Tiberius.

(c) Id. ib. sub. fin.

(d) Id. ib. lib. 54. Tacitus Ann. lib. 2. c. 3. See Remark [B] of the Article Artavasdes II.

FAULTS in The Supplement to Moreri.

[A] He was proclaimed King by his Father's Army.] The Continuators of Moreri make Josephus, or Tacitus, say, that it was Marc Antony who placed Artaxias upon the Throne; than which nothing is more false. They add, that Artaxias, having been defeated, was sent into Exile among the Parthians. Which is another Mistake; for he retired thither himself for Refuge. If Marc Antony had been in a Condition to have banished him after his Victory, he would not have sent him to the Parthians, but have brought him bound Hand and Foot to Alexandria.

ARTAXIAS III, King of Armenia, was the Son of Polemon, King of Pontus, and was named Zeno. He took such a pleasure, from his Infancy, in imitating the Customs of the Armenians, that he thereby gained the Affections of the Nation. So that Germanicus thought he could not cast his Eye on a fitter Person, to supply the Place of Vonones, whom the Armenians had driven out. He went therefore to Artaxata, and, in the presence of all the People, gave the Diadem to This Zeno, in the Year of Rome Seven Hundred and seventy one. At the same instant, the Assembly proclaimed him Artaxias, after the Name of the Capital City. Tacitus, who informs us of all these things (a), mentions his Death under the Year Seven Hundred and eighty eight (b).

(a) Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 56.

(b) Id. ib. l. 6. c. 31.

ARTEMIDORUS, He, who wrote on Dreams, was a Native of Ephesus; nevertheless, in That Book, he gives himself the Sirname of Daldianus, in Honour to the Country of his Mother [A]. But, in his other Books, he continues to call himself The Ephesian.

[A] He gives himself the Sirname of Daldianus, in Honour to the Country of his Mother.] " Ephesus,
" says he, of which Place I have, in the Title of
" several of my Books, declared myself a Native,
" is sufficiently renowned of itself, and has been " justly celebrated by many able Pens; but the small " Town of Daldia (1), has hitherto remained in obscu-
" rity for want of Panegyrists. I am resolved there" fore

(1) Daldia a small Town in Lydia.

Digitized by Google

Ephesian. He lived under Antoninus Pius, as he informs us himself, where he says, that he knew an Athlete, who, having dreamt, that he had lost his Sight, obtained the Prize (a), in the Games, which That Emperor ordered to be celebrated. No Author ever took more pains on a useful Subject, than Artemidorus has done upon a very trifling one [B]. He was not contented to buy up all that had been written on the Explication of Dreams, which amounted to several Volumes [C], but he spent many Years

(a) Artemid. lib. 1. cap. 28. See also chap. 66. of the same Book.

" fore, since it happens to be my Country by my " Mother's Side, to acknowledge my Obligations to " it in this manner." This would be more liable to a Suspicion of Vanity, had it been delivered with more Formality and Method; but this Author expresses himself with so much Ingenuity, that it seems rather to have been the manner of That Age to use these Words with different Ideas from what they would now be understood to import. Τὴν δὲ ἐπιγεγραφὴν μὴ θαυμάσῃς διότι Ἀρτεμιδώρου Δαλδιανοῦ καὶ οὐχὶ Ἐφεσίου ἐπιγέγραπται. ὥσπερ πολλὰ τῶν ἄλλων εἰς ἄλλας πραγματείας πεποιημένων μοι βιβλίων. τὴν μὲν γὰρ Ἔφεσον συμβέβηκε καὶ αὐτὴν δι' ἑαυτὴν περιώνυμον εἶναι καὶ πολλῶν ἀξιολόγων κηρύκων τετυχηκέναι. Δαλδία δὲ, πόλισμα Λυδίας, καὶ οὐδὲν ἐλλόγιμον. διὰ τὸ μὴ τοιούτων ἀνδρῶν τετυχηκέναι, ἄγνωστον τὸ μέχρι εἰς ἐμὲ μεμένηκε. διὸ ἁρπάζεια ἔσῃ μοι πατρίδι πρὸς μητρὸς ταῦτα ἀποδίδωμι αὐτῇ (2). Wonder not, that, in the Title of this Book, I call myself Artemidorus the Daldian, and not the Ephesian, as my other Works have it. For Ephesus has had the good Fortune, not only to be famous in itself, but also to be highly complemented by many eminent Persons. While Daldia, a little Place in Lydia, and not very considerable, for want of such Patrons, continues yet unknown. Therefore, as this is also my Country, since I owe it to my Mother, I thus repay the Debt." Rigaltius ought to have kept to this Reason, and not have sought for two others: one of which is, that Apollo inspired Artemidorus, in the City of Daldia, with the Design of interpreting Dreams; the other is, that, there having been another Artemidorus of Ephesus, the Interpreter of Dreams ought not to have used the Title of Ephesian, which was already in the Possession of another (3). This last Reason, though the worst of the two, was nevertheless adopted by a Man of Learning (4). Artemidorus himself confutes it beyond Contradiction, since he declares, that he styled himself the Ephesian, in a great Number of Books. So that he did not then think of preventing his being confounded with Artemidorus the Geographer. Without doubt he was much better known by the Title of Ephesian, than by That of Daldian (5).

(2) Artem. lib. 3. sub fin. p. 193.

(3) Rigalt. Not. in Artemid. p. 1.

(4) Mr de Tillemont, in the second Tome of his Hist. des Emper. Part II. pag. 731. Edit. of Bruxelles.

(5) Lucian in Philopatr. cites him Ἀρτεμίδωρον τὸν Ἐφέσιον.

[B] In treating of Dreams, he made choice of a very trifling Subject.] If our own Experience be not sufficient to convince us, that, generally speaking (6), there is nothing more confused, than the Ideas, which we call Dreams, we need only consider this Author's own Maxims, to be persuaded, that his Art does not deserve the Attention of a wise Man. There is no Dream, which Artemidorus has explained, but will bear a quite different Interpretation, with the same probability, and with, at least, as natural Resemblances, as Those, on which That Interpreter proceeds. I say nothing of the Injury done to Intelligences, to whose Direction we must necessarily impute our Dreams, if we expect to find in them any Presage of Futurity. What a way of instructing do we ascribe to them! How unworthy of their Knowledge and Gravity, and, in a Word, of such Beings as they are! If they cannot instruct us better, how great is their Ignorance! And if they will not, how great is their Malice (7)! Might not one complain, a thousand times, of his good Angel, as well as of his evil Genius, in the Words of Æneas,

(6) The extraordinary Dreams, mentioned in Scripture, are out of the Question.

(7) Compare with this the Reflexions of ARTABANUS the Son of Hystaspes. See the Remark [I] of his Article.

> Quid natum toties crudelis tu quoque falsis
> Ludis imaginibus (8)?
>
> Ah, cruel Mother, such Deceits to use,
> And with delusive Forms thy Son abuse!

(8) Virgil. Æn. lib 1. ver. 407.

What I am most surprized at, is, that Artemidorus should take so much Pains to establish a Doctrine, which might give him so much Vexation: For must he not be afraid of dreaming, what his Art might represent to him as ominous? He had found, by his Studies, that, when a Traveller dreams he has lost the Key of his House, it is a Sign that some Body has debauched his Daughter (9). If Artemidorus had dreamt such a Dream, while he was abroad, would he not have believed there was a fine Trade driving at Home? Could this Knowledge have been agreeable to him? Or had he not much better have been without it? He tells us, that, having dreamed, his Wife had insulted him (10), he was much troubled the next Day, when he perceived a Man coming towards him, who was not his Friend. Observe how, by Virtue of his Onirocrisy, he turned an imaginary Evil into a real one.

(9) Artem. lib. 5. pag. 255. n. 17.

(10) Δέδοκα ὑπὸ τῆς ἐμαυτοῦ γυναικὸς ἐν ὕπνοις ὑβρίζεσθαι. Conrarius translates it thus, per somnium visus sum mihi ab uxore mea vituperiis & plagis impeti. ---- I dreamed my Wife scolded at and beat me. Artem. lib. 2. cap. 53. pag. 144.

The Objection, which I have just hinted, and which I ground on the Notions the Christian Doctors give us of the Angelical Natures, seems very strong to me, on a Supposition of the Truth of these Notions; but, if we establish a different System, and which has no repugnancy to the Possibility of things, That Objection is much weakened. That is, if we believe there are Spiritual Beings, not only more limited than Man in certain Respects, as to the manner of making themselves understood, but even more fickle and capricious. How can we tell, whether they do not love to divert themselves at our Cost, and make us run after Enigma's, in which they mix something puerile and frivolous, on purpose to make the Scene more ridiculous? How do we know but we serve to divert them, as Beasts do us? And perhaps, when they would correspond with us, they may meet with such Difficulty, in the Motion of our animal Spirits, as may render the Attempt impracticable? See the Remark [D] of the Article MAJUS. Be it as it will, Reason gives us a sufficient Caution against establishing any such Art, and shews all Pretence to it to be a most vain and chimerical Undertaking.

(11) See, below, the Passage of Tertullian, Citation (14).

[C] He bought up all that had been written on the Explication of Dreams, which amounted to several Volumes.] I have already expressed my Astonishment at some Persons, who have laboured hard to convince themselves of the pretended Science of Dreams. I should not wonder, that several, who call themselves Diviners, should boast of being Masters of it; they may maintain themselves by it, and, not having any Faith themselves in the Art they profess, may be great Gainers by the Dreams of others, without being at all disquieted with their own. But I cannot judge thus of Artemidorus, nor of several other grave Authors, who have written on the Interpretation of Dreams (11). They were themselves the first deceived. Those, named by Rigaltius (12), are as follows, Artemon Milesius, Antiphon, Apollodorus Telmissensis, Apollonius Attalensis, Aristander Telmissensis, Aristarchus, Alexander Myndius, Cratippus, Demetrius Phalereus, Dionysius Rhodius, Epicharmus, Geminus Tyrius (13), Hermippus, Nicostratus Ephesius, Phœbus Antiochenus, Philochorus, Panyasis Halicarnasseus, Serapion, Strato. These, according to Rigaltius, were all prior to Artemidorus. Tertullian names only some of them, when he says (14), " Quanti autem commentatores & adfirmatores in " hanc rem, Artemon, Antiphon, Strato, Philocho- " rus, Epicharmus, Serapion, Cratippus, & Diony- " sius Rhodius, Hermippus tota Sæculi literatura. " —— How considerable are the Commentators and " Authors on this Subject, Artemon, Antiphon, Stra- " to, Philochorus, Epicharmus, Serapion, Cratippus, " Dionysius Rhodius, and Hermippus, the whole " Learning of the Age." Andrew Schot adds, to some of those beforementioned, Astrampsychus, Cassius Maximus, & Dionysius Heliopolita (15). He says, that Artemidorus has quoted these two last; but, as to Cassius Maximus, I do not see, that Artemidorus, who has dedicated the three first Books of his Work to him, speaks of him otherwise, than as a Man, who was curious in this Science (16), and might be

(12) Rigalt. not. in Artem. pag. 5.

(13) Andr. Schot. on Seneca's Controvers. IX. & Jonsius de Script. Hist. Phil. pag. 329. call him Geminus Pyrius. Rigaltius's Edition of Artemidorus, lib. 1. cap. 40. has it Γεμῖνος ὁ Τυρίου.

(14) Tertull. lib. de Anima, cap. 46. See also Fulgentius, lib. 1, Myth. cap 13, & ibi Muncker.

(15) Andr. Schottus in hæc verba Senecæ Controv. 9. Antipbontis libros vocabat, tantum in illis somniorum ofi.

(16) Artem. lib. 3. init. pag. 164; lib. 4, init. pag. 197.

Digitized by Google

Years in travelling up and down to get acquainted with Fortune-tellers. He kept a continual Correſpondence with Thoſe in the Towns and Aſſemblies of Greece, in Italy, and in the moſt populous Iſlands; and he collected every where all the old Dreams he could hear of, and the Events, which it was ſaid they had (b). He deſpiſed the Reflexions of thoſe grave and ſupercilious Perſons, who treat all Pretenders to Predictions as Sharpers, Impoſtors, and Cheats [D]; and, without regarding the Cenſures of theſe Cato's, he frequented thoſe Diviners ſeveral Years. In a word, he devoted all his Time and Thoughts to this Science of Dreams, and thought his great Labour had enabled him to warrant his Interpretations by Reaſon and Experience [E]. He took great care to inſtruct his Son in the ſame Science, as appears by the two Books, which he dedicated to him. So eager a purſuit after theſe Studies is the leſs to be wondered at, when we conſider, that he believed himſelf under the Inſpiration and Direction of Apollo (c). He intreats his Readers very ſeriouſly neither to add to, nor diminiſh from, his Book, and makes a kind of Adjuration to them thereupon, in the Name of the All-ſeeing Eye of Providence, which watches over all things [F]. He dedicated his three firſt Books to one Caſſius Maximus [G], and the other two to his Son. They were printed, in Greek, at Venice, in the Year 1518. In the Year 1603, Rigaltius publiſhed them at Paris, in Greek and Latin, with Notes. The Latin Tranſlation, he made uſe of, was That publiſhed by John Cornarius, at Baſil, in the Year 1539. Artemidorus wrote a Treatiſe of Auguries, and another of Chiromancy: But (b) Ibid. Præf. pag. 3. See alſo lib. 5. pag. 252.

(c) Id. ſub fin. lib. 2. pag. 161.

(17) Lib. 2. circa fin. pag. 261.

be Maſter of it in a little Time (17). And, as for Dionyſius Heliopolita, I have not met with him at all in Artemidorus. Pappus, of Alexandria, might certainly be named, who, we are aſſured by Suidas, wrote on the Interpretation of Dreams. See, above, the Article of ACHMET. Among the Moderns, there was one Joſhua Abrech, who promiſed Wonders in the Title of his Book. I know nothing more of him, than what is to be met with in Vander Linden (18), and in Theophilus Spizelius (19). His Work was printed in the Year 1607. We ſhall mention Junianus MAJUS in his Place (20). It juſt now comes into my Memory, that Lyſimachus, the Son of a Daughter of Ariſtides, got his Living by interpreting of Dreams in the Streets. Μνημονεύων Ἀελιείδης θυγατριδοῦν ἐν μάλα πένητα Λυσίμαχον, ὃς ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐκ πινακίου τινὸς ὀνειροκριτικῆς, παρὰ τὸ ἰσχνῆον λεγόμενον καθεζόμενον ἔβοσκε (21). We may remember Lyſimachus, the Grandſon of Ariſtides, by his Daughter, who was ſo poor, that he ſat near a public Place, called Jaccheum, interpreting Dreams, out of a Dream Book, for a Livelihood. He was reduced to this through Poverty. But had he turned Cobler, and mended old Shoes, inſtead of delivering himſelf to his Cuſtomers out of this ſort of Dream Almanack, he had brought leſs Diſcredit on the Memory of his Grandfather.

(18) De Script. Medicis.

(19) Specim. Biblioth.

(20) See his Article, and the beginning of the Remark [H], of the Article ALEXANDER AB ALEXANDRO.

(21) Phalerus in Socrate, apud Plutarch. ſub fin. vitæ Ariſtid. pag. 335.

[D] He deſpiſed the Reflexions of thoſe grave and ſupercilious Perſons —— who deſpiſe the Pretenders to Predictions.] Theſe Criticiſers are ſometimes in the wrong, and, on ſuch Occaſions, it is beſt to go on our own Way, without regarding their Cenſures. But was this Artemidorus's Caſe? Was he much leſs to blame than they, who, in imitation of Catullus, unreaſonably ridicules the ſage and experienced Advice of old Age, as the Reproof of ill natured Greybeards?

Vivamus, mea Lesbia, atque amemus,
Rumoreſque ſenum ſeveriorum
Omnes unius æſtimemus aſſis (22).

(22) Catull. Epigr. 5.

Let's live and love, my Lesbia,
Regardleſs, while we're young and gay,
Of all that ſtern old Age can ſay.

Sober Readers will eaſily judge of all this: I leave it to their Thoughts, and will content myſelf with ſetting before their Eyes Artemidorus's own Words. Τοῦτο δὲ καὶ σφόδρα διαβεβλημένων τῶν ἐν ἀγορᾷ μαντέων, ὥς δὴ περίξας τε καὶ γόητας καὶ βωμολόχους καλοῦσιν οἱ σεμνοπροσωποῦντες, καὶ τὰς ὀφρῦς ἀνεσπακότες, καταφρονήσας τῆς διαβολῆς ἔτεσι πολλοῖς ὡμίλησα (23). — Particularly when the Practicers in Divination were driven out of the Market-Place, and treated as Beggars, Jugglers, and Buffoons, by thoſe, who knew how to affect grave and ſupercilious Countenances, in defiance of this contumely, I correſponded with them many Years.

(23) Artem. in Præfat. pag. 3.

[E] He thought his Labour, in the Science of Dreams, had enabled him to warrant his Interpretations by Reaſon and Experience.] Let us hear what he ſays himſelf. Ἀεὶ τὴν πεῖραν καὶ κανόνα καὶ μάρτυρα τῶν ἐμῶν λόγων ἐπιζώμαι. Ἐγὼ μέν ἐν πάντων ἤδη διὰ πείρας ἐλήλυθα τῷ μηδὲν ἄλλο πράττειν ἀεὶ δὲ καὶ νυκτὸς καὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν πρὸς ὀνειροκρισίαν εἶναι (24). —— I always appeal to Experience, as the Rule and Demonſtration of what I advance. For, by ſtudying Onirocriſy Day and Night, and doing nothing elſe, I have arrived at an univerſal Experience.

(24) Id. lib. 2, ſub fin. pag. 161.

[F] He made a Kind of Adjuration to his Readers, in the Name of —— Providence, which watches over all Things.] "If any one, ſays he (25), thinks he "can add any thing new to my Book, let him keep "it to himſelf, as properly his own. This is fair; "if he finds, that I have ſaid too much, he may take "only what he likes, and leave the reſt." Τὰ λοιπὰ τῶν βιβλίων μὴ ἐξαίρων θεὸν ἐποπτὴν καὶ φύλακα πάντων νομίζων τὸν Ἀπόλλωνα. Expunging nothing of my Works, as he knows there is a God, who obſerves all Things, and that Apollo is our Protector. He was afraid of your foul Play, often practiſed, of turning Authors topſy-turvy, either by Abridgments, or Interpolations.

(25) Id. ib.

[G] He dedicated his three firſt Books to one Caſſius Maximus.] Rigaltius can find no ſuch Perſon, and perhaps, ſays he, we ought to read FABIΩ or TATIΩ ΜΑΞΙΜΩ; for Julius Capitolinus makes mention of one Gavius Maximus, who was Præfect of the Prætorium, for twenty Years, under the Emperor Antoninus, and who had Tatius Maximus for Succeſſor. However it be, The Patron Artemidorus addreſſed himſelf to was a Phenician by Nation (26), a great Orator, and of ſo ready a Wit, that he was able to underſtand an Author perfectly without reading him through (27). Andrew Schot calls him Coſſinus Maximus, and diſtinguiſhes him from Caſſius Maximus (28). Two Faults for one, without counting That of the Remark [C] (29). I do not know whether any one has thought of reading Claudius Maximus inſtead of Caſſius Maximus. Under the Emperor Antoninus Pius, there was a Proconſul of Africa, whoſe Name was Claudius Maximus. The charge of Magic, againſt which Apuleius defended himſelf, was brought before this Proconſul. It appears, from ſeveral Paſſages in his Plea, that this Claudius Maximus paſſed for a learned Man, and one who was curious in Philoſophical Learning. "Benè quod apud te, Maxime, cauſa agitur, qui pro "tua eruditione legiſti profecto Ariſtotelis περὶ "ζώων γενέσεως, περὶ ζώων ἀναλομῆς, περὶ "ἱσορίας multijuga volumina: præterea problemata "innumera ejuſdem, tum ex eâdem ſectâ cæterorum "in quibus id genus varia tractantur. —— It is happy for me, that I am to plead my Cauſe before thee, "O Maximus, who art ſo learned, as to have read the "numerous Volumes of Ariſtotle, on the Generation of "Animals, on the Anatomy of Animals, and on Hiſtory, beſides his great Work of Problems, and ſeveral others, of the ſame Sect, treating on various "Subjects of This kind." Thus he ſpeaks at Page 115.

(26) Id. ib.

(27) Id. in Præfat. p. 4.

(28) Andr. Schott. in Senec. Controv. IX.

(29) Citation (13).

Digitized by Google

But we have no Remains of them [H]. Tertullian has not taken notice of him in That Paſſage, where he quotes ſeveral Onirocritic Authors (d); but Lucian does not forget him, tho' he names but two Writers of This Claſs (e).

(d) i. e. Interpreters of Dreams. See this Paſſage of Tertullian cited above (14).

(e) In Phi-lopatr.

115. A little after, he addreſſes him in this manner; "Audiſti, Maxime, quorum pleraque ſcilicet legeras "apud antiquos philoſophorum. —— The greateſt "part of what thou haſt heard, O Maximus, thou "haſt read thyſelf amongſt the ancient Philoſophers." Elſewhere (30) he ſays to him; "Multa fando, Maxi-"me, audiſti, & plura legendo didiciſti, non pauca "experiendo comperiſti; —— Many things, O Maxi-"mus, haſt thou heard in Diſcourſe, more haſt thou "learned by Study, and not a few haſt thou diſcovered "by Experience." And again (31); "An quod multo "præſtabilius eſt, tua doctrina, Claudi Maxime, tua-"que perfecta eruditione fretus, contemnam ſtultis "& impolitis ad hæc reſpondere. —— Much rather "had I rely, O Claudius Maximus, on thy great "Learning, and deſpiſe giving any Anſwer to the ig-"norant and illiterate." He ſeems alſo to have been at firſt a Philoſopher by Profeſſion, but to have raiſed himſelf by his long military Services. "Erras —— "ſi eum fortunæ indulgentiâ non ex philoſophiæ cen-"ſurâ metiris: ſi virum tam AUSTERAE SECTAE, "tamque diutinæ militiæ non putas amiciorem eſſe "coërcitæ mediocritati quàm delicatæ opulentiæ (32). "—— You are miſtaken —— if you think, the Fa-"vours of Fortune have more weight with Him, than "the Dictates of Philoſophy; or that a Perſon of ſo "AUSTERE a SECT, and ſo old a Soldier, will not "rather take the Part of contented Mediocrity, than "of effeminate Opulence."

(30) Apuleii Apologia, p. 149. Vol. 2, Edit. Lugdun. 1614, in 8vo.

(31) Ibid. pag. 157.

(32) Apuleii Apolog. pag. 149.

[H] He wrote a Treatiſe of Auguries, and another of Chiromancy; but we have no Remains of them.] Vander Linden falſely affirms, even in his Edition of Merklinus, that Aldus has printed them in Greek, that Cornarius tranſlated them into Latin, and that Rigaltius publiſhed them in both theſe Languages (33). We muſt ſearch a little higher for the Original of this Miſtake; nor will the Inquiry be uſeleſs; it may ſerve to let thoſe, who write Abridgments, ſee, into what a Multitude of Errors they are apt to lead their Readers. Gejner had ſaid; "Artemidorus —— ſcrip-"ſit de ſomniorum interpretatione libros 4, item de "auguriis & manuum inſpectione. Suidas. Hujus "autoris quinque libros Aldus Græcè excudit (34). "—— Artemidorus —— wrote four Books of the In-"terpretation of Dreams, and alſo of Auguries, and "of Chiromancy. Suidas. Five Books of this Author "are printed in Greek, by Aldus." He had ob-ſerved, afterwards, that theſe five Books were only concerning Dreams. See how Simler has abridged this Text. "Artemidorus —— ſcripſit de ſomnio-"rum interpretatione lib. 4. Item de auguriis & "manuum inſpectione. Eos Aldus Græcè excudit. "—— Artemidorus —— wrote four Books of the In-"terpretation of Dreams. Alſo of Auguries, and Chi-"romancy. Theſe Aldus has printed in Greek." Is This abridging, or miſinterpreting, an Author? It looks more like the latter than the former.

(33) De Script. Medicis.

(34) Geſn. Bibliothec. fol. 96, verſo.

ARTEMISIA, Queen of Caria, and Daughter of Lygdamis [A], accompanied King Xerxes, in Perſon, in his War with the Greeks [B]. She was a Woman of great Capacity, and perfectly Maſculine Courage. So that, happening to be poſſeſt of Sovereign Authority, as well by being Widow of the late King, as on account of the Minority of her Son (a), during the Preparations of Xerxes, ſhe took this occaſion to ſignalize herſelf, and voluntarily engaged in That famous Expedition. She diſtinguiſhed herſelf in it very particularly both by her Counſel and Conduct. The Reaſons, on which ſhe grounded her Advice, againſt engaging in the Battle of Salamis (b), were extremely juſt. She ſaved herſelf very artfully in That Battle; for, ſeeing herſelf purſued by an Athenian Ship, without any hope of eſcaping, ſhe attacked a Perſian Ship, commanded by Damaſithymus King of Calyndus, with whom ſhe had a quarrel, and ſunk him (c). This made Thoſe, who were in chace of her, believe, that her Veſſel was of their own Party [C], and ſo quit the Purſuit. By good fortune for her, not one of Damaſithymus's Men was ſaved. So that ſhe got rid of an Enemy, without the leaſt ſuſpicion of having deſtroyed him; and eſcaped being taken, with the honour of having ſunk a Greek Ship. Xerxes was much miſtaken on this occaſion; for he cryed out, that his Men had behaved themſelves like Women, and his Women like Men [D]. He intruſted her with the Government of his Children, the young Princes of

(a) He was called Piſyndelis. See Remark [E] of the Article MAUSOLUS.

(b) Herod. l. 8. c. 67.

(c) Cap. 87.

[A] She was Daughter of Lygdamis] Herodotus does not ſay, what Moreri fathers upon him, viz. that Lygdamis was King of Halicarnaſſus (1). He only ſays, that Artemiſia was of Halicarnaſſus, by the Father's ſide, and of Crete by the Mother's Side. If the ſame Hiſtorian had not declared, that Lygdamis, who aſſiſted Piſiſtratus, and to whom, after Piſiſtratus was re-eſtabliſhed in Athens, he gave the Command of the Iſle of Naxos, was a Native of That Iſle (2), I ſhould have taken him for our Artemiſia's Father, or Grand-father. Blancardus, in his Edition of Harpocration (3), has continued the Error of Thoſe, who went before him, viz. Damis, for Lygdamis (4). Valeſius's Annotations point out the proper Correction, which Gronovius has actually made, upon publiſhing Harpocration, in the Year 1696.

(1) Herod. lib. 7, c. 99.

(2) Id. lib. 1, cap. 61, 64.

(3) That of Leyden, 1683.

(4) In Ἀρτεμισία.

[B] She accompanied King Xerxes, in Perſon, in his War with the Greeks (5).] Suidas ſays, it was againſt the Perſians ſhe took Part (6); but this Paſſage may, perhaps, have been mangled; for That piece of Wit of Xerxes, mentioned immediately after, by Suidas, that the Men were become Women, and the Women Men, would be unintelligible, if Artemiſia had been in the Greek Army, where the Men fought like Lions. Mauſſac ſuppoſes, that Suidas wrote, as it is in Harpocration, κατὰ τὰ Περσικά (7). In the Perſian War.

(5) Herod. lib. 7, c. 99.

(6) Ἡσίφευσε κατὰ Περσῶν. —— See be-haved bravely a-gainſt the Perſians.

(7) Mauſſac. Not. in Harpocr.

[C] She made thoſe, who chaſed her, believe, that her Veſſel was of their own Party.] Herodotus has forgot a very eſſential Circumſtance, for want of which his Narration loſes much of it's Probability. He ought to have told us, as Polyænus has done, that Artemiſia cauſed her Perſian Colours to be taken down (8). Polyænus makes her follow the Conduct of Thoſe Pirates, who hoiſt all ſorts of Colours, according as they have occaſion. When ſhe gave Chace to a Greek Ship, ſhe hung out Barbarian Colours; but, if a Greek Ship purſued her, ſhe diſplay'd Greek Colours. He has turned the Engagement of this Queen ſo many Ways, that he makes three or four different Actions of it, and tells us of a Spindle and Diſtaff, ſent by the King of Perſia to a Captain of a Ship, which there is no making Senſe of, ſince the Ship, which Artemiſia engaged with, was ſunk, and all the Men in her loſt.

(8) Polyæn. Strat. lib. 8, cap. 53.

[D] Upon her Account, Xerxes cried out, that his Men had behaved themſelves like Women, and his Women like Men.] Let us ſee what Herodotus ſays: Ξέρξην δὲ εἰπεῖν λέξαι πρὸς τὰ φερζόμενα, οἱ μὲν ἄνδρες γεγονασί μοι γυναῖκες, αἱ δὲ γυναῖκες, ἄνδρες (9). Xerxes, upon hearing this Account, is reported to have cried out, "My Men are become "Women, and my Women Men." To this let us add, what Juſtin ſays: "Artemiſia regina Halicar-"naſſi, quæ in auxilium Xerxi venerat, inter pri-"mos duces bellum acerrimè ciebat, quippe ut in "viro muliebrem timorem, ita in muliere virilem "audaciam cerneres (10). —— Artemiſia, Queen of "Halicarnaſſus, who joined her Forces with Xerxes, "appeared

(9) Herod. lib. 8, c. 88.

(10) Juſtin. lib. 2, c. 12. See alſo Polyænus, ubi ſupra, and Pauſanias, lib. 3, p. 93.

Digitized by Google

of Perſia, when, according to her Advice, he quitted Greece to return into Aſia. The Athenians were ſo incenſed at a Woman's making War againſt them, that they promiſed a great Reward for the taking Artemiſia, and ordered all their Captains of Ships to endeavour it (d). Her Statue was erected at Lacedemon, among thoſe of the Perſian Generals, in the Portico, built with the Spoils of That Nation (e). The Stratagem ſhe uſed, to make herſelf Miſtreſs of Latmus, is as much to be commended upon the Principles of Machiaveliſm, as to be condemned upon Thoſe of Chriſtianity. She placed her Troops in Ambuſcade, and then went in a devout Proceſſion, with Eunuchs, Women, Trumpets, and Drums, to celebrate the Feaſt of the Mother of the Gods, in a Wood, which was conſecrated to her, near That City. The Inhabitants, charmed with this Zeal, ran thither to admire her Piety; and, in the mean time, Artemiſia's Army took Poſſeſſion of the Town (f). Theſe great Qualities did not preſerve her from amorous Foibles [E]. She was paſſionately in Love with a Native of Abydos, whoſe Name was Dardanus, and was ſo enraged at his ſlighting her, that ſhe put out his Eyes while he ſlept (g). The Gods, to puniſh her, cauſed her Paſſion to grow yet more violent; inſomuch that being adviſed by the Oracle to go to the Promontory Leucas (h), the Refuge of Lovers in deſpair, ſhe went thither, took the Leap, but did not recover it. She was buried in that Place. Many Writers prepoſterouſly confound her with the Artemiſia I am going to mention [F].

(d) Herod. lib. 8. c. 93.

(e) Pauſanias, lib. 3. pag. 93.

(f) Polyæn. Strat. lib. 8. cap. 53.

(g) Ptolem. Hephæſt. apud Phot. cod. 190. p. 491.

(h) See the Article LEUCAS.

" appeared among the forwardeſt Commanders in the " hotteſt Engagements; and, as, on the Man's ſide, " there was an effeminate Cowardice, on the Wo- " man's was obſerved a maſculine Courage."

[E] Her great Qualities did not preſerve her from amorous Foibles.] All Heroines are not like Agrippina, who overcame the Weakneſs of her own Sex, by imitating the Fortitude of the other. " A- " grippina, æqui impatiens, dominandi avida, virili- " bus curis fœminarum vitia exuerat (11). —— Agrip- " pina, impatient of an Equal, and eager for Rule, " by manly Thoughts put off the Woman's Weakneſs." Semiramis, who was ambitious and warlike to the higheſt Degree, was prodigiouſly laſcivious. It is obſerved, that moſt great Warriours are of an amorous Complexion: Of which the myſtical Commentators may give Homer the Honour, for ſo naturally deſcribing the Intercourſes of Mars and Venus; but I believe this is not ſo generally true, in the Caſe of Women, who ſeem beſt ſecured againſt the Follies of Love by the Purſuits of Ambition.

(11) Tacit. Annal. lib. 6. cap. 25.

[F] She is prepoſterouſly confounded with Artemiſia, the Wife of Mauſolus.] It ſeems Pliny is guilty of this Fault; for he ſays, that Artemiſia, the Wife of Mauſolus, gave her Name to the Herb called Parthenis (12). Now, ſince the Herb Artemiſia, (which we call Mugwort,) is mentioned by Hippocrates, and the Wife of Mauſolus was not born 'till after Hippocrates; Pliny, in That Paſſage, has miſtaken one Artemiſia for the other. If one of them gave her Name to the Herb Mugwort, it muſt be the Daughter of Lygdamis, the great and courageous Artemiſia, who accompanied Xerxes. Mr Chevreau, to whom I owe this Remark againſt Pliny, obſerves, that Leo Allatius, from whom he has it, has, with Reaſon, cenſured Robert Stephens, for ſaying (13), That Artemiſia, the Wife of Mauſolus, ſignalized herſelf in Xerxes's War againſt the Grecians (14). Mr Chevreau has remarked the ſame Miſtake in the Hiſtorical Theatre of Chriſtian Matthew: he adds, That it was not without Reaſon, that Pliny, in the Paſſage alledged, gave Mauſolus the Title of Rich. I find, indeed, This Epithet in Du Pinet's Tranſlation; but not in the Pliny of Father Hardouin: And I find, that Pliny, in another Place (15), deſcribing the Magnificence of the Mauſoleum, ſays only, that Mauſolus was a petty King of Caria, Cariæ regulus. Father Hardouin endeavours to help out his Author, by ſuggeſting, that all the Kings of Caria aſſumed the Name of Mauſolus, as all the Kings of Egypt did the Name of Ptolomy; and, therefore, that Artemiſia, the Wife of Mauſolus, to whom Pliny imputes the Vanity of giving her Name to an Herb, is She, who lived in the Time of Xerxes: But he muſt give me leave to ſay, that, in this Caſe, his Author would be very liable to cenſure on another Account; namely, for characterizing a Queen by a Title, which muſt have been common to her with all the other Queens of That Country. Father Hardouin grounds his Conjecture on a Paſſage, where the two Artemiſia's are ſtiled Queens of Caria (16). I ſhall paſs by this reaſoning of his, and obſerve, that Tzetes is a little puzzled (17). According to him, one of the Artemiſia's was the Wife of Mauſolus, and the other the Wife of Hecatomnes; the firſt of whom he makes the Companion of Xerxes. Now all Authors agree, that She, who built a magnificent Tomb for her Husband, was the Daughter of Hecatomnes, and Wife of Mauſolus; and that the Artemiſia, who joined the Perſians againſt the Greeks, was the Daughter of Lygdamis. The great Scaliger will not paſs Muſter here: He has too apparently taken the one for the other (18), and That in a Place, where it was not eaſy to make ſuch a Miſtake: For it is in the Abſtract of a Book, the Author whereof has declared, in plain Terms, that he ſpeaks of one Artemiſia, the Daughter of Lygdamis, who took up Arms againſt the Perſians (19). Scaliger, ſuppreſſing all theſe particular Deſcriptions, has ſubſtituted That of the Widow of Mauſolus, which can only be applied to That Queen of Caria, who ſo much honoured the Memory of her Husband. This celebrated Writer has led another great Man into an Error, having occaſioned Valeſius to affirm, that, after the Death of Mauſolus, Artemiſia, ſeeing herſelf ſlighted by Dardanus, whom ſhe loved, put out his Eyes, and, finding herſelf afterwards ſtill more in Love, went to take the Leucadian Leap, by which ſhe loſt her Life (20). By comparing This Paſſage with That of Scaliger, it plainly appears, that the one is a Tranſcript of the other. This ſtumble of Valeſius in ſo Even a Road, and the Difference he obſerves between Theopompus, who makes Artemiſia die of Grief for the Loſs of her Husband, and Ptolomy, the Son of Hepheſtion, who makes her die for Love of another Man, as Valeſius pretends, are ſo much the more amazing, as he had, but two Lines before, quoted the ſeventh Book of this ſame Ptolomy, to prove, that Artemiſia's Father's Name was not Damis, but Lygdamis. Balthaſar Bonifacius, who gives the ſame falſe account of the Wife of Mauſolus (21), confeſſes he took it from Scaliger. Habemus confitentem reum: The Criminal pleads Guilty. And it may be properly ſaid of this Way of propagating Faults, —— dedit hanc contagio labem,

Et dabit in plures: ſicut grex totus in agris
Unius ſcabie cadit, & porrigine porci;
Uvaque conſpecta livorem ducit ab uva (22).

Infections, from one ſingle Caſe begun,
Soon ſpread their Poiſon, and thro' Numbers run.
So, one Sheep touch'd, none of the Flock eſcape;
And the whole Bunch rots from one ſmitten Grape.

Mr Menage, having ſaid a great many fine Things of Artemiſia, the Wife of Mauſolus, and particularly of the Honour done her, in propoſing her as a Model of conjugal Love, goes on in this manner: Yet Ptolomy, the Son of Hepheſtion —— ſays, that Artemiſia was ſo ſmitten with the Love of one Dardanus, &c. And, having repeated the whole Story, he proceeds thus: " There were two Artemiſia's, both Queens of " Caria, as Suidas informs us; She, who was married " to Mauſolus, and another more ancient: and, if this " Story be true, it is moſt probable, that it happened " to the firſt Artemiſia, and that This Ptolomy, the " Son of Hepheſtion, in applying it to the Wife of " Mauſolus,

(12) Plin. lib. 25. c. 7.

(13) In his Theſaurus Linguæ Lat. I have met with the ſame Faults in his Dictionarium Nominum Propriorum, &c. printed in 8vo at Cologne, 1558.

(14) Chevreau Hiſt. du Monde, Tome 4, pag. 33, of the firſt Dutch Edit.

(15) Lib. 36, cap. 5.

(16) This Paſſage is in Harpocration; but we ſhould aſcribe it to Tzetzes, if we follow exactly the Expreſſion of Hardouin, Tom. 4, pag. 398.

(17) Tzetzes, chil. 12, Hiſt. 455.

(18) Scalig. Auſoniar. Lection. lib. 2, cap. 18. See Auſonius Tollius, pag. 329.

(19) Ptol. Hephæſt. apud Phot. n. 190. pag. 491.

(20) Valeſ. Not. in Harpocrat. Lexicon, pag. 11.

(21) Hæc Ptolomæus Hephæſtionis filius apud Junioremn Scaligerum recenſet. --- Thus Ptolomy, the Son of Hepheſtion, has it, according to Scaliger junior. Balth. Boniface. Hiſt. Ludier. lib. 3. c. 87.

(22) Juven. Sat. 2. v. 78.

" Mauſolus, was miſtaken (23)." The Conjecture of this learned Man is very juſt; but he was in the wrong in charging Ptolomy with fixing this Adventure on the Wife of Mauſolus. Saraſin, introducing Mr Menage in the Dialogue, upon the Queſtion, whether a young Man ought to be amorous, makes him ſay, that Artemiſia, the ſame Artemiſia, who was ſo afflicted for the Death of her Husband, who drowned herſelf in Tears, and reproached the Stars, which could not help it,

With all that Rage can make one ſay,
When Reaſon flies, and gives it way (24), ſe'l, at laſt, in Love with Dardanus, and that the moſt profeſſed Coquette would be aſhamed of the Paſſion of That Queen. Upon this he quotes what Scaliger ſays; ſo that we ſee one, or rather two, ingenious Men, Mr Saraſin and Mr Menage, deceived by the learned Scaliger. The witty Author of the New Dialogues of the Dead has made That Artemiſia, who lamented her Husband ſo much, in Love with a young Man (25).

It would be too tedious to point out all thoſe, who have confounded the two Artemiſia's. Rævisius Textor (26), and the Authors of the Theſaurus Fabri are of This Number. Olivier, who wrote a Commentary on Valerius Maximus, is alſo one of them; though he knew, that Strabo and Herodotus did not agree about the Genealogy of The Artemiſia, whom they mention (27). He innocently imagined, that one of the two muſt be in the wrong, and never dreamed, that they ſpoke of different Perſons, and were both in the right. It is true, Mr Hofman gives two Articles of Artemiſia; but, in the firſt, he has huddled together confuſedly, what ſhould have been diſtinguiſhed under the two different Heads; and he is doubtful, whether the Wife of Mauſolus, and the Daughter of Lygdamis, are not one and the ſame Perſon. Beſides, he quotes Vitruvius for Facts, which he never once mentions. Mr Lloyd led him the way in That falſe Quotation from Charles Stephens, which he has not corrected; And from whom he has very ſurpriſingly pirated the whole Article of That Artemiſia, who followed Xerxes; which Article was very correct.

(23) Menag. Obſervat. ſur Malherbe, pag. 53.

(24) Saraſin's Works, pag. 181.

(25) See the Nouveaux Dialogues des Morts, 2. part. p. 15. Dutch Edit.

(26) In Officina.

(27) Valerius Maximus Variorum, pag 395. Edit. 1655.

ARTEMISIA, Queen of Caria, the Daughter of Hecatomnes (a), Siſter and Wife of Mauſolus, immortalized herſelf by the Honours ſhe paid to the Memory of her Huſband. She cauſed a very magnificent Tomb to be built for him, in Halicarnaſſus, which was called Mauſoleum, and was one of the ſeven Wonders of the World; from whence the Appellation of Mauſoleum has ever ſince been given to all ſumptuous Structures of this kind. Pliny has left us a particular Deſcription of this ſtately Monument (b). It may be ſeen in French in the Hiſtory of Mr Chevreau (c), and in the Supplement to Moreri. Artemiſia lived but two Years after her dear Huſband (d), who died without Children (e), after he had reigned twenty four Years, towards the End of the CVIth Olympiad [A]. She died of Grief and Melancholy (f) [B], before the Mauſoleum was finiſhed (g). It is ſaid ſhe mixed her Huſband's Aſhes with Water, and drank them, that ſhe might ſerve him for a living Tomb (h). It muſt not be forgot, that ſhe cauſed excellent Panegyrics to be made on him, and propoſed a Prize of great Value for him, who ſhould acquit himſelf beſt (i). Theopompus obtained it. They ſay, that his Maſter Iſocrates was one of the Orators, who entred the Liſts [C]. Theodectes of Phaſelides, who was another of the Competitors, compoſed a Tragedy called Mauſolus, which had better Succeſs, than his Proſe. Nor muſt we forget, that, inſtead of Lamentations and Tears, in which moſt Writers bury

(a) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 471. Suidas in Ἀρτεμισία.

(b) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(c) Lib. 7. cap. 3.

(d) Diodor. Sicul. l. 16.

(e) Strabo, l. 14. p. 471.

(f) See Remark [D].

(g) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(h) A. Gell. l. 10. c. 18. V. Maxim. lib. 4. c. 6.

(i) A. Gell. ibid. Plutarch. in Vita Iſocr.

[A] Mauſolus, her Husband, died —— towards the End of the CVIth Olympiad.] Moſt Editions of Pliny make Mauſolus, King of Caria, die in the ſecond Year of the Cth Olympiad, and the Three hundred and ſecond of Rome (1). But Father Hardouin, according to the beſt Manuſcripts, has fixed his Death to the ſecond Year of the CVIth Olympiad, and the Four hundred and ſecond of Rome. Obiit Olympiadis centeſimæ ſextæ anno ſecundo; Urbis anno 402. Mr Chevreau obſerves, that Uſher judged this Paſſage of Pliny to be corrupted, and that Mauſolus died in the fourth Year of the CVIth Olympiad, Anno Mundi 3651 (2). This agrees very well with theſe Words of Father Hardouin; " Quid quod & Diodorus non " ad Olympiadis CVI annum alterum Mauſoli obitum, " ſed ad quartum refert, lib. 16. ver. 435 (3). —— But " Diodorus places the Death of Mauſolus, not in the " ſecond, but fourth, Year of the CVIth Olympiad: and with the Duration of the Reigns of Thoſe, who ſucceeded Mauſolus, till Alexander's Expedition. See the Remark [A] of the Article ADA. It is certain, that Mauſolus was dead, and Artemiſia, who did not ſurvive him above two Years, living, when Demoſthenes made an Oration for the Liberty of the Rhodians. Now he ſpoke this Oration in the ſecond Year of the CVIIth Olympiad, as may be collected from Dionyſius of Halicarnaſſus (4). Mauſolus, then, died in the laſt Year of the CVIth; and the anonymous Author, who deſcribed the Olympiads, was miſtaken, in placing Mauſolus's Funeral Oration, by Theopompus, in the firſt Year of the CIIId Olympiad. Valeſius has committed the ſame Miſtake. Hæc Artemiſia in funere Mariti agones celebravit Olympiade CIII (5). —— This Artemiſia ſolemnized her Husband's Funeral with Prize Conteſts in the CIIId Olympiad. They, who, after the Example of Calepin, Mr Lloyd, and Mr Hofman, &c. would refer us to the ſeventh Book of Herodotus, for an Account of the Mauſoleum, can never have rightly conſulted the Chronological Tables, which muſt be very falſe indeed, if the Death of Mauſolus be found in them, before That of Herodotus.

[B] She died of Grief and Melancholy.] We have ſeveral great Authorities for this Fact, no leſs than a Theopompus, a Cicero, and a Strabo. Theopompus's Account is very full. Ἦν φησι Θεόπομπος φθινάδι νόσῳ ληφθεῖσαν διὰ τὴν λύπην ἐπὶ τῷ ἀνδρὸς καὶ ἀδελφῷ Μαυσώλῳ, ἀποθανεῖν (6). Who is ſaid, by Theopompus, to have died of a waſting Diſtemper, contracted through Grief for the Loſs of Mauſolus her Husband, and Brother. That of Cicero. " Artemi- " ſia illa, ſays he (7), Mauſoli Cariæ Regis uxor, " quæ nobile illud Halicarnaſſi fecit ſepulchrum, quam- " diu vixit, vixit in luctu, eodemque etiam confecta " contabuit. Huic erat illa opinio quotidie recens, " quæ tum denique non appellabatur recens cum " vetuſtate exaruit. —— That Artemiſia, the Wife of " Mauſolus of Caria, who built The famous Monu- " ment at Halicarnaſſus, lived in Sorrow, and pined " away with it to Death. To her, the ſame Sentiment " was always new, which was then only not eſteemed " new, when quite worn out with Age." It is almoſt certain, Cicero was ignorant, that Artemiſia ſurvived her Husband but two Years; otherwiſe he would not have uſed ſuch Expreſſions as ſignify a very long Sorrow. But let us ſee what Strabo ſays: Φθίσει δ' ἀποθανούσης διὰ πένθος τῆς ἀνδρὸς (8). She died of a Conſumption, through Grief for her Husband.

[C] They ſay Iſocrates made a Panegyric on him.] I have quoted two good Vouchers (9); and can add a Third, of great Weight, which is Theopompus: He publickly boaſts of having carried the Prize from his Maſter Iſocrates (10). But I am not ignorant, that Suidas, without mentioning Iſocrates, the Athenian, ſpeaks of another Iſocrates, Diſciple and Succeſſor of the former, and born either at Heraclea, or Apollonia, on the Euxine Sea. Suidas ſays, it was He, who diſputed the Prize of Eloquence with Theodectes, Theopompus, and Erythreus (11). This latter was of Naucratis in Egypt, which will make Aulus Gellius guilty of a Miſtake, in the Place, where we read, that Theopompus, Theodectes, and Naucrites diſputed That Prize (12). Naucrites is not the proper Name of One of Thoſe Competitors; it is only his Name derived from the Town, where he was born, a little altered; for it ſhould have been Naucratites (13). Olivier names them Theopompus, Theodotes, and Naucrates (14). But, if

(1) Plinius, lib. 3ſc. c. 5. pag. 280, & cap. 6. pag. 288.

(2) Chevr. Hiſt. du Monde, lib. 7. cap. 3.

(3) Harduin. in Plin. Tom. 5. p. 280.

(4) Dion. Halicarn. Epiſt. de Æt. & Script. Demoſth.

(5) Valeſ. Not. in Harpocrat. Lexicon, pag. 93.

(6) Apud Harpocrat.

(7) Cicer. Tuſculan. 3. This Paſſage is wrong cited in Val. Max. Variorum. The laſt Period in Roman Characters is without the Particle non, which makes it intolerable Nonſenſe.

(8) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 452.

(9) Plutarch. in Vita Iſocrat. A. Gellius, lib. 10. cap. 18.

(10) See Euſebius Præp. Evang l. 10. cap. 3. pag. 464.

(11) Suidas in Ἰσοκράτης.

(12) A. Gellius, lib. 10. cap. 18.

(13) Moreri and Hofman have it Naucrites.

(14) Olivar. in Val Max. pag. 395. Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1655.

Digitized by Google

bury Artemisia during her Widowhood, there are those, who affirm, that she made some very heroic Conquests [D].

if Aulus Gellius is to be preferred before Suidas, as in my Judgment he ought to be, then we must own, that the latter is mistaken in the Place, where we read, ἅμα τῷ Ἐρυθραίῳ Ναυκρατίτῃ διηγωνίσατο (15); he contended with Erythræus, the Naucratian. Photius favours Aulus Gellius, by saying, that Naucrates of Erythrea was one of Theopompus's Competitors (16). On one side, or the other, they have mistaken the proper Name for the Name derived from the Town. Observe, that Cicero (17), Dionysius Halicarnassensis (18), and Quintilian (19), speak of One Naucrates, a Disciple of Isocrates. However, Amiot has translated the Passage of Plutarch in a quite different manner from Wolfius, and Xylander: according to These, Isocrates's Panegyric on Mausolus was lost; but, according to Amiot, it was preserved. Isocrates, says he, contended for the Prize, which Queen Artemisia instituted on account of the Tomb of her Husband Mausolus; and the Oration, which he made in Praise of the deceased, is still extant. Without doubt the different Manner of Accenting has produced These different Translations: some read τὸ δὲ ἐγκώμιον ὐ σώζεται, but this Panegyric is not preserved; others read τὸ δὲ ἐγκώμιον ὗ σώζεται, And this Panegyric is there preserved. See what sport Fortune makes with Manuscripts; one single Point, either taken away, or added, or altered, turns the Affirmative into the Negative.

(15) Suidas in Ἰσοκράτης.

(16) Photius in Biblioth. cod. 1, 6. p. 392.

(17) Cicero de Orat. lib. 3. & in Oratore.

(18) Dion Halicarn. in Judicio de Isæo, p. 228.

(19) Quintil. lib. 3. c. 6. init.

[D] There are some, who affirm, that she made some very heroic Conquests.] I say nothing of Demosthenes's Oration, which has been quoted before (20), though it is certain, from the manner of That Orator's expressing himself, that Artemisia was not represented in Athens as a disconsolate Widow, pining away, and neglecting the Affairs of her Kingdom, to confine her Thoughts wholly to the Memory of her Husband. The Athenians considered her as a Woman in a Condition to make herself feared; for one of the Arguments, which Demosthenes had to confute, was drawn from the Motions which Artemisia might make, if the Athenians should espouse the Interests of the Rhodians. But I leave this, to pass to something more close to the Point. Vitruvius tells us, that, after the Death of Mausolus, the Rhodians, disdaining, that Caria should be governed by a Woman, attempted to dethrone her (21). Their Design was defeated by a Stratagem of Artemisia's, which was presently followed by another, executed by herself, in Person, with so much Vigour and Success, that, in a very short time, she made herself Mistress of Rhodes. She caused two Statues in Brass to be erected there, as a Trophy of her Victory; one of them represented the City of Rhodes, the other Artemisia marking That City with a hot Iron. Vitruvius adds, that the Rhodians never durst remove This Trophy from it's Place, (for That was a thing forbidden by their Religion), but they encompassed it with a Building, which concealed it from public View. Does this look like the Conduct of a disconsolate Widow, entirely employed in sighing and groaning, and so lavish of Life, as to sacrifice it to sorrow in two Years Time? It is in vain to pretend, that Vitruvius speaks of the other Artemisia: I am sensible Mr Chevreau has thought so (22); but there are two incontestable Arguments to the contrary. For, I. the Artemisia of Vitruvius was the Wife of Mausolus; and, II. she possessed herself of a City, which was not built 'till the Time of the Peloponnesian War, when Xerxes and Artemisia were no longer in Being. Ἡ δὲ νῦν πόλις ἐκτίσθη κατὰ τὰ Πελοποννησιακὰ ὑπὸ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἀρχιτέκτονος, ὡς φασιν, ὑφ' ὃ καὶ ὁ Περσεύς (23). The City, that now it, was built in the Time of the Peloponnesian War, they say, by the very same Architect, who built the Piræum. It is not, therefore, without Reason, that Tzetzes makes both the Artemisias Commanders of Armies, and Women of Martial Spirit, ἄμφω δὲ στρατηγέτιδας, γενναίας ἀμφοτέρας. What can we think of Authors, who give us such inconsistent Accounts of one, and the same, Queen? One Person, greatly obliged by her, might be sufficient to make the World believe, that her Grief for her Husband was the Cause of her Death. Writers would repeat it an hundred Times, from one to another, not only as a Rarity, but also, as an Example worthy of Imitation. The most singular Embellishments are given, sooner or later, to such sort of Traditions.

(20) That de Libertate Rhodiorum, at page 78 of his Works; Edit. Genev. 1607. folio.

(21) Vitruv. de Architect. lib. 2. cap. 8.

(22) Chevreau, lib. 7. cap 3. p 34.

(23) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 45.

(24) Tzetz. chil. 12, ver. 665. hist. 455.

ASCLEPIADES, a Native of Phlia (a) in Peloponnesus, made a great Figure among the ancient Philosophers. He was a Disciple of Stilpo (b), and brought over Menedemus to the same School; Menedemus, I say, with whom he contracted such an intimate Friendship (c), that it might, perhaps, be compared to That of Pylades, and Orestes [A]. After having studied together under Stilpo, at Megara, they went to Elis, where they conferred with the Disciples of Phædon (d). They were both very poor, and forced to earn their Living with the Sweat of their Brows [B]; however, they found Time for their Studies, and became great Philosophers. Menedemus was younger than his Friend (e); but they had no Regard to the Difference of their Age, when they came to a Resolution of marrying. Their Design was to live and keep House together, even after quitting their State of Celibacy. To this end they judged it necessary to choose their Wives, with a Precaution most likely to secure their domestick Quiet, and believed this End would be answered in a Family, where there was a Mother and her Daughter, both marriageable. Menedemus married the Mother, and Asclepiades the Daughter (f). The latter being dead, Menedemus surrendered his Wife to his Friend, and married a rich Maid; but would have Asclepiades's Wife continue Mistress of the House. It was no hard Matter for him to find out a good Match; because he had the chief Authority in the Town, where he lived (g); I mean Eretria, the Place of his Birth. Asclepiades died there very old (h). He had lived very temperately, amidst the great Plenty of his Friend's Table (i), and bore the Misfortune

(a) Φλιάσιος, a Phliasian. Diog. Laërt. de Vitis Philosoph. l. 2. in Menedemo, circa init. p. 153. Edit. Amst. 1692.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Id. ibid. pag. 159. n. 137.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 153. n. 126.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 159. n. 137.

(f) Id. ibid.

(g) Id. ibid.

(h) Id. ibid. n. 138.

(i) Συζήσας τῷ Μενεδήμῳ σφόδρα εὐτελῶς ἀπὸ μεγάλων - - - - He lived with Menedemus very sparingly in the midst of great Opulence.

[A] His Friendship for Menedemus might be compared to That of Pylades and Orestes.] These are the Words of Diogenes Laërtius; Φιλῶ τε ἦν μάλιστα (Μενέδημον) ὡς δῆλον ἐκ τῆς πρὸς Ἀσκληπιάδην συμπνοίας, οὐδέν τι διαφερούσης Πυλάδου φιλοσοργίας (1). — Menedemus was remarkable for his Friendship, as appeared from his Conjunction with Asclepiades, no way inferior to That of Pylades with Orestes. After this, our Author says, that Archepolis, intending to make them a Present of a considerable Sum, his Generosity was of no service to them; for a laudable Disagreement happened between them, about the taking last, and, as they could not settle this Point, neither of them took any thing.

(1) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 137.

[B] Both he, and his Friend, were forced to earn their Living with the Sweat of their Brows.] They hired themselves, as Labourers, to a Mason. Asclepiades was not so much ashamed of it, as Menedemus; he did not value who saw him, naked (2), carrying up Mortar to the Top of the House; but Menedemus hid himself, when he saw any Body pass by (3). Athenæus, who says nothing of this, tells another, yet more remarkable, Story. "The Areopagites, "says he (4), caused Menedemus, and Asclepiades, "two young Students in Philosophy, and very poor, "to be summoned before them, and demanded of "them, How come you to be so fat? you have no "Estate, you follow no Employment, but spend all "your

(2) It is not to be understood, not literally of an absolute Nakedness, but of the usual stripping of Workmen in warm Weather.

(3) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2, n. 131.

(4) Athen. lib 4. c. 13, pag. 168.

Digitized by Google

fortune of losing his Sight very patiently [C]. His Death did not extinguish the Friendship Menedemus had for him [D]. When I have said, he was a Disciple of Stilpo, it is needless to observe, that he flourished some little time after the Death of Alexander. He had a Son, who behaved himself so very ill, that Menedemus turned him out of Doors, without so much as speaking to him, which proved the Means of reclaiming the young Debauchee (k).

(k) Plutarch. de Discrim. Adulat. & Amici, pag. 55.

" your Time in hearing the Philosophers?" Please to send for such a Miller, replied the two Scholars. He was sent for, accordingly; and, when he came, declared, that they came, every Night, into the Mill to grind, and had two Drachmas for their Labour. The Judges, admiring their Conduct, honoured them with a Present of Two hundred Drachmas. They would have been punished, if they had not declared the Means of their Subsistence.

(a) Spretis legatis & pollicitationibus Mithridatis regis. - - - - He regarded not the Messages and Offers of King Mithridates. Plin. lib. 7. cap. 37.

[C] He bore patiently the Misfortune of losing his Sight.] I make no question but these Words of Cicero relate to our Asclepiades: " Asclepiadem " ferunt non ignobilem, nec inexercitum Philoso- " phum, quum quidam quæreret, quid ei cœcitas at- " tulisset, respondisse ut puero uno esset comita- " tior (5)." The Loss of my Eyes, said our Philosopher, procures me this Advantage, that I never go alone, I have always a Boy extraordinary in my Retinue.

(5) Cicero, Tuscul. Quæst lib. 5, cap. 39.

[D] His Death did not extinguish Menedemus's Friendship for him.] Having been informed, that his Servants refused Admittance to one, who had been a Favourite of Asclepiades, he commanded them to let him in. Know, says he (6), that though Asclepiades is in his Grave, he opens my Door for him. This Favourite came afterwards to dine with Menedemus.

(6) Ὅτι Ἀσκληπιάδης καὶ τεθνηκὼς τὴν θύραν μοι ἀνοίγει. - - - Asclepiades etiam sepultus ei januas aperit. Diog. Laërt. ubi supra, n. 138.

ASCLEPIADES, a Native of Prusa in Bithynia, was one of the most famous Physicians of Antiquity. He was cotemporary with Mithridates, as appears by his refusing to go to his Court, in spite of all the great Promises which were made him to procure This Visit (a). He could not be prevailed on any farther, than to send a Prescription (b). He was the Head of a new Sect (c); and found out the Method of making Wine serviceable in the Cure of Distempers (d). This Practice, and the use of cold Water, which he allowed his Patients (e), brought him into great Esteem (f). Having cured a Person who was going to be buried [A], he acquired an incredible Reputation; but the Wager, which he laid against Fortune, made him be cried up with yet

(b) Id. lib. 25. cap. 2.

(c) Id. lib. 7. cap. 37.

(d) Id. ibid. & lib. 26. cap 3. pag. 444.

(e) Trahebat præterea mentes artificio mirabili, vinum promittendo ægris, dandoque tempestive tum aquam frigidam. - - - He introduced a very taking Method of giving Wine to his Patients, and also cold Water upon proper Occasions. Id. lib. 26. cap. 3. pag. 444.

(f) Id. ibid.

[A] He cured a Person who was going to be buried.] This is what Pliny says of it: Summa autem (fama est) Asclepiadi Prusiensi —— relato è funere homine & servato (1). —— Asclepiades, the Prusian, —— gained the highest Reputation, by ordering a Person to be carried back again, who was going to be buried, and curing him. He observes, elsewhere, that this sort of Resurrection was necessary to establish the Reformation, which was then made, in the Practice of Physic; and that it is not to be imagined, that so great an Innovation was introduced, without some very considerable Motives. " Magna auctori- " tate, nec minore fama, cum occurrisset ignoto fu- " neri relato homine ab rogo atque servato, ne quis " levibus momentis, tantam conversionem factam exi- " stimet (2)." Celsus mentions this admirable Cure only by the By. " In vicino sæpe quædam notæ " positæ non bonos sed imperitos medicos decipiunt; " quod Asclepiades sciens, funeri obvius, inclamavit, " eum vivere qui efferebatur (3). —— Some Symp- " toms are so alike, as to deceive the ignorant, tho' " not the judicious, Physician; it was from this Skill, " that Asclepiades, meeting with a Funeral, pronoun- " ced the Body to be alive." But Apuleius has enlarged on the Circumstances of it, without forgetting, that the Heirs were not very well pleased with Asclepiades, for maintaining, that the Man was not dead. " Asclepiades, says he (4), inter præcipuos " medicorum, si unum Hippocratem excipias, cæ- " teris princeps, primus etiam vino opitulari ægris " repperit: sed dando scilicet in tempore; cujus rei " observationem probe callebat: ut qui diligentissime " animadverteret venarum pulsus inconditos, vel præ- " claros. Is igitur, cum forte in civitatem sese reci- " peret, & rure suo suburbano rediret, aspexit in " pomeriis civitatis funus ingens locatum, plurimos ho- " mines ingenti multitudine qui exequias venerant cir- " cumstare, omnes tristissimos & obsoletissimos vestitu. " Propius accessit, ut etiam incognosceret, more " ingenii humani, quisnam esset; quoniam percon- " tanti nemo responderat. At vero ipse aliquid in " illo ex arte deprehenderat. Certe quidem jacenti " homini ac prope depositio Fatum abstulit. Jam " miseri illius membra omnia aromatis perspersa, " jam os ipsius unguine odoro delibutum, jam eum " poliinctum, jam cœnæ paratum, contemplatus eum " diligentissime quibusdam signis animadvertit, etiam " atque etiam pertractavit corpus hominis: & inve- " nit in illo vitam latentem. Confestim exclama- " vit, vivere hominem, procul ergo faces abigerent, " procul ignes amolirentur; rogum demolirentur, " cœnam feralem à tumulo ad mensam referrent. " Murmur interea exortum, partim medico creden- " dum dicere; partim etiam irridere medicinam. Po- " stremo propinquis etiam hominibus invitis, quod " ne jam ipsi hæreditatem habebant, an quod ad- " huc illi fidem non habebant, ægre tamen ac dif- " ficulter Asclepiades impetravit brevem mortuo " dilationem. Atque ita vespillonum manibus " extortum, velut ab Inferis, postliminio domum " retulit, confestimque spiritum recreavit: confe- " stimque animam in corporis latibulis delitescen- " tem quibusdam medicamentis provocavit. —— " Asclepiades, the Prince of Physicians, next to Hip- " pocrates, was the first, who used Wine as a Medi- " cine. But he took care to give it on proper Occasions, " which he very well understood, from his diligent " Attendance to the Indications of the Pulse. As he " happened one Day to return from his Country House " to the City, he saw in the out-skirts a very large " Funeral, with a great Multitude of People surround- " ing the Body, all very sorrowful, and in mourning " Habits. He drew near out of Curiosity, according " to Custom, to learn whose it was, those he had in- " quired of not having satisfied him. His Skill found " an opportunity of making a great Discovery. With- " out doubt he saved the Life of a Man, supposed to be " Dead, and whose funeral Rites were almost all per- " formed. The poor Wretch was already bestrewed " with Spices, his Face perfumed, his Body anointed, " and the Funeral Entertainment prepared; when Asclepiades, observing him attentively, and carefully " examining the Body, found by his Art some Signs of " Life in it. He immediately cried out, that the Body " was alive, that they might throw away their Torches, " extinguish the Fire, demolish the Funeral Pile, and " remove their Feast from the Tomb to the Table. The " Company murmured; some were for believing in the " Doctor, others ridiculed the Profession. At last, " though the Heirs opposed it, either because they were " in Possession of the Inheritance, or had no Faith " in the Physician, with great difficulty Asclepiades " obtained a short Reprieve for the dead Man. And " so having rescued him from the Undertaker's Hand, " he had him brought Home again, as it were from " the infernal Regions, and immediately, by the Vir- " tue of his Medicines, revived his Spirits, and re- " covered the scattered Remains of Life." The Story of the Woman, that was twice carried to be buried, will not be amiss in this Place. She was brought to Life, without the Assistance of Medicine; but her Husband was not overjoyed at it. The Story is this. " A Woman in a Village of Poitou had a severe " Illness, at the end of which she fell into so deep

(1) Plin. lib. 7. cap. 37. pag. 58, 59.

(2) Id. lib. 26, cap. 3, pag. 445.

(3) Celsus de Medicinâ, lib. 2, cap. 6, pag. 57.

(4) Apuleius in Floridis, pag. 362.

Digitized by Google

yet greater admiration [B]. He engaged to renounce the Title of Phyſician, if ever he ſhould be ſick, and won the Wager; for he died by a Fall, at a very great Age. It was at Rome he became ſo famous. He came thither to teach Rhetoric (g); but, not finding That Employ profitable enough, he applied himſelf to the Practice of Phyſic; and, not being acquainted with the Remedies then in uſe, he took occaſion to condemn them, and invent new ones. He contrived eaſy Methods, and ſuch as any one might uſe without the Help of a Phyſician. This made them very acceptable; and all the World ran to him, as to one ſent from Heaven [C]. One Thing, which favoured his gaining ſo great a Reputation, was the fooliſh Credulity of That Age as to the Magic Virtue of certain Plants; for it being eaſy to demonſtrate, that moſt of thoſe Virtues were chimerical, it was no hard Matter for Aſclepiades to deſtroy all the Credit of the ancient Preſcriptions [D]. He held, that the Soul was not diſtinct from Matter (b). He compoſed ſeveral Books, which are all loſt. Pliny, Celſus, and Galen have quoted ſome of them. He had alſo many famous Diſciples (i). Pliny's Niceneſs ſeems to be carried too far; he could not bear, that a Man, who had only ſtudied Phyſic for Profit, ſhould be allowed to give Rules of ſuch conſequence

(g) Id. ibid.

(b) See Tertullian, in his Book de Animâ, cap. 15.

(i) See their Names in the 46th Letter of Reineſius to Rupertus, pag. 395.

" deep a Lethargy, that her Husband, and thoſe a" bout her, believed her dead. They wrapped her
" up only in Linnen, according to the Cuſtom of " poor People in That Country, and had her carried " out to be buried. As they were going to Church,
" one of her Bearers went ſo cloſe to a Buſh, that
" the Thorns pricked her, and rouſed her from her
" Lethargy. Fourteen Years after, ſhe was dead a" gain, at leaſt ſuppoſed ſo. As they were carrying
" her to the Grave, and coming near the old
" Place, the Husband cried out, two or three times:
" Pray keep a little farther off the Buſh (5)."

(5) Menagiana, p. 117, 118. of the firſt Dutch Edition.

[B] The Wager, which he laid againſt Fortune, made him be cried up with yet greater Admiration.] I do not believe, that the moſt pretending Quacks, of our Days, dare lay any ſuch Wager, eſpecially if they were obliged to depoſit a Sum of Money. However, I am perſuaded, that the Reader will not be diſpleaſed to find Pliny's Text here: " Summa autem
" Aſclepiadi Pruſienſi (fama eſt) ——— maxime
" ſponſione facta cum fortuna, ne medicus credere-
" tur, ſi unquam invalidus ullo modo fuiſſet ipſe:
" & victor, ſuprema in ſenecta lapſu ſcalarum exa-
" nimatus eſt (6). ——— Aſclepiades, the Pruſian,
" gained the higheſt Reputation, —— chiefly by
" ſtaking his Credit, as a Phyſician, againſt his ever
" being ſick himſelf; he carried his Point, and died,
" in extream old Age, by a Fall down Stairs." It was a ſurprizing Temerity in Our Phyſician; but the good Fortune, in not being belied by the Event, appears, to me, yet more extraordinary. I obſerve, that, in ſome things, he was a meer Quack. He adminiſtered Wine in ſome Diſtempers, and boaſted ſo much of his Remedy, that he ſaid, the Power of the Gods was hardly equal to That of Wine. Aſclepiades utilitatem vini æquari vix Deorum potentia pronunciavit (7).

(6) Plinius, lib. 7. c. 37. pag. 58, 59.

(7) Id. lib. 23. cap. 1. pag. 251.

[C] All the World ran to him, as to one ſent from Heaven.] We may conceive, from the Words of Pliny, an Idea of the Aſcendant ſome Phyſicians have, even in our Days. " Torrenti ac meditata quotidie
" oratione blandiens, omnia (remedia) abdicavit: to-
" tamque medicinam ad cauſam revocando, conje-
" cturæ fecit, quinque res maxime communium auxi-
" liorum profeſſus abſtinentiam cibi, alias vini, fri-
" cationem corporis, ambulationem, geſtationes: quæ
" cum unuſquiſque ſemetipſum ſibi, præſtare poſſe
" intelligeret, faventibus cunctis ut eſſent vera quæ
" facillima erant, univerſum prope humanum genus
" circumegit in ſe, non alio modo, quam ſi cœlo
" emiſſus adveniſſet (8). ——— Soothing the People
" every Day with a fluent and premeditated Oration,
" he baniſhed all Medicines; and, reducing the whole
" Art of Phyſic to the Teſt of Reaſon, he proved it
" to be but conjectural. Five Things, of moſt common
" Benefit, he held to, Abſtinence from Meat, at other
" Times from Wine, the uſe of the Fleſh-Bruſh, the " Exerciſe of Walking, and of Riding: Which, as " every one believed he could preſcribe for himſelf ſuch
" Remedies as theſe, and as it is natural to wiſh
" thoſe Things true that are moſt eaſy, made all Peo-
" ple flock to him, as to one ſent from Heaven."

(8) Id. lib. 26. cap. 3. pag. 444.

[D] Moſt of the Magic Virtues of Plants being chimerical, it was eaſy for Aſclepiades to deſtroy the Credit of ancient Preſcriptions.] It is the Nature of Man to run into Extremes. Shew him but ſome Truths, and he ſhall believe all the Falſities you think proper to couch under them. Undeceive him but of ſome Falſities, by evident Demonſtration, and he ſhall queſtion the Truth of every Thing. Thus, by exploding the Impertinence of the Remedies called Magical, Aſclepiades was enabled to overthrow even thoſe Things, which might be better grounded. Pliny very naturally deſcribes this Inclination for Extremes, ſo remarkable in Human Nature. " Super omnia,
" ſays he (9), adjuvere eum (Aſclepiadem) Magicæ
" vanitates, in tantum evectæ, ut abrogare herbis
" fidem cunctis poſſent. Æthiopide herbâ amnes ac
" ſtagna ſiccari conjectu, tactu clauſa omnia aperiri.
" Achæmenide conjectâ in aciem hoſtium, trepidare
" agmina, ac terga vertere. Latacen dari ſolitam à
" Perſarum rege legatis, ut quocunque veniſſent om-
" nium rerum copiâ abundarent, ac multa ſimilia.
" Ubinam iſtæ fuere, cùm Cimbri Teutonique terri-
" bili Marte ululârent, aut cùm Lucullus tot reges
" Magorum paucis legionibus ſterneret? Curve Ro-
" mani duces primam ſemper in bellis commerciorum
" habuere curam? Cur herclè Cæſaris miles ad Perſa-
" liam famem ſenſit, ſi abundantia omnis contingere
" unius herbæ felicitate poterat? Non ſatius fuit Æ-
" milianum Scipionem Carthaginis portas herbâ pate-
" facere, quam machinis claustra per tot annos qua-
" tere? Siccentur hodie Æthiopide Pontinæ paludes,
" tantumque agri ſuburbanæ reddatur Italiæ. Nam
" quæ apud eundem Democritum invenitur compo-
" ſitio medicamenti, quo pulchri bonique & fortu-
" nati gignantur liberi, cui unquam Perſarum regi
" tales dedit? Mirum eſſet profecto, hucuſque pro-
" vectam credulitatem antiquorum, ſaluberrimis or-
" tam initiis, ſi in ullâ re modum humana ingenia
" noviſſent, atque non hanc ipſam medicinam ab Aſ-
" clepiade repertam, ſuo loco probaturi eſſemus eve-
" ctam ultra Magos etiam. Sed hæc eſt omni in re
" animorum conditio, ut à neceſſariis orſa primò,
" cuncta pervenerint ad nimium. - - - - - - - The " greateſt Aſſiſtance, Aſclepiades received, was from
" the Magical Superſtitions, which were carried to
" ſuch an Height, as made it eaſy to abolish all Sort of " Faith in Plants. That the Æthiopian Plant would
" dry up Lakes and Rivers, if thrown into them, and
" force open Doors, or the ſtrongeſt Securities, by the " Touch of it. That the Achæmenian Plant, by being
" caſt at the Enemy, would make their Troops tremble,
" and turn their Backs. That the Plant, called Latace,
" uſed to be given by the Perſian King to his Em-
" baſſadors, that they might always be ſure of Plenty,
" wherever they went: and many more of this Na-
" ture. But where were theſe Virtues, when the Cim-
" bri, and Teutoni, thundered at their Gates, and
" when Lucullus, with a few Forces, overthrew ſo many
" Kings of the Magi? Or why were the Romans, in
" their Wars, ſo careful, in the firſt Place, to ſecure
" their Supplies? How came Cæſar's Soldiers to fall
" ſhort of Proviſions at Pharſalia, if one Plant only " could make plenty? Would Scipio Æmilianus have
" lain, ſo many Years, battering the Walls of Carthage,
" with his Engines, if he could have forced open the " Gates with a Plant? Let the Æthiopian Herb
" dry up the Pontine Lake at this Day, and reſtore to " Italy ſo great a Tract of loſt Land. Did ever That
" Compoſition of Medicine, reported by the ſame Author
" Democritus, to have been ſo ſerviceable towards beget-
" ting handſome, dutiful, and fortunate Children, pro-
" duce any ſuch Effect in any one of the Perſian Kings?
" It would be wonderful indeed, that the Credulity of
" the Ancients, which at firſt had ſome reaſonable
" Foundation,

(9) Id. ibid. cap. 4. pag. 446.

Digitized by Google

consequence to Mankind [E]. Suidas, who has confounded our Physician with one Asclepiades, a Grammarian of Myrlea, has been reproved for it by Mr Moreri agreeably to the Observations of Vossius. Therefore I shall mention it no farther, but content myself with pointing out the Causes of it. I shall only remark the Mistakes of some other Authors [F]. Those of Mr Moreri are not very considerable " Foundation, should be stretched to such a Pitch, if " human Nature knew how to observe a Medium in " any thing; or, if this very Reformation in Physic, " introduced by Asclepiades, had not been carried, as " we shall shew in it's proper place, to a greater " height of Extravagance, than even That of the " Magi. But such is the Imperfection of our Minds, " that, though we set out reasonably, yet we carry every " thing to an Extreme." Father Hardouin repeats this in the Place, where Pliny describes the great Power, which certain Physicians had gained over the People, at the same time that they mutually condemned one another's Practice. " Hinc illæ, says he (10), " circa ægros miseræ sententiarum concertationes, " nullo idem censente ne videatur accessio alterius. " Hinc illa infelicis Monumenti inscriptio, turba se " medicorum periisse. Mutatur ars quotidiè toties in- " terpolis, & ingeniorum Græciæ flatu impellimur. " Palamque est, ut quisque inter istos loquendo polleat, " imperatorem illico vitæ nostræ necisque fieri. —— " Hence arise those wretched Wranglings of Physicians " about their Patients, no one caring to come into the " Sentiments of another, for fear it should look like " giving him the Preference. Hence That unlucky " Epitaph, The Distemper he died of was the Num- " ber of his Doctors. The Art is always changing, by " such daily Innovations, and the Wits of Greece turn " us which Way they will. And we see, that every one " of them, who has a Talent for talking, presently as- " sumes over us the Power of Life and Death."

(10) Id. lib. 29. cap. 1.

[E] Pliny — could not bear, that such a Man should be allowed to give Rules of such Consequence to Man- " kind.] His Words are remarkable. " Id solum " possumus indignari, unum hominem è levissimâ gen- " te, sine opibus ullis orsum, vectigalis sui causa, " repente leges salutis humano generi dedisse, quas " tamen postea abrogavere multi (11). —— This one " Thing is enough to raise our Indignation, that one of so " very mean an Extraction, and of no Fortunes, should, " for his own Profit only, so suddenly take upon him " to give Rules of Health to Mankind, which, by " the Way, were afterwards exploded by several of his " Successors."

(11) Id. ib. cap. 3. pag. 445.

[F] The Mistakes of some other Authors, concerning Asclepiades, &c.] Meursius has been reprimanded for taking Asclepiades of Myrlea, and Asclepiades of Nicæa, for two different Persons. " Malè Meur- " sius hunc Myrlæanum & Nicenum tanquam duos " distinctos recenset (12). —— Meursius has errone- " ously distinguished this Asclepiades the Myrlæan, and " Nicæan, into two different Persons." Jonsius affirms it to be a Mistake, and that the same Asclepiades, who was born at Myrlea, and whose Family was of Nicæa, is indifferently firnamed Myrleanus, and Nicenus. Pinedo fell into the same Error with Meursius (13). In the List of Authors, quoted by Athenæus, Asclepiades of Myrlea is understood to be meant in these Words of the tenth Book; Ἀσκληπιάδης ἐν τοῖς τραγῳδουμένοις (14). Dalechamp has translated them, Asclepiades libro de iis quorum nomine editæ sunt tragœdiæ. ——Asclepiades, in his Book of those, in whose Names have been published Tragedies. Casaubon censures him for This, and makes it appear, that the Title of That Work was not of the Masculine Gender τραγῳδούμενοι, but of the Neuter Gender τραγῳδούμενα, and that Plutarch also has quoted it so (15). He does not say where the Quotation is to be found. But, to supply This Defect, I shall observe, that it is in the Life of Isocrates, as we shall see presently. He might have added, that the same Work of Asclepiades is quoted in the Neuter Gender, by Stephanus Byzantinus, and by Photius, as we shall make appear by and by. This Critic understands That Work of Asclepiades to have treated of the great Actions, which served the Tragic Poets for their Subject-matter. I am altogether of the same Opinion, and take Dalechamp to be mistaken. The Latin Translator of Plutarch has also misunderstood the Title of That Book; for these Words of Plutarch, Ἀσκληπιάδης ὁ τὰ τραγῳδούμενα συγγράψας, he has thus rendred, Asclepiades tragœdiæ scriptor (16). —— Asclepiades, a Writer of Tragedy. This shews clearly enough, without consulting exactly what follows (17) in the Translation, that he took Asclepiades for a Tragic Poet. Andrew Schot makes the same Slip in his Translation of Photius. Photius speaks thus. Ἀσκληπιάδης ὃς τὰ τραγῳδούμενα συνεγράψατο (18). i. e. according to Andrew Schotus, Asclepiades, qui Tragœdias scripsit. —— Asclepiades, who wrote Tragedies. But it is all a Mistake; the Asclepiades, there mentioned, is not represented to us as such an Author. Observe, by the way, that he was the Disciple of Isocrates, from whence you may judge of the time, in which he lived. Pinedo understood the Sense of the Word τραγῳδούμενα better than the Translator of Plutarch, and has rendred Ἀσκληπιάδης ὁ τὰ τραγῳδούμενα γράψας ἐν ἓξ βιβλίοις (19); Asclepiades qui de rebus in Tragœdia decantatis sex libros scripsit. —— Asclepiades, who wrote six Books of those Things, which have been made the Subject of Tragedies. These Greek Words are taken from Stephanus Byzantinus, where he informs us, that the Asclepiades, who composed those six Books, was of Tragilos, a City of Thracia. Casaubon should have censured Dalechamp, for imagining, that Athenæus means Asclepiades of Myrlea, in the Passage above cited. Gesner has fallen into the same Error (20). Stephanus Byzantinus would have justified such a Censure. You will find in Pinedo two grand Mistakes: I. He says, that Asclepiades of Myrlea, a Disciple of Apollonius, was a Grammarian, who taught at Rome, under Pompey the Great, and had lived, in his Youth, at Alexandria, under Ptolomy IV. II. He proposes it as a Question, whether he is the same Asclepiades, who taught Grammar in Turditania, a Province of Spain (21). On the first Head, I must observe to him, that a Man, who had lived under Ptolomy IV, and had taught at Rome, in Pompey's Time, would have been a Prodigy; for between the last Year of That Ptolomy, and the Death of Mithridates, who was vanquished by Pompey, there are no less than an Hundred and forty Years. On the second, I shall only observe, that Strabo plainly says, that Asclepiades, of Myrlea, taught Grammar in Turditania (22). The Sieur Pinedo had observed it himself, in another Place (23). How comes he then to make a Query of it?

(12) Jonsius de Script. Philosoph. pag. 167.

(13) Pinedo, in Stephan. Byzant. pag. 470, n. 15, & pag. 757.

(14) Athen. lib. 10. 456.

(15) Casaub. in Athen. pag. 769.

(16) Plut. in Vita Isocrat. pag. 837. C.

(17) Which confirms, that he took Tragœdiæ Scriptor, not for one who treats of Tragedy, but for a Writer of Tragedies.

(18) Photii Biblioth. Cod. 260, pag. 1456.

(19) Steph. Byzant. verbo τράγιλος.

(20) Gesner in Biblioth. fol. 97.

(21) Pinedo, in Steph. Byzant. pag. 757.

(22) Strabo, lib. 3, pag. 108.

Let us examine, in two Words, an Observation of Father Hardouin. He says, that Asclepiades, of Prusa, was a Friend of Cicero, and proves it from a Passage of the first Book De Oratore. He quotes only a little part of it (24); but this is the whole Passage. " Neque verò Asclepiades is, quo nos medico amico- " que usi sumus, tum quum eloquentiâ vincebat cæ- " teros medicos, in eo ipso quod ornatè dicebat, Medi- " cinæ facultate utebatur, non eloquentiæ (25). Nor " did Asclepiades, who was both my Friend and Physi- " cian, though he excelled all other Physicians in the " Art of Speaking, make no use of his Eloquence, but " only of his Physic." We ought to observe, that it is not Cicero, who speaks, but the Orator Crassus: Asclepiades therefore was the Friend and Physician of Crassus, and not of Cicero. Besides, Cicero makes Crassus speak thus in the Year of Rome 662 (26), and mentions Asclepiades as then dead. This furnishes us with an Objection against Pliny, for saying, that Asclepiades, gaining but little by the Profession of Eloquence, turned Physician in the Time of Pompey (27). It is certain, that, in 662, Pompey was but a young Lad. See the following Remark, Number IV.

(23) Pinedo, in Steph. Byzant. pag. 479.

(24) Eloquens Medicus dicitur Ciceroni, lib. 1. de Orat. pag. 283. qui se eo medico & amico usum esse gloriatur. Hardouinus in Indice Auctor. Plinii, pag. 99.

(25) Cicero, lib. 1, de Orat. fol. 61. C.

(26) See Fabricius, in Vita Ciceronis, ad Ann. urbis 662.

(27) Plin. lib. 26, c. 3.

Jonsius supposes, that there were two Asclepiades's of Myrlea; that the first was a Disciple of Apollonius, the Grammarian, and Author of a Book entituled φιλοσόφων βιβλίων διορθωτικὰ, Philosophorum librorum emendationes (28). --- Emendations of the Books of the Philosophers: And that the second wrote some Books concerning Grammar and Grammarians (29). I cannot conceive upon what he can found this Distinction. The best Thing he can say for it is, that Asclepiades, of Myrlea, refuted, in his Grammar, a Sentiment

(28) Jonsius, de Script. Hist. Philos. pag. 167.

(29) Id. ib. pag. 205.

Digitized by Google

siderable [G]. There was another Asclepiades, a famous Physician, under the Emperor Adrian [H].

Sentiment of Dionysius of Thrace. "In isto opere "Dionysii Thracis de partibus Grammaticæ senten-
(30) Id. ib. "tiam refellit, teste Sexto Empirico (30). —— In "That Work, he confutes an Opinion of Dionysius, "the Thracian, concerning the Parts of Grammar, "as Sextus Empiricus witnesses." This Dionysius, according to Suidas, taught at Rome in Pompey's Time, and had been a Disciple of Aristarchus. It must therefore follow, you will say, that the Asclepiades, who refuted him, was not He, who was a Disciple of Apollonius. I grant the Consequence; but I suspect some small Mistake in Suidas. It seems to me, that a Disciple of Aristarchus (31) would have been too old to teach in the Time of Pompey (32). I am therefore of Opinion, that Dionysius of Thrace, the Disciple of Aristarchus, did not live till Pompey's Time. In which case it would be possible, that Asclepiades, a Disciple of Apollonius, might confute him; for this Apollonius, having been Keeper of the Alexandrian Library, after Eratosthenes (33), who died in the Beginning of the CXLVIth Olympiad (34), might very well be cotemporary with Aristarchus, and have Disciples at that time cotemporary with those of Aristarchus. Consequently there is no necessity for finding out another Asclepiades, the Confuter of Dionysius of Thrace, younger than Asclepiades, the Disciple of Apollonius. I cannot tell why Vossius acquiesces so readily with Suidas's joining the Character of a Disciple of Aristarchus with That of Professor at Rome in Pompey's Time (35). He is justly censured for saying, that Asclepiades, of Alexandria, wrote a Book about the People of Attica, and quoting the Scholiast of Aristophanes to prove it. Asclepiades Alexandrinus * τὰς καθ' ἡμῶν ἀρχονθίας consignavit, ut autor Scholiastes Aristophanis in nubes (36). Jonsius shews him, that the Scholiast says no more, than that Asclepiades called the Demarchs τὰς καθ' τὸν δῆμον ἀρχονθίας (37).

(31) Aristarchus flourished in the CLVIth Olympiad.

(32) He ended the War with Mithridates, in the 179*th Olympiad.*

(33) Jonsius de Script. Hist. Philosoph. p. 149.

(34) Vossius, de Hist. Græcis, pag. 108.

(35) Id. ib. pag. 148.

* Populi Attici.

(36) Id. ib. pag. 705.

(37) Jonsius, de Scriptor. Histor. Philos. p. 207.

[G] Those of Mr Moreri are not very considerable.] I. The Ancients do not ascribe the History of Alexander the Great, quoted by Arian, to Asclepiades of Myrlea, as he affirms. II. His saying, Strabo adds, that Asclepiades of Myrlea had taught Grammar in Spain, is making Strabo father the other Particulars, which Moreri had mentioned before. But this is groundless. III. He questions, without any manner of Reason, whether the Relation to Spain concerns another Asclepiades; for Strabo affirms it expressly of Asclepiades of Myrlea. IV. He ought not to have asserted so positively, that Mithridates was at War with the Romans, when he endeavoured to get Asclepiades the Physician to his Court; for we have seen, above (38), that Cicero speaks of This Physician as of one, who was not alive in the Year of Rome 662. at which time Mithridates, strictly speaking, had not made War with the People of Rome. This shews, that Mr Moreri might well be mistaken, in affirming, that Asclepiades was in esteem at Rome in the Time of Pompey the Great; —— that is to say, when That great Man was at the Head of the Republic. Does he not place the Birth of This Pompey on the last Day of September, of the Year of Rome 648? How will he reconcile this with the Passage in Cicero, where Asclepiades is mentioned? I know very well, he may shelter himself under the Authority of Pliny, and that Jonsius may be brought in for a Second. But how comes Pliny to be of more Credit, than Cicero? And can he be sure, that Jonsius is not mistaken? "Asclepiades Medicus quidam" behold a quidam very ill employed: This Asclepiades is too famous to deserve so slighting an Epithet (39), "Prusiacus "in Bithynia Philophysicus cognomine sub Pompeio "M. vixit teste Strabone lib. 12. (40). —— Asclepia-"des, a certain Physician of Prusia, in Bithynia, sir-"named Philophysicus (from his Love of Philosophy), "lived under Pompey the Great, as Strabo testifies "in Book 12." But I find nothing more in the twelfth Book of Strabo, than that Asclepiades, of Prusa, was a Physician (41). Father Hardouin has quoted Strabo (42), to prove this Point as well as Jonsius. V. The Asclepiades, mentioned by Plutarch in the Life of Isocrates, was not a Tragic Poet (43), as Mr Moreri affirms.

(38) Cited (25), (26).

(39) Compare this with what has been said above, at the beginning of the Remark [F], of the Article ARNAULD (ANTHONY) The Doctor.

(40) Jonsius, de Scriptor. Histor. Philos. pag. 207.

(41) Pag. 390.

(42) Hard. in Indice, Autor. lib. 12, pag. 566.

(43) See the preceeding Remark.

[H] There was another ASCLEPIADES, a famous Physician, under the Emperor Adrian.] He was of the same City as the former (44), and flourished under Trajan, Adrian, and Antoninus; he was made free by one Calpurnius, and obtained the Rights of a Roman Citizen, and several other Privileges. We learn all this from an Inscription: See the Letters of Reinesius (45). He wrote several Books about the Compositions of Medicines, both Internal, and External (46).

(44) Of Prusa in Bythinia.

(45) Epist. Reinesii ad Hoffmannum & Rupertum, pag. 394.

(46) Ibid. pag. 335.

ASPASIA of Miletus, Mistress to Pericles. We shall give her History in the Remark [M] of the Article PERICLES.

ASPASIA of Phocea, Mistress to Cyrus the younger. We shall give her History in the Remark [C] of the Article of That Prince.

ASTYANAX, the only Son of Hector and Andromache [A], gave the Greeks Uneasiness in the midst of their Victories, tho' he was then but an Infant. Being hindred, by contrary Winds, from returning home after the Destruction of Troy, Calchas declared, they ought to throw Astyanax headlong from the Top of the Walls, because, if he lived to Man's Estate, he would not fail to revenge the Death of his Father, and even exceed him in Valour. Whereupon Ulysses went to search for him; and having found him, notwithstanding all the care his Mother took to hide him, he executed the Sentence Calchas had pronounced (a). Others say, that Menelaus was the Executioner (b). Others attribute his Death to Pyrrhus alone, without intimating, that the Greeks, or Calchas, had judged it necessary (c). However it be, the Poets, and Writers of Romances, found means to restore him to Life again, or rather to make him escape out of the Hands of the Greeks [B].

(a) Servius in Æn. lib. 3. ver. 489.

(b) Id. lib. 2. ver. 457.

(c) Pausan. lib. 10.

[A] He was the only Son of Hector and Andromache.] Homer affirms This expressly; for, without question, they, who translate Ἐκτορίδην ἀγαπητὸν (1), the only Son of Hector, are in the right; so the Scholiast understands it. The Grief of Andromache, in the Twenty second Book of the Iliad, plainly shews, that she had only This Son. Hector gave him the Name of Scamandrius, and the Trojans called him Astyanax, because Hector was the sole Defence of the City (2).

(1) Homer. Il. lib. 6, ver. 401.

(2) Ibid. ver 473, and lib. 22, ver. 507.

[B] The Poets, and Writers of Romances, found means to restore him to life again, or rather to make him escape out of the Hands of the Greeks.] They have said, that the same Son of Hector, whose Name was Astyanax, or Scamander, was called, also, Francion, and that from him the Kings of France are derived (3). The Manetho of Annius of Viterbo makes Francus, the Son of Hector, King of the Celtæ, that is, of the Gauls. The Forger of That Piece, in his Notes, cites Vincent of Beauvais, who says, that This Francus, retiring among the Gauls, after the Destruction of Troy, became so great a Favourite of the King, that He married his Daughter, and succeeded him in his Crown. I do not find, in Manetho (4), what Du Pleix quotes from him, viz. that Francus succeeded Rhemus, King of the Gauls, whose Daughter he

(3) See Ronsard, at the beginning of his Franciade.

(4) Antwerp Edit. in 8vo. 1552.

