MR BAYLE'S
Hiſtorical and Critical
DICTIONARY.

THE SECOND EDITION.

To which is prefixed,

THE LIFE OF THE AUTHOR,

BY

MR DES MAIZEAUX,

Fellow of the Royal Society.

VOLUME THE FIRST.

A —— Bi.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Bælius hic ille est cujus dum scripta vigebunt
Lis erit, oblectent, eruditant ne magis.

Jam.s Smith Sculpsit 1733.

Digitized by Google

Bayle, Pierre

THE DICTIONARY Historical and Critical OF Mr PETER BAYLE.

THE SECOND EDITION,

Carefully collated with the ſeveral Editions of the Original; in which many Paſſages are reſtored, and the whole greatly augmented, particularly with a Tranſlation of the Quotations from eminent Writers in various Languages.

To which is prefixed,

THE LIFE OF THE AUTHOR,

REVISED, CORRECTED, AND ENLARGED,

BY

Mr DES MAIZEAUX,
Fellow of the Royal Society.

VOLUME THE FIRST.

A —— Bi.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

LONDON:
Printed for J. J. and P. KNAPTON; D. MIDWINTER; J. BROTHERTON; A. BETTESWORTH and C. HITCH; J. HAZARD; J. TONSON; W. INNYS and R. MANBY; J. OSBORNE and T. LONGMAN; T. WARD and E. WICKSTEED; W. MEADOWS; T. WOODWARD; B. MOTTE; W. HINCHLIFFE; J. WALTHOE, jun. E. SYMON; T. COX; A. WARD; D. BROWNE; S. BIRT; W. BICKERTON; T. ASTLEY; S. AUSTEN; L. GILLIVER; H. LINTOT; H. WHITRIDGE; R. WILLOCK.
M D C C X X X I.

Digitized by Google

CT
95
.B3
1734
66371
v.1
A-Bi

Digitized by Google

TO

The Right Honourable

SIR ROBERT WALPOLE,

First Commissioner of the Treasury, Chancellor and Under-Treasurer of the Exchequer, One of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council, and Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter.

SIR,

GREAT Writers, who employ themselves for the instruction or entertainment of the World, naturally claim, what they seem naturally to merit, the favour and countenance of Great Men. Whosoever contributes, especially with success, to enlarge the Understandings of Men, and to mend their Hearts, is entitled to the Friendship and Protection of the Governors of Men, I mean of such as would truly answer the noble end of Government; who, if they pursue their duty, and consult the honour and improvement of human nature, will chearfully and generously promote whatever has that good tendency. And they who practise different Politics, by cramping the human Soul, possessing it with false awe, and debasing it through Darkness and Ignorance, do not deserve, but rather disgrace and forfeit, the glorious and endearing title of Magistrates and Protectors.

TRUE and extensive Knowledge never was, never can be, hurtful to the Peace of Society. It is Ignorance, or, which is worſe than ignorance, falſe Knowledge, that is chiefly terrible to States. They are the furious, the ill taught, the blind and miſguided, that are prone to be ſeized with groundleſs Fears, and unprovoked Reſentment, to be rouſed by Incendiaries, and to ruſh deſperately into Sedition and acts of Rage.

Digitized by Google

SUBJECTS that are moſt knowing and beſt informed, are ever moſt peaceable and loyal. Whereas the Loyalty and obedience of ſuch, whoſe underſtandings extend not beyond Names and Sounds, will be always precarious, and can never be thoroughly relied upon, whilſt any turbulent or artful men can, by dinn and clamour, and the continual application of thoſe Sounds, intoxicate, and inflame them even to madneſs, can make them believe themſelves undone though nothing hurts them, think they are oppreſſed when they are beſt protected, and can drive them into riots and rebellion, without the excuſe of one real grievance. It will always be eaſy to raiſe a miſt before eyes that are already dark: and it is a true obſervation, "that it is an eaſy work to govern Wiſe Men; but to "govern Fools or Madmen, is a continual ſlavery."

IT is from the blind zeal and ſtupidity cleaving to Superſtition, 'tis from the Ignorance, Raſhneſs, and Rage attending Faction, that ſo many, ſo mad, and ſo ſanguinary evils have afflicted and deſtroyed Men, diſſolved the beſt Governments, and thinned the greateſt Nations. And as a people well inſtructed will certainly eſteem the Bleſſings which they enjoy, and ſtudy public Peace, for their own ſake, there is a great merit in inſtructing the people, and in cultivating their Underſtandings. They are certainly leſs credulous in proportion as they are more knowing, and conſequently leſs liable to be the Dupes of Demagogues, and the property of Ambition. They are not then to be ſurprized with falſe cries, nor animated by imaginary Danger; and wherever the Underſtanding is well principled and informed, the Paſſions will be tame, and the Heart well diſpoſed.

THEY

Digitized by Google

THEY therefore who communicate true Knowledge to their ſpecies, are true Friends to the World, Benefactors to Society, and deſerve all encouragement from thoſe, who preſide over Society, with the applauſe and good wiſhes of all men. Such a public friend and benefactor was MR BAYLE. Truth and Knowledge were his miſtreſs, and the purſuit of his life, and he ſtudied to engage all men in that purſuit. A curious ſearcher of error he was, a conſtant champion againſt falſhood, impoſture, and all diſhoneſt arts; zealous for public tranquillity, and a foe to all who diſturbed it; wonderfully qualified for his great undertaking, by an acuteneſs and penetration never exceeded by any Writer ancient or modern, and with ſuch an accumulation of various, curious, and ſolid Learning, as perhaps was never equalled by any Writer whatſoever; a great Philoſopher, a great Linguiſt, an univerſal Hiſtorian and Critic, vaſtly skilled in Divinity and Controverſy, and a nice reaſoner upon tranſactions of States, and the arts of Stateſmen.

MANY enemies it is true he had; and what other Great Man ever wanted ſuch? their Greatneſs only is what often produces them. It was therefore no wonder that the outcry and clamour againſt him was ſo loud and many-mouthed, even for his moſt excellent performances. This comfort however attends his memory, and it is likely he foreſaw it and enjoyed it in his lifetime; that all that clamour is now dead, and theſe excellent performances remain, and are likely for ever to remain. What his own admirable talents and many ſolid defences could not do, time and the infinite merit of his works, and the force of truth have done, ſilenced his adverſaries, and almoſt made it forgot that he ever had any. This muſt be a pleaſing reflection to all lovers of Truth and of great Merit greatly traduced, and ſpitefully uſed, to ſee ſuch traducers ſunk into oblivion, and ſuch merit covered with luſtre.

I could, Sir, with your leave and patience, illuſtrate the fate of MR BAYLE by ſimilar inſtances; but that that I would no more offend you with the appearance of Flattery, than I would provoke others to charge me with the imputation of designing, and you of encouraging it. Permit me only to say, that as this great and applauded Work is like to last, Posterity (for Posterity will judge without anger or envy) will not think it unnatural to see the name of SIR ROBERT WALPOLE prefixed to the GRAND DICTIONARY of MR BAYLE; and if by this way (this only way) I can purchase permanence to my own humble name, it is an Ambition which I hope merits pardon. The greatest that I have in the world is to be owned by, you, Sir, as what I strictly am, with all Devotion and unbounded Respect,

Digitized by Google

SIR,

Your most Dutiful, and most Obedient

Humble Servant,

P. DES MAIZEAUX.

Digitized by Google

ADVERTISEMENT

CONCERNING

This Second Edition.

IF the repeated Editions of a voluminous book be a proof of the Approbationof the Public, we may affirm that no book has been more generally eſteemed than Mr Bayle's Dictionary. Beſides the editions of 1697 and 1702, which he publiſhed himſelf, it was printed at Geneva in 1715, at Rotterdam in 1720, at Amſterdam in 1730, and is juſt now reprinted in France: ſo that there have been ſix impreſſions of it in ſix and thirty years; an honour which perhaps was never done to any other book of ſuch a bulk. To theſe editions may be added the Engliſh Tranſlation, publiſhed in 1710: for the Tranſlation of a book is in reality a new Edition of it in another dreſs; and does ſo much the more credit to the work, as it is the effect of the earneſt deſires of the curious and inquiſitive, who do not underſtand the original.

That Tranſlation was done from the edition of 1702, the moſt compleat then extant: but Mr Bayle having left behind him ſeveral Articles, which he deſigned for a Supplement to his Dictionary, they were inſerted in the new edition printed at Rotterdam in 1720. But this edition being full of errors of the preſs, and interpolated in many places, theſe defects were corrected in the Amſterdam edition of 1730, in which ſome learned men were employed. They alſo improved it in ſeveral other reſpects, of which they give us the following account.

I. "We have, ſay theſe Editors, collated it with the Editions of 1697 "and 1702, and particularly with Mr Bayle's own Copy of the edition "1702, in which are ſeveral additions and corrections written with " his own hand. By this means ſeveral expreſſions, and whole phraſes " have been reſtored which had been omitted, changed, or adulterated " in the preceeding edition.

Digitized by Google

II. " The Articles of the Supplement, or poſthumous Additions, have " been compared with Mr Bayle's Original Manuſcript; by the help of " which the text has been reſtored to its purity, and all ſpurious inſer- " tions ſtruck out.

III. " The ſeveral quotations from celebrated Authors, in the Greek, " Latin, and other languages, have been carefully reviſed and corrected.

IV. " Some paſſages, or citations, which were wanting in the " edition of 1720, and had been only referred to, have been ſupplied.

V. " The Articles which were miſplaced, or put at the end of the " fourth volume, are placed in their proper order.

VI. " Some Critical Remarks, which had been communicated to the " Bookſellers, and printed at the end of the ſaid fourth volume, have " been inſerted in the Articles they belonged to; but they are diſtin- " guiſhed from Mr Bayle's text, being preceeded by a Greek letter for " a reference and by this mark §, and ending with the words, " REM. CRIT.

VII. " At the end of the fourth volume is added a piece printed at " Paris in 1706, intitled Critical Remarks upon the new edition of Moreri's " Hiſtorical Dictionary, publiſhed in 1704. Mr Bayle reprinted this piece " in Holland, and prefixed to it a long Preface, which contains excel- " lent inſtructions towards perfecting Moreri's Dictionary. He likewiſe " joined to it ſeveral hiſtorical and critical Obſervations, which are to the " ſame purpoſe, and where he ſhews the errors in fact, and the falſe " reaſonings of the Author of theſe remarks. But though he ſaw that " this Critic had taken almoſt all his remarks upon Moreri, from his Hi- " ſtorical and Critical Dictionary, without citing it, he never reproaches " him with this piece of Plagiariſm, but contents himſelf with vindica- " ting ſome paſſages which this Cenſor had miſunderſtood, or had criti- " cized without reaſon. Mr Des Maizeaux has been leſs indulgent in the " Obſervations which he has added to thoſe of Mr Bayle: he has reſto- " red to Mr Bayle all the critical remarks which this Critic had borrowed " from his Dictionary, and had given as his own. Neither has he " ſpared him for his boldneſs in advancing certain facts without proofs, as " well as for his looſe, equivocal, and ſophiſtical manner of arguing. " But as the deſign of that ſmall work is to contribute towards perfecting " Moreri's Dictionary, Mr Des Maizeaux had taken a particular care to " point out the corrections that have been made in the late editions, of " the paſſages cenſured by this Author. Future Editors will ſee at one " view,

Digitized by Google

" view, what has been already corrected, and what ſtill remains to be " rectified with reſpect to thoſe paſſages. It does not appear that the " late Reviſors of Moreri were acquainted with theſe Critical Remarks; " at leaſt it is certain that they have not ſeen Mr Bayle's Preface and " Notes. Mr Bayle would not put his name to them, which is the rea- " ſon why this piece has been hitherto ſo little known.

VIII. " To this edition is prefixed the Life of Mr Bayle, by Mr Des " Maizeaux."

In this new Engliſh edition of Mr Bayle's Dictionary, we have followed the improved edition of the original, laſt mentioned; which conſequently contains all his poſthumous Additions and Corrections. The Readers will alſo find in the laſt Volume the Critical Remarks upon Moreri's Dictionary, with Mr Bayle's Preface and Notes to it, and Mr Des Maizeaux's Obſervations: Alſo, Mr Bayle's Reflections on a Pamphlet, intitled, the Judgment of the Public concerning Mr Bayle's Critical Dictionary, (firſt inſerted in the edition of 1720): and an Hiſtorical Diſcourſe concerning the Life of Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden. Mr Bayle deſigned to write a compleat Hiſtory of that great Prince; but has left the work unfiniſhed; however, as far as it goes, it is an excellent piece of hiſtory, and one may eaſily ſee that it comes from a maſterly hand. It has been but lately publiſhed, and has not been yet inſerted in any edition of Mr Bayle's Dictionary. We therefore preſume the readers will be glad to ſee it at the end of the laſt Volume, where it may, in ſome meaſure, ſupply the want of the Article of the great GUSTAVUS, which is not to be found in the Dictionary.

Beſides theſe Pieces, which were not in the firſt Engliſh edition, this ſecond edition has ſeveral other advantages.

I. The Tranſlation is much more exact and correct, and is carefully reviſed and compared with the original.

II. It has been collated with the original editions of 1697 and 1702, when any doubt has ariſen concerning the genuine reading of a word, a date, &c.

III. Several errors of the preſs which had crept into the edition of 1730, eſpecially in the paſſages of ancient Authors, have been corrected.

IV. The citations from eminent Writers in various languages, are tranſlated into Engliſh, excepting when Mr Bayle himſelf has fully expreſſed the ſenſe of them.

V. The

Digitized by Google

V. The Life of Mr Bayle has been reviſed, corrected, and enlarged by the Author; and ſome of the Corrections and Additions are very conſiderable. As ſoon as this work came out, it was tranſlated into High-Dutch by the learned Dr Kohl, and printed at Hamburgh in 1731, in 8vo: and it has been reprinted at Paris in 1733, in two Volumes in 12mo. But Mr Des Maizeaux was not concerned in theſe Editions, which however ſhew that the public entertained a very favourable opinion of that work. Some people may poſſibly imagine that Mr Des Maizeaux, has inſiſted too long on Mr Bayle's diſputes, and could have wiſhed that he had only given the particulars of his life: but indeed what is the Hiſtory of the life of a Philoſopher, but an account of his works, opinions, and diſputes? Theſe are the battles and bright actions of ſuch Heroes. Beſides, the knowledge of ſuch books and pamphlets as do not ſeem to concern the Engliſh reader, will be found neceſſary for the better underſtanding of numberleſs paſſages of Mr Bayle's Dictionary, wherein they are mentioned or referred to; ſo that this part of his Life is, as it were, a key, or an explanatory introduction, to them.

PREFACE

Digitized by Google

PREFACE
TO THE
First French Edition.

I HAVE a thouſand things to offer in this Preface; but as I cannot do it without running into an exorbitant length, which would diſcourage the Readers, I rather chuſe to give my ſelf ſome conſtraint, than offend their niceneſs. I ſhall therefore confine my ſelf to five or ſix particulars.

I.
WHY this work is not formed upon the plan publiſhed in 1692. [See that Plan at the end of the laſt Volume.]

I declare firſt, that this work is not what I promiſed in the Project I publiſhed of a Critical Dictionary in the Year 1692. The objection I had beſt obviated and anſwered, is that which was chiefly inſiſted on, to condemn the plan I deſigned to purſue; and perhaps it appeared very ſtrong to a great many readers, for no other reaſon, but becauſe they obſerved I very much inlarged on it's confutation. But let the cauſe be what it will, I did not think it prudent to oppoſe the general taſte; and ſince it has been univerſally concluded, that the greateſt part of the faults I mentioned in the articles of the Project were of little importance to the public, reaſon required I ſhould give over my undertaking. My deſign was to compoſe a Dictionary of errors: the perfection of ſuch a work conſiſts in obſerving all miſtakes, great or ſmall; for doubtleſs it would be a perfection in a Geographical Dictionary, and in a Map, to ſpecify every town and village. Seeing therefore the beſt way of executing my project muſt be the moſt expoſed to the complaints of the public, as it would have multiplied inſignificant obſervations, there was a neceſſity for me to alter my deſign; and I could not but believe, that according to the prevailing taſte of the age, there was a real imperfection in the very plan of my enterprize, which could never be cured by the execution. If I conteſt any thing with thoſe who ſay, that the greateſt part of the errors I have cenſured in my Project are of no conſequence, 'tis their ſuppoſing that they are not all of that nature; for I maintain, that none of them is important, and that though, generally ſpeaking, they are like thoſe that have been obſerved by great Critics (1), yet they can contribute nothing to the public good. The fate of mankind does not depend upon them. A narrative abounding with the groſſeſt ignorance is as proper to move the paſſions, as hiſtorical exactneſs. Let ten thouſand ignorant people hear you preach that Coriolanus's mother obtained of him, what "he refuſed "the ſacred College of Cardinals and the Pope himſelf, who went to meet "him (2)," you will give them the ſame idea of the power of the Holy Virgin,

(1) If you conſider Scaliger's remarks upon Euſebius's Chronicle, you will find that his corrections conſiſt in ſhewing, that a time, a place, a man's name, &c. have been miſtaken.

(2) 'Tis affirmed in the Recueil des bons contes & des bons mots, printed in the year 1693. p. 123. of the Dutch edition, that this was actually preached.

Digitized by Google

Virgin, as if this was no blunder. Tell them, " 'Tis ſtrange, Chriſtians, " that you ſhould not be moved to ſee our Saviour JESUS CHRIST " hanging upon the croſs, all bruiſed with blows, when the emperor Pom- " pey was moved with compaſſion, upon ſeeing Pyrrhus's elephants pierced " with arrows (3);" you will produce the ſame effect, as if what you ſay of Pompey was true. 'Tis therefore certain, that the diſcovery of errors (4) is not important or uſeful to the proſperity of the State, or of private perſons. Obſerve now in what manner I have changed my plan, the better to hit the taſte of the public. I have divided my compoſition into two parts: one is purely hiſtorical, and gives a ſuccinct account of matters of fact: the other is a large commentary, a miſcellany of proofs and diſcuſſions, wherein I have inſerted a cenſure of many faults, and even ſometimes a train of philoſophical reflections; in a word, there is variety enough, to preſume that all ſorts of readers will find ſomething or other that will pleaſe them.

(3) 'Tis affirmed in the Furetieriana, pag. 127. of the Bruſſels edition that Furetiere heard this preached in Flanders.

(4) I only mean errors in point of fact, and I except thoſe that concern religion. As to the former, I do not pretend to make any exception.

THIS new œconomy has broke all the meaſures I had taken; moſt of the materials I had collected were of no uſe to me, and I was forced to work upon a new foundation. My principal deſign was to obſerve the faults of Moreri, and of all other Dictionaries like his. In ſearching for proofs neceſſary to expoſe thoſe faults, and rectify them, I found, that many authors, both ancient and modern had committed the ſame miſtakes. And as Moreri is much more faulty in what concerns Mythology, and the Roman families than in modern hiſtory, I had particularly made collections upon the heathen gods and heroes, and the great men of ancient Rome. The work I propoſed to publiſh, would have contained abundance of articles, like thoſe of ACHILLES, BALBUS, and CRASSUS, in my Project. All theſe vaſt collections are become uſeleſs, becauſe I was informed that theſe ſubjects pleaſed few people, and that a volume in folio, the greateſt part of which ſhould run only upon ſuch things, would be left to grow mouldy in the bookſellers ware houſes. It will appear that I have had a regard to this information: but few articles of this kind will be found in my two Volumes; nor would they perhaps have been there, had they not been wholly compoſed before I was fully informed of the taſte of the readers.

II. WHY this work could not be compoſed in a little time.

This is one of the reaſons that have retarded the publication of this work: many others have contributed to it. I reſolved at firſt to ſay nothing that has been already ſaid in other Dictionaries, or at leaſt to avoid as much as poſſible the repetition of facts that are to be found in them; whereby I deprived myſelf of all the materials that were moſt eaſy to be collected, and employed. Nothing can be more eaſy for the authors of an Hiſtorical Dictionary, than to talk of Popes, Emperors, Kings, and Cardinals; or of the Fathers of the church, of Councils, and Heretics; or of great lords, cities, provinces, &c. 'Tis therefore a great diſadvantage to lay aſide thoſe ſubjects, as one muſt do every moment, if he propoſes to avoid the articles that are in Moreri's Dictionary. If you deſign to give the ſame articles, you muſt confine yourſelf to the things that he has omitted: the difficulty of ſeparating them from others in the originals you conſult is not ſmall; but that of connecting them together, after the chaſms occaſioned by this ſeparation, is much greater. Notwithſtanding all theſe Difficulties, I reſolved to give an account of moſt of the perſons mentioned in the Bible; but I was informed that a particular Dictionary upon theſe ſubjects would quickly come out at Lyons (5). What remained to be done, was to collect what has been ſaid by the Rabbis concerning thoſe perſons; but underſtanding that the late Mr d'Herbelot's Bibliotheque Orientale was printing at Paris, I gave

(5) 'Tis intituled, Le Dictionaire de la bible. 'Tis a Folio book printed, according to the title-page, in 1693, and written by M. Simon, prieſt, and doctor of divinity.

over

Digitized by Google

over this design (6). Notwithstanding the same difficulties, I would have composed the articles relating to church-history, had I not considered that Mr du Pin furnished the readers of Dictionaries, with all they could desire. His work is adapted both to the learned and unlearned. The Dutch editions have made it very common, and all the curious buy it and read it. I had not, therefore, been excusable, had I mentioned the same things that are to be found there: must one buy the same histories twice? I rather chose to abstain from so fruitful a subject, and easy to come by, than to repeat what may be more conveniently learned elsewhere.

(6) I had already composed the articles of ADAM, EVE, CAIN, ABEL, ABRAHAM, &c. which I give in this Work.

I found myself streightened in other respects. This work was hardly begun, when I heard an English translation of Moreri's Dictionary was printing at London, with abundance of Additions; and that a large supplement to the same work was preparing in Holland. Hereupon I thought myself obliged not to treat of the illustrious men of Great Britain: I concluded, that out of the English edition, they would be inserted in the said supplement, and that the same thing would be bought twice, unless I prevented it by depriving myself of so copious a matter, and so proper to recommend a Dictionary. For the same reason I laid aside my enquiry after the illustrious men who have flourished in the United Provinces (7); and said very little concerning the history or geography of this State. I did not doubt but the supplement, printed in Holland, would give a large and exact account of all these things, and likewise that it would fully treat of all the transactions of Europe in our days. This prevented my touching upon those modern histories. On the other hand, I heard that a new edition of Moreri's Dictionary was going to be published at Paris, with great additions. This made me resolve to suppress a great many things, and put a stop to my enquiry into many subjects, which I could handle but imperfectly, in comparison of those who were engaged in this new edition: they are upon the spot, and at hand to consult libraries, and learned men. I ought therefore to leave them this task entire, and not give them the displeasure of running lightly over a subject, that will be read more eagerly when set off by them in it's full lustre, before others touch upon it.

(7) I have only mentioned some, whose Lives or Funerals Orations I had already by me.

But besides these new editions, and new supplements of Moreri's Dictionary, other things have much streightened me. Mr Chappuzeau has been a long time about an historical Dictionary in which we shall certainly find, amongst abundance of other subjects, what concerns the situation of nations, their manners, religion, government, and what concerns the royal families, and the genealogies of great men (8); and particularly you will find in it at large, all the electors, princes, and counts of the empire; their alliances, interests, and principal actions. And by that means, you will see the northern countries, and the rest of Protestant Europe. I thought, therefore, that I had better be silent upon those great subjects, than expose the reader to the disagreeable necessity of purchasing the same things twice. Nay, I have found myself confined with respect to the learned men of the XVIth century; for I knew that Mr Teissier was printing, with new additions, the commmentaries he has so curiously compiled upon the Elogies taken from Thuanus (9). I was afraid, in speaking of those learned men, that the facts mentioned by me, would be the same with Mr Teissier's; and that thought has often determined me to suppress my collections.

(8) See the Plan of his Dictionary, which he published in the Year 1694.

(9) That second edition came out in 1696.

I do

Digitized by Google

I do not enumerate these particulars, in order to enable my friends to make my apology against those who shall despise my Dictionary, and say, " was so much time to be consumed in the composition of such " a Work? the faults of it might be excused, if the author had spent " only a few months in making it: but so poor an effect of so long a " labour deserves no indulgence. Slowness is never tolerable, but when it " produces a master-piece (10)." My friends might answer, that the most diligent writers would be hard put to it, to make their compilations with greater speed, if they abstained from the most copious and easy subjects, and avoided mentioning what some have compiled, and what they foresee will be compiled by others. But I do not desire that these should be alledged in my favour. What I have said, is only designed to resolve such questions as these; " Why so many great men are wanting in my " book? why it contains so many unknown persons, and obscure names? " why it is so barren in some respects, and profuse in others? could the " author be so mistaken, as to pretend to be able to do what Pliny thought " extremely difficult? &c (11)." Let the querist be referred to the account I have given above, and he will find the solution of all these doubts.

(10) Diu parturit læna catulum, sed leonem. The lioness goes long with young, but at length brings forth a lion.

(11) Res arduas vetustis novitatem dare, novis auctoritatem, obsoletis nitorem, obscuris lucem, fastidiosis gratiam, dubiis fidem. It is a difficult matter to give the grace of novelty to things old, authority to things new, elegancy to things obsolete, light to things obscure, favour to things contemned, and credit to things doubtful. Plin. in Præf. Nat. Hist.

I freely own, that laborious and diligent authors will have reason to look upon me as a slow Writer. I have spent above four years in the composition of these two volumes (12). Besides, they are intermixed with long Passages, which cost me no pains; nothing of what I have said of my own, bespeaks an author that revises his work, or corrects his first thoughts, and the first disposition of his words. And therefore, if any one thinks I have been too slow, I shall not wonder at it: I am sensible and ashamed of it, and I should be still more ashamed, were it not that my health frequently interrupted, requires some regard, and does not permit me to perform what strong and laborious men can do. I know, moreover, that the slavery of quoting, which I have submitted to (13), makes me lose much time; and that the prodigious scarcity of books, very necessary to my design, stopped my pen a hundred times a day. Such a work as this requires the most numerous library in the world; whereas I have very few books (14). Shall I dare to own it? The stile is another cause of my slowness: it is very incorrect, and not free from expressions either improper, or which begin to be obsolete, or even from barbarisms. I confess I am, in these respects, without scruple: but, on the contrary, with regard to other things, which give more trouble (15), I am scrupulous, even to superstition. The greatest masters, the most illustrious members of the French Academy, dispense with these scruples, and we have but three or four writers, that are not cured of them. It is, therefore, a great mortification to me, not to be able to get above those niceties, which cost much time, and often spoil the lively and natural agreeableness of the expression, when it is corrected by this Rule. I am so unable to shake off this heavy yoke, that in case this Dictionary be reprinted, it will certainly be my principal care to correct, according to the rigorous rules of our French Grammarians, all the inaccuracies in the language, which still remain in this edition (16). They are not a few; for during the first year I was employed in this Work, I did not so much mind scruples of this sort; so that there are a great many articles which offend the superstitious rules I have now mentioned: they were composed at that time, and I had not the leisure to new-mould them, when I was obliged to send them the press. Such like faults may be found all the work over, occasioned

(12) I began this work in July, 1692, and made an end of it in Octob. 1696.

(13) I quote the pages, even when I refer to other places of my Dictionary.

(14) Some persons have very obligingly lent me some books, for which I am very thankful. I would willingly publish here the names and merits of those, who have done me that favour, were I not afraid of offending their modesty.

(15) As to avoid equivocal expressions, verses, the use of particles in the same sentence which may refer to different parts of it, &c.

(16) Note, that I found it impossible to perform this promise in the second edition, the printers did not give me the necessary time to revise my first work, and to prepare the new, that is, the additions which have been very numerous.

Digitized by Google

occaſioned either by my being ſo attentive to other matters, that I have overlooked them in correcting the proofs; or by the printer's not being able to allow me the neceſſary time to mend what I did not like. The uſeful advices I have received from Mr DRELINCOURT (17), and his juſt and elegant corrections, which I have taken care to write in the margin of my copy, will be of infinite uſe to me in reviſing that edition.

(17) Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Leyden. See what has been ſaid of his perfect knowledge of the French tongue, in the article DRELINCOURT remark [C]. He has alſo furniſhed me with ſeveral learned obſervations. Obſerve, that for the reaſon alledged in the preceding marginal note, I could make very little uſe of them, no more than of the others which I had marked in the margin.

This is what I had to repreſent to thoſe who might think it ſtrange that my Dictionary coſt me ſo much time. But I muſt not neglect thoſe, who might believe I have made too much haſte. There are many who will be ſurprized to ſee two ſuch great volumes in Folio, finiſhed in leſs than five years. Many authors do not perfect a little book under a year, whether they look upon thoſe thoughts and expreſſions as mean, which they produce without a long meditation; or whether their buſineſs calls them frequently from their ſtudies; or whether a natural lazineſs, or too ſcrupulous an obedience to the precept they have learned at ſchool, interpone tuis interdum gaudia curis, engage them often to interrupt their labour. Thoſe gentlemen are eaſily prejudiced againſt a work that has not coſt much time; and they think it has not, unleſs a hundred printed ſheets have taken up three or four Years. They will apply to me, doubtleſs, the canis feſtinans cæcos edit catulos, and will be confirmed in their prejudice, by reading the particulars above-mentioned. They will abate from the labour ſpent upon things, all the time I have beſtowed upon avoiding verſes (18), and to the unity of relatives. They know it is a long and painful taſk, and that nothing requires more patience than a good ſeries of citations. They will not allow, that under pretence of having inſerted a great deal of foreign matter in this work, I may ſay I have enlarged it in a little time, without making much haſte. For, will they ſay, a juſt application of vaſt numbers of paſſages is a more laborious work, than a long train of reaſonings and reflexions (19). Theſe paſſages muſt be ſought out, they muſt be read with attention, they muſt be pertinently placed, and connected with your own thoughts, and with one another. It is impoſſible to make a quick progreſs, and do this perfectly well. I grant them this, but I intreat them not to apply to me the canis feſtinans, &c. before they have read my work. Prejudices are deceitful, and if they would have favourable ones, I will tell them that I remember Cato's Diſtich as well as they, interpone tuis interdum gaudia curis, &c. but that I very ſeldom make uſe of it. Diverſions, collations, journies into the country, viſits, and ſuch other recreations, neceſſary to a great many ſtudious men, as they ſay, are not my buſineſs: I loſe no time in them. Nor do I ſpend it in domeſtic cares, making intereſt for preferments, ſollicitations, or other affairs. I have been happily delivered from a great many occupations not very ſuitable to my humour, and I have had the greateſt and moſt charming leiſure that a man of letters could deſire. By this means an author makes a great progreſs in a few years; his work may receive conſiderable additions every day, and that without a negligent performance.

(18) The French proſe is full of verſes, unleſs one takes an extraordinary care to avoid that fault.

(19) See the remark [D], of the article EPICURUS.

III. Some Reaſons for quoting authors as I have done.

I doubt not but the method I have taken in quoting the paſſages of authors, will be cenſured. Many will ſay, I was reſolved to compile a large book with little expence: I have often cited very long paſſages; ſometimes I give the ſenſe of them, and then I ſet them down in Greek and Latin. Is not this multiplying things without neceſſity? was it neceſſary to tranſcribe a long quotation of a modern book, which is to be had in every bookſeller's ſhop? was it neceſſary to quote Amyot in his old French?

Digitized by Google

to give a good anſwer to thoſe critics, I do not think it neceſſary to deny that their objections are ſpecious. I confeſs they are plauſible, and they kept me in ſuſpence a long while; but at laſt more ſpecious reaſons determined me to the method I have taken. I conſidered that ſuch a work as this was to be inſtead of a library to a great many people. Many, that are lovers of learning, have not wherewithal to purchaſe books; others have not leiſure to conſult the fiftieth part of the volumes they buy. Thoſe who have leiſure enough, would be very unwilling to riſe every moment, to ſeek out the information they are referred to. They had rather find in the book they have before them, the very words of the authors, that are brought as evidences. If a man wants the edition cited, he loſes a great deal of time; for it is not always eaſy to find in one's edition, the page that an author cites in his own. And therefore out of a regard to the readers who have no books, and to the occupations, or lazineſs of thoſe that have libraries, I have taken care to ſhew them at once hiſtorical facts, and the proofs of them, with many diſcuſſions and circumſtances, that their curioſity might be fully ſatisfied. And becauſe many frauds are committed in the citations of authors, and thoſe who honeſtly abridge a paſſage, do not always expreſs the whole force of it, it is incredible how much judicious perſons are grown miſtruſtful. I may juſtly ſay, that it is a ſort of raſhneſs on a thouſand occaſions, to believe what is attributed to authors when their own words are not quoted. For which reaſon I was willing to ſet the reader's mind at reſt; and to prevent his ſuſpecting any fraud in my report, I make every witneſs ſpeak in his native language; and inſtead of imitating Caſtelvetro, who finiſhed his citations with & cætera, even before he had tranſcribed the neceſſary paſſage, I have ſometimes lengthened that paſſage both at the beginning and at the end, that the thing in queſtion might be underſtood, or ſomething elſe occaſionally learnt. I know this would be abſurd in a ſhort moral treatiſe, in a piece of eloquence, or in an hiſtory; but it is not ſo in ſuch a compilation as this is, in which I propoſe to relate facts, and then to illuſtrate them with commentaries. Such a method would be blameable, if inſtead of one volume it made two; or inſtead of a pocket-book, it produced a book in Folio or in Quarto. But the queſtion being only, whether a volume in Folio ſhall be longer or ſhorter by ſome ſheets, it is not worth the while to conſtrain one's ſelf. Had it but 250 ſheets, it would no more have the advantages of a little book, than if it contained 330 ſheets; for it muſt be well obſerved, that theſe large books are not made to be read page by page. They would coſt ſomewhat leſs, if they contained but 200 ſheets, will ſome ſay: I anſwer, that if a bookſeller went upon ſuch a rule, he would never print a work conſiſting of many volumes, though they contained nothing but ſolid thoughts without a ſyllable too much; for they would ſtill be too dear for thoſe that are in low circumſtances. The trouble of tranſlating Amyot, or Vigenere, into new French, would have been of no ſervice; it ſuffices that my reader can underſtand the facts they relate.

WHY Brantome and ſuch like authors are often quoted in this Dictionary.

Men of a grave and ſevere character will particularly blame the citations out of Brantome or Montaigne, that contain actions and reflexions two free and gallant. I muſt ſay a word or two to this. Some perſons of merit, who were concerned for the intereſts of the bookſeller, concluded, that ſo large a book as this, ſtuffed with Greek and Latin quotations in ſeveral places, and full of diſcuſſions little diverting, would frighten the readers who are not men of letters, and weary the learned; that therefore it was to be feared the ſale would quickly fall, if the curioſity of thoſe who do not underſtand

Digitized by Google

underſtand Latin was not excited by ſome other things. I was made ſenſible, that a work, which is bought only by the learned, ſeldom pays the printer, and that if any profit is to be made by an impreſſion, 'tis when a book can equally pleaſe the learned, and thoſe that have no learning; that it was therefore neceſſary for the ſake of my bookſeller, ſometimes to relate what authors who take ſome liberties have publiſhed; that the uſe of ſuch materials is like the liberty a man takes to write his own life; in ſome perſons, 'tis a ſign of arrogance (20), in others a juſt confidence in their virtue (21); and that I might juſtly place myſelf in the number of the latter; laſtly, that if I was too averſe to comply with this advice, I ſhould at leaſt ſuffer others to furniſh the bookſeller with ſuch memoirs, and even ſometimes with dogmatical reflexions that might excite attention. I promiſed them to have ſome regard to thoſe remonſtrances, and added, that I had no right to oppoſe their ſupplements; that I had left to the bookſeller a full authority to inſert, even without conſulting me, the memoirs his correſpondents and friends ſhould ſend him; and that I could wiſh they would do with reſpect to the whole book what they ſeemed to be willing to do in ſome places, that is, make ſuch additions, leave out ſuch things, and diſpoſe of my compilations as they ſhould think fit. 'Tis certain I always wiſhed to have no other ſhare in this work, than the care of compiling: I ſhould have been glad if others would have taken the pains to give a form to the materials, and to enlarge and ſhorten them; and I was well pleaſed when the perſons I ſpeak of aſſured me they would remember our converſation, which is a thing I deſire my readers to take notice of. As for the philoſophical reflexions which ſometimes have been carried pretty far, I think I need not make an excuſe for them; for ſince they only tend to convince man, that the beſt uſe he can make of his reaſon, is to ſubmit his underſtanding to the obedience of faith, they ſeem to deſerve the thanks of the faculties of Divinity.

(20) Plerique ſuam ipſi vitam narrare fiduciam potius morum quam arrogantiam arbitrati ſunt. Moſt people have been of opinion, that for a man to write his own life, is rather a mark of a juſt confidence in his virtue, than of his vanity. Tacit. in vita Agricolæ. cap. 1.

(21) See the remarks of the articles VAYER and VIRGIL.

IV. REMARKS on my being ſo bold as to criticize many authors.

I have but two or three words to ſay upon a thing which ſeems very important. I have related the errors of a great many perſons ſomewhat freely. Is not this a raſh and preſumptuous attempt? The anſwer to this queſtion would be very long, if I did not refer the readers to what I have ſaid upon it in my project (22). I intreat them to have recourſe to it. I only add, that without exceeding the bounds of humility, a man may obſerve ſome faults in the books of famous men, and yet have a profound admiration for them. When ſubaltern officers, or even common ſoldiers, ſay freely that their generals have committed ſome faults in the courſe of a campaign, they are ſometimes in the right; but they do not pretend to be better qualified than they to command an army; they acknowledge themſelves infinitely inferiour in capacity as well as in rank (23). That is my caſe. I further add, that when the queſtion is concerning a thing that is diſadvantageous to the memory of a man, I do not warrant the truth of it; I only relate what others ſay, and I quote my authors. 'Tis therefore to them, and not to me, that a man's relations ought to addreſs their complaints. A modern hiſtorian has declared in a preface, " That thoſe who have preſcribed the inviolable " laws of hiſtory (24), muſt be applied to, to give an account of thoſe laws, " if any one is diſſatisfied with them; and not the hiſtorians, who ought " indiſpenſably to obey; all the glory they can hope for conſiſting in the " execution of their orders." My cauſe is ſtill more favourable, ſince I only tranſcribe the authors already printed. Of the two inviolable laws of hiſtory mentioned by that hiſtorian, I have religiouſly obſerved that which

(22) Numero 6.

(23) Conſult this verſe of Horace. Quum de ſe loquitur non ut majore reprenſus. Sat. 10. lib. 1. v. 55.

(24) Ne quid veri non audeat, ne quid falſi audeat. Cicer. The words of Cicero, in his ſecond book de Oratore, fol. m. 74. A, are Quis neſcit primam eſſe hiſtoriæ legem, ne quid falſi dicere audeat, deinde ne quid veri non audeat? Who does not know that the firſt law of hiſtory is, not to dare ſay any thing that is falſe, and to dare ſay every thing that is true.

Digitized by Google

commands to say nothing that is false; as for the other, which bids us venture to say all that is true, I cannot boast that I have always observed it. I believe it sometimes inconsistent, not only with prudence but also with reason.

I would not have it thought that I glory to have said nothing but truth. I only can warrant my intention, and not my ignorance. I advance nothing as truth, when I am persuaded that it is a falsity (25); but how many things are there which I have not apprehended, or the ideas whereof have been confounded with one another during the composition? How often does it happen that our pen betrays our thoughts? We intend to put down a figure, or a man's name; and sometimes for want of attention, or even by too much attention to other things, we write another? And therefore I make no doubt, that besides my omissions, which are many, I have committed many faults. I shall think myself obliged to those, who will be so kind as to rectify me: and had I not relied upon the good advices of intelligent and equitable readers, I should have kept this work many years in my closet, according to the advice of the ancients (26), in order to correct it, and render it less unworthy of the public view: but considering I had materials left for two other large volumes, I hastened the publication of it. I easily understood that I should be more usefully and seasonably assisted, when the public should know what I want, and wherein I am wanting. I hope that with those helps the continuation of this work will be more perfect than otherwise it would have been. I shall immediately go about it whilst age will permit me (27). I see nothing wherein I can better and more pleasantly employ the leisure I am bless'd with, a leisure which seems to me preferable to all things (28), and which has always been earnestly wished for by the true lovers of study and learning; for how many men impatiently long for the time, in which they may say,

Me jam fata meis patiuntur ducere vitam
Auspiciis, & sponte mea componere curas (29)?

At last kind fate has such indulgence shown,
That now my life and labours are my own.

Besides I think I may reasonably say, that what I am going upon will be more considerable, by the nature itself of the materials, than what I offer at present. Chance and surprize had a greater share in it than a deliberate choice: the thing is this. I put off as long as I could the composition of the articles that seemed the most curious and of the greatest importance. I daily hoped for more materials, and new helps, and in the mean time I was preparing other things; whereby it happened on one hand, that the articles I composed took up a great deal of room; and on the other, that the materials for those I had put off were hugely multiplied. I could not therefore insert them in these two volumes, without prodigiously spoiling the proportion that is to be observed betwixt the letters of the alphabet. This obliged me to keep them till another time; for I cannot prevail with myself to say but little upon a large subject, when I can say a great deal. Therefore I rather chuse to be silent altogether, than to enter upon it. The proportion I have observed betwixt the letters of the alphabet, has been the reason of my referring some articles from one letter to another. The preference was therefore to be given to the articles I had promised; which was the reason why the letter for which they were designed had it's com-

(25) This ought to be understood of what I advance of my own; and of the great care I have taken faithfully to relate what I think to be the true sense of the authors quoted by me.

(26) Nonumq; prematur in annum. Horat. de arte poet. Keep it long by you and improve it still. CREECH.

(27) Dum supereſt Lacheſi quod torqueat, & pedibus me Porto meis nullo dextram ſubeunte bacillo, Juven. ſat. 3. ver. 27. While I walk upright, and old age is green, And Lachesis has somewhat left to spin. DRYDEN.

(28) Nec otia divitiis Arabum liberrima muto. Horat. Epiſt. 7. lib. 1. Nor would I sell my freedom and my ease, For rich Arabia or the richer seas. CREECH.

(29) See Virg. Æneid. lib. 4. ver. 340.

Digitized by Google

pleat extent, before thoſe could be made ready, which were to be very long. I wiſh my Readers may call this to mind, if at any time they ſhould wonder not to find an account of certain perſons in this work.

V. What courſe I have taken with reſpect to Moreri's Dictionary.

Here I ought to declare what courſe I have taken, with reſpect to Moreri's Dictionary. I. There are many ſubjects that I have paſſed over in ſilence, becauſe they are treated at large in his Dictionary. II. When I have given the ſame articles, I have been determined to it, either becauſe he was ſhort in his account, or becauſe having by me the lives of ſome eminent perſons, I was able to give a compleat narrative, or becauſe out of many ſeparate and curious things, I could make a pretty large Supplement. In each of theſe three caſes, I have induſtriouſly avoided the facts he has mentioned: but it was impoſſible to do it ſo abſolutely in the ſecond, as in the other two; for in abridging an exact narrative of the life of a great man, it is neceſſary to give a ſeries of his actions in order, and to make articles well connected, and in ſome ſort all of a-piece. Was it poſſible to do ſo, if I had abſolutely omitted every thing that has been already ſaid of that perſon? Therefore in a very few articles of this kind, it will be poſſible to aver that Moreri's Dictionary had related ſomething, that will be found intermixed with many new facts that I relate. But as this ſeldom happens, and that in inconſiderable points, I needed not have made this obſervation; and I only do it through a ſtrong habit of avoiding univerſal propoſitions, and having a regard in ſome caſes to the ſmalleſt exceptions: beſides, there are ſome occaſions in which a man can't be too cautious to prevent cavils. III. If I advance any fact that I have only from Moreri's compilation, I very carefully cite it. I miſtruſt it very much; and therefore I am reſolved to run no risk upon ſuch a ſecurity; I abandon it to the critics, it muſt anſwer for itſelf. IV. When I don't cite that writer, and yet I relate any thing that is to be found in his work, 'tis a certain proof I have it from another author. I could ſwear I have not ſtollen a word or a ſyllable from him: I quote him as often as I take the leaſt word from him, which very ſeldom happens; and I never omit citing him, but when I have diſcovered the things by as painful ſearches as if he had never mentioned them. V. I refer the reader to him for facts that are in the leaſt conſiderable. It would be an abſurd thing to make references for the day of a birth, the name of a native place, &c. for ſuch references would take up more room in a page than the things referred to, and would juſtly diſguſt the readers. VI. I have not pitched upon this method for fear of being accounted a plagiary. This had been a pannic and a very ridiculous fear; for no one has hitherto carried his extravagance ſo far, as to accuſe of plagiariſm ſuch as relate events that another has related, whilſt they derive them from the fountain-head, and uſe neither the turn, nor the order, nor the expreſſions of another; nor is it likely that it ſhould come into any one's head for the future, to give ſo abſurd a definition of plagiariſm; for it would lead us to this utmoſt point of impertinence, viz. that the moſt excellent hiſtorian, who ſhould undertake to write the life of Charles V, would neceſſarily be the plagiary of the moſt wretched chronicler, that collected rhapſodies upon the actions of this great prince. VII. I have put by themſelves, in a Remark, the errors I have imputed to Moreri. VIII. I have not touch'd upon thoſe that are found in the articles given by him, and not by me, though they are not leſs conſiderable, nor leſs frequent in theſe articles than in thoſe I have given. IX. I have followed the edition of Lyons 1688, which is the fifth and laſt that was printed in France. I am not ignorant that the Dutch editions are much better; but I thought it neceſſary to proportion my corrections to that, for the ſake of a great many people, who only make uſe of the editions printed in France, and who ſtill ſeek and purchaſe them preferably to the ſixth and ſeventh (30).

Digitized by Google

(30) These are violent Papists, who have been told that Moreri's zeal has often been check'd in the Dutch editions.

From all this it reſults, that my Dictionary is not deſigned to leſſen the ſale of the other; on the contrary it will increaſe it, and make the reading of it more uſeful.

For the ſake of youth, who want to have their judgment formed, and to be made ſenſible of the moſt ſcrupulous exactneſs, I have taken notice of the leaſt faults of Moreri in the ſubjects we both handle: as for the miſtakes that are in other places, I don't meddle with them, as I have ſaid before. I don't deſire that the contempt this may create for his labour, ſhould leſſen the acknowledgment that is due to him. I am of Horace's opinion with reſpect to thoſe who ſhew us the way (31): the firſt writers of Dictionaries have committed many faults, but they have done great ſervices, and deſerve a glory, of which they ought not to be deprived by their ſucceſſors. Moreri took great pains, his performance has been of ſome uſe to every body, and afforded ſufficient inſtructions to a great many. It has brought light into ſeveral places, where other books would never have done it, and where an exact knowledge of circumſtances is not neceſſary. It continues to diſperſe it into all parts, and with greater purity ſince the two Dutch editions. They are infinitely better than thoſe of France; for they have been reviſed by one of the ableſt authors of our age: I mean M. Le Clerc, whoſe profound learning, ſupported with a juſt and penetrating wit, and an exquiſite judgment, is admired by all Europe. He has corrected a vaſt number of faults and has made excellent additions; and no body could be better qualified to perfect this great work, if nobler and more important occupations would allow him to undertake that task. I can't bear the unjuſt caprices of thoſe who complain of the frequent editions of Moreri, and look upon the Booksellers that undertake them as public poiſoners.

(31) Hoc erat, experto fruſtra Varrone Atacino, Atque quibuſdam aliis, melius quod ſcribere poſſem, Inventore minor: neque ego illi detrahere auſim Hærentem capiti multa cum laude coronam. Horat. ſat. 10. lib. 1. ver. 46.
In ſatyrs I which Varro try'd in vain. And others too may have a happy ſtrain, Yet then Lucilius leſs I freely own, I wou'd not ſtrive to blaſt his juſt renown, He wears and beſt deſerves to wear the crown. Creech.

(33) Cicero relates the thing, but is none of those who blame it. Ipſi illi philoſophi etiam in illis libellis quos de contemnenda gloria ſcribunt, nomen ſuum inſcribunt; in eo ipſo in quo prædicationem nobilitatemque deſpiciunt, prædicari de ſe ac nominari volunt. Even these philoſophers have put their names to the books which they wrote concerning the contempt of glory; and deſire applauſe and fame by those very books wherein they pretend to deſpiſe both. Cicero pro Archia poëta fol. m. 164. D. See alſo Cicero. Tuſcul. quæſt. lib. 1. fol. 247. D. & Valerius Maximus. lib. 8. cap. 14. n. 3. in ext.

VI. Why the Author has prefixed his name to this work.

Thoſe, who ſhall ſee my name in the title-page of this book, and who know that during the time it was printing, I ſaid on all occaſions I would not prefix it, deſerve I ſhould ſay ſomething about it in this Preface. I have not only ſaid this on an hundred occaſions, but I have writ the ſame to ſeveral perſons; and many people know that all my friends have ſtrongly oppoſed my reſolution, and that the innumerable arguments, which the fruitfulneſs of their genius, and their generous goodneſs ſuggeſted to them, could gain nothing upon me. I don't blame thoſe who put their names to their works, but I have ever had a ſecret antipathy againſt it. There is no reaſon to be given of antipathies any more than of taſtes; and yet I might ſay that reflection has confirmed this natural diſpoſition. That wiſe indifference, ſo much celebrated by the ancient philoſophy, has always pleaſed me. That illuſtrious man, who laboured more to be a good man than to be thought ſo (32), who was always concerned how to practiſe virtue, but never to be praiſed for it, ſeemed to me long ago an excellent model; and never any cenſure appeared more judicious to me, than that which was paſſed upon ſome Philoſophers who put their names to thoſe pieces in which they condemned the deſire of praiſe (33). In effect, why do you blame thoſe that run after reputation, if you proclaim to the publick that you don't condemn ſuch a weakneſs? Purſuant to theſe notions, nothing ſeemed to me more noble than to ſhew in all the ſervices that are done to the public, the ſame diſintereſtedneſs that the Goſpel preſcribes in works of charity. Theſe were the maxims that moved me to ſuppreſs my name at the beginning of my Dictionary.

(32) Vir bonus eſſe quam videri malebat. He rather chose to be good than to be thought ſo. See the remark [H] in the article Amphiaraus; and the remark [L] in the article Cæsar.

Digitized by Google

But I shall not be believed by Detracters; they will think that my scruples were grounded upon the little honour that is to be got by appearing at the head of a large compilation, which they will call A common shore of Collections, a Rhapsody of a Transcriber, &c. Of all the employments, will they say, that can be had in the Common-wealth of Learning, there is none so contemptible as that of compilers: they are the drudges of great men. Indeed they are not useless: "Such people, said Scaliger (34), are the "drudges of learned men, they bring us all our materials; it is a great "help to us, such men are necessary". But are not the vilest professions necessary? and does their usefulness retrieve them from their sordidness? There is therefore more vanity than modesty, in declining the reputation of a drudging author, and endeavouring to get out of the class of those writers, whose productions are not so much the work of their minds, as the work of their bodies, and who carry their brains upon their shoulders. The detracters may believe what they please, there is no reasoning against them; and therefore I shall only say it is not through inconstancy, but in obedience to the supreme authority, that I have done what I have so often said I would not do. It was thought necessary, to compose the difference of some Booksellers, that I should name myself. Without this the Sieur Reinier Leers could not have obtained the licence which he thought he had an indispensible occasion for: I therefore pay a blind obedience; and for that reason should not fear even the rigorous tribunal of Cato the Censor himself (25).

(34) In Scaligeranis, voce du Maine, p. m. 148.

I have few words to add concerning my Errata, and two or three other small matters.

I comprehend under the word Errata my Additions and Corrections. If it was compleat it would contain more pages than it does. I do not lay them all to the Printer's charge, how much soever they exercise our patience, especially when they do not correct all that has been marked in the margin of the proofs. I have had experience of that fatality which attends the trade, and I forget it as much as I am able, animus meminisse horret. I however take part of the blame myself, but I beg of those who shall criticize me, to look carefully over my Errata. I beg of them also, when they shall find any thing that is wrong, to see whether it be not in the authors quoted by me; for if my translations be not literal, they are at least faithful as to the sense: they must therefore contain an irregularity, when my authors have spoken or thought confusedly.

If any think they have been groundlesly criticised in this Dictionary, and if they publish any piece in their justification, wherein they shall use the right of reprisals, I presume they will not take it amiss, that instead of interrupting my work, to answer them, I take the resolution of referring all this to the continuation of this Dictionary. I shall ingenuously confess my errors, and retract them without having recourse to cavilling, as is the common practice. I am sometimes more positive than I should be: but at the bottom I then only propose doubts; and if I speak in another strain, it is that I may the better excite the learned to afford me their instructions, and concur more zealously in the illustration of things.

I have almost every where followed the orthography of the learned; but I have placed the letter y in the Articles as if it was i. This has not been done in the Index, but I perceived it too late.

The 23d of October, 1696.

(25) Ποσείμιον Ἀλβῖνον, ἱστορίαν Ἑλληνιστὶ γράψαντα, καὶ συγγνώμην αἰτούμενον, ἐπέσκωψεν, εἰπὼν δοῦλον εἶναι τὴν συγγνώμην εἰ τῶν Ἀμφικτυόνων ψηφισαμένων ἀναγκασθεὶς ὑπέμεινε τὸ ἔργον. Plut. in Catone Majore. p. 343. B. He laughed at Posthumius Albinus, who wrote Histories in Greek, and desired his Readers to excuse his inaccuracies; saying, that he ought to be excused if he had been obliged to write in Greek by a decree of the Amphictyons.

ADVERTISEMENT

Digitized by Google

ADVERTISEMENT

CONCERNING THE Second French Edition.

(1) In the preface of the first edition.

THE firſt thing I am to acquaint the Readers with, is, that moſt of the remarks they have ſeen above (1), ſuit with, and ought to be applied to this ſecond edition.

I acquaint them in the ſecond place, that I have been very ſorry that a great many concurring circumſtances, with which it would be to no purpoſe to acquaint them, have put me under a neceſſity of joining to what had already been publiſhed, the new articles I was preparing. I knew that this might offend thoſe who have bought the firſt edition; but at laſt I hoped they would be ſo good as to accept of my excuſes.

They had no reaſon to imagine that the ſecond edition ſhould be no ways preferable to the firſt; for they muſt needs believe that I would correct all the errors which I could obſerve, and that the additions and corrections which were at the end of each volume would be inſerted in their proper places. That alone muſt give the preference to the ſecond edition, and diſpleaſe thoſe who had bought the other. It was therefore impoſſible not to diſoblige them in ſome degree. The queſtion then in that reſpect was only concerning doing ſo more or leſs; but on the other hand we were to give an intire ſatisfaction to thoſe who had not as yet purchaſed the book, but wanted to have it. They would have been very diſcontented if I had divided my work into two alphabets. One might probably preſume that the number of the latter was greater than that of thoſe who had already purchaſed the firſt edition. Long experience has taught us that alphabetic works of this ſort are frequently reprinted, even when they are very defective. We were therefore reduced to this alternative, either not altogether to pleaſe a certain number of people, or to give intire ſatisfaction to a much greater number: reaſon then required that we ſhould chuſe the laſt.

There was a middle way we might have taken: to wit, to print the additions apart, and likewiſe to inſert them in the ſecond edition. They who had not as yet bought it, would by this means have had the whole work under one alphabet; and they who had purchaſed it before, would have only been obliged to procure the additions, and would have found the inconvenience of two alphabets more tolerable than paying twice for the ſame thing. I ſhould have made choice of this expedient, if I had thought the additions would have been ſo large as they have proved; but when this ſecond edition was begun, I fancied they could not amount to more than a very few ſheets, and that it would not be worth the while to print them by themſelves. It proved quite otherwiſe during the courſe of the impreſſion; but the opportunity of taking that middle way was loſt, before we had reaſon to think that the additions would be ſufficient to fill a volume. More care ſhall be taken of this, if this ſecond edition ſhould be followed by any more; for in that caſe we ſhall take our meaſures, ſo that every one may have it in his power to buy ſeparately what ſhall be added.

Digitized by Google

If this excuſe is not ſufficient I will give another. The public ought to be ſo accuſtomed to frequent editions of Dictionaries, corrected and enlarged in every impreſſion, that it would be unreaſonable to take it amiſs that I have followed a cuſtom authorized by ſo many examples. I might produce a great many, but I content my ſelf with alledging Moreri's Dictionary, which has paſſed thro' nine editions in the ſpace of twenty five years, always with new additions and corrections. The ninth will doubtleſs be followed by many more, on the ſame footing, both in France (2) and in Holland. I ſhould not deſire to be pardoned if I was guilty of ſo many relapſes; but methinks the public ought to think me ſufficiently juſtified this firſt time, eſpecially ſince I have no deſign of doing ſo any more.

Let us ſay ſomething concerning this ſecond edition. It is not twice as large as the firſt, but it does not want much of it; and if it be not exempt from the faults of the firſt as much as it ſhould be, and as much as I deſired, it is however leſs faulty. As I was reviſing the firſt edition, I have found many miſtakes that proceeded from the negligence of the Printers. They have been rectified, as alſo many others, moſt of which were occaſioned by the authors quoted by me, whom I could not rectify, becauſe I had not by me the books neceſſary for it. There are ſome faults which I ſhould not have mended, had I not been informed of them; they will be eaſily diſcerned, for I have carefully mentioned the authors of the advices, illuſtrations, or ſupplements, that have been communicated to me (3). After all, I am not without great fears that there are more faults remaining than I have removed; 'tis the fate of Dictionaries to arrive ſlowly and by degree at perfection. Abundance of things are wanting to them when they firſt come out, which time gives them by ſlow degrees. Be it how it will, I have been ſo diſſatisfied with my firſt edition, in bringing it to the teſt of examination, that I diſown and diſclaim it (4), and will be anſwerable only for the things I have cauſed to be reprinted out of it: I expect from the readers equity, that if they will reprove me, they will take care to obſerve whether the paſſage they think faulty is to be found in the ſecond edition. I likewiſe earneſtly deſire them to examine whether the paſſage found fault with, be not corrected in the Errata, or in the Additions placed at the end of theſe three volumes.

There are ſome corrections that I have made, as it were ex officio, and in conſequence of an engagement of which the public was informed (5). I have done it with all imaginable care, and with the ſtrongeſt intention to ſatisfy the diſcontented. To this purpoſe I have ſtruck out of the article of DAVID every thing that could give offence. This is the greateſt ſuppreſſion that has been neceſſary: the others are not conſiderable, either for their number, nor their length. We have been able to amend all the reſt at the expence of ſome few words, or few lines; and chiefly by means of four Explanations which are at the end of this work.

I ſhall ſay but little of the Additions, not being willing to prepoſſeſs any body: let every one judge of them as they ſee cauſe. But I will not diſſemble, that the trouble they have given me has not permitted me to cor-

(2) The Literary news from Paris acquaint us that Mr Vautier is employed in a new edition of Moreri; and not only deſigns to augment and correct it, but alſo to new mould it. He is very capable of ſucceeding in it. It was he who gave the edition of Paris 1699.

(3) Either in general, or by naming the perſons, or placing aſterifms or points inſtead of their names, when I knew or thought they would not be named. There are few exceptions to this.

(4) This ought particularly to be underſtood of the copies that were reprinted, the proofs whereof I did not reviſe. The Printers have committed great miſtakes in thoſe copies.

(5) In a Letter concerning what paſſed in the Conſiſtory of the Walloon church of Rotterdam, in relation to the Critical Dictionary. That Letter is inſerted in the Life of Mr Bayle, under the year 1698.

Digitized by Google

rect the articles of the firſt edition with all the ſeverity and diligence I deſigned. It is very difficult for an author, whilſt the preſs goes on without any interruption, to do theſe three things; to reviſe two large volumes in folio, to inlarge them above one third part, and to correct the proofs.

Some Additions require that many places ſhould be mended and new moulded, to prevent contradicting one's ſelf, and writing nonſenſe. To correct a Dictionary well, a man ſhould never enlarge it; for it is with theſe works, as it is with towns and fruits. A town ſeldom receives a juſt ſymmetry and proportion, whilſt greater care is taken to enlarge it, than to repair the old houſes. Such an increaſe ſerves rather to ſhew it's diſproportions, and irregularities, than to remove them. And as for fruits, it is well known they never ripen, 'till they ceaſe to receive new juices. Such is the common fate of compilations. When they are reprinted, a greater care is taken to add new things, than to put the old ones in a better condition. An author is weary of the old ones he has read ſo often, and finds in the others the charms of novelty, which take up all his attention. This produces an ill effect; moſt of the old faults remain, and new ones are added to them.

Having been adviſed by ſeveral people not to ſuffer the Project or plan which I publiſhed in the year 1692, before ſome eſſays of this Dictionary, to be loſt; I have reprinted it at the end of the diſſertations which are in the laſt volume.

There are certain things of which I have ſaid in ſundry places, that I did acquaint my Readers with them once for all. It may happen that they will never light upon theſe paſſages, books of this kind not being uſually read through, from the beginning to the end: I have therefore been adviſed to mark here the places where I give any general advertiſements. For this purpoſe I believe it will be ſufficient to refer to the following articles: ANAXAGORAS, in the text at the end; ARISTANDER, Remark [B]; BEME; CAMDEN, Remark [D]; CARNEADES, Remark [B]; GOMARUS, Remark [B]; GOURNAI, Remark [D]; HAILLAN; MAHOMET II; PRIOLO.

OBSERVATIONS concerning the Index.

Several people have deſired me to place good Indexes at the end of the work. I agree that there are but few books where they are more neceſſary than in this. I had laid down pretty good plans, and perhaps I might ſay that there are few people more proper to execute them, than ſuch as have laboured a long while in making vaſt compilations; for if they have been at the pains to verify the paſſages (6), they muſt have been obliged to turn to the indexes every moment; they have been diſappointed there a thouſand and a thouſand times: they have thereby found their defects, and learned what is neceſſary in order to ſhun them. Poſſibly therefore I could have compoſed a good index; but I neither had the time, nor the patience, which ſo tedious and tireſome a taſk requires. Nay, I did not think it proper that the perſon, who was employed to make one, and who would have been able to have executed very exactly any plan that could have been laid down to him, ſhould engage himſelf in the detail which ſome readers deſired. They would have a particular index of authors cited, cenſured, or corrected, and ſo of an hundred things beſides. I conſidered that ſuch indexes would be ſo long, that they would diſguſt many people. I know by my own experience, and by that of many others, that articles of an index, filled with half pages of cyphers, are hardly of ſervice to any body; for where are the people, who in order to find out one paſſage, will give themſelves the trouble to conſult twenty? in an index

(6) Which I have done as often as I could, and always when I had a ſufficient number of books.

Digitized by Google

of Salmaſius's (7), the article of PLINY contains above three columns of cyphers, that of STRABO two, and that of THEOPHRASTUS near three. Of what uſe can this be to a reader? will he be ſtupid enough to employ a whole day to try his chance in this incredible quantity of pages quoted? the way to remedy this, would be to take notice that Pliny is quoted for ſuch and ſuch a thing, but if you do not make a new alphabetical diſtribution, the ſight of two or three pages, filled only with one name, will diſguſt every body. Now this alphabetical diſtribution, of what concerns each author that has been quoted, is a taſk for a gally-ſlave. Beſides, do we not know that there are hardly four readers among an hundred, who mind whether the index is good or not? moſt people never look into it: we ſhould therefore undertake a moſt fatiguing taſk, which would be of uſe only to very few. It is for theſe and many other reaſons, that I thought it would be ſufficient to give the index, which you will find at the end of this work, and to add only another index, which contains nothing but a liſt of the articles. Be pleaſed to obſerve, that the index doth not contain the names of all the authors which I have quoted; and when they are contained in it, all the paſſages where they are quoted, are not ſet down. People will therefore deceive themſelves if they reaſon thus, a certain author does not appear in the index, or appears but thrice, therefore he has not been quoted, or he has been quoted only three times.

(7) Salmaſius in the Index of authors quoted in his Exercitationes Plinianæ.

The chief reaſon which made me reſolve not to execute all the plans of indexes which I had conceived, was, that I thought a word of advice would ſupply all defects. Let the few readers who make uſe of that part of a book, only obſerve what follows.

When they meet with any thing worth remembering, they need only ſee whether it be in the table; and if it be not, it is but marking it themſelves in the margin of the table, under the word which they think moſt convenient, or on a paper by itſelf. It is the method that is taken by thoſe who find the tables of books defective, and deſign to prevent the damage they might receive by them.

Having received too late the memoirs for the article of the town of ETAMPES, and for thoſe of FEVRET, and the houſe MINUTOLI, which has afforded Cardinals, and many illuſtrious perſons of all ranks, I could not make uſe of them. I have alſo received too late an article ready made, and very well drawn up, viz. that of RALPH Archbiſhop of Bourges, ſon of Ralph, Count and Lord of Turenne.

(8) Theſe four articles have been inſerted in their proper places in this new edition.