Digitized by Google

he had married (5). Neither do I find it in the Commentator upon Manetho. Du Pleix adds, that Trithemius, alledging as his Authority, Hunnibaud, who lived under Clovis I. and who names, for his Authors, Dorac, and Wasthald, two Scythian Historians, says, that Hector had two Sons, one of which, called Astyanax, or Scamander, perished at the taking of Troy, the other, named Laodamas (6), or Francion, escaped out of the Enemies Hands, and fled, with a great Number of Trojans, into Pæonia, which was afterwards called Pannonia; and that, being kindly received by the King of the Pæonians, he settled in that Country, on the Frontiers of Scythia, and there built the City of Sicambria, where he, and his Posterity, reigned, 'till the Days of King Antenor, who was killed by the Goths, Four hundred and twenty Years before CHRIST. The Violences of the Goths obliged the Trojans, or Sicambrians, to retire into Germany, where they divided themselves into two Branches: one of which, afterwards, founded the French Monarchy among the Gauls; the other remained in Germany, and there founded Franconia, or Eastern France. What Chimæras are these! Mr Moreri, not considering, that the Authors of these Legends are charged with a sufficient Number of Falsities, fathers upon them others, which they never advanced. He ascribes to the false Manetho, and to other Authors of that Stamp, the making Francion, or Francis (7), the Son of Hector, the first King of the Gauls. But they are so far from saying This, that they affirm, that the King of the Gauls gave him his Daughter. Besides, how thoughtless is it to describe Andromache only as the Mother of this Francion, and never once to mention her undoubted Son Astyanax! These are two Faults in Moreri; to which we shall add a third. He says, that Astyanax was thrown down, headlong, from the Walls, by order of Ulysses, and quotes for it Virgil's Æneid. Now this Poet has said nothing like it in all his Works.

(5) Du Pleix, Memoires des Gaules, lib. 2, cap. 24.

(6) Dictys Cretensis, in his 6th Book, says, that Pyrrhus took Laodamas, the Son of Hector and Andromache, Prisoner.

(7) This is an ill Translation of the proper Name Francus.

ATHENAGORAS, an Athenian Philosopher, flourished after the middle of the IId Century: He was a learned Man, and very zealous for Christianity. All Which appeared from the Apology, which he addressed to the Emperors Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, and Lucius Aurelius Commodus. This happened, according to Baronius (a), in the Year 179; or, according to Mr Dodwell (b), in the Year 168. It is no easy matter to give a Satisfactory Proof, that the last Opinion is more probable, than the first [A]. I find all agree, that Athenagoras was deputed by the Christians to the Imperial

(a) Baron. Annal. Eccles. Tom. 2. pag. 226, ad ann. 179. n. 39, 40.

(b) Dodwel. Dissert. Cyprian. 11. n. 37, 38. pag. 261, & seq.

[A] He presented —— his Apology in the Year 179, —— or in 168. —— It is not easy to prove, that the last Opinion is more probable, than the first.] Many Reasons are alledged on both sides. These are Mr Dodwell's (1). The Apology of Athenagoras is addressed to two Emperors, to whom the Author gives the Titles of Armeniacis, Sarmaticis, & quod maximum est, Philosophis. This is applicable to Marcus Aurelius, and to his Brother Lucius Aurelius, but not to his Son Lucius Aurelius. He was never called Philosopher; And the second Apology of Justin shews That Title to have been common to Lucius Aurelius, and to his Brother, Marcus Aurelius. Hunc Titulum cum Marco Lucium verum habuisse communem constat è secundâ Apologiâ Justini (2). Father Pagi, Dissertat. Hypat. pag. 216. makes use of the same Argument, and quotes Eusebius, lib. 4. cap. 12. Now this Lucius Aurelius died towards the end of the Year 169. So that the Apology must have been presented before That time. I wave the particular Reasons, which induced Mr Dodwell to make choice of the Year 168 for the Epocha of This Work. It is objected against him, that the Complement of Sarmaticus cannot belong to Lucius Aurelius, who died before the Sarmatæ were attacked; but he answers, that this might be a Slip of the Transcriber, instead of That of Parthicus, which was given to the two Brothers, together with That of Armeniacus, after the War of Armenia (3). He adds, that the profound Peace, on which Athenagoras congratulates the Emperors (4), cannot agree with the time of Marcus Aurelius, and his Son reigning together. He makes no answer to the chief Objection; and yet something may be said to it, as will appear presently. We must not forget his Observation, that Athenagoras intimates, that his Apology was made in the same Olympiad, that Peregrinus burnt himself (5). This Action of Peregrinus, according to Messieurs Dodwell, and de Tillemont (6), belongs to the Year 165; but Scaliger places it in the Year 166 (7). He grounds his Notions on this, that Peregrinus exhibited this Spectacle during the Celebration of the Olympic Games. He is of opinion, that Athenagoras's Work was presented to the Emperors in the same Olympiad: His Reason is, because Peregrinus threw himself into the Fire three Years before the Death of Lucius Verus, one of Those Emperors. This Argument is preferable to Mr Dodwell's, grounded on the Words of Athenagoras; for they note only the Place, and not the Time, of this Man's burning himself. Περὶ τὴν Ολυμπίαν (8); Near the City Olympia. See Mr de Tillemont (9). The Proof, drawn from the profound Peace of the Empire, is of such a Nature, that it serves both Parties: Cardinal Baronius makes use of it, to shew, that the Apology could not have been presented under the Reign of Marcus Aurelius's Brother, nor in any other time, but in 179 (10). Mr de Tillemont does not rightly understand This Cardinal's Argument, since he represents him as inferring, that This Apology must have been written in the Year [176, or] 177, because it intimates, that the Empire was then in profound Peace (11).

(1) Dodwel Dissert. Cyprian 11, n. 37.

(2) Id. ib. pag. 262.

(3) Capitol. in Vitâ Marci Aurelii, cap. [illegible], pag. 325.

(4) Ἡ σύμπασα οἰκουμένη τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ συνέσει βαθείας εἰρήνης ἀπολαύουσιν —— The noble World, by the Wisdom of your Government, enjoys a profound Peace. Athen. pag. 14.

(5) This was the 235th.

(6) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 753.

(7) Scal. Animad. in Euseb. n. 2182, pag. 220.

(8) Athenag. pag. 244.

(9) Tillemont. Hist. des Emp. Tom. 2. pag. 1067.

There are the principal Reasons of Those, who pretend, that the Apology of Athenagoras was not presented before the Year 177, which was That of the Promotion of Commodus, the Son of Marcus Aurelius, to the Dignity of Augustus (12). They maintain, that He, who is associated with Marcus Aurelius, in the Inscription of the Apology, was the Son, and not the Brother of That Emperor; and prove it from the Words, which compare these two Princes to God the Father, and God the Son. "Ipsa quidem oratio longè validius nobis præbet argumentum. Vos quidem, subjicit Vir disertus, in summa Imperii Majestate adeo conjunctis animis orbem regitis, ut inde Cœlestis etiam Regni contemplationem animo quis complecti queat. Ut Vobis enim Patri & filio in potestate sunt omnia, regno in Vos divinitus collocato, (Regis enim Anima, inquit Spiritus Propheticus, in manu Dei est) sic uni Deo & Filio ejus, hoc est Verbo, subjecta sunt omnia. Nullus hic est cavillationibus locus: Imperatores non tantum alloquitur, sed etiam comparationem instituit duos inter terrenos Reges, quibus omnia humanitus loquendo parebant, ac summum Cœli & Terræ Dominum, qui simul cum suo Unigenito Imperii Orbis universi habenis moderatur (13). —— The Apology itself furnishes us with a much stronger Argument. Your Imperial Majesties, says the learned Author, govern the World with such perfect Harmony, as in some sort resembles That of the Cœlestial Government. For, as the supream Power on Earth is, by the Grant of Heaven, (the Life of Kings, as the Prophet says, being in the Hand of God,) committed to your Majesties, Father, and Son; so the supream Power of the Universe is lodged in one God, the Father, and his Son, the Word. Here is no room for Controversy: he not only addresses the Emperors, but also makes a Comparison betwixt two earthly Kings, to whom all things, humanly speaking, are subject, and the supream Governor of Heaven and Earth, who, together with his only begotten Son, commands the Universe." See how strongly Mr de Larroque has stated this Argument. Mr de Tillemont has seconded it with another Passage. "Athenagoras † tells Those two Princes, "he wishes, that the Son may succeed the Father: "ἵνα παῖς παρὰ πατρὸς διαδέχηται τὴν βασίλειαν. [He speaks, therefore, to a Father, and "a Son,

(10) Baron. ad Ann. 179. n. 40. pag. 226.

(11) Tillemont. Hist. des Emp. pag. 1066.

(12) Mr de Larroque, following Eusebius, has placed this Promotion under the Year 179. Daniel Larroquanus Matthæi filius, Dissert. de Legione fulminatrice, p. 648.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 649.

† Athenag. Leg. pag. 40, a.

Digitized by Google

perial Court, and that he actually presented their Apology [B]; but there is Room to

" a Son, of whom the first only governed the Empire, though the other might have the Title of " Emperor; that is to say, to M. Aurelius, and his " Son Commodus, and not to two Brothers, who " reigned in Conjunction. It is yet clearer in another place †, where he says, All is submitted to " your Majesties, to the Father and the Son: ὡς " ὑμῖν πατρὶ καὶ υἱῷ πάντα κεχείρωται which " Father Pagi ‖ had no other way of getting over, " but by saying, that Athenagoras will have Lucius " to be the Son of M. Aurelius, though he was " only his Brother, purely to make a more exact Allusion to the two Persons of the Trinity, the Father, and the Son (14)." Father Pagi has made use of an Evasion, in this Place, which is not likely to do much Mischief. He had better have said, that Athenagoras was not ignorant, that Lucius Aurelius had married the Daughter of Marcus Aurelius, and that, therefore, as he addressed himself to the Father-in-law, and Son-in-law, he might justly consider them as Father, and Son. It is thus, in effect, that Father Pagi has answered this Objection (15). He observes, also, that Mr Toinard is of the same Sentiment. The other Passage, which Mr de Tillemont quotes, is not conclusive: we may understand it in this Sense; We put up our Prayers for your Empire, that the Son may recieve it from the Father, as Justice requires. Περὶ μὲν τῆς ἀρχῆς τῆς ὑμετέρας εὐχόμεθα, ἵνα παῖς μὲν παρὰ πατρὸς κατὰ τὸ δικαιότατον διαδέχηται τὴν βασιλείαν (16). This Thought is very reasonable, whether we suppose the Apology addressed to Marcus Aurelius, and his Brother, or to Marcus Aurelius, and his Son. It is a Prayer, which, according to Baronius, does not respect Commodus, who was, already, associated in the Empire, but his Descendants. It is a Wish, that Marcus Aurelius's Family might always possess the Imperial Dignity, according to the Order of lawful Succession, in a direct Line. Note, that Father Pagi quotes this Prayer as a Proof, that the Son of Marcus Aurelius was not yet Emperor. I shall, in another Place (17), confute the Inference, which is drawn from what Athenagoras has said of one Alexander.

We may conclude two things from all this: First, That the Foundation of the Controversy is, that one side makes the Brother of Marcus Aurelius, the other his Son, to be his Partner in the Empire. Secondly, That their Arguments, on both sides, are far from conclusive, since the Dispute continues yet undecided. Scaliger (18), Father Labbé (19), Father Pagi, Mr Dodwell, Mr Chevreau (20), &c. are for the Brother: Suffridus Petri (21), Baronius, Petavius (22), Mr du Pin (23), Mr de Larroque, Mr de Tillemont, and several other learned Men, are for the Son.

Let us observe, by the way, a Mistake of Grotius. Floruit Athenagoras, says he (24), circa ann. Christi 190, ut ex libri inscriptione apparet. This is not just; for, Marcus Aurelius being dead in the Year 180, the Title of a Book, dedicated to him, can never prove, that the Author flourished towards the Year 190.

[B] It is agreed, that Athenagoras was deputed ---- to the Court —— and that he actually presented their Apology; but there is Room to doubt of these Facts.] These are the Words of Baronius. " Orientis quo- " que Ecclesias eâdem esse clade vexatas, LEGATIO " pro illis ab Athenagorâ Athenienſi —— tunc ad " Imperatores SUSCEPTA, & Apologia pro eisdem tunc " scripta ac dictis principibus OBLATA, manifestam " certamque fidem faciunt (25). —— That the Eastern " Churches were under the same Persecution, the DE- " PUTATION, then UNDERTAKEN, on their Behalf, " by Athenagoras, the Athenian, to the Emperors, " and the Apology composed for them, and PRESENTED " to those Princes, sufficiently demonstrate." Father Labbé expresses himself as fully. " LEGATIONEM " SUSCEPIT pro Christianis inter annum 165 —— " & annum 170 —— non desunt tamen qui anno " duntaxat 177 OBLATUM librum illum Imperato- " ribus asserant (26). —— HE UNDERTOOK A DE- " PUTATION for the Christians, betwixt the Year " 165, and 170. But there are some, who affirm, the " Apology was not PRESENTED till the Year 177." Mr Moreri, translating this Passage of Father Labbé, uses these Words. He presented an excellent Apology for the Faithful to the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. —— He had been Deputy at Rome for the Christians, from the Year 165, to 170. He did not rightly understand his Original; for the Words of Father Labbé do not signify, that the Deputation of Athenagoras lasted from the Year 165, to 170, but that it happened in some part of That Interval. They, who know the frequent Journies of the Roman Emperors in those Days, would never venture to expose themselves, by affirming, that This, or That, Person was deputed to them at Rome, without being very well assured of it. It must be allowed therefore, that Mr Moreri has quitted his Guide a little too unadvisedly, in determining both the Duration and Place of this Deputation; when Father Labbé has not said one Word of either. Mr Dodwell, who conjectures, that Athenagoras discharged this Deputation (27), upon the Return of the Emperor Lucius Verus to Rome, to triumph there (28), is not in the least concerned in this little Criticism, in Regard to his determining the Place; because he has not done it, without a very learned Deduction of proper Circumstances. But I can hardly agree with him, that This Christian Philosopher did really ever discharge this Deputation at all.

My first Reason is taken from the Silence of all the Ancients. Is it possible, that such a Deputation, which the Circumstance of the Time, the Merit of the Deputy, and the Strength of the Apology presented to the Emperors, must have made so memorable, should never be once mentioned by any one Author? In the second place, It does not seem probable, that, when the Christian Name was so hated and persecuted, Athenagoras should present himself at the Imperial Court, as deputed by That Body, or that he should obtain Audience there, and even deliver to the Emperors a long Writing, in which, notwithstanding his respectful Moderation, he represents the Pagan Religion in so ridiculous and scandalous a Light, as would have been most likely to have inflamed the Rage of the Persecutors. I shall add, that the Title of This Writing, the strongest Proof that can be urged against me, is, in my Opinion, no Proof. Ἀθηναγόρᾳ Ἀθηναίῳ φιλοσόφῳ Χριστιανῷ πρεσβεία περὶ Χριστιανῶν: The Deputation of Athenagoras the Athenian, the Christian Philosopher, in behalf of the Christians. This is the Title of the Piece. But, you may, if you please, observe, I. That some Manuscripts, after πρεσβεία, add ἢ ἀπολογία, or Apology (29); and that others, instead of πρεσβεία, read ἀπολογία. II. That the Word πρεσβεία not only signifies an Embassy, or Deputation, but also an Address, or Petition; Τὴν πρεσβείαν non modo Legationem, sed & Deprecationem ac Supplicationem apud Græcos significare notum est (30). III. That the Title of Embassy is not given to an Embassador's Speech, but to the whole Account of his Negociations. So that it would be very improper to take the word πρεσβεία here for Embassy. Lastly, I observe, that Mr de Tillemont expresses himself differently from other Writers. It appears plainly, says he (31), that the Faith was then persecuted in the East, seeing Athenagoras was obliged to compose an Apology there, under the Title of A Legation for the Christians, which he addrest to both the Augustus's. He does not mention any Journey, or Deputation, or the presenting of any Apology to the Emperors; he speaks only of a Piece composed in the Author's Study, and addrest to Marcus Aurelius, &c. Every body knows the difference between a Writing actually given into the Hands of a Monarch, and a Writing only addrest to This Monarch. I confess, Mr de Tillemont's Authority seems here to be very good: for he lays it down as a Rule, not to extend the Testimonies of Authors beyond what they clearly import; And he keeps himself scrupulously within the limits of his Proofs. From whence I infer, that he found no manner of ground for This Deputation of Athenagoras, nor for the actual presenting of his Apologetical Writing.

To reduce what I think of this matter into a narrow Compass, I am not ashamed to own, that I take Athenagoras to have been like those modern Writers, who, without stirring out of their Studies, have spread Pieces of their own composing all the World over, under † Ibid. pag. 17, d.

‖ Pagi, 177, 8.

(14) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 1066.

(15) Pagi, in Baron. ad Ann. 177.

(16) Athenag. sub fin. pag. 318.

(17) In the Article PARIS.

(18) Scalig. Animadv. in Euseb. num. 1282, pag. 820.

(19) Labbé de Script. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 123.

(20) Chevr. Hist. de Monde, Tom. 2. pag. 533, of the first Holland Edition, fixes the presenting the Apology in the Year 165. Mr de Larroque, in his Dissert. de Legione fulmin. p. 648, represents him as placing it in the Year 175. Perhaps he made use of some other Edition.

(21) Suffrid. Petri Comment. in Athenag. pag. 100. He pitches upon the Year 179.

(22) Petav. apud Pagi Dissert. Hypat. pag. 116. He chooses the Year 177.

(23) Du Pin, Biblioth. p. 176, apud Larroquanum, Dissert. de Legione fulmin. He takes the Year 178.

(24) Grotius de Verit. Relig. Christian. p. 128, apud Larroquan. ibid.

(25) Baronius ad Ann. 179, n. 39. pag. 226.

(26) Labbé, Dissert. de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. pag. 123, 124.

(27) Legatum egit pro Christianis. Dodwell. Dissert. Cyprian. 11. n. 37. pag. 261.

(28) Id. ib.

(29) See the Commentary of Suffridus Petri in Athenagor. Apolog. p. 91.

(30) Adam Rechenberg. Not. in Athenagor. pag. 2.

(31) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2, pag. 756, 757, Edit. of Brussels.

Digitized by Google

to doubt of these Facts; and we may with a great deal of probability believe the same Thing of This Writing, which was known to be true of an infinite Number of Petitions of the Protestants in France, which have been printed without ever being presented to the Prince [C]. I cannot imagine on what ground Athenagoras is said to have been a Priest (c). It is something surprizing, that he should be unknown to Eusebius, St Jerome, and to almost all the other Fathers; for we find him no where quoted, except in a Work of St Epiphanius [D]. He was not entirely clear from Heterodoxy [E]; but, this excepted, the two Pieces, which we have of his, are very valuable (d). The

(c) Father Labbé, Dissert. de Script. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 61, affirms it, and so does Moreri.

(d) The other is a Treatise de Resurrectione.

under the Title of A Petition of the Protestants presented to the King. They, who shall read these Compositions an hundred Years hence, will not question but that they were actually presented; but we know better. We know, there was handed about, in 1680, a printed Piece, which had all the Air of a Petition, actually presented to the King of France by Those of the Protestant Religion (32). An infinite Number of People in foreign Countries, and in the Provinces remote from Paris, believed it. Yet I am credibly informed, that it never was presented, and it is certain, that the Deputies of the Churches, who drew it up, disowned the Publication of it. There appeared in Print another such Piece, during the Conferences at Ryswick, in the Year 1697, which was handed about without being owned; but which may one Day be placed among authentic Acts, since it does not appear from the Petition itself, that it was not actually delivered into the Hands of Lewis XIV. Without doubt the Primitive Christians acted in the same manner. They composed Writings, addressed to the Emperors, and published them, in hopes that some of the Copies might come to the Hands of Those Princes, and incline them to put a stop to their Persecutions, by shewing the Accusations to be false. To conclude, I am perswaded, Athenagoras did, in the IId Century, what Calvin did in the XVIth. Calvin, lurking in a little Chamber at Basil, dedicated his Christian Institution to Francis I, which neither He, nor any Body else, ever presented to him.

(32) See the following Remark.

It ought not to be concealed, that, the very Day I finished this Remark, I communicated it to Mr Cockburn (33), who offered immediately to consult Mr Dodwell upon it. He has done me the favour to communicate to me the Answer he received, which is full of excellent Learning, in support of Arguments, brought in favour of the Sentiment I have now been opposing. These Arguments have some Weight. The Letter of That learned Man deserves to be printed, and I would willingly have inserted it here, if I had had his Permission; but, not having That, I ought also to deprive myself of the Liberty of the Dispute.

(33) He is a Scotchman, a Doctor of Divinity, the Author of some English Books against Bourignonisme.

[C] An infinite Number of Petitions of the Protestants in France, have been printed without ever being presented to the Prince] The Public is so well apprized of this, that it were a very needless Task to go about to prove it. But, as for what concerns the Petition, which was handed about in the Year 1680, I have reason to believe, that my Readers will imagine I have gone too far, in denying, that it was ever presented. Therefore it is but just, that I should give my Reasons. I begin, by distinguishing this Petition from several others, which were drawn up at different Times; and I say it is the same, which was confuted by a Priest, called Soulier. The Answer, which he gave to it, was printed without his Name. This Answer is mentioned in Page 6 of The last Efforts of oppressed Innocence, and in Page 305 of the History of the Edicts of Pacification (34), and in Volume III of the History of the Edict of Nantes. (35). In this last Book is also found a Summary of This Answer, as of a Writing, whose Author was unknown. This Historian of the Edict of Nantes affirms (36), that the Petition was presented, and adds, It happened, I know not how, that, some time after, it was printed, and publickly dispersed abroad. I believe he is mistaken, and that it was printed and dispersed, before it could be presented. Now after it had appeared in public, to be sure the King never received it. See, in the Life of Mr du Bose, how the Council was offended, because the Deputies of The Protestants had published a Petition, which they had presented, but which the King had not yet answered (37). This Prince was so displeased at the printing of This Petition, that he condemned it without seeing it, and ordered two of the Deputies to be clapt into the Bastile (38). This passed about the Year 1671. How is it probable then, that, nine Years after, that is to say, at a Time, when things were much worse, the Deputies of the Churches durst publish a Petition, after having presented it to the King, and before the receiving his Answer? The Author of the History of the Edict of Nantes might elude this, by maintaining, that the Missionaries got the Petition of the Protestants printed. This, though possible, is against all Probability. But here is a Fact which is more home to the purpose. In a very little time, after This Petition was seen in public, Mr Jurieu composed a Book, wherein he speaks of it only as of a Petition, THAT WAS DESIGNED to be presented (39). Does he not deserve more Credit in such a Point, than the Historian of the Edict of Nantes, who did not write 'till many Years after This Event? Upon observing the Difference between these Writers, I cauled three of the chief Deputies of the Churches to be consulted, and particularly Him, who passes for the Author of the Petition. The Answers, which I received from them, agree perfectly in this, that they do not remember whether it was presented or not. They excused their Forgetfulness, by reason of the great Number of Affairs, which then passed through their Hands, and the long, and very troublesome, Time, that has elapsed since. I have no reason, then, to fear, that any reasonable Person will accuse me of Rashness, in taking up with this Opinion; for, besides the Proofs I have alledged, I remember, that the freshest, and, as it were, original Tradition, was, which Mr Jurieu has also followed, that the Petition was published without ever being presented by the Deputies.

(38) Ibid.

(39) See the Derniers Efforts de l'Innocence opprimée, p. 6.

[D] We find him no where quoted, except in a Work of St Epiphanius.] We must even correct the Text, to make out this Quotation of him: Τί ἔν ὁ Διάβολος λέξει αι; πνεῦμα περὶ τὴν ὕλην ἔχον, καθάπερ ἐλέχθη, ὦ Ἀθηναγόρα, γενόμενον ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ (40). What then shall we understand the Devil to be? A Spirit conversant about Matter, as it has been said, O Athenagoras! created by God. This is what the Editions of Epiphanius say; and, according to this, it ought rather to be understood of another Athenagoras, who had been introduced, as one of the Speakers, in the Dialogue, from which Epiphanius gives some Extracts. Now it is a Dialogue, composed by Methodius against Origen, and in which Methodius is one of the Interlocutors. But the Critics have very justly conjectured, that, instead of Ἀθηναγόρα, we ought to read τῷ Ἀθηναγόρᾳ, by Athenagoras (41).

(40) Epiphan. adverf. Hæref. n. 64. p. 544. Tom. 1.

(41) Paulus Leopardus, Emendat. lib. 19. c. 9. Petavius in Epiphan. adverf. Hæref. 64. n. 21. p. 260, 261.

[E] He was not entirely clear from Heterodoxy.] He admits two sorts of bad Angels; the one comprehends those, whom God created, and who acquitted themselves ill in the Commission, which was given them, to govern Matter, and to preside over the Production of Forms; the other comprehends those, which the former begot by carnal Conversation with Women: It comprehends, I say, the Souls of Giants, who were begot by This Copulation (42). Suffridus Petri observes, that Athenagoras supports his Hypothesis by two Passages of Scripture, which he has misunderstood. "Testimonia sunt potissimum duo, "sed male intellecta, quibus niti videtur Athenago- "ras (43). — The principal Authorities, which Athena- "goras seems to build upon, are two, but both mis- "understood." He misunderstands, and misapplies, much in the same manner, That Passage of the Gospel, which condemns those, who repudiate one Wife to marry another; for he makes use of it to condemn second Marriages, which he calls, without mincing the Matter, a specious Adultery. Ἡ οὕτω τις ἐτέχθη, μένειν, ἢ ἐφ' ἑνὶ γάμῳ. Ὁ γὰρ δεύτερος, εὐπρεπὴς ἐστὶ μοιχεία. ὃς γὰρ ἂν ἀπολύσῃ, φησὶ, τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, καὶ γαμήσῃ ἄλλην, μοιχᾶται·

(42) Athenag. p. 227, & seq.

(43) Suffrid. Petri in Athenag. Apolog. p. 318.

ὅτε

(34) Of the Holland, Edition 1682. The Sieur Soulier is Author of this History, and has put his Name to it. He has owned himself Author of the Answer to the Petition. Ib. pag. 305.

(35) Lib 16. pag. 404, and the following.

(36) Ibid.

(37) Life of Mr du Bose, pag. 31.

Digitized by Google

The Stile of them is good, and Attic enough, but a little too much clogged with Parentheſes, and Tranſpoſitions. They have been printed a great many times, as may be ſeen in Mr du Pin, who has, nevertheleſs, forgot ſome Editions [F]. I ſhall mention a Romance ὅτε ἀπολύειν ἐπιτρέπων ἢ ἔπαυσέ τις τὴν παρθενίαν, ὅτε ἐπιγαμεῖν. ὁ γὰρ ἀποστερῶν ἑαυτὸν τῆς δευτέρας γυναικὸς, καὶ εἰ τέθνηκε, μοιχός ἐστι παρακεκαλυμμένῳ, παραβαίνων μὲν τὴν χεῖρα τοῦ θεοῦ, ὅτι ἐν ἀρχῇ ὁ θεὸς ἕνα ἄνδρα ἔπλασε καὶ μίαν γυναῖκα (44). Let every one either continue in the ſame State he was born in, or content himſelf with once marrying. For a ſecond Marriage is but a ſpecious Adultery. For the Scripture ſays, Whoſoever ſhall put away his Wife, and marry another, committeth Adultery. Neither permitting the putting away of Her, whoſe Virginity has been enjoyed, nor the marrying of another. And whoſoever quits his firſt Marriage, although his Wife be dead, is in ſome meaſure an Adulterer, by exceeding God's own Appointment, who, in the Beginning, made one Man, and one Woman. You ſee he impoſes the ſame Law on all Men, which God preſcribed to the chief Prieſt alone; if they will marry, it muſt be only with a Maid (45). He is not contented, that they have their Virginity themſelves, but will alſo have them chooſe none but Virgins for their Wives. But this is erring conſiſtently; Becauſe, if ſecond Marriages were criminal, it would be criminal even for a Bachelor to marry a Widow, and every time he diſcharges the matrimonial Duty would be committing a freſh Crime. For this would be cauſing his Wife to ſin, and, according to the Rules of Morality, whoſoever cauſes others to ſin ſins himſelf. The ſame may be ſaid of a Maid, who ſhould marry a Widower. I don't know, ſays Mr de Tillemont (46), Whether the Expreſſion * which Athenagoras uſes concerning the Prophets, at a time, when the Extaſies of Montanus began to trouble the Church, may not give ground to ſuſpect, that he was engaged in That Party. However, neither Scultetus, nor Mr du Pin, † have obſerved That Place to be liable to any bad Conſtruction. I do not find, that there is the leaſt Reaſon to ſuſpect him of Montaniſm on this Account. How many of the Orthodox are there, who believe, that the ancient Prophets were in Extaſies, and that their Tongues, or their Pens, were the Inſtruments of the Holy Ghoſt? What then could they find fault with in theſe words of Athenagoras? Νομίζω καὶ ὑμᾶς —— οὐκ ἀνοήτως γεγονέναι οὔτε τῶν Μωσέως, οὔτε τῶν Ἡσαΐου καὶ Ἱερεμίου καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν προφητῶν, οἳ κατ' ἔκστασιν τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς λογισμῶν κινήσαντος αὐτοὺς τοῦ θείου πνεύματος, ὡς ὑπηρέτου προσχρησαμένου τῷ πνεύματι, ὥσπερ καὶ αὐλητοῦ αὐλὸν, ἐμπνεῦσαι (47). I ſuppoſe that even you —— are not ignorant of the Tranſactions either of Moſes, or of Iſaias, and Jeremias, and the reſt of the Prophets, who, by an Extaſy of Thought, the Divine Spirit moving them, ſpoke as they were inſpired; the Spirit operating on them, in like manner as the Muſician on his Flute. It is true, the Compariſon of the Holy Ghoſt with one, who plays on a Flute, is mean, but the Foundation of it is right.

(44) Athenag. p. 298.

(45) Levit. xxi. 13, 14.

(46) Tillemont, ubi ſupra, pag. 759.

* Athenag. Leg. p. 9, d.

† Scult. pag. 52. Du Pin, Tom. 1. p. 215.

(47) Athenag. pag. 72, 74.

A REFLEXION on the Jewiſh High-Prieſt not being allowed to marry unleſs with a Virgin.

What I have ſaid of the Law, which was preſcribed to the High-Prieſt of the Jews, ſuggeſts a Conjecture, which I ſhall venture to publiſh in this Place. The Primitive Chriſtians, who declared ſo ſtrongly againſt ſecond Marriages, were perhaps engaged in That Opinion from this Conſideration, that there ought to be greater Perfection under the Evangelical, than under the Moſaic Law; ſo that Lay Chriſtians are obliged to obſerve all the ſtricteſt Regularity, which was in uſe among the Eccleſiaſtics of the Synagogue. In effect, it ſeems, that, in ſome reſpects, all Chriſtians are appointed to the Prieſthood (48). If, then, it was thought fit to forbid the High Prieſt of the Jews to marry a Widow, on purpoſe that This Prohibition might remind him of his ſtrict Obligation to Purity, may it not be thought reaſonable to ſubject all Chriſtians to the ſame Condition? Thus, perhaps, ſome might reaſon: Perhaps alſo, the original Deſign of This moral Reſtriction might be totally to remove the Abuſes of That kind of Polygamy, which Divorces had made frequent. The Men of falſe Wit would deſerve ſomething more than to be laughed at, ſhould they attack this Injunction upon the High Prieſt. The Law, preſcribed to him, would theſe Jeſters ſay, ought to command ſomething mortifying to his Pleaſures; whereas, on the contrary, it obliges him to the moſt delicious Reliſh of them, and not to take up with a ſecond-hand Diſh. The Reſt of the People may make ſhift with the leavings of others: He only is taught to be nicer, and of a daintier Palate. Poor inſipid Raillery! for it is in reality a Slavery, not to have the liberty of marrying where we pleaſe; and how many ſenſual Perſons, in a full Liberty of Choice, would preſer a Widow before any other Miſtreſs? But, beſides, is it not meer Blindneſs, not to ſee the Wiſdom of the Lawgiver in this Prohibition? Did not This Law warn the great Pontiff to abſtain, more than others, from the leaſt Irregularities? For, if a Woman ceaſed to be worthy of him, the moment ſhe left aſpiring to That ſupreme Degree of Perfection and Honour, which ſhe might have attained by preferring a chaſt Widowhood before a ſecond Marriage; if the ſole want of This height of Virtue, if, I ſay, this ſole want, which is not ſo much a real Fault, as a bare Privation of diſtinguiſhed Merit, was ſufficient to make her unworthy to marry with the High-Prieſt, was not this a Proof, that God required of him a more exact Conduct? Read theſe Words of a great Man: "Quin & illa ad declaran-
"dam inſignem vitæ mundiciem pertinent, quod ſi
"quis de ſtirpe Aaron teneatur profluvio ſanguinis,
"vetatur ad ſacerdotis menſam accedere ſacriſque
"veſci panibus: item quòd quicunque vitio macu-
"lâve corporis eſſent deformati, ſubmoventur à ſa-
"cris miniſteriis: rurſus quòd ipſe pontifex jubetur
"virginem ſuæ gentis ducere, à vidua, repudiata, ac
"proſtituta, abſtinere. Non ſtatim quod plebi licet,
"licet & ſacerdoti: multitudini multa conceduntur,
"à ſacerdote ſumma requiritur puritas in omni vitæ
"portione (49). —— Now theſe Things are intended
"to point out a more particular Purity of Life, That,
"if any of the Houſe of Aaron be taken with an
"Hemorrhage, he ſhould not be permitted to come to
"the Prieſt's Table, or to taſte of the conſecrated
"Bread: Alſo, that ſuch as were defective, or deform-
"ed, in their Bodies, ſhould be incapable of the Prieſt-
"hood: Again, that the High-Prieſt himſelf is com-
"manded to abſtain from a Widow, a Wife divorced,
"and a Proſtitute, and to marry, if at all, to a
"Virgin of his own Nation. Not every thing, that "is lawful for the People, is alſo lawful for the "Prieſt: Many things are allowed to the Multitude,
"but from the Prieſt is required the ſtricteſt Purity
"in every Station of Life." The ſame Spirit reigned in the Chriſtian Diſcipline, even at the time, when married Perſons were not excluded from the Prieſthood (50); for it excluded Thoſe, who had married either two Wives ſucceſſively, or a Widow, or who had been diſhonoured by the the Adultery of their Wives; and, if This diſhonour happened to them in the Time of their Prieſthood, they were obliged either to free themſelves from it by a Divorce, or abdicate their Character. "Verba ſynodi Neocæſar. cap.
"8. hæc ſunt: ſi cujus uxorem adulterium commi-
"ſiſſe, cum eſſet laicus, evidenter fuerit probatum,
"hic ad miniſterium eccleſiaſticum admitti non po-
"teſt. Quod ſi in clericatu eo jam conſtituto adul-
"teravit, dato repudio dimittere eam debet: ſi vero
"retinere ejus conſortium velit, non poteſt ſuſcepto
"miniſterio perfrui. cap. ſi cujus, 34. diſtin. (51). ——
"In Chap. 8. of the Council of Neocæſarea, are
"theſe words: If it proved, by good Evidence, that
"the Wife of any Layman has committed Adultery,
"he cannot be admitted to the Eccleſiaſtical Function.
"But, if the Wife of a Prieſt commit Adultery, he "muſt divorce her: or, if he will retain her, he
"muſt renounce his Miniſtry." See Mr Morin's Diſſertation, or the Abſtract given of it in the News from the Republic of Letters (52).

(48) See 1 Pet. ii 5, 9.

[F] Mr du Pin has forgot ſome Editions of Athenagoras.] His Liſt is very large (53), but not every where rightly pointed, in the Edition of Amſterdam (54). This confounds our Underſtanding. He has not taken Notice of the Edition of Oxford, nor That of Leipſic: The firſt appeared in the Yéar 1682, in

(49) Eraſmus in Eccleſiaſte, l. 1. pag. 45, 47.

(50) See Duaren de Sacris Eccl. Miniſt. ac Benefic. lib. 4. cap. 8. pag. 386.

(51) Id. ib. pag. 387.

(52) For the Month of July, 1684, Art. 6. pag. 517.

(53) See the firſt Tome of his Nouvelle Bibliotheque printed in 1686.

(54) I ſpeak thus, as not having That of Paris.

Digitized by Google

a Romance, which appeared under the Name of Athenagoras [G]. If I could have consulted the Dissertation, published by Father le Nourry (e), it would have furnished me, without doubt, with some good Materials for this Article; but his Work is not yet come to our Hands (f), tho' it was printed in the Year 1697. I have seen some account of it in the Journal des Sçavans (g), and in the Acta Eruditorum of Leipsic (h).

(e) It is the third of the second Tome of his Apparatus ad Bibliothecam maximam Veterum Patrum.

(f) I write this in April 1699.

(g) Of May 13, 1697, pag. 331.

(h) For Dec. 1698, pag. 554.

in 12mo, by the Care of Dr Fell, Bishop of Oxford; and the latter, in the Year 1684, in 8vo, by the Care of Adam Rechenberg. They are both of them in Greek and Latin, with Notes. Neither has he mentioned the Commentary of Kertholt on the Works of Athenagoras. This Piece was printed at Kiel, in the Year 1675, in Folio, and was inserted, with Additions, in the Edition of Justin Martyr, of Athenagoras, &c. at Leipsic, in 1686. Note, that Guy Gaussart, Prior of St Foi, at Coulommiers, published a French Translation of the Apology of Athenagoras, and subjoined the Annotations of Suffridus Petri. This was printed at Paris, in 8vo, in the Year 1574. Du Verdier Vau-Privas, who is my Author for this (55), mentions a French Translation of two Pieces of Athenagoras, done by Arnauld du Ferron (56), but does not say when, or where, it was printed (57).

(55) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Françoise, p. 533.

(56) He who wrote a Continuation of Paulus Emilius in Latin.

(57) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 87, 88.

[G] I shall mention a Romance, which appeared under the Name of Athenagoras.] According to Dr Cave, we have, hitherto, only seen the French Translation of it, printed at Paris, by Daniel Guillemot, in the Year 1612, with this Title: Of the true, and perfect, Love, written, in Greek, by Athenagoras, an Athenian Philosopher, containing the chaste Loves of Theogonus and Charida, of Pherecides and Melangenia. Martin Fumée, Lord of Genille, was Author of This Translation, and sent it, in the Year 1569, to Mr de Lamané, Secretary to the Cardinal of Armagnac. It was found among the Papers of Bernard of Sanjorry, who published it in the Year 1612 (58). Consult Huetius (59), who speaks largely of This Book, and who supposes, that Philander is it's true Author. He informs us, that This Fumée boasted, that he had procured the Greek Original, by the means of Lamané, Protonotary of the Cardinal of Armagnac.

(58) Taken from Dr Cave's Histor. Literar. de Scriptor. Eccles. pag. 49.

Note, that the Edition, mentioned by Dr Cave, and which he had seen in the Library of Vossius, is not the first. I have one, printed at Paris, by Michael Sonnius, in 1599, 12mo. The Title differs but very little from That, which we have seen above (60). The Preface is of Bernard of Sanjorry, and dated from Castres, the first of October, 1596. It informs us, that Sanjorry being almost Seventy, had found, among his Papers, a Copy of This Work, which he had got transcribed from That, which had been sent to Mr de Lamané, and, that he had desired Monsieur de Fonbouzart, who was going to Court, about some Affairs of his own, to do him the Favour to carry this Work with him, and to take the Trouble of communicating it to some Printer, as he passed through Paris.

(59) Huet. de l'Origine des Romans, pag. 42, & seq.

(60) Instead of Theogonus, my Edition has Theogenes, and instead of Pherecides, it has Pherecydes.

ATHENÆUM [A], was a public Edifice in Rome, built by the Emperor Adrian [B], to serve for an Auditory to the Learned, and to those who chose to recite their

[A] ATHENÆUM.] This Name comes from Minerva, in Greek Ἀθηνὴ, The Goddess of all polite Arts, and Sciences. It was thought fit, that an Edifice, built in favour of the Learned, should bear the Name of That Goddess. Some have thought, it was a Temple, consecrated to her; but Aurelius Victor does not give us That Idea of it. "Gymnasia, says he (1), speaking of the Emperor Adrian, "Doctoresque curare occœpit, adeo quidem ut etiam "ludum ingenuarum artium, quod Athenæum vocant, "constitueret. —— He began to shew a great Regard "to Exercises, and Professors, in all learned Arts "and Sciences, insomuch, that he built them Schools, "which are called the Athenæum." Other Historians, who speak of this Edifice, represent it only as a Place for Lessons, Declamations, and Lectures. "Ad Athenæum audiendorum & Græcorum & Latinorum rhetorum vel poëtarum caussa frequenter "processit. —— He frequently went to the Athe- "næum, to hear the Greek, and Latin, Rhetoricians "and Poets." Lampridius speaks thus of Alexander Severus. This Passage is quoted in Calepin, a little after having said, that the Athenæum was consecrated to Minerva, and that the Poets, and other Greek Writers, brought their Works thither, as the Latin Authors brought theirs into the Temple of Apollo. Judge by this of the Exactness of Those, who composed, or corrected, That great Dictionary. Cruquius makes use of the same Division; he sends the Latin Poets to the Temple of Apollo, and the Greek to the Temple of Minerva, which he calls Athenæum (2). But let us go on in observing what the Ancients have said of the Place in question; "Cum Pertinax "eo die processionem quam ad Athenæum paravet, ut audiret Poëtam, ob sacrificii præsagium "distulisset (3). —— When Pertinax, by reason of "some ill Omen in the Sacrifices, put off the Procession "he intended to have made, that Day, to the Athen- "æum." Another says, that Gordian, the Emperor, had declaimed, in the Athenæum; ubi adolevit, in Athenæo controversias declamavit (4). Philostratus says, that the Sophist Adrian, who was in great Esteem at Rome, had no sooner declared, that he would make a Declamation, but the Senators, Knights, and every body, flocked to the Athenæum. Δρόμῳ ἐχώρουν ἐς τὸ Ἀθηναῖον ὁρμῆς μεστοί (5). They ran to the Athenæum with great eagerness. Let us add these Words of St Jerom; Quando omne Athenæum Sibe-

(1) Aurelius Victor, in Hadriano.

(2) In Horat. Sat. 10, lib. 1.

(3) Julius Capitolinus in Pertin.

(4) Capitolin. in Gordian.

(5) Philostr. in Adriano.

lasticorum vocibus personabat (6). —— When the whole Athenæum rang with the Voices of the Professors: And those of Sidonius Apollinaris; Dignus omnino quem plausibilibus Roma foveret ulnis, quoque recitante crepitantis Athenæi subsellia cuneata quaterentur (7). —— Worthy, in the highest Manner, of the greatest Applauses Rome could give, and to shake the crowded Seats of the ecchoing Athenæum with his Repetitions. The Etymology, Dion gives us, is a new Argument against Those, who have taken the Athenæum for a Temple of Minerva; he says, that the Place was so called, from the Exercises of the Learned, there performed, ἀπὸ τῆς ἐν αὐτῷ τῶν πεπαιδευμένων ἀσκήσεως (8). He informs us also, that the Consul assembled the Senate, in the Athenæum, when he understood, that the Prætorian Cohorts had seized the Murderers of Pertinax. The Objection, which might be drawn from the Senate's never meeting but in Places consecrated by the Augurs, does no way balance the Reasons, which prove, that the Athenæum was not a Temple of Pallas. To conclude, They, who pretend, that the first Place, which was called Athenæum, was a Building in Athens (9), will have much ado to prove it. Good Mr de Marolles has a very wrong Notion of This Word; for, in his Translation of Aurelius Victor, he says, that Adrian invited learned Men from all Parts, as if he intended to transplant Athens to Rome.

(6) Hieron. de Obitu Paulinæ ad Pammach.

(7) Sidon. Apollin. Epist. 14. lib. 9. See also Epist. 9. ejusd. libri, & Epist. 8. lib. 4.

(8) Xiphil. in Didio Juliano sub fin. where Xylander translates Ἀθήναιον by Templum Minervæ.

(9) The Thesaurus Fabri, Edit. 1692.

I shall observe, occasionally, that, in the City of Athens, the Rhetoricians, and Grammarians, met in the Temple of the Muses, upon Trials of Skill. Ἀπάγει παρὰ τὸ τέμενος τῶν Μουσῶν· ἔνθα ποιηταὶ καὶ ῥήτορες καὶ τῶν γραμματιστῶν οἱ παῖδες φοιτῶντες ποιοῦνται τὰς ἐπιδείξεις. He leads away to the Temple of the Muses, where the Poets, Rhetoricians, and Grammarian Scholars often resort to shew their Parts. Thus speaks an Author of the VIth Century of the Practice in his time; I mean Zachary, of Mitylene, in his Book de Mundi opificio. See the Three hundred thirty ninth Page of the eleventh Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Paris in the Year 1644.

[B] Built by the Emperor Adrian.] This I have proved by the Passage of Aurelius Victor; Casaubon has also very good Reason to laugh at Theodorus Marsilius (10), whom he treats roughly enough, without naming him. This Author spends a great many Words, in his Commentary on Persius, to prove, that the

(10) Casaub. Comment. in Capitol. Vit. Pertin.

Digitized by Google

their Works in Public. It appears from the beginning of Juvenal's Satires, that these sort of Lectures were very frequent, and that Fronto lent his House and Gardens to those Poets, who had a mind to recite their Verses before a numerous Audience (a). Many others were also willing to lend their Houses for the same Purpose (b); but, unfortunately for the Poets, these Favours were often very expensive [C]: for He, who was to read his Work, was to fit up the Room, and pay the Hire of the Seats. It is very probable, that the Emperor Adrian, who loved and understood the Sciences, had This View, among others, in building the Athenæum, viz. to free Authors from these great Incumbrances. Without doubt This Place served also for a College (c); for it was not only used for reciting of Compositions, but likewise for reading of Lectures. I find too, that the Senate sometimes met there (d). The Name of this Place has been applied, in a general Sense, to signify all kind of Universities, or Seminaries of Learning, appropriated to the teaching of Languages; for they are called in Latin Athenæa. Some are also of Opinion, that Libraries have been called Athenica (e).

(a) Frontonis platani convulsaque marmora clamant, Semper & assiduo ruptæ lectore columnæ.

(b) Stella, in Martial. Epig. 6. l. 4. Titinnius Capito, in Pliny, lib. 8. Epist. 12. Quadratus, in Arrian's Epict. lib. 3. cap. 23.

(c) See Remark [A].

(d) Ibid. towards the end.

(e) Salmas. in Trebell. Pollion. de triginta Tyrannis.

the Athenæum, and the Temple of Apollo Palatinus, were one and the same. Vossius (11) has repeated the same Accusation against him, and has given him, for an Accomplice, Father Raderus, on the seventieth Epigram of the tenth Book of Martial. He might have added Savaron for a second Accomplice, who, by these Words of Horace, (11) Vossius de Imitat. pag. 36.

WHETHER the Poets repeated in a hired House. Errors of Vossius.

------ hæc ego ludo,
Quæ nec in æde sonent certantia judice Tarpâ (12);

(12) Horat. Sat. ult. lib. 2. ver. 37.

These idle Lines shall ne'er in Judgment come Before the learned Audience of Rome; understands, that Horace would not have his Verses read in the Athenæum (13). He gives This Interpretation as the very Words of an ancient Scholiast. Lipsius makes use of the same Authority, though he confesses, that another ancient Scholiast understands there by ædem the Temple of Apollo Palatinus (14). If That learned Man had remembred the Passage of Aurelius Victor, he would not have preferred the Interpretation of the first of these Scholiasts to That of the latter (15). See the Article TARPA, in it's Place.

(13) Savar. in Sidon. Apollon. Ep. 14. lib. 9.

(14) Lipsius Epist. 48. Centur. 3. ad Belg.

(15) See Vossius de Imitat. p. 61.

[C] These Favours were often very expensive.] The Author of the Dialogue de Causis corruptæ Eloquentiæ is my Evidence, where he says, Domum mutuatur, & auditorium exstruit, & subsellia conducit, ut beatissimus recitationem ejus eventus consequatur. —— He borrows a House, builds an Auditory, and hires Seats, that his Repetitions may meet with the most favourable Reception. Juvenal will serve for a second Witness, where he threatens the Poets with the Mortification of not finding any Great Man, who will re-imburse them the Expences they have been at.

Nemo dabit regum quanti subsellia constent,
Et quæ conducto pendent anabathra tigillo,
Quæque reportandis posita est orchestra cathedris (16).

(16) Juven. Sat. 7. ver. 45.

With no kind Patron now the Poet meets,
To pay the Hire of Pulpit and of Seats.

I do not deny, but they sometimes repeated in an hired House, but cannot forbear saying, that Vossius maintains it without any ground, since the Testimonies, he alledges, mean nothing less, than what he pretends. The first Passage, he quotes, is That of the Dialogue de Causis corruptæ Eloquentiæ, where we have just now met with domum mutuatur, which signifies a borrowed, and not an hired, House. The second is of Juvenal, in these Words:

—— cum jam celebres notique Poëtæ
Balneolum Gabiis, Romæ conducere furnos
Tentarent (17).

(17) Juven. Sat. 7. v. 3.

When now the celebrated Wits, for need,
Hire Bagnios, to the Cryer's Trade succeed,
Or get their own, by baking others Bread.
CHA. DRYDEN.

which denote only the dismal Poverty of the Trade, which had almost forced the Poets to become Bankrupt to the Muses, and to seek their Living by some mechanic Employ, as one may call That of a Bath-Keeper, a Baker, or a Cryer. The third Testimony is taken from these Words of the same Juvenal:

Ipse facit versus, atque uni cedit Homero
Propter mille annos; &, si dulcedine famæ
Succensus recites, Maculonis commodat ædes (18).

(18) Juven. Sat. 7. ver. 38.

Himself writes Verse, which he to your's prefers,
And only yields to Homer's for their Years:
But, to your Share to try what Fame will fall,
Any great Man will lend an empty Hall.

It is so plain, that, neither in this, nor in the foregoing Passage, are Poets said to have hired the Chamber, where they recited their Verses, that it is unaccountable how such Mistakes should escape the Sight of the learned Vossius. Observe, that they are found in a Book, which was printed in the Author's Life-time (19), the Title whereof is, De Imitatione cum Oratoriâ tum præcipuè poëticâ, deque Recitatione Veterum. This latter Subject has been amply treated by Crefollius, in his Theatre of the ancient Sophists.

(19) At Amsterdam 1647, with the Institutiones Poëticæ.

ATHENÆUS, a Greek Grammarian, born at Naucratis in Ægypt, flourished in the IIId Century [A]. He was one of the most learned Men of his Time; he had read

[A] Athenæus —— flourished in the IIId Century.] Faber has censured Helvicus, who, in quoting Suidas, places Athenæus in the Reign of Antoninus Pius (1). Here are two Faults, for Suidas makes him flourish under Marcus Aurelius, though he does not deserve to be copied in this, since Oppian, who dedicated a Poem to the Emperor Caracalla (2), died before Athenæus. Helvicus ought not then to have placed Oppian fifty Years after him. Faber reproves him for this Mistake, and maintains, that Athenæus lived at the same time with Herodian, who finished his History in the Year 238. It is certain, Athenæus places himself after Oppian, in point of Time. Καὶ τὸν ὀλίγῳ πρὸ ἡμῶν γενόμενον Οππιανὸν τὸν Κίλικα (3). And Oppian, the Cilician, who lived a little before our Time; says he, speaking of several Authors, who had treated of Fishing. Without doubt it will be objected, that he elsewhere says (4), that he knew the Poet Pancrates, who received some Present from the Emperor Adrian: But This raises no great Difficulty; it is sufficient to suppose, that This Pancrates was very young, at That time, that he lived eighty Years, and died before Athenæus had attained to the twentieth Year of his Age. You will find, by this, that the latter might very well have lived 'till the Reign of Gordianus. If Mr de Tillemont had recollected the Greek Passage of Athenæus, which I have quoted, The Age, which he thought due to This Writer, would have appeared still more surprizing to him; for he supposes him very aged, by imagining only, that his Work was written after the Death of Commodus; and the Reason,

(1) Tanaq. Faber Epist. 63. lib. 1. p. 211, 212.

(2) Who was killed in 217.

(3) Athen. lib. 1. p. 13.

(4) Id. lib. 15. p. 677.

Digitized by Google

read ſo much, and had ſo good a Memory, that he may juſtly be called the Varro of the Greeks (a). Of all his Works [B], there remains only That intituled the Deipnoſophiſts, that is to ſay, the Sophiſts at Table (b), where he introduces a number of learned Men, of all Profeſſions, who converſe upon various Subjects, at the Table of a Roman Citizen, called Larenſius. There is an infinite Variety of Facts and Citations in this Work of Athenæus, which makes the reading of it very pleaſant to Thoſe, who have ſkill enough to love Antiquity from a rational Motive. But, without doubt, the learned Men, who were cotemporary with the Author, did not judge of this Work ſo favourably, as we do in this Age. Thoſe learned Men could conſult the Originals, and there find moſt of the things, which Athenæus preſented them with; for which Reaſon they conſidered his Book in a bad Light, as nothing elſe but a tedious Collection from others. But, for our part, who can come at but a very few of the Authors referred to by Athenæus, and have no other Opportunity of meeting with a hundred particular Curioſities, mentioned by him, but in his Collection, we look upon it as a very precious Treaſure: we regard it with a favourable Eye, and transfer to the Author all the Eſteem we have for the Rarities recorded by him, which are indeed become ſuch, only becauſe the Books, out of which he took them, are loſt. For this ſame Reaſon, ſuch a Compiler, whom our Age might not eſteem in the leaſt, would be greatly admired a thouſand Years hence, if there ſhould happen, in the Republic of Learning, ſuch Revolutions as deſtroyed moſt of the Works of the ancient Greeks and Romans. We cannot anſwer, that nothing like this will ever happen again. Let us, then, not blame thoſe, who compile; they labour perhaps more uſefully for future Ages, than the Authors, who borrow nothing from others. We find, in the Deipnoſophiſts of our Author, a great many Touches of Slander, Fragments of ſcandalous Reports, and obſcene Stories. No Book has been worſe treated by Tranſcribers, than This of Athenæus [C]; all the Editions we have of it are very imperfect [D]. Somebody made an Abridgment of This Work [E]. Mr Moreri could

(a) See the Preface of Caſaubon on Athenæus.

(b) Δειπνοσοφιστῶν βιβλία τεσσαρα καὶ δέκα. Of the Deipnoſophiſts, 15 Books. Voſſius ſhould not have employed, twice in the ame P. ge (viz. p. 232, of his de Hiſtor. Gr.) the Term Δειπνοσοφιστῶν.

he gives for it, is, That Athenæus had known the Poet Pancrates, famous in the Time of Adrian (5). He finds no Fault with Suidas, who placed him under Marcus Aurelius; tho' he ought to have cenſured him, in conſequence of the Greek Paſſage above-mentioned. I would not have it pretended, that it is not Athenæus, who boaſts of having known the Poet Pancrates, but that they are the Words of Callixenus, the Rhodian, whom he had quoted a little before. This Suppoſition will not paſs. Caſaubon perceived plainly, that theſe are not Callixenus's Words, in the Book of Athenæus (6); but he has omitted a very ſtrong Reaſon for proving this Point. It is, that the Paſſage in queſtion begins thus; Since I have mentioned the City of Alexandria. Now Callixenus would never have ſpoken thus, in a Work of his own, concerning That very City (7). It is therefore Athenæus himſelf, who makes uſe of theſe Words, after having finiſhed the Relation of what he had borrowed from Callixenus.

(c) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 2. p. 809.

(6) Caſaub. in Athen. pag. 958.

(7) Ἐν τοῖς περὶ Ἀλεξανδρείας. In his Work concerning Alexandria. Athen. lib. 15. p. 676.

[B] Of all his Works.] One was concerning the Kings of Syria, as himſelf informs us (8). Voſſius aſcribes to him another, concerning Illuſtrious Men, and Generals of Armies, who had fought Duels (9). He grounds his Opinion on theſe Words of the fourth Book. Ὅτι δὲ καὶ οἱ ἔνδοξοι καὶ οἱ ἡγεμόνες ἐμονομάχουν καὶ ἐκ προκλήσεως τοῦτ' ἐποίουν, ἐν ἄλλοις εἰρήκαμεν (10). But that Illuſtrious Men, and Generals of Armies, have fought Duels, upon Challenges, we have in another Place diſcourſed. This Subject would be very proper for a particular Treatiſe, but it might alſo be inſerted as an Epiſode in another Work, and chiefly by an Author, who ran ſo much Ground in a little Time, and who loved Rhapſody ſo well, as Athenæus. Therefore Voſſius's Opinion is not very certain.

(8) Ibid. lib. 5. pag. 211.

(9) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Gr. p. 232.

(10) Athen. lib. 4. c. 13. in fine.

[C] No Book has been worſe treated by Tranſcribers, than This of Athenæus.] The Omiſſions, Tranſpoſitions, and falſe Reaſonings, are not to be numbered. Theſe are Faults of the Tranſcribers; but, as to the loſs of part of the Work, there is no Reaſon to lay That to their Charge. The two firſt Books, the beginning of the third, and moſt part of the laſt, are wanting. To ſupply this loſs as well as poſſible, they have printed the Abridgment of what was loſt, together with what was preſerved entire; for, as I ſhall ſhew preſently, we have ſtill an Abridgment of the whole Work.

[D] All the Editions we have of it are very imperfect.] The firſt is That of Aldus Manutius, in the Year 1514. Marcus Muſurus, a Greek by Nation, aſſiſted him with his Care and Skill. However, for want of good Manuſcripts, and a due Exactneſs in correcting it, there remains an infinite Number of Faults in their Work. The Baſil Edition of John Valderus, in Folio, which followed next in the Year 1535, by the Care of James Bedrot, and Chriſtian Herlinus, was little better. Natales Comes ventured to tranſlate Athenæus into Latin. His Learning is very well known. It appears by his Mythology, that he had read and ſtudied much; but, as he was ignorant in Criticiſm, it is certain, that his Tranſlation is moſt wretched. It is the firſt that was publiſhed. "Ante omnes alios (nam de Sanga "Romano vereor ut credendum ſit Paulo Jovio) "Latinum fecit Athenæum (11). Quamvis rumor "ſpargeretur Sangam patritium Romanum, virum, "ut aiunt, eximiæ doctrinæ id præſtitiſſe (12)." Caſaubon does not cite the Place, where Paulus Jovius ſays this: It is in the Book de Piſcibus Romanis. Theſe are the Words: Sanga Romanus, Poëta lapidus, cujus beneficio Athenæum Latinum legimus (13). But theſe five laſt Words are left out of the Baſil Edition, in 1561, by Henry and Peter Perna: which ſhews, that Paulus Jovius had corrected his Miſtake. Dalechamp, a famous Phyſician, publiſhed a ſecond, which exceeds That of Natalis Comes, and might have been much better than it is, if the Author had met with leſs Practice. But, as he kept cloſe to his Profeſſion, and ſpent only the leiſure Hours, his Patients left him, on Athenæus, he has not done all that might be expected from him, though for near thirty Years he dedicated all his ſpare Time that way (14). And thus it remained ever ſince. The Edition of Dalechamp, the Greek on one ſide, and the Latin on the other, with the Volume of Caſaubon's Annotations, is the beſt Athenæus extant. The Abbot of Marolles has tranſlated this Greek Author into French. I do not queſtion but he followed the Latin Tranſlation as his only Model, and has committed many Miſtakes. I know nothing of this Work, but from the Journal des Sçavans (15). It is in 4to, and was printed at Paris, in the Year 1680. It is the firſt French Tranſlation from the Original, and the laſt Performance of the Tranſlator. I have been informed, that it ſold ſo well, that it is very ſcarce at the Booksellers, and bears an exceſſive Price. As to what has been ſaid concerning a Tranſlation by Sanga, ſee, above, Citation (11), (12), and (13).

(11) Caſaub. Præf. Animadv. in Athen.

(12) Dalechamp. Ep. Dedic. Athenæi.

(13) P. Jovius de Piſcibus Romanis, cap. 31, pag. 104. Edit. 1531, ex Officin. Froben.

(14) Ex Præfat. Caſaub. in Athenæum.

[E] Somebody made an Abridgment of This Work.] Caſaubon confeſſes ingenuouſly, that This Abbreviator is unknown to him, and that he can neither tell his Name, nor Country, nor the Age he lived in (16). However, he places him above Five hundred Years before himſelf, and is very certain he ought to be placed before Euſtathius (17), becauſe Euſtathius has,

(15) Of May 1680.

(16) Caſaub. Animadv. in Athen. initio.

(17) Id. in Præfat. & in Animadv. p. 3.

Digitized by Google

could not forbear saying something of it, but was grosly mistaken [F]. All that he has said of Athenæus, and of two other Persons of the same Name, is erroneous [G]. See the last Remark of this Article.

has, upon several Occasions, made use of the Abridgment of Athenæus, in Preference to the Original, which led him into some Errors (18). Casaubon fancies, that this Abbreviator was some Grammarian, who undertook the same thing on Athenæus, which Hermolaus had done on the Work of Stephanus Byzantinus, for which, in some Respects, he deserved to be commended for his Learning, and in others, to be condemned for his want of Exactness (19). The Manuscripts of Athenæus were very much corrupted, even when this Abridgment was made. This is proved by two Reasons: There appears several Faults in the Abridgment, answering to those in the Manuscripts: And the Abbreviator confesses, that he passes over several things, because they were corrupted (20). Casaubon had a Manuscript of the Abridgment (21), which David Hoeschelius sent him: It wanted the first Book, and part of the second; so that they had retrenched from the Beginning of it almost all that had been inserted in the Editions of Athenæus, to supply what was lost from the Original of the Deipnosophists.

(18) Id. in Animadv. pag. 1, 2.

(19) Ibid. pag. 3.

(20) Id. in Præfat.

(21) Id. Animadv. init.

[F] Mr Moreri —— was grosly mistaken.] These are his Words; Athenæus composed a Work of the Deipnosophists, in fifteen Books, which Hermolaus of Byzantium abridged, according to Suidas. I pass by his Sin of Omission: No doubt he ought to have told us, whether That which is extant be the Work itself, or only the Abridgment he is speaking of. We shall only take notice of his Sins of Commission. I. It is false, that Hermolaus of Byzantium abridged Athenæus. II. It is false, that Suidas says so. III. It is false, that Suidas mentions any Abbreviator of the Deipnosophists. At first I took Casaubon to be the Cause of this Mistake, I mean a very innocent Cause; for who would ever imagine, that any one could stumble at these Words? "Putem confectam Constantinopoli ante "annos quingentos & amplius hanc epitomen ab ali-"quo Grammatico, qualis fuit Hermolaus Byzanti-"us, auctor eorum Excerptorum, quæ hodie pro "Ἐθνικῶν Stephani libris in doctorum manibus ver-"santur (22). —— I suppose this Epitome was com-"posed at Constantinople, above Five hundred Years "ago, by some such Grammarian, as Hermolaus of "Byzantium, who is the Author of Those Extracts, "which now pass among the Learned, for the original "Work of Stephens's Ethnics." But afterwards I found, that it was Charles Stephens, who deceived Mr Moreri. I think Volaterran is the first, who falsely makes Suidas say, that Hermolaus of Byzantium had abridged Athenæus. This Fault of Volaterran was taken notice of in the Edition of Athenæus, in 1535, as may be seen, without consulting That Edition, if we cast but an Eye on Gesner's Bibliotheca. How easy soever it was to avoid the same Error, since Gesner observed it, yet it is certain, that Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman, are fallen headlong into it; and they assure us, which is worse, that we have no other Athenæus, but the Abridgment of Hermolaus of Byzantium: Opus, quod ad nos sanè haudquaquam integrum pervenit: ejus epitome ab Hermolao Byzantio TANTUM relictâ: Authore Suida.

(22) Ibid. pag. 3.

[G] What has been said —— of two other Persons of the same Name, is very erroneous.] These are Athenæus the Historian, and Athenæus the Philosopher. Mr Moreri says, that the first Athenæus wrote the History of Semiramis, and that this History is to be found in the second Book of Diodorus Siculus, and that Muretus has copied it, without citing the Author. It is easy to see, that these Words contain I know not how many Contradictions. Is it usual for an Historian to crowd into a small Corner of his Work all that another Historian has wrote on a long Reign, a Reign fruitful of Events? Could such a Critic, as Muretus, include the whole Life of Semiramis in one of his short Chapters (23)? This is absurd. He ought, therefore, to have expressed himself in this, or some such manner; Diodorus Siculus relates an Action of Semiramis, and quotes an Author, whose Name is Athenæus. Muretus mentions the same Action, without quoting any Author. To conclude from hence, that this Athenæus had composed the History of Semiramis, and ought consequently to be ranked among the Historians, is going a little too fast: According to this Rule, Seneca must have wrote the History of almost all the great Men in the World; for there is scarce one of them, who is not recorded by him, for some memorable Action, or Sentence. This may be said against Vossius, who, at a venture, places Him, whom Diodorus Siculus mentions, in the Number of Historians; but he has taken care not to say, positively, that the same Athenæus wrote the History of Semiramis. As to Athenæus, the Philosopher, it is false, that Strabo, cited by Mr Moreri, says, that he taught Aristotle's Philosophy at Rome; that, being returned home again, he was accused of a Design to form a Republic, and that he was taken into Custody. This is what Strabo says of him (24). "Athenæus, a Pe-"ripatetic Philosopher, a Native of Seleucia, in "Cilicia, had a Share in the Government, and was "a Demagogue in his Country for some time. Af-"terwards he became an intimate Friend of Mu-"rena, and fled with him, upon the Discovery of "Murena's Conspiracy against Augustus. He was "taken in his Flight; but the Emperor, not finding "him guilty, set him at Liberty. Athenæus re-"turned to Rome, and to those, he first met with, "repeated these Words of Euripides:

(23) It is the 17*th of the* 12*th Book,* Variarum Lectionum. Moreri has cited it, but it is in his Article of Athenæus the Physician.

(24) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 461.

Ἥκω νεκρῶν κευθμῶνα καὶ σκότου πύλας
Λιπών.

From Death's wide Caverns, and Hell-Gates, I come.

One can hardly guess at the Original of these Mistakes of Mr Moreri; for it seems more difficult to corrupt things in this Manner, than to deliver them as they are found.

(a) Steph. Byzant. verbo Ἄτραξ.

(b) Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 303.

ATRAX, or ATRACIA (a), a City of Thessaly (b), on the River Peneus, had it's Name from Atrax, the Son of Peneus, and Bura, who was it's Founder (c). It must have been considerable, since the Poets have sometimes made use of the Epithet Atracian, to signify Thessalian [A]. Pliny places the Atracians amongst the People of Ætolia (d); but we must not from thence infer, that he would be understood to speak of them, as different from the Inhabitants of the City Atrax, which he assigns to Thessaly (e). The Divisions of Nations, and Boundaries of Provinces, have often been altered; so that the same District, which belonged, at one Time, to Ætolia, might, at another, be esteemed part of Thessaly. The River ATRAX, whose Mouth opened into the Ionian Sea (f), passed thro' the Country of the Atracians.

(c) Steph. Byzant. ubi supra.

(d) Plinii Histor. Nat. lib. 4. c. 2.

(e) Ibid. c. 8.

(f) Ibid. lib. 4. cap. 2.

[A] The Poets have sometimes made use of the Epithet Atracian, to signify Thessalian.] Ceneus, who was killed in the Quarrel between the Centaurs and Lapithæ, at the Wedding of Pirithous, is called Atracides, by Ovid (1); not to represent him as the Son of Atrax; for he had a little before called him the Son of Elatus (2); but, in general, as a Thessalian. I am not unaware, that some Authors (3) say, he was the Son of Atrax. The same Poet calls the Wife of Pirithous only Atracis.

(1) Ovid. Met. l. 12. ver. 209.

(2) Perdix Elateia, ib. ver. 89.

(3) Antonini Liberal. Metam. c. 17.

Desine mirari posito quod candida vino
Atracis ambiguos traxit in arma viros (4).

(4) Ovid. Amor. lib. 1. Eleg 4. v. 7.

No wonder Beauty ev'n a Centaur warms,
And makes him quit the Nuptial Cup for Arms.

In another Place, he gives her proper Name Hippodamia; but he adds to it the Epithet Atracis.

An

Digitized by Google

An fera Centauris indicere bella coëgit
Atracis Hæmonios Hippodamia viros (5) ?

Offended Beauty cruel Wars can wage;
The Centaurs felt the Force of Female Rage.

(5) Ovid. Epiſt. Helen. circa finem. ver. 247.

Valerius Flaccus deſcribes her by the Words Atracia Virgo (6).

(6) Valer. Flacc. Argon. lib. 1. ver. 141.

We cannot ſuppoſe Ovid takes her to be the Daughter of Atrax; this would prove too much. For then Ceneus muſt alſo have the ſame Father; whereas he makes him the Son of Elatus, and does not ſay one Word of Ceneus being Brother to the Bride; an unpardonable Omiſſion, if he had underſtood him to be Brother-in law to Pirithous.

I take it, that Apuleius imagined, that Atracis was the proper Name of the Wife of Pirithous; for, as he wrote in Proſe, he would not have called her by That Name, if he had thought it only a figurative and poetical Expreſſion. Sic inſtar Atracis, ſays he (7), vel (read ὅ) Pirithoi diſpectæ diſturbatæque Nuptiæ. Beroaldus very well underſtood it of Hippodama, (or Hippodamia,) Wife of Pirithous; but when he adds, that ſhe was called Atracis, becauſe ſhe was the Daughter of Atrax, who was the firſt Inventor of Magic amongſt the Theſſalians (8), he affirms, what he ought to have proved; for we no where find, that Atrax eſtabliſhed Magic. It is very true, Magic has been called Ars Atracia (9); but this means no more, than Ars Theſſalica, and ſignifies only Magic in general, becauſe Theſſaly was famous for That Art (10). We are to underſtand in the ſame Senſe Theſe Verſes of Valerius Flaccus:

Quamvis Atracio lunam ſpumare veneno
Scirct, & harmoniis agitari cantibus umbras (11).

(7) Apuleius Metam. l. 4. pag. 35. Ed. 1615.

(8) See the Notes of Ph. Beroaldus, on this Place of Apuleius.

(9) Statius, Theb. l. 1. 106.

(10) Plin. Hiſt. Nat. lib. 30. c. 1.

(11) Valer. Flacc. Argon. lib. 6. ver. 447.

Tho' by Theſſalian Arts the Moon he ſtains,
And calls up Spirits by his Magic Strains.

The Scholiaſt of Statius is the only one, if I am not miſtaken, who has ſaid, that Atrax was the Father of Hippodamia. It is thus I would correct the Word, Hippocatiæ, and not, as Barthius makes it, Hippocrateæ (12). The Scholiaſt of Homer, on the Twenty firſt Book of the Odyſſee; Euſtathius, on the ſame place; and Hyginus, at cap. 23; ſay, that the Wife of Pirithous was called Hippodamia, and was the Daughter of Adraſtus. I do not know whether the Genitive Ἀθρακος might not have been changed into Ἀδράστου. If this was the Caſe, Atrax, the true Name of the Father of Hippodamia, would be loſt in That of Adraſtus. The Tranſcribers have made Miſtakes full as great as This. I ſhall give an Example, not foreign to our Subject. All the Manuſcripts of Lycophron, at preſent, read ἅρπαξας λύκους, Rapaces Lupos, Ravenous Wolves (13); this ſignifies the Argonauts; but the Copy, which Stephanus Byzantinus made uſe of, read ατρακας λυκους (14), Atracenſes lupos, that is, Theſſalian Wolves. It is thus Euſtathius has cited this Place of Lycophron (15).

What Barthius pretends, that Atraciæ oræ, in Propertius (16), ſignifies a very diſtant Place, and that Catullus has uſed the Word Atracis in the ſame Senſe (17), is not very ingenious. Some Critics, in Catullus, read Atacis, a River in Gaul, inſtead of Atracis, a River in Greece; but, however that be, we ought to underſtand literally the Words of Catullus and Propertius (18). As to the Suppoſition of Barthius, that they allude to the Art of Magic, it is altogether ridiculous.

(12) See the Commentary of Barthius on Statius, Tom. 2. p. 30, 31.

(13) Lycoph. Alexandr. ver. 1309.

(14) Steph. Byzant. at the Word Ἄτραξ.

(15) See Canter. on the Words of Lycophron.

(16) Propert. Eleg. 8. l. 1.

(17) Catull. Epigr. 96.

(18) See Scaliger on this place of Propertius.

ATTALUS, the Name of ſome Kings of Pergamus. See PERGAMUS.

ATTICUS (TITUS POMPONIUS) has the Character of one of the moſt honourable Men in ancient Rome. He behaved himſelf ſo prudently, that, without forfeiting his Neutrality, he preſerved the Eſteem and Affection of the Two contrary Parties [A]. The intimate Friendſhip, which he had for Cicero, did not hinder his having a very ſtrict Union with Hortenſius; and he brought Thoſe Two Rivals in Eloquence not only to forbear all mutual Reflexion, but even to keep up a good Underſtanding [B]. He never had the leaſt Difference, either with his Mother, or his

[A] He preſerved the Eſteem and Affection of the two contrary Parties.] He ſent Money to the Son of Marius, who was a declared Enemy to the Republic; and inſinuated himſelf ſo far into Sylla's Favour, that this Roman General would always have him near him, and did not take it ill, that Atticus excuſed himſelf from following him to Rome, on account of his reſolving to obſerve a Neutrality (1). "Noli, oro "te, inquit Pomponius, adverſum eos me velle du- "cere, cum quibus ne contra te arma ferrem, Ita- "liam reliqui (2).——Ask me not, ſays Pomponius, "to go againſt thoſe, whom becauſe I would not fol- "low againſt you, I left Italy." He kept himſelf quiet in Rome, during the War between Cæſar and Pompey; this was not diſpleaſing to Pompey (3), but extremely pleaſing to Cæſar. After the Death of the latter, he ſent Money to Brutus, when the Party for Liberty began to grow weakeſt, and did a thouſand good Offices to the Wife and Friends of Marc Antony, when his Party ſeemed ruined beyond all Recovery. Marc Antony was not ungrateful; for, though he exerted a furious Hatred againſt all the Friends of Cicero, yet he wrote, with his own Hand, a very obliging Letter to Atticus (4). He afterwards promoted the Marriage of Atticus's Daughter, with Agrippa, the Favourite of Auguſtus (5). Laſtly, notwithſtanding the cruel Diviſions, which broke out between Marc Antony and Auguſtus, our Atticus maintained himſelf in both their Friendſhips. One of them (6) never ſet out any where, without ſending him a particular Account, by Letter, of what he was doing, what he was reading, and where he was going: and, when he was at Rome, he wrote almoſt every day to conſult him on ſome Queſtion; the other (7) acquainted him with all his Affairs. Without doubt it was difficult to preſerve, at the ſame time, the Friendſhip of two ſuch Antagoniſts. "Hoc "quale ſit facilius exiſtimabit is, qui judicare poterit, "quantæ ſit ſapientiæ eorum retinere uſum benevo- "lentiamque, inter quos maximarum rerum non ſo- "lum æmulatio, ſed obtrectatio tanta intercedebat, "quantum fuit incidere neceſſe inter Cæſarem atque "Antonium, cum ſe uterque principem non ſolum "urbis Romanæ, ſed orbis terrarum, eſſe cuperet (8). "—— What this was, he is beſt able to judge, who "is ſenſible of the great Prudence, requiſite to pre- "ſerve the Correſpondence and Friendſhip of thoſe, who "were not only Competitors for the greateſt Things, "but ſuch Enemies to one another, as Cæſar and An- "tony muſt neceſſarily be, when each of them aſpired "to be Emperor, not only of Rome, but of the whole "World."

(1) Corn. Nepos, in Vita Attici, cap. 2.

(2) Idem, cap. 4.

(3) Idem, cap. 7. yet Cicero, Ep. 6. lib. 11, ad Atticum, ſays, that Pompey would have been an Enemy to Atticus, if he had conquered.

(4) Idem, cap. 10.

(5) Idem, cap. 12.

(6) Namely, Auguſtus. Corn. Nepos, cap 20.

(7) Namely, Marc Antony. Corn. Nepos, cap. 20.

(8) Idem, cap. 5.

[B] He brought Cicero and Hortenſius —— to keep up a good Underſtanding.] They, who are ſenſible, how much an Emulation in Eloquence influences and ſtirs up the other Paſſions, will conceive no mean Idea of the Conduct and Merit of a Man, who knew how to keep the Peace between the two moſt famous Orators of Antiquity. It was not ſufficient, that Pomponius Atticus could inſinuate himſelf agreeably into People's Affections; he muſt alſo have ſome remarkable Qualities to deſerve ſo great an Eſteem. What I am going to quote, is, therefore, very proper to deſcribe his Merit. "Utebatur intimè Q. Hor- "tenſio, qui iis temporibus principatum eloquentiæ "tenebat, ut intelligi non poſſet uter eum plus dili- "geret Cicero an Hortenſius, & id quod erat difficil- "limum, efficiebat ut inter quos tantæ laudis eſſet "æmulatio, nulla intercederet obtrectatio, eſſetque "talium virorum copula (9). —— He was very in- "timate with Quintus Hortenſius, who, at that "Time, was acknowledged ſupreme in Eloquence, ſo that "it was hard to ſay which loved him moſt, Cicero "or Hortenſius; and, what was moſt difficult of all, "he

(9) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

his Sister [C]. He always behaved himself generously to his Friends, and opened his Purse to them in their Necessities. This he could well afford; for, besides the great Fortunes, which fell to him by Succession [D], he found ways to lay out his Money to a very great Advantage. The Troubles, which arose at Rome, between the Parties of Cinna and Sylla, made him resolve, in his Youth, to go to Athens, where he lived a long time. He was so very much beloved by the Athenians [E], that the Day he left their City was, in some Manner, a Day of Mourning. He loved Learning extremely, and had, in his Family, several Librarians (a), and very good Readers. He had always something read at his Table, even when he entertained his

(a) See, below, Citation (38).

" he brought it about, that, between these two so " great Rivals, there was not only no Contention, but " even an Union."

[C] He never had the least Difference either with his Mother or his Sister.] When he was Sixty seven Years of Age, he lost his Mother, who was ninty Years old, and had a Sister near the same Age with himself. He declared, at his Mother's Funeral, that he had never any Occasion to seek her Reconciliation, and that there never had been any Quarrel between his Sister and himself. " Hoc ipsum verè glorian- " tem audierim in funere matris suæ, quam extulit " annorum 90, cum esset septem & 60, se nunquam " cum matre in gratiam rediisse, nunquam cum sorore " fuisse in simultate, quam propè æqualem habebat; " quod est signum aut nullam unquam inter eos que- " rimoniam intercessisse, aut hunc eâ fuisse in suos in- " dulgentiâ, ut quos amare deberet iratsi eis nefas " duceret (10). —— This I heard him deservedly " glory in, at the Funeral of his Mother, whom he " buried at ninty Years of Age, being sixty himself, " that he had never stood in need of her Pardon, or " been at Variance with his Sister, who was about the " same Age with himself; which is a Sign, either " that there was no Complaints among them, or else " that he had so great an Indulgence for his Family, " as to think it a Sin to be angry with th se he ought " to love." I do not mention this Circumstance of Time to swell my Book, or rather to fill up a Sheet of Paper: every one sees it is essential to this Remark; for, if the happy Temper of Atticus appears here to be so very singular, it is chiefly on account of the Number of Years he passed with his Mother and Sister without the least Broil. It is pity the History did not add how he lived with his Wife. He does not boast at all on This Head (11); and this may create some Suspicion, that his Conduct, or Patience, could not signalize themselves so much in This respect, as towards his Mother and Sister, who perhaps, on their Part, contributed very much to That good Agreement, and did not oblige him to make great Advances. The Matter, on this Supposition, would lose much of it's Singularity with regard to Atticus, but, taking it all together, it would not be less, but rather more extraordinary. See, in the following Remark, that Atticus kept always in Favour with an Uncle, whose Temper was so humoursome, that no other of his Relations were able to bear it. Let us return to the Wife of Atticus. It is strange, that Cornelius Nepos should say nothing of her, neither good nor bad, and that we must have recourse to other Authors to know that her Name was Pilia, and that Atticus married her in the Year of Rome 697 (12). He was far from young; he was Fifty three Years of Age. He had made no great haste to inlist himself in That Warfare. We may collect from one of Cicero's Letters (13), that Pilia loved her Husband; for, as to That other Passage (14), from which some have concluded, that she had Thoughts of a Divorce, it is plain it ought to be read other-ways, and only signifies, that she was threatned with the Palsy. Mr Sarazin affirms, in his Translation of the Life of Pomponius Atticus, that the City of Athens erected also Statues to Pilia, the Wife of Atticus: but it is evident, he made use of a bad Edition; for you must not read Pilia in Cornelius Nepos. Atticus's Marriage was too long after his Return from Athens, for the Athenians to think of erecting Statues to his Wife. Would Cornelius Nepos have been so senseless as to speak of the Statues of Pilia, without saying who she was? The Family, Pilia, makes no manner of Figure in the ancient History of Rome.

(10) Corn. Nepos, in Vita Attici, cap. 27.

(11) See the beginning of the foregoing Citation.

(12) See the third Epistle of Cicero ad Quintum Fratrem, lib. 2. and Fabricius in the Life of Cicero ad annum urbis 697.

(13) The 12th of the 4th Book to Atticus.

(14) Of the 7th Epistle of the 16th Book to Atticus.

[D] The great Fortunes, which fell to him by Succession.] Quintus Cæcilius was his Uncle by the Mother's Side. He was a Man of an insupportable Temper; but Atticus humoured This perverse Spirit of his so well, that he kept in his Favour, without any Interruption, to the very last. He found his Account in this Compliance; for Cæcilius made him his principal Heir, and left him near a Million of Money. Atticus's own Patrimony was about Two Hundred Thousand Livres. In Sestertio vicies quod a Patre acceperat (15). In short, Cæcilius having adopted his Nephew by Will, it became necessary for Atticus to take upon him from that time the Name of Q. Cæcilius Pomponius Atticus. Let us see what Cornelius Nepos says of the peevish Temper of this Uncle. " Habebat avunculum Q. Cæcilium equitem Roma- " num, familiarem L. Luculli (16), divitem, difficil- " limâ naturâ, cujus sic asperitatem veritus est, ut " quem nemo ferre posset hujus sine offensione ad " summam senectutem retinuerit benevolentiam: quo " facto tulit pietatis fructum: Cæcilius enim moriens " testamento adoptavit eum, hæredemque fecit ex " dodrante. Ex qua hæreditate accepit circiter " centies L L S. (17). —— He had an Uncle by " the Mother's Side, named Q. Cæcilius, a Roman " Knight, an intimate Friend of L. Lucullus, rich, " and extreamly ill-natured, whose Temper he was so " fearful of offending, that, bough no Body else could " please him, he kept in Favour with him to the last; " by which means he reaped the Fruit of his Dutifull- " ness; for Cæcilius, at his Death, adopted him in " his Will, and made him his Heir to three Parts in Four. " He made of this Inheritance about 100000 Sesterces.

(15) Corn. Nepos, c. 14.

(16) Valer. Maximus, lib. 7. c. 8. n. 6. says, that Cæcilius had promised to make Lucullus his Heir, and that, having deceived him, his Corpse was dragged through the Streets.

(17) Corn. Nepos, c. 5.

[E] He was very much beloved by the Athenians.] He had carried thither the best part of his Effects, and, both by Loans and Presents, very much obliged the City of Athens (18). They were not ungrateful, but complimented him with all sorts of public Honours. He refused the making him a Citizen, and the erecting a Statue to him; but, after his Departure, they erected several. There was a very great Concern shewn at his leaving them. " Quo factum est " ut huic omnes honores quos possunt publice habe- " rent, civemque facere studerent, quo beneficio ille " uti noluit: quod nonnulli interpretantur, amitti " civitatem Romanam, alia adscita. Quamdiu affuit " ne qua sibi statua poneretur restitit, absens prohi- " bere non potuit —— Tranquillatis autem rebus " Romanis remigravit Romam —— Quem diem sic " universa civitas Athenienſium prosecuta est, ut la- " crymis desiderii futuri dolorem indicaret (19). — " For which reason, they studied to heap on him all " possible public Honours, and were desirous of making " him a Citizen; but he declined This Favour; some " think, because this new Freedom would have taken " away his Privileges, as a Citizen of Rome. Whilst he " continued there, he would never suffer any Statue " to be erected to him, but, when he went away, he " could not prevent it — The Distractions of his Coun- " try being composed, he returned to Rome — Which " Day the whole City of Athens did so strictly ob- " serve, that they expressed, by their Tears, the great- " ness of the Loss they were going to suffer." He spoke the Greek Language so perfectly well, that one would have taken him for an Athenian (20). Some think his Sirname of Atticus came from thence. Volaterran affirms it, as a thing related by Cornelius Nepos (21); but he is mistaken. The Abbot St Real says, that Atticus called himself so, because he was very learned in Greek, and lived most of his Time at Athens (22). He has been told, that he ought only to have said, on account of the long Stay he made at Athens, in his Youth; since it is certain, that he lived most part of his Life in Italy, or Epirus, where he had an Estate, as appears by his Life, written by Cornelius Nepos, and by several Passages in Cicero's Letters (23).

(18) Ibid. cap. 2.

(19) Ibid. cap. 3, & 4.

(20) Ibid. cap. 4.

(21) Volaterr. lib. 18 pag. 666.

(22) Remarks on Cicero's Epistles to Atticus, in the Bibliotheque Universelle, Tom. 20. pag. 78.

(23) The Author of Bibliotheque Universelle, ibid.

Digitized by Google

his Friends [F]. He never had a Thought of advancing himſelf above the Rank he was born to, which was That of a Knight. He might have attained to great Offices in the Republic; but he choſe rather to decline them [G]; becauſe, in the Corruption, which then reigned, he could neither obtain, nor exerciſe, them legally. He never had a Law-Suit in his Life. He never impeached any one, nor ſeconded Thoſe, who did. The Emperor Auguſtus was related to him; the manner of the Relation was thus. Atticus had married his Daughter to Agrippa. That Marriage produced a Daughter, whom Auguſtus betrothed to Tiberius almoſt as ſoon as ſhe was born (b). I believe the Wife of Atticus was of no great Family (c). He deſerves a Place in the Liſt of good Authors [H]. He attained to the Age of Seventy ſeven Years almoſt without knowing what Sickneſs was. He had lived for Thirty Years together without any occaſion for Phyſic. At laſt he fell ſick, and, for Three Months, his Diſtemper was but ſlight, but, afterwards, his Pains were exceſſive. He ſent for his Son-in-Law Agrippa, and two other Perſons, and declared to them, he was reſolved to put an end to his Life by abſtaining from all Nouriſhment; he deſired them to approve of his Reſolution, and not oppoſe it, ſince all their Exhortations would be in vain. Agrippa, however, employed both his Prayers, and his Tears, to prevail with him to live, but all to no purpoſe. After two Days Abſtinence, his Fever ceaſed, and his Pains were much abated; yet Atticus perſiſted in his Reſolution, and died three Days after (d). This was in the Year of Rome 721. He is fallen, in our Times, into (b) Nata eſt Attico neptis ex Agrippa cui virginem filiam collocarat. Hanc Cæſar vix annicuiam Tiberio Claudio Neroni Druſilla nato privigno ſuo deſponſit.---- Atticus had a Granddaughter, by Agrippa, who had married his Daughter. Cæſar, when ſhe was ſcarce a Year old, betrothed her to Tiberius Claudius Nero, who was born of Druſilla, by his Son in-law. Corn. Nepos in Vita Attici, cap. 19.

(c) See Remark [C] towards the end.

(d) Ex Cornelio Nepote, in Vita Pomponii Attici.

[F] He had always ſomething read at his Table, even when he entertained his Friends.] If he had kept an open Table for all ſorts of Gueſts, this Cuſtom of Reading would have been very diſagreeable to a great many People; but he invited none, but thoſe of his own Taſte. " Nemo in convivio ejus aliud " acroama audivit quam anagnoſten---- Neque un- " quam ſine aliqua lectione apud eum cœnatum eſt, " ut non minus animo quam ventre convivæ delecta- " rentur, namque eos vocabat quorum mores a ſuis " non abhorrerent (24). - - - - - - - - - No Body heard " any other Muſic at his Entertainments, but Reading. " Nor did any Body eat with him, without ſomething " being read; ſo that his Company were entertained in " their Minds, as well as Bodies; for he invited thoſe " only, who were of the ſame Taſte with himſelf."

(24) Corn. Nepos, c. 14.

[G] He might have attained to great Offices in the Republic, but he choſe rather to decline them.] This was certainly the ſtrongeſt Proof he gave of his Virtue. There was no attaining to Offices in thoſe Times but by ill Practices; nor could they be exerciſed according to the Rules of Juſtice, and for the public Good, without running the Hazard of ſome Violence from a great many ill Perſons. He choſe therefore rather to live in a private Condition, than to purchaſe Dignities at the Price of his Conſcience. How good and rare is this! If all the World were of Atticus's Mind, there would be Room to apprehend a State of Anarchy; but we may ſleep very quietly on this Score: there never will be wanting a Number of Perſons, corrupt enough to accept of Employments, upon any ſort of diſhoneſt Terms, greater than the Number of Places to beſtow on them. I have been told, that a Perſon, who had travelled all his Life-time, anſwered thoſe, who made a Jeſt of his unſettled Temper, that he would willingly have fixt in ſome Town or other, if he could but have found one, where Power and Credit were in the Hands of honeſt Men. Another Traveller, happening once to declare, that he would ramble no longer, than till he could meet with a Town governed by Men of the moſt Merit, was anſwered, YOU WILL DIE THEN IN YOUR TRAVELS. " Honores non petiit cum ei paterent propter vel gratiam vel dignitatem; quod neque peti " more majorum, neque capi poſſent conſervatis legi- " bus, in tam effuſis ambitus largitionibus, neque geri " è republica ſine periculo, corruptis civitatis mori- " bus (25). ----- He declined all public Offices, tho' " both his Intereſt and Authority were great enough to " have got him any Thing: Becauſe they could neither " be applied for, according to the Cuſtom of his An- " ceſtors, nor procured, without breaking through the " Laws by exceſſive Briberies, nor diſcharged with " Integrity, even under the Sanction of the Govern- " ment, without very great Danger, from ſo general " a Degree of Corruption." Compare with this what was ſaid, above, in the Article of ALEXANDER AB ALEXANDRO.

(25) Ibid. cap 6.

[H] Atticus deſerves a Place in the Liſt of good Authors.] He compoſed Annals, wherein he obſerved an exact Chronology, and cleared the Genealogies of the Roman Magiſtrates in the plaineſt Manner that could be. This Work comprehended ſeven Centuries; from whence we may eaſily conjecture, that it principally concerned the Roman Hiſtory. I ſay principally; for no doubt but the Author, in his Chronological Series, gave an abſtracted Account of ſeveral other States. Cicero puts it beyond all Queſtion: " Cognoſcat etiam, ſays he (26), rerum geſtarum & " memoriæ veteris ordinem maxime ſcilicet noſtræ " civitatis: ſed & imperioſorum populorum & regum " illuſtrium: quem laborem nobis Attici noſtri levavit " labor, qui conſervatis notatiſque temporibus nihil " cum illuſtre prætermitteret, annorum ſeptingento- " rum memoriam uno libro colligavit. ----- Let him " be well acquainted with the Chronological Order of " the Cuſtoms and Actions of Antiquity, chiefly of our " own City, but alſo of other conſiderable States, and " illuſtrious Princes: which will now become an eaſier " Work, by the Pains our Atticus has taken, who, by " an exact Obſervation and Diſtinction of Times, with- " out omitting any Thing remarkable, has included an " Account of Seven hundred Years in one Book. Theſe Annals ſeem to have contained a kind of Chronological Tables. " Habuit iſte liber Attici & nova " mihi quidem multa, & eam utilitatem quam requi- " rebam, ut explicatis ordinibus temporum uno in " conſpectu omnia viderem (27). - - - - This Book of " Atticus had indeed many Things new to me, and " ſuch a Convenience as pleaſed me, by digeſting the " Order of Times in ſuch a manner, that I could ſee " every thing at one View." I have already ſaid, that Atticus obſerved the Genealogical Order very exactly: I ſhall add here, that he wrote particular Treatiſes on ſome Families, and compoſed Inſcriptions, of four or five Verſes each, to be placed under the Portraitures of eminent Perſons; and that his Talent was much admired in expreſſing ſo many things in ſo few Words. " Attigit quoque Poëticen, credimus, ne ejus expers " eſſet ſuavitatis. Namque verſibus qui honore rerum- " que geſtarum amplitudine cæteros Romani populi " præſtiterunt expoſuit, ita ut ſingulorum imaginibus " facta magiſtratuſque eorum non amplius quaternis " quiniſque verſibus deſcripſerit, quod vix credendum " ſit tantas res tam breviter potuiſſe declarari (28). --- " Moris etiam majorum ſummus imitator fuit anti- " quitatiſque amator, quam adeo diligenter habuit " cognitam, ut eam totam in eo volumine expoſuerit, " quo magiſtratus ornavit. Nulla enim lex, neque " pax, neque bellum, neque res illuſtris eſt populi " Romani, quæ non in eo ſuo tempore ſit notata, &, " quod difficillimum fuit, ſic familiarum originem " ſubtexuit, ut ex eo clarorum virorum propagines " poſſimus cognoſcere. Fecit hoc idem ſeparatim in " aliis libris, ut M. Bruti rogatu Juniam familiam a " ſtirpe ad hanc ætatem ordine enumeravit, notans " qui a quo ortus, quos honores, quibuſque tempori- " bus cepiſſet. Pari modo Marcelli Claudii de Mar- " cellorum; Scipionis Cornelii, & Fabii Maximi de " Corneliorum, & Fabiorum, & Æmiliorum quoque, " quibus libris nihil poteſt eſſe dulcius eis qui aliquam " cupiditatem habent notitiæ clarorum virorum (29). " —— He attempted ſomething alſo in Poetry; very " likely, that he might be no Stranger to it's Harmony.

(26) Cicero in Oratore.

(27) Idem, in Bruto.

(28) Corn. Nepos, cap. 18.

(29) Ibid.

" For

Digitized by Google

into the Hands of a very ſevere Cenſor [I]; but he has not been left undefended againſt the Rigour of theſe Cenſures [K]. We have ſomething to correct in Mr Moreri's Dictionary [L]. I forgot to mention, that Atticus was of the Sect of Epicurus (e), and that we may defy the moſt zealous Defenders of That Doctrine, which holds it impoſſible, that Men, without the Belief of a Providence, can equal in Virtue Thoſe, who acknowledge a Jupiter, a Neptune &c. to ſhew a better Man, than Atticus, among the greateſt Bigots of Paganiſm.

(e) See Gaſſendus de Vita Epicuri, lib. 2. cap. 6.

" For he deſcribed, in no more than four or five Verſes, " under each Picture of ſome of the moſt famous Romans, all the Offices and Actions, for which they had " been eminent, and expreſſed ſo many Things in ſo " few Words, as is ſcarce to be credited. —— He was " alſo a ſtrict Imitator of the Cuſtoms of his Anceſtors, " and a Lover of Antiquity, which he ſo perfectly un- " derſtood, that he wrote a full Account of it, in the " ſame Work, which he compoſed concerning Magi- " ſtrates. For there is not a Law, a War, a Peace, or " any one remarkable Thing relating to the Roman " People, which he did not mention in it, together " with the Time when each happened. And, what was " moſt difficult of all, he has ſo nicely traced the " Original of Families, that it is eaſy to ſee from " what Stocks our great Men are derived. He com- " poſed particular Pedigrees in other Books; one for " the Junian Family, at the Requeſt of M. Brutus, " from the very Beginning of it, in exact Order, down " to our Times, remarking every Branch, from whence " ſprung, what Honours, and in what Times, each " had enjoyed. In like manner, he obliged Marcellus " Claudius with the Genealogy of the Marcelli, and " Scipio Cornelius, and Fabius Maximus, with " thoſe of the Cornelii, the Fabii, and the Æmilii; " which Book, afford the greateſt Pleaſure imagi- " nable to ſuch as are curious to know the Particu- " culars concerning eminent Men." It is pity theſe Books are loſt; they would clear up a very great Number of Difficulties. I ſay nothing of the Hiſtory of Cicero's Conſulſhip, which Atticus had wrote in the Greek Language (30), and in a plain Style (31).

(30) Ibid.

(31) Cicero, Epiſt. 1. lib. 2. ad Atticum.

[I] He is fallen, in our Times, into the Hands of a very ſevere Cenſor.] It is the Abbot of St Real. See the Book entitled Ceſarion, ou Entretiens divers. It was printed at the Hague, from the Paris Edition in 1685. It is divided into four Days, the third of which contains a very ſevere Cenſure on Pomponius Atticus, and his Panegyriſt Cornelius Nepos. I have been informed, that the Author of This Work perſiſted in the ſame Sentiments, and that it appears by the Remarks he has added to the Tranſlation of the two firſt Books of Cicero's Letters to Atticus. That Tranſlation is mentioned in a Book very well known (32), and I have always wondered, that the Bookſellers of Amſterdam did not counterfeit it; for I don't queſtion but much may be learned by reading This Work.

(32) In the 2*th Tome of the* Bibliotheque Univerſelle, p. 73. See alſo the Journal des Scavans for Febr. 12, 1691.

[K] But he has not been left undefended againſt the Rigour of theſe Cenſures.] In the Year of 1686, there appeared a little Book in Holland, entitled, Le retour des pieces choiſies, ou bigarrures curieuſes, which, amongſt other Things, contains an Apology for Pomponius Atticus againſt the Attacks of Ceſarion. The Author of the Apology conceals his Name; but it is no Secret, that it was the late Mr Reinſſant, his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Cabinet-keeper of Medals. The News from the Republic of Letters (33) enlarged on this Piece of Mr Reinſſant's, in ſuch a manner as was not pleaſing to the Abbot of St Real.

(33) Of Dec. 1686. Artic. 4. p. 1405.

[L] We have ſomething to correct in Mr Moreri's Dictionary.] I. It is falſe, that Cicero married Atticus's Siſter. It was Cicero's Brother, who married her. II. He ought not to have mentioned the Ties of Friendſhip, occaſioned by This Marriage; ſince Cornelius Nepos obſerves very particularly, that Atticus had more kindneſs for Cicero, than for his Brother-in-law Quintus Cicero. " Erat nup- " ta ſoror Attici Q. Tullio Ciceroni, eaſque nup- " tias M. Cicero conciliarat, cum quo à condiſcipu- " latu vivebat conjunctiſſime, multo etiam familiarius, " quam cum Quinto, ut judicari poſſit plus in ami- " citia valere ſimilitudinem morum quam affinita- " tem (34). ------ Atticus's Siſter was married to " Q. Tullius Cicero; the Match was made by M. Ci- " cero, with whom he had lived in the greateſt Inti- " macy from the Time of their being Schoolfellows, and " much more familiarily, than even now with Quintus; " whence we may judge, that Friendſhip is not ſo much " governed by nearneſs of Relation, as by Similitude " of Manners." Pomponia, the Siſter of Atticus, did not always live well with her Husband (35); ſo that ſhe was not very fit to tie the Knot of Friendſhip between her Husband, and Brother. III. Cicero did not dedicate a Volume of his Letters to Atticus; it ſhould have been ſaid, that he kept a continual Correſpondence with him by Letters, and that we have a Collection of the Letters, he wrote to him, divided into ſixteen Book. Cornelius Nepos mentions it (36), and ſays, that they comprehend the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, and, in ſome ſort, a Prophecy of what was to follow. " Ut nihil in iis non appa- " reat, & facile exiſtimari poſſit prudentiam quo- " dammodo eſſe divinationem. Non enim Cicero " ea ſolum quæ vivo ſe acciderunt futura prædixit, " ſed etiam quæ nunc uſu veniunt cecinit ut vates. " —That nothing was omitted in them, and it may be " truly ſaid, that his Judgment was, in ſome ſort, " prophetical; for Cicero, like a true Prophet, did " not only foretel what would happen in his own Time, " but alſo what is now come to paſs in ours." IV. It is carrying the Point too far, to ſay, That Atticus had no other Servants, but ſuch as were fit to read to him. It was ſufficient to have ſaid, that he had ſeveral ingenious Domeſtics, who could read, and write, very well, and bind Books; and that every one of his Footmen could do This (37). Cornelius Nepos ſays no more of it; Who, therefore, in the XVth Century, would take upon him, to make twenty times as much of it? Has he not expreſsly obſerved, that, beſides his Domeſtics, who might be Readers, and Librarians (38), Atticus had others, all very well inſtructed, and born, and bred, in his Houſe? " In ea " (familia) erant pueri literatiſſimi, anagnoſtæ op- " timi, & plurimi librarii, ut ne pediſſequus quidem " quiſquam eſſet qui non utrumque horum pulchre " facere poſſet. Pari modo ARTIFICES CETERI " quos cultus domeſticus deſiderat apprime boni. " Neque tamen horum quemquam, niſi domi natum " domique factum, habuit (39). —— He had, in his " Family, very learned Youths, excellent Readers, " and many of them Librarians, and every one of his " Lackeys had both theſe Qualifications. He had, " alſo, OTHER ARTIFICERS, moſt skillful in " their kinds, for all domeſtic Uſes; and every one " of them born, and educated, in his Houſe." The " firſt, and third, of theſe four Miſtakes, are not in the Holland Edition.

(34) Corn. Nepos, c. 5.

(35) See Cicero's Epiſt. to Atticus, l. 5. Epiſt. 1.

(36) Cap. 16.

(37) We find the Names of ſome of theſe Domeſtics of Atticus, in the Epiſtles Cicero wrote to him.

(38) This Word means both Perſons tranſcribing, and making up of Books, or binding them, according to the manner of thoſe Times.

(39) Corn. Nepos, c. 13.

ATTILA, King of the Huns, ſirnamed the Scourge of God, lived in the Vth Century. He may be reckoned among the greateſt Conquerors, ſince there were but few Provinces in Europe, which did not feel the Weight of his victorious Arms. He would not grant the Emperor Theodoſius a Peace, on any other Condition, than of becoming his Tributary [A]. The Battle, he loſt in Champagne (a), in the Year 451

(a) In Campis Catalaunicis.

[A] He would not grant the Emperor Theodoſius a Peace, on any other Condition, than of becoming his Tributary.] According to the rodomontado Maxim, That we ought to give Things an honourable Name, what the Emperor was obliged to pay, every Year, to Attila, was not called a Tribute, but a Penſion. Theſe are the Words of a modern Author. " He " forced the Emperor Theodoſius, the younger, ſhame- " fully to beg a Peace of him; neither could he obtain " it, without buying it, by paying him down Six thou- " ſand

Digitized by Google

451, did not weaken him to such a degree, but that he soon found himself in a Condition to proceed to ravage Italy; and, if the Prayers of Pope Leo had not stopped him, he would infallibly have taken the City of Rome. We must not believe what is reported of the Apparition of an old Man standing with a naked Sword in his Hand by St Leo's side, and threatning Attila. This King of the Huns was of a small Stature (b); but That did not hinder his striking a Terror into the most couragious, by his lofty Carriage and fierce Countenance. He knew very well how to join Craft with Force [B]. Superstition was one part of his Politics [C]. He was an artful, subtle, Dissembler, wise in Council, and daring in Execution, cruel to his Enemies, but merciful enough to those, who submitted to him in the Posture of Supplicants. He is also said to have made it a Point of Honour, to keep his Faith inviolably with those, whom he had once received into his Protection (c). He would not suffer extravagant Flatterers (d). The most common Opinion about the Manner of his Death is, that he was suffocated, by a Bleeding at the Nose, on his Wedding Night [D]. We shall relate in another Place (e), how greatly he was courted by (b) Maimbourg Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 5. ex Jornande, cap. 25. & à Paulo Diacono in Miscell. lib. 15.

(c) Maimb. ubi supra. See Remark [E].

(d) See the Article MARULLUS of Calabria.

(e) In the Article HONORIA.

" sand Pound Weight of Gold *, and obliging himself to pay him One thousand more every Year †: So that the Emperor of the East, whatever Recourse he had to the specious Title of Pension, to save his Honour, became Tributary to the Huns (1)." The same Author relates, that " Attila, having seen a Picture, in the Palace of Milan, which represented an Emperor on his Throne, with the Scythians, in Chains, at his Feet, ordered it to be taken away, and another put in it's Place, wherein he himself was drawn, sitting on a Throne, surrounded with Emperors, loaden with Bags of Gold and Silver, which they emptied at his Feet, in a very submissive Posture; intending to shew thereby, that, as he had obliged Theodosius to pay him Tribute seven or eight Years before, he would force the Emperor Valentinian to do the same, to save his Life, and the miserable Remains of his Empire (2)."

* Six Hundred Seventy eight Thousand Crowns.

† One Hundred thirteen Thousand Crowns

(1) Maimbourg Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 4. ex Paulo Diacono in Miscell. lib. 15.

(2) Maimb. Histoire de St Leon, lib. 3. pag. 220. He cites Suidas.

[B] He knew very well how to join Craft with Force.] This appears by the Intrigue, which he managed in his Expedition against the Gauls. He endeavoured to disunite the Romans, commanded by Aëtius, from the Visigoths, under their King Theodoric. For this Purpose he sent Word to the Emperor Valentinian, that he had no Thoughts of committing any Acts of Hostility against the Subjects of the Empire, that he only intended to chastise the Francs, and the Visigoths, whereof the former had been so audacious as to invade the Territories of the Empire, and the latter were only Slaves to Valentinian. At the same time he let Theodoric understand, that he had made the King of the Vandals believe, that he came into Gaul against the Visigoths: but, that it was only a Pretence to deceive the Emperor; that his true Design was to divide the Empire, between the Huns, and the Visigoths, and that he would fall upon Italy, if Theodoric would attack the Gauls (3). Valentinian and Theodoric easily discovered this Snare, and jointly repulsed This crafty Conqueror. " Homo subtilis, " antequam bella gereret, arte pugnabat, cætera epistolas blandimentis oppleverat, studens fidem adhibere mendacio (4). —— An artful Man, before " he be engaged in a War, he fought with the Weapons " of Policy, he filled his Letters with Compliments, " the better to cover his Dissimulation."

(3) Cordemoi, Hist. de France, Tom. 1. pag. 116. ex Jornande. See also Maimb. Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 9.

(4) Jornandes de reb. Goth.

[C] Superstition was one Part of his Politics.] " He found means to possess the Minds of his Soldiers with a superstitious Belief, that he had something in him divine, on which his good Fortune depended; for, whether he believed it himself, or rather only pretended so, he made them believe, he had found the Scymitar of Mars, who was worshipped by That People, and that the Fates had promised the Empire of the World to Him, who should be possessed of That fatal Sword (5)." This is one of the most prevailing Stratagems, that a General of an Army can make use of, to manage, and move, his Soldiers, by the Springs of a mysterious Superstition, which fills them either with Resolution, or Fear, according as the Case requires; with Resolution, when there is occasion for Fighting, and with Fear, when they are inclinable to Mutiny. It is very well for a Soldier to be persuaded, that his General has a Guardian Angel, who delivers him out of all Danger (6). Attila was superstitious himself: " Religioni persuasionibusque de Diis à suâ gente " susceptis usque ad superstitionem addictus (7). —— " Addicted much to Religion, and a Belief in all the " Notions of his Country, concerning the Gods, even to a " Degree of Superstition;" for, a little before the Battle of Chalons, " he consulted his Diviners, who told him, " that, in truth, they could discover nothing advan- " tageous to the Huns, from all their Observations, " but that the Enemy's General would be killed " in the Battle. This was enough to deceive Attila; " he imagined, the Death of Aëtius was certain, " and that, the Obstacle being thus removed, his " Way would be open to the Conquest of the Em- " pire. He did not value the Loss of his Soldiers, " being fully perswaded, he should always have a suffi- " cient Number left, provided he survived That " Great Commander (8)." But he was deceived, for " Aëtius was not so much as wounded in the " Battle."

(5) Maimb. Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 6.

(6) See Remarks [A] and [B] of the Art. de ARISTANDER; and the Article AGRIPPA Remark [P] num. 1. at the end.

(7) Callimachus Experiens, in Attila.

(8) Cordemoi, p. 120. ex Jornande.

[D] He was suffocated, by a Bleeding at the Nose, on his Wedding-Night.] It is reported, that, after Pope Leo's Prayers had prevailed with him to spare the rest of Italy, he returned into Pannonia, laden with the Spoil, and that, though he had a great Number of Concubines, yet he would take one more, who was the Daughter of the King of the Bactrians. She was a perfect Beauty; and he loved her so passionately, that he would honour her with all the Ceremonies of Marriage, and give her the first Rank among his Wives. He kept his Wedding with great Solemnity; but he drank so much, and afterwards heated himself so excessively, in the Embraces of his new Wife, that, being at last fallen asleep, he was taken with a Bleeding at the Nose, which suffocated him. " Ildico puella ei fuit præ cæteris " gratissima, Bactrianorum regis filia mira pulchri- " tudine & incomparabili venustate, cujus amore " succensus eam primariæ uxoris loco habere con- " stituit. Comparatis pro regis dignitate nuptiis, per " omnem intemperantiæ licentiam in conjugali con- " vivio sibi indulsit, Baccho ac Venere corpus ita " ea nocte confecit, ut, inter dormiendum supino cor- " pore, profluvio sanguinis è naribus continuo suf- " focatus interierit (9). —— A Virgin, named Ildico, " charmed him above all the rest, Daughter of the " King of the Bactrians, and an incomparable Beau- " ty, with whom he was so passionately in Love, that " he determined to give her the first Place among " his Wives. The Nuptials being solemnized suitably " to the Royal Dignity, he gave himself up to all " possible Intemperances at his Wedding Feast, and so " inflamed his Body, that Night, with the Excesses " both of Bacchus and Venus, that, as he lay sleep- " ing on his Back, a Bleeding at the Nose suddenly suf- " focated him." This Story would All be probable enough, if they had not added, that Attila was then One hundred and twenty four Years of Age. It is hard to believe, that, at such an Age, a Man should be capable of so great Excesses with the Fair Sex. A Friesland Historian has alledged this Fact, in favour of the Histories of his own Nation, which make their Kings very long lived. He does not borrow it from Bonfinius, but from Michael Ritbius. " His adde testimonium Michaelis Rithii, qui libro " de regibus Hungariæ primo scribit, Atthilam Ita- " lica præda opimisque spoliis onustum in Panno- " niam se recepisse, uxoremque superduxisse regis " Bactrianorum nomine Milzoth, etsi plures alias ha- " beret in matrimonio, eumque cum nuptiales epulas " apparatissime celebrasset, liberius solito crapulatum " in

(9) Bonfinius, Hist. Hungar. Decad. 1. lib. 7. pag. 75.

Digitized by Google

by the Sister of Valentinian III. His Life was written, in the XVth Century, by an Italian Refugee in Poland, named Callimachus Experiens. Others have wrote it since [E].

It is said, he was ambitious of abolishing the Roman Language, and establishing his own in its stead [F].

" in cubiculum se recepisse, erumpenteque è naribus " sanguine in os dormientis extinctum esse, anno " ætatis suæ 124, regni sui 44. Si tantam ætatem " in hoc libidinoso tauro Scythico credimus, cur non " & eamdem Frisiis accidere potuisse censeamus (10)? " —— To these we may add the Testimony of Michael Rithius, who, in his first Book of the Kings of Hungary, says, that Attila, loaden with the Spoils and Wealth of Italy, retired into Pannonia, and married a Wife, named Milzoth, of the Family of the King of the Bactrians, though he had already a great many others; and that, celebrating his Nuptial Entertainment, with the greatest Solemnity, he drank so much harder than usual, that, after he got to bed, a Bleeding at the Nose seized him, as he slept, and suffocated him, in the One hundred and twenty fourth Year of his Age, and the Forty fourth of his Reign. If this lustful Scythian Bull could attain to so great an Age, why might not the same Thing happen in our Country of Friesland?" Lastly, some have related, that Attila did not die in this Manner; but that his new Wife, who did not love him, finding him drunk, and fast asleep, like another Holophernes, stabbed him with a Knife (11).

(10) Bernard. Furmerius Annal. Phrisicor. lib. 3. cap. 9. pag. 243.

(11) Maimb. Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 35. ann. 453, ex Cassiodoro.

[E] Others have wrote it since.] Nicholas Olahus, Archbishop of Strigonium, wrote the Life of Attila, much more fully than Callimachus Experiens. He composed it, while he was Counsellor to Mary of Austria, Queen of Hungary, Governess of the Netherlands. You read, in it, the Speech, which Attila made to his Army, a little before the Battle of Chalons. That Speech is formed on all the common Places, as appears by the marginal Notes. Sambuchus has inserted This Work of Olahus, and That of Callimachus Experiens, in his Edition of Bonfinius. The Sieur Otrokocsi (12), who published a Book on the Origin of the Hungarians, makes ample mention of Attila, chiefly taken from the Relation of Priscus, who had accompanied the Ambassadors sent by Theodosius to This King of the Huns, in the Year 448. He draws divers Observations from That Relation, to shew, that Attila was a very honourable Person; He does not forget the Reproaches, which That Prince caused to be made to the Emperor Theodosius, on the Eunuch Chrysaphius's endeavouring to engage Edecon, Attila's Envoy at the Court of Theodosius, to murder his Master. This Envoy pretended to undertake it for a great Sum of Money, which was promised him; and afterwards discovered all to Attila. The Money was brought, and the Plot proved; the King of the Huns complained of it to Theodosius, in a grand Manner, and with an Air suitable enough to the Character given him, of Easiness to his Suppliants, and Steadiness to his Word. " Supplicibus propè ad " mollitiem facilis, & qui in fidem semel receptos " in perniciem usque suam tueretur (13). —— Easy, (13) Callimac Experiens. " almost to a Degree of Weakness, to his Suppliants, " and a Protector of those, whose Cause he had once " undertaken, even to his own Prejudice."

(12) He is a Protestant Divine, an Hungarian Refugee. His Book, entitled Origines Hungaricæ, was printed at Franeker, in 8vo, in 1693.

[F] It is said, he was ambitious of abolishing the Roman Language, and establishing his own in it's stead.] I have met with this, in a Piece of Alcyonius, where John de Medicis, who was Pope Leo X, is introduced speaking these Words. " In Bibliotheca " nostrâ asservatur Liber incerti autoris Græcè scriptus de reb. à Gotis in Italiâ gestis; in eo memini me " legere Attilam regem post partam victoriam tam " studiosum fuisse Goticæ linguæ propagandæ, ut " edicto sanxerit ne quis linguâ latinâ loqueretur, " Magistrosque insuper è suâ provinciâ acciviisse, " qui Italos Goticam linguam edocerent (14). —— (14) Petrus Alcyonius, in Medice Legato posteriore, fol. h iij, ver. " In our Library is preserved a Book, of an uncertain " Author, written in Greek, concerning the Adventures of the Goths in Italy, in which I remember to " have read, that King Attila, after his Conquest, " was so set upon propagating the Gothic Tongue, " that he prohibited the speaking Latin, by an Edict, " and sent for Masters from his own Country to teach " the Italians this new Language." In the Article of the Emperor CLAUDIUS (15), you will find some Collections, concerning the Zeal of several Princes, for the Language of their Country. (15) Remark [A].

ATTILIUS, a Latin Poet, lived, according to all appearances, in the Beginning of the VIIth Century of Rome. Volcatius Sedigitus has given him the fifth Place among the Ten Comic Poets. Yet he was but a mean Author; his Stile was as hard as Iron (a), not only according to Cicero's Taste, but even according to Licinius's, who had nothing near so delicate an Ear as Cicero. The Translation of Sophocles's Electra by Attilius was good for nothing; and yet Cicero judged it worth the Reading (b). Suetonius observes, that some Passages were taken out of it to be sung at Julius Cæsar's Funeral, because they were applicable to the Murtherers of That Emperor (c). Casaubon and Torrentius have in vain altered That Passage of Suetonius [A]. They have only given an Example of the Confusion, which Criticism may sometimes occasion.

(a) See Remark [I] of the Article ACCIUS, at the beginning.

(b) See the same Remark.

(c) Sueton. in Cæsare, cap. 94.

[A] Casaubon and Torrentius have in vain altered That Passage of Suetonius.] Casaubon, having found, Ex Electra Attilii alia ad similem sententiam, in all the Copies of Suetonius, was, nevertheless, of Opinion, that This Attilii ought to be changed for Attii. " Sic emendavimus, says he, corruptam omnium li- " brorum lectionem Attilii. —— We have thus cor- " rected the corrupt reading of Attilii in all the " Books." Torrentius is not satisfied with putting out Attilius, in favour of Attius; he puts out Electra also, upon Pretence, that Suetonius has mentioned but one Piece of Attius, intituled, Armorum judicium, like That of Pacuvius, which he had but just quoted. The Reason Torrentius gives for his Emendation, is, that the Manuscripts vary extremely, as to the Name of This Poet, but that the greatest Number of them have Accius, or Attius. Thus we see the Critics do not agree on the Readings of the Manuscripts, which is a Matter of Fact. Casaubon confesses, he found Attilius every where. Torrentius says, on the contrary, that he met with Attilius but seldom. Peter Crinitus complained, that the Grammarians had put Accius, instead of Attilius, in That Passage of Suetonius (1). But let us come to something of more Substance. Though Casaubon has not given us his Reason for changing the Text, we need not doubt but it was the same with That of Torrentius. Now Torrentius's Reason is this: He did not remember to have read any thing concerning the Electra of Attius, nor concerning a Poet, whose Name was Attilius. It is not so surprizing, that a learned Man should suffer himself to be hurried away to the Denial of a Fact, upon so weak a Principle as This, as that two such excellent Critics should be ignorant, that Cicero mentions the Electra of Attilius; that he treats Attilius as a very harsh Poet; that Volcatius Sedigitus speaks handsomely of him, in Aulus Gellius; and that Varro quotes him in his fifth and sixth Books of the Latin Tongue (2). I say nothing of Crinitus, nor of Gregory Gyraldus, who have remembred him in the Lives of the Latin Poets, by such Tokens, that the latter has falsely charged Cicero with calling him a Tragic Poet (3). I shall not meddle with the Complaints, which have been made against those, who alter the Reading of Manuscripts, according to the Model of their own Understandings. This would be entering upon That Subject very unseasonably, considering the great Services, which Casaubon has done to the Republic of Learning, by his vast and judicious Erudition. Torrentius's Merit is not of so high a Stamp; but it has it's Value, which I would not in the least depretiate.

(1) P. Crin. de Poet. Lat. c. 14.

(2) See Rufus Var. Lect. lib 3, cap. 3, pag. 370. apud Sueton. Grevii, in Cæsare, cap. 94.

(3) Vossius, de Poët. Lat. pag. 7.

Digitized by Google

ATTIUS (Lucius) a Tragic Poet. See ACCIUS.

AUBERI (N.) Author of an History of Cardinal de Richelieu [A], and of Cardinal Mazarin; see the Journal des Sçavans (a). If some particular Reason does not hinder me, I shall always make use of such a Reference as This, when the Book to be referred to is easily to be met with, and only contains the Life of a Person in a very compendious manner.

(a) For the 14*th of* March, 1695, pag. 135, & seq. of the Holland Edition.

[A] AUBERI, Author of an History of Cardinal de Richelieu.] It was printed at Paris, in Folio, in the Year 1660, with two other Volumes, containing Letters, Instructions, and Memoirs. Anthony Bertier, Bookseller of Paris, who printed them, had collected the Pieces contained in the two latter, with great Care; but he represented to the Queen Mother, That he durst not publish them, without her Majesty's particular Authority and Protection, because there were several Persons in favour again at Court, whose past Conduct not having been regular, and appearing very much to their Disadvantage, in those Memoirs, would certainly occasion him a great deal of Trouble. Go on, said the Queen to him, finish your Work without Fear, and make Vice so much ashamed, that nothing but Virtue may shew it's Face in France (1).

(1) LaCaille, History of Printing, p. 285, 286.

AUBERTIN (Edmund) in Latin Edmundus Albertinus, Minister of the Church of Paris in the XVIIth Century, was a very learned Man. He was born, at Chalons on Marne, in the Year 1595. He was received into the Ministry at the Synod of Charenton, in the Year 1618, and appointed to the Church of Chartres, from whence he was transferred to Paris in the Year 1631 (a). He wrote, properly speaking, only one Book [A], but acquired more Reputation by That one, than other Learned Men have done by printing an hundred Volumes. The Subject of this Work is the Controversy of the Eucharist. It appeared in the Year 1633, under the Title of the Eucharist of the ancient Church. The Agents of the Clergy of France complained of Mr Aubertin before the King's Council [B], and obtained a Warrant to take him into Custody, for having stiled himself Pastor of the Reformed Church of Paris. This Process was dropt; the Time was not yet come to push these sort of Matters too far (b). Whether the merit of the Piece, without the assistance of This Accident, made it sell so well, or that People concluded it must be excellently well done, because the Clergy chose to attack it by way of the Secular Arm; it is certain, the Author had reason to be contented with the Success of his Book [C]. This

(a) Preface of his Book de Eucharistia, written by David Blondel.

(b) I have heard, that, after this, for some Expression be used in the Pulpit, the Court suspended him from preaching for two or three Years.

[A] He wrote, properly speaking, only one Book.] For the Essay, which he published on St Augustin, to shew, that the Sentiments of That Father, concerning the Eucharist, were not conformable to Those of the Church of Rome, but to Those of the Protestants (1), ought only to be looked upon as a small Specimen of the Book, which he published in Folio, in the 1633. I say this after the learned Blondel. "Augustinum quem obtorto collo in partes trahere conabatur Perronius abducenti fortiter extorsit, vindicatumque in Dei castra feliciter reduxit. Hoc insigni virtutis Specimine dato, & tirocinio, ut sic dicam, posito, de patrum universorum causa asserenda serio cogitans, Antiquæ Ecclesiæ Eucharistiam nobis accuratiore studio representavit (2). — He rescued St Austin out of the Hands of Perron, who had forced him into his Service, entirely against his Meaning, and brought him back again to his Post, in the true Cause of God. Having given this glorious Specimen of his Zeal, and, as it were, his first Essay on the Subject he was considering, the Vindication of the Fathers, he has since more fully described the Eucharist of the ancient Church." I never saw the Observations he wrote, out of respect to the Abbot of Marolles, on a Book of Mr de la Milletiere, who pressed him for an Answer to some difficult Questions; but I have been told, it is a Book of Two hundred and Twenty six Pages, which was printed in the Year 1648, concerning the Controversy of the Eucharist. The Abbot of Marolles mentions it in the List of the Presents he had received from Authors.

(1) This Book was printed in the Year 1626; the Title of it is, Conformity of the Belief of the Church with That of St Augustin, on the Sacrament of the Eucharist; it contains above 500 Pages in 8vo.

(2) David. Blondellus, in Præf. libri Albertini de Eucharistiâ.

[B] The Agents of the Clergy of France complained of him before the King's Council.] They represented, in their Petition, that Mr Edmund Aubertin, Minister of the pretended Reformed Religion at Charenton, had caused a Book to be printed, wherein he took upon himself the Title of Pastor of the Reformed Church of Paris, and addressed his Preface to the Faithful of the Reformed Church of the said City of Paris; and that, in the Approbation of This Book, the other Ministers of Charenton stiled themselves Pastors of the Churches of the Isle of France, Champagne, and Country of Chartres; and, in their Subscription, wrote themselves Maistrezat, and Drelincourt, Pastors of the Reformed Churches of Paris, and Dallié (3), Minister of the Holy Gospel of the said Church. The same Agents complained, that, in the Title of the Book, the Cardinals Bellarmine and Du Perron, were called Adversaries of the Church. The King ordered, that Aubertin should be seized, and imprisoned in the Bishop's Fort, if he could be taken; and, if not, that he should be summoned by the public Crier, with a short three Days Warning, that his Effects should be seized, and inventoried, according to the Decree, in order to proceed to his Trial; and that the said Maistrezat, Drelincourt, and Dallié, should be summoned to appear in Person to be heard, and interrogated, on the Facts mentioned in the Petition. His Majesty commanded the Ministers, and others professing the pretended Reformed Religion, to use the Titles given them by the Edicts, and no others, forbidding them to call the Catholics Adversaries of the Church (4). This Arret was given in the King's Privy Council, the fourteenth of July, 1633 (5). The Author of the History of the Edict of Nants informs us (6), that this Affair, which made much Noise to little Purpose, was ended almost as soon as it was begun, and produced, for that time, only some verbal Prohibitions (7). He adds, That the Book was the greater in request for it, and that the Success encouraged the Author to revise and enlarge it, and to treat the Subject compleatly in a large Latin Volume, which did not appear 'till after his Death, and the unsuspected Catholic Doctors never durst confute it Paragraph by Paragraph.

(3) They have mistaken the true Names of Mestrezat and Dallié.

(4) See Remark [B] of the Article BOCHART (Matth) towards the end.

(5) It is in the Collection of the Arrets obtained for the Affairs of the Clergy during the Agency and the Pursuit of the Sieurs, the Abbot de Paimpont, and the Pastor de Mousliers.

[C] He had reason to be contented with the Success of his Book.] We have just now shewn the Judgment passed upon it by the Author of the History of the Edict of Nantes. He only followed That of Mr Daillé, the Son, whose Words are these: "The Name of "Mr Aubertin is immortal, here below, and will live "for ever in That great and incomparable Work of "The Eucharist, which remains, to this Day, superior "to all the Attacks of Those of the other Communion; "not one of whom has dared to oppose him fairly, "or undertake him Face to Face, if we may so say. "Even They, who pass among them for the Pillars "and Heads of the Party, could only give him "some indirect Blows, according to the Rules of this "new

(6) Tome 2, pag. 534.

(7) This ought not to be understood of the Prohibitions contained in the Arrest of the 14*th of* July, 1633.

Digitized by Google

This obliged him to reviſe, enlarge, and complete, it, with ſo much Application, that he ſeems to have made it his whole Buſineſs and Study. He compoſed his new Book in Latin, but had not the Satisfaction to ſee it publiſhed. After his Death, it was printed at Deventer, by the care of David Blondel (c). When this Book began to be forgot, there aroſe a Quarrel between Meſſieurs de Port-Royal, and Mr Claudé, which made known the Name of Aubertin, and the Character of his Work [D], to a great many Perſons, who had never heard of it before, or remembred it no longer. Mr Claudé had a thouſand occaſions to mention the Merit of This Book [E]. Mr Aubertin died at Paris, the fifth of April 1652, aged Fifty ſeven Years. He was expoſed, in his Agonies, to the Inſults of the Curate of St Sulpice [F], and, in ſpight of his drowſineſs, which was one of the principal Symptoms of his Diſtemper, he had his Mind free enough to declare, when That Miſſionary queſtioned him, that he died in a full Belief of the Truths he had always profeſſed. He had had much Acceſs to the Duke de Verneuil, who was at that time Abbot of St Germain des Prez. That Prince would often have him at his Table: He found him very entertaining, of an Univerſal Converſation, well ſkilled in the Culture of Fruit-Trees, and Flowers, in Muſic, &c. One of Mr Aubertin's Sons was Miniſter of Amiens.

(c) In the Year 1654. It is a Folio, with near 1000 Pages in two Columns.

" new Art, which they have invented, and which " the Deſpair of their Cauſe has made them put in " practice, under the ſpecious Name of a Method of " Preſcription (8)." Mr Daillé means here the Divines of Port Royal, who, in their Book of The Perpetuity of the Faith, inſtead of oppoſing Mr Aubertin's whole Work, have only combated his Hiſtory of The Innovation of Faith: Neither have they done this, by oppoſing Facts to Facts, but Arguments only. See the ſecond Chapter of the firſt Book of Mr Claudé's great Anſwer, wherein he ſhews, that the Author of The Perpetuity of the Faith attacked Mr Aubertin's Book in an oblique and indirect manner.

(8) Life of Mr Daillé, pag. 28.

WHAT Judgment the Port Royal makes of Aubertin.

[D] A Quarrel between Meſſieurs de Port Royal, and Mr Claudé, made known the Name of Aubertin, and the Character of his Work] The Author of The Perpetuity of the Faith, out of this great Work of our Miniſter, attempts only to confute the Hiſtory of the Innovation. This gave occaſion enough to produce on the Stage the Name and Work of Aubertin. See here a Paſſage in The Perpetuity of Faith. " Aubertin alſo, perceiving, that there was no way " to maintain a Notion ſo evidently ridiculous (9), " thought it neceſſary to alter The Plan. Obſerve, " then, in what View we ought to conſider, what- " ever this Miniſter, who unhappily ſpent his Life " in ſearching, among the Writings of the Ancients, for " all poſſible Helps towards obſcuring the Truth, has " found moſt plauſible to prove ſo great a Degeneracy " from the ancient Faith, which he is obliged to make " out, that he may not himſelf paſs for an Innova- " tor." Mr Arnauld has treated him much more unhandſomely, though he confeſſes (10), that it is greatly to be wiſhed, that ſome ingenious Perſon would undertake to confute the Books of the new Miniſters, and, amongſt others, That of Aubertin, and Thoſe of Mr Daillé. He maintains, " That Aubertin's Work " is very contemptible; that This Miniſter was a Man " of low Parts; a mean Critic, without any loftineſs " of Style, or Judgment; who had read much, be- " cauſe That required only Eyes and Leiſure, but " who had read without Penetration, or Underſtand- " ing; who does not diſtinguiſh between good " and bad Reaſons; who exclaims every Moment " on the weakeſt Proofs; who has corrupted com- " mon Senſe, by the Habit of repeating always the " ſame Abſurdities, and who, far from having ob- " tained a fair Victory over the School of Rome, " has only diſcovered the Weakneſs of the Calvi- " niſts (11)."

(9) He means the Suppoſition of Blondel, that Tranſubſtantiation was never thought of till a long time after Berenger.

(10) In the Preface of the Perpetuity defended.

(11) Perpetuity defended, lib. 1, cap. 1, p. 5.

[E] Mr Claudé had a thouſand Occaſions to mention the Merit of This Book.] In favour of Thoſe, who, without any other Trouble, than That of reading this Article, deſire to know Mr Aubertin's Plan, I ſhall copy theſe Words of Mr Claudé. " Mr Au- " bertin's whole Book is a Body of Controverſy on " the Subject of the Euchariſt, which is divided " into three Parts. In the firſt, he conſiders it from " the Holy Scriptures, and from Human Reaſoning. " He produces his Paſſages, and his Arguments, he " confutes the Anſwers, which are made to them; he " relates the Paſſages and Arguments of Thoſe of the " Communion of Rome, and anſwers theſe, and al- " moſt every Thing elſe, which has hitherto been ſaid " conſiderable in This Controverſy. In the ſecond, " he examines the Belief of the Church, for the firſt " ſix Centuries, by an exact Diſcuſſion of all the " Paſſages on both ſides; and he makes it appear, " that Tranſubſtantiation, and the Real Preſence, " were unknown Doctrines in all That time. In the " third, he gives the Hiſtory of the Introduction " of Thoſe Doctrines (12)." Mr Claudé had already ſaid, in his firſt Anſwer, that Mr Aubertin, after having examined to the Bottom all the Queſtions concerning the Euchariſt, " By the Holy Scriptures, and " by Reaſoning, and having obtained a fair Victory " over all the Subtilities of the School of Rome, " examines very particularly all the Paſſages of the " Fathers, which have hitherto been produced on this " Subject by both ſides; thus diſcovering, to all the " World, the alteration the Church of Rome has " made, by perpetually comparing the ancient and " new Doctrines: To which he adds the Hiſtory " of the Riſe and Progreſs of Tranſubſtantiation, " and the Real Preſence (13)."

(12) Mr Claudé's Anſwer to Mr Arnauld's Book, lib 1, chap. 2, pag. 25.

[F] He was expoſed, in his Agonies, to the Inſults of the Curate of St Sulpice.] At nine o' Clock in the Evening, he came to the ſick Man's Door with the Bailiff of St Germains. The Mob, to the Number of Forty, followed him with Arms. He knocked at the Door, and pretended to be the Phyſician, in order to gain Admiſſion. As ſoon as the Door was opened, the whole Troop ruſhed violently into the Houſe, affirming, That the ſick Perſon deſired to make his Abjuration before a Prieſt; but that he was hindered, which was the Reaſon of their coming to deliver his Conſcience from ſuch Slavery. The eldeſt Son of the agonizing Miniſter defended the Stairs, as well as he could, but, at laſt, to hinder the Mob from breaking the open Chamber Door, it was agreed, to let the Curate and Bailiff, only, come into the ſick Perſon's Chamber. The Cries and Shoutings of their Guard, recovered Mr Aubertin a little out of his Lethargic State, ſo that he declared, very diſtinctly, his Perſeverance in the Reformed Religion. The Curate and Bailiff went out, and had much ado to make the Mob retire; who, in a little Time after, returned again, crying out, That the Curate and Bailiff had been forced out of the Houſe; and would have broke and plundered it, if two Perſons of Note had not intreated them to deſiſt. " Viciniam non latuit ex- " trema hæc calamitas, quæ pii viri ſpirans adhuc " ſpolium cujuſvis illudere parati injuriæ exponebat. " Lamentabili iſta occaſione infeliciter uſus præfer- " vidi ſed tumultuoſi zeli vir Joannes Jacobus Olle- " rius, Baſilicæ S. Sulpicii Curatus, & Sodalitatis " quæ de propaganda fide dicitur primipilus, &c. (14) " —— The whole Neighbourhood were witneſſes of " this extreme Violence, which expoſed to the inſults " of his Enemies the yet breathing Remains of the pious " Man. He who unhappily made uſe of this melan- " choly Occaſion, was John James Ollerius, a Man of " too hot and tumultuous a Zeal, Curate of the Church " of St Sulpice, and Chief of the Society de propa- " gandâ Fide, &c." Can any one think of this, without remembering That pathetic Expoſtulation of Lucretius?

(13) Claudé's Anſwer to the ſecond Treatiſe, chap. 1.

(14) David Blondellus, Præfat. Libri Alberti- ni de Euchariſtiâ.

PLAN of Mr Aubertin's Book.

Tantum

Tantum Religio potuit ſuadere malorum ?

What can eſcape Religion's hot-brained Zeal ?

Triſtius haud illo monſtrum nec ſævior ulla
Peſtis & ira Deûm Stygiis ſeſe extulit undis (15).

Monſters more fierce offended Heav'n ne'er ſent,
From Hell's Abyſs, for human Puniſhment.
DRYDEN

(15) Virgil. Æn. lib. 3. ver. 214.

It will not ſuffer Men even to die quietly. After having tormented them all their Life-time, it lays Snares for them, even in the Height of a Diſtemper, which robs them of the uſe of their Reaſon. It takes advantage of thoſe Moments, when the Soul is as ſick as the Body, and where Claudicat ingenium, delirat linguaque menſque (16);

Reaſon grows weak, delirious Thought and Speech.

(16) Lucret. l. 3. v. 454.

AUBIGNÉ (d)

I have read, in the Murcure Galant, for the Month of January 1705 (1). That John d'Aubigné was Favourite and Chancellor to Jane d'Albret, Queen of Navarre, and Mother of Henry IV, and in great Favour with That Prince; that he died at Geneva, after having left his Prince, on his renouncing his Religion; that he was then in the Poſts of Admiral of Britany, Governour of Oleron, and Maillezais, and Gentleman of the Bed-chamber to the King; that we have now remaining of his, an Hiſtory of France, much commended, both by his Cotemporaries, and Succeſſors, for it's Impartiality; that it is eſteemed a Maſter-Piece in Hiſtory; and that ſome Authors ſet as great a Value on it, as on The Celebrated Hiſtory of Thuanus; that, according to the Remark of Otto, he let drop his Pen, when he came to the Death of That great Prince (2), and could proceed no farther; that This Hiſtory is in two Volumes in Folio; that it was reviſed, and carefully corrected, by himſelf, and printed on very fine Paper, and with a beautiful Letter, at Maillezais, where he was Governour; that his Son Conſtant, Vice-Roy of the American Iſlands, whither he went in 1643, was Father to Madam Maintenon, and the Count d'Aubigné lately deceaſed, Knight of the King's Orders, and Governour of Berry (3). In the Mercure Galant for the Month of February 1705 (4), the Chriſtian Name of d'Aubigné is corrected, from John to Agrippa. His univerſal Hiſtory is alſo ſaid to be in three Volumes, the laſt being very ſcarce, and printed at London. His Life is ſaid to be written by himſelf with great Exactneſs, and a Manuſcript of it to be at Paris, of his own Hand writing, a very curious Piece. The Marquis de Tigny, Brother to the Biſhop of Noyon, is Head of the eldeſt Branch of the Family of Aubigné. He is Father to the Count d'Aubigné, to whom the King has given the Royal Regiment (5).

(1) Mercure Galant, Jan. 1705, pag. 233, & ſeq.

(2) Henry IV.

(3) He only left a Daughter, who is married to the Duke of Noailles.

(4) Mercure Galant, Febr. 1705, pag. 207.

(5) Ibid. Jan. 1705, p. 232, 233.

AUDEBERT (GERMAIN), Preſident in the Election, or Court, of Aſſeſſors of Subſidies in Orleans, was a Man of much Merit, and a good Latin Poet, in the XVIth Century. He was Alciatus's Diſciple at Bolonia for ſome Years, and returned from Italy ſo well pleaſed with the Country, and the People he there converſed with, that he employed his whole ſkill in Poetry in the Deſcription of Rome, of Venice, and Naples (a). Theſe three Poems have been been inſerted in the firſt Volume of the Deliciæ Poëtarum Gallorum of France. We ſhall ſee, below, in what manner the Venetians rewarded his Deſcription of their City. He compoſed other Poems, which would very probably have been publiſhed, if his Son, who was Counſellor in the Parliament of Britany, had ſurvived him long enough (b). Scævola Sammarthanus has compoſed the Elogium of our Audebert with his uſual Eloquence, He gives him the moſt eſſential Qualities of a good Man. Mr Moreri has faithfully reported the ſubſtance of This Elogy. I queſtion not but he was ignorant of the advantagious Conſequences, which the Proteſtants have drawn from That Chapter of Scævola Sammarthanus, to juſtify one of their moſt famous Miniſters from an horrid Accuſation. We can never ſufficiently deplore Mens Malice or Ignorance, when we remember, that Theodorus Beza was accuſed of an abominable Crime, on ſo frivolous a ground as his Epigram, de ſua in Candidam & Audebertum benevolentiâ. Mr Maimbourg renewed This Accuſation in his Hiſtory of Calviniſm. He is very fully refuted by an examination of the Piece it ſelf, without forgetting to ſtrengthen the Apology from the great Merit of Audebert (c). Theodorus Beza had already made uſe of This Argument [A]. Mr Graverol, the Miniſter, had a deſign of publiſhing the Epitaphs of This illuſtrious Magiſtrate, in a Latin Diſſertation, which he publiſhed about That time (d); but received them too late. He has communicated them to me, and this is a very convenient opportunity to publiſh them [B]. The Hiſtory of our Audebert may be ſeen there, ſuch

(a) Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. 2.

(b) Relictis, præter ea quæ commemoravi Poëmata, ſilvarum aliquot libris, qui lucem expectare poterant ab ejus Hærede, &c. He left, beſides thoſe I have mentioned, ſome Poems called Sylvæ, in ſeveral Books: which we might have expected to have ſeen publiſhed by his Heir, &c. Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. 2.

(c) Jurieu's Apology for the Reformed, Part 1, pag. 141, & ſeq.

(d) De Juvenilibus Theod. Bezæ Poëmatis, Amſtel. 1683. in 8vo.

[A] His great Merit was made uſe of in Juſtification of Beza —— who had already made uſe of This Argument.] It is in his ſecond Apology againſt Claudé de Sainctes. He ſays, that, when he compoſed the Epigram, Audebert was then Advocate in the Parliament of Paris. This is his Latin; " Quid-
" quum eò uſque proveheris ut meam cum honeſtiſſi-
" mo viro, & jam tum in Senatu Pariſienſi Advo-
" cato, quem vocant, nunc vero in civitate Aureli-
" enſi magnâ cum dignitate verſanti, amicitiam &
" familiaritatem ſummam ad neſarium & execrandum
" illud ſcelus transferas, quod à nobis ne nominari
" quidem ſine horrore poteſt, à vobis autem in veſtris
" illis gurguſtiolis, ut omnes norunt, pro ludo &
" joco ducitur, quis te ipſum vir honeſtus non exe-
" cretur (1)? —— What, when you are tranſported
" to ſuch a Pitch, as even to conſtrue my moſt intimate
" Friendſhip and Familiarity, with a Man of the high-
" eſt Honour, at that time Advocate, as the Title is,
" in the Parliament of Paris, and now in great Dig- " nity at Orleans, into ſo wicked and abominable a
" Crime, as I cannot ſo much as mention without " Horror, though it ſerves you in your Cells for
" Jeſt and Sport, muſt you not be deteſted by all
" good Men?"

(1) Beza Opuſcum, Tom. 1, pag. 360.

[B] This is a very convenient Opportunity to publiſh the Epitaphs of Audebert.] Not to let it ſlip therefore, I ſhall inſert here, word for word, what the Perſon above mentioned has wrote, and ſent me.

" I beg your favourable Acceptance of the true
" Copy I ſend you, of the Epitaphs of Germain Au-
" debert, and of his Son. If I had received them
" at the time they were promiſed me, I would have " added them to the ſmall Latin Apology of Theo-
" dorus Beza, which a ſpecial Occaſion obliged me
" to publiſh. Such an authentic Piece alone ſeems
" to me capable of putting an end to the abominable
" Calumny, which has hitherto been charged on the
" the Memory of That excellent and religious Man,
" whatever evaſion may be invented to elude it's
" Force, and you will do a ſignal Piece of Service
" to Truth, by preſenting the Public with This new " Vindication of him.

" Here lies Meſſire Germain Audebert, Native of " This City of Orleans, Prince of the Poets of his " Time, who, for his Virtue only, was ennobled

" with

Digitized by Google

ſuch as an Hiſtorical Dictionary ought to give it. The Sieur Konig has ſplit this Author into Two [C]. Sammarthanus is not the only Perſon, who has wrote This great Man's Elogy [D].

" with all his Poſterity, by the Moſt Chriſtian King " of France and Poland, Henry III, and made a " Knight. And, to crown his Honours, his Ma- " jeſty gave him two Golden Flowers-de-luces, to be " born on a Chief in his Coat of Arms, for their ad- " ditional Ornament. He was alſo made a Knight by " our Holy Father Pope Gregory XIII, and by the " Doge and Republic of Venice; the latter alſo ſent " him into France, by their Embaſſador, the Order " of St Mark. And, notwithſtanding all theſe great " Honours, he continued ſtill to act as an Aſſeſſor " in That Juriſdiction for the ſpace of fifty Years; " ſo great a Lover was he of his Country. In " conſideration of which, his ſaid Majeſty, having " created and appointed a Preſident, and a Lieu- " tenant, in each Court of Subſidies in France, he " exempted the ſaid Meſſire Germain Audebert, and " would have him preſide and preceed both the one " and the other. He wrote three Books of the " City of Venice, one of Rome, one of Naples, and " two of Sylvæ: He died in the Year 1598, the " Twenty fourth of December, aged about eighty " Years.

" And, under the ſame Marble, lies Meſſire Ni- " cholas Audebert, one of the King's Counſellors in " his Court of Parliament of Britany, Son of the " ſaid Meſſire Germain Audebert, a great Imitator of " his Father's Virtues, who died five Days after his Fa- " ther, in the Forty ſecond Year of his Age. May " their Souls reſt among the Bleſſed.

Audebertorum, Germani Patris, & Nicolai filii Tumulus.

Audebertorum ſi quis depingere laudes
Cogitat, ille ſibi nihilo plus explicet, ac ſi
Inſane ſapiens ſolum illuſtrare laboret.
Parcendum verbis igitur, vanoque labori.
Sit dixiſſe ſatis, ſitus hic jacit Audebertus,
Et pater, & gnatus patris cito fata ſecutus.
Nominat hæc quiſquis ſincerâ nomina linguâ
Virtutum & laudum gazas ſimul eruit omnes:
Quas qui neſcierit communis luminis expers
Credatur furvis ſemper viviſſe ſub antris.

The Tomb of the Audeberts, Germain the Father, and Nicholas the Son.

To gild with Verſe the Audeberts Renown,
You might illuminate the Sun as ſoon.
Words are but loſt on ſuch tranſcendent Fame,
Tis all ſumm'd up in one great Word, their Name.
Who this repeat, their Virtues amply praiſe:
Ignorance of This Ignorance itſelf betrays.
The Audeberts lie here, Father and Son, Scarce parted in their Deaths, and in their Tomb
but One.

" Theſe three Epitaphs are found written in Let- " ters of Gold, on a Black Marble, affixed to the " Wall of the Gallery, in the Church-yard of the " Church of the Holy Croſs of Orleans, about ſixty " Paces in the Gallery, as you enter on the Left- " Hand. They have been copied word for word " from the Original, by a Perſon to be depended " on."

Here ends the Copy of Mr Graverol's Letter.

We may conclude, from what is ſaid of the Office of Audebert, in the firſt of theſe Epitaphs, that Mr Jurieu is miſtaken, when he ſays, that Audebert died, after having gone through all the great Offices of the long Robe (2). Sammarthanus might have ſaved him from this Slip; for he expreſsly obſerves, that Audebert was ſo modeſt, that he contented himſelf with an Office very much below his Merit. " Nec ſibi " quidquam, ſays he (3), de ſolitâ modeſtiâ detraxit, " contentus ea quam apud ſuos jamdudum exercebat " vectigalium indictionumque præfecturâ, humili " fortaſſe illâ & obſcurâ, ſi hominis dignitatem reſpi- " cias, ſed quam eo tantum animo ſuſceperat, ne nul- " lam Reipublicæ partem attigiſſe, ſibique ſoli vixiſſe " diceretur. —— Nor did he abate any thing of his " uſual Modeſty; for he contented himſelf to continue " the Office, he had a long Time before enjoyed, of Pre- " ſident in the Court of Aſſeſſors of Taxes and Sub- " ſidies; mean, indeed, and obſcure with regard to his " Dignity, but which he choſe to diſcharge, that he " might not be ſaid to throw up all concern for the " Public Service, and to live for himſelf only."

(2) Jurieu's Apology for the Reformed, Part 1, pag. 145.

(3) Sammarth in Elogiis.

[C] Konig has ſplit this Author into Two.] He gives us one Germanus Audebertus, and one Aurelius Audebertus. For the firſt he refers us to the Hundred and ninty firſt Page of Sammarthanus's Elogies; and he ſays of the ſecond, that he compoſed three Poems in the Year 1603. Scripſit Venetias, Romam, Parthenopen, carmine, An. 1603.—On Venice, Rome, and Naples. This Date is a new Miſtake; ſince Audebert died in the Year 1598. It is true, Thoſe three Poems were printed at Hanaw in 1603; but This was not the firſt Edition. We may ſee, by this, that it is not ſo eaſy to compoſe a Dictionary of Authors, as ſome may think. They, who are ignorant of the Chronology of Editions, and the Difference of Chriſtian Names, or Thoſe of the Country, are very liable to Miſtakes. Germanus is Audebert's Chriſtian Name, and Aurelius is his Name from his Country. What is moſt to be admired is, that Mr Konig refers us to an Author, whom he had not ſeen himſelf: For, if he had taken the Pains to caſt his Eye on the place of Sammarthanus, which he quotes, he would there have ſeen, that it was Germanus Audebertus, who compoſed the three Poems on Venice, Rome, and Naples: Venetias, & Romam, & Parthenopen —— ea carminis majeſtate deſcripſit —— He deſcribed the Cities of Venice, Rome, and Naples, —— in ſuch beautiful Poetry. — When we ſend a Reader to conſult an Author, it is but reaſonable to ſet the Example, and conſult him firſt ourſelves.

[D] Sammarthanus is not the only Perſon, who has wrote Audebert's Elogy.] An Advocate of the Council, who called himſelf in Latin Rodolphus Botereius, has praiſed Audebert magnificently, in his Hiſtory of France (4). He does not forget the Honours, which the Pope, and the Republic of Venice, paid him; but, whereas the Epitaph aſcribes the Honour Audebert, received from the Court of Rome, to Gregory XIII, He attributes it to Gregory XIV. He mentions the Place, where the Ambaſſador of Venice conferred on him the Knighthood of St Mark, and before what concourſe of People. " Gregorius XIV, ac Veneti " illum civitatis jure & equeſtris ordinis dignitate do- " narunt: effuſius Veneti, qui per Oratorem ſuum in " ſuburbano Tybure Gentiliaco, aſſidente ſpectaculo " & convivio longa corona hominum literatiſſimorum, " Audebertum torque aureo Divi Marci inſignive- " runt. —— Gregory XIV, and the Venetians, pre- " ſented him reſpectively with the Privileges of their " City, and the Order of Knighthood. But the Vene- " tians more remarkably, who, by their Ambaſſador at " Gentilly near Paris, at a public Feaſt, and before a " large Aſſembly of learned Men, inveſted Audebert " with the golden Collar of the Order of St Mark."

(4) Botereius, lib. 5, pag 465, & ſeq. ad Ann. 1598.

AUDIGUIER (N. d') Author of ſeveral Books [A], much read, when firſt publiſhed, but now not taken notice of, flouriſhed in the beginning of the Reign of Lewis

[A] Author of ſeveral Books.] He publiſhed The true and ancient Uſage of Duels, which was printed at Paris, by Peter Billain, in 1617. It is a Book of Five hundred thirty two Pages, in 8vo, and deſerves a Place in Libraries. He publiſhed alſo ſome French Poetry, The Amours of Lyſander and Caliſta, Thoſe of Ariſtander, and Cleonice, Flavia, Minerva, &c. Theſe were Romances, which had a great

Digitized by Google

Lewis XIII. The Sieur Sorel, having ſaid, that the Author of Polyæna (a) might one Day produce ſomething better, unleſs he had AUDIGUIRE's ill Fortune, adds, that they both of them fell by the Hands of Thoſe they took to be their Friends (b). "I "believe, ſays he, elſewhere (c), Audiguier was a Man of Wit; but he was more of the "Soldier, than the Scholar, as appears in all the Dedications of his Books, where he "is almoſt always ſpeaking in a military way: They ſay alſo, that, to expreſs his "negligent Air in writing, he one Day ſaid, by way of Bravado (d), that he made his "Pen with his Sword. Some ſay he received this Repartee, that then it was no wonder "he wrote ſo ill; but This is too ſatirical. Undoubtedly This Boaſt has a great deal "of Beauty, and deſerves a Place amongſt the French Apophthegms." D'Audiguier had a Nephew, who paſſed for the Author of the Tranſlation of Stratonice, an Italian Romance; but it was believed, that Malleville was the real Author, and had made him a Preſent of it, as being his particular Friend (e). There was one d'AUDIGUIER, an Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who publiſhed ſome Pleadings (f). I do not know, whether he was the ſame with the Nephew, who was Malleville's Friend; but I am certain, he lived in the XVIIth Century (g); and I believe This Nephew was the Author called Audiguier, junior, and who publiſhed, among other Works, Eromené. From a Paſſage, cited below, I am induced to believe, that our d'Audiguier was killed in the Year 1630 [B].

(a) It is the Title of a Romance, the Author of which calls himſelf Moliere.

(b) Sorel's Remarks on the Berger Extravagant, (Extravagant) Shepherd, Book 13, pag. 403, Edit. of Rouen, by Oſmont, in 1646, in 2 Vols 8vo.

(c) Ibid. pag. 486.

(d) See the Chriſtian Socrates of Balzac, Diſcourſe 10, pag. 263.

(e) Peliſſon, Hiſtoire de l'Academie Franç. pag. 292.

(f) Marolles, Memoires, p. 41.

(g) Marolles, Denombrement des Auteurs, pag. 407.

run (1). He tranſlated into French the Spaniſh Novels of Michael Cervantes. Sorel, in a Work publiſhed a long time after his Berger Extravagant, paſſes this Judgment on our Author. "I do not "think, ſays he, that we ought abſolutely to deſpiſe the Sieur d'Audiguier, Author of the Adventures of Lyſander and Caliſta. Though he had "not much Learning, he wrote in very ſprightly "and clear Style for That Time, as we ſee in "ſeveral Romances, and ſome Letters, and Tranſlations, which he was the Author of. His firſt "Work, which he called the Soldier's Philoſophy, "was a little too much upon the Gaſconade; but "he improved himſelf ſo much by tranſlating Cervantes's Novels, and a Book of Rodriguez, of "Chriſtian Perfection, that we may allow him to be "one of our beſt Tranſlators. His laſt Work, called "The Amours of Ariſtander and Cleonice, was none "of the worſt of his Time (2)."

(1) Note, that Sorel has criticiſed the two firſt, in his Remarks on the Berger Extravagant, chiefly in the 13*th Book of thoſe Remarks.*

(2) Sorel, Bibl. Franç. pag. 261.

[B] From a Paſſage —— I am induced to believe, our d'Audiguier was killed in the Year 1630.] This Paſſage is taken from one of Balzac's Letters, dated the twentieth of Auguſt 1630. D'Audiguier is not named in it, there being nothing but Aſterisks, inſtead of the Perſon's Name; but, however, I make no doubt but it was The Author, whoſe Article I have here given. I take his Character to be very juſtly drawn in the following Words (3). "Yet it is bet- "ter to be innocently merry in the Hotel de Venice, "than to loſe one's Life in the Temple Marſhes, as "poor * * did. I lament him, on account of his "Misfortunes, and manner of Death, and am ſorry he had not time to think of his Salvation, or "to ask Pardon for his Sins. But to imagine, that "one of the great Lights of France is extinguiſhed, "or that we have loſt one of our moſt conſiderable "Men, I knew him too well to conceive ſo high an "Opinion of him. He was truly a Man of Spirit, "and had ſome Flights of Fancy, that would have "paſſed off agreeably enough, if they had not been "printed. But he is not to be mentioned among "our Modern Authors, or in a Collection of the "Poetry of theſe Times. However, he ſet no Value at all on his Courage, and other military Virtues, but piqued himſelf entirely on his Abilities "in ſpeaking and writing. He had ſo great a Conceit of his Merit this way, that, for my endeavouring, one Day, to cure him of this troubleſome "Symptom, he never forgave me to the Day of "his Death."

(3) Balzac's Letters, Book 8, Lett. 42, p. 387, 388, Tom. 1. of Balzac's Works, Edit. of Paris by Joly, 1665, in 2 Vols Folio.

AVENTINE (JOHN), famous for his Annals of Bavaria, flouriſhed in the XVIth Century [A]. He was of mean Birth, the Son of an Inn-keeper of Abenſperg in Bavaria [B]. He ſtudied firſt at Ingolſtadt, and afterwards in the Univerſity of Paris, under Faber Stapulenſis and under Joſſe Clicton. Being returned into Germany, in the Year 1503, he ſtayed ſome time at Vienna, where he taught, in his Chamber, Eloquence and Poetry. He went from thence into Poland, in the Year 1507, where he publickly taught the Greek Grammar at Cracow: He returned into Germany, and paſſed ſome time at Ratiſbon, from whence he went to Ingolſtadt, in the Year 1509, where he explained ſome Books of Cicero. As he was eſteemed a very ingenious Man, he was ſent for to Munich, in the Year 1512, to be Preceptor to Prince Lewis and Prince Erneſt (a). He travelled with the latter of theſe two Princes (b). After this, he undertook to compoſe the Annals of Bavaria [C], and was (a) They were the Sons of Albert the Wiſe, Duke of Bavaria.

(b) See the Hiſtory of Bavaria of the Sieur le Blanc, Tom. 3, pag. 414, 415.

[A] He flouriſhed in the XVIth Century.] He was born in the Year 1466, and died in 1534. Whence Voſſius very juſtly infers, that Genebrard is miſtaken, in making this Hiſtorian flouriſh in the Year 1366 (1). Father Gaultier followed Genebrard's Fault. In the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheca, the Death of Aventine is falſly placed in the Year 1529.

(1) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 655.

(2) Theſe two Names do not ſeem to anſwer each other. There is, perhaps, in one of them ſome Error of the Preſs.

[B] He was of mean Birth, the Son of an Innkeeper of Abenſperg in Bavaria.] Jerom Zieglerus ſays, That this Man's Name was John Thurmair, and that from thence it comes, that Leonard of Eck, in an Epigram, gives the Name of Thurniomarius (2) to John Aventine (3). He adds, That the Name of the Annaliſt of Bavaria was Aventinus, becauſe the ancient Name of Abenſperg was Aventinium. The Emperor Antoninus, continues he, calls it in his Itinerary Abuſina. Mr Bullart did not well underſtand This: The City of Abenſperg, ſays he (4), is ſufficiently celebrated in the Roman Hiſtory, but principally by the Emperor Antoninus, who, in his Itinerary, calls it Aventinium. This Author would find it very difficult to prove, that This City was ſufficiently famous in the Roman Hiſtory. The learned Lambecius believed it would be found to have had no other Name than That of Abuſina, which is given it in the Itinerary of Antoninus; and for this reaſon blames the Author of the Annals, for not having called himſelf Abuſinenſis. Patria ejus fuit Abuſina, unde falsò, cum ſe nominare debuiſſet Abuſinenſem, cognomine uſus eſt AVENTINI (5). But would That Name have founded as agrecably as That of one of the Hills of Rome?

(3) Zieglerus in Vita Joannis Aventini.

(4) Bullart, Academie des Sciences, Tom. 1. p. 147.

(5) Lambec. Comment. Biblioth. Cæſar. lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 471, in Not. Margin. n. 2, apud Magirum Eponymol. pag. 91.

[C] He undertook to compoſe the Annals of Bavaria.] He had a Penſion for it, and began it a little before the Death of the Emperor Maximilian. The Work conſiſts of ſeven Books, and extends to the Year 1533. Voſſius obſerves all theſe Things: "Annales Bojorum "libris 7 reliquit —— Terminatur ejus hiſtoria anno "CIↃ IↃ XXXIII. Extremis Maximiliani temporibus "jam cœperat hiſtoriam ſuam ſcribere auſpiciis & "liberalitate fruens Gulielmi & Ludovici, Bavariæ "ducum,

Digitized by Google

was encouraged to it by the Aſſurances, the Dukes of That Name gave him, of bearing all his Charges. He omitted nothing that might anſwer the Expectation of his Maſters; he conſulted the Records of Germany as carefully as poſſible, and applied himſelf wholly to That Work. He did not loſe his labour; for he acquired by it a great Reputation. In the Year 1529, he received an Affront, which troubled him all the reſt of his Life. He was taken out of his Siſter's Houſe, at Abenſperg, by Force, and impriſoned. No One ever knew the true Reaſon of This Violence, which would have been carried yet farther, if the Duke of Bavaria had not taken this learned Perſon under his Protection. The invincible Melancholy, which poſſeſſed Aventine ever after This Affront, was ſo far from making him reſolve to continue the ſingle Life he had lead to the Sixty fourth Year of his Age, that it rather, perhaps, put him upon Thoughts of Marriage. This new Inclination was not ſo ſtrong, but it gave him Time to conſult the Holy Scriptures, and his Friends, what was beſt for him to do. He met with nothing but Counſels full of Uncertainty [D]; and therefore found it neceſſary to reſolve this Queſtion for himſelf, which he accordingly did in favour of Marriage [E]. There remained nothing more to do, but to ſeek out a Match, which he was ſo imprudent as to leave to a crafty old Woman, who deceived him baſely [F]; for ſhe brought him a Woman of the Country of Suabia, who had three great Imperfections; for ſhe was poor, ugly, and peeviſh; which gave him an opportunity of making many Experiments [G]. After his marriage, he hired a Houſe at " ducum, qui patri ſuo Alberto ſucceſſerunt anno " 1508 (6). —— He left the Annals of the Bavarians " in ſeven Books —— His Hiſtory ends at the Year " 1533. He began it about the latter End of the " Reign of Maximilian, under the Auſpices, and " Generoſity, of William and Lewis, Dukes of Bavaria, " who ſucceeded their Father Albert in 1508." Theſe Annals did not appear before the Year 1554. They were publiſhed by Jerom Zieglerus, Profeſſor of Poetry in the Univerſity of Ingolſtadt: But, as he confeſſes himſelf in the Preface, he left out the Invectives relating to the Clergy, and ſeveral Stories not at all material to the Hiſtory of Bavaria. " Multa ſine dubio emendaſſet (Aventinus,) pleraque " forſitan mutaſſet etiam, ſi per fata licuiſſet —— " Invectivas quaſdam contra Eccleſiaſticas perſonas, " item fabulolas narrationes nihil quidquam ad hiſto- " riam facientes non fraude ſed judicio omiſimus (7). " —— Many Things, without doubt, Aventine himſelf would have corrected, and many, perhaps, entirely changed, had Fate given him Leave —— Some Reflexions upon Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, and alſo fabulous Relations, not at all material to the Hiſtory, I have taken the Liberty, on mature Deliberation, without the leaſt ill deſign, to omit." The Precaution of Zieglerus, and his Sincerity in owning the Mutilations, did not tally together; for this Confeſſion excited the Curioſity of the Proteſtants, and put them upon ſearching for what had been ſuppreſſed; and they ſought ſo diligently for a Manuſcript of Theſe undiſmembered Annals, that at laſt they found it. It was publiſhed at Baſil, in the Year 1580, by the Care of Nicholas Ciſnerus. The Title of This Edition is Johannis Aventini annalium Bojorum libri VII. ex autenticis manuſcriptis judicibus recogniti, reſtituti, auĉti diligentia Nicolai Ciſneri. Coëffeteau could not forbear ſhewing his Anger at the Edition of Ciſnerus. See what he ſays: Aventine is an Author not to be credited in theſe Eccleſiaſtical Matters, having no other aim in his Annals, than to diſhonour the Clergy; and he is particularly exceptionable in the Hiſtory of Gregory VII. —— The Incontinency of his Pen, in theſe Matters, was the Cauſe that Zieglerus, who firſt publiſhed him, retrenched many of his lying Narratives, and Invectives againſt the Clergy, in That Impreſſion; but the Proteſtants, who turn their Ears from the Truth, to liſten to Fables, not being able to bear This Correction, have publiſhed Theſe Annals with all their Filth (8).

(6) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 655.

(7) Zieglerus in Præf. Ciſner, ſhews, in his Preface, that if Aventine had lived, he would not have altered what Zieglerus pretends he would have altered.

(8) Coëffeteau's Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity of the Sieur du Pleſſis, pag. 673.

[A] On the Subject of his Marriage, be met with nothing but Counſels full of Uncertainty.] This is what Mr Bullart relates concerning the Anſwers he received from Books. " Socrates left him in Suſ- " pence, by his Advice formerly given to a young " Man, under the ſame Irreſolution. Marry, or not " marry, you will be ſure to repent either of the one " or the other. He would have needed no other " Council, if he had taken That of Diogenes, who " told young Perſons, that it was too ſoon to marry; and " old ones, that it was too late. Euripides ſoothed " his Inclination, by remarking, That a Wife is a " great Comfort to her Husband, in Sickneſs and Ad- " verſity, but diſcouraged him with ſeveral other " Sentences, he has elſewhere pronounced, againſt " That Sex (9)." This is a meer Romance, and only begging an Opportunity to ſhew a little Common-place Reading; for the Life of Aventine ſays expreſsly, that he examined only ſome Paſſages of Scripture, for and againſt Matrimony, with two of his Friends; Sæpius multos locos ex ſacris literis ſuadentes & diſſuadentes matrimonium protulit.

(9) Bullart, Academie des Sciences, pag. 148.

[E] He concluded for Marriage.] Let us hear the ſame Mr Bullart once more. " Aventine, being " tired with conſulting both the Dead and the " Living, and hoping to find a Wife to his Wiſhes, " cried out on a ſudden; I am old, and have need of " a Companion to aſſiſt and take care of me in the " Infirmity of my Age." So ſays Zeiglerus; Senectutem ſuam omnino conſiderans, tandem prorumpens in hæc verba dixit, " ſenex ſum, mihi miniſtrari opus eſt." His Concluſion was according to the Rule of Logic, Concluſio ſequitur debiliorem partem. — The Concluſion follows the weaker Part. On one ſide, his Books and his Friends adviſed him to deliberate all his Life-time; on the other, his Infirmity counſelled him to marry. By his Concluſion he took the weaker Side. But, had he not two Children in few Years, and This in ſpite of the Uglineſs, and Brawls, of his Devil of a Wife, which could be no Provocatives That way? He was wrong, then, to ſay, he wanted a Wife for the Infirmity of his Age: He had much more need of one for the Remains of his Youth.

[F] Who deceived him baſely.] His Hiſtorian has not done him Juſtice here; for ſee how he expreſſes himſelf: " Duxit Suevam, moroſam mulierem, il- " lepidam, & omnino pauperem, deceptus ab anu " quadam, quæ ei illam ut famulam ſaltem adduxe- " rat. — He married a Suabian, ill natured, diſagree- " able, and poor, a certain old Woman having de- " ceived him, by bringing her to him, at leaſt, for " a Servant." The old Woman did not bring him this Suabian for a Wife, but only for a Servant. Wherein, then, did ſhe deceive him? Zieglerus ought to have told us; for, if we take his Account right, the old Woman is very excuſable, and the old Man not to blame. It is very likely, that, being reſolved to marry, and having loſt too much Time already, conſidering his Age, he took the firſt Female that came to hand, which was his own Servant; and ſo became a fit Subject to increaſe the Liſt of the Collectes, and of all ſuch as have married their Servants (10).

(10) See the Menagiana, pag. 252, and the Remark [E] of the Article BRISEIS.

[G] His Wife gave him an Opportunity of making many Experiments.] " Having ſurmounted all Ob- " ſtacles, and decided all Doubts, by his Marriage, " he had nothing more to do, but to meditate on " his new State of Life, and to conſider which " was the eaſier Task, to bear with the Expence " of a Wife that is poor, or with the Pride of one " that is rich; to be ſecure in an ugly one, that " is a Temptation to no body, or to have the " Trouble of guarding a handſome one, that is a " Temptation to every Body. As his Wife was, " at leaſt, as bad as Socrates's Xantippe, That great " Philoſopher's Example might alſo give him Conſola- " tion at Ratiſbon, and afterwards was called to Ingolſtadt, in 1533, to be Preceptor to the Son of one of the Duke of Bavaria's Counſellors (c). He was deſirous of bringing his Wife thither, and for that purpoſe made a Journey to Ratiſbon in the Chriſtmas Holidays, where he arrived very ill of a Diſtemper, which had ſeized him on the Road by the way, of which he died the Ninth of January 1534, aged Sixty eight Years. He left but one Daughter, who was not above two Months old (d). He was buried there in the Church of St Hemeran, where his Epitaph gives him the Encomium of a good Catholic (e). But the Jeſuits have diſcovered, by their Inquiries, that, under the Maſk, he was a good Lutheran [H]. It is by This, that Thoſe of the Church of Rome endeavour to weaken the force of his Evidence againſt the Conduct of the Popes, and the bad Lives of the Prieſts; for the Proteſtants have quoted Aventine's Annals

Digitized by Google

(c) Leonardus ab Eck.

(d) He had buried a Son.

(e) Taken from its Life, written by Jerom Ziegerus. It is prefixed to his Annals.

(11) Bullart, Acad. des Sciences, pag. 148.

(12) Conringius. de Rebuſpubl. apud Magirum, Eponymol. Critic. pag. 90.

(13) Rara eſt adeo concordia formæ,
Atque pudicitiæ----- So ſeldom Chaſtity and Charms agree. Juv. Sat. 10. ver. 297.
Lis eſt cum formâ magna pudicitiæ. - - - - Beauty and Modeſty are ſtill at ſtrife. Ovid. Ep. 16. v. 288.

(14) Faſtus ineſt pulchris, ſequiturque ſuperbia formam. - - - - Beauty's attended by it's Handmaid, Pride. Ovid. Faſtor. lib. 1, v. 419.

(15) Ita iſtæ ſolent quæ viros ſubſervire ſibi poſtulant dote fretæ ferocis - - - - The Haughtineſs of large Dowries demands nothing leſs than Subjection from the Huſband. Plaut. in Mænech. Act. 5, Sc. 2, ver. 16. See the Electra Plautina of Philip Pareus, at the Word Conjugium.

(16) Magno Periculo cuſtoditur quod multis placet - - - - - - It is very dangerous keeping what ſo many covet. Publius Syrus.

"tion (11)." Certainly This learned German was extremely diſappointed; he thought to get into a ſafe Harbour, and to ſhelter himſelf from a thouſand Inconveniencies, but expoſed himſelf to a continual Storm, even tho' his Wife had been rich and handſome; but ſhe had nothing for her Portion, but Uglineſs and a quarrelſome Diſpoſition. "Aventinus vir doctus, "magni judicii integritatiſque, ſed fortuna admodum "tenui, quam corrupit ulterius ducta uxore rixoſa & "malorum morum, ut cum duobus malis paupertate "& uxore mala ipſi fuerit conflictandum (12). —— "Aventine was a learned Man, of great Judgment and "Integrity, but little Fortune, which was made yet "leſs by a quarrelſome, croſs-grain'd Wife; ſo that he "had two great Evils to contend with, Poverty, and "a ſcolding Wife."

We ſhall, perhaps, do him Juſtice, if we ſuppoſe, that he did not marry this Wife without having ſeriouſly conſidered all Inconveniencies. She could not deceive him as to her Uglineſs, ſo long as he had Eyes. She was brought to him as a Servant, ſo that he could not think her rich. Theſe two Defects, therefore, he could be no Stranger to, her want of Beauty and Fortune. Nor ought this Knowledge to condemn him for Imprudence; for it might promiſe to exempt him from a thouſand Inconveniencies. As he had read much, he knew the general Maxims of the Ancients, on the Diſcord between Beauty and Chaſtity (13), and on the Pride, which attends Beauties (14), but perfectly poſſeſſes Fortunes (15). Theſe Maxims are taught in the College, and there are a thouſand occaſions to apply them every Day; which makes them remain ſtrongly imprinted in the Memory, and This increaſes the Fear of experiencing the Truth of them, when once we come to run the hazard of them. It is very probable, then, that Aventine conſidered, that by marrying a handſome young Wife, he ſhould expoſe his Forehead to a ſhameful, and very uneaſy Diſgrace. Without doubt he knew, that Beauty did not exclude a very ſincere Reſolution of Chaſtity; but, on the other Side, he imagined, that it makes it very difficult to execute This Reſolution. The Courtſhips, which are almoſt unavoidable in ſuch a Caſe, are of wonderful Force, to conquer the ſtrongeſt of theſe Reſolutions. When he conſidered his Age, he could not but be ſtill more alarmed: His Sixty fourth Year added to his Fears; and, perhaps, he might reflect with himſelf; If theſe things happen where the Wood is yet green, what can be hoped for, where It is quite dry? A young Man is not exempt from This Misfortune, and how ſhould I avoid it, who am old? And yet, as natural as it is to fear theſe real Evils, in the Caſe of an old Husband, who has a handſome young Wife; it is much eaſier to avoid Theſe, than imaginary ones. I mean, that ſuch a Husband has more reaſon to fear the Torments of his own Jealouſy, than the Diſloyalty of his Wife. It happens oftener, that a Man is jealous of his Wife, without a Cauſe, than that ſhe is diſhoneſt, without his ſuſpecting it. There is, then, ſome likelihood, that Aventine was more diſtruſtful of himſelf, than of a handſome Wife, and that he argued with himſelf thus: I grant ſhe may be really chaſte; but am I ſure I ſhall not be ſo weak as to ſuſpect her, when I perceive how agreeable ſhe is to my Friends and Neighbours, and They to her (16). Let my Jealouſy be as ill grounded as one would wiſh, it's Stings and it's Torment will ſtill be the ſame. The ſafeſt Way is to run no Hazard, but marry This Servant, whoſe Homelineſs will make me eaſy; for —— caſta eſt quam nemo rogavit:

The Nymph may be chaſte, that never was try'd.

If ſhe ſhould be ill inclined, where could ſhe find Gallants? Beſides, as ſhe is poor, I ſhall have no reaſon to fear ſhe will be imperious: This will preſerve my Authority, and ſecure me from Noiſe and Contradiction. Do not I know what the ancient Poets have ſaid (17)? If we ſuppoſe he conſidered the Matter thus, we ſhall find him more unfortunate, than imprudent: For, in ſhort, the Reaſons, which determined his Choice, are ſpecious and plauſible; but we muſt, at the ſame time, ſuppoſe, that the third Defect was not known to him, and that his Servant had the Wit to hide her peeviſh, muttering, moroſe, ſcolding Humour. She took care not to diſcover it; for ſhe quickly perceived, that her Maſter was reſolved to marry at any rate, and, without doubt, it was not long before he gave her ſome Intimations, that he would not look for a Wife out of his own Houſe. As it is wrong to judge by the Event, let us not condemn him for Imprudence, becauſe his Marriage was unhappy. The wiſeſt are caught in it Cato was deceived by his own Arguments, in a like Caſe (18). In a Word, two things muſt be known, before we can ſay, that Aventine was imprudent: I. That he did not weigh the Reaſons before mentioned, on both ſides. II. That, by marrying a young, rich, and beautiful Wife, he would not have met with ſo many Vexations, as by marrying his Servant. Theſe are the two Sources of raſh Judgments; Perſons are condemned, without knowing either the ſecret Motives, which, upon due Deliberation, determined them, or what would have happened if they had made a contrary Choice.

[H] The Jeſuits have diſcovered, that, under the Maſk, he was a good Lutheran.] I ſay under the Maſk, for, as he was buried in a Catholic Church, with the uſual Ceremonies, and that the Character of Veræ Religionis amator,—A Lover of the true Religion, is inſerted in his Epitaph, we cannot ſuppoſe, that he had ever declared openly for the Proteſtants, no not at the Point of Death, in That deciſive Moment, which takes away all Pretences for Diſſembling. It is true, alſo, that the Stile of his Hiſtory is altogether Roman Catholic, if Thoſe Places be excepted, where he ſpeaks ſo freely againſt the Tyranny of the Popes, and the Immorality of the Clergy (19). It ought not to be thought ſtrange, then, that Mr Du Pleſſis objects him to Thoſe of the Church of Rome, as an Evidence, who was of their own Religion. Mr Du Pleſſis was ignorant of the ſecret Memoirs, which Father Gretzer had publiſhed. See here a Paſſage of That Jeſuit: "Addit Pleſſæus Invectivæ Aventinianæ hanc clau- "ſulam; hæc quidem licet profeſſione Romanus, plura "forte, ſi licuiſſet, dicturus. Profeſſione Romanus, "hoc eſt Catholicus, non fuit Aventinus, ſed hære- "ticus; cujus criminis ut alia probamenta deeſſent, "id tamen ſatis ſuperque liquerat ex Epiſtolâ Melan- "ſthonis ad Aventinum quam ex ipſo Autographo "recitavi, lib. 2. contra Calvinianum replicatorem, "cap. 19. (20) - - - - - - Pleſſis, to Aventine's Invective, ſubjoins this Clauſe; He has ſaid thus much, "notwithſtanding he was of the Romiſh Perſuaſion, "and probably would have ſaid much more, if he "durſt. Aventine was not of the Romiſh, i. e. Ca- "tholic, Perſuaſion, but an Heretic; this Crime might "be proved upon him, if there were no other Evi- "dence of it, from an Epiſtle of Melancthon to A- "ventine, which I have given from the Original itſelf, "lib. 2, againſt the Calviniſtic Author of the Reply, "chap. 19." Coëffeteau did not know This Circumſtance; nevertheleſs he poſitively aſſerts, that Aventine was an Heretic: He ſays (21), "As for Du "Pleſſis

(17) One of them has ſaid, Sponſam ſine dote non habere loquendi libertatem -- A Wife, without a Portion, has not the Liberty of Speech. And Plautus ſays, in Aulular. Act. 3. Sc. 5, ver. 60.
Quæ indotata eſt ea in poteſtate eſt viri, Dotatæ maſtant & malo & damno viros - - - - She that has no Portion is at the Mercy of her Huſband; but he, that marries a Fortune, muſt be at the Mercy of his Wife.

(18) See Remark [I], of the Article PORCIUS (Marcus).

(19) See Rivetus, in his Anſwer to Coëffeteau, in Behalf of Du Pleſſ. Tom. 2, pag. 167.

(20) Gretſer. in Examine Myſterii Pleſſæani. cap. 45, pag. 354.

(21) Coëffeteau's Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, p. 676.

Digitized by Google

Annals a thousand times, to shew the Disorders of the Church. The other Writings of this Author have very few of them been printed [I]. Mr Moreri has succeeded very indifferently in this Article [K].

" Plessis making Aventine of the Romish Profession, " we will never agree to it: His Language discovers " him, and throughout his Annals he shews how his " Passion transports him against the Holy See. There- " fore, to cut him short, all that they object a- " gainst us, from him, is not worth a Chesnut Leaf, " and I judge him no more worthy of an Answer, " than the Impostor Benno, by whose Memoirs he " wrote the Life of That Pontiff (22)." Aventine has been treated as a Lutheran Author, in the List of prohibited Books; Fromondus, however, does not believe him to have been an Heretic, but only one, who, like Erasmus, speaks too freely against the Irregularities of the Monks. " Liberrimæ enim linguæ (hæreticæ " dicere non ausim, neque puto) & plane Erasmicæ " in Monachorum & Ecclesiasticorum vitia fuit A- " ventinus. Plus etiam nimio favens Schismaticis, & parum integra fide res Rom. Pontificum prodidisse perhibetur, ideoque meruit in classe au- " ctorum cautè legendorum ab Indice expurgatorio " recenseri (23). - - - - - - Aventine was a very free " Declaimer, (a Heretic I dare not say, nor do I " think he was,) and, like Erasmus, lashed the Vices " of the Monks and Clergy. He is also said to have " shewn too much Favour to the Schismatics, and to " have betrayed the Cause of the Popes, through " want of Zeal, and therefore deserved a Place in the " Index Expurgatorius, among the Authors, who " are to be read with Caution." Men of the greatest Memory often forget what others remember commonly enough. I am going to give an Example of it. Conringius had forgot, that They, who published Aventine's Annals at Ingolstadt, had retrenched what did not appear agreeable to the Character of a good Catholic (24). He says (25), " Libri ejus post mor- " tem demum ab ipsis pontificiis Ingolstadii sunt edi- " ti, ut hinc appareat primos saltem editores non im- " probasse quæ ibi reperiuntur. - - - - - - After his " Death, his Books were, at last, published at In- " golstadt, by the Popish Party, which shews, that the " first Editors, at least, found nothing there, but " what they approved of." He confesses, that Aventine held a Correspondence, by Letters, with several Protestants, and with Melanchthon by Name, and that he inclined to their Side, which did not hinder him from dying in the Romish Communion. " Vixit superiori sæculo quando maxima illa sacrorum " mutatio fieret, & multa pontificiæ religionis dog- " mata improbavit. Per literas familiaritatem coluit " cum Protestantium nonnullis, & cum Philippo quo- " que Melanchthone: Reperire tamen non potui re- " liquisse eum penitus Ecclesiam Romanam utut in " Protestantes videatur propensior: Vixit enim & " mortuus est in illa Ecclesia, sepultusque Regino- " burgi in Monasterio S. Emerani ceremoniis pon- " tificiæ Ecclesiæ usitatis (26). - - - - - - He lived in " the last Century, when That great Revolution " happened in Religion, and disapproved of many of " the Papal Doctrines. He corresponded, by Letters, " with several of the Protestants, and particularly " with Philip Melancthon. Yet I could never find, " that he had absolutely renounced the Romish Church, " how much soever he might seem more inclining " towards the Protestants: For he lived, and died, " in That Church, and was buried at Ratisbon, in " the Monastery of St Hemeran, with the usual Ro- " mish Rites and Ceremonies." I observe, that Aventine's Fate may justly be compared with That of Father Paul.

[I] The other Writings of this Author have very few of them been printed.] Vossius observes, that Aventine informs his Readers, in the Two hundred and thirty sixth Page of his Annals (which is the Three hundred and forty fourth in the Edition of 1580) that he had published the History of Oëttingen, a City of Suabia; publicatæ à se historiæ Utinensium meminit (27). Gesner has not mentioned This History. He speaks only of a Grammar, published by Aventine, in the Year 1519, and of a Book concerning the manner of counting on the Fingers, published at Ratisbon, in the Year 1532; to which the Author had subjoined the Summary of a great Work, which only required the Assistance of a Mecænas for it's Publication. This is the Title of the Book, printed in 1532. Numerandi per digitos manusque (quin etiam loquendi) veterum consuetudinis Abacus, sive Explicatio ex Bedâ cum picturis & imaginibus, unà cum capitibus rerum quibus illustrabitur Germania ab Aventino, modo contingat benignus Mecænas. Gesner gives an exact Account of This great Work of Aventine; whereby it appears, that the same Author had formed a very fine and large Plan, to illustrate the Antiquities of Germany. The general view alone of the Subjects, which he undertook, is sufficient to create Astonishment. See the Letter, which he wrote to Vadianus, in 1530 (28). He intended very soon to have published such another Chronicle, as That of Eusebius; an Ecclesiastical History from the beginning of the World to his own Time; some ancient Grammarians, a Greek and Latin Dictionary, Annotations on Claudian (29), &c. But it is not known what is become of These Works. To comprehend how he could be able to go through with so many Writings, we must know, that he began to study by break of Day, and oftentimes returned again a little after Supper, and continued 'till Midnight (30). As he broke the Ice for Those, who have treated of the Antiquities of Bavaria (31), it is no wonder, they have discovered Faults in his Annals (32). He would have found more in theirs, if they had lead him the way, as he has done them. Lambecius has corrected him in many Things (33).

[K] Mr Moreri has succeeded very indifferently in this Article.] I. He is excusable for placing Aventine under the Letter I, in his first Edition; but a Repetition of the same Fault is unpardonable. He could not be ignorant of the general Complaint of his having ranked his illustrious Persons according to their Christian Names. Why, then, was not the Occasion of This Complaint avoided in the following Editions? II. Aventine was born in the Year 1466, and not in the Year 1460. III. Having once committed This Mistake, as Aventine died in the Year 1534, he ought not to have given him Sixty eight Years of Age. He should have committed one Mistake more, and made him live Seventy four Years; because, for want of adding this second Mistake to the first, he has left an intolerable Blunder, in reckoning but Sixty eight Years from the Year 1460 to the Year 1534. IV. It is not true, that Nicholas Gesner published Aventine's Annals. He ought to have said Nicholas Cisner (34). V. To say, that Nicholas Cisner published these Annals, with Additions, is very improper; for This seems to imply, that he had added, to them, something of his own. But This he has not done. His Performance was only This: He published These Annals after a Manuscript of Aventine, Passages, which had not been castrated; so that his Edition is more ample, than That of Zieglerus, because it contains all Those, which Zieglerus had suppressed. The Words of Vossius, which Moreri has stumbled at, would not have deceived an attentive Reader: They intimate clearly enough, that Cisner only restored to Aventine, what had been taken from him. Annales Boiorum libris vii. reliquit: quos ex authenticis Codd. restituit & auxit Nicolaus Cisnerus (35). Vossius was a little to blame in not mentioning the castrated Edition: had he done That, what I have now quoted would have been much clearer. VI. A Priest, as Moreri was, acts but a strange Part, when he calls Nicholas Cisner's Additions considerable; since Those Additions consist only of Invectives against the Popes, and the Romish Clergy. VII. The other Pieces, which Aventine left, are not Those, which Cardinal Baronius did not esteem very Orthodox. It was against the Annals of Bavaria, That Cardinal was so much incensed. VIII. He ought not to have quoted Baronius T. IX. Anni A. C. 772 (36); for This looks as if Baronius had written, at least, nine Volumes upon this one Year 772.

(22) Gregory VII.

(23) Libert. Fromondus, in libro de Orbe Terræ immob. pag. 24, 25.

(24) See Remark [C].

(25) Conringius apud Magirum, Eponymol. Critic. p. 90.

(26) Id. ib.

(27) Vossius de Hist Lat. pag 655.

(28) It is the 49th of the Century published by Goldast.

(29) See Gesner, Biblioth. fol. 386.

(30) Zieglerus in ejus Vitâ.

(31) Conringius, apud Magir. Eponymolog. Crit. p. 90.

(32) Brunnerus, in his Annals of Bavaria, criticises him often. See Zeiller de Histor. p. 134.

(33) Lambec. Commentar. Biblioth. Cæs. lib 2, cap. 1, 2. See Magir. Eponymol. pag. 91.

(34) In the Holland Edition, it is Nicolaus Gesner.

(35) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 655.

(36) Vossius, the only Author that Moreri has quoted concerning Aventine, might also have preserved him from this Mistake, who thus cited this very place, ex T. IX. ad Ann. 772.

Digitized by Google

AVERROËS (a), one of the moſt ſubtile Philoſophers that appeared among the Arabians, was of Corduba (b), and flouriſhed in the Twelfth Century [A]. He had an extraordinary eſteem for Ariſtotle, and commented upon his Works ſo very learnedly, that he was called The Commentator by way of Excellency. It has been thought wonderful, that, without knowing any Thing of Greek, he could penetrate ſo well into the Senſe of the Original; and it is believed, not without reaſon, that, if he had known That Language, he would have perfectly underſtood Ariſtotle's Thoughts. Qui Græcè neſcius feliciter adeò mentem Ariſtotelis perſpexit, quid non feciſſet ſi Linguam ſciſſet Græcam (c)? This ſome learned Men ſay; but others affirm, that he has interpreted Ariſtotle very indifferently [B], not only for want of Learning, but alſo of Capacity. He was Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Morocco [C], and became very ſkillful in Phyſic; but he underſtood the Theory of it better than the Practice [D]. He is looked upon as the Inventor

(a) See all his Names, in Remark [C].