It would not have been proper, methinks, to place all theſe articles in the Addenda, which are at the end of each volume (8). Very few people read theſe ſorts of Addenda, and no body approves that they ſhould fill many pages. I am ſo much perſuaded that they are but little conſulted, that I here once more beg of my readers not to condemn me upon any account, before they have examined my Addenda, where many things are corrected. I deſire them likewiſe, particularly to conſult there the additions to the articles BRUN (9), and BUDÆUS, in which I mention the ancient nobility of theſe two families; the addition to the article FONTEVRAUD, and to the article LEO X (10), and the article VERSORIS, which I give entire in the Addenda to the laſt volume (11).

(9) The Plenipotentiary of Spain at the peace of Munſter.

(10) I give there two Letters of this Pope, which were never printed, and are very curious.

I have nothing to ſay to thoſe, who complain that my work does not afford them a ſufficient number of things that ſuit with their taſte. It is the unavoidable fate of miſcellaneous writings. Each reader finds in them too much of one thing, and too little of another. Thoſe who love genealogies

(11) All theſe Additions have been inſerted in their proper places in this edition.

Digitized by Google

nealogies do not find enough of them: thoſe who do not love them think there are too many. Thoſe who delight in Philoſophical reaſonings, would have more of them; and thoſe who do not like them, would not have ſo many. Some wiſh I had not given the articles of ſo many Miniſters; others wonder I have omitted ſo many. I deſire them all to call to mind this ſaying of Pliny, "Let us forgive others their inclinations, that they "may forgive ours (12)." I ſhall quote upon this, a fine Paſſage of Scioppius (13).

other people's inclinations, that we may obtain excuſe for our own.

(12) Compare what is ſaid in the remark [F] of the article PO-QUELIN.

(13) Unde Seneca: non eſt, quod mireris, ex eadem materia ſuis quemque ſtudiis apta colligere. In eodem prato bos herbam quærit, canis leporem, ciconia lacertum. Cum Ciceronis libros de republica prehendit hinc philologus aliquis, hinc grammaticus, hinc philoſophiæ deditus, alius alio ſuam curam mittit. Et Plinius cum dixiſſet multos eſſe, quos ea quibus nos capimur & ducimur, partim ut inepta, partim ut moleſtiſſima offendant: Demus, inquit, alienis oblectationibus veniam ut noſtris impetremus. Scioppius, Elem. Philoſ. Stoicæ moralis, cap. 152. fol. 147. Therefore Seneca ſays: You need not wonder that every man from the ſame matter chooſeth what moſt ſuits his own ſtudies. In the ſame meadow the ox ſeeks for graſs, the dog for a hare, and the ſtork for a lizard. When a philologiſt, a grammarian, and a philoſopher, take up each of them Cicero's Treatiſe on government, they all apply their attention different ways. And Pliny, after obſerving that many people look upon thoſe things with which we are delighted, either as trifling or diſagreeable, ſays, Let us excuſe

If I have ſpoken of one family, rather than of another equally or more conſiderable, it was without any reſpect of perſons; the only reaſon of it was, that I had materials for ſome and not for others.

A particular anſwer is due to thoſe who have found fault with me for ſpeaking ſo little of great warriors: two things made me ſo barren in this reſpect; one is, as I have ſufficiently ſaid (14), that I have avoided falling in with the ſubjects of other Dictionaries, both as to the preſent and future editions. Moſt of the ancient and modern Generals of armies are to be found in Moreri; eſpecially the Conſtables, Admirals, and Mareſchals of France, &c. Theſe articles coſt only the pains of tranſcribing Father Anſelme. I was perſuaded, that all the famous northern and German warriors, would appear at large in Mr Chappuzeau's Dictionary. I did not therefore think it neceſſary to turn my thoughts that way. But I had ſtill a ſtronger reaſon, which was this: I did not find myſelf in a capacity to give the articles of great captains, ſuch as I ſhould have deſired. Father Anſelme's performance is a good and uſeful work, and required an incredible patience and very labourious enquiries, but it cannot ſatisfy the reader's curioſity. It is next to nothing to know that in ſuch a year a general took or relieved a town, or won a battle, &c. The reader is beſides willing to know what was his character; whether he excelled in courage, as Marcellus, or in prudence as Fabius Cunctator; whether he was better qualified to conquer, than to preſerve his conqueſts; whether his fiery and quick temper dazzled him in a battel, or whether he remained ſedate in the greateſt danger; by what wiſe and happy expedient he gained a battle that was almoſt loſt; by what fault he was overcome on ſuch an occaſion. The readers are alſo willing to know, whether in reality he got the victory, as the writers of his party affirm, or whether he loſt it, as the Writers of the other ſide maintain. Theſe diſputes are innumerable (15). I ſhould think myſelf obliged to diſcuſs them, and to compare the relations of both ſides, that by eſtabliſhing as a principle, the facts in which they agree, whether in relation to the battle or to it's conſequences, we might there, by way of induction, arrive at ſome ſort of certainty.

(14) In the preface to the firſt edition.

(15) The original cauſe of it is frequently this: That for political reaſons they uſe the name of Victory in the firſt relations of a battle, that are ſold about the ſtreets. This appellation takes root, tho' it ſhould be only a tranſient one: it is like a Chriſtian name, which remains to the laſt.

For example, if I ſpoke of the Mareſchal de Luxembourg, I would obſerve the character that diſtinguiſhed him from other generals, and be particular upon the occaſions in which he diſcovered what he excelled in, and in what his talents was but indifferent. I would avoid the miſtakes and omiſſions which I find about him in Moreri's Dictionary. I would not ſay that he "defeated the armies of Holland near Bodegrave, in 1672," that he took Bodegrave (16) in 1673, that he raiſed the Siege of Charleroi in 1674. For the firſt of theſe three facts (17) is an inexcuſable hyperbole, and the two others are wholly chimerical. I would not ſay, that in 1673 "he made his way through the enemy's army of ſeventy thou-"ſand men, though he had but twenty thouſand:" it is an hyperbole that would not be excuſed in a poet. I would not ſay, that in 1678 "he

(16) Note, that Bodegrave is but a village.

(17) See the article BODEGRAVE.

Digitized by Google

" he beat the Dutch army at St Denys, near Mons; but I would examine the queſtion who won the battle. I would not ſay, that in 1692 " he took " the enemy's cannon and baggage, &c. at Steinkerke;" it being a fact manifeſtly confuted by the very relation he gave of this battle, and which was immediately printed in France. I would not omit the rebellion he perſiſted in from the year 1649, to the Pyrenean treaty. I would not omit his campaign of Philipſburg (18), under pretence that he was mortified upon that account. I would not omit his impriſonment in the Baſtille, and would endeavour to dive into the ſecrecy of the proceedings of the Chamber of the Arſenal againſt him. This is the more requiſite for the honour of his memory, becauſe there went ſtrange and very ridiculous reports concerning his proceſs. I would examine what ſo many people imagine, though perhaps without much reaſon, that he would have done greater ſervices to France in his laſt campaigns, if he had not preferred his particular intereſt of keeping up the war to the public good, or if his orders had not been too limited. Thoſe men pretend that he headed the army, juſt as the Pope's legates headed the Council of Trent; that is, he was to wait every poſt for a new inſpiration. Laſtly, I would endeavour to find a true medium as to his morals, betwixt his funeral oration, and ſome pieces that have been printed (19).

(18) In 1676.

Every body will be ſenſible, that ſince I am not in a capacity of filling up a plan of this nature, I am very excuſable for not touching upon ſuch articles.

(19) I do not mean all; for moſt of them are ſo ſilly and impertinent ſatires, and ſo plainly calumnious, that they ought not to be credited.

I forgot to mention, in the preface of the firſt edition, one of the reaſons why I quote long Latin paſſages; which is, that many perſons who read my book are but little acquainted with French, but they are well ſkilled in Latin, and ſo by the help of the citation they can perfectly underſtand my meaning.

Such as will give themſelves the trouble to caſt their eyes upon the margins of this Dictionary, are deſired to remember, that the quotations I have marked with a figure, are thoſe which I have found in the authors, whoſe paſſages I relate. I am not anſwerable for them.

The 7th of December, 1701.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE LIFE OF MR BAYLE.

BY

Mr DES MAIZEAUX,

Fellow of the Royal Society.

Digitized by Google

A Letter from Mr DES MAIZEAUX to Mr DE LA MOTTE; who engaged him to write the Life of Mr BAYLE, which was prefixed to the last edition of his Dictionary, printed at Amſterdam in the year 1730.

SIR, LONDON, Dec. 13, 1729.

I Have at length finiſhed the taſk you was pleaſed to preſcribe me; but I am very much afraid that the performance will diſcover the ſhortneſs of the time in which I was obliged to compoſe it, and that my zeal to obey your commands, has thrown me into a precipitation prejudicial to my deſire of doing well. Tho' my materials were ready long ago, that was not enough; it was neceſſary to range and reduce them into order, which was no ſmall matter. I am fully perſuaded that you are too much my friend, not to be ſatisfied with my endeavour, and that you will excuſe the defects of this piece, on account of my eagerneſs to gratify your deſire. But tho' a friend regards principally the good intention, the public conſiders only the performance. It is impoſſible but being ſo hurried, I muſt have ſometimes too much contracted what ought to have been enlarged, and too much enlarged what ought to have been contracted. The ſtile likewiſe is very incorrect, and I do not even know but I have been guilty of ſome inconſiſtencies: for having ſent you the ſheets as faſt as I compoſed them, I have not as yet ſeen the work entire, and conſequently could not compare the ſeveral parts together. I could wiſh the public were apprized of this, which might incline the reader to excuſe my faults: and ſince you are the occaſion of the evil, you are in ſome ſort obliged to apply the remedy. Be ſo good, therefore, as to join to it a ſhort Advertiſement, which may ſerve as an apology for me. But above all things, do not forget to take notice, that when you engaged me to write theſe Memoirs, the impreſſion of the Dictionary was finiſhed, and they had actually begun to print the Index.

But after having ſhown my performance in it's worſt light, you may likewiſe ſet it off by ſhowing it's fair ſide. However defective the form may be, you may, Sir, ſpeak with aſſurance of the matter, ſince that is none of mine. I had very good materials to go upon. After the death of Mr BAYLE, the Earl of SHAFTSBURY, his friend, deſired me to communicate to him all that I could gather concerning his life and writings. I addreſſed myſelf immediately to Mr BASNAGE, who furniſhed me with a great many particulars, which I inſerted in the account my Lord SHAFTSBURY had deſired of me, a very imperfect Engliſh tranſlation of which was publiſhed in 1708. Mr BAŸZE acquainted me alſo with ſeveral circumſtances relating to Mr BAYLE's youth. He was his relation. I might likewiſe name Mr DE LA RIVIERE, Mr ABBADIE, Mr HUET, &c. Mr BAYLE's Letters, which I have publiſhed, were of infinite ſervice to me. Laſtly, I had a ſure guide to fix the dates of his journies, of his ſtudies, of the compoſition and impreſſion of his works, and of the different circumſtances he was in during the firſt forty years of his life. This guide is Mr BAYLE himſelf, who has left us an hiſtorical and chronological journal of his life, under the title of Calendarium Carlananum. For this journal I am obliged to Mr MARAIS, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who was pleaſed to ſend along with it ſuch illuſtrations as I wanted. I am alſo indebted to him, for the Letters which relate to the Queen of Sweden, and for ſome other important pieces which you will find in this work.

I have joined to Mr BAYLE's Life three ſmall pieces, which will ſerve for vouchers, and may be placed at the end by way of appendix. The firſt is the Calendarium Carlananum; the tranſlation of it explains what is either expreſſed very briefly, or by abbreviations in the original. The ſecond is the Ordonnance of Mr DE LA REYNIE, Lieutenant-General of the Police, at Paris, containing a condemnation of the Critique Generale de l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme de Mr MAIMBOURG; there is ſomething very ſingular in it. The third contains the Acts of the Conſiſtory of the Walloon Church of Rotterdam, concerning Mr Bayle's Dictionary; in which is to be found, the whole procedure of that conſiſtory, together with Mr BAYLE's declarations: this piece has not as yet been publiſhed.

Out of all this, Sir, you may chooſe what you think proper for your advertiſement. I think you cannot avoid naming the perſons who have furniſhed me with memoirs. This is an acknowledgment which is due to them. But I can ſafely rely upon you in this matter, my intereſts cannot be in better hands. It therefore only remains, that I beg the continuance of your friendſhip, and that I aſſure you of the great devotion with which I ſhall always be,

SIR,

Your very humble and moſt obedient ſervant,

P. DES MAIZEAUX.

Digitized by Google

THE LIFE OF Mr BAYLE.

1647. MR (PETER) BAYLE, was born at Carla, a ſmall town in the county of Foix, betwixt Pamiers and Rieux, on the 18th of November 1647. His Father, deſcended from a good family, originally of Montauban, was named JOHN. He was miniſter of Carla, and married Jane de Bruguiere, whoſe mother was of the family of Ducaſſe; ſo that Meſſieurs Bayle were related to two families of diſtinction in the county of Foix, Ducaſſe, and Chalabre of which that of Bruguiere is a branch. He had two brothers; one elder called JACOB, who was colleague to his father, and a younger, named JOSEPH, and ſirnamed du Peyrat, from an eſtate belonging to the family.

Mr Bayle diſcovered from his infancy, a ſubtile and lively genius, an eaſy and quick conception, and a very extraordinary memory; and all theſe were attended with another talent, abſolutely neceſſary to the improvement of theſe excellent qualities, a ſtrong deſire after knowledge and inſtruction. He would frequently aſk queſtions of his parents, and wait for their anſwers with the utmoſt eagerneſs and attention, and would not be ſatisfied with ſuch as they gave him, 'till he fully comprehended them, and what he learned in this domeſtic ſchool he never forgot. His father cultivated theſe happy diſpoſitions with the utmoſt care. After having taught him Latin, he made him ſtudy the Greek language at the age of twelve 1660. years and a half (1), and for ſome years improved his knowledge of both theſe languages, by the reading of the beſt authors. But at laſt the functions of his miniſtry taking up a great deal of his Time, and finding his ſon capable of a greater progreſs than he could poſſibly make under him, he took the reſolution of ſending him to the Academy of Puylaurens. Mr Bayle arrived there in the month of February
1666. 1666 (2). He was then in his nineteenth year; but neither the paſſions which ordinarily have the ſway at that age, nor his abſence from his parents, could in the leaſt weaken the ſtrong paſſion he had for letters: he made even the hours that are given to recreation ſubſervient to it; and while the other ſcholars were engaged in the amuſements which are ſo dear to youth, he uſed to retire to his chamber, and there devote himſelf to the pleaſures ariſing from ſtudy.

In the month of September following (3), he took the opportunity of the vacation to make a viſit to his father. But even this ſeaſon which is deſigned for diverſion, was to him a time of labour: he applyed himſelf ſo cloſely to his ſtudies, that he fell ſick; and hardly was he recovered, when giving himſelf up a-new to this favourite paſſion, he ſickened again, and in this manner by frequent relapſes he was detained 1668. at Carla, above eighteen months. After this he was ſent to Saverdun (4), to the houſe of Mr Bayze, who had married his aunt Paula de Bruguiere. The deſign of this journey was for the change of air, and to divert him from ſtudy, but unluckily he found books there. Mr Rival, miniſter of Saverdun, had a large collection of them, which was ſuch a temptation to young Bayle, as almoſt coſt him his Life. His continual ſtudy threw him into a dangerous fever, which held him a long time, and of which he with great difficulty recovered. As ſoon as he was in a condition to go abroad, they removed him to a country houſe of Mr Bayze's, ſcituate upon the banks of the Auriege, which makes the place very agreeable. The remembrance of the happy moments he ſpent near that river, was the occaſion of his conſecrating an article to it in his Dictionary (5).

(1) June 29, 1660.

(2) Febr. 12, 1666.

(3) Sept. 9.

(4) May 29, 1668.

(5) See the Article AURIEGE.

When

Digitized by Google

When he was perfectly recovered, he returned to Carla (6), and ſoon after to Puylaurens (7), to proſecute his ſtudies. He reſumed them with new vigour, and, together with his academical exerciſes, he read all ſorts of books that came in his way, not even excepting books of controverſy: but Plutarch and Montaigne were his favourite authors. The long ſtay he had made at home with his father, before he went to the academy, and his frequent indiſpoſitions afterwards, had ſo much retarded his ſtudies, that he did not begin his Logic, 'till he was one and twenty. So that it is not without reaſon, that he complains in one of his books (8), that he begun his ſtudies late.

(6) Sept. 28.

(7) Nov. 5.

(8) In a pamphlet intituled, Reflexions ſur un imprimé qui a pour titre, Jugement du public ſur le Dictionnaire Critique, §. 19. p. 8. That is, Reflexions on a Pamphlet intituled, The Judgment of the Public, concerning the Critical Dictionary: which ſee at the end of the laſt volume.

1669.

He redoubled his application to make up the time he had loſt; and the progreſs made at Puylaurens, not being in his apprehenſion ſufficiently quick, he reſolved to leave that academy in order to go to Toulouſe, one of the moſt celebrated univerſities in France. He arrived there in the month of February 1669 (9); and taking lodgings in a private houſe, attended the philoſophical lectures, which were read in the Jeſuits college. There was nothing very extraordinary in this. The Proteſtants often ſent their children to ſtudy under the Jeſuits, though this had been forbidden by the ſynods. Mr Bayle's ſtay at Toulouſe, however, had very melancholy conſequences for his family, here he changed his religion. The books of controverſy which he had read at Puylaurens, had already ſhaken him; and his doubts were increaſed at Toulouſe, by ſome diſputes he had with a prieſt, who lodged in the ſame houſe with him. He thought his opinions were falſe, becauſe he could not anſwer all the arguments that were objected to him; and, a month after his arrival at Toulouſe, he embraced the Roman Catholic religion (10). He was matriculated, and the next day reſumed the ſtudy of Logic.

(9) Febr. 19.

(10) Mar. 19.

The news of his change was in the utmoſt degree afflicting to all his relations, and particularly to his father, who loved him tenderly. Mr Bertier, biſhop of Rieux, rightly judging, that after this ſtep young Bayle had no reaſon to expect any aſſiſtance from his relations, generouſly took upon himſelf the charge of his maintenance. Mr Bayle makes a grateful acknowledgment of it in a letter which he wrote in the year 1693, to Mr Pinſon, Advocate of the Parliament of Paris [A].

They valued themſelves very much at Toulouſe upon this acquiſition of a young man of ſo great hopes, and whoſe merit was heightened by his being ſon to a miniſter. When it came to his turn to defend Theſes publickly, it was reſolved that the ſolemnity ſhould be performed in a ſplendid manner. The moſt diſtinguiſhed perſons, both of the clergy, parliament, and city, aſſiſted there: there had never been ſeen in that univerſity ſo auguſt and numerous an audience. The theſes were adorned with the picture of the Virgin (11), to whom they were dedicated, and this picture was accompanied with ſeveral emblematical figures, repreſenting the converſion of the reſpondent. The perſpicuity, the penetration, and the modeſty, with which he anſwered his opponents, procured him an univerſal applauſe.

(11) Holding the child JESUS in her arms.

Mr Ros de Bruguiere, one of his uncles by the mother's ſide, who was married to a Roman Catholic lady, being at Toulouſe when Mr Bayle defended his theſes, carried a copy of them to Carla, which Madam Ros de Bruguiere hung up as an ornament in her chamber. Mr Bayle's father being come to viſit Mr Ros de Bruguiere, they acquainted him in what manner his ſon had diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the public diſputation, the honours which had been done him, and the applauſe he had received. The good man heard this with pleaſure, and ſeemed for a moment to have forgot the grief with which his ſon's change of religion had afflicted him. But Madam Ros de Bruguiere having ſhewed him the theſes, as ſoon as he ſaw the figure of the Virgin, with theſe words, VIRGINI DEIPARÆ (12), he was ſeized with ſuch indignation, that he made an effort to get near it; but was ſtopped leaſt he ſhould

(12) To the Virgin Mother of God.

[A] Mr Bayle makes a gratefull acknowledgment of it in a Letter he wrote to Mr Pinſon in 1693.] What follows had been publiſhed in the MENAGIANA: Mr Bayle is ſon to a miniſter. The biſhop of Rieux, who had contributed to his converſion, made him ſtudy at Toulouſe, at his own charges; but after he had finiſhed his ſtudies, he joined himſelf again to that ſect which he had left. Theſe expreſſions appeared too general to Mr Bayle. He complained of them to Mr Pinſon. "The manner, ſays he (a), in which Mr Menage has "ſpoke concerning me is a little too looſe, and apt "to give falſe ideas; every body, from theſe words, "will imagine, that I went through all my ſtudies "under the protection, and by the liberality of the "biſhop of Rieux: the whole of the matter is this. "After I had finiſhed the ſtudies of Grammar, Latin, and Rhetoric, partly under my father's care, "partly at the academy of Puylaurens; I began to "ſtudy Philoſophy at that academy, and continued "to do ſo only about four or five months. Afterwards I went to Toulouſe full of doubts concerning my religion, occaſioned by the reading of books "of controverſy. I chanced to lodge in the ſame "houſe with a prieſt, who, by his diſputes with me, "increaſed them, and at laſt perſuaded me that I "profeſſed a falſe religion. I ſeparated from it, and "continued the ſtudy of Philoſophy in the Jeſuits "college at Toulouſe. The biſhop of Rieux, in "whoſe dioceſe I was born, hearing of my change "and the indignation of my family againſt me, and "beſides, that I was ſtudious, of blameleſs morals, "and had ſome meaſure of genius, honoured me "with his protection, and gave me money to pay my "board, for I received none from home becauſe of "my father's diſpleaſure. Thus I finiſhed my ſtudy "of Philoſophy: that is to ſay, I ſtaid at Toulouſe "18 months, after which the impreſſions of my education having regained the aſcendant, I thought "myſelf obliged to return to the religion in which I "was born, and went to Geneva where I proſecuted "my ſtudies. I do not ſay this, as if I were aſhamed of the favours of that great prelate, I ſtill retain "the remembrance of them with reſpect, and with "the utmoſt gratitude. But ſtill we are bound, both "on our own account and that of the public, to prevent peoples forming falſe, extravagant, and hyperbolical ideas of things, &c."

(a) This Letter was never printed before.

Digitized by Google

1670. have tore it to pieces in the tranſport of his grief. He left the houſe with precipitation and ſhed a flood of tears, proteſting that he would never return thither, while ſo ungrateful an object preſented itſelf to his ſight.

In the mean time, the catholics, not content with having gained young Bayle, formed a deſign of bringing over the whole family; and for this purpoſe they thought it proper to begin with the elder brother. The biſhop of Rieux laid his commands on Mr Bayle to write to him, and at the ſame time aſſured him, that if he could only perſuade him to come to Toulouſe his converſion was ſure. Mr Bayle believing ſincerely that he had embraced the right ſide, and bearing a great affection to his brother, wrote him the following Letter (1).

(1) This Letter is dated the 15th of April 1670. I have the original in my hands. The direction is To Mr Bayle, the ſon, Miniſter of Carla, at Carla.

My very dear Brother,

"THE great affection that I have for you, and the paſſionate deſire I have for " your happineſs, won't permit me to omit any occaſion of procuring your " welfare. I find myſelf under a neceſſity of begging of you, in the moſt earneſt
" manner, to come and paſs a few days in this city, that I may have an oppor" tunity of talking to you of ſeveral matters, which are of the utmoſt importance
" to you, both with regard to this life, and that which is to come. I perſuade
" myſelf, that if I had the liberty of diſcovering to you the ſtate of things as they " really are, and the favourable diſpoſition in which they are at preſent, I ſhould
" be able to make ſome impreſſion upon your mind, and make you confeſs that
" the ſupreme wiſdom, which governs the world, has laboured in a very parti" cular manner in directing the motion of ſo many ſprings; and that as it doth
" nothing that is not conducive to the advancement of it's own glory and our
" ſalvation, it has been pleaſed, by bringing together ſo many different things,
" which all ſeem to conſpire for your advantage, to endeavour the moſt happy and " glorious change, which can poſſibly be wrought in my father's mind, and in " your's.

" You will without doubt ſay that all theſe are myſteries which you do not " at all underſtand, that they are riddles to you; but I aſſure you that if I had
" but a little converſation with you on this ſubject, you would eaſily comprehend my " deſign, and would ſee as clear as day, what good foundation I had for aſſuring
" you, that this diſpoſition which has ordered ſuch a number of things, in which you " have a great concern, is ſo favourable to you, that there is all the reaſon in the world
" to hope ſomething ſupernatural from it.

" I ſhall not explain myſelf more clearly upon this ſubject, becauſe I hope that " you will not refuſe me the favour I deſire of you of coming to ſee me as ſoon as
" poſſible, and then we ſhall have an opportunity of talking more at large about it,
" in the private converſations we ſhall have together. Come therefore, my dear bro" ther, if it be poſſible, before the end of this week; come and ſatisfy the impatience of " one who languiſhes for you, and ardently deſires that you would put yourſelf in a " condition of being happy. I aſſure you that you ſhall not repent your coming,
" what I have to ſay being of ſuch a nature as is proper to ſatisfy a ſolid and reaſona-
" ble mind ſuch as your's.

" And ſurely I ſhould wrong you, if I believed that you were ſick of an incurable
" diſtemper, to ſuch a degree too as to approve of nothing but what is agreeable to " your own notions. I entertain a better opinion of you, and thoſe who know you " make no difficulty of believing, that a perſon of ſo good a natural diſpoſition, and
" of ſuch probity as you profeſs, may be brought to reliſh any reaſonable opinion,
" however ſtrange it may appear at firſt ſight, and however ſtrong your prejudices
" may be to the contrary. Upon this foundation I aſſure myſelf, that what I have to
" ſay to you will not diſpleaſe you, nor ſtartle you ſo far as to make you capable of " altogether ſhutting your ear againſt whoſoever ſhall deſire to talk to you about it.

" If I had addreſſed myſelf to a great many people, and begged of them the fa" vour of a hearing which I deſire of you, it might indeed happen that they would
" preſently ſuſpect and diſtruſt me, and condemn all I ſhould be able to ſay to them:
" but as for you, I believe you are not capable of condemning me without hearing me;
" and if it was only out of curioſity, methinks you will be deſirous to know what this " matter may be, and that you will ſuſpend your judgment 'till you know what it is:
" in which I can obſerve nothing in your mind but a diſpoſition to do well.

" I ſhould want no more, to give me a foundation for good hopes, than to be aſſured
" that you are reſolved to form this concluſion, which is founded upon a truth con" firmed in the moſt inconteſtable manner, by the experience of all ages; to wit, that
" in matters of religion, all innovations are moſt pernicious, and that a private perſon
" who pretends, by his own authority, to ſet himſelf up for a Reformer, can be thought
" no other than a factious perſon, a ſchiſmatic, a ſower of tares, and, in ſhort, a perſon
" filled with pride, obſtinacy, and envy. And indeed what probability is there, that God
" ſhould ſuffer the Chriſtian Church to fall to ruin and deſolation, that he ſhould hide
" his light from it, and deprive it of his illumination; while, in the mean time, he in-
" veſts a private perſon, with ſo extraordinary an abundance of his grace, that he " ſhall

Digitized by Google

" ſhall become the reſtorer of truth, a light to guide into the right path thoſe who 1670.
" go aſtray; and, in ſhort, the chanel and vehicle, the baſe and pillar, of true faith;
" ſo that one might ſay of him, as the poet ſays of a young prince who ſeemed to " be born for the glory of that age,

Hunc ſaltem everſo juvenem ſuccurrere ſæclo
Ne prohibete (1).

(1) Virgil. Georg. lib. i. v. 500, 501.

" In truth we muſt be both raſh, imprudent, and blind, to ſuffer ourſelves to be " perſuaded of ſuch chimera's. It is much more agreeable to the order of God's " providence, and to the care which the Holy Ghoſt takes of the faithful, in go" verning the church, by the communication of his divine aſſiſtance, which he be-
" ſtows upon the vicegerents of the ſon of God upon earth, that the church ſhould
" inſtruct, correct, and reform, private perſons, and the abuſes which they may have
" ſuffered to creep into their conduct, and cure them of their errors, rather than " that private perſons ſhould reform the church and ſet it to rights again. For
" as it would be very fooliſh to maintain, that God, when he intended to preſerve
" ſome perſons from the waters of the flood by whom he might reſtore the human " race, ſhould drown thoſe who were in the ark of Noah, and at the ſame time
" ſhould raiſe up I don't know what perſon, who had ſaved himſelf and his wife
" in ſome cavern, or who had eſcaped the fury and inclemency of the waves in
" I don't know what inviolable ſanctuaries: ſo it is as extravagant, and without " foundation, to pretend that the Holy Spirit, in order to accompliſh his deſign of preſer-
" ving always a little of the leaven of faith from the ravages of infidels and heretics,
" has ſuffered the church, which is his ſpouſe, to fall into idolatry, ſuperſtition, and error,
" and has drawn out Luther and Calvin from the obſcurity of a cell, or the corner
" of a chapel, to propagate the faith, reſtore it to it's rights, and raiſe it up from " under it's ruins.

" Indeed one might think, tho' without the leaſt appearance of reaſon or truth,
" that God would preſerve theſe two men to propagate the goſpel, during that " general corruption which they ſuppoſe to have ſpread over the whole face of the " church, becauſe they had preſerved themſelves pure and clean from all thoſe diſ-
" orders and pretended abominations; as he preſerved Lot and Noah, as a reward " for their not having polluted themſelves with the vices of the ages in which they " lived. But to entertain any ſuch thought, one muſt be altogether ignorant of things
" the moſt univerſally known, ſince it is notorious, that theſe two great ſticklers for " Reformation were altogether abandoned and immerſed in vice (2); not to obſerve
" that they ſet out in an extremely criminal manner, that is to ſay, that they began
" by violating thoſe vows, of which both piety and juſtice required the ſtricteſt ob-
" ſervance (3).

(2) See Mr Bayle's Critique Generale de l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme. Lettre xi. § 8; and in the Critic. Diction. the Articles CALVIN and LUTHER, where you will find a defence of theſe two Reformers.

" Theſe, dear brother, are the reflexions with which I would have you fortified,
" when you ſhall come to this town, for aſſuredly you will thereby become more apt
" to receive inſtruction. Beſides all this, the precarious and weak condition of your " whole party, which exiſts in this kingdom only by toleration, and becauſe the " King is not in the humour of extirpating you, makes me fear on your account
" every time I think of it. And indeed to ſubſiſt only becauſe the fancy of a prince,
" who may do whatever he pleaſes in this matter, doth not incline him to ſuſpend
" his concourſe by which you are preſerved, is it not to be expoſed to deſtruction every " hour of the day, ſince there is not one in which the humour of a prince may not
" paſs from one extremity to another.

" I have therefore great reaſon to wiſh, that you would imitate the Phariſees and
" Saducees who came to John's baptiſm, of whom he aſked who had perſuaded them
" to fly from the wrath to come? I hope one day we ſhall be able, through the " grace of the Holy Ghoſt and the bleſſing of God, to aſk you a like queſtion, which " would be both very agreeable and advantageous for you. For this I pray to the " ſovereign Lord of all things, and would willingly beſtow the laſt drop of my " blood to procure your ſalvation. This I ſay not only on your account in parti" cular; but likewiſe on the account of my father, mother, ſecond brother, and all my
" relations: too happy, if, like another Joſeph, I could be the inſtrument of ſaving
" all my family! Adieu, my dear Brother: reflect on what I have ſaid to you,
" and come as ſoon as poſſible, to know what he would ſay to you who is your
" moſt humble, moſt obedient, and moſt affectionate ſervant. You will ſee the ac-
" compliſhment of that which St Paul ſays; he who ſeeks after the kingdom of God and
" his righteouſneſs, all other things ſhall be added unto it (4)."

(3) See Critique Generale, &c. Lettre ix.

(4) Theſe words are not of St Paul, but of JESUS CHRIST; Goſpel of St Matth. Chap. vi. ver. 33.

This letter made no great impreſſion upon Mr Bayle's elder brother, with regard to religion. He was equally inſenſible to the flattering hopes it gave him, and to the common-places of controverſy it oppoſed to him: but he was very much alarmed by ſome expreſſions, which made him fear leaſt his brother, together with the Roman Catholic religion, had imbibed that fourneſs of ſpirit, with which it inſpires it's devotees. His father, more indulgent, attributed them to ſome buſy prieſt who had 1670. dictated the letter. He said that he saw nothing of his son in it, and that he hoped to see him very soon return into the good way.

Digitized by Google

Mr Naudis de Bruguiere, his cousin-german, a young gentleman of a great deal of wit and penetration, was at this time at Toulouse. He lodged in the same house with Mr Bayle. They disputed frequently about religion; and after warmly pushing the arguments of each side, they used to examine them cooly over again. Mr Naudis was well acquainted with his religion: the strict friendship that was betwixt them banished all bitterness from their debates, and rendered them more free and more impartial. These familiar disputes, which seemed to be entirely accidental, frequently embarassed Mr Bayle, and made him suspect several opinions of the church of Rome, insomuch that he sometimes inwardly condemned himself for having embraced them without being sufficiently acquainted with them. For he looked upon examination in matters of religion, to be an indispensible duty, being the only means to assure one's self of the truth, and consequently of knowing the will of God, and of putting one's self in a condition of following it. He was the more confirmed in these sentiments by observing, that whatever submission the church of Rome exacts, it was notwithstanding by the way of examination, that they thought fit to bring about his conversion.

About the same time Mr de Pradals de Larbon came to Toulouse. He was one of those men, who by their wit, gaiety, and manners, at first sight gain the affection of all who see them. Accordingly he was very much caressed by persons of the greatest distinction in that province. Mr Bayle, the father, had desired him to visit his son as oft as he went to Toulouse: he hoped that Mr Pradals would very soon gain the confidence of the young Bayle; and in fact he succeeded so well, that Mr Bayle one day confessed to him, that he believed he had been a little too hasty in the new party he had chosen, and that now he found several doctrines in the Romish religion, which appeared to him contrary both to reason and scripture. Mr de Pradals, charmed with this confession, presently communicated it to Mr Bayle's family, to their inexpressible satisfaction. They presently resolved to send his elder brother to him, and begged of Mr de Pradals to manage their interview. Mr Bayle's eldest brother being gone to Toulouse with Mr de Pradals, the latter invited young Bayle to dine with him, as it was his custom to do. After some discourse, when the servants had retired, Mr Bayle the elder, who was in a closet, came out and shewed himself to his brother. All that joy, grief, and surprize have most strong at once seized the young Bayle, so that he was not able to utter a word, he threw himself at his feet, and burst out into tears. Mr Bayle, the elder, could not refrain his, and raising him up he spoke to him in so tender a manner, that the young Bayle discovered the bottom of his heart to him, by telling him how impatient he was to leave Toulouse, and renounce the errors which had seduced him. In the mean time, as his escape would certainly incense, the bishop of Rieux and the Jesuits, they thought it necessary to take some precautions, which delayed Mr Bayle's departure for some days. It was in the month of August 1670, that he put this design in execution.

He departed secretly from Toulouse (1), where he had staid eighteen months, and retired to Mazeres in the Lauragais, to a country house of Mr du Vivié, six leagues from Toulouse, and three from Carla. His elder brother came there the day after, with certain ministers of the neighbourhood; and the next day (2), Mr Rival, Minister of Saverdun, received his abjuration in presence of his elder brother, of Mr Guillemat Minister of Mazeres, and of Mr Rival Minister of Calmont and nephew to the minister of Saverdun. The very same day they made him set out for Geneva [B].

(1) Aug. 19.

(2) Aug. 21.

[B] Mr Bayle has himself given us the history of his change of religion, and of his return to the protestant church.] "The truth of the matter is (a), that "Mr Bayle, while he studied philosophy in the "Academy at Puylaurens, did not confine himself so "closely to what was dictated by his professor, as "not likewise to read some books of controversy, "not with the disposition with which most people do "so, I mean to confirm himself in his preconceived "notions, but to examine agreeably to the great Pro-"testant principle, whether the doctrine he had been "taught from his infancy was true or false: which "requires that we should hear both parties. Upon "this account he was curious to see the arguments "of the Roman Catholics in their own writings. He "found so specious arguments against the doctrine "which denies that there is any living judge upon "earth, to whose decisions private persons are obliged "to submit, when there arise disputes about matters "of religion, that not being able to answer these ob-"jections to himself, and much less to defend his "principles against some subtile controversists with "whom he disputed at Toulouse, he thought himself "a schismatic, and out of the way of salvation, and "bound to join himself again to the flock, from "which he looked upon the Protestant communions "as branches lopped off. Being re-united to it he con-"tinued the study of philosophy (b), in the college "of the Jesuits, as do almost all who study in Ro-"man Catholic countries, of whatsoever quality and "condition they be. But the excessive worship he "observed was paid to creatures, appearing very "doubtful to him, and philosophy having given him "a more perfect knowledge of the impossibility of "transubstantiation, he concluded that there must "have been some sophistry in the objections, which "had overcome him; and upon making a new ex-"amination of the two religions, he recovered that "light of which he had lost sight, and followed it "without regarding a thousand temporal advantages, "of which he deprived himself, nor a thousand in-"conveniencies which appeared to him inevitable in "doing so."

(a) Chimere de la Cabale de Rotterdam demontrée p. 139. & suiv.

(b) He had not then studied above four or five months in philosophy. See la Chimere demontrée, p. 151. and the Letter to Mr Pin on, above, Rem. [A.]

He

Digitized by Google

He arrived there the second of September; and resumed the course of his studies. 1670.
He had been taught the peripatetic philosophy by the Jesuits, and as he understood it well he defended it with a good deal of warmth (1). Yet notwithstanding he thought himself obliged to examine the Cartesian philosophy, which was taught at Geneva; and it was not long before he preferred the reasonable principles of the new philosophy, to the vain subtilties of the followers of Aristotle. A person of Mr Bayle's merit could not fail of being soon distinguished at Geneva. The reputation he obtained there, made Mr de Normandie, Syndic of the Republic, desire him to take the charge of his childrens education (2). Mr Basnage, who studied at that time in Geneva, lodged with Mr de Normandie, and it was there Mr Bayle became acquainted with him, and formed that union which continued to his death. Mr Bayle likewise contracted a friendship with Mr Minutoli, which he ever after cultivated by a correspondence, that neither the length of time, nor distance of place, ever made him neglect. He was likewise intimately acquainted with Messieurs Pictet and Leger, who have been Professors of Divinity in the Academy of Geneva; and acquired in a very particular manner the esteem and affection of many persons of eminence, both in the State and in the Church: such as Mr Fabry, the Syndic; Messieurs Turretin, Mestrezat, Bourlamachi, Sartoris, &c.

(1) Chimere de la Cabale de Rotterdam demontrée, &c. pag. 144, 145.

(2) He went to live with Mr Normandie, Nov. 21.

Some time after the place of one of the regents of the College becoming vacant, they cast their eyes upon him to supply it. Upon this he set himself to look over the ancient Latin and Greek authors; but, after considering the matter maturely, he could not bring himself to a resolution of teaching a Form, and so he neglected this sort of establishment.

(3) May 23, 1672.

Mr Bayle had not been two years at Geneva, when the Count de Dhona, Lord 1672.
of Copet, a Barony in the Pays de Vaud, two leagues distant from Geneva, desired Mr Basnage to find him out a tutor for his sons. Mr Basnage named Mr Bayle to him as a person extremely fit for that business. At the same time, he spoke of it to Mr Bayle, who at first had some reluctance to undertake the task proposed to him. He could not resolve to quit the delights of Geneva, and bury himself in the country. However at last he went thither (3), and employed himself in the education of the young Counts de Dhona: Alexander, who was governour and afterwards minister of state to the King of Prussia; Frederic sirnamed Ferrassieres, who was a lieutenant-general in the Dutch service, governor of Mons, and was killed in the action at Denain (4); and Christopher, who assisted on the part of the King of Prussia, as elector of Brandenburg, at the coronation of the Emperor Charles VI, and who has distinguished himself in many other offices both civil and military. He continued two years with this family, and during that time he endeavoured to divert himself in his solitude, by a commerce of letters, which he carried on with Mr Minutoli, and with Mr Constant who afterwards filled the highest stations in the Academy of Lausanne. The letters he wrote to them turned upon every thing that came to hand, philosophy, literature, or political news which he loved passionately (5): he owns that he wrote without attaching himself to any regular connexion of thoughts (6). This commerce however was not capable of hindering his being tired of Copet, so he resolved to leave that place. He informed Mr Basnage, who had returned to France, of his design and begged his good offices. Mr Basnage acquainted him, that a relation of his who was studying at Geneva, was ordered to return to Rouen; he desired Mr Bayle to accompany him, and flattered him with the hopes of procuring something advantageous for him in that city (7). Mr Bayle received this news with great satisfaction; the only difficulty was to find some pretext for leaving the Count de Dhona. He made use of the following, which could not fail to prevent the Count's opposing the loss he was a going to sustain; he told him that his father, who was dangerously ill, had laid his commands upon him to come to him without delay.

(4) July 24, 1712.

(5) See in Mr Bayle's Letters, printed at Amsterdam in 1729; the letter to Mr Minutoli of the 27*th of* Feb. 1673. p. 24.

(6) Letters to Mr Minutoli of Jan. 31, and of May 2, 1673. pag. 20, 25, 26. and of March 8, 1674, pag. 37, 38.

(7) Letter to Mr Minutoli, of May 17, 1674, pag. 52.

Accordingly he left Copet, the twenty ninth of May 1674, after having provided 1674.
his pupils with another person capable of instructing them (8). He made no longer stay at Geneva than was necessary to see his friends; and arrived at Rouen with Mr Basnage's relation on the fifteenth of June. Soon after he was appointed tutor to a merchant's son, and lived in the house with him; this was the post which Mr Basnage had provided for Mr Bayle. This merchant had a country-house near Rouen, where Mr Bayle was obliged to go and spend five or six months with his pupil. He found this retirement as disagreeable as that of Copet had been, and he had recourse to the same remedies; he wrote letters to his relations and friends, and even composed some small pieces. When Mr Minutoli pressed him to send them to him, he desired to be excused. "It "is a sufficient satisfaction to me, (says he in a letter which he wrote to him (9), "that you are not ignorant how constant a correspondent I was, during my solitude "in Normandy: and this being a sufficient proof that you are always in my thoughts, "I won't give you the trouble of reading a confused medley of indigested thoughts, which "my chagrin has made me put in writing." Being returned to Rouen in the beginning of the winter, the sole advantage he found there, was the benefit of frequent conversations with Mr Basnage the father, Mr Bigot, Mr de Larroque, and some other persons of distinguished learning and merit. He only passed the winter there,

(8) Mr Manget, who has acquired a great reputation by several works relating to physic, which he has published.

(9) Letter of March 17, 1675, pag. 66.

Digitized by Google

for finding that his pupil had no diſpoſition to Letters, he acquainted his relations with it, and left him.

1675. His utmoſt ambition was to be at Paris. The arts and ſciences which flouriſhed there, the great number of excellent libraries, the conferences which were weekly held on all ſorts of ſubjects, in the houſes of ſeveral learned men, where they with pleaſure received all who deſired to aſſiſt at them, were ſuch powerful attractives to Mr Bayle, that he could not reſiſt them. He deſired his friends to procure for him ſome eſtabliſhment there, to enable him to live in that great city. They propoſed that he ſhould take the charge of a young gentleman who was expected there from the country, and Mr Bayle left Rouen, the 1ſt of March 1675, in order to go to Paris. There he did not indeed find the young gentleman his friends had deſigned for him, but by the recommendation of the Marquis de Ruvigny, he was choſen tutor to Meſſieurs de Beringhen, brothers to Mr de Beringhen counſellor in the parliament of Paris, and to the Ducheſs de la Force. He entered to this charge the 3d of April a month after his arrival at Paris.

While he was ſtill in Normandy his mother had let him know, that ſhe paſſionately deſired to have his picture. He could not refuſe her that ſatisfaction, and employed Ferdinand, a famous painter, whom a Preſident of the Parliament, had at that time invited to Rouen. He ſent her this picture after he came to Paris, and along with it a letter ſo tender, ſo full of reſpect, and which ſhows ſo well the diſpoſition of his mind, that I think it well deſerves a place in theſe Memoirs. It is as follows (1).

(1) This Letter is dated April 16, 1675. The direction is To Mademoiſelle de Bayle at Carla.

Madam,

" I Had reſolved to ſend you at the ſame time a portrait of my heart, as well as of " my face: but not being able to find words ſtrong enough to expreſs the " greatneſs of my affection and reſpect for you, rather than my heart ſhould ſuffer " by my not being able to do it juſtice, I have choſen to ſend you the work of the " painter alone. I flattered myſelf, that it would have been as eaſy for me to repre- " ſent what paſſeth in my mind, as it has been to him to give a juſt repreſentation of " my features; I already fancied, that a thouſand proper and ſignificant words " ſtrove, which ſhould firſt preſent themſelves for that purpoſe. But when I came to " try it, I found that my imagination was not able to furniſh me with any thing " that I wanted, and ſo I was obliged, much contrary to my inclination, to abandon " my enterprize.

" In order to ſupply this defect, fancy to yourſelf, my very good Mother, the thing " on earth which is the moſt grateful, the moſt affectionate, and the moſt reſpect- " ful, and you will have an idea of what I am with regard to you, and of what " I am not able to expreſs in words. It is a great ſatisfaction to me, that you have " ſo much deſired to have my picture, and it would be ſtill a greater, if you would " be perſuaded that I am not to blame, that you have waited ſo long for it. If I " cannot have yours, at leaſt I ſhall have you always painted in my heart, on which " you are impreſſed as a ſignet.

" May the good God, who has always diſplayed his mercies to us, ſtill more " and more favour our family, and grant to you, my much honoured Mother, a long " life, free from cares, grief, and ſickneſs; and to me ſuch a ſhare of his protection, " as may make you taſte thoſe joys and pleaſures, which uſually ariſe from the " happineſs of perſons who are dear to us.

" I am indeed of a diſpoſition neither to fear bad fortune, nor to have very ardent " deſires for good. Yet I loſe this ſteadineſs and indifference, when I reflect that " your love to me makes you feel every thing that befals me. It is therefore from " the conſideration that my misfortunes would be a torment to you, that I wiſh " to be happy: and when I think that my happineſs would be all your joy, I ſhould " be ſorry my bad fortune ſhould continue to perſecute me; tho' as to my own " particular intereſt, I dare promiſe to myſelf that I ſhall never be very much " affected by it. I am with the moſt ardent affection, Madam my much honoured " Mother, Your, &c."

Mr Baſnage was at this time at Sedan, where he finiſhed the ſtudy of Divinity. Mr Bayle communicated to him all the literary news he could meet with, and Mr Baſnage uſed to read his letters to Mr Jurieu, Miniſter, and Profeſſor of Divinity in the Academy of Sedan. As Mr Jurieu will be mentioned more than once in theſe Memoirs, I ſhall begin here to give his character. He had a good deal of ſagacity, a fruitful imagination, and wrote both well and with eaſe. Tho' in many things he departed from the ſentiments of the Reformed, he did nevertheleſs ſet up for a rigorous defender of Orthodoxy [C]. Being preſumptuous he would domineer every where, and his

[C] Tho' in many things, he departed from the ſentiments of the Reformed, he did nevertheleſs, ſet up for a rigorous defender of Orthodoxy.] He had publiſhed in the year 1670 an Anſwer to a book concerning the re-union of Chriſtians, written by Mr Dhuiſſeau, Miniſter of Saumur: this anſwer was condemned by the ſynod of Saintonge, as containing heretical propoſitions. He afterwards compoſed a diſſertation on the neceſſity of Baptiſm, wherein he defended one of the errors of the Church of Rome; and it was with much pride could not bear thoſe, whoſe merit he looked upon as either capable of equalling or obſcuring that which he thought himſelf poſſeſſed of. His attachment to his friends was meaſured by the deference they paid to him. To fail in that deference which he exacted, was ſufficient to raiſe his indignation, and make him an implacable enemy. By this imperious and turbulent ſpirit he brought diſcord wherever he went, and rendered himſelf odious to all the world. It was upon this account he had been obliged to quit the churches of Mer and Vitry, and had brought upon himſelf a great many mortifications at Sedan, where notwithſtanding he had a very conſiderable party. 1675.

Digitized by Google

At this time Mr Baſnage having got notice, that the Academy of Sedan deſigned to appoint a ſucceſſor to Mr Pithois, one of their Profeſſors of Philoſophy aged eighty years, he acquainted Mr Bayle with it, and adviſed him to take advantage of that opportunity to procure to himſelf a laſting and honourable eſtabliſhment. Mr Bayle made him the following anſwer, the ſame day on which he took the charge of Meſſieurs de Beringhen. " I never receive any of your letters, ſays he (1), without receiving " at the ſame time, proofs of your friendſhip, nay of a friendſhip always watchful " of every thing that can be of advantage to me. The great age of your Pro- " feſſor would be a favourable conjuncture, if I was in a condition of making uſe of " your good offices. But, dear Sir, I muſt acquaint you, that ever ſince I left Geneva " I have done nothing elſe but forget, and want of culture has ſo blunted my mind, " that I do not know if by a return to ſtudy, I ſhould be able to ſet myſelf to rights " again. Without doubt that poſt is a hundred times better than this which I am " going to have, for after all, the character of preceptor is become ſo contemptible " almoſt every where, that no perſonal merit can ſave a man from that general diſe- " ſteem with which it is attended, therefore it is with the greateſt reluctance that I " once more venture into that tireſome road. I do not know but I might have " brought Mr de Beringhen to allow me thirty piſtoles if I had higgled with him: " but my natural modeſty, my diſintereſtedneſs, and the advice of my friends, having " inclined me to leave myſelf entirely to his diſcretion, and to aſſure him that I " would be ſatisfied with whatever he ſhould pleaſe to allow me, I ſhall only have " two hundred livres. I muſt be upon the watch, and had it not been for a trou- " bleſome delicacy, which obliged me not to depart from the laws of civility, I " might have retracted with conſiderable advantages towards repairing my bad for- " tune. I am a fool, you will ſay, for not having done ſo: I own it, and it is the " ſhame of appearing fickle, which has been the cauſe of my folly."

(1) Letter of April 3, 1675, p. 581, 582, of the fourth Volume of the Miſcellaneous Works of Mr Bayle.

The diſagreeable ſituation that Mr Bayle was in redoubled Mr Baſnage's zeal, and made him act with more vigour in his favour. He deſired Mr Jurieu to employ his intereſt for him, and Mr Jurieu promiſed to ſerve him to the utmoſt of his power. He found himſelf ſo much the more diſpoſed to do ſo, that he was afraid leaſt Mr Brazi, who was the other Profeſſor of Philoſophy, and whom he hated, ſhould have intereſt enough to get his ſon choſen in the place of Mr Pithois. So that it was not ſo much from the eſteem he had for Mr Bayle, as (2) " to flatter his " darling paſſion, which was the deſire of domineering. His party in the Academy " was not ſo ſtrong as he could have wiſhed, and in caſe the oppoſite party had " ſucceeded in their deſign of giving the chair of Philoſophy to Mr Bayle's compe- " titor, Mr Jurieu foreſaw nothing but ſorrow and bitterneſs to himſelf, ſo that who- " ever had chanced to have been recommended to him, he would have left no ſtone " unturned to eſtabliſh him, in order to exclude a competitor of whom he was " afraid."

(2) Letter concerning the ſmall books wrote againſt the Cabale Chimerique, pag. 4, 5.

Mr Baſnage having made ſure of Mr Jurieu, repreſented to Mr Bayle how much what he propoſed to him was preferable to his preſent condition, and preſſed him to yield to the deſires of his friends. But he continued ſtill to excuſe himſelf, as not being ſufficiently qualified, and promiſed however to look over his Philoſophy and ſee what progreſs he could make in five or ſix months ſtudy. " I admire " you continually, ſays he (3), you and that generous beneficent diſpoſition of yours, " and that indefatigableneſs to ſerve thoſe you love. I agree with you, that the " title of preceptor is unworthy of a gentleman, and that I ought to get rid of it " as quickly as poſſible. I know on the other hand, that the character of Profeſſor " of Philoſophy is much more honourable, and not ill ſuited to my fortune and " ſituation: your preſſing me on that ſcore therefore appears to me perfectly well " judged, and to flow from the moſt ſincere friendſhip in the world. But, dear Sir, " the misfortune is, you lay your account to find me the ſame perſon you knew at " Geneva: then indeed I could diſpute indifferently well; I came freſh from a " ſchool, where I had been well inſtructed in all the ſcholaſtic chicanry, and I " may ſay, without vanity, that I was no bad proficient in it. But the matter is " quite altered now. You know, Sir, that the propoſal of teaching a Claſs, which was much difficulty, he was perſuaded to ſuppreſs that piece. They found it no leſs difficult to make him ſtrike ſome heretical propoſitions out of his Apology for the Morals of the Reformed (a). Notwithſtanding this, he combined with ſome other divines to perſecute Mr Pajon, Miniſter of Orleans, who had a particular ſyſtem concerning Grace, tho' at bottom it agreed with the doctrine of abſolute predeſtination, and final perſeverance, which was taught by the reformed churches in France (b).

(3) Letter of May 5, 1675, in his Works, laſt cited, p. 592, 593.

(a) This book was publiſhed in the year 1674.

(b) See Reponſe à l'Apologie de Mr Jurieu, by Mr de Basnage, p. 10.

Digitized by Google

1675. "was made me, ſent me back once more to ſtudy the Claſſics, and that I began to "neglect Philoſophy, that I laid aſide Mr Des Cartes for Homer and Virgil, and "that by going to Copet I loſt two years there, without ſtudying either languages "or any ſort of ſcience, but Philoſophy leſs than any thing. I have continued on "this footing ever ſince my return to France, and as I eaſily loſe my ideas, I "find myſelf reduced to ſuch a condition at this preſent time that I write to you, "that I do not ſo much as know the firſt elements of Logic. I know that a year "employed in the manner I told you of in a former letter, in ſtudying night and "day, in diſputing, defending theſes, &c. would bring me in wind again, and give "me courage to give defiance to all aſſailants. But here is the point. Where ſhall I "find this year, and where ſhall I find the means to employ it ſo? in my preſent "ſtate, I cannot promiſe to have it in my power to ſtudy a quarter of an hour with-"out a thouſand interruptions. I have not one book of Philoſophy, and it is im-"poſſible for me to make acquaintances, the few people I know are of ſo difficult "acceſs, that I call upon them three or four times without finding them, nay I do "not ſo much as know if they have thoſe books which will be neceſſary for me. In "fine, dear Sir, my rivals cannot be ſo far behind in Philoſophy, nor in ſo bad a "ſituation to prepare themſelves for the engagement, as I find myſelf in at preſent. "I am vexed to the laſt degree, and am ready to curſe my ſtars, that I am not "able to anſwer the advances you made in my favour. I honour and admire Mr "Jurieu, and ſhould deſire earneſtly to be near him, that I may improve by his "great and incomparable talents, and I find myſelf unable to expreſs my gratitude, "for his generous inclination to ſerve me, upon your recommendation. What ſhall "I ſay more to you, dear Sir? I am going to look over my Philoſophy, to "buy or borrow ſome good ſyſtem, and ſtudy as much as the noiſe and clamour of "two fooliſh ungovernable boys, whom I have upon my hands from morning to "night, will permit me to do; and according to the progreſs which I ſhall be able "to make, I will reſolve upon a journey to Sedan, with great pleaſure, five or ſix "months hence. If it was only to ſee Sedan, I would reſolve to make this journey, for "there can be no hurt in it. Dear Sir, I ſhould die with grief, if you had engaged "yourſelf for me, and I did not engage myſelf to diſengage you. My friendſhip to you "would make me run into any thing, rather than endure that you ſhould not get "out of this affair, in which you have involved yourſelf on my account. But once "more, dear Sir, pray conſider that you cannot depend much upon the progreſs which "I ſhall make in Philoſophy, by a ſtudy ſo interrupted, and attended with ſo many "vexations and ſo diſturbed as mine will be."

This letter ſurprized Mr Jurieu extremely; he conſidered Mr Bayle's excuſes as mere ſhifts, and owned that he could not tell what to make of it. The truth was Mr Bayle had a ſecret reaſon, which made him averſe from going to Sedan. He was afraid leaſt his change of religion, which was a ſecret to every body in that country but Mr Baſnage, ſhould come to be diſcovered, and that occaſion might be taken from the Arret againſt the Relapſe [D], to give him trouble, and to diſtreſs the Reformed at Sedan. Mr Jurieu therefore ſuſpecting that there was ſome other reaſon than that which Mr Bayle pretended in his letter, would needs know what it really was that kept him back; Mr Baſnage could not help letting him into that affair, and Mr Jurieu was of opinion that this ought not to hinder his coming, ſince they two being the only perſons who knew any thing of it, he ran no hazard. Whereupon Mr Baſnage removed Mr Bayle's fears, and ſome time after having wrote to him that the election of a new Profeſſor approached, and that there was no time to be loſt, he ſet out from Paris the 22d of Auguſt in order to go to Sedan.

As ſoon as he arrived there (1), Mr Baſnage procured him the acquaintance of ſeveral of his friends who were of the party which oppoſed Mr Jurieu, and particularly of Mr du Rondel, Profeſſor of Eloquence. They promiſed to do him juſtice. Mr Bayle ſoon found the occaſion he had for their protection. He had three competitors, and all poſſible means were uſed to ſet him aſide, becauſe he was a ſtranger and his competitors were natives of Sedan. But at laſt it was left to be determined

(1) He arrived at Sedan Auguſt 31.

(b) See the ſame Hiſtory Vol. iii. p. 520, 582. and the collection of Edicts, declarations, &c. which is at the end of that vol. p. 109, 151. And vol. iv. p. 18. 374, and the collection of Edicts, &c. of that vol. p. 7, 106.

(c) See the Letters to Mr Minutoli of March 17, 1675, pag. 74, and of Feb. 6, 1676. p. 103.

[D] The arret againſt the relapſe.] They called Relapſe thoſe of the Reformed, who after having embraced the Roman Catholic religion, abandoned it, and returned to the proteſtants. From the year 1657 they began to diſturb ſome of the Reformed under pretence, that they were Relapſe, but this was without any expreſs order from court (a). The firſt declaration which appeared againſt them was given in the month of April 1663, importing that they ſhould be puniſhed according to the rigour of the Ordinances; an expreſſion which properly ſpeaking meant nothing, becauſe no Ordinance had as yet defined the puniſhment of this new crime. They did not fail, notwithſtanding, to take advantage of this declaration to diſtreſs the Reformed: they even pretended that it had a retroactive force; which having cauſed infinite diſorders, the King found himſelf obliged to publiſh an Arret in the month of September 1664, forbidding the extending of it to any thing which had paſt before it was regiſtred by the parliaments. In the mean time, that prince not being ſatisfied with the looſe and indefinite terms of his firſt declaration, publiſhed another in the month of June 1665, in which he condemned the relapſe to perpetual baniſhment. Mr Bayle came under this ſecond declaration, which ſtill appearing too moderate, was at laſt followed by a third in the month of May 1679, whereby it was declared, that the Relapſes ſhould be condemned to an amende honourable, be baniſhed for ever out of the kingdom, and have their eſtates confiſcated (b). The fear Mr Bayle was under of being known and puniſhed as a relapſe, made him deſire his friends to change the ſpelling of his name in the directions of their letters, and to write Bele inſtead of Bayle (c).

(a) See the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nants. Tom. iii. p. 66, 132, 230. 428.

Digitized by Google

determined by a diſpute. The candidates agreed to make their Theſes without books or preparation, betwixt ſun riſing and ſun ſetting. The ſubject aſſigned them was Time. They ſhut themſelves up upon the 28th of September, to compoſe them; and Mr Bayle defended his Theſes publickly upon the 23d and 24th of October, in the afternoon. He diſputed with ſuch clearneſs, accuracy and force, that notwithſtanding the intereſt and intrigues of his rivals, the moderators of the Academy adjudged him the victory. Theſe particulars are to be found in the letters which he wrote to Meſſieurs Conſtant and Minutoli [E]. 1675.

He was received Profeſſor on the 2d of November: he took the uſual oath upon the 4th, and began his public lectures upon the 11th.

Soon after he was informed that the Academy of Geneva had choſen Mr Minutoli Profeſſor of Hiſtory and Belles Lettres: it was Mr Minutoli himſelf who informed him of it, not omitting a detail of the examination he had undergone, and of the oppoſition he had met with. Mr Bayle made his compliments to him upon this new promotion, and thanked him for the particular account he had given him of it. "The circumſtances, ſays he (1), of your glorious eſtabliſhment, in the place of Profeſſor, "with which you have acquainted me, have been infinitely agreeable; for tho' I knew "in general that you had given very diſtinguiſhing proofs, both of your genius and "learning, and that I had from thence already conceived an incredible ſatisfaction yet "the order and detail of it, which you have given me, have redoubled that pleaſure: for "we Philoſophers love method in every thing, and without it nothing has charms for "us. I ſay this, Sir, to give you hopes of not being henceforth expoſed to my irregularities, and that I ſhall not any more overwhelm you with a confuſed heap "of thoughts and words, as I have done formerly. My new degree inſpires me "with the ſpirit of method, and you will be ſenſible of it, or no body will. But "who could have thought that you ſhould have met with ſuch oppoſition in your "own country. No body was ſurpriſed here that all ſort of means were uſed to ſet "me aſide from the Profeſſor's chair, for I was a ſtranger and my antagoniſts were "natives of the place; on the contrary, people were ſtrangely ſurpriſed that I found "any friends at all: but ſurely there is room for wonder, that all your country men "did not without heſitation join in your promotion, which will be ſo advantageous "and glorious to the Academy."

(1) Letter of April 4, 1676, p. 104.

Whatever oppoſition Mr Bayle found at his coming to Sedan, his merit ſoon engaged the love and eſteem of every body. The Count de Guiſcard, Governour of Sedan, invited him frequently to his houſe, that he might enjoy his converſation. Mr du Rondel who was afterwards Profeſſor of the Belles Lettres at Maeſtricht, gave him his friendſhip, and continued it to his death. Even Mr Jurieu was ſo touched with Mr Bayle's fine qualities, and was ſo charmed with the ſweetneſs of his temper, his modeſty, and his integrity, that he opened his heart to him, perhaps more than he thought himſelf capable of to any one. He has acknowledged this publickly in 1691, at a time when he had ſhamefully broke with him, and was labouring to ruin him. "This man, ſays he (2), was recommended to us, to fill a chair of "Philoſophy then vacant in the Academy of Sedan, where I had the honour to be "Profeſſor of Divinity, and one of the Moderators of the Academy. One of his "friends gave him the character of a young man of great genius, good learning, "and very capable of making thoſe ſciences flouriſh, which he ſhould be called to "cultivate. We were not deceived in this. He came and diſtinguiſhed himſelf in "all the public exerciſes of his examination. But his friend and he not thinking "it proper to make a ſecret to me of his revolt and long ſtay among the Jeſuits "of Toulouſe (3), I was embaraſſed to the laſt degree becauſe of the Arret againſt "the Relapſes. However as I, upon his proteſtations, believed that he was "ſincere in his return to us, we reſolved to keep that matter ſecret and to proceed. "He was ſeveral years in the Academy, behaving himſelf decently, and neither "doing or ſaying any thing that gave offence. The beauty of his genius and "his

(2) Apologie pour Mr Jurieu, p. 24. col. 1.

(3) Mr Bayle never lived with the Jeſuits.

[E] Theſe particulars are to be found in the letters which he wrote to Meſſieurs Conſtant and Minutoli.] "It is about four months ago, ſays he to Mr Conſtant (a), ſince I left Paris, being invited to come "hither, to be a Profeſſor of Philoſophy. Upon "my arrival I found matters ſo embaraſſed with little "academical intrigues, that I was obliged to wave "my Invitation, and ſubmit to the hazard of a Diſpute. I expoſed my ſelf to it, and God ſo aſſiſted "my ignorance, whether by ſtrengthening my weakneſs, or by oppoſing antagoniſts to me no ſtronger than my ſelf, that at laſt I gained the victory. "I take the liberty of ſending you the only remaining copy of my Theſes, they are theſes cooked up in haſte, which we agreed to make, without books or preparation, betwixt ſun riſing and "ſun ſetting, to prevent the tricks which auxiliary troops might have play'd, if we had been allowed "to compoſe them in our own chambers. Unluckily "for us, the ſubject was very difficult." See how he ſpeaks of the matter to Mr Minutoli. "Several reaſons, (ſays he (b), having determined me to comply with an invitation, which was given me to accept of a Profeſſor of Philoſophy's place, I left "Paris, about the end of Auguſt laſt, and came hither, where I have been obliged in a hurry, to "rally my ſcattered ideas of Philoſophy, and to "enter the liſts with three rivals, who had kept "themſelves always in wind. I leave it to you to "judge of my anxiety upon that occaſion. At laſt "whether by good fortune or the ignorance of my competitors I have been received Profeſſor; and "am obliged to labour like a galley-ſlave, having a courſe to compoſe from day to day, beſides giving five hours a day to my ſcholars. Theſe "are drudgeries which have ſtunned me, and it "is only becauſe one may be accuſtomed to any "thing, that I now begin to breathe."

(a) Letter of December 17 1675, p. 97, 98.

(b) Letter of Febr. 9, 1676, p. 100.

Digitized by Google

1675. " his honourable principles attached me so to him, that I loved him better than " ever I did any person, I confess it."