(b) It is falſely ſaid in the Lindenius Renovatus, that Corduba is a City of Arabia.

(c) Voſſius de Philoſophorum ſectis, pag. 90. See Keckerman's Words in the Remark [I].

[A] He flouriſhed in the XIIth Century.] I ſee no other Proof of it than this; that his two Sons were ſeen, by Ægidius, at the Court of Frederic Barbaroſſa (1). "Ætatem ex eo colligimus quod "Ægidius Romanus in nono Quotlibeto refert ſe "duos ejus filios vidiſſe in aulâ Frederici Barbaroſſæ. "Is vero regere cœpit Anno CIↃ CLII. ac impe- "ravit Annos XXXVII. —— The Age he lived in "may be gathered from hence, that Ægidius, in "his ninth Quotlibet, affirms he ſaw two of his "Sons at the Court of Frederic Barbaroſſa: Who "began his Reign in the Year 1152, and reigned "thirty ſeven Years. Theſe are Voſſius's Words in the One hundred fourteenth Page of his Book de Philoſophiâ, chap. 14. See alſo the ſeventeenth Chapter of his Treatiſe de Philoſophorum ſectis, page 91, where he proves, by the Evidence of the Conciliator, and of This Ægidius, that Averroës flouriſhed in the Year 1150, he refers us to the Quodlibets of Ægidius, lib. 2. Quæſtione de unitate intellectûs. Reineſius obſerves, that the Death of Averroës is placed in the Five hundred ninety fifth Year of the Hegira, which is the Eleven hundred ninety eighth of the Chriſtian Æra (2). I wiſh Mr König, who refers us to Reineſius, had not placed This Death in the Year 1225. He ought to have referred us to Hottinger, and to have rectified him; for That learned Swiſs, having ſaid, after John Leo, that Averroës died in the Six hundred and third Year of the Hegira, makes That Year anſwer to our Year 1225 (3). This is a great Miſtake; it anſwers, Part of it, to our Year 1206, the other Part to our Year 1207. The Bibliotheca Rabbinica of Bartolocci ſays, that Averroës flouriſhed from the Year 1131, to the Year 1216, which was That of his Death; that his Commentaries on Ariſtotle's Philoſophy were finiſhed at Seville, in the Year 1187, and that Thoſe on his Metaphyſics were written in the Year 1192 (4).

(1) Naudé's Apology for great Men accuſed of Magic, chap. 24, p. 354. he quotes Ægidius, Quodlibet 9. See alſo Petri Periti Medici Pariſienſis Obſervationes Miſcellaneæ pag. 191.

(2) Reineſius Ep. 15. ad Hofman. pag. 32.

(3) Hotting. Biblioth. Theol. pag. 279.

(4) Bartoloc. Biblioth. Rabbinica, Tom. 1. pag. 13. He quotes Caſſerius in Chronolog. Compendio.

[B] Some of the Learned affirm, that he has interpreted Ariſtotle very indifferently ---- for want of Learning.] This was the Opinion of Ludovicus Vives. "Nomen eſt commentatoris nactus, ſays he (5), ho- "mo qui in Ariſtotele enarrando nihil minus expli- "cat, quam eum ipſum quem ſuſcepit declarandum. "Sed nec potuiſſet explicare etiam ſi divino fuiſſet "ingenio, quum eſſet humano, & quidem intra "mediocritatem. Nam quid tandem adferebat, quo "in Ariſtotele enarrando poſſet eſſe probe inſtructus? "Non cognitionem veteris memoriæ, non ſcientiam "placitorum priſcæ diſciplinæ, & intelligentiam "ſectarum, quibus Ariſtoteles paſſim ſcatet. Itaque "videas eum peſſime philoſophos omneis antiquos "citare, ut qui nullum unquam legerit, ignarus "Græcitatis ac Latinitatis, pro Polo Ptholomæum "ponit, pro Prothagorâ Pythagoram, pro Cratylo "Democritum, libros Platonis titulis ridiculis inſcri- "bit: & ita de iis loquitur, ut vel cœco perſpicuum "ſit literam eum in illis legiſſe nullam. At quàm "confidenter audet pronuntiare hoc aut illud ab "eis dici, &, quod impudentius eſt, non dici: Quum "ſolos videret Alexandrum, Themiſtium, & Nico- "laum Damaſcenum: Et hos, ut apparet, verſos in "Arabicum perverſiſſime ac corruptiſſime. Citat "enim eos nonnunquam, & contradicit, & cum "eis rixatur, ut nec ipſe quidem, qui ſcripſit "intelligat. Ariſtotelem verò quomodo legit, non "in ſua origine purum & integrum, non in lacunam "Latinam derivatum, non enim potuit linguarum "expers, ſed de Latino in Arabicum tranſvaſatum. "—— He has gained the Name of Commentator, tho' "he is very far from explaining his Author Ariſtotle, "or deſerving That Title. This would have been "too great a Task, for one of an extraordinary Genius, "much more for him, who had but a moderate one, "nay, to ſay the Truth, a mean one. For what Qua- "lifications had he for undertaking a Commentary "on Ariſtotle? He had no Knowledge of Antiquity, "nor of it's ſeveral Doctrines, and Sects, with "which Ariſtotle every where abounds. So that you "find him cite all the old Philoſophers in ſuch a "wretched Manner, as proves he never could have "read one of them. Through his Ignorance of Greek and "Latin, he puts Ptholomæus for Polus, Pythago- "ras for Prothagoras, Democritus for Cratylus, and "miſcalls the Titles of Plato's Books very ridiculouſly; "and ſpeaks of them ſo, that even a blind Man "may ſee he had never read a Letter of them. But "what a prodigious Degree of Aſſurance is it, for "him to pronounce, that ſuch a Thing is ſaid by "them, or, what is ſtill more ſhocking, that ſuch a "thing is not ſaid by them: when he had ſeen on- "ly Alexander, Themiſtius, and Nicolas Damaſcenus: "and theſe only in blundering Arabic Tranſlations. For "he ſometimes cites them, and contradicts them, and "raiſes ſuch Controverſies with them, as he himſelf "does not at all underſtand. But how does he read "Ariſtotle? not pure and entire in the Original, "nor even in his firſt Debaſement in a Latin Tran- "ſlation, for he underſtood neither of theſe Languages, "but degenerated again out of Latin into Arabic." He afterwards proves the Inability of this Interpreter of Ariſtotle, by an Example (6). See Cœlius Rhodi- "ginus, who, in general, ſays almoſt the ſame thing (7). We muſt not truſt to Father Rapin, who makes him ſay This of Avicenna (8). For That Jeſuit did not always quote from the Original. However, what he is going to ſay is by no means contemptible: "As "Averroës underſtood nothing of Ariſtotle, but by "an unfaithful Tranſlation, he fell himſelf into ſuch "terrible Miſconſtructions of his Senſe, that Bagolin, "a Philoſopher of Verona, Zimara, and Mantinus, "undertook, in vain, to correct him (9)."

(5) Ludovicus Vives, de Cau ſ corruptar. Artium, lib. 5. pag. 167.

(6) That is, by a Quotation of a Paſſage out of Ariſtotle's Metaphyſics.

(7) Cœlius Rhodiginus Antiq. Lect. lib. 3, c. 2, pag. 116.

(8) Rapin's Reflexions on Philoſophy, n. 15, pag. 330, 340. Holl. Edition.

(9) Id. Ibid.

[C] He was Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Morocco.] It was under the third King of the Race of the Almohades, after the Expulſion of the Almoravides. Read this Paſſage of Reineſius: "Quem "Averroëm adpellant vulgo ſcholæ, ejus nomen inte- "grum eſt Abual-Walid Mohammed, ebn Achmed, "ebn Mohammed, ebn Roſhd: Docuitque in Aca- "demia Maroccana auſpiciis Jacobi, tertii ex Al- "mohadis, poſt ejectos Almoravidas, regis (10). —— "The true Name of Him, who is called, in the Schools, "Averroës, was Abual-Walid Mohammed, ebn Ach- "med, ebn Mohammed, ebn Roſhd: And he taught "in the Univerſity of Morocco, under the Reign "of James III, of the Almohades, after the Ex- "pulſion of the Almoravides."

(10) Reineſius Ep. 15. ad Hofman. pag. 32.

[D] He became very ſkillful in Phyſic; but he underſtood the Theory of it better than the Practice.] His principal Work in Phyſic is That, which is called Colliget. He there treats of This Science in general; and it cannot be amiſs to give here a Piece of the Preface: "Ex præcepto nobilis Domini Audelach Sempſe, "qui pro conſilio ſuorum Philoſophorum Avoſait "& Avenchalit injunxit mihi ut conſcriberem opus, "quod Arabico ſermone totam Medicinæ Scientiam "contineret, ad approbandum judicandumve ſen- "tentias veterum, collegi hoc opus Colliget, id eſt, "Univerſale, ſic inſcriptum propter ordinem doctri- "næ obſervandum, qui paulatim ab univerſalibus

Digitized by Google

Inventor of an Opinion both very abſurd, and very contrary to Chriſtian Orthodoxy [E], but which, nevertheleſs, made ſuch a formidable Progreſs among ſeveral

" ad particularia procedit. In hoc enim libro uni-
" verſales regulas inchoavi, & deinceps favente Deo
" alium librum de iis quæ particularia ſunt inſtituam,
" &c. (11) —— At the Command of my noble Lord
" Audelach Sempſe, who, by the Advice of his Phi-
" loſophers, Avoſait and Avenchalit, obliged me to " undertake a Work, in the Arabic Language, which
" ſhould comprehend the whole Science of Phyſic, that " I might judge and approve of the Opinions of the " Ancients, I have compoſed this Work Colliget, that " is, Univerſal: So entitled, on account of the Or- " der to be obſerved in Teaching, which proceeds by " degrees from Univerſals to Particulars. For in this " Book I have given ſuch Rules as are Univerſal;
" and hereafter, if Providence permits, I ſhall write
" one concerning Particulars, &c." To make it plain, that he valued himſelf for his great Skill in Phyſic, it will be ſufficient to obſerve, that he was a Rival of the great Avicenna, and ſo great an Enemy to him, that he avoids naming him in his Writings: Avicennæ Medici æmulus & inimiciſſimus fuit, ut eum nominare in ſuis Libris vereatur (12): his Affectation in this Reſpect is very evident. This Affectation was undoubtedly the Reaſon, why, in confuting a Doctrine maintained by Avicenna, he attacked it only as the Sentiment of Galen. I ſpeak of the Doctrine, which aſſerts, that the Animal Spirits, which cauſe Joy are bright, and Thoſe, which cauſe Melancholy, black. Mr Petit has taken notice of this Affectation of Averroës. " Nunc quibus mentis pene-
" trationibus Averrois hanc Aviſennæ opinionem im-
" pugnet, videamus: quamquam eo loco directe Avi-
" ſennam non petit, ſed Galenum, ſpontaneum me-
" lancholicorum metum ab humoris, qui in iis abun-
" dat, nigredine repetentem; verum quæ ibi Galeno
" objicit, pari impetu in memoratam Aviſennæ opi-
" nionem redeunt (13). —— Let us ſee now what
" Arguments Averroës brings againſt this Opinion
" of Avicenna; though he does not there directly at- " tack Avicenna, but Galen, who aſcribes the ſpon-
" taneous Timorouſneſs of melancholy Perſons to a
" black Humour abounding in them, but what he
" there objects againſt Galen falls with equal force
" on this Opinion of Avicenna." Averroës, either on purpoſe, or through forgetfulneſs, has behaved in a quite contrary Manner, with regard to Avempace; for he names him as the Author of a Remark, which he might have read in Philoponus (14). This is only by the by. Now, that he was more learned in the Theory, than the Practice, he himſelf confeſſes, as Mr Petit obſerves. " Averroës fatetur de ſe ultro
" in ſeptimo eorum librorum, quos Colliget vulgus
" appellat, cap. 6. Ego, inquit, non ſtudui ei Scien-
" tiæ (Medicinæ) ut videar mihi in ea eſſe ſuffi-
" ciens: Et alibi negat ſe in eorum numero eſſe qui
" ægris remedia adhibent (15). - - - - - - Averroës
" makes this Confeſſion of himſelf, in the ſeventh of
" thoſe Books, commonly called Colliget, cap. 6 I
" have not, ſays he, ſtudied This Science (of Phyſic)
" in order to make myſelf perfect in it: And, elſe-
" where, he denies himſelf to be in the Number of
" thoſe, who adminiſter to the ſick." This Paſſage of Mr Petit is much more exact, than theſe Words of Voſſius. " Aver-roës Cordubenſis, cognomento
" Commentator, medicus non tam practicus, quam
" theoreticus. Fuit medicus Memarolini regis (16).
" - - - - - Aver-roës of Corduba, ſirnamed the Com-
" mentator, a Phyſician, not ſo much in Practice,
" as in Theory. He was Phyſician to King Mema-
" rolinus." The laſt Words weaken, inſtead of confirming, the former; for, to be a Prince's Phyſician, requires great Practice. I ſay nothing of Memarolini (17), which was not a proper Name, but a Name of Dignity, and conſequently not fit to be joined with the Word regis. Mercklinus was not aware of This, when he ſaid, Videtur Medicus fuiſſe regis Miramamolini (18) - - - - - - - - - - - - He ſeems to have been Phyſician to King Miramamolinus. Symphorian Campier was the Original of This Error; he had ſaid, that Averroës lived at Corduba, in the Time of King Miramalinus, tempore Miramalini regis apud Cordubam (19). Obſerve, that the Phyſicians of Paris, great Favourers of Phlebotomy, would not eaſily agree, that Averroës was not much skilled in the Practice of Phyſic; for it is ſaid, that his Example contributed much to extirpate an Error, which they diſapproved. Read theſe Words of Stephen Paſquier. " How many Ages have we
" practiſed Phyſic, with the Notion, that Children
" ought not to blooded, 'till fourteen Years of " Age, and that bleeding of them before That Time
" was not a Cure, but certain Death? A Hereſy,
" which we ſhould have lived in to this Day, if " it had not been for Averroës, the Arabian, who " ventured to make the firſt Experiment of it on " a Son of his own, about ſix or ſeven Years of " Age, whom he cured of a Pleuriſie (20)."

[E] He is looked upon as the Inventor of an Opinion, both very abſurd, and very contrary to Chriſtian Orthodoxy.] I think it would be more proper to ſay, that he has cleared and explained it, and, by maintaining it with more application than ever, has given a kind of new Life to it; for the ſame Pomponatius, who affirms, in his fourth Chapter, that it is a Monſter forged by Averroës; Figmentum & Monſtrum ab Averroë confictum (21); has alſo ſaid, in the third Chapter, that Themiſtius and Averroës taught the ſame thing. " Averroës itaque & ut
" exiſtimo ante eum Themiſtius concordes poſuere
" animam intellectivam realiter diſtingui ab anima
" corruptibili, verum ipſam eſſe unum numero in
" omnibus hominibus, mortalem vero multiplica-
" tam (22). —— Averroës therefore, and, I think,
" before him Themiſtius, maintained an intellectual
" Soul really diſtinct from the corruptible Soul, that
" the former was only One in all Mankind, but the " Mortal One as numerous as the Individuals." The Jeſuits of Coimbra go higher; for they will have it, that Theophraſtus underſtood the Doctrine of his Maſter Ariſtotle in this Senſe. " Occurrit alia ſententia
" exiſtimantium in diſciplina Ariſtotelis ponendam eſſe
" unam duntaxat animam intellectricem, ſive unum
" intellectum qui omnibus hominibus aſſiſtat, ut ſolis
" lumen univerſitati. Sic enim Ariſtotelem interpre-
" tati ſunt ejus diſcipulus & Scholæ ſucceſſor Theo-
" phraſtus, Themiſtius, Simplicius, Averroës, aliique
" non pauci, etſi non omnes eodem modo de hujuſ-
" modi intellectu locuti fuerint (23). —— There
" occurs another Opinion of Thoſe, who, according to
" the Doctrine of Ariſtotle, maintained only an intelle- " ctual Soul, or one Intellect, which ſerves all Man-
" kind, as the Light of the Sun does the Univerſe.
" For ſo has Ariſtotle been interpreted by his Scho-
" lar, and Succeſſor in his School, Theophraſtus, by
" Themiſtius, Simplicius, Averroës, and others, tho'
" they have not all expreſſed themſelves alike, concerning
" this Intellect." They add, that ſeveral Moderns have owned, that, according to Ariſtotle's Hypotheſis, the Underſtanding of all Men is one and the ſame Subſtance. " Hoc quidem Argumentum per-
" movit etiam ad prædictam Intellectus unitatem in
" Ariſtotelis doctrinâ aſſerendam non paucos è re-
" cenſioribus peripateticis in quibus ſunt Thom. An-
" glicus, Achillinus, Odo Jandunus, Mirandulanus,
" Zimara, Vicomereatus, & quidam alii (24). - - - -
" This very Argument induced many of the modern Pe-
" ripatetics to aſſert this Unity of the Intellect, ac- " cording to the Doctrine of Ariſtotle, amongſt whom
" are Thomas Anglicus, Achillinus, Odo Jandunus,
" Mirandulanus, Zimara, Vicomereatus, and others."
But that ſome among Theſe Moderns will have it to be, in all Men, as an aſſiſtant Form, others as a conſtituent Form. The latter is the Opinion of Mirandulanus (25), and of Achillinus (26). But obſerve here a Miſtake like This of Pomponatius. The Jeſuits of Coimbra elſewhere aſcribe the Invention of the Unity of the Intellect of all Men to Averroës. This will appear the more ſurpriſing, when the Words are ſeen, which preceed Thoſe, where they affirm it.
" Secunda (ſententia) fuit Avicennæ 9. Metaph. cap.
" quarto, & in lib. Natur. part. 5. Avempace in epi-
" ſtola de lumine, & Græci cujuſdam Marini cujus
" mentionem facit hoc loco Philoponus, ajentium in-
" tellectum agentem eſſe ſubſtantiam quandam ſepa-
" ratam, quam Avicenna Cholcodæam nuncupabat.
" Idem placuit Averroi in libello de beatitudine ani-
" mæ, cap. 5. & in epitome Metaph. tractatu 4. qui
" errori errorem ſubnectens, aliorum veſtigia ſecutus,
" unum,

(11) Præf. Averroïs apud Geſnerum, in Biblioth. fol. 101.

(12) Symphorianus Campejus apud Geſner, ibid. fol. 100. See Cælius Rhodiginus, lib. 3, cap. 12, pag. 1684. and Scaliger againſt Cardan, Exerc. 61, n. 5.

(13) Pet. Petitus, Diſſertat. de Homeri Nepenthe. pag. 89.

(14) See the ſame Petri Petiti Miſcell. Obſervat. lib. 3. cap. 18.

(15) Id. ib. lib. 2. cap. 7. pag. 99, 100.

(16) Voſſius de Philoſophia, cap. 14, p. 114.

(17) The Dignity is not properly Latinized.

(18) Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato, p. 94.

(19) Symph. Campejus, de claris Medicis.

(20) Paſquier, in the ſecond Volume of his Letters, Book 19. pag. 548.

(21) Pomponatius de Immort. Animæ, c. 4. pag. 9.

(22) Id. ib. c. 3. p. 7.

(23) Conimbricenſes in 2. lib. de Anima, cap. 1. Quæſt. 7. Art. 1. pag. 59.

(24) Ibid.

(25) Mirandulanus, de Everſione ſingularis certaminis, lib. 32. §. 1. & lib. 33. §. 2, & 6.

(26) Achillinus lib. de Intelligentiis.

Digitized by Google

ſeveral Italian Philoſophers, that it became neceſſary to condemn it by the Pope's

" unum omnium hominum finxit communem intel-
" lectum, ut alibi retulimus (27). ----- The ſecond
" [Opinion] was That of Avicenna, in his Metaphy" ſics, lib. 9. chap. 4. and in his Book de Natur.
" Part 5. of Avempace, in his Epiſtle de Lumine,
" and of Marinus, a certain Greek, mentioned here
" by Philoponus; who held, that the acting Intellect
" is a certain ſeparate Subſtance, which Avicenna
" calls Cholcodæa. Averroës is of the ſame Senti-
" ment, in his Book de Beatitudine Animæ, chap. 5.
" and in Epitome Metaphyſ. Tractat. 4. who, adding " Error to Error, in imitation of others, has pretend-
" ed, that there is but one Intellect, in common to
" all Men, as we have elſewhere related." That is to ſay, That the Unity of the Intellect is a Fiction, which Averroës has added to the Errors of others; yet nevertheleſs it is plain, this Fiction does not at all differ from the Doctrine they attribute to Avicenna, &c. We muſt remember, that, according to Averroës, the Intellect of Men is the loweſt Degree of Intelligences, and occupies the loweſt Place of the Univerſe (28). " Eſſe mentium infimam
" omnium, & unicam. Nam ſicuti cœleſtes globi
" ſinguli ſingulas habere mentes videntur, ita &
" orbis hic inferior unam, ut ipſe vult, habet, quæ
" non hujus hominis ſit, vel illius: Sed humanæ
" ſpeciei mens ſit, & dicatur, ut ſpeciei unicæ uni-
" cus ſit intellectus in hoc orbe inferiori, ut pleri-
" que intelligunt, ubique totus compingi (29). —
" It is One only, and That the loweſt of Intelligences.
" For, as each of the celeſtial Orbs ſeems to have it's " particular Intellect, ſo has this inferior Globe
" it's Intellect, which he will have to be One,
" and not appropriated to This, or That Man; but to
" be the Intellect of the whole human Species, that " there may be to One Species One Intellect, in this
" lower Orb, as moſt underſtand it, that the whole
" is contained every where." Be this as it will, theſe Jeſuits, in confuting this pretended Unity of the Intellect of all Men, attack This Philoſopher only; ſo much do they, at leaſt, eſteem him the chief Defender of This Chimera. They obſerve, that Scotus had ſaid, that Averroës became worthy to be excommunicated by human Race; and that others ſay, that his Doctrine is ſuch a dreadful Monſter, that the Foreſts of Arabia never produced a greater. " Hæc Commentatoris ſeu com-
" mentitoris potius de unitate intellectûs ſententia
" adeo ſtulta eſt, ut meritò Scotus in 4 d. 43 q. 2.
" dixerit dignum eſſe Averroem qui ob has ineptias
" ex hominum communione averruncetur. Alii vero
" hoc ejus figmentum monſtrum vocârint quo nul-
" lum majus Arabum ſylvæ genuerint. Certe hoc
" unum ſat eſſe debuiſſet ad eos coarguendos qui
" filium Rois tanti faciunt, ut ejus animam Ariſto-
" telis animam eſſe dicant (30)." The laſt part of this Paſſage informs us, that, among other Elogies, That of having Ariſtotle's Soul was given to This Arabian. The Jeſuits of Coimbra will have it, that, to confute this, it is ſufficient to conſider only the Doctrine of the Unity of the Intellect. But This Obſervation is falſe; for, as ſeveral of the Moderns have owned, This Doctrine is only an Inlargement and Explication of Ariſtotle's Principles. I could prove this by many Remarks, but ſhall content myſelf with this, that, according to the Hypotheſis of our Philoſopher, the Multiplication of Individuals can have no other Foundation, than Matter; from whence it follows, that the Intellect is but One, ſince Ariſtotle makes it ſeparate and diſtinct from Matter. Viderunt Ariſtotelem ſimpliciter probare intellectum poſſibilem eſſe immixtum & immaterialem (31). This is the Obſervation of Pomponatius. " Quod vero
" unicus ſit intellectus in omnibus hominibus ſive
" poſſibilis ponatur, patere poteſt ex eo quoniam apud
" Peripateticos eſt celebrata propoſitio, multiplicatio-
" nem individuorum in eadem ſpecie non poſſe eſſe
" niſi per materiam quantam, ut dicitur 7 & 12 Me-
" taph, & 2 de Anima (32). — But that the In-
" tellect in all Men is but One, or may be ſuppoſed ſo,
" appears from hence, that the Peripatetics have a
" celebrated Maxim, that the Multiplication of Indivi-
" duals can be only by Matter and Quantity, as is ſaid
" in 7 and 12. Metaph. & 2. de Animâ." But how much ſoever This Opinion of Averroës may be grounded on Ariſtotle, yet it is impious and abſurd at the bottom. It is impious, becauſe it leads to a Belief, that the Soul, which is properly the Form of Man, dies with the Body (33), it is abſurd, becauſe nothing can be more ſenſeleſs, than to maintain, that two Men, who are directed by their reſpective intellectual Operations to kill each other, have the ſame Soul? What can be imagined more chimerical, than that two Philoſophers, one of whom affirms, and the other denies, the ſame Theſis, at the ſame time, are but One only Being, as to the Intellect? We will examine what an Adverſary of Pomponatius, advanced againſt This Extravagancy.

Firſt, He confutes it, as it ſuppoſes, that the Intellect is not in Man, and afterwards, as it ſuppoſes that all Men have but one and the ſame Intellect. On the firſt Point, he enquires why an Intellect, which ought to unite it's Operation to That of the Man, in the moſt intimate Manner poſſible, ſhould think it a Diſhonour to unite itſelf with the Organs, to compoſe with them one Individual (34)? You will eaſily apprehend the intimate Union there mentioned, if you take notice, that, according to the Averroïſts, the Soul of Man is not capable of Underſtanding without the help of This aſſiſting Intellect. This Intellect then muſt ſupply, by it's Operation, what the Soul of Man wants; and conſequently our intellectual Acts depend on two Principles, whereof one is only paſſive and defective, the other is active and perfect. Theſe two Principles therefore concur and terminate in the ſame effect; and conſequently the Action of the Intellect of the Averroïſts unites it ſelf, in a moſt intimate manner, with the Soul, which underſtands. But this difficulty is not great; for the Union objected is not more intimate, than That of the Operation of God, with the Operation of the Creature, according to the Doctrine of Co-operation; and yet it does not follow from hence, that theſe two Cauſes muſt be perſonally united. The Author pretends to obviate this Anſwer, by ſaying, That the Operation of the Intellect of the Averroïſts is immanent and particular, which cannot be ſaid of the Co-operation of God (35); but this may eaſily be anſwered; ſo that his Diſputation is not ſo victorious as to the firſt Point, as it is with regard to the ſecond; for obſerve how he preſſes Averroës: That Intellect, of which you ſpeak, is either God, or a Creature. If it is God, I ask this Queſtion, Does he act within or without himſelf? If without himſelf? what a Monſter would not an Operation of the Underſtanding be, which is placed without the Intellect, and in another Perſon (36). This proves too much; for from hence it muſt be inferred, that the Divine Intellect cannot produce an Act of Intelligence in the Soul of Man, without producing the ſame in itſelf. Now This is falſe and abſurd. The other Branch of the Queſtion reduces the Averroïſts to the laſt Extremity. If God forms in himſelf the Acts of Intelligence, which are in Man, how many Errors muſt he entertain? " Sed neque
" intra Deum contineri poteſt (intellectio) quod im-
" menſos in eum errores toties inveheret, quoties
" opinione ſuâ fallerentur homines; neque enim
" prorſus ulla valeret excuſatio, quin prima ac ſum-
" ma veritas à ſe ipſa monſtroſe deficeret, ſi aſſig-
" nanda ipſi eſſent, ſi in ſinu ejus & complexu re-
" ponenda quæcunque eſſe poſſunt falſa hominum
" judicia (37). — Neither can it [the Intellect] be
" contained within God, ſince it muſt produce in him
" ſuch prodigious Errors, as often as Men are deceived
" in their Opinions; nor can any Salvo be found
" ſufficient to explain, how the ſupream Truth can
" avoid degenerating from itſelf in a monſtruous
" Manner, if it muſt be charged with, and made
" to entertain, all thoſe falſe Judgments, to which
" Men are liable." If they anſwer, that this Intellect is created, the Author replies, that a Creature does not ſeem ſufficient to regulate ſo effectually all human Souls at the ſame time (38). Beſides that the contrariety of Opinions, which reign among Men, cannot lodge together in one ſingle Underſtanding. " Quomodo in unam & eandem intelligentiam ſi-
" mul cadet contrarietas illa opinionum & ſenten-
" tiarum, quam toties in hominibus experimur, cum
" unus ait, alter negat de eodem idem? Quæ ea-
" dem quæſtio impedire poteſt adverſarium in reſ-

(27) Conimbricenſes in lib. 3, de Anima, cap. 5. Quæſt. 1. Artic. 1, pag. 226.

(28) Commentator ipſe Comm. 10, l. 3, de Anim. ponit ſpiam eſſe ultimam intelligentiarum. Pompon. de Immortalitate Anim. cap. 4, pag. 11.

(29) Cælius Rhodigin. Antiq. Lect. lib. 3, c. 2, pag. 109.

(30) Conimb. in lib. 2, de Animâ, cap. 1, Quæſt. 7. Art. 2. pag. 60.

(31) Pomponatius de Immortal. Anim. c. 4. pag. 7.

(32) Ibidem, pag. 8.

(33) See Remark [H] towards the End.

(34) Antonius Sirmondus de Immortalitate Animæ adverſus Pomponatium & Aſſeclas, p. 368.

(35) Id. ib. pag. 369.

(36) Quid hoc portenti intellectio ut extra intellectum conſiſtat & quidem toto ab ea diſiuncta ſuppoſito? Id. ibid. pag. 370.

(37) Id. ib.

(38) Id. ib. p. 371, 372.

Digitized by Google

Pope's Authority [F]. This Opinion is, That there is an Intelligence, which, without

" ponſione jamjam exploſa de intellectu divino. —— " How can That Contrariety of Opinions, and Notions, " which we ſo often obſerve among Men, concerning " one and the ſame Subject, ever ſubſiſt in one, and " the ſame, Intellect? Which very Objection ſhews " alſo the Abſurdity of That long exploded Notion of " the Divinity of This Intellect." This laſt Objection has the ſame force againſt Thoſe, who affirm, that This Intellect is God. Thus is alſo Spinoziſm invincibly confuted (39). It is remarkable, that the Author owns all the ſtrength of his Objection to conſiſt in his having proved, that the Operation of the Intellect of the Averroïſts on the Souls of Men is inherent (40). But I think, there is no Reaſon for them to allow, that he has proved This Point. As to what remains, he declares, that he ſhould have nothing to ſay againſt Averroës's Sentiment, if That Philoſopher had only ſpoke of the Operation of the Divine Intellect, conſidered as the firſt Cauſe. " Reſtat ergo, ut ſuum iſtud ſomnium integrum Averroës ſomnii loco & mendacii " haberi ſinat, aut certè interpretetur ipſe de actione " intellectus divini, qua parte non intellectus quidem præciſe, ſed eſt prima cauſa, in omnes " cauſarum ſecundarum, adeoque inferiorum intelligentiarum effectus ex virtute ſua influens aliquid " (41). —— An ita poſſit accipi, non diſputo, illud " contentus oſtendiſſe, quòd niſi quid ſimile ſonet " ejus doctrinæ, inanis ac ſtulta ſit, ſi quid autem " ſimile, ne pilum quidem nobis adverſantem habeat (42). —— It remains therefore, that Averroës muſt either give up this whole Chimerical Notion of his for a Dream, and a Fiction, or interpret " it of the Act of the Divine Intellect, not as it is " the Intellect, but the firſt Cauſe operating on all " ſecond Cauſes, and conſequently in ſome Degree influencing by it's Agency the Effects of inferior Intellects. — Whether or no it can be ſo explained, " I ſhall not undertake to diſpute, being content " with having ſhewn, that, unleſs his Doctrine be " conſtrued after ſome ſuch manner as this, it is " empty and abſurd, but, if it be ſo conſtrued, I have " nothing to object againſt it." He tells us, That he has not meddled with the Objections, which Thomas Aquinas ſtarted againſt the Hypotheſis of This Arabian. You may find it perfectly confuted in a Work of Mr Du Pleſſis Mornay (43).

It is ſurprizing, that ſuch great Genius's, as Ariſtotle and Averroës, ſhould invent ſo many Chimera's concerning the Intellectual Faculty; and yet I will venture to ſay, that the Superiority of their Parts was the very Cauſe of it. It was by their great Penetration, that they diſcovered ſuch Difficulties, as obliged them to leave the common Road, and deſpiſe many other ways, where they did not meet with what they ſought. The moſt certain Knowledge they had of the Nature of the Soul, was, that it is capable of thinking ſucceſſively of a thouſand things; but, how it reduced this Capacity into Action, they could not comprehend: The Operation of Objects, their Species, their Images in the Brain, as much refined as you pleaſe, nothing of all this ſeems ſufficient to give the Soul an actual Intelligence. See with what Force Father Mallebranche confutes all that has been ſaid of the Manner of our knowing things (44). He could find no other Expedient, than to aſſert, that we ſee them in God, and that the Ideas are not produced in our Souls. Some ancient Philoſophers have ſaid, that God is the general Intelligence of all Spirits; that is to ſay, that he diffuſes Knowledge on them, as the Sun does Light on Bodies. Read theſe Words of the Jeſuits of Coimbra: " Prima ſententia fuit " Alexandri libro ſecundo de Animâ, cap. 20. & 21. " exiſtimantis intellectum agentem eſſe intellectum " univerſalem omnium conditorem, hoc eſt Deum; " quod etiam Platonis dogma libro ſexto de republicâ fuiſſe creditur, qui intellectum agentem noſtros animos cœlitus irradiantem comparavit ſoli, " ut ex Themiſtio hoc in lib. refert divus Thomas " 1 part. quæſt. 79. articulo quarto. In eundem errorem lapſus fuit Priſcianus Lydus aſſerens, intellectum agentem non eſſe partem animæ, ſed mentem primam atque divinam, vel Ideam boni (45). —— The firſt was the Opinion of Alexander, in his ſecond Book de Anima, cap. 20, 21, who held " the acting Intellect to be the univerſal Intellect, " the Creator of all things, i. e. God; which is alſo eſteemed to be the Doctrine of Plato, in his ſixth " Book de Republicâ, where the acting Intellect, irradiating our Minds, is compared to the Sun, as " St Thomas relates from Themiſtius, in this Book, " Part I, Quæſt. 79, Art. 4. Priſcianus Lydus is " fallen into the ſame Error, in aſſerting, that the " acting Intellect is not part of the Soul, but the ſupream and divine Mind itſelf, or Idea of Good." When a Subject is very obſcure, it is no wonder, that the greateſt Philoſophers ſpeak of it a little out of the way, and on Suppoſitions not eaſily to be apprehended. Now there cannot be a more difficult Subject, than This of the Formation of Thought. It is, perhaps, more ſo, than That of the Original of the Soul. This is going a great way; for it is a very wiſe Reflexion Bartholin makes on a Story reported of St Anſelm. This Archbiſhop of Canterbury, finding himſelf near Death, at the Age of Seventy ſix Years, is ſaid to have begged a ſhort Reſpite, that he might finiſh a very obſcure Inquiry, he had begun, into the Original of the Soul (46). If he had obtained Seventy ſix Years more, ſays Bartholin, I doubt he could ſcarce have made an end of ſo obſcure a Queſtion. Valdè dubito, ſi vel totidem annos quot vixerat illi addidiſſet Deus vitæ arbiter, ad finem quæſtionis dubiæ unquam potuerit pervenire (47). Obſerve, that moſt of the Carteſians teach, that, as there is none but God, who can give Motion to the Body, ſo there is none but God, who can modify the Spirits. They except Thoſe Actions of the Soul, which are criminal. But, as to all what we call Senſation, Imagination, Paſſion, Memory, and Idea, They pretend, that God is the efficient and immediate Cauſe of theſe, and that the Action of Objects, or the Motion of our Animal Spirits, is only the occaſional Cauſe. This Opinion is but an Extenſion of That attributed to a famous Interpreter of Ariſtotle, and which Mr Du Pleſſis Mornay confutes by ſpecious Reaſons, but ſuch as our Carteſians would not embaraſs themſelves with. Let us ſee ſomething of what he advances: " As to the Opinion of Alexander (Aphrodiſienſis) who maintains, that there " is an univerſal acting Intellect, which impreſſes " the poſſible Intellect, i. e. every one's Capacity, and reduces it into Action, moſt of the " Reaſons produced above, againſt Averroës, will " hold, alſo, againſt him. But, becauſe, by this " acting Intellect, he ſeems to mean God himſelf, " there is this yet farther to be objected, That God, " who is all Good and all Wiſe, would not imprint " on our Underſtandings the Follies and Vices we " find in it, neither would he leave it in ſo much " Ignorance and Obſcurity, as we feel in it, but " conquer in all Men That Contagion, which This " Body brings with it; and, though he ſhould not inſpire or influence ſo many things to the one, " as to the other, according to the ſeveral Capacities of This raſa Tabula, This blank Paper, yet " he never would produce in any ſuch a World of falſe " Images, as every Man may perceive within himſelf. Farther, This Influence muſt either be continual, or interrupted. If continual, we ſhould " underſtand all that our Imagination could repreſent to us without Trouble or Application: If interrupted, we could not, of ourſelves, underſtand any thing whatſoever, nor will when we " would. Now, on the contrary, we find it difficult to apprehend ſome things, and are forced to " overcome the Ignorance of our Underſtanding, " as it were, Step by Step; and there are others, " which we can apprehend as ſoon as they offer " themſelves, and whenever we pleaſe (48)."

[F] Which made ſuch a formidable Progreſs —— that it became neceſſary to condemn it, by the Pope's Authority.] I have reported, in another Place (49), the Words of one of the Bulls of Pope Leo X, which was approved in the Lateran Council. I ſhall add here, that Raimond Lully made great Inſtance to Pope Clement V, to condemn Averroës's Commentaries on Ariſtotle; and that he endeavoured to engage Philip the Fair, King of France, to do the ſame. He repreſented Theſe Books as full of pernicious Errors, and ſuch as will lead young Perſons, by Degrees, to Impiety: He prayed, petitioned, and wrote a Book on this Subject, but found both the

(39) See the Article SPINOZA, Remark [N] n. III.

(40) Anton. Sirmondus de Immort. Anim. pag. 372.

(41) Id. ib.

(42) Ibid. pag. 373.

(43) Treat of The Truth of the Chriſtian Religion, chap. 15.

(44) Mallebranche's Inquiry after Truth, Book 3, chap. 1, & ſeq. of Part 2.

(45) Conimbric. in lib. 3. de Animâ, cap. 5, Quæſt. 1, Artic. 1. pag. 226.

(46) See the Article ANSELMUS, Remark [A]

(47) Tho. Bartholinus, Diſſertat. 6. de legendis Libris, pag. 564.

(48) Du Pleſſis Mornay, Of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion, chap. 15, pag. 208.

(49) In the Article SPINOZA Remark [D] at the End.

Digitized by Google

without multiplying it ſelf, animates all the Individuals, of Human Species, ſo far as they exerciſe the Functions of the reaſonable Soul. There is ſcarce any Book, of Averroës, which diſcovers better Sentiments, than That, which is intituled Deſtructiones Deſtructionum contra Algazelem [G]. Very diſadvantageous Reports have been ſpread of This Philoſopher's Religion [H]; for he is ſaid, not only the Pope, and the King of France, deaf to all his Sollicitations (50). At preſent, there is no Occaſion to deſire this, or to pray, that, at leaſt, this Philoſopher may be prohibited from paſſing for an Oracle; for his Authority is now void, and no Body waſtes time in reading him; but ſome Centuries have been much infatuated with his Doctrine. Read what follows. " Congruentior & exauditu facilior fuiſſet " petitio, pro qua nunc, (quæ Dei benignitas eſt,) " non eſt ſatagendum. Nimirum ne Averroës ora- " culi loco eſſet in Scholis: Quod cùm ſuperiore " ſæculo, & paucis anterioribus, invaluiſſet, præſer- " tim in Italia, ut Canus, lib. 10, de locis, cap. 5, " notavit; occaſio fuit magnorum in oris illis erro- " rum, & inutilis diligentiæ, qua aliqui non minùs " in pervolutando Averroë collocabant operæ, quàm " in ſacris literis ponant, qui iis maximè delectan- " tur: Nec fidei minùs Averroi tribuerunt, quàm " optimi quique fideles Canonicis ſcriptoribus: Quod " indigniſſimum fuiſſe, nemo non videt. Nunc A- " verroës in ſcholis depontanus evaſit (51). —— It " had been a properer Petition, and much eaſier to " have been obtained, though now, thank God, we " have no occaſion for it, That Averroës ſhould not " paſs in the Schools for an Oracle: for his being " ſo eſteemed in the former Age, and ſome few pre- " ceeding ones, eſpecially in Italy, as Canus in lib. " 10, de Locis, cap. 5, has obſerved; occaſioned, in " thoſe Parts, great Errors, and an uſeleſs Induſtry, " ſome having taken as much Pains in turning over " Averroës, as the greateſt Divines ever beſtowed on " the Holy Scriptures themſelves: Nor have the Ca- " nonical Writers met with greater Faith from the " moſt zealous, than Averroës has from his Followers: " which all muſt agree to have been a high Indignity. " But now Averroës is quite exploded the Schools." Ludovicus Vives complained very much of the Authority, which This Arabian Profeſſor had obtained. " Quem Philoſophi de noſtrâ Scholâ, qui poſt eum " ſcripſere, ita ſunt amplexati, ut penè authoritate " Ariſtoteli adæquarint, nec ſolum qui longo poſt " intervallo vixerunt, ſed qui illius quoque ætate: " Quod factum eſt & ignorantiâ meliorum, & ad- " miratione mercimonii linguâ & ſenſis peregrini: " Ut gratiam ei conciliaret apud primos novitas, a- " pud poſteros vetuſtas (52). —— Who is ſo highly " eſteemed by the Philoſophers of our Schools, who " have wrote after him, that his Authority has been " almoſt made equal to That of Ariſtotle, not only by " Thoſe, who have lived long after him, but even by " Thoſe of his own Time; which has happened " through Ignorance of better Writings, and out of a " Humour of admiring ſuch as are foreign, both in " Language and Sentiments. So that he came into " Favour with the former Ages for his Novelty, and " with the latter for his Antiquity." He obſerves here a remarkable piece of good Fortune: Some lucky Genius's pleaſe at firſt for their Novelty, and at laſt for their Antiquity. Let the Reader examine, if he pleaſes, this reaſoning of a Modern. " We need " not wonder to ſee, that Men have had ſo much " eſteem for Averroës, ſince Cardan's Father, who " dealt in Magic, aſſures us, that the Devils them- " ſelves have admired his Doctrine, and that Ba- " jazet diverted himſelf with it, in his greateſt " Pains of the Gout; which is as great a Proof of " it's Merit, as it's being admired by the Intel- " ligences (53)." If what relates to Bajazet is of no better Credit than the reſt, I queſtion it much (54). In reſpect to Cardan's Father, it ought to have been ſaid, that one of the Spirits, which appeared to him, profeſſed himſelf to be an Averroïſt, and not that Averroës was admired by the Intelligences; and it ought to have been added, that Cardan himſelf inſinuates, that This Story of his Father was fabulous. " Ille verò palam Averroïſtam ſe pro- " fitebatur. Hæc ſeu hiſtoria ſeu fabula ſit ita ſe " habuit. Quod fabula videatur ſatis Argumento " eſſe debet quod, &c. (55). —— He openly profeſſed " himſelf an Averroïſt. This is a true Relation of " this Story or Fable. But that it is a Fable, ſuffici- " ently appears from hence, that, &c."

[G] No Book of Averroës diſcovers better Sentiments, than his Deſtructiones Deſtructionum contra Algazelem.] Or rather, Deſtructorium Deſtructorii. The Arabic Title is, Habapalab Altahapalab (56). In This Piece, Averroës confutes the Metaphyſical Opinions, which Algazel had maintained againſt the Philoſophers. Moſt of Theſe Opinions of Algazel are very pernicious; for Example, he denied, what the Philoſophers held, that the World is the Work of God, that God is an Agent, that he is a One, Simple, and Incorporeal, Being, and that there cannot be two uncreated Natures (57). Since Averroës takes the part of the Philoſophers in all theſe Propoſitions, it cannot be denied, but that he labours in favour of Orthodoxy. In Father Rapin's Opinion, it is one of his beſt Pieces (58). But, on the other ſide, can This good Cauſe receive any great Service from ſuch a Defender, who denies the Poſſibility of the Creation, and maintains, that all ſpiritual Beings are eternal, and that God does not know particular things, nor extend his Providence over the Individuals of this World (59)?

[H] Very diſadvantageous Reports have been ſpread of This, Philoſopher's Religion.] You will find, in Moreri's Dictionary, that, according to His Opinion, Chriſtianity was an impoſſible Religion; that Judaiſm was a Religion of Children, and that Mahometiſm was a Religion of Swines; and that he afterwards cried out, Moriatur anima mea morte Philoſophorum; that is, Let my Soul die the Death of the Philoſophers. Behold, how he has imitated Balaam, who ſaid, Let me die the Death of the Righteous, and let my laſt End be like his (60). Mr Moreri does not exactly relate his Opinion concerning Chriſtianity; Averroes called it, ſays he, an impoſſible Religion, becauſe of the Myſtery of the Euchariſt. It is certain, that This Philoſopher did not ſpeak ſo obligingly of it, when he reflected on the Practice of the Communion of Rome. Read theſe Words of Mr Daillé, which he addreſſed to Father Adam: " The wiſe " Men of the World have not excuſed you this " ſtrange Belief, any more than the Jews; witneſs " the Words of the Philoſopher Averroës, which " Cardinal *Du Perron relates, on the Credit of Sarga, " one of the Fathers of your Society; that he found " no Sect worſe, or weaker, than That of the Chri- " ſtians, who, themſelves, eat, and break to pieces, the " God, whom they adore (61)." Before I go any farther, I ſhall make two Remarks againſt This learned Miniſter. I. That Cardinal Du Perron is not, properly, the Perſon, who relates theſe Words on the Credit of one of Father Adam's Fraternity; he only relates them, as cited by Mr Du Pleſſis; for it is This latter, who alledges, on This Subject, what the Jeſuit Scarga obſerves concerning the Sentiment of This Arabian Philoſopher (62). II. That, inſtead of Sarga, he ſhould have ſaid Scarga. We ſhall here relate a Paſſage of another Miniſter: " If we ſhould " receive the holy Sacrament kneeling, - - - - - - we " ſhould be a Scandal, and a Stumbling-block to " the Weak: But we ſhould give the Infidels oc- " caſion to blaſpheme the ſacred Name of God, and " to have an Abhorrence for Chriſtianity. For we † " cannot forget the ſad Example of the Pagan Phi- " loſoher †, who, having ſeen the Sacrament eaten, " which had before been adored, ſaid, That he had " never ſeen a more fooliſh, or more ridiculous Sect, " than That of the Chriſtians, who adore That, which " they eat; and for that reaſon this unhappy Man " cried out, Let my Soul be with Thoſe of the Philo- " ſophers, ſince the Chriſtians adore what they eat (63)" The ſame Miniſter alledges, elſewhere, a Paſſage of Cicero, very agreeable to This Sentiment of Averroës (64). " Ecquem tam amentem eſſe putas, qui illud " quo veſcatur, Deum credat eſſe (65). - - - - And " who do you think is ſo ſenſeleſs, as to believe, that " what he eats is God?" Cicero ſpoke thus, on account of giving the Name of Ceres to Corn, and That

(50) Theoph. Raynaudus, Erotem. de malis ac bonis Libris. n. 340, pag. 200, he quotes Charles Bouille, in the Life of Raimondus Lullius.

(51) Id. ib.

(52) Lud. Vives, de Cauſis corrupt. Artium, lib. 5. pag. 167.

(53) Clavigny de Sainte Honorine, of the Uſe of ſuſpected Books, pag. 48, 49.

(54) I find nothing more of it in Paul Jovius, Elog. Viror. bellicâ virtute illuſtr. lib. 4, pag. 334, than that Bajazet II, Peripatetici Averroïs opinionibus oblectabatur; — was much delighted with the Opinions of Averroës, the Peripatetic.

(55) Cardanus de Subtilit. lib. 9, pag. 682.

(56) See Reineſius, Epiſt. 15, ad Hofm. pag. 33.

(57) See Geſner's Bibliotheca, fol. 100 verſo.

(58) Rapin's Reflexions on Philoſophy, n. 30. pag. 363.

(59) See Voſſius's Bibliotheca Selecta, lib. 12, cap. 36.

(60) Numb. xxiii, 10.

* Du Perron. de l' Euchariſt. lib. 3, cap. 29, p. 973.

(61) Daillé's Reply to Father Adam, and to Cottiby, Part I, chap. 16, pag. 116.

(62) Du Pleſſis's Treatiſe of the Sacrament, pag. 1106.

† Averroës.

(63) Drelincourt. Def. 9, againſt the Miſſionaries on the Service of the Reformed Churches, p. 305, 306.

(64) Id. Dial. 6, p. 236.

(65) Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. 3, cap. 16, pag. 619.

That

Digitized by Google

only to have despised the Jewish, and the Christian, but also the Mahometan, Religion, which was what he outwardly professed. Several Authors have taken the Pains

That of Bacchus, to Wine: "Cum fruges Cererem, "vinum Liberum dicimus, genere nos quidem ser-
(66) Id. ib. "monis utimur usitato (66). —— When we call "Corn Ceres, and Wine Bacchus, we use them only "as customary Expressions." Father Lescalopier confesses, that This illustrious Pagan is very rational, when he argues in This manner, in regard to Ceres,
(67) Lescaloperius in Cic. de Nat. Deor. pag. 622. and Bacchus; "But, adds he (67), it is an extraordinary Wisdom, under Christianity, to eat what "we believe to be God, and we look upon Those "as guilty of a most senseless and stupid Infidelity, "who do not take the Words of Jesus Christ, This "is my Body, literally, and who, by way of Ridicule, object to us these Words of Cicero. Amentissimæ ac stolidissimæ infidelitatis damnamus hæreticos homines, qui Christi Domini, hoc est ipsius
(68) Id. ib. "veritatis, planissima disertissimaque verba, &c. (68).--- "Illud Academicum sublato cachinno procaciter usurpant, Academicorum, non Fidelium nepotes: Ecquem tam amentem esse putas qui illud, quo vescatur, Deum credat esse? At cum Apollolo Catholici respondemus: Nos stulti propter Christum;
(69) Id. ib. "utinam vos sitis prudentes in Christo (69). ------ "They, who reproach us with This Academic Jeer, "are the Descendants of the Academics, and not of "the Faithful. Who, think you, can be so mad, as "to take That, which he eats, to be God? We Ca-"tholics answer, with the Apostle, We are Fools "for Christ's sake, would to God ye were wise in "Christ." It is not our Business to examine here into the Merits of these Reflexions; we are only considering the Sentiments of Averroës. I observe, that Vossius has only spoken in general of this Philosopher's Contempt of the Christian Religion; he has not considered it in particular, as arising from Transubstantiation. "Quam parum viderit tantus "Philosophus in verâ & unicâ salutis viâ, arguit il-"lud quod diceret, malle se animam suam esse cum
(70) Vossius de Philosophor. Sectis, cap. 17. pag. 91. "Philosophis, quam cum Christianis (70). - - - How "little so great a Philosopher understood of the true "and only Means of Salvation, is evident from his "saying, That he had rather his Soul were with the "Philosophers, than with the Christians." Some say, that Averroës was born a Christian, but that he first turned Jew, and afterwards Mahometan. De Chri-
(71) Anton. Sirmondus, de Immortal. Animæ, pag. 29. stiano Judæus, de Judæo factus est Mahumetanus (71). Others say, that he wrote against the three great Legislators, Moses, JESUS CHRIST, and Mahomet; and that he supplied the Materials of the Book de tribus Impostoribus ----- of the three Impostors (72).
(72) Claud. Berigardus, in proœmio Circuli Pisani, pag. 5. Others observe, That he never believed there were any Devils (73); and that therefore Cardan does violence to his Doctrine, when he introduces an Evil Spirit, who calls himself one of his Disciples and Followers (74). Nothing can be pronounced with greater
(73) Naudé's Apology for great Men, pag. 320. Warmth, than This Sentence, or Wish, of Erasmus; Utinam prodisset ingens illud opus adversus Averroën impium, καὶ τρὶς κατάρατον (75). —— Wou'd to God, That great Work were once published against the impious, and thrice accursed, Averroës. He wrote this
(74) Cardan. de Subtilit. lib. 19, pag. 682. to one, who had informed him, that his great Book against Averroës was printed. "Alterum magnum "opus sectum in libros sex & quadraginta ex Peri-"patetică disciplinâ confecimus adversus Averroëm,
(75) Erasmus, Epist. 20, lib. 10, pag. 532. "quod etiam excusum est (76). —— The other great "Work, containing Forty six Books, on the Doctrine "of the Peripatetics, we have composed against Aver-"roës; and it is now printed." How comes it, then, that Erasmus wishes for the Publication of it? Is it
(76) Ambrosius Leo, Epist. ad Erasm. This Letter is the 28th of the 10th Book, among those of Erasmus, pag. 531. not a Sign, that, in answering his Friends, he had not always their Letters before him, and so forgot some Particulars in them? Be it as it will, his Wish puts me in mind of one of Petrarch's Letters, wherein he exhorts a learned Divine to confute Averroës, That mad Dog, who barks so furiously against JESUS CHRIST. Petrarch adds, that he had made some Collections for such a Work: but, that he neither had the Leisure, nor Knowledge, which was required for it. He calls the Silence of so many great Men, on this Occasion, impious: and desires that the Work, which he exhorts his Friend to compose, may be dedicated to himself, though he should happen to be in his Grave. "Extremum quæso, ut "cum primum perveneris, quò suspiras, quod citò "fore confido, contra canem illum rabidum Aver-"roëm, qui, furore actus infando, contra Dominum "suum CHRISTUM, contraque Catholicam Fidem "latrat, collectis undique blasphemiis ejus, quod ut "scis, jam cœperamus, sed me ingens semper, & "nunc solito major occupatio, nec minor temporis, "quam scientiæ, retraxit inopia, totis ingenii viribus "ac nervis incumbens, rem à multis magnis viris "impiè neglectam, opusculum unum scribas, & mi-"hi illud inscribas, seu tunc vivus ero, seu interim "abiero (77). —— My last Request is, that, as soon as "you are settled to your wish, which I hope you will "be very shortly, you will undertake, with your whole "Strength, what has hitherto been so impiously ne-"glected by so many great Men, a Work against That "mad Dog Averroës, who, transported with an im-"pious Rage, barks against his Lord CHRIST, and "against the Catholic Faith, wherein the World may "see a full Collection of all his Blasphemies, which, "you know, I had begun myself, but have been pre-"vented, by a continual Interruption of Business, now "greater than ever, and by want of Leisure, as "well as of Ability. Which Work I beg you will "dedicate to me, whether living or dead, at the "Time of it's Publication." Let us also quote Mr du Plessis; "Aristotle is said by many to have had but "little Religion, and his Interpreter, Averroës, none "at all —— (78). We all know how particularly
(78) Du Plef. Mornai, of the Truth of the Christian Religion, cap. 23, fol. 238, verso. "Averroës presses the Eternity of the World, and "an Universal Intellect, which can never be consistent with Piety (79)."

To finish This Picture of Averroës's Irreligion, we must not forget the Touches, which may be given it, from his Hypothesis concerning the Soul of Man. It is certain, he did not admit of any Rewards, or Punishments, after this Life; for, to speak properly, he taught the Mortality of the Human Soul. I am sensible, he acknowledged, that the Understanding was of an eternal Nature, and never died: But then, in this Respect, he did not consider it as a Substance appropriated to every Man; and, consequently, tho' he confessed, that the first Cause of the Intellectual Operations of Peter and Paul subsisted after their Death, yet, nevertheless, he believed, that all that had particularly belonged to Peter and Paul, as well to the Body, as the Soul, ceased to live, when they died. So that he denied Heaven and Hell. Vossius, who very well understood This Doctrine, ought not to have charged it absolutely on Mirandulanus, since That Author does not adopt it as true in itself, but only as a lawful Intepretation of Aristotle's Words (80). Durst any one have declared, in Print, for an impious Opinion, which must expose him to the Fires of the Inquisition? The Passage of Vossius, which I am going to quote, will serve to shew, that the most learned Writers do not always distinguish as they ought to do. Sometimes they impute to a Philosopher, not what he absolutely believes, but what he says must be believed, in consequence of the Opinions of Aristotle, or of some other Founder of a Sect. "Bifa-"riam jubet considerare hominis intellectum (Aver-"roës), ut est intellectus, & ut est forma, quam "obtinet, dum nobis unitur. Priori modo ait eum "à morte nostrâ superesse, quippe æternum: nec "dare homini essentiam, sed uniri illi per operatio-"nem suam phantasmatum interventu. Hanc sen-"tentiam etiam sequitur Antonius Mirandulanus "evers. singul. certam. lib. xxxii. sect. 1. & lib. "seq. sect. ii. & vi. Similiterque Cardanus; quem "propterea reprehendit, ac refellit Cæsar Scaliger "Exercit. cccvi (81), sect. 30. Et sanè ea sen-"tentia Scripturis è diametro aversatur; ut quæ "suam cuique animam, sua etiam à morte præmia, "& pœnas adsignent (82). —— He (Averroës) con-"siders the Intellect of Man in two Lights, as it is "the Intellect itself, and as it is the Form, which "is produced by it's Union with us. In the first "respect, he says, it survives us, being eternal; nor "does it make the Essence of a Man, but is only uni-"ted to him in it's Operation, by the Intervention of "Ideas. This Opinion is also followed by Antonius "Mirandulanus, evers. singul. certam. lib. 32. sect. 1. "& lib. 33. sect. 2. & 6. And also by Cardan, who "is animadverted on, and confuted by Cæsar Scaliger "Exerc.

(77) Franc. Petrarcha, Epistolâ ultimâ Libri fine titulo, pag. 636.

(70) Id ib. fol. 259.

(80) See, above, Remark [E], Citat. (23), what I have quoted from the Jesuits of Coimbra.

(81) It should be cccvii.

(82) Vossius de Origine & Progressu Idololatriæ, lib. 3, cap. 42, p. 952.

Digitized by Google

Pains to tranſlate his Works into Latin [I]. I was in hopes, that, before This Article went to the Preſs, I ſhould have had the Pleaſure of conſulting the Volume, where Don Nicholas Antonio has ſpoken ſo very amply of Averroës; but find myſelf diſappointed of it, and confined to the Abſtracts only of the Journaliſt of Paris. You are going to ſee what I take from thence. "Averroës, of Corduba, was in- "ſtructed, by his Father, in the Knowledge of the Law, and in the Religion of his "Country. He was exceſſive fat, tho' he allowed himſelf but one Meal a day; He paſſed "all his nights in the ſtudy of Philoſophy; and, when he found himſelf tired, diverted "himſelf with reading ſome Book of Poetry, or Hiſtory; He was never ſeen to "play, or ſeek any other Amuſement. The Errors he was accuſed of gave occa- "ſion for a Sentence, which deprived him of his Eſtate, and obliged him to recant. "After his Condemnation, he took a Voyage to Fez, and returned afterwards to "Corduba, where he continued, till, at the earneſt requeſt of the People, he was "recalled to Morocco, where he paſſed the remainder of his Life, and died in "1206 (d)." The Journaliſts of Leipſic intimate, That Don Nicolas Antonio, in this part of his Work, made great uſe of a Book of John Leo, publiſhed by Hottinger (e). So that, as to This I can go to the Fountain Head as well as He. I find, therefore, in this Work, that the People of Corduba raiſed Averroës to two high Offices, which his Father and Grandfather had enjoyed [K]: They were Thoſe of Chief Juſtice, and (d) Journal of the Learned of the 1*ſt of* July, 1697, pag. 475, Edit. of Holland.

(e) Acta Erudit. Lipſ. 1697, pag. 305.

"Exerc. 306. ſect. 30. And indeed this Opinion is "directly oppoſite to the Scriptures, which aſſign to "every one his own reſpective Soul, and his own "reſpective Rewards and Puniſhments after Death."

[I] Several Authors have taken the Pains to tranſlate his Works into Latin.] Here is a Paſſage of Huetius, which will inform us of the Names of ſome of Theſe Tranſlators, and at the ſame time of a Miſtake of Scaliger. "Vix ullos Averrois Arabi- "cos codices in Europa reperiri poſſe putabat Sca- "liger, ſolamque converſionem ab Armegando Bla- "ſio, Jacobo Mantino, Johanne Franciſco Burana, "Abrahamo de Balmis, Vitale Niſſo, Calo Calony- "mo, Johanne Bruyerino Campegio, Paulo Iſraë- "lita, aliiſque adornatam in lucem veniſſe. Ego "tamen his verſavi manibus Arabicum Averrois li- "brum, ex oriente huc olim à Poſtello devectum; "quod miror Scaligerum fugiſſe, Poſtello olim a- "micitiâ, & literariâ conſuetudine conjunctum. Eo "libro continentur in Logicam, Rhetoricam, & Poë- "ticam commentaria; quæ ad Jacobi Mantini, & "Abrahami de Balmis interpretationem à me expen- "ſa, fidem eorum & artem apertè mihi compro- "barunt (83). ----- Scaliger believed, that there was "ſcarce ſuch a Thing as an Arabic Copy of Averroës, "to be met with in all Europe, and that we had "nothing more than the Tranſlations of him, by "Armegandus Blaſius, Jacobus Mantinus, Johannes "Franciſcus Burana, Abrahamus de Balmis, Vitalis "Niſſus, Calus Calonymus, Johannes Bruyerinus "Campegius, Paulus Iſraëlita, and others. But I "myſelf have ſeen an Arabic Averroës, which was "formerly brought hither, out of the Eaſt, by Po- "ſtellus; and which one would wonder that Scaliger "ſhould never hear of, who was his intimate Friend "and Correſpondent in Learning. In this Book are "contained the Commentaries on Logic, Rhetoric, and "Poetry; which, upon my Examination of it, along "with the Tranſlations of Jacobus Mantinus, and "Abrahamus de Balmis, has convinced me both of "their Fidelity and Ability."

(83) Huetius, de Claris Interpretibus, p. 185.

Note, that certain Rabbins have tranſlated ſome of Averroës's Works into Hebrew (84). It is pro- per to obſerve here, what we meet with in Poſſevin. That Jeſuit affirms, That They, who were ſo fond of This Arabian Philoſopher, could only read him in pitiful Tranſlations, before the Edition, which John Baptiſta Bagolin got printed at Venice, by the Junta's in the Year 1552 (85). That Edition, continues he, cannot be worth much; for, as to one part of Averroës Works, Bagolin made uſe of a Tranſlation of a Jew, named Jacobus Mantinus: and, as for the other part, the preceeding Tranſlations were made uſe of, and even Thoſe, which Niphus and Zimara had never corrected in their Labours on Averroës. The Tranſlator Mantinus followed the Steps of Abraham de Balmis, who had ſucceeded very indifferently. So that we cannot promiſe ourſelves, that a Tranſlator who had ſuch bad Guides, has rightly expreſſed the Original: And, as Bagolin did not underſtand any thing of Arabic, he could be no judge of Thoſe Tranſlations (86). I am going to copy a long Pa- ſſage of Keckerman, where he wiſhes, that God would raiſe up a Tranſlator, who might deliver the Works of Averroës from the groſs and obſcure Bar- barity of former Interpretations. Then would ap- pear the great Services, which This Arabian has done to Philoſophy. "Quid & quantum Univerſæ Phi- "loſophiæ Averroës iſte profuerit, tum clarum per- "ſpectumque haberemus, ſi quem nobis Deus virum "excitaret, qui Latinam ejus verſionem ab iſta, qua "ſcatet undique, moleſta barbarie liberaret, & ſtylo "Latino ſaltem mediocri & intelligibili in gratiam "Philoſophiæ ſtudioſorum verteret. Ad quam rem "illa, quæ nuper Avicennam Arabicum nitidiſſimis "typis dedit clariſſima Typographia Medicea pluri- "mum adjumenti adferret, ſi lingua Arabica Aver- "roëm ederet, atque ita occaſionem viris ejus linguæ "peritis faciliorem præberet barbaræ verſionis emen- "dandæ, & ad intelligentiam traducendæ: alias cer- "tum eſt, Averroëm à multis neglectum iri, à qui- "bus legeretur diligenter, niſi tam multis locis non "intelligeretur. In Poſterioribus Anal. apparet ſin- "gularem operam præſtitiſſe & immortalitate dig- "niſſimam; Et Epitome Logicæ, quam ſcripſit, lau- "datiſſima eſt ob varias cauſas, ut & Logica ejus "quæſita. Nemo tam interpretum veterum videri "poteſt proximus Ariſtotelis menti atque hic Arabs "(87). —— How much all Philoſophy is indebted "to Averroës, can then only be known, when God "ſhall raiſe up a Genius, who will free our Latin "Tranſlations of him from the unintelligible Barba- "riſms every where to be met with, and render him "in That Language, in a Style, at leaſt tolerable, "and intelligible, for the Uſe of Students in Philo- "ſophy. To this purpoſe, the late beautiful Medicean "Edition would greatly contribute, if Averroës were "alſo printed in Arabic, which would give an eaſy "Opportunity to the Learned, in That Language, "to correct That barbarous Tranſlation, and make "it intelligible: otherwiſe it is certain, Averroës "will be neglected by many, who would read him "very diligently, if he was not unintelligible in ſo "many Places. In the latter Part of the Anal. it "appears, he has performed an excellent Work, and "ſuch as deſerves to be immortal: His Epitome of "Logic is much admired, and his Logic greatly ſought "after. None of the ancient Interpreters ſeem to "hit the Senſe of Ariſtotle ſo happily as this Ara- "bian." I doubt there are not many Perſons at this time of Day, who would make ſuch a Wiſh, or ground ſuch fair Hopes on a compleat Tranſlation of Averroës's Works, or give him ſuch great Com- mendations.

(87) Keckermannus in Præcognitis Logicis, Tract. 2, cap. 2, n. 32, pag. 103.

(84) See the Bibliotheca Rabinica of Father Bartolocci, Tom. 1, pag. 13, & ſeq.

(85) Poſſevinus, Biblioth. Select. lib. 12, cap. 16, pag. 43, Tom. 2.

(86) Id. ib.

[K] The People of Corduba raiſed Averroës to two high Offices, which his Father and Grandfather had enjoyed.] His Grandfather was one of the moſt famous Lawyers of his Time; he paſſed for a ſecond Malich, who was One of the four greateſt Caſuiſts of the Mahometan Religion; unus ex quatuor primariis Juris Muhammedanorum Canonici Interpretibus (88); and was moreover a learned Divine. It was He, whom the People of Corduba, ſhaking off the Yoke of their Prince, and deſiring to have the King of Morocco

(88) Hotting. Biblioth. Theol. lib. 2, cap. 3. pag. 272.

Digitized by Google

and of Chief Prieſt. He was very capable of diſcharging them, by his great Knowledge in the Law, and in Theology. After the Study of Theſe two Sciences, he applied himſelf to Natural Philoſophy, Phyſic, Aſtrology, and Mathematics. Whilſt he held the Offices before mentioned, the King of Morocco ſent Deputies to him, to offer him That of Judge of Morocco, and of all Mauritania, and on condition that he ſhould continue all the Poſts he was poſſeſſed of in Spain. This Propoſition pleaſing him, he went to Morocco; but, having ſettled Judges there as his Subſtitutes, he returned to Corduba. Wonders are related of his Patience, Liberality, and Mildneſs [L]. He referred all Criminal Cauſes to his Lieutenant, and never gave his Opinion in them. So many good Qualities did not hinder him from having many Enemies, who thwarted him extremely, and accuſed him of Hereſy; which brought upon him many troubleſome and grievous Conſequences [M]: however, he was honourably delivered Morocco their Maſter, deputed to That Monarch to negotiate That great Affair. He obtained, of him, all the Favours he asked, in behalf of Thoſe Mutineers, and returned to them, loaden with Preſents, and Compliments, having been created Chief Prieſt, and Chief Judge of the Kingdom of Corduba. He died, after having enjoyed Theſe Dignities a very long time, and left a Son, who was a Lawyer, and was preferred to the ſame Poſts, by the Votes of the Inhabitants of Corduba. This Election being confirmed by the King of Morocco, our Lawyer found himſelf inveſted with a high Character. We find, that the Authority of his Offices extended over all Andaluſia, and the Kingdom of Valencia. His Life was long, and pleaſant. After his Death, his Offices were conferred on his Son Averroës, by the Votes of the People (89). It is remarkable, that, at the Requeſt of ſeveral great Perſons, who implored his Clemency in favour of Ibnu Saigh, a famous Phyſician, who was detained in Priſon for the Crime of Hereſy, he ſet him at Liberty; during which Proceeding, Ibnu Giulgiul ſaid, The Father of Averroës does not know, that he has a Son, who will be a greater Heretic than This (90). And he was not deceived in it.

(89) Taken from a Book, De Viris quibuſdam illuſtribus apud Arabes, tranſlated into Latin by Joh. Leo Africanus, and published by Hottinger, Biblioth. Theolog. cap. 3. pag. 272.

(90) Ibid. pag. 269.

[L] Wonders are related of his Patience, Liberality, and Mildneſs.] There were ſeveral Perſons, among the Nobility and Learned Men at Corduba, who hated, and oppoſed, him. As he was one Day reading a Lecture, in the Auditory of the Civil Law, a Servant of one of his Enemies came and whiſpered ſomething in his Ear, which made him change Colour; but he anſwered only Yes, Yes. The next Day the ſame Servant returned to the Auditory, asked his Pardon, and confeſſed, before all the Students, that he had abuſed Averroës groſsly by whiſpering in his Ear: He anſwered, God bleſs you, for declaring, that I am provided with Patience. He gave him afterwards a certain Sum of Money, with this Advice, Do not That to others, which you have done to me. Though he was rich, both by his Marriage, and by his Offices, yet he was always in debt, becauſe he was very liberal to learned Men, who were neceſſitous, whether they loved, or hated, him. One Day, as his Friends reproved him for diſtributing his Wealth amongſt his Enemies, he ſaid to them, "Unhappy Men, as you are, you do not know, that to do "good to one's Relations, and Friends, is not an "Act of Liberality; a Man is inclined to That by "the Dictates of Nature: to be liberal, is to communicate our Subſtance to our Enemies; and, ſince "my Riches have not been acquired, either by my "Anceſtors, or myſelf, by Merchandiſe, or Art, or "Arms, but by the Profeſſion of Virtue, is it not reaſonable, that I ſhould diſpoſe of them in Acts of Virtue? I find, that I have not miſplaced them, for they "have converted my Enemies into Friends (91)." Add to this, what I have ſaid concerning his Sobriety, his Vigilancy, his Application to Study, &c (92). He would not conſent, that his youngeſt Son ſhould be advanced to the Honours, which were offered him at the Court of Morocco: and he was ſo far from rejoicing at the Reſpect, which was ſhewed to That young Man, the Deſign of which was to pleaſe the Father, that he was troubled at it in good earneſt (93). What pity is it, that ſo many Virtues, and ſo many good Qualities, were not accompanied with Orthodoxy, but on the contrary attended with the moſt enormous Errors! The Writings of his Adverſaries pretend not to defame him for any Thing, but his Hereſy, and the Panegyrics of his Admirers are founded only on his Virtue and Learning, &c. "Hic à multis laudatus, à nonnullis vero aliis vituperio affectus eſt "---Adverſarius ejus ſcripſit epiſtolam, quâ vituperabatur Averroës, eum de hæreſi infamando, & alius "ſcripſit aliam laudando eum de nobilitate, juſtitia "& doctrina: quæ quidem epiſtolæ ſunt longiſſimæ (94). —— He was commended by many, and "condemned by others. —— One of his Enemies wrote "a ſevere Letter againſt Averroës, defaming him on "account of Hereſy; and another Perſon wrote one in "Commendation of him for his Honour, Juſtice, and "Learning: Theſe Letters are very long."

(91) Hottinger. Biblioth. Theolog. lib. 2 c. 3. p. 273, 274.

(92) Above, in the Text of this Article, at the Paſſage out of the Journal des Sçavans, Citation (d).

(93) Apud Hotting. Biblioth. Theolog. pag. 274, 275.

(94) Ibid. pag. 279.

[M] His Enemies accuſed him of Hereſy; which brought upon him many - - - - grievous Conſequences.] Several of the Nobles and Doctors of Corduba, and particularly the Phyſician Ibnu Zoar, envied him, and reſolved to proſecute him for Hereſy. They procured ſome young Perſons to deſire of him a Lecture in Philoſophy; he agreed to it, and, in That Lecture, diſcovered to them his Philoſophical Belief. Inter legendum autem ſuam Philoſophalem fidem detexerunt (95). They caused an Information of it to be drawn up by a Notary, and accuſed him for an Heretic; which Information, being ſigned by an hundred Witneſſes, was ſent to Manſor, King of Morocco. That Prince, upon ſight of it, became incenſed againſt Averroës, and ſaid aloud; It is evident This Man is not of our Religion: Hunc noſtræ legis non eſſe patet. He cauſed all his Effects to be confiſcated, and condemned him to keep within the Jews Quarters. Averroës obeyed: but, going ſometimes to the Moſque to ſay his Prayers, and being one Day chaſed from thence by the Children with Stones, he retired from Corduba to Fez, where he kept himſelf concealed. But, in a few Days, he was diſcovered, and impriſoned; and they ſent to Manſor, to know what ſhould be done with him. That Prince aſſembled ſeveral Doctors of Divinity, and Civil Law, and enquired of them what Puniſhment ſuch a Man deſerved? Moſt of them anſwered, That, as an Heretic, he deſerved Death; but ſome repreſented, that it was not proper to execute This Puniſhment on a Perſon, who was chiefly known from his Character of a Civilian, and a Divine; Becauſe, ſaid they, the World will not underſtand it to be the Condemnation of an Heretic, but of a Civilian and a Divine: And the Conſequence will be, I. That the Infidels will not embrace our Faith, to the Diſcouragement of our Religion. II. Complaints will be made, that the African Doctors ſeek opportunity to take away one anothers Lives. It would be better to make him retract before the Gate of the great Moſque, where he ſhall be asked, if he repents: Our Advice is, that, if he repents, your Majeſty ſhould pardon him; for there is no Man on Earth that is without a Fault. Manſor was pleaſed with this Counſel, and gave Orders to the Governor of Fez to put it in Execution. Accordingly, our Philoſopher was conducted, on a Friday, to the Gate of the Moſque, at the Hour of Prayer, and placed bareheaded on the higheſt Step, where all Thoſe, who entred into the Moſque, ſpit in his Face. Prayer being ended, the Doctors, with the Notaries, and the Judge, with his Aſſiſtants, came, and asked this miſerable Wretch, if he repented of his Hereſy: he anſwered in the Affirmative; whereupon he was ſent back, and continued at Fez, where he read Lectures in the Civil Law. Manſor, having permitted him, ſome time after, to return to Corduba, he accordingly went thither, where he lived miſerably, being deprived of his Eſtate and Books. In the mean time, the Judge, who had ſucceeded him, acquitted himſelf ſo ill in his Office, and Juſtice, in general, was ſo badly adminiſtred in That Country, that

(95) Ibid. pag. 276.

Digitized by Google

delivered from them before he died. His Anſwer to a young Gentleman, who deſired him to beſtow his Daughter on him, is curious enough [N]. A very remarkable Story is told concerning the effect of an Imprecation he pronounced againſt his youngeſt Son [O]. He compoſed a great many Amorous Poems; which, when he grew old, he threw into the Fire (f) [P]. I cannot tell from whence Du Verdier Vau-Privas borrowed theſe Words: Averroës was broke by a Wheel placed on his Breaſt. You that the People groaned under it. Manſor, being willing to redreſs This Grievance, aſſembled his Council, where he propoſed to re-eſtabliſh Averroës; and, moſt of the Council being of the ſame Opinion, he ſent him an Order to come immediately to Morocco, to take upon him again his Station of chief Magiſtrate. Averroës departed forthwith, with all his Family, and paſſed the reſt of his Days at Morocco (96), where he was buried without the Curriers Gate (97), and where his Tomb and Epitaph were to be ſeen a very long Time after (98).

(f) Taken from a Book, De Viris quibuſdam illuſtribus apud Arabes, tranſlated by Joh. Leo Africanus, and publiſhed by Hottinger, in chap. 3. of the 2d Book of his Biblioth. Theol.

(96) Ibid. pag. 276, & ſeq.

(97) Ibid. pag. 279.

We ought not to forget his Anſwer to Thoſe, who asked him about the State of his Soul during This Perſecution. That State, ſaid he, both pleaſed, and diſpleaſed me: I was pleaſed with being diſcharged from the troubleſome Functions of Judicature, but I was diſpleaſed at being oppreſſed by falſe Witneſſes. He added, I have never wiſhed to be reſtored to my Office, nor have I accepted it again without my Innocence being firſt cleared (99).

(98) Ibid.

(99) Ibid. pag. 278.

[N] His Anſwer to a young Gentleman, who deſired him to beſtow his Daughter on him, is curious enough.] " Give me her, ſays this Gallant, and I will give " you her weight in Gold. O domine Judex, da mihi " in uxorem filiam tuam, & quanti eam ponderave- " ris itidem aurum tibi tradam (100). Can you tell, " anſwered Averroës, whether my Daughter be hand- " ſome, or homely? do you know whether you " ſhall like her? The other replied, I have ſeen her " Copy, I mean her Brother (101). I am afraid, " ſaid Averroës, your too great Heat is hurrying you " into a blind Bargain (102). The young Man went away aſhamed, and never had the Courage to make a ſecond Attack. That Daughter was afterwards married by her Father to a Relation of the King of Morocco (103). When I ſaid, that Averroës's Anſwer was curious, I had an Eye to two things; in the firſt place to the Circumſtances, and in the next to the Obſcurity of the Tranſlator. I ſuſpect the Paſſage to be wrong rendred. He was not well acquainted with the Latin Tongue: for, in all probability, there was ſome better Turn in the Arabic words, than what he has given us in the Tranſlation; and therefore the Learned, who are curious, will like to have the Examination of this little Fact propoſed to them. It is ſomething very extraordinary to meet with a Gallant, who will barter his Gold, weight for weight, againſt a Maid he never ſaw. The Price muſt riſe very high, even in Spain, where People are much leaner, than in many other Countries. Averroës would have done well to have asked the Gallant this Queſtion; Do you know whether my Daughter be ſmall, or luſty? This had been a very material Conſideration; becauſe, in the ſecond Caſe, the Price muſt be higher, and yet the Value lower. According to our Cuſtoms, nothing would be more wonderful, than a Gallant, who had never ſeen the Daughter of the chief Magiſtrate of the place, where he lived: but, amongſt the Mahometans, nothing is more common: they do not permit their Daughters to ſhew themſelves at the Windows and Doors of their Houſes, nor to run about from one Houſe to another, and receive Viſits every Day. And yet it is certainly remarkable, that this noble Corduban (104) ſhould know no better, than by Conjecture, whether Averroës's Daughter was handſome. Theſe are ſome of the Circumſtances, to which I had an Eye.

(100) Ibid. pag. 275.

(101) Comparationem ejus vidi, fratrem ſcil. ejus. Ibid.

(102) Timeo te eam non cognoviſſe ob impetum tuum. Ibid. pag. 276.

(103) Ibid.

(104) Juvenis quidam ex nobilibus civitatis. Ibid. pag. 275.

[O] A very remarkable Story is told, concerning the Effect of an Imprecation he pronounced againſt his youngeſt Son.] The following Quotation, which compoſes this Remark, loſes moſt of it's Beauties in a Tranſlation. It is obſervable from it, that Averroës wiſhed rather to ſee the Death of his Son, than his diſobedience, and that, thereupon, he uttered an Imprecation, which That young Man outlived but ten Months. This long Latin Paſſage is not taken from Hottinger; for I find it more correct in another Author. " De Verroïs carminum efficacia, hanc " hiſtoriam hiſtoricus Arabs refert: Quadam die eo " exiſtente cum amicis quibuſdam, colloquentibuſque, " ingreſſus eſt filius ejus cum aliquibus ſociis juveni- " bus, quos cum animadvertiſſet Averroës, protulit " duo carmina, hujus ſenſus: Rapuerunt pulchritu- " dines tuæ capreolo pulchritudinem ſuam, donec " miratus eſt omnis pulcher in te: Tibi eſt pectus " ejus, & oculi ejus, & ſtupor ejus; Verum cras " cornua ſua patri tuo erunt. Poſt quæ dixit, Sit " maledicta peregrinatio: quando eram juvenis, ali- " quando patrem meum puniebam: Nunc autem Se- " nex filium meum punire non poſſum. At deum " deprecor, ut priuſquam videam aliquid contra vo- " luntatem meam, eum mori faciat. Sicque priuſ- " quam tranſirent menſes decem filius ejus mortuus " eſt, & major ſolus remanſit, qui judex opinionis & " ſectæ effectus eſt (105). —— Of the Power of " Averroës's Poetry, an Arabic Hiſtorian relates this " Story. One Day, as he was converſing with cer- " tain Friends, his Son came in with ſome of his wild " Companions, which Averroës taking notice of, ſpoke " two Verſes to This Effect. Thy own Beauties could " not content Thee, thou haſt ſtript the wild Goat " of his Beauties, and They, who are as beautiful as " thyſelf, admire thee. Thou haſt got his wanton " Heart, his letcherous Eyes, and his ſenſeleſs Head, " but to morrow thou ſhalt find thy Father will have " his puſhing Horns. After which he ſaid, curſed be " all Extravagancies: When I was young, I ſometimes " puniſhed my Father: Now I am old, I cannot puniſh " my Son. But I beg of God to deprive him rather of " Life, than ſuffer him to be diſobedient. Accordingly, " within ten Months, his Son died, and the eldeſt " only remained, who became a Defender of his Opi- " nion and Sect." Bartholin, who furniſhes me with this Paſſage, unreaſonably imputes the great Effect, we are ſpeaking of, to the Philoſopher's Verſes, which ought only to be imputed to the Imprecation pronounced by Averroës in Proſe. Compilers have collected many Examples of the Effects of ſuch Imprecations (106).

(105) Tho. Bartholinus, de Medicis Poëticis, pag. 105, 106.

[P] When he grew old, he threw his amorous Verſes into the Fire.] His Speech, which accompanied This Act, is full of wiſe Reflexions: A Man, ſays he, will always be judged by his Words; and, if I have ſpoken ill, I will not diſcover my Folly: If my Verſes pleaſed any One, He would take me for a wiſe Man, and I do not acknowledge that I am ſo. You ſee here a good Character. Averroës, having committed a Fault, was willing to repair it; and equally declined both the Approbation, which he thought he did not deſerve, and the Cenſure he feared he might deſerve. His Love Verſes would have met with a numerous Set of Admirers, who would have bleſſed his Memory, and even adored it. Ovid and Catullus are Examples of this. But he deſired none of their Praiſes. Others would have thought it very indecent, that ſuch a great Perſon, ſuch an excellent Lawyer and Philoſopher, ſhould have wrote Love Verſes. But he has prevented their Cenſure, by taking Care, that no One ſhould read what he had compoſed on ſuch a Subject. All his other Poetical Works are loſt, except a very ſmall Piece, wherein he declares, that, when he was young, he was diſobedient to his Reaſon; but, when he was old, he followed it: Upon which he forms this Wiſh: Would to God I had been born old, and that from my Youth I had been in the State of Perfection. This ſeems to me to be the true Senſe of theſe Words of John Leo (107). De ſuis quidem Carminibus tantùm duo reperiuntur ad verbum ſignificantibus: " Inobe- " diens enim fui voluntati meæ juvenis, ac, quando " tempus cum calvitie ſenectuteque agitavit me, tum " parui voluntati meæ. Utinam natus fuiſſem ſenex, " & in juventute abſolutus (108)." What Wiſh could be more becoming a Philoſopher?

(106) See Camerarius, in his Hiſtorical Meditations, Tom. 3, Book 5, chap. 6. and Tom. 3, Book 2, chap. 15, 16.

(107) Hottinger. Bibl. Theolog. pag. 278.

(108) In Juventute abſolutus. Perhaps the Tranſlator put in inſtead of ab, and ſo it might be tranſlated Exempt from Youth.

Let us now relate what Averroës did, in regard to the amorous Verſes of another Writer. There

I was

You will find them in a Chapter, which he entitles, Of ſeveral Learned Men, Ancient and Modern, who have died miſerably (g). I was ſurprized to find ſo very little Notice taken of this famous Philoſopher, in the Oriental Library of Mr d'Herbelot [Q]. There was reaſon to believe, that a Man, of ſuch a vaſt Knowledge in Arabic Learning, would have produced a thouſand fine Things concerning the Doctrines and Fortune of Averroës; but, inſtead of this, we meet with a Brevity, which is amazing, and ſo far from inſtructing us in what we want to know, that it rather confounds what we knew before.

(g) It is the 28th of the 2d Book of his Diverſes Leçons.

was, at Corduba, a Philoſopher, Phyſician, and Aſtrologer, whoſe Name was Abraham Ibnu Sahal, who, by the Caprice of his ill Fortune, fell in Love, and fell to writing Verſes, without conſidering the Doctoral Dignity. Poſtea ob diſgratiam ſuæ fortunæ amore capitur, & dignitate doctorum poſtpoſitâ cœpit edere carmina (109). The Jews, his Brethren in Religion, adviſed him not to publiſh Thoſe wanton Verſes. He returned them a prophane Anſwer in Poetry. Whereupon they applied to the Authority of the Magiſtrate; and, as Averroës was the chief Judge of the Country, they addreſſed themſelves to him. They repreſented to him, that This Abraham had corrupted the whole City with his Poetry, particularly the Youth of both Sexes, and that nothing elſe was ſung at Nuptial Entertainments. Averroës was angry with Our Poet, and forbad him to proceed in ſuch Compoſitions, under ſuch Penalties as the Caſe ſhould require, or the Judge think proper. Being told, that This Prohibition did not put a ſtop to the Jew's Vein of Poetry, and deſiring to know the Truth of it, he ſent a Perſon, he could truſt, to the Poet's Houſe, who returned with this Report: I found no Body at his Houſe, but your eldeſt Son, writing out ſome of his Poems. He added, There is not in all Corduba a Man, Woman, or Child, who has not learned ſome of the Verſes of Abraham Ibnu Sahal. Upon this, Averroës proceeded no farther: Can one ſingle Hand, ſaid he, ſtop a thouſand Mouths? Obſerving one Day at a Bookſellers, that the Alcoran was ſold but for a Ducat, and that the Poems of This Jew went off at one word for ten Piſtols (110), he cried out, This City will ſoon be deſtroyed, for I have ſeen the People's Contempt for holy things, and their fondneſs for ſuch as are diſhoneſt and forbidden. " Tunc dixit Averrois, omnibus adſtantibus, Scitote, " hanc Civitatem mox ruituram, quoniam vidi po- " pulum, quæ ad fidem pertinent, viluiſſe: atque " prohibita, atque inhoneſta grata extitiſſe, majoriſ- " que feciſſe. Et ſicut dixerat ſucceſſit: Non adhuc " elapſis quinquaginta annis Chriſticolæ oppugnarunt " Cordubam, & multas alias civitates (111). —— And " as he ſaid, ſo it happened; for, in leſs than fifty " Years, the Chriſtians took This, and ſeveral other " Cities." From hence it may be gathered, that ſome Vices prevail in all Countries, Religions, and Ages. The Mahometans of Spain acted the ſame part, in the XIIth Century, which a great many Chriſtians of Paris have done in the XVIIth. If they are to buy Mr Godeau's Pſalms, they will cheapen a long time, and never bargain, unleſs at a very low Price; but, for the Satirical Parnaſſus, they will never make one Word, but give whatever Price the Seller ſhall ask. Let us alſo obſerve, that we find Examples of good Actions in each Country, Age, and Religion. If Chriſtians, in theſe latter Ages, have burnt their prophane Poems, their Love and wanton Verſes (112), Averroës did the like, under the Profeſſion of Mahometiſm: I ſay under the Profeſſion; for it is ſuſpected, that inwardly he was of no Religion at all (113). His Prediction of the Miſeries of Corduba does not prove the contrary; for it is natural enough to believe, that ſo great a Degree of Degeneracy, and Corruption of Taſte, as to occaſion a Contempt of what is eſteemed Holy, and a Fondneſs of what is thought diſhoneſt, muſt neceſſarily throw a City into very great Diſorders.

(109) Hotting. Biblioth. Theol. pag. 288.

(110) Prædictus emptor nihil reſpondens, ſed manus crumenæ imponens decem aureos numeravit & perſolvit, & librum accepit, & in pace receſſit. ---- The Buyer ſaid nothing, but put his Hand in his Pocket, and told out ten Piſtoles, and took the Book, and went away contented. Ib. p. 290.

(111) Ibid.

(112) Pic. Mirandulanus did it; ſee the End of the Remark [D], of the Article ADONIS. Petrarch had a Mind to do ſo: See Mr Baillet's Judgment on the Poets, Tom. 3, pag. 24. He repented that he had wrote ſuch Poems: See his third Letter of the eighth Book of his Familiar Letters, pag. 278.

(113) See the Remarks [H] and [M].

[Q] I was ſurprized to find ſo very little Notice taken of This famous Philoſopher, in the Oriental Library of Mr d'Herbelot.] Firſt, It is ſurprizing, that, in this Work, the Author has not placed Our Arabian Philoſopher under the Name, which has been given him by all weſtern Nations, I mean That of Averroës. I grant, that This is not the true Name, but One very much corrupted by Confuſion of Dialects: But have we not ſufficient Reaſon to continue This Name in our Dictionaries, ſince he was ſcarce ever called by any other in This weſtern Part of the World. If it be thought more proper to give This Philoſopher's Article under the Arabic Name, in it's true Orthography, Notice, at leaſt, ſhould be given of it, under the Word Averroës; and, conſequently, d'Herbelot, by not doing ſo, is guilty of a very material Omiſſion. In the Body of his Work, we find neither Averroës, nor Aben Roës, nor Aben-Roïs. We are obliged, therefore, to have recourſe to the Index, which is not very agreeable. But what is to be found there? Averroës (114), with a Reference to Pages 303, 719, 815? At Page 303, we find only, that Averroës was one of thoſe Philoſophers, who believed, that the World was Eternal. At Page 815, we find only, that Mohammed Al-Gazeli believed, that Averroës's Principles were very contrary to Thoſe of the Muſſulman's. But, at Page 719, we find the Article of our Philoſopher, under the Word ROSCHD. That Article does not contain twenty Lines; the latter half of which is this: " Averroës was the firſt, who tranſlated Ariſtotle out " of Greek into Arabic, before the Jews made their " Tranſlation; and, for a long time, we had no " other Text of Ariſtotle, than That of This great " Philoſopher's Arabic Tranſlation, who, afterwards, " added to it very ample Commentaries, which St " Thomas, and the other Schoolmen, made uſe of, " before the Greek Originals of Ariſtotle, and of his " Commentators, were known to us (115)." I find here many things, to which I can give no Credit; for I obſerve it to be the Opinion of learned Men, that Averroës was far from being Maſter of the Greek Tongue (116). I know, farther, that the Caliphs Almanzor, Abdalla, and Almamon, who preceeded Averroës ſome Centuries, cauſed a great many Greek Books to be tranſlated into Arabic (117). This, therefore, makes it improbable, that Averroës was the firſt Tranſlator of Ariſtotle into Arabic, even though we ſhould ſuppoſe him ſufficiently ſkilled in Greek. Alpharabius, who flouriſhed in the Xth Century, found Ariſtotle's Phyſics in Meſopotamia (118). He is alſo generally eſteemed the Tranſlator of Ariſtotle's Analytics, according to Mr d'Herbelot (119). Rigord ſays, That a Council, held at Paris, in the Year 1209, condemned ſome of Ariſtotle's Books to be burnt, which were explained in the Colleges, and had been lately brought from Conſtantinople, and tranſlated out of Greek into Latin. " Delati de novo " à Conſtantinopoli & à Græco in Latinum tranſla- " ti (120)." This does not agree with Mr d'Herbelot, becauſe it proves, that, about the Time, that Averroës died, they made uſe, at Paris, of a Tranſlation of Ariſtotle from the Greek. It is certain, that, before the middle of the XIIth Century, Ariſtotle's Philoſophy was taught in the Univerſity of Paris. See the Complaints of St Bernard, related by Mr de Launoi (121). This ſame Paſſage of Rigord ſhews, that the Greek Books of Ariſtotle were in France, in the time of Averroës. Laſtly, I wiſh ſomebody would name me any Tranſlators of Ariſtotle, and Averroës's Arabic Commentary, who lived between Averroës and Thomas Aquinas. All the Latin Tranſlators of This Arabic Philoſopher, that are come to my Knowledge, are later than That Angelical Doctor. I would not be underſtood to reject what I have read in ſome Authors, that the Emperor Frederic II, who flouriſhed before the Time of St Thomas, and after Averroës, cauſed the Books of This Arabian to be tranſlated into Latin. This may be inferred from theſe Words of Cuſpinian: " Libros multos ex Græco & ex Ara- " bico Latinos fieri curavit, inter quos & Ariſtotelis " volumina fuerunt & multa Medicorum (122). —— " He procured many Books to be tranſlated out of " Greek and Arabic, into Latin, among which were " Ariſtotle's Works, and many others, in Phyſic;" and from This Paſſage of Wolphgang Hungerus, in his Notes on Cuſpinian (123). " Curavit quoque eas " fieri tranſlationes operum Ariſtotelis, & ſcriptorum " Medicinæ

(114) It is an Error of the Preſs.

(115) D' Herbelot's Biblioth. Orient. pag. 719, col. 1.

(116) See, above, pag. 383, Citations (5) and (9).

(117) See Father Rapin's Compariſon of Plato and Ariſtotle, p. 403, 404. See alſo Mr d' Herbelot's Biblioth. Orient. p. 546.

(118) Rapin's Compariſon of Plato and Ariſtotle, pag. 404.

(119) Herbelot's Biblioth. Orient. pag. 337.

(120) Rigordus in vitâ Philippi Auguſti apud Launoium de variâ Ariſtot. Fortunâ, cap. 1, pag. 6.

(121) Launoius, ibid. cap. 3, pag. 24, & ſeq.

(122) Cuſp. in Fred. II. init. p. 419.

(123) Hunger. Annotat. in Cuſp. pag. 150.

Digitized by Google

" Medicinæ ex lingua Græca & Arabica, qui in " hunc uſque diem in ſcholis lectæ ſunt, atque eti- " amnum leguntur ; & Bononiam eaſdem miſit, " ut Academiæ offerrentur, quod ejus ex Epiſtolis " apparet. —— He cauſed Thoſe Tranſlations to be " made of the Works of Ariſtotle, and other Writings " in Phyſic, out of the Greek and Arabic Languages, " which have been read ever ſince in the Schools, and " are in uſe at this Time ; and ſent them to Bononia, " as a Preſent to That Univerſity, as appears from his " Letters." See alſo the Chronicle of Carion (124), where he ſays expreſsly, that This Emperor cauſed to be tranſlated the Almageſt of Ptolomy, and ſeveral Works of Ariſtotle, Galen, Avicenna, &c. (125) ; you will find the ſame Names in the Theatre of Matthias (126), under the Quotation of the ſeventh Book of Aventine's Annals, and of the Chronicle of Carion. I do not know how it happens, that Averroës is not named ; however, I take him to have been one, amongſt the Authors, tranſlated, by the Care of This Emperor. But, as I ſaid before, I ſhould be very glad to know the Names of the Perſons employed in theſe Tranſlations. One thing is worth remarking, in Mr Herbelot's Bibliotheque, which is, that the Mahometans look upon the Doctrine of Thoſe who, admitting a Firſt Mover, maintain alſo, that the World is eternal, as mere Atheiſm (127). This Doctrine is aſcribed to the moſt famous Philoſophers, who have flouriſhed among the Arabians, to our Averroës, to Avicenna, and to Alpharabius (128). The Chriſtians generally paſs the ſame Judgment upon This Doctrine, which, certainly, can never be ſupported, without treating the Holy Scripture as a Fable.

(124) Pag. 480.

(125) Percer in Chronic. Carion, lib. 5, pag. 684.

(126) Pag. 956.

(127) Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. pag. 337, col. 2.

(128) Id. ib. & pag. 303, col. 1.

AUGE (DANIEL d'), in Latin Augentius, was born at Villeneuve-l'Archevêque, in the Dioceſe of Sens in Champaigne (a). He lived in the XVIth Century, and was eſteemed for his Learning and Writings [A]. He was appointed, in the Year 1574 (b), to the Office of his Majeſty's Greek Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Paris, which was vacant by the Death of Lewis le Roi (c). He had been Tutor to the Son of That Francis Olivier, who was Chancellor of France. This appears from the Epiſtle Dedicatory of a Book to Antony Olivier, Biſhop of Lombés, and Uncle to his Pupil (d). It is dated at Paris, the Firſt of March 1555. I am not certain as to the Time of his Death ; I only know, that Francis Parent, his Succeſſor in the Greek Profeſſorſhip, entred upon That Office in the Year 1595 (e).

(a) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franç. p. 68.

(b Du Breul, Antiquitez de Paris, pag. 566.

(c) Ibid.

(d) It is the Poem of Sannazarius, intituled, De Morte Chriſti Lamentatio. Dan. d'Auge printed it at Paris, with his Notes, in the Year 1557, in 4to.

(e) Du Breul, Antiquit. de Paris, p. 566.

[A] He was eſteemed for his Writings.] They are A Conſolatory Oration on the Death of Meſſire Francis Olivier, Chancellor of France, printed at Paris in 1560 ; Two Dialogues of Poetic Invention, of the true Knowledge of the Art of Oratory, and of the Fiction of Fable, printed at Paris, in 1560 ; A Diſcourſe on the Arrêt of the Parliament of Dole in Burgundy, concerning a Man accuſed and convicted of being a Were-wolf † (1) ; The Inſtitution of a Chriſtian Prince, tranſlated from the Greek of Syneſius, Biſhop of Cyrene, with an Oration on true Nobility, tranſlated from the Greek of Philo Judæus, printed, at Paris, in 1555 ; Four Homilies of St Macarius, the Egyptian, printed at Paris, and afterwards at Lyons, in 1559 ; An Epiſtle to the Noble and Virtuous Youth, Authony Thelin, Son of the Noble William Thelin (2), Author of the Book intituled, Divine Eſſays, wherein is ſhewn the true Patrimony and Inheritance, which Fathers ought to leave their Children. This Epiſtle is printed at the beginning of the Divine Eſſays, at Paris, in 1565. He reviſed and corrected them. He publiſhed alſo A Tranſlation, into French, of the moſt beautiful Sentences, and Forms of Expreſſion, in Cicero's Familiar Epiſtles, printed at Paris, in 1556 (3). This is all I find in la Croix du Maine, and in du Verdier. I do not meet with any mention of the Notes on the Poem of Sannazarius, which I have ſpoken of, in the Body of this Article.

† One who is ſaid to transform himſelf into a Wolf.

(1) Le Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 63.

(2) He was a Gentleman of Auvergne.

(3) Du Verdier, Bibl. Franç. pag. 248.

Of all the Works of Daniel d'Auge, I eſteem moſt curious the Diſcourſe on the Arrêt, which condemns the Were-Wolf. Bodin ſays, This Arrêt was paſſed by the Parliament of Dole, the eighteenth of January, 1583, againſt Giles Garnier of Lyons, and was printed at Orleans, at Paris, and at Sens. He relates the principal Circumſtances. " Namely, That " the ſaid Garnier, on St Michael's Day, in " the Shape of a Wolf, did ſeize upon a young " Girl of ten or twelve Years old, near the Wood " of Serre, in a Vineyard of Châtenoy, about a " quarter of a League from Dole, and there killed, " and tore her, as well with his Hands, reſembling " Paws, as with his Teeth, and eat the Fleſh of her " Thighs and Arms, and carried ſome to his Wife : " That, in the ſame Form, a Month after this, he " took another Girl, and killed her, and would " have eaten her, if he had not been prevented by " three Perſons, as he himſelf confeſſed : That, fif- " teen Days after, he ſtrangled a young Child of " ten Years of Age, in a Vineyard of Greſiſans, " and eat the Fleſh of the Thighs, Legs, and Belly : " And that, in the Shape of a Man, and not of " a Wolf, he killed another little Boy, of the Age " of twelve or thirteen Years, in the Wood of the " Village of Perouſe, with a Deſign to have eaten " him, if he had not been hindered, according to " his own free Confeſſion. He was condemned to " be burnt alive, and the Arrêt was executed (4)."

(4) Bodin, Demonomanie des Sorciers, Book 2, cap. 6, pag. 208, 209. Edit. of Lyons, 1598, 8vo.

ST AUGUSTIN, one of the moſt illuſtrious Fathers of the Church, was born at Tagaſte in Africa, the Thirteenth of November, 354. His Father, whoſe Name was Patricius, was but a mean Citizen of That Place ; his Mother was named Monica, and remarkable for her Virtue. Their Son had no Reliſh for Learning [A]. However, his Father put him to it againſt his Inclination, reſolving to advance him in this way, and ſent him to ſtudy Claſſical Learning at Madaura. At the Age of Sixteen, he took him from thence, and ſent him to ſtudy Rhetoric at Carthage. St Auguſtin went thither towards the end of the Year 371 (a). He made a great Progreſs in the Sciences,

(a) Du Pin's Hiſtory of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, Tom. 3, pag. 158.

[A] He had no reliſh for Learning.] By the Picture St Auguſtin himſelf has drawn of his Youth, it appears, that he was what we call a Rake : He ſhunned the School as the Plague ; he loved nothing but Gaming and public Shews ; he ſtole all he could from his Father ; he invented a thouſand Lies to avoid the Rod, which they were obliged to make uſe of, to puniſh his Licentiouſneſs (1). Furta etiam faciebam de cellario parentum & de menſa, vel gulâ imperitante, vel ut haberem quod darem pueris ludum ſuum mihi, quo pariter utique delectabantur, tamen vendentibus —— Fallendo innumerabilibus mendaciis & pædagogum & magiſtros & parentes, amore ludendi, ſtudio ſpectandi nugatoria, & imitandi ludicra inquietudine. This confutes what Leo Allatius affirms ; " That St Au- " guſtin, at twelve Years of Age, had read and un- " derſtood all Ariſtotle's Books, relating to Logic " and Theory, of himſelf, without the Aſſiſtance of " any Maſter ; and that, at the ſame Age, he had " compoſed ſome excellent Writings, to diſcover and " confute the Errors of ſeveral Authors (2)." The Writer, who took upon him the Name of Chriſtianus Liberius, has ſaid the ſame thing (3). Mr Baillet confutes them both very ſolidly, by St Auguſtin's Confeſſions, and diſcovers the Cauſe of their Miſtake. " Let us believe, ſays he (4), that They, who gave " the firſt Occaſion for This Miſtake, read Twelve " inſtead of Twenty, in the Place, where St Auguſtin " ſpeaks of it. This Saint acknowledges *, that he " was near Twenty Years of Age, when a Treatiſe

(1) Auguſt. Confeſſ. lib. 1, cap 19.

WHETHER St Auguſtin was learned, and an Author, from his Youth ?

(2) In Apol. Urbanis, p. 146. apud Baillet of Famous Children, p. 59.

(3) Chriſt. Liberius, de ſcrib. & leg. libris, pag. 178, apud Baillet, ibid.

(4) Baillet, ibid. pag. 60, 61.

* Confeſſ. " of lib. 4. c. 16.

Digitized by Google

Sciences, but gave himſelf up to Debauchery with Women [B]. He had a mind to read the Holy Scriptures; but the Simplicity of the Style diſguſted him: he was yet too great an Admirer of the Pagan Eloquence, to have a Taſte for the Bible. He had, in general, a great Deſire to diſcover Truth; and, being in hopes of finding it in the Sect of the Manicheans, he engaged in it, and maintained moſt of it's Doctrines with much Fervency. Having lived ſome time in Carthage, he returned to Tagaſte, where he taught Rhetoric with ſo much Applauſe, that his Mother was congratulated upon having ſo admirable a Son. This did not hinder the holy Woman from being extremely afflicted on account of her Son's Hereſy, and Debauchery. He returned to Carthage in the Year 380; where he taught Rhetoric with a great deal of Reputation. It was at this time he fixed his Incontinency, which had been rambling after various Objects: He took a Concubine, to whom he kept very conſtant, and had, by her, a Son, whom he named Adeodatus, the Gift of God, and who had very good Parts [C]. He became a little wavering in his Sect, becauſe he could meet with no ſatisfactory Anſwer to the Difficulties he had to propoſe [D]: however,

" of Ariſtotle fell into his Hands, called The Ten " Categories, which he had often heard mentioned, " at Carthage, with great Applauſe. - - - - - He read " it alone, and underſtood it perfectly well: ſo that " afterwards conferring about it with Thoſe, who " ſaid, they had learned it with much Pains from " excellent Maſters, who had not only explained it " to them in Words, but alſo by Figures, drawn " on the Sand, he found he had comprehended it " as well by himſelf. He ſays alſo, that, at the " ſame Age, he read, and underſtood, without any " Help, all Books of the Liberal Arts, which he could " meet with. He ſays the ſame thing of the Ma- " thematics, and particularly of Geometry, Muſic, " and Arithmetic.

[B] He gave himſelf up to Debauchery with Women.] He began very early; for, at ſixteen Years of Age, he followed the Dictates of That unruly Paſſion; " Ubi eram, (ſays he), & quam longè exulabam à " deliciis domus tuæ, anno illo ſexto decimo æta- " tis carnis meæ, cum accepit in me ſceptrum, & " totas manus ei dedi veſaniæ libidinis, licentioſæ " per dedecus humanum, illicitæ autem per leges " tuas (5)? —— Where was I, and how long was " I baniſhed from the Delights of thy Houſe, in That " ſixteenth Year of my Fleſh, when I ſubmitted to " it's Empire, and gave myſelf up entirely to all " it's violent Luſts, which diſgrace our Natures, " and are ſinful by thy Laws?" He ſpent That Year in Idleneſs, becauſe his Father not being then able to provide for his Expences at Carthage, was by degrees making up a Sum ſufficient to ſend him thither. The Joy of This good Father was remarkable, upon diſcovering, as he was bathing with his Son, an uncommon Forwardneſs of Nature (6). He could not forbear acquainting his Wife with the News; and had the Pleaſure of fancying himſelf already a Grandfather, upon ſeeing his Son would ſo ſoon be fit to make him one. ——— Quinimo ubi me ille pater in balneis vidit pubeſcentem, & inquieta indutum adoleſcentia, quaſi jam ex hoc in nepotes geſtiret, gaudens matri indicavit (7). St Auguſtin's Mother, inſtead of being pleaſed, was very uneaſy at it; ſhe feared the ill Effects of it, and therefore made him very ſerious Remonſtrances to abſtain from the Sex, and particularly from Adultery: " Secreto memini ut monuerit " cum ſolicitudine ingenti ne fornicarer, maximeque " ne adulterarem cujuſquam uxorem. Quî mihi mo- " nitus muliebres videbantur, quibus obtemperare e- " rubeſcerem (8). ——— I ſhall never forget how " earneſtly ſhe cautioned me againſt Fornication, and " particularly againſt Adultery; which I looked upon " as ſuch womaniſh Advice, that I was aſhamed to " follow it." But he took no notice of theſe good Exhortations; for he contracted ſuch a ſtrong Habit of Incontinence, that, even after he had renounced Manicheiſm, and prepared himſelf for Baptiſm, he took a new Concubine in the Room of Adeodatus's Mother, 'till the Wife, he was to marry, ſhould attain to a fit Age (9), for which he was to wait near two Years (10). It is remarkable, that, in the Diſpute between St Auguſtin and Alypius, on Marriage and Celibacy, Alypius, inſtead of perſuading St Auguſtin to live ſingle, ſuffered himſelf to be perſuaded to marry. Alypius had led a very chaſte Life; tho', in the beginning of his Youth, he juſt ſtolen a Taſte of thoſe forbidden Pleaſures, but recovered This Slip betimes. He diſſuaded St Auguſtin from Matrimony, as an Obſtacle to the Deſign they had formed to live together in the Study of Wiſdom. " Prohibebat " me ſane Alypius ab uxore ducenda, cauſans nullo " modo nos poſſe ſecuro otio ſimul in amore ſapien- " tiæ vivere, ſicut jamdiu deſideraveramus, ſi id feciſ- " ſem (11)." St Auguſtin confeſſed to him ingenuouſly, that it would be impoſſible for him to contain himſelf, and alledged to him the Example of ſome married Sages, who had been faithful to God and their Friends. He added, that there was a great Difference between Thoſe tranſient Pleaſures, which Alypius had taſted, and ſince forgot, and Thoſe, which he (Auguſtin) had made habitual to him, which would alſo become more engaging under the fair Cover of Marriage. Alypius was ſo touched with this Diſcourſe, that he reſolved to be married himſelf; That I may know, ſaid he, by Experience, what St Auguſtin has found more charming than Life itſelf. " Cum me ille miraretur, quem non parvi penderet, " ita hærere viſco illius voluptatis, ut me affirma- " rem quotieſcunque inde inter nos quæreremus, " cœlibem vitam nullo modo poſſe degere, atque ita " me defenderem, cum illum mirantem viderem, ut " dicerem multum intereſſe inter illud quod ipſe rap- " tim & furtim expertus eſſet, quod pœne jam nec " meminiſſet quidem, atque ideo nulla moleſtia ſa- " cile contemneret, & delectationes conſuetudinis " meæ, ad quas ſi acceſſiſſet honeſtum nomen Matri- " monii, non eum mirari oportere cur ego illam " vitam nequirem ſpernere. Cœperat & ipſe deſi- " derare conjugium nequaquam victus libidine talis " voluptatis, ſed curioſitatis. Dicebat enim ſcire ſe " cupere, quidnam eſſet illud ſine quo vita mea, quæ " illi ſic placebat, non mihi vita, ſed pœna videre- " tur (12)." However, neither of them did ever marry, but yet lived very chaſtly.

[C] He took a Concubine, - - - - - and had by her a Son, whom he named Adeodatus, The Gift of God, who had very good Parts.] Without doubt my Reader will be pleaſed to find ſomething here, concerning This Baſtard; and therefore I ſhall inform him of what I have met with in Mr Baillet. " Adeo- " datus was but fifteen Years of Age, when his Fa- " ther was baptized; but he was then ſo forward, " and had made ſo uncommon a Progreſs in Know- " ledge, that he excelled many Perſons of ripeſt " Years, and ſeveral even of Thoſe, who had " got a Character in the World for their Gra- " vity and Learning. About the ſame time St " Auguſtin compoſed a Book, by way of Dialogue, " intituled, Of the Maſter: Adeodatus and himſelf, " are the two Perſonages of This Dialogue; and he " takes God to witneſs, that all, he makes his Son " ſay in That Work, is entirely his own, though " he was then but ſixteen Years of Age. St Au- " guſtin adds, That he had ſeen yet more wonder- " ful Things in This Child, than what we have " related. Laſtly, in ſpite of his own great Firm- " neſs of Soul, he owns, he was aſtoniſhed at the Pro- " digy of his Son's Parts. Adeodatus received the " Sacrament of Baptiſm, together with his Father, " and died ſoon after (13)."

[D] He could meet with no ſatisfactory Anſwer to the Difficulties he had to propoſe.] St Auguſtin had a penetrating Wit; he was a Rhetorician by Profeſſion, and underſtood Logic. It is eaſy for a ſubtile and eloquent Diſputant to form Doubts, and make Replies. It muſt not then be wondered at, that he embarraſſed the Manichean Doctors; any more

(5) Confeſſ. lib. 2. cap. 2.

(6) It was againſt Decency, among the Pagans themſelves, that a Son and a Father ſhould bathe in the ſame Place. See Cicero de Offic. lib. 1, cap. 35. Val. Max. lib. 2, cap. 1, n. 7. Plutarch. in Catone majore, p. 348.

(7) Auguſt. Confeſſ. l. 2. cap. 3.

(8) Ibidem.

(9) Ibid lib. 6, cap. 13.

(10) Ibid. cap. 13.

(11) Ibid. cap. 12.

(12) Id. ib.

(13) Baillet, des Enfans celebres, pag. 62. ex Aug. Confeſſ. lib. 9, cap. 6.

Digitized by Google

however, he did not forsake their Opinions, but waited for better Explications. His good Mother Monica went to him at Carthage, to endeavour to draw him from his Heresy and Luxury; nor did she despair, tho' she found, that her Remonstrances were, then, to no Purpose. He wanted a new Theatre, for displaying his Learning, and resolved to go to Rome; and, that he might not be diverted from this design, he embarked without communicating it either to his Mother, or to his near Relation Romanian, who had maintained him at School (b). He taught Rhetoric at Rome, with as much Applause, as at Carthage: so that Symmachus, Prefect of That City, understanding, that they wanted, at Milan, an able Professor in Rhetoric, appointed him to That Employ, in the Year 383. St Augustin was very much esteemed at Milan; he made a Visit to St Ambrose, and was kindly received by him. He went to his Sermons, not so much out of a Principle of Piety, as That of a Critical Curiosity. He wanted to know if That Prelate's Eloquence deserved the Reputation it had obtained. It pleased God to make this the Means of his Conversion: St Ambrose's Sermons made such an Impression upon him, that St Augustin became a Catholic in the Year 384. His Mother, who was come to him to Milan, advised him to marry, that he might effectually forsake his former Irregularities. He consented to the Proposal, and sent his Concubine back into Africa; but, as the Wife, designed for him, was so very young, that he was to wait two Years before he could marry her, not being able to resist his Natural Inclinations so long, he relapsed to his usual Incontinence. At length, the reading of St Paul's Epistles, the Sollicitations and Tears of his Mother, and the good Discourses of some Friends, procured for him the finishing stroke of Grace; he felt himself a good Christian, ready to forsake all for the Gospel; he left off teaching Rhetoric, and was baptized, by St Ambrose, on Easter-Eve in the Year 387. The following Year, he returned into Africa, having lost his Mother at Ostia, where they were both to have embarked (c). He was ordained Priest in the Year 391, by Valerius Bishop of Hippo; Four Years after, he became Coadjutor to That Prelate, and did very considerable Services to the Church by his Pen and his Piety, until his Death, which happened the Twenty eighth of August 430 (d). The particulars of his Episcopal Life and Writings would be superfluous here; They may be found in Moreri's Dictionary, and in Mr du Pin's Bibliotheque; and if Those Gentlemen had not too lightly passed over St Augustin's irregular Life, I might wholly have dispensed with this Article: But, for the better Instruction of the Public, it is proper to discover both the Good, and the Bad, of Great Men. The Approbation, which Councils and Popes have given St Augustin on the Doctrine of Grace, adds greatly to his Glory; for, without That, the Molinists, in these latter Times, would have highly advanced their Banner against him, and pulled down his Authority. We have shewn elsewhere (e), that all their Politics could scarce keep them in decorum, and prevent their attacking him indirectly. It is certain, that the Engagement, which the Church of Rome is under, to respect St Augustin's System, casts her into a Perplexity, which is very ridiculous [E]. The Arminians, not having the same Measures to keep, deal very sincerely with This holy Father of the Church

(b) His Father died about the Year 372.

(c) Taken from the Ecclesiastical History of John le Sueur, Tom. 3. ad Ann. 388. pag. 484, & seq Edit. in 12mo.

(d) Du Pin, Biblioth. des Aut. Eccl. Tom. 3. p. 158.

(e) Above, in the Remarks [C] [D] and [L] of the Article ADAM (JOHN) the Jesuit: where you will see the various Judgments passed upon St Augustin. See also Etat de la Faculté de Theologie de Louvain, in 1701 pag. 207.

more than that he puzzled several Catholic Doctors, and that the weak Answers, which they returned to his Objections, confirmed him in his Heresies. He confesses, that, to his cost, he had gained a thousand Victories in these Engagements: so true is it, that every Orthodox Person ought not to engage himself in Disputes; and that, unless he has to do with an Heretic of his own Strength, he can do nothing, humanly speaking, but harden his Adversary. "Quæ-
" dam noxia victoria pœnè mihi semper in disputa-
" tionibus proveniebat, disserenti cum Christianis im-
" peritis; quo successu creberrimo glisebat adolescen-
" tis animositas, & impetu suo in pervicaciæ magnum
" malum imprudenter vergebat (14). —— In dispu-
" ting with unlearned Christians, I had almost always
" the ill Fortune to get the better of them; which
" frequent Success still added fresh Fuel to the Heat
" of my Youth, and hurried me headlong into That
" greatest of Mischiefs, Obstinacy."

(14) August. de duabus Anim.

[E] The Engagement of the Church of Rome to St Augustin's System casts her into a Perplexity, which is very ridiculous.] It is manifest to all Men, who examine Things without Prejudice, and with sufficient Abilities, that St Augustin's Doctrine, and That of Jansenius, Bishop of Ypres, are one and the same; so that we cannot, without Indignation, behold the Court of Rome boasting to have condemned Jansenius, and yet preserved St Augustin in all his Glory. These are two Things altogether inconsistent. More than This, The Council of Trent, in condemning Calvin's Doctrine of Free Will, did necessarily condemn That of St Augustin: For no Calvinist ever denied, or can deny, the Concurrence of the human Will, and the Liberty of the Soul, in the Sense which St Augustin has given to the Words Concurrence, Co-operation, and Liberty. There is not a Calvinist, but acknowledges Free Will, and it's Use in Conversion, if That Word be understood according to St Augustin's Idea's. Those, condemned by the Council of Trent, do not reject Free Will, but as it signifies a Liberty of Indifferency. The Thomists reject it also under That Notion, and yet pass for very good Catholics. See another Comical Scene! The Physical Predetermination of the Thomists, the Necessity of St Augustin, That of the Jansenists, and That of Calvin, are all one and the same thing at the Bottom; and yet the Thomists disown the Jansenists, and both of them think it a Calumny to accuse them of teaching the same Doctrine with Calvin. If one might be suffered to judge of another's Thoughts, here would be great Room for saying, that Doctors are, in this Case, great Comedians, and are only acting a Part, and that They cannot but be sensible, that the Council of Trent either condemned a meer Chimera, which never entered into the Thoughts of the Calvinists, or else, that it condemned, at the same time, both St Augustin, and the Physical Predetermination. So that, when they boast of having St Augustin's Faith, and never to have varied in the Doctrine (15), it is only meant to preserve a Decorum, and to save the System from Destruction, which a sincere Confession of the Truth must necessarily occasion. It is a great Happiness for some Persons, that the People never trouble themselves to demand of them any Account of their Doctrine, and that they have not a sufficient Capacity for it. They would, otherwise, oftener mutiny against Doctors, than against Tax gatherers. They would

(15) M. Basnage shews plainly, that in the Council of Trent, and elsewhere, the Church of Rome decided against St Augustin, and against other Councils. See his History of the Religion of the Reformed Churches, Tom. 2. pag. 452, & seq.

Digitized by Google

Church [F]. A Learned French Critic may make uſe of terms as reſpectful as he pleaſes, yet he cannot hinder us from diſcovering, that he heartily deſpiſes St Auguſtin's Commentaries on the Scripture [G]. If Mr Claude, who condemned This Father's would ſay to them; If you do not know that you deceive us, you deſerve to be ſent to the Plough for your Stupidity; and, if you do know it, you deſerve to be ſhut up within four Walls, with Bread and Water, for your Wickedneſs. But there is nothing of this to fear; the People are content to be led on in the uſual Road; and, if they were inclinable to enquire a little farther, they would not be able to diſcuſs ſuch Points; Their Buſineſs does not permit them to acquire a ſufficient Capacity.

WHETHER Eccleſiaſtical Doctors have any reaſon to ſtand in fear of the Capacities of the People.

[F] The Arminians ------ deal very ſincerely with This holy Father of the Church.] They might have perplexed the World, as well as the Jeſuits; but they thought it much better to give up St Auguſtin wholly to their Adverſaries, and to acknowledge him for as great a Predeſtinarian (it is a Term much uſed among them) as Calvin. Without doubt the Jeſuits would have done the ſame, if they durſt have condemned a Doctor, whom the Popes and Councils had approved.

[G] A learned French Critic ----- heartily deſpiſes St Auguſtin's Commentaries on the Scriptures.] I mean Mr Simon: See his Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament (16), wherein the chief Encomium he gives This Father is, that he knew his own Inſufficiency. " He has very well obſerved, ſays " he (17), the Qualifications neceſſary to make a " good Interpreter of the Scripture; and, as he was " a modeſt Man, he freely confeſſed, that he him- " ſelf wanted moſt of them; therefore we ought " not to wonder, if ſometimes we find but little " Exactneſs in his Commentaries on the Scriptures. " —— He ſoon acknowledged, that the Undertaking, " to anſwer the Manicheans, was above his Strength. " In Scripturis exponendis tyrocinium meum ſub tanta " farcinæ mole ſuccubuit *." I confeſs, that Mr Simon does not quote Peter Caſtellan, without blaming him. But, as he wrote in France, was it not neceſſary to uſe all This Caution? " I cannot approve, " ſays he (18), of the Heat of Peter Caſtellan, Grand " Almoner of France, who accuſes St Auguſtin with " too much Liberty, in reproaching him with having " been only in a Dream, when he explained the Holy " Scripture." They, who wrote againſt him, knew very well how to object to him the little Agreement there is between the Eſteem he would ſeem to have for St Auguſtin's Writings, and the Judgment he really makes of them; and they have taken this Occaſion to draw a very diſadvantageous Picture of This Father. " No other Idea, ſay they (19), can be for- " med of the Bleſſed St Auguſtin, than That of a De- " claimer, who ſays all that comes in his Head, " whether to the Purpoſe, or not, provided it agrees " but with a certain Platonic Syſtem, which he had " formed of the Chriſtian Religion; of One, who " loſes himſelf every Moment in the Clouds, and " ſuffers himſelf to be carried away by cold " Allegories, which he delivers for Oracles; in ſhort, " of One, who had none of Thoſe Qualifications, " which an Interpreter of the Holy Scriptures ought " to have." Of all this they give ſome very ſtrong Examples. Mr Simon, in his Reply, has not much troubled himſelf to defend St Auguſtin. It is eaſy to ſee, he had not this at Heart: He pays ſome Regard to Decency, but much more to his Deſire of confuting his Adverſary (20). It may be obſerved, in ſeveral Places of his Writings, to be his Opinion, that, ſince St Auguſtin makes no Difficulty to forſake the Greek Fathers on the Subject of Grace, there is no Reaſon to follow him, in Preference to Thoſe Greek Fathers. This Pretence would anſwer very well, if there was but room to urge it: But, ſince St Auguſtin's Doctrine, on Grace, has been approved of by the Church, it muſt follow, that all Doctrine, oppoſite to That, is to be rejected; and therefore whatever may be found in St Chryſoſtom, which favours Moliniſm, is a particular Tenet, and at leaſt implicitly branded by the authentic Approbation given to St Auguſtin. This is the Perplexity I mentioned above, which expoſes the Church of Rome to a ſort of Ridicule. I ſhall relate Caſtellan's Words; they are remarkable, and his Life is not a very common Book in this Country: " Ut divum Auguſtinum contra " hæreticos de hominis Chriſtiani Juſtificatione diſ- " putando, proxime ad divi Pauli ſententiam acceſ- " ſiſſe fatebatur, ita linguarum ignoratione ſomniaſſe " frequenter atque etiam deliraſſe ſacra explicando " aſſeverabat: cumque bonarum artium magis non " ignorans quam peritus dici poſſet, non ſatis ido- " neum eſſe judicebat cui de artibus diſſerenti le- " gendo tempus tranſmitteretur qui minime otio a- " bundaret. Eam quoque ſtili Auguſtiniani anfra- " ctuoſam ſinuoſitatem eſſe, & ſermonis omni ele- " gantia vacui impuritatem addebat, ut ab homine " liberaliter in literis educato citra faſtidium legi " vix poſſet (21). —— As he confeſſed, that St Au- " guſtin, in his Diſputation againſt the Heretics, con- " cerning Chriſtian Juſtification, comes the neareſt " of any to the Senſe of St Paul; ſo he affirmed, that " by his Ignorance in Languages he has been often " in a Dream, or even out of his Head, in his In- " terpretation of the Scriptures; and that, as he may " rather be ſaid not to have been a Stranger to Arts, " than a Maſter of them, it is but leſt Time to thoſe, " who have not a great deal to ſpare, to liſten to " him, in his diſcourſing on thoſe Subjects. Farther, " that St Auguſtin's Style is ſo rough and tedious, " and not only void of all Elegance, but even very " incorrect, that it muſt nauſeate a Reader of a learned " Education."

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, I have ſeen the Explication, which Mr Simon has given, to ſtop the Complaints of the Janſeniſts. My Intention, ſays he (22), was not to diminiſh, in the leaſt, the Au- thority of St Auguſtin, whom I have always acknow- ledged to be the moſt able Divine of the Weſtern Churches, and to have deſerved the great Elogies, which ſo many Popes have given him —— I agree, that the Church aſſures us, that Thoſe, who have taught Theology with Art and Method, have taken St Auguſtin for their Maſter and Guide. Theſe are the Words of the Roman Breviary; but they do not mean, that Thoſe Maſters of Theology, who followed St Auguſtin in the manner of treating This Science, are obliged never to depart from the Opinions of That learned Biſhop; nor that Thoſe ſame Opinions are Ar- ticles of Faith, nor laſtly, that the other Fathers are to be forſaken, when they do not entirely agree with him. The Church teaches us, in the ſame Leſſons of the Bre- viary, ſpeaking of St John Chryſoſtom *, That all the World admires his Way of interpreting the ſacred Books, according to the Letter, and judge him worthy of what was believed of him, viz. that St Paul, whom he particularly honoured, dictated ſeveral things to him. I always had the higheſt Veneration for Theſe two great Men, who are to this Day the Admira- tion of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches; but, in ex- plaining certain Paſſages of the Scripture, about which St Auguſtin and St Chryſoſtom differ, I thought I might follow St Chryſoſtom's Interpretation, when- ever it ſeemed the moſt literal. This Difference, which no way affects our Fundamentals, does not hinder them from agreeing together in the eſſential Points of our Belief. Speaking of St Auguſtin, in my Hiſtory of the Commentators, I might indeed have been more cautious in my Expreſſions; and I have even mentioned ſome Things, ſaid of him by Cardinal Sadolet, which ſeem too ſevere. But I never deſigned to oppoſe the Doctrine of This holy Doctor, who confuted ſo powerfully the Hereſies of his Time. He adds, That he propoſed Cardinal Gaſper Contarini for his Guide, who judged, that there was a certain Medium to be obſerved between Thoſe, who, under pretence of being Enemies to the Lutherans, came too near the Hereſy of Pelagius; and Thoſe, who, having ſome Tincture of St Auguſtin's Writings, inſtead of imita- ting his Modeſty and his Charity, preached very puzzling Doctrines to the People, which they did not underſtand themſelves, nor could any way explain but by running into Paradoxes. " I believed, continues " he, that I could not do better, than to imitate " That great Cardinal, in my Anſwer to ſome Divines " of Holland, who had objected againſt me, that the " Tradition of the Church was not conſtant and cer- " tain; by producing, for an Example, the Doctrines " of Grace, and of Predeſtination, in which the " Church

(16) Book 3. chap. 9.

(17) Ibid. P. 397, 398.

* Lib. 1, Retract. cap. 18.

(18) Hiſt. Critique du vieux Teſt. pag. 399.

(19) See the Book entitled The Sentiments of ſome Divines of Holland, on the Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, pag. 337, & ſeq. and the Defence of thoſe Sentiments, pag. 348, & ſeq.

(20) See the Anſwer to thoſe Sentiments, pag. 232, & ſeq. and the Anſwer to the Defence, p. 198, & ſeq.

(21) Petr. Galland. in Vitâ Caſtellani, pag. 44, 45.

(22) Simon's Preface to the New Obſervations on the Text and Verſions of the New Teſtament, printed at Paris, 1695, in 4to.

* Interpretandi rationem & inhærentem ſententiæ ſacrorum librorum explanationem omnes admirantur, dignumque exiſtimant cui Paulus Apoſtolus quem ille mirificè coluit ſcribenti & prædicanti multa dictaſſe videatur. Brev. Rom.

Digitized by Google

ther's Approbation of Penal Laws in Matters of Conſcience, had lived but three or four Years longer, he would have expoſed himſelf to a ſevere Cenſure [H].

A Phy-

" Church had followed and authorized St Auguſtin's " Explanation, notwithſtanding he differed, they ſay, " from all the other Fathers, both Greek and Latin, " who went before him. I obſerved to them, that This " difference was only in ſome Points, which had " never been determined as Articles of Faith, and " in ſome Paſſages of Scripture, which might very " well admit of different Interpretations; and there- " fore that the Church ought not to be accuſed of " Inconſtancy in Tradition." This needs very little Examination to diſcover it to be a Mask or Colour, which can only deceive very ignorant Perſons: For, pray tell me, whence come the moſt material Controverſies? Is it not from a Difference in explaining ſome Paſſages of Scripture? Why then do you make uſe of the Idea of This difference, to ſhew us, that St Chryſoſtom and St Auguſtin differ in nothing eſſential? Is it only an accident, and nothing material to the Doctrine of Grace, to know in what the Power of a Sinner conſiſts, and what is the Eſſence of his Liberty? Is it not rather a fundamental Part of This Doctrine? If then theſe two Fathers are directly oppoſite in their Explication of the Nature of Free-will, it is certain, their Difference is in Eſſentials, and the Church cannot adopt the Hypotheſis of the one, without rejecting That of the other. Otherwiſe it muſt be ſaid, that ſhe embraces a Truth without condemning the oppoſite Error; for, in ſhort, though it were poſſible, that both of them may be miſtaken, yet it is impoſſible, that both their Opinions ſhould be true: Therefore, either They, who follow St Chryſoſtom's Explication, or They, who follow St Auguſtin's Doctrine, muſt be in an Error. Here, again, we may obſerve the great Perplexity of the Church of Rome. She is forced to approve both thoſe who hold that Grace does all, and thoſe who hold that Grace does nothing, in obtaining our Aſſent; ſome of her Doctors, on the one ſide, teach, That we form this Aſſent ourſelves, with full Liberty to refuſe it: on the other, That Grace produces this Aſſent, without leaving us the leaſt Liberty to refuſe it. The one, or the other, teaches an Error, which does not turn upon a Triſle, but on a Point of very great Conſequence. And yet the Church of Rome, with her pretended Infallibility, lets this whole Matter paſs without Cenſure. If ſhe condemns Janſeniſm, ſhe is obliged to declare, at the ſame time, that ſhe does not condemn St Auguſtin (23); this is to undo, with one hand, what is done with the other. Obſerve, by the way, theſe words of Mr Simon; The Difference —— was only in ſome Things, which have not been determined as Articles of Faith. This is to ſay, that, provided an Error affects only ſome Points, which have not yet been determined as Articles of Faith, the Perſon, who propagates it, may ſtill be an Orthodox, and a very good Chriſtian; I ſay, obſerve this Privilege of an erroneous Conſcience. Obſerve alſo, that, though it were lawful to diſſent from St Auguſtin's Opinion, before the Doctrines of Grace were determined in the Time of That Father; it does not follow, that, after thoſe Determinations, the Writers of the XVIIth Century are at liberty to return to St Chryſoſtom's Opinion; for here is a ſubſtantial Remark of a Divine, whom Mr Simon can by no means ſuſpect: " In the " Diſputes concerning Grace, Election, and Pre- " deſtination, leſs Regard is to be paid to the ancient " Fathers, who lived before the Pelagian Hereſy, " than to thoſe, who came after: And much leſs to " the Greeks, than to the Latins, notwithſtanding " that theſe came after That Hereſy—— But, among " the Latins, whoſe Authority, we have already ob- " ſerved, is to be preferred to That of the other Fa- " thers, Divines agree, that St Auguſtin is he, on " whom we ought moſt to rely: For not only all " the Fathers, and all the Doctors, who came after " him, but the Popes themſelves, and the Councils " of other Biſhops, have held his Doctrine, con- " cerning Grace, for Certain and Catholic: and " they have ALL BELIEVED it a ſufficient Proof of " the Truth of an Opinion, that This Saint had " taught it (24)."

(23) See the Anſwer of a Janſeniſt to Mr Leydecker. It is mentioned in The Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, 1697, pag. 251.

(24) Petav. Dogmat. Theolog. Tom. 1. lib. 9, c. 6, cited by Mr Arnauld, Difficulties propoſed to Mr Steyaert, part 9, pag. 266.

[H] If Mr Claude —— had lived three or four Years, he would have expoſed himſelf to a ſevere Cenſure.] I have two things to ſhew; the one, that Mr Claude blamed St Auguſtin for approving the Penal Laws againſt Heretics; the other, that, if he had lived three or four Years longer, he would have been cenſured for cenſuring St Auguſtin.

I. To prove the Firſt, I need only recite ſome Expreſſions of Mr Claude, in a Letter, which was made public. He confeſſes, That St Auguſtin had an admirable Underſtanding, a happy and fruitful Imagination, diſcovering, almoſt on every occaſion, great Piety, Juſtice, and Charity: But he adds, There is one thing, which tarniſhes his Memory extreamly, viz. that, after having expreſſed Sentiments of Mildneſs and Charity, in regard to Proceedings againſt Heretics, his Diſputes with the Donatiſts ſo very much inflamed him, that he became quite another Man, and turned Advocate for Perſecution (25).

(25) See the Letter written from Switzerland, printed at Dort, 1690, pag. 20.

II. The Acts of the Synod of the Walloon Churches of the United Provinces, held at Amſterdam in the Month of Auguſt, 1690, demonſtrate, beyond controverſy, the ſecond thing I am to prove; for This is one of the Propoſitions, which That Aſſembly condemned, The Magiſtrate has no right, by Virtue of his Authority, to ſuppreſs Idolatry, and hinder the Progreſs of Hereſy. I ſay, This Propoſition is one of Thoſe, which the Synod ſolemnly and unanimouſly declares falſe, ſcandalous, pernicious, and equally deſtructive of Morality and Religion. The Synod proſcribes, prohibits, and condemns them as ſuch, forbidding all Perſons, Eccleſiaſtic and Secular, under the ſevereſt Cenſures, to utter them either in Pulpits, or in private Converſations —— And moſt expreſsly commanding all Conſiſtories, within their Juriſdiction, to redouble their Paſtoral Care and Vigilance, in proportion to the Danger, which threatens their Flocks, to ſuppreſs, without Diſtinction, or Complaiſance, all who ſhall be found guilty, by refuſing private Perſons the Holy Sacrament, and by ſuſpending the Miniſters from their Offices till the next Synod, calling in two Paſtors of the Neighbouring Churches to join in That Sentence (26). Some may object, that if Mr Claude had been living, at the Time of holding this Synod (27), perhaps They would not have condemned This Propoſition. I can ſay nothing at all to this: but, be it as it will, there is no denying, but that his Opinion has been anathematized. For it is evident, that St Auguſtin only maintains, that Magiſtrates ought to ſuppreſs Heretics, by making them liable to certain Penalties. Now the Synod of Amſterdam eſtabliſhes This ſo ſtrongly, that it puts the contrary Propoſition in the number of pernicious Errors, for which it orders the Laity to be excommunicated, and the Clergy ſuſpended. Therefore it has approved the ſame Doctrine, which Mr Claude condemned in St Auguſtin: and the Opinion of Mr Claude lies under the Anathema of This Synod.

(26) See what has been publiſhed of the Acts of this Synod in the Tableau du Socinianiſme, pag. 565.

(27) He was dead in the Month of January, 1687.

If Mr Claude was ſurprized, that St Auguſtin ſhould be ſuch a Turncoat in his Opinion, others wonder yet more, that the French Refugee Miniſters (28) appear to be ſo too. For, whereas St Auguſtin changed his Opinion, upon obſerving the good Succeſs of the Emperor's Laws, in ſuppreſſing a Schiſm; theſe Refugee Miniſters have changed their Opinion, while the Ruin of their Churches, by the Authority of the Sovereign, was quite freſh in their Memory, and the Wound ſtill bleeding. If they had been asked, while the Edicts of Perſecution were pouring on their Party, what they thought of the Conduct of a Prince, who inflicted Penalties on Thoſe of his Subjects, who deſired only the Liberty of ſerving God according to their Conſciences, they would have anſwered, that it is unjuſt; and yet, as ſoon as they are come into another Country, they have pronounced their Anathema againſt Thoſe, who condemn the uſe of Penal Laws, in order to ſuppreſs Errors. This ſhould ſerve for an Example of the Inſtability of human Things; and may furniſh matter for much moral Reflexion.

(28) There was a much greater Number of them in the Synod, than of the Walloon Miniſters, and they acted in concert with the French Miniſters, who fled into England. See the Acts of this Synod, concerning this Fact, in the 8*th Letter of the* Tableau du Socinianiſme, pag. 559, & ſeq. The Author of This Tableau affirms, p. 558, That the Reſolutions and Determinations of That Synod were unanimous.

He, who was the Promoter of Theſe Synodical Deciſions, had been a Deſerter in Opinion; but it was, in ſome Meaſure, by a ſpecial Privilege, and by a prophetic Diſpenſation, from which others could draw no Conſequence. His Politics of the Clergy, his Perjervative, &c. had highly condemned the uſe of Penal Laws in Matters of Religion. He had amply diſcuſſed This Point, in his Anſwer to the Hiſtory

Digitized by Google

A Physician of Paris has published a very singular Remark; he pretends, that This great Saint could bear a great deal of Drink, and would sometimes make free with it, but without getting drunk. We shall produce his Reasons, as well as Those of a Journalist, who confutes him [I]. I shall not say much of the Editions of Calvinism; at least, he had given to understand, that he was desirous of confuting effectually the Advocates for Penal Laws. It is true, he had pulled down with one hand, what he endeavoured to build with the other; and fell into an unfortunate Contradiction, which exposed him to terrible Mortifications from several Writings, which were published against him; but, in short, all this was not sufficient to shew, that he had expressly declared on both sides of the Question. It was only in consequence of the Revelations, which he thought he had received from above, about the approaching Ruin of Popery: I say, it was only in consequence of these, that he exerted himself against Those, who did not believe it lawful to extirpate Sectaries by the Authority of the Secular Power. He imagined These Persons had picked a personal Quarrel with him, and were conspiring against his Explication of the Apocalypse (29). The Clergy of France have made great use of St Augustin's Reasons, to justify the Conduct of the Court towards the Reformed. All that St Augustin published on this Subject has been ordered to be printed by itself, translated into elegant French. A Protestant has published a Confutation of it, in the third Part of the Philosophical Commentary on these Words, COMPEL THEM TO COME IN. See (30) the Reflexions, which have been made on the Prejudice, done to the good Cause, by the Authority of This Saint. It has been wondred at, that Mr Poiret should endeavour to excuse him. See the History of the Works of the Learned, for the Month of May, 1692, pag. 358; and for the Month of August of the same Year, pag. 552.

(29) See the Apology for the true Asserters of Toleration, by Mr Huet, Minister of Dort, pag. 333, 334.

(30) In the Defence of the Sentiments of some Divines of Holland, on the Critical History, pag. 365, & seq.

[I] A Physician — pretends, that This Saint could bear a great deal of Drink — but without getting drunk. We shall produce his Reasons, as well as those of a Journalist, who confutes him.] The Physician, I am speaking of, is Mr Petit. The Chapter, where he treats of this, is entituled, "Videri B. Augustinum "non invalidum potorem fuisse (31). — That St Au- "gustin seems to have been a hard Drinker." He immediately lays down, for the Foundation of his Assertion, these Words of Augustin: "Ebrietas longe "est à me: misereberis, ne appropinquet mihi. Cra- "pula autem nonnunquam surrepit servo tuo; mise- "reberis, ut longe fiat à me (32). — Drunken- "ness is far from me; thou wilt have Mercy on me, "Lord, that it may not come near me. The Crapula "surprizes thy Servant sometimes; thou wilt pity him, "that it may go far from him." This seems to be a sort of Contradiction; for, the Crapula being the Effect of Drunkenness, how can any one confess, without contradicting himself, that he never drinks to the Degree of Drunkenness, and yet that he is sometimes overcome by the Crapula? Mr Petit shews, by the Authority of Aristotle, that the Crapula is the last Stage of Drunkenness, that it is the Head-ach, which remains, when sleep has dissipated the Vapours of the Wine, and when a Man, who has been drunk, recovers his Understanding, and is no longer under the Alienation of Mind, which deprived him of his Senses. He confirms this by a Passage of Pliny, and by some Verses of the Poet Alexis; and This is his Method of clearing up this seeming Contradiction. He supposes, that This great Saint had a very strong Head, and was able to drink a great deal of Wine, without losing the Use of his Reason, but not without being incommoded by it next Day. Quid ea esset cerebri ac mentis firmitate ut posset in eadem vini quantitate, quæ multos ad insaniam redigeret, rationis usum conservare (33). Upon this Foot, a Man may justly say, that he is never drunk, though, on some Occasions, he finds himself punished with the Crapula, for having drank too much; and he ought to acknowledge this to be an Imperfection, which stands in need of the Mercy of his heavenly Father. "Sic "nobis dubitatio illa vanescit, vindicaturque Augu- "stinus à turpitudine eorum, qui rationem suam vi- "no obruere non dubitant: non tamen à culpâ "omnino, ipso judice, qui tantum vini hauriret, "inde ut crapulam aliquando incurreret, nec posset "sibi inter pocula temperare, quin nimio potu in- "terdum valetudini suæ incommodaret. Quâ de re "ibi misericordiam Dei implorat (34). —— Thus "we shall make this Difficulty vanish, and vindicate "St Augustin from the beastliness of Those, who make "no Scruple to intoxicate their Senses with Wine; "nor yet leave him intirely innocent, because of his "drinking, by his own Confession, so much as to "cause a Crapula, and not having that Guard up- "on himself in his Cups, to prevent drinking more "than his Health would bear. On which account he "implores the Mercy of God." Mr Petit excuses St Augustin, from the Nature of the Climate, where he lived, and from the Custom of the Africans, and proposes this Objection to himself. It is probable, that this great Man's Practice was agreeable to the Advice he gave to others: Now he recommended the living on Herbs and Bacon, and drinking two or three Glasses of Wine, without Water. Duæ vel tres vini meracæ potiones propter diligentiam valetudinis sumptæ cum olusculis & lardo laudantur (35). The Answer is, That it is probable St Augustin did not so strictly practise This Rule, but that he might sometimes transgress it among his Friends, and those whom he invited to his Episcopal Table. Velim & mihi illud concedit, non minus probabile; non ita hunc regulæ illi addictum vixisse, ut non cum vini modum nonnunquam inter amicos, & mensæ episcopalis hospites, libendo excederet (36). For, otherwise, it must be concluded, that he lived only on Herbs and Bacon, which cannot be supposed, without monkish Stupidity. Quid putare cucullatæ esset dementiæ (37).

(31) It is the 10th of his Book, entitled, Homeri Nepenthes, sive de Helenæ Medicamento, printed at Utrecht in 1689, 8vo.

(32) Aug. Lib. 10. Confess. 31.

(33) Petrus Petitus, Homeri Nepenth. pag. 236.

(34) Li. Ib. pag. 139.

(35) Aug. in libro de moribus Manichæorum, apud Petitum, Ibid. pag. 140.

(36) Petitus ibid.

(37) Id. ib.

Let us see what Mr Cousin has answered to this strange Paradox of Mr Petit: For so he calls this Assertion (38). He is for reading "the whole Chap "ter of the Confessions, from whence the Passage is "taken (39)." We shall find, "That St Augustin there "represents his own Disposition, with regard to eat- "ing and drinking, and declares, that he had learn- "ed of God not to seek after Aliments, any other- "wise than as after Medicines, and to use both "alike". He says, "that, according to this Principle, "he is always upon his guard against Pleasure, "when he satisfies the Cravings of Nature; that he "is in a continual War with himself, by Fastings, "and Abstinence; that he frequently reduces his "Body into Subjection, and continually hears the "Voice of God crying to him; Ne graventur corda "vestra in crapula & ebrietate (40). —— Let not "your Hearts be overcharged with Drunkenness and "Debauch." Mr Cousin asks, "Whether a Bishop, "who lived in This manner, can be suspected to have "drank sometimes to excess?" He assures us, "no Di- "stinction is to be made here; that St Augustin never "drank more than Necessity required; and that, "therefore, when he said, Crapula autem nonnun- "quam obrepit servo tuo, he takes the Word Crapula "in another Sense (41). Besides That of Aristotle, "wherein it signifies the Heat and Pain caused by "Wine, taken to excess, it is capable of two more, "at least; according to one of which, it is taken for "an Excess of eating; and, according to the other, "for the Pleasure itself of eating and drinking. "St Augustin did not use it in the first Sense; for "he was as far from eating, as from drinking, to "excess. So, then, he could only understand it "in the second Sense, and confess, that, though "he endeavoured to be continually on his Guard "against the Temptation of Pleasure, which places "itself, as it were, in Ambuscade, at the Entrance "of the Aliments, necessary to allay Hunger and "Thirst, and to maintain Health; yet he sometimes "suffered himself to be surprized by it. This Sur- "prize happens to the most perfect, to Those, who "mortify their Bodies, and nourish them only with "Fastings and Abstinence." Mr Cousin confirms this, by producing several Testimonies of Possidius, concerning St Augustin's Sobriety. I think he would have done well to have given good Authority for the two Significations of the Word Crapula, which he has added to That, so well proved by Mr Petit.

(38) Journal des Sçavans, of the 20th of June, 1689, pag. 427, Edit. of Holland.

(39) Ibid. pag. 427.

(40) Ibid.

(41) Ibid. pag. 428.

Digitized by Google

Editions of St Auguſtin's Works [K]. Several of his Treatiſes have been tranſlated into French.

It belongs to my Readers to decide this Diſpute: I content my ſelf with giving them the Arguments on both Sides. I ſhall only add, that I have conſulted ſeveral Dictionaries, without being able to find there the leaſt Appearance of the Signification, in which Mr Couſin will have the Word Crapula uſed in this Place. I have even met with ſome Phyſicians, who maintain, that Drunkenneſs and Crapula ſignify the ſame thing; and that They, who pretend to make any Difference between them, raiſe idle Contentions about Words. Qui differentiam inter Crapulam & Ebrietatem fingunt λογομαχῶσι. Foës. pag. 353. Dict. num. 475 (42). It is certain, that, in Cicero, the Phraſes Crapulam edormire, Crapulam exhalare, mean the ſame thing as the French Words cuver ſon vin (43), i. e. to ſleep one's ſelf ſober. Plautus uſes, in the ſame Senſe, Crapulam amovere (44), Crapulam edormire (45), Crapulam edormiſcere (46). It is alſo well known, that, at this preſent time, the French Word Crapule is more odious than That of Ivreſſe, Drunkenneſs; for it ſignifies the higheſt Degree of Drunkenneſs. It is, as Furetiere obſerves, a ſhameful and continual Debauch with Wine, or other intoxicating Liquors. Crapuler, adds he, means, to drink without ceaſing, to be continually, and filthily, drunk. The Dictionary of the French Academy confirms theſe Interpretations. But there is no conſequence to be drawn from one Age to another, as to the Senſe of Words. Uſe makes it vary prodigiouſly. There was certainly a Diſtinction between Drunkenneſs and Crapula, both in Ariſtotle's, and St Auguſtin's Time. This appears clearer from The Paſſage of the Father of the Church, than from That of the Philoſopher. The Queſtion is, to know wherein this Difference conſiſted, in the Time of St Auguſtin. Without doubt, if Mr Petit had replied to Mr Couſin (47), he would have ſhewn a great deal of Learning, and I believe would not have forgot, that Authors, who, like Ariſtotle, treat a Subject dogmatically, confine themſelves very ſtrictly to Genus and Species, and obſerve the Propriety of Terms, deſigned to ſignify the Diſtinction of each Species, or the different Degrees of one and the ſame Quality; but Poets and Orators ſoon lay aſide This Exactneſs: they either introduce, themſelves, a greater Liberty of Words, or elſe conform to That eſtabliſhed by public Cuſtom, which uſes, indifferently, on a thouſand Occaſions, Thoſe Expreſſions which the Doctors ſo nicely diſtinguiſh.

(42) Jacob. Pancratius Bruno in Lexico Medico, pag. 385.

(43) See the 2 Philip. of Cicero, fol. 247, D, and the 8*th againſt* Verres fol. 53, B.

(44) Plaut. in Pſeud. Act. 1. Sc. 1. ver. 35.

(45) Id. in Moſtell. Act. 5. Sc. 2. ver. 1.

(46) Id. in Rud. Act. 2. Sc. 7. v. 28.

(47) He could not; he was dead before his Nepenthes was publiſhed.

[K] I ſhall not ſay much of the Editions of St Auguſtin's Works.] We meet with a Liſt of them in Mr du Pin (48), which is neither ſo large, nor ſo exact, as That publiſhed by the Journaliſts of Leipſic (49). But, ſince it is very eaſy to conſult Thoſe Authors, it would be ſuperfluous to copy them here. I ſhall only ſay, that the beſt Edition of This Father's Works is That printed at Paris, by the Care of the Benedictine Monks of St Maur. It is divided into ten Volumes in Folio, as ſome others are; but there is a new Order, or Diſpoſition, in each Tome. The Iſt, and IId, were publiſhed in the Year 1679, the IIId, in 1680, the IVth, in 1681, the Vth, in 1683, the VIth, and VIIth, in 1685, the VIIIth, and IXth, in 1688, and the Xth, in 1693. This laſt Volume contains the Writings of St Auguſtin againſt the Pelagians.

(48) See his New Bibliotheque of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, Tom. 3. pag. 257. Edit. of Holland.

(49) In the Month of Jan. 1683, pag. 2.

There came out, A Letter from the Abbot D to the R. R. F. F. Benedictines of the Congregation of St Maur, on the laſt Tome of their Edition of St Auguſtin (50). The Author of This Letter pretends, that their Deſign was to favour Janſeniſm, and that the Proofs he gives of it are very convincing. I have heard, that This Letter perplexes the Benedictines ſo much the more, becauſe it has made ſome Biſhops call them to an Account for their Conduct, and threaten to forbid the Reading of That Edition of St Auguſtin in their Dioceſes.

(50) Printed in 169.; it contains 72 Pages in 12mo.

Some Circumſtances of the Quarrel between the Benedictines and Jeſuits, on account of the Edition of St Auguſtin.

Theſe learned Fathers have given an Explanation of this Matter, and cleared themſelves to the Public from this Aſperſion. See the Letter of a Divine to one of his Friends, on the Libel, entituled, A Letter of the Abbot * &c. It was printed the Twenty ſecond of February, 1699, and contains Eighty eight Pages in 12mo; but it did not determine the Diſpute. There came out a Memorial of a Doctor of Divinity, addreſſed to My Lords, the Prelates of France, on the Anſwer of a Benedictine Divine to the Letter from a German Abbot (51), and the Author of This Memorial maintains, That all the Accuſation of the Benedictines is juſt, and that the Anſwer of Thoſe Fathers is inſufficient. He takes notice (52), that they ſent from Rouen to Paris a ſecond Anſwer to the German Abbot, and that Father de St Marthe was very ready to father it. The Benedictines replied: but could not ſilence their Adverſaries. Some other Writings were publiſhed pro and con; but I cannot give the Particulars, becauſe I have met with but few of them: I have ſeen a little Book, called, The Conduct of the Benedictines on the attacking of their Edition of St Auguſtin. It contains Seventy nine Pages in 12mo, and was printed in the Year 1699. Among other things, we are told there, I. That, before they had publiſhed any thing in their own Defence, a Writing was addreſſed to them from an unknown Perſon —— who took care to diſperſe it all over Paris, before be ſent them any Copy (53). II. That the Title of this Piece was, A Letter from a Commendatory Abbot, to the Reverend Fathers, the Benedictines of the Congregation of St Maur. III. That, as the Letter, which the German Abbot wrote againſt theſe Fathers, was called, The German Benedictine, they called This, The Little Benedictine; and all the World owned, that the younger was not inferior to the elder. IV. That the Author, from the beginning to the end, only perſonated, and ſpoke the Language of the Janſeniſts, in order to be the better underſtood by the BB (54). V. That The Little Benedictine exaſperated, and ſtirred up the Party; who, from that Moment, reſolved to defend the new Auguſtin, and that the Abbot du Guet went to the Abbey to offer his Pen to the Congregation of St Maur (55). VI. That The Little Benedictine had not long made it's Appearance, before another ſmaller, and more agreeable one, came out, on a ſudden (56), entitled, The Letter of a Benedictine, not reformed, to the Reverend Fathers, the Benedictines of the Congregation of St Maur, and came from the ſame Hand as the Little Benedictine. VII. That the Benedictines were deliberating, when a fourth Benedictine appeared, which was ſo ſerious, as to make one believe, that it was really produced in a Cloiſter. It's Title was, A Letter of a reformed Benedictine of St Dennis, in anſwer to the German Abbot, the Commendatory Abbot, and the Benedictine not Reformed (57). VIII. That the firſt Anſwer of the Benedictines came from St Dennis, and was attributed, by all the World, to Father Lamy: It is entituled, A Letter from a Divine to one of his Friends, on the Libel, called, A Letter from the Abbot  to the Reverend F. F. the Benedictines, &c (58). IX. That there appeared another Anſwer, unexpected, which Father St Marthe bragged he had written in leſs than two Days; the Title of it is, Reflexions on the Letter from a German Abbot (59). X. That it is univerſally agreed, that the beſt thing, which has been wrote on the Affair of This Edition, is That, entituled, A Memorial of a Doctor of Divinity, addreſſed to my Lords, the Prelates of France, on the Anſwer of a Divine among the Benedictines, to a Letter from the German Abbot (60). XI. That a Man, more learned, than polite, handed about a Manuſcript againſt Father St Marthe, and called it, St Marthe a bad Divine, and a good Janſeniſt (61); That the Manuſcript of This learned Man was followed by another Manuſcript of ſome melancholly Author of very bad Taſte, entituled, Antimony, by way of Preſervative againſt the Calumnies of Father St Marthe (62); and that This laſt Manuſcript was ſucceeded by another attributed to a Jeſuit; it is called, Vindiciæ Petavii (63). XII. That, in the Book entituled, A Solution of divers Problems, and aſcribed to Mr du Guet, the Janſeniſts undertake the Defence of the Benedictines with an high Hand (64). XIII. That there appeared a third Anſwer of the Benedictines (65), called Vindiciæ Editionis S. Auguſtini à P P. B B. adornatæ; which preceeded moſt of theſe Writings I have been naming, and that it is little more than a Tranſlation of Father Lamy's Anſwer, and is publiſh'd under a borrowed Name, &c. (66).

(51) Printed in 1699; it contains 128 Pages in 12mo.

(52) Pag. 121.

(53) Conduite des Benedictins, pag. 24.

(54) Pag. 25.

(55) Pag. 28.

(56) Pag. 29.

(57) Pag. 31.

(58) Pag. 35.

(59) Pag. 40.

(60) Pag. 44.

(61) Pag. 47.

(62) Pag. 50.

(63) Pag. 51.

(64) Pag. 67.

(65) This, without doubt, is the ſame which was mentioned, pag. 64, in quoting the Words taken from a Manuſcript Letter of Mr Simon to Father Martianai. A Benedictine, named Dom Bernard de Montfaucon, ----- has publiſhed a very ſharp Anſwer to the German Abbot, printed by the Licence of the Maſter of the Sacred Palace.

(66) Conduite des Bened. pag. 68.

I have

Digitized by Google

I have alſo ſeen a Piece attributed to Lamy; 'Tis a Complaint of the Apologiſt for the Benedictines, to the Prelates of France, on the Defamatory Libels, which are diſperſed againſt That Religious Society, and their Edition of St Auguſtin; together with a Summons to the Authors of Thoſe Libels to appear before the Archbiſhop of Paris; and on account of the Proceſs, which was entered againſt the Benedictines, on their Edition of St Auguſtin. All this contains Eighty eight Pages in 8vo. The Author, having demanded of the Prelates the Puniſhment of their Adverſaries, takes notice that The Difficulty — is to find out thoſe unquiet and ſeditious Spirits, who have attacked the Benedictines (67). It is not ſo great as may be imagined, adds he; it is true, they take care not to ſet their Names to their Libels: But the R. R. F. F. the Jeſuits take ſo much pains to claim the Merit of them, and diſcover themſelves by other means, in ſo many places of theſe ſeditious Writings, that they cannot poſſibly be miſtaken, unleſs People take a Pleaſure in deceiving themſelves. He, then, propoſes his Conjectures, and, after ſome general Conſiderations, he gives ſomething more particular and decifive (68).

(67) Plainte de l'Apologiſte des Benedictins, pag. 10.

(68) Pag 12. "And now, ſays he, as to the Letter of the German "Abbot, if theſe Fathers had not diſcovered them- "ſelves by their Air, Voice, Accent, Principles, "and Doctrine, yet it is a Fact, which no Body, at "this time of day, conteſts, or denies, that Father "Langlois, a Jeſuit of the College of Lewis le Grand, "is the Author of it: and certainly That good Fa- "ther could not expect, that the World ſhould be "ignorant of it, ſince the Book was ſold public- "ly enough, even in the College. As for the "other Libels, ſuch as the Letter of the Commen- "datory Abbot, and That of the Monk not Reformed, "beſides our knowing, that they made Preſents of "them every where, and raiſed Trophies in them to "their pretended Victories; how many times have "they, there, taken the Pleaſure to characterize, "name, and declare themſelves to be our Adver- "ſaries. It is proper, my Lords, to let you ſee in "what Shapes and Colours they ſhew themſelves: "I ſhall uſe their own Words; Conſider, ſays one "in theſe Letters, what the Jeſuits do: They, whom "you may ſuſpect to be your Adverſaries. Take them "for your Model in this Matter. They anſwer every "thing." After having made a Collection of a great many more Characters, he goes on thus; "I think, "from all theſe Deſcriptions, it cannot be doubt- "ed, but that they are Jeſuits: But it will be "ſaid, they are only a ſmall number of particular "Perſons. I grant it: We know they muſt be only "ſome particular Perſons; for a whole Society was "never yet known to have, all of them, a Hand "in the Writing of one and the ſame Letter. But "is there not ſome reaſon to attribute Theſe Writings "to a whole Body, when That Body generally ſpeaks "and talks of them with Pleaſure aud Approbation? "Nay, when they boaſt of, and diſtribute them by "way of Preſents, and in a triumphing Manner, as "all the World knows the Jeſuits have often done "in reſpect to Theſe Letters. In a word, my Lords, "how ſcandalous ſoever the Writings of any parti- "cular Perſons of a Society may be, there is ground "to attribute them to the whole Society, when the "Superiors take no care to ſuppreſs them; or, if "That be not in their Power, when they do not "ſhew by ſome public Act, that they diſapprove "them; or when they do not make a Reparation "to the Parties offended, as notorious and public "as the Injuries and Calumnies have been. It is "by this Rule, that the ſcandalous Piece called, The "Comedy of the Monks, has been always looked upon "as a Work of the Society of the Jeſuits; in which "almoſt all the Religious are treated with an Indig- "nity and Deriſion, which would hardly be par- "doned in the moſt furious Heretics. It has been, "I ſay, juſtly attributed to the whole Body, altho' "compoſed and acted by their young Scholars; be- "cauſe it doth not appear, that the Superiors ever "made any Satisfaction for it, or any juſt Amends "(69)." After this he ſhews, that it belongs to the Archbiſhop of Paris to determine this Difference (70); and he ſummons his Adverſaries to appear perſonally at That Tribunal, and to prove their ſeveral Accuſations, on pain, if they fail in any of them, of being condemned as Slanderers, and their Libels judged Defamatory. But, not to give them an opportunity of abuſing This Citation, as too looſe and uncertain for want of a Time prefixed, and yet not to be too preſſing upon them, we give them two Mouths from the Day that our Citation ſhall be publiſhed at Paris (71). Laſtly, he ſhews, what the State of the Queſtion is; and afterwards, in the drawing up of the Proceſs, he refutes ſeveral Things publiſhed agrinſt the Benedictines.

(69) Pag. 21.

(70) Pag. 23.

(71) Pag. 24.

I dare ſay, that the Archbiſhop of Paris, and even a National Council, would be puzzled in the Determination of ſuch a Cauſe as This is; for, beſides the Queſtions of Janſeniſm being full of Equivocations, Two powerful, and very learned Communities, who have each their Friends and Enemies, can cut out work enough, and ſtart Incidents to Eternity. The beſt Expedient, when ſuch Diſputes are on foot, is to have recourſe to the Secular Power, as to a God in a Machine, who may come, and cut the Knot. This is what has happened in This Diſpute. The King ordered the Chancellor to write a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Paris, to put a Stop to This Controverſy, and to forbid the Parties to publiſh any Thing farther about it (72). But, be this as it will, it muſt be ſaid of the Benedictines, that they took the moſt reaſonable Method of all, as well to ſhew their own Integrity, as to ſtop the Courſe of the Libels. They demanded a regular Proceeding, where their Accuſers ſhould be obliged to declare their Names, and to prove their Accuſations according to Law. Without this no good iſſue can be expected; for, even in the worſt Cauſes, They, who have the liberty to plead only at the Tribunal of the Public, by anonymous Pamphlets, find it always in their Power to be haughty, inſulting, and clamorous, whilſt there are Writers and Printers. A Private Man, whether he be in the right, or the wrong, is ſoon ſilenced, if his Pieces do not ſell; he cannot go on with them, without being at the charge of the Preſs, which is beyond his Abilities. But this Inconveniency can never affect ſuch rich and powerful Communities, as Thoſe of the Benedictines, and Jeſuits.

(72) Hiſtorical Letters for January 1700, pag. 99.

They are going to print This Edition at Amſterdam, in a ſmaller Character, which will be ſold much cheaper than That of Paris (73). There was a deſign to print with it the Critical Notes of a learned Man, who conceals himſelf under the Name of Joannes Phereponus (74); but I underſtand ſince, that the deſign is altered, and that Thoſe Critical Notes will be printed ſeparately, with the Commentary of Ludovicus Vives on the Work de Civitate Dei, &c. There was ſome reaſon to fear, that the Roman Catholics would be diſpleaſed with it; and therefore they will be left at full Liberty to buy, or leave Theſe ſuſpected Notes. They will be in a ſeparate Volume, and all St Auguſtin's Work, exactly conformable to the Edition of Paris, will be ſold either with or without them.

(73) See Mr Bernard, Nouvelles de la Republ. des Lettres, for March, 1699, pag. 358.

(74) Id. ib.

AULNOI (MARIA CATHERINA LE JUMEL DE BERNEVILLE Counteſs d') ſo famed for her Writings [A], was the Wife of Francis de la Motte, Count d'Aulnoi. She died his Widow in the Month of January 1705. Her Mother, whoſe ſecond Huſband was the Marquis de Gadaigne, died at Madrid, where ſhe enjoyed a conſiderable Penſion, which King Charles II. had given her, for the great Service ſhe had done That Nation, while ſhe was at Rome. Philip V. continued this Penſion. The Counteſs d'Aulnoi left four Daughters (a).

(a) Mercure Galant, Jan. 1705, pag. 244, & ſeq.

[A] She is famed for her Writings.] The firſt, ſhe publiſhed, is entituled A Journey into Spain. She went thither with the Queen of Spain, the firſt Wife of Charles II. Her other Works are, Memoirs of the Court of Spain, which has had three Editions in France, and one in Holland; Memoirs of the Court of England; Hippolito, Earl of Douglas; The Hiſtory of John de Bourbon, Prince de Carency; The Earl of Warwick. Theſe are ſo many little Romances, which have been univerſally read. She has alſo publiſhed ſeveral Tales of the Fairies, and a Paraphraſe on the Miſerere (1).

(1) Mercure Galant, Jan. 1705, pag. 247, & ſeq.

AURAT,

Digitized by Google

AURAT, or D'AURAT (JOHN) in Latin Auratus. See DAURAT.

AURELIANUS (LUCIUS DOMITIUS) (a), Emperor of Rome in the IIId Century, was one of the greateſt Warriours of Antiquity. It is not certain where he was born [A]; but it is agreed, that his Extraction was very mean, and that his Mother, who made it her Buſineſs to foretel Events, was a Prieſteſs of the Sun (b). He was of a good Stature, handſome, robuſt, and of a very lively Genius (c). He loved Action, Wine, and good Chear (d); but not Women (e): He obſerved Diſcipline exactly, and cauſed others to obſerve it with the utmoſt Severity [B]. One Thing was obſerved in him: he continued poor amidſt the very great number of Offices

(a) The Emperor Claudius, writing to him, calls him only Valerius Aurelianus. Vopiſcus in Aurel. cap. 17.

(b) Id. ibid. cap. 14.

(c) Id. cap. 46.

(d) Id. c. 4.

(e) Id. c. 6.

[A] It is not certain where he was born.] Vopiſcus, having related three Opinions (1), adds, That it uſually happens, that the native Place of Perſons, meanly born, is uncertain. He gives this reaſon for it; Becauſe they generally tell a lie on that occaſion, and adopt ſome Place of greater Note, which they pretend to be That of their Birth, in order to recommend themſelves to Poſterity, in a brighter Light, by the Splendor of the Place of their Nativity. Evenit quidem ut de eorum virorum genitali ſolo neſciatur qui humiliori loco nati, plerique ſolum genitale confingunt, ut dent poſteritati de locorum ſplendore fulgorem (2). I believe there is another Cauſe, which contributes yet more to it; I mean the number of the Places, which contend for the Honour of producing famous Perſons. They take the Advantage of the uncertainty of the Fact, and, hoping never to be effectually diſproved, They vainly, and without any grounds, report, that They are born in ſuch and ſuch a Place. From hence came the Diſputes about Homer's Country. I grant, with Vopiſcus, that our principal Inquiry into the Characters of great Princes, is not to know where they were born, but how they have governed: Nec tamen magnorum principum virtutibus ſumma ſciendi eſt, ubi quiſque ſit genitus, ſed qualis in republ. fuerit. Nevertheleſs, as we are naturally very inquiſitive to know the time and place of the Birth of Great Men, I think an Hiſtorian is obliged to make all poſſible inquiry to ſatisfy his Readers in This Point; and that they have a right to complain of the Negligence of a great number of Writers, who have been wanting in this Particular (3).

(1) Ortus, ut plures loquuntur, Sirmii, familia obſcuriore; ut nonnulli Dacia Ripenſi. Ego autem legiſſe memini auctorem qui eum Mœſi genitum prædicaret. Moſt ſay he was born at Sirmium, of an obſcure Family; ſome in Dacia Ripenſis. And I remember to have read an Author, who declares, he was born in Mœſia. Vopiſcus in Aurel. c. 3.

(2) Id. ib.

(3) See Remark [A] of the Article ROTTERDAM.

[B] He obſerved Diſcipline exactly, and cauſed others to obſerve it, with the utmoſt Severity.] We may add, that he had the good Fortune to ſee, that This Severity did not make the Soldiers mutinous, but only fearful of neglecting their Duty. Without doubt it was good Fortune; for ſometimes Generals have as much reaſon to fear the Conſequences of too great a Severity, as thoſe of too great Lenity. Aurelian found it very right, to puniſh rigorouſly, and without remiſſion. "Militibus ita timori fuit, ut "ſub eo poſteaquam ſemel cum ingenti ſeveritate "caſtrenſia peccata correxit, nemo peccaverit. Solus denique omnium militem, qui adulterium cum "hoſpitis uxore commiſerat, ita punivit, ut duarum "arborum capita inflecteret, & ad pedes militis de"ligaret, eademque ſubito dimitteret, ut ſciſſus ille "utrinque penderet. Quæ res ingentem timorem "omnibus fecit (4). —— He was ſo much feared by "the Soldiers, that, whoſoever of them once felt the "great Severity of his Correction, for breach of Or"ders, never offended again. He was, in ſhort, the "only Commander, who ever puniſhed ſo terribly the "Crime of Adultery, committed, by a Soldier, with "the Wife of the Perſon, upon whom he was quartered: "The Tops of two Trees were bent down to each "other by Violence, and, being faſtened to the Feet of "the Criminal, were let go again, and ſo tore him "in halves. This ſtruck them all with very great "Terror." You ſee, by this Quotation, he uſed the ſame ſort of Puniſhment in the Caſe of a Soldier's committing Adultery with the Wife of his Hoſt, that Alexander inflicted on the Traitor Beſſus, who killed King Darius. Nothing can be finer, than Aurelian's Orders, concerning the Soldiers Duty. St John Baptiſt could not have laid them under a greater Number of Reſtrictions, had he been ever ſo particular (5). Aurelian would not ſuffer them to touch any Fruit, nor to take of the People any Salt, Wood, or Oil, nor to tranſgreſs the Rules of Chaſtity. Would not one think, that he had a Deſign to introduce the Monaſtic Diſcipline into the Army? "Hujus epiſtola "militaris eſt ad vicarium ſuum data hujuſmodi: Si "vis tribunus eſſe, imò ſi vis vivere, manus militum "contine. Nemo pullum alienum rapiat, ovem ne"mo contingat, Uvam nullus auferat, ſegetem ne"mo deterat: oleum, ſal, lignum, nemo exigat: "annona ſua contentus ſit. De præda hoſtis, non "de lacrymis provincialium, habeat: arma terſa ſint: "ferramenta iamiata —— alter alteri quaſi ſervus ob"ſequatur: à medicis gratis curentur; aruſpicibus "nihil dent: in hoſpitiis caſte agant; qui litem fe"ceret, vapulet (6). —— He wrote thus to his "Lieutenant. If you would continue your command, "or even your Life, keep ſtrict Diſcipline among the "Soldiers. Let not one of them ſteal a Chicken, touch "an Egg, pluck a Grape, or damage the ſtanding "Corn; or make any Exactions of Oil, Salt, or Wood, "but make every man content himſelf with his Allow"ance. Reward them by the Spoil of our Enemies, "but not by the Tears of our Friends and Sub"jects: Let their Arms be clean; their Swords and "Spears ſharp; —— let them ſerve one another; let "the Phyſicians attend the ſick and wounded, gratis; "let the Prieſts take nothing of them for their Sacri"fices; let them live chaſtly in their Quarters; and "let Him, who breeds Quarrels, run the Gantlope." He was ſo rigid, that the Emperor Valerian, who had a ſingular Eſteem for him, durſt not put his Son under his Direction, for fear That young Prince, who was inclined to be wild, ſhould too far experience the Auſterity of ſuch a Maſter: For which reaſon, he choſe for him a more gentle Governor. Read the Anſwer he gave to the Conſul Antoninus Gallus, who would have That Office conferred on Aurelian: "Culpas me familiaribus literis quod Poſthumio fi"lium meum Gallienum magis quam Aureliano com"miſerim: quum utique & ſeverior & puer creden"dus fuerit & exercitus: nec tu id diutius judicabis, "ſi bene ſcieris quantæ ſit Aurelianus ſeveritatis. "Nimius eſt, multus eſt, gravis eſt, & ad noſtra jam "non facit tempora. Teſtor autem omnes deos, "me etiam timuiſſe nequid etiam erga filium me"um ſeverius, ſiquid ille feciſſet, ut eſt natura pro"nus ad ludicra, ſævius cogitaret. Hæc epiſtola in"dicat quantæ fuerit ſeveritatis, ut illum Valerianus "etiam timuiſſe ſe dicat (7). —— You blame me, in "your Letters, for chuſing to put my Son Gallienus "under Poſthumius, rather than under Aurelian; "when the Youth, as well as the Army, requires "his Severity of Diſcipline; but you would be no "longer of This Opinion, if you knew but Aurelian's "extreme Rigour. His Puniſhments are too frequent, "too great, and heavy, and no way proportioned to "the Uſage of theſe Times. And I call the Gods to "witneſs, I am afraid he ſhould execute ſome dread"ful Sentence, even upon my Son, if he ſhould miſ"behave, as he is naturally idle. This Epiſtle "ſhews he was ſo extremely ſevere, that Valerian "himſelf was even afraid of him." We muſt not forget Aurelian's Strictneſs to his Domeſtics. "He "cauſed thoſe, who had neglected their Duty, to be "whipt in his Preſence; and he delivered up ſeveral "of his own Servants to public Juſtice, to have them "puniſhed for their Faults. He cauſed one of his "Maid Servants to be put to Death, for committing "Adultery with one of his Lacqueys. —— Servos & "miniſtros peccantes coram ſe cædi jubebat, ut ple"rique dicunt, cauſa tenendæ ſeveritatis: ut alii, "ſtudio crudelitatis. Ancillam ſuam, quæ adulterium "cum ſervo ſuo fecerat, capite punivit. Multos "ſervos è familia propria, qui peccaverant, legibus au"diendos judiciis publicis dedit (8)." Moſt aſcribe all this to his ſtrict Method of Diſcipline; but ſome, to the natural Cruelty of his Temper. Valerian was in the right to ſay, that ſuch a Man was too ſevere for the Age he lived in. Ad noſtra jam non facit Tempora!

(4) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 7. pag. 434.

(5) Luke iii. 14.

(6) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 7. pag. 434.

(7) Id. ib. cap. 8, pag. 435, 440.

(8) Id. ib. cap. 40, pag. 585.

Digitized by Google

Offices, which were conferred upon him [C]. He had ſo ſtrong an Inclination to draw his Sword, that the Soldiers gave him the Sirname of Sword in hand, to diſtinguiſh him from a Captain of the ſame Name [D]. He made ſuch a Slaughter in Combats, that he killed Forty eight Sarmatians in one day; and the number Thouſand was made uſe of to count the mortal Blows, which he had given the Enemy (f). This became the Subject of Songs and Ballads (g); he received from theſe the ſame Honours, as the firſt King of the Jews (h), and deſerved it much better: For it was not pretended, that Saul killed, with his own hand, the Thouſand Enemies, whoſe Slaughter was aſcribed to him in the Songs; but This was literally underſtood of Aurelian. He was adopted by Ulpius Crinitus, one of the greateſt Men of thoſe Times (i): The Emperor Valerian, who managed That Affair (k), made him Lieutenant to the ſame Crinitus (l), who was General of the Frontiers of Illyricum and Thracia (m), and appointed him Conſul in the Year 258. Theſe Rewards, and ſome others, were rendred yet infinitely more agreeable, by the Encomiums and particular Marks of Eſteem, with which the Emperor conferred them [E]. We (f) Vopiſc. ibid. cap 6.

(g) Id. ib. & cap. 7.

(h) 1 Sam. xviii. 7.

(i) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 14.

(k) Id. ib. cap. 15.

(l) Ibid. cap. 10.

(m) Ib. cap. 13.

(o) Id. ib. cap. 8, pag. 439.

pora (9)! He was only fit for the Sect of the Montaniſts. The Chriſtians of the ſucceeding Ages would have found him too rigorous; and how many Caſuiſts, at this Day, would ſay of his Morals, as they do of Thoſe of the Fathers, that they are too ſtrict, and that This bitter and rough Phyſic does not agree with our Sick? What military Men, or even grave Citizens, think it worth while to puniſh the Familiarities of their Men and Maids? The general Puniſhment, for their Faults of this Nature, is to turn them away. Nay, ſometimes Maſters are ſo kind, as to marry them to each other. Obſerve, that Hiſtory mentions but one of Aurelian's Servants, who was puniſhed for her Laſciviouſneſs. It is a ſign, that ſuch Tranſgreſſions were very rare in his Family, which is a Matter of wonder, conſidering what we ſee every Day, and that a General, or an Emperor, muſt neceſſarily have a great many Slaves of both Sexes.

(10) See the Liſt of them in Vopiſcus, cap. 10.

[C] He continued poor, amidſt the very great Number of Offices, which were conferred upon him (10).] The Emperor, his Maſter, teſtified This Virtue, when he charged the Public with the Expence, which the Conſulate, he promiſed Aurelian, would require. "Conſulatum cum eodem Ulpio Crinito in annum "ſequentem à die undecimo Calend. Juniarum, in "locum Gallieni & Valeriani, ſperare te convenit "ſumptu publico. Levanda eſt enim paupertas eo"rum hominum, qui diu reipublicæ viventes, pau"peres ſunt, & nullorum magis (11). — You may ex"pect the Conſulſhip, together with Ulpius Crinitus, "for the next Year, from the XI of the Cal. of June, "in the Room of Gallienus and Valerianus, and that "your Expences ſhall be born by the Public. For no "ſort of Poor deſerve That Regard ſo much, as Thoſe, "who have long ſerved the Public, and yet are poor." The Hiſtorian, who furniſhes this Paſſage, produces the Letter, which the Emperor wrote to the Prefect of Rome, to ſignify to him his Pleaſure, as to what ſhould be given to the new Conſul. "Aureliano, cui con"ſulatum detulimus ob PAUPERTATEM, qua ille "magnus eſt cæteris major, dabis ad editionem Cir"cenſium aureos Antonianos trecentos, &c. (12). — "To Aurelian, whom we have made Conſul on ac"count of his POVERTY, which makes That great "Man ſtill greater, you are to preſent Three hundred "pieces of Gold, of Antoninus's Coin, for his Ex"pence in exhibiting the Circenſian Shows." Some have ſaid, that "the Poverty of Aurelian obliged Va"lerian to order Ulpius Crinitus to adopt him. — "Memini me in quodam libro Græco legiſſe — Man"datum eſſe Crinito à Valeriano, ut Aurelianus adop"taretur, idcirco præcipue quod pauper eſſet (13)." It is remarkable, that, when he was Emperor, he uſed a great deal of Moderation in doing good to his Friends: Perhaps, from his long Habit of contemning Wealth, and the Opinion he had, that moderate Riches were ſufficient for a great Man: Perhaps, alſo, becauſe he would not irritate the People by exceſſive Profuſions; for Subjects are not pleaſed to ſee their Prince beſtow his Treaſures and Favours on his Friends, in an extravagant manner. Vopiſcus tells us, That "this Emperor choſe to obſerve a Me"dium, which ſhould take away the Inconveniencies "of Poverty, without ſubſtituting Thoſe of Envy. — "Amicos ſuos honeſte ditavit & modice, ut miſerias "paupertatis effugerent, & divitiarum invidiam pa"trimonii moderatione vitarent (14)." He adds, That "he would not ſuffer any Perſon to wear Silk "Cloaths, of which he gave them an Example, and "ſubjected his own Wife to This Law; for, when "ſhe deſired, at leaſt, one Silk Suit, he anſwered "her, God forbid, that Thread ſhould coſt as much "as Gold. For, at that time, a Pound of Silk was "worth a Pound of Gold. — Veſtem holoſericam "neque ipſe in veſtiario ſuo habuit, neque alteri "utendam dedit. Et quum ab eo uxor ſua peteret, "ut unico pallio blatteo ſerico uteretur, ille reſpon"dit, Abſit ut auro fila penſentur: libra enim auri "tunc libra ſerici fuit (15)." See Mr de Tillemont, who has obſerved the little Agreement between This Fact, and certain things reported by the ſame Hiſtorian, or others, concerning This Emperor's Luxury (16). But we muſt not forget, that the Cloaths of his Domeſtics were no richer, after his Advancement to the Throne, than before (17); and that he granted the Senators the Liberty of wearing the ſame Habit with himſelf (18).

(11) Id. ib. c. 2, pag. 445.

(12) Ibid. cap. 12.

(13) Ibid. cap. 15.

(14) Ibid. cap. 45. pag. 533.

(15) Id. ib. pag. 540.

(16) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. p. 1074, 1075.

[D] The Soldiers gave him the Sirname of Sword in Hand, to diſtinguiſh him from a Captain of the ſame Name.] What a proper Diſtinction is This to flatter the Pride of a brave Warriour? I ſhall relate the Words of Vopiſcus: "Gladii exerendi cupidus. "Nam quum eſſent in exercitu duo Aureliani tri"buni, hic, & alius qui cum Valeriano captus eſt, "huic ſignum exercitus appoſuerat manus ad ferrum, "ut ſi forte quæreretur quis Aurelianus aliquid vel "feciſſet vel geſſiſſet, ſuggereretur, Aurelianus manu "ad ferrum, atque cognoſceretur (19). — Re"markably fond of drawing his Sword. For there "being in the Army two Tribunes, both named Aure"lian, this, and another, who was taken Priſoner "with Valerian, the Soldiers called him Sword in "Hand, by way of Diſtinction; ſo that, when it was "aſked, which Aurelian had done any thing, the An"ſwer, which meant him was, Aurelian Sword in "Hand."

(17) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 1.

(18) Ibid. cap. 49.

(19) Id. ib. cap. 6, pag. 426.

[E] The Emperor conferred them with Encomiums, and particular Marks of Eſteem.] I am going to relate them; for they contain the conſiderable Services, which Aurelian had done to the Empire. "Valeria"nus Auguſtus Ceionio Albino præfecto urbi. Vel"lemus quidem ſingulis quibuſque devotiſſimis Reipub. "viris multo majora deferre compendia, quam eo"rum dignitas poſtulat, maxime ubi honorem vita "commendat. Debet enim quid præter dignitatem "pretium eſſe meritorum. Sed facit rigor publicus, "ut accipere de provinciarum oblationibus ultra "ordinis ſui gradum nemo plus poſſit. Aurelianum "fortiſſimum virum ad inſpicienda & ordinanda ca"ſtra omnia deſtinavimus: cui tantum à nobis at"que ab omni Republicâ, communi totius exercitus "confeſſione, debetur, ut digna illi vix aliqua vel "nimis magna ſunt munera. Quid enim in illo non "clarum? quid non Corvinis & Scipionibus confe"rendum? Ille Liberator Illyrici, ille Galliarum Re"ſtitutor, ille dux magni totius exempli. Et tamen "nihil præterea poſſum addere tanto viro ad mu"neris gratiam quam patitur ſobria & bene gerenda "Reſpub. Quare ſinceritas tua, mi patens chariſſi"me, ſupradicto viro efficiet, quandiu Romæ ſue"rit, panes militares mundos ſedecim, &c. (20). — Valerianus Cæſar, to Ceionius Albinus, Preſect "of the City. It is our Deſire to diſtinguiſh thoſe, "who

(20) Id. ib. c. 9, p. 440.

Digitized by Google

We do not find, that Aurelian made any Figure under the Emperor Gallienus; but, under Claudius, he held the principal Posts, and commanded the Army with so much Glory, that, after the Death of That Emperor, all the Legions concurred to set him on the Throne (n). This happened in the Year 270. A little while after, he came to Rome, and, after establishing his Authority, he marched towards Pannonia, where the Goths had made an Irruption (o). He gave them Battle, and obliged them to repass the Danube, and to desire a Peace. After this, being informed, that the Marcomans, the Juthungi (p), and some other Nations, had resolved to carry the War into Italy, he marched against them, and overthrew them in a general Engagement, near the Danube. He killed many of them, as they repassed That River, and hindred the rest from returning into their Country, by shutting them up in the Roman Dominions. The want of Provisions, and many other Inconveniencies, which obliged them to desire a Peace of him, did not inspire them with such a Submission, as he expected. Their Deputies assumed so high an Air, that he dismissed them very haughtily; for, imagining he had cut off the Retreat of their Army, he concluded they could not escape him. But he was mistaken: The Enemy disengaged themselves, and, marching before him, entered into Italy, where they made great Ravages round about Milan. He could not follow them with Speed enough; for his Army was heavier than theirs. They defeated him by Surprize near Placentia (q), and, if they had understood the Military Art, as well as he, they might have ruined the Empire after such a Victory; but, as they knew not how to make use of their Advantage, and did not march close, he defeated them in several Rencounters, and reduced them to nothing (r). During This War, the Books of the Sibyls were consulted at Rome: I shall mention some Circumstances of it, which shew the Religion of Aurelian, and the Irreligion of his Flatterers [F]. It is likely he pursued the Enemy as far as Germany, where he was obliged to stop some time to repulse the Vandals, who had passed the Danube. He defeated them, and forced them to beg a Peace, which he was very willing to grant them (s). He returned to Rome full of Resentment, for the Seditions, which had been raised there, and punished them with extreme Cruelty (t). This was his predominant Vice; and it was for the sake of this, that many have refused to rank him

(n) Ibid. cap. 17.

(o) Zosimus, lib. I. p. 654, 655.

(p) They were the nearest Neighbours to Rhetia, and to Italy.

(q) Vopisc. in Aurel. cap. 21.

(r) Taken out of Mr de Tillemont's Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1030, & seq. He quotes Dexippus chiefly. See also his Notes.

(s) Tillemont, ibid.

(t) See Remark [H].