The composition of his Course of Philosophy employed him during two years: it was an additional labour which filled up all the intervals of his Academical functions,

1677. and left him no time to write to his friends. " I have not been able, says he to " Mr Minutoli (1), to answer your fine letter of the 1st of April, otherwise than by a " line or two, because of the fatiguing business which has entirely taken me up these " two years, I mean the multitude of exercises I was obliged to make for my " scholars, and the composition of my Course. I am now, thank God, freed from " that terrible drudgery. I have finished my Course, my Theses for the Master of " Arts degree are defended, and now at last it is Vacation."

(1) Letter of the 29th of August, 1677. pag. 130.

But still a long time after this, the vacations were the only time, in which he 1678. could have any relaxation. The revisal of his course, the additions which he made to it, together with his public and private lectures, left him no leisure. This is the account he gives to Mr Minutoli in another letter (2).

(2) Letter of the 15th of Dec 1678, pag. 140.

1679. Mr Ancillon, Minister of Mets, had made him a present of a book of Mr Poiret, printed at Amsterdam in 1677, intituled Cogitationes Rationales de Deo, Anima, & malo; and had desired him to make Remarks upon it. Mr Bayle in the year 1679, sent him a piece in latin, containing the difficulties which had occurred to him, in reading it through. He sent along with it, a Letter of thanks, wherein he excused himself that his affairs had not permitted him to comply with his desire sooner, nor to give that force and regularity to his objections, which he could have wished. Mr Ancillon communicated this piece to Mr Poiret, who wrote an answer to it, which he sent to Mr Ancillon, together with a Letter wherein he thanked him for exciting an adversary against him who showed so much accuracy, judgment, penetration and politeness. Mr Poiret inserted these objections of Mr Bayle's, together with his own answers to them, in a new edition of his book, printed at Amsterdam in 1685, and thereto joined the two letters, which I have now mentioned (3). This small piece shows that Mr Bayle was throughly acquainted with the most sublime points of Philosophy. Mr Poiret extricated himself but indifferently from some of his Objections (4).

(3) Mr Bayle's letter is dated April 13, and Mr Poiret's August 14, 1679.

Mr Bayle took advantage of the harvest vacation to make a tour to Paris, and from thence he went to Rouen, to wait upon Mr Basnage (5).

1680. The affair of the Duke of Luxembourg, at that time made a great noise. He had been accused before the Chamber of Poisons, of impieties, sorcery, and poisonings, and had surrendered himself a prisoner: but he was declared innocent, and the process against him was suppressed. Mr Bayle who had learnt a great many particulars concerning this matter, when he was at Paris, diverted himself in composing an Harangue, wherein the Mareschal pleads his cause before his Judges, and vindicates himself from having made a compact with the Devil, that he might, 1. enjoy all the women he had a mind to. 2. That he might always be successful in war. 3. That he might gain all his law suits. 4. That he might always enjoy the King's favour. The harangue is divided into these four points: it contains a very smart satire upon the Mareschal, and several other persons. Mr Bayle afterwards composed under another name a criticism upon this harangue, still more satirical than the satire it self. He sent these two pieces to Mr Minutoli, and desired him to give him his opinion of them: and in order to engage him to do it with more freedom, he did not tell him who was the author of them. " I send you (says he) (6), a copy of a " Harangue, which some body has composed in the name of the Duke of Luxenbourg, " to take an opportunity from thence to give us part of his Life. If I have " time, I will get copyed for you a sort of criticism upon this harangue. You " will oblige me by giving me your opinion of both these pieces; for a friend of " mine at Paris, who is acquainted with the author of the second of them, " and who possibly out of prejudice in favour of his friend, inclines to think that " the harangue is good for nothing, has obliged me to promise to write him my " sentiments of both the one and the other. But as I have not leisure, and " besides as you are more capable than I to examine works of this nature, in " order to show their strong and weak side, I beg, Sir, that you will bestow a " few hours upon them. By this means I shall satisfie my friend's desire, and I am " sure he will sooner trust to your judgment, than to mine; for he knows " how to value things, and would much rather that I should pay him out of your " pocket that out of my own."

(4) See the letter to Mr Des Maizeaux of July 3, 1705. p. 1027.

(5) Letter to Mr Minutoli of the 1st of January, 1680. p. 153.

(6) Letter of the 24, of March 1680. p. 162, 163. See likewise the letter of the 1st of January 1681. p. 169.

(7) Sentimens de Mr Des Cartes touchant l'essence & les proprietez du Corps, opposez à la Doctrine de l'Eglise, & conformes aux erreurs de Calvin sur le sujet de l'Eucharistie.

About this time, Father de Valois, a Jesuit of Caen, concealed under the name of Louis de la Ville, published a book at Paris, intituled, The Sentiments of Mr Des Cartes concerning the Essence and Properties of Body, repugnant to the doctrine of the Church, and agreeable to the errors of Calvin on the subject of the Eucharist (7). The author not satisfied with opposing the authority of the Council of Trent to the Cartesians, attacks them likewise by way of argument, and endeavours to confute the reasons made use of by Messieurs Clercelier, Rohault, and Father Malebranche, to prove that extention is the essence of matter. Mr Bayle read this work and found it very well done. He judged that the author had inconteſtably proved the point in question, to wit, that

Digitized by Google

Mr Des Cartes's principles were contrary to the faith of the Church of Rome, and a- 1680.
greeable to the doctrine of Calvin; which at bottom, says Mr Bayle in a letter to Mr
(1) Letter of the 24 of March 1680, p. 165. Minutoli, was no hard matter to do (1). As Mr Bayle had a mind to make his scholars defend philosophical Theses, he composed a Dissertation on this subject, wherein he defended Mr Des Cartes's principle, and at the same time restored the arguments of these Philosophers which had been attacked by Father de Valois, to their full force, and destroyed all the exceptions and subtilities of that Father. He endeavours principally to prove that the penetrability of matter is impossible.

In the month of December 1680, there appeared one of the largest Comets that was ever seen. People, that is to say almost every body, were seized with fright and astonishment. They had not as yet got the better of the ancient prejudice, that
(2) See the Advertisement concerning the 3d Edition of the Pensées diverses, sur la Comete, &c. Comets are presages of some fatal event. Mr Bayle, as he informs us himself (2), was incessantly teized with the questions of a great many people, who were alarmed at this pretended bad omen. He endeavoured to remove their fears as much as possible, but he found that he gained but little upon them by philosophical reasonings; they still made answer that God shows us these great Phænomena's, to give warning to sinners to prevent by their repentance the judgments which hang over their heads. He believed therefore that it would be to no purpose to reason any more with them, except he could find out some argument which would prove that it was inconsistent with God's attributes to appoint Comets for that purpose. Upon examining throughly that matter, he soon bethought himself of the following theological argument, to wit, That if Comets were presages of evil, God must have performed miracles to confirm idolatry in the world. He did not remember to have met with this argument, either in books or conversation: so that the novelty of it made him think of writing a Letter on that subject, which might be inserted in the MERCURE GALANT. He began to write it upon the 11th of January 1681, and endeavoured to keep within the 1681.
bounds of a Letter; but the abundance of matter would not allow him to be so short, he was therefore obliged to consider this letter as a work which must be printed by itself. After this he no longer affected brevity, but enlarged upon every thing as he found occasion; without losing sight however of Mr de Visé, author of the MERCURE GALANT. He resolved to send this letter to him, and to desire him to give it to his printer, and obtain either a licence from Mr de la Reynie, Lieutenant-general of the Police, if that would be sufficient, or the King's Priviledge, if nothing else would do. Accordingly he sent it to him the 27th of May. Mr de Visé kept the manuscript some time without knowing the author's name; and when he was wrote to about it, he answered that he was told by a person to whom he had given it to read, that Mr de la Reynie would never take the consequences of printing it upon himself, and that it would be necessary to obtain the approbation of the Doctors, before a Royal Privilege could be applied for, which was a troublesome long and tedious task he had no leisure to engage in. The manuscript was got back, and Mr Bayle gave over all thoughts of printing his letter concerning Comets at Paris. But as he at first composed it with this view, he had assumed the stile of a Roman Catholic, and had imitated Mr de Visé's manner and encomiums upon the administration of affairs. This conduct was then absolutely necessary to those who had a mind to print any thing at Paris, and he thought that to imitate the MERCURE GALANT in some things, would render it more easy to obtain either Mr de la Reynie's licence, or the Royal Privilege. It was upon this account likewise, that he feigns that the letter was wrote to a Doctor of the Sorbonne.

The Reformed in France were at this time in a melancholy situation. The Court had for a long time laboured their destruction. They stript them by little and little of all their privileges, and no year passed without some infringement of the Edict of Nants. At last they resolved to suppress their Academies. There was some reason to hope that they would spare the Academy of Sedan. The principality of Sedan had been a sovereign state until the year 1642. The Duke of Bouillon surrendered it to Lewis XIII, who agreed to leave all things there in the condition he found them. Lewis XIV confirmed this treaty, and it was a-new granted that the Protestant Religion should be maintained there with all the rights and privileges of which it was then possessed. But all these advantages could not save the Academy. Nay Lewis XIV ordered that it should be the first that should be dissolved. The Arret was passed on the 9th of July 1681, and notified the fourteenth of the same month.

There was at this time at Sedan a young gentleman from Rotterdam, named Mr Van Zoelen, a relation of Mr van Zoelen, who was afterwards Burgomaster of that city.
(3) Chimere de la Cabale de Rotterdam démontrée. preface p. clxij. clxiii. This young gentleman (3) had lodged at Sedan with Mr Bayle, and had improved himself in his studies by frequent conversations with him. He had conceived so strong a friendship for his Professor, that upon the same day on which the Arret for the suppression of the Academy came there, he resolved to send a copy of it to Mr Paets, a relation of his, who was one of the Counsellors of the city of Rotterdam, a very learned man, and a patron of men of letters. He acquainted Mr Paets, at the same time that he sent him the Arret, that Mr Bayle was without employment; he gave a very good character of him, and received an answer wherein Mr Paets declared a very great inclination to serve him. Mr Bayle upon this wrote to Mr Paets a letter of thanks,

Digitized by Google

1681. for the favourable ſentiments he had of him, and begged the continuance of his favour. Mr Paets, together with a great deal of wit and penetration, had a ſtrong paſſion for the ſciences, particularly for Philoſophy. His merit had acquired him a great authority, and would have gained him ſtill more had it not been for the diviſions which then prevailed in the Republic. He was conſidered as the head of the party which oppoſed the family of Orange (1); and upon this account he found ſome difficulty to get into the Magiſtracy again, after his return from being Embaſſador extraordinary in Spain (2). He notwithſtanding triumphed over their jealouſy, and the Magiſtrates of Rotterdam had ſo great deference for his counſels, that they were guided in all their deliberations by him.

Mr Bayle at the ſame time endeavoured to procure an eſtabliſhment at Rotterdam for Mr Jurieu, and engaged Mr van Zoelen to recommend him to Mr Paets. Mr van Zoelen left Sedan in order to ſollicit theſe matters in perſon at Rotterdam, and inſiſted ſo ſtrenuouſly with Mr Paets, that he was pleaſed to uſe his intereſt likewiſe for Mr Jurieu (3).

Mr Bayle ſtaid ſix or ſeven weeks at Sedan after the ſuppreſſion of the Academy, waiting for letters from Holland. But at laſt not receiving any, he grew impatient and left Sedan the 2d of September, and arrived at Paris the 7th of the ſame month, uncertain as yet whither he ſhould go to Rotterdam or to England, of if he ſhould continue in France (4). Before his departure the Count de Guiſcard uſed all his endeavours to perſuade him to embrace the Popiſh religion. He propoſed great advantages to him, but all to no purpoſe (5). At length when he was ready to ſet out for Rouen, and from thence to paſs over to England, he received an anſwer from Mr Paets acquainting him that the city of Rotterdam had given him a ſalary with the right of teaching Philoſophy. Mr Paets added that Mr Jurieu's buſineſs was in a fair way. Upon this he left Paris the eighth of October, and upon the thirtieth arrived at Rotterdam, where he was very kindly received by Mr van Zoelen's family, and by Mr Paets (6).

Mr Jurieu followed Mr Bayle very ſoon after; but before he was well ſettled at Rotterdam, he was guilty of ſome raſh and blunt actions, which very much provoked Mr Paets againſt him, and which he pardoned only upon Mr Bayle's account (7). The town of Rotterdam erected an ILLUSTRIOUS SCHOOL in their favour; Mr Jurieu was appointed Profeſſor of Divinity; and Mr Bayle Profeſſor of Philoſophy and Hiſtory, with five hundred guilders of yearly appointments. Upon the 5th of December, he delivered his Inaugural Oration with univerſal applauſe; and on the 8th he read his firſt lecture of Philoſophy to a great number of ſcholars.

1682. A little while after he gave his Letter concerning Comets to Mr Leers, a bookſeller in Rotterdam, and a man of ſenſe and merit, in order to have it printed. And as he took all manner of precautions not to be thought the author of it, he changed nothing either in the ſtile of a Roman Catholic which he had aſſumed, nor in his imitation of the manner and panegyrics of the MERCURE GALANT. He thought that this ſtrain would be very proper to prevent peoples thinking, that this Letter was wrote by one who had left France for his Religion. While they were printing it he added many things that were not in the copy which he had formerly ſent to the author of the MERCURE GALANT (8). The impreſſion was finiſhed on the 11th of March 1682, and it appeared under the following title: A Letter to Mr L. A. D. C. Doctor of the Sorbone. Wherein it is proved by many arguments, both Philoſophical and Theological, that Comets are not preſages of evil. With ſeveral moral and political reflexions and hiſtorical obſervations. Together with a confutation of ſome vulgar errors. Printed at Cologne by Peter Marteau, MDCLXXXII (9).

To conceal himſelf the better, Mr Bayle prefixed to it a Preface or Advice to the Reader under the character of a perſon publiſhing this Letter without knowing the author of it. In this preface, after taking notice of ſeveral reaſons which induced him to make it public, he adds likewiſe the following: " I have been confirmed in this deſign " by a yet ſtronger reaſon than any of theſe. I have it from very good authority, " that the Doctor of the Sorbone to whom this Letter was written, is preparing a very " exact and elaborate anſwer to it, and there would be great reaſon to fear, con- " ſidering his indifference for the character of an author, that he would content him- " ſelf with writing only for his friends uſe, if we did not by publiſhing this Letter " which he has received from him, engage him to impart to the public the learned " and fine reflexions he no doubt has made upon ſeveral important ſubjects; ſuch " as the conduct of providence with regard to the ancient Heathens: the queſtion, " Whether God has wrought miracles among them, tho' he knew that they would thereby become more idolatrous: the queſtion, Whether God has ſometimes appointed preſages among infidels: the queſtion, Whether an effect purely natural can be a certain preſage of a contingent event: the queſtion, Whether Atheiſm be worſe than Idolatry, and if it be neceſſarily the ſource of all ſort of crimes: the queſtion, Whether God would rather chooſe that men ſhould be without any knowledge of a God, than that they ſhould be engaged in the abominable worſhip of idols; and upon many others, concerning " which ſo great and learned a divine may have very inſtructive thoughts, and which " well deſerve to be made public.

(1) He was brother-in-law to Cornelius de Wit.
(2) See the London Gazette of the 4th of October 1675, article from the Hague of the 8th of October.
(3) Chimere demontrée preface, p. cixii and the following.
(4) Ibid. p. clxviii. and Letter to Mr Minutoli, of the 17th of September 1681 p. 172.
(5) Cal ale Chimerique, p. 172.
(6) Chimere demontrée, preface p. clxix.
(7) Ibid. p. clxix, clxx.
(8) Preface to the 3d edition.
(9) Lettre à Mr L. A. D. C. Docteur de Sorbone. Où il eſt prouvé par pluſieurs raiſons tirées de la Philoſophie & de la Theologie, que les Cometes ne ſont point le preſage d'aucun malheur. Avec pluſieurs Reflexions Morales & Politiques, & pluſieurs Obſervations Hiſtoriques; & la refutation de quelques erreurs populaires. A Cologne chez Pierre Marteau, 1682.

But

Digitized by Google

But notwithstanding all these disguises, it was very soon known that Mr Bayle was the author of the Letter concerning Comets. Mr Leers had shown the manuscript to Mr Paets, and told him from whom he had it; and Mr Paets made no secret of it to his friends (1); nay he thought he did the author a piece of service, by discovering him (2). Mr Jurieu by this means came likewise to know it, either immediately from them, or from others to whom they had told it, and having spoke of it to Mr Bayle, with a kind of reproach that other people knew this secret while he was ignorant of it; Mr Bayle told him how every thing had passed, and satisfy'd him as to some points in the book (3), Mr Jurieu spoke of it with applause (4): but at the bottom he bore with impatience, the honour that Mr Bayle acquired by it; jealous as he was of the honour done his friends. 1682.

(1) Chimere de montrée, preface p. clxxi.

(2) Cabale chimerique, pag. 206.

Madam Paets died at this time, and gave a proof of her esteem for Mr Bayle, by leaving him a legacy of two thousand guilders to buy books. Mr Bayle always preserved a grateful remembrance of this generous gift, as we will afterwards observe.

(3) Preface ubi supra, pag. clxxi.

Mr Maimbourg had just published his History of Calvinism (5). This work treated of very important matters: a judgment was to be made concerning the spirit and conduct of the Reformed in France, from the time of their separation from the Church of Rome. Mr Maimbourg had employed all the art he was master of, to draw both the contempt and hatred of the Catholics upon them. Mr Bayle, full of indignation at the disingenuity and pernicious design of this author, resolved to refute his History, and took the opportunity of Easter Vacation to set about it. He wrote his answer by way of Letters, but did not think it necessary to follow is adversary step by step. He was of opinion that in order to undeceive the public, and show how little Mr Maimbourg ought to be regarded, it was sufficient to make some general observations on his History, which even supposing the truth of the facts it relates, might discover his malice, violence, and the cruel and barbarous principles, with which he endeavours to inspire his readers. Mr Bayle diverted himself with several particulars of the life and disputes of this writer, and gave a very just tho' by no means advantageous picture of them (6). "It was not "a sour and morose criticism, but an ingenious sort of raillery, full notwithstanding "of good sense and reason, and more proper to embarass or confound an adver- "sary, than grave and serious arguments."

(4) Chimere demontrée, pag 207.

(5) Histoire du Calvinisme.

(6) Eloge de Mr Bayle by Mr de Bauval.

He began to write these Letters on the 1st of May, and finished them on the 15th of the same month, so that this work tho' pretty bulky (7), was composed in the space of 15 days, as he himself acquaints us in the last Letter. He took all possible precautions to conceal his being the author of them. In the Advertisment prefixed to them, he makes the bookseller say, that this collection of letters having fallen into his hands, he thought himself bound to publish them without delay; and that he was desired to acquaint the reader, that they were really wrote by a country Gentleman of the Province of Maine, and sent to his friend according to their dates. He would not even have them printed at Rotterdam, and having occasion to go to see Amsterdam, he carried his manuscript along with him, and gave it to Abraham Wolfgang, a bookseller there, upon the 30th of May. This book appeared in the beginning of July, with the following title: A general Criticism on Mr Maimbourg's History of Calvinism. At Ville Franche by Peter le Blanc. M. DC. LXXXII (8). Mr Bayle received the copies of it, on the 11th of that same month.

(7) It was a volume in 12° of 339 pages in a small character.

(8) Critique générale de l'Histoire du Calvinisme de Mr Maimbourg. A Ville Franche chez Pierre le Blanc. 1682.

This work was approved of, not only by the Reformed, who were so well defended in it from Mr Maimbourg's attacks, but even by the judicious and moderate among the Catholics. A great many copies of it found their way into France, and were eagerly sought after. The Prince of Condé, a prince who was very capable of judging of the merit of books, could never be tired with reading it. It is true indeed he did not love Mr Maimbourg. That historian to please the court, whose pensioner he was, had affected not to take any notice of his Highness, while he made panegyrics upon all his ancestors. Mr Bayle did not fail to expose him upon this account (9), and the Prince took it well. This work touched Mr Maimbourg to the quick: the general approbation with which it was received troubled him extreamly. He applied several times to Mr de la Reynie, to procure a condemnation of it. But that magistrate having read it with pleasure, and not being displeased that Mr Maimbourg had been mortified, put him off from time to time. At last he addressed himself to the King, and obtained an order from his Majesty, directed to Mr de la Reynie, commanding the General Criticism on Mr Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, to be burnt by the hand of the hangman; and forbidding all printers and booksellers to print, sell, or publish that book on pain of death. Mr de la Reynie obeyed the order, and put in his Sentence whatever Mr Maimbourg pleased: one may easily discover in it the style of an author, and of an enraged author too (10): but to revenge himself against Mr Maimbourg, he got above 3000 copies of that sentence printed, and posted them up all over Paris, which incited the curiosity of the public to such a degree, that every body would needs have the criticism on Mr Maimbourg.

(9) Letter xix p. 268, 269.

(10) This Sentence is to be found at the end of these Memoirs.

This

Digitized by Google

1682. This work was sold off in Holland, almost as soon as it appeared; and in the month of August, Mr Bayle prepared a new edition of it. He enlarged it one half, and added a preface to it, wherein he again endeavours to deceive the reader and put him upon a wrong scent. This edition was printed off about the end of November, and he received copies of it, on the 29th of that month.

They sought for a long time in France, among the best pens of the Protestant party for the Author of the Criticism on Mr Maimbourg; and at last fixed upon Mr Claude, who at that time gloriously defended the cause of the Reformed. Even Mr Bayle's friends, who knew that he was the author of the Letter concerning Comets, never dreamt of ascribing this Criticism to him, because of the difference of the stile, and it was a mere accident which discovered it, as he tells us himself, to show that there is nothing more uncertain than conjectures drawn from the conformity or difference of stile, in order to discover the author of a book. "I know by experience, says he "(1), that all the Writings of a man do not resemble one another. The General Cri- "ticism of Father Maimbourg, was published soon after the Thoughts concerning "Comets; yet no body seemed to suspect that these two books came from the same "hand. The first edition of the Criticism was sold off, before any body so much "as suspected the true author. And tho' the second edition possibly might have dis- "covered him better, yet in all probability, if it had not been for a mere accident "he had remained still unknown. The accident was this. The author having "writ an answer to an Anonymous Letter which his bookseller had sent him, for- "got to desire the bookseller not to deliver the original of the answer but a copy. "This Anonymous person being a friend of Mr Claude, the son, shewed him my "Letter and asked if he knew the hand. Mr Claude having told him whose it was, "there wanted no more to put the author under a necessity of making a secret of it "no longer. The matter could never have been discovered by the conformity of "stile. For although the author did not at all intend it, he wrote the Criticism on "Maimbourg in a stile very different from that of the Thoughts concerning Comets."

Mr Jurieu likewise wrote an answer to Mr Maimbourg, but more full and circumstantial. It appeared in 1683, under the title of A Parallel between the History of Calvinism and that of Popery: Or an Apology for the Reformers, the Reformation, and the Reformed: in four parts: In answer to a Libel intituled, The History of Calvinism by Mr Maimbourg (2). This book was well written; the author refuted Mr Maimbourg with a great deal of force: but one could not find there that easy and natural turn, those lively and poignant reflexions, that manner of exposing the faults of an adversary without bitterness, and of treating matters of controversy without passion; which was the distinguishing character of the Critique Generale. Every one was presently sensible of this difference. Even the Catholics, notwithstanding the prejudices of their religion, could not help applauding Mr Bayle's book, while at the same time they affected to despise that of Mr Jurieu. "The Criticism on Father Maimbourg's History of Cal- "vinism is a fine book, said Mr Menage (3) and he himself could not help "esteeming it. He confessed this to me, tho' ordinarily he affected to speak of it "as a book which he had not read. Excepting what relates to religion, I find every "thing Mr Bayle says very lively and very judicious. I had a mind to read what "Mr Jurieu has done on the same subject; there is a great difference betwixt them. "Mr Bayle writes like a gentleman, and Mr Jurieu like a bigotted old woman, "his book is nothing but a wretched repetition of the dullest things alledged by "du Moulin, and the rest of them against the Catholic religion." The different esteem showed to these two books, infinitely displeased Mr Jurieu. He looked upon Mr Bayle as his rival, and could not forgive him for carrying away all the suffrages. This accident sowed the seeds of hatred and jealousy in his mind (4).

Amongst the other men of Letters with whom Mr Bayle contracted a friendship at Sedan, we ought to number Mr Fetizon, a young Minister and a native of that town. He had left Sedan, and was gone to exercise his Ministry in Champagne, in Mr de Briquemau's family (5). He wrote to Mr Bayle that he had composed by way of dialogue an Apology for the Reformed, with regard to the civil wars of France. Mr Bayle desired to see the book, and Mr Fetizon sent it him, and dedicated it to Philaretus, that is to Mr Bayle himself. Mr Bayle found that it deserved to be published and caused it to be printed (6). It appeared in the beginning of the year 1683, under this title; An Apology for the Reformed; wherein a just idea is given of the civil wars in France, and of the true foundations of the Edict of Nants. Being a curious dialogue betwixt a Protestant and a Catholic (7). Patricius, the Roman Catholic, alledges the strongest and most odious things that have been said against the Reformed with regard to the civil wars, and doth not forget the common accusation, that they are animated by a spirit of faction and rebellion; and that they maintain principles opposite to the absolute power of princes. Eusebius, the Protestant, justifies them for taking up arms in defence of their religion, their lives, and the rights of the house of Bourbon; and shews, even by the testimony of Lewis XIII, that they have always been faithful to their lawful princes, and that their principles are so far from being opposite to the sovereign power of princes, that they tend to establish and

(1) Cabale Chimerique, pag. 204, 205.

(2) L'Histoire du Calvinisme & celle du Papisme mises en parallele; ou Apologie pour les Reformateurs, pour la Reformation, & pour les Reformez: divisée en quatre parties: contre un Libelle intitulé Histoire du Calvinisme par Mr Maimbourg. It was printed in two Volumes in 4°, and in four in 12°.

(3) Menagiana, Tom. ii. p. 22, 23, of the Paris Edition, 1694.

(4) See Mr de Beauval's Lettre sur les differens de Mr Jurieu & de Mr Bayle, pag. 1 and 2.

(5) Mr de Briquemau's estate situate upon the river of Aisne, was called St Loup. Mr de Briquemau being afterwards obliged to leave France upon account of his religion. The Elector of Brandenburg made him Governour of Lipstadt in the country of Cleves.

(6) At the Hague, by Abraham Arondeus, in 12°.

(7) Apologie pour les Reformez, où on voit la juste idée des Guerres Civiles de France: & les vrais fondemens de l'Edit de Nantes. Entretiens curieux entre un Protestant & un Catholique.

Digitized by Google

confirm it; whereas, on the other hand, the Roman Catholics make that authority dependant on the people or on the Pope. 1682.

About the end of the year 1682 Mr Bayle was ſtrongly ſollicited to marry. The match propoſed to him was advantageous. She was a beautiful young lady, of very good ſenſe, good nature and prudence, was entirely at her own diſpoſal, and had at leaſt fifteen thouſand crowns (1). Mademoiſelle du Moulin, grandchild of the famous Peter du Moulin, ſiſter to Mrs Jurieu, and afterwards wife to Mr Baſnage, had ſet this affair in motion, and had put it in ſo good a way, that there remained no difficulty except on Mr Bayle's ſide. He had always appeared very averſe to marriage: the cares and troubles of a family did not ſeem to him to ſuit a man of letters, a Philoſopher who makes all his happineſs conſiſt in ſtudy and meditation. Beſides, as he contented himſelf with what was neceſſary, riches appeared to him rather an incumbrance than a happineſs. Mademoiſelle du Moulin ſpared no pains to make him change theſe ſentiments, and to engage him to make uſe of theſe advantages, which in a manner offered themſelves; but ſhe was unſucceſsful.

(1) Letter of Mademoiſelle du Moulin to Mr Bayle, of the 12th of December 1682. In Mr Bayle's Letters, pag. 193.

The Year following Mr Bayle gave a new edition of his Letter concerning Comets, fuller and more exact than the firſt. The impreſſion of it was finiſhed the ſecond of September 1683, and he received a hundred and twenty copies of it from the bookſeller to ſend to his friends. He ſuppreſſed the title of the firſt edition, and ſubſtituted the following: Divers Thoughts written to a Doctor of the Sorbonne, upon occaſion of the Comet which appeared in the month of December, 1680. At Rotterdam, by Reinier Leers, M DC LXXXIII (2). He likewiſe ſuppreſſed the long preface of the foregoing edition, and inſtead of it inſerted an advertiſement in the bookſeller's name, pointing out the advantages of this ſecond edition beyond the preceding. 1683.

(2) Penſées diverſes, écrites à un Docteur de Sorbonne à l'occaſion de la Comete qui parut au mois de Decembre 1680. A Rotterdam chez Reinier Leers, 1683.

About this time ſome of Mr Bayle's Friends ſent him ſome pieces of controverſy which they had compoſed, and deſired him to get them printed if he thought proper. The firſt which he received was a Confutation of the Memorial drawn up by the Aſſembly of the Clergy of France in 1682, wherein they propoſed and approved of ſeventeen Methods, or different manners of diſputing againſt the Reformed. This Confutation was wrote by Mr Baſnage, at that time miniſter of Rouen. It was accompanied with a Letter to Mr Bayle, in the name of a friend to the author, which contained ſeveral curious particulars relating to that Aſſembly of the Clergy (3). This work came out under the title of An Examination of the Methods propoſed by the Aſſembly of the Clergy of France in the year 1682 (4). Mr Baſnage had deſired that the manuſcript might be communicated to Mr Jurieu, and Mr Jurieu prefixed his approbation to the book. The other pieces which were ſent to Mr Bayle, were in anſwer to a book of Mr Brueys Advocate of Montpellier. Mr Brueys had diſtinguiſhed himſelf among the Reformed by a confutation of a book of Mr Boſſuet, Biſhop of Condom, and afterwards of Meaux, entituled An Expoſition of the doctrine of the Catholic Church. But he afterwards changed his Religion, and according to the common practice of new converts, he wrote againſt the party which he had left. His book appeared in 1683 with the following title, The reaſons which have given occaſion to the ſeparation of the Proteſtants, examined without prejudice, according to the Council of Trent, the Confeſſions of Faith of the Proteſtant Churches, and the holy Scripture (5). It was wrote in a mild and inſinuating manner, and had an air of diſintereſtedneſs, very proper at firſt ſight to catch weak and ſuperficial minds: it was thought neceſſary that it ſhould be anſwered. Mr Jurieu, who had written a Tract entituled, Preſervatif contre le changement de Religion, in anſwer to the biſhop of Meaux's book, publiſhed a continuation of it againſt this piece of Mr Brueys. Mr de Larroque, ſon to the Miniſter of Rouen, who had been received into the Miniſtry in one of the laſt Synods, did likewiſe enter the liſts. He wrote an anſwer to Mr Brueys, and ſent it to Mr Bayle, who preſently put it to the preſs. The title of it is, The Proſelyte abuſed: or Mr Brueys's falſe views in his examination of the ſeparation of Proteſtants (6). It has an epiſtle dedicatory prefixed, To Mr  Profeſſor of Philoſophy and Hiſtory at Rotterdam, wherein Mr Larroque gives an account of the compoſition, deſign, and plan of this work. Mr Bayle would not ſuffer his name to appear before the dedication, though it was eaſy to thoſe who knew Holland, or had any commerce with men of Letters, to ſee that it was addreſſed to him. He has ſpoke very advantageouſly of Mr Larroque's book. "It is (ſays he (7), the firſt eſſay of a young author full of wit, who follows his adverſary very cloſe, and ſhows him that he has made groſs blunders. He ſometimes makes uſe of raillery, which is ſomewhat ſtrong indeed, yet at the ſame time delicate; and he acquits himſelf very well likewiſe in point of erudition."

(3) It is intituled, Lettre ſur la derniere Aſſemblée du Clergé A. M. B. A. R. that is to ſay, à Mr Bayle à Rotterdam.

(4) Examen des Methodes propoſées par Meſſ. de l'Aſſemblée du Clergé de France en l'Année 1682. It was printed at Rotterdam by Pierre de Graef, but the title bears à Cologne chez Pierre Marteau, in 12°.

(5) Examen des raiſons qui ont donné lieu à la ſeparation des Proteſtans, fait ſans prevention ſur le Concile de Trente, ſur la Confeſſion de Foi des Egliſes Proteſtantes, & ſur l'Ecriture ſainte.

(6) Le Proſelyte abuſé: ou fauſſes vuës de Mr Brueys dans l'examen de la ſeparation des Proteſtans. At Rotterdam for Reinier Leers, 1684, in 12°.

(7) Nouvelles de République des Lettres, March 1684, p. m. 101. See likewiſe the Letter to Mr Lenfant of the 26*th of November* 1683, pag. 204.

Mr Lenfant, who at that time ſtudied Divinity at Geneva, wrote likewiſe againſt Mr Brueys. But being informed that ſeveral learned men were employed on the ſame ſubject, he would have ſuppreſſed his anſwer, if Mr Bayle and Mr Jurieu had not preſſed him to finiſh it, and make it public (8). After he had made ſome ſtay at Geneva, he went to Heidelberg, from whence he ſent Mr Bayle his manuſcript, and deſired him to make what alterations in it he ſhould think proper. Mr Lenfant did not chooſe to enter into the detail of the diſpute, but contented himſelf

(8) See the Letters to Mr Lenfant of the 8*th of September and* 26*th of November* 1683, pag. 201, and the following.

Digitized by Google

1683. himſelf with reaſoning upon general principles. His book appeared about the beginning of the year 1684, with this title, General conſiderations on Mr Brueys's book, intituled, An Examination of the reaſons which have given occaſion to the ſeparation of Proteſtants, and occaſionally upon all thoſe of the ſame character (1). There was an advertiſement added to it, wherein after ſhowing how people might be deceived by Mr Brueys's book, and the neceſſity there was of anſwering it, they aſcribed his change of Religion meerly to worldly motives, and even attacked his Morals. This advertiſement was followed by a long Letter of the Author to a friend, upon ſending him his manuſcript, that is to ſay, to Mr Bayle. Mr Lenfant there gave the character of Mr Brueys's book, and pointed out a great many weak places in it. This anſwer is written with a great deal of wit, judgment, and moderation, qualities which reign in all Mr Lenfant's writings.

(1) Conſiderations générales ſur le livre de Mr Brueys, intitulé, Examen des raiſons qui ont donné lieu à la ſeparation des Proteſtans, & par occaſion ſur ceux du meme caractere. A Rotterdam, for Reinier Leers, 1684.

1684. Mr Bayle was always very curious in gathering thoſe ſorts of pieces which are called Fugitives, becauſe they diſappear almoſt as ſoon as they come out. The only way to preſerve them, is to gather as many of them together as will make a volume. This Mr Bayle did, with regard to ſeveral pieces relating to Des Cartes's Philoſophy. He publiſhed them under the title of A collection of ſome curious pieces relating to Mr Des Cartes's Philoſophy. At Amſterdam, by H. Deſbordes, MDCLXXXIV (2). He wrote a preface to them, wherein he gave the hiſtory of theſe pieces, and lamented the ſlavery of the writers in France. "It would be a great misfortune for the whole Re- "public of Letters, ſays he, if they were every where as formal and captious with re- "gard to the printing of books, as they have been in France for ſome time paſt, where "the Inquiſition, which they are eſtabliſhing there apace, prevents the publication of "many fine pieces, and diſcourages the beſt writers. And who would not be diſcouraged "to ſee thoſe people, who are appointed to licenſe books, keep a manuſcript for three "or four years without looking into it, and then diſapprove every thing there that "diſcovers a mind elevated above ſlavery and vulgar opinions? What mortification for "an author, who never thinks the preſs can go faſt enough upon his works, after "a delay of three or four years, to find himſelf commanded to ſuppreſs what he "thinks is moſt valuable in his writings, if he would not rather chuſe to ſee them "condemned to eternal ſilence, by being refuſed the Royal Privilege?" This Collection contains, I. A ſort of Concordat, entered into betwixt the Jeſuits and the Fathers of the Oratory, by which theſe laſt oblige themſelves neither to teach Des Cartes Philoſophy, nor the doctrine of Janſenius. II. Remarks upon this concordat. III. An Explanation concerning Mr de la Ville, or rather Father de Valois's book (3). This piece was wrote by Mr Bernier, ſo well known by his Voyages, and his Abridgment of Gaſſendus's Philoſophy. Father de Valois had placed him in the liſt of the new Philoſophers, who deſtroy the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, by maintaining that the eſſence of matter conſiſts in extenſion. His book made a great noiſe in France, and alarmed all the Carteſians. Mr Regis, who held conferences at Paris, was obliged to give them over. Mr Bernier was afraid for himſelf, and publiſhed this explanation, wherein he endeavours to reconcile the principles of his own philoſophy, with the deciſions of the church. This collection likewiſe contains, IV. An anſwer of Father Malebranche to Father de Valois, who had ſhewed great animoſity againſt him, and particularly endeavoured to raiſe ſuſpicions of his orthodoxy. This anſwer was followed by a Memoir, explaining the poſſibility of Tranſubſtantiation. V. The Theſes which Mr Bayle had made his ſcholars defend, in 1680: Diſſertatio in qua vindicantur à Peripateticorum exceptionibus rationes quibus aliqui Carteſiani probarunt eſſentiam corporis ſitam eſſe in extentione. Mr Bayle joined ſome Philoſophical Theſes to this Diſſertation, where he maintains, among other things, that place, motion, and time, have not as yet been defined in an intelligible manner. VI. A piece which had been printed at Paris, under the title of Meditations concerning Metaphyſics, by Willian Wander (4). The Abbé Lanion is the author of it (5). It contains the ſubſtance of the Carteſian Metaphyſics, and the moſt valuable things in Des Cartes's Meditations. Nay every thing here ſeems even better digeſted, than in Des Cartes's book, and the author appears to have penetrated further than that Philoſopher. This is Mr Bayle's judgment of it.

(2) Recueil de quelques pieces curieuſes concernant la philoſophie de Mr Deſcartes. A Amſterdam chez Henry Desbordes, 1684.

(3) See above, pag. xiii.

(4) Meditations ſur la Metaphyſique, par Guillaume Wander.

(5) See Reſponſe aux Queſtions d'un Provincial, Tom. I. chap. xxvi. pag. 223, 224.

Mr Bernier's Explanation was refuted in a book printed at Paris in 1682, entituled, The Philoſophy of Des Cartes repugnant to the faith of the Catholic church, together with a refutation of the pamphlet lately printed in defence of it (6). The pamphlet mentioned in this title, is Mr Bernier's performance. The author of this book ſays, that having ſeen Mr de la Ville's treatiſe, he found that the author had very ſucceſsfully attacked the Syſtem of the Carteſians on the ſubject of the eſſence of matter, but that their opinion concerning it's accidents and qualities had not been refuted. So that he thought it neceſſary to handle this laſt point, and to add to it a new diſcuſſion of the firſt, to make the work compleat. He divides his book into two parts. In the firſt he ſhows, "That if the "eſſence of the body conſiſts in actual extenſion, the body of JESUS CHRIST cannot "be really and actually in the Euchariſt, ſince a thing cannot exiſt without it's eſſence, "but it muſt be there only figuratively, that is, purely in imagination and thought, "or in imaginary apprehenſion, which makes us believe it preſent where

(6) La Philoſophie de Mr Deſcartes contraire à la Foy Catholique. Avec la Refutation d'un Imprimé fait depuis peu pour ſa défenſe.

Digitized by Google

" it is not:" and in the second, he proves " That by establishing, as Des Cartes doth, 1684.
" that there is nothing in the substance but the substance itself, and that the qualities " and accidents which we fancy to exist in it, are only simple appearances that " abuse our senses, and make them believe that there is something really existing
" in the substance, which doth not exist there, but only in our thoughts; we destroy
" the doctrine of the Church, which teaches us that in the Eucharist, the substance " of the bread and wine being destroyed, and quite changed into the body and " blood of JESUS CHRIST, the accidents, which were in it, remain still, which " necessarily supposeth that the accidents are really distinct from the substance, and
" can exist without it." This book is very little known. Mr Bayle doth not mention it, possibly because it never came to his knowledge, and I take notice of it here only because of the relation it has to this Collection which Mr Bayle had published.

The manner of acquainting the public by way of Journal, with what passeth in the Republic of Letters, is one of the finest undertakings of the last age. The honour of it is due to Mr de Sallo, Ecclesiastic Counsellor in the parliament of Paris, who published the Journal des Sçavans in the year 1665. This work was received every where with applause, and was imitated in Italy and in Germany. Mr Bayle was surprized to see that in Holland, where there were so many learned men, so many booksellers, and so great a liberty of the press, no body had as yet thought of publishing a Literary Journal. He had been several times tempted to do it, but considering that a work of this kind requires a great deal of time and application, he had laid aside that design. In the mean while there appeared about the end of the month of February 1684, a Journal printed at Amsterdam by Henry Desbordes, with the title of Mercure Sçavant du mois de Janvier 1684. This was an attempt of the Sieur de Blegny, a surgeon of Paris, a man fertile in projects, of which take the following instances. Having observed that several people held conferences on Philosophy, and other sciences, he would needs pretend to do the same, and erected an Academy of new discoveries in his own house. He read private lectures to the Surgeons apprentices, under the name of a Course of Surgery; and to the Apothecaries apprentices by the name of a Course of Pharmacy: he even undertook to give a Course of Periwigs for the Periwig-makers apprentices. Every body was admitted to them for a certain price. He meddled likewise in physic, and came at last to take the titles of " Counsellor, Physician, " Artist in ordinary to his Majesty and to the Dauphin, and overseer, by his " Majesty's command, of enquiries and examinations of new discoveries in Physic." In 1679 he undertook a sort of Journal, inituled, New Discoveries in all the parts of Physic (1). He published it monthly; but his abusive manner of treating several persons of merit, produced an Arret of the Council, which put a stop to it in 1682. The Sieur de Blegny not daring to print his Journal in France, turned his eyes towards Holland, and chose Mr Gautier, a physician of Niort who lived at Amsterdam, for his partner in this project, and furnished him with the materials. This new Journal contained no extracts of Books, but several small pieces generally on subjects relating to physic. It contained likewise songs set to music, poetry, and political news. And he was more abusive in it than he had formerly been in his Journal of Physic.

A work so ill conceived and so ill executed, piqued Mr Bayle and made him re-assume his former design of publishing a Journal. Mr Jurieu pressed him strongly to undertake it. He was glad to have a sure hand to write panegyrics on all the books he should publish (2). Mr Bayle yielded to his sollicitations, and began to set about his Journal the 21st of March 1684. Upon the 4th of April he made an agreement with the Sieur Desbordes for the impression, and resolved to publish it once a month, under the title of News from the Republic of Letters (3); and to begin with the month of March. The Mercure Sçavant was published only for the months of January and February: whereupon several people fancied that Mr Bayle was the author of it; which obliged him to disown it in expres terms (4). The News from the Republic of Letters, for the month of March, did not appear 'till the 27th of May, and those of the month of April 'till the 2d of June: but he laboured so hard, that the Journal of July was published in the beginning of August, and so on, the News of every month appearing in the beginning of the following. In the preface he gives an account of the plan which he had laid down, which did not differ much from that of the other Journalists. He divided every Journal into two parts; the first contained large extracts, and the second a catalogue of new books, accompanied with remarks. This last part of his plan gave him occasion to mention a much greater number of books, and to make a great many Pieces known to the public, of which he did not think it proper to give an extract. He embellished his extracts with a thousand curious and entertaining particulars concerning the history of authors, their works and controversies; and with many ingenious and delicate reflexions. He did not write only for the learned: he intended likewise to please and be of use to the polite world (5). In a word, every thing was lively and animated in his extracts; " he had the art of giving a gay

(1) Nouvelles Decouvertes dans toutes les parties de la medecine.

(2) Chimere demontrée, preface, p. clxxvii.

(3) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres.

(4) In an advertisement which he published at the end of the Nouvelles for the month of May, of the first edition, and which he repeated on the reverse of the title page, in the following editions.

(5) See the Letter to Mr le Clerc of the 18th of June 1684. p. 213, and the following.

Digitized by Google

1684. "turn to all ſorts of ſubjects, and of giving the readers a notion of a book in "very few words, without fatiguing them either with a bad choice, or with "dull and tireſome reflexions. He was wiſe and reſerved in judging of the "merit of books, neither deſiring to ſhock authors, nor to expoſe himſelf by pro- "ſtituting his commendations (1)." People were of opinion that at firſt he praiſed too much, and this obliged him to be more ſparing of his applauſe (2). He received advice with pleaſure, and knew how to profit by it. This work was received with univerſal applauſe. Mr Bayle had flattered himſelf that it would not be prohibited in France, it was forbidden however, but this prohibition could not hinder a great many copies of it from paſſing there every month. Every body read it with eagerneſs.

(1) Eloge de Mr Bayle, by Mr de Bauval.

(2) See the Advertiſement prefixed to the Month of Auguſt 1684.

The States of the Province of Frieſland, to whom Mr Bayle was known by his Letter concerning Comets (3), on the 29th of March, appointed him to be Profeſſor of Philoſophy in the Univerſity of Franeker, with a ſalary of nine hundred gilders. This reſolution was communicated to him by a letter of the 21ſt of April, which he received on the 9th of May. He wrote an anſwer to it next day, deſiring to be allowed ſome time to conſider of it; and upon the 9th of June wrote them a letter of thanks, but declined accepting that place, though the ſalary was near double what he had at Rotterdam.

(3) See the Advertiſement before the Addition to the divers Thoughts concerning Comets.

While Mr Bayle was deliberating about this invitation to Franeker, he had an account (4) of the death of his brother Joſeph, a young gentleman of great merit. After he had begun the ſtudy of Divinity at Puylaurens, he went to Geneva in 1682 to finiſh it, where he continued above a year. From thence he went to Paris, where he was invited (5) to be governour to Mr Duſſon, ſon to the Marquis de Bonac (6). He died there the 9th of May 1684, regretted by all who knew him (7). He had a great deal of wit and penetration, together with a great ſhare of piety and modeſty. He was learned and laborious, and was likely to make a very conſiderable Figure in the Republic of Letters. Mr Bayle loved him tenderly, and was no leſs beloved by him. He was ſenſibly afflicted with his death. "I am "infinitely obliged to you (ſays he to Mr Lenfant (8), for the ſhare you have taken "in the loſs of my poor brother, every body wrote and ſpoke of him very ad- "vantageouſly to me. I loved him dearly, and he loved me, if poſſible, ſtill more. "Praiſe be to God, who has been pleaſed to take him out of this world, and to "deprive me of the comfort I expected from him: you have loſt a good friend "who had the utmoſt eſteem for you; ſo that you have had ſome intereſt in la- "menting his Death."

(4) The 16th of May.

(5) Letters to Mr Minutoli of the 9th of July, 1682, pag. 183; and of the 15th of July 1683 pag. 197, 198.

(6) See the Article AURIEGE.

(7) See a Letter of the Count de Dhona to Mr Bayle, of the 28th of September, 1684, pag. 227, 228.

(8) Letter of the 8th of Auguſt 1684. pag. 219, 220.

There appeared about this time a third edition of the General Criticiſm on the Hiſtory of Calviniſm. The ſecond edition had been reprinted at Geneva, but notwithſtanding this, it was very ſoon out of print. In the advertiſement to this third edition Mr Bayle ſays, that being convinced that this would be the laſt time of printing that book, he would very willingly have brought it as near perfection as poſſible, by making ſome neceſſary additions and alterations; but that he durſt not venture to do ſo, leaſt he ſhould diſoblige thoſe, who had already bought the two former editions, who frequently complained of new editions reviſed, corrected, and augmented, becauſe they diſguſt people at the former editions, and make them regret their having laid out their money upon them. Upon this account he had managed matters ſo, that this edition did not differ much from the preceding, and he acquainted all thoſe who had the ſecond, that they might be contented with it, and that this edition ought not to tempt them. Not that this (adds he) is not leſs faulty than the two former, but it is not ſo to ſuch a degree as to deſerve notice. But we muſt not underſtand this ſtrictly: this third edition contains many conſiderable additions and alterations. He likewiſe made ſome change in the order of the Letters, but above all he was at particular pains to correct the ſtile, by ſtriking out all ambiguous expreſſions and rhymes. He upon this occaſion obſerves how difficult it is in writing French to avoid verſes, jingling of words, and phraſes wherein one word may relate to different parts of the ſentence, and ſo cauſe double meanings.

(9) Nouvelles Lettres de l'auteur de la Critique Générale de l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme de Mr Maimbourg. Premiere partie, où en juſtifiant quelques endroits qui ont ſemblé contenir des contradictions, de faux raiſonemens & autres mépriſes ſemblables; on traite par occaſion de pluſieurs choſes curieuſes, qui ont du rapport à ces matieres. A Ville Franche chez Pierre le Blanc, 1685.

1685. In the beginning of the year 1685, he publiſhed a continuation of the Critique Generale, under the title of New Letters of the author of the General Criticiſm on the Hiſtory of Calviniſm of Mr Maimbourg. Part I. wherein ſeveral paſſages which have been found fault with, as containing contradictions, falſe reaſonings, and other miſtakes of that ſort are juſtified, and ſeveral curious matters relating to this ſubject are occaſionally handled. At Ville Franche by Peter le Blanc, MDC LXXXV (9). To theſe New Letters a long preface, or advice to the readers, is prefixed, wherein Mr Bayle takes notice that after having, with much difficulty, conſented to their being put to the preſs, he had been frequently tempted to put a ſtop to the impreſſion, when he conſidered how rare it was for an author, who ventures to publiſh a continuation of a book which has been well received, not to miſcarry. "Theſe continuations (ſays he) make people almoſt always ſay, that the "author has not held out, that he ought to have reſted where he was, that he "ought to have known his ſtrength better, and that he was much in the wrong "to run the hazard of leſſening the opinion the public had conceived of him." He ſhows that people are ſometimes in the right in judging ſo, but that for the moſt part they are very much in the wrong, and that when the continuation of a book is leſs eſteemed than what went before it, is not ſo much the fault of the author as of the readers. But ſince the misfortune is not the leſs upon this account, he concludes that excepting a few privileged authors, all others ought to be afraid of the compariſon which people will make betwixt their works, if the firſt has had the good fortune to pleaſe. He adds that no body ever had more reaſon to be apprehenſive of this compariſon than himſelf, and takes notice of ſeveral circumſtances which luckily concurred to procure a good reception to the General Criticiſm on the Hiſtory of Calviniſm, which did not now ſubſiſt in favour of theſe New Letters. But that at laſt he had ſuffered them to be made public, with a reſolution of looking with perfect indifference upon the opinion the public might have concerning them. Mean while he acquaints the reader that he will find in the ſecond Volume ſeveral paſſages which have not all the gravity, which poſſibly he may expect in that book; nay that he may poſſibly be of opinion, that ſome of them are too much a-kin to trifling. For this reaſon he declares that he doth not pretend here to write for the learned, but for a great many people who love reading, and not being deep ſcholars, want, properly ſpeaking, only an innocent amuſement whereby they may learn ſomething, but with little trouble. They who would judge of this book, ſays he, ought to remember that this was the intention of the author. We have only the firſt part of this work: Mr Bayle intended to publiſh two parts more, and had even begun to compoſe them, but did not finiſh them. "It was originally intended (ſays he) that this firſt part "ſhould be followed by two others, the firſt of which was to have ſatisfied thoſe "who had ſaid, that ſeveral things which deſerved great conſideration had been too "briefly handled in the General Criticiſm, ſuch as the Conference of Poiſſy, the "firſt riſing in Arms, the Verſion of the Pſalms, &c. and the ſecond was to have "explained ſome difficulties in the controverſy. But though ſomething has been "prepared a good while ago, for both the one and the other of theſe parts, yet "in all appearance other buſineſs will hinder the author to finiſh them." 1685.

Digitized by Google

Mr Bayle ſent a copy of this book to Mr Lenfant, and aſſured him that he might let him know the faults in it without fearing to diſpleaſe him. "I deſire (ſays "he (1), you will accept of a copy of the Continuation of the Critique Generale. . . . . "I am not at all pleaſed with this laſt book, and you will oblige me if you will "ſincerely ſhow me it's faults. Do not be afraid that you will in the leaſt diſpleaſe "me by doing ſo. My friends cannot oblige me more than by telling me frankly "the faults they find in my ſmall productions. I have been tried in this mat"ter, and I can ſay from experience that their cenſures do not in the leaſt of"fend me."

(1) Letter of the 2d of April, 1685. pag 237.

This Continuation had not the ſame ſucceſs with the Critique Generale. All that Mr Bayle had ſaid in the Preface, to ſhow the difference betwixt theſe two pieces, and to give a juſt idea of this laſt, was to no purpoſe. No notice was taken of it. Neither would people underſtand what he had ſaid in the ninth Letter concerning the rights of an erring Conſcience, and concerning innocent Errors; though he had taken all poſſible precaution to explain himſelf fully on theſe heads. He complained of this ſix months after in the News from the Republic of Letters, upon occaſion of ſome reflexions of Father Malebranche's concerning the careleſſneſs of readers. "It "muſt be confeſſed (ſays he (2), that the generality of readers are ſtrange ſort of people, "one may take the trouble of acquainting them with a thouſand things, one may re"commend this and the other thing to them in the moſt humble manner, they will ne"vertheleſs follow their own humour and cuſtom. Good ſtories have been made con"cerning the uſeleſs precautions of mothers and huſbands: I am ſurpriſed that no body "has given us a hiſtory of the uſeleſs precautions of authors. I know one whoſe book "has not been publiſhed above ſix months, who omitted nothing to ſecure him"ſelf from raſh judgments; his preface had given very eſſential advices, and in thoſe "places where he diſtruſted his readers, he had expreſsly warned them that they would "certainly miſtake him, if they did not carefully examine the whole ſeries of his "reaſoning; he had even carried his precautions ſo far as to print his real ſen"timents in large letters, and to threaten the readers in ſome ſort, that if they "committed any miſtakes there, they ſhould be inexcuſable. All this ſignified nothing, "he has been informed, that notwithſtanding all his care, even people whoſe pro"feſſion it was to know theſe things, have fallen into thoſe miſtakes which he had "been at ſo much pains to warn them of."

(2) July 1685. Art. viii. p. m. 780, 781.

Mr Bayle began the ſecond year of his News from the Republic of Letters, that is to ſay, the month of March 1685, by an addition to the title, which made it no longer an anonymous work; he added theſe words, By Mr B . . . Profeſſor of Philoſophy and Hiſtory at Rotterdam (3). He added likewiſe an Advertiſement, wherein he ſays that he thought himſelf obliged to let the public know diſtinctly the place where this Journal was compoſed, that they might ſee that the Magiſtrates of Rotterdam honour the Muſes with their protection, and that this work was compoſed by one of the Profeſſors whom they had ſettled in their New Illuſtrious School; and declares, that

(3) Par le Sieur B... Profeſſeur en Philoſophie & en Hiſtoire à Rotterdam.

Digitized by Google

1685. that though he doth not dedicate it in the ordinary forms; he doth nevertheleſs entirely conſecrate it to them. He expreſſed himſelf in a ſtill ſtronger manner, in an article of the month of March, where he is giving the extract from a book, wherein it was obſerved, that the town of Rotterdam had always favoured the Belles Letters. "What this city did three years ago, adds Mr Bayle (1), is a very "evident proof of their love to the Sciences. It is eaſy to obſerve that I "mean the ILLUSTRIOUS SCHOOL, which the honourable Magiſtrates of "Rotterdam generouſly founded in 1681. If the public ſhall receive any in- "ſtruction, or uſeful amuſement from theſe News from the Republic of Letters, "they will be obliged for it to thoſe gentlemen, ſince it is to them that I owe "the ſweet tranquillity which enables me to ſupport this laborious taſk. It is "under the protection of this glorious Senate that theſe collections are compoſed, "ille nobis hæc otia fecit, and I am very glad to find here ſo natural an occaſion, "of teſtifying my gratitude, and of declaring, that if the public has any good "opinion of this work, I conſecrate it entirely to the glory of this city." (1) Art. viii, pag. m. 312.

Upon the eighth day of May, 1685, Mr Bayle was informed that his father died upon Saturday the 30th of the preceeding March. This was very afflicting news to him, but his grief was redoubled, when he heard that his elder brother was in priſon upon account of religion. The Biſhop of Rieux did not know what was become of Mr Bayle, 'till the time in which the General Criticiſm on the Hiſtory of Calviniſm made a noiſe in France, and it was known that he was the author of it.

This Book renewed their vexation for his eſcape from Toulouſe, and his return to the Reformed Religion. They had endeavoured ſeveral times to revenge themſelves upon his brother, but that miniſter, by his wiſe and prudent conduct, had ſtill eſcaped the purſuits of his enemies. At laſt they applied to Mr de Louvois, a violent and revengeful man, who at this time was the author of unheard of cruelties againſt the Reformed in ſeveral provinces. Mr de Louvois had taken offence at ſeveral ſtrokes in the General Criticiſm concerning the conduct of the French Court with regard to the Reformed, and ſo gave orders that Mr Bayle, the Miniſter of Carla ſhould be ſeized. They ſent a great number of public officers to his houſe, who dragged him out of his cloſet, and carried him to the priſon of Pamiers, upon the 11th of June. From thence he was removed to Bourdeaux, on the 10th of July, to the Chateau Trompette, and confined in a ſtinking and infectious dungeon. They uſed all their efforts to make him change his religion, but neither their promiſes, their threats, nor their outrages, were capable to ſhake him. He ſhowed a conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſs which aſtoniſhed his perſecutors, and praiſed God who had called him to ſuffer for the truth. But the delicacy of his conſtitution could not bear ſuch barbarous uſage: he died the 12th of November, after five months impriſonment. In this manner he "crowned (2) "that piety which he had ſhewed during the whole courſe of his life, by an heroic "death, which was admired even by thoſe who had done every thing in their "power to make him die a Papiſt, and over whoſe attacks he triumphed glori- "ouſly." He was well verſed in ſacred and prophane hiſtory, and in the knowledge both of ancient and modern authors. His zeal for his religion was attended with mildneſs and wiſdom. Although he had a very lively ſenſe of the many injuries done to the Reformed, yet he ſtill preſerved an inviolable fidelity to the King's perſon, and a perfect ſubmiſſion to his commands, being perſuaded that a Chriſtian ought to oppoſe nothing to his ſovereign, but ſupplications and tears (3). (2) Cabale Chimerique, pag. 313. (3) See his Diſcourſe to Mr Dagueſſeau, Intendant of the Generality of Montauban, and his anſwer to the Conſiſtory of Mazeres, in the Hiſtoire de Mr Bayle & de ſes Ouvrages, printed at Amſterdam 1716, pag. 98, and the following.

Mr Paets was at this time in England, on the affairs of the States, and as the queſtion about Toleration was then very much debated there, he wrote a Latin Letter, on the 12th of September, upon that ſubject to Mr Bayle, which Mr Bayle got printed at Rotterdam, under the following title: *H. V. P. ad B (4) de nuperis Angliæ motibus Epiſtola, in qua de diverſorum à publica Religione circa divina ſentientium diſſeritur Tolerantia. In this letter, Mr Paets begins with admiring that change, which had been made in the minds and opinions of the Engliſh, with regard to James II. He praiſed that prince for not diſſembling his Religion at his acceſſion to the crown; and hoped that he would faithfully obſerve the promiſe he had made to his Proteſtant ſubjects, of allowing them the peaceable enjoyment of their Religion. The reſt of the Letter is employed in confuting thoſe who maintain, that Princes ought not to ſuffer any Religion but one in their dominions, and that ſubjects ought not to ſubmit to any Prince but of their own Religion. He ſhews that nothing is more oppoſite to the ſpirit of primitive Chriſtianity, than a ſpirit of perſecution, and after having examined the reaſons adduced by Politicians and Divines againſt Toleration, he attacks the infallible authority arrogated by the Church of Rome. In a Poſtſcript he clears up and confirms ſome things he had ſaid in the Letter, and ſhews that it would be eaſy to reduce all the Sects among Proteſtants into one ſociety. Mr Bayle being of opinion that this Letter was very fit to inſpire ſentiments of mildneſs and moderation, thought proper to tranſlate it into French. This tranſlation appeared in the month of (4) That is, Hadriani Van Paets ad Bælium.

Digitized by Google

Auguſt. It was likewiſe tranſlated into Dutch. Mr Bayle gave an abſtract of it in his Journal of the Month of October 1685; and Mr Paets being dead after the impreſſion of that article, he in a new edition added a few words, by way of elogy upon that great man. " This is not the firſt time, (ſays he (1)), that the illuſtrious Mr " Paets, author of the Letter of which we have been ſpeaking, has reaſoned " ſtrongly upon the ſubject of Toleration. There are ſome other Letters of his " upon this ſubject, in the Collection of the præſtantium ac eruditorum Virorum " Epiſtolæ, printed firſt in Quarto, and reprinted in Folio at Amſterdam, in the " year 1684. Theſe are beautiful monuments of his eloquence, and of the ſtrength " of his judgment. He could have eaſily produced many more conſiderable than thoſe, " if he had pleaſed to become an author, for he was a great Divine, a great Lawyer, " a great Politician, and a great Philoſopher, he had a very happy conception " of things, and a ſurprizing penetration; never did man reaſon more ſtrongly, " or give a greater air of dignity to what he ſaid: but he was born for greater " employments than that of an author. The extraordinary embaſſy to Spain, which " he performed ſo advantageouſly for his country, at that time in a conſternation " upon account of the great ſucceſs of the French arms, ſhewed what he was ca- " pable of in affairs of State. What a loſs is it to the public, that ſo great a man " did not live longer! hardly had he arrived to his 55th year, when he died " upon the 8th of October of the preſent year 1685; deſerving all manner of " praiſe as much upon the account of his intrepidity, probity, generoſity, integrity, " and all the other qualities of a gentleman, as upon the account of his great genius " and profound erudition. It is in quality of Journaliſt of the Republic of Letters, " that I am obliged to give this account of him. But what ſhould I not be obliged " to ſay, if I were to ſpeak agreeably to thoſe ſentiments of gratitude, which fill " my ſoul for the favours I have received from this illuſtrious perſon?" 1685.

(1) Art. ii. p. 1093, 1394, of the third Edition.

Mr Bayle at this time was engaged in a diſpute with Mr Arnauld, upon Father Malebranche's account. This Doctor in his Philoſophical and Theological Reflexions on the New Syſtem of Nature and Grace of Father Malebranche, had vehemently oppoſed his opinion, viz. " That all pleaſure is a good, and renders the perſon " who enjoys it actually happy." Mr Bayle, in making an extract of this work of Mr Arnauld, had declared himſelf for Father Malebranche. " There is no- " thing, (ſays he (2)), more innocent, or more certain, than to ſay that all pleaſure " renders the perſon happy who enjoys it, for the time in which he enjoys it, " and that notwithſtanding this, we ought to ſhun thoſe pleaſures which attach us " to the body. . . . . But ſome will ſay it is virtue, it is grace, it is the love of " God, or rather it is God alone who is our happineſs. I agree that he is ſo in " quality of inſtrument or efficient cauſe, as the Philoſophers ſpeak; but in quality of " a formal cauſe, it is the pleaſure, it is the ſatisfaction we enjoy, which conſtitutes our " happineſs." He had obſerved before, that " thoſe who had in any ſort under- " ſtood Father Malebranche's doctrine concerning the pleaſure of the ſenſes, would no " doubt be aſtoniſhed that any body ſhould find fault with him on that account; " and that if they did not remember that Mr Arnauld had made oath of his ſin- " cerity, in the preface to this laſt book, they would be ready to think that he " had only cavilled with his adverſary, in order to render his morals ſuſpected." Mr Arnauld who eaſily took fire, publiſhed a Piece intituled, An Advice to the Author of the News from the Republic of Letters (3), wherein he complained of this reflexion of Mr Bayle, and maintained that he had not only well underſtood, but likewiſe well confuted Father Malebranche's opinion. Mr Bayle gave the ſubſtance of this book in the Journal of December, and promiſed to make uſe of the vacation to examine it carefully. Accordingly he ſet about it, and the impreſſion of his Anſwer was finiſhed upon the 25th of February: it was intitled, An Anſwer of the Author of the News from the Republic of Letters, to an Advice which has been given him, concerning what he had ſaid in favour of Father Malebranche about the pleaſure of the ſenſes (4). Mr Arnaud did not give up the point, he wrote a Reply under this title, A Diſſertation concerning the pretended happineſs ariſing from the pleaſure of the ſenſes, to ſerve for a Reply to an Anſwer which Mr Bayle has made to juſtify what he had ſaid in his News from the Republic of Letters of September 1685, in favour of Father Malebranche againſt Mr Arnauld (5). Mr Bayle would have anſwered this Reply, if he had not been ſick when it appeared, and he thought it would be too late to refute it when his health allowed him to write. However he afterwards did deſign to anſwer it, and fully to diſcuſs that ſubject [F]. Notwithſtanding he has only ſaid a word or two about it in one of his works (6).

(2) Nouvelles of the Month of Auguſt, 1685, Art. iii, pag. m. 876.

(3) Avis à l'Auteur des Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres.

(4) Reponſe de l'Auteur des Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres à l'Avis qui lui a été donné ſur ce qu'il a dit en faveur du P. Malebranche touchant le plaiſir des ſens, &c. at Rotterdam chez Pierre de Graef. 1686, in 12mo.