" who have deserved well of the Commonwealth, " with greater Rewards, than are suitable to their " Rank, especially where their whole Life will justify " their Distinction. For, besides what is due to their " Station, there is also something due to their extraor- " dinary Merit. But the public Exactness requires, " that none should receive, out of the Revenues of the " Provinces, any more than is allotted to the Degree " of his Dignity. We have appointed That brave Man, " Aurelian, to inspect and direct our Incampments, " to whom both we, and the Commonwealth, are so " greatly indebted, that no Rewards can be thought " too great, or even worthy, of him. What has he " not performed! What could the Corvini and Scipio's " have done more! He is the Protector of Illyricum, " the Restorer of the Gallia's, a General, great in " every Action. And yet we can assign to so extraor- " dinary a Man no other publick Reward, than the " frugal and regular Administration of the Common- " wealth allows. Be it your Care, therefore, my beloved " Cousin, to furnish him, during his stay at Rome, with " sixteen fine military Loaves, &c." Valerian wrote thus to the Prefect of Rome; and here follows part of his Letter to Aurelian: " Ego de te tantum, " Deo favente, spero quantum de Trajano, si vive- " ret, posset sperare Respub. Neque enim minor " est (21), in cujus locum fidemque te legi. Con- " sultatum cum eodem Ulpio Crinito in annum se- " quentem à die undecimo Calend. Junarum, in lo- " cum Gallieni & Valeriani, sperare te convenit " sumptu publico. —— I hope for as great things " from you, under the Favour of Heaven, as the " Commonwealth might have expected from Trajan, " had he lived. Nor is He an unfit Match for you, to " whom, both in Office and Friendship, I have de- " signed you for a Partner. You may expect, there- " fore, the Consulship, together with Ulpius Crinitus, " for the next Year, from the XI of the Cal. of June, " and your Charges shall be born by the Public." Here is also the Speech, which Valerian made to him, in the Presence of the Army, and the Court: " Gra- " tias tibi agit, Aureliane, Resp. quod eam Gotthо- " rum potestate liberasti. Abundamus per te præda, " abundamus gloria, & his omnibus quibus Romana " felicitas crescit. Cape igitur tibi pro rebus gestis " tuis coronas murales quatuor, coronas vallares quin- " que, coronas navales duas, coronas civicas duas, " hastas puras decem, vexilla bicolora quatuor, tu- " nicas ducales russas quatuor, pallia proconsularia " duo, togam prætextam, tunicam palmatam, to- " gam pictam, subarmalem profundum, sellam ebo- " ratam. Nam te consulem hodie designo, scrip- " turus ad senatum, ut tibi deputet scipionem, de- " putet etiam fasces. Hæc enim imperator non so- " let dare, sed à senatu, quando fit consul, accipere " (22). —— The Commonwealth returns you thanks, " Aurelian, for freeing her from the Insults of the " Goths. By your Victories we abound in Spoil, " we abound in Glory, and in every thing else, which " can contribute to the Prosperity of Rome. Accept, " therefore, for your great Services, four Mural " Crowns, five Rampire Crowns, two Naval Crowns, " two Civic Crowns, ten polish'd Spears, four Stan- " dards of two Colours, four military Buff Suits, " two Proconsular Cloaks, and the Robe of State, " the Robe embroidered with Palms, the rich Triumi- " phal Robe, a Suit to wear under Armour, and the " Ivory Chair. For I this Day appoint you Consul, " and will write to the Senate to send you the Staff " and Fasces, the Insignia of your Office; which are " never given by the Emperor, but always by the Se- " nate, to the new Magistrate."

(21) Casaubon will have it read es, that is to say, that Valerian believed, that Aurelian equalled Crinitus. This seems to be the true Sense.

(22) Idem Vopiscus, cap. 13, p. 449, 450.

The first, of these three Passages of Vopiscus, contains one thing well worth Observation, and which does not at all agree with our common Notions of the Disorders of the Empire. We fancy, that, after the Soldiers took upon them to create, and kill, their Emperors, there was nothing but Oppression, and Tyranny, in the Roman Provinces. This was not always true; we see here, that Valerian managed the public Expences, in Ease to the Provinces, with more Precaution, than is this Day used in Christian Kingdoms.

[F] Some Circumstances, which shew the Religion of Aurelian, and the Irreligion of his Flatterers.] The Consternation was very great in Rome, upon hearing, that the Marcomans were entered into Italy, and made great Ravages there (23). Some Seditions followed upon it, which made Ulpius Syllanus, Chief of the Senate, propose to consult the Books of the Sibyls; but some Senators opposed it, alledging, that, under so brave a Prince as Aurelian, there was no occasion to inform themselves of the Will of the Gods. This Difference of Opinions causing the Consultation of those Writings to be deferred, it became necessary for Aurelian to interpose. He wrote, therefore, him among good Princes; and, according to the Saying of Diocleſian, he was much fitter to command an Army, than to be an Emperor [G]. However, we muſt take notice, that his ſanguinary Diſpoſition did not hinder him from being beloved by the People: His Liberality, and the care he took to maintain Plenty, and to puniſh Miſdemeanors, cauſed his Cruelty to be forgot [H]. Having puniſhed the Seditious, and therefore, to the Senators, that "he wondered they "ſhould heſitate about a Matter of That Nature, juſt "as if they were deliberating in a Chriſtian Church, "and not in the Temple of all the Gods. - - - - Mirror vos, patres ſancti, tamdiu de aperiendis Sibyllinis dubitaſſe libris, perinde quaſi in Chriſtianorum Eccleſiâ, non in templo deorum omnium, tractaretis (24)." He preſſed it very earneſtly; he promiſed to defray the neceſſary Expences, and for that purpoſe ſent orders to his Treaſurer; "for," added he, "it is no Diſgrace to conquer by the Divine "Aſſiſtance: it was thus our Anceſtors began and ended "ſeveral of their Wars. Neque enim indecorum eſt diis juvantibus vincere: ſic apud majores noſtros multa finita ſunt bella, ſic cœpta (25)." So that Syllanus had reaſon to ſay to Aurelian's Flatterers, that This great Man both honoured and truſted in the Gods, and that their Aſſiſtance never diſgraced brave Men. "Meminiſtis P. C. me in hoc ordine ſæpe "dixiſſe jam tum, quum primum nuntiatum eſt "Marcomannos erupiſſe, conſulenda Sibyllæ decreta, utendum Apollinis beneficiis, inſerviendum "deorum immortalium præceptis: recuſaſſe vero "quoſdam, & cum ingenti calumnia recuſaſſe, quum "adulando dicerent, tantam principis eſſe virtutem, "ut opus non ſit deos conſuli, proinde quaſi & ipſe "vir magnus non deos colat, non de diis immortalibus ſperet. Quid plura? audivimus literas quibus, "rogavit opem deorum, quæ nunquam cuiquam "turpis eſt ut vir fortiſſimus adjuvetur (26). —— "Venerable Fathers, You have often heard me, in this "Place, on the firſt News of the Invaſion of the "Marcomans, give my Opinion for conſulting the "Sybilline Oracles, for making uſe of Thoſe Favours "of Apollo, and for attending to the Will of the immortal Gods. This ſome Perſons oppoſed, and with "great Abuſe oppoſed; inſiſting, with their Flattery, "that ſuch was the Virtue of our Prince, as made "all Application to the Gods unneceſſary. As if this "great Prince himſelf did not worſhip, and truſt in, "the immortal Gods. Why ſhould I ſay more? you "have heard his own Letters, wherein he deſires "their Aſſiſtance, which the braveſt of Men need "never be aſhamed of." After receiving Aurelian's Letter, there was no farther delay; the Senate cauſed the Books of the Sibyls to be conſulted, which occaſioned a long Train of Devotions (27). Obſerve, by the way, how much the Maxim of Ajax is eſteemed by ſome Perſons (28). We have Flatterers here, who imagine we never need have recourſe to the Aſſiſtance of Heaven, but when we diſtruſt the Valour and Prudence of the Princes of this World. I ſhall add here two Proofs, that Aurelian was not of this Opinion: "Credo adjuturos Rom. Remp. Deos "qui nunquam noſtris conatibus defuerunt (29). — "I truſt the Commonwealth will be aſſiſted by the "Gods, who have never once failed to proſper our "Arms." This he wrote, when he found himſelf perplexed by the long Reſiſtance of Zenobia. He acknowledged, in another Letter, that his Victories were a Preſent from the Gods. "Unde apparet "nullam mihi à Diis immortalibus datam ſine difficultate victoriam (30). — From whence it appears, "that the Gods have given me no Victory, without "Trouble." It is true, he added, that theſe Preſents were always attended with a thouſand Difficulties. It is the Fate of all things: it is not Virtue alone, which muſt be acquired by the Sweat of our Brows; it holds equally true of all other good things. Sic diis placitum. — Such is the Will of Heaven.

(23) Idem, cap. 18.

Digitized by Google

Τῆς δ' ἀρετῆς ἱδρῶτα θεοὶ προπάροιθεν ἔθηκαν
Ἀθάνατοι, μακρὸς δὲ καὶ ὄρθιος οἶμος ἐπ' αὐτὴν,
Καὶ τρηχὺς τὸ πρῶτον (31).

Cloſely the Gods their fav'rite Virtue keep,
Nor make her known to Men on Terms too cheap.
Long is the Paſſage to her bleſt Abode;
Strait and diſcouraging at firſt the Road.
Barr'd are all Paſſes, all Acceſs denied,
To thoſe, who take not Labour for their Guide.

In this ſenſe, there are no Free-Gifts; and we muſt confeſs, that this Will of Heaven is founded in Goodneſs; for our Joy in acquiring any good Thing is heightened by the Pains it coſt us.

[G] His Cruelty hindered many from ranking him among good Princes; and, according to the Saying of Diocleſian, he was much fitter to command an Army, than to be an Emperor.] Vopiſcus will inform us of theſe Particulars: "Et Aurelianum quidem, ſays he "(32), multi neque inter bonos, neque inter malos, principes ponunt, idcirco quod ei clementia, "imperatorum dos prima, defuerit. Verconius "Herennianus præfectus prætorio Diocleſiani, teſte "Aſclepiodoto, ſæpe dicebat, Diocleſianum frequenter dixiſſe, quum Maximiani aſperitatem reprehenderet, Aurelianum magis ducem eſſe debuiſſe quam principem. Nam ejus nimia ferocitas "eidem diſplicebat. —— There are many, who will "not allow Aurelian to be ranked either among good "or bad Princes. They deny him the firſt, for his "Want of Clemency, That principal Jewel in a "Crown. Verconius Herennianus, Commander of "the Guard to Diocleſian, as Aſclepiodotus relates, "often affirmed it to be a frequent Saying of Diocleſian, when he reproved Maximinian for his Roughneſs, that Aurelian was cut out for a General, "but not for a Prince. For he did not like his too "great Auſterity." Theſe words of Diocleſian were the words of a good Judge; for he uſed to ſay, That there is nothing more difficult, than to reign well (33), and he perfectly underſtood the Reaſons of This Difficulty. You will find them in Vopiſcus (34); an Author, who obſerves, that, in ſo great a number of Roman Emperors, there were reckoned but very few good ones (35); and who commends the Jeſt of a Buffoon, That all the good Princes may be painted on a Ring. "Vides quæſo quam pauci ſint "principes boni, ut bene dictum ſit a quodam mimico ſcurra Claudii, hujus temporibus, In uno "annulo bonos principes poſſe perſcribi atque depingi "(36)."

[H] His Liberality, and the Care he took to maintain Plenty —— cauſed his Cruelty to be forgot.] The manner, in which he puniſhed the Seditions, which were raiſed in Rome, during his Abſence, ſo much exceeded the bounds of a juſt and neceſſary Severity, that it tarniſhed his Reputation, and rendered him very odious: "Magnum illud, & quod jam "fuerat, & quod non fruſtra ſperatum eſt, infamiæ triſtioris ictu contaminavit imperium. Timeri cœpit princeps optimus, non amari, quum alii dicerent, perfodiendum talem principem, non optandum; alii bonum quidem medicum, ſed mala ratione curantem (37). —— He ſtained the Glory of "This great Reign, both what it had already gained, "and was ſtill like to gain, by one ſad Blot of Cruelty. This excellent Prince began to be dreaded, inſtead of beloved; and ſome ſaid, ſuch a Governour "was not to be endured, much leſs deſired; others, "that he was a good Phyſician, but practiſed too rough "a Method of Cure." The People did not long continue This Hatred: they were ſoon mollified by the Diſtributions of Bread, Fleſh (38), and Oil (39), and ſuch other Kindneſſes, which they enjoyed under His Government. They were ſtill ſuch, as in the time of Juvenal, and formed no other deſires, beyond Thoſe of Bread, and public Shows: Nothing could be more gay, than They were, provided they had their Bellies full.

—— jampridem ex quo ſuffragia nulli
Vendimus, effugit curas. Nam qui dabat olim
Imperium, faſces, legiones, omnia, nunc ſe

Continet,

(24) Idem, cap. 20, pag. 463.
(25) Idem, cap. 20. pag. 464.
(26) Idem, cap. 19. pag. 459, 460.
(27) Idem, cap. 20.
(28) See Remark [E] of the Article AJAX the Son of Telamon.
(29) Vopiſc. cap. 16.
(30) Idem, cap. 38.
(31) Heſiod. Opera & Dies, ver. 287.
(32) Vopiſc. cap. 44, pag. 532, 533.
(33) Idem, cap. 43.
(34) Ibid.
(35) Idem, cap. 42.
(36) Id. ib. pag. 529.
(37) Idem, cap. 21, pag. 467.
(38) Idem, cap. 35.
(39) Idem, cap. 48.

Digitized by Google

and compoſed all Diſorders at Rome (u), he undertook an Expedition into the Eaſt againſt Zenobia (x). He preſently ended This War by taking That brave Princeſs. I ſay, he ended it preſently, though he found, by the way, many Enemies to give Battle to, and many ſtrong Places to reduce. We have ſeen, elſewhere (y), what hindred him from ruining Tyana. He expoſed himſelf ſo much, when he beſieged Zenobia, in the City of Palmyra, that he received a Wound from an Arrow (z). He defeated the Perſians, who came to the Aſſiſtance of the Beſieged; and acquired ſuch a Reputation by the Conqueſt of all Zenobia's Dominions, as cannot be expreſſed (aa). In his return towards the Weſt, he underſtood, that the Palmyrenians had revolted. This News made him return into Syria, and he was got to Antioch, before they heard he was coming (bb). He puniſhed Palmyra with an exceſſive Cruelty; for he put all to the Sword (cc). He was yet at Carræ in Meſopotamia, when he was informed of the Revolt of the Egyptians: He marched againſt them with his uſual Succeſs and Expedition; he defeated their Leader, took, and put him to Death, and ſo ſubdued Egypt in a very little time (dd). His deſire of re-uniting the Gauls, Spain, and Britain, which had been uſurped by Tetricus, made him return into the Weſt. He gained a Victory near Chalons on the Marne, which decided the matter; the rather, becauſe Tetricus ſurrendred himſelf during the Battle (ee). He returned to Rome, and triumphed over Zenobia and Tetricus with an extraordinary Pomp (ff). He repaſſed into Gaul, and, being informed, that the Barbarians were entred into the Country of the Vindelici (gg), he marched thither immediately, and diſlodged them. From thence he paſſed into Illyricum; and, judging, that there was no poſſibility of preſerving Dacia, which Trajan had made a Province of, beyond the Danube, and which had been loſt under Gallienus, he withdrew from thence the Troops and the Inhabitants, and ſettled the latter in part of Mœſia and Dardania, which he converted into a new Province (hh). He had a fine Army in Thracia, which he deſigned to lead, after the Winter, againſt the Perſians, when he was killed by one of his Generals (ii). This happened in the Month of January, 275. We know the great Actions of his Life only in general; but, if we knew the Particulars of them from ſuch exact Deſcriptions as are now uſed in relating Battles, and Conqueſts, we ſhould admire him beyond expreſſion, (u) Vopiſc. cap. 22.

(x) In 272.

(y) In Remark [F] of the Article APOLLONIUS of Tyana.

(z) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 26.

(aa) See in Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1055, the Liſt of the Nations that ſent him Preſents. See alſo below, Citat. (61).

(bb) Tillemont. Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1056.

(cc) See Remark [L].

(dd) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 32.

(ee) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1058, 1059.

(ff) See the Deſcription of it in Vopiſcus, c. 33 & ſeq.

(gg) It is partly the Country, which is now called Bavaria and Suabia.

(hh) Which was alſo called Dacia, or New Dacia. See the Proofs of this in Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1067.

(ii) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 35.

Continet, atque duas tantum res anxius optat,
Panem, & Circenſes (40).

Now, free from Care, Thoſe Slaves the People live,
No longer plagued with Votes to ſell, or give.
That mighty People, whom the World obey'd,
Whoſe Voices, Conſuls, Armies, Emp'rors made;
Now Liberty's no more, are ſunk ſo low,
Their whole Ambition asks but Bread and Show.

(40) Juven. Sat. 10. ver. 77.

It was by theſe means, This Emperor made himſelf beloved by the Multitude. Read the Letter, which he wrote to the Overſeer of the Proviſions: "Aure- "lianus Auguſtus Flavio Arabiano præfecto annonæ. "Inter cœtera, quibus diis faventibus Romanam "Rempub. juvimus, nihil mihi eſt magnificentius "quam quod additamento unciæ omne annonarum "urbicarum genus juvi: quod ut eſſet perpetuum, "navicularios Niliacos apud Ægyptum novos, & "Romæ amnicos poſui. Tiberinas extruxi ripas: "vadum alvei tumentis effodi, diis & perennitati "vota conſtitui, almam Cererem conſecravi. Nunc "tuum eſt officium, Arabiane jucundiſſime, elabo- "rare, ne meæ diſpoſitiones in irritum veniant. Ne- "que enim populo Rom. ſaturo quicquam poteſt eſſe "lætius (41). —— Aurelianus Cæſar to Flavius Ara- "bianus, Prefect of the Proviſions. Among the "Services, which by the Favour of the Gods I have "done to the Commonwealth, I eſteem none greater "than That of making an Addition of one twelfth "Part more to all the City Proviſions. Which that "I might perpetuate, I have built proper Veſſels in "Egypt, for navigating in the Nile, and at Rome, "for the Tyber. This I have alſo new embanked; "and deepened the Shallows of the ſwelling Channel. "I have performed all holy Rites to the Gods, to "Eternity, and to All Bountiful Ceres. It is now "your part, moſt agreeable Arabianus, to put my De- "ſigns in Execution. Nor can any Thing give me ſo "much pleaſure, as to ſee the Roman People ſupplied "with Plenty." He had a deſign to ſettle a perpetual Diſtribution of Wine, and had taken meaſures for it (42). It is ſaid, that the Commander of his Guards diſſuaded him from the execution, by ſaying, that, if Wine was given to the People, they muſt alſo have Geeſe and Fowls. Si & vinum populo Romano damus, ſupereſt ut & pullos & anſeres demus (43). Such Largeſſes, as Theſe are ſufficient to cauſe the ſpilling of ſome Perſons Blood to be forgot. Though Aurelian had cauſed his Siſter's Son, or Daughter, or both, to be put to Death, for frivolous Reaſons (44); though he had raſhly inflicted capital Puniſhments (45); all this was not able to make him loſe the Affection of a People, whom he fed ſo plentifully, and cloathed ſo handſomely (46). Beſides, his Severity put a Stop to ſeveral Diſorders, which were very odious to the People. He extirpated all Informers, Extortioners, public Bloodſuckers, and ſuch ſort of Vermin. "Quic- "quid ſane ſcelerum fuerit, quicquid malæ conſcien- "tiæ, vel artium funeſtarum, quicquid denique ſa- "ctionum, Aurelianus toto penitus orbe purgavit (47). "— Item quadruplatores ac delatores ingenti ſeveri- "tate perſequutus eſt: tabulas publicas ad privatorum "ſecuritatem exuri in foro Trajano ſemel juſſit. "Amneſtia etiam ſub eo delictorum publicorum de- "creta eſt de exemplo Athenienſium: cujus rei etiam "Tullius in Philippicis meminit. Fures provinciales "repetundarum ac peculatus reos ultra militarem "modum eſt perſequutus, ut eos ingentibus ſuppliciis "cruciatibuſque puniret (48). — Whatever Crimes, "whatever Iniquities, or pernicious Arts, whatever "Factions appeared, all theſe Aurelian totally extir- "pated. — He alſo puniſhed all Informers, and "Sharers of Confiſcations, with exceeding Severity: "and once burnt all the public Accounts in Trajan's "Market-Place, for the Security of Thoſe concerned "in them. He decreed alſo a general Indemnity for "all Offences againſt the State, after the Example "of the Athenians: which is mentioned by Cicero "in his Philippics. The Robbers of the Provinces, "who were guilty of Extortion, Bribery, or Em- "bezzling the Public Money, he treated with more "than military Rigour, and made them undergo the "moſt cruel Tortures and Puniſhments." He enlarged the Circumference of Rome, and reſtored the ancient Bounds of the Empire (49). By this ſhow of Grandeur the People ſuffer themſelves to be decoyed. He applied himſelf to reform Abuſes; he limited the Number of Eunuchs, becauſe they were riſen to too high a Price (50). He prohibited the keeping any Concubines, who were of a free Condition (51). To conclude, it was a Pleaſure to the Roman People to ſee This Emperor make himſelf feared by the Senate: Perhaps That Aſſembly was grown a little too haughty; but, be it as it will, I imagine it was thought proper, that the Senators ſhould

(41) Vopiſc. cap 47, pag. 576, 577.

(42) Idem, cap. 48.

(43) Id. ib. pag. 578.

(44) Idem, cap. 36, & 39.

(45) See the Cæſars of Julian, with Mr Spanheim's Notes pag. 107.

(46) Vopiſc. cap. 48.

(47) Idem, cap. 47.

(48) Idem, c. 39. pag. 522, 523.

(49) Idem, cap. 39.

(50) Idem, cap. 49.

(51) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

expreſſion, and think the Complaint of Junius Tiberianus extremely juſt [I]: For, in ſhort, Aurelian carried the War from Eaſt to Weſt, with the ſame eaſe as we do now from Alſatia into Flanders. He was much lamented, and had moſt magnificent Monuments erected in Honour to him. They deified him [K], and built him a Temple. It is remarkable, ſhould be taught how to behave, by ſuch a Maſter, as School-Boys under the Correction of a Pedagogue. Populus autem Romanus eum amavit, Senatus & timuit (52). Senatus mortem ejus graviter tulit, gravius tamen Populus Romanos, qui vulgò dicebat Aurelianum pædagogum eſſe Senatorum (53).

(52) Vopiſc. cap. ult.

(53) Idem, cap. 37.

[I] The Complaint of Junius Tiberianus was extreamly juſt.] What, ſaid he, ſhall a Therſites, a Sinon, and other Monſters of Anquity, be known to us, and to our Poſterity; and ſhall they not know Aurelian, a moſt illuſtrious Prince, and a moſt ſevere Emperor, who reſtored the whole World to the Roman Name? Heaven grant this Madneſs may never happen. Hereupon he engaged Flavius Vopiſcus to undertake That Emperor's Hiſtory, and promiſed him all the Memoirs the Library of Trajan could furniſh. I ſhall relate That Hiſtorian's own Words: "Quæſivit à me (Junius Tiberianus) "quis vitam Aureliani in literas retuliſſet. Cui ego "quum reſpondiſſem, neminem à me Latinorum, "Græcorum aliquos lectitatos, dolorem gemitus ſui "vir ſanctus per hæc verba profudit: Ergo Therſitem, Sinonem, cæteraque illa prodigia vetuſtatis, "& nos bene ſcimus, & poſteri frequentabunt: divum Aurelianum, clariſſimum principem, ſeveriſſimum imperatorem, per quem totus Romano nomini "orbis eſt reſtitutus, poſteri neſcient? Deus avertat "hanc amentiam. Et tamen, ſi bene novi, ephemeridas illius viri ſcriptas habemus, etiam bella charactere hiſtorico digeſta, quæ velim accipias, & "per ordinem ſcribas, additis quæ ad vitam pertinent. Quæ omnia ex libris linteis, in quibus ipſe "quotidiana ſua ſcribi præceperat, pro tua ſedulitate "condiſces. Curabo autem ut tibi ex Ulpia bibliotheca "& libri lintei proferantur. Tu velim Aurelianum "ita ut eſt, quatenus potes, in literas mittas (54). "— He (Junius Tiberianus) asked me who had wrote "the Life of Aurelian. I anſwered, I had read it in "ſome Writings of the Greeks, but not in any of Latins, on which That excellent Man expreſſed his "Concern in this pathetic Complaint: What, ſhall "a Therſites, a Sinon, and ſuch other Prodigies of "Antiquity be kown to us, and our to Poſterity; and "ſhall they not know the Divine Aurelian, the "moſt celebrated Prince, the ſtricteſt Emperor, who "reſtored the whole World to the Roman Name? "May Heaven avert ſuch Madneſs. And yet, if I "am not miſtaken, we have the Journals of This "great Man in Writing, and alſo his Wars, digeſted "in hiſtorical Method, which I would have you "take, and copy in order, and inſert in their proper Place, whatever relates to his Life. You will "find the Particulars by a careful peruſal of this "Journal, which is wrote in Books made of Lint, "and contains the Minutes of each Day's Tranſaction, ſet down by his own Command. I will "take care they ſhall be ſent you out of the Ulpian "Library. Do you write ſuch a Hiſtory of Aure- "lian, as may deſcribe him to the Life, as near as "you are able." Obſerve, that Vopiſcus ſpoke thus about thirty Years after the Death of Aurelian; I ſay, obſerve This as a Proof either of the Ignorance, or Negligence, of the Latins of thoſe Times. None of them had yet publiſhed any thing of the great Actions of This Prince, the Reſtorer of the Empire, Orbis reſtitutor, as he is called on a Medal. He did not expect This Diſgrace, when he took care to have a daily Regiſter kept of the Series of his Exploits (55).

(54) Idem, cap. 1, pag. 416.

(55) This appears from Vopiſcus's Words juſt now mentioned.

(56) Idem, cap. 37.

(57) Qui ſciret Aurelianum neque fruſtra minari ſolere, neque ſi minaretur ignoſcere --- Who knew that Aurelian never uſed to threaten without cauſe, nor to pardon after he had threatned. Id. cap. 36.

[K] He was much lamented. —— They deified him.] Thoſe very Men, who put him to Death, erected a magnificent Tomb for him, and conſecrated a Temple to him (56); for they diſcovered, that they had been brought into That Conſpiracy, by a horrid Piece of Villany. We ſhall ſhow what That was. Aurelian had threatned his Secretary Mneſtheus; who, giving himſelf over for loſt, as he well knew the Threats of This Prince would be put in Execution (57), reſolved to be beforehand with him, and made ſeveral Perſons believe, that Aurelian deſigned putting Them to Death. He ſhewed them a Liſt, wherein he had put himſelf, and exhorted them to ſave their Lives. They were all Perſons, who had either incurred Aurelian's Diſpleaſure, or had Reaſon to believe, that, by the Importance of their Services, they ſtood very well in his Favour, and had nothing to fear (58). All thoſe Perſons plotted againſt his Life, and put it in Execution But having afterwards diſcovered the Secretary's Fraud, they were the moſt zealous to honour Aurelian. Mneſtheus was expoſed to the wild Beaſts, and care was taken to preſerve the Memory of That Puniſhment on This Emperor's Tomb (59). The Soldiers would not confer the Empire on any of thoſe, who were concerned in his Death, but applied to the Senate for a new Prince, and for the Deification of Aurelian (60). The Senate would not take upon them to create an Emperor, but as for the divine Honours which the Army deſired for Aurelian, they were decreed without any delay. Tacitus (61), who firſt gave his Opinion in the Senate, made a very fine Speech, which the Reader will be glad to find here, ſince it contains a juſt Abſtract of Aurelian's moſt ſplended Actions, and is embelliſhed with ſome curious Sentiments. "Rectè atque ordine conſuluiſſent dii immortales "P. C. ſi boni ferro inviolabiles extitiſſent, ut lon- "giorem ducerent vitam: neque contra eos aliqua "eſſet poteſtas iis qui neces infandas triſtiſſima mente "concipiunt. Viveret enim princeps noſter Aurelia- "nus, quo neque utilior fuit quiſquam. Reſpirare "certe poſt infelicitatem Valeriani, poſt Gallieni ma- "la, imperante Claudio cœperat noſtra Reſpublica: "at eadem reddita fuerat Aureliano toto penitus or- "be vincente. Ille nobis Gallias dedit, ille Italiam "liberavit: ille Vindelicis jugum Barbaricæ ſervitu- "tis amovit. Illo vivente Illyricum reſtitutum eſt, "redditæ Romanis legibus Thraciæ. Ille (proh pu- "dor) Orientem fœmineo preſſum jugo in noſtra "jura reſtituit: ille Perſas inſultantes adhuc Vale- "riani nece, fudit, fugavit, oppreſſit. Illum Sara- "ceni, Blemyes, Axomitæ, Bactriani, Seres, Hiberi, "Albani, Armenii, populi etiam Indorum, veluti "præſentem penè venerati ſunt Deum. Illius donis "quæ à Barbaris gentibus meruit, refertum eſt Capito- "lium: quindecim millia librarum auri ex ejus li- "beralitate unum tenet templum, omnia in urbe fa- "na ejus micant donis. Quare P. C. vel deos ipſos "jure convenio, qui talem principem interire paſſi "ſunt, niſi forte ſecum eum eſſe maluerunt. Decerno "igitur divinos honores: id quod vos omnes exiſtimo "eſſe facturos. Nam de imperatore deligendo ad eun- "dem exercitum cenſeo eſſe referendum. Etenim in "tali genere ſententiæ niſi fiat quod dicitur, & electi "periculum erit, & eligentis invidia. Probata eſt "ſententia Taciti (62). —— Venerable Fathers: It "would have been happy for Mankind, if the im- "mortal Gods had been pleaſed to make all good "Men invulnerable, and longer lived; that no vile "Attempts of the Wicked, to deſtroy them, might "have their Effect. Then had our Prince Aurelian "been ſtill living, than whom there never was a "greater. After the Misfortunes of Valerian, and "the Miſmanagements of Gallienus, it is true, our "Commonwealth began to take Breath under the Em- "peror Claudius; but it was Aurelian, who reſtored "her, by conquering the whole World. It was he, "that recovered the Gallia's: It was he, that freed "Italy: It was he, who ſhook off the Barbarian Yoke "from the Vindelici. To his Life we owe the "Reſtitution of Illyricum, and the Thracia's to the "Roman Empire. To his Life we owe the Recovery "of the Eaſt from the Oppreſſion (O ſhameful!) of "a Woman. By his Arms the Perſians, triumphing "for the Death of Valerian, were routed, ſubdued, "and inſlaved. The Terror of his Arms have made "him almoſt adored as a preſent Deity, by the Sa- "racens, the Ethiopians, the Axomites, the Bactrians, "the Seres, the Heberi, the Albani, the Armenians, "and Indians. He has filled the Capitol with the Pre- "ſents made him by the Barbarians; He has given "to one Temple 15000 Pounds of Gold, and all the "reſt have ſhared of his Liberality. We juſtly, there- "fore,

(58) Mixtis iis quibus Aurelianus vere iraſcebatur cum iis de quibus nihil aſperum cogitabat. --- Joining thoſe that Aurelian was really angry at, with others to whom he intended no harm. Id. ib.

(59) Idem, cap. 37.

(60) Idem, cap. 41.

(61) He was elected Emperor ſome Months after.

(62) Idem, cap. 41, pag. 526, 527.

Digitized by Google

remarkable, that there was no Deity for which he ſhewed more Zeal, than for the Sun [L]. He left but an only Daughter, whoſe Grandſon was yet living in the Time of Dioclefian (kk). He was a Senator much reverenced for his Virtue, and had been Proconſul of Cilicia. We muſt regard as fabulous, what Abulpharagius ſays, that Aurelian upon making Peace with Sapor, King of Perſia, gave him his Daughter in Marriage (ll). It is alſo pretended, that he ſent him ſome Greek Phyſicians, who taught the Perſians Hippocrates's Phyſic (mm). Note, he never employed any Phyſicians in his Sickneſs, and ſcarce ever made uſe of any other Remedy than Abſtinence (nn). To conclude, it was a Happineſs for the Chriſtians, that ſuch a bloody Prince did not undertake Their Extirpation. I confeſs one of the Perſecutions of the Church is placed under his Reign; but ſome Hiſtorians never once mention it, and thoſe who do agree it was ſhort (oo). Before I make an end of this Article, I muſt take notice of a Diſtinction which Vopiſcus has made, and which very few Perſons are capable of making [M]: Such, ſays he (pp), was the End of Aurelian, a Prince more neceſſary than good. What we find in Angeloni, concerning ſome pieces of Marble found in the time of Pope Urban VIII, upon levelling the place where Aurelian had built a Temple, on Mount Quirinal (qq), gives a very great Idea of the Magnicence of That Edifice.

(kk) Vopiſc. in Aurel. cap. 42, pag. 528.

(ll) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1182.

(mm) Abulphar. apud Tillem. ib.

(nn) Vopiſc. cap. 50.

(oo) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1085, & ſeq.

(pp) Hic finis Aureliano fuit principi magis neceſſario quam bono. Vopiſc. c. 37.

(qq) Franceſco Angeloni, Hiſtoria Auguſta da Giulio Ceſare infino à Conſtantino il Magno, illuſtrata con la verita delle antiche Medaglie, f. 332.

" fore, O Venerable Fathers, may expoſtulate with " the Gods themſelves, for ſuffering the Murder of " Aurelian, unleſs it was their Pleaſure to receive " him amongſt them. I therefore decree to him all " divine Honours: in which I hope to meet with " your unanimous Concurrence. But as to the Ele- " ction of an Emperor, I think we ought to refer " That to the Army. For ſhould we undertake it, " and our Nomination not be complied with, the " Elected would be in Danger, and the Electors in " Diſgrace. The Opinion of Tacitus was approved." The ſame Tacitus being elected Emperor ſome Months after (63), began his Reign by ordering four Statues to be erected to Aurelian, one of Gold in the Capitol, and three of Silver in other Places; and that every Body ſhould have the Picture of That great Prince. The three Silver Statues were dedicated, but not That of the Capitol. " In eadem oratione Aureliano " ſtatuam auream ponendam in Capitolio decrevit: " item ſtatuam argenteam in Curia, item in templo " Solis, item in foro divi Trajani. Sed aurea non " eſt poſita: dedicatæ autem ſunt ſolæ argenteæ. " In eadem oratione cavit, ut ſi quis argento publice " privatimque æs miſcuiſſet, ſi quis auro argentum, " ſi quis æri plumbum, capital eſſet cum bonorum " proſcriptione. —— Addidit, ut Aurelianum omnes " pictum haberent (64). —— In the ſame Speech he " decreed to Aurelian a golden Statue, to be erected " in the Capitol; alſo a Silver one in the Court, " another in the Temple of the Sun, and a third in " the Market of Trajan. Only the Silver Statues " were dedicated: that of Gold was never erected. " He, in the ſame Speech, decreed, that whoever ſhould, " either publickly, or privately, adulterate Silver " with Copper, or Gold with Silver, or Copper with " Lead, ſhould ſuffer Death, and Forfeiture of Eſtate. " —— He added, that all ſhould be obliged to have " the Picture of Aurelian."

(63) This was by the Senate, for the Army, to whom the Senate left the Election of a new Prince, referred it again and again to the Senate, who undertook it at laſt.

(64) Vopiſc. in Tacito, cap. 9. pag. 608.

[L] There was no Deity for which he ſhewed more Zeal than for the Sun.] It ſeems to me that his firſt Education was the Cauſe of That Worſhip; for it is likely, that his Mother, who was Prieſteſs of the Sun, inſpired him from his Youth with a particular Devotion for That Deity (65). However it be, we find, that when he thanked Valerian, on his appointing him Conſul, he made uſe of theſe Words: Dii faciant & Deus certus Sol ut & Senatus de me ſic judicet (66). —— May the Gods, and that undoubted Deity the Sun, grant, that the Senate conceive the ſame Opinion of me. A learned Man pretends (67), that he ſpoke thus in a Letter (68), as if the other Gods were doubtful, and the Sun only certain. It is pretended, that, in the Battle which he won againſt Zenobia's Forces, near Emeſa, he was aſſiſted by a Deity, who encouraged the Soldiers, and made the Infantry ſupport the Cavalry, which was ready to fly (69). As ſoon as he entered victorious into Emeſa, he went to the Temple of the Sun: Statim ad templum Heliogabali tetendit, quaſi communi officio vota ſoluturus, and found there the ſame Figure of the Deity, who had favoured him in the Battle. Wherefore he founded ſome Temples in That Place (70), and afterwards built the Temple of the Sun in Rome (71). He alſo cauſed the Temple of the ſame God to be rebuilt in Palmyra. Here are the Orders, which he diſpatched for That Purpoſe; I ſhall relate them, becauſe they diſcover to us both This Prince's Cruelty, and his Devotion for the Sun. " Aurelianus Auguſtus Ceionio Baſſo. Non oportet " ulterius progredi militum gladios. Jam ſatis Pal- " myrenorum cæſum atque conciſum eſt. Mulieri- " bus non pepercimus, infantes occidimus, ſenes ju- " gulavimus, ruſticos interemimus: cui terras, cui " urbem deinceps relinquemus? Parcendum eſt iis " qui remanſerunt. Credimus enim tam paucos tam " multorum ſuppliciis eſſe correctos. Templum ſane " Solis, quod apud Palmyram aquilifer legionis ter- " tiæ cum vexilliferis & draconario & cornicinibus " atque liticinibus diripuerunt, ad eam formam volo " quæ fuit, reddi. Habes trecentas auri libras è " Zenobiæ capſulis: habes argenti mille octingenta " pondo. De Palmyrenorum bonis habes gemmas " regias. Ex his omnibus fac cohoneſtari templum: " mihi & diis immortalibus gratiſſimum feceris. Ego " ad ſenatum ſcribam, petens ut mittat pontificem " qui dedicet templum (72). - - - - Aurelianus Cæſar " to Ceionius Baſſus. It is time to ſheath our Sword. " The Palmyrenes have ſufficiently felt it's Edge. " We have ſpared neither Women nor Children, we " have put both the Aged and the Husbandman to the " Sword. To whom, then, ſhall we leave the Lands, " to whom the City? We muſt ſpare the reſt. The " few, who remain, will, undoubtedly, remember the " Puniſhment of ſo many. The Temple of the Sun, " at Palmyra, which the Standard Bearer of the " third Legion, with his Enſigns, and Colours, and " Trumpets, and Fifes, demoliſhed: I will have re- " built after the ſame Model. You have, of Zeno- " bias's Treaſure, Three hundred Pounds of Gold, and " Eighteen hundred Pounds of Silver, You have, of " the Palmyrenes Effects, the Crown of Jewels. " With all theſe, erect a Temple; and you will per- " form a Work, not only moſt grateful to me, but " alſo to the immortal Gods. I will write to the " Senate, to ſend a Chief Prieſt to conſecrate it."

(70) Illic templa fundavit donariis ingentibus poſitis. Id. ibid.

(71) Id. ib. cap. 35.

(72) Id. ib. cap. 31, pag. pag. 489.

(65) Id. in Aureliano, cap. 4.

(66) Id. ib. cap. 14.

(67) Spanheimius's Note on the Cæſars of Julian, pag. 109.

(68) Vopiſcus ſays, he ſpoke thoſe Words.

(69) Id. ib. cap. 25.

[M] Vopiſcus has made a Diſtinction concerning Aurelian, - - - - - - which few Perſons are capable of making.] The Faults of Aurelian were ſerviceable, the State ſtood in need of them, but, in Vopiſcus's Opinion, it does not follow from thence that he was a good Emperor. This is the Language of a Man who is careful not to confound things. A great Number of Perſons are ignorant of this Diſtinction. They look on That as a truly, and abſolutely, good and juſt Reign, which has prevented, or removed, ſome great Evil; and if once they fancy that a Government is unjuſt, they look on it as truly, and abſolutely, bad, without regarding the neceſſary Advantages the Public receives from it.

AUREOLUS (PETER) a Franciſcan Friar, and ſince Archbiſhop of Aix, was one of the moſt ſubtil and famous Divines of his Time. He flouriſhed about the end of the XIIIth Century, and the beginning of the XIVth. He was born at Verberie

Digitized by Google

Verberie on the Oise, and his Name was Oriol (a); but as he is only known by the Latin Name which he gives himself, I place him here, without imitating Moreri, who refers us from Aureole to Oriol. That Reference would be more pardonable, if we found in his Article of Oriol, all that might be reasonably expected from an Historian, who cites the Life of that illustrious Archbishop of Aix (b); but this he falls falls very short of. Nor can I supply his defect, for I do not believe, the Work, which contains the Life of Aureolus, is any where to be met with in all the United Provinces. What I can say is only this; Aureolus was Professor of Divinity in the University of Paris (c): they appropriated to him the Title of Doctor facundus (d). He was Provincial of Aquitain, when he was made Archbishop of Aix (e), and did not live long after he was raised to that high Dignity [A]. It has been said that he that he was promoted to the Rank of a Cardinal. He had a very penetrating Understanding, but was too fond of distinguishing himself by new Opinions [B]. It is pretended, that he maintained the Impossibility of the Creation [C]. The Dominicans had a formidable Adversary in him, and caused him to be refuted with much Spirit, by

(a) Labbe, Dissert. de Scriptor. Eccles. Tom. 2. pag. 183.

(b) Placed, as he says, before the Commentaries of Oriol, on the Master of the Sentences, printed at Rome in the Year 1595.

(c) Labbe, ubi supra, pag. 184.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Bellarm. de Script. Eccles. pag. 365.

[A] He did not live long after he was raised to the Dignity of Archbishopric of Aix.] The Archbishopric of Aix was conferred on him in the Year 1321; and we find that James de Concos de Cabrairez, a Dominican, was installed in the same Archbishopric the tenth of July, 1322 (1). It must follow, then, that the Twenty seventh of April, which was the Day of Aureolus's Death (2) belongs, at fartheſt, to the Year 1322. Behold the Negligence of Those Times: They were contented to note the Day, in which an Archbishop died, and never troubled themselves about the Date of the Year.

(1) Labbe, Dissert. de Script. Eccles. Tom. 2. pag. 184.

(2) Id. ib.

[B] He was too fond of distinguishing himself by new Opinions.] This is a very dangerous Character; a Rock much to be feared: we scarce ever find, that those, who have Wit and Learning enough to raise strong Objections against the common Opinions, have Judgment enough to stop at a proper Time, and to discern what is not worth the Trouble of a Reformation. Here is a Passage, where those sort of Persons are well represented, and our Aureolus, in particular, by Name. "Ex hac classe, insignia "ingenia duo, Durandus, & Aureolus minus benè "audiunt, quod ingeniis, quibus valebant plurimum, "indulserint in plerisque; & novas cudere, ac com- "minisci opiniones, communem tramitem fine causâ "deserendo non dubitarint. Estque haud dubie ar- "gumentum judicii minus exquisiti, nec satis ma- "turi, vel emuncti, ferri facilè, & absque urgenti "ratione, extra viam: ita ut quamvis res de qua "agitur, ad scholæ tricas merè pertineat, nec inde "dispendium ullum doctrinæ fidei, vel sanis, ac "puris moribus sit timendum, tamen consultissimum "sit, quando manifesta ratio non urget, ab ante- "riorum placitis non discedere (3). - - - - - Of this "Class two great Scholars, Durandus and Aureolus, "have suffered most in their Characters, for using "their Extraordinary Talents so freely, on all Oc- "casions, and leaving the common Road, for no other "Reason, than only to invent, and start, new Opi- "nions. And it is certainly a Sign of a weak Judg- "ment, not sufficiently improved and corrected, to be "easily, and without just cause, led out of the "Way: So that even when the Question is only a- "bout scholastic Niceties, and can do no possible Da- "mage, either to our Faith, or our Morals, yet the "wisest Method is, not to leave the old Maxims, unless "upon very satisfactory Grounds." And yet, it must be confessed, that these Innovators (4), and confounding Wits, are sometimes necessary; for what considerable Progress could be made without them? Should we not fall asleep, under Pretence, that every thing has been found out already, and that we must acquiesce in the Opinions of our Fathers, as in their Lands, and their Son? The Disputes, and the Confusions, which are raised by bold, ambitious, and rash Men, are never altogether evil: They may be, in themselves, as great an Evil as you please; but they are highly useful in respect to the Sciences, and the Improvement of the Mind. This may be said even of Civil Wars. A very honest Man affirms it of the Civil Wars, which ravaged France in XVIth Century. He says, they refined either the Genius or the Language of some; they cleared the Judgment of others; they served either for a Bath to wash; or a Curry-Comb to scrape off their Dirt. Here are his Words; both the Thoughts, and Expressions, deserve citing in this Place. "Ut sæpe res adversæ inex- "pectatis bonis locum faciunt, ita in hac publica, "& omnium maxima calamitate res autor dari poterit, "quibusdam ingenium evasisse limatius, acumen per- "spicacius, judicium resecatius, os mundius, scripta "purgatiora, prorsus ut agnoscere liceat, ærumnarum "procellas, quibus æstuavimus his esse balneas quæ "sordes eluerunt, aliis strigilem quæ squamam de- "tersit, quibusdam uredinem, quæ absumpsit quic- "quid luxurians & inutile. Denique si quis vere "æstimet, nunc demum intelligimus, eam, quæ Rei- "publicæ tempestas fuit, privatim, & pauculis esse "cotem qua acuitur, & faculam qua accenditur quic- "quid in singulis est optimum (5). —— As Mis- "fortunes often occasion unexpected Benefits, so this "public and heaviest of Calamities, may have been "the Cause of polishing the Wit, clearing the Un- "derstanding, pruning the Judgment, refining the "Language, or purifying the Style, of some Persons; "so that the Storms of Affliction, whose fury we have "felt, must be owned to have served, as Baths to wash "away Spots, Curry-Combs to scrape off Dirt, "or Blasts to consume what was useless and luxuriant. "And to judge of it rightly, we may now, at last, "perceive, that the public Misery has proved a pri- "vate Happiness, and either sharpened, as a Whet- "stone, or kindled as a Torch, all manner of Excel- "lencies in particular Persons." In truth, the Public might very well be without such Curry-Combs, Files, or Whetstones, as some may please to call them. Doubtless it is better to want those Advantages, than to pay so great a Price for them. It is better to continue sick, than to be cured by a Remedy so terribly dear. However it be, our Doctor here was resolved to follow no Body's Opinion in his Commentary on the Master of Sentences; and on the other side no Body followed his: All took a Pleasure in opposing him; some compared him to Ismael: Quem (Petrum Aureolum) Antoninus ait *; ita scripsisse in librum sententiarum, ut quia manus ejus contra omnes qui jam antea scripserant, etiam manus omnium contra eum fuerint (6).

(3) Theoph. Raynaudus, Erotem. de malis ac bonis Libris, n. 430, pag. 250.

(4) I do not in the least mean those who attempt necessary Reformations.

(5) Carolus Paschalius, de optimo genere Elocutionis, pag. 124.

* Anton. tit. 24, c. 8, §. 2.

(6) Spondan. ad Annum, 1333, n. 16, pag. 460.

[C] It is pretended, that he maintained the Impossibility of the Creation.] The Knowledge I have of this Matter is very small, for I can only assure you, that Theophilus Raynaudus, after having rejected some Reasons of Averroës as very weak, adds, that the Arguments, on which Aureolus so ill employed his Learning, to shew the Creation to be impossible, amount to the same thing. "Eodem recidunt argu- "menta quibus Aureolus apud Capreolum in 2. d. 1. "q. 2. in argumentis contra quartam, parum fœli- "citer ingenium exercuit, ut probaret creationem "esse impossibilem. (7). - - - - - - - These Arguments "are in Capreolus, 2. d. 1. q. 2. in his Arguments "against the fourth." Observe particularly, that he had never read Aureolus, nor knew any thing of his Doctrine, but as he found it represented in his Adversary Capreolus. This puts me under a new Necessity of groping here in the Dark: But yet I believe I shall not be mistaken in the Conjecture I am going to make. I suppose that Aureolus did not directly, and absolutely, affirm, that the Creation was impossible, for that would have been broaching an Opinion very repugnant to the Romish Faith. He maintained only, that, for such and such Reasons, he should have held it impossible, that a Being could be made out of nothing, if Faith did not teach him, that the Words, which the Scripture uses concerning the first Formation of the World, must be understood to

(7) Theoph. Raynaud. in Theol. Naturali, Dist. 8. n. 334, pag. 1039.

Digitized by Google

by one of their beſt Pens [D]. I ſhall ſay ſomething concerning his Writings [E]. You will find the Time of his Death in the Remark [A].

ſignify a Creation, properly ſo called. Having once covered himſelf with this Shield, he might ſafely exert the whole Strength of his Genius, to prove the Impoſſibility of the Creation; he only ventured upon a Philoſophical Diſpute, in which he did not fear that he ſhould want Cavils and Subtilties. I make no queſtion but they, who read this, and have a Copy of Capreolus in their Studies, will be ſo curious as to conſult him, to know whether this great Antagoniſt of Aureolus, faithfully lays down the whole State of the Queſtion. There are a great many, who, on ſuch an Occaſion, would ſay, they are confuting a Doctor, who maintains the Impoſſibility of the Creation, and would exaggerate the pernicious Conſequences of that Doctrine, without ever intimating, that the ſame Doctor preſerves the Orthodox Opinion, and ſubmits the moſt ſubtil Arguments which the Light of Nature affords him, to the Authority of Tradition. I know, that, in another Caſe, Aureolus behaved himſelf in the very ſame manner, as, I ſuppoſe he has done with reſpect to the Creation; which makes my Conjecture more probable. He ſaid, that nothing but the Authority of the Saints could make him believe, that Tranſubſtantiation is a true Change of the whole Bread, into the whole Body of our Lord. I have read this in a Book of Dr Allix. Petrus Aureolus Romanæ Eccleſiæ Cardinalis hoc profitetur; propter ſolas authoritates Sanctorum teneo, quòd Tranſubſtantiatio eſt verus tranſitus & converſio totius panis in totum corpus Domini. in 4. diſt. 11. q. 1. a. 2. (8).

(8) Pet. Allix, Præfat. Hiſtorica de Dogmate Tranſubſtantiationis, pag. 66.

[D] The Dominicans cauſed him to be refuted —— by one of their beſt Pens.] It was by the ſame Capreolus, whom I have juſt before mentioned. Conſult his Commentary on the Maſter of the Sentences. "He "there attacks briskly, and levels his whole Force "againſt the Commentary of Aureolus, on the ſame "Maſter. —— Quæ (Commentaria Aureoli) in ſuis "in eaſdem ſententias Commentariis ſæpius excuſſit "exagitavitque Joannes Capreolus (9)." He inſinuates, that the falſe Interpretations which Aureolus made, and which ſerved him for Principles to draw odious Conſequences from, had not always their only Foundation in the Obſcurity of his Underſtanding, but were in ſome meaſure owing alſo to his Paſſions. I have this only from Father Baron, who expreſſes himſelf thus: "Memini me Capreolum neſcio quo ex quæ-"ſtionibus in primum ſentent. loco legere, ſoluto "quodam argumento Aureoli, quo ad grande aliquod "impium, & abſurdum ex falſa interpretatione no-"ſtræ ſententiæ rem deduxerat, hæc modeſtè ad-"junxiſſe Capreolum: ex noſtrâ reſponſione patet "hanc objectionem Aureoli profectam eſſe ex per-"verſo intellectu, quidquid ſit de affectu (10). - - - - "I remember Capreolus, ſomewhere in his Queſtions "on the firſt Book of the Sentences, after refuting an "Argument of Aureolus, which by a falſe Interpre-"tation of our Opinion, had eſtabliſhed ſomething "monſtrouſly impious and abſurd, thus modeſtly adds: "From our Solution it appears, that the Objection of "Aureolus, proceeds from a depraved Underſtand-"ing, whatever might be his Diſpoſition." Note, That Conſtantius Sarnanus, a Franciſcan, and a Cardinal, wrote a Book, wherein he pretends to reconcile Aureolus's Opinions, with thoſe of Capreolus (11). He endeavoured to ſhew the ſame Agreement between the Doctrines of Thomas Aquinas, and thoſe of Scotus (12). Juſt in the ſame manner ſome have pretended to diſcover a good Underſtanding between Plato and Ariſtotle. This is either trifling with Readers, or ridiculing, without deſigning it, thoſe whom they endeavour to reconcile. Such a Peace is diſhonourable to both Parties, and the Mediators might fear ſome ſevere Expoſtulations, is they, who firſt began the Quarrel, ſhould return again into the World. They would be apt to ſay, What, do you pretend that we only diſpute about Words, and that we agree in the ſame Doctrines, without perceiving it; our Paſſion ſo ſtrongly prepoſſeſſing us, that we underſtond not what we are ſaying? This is a Satire all over, we will have no Peace on ſuch ignominious Conditions. Away with your Projects of Re-union; we had rather continue the War, than ſee it ended at the Expence of our Learning and Underſtandings. Obſerve, that there are ſome Inſtances, where the hotteſt Chntroverſies are only the Effects of a Miſunderſtanding; but I do not think we can judge ſo of Thomiſm and Scotiſm, nor conſequently of the Difference between the Scotiſt Aureolus, and the Thomiſt Capreolus.

(9) Labbe, ubi ſupra, pag. 184.

(10) Vincentius Baronius, Apologet. lib. 1. §. 2. p. 240.

(11) Oldoini Athen. Roman. p. 176.

(12) Id. ib.

[E] I ſhall ſay ſomething concerning his Writings.] Thoſe who have ſpoke of them, obſerve ſo little Exactneſs, that they neither diſtinguiſh between thoſe Writings, which are yet remaining, and thoſe which are loſt; nor between thoſe which have been printed, and thoſe which never were. Father Labbe (13), who complains of this Neglect, too common among Bibliographers, promiſed to repair it amply; but he died without publiſhing his large Work, of which the Diſſertation, I have quoted, was but a Specimen (14). He obſerves, that the Breviarium Bibliorum of Aureolus, ſive Epitome univerſæ ſacræ ſcripturæ juxta literalem ſenſum, was printed at Venice, in the Year 1571, and at Paris in the Year 1585 (15), by the care of Stephen Nouellet, Doctor in Divinity, of the Faculty of Paris; and that the Commentaries on the four Books of Sentences, were printed at Rome in, in folio, the Year 1595, and dedicated to Pope Clement VIII, by Cardinal Conſtantius Sarnanus (16). He rejects what Father Maracci reports in his Bibliotheca Mariana, that the Treatiſe of Aureolus de Conceptione immaculata B Virginis, was printed at Toulouſe in the Year 1314: he ſays, perhaps that Writing was compoſed in that Year, or printed in the Year 1514.

(13) Labbe, ubi ſupra.

(14) See the Preface of his Diſſertation de Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis.

(15) Oldoini, in Athen. Roman. pag. 532. makes it 1581.

(16) Ibid. pag. 533. ſays the ſame thing.

Let us make ſome ſmall Remarks on all this. I. The Catalogue of the Oxford Library mentions the Epitome totius S. Scripturæ, printed at Strasburg in the Year 1514. Father Labbe did not know of that Edition: nor Geſner neither. Geſner's Epitome, publiſhed in the Year 1583, does not take notice of any of Aureolus's Books which had been printed: but obſerve, that our Peter Aureolus is there very falſly diſtinguiſhed from Petrus de Verberia, dictus Aureoli. II. It is not true that the Commentaries on the four Books of Sentences, were printed at Rome, in the Year 1595. Bellarmin affirms, that he ſaw only the Commentary on the firſt of thoſe four Books, and that it was printed at Rome, in the Year 1596 (17). The Catalogue of the Oxford Library, and that of the Archbiſhop of Reims, place in that Year, the Edition of Aureolus's Commentary on the firſt Book of Sentences, and they place in the Year 1605, the Edition of the Commentary on the three following Books, with the Quodlibeta. All this makes two Volumes in Folio, printed at Rome, the firſt in 1596, in the Vatican; the laſt by Zanzetti, in the Year 1605. I wonder that Bellarmin had no knowledge of the printing of the laſt Volume. This is ſomething ſtranger, than to ſee in Moreri, that we have ſeveral Editions of the Commentaries of Aureolus, on the Maſter of the Sentences; but that this of Rome of 1595, is the moſt correct. Where could he ſhew thoſe ſeveral Editions? Would he have dated That of Rome as he did, if he had known what I have ſaid above? III. I muſt needs ſay Father Labbe has been too favourable to Father Maracci, who could believe that there were Books printed in the Year 1314. Does not all the World know that Printing was not uſed in Europe, tell about the Middle of the XVth Century? What then was the Jeſuit Oldoini dreaming on, when he boaſted of having ſeen the Treatiſe of Aureolus, de Conceptione Virginis Mariæ, printed at Toulouſe in the Year 1314? De Conceptione Virginis Mariæ Librum, qui habetur M. S. Toloſæ in Collegio Fuxenſi, & excuſum vidimus Toloſæ anno 1314 (18).

(17) Bellarm. de Scriptor. Eccleſ. pag. 365.

(18) Oldoini, Athen. Roman. pag. 533.

AURIEGE, or rather ARIEGE [A], a River in France, has it's Source in

[A] ARIEGE.] It is ſo called in the Countries through which it paſſes. In the old Maps it is called Aregia, and Areia in a Manuſcript Martyrology of the Monaſtery of Moiſſac. There is in that Manuſcript the Paſſion of St Antonin, who was marryed at Pamiés, and it is affirmed there, that the Bark in the Mountains which limit the County of Foix towards Rouſſillon. It paſſes by Taraſcon, Foix, Pamiés, Barilles, Bonac (a), Saverdun, Sainte-Gabelle, and Haute-Rive, and falls into the Garonne at Portet, a long League above Toulouſe, after having received the Waters of the River Lers, on the Right, and Thoſe of the Arget, and of the Leze on the Left [B]. The Ariege is rapid and full of Fiſh, and alſo very good to drink; but it is only navigable from Haute-Rive. Du Bartas praiſes it much [C]. See alſo the Paſſage of Bertrand Helias, related by Papyrius Maſſo (b).

Digitized by Google

(a) It is a Lordſhip that was erected into a Marquiſate, for the late Mr Duſſon, elder Brother of Monſ. de Bonrepaux, Ambaſſador of France to the Court of Denmark, and afterwards in Holland.

(b) Papyrius Maſſo de Flum. Gall. pag. 412.

wherein his Body was laid, paſſed through That River into the Garonne. " Per fluvium qui Areia dicitur, " ad Garonnam uſque perveniens fluvium navicula " (in qua corpus Antonini mart. à Gentilibus necati) " inde alium qui Tarnis dicitur inveniens fluvium, " inde retrogrado curſu per Tarnin intravit in Avario- " nis alveum (1). — The Boat (in which was the Body " of Antoninus, the Martyr, murdered by the Gen- " tiles) coming along the River Areia, as far as to " the Garrone, and there finding another River, called " Tarnis, returned in a retrograde Courſe along the " Tarnis, into the Channel of the Avario." Hadrian Valeſius, from whom I have this, has cenſured Thoſe who call it Auriege, and treated Papyrius Maſſo very ill for naming it Aurigera. " Fluvius eſt vulgo di- " ctus Ariege, quibuſdam corruptè l'Auriege; à Maſ- " ſono (2) priſci ejus fluvii nominis ignaro Aurigera " novo ac ridiculo nomine nuncupatus (3). —— The " River is commonly called Ariege, by ſome corruptly " l'Auriege; by Maſſo, who was intirely ignorant of " the ancient Name of This River, it is ridiculouſly " called Aurigera." Mr Baudrand believes that the true Latin Name of that River is Alburacis (4). I wiſh he had quoted ſome good Author. Sanſon calls it Lauriegue in a Map which he publiſhed in the Year 1675 (5). But moſt of the proper Names in it are ſo diſfigured, that we ought to ſuppoſe them to be faults of the Engraver. Mr Moreri has very pleaſantly imagined that the Auriege and Lauriege are the two Names by which it is called. He forgets the true one? and does not dream, that the two Names he mentions, are but one and ſame; one of them expreſſed without the Article, the other with the Article. His miſtake is juſt the ſame as if he had ſaid, that the River running by Paris, is called Seine and Laſeine. I know many Authors make a jeſt of a Writer who takes them up for Errors of this Nature, and pretend to be above thoſe Trifles: But they are vain Pretenders, who want a fair Mask to cover either their Ignorance, or their Idleneſs, or their ill Taſte, or their Incorrectneſs. If a City or River were only mentioned occaſionally in a Piece of Wit, the faults which thoſe Gentlemen call Trifles would be excuſable. But the Caſe is very different, when thoſe Faults concern the chief Subject of the Book. That which is only an inſignificant Nicety in the Writings of a Divine, will ſometimes be a capital Fault in a Geographer, or in the Author of a Dictionary. I remember Papyrius Maſſo has called it la Riege. See afterwards the Remark [A] of the Article GARONNE.

(1) Hadrian. Valeſius in Notitia Galliæ, pag. 26.

(2) Papyr. Maſſo in Deſcript. Flumin. Galliæ, pag. 470, Edit. 1685.

(3) Valeſ. Notit. Gall. pag. 26.

(4) See his Geography, pag. 33, 88, and 128.

(5) That of the Pyrenean Mountains.

[B] After having received on the Right, the Waters of the Lers, it receives thoſe of the Arget, and the Leze, on the Left.] Moreri deſerves a ſmall Cenſure here: He ſays, that the Auriege, having received the Lers, the Arget, and the Leze, falls into the Garonne. This ſignifies plainly, that the Mouth of the Lers is above the Mouth of the Arget, and that the entrance of the Leze, is between the two others. Nothing can be more falſe. The Arget comes into the Ariege, near Foix, and there is eight or nine Leagues diſtance between Foix and Sainte-Gabelle, which is very near the Mouth of the Lers. " Ler- " tius vero in Aurigeram labitur prope Templum " S. Gauvillæ (6). — The Lers falls into the Auriege, " near the Church of St Gabille." The Leze has it's Entrance three or four Leagues below That of the Lers. Coulon might have taught Moreri the Order of thoſe Entrances. Note, he obſerves, that the Auriege is called by the Latins, Aurigera (7); and the Larget, Argentigera (8); and that the One produces Gold, the Other Silver (9). Perhaps he had taken theſe Remarks from Olhagarai, who wrote as follows: And what ſhall we not ſay of the Lers, with his Flux and Reflux (10)? Of the Auriege, and of the Arget, Rivers with Gold and Silver Banks? Does not this witneſs the hidden Treaſures in the Bowels of Thoſe Mountains (11)?

(6) Papyr. Maſſo, Deſcript. Flum. Gall. p. 470.

(7) Coulon, Rivers of France, Tome 1. pag. 483.

(8) He had twice ſaid the Arget, which is the true Orthography.

(9) Note, that Bertrand Helias, Hiſtoriæ Comitum Fuxenſium, lib. 1. related ſome curious Circumſtances concerning that Gold. Papyr. Maſſo, Deſcript. Flum. Gall. pag. 412. quotes his Words.

(10) See concerning this admirable Phænomenon, the 3*d day of the* 1*ſt Week of* Du Bartas, pag. 288.

(11) Peter Olhagarai, Preface of the Hiſtory of Foix, Bearn, and Navarre.

[C] Du Bartas praiſes it much.] See here the third Sonnet of his Nine Pyrenean Muſes, preſented to the King of Navarre (12).

Fleuve d'or & de flot & de nom & de ſable,
Riche en grains, en paſtel, en fruits, en vins, en bois,
Auriege au viſte cours clair ornement de Foix,
Qui rend par ton tribut Garonne navigable,
Fille de ſi grand Mont, qui cache, eſpouvantable,
Son front dedans le Ciel, qui chenu tous les Mois,
Depuis le bord du Su juſqu'au bord Eſcoſſois,
Ne void autre plus grand à ſa grandeur ſemblable;
Clair flot, je te feroy par un diſcours facond
Plus riche que Pactol, plus que le Nil fecond:
Plus loin que l'Ocean on orroit tes eaux bruire;
Fier, on t'egaleroit aux fleuves les plus Grands:
On te verroit au Ciel comme le Po reluire,
Si je voyoy tes bords repurgés de brigans (13).

(12) Du Bartas, in the Appendix of the firſt Week, page 934.

(13) Since Du Bartas's Time, this has been remedied.

Auriege, thou noble River, known to Fame
For thy bright Waves, and for thy Golden Name.
Thy Borders every Scene of Plenty ſhew,
Who pours her Horn, where'er thy Waters flow.
Foix to thy rapid Courſe owes all it's Pride;
And deep Garonne it's navigable Tide.
A mighty Mountain is thy awful Sire,
Whoſe tow'ring Head does to the Skies aſpire;
Hoary with Loads of everlaſting Snows,
Nor, e'en from Pole to Pole, an Equal knows.
O would the Muſe aſſiſt the darling Theme,
In loftieſt Notes, I'd ſing thy Cryſtal Stream.
With their juſt Praiſe, thy mantling Waves ſhould ſmile,
Rich as Pactolus, fruitful as the Nile.
Far as loud Ocean can be heard to roar,
Should ev'ry Murmur eccho from thy Shore.
Thy curling Surge ſhould proudeſt Floods out-vy;
And like the Po reſplendent reach the Sky.
Cou'd I thy Banks from ambuſh'd Rogues releaſe,
And make the Traveller taſte thy Stream in Peace.

See alſo the ſeventh Sonnet, you will find this in the beginning of it:

François, arreſte toy, ne paſſe la campagne,
Que nature mura de Rochers d'un coſté,
Que l'Auriege entrefend d'un cours précipité:
Campagne qui n'a point en beauté de compagne (14).

(14) Du Bartas, ibid. pag. 936.

Stay, great Navarre, nor leave theſe charming Plains,
Where far above all Rival, Beauty reigns.
Rocks, Nature's Walls, the diſtant Proſpect cloſe;
And all around the haſty Auriege flows.

AURISPA (JOHN), a Native of Noto in Sicily (a), was one of the moſt Learned Men of the XVth Century. He underſtood the Greek and Latin Languages; he was a good Orator, and wrote very well, for thoſe Times, both in Proſe and Verſe. It is ſaid that he was honoured with the Poetical Crown in Italy. He was Secretary to Pope Nicolas V, who gave him great Proofs of his Eſteem, by (a) The Name of this Town in Latin is Netum.

Digitized by Google

(b) Taken from the Elogia Siculorum qui literis floruerunt, composed by the Jesuit Hierome Ragusa, pag. 147, & seq.

preſenting him with two rich Abbies [A]. He entertained a long Correſpondence, by Letters, with Philelphus, and his Name is celebrated by Laurentius Valla, Antonius Panormita, and ſeveral other famous Authors. He retired to Ferrara, and lived there to a great Age, honoured with the Eſteem of the Lords of that Country [B], which proved very advantageous to him; for he did not only ſubſiſt, but alſo grow rich by their Liberality (b). What he compoſed is at preſent very hard to be met with [C].

[A] Nicholas V, —— preſented him with two rich Abbies.] He gave him That of St Philip de Grandi (1), the Thirty firſt of May, 1449, and that of Ste Marie de la Roccade (2), in the Year 1451. Auriſpa had a Law Suit for this laſt Benefice, with one who had it beſtowed upon him by Alphonſus, King of Naples. See Rocchus Pirrus, in the Two hundred and twenty fifth Page of his Account of the Church of Syracuſa (3).

(1) It is at Meſſina.

(2) It is at Lentini in Sicily.

(3) Taken out of Jerome Raguſa, pag. 148, 149 Elogiorum Siculorum.

[B] He retired to Ferrara, and lived there to a great Age, honoured with the Eſteem of the Lords of that Country.] I prove all this from a Paſſage of Gyraldus. " Johannes Auriſpa Siculus, ſays he (4), ora" tor in aliquo poëtarum ordine reponi poteſt, quippe
" qui Græcè & Latinè probè doctus eſſet, carmina
" tamen ejus quæ ipſe legi neſcio quid Sicularum
" gerrarum habere videntur: fuit enim eo tempore
" quo nondum exquiſitæ literæ in lucem redierant.
" Vixit autem Ferrariæ ad ſummam ſenectutem, in " pretio habitus à noſtris principibus, qui & eum lo-
" cupletem reddiderunt: ab hoc ferunt Ciſtarellum
" familiam originem duxiſſe. —— John Auriſpa of " Sicily, the Orator, deſerves ſome ſort of Place among
" the Poets, being very learned in Greek and Latin,
" though his Poems, which I have read, contain I
" know not what old Wives Tales: for he wrote in
" the obſcurer Ages of Learning. He lived at Ferrara,
" to a great old Age, eſteemed by our principal Fa- " milies, who made him rich; the Family of Ciſta-
" rella is ſaid to owe it's Riſe to him."

(4) Lilius Gregor. Gyrald. de Poët. ſuor. Temporum Dial. I. pag. 531. See alſ. Geſner in Bibl. fol. 386, verſo.

[C] What he compoſed, is at preſent very hard to be met with.] Theſe are the Books aſcribed to him: A Tranſlation of Archimedes; the Tranſlation of Hierocles's Commentary on the Golden Verſes of Pythagoras; and that of a Conſolatory Treatiſe of Philiſcus to Cicero. Geſner's Epitome mentions theſe three Pieces, without ſaying whether they were ever printed. It is certain, that Auriſpa's Hierocles was printed at Baſil, by Henry Peter, in 8vo, in the Year 1543 (5). Geſner cites part of the Preface, by which it appears, that it was wrote when the Author was already eighty Years of Age (6). In the Library of Gabriel Naudé, there was a Manuſcript, entituled, Comparatio de præſidentia Hannibalis Carthaginenſis, Alexandri Magni & Scipionis Majoris Romani apud inferos, ex Græco in Latinum converſa ab Auriſpâ Oratore ad Baptiſtam Senatorii & Equeſtris Ordinis Civem Romanum (7).

(5) See Geſner. Biblioth. fol. 231, verſo.

(6) Id. ib.

(7) Labbe, nova Biblioth. MSS. Librorum, pag. 231, Edit. 1653.

AUROGALLUS (MATTHEW) a Learned Man of the XVIth Century, and Profeſſor of three Languages in the Univerſity of Wittemberg (a); was born in Bohemia. He had made a curious Collection of the beſt Books of Antiquity, and was not contented to eſteem them, as many others do, who endeavour to procure themſelves a Name by their numerous Libraries, but loved alſo to read them. I have ſeen an Epiſtle Dedicatory (b), wherein he is exhorted to publiſh the Phyſician Aëtius, Nineteen Books of Natural Hiſtory compoſed by an unknown Author, the Hymns of Callimachus, the Orations of the Ten Athenian Orators, and ſeveral other Greek Manuſcripts, brought from the Levant to Bohemia by the Baron Bohuſlas of Haſſenſteyn, which came to his hands cognationis & ſtudiorum hæreditario jure, as next Heir both in Kindred and Learning. It ſeems to be inferred, from Thoſe Latin words, that he was related to That Baron. There are ſome Books of his remaining [A]. He died in the Year 1543 (c), and had been a great Aſſiſtant to Luther in the Tranſlation of the Bible.

(a) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Parthenius de Amatoriis Affectibus, by Janus Cornarius, Medicus Zuiccavienſis, dated the 1ſt of April, 1536.

(b) That, mentioned in the preceding Citation.

(c) Micrælius, Syntag. Hiſt. Konig is miſtaken in putting 1533, and quoting Micrælius.

[A] Some of his Books are remaining.] I do not know whether there any more beſides Compendium Hebrææ Chaldææque Grammatices, printed at Wittemberg, in 8vo, in the Year 1525, and at Baſil, in the Year 1539; and De Hebræis Urbium, Regionum, Populorum, Fluminum, Montium, & aliorum locorum Nominibus Liber, è veteri inſtrumento congeſtus, printed at Wittemberg, in the Year 1526, and at Baſil, in 1539, in 8vo (1). That ſecond Edition was enlarged by the Author.

(1) Epit. Biblioth. Geſneri.

AUSONIUS, in Latin Decius, or rather Decimus Magnus Auſonius, one of the moſt excellent Poets of the IVth Century, was of Bourdeaux (a), and the Son of a Famous Phyſician [A]. He was educated with a very particular Care; the whole Family

(a) Auſon. in Præfat. ad Syagrium.

[A] He was the Son of a famous Phyſician.] Whoſe Name was Julius Auſonius. He was a Native of Bazas, and ſettled at Bourdeaux (1). His Wife's Name was Æmilia Æonia, and was the Daughter of Cæcilius Argicius Arborius, who fled into Aquitain, after a Proſcription, which had deprived him of all the Eſtate he had in his Country (2). This Arborius, having fixed himſelf in the City, called Aquæ Tarbellorum (3), married a virtuous Woman, of little or no Fortune, whoſe Name was Æmilia Corinthia Maura. From this Marriage proceeded one Son, and three Daughters. The Son was the ſame Æmilius Magnus Arborius, who taught Rhetoric at Toulouſe, and who took ſuch a very particular Care of the Education of our Poet (4). One of the Daughters was married to Julius Auſonius, and brought him four Children, of which the Poet Auſonius was the ſecond. You will find all this, and what follows, in his Parentalia, or in his Epicedion in Patrem. This Julius Auſonius was a Man of very great Merit: and, if he was like the Picture which his Son has left of him, he was a Remnant of the Golden Age. There was the greateſt Uniformity imaginable in his Conduct. He offered, gratis, the Aſſiſtance of his Art, to all who deſired it: He ſtudied to keep up the good Opinion others had of him; but never judged favourably of himſelf.

(1) Auſon. in Præf. ad Syagr. & in Epiced. Parent.

(2) The Province which is now called Burgundy.

(3) Scaliger ſays it is the City of Acqs on the Adour.

(4) Auſon. in Profeſſ. cap. 16. pag. 170.

Judicium de me ſtudui præſtare bonorum;
Ipſe mihi nunquam, judice me, placui (5).

It is from others I muſt ſeek Applauſe,
For my own Judgment always damns my Cauſe.

(5) Auſon. in Epiced. pag. 298.

He had an Averſion for Law-Suits; he neither increaſed his Eſtate, nor diminiſhed it: he never was either Witneſs, or Informer, againſt any Perſon's Life (6), he was neither envious nor ambitious; he thought Swearing and Lying were both alike; he never was concerned in any Conſpiracy, Plot, or Cabal; he religiouſly obſerved the ſacred Laws of Friendſhip; he made Happineſs to conſiſt not in poſſeſſing what one would have, but in not wiſhing for what Fortune did not give:

(6) Indice me nullus ſed neque teſte perit. Id. Ibid.

Felicem

Digitized by Google

Family interested themselves in it (b), either because his Parts were very promising, or because the Scheme of his Nativity had prognosticated, that he should attain to great Honours [B]. He made a surprizing Progress in Learning, and at the Age of Thirty Years was appointed to teach Grammar, in Bourdeaux (c). Some time after he was promoted there to the Office of Professor of Rhetoric (d). He acquired so great a Reputation in This Employ, that he was invited to the Imperial Court to be Preceptor to Gratian, Son of the Emperor Valentinian. He made himself very agreeable both to his Pupil and his Pupil's Father, and received from them such Rewards and Dignities, as made him a very eminent Example of Juvenal's Maxim, That when Fortune pleases, a Rhetorician may become a Consul (e). He was, in effect, raised to the Consulship by the (b) See the Poems of Ausonius, entituled Parentalia.

(c) Auson. in Præf. ad Syagrium.

(d) Id. in Professor. n. 24, p. 187.

(e) Si fortuna volet fies de Rhetore Consul. Juven. Sat. 7. ver. 197.

Felicem scivi, non qui, quod vellet, haberet:
Sed qui per fatum non data non cuperet (7).

(7) Id. ibid.

Happy is he, who can his Wish restrain,
Not he, who can that anxious Wish obtain.

He did not endeavour to discover other Mens Secrets; he did not invent false Reports against his Neighbour's Reputation; but if he knew some prejudicial Truths, he concealed them.

Non occursator, non garrulus, obvia cernens,
Valvis & velo condita non adii.
Famam, quæ posset vitam lacerare bonorum,
Non finxi: & veram si scierim, tacui (8).

(8) Id. ibid.

I shunn'd, with Caution, the officious Tale;
Saw what was bare, but ne'er withdrew a Veil.
I never forg'd, to urge another's Fate,
False Facts; nor did I those I knew relate.

He never thought, that not committing a Fault was a Matter of Merit; he preferred Morality before the Laws; that is, if I mistake not, he did a good Action, because it was good, and not because it was conformable to the Laws.

Deliquisse nihil nunquam laudem esse putavi,
Atque bonos mores legibus antetuli (9).

(9) Id. ibid.

In want of Fault, I never Merit saw;
Nor Virtue, in Obedience to the Law.

He kept his Marriage Vow exactly, during the Forty five Years he was married (10); and if he had the Pleasure to see what he wished come to pass, it was not by too great an Indulgence of Fate, but because he set such strict Bounds to his Wishes.

(10) Ibid. pag. 300.

Non quia fatorum nimia indulgentia: sed quod
Tam moderata illi vota fuere viro (11).

(11) Id. in Parental. cap. 1, pag. 110.

Nor did he this to Heav'ns Indulgence owe;
But to his limiting his Wish so low.

He was compared to the ancient Sages of Greece; and imitated them in the most difficult Point, which was to practise what they taught; he endeavoured much more to lead the Life of a wise Man, than to discourse like one:

Quem sua contendit septem sapientibus ætas;
Quorum doctrinam moribus excoluit:
Viveret ut potius, quam diceret arte sophorum,
Quamquam & facundo, non rudis ingenio (12).

(12) Id. ib.

To rival Greece in Wisdom's School he sought,
More wisely acting what her Sages taught;
Supremly wise, he chose not to excel
So much in speaking, as in living well.

And yet he was eloquent in Greek, though not in Latin;

Sermone impromptus Latio: verum Atticæ linguæ
Suffecit culti vocibus eloquii (13).

(13) Id. in Epiced. pag. 298.

He studied with Success the Arts to speak,
Tho' not in Latin, yet in nobler Greek.

We need not wonder, then, if, after his Death, he was honoured with this Elogy, He imitated no Body, and is imitated by no Body.

Inde & perfunctæ manet hæc reverentia vitæ,
Ætas nostra illi quod dedit hunc titulum:
Ut nullum Ausonius, quem sectaretur, habebat:
Sic nullum, qui se nunc imitetur, habet (14).

(14) Id. in Parental. cap. 1, pag. 110.

So good a Life met with a due Regard;
This great Encomium was it's just Reward.
As he cou'd find no Copy to pursue,
So he found none could copy what he drew.

He was honoured with some illustrious Offices, without having the Trouble to exercise them; and died at ninety Years of Age, without being sensible of any Decay. He walked without a Staff, and found no sort of Defect.

Curia me duplex, & uterque senatus habebat
Muneris exsortem, nomine participem (15).

(15) Id. in Epiced. pag. 298.

Both Courts, both Senates, my Relation claim,
Excuse my Presence, but inrol my Name.
- - - - - - - - - -
- - - - - - - - - -
Ipse nec affectans, nec detractator honorum,
Præfectus magni nuncupor Illyrici (16).

(16) Id. ib. pag. 302.

I neither sought for, nor despis'd, a Name,
So Prefect of Illyricum became.
- - - - - - - - - -
- - - - - - - - - -
Nonaginta annos baculo sine, corpore toto
Exegi, cunctis integer officiis (17).

(17) Ibid. pag. 303.

Ninety Years Load without a Staff I bear,
My Body active, and my Senses clear.

He composed some Works of Physic in Latin, which Vindicianus (18), and Marcellus (19), have honourably mentioned. Scaliger affirms, that he was the Emperor Valentinian's Physician, before his Son was chosen Gracian's Preceptor (20): but I have found no Proof it in Ausonius.

(18) See Scaliger, in Vitâ Ausonii.

[B] The Scheme of his Nativity had prognosticated, that he should attain to great Honours.] Cæcilius Argicius Arborius, his Grandfather, by the Mother's side, understood Astrology, and had calculated This Nativity; he kept it private, but his Daughter discovered it. Ausonius informs us of these Particulars himself.

(19) Marcell. in Epist. præfixâ lib. de Medica. & cap. 25, ejusd. libri.

(20) Scalig. in Vitâ Auson.

Tu cœli numeros, & conscia sidera fati
Callebas, studium dissimulanter agens.
Non ignota tibi nostræ quoque formula vitæ:
Signatis quam tu condideras tabulis;
Prodita non unquam. Sed matris cura retexit
Sedula, quam timidi cura tegebat avi (21).

(21) Auson. in Parental. cap. 9. pag. 117.

Thy Art from conscious Stars our Lives can date,
And in Heav'ns Aspects read the Book of Fate.
There all my future Fortunes didst thou trace,
And in thy Schemes the pleasing Secret place.
But what the Grandsire with such Care conceal'd,
The curious Mother's prying Eye reveal'd.

He adds, that Arborius, meeting, from time to time, with the Frowns of adverse Fortune, and lamenting his Son,

Digitized by Google

the Emperor Gratian, in the Year 379 (f), after having gone through other very conſiderable Offices; for, beſides the Dignity of Queſtor, with which he was honoured in the Life of the Emperor Valentinian, he was created Prefect of the Prætorium in Italy, and in Gaul, after the Death of That Prince (g). The Thanks which he gave to the Emperor Gratian, for his Promotion to the Conſulſhip, is an excellent Performance. The time of his Death is not certainly known; but it is beyond queſtion, that he was living in the Year 388, and even in the Year 392, and that he lived to a great Age [C]. He had married a Wife of a good Family who died young (b). He had ſome Children by her, and did not marry any more. He was much eſteemed by the Emperor Theodoſius, and ſome believe That Monarch conferred on him the Dignity of a Patrician (i). They found this on a Letter, which appears, in moſt Editions, at the beginning of Auſonius's Works. Nothing can be more obliging than That Letter: Some Critics judge it to be ſuppoſititious; but they cannot deny that This Emperor very much eſteemed Auſonius's Poems, and exhorted him to publiſh them; for this appears by a Preface which is inconteſtably That Poet's own. There is an extreme inequality in his Works, either becauſe his Muſe was a little too inconſtant; or becauſe ſome Pieces have been inſerted in his Poems, which he had but rough drawn, or becauſe ſome particular Reaſons obliged him to permit the Publication of ſome Verſes, which he had not time to poliſh. Generally ſpeaking, there is ſomething harſh in his Manner, and in his Style; but it was rather the Defect of the Age, than of his Genius. They who are good Judges of Poetry can eaſily ſee, that if he had lived in Auguſtus's time, his Verſes would have equalled the beſt of that time, ſo much Delicacy and Wit appears in moſt of his Writings. Though the general Opinion makes him a Chriſtian, yet ſome learned Perſons believe he was not one [D]. If they ground their Objection either on ſome laſcivious Verſes

(f) And not in the Year 382, as Vinetus affirms, in his Notes on Auſonius's Thanks.

(g) See Remark [F].

(b) Auſon. in Parental. cap. 9.

(i) Albertus Petrus Rubenius, Diſſert. de Vita Fl. Mallii Theodori, pag. 81.

Son, who died at thirty Years of Age, comforted himſelf, under his Afflictions, with the Expectation of thoſe Dignities, which the Stars had promiſed to his Grandchild.

Dicebas ſed te ſolatia longa fovere;
Quod mea præcipuus fata maneret honos.
Et modo conciliis animarum mixte piorum
Fata tui certè nota nepotis habes.
Sentis quod quæſtor, quod te præfectus, & idem
Conſul, honorifico munere commemoro (22).

(22) Id. ib. pag. 118.

Pleaſed with the Honours Fate for me deſign'd,
No longer thy own Griefs diſtract thy Mind.
Ev'n now thou ſmil'ſt among the Dead, to ſee
This full Accompliſhment of Fate's Decree:
To ſee me thus adore thy pious Shade,
A Queſtor, Prefect, and a Conſul made.

Obſerve, that he ſuppoſes his Grandfather's Soul, even in the Abode of the Bleſſed, was ſenſible of the Accompliſhment of the Horoſcope, and of the particular Dignities which our Poet had obtained at the Emperor's Court. He is leſs Orthodox in another Place; for he there queſtions, whether any thing of us remains after our Death.

Et nunc, ſive aliquid poſt fata extrema ſuperſit,
Vivis adhuc, ævi quod periit meminens;
Sive nihil ſupereſt, nec habent longa otia ſenſus,
Tu tibi vixiſti: nos tua fama juvat (23).

(23) Id. in Profeſſoribus, cap. 1, in fine, pag. 248.

And now if after Death there ought remains,
In thy bleſt Shade ſweeteſt Remembrance reigns.
Or if the Grave no farther Proſpect give,
Yet thy paſt Life, will make thy Fame ſtill live.

(24) Id. in Claris Urbibus, cap. 7, pag. 237.

I cannot tell whether thoſe, who ſay he was a Pagan, have ever quoted this Paſſage, as a Proof of their Opinion.

[C] It is beyond queſtion, that he was living in the Year 392, and that he lived to a great Age.] He ſpeaks (24) of the Puniſhment of the Tyrant Maximus, whom Theodoſius cut off, in the Year 388 (25). Baronius proves, that Paulinus dedicated himſelf to a Monaſtic Life in his Retirement at Nola in the Year 394 (26). It was but few Years after the devout Life he had led in Spain, and which Auſonius had blamed. This makes us judge, that our Poet was living in the Year 392. Whence it follows, that he lived to a great Age, for he was already old when he was made Conſul in the Year 379 (27). Add to this, that there was but very little difference between his Father's Age, and his own (28); but he ſurvived his Father, who died at Ninety Years of Age.

(25) And not in the Year 391, as Vinetus affirms on this Place of Auſonius. He is more exact in the Life of Auſonius, te there has it the Year 388.

(26) Baron. ad Ann. 394, n. 72, pag. 884.

(27) Auſon. in Gratiarum actione, pag. 709.

(28) Auſon. Epiſt. 1.

[D] Some learned Perſons believe he was no Chriſtian.] Voſſius is of That Number. He ſays (22), (29) Voſſius de Poët. Lat. pag. 55. " Poëta fuit gentilis, quemadmodum ex Paullino " liquet: ut quæ Chriſtum celebrant perperam illi " ſint tributa. —— He was a Heathen Poet, as ap- " pears from Paulinus: So that Theſe Poems, which " celebrate Chriſt, are falſely aſcribed to him." Father Briet affirms the ſame thing, he only gives Voſſius's Expreſſions another turn. " Ex Paulino " certum eſt eum Ethnicum fuiſſe, quare opera Chri- " ſtiana huic adjudicari ſolita, ſine dubio alterius " ſunt (30). —— It is certain from Paulinus, that (30) Briet. de Poët. Lat. lib. 4. pag. 50. " he was an Ethnic, and therefore thoſe Chriſtian " Compoſitions uſually aſcribed to him, muſt, undoubt- " edly, to be of another Hand." Borrichius goes further, for he affirms, that Auſonius often incurred Paulinus's Cenſure, becauſe of his Paganiſm. " Re- " ligione Ethnicus, Eóque à Paullino amico, ſed Chri- " ſtianis Sacris dedito identidem objurgatus (31). —— (31) Borrich. Diſſert. de Poët. pag. 73. " Paullinus diſcipulus Auſonii quem colebat ut præ- " ceptorem, ſed ut averſum à Chriſtiana religione " ſubinde increpabat, quemadmodum ex opere ip- " ſius liquidam eſt (32). —— In Religion a Heathen, (32) Id. ib. pag. 74. " and on That Account reproached by Paulinus, who " was his Friend, but had been converted to the " Chriſtian Faith. —— Paulinus, a Scholar of Au- " ſonius, whom he much honoured as his Maſter, but " now and then blamed for his Averſion to Chri- " ſtianity, as is evident from his Works." All this ſhews, that even great Authors do not always take the trouble of going to the Fountain Head, but ſometimes ſtop at the firſt Teſtimony they meet with. Thoſe, who conſult St Paulinus's Works, find nothing there to perſuade them, that Auſonius profeſſed Paganiſm; and ſince Paulinus no where uſes any preſſing Exhortation to him to be baptized, they conclude, he had already profeſſed the Goſpel. They conclude yet it more certainly from thoſe expreſs Words they meet with there,

Non reor hoc Sancto ſic diſplicuiſſe Parenti (33).
Mentis ut errorem credat, ſic vivere Chriſto (34).

(33) That is Auſonius.

I hope my holy Tutor now will find
The Chriſtian Faith, no Error of the Mind.

(34) Paulinus in Epiſtolâ defcre ad Auſonium in fine.

So that the Reading of St Paulinus's Works proves the very Reverſe of what Voſſius and ſome others have affirmed; it demonſtrates Auſonius's Chriſtianity, as Lilius Gyraldus acknowledges. " Chriſtianus qui- " dem Auſonius fuit, ut ex ejus Verſibus, & item (35) Gyrald Hiſt. Poët. Dial. 10, pag. 514. " Paulini ejus diſcipuli facilè colligimus (35). —— " Auſonius was indeed a Chriſtian, as appears from " his

Digitized by Google

Verſes that he compoſed [E], or on the manner in which he condemned the Solitude of Paulinus, or on the intimate Friendſhip he preſerved with the Pagan Symmachus, they

" his Verſes, and alſo from his Scholar Paulinus." It is therefore without Foundation that ſome would take from This Poet, what appears in Praiſe of JESUS CHRIST in his Collection of Verſes. Nay, tho' we ſhould take from him the Carmen Paſchale, and the excellent Piece, which begins with Omnipotens ſolo mentis mihi cognite cultu, as ſome Critics would take from him the Oratio Paſchalis, verſibus Rophalicis, yet there would be enough left in his Works to confute Thoſe, who affirm he was a Pagan. Now ſee of what Conſequence it is to apply to ſome among the Moderns, rather than others, when one is not willing to be at the Pains to run to the Fountain. If Voſſius had addreſſed himſelf to Baronius, he would have avoided the Fault he has committed, and ſo would They who copied it. He could never have believed, after reading Baronius, that St Paulinus gives the leaſt Proof of the pretended Paganiſm of our Poet Auſonius; for That learned Cardinal relates the reſpectful Anſwer of St Paulinus, and makes it appear, that Auſonius's Thoughts, on That Friend's Retreat, does not differ from Thoſe, which worldly Chriſtians form, daily, when they ſee a young Man of Quality renounce all the Enjoyments of the World, to dedicate himſelf to a Monaſtic Life (36). It is pretended, that Auſonius thought ſome Miſanthropic Humour, or Malady like That of Bellerophon, made Paulinus retire from the World, and renounce the Muſes (37).

(36) Baron. ad ann. 394, n. 84.

(37) I expreſs myſelf thus, becauſe tho' Paulinus gave this Senſe to Auſonius's Words, there is reaſon to believe it is not the true one, but that they rather ſignify an Imprecation againſt him who adviſed Paulinus not to anſwer Auſonius's Letters.

Triſtis, egens, deſerta colat: tacituſque pererret
Alpini convexa jugi: ceu dicitur olim
Mentis inops, cœtus hominum, & veſtigia vitans,
Avia perluſtraſſe vagus loca Bellerophontes (38).

Deſerts, or Alpine Hills, ſhall be his Haunt,
His dire Attendants, Silence, Grief, and Want:
There, like Bellerophon, diſturb'd in Mind,
Far ſhall be fly all Footſteps of Mankind.

(38) Auſon. Epiſt. 25, p. 697, 698.

Thouſands and Thouſands of Chriſtians might have made the ſame Judgment; it muſt therefore be but an impertinent Proof of Paganiſm. Without doubt Arniſæus, and the French Author, whom he quotes, were Chriſtians, and yet they judged, like Auſonius, of the love of Solitude; they diſcovered, clearly enough, that they imputed the Retirement of the Founders of Monks, to a melancholy Humour. " Medici inter ſigna morbi melancholici referunt, ſi quis " quærat ſolitudinem, aut ſi quem triſtis agat mœror, " torvave ſeverum fronte, vel à lætis ſociorum cœtibus arceat; & Gallicus quidam non inconcinnus " ſcriptor, ejus ordinis fuiſſe cenſet Franciſcum, Dominicum, alioſque Eremitas, aut Anachoretas, qui " contra naturæ præſcriptum politicis ſocietatibus ſe " ſubtraxerunt, in eremos, inſtar Endymionum, ſeſe " abdiderunt, & quo melancholica ingenia maximè " afficiebantur, novum vitæ genus, affectatæ religionis pallio veſtitum, condiderunt (39). ------- The Phyſicians eſteem it a Sign of a Melancholy Diſorder, to ſeek Solitude, or to be given up to Grief, to have a ſtern, ſhy, Countenance, or to fly good Fellowſhip; and a judicious French Writer is of Opinion, that This Claſs will take in Franciſcus, Dominicus, and other Hermits, or Anchorets, who, againſt the Law of Nature, have withdrawn themſelves from human Societies, and hid themſelves in Wilderneſſes, like Endymion, and afterwards covered, under the Cloak of Religion, that new Kind of Life which They affected only out of a melancholy Diſpoſition." Baronius has not forgot to obſerve, that Auſonius was educated by two Nuns, who were his Aunts (40). This is a Proof that he was of a Chriſtian Family. Now, Chriſtianity being upon the Throne in thoſe Times, and Paganiſm expoſed to Diſgrace and Perſecution, it ſeldom happened that a Chriſtian turned Pagan. Since, then, Auſonius was educated from his Infancy in Chriſtianity, we ought to believe he profeſſed it all the Days of his Life; for nothing is more abſurd than the Thought of Giſelinus, who ſays, That Claudian and Auſonius, being prevailed upon by the Authority and Eloquence of Symmachus, abjured the Chriſtian Faith, and plunged themſelves again into Idolatry (41). He pretends to prove this by the Teſtimony of St Auguſtin, and by the great Friendſhip Symmachus expreſſed in his Letters to them. The Jeſuit who confutes this, ſhews, that St Auguſtin, without mentioning Auſonius, ſaid only, that Claudian had been addicted to Paganiſm (42); this is not affirming he had ever once been a Chriſtian. And as for what concerns Auſonius, he is juſtified as well by the Silence of the Emperor Gratian, and of St Paulinus, as by their Kindneſſes. We might add, that the Reaſon, borrowed from the Friendſhip of Symmachus, is the weakeſt in the World: they were not united by the Conformity of Religion, but by the love they both of them had for Learning.

(30) Arniſæus, Reflection. politic. pag. 9.

(40) Baron. ubi ſupra, ad Ann. 394, n. 85. See Remark [F] n. 7.

(41) Victor Giſelinus, in Scholiis ad ſecundum librum Prudentii contra Symmachum, apud Theoph. Raynaud. Hoploth. §. 2. Serie 1, cap. 14, pag. 564.

(42) Theoph. Raynaud. ibid.

It cannot be denied, but that Mr Baillet embraces the Opinion of thoſe who pretend, that Auſonius was a Pagan, I ſay it cannot be denied, when we conſider his Words. " Theſe are Defects, which he " ought to have made up by ſome good Qualities, " and by Maxims and Sentiments drawn from Morality, as the beſt Poets of Antiquity took care to " do before him. But, as he lived among Chriſtians, he was afraid, perhaps, that he might be miſtaken for one of them, if his Opinions, in Morals, had been found agreeable to theirs (43)." It is certain, that the beſt Maxims of Morality are found in Auſonius's Works, and particularly the Apophthegms of the ancient Sages of Greece. What can be a finer Piece of Morality, than his Deſcription of Vir bonus (44)?

(43) Baillet's Judgment on the Poets, Tom. 2, pag. 470.

(44) Page 529.

[E] He compoſed ſome laſcivious Verſes.] Scaliger, the Father, found ſome of Auſonius's Epigrams ſo filthy, that he thought Fire only was able to purify them. " Nonnulla (epigrammata) adeo fœda atque " deteſtanda ut neque ſcriptore neque auditore digna, non in ſpongiam incumbere merita ſint, ſed " ſolis ſi minus expiari poſſe videantur (45). ----- " Some (Epigrams) are ſo deteſtably obſcene, that they deſerve neither Writer nor Reader, and, inſtead of the Spunge, they ſeem to me to merit no other Purification than That of the Flames." I wonder he ſays nothing againſt the Obſcenities of the Cento nuptialis, which have principally excited the Indignation of ſeveral other Authors. Here is a fine Paſſage of Mr Baillet; " It were, at leaſt, " to be wiſhed, that ſome body had expunged " the abominable Cento, that wicked Piece of Patchwork, which he made up of ſeveral half Verſes " of Virgil, on Subjects purely amorous. It is with " much Juſtice, that the Univerſity of Paris complained, forty Years ago, of the Malice of This " Poet, in making Virgil ſpeak in ſo very lewd a " manner; who of all the Poets of Antiquity was " moſt celebrated for his Chaſtity *. And Father " Briet, a Jeſuit, has carried his Zeal yet further †, " when he repreſents this Action of Auſonius to us " as an Outrage highly penal; declaring it to be " as great a Piece of impudent Aſſurance, as of " ſcandalous Obſcenity, to make ſuch a Miſapplication; " and that there was ſomething rather diabolical " than human in That pernicious Art of perverting " Things, and changing good into bad, to lay Snares " for the Innocence and Integrity of Youth (46)." And becauſe many Perſons will be glad to read Father Briet's own Words, I am going to copy them: Centones ejus Virgiliani non tantum impuriſſimi ſunt, ſed & impudentiſſimi, quibus caſtiſſimos verſus, libidinoſæ affixit materiæ, opere, quod plus dæmonem, quàm hominem ſaperet, adoleſcentium pudicitiæ inſidiantem. Auſonius wrote That Piece at the Inſtance of the Emperor Valentinian, who had compoſed ſuch another. He excuſes him himſelf on That Order, and obſerves, that a Prince cannot expreſs any ſort of Command more abſolute, than That of a Requeſt. He found himſelf much perplexed; for, in writing a wicked Poem, he expoſed himſelf to the Accuſation of groſsly ſacrificing his Reputation to Flattery; and by writing a better Poem than That of the Emperor, he was like to be condemned for his Inſolence, in having the Aſſurance to be more witty than his Maſter. He affirms, I. That he obſerved ſuch a Medium, that, without pretending to outdo Valentinian, he wrote a Poem not inferior to his. II. That he had the Advantage of pleaſing him, and not having conquered him, he did not incur the Diſgrace, which a Victory might have drawn upon him.

(45) J. Caſar. Scalig. Poët. lib. 6, cap. 5, pag. 761.

* The Univerſity's Anſwer to the Apology of Father Nic. Cauſſin, p. 358.

† Philip. Briet. de Poetis Lat. lib. 4. p. 50.

(46) Baillet, ubi ſupra, p. 470, 471.

Digitized by Google

they are grosly mistaken. These are, however, the most specious Reasons which have been alledged. Rittershusius looked upon That Friendship as a great Prodigy (k). Scaliger's

(k) In Epist. ad Solom. Pantherum.

This is the Language of a cunning Courtier. But to do This Poet all the Justice, which the Delicacy of his Wit and Pen here deserves, we must hear his own Words. " Piget Virgiliani carminis dignitatem tam jo- " culari dehonestasse materia; sed quid facerem? jussum " erat, quodque est POTENTISSIMUM IMPERANDI " GENUS, rogabat qui jubere poterat, S. imperator " Valentinianus, vir meo judicio eruditus: qui nup- " tias quondam ejusmodi ludo descripserat, aptis " equidem versibus & compositione festiva. Experi- " ri deinde volens, quantum nostra contentione præ- " celleret, simile nos de eodem concinnare præcepit. " Quam scrupulosum hoc mihi fuerit, intellige. Ne- " que anteferri volebam, neque posthaberi: quum " aliorum quoque judicio detegenda esset adulatio " inepta, si cederem: insolentia, si ut æmulus emine- " rem. Suscepi igitur similis recusanti: feliciterque " & obnoxius gratiam tenui, nec victor offendi (47). " ------ I am ashamed to have disgraced the Dig- " nity of Virgil's Poetry on so jocular a Subject: But " what could I do? I was commanded to do it, and, " which is THE MOST ABSOLUTE SORT OF COM- " MAND, I was desired to do it, by him who could " have commanded it, even by his Sacred Imperial " Majesty Valentinian, a Prince, in my Judgment, " truly learned: who had, himself, treated a Nuptial " Subject after the same ludicrous Manner, in very " apt and witty Poetry. Desiring therefore to try, " how far he should excel, in this our Trial of Skill, " he commanded me to undertake the Work. You will " readily imagine I had a very nice Task. I was " neither willing to excel, nor be excelled: if I " fell short, it would look, in the Judgment of others, " like Flattery: if I out-did, it would seem Insolence. " I undertook it, therefore, with an Appearance of Un- " willingness: and, by a happy Course, I kept in Favour " as an Equal, and offended not as a Superior." If it were true, that the Cento nuptialis of the Emperor Valentinian was not inferior to that of Ausonius, it must be said, that This Monarch was not unskilled in Poetry; and besides, as he was grave, and of exemplary Chastity, it may serve much for Ausonius's Justification. " Omni pudicitiæ cultu domi castus, " & foris, nullo contagio conscientiæ violatus ob- " scœnæ, nihil incestum: hancque ob causam tan- " quam retinaculis petulantiam frænarat Aulæ rega- " lis (48). —— He observed the strictest Chastity, both " at home and abroad, and avoided all Obscenity and " Pollution: and thus bridled, by his Example, the " Licentiousness of his Court." So great an Example may clearly prove, that the most severe and chast Persons give way sometimes to witty Performances, wherein the Descriptions of the chief Nuptial Ceremony abound with too much Looseness and Obscenity; for there is no question to be made, but this Piece of Poetry of the Emperor Valentinian was very wanton. The Subject required it, being Matrimonial, which is always treated in a merry Vein. " Nup- " tias quondam ejusmodi ludo descripserat (Valenti- " nianus) aptis equidem versibus, & compositione " festivâ (49). ------- He (Valentinian) had himself " treated a Nuptial Subject after the same ludicrous " Manner, in very apt and witty Poetry." We may be well assured that the Emperor's Verses were no less amorous than Those of the Emperor Gallienus (50). It must be acknowledged then, that Ausonius deserves some excuse, because he wrote his Nuptial Cento by way of Imitation, and at the request of his Master, one of the most grave and chast Emperors that ever was, and, besides, a great Follower of the most pure Christian Doctrine (51). So that if he had not allowed of a Toleration (52), it would have been said of him, that he wanted no Talent, which becomes the most Orthodox Monarchs. I only remark this to shew, that Those who place Ausonius among the Pagan Poets, under pretence that he wrote such a lascivious Piece of Poetry as that Cento Nuptialis, do not give Things a thorough Examination. Without doubt he is to blame; I do not pretend to excuse him. I only say, that this Fact is not a Proof of Paganism, nor sufficient to give any just Suspicions, that he was not a very Orthodox Christian. I prove this from the Circumstances of it. I mean, from the Emperor's Character, who commanded him to compose such a Writing, and approved it. How many Christian Poets are there, whose Works are more lascivious than this Cento Nuptialis? Many of them must be degraded from the Name of Christians, if we follow the Maxim of Gyraldus, " Christianus quidem Ausonius fuit —— " sed petulantior tamen & lascivior quam ut inter " Christianos numerari dignus sit (53). —— Auso- " nius was indeed a Christian, but so loose and las- " civious, that he deserves not to be named among " Christians." Without going so far as Italy, is there not an Epithalamium in the Works of a Poet at the Hague, which, for Obscenity, does not yield to the Cento of Ausonius (54). I address this principally to Rittershusius, who looked upon the Conduct of Ausonius, as monstrous; I mean, that a Poet, who was a Christian, both in Practice and Profession, should write lasciviously: " Illud impri- " mis apud me monstri instar habet, hominem Chri- " stianum, &, ut apparet, non nomine tantum; " sed & pectore & moribus, adeo sæpe lasciva at- " que improba scribere potuisse, ut nisi nomen Au- " sonii esset adscriptum, Bilbilitanum poëtam te le- " gere putes (55). —— To me it appears particular- " ly monstrous, that one, who is a Christian, and " that, as it seems, not in Name only, but also in " Morals and Disposition, could write such wicked " and lascivious Verses, that if the Title did not " shew them to be Ausonius's, you would think you " was reading Martial." He is not satisfied with the Excuse the Author made on the Purity of his Life,

Lasciva est nobis pagina, Vita proba est.

My Book is wanton, but my Life is chast.

I relate this Excuse at length, in another Article (56). Let us observe, that Ausonius was so sensible that he should be blamed, that he endeavours to justify himself at the beginning, in the middle, and at the end, of That small Poem. We have seen what he said at the beginning, we shall see in another Place (57), what he said at the end: It remains only to observe, what he said in the middle. Know then, that after having described the Wedding-Feast, the Procession of the Bride and Bridegroom, the Wedding Presents, the Complements of the Company; and having modestly enough represented the first Discourse of the married Couple, he stops there, and advertises his Readers, that what he had to say more, not being covered with a Veil, it was their part to decline going any farther. " Hactenus castis auribus " audiendum mysterium nuptiale, ambitu loquendi, " & circumitione velavi. Verum quoniam & fescen- " ninos amat celebritas nuptialis, verborumque petu- " lantiam notus vetere instituto ludus admittit, cæ- " tera quoque cubiculi & lectuli operta prodentur, " ab eodem auctore collecta: ut bis erubescamus, " qui & Virgilium faciamus impudentem. Vos, si " placet, hic jam legendi modum ponite, cætera " curiosis relinquite (58). —— Thus far I have " veiled the Nuptial Mystery with many Words, and " long Descriptions, for an Entertainment to modest " Ears. But, because the matrimonial Solemnity re- " quires some smutty Mirth, and Custom has autho- " rised these loose Descriptions, the remaining Secrets " of the Chamber and Bed, will be given you by " the same Author; who must blush again and again, " for imposing upon Virgil's Words so impudent a Mean- " ing. You that please may stop here; and leave the " rest to those who are more curious." He has reason to say, that what he calls Imminutio (59), will be described in very obscene Terms. Moreri has been the most indulgent of all Men; There are some Pieces, says he, which Ausonius composed in his Youth, wherein he complies too much with the Liberty of the Age he lived in. This Censure is not rigid enough, and supposes a Falsity; for certainly Ausonius was not young when he composed the Nuptial Cento. I do not speak of the Verses which he made on a handsome Slave, whose Name was Bissula, and who had been adjudged to him for his Share of the Plunder, after a great Victory obtained in Germany, in the (53) Gyrald. Hist. Poet. Dial. 10, p. 514.

(54) See Basium 20, sive Epithalamium of John Secundus, p. 103.

(55) Conrad. Rittershus. Epist. ad Solom. Pantherum.

(56) See Remark [D] of the Article VAYER.

(57) Ibid.

(58) Auson. in Cent. Nupt. pag. 513, 514.

(59) That is, The Detoration.

(47) Auson. in Præfat. Cent. Nuptial. p. 500, 501.

(48) Amm. Marcell. lib. 30, cap. 9.

(49) Auson. in Præfat. Cent. Nuptial. p. 500, 501.

(50) See the Article ARODON, near the End.

(51) See Mr Fleshier in the Life of Theodosius, pag. 52.

(52) Amm. Marcell. lib. 30, cap. 19. & ibi Valesius.

Digitized by Google

Scaliger's Miſtakes [F], and the principal Editions of Auſonius [G], will be the Subject of Year 368; for we do not know to what Degree of Licentiouſneſs he carried Them; They are loſt, and we may only conjecture, that They were very free, ſince he requires Readers who had drunk hard.

- - - - - - - admoneo, ante bibas.
Jejunis nil ſcribo: meum poſt pocula ſi quis
Legerit, hic ſapiet (60).

(60) Auſon. in Biſſula, pag. 346.

He who would reliſh our laſcivious Page,
Muſt firſt with flowing Cups his Taſte engage.

This does not agree at all with what remains of this Poem; there is nothing obſcene either in the Words or Thoughts; we muſt conclude therefore, that the greateſt Part of it is loſt. A certain Commentator, without thinking of this, has proved the ſame thing by another Argument. He Remarks, That this Poem is too ſhort at preſent, to ſuppoſe it ever could have had ſo large a Preface as we now find prefixed to it (61): and conſequently it muſt have been much longer, when the Author finiſhed it, than we now have it. However, Auſonius, who was then paſt the Heat of Youth, deſcribed, in all likelihood, the Charms of his Slave with a pretty deal of Freedom: She appeared ſo agreeable to him from the firſt Moment, that he preſently ſet her at Liberty (62).

(61) See the Auſonius of Tollius, pag. 342.

(62) Auſon. in Biſſula, pag. 341.

[F] Theſe are Scaliger's Miſtakes.] I. He believed, Auſonius was raiſed to the Office of Preſect of the Prætorium, in the Emperor Valentinian's Life (63). This is not true, Auſonius declares that he owed this Office ſolely to the Emperor Gratian. "Tot gradus nomine Comitis propter tua incrementa conferti, ex tuo merito, te ac patre principibus, quæſtura communis, & tui tantum Præfectura beneficii (64). —— So many Honours heaped upon me, "as being your Præceptor, on account of your own "Proficiencies, and great Merit, by both Emperors, "your Father and yourſelf, the Quæſtorſhip your joint "Gift, but the Præfectſhip your own ſingle Favour." II. Scaliger believed, without Reaſon, that there was a Miſtake in the Theodoſian Code, where mention is made of Auxonius, Preſect of the Prætorium (65). He would have it read Auſonius, and not Auxonius. He would not have required ſuch a Correction, if he had obſerved, that the Perſon, concerned in that place of Theodoſius's Code, died about the Year 371, and that Auſonius enjoyed the Conſulſhip in the Year 379, and lived yet many Years after. III. He would have all the Laws addreſſed to Antonius, Preſect of the Prætorium, to be corrected, and that Auſonius ſhould be read in thoſe Places, and not Antonius. This is wrong, for it is certain, that Auſonius was honoured with the Office of Preſect of the Prætorium of Italy, in the Year 376, five Months after the Death of the Emperor Valentinian, and that his Son Heſperius was given him for his Colleague (66). We know, alſo, that Antonius was made Preſect of the Prætorium of Gaul, about the ſame time. Things remained in the ſame State the following Year; Auſonius and his Son, diſcharged the Preſectſhip of Italy, and Antonius, that of Gaul; but, in the Year 378, Antonius was Preſect of the Prætorium in Italy, and Auſonius and his Son, were Preſects in Gaul, and ſo continued 'till the Year 380. You will find the Proofs of all this, in the Author quoted in the Margin (67). IV. Scaliger believed, that Auſonius ſpoke of himſelf in theſe two Verſes:

(63) Scalig. Auſon. in Lection. lib. 1. cap. 2. & lib. 2. c. 17. apud Alb. Pet. Rubenium, in Vitâ Mallii Theodori, pag. 16.

(64) Auſon. in Grat. Actione, pag. 702, 703.

(65) Lege II. de Patrociniis Viror. See Valeſ. in Amm. Marcell. lib. 29, c. 1. pag. 549.

(66) Auſon. in Grat. Act. p. 305.

(67) Albertus Petrus Rubenius in Vita Mallii Theodori, pag. 17, & ſeq.

Aut Italum populos, Aquilonigenaſque Britannos
Præfecturarum titulo tenuere ſecundo (68).

(68) Auſon. in Moſella, ver. 407, pag. 419.

Latians, and fartheſt Britains too obey
Th' appointed Preſect's delegated Sway.

(69) This is plain from Ver. 450.

It is a Miſtake: The Poem, wherein theſe two Verſes are, was compoſed in the Life-time of the Emperor Valentinian (69). Now Auſonius was not Preſect of the Prætorium, 'till after the Death of that Prince (70). V. There is no crediting what Scaliger aſſirms, That Auſonius, after his Conſulſhip, enjoyed the Office of Proconſul of Aſia, and that of Vicar of the Dioceſe of Africa (71). We find, indeed, one Auxonius, that was Vicar of the Dioceſe of Aſia, in the Year 365, and another Auxonius, that was Proconſul of Aſia, in the Year 381 (72). But this is nothing to Scaliger's Opinion. VI. He miſtakes the Uncle for the Grandfather, in theſe Words. "Hoc "tanto viro naſcitur Burdegalæ Decius Magnus Au"ſonius nomine avi materni, cognomine patris (73). "——— Of ſo great a Man was Decius Magnus "Auſonius born at Bourdeaux, taking his Name "from his Grandfather, by the Mother, his Sirname "from his Father." Auſonius's Grandfather, by the Mother, was called Cæcilius Argicius Arborius; he left a Son, whoſe Name was Æmilius Magnus Arborius. So that Scaliger's Miſtake is plain. VII. He ſays, that Hilaria, and Julia Cataphronia,, who had made a Vow of Virginity, were Auſonius's Aunts, by the Mother (74). This is only true with regard to Æmilia Hilaria, for the Nun Julia Cataphronia, was his Aunt by the Father (75).

(70) See Rubenius, in Vitâ Mallii Theodori, pag. 23.

(71) Scal. in Vitâ Auſon.

(72) Rubenius, in vitâ Mallii Theodori, p. 24.

(73) Scalig. in vitâ Auſon.

(74) Id. ib.

(75) Auſon. in. Parent. n. 26, p. 140.

[G] —— and the principal Editions of Auſonius.] Geſner, and his Abbreviators, affirm, That Aldus is the firſt who publiſhed this Poet. They do not ſay in what Year, but, if they mean the Edition of Venice, in 1517, they may eaſily be confuted; for beſides, that Aldus was not then living, Mr Van Beughem affirms, that Auſonius was printed at Milan, in 1490 (76), and, ſince that, at Venice, in the Year 1496, with a Preface, by George Merula (77). The Edition of Baſil, 1523, by Valentine Curio, is ſufficiently known: That of Lewis Mireus, printed at Lyons, by John de Tournes, in the Year 1557, is preferable to all the former. The Bibliographers mention it, but I do not ſee that they take any notice of That which Ducheri publiſhed; in praiſe of which, Nicolas Bourbon made four Verſes, which may be ſeen on the reverſe of the Title of the Edition of Lyons, by Sebaſtian Gryphius, 1549. I ſay nothing of Plantin's Edition, 1568, with the Notes of Theodorus Pulman. That of Joſeph Scaliger, at Lyons, by Anthony Gryphius, in 1575, with a very learned Commentary, under the Title of Auſonianæ lectiones, eclipſed all the former. Every Body knows, that Elias Vinetus is one of the Commentators who has beſtowed moſt Pains on our Poet's Works. He was Teacher of Claſſical Learning at Bourdeaux, and being preſſed, by ſeveral Perſons of that City, to publiſh an Edition of their famous Countryman, he endeavoured to oblige them, but found no Manuſcript of Auſonius, in the Libraries of Bourdeaux, ſo that all he could do, was to compare the Editions together. He reſtored and corrected ſeveral Paſſages, and while he was preparing his Commentaries, to give the Reaſons of his Criticiſms, he cauſed Auſonius's Works to be printed, as he had corrected them. His Friend, James Goupil, had the Care of this Edition, which is that of Paris, 1551. Some Years after Vinetus recovered a Manuſcript, found near Lyons, and which gave him much Light; and as that left him but little Excuſe to thoſe who preſſed him to print his Notes, he publiſhed the Poem de Claris Urbibus at Poitiers, together with his Commentary, in the Year 1565. He ſent a Compleat Copy of Auſonius's Works to Anthony Gryphius, who had deſired it of him, and engaged to print it immediately; but that Edition not appearing, he was perſuaded to make uſe of the Preſs, which was ſet up, in the mean Time, at Bourdeaux. He therefore gave another Copy to Simon Millanges, who began to print it at Bourdeaux, in the Month of February 1575, and finiſhed it by the beginning of Summer, in the ſame Year. At the ſame time came out the Edition of Gryphius; but, for want of Paper, Millanges could not print off Vinetus's Commentary. It was not printed 'till four Years after Millanges's Edition of Auſonius's Works (78). Therefore, to ſpeak properly, it ought not to be ſaid, that the beſt Edition of Auſonius, is that of Bourdeaux, with the Commentaries of Elias Vinetus, in the Year 1575. Præ reliquis verò laudanda luculenta Auſonii Editio, cum commentariis viri docti Eliæ Vineti vulgata, Burdigalæ A. 1575; & poſt ejus obitum A. 1590, 4. (79). For, as I have ſaid before, thoſe Commentaries did not appear 'till 1580. Moreri has been exact in this Point; he is only miſtaken, in ſaying Vinetus was of Xaintes; the Word Santo ſignifies nothing here but Saintongeois, one of the Country of Saintoinge. The Library of the Archbiſhop of Reims (80), mentions an Auſonius, printed by

(76) Beughem in Incunabulis Typographiæ, apud Joh. Albert. Fabricium Biblioth. Lat. pag. 177.

(77) There is a Copy of that Edition in the Catalogue of Thuanus's Library; it is in Folio, and perhaps of Aldus.

(78) Taken from the Preface of Elias Vinetus.

(79) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, Bibl. Lat. pag. 177.

(80) In the 394th Page.

Digitized by Google

of two Remarks below; and I shall not forget to observe the Mistake of Trithemius, who pretended that Ausonius was Bishop of Bourdeaux [H].

by Millanges, at Bourdeaux, with the Commentaries of Elias Vinetus, in the Year 1575. I imagine that this Mistake proceeds from applying the Date 1575, to all the Pieces bound together, which only suits with Ausonius's Works, at the beginning of the Volume. Borrichius is in the Wrong to say, I. That the Edition of Vinetus, is one of the best. II. That Vinetus has commented upon Ausonius's Poem de Urbibus (81). Does not this look as if he had wrote no Commentaries on the other Poems of Ausonius? The best Edition of this Poet, is that of Amsterdam 1671; but I have elsewhere observed (82), that the Title falsely promises, that they have there inserted all the entire Notes of Mariangelus Accursius.

(81) Ausonii Editio selectior est Jos. Scaligeri & Eliæ Vineti. Borrich. de Poët. Lat. pag. 73.

I shall give a Supplement to all this, in the Article MARTELLIUS (Hugolin), at the End of the Remark [A]. Not having Father Lacarry's Book (83), I am forced to content myself with what I find of it in the Journal des Sçavans. "The double Prefect-"ship of Ausonius, which gave Scaliger so much "Trouble, is here clearly explained. We find that, "in the Year 378, Ausonius was Prefect of the Prae-"torium, in the Gauls, and in Italy, with his Son "Hesperius; but he was not Prefect in Italy, any "longer than 'till about the Month of July, at which "time one Antonius was appointed Prefect of the "Prætorium in Italy, as he is said to have been in "the Code. So that the Prefectship of Ausonius and "Hesperius, in Italy, was interrupted by Antonius; "but he enjoyed it again, together with his Son, "in 379, and continued, with him, that in the "Gauls, without any interruption, during the Years "378, and 379 (84)." This Hypothesis, and Chronology, are not agreeable to the Sentiment of Rubenius, before related. If I had Father Lacarry's Book, I might, perhaps, be able to determine which of them has explained this Matter with greatest Accuracy.

(82) Above, Citat. (b), of the Article ACCURSIUS (Mariangelus).

(83) Intituled, Historia Galliarum sub Præfectis Prætorio Galliarum.

(84) Journal des Sçavans, 12 Aug. 1675, pag. 225, Edit. of Holl.

[H] Trithemius pretended that Ausonius was Bishop of Bourdeaux.] Trithemius affirms, That this Bishop was very learned in the Scriptures, and as remarkable for his Piety as his Learning, and that he flourished under Maximus, in the Year 310, and did some handsome Things, with St Martin, St Ambrose, and St Jerom, in the Synod, which That Prince caused to be held at Tryers. What a heap of Fables are here! Vinetus observes, that some Persons will have it, that Ausonius was canonized. He says also, that the Inhabitants of Angoulême honoured one Ausonius, amongst their chief Saints, who was, as they say, their first Bishop, and he does not think it impossible, but that the Poet Ausonius, upon being elected Bishop by the Inhabitants of Angoulême, might have accepted that Dignity (85). A Manuscript Chronicle of Angoulême, says, that Ausonius, a Disciple of St Martial, and Bishop of Angoulême, suffered Martyrdom, when the Vandals ravaged Gaul (86). Alteserra confutes this, by observing, that a Disciple of St Martial could not be living in the beginning of the IVth Century, when the Irruption of the Vandals (87) happened. However it be, our Ausonius is represented in very various Lights. Some say that he was not so much as a Christian; and others, that he is in the Catalogue of the canoniz'd Saints.

(85) Elias Vinetus, in vitâ Auson.

(86) Alteserra, rerum Aquitanicar. lib. 5, cap. 8. pag. 339.

(87) Id. ib.

AUSTRIA (Don John of), Natural Son of the Emperor Charles V, was born, at Ratisbon, the Twenty fourth of February 1545. A Gentlewoman of Ratisbon, whose Name was Barbara BLOMBERG (a), was willing to pass for his Mother [A], to save the real Mother the Scandal she must necessarily have undergone in being (a) See her Article.

[A] Barbara Blomberg was willing to pass for his Mother.] Famianus Strada says, that Cardinal de la Cueva revealed this Secret to him (1). That Cardinal had learned it from the Infanta Clara Eugenia, to whom Philip II, who concealed nothing from her, had discovered it. This Prince always pretended to the World, that Barbara Blomberg was the Mother of Don John. "Eodemque loco habitam à Philippo "Rege scenæ pariter inserviente (2). —— And was "treated as such by King Philip, who likewise kept "up the Pretence." The Sacrifice which that Lady was willing to make of her own Reputation, to that of a great Princess, is nothing near so great as may be imagined: It is thought a Scandal to pass for a private Gentleman's Mistress; but how many Ladies glory to be Mistresses of Kings and Emperors? I have said that this Sacrifice was made in favour of a great Princess: Strada informs me of it. "Joannem Au-"striacum non ex Barbara Blomberga uti creditum "ad eam diem, sed ex longe illustriori ac Plane "Principe femina procreatum: cujus ut famæ par-"ceretur prætentam fuisse aliam à Carolo Cæsare. — "John of Austria was not born of Barbara Blomberg, "as was then believed, but of a much more illustrious "Lady, and even a Princess, to save whose Reputation, "That other was only pretended by Charles the Empe-"ror." The same Historian remarks, that Don John was twice deceived, as to his Mother, and never informed of the Truth. He first believed himself to be the Son of Magdalen Ulloa, and afterwards of Barbara Blomberg. How happy and vigilant soever he was to discover the most secret Intrigues of the Enemy, he could never unravel this domestic Mystery. "Ha-"bet profecto unde minus sibi de sua sagacitate pla-"ceat humanum ingenium, quando tantus princeps, "atque intima quæque vel in hoste rimari solitus, "domi suæ, suorumque ignarus adeo vixerit obierit-"que, ut bis in matre deceptus, semper alienam co-"luerit, nunquam suam (3). —— It is indeed enough "to make the human Understanding less proud of it's "Sagacity, to see that so great a Prince, who could "penetrate into the closest Secrets of the Enemy, should "yet live and die so ignorant of his own Birth, and "of what so nearly concerned him, that he was twice "mistaken in his Mother, and could never discover "where to pay his Duty right." I wonder that Father Strada says nothing of a third Person, who passed for Don John's Mother. The Author of a learned Dissertation, printed in 1688 (4), speaks with great Praise of Catharine de Cordonna, born at Naples in the Year 1559. She went into Spain, with her Cousin the Princess of Salerno, in the Year 1559, and, by her Virtue and Piety, acquired the esteem of Philip II, in such manner, that he commanded Rui Gomez, Prince of Evoly, Governour of Don Carlos, and Don John, to take care of This Lady. Rui Gomez took her home to his House, and, upon observing her admirable Prudence, desired her to undertake the Government of his Family, and to assist him in the Education of the two Princes. She acquitted herself of that Trust with all the care imaginable, and Don John always honoured her as his Mother. The Author of the Dissertation makes a Remark on that word: Before we go any farther, says he (5), we ought to clear that Saint from an abominable Calumny, by which some abusing that word, would insinuate as if she was the true Mother of John of Austria. Strada of Rosberg seems to have given occasion to that supposition, by describing that Prince's Mother, in his Genealogy of the House of Austria, only by the Name of Catharine. But the chast and mortified Life which Catharine de Cordonna always led from her Infancy, could not leave Room for such a Suspicion. He adds several other Reasons to justify Catharine de Cordonna, and ends the Remark with these Words: It was another more illustrious Person (who was the Mother of John of Austria) and whom our Saint (6) had also known, as the Historian of her Life observes; but who, for weighty Considerations, was never discovered. Let us add to all this a Passage of Mr Varillas. The secret of the Birth of John of Austria, says he (7), was never rightly discovered, and whether the too high quality of his true Mother required all these Precautions; or that more care was taken to avoid the Scandal, than the Sin; it is certain that Charles only discovered to Quichade who John of Austria was; and that he ordered him to let him pass for his own Son, till his Imperial Majesty, in resigning his Dominions to Philip II, informed him that he was his natural Brother. This Moderation of Mr Varillas is more to be commended,

(1) Strada, de Bello Belg. Decad. 1. lib. 10. pag 626.

(2) Id. ib.

(3) Id. ib. pag. 627.

(4) Dissertation on the Hemina, or Pint, of Wine, and the Pound of Bread, prescribed by St Benedict.

(5) Page 186.

(6) That is, Katherin de Cordonna. Her History is in the General History of the barefooted Carmelites, Part 1, Book 5. See Dissertation on the Hemina, pag. 182.

(7) Varillas History of Francis I. Book 13, pag. 389.

Digitized by Google

being publickly known to be ſo. The Child was carried into Spain, before he was a Year old [B]; the Emperor charged Lewis Quixada with this Commiſſion, whom he had ſeveral times experienced to be very well qualified for keeping a Secret (b). He ordered him to let the Child be brought up by his Wife Magdalen Ulloa, without giving any body room to ſuſpect who was the Father. Quixada ſerved his Maſter in This, with all the Fidelity imaginable, for he did not only keep the Secret inviolable, but had alſo an extraordinary Care of Don John's Education. Charles, upon his Death Bed, diſcovered, to his Son Philip, that he was the Father of the young Lord whom Quixada educated at Villagarſia, and charged him to acknowledge him for the future as his Brother, and to treat him in that Quality. Philip did not perform this Order till two Years after [C], but then he did it in a very genteel Manner. He cauſed Don John to be educated with Don Carlos, and Alexander Farneſe. Thoſe three Princes were almoſt of an Age, but Don John was much the fineſt, both in Perſon and Parts. Philip was diſpleaſed at the averſion he found in him to an Eccleſiaſtical Character, for which his Father had deſigned him. And much leſs at a Frolick of That young Lord, in taking a Journey to Barcelona, without the King's leave, accompanied with a great number of young Gentlemen, to go to the War of Malta. But the Letters he received from the King, before he embarked, put a ſtop to that Voyage. He ſo readily obeyed the Order, he had received to return, that he, in ſome meaſure, appeaſed Philip's anger by ſo immediate a Compliance; and he entirely recovered his Favour, by making the firſt Diſcovery to him of Don Carlos's Machinations. There was but very little Friendſhip between Thoſe two young Princes [D]. A little while after, Don John was ſent to the Kingdom of Granada againſt the Moors, and ſignalized himſelf in that War. He was declared Generaliſſimo of the League againſt the Turks, and, in that Poſt, gained the famous Battle of Lepanto, in the Year 1571. After which he took the City of Tunis, and That of Biſerta, and returned triumphant into Italy, attended by Amidas, King of Tunis, whom he had made Priſoner. He had left a Garriſon in Tunis againſt Philip's Order, and there was already a Rumour of conferring upon him the Title of King of Tunis, by the Interpoſition of the Pope. The King of Spain was not at all pleaſed with theſe continual Succeſſes; the Idea which he formed to himſelf of that young Prince's Ambition made him uneaſy (c). He ſent him to command in the Netherlands; but ordered him to pacify thoſe Provinces: He had not a Mind to have him there at the head of an Army. Being thus prejudiced againſt him, he eaſily believed all Reports which could give him room to ſuſpect his Brother's Conduct; and ſome ſay, that, to increaſe the Miſunderſtanding, means were uſed to inform him, that Don John was going to be married to Queen Elizabeth (d). To cut the Matter ſhort, I ſhall juſt obſerve, that Eſcovedo, (b) Quem expertus erat arcanorum celantiſſimum. Strada, dec. 1, lib. 10, pag. 612.

(c) Quod Philippo ſuſpicionem intendit elatum victoriarum curſu juvenem non diu laturum privatam fortunam & regna nunc rogare aliquando invaſurum. - - - Philip began to ſuſpect, that ſo young a Conqueror would be too much elated with his Victories, to be long ſatisfied with a private Condition, and that his next Step would be to importune him for ſome Kingdom. Id. ib. pag. 617.

(d) See Remark [F].

mended, than the Liberty taken in the ſecond Edition of the Menagiana, in declaring plainly, that Don John of Auſtria was born of his Father's own Siſter. What gave occaſion to this, was an excellent Saying of Charles V. It ſeems upon cancelling an unjuſt Privilege, which he had granted, He ſaid, I had rather deface my Hand-Writing, than my Conſcience. Upon which we find, in the ſecond Edition of the Menagiana, pag. 422, the following Gloſs. What a tender Conſcience is here, for one who was ſo great a Cheat all his Life, and, if ſcandal may be believed, did not ſcruple to lie with his own Siſter, while Barbara Blomberg ſerved as a Screen to this inceſtuous Commerce, by paſſing for the Mother of Don John of Auſtria.

[B] The Child was carried into Spain before he was a Year old.] Brantome tells another Story, which I will relate in the Remarks of the Article BLOMBERG; and which ought not to be believed to the Prejudice of Strada.

[C] Charles V diſcovered, to Philip II, that Don John was his Brother, and charged him to acknowledge him as ſuch — which he obeyed not — till two Years after.] The Application of an Hiſtorian to the principal Matters, makes him ſometimes not diſcover a Slip in Calculation. Here Strada affirms, that Don John was born the Twenty fourth of February 1545; that his Father died the Twenty firſt of September 1558; that Philip acknowledged Don John two Years after the Death of his Father; that he cauſed him to be educated with his Son Don Carlos; and that Theſe two Princes had not yet attained to their fifteenth Year, annum quartum decimum nondum ſupergreſſi. If Strada had reckoned right, he would have made it above fifteen Years. It cannot be pretended that the Year 1547, was That of the Birth. I confeſs that Mr Moreri vouches it, but it cannot be the Opinion of Strada, ſince, by placing the Death of Don John on the firſt of October 1578, he makes him Thirty three Years of Age. So then there is no fault of the Preſs in the number 1545. The Author of the Diſſertation on the Hemina (8) places the Birth of that Baſtard on the fourteenth of February 1545, and his Death about the firſt of October 1578, in the Army near Namur; and cenſures the Genealogy of the Houſe of Auſtria, which makes him die at Bruges in the Twenty fifth Year of his Age. He alſo cenſures Father Strada, for having placed the Death of Don John in the Month of December; but we read, in expreſs words, in Strada, Kalendis Octobris (9). Mr Varillas is not to be credited, when he ſays, That Philip II, let eleven Years paſs, before he performed his Father's Orders, and that John of Auſtria was already twenty Years of Age, when his Catholic Majeſty bethought himſelf to acknowledge him for his Brother (10). According to this Calculation he would have been twenty four Years old. Let us remember that he was ſent Generaliſſimo to the Kingdom of Granada, in the Year 1569 (11). According to Mr Varillas, therefore, Philip II muſt have begun, by that important Office, to acknowledge him for the Natural Son of Charles V. This would be judging very wrongly of that Prince, to impute to him ſuch a precipitate Conduct.

(8) Pag. 187.

(9) Strada, Decad. 1, lib. 10, pag. 611.

(10) Varillas's Hiſtory of Francis I. Book 13, pag. 389.

(11) Moreri ſays 1570.

[D] He made the firſt diſcovery of Don Carlos's Machinations: there was but little Friendſhip between Thoſe two young Princes.] I ſhall relate one particular that is mentioned in Brantome. It is ſaid that Don Carlos "having diſcovered ſomething of moment to "Don John, he revealed it to the King of Spain, who "always loved him the better for it, though he re- "warded him but very indifferently afterwards; and "Don Carlos hated him ſo much for it, that they "generally quarrelled, ſo that once he called him "Baſtard, and Son of a Whore; to which he "returned this Anſwer, Si yo lo ſoy; mas yo tengo "padre mejor que vos; Yes I am ſo, but I have a "better Father than you; and they were like to have "come to blows about it (12).

(12) Brantome's Lives of Foreign Captains, Tom. 2, pag. 117, 118.

Digitized by Google

Escovedo, Don John's Secretary, having been sent to Madrid, by his Master, to sollicite the Succours which were a long time expected, was killed there [E]. Don John, upon this, found himself to be in Disgrace; and his vexation, to see himself sacrificed to the Contempt of the Enemies, for want of Supplies to make head against them [F], threw him into a Distemper, of which he died the first of October 1578 (e). It was even believed that he was poisoned [G]. He did indeed recommend his supposed Mother, and his supposed uterin Brother, as also his Domestics to King Philip, but durst not mention to him his two Natural Daughters (f) [H].

(e) Majoribus in dies pressus angustiis ac desertus, uti palam querebatur à Rege, traditusque hostium ludibrio, ingens animi spejque princeps - - - - ex mœrore contabuit. - - - - Being reduced to greater Straits every Day, and, as he complained openly, betrayed by the King, and sacrificed to the Sport of the Enemy, that great and promising Prince, - - - - died of Grief. Strada, dec. 1, lib. 10, pag. 619.

(f) Taken from Strada, in the 10th Book of the 1st Decad.

His Elogy may be seen, among those of several other Warriors, in a Book composed by Primo Damaschino, and printed at Rome, in the Year 1680, under the Title of La Spada d' Orione stellata nel Cielo di Marte. But if you are desirous to see the Particulars of the Complaints made against his Conduct, with many of his intercepted Letters, you need only read the Summary Discourse of the just Causes and Reasons, which obliged the States General of the Netherlands, to provide for their Defence against Don John of Austria. It is a very curious Manifesto printed at Antwerp, by William Sylvius the King's Printer, in the Year 1577. See also the Manifesto published by Prince John Casimir, Count Palatine of the Rhine, in the Year following, to justify his Expedition.

[E] Escovedo, Don John's Secretary, being sent to Madrid — was killed there.] Mr le Laboureur says, that he had read some Memoirs written by Mr Peiresc, which make Escovedo die after his Master; and that Mr du Vair, who had been told that Particular, in a familiar Conversation with Antonio Perez, related it to Mr de Peiresc (13). This deserves to be examined. Perhaps I shall compose an Article for Escovedo, wherein I shall treat of this more amply, and we shall see whether it was before or after Don John's Death, that the Designs, which he and the Duke of Guise had formed, were known at the Court of Spain. Philip II was not so much in the wrong as was imagined; and Don John would have been able, in a little time, to have cut him out more work than the Dutch. He was no truer, in respect to his Sovereign, than the Duke of Guise. But it must be owned, that the jealous Humour of Philip, and his mysterious Politics, was the chief Cause of inspiring his Family with those rebellious Thoughts. "Multi fallere docuerunt, dum timent falli, & aliis jus peccandi suspicando fecerunt (14). — Many Persons have put others upon cheating them, by their fearfulness of being cheated, and have occasioned, by their Suspicions, the very Thing they suspected."

(13) Additions to the Memoirs of Castelnau, Tom. 2, pag. 389.

(14) Seneca, Epist. 3.

[F] He saw himself sacrificed to the Contempt of his Enemies, for want of Supplies to make head against them.] Thus the King of Spain, as great a Politician as he was, chose rather to lose the Netherlands, than not to satisfy the Jealousies, and other hidden Passions, which disquieted his Soul. It is to this that the Dutch are as much, or more, indebted for their Liberty, than to their good and wise Conduct. There are few great Affairs but what owe their Success as much, at least, to the Misconduct of one of the Parties, as to the Prudence of the other. There was no great difficulty to draw Philip II into the Snare, as soon as his Jealousies were discovered. Strada fancies, that the Prince of Orange wrote about Don John's Marriage, with the Queen of England, to one of his Friends at Paris, and the promise which the Bridegroom made of Liberty of Conscience to the Protestants, on purpose to increase King Philip's Suspicions: he thought that his News would not fail to be known by the Spanish Ambassador. "Quin ad hanc "quoque suspicionem Regi confirmandam haud sanè "dubitaverim aspexisse Orangium, scriptis ad ami- "cum litteris in Galliam, quibus Joan. Austriaci, "atque Anglæ Reginæ conjugium significabat: ad- "debatque, pro suâ in eam rem operâ, spem sibi "ab Austriaco, factam liberæ per Belgium Religio- "nis. Id, quod à Varga, Hispano apud Gallum "oratore in arcana quæque intento, sollicitè admoni- "tum ferunt Philippum Regem (15). — I make "no doubt, but the Prince of Orange had an Eye to "the confirming this Suspicion of the King's, in the "Letters he wrote to a Friend in France, intimating "a Marriage between John of Austria, and the Queen "of England: and adding, that John had promised her, "so far as in him lay, a Liberty of Conscience through "the whole United Provinces. This Varga, the Spanish "Ambassador in France, who was always on the Watch "for Secrets, is said to have met with, and to have "sent a particular Account of it to King Philip."

(15) Strada de Bello Belg. Dec. 1, lib. 10, pag. 618.

[G] It was believed — that he was poisoned.] You will find here both Accounts, of Strada and Brantome. Ex Mœrore contabuit, says Strada (16): An vero ad hoc quo satis extingui potuit, venenum aliud cujusquam dolo subjectum fuerit (namque in defuncti corpore extitisse non obscura veneni vestigia affirmant qui viderunt) equidem nihil ipse statuerim. He died of Grief: But whether, to dispatch him more effectually, any Poison was given him, (for those who saw the Body, affirm there were very evident Signs of Poison,) I will not take upon me to determine. That poor Prince, says Brantome (17), did not long enjoy that great Glory and Praise, for he, who had so often fought Death in the hard Field of Mars, died in a soft Bed, as if he had been a Favourite of Venus, and not a Son of Mars. It was said that he died of a contagious Distemper, which the Marchioness of Avré, with whom he was in love, had given him, but this is not generally said, nor even in Spain: for it is thought that he was poisoned with perfumed Buskins.

(16) Id. ib. pag. 619.

(17) Brantome's Lives of foreign Captains, pag. 140.

[H] He durst not recommend to Philip II, his two Natural Daughters.] Don John, the handsomest Prince of his Time, was also very Gallant and Complaisant. Judge whether he was not a lucky Man. He got a Daughter at Madrid, and another at Naples. She at Madrid was called Anne, and her Mother was a Person of the first Quality, and a perfect Beauty, "Ex "Mariâ Mendoziâ splendidissimi generis formæque "elegantissimæ puellâ (18). — Of Mary Mendoza, "a young Lady of a most noble Family, and incompa- "rable Beauty." The same Lady who had brought up Don John (19), brought up this Bastard-Child likewise privately till she was seven Years of Age, and then put her into a Nunnery. Philip II took her from thence, and sent her to Burgos, where she became perpetual Superior of the Benedictine Nuns. Don John's other Daughter's Name was Joan: her Mother was a Lady of Sorrento, whose Name was Diana Phalanga, and after she was brought up to seven Years of Age, by her Father's Sister, the Duchess of Parma, she was put into the Nunnery of St Clara at Naples, where, having lived twenty Years, she was afterwards married to the Prince of Butero. Those two Daughters of Don John died almost in the same Day, in the Month of February 1630. He had caused them to be brought up so privately, that he did not doubt but that the King was ignorant of the whole Secret: nor had he trusted it to his great Friend the Prince of Parma, who did not know any Thing of those Bastard Children, but, from the Duchess his Mother, a little before the Death of Don John. Eas Regi incompertas crederat: quippe occultè adeo cauteque educatas, ut Alexander ipse secretorum ejus planè omnium particeps filiarum alteram ignoraret: alteram non ab Austriaco sed à Margaritâ matre haud pridem nosset (20). The Author of That Prince's Life, printed at Amsterdam in 1690, will have it, that Don John discovered his Amours with the Fair Mendoza, and the Birth of his Daughter Anne, to his dear Nephew Prince Alexander Farneze, because, both living at the same time, in the Spanish Court, they observed each other very narrowly, and because they were too good Friends to hide any Thing

(18) Strada, Dec. 1, lib. 10, p. 624.

(19) Catherine Ulloa, the Wife of Don Lewis Quixada.

(20) Strada, Dec. 1, lib. 10, p. 624.

Digitized by Google

Expedition. He got it printed, at Newſtad, in High-Dutch and Latin. There was another Don John of AUSTRIA [I], in the XVIIth Century, who made a conſiderable Figure in the World. He was the Son of Philip IV, by a Comedian [K].

Thing from each other. But, ſays he, being well perſuaded, that the declaring of a Crime is a Crime, he had made a Secret of his Amours with Diana to him (21). This is giving Strada the lie without Grounds, or Proof, and it is aſſigning a Reaſon for that Prince's Silence, which proves too much.

(21) Vie de Dom Juan d'Autriche, pag. 146.

[I] There was another Don John of AUSTRIA, in the XVIIth Century.] He was the Natural Son of King Philip IV, of Spain, and was born in the Year 1629 (22). He was legitimated in the Year 1642, and no body paid the Complement of Congratulation upon it to Philip IV, with ſo much forwardneſs as James Panzirola, the Pope's Nuncio (23). The King's Love for that Child was the moſt tender imaginable. In the Year 1642 he declared him Generaliſſimo, both by Sea and Land, in the War againſt Portugal, and, ſome Years after, he ſent him into Italy, againſt the Rebels of Naples (24). The laſt Expedition having proved very fortunate, inclined that King to give the ſame Don John a Commiſſion to reduce the revolted Catalans to their Duty. After this he ſent him to command in the Netherlands. That Poſt did not contribute greatly to Don John's Glory; that which he acquired by raiſing the Siege of Valenciennes, vaniſhed away by the ill Succeſs which attended him in other Places; and eſpecially by the loſs of the Battle of the Dunes, which was ſoon followed by the loſs of Dunkirk. He was no leſs unfortunate, in the War of Portugal, after the Peace of the Pyrenes; for the Army, which he commanded, was entirely defeated; and he fell into Diſgrace, and received Orders, from the King his Father, to retire to Conſuegra (25). He had no ſhare in the Government after the Death of That Prince; the whole Adminiſtration was in the Hands of the Queen-Mother, and the Jeſuit Nidhard. They would have removed him, under the ſpecious pretence of ſending him into the Netherlands to oppoſe the Arms of France; but he diſcoverred their Cunning, and would not go thither, pretending to be ſick. The Court, being offended with That Conduct, made him retire to Conſuegra (26). He did not forget himſelf in That Retreat, but managed ſo well the Diſcontents of thoſe, who were incenſed at the great Favour ſhewn to Father Nidhard, that, at laſt, This Jeſuit was forced to withdraw. He went from Spain to Rome, and from That Time Don John's Affairs went better, 'till at laſt he was recalled to Court (27), and had the chief Direction of the Government. He died the ſeventeenth of September, 1679, after Twenty three Days Sickneſs (28). Some ſaid he had been poiſoned. "Vi ſono perſone, che "aſſicurano che foſſe un colpo uſcito dalla mano del- "la Reg. Mad. è del Cardinal Nitardi, coll' aſſiſten- "za de' ſuoi partigiani (29). —— There are ſome "who affirm, that the Blow came from the Hands of "the Queen Mother, and Cardinal Nitardi, by the "Aſſiſtance of their Party." Others have ſaid, that he was ſo much troubled at the King's Marriage, with the Daughter of the Duke of Orleans, that it was the Cauſe of his Death; and yet, according to the common Opinion, he was the chief Promoter of That Marriage (30). I remember to have read, in ſome Gazette, of the Year 1678, that the Marquis of Agropoli, being ſuſpected of having wrote a Comedy againſt Don John, was baniſhed to Oran.

(22) Vita di Don Giovanni d'Auſtria, pag. 4. Edit. of Geneva, 1686.

(23) Ibid. pag. 7.

(24) Ibid. pag. 37.

(25) Ibid. pag. 284.

(26) Ibid. pag. 288.

(27) Toward the end of the Year 1676.

(28) Vita de Don Giov. d'Auſtria, pag. 628.

(29) Ibid. pag. 629.

(30) See the Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres, for July, 1686, pag. 827.

[K] Son of Philip IV, by a Comedian.] All the World knows, that Philip IV was very much addicted to the Love of Women. He diſcovered that Inclination very early, and he had a Governor, who was ſo far from holding him up, in ſuch a ſlippery way, that he contributed to his Fall. It was the Count d'Olivarez; who was alſo ſubject to That Paſſion himſelf, and for That Reaſon, as was as for the better ſecuring to himſelf the Adminiſtration of Affairs, encouraged the lewd Temper of his young Prince: he was in hopes, that, under the Reign of of his Pupil, he ſhould have the greateſt Offices of the State, and he foreſaw, that if the Monarch ſhould lead a voluptuous and effeminate Life, he could exerciſe them with much more Authority: And beſides, that his own Debaucheries would have a much freer Courſe under a Maſter whom he ſhould only imitate. This Management of his had the deſired Succeſs. Philip IV aſcended the Throne at ſixteen Years of Age, in the Year 1621, and left the Care of the Kingdom to the Count-Duke, d'Olivarez, who neglected no means of continuing the Indolence of That Monarch. He invented new Diverſions, and brought to Madrid the moſt compleat Company of Comedians that could he formed in Spain. They acted before the King in the Year 1627. There was an Actreſs among them, whoſe Name was Calderona, that pleaſed him very much. She was not very handſome, but extreamly genteel and engaging, and had a charming Voice. The King no ſooner ſaw her on the Stage, but he fell in Love with her, and ordered her to be brought to his Chamber: He ſaid he had only a Mind to hear her ſpeak nearer him. As ſoon as the Count-Duke received this News, he managed the Meeting, and cauſed the Actreſs to be introduced at Night into his Majeſty's Chamber. She did not return from thence 'till the next Day, and then left the Prince ſo much in love with her, that he declared her his Favourite. She was but ſixteen Years of Age. After that they met frequently, ſhe proved with Child, and was delivered of our Don John. But, after her lying-in, ſhe broke off That Commerce (31), and ſhut herſelf up in a Nunnery, and took the Habit of a Nun, with the Benediction of the Pope's Nuncio (32).

(31) Non volle poi la Calderona accoppiarſi più col Rè. ---- Caldero na, after this, would be no longer concerned with the King. Vita di Don Giovanni d'Auſtria, pag. 5.

(32) John Baptiſt Pamphilio, who was afterwards Pope Innocent X. This is taken from the Life of Don Giovanni d'Auſtria, pag. 2, & ſeq.

AUTON (JOHN d') a Gentleman of Saintonge (a), Abbot of Angle (b), of the Order of St Auguſtin, lived under the Reign of Lewis XII. He was kept in waiting at Court, on purpoſe to write the private Hiſtory of That Prince (c). This Work he actually performed, and it was printed at Paris, in the Year 1615, in 4to, by Theodore Godfry. It extends only from the Year 1506, to 1508 (d). We find there ſome Verſes which the Author had dedicated to his Sovereign (e).

(a) Baudier, Hiſt. du Cardinal d'Amboiſe, pag. 44. (b) Du Cheſne, Biblioth. des Hiſt. de Franç. p. 65.

(c) Baudier, Hiſt. du Card. d'Amboiſe, p. 44. (d) Du Cheſne, Biblioth. p. 65. (e) Sorel, Bibl. Franç. pag. 329.

AZOTUS, a City of Paleſtine near the Sea, one of the five Satrapies of the Philiſtines (a). There they kept the Chief of their Idols, called Dagon, which fell down and broke before the Ark which they had taken from the Jews, and placed in the Temple of that Idol (b). It does not appear, that the Jews ſubdued this Place before the Reign of Uzziah King of Juda (c) [A]. It was taken from them by Tartan,

(a) Joſhua xiii. 3. where the Geneva Tranſlation calls it Aſdod.

(b) 1 Sam. v.

(c) 2 Chron. xxvi. 6.

[A] It does not appear, that the Jews ſubdued this Place before the Reign of Uzziah.] Look as long as you pleaſe, in the eleventh and fifteenth Chapters of Joſhua, to which Moreri refers, you will not find, that Joſhua conquered the City of Azotus. Nor is it truer, that Thoſe of the Tribe of Judah, conquered it in the Time of the Judges: The Author, who affirms it, and quotes the firſt Chapter of the Book of Judges (1), has no grounds for it. That which deceived either Moreri, or the Author whom he followed, is, that, in the fifteenth Chapter of Joſhua, This City ſeems to be in the Dividend of the Tribe of Judah. But he ought to have remembered, that they reckoned, in thoſe Dividends, both what was already conquered, and what was, afterwards, to be conquered. It appears plainly, from the third Chapter of Judges, that the five Governments of the Philiſtines, and conſequently this of Azotus, were

(1) Chriſtoph. Heidmannus, in Palæſtina, pag. 92.

Digitized by Google

Tartan, General of the Army of Sargon King of Aſſyria, as Iſaiah tells us (d), who lived in that time. Some time after it was beſieged by Pſammitichus King of Egypt, and it was one of the longeſt Sieges ever heard of: for they lay before this Place Twenty nine Years, before they could take it (e). It was ruined, in all probability, by the Egyptians, ſince the Prophet Jeremiah mentions it only as the remainder of a City (f). It was conſiderable in the Wars of the Maccabees; and the taking of it was not the leaſt of Jonathan's Exploits. The Enemies he had defeated retired thither, and ſhut themſelves up in the Temple of Dagon. He ordered it to be ſet on Fire, ſo that they periſhed in the ſame Flames which conſumed the Temple and City (g). We read, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that when St Philip had baptized the the Eunuch of Queen Candace, he was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was found at Azotus [B]. Prophane Authors have mentioned this Place as the chief Trading City of the Arabians (b); and it's Inhabitants muſt neceſſarily have made a conſiderable Figure, ſince Strabo has placed them in the Liſt of the four Nations which were intermixed with the Cœloſyrians, and the Phœnicians, the two principal People, according to him, which poſſeſſed Syria (i). Stephanus Byzantinus pretends, that the Founder of Azotus was one of thoſe Fugitives who came from the Red-Sea into Paleſtine, and that he gave the Name of his Wife to the City which he built; which name ſignified a She-Goat. Mr Bochart has rejected all this (k). St Jerom ſays, That, in his time, Azotus was ſtill a conſiderable Town [C].

(a) Iſaiah xx. 1.

(c) Herodot. l. 2, c. 157.

(f) Jerem. xxv. 20.

(g) 1 Macch. x. 83, &c.

(b) Pomp. Mela. lib. 1, cap. 12.

(i) Strab. lib. 16, pag 515. See alſo p. 522.

(k) Bochart. Geogr. Sacra, lib. 2, cap. 12.

were not conquerred by Joſhua. God himſelf, when he repreſented that This Conqueror was too old to finiſh That War, places theſe ſame five Governments among the Countries, that remained to be conquered (2). This diſcovers another Miſtake of Moreri; Joſhua, ſays he, ſubjected it firſt to the Hebrews, towards the Two thouſand five hundred and eighty ſixth Year of the World, and it was afterwards one of the five Satrapies of the Philiſtines. Was it not ſo before Joſhua's Time, by the Teſtimony of God himſelf?

(2) Joſhua xiii. 3.

[B] Was found at Azotus (3).] Moreri pretends, it was in This City, that St Philip was taken away. If he had read the eighth Chapter of the Acts, which he quotes, he would not have ventured to have ſaid ſo.

(3) Acts viii. 40.

[C] St Jerom ſays, that, in his Time, Azotus was ſtill a conſiderable Town (4).] Theſe are his Words, Uſque hodie inſigne oppidum Palæſtinæ. - - - - - A conſiderable Town in Paleſtine to this Day. Mr Baudrand will have it, that having been anciently an Epiſcopal City, under the Archbiſhopric of Cæſarea, it became afterwards a meer Municipium in St Jerom's Time. Olim Epiſcopalis ſub Archiepiſcopo Cæſarienſi, poſteà municipium tempore S. Hieronymi (5). He muſt excuſe my ſaying, that this Change was certainly the very Reverſe. For what could have ruined the Biſhopric of Azotus, between the Time it's of Erection and the Age of St Jerom?

(4) Hieronym. de Locis Hebraic.

(5) Baudrand Lexic. Geograph.

BABELOT,

Digitized by Google

B.

BABELOT, Chaplain to the Duke of Montpenſier, diſtinguiſhed himſelf ſo much by his Cruelty, during the Civil Wars of France, under Charles IX, that he has acquired a very conſiderable place in Hiſtory. It ought not, therefore, to be thought ſtrange, that I ſhould beſtow on him this Article. He was a Franciſcan Friar, who left the Monaſtery to follow "the Army, out of his implacable Hatred "to the Calviniſts (a). He had ſo little Regard to his Character "and Profeſſion, that inſtead of ſaving the Lives of thoſe whom the Fortune of "War reduced to the Mercy of Montpenſier, that he earneſtly ſollicited him to put "them to death; and could not endure that any of them ſhould be pardoned [A]. "This Thirſt after the Blood of the Calviniſts, which the two firſt Wars could not "allay, grew more raging in the third, when the Prince's (b) Soldiers being inform- "med, that Babelot had imprudently ſhut himſelf up in Champigni (c), gave ſuch a "furious Aſſault to that place that they took it (d). The pleaſure of finding them- "ſelves Maſters of the Perſon whom they looked upon as their Executioner, made "them more human to the Inhabitants of Champigni. Thoſe they pardoned, and "diſcharged all their Revenge on Babelot. They hanged him on an extraordinary "high Gibbet (e) [B]; and if they gave him time to prepare himſelf for Death, it "was only to have leiſure to reproach him for his Cruelty. The Vengeance which "the Duke of Montpenſier, who loved him, took for his Execution on the Calviniſts, "when Chance, or Weakneſs, put any of them into his Hands, cauſed for ſome "Weeks an unfair War (f) between the two Parties. The Soldiers of Briſſac cut "the Throats of the Garriſon of Mirebeau, though they had capitulated in due "Form; and d'Andelot treated that of St Florent in the ſame manner." Here was a Man altogether deſtinated for the Deſtruction of the Huguenots, ſince, even after his very Death, he occaſioned the Slaughter of many of them. Brantome believed him guilty

(a) I only transcribe the Words of Varillas, Hiſtory of Charles IX. Tom. 2, pag. 147.

(b) He means the Prince of Condé, Chief of the Proteſtants.

(c) A Town in Poitou, which belonged to the Duke of Montpenſier.

(d) In 1568.

(e) It is a great chance, if his Fraternity have not placed him in the number of their Martyrs.

(f) That is, They gave no more Quarter.

[A] He earneſtly ſollicited the Death of the Calviniſts, and could not endure that any of them ſhould be pardoned.] Brantome deſerves to be heard. (1) Brant. Memoires, Tom. 3, p. 281. "When they brought him, (ſays he (1), ſpeaking of "the Duke of Montpenſier*)* any Priſoners, if it was "a Man, he only ſaid to him, at firſt ſight, My "Friend, you are a Huguenot, I recommend you to "Monſieur Babelot. This Monſieur Babelot was a "learned Franciſcan Frier, who governed him very "him very peaceably, and never ſtirred from him; "to whom the Priſoner was no ſooner brought, "but, after a ſhort Examination, he was immediate- "ly comdemned to death, and executed."

[B] He was hanged on an extraordinary high Gibbet.] This puts me in Mind of what Galba did to a Man, who endeavoured to ſave himſelf from Death, by pleading his Right of a Roman Citizen; he cauſed him to be faſtened to a Croſs, very well whitened, and much higher than the reſt: This was to honour the Quality of the Criminal, and give him a little Comfort; but all this might rather look like Mockery. "Tutorem quod pupillum cui ſubſtitutus hæres "erat veneno necaſſet cruce affecit, implorantique "leges & civem Romanum ſe teſtificanti, quaſi ſola- "tio & honore aliquo pœnam levaturus, mutari, "multoque præter cæteras altiorem & dealbatam "ſtatui crucem juſſit (2). —— A Guardian, who had "who had poiſoned his Ward, whoſe Heir he was, "being condemned to be crucified, and pleading the "Privileges of a Citizen of Rome, to alleviate and "make his Puniſhment more honourable, he ordered "him a Croſs painted white, and much higher than "the reſt." I do not know what were the Motives to Thoſe, who made choice of a more exalted Gibbet for the Monk Babelot; perhaps they deſigned only to excite a greater Attention to the Fantaſticalneſs of the Characters of That Man, without any Alluſion, or Regard to the Practice of Antiquity. See Juſtin (3) concerning Maleus, a General diſgraced by the Carthaginians, qui filium cum ornatu ſuo, in altiſſimam crucem in conſpectu urbis ſuffigi juſſit; — who commanded his Son to be hanged, in his fineſt Dreſs, on an exceeding high Croſs, in the full View of the City; and Silius Italicus (4), concerning Regulus:

(2) Suet. in Galba, c. 9.

(3) Juſtin, lib. 18, cap. 7.

(4) Silius Italicus, l. 2. ver. 343.

——— Vidi cum robore pendens
Italiam cruce ſublimis ſpectaret ab altâ.

High from th' exalted Croſs be ſaw, unmoved,
His Country, he ſo faithfully had loved.

Haman, in the Book of Eſther, had prepared, for Mordecai, a Gibbet fifty Cubits high. Sometimes the exceſſive Height of the Gibbet, has been intended to expoſe the Sufferer to the View of a greater Multitude of People. See the Remark [C] of the Article OTHO III. I ſhall obſerve, by the way, that Thoſe, who compare This Croſs of Galba to That which Verres ordered for Gavius (5), are not exact; for all that was remarkable in the latter was, that it was not erected in the Place where the Inhabitants of Meſſina uſed to crucify Malefactors, but on That Side, which looked towards Italy. It was thus Verres choſe to inſult over the Sufferer, who declared himſelf a Roman Citizen; He ſhall look, ſaid he, from the Top of his Croſs, towards Italy, and towards his Houſe. "Quid attinuit cum Ma- "mertini more atque inſtituto ſuo crucem fixiſſent "poſt urbem in via Pompeja, te jubere in ea parte "figere quæ ad fretum ſpectaret, & hoc addere quod "negare nullo modo potes, quod omnibus audien- "tibus dixiſti palam, te idcirco illum locum deli- "gere, ut ille qui ſe civem Romanum eſſe diceret, "ex cruce Italiam cernere ac domum ſuam proſpi- "cere poſſet. ----- What did it avail, when the "Cuſtom of the Meſſinians was to crucify their Ma- "lefactors behind their City, in the Pompeian Way, "for you to command the Croſs to be erected on That "Side next the Sea, and to add, what you cannot "poſſibly deny, what you declared openly before all "the People, that you therefore choſe That Place, "that he, who called himſelf a Citizen of Rome, "might, from his Croſs, behold Italy, and caſt a "Look towards his Houſe." It is this laſt Circumſtance which Cicero has chiefly inſiſted upon (6); though Lactantius, who had no occaſion for That Paticular in the Subject he was treating on, makes him only conſider the Indignity of That Puniſhment in general (7).

(5) Torrentius has done it; ſee his Comment. in Sueton. Galb. c. 9.

TORRENTIUS has miſtaken the Meaning of a Paſſage in Cicero.

(6) Cicer. in Verr. 7.

(7) Lact. Inſtit. Divin. lib. 4. c. 18.

Digitized by Google

Guilty of another ſort of Crime, that is, of inſpiring his Maſter with the Brutality of cauſing Women to be raviſhed [C].

[C] Brantome believes him guilty ----- of adviſing the Brutality of cauſing Women to be raviſhed.] The Duke of Montpenſier uſed to recommend his Priſoners to his Guidon, Viro benè vaſato & benè mutoniato, ---- A Man extreamly well hung and provided. Brantome deſcribes this very freely, and adds as follows: "This is the Puniſhment of Thoſe "poor Huguenot Ladies, invented by Monſieur de "Montpenſier, which I am apt to believe might be "taken, by Monſieur Babelot, from Nicephorus (8), "where he ſays, that the Emperor Theodoſius took "away, and aboliſhed, a Cuſtom, long uſed in Rome, "that is, if any Woman was taken in Adultery, "the Romans did not puniſh her by preventing the "Repetition of her Crime, but by the greateſt Pro-"vocations of her Luſt; for they ſhut the Criminal "up in a narrow Lodge, and then ſuffered her "impudently to take her Fill of Letchery with eve-"ry Body that came, the moſt naſty and filthy. The "Manner was for thoſe lewd and whoring Fellows "to be furniſhed with certain little Bells, all the "Time they were in company with the Lady, "which, by their tinckling, and ringing, might "not only diſcover what they were doing, to Thoſe "who were paſſing by, or liſtening, but alſo ſig-"nify, that This Puniſhment was accompanied with "Shame and Ignominy. What Ignominy! which "they cared much for! Truly this was a very abo-"minable Cuſtom which That wiſe Emperor abo-"liſhed, as the Hiſtorian Nicephorus relates: in whom "poſſibly Monſieur Babelot found it, and cauſed it "to be copied by this brave Guidon (9)."

(8) He had better have quoted Socrates, l. 5. cap. 18.

(9) Brant. Memoires, Tom. 3. p. 282, 283.

BABYLAS, one of the moſt celebrated Martyrs of the ancient Church, was made Biſhop of Antioch in the IIId Century, under the Emperor Gordian (a). He governed his Church as a good and holy Prelate ought to do, and after having worthily diſcharged his Function about Thirteen Years, he obtained the Crown of Martyrdom towards the Year 251, during the Perſecution of Decius. Some ſay, he was actually put to Death for the Chriſtian Faith (b); and others ſay that he died in Priſon (c). All agree, he deſired to be buried with his Chains (d). It is pretended, that his Relics ſilenced one of Apollo's Oracles. St Chryſoſtom has more than once diſplayed all his Eloquence to celebrate the Memory of St Babylas: It is pity he was not ſufficiently informed of the Facts which he advanced. He ſuppoſes that this Martyr was put to Death for denying a Criminal Emperor an Entrance into the Church [A]; and he ſpeaks of that Emperor's Crime like one who had but little conſulted Hiſtory [B]. Neither did he ſo much as know what was ſaid of That Prince's

(a) Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 6, cap. 29.

(b) Chryſoſt. Tom. 1. p. 641, 669.

(c) Martyrolog. Romanum ad diem 24 Januar. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 6, cap. 39.

(d) Chryſoſtom. Tom. 1, pag. 669. & Martyrolog. Romanum ad diem 24 Jan.

[A] St Chryſoſtom -------- ſuppoſes that this Martyr was put to Death, for denying a criminal Emperor an Entrance into the Church.] It is certain, that Babylas died in the Reign of the Emperor Decius; and therefore, if St Chryſoſtom's Account were true, it muſt have been Decius that was excluded from entring into the Church; but it does not appear, that Decius was ever at Antioch in the whole Time of his Reign. Baronius advances, without proof, that Decius went into Syria, in the Year 253, to make War againſt the Perſians, and that it was then that Babylas would not ſuffer his Church to be prophaned by the Preſence of ſuch an Emperor (1). This neither agrees with Chronology nor Hiſtory, nor with the Prudence of the Biſhop of Antioch. The beſt Chronologers place the Death of Decius in the Year 251 (2). No good Hiſtorian ſays that Decius was in the Eaſt, to make War with the Perſians. It is true, the Acts of St Laurence (3) affirm, that This Emperor went to make War againſt the Perſians, and that he took from them the Country of Babylon, Aſſyria, all Perſia, Hircania, and even Bactriana, and that he died at Rome, being poſſeſſed with a Devil a little after the Martyrdom of St Laurence (4); but thoſe Acts are without Authority, and full of Faults (5). Father Noris does not ſcruple to ſay, that all That War of Perſia is a meer Fable (6). With regard to the Prudence of St Babylas, we may ſay, that it would not have ſuffered him to reſiſt a Pagan Emperor. It was not agreeable to the Conduct of the Church, for St Babylas to attempt hindring him from coming into it, if he had come thither, as a Pagan, to commit ſome Violence; for the Church had not, nor exerciſed, any Power over any, but thoſe that were of the Number of her Children, and ſhe patiently ſuffered the Inſults of Perſecutors. Thus ſpeaks the Author of the Life of Tertullian, and of Origen (7). Mr de Tillemont confirms that Remark. Upon thoſe Occaſions, ſays he (8), the Church defended herſelf only with Prayers, and with a peaceable and humble Patience, with which ſhe ſuffered the Inſults of Perſecutors. We find, in a Sermon, aſcribed to St Chryſoſtom *, that St Roman of Antioch oppoſed a Pagan Governour from entring into the Church; but it is a very extraordinary Thing, and the Fact is by no means certain. He obſerves alſo, that all the Terms, which St Chryſoſtom makes uſe of, ſhew, that the Prince, whom St Babylas oppoſed, was a Chriſtian. So that it cannot be true, that this holy Man reſiſted Decius, and yet he died under the Empire of Decius: St Chryſoſtom, therefore, muſt be allowed to have fallen into a Miſtake, in ſaying, That St Babylas ſuffered Death for having denied the Entrance of his Church to an Emperor.

(1) Baron. Annal. ad Ann. 253, n. 128.

(2) Calviſius, Petavius, Pagi, &c.

(3) See Tillemont, Tom. 3, p. 600.

(4) This Saint did not die till the Year 258. Tillem. ib.

(5) Id. ib.

(6) Noris, de Epoch. Syro-Maced. p. 203, cited by Tillemont, ib.

(7) Printed at Paris, in 1685, ſee there, pag. 642.

(8) Tillemont, Tom. 3, pag. 821.

* Chryſoſt. Tom. 1, Orat. 48, pag. 547, a. 549, e. 550, e.

[B] — and he ſpeaks of that Emperor's Crime, like one who had but little conſulted Hiſtory.] He relates, that a certain People being in War with This Emperor, deſired to make an end of it, and to confirm the Peace by all the ſtrongeſt and moſt inviolable Ties that were known among Men; that the Agreement was made and confirmed by Oath on both ſides; that thoſe People being willing to ſhew their Enemies that they acted ſincerely, perſuaded their King to give his own Son as an Hoſtage to the Prince with whom they had concluded the Peace; that what followed made it appear, that inſtead of being depoſited, as they intended, in the Hands of a Friend, he was put into the Mouth of a Lyon; ſince that Prince, having no regard either to the Youth of the Son of his Allie, or to the inviolable Sanctity of the Oath which he had taken, or to that all-ſeeing Eye of the Divine Juſtice for the puniſhing of Crimes — with his own Hand, cut the Throat of him whom he ought to have protected as a ſacred Depoſitum, and as the indiſſoluble Tie of the Alliance (9). This, ſays St Chryſoſtom, was the Crime of That Prince, whom St Babylas treated in the following manner. "That "great Prelate, on this occaſion, perfectly imitated the "Zeal of Elias, and of St John; for he did not con-"ſider, that he was then to reſiſt not only a Prince, "or a common King, but him that was Maſter of a "great Part of the Earth, who had a very powerful "Army, and whom all things ſeemed to conſpire to "make dreadful to him. He was not dazzled with "all this outward Splendor — but that very Splen-"dor ſerving only to repreſent to him, in the ſame "Moment, the Supream Majeſty of that King whoſe "Miniſter he was — he ſtept boldly to that Crimi-"nal Prince, in the midſt of his Guards, ſtopt him "with his Hand againſt his Breaſt, repreſented his "Crime to him, and forbad him, in the Name of "God, from entring into the Aſſembly of the Faith-"ful (10)." It is needleſs to obſerve, that St Chryſoſtom uſes the moſt lively and pathetic Figures of his Rhetoric, in the Relation of theſe Facts (11); one may eaſily think ſo, that knows (and who is ignorant of it?) he was a great Preacher, and ſpoke to a People full of Reſpect and Zeal for the Name of St Babylas (12). But is he not to be pitied for having employed

(9) See the Lives of Tertullian and Origen, pag. 632.

(10) Ibid. pag. 636.

(11) Eraſmus adviſed the reading this Homily in the Colleges, as a more perfect Pattern for the Scholars than Lyſias, Libanius, &c. See the Letter which he wrote to the Head of a College of Louvain; it is the 24th of the 28th Book, pag. 1705.

(12) To the People of Antioch. St Babylas had been Biſhop of that City.

Digitized by Google

Prince's Submiſſion to the ſevere Diſcipline of St Babylas [C]. We may point out the general Grounds of ſome of his Miſtakes [D]. All this will be treated of in the Remarks, employed ſo many Ornaments, and ſo powerfully exerted his Imagination and Lungs, on ſuch Falſities? For what can be more chimerical, than to ſuppoſe People, who were Enemies to the Romans, ſhould perſuade their King to deliver his Son for an Hoſtage into the Hands of their Emperor? If any People did this, without doubt they were the Perſians. But it is very certain they did nothing like it, during the Epiſcopacy of St Babylas. I queſtion very much whether any Roman Emperor ever killed, with his own Hand, a young Prince, delivered to him as an Hoſtage, after the Concluſion a Peace: But it is abſolutely falſe, that one of the Emperors, under whom St Babylas enjoyed the Biſhoprick of Antioch, was ever guilty of ſo barbarous a Perfidy. I do not queſtion, in the leaſt, but that St Chryſoſtom erred very innocently; becauſe he did not only affirm thoſe Errors in the Pulpit, but alſo in a Piece he wrote againſt the Gentiles (13). If he could promiſe himſelf that his Auditors would forgive him for inſiſting upon a falſe and pious Tradition, he could not have expected the ſame Favour from the Enemies of the Chriſtian Name. He therefore believed himſelf, that what he aſſerted was true.

(13) St Chryſoſt. Homily on St Babylas, pag. 641, vol. 1. alſo contra Gentil. and on St Babylas, pag. 647, 655, &c. cited in the Life of Tertullian and Origen, pag. 632.

[C] St Chryſoſtom did not know what was ſaid of that Prince's Submiſſion to the ſevere Diſcipline of St Babylas.] St Chryſoſtom has ſuppoſed, that St Babylas had to do with a Monarch, who puniſhed with Death the holy Reſiſtance that was made againſt his entring into the Church. The Falſity of this Fact has been ſufficiently detected, by ſhewing that St Babylas died in the Reign of Decius, and that Decius had not met with any Reſiſtance at the Door of the Church of Antioch. Here is another Proof of the ſame Falſity. The Predeceſſor of Decius was Philip: And it was to him that St Babylas is thought to have refuſed the Entrance of his Church, nor conſidering him as an Emperor, but as a Chriſtian, who ought to ſubmit to the Rules of Diſcipline and Penance. Now it is pretended, that This Emperor ſubmitted to Thoſe Laws, and that he behaved himſelf towards the Prelate of Antioch, much in the ſame manner as Theodoſius has ſince done towards St Ambroſe at Milan. Euſebius relates, That the Emperor Philip was deſirous to aſſiſt at the public Prayers on Eaſter-Eve; but that the Biſhop would not ſuffer him to come into the Church, before he had obliged him to confeſs his Sins, and place himſelf among the Penitents; which the Emperor performed with all the Marks of a ſincere Piety, and Fear of God (14). Euſebius relates this only on a meer Hear-ſay, and neither names the Place of this great Event, nor the Prelate, who had the Honour of it. It is very ſtrange that ſuch things ſhould have been ſo confuſedly known. We even find ſome very learned Men, who will not allow the Emperor Philip to have been a Chriſtian. But however it be, we muſt not ſeparate the Courage of Babylas, and the Submiſſion of Philip, as St Chryſoſtom has done: they muſt either be both received, or both rejected. There are ſome Hiſtorians that ſpeak of it with greater exactneſs than Euſebius. The Chronicle of Alexandria obſerves, that the Empreſs was condemned to do Penance, as well as the Emperor her Husband: It adds, that St Babylas made uſe of this Severity, becauſe Philip had killed the Emperor Gordian's Son (15). Note, that Eraſmus, deceived by St Chryſoſtom, remarks the great Difference, as to the Succeſs, between the Courage of St Babylas, and that St Ambroſe. " Babylæ, ſays he " (16), parum feliciter ceſſit quod Imperatorem " impia cæde funeſtatum templo prohibuit; imo fe- " liciter ceſſit ipſi qui præſulis autoritatem ſuâ morte " confirmavit. At Ambroſio ceſſit felicius, qui ſum- " ma conſtantia ſuam tuens autoritatem, ipſum etiam " Cæſarem Chriſto lucri fecit. —— Babylas had but " ill Fortune in denying his Church to an Emperor, " polluted with Blood, or rather had good Fortune in " confirming his Epiſcopal Authority by his Death. " But Ambroſe had better Fortune, in not only main- " taining his Authority, with the greateſt firmneſs, but " alſo bringing over the Emperor to Chriſt." And in another place: " Ambroſius Epiſcopus Mediola- " nenſis auſus eſt Theodoſium Cæſarem, ob crudelem " ac præcipitatam in Theſſalonicenſes ſententiam, " à templi limine ſecludere, poſtque ſævas objurga- " tiones, poſt indictam ſatisfactionem in pœnitentium " claſſem relegare —— Tentavit idem Babylas An- " tiochenus Epiſcopus adverſus regem innocentis ho- " micidio pollutum, & interfectus eſt (17). —— Am- " broſe, Biſhop of Milan, had the Courage to ſhut " the Church Door againſt the Emperor Theodoſius, " for his cruel, and haſty, Sentence againſt the People " of Theſſalonica, and after ſeverely reproaching him, " and enjoining him a ſuitable Atonement, to place " him among the reſt of the Penitents —— Babylas, " Biſhop of Antioch, attempted the ſame Thing " againſt an Emperor guilty of Murder, but loſt his " Life by it."

(14) Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 6, c. 34.

(15) Chron. Alexandr. pag. 630, cited by Tillemont, Tom. 3. pag. 822.

(16) Eraſm. Epiſt 3. lib. 28. pag. 2586.

(17) Idem, Epiſt. 60. lib. 20, pag. 1203.

[D] We may point out the general Grounds of ſome of his Miſtakes.] We have juſt now ſeen that it was ſaid, St Babylas grounded his Conduct on Philip's perfidious Murder. The Emperor Gordian, under whom he was Prefect of the Prætorium, had intruſted him with his Son: after Gordian was dead, Philip deſigning to reign in his ſtead, killed the young Prince committed to his Care. St Babylas knowing him guilty of ſuch an execrable Murther, would not admit him into the Church: Decius revenged the Affront put upon Philip; and put Babylas to Death for it. This we find in the Chronicle of Alexandria, as it had been related by Leontius, Biſhop of Antioch, in the Year 348. He did not perfectly underſtand Philip's Conduct, but came much nearer the Truth than St Chryſoſtom. The Emperor Gordian, under whom Philip was Prefect of the Prætorium, had no Child to truſt with any Body, for he had none at all. So that Leontius muſt quite miſtake the matter, in ſaying that Philip killed the Son, in order to ſucceed That deceaſed Emperor. The Truth of the Fact is this: Philip, taking the Advantage of the Emperor Gordian's Youth, caballed in ſuch manner that he cauſed himſelf to be declared his Colleague and Guardian. The Factions were revived, that of Gordian was worſted: Philip cauſed him to be depoſed, and afterwards to be killed (18). The Miſrepreſentations of this Fact increaſed in time. Leontius ſaid, that Philip killed the Son of his Emperor, the ſame Son of whom That Emperor had committed to his Care. This is already one ſtep out of the way; and a direct departing from the Truth. St Chryſoſtom affirms, that Philip killed the Son of a Prince, with whom he had concluded a Treaty of Peace, the ſame Son this Prince had depoſited, as a Pledge of his Friendſhip, and of his ſincere Deſire, to live in perfect Harmony with him. This is a ſecond falſe Step; and is going a great way towards the Miſtake of Leontius. This laſt Author ſays, that Decius cauſed Babylas to be put to Death, to puniſh his Inſolence towards Philip. Thoſe who knew the Averſion that Decius had for Philip, ſuch an Averſion as was believed to have been the Cauſe of Decius's perſecuting the Chriſtians, found this Aſſertion of Leontius to be very abſurd. They corrected it, therefore, by ſuppoſing, that Philip himſelf cauſed St Babylas to be put to Death (19); thus have they corrected one Fault with another, and unhappily deceived St Chryſoſtom. They have diſappointed him of ſome Reflexions, which he might have had an Opportunity of ſetting off with the Ornaments of his Eloquence, to repel the Inſults of the Pagans, and diſplay the Glory of the Evangelical Miniſtry. The Humiliation of an Emperor, at the word of a Biſhop, would have ſupplied St Chryſoſtom with ſome fine Thoughts; it is pity he did not know it. See how he glories in the Reſiſtance of St Babylas: " Where- " as, ſays he (20), the Prieſts of the falſe Deities " are more Slaves to the Emperors, than to their " Gods, and attend their Worſhip only for fear " of thoſe Princes, to whom the Devils are alſo in- " debted for the Honour and Adoration paid them " by Men; on the contrary, this great Biſhop of An- " tioch, has demonſtrated, by puniſhing the Empe- " ror himſelf, in a manner very ſenſible to a reaſon- " able Man, and as much as he was permitted to " do, according to the Extent of the Power of the " Church, that the Prieſts of the Religion of JESUS " CHRIST, are Slaves to no Body on Earth; and " that they ought to be ſo jealous of that holy Ex- " altation,

(18) Capitolinus in the Life of Gordian.

(19) See Tillemont, Tom. 3. P. 822.

(20) Contra Gentil. de S. Babyl. Oper. Tom. 1. p 664, 665, cited in the Lives of Tertullian and Origen, pag 639.

Digitized by Google

Remarks, as also the Request which it is pretended, Apollo made to the Emperor Julian, concerning the Relics of St Babylas [E]. This Martyr has the Honour of having obtained three great Victories over the Pagan Emperors, two in his Lifetime, and the third after his Death (e). The First is, the Advantage he gained over Philip, by obliging him to keep without the Church in the Condition of a Penitent: The Second is, That he had over the Persecutor Decius, when he chose to prepare himself to suffer any thing for the Faith, rather than to do any thing unbecoming his Episcopal Function: The Third is, That which his Ashes obtained, over the Oracle of Apollo near Antioch (f). Mr Chevreau has not been very exact in speaking of the Martyrdom of St Babylas [F]. We shall examine This more particularly below.

(e) See the Lives of Tertullian and of Origen, p. 757.

(f) See Remark [E].

" altation, which GOD has allotted them, as the " true Characteristic of their Dignity, that they must " be ready to lavish holily their Lives, rather than " to suffer any Diminution of it. This very Ex- " ample, adds he, by confounding the Pride of the " Pagans, increased the Piety of the Faithful, who " learnt, from the Conduct of their Pastor, to fear " GOD more than Man; and wholly stop the " Mouths of those who durst, with an extreme As- " surance, maintain, that there was no true Cou- " rage among the Christians, but that every thing " among them was false and counterfeit, and only " covered with fair Appearances."

[E] It is pretended, that Apollo made a Request to the Emperor Julian —— concerning the Relics of St Babylas.] There was, near Antioch, a Temple and an Oracle of Apollo, in a Place called Daphne. Here Superstition and Debauchery strove which should outdo each other. It was the Rendezvous of Lovers, and their Mistresses: others went thither to pay their Devotions; and, in all probability, many pursued both those Ends, at one and the same Time. Gallus, the Brother of Julian the Apostate, was no sooner declared Cæsar, but, to put a stop to this double Disorder, he built a Church in the place, and ordered the Tomb of Babylas to be brought thither. It is said, that, upon this, Apollo returned no more Answers. The Tomb of this Martyr was the Cause of it, and not the Interruption of the Sacrifices: For, upon receiving the Sacrifices, in the Reign of Julian, the Oracle still continued silent; and when Julian went himself to consult it, he was told, that the dead Bodies, which incumbered that Place, shut the Mouth of the Oracle. The Emperor applied this only to St Babylas's Tomb, and therefore ordered it to be taken away. The Christians of Antioch brought it into the City. There was a Procession of Persons of all Ages, and both Sexes, who sung a Song of Triumph all the way (21), repeating, for the Chorus of their Song, the Confusion of those who adore Idols, from Psalm XCVII. Ἐξῆρχον δὲ τῶν ψαλμῶν τοῖς ἄλλοις, οἱ τάξεις ἀκειβάνοντες, καὶ ξυνεπήχει τὸ πλῆθος· ἐν συμφωνίᾳ καὶ ταύτην τὴν ῥῆσιν ἐπῇδεν· αἰσχύνθησαν πάντες οἱ προσκυνοῦντες τοῖς γλυπτοῖς οἱ ἐγκαυχώμενοι τοῖς εἰδώλοις (22). Those who were skillful in singing, presided in the Song, and the People answered, in Chorus, and repeated this Verse, " Confounded are all " they who worship graven Images, and glory in " Idols." We might conclude, à fortiori, from this History, that the Birth of JESUS CHRIST imposed Silence on all the Oracles of Paganism; if we did not otherwise find, from the Confession of Sozomen, that this Oracle of Apollo gave Answers 'till the Empire of Constantius, in whose Time Gallus obtained the Dignity of Cæsar. The Objection seems yet stronger against Those who do not acknowledge any diabolical Operation, in the Oracles of the Pagans. But see what Mr Van Dale answers: He supposes, that the Priests of Apollo, being unwilling to be so nearly observed by the Christians, who came thronging to Babylas's Tomb, invented an Answer which might oblige the Emperor to take away the Tomb of That Martyr. Those Priests feared nothing so much as the Eyes of the incredulous, and concluded, they should never be able to hide their cunning Practices from People who would be so curious to discover them, as the Christians. Perhaps, also, the blind Superstition of these Priests perswaded them, that it would be a very religious Act, to get removed, from the Neighbourhood of their Temple, a Tomb of a Christian Martyr, so much reverenced by the Enemies of their Gods. " Christiani, quibus repleta erat Antiochia, aliique e- " jusdem religionis aliunde advenientes, visitabant " quotidie sepulchra Martyrum, atque inprimis qui- " dem Babylæ. Sub quo prætextu dum loca illa " ita frequentarent, cum subreperent etiam huic O- " raculo oculisque emissitiis omnia perlustrarent, ut " sic detegerent impostura ac præstigias ibi exerci- " tas, neque id ferrent ea tempora, ut vi expellere " eos inde possent Antistites; illi sub prætextu à " mortuis purgandi locum Dis sacratum, cum Ba- " bila aliisque, Christianos inde removere nitebantur. " Nihil enim magis aut citius detegere valebat An- " tistitum ejusmodi impostura, quam continuus con- " cursus publicæque Panegyres, ob ludos aut festa " publica ibi celebranda: si quarumcunque sectarum " Philosophis, eorumve sequacibus ad illa pateret access- " sus (23). —— The Christians, with whom Antioch " abounded, and those of the same Religion, coming " thither, from other Places, daily visited the Tombs " of the Martyrs, and, above all, That of St Babylas. " By which means, as they had an Opportunity of " observing the Oracle, and of prying into every " Thing which passed, in order to detect the Frauds " and Impostures there carried on, the Priests not " having Power enough, in Those Times, to drive " them from thence by Force, endeavoured to get them " removed, with Babylas, and others, under the Pre- " tence of clearing, from the Pollution of dead Bo- " dies, a Place, which was consecrated to their Gods. " For the Jugglings of the Priests were like to be " as readily, and as fully, detected by these conti- " nual Assemblies, and public Commemorations, on " account of celebrating there Rejoicings and Festival " Solemnities; as if they were laid open to the strictest " Examination of all the several Sects of Philosophers."

(21) It was about 40 Stadia, that is 5000 Paces.

(22) Sozomeni Hist. Eccles. lib. 5. cap. 20.

(23) Van Dale, de Oraculis, pag. 442. See the Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres for March 1684, pag. 15, 16.

[F] Mr Chevreau has not been very exact in speaking of the Martyrdom of St Babylas.] See what he says of it: " Babylas, Bishop of Antioch, suf- " fered Martyrdom, with his three Children, for " not permitting Numerian to see the Ceremonies " of the Christians, adding, That a Man polluted " with Blood, and with the Sacrifices of Idols, could " not enter into the Church; or, as Suidas says, " That he would not suffer the Wolf to enter into " the Sheel-fold of the Lord (24)." I. Babylas had no Children; He should therefore have said, that three Brothers of his, who were yet Children, or very young, suffered Martyrdom with him (25). II. There is above thirty Years between the Death of Babylas, and the Reign of Numerian. III. The ancient Writers do not ascribe to That Martyr Mr Chevreau's Expressions. We must confess, that the Undertaking of a General History is very difficult Matter. Mr Chevreau was a learned Man; he knew the Defects of those who went before him in That Design; he took a long time for his Work; and yet ----- As he is yet alive (26), and, notwithstanding his Age, enjoys a perfect Health of Body and Mind; therefore I do not doubt but he will publish a new Edition, yet more curious than the precedding (27).

I hoped that Mr Chevreau could not have taken amiss those little Critical Notes we have just now seen; and, as I had all the Esteem for him, which is due to his great Merit, I would have suppressed them, if I had thought they would have made him uneasy: But I thought that he was above being concerned at so trifling a Matter. I fancied he would have applied to himself what I said in my first Preface, and he was certainly one of those Authors, who need not have been alarmed at little Losses (28). I was therefore surprized, at his unexpected Resentment, and heartily troubled for having made him so. There are some Persons of great Note, who can be my Witnesses, that when I wished him a yet longer Life than he had already enjoyed (29), I did it, not only (24) Chevreau's Hist. of the World, lib. 4, cap. 4, pag. 400, of Vol. 2. Edit. of Holland, 1687.

(25) Lives of Tertull. and Origen, pag. 758.

(26) This was wrote in 1694.

(27) He has actually published a new Edition at the Hague, in the Year 1708, with several Additions and Corrections, but has altered nothing in this Passage concerning Babylas.

(28) See the Specimen of this Dictionary, towards the End of the sixth Paragraph.

(29) He died Febr. 15. 1701, aged 87 Years and some Months. See the Journal of Trevoux for March and Apr. 1701, pag. 241, Dutch Edition.