(5) Diſſertation ſur le pretendu bonheur du plaiſir des ſens, pour ſervir de replique à la Reponſe qu'a faite Mr Bayle pour juſtifier ce qu'il a dit dans ſes Nouvelles de la Republique de Lettres du mois de Septembre * 1685, en faveur du P. Malebranche contre Mr Arnauld. Printed at Cologn (Rotterdam) 1687, in 8vo.

* He ought to have ſaid du mois d'Aout.

(6) Critical Dictionary, Article EPICURUS, Rem. [G].

Mr Bayle

[F] Mr Bayle did afterwards deſign to anſwer Mr Arnauld, and to diſcuſs that ſubject fully.] This appears by a Letter publiſhed by the Abbé Archimbaut, in his New Collection of ſcarce pieces of Hiſtory and Literature, &c (a). As this Letter was never printed except in that Collection (b), which is now pretty ſcarce, I thought it would not be unacceptable to the reader to find it here. It was wrote in the year 1694.

" Sir,

" I can aſſure you, that before Mr Abbadie had the " leaſt thought of writing that book which they have " reprinted in France (c), I had a diſpute with " Mr Arnauld, which only lies dormant at preſent, " concerning our ſenſations. Mr Arnauld has pub- " liſhed a fine Diſſertation againſt me, On the pre- " tended happineſs ariſing from the pleaſure of the ſenſes.

" It

(a) Nouveau Recueil de pieces fugitives d'Hiſtoire & de Literature, &c.

(b) Tom. iii. p. 64, & ſeq.

(c) L'Art de ſe connoitre ſoy meme, which they had reprinted at Lyons.

Digitized by Google

1685. Mr Bayle having obſerved in the Journal of September 1685 (1), that there were a great many errors in the Treatiſe concerning anonymous Authors, publiſhed by Mr Deckher, Advocate in the Imperial Chamber of Spire; Mr d'Almeloveen, who deſigned to publiſh a new edition of this work, deſired him to read it, and to point out to him the faults he ſhould find in it. A learned man called Mr Vindingius had before this time wrote a letter to Mr Deckher, which had been printed with the ſecond edition of this book, wherein he corrected ſome miſtakes of the author, and furniſhed him with ſome ſupplements: but neither was this letter free from faults. Mr Bayle corrected both the one and the other, and added a diſcovery of ſeveral anonymous authors, in his anſwer to Mr d'Almeloveen's letter. He concludes by ſaying that he could have furniſhed him with more ample and more curious remarks, if he had time to conſult his papers and his friends, and if he had not been afraid of offending authors, who had a mind to be concealed. This letter was written upon the 6th and 7th of March 1686; and Mr d'Almeloveen joined it to a new edition of Mr Deckher's book, printed at Amſterdam with this title: Johannis Deckherri Doctoris & Imperialis Cameræ Judicii Spirenſis Advocati & Procuratoris, de Scriptis adeſpotis, pſeudepigraphis, & ſuppoſititiis Conjecturæ. cum Additionibus Variorum. Editio Tertia altera parte auctior. Mr Bayle mentions it in his new Journal of April 1686 (2), and takes notice of ſome errors of the preſs in his letter.

(1) Art. vii. p. m. 1013.

(2) Art. I. Of the Catalogue of new Books, p. m. 460.

1686. The cruel Perſecution of the Reformed in France had very ſenſibly touched Mr Bayle, but he was quite overcome with grief, when he heard that in the month of October 1685, they had revoked the Edict of Nantes, which was the pledge and ſecurity of their rights and liberties; and that they had ſent Dragoons into their houſes, who lived there at diſcretion, and committed all ſorts of diſorders and violence to force them to embrace the Romiſh Religion. Some among them ſubmitted outwardly, and others fled to foreign countries, that they might ſerve God there according to the dictates of their conſcience. In the mean while the Miſſionaries and Popiſh writers, notwithſtanding all this, impudently denied that any violence had been uſed towards them, and there was hardly two or three of them, who confeſſed the quartering of the troops upon them, which the Proteſtants called the Croiſade Dragonne, the Converſions à la Dragonne, or ſimply the Dragonnade. Mr Bayle made ſeveral reflexions on this ſubject in his News from the Republic of Letters, with a great deal of wiſdom and caution. But at laſt, the ſight of ſo much injuſtice, ſo many cruelties and frauds, put him quite out of patience: being teized with an infinite number of books wherein nothing was talked of but the immortal Glory which Lewis the Great had acquired by deſtroying Hereſy, and rendering France entirely Catholic, he publiſhed in the month of March 1686, a little book entituled, A Character of France entirely Catholic under the reign of Lewis le Grand (3). But that he might not be ſo much as ſuſpected to be author of it, he feigned in the title that this book was printed at St Omer, and added an advertiſement wherein the bookſeller ſaid that the manuſcript had been given him by a Miſſionary lately returned from England, who had adviſed him to print it, being perſuaded that it would be a proof of the rage of the Heretics.

(3) Ce que c'eſt que la France toute Catholique ſous le Regne de Louis le Grand.

This ſmall piece is compoſed of three Letters. The ſecond which makes the body of the book, is written to a Canon by a Refugee at London, who had been his friend. It is a very ſtrong and ſevere cenſure of the conduct of France with regard to the Reformed. All the Catholics in France are here accuſed of having been concerned in the perſecution: a hidious picture of the Church of Rome is here drawn; treachery and violence (ſays he) are its diſtinguiſhing characters: the pretended Converters are reproached with their ridiculous artifices, and their low and groſs cheats: the injuſtice of the Arrets is complained of, and particularly of that which allowed children of ſeven years of age to make choice of the Catholic Religion: the falſity of the reaſons alledged in the Edict by which that of Nantes was revoked are ſhown: the dragooning is deſcribed in very lively colours: the oaths of Catholics, conſidered as ſuch, are repreſented as a meer farce: their pretended zeal is ridiculed: the ruin of the Chriſtian Religion is laid to the charge of the Catholic Clergy:

" It is an Anſwer to a Defence which I had publiſhed of an article of my News from the Republic of Letters, wherein I had ſided with Father Malebranche, againſt Mr Arnauld: I had maintained, that the pleaſures of the ſenſes are altogether ſpiritual and incorporeal beings or modifications, and that there is no pleaſure, how groſs ſoever or brutiſh, which in it's own nature may not be a modification of the pureſt of all created ſubſtances. So that if ſome pleaſures are at preſent criminal, it is only by accident, upon account of the occaſions in which they are taſted, that is to ſay, becauſe they are the conſequences of an act of the will, which we know to be forbidden by God. But this doth not relate to the nature itſelf of the modifications of the mind, but is only an accidental relation, or ex inſtituto, which ariſes from the laws which God has revealed to man, either by his word, or by reaſon. From whence it follows, (and I think that I even took notice of this conſequence), that the pleaſures of taſte, of ſight, and of touch, may be communicated without the intervention of any corporeal organ, or that the eye may be indifferently the organ of the pleaſures either of taſte or of hearing, as it is ex inſtituto of thoſe of ſight. I was ſick when Mr Arnauld anſwered me, and before I recovered, the ſubject of our diſpute was forgotten, ſo I have not to this day made any reply to him; but I will ſet about it when a proper occaſion offers, and will ſhow that it is impoſſible to maintain the ſpirituality of our ſouls, without admitting my principle."

Digitized by Google

Clergy: the conduct of the Converters is compared with that of the Pagan perſecutors: the Catholics are accuſed of having rendered Chriſtianity odious to all other Religions; and he maintains that the laws of humanity, and that general benevolence which we owe to all mankind, would oblige an honeſt man to inform the Emperor of China of what has lately paſt in France, and acquaint him that the Miſſionaries, who at firſt only deſire a Toleration, did really intend to become maſters, and that he could not rely on the fidelity of their Proſelytes; and concludes by ſaying that Prieſts and Monks carry diſcord, ſedition, and cruelty, wherever they go. This is a general view of this Letter. 1686.

The reader will no doubt be glad to ſee Mr Bayle's judgment of it in his Journal. "They will poſſibly find (ſays he (1), too much fire here, and too great flights of "fancy, but the beauty of the thoughts, and their ſolidity in the main, as to the "facts, will very likely make them excuſe what is exceſſive in it. Certainly there "is enough ſaid to the Converters in France to cover them with the higheſt "confuſion, if people of their trade could bluſh at any thing. The turn and vivacity "which goes through the whole of it, will make few readers think it long, though "it were really ſo."

(1) Nouvelles of March 1686, Art. iii, of New Books, p. m. 346.

In this manner Mr Bayle ſpeaks of it, pretending not to know the author. The Canon being piqued by this letter, ſends it to another Refugee at London, who was a friend of the author's, and deſires him to give him his opinion of it. He aſſures him that he will give thanks to God, for having bleſt the gentle and charitable methods which had been uſed againſt a Religion which had rebelled both againſt God and the Church, and that he will ſtrive by his prayers to obtain for him the grace of converſion. He afterwards deſires him to read St Auguſtin's Letters, which (ſays he) ſhow the injuſtice of the complaints of the Reformed, and unanſwerably juſtify the means which had been uſed, in order to reclaim them. This Letter is the firſt of the three. In the third the Refugee anſwers to the Canon, with a great deal of mildneſs and moderation. He condemns the ſallies and hyperbolical expreſſions of his friend, and confeſſes that there were an infinite number of good people in France, and even Prieſts and Monks, who had generouſly ſympathized with the miſeries of the Reformed, and had done them good offices; and that his friend was to blame in ſaying, that he had not found one good man in France: but with regard to the Converters, he abandoned them to all the ſtrokes of his friend's pen, and to the utmoſt extent of his invectives, together with all the Catholic Writers, who had denied that any violence had been uſed towards the Reformed. He aſks ſome pretty lively queſtions on this ſubject, and ſays that having repreſented to his friend the great number of honeſt men they had found among the Catholics in France; in anſwer to this he had maintained, that theſe honeſt men had acted in this matter not as Catholics, but as Frenchmen; and that we ought to depend more upon a perſon, conſidered as having been inſtructed in the laws of civility and honour practiſed in France, than upon one conſidered as having been inſtructed in the Catechiſm of his Religion by his pariſh Prieſt. He adds, that he laughed at this diſtinction, but that his friend had ſhown him ſome ſheets of a manuſcript, tranſlated from the Engliſh, containing the ſame thought. "There "is here, (ſays he (2), a learned Preſbyterian and good Philoſopher, who has "wrote a Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe words of the parable, compel "them to come in, which is not as yet printed. They are at preſent tranſlating "it into our language. They have lent me ſome ſheets of it, which I have "read with great pleaſure. The Engliſh have the moſt profound genius, and "are the moſt given to meditation, of any people in the world. I do not "believe that ever it was more ſtrongly proved, that all conſtraint in religious "matters is criminal and contrary both to reaſon and ſcripture. St Auguſtin, "and the two Letters to which we are referred are here quite deſtroyed, and they "ſhew him that if he had not argued better againſt the Heretics of his time, "than he has done for the Perſecutors, the Councils who have condemned Pela"gius upon the report and opinion of St Auguſtin, muſt have been very eaſily "ſatisfied or put out of humour. I will haſten the tranſlation and impreſſion of "this Book, as much as poſſible. I am convinced that a great many Catho"lics will approve of it, notwithſtanding the prevailing ſpirit of thoſe of your "cloth."

(2) Ce que c'eſt que la France toute Catholique, pag. 125.

(3) Commentaire philoſophique ſur ces paroles de Jeſus-Chriſt, contrain les d'entrer; où l'on prouve par pluſieurs raiſons démonſtratives, qu'il n'y a rien de plus abominable que de faire des Converſions par la contrainte, & où l'on refute tous les Sophiſmes des Convertiſſeurs à contrainte, & l'Apologie que St Auguſtin a faite des perſecutions. Traduit de l'Anglois du Sieur Jean Fox de Bruggs. Par M. J. T. A Cantorbery, chez Thomas Litwel 1686.

The book here promiſed is entitled, A Philoſophical Commentary on theſe Words of JESUS CHRIST, compel them to come in. Wherein it is proved, by ſeveral invincible arguments, that there is nothing more abominable than to make converts by compulſion. With a confutation of all the ſophiſms of the advocates for conſtraint, as alſo of St Auguſtin's Apology for Perſecution. Tranſlated from the Engliſh of Mr John Fox of Bruggs. By M. I. T. At Canterbury, by Thomas Letwel, MDCLXXXVI (3). Mr Bayle inſerted this title in his Journal of the Month of Auguſt 1686 (4), and added, "In the Journal of laſt March, pag. 345, we ſpoke of the piece entituled, Ce que "c'eſt que la France toute Catholique, which is a ſmall treatiſe wherein they promiſe "the publication of this Commentary. It will no doubt be a Commentary of a "new kind. We had the title of it ſent us from beyond ſea two days ago, and they "promiſe to ſend us the work itſelf very ſoon. We will then ſee whether it be ſo "dreadful

(4) Art. ii. of the New Books, p. m. 961.

Digitized by Google

1686. " dreadful a ſtroke to the whole Tribe of Converters, as they would make us believe " in the letter of advice we have had about it." But all this was only a feint. The book was printing at Amſterdam for Wolfgang, who had printed La France toute Catholique. The impreſſion was finiſhed in the month of October, and Mr Bayle mentions it in his Journal of the month of November (1).

(1) Art. iii. of the Catalogue of New Books, p. m. 1347, and the following.

This work is divided into three parts. In the firſt, Mr Bayle refutes the literal ſenſe of theſe words Compel them to come in; and as this is not a theological or critical Commentary, but a philoſophical one, that is to ſay, a work of pure reaſoning, he lays it down in the beginning as a principle, " that natural reaſon, or the " general principles of our knowledge, are the fundamental and original rule of " all interpretation of ſcripture, eſpecially in what regards to manners;" what comes to the ſame thing, that every particular doctrine, whether advanced as agreeable to Scripture, or propoſed in any other manner, is falſe when it can be refuted by the clear and diſtinct notions of natural reaſon, eſpecially if it regards morality: and he ſhews that all Divines, not even excepting the Roman Catholics, agree to this maxim. After having eſtabliſhed and proved this principle, he ſhews that the literal ſenſe of theſe words is falſe, I. Becauſe it contradicts the moſt clear and diſtinct notions of our reaſon. II. Becauſe it is contrary to the ſpirit of the Goſpel. III. Becauſe it totally overturns morality, both divine and human; confounds virtue and vice, and by that means opens a door to all imaginable confuſion, and tends to the univerſal ruin of ſocieties. IV. Becauſe it furniſheth Infidels with a very lawful pretence of hindering the preachers of the Goſpel to enter into their dominions, and of driving them out wherever they are found. V. Becauſe it contains a general command, the execution of which muſt needs be attended with many crimes. VI. Becauſe it takes away from the Chriſtian Religion, a ſtrong proof againſt falſe Religions, particularly againſt Mahometiſm, which was eſtabliſhed by perſecution. VII. Becauſe it was unknown to the Fathers of the Church in the firſt three Centuries. VIII. Becauſe it renders the complaints of the primitive Chriſtians, againſt the Pagan perſecutions, vain and ridiculous. IX. And laſtly, becauſe it would expoſe true Chriſtians to continual oppreſſion, without leaving them any thing to alledge, in order to put a ſtop to it, but the doctrines themſelves in diſpute betwixt the perſecuted and perſecutors, which is only a pitiful begging of the queſtion, that would not prevent the world's becoming a continued ſcene of ſlaughter and cruelty.

In the ſecond part, Mr Bayle anſwers the objections which might be raiſed againſt him, which he reduces to the following: I. " That force is not uſed in order to " conſtrain the conſcience, but to awaken thoſe who refuſe to examine." He refutes this plea, and examines what it is they call obſtinacy. II. " That the literal " ſenſe is rendered odious, by our judging of the ways of God by the ways of " men: and that though men are capable of judging wrong, when they are actuated " by paſſion, yet it doth not follow that God may not make uſe of this means to " accompliſh his work in the wonderful conduct of his providence." Mr Bayle ſhews how falſe this thought is, and what are the common effects of perſecution. III. " That things are maliciouſly exaggerated, when the conſtraint commanded " by JESUS CHRIST is repreſented under the notion of ſcaffolds, wheels, and " gibbets, whereas we ought only to mention fines, and baniſhments, and other ſuch " ſmall inconveniencies." He ſhews the abſurdity of the excuſe, and that ſuppoſing the literal ſenſe, capital puniſhments are more reaſonable than the chicanries, impriſonments, baniſhments, and quartering of Dragoons, which they had made uſe of in France. IV. " That we cannot condemn the literal ſenſe, with- " out, at the ſame time, condemning the laws which God eſtabliſhed among the " Jews, and the conduct of the Prophets upon ſome occaſions." Mr Bayle ſhews that ſeveral things were permitted, or even commanded by the Old Law, for reaſons which were peculiar to the Jewiſh Commonwealth, and which have no place under the Goſpel. V. " That Proteſtants cannot find fault with the literal ſenſe " of conſtraint, without condemning the moſt wiſe Emperors and Fathers of the " Church, and without condemning themſelves, ſince they in ſome countries do " not ſuffer other Religions, and have ſometimes puniſhed Heretics with death, " Servetus for example." Mr Bayle blames the conduct of the ancient Chriſtian Emperors, who have been guilty of Perſecution; and cenſures the Non-Toleration of Proteſtant Princes, except when it is an act of policy, neceſſary for the good of the State. On this account, he maintains, that it is lawful to make laws againſt Popery, becauſe it teacheth perſecution, and has always practiſed it when it had the power. " The puniſhment of Servetus, (adds he), and of a very few others of that ſort, " who erred in the moſt fundamental doctrines, is at preſent looked upon as a " hideous blemiſh on theſe early days of our Reformation, and as ſad and deplo- " rable remains of Popery, and I do not at all doubt, that if the Magiſtrates of " Geneva had at preſent ſuch a proceſs before them, they would carefully abſtain " from ſuch violence."

The

Digitized by Google

The sixth objection is, " That the opinion of Toleration cannot fail to throw a " State into all sorts of confusion, and to produce a horrible medley of Sects, which " deform Christianity." Mr Bayle draws a proof of his own opinion from this objection: for if a multiplicity of Religions be hurtful to a State. " It is only, (says he (1), " becaufe the one will not tolerate the other, but fwallow it up by perfecution. " Hinc prima mali labes, this is the origin of the evil. If every one of them, " adds he, enjoyed the Toleration which I plead for, there would be the fame con- " cord in a State, divided into ten Religions, that there is in a City wherein the " different forts of mechanics fupport one another. All the differences it could " produce, would be an honeft emulation which fhould moft fignalize itfelf in " piety, good morals, and in knowledge; every one would ftrive to prove itfelf " the moft beloved of God, by fhewing a ftronger attachment to the practice of " good works; nay they would even ftrive which fhould fhow the greateft love " to their country, if the Sovereign protected them all, and kept an equal bal- " lance among them by his equity: now it is evident that fo beautiful an emula- " tion would produce infinite advantages, and confequently that Toleration is the " moft proper means in the world to bring back the Golden Age, and to make " a confort and harmony of many voices and inftruments of different tones and " notes, as agreeable at leaft as the fingle harmony of one voice. What is it then " that prevents this beautiful concert, formed of voices and tones fo different from " one another; it is, that the one of the two Religions wants to exercife a cruel " tyranny over the minds, and force the others to facrifice their confciences to it; " it is that Princes foment this unjuft partiality, and lend the fecular arm to the " furious and tumultuous paffions of a herd of Monks and Clerks: in a word, thefe " diforders proceed not from Toleration, but from Non-Toleration." He afterwards fhows in what fenfe Princes ought to be the nurfing Fathers of the Church. The feventh objection is, " That conftraint in the literal fenfe cannot be denied, " without introducing a general Toleration." Mr Bayle acknowledgeth that this confequence is juft, but denies that it is abfurd. He fhews that no inconveniencies would follow from tolerating not only the Jews, but if it were neceffary, the Mahometans and Pagans, and much more the Socinians. He examines the reftrictions of thofe who plead for a partial Toleration; and after making fome remarks on what is called Blafphemy, he concludes, that Servetus was unjuftly punifhed as a Blafphemer. 1686.

(1) Commentaire Philofophique, &c. Part. II, cap. 6. pag. 363, 364.

The 8th and laft Objection is, " That conftraint in the literal fenfe is rendered " odious by falfly fuppofing, that it authorifes the perfecution of the Truth." Mr Bayle anfwers that the confequence is juft; and that if we admit the literal fenfe, Heretics will have the fame right to perfecute the Orthodox, that the Orthodox pretend to have to perfecute the Heretics. In order to prove this, he lays it down for a principle, that men are always obliged to follow the dictates of their confcience; that they always fin when they do not follow them, though they may likewife fometimes fin by following them. That principle is founded on this Maxim, that whatever is done contrary to the dictates of the conficience is a fin; from whence it follows, that whoever doth an action which his confcience tells him is bad, or who omits doing what his confcience tells him he ought to do, offends God and neceffarily commits a fin. So that if God had commanded, by a pofitive law, that every man who knows the truth ought to employ fire and fword to defend it; all thofe to whom this law fhould be revealed, would be indifpenfably obliged to obey it. But fince a Heretic is perfuaded that his opinions are true, he is therefore obliged to do that for his errors, which God fhould have commanded to be done in defence of the truth; and confequently Heretics would be authorized to perfecute the Orthodox, whom they look upon as maintainers of error, if it was true that God had commanded to perfecute error. He confirms this proof by diftinguifhing betwixt abfolute truth and feeming truth. He fays that as we have no certain mark whereby to difcern whether what feems to be truth to us, be abfolutely fo; when it happens that errror is cloathed in the drefs of truth, we owe it the fame refpect that is due to truth; and that confidering the weaknefs of man, and the ftate in which he is placed, the infinite wifdom of God has not permitted that he fhould require of us rigorouffly the knowledge of abfolute truth, but that he has laid a burthen upon us proportioned to our ftrength, which is to enquire after the truth, and to ftop at that which feems to be fuch after a fincere enquiry, to love this feeming truth, and to conform ourfelves to it's commands how difficult foever they may be.

(2) Difcours preliminaire qui contient plufieurs remarques diftinctes de celles du Commentaire.

In the Preface intituled A preliminary Difcourfe containing feveral remarks diftinct from thofe in the Commentary (2), the author fays that he compofed this work, at the defire of a Refugee, who is the author of France entirely Catholic; and that having wrote it in order to it's being tranflated into French, and upon occafion of the perfecution of the Proteftants in France, he had not quoted any Engliih books in it, but had confined himfelf to fuch as were very well known to the French Converters. Here he attacks a-freih the fpirit of perfecution, and confutes fome Catholic Controvertifts with a great deal of force and vehemence. " The Author (fays Mr Bayle, 1686. "speaking of this work in his Journal (1), has prefixed to his book a long pre- "liminary Diſcourſe, which may be juſtly called a Philippic Oration. The defi- "nition which he there gives of a Converter is almoſt as cruel as the thing "defined; all the reſt is very much in the ſame ſtrain." Before this diſcourſe there is an advice to the reader, wherein the bookſeller promiſes to publiſh ſpeedily a third part, containing a Refutation of the reaſons whereby St Auguſtin juſtifies perſecution.

Digitized by Google

(1) November, ubi ſupra, pag. 1343, 1349.

The News from the Republic of Letters procured Mr Bayle the eſteem not only of particular perſons, but likewiſe of ſeveral illuſtrious ſocieties. The French Academy, to whom he had preſented his Journal, thanked him in a Letter wherein he was aſſured that they had been unanimous in acknowledging his merit, and the uſefulneſs of the preſent he had made them (2). The Royal Society in England wrote him a Letter wherein they ſay (3), That having obſerved his particular care in collecting every thing curious that happened among men of letters, and the fine genius he diſcovered in his Journal, they were deſirous of holding a fixed and certain correſpondence with him, from which they might reap common advantages. They add, that as the firſt mark of their eſteem for him, they had ſent him the Natural Hiſtory of Fiſhes, by Mr Willoughby, reviſed and augmented by Mr Ray. He received likewiſe very civil letters from the Society of Dublin (4). It conſiſted of a number of learned and curious gentlemen who had formed themſelves into a body, in order to contribute to the advancement of arts and ſciences: but it continued only a few years.

(2) Letter from Mr Benſerade, of the 18th of May 1685, p. 242.

(3) Letter from Mr Hoskins, Secretary to the Royal Society, of the 13th of May 1686, p. 256.

(4) Letter from Mr Smyth, Secretary to the Society of Dublin, of the 1ſt of December, 1686, pag. 272.

On the other hand, his Journal engaged him in ſome diſputes; and occaſioned ſome complaints which he ſatisfied either by explaining himſelf, or by fairly correcting the miſtakes he had made by following ſome unexact Memoirs which had been communicated to him. But he was cenſured in one particular, which gave him a great deal of uneaſineſs, not ſo much upon account of the manner of the complaint, as becauſe it concerned a crowned head. This is one of the moſt memorable events of Mr Bayle's life, and deſerves that I ſhould here publiſh all the pieces which relate to it.

In the Journal of the Month of April 1686 (5), he took notice of a printed paper that was handed about under the name of Queen Chriſtina of Sweden. It was an anſwer to a letter of the Chevalier de Terlon, wherein that Princeſs condemned the perſecution in France. "It is very probable (ſays he) that all the "Confeſſionaries in France would be ſevere to the Queen of Sweden, if it were "true that ſhe had anſwered the Chevelier de Terlon in the manner contained in "the Letter which is handed about, wherein ſhe loudly condemns the conduct of "France, with regard to the late converſions, and eſpecially when ſhe conſiders "the behaviour of the Clergy of France, againſt the head of the Church. There "are a great many Proteſtants who cannot believe that a Princeſs who profeſſeth "the Catholic Religion, has wrote ſuch a Letter." Mr Bayle was deſired to give this Letter a place in his Journal, and he inſerted it in that of the Month of May (6). It is as follows:

(5) Art. vi, of the New Books, p. m. 472.

(6) Art. iv, pag. 529, and the following.

"SINCE you deſire to know my ſentiments concerning the pretended extirpation "of Hereſy in France, it is with great pleaſure that I acquaint you with them, "upon ſo important a ſubject. As I pretend neither to fear nor to flatter any "perſon, I will freely own to you, that I am not well perſuaded of the ſucceſs of "this great undertaking, and that I cannot rejoice upon that account, as for a "thing that will be of great advantage to our holy Religion. On the contrary, I "foreſee a great many ill conſequences, which will follow upon ſo ſtrange a pro- "ceeding."

"Tell me ingenuouſly, are you well perſuaded of the ſincerity of thoſe new Con- "verts? I wiſh indeed that they may obey God and their Prince ſincerely; but "I fear their obſtinacy, and I would not be accountable for all the profanations "which will be committed by theſe Catholics, compelled by Miſſionaries who treat "our holy myſteries very licentiouſly. Soldiers are ſtrange Apoſtles, I imagine they "are fitter to kill, raviſh, and plunder, than to perſuade. Accordingly, the accounts "we have, and of which we cannot poſſibly doubt, inform us that they acquit "themſelves of their miſſion very much after their uſual manner. I pity people "who are abandoned to their diſcretion: I lament the ruin of ſo many families, "ſo many good people reduced to beggary, and I cannot look upon what paſſeth "in France at preſent without being moved with compaſſion. I am ſorry that theſe "unhappy people were born in error, but methinks they deſerve pity rather than "hatred; and as I would not for the empire of the world ſhare in their error, ſo "neither would I be the cauſe of their miſeries.

"I conſider France at preſent as in the condition of a ſick perſon, from whom "they cut legs and arms to cure a diſtemper which a little patience and gentle ma- "nagement would have entirely removed. But I am much afraid leaſt that diſtemper "encreaſe and at laſt turn incurable; that this fire concealed under the aſhes ſhould "one day blaze out more fiercely than ever, and leaſt Hereſy, under a maſque, "ſhould thereby become more dangerous. Nothing is more commendable than the

Digitized by Google

" deſign of converting Heretics and Infidels. But the manner in which they chooſe 1686.
" to go about it is very new. And ſince our Lord did not make uſe of that method " to convert the world, it cannot be the beſt.

" I admire and cannot comprehend this zeal and theſe politics, they are out of " my reach, and I am even glad that I do not comprehend them. Do you be" lieve that this is a time to convert Huguenots, to make them good Catholics in " an age, in which the moſt notorious attempts are made in France upon the reſpect
" and ſubmiſſion which is due to the Church of Rome, which is the ſole and ſure
" foundation of our Religion, ſince it is to her our Lord has made that glorious pro-
" miſe, that the gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt her? Nevertheleſs the ſcanda-
" lous liberty of the Gallican Church was never puſhed nearer to rebellion, than it is " at preſent. The late propoſitions, ſigned and publiſhed by the Clergy of France,
" are ſuch as have given too much ground of triumph to Hereſy, and I fancy its
" ſurpriſe muſt have been very great, to ſee itſelf perſecuted by thoſe whoſe doctrines
" and ſentiments are ſo agreeable to its own upon this fundamental article of our " Religion.

" Theſe are the ſtrong reaſons which hinder me from rejoicing at this " pretended extirpation of Hereſy. The intereſt of the Church of Rome is without " doubt as dear to me as my life; but it is upon account of that very intereſt that " I ſee what paſſeth with grief, and I own to you likewiſe that my love to France
" is ſuch as makes me lament the deſolation of ſo fine a kingdom. I wiſh with " all my heart that I may be miſtaken in my conjectures, and that all may ter-
" minate in the greater glory of God, and of the King your maſter. And I aſſure
" myſelf that you will neither doubt of the ſincerity of my wiſhes, nor that I am."

In that ſame month (1) he ſaid; " We have been aſſured by very good hands
" that Queen Chriſtina did write the Letter which we have inſerted above." And in that of the month of June (2) he ſays again: " What we hinted at in our laſt
" month is confirmed to us from day to day, that Chriſtina is the real Author of " the Letter concerning the Perſecutions in France, which is aſcribed to her. It " is a remainder of Proteſtantiſm."

(1) Art. i. of the new books, pag. m. 522.

(2) Art. vi. of the new books, p. m. 726.

Some time after Mr Bayle received the following letter:

Sir,

" I HOPE you will not take it amiſs that I give you a little advice, which
" in proceſs of time may be of ſome uſe to you, as you will ſee. You are " a man of wit, and people who read your News from the Republic of Letters, if " they have the leaſt taſte, confeſs you have an infinite deal of it: But, Sir, may " not one be a man of wit without abuſing people, and bringing one ſelf into trouble?
" And ought you, who know ſo many things, to be ignorant of the reſpect due " to crowned heads; and that theſe are ſacred things, which are not to be touched
" without danger of the thunderbolt? I ſay this with relation to the Queen of " Sweden, of whom you have taken the liberty of talking very licentiouſly in your " Journal, upon occaſion of a Letter which has been printed under her name. You " mention it in four different paſſages, but the laſt of them ſurely proceeds from
" a genius which has ſoared a little higher than became it.

" Although you had added to the illuſtrious name of Chriſtina at leaſt the title
" of Queen, you would have done nothing but your duty. Do not tell me that " great Hiſtorians, ſuch as you are, treat the greateſt Monarchs in the ſame man" ner, and that they ſay without ceremony Louis the XIVth, and James the IId,
" in ſpeaking of the Kings of France and of England. The numbers XIVth,
" and IId, carry with them a ſort of diſtinction, and in ſome ſort correct the " liberty of that expreſſion. But who would ſay, for example, Lewis has taken it
" into his head to convert the Proteſtants, by a miſſion of Dragoons; or, James endea-
" vours by gentle methods to re-eſtabliſh, if poſſible, his own Religion in his kingdom; that " would be a very ridiculous manner of ſpeaking. It is not leſs ſo, Sir, to ſay as you " have done in your Journal for the month of June laſt, page 726, It is confirmed
" that Chriſtina is the true Author &c. in ſpeaking of one of the moſt illuſtrious
" Queens that has been, or perhaps ever will be, in the univerſe. You ought ſure-
" ly to have accompanied that name with ſome title, not only becauſe of the reſpect
" you owe to ſo great a Princeſs when you mention her Majeſty, but even in con" formity to the ſtile of thoſe who pique themſelves upon being good writers."

" But ſtill this is not what is moſt faulty in that paſſage of your Journal. The " worſt is two or three words, with which you conclude this Article: It is a re- " mainder, ſay you, of Proteſtantiſm. You had done well not to have ſaid this.
" Your great inclination to play the wit has hurried you on; but you have de" ceived yourſelf; there is no wit in it, there is only inſolence. No body talks
" at that rate of a Queen who profeſſeth with ſo much zeal, and in ſo edifying a man" ner, a Religion quite oppoſite to Proteſtantiſm; who has ſacrificed every thing " for it, and who in all her actions contradicts what you have ſaid, that there is " in her Majeſty any remainder of your Religion. To be convinced of this, one need " only read that very Letter which you mention in your Journal, or a great many " others

Digitized by Google

1686. " others which she has wrote on the same subject. She is not indeed a Catholic after the " manner of France, she is one after the manner of Rome, that is to say, after the " manner of St Peter and of St Paul. Therefore she doth not approve of these " persecutions, because in reality this manner of converting Heretics, had not it's " original from the Apostles.

" For the rest, all that I say to you here I say from myself, and because my " duty obligeth me to do so, being one of the Queen's servants. If her Majesty " happens to read your Journal, I do not know what she will say, or what she " will do: but believe me, Sir, whatever protection you may boast of from the " magistrates of the city of Rotterdam, that would not save you from the resent- " ment of so great a Princess, if she should undertake to do herself justice. And " the magistrates of Rotterdam are too just and reasonable to undertake to protect " upon such an occasion.

" Her Majesty doth not disown the Letter which has been printed under her " name, and which you have inserted in your Journal. There are only the words " I am with which it concludes, which are not her Majesty's. A man of wit, as " you are, ought to have taken notice of this, and to have corrected it. So great " a Queen cannot make use of that expression, except to very few persons, and " Mr de Terlon is not of that number. This single circumstance is sufficient to " prove that the printing of this Letter was no contrivance of the Queen, as all " the world knows. If you have a mind to mention it in your Journal, you may; " but no rallery on this subject, as you have taken the liberty to do in the " month of April, page 472: make use of this advice, and believe that in this I " am truly, Sir, your very humble servant.

" P. S. I do not subscribe my name, because is it not necessary, and besides my " Letter requires no answer. When it shall be proper to make myself known to " you I will do it: but it is your business to amend, if you think proper."

Mr Bayle justified himself in an Article of the Journal for the month of August (1), intituled, Reflections of the author of this Journal upon a Letter which has been sent him concerning what he has said of the Queen of Sweden (2). His answer is as follows:

(1) Art. ix. pag. m. 952, and the following.

" The writer of this Letter doth not put his name to it, and neither tells us the " time when, nor the place from whence, he writes. He only acquaints us that " all that he has written is only from himself, and that his duty obliged him to do " so, being one of the Queen's servants. Let us see what it is he complains " of, and since it concerns a crowned-head, let us not imagine that the bitterness " and passion he expresses, shall hinder us from justifying our conduct very cooly."

(2) Reflexions de l'Auteur de ces Nouvelles sur une Lettre qui lui a été écrite touchant ce qu'il a dit de la Reyne de Suede.

" He complains first, That I did not add the title of Queen to the illustrious name " of Christina in my last month of June, page 726. But I am very sure that no body " who judges equitably will be of opinion, that in this I have been wanting in " the respect due to that great Princess. She has rendered her name so famous, " that my expression in that passage ought not at all to be thought equivocal. To " name persons by their names only, without adding some title, is ordinarily in- " deed either a mark of contempt, or of familiarity; but this is by no means a ge- " neral rule, for there are some persons whose names alone excite the ideas of " their great elevation, and in this case it is quite indifferent whether we give them " their principal titles, or omit them. There is no harm in giving them, it is a " superfluous addition which at worst can do no hurt. Neither on the contrary is " there any harm in not giving them, it is an omission of no consequence. Crowned- " heads are of this number, and hence it is that we say more frequently both in " conversation and in history, Francis I. Charles V. Henry IV. Philip II. than King " Francis the Ist, The Emperor Charles V, &c. It is supposed that the rank to which " God has raised these Princes makes it impossible for a reader to imagine that their " titles are omitted out of want of respect, and therefore the shorter expression " is made use of without scruple. I know very well, as the author of the Letter " observes, that the number first, which is added to the name of Francis, carries " with it a sort of distinction; but this very instance shows, that in case the name " of Francis alone contained a distinction, it would not be necessary to add the " number first. Thus we say every day, that Alexander was a disciple of Aristotle, " that Soliman made himself master of Hungary. One has no occasion to say either " that the first was King of Macedon, or that the second was Grand Signior, or " to add the ordinal number which belongs to them. Our most exact writers would " say without scruple Constantine, Theodosius, Justinian, are the true authors of such " a law. Or if we desire an example nearer home, who has not said or wrote, ei- " ther during the life of Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, or after his death, " Gustavus did this or that? and whence comes it that in speaking of him it is not ne- " cessary to add the title of King, nor the ordinal number which belongs to him in the " succession of the Kings of Sweden? It is because he has rendered the name Gustavus " so famous, that he is sufficiently distinguished by it alone. This is the very case in " question. The Queen of Sweden, his daughter, has given such a lustre to the name

Digitized by Google

" of Chriſtina, that the naming of it alone is ſufficient to awaken all the ideas 1686.
" of her royalty, great qualities, and actions. As therefore it ſhows no want of " reſpect to the father to call him ſimply Guſtavus, ſo it is no want of reſpect
" to the daughter, to name her ſimply Chriſtina; but on the contrary, it is giving " to underſtand that they deſerve theſe names by way of excellence, and that their " very names contain their panegyric.

" The ſecond complaint turns upon my having ſaid, that this Queen's Letter againſt
" the perſecution in France is a remainder of Proteſtantiſm. This is very violently
" complained of. But this proceeds from not having ſufficiently underſtood the force
" of theſe words. They have imagined that I intended to inſinuate that this Princeſs
" had not ſincerely renounced the Proteſtant Religion; which is what never entered " into my thoughts. It is not neceſſary to a ſincere renunciation of a Religion, that " we ſhould diveſt ourſelves of every thing we have learned in it, and approve
" every thing that is taught in the communion which we embrace. I ſhould
" think people very unjuſt, who ſhould ſuſpect the ſincerity of a Roman Ca" tholic, who after having joined in communion with the Proteſtants, ſhould declare " that in ſome particulars the Church of Rome ſeemed to him to have the ad" vantage of the Proteſtant, ſuch as in the celibacy of the Clergy, in the obſer-
" vation of Lent, and in the faſting on Fridays and Saturdays. One would have
" reaſon to believe that theſe were remainders of Catholiciſm; but one might ſay ſo
" and believe at the ſame time, that he had ſincerely abjured his Catholiciſm, and " embraced Proteſtantiſm, as the only Religion which leads to ſalvation. It is there" fore judging of things without underſtanding them to give my words the ſenſe
" which he gives them. The true ſenſe they ought to have, is the following.

" That if the Queen of Sweden diſapproves of the conduct of thoſe employed " in the pretended converſions in France, it is owing to the principles of the " Religion in which ſhe was inſtructed before her journey to Rome, and not to " the new inſtructions ſhe has received in that country. It is not at Rome that " one can learn to find fault with perſecution. On the contrary, it is the general
" ſpirit of Catholiciſm to extirpate all ſects; for they have not only made public
" rejoicings at Rome for what has been done in France; not only has the Pope
" applauded it in full Conſiſtory, and by his Briefs, but likewiſe all the Catho" lics in Europe have ſhown their approbation of it, at leaſt by their ſilence.
" How then could the Queen of Sweden have the principles ſhe has, if ſhe had " not brought them from her own country? It is (ſays the author of the Letter)
" becauſe ſhe is not a Catholic after the manner of France, but after the manner of
" Rome, that is, of St Peter and St Paul. But this is what I have called a re- " mainder of Proteſtantiſm, and ſo this author and I have really the ſame thought.

" The laſt thing he finds fault with, is that I did not ſtrike out the words I " am, out of the copy of the Letter which I inſerted in my Journal. There is " only this word (ſays he) which is not her Majeſty's. So great a Queen cannot make
" uſe of that expreſſion except to very few perſons, and Mr de Terlon is not of that " number. This ſingle circumſtance is ſufficient to prove that the printing of this Letter
" was no contrivance of the Queen, as all the world knows. To this I anſwer, that " I did not think that I could with juſtice ſtrike out this Concluſion, I am, be-
" cauſe by doing ſo, I ſhould give people reaſon to ſuſpect that I had ſuppreſſed
" a mark of forgery in that Letter, in order to make it appear more probable to " the public, that it was written by the Queen of Sweden. Moreover, there has " lately fallen into my hands a copy of a letter, wherein that Princeſs declares,
" that ſhe is ſurprized and diſpleaſed at the publication of the other, though ſhe
" ſtill continues in the ſame ſentiments. The curious will be glad to ſee this ſe-
" cond Letter here at length, but the law of nations doth not allow me to give " them that ſatisfaction. There is a great difference betwixt theſe two things, the " inſerting a piece which is in every body's hands, and is already printed; and
" the inſerting a piece which has never been printed. We muſt, with regard to " manuſcripts, either wait for the conſent of thoſe who have a right to them, or have
" reaſon to believe that they are entirely indifferent what uſe people make of them."

Mr Bayle's unknown correſpondent was not entirely ſatisfied with this anſwer, and wrote him the following Letter:

" Sir,

" THE Queen has ſeen the anſwer you have made to my Letter, and I muſt do
" you juſtice on the one ſide, if you have been to blame on the other. Her Ma-
" jeſty doth not think that it is to be wanting in the reſpect which is due to " her, to name her ſimply Chriſtina. She has indeed rendered that name ſo il-
" luſtrious, that it has now no need of any other diſtinction, and the moſt noble
" and auguſt titles which could be joined to it, could add nothing to the luſtre
" which it has already acquired in the world. I was of opinion that it was not " a proper expreſſion, with regard to a prince, while he is ſtill living; but I " have been miſtaken; perſons of ſuch elevated rank, and ſo full of glory, as the

Digitized by Google

1686. " great Chriſtina, have rules peculiar to themſelves, and their names alone are ſuf-
" ficient to fill the minds of men with that reſpect and veneration which the titles
" of others excite. You have got the better in this, Sir, and I ſubmit.

" BUT the caſe is quite otherways with regard to the word Proteſtantiſm,
" which has eſcaped you ſomewhat unſeaſonably; and which you employ all the " ſubtilty of your wit to juſtify. You ought to follow my example, and own
" that you have been to blame. The Queen, who is pretty well ſatisfied with " all the reſt of your excuſes, is not at all ſo with regard to this part of your " juſtification. One ought not to ſeek for evaſions before a genius like her's. When " one has offended her, the ſhorteſt and ſafeſt way is to confeſs it; and after all,
" a genius ſuch as your's, ought to have ſuggeſted ſomething more worthy of her
" Majeſty, than the reaſons you have brought in your defence. Not that any " thing you can ſay of her, is capable of giving her the leaſt uneaſineſs. So great
" a Queen cannot but equally deſpiſe the praiſes and calumnies of people of a " certain kind: but ſhe is born to do juſtice, and you might have boaſted that " you are the only perſon in the world who has offended her with impunity, if " you had not taken the courſe you have done, I mean that of juſtifying your-" ſelf.

" But you muſt do it effectually, Sir, and retract fully and diſtinctly what you " have ſaid, if you deſire to give an entire ſatisfaction. The Queen at leaſt has a " mind that you, together with all the world, ſhould know that ſhe owes nothing
" to the Proteſtant Religion; and that if God permitted that ſhe ſhould be born
" in it, ſhe renounced it as ſoon as ſhe arrived at the years of diſcretion, and
" that without having the leaſt thoughts of returning to it: that ever ſince that " time the Catholic Religion has appeared to her to be the only one, and the " true one, and that it was in conformity to it's holy maxims, and not to thoſe
" of the Proteſtants, that her Majeſty has in her Letter condemned the method
" uſed in France in the converſion of the Huguenots, and the Pope has rendered
" to that Letter the juſtice it deſerved.

" You have no reaſon to ſay, as you do, that you are treated with too much
" bitterneſs and paſſion in the Letter which I wrote to you; on the contrary I am " of opinion that you owe me thanks, and that you might poſſibly have had a " great deal more reaſon to complain, if I had not wrote to you. And I would " have you know that I am one of the leaſt of the Queen's ſervants, and that " there are in this Country a great many perſons who are proud of being in her
" Majeſty's intereſt, and who will talk to you in a very different manner than I " have done, if you do not take more care for the future.

" I have ſaid nothing to you concerning the word fameuſe, which you have " once more made uſe of in ſpeaking of the Queen (1), and which has not been " agreeable to her Majeſty. I know that this word has not altogether the ſame
" ſignification in French, which it has in Latin and in Italian, and that we uſe it more " frequently in a good than in a bad ſenſe. But one ought above all things to avoid
" theſe ambiguities in ſpeaking of crowned heads; with regard to whom you " know the Proverb ſays we ought to employ only golden and ſilken words.
" And eſpecially with regard to ſuch a Queen as we now ſpeak of; concerning " whom we may boldly ſay, and without fear of offending others, that ſhe has " no equal; I ſay ſo even in point of rank, for other Queens are properly ſpeak-
" ing only the firſt ſubjects of their huſbands or ſons; but the great Chriſtina is
" a Queen in a manner ſo noble and elevated, that ſhe knows no ſuperior but " God.

" This, Sir, is what I had farther to ſay to you, and is all the reply I can make " to your's. I hope you will continue to make uſe of my advice, and that time
" may diſcover that I am more than you can imagine, Sir, your very humble
" ſervant.

" P. S. I had forgot that in your Journal of the Month of Auguſt, you ſpeak
" of a ſecond Letter of the Queen, which has fallen into your hands, and which " you make ſome difficulty of publiſhing. Her Majeſty would be curious to " ſee that Letter, and you will do a thing agreeable to her Majeſty, if you ſend
" it to her. You might even make uſe of that opportunity to write to her Ma-
" jeſty. Take this advice; it may be of ſome ſervice to you: do not neglect
" it. But I muſt acquaint you that if you follow it, you muſt by no means
" make uſe of the title Sereniſſime to the Queen. It is a little too common for " her, and her Majeſty will not have it. You muſt only direct your Letter; A
" ſa Majeſté la Reyne Chriſtine, à Rome.

(1) Mr Bayle did not make uſe of this word: He only ſaid that Chriſtina avoit rendu ſon nom ſi FAMEUX, (had rendered her name ſo famous) &c. the ſame expreſſion which he afterwards uſed ſpeaking of Guſtavus Adolphus.

Mr Bayle took the hint that was given him, and on the 14th of November wrote the following Letter to Queen Chriſtina:

Digitized by Google

" Madam, 1686.

" I SHOULD not have taken the liberty of writing this Letter to your Ma-
" jeſty, if a perſon who has the honour of being in your Majeſty's ſervice
" had not adviſed me to do ſo, and to ſend to your Majeſty a copy of a Letter " which has fallen into my hands. I hoped, Madam, that an advice of this
" ſort would juſtify my boldneſs, and I thought it my duty to make uſe of this
" occaſion of teſtifying my moſt profound reſpect to the moſt illuſtrious Queen
" in the world. I am ignorant of the name of the perſon who procures me this " great honour. He has not thought fit to make himſelf known to me by any " other title than that of one of your Majeſty's ſervants; and I muſt do him the " juſtice to teſtify that his zeal for your Majeſty's intereſts is very ſuitable to the " title he aſſumes.

" It is by him that I have been informed that there are ſome things in the " News from the Republic of Letters, which did not ſeem agreeable to that re-
" ſpect which all the world owes to your Majeſty, not only upon account of " your Majeſty's heroic and extraordinary qualities, but likewiſe upon account of " the ſublime rank, in which, from your birth, God has placed your Majeſty.
" As I was ſenſible of my innocence, I was ſeized at once with the moſt in" expreſſible ſurprize, and the moſt unſufferable grief, when I found that my " words were interpreted in a manner ſo contrary to my genuine intention; and
" to every thing that common ſenſe ought to dictate to every rational creature.
" For is there any perſon, Madam, who has the ſmalleſt degree of knowledge " or reaſon, who is ignorant of that almoſt infinite glory which ſurrounds your " Majeſty, and of the profound homage which is due to your Majeſty from all " the world; and if any perſon has been capable of forgetting this duty, what " ſhame ought not he to feel upon that account? I proteſt to your Majeſty, that " ever ſince I was able to read I have known that your Majeſty is the admira-
" tion of the univerſe, and that there is not any one perſon in the whole Re" public of Letters who is more thoroughly ſenſible of, and more charmed with
" the juſt encomiums which have been given to your Majeſty by all the learned
" world. I can with truth affirm that I can ſtill repeat all the paſſages of Ala-
(1) Scudery has compoſed a pompous Panegyric on Queen Chriſtina, in the Xth Book of his Poem called Alaric ou Rome Vaincuë.
" ric (1) which relate to your Majeſty, whoſe auguſt name ſhines from all quarters.
" So that I would be the fartheſt in the world, from either ſaying or thinking any " thing which I apprehended to be contrary to the reſpect which is due to ſo
" great a Queen. My ſorrow therefore was exceeding great, when I underſtood
" that ſome perſons, who have the honour to ſerve your Majeſty, had judged
" me guilty. I immediately endeavoured to juſtify myſelf, and I am informed " that your Majeſty has been pleaſed to declare, that you are ſatisfied in the " main with my defence. This is my greateſt conſolation; and I am very much
" perſuaded, that it will not be more difficult for me to demonſtrate my innocence
" entirely, when it ſhall pleaſe your Majeſty to lay your commands upon me.

" The ſecond Letter which I received upon this ſubject, acquaints me with a " thing which your Majeſty deſires I ſhould make public. It is, that your Ma-
" jeſty renounced the Religion in which you was born, as ſoon as you attained
" the years of diſcretion. If your Majeſty command me I will alſo publiſh this
" new explanation; but I was of opinion, that ſince I have done myſelf the ho" nour, by the advice of one of your ſervants, to ſend to your Majeſty the copy
" of a Letter, and at the ſame time to pay to your Majeſty my moſt humble
" homage, it was my duty to wait for your Majeſty's commands. I moſt humbly
" beg that your Majeſty will be pleaſed to pardon all that may have eſcaped me,
" which has given occaſion to judge amiſs of my intentions; and I proteſt to your
" Majeſty with the utmoſt ſincerity, that my ſtrongeſt paſſion is to teſtify to all
" the world the admiration, veneration, and profound ſubmiſſion, with which I " am, &c."

The Queen upon the 14th of December 1686, wrote to him the following anſwer:

Mr Bayle. I have received your excuſes, and am willing that you ſhould know by this Letter that I am ſatisfied with them. I am obliged to the zeal of the perſon, who gave you occaſion of writing to me; for I am very glad to know you. You expreſs ſo much reſpect and affection for me, that I pardon you ſincerely; and I would have you know, that nothing gave me offence but that remainder of Proteſtantiſm, of which you accuſed me. I am very delicate on that head, becauſe no body can ſuſpect me of it, without leſſening my Glory, and injuring me in the moſt ſenſible manner. You would do well if you ſhould even acquaint the public with the miſtake you have made, and with your regret for it. This is all that remains to be done by you, in order to deſerve my being entirely ſatisfied with you.

As

Digitized by Google

1686. As to the Letter which you have ſent me, it is mine without doubt, and ſince you tell me that it is printed, you will do me a pleaſure if you ſend me ſome copies of it. As I fear nothing in France, ſo neither do I fear any thing at Rome. My fortune, my blood, and even my life are entirely devoted to the ſervice of the Church; but I flatter no body, and will never ſpeak any thing but the truth. I am obliged to thoſe who have been pleaſed to publiſh my letter, for I do not at all diſguiſe my ſentiments. I thank God they are too noble, and too honourable to be diſowned. However, it is not true that this Letter was written to one of my Miniſters. As I have every where enemies, and perſons who envy me, ſo I in all places have friends and ſervants; and I have poſſibly as many in France, notwithſtanding of the court, as any where in the world. This is purely the truth, and you may regulate yourſelf accordingly.

But you ſhall not get off ſo cheap as you imagine. I will enjoin you a penance; which is, that you will henceforth take the trouble of ſending me all curious books that ſhall be publiſhed in Latin, French, Spaniſh, or Italian, on whatever ſubject or ſcience, provided they are worthy of being looked into. I do not even except Romances or Satires; and above all if there are any books of Chymiſtry, I deſire you may ſend them to me as ſoon as poſſible. Do not forget likewiſe to ſend me your Journal. I ſhall order that you ſhall be paid for whatever you lay out, do but ſend me an accompt of it. This will be the moſt agreeable and important ſervice that can be done me. May God proſper you.

CHRISTINA ALEXANDRA.

1687. It now only remained that Mr Bayle ſhould acquaint the public with the miſtake he had made and with his regret for it, in order to merit that Princeſs's entire ſatisfaction. This he did in the beginning of his Journal of the month of January 1687. " We have been informed to our incredible ſatisfaction, ſays he, that the " QUEEN OF SWEDEN having ſeen the ninth Article of the Journal of Auguſt " 1686, has been pleaſed to be ſatisfied with the explanation which we gave there. " Properly it was only the words remainder of Proteſtantiſm, which had the misfortune " to offend her Majeſty; for as her Majeſty is very delicate on that ſubject, and de- " ſires that all the world ſhould know, that after having carefully examined the dif- " ferent Religions, ſhe has found none to be true but the Roman Catholic, and that " ſhe has heartily embraced it, it was injurious to her glory to give occaſion " for the leaſt ſuſpicion of her ſincerity. We are therefore very ſorry that we have " made uſe of an expreſſion, which has been underſtood in a ſenſe ſo very diffe- " rent from our intention, and we would have been very far from making uſe of " it, if we had forſeen that it was liable to any ambiguity: for beſides the reſpect " which we, together with all the world owe to ſo GREAT A QUEEN, who has " been the admiration of the univerſe from her earlieſt days, we join with the ut- " moſt zeal in that particular obligation which all men of letters are under to do " her homage, becauſe of the honour ſhe has done the ſciences by being pleaſed " thoroughly to examine their beauties, and to protect them in a diſtinguiſhing " manner."

Thus Mr Bayle extricated himſelf out of this affair with honour, and had the addreſs not only to appeaſe a provoked Queen, but likewiſe to procure marks of her favour. She very ſoon had the unwelcome news of his not being able to perform the penance ſhe was pleaſed to impoſe upon him. He ſunk under the weight of an inſupportable labour. Beſides his public and private lectures, he was employed in compoſing his Journal, a taſk which alone required the labour of many perſons. The Compoſition of his Philoſophical Commentary quite exhauſted his ſtrength. On the 16th of February 1687, he was ſeized with a Fever, which hindered him from finiſhing the Journal for that month. But as he hoped that this indiſpoſition would be attended with no bad conſequences, he gave notice on the back of the title page, " That ſore eyes and a ſlight fever, which had left him ſeveral times, and re- " turned as ſoon as he attempted to reſume his ſtudies, did at laſt oblige him " to publiſh the Journal for this month incompleat, and to acquaint the public " likewiſe that the Journal for the month of March ſhould appear very ſoon." But his Fever, attended with a head-ach, encreaſed to ſuch a degree that he was obliged to give over that work. He engaged Mr de Beauval to continue it, and Mr de Beauval began that Continuation, which was printed at Rotterdam by Mr Leers, with the month of September 1687, under the title of The Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned (1). " Ever ſince the month of April laſt, ſays he in the " preface, the Author of the Republic of Letters having being indiſpoſed, and af- " flicted with pains in his head, which Mr Balzac would call the pangs of his beau- " tiful productions, propoſed to me that I ſhould continue his work, which he was " by this means forced to give over. I confeſs that poſſibly being flattered by my " vanity upon the account of his having ſingled me out upon ſuch an occaſion, " I accepted the taſk without making all the reflexions that ſuch an undertaking " deſerved. I believed that his choice would ſupply both the place of merit, and " of excuſe with the public, and ſo reſolved to make ſome attempts at leaſt. Since " I have entered into this detail, adds he, people would no doubt likewiſe know

(1) Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans.

Digitized by Google

" why I have not continued this work under the ſame title, that Mr Bayle made 1687.
" uſe of. I own that this would have been more natural: but my particular at" tachments to Rotterdam, the great plenty of the beſt books which are to be had
" at Mr Leers's, together with ſome other reaſons which it is not neceſſary to " mention here, made me think it more proper to change it. After all I thought " it beſt to treat the public as we do thoſe who are afflicted with the loſs of a perſon
" very dear to them, whom we muſt never carry to thoſe places, which may bring " to mind, or awaken the ideas of the object of their grief. The public would have " always in the News from the Republic of Letters, ſought after the illuſtrious Au" thor who gave them birth, and the ſame title ill ſuported, would only have ſerved
" to redouble their ſorrow for the loſs of ſo inimitable a perſon."

In the mean time, the Sieur Deſbordes, who had printed the News from the Republic of Letters, cauſed them to be continued by Mr Larroque, and ſome other perſons, until the month of Auguſt of the ſame year 1687, and Mr Barin, a French Miniſter, compoſed them without any aſſiſtannce from the month of September to the month of April 1689.

We have ſeen what pains Mr Bayle was at, that he might not be thought the author of the Philoſophical Commentary. He endeavoured even to deceive his friends, " Theſe gentlemen at London, ſays he to Mr Lenfant (1), have a ſtrange itch of " printing. The public aſcribe to them a Philoſophical Commentary on theſe words of " St Luke compel them to come in, wherein under pretence of attacking Popiſh per- " ſecution they aim at eſtabliſhing a toleration for the Socinians." He feigned that this Commentary came from London, becauſe ſome Miniſters among the Refugees, who lived there at this time, were thought to be great friends to Toleration, and had even rendered themſelves ſuſpected of Socinianiſm. Notwithſtanding all this he was ſtill ſuſpected to be the author of it. To put a ſtop to this ſuſpicion he publiſhed on the back of the title-page of the Journal for the month of April 1687 (2), that " certain " perſons, ill-diſpoſed towards the author of the General Criticiſm on Mr Maimbourg, " having affected to aſcribe to him the Philoſophical Commentary on the words compel " them to come in, he thought himſelf obliged to complain of this bad office, and " to declare that he will look upon all perſons as perſecutors with regard to him, " who ſhall continue to ſpread abroad a conjecture ſo oppoſite as this is to all the " rules of Criticiſm. One might as well, adds he, aſcribe Voiture's Letters to Bal- " zac, or thoſe of Baudius to Blondel."

(1) Letter of the 3d February, 1687. pag. 281, 282.

(2) There are ſome Copies where this is not to be found,

The Philoſophical Commentary did not pleaſe Mr Jurieu; and how was it poſſible for him to reliſh a book wherein mildneſs, moderation, or, to ſay it in one word, Toleration, was ſo ſtrongly eſtabliſhed. He undertook to refute it, and gave to his anſwer the following title, The rights of the two Sovereigns in matters of Religion, Conſcience, and the Prince. In oppoſition to the indifferency of Religions and univerſal Toleration, againſt a book intituled a Philoſophical Commentary on theſe words of the Parable, Compel them to come in (3). He ſets out under the character of a novice in writing, who in obedience to the commands of a friend, and out of vexation at that book, was a going to be an author in ſpite of nature and himſelf. Afterwards he gives his friend his opinion concerning the Commentary, That it is an original and not a tranſlation. That it is of French and not of Engliſh extraction. He adds, That it is not the work of one ſingle perſon. " This appears, ſays he, to be the work of a cabal, " and a conſpiracy againſt the truth; nothing is more unequal than the ſtile of it. " In the firſt part the expreſſions are clear and pretty ſtrong, but there are paſſages " in the ſecond where one finds a confuſion, and obſcurities which do not ſeem to " proceed from the ſame genius that wrote the firſt. The pretended Tranſlator " affects ſometimes to make uſe of old French words, which are not now in uſe " among good writers; but his fraud is a little too groſs, for elſewhere he ſhows " that he underſtands French well enough to write more correctly." But in the advice to the reader he affirms downright That the authors of the Philoſophical Commentary are French Divines, and conſequently Refugees. When Mr Jurieu wanted afterwards to lay the compoſition of this book as a crime to Mr Bayle's charge, Mr Bayle always brought him back to this declaration, that it is the work of certain French Divines. Obſerve how he endeavours to ſoften this falſe judgment in a ſatirical piece which he publiſhed againſt a great many French Miniſters, and particularly againſt Mr Bayle, in the year 1691. " In the year which followed " our diſperſion, ſays he (4), there appeared a wicked book intituled, The Philoſo- " phical Commentary, &c. wherein the pernicious doctrine of the indifferency of " Religions and Doctrines of the Chriſtian Religion is maintained in ſo raſh and " bold a manner, as even goes the length of inſolence. I can truly ſay that this " book wounded and ſtruck me in a very ſenſible manner. One could eaſily gueſs " from the third volume of the General Criticiſm, whence it had it's original. But " the ſtile, and many other circumſtances, made us believe that it was the work " of a cabal, and publiſhed by ſeveral perſons in concert."

(3) Des Droits des deux Souverains en matiere de Religion, la Conſcience & le Prince. Pour détruire le dogme de l'indifference des Religions & de la tolerance univerſelle, contre un Livre intitulé Commentaire Philoſophique ſur ces paroles de la parabole, Contrains les d'entrer.

(4) Apologie du Sieur Jurieu, p. 4. col. 2.

Mr Bayle had finiſhed the third part of his Philoſophical Commentary, and given it to the Printer before he fell ſick. The impreſſion of it was finiſhed before the end of February, but he did not receive any copies of it 'till the 20th of June.

Digitized by Google

1687. It is intitled, A Philoſophical Commentary on theſe Words of JESUS CHRIST, compel them to come in. Part the third. Containing a refutation of the Apology which St Auguſtin has made for thoſe who uſe violence in making converts. At Canterbury, by Thomas Litwel, 1687 (1). Here two Letters of St Auguſtin are refuted, the one wrote to a Donatiſt Biſhop named Vincentius, who had let that Father know how much he was ſurprized at his inconſtancy, having formerly been of opinion that the authority of the ſecular power ought not to be made uſe of againſt Heretics, but only the word of God and perſuaſion; whereas now he maintained quite the contrary. The other is addreſſed to Bonifacius, who was a Tribune in Africa, wherein St Auguſtin pretends that it is lawful to employ the ſecular arm to deſtroy Heretics. The Archbiſhop of Paris had ordered theſe two Letters to be printed in 1685, with a long Preface intitled, The Conformity of the conduct of the Church of France in reclaiming the Proteſtants, with that of the Church of Afric to bring the Donatiſts into the Catholic Church (2). This is likewiſe the title of the whole book. Mr Bayle had refuted ſome paſſages of this Preface in his preliminary Diſcourſe. He doth not here confine himſelf to the two Letters which I have mentioned, but likewiſe anſwers what St Auguſtin has ſaid on this ſubject in ſome other Letters.

(1) Commentaire philoſophique ſur ces paroles de Jeſus Chriſt, contrains-les d'entrer: troiſiéme Partie contenant la Refutation de l'Apologie que St Auguſtin a faite des Convertiſſeurs à contrainte. A Cantorbery, chez Thomas Litwel 1687.

As ſoon as he had ſeen Mr Jurieu's anſwer, he wrote a letter to his Bookſeller, dated from London the $\frac{20}{30}$th of May 1687. "If you have (ſays he) ſtill time "enough, (and it is no matter though you have already ſold ſome copies) I de- "ſire you to publiſh what follows at the beginning of the third part." He ſays afterwards, that he has juſt read the treatiſe Of the rights of the two ſovereigns, &c. againſt a book intitled a Philoſophical Commentary, &c. and that he finds it an unſucceſsful and very weak attack on that Commentary. "The author, (adds he) owns in "the beginning, that in ſpite of himſelf and of nature, his Chagrin, and the "deſire of one of his friends, are going to make him an author. One "muſt have very little judgment to make ſuch a confeſſion. Chagrin ought to "have no ſhare in the compoſition of any work. ..... His performance is "faulty in thoſe very places which moſt eſſentially require ſolidity, ſince it goes "entirely upon a falſe ſtate of the queſtion, ſo that he fights againſt a ſhadow, "I mean againſt an opinion which he falſely imputes to me. He is at prodi- "gious pains to prove that men frequently ſin and offend God, while they act "according to the light of their conſcience. Who denies that? have not I "ſaid ſo very diſtinctly in more places than one? he accuſes me likewiſe of intro- "ducing an indifferency of Religions, whereas on the contrary, there never was "any doctrine more oppoſite to that indifferency, than this which lays it down "as a principle, that we ought always to act according to our conſciences. Fal- "lacies of the ſame ſort prevail in the paſſage where he treats of the legiſlative "power of Sovereigns in matters of Religion. As for quotations from the ſcripture, "they are very frequent in his book, but for the moſt part miſunderſtood, and "in the manner of St Auguſtin. To conclude, this author has officiouſly meddled "with a ſubject he doth not underſtand, and has through the whole been guilty "of the fallacy of not proving what was the point in queſtion."

(2) Conformité de la Conduite de l'Egliſe de France pour ramener les Proteſtans, avec celle de l'Egliſe d'Afrique pour ramener les Donatiſtes à l'Egliſe Catholique.