Digitized by Google

only in regard to his being the Ornament of his Age, but also out of the Desire I had, that he might find, in this second Edition, the greatness of my Respect for him, and the Explanation of a thing, which had been expressed in an ambiguous manner. I am apt to think, that this Ambiguity was the chief Cause of his Discontent; he thought, that the pointed Line, and yet - - - - had some Poison in it. 'Tis a Gap, which his own Imagination filled with disobliging Ideas; and I was desirous, he should know, that, according to my sincere meaning, That Hiatus was left only as a general Representation of the Impossibility of avoiding Faults, in a Work containing abundance of minute and particular things, even though an Author be ever so learned.

But, to come to the Point, Mr Chevreau himself acknowledges the Solidity of my first Remark; since he confesses (30), that it had been better to have put three Brothers, who were as yet Children, to take away all Equivocation, and that he ought to have explained himself more clearly, than several Authors, who expressed it so before him. As for the Expressions, which I said the ancient Authors did not ascribe to St Babylas, Mr Chevreau quotes Georgius Syncellus, and Paulus Diaconus (31); but can these Authors be called ancient, with respect to the time of the Martyr we now treat of? Did not they live towards the end of the VIIIth Century? Lastly, he quotes several Writers, most of them modern, who have said, that Babylas was slain by Numerian, and repeats these Words of Mr Tillemont (32); We must confess, that the History of St Babylas is embarassed with many Difficulties, beyond our Capacity to surmount. I agree, that all this may serve to excuse Those, who are not exact in their account of the Martyrdom of St Babylas; but it will always be allowable to remark, where Care is not taken to chuse such Expressions, as are the most exact we can meet with.

(30) Chevræana, Part. 2. pag. 321, Dutch Edition.

(31) Ibid. pag. 321.

(32) Ibid. p. 329, 330.

I am very well satisfied, that Mr Chevreau has found Faults in my Book. Any one, who has not the fourth part of his Learning, may find a great many in it. If he had given some Examples of what he has said, in general, concerning those essential Faults against our Language, and concerning those mean, burlesque, obscure, and perplexed Expressions (33), I should think myself obliged either to dispute the Point, or submit to the Accusation; and I should very willingly do the latter, if I could be made sensible of the least Reason for it imaginable: But, since he has pointed out nothing, I may be allowed to take That part of his Book for general and loose Reflexions (34). He charges me, particularly, with a kind of Contradiction, about a Man, who had been, as he says, my Idol a long time (35). I am sure he would have omitted this, if he had seen how I have justified myself on that Point, in my Reflexions on a Paper, entituled, The Judgment of the Public, &c. And, as for using Words, which, he says, nice Ears cannot endure (36), the Reader may see, in an Explication, at the end of this Book, what I have to answer to That; I should be glad to deserve all that he says, by way of retorting, to the Period, which ends with and yet - - - - (37). And I should think myself very happy, if I could be excused, for this Reason, that it is impossible, or next to impossible, to avoid committing a great many Faults, in such a Work as this. I do not believe I should ever have engaged in this Dictionary, if I had foreseen, that all my Care to avoid Mistakes could not have secured me from making a great many, and very gross ones too.

To conclude, I must desire my Readers to consult the learned Work of Mr de Larroque (38), printed at Leyden, in the Year 1688, under the Title of Matthæi Larroquani Adversariorum Sacrorum Libri tres. See the 79th, and following Pages.

(33) Ibid. pag. 320.

(34) Compare this with the end of the Remark [C] of the Article ROY.

(35) Chevræana, Part. 2, pag. 320.

(36) Ibid.

(37) Ibid. p. 330, 331.

(38) Daniel Larroquanus Matthæi filius.

BABYLON. Moreri, and his Continuators, have collected so many things concerning this City, that, to make this Article of any reasonable length, I should be obliged to repeat most of their Observations: So that, to spare the Public the distaste of finding the same things in different Dictionaries, I shall confine myself here to a Fact, which they have not touched upon. I do not examine whether what they relate so be exact as it ought to be. The Inhabitants of Babylon pretended, that their City was very ancient; they counted Four hundred seventy three Thousand Years from the first Observations of their Astrologers to the coming of Alexander, as Diodorus Siculus informs us (a). Others, keeping to a round number, say, that the Babylonians boasted of having preserved, in their Archives, the Observations, which their Astrologers had made on Nativities, for the space of Four hundred and seventy Thousand Years [A]. From hence we ought to correct a Passage of Pliny [B], which some Authors make use

(a) Lib. 17. pag. 118. Edit. Rhodomanni.

[A] The Babylonians boasted of having preserved Observations, made by their Astrologers, —— for the space of Four hundred and seventy thousand Years.] We shall only quote two Passages out of Cicero. " Con-
" temnamus etiam Babylonios, & eos qui e Caucaso
" cœli signa servantes, numeris & motibus stellarum
" cursus persequuntur. Condemnemus, inquam, hos
" aut stultitiæ, aut vanitatis, aut imprudentiæ, qui
" CCCCLXX. millia annorum, ut ipsi dicunt, monu-
" mentis comprehensa continent (1). —— We must
" also despise the Babylonians, and others, who have " made Observations of the Stars, from Mount Cauca-
" sus, and attempted to trace their Number and Mo- " tion: We must despise them, I say, either for their
" Ignorance, their Vanity, or their Inconsiderateness,
" in affirming, that their Records take in Four hun-
" dred and seventy Thousand Years." Let us see how he laughs at this in another Place. " Quod aiunt
" CCCCLXX millia annorum in periclitandis experiun-
" disque pueris quicunque essent nati, Babylonios
" posuisse fallunt. Si enim esset factitatum, non es-
" set desitum. Neminem autem habemus autorem
" qui aut fieri dicat, aut factum sciat (2). —— It
" must be a wretched Mistake, to say, that the Baby-
" lonians employed Four hundred and seventy Thou-
" sand Years, in calculating the Nativities of all
" the Children, who happened then to be born. If this
" were true, they would certainly have continued
" the same Trade to this Day. But we have no good
" Author, who either affirms their practising it at " present, or knows any thing of their having done so
" for that Space of Time past."

(1) Cicero de Divinat. lib. 1, cap. 19.

(2) Id. ibid. lib. 2, cap. 46.

[B] From these Astronomical Observations of the Babylonians we ought to correct a Passage of Pliny.] These are his Words; " Epigenes apud Babylonios
" 720 annorum observationes syderum coctilibus late-
" ritiis inscriptas docet, gravis auctor imprimis: qui " minimum, Berosus & Critodemus, 480 annorum.
" Ex quo apparet æternus literarum usus (3). —— Epigenes, an Author of great weight, tells us, that the Babylonians had Observations of the Stars, for Seven hundred and twenty Years, recorded on Bricks: Berosus and Critodemus, who make the least of it, say Four hundred and eighty Years." He had said, a little before, that he believed the Assyrian Letters had been perpetual, or that the Assyrians had always made use of Writing, Litteras semper arbitror Assyrias fuisse (4). We ought, therefore, to look upon the Testimonies, he borrows from Epigenes and Berosus, concerning the Astronomical Observations, recorded by the Babylonians, as Proofs of his Opinions; for the Conclusion, he draws from those Testimonies, is the same with the Opinion he had laid down a little before: " Ex quo apparet, this is his Con- " clusion, æternus litterarum usus. —— From whence
" it appears, that the Use of Letters has been perpe-
" tual." Now there is nothing so absurd as his Reasoning, if he is supposed to speak according to the present Readings of the Manuscripts and Editions of his Books. Epigenes, a credible Author, affirms, that the Observations of the Babylonian Astrologers comprehend Seven hundred and twenty Years. Those, who give them the least Extent, as Berosus and Critodemus, assign them Four hundred and eighty

(3) Plin. lib. 7, c. 56.

(4) Mr Perizonius believes it ought to be read Assyriis. See his Dissertatio Philologica de Originibus Babylonicis. They are some Theses which were maintained in the Month of April, 1694.

Digitized by Google

uſe of improperly, either to confute the antiquity of Babylon, or for other Purpoſes. This a learned Profeſſor of Leyden has lately obſerved (b), and I wonder it has not been taken notice of ſooner. Ariſtotle knew, without doubt, that the Babylonians boaſted of having a Series of Aſtronomical Obſervations, comprehending a prodigious number of Centuries. He was deſirous to inform himſelf of the Truth of This by means of Calliſthenes, who was in Alexander's Retinue, but found a great miſtake in the Account; for it is pretended, that Calliſthenes aſſured him, that the Aſtronomical Obſervations, he had ſeen in Babylon, comprehended no more than 1903 Years. Simplicius reports This, and borrows it from Porphyry (c). If Calliſthenes has computed right, it muſt be agreed, that, after the Deluge, Men made very great haſte to become Aſtrologers; for, according to the Hebrew Bible, there is but Two thouſand Years to be found from the Flood to the Death of Alexander. There is reaſon to queſtion what Simplicius reports; and it is remarkable, that all the ancient Authors, who have aſcribed the building of Babylon to Semiramis, have no other Authority, than That of Cteſias, whoſe Hiſtories abounded in Fables (d). And, therefore, we ſee, that Beroſus very much blames the Greek Writers for affirming, that Semiramis built Babylon, and adorned it with moſt beautiful Structures (e). The Supplement to Moreri quotes Quintus Curtius, in relation to the Immodeſty of the Babylonian Women. It may be added, that This Lewdneſs was very ancient. Jeremiah's Letter, inſerted in the Book of (b) Mr Perizonius: See Remark [B] Citations (8) and (y).

(c) In lib. 2. de Cælo, Com. 46, pag. 123.

(d) Marſhamus in Chronic. p. 507, Edit. 1676, in 4to.

(e) Beroſus, Chaldaicorum, lib. 3. apud Joſeph. lib. 1. contra Apion. pag. 1045.

eighty Years. Therefore the uſe of Letters has been perpetual, and I have reaſon to believe, that it has always been practiſed in Aſſyria. It is thus Pliny argues, in his Natural Hiſtory, as we now have it: It is thus, I ſay, he argues, after having obſerved, that Cadmus brought the Uſe of Letters into Europe, and that the Invention of them, in Egypt, was ſaid to have happened fifteen Years before the Reign of Phoroneus. A Fool, a drunken Man, or a Dotard, could ſcarce have been Author of ſuch a Heap of Contradictions. It muſt, therefore, neceſſarily be ſuppoſed, that this Paſſage is not in it's original State: And it is greatly to be wondered, that a Thouſand learned Critics ſhould have examined theſe Words, without perceiving ſuch an inconſiſtent piece of Logic in them, as might make them ſuſpect, that the Paſſage was corrupted. Scaliger, Voſſius, Sir John Marſham, and Mr Dodwell, have ſo little miſtruſted it, that they have taken it for the Foundation of the Concluſions, which they would draw concerning the Age of Beroſus (5), or againſt the Antiquity of Babylon (6), or for other Purpoſes (7). Father Hardouin has corrected part of this Paſſage; but it was not to rectify Pliny's Reaſoning; for, if this had been his principal Motive, he would have corrected all: It is Mr Perizonius (8), who has fully diſcovered the whole Matter, and proved the Corruption of the Text (9). He has demonſtrated, that the Number of a Thouſand muſt be added as well to the Account of Epigenes, as to That of Beroſus; and then Pliny's Argument would ſtand thus; that, according to the Teſtimony of Epigenes, the Obſervations of the Babylonian Aſtrologers comprehended Seven hundred and twenty Thouſand Years; and, according to the Teſtimony of thoſe, who, like Beroſus and Critodemus, give them the leaſt extent, Four hundred and eighty Thouſand Years. And Pliny is certainly in the right, upon the Suppoſition he makes, that theſe Teſtimonies are authentic, to conclude, that the beginning of the Aſſyrian Letters is impoſſible to be traced. Now, when a thing is ſo ancient, that the Original of it is beyond finding out, we may, without any ſcruple, affirm it, as Pliny has done, to have been perpetual. But would any one venture to call it ſo, when the Proofs given of it's Antiquity leave it much later than ſeveral Things, whoſe Beginnings are known? This muſt have been Pliny's Caſe, had he wrote what we find in his Work at this Time. Conſider well what he has ſaid concerning Cadmus and Phoroneus.

Father Hardouin's Correction deſerves a diſtinct Explanation. He mends Pliny's Text thus: "E di- "verſo Epigenes apud Babylonios CCCCLXX annorum "M. obſervationes ſiderum coctilibus laterculis in- "ſcriptas docet —— qui minimum, Beroſus & Cri- "todemus, CCCCXC annorum. —— On the contrary, "Epigenes tells us, that, amongſt the Babylonians, "there were celeſtial Obſervations for Four hundred "and ſeventy Thouſand Years, inſcribed on Bricks. —— "Beroſus and Critodemus, who make the leaſt of "it, ſay Four hundred and ninety Years." On one ſide, he puts Four hundred and ſeventy Thouſand, inſtead of Seven hundred and twenty; and, on the other, Four hundred and ninety, inſtead of Four hundred and eighty. He builds on Manuſcripts, as to the laſt Correction, and on the Authority of Cicero, as to the firſt (10). It is true, he ſays, by the way, that the Paſſage itſelf, in Pliny, ſeems to require the firſt Correction. "Certè annorum millia locus iſte "poſtulare videtur, non annos (11). —— Certainly "This Place requires the reading Thouſands of Years, "inſtead of Years." This looks as if he was ſenſible, how bad a Reaſoner Pliny is made by the common Reading. But, if a Thouſand be added to the Four hundred and eighty of the common Reading, we fall into another Difficulty; for, then, Beroſus allows Four hundred and eighty Thouſand Years to the Obſervations of the Babylonian Aſtrologers; and yet we know, that, when he mentions the great Care of the Babylonians, in preſerving the Memory of ſeveral natural and hiſtorical Matters, he ſpeaks but of a Hundred and fifty Thouſand Years. Βηρωσσὸς ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ τῶν Βαβυλωνιακῶν φησὶ γενέσθαι αὐτὸν κατ' Ἀλέξανδρον τὸν Φιλίππου τὴν ἡλικίαν, ἀναγραφὰς δὲ πολλῶν ἐν Βαβυλῶνι φυλάσσεσθαι μετὰ πολλῆς ἐπιμελείας ἀπὸ ἐτῶν πε ὑπὲρ μυριάδων τε πεπεισχύσας χρόνον. περιέχειν δὲ τὰς ἀναγραφὰς ἱστορίας περὶ τε οὐρανοῦ, καὶ θαλάσσης, καὶ πρωτογονίας, καὶ βασιλέων, καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν πράξεων (12). —— Beroſus, in his firſt Book concerning the Babylonians, ſays, he himſelf was born in the Time of Alexander, the Son of Philip; and that there were Inſcriptions, preſerved, with great Care, at Babylon, comprehending above a Hundred and fifty Thouſand Years: And that theſe Inſcriptions contained Accounts of the Heavens, and of the Sea, of the Originals of Things, of Kings, and their Tranſactions. It muſt be confeſſed, that this Paſſage equally proves theſe two things: The one, That the Number Four hundred and eighty, or Four hundred and ninety, ought to be ſtruck out of Pliny's Text; The other, That Four hundred and eighty Thouſand muſt not be put in the room of it, but rather a Hundred and fifty Thouſand. And yet it might admit of ſome Cavil: It may be objected, that Beroſus, being better informed of the Fact, found Four hundred and eighty Thouſand Years, and inſerted That Calculation in a Book, which Pliny followed. It might alſo be objected, that the Numbers, in the Paſſage quoted by Euſebius, have been corrupted. However it be, I ſhould chuſe to retain the Correction of Father Hardouin, only with the Alteration, as to Beroſus and Critodemus, of an Hundred and fifty Thouſand, inſtead of Four Hundred and ninety.

I ſhall obſerve, by the way, that Voſſius has not been careful enough, in relating what concerns Beroſus, in the Paſſage of Pliny, which is the Subject of this Remark. He pretends, that Pliny ſays, Beroſus wrote the Hiſtory of what had paſſed during the Space of Four hundred and eighty Years. I quote Voſſius's own Words. "Plinius, Lib. VI, Hiſt. "Nat. Cap. LV, (He ſhould have ſaid Lib. VII, Cap. "LVI.) refert Beroſum tradere memoriam quadrin- "gentorum annorum & octoginta (13). —— Pliny "reports, that Beroſus has given a Hiſtory of Four "hundred (c) Scaliger, ad Græca Euſebii, pag. 407. Voſſius de Hiſt. Græcis. apud Perizonium, in Origin. Babylon.

(6) Marſham, Secul. 17, pag. 474. Edit. Anglic. apud eundem.

(7) See Dodwell. Obſervat. Cyprian. in Append. pag. 36, 37.

(8) Formerly Profeſſor at Franeker. He is now Profeſſor of Greek, Hiſtory, and Eloquence, at Leyden, ſince the laſt Year 1693.

(9) See his Diſſertatio I. de Originibus Babylonicis.

(10) That is to ſay, on the two Paſſages in the Treatiſe de Divinatione, quoted above, num. (1), and (2).

(11) Harduin. in Plin. Tom. 2, pag 134. n. 157.

(12) Beroſus, apud Alexandrum Polyhiſtor. citatum ab Euſeb. in Chronico, pag. 5, 6. Edit. Scalig. 1658.

(13) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Græc. p. 86.

Digitized by Google

of Baruch, touches ſomething of it, but in an obſcure manner, and wants a Commentary, taken out of Herodotus [C].

" hundred and eighty Years." Compare them with the Paſſage of Pliny, and you will find how wide they are from the Truth. Whom ſhall we truſt?

[C] Jeremiah's Letter, concerning the Immodeſty of the Babylonian Women, wants a Commentary, taken out of Herodotus.] This is Jeremiah's Text: " The Women alſo, with Cords about them, ſitting " in the Ways - - - - - but if any of them, drawn " by ſome that paſſeth by, lie with him, ſhe re- " proacheth her Fellow, that ſhe was not thought " as worthy as herſelf, nor her Cord broken (14)." To underſtand this right, we muſt have recourſe to Herodotus, who informs us, That there was a Law at Babylon, which obliged all the Women of the Country to ſeat themſelves near the Temple of Venus, and there to wait for an Opportunity of lying with a Stranger (15). They were all forced to go through this Ceremony once in their Lives. The rich ſat in their Coaches, and had a great number of Domeſtics to attend them: The others had only an Incloſure of Cords; that is, they formed certain Ranks, which were ſeparated from each other with Cords (16), but in ſuch a Manner, that there was Liberty to go in and out, that Strangers might paſs freely in the Intervals, and make choice of her, who beſt ſuited their Taſte. When they had made their Choice, they caſt Money into her Lap, and led her aſide, in order to enjoy her. They put up a Prayer for her to the Goddeſs of the Temple (17). These Women were not ſuffered to refuſe any Stranger, nor the Money given them, how ſmall ſoever was the Sum. They were obliged to follow the firſt Stranger, who threw them Money. Obſerve, that theſe Sums were appointed for Religious Uſes. Γίνεται γὰρ ἱερὸν τοῦτο τὸ ἀργύριον (18). This Money is held ſacred. After the Performance of the Act, they might return to their Houſes; the Devotion, or Expiation, which the Goddeſs required, was accompliſhed. Thoſe, who were beautiful, or agreeable, were ſoon diſpatched, and relieved from Duty: but the ugly waited long for the propitious Hour to ſatisfy the Law. Some were ſo unfortunate, that three or four Years waiting did not end their Noviciate. Καὶ γὰρ τρίτεα καὶ τετράτεα μετεξέτεραι χρόνον μένουσι (19). Some wait three or four Years. This removes all Obſcurity from Jeremiah's Words. Each of theſe Women were kept in a little Cell, bound about with Cords, and did not come out but by breaking the Cord; after which, they inſulted over thoſe, who were yet in the Incloſure. We may apply to thoſe, who were taken out but late, theſe Lines of Catullus:

Tam gratum mihi, quàm ferunt puellæ
Pernici aureolum fuiſſe malum,
Quod zonam ſolvit diu ligatam (20).

Dear as the Golden Apple, in the Race,
Which check'd the flying Atalanta's Pace.
Nor ſought ſhe Gold, but ſeiz'd the ſpecious Bait,
With Joy to end her tedious Virgin State.

Who can ſufficiently bewail the monſtrous Alliance, preſerved by Paganiſm, between the Worſhip of the Gods, and the moſt filthy Paſſions? It might juſtly have been called The eaſy Devotion, if the Comedy had contained more Acts and more Scenes, and if there had not been a diſadvantageous Mixture for the ugly; for three or four Years Patience was an hard Penance for one ſingle Rencounter. Martin del Rio retracted what he had ſaid, on the Words I have quoted from the Book of Baruch. He thought they were to be underſtood of certain Ligatures practiſed to make themſelves loved. See his Magical Diſquiſitions (21).

(14) The Book of Baruch in the Apocrypha, chap. 6.

(15) Herod. lib. 1, c 199.

(16) I am forced to paraphraſe a little, to make Herodotus the better underſtood, who has not been particular enough in his Explanation.

(17) This was Venus: the Babylonians called her Mylitta. Herod. lib. 1, cap. 199.

(18) Ibid.

(19) Ibid.

(20) Catul. Epigr. 2.

(21) Lib. 3, Part 1, Queſt. 3, pag. 13.

BACHOVIUS (REINIER) was born at Cologne, in the Year 1544. You may find his Life, among thoſe of the Civilians of Germany, in Melchior Adam. I ſhall not repeat what Moreri has taken from him: I will only give an account of the Perſecutions, which Bachovius ſuffered, at Leipſic, for his Calviniſm. At firſt he was only ſuſpected, and they were ſatisfied with keeping him out of all public Employs; but, the Times altering, he obtained the Office of a Senator, and afterwards, in the Year 1585, That of an Echevin, and, in three Years more, That of Conſul. The Elector, Chriſtian I, dying in the Year 1591, Bachovius was urged to profeſs Lutheraniſm; and, becauſe he would not, they compelled him to relinquiſh his Offices. He would not hearken to the advice given him to retire, though the danger of a Priſon was repreſented to him; he thought his Flight would give his Enemies a Handle to pronounce, that he eſteemed himſelf guilty: But, in the Year 1593, he was obliged to give way to popular Commotions, and leave Leipſic. He went firſt to Serveſte, and, the Year after, into the Palatinate, having loſt almoſt all his Effects. He met with a kind Protector in the Perſon of the Elector Palatine, and enjoyed ſeveral profitable and honourable Offices at Heidelberg till his Death, which happened the Twenty ſeventh of February 1614 (a). He publiſhed a Book, which diſcovered more of the Divine, than of the Civilian [A]. He left, among other Children, Reinier or Reinhard BACHOVIUS, whom he ſaw promoted, from the Profeſſorſhip of Politics, to That of Civil Law, in the Univerſity of Heidelberg. This Son obtained a great Name among the Civilians of the XVIIth Century [B]. He was particularly remarkable

(a) Taken from Melchior Adam, in the Volume of Civilians.

[A] He publiſhed a Book, which diſcovered more of the Divine, than of the Civilian.] It was a ſort of a Commentary on the famous Heidelberg Catechiſm. Melchior Adam ſpeaks thus of it; " Propagan- " dæ veritatis evangelicæ ſtudio edidit Catechefin " Palatinatus, teſtimoniis Sacræ Scripturæ ac ſen- " tentiis patrum, qui primis quingentis à Chriſto nato " annis in Eccleſia Dei claruerunt, exornatam & illuſtra- " tam, cum epitome vitæ eorundem patrum, & metho- " dica narratione de Conciliis, quorum Canones in " illo Catechetico libello citantur (1). — Out of a ſin- " cere Deſire for the Propagation of Evangelical Truth, " he publiſhed the Catechiſm of the Palatinate, adorned, " and illuſtrated, with the Teſtimonies of ſacred Scrip- " ture, and Opinions of the Fathers, who were fa- " mous, in the Church, for the firſt five Centuries " after CHRIST, with an Epitome of the Lives " of Thoſe Fathers, and a Methodical Account of " the Councils, whoſe Canons are cited in That Ca- " techiſm."

(1) Melch. Adam in vitis Jurisc. p. 472, 473.

[B] Reinier or Reinhard Bachovius —— obtained a great Name among the Civilians.] Conringius calls him, Diſciplinæ juridicæ æternum decus (2). —— The perpetual Ornament of the Civil Law. Vinnius ſays he is, ſubtiliſſimus Juriſconſultus, non tam ſuæ ſententiæ adſtructor, quam deſtructor alienæ (3). —— The moſt able Civilian, not ſo much in advancing Opinions of his own, as in overthrowing thoſe of others. Another ſays, Eo in his, quæ ad ſolidam noſtri juris interpretationem faciunt, acutiorem vix tradit prior ætas (4). - - - The former Age ſcarce produced a greater Interpreter of the Civil Law. Laſtly, the Compliments of accuratiſſimus, ſubtiliſſimus, acutiſſimus, inexorabilis Cenſor (5). - - - The moſt accurate, moſt able, judicious, moſt ſevere Cenſor, are commonly given to him. The Elogy, Vinnius gives him,

(2) Conringius, de auctoritate juris publ. Prudentiæ in Germaniâ apud Magirum Eponym. p. 99.

(3) Vinnius, cap. 11, de Pact. n. 9. apud Magir. Eponym. p. 99.

(4) Hahn. in Dedic. Obſerv. ad Weſenbec. apud eundem.

(5) Schutz, apud eundem.

Digitized by Google

remarkable for his ſkill in confuting, with great Subtility, whatſoever he undertook to oppoſe (b). He was wavering on the Point of Religion; for he ſaid, in confidence, to a Lutheran Profeſſor (c), that, if he might be permitted to read private Lectures of the Civil Law at Straſburg, he would leave his Profeſſorſhip of Heidelberg, and remove to Straſburg. He declared, that he deteſted the Doctrine of abſolute Predeſtination, and that he believed the Corporeal Preſence of JESUS CHRIST in the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, tho' he knew not the manner of it. The Perſon, to whom he diſcovered this Inclination, communicated it to the Magiſtrates of Straſburg, who ordered him to be aſſured he ſhould be welcome. Bachovius removed to that City, with his Library; but, not finding a maintenance there (d), he returned to Heidelberg, where his Friend found him under great Vexation and Sickneſs, in the Year 1629 (e).

(b) See Remark [B].

(c) His Name was Tabor, and he was eſteemed a great Civilian.

(d) Vitæ præſidiis deſtitutus religionem omiſit. - - - - Being diſappointed of a Livelihood he quitted that Religion. Praſchius in Mauſoleo Taboris.

(e) Taken from Praſchius in Mauſoleo Taboris.

agrees but with too many Perſons: There are too many Writers, and Men of great Reaſoning, who have bad Succeſs in proving their own Doctrine, but yet can entirely demoliſh That of others. Men, who engage in Diſputes, are commonly ſtronger in the Offenſive, than in the Defenſive. See what an Elector of Cologne ſaid concerning the Quarrel between the Cordeliers and Jacobins. Father Paul relates it. See the fourth Book of his Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, Page 309 of Mr Amelot de la Houſſaie's Tranſlation.

BACON (ROGER) An Engliſh Franciſcan, lived in the XIIIth Century. He was a great Aſtrologer, Chymiſt, and Mathematician. It was this, undoubtedly, which occaſioned him to be ſuſpected of Magic. There runs a Tradition among the Engliſh, that This Fryar made a Brazen Head, which anſwered all his Queſtions [A]. Selden rejects this as a childiſh Fable [B], and obſerves, that no Hiſtorian has mentioned it, and that Bale, who had defamed Roger Bacon, recanted, and honourably repaired That Injury. Francis Picus ſays, That he read, in one of Bacon's Books, "That a Man might become a Prophet, and fore-tell things to come by means of "the Looking-glaſs, Almucheſi, compoſed according to the Rules of Perſpective; "provided he uſed it under a good Conſtellation, and firſt brought his Body into an "even and temperate State by Chymiſtry (a)." This is agreeable to what John Picus Mirandulanus has maintained, That Bacon only buſied himſelf with Natural Magic (b). This Fryar ſent ſeveral Inſtruments, of his own Invention, to Pope Clement IV (c). Several of his Books have been publiſhed: Specula Mathematica & perſpectiva, Speculum Alchemiæ, De mirabili Poteſtate Artis & Naturæ, Epiſtolæ cum Notis, &c. In all probability, he did not perform any Thing by compact with the Devil; but has only aſcribed to Things a ſurprizing Efficacy, which they could not naturally have. Conſequently, there is reaſon to ſay, that his Writings contain a great deal of Superſtition [C]. He was very much infatuated with Judicial Aſtrology.

(a) Franciſc. Picus, lib. 2. de Prænotione, cap. 1. & lib. 7. cap. 7. cited by Naudé, Apology for Great Men, pag. 490.

(b) Joh. Picus in Præfat. Apolog. cited by Naudé, ibid.

(c) Naudé, ibid. p. 493.

[A] He is ſaid to have made a brazen Head, which anſwered all his Queſtions.] Maïer remarks, That Roger Bacon is commonly introduced upon the Stage, in Comedies, as a great Magician, and that "the "common Report is, that he, and his Fellow-Monk, "Thomas Bungey, wrought ſeven Years to forge "This Head, to know, from it, if there might not "be ſome means to incloſe all England with a thick "Wall and Rampart? Upon which it gave them "an Anſwer, which however they could not rightly "underſtand, becauſe, not expecting to receive it ſo "ſpeedily, they were taken up in other things, "than liſtening to the Oracle (1)." Theſe are popular Stories, which do not deſerve to be confuted. The like are told of Albertus Magnus (2).

(1) Maierus, Symbol. aureæ Menſæ, lib. 10. pag. 483, cited by Naudé, Apology for great Men, pag. 491.

(2) See, above, Remark [F], n 2, of the Article ALBERTUS (MAGNUS).

[B] Selden rejects this as a childiſh Fable.] Theſe are his own Words: "Iſtiuſmodi caput ex ære "conflatum ab eruditiſſimo Rogero Bachone eſt "in ore noſtratis vulgi, ſed non ſine injuria in "illius Matheſin, quam ſummam & à dæmonum "præſtigiis puram monſtrant ſatis illius opera quot-"quot nos legiſſe contigit, & quidquid adverſus eum "uti magum ſeu νεκυόμαντιν J. Balæus inſcitia "dicam, an in optimas artes malitia, editione centuriarum prima ſatis incogitanter effutierat, id bene "monitus omne non modo retractavit, verum in ea "quæ tali & tanto viro digna ſunt poſtrema recog-"nitione etiam prudenter commutavit. Nec quod "hanc vulgi famam adſtruat, habent Annales noſtri "(3). —— Our common People are full of a Story "of a brazen Head, made by the moſt learned Roger Bacon, very much to the Prejudice of his Mathematical Knowledge, which all his Works, which "I have had an Opportunity of reading, demonſtrate "to have been very compleat, and intirely clear from "diabolical Jugglings: and whatſoever J. Bale, either "of Ignorance, or Malice to thoſe excellent Studies, "had, in the firſt Edition of his Centuries, very "inconſiderately thrown out againſt him, as a Ma-"gician, or Necromancer, he has, on better Advice, "in his laſt Edition, not only retracted, but alſo wiſe-"ly ſubſtituted, in it's Place, what becomes the Cha-"racter of ſo great a Man. Nor is there any Au-"thority in our Hiſtory for That common Report." John Dee, an Engliſh Philoſopher and Mathematician, wrote an Apology for Roger Bacon. He mentions it in the Epiſtle dedicatory of his Propædeumata Aphoriſtica de præſtantioribus quibuſdam naturæ virtutibus. See Naudé, in the Four hundred eighty eighth Page of his Apology for great Men.

(3) Selden de Diis Syris Syntagm. 1, cap. 2, pag. 38.

[C] His Writings contain a great deal of Superſtition.] Martin del Rio, who, of all Men in the World, in theſe Matters, is leaſt prodigal of his Abſolution to Perſons ſuſpected, clears Roger Bacon of Magic, and is contented to make him only a ſuperſtitious Author. "Alchindus, ſays he (4), Rogerius "Baconus, & Geber Arabs, multis ſcatent ſuperſti-"tioſis; ideo vetitæ lectionis etiam hos putarim. - - - "Alchindus, Roger Bacon, and Geber, the Arabian, "abound in Superſtition, and therefore, in my Opi-"nion, ought not to be read." John Wierus is not ſo favourable; for he puts Roger Bacon, Petrus Aponenſis, Anſelmus Parmenſis, Cicchus Aſculus, and ſome others, in the ſame Claſs; whereas Martin del Rio treats the three laſt, I have named, as true Magicians, and puts Bacon only in the number of the Superſtitious. "Ab hoc numero removeo, ut de-"moniacos magos, Picatricem Hiſpanum, Anſelmum "Parmenſem, Cicchum Eſculanum, Petrum de Abo-"no, & Corn. Agrippam, & Paracelſum - - - - ho-"mines partim atheos, partim hæreticos (5). - - - - "I exclude from this Number, as diabolical Magi-"cians, Picatrix the Spaniard, Anſelmus Parmenſis, "Cicchus Eſculanus, Petrus de Abono, Cornelius "Agrippa, and Paracelſus, - - - - Men partly Atheiſts, "and partly Heretics." As for the reſt, Wierus agrees perfectly with him; that is, he took Petrus Aponenſis, Anſelmus Parmenſis, &c. for Practiſers of infernal

(4) Diſquiſit. Magicar. lib. 1, cap. 3, pag. 22.

(5) Ibid.

Digitized by Google

Aſtrology [D]. ———The Letter, which he wrote to Pope Clement IV, and which is now in the Library of Lambeth, together with great Encomiums on the Holy Scriptures, mentions a very odd Project; for he there exhorts That Pope to confirm, by Apoſtolical Authority, and to recommend to the whole Church, the Method he had found out to teach every Body Hebrew, Latin, Greek, and Arabic, in a very few Days. He pretended, that the Laity ought not only to read the Scripture, but alſo to underſtand the Originals [E]; and he averred, that his Univerſal Grammar was earneſtly wiſhed for, and had been confirmed by ſeveral Prophecies.

infernal Magic. " Superiorum magorum nugamenta itidem inſulsè ſequuti ſunt Appion Grammaticus, Julianus Apoſtata, Robertus Anglicus apud Helvetios miſere mortuus, Rogerius Bachon, Petrus Aponenſis Conciliator dictus, Albertus Teutonicus, Arnoldus de Villanova, Anſelmus Parmenſis, Picatrix Hiſpanus, vel author libri ad Alfonſum ſub Picatricis nomine, Cicchus Aſculus Florentinus, & plerique alii obſcurioris nominis ſcriptores, deplorati certe ingenii homines. Qui quum ſe magiam tradere pollicentur, non niſi aut deliramenta quædam nulla ratione ſubnixa, aut ſuperſtitiones piis omnibus indignas congeſſerunt (6). - - - - - The Tricks of former Magicians are fooliſhly followed by Appion the Grammarian, Julian the Apoſtate, Robertus Anglicus, who died miſerably in Switzerland, Roger Bacon, Petrus Aponenſis, called the Reconciler, Albertus Teutonicus, Arnoldus de Villâ Novâ, Anſelmus Parmenſis, Picatrix the Spaniard, or the Author of the Book under his Name to King Alphonſus, Cicchus Aſculus the Florentine, and ſeveral other Writers of obſcurer Names, Men of deſperate Minds: Who, inſtead of the Magic they pretend to be Maſters of, have only heaped together either ſome idle Dreams, without any Foundation of Reaſon, or Superſtitions unworthy the Attention of all pious Perſons."

(6) Wier. de Præſtig. lib. 2, cap. 4. He obſerves, that John-Francis Picus, lib. 7, c. 7. refutes Bacon.

[D] He was very much infatuated with Judicial Aſtrology.] John Picus maintains, that the Book, entitled Speculum Aſtrologiæ, which treats of the Lawful and Unlawful Authors, who wrote upon Aſtrology, is a Work of Roger Bacon (7). That Book was condemned by Gerſon (8), and by Agrippa, as exceedingly ſuperſtitious (9). Francis Picus (10), and many others, have condemned it, becauſe the Author maintains in it, with ſubmiſſion to better Judgments, that the Books of Magic ought to be carefully preſerved, becauſe the Time draws near, that, for certain Cauſes not there ſpecified, they muſt neceſſarily be peruſed, and made uſe of on ſome Occaſions. Naudé adds, That Roger Bacon was ſo much addicted to Judicial Aſtrology, that Henry de Haſſia, Gulielmus Pariſienſis, Nicolas Oreſmius - - - - - were obliged to inveigh ſharply againſt his Writings and all the Vanities of Aſtrologers (11).

(7) Lib. 1, adverſ. Aſtrolog. apud Naudé, pag. 526.

(8) Lib. de Libris Aſtrolog. non tolerandis Propoſit. 3 apud Naudé, pag. 525.

(9) In Epiſt. apologeticam eundem, ibid.

(10) Lib. 7. de Prænot. cap. 2. apud eundem, ibid.

(11) Naudé, Apology for great Men, pag. 526.

[E] He pretended, that the Laity were not only obliged to read the Scriptures, but alſo to underſtand the Originals.] As I have not read his Letter, I cannot ſay whether he relies upon this Argument: That a private Perſon, who underſtands neither the Greek nor Hebrew Language, is obliged to depend on the Fidelity and Capacity of Tranſlators: Which, it may be ſaid, is but a weak Foundation, and not to be truſted, to build our Salvation on. However it be, his Pretenſion is ſufficiently extravagant, and contains Impoſſibilities. This is the Judgment of the Author, who mentions this Letter. " Inter Scriptores 13 ſeculi, qui a Whartono pro Scripturis & ſacris vernaculis adducuntur, comparet Rogerus Bacon, cujus epiſtolam de laudibus S. Scripturæ ad Clementem IV. bibliotheca Lambethana tenet. O ſervat autem, Autorem illum portentoſa quædam & impoſſibilia in prolixa illa epiſtola comminiſci. Non enim tantum neceſſarium eſſe docet, ut omnes Chriſtiani ſacram Scripturam tanquam fidei ſuæ fontem & regulam perfectè ſciant, ſed etiam fontes Hebraicos & Græcos ab omnibus conſulendos aſſerit. Et quamvis incredibile videatur, ut ſinguli Chriſtiani linguarum iſtarum notitiam ſibi comparare poſſint, id tamen Baconus factu perquam facile eſſe perſuadere ſuis Lectoribus cupit, imprimis cum ſe Grammaticam, quandam univerſalem inveniſſe glorietur, cujus ope intra pauciſſimos dies quilibet linguam Hebraicam, Græcam, Latinam, & Arabicam, addiſcere queat; & ut omnes, quod legunt, etiam intelligant, ſe opus quoddam manuductorium ſeu præliminare ad promovendam S. Scripturæ intelligentiam editurum ſpondet, enixe Pontificem orans, ut artificium ſuum, ſummis omnium votis expetitum, & frequentibus vaticiniis confirmatum, Apoſtolica autoritate confirmet & univerſæ eccleſiæ commendet, unde innumera in eccleſiam beneficia redundatura minime dubitat (12). - - - - - Among the Writers of the XIIIth Century, who are produced, by Wharton, in favour of tranſlating the Scriptures, and Divine Services, into our own Language, Roger Bacon is cited, whoſe Epiſtle, to Clement IV, on the Praiſes of Sacred Scripture, is now in the Lambeth Library. But he obſerves, that this Author, in that long Epiſtle, has projected ſomething very monſtrous and impracticable. For he holds it to be neceſſary for all Chriſtians, not only to underſtand perfectly the Sacred Scripture, as the Fountain and Rule of their Faith, but alſo to be able to conſult the Hebrew and Greek Originals. And, though it may ſeem incredible, that every Chriſtian ſhould be able to attain the Knowledge of thoſe Languages, yet Bacon would perſwade his Readers, that it may very eaſily be done, eſpecially ſince he pretends to have invented an univerſal Grammar, by the help of which any one may, in a very few Days, make himſelf Maſter of Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and Arabic; and, that all, who read, may underſtand, be promiſes to publiſh an Introductory Work, to make the Sacred Scripture more eaſily underſtood, earneſtly deſiring the Pope, that This Invention of his, ſo very much wiſhed for by all, and confirmed by ſeveral Prophecies, might be eſtabliſhed by his Apoſtolical Authority, and recommended to the whole Church, to which he is ſure it will bring innumerable Advantages."

(12) Acta Erudit. Lipſ. menſis Junii 1691, pag. 279. In the Abſtract of the Book of Archbiſhop Uſher, de Hiſtoriâ dogmate Controverſiæ de Scripturis & Sacris Vernaculis.

BACON (Francis), Lord High Chancellor of England under King James I, was one of the greateſt Men of his Age, and one of thoſe, who beſt underſtood the Imperfections in the Philoſophy of that Time. He ſtudied hard to find out a Remedy for them, and formed very fine Plans for their Reformation [A]. The Public received his Works very favourably. A compleat Edition was made of them at Francfort in Folio, in the Year 1665. The Journal of the Learned did not mention it without beſtowing great Encomiums upon this illuſtrious Chancellor (a). The Treatiſe De Augmentis Scientiarum, which was reprinted at Paris in the Year 1624, is one of This Author's beſt Productions [B]. His Moral and Political Works, tranſlated into French

(a) In the Journal of March 8, 1686. Note, that an Edition of them was promiſed in 6 Volumes in 12mo, in 1684. See Nouvelles de la Republ. des Lettres, for June, 1684, in the Catalogue of new Books, n. 5.

[A] He formed very fine Plans for their Reformation.] See what Mr Baillet has ſaid of them, in the firſt Volume of the Life of Mr Des Cartes (1), and what Gaſſendus has ſaid in particular of Bacon's Logic (2).

(1) Pages 147, 148.

(2) Opera, Tom. 1, p. 62.

[B] The Treatiſe De Augmentis Scientiarum —— is one of This Author's beſt Productions.] See here what Coſtar ſaid of it to Voiture: I have lately read the Books, which Chancellor Bacon wrote about the Advancement of Sciences, in which I found a great many admirable Things (3). He afterwards gives Inſtances of ſome of thoſe Things, and by his Choice ſhews his good Taſte; for indeed they are all fine and great Thoughts. I have been informed, that Bacon's Works were principally made uſe of by Coſtar, and that he took from thence the Ground, or Baſis, of his Collections;

(3) Converſations of Voiture and Coſtar, pag. 173, Edit. of Paris, 1654.

Digitized by Google

French by Baudouin, ſold ſo well, that they had a Run of ſeveral Editions. His Life of Henry VII, King of England, is very much eſteemed (b). By labouring ſo hard for the Republic of Learning, Bacon neglected his Domeſtic Affairs, in ſuch a manner, and plunged himſelf into ſo many Expences, that he died very poor. We ſhall produce two Authorities on this Subject [C]. His Death is placed on the Ninth of April 1626. He lived Sixty ſix Years.

(b) See, in Sir Tho. Pope-Blount pag. 635, the Judgment made of them by Conringius, Boeclerus, &c. there you ſee the Judgment of other Authors, to the Honour of Lord Bacon.

lections; that is, having found ſome Thought in Bacon, which pleaſed him, he wrote it down, and, when he met with any thing, that related to it, in other Books, he added it to that Leaf; after which he needed no other Index, or Common-Place.

[C] We ſhall produce two Authorities for Bacon's Poverty.] The firſt I am indebted for to the Bibliotheque Univerſelle; for the ſecond, to the Sorberiana. The Bibliotheque Univerſelle informs me, that James Howel ſays, in a Letter (4) dated the Sixth of January 1625 (5), — "That Chancellor Bacon "died ſo poor, that he ſcarce left enough to bury "him; which made Howel ſay, That, though he had "a great Genius for Learning, he had no great Judg"ment of Things. However, he imputes this "Chancellor's Poverty either to his Contempt of "Riches, or exceſſive Liberality. Howel ſays, That, "a little before his Death, he wrote a mournful Let"ter to the King, wherein he implored his Aſſiſtance, "For fear he ſhould be reduced in his old Age to Beg"gary, and be obliged to ſtudy only how to live, in"ſtead of living, according to his Wiſh, only in order "to ſtudy. Expreſſions, which ſeem as low to our "Author, as thoſe of another Letter, which he had "wrote before to the Prince of Wales, were pro"phane. He told That Prince, That he hoped, as the "Father had been his Creator, the Son would be his "Redeemer (6)."

(4) The 8th of Sect. 4. of Vol. I.

(5) There muſt be an Error of the Preſs in this Date; for Chancellor Bacon did not die, till Apr. 9. 1626.

Let us ſee, now, what Sorbiere ſays: "Bacon's Na"tural Hiſtory, at Paris 1631, tranſlated, or rather "epitomized, by Peter Amboiſe Eſq; Sieur de la Ma"delaine. The Tranſlator has added an Account of "That Chancellor's Life, and, at the end, a Tranſla"tion of his New Atlantis. Thoſe few excellent "Remarks, I have ſeen, make me wiſh greatly for "an intire and faithful Tranſlation. Mr Boſwel tells "me, he had a particular Intimacy with this extra"ordinary Man, who left him in his Will all his "Papers, which was the only one, which was execu"ted out of a vaſt Number of Legacies, which he "gave by way of Pleaſantry. He bequeathed Four "hundred thouſand Livres to an imaginary College, "which he had given the Plan of, in his New Atlan"tis (7)." This Account does not ſeem to ſay, that Bacon died poor; it rather inſinuates, that he died not a little whimſical (8): But, if you conſider it cloſer, you will find there is a Sign of Indigence in it.

(6) Biblioth. Univerſelle, Tom. 15. pag. 45.

(7) Sorberiana, pag. 41. Edit. of Holland.

(8) See what the Sieur du Maurier ſays concerning the laſt Will of Ceriſantes. Memoirs of Holland, p. 430.

BACOUE (Leo), born at Caſteljaloux in the lower Guienne, forſook his Family Religion, which was That of the Reformed, and became a Franciſcan. He attained afterward to the Prelacy, and was made Biſhop of Glandeve. My Author obſerves, That Father Leo Bacoue is the only converted Huguenot, who was promoted to Epiſcopacy under the Reign of Lewis XIV (a). This Fryar publiſhed a Latin Poem on the Education of a Prince, about the time that the Dauphin was to have Preceptors. He re-printed it at Paris in the Year 1685. The Journal des Sçavans mentions it, the following Year (b).

(a) Rocoles, True Hiſtory of Calviniſm, pag. 166.

(b) January 21*ſt*, pag. 23.

BADIUS (Jodocus), ſirnamed Aſcenſius, becauſe he was born in the Borough (a) of Aſſche near Bruſſels, was in much Eſteem for the great number of Books, which he printed and commented. He was born in the Year 1462. He performed his firſt Studies at Ghent; he continued them in Italy, and made a great progreſs in the Greek Language at Ferrara, under Baptiſta Guarini. He ſettled at Lyons, and taught the Latin and Greek Tongues there as well in public as in private. Afterwards he removed to Paris, and ſet up a Printing-Houſe there, which gained him great Reputation [A]. From thence came forth ſeveral Claſſic Authors, with his Explications and Notes [B]. He beſtowed the ſame Pains on ſome Modern Authors, as Petrarch, Politian, Laurentius Valla, Baptiſta Mantuanus, &c. He publiſhed alſo ſome Books of his own both in Proſe and in Verſe (b) [C]; and it is agreed, by good Judges, that, if his Domeſtic Cares had not obliged him to write as much, or more, for Gain, than for Glory, he would have ſucceeded much better than he did [D]. Eraſmus happened

(a) Moreri was wrong to call it a Houſe. The Author, whom he quotes, makes uſe of the Word Municipium. Geſner gives Badius the Sirname of Gandenſis.

(b) Bx Valerii Andreæ Biblioth. Belg. pag. 588, 589.

[A] He ſet up a Printing-Houſe, at Paris, which gained him great Reputation.] Father du Moulinet informs us, That Jodocus Badius was the firſt, who brought into France the round Characters; and that, before him, all the French Printers made uſe of the Gothic Characters. About the Year 1500, he came from Italy into France, as well to teach Greek in Paris, as to ſet up a very fine Printing-Houſe there, which he called Prælum Aſcenſianum, Aſcenſius's Preſs (1). Father du Moulinet forgets, that Badius ſtopt a very conſiderable Time at Lyons, before he came to Paris. See the Remark [H]. As for the reſt, Mr Chevillier has proved, againſt That Father, That Printing in France did not begin with Gothic Letters *, and that Roman Letters were uſed there, before Badius's Time (2); And farther, that tho' a great Number of His Editions were printed in a good Letter —— He printed ſeveral alſo in Gothic (3).

(1) Journal des Sçavans, of Jan. 31, 1684, p. 38.

(2) Chevill. Origin of Printing at Paris, p. 54.

(3) Ibid. p. 168.

[* Gabriel Naudé, in the ſeventh Chapter of his Addition to the Hiſtory of Lewis XI, pag. 317, and 318, of the Edition of 1630, pretends, that it was The Workmen, who, leſs deſirous of Honour than Profit, introduced the Gothic Character; but I know not how he underſtands This; ſince many of the old Editions, which we have in ſquare Letters, are no leſs charged with Abbreviations, than the Gothic, which ſucceeded them. Rem. Crit.]

[B] He printed a great many Claſſic Authors, with his Explications and Notes.] Valerius Andreas gives a Liſt of them, wherein we find Horace, Perſius, Terence, Juvencus, Theocritus, Salluſt, Valerius Maximus, Quintilian, Aulus Gellius, and ſeveral Treatiſes of Cicero. "Commentarii verò, five ſa"miliares enarrationes, circumferuntur, in Horatium "Flaccum, &c (4). —— There are alſo handed about "Commentaries, or familiar Explanations, on Horace, "&c." The Liſt of Swertius is ſtill larger, and mentions Ovid, and Seneca's Tragedies (5).

(4) Valer. Andreas, Bibl. Belg. pag. 589.

(5) Swert. in Athen. Belg.

[C] He publiſhed ſome Books of his own, both in Proſe, and in Verſe.] Valerius Andreas mentions theſe following: Pſalterium B. Mariæ, Epigrammatum liber, Navicula ſtultarum mulierum, De Grammatica, De conſcribendis Epiſtolis, Vita Thomæ à Kempis.

[D] If his domeſtic Cares had not interrupted him, ---- he would have ſucceeded much better than he did.] Eraſmus ſpeaks very freely of this; "Nec in"feliciter omnino ceſſit conatus Badio; adeſt illi fa"cilitas non indocta, felicius tamen ceſſurus, niſi curæ "domeſticæ, reique parandæ ſtudium, interrupiſſent happened to compare him, in some things, to Budæus; and it can scarce be credited, what a Clamour was raised at Paris against That Comparison [E]. Those, who place Badius's Death in the Year 1526, are mistaken [F]. He was incumbered with a very great Family, and it is said, in his Epitaph, That, in all probability, the Number of his Children would have equalled That of his Books, had he made as early a beginning in the one, as he did in the other [G]; but that he had been much longer an Author, than a married Man. I would not warrant This to be exactly true [H]. His

Digitized by Google

(6) Erasmus, in Ciceroniano, pag. 73.

" otium illud Musis amicum, hujus laudis candidato " necessarium (6). —— Nor was Badius's Attempt " unsuccessful; his Manner is easy, and not unlearned: " But he would have succeeded much better, if his " domestic Cares, and Endeavour for a Maintenance, " had not interrupted that Quiet, which the Muses " require in one, who writes for Fame." He passes

(7) The 28th of the 22d Book, pag. 1172, 1173.

the same Judgment in one of his Letters (7). " Aliis " liberum erit de Badio judicare quod volunt; ego " semper illum habui in eorum numero, quorum nec " eruditionem, nec ingenium, nec eloquentiam possis " contemnere: tametsi non dissimulo illum longe ma- " jorem fuisse futurum, si fortuna benignior otium ac " tranquillitatem studiorum suppeditasset. ----- Others " may judge as they please of Badius; for my own part, " I have always esteemed him in the number of those, " whose Learning, Understanding, and Eloquence, are " by no means contemptible: though I cannot deny but " these would have appeared to much greater Advan- " tage, if an easier Fortune had allowed his Studies " a greater Tranquillity." Brixius, after having given a very mean Idea of Badius, says, he studied much more for Gain, than to become Eloquent. " Scio " Badium non esse prorsus ἄμουσον. Verum qualis " qualis est talem se certe hominibus nostris hacte- " nus probavit, ut quoties de doctis serino inter do- " ctos incidit de Badio plane ἀδείς λόγος. Illi, " quod non inficiaris, quæstus tantum non eloquentia

(8) Brixius, in Epistolâ ad Erasmum inter Epistolas Erasmi, 27. lib. 22, pag. 1166.

" scopus est (8). -------- I know Badius is not " altogether unlearned. But, let him be what he will, " the Appearance he has hitherto made in the learned " World is such, that, whenever Men of Learning " speak of others of their own Class, not a Syllable " is mentioned of Badius. It cannot be denied but " that his Aim was Gain, and not Eloquence"

[E] Erasmus compared him ---- with Budæus; and it can scarce be expressed, what a Clamour was raised, at Paris, against That Comparison.] Brixius, who was Erasmus's Friend, wrote to him a Letter on This Subject, part of which I have quoted. He told him plainly, That the learned Men of Paris were very angry to find, that he had, in some measure, preferred Badius to Budæus. " Quo major indig- " natio nostrorum omnium animos subit, quod hâc " in opinione, justâ de causâ quum sint, existiment " illum abs te non tantum Badio collatum, sed & " postpositum. —— Ea una commissura adeo nostris " omnibus invidiosa est, ut multorum tibi benevolo- " rum animos à tui studio abalienarit, ob id quod " existimant Budæum cum Badio commissum perinde " esse ac si quis Achillem cum Thersite committeret

(9) Ibid. p. 1168.

" (9). —— All our People have conceived so much the " greater Indignation against you, to find one, for whom " they have so just a Value, not only compared, but " even postponed, by you, to Badius. —This one Compa- " rison has so disgusted every Body here, that it has " drawn off a great many of your Well-Wishers from " the Respect they had for you, who look upon your " comparing Budæus with Badius to be just like " matching Achilles with Thersites." Erasmus justi- fied himself, and made it appear, that he had very evidently given Budæus the Superiority. He wonder- ed they had not perceived it in France; or, if they had, how they came to make such an out-cry, and compose so many satirical Verses. Demiror isthic esse doctos, qui hæc non videant, & si vident, magis etiam demiror esse qui vociferentur, qui maledicis Versiculis rem dignam existiment (10). This Affair became so much talked of, that it reached the Ears of Francis I.

(10) Erasm. Epist. 28. lib. 22, pag. 1172.

" Si verus est rumor, sic fremunt amici Budæi, quasi " in cineres patris ac matris illius imminxerim. Cla- " mant ô Cœlum! ô terra! Budæum cum Badio? " Clamant me invidere gloriæ Budæi, meque multis " epigrammatis dilacerant. ----- Causa delata est & " ad Regis cognitionem. Volenti cognoscere dissidii

(11) Ibid. Epist. 72, lib. 20, pag. 1030.

" causam, dictum est Budæum me taxasse in loco " quodam, eo me offensum quæsisse vindictam, eum- " que cum Badio contulisse (11). ------- If Report " speaks true, the Friends of Budæus are as much in- " censed, as if I had offered the greatest Indignity to " the Ashes of their Father and Mother. They cry " out to Heaven and to Earth, What! Budæus with " Badius*! They charge me with envying* Budæus's " Glory, and lash me with their many stinging Epi- " grams. ------ The Matter is brought even to the " Knowledge of the King. To whom, on Inquiry into " the Cause of this Dissention, they pretend, that Bu- " dæus has somewhere censured me, which has pro- " voked me to take this Revenge, by comparing him " with Badius." If Erasmus designed to honour Badius by That Comparison, he was very much mistaken; for this poor Man was wounded to the Heart, every time Complaints were made of the Injustice done to Budæus. It had been better for Badius, if Erasmus had not thought of him. The offence was removed in the second Edition.

[F] Those, who place his Death in the Year 1526, are mistaken.] Swertius was content to say, that he found Badius had lived to the Year 1526 (12). This indeed leaves it doubtful, whether or no he lived beyond that Year; but he does not pretend to affirm, that he did not live beyond it. Konig, instead of expressing himself thus cautiously, affirms, that Badius died in the Year 1526. And others have said it after him. But let us consider a little Brixius's Letter, which I have quoted; it was written in the Year 1528, and mentions Badius as living. Valerius Andreas says nothing at all concerning his Death. Moreri places it about the Year 1529, or 1530. But he is mistaken; for it is very well known, that Erasmus rejoiced, in a Letter of the Month of September 1530, (13), that the current Report about the Death of Badius was not true: And we have an Edition of the Epistles of Longolius, published by Badius in the Year 1533. Gesner observes, in his Bibliotheca, printed in the Year 1545, that Badius had been dead about ten Years. He was not dead, when the Book of Alphonsus à Castro, against Heresies, was printed at Paris; for Badius was one of those, who printed it in the Year 1534 (14). The Title Page of Peter Lombard, in Epistolas Pauli, has these words; pro hæredibus Jodoci Badii 1535, Mense Decembri (15). So that he was not living in the Month of December 1535.

(12) Swert. in Athen. Belgic. pag. 490.

(13) Letter 23d of Book 25th, pag. 1373.

(14) See la Caille, Hist. of Printing, pag. 74.

(15) Cheville, Origin of Printing at Paris, p. 138.

[G] The Number of his Children would have equalled those of his Books, had he made as early a Beginning in the one, as he did in the other.] This Thought was the Subject of the following Epitaph, composed for him.

Hic, liberorum plurimorum qui parens,
Parens librorum plurimorum qui fuit,
Situs Jodocus Badius est Ascensius.
Plures fuerunt liberis tamen libri,
Quod jam senescens cœpit illos gignere,
Ætate florens cœpit hos quod edere (16).

Here lies Jodocus Badius Ascensius,
Father of many Children,
Author of many Books:
His Books were more numerous than his Children,
Because he commenced Author very early,
Father very late.

(16) Swert. in Athen. Belgic. pag. 490, relates this Epitaph, as made by a Friend of Badius. He should have said by his Grandson. See the following Remark.

(17) You may read it in la Caille's History of Printing, pag. 75

This is not the Epitaph, now to be seen on the Tomb of Jodocus Badius, in the Charnel-House of the Collegiate Church of St Benedict at Paris (17), where he was buried (18). If we may rely upon the Truth of these Lines, he followed the Maxim of most of the Learned, and married late. See the Book entituled Valesiana (19).

(18) Rocoles, True History of Calvinism, pag. 213.

[H] He had been much longer an Author, than a married Man ------ I would not warrant this to be exactly true] The Sieur de la Caille is the Cause of this

(19) Pag. 5. Edit. Amst.

Digitized by Google

His Son Conradus BADIUS was born at Paris, and ſettled at Geneva. He became a very good Proteſtant, and demonſtrated it in the Koran of the Cordeliers. He tranſlated the firſt Book of it, and compiled the ſecond, and adorned both with Marginal Notes, which are very ſevere. He was both a Printer and an Author, and made ſome Attempts in French Poetry. He wrote ſomething of this kind againſt Noſtradamus (c). Three of his Daughters were married to famous Printers [I]. I was a long time at a Loſs to know, what a certain Modern Author means, by ſeeming to charge Henry Stephens with having cenſured Jodocus Badius [K]. I have nothing to ſay concerning one Conradus BADIUS, who died, with all his Family, of the Plague at Orleans, where he was Miniſter, in the Year 1562 (d), and was a Friend of Theodorus Beza from his Youth (e).

(c) Du Verdier Vauprivas, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 237.

(d) Beza, Hiſtory of Churches, lib. 6, pag. 149.

(e) Ant. Fayus in Vitâ Theod. Bezæ, p. 45.

Mr Chevillier, who collected ſeveral Elogies on Jodocus Badius, aſſerts, that he had been Profeſſor of Belles Lettres in the Univerſity of Paris, and afterwards in the City of Lyons, where he read the Poets in Public (f).

(f) Chevil. Original of Printing at Paris, pag. 137.

There is certainly a Miſtake in the Title of One of the Books, which Valerius Andreas aſcribes to him [L].

this Doubt: he ſays, That Badius, at his Return from Italy, taught ſeveral Gentlemen in Lyons, and compoſed, and printed, a great many good Books, at the Houſe of John Trechſel, Printer at Lyons, whoſe Daughter, Thelif Trechſel, he married ----- (20). It was to him, continues this Author, that the learned Robert Gaguin, the twentieth General of the Order of the Trinitarians, who knew his Merit and Capacity for Correcting of the Preſs, wrote to print his Works, as appears by the Letter of That General to him, prefixed to his Epiſtles in Quarto, in the Year 1498. This obliged Badius to go to Paris about the Year 1499, or 1500, after the Death of his Father-in-law, both to teach the Greek Tongue there, and to reſtore the Art of Printing, which began to decline. It appears from this Paſſage, that Badius was a married Man in 1500. He was then but Thirty eight Years of Age; therefore it cannot be ſaid, that he deferred his Marriage 'till he was old; jam ſeneſcens cœpit illos gignere: And yet his Grandſon, Henry Stephens, affirms it: for Henry Stephens is the Author of That Latin Epitaph, and of a Greek Epitaph, which turns on the ſame Thought. " Jodoco Badio elegantiſſimis " hiſce Epitaphiis parentavit ex filiâ nepos Henricus " Stephanus, quæ propter elegantiam non potui non " adſcribere (21). ------ Henry Stephens his Grand- " ſon, by his Daughter, paid his Duty to Jodocus " Badius in theſe elegant Epitaphs, which, for their " Beauty, I could not forbear tranſcribing." The Epitaphs may be ſeen in Henry Stephens Book, de Artis Typographicæ Querimoniâ. Mr Almeloveen has publiſhed both of them, with another of the ſame Author in Latin, in his curious Diſſertation De Vitis Stephanorum.

(20) Hiſtory of Printing, pag. 72, 73.

(21) Almeloveen de Vitis Stephanorum, pag. 28.

[I] Three Daughters of J. Badius were married to famous Printers.] Catherine Badius, a Daughter of Jodocus, was married to Michael Vaſcoſan (22). Perrette Badius, another Daughter of Jodocus, was the Wife of Robert Stephens (23). Jane Badius, the other Siſter, married John de Roigny (24), who made uſe of the Mark of his Father-in-law, and jet the Prelum Aſcenſianum on his Editions for above Twenty five Years (25). Perrette underſtood Latin, which ſhe learnt, either by her Father's teaching her, as Mr Almeloveen believes (26), or by hearing People ſpeak it in her Huſband's Houſe. Each of theſe Opinions is probable: Thoſe who are of the latter, may take it from this, that a Siſter of H. Stephens, Daughter of Perrette Badius, learned Latin without the Aſſiſtance of a Grammar, and only by uſe. For Robert Stephens's Houſe was always full of People, who ſpoke nothing but Latin; ſo that the very Maid-Servants acquired That Language. See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Henry Stephens, prefixed to Aulus Gellius, where you will find theſe words, directed to his Son: " Aviæ tuæ eorum quæ " Latinè dicebantur (niſi rarius aliquod vocabulum " intermiſceretur) haud difficilior erat intellectus, " quàm ſi dicta ſermone Gallico fuiſſent. Quid de " ſuperſtite ſorore mea, amita autem tua, nomine " Katharina, dicam? Illa quoque eorum quæ Latine " dicuntur interpretem non deſiderat: multa vero & " ipſa eodem loqui ſermone poteſt; & quidem ita " (licet nonnumquam impingat) ut ab omnibus intel- " ligatur. Unde illi hæc Latinæ linguæ cognitio? " Artem certè Grammaticam haud magiſtrum habuit, " nec alius illi hac in re quàm uſus præivit. --- Your " Grandmother underſtood as readily what was ſpoke " in Latin, except now and then ſome uncommon Ex- " preſſions, as ſhe did her own Mother-Tongue. Your " Aunt Katharine alſo, the only Siſter I have now " living, never needed an Interpreter for that Lan- " guage. She even ſpoke it pretty well herſelf, and, " though not without ſome Slips, yet ſo as to be eaſily " underſtood. Nor was ſhe taught this by Grammar, " but only by uſe." He explains what he means by this uſe, viz. that the Printers and Correctors of Robert Stephens ſpoke nothing but Latin.

(22) La Caille, Hiſtory of Printing, pag. 102.

(23) Ibid. pag. 96.

(24) Ibid. pag. 105.

(25) Chevill. Hiſtory of Printing, p. 138.

(26) Almeloveen, ubi ſupra.

[K] I was a long time at a Loſs to know what a certain modern Author means, by ſeeming to charge Henry Stephens with having cenſured Jodocus Badius] This perplexity was occaſioned for want of underſtanding a Period of the Sieur de la Caille; which, I think, I have, at laſt, apprehended. That Period runs thus: " Here is his Epitaph, inſer- " ted by Henry Stephens in his Book de Artis Typo- " graphicæ Querimonia, printed by the ſame Stephens " in 1569, wherein are ſeveral Complaints addreſſed " to the ſaid Badius, both in Greek and Latin (27)." At firſt I thought it meant, that Henry Stephens had reproached Badius very much, both in Greek and Latin, for having ſpoiled the Trade: But, conſidering that he was his Grandſon, and finding nothing againſt Badius in the Querimonia Artis Typographicæ, which Mr Almeloveen has publiſhed, I could not tell what to think. Mr Almeloveen having aſſured me, that he had cut nothing off from the Querimonia, occaſioned my reading the whole Period over again; upon which I now apprehend, that theſe words, both in Greek and Latin, moſt probably relate, not to Complaints, but to Epitaph. At laſt I have had an Opportunity of conſulting the very Work of Henry Stephens (28). I found in it, I. A Preface in Proſe, againſt the Ignorance of Printers. II. A Poem, wherein Printing is introduced, complaining of it's decay. III. The Epitaphs, both in Greek and Latin, and ſome in Latin only, of ſome learned Printers. But I could no where meet with any Complaints, either againſt Badius, or addreſſed to him; ſo that this Paſſage of the Sieur la Caille is a Riddle to me, if it is not a miſtake. It is not to be wondered, that dead Languages, which admit of ſuch a Variety of Tranſpoſitions, ſhould be ſo obſcure to us; when our own will not a little puzzle us, by altering the uſual Order of the Words.

(27) La Caille, Hiſtory of Printing, pag. 74.

(28) Mr Almeloveen, who lends his Books ſo obligingly, ſent me the Artis Typographicæ Querimonia.

[L] There is certainly a Miſtake in the Title of One of the Books, which Valerius Andreas aſcribes to him.] He makes him Author of a Work, entitled, Navicula ſtultarum Mulierum (29), but notes neither the Place, nor Time, of the Impreſſion: he is ſatisfied, in regard to this, with copping the Catalogue of Swertius. I have been informed (30), that Badius publiſhed, in 1513, a Book, entitled, Navis ſtultiferæ Collectanea ab Jodoco Badio Aſcenſio vario carminum genere, non ſine eorundem familiari explanatione, conflata. It is probable, that the Book, which Valerius Andreas mentions, is the ſame with This; or, at moſt, that it differs only as a Part from the Whole. I am opinion, likewiſe, that the Work, publiſhed by Badius, in 1513, is taken from That, which is entitled, Navis Narragoniæ, written by Sebaſtian Brandt (31). Native of Strasbourg, Profeſſor of Law, and a good Poet for thoſe times, viz. the End of the XVth Century. See, in Geſner's Bibliotheque (32), what the Navis Narragonia, or Navis ſtultorum, is.

(29) See Remark [C].

(30) By M. de la Croſe, a Dutch Miniſter.

(31) Or T tio.

(32) Geſne Biblioth. fol. 593.

Digitized by Google

BADUEL (CLAUDIUS) in Latin Baduellus, lived in the XVIth Century. He was of the Reformed Religion, as appears from his Latin Tranſlation of ſome Sermons of John Calvin, which he publiſhed at Geneva; as alſo from the Acts of the Martyrs, which he printed in Latin, at the ſame Place, in the Year 1556 (a). I am very certain, he taught the Belles Lettres, in the College of Nîmes; for we find, among his printed Works, Oratio ad inſtituendum Gymnaſium Nemauſenſe de Studiis Literarum; and another Piece, intituled, de Collegio & Univerſitate Nemauſenſi. He wrote well in Latin, and was a good Orator, a good Father, and a good Chriſtian. Theſe two laſt Qualifications appeared very plainly in his Epiſtola paræneticæ ad Paulum filium de vero Patrimonio & Hæreditate, quam Chriſtiani Parentes ſuis Liberis debent relinquere. I refer you, for the Titles of his other Books, to the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque: But I ſhall ſay ſomething of a Diſcourſe he publiſhed on the Marriage of Men of Learning [A]: and I ſhall ſhew, that the Epitomizers of Geſner have been guilty of ſome Omiſſions; for they take no Notice of Baduel's having compoſed, in Latin, a Funeral Oration on the Lady de St Veran (b). The Catalogue of the Oxford Library aſcribes to him ſome Notes on the Apocrypha, printed at London, in the Year 1660.

(a) Friſii Epitome Bibl. Geſneri, p. 150.

(b) She was Daughter of the firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Toulouſe. This Funeral Oration, tranſlated into French, by Charles Rozel, was printed at Lyons, in 1546. See the Biblioth. of du Verdier.

[A] I ſhall ſay ſomething of a Diſcourſe he publiſhed on the Marriage of Men of Learning] This is the Title of it: De Ratione Vitæ ſtudioſæ ac literatæ in Matrimonio collocandæ & degendæ. It was printed at Lyons, by Sebaſtian Gryphius, in 1544, in 4to, and at Leipſic in 1577, and 1581 (1). This laſt Edition contains One hundred forty three Pages, in 8vo. A Profeſſor at Leipſic, whoſe Name was Gregory Breſman, has added a Preface, very much in Commendation of the Author, and his Book. It is certainly a very judicious Performance, and full of excellent Morality. Baduel dedicated it to Mr de Maſcencal (2), firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Toulouſe. He ſets off, in it, the Excellency of Matrimony, and ſhews the Diſorders which uſually attend a ſingle State; and refutes thoſe, who object, that Matrimony is inconvenient to Men of Learning, by interrupting their Studies, and not allowing them the Liberty of applying wholly to their Books. He tells us (3), he had made choice of this State himſelf, and gives ſome Advice to thoſe, inclined to follow his Example, for the chuſing a proper Wife, very earneſtly exhorting to join the Pleaſures of an agreeable Marriage with the Profeſſion of Letters. He ſays, that William Bigot, a Perſon well ſkilled in Phyſic and Philoſophy, had promiſed a Treatiſe to prove Matrimony neceſſary; that is, according to the Sentiment of Baduel, in order to a perfect Enjoyment of Health. "Gulielmus Bigotius, "ſays he (4), qui in Medicis ac Phyſicis diligenter "verſatur, ſummam harum rerum habet ſcientiam, "aliquando promiſit ſe de conjunctione Matrimonii "uſuque ejus neceſſario ſcripturum. Neceſſarium (o-"pinor) intelligit, ſine quo homo non poteſt vale-"re. Itaque eam partem Naturæ, conjugium ad "bonam Corporis conſtitutionem appetentis, nos ei "explicandam relinquemus: in quo valde prudenter "faciet, ſi eam commoditatem ex legitima uteris "conjunctione, ejuſque moderatâ conſuetudine, pe-"tendam eſſe doceat: & ea incommoda oſtendat "quæ ex liberis illis ac diſſolutis ſcortationibus hu-"manis corporibus multa & magna afferuntur. - - - - "Therefore this Part of Nature, ſays he, which re-"quires Matrimony, in order to a healthful Conſti-"tution, I ſhall leave him to explain: In which "he will do very prudently, if he demonſtrates this "Advantage to ariſe from a lawful and moderate "Uſe of Copulation; and at the ſame time deſcribes "the many, and great, Diſorders, the Body muſt be "ſubject to, from a licentious and diſſolute Courſe of "Venery." To give a juſt Idea of this Work, I ſhall borrow the Words of a Profeſſor of Leipſic, who procured a ſecond Edition of it. He remarks, that nothing is more neceſſary in the Conduct of Life, than to conſult the Rules of Prudence; but that there are few Perſons, who think of doing this, even in the Queſtion concerning Matrimony, which is the moſt difficult of all to determine with Judgment (5). The Impatience of Youth hurries us into it, without liſtening to any Advice, but That of Paſſion or Intereſt, &c. and yet the falſe Steps, which are made in it, are entirely irreparable. "Plerique vigentis A-"doleſcentiæ annis, adds he (6), cum ineſt maxima "conſilii imbecilitas atque imperitia, cœco quodam "amoris impetu commoti ac fervore juvenili inflam-"mati, ante implicantur conjugio, quàm quod illud "vitæ genus ſit judicare potuerunt. Multi, formæ "venuſtate allecti, plures dotis magnitudine ineſ-"cati, neque pauci ſplendore generis faſcinati, his "autoribus & conſuaſoribus agunt omnia. - - - - - "Quos, meo quidem judicio, ſatius erat, cum ani-"mis ſuis conſiderantes illud Publii Syri, deliberan-"dum eſt diu, quod ſtatuendum eſt ſemel; & hoc "item alterum, Deliberare utilia, Mora eſt tutiſſi-"ma; diu ſecum multumque deliberare, atque ad "naturæ ſuæ rationemque vitæ inſtitutum conſilium "conferre omne, præſertim cum in deligendo ma-"trimonio, ſi quid erroris acciderit (accidit autem "ſæpiſſimè) non quod aliis in rebus facere in promp-"tu eſt, cum quis fortè ſe erraſſe intelligit rationem "& conſiliorum mutationem inſtituere cuiquam ſit "integrum: ſed aut ſtultitiæ pœnam luere, aut ne-"gligentiæ culpam præſtare oporteat ſempiternam. "- - - - - Moſt Perſons, in the Prime of their Youth, "and before they are at Years of Diſcretion, puſhed "on by a juvenile Heat, and the blind Paſſion of "Love, hurry into Matrimony, before they can make "any Judgment of That State of Life. Many are cap-"tivated with the Charms of Beauty, more with thoſe "of Fortune, and ſome with the Splendor of a "Family, and are led by no other Views but theſe. "- - - Who, in my Opinion, would do much better, by "conſidering That Saying of Publius Syrus; We ought "long to deliberate on what we can determine but "once; and That other, To deliberate on Queſtions "of Importance, is the moſt ſafe Delay; to "deliberate again, and again, and conſult their own "Tempers, and the Nature of That State, in the moſt "particular Manner; becauſe, if we commit any Miſtake "in marrying (which is too often the Caſe), we can-"not remedy it, as we do thoſe in other Matters, by "changing our Methods and Counſels; but muſt ſit "down by what we have done, and either do Pe-"nance for our Folly, or continue our Fault of Care-"leſſneſs, as long as we live." It being therefore ſo neceſſary, and at the ſame time ſo unuſual, to enter, with Prudence, into This State, it was thought of ſignal Service to the Public, to reprint Baduel's Book, which contains the beſt Inſtructions in the World, and particularly adviſes to apply, by earneſt Prayer, to the Holy Ghoſt, for Aſſiſtance. The Author of the Preface holds it neceſſary to begin with this, when we deliberate on a Point ſo nice and hazardous. "Qui hanc vitæ conjugalis viam ingreſ-"ſuri ſunt, operam ante omnia dabunt, ut Deum "ſibi conſiliarium, atque in rei tam arduæ conſul-"tatione, atque affectione moderatorem, piâ ac re-"ligiosâ nominis divini imploratione adſciſcant. - - - - "de quâ unius & trini Dei, in coëundo conjugio ar-"denti invocatione diligenter facienda, præter com-"plura alia prudentiæ & circumſpectionis & cau-"tionis in hoc vitæ genere conſtituendo, præcepta "ſedulò tenenda, piè, ſapienter, & erudite admo-"dum in hoc quem tibi, Lector benevole, de alie-"no largientes offerimus, Libello diſſeritur. - - - They, "who enter upon This Way of conjugal Life, ſhould "firſt of all endeavour, by Devotion and Prayer, to "prevail with God to be their Counſellor and Con-"ductor in ſo difficult an Affair. - - - - - Concerning "which earneſt Application to the triune God, be-"ſides ſeveral other Rules of Prudence and Circum-"ſpection to be conſtantly obſerved in this State of "Life, the Book, which I preſent the Reader with, "at another's Expence, does piouſly, prudently, and "learnedly

(1) It was this made Mr Konig falſly believe, that Baduel compoſed it in 1581. See his Biblioth. Vetus & Nova.

(2) Ad Joh. Maſſencalum.

(3) De Ratione Vitæ ſtudioſæ in Matrim. collocand. pag. 3.

(4) Ibid. p. 47, 48.

(5) In deliberatione de contrahendo Matrimonio, quæ eſt una omnium difficillima. Greg. Breſmanus Præf. ad Lector.

(6) Gregor. Breſmanus, Præfatione ad Lector.

Digitized by Google

" learnedly treat." This Work of Baduel has been translated into French, by Guy de la Gard (7); but, if he has not succeeded better in his Translation of the Book, than he has in That of the Title, it cannot be very valuable. He intitles his Version, A very useful Discourse of the Dignity of Matrimony, and the virtuous Conversation of Men of Learning. It was printed at Paris, in 1548, in 8vo.

(7) Inferior Lieutenant in the Seneschalship of Provence, in the Jurisdiction of Arles. See the Biblioth. de la Croix du Maine, pag. 134. and that of du Verdier, pag. 532.

BAGNI (JOHN-FRANCIS) lived in the XVIIth Century. He was raised to the Dignity of a Cardinal by Pope Urban VIII, in the Year 1629, on the Recommendation of France (a). Mr Moreri speaks of him very largely, but not without committing Mistakes, which it will be proper to take Notice of [A]. This Cardinal went through more Employs than Mr Moreri mentions, as will appear in our Remarks. One thing has been said of him, in the Sorberiana, which is false on several Accounts [B]. He had a Brother, who was called the Marquis of (a) Ministry of the Cardinal Richelieu, at the beginning of the Year 1630.

[A] Mr Moreri speaks of him —— and commits Mistakes, which it will be proper to take notice of.] He says, I. That Cardinal Bagni was of the House of the Counts' de Guidi. This is pretending, that the Name of his Family was de Guidi: But he should not have separated the Name of Guidi from That of Bagni or à Balneo. Naudé never divides them. II. That he was born the fourth of October, 1573. This does not agree with an Author, whose exactness is infinitely more to be depended on, than That of Moreri (1). This Author places the Death of Cardinal Bagni on the Twenty fourth of July, 1641, and makes him Seventy six Years old. So that, consequently, he was born in the Year 1565. III. That Clement VIII sent Bagni into France, to congratulate Henry IV, on his Marriage with Mary de Medicis. This is not true. Mr Moreri did not understand Thomasin, whom he quoted. He might read, in this Author, that Cardinal Aldrobrandini, Legate of Clement VIII, in France, as well on the Account of the Marriage of Henry IV, as of the Peace with Savoy, had John-Francis Bagni in his Retinue. And here is the whole Amount of this pretended Deputation. IV. Moreri multiplies Bagni's Nunciatures beyond the Truth: He will have it, that he was twice sent Nuncio into France, once under Gregory XV, and once under Urban VIII; and farther, that Gregory XV sent him Nuncio into Flanders. Thomasin does not go so far, but is satisfied with saying, that Bagni was sent to Paris by Gregory XV, in the Quality of Nuncio-Extraordinary; and that he went from Paris into Flanders to act there as Ordinary Nuncio. Gassendus does not go so far as Thomasin; he says, that Bagni, going as Nuncio to Brussels, passed through Paris, and saw there, incognito, all that was to be seen. Transiit sub id tempus (that is, in the Month of July, 1621). " Parisiis memoratus supra Vicelegatus à " Balneo, Pontificis Nuncius DESTINATUS in Flandriam, qui cum vellet singularia quæque in urbe " spectare, sed tamen quasi INCOGNITUS, commodum profectò convaluit Peireskius, qui ipsum variè " deduceret ad eruditos, ad Musæa, ad opera omnia " rariora (2). —— About the same time, the Vicelegate Bagni, before-mentiond, passed through Paris, " to go to Flanders, being appointed Nuncio there by " the Pope, who desiring to see, incognito, every Thing " remarkable in that City, Peiresc was luckily so " well recovered, that he introduced him successively " to all the learned Men, and shewed him the Libraries, and every Thing that was curious." I know very well, that he was Nuncio in France; but it was at another time. The same Gassendus, speaking of the illustrious Men, with whom Peiresc was become acquainted, in the Year 1614, says This of our John-Francis Bagni. " Unus fuit Joannes-Franciscus Vi" dius à Balneo, Patracensis Archiepiscopus, & per " ea tempora Avenionensis Vicelegatus. Singularis " enim deinceps necessitudo intercessit, seu donec ille " Avenione degit, seu cum est versatus perillustris " Nuncius tam apud principes Belgarum, quam apud " Regem Christianissimum, seu postquam factus est " Cardinalis raræ ac spectatæ virtutis (3). —— One " was John-Francis Guidi Bagni, Archbishop of " Patras, and then Vice-legate at Avignon. There was " a particular Intimacy between them, not only during his Residence at Avignon, but also while he " was Nuncio Extraordinary both to the States of " Holland, and to the most Christian King, and after " he was made Cardinal for his great and singular " Virtue." It is most certain, that Bagni was twice Nuncio; for Naudé, who was a long time his Domestic, and Library-Keeper, speaks thus to him in the Dedication of his Coups d'Estat: " My Lord, since " you are now at Rome, enjoying the Honours due " to your Deserts, and That Quiet, which you have " merited by so happy a Conduct in your public " Employs, while you have been seven times Go" vernour, once Vice-legate, and twice Nuncio, I " did not think, &c." He was sent Nuncio to Brussels by Gregory XV, and into France by Urban VIII. Thomasin and Moreri are both in fault; they could not give a right Account of one of the clearest matters in the World. It was during his being Nuncio in France, that Bagni was raised to the Cardinalship. Gassendus says, that, in the Spring of the Year 1631, he passed through Provence, in his Return to Rome, and that he went to see his old Friend Mr de Peiresc. " Vere novo Cardinalis à Balneo, utràque " suâ Legatione functus, & accepto Parisiis purpu" rato pileo, Romam rediit (4). —— In the begin" ning of the Spring, Cardinal Bagni, having discharged " both his Nunciatures, and received the red Cap at " Paris, returned to Rome." He brought the learned Gabriel Naudé along with him. He continued in his Station of Nuncio at Paris, for above a Year after his Advancement to the Cardinalship, and was particularly concerned in reconciling the Differences between the Queen-Mother and Cardinal Richelieu (5). A Manuscript Memoir of Mr Baudrand says, I. That he was not made a Cardinal at the Recommendation of France, though we are told so in the History of the Ministry of Cardinal Richelieu; but meerly by the Pope, as Nuncio of the Holy See, which is a Favour frequently conferred on those, who are Nuncio's in France, and Spain, and at the Imperial Court. II. That there is a Mistake in those words of Gassendus, which I have quoted (6); accepto Parisiis purpurato Pileo Romam rediit. " The Pope " doth not send the Red Hat to the Cardinals, which he " makes, but they are obliged to come and receive " it at Rome; for the Pope sends only the Calot by " a Courier, and afterwards the Red Cap by one of " his Chamberlains. So that Cardinal Richelieu and " Cardinal Mazarin never had the Red Hat, be" cause they never went to Rome after their Pro" motion. For above One hundred and twenty Years " past, the Pope has never sent the Red Hat to " any but the Cardinal Infant, into Spain, which " was a particular Favour in respect to his Brother " the King of Spain." All this is very curious: but yet Mr Baudrand should not have censured Gassendus's words, since they do not signify, that the Cardinal received the Red Hat; but only that he received the Red Cap. Gassendus says Pileo, not Galero. It is said, that Paul V departed from the Custom, introduced by Sixtus V: and That, in favour of the Duke of Lerma, to whom he ordered the Cardinal's Hat and Ring to be given, at Madrid, in 1618; this Duke being seventy Years old (7). See the eleventh Chapter of the fifteenth Book of Pallavicini's History of the Council of Trent.

(1) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. I. p. 119.

(2) Gassend. in Vitâ Peireskii, lib. 3. ad Ann. 1621, pag. 289.

(3) Ibid. pag. 281.

(4) Ibid. l. 4. ad ann. pag. 307.

(5) See the History of Cardinal Richelieu, by Aubery, Vol. I. pag. 264, 270, Edit. of Holl. 12mo.

(6) Above, Citation (4).

(7) Mercure Galant, for Apr. 1706, pag. 109.

[B] One Thing has been said of him, in the Sorberiana, which is false on several Accounts.] It is pretended, that, at the sight of the Thirty seven Volumes of the Councils, printed at the Louvre, he cried out, I wonder there should be still any Heretics in France. What Christian from henceforth can be any thing but a Catholic? Sorbiere admires this Thought: " Op" time Cardinalis Banius, in Galliâ Nuncius, says he, " dum 37 Vol. Concil. cerneret typis regiis impressa " aiebat: Miror unde jam in Gallia hæretici fiant, " quis enim hypothesium Christianarum servans po" test non esse Catholicus (8)? It is false, That this Cardinal ever saw Those Thirty seven Volumes: He died in the Year 1641, and That Edition of the Councils came out in the Year 1644. But, if he had said, what is ascribed to him, he must have very much betrayed

WHETHER the Councils in 37 Volumes are able to convert Heretics.

(8) Sorberiana, pag. 62. Edit. of Holland.

Digitized by Google

of BAGNI [C], and was General of the Pope's Troops in the Valteline, in the Year 1624.

betrayed his Judgment. For nothing can be so improper for the Conversion of Heretics as a Work of many Volumes, as Thirty seven Volumes of the Councils. Of Ten thousand Protestants, there will scarce be found two, who can read a Page in That Edition of the Louvre, and among those, who understand Latin, the greatest part have neither the Inclination, nor the Patience, to undertake so vast a reading. The Inconveniency would not be remedied by Translations into the Vulgar Tongue; for who, among the Ignorant, would not lose themselves in such a Sea as This? Without the Grace of GOD, and the Power of Education, the reading of the Councils would make an hundred Times more Infidels than Christians. There is no History, which affords more matter of Scandal, nor a more shocking Scene of Passions, Intrigues, Factions, Cabals, and Frauds, than This of the Councils (9). Those, who published the Menagiana, forgot a good Jest, which I have heard several times, in the Mercuriales of Mr Menage. A witty Man is quoted there, who when he heard say, "Such a "one was condemned in such a Council, cried, It "was a sign he did not know how to cabal so "well as his Adversaries, or had not the same support "from the secular Arm." Can Those, who know the Religion of Sorbiere, be well edified by his Optime?

(9) See Remark [B] of the Article NESTORIUS.

[C] He had a Brother, called the Marquis of Bagni.] Mr Baillet assures us, that This Marquis was the Brother of Cardinal John-Francis Bagni, and that, having quitted the Sword, he advanced himself, in Ecclesiastical Dignities, even to That of the Cardinal-ship, to which he was promoted in the Year 1657 (10). He had been Nuncio in France all the time of the Pontificate of Innocent X, and the two first Years of Alexander VII. —— He died at Rome, the Twenty third of August, 1663, aged eighty Years (11). Mr Baillet thinks it likely, that Mr Des Cartes went to see him in the Valteline: He grounds his Conjecture on This Marquis's being addicted to the Study of Natural Philosophy (12). The Truth is, Des Cartes was not only well known to Cardinal John-Francis Bagni, but also much respected by him (13). The French Mercury says, "That the Marquis de "Bagni, to whom his Holiness had given the Com-"mand of his Forces in the Valteline, was known to "be a Partisan of Spain, descended from the Family "of the Colonna's, altogether Spanish, chief of the "Gibelins in Romagna, and who had always been a "Pensionary of Spain, having, as such, accompanied "the Constable Colonna, in his Journey into Spain, "four Years ago (14)."

(10) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 1, pag. 161.

(11) Id. ib. p. 119, 120.

(12) Ibid. pag. 119. See also pag. 161.

(13) Ibid. pag. 253, 254, 300, 301, 302.

(14) Mercure François, Tom. 10, p. 179, ad Ann. 1624, quoting the Venetian Gazettes.

BAIUS (a) (MICHAEL), Professor of Divinity at Louvain, was born at Melin in the Territory of Aeth, in the Year 1513. He distinguished himself so much by his great Progress, and prudent Conduct, during his Studies at Louvain, that, from the Station of a Scholar, he was promoted to That of Principal of the College of Standonck (b). Having been three Years in That Office, he applied himself to teach Philosophy; and, after six Years spent in Those Lectures, he obtained the Place of Principal of the Pope's College in the Year 1549 (c). In the same Year he was made Licentiate in Divinity. Two Years after he took his Doctor's Degree, and was appointed Regius Professor of Scripture. In 1563, he was one of the Divines sent by the King of Spain from Louvain to Trent [A]. He was admired in That Council. He obtained the Deanry of St Peter at Louvain, in the Year 1575. At the end of Three Years he was promoted to the Dignity of Conservator of the Privileges of the University (d). His Epitaph imports, that he was Chancellor of the same University, and Inquisitor-General in the Netherlands. He was a very learned Man, and no less eminent for his Morality, Piety, and Modesty, than for his Parts and Learning (e). He had read over St Augustin's Works nine times (f): He composed several Works in Divinity [B], which discovered That Reading (g), and which contained, as was pretended, a great number of Propositions, condemned by Pope Pius V [C]. He wrote also some Books of Controversy against Those of the Protestant

(a) He is more known by this Latin Name, than by that of de Bay, which was his true Name.

(b) It is the Name of the Founder.

(c) I correct Valerius Andreas thus, for his number, CIↃ.IↃ.XCV, is a most absurd Fault of the Printer.

(d) Ex Valer. Andreæ Biblioth. pag. 670.

(e) See Remark [H].

(f) Swert. in Athen. Belg. Valer. Andreas.

(g) See Remark [E].

[A] The King of Spain sent him from Louvain to Trent.] See, in Cardinal Palavicini, all the Springs, which retarded or advanced the Deputation of Michael Baius (1). The Writer of Commendon's Life has past over this slightly, and with too much Flattery (2); but the Author of the History of the Council unravels all Commendon's Intrigues very clearly, and gives him only what belongs to him. This Nuncio, being at Brussels, in the Year 1561, took notice of the Differences, which had happened at Louvain, on account of some particular Notions of Baius and Hessels, concerning the Doctrine of Free-will, That of Good-works, and some others. These two Doctors had kept Silence a long time, in condescention to those who had given them that Advice; but hearing that, at the Sollicitation of the Franciscans, the Sorbonne had condemned eighteen Propositions, and being exhorted by their Disciples to defend their Cause, they prepared themselves accordingly. Commendon put a Stop to This Paper-War, not by his fine Discourses, as Gratiani affirms, but by writing such Letters to the Pope, as occasioned him to give order to Cardinal de Granvelle to enjoin them Silence (3).

(1) Palavic. Histor. Concil. Trident. lib. 15. c. 7.

(2) Anthony Maria Gratiani, Life of Cardinal Commendon, translated by Mr Flechier, pag. 153.

(3) Palavic. Hist. Concil. Trident. lib. 15. c. 7.

[B] He composed several Works in Divinity.] He published some of them, the Titles whereof are these, as I find them in Valerius Andreas; De Meritis Operum libri II. De prima hominis Justitia & Virtutibus impiorum libri II. De sacramentis in genere contra Calvinum. De forma Baptismi. All these Treatises were printed together at Louvain in the Year 1565. The next Year these following were printed there; De Libero Hominis Arbitrio liber I. De Charitate, Justitia, & Justificatione, libri III. De Sacrificio liber I. De Peccato Originis liber I. De Indulgentiis liber I. De Oratione pro defunctis liber I.

[C] Which contained, as was pretended, a great Number of Propositions condemned by Pius V.] I say, as was pretended; for the Fact is not yet settled, and I find Michael Baius is very far from granting, that he taught what was imputed to him. "However, "says he (4), among those Propositions (5), there "were some very different from our Sentiments; "others which we never maintained, nor meddled "with, in any Sense, but all, or, at least, most, "of them, were turned, and expressed, in such a "malicious Manner, that the very Form of them "alone might make them appear suspicious, especially "in the Opinion of those, who had not purposely "studied these sorts of Questions." This is the old Game of the ODIUM THEOLOGICUM: That Passion, which occasioned a Proverb long ago, finds Heresies where-ever it pleases; it frames such artificial Extracts, and so proper to exasperate the People, that it transforms, into pernicious Heresies, That, which, when considered with it's Principles, Restrictions, and Applications, is not so much as heterodox. This Passion is contagious: A Physician, who affects to set up for an Informer, from a Motive of Zeal only, finds himself all on a sudden possessed with the Sacerdotal Spirit; he produces unfair Extracts; he divides what he should join, and joins what he ought to divide, and gives the Propositions such a turn, as is proper to make them appear most shocking

(4) In his Letter to Cardinal Simonetta cited by Gery, Apology for the Censures, p. 42.