Mr Bayle's indiſpoſition ſtill continuing he reſolved to try a change of air, and drink the waters of Aix la Chapelle. He left Rotterdam upon the eighth day of Auguſt, and went to Cleves, where he arrived the 13th of that month. Next day he went to lodge at the houſe of Mr Ferrand, Miniſter of the Caſtle of Cleves, and continued there 'till the 15th of September, on which he paſſed to Bois le Duc, and from thence to Aix la Chapelle, in company with Mr Pielat, Miniſter of Rotterdam, and Mr Farjon, Miniſter of Vaals. He returned to Rotterdam upon the 18th of October: but he was obliged to repoſe himſelf for ſome months longer; as he writes to Mr Conſtant in a Letter of the 22d of March 1688. "It is more "than thirteen months (ſays he (3), ſince I fell ſick, and all the while have "only lingered and languiſhed, and I now only begin at the return of this ſpring, "to be able to take a little literary exerciſe. After my return from Aix la "Chapelle, where I had been to drink the waters, I found your ſon here. .... "but unluckily for me, I was not able to ſpeak much without bringing upon me "a return of my ſlow Fever, and this has been my continual misfortune during "my illneſs: if I entered never ſo little into converſation, I was the worſe for "it." He gives Mr Lenfant a more particular account in a Letter of the 20th of July. "You do me a great deal of honour (ſays he (4), remembering, as "you are pleaſed to do, a perſon in a manner dead to the world, and blotted "out of the memory of the living. ..... I have made a Journey to Cleves, "another to Aix, and upon my return hither, I have, during the whole winter, "immerſed myſelf in the greateſt Quietiſm imaginable, without either reading or "writing. At laſt, after I thought myſelf ſufficiently repoſed, I re-aſſumed my "Philoſophical Lectures, firſt my public only, and afterwards likewiſe my pri- "vate ones; but with regard to other matters, I obſerved and do ſtill keep myſelf "in a full and abſolute inaction. ..... I have not as yet returned to my "books, nay I do not ſo much as run through the Literary Journals; and

(3) Letters &c. ubi ſupra, p. 283, 284.

(4) Ibid. pag. 285, 286.

Digitized by Google

" out of fear of being tempted to break this agreeable charm of indolence, very 1687.
" seldom visit the booksellers, so that I am quite ignorant what new things they " have got. I only hear by chance sometimes that this or the other book is
" come out."

All the men of letters were afflicted at Mr Bayle's illness: and they were overjoyed to hear of his recovery. Mr du Tot de Ferrare, a Counsellor in the Parliament of Rouen, a man of great worth, and a great master in the lapidary stile (1), testified his joy upon that occasion, by the following beautiful inscription:

(1) See his Elogy in the Memoires pour l'Histoire des Sciences & des beaux Arts, December 1704, Art. iv. p. 440. and the following of the Dutch Edition.

In
Doctissimi Bælii
Sanitatem restitutam

SOTERIA.

QUÆ TE MORI VETAT GLORIA,
ÆGROTARE PROHIBET.
OMNIBUS CARUS ET UTILIS
SCRIPTORES
CRITICA FACE ELUCIDASTI,
CENSORIA NOTA EMENDASTI.
QUÆSITOR URNAM MOVENS
MAGNUM IN NOMEN ITUROS ÆTERNITATI
PRONUBA MANU DICASTI.
LABORIBUS TUIS ALIENOS ABSUMIS,
DELICIIS NOSTRIS NUSQUAM ABSUMENDUS.
IN HOC VENERANDUS
QUOD NEMINEM CONTEMPSISTI:
IN HOC VERENDUS
QUOD NEMINEM FORMIDASTI:
DIGNUS QUI VERITATIS ANNOS EXÆQUES.
QUI LABANTEM SUSTENTAS COGNATAM VERITATI
LIBERTATEM.
NON AD UNIUS UTILITATEM REGIONIS NATUS,
ITA EXILIUM TOLERAS
UT VIDEARIS OPTASSE:
ITA CUNCTOS EMINUS COMINUS REFICIS,
UT VIX CREDARIS ULLIBI ABESSE.
THEATRUM ERUDITIONIS CIRCUMDUCTILE
FACTUS EST ORBI.
SUBSELLIA QUÆ DICENDO FATIGARE NON POTES, TE SILENTEM FERRE
TE QUIESCENTE QUIESCERE
NE SPERA.

VALE, VIVE, SCRIBE.

ENCÆNIA RENOVATÆ FACUNDIÆ
FAUSTIS LITERATORUM ACCLAMATIONIBUS
CELEBRANTUR.

Mr Bayle had once a design to leave Rotterdam. The death of Mr Paets, and 1688.
the violent temper of Mr Jurieu, had made him weary of it: accordingly he desired the famous Mr Abbadie, who was then at Berlin, to procure him some establishment in that City. He knew that the Elector of Brandenbourg gave a generous protection to the French Refugees; and besides he had several friends at Berlin. Mr Abbadie upon this addressed himself to the Duchess of Schomberg, who 1688. who being well acquainted with Mr Bayle's merit, expreſſed a great ſatisfaction at his deſign of coming to Berlin, and promiſed to engage the Marechal to ſpeak of it to the Elector. But that great Prince fell ſick about this time, and his death (1), a little after, put a ſtop to the effects of that Lady's good inclinations towards Mr Bayle.

Digitized by Google

(1) He died the 9th of May 1688.

Mr Bayle publiſhed the following Advertiſement, under the name of the bookſeller, on the reverſe of the title-page of the News from the Republic of Letters, for the month of October 1687. "We have received a Letter dated from London, "by which we are informed that John Fox of Bruggs is the real name annagram-"matized of the author of the Philoſophical Commentary, and that he will very "ſoon give us occaſion to ſpeak of the anſwer, which he has in the preſs, to "the treatiſe Of the rights of the two Sovereigns." This was in order to prepare the public for a continuation of the Philoſophical Commentary, which he deſigned to publiſh very ſoon. In effect, it appeared ſoon after under this title: A Supplement to the Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe words of JESUS CHRIST, compel them to come in. Wherein, among other things, the only refuge that was left to the adverſaries is quite deſtroyed, by demonſtrating that Heretics have an equal right with the Orthodox to perſecute. Something is likewiſe inſerted concerning the nature and origin of error. At Hamburg, for Thomas Litwell 1686 (2). The author in a long Preface acquaints us, that having heard of a book intituled The true Syſtem of the Church (3), wherein his opinion concering Toleration, and the rights of conſcience were attacked, and alſo that the treatiſe Of the Rights of the two Sovereigns, was not the firſt eſſay of a young author, but the work of one who had appeared frequently in print, he had reſolved to anſwer them both, and to divide his book into three parts. The firſt to contain ſome additions which ſeemed to him very proper for ever to ſilence all the advocates for conſtraint. The ſecond to contain an anſwer to three chapters of the true Syſtem of the Church, wherein a doctrine contrary to his is maintained, and an anſwer to all the objections of the author of the Rights of the two Sovereigns, and likewiſe to every thing that he has advanced directly in favour of his opinion. He adds, that he had laboured ſo diligently in the execution of this deſign, that he had finiſhed it before the end of December 1687, and had ſent the manuſcript to the printer: but having found afterwards that this work would be too bulky, he thought himſelf obliged to ſuppreſs the two laſt parts, and accordingly "he had ordered the bookſeller to put a ſtop to the impreſſion, and "it had happened very luckily that they were not as yet come to what he had "ſaid concerning the affairs of England, the Penal Laws, and the taking away "of the Teſt, &c. ſubjects which were not then ſeaſonable, conſidering the turn "that things were likely to take." He aſſigns ſeveral cauſes of the encreaſe of the bulk of his book, and among the others the following: "It has proceeded "partly (ſays he) from this, that the gentlemen who tranſlated my Engliſh Ori-"ginal, could not as they pretended, ſtrip it of it's native dreſs without making uſe "of a diffuſed ſtile; they have likewiſe diverted themſelves by mixing a great "many different things together, ſometimes following one ſyſtem and at other times "another, ſometimes imitating the manner of thinking of certain authors, and not "their ſtile, and at other times the ſtile of others, and not their manner of thinking; "deſigning by this means to make a medley of it, which has cauſed the Readers, "as they pretend, to aſcribe my Commentary to a good many different people, "without ever gueſſing at them or me, though my name was only con-"cealed under an Anagram, which deviated but very little from the rules. "And they make a diverſion of concealing themſelves ſo ſucceſsfully, and of put-"ting the ſearchers after the fathers of anonymous and pſeudonymous books up-"on a wrong ſcent." The reſt of the Preface is employed in ſhewing from a paſſage of the true Syſtem of the Church, that the writer of it agrees entirely with Mr Bayle's opinion, and conſequently that Mr Bayle is orthodox, and that it is therefore this writer's buſineſs to anſwer himſelf, and to anſwer the author of the Rights of the two Sovereigns. In this manner Mr Bayle makes Mr Jurieu, who is author of both theſe books, contradict himſelf. He adds afterwards ſome reflexions which ſerve to confirm what he has ſaid in this Supplement.

(2) Supplement du Commentaire Philoſophique ſur ces paroles de Jeſus-Chriſt, contrains-les d'entrer. Où entre autres choſes l'on acheve de ruiner la ſeul échapatoire qui reſtoit aux adverſaires, en demontrant le droit égal des Heréticques pour perſécuter à celui des Orthodoxes. On parle auſſi de la nature & origine des erreurs. A Hambourg pour Tho. Litwel, 1688.

(3) Le vrai Syſtême de l'Egliſe. This Book appeared in 1686.

(4) Reponſe d'un Nouveau Converti à la Lettre d'un Refugié. Pour ſervir d'addition au livre de Dom Denys de Ste. Marthe, intitulé, Réponſe aux Plaintes des Proteſtans. Suivant l'Imprimé à Paris chez Etienne Noel, à la place de Sorbonne, 1689.

(5) Réponſe aux plaintes des Proteſtant touchant la prétendue perſecution de France. Où l'on expoſe le ſentiment de Calvin, & de tous les plus celebres Miniſtres, ſur le peines dûes aux Héréticques.

At this time Mr Leers was printing Mr Furetiere's Dictionary; and the author having died while it was in the preſs, the Bookſeller deſired Mr Bayle to write a Preface to it. It is an excellent piece.

1689. In the beginning of the year 1689, there appeared a pamphlet entituled, An Anſwer of a New Convert to a Letter from a Refugee, by way of ſupplement to Father de Ste. Marthe's book intituled, An Anſwer to the complaints of the Proteſtants. According to the copy printed at Paris by Stephen Noel in the place de Sorbonne 1689 (4). Father de Ste. Marthe, a Benedictin of the Congregation of St Maur, had publiſhed at Paris in 1688, a book intituled An Anſwer to the Complaints of the Proteſtants concerning the pretended perſecution in France. Wherein the opinion of Calvin, and of the moſt famous Miniſters concerning the puniſhment due to Heretics, is ſhewn (5). Here he pretended that the Reformed complained without reaſon of the rigour that had been exerciſed againſt them, ſince they muſt have been uſed with much greater severity, if they had put the laws of the first Christian Emperors in execution, or followed the maxims of the Reformers themselves, who teach that Heretics ought to be put to death. He reproached them likewise for taking up arms in defence of their Religion, and accused the Protestants in general of being fond of Independency, and enemies to Monarchy. The Answer of a new Convert, which serves for a supplement to this piece, is dated from Paris the 20th of December; and the Letter of a Refugee is dated from Amsterdam the 6th of the same month. The Refugee, who had retired to Holland after a tedious imprisonment, puts the new Convert in mind of the disputes they had formerly had, particularly concerniug the burning of Servetus, and the rising in arms of the Protestants. He says that his friend always referred him to Father de Sainte Marthe's book; and adds, that instead of engaging himself in discussing all these facts, "he chose rather to employ his time in prayer, "and in meditation on the glorious promises which God has made to the Reformed "in the Apocalypse." But that since his arrival in Holland he has had an opportunity of consulting some of the most learned men of the party, who had furnished him with the four following answers with regard to the affair of Servetus. "I. That at worst it was only a fault of particular persons, the party not having "in the least meddled in that process. II. That if some Doctors have formerly "wrote in justification of such proceedings, they have made no proselytes; and "that it is a long while since they have been cured of these violent sentiments "among the Reformed. III. That the doctrine which some people might have had "on this subject, concerned so small a number of Heretics, that it ought not to "serve for a recrimination to those, whose cruelties are so general. IV. And lastly, "That the practice of the Reformed sufficiently justifies them; for since Servetus's time we do not find that they have punished the Socinians who have been "among them, or that they have ever extended Calvin's Theory to the Papists." And as to what regards subjects taking up arms upon account of Religion, he says that very learned and very pious men have assured him that it is lawful, when subjects have no other intention by it but to procure themselves the liberty of following the light of their conscience, being ready to show their fidelity to their Prince in all other matters: and therefore that the Reformed ought not to be ashamed of what their ancestors may have said or done in that respect. He sends him the two last Pastoral Letters of Mr Jurieu, and exhorts him to return to the Protestant Church. "You cannot choose a more proper time, says he, to go out from the midst "of spiritual Babylon. You may possibly ruin yourself by continuing in it, in time as "well as to all eternity; and the great success with which God has already favoured the "holy and heroic expedition of the most accomplished Prince who is at present "upon earth, shows us that the time is at last come when the true Church shall "enjoy a flourishing prosperity. You understand me, you know that I do not "only mean that all goes ill for you in England, but likewise that God has struck "your Kings, and above all the Pope, with the most extraordinary stupidity "that ever was known, and the most fruitful in blunders." 1689.

Digitized by Google

The new Convert begins his answer by criticizing one of the Pastoral Letters, and afterwards examines the four answers which the Refugee had been furnished with, concerning Servetus. He reduces them to these four questions. "I. Whether "the punishment of Servetus proceeded from the ill humour of a particular person, or "if it was not generally approved of by the Protestants? II. Whether the Pro"testants now have different sentiments from those of the last age concerning the "punishment of Heretics? III. Whether the doctrine of the Reformers concerning "the punishment of Heretics, can be justified by saying that it only concerned a small "number of Heretics, in comparison of the great number of erroneous people whom "the Catholic Doctors think punishable? IV. Whether the practice of the Cal"vinists with regard to the punishment of Heretics can justify the doctrines of their "divines upon that subject." The new Convert answers in the negative to all these questions; and in refuting the second, he refutes at the same time what Mr Bayle in his General Criticism, and Mr Jurieu in his Apology for the Reformation, had answered to Mr Maimbourg, upon the subject of Servetus; and what Mr Rou, in his Seduction éludée, had answered to the Bishop of Meaux upon the same head. Hitherto he preserves a good deal of moderation; but he attacks the Protestants with great violence in the sequel of this pamphlet, intituled, Reflexions on the Civil-Wars of the Protestants, and the present Invasion of England (1). He says that the Revolution in England has not at all surprised him, since he knows what that Religion is capable of, which is wont to stir up people to Rebellion. He adds that this event is an apology for the conduct of those Princes who have purged their kingdom from such a sect; and that the quickness of this change, which the Protestants boast of, is a proof that the spring of this affair was not their fear of being oppressed by the Catholics; that King James was dethroned for no other reason than because he would not espouse the passions of the enemies of France, who were envious of her prosperity, but that all the Leagues formed against Lewis XIV served only to increase his glory, and to heighten the idea of his formidable power. He maintains that the Catholic Princes have given greater examples of Toleration than the Protestants;

(1) Reflexions sur les guerres civiles des Protestans, & la presente invasion de l'Angleterre.

Digitized by Google

1689. teſtants; and inſults the whole body of the Refugees upon the account of the loſty hopes of ſome among them whom he repreſents as waiting, like the Jews, for a Meſſiah who ſhall conquer all the Popiſh Kings, and enter Rome in triumph. He taxes the French Proteſtants with vanity in conſidering their party in France as the whole Proteſtant party, and the ruin of their Churches as the ruin of the Proteſtant Religion. He accuſeth them of feeding themſelves with viſions, dreams, and chimerical interpretations of the Apocalypſe, as if the Edict of Nants had been the deſign and principal object of the inſpired Oracles in that ſacred book. And laſtly he accuſeth them of being animated by a ſpirit of Rebellion and of Satire, and of being ſeized with an inveterate and incurable diſeaſe, of rebelling againſt their lawful Sovereigns on the one hand, and on the other of filling the whole world with the moſt infamous calumnies that ever were imagined. To this little book is prefixed an Advertiſement of the Dutch Bookſeller, wherein it is ſaid that the author of this Anſwer had ſent it from Paris in 4to to the author of the Letter: that it was not doubted but Mr Peliſſon had a conſiderable ſhare in it, though the ſtile of it is different from his, becauſe the Letter which gave occaſion to it, was written to one of his intimate friends. It is added, that a very learned author was labouring inceſſantly at an Anſwer to it, wherein the public would ſee the moſt delicate queſtions in Morality, eſpecially with regard to theſe times, treated in the moſt agreeable and exact manner, and that it was hoped it would be publiſhed in a few months.

Mr Bayle mentions this piece in one of his Letters to Mr Rou. "They have criticiſed both you and me at Paris lately, ſays he (1), but not ſo ſeverely as they have done Mr Jurieu, in an Anſwer of a new Convert, &c. which they pretend is wrote by a Diſciple or Proſelyte of Mr Peliſſon. If Mr Peliſſon has any ſhare in it, he muſt needs have given credit to a very falſe report, which might poſſibly even have reached his ears, that I am the author of a Letter which was printed at Amſterdam in anſwer to his Chimera's of Mr Jurieu (2), for Mr Peliſſon has ſpoken very civilly of me in his laſt book; whereas this New Convert treats me harſhly. The piece I am talking of, is ſhort and indifferently wrote; but very injurious to the party. They have reprinted it in this Country." Mr Bayle gives this account of it from the bookſeller's advertiſement; but all that was ſaid of it there was a mere feint. This piece was not printed at Paris, and the Anſwer which the bookſeller promiſed, never appeared.

(1) Letter of the 24th of February 1689, p. 301.

(2) It is a piece conſiſting of 8 pages in 4°, intituled Reponſe à l'Auteur des Chimeres de Mr Jurieu.

If we conſider this performace as a continuation of the Philoſophical Commentary, we will be ready to believe that Mr Bayle is the author of it. It is natural to ſuppoſe that having ſeen with grief that his Commentary, which was deſigned to attack the perſecutions of the Church of Rome, had been repreſented by the Miniſters as a pernicious book; he may have made uſe of the way of recrimination in the perſon of a new Convert, to force them to declare for Toleration, or to give up the cauſe to the Catholic writers. Beſides it is plain, that the author of it ſtrikes particularly at Mr Jurieu, the principal advocate for conſtraint in religious matters, he laughs at his Interpretations of the Apocalypſe, and the chimerical hopes with which he fed the Refugees. He has him likewiſe in view in a ſort of digreſſion, which we find at the end of it, under the title of Reflections on the Civil-Wars of the Proteſtants, &c. as it would be eaſy to ſhow.

(3) Mr Peliſſon diſowned it in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans, February 1690, p. 276.

However, in Holland this piece was thought to be Mr Peliſſon's (3). They were the more eaſily perſuaded of this, becauſe it was known that he had laboured much in the Converſions, and had publiſhed ſome treatiſes of Controverſy, under the title of Reflexions ſur les differens de la Religion. Mr Jurieu aſcribed this Anſwer to him without heſitation [G]; and as the Proteſtants were charged with maintaining

[G] Mr Jurieu aſcribed this Anſwer to him without heſitation.] In one of his Paſtoral Letters, which contains ſome Reflexions upon the Libels which came from France on occaſion of the affairs of the preſent time; after having ſpoke of the books which were publiſhed in France againſt the Proteſtants, he adds (a), "We ſee lately publiſhed a Libel under the title of An Anſwer of a new Convert to a Letter from a Refugee, to ſerve for a Supplement to Dom Denis de St Marthe's book (b). Theſe gentlemen may pretend to hide themſelves under feigned names, they are always found out. We have no new Convert who can write in that manner, and with that force upon the ſubject. One muſt be confirmed in a ſpirit of perſecution, and full of the old leaven to write ſo. Be not therefore deceived in this matter, it is not a new Convert (c) but an old ſcholar of the Jeſuits, who has made great proficiency in that ſchool." Mr Huet, a Miniſter and a Refugee, who lived at this time at Dort, and who afterwards went to the Hague, wrote an Anſwer to this piece which was very much eſteemed. It came out under this title: A Letter written from Swiſſerland to Holland, to ſupply the place of an Anſwer which has been promiſed to a certain book publiſhed by Mr Peliſſon, under the name of a new Convert, &c (d). But as he maintained a political Toleration, and in defending what Mr Bayle had ſaid concerning the puniſhment of Servetus he had given up Mr Jurieu, the latter was ſo piqued at it, that he accuſed him before the Synod of Leyden (e) which was compoſed of his creatures, and got him ſuſpended from his Miniſtry. He inveighed afterwards againſt him in his Libels, and particularly in his Tableau du Socinianiſme, where he endeavours to eſtabliſh perſecution (f). However it was not Mr Huet he aimed at; Mr Bayle was the perſon he really had in view. By procuring a condemnation of Mr Huet's opinion concerning Toleration, he wanted to render Mr Bayle odious, whom he looked upon as the author of the Philoſophical Commentary. He durſt not attack him, and ſo he vented all his ſpleen upon Mr Huet, and ſacrificed him to his rage. He himſelf has let us into this ſecret, in recounting his proueſs againſt the Heterodox, with all the ill nature he was maſter of. "A little while after, ſays he (g), the Philoſophical Commentary appeared. And it was the labour of this book that had almoſt cracked his brain. I then

(a) Paſtoral Letter of the 1ſt of April 1689, pag. 117. cap. i. of the 4to edition.

(b) Reponſe d'un Nouveau Converti à la Lettre d'un Refugié pour ſervir d'addition au livre de Dom Denis de Ste Marthe.

(c) Mr Peliſſon had embraced the Romiſh Religion in 1670.

(d) Lettre écrite de Suiſſe en Hollande pour ſupléer au defaut de la Réponſe que l'on avoit promiſe de donner, à un certain Ouvrage que Mr Peliſſon à publié ſous le nom d'un Nouveau Converti, &c.

(e) In the month of May 1691.

(f) See the Letters to Mr Lenfant of the 25*th of May, and to Mr Conſtant of the* $\frac{15}{25}$ of July 1690, with the Remarks, pag. 321, 322, 325, 326.

(g) Apologie du Sieur Jurieu, pag. 24. ed. in maintaining that it was lawful to make use of the sword to punish Heretics, he says the world would soon see what would be their conduct in that respect. "The first "part of this work, says he, is employed to prove that even according to our "own principles it is lawful to persecute Heretics, and to pursue them even unto "death. God forbid that ever we should go to that extremity. But at least we de- "sire this author to remember this, if we should one day be in a condition of "humbling and depressing his party. If it is lawful to kill Heretics and idola- "trous Christians, with much more reason it must be lawful to mortify them without "forcing their consciences, by all means which may make them reflect upon their "blindness. Time will show which party will henceforth have most occasion for "the moderation of the other." 1689.

(1) Bauval, Réponse à l'Avis de Mr Jurieu, p. 33, 34, 39, 40.

(2) Idem, Lettre sur les differends de Mr Jurieu & de Mr Bayle, p. 2.

These threatnings were founded upon Mr Jurieu's prophetical System [H]. He had discovered in the Apocalypse, that the persecution of the Reformed in France should cease in 1689, and that the Reformation should be established over all the Kingdom by the King's own authority. The signs and wonders, (says he), that are to be the forerunners of these great events, are already seen in France [I]. If any one doubted of these pretended miracles, he ranked them with the impious and profane [K]. It was upon this score that Mr de Bauval fell under his indignation (1), and that Mr Bayle raised a-fresh all his animosity and resentment (2). But the event showed him that he was mistaken, and then he persuaded himself that the Reformation could not be re-established in France otherwise than by force of arms [L]. This

"then found that the evil was past remedy, but "I could not resolve to break with him entirely, I "satisfied myself with renouncing what they call "openings of the heart, and confidences of friendship. "I believed he was still an honest Pagan (b); In pur- "suing the condemnation of his abominable doc- "trine of the Rights of an erring Conscience in "our synods, a small remain of regard for my for- "mer friendship made me spare his name: especially "seeing there was another name for which I had "less consideration, under which I might carry on "my pursuit."

(b) See the Chimere démontrée, preface pag. clxxvii and the following.

[H] These threatenings were founded upon Mr Jurieu's prophetical System.] He had published in 1686 a book intitled, The Accomplishment of the Prophecies, or the approaching deliverance of the Church. A work wherein it is proved that Popery is the kingdom of Antichrist; that this kingdom is not far from its ruin, and that this ruin is to begin very soon. That the present persecution cannot continue above three years and a half: after which the destruction of Antichrist shall begin, which will be continued 'till the end of this Century, and be finished in the beginning of the next. And at last the reign of Jesus Christ upon earth shall come. Here he prophesied that the persecution of the Reformed in France, could not last above three years and a half. That the Reformation should be established by Royal Authority, and that France should renounce Popery, and the Kingdom should be converted. He added that providence intended to raise that Kingdom very high; that it should arrive to the height of glory, by building its greatness on the ruins of the Papal Empire; and that the general Reformation of France should be brought about without blood (i). Mr Jurieu spoke with so much confidence and so decisive a tone, that he was believed by a great number of the Reformed, both in France and in other Countries. We believe easily what we wish for, and a melancholy and afflicted condition augments our credulity. Several Refugees returned to France to wait there the accomplishment of these great promises. It has been pretended (k) that all this was only an artifice, to engage the Reformed to make an insurrection in France: but Mr Jurieu imagined really and sincerely that he had penetrated into the profound mysteries of the Apocalypse (l). He looked with admiration upon the prophecies of Drabitius, Cotterus, and Christina Poniatovia, and almost equalled them to the writings of the ancient Prophets.

(i) See Mr de Bauval Réponse à l'Avis de Mr Jurieu, pag. 25.

(k) Brueys Histoire du Fanatisme de notre tems, &c. See in the Critical Dictionary the article KOTTERUS, Rem. [H] and [I].

(l) Accomplishment des prophecies dans L'avis à tous les Chretiens.

[I] The signs and wonders, says he, that are to be the forerunners of these great events are already seen in France.] He considered as miracles the accounts they had from France at this time, that in Bearn and in the Cevennes, Angels had been heard singing psalms in the air (m); that there was a shepherdess at Cret in Dauphiné who fell into extasies, during which she spoke many excellent and divine things, and foretold an approaching deliverance (n); that in Dauphiné many hundreds of children had extasies of this Kind. "The spirit of God, (said he (o), has "fallen upon the children of that province, in the same "manner in which it has fallen upon the shepherdess "in the neighbourhood of Cret. When that young "girl has seized upon, she declared in the pre- "sence of the judges, that the pains they were at "were to no purpose, that they might put her to "death, but that God would raise up other chil- "dren, who should speak better than she: and this "has come to pass in so wonderful a manner, that "the most blind are obliged to see the finger of "God in it. There are perhaps at this day in one "corner of Dauphiné, without reckoning those in the "other provinces, two or three hundred children who "are seized with extasies, who fall asleep, and during "their sleep declare the wonderful things of God, "pray in an excellent manner, exhort, threaten, pro- "mise, sing the Psalms of David, and even foretel "things to come: and when they awake they re- "turn to their former simplicity. And what is still "more, in the Vivarets the spirit of God has fallen "upon a whole people sleeping and waking, with "signs and wonders, in such sort that since the be- "ginning of the world nothing has been seen like "it, or coming near it. The relation will inform "you of the particulars (p).

(m) Pastoral Letter of the first of December 1686, p. 49, and the following.

(n) Letter of the first of March 1689, pag. 107, 108.

(o) Letter of the 14th of March 1689, pag. 107, 108.

(p) This relation is a pamphlet of 14 pages in 4to, intitled Lettre de Geneve contenant une Relation exacte des petits Prophetes du Dauphiné. Le 13 Fevrier 1689.

[K] If any one doubted of these pretended miracles, he ranked them with the impious and prophane.] In the Pastoral Letter which I have just quoted, he treats them as blasphemers, who oppose the spirit of God. "Beware, (says he (q), of that wicked spi- "rit of the world, which opposeth itself to the spirit "of God; and upon this occasion sometimes goes "even to blasphemy. The rashness of those who "who have ridiculed the miracles of the shepherdess, "and of the heavenly voices, which have been heard "by so many faithful witnesses, shall meet with the "just confusion it deserves. I wish that it may be a "saving shame, and that God may not lay this sin "to their charge, but may grant them the favour "of seeing with their eyes, the things foretold by "these preceeding signs ..... Happy are the wise, "who do not imitate those rash deciders ..... "We do not fear the triumph of those who seeing "the time approaching which is appointed for the "deliverance, insult those who hope for it. The "times and events are in God's hand: they come "to pass when he thinks fitting. We may mistake "in our reckonings, but God is not mistaken in "his." He talked in this manner in the month of March 1689, having seen that nothing of what he had foretold had come to pass.

(q) Letter of the 14th of March 1689, pag. 108.

[L] But the event showed him that he was mistaken, and then he persuaded himself that the Reformation could not be re-established in France otherwise than by force of arms.] His three years and a half, which commenced at the revocation of the Edict of Nants, in October 1685, expired in the month of April 1689; and yet no change was seen in France with regard to Religion. This gave people ground to call his

Digitized by Google

1689. This was his last resource, he turned all his views that way, and in his writings prepared the people for this great revolution [M]. He laboured to prove that the power of princes proceeds from the people, and that there is a mutual contract betwixt the Prince and people (1). He maintains that it is lawful to defend our Religion by force of arms (2). He likewise makes an apology for the Revolution of England, and for King William (3), who was violently attacked in several libels then published in France [N]. There appeared likewise several pieces on this subject composed by Refugees. There were likewise some persons, who abusing the liberty of the press they enjoy in Holland, published romantic and satirical pieces against Lewis XIV, against King James, and against the Queen his consort: but these libels were only relished by the mob, and the greatest part of them were not written by Refugees.

(1) Pastoral Letters of April 15, and May 1, 1689.

(2) Letter of Jan. 1, 1689.

(3) Letter of May 15, 1689.

In the heat of this war of political and satirical authors, there appeared towards the end of the month of April 1690, a book entituled, An important advice to the Refugees, on their approaching return to France. Given for a new year's gift to one of them in 1690. By Mr C. L. A. A. P. D. P. At Amsterdam by James the Censor, 1690 (4). This book was wrote in form of a Letter to a friend, dated from Paris the first of January 1690. In the beginning the author rallies the Refugees upon the hopes they had conceived of seeing very extraordinary events in 1689. "You "see, (says he), the year 1689 expired without any thing happening very extraordi- "nary. You promised yourselves mighty and wonderful things that year; that it "should be fatal to the Romish Church in general, and more fatal still to France, "that we should see nothing but great crises of affairs, wonderful Revolutions, and "in short every thing most suiting a climacteric year of the world. You have "seen on the contrary every thing go on so naturally, so smoothly, and so alto- "gether of a piece, that it would be hard to find in History a first campaign of "so general a war as this, in the greatest animosity of the parties concerned, "wherein so few remarkable things have fallen out, as in the year 1689. At least "it is certain, that the thing which you looked upon as the most infallible, I mean "your re-establishment, has not happened. I do not say this, (adds he), to insult "you, God forbid; you know my sentiments: you are not ignorant that I always "disapproved the usage you have met with, and I am exceedingly sorry that "France has deprived itself of so many honest people, and so many persons of "merit, who have been obliged to seek shelter in foreign Countries. So that if I "observe with pleasure that the year 1689 has not answered your Predictions, it "is by no means because of the loss you thereby sustain, but because we ought "to be glad for the sake of reason and good sense, that the superstitious confidence "in chimerical calculations, and popular credulity, are belied by such palpable ex- "periences, which may weaken them as much as they would have been confirmed by "events which you expected." After this he congratulates his friend upon the favourable disposition in which the King of France was said to be with regard to the re-establishment of the Reformed, and assures him that in general the most reasonable part of the three estates of the kingdom would approve of allowing them an honest liberty. "But allow me, (continues he), to give one advice to you, and "all your brethren Refugees wherever dispersed, which is to perform a sort of Qua- "rentine before you set a foot into France, in order to purify you from the bad air "you have breathed in the places of your exile, and which has infected you with "two his predictions chimerical, and to laugh at the credulity of those who had given credit to them. He therefore found himself under a necessity of abandoning what he had said concerning the manner in which the Reformation should be established in France. According to his first scheme, that Reformation was to be brought about without violence, without effusion of blood, by the King's own authority: but the revolution in England, and the confederacy of so many Princes against France, made him believe that it should triumph there by way of conquest (r); and he declared "that he firmly believed that God "had raised up King William to execute his great "design of abasing and humbling the persecutors in "France (s)." He would needs lend a helping hand himself. "After several nights meditation he con- "trived a sort of pontons, by means of which they "might land as many troops as they had a mind "in France without much difficulty, and in spite "of the Militia that might be upon the coast (t)."

(4) Avis important aux Refugiez sur leur prochain retour en France. Donné pour Etrennes à l'un d'eux in 1690. Par Monsieur C. L. A. A. P. D. P. A Amsterdam chez Jaques le Censeur, 1690.

(r) Chimere demontrée, p. lvi, lvii.

(s) Pastoral Letter of July 1, 1689, pag. 173, col. 2.

(t) Chimere demontrée, p. lviii, lix.

(u) See the Pastoral Letters of the 15*th of February, pag.* 93, of the 1*st of March, pag.* 102, and of the 15*th of March, pag.* 107 of the year 1689.

[M] In his writings he prepared the people for this great revolution.] He made several reflexions upon the state of affairs in his Pastoral Letters, wherein he set forth the wonders of providence, in the present situation of Europe, and particularly of England (u). He exhorted the Reformed in France to be firm and unshaken, and promised them a speedy deliverance. He gave over writing Pastoral Letters in the month of July 1689, and in the month following he published a new work, which came out monthly under this title, Les soupirs de la France Esclave qui aspire après la liberté. The design of this work was to shew that the ancient liberties of France were lost, and that it was absolutely necessary to reform the government of it, and change it into an Aristocracy.

[N] The Revolution in England, and King William were violently attacked, in several libels published in France.] Mr de Visé, besides what he published monthly in his Mercure Galant, put out likewise every month a volume concerning the present state of affairs (x). Mr le Noble published also several libels. Father de Ste. Marthe published a book, intituled, Dialogues concerning the Prince of Orange's enterprize upon England, wherein it is proved that this action fixeth upon the Protestants the character of Antichristianism, with which Mr Jurieu reproacheth the Church of Rome. Paris, 1689. And no less a man than the famous Mr Arnauld would needs engage in this affair, in a piece intitled, The true Picture of William Henry of Nassau, a new Absalom, a new Herod, a new Cromwell, a new Nero. Mr Jurieu refuted this last, in a book printed at the Hague 1689, under the title of An Apology for their most Serene Britannic Majesties against an infamous Libel, entitled The true Picture of William Henry of Nassau, &c.

(x) Sur les Affaires du tems.

Digitized by Google

" two very dangerous and hateful diſtempers, the one is a ſpirit of ſatire, the other 1689.
" a ſort of republican ſpirit, which tends to nothing leſs than to introduce Anarchy
" into the world, the greateſt plague of civil ſociety. Theſe are two points upon " which I take the liberty to ſpeak to you as a friend."

Concerning the firſt point, which regards ſatirical writings, he makes bitter complaints of the many Libels full of calumnies and ſcandalous ſtories which were ſpread abroad every where, and wherein the Refugees ſeem, ſays he, to breathe nothing but vengeance. He lays them to the charge of the whole body of the Refugees, becauſe they had not in a public manner diſowned them. He even goes back as far as their anceſtors, and accuſeth them of having firſt introduced the licence of diffamatory Libels. He maintains that this ſatirical rage is an infallible mark of Hereſy; and ſhows how much ſlander is contrary to the ſpirit of Chriſtianity. He puts the Refugees in mind of the patience of the primitive Chriſtians, and oppoſeth to the licentiouſneſs of their pens, the moderation of the Engliſh Catholics, who were Refugees in France, and of the French writers. He doth not ſpare the Emperor nor the Pope himſelf upon the account of their being enemies to France. In the mean while, he repreſents himſelf as full of love, charity, and compaſſion for the Refugees; and proteſts that he ſpeaks to them in this ſtrong manner for no other reaſon but to perſuade them to reform, and to diſavow their ſatirical Libels in a public manner. In this manner he ſoftens the bitterneſs of his reproaches and inſults. He proceeds to their ſeditious writings, and under this claſs comprehends all thoſe wherein it is maintained " That princes and their ſubjects engage themſelves to one another " mutually, and by way of contract to the obſervation of certain things, ſo that if " the Prince fail in the performance of what he has promiſed, the ſubjects are there- " by freed from their oath of allegiance, and may tranſfer their homage to new " maſters, whether the whole people diſapprove the breach of promiſe of thoſe princes, " or the moſt numerous and moſt conſiderable part of them agree to it." He pretends that it is on this principle that the Reformed have ſupported all their civil wars, and founded their ſeditious maxims. He attacks this doctrine ſmartly, and makes uſe of that manner of arguing which they call reductio ad abſurdum, and maintains the abſolute power of Princes with a great deal of warmth. He heaps together all the reproaches which Mr Arnauld in his Apology for the Catholics, and other Controvertiſts have thrown upon the Proteſtants, on account of the principles of Buchanan, Junius Brutus, and Pareus; and exhorts the Refugees to do ſomething to ſhow that they are not infected with theſe political Hereſies. He chargeth the Preſbyterians with the death of King Charles I, and reproacheth the Church of England with abandoning the ſound doctrine of ſubmiſſion due to Princes, and embracing the Preſbyterian opinion of the lawfulneſs of bringing Kings to juſtice; and in a word, he repreſents the Proteſtants, and in particular the Refugees, as ſeditious perſons, who bring Rebellion and Anarchy every where; and declares that Princes cannot rely upon their fidelity.

All theſe invectives are followed by a ſort of digreſſion, which he intitles Reflexions on the irruption of the Vaudois. He owns that the Vaudois have been unjuſtly treated, but maintains that they are inexcuſable for having entered their own Country in a hoſtile manner, and made war upon their Prince; and from thence he takes occaſion to return to the abſolute power of Princes. After this follows the Concluſion. " Now you ſee, ſays he, in what conſiſts the Quarentine which your beſt friends " among the Catholics deſire you would perform before your return to France, it " is to proteſt in the moſt public manner, either that you never approved of thoſe " ſcandalous and ſeditious Libels, which your authors have publiſhed by heaps, or " that you ſincerely repent your having done ſo, and are extreamly ſorry that " you were ignorant of their evil tendency, or that you had not the courage to " declare againſt them." He once more returns to this ſubject, and afterwards makes ſeveral reflexions on the Campaign of 1689, tending to extol the greatneſs of France, and the glory of Lewis XIV. From thence he paſſes to the Revolution in Siam, which was very acceptable to the Hollanders, becauſe of the check it gave to France. He ſays that the Controverſies of the Proteſtants had grown worſe theſe four or five years paſt, eſpecially with regard to their civil wars; and he ſets in oppoſition the fidelity of the French Catholics to Henry IV, to that of the Engliſh Proteſtants to James II. He allows his friend to publiſh this Letter, and make what alterations in it he ſhall think proper. He concludes with a very devout prayer, and with wiſhes for the converſion of his friend to the Catholic Religion; but " if the hour, ſays he, for that happy change is not as " yet come, may heaven grant that you at leaſt may be endowed with the ſenti- " ments which every honeſt man ought to have for his country."

If one compares this Advice to the Refugees, with that part of the Anſwer of a new Convert to a Letter from a Refugee, intituled, Reflexions concerning the Wars of the Proteſtants, he will find a great conformity betwixt them; the ſame ſentiments, the ſame reproaches, the ſame inſults. The one is only in a manner the prelude or ſketch of the other. They both purſue the ſame deſign, and follow the ſame plan, but in a manner different enough to make us doubt, whether theſe two pieces

Digitized by Google

1690. come from the same hand. In the Advice the subject is treated more at length, is more embellished, and more engaging; the stile is more correct, more lively, and more vehement.

To this book is prefixed a Preface, the author of which, a Refugee at London, is as zealous a Protestant, as the writer of the Letter appears to be a zealous Catholic. He says that this piece surprized him extreamly from the very beginning of it: that it was the performance of one of his old friends, an Advocate by profession, but who had employed himself more in reading books of Controversy than at the bar: that he must do him the justice to own that he had loudly condemned the Dragoonings; and that he could not imagine why he had made choice of him to be the depositary of a heap of indignities thrown out with the utmost bitterness, both against the whole body of Protestants, and likewise against those who had sought out of France, their cruel step-mother and not properly speaking their country, a sanctuary where they might serve God according to the purity of the faith. "The "ground, says he, of this so severe and so extravagant behaviour, and so con- "trary to the equity and moderation which I have always observed in him, is "first, that the Refugees being in a place where they are at liberty to complain "of the barbarous treatment perfectly worthy of the Religion of Antichrist, as "well as unworthy of all sort of Humanity, which they had suffered in their own "country, had published their complaints against France in a pretty lively manner: "and in the next place, that the Protestants of England and Scotland have not "been so simple, after so long experience as they have had of the treachery and "cruelty of the Church of Rome, to suffer themselves to be led like sheep to the "slaughter, but had rather chosen according to the laws and liberties of their country "to shake off the yoke, and free themselves from slavery, and receive the Deli- "verer whom God had raised up to them, as he did frequently to the people "of Israel in the time of the Judges." He adds that he was resolved to make this old friend of his such an answer as should make him repent his having so highly and maliciously provoked him; but that the public would be better acquainted with the justice of his resentment, if they saw this piece such as he had received it: that he had struck out a great many passages which breathed an unheard of rage, and had only retained certain passages which he designed to examine and to confute exactly in the answer which he was preparing. He gives the plan of this answer, and adds that in the mean while, he had thought it proper to publish this piece that his brethren might know in what light some people considered them, and what envenomed reflexions were made against them; hoping that some body would undertake their Apology, and confine himself to these two general heads, the satirical writings and the seditious writings, while he would canvass the other articles particularly, and leave nothing without a full and strong answer. He invites the author of the Letters concerning the present state of affairs (1) to do this, and says that he is so much the more interested in this matter, that he is one of those writers who are accused as satirical. "It will be, adds he, very easy to vindicate our Refugees, "for I have been assured, by some of my friends in Holland to whom I wrote "on that subject, I. That the pieces wherein they pretend to give an account of "amorous adventures, and wherein persons of the first quality are defamed, were "composed by Papists, before there were any Refugees in that country. II. That "the news writers who have given France the greatest cause of complaint, are not "Refugees, nay some of them are not so much as Frenchmen." He gives an account of the alterations he has made in the performance of his friend, and concludes with a Panegyric on King William the favourite of God. "One, says he, may "justly give him that title, and apply to him what the scripture says of David, "that God has found him a man according to his own heart, has led him by the "hand, and placed him upon the throne, with this advantagious difference, that "whereas David was not put in possession of the crown of his father-in-law who "was rejected by God 'till some time after his death, God has anticipated that "favour to King William, having bestowed upon him the crowns of his father- "in-law even while he was still alive." He adds that the Princes who are the greatest enemies of the Protestant Religion, that the August House of Austria whose zeal for the Catholic Religion is sufficiently known, and all the Catholic Princes in Germany, had applauded that happy Revolution: and that it was visibly a miraculous work of Providence, which had confounded both the counsels of France and of James II, since of a thousand means which they had in their power of giving a powerful check to to that enterprize, they had precisely chosen that conduct which rendered it infallible.

The Advice to the Refugees was printed secretly at the Hague, and was presently answered by several hands. Mr Tronchin du Breuil vindicated the Refugees in his Letters concerning the present state of affairs (2). Mr de Bauval in his Journal (3) showed the injustice and unreasonableness of this author's complaints: and Mr Coulan, a Minister and Refugee at London (4), answered him more fully in a treatise intituled: A Defence of the Refugees against a book intituled An Advice, &c (5). We may see Mr Bayle's judgment of these Answers, in a Book he published in 1692. After

(1) Lettres sur les matieres du tems.

(2) Letter of the 1st and 15th of May; of the 1st of June; and of the 1st of September 1690.

(3) Histoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans, April 1690. Art. x. pag. 364.

(4) Anthony Coulan born at Alais on the 10th of October 1667. He died at London the 23d of September 1694.

(5) La Defense des Refugiez contre un Livre intitulé, Avis, &c. At Daventer in 1691 in 12°. pag. 157.

Digitized by Google

ter having pointed out the Advice to the Refugees, he adds (1), "I mean that sort 1690.
"of sermon wherein we are accused of a pretended proneness to libelling and civil-"wars, with as much vehemence as ever a Minister showed in a fast-day sermon,
"when he lays the breach of the whole Decalogue to the charge of his hearers.
"And since this occasion offers, adds he, it will not be unseasonable to observe
"here, that the violent reproaches of this declaimer have produced a good effect.
"They are not perhaps the cause that those wretched little satirical books do not "come so thick among us as before; but at least it is certain that they have ob"liged the best writers of the party to inform the Public, that it is without reason
"that people pretend to make the whole body of the Refugees accountable for these
"sorry books: so that we shall have cotemporary evidence to latest posterity to "clear us from the malicious imputations, which some people endeavour to fix upon
"our cause. Let no body alledge, that the excellent writers who have disclaimed
"them, have done it in an anonymous way; for since they have answered for the "whole body, without any persons entering a complaint against their declaration,
"this proves that the whole body acquiesces in it. Add to this that the name "of the person who writes every fortnight in so ingenious and judicious a manner
"concerning the present state of affairs, is now known to every body. And as to "the author of the inimitable History of the Works of the Learned, is there any "body who doth not know his name? . . . . . And with regard to the person who "has lately given us the Defence of the Refugees against the Important Advice,
"he is no doubt very worthy of credit in what he advances as from his brethren.
"He fully answers all the reproaches which concern this satirical spirit, and sets "forth his opinion on the other point with a great dexterity of wit. All things
"well considered, it must be owned that though a disavowal which had preceded
"the severe reproaches of the adversary, and had been made by persons appointed
"for this purpose by the Synods, would have been both more honourable and more "authentic, yet nevertheless none but extravagant cavillers can henceforth renew
"these accusations." Some other Answers were likewise made to this piece [O].

(1) Projet & Fragmens d'un Dictionnaire Critique, pag. 110.

Mr de Bauval in his Journal for the month of May 1690 published an extract of a Letter from the author of the Advice to the Refugees (2). "I confess, says that "author, that I was surprized to see my performance made public. I did not "trust my friend with it for that purpose, especially there being several things in
"it which I cannot approve of. I mean the passages wherein I speak of the manner "in which you have been treated in France. You know very well that though
"I had thought in the manner he makes me speak, I would not have been so im-
"prudent as to say such things in the middle of Paris. I shall perhaps send it to "you very soon reprinted with the necessary alterations." And in the month of February 1691 he published an Extract of a Letter from Paris which gave an account that this work was in the press. "They are actually reprinting, says the "writer of this Letter (3), the Advice to the Refugees, with the King's Licence,
"the author who had kept himself concealed upon account of several things which "could not fail to irritate the Archbishop of Paris and Father de la Chaize, has "found means of making his peace by adding some things, and taking away what "might give them offence." In fact, it was reprinting at Paris, with the King's Licence dated the 20th of October, and the first two sheets of it appeared in Holland in the month of March following (4). They suppressed the Preface of the first edition, and substituted the following Advice to the Reader: "This piece
"having been sent by the author into foreign parts to one of his friends, it has "been printed there with several alterations contrary to his intention. This ob-
"liges him to reprint it in it's true and natural form. He protests sin"cerely that he had no other intention in writing this, but to do his duty by ac-
"quainting those in whom he interests himself, with certain important truths which "they do not sufficiently reflect upon, and that he has been so far from regarding
"either favour or hopes from the court, that he has even avoided being known
"to it, concealing himself for this good action with as much care as others do for "bad ones." But this edition was interrupted by the death of the Bookseller: they set it on foot again a few months after, and the Impression was finished upon the 9th of December 1692, with a new Licence dated the 19th of September, the preamble of which is as follows: "Our well-beloved Mary Magdalen Guellerin, widow "of Gabriel Martin, late Printer and Bookseller in our good City of Paris, having "remonstrated

(2) P. 418.

(3) Pag. 279, 280.

(4) Jurieu, Last Conviction, pag. 19. col. 2. and the Chimera demonstrated, pag. 267, 309.

(a) Reponse sommaire au Livre intitulé Avis important aux Refugiez sur leur prochain retour en France. Par Monsieur G. N. A. à M. Maestricht 1690.

(b) Defence de la Nation Britannique; où les Droits de Dieu, de la Nature, & de la Société sont clairement établis, au sujet de la Revolution d'Angleterre, contre l'auteur de l'Avis aux Refugiez.

[O] Some other Answers were likewise made to this piece.] Mr Nizet, Advocate and Professor of Law at Maestricht, published, in 1690, A short Answer to the Advice to the Refugees (a). Mr Abbadie confined himself to what related to the Revolution in England, and printed at London in 1692, A Defence of the British Nation; Wherein the Rights of God, of Nature, and of Society, are clearly established, with relation to the Revolution in England, against the author of the Advice to the Refugees (b). Mr de Larrey made a full and large Answer to it under this title: An Answer to the Advice to the Refugees, By M. D. L. R. At Rotterdam for Reinier Leers, M. DCC. IX (c). This work he was desired to undertake by Mr Leers, who having a mind to publish a new edition of the Advice to the Refugees, engaged him to write this Answer to it, to be published along with it. He reprinted the Advice from the Paris edition, with the same date, and under the same Printer's name. But he restored the Preface which they had suppressed at Paris. The Advice and Mr Larrey's Answer make two volumes in 8vo.

(c) Reponse à l'Avis aux Refugiez, par M. D. L. R.

Digitized by Google

1690. " remonſtrated to us, that by our Letters of the 20th of October 1690, ſigned le " Petit, and ſealed, we have given permiſſion to the Author of a book intitled, " An important Advice to the Refugees upon their approaching return to France, to " print, ſell, and diſtribute the ſaid work throughout all our Kingdom for the " ſpace and term of ten years, which Author has yielded his right to the ſaid de- " ceaſed Gabriel Martin, huſband to the petitioner; but having affected to continue " unknown to the public, he made a difficulty of allowing the ſaid privilege ex- " peded in his name, to be inſerted in the Regiſters of the ſociety of Bookſellers " of our City of Paris, which together with the ſickneſs and death of the late " Gabriel Martin, has interrupted the impreſſion of the ſaid work which was al- " ready begun, and will retard it ſtill if we are not pleaſed, in conſequence of the agree- " ment made with the foreſaid Author, and with his conſent, to allow the ſaid pri- " vilege to be regiſtred in the name of the petitioner. For theſe reaſons de- " ſiring to ſhow favour to the ſaid petitioner, we have permitted and allowed, " and by theſe preſents we do permit and allow the impreſſion of the ſaid book to " be continued, &c."

1691. No body in Holland now talked any longer of the Advice to the Refugees; this book was quite forgot (1), when Mr Jurieu took it into his head all of a ſudden, in the month of January 1691, to ſend word to Mr Baſnage that he looked upon Mr Bayle as the author of that libel, and that he muſt go out of the ſeven Provinces. Mr Baſnage endeavoured to make him take other ſentiments, but he gave no ear to him. Mr Bayle told Mr Baſnage that he had formerly intended to anſwer this book, and that in order to convince Mr Jurieu of his miſtake, he was going to ſet about it again. At the ſame time he deſired Mr Baſnage to aſſure Mr Jurieu that he was ready to confer with him on this ſubject, and to ſatisfy all his doubts (2). All this did not appeaſe Mr Jurieu. The hatred which he had of a long time conceived againſt Mr Bayle was changed into rage: he imagined that he had found a proper occaſion of defaming him. Nay if it had been in his power he would have likewiſe taken away his life. " Since it was not in my power, (ſays he (3), " to get all the puniſhment which he deſerved inflicted upon him, I reſolved at " leaſt to expoſe him to public infamy." It was with theſe diſpoſitions that Mr Jurieu ſet about an Examination of the Advice to the Refugees, wherein in the beginning he endeavours to diſcover the author. After having praiſed the compoſition of the book, he undertakes to ſhew that the author of the book and of the preface, are one and the ſame perſon: that this author is a Proteſtant, and lived in Holland; and that the Preface which he wrote in order to conceal himſelf had diſcovered him. In fine, he characterized him in ſuch a manner, that one might eaſily ſee that he wanted to point out Mr Bayle, though he did not run the hazard of naming him. But when he comes to give the reaſons that could have induced Mr Bayle to write this piece, he found himſelf extremely embaraſſed. " What (ſays he (4), could be the deſign of this author? was there ever ſo whim- " ſical a deſign? what view could he have? At firſt I fancied he was one of our " Sceptics who deſigned only to divert himſelf with truth, and defend both ſides " of the queſtion; firſt to make a book againſt us, and afterwards to deſtroy it " by another for us, to ſhew that Truth as well in facts as in matters of right " lies in the well of Democritus; that one may doubt of every thing, affirm, " defend, and attack every thing. And I am ſtill of opinion that a little of this " has entered into his views. I believe he would have kept his promiſe if ſo " much noiſe had not been made, we ſhould have had a ſorry confutation, for in " it he would have ſpoke againſt his inclinations, and his maxims; whereas here he " ſpeaks his real ſentiments."

(1) Cabale Chimerique, pag. 198, 353. Laſt Conviction. pag. 35. col. 1. Chimera demonſtrated, pag. 351, 352.

(2) MSS. Memoirs of Mr Baſnage. See likewiſe the Chimera demonſtrated, pag. 351, 352.

(3) Apology for Mr Jurieu, p. 25. col. 1.

(4) Examen d'un Libelle &c. pag. 36, 37.

After this Mr Jurieu undertakes to diſcover the real intention of the Author. He ſays that this Author, " being extremely fond of the independant and abſolute " power of Princes, and ſeeing that for ſome years paſt they had wrote againſt " his idol the King of France pretty freely; and being above all full of indig- " nation againſt the Revolution in England and the dethroning of King James, " he had at length loſt all patience, and could no longer refrain from writing an " apology for the King of France, and for King James (5): and that it was up- " on this account that he was obliged to ſcreen himſelf under the maſk of a bigot- " ted Papiſt, and of a violent hater of the Proteſtant Religion (6)." He con- " feſſeth that this maſk would have kept him in ſuſpence had it not been for " the Preface (7)." However he did not believe that this Author was ſo ani- mated againſt the Proteſtant Religion as he pretended to be. " We do him the " juſtice, (ſays he), to believe that he is not ſo malicious againſt the Proteſtant " Religion as he would make himſelf appear to be, and that his raving againſt " us is a part of the comedy, that he may under that deep diſguiſe defend both " the King of France, King James, and arbitary power (8)." He did not even believe that any motive of intereſt had engaged him to write in favour of theſe Princes. " We muſt, (ſays he), do him this juſtice, that intereſt could have no " ſhare in theſe appearances of zeal. For he had no deſign of making a merit of

(5) Ibid. pag. 38.

(6) P. 39, 40, 41.

(7) P. 40.

(8) P. 40, 41.

Digitized by Google

" this work with these powers, since he has taken all manner of precautions not 1691.
(1) P. 69. " to be known (1)."

But he did this justice to the author, only to make him appear the more like Mr Bayle. He did the same thing in speaking of the Advice. At first he said of this book all that he thought of Mr Bayle, whom he had in view. He found the stile of it flowing, easy, and lively; that his figures were natural, his metaphors happy, his ornaments well chosen and well placed; that it engages the reader by a secret charm; that it was filled with agreeable literature, and that his learning was mighty well dis-
(2) P. 5, 6. posed (2). All this agreed to Mr Bayle in the opinion of the public. Afterwards he says that this Author strikes blow after blow to overthrow his adversary, and sets forth with a great deal of art, and in a very narrow compass, all the strongest things that had ever been advanced against the Reformed; that his book was the most dangerous piece that had been wrote against them since the Reformation; shewing the Refor-
(3) P. 7. mation in the most hideous light (3): because all this was still necessary to his design, which was to render Mr Bayle odious. But when he came to answer the book, and was much heated, he forgot all his former description of it, it was then a piece so extravagant at the bottom that it required neither system, principles, nor reason to compose such another. A work which was all outside and nothing within; a little figure of wax-work well polished and well dressed, well furnished with red and white, but within had neither flesh, bones, nor nerves; there was nothing in it but two very meagre difficulties which the author had plumped up by the fertility of his imagination, and
(4) P. 91, 92. out of the treasure of his common-place books (4): two poor difficulties, all the rest being mere gilding, embroidery, invectives, idle stories, reproaches, trifles, and reflexions nothing to the purpose, and which proved nothing (5): a piece wherein there was no
(5) P. 97, 98. system (6), a pretty little collection from the Polyanthea and pure pedantry (7); in fine, a work wrote with so little wisdom and solidity, that the Author must have considered
(6) P. 180. mankind as brutes, who suffer themselves to be led by the nose or by the ears (8). His judg-
(7) P. 210. ments were entirely regulated by his passions. He represented the Advice as a formidable work, that he might with the greater probability ascribe it to Mr Bayle;
(8) P. 98. and he accused Mr Bayle of having made an apology for the King of France and for King James, because at that juncture nothing was more proper to incense the public against him.

About this time there was at Geneva one Goudet, a Merchant, who had but little business indeed, but was a great Projector. He took it in his head to adjust the differences of Princes, and become the pacificator of Europe. He composed a book entitled, Eight Dialogues, wherein Irene and Aristus lay down measures for putting an
(9) Huit Entretiens où Irene & Ariste fournissent des idées pour terminer la presente guerre par une Paix generale. end to the present war by a general peace (9). These Dialogues contained a Project of Peace, wherein Mr Goudet assigned to the Princes and States of Europe the Territories they were to possess. France for instance, was to keep Franche-Comté, their conquests in Flanders, and Luxembourg; but must restore all that they had conquered in Catalonia from the peace of the Pyrenees, and in Germany from the peace of Nimeguen, excepting Strasburg. She must likewise demolish Mont-Royal, Fort-Louis, Hunniguen and Fribourg; and in equivalent our projector gives her the City of Mons and all Hainault, and some other territories which lay convenient for her. He gives her likewise Lorrain, and the Duke of Lorrain was to have Servia and Bulgaria, and Belgrade for the capital of his new Dominions: but afterwards he changed this article, and gave him Brabant and the rest of the Spanish Netherlands. France was to restore to the Swiss the Town of Fribourg and the fortress of Hunninguen, after they were demolished; and the Emperor was to yield to them the four Forest Towns, together with the Brisgau and the Suntgau. He gives up likewise to France the principality of Orange, the County of Avignon, and the Venaissin; and in exchange he gives to the Prince of Orange the Baillywic of Gex, and to the Pope an annual tribute of fifty thousand Crowns to be paid by the Duke of Savoy, in consideration of which this Duke was to have Casal and Pignerol. He grants likewise to the Protestants in France a perpetual Edict, which should secure to them the same liberty of conscience which the Catholics enjoy in Holland: but they were not to be allowed to write against the Church of Rome. The Dutch were to have all the commerce of the Indies, and France was to demolish certain places in the Low-Countries, which might give them umbrage. He would have King William to be acknowledged King of England, and King James made King of Jerusalem and of all Palestine. The Christian Princes were to unite to destroy the Ottoman Empire. The Elector of Bavaria was to be Emperor of Constantinople, and Count Tekely was to have Belgrade and the Provinces of Servia, Bulgaria, Bosnia, Rascia, Moldavia, and Walachia. These two last were to be Tributaries of Poland. He gives also to France, Egypt, a part of Syria, and the Isle of Rhodes, and " the
(10) Second Dialogue &c. p. 27, 28. " advantages that will arise from thence, (said Mr Goudet (10), is, that by this " means at the expence of the Infidels, there will be employment found in remote " countries for the unquiet and restless temper of the French, who can hardly " be at ease themselves or suffer other people to be so, which is not of small conse- " quence to the general interest." To render this peace perpetual, the Princes of

Digitized by Google

1691. Europe were to give every year to the Swiſs ſix hundred thouſand crowns to maintain 40000 men, who ſhould be always ready to pour in upon any one who ſhould endeavour to diſturb it; and theſe troops in caſe of need were to be joined by 30000 men whom the Emperor and the Princes of the Empire were to keep on foot.

Mr Goudet admiring the ſublimity of his genius in this project of peace which he had formed, communicated it to every body whom he could perſuade to read it. He entertained the French Reſident with it, who made a jeſt of it (1). But this did not diſcourage him. Knowing that Mr Minutoli, to whom he was related, was a friend of Mr Bayle; he deſired him to ſend this ſcheme of a peace to Mr Bayle, "in order to have his judgment of it, as well as that of many "other illuſtrious perſons in foreign countries (2)." In the month of September 1690, Mr Minutoli ſent the firſt ſix dialogues to Mr Bayle, without naming the Author, and told him at the ſame time, "that if they did not deſign "to take a particular care of the intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion, and of his "dear brethren the Refugees in this ſcheme, he would not have ſo much as look-"ed into it, but that the perſon who was concerned in it had aſſured him that "the ſequel would ſatisfy all the ſcruples he could have on that head (3)."

The article concerning the Refugees was reſerved for the ſeventh Dialogue, which was not ſent to Mr Bayle. Mr Minutoli deſired him to communicate the ſix firſt to Baron Groeben, Governor to Prince Louis, brother to the Elector of Brandenbourg; to Dr Burnet, Biſhop of Saliſbury; to Mr Hulſt, the State's Reſident at Bruſſels; to Mr Fremont d'Ablancourt, and to Mr de Bauval: and in general he deſired him to put it into the hands of as many ingenious men and Miniſters of State as poſſible, and to acquaint him with their opinion of it (4). Mr Bayle cauſed ſome tranſcripts to be made of it, and ſent them to the perſons named by Mr Minutoli. They did not think very advantageouſly of it. "Beſides that they "did not eſteem it well wrote, they found in it chimeras and notions of a Plato-"nic Commonwealth, and of that Chriſtian Republic of which Mr de Sulli has pre-"ſerved the plan (5)." Mr Bayle did not read it, for beſides the great averſion he had to the reading of manuſcripts, his other affairs, and the indifferent character which was given of it by the perſons who had read it, made him neglect it entirely (6). He acquainted Mr Minutoli with their judgment of it, and added, "that the author might lay it down as a thing certain, that any plan of a gene-"ral peace, which did not ſtrip France of all that ſhe had conquered for ſome years "paſt, and which did not weaken her to ſuch a degree as to make her neighbours "no longer jealous of her, would be rejected (7)." While they were making copies of this piece, Mr Bayle chanced to go into Mr Acher's ſhop, a Bookſeller in Rotterdam, who "(8) deſired him to caſt his eyes upon a manuſcript "which had been ſent him and give him his opinion of it, and tell him whether "it was a piece which would ſell. Mr Bayle preſently upon looking into "the firſt page of it knew it, and ſaid aloud, in preſence of ſeveral Refugees "who were in the ſhop, that it was a piece which he had given to be copied, and "appeared to be vexed, becauſe he was afraid that the copier had taken it into "his head to give it to the preſs; for he had only been deſired by his friend "at Geneva, to ſhow it in manuſcript, and to get the opinion of good judges "concerning it, that the Author might alter it according to the different views "which might be ſuggeſted to him. ..... But Mr Acher made him eaſy on "that head, by telling him that the perſon from whom he had the copy, would "part with it to no body but to Mr Bayle; and as he believed that Mr Bayle "had the diſpoſal of it, he deſired that he would procure him the publication of "it. Mr Bayle anſwered that he had received no order to get that piece printed, "but that if this ſhould be reſolved upon, and the choice of the Printer be left "to him, he would prefer him to any other. He appeared very grateful for "this."

"(9) Some time after Mr Minutoli wrote to Mr Bayle, that the Author was pre-"paring to publiſh the firſt ſix Dialogues at Lauſanne, while in the mean time he "was finiſhing the two others. Mr Bayle told this to Mr Acher, who did not think "fit to alter his deſign upon that account, ſince it was not likely that an E-"dition in that country could hinder the ſale of one in Holland, which would "be more beautiful and more eaſily ſent every where than that of Switzerland. "He propoſed therefore only to oblige Mr Acher, that they ſhould ſend him "the ſheets of the Lauſanne edition as they came from the preſs, there being a "Bookſeller at Rotterdam who would reprint them. They agreed to this propoſal, "and poſt after poſt Mr Minutoli made Mr Bayle hope that they would "ſend him the ſheets with the Author's corrections. He acquainted him that the work "would be conſiderably enlarged, and that the form of it would be almoſt wholly "changed for the better; that the author inſiſted particularly on a Guarrantee, and had "put the article concerning the Refugees on ſuch a footing as had been approved "of by ſeveral of them. As the ſheets did not come, Mr Minutoli deſired Mr Bayle "to keep the Bookſeller in hopes, ...

(1) Extract of a Letter from Geneva &c. in the Chimere demontiee, p. 204.

(2) Letter from Mr Minutoli to Mr Jurieu, ibid. p. 194.

(3) Cabale Chimerique, p. 5, 6, of the ſecond Edition.

(4) Ibid. p. 20. and the following.

(5) P. 13, 14.

(6) P. 7, and the following.

(7) P. 20, 77.

(8) P. 16. and the following.

(9) P. 18, 19.

Digitized by Google

" (1) During this delay of the ſheets, Mr Acher told Mr Bayle from time to time, 1691.
" that he would not print this project until he knew whether it might not give of" fence. Mr Bayle always told him, that he would do well to give it to read to any " body he pleaſed, and Mr Acher having ſaid that he would be directed by him in
" that matter, Mr Bayle anſwered him, that he need not do ſo, that he had not read
" it, and would not read it while it continued in manuſcript. He even told him plainly
" the opinion of Meſſieurs d'Ablancourt and Bauval, and of ſome others who had read
" it. This did not diſcourage him, for Mr Jurieu's propheſies (which he had printed)
" had taught him by experience, that the moſt chimerical books, are the very beſt for
" the Printer . . . . At laſt (2), when Mr Bayle could not tell what to make of this de" lay of the ſheets, he was informed, in the time of the ſiege of Mons (3), that there
" were copies of the firſt edition at the Hague. This made him adviſe the Bookſeller
" to give over the thoughts of printing the Project of Peace, and ſo much the more
" becauſe the ſiege of that place, which ever way it turned, would change the ſtate
" of affairs: and he found that he had already taken that prudent reſolution."

(1) P. 22, 23.

(2) Ibid. p. 24.

(3) Mons capitulated on the 9th of April 1691, after 16 days open trenches.

Mr Jurieu's book againſt the Advice of the Refugees, and againſt Mr Bayle, was actually in the preſs, when the firſt ſix dialogues concerning the Project of Peace, printed at Lauſanne, came into his hands. He was quite a ſtranger to this work. (4)
" Mr Minutoli, in his letters to Mr Bayle, had never particularly named Mr Jurieu as " one of the perſons to whom he ought to ſhow the manuſcript. He believed no doubt " that it was not neceſſary to do ſo, having heard of their intimate acquaintance, and as " he deſired his friend to ſhew it to judicious perſons in general, he took it for granted
" that Mr Jurieu would ſee it among the firſt. Mr Bayle would not have failed to " have ſhewn it to him at firſt, tho' his friend had not particularly deſired him to do ſo;
" but he was afraid leaſt Mr Jurieu ſhould have thought it was with a deſign to affront
" him, if he had deſired him to read a project of peace, wherein they had departed
" ſo far from his ſyſtem. For Mr Bayle ſaw plainly from Mr Minutoli's firſt letter,
" that according to this project, the religion of the Proteſtants was not to be the na" tional religion in France. As Mr Bayle had never reliſhed Mr Jurieu's Syſtem,
" and poſſibly had talked with too much liberty of it before ſome of his ſpies, he " had already incurred his ſecret hatred; ſo that he had reaſon to fear, that in ſo de" licate an affair, as the glory of having given true or falſe predictions concerning
" great events, the ſmalleſt matter ſhould pique him, and might be taken, eſpecially
" coming from ſuch a hand, for an inſult."

(4) The Chimericalneſs of the Rotterdam Cabal demonſtrated &c. p. 194, 195, in the Note.

Mr Jurieu was, in fact, extremely irritated at this Project of Peace: but he grew quite outrageous when he underſtood from Mr Acher, that this work had been long before ſent to Mr Bayle, and was told what had paſſed between Mr Bayle and him concerning the manuſcript. Being always full of wild dreams, and become quite furious againſt Mr Bayle, he built upon this a ſyſtem a thouſand times more chimerical than the chimerical Project of Peace itſelf. He prefixed to his Examination of the Advice to the Refugees (5); an Important Advice to the Public (6), wherein he declared that all that he had ſaid " concerning the deſign of the author of the Advice to the " Refugees, was only the effort of a perſon groping his way in a dark place. It is " true, adds he, that I muſt have been blind, and at preſent I can hardly imagine
" how I could fail of diſcovering the whole myſtery at firſt ſight. (7) . . . . . They " who are under ſuſpicion, and are juſtly ſo, could find no better means of ju-
" ſtifying their friends, than by aſking, cui bono? and I confeſs that this difficulty
" raiſed a ſcruple even in me, which did not indeed make me in the leaſt doubt
" from whence the book came, but which however embaraſſed me: when at laſt
" God, whoſe pleaſure it is that myſteries of iniquity ſhould be diſcovered, has per" mitted that another unexpected diſcovery ſhould give more light into it. The public
" muſt know then, that this is not the work of a private perſon who deſigned to de" fend the authority of Princes. They who have imagined ſo, have been miſtaken
" (8). This is the work of a Cabal which extends from ſouth to north, and has its " center at Paris and at the Court of France (9)." He added, " That there was a " French party at Geneva, which was hatched under the wings of the Reſident of " France; that this party conſiſted of perſons of all ranks and characters; and that
" this cabal kept a correſpondence with another in Holland entirely in the ſame intereſts
" (10). That they both had the ſame view, which was to relieve France from her preſent
" diſtreſs, by a peace as advantageous as ſhe could wiſh for: that their deſign was to
" diſunite the Allies, to raiſe a ſpirit of rebellion in ſubjects againſt their Sove-
" reigns, which would force the Allies to receive peace upon any condition: and in " fine, that theſe two parties did nothing but in concert with the Court of France,
" and by her direction (11)." That in conſequence of the views and inſtructions of the Court of France, Mr Bayle, who was the head of the northern cabal, had wrote the Advice to the Refugees; and Mr Goudet, agent for the ſouthern cabal, had compoſed the Dialogues concerning a Peace, which were drawn up by the Reſident of France, and corrected at Verſailles; that Mr Bayle had undertaken to get them printed at Rotterdam, in order to ſpread them the more eaſily over all Europe, and particularly in Holland and in England (12). After this he calls Mr Bayle an Impious

(5) Examen de l'avis aux Refugiez.

(6) Avis important au Public.

(7) Avis important au Public, p. 3, 4.

(8) Ibid. p. 5.

(9) Ibid. p. 7.

(10) Ibid. p. 7, 8, 9.

(11) Ibid. p. 42, 43.

(12) P. 37, and the following.

Digitized by Google

1691. and prophane perſon, without honour or religion, a traitor, a deceitful man, an enemy to the State; a perſon to be deteſted and deſerving corporal puniſhment.

In the mean while he owned that this accuſation concerning the Advice to the Refugees, was founded on ſimple preſumptions only. "It may be, ſays he (1), that "ſome people who would appear to be diſintereſted, will ſay that this is to puſh "people too fiercely, and to expoſe them to the public hatred without having ſuf- "ficiently convicted them ..... but when the public ſecurity is concerned, muſt "we wait for conviction, are not diſaffected perſons diſcovered by ſtrong preſump- "tions, that we may be upon our guard againſt them?" It is very ſingular, that while he was accuſing Mr Bayle of a deſign to ruin the Proteſtants; ſome confeſſions eſcaped him which deſtroyed this accuſation. "The Author, ſaid he (2), be- "lieved that at laſt this would do them no more hurt than an hundred other libels "which have been wrote againſt them: that this would be forgot like the reſt, "and that for the preſent it would be of uſe to France, and by accident to the "Proteſtants themſelves, becauſe it would contribute to diſſolve the confederacy, "and to bring about a peace." And with regard to the project of peace, after having repreſented it as a piece concerted with the court of France, and capable of diſ-uniting the allies, he ſaid that it was a performance ſo full of chimeras that one muſt be a chimerical man who would ſet about the anſwering of it (3). But theſe reflexions which were ſufficient to have opened the eyes of a diſintereſted perſon, made no impreſſion on Mr Jurieu: he did not want to vindicate Mr Bayle, he wanted to find him guilty. He likewiſe attacked Mr Bauval. He accuſed him of having forged the Letter which he had inſerted in his Journal, wherein it was ſaid that they were reprinting the Advice to the Refugees at Paris (4). But as the firſt ſheets of this new edition had been ſeen in Holland, he pretended that this was an artifice they had contrived to ſcreen themſelves from ſuſpicion; and that the Royal Licence, printed in the firſt ſheet was forged.

His book againſt the Advice to the Refugees appeared (5) under this title: An Examination of a Libel againſt Religion, the State, and the Revolution of England, intituled An important Advice to the Refugees upon their approaching return into France (6). There was prefixed to it An important Advice to the public, as we have already obſerved.

As ſoon as Mr Bayle had read this Advice to the public, "he went to the grand "Schout of Rotterdam, and told him that if his accuſer would go to priſon with "him, and undergo the puniſhment which he ſhould deſerve, in caſe Mr Bayle "was found innocent, he was ready to go there (7)." He likewiſe informed two of the chief Magiſtrates of Rotterdam, and two or three other gentlemen at the Hague, diſtinguiſhed by their merit and employments, of Mr Jurieu's accuſations, that theſe accuſations were falſe, and that he deſired nothing of the State but that they would not condemn him without a hearing (8). Poſſibly he would have done well to have gone no further. Mr Jurieu would never have had the confidence to appear before a Magiſtrate with him. He had no legal proof to alledge, they would have ridiculed his preſumptions, and he would have been declared a falſe accuſer. But as he had publickly accuſed Mr Bayle of being the head of a Cabal or conſpiracy againſt the State, Mr Bayle thought himſelf obliged to juſtify himſelf in the ſame manner. He intitled his Anſwer (9), The chimerical Cabal: or a Refutation of a fabulous Story which has been lately publiſhed with a malicious intention concerning a certain project of peace, in the Examination of a Libel, &c. intituled An important Advice to the Refugees on their approaching return into France (10).

In the beginning Mr Bayle gives an account of all he had done with regard to the project of peace, agreeably to what we have related above. He takes notice of all the falſhoods in Mr Jurieu's narration, and of all the extravagancies he had been guilty of in this matter. As to the Advice to the Refugees, which made the ſecond article of his Accuſation, he ſays he had at firſt deſigned to handle that ſubject in a particular treatiſe; but conſidering that this work might encreaſe under his hand, and not appear ſoon, he thought it would be beſt in the mean while to give this prelude of an Anſwer. He agreed with Mr Jurieu that the Advice to the Refugees was the work of a Proteſtant: but he undertook to ſhow by the ſtrongeſt preſumptions that it muſt have been written in France; and ſo he refuted all the ſuppoſitions which Mr Jurieu had made to prove that it had been compoſed in Holland, and that if the author was at Paris, he would diſcover himſelf. He ſhows the difference betwixt that author's manner of writing and his own. He refuted all the characters by which Mr Jurieu had pretended to point out the author of the Advice in order to conclude that it was Mr Bayle. He ſhowed how ridiculous his remarks and chicanery were concerning the new edition of that piece, which they were printing at Paris; and that Mr Jurieu's preſumptions gave him no right to arraign him publickly as a traitor, an impious perſon, and guilty of high-treaſon both againſt God and man; and proved that in order to make him appear guilty he had made uſe of deceit, treachery, and the blackeſt malice. He ſhowed that the characters which Mr Jurieu fixed upon the author of the Advice, offered preſumptions incomparably more ſtrong that Mr Bayle was not the author of it, than all

(1) Ibid. pag. 110, 111.
(2) Ibid. pag. 57.
(3) Ibid. pag. 80.
(4) See above, pag. xlvi, xlvii.
(5) About the end of the month of April 1691.
(6) Examen d'un Libelle contre la Religion, contre l'Etat, & contre la Revolution d'Angleterre, intitulé Avis important aux Refugiez ſur leur prochain retour en France.
(7) Cabale Chimerique, pag. 94. of the firſt edition
(8) Ibid. pag. 207, 208.
(9) It was dated the 8th and 13th of May 1691.
(10) La Cabale Chimerique: ou Refutation de l'Hiſtoire fabuleuſe qu'on vient de publier malicieuſement touchant un certain Projet de paix, dans l'Examen d'un Libelle, &c. intitulé Avis important aux Refugiez ſur leur prochain retour en France. A Rotterdam chez Reinier Leers, 1691, in 12°.

that

Digitized by Google

that he had alledged to prove that he was. Laſtly he re-capitulates Mr Jurieu's 1691.
(1) Ibid. pag. 283. and the following. accuſations, and reduced them to twenty five Articles, the eighteenth of which was (1), That Mr Bayle made hardly any ſecret of his Atheiſm, that he did not edify the public by any act of Religion; that he was without Religion, and without love to God, ſo that his ſupreme deity was called Lewis XIV. " Here, adds Mr Bayle, are eighteen " Articles, out of which I am ſure my adverſary will never extricate himſelf. The " laſt alone is ſufficient to employ him for his whole Life, without drawing any thing " but matter of confuſion to himſelf from it. I wait with a great deal of impa- " tience 'till he ſhall come that length. It is ſo capital a point, that he muſt either " conquer or die. He muſt prove it, either by my writings or by credible wit- " neſſes, or by avouching by unqueſtionable ſigns, that God has conferred upon " him the gift of prophecy to ſuch a degree, that he ſees all that paſſeth in peoples " hearts. . . . . Paſſion has blinded him in ſuch a manner that he could not ſee, " that though his cauſe had been good, he would have ruined it by the great number " of facts with which he has loaded it. For though he ſhould ſucceed in all the " reſt of the articles, if he failed in the laſt could he juſtly eſcape hanging? is " not Atheiſm puniſhed capitally every where? and ought not an accuſer who is " convicted of falſe evidence, to ſuffer the ſame puniſhment which the perſon ac- " cuſed would have undergone, if he had been found guilty. . . . . I repeat it once " more, an accuſer who embaraſſeth himſelf ſo ſtupidly and fooliſhly excites rather " our pity than our anger. Who would not laugh to ſee a Miniſter undertake to " prove, that a man who in the ſight of the world communicates four times a year, " and is frequently preſent at the public prayers, and at the beſt part of the ſermon, " doth not perform any religious act? I will ſhow him that my pretended impiety " conſiſts only in my not having applauded his falſe miracles, falſe prophets, and " pretended revelations; and I will never be aſhamed of having contributed to ſtop " my fellow Refugees upon the brink of Fanaticiſm, and of having indirectly hindered
(2) Ibid. p. 286. " Mr Jurieu himſelf from puſhing his chimeras ſtill further (2)." To theſe eighteen articles he added ſeven more, and " (3) declared that all that Mr Jurieu could write
(3) Ibid. p. 294, 295. " before he had proved theſe twenty five articles would be loſt labour, and that " his honour would not be at all ſalved by proving ſome of them only; for if " he ſhould fail in others, he would ſtill be convicted as a public calumniator, " in a matter where life and fame are concerned; and conſequently his Miniſtry " would be thereby ſo much diſhonoured that he would be a reproach to the Pro- " teſtant Church if they did not depoſe him."

As this was not one of thoſe diſputes which ariſe among men of letters, about points of erudition or ſcience, but an affair wherein honour and even life was concerned, if the treaſon againſt the State had been proved; Mr Bayle did not think himſelf obliged to keep any terms with his accuſer, he unmaſked him ſo ſucceſsfully, that even Mr Jurieu's pride and arrogance were not able to ſtand ſo rude a ſhock. He had recourſe to the civil power, and preſented to the Venerable Burgomaſters of Rotterdam a Petition wherein he drew his own picture to the life. It is as follows:

The Sieur Jurieu, who has had the honour for ſo many years and by ſo many labours to defend the cauſe of God, prays for juſtice from your Lordſhips, againſt a horrible Libel compoſed by the Sieur Bayle, wherein the ſaid Bayle calls him rogue, villain, impoſtor, calumniator, and wicked man; and calls the Princes who have ſhaken off the yoke of Popery flagitious men, and aſſaſſinators, and ſays many other infamous things againſt the Reformation. The Sieur Jurieu implores protection for his innocence, and that the ſaid book may be prohibited, lacerated, and torn to pieces; the author puniſhed as ſuch atrocious injuries deſerve; and that the Sieur Jurieu may be permitted to defend himſelf publickly, he promiſing to do ſo with modeſty and chriſtian moderation; and that the Sieur Bayle may be forbid to compoſe any more books againſt the Sieur Jurieu.

(4) Chimere demontrée, préf. pag. lxv, lxvi. " This is, ſays Mr Bayle (4), one of the moſt violent and at the ſame time the " moſt burleſque piece that was ever ſeen. To deſire that an accuſer of high-treaſon " both againſt God and man ſhould be allowed to write againſt the party accuſed, " and that the latter ſhould be forbid to write againſt his accuſer; muſt not one be " out of his wits to offer ſuch a petition? A Gentleman who ſhould deſire his Prince " to give him leave to fight in ſingle combat with his adverſary, after tying him hand " and foot to a tree, would not be ſo ridiculous. But his aſſurance in accuſing Mr " Bayle before theſe gentlemen, of having in his Cabale Chimerique called the Princes " who have ſhaken off the yoke of Popery, flagitious men and aſſaſſinators, and of having " ſaid ſeveral infamous things againſt the Reformation, is ſuch a furious calumny, that " tho' he ſhould meet with no other diſgrace in this proceſs, but the being convicted of " having advanced ſuch a falſhood in ſuch a petition, he would have good reaſon to " repent of his notable accuſation."

The Burgomaſters of Rotterdam acted a part agreeable to their equity and wiſdom. " They exhorted both Mr Bayle and Mr Jurieu to make up matters as ſoon as poſ- " ſible; and forbad them to write any thing againſt each other, which ſhould not firſt " be examined by Mr Bayer, Penſionary of the city. They prohibited likewiſe the " publication of any more anonymous libels, ſuch as had appeared at Rotterdam 1691. "against the Cabale Chimerique (1)." We shall soon have an occasion of speaking of these libels.

Digitized by Google

What Mr Jurieu had wrote concerning the pretended Cabal of Geneva, drew upon him both the indignation and contempt of that whole City. One of the Syndics wrote what follows on this subject to a friend of his in Holland (2): I can assure you, Sir, that people in this Country have been very much offended at Mr Jurieu's manner of writing, and that he has lost his reputation among all men of honour and good sense. One cannot imagine what could make him write in the manner he has done against this City. What he has said is absolutely false, and entirely his own invention. All that is true in the matter is, that one Goudet, a Merchant, has taken upon him to write certain projects of peace &c.

See likewise what a private Gentleman writes from thence (3): "We cannot but "look with indignation upon a man, who, filled with the most deadly poison, "bites without distinction every thing that comes in his way, friends and foes, "not sparing even Sovereign States. What have the Magistrates of Geneva done "to him that he should endeavour to embroil them with their people, and set "them at variance with all the Protestants and the Allies? but all that I can say "to you on this subject is, that every body here has looked upon his calum-"nies with the utmost contempt."

Mr Minutoli wrote a letter to Mr Jurieu on the same subject in very strong terms. I do not know, (says he (4), whether our Government, and so many persons of distinction, so unworthily treated in a point which concerns so deeply both their conscience and honour, will not endeavour to give you the most mortifying proofs of their just resentment; but I am very certain that I must have forgot all the rules of justice, if I did not at present appear in favour of Mr Bayle, who by the accident which I will tell you, was brought by me only into that affair, which you are pleased to lay to his charge as a great crime. He proceeds to give a detail of all that had passed betwixt Mr Bayle and him concerning the project of peace; which agreed in every circumstance with the account Mr Bayle himself had given of it in his Cabale Chimerique, and which I have before related. He reproached Mr Jurieu with having upon some frivolous conjectures, placed both Mr Bayle and him in his pretended Cabal. Tell me upon your conscience, (says he), how would you take it, if any body upon such presumptions, which they might have against you, should presently, without farther examination, in a public mannner accuse you and your friends as persons without Honour, Faith, or Religion? He exhorted him to acknowledge his fault, and not to oblige him to make this Letter public for Mr Bayle's justification.

Mr Jurieu received likewise Letters from some friends he had at Geneva, advising him not to give any credit to the story of the Geneva Cabal, and not to consider the project of peace as a serious matter (5). But this did not hinder him to publish without the knowledge, and contrary to the prohibition of the Magistrates, a piece intitled, (6) New Convictions of the Author of the Advice to the Refugees. Together with the Nullity of his Defences. By a friend of Mr Jurieu. Part the first. He wrote under the name of a friend, that by this disguise he might not come under the Magistrates prohibition. He maintained in it all that he had before said concerning the Cabal at Geneva, and the project of peace. This first part was soon followed by a second, intitled, The last Conviction of the Sieur Bayle, Professor of Philosophy at Rotterdam, concerning the Advice to the Refugees, which may serve for a Factum in the complaint laid before the State (7). In this last piece, he no longer talks of the dangerous Cabal which extended itself from North to South, which had its center at the Court of France, and whose intention was to raise an insurrection in Holland and in England to confound all the Designs of the Allies, and by this means to procure an universal Monarchy to France, and consequently to ruin the Protestant Religion. He saw that he had thereby made himself both contemptible and ridiculous; he therefore changed the state of the question, and only accused Mr Bayle of having had an intention to publish without the knowledge of the State, A Project of Peace contrary to their intentions and interests (8). With regard to the Advice to the Refugees he only repeated and amplified the accusations which he had already brought against Mr Bayle: and instead of justifying himself from the falsehoods and calumnies which Mr Bayle had reduced to twenty five articles, he gave a loose to abuse and invectives. He had even the boldness to deny that the Magistracy had forbid him to write, as they had done Mr Bayle. "Surely, (said "he), one must have a very bad opinion of the Administration both of this City "and of the State, to believe that they have put a man accused of treason against "the State, upon the same footing with one who through his zeal for the State "has brought a complaint against him. It would not be at all just to take the "right of defending himself from a man who has been so violently attacked, as "Mr Jurieu has been. He is obliged for the edification of the Church to vin-"dicate his name wherever his works have carried it (9)." However as it was very certain that they had been both alike forbidden to publish any thing which had not been examined by Mr Bayer (10): this Magistrate on reading that part of

(1) Chimere demontrée, p. 4.

(2) Ibid. Preface, p. xxxv, xxxvi.

(3) Ibid. p. xxxvi, xxxvii.

(4) Letter from Mr Minutoli to Mr Jurieu of the $\frac{19}{29}$th of May 1691. In the Chimere demontrée &c. p. 189, 190.

(5) Ibid. Preface, p. xi, xii.

(6) Nouvelles Convictions contre l'Auteur de l'Avis aux Refugiez. Avec la nullité de ses justifications. Par un Ami de Mr Jurieu. Premiere Partie.

(7) Derniere Conviction contre le sieur Bayle, Professeur en Philosophie à Rotterdam au sujet de l'Avis aux Refugiez, pour servir de Factum sur la plainte portée aux Puissances de l'Etat. Both parts together contain 36 pages in 4°, in two columns small character.

(8) Last Conviction &c. p. 15, col. 1.

(9) Ibid.

(10) Chimere demontrée, p. 215, 216, and Preface, p. lxiv.

Digitized by Google

the Factum, was extremely surprized at Mr Jurieu's assurance in maintaining the contrary (1). 1691.

Before the publication of Mr Jurieu's last Conviction, there appeared several anonymous libels against the Cabale Chimerique, wherein his accusations were repeated and even improved by new calumnies. Of this kind were the Letter to Mr Bayle, Professor of Philosophy and History in Rotterdam, concerning the Cabale Chimerique (2). It was a violent declamation wrote by a Minister, one of Mr Jurieu's Creatures. General Remarks on Mr Bayle's Cabale Chimerique, with a first and second Continuation of these Remarks (3). At first these Remarks were ascribed to Mr Bazin de Limeville, a Refugee at Rotterdam (4), but he protested that he was no ways concerned in them (5), and it was afterwards known that they were written by Mr Robethon. Mr Bayle published under the name of a friend, a pamphlet of twelve pages, intitled A Letter concerning the little books published against the Cabale Chimerique (6), wherein he informed the Public of his reasons for not answering these libels. He said that the prohibition of the Magistrate had made him suppress the answer which he had promised in his Cabale Chimerique; and that all the world was convinced that Mr Jurieu had broke the promise which he made to the Burgomasters, by publishing his pretended New Convictions. He added that he intended to answer Mr Jurieu's last libel, but that he did not think it proper to spend his time in answering a great many other pieces which only repeated the same things, or commented on some mistaken or mutilated passage of the Cabale Chimerique, and advanced falshoods with equal boldness and malice. He gives some examples of this, taken from the two pieces just now mentioned. The Minister who was Author of the letter to Mr Bayle thought fit to reply. He published a pamphlet of twenty one pages, intitled A short Refutation of a Letter written in favour of the Sieur Bayle in defence of his Cabale Chimerique (7). He believed that Mr Bauval was author of the letter concerning the little books. I will insert here one of his accusations, Mr Bayle's answer to it, and the accuser's reply: this will be sufficient to give a notion of these two pieces, and of the character of their author. The Minister after accusing Mr Bayle of avarice adds (8), "when I speak of "your avarice I do not use this word in the strict sense. They say you do not "love money with a design to hoard it up; I am willing to believe it since people "say so. You love it notwithstanding for the use you are pleased to make of "it, with which I do not pretend to meddle..... But, Sir, do you believe "that the world doth not know why you discontinued your News from the Republic of Letters! we know indeed that the indisposition which seized you, furnished you with a pretence. But we know likewise, that you pretended to be "better paid for it than you had been formerly, and that the Bookseller not being willing to agree to the augmentation you demanded, your agreement was at "an end, and you discontinued the work upon that account. That is to say, "your appetite increased in proportion with your reputation." Who could imagine that a fact could be alledged with so much confidence, without taking all the necessary precautions to be certain of its truth! However let us hear Mr Bayle. I do not know, says he (9), what name to give to a falshood of a certain declaimer, who has lately published as a thing certain, that Mr Bayle discontinued his News from the Republic of Letters, only because the Bookseller would not give him all that he demanded for the copy. The Bookseller is still alive: his name is Henry Desbordes, he lives at Amsterdam, in the Kalverstraet, one may be fully informed what truth there is in this, with all the ease in the world; yet here is a man, who without being at the pains of informing himself, which could have retarded the publication of his wonderful Letter only a day or two, dares to entangle himself publickly in an infamous falshood, for which he may be covered with confusion, if he is capable of any shame, by showing Mr Desbordes's own handwriting. But this author was not to be put to the blush. He answered cooly (10), "We "think ourselves obliged to consult Henry Desbordes about the fact we advanced, "concerning the interruption of the News from the Republic of Letters. We have "spoke in the manner we have done on the testimony a printer, who at that time "worked for the said Desbordes, because he had no interest to disguise matters, and "we believed that he related things as they were. So we leave it as we found it, "because it is a matter of very small importance in itself, and neither much helps "or hurts the principal cause." This was the common custom of those writers of libels. They published upon hear-say the most infamous things they could pick up against Mr Bayle, and when they were convicted of falshood, they said that they left them as they found them. And in this they only followed Mr Jurieu's example, who filled his Factums with mere imaginations and falshoods. It was in this manner that he repeated several times, that Mr Bayle had lived with the Jesuits at Toulouse three years; tho' he had never lived with them, and had staid only eighteen months at Toulouse, as we have already seen. He had his spies every where, who wrote or told him what passed, and for the most part very unfaithfully. We may well imagine, that his spies were the very scum of the Refugees. He had even some of them so scandalous, that his own creatures were ashamed of it. One of his friends could not forbear writing to him, that he disparaged himself by his correspondence with a certain Minister

(1) Letter to Mr Lenfant of the 24th of August 1691. p. 390, 391.

(2) Lettre écrite à M. B. Prof. en Phil. & en Hist. à Rotterdam sur la Cabale Chimerique.

(3) Remarques Generales sur la Cabale Chimerique de Mr Bayle: I. & II. Suite de ces Remarques.

(4) Bauval Copy of a Letter from Mr S.... concerning the General Remarks on the Cabale Chimerique, p. 1. and the following.

(5) Entretiens sur le grand scandale causé par un Livre intitulé la Cabale Chimerique, p. 157.

(6) Lettre sur les petits Livres publiez contre la Cabale Chimerique.

(7) Courte Refutation de la Lettre écrite en faveur du S. B. pour la défense de sa Cabale Chimerique.

(8) Lettre écrite à Mr B. sur sa Cabale Chimerique, p. 27, 28.

(9) Lettre sur les petits livres publiez contre la Cabale Chimerique, p. 6, 7.

(10) Courte Refutation de la Lettre écrite en faveur du S. B. pour la défense de sa Cabale Chirique, p. 15, 16.

1691. niſter among the Refugees at London: Mr Jurieu anſwered him, He is a knave, it is true; but he is orthodox: whereupon he was commonly called the orthodox knave.

There appeared likewiſe another piece conſiſting of twelve pages, againſt Mr Bayle's Letter, with this title, A Letter to Mr  relating to a Libel intituled, A Letter concerning the little books publiſhed againſt the Cabale Chimerique (1). The author aſcribes this Letter concerning the little books, &c. to Mr de Bauval, with more aſſurance than the author of the Letter to Mr Bayle had done. And indeed the ſame ſpirit was obſervable in both. Before theſe three pieces appeared, Mr de Bauval had publiſhed one of eight pages intituled, A Copy of a Letter written to M. S.... concerning the author of the General Remarks on the Cabale Chimerique (2). After ſome fine raillery upon the author of the General Remarks, whom he took to be Mr Limeville, he gives us Mr Jurieu's Petition, and ſhews how ridiculous it is. He made likewiſe ſome reflexions upon the unjuſt diſtinction that Mr Jurieu pretended ſhould be made betwixt him and Mr Bayle.

The firſt edition of the Cabale Chimerique being very ſoon ſold off, Mr Bayle publiſhed another corrected and very much enlarged. On the back of the title-page there is a ſhort advertiſement, wherein he deſires the reader not to make a judgment of that piece from the firſt chapters of it, in which he was forced to be dry, and could not avoid a detail of trifling particulars; but that they ſhould find what followed more lively and leſs tireſome, if they would give themſelves the trouble of reading it quite through. This edition did not appear ſo ſoon as the impreſſion of it was finiſhed. Mr Bayle put a ſtop to the ſale of it for a conſiderable time, becauſe the Burgomaſters of Rotterdam had forbidden all the Bookſellers in that City, to ſell any thing that ſhould be printed on this ſubject (3). But when he ſaw that Mr Jurieu publiſhed his Factums, he thought himſelf likewiſe intitled to publiſh the ſecond edition of his Cabale Chimerique. However, he did not mention in the title that it was printed at Rotterdam, or that it was a ſecond edition corrected and enlarged. As this title is ſomewhat different from the firſt, I will inſert it here: The Chimerical Cabal: or a Refutation of the fabulous ſtories and calumnies which Mr Jurieu has lately maliciouſly publiſhed concerning a certain Project of Peace; and concerning a Libel intituled, an important Advice to the Refugees, upon their approaching return into France, in his examination of that Libel (4).

In this edition Mr Bayle attacked Mr Jurieu very ſmartly with regard to the accuſation of Atheiſm. He inſiſted upon this article by all the conſiderations which could ſhow the importance of it; he called upon his accuſer, in a ſolemn manner, to prove it, he employed defiances, inſults, and, in a word, every thing that is moſt proper to put an adverſary under a neceſſity of producing his proofs (5). Mr Jurieu ſeeing himſelf ſo preſſed, addreſſed himſelf to his Conſiſtory, and promiſed to make good his accuſation: but he gave over this deſign a few days after, and offered only to be their Commiſſary, if they would furniſh him with ſome Memoirs, which ſurprized them extreamly (6). He had oftner than once harangued in the Conſiſtory againſt Mr Bayle with the utmoſt vehemence, and went even ſo far as to declare, That he would no more be reconciled with him than with the Devil (7). He endeavoured in vain to get the Acts of the Conſiſtory annulled, which amongſt other things contained that Mr Jurieu had deſiſted from his accuſations againſt Mr Bayle, concerning Religion, and that he ſhould not carry the complaints he might have againſt him any where but to the Conſiſtory in the firſt inſtance (8). In the mean while he publiſhed a piece intituled, A ſhort review of the maxims of Morality and principles of Religion, of the author of the Thoughts concerning Comets, and of the General Criticiſm on Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm: To ſerve for an Information to the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, if they pleaſe to take cognizance of it (9). He here alledges ſome paſſages of theſe two books, and endeavours to ſhow that they tend to irreligion. The ſame day that this piece fell into Mr Bayle's hands, he publiſhed one under this title: The Declaration of Mr Bayle, Profeſſor of Philoſophy and Hiſtory at Rotterdam, concerning a Pamphlet lately publiſhed under the title of a Short Review of the Maxims of Morality &c (10). Mr Bayle here ſhowed that Mr Jurieu changed the ſtate of the queſtion, he calls upon him anew to prove his accuſation of Atheiſm, and engages to juſtify himſelf from all Heterodoxy, as ſoon as this firſt and principal point is cleared. He adds ſeveral propoſitions extracted from Mr Jurieu's writings, to ſerve for a ſupplement to thoſe, a condemnation of which had been deſired from the Synod aſſembled at Leyden in the beginning of May 1691. "The Short Review having been diſtributed among "the members of the Conſiſtory, they reſolved to examine a cauſe of ſo much "importance: however they did not ground any prejudices againſt Mr Bayle's opi- "nions, either upon the diſcourſes, or writings of his accuſer. They prepared them- "ſelves to judge the matter in a regular manner; and Mr Bayle declared him- "ſelf always ready to ſhow his innocence, and it was not owing to him that "they did not come to a final determination (11), but they did not proceed in "the cauſe."

Some of Mr Bayle's friends ſided with him even ſo far as to write in his favour. Mr de Bauval publiſhed A Letter concerning the differences between Mr Jurieu and Mr Bayle (12), wherein he demonſtrated that Mr Jurieu could never juſtify his baſe uſage

(1) Lettre à Monſieur  au ſujet d'un Libelle qui a pour titre, Lettre ſur les petits Livres publiez contre la Cabale Chimerique.

(2) Copie d'un Lettre écrite à M. S... touchant l'Auteur des Remarques Generales ſur la Cabale Chimerique.

(3) Letter to Mr Minutoli of the 27th of Auguſt 1691, p. 392.

(4) La Cabale Chimerique: ou Refutation de l'Hiſtoire fabuleuſe & des calomnies que Mr J. vient de publier malicieuſement touchant un certain Projet de Paix, & touchant le libelle intitulé Avis important aux Refugiez ſur leur prochain retour en France, dans ſon Examen de ce libelle. A Cologne, chez Pierre Marteau, 1691, in 12°.

(5) P. 337.

(6) Chimere demontrée, p. 14.

(7) Ibid. p. 30.

(8) Letter to Mr Lenfant of the 24th of Auguſt 1691, p. 389.

(9) Courte Revûe des Maximes de Morale & des principes de Religion de l'Auteur des Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, & de la Critique Generale ſur l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme de Maimbourg: Pour ſervir de Factum aux Juges Eccleſiaſtiques, s'ils en veulent connoitre. In 4°. pagg. 8.

(10) Declaration de Mr Bayle, Profeſſeur en Philoſophie & en Hiſtoire à Rotterdam touchant un petit Ecrit qui vient de paroitre ſous le titre de Courte Revûë des Maximes de Morale &c. In 12°, pp. 24.

(11) Additions to the Thoughts concerning Comets &c. p. 15, 16.

(12) Lettre ſur les differens de Mr Jurieu & de Mr Bayle.

Digitized by Google

usage of Mr Bayle, whether we consider the matter with respect to the conduct becoming a gentleman, or to our common obligations as members of civil society. Afterwards he defends himself from Mr Jurieu's attacks. We have seen that this divine had accused him of forging the Extract of a Letter in his Journal, wherein it was said that they were reprinting the Advice to the Refugees at Paris. He repeated this charge in his Convictions, and imputed likewise other crimes to him. He accused him of being the publisher of the Advice to the Refugees, and of being a man without Religion. He maintained that the Extract of the Letter was forged. "We are certain, says he (1), that it is forged. And we defy those Gentlemen "to deposite that Letter, from whence this Extract was taken, in the hands of four "men of honour who shall be chosen on the one side and the other, who may exa- "mine from whence it came, when it was written, and what goes before and after "that passage. We defy them to do this, says he, and if they do not do it, it will be "a proof that the Letter is either forged, or written by a correspondent who is in the "secret, or contains things which will discover the mystery. This is a challenge "which we are very sure they will not accept. They will not dare to do it." Mr de Bauval accepted this challenge. He summoned him by a Notary to name two referees, and promised to name two others, to whom he would shew the Letter: but Mr Jurieu drew back, and could never be brought to this discussion which he had proposed. Mr Bayle mentions this piece of Mr de Bauval in one of his Letters to Mr Minutoli. "Of all my friends, says he (2), there is none who has wrote any thing "in my favour, except Mr de Bauval, Mr Basnage's brother. Mr Jurieu hates "him, at least as much as he doth me, and brings him into all his Libels with "a perfectly brutal rudeness; and at last joins him with me as author of the Advice "to the Refugees. Mr de Bauval has therefore wrote a Letter of two sheets and "a half, concerning our differences, which rallies him in a very elegant and dex- "terous manner." Mr Huet likewise published a piece in favour of Mr Bayle, intitled: A Letter from a friend of Mr Bayle's to Mr Jurieu's friends (3), wherein he takes to task several passages of the New Convictions, and of the General Remarks. This pamphlet is wrote with a great deal of good sense and moderation. 1691.

Mr Jurieu raised as many complaints by his heterodox opinions, as he did by his violent and persecuting spirit. Some churches petitioned the Synods to examine his books; they made up a list of heresies and profane expressions contained in them [P], and sent it to the Synod then setting at Leyden, under the title of A Letter to the Ministers and Elders, members of the Synod assembled at Leyden, the second of May 1691 (4). This accusation together with the disputes he had with several Ministers in the Synods, obliged him to publish a piece intituled, An Apology for the Sieur Jurieu, Minister and Professor of Divinity, addressed to the Ministers and Heads of the Walloon Churches in the Low Countries (5): but instead of defending his doctrine here, he with a great deal of pride and ostentation sets forth the great services he pretended to have done the Church; and after thus making his own panegyric, breaks out into railing and invectives against the Ministers who had complained of him, and once more inveighs bitterly against Mr Bayle. It is here that he owns that since it was not in his power to get him punished as he deserved, at least he would expose him to public infamy (6), and he makes grievous complaints of the clemency of the State (7). As Mr de Bauval's piece had touched him to the quick, he falls violently upon him; and tho' he had refused to abide by the terms of the challenge which he had given; he

(1) New Convictions, &c. pag. 10. col. 1.

(2) Letter to Mr Minutoli of the 27th of August 1691, pag. 395.

(3) Lettre d'un des Amis de Mr Bayle aux Amis de Mr Jurieu.

(4) Lettre à Messieurs les Ministres & Anciens qui composent le Synode assemblé à Leyden, le 2 de Mai 1691.

(5) Apologie du Sieur Jurieu, Pasteur & Professeur en Theologie, adressée aux Pasteurs & Conducteurs des Eglises Wallones des Pays-Bas.

(6) Apology for the Sieur Jurieu, pag. 25. col. 1.

(7) Ibid. pag. 24. col. 2.

[P] The profane expressions contained in the writings of Mr Jurieu] Mr Jurieu having complained in 1690 that Mr de Bauval had taken all occasions of introducing him in his Journal without the least necessity; Mr de Bauval answered that this was an unjust complaint. "I have done it, says he (a), only "once in treating of Toleration; and I have spared "him on a thousand occasions. He would long ago "have thundered against me, as he has now done, "if I had not shunned him even when he came "naturally in my way. Have I pointed out all the "blunders which Mr de Meaux, and Father de "Sainte Marthe have observed in his writings? His "not the one of them observed with great marks "of astonishment that Mr Jurieu not being able to "fix the time of the fall of Antichrist * has given this "reason for it; that in matter of prophecies God doth "not look so near? And has not the other reproached "him with a certain chapter † in the Accomplish- "ment of Prophecies, which has the following fine "title, Some things put in order which the Holy "Ghost has put out of order, with regard to the "visions? Have not others made violent out-cries "against his Religion of the Jesuits? After having "recited there a Motet wherein the King of France "is introduced saying to King James II, who had "then abandoned his three kingdoms, Sit thou on "my right hand until I make thy enemies thy foot- "stool, Mr Jurieu adds waggishly, See what an ad- "mirable metamorphosis here is! The King is be- "come God the Father, the King of England is be- "come God the Son; that this Trinity may be com- "plete I think we should make a Holy Ghost of "the Prince of Wales. He had jested pretty much "in the same manner when he found the following "resemblance between JESUS CHRIST and the Prince "of Wales, that as Joseph the Virgin's husband, "was not the true father of the first JESUS, "James II, the Queen's husband, might possibly like- "wise not be father of the second."

(a) Réponse à l'Avis de Mr Jurieu, pag. 26, 27.

* Accomplishment of Prophecies, tom. iii. cap. 12. 1st Edit.

† Ibid. tom. iii. cap. 2. 1st Edit.

These expressions so unedifying and so disrespectful to Religion, were complained of to the Synods. The Author of the Answer to Mr Jurieu's second Apology (b) makes a particular article of them under the title of Profane expressions of Mr Jurieu, and gives many examples of them, and among others the following: The Apostles did not imitate these Jugglers, who immediately upon their arrival any where endeavour to perform some master-piece of their art, &c. The Disciples of Aristotle must needs be much surprised to find that the Eternal Word has turned Cartesian in his old days (c). Mr Saurin in his Examination of the Theology of Mr Jurieu, observes that we may add to this raillery the following, which very much resembles it: Can God perform this miracle? possibly they believe he cannot, and that now he is too old to do such great and extraordinary works (d).

(b) Reponse à un Libelle intitulé, Seconde Apologie du Mr Jurieu.

(c) Réponse à un Libelle, &c. pag. 19. & suiv.

(d) Examen de la Theologie de Mr Jurieu, tom. i. pag. 332.

Digitized by Google

1691. he nevertheleſs maintained that he had convicted him of being an accomplice in the Advice to the Refugees, and of being the principal actor in the comedy of the Paris edition (1). Mr de Bauval publiſhed an Anſwer to Mr Jurieu's Apology (2) wherein he refuted his calumnies, and ſhowed how ridiculouſly he had boaſted that he was the pillar of the Church, and the champion of Orthodoxy. He called upon him once more to name his arbiters to decide the difference between them with all rigour: but he called upon him in vain. At laſt, ſeeing that he would make him no reparation, nor come to any explanation, he preſented a declaration to the Conſiſtory of Rotterdam, by which he proteſted that he looked upon Mr Jurieu to be a calumniator and a wicked man (3).

(1) Ibid. pag. 26. col. 2.

(2) Reponſe à l'Apologie de Mr Jurieu.

(3) See Conſiderations upon two Sermons of Mr Jurieu, &c. pag. 36.

Mr Bayle publiſhed an anſwer to Mr Jurieu's laſt pieces under this title: The Chimera of the Cabal of Rotterdam, demonſtrated by the pretended Convictions which the Sieur Jurieu has publiſhed againſt Mr Bayle (4). This Anſwer is written under the name of a friend of Mr Bayle, and contains three parts: I. The Chimera of the Cabal of Rotterdam, demonſtrated by the New Convictions publiſhed by a friend of Mr Jurieu; or a Letter from a Friend of Mr Bayle to Mr * * *. It is a Refutation of the Factum or Caſe publiſhed by Mr Jurieu, in ſupport of his Cabal of the Project of peace. It concludes with the Letter which Mr Minutoli wrote to Mr Jurieu upon that ſubject. II. General Remarks upon Mr Jurieu's Factum againſt Mr Bayle concerning the Advice to the Refugees. He doth not here endeavour to refute particularly every thing that Mr Jurieu advances in his Laſt Conviction; but lays down a liſt of things to be proved by him, without which that piece could be of no force. III. A long Preface, wherein the way to judge on which ſide the victory lies in this proceſs, is laid down. Mr Bayle gives here an account of all the particulars of Mr Jurieu's accuſation, and of what had been done in conſequence of it. This accuſation is reduced to theſe three heads: the Cabal of Geneva; the Advice to the Refugees; and the correſpondence with the Court of France. Mr Bayle joined to it ſome Reflexions on Mr Jurieu's Apology, wherein he diſcovers ſeveral falſhoods which he had advanced, and amongſt others this; that Mr Bayle owed his eſtabliſhment at Rotterdam to him. Mr Bayle ſhows that it was quite the contrary. In the Advice to the Reader, he ſays that this book was compoſed a good while before, except the laſt ſheets of the Preface; and that it would have appeared a few days after Mr Jurieu's pretended Convictions, if the Printers had been as diligent as the Author. He gives an account of the contents of each part, and makes ſome reflexions upon Mr Jurieu's ſhameful conduct in this whole affair. Mr Bayle treats Mr Jurieu in this work with leſs ſeverity than he had done in the Cabale Chimerique, as he himſelf obſerves.

(4) Chimere de la Cabale de Rotterdam, demontrée par les pretendues Convictions que le Sieur Jurieu a publiées contre Mr Bayle. A Amſterdam chez Henry Desbordes, dans le Kalverſtraet. 1691.

(5) Entretiens ſur le grand ſcandale cauſé par un Livre intitulé, la Cabale Chimerique. A Cologne chez Pierre Marteau. 1691.

Mr Bayle much about the ſame time publiſhed, Dialogues concerning the great ſcandal which had been given by a book intitled the Cabale Chimerique (5). This piece contains five Dialogues. PHILODEMUS and AGATHO, the two dialogiſts, conſider Mr Jurieu as an eminent ſervant of God who has wore out his ſtrength in the ſervice of the Church; and are very much diſpleaſed that Mr Bayle has treated him ſo harſhly. They acquaint each other with the converſations they have had with ſome Cabaliſts; and repeat the arguments theſe Cabaliſts had advanced for Mr Bayle, and the manner in which they had anſwered them. It is a perpetual Irony, under which Mr Jurieu's picture is drawn, and Mr Bayle is vindicated on many different ſubjects.

The mortifications which Mr Jurieu had received at the laſt Synod (6), the neceſſity he found himſelf reduced to of preparing his defences for the next Synod, againſt the complaints which came from all quarters againſt his doctrine, and his grief to ſee that, notwithſtanding all his oppoſition, Mr Baſnage his brother-in-law was received Miniſter in ordinary to the Church of Rotterdam; all this together troubled him ſo much that he was ſeized with his uſual vapours in the month of September 1691 (7). He found himſelf unable to write, and there paſſed three or four months without any thing appearing in his diſpute with Mr Bayle. But at laſt his champion, the Author of the General Remarks, thought fit to publiſh a piece againſt the Chimera of the Cabal, &c. intituled, The Philoſopher degraded. Which may ſerve for a third part to the General Remarks upon Mr Bayle's Cabale Chimerique (8). Mr Bayle's friends adviſed him to neglect this piece: however he thought it neceſſary to anſwer it. He gives the following reaſons to Mr Sylveſtre for doing ſo. "If you had read, ſays he (9), the Libel which you deſire me not to anſwer, "I am ſure you would approve of my having made that Author ſenſible of his "inſufferable abuſes; and I have done this to nip in the bud a theuſand little "libels of this ſort which he prepares to give us, wherein he would not regard "the groſſeſt falſhoods, if I did not threaten to take him ſharply to taſk. And "indeed I thought I ſhould diſoblige Mr Sartre, if I ſhould oppoſe nothing but "ſilence to his teſtimony." To clear up this fact, I muſt obſerve that Mr Jurieu in his Short Review publiſhed a Letter from London, wherein it was poſitively affirmed that a perſon who had ſtudied with Mr Bayle at Puylaurens (that is to ſay Mr Sartre a Refugee and Miniſter at London) had ſaid that Mr Bayle was ſeduced to ſuch a degree that he turned Papiſt, and even went to ſtay at Toulouſe with the Jeſuits about three years: that this perſon having wrote to him concerning his

(6) The Synod of Naerden, held in September 1691, ordered Mr Jurieu to produce his defences againſt an accuſation of Hereſy and Impiety, brought againſt him by five Churches.

(7) Letter to Mr Conſtant of 8*th of October* 1691, p. 408.

(8) Le Philoſophe degradé. Pour ſervir de troiſiéme ſuite aux Remarques Gerales ſur la Cabale Chimerique de Mr Bayle.

(9) Letter of the 17*th of December*, 1691, pag. 421, 422.

Digitized by Google

change of Religion, had received a ſharp anſwer from him which beſpoke him a true Papiſt and already filled with the ſpirit of Jeſuitiſm: that he ſaw him afterwards at Geneva after he had left Toulouſe, and that Mr Bayle calling to mind this Letter and the Anſwer to it, made an apology for it, and begged of him not to mention that matter. Mr Bayle denied all theſe circumſtances in his Chimere demontrée, except his change of Religion. He denied that he had ever lived with the Jeſuits; and called upon the Author to name the perſon who pretended that Mr Bayle had wrote a ſharp Anſwer to him, and afterwards had made apologies for it at Geneva: Upon this Mr Jurieu's emiſſary, author of the Letter, engaged Mr Sartre to write a Letter to Mr Bayle, wherein he owned that he had ſaid, that Mr Bayle "being at Puy-"laurens, had abſented himſelf; and that it was known ſome days after that he "had thrown himſelf into the Jeſuits Convent at Toulouſe; that he had wrote a "Letter to him on that ſubject, ſuch as a young man might be ſuppoſed to write "on ſuch an occaſion; and that he had received a very tart anſwer to it; and that "he had likewiſe ſaid, that about three years after he had ſeen Mr Bayle at Ge-"neva, and that Mr Bayle ſignified to him that he would oblige him, by not "ſpeaking of what had paſſed at Toulouſe, becauſe it might do him hurt in the "deſign he had of making ſome ſtay at Geneva (1)." The Author of the Philoſopher degraded publiſhed an Extract of this Letter; but he ſuppreſſed the paſſage wherein Mr Sartre declared, "that he durſt not affirm, either that Mr Bayle had "received his Letter, or that he had anſwered it, and that ſeveral perſons who ſaw "the Letter which he received in anſwer to his, were of opinion that Mr Bayle "was not the Author of it (2)." However the Author of that Libel produced this Letter as a proof of what had been advanced againſt Mr Bayle, and to convict him of inſincerity. It was this properly that obliged Mr Bayle to anſwer this piece. His anſwer (3) is intituled, An Advice to the little Author of the little Books, with relation to his Philoſopher degraded (4). He there produced many inſtances of the unfairneſs, ſtupidity, and vain repetitions of this Author. He likewiſe diſcovered ſome falſhoods which this pretended Athour to prove from this Letter of Mr Sartre, and acquainted him that he had wrôte to that Miniſter, and waited for his Anſwer; and that Mr Sartre had already aſſured him by a common friend, that he would clear up that matter in a manner which ſhould ſatisfy Mr Bayle.

We have ſeen that Mr Jurieu being preſſed by Mr Bayle to prove the accuſation of Atheiſm, which he had brought againſt him, had promiſed to his Conſiſtory to do it; and that afterwards he drew back, and only offered to furniſh them with ſome Memoirs on that affair; that without waiting for the orders of the Conſtory, he publiſhed his Short Review, which obliged Mr Bayle to publiſh a Declaration, wherein he ſhowed that Mr Jurieu had changed the ſtate of the queſtion; and at the ſame time called upon him to prove this principal article. Mr Jurieu anſwered nothing to theſe repeated challenges, and made no further ſtep before the Conſiſtory that year. But he would needs renew the proceſs as ſoon as the Conſiſtory was changed in the month of January 1692. "At firſt, ſays Mr Bayle (5), "he would not be conſidered as a party, but a little after he himſelf agreed that "he ought to take that character; he excepted againſt whomſoever he pleaſed. "And as I much about the ſame time addreſſed myſelf to the Conſiſtory to de-"mand juſtice againſt the atrocious calumnies he had publiſhed againſt me, all "things looked as if we ſhould ſoon have this affair brought to an iſſue in form; but "the accuſer ſuffered ſeveral weeks to paſs without appearing, alledging from ſunday "to ſunday (6) divers excuſes. At length he acquainted the Conſiſtory that he would "be ready againſt a certain day. I was informed of it, and did not fail to appear, "but inſtead of entering upon the affair, my accuſer deſired that we ſhould be "referred to the Synod. He ſupported this by all the reaſons he could think of. "On the contrary I did all that was in my power to get the Conſiſtory to re-"tain the judgment of the cauſe in the firſt inſtance before themſelves, and pro-"poſed that they ſhould deſire ſome of the Miniſters of the neighbouring Walloon "churches, and ſome of the Miniſters of the Dutch churches at Rotterdam to join "with the Conſiſtory, and that they ſhould even deſire the Magiſtrates to ap-"point ſome of their body to aſſiſt at the diſcuſſion of this cauſe: but all my "demands were rejected by the plurality of voices; my adverſary obtained that "the affair ſhould be referred to the Synod. He went in perſon to the Synod "which met a few days after at Ziric-zée, but did not make the leaſt mention of "our proceſs, nay would not ſo much as agree that the proceedings of the Con-"ſiſtory ſhould be laid before the Synod, although the Conſiſtory had commiſſioned "their deputies to do ſo."

About this time Mr Bayle, diſguiſed under the name of Carus Larebonius, publiſhed a treatiſe in Latin againſt Mr Jurieu's book intituled, The true Syſtem of the Church: and as there is no title to which the ear is more accuſtomed than that of the Janua Linguarum reſerata of Comenius (7). He intitled it, Janua Cœlorum reſerata cunctis Religionibus; à celebri admodum viro Domino Petro Jurieu, Rotterodami verbi divini Paſtore & Theologiæ Profeſſore. Porta patens eſto. Nulli claudatur boneſto. Amſtelodami excudebat Petrus Chayer. M DC XCII, in 4to (8). This work had

(1) Letter from Mr Sartre to Mr Bayle of the 6th of October 1691, p. 399, 400.

(2) Advice to the little Author of the little books, &c. p. 29, 30.

(3) It is dated the 11th of December 1691.

(4) Avis au petit Auteur des petits Livrets ſur ſon Philoſophe dégradé, 1692.

(5) Addition to the Thoughts concerning Comets, &c. p. 18, 19.

(6) This is the ordinary day wherein the Conſiſtories meet.

(7) See in the Hiſt. and Crit. Dict. the Article COMENIUS.

(8) The Gate of Heaven opened to all Religions, by the famous Mr Peter Jurieu Miniſter of the Goſpel and Profeſſor of Divinity at Rotterdam.

1691. had been compoſed long before this time; for he makes mention of it in his Cabale Chimerique as a piece that was then ready to be ſent to the preſs. "I know a "perſon, ſays he (1), who has a Latin Diſſertation ready for the preſs, intituled, "Janua Cælorum reſerata, wherein he ſhows that the Syſtem of the Church of this "Author is a ſponge to the Reformation, takes away all manner of neceſſity for "it, and ſaves good people in all Religions." This was to attack Mr Jurieu in the moſt ſenſible part: this book was looked upon as the beſt he had written; and Mr Nicole thought it the only one of all his writings which deſerved an anſwer (2). Mr Bayle ſhows Mr Jurieu, that as great an enemy as he was to Toleration, he had here opened the gates of heaven, not only to all the ſects of Chriſtians, but even to Jews, Mahometans, and Pagans. This book being wrote in a language underſtood by all the Learned, mortified Mr Jurieu extreamly. He durſt not venture to anſwer it. But at laſt having publiſhed a piece in defence of his doctrine, intituled, A ſecond Apology for Mr Jurieu: or an Anſwer to an anonymous Libel preſented to the Synods of Leyden, and Naerden under the title of A Letter to the Miniſters and Elders members of the Synod aſſembled at Leyden the 2d of May 1691; he put at the end of it a kind of Advertiſement, wherein he affected to deſpiſe that book; and gave extracts of two Letters, written by perſons who talked very contemptibly of it, but who confeſs at the ſame time that they had not read it. The Authors of the Letter addreſſed to the Synod of Leyden (3), anſwered this Apology of Mr Jurieu in a piece intitled, An Examination of Mr Jurieu's Doctrine which may ſerve for an Anſwer to a Libel intitled Mr Jurieu's ſecond Apology. They do not let this pitiful artifice of Mr Jurieu paſs unobſerved. "There cannot be, ſay they, "a more diverting rodomontade than that of Mr Jurieu concerning the book in- "tituled Janua Cælorum reſerata, wherein people who underſtand thoſe matters very "well, pretend that his Syſtem of the Church is for ever demoliſhed. He anſwers it by two extracts of Letters genuine or ſpurious; the Author of one of which ſays that he "had not read the book, and the other that he had read five or ſix ſections only, "which make but ten or twelve pages. This is a very ſlight way of getting off, and "it is taking people for dupes, to believe that the world will be ſatisfied with the "judgment of this unknown perſon, who poſſibly is Mr Jurieu himſelf. As "a Latin book is now out of his reach, and as he cannot grapple with it, he "makes the judgment of two perſons unknown a pretext for deſpiſing a work which "he is unable to anſwer." Mr Bayle had advertiſed in the beginning of the Janua Cælorum reſerata, that it is wrote in the ſcholaſtic ſtile (4). He likewiſe made uſe of their dogmatical method, which, together with the harſh ſtile, diſguſted a great many people from reading this book, and made it to be ſought after with leſs eagerneſs than his other writings; for otherwiſe one finds there the ſame clearneſs and force of reaſoning.

The Author of the General Remarks, appeared again upon the Stage, by publiſhing Letters concerning the differences between Mr Jurieu and Mr Bayle, wherein the contradictions of the latter are diſcovered, which may ſerve for New Convictions (5). Theſe Letters were five in number, they are dated from Copenhagen; but this did not hinder people from ſoon diſcovering the Author. He repeats in a new ſhape what had been wrote againſt Mr Bayle, and diſguiſeth or ſuppreſſeth what Mr Bayle had anſwered. Mr Bayle publiſhed on this occaſion a piece intituled, New advice to the little Author of the little books. Concerning his Letters on the differences between Mr Jurieu and Bayle (6). He ſets forth the reaſons why he doth not anſwer this Author, and only gives a ſpecimen of the falſe reaſoning, malice, and fraudulent diſguiſes with which his pamphlets are filled. He inſerted Mr Sartre's Anſwer to his Letter, wherein he owned that by ſaying that after Mr Bayle's departure from Puylaurens it was known that he was gone to throw himſelf into the Jeſuits Convent at Toulouſe; he only meant that this was ſaid at Puylaurens, and believed by every body; and with regard to other little circumſtances of the time that there might be from Mr Bayle's going to Toulouſe to the time when he ſaw him at Geneva, and concerning the particular place where they firſt converſed together, that it was about three years or leſs . . . . . though his memory had failed him in this, it was a thing of very little conſequence either to the one or the other: and with relation to the Anſwer which was wrote to him from Toulouſe he ſaid, that ſince Mr Bayle did not agree that he had wrote it, he would not pretend to affirm it, being in no ways certain of the matter; that is to ſay, he retracted all that he had advanced, and of which Mr Jurieu and his party had made a matter of triumph. To this piece Mr Bayle joined a *Letter of Mr * * * to the Author of the Advice to the little Author of the little books.* The Author of this Letter praiſeth Mr Bayle for having at his deſire ſuppreſſed the reflexions which he was going to ſend to the preſs, concerning the violent aſſault which Mr Jurieu had made upon the Author of the Janua Cælorum reſerata, in his ſecond Apology. He ſhows how mortifying that piece was to Mr Jurieu, and makes an ironical Apology for that Miniſter's anger. He likewiſe anſwers to the reproach which had been made to the Author upon account of his Latin. "It is very likely, ſays he (7), that "Mr Larebonius did not expect ſuch a reproach, not only becauſe he declared both "at the beginning and end of his book, that he had on purpoſe made choice of "the ſcholaſtic ſtile, but becauſe he did not think his adverſary was able to judge

(1) Page 163, 164 of the 1*ſt Edit. and pag.* 192, 193, of the 2*d Edit.*

(2) See the Article COMENIUS, Rem [M].

(3) Mr Baſnage de Beauval, Mr de Bauval, &c.

(4) Non tam ſtilo in Rhetorum ſcholis quam in Peripateticorum Lycæo obtinente.

(5) Lettres ſur les differens de Mr Jurieu & de Mr Bayle. Où l'on découvre les contradictions de ce dernier qui peuvent ſervir de nouvelles Convictions.

(6) Nouvel Avis au petit Auteur des petits Livrets. Concernant ſes Lettres ſur les differens de Mr Jurieu & de Mr Bayle. A Amſterdam, 1692.

(7) Nouvel Avis, &c. p. 65. See alſo the Article COMENIUS, ubi ſupra.

of

Digitized by Google

" of Latin ſtile, otherwiſe than a blind man judges of colours. It is as un- 1691.
" reaſonable to find fault with an Author for making uſe of the ſtile of the " ſchools in a work of pure reaſoning, as it would be to deſire that one ſhould write
" in elegant French a confutation of a parcel of ſorry Factums in which the Authors
" had only laboured to invent lies and contradictions. How long is it ſince
" people began to pique themſelves in point of ſtile in writings of proceſſes, in Caſes
" and Inventories. Have the accuſer's libels been refuted with that care that is " taken in the compoſition of a work, which one would make worthy to " be read upon its own account? It was known that few people would take the " trouble to read refutations of this ſort; the reading of them was not neceſſary
" to unprejudiced perſons, and the demonſtrations of Euclid would not be " able to convince thoſe who are prejudiced; this was known, and therefore care
" was taken not to loſe time about ſtile." This friend ſays afterwards that if Mr Bayle would have taken his advice, he would have abandoned the Author of little Books to his bad genius, without daigning to give him a word of anſwer, and that he is ſorry to ſee that he continues ſtill to confute him. You may as much as you pleaſe, (ſays he), convict him of having reaſoned wretchedly, of having quoted falſely, and of repeating the ſame things without the leaſt regard to what has been anſwered to them; all this will not prevent his writing on, and rekindling the flame in proportion as he obſerves that time begins to extinguiſh it. He adds, that this Author had advanced many things which Mr Bayle ought to have expoſed, ſince he had put himſelf on the foot of anſwering him once more.

(1) This Advertiſement is dated the 2d of June 1692.

Mr Bayle prefixed an Advertiſement to this piece (1), wherein he owns that the greateſt part of his friends had adviſed him not to anſwer the Author of the Remarks on the Cabale Chimerique; and that if he had followed their opinion he would not ſeem to know that there were ſuch things in nature as theſe little libels, and that they had been ſorry that he had refuted ſome places of them: however as this is a matter where ſomething may be ſaid on both ſides, he had not altogether followed their advice, but had choſen a middle way, which was to publiſh ſomething to acquaint the public why he doth not more particularly anſwer the writings of this maker of Remarks. " The principal reaſons, ſays he, why I do " not engage myſelf in anſwers of this ſort are, I. That this Author doth nothing
" but repeat the ſame things without taking any notice of the anſwers, which have " been made to them. II. That the public is already too much fatigued with
" ſo many trifling diſcuſſions. III. That this Author falſifies ſo groſsly the paſſages
" which he endeavours to refute, that I have reaſon to think that the diſintereſted
" readers themſelves will diſcover the frauds of this kind: but as I ſhould be to " blame if I expected to be believed in this matter upon my own word, it was
" neceſſary to give ſome proofs of this; and for this purpoſe care has been taken
" both in the firſt and ſecond Advice to the little Author, to ſhow by ſome ex" amples what he is capable of in matter of falſe quotation and falſe reaſoning.
" Beſides it has been neceſſary to deſire all the readers who would judge in this " matter, to confront the writings of both parties throughout: this is the reaſon
" why, on the one hand, I anſwer ſomething to them, and on the other why I " do not anſwer all." Mr Bayle obſerved that this ſmall piece would have appeared ſooner, if he had not known that Mr Jurieu had a large Factum in the preſs which was much cried up by his emiſſaries after their uſual manner, and that to prevent his being obliged to go twice to the preſs, he had reſolved to delay the publiſhing of this ſecond Advice 'till he had by reading this piece ſeen whether it deſerved an anſwer, in which caſe he would have refuted it at the ſame time with this other piece. But as he was now informed that it would not appear for ſome time, he did not think it proper to delay the publiſhing of this New Advice any longer; and promiſed here beforehand that if it ſhould be worth while he would very ſoon demoliſh all the new machines of his accuſer.

(2) Factum ſelon les formes, ou diſpoſition des preuves contre l'Auteur de l'Avis aux Refugiez, ſelon les regles du Barreau: qui font voir que ſur de telles preuves, dans les crimes capitaux, on condamne un criminel accuſé.

This Factum appeared ſome time after under this title: A Factum in form, or the proofs againſt the Author of the Advice to the Refugees diſpoſed according to the forms of the Bar: which ſhow that upon ſuch proofs criminals are condemned for capital crimes (2). Mr Jurieu ſays in the advertiſement, that a diſtemper which had kept him very weak for eight months had hindered him from continuing to write againſt the Author of the Advice to the Refugees; but that others had ſupplied his place. He adds that this Factum was compoſed by an Advocate at Paris, excepting ſome chapters which he had added to it. There is nothing new in this piece but the form. Mr Jurieu's pretended preſumptions are here repeated, though a hundred times refuted; they are ranged under different heads, and accompanied with a commentary drawn from Mr Jurieu's Libels and thoſe of his adherents. Mr Bayle wiſely deſpiſed this piece, and would not ſo much as read it, as he acquaints Mr Minutoli. " Mr Jurieu,
" (ſays he (3), has anew publiſhed a great Factum, or Caſe, againſt me, which no
" body adviſeth me to read, (and I have taken this advice), wherein he only re" peats his old chicanries without ſeeming at all to know that they have been fully
" confuted. He has, as I am informed, brought over again the ſtory of the Cabal

(3) Letter of the 28th of Auguſt 1692, p. 445.

Digitized by Google

1691. " of Geneva and the Project of Peace, without having the leaſt regard to what he " has wrote to you in acknowledgement of your innocence, nor to the confeſſion " of his moſt zealous partizans, that he was in the wrong to attack me on that " head, and that he ought to be ſatisfied with the other accuſati n." Mr Jurieu's adherents wiſhed that he had confined himſelf only to the accuſation which related to the Advice to the Refugees: but they judged ſo only after they ſaw the event, and becauſe they found that all that he had advanced concerning the Cabal of Geneva, and the Project of a Peace was evidently falſe and chimerical.

This was the laſt piece which appeared on this ſubject. Mr Bayle's prudent ſilence put an end to this diſpute. He had refuted all Mr Jurieu's pretended preſumptions; and the writings of his partizans conſiſted only, as we have already obſerved, of heavy and tireſome repetitions, ridiculous reaſonings, and falſe interpretations of what he had written.

In the mean while people did not agree about the true Author of the Advice to the Refugees. It was aſcribed to Mr Peliſſon as ſoon as it appeared in France. Dr Wellwood, an eminent Phyſician at London, who publiſhed a weekly Paper called the Obſervator, but without ſetting his name to it, ſpeaks of it as Mr Peliſſon's in his Obſervator of the twenty ſecond of Auguſt 1690, ſix months before Mr Jurieu thought of aſcribing it to Mr Bayle. For it was not before the month of January 1691, that he began to ſay that he believed Mr Bayle was the Author of it, and the book which he publiſhed concerning it did not come out 'till near the end of April (1). " There comes very opportunely to my hand, (ſays Dr Wellwood (2), " a book that makes of late a great noiſe in the world, called Avis aux Refugiez, " Advice to the Refugees; written by a learned pen in France, deſignedly to throw " duſt on the carriage, and actions of the Proteſtants of Europe in general, with " relation to the late Revolution in England . . . . . I both know the Author, " and can aſſure the reader, that it was written at command of the late King James " and the French King, ſignified to the Author by the Archbiſhop of Paris." Dr Wellwood's Obſervator having been tranſlated into French, and printed in Holland under the title of A Hiſtory of the Times (3). Mr Jurieu declaimed violently againſt this paſſage (4). He ſaid that it was inſerted there to ſerve a turn, and contrived in the ſame manner as the forged edition, the forged licence, and the extract of the Letter from Paris in the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned. " We were not much puzzled, " (adds he), to gueſs whence it came: it comes from the ſame perſon in England (5) " who is the only man there who denies that Mr Bayle is the Author of the Advice; " and who ſays every where that the true Author will diſcover himſelf at Paris. And " in the mean time he has thruſt this into a Journal in favour of his friends on " this ſide of the water, and at their deſire; nay it is not improbable, that this " has only been foiſted into the French tranſlation, for there is no ſort of falſi- " hood of which thoſe Gentlemen are not capable." And after having treated Dr Wellwood in the moſt abuſive manner, he makes a ridiculous Apology to him (6). He repeats it likewiſe in the Advertiſement before his Caſe in form. " I am obliged to inform the public, (ſays he), that the harſh expreſſions which " are in the Laſt Conviction againſt the Author of the Hiſtory of the Times, ought " to be cancelled. At that time I did not at all know the Author of it. " I have been informed ſince that he is a very honeſt, and very learned " man."

(1) Cabale Chimerique, p. 217, of the 2d Edition.

(2) Mercurius Reformatus, or the New Obſervator. Vol. iii, Numb. 7.

(3) Hiſtoire du Tems.

(4) Laſt Conviction &c. p. 34, col. 2.

(5) Mr de la Baſtide.

(6) P. 36. col. 1.

(7) An Appendix to Mercurius Reformatus, p. 13.

Dr Wellwood in 1692, publiſhed an Apology for his Obſervator, under the title of an Appendix, wherein he juſtifies ſome paſſages of that work, and among others that which relates to the Advice to the Refugees. " This book, (ſays he (7), " had ſcarce appeared in France, and was not yet ſeen in England, when from " a worthy and noble perſon in France, ſince in chains for his Religion, I had an " account both of the book itſelf, of its being concerted with the French Court, " and that every body in Paris looked upon Monſieur Peliſſon as the Author of " it. In return of a letter of mine in anſwer to his, my friend told me, that ac- " cording to my deſire, he had employed one who was intimately acquainted with Monſieur " Peliſſon, to inquire of him the truth of that common report: and that Monſieur Peliſſon " was pleaſed to allow the perſon that ſpoke to him, to think him the author, though he would " not poſitively confeſs he was ſo; adding, that it was not fit for him, or for the King's ſervice, " to acknowledge that book publickly to be his, though he were the author of it. In ſhort, this " worthy Gentleman gave me both his own and the univerſally received opinion at " Paris, that Monſieur Peliſſon was the author of the Avis aux Refugiez, and backed " it with a great many probable arguments, needleſs here to be mentioned. The " book itſelf appearing here in London a little after, I took occaſion to mention " what my friend told me about it, and withal, upon his information ſaid, I believed " I knew the author, meaning Monſieur Peliſſon, with whom I was a little acquainted " at Paris nine years ago.

(8) See his Eloge in the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans, December 1704, Art. 14, p. 548.

Mr de la Baſtide (8) was likewiſe of opinion, that Mr Peliſſon was the author of the Advice to the Refugees. He ſaid ſo openly, and by that means drew upon himſelf the hatred of Mr Jurieu (9). Mr de la Baſtide's teſtimony was of great weight. He had lived in a cloſe friendſhip with Mr Peliſſon five and twenty years; he had been together

(9) See Revue de l'Hiſtoire de Mr Bayle, in the collection printed at Amſterdam in 1716, intitled, Hiſtoire de Mr Bayle, & de ſes Ouvrages, &c. p. 182 and the following.

Digitized by Google

ther with him a Clerk to Mr Fouquet; and after Mr Peliſſon was confined in the Baſtille, he kept a regular intercourſe of Letters with him, on matters of controverſy: for even at that time Mr Peliſſon inclined towards the Catholic Religion. This cloſe friendſhip had made him acquainted with Mr Peliſſon's turn of wit and favourite expreſſions. Mr de la Baſtide was well acquainted with his works of controverſy, and had even anſwered ſome of them. When the Advice to the Refugees appeared he found ſo great a conformity betwixt it and Mr Peliſſon's writings, that he made no doubt of his being the Author of it. However he did not think it proper to write any thing on this ſubject during Mr Peliſſon's life: but after his death he compoſed a Diſſertation (1) to prove this conformity. "I propoſed, (ſays he), to "put in writing ſeveral general and particular obſervations, which all taken to- "gether evidently ſhow, that the Author of the Reflexions on the differences about "Religion, is likewiſe the Author of the Advice to the Refugees, and that this laſt "piece is properly only a ſupplement, and, as it were, an appendix to the other." In his general obſervations he takes notice that Mr Peliſſon was very well acquainted with the Belles Lettres, and eccleſiaſtic and prophane Hiſtory: that he had ſtudied the Scripture, the Fathers, and the writers of Controverſy: that he was very well ſkilled in the Roman Law, and loved to make uſe of authorities from it on ſubjects of all ſorts, having frequented the Bar for ſome years: that being appointed to write the Hiſtory of the King, he collected every thing that was publiſhed, and made Memoirs and Obſervations on every thing that paſſed relating to affairs of State or of Religion: and in fine, that in his books of controverſy, we find apoſtrophes and frequent exhortations to the Proteſtants, elevations and prayers to God, and panegyrics on the French King: characters which all taken together agree to the Author of the Advice, and appear to agree to him alone. But to make this conformity more evident, in his particular obſervations he brings a great number of paſſages of the Advice, and compares them with parallel paſſages in the Reflexions, and particularly in the third volume of the Reflexions publiſhed in 1689, under the title of the Chimera's of Mr Jurieu. He ſhows for example, that near the end of that piece Mr Peliſſon inſults the Refugees upon account of Mr Jurieu's Prophecies, which aſſured them of a re-eſtabliſhment in France in the year 1689; and that the Advice begins with this very thing. In the Reflexions Mr Peliſſon had ſaid, that Mr Jurieu pours out his gall and venom upon our times, againſt the moſt illuſtrious defenders and protectors of the truth in our days, without reſpect to rank or merit: and in the Advice, there is nothing, (ſays the Author), ſo auguſt or ſo eminent which you have thought worthy of your reſpect; crowned heads, which upon all accounts ought to be ſecured from the inſults of your diffamatory libels, have been the objects of the moſt enormous and furious calumny in many of your books. In the one and the other, the Roman Law is frequently quoted; the authority of the greater number is inſiſted upon; the Prophecies of Drabitius, and the little Prophets of Dauphiné are ridiculed; the preſent ſtate of affairs in Europe is conſidered; and a great deal of pains is taken to proclaim the glory of Lewis XIV &c. With regard to the Preface, we may well imagine that Mr de la Baſtide doth not aſcribe it to the Author of the book itſelf. It did not appear natural to him that an Author ſhould not only anſwer himſelf, but likewiſe ſatirize his own work, and give a frightful idea of it.

1691.

(1) This Diſſertation was publiſhed in the collection intitled Hiſtoire de Mr Bayle &c. p. 297 and the following. Mr de la Baſtide gave me a copy of it which is more exact than that which is printed.

Mr de la Baſtide concludes his Diſſertation, by anſwering a difficulty which naturally offered itſelf. "If one ſhould now aſk, (ſays he), why the Author did not "name himſelf in this piece as he had done in others, that he might not loſe, "amongſt thoſe of his own communion at leaſt, the merit of the wit, learning, "and zeal which he ſeems to diſplay in it? beſides ſecret reaſons which we do "not always diſcover, it appears pretty plain that it was not his intention to con- "ceal himſelf entirely or for ever, but only to ſtand behind the curtain for ſome "time, in order to know the opinion of the public concerning it. For we find that "towards the end he ſays to the perſon to whom it is addreſſed, that he may get "it printed, and only recommends it to him to be cautious in uſing his name; as if "he would ſay, that it was not proper to name him openly, but he might allow "people to gueſs at it. Being born a Proteſtant, and being nearly related and "allied to ſeveral of the Refugees, it was natural that he ſhould have ſome reluctance "to appear avowedly the Author of a piece which rendered them odious to the ſu- "preme powers, and ſeemed to ſhut the door againſt their re-eſtabliſhment. But in "all likelihood his principal reaſon was, that having in ſeveral places of this piece "dropped ſome pretty free ſentiments, and ſome pretty ſtrong expreſſions againſt the "manner in which thoſe of our communion had been perſecuted, and this, whether "by his not ſufficiently reflecting upon the conſequences of them, or that he might "by this means the more inſinuate himſelf into the favour of the Proteſtants, the "Archbiſhop of Paris, and the Jeſuits, made a complaint againſt him on that "account, as was commonly reported. And it actually happened that an edition "of the Advice, begun by Gabriel Martin, Printer or Bookſeller to Mr Peliſſon, "was ſtopped and interrupted, though it had been undertaken by his order: and "we have likewiſe ſeen that ſome time before his death, he got a new edition of

"it

Digitized by Google

1691. "it printed under his own direction; but not before he had ſuppreſſed or altered "the paſſages which had offended thoſe of his communion, and had added a ſhort "preface inſtead of that which was formerly prefixed to it."

It is true however that a ſhort while after the Advice was publiſhed, Mr Peliſſon wrote to Holland to be informed who was the Author of it, and endeavoured to oblige him to diſcover himſelf by the hopes of a conſiderable reward (1). This would ſuppoſe that the Author of it was unknown to him, and conſequently that it was not he who wrote the Advice. But Mr de la Baſtide might have anſwered, that Mr Peliſſon did this only to conceal himſelf the better, and beſides that this ſuppoſition is deſtroyed by the licence of the Paris edition, wherein it is ſet forth that the Author of the Advice had obtained a licence dated the 20th of October 1690, but be affecting to remain unknown to the public, had made a difficulty of allowing the ſaid privilege to be regiſtered in his name in the regiſters of the ſociety of Bookſellers of Paris: which proves that the Author's name was known at the Chancellor's Office, and ſo it was not neceſſary to write to Holland to be informed of it.

(1) Examen de l'Avis aux Refugiez, p. 24, 25. Chimere demontrée, pref. p. cxxi.

Mr Bayle tells us in one of his Letters written in the month of October 1690, that the voice of the public at that time gave the Advice to the Refugees to Mr de Larroque (2). Mr de Larroque left France in the month of February 1686, and went to Holland (3), and the year following he publiſhed Critical Remarks upon the firſt volume of Varillas's Hiſtory of Hereſy, which were well received. I have already mentioned his anſwer to Mr Brueys. After having made ſome ſtay in England and in Germany, he returned to Holland, and from thence into France in the month of June 1690 (4), that is, about a month or ſix weeks after the Advice to the Refugees was publiſhed, and embraced the Romiſh Religion. When I began to write Mr Bayle's Life in 1707, I deſired Mr Baſnage to give me ſome light in this matter, and he wrote to me what follows, concerning the Advice to the Refugees (5). "Since you deſire me to write to you with full confidence about what "concerns Mr Bayle; I do not think you ought to awaken the affair of the Ad- "vice to the Refugees: not that I at all ſuſpect that he was the Author of it. I have "not as yet departed from my firſt conjecture: which is that being intruſted with the "manuſcript, he had got it printed, and added a preface and ſome ſtrokes of his "own to it. Mr Hartſoeker has confirmed me in my conjecture, for he has aſ- "ſured me that while Mr de Larroque was a priſoner as Paris, he uſed frequently "to cite this piece as a production of his own: but as this is an odious ſubject, it "will be better to let it drop, than to ſet his enemies a clamouring again." He ſays likewiſe in a Memoir, which he ſent me ſome time after. "I always believed "(6), and I ſtill believe, that Mr Bayle was Author of the Preface, and that "the manuſcript was entruſted with him by Mr de Larroque, who changed his "Religion a ſhort while after, and who always claimed this work as his own. "This, if I am not miſtaken, is all the myſtery which made Mr Bayle's defences "ſo weak: he durſt not give his opinion of the book and of the Author who had "always been his friend." Mr Baſnage obſerves that Mr Larroque always claimed this work as his own; and in fact Mr Larroque always uſed to ſay, in ſpeaking of certain things, I have ſaid, or I have proved this in my Advice to the Refugees; and his friends have often told it as a literary anecdote, that he was the Author of this book. This is a fact atteſted by perſons very worthy of credit.

(2) Letter to Mr Conſtant of the 24th of October 1690, p. 339.

(3) Letter to Mr Rou of the 17th of February 1686, p. 251.

(4) Letter to Mr Conſtant, ubi ſupra, p. 339, 340

(5) Letter of the 19th of Auguſt 1707.

(6) A Memoir MSS. of Mr Baſnage.

Here are two opinions, very oppoſite to one another, which notwithſtanding have each of them their followers. However there is ſtill a third, which ſeems to have moſt prevailed: many perſons aſcribe this work to Mr Bayle, though for very different reaſons. Some ground this belief upon Mr Jurieu's teſtimony, but what weight can we lay upon that? beſides he had ſo interwoven his pretended Cabal of Geneva with the affair of the Advice to the Refugees, that he could not be allowed afterwards to ſeparate them. The falſity of the one of theſe accuſations being well proved, neceſſarily deſtroyed the other. Notwithſtanding when he was convinced that the Cabal was only a Chimera, he nevertheleſs perſiſted in his accuſation concerning the Advice to the Refugees. But finding afterwards that this ſeparation was not favourable to him, he was not aſhamed to have again recourſe to the accuſation of the Cabal.

Others aſcribe that piece to Mr Bayle, becauſe they imagine they diſcover his ſtile in it. But this is preciſely what ought to make people believe that he is not the Author of it: for beſides that proofs drawn from the conformity of ſtile are very uncertain, the ſtile of it appears to be very different from that of Mr Bayle's other works: it is more pure, more flowing, and more regular. Mr de Lar ey, who had well examined the Advice to the Refugees, and who was much inclined to aſcribe it to Mr Bayle, has not dared to decide. For my part, (ſays he (7), I am not either ſufficiently perſuaded myſelf to undertake to perſuade others, nor bold enough to decide in a problematical matter.

(7) In the Preface to his anſwer to the Advice to the Refugees.

Laſtly, this piece is aſcribed to Mr Bayle upon the teſtimony of Adrian Moetiens, who printed it. It is ſaid that Moetjens told ſeveral perſons that Mr Bayle was the Author of it. For my part, having heard that Mr Louis, who corrected the proofs, confirmed Moetjens's teſtimony, I deſired him to give me ſome information in this matter. He did not think fit to write me any anſwer: but he 1691.

Digitized by Google

ſaid by word of mouth, to a perſon equally diſtinguiſhed by his merit and by his works, who did me the favour to deliver my letter to him (1), "That he knew
"Mr Bayle's hand writing before he corrected that work, and that ſince that time
"he has had ſeveral opportunities of being perfectly acquainted with it: that the "whole manuſcript from the one end to the other was wrote with Mr Bayle's own "hand, and that he preſerved a piece of it, which he cut from one of the ſheets
"before he returned it to Moetjens." This is all I have been able to learn of this matter. But though upon this one ſhould no longer doubt that Mr Bayle is the Author of that piece; yet it would ſtill be unjuſt to accuſe him of the pernicious deſigns and criminal views, which Mr Jurieu attributes to him. The circum-ſtances in which Mr Jurieu revived that book aggravated his accuſations. The perſecution had forced the Refugees to abandon their eſtates and the ſweets of their native country, and to retire into foreign parts: their wounds were ſtill ſore. In this condition we are impatient of reproof, and are provoked by raillery. We take every thing in bad part; we do not conſider the intention of the perſon who ſpeaks, and we make groundleſs applications of things. And yet it is the intention which ought to guide our judgments. It is by this that we diſtinguiſh an innocent raillery from a bitter reproach, and a wholeſome advice from a violent invective. Now it is not poſſible to imagine that Mr Bayle had an intention to blacken the whole body of the Refugees, or deſigned to make them odious to Princes, and to lay an invincible obſtacle in the way of their return. This were to bely his own character, conduct, and all his other books, wherein he has ſo well defended the Reformed and ſhewed himſelf ſo compaſſionate to their misfortunes. Beſides, the ſtrongeſt cenſures in the Advice related only to a very ſmall part of the Refugees, a handful of them who retired into Holland. They were the only perſons who wrote any thing. The Refugees in Switzerland, Germany, and England, had printed nothing (2).
Mr Bayle was not ignorant of this, and therefore could not have them in view, no more than thoſe in Holland who did not write, and who even blamed the conduct of ſome of their brethren.

So that though Mr Bayle were the Author of the Advice to the Refugees, all that one could ſay concerning the motives that might have induced him to write this book, would only be, That he was vexed to ſee ſome people feed the minds of a great many of the Refugees with chimeras and apocalyptic viſions, which rendered them the jeſt of all Europe: That having an extream averſion to ſatire and calumny, he was full of indignation to ſee ſome Refugees write Libels againſt perſons worthy of regard, and even againſt crowned heads; that they had taken a cruel revenge on his brother upon account of the Criticiſm on Mr Maimbourg, and that for a much ſtronger reaſon there was ground to apprehend that they would revenge themſelves for theſe ſatirical writings, upon the Reformed who remained in France: That he knew that in that kingdom, Kings look upon themſelves as abſolute, and that no body there is allowed to ſay the contrary; and therefore he was willing to intimate that the writings of the Refugees againſt this abſolute power, ſerved only to render them odious and to hinder their return: That having been educated in the doctrine of the independent and abſolute power of Princes, a doctrine which was taught in the Reformed churches, we ought not to be ſurprized to ſee him attack the contrary opinion with ſo much vigour: That not being well acquainted with the affairs of England, he did not believe that the Eſtabliſhed Religion there was in any danger, and ſo he conſidered the Revolution as a political rather than a neceſſary action:
That he had put on the maſk of a Roman Catholic, to give the more authority to his remonſtrances, to render them more lively, more touching, and more capable of making impreſſion: "That ſince the Author of the Advice, according to Mr Ju-
"rieu's own confeſſion, deſigned to put the Refugees in a condition of returning to "France, which was not the ſpirit of the French Papiſts (3); he muſt needs, as
"Mr Bayle obſerved (4), have had the intereſts of the Proteſtants more at heart
"than thoſe of the Papiſts, ſo that what he ſays in the perſon of a bigotted Papiſt
"muſt not be thought his own opinion, but the language of one who wanted to
"ſupport the character under which he had diſguiſed himſelf: That this Author,
"as Mr Bayle likewiſe ſaid (5), had only collected the old and new objections of "the moſt paſſionate and malicious Catholics, and the reflexions of flatterers upon
"the events of the firſt Campaign, the envenomed reflexions which were thrown "upon the whole body of the Refugees for the faults of a few Authors, &c. and "all this only to give occaſion to a diſavowal of them which might be very uſe-
"ful, and to an anſwer which might confound the malice of the perſecutors of "the Reformed and the vanity of flatterers, and might free the Refugees from
"the ridicule which their prophecies had drawn upon them; a thing which proved
"formerly very fatal to the Proteſtants who had fled out of the Emperor's domi-
"nions (6)." To this we might add that Mr Jurieu who infatuated the Refugees with his prophecies, and who had publiſhed ſeveral pieces which the Author of the Advice called Libels; that Mr Jurieu, I ſay, whom our Author had prin-

(1) Mr de la Chapelle, Miniſter of the Walloon Church at the Hague.

(2) We muſt, ſays Mr Jurieu, juſtify the Refugees who live at London, and thoſe ſcattered all over England; thoſe who live at Berlin, in Brandeburg, Heſſe, Switzerland, all over Germany, and at Geneva; for I do not hear that in all theſe places there appear any of thoſe little books which they call Libels. The province of Holland is the only place where all theſe pieces appear. Examination of the Advice to the Refugees, pag. 67, 68.

(3) Examination of the Advice, pag. 13.

(4) Chimere demontrée, preface, p. cix, cx.

(5) Ibid. pag. cxi. cxii.

(6) See the Article COMENIUS, Rem. [K].

Digitized by Google

1692. cipally in view, had acquired a sort of dominion over the Refugees [Q], so that it was not possible to obtain a disavowal of those writings of which they complained, otherwise than by interesting the whole body. Even this expedient did not succeed: the Synods, who ought to have disowned them, kept silence, no body daring to speak through fear of being violently persecuted by Mr Jurieu. We might likewise add, that most part of the reproaches which Mr Bayle puts in the mouth of a Catholic, had been refuted a thousand times, and that Mr Bayle himself had answered them very successfully in his Letters against Maimbourg: and lastly that Mr Bayle intended

[Q] Mr Jurieu had acquired a sort of dominion over the Refugees.] Here follow some of his exploits. He assumed the character of Inquisitor of the Faith, and attacked several French Ministers, most part of whom were Refugees in Holland. He accused them of Socinianism, and brought them before the Synods. All their crime was that they were men of moderate principles; for Toleration was, in his way of thinking, the greatest of all Heresies. It was upon this account that he cruelly persecuted Mr Huet (a). He likewise accused as Heretics, or favourers of Heretics, Mr de la Conseillere Minister of Hamburg, Mr Jaquelot, Mr Papin, &c. Mr Papin was a nephew of Mr Pajon, and had the same sentiments with relation to Grace (b). He defended them against Mr Jurieu in a book intituled Essays of Theology, &c. Mr Jurieu resolved to ruin him; and for a pretext chose a little book of Mr Papin, intitled, Faith reduced to its genuine principles, and confined to its just bounds (c). This work was wrote with the same intention with that of Mr Dhuisseau (d), that is to say, to unite Christians by bringing them back to the fundamental principles of Religion, and to inspire them with a spirit of Toleration in controverted points. It was published without Mr Papin's knowledge. The Manuscript was found in the closet of a gentleman distinguished by his rank and merit (e), and put into Mr Bayle's hands, who added two pages in the beginning, and published it in 1687, with the aforesaid title (f). Mr Jurieu got it condemned by a Synod, and persecuted Mr Papin so violently, that he forced him to return to France, and throw himself into the arms of the Bishop of Meaux. Mr Bayle mentions this in one of his Letters to Mr Minutoli. "You know, says he (g), that Papin has changed "his Religion: this he would not have done, if "a confutation of a book of our false prophet "which he wrote, had not exposed him to the vio-"lent persecution of that Fanatic, who not being "able to deny the contradictions and sophisms of "which Papin had convicted him, revenged himself "by writing every where that they should take "particular care not to employ Mr Papin he being "a dangerous Heretic, &c. Papin in vain sought "bread in Germany, Holland, and England; he "there found every gate shut by the secret practices "of his enemy, so that he was forced by hunger "to return to France, where he put the Letters "which Dr Burnet had wrote to him, in approba-"tion of a little book intitled Faith reduced to its "due bounds, into the hands of the Bishop of "Meaux."

When Mr Jurieu found it impossible for him to accuse people of Heresy whom he hated, he endeavoured to make them suspected by the Government, and represented them as ill affected persons. He suspected Mr le Gendre, Minister of Rotterdam, to be author of a piece against the little Prophets of Dauphiné, and upon this account he accused him before his Consistory, of entertaining correspondence with France, and of being a secret enemy to the State: but Mr le Gendre demanded satisfaction of him, and declared that he looked upon him to be a calumniator and a wicked man. This Declaration was put in writing, signed, and delivered to the Consistory: Mr Jurieu shifted as much as possible, but Mr le Gendre pressed hard upon him without giving any quarter, and he was forced shamefully to yield. His accusation was torn to pieces in his presence, and by his own consent (h). His hatred extended even to the relations and friends of those he hated, tho' they themselves had never had any quarrel with him. He used to accuse them to the Ministers of State as traitors and spies of France. Without regard to Confidence, which is the bond of civil society, he published in his Libels whatever was said or wrote to him; and when he came to fall out with his friends, he used to employ against them whatever they had said to him in confidence (i).

Here follow some more of Mr Jurieu's features. They are drawn by Mr de Bauval.

"Mr Jurieu, says he (k), has brought trouble and "division every where. His hand has been against "all men, and the hands of all men have been a-"gainst him. Discord entered along with him into "the Academy of Sedan. He divided it into parties "and cabals. They who foretold what we had to "expect from him by the first step he took after "he was settled in the ministry at Rotterdam, have "not been mistaken. He preached upon these "words: How beautiful are the feet of those who "bring tidings of peace: and upon coming down "from the pulpit, he brought a process against his "colleague for precedence; he had however the mor-"tification to be worsted in this vain struggle "for preference. For some years past Mr Jurieu "has put all in combustion among us. His vain "and ambitious mind has carried war every where. "Bella gerimus nullos habitura triumphos. He has "divided the French nation, which the common "misfortunes of their flight ought to have united; "he endeavours, as it were, to canton his party. The "animosities which he sows and nourisheth with so "much care, are so many barriers to keep them "asunder. He has assumed the character of Inqui-"sitor-General in order to acquire glory at the ex-"pence of his brethrens reputation. He acts as "Universal Bishop. He has armed the Churches "against one another, and has debased and vilified "the gravity and dignity of ecclesiastic assemblies, "by the quarrels of which he has been the author. "On the one hand, we have seen members of "the Synods of Amsterdam and Leyden making "complaints to the public, that these two Ju-"dicatories have at Mr Jurieu's instigation been "guilty of injustice, and, what is worse, of falsi-"hood, from which they have not as yet been "able to clear themselves: and on the other hand, "Mr Jurieu dissatisfied with the Synod of Ziric-zee "has addressed a pamphlet to the States full of com-"plaints, wherein he accuseth that Synod of violence, "oppression, of all sorts of excess, and of endeavour-"ing to violate the fundamental laws of the liberty "both of Church and State. Nothing renders ec-"clesiastical assemblies more contemptible than such "mutual complaints, which lessen and dishonour them. "Mr Jurieu is the original cause of all those disor-"ders. He accuseth, he lays about him on both "hands: he declares that the advice of his friends, "who desire him to leave the world at rest, are the "counsels of flesh and blood (l). He never takes "up the pen but to write diffamatory Libels, and "he no sooner has laid down his arms than he takes "them up again upon the first occasion. He is al-"ways the aggressor and pursuer. He imploys fire "and sword to root out all who do not submit to "his despotic empire; he calls fraud and calumny "to his assistance; and would willingly go under "the standard of Religion to extirpate, after the "manner of the Interdict, all who refuse to bend "the knee before him. Surely Mr Jurieu has made "many Refugees feel a new kind of persecution "possibly more sensible than that which drove them "out of their native Country. He has robbed them "of that repose which they sought after in their "exile: and to compleat their misfortunes and mi-"series, they have found among their own coun-"trymen an unjust Oppressor, who under other "names makes them feel the iniquity of the furious "zeal against which they had sought a sanctuary."

(a) See above, Rem. [G].

(b) See above Rem. [C].

(c) La Foi reduite à ses veritables principes, & renfermée, dans ses justes bornes.

(d) See the Rem. [C].

(e) Letter from Mr Papin to Mr Jurieu, inserted in his Pastoral Letter to the faithful at Paris, Orleans, Blois, &c. p. 6. col. 1.

(f) Preface of Mr Papin's book, intitled: les deux voies opposées en matiere de Religion &c. pag. xi, xii. of the Liege edit. 1713.

(g) Letter of the 11*th of November* 1692, pag. 474, 475.

(h) Bauval, Considerations sur deux sermons de Mr Jurieu, &c. pag. 30, 31, and 37.

(i) Ibid. pag. 53, 54.

(k) Ibid. pag. 7.

(l) Apologie du Sieur Jurieu, pag. 25. col. 2.

Digitized by Google

tended to answer the Advice (1), and that they ought to have engaged him to set about it, instead of diverting him from it by outrageous accusations. 1692.

This methinks is the judgment which an equitable and disinterested person might make concerning this piece, and concerning the design of the Author, supposing him to be Mr Bayle. However Mr Bayle always protested to those who had the greatest share in his confidence, that he was not the writer of it; so that it must be struck out of the catalogue of his works; at least this is sufficient to prevent its being alledged in proof against him, and since he constantly denied it, equity will not allow that it should be quoted in evidence to blacken his memory. These are the very words of Mr de Bauval (2).

The accusations brought against Mr Bayle had interrupted his literary labours. Study requires a perfect tranquillity. Mr de Bauval had in his Journal for the month of Novem. 1690 (3), advertised a work intitled: A Project of a Critical Dictionary, which will contain a the correction of a great number of errors to be found both in Dictionaries, and in other " books (4). This, (said Mr de Bauval) is the title of a book which a learned man designs " to undertake. As he desires to have the advice and opinion of the learned concern- " ing his design, he is about to print a Preface in which he will give a distinct ac- " count of his Project." This Author was Mr Bayle. He proposed to publish this Project a few months after, and the impression of it was begun in the month of December following. The Articles belonging to the three first letters were almost all prepared, and while these were printing Mr Bayle was to finish the others, together with the Preface. But Mr Jurieu's violent attacks obliged him to lay aside this work after the first sheet of it was printed, so that he laid down that Project very soon after he had formed it. More than a year passed before he took it up again, and at last when Mr Leers pressed him to set about it, he was obliged to make use of the first subjects which chance presented to him, till he had collected the books which were necessary to his design (5).

This work appeared in May 1692 (6), under this title: A Project and Fragment of a Critical Dictionary (7). Mr Bayle gives an idea of this Project in a long Preface, addressed to Mr du Rondel, Professor of Belles Lettres at Maestricht. He says that he designed to compose a Dictionary, which should contain all the falshoods and errors of fact which are found in other Dictionaries, and a Supplement to their omissions under every Article. He promised likewise to make sallies upon all sorts of Authors as occasion should offer. After this he shows how useful such a compilation would be. " Were it not to be wish- " ed, (says he), that there was extant a Critical Dictionary, to which one might have " recourse in order to be sure whether what we find in other Dictionaries, and in all " sorts of other books, be true? It would be a touchstone of other books, and you " know a gentleman who is a little affected in his stile who would not fail to " name such a work, the Office of Insurance of the Republic of Letters ..... You " see very well that if, for example, I should be able to collect under the word " SENECA, all the falshoods that have been advanced concerning this famous Philo- " sopher, one needed only consult that article to know what is to be believed " of what one reads concerning him in any book: for if it is a falshood, it would " be taken notice of in this collection, and when one did not find a thing set " down here as a falshood, one might depend upon it as true: this instance is suf- " ficient to show that such a design well executed, would produce a very useful " work, and very convenient for readers of all sorts." Mr Bayle added that he knew well enough what ought to be done in order to perform such an undertaking perfectly, but that he knew still better that he was not able to execute it: so that he would confine himself only to give a sketch of it, which should only contain a volume in Folio; leaving the continuation of it to persons who have the requisite abilities, in case this Project, rectified in every thing that shall be necessary, should be thought worthy of the labours of the learned. But as he had foreseen that even this sketch would be extensive enough to engage him in a very painful task, and that besides he was very doubtful how he should execute his project, he had resolved to venture a few fragments of this work abroad, that he might before-hand know the taste of the public, and be determined thereby either to pursue or abandon his design. These Fragments contained the Articles of ACHILLES, ANTHONY ARNAULD, JANE OF ARRAGON, CORNELIUS BALBUS, of the Author concealed under the name of STEPHANUS JUNIUS BRUTUS, of CASSIUS in general, and in particular of SPURIUS CASSIUS VISCELLINUS, of L. CASSIUS LONGINUS, of C. CASSIUS LONGINUS, of T. CASSIUS SEVERUS, which gives him an occasion of making a digression concerning diffamatory libels. He placed there likewise the articles of L. CASSIUS HEMINA, of C. CASSIUS LONGINUS, of CATIUS, of COMENIUS, of ERASMUS, of the Marêchal de GUEBRIANT, of HIPPOMANES, of the DAY, of Madam DES LOGES, of the three sisters ANNE, MARGARET, and JANE SEYMOUR, of MARY TOUCHET, and of ZEUXIS. All these Articles were personal except those of Hippomanes and of the Day, which Mr Bayle called real, because they neither related to persons nor places, and consequently did not belong to Historical or Geographical Dictionaries (8).

(1) See the Chimere demontrée, p. 307, and the Answer to Mr Jurieu's Apology, by Mr de Bauval, p. 8.

(2) Eloge de Mr Bayle.

(3) P. 136.

(4) Projet d'un Dictionaire Critique, où l'on verra la Correction d'une infinité de fautes repandues soit dans les Dictionaires, soit dans d'autres Livres.

(5) See the Bookseller's Advertisement on the reverse of the title of the Projet & Fragmens &c.

(6) The Bookseller's Advertisement is dated May 5, 1692.

(7) Projet & Fragmens d'un Dictionaire Critique. A Rotterdam chez Reinier Leers 1692. In 8°.

(8) In the beginning of the Article HIPPOMANES, p. 297.

The

Digitized by Google

1693. The plan of this new Dictionary was not reliſhed, though ſuch a work might have been very uſeful. Mr Bayle laid it aſide, but in the mean while he formed a deſign of another Dictionary which he forwarded with ſo much diligence, that the impreſſion of it was begun in the month of September 1693; notwithſtanding he had been frequently interrupted in it by the trouble Mr Jurieu gave him. He acquaints Mr Conſtant with this, in order to excuſe himſelf for not having wrote to him ſooner. " I have been, (ſays he (1)), very much embaraſſed theſe three or four " months paſt by the machinations of my accuſer, who having intereſted the Dutch " Conſiſtory in his quarrel with me, has perſuaded them to examine my book con- " cerning Comets, and to lay it before the Burgomaſters as a book filled with " dangerous and impious propoſitions, and that therefore it is not conſiſtent with " their duty to give a ſalary to a Profeſſor who entertains ſuch opinions. This " is the turn he has given it, after being diſappointed by the nullity and raſh- " neſs of his other accuſations. I was obliged to make ſome viſits, to undeceive " people concerning the pretended hereſies in this book; and here one cannot " do in a fortnight what might be done elſewhere in an afternoon."

(1) Letter of the 29th of June 1693, pag. 510.

Mr Bayle attributed the diſgrace, which he fell under a ſhort while after, to the ſollicitations of theſe Miniſters: ſee in what manner he ſpeaks of it to Mr Minutoli on the fifth of November. " Our Magiſtrates, (ſays he (2)), have depri- " ved me of my place of Profeſſor, together with the ſalary of five hundred " gilders which was annexed to it, they have even revoked the liberty of teach- " ing privately which they had granted me. This reſolution was taken by the plu- " rality of voices on the thirtieth of October laſt; and laſt monday (3) the Burgo- " maſters notified it to me in their chamber. All people of good ſenſe here " cry out againſt this injuſtice, and ſeveral of our Counſellors of the " longeſt ſtanding in their Offices, and of the greateſt abilities, oppoſed this " reſolution with all their might, but they were outvoted. If they had not laſt " year turned out ſeven or eight Burgomaſters or Counſellors of this City, in " order to put others in their places, this would not have happened to me. It " gives me comfort to ſee the general diſcontent of the City on this account, " the irregularity of their proceedings in this affair, and the unjuſt ground " of it. This ground is my Various Thoughts concerning Comets: the Dutch Mi- " niſters have made the Burgomaſters believe that it contains dangerous matters, " and oppoſite to Chriſtianity. This I offered to refute; and I maintain, and will " prove it as clear as noon-day, that my book concerning Comets advances nothing " contrary either to our Confeſſion of Faith or to the Scripture. But however " this be, they have condemned my doctrine without allowing me a hearing, and " without aſking me if I agreed to the juſtneſs of the extracts, and to the ſenſe " which they give to my words; neither did the Magiſtrates give me any oppor- " tunity of anſwering my accuſers. There was nothing ſaid either concerning the Ad- " vice to the Refugees; or the Project of a Peace, which I intended to publiſh. This " would have been more odious."

(2) Letter of the 5th of November 1693, pag. 537, 538.

(3) The 2d of November.

In another Letter to him, he ſays (4); " You have very probably heard it re- " ported in your country, that I loſt my place upon account of the Advice to the " Refugees. For the emiſſaries of you know who, being mortified to the laſt degree, " at the contempt which our Superiors ſhowed for his pretended information concern- " ing the Cabal of Geneva, and for his repeated calumnious Factums relating to the ſaid " Advice, have ſpread it abroad every where that it was the accuſation about " that book which produced this effect. This is a manifeſt abſurdity, for they " would not have ſatisfied themſelves with taking away my liberty of teaching, " if they had founded their proceedings againſt me upon an accuſation of writing " a libel againſt the State. You may affirm it confidently that the only foun- " dation of it was the complaint of the Dutch Conſiſtory againſt my book on " Comets; and moſt people are of opinion that they never read the book, and " ſome of them were againſt depriving me of my penſion. It was therefore only " upon account of my Treatiſe concerning Comets. The Dutch Conſiſtory being " almoſt wholly compoſed of perſons who neither underſtand French, nor any thing " elſe, except a few common places of Divinity; who beſides were ill affected to- " wards me from my firſt arrival in this Country, becauſe my Patron who found- " ed the Illuſtrious School, (the late Mr Paets, a great Republican) was very much " hated by them: this Conſiſtory, I ſay, only conſulted a Dutch tranſlation of " ſome paſſages out of my book, made by my accuſer, with the greateſt inſincerity " in the world."

(4) Letter to Mr Minutoli of March 1694. pag. 542.

Mr Bayle gave the ſame account, but with ſome further circumſtances, to his couſin Mr de Naudis, on the twenty eighth of December. As this Letter has not been printed, the reader no doubt will be glad to find it here.

" You muſt know that upon the thirtieth of October laſt my appointment of " five hundred livres, and the liberty of reading public and private Lectures, " were taken from me by the Council of this City, which is compoſed of four " and twenty perſons, whom they in Dutch call the Vroedſchap. The Burgomaſters " who are four in number, and choſen out of theſe twenty four, acquainted me with

Digitized by Google

" with this reſolution, without telling me why they now took from me what they 1693.
" granted me in 1681. I have been told that ſeveral members of the Council op-
" poſed this act of injuſtice very vigorouſly, but the plurality of voices carried
" it. Let us diſtinguiſh the real cauſe of this from the pretext.

" The pretext with which they coloured their conduct, when they were ſpoke
" to in private about it, and which was even alledged by ſome on giving their " votes the day on which I was deprived of my place, is, that the book con" cerning Comets, which I publiſhed here in 1682, contains pernicious doctrines,
" and ſuch as no Chriſtian Magiſtrate ſhould ſuffer to be inſtilled into youth. To " give more authority to this pretence, the authors of this plot had by a long
" train of intrigues obtained that certain head-ſtrong Dutch Miniſters, great ene" mies to ſtrangers and to the new Philoſophy, and of a violent and ſeditious
" temper, ſhould take the book concerning Comets into their examination, and " determine that it contains unſound doctrine. All this was done in a very my-" ſterious manner, and without giving me the leaſt notice of it, and without " having the leaſt regard to my public declarations, which I have repeated a " hundred times to the Burgomaſters, Miniſters &c. in converſation, that I was " ready to ſhow that my Comets contained nothing contrary either to ſound reaſon, or
" the Confeſſion of Faith of the Reformed Churches. A great number of people
" of merit here are highly offended at this violent procedure, which is not prac-
" tiſed even in the Church of Rome: for there they hear an Author accuſed of " Heterodoxy, and admit him to explain or to retract his errors. This, dear
" Couſin, ought to leſſen your regret for not having left France. You will be a " hundred times the better Proteſtant, if you only ſee our Religion where it is
" under perſecution: you would be offended if you ſaw it where it is eſtabliſhed,
" but let us come to the cauſe of my diſgrace.

" You muſt know that a Republican Government has this peculiar to it,
" that every City, nay every little Town is compoſed of two or more parties.
" In Holland there are two every where: the one is very weak, but compoſed of " people of ſubſtance and honour; the other governs haughtily, and almoſt
" conſtantly makes a bad uſe of its good fortune. I had upon coming into
" this Country all my patrons, benefactors, and thoſe who received me with ci" vility, among the weaker party, which however was not then ſo weak as " now: I have always cultivated their friendſhip, and have never conformed my-
" ſelf to the maxims of Courtiers. I have not endeavoured to make my court " to thoſe of the other party, which was growing more powerful every day, this ap" pearing to me baſe and mercenary. So that a ſudden ſtorm having above a " year ago happened in this City, which overwhelmed part of our Magiſtrates, and " others of this all-powerful party being put in their places, the balance could no " longer be preſerved, and to ſhow their power againſt thoſe who do not fall " down before them, and who keep up their correſpondence with their old friends,
" they have turned me out of my place. And as doctrines pretended to be dan" gerous to the youth was the pretext, they were obliged to take from me the " liberty of teaching in private as well as in public. By this means they have ſtopped
" up both the ſources of my ſubſiſtance. I never received a farthing of my pa-
" trimony, never had a humour of laying up money, and never was in condition
" to ſave any. I depended upon my ſalary, which I believed I ſhould have en" joyed for life: but now I ſee there is nothing certain in this world. You may " judge that I had great reaſon to be uneaſy about the time to come, in a Coun" try where living is very expenſive. But hitherto by the goodneſs of God I " have not felt any uneaſineſs, but have been perfectly reſigned to the will of " heaven.

" You would be ſurprized if I ſhould finiſh my Letter without mentioning that " French Miniſter who has publiſhed ſo many libels and calumnies againſt me.
" I can aſſure you that all theſe calumnies have fallen to the ground, and there " was nothing taken notice of but my book concerning Comets, printed near twelve " years ago. Beſides they were Dutch Miniſters who carried on this purſuit a-" gainſt me in a clandeſtine manner. They have owed me a grudge for a long " time, becauſe they hated the friends and patrons which I had upon my firſt ar" rival here, and being infatuated with Ariſtotle, whom yet they do not underſtand,
" they could not hear Des Cartes named without ſwelling with rage."

Mr Bayle was ignorant of the true cauſe of his diſgrace: his Judges did not think it proper to inform him of it. He never ſuſpected that it could proceed from any circumſtance relating to the ſituation of public affairs, however that was the occaſion of it. France victorious every where, began to be weary of the war. The efforts which ſhe had made to gain this ſuperiority over her enemies, had drained her both of men and money. Peace would have been advantageous to her, and ſhe took all poſſible ſteps to obtain it. In the year 1692 ſhe had found means to propoſe it to the Emperor, the King of Spain, and the Duke of Savoy, by the Pope and ſome neutral Princes; but they did not give the leaſt ear to her propoſals. Seeing herſelf refuſed on that ſide, ſhe wanted to try what ſhe could do

Digitized by Google

1693. in the United Provinces, and employed Mr Amelot, her Embaſſador in Switzerland, to make her intentions known to ſeveral conſiderable perſons. She promiſed the States a ſtrong barrier to cover their country, a full and entire liberty of commerce, and all the other advantages they could deſire. Mr Halewyn, Burgomaſter of Dort, ſeduced by theſe great offers, entered into a ſort of negotiation with Mr Amelot, without the knowledge of the States. King William was informed of this, and Mr Halewyn was ſeized, together with his brother who was believed to be his accomplice. Mr Bayle mentions this in one of his Letters to Mr Minutoli. "No "body knew certainly, ſays he (1), what was the crime of theſe gentlemen until "their ſentence was publiſhed; for during the proceſs, every thing was managed "with great ſecrecy. They have diſcovered that Mr Halewyn the Counſellor "was entirely innocent; but his brother, the Burgomaſter of Dort, has been found "guilty of holding correſpondence with Mr Amelot, the French Embaſſador in "Switzerland, in order to negotiate a peace in this country. He confeſſed this, "and pretended that it was the duty of every lover of his country to endeavour to "put an end to ſo deſtructive a war; that he was not the only man who had given "ear to the propoſitions of France; and that he had communicated all that he "knew of this matter to a perſon to whom others had made the ſame propoſitions. "However he has been condemned to perpetual impriſonment, and confiſcation of "his eſtate. They have not printed with his ſentence all the anſwers and juſtifications, which had been inſerted in the minutes of it; and people are generally of "opinion that he had no intention of betraying his country, and that he was as "well affected to the Republic as thoſe who are againſt a Peace; the difference "between them being only, that the one believes that the continuation of the war "is advantageous, and the others that it is hurtful. But, unhappily for him, correſpondence with the enemy, and meddling in a treaty of peace without a particular commiſſion from the Sovereign Powers, is treaſon; and this makes diſintereſted people ſay that the puniſhment inflicted upon him is too gentle. You "cannot imagine, adds Mr Bayle, the hopes which our prophet conceived from the "impriſonment of theſe gentlemen. He hoped that all his pretended Cabal of Geneva would be diſcovered, and that you and Mr Goudet, and the Syndics whom "he aimed at, that Meſſieurs Baſnage and I ſhould be involved in their depoſitions: and he already boaſted that he was the firſt, who had blown up the "mine of that wicked plot, ſaid he, of the project of peace, which was contriving in Switzerland. But all his hopes, as uſual, where chimerical, and it appeared that "we had thought of nothing leſs than of Mr Amelot and Meſſieurs Halewyn."

(1) Letter of the 14th of September, 1693. p. 521, 522.

Mr Bayle's innocence in this matter did not hinder his feeling the effects of theſe ſecret negotiations: they were the cauſe of his diſgrace. All Mr Jurieu's intrigues among the Magiſtrates were fruitleſs. It is true he perſuaded the Dutch Miniſters to act in his favour againſt Mr Bayle; but their ſollicitations came to nothing. The Regency of Rotterdam had been changed in 1692, by order of King William, who turned out ſeven Magiſtrates who were Mr Bayle's protectors. However they who ſucceeded them had at firſt no bad intentions againſt him: they declared that they would do juſtice, and promiſed to hear his defences, if there ſhould be occaſion for it. But the ſecret practices of France, made King William call to mind the Project of Peace of which Mr Jurieu had made ſo much noiſe; and as the peace of Nimeguen had been brought about by ſpreading abroad ſuch pieces at Amſterdam and elſewhere, he thought they had a mind to make uſe of the ſame methods at Rotterdam. That great Prince, not having time to examine this ridiculous Project, was alarmed at the thoughts of a Peace, and imagined that there was, as Mr Jurieu pretended, a cabal to aſſiſt in bringing it about, of which Mr Bayle was the chief perſon who had as yet been diſcovered. He commanded the Magiſtrates of Rotterdam to deprive him of his place of Profeſſor and of the ſalary annexed to it, and this order was put in execution without either citing or hearing him, notwithſtanding the promiſes they had given him to the contrary. It is very certain that the Advice to the Refugees had no ſhare in this. King William did not regard the Refugees ſo much, as to trouble himſelf about the complaints they might have againſt that book. But the Project of Peace made him uneaſy, he was afraid of the conſequences of it (2). The Magiſtrates of Rotterdam, though better acquainted with this chimerical project, obeyed the orders of that Prince whoſe creatures they were: however they ſeem to have been aſhamed of their conduct, ſince they concealed the cauſe of it from Mr Bayle. It even appears that they, who were in the ſecret, deceived thoſe who were not, and made them believe that the book concerning Comets was the foundation of their ſentence.

(2) This is taken from a Memoir of Mr Baſnage.

Mr de Bauval bears Mr Bayle witneſs (3) "that he received this diſgrace with "a philoſophical conſtancy, and even with too great indifference; eſpecially without uneaſineſs with regard to his fortune. He did not mind the gathering of "riches, becauſe really he had no occaſion for them. His temperance and ſobriety "ſupplied the place of every thing, ſo that having little he wanted nothing. He was "not however reduced to indigence, very far from it. Neither did he make any ſtep "to procure a new employment. He found himſelf more free and more at his "own

(3) Eloge de Mr Bayle.

Digitized by Google

" own diſpoſal, now he was releaſed from the tireſome labour of teaching and 1693.
" reading of lectures." Mr Bayle gives the ſame account in one of his Letters to Mr Minutoli, who had condoled with him upon his diſgrace. " I received it, ſays
(1) Letter of the 8th of March 1694, p. 541. " he (1), as becomes a Chriſtian Philoſopher, and I continue, I thank God, " to poſſeſs my mind in great tranquillity. The ſweetneſs and repoſe I find in the " ſtudies in which I have engaged myſelf, and which are my delight, will make " me ſtay in this city, if I am allowed to continue in it, at leaſt, 'till the impreſ- " ſion of my Dictionary is finiſhed; for my preſence is abſolutely neceſſary in the " place where it is printed. Moreover, being neither a lover of riches, nor ho- " nours, I ſhall give myſelf no trouble to procure an invitation elſewhere; and " would not accept of it, though it ſhould be made to me. I am not ſo fond of " the diſputes, cabals, and profeſſorial ſnarlings, which reign in all our Academies. " Canam mihi & Muſis." And indeed he was ſo charmed with this quiet and independent ſituation, that he refuſed very advantageous offers, and would not ſo much as make uſe of the liberty which the Regency were willing to allow him of teaching the ſons of ſome of the Counſellors who deſired it earneſtly. Mr Baſnage ſollicited him ſeveral times to give them this ſatisfaction, but in vain. The Count de Guiſcard, who was pleaſed to allow him his friendſhip at Sedan, deſired him to take the charge
(2) See the Article GUISCARD. Rem. [C]. of his ſon's education (2). He offered him a thouſand crowns of appointment, and aſſured him that he had taken his meaſures ſo with the Court, that he ſhould enjoy a full liberty of conſcience: but Mr Bayle excuſed himſelf upon the neceſſity he was under of finiſhing his Dictionary, which was then in the preſs.

Mr Jurieu's conduct ſufficiently ſhows that he thought it was lawful to hate his 1694.
enemies and to perſecute them. But he ſaid that his enemies were the enemies of God; and declared ſolemnly that he thought it his duty to tread under foot all human conſiderations, and to have no regard to the ties or friendſhips of this world when the glory of God was concerned. In this manner he inveſted himſelf with the character of Defender of the Cauſe of God, that he might treat with indignity all thoſe who had the misfortune to fall under his diſpleaſure: and though nothing is more oppoſite to the maxims of the Goſpel than the hatred of our neighbour, he was not aſhamed to defend it in two Sermons: the one on theſe words of David, ſhall not I hate thoſe who hate thee? I hate them with a perfect hatred (3): and the other on
(3) Pſalm cxxxix, v. 21, 22. theſe of Jeſus Chriſt, love your enemies, and bleſs thoſe who curſe you (4). Every body was offended to hear ſuch ſcandalous morality taught from the pulpit. Mr Bayle charged him publickly with it, in a looſe ſheet, intituled: A new hereſy in Morality, concerning the hatred of our neighbour, preached by Mr Jurieu in the Walloon church of Rotterdam on ſunday the 24th of January, and on ſunday the 21ſt of Febrnary 1694. publiſhed for the information of all the Reformed Churches, and particularly of the French Churches gathered together in the different places of their exile (5). In the beginning
(4) St Matt. c. v. v. 44.

(5) Nouvelle Hereſie dans la Morale, touchant la haine du Prochain, prêchée par Mr Jurieu dans l'Egliſe Wallonne de Rotterdam les Dimanches 24 de Janvier, & 21 de Fevrier, 1694. Denoncée à toutes les Egliſes Reformées, & nommément aux Egliſes Françoiſes recueillies dans les différens endroits de leur exil. he ſets forth the doctrine which Mr Jurieu had preached concerning the love of our neighbour. " I ſhall not ſet down particularly, ſays he, all the pernicious " maxims and propoſitions which have been extracted from theſe two laſt Sermons; " but ſhall content myſelf with acquainting you that his doctrine in general may " be reduced to what follows: I. That ſentiments of hatred, indignation, and wrath, " are lawful, good, and praiſe-worthy, againſt the enemies of God; that is to ſay, " as he explained it himſelf, againſt the Socinians, and other Heretics in Holland, " againſt the ſuperſtitious and idolatrous, &c. II. That we ought to ſhow theſe " ſentiments of hatred and indignation by breaking all communication with thoſe " people, by not ſaluting them, and not eating with them, &c. III. That we ought " not only to hate theſe peoples hereſies and bad qualities, but that we ought to " hate their perſons and deteſt them. One of the objections which he made to " himſelf, and which he rejected with an air of the utmoſt diſdain, was, that we " ought to be at enmity with error and vice, but at the ſame time have charity " for the perſon of the ſinner." Mr Bayle next takes notice of the falſe interpretation which this Miniſter had given of the Scripture in order to draw it to his purpoſe, the pernicious conſequences which may follow upon this doctrine, and how neceſſary it was that the Miniſters of the Walloon Churches ſhould ſtigmatize this pernicious morality, the tendency of which muſt be the throwing Holland into confuſion, and putting an end to its commerce. " For what muſt be the conſe- " quence, ſays he, if the Reformed ſhould neither ſalute thoſe of another Religion, " nor eat, nor trade with them? what muſt be the conſequence if they be allowed, " and it be thought praiſe-worthy, to hate the perſons of all Papiſts, of all Arminians, " Mennonites, &c. and if we are obliged by the Goſpel only to wiſh them ſpiri- " tual bleſſings, without being obliged to procure them any temporal good, to draw " them out of a ditch if we ſhould ſee them fall into it, to give them alms if we " ſee them in want? could this country proſper upon ſuch principles? are not " they therefore ſeditious, and tending to overturn the Government, as well as " heretical? Is the perſon, who teaches them, ignorant that this is cenſuring with " an aſtoniſhing boldneſs the ſupreme powers and the laws of the Government under " which we live?

Mr Bayle

Digitized by Google

1694. Mr Bayle made too great haſte to publiſh this charge. He was blamed for doing ſo. Mr Jurieu was actually printing theſe two Sermons, and they were ready to be publiſhed. If he had waited for their publication, they would have furniſhed viſible proofs of his pernicious Morality. As ſoon as he ſaw this charge he ſuppreſſed them, and publiſhed a paper under the title of Reflexions upon a Libel in a looſe ſheet, intitled, A new Hereſy in Morality, &c (1), wherein he denied that he had preached the Doctrine he was accuſed of. Mr de Bauval took occaſion from this to ſet Mr Jurieu's morals in a full light, and to ſhow that this Miniſter's conduct was agreeable to his morality. This piece is intituled, Conſiderations on two Sermons preached by Mr Jurieu, concerning the love of our neighbour: wherein the following curious queſtion is incidentally handled: If we are obliged to hate Mr Jurieu (2). Mr de Bauval ſhowed very well that Mr Jurieu by ſuppreſſing thoſe ſermons furniſhed a proof that he had preached what he was accuſed of. "If the Morality contained "in Mr Jurieu's ſermons, ſays he (3), has nothing ſcandalous in it, it is very "ſurprizing that he has put a ſtop to the impreſſion of them. He might have "contented himſelf with a denial of the Libel, without engaging himſelf further in "the matter; but we know that they were in the preſs. The ſheets of them have "been ſeen, and all of a ſudden he changed his reſolution. The reaſon which "he gives for this interrupting and retarding of them, ſtrengthens the ſuſpicion in- "ſtead of weakening it. We are very well informed (ſays he) that theſe Gentlemen "lie in ambuſh, and that they have prepared their batteries in order to find hereſies "in theſe ſermons, and we do not think it proper at preſent to give them the pleaſure "of an engagement, we will wait a little 'till their fire is ſomewhat ſpent. But if "Mr Jurieu is under no apprehenſions with reſpect to orthodoxy, far from ſuppreſ- "ſing his ſermons upon account of the menaces of theſe gentlemen, he ought to laugh "at their preparations, and make all their batteries uſeleſs. Theſe gentlemen whom "he aims at, are not Knights-errant to go about to fight with phantoms; and after "all, the public, who is their common judge, would have vindicated Mr Jurieu, if "they had cavilled him without reaſon. If they had offended the world by it, "ſo much the worſe for them, it would have been at their own expence and at their "own peril. As for Mr Jurieu, if his morals are ſound, the printing of his ſermons "would have put theſe gentlemen to ſilence, and would have ſtifled all the murmurs "they have raiſed on that ſubject. But it muſt be confeſſed that this ſo ſudden inter- "ruption of a deſign already begun, is ſo unlike Mr Jurieu, that he gives ground "thereby to think that he has ſtopped the courſe of the impreſſion for no other reaſon "but that his doctrine might not be expoſed to the inevitable cenſure of the publick. It "is at leaſt a ſtrong preſumption, that the Information to the public ſtopped him ſhort, "and that what ought to have been a further reaſon for haſtening the publication of his "ſermons, has obliged him to put it off to an uncertain time. This prudence of "waiting 'till theſe gentlemens fire was a little ſpent, ſeems to be only an artifice to "let the remembrance of theſe ſermons, which is at preſent too freſh and recent, "paſs away, that by this means he may afterwards be at liberty with more im- "punity to give them a quite different form. If Mr Jurieu has taught, as he aſ- "ſures us he did, that we ought to forgive our enemies: that we ought not to ſeek "to revenge ourſelves: that we ought to ſuffer injuries patiently, this is without doubt "the doctrine of the Goſpel, he runs no hazard; but his irreſolution ſhows that "he is embarraſſed, and is contriving ſome trick to ſave himſelf: for he promi- "ſeth either the ſermons or a treatiſe. One would ſay he doth not know on which "ſide to turn himſelf. A man has not all this uneaſineſs when he has only preached "the morality of the Goſpel. There has been a clamour raiſed about theſe ſermons. "It is therefore theſe very ſermons which ought to appear or nothing. A treatiſe "on this ſubject will not decide the queſtion. Beſides, if Mr Jurieu has preached "no other doctrine than what we have juſt now mentioned, from whence have thoſe "rumours and the emotion of his audience proceeded? whence comes it that the Re- "formed Miniſters of Rotterdam have all with once voice diſapproved of his mo- "rality? we defy him to refer himſelf to their judgment. Whence comes it that "ſome of his hearers have been ſo ſhocked and offended at him, that they have de- "clared they will no longer hear him. While he went on in the common road, "he found no ſuch commotions? But what is ſtill more, from whence ariſeth the "difficulty which the Commiſſaries of his Conſiſtory make of granting him the "approbation he deſired? How comes it about that they have not as yet found "ſufficient evaſions and ſoftenings to make it ſafe for them to do ſo? This is a "ſtrong preſumption that his morality ſtartled them. Otherwiſe they would have "granted him their approbation without difficulty."

(1) Reflexions ſur un Libelle en feuille volante, intitulé Nouvelle Héréſie dans la Morale, &c.

(2) Conſiderations ſur deux ſermons de Mr Jurieu, touchant l'Amour du prochain: où l'on traite incidemment cette queſtion curieuſe: S'il faut haïr Mr Jurieu.

(3) Conſiderations on two Sermons of Mr Jurieu, &c. pag. 2, and the following.

Mr Saurin agrees with Mr de Bauval in his ſentiments on this ſubject. That Divine declares, that "the moſt favourable thing that we can ſay of theſe two ſer- "mons, is that all the good people who heard them were offended, and grieved "in the higheſt manner; and that Mr Jurieu's friends were much mortified on ac- "count of them (4)." He ſays that Mr de Bauval had very well obſerved that it was a poor ſhift to pretend, as Mr Jurieu did, that he would not publiſh thoſe ſermons, becauſe his informers were lying in ambuſh, and had prepared their batteries

(4) Examination of Mr Jurieu's Theology, &c. Tom. ii. pag. 803.

Digitized by Google

in order to find hereſies in them at any rate. He thinks that pretence very ridiculous. " I admire, (ſays he (1)), Mr Jurieu's bravery who boldly refuſeth to " fight, becauſe he ſees the enemy ready to offer him battle: if we did not know " from whence he is, we would be ready to think him of another Country than " his own. To ſpeak ſeriouſly, Mr Jurieu could not ſay any thing more poor, or " which gives more matter of triumph to his accuſers. Either he was afraid that " thoſe Gentlemen would really find hereſies in his ſermons, or he was not. If " he was afraid of it, he was conſcious of his guilt. If he was not afraid, " he ought to have publiſhed his ſermons immediately, in order to convict his " accuſers of calumny before the whole world." Mr Saurin confirms this argument by ſeveral other reflexions, and afterwards ſpeaks of Mr de Bauval's piece. " They " have publiſhed, (ſays he (2)), ſome Conſiderations on Mr Jurieu's two Sermons, " wherein his Reflections are anſwered, and it is proved that he really preached the " hatred of our neighbour, and that he cannot clear himſelf from it. Mr Jurieu (adds " he) has made a Reply to this piece, in another intitled, An Apology for the Synod, " and for ſeveral good people who have been abuſed in Mr de Bauval's laſt Satire, in- " titled, Conſiderations on two Sermons &c (3). One would think, (adds Mr Saurin), that " while he makes an Apology for others, and for himſelf on ſome other points, " he ought not to have forgot to have apologized for his doctrine concerning the " hatred of our neighbour. It was this which ought principally to have been done " in his laſt piece, and it was this which people of ſenſe, who are concerned for the " glory of God, the purity of our morality, and for Mr Jurieu's reputation, wiſhed " and expected to find there. But their hopes have been deceived. Mr Jurieu is " very large on ſeveral other matters, but ſays not one word on this."

1694.

It may be thought, perhaps, that I have inſiſted too long on this ſubject: but as it is not eaſy to imagine that rage could carry a Miniſter of the Goſpel ſo far as to preach the hatred of our neighbour, I thought it neceſſary to ſhow by good authorities that Mr Jurieu had really preached that deteſtable doctrine, and that Mr Bayle had good reaſon to accuſe him of it (4).

Mr Bayle publiſhed much about the ſame time a Book intituled, An Addition to the various thoughts concerning Comets, or an Anſwer to a libel intitled, A ſhort Review of the Maxims of Morality and Principles of Religion of the Author of the Various Thoughts concerning Comets &c. to ſerve for information to the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, who may pleaſe to take cognizance of it. At Rotterdam by Reinier Leers. M.D.C.XCIV. In 12° (5). He here gives the reaſons why he did not ſooner anſwer this libel. Mr Jurieu had made no anſwer to Mr Bayle's ſummons and defiances concerning his accuſation of Atheiſm, although he had brought it before the Conſiſtory; and had even deſiſted from it. He had afterwards publiſhed his Short Review, wherein he arraigns certain propoſitions out of the Thoughts concerning Comets, and out of the New Letters againſt Maimbourg, as dangerous, heretical &c. He had addreſſed himſelf to the Conſiſtory to get theſe Propoſitions condemned, and when they were ready to examine into that matter, he had deſired that it ſhould be referred to the Synod; and yet notwithſtanding he had ſuffered four Synods to paſs without mentioning it. This libel contained no objections againſt the book concerning Comets, which might not be anſwered by the book itſelf, and Mr Bayle deſigned to publiſh a new edition of it, with additions containing new proofs, new explanations, and new anſwers to all the objections, which could be made to what he had advanced. It was here that he deſigned to have anſwered the Short Review. But being informed in the month of February 1694, that Mr Jurieu had got a Committee to be appointed by his Conſiſtory to decide upon the Extracts which he had produced in that libel; ſo ſudden and unexpected a change made him fear ſome bad deſign, and obliged him to publiſh this anſwer. " Mr Jurieu, (ſays he (6), has a mind to act a part in " his own Conſiſtory, which hitherto he has not been able to act with regard to me. " He will no longer be my Accuſer, he will be my Judge, and manage matters ſo " that we ſhall henceforth hear no more of the accuſation of Atheiſm, but they " will only examine whether there be any erroneous and dangerous Propoſitions in " my writings, which may be puniſhed by Church cenſures. In all appearance " he deſigns they ſhould judge without hearing me, and ſolely upon the credit of " his extracts, and of the conſequences which he has drawn from them. Our diſ- " pute therefore is now to appear before the Eccleſiaſtical tribunals, and that too " upon a new foot. But as it may very poſſibly happen, that every thing ſhall " paſs there without my having the leaſt knowledge of it, it is abſolutely neceſſary " for me to have recourſe in this manner to a public Factum, which may ſerve " for information to the Judges who deſire it, and may take away from thoſe who " do not, all room for pleading ignorance. I will confine myſelf to ſhort ob- " ſervations, not only becauſe I deſire that the long Apology for my Comets, which " will appear in the third Edition, may have the grace of novelty; but likewiſe " becauſe I will not leave to thoſe who do not care to be informed, their com- " mon pretence in ſuch caſes, that the length of the piece diſcouraged them from " ſetting about the reading of it."

(1) Ibid. p. 812.
(2) Ibid. p. 827, 828.
(3) Apologie pour les Synodes & pour pluſieurs honeſtes gens, dechirez dans la derniere Satyre du Sieur de Beauval, intitulée, Conſiderations ſur deux Sermons &c.
(4) In the poſthumous editions of the Critical Dictionary, there is a long digreſſion on this accuſation, in the article ZUERIUS BOXHORNIUS.
(5) Addition aux Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, ou Réponſe, à un Libelle intitulé, Courte Revuë des Maximes de Morales & des Principes de Religion de l'Auteur des Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes &c. Pour ſervir d'Inſtruction aux Juges Eccleſiaſtiques qui en voudront connoitre.
(6) Addition aux Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes &c. p. 25, 26. Nouvel Avis au petit Auteur des petits Livrets, in the preface, and pag. 46 and the following.

Digitized by Google

1694. He ſhowed that Mr Jurieu had miſrepreſented what is ſaid in the Thoughts concerning Comets, and drawn falſe and abſurd conſequences from it. For example. This Miniſter affirms that Mr Bayle in this book pretends that "God never performs prodigies and extraordinary things, in order to be preſages of what is to "come, ſuch as earthquakes, extraordinary meteors, ſigns which are ſeen in the "heavens and upon earth, apparitions, voices, births of monſters, floods; and that "he maintains that all theſe things are brought about by natural and neceſſary "cauſes, and that God doth not at all deſign by things of this ſort to foretel "judgments, which he intends to inflict upon men, nor even to manifeſt his Deity." But this is not at all Mr Bayle's opinion. What he maintains is, that God never miraculouſly produces comets, earthquakes, inundations, monſters &c. with a deſign to threaten Infidels with the judgments which his juſtice is preparing againſt them; for he cannot perſuade himſelf that ſuch a conduct, which appears to him to be proper only to foment the abominable ſuperſtition of idolaters, is conſiſtent with our ideas of the goodneſs, juſtice, and ſincerity of God. He doth not pretend to deny that God ever performs in any part of the world what we call prodigies or preſages; he ſays only that things which appear equally and indifferently among heathen nations and among the children of God, are not miraculous productions, appointed to threaten mankind. His doctrine tends to give us ſuch an idea of God, as affords a lively repreſentation of his wiſdom, goodneſs, and truth. It denies certain preſages indeed; but it is becauſe they would be injurious to theſe divine Perfections.

Mr Bayle likewiſe entered into a detail of Mr Jurieu's extracts, and diſcovered both his inſincerity, and his want of diſcernment and penetration. He refuted his objections concerning the Parallel between Pagan Idolatry and Atheiſm, concerning the morals of Atheiſts &c; and proved what he had advanced in his new Letters againſt Maimbourg, about the Rights of an erring Conſcience. He afterwards lays down the true ſtate of the queſtion betwixt him and his adverſary, and ſhews in what manner Eccleſiaſtical Judges, who ſhall take cognizance of this diſpute, ought to proceed. He ſubjoins a Petition to the Chriſtian Univerſities, wherein he deſires them to decide upon this repreſentation of his principles which he had made to them: and concludes by impeaching twelve propoſitions drawn out of the Short Review, as falſe, raſh, and impious.

This work broke all Mr Jurieu's meaſures, and reduced him to ſilence. This was no eaſy matter: but Mr Bayle had ſet his proofs in ſo evident a light, that it was not poſſible to make a reply. It was however only the work of a few days. "It coſt me ſo little trouble, (ſays he (1), that the three or four days which I "beſtowed upon it, would have been too much, if I had thought fit to make "a larger anſwer, but my reſolution of being ſhort, made it neceſſary to employ "more time. I have deſtroyed that libel ſo as not leave one ſtone upon another. "The public will ſee that my adverſary is ignorant of his own Religion, that he "attacks what he has maintained in his other books, and that he denies the moſt "evident truths: and which is worſt of all, his quotations are ſo unfaithful, that "there is no ground to think that he erred ſincerely."

(1) Addition to the various Thoughts &c, in the Advertiſement.

An Officer, a friend of Mr Bayle, having let him know how much he deſired to ſee a reconciliation betwixt him and Mr Jurieu, Mr Bayle ſhowed him that it was impoſſible. "The nature of this quarrel is ſuch, (ſays he (2), as can admit of no "reconciliation: there can only be what in your profeſſion is called a ceſſation of "all acts of hoſtility. For the queſtion is, whether I have been in a Cabal which did "conſpire both the ruin of Religion and of the Government, or not. He has "accuſed me of this publickly, and I have ſhown him that this Cabal is the moſt "ridiculous chimera, that ever was heard of. He has accuſed me of being the Au"thor of a book called An Advice to the Refugees, wherein the diffamatory libels which "are printed in this Country againſt the King of France, and the dethroning of "King James are condemned; and I have ſhewn that all the proofs which he has "alledged againſt me are impertinent. ..... If he reconcile himſelf to me, "he muſt own himſelf an infamous calumniator; and if I reconcile myſelf to him, "I muſt acknowledge myſelf guilty. This is what renders our reconciliation im"poſſible. For my part, I do not care for any reconciliation. It is ſufficient "for me that the Government takes no notice of his accuſations: for while there "is no proceſs againſt me, it is plain they laugh at his pretended proofs. For "as to the place which they have taken from me, that was upon another ac"count."

(2) MSS. Letter to Mr  of the 29th of November 1694.

(3) See the Letter to Mr Conſtant of the 22d of Auguſt 1695, p. 570.

1695. Mr Bayle continued to beſtow all his time in the impreſſion of his Dictionary. The impreſſion of the firſt volume was finiſhed in the month of Auguſt 1695 (3). The public prepoſſeſſed in Mr Bayle's favour, expected it with impatience, but Mr Bayle on the contrary was very much afraid of the reception it ſhould meet with. "If the public, (ſaid he to Mr le Duchat (4), has conceived any hopes or "good opinion of my Dictionary, (of which I have reaſon to doubt, not knowing "on what it can be founded,) I muſt expect many complaints; they will find "themſelves diſappointed and villainouſly cheated, for I own ingenuouſly to you, "that this work is nothing elſe but a confuſed compilation of paſſages tacked to "one

(4) Letter of the 9th of January 1696, p. 576.

Digitized by Google

" one another, and that nothing can be worſe ſuited to the delicate taſte of this age : 1695.
" but there is no remedy, jacta eſt alea."

However the Bookſellers in foreign Countries, in conſequence of the taſte of the public, demanded ſo many copies, that the number which was printed of the firſt volume was not ſufficient to ſatisfy them ; ſo that Mr Leers was obliged to print a thouſand more copies of the ſecond, and to reprint a like number of the firſt : this made ſome people imagine that there was a ſecond edition of the whole work publiſhed (1). Mr Bayle was not concerned in this re-impreſſion ; and he complained that there were many errors in it (2). He could not correct the proofs of it ; the impreſſion of the ſecond volume took him up ſo entirely that he had not even time to write to his friends. " You would excuſe my ſilence (ſays he to Mr Conſtant (3), if you knew what a load " of buſineſs I have upon my hands, occaſioned by the impreſſion of my Hiſtorical and " Critical Dictionary. The Bookſeller is reſolved at any rate to finiſh it this year ; " ſo that I am obliged to furniſh him conſtantly with new copy, and every day to " correct the proofs, wherein there are a thouſand errors ; for my manuſcript is ſo " full of raſures and references, that neither the Printers nor the Corrector of the " preſs can find their way through ſuch a labyrinth : and another thing that re- " tards me very much is, that not having all the books at hand which I have occaſion " for, I am obliged to wait till they are procured for me, when any body in this " city has them." He complains likewiſe that the frequent returns of his head-ach made him loſe a great deal of time. " I am very glad, ſays he (4) tha your " megrims have left you ; mine would have done me the ſame favour, if it had " been in my power to live without ſtudy, but obſtinate labour nouriſhes them, " and makes them return very frequently. By this means I loſe many days in " every month, which obligeth me afterwards to apply more cloſely to regain the " time I have loſt."

1696.

(1) See the Letters to Mr Conſtant of the 4th of July 1697, p. 654, and to Mr Coſe, July 15 of the ſaid year, pag. 660, 661.

(2) Letter to Mr le D.E.M.S. of the 7th of July 1698, p. 712, and the following.

(3) Letter of the 31ſt of May 1696, p. 588, 589.

(4) Ibid. p. 591.

They had ſo advantageous an opinion of Mr Bayle's Dictionary in England, that a perſon of quality there, no leſs diſtinguiſhed by his genius than by his rank and the great poſts he enjoyed (5), deſired that this work ſhould be dedicated to him. He deſired Mr Baſnage to aſſure Mr Bayle that he would acknowledge it by a preſent of two hundred guineas. Mr Bayle's friends, and particularly Mr Baſnage, preſſed him very much to give this Nobleman that ſatisfaction, but in vain. He ſaid that he had ſo frequently made a jeſt of Dedications, that he would not expoſe himſelf by making one. This however was only a pretence to give a colour to his refuſal. The real ground of the long and obſtinate reſiſtance which he made upon this occaſion, was, that he would not flatter or praiſe any perſon who had any employment in the Court of a Prince of whom he thought he had reaſon to complain, and this Lord was at this time in the miniſtry (6).

(5) The Duke of Shrewſbury, Secretary of State.

(6) MSS. Memoir of Mr Baſnage.

The impreſſion of the ſecond volume was finiſhed on the 24th of October, and the work came out under the following title : An Hiſtorical and Critical Dictionary by Mr Bayle. At Rotterdam by Reinier Leers. M.D.C.XCVII (7). In the beginning of the Preface Mr Bayle acquaints the Reader, that this work is not what he promiſed in the Project publiſhed in 1692. His firſt deſign was, as we have obſerved, to publiſh the errors of Dictionaries, and other books, both great and ſmall. But being informed that a mere collection of errors would diſguſt the readers, and that they deſired ſomething hiſtorical, he was obliged to lay aſide that undertaking. " See in what manner (ſays he) I have changed my plan, in order the better to " hit the taſte of the public. I have divided my compoſition into two parts : one " of which is purely hiſtorical ; a ſuccinct narration of facts ; the other is a large " commentary, a medley of proofs and diſcuſſions, wherein you find a criticiſm " of many errors, and ſometimes a long train of philoſophical reflexions ; in a " word, ſuch a variety as makes me hope, that in one place or other all ſorts of " readers will find ſomething to their taſte." He adds that this change had made the greateſt part of the materials he had prepared uſeleſs to him, and that this was one of the reaſons which had retarded the publication of this book. Another reaſon was, that he had carefully avoided every thing that is to be found in the Dictionaries already publiſhed, or which he foreſaw would be contained in thoſe promiſed by learned men. He had done the ſame with regard to Mr Du Pin's Bibliotheque of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, and to Mr Teiſſier's Additions to the Elogies of learned men, taken from Thuanus's Hiſtory. He would not put the reader under the neceſſity of buying the ſame thing twice : though in the mean time he had thereby deprived himſelf of all the materials which are moſt eaſily collected and digeſted. To theſe reaſons we may add the alteration which he made in the choice of the articles. At firſt he intended to give real as well as perſonal articles. But he was told that the former not being hiſtorical, would not be reliſhed ; which deprived him once more of a great many materials. However, to prevent the loſs of the articles HIPPOMANES and of the DAY, which had appeared in the Project, he placed them at the end of the work under the title of Diſſertations. He aſcribed likewiſe the delay of this work to the badneſs of his health, to the great exactneſs in his citations, to his want of the neceſſary books, and to the difficulties ariſing from 1697.

(7) Dictionaire Hiſtorique & Critique, par Monſieur Bayle. A Rotterdam chez Reinier Leers 1697.

Digitized by Google

1697. from the ſtile, which requires great attention if we would prevent equivocal expreſſions, verſes, and falſe applications of relatives.

He offered all theſe conſiderations, in anſwer to thoſe who might think it ſtrange that he had ſpent above four years in compoſing theſe two volumes. But as others, on the contrary, might be aſtoniſhed that he had been able in that time to compoſe two ſuch large volumes in Folio, and might believe that he had made too much haſte; he obſerves that uninterrupted labour will go a great length in little time, and that he had loſt no time in the recreations which are very common among men of letters: "I remember as well as they (ſays he) the diſtich "of Cato Interpone tuis interdum gaudia curis &c., but I very ſeldom make uſe of "it. Diverſions, games, collations, journies into the country, viſits, and ſuch other "recreations neceſſary to a great many ſtudious men, as they ſay, are not my buſineſs. "I loſe no time in them, nor do I ſpend it in domeſtic cares, making intereſt for "preferments, ſollicitations, or other affairs. I have been happily delivered from "a great many occupations which were not very ſuitable to my humour, and I "have had the greateſt and the moſt charming leiſure that a man of letters could "deſire. By this means an Author makes a great progreſs in a few Years. His "work will increaſe daily under his hand, though he be not careleſs in the com-"poſition of it."

After this he gives his reaſons why he has quoted long paſſages of Greek and Latin Authors, and why inſtead of tranſlating them himſelf, he has frequently made uſe of the verſions of Amiot or Vigenere. He adds, that people of grave and ſevere characters may poſſibly find fault with him for his quotations from Brantome and Montagne, containing actions and reflexions of too gallant a nature; but that perſons of merit, who had the Bookſellers intereſt at heart, had been of opinion, that, in order to raiſe a general demand for this Work, it would be neceſſary that they who do not underſtand Latin, and do not trouble their heads with Philoſophical and Theological diſcuſſions, ſhould find ſome agreeable entertainment in it. He had been told that if he was too averſe from taking that advice, he ought at leaſt to allow others, to furniſh the Bookſeller with ſuch memoirs, and even ſometimes with dogmatical reflexions, which might excite ſome attention. That he had accordingly conſented that the Bookſeller ſhould inſert whatever memoirs ſhould be ſent to him: that with relation to the Philoſophical reflexions which ſometimes had been puſhed ſome length, he did not think it neceſſary to make any apology for them, for as they only tend to convince man that the beſt uſe he can make of his reaſon, is to ſubject his underſtanding to the obedience of Faith; they can't but deſerve the thanks of the Divines.

Next follow ſome remarks upon the liberty he has taken of criticizing the faults of ſome celebrated Authors, or of pointing out their defects. He declares that he has not the leaſt intention to diminiſh the reputation they have juſtly acquired, and that beſides for the moſt part he has only related the obſervations of others, and only copies from Authors already printed. "Of the the two laws of Hiſtory (ſays he) I "have religiouſly obſerved that which commands to ſay nothing that is falſe; as for "the other, which bids us venture to ſay all that is true, I cannot boaſt that I have "always obſerved that; I think it is ſometimes inconſiſtent not only with prudence "but alſo with reaſon." In the mean while he was very far from believing that this work was free from faults. "I do not doubt (ſays he) but beſides my omiſſions, "which are many, I have committed many faults. I ſhall think myſelf obliged "to thoſe who will be ſo kind as to rectify me, and if I had not relied upon "the advice of intelligent and equitable readers, I ſhould have kept this work "many years in my cloſet, according to the advice of the Ancients in order to "correct it, and render it leſs unworthy of the public view: but conſidering that "I had materials left for two other large volumes, I haſtened the publication of "it. I eaſily underſtood that I ſhould be both more uſefully and more ſeaſonably "aſſiſted, when the public ſhould know what I wanted, and wherein I am want-"ing. I hope that with thoſe helps the Continuation of this work will be more "perfect than otherwiſe it would have been. I ſhall immediately go about it, while "age will permit. I ſee nothing wherein I can better or more pleaſantly employ "the leiſure I am bleſſed with, a leiſure which ſeems to me preferable to all things, "and which has always been earneſtly wiſhed for by the true lovers of ſtudy and "learning."

He obſerves likewiſe how he has behaved with regard to Moreri's Dictionary. That he has paſſed over ſeveral ſubjects, becauſe they are to be found at ſufficient length in that work: that when he has given the ſame articles which are in Moreri, he has been determined to do ſo, either becauſe that Author gives a very ſhort account of them, or becauſe having the life of ſome illuſtrious perſon, he found himſelf able to give a compleat account of him; or becauſe he had as many detached and curious matters, as would make up a tolerable ſupplement: that he referred the readers to that Dictionary for facts of any importance: that when he gives the ſame Article with Moreri, he has put the errors he has found in this Author in a remark by themſelves; but has not touched thoſe which are to be met with in the articles that are not common to both, though they are neither leſs conſiderable nor leſs frequent in thoſe articles than in the others: from whence he concludes that his Dictionary is not deſigned to hurt the ſale of the other, but on the contrary will encreaſe it, and make the reading of it more agreeable. 1697.

Digitized by Google

This is the firſt and only work to which Mr Bayle has ſet his name. It was not his intention to do ſo: he had ſaid upon all occaſions during the courſe of the impreſſion, that he would not let his name appear in it, and he owns at the end of the preface that his friends had endeavoured in vain to make him change his ſentiment; but that at laſt he had been obliged to give his conſent that his name ſhould appear. "This doth not proceed from fickleneſs (ſays he) but it is in obe- "dience to authority that I do what I have ſo often ſaid that I would not. It has "been thought fit that I ſhould affix my name, in order to terminate ſome diffe- "rences among the Bookſellers. Without this Mr Leers could not have obtained "the privilege, which he thought was abſolutely neceſſary to him. I therefore "pay a blind obedience." The occaſion of this difference was, that Mr Leers having applied to the States of Holland for a privilege, the Bookſellers who were concerned in the edition of Moreri oppoſed it, on pretence that Mr Bayle's Dictionary was a work of the ſame kind with that of Moreri, and that this concurrence had been forbid by the privilege which the States had granted to them, and that this would be a great loſs to them. And becauſe they knew that Mr Bayle would not put his name to it, they made uſe of that circumſtance to repreſent his Dictionary as a work which no body owned. The States notwithſtanding this granted a privilege to Mr Leers, but with this condition, that Mr Bayle ſhould affix his name in the title of it (1).

(1) This condition is expreſſed in the privilege.

And indeed Mr Bayle's work has hardly any thing in common with that of Moreri. It is a Dictionary of a new and ſingular kind. An infinite variety runs through the whole of it. In the Text or body of the articles, he in a very exact and conciſe manner gives the hiſtory of the perſons he treats of, but he makes amends for this brevity in the Remarks which are ſubjoined to the text, and which are a ſort of commentary on it. He draws the characters of thoſe perſons, he clears up the circumſtances of their lives, and the motives of their conduct, he examines the judgment which has been, or may be made concerning them. He treats of the moſt important points of Religion, Morality, and Philoſophy. Nay ſometimes the Text ſeems to have been made for the ſake of the Remarks. He takes occaſion from the actions or ſentiments of an obſcure and almoſt unknown perſon, to inſtruct or agreeably to amuſe his reader. So that ſome Articles which ſeem to promiſe nothing at all, are frequently accompanied with the moſt curious matters. He acts throughout the part of an exact, faithful, and diſintereſted Hiſtorian, and of a moderate, penetrating, and judicious Critic. In the articles of the Philoſophers, he applies himſelf to diſcover their opinions, and to ſhow their ſtrong and weak ſides.

Being perſuaded that diſputes about Religion, which have been the occaſion of infinite diſorders in the world, proceed only from the too great confidence which the Divines of all parties have in their own underſtandings; he undertakes to humble them, and to render them more modeſt and moderate, by ſhowing that even ſo ridiculous a ſect as that of the Manicheans can raiſe ſuch objections to them concerning the origin of evil and the permiſſion of ſin, which it is impoſſible to anſwer. He even goes further, and maintains in general that human Reaſon is more capable of refuting and deſtroying, than of proving and building up: that there are no points either in Divinity or Philoſophy, againſt which it doth not raiſe very ſtrong difficulties, ſo that if we ſhould follow it, with a diſpoſition to diſpute, as far as it will go, we ſhould often find ourſelves reduced to very great ſtraits: that there are doctrines which are certainly true, to which it oppoſeth unanſwerable objections; that in this caſe we ought to have no regard to theſe objections, but acknowledge the narrow limits of human underſtanding, and oblige it to captivate itſelf under the obedience of faith, and that in this, Reaſon doth act inconſiſtently with itſelf, ſince it acts upon very reaſonable principles. He at the ſame time gives ſeveral examples of difficulties which Reaſon finds in the diſcuſſion of the moſt important ſubjects, and he doth this for the moſt part without deciding, and meerly as a reporter. He endeavoured to inſpire people with the ſame moderation with regard to hiſtorical facts. He ſhowed that ſeveral facts which no body has ever called in queſtion are very uncertain, or even evidently falſe: from whence it is natural to conclude, that we ought not lightly to give credit to Hiſtorians, but rather to ſuſpend our judgment 'till by a rigorous examination we are aſſured of the truth.

The public was agreeably ſurprized to find that this work ſurpaſſed the favourable opinion they had conceived of it. The Bookſellers at Paris obſerving the great demand there was for it, reſolved to reprint it, and deſired a Licence from Mr Boucherat, Chancellor of France. Mr Boucherat appointed the Abbé Renaudot, Author of the Paris Gazette, to examine it in order to ſee if it contained any thing againſt the Government, or againſt the Catholic Religion. This Abbé inſtead of confining himſelf to theſe two points, drew up a critical Memorial, wherein he ſays that this

Digitized by Google

1697. work is full of digreſſions; that one can find no ſyſtem of Religion in it: that Mr Bayle never cites the Fathers there but in order to turn them into ridicule: that he maintains Pelagianiſm and Pyrrhoniſm throughout: that he had in different places inſerted all the harſheſt things which have been ſaid or written theſe fifty years paſt againſt the Catholic Religion: that he every where makes panegyrics upon the Calviniſt Miniſters, filled with falſhoods: that he ſeeks all occaſions to render the reign of Lewis XIV odious with regard to the revocation of the Edicts, and the complaints of the Refugees: that one might obſerve every where in it a viſible affectation of collecting the moſt odious and infamous things againſt the perſons of late French Kings; and that he had purpoſely collected ſeveral fabulous ſtories in order to render Henry the Fourth's converſion ſuſpicious: that in the article of Francis I, there was a very injurious digreſſion againſt the King of England, to give ground for eſtabliſhing the poſſibility of the ſuppoſition of the Prince of Wales: that it was full of unſufferable obſcenities: that Mr Bayle was only acquainted with modern books concerning Religion, and with thoſe wrote by Heretics: that he had not the ſmalleſt knowledge of Hiſtory; that his knowledge in Antiquity and Literature was all drawn from extracts which he had taken from French Tranſlations: that he ridiculouſly compared the Moderns with the Ancients, and ſets up the Abbé de St Real as a rival to Cornelius Nepos, in treating of the merit of Pomponius. "We may judge, ſays he, of the abi- "lities of a perſon who in an extract of the life of Pomponius Atticus, tranſlates "librarii, Bookſellers." This example which the Abbé Renaudot produced of Mr Bayle's ignorance is a very notable proof of his own raſhneſs; for Mr Bayle had obſerved in the margin that we ought to underſtand by that word the Copiſts and Binders according to the cuſtom of binding books at that time.

We may ſee by this what weight this Abbé's judgment ought to have. He had negligently run through Mr Bayle's Dictionary, and ſaw every thing through the prejudices he had conceived againſt it. He was beſides naturally deciſive, raſh, violent, and paſſionate againſt the Proteſtants. He piqued himſelf upon his great reading and profound knowledge of antiquity; but they who have examined his works do not allow that his learning was equal to the opinion which he wanted that the public ſhould have of it. They have found a thouſand miſtakes in his tract concerning the Origin of the Sphere, and ſhowed that he has not ſo much as underſtood the Authors whom he has tranſcribed (1). However, upon his report, they refuſed the Licence which the Bookſellers of Paris deſired in order to reprint Mr Bayle's Dictionary, and even prohibited the importing it into France. This was what Mr Bayle wiſhed for (2). "I will tell you as a ſecret (ſays he to one of his friends (3), "that I am exceedingly glad that they have prohibited my Dictionary in France. "It is not becauſe the prohibition will the more excite peoples curioſity; for ni- "timur in vetitum. I have two other reaſons. The one is, that if they had allowed "it to be ſold there, the Bookſellers at Lyons would have counterfeited it, and com- "mitted a thouſand typographical errors. Their edition would have hindered the "ſale of that of Mr Leers, and would have multiplied the copies of a firſt edition, "which is always imperfect when a large work has been compoſed haſtily, and with "ſo little aſſiſtance of libraries as I have had. This prohibition makes me hope that "Mr Leers's ſole edition will ſell, and that he will be obliged to print a ſecond, in the "correction of which I will employ all my abilities, which are very ſmall I own, but "which however I will apply to better purpoſe, and I expect from your knowledge "and good advice how to direct myſelf aright in the correction. The other reaſon, "which ſtill is of more importance, is, that if my Dictionary had been allowed a "free admiſſion into France, my enemies in this country, who are a factious kind "of people, and very artful in giving a bad turn to things, would have inferred "from hence that my book contains nothing in favour of Proteſtants, or againſt "France: A proof, would they ſay, of the criminal attachment, of which the Author "of it is ſuſpected, to the cauſe of the common enemy of the repoſe of Europe. It "is therefore of advantage to me that my Dictionary has been prohibited; not- "withſtanding, though I wiſhed that this might happen, I have ſaid nothing in "it which can pleaſe our Viſionaries, When any thing came in my way relating "to the affairs of Europe, I have avoided ſaying any thing either pro or con: and "they even complain in England, that I have indirectly condemned the late Re- "volution, and that I have declared myſelf too much againſt the rights of the people, "in favour of the deſpotic power of Princes."

(1) See Mr Des Vignoles's Remarks on this piece of the Abbé Renaudot in the Bibliotheque Germanique, Tom. v. Art. xi, pag. 153, and the following.

(2) See Letter to Mr Janiçon of the 11th of February 1697, p. 625, 626.

(3) Letter to M of the 13th of May, 1697, p. 642, 643.

Mr Bayle criticized Mr Jurieu in ſeveral places of his Dictionary: and in doing ſo he only followed his plan, which was to take notice of the errors in fact, or of the falſe reaſonings the Authors of whom he had occaſion to mention. "I have "ſometimes, ſays he (4), criticized my enemy with ſome force; he is enraged at this, "and ſearches for all poſſible means of revenging himſelf. When I firſt publiſhed "my Dictionary he ſet his emiſſaries a declaiming againſt it, pretending that it con- "tained impieties; and after all theſe ſnarlings, he has perſuaded his Conſiſtory to "examine it. I have all my defences ready, and I am not at all afraid, provided "they will, I do not ſay, exactly follow the rules of equity, but forbear only from "violating them ſhamefully and without meaſure."

(4) Letter to Mr Conſtant, July 4, 1697, p. 654.

Digitized by Google

Mr Jurieu's party finding themſelves ſuperior in the Conſiſtory of Rotterdam, he took that opportunity to have Mr Bayle's Dictionary examined there. In the mean while he publiſhed ſeveral extracts of anonymous Letters from Paris, London, Geneva, and from ſome towns in Holland, to decry this work. And indeed the Authors of theſe Letters ſaid a great deal againſt it, but moſt of them had not read it, and ſpoke of it only by hearſay. Mr Jurieu added the Abbé Renaudot's Memorial, and the extracts which Mr Bayle had given of the books of that Miniſter in the News from the Republic of Letters, "In order, ſaid he, to oppoſe the high encomiums which "Mr Bayle has given to him and to his works there, to the criticiſms in the Dictio-"nary." To all this he added ſeveral reflexions, wherein he repeated his ancient calumnies, and made new efforts to diſſame Mr Bayle, and diſparage his Dictionary. In the mean time he owned that he had not ſo much as read the title of it (1). He intitled this compilation: The Judgment of the public and particularly of the Abbé Renaudot, concerning the Sieur Bayle's Critical Dictionary (2). 1697.

(1) I own to you that I have not read this book, nor even the title of it. Jugement du public, &c. p. 28.

Mr Bayle upon this publiſhed a piece intitled: Remarks on a Pamphlet, intitled The Judgment of the Public, &c (3), wherein he ſays that his principal deſign in publiſhing this piece was to acquaint the public that he was preparing a defence, which would demonſtrate to all unprejudiced readers the injuſtice of his cenſures: but that this apology not deſerving the fate of looſe ſheets, which for the moſt part do not outlive the week in which they firſt appear, he kept it to be placed at the beginning or end of a book in folio. For the ſame reaſon, adds he, I refer to it almoſt every thing conſiderable that might be ſaid againſt that piece which is juſt publiſhed, and I confine myſelf to a few obſervations made in haſte. He takes notice in the beginning that the title of this piece of Mr Jurieu's is deceitful. "This Libel, ſays he (4), has a "very improper title, it ought only to be intitled: The Judgment of the Abbé Renaudot, "commented upon by the publiſher; for all the other judges are leſs than phantoms: "they are inviſible beings, no body knows whether they are black or white. There-"fore their opinion and a cypher are of the ſame value. . . . . What manner of "proceeding is this! to make the judgment of the public to conſiſt in ſuch pieces. I "could produce a great many much ſtronger in my favour, if modeſty would permit: "and beſides how many Letters could I produce, wherein my adverſary is repre-"ſented both as a bad writer, and a bad man! but God forbid that I ſhould imi-"tate him in the uſe he makes of what people write to one another in confidence. "This is a conduct deteſted even by the Heathens themſelves."

(2) Jugement du public, & particulierement de Mr l'Abbé Renaudot, ſur le Dictionaire critique du Sieur Bayle, in 4° pp. 47.

He obſerves that Mr Jurieu out of all his evidences has mentioned only the one who was moſt exceptionable. "The Author of this pretended Judgment of "the Public (ſays he (5), has not been very wiſe in the choice he has made. He "conceals the names of all his witneſſes except one whom he ought principally "to have concealed, a name odious and deſpiſed in all the countries which are at "war with France. I will not take advantage of the prepoſſeſſion of the public: "I will not conſider him with regard to his Gazette, which diſcredits him every where "as a man who has got a habit of giving a malicious turn to lies. I will con-"ſider him on his fair ſide.

(3) Reflexions ſur un Imprimé qui a pour titre, Jugement du public, &c. in 4°, pagg. 16. ſmall character, and in two columns.

"The Abbé Renaudot has the character of a very learned man, and of having "a taſte ſo delicate that nothing is able to pleaſe him. One can therefore con-"clude nothing from his contempt of any thing: it is an equivocal proof. I have "been likewiſe told that he is exceedingly devout. We need not therefore be "aſtoniſhed, that he thinks ſome things too free, which at bottom do not go beyond "the liberties which an honeſt man may allow himſelf, after the example of ſo many "great authors." He adds, that with regard to the gay paſſages in his Dictionary, which are complained of as a little too licentious, he does not doubt but every body will be ſatisfied when they have ſeen the Apology he is preparing on this head: and he promiſeth to reviſe the article of David in ſuch a manner that it ſhall not any longer ſerve for a pretence for the declamations of his detractors. "I have "declared (ſays he) upon all occaſions, and I here declare it publickly, that if "there are any heterodox opinions in my work, I am the firſt who will deteſt "them, and that I will throw them out in the ſecond edition. All that I want "is to have them pointed out to me."

(4) Reflexions ſur un Imprimé qui a pour titre, Jugement du Public, &c. p. 1.

(5) Ibid. pag. 1, 2.

He next obſerves ſeveral falſhoods which the Authors of the extracts had ſpread concerning his Dictionary: he refutes Mr Jurieu's calumnies and malicious inſinuations; and ſhows how ridiculouſly he had boaſted that he had reduced him to live upon the penſion of a Bookſeller: he ſays that he had criticized him without affectation, and had treated him in the ſame manner with other authors, whoſe faults he had taken notice of; that he had done him juſtice when he had been cenſured by others without reaſon, and that it was not his fault that he had not had more frequent occaſions of juſtifying him; that what he had cenſured in ſome of his works, was not the ſame thing which he had formerly commended; that at firſt he had praiſed him ſincerely, and that afterwards he had criticized him for good reaſons, being better inſtructed.

With regard to Mr Renaudot, Mr Bayle contents himſelf with obſerving two or three falſhoods in point of fact contained in his Memorial, delaying a thorough exa-

Digitized by Google

1697. mination of it 'till that Abbé ſhould declare himſelf the Author of it. "If I at "any time do anſwer the Abbé Renaudot's Judgment (ſays he) it will only be "after I ſhall know that he acknowledgeth it to be his, in the manner in which "it is printed; for it is ſo full of miſtakes, falſhoods, and blunders, that I ima- "gine it not to be agreeable to the original: ſome falſe pieces have poſſibly been "added to it in copying. He had prejudiced a great many people, but men of "judgment having read my Dictionary, quickly put an end to that prejudice. The "Abbé himſelf is not ignorant of this, for he ſays in one of his Letters, That I "ought to be ſatisfied with the approbation of ſo many people. And ſo I am. People "were ſurprized to find ſo many idle things in his report. The only queſtion "was, whether my book contained any thing which could ſhock either the Church "of Rome or France. No body had aſked him whether I was acquainted with "good Authors, or whether I equal the Moderns with the Ancients. If ſeveral of "my readers have contradicted him on the head of my ignorance, I diſavow them: "he has not ſaid enough on this head, I know a great many more circumſtances "of it, and if he has a mind to draw my picture in this light, I will furniſh him "with a good many memoirs."

This diſpute went no further. Mr de Wit intereſted himſelf for the Abbé Renaudot, and made Mr Bayle promiſe not to write againſt him. Mr Bayle religiouſly kept his word; and was even ſo ſcrupulous that he was not pleaſed to ſee that I deſigned to inſert in Mr de St Evremond's Works, the anſwer which that celebrated writer had made to the Judgment of that Abbé. "As to what concerns "(ſays he (1), the Apology which Mr de St Evremond did me the honour to "write in my favour, as your friendſhip for me is already publickly declared, I "do not know whether the Abbé Renaudot will not think me guilty of an in- "direct breach of the treaty which Mr de Wit had concluded between us, if "any thing ſhould appear in a work reprinted by you concerning the fooliſh quarrel "which that Abbé picked with me. You know that in my Reflexions on that "Abbé's Judgment, I promiſed to examine and anſwer it more at large. He is "exceedingly techy, and though he is very learned, yet he is afraid of literary diſ- "putes. He is very well pleaſed with the liberty of criticizing by word of mouth, "but doth not care to be obliged to come to diſcuſſions in writing. The late "Mr de Wit, his particular friend, perſuaded me very earneſtly to peace, and was "vexed at the Reflexions which I had publiſhed. Mr Leers, who is under many "obligations to the Abbé, who doth him good offices upon all occaſions, received "a Letter from him, wherein he ſignified that it would be againſt his inclination "to enter into a diſpute of this nature. In ſhort out of deference to Mr de "Wit, and complaiſance for Mr Leers, and in conſideration of the excuſes which "the Abbé made for himſelf, I having a natural averſion to literary diſputes of a "perſonal nature, conſented that Mr de Wit ſhould make us agree to forget what "was paſſed, and make no more mention of this difference. I have kept my "word very ſcrupulouſly; for there is not one word in the ſecond edition of "my Dictionary which bears the leaſt mark of my remembrance of the Abbé's "Judgment. I leave it entirely to your diſcretion, whether by inſerting Mr de "St Evremond's anſwer, the Abbé would not have a pretence to ſay that what I "have not done myſelf I have done by a friend, by thus renewing the memory "of that quarrel." Mr de St St Evremond had read Mr Bayle's Dictionary with a great deal of pleaſure: and he diverted himſelf by compoſing this anſwer, which contains very fine and delicate raillery (2).

(1) Letter March 7, 1702, p. 867, and the following.

(2) This ſmall piece was inſerted in the firſt edition of Mr de St Evremond's Works, printed at London in 1705, 2 Vols in 4°, and is to be found in all the following editions.

1698. The firſt edition of Mr Bayle's Dictionary being almoſt ſold off, they thought of giving a ſecond. It was begun on the 26th of May 1698.

Mr Jurieu had publiſhed his pretended Judgment of the Public, in order to engage the Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies to condemn Mr Bayle's Dictionary. He got this libel preſented to the Synod, at this time ſitting at Delft; but the Synod took no manner of notice of it. The Conſiſtory of Rotterdam itſelf, acted with great moderation. They granted Mr Bayle a hearing, and communicated to him the remarks which they had made upon his Dictionary; they declared that they were ſatisfied with his anſwers, and exhorted him to acquaint the public with every thing that had paſſed on this ſubject. This he did in a looſe ſheet, intituled, A Letter from the Author of the Hiſtorical and Critical Dictionary to Mr D. E. M. S. concerning the proceedings of the Conſiſtory of the Walloon Church of Rotterdam, againſt this work (3). It is as follows.

(3) Lettre de l'Auteur du Dictionnaire hiſtorique & critique à Monſieur le D. E. M. S. au ſujet des procedures du Conſiſtoire de l'Egliſe Wallonne de Rotterdam contre ſon Ouvrage.

"Sir,

"I AM informed by your laſt Letter that a great many contradictory accounts "have gone about concerning what paſſed in the Conſiſtory of the Walloon "Church at Rotterdam, when the affair which I had before it concerning the Hiſ- "torical and Critical Dictionary was ended there. All you could gather from "ſo many different reports was, that I had promiſed to amend that work in a "ſecond edition: but this not ſatisfying you, you deſire me to give you a more "exact account of that matter, and this I ſhall now give you.

"Be

Digitized by Google

" Be pleaſed therefore to know, Sir, that the Conſiſtory having thought it their 1698.
" duty to take my book into their conſideration, on account of the complaints
" which ſeveral perſons ſpread abroad concerning it, named a Committee to ex" amine it. This Committee read it, took extracts and made remarks, and having " made their report to the Conſiſtory, and all other preliminaries being regulated,
" ſo that there remained nothing to be done but to hear me, and then proceed
" to give ſentence, I was warned to appear before the Conſiſtory, and accordingly
" I came there upon the day appointed. The ſtate of the caſe in general being " laid before me, together with the firſt article of particular extracts and remarks,
" I was aſked what I had to ſay in my defence. I anſwered that not knowing
" what ſhould be firſt conſidered in this affair, I had prepared only a very " general diſcourſe. It conſiſted of theſe two points. Firſt, that I had a great " many things to alledge in my juſtification on every one of the grounds of com" plaint; and ſecondly, that in order to ſpare the Conſiſtory the trouble of a long
" ſeries of tedious diſcuſſions, and to contribute more effectually to peace and edi-
" fication; I choſe rather to change the things which had given occaſion for complaint
" in a ſecond edition, than to inſiſt upon the reaſons which I might advance to " prove that all the noiſe which had been made was without foundation; that I " had already acquainted the public with my diſpoſitions to correct my work, ac" cording to the advice which they ſhould be pleaſed to communicate to me, and " that in particular I did declare to the Conſiſtory, that I would with the utmoſt
" docility and reſpect make uſe of what information they ſhould be pleaſed to " give me; in a word, that if I had advanced any heretical or erroneous opinions
" (which I believed I had not done) I diſavowed and retracted them, as I had
(1) In the Reflections on a Pamphlet intitled The Judgment of the Public &c, upon the Critical Dictionary, §. iii. pag. 2. " already declared in a piece printed three or four months ago (1).

" This anſwer being thought too general, I was told that they would commu" nicate to me the remarks which the Conſiſtory had made on my Dictionary. Ac" cordingly they were communicated to me by the Committee which they had " appointed; they conſiſted amongſt other things of theſe five heads: I. The ci" tations, expreſſions, and reflexions all over the work, which might offend chaſte
" ears. II. The article of David. III. The article of the Manicheans. IV. That " of the Sceptics. V. The praiſes given to perſons who had denied either the " being or providence of God. I anſwered two things as I had done before: in " the firſt place, that I thought I had a great many reaſons to alledge in my " juſtification on all theſe heads; and ſecondly, that notwithſtanding this, I was " ready to ſtrike out of the book all the ſtumbling blocks which they had found
" there; I added that now that I knew, by the remarks of the Conſiſtory,
" what the things complained of were, I ſaw more clearly how to correct
" them, that I thought it a very eaſy matter to remedy every thing, either by " ſuppreſſions, change of expreſſions, or by additions and explanations. That in " particular, I would new-mould the article of David in ſuch a manner as no" thing ſhould remain there which might give offence to pious ſouls. That with " regard to the horrible doctrine of two Principles, that is to ſay, of Manicheiſm, I " had ſufficiently declared how much I thought it abſurd, monſtrous, contrary not only
" to religion and piety, but likewiſe to the cleareſt notions of reaſon and ſound
" Philoſophy. That I would enlarge more upon this in the ſecond edition; and " that if in quality of an hiſtorian I had thought myſelf obliged to recite the " arguments of the Manicheans in their full force, I on the other hand was of opi" nion, that this was of no conſequence, and that I only enlarged on what the " moſt orthodox of our Divines every day tell us in fewer words, viz. that the agree" ment of the holineſs and goodneſs of God with the ſin and miſery of man is " an incomprehenſible myſtery, which we ought humbly to adore, being perſuaded
" that ſince it is revealed, it muſt needs be ſo, and that we are obliged to ſilence
" all the difficulties which our weak reaſon ſuggeſts to us. That I had ſufficiently
" declared on other ſubjects, and particularly with regard to the exiſtence of ex-
" tenſion and motion, that I did not think it a reaſon to reject a doctrine becauſe
" I could not anſwer all the objections againſt it. That I would again examine " the difficulties of the Manicheans, and that if could find anſwers, or if the re-
" verend Miniſters of the Conſiſtory would furniſh me with any, I would put " them in the beſt form I was capable of. I made the ſame anſwer with relation " to the article of Pyrrho; and as to the praiſes beſtowed on the good morals of
" ſome Atheiſts, I promiſed an Explanation, which would ſhow how theſe facts
" which I have found in books, and which I was obliged by the laws of hiſtory
" to relate, ought not to give offence, and that in effect they do no hurt to the " true Religion.

" The Committee having made a report of this Conference to the Conſiſtory, it " was deſired that I ſhould give in writing what I had declared by word of mouth.
" Accordingly I preſented a memorial, wherein after having firſt touched upon the " two general heads of my verbal anſwers, I proteſted that I never had deſigned
" to advance any propoſition as my own opinion, which was contrary to the Confeſ-
" ſion of Faith of the Reformed Church, in which, by God's goodneſs, I was born,

Digitized by Google

1698. " and of which I made profeſſion. That if any ſuch propoſitions were to be found " in my work (which I did not at all believe) they muſt have crept in without my " obſervation, that I diſavowed and retracted them; that if I had in certain reſpects " taken a more than ordinary liberty of philoſophizing, it was becauſe I thought " that this would be readily excuſed in conſideration of the nature of my work, " wherein I ſuſtain both the character of Hiſtorian and Commentator, without pre- " tending to act the Dogmatiſt; that the pains which I have taken to make my " Philoſophical Reflexions ſubſervient to the confirmation of a fundamental doctrine " of our Church, and which we conſtantly oppoſe to the Socinians, viz. that we " ought to ſubject our underſtanding to the authority of God, and believe what " he has revealed to us in his word, although the principles of Philoſophy ſhould " not always be conforming to it: this, I ſay, made me hope that all my Proteſ- " tant readers would be rather edified than offended by my Commentaries; that " I was very ſorry that the event had not anſwered my expectation, and that " if I had foreſeen the conſequence of the liberty which I have taken, I would have " carefully abſtained from it; that to remedy what is paſt I would amend thoſe " paſſages in a ſecond edition, and that I would have great regard to the remarks " which the Conſiſtory had communicated to me. I added to this, the particular de- " clarations which I had made verbally to the Committee concerning the article of " David, that of the Manicheans &c.

" Upon this Memorial the Conſiſtory drew up an Act, with ſuch reflexions and " modifications as they thought proper, and this, Sir, was the amicable concluſion " of that matter. They ſignified their deſire that without waiting for the publica- " tion of the ſecond edition, which might be long a finiſhing, I ſhould publiſh " ſomething which might acquaint the public with the ſentiments which I had ſet " forth in my Memorial. I readily agreed to this, and I now acquit myſelf of " that promiſe; and it has not been owing to me, that I have not done ſo ſooner. " I am, Sir, yours."

Mr Jurieu being vexed that the Conſiſtory had not gratified his reſentment, uſed all his efforts to engage them to take this affair once more into their conſideration. The Conſiſtory had been changed in the beginning of the year 1698, he flattered himſelf that he ſhould find them more tractable. And indeed they did name a Committee, but did not think it proper to alter any thing in what had been already determined. They confined their examination to the making of ſome remarks upon the Letter which Mr Bayle had publiſhed. The Conſiſtory approved of their report, and declared that this piece had appeared later than they had expected (1); that Mr Bayle had not ſent a copy of it to the Conſiſtory; that the number of copies which he had printed was too ſmall; that Mr Bayle had not ſufficiently enlarged on what the Conſiſtory had required of him, and had not declared that he ſubmitted to it without reſerve: and that upon this account they might juſtly demand further ſatisfaction; but that they would be content to repreſent theſe things to him verbally, and to exhort him to correct the ſecond edition according to the remarks which they had communicated to him, and to make a good uſe of the advice which they had given him: that they would draw up a Memorial wherein they might add ſome new remarks; and that as Mr Jurieu had been very ill uſed by Mr Bayle in that work, Mr Bayle ſhould be exhorted to behave himſelf for the future with more moderation, both in the ſecond edition, and in the other books which he ſhould publiſh. " The Conſiſtory having ſeen with grief that ſo little regard had been " ſhewn to a Miniſter whoſe miniſtry and labours had been and ſtill were of ſingular " edification to the Church." A Committee was appointed to draw up this Memorial, and they were ordered to communicate it to Mr Bayle. They inſerted in it what related to Mr Jurieu. They added likewiſe ſome remarks; and amongſt other things they deſired Mr Bayle " to take care not to refute except upon very " good grounds, what our Divines have reported of certain wicked Popes, ſince " though he might alledge ſome conjectures in defence of theſe Popes, with re- " gard to certain facts, yet ſtrong reaſons might be offered for their condemnation, " and that it was unjuſt, without neceſſity, to ſide with ſeducers, who have done " ſo much hurt to the Church, and to endeavour to traduce our writers as raſh " accuſers." This affair ended here, and Mr Jurieu could not engage the Conſiſtory any farther to gratify the deſire of vengeance with which he was animated (2).

(1) The Conſiſtory had been employed in this affair from November 3, 1697, to January 7, 1698. Mr Bayle's piece was not publiſhed 'till ſix months after. It is dated July 6, 1698.

1699. In the year 1699 Mr Bayle publiſhed a third edition of his Various Thoughts concerning Comets. He ſuppreſſed the Advertiſement prefixed to the ſecond, and ſubſtituted another, in the beginning of which he tells us for what reaſon he had aſſumed the ſtile of a Roman Catholic in this work, both in treating of religious and political matters. He next obſerves upon what occaſion this book was compoſed, and the deſign which he had of printing it at Paris, together with the other particulars which we related above. He obſerves likewiſe that he had promiſed that this edition ſhould be enlarged with many new proofs and new anſwers to objections, yet notwithſtanding it was entirely the ſame with the ſecond, without addition dition or diminution. The reaſon which engaged him to add nothing to it, is (ſays he) that this work being already too like thoſe rivers which do nothing but wind about, he could not add new digreſſions to it without making it very tireſome to the reader: and that on this conſideration he had reſerved theſe additions for another volume, which ſhould be publiſhed when he had advanced a little further in the compoſition of his Critical Dictionary, about which he was ſtill employed. "What "makes me (ſays he) refer this to that time, is that having anew examined all "the objections that can be formed againſt the parallel which I have drawn betwixt "Paganiſm and Atheiſm, it ſeems to me, that they may be all ſolved by the "principles which I have laid down, and by applying the anſwers which I have "already made uſe of. There is therefore no occaſion to make haſte." This new edition was printed while he was reviſing and reprinting his Dictionary. When it was finiſhed he had nothing further to divert him from a labour which encreaſed every day, and which did not allow him the ſmalleſt relaxation. "I ſhould be 1699.

(2) The reader will find at the end of this Life, the Acts of the Conſiſtory of Rotterdam, with relation to Mr Bayle's Dictionary.

Digitized by Google

(1) Letter of September 7, 1699, p. 763, 764.

"quite inexcuſable (ſays he to Mr Marais (1)) for delaying ſo long to write to you, "if I were not more than ordinarily buſy, both in reviſing my Dictionary, of which "they are now printing a ſecond edition, and in correcting the proofs. It is with "much ado that I can perform both theſe taſks, and it is very happy for me "that my Thoughts concerning Comets being finiſhed, I have a little leiſure. I have "read over all the ſheets of it before they were printed, and though I have ad-"ded nothing, but only made ſome ſmall alterations in the ſtile, it has made "me loſe a good deal of time." This Edition is in two volumes; and to the ſecond volume was joined a ſecond edition of the Addition to the Various Thoughts concerning Comets, which was firſt publiſhed in 1694.

About this time Mr le Clerc, concealed under the name of Theodore Parrhaſe, publiſhed a book intitled, Parrhaſiana: or Various Thoughts on Critical, Hiſtorical, Moral, and Political Subjects, in which there was an article that concerned Mr Bayle. He had maintained in his Dictionary, that the Manicheans could oppoſe to Chriſtian Divines difficulties concerning moral and phyſical evil, which it was not poſſible to ſolve by the light of reaſon. Mr le Clerc on the contrary maintained that Origen's Syſtem which has been abandoned by all Chriſtians, was ſufficient to take away all theſe difficulties, and refuted Mr Bayle's Manichean in the perſon of an Origeniſt; and concluded "that ſince a man of that ſort can reduce a Mani-"chean to ſilence, what might not they do who ſhould reaſon infinitely better than "the diſciples of Origen (2)?" But he declared that by anſwering the Manichean objections, he did not pretend in the leaſt to hurt Mr Bayle, whom he did not at all ſuſpect to be a favourer of them. "I am perſuaded (ſays he (3)) that he has "taken the philoſophical liberty, of diſputing both pro and con on many occaſions, "without concealing the ſtrength of either ſide, only to exerciſe thoſe who un-"derſtand the ſubjects of which he treats, and not with an intention of favouring thoſe "whoſe reaſons he explains. One ought to conſider the difficulties he propoſeth, "as we do the objections which every body is allowed to make in a ſchool of "Divinity or Philoſophy; where the further one puſheth a difficulty, the more "honour redounds to thoſe who can ſolve it. This is a piece of juſtice which he "has a right to require of his readers, and which ought not to be refuſed him. "For my own part (ſays he) I grant it him with all my heart, but I think I have "a right to deſire in return, that I may be allowed to anſwer his objections, with-"out any body's making odious applications to the perſon, of anſwers which regard "only the difficulties."

(2) Parrhaſiana, Tom. I, p. 304.

(3) Ibid. p. 302, 303.

In the year following the Princeſs Sophia, Electreſs Dowager of Hanover, and her daughter the Electreſs of Brandenbourg, ſince Queen of Pruſſia, had the curioſity to take a tour through Flanders and Holland. Theſe Princeſſes, leſs diſtinguiſhed by their elevated rank than by their knowledge and ſublime parts, were the admiration of all Europe. They honoured the learned with their particular favour, loved to converſe with them, and propoſed ſometimes very embaraſſing queſtions to them. Mr Bayle was perfectly well known to them by his works, their deſire of ſeeing Holland was heightened by the pleaſure of being perſonally acquainted with ſo celebrated a Philoſopher. After having travelled through Flanders, they had no ſooner arrived at Rotterdam than they ſent to deſire Mr Bayle to come to ſee them. But it being late, and Mr Bayle being in bed tormented with a violent head-ach, he made his compliments, acquainting them how ſorry he was not to be in a condition of paying his reſpects to them. Theſe Princeſſes next day went to the Hague without having ſeen Mr Bayle, who was detained at home by his indiſpoſition: but the Count de Dhona, having informed Mr Baſnage, who was gone to the Hague, of the deſire which their Highneſſes had to ſee Mr Bayle, Mr Baſnage gave him notice of it. He came, and was received by theſe two Princeſſes in a diſtinguiſhing manner. The Princeſs Sophia converſed with him a long time in private, ſhe aſked him many queſtions, and they entered upon very ſublime points. In the mean while Mr Baſnage entertained the Electreſs of Brandenbourg, who expreſſed a great deal of eſteem for Mr Bayle and his writings, which ſhe always carried about with her. They ſtaid with the Count de Dhona by their High- 1700.

Digitized by Google

1700. neſſes order. Theſe Princeſſes deſired their company to Delft, but Mr Bayle not being able to wait upon them, they parted at the Hague (1).

1701. In 1701 there appeared a book intitled, An Apologetical Diſſertation for the bleſſed Robert d'Arbriſſelles, founder of the Order of Font-Evraud, with relation to what Mr Bayle has ſaid of him in his Hiſtorical and Critical Dictionary (2). Mr Bayle, in ſpeaking of Robert d'Arbriſſelles, ſaid, that he had been accuſed of lying with ſome of his Nuns, that by irritating his paſſions, he might give the more glorious victory to his virtue. It is certain that Jeffery, Abbot of Vendôme and Cardinal, gave the bleſſed Robert notice of the reports which went about on that head, and rallied him upon this new kind of martyrdom which he had found out. Father de la Mainferme, a Monk of Fontevraud, undertook the defence of the founder of his Order; and Mr Bayle confeſſeth in his Dictionary, that the reaſons of the Apologiſt ſeem very ſtrong, and that he doth not pretend to affirm what was reported of Robert. This confeſſion gave occaſion to Father Souri, a Monk of the ſame Order (3), to examine this ſubject more accurately, and to place it in a new light. His Diſſertation is wrote in form of a Letter addreſſed to Mr Bayle. He praiſeth him for having given to underſtand that he did not believe what was ſaid concerning the bleſſed Robert to be true, and at the ſame time makes great encomiums on his Dictionary. " It is a long time ago (ſays he (4), ſince the Republic of Letters " have been obliged to you, but this laſt ſervice which you have lately done to " it, by your admirable Dictionary, has crowned them all. It is not enough to " ſay that you have given us a book, you have given us an entire library. " The novelty of the deſign, your diſcernment in hiſtorical facts, the exactneſs of " your citations, that care and diſcreet attention which reigns every where in that " prodigious work of advancing nothing that is falſe, and of daring to ſay what " is true, according to the inviolable laws of a true Hiſtorian; all this makes me " ſay that it would have been pity, if you had yielded to the temptation of ſuppreſſing ſo learned a work. As for me, an inconſiderable and private perſon, I " received it, with a gratitude which I cannot expreſs to you, and I join " with the common herd of readers at leaſt, in making the acknowledgments which " the public owes to you upon account of the great diſcoveries you have therein " made, and I ſhall make a good uſe of them.

" The difference of party is of no conſequence here, every one will be able to " chooſe what is proper for him. You do not ſet a great value upon our Saints, " but that prejudice doth not at all hinder you from being diſſatisfied at people's " laying evident falſhoods to their charge, and we cannot ſufficiently acknowledge " your juſtice and ſincerity in this reſpect. This love for truth deſerves that God " ſhould one day give you the knowledge of all revealed truths.

" I feel in myſelf the ſame equity for your Reformers. I never reliſhed either " the exaggerations or impoſtures of zealots; and ſtill leſs the bold aſſertions of " Bolſec, an Author full of reſentment; how much ſoever we may be inclined to " believe the ſcandals which are reported concerning your Patriarch, who has de- " clared himſelf in ſo open a manner againſt the moſt ancient of Churches. It " is not by impoſtures that he ought to be attacked, and the truth of my Reli- " gion which he endeavoured to deſtroy, had no occaſion for ſuch aſſiſtance. I " do not believe, notwithſtanding their Heterodoxy, all that the Catholics ſay of " your Doctors, except when they are ſupported by inconteſtable proofs, and nei- " ther doth my Catholiciſm impoſe upon me, as to the evil which the Proteſtants " ſay of ours, when their reaſons are evident. I do not tell you this, Sir, to " make you excuſe the more eaſily what I will take the liberty to remonſtrate " to you, nor to ſet myſelf up as a model of ſincerity to a perſon who might " ſerve for ſuch to others. Although I ſhould not act in this manner, the poor " example of ſuch an obſcure man as I am, would not turn you out of your " way, and you would ſtill thunder againſt the forgers of lies. That of which I " treated here, which has been made concerning the bleſſed Robert d'Arbriſſelles, " cannot fail to belong to your Dictionary; for if it is true, your Dictionary may take " hold of it, as it is hiſtorical; and if it is falſe, may take notice of it, as it is cri- " tical.

" But I am very ſure you do not believe it to be true. You, Sir, own as " much yourſelf..... I do not pretend, ſay you, to affirm what is ſaid of him, for " the reaſons of the Apologiſt ſeem very ſtrong. But will you allow me, Sir, " to ſay that poſſibly you have not ſufficiently, in this paſſage, condemned that " falſhood, nor with ſo much vivacity as you have done others of that kind, which " are only founded on HEARSAY."

This is the only thing which Father Souri would have deſired of Mr Bayle, for in other reſpects he is perfectly well ſatisfied with him. " Once more (ſays he (5), " we have only gratefully to acknowledge, upon this occaſion, your equity and " good taſte. Shall I dare however (adds he) to tell you that the entertaining " part of this Article has made you in ſome meaſure forget your own maxims, " and has hindered you from ſaying any more than the two favourable lines which " I have juſt now cited? there never was a ſtory more worthy of your cenſure than

(1) A MSS. Memoir of Mr Baſnage.

(2) Diſſertation apologetique pour le bienheureux Robert d'Arbriſſelles, Fondateur de l'Ordre de Font-Evraud, ſur ce qu'en a dit Mr Bayle dans ſon Dictionnaire Hiſtorique & Critique. At Antwerp (Amſterdam) by Henry Desbordes. In 12°.

(3) See Reponſe aux queſtions d'un Provincial, Tom. I. chap. lxvii, pag. 684.

(4) Diſſertation apologetique &c. p. 1, and the following.

(5) Ibid. p. 8, 9.

Digitized by Google

" than this. You have indeed a mind to divert your Readers, and you have your 1701.
" reaſons for doing ſo; but it is not your deſign to divert them at the expence
" of truth, and you have never loſt ſight of it, in what relates to us."

Mr Bayle gave an account of this piece in an addition to the Article FONTEVRAUD. " This Apology (ſays he) is ſo well turned and ſo ſolid, that every " reaſonable man ought to acquieſce in it; and though I have ſufficiently declared " that I did not give the leaſt credit to the reports concerning the ſharing of " the bed &c, I declare again here, that in all the paſſages where I have ſpoke " of it without repeating this my opinion, I deſire it may be underſtood." Mr Bayle does Father Souri the juſtice he deſerved. " The civility (ſays he), the politeneſs, " the wit, and erudition of the Author, appear in it in a diſtinguiſhing manner, " and I am very ſorry that I do not deſerve the praiſes which ſo accompliſhed " a perſon has been pleaſed to beſtow by way of compliment upon me."

The ſecond edition of the Critical Dictionary was finiſhed on the twenty ſeventh 1702.
of December 1701, and was publiſhed in the beginning of the year 1702. It was enlarged very near one half. This augmentation was contrary to Mr Bayle's intention. He only deſigned to make ſome additions to the Articles already publiſhed; and did not think of adding any new ones, he reſerved them for a ſeparate Alphabet, under the title of A Supplement to the Critical Dictionary (1). But the Bookſeller deſired that they ſhould be publiſhed in this ſecond edition, and Mr Bayle was obliged to conſent to it. This change gave him a great deal of uneaſineſs as he ſhows in the Preface. He diſtinguiſhed the additions in ſuch a manner that one might diſcern them at firſt ſight. He very carefully corrected the faults of the firſt edition, which he had either diſcovered himſelf, or which had been pointed out to him by his friends. He ſhowed his gratitude to thoſe who had furniſhed him with memoirs, and names them when he thought he could do ſo without offending them. In the mean while he owns that theſe additions had not allowed him to make the Articles of the firſt edition ſo correct as he could have wiſhed. " I muſt own (ſays he) that the trouble which they have coſt me, " has not permitted me to correct the Articles of the firſt edition, with all the ſe- " verity and all the diligence which I would have employed about them. It is " very hard, while the Printers work without ceaſing, for an Author to be able " to perform theſe three things, to reviſe two large volumes in Folio, to enlarge them " more than one third, and to correct the proofs."

(1) See the Letters to Mr de la Monnoye, Auguſt 19 1697, p. 665; and to Mr Marais, October 2, 1698, p. 727.

In ſpeaking of the corrections which he had made in the firſt edition, he doth not forget thoſe which he had obliged himſelf to make. " There are (ſays he) a " ſort of corrections which I have made as it were ex officio, and in conſequence of " an obligation of which the public has been informed. I have behaved herein " with all poſſible care, and with a very ſtrong intention to give ſatisfaction to " thoſe who were offended. For this purpoſe I have ſuppreſſed every thing in the " article of David, which could give offence. This is the greateſt ſuppreſſion, " which has been neceſſary, the reſt are neither conſiderable for their number, or " their extent. We have been able to amend every thing at the expence of a few " words, or lines, and principally by means of four Explanations, which are placed " at the end of this work." Mr Bayle did, in fact, ſuppreſs every thing which the Conſiſtory of Rotterdam had diſapproved in the article of David: but even before this edition was compleated, ſeveral perſons having declared that they would not buy it, if that article was not publiſhed in the ſame manner as before, the Bookſeller was obliged to reprint it by itſelf (2) that they might join it to this new edition. Some of Mr Bayle's friends adviſed him to inſert in it the Project which he had publiſhed in 1692 together with ſome Eſſays of his Dictionary, and he accordingly placed it at the end of the Diſſertations in the laſt volume (3).

(2) See Letter to Mr Peeber, Auguſt 10, 1705, p. 1041.

There is no book which ſtands more in need of a good Index, than Mr Bayle's Dictionary. Mr Leers took care to advertiſe in the beginning of the Project, that he would not forget this article, and Mr Huet compoſed a very exact one for the firſt edition: but Mr Leers foreſeeing that the printing of it would take up a long time, ſuppreſſed the one half of it, which diſfigured it in ſuch a manner, that Mr Bayle thought he was obliged to inform the public of this in a ſhort advertiſement, which he placed at the end of the Index. The other half was preſerved, and given to the Author of the Index to the ſecond edition, who made the beſt uſe of it he could. But this new Index, conſidering the great number of additions was very imperfect. Mr Bayle here lays down a method of ſupplying that defect. He takes notice at the ſame time that having learned by experience the qualities which a good Index ought to have, he could have made ſuch a one, but that he had neither the time nor the patience which ſo tedious and toilſome a taſk required. He adds, that he had not even thought it proper that the perſon employed in compoſing the Index, ſhould engage himſelf in all the details, which ſome readers deſired, and gives his reaſons for it.

(3) See Letter to Mr Des Maizeaux, November 1 1701, p. 839.

He next obſerves that ſome perſons might complain, that his Dictionary did not furniſh them with a ſufficient number of things to their taſte. He ſays that this is the inevitable fate of all books which contain a medley of many different things,

Digitized by Google

1702. and wherein there is a great variety. He declares that if he has made mention of one family rather than of another no leſs, or more conſiderable, he has done ſo without the leaſt reſpect of perſons, and only becauſe he had Memoirs concerning the one, and none concerning the other. Laſtly, he anſwers thoſe who had found fault that he had given ſo few articles of great Captains. He ſays that this proceeds not only from his having avoided to treat the ſame matters which are in other Dictionaries, but chiefly from his not being able to make theſe articles ſuch as he could wiſh. He gives an example of this, by ſhowing upon what plan he would compoſe the article of the Maréchal de Luxembourg, if he had the aſſiſtance and knowledge neceſſary to draw it up.

He joined four Explanations to this edition, in order to fulfil his engagements with the Conſiſtory of Rotterdam. He prefixed to them a general obſervation, wherein he gives the reaſons why he believed that no body would be offended with the liberty of philoſophizing, which he had ſometimes take. In the firſt Explanation he juſtifies himſelf againſt thoſe who had found fault with him for having ſaid, that there had been ſpeculative Atheiſts and Epicureans, who had ſurpaſſed the Idolaters in the ſoundneſs of their morals; and ſhows that the conduct of theſe Atheiſts, could not do any hurt to the true Religion, nor give it the leaſt blemiſh. But he promiſeth to treat of this more at large in the continuation of his book concerning Comets. The ſecond Explanation relates to the objections of the Manicheans. He concludes it with the following ſix propoſitions, which contain the ſubſtance of his doctrine:

I. That it is the property of the myſteries of the Goſpel to be liable to objections which natural light cannot ſolve.

II. That Unbelievers cannot juſtly draw any advantage from this, that the maxims of Philoſophy do not afford ſolutions to the difficulties which they raiſe againſt the Myſteries of the Goſpel.

III. That the objections of the Manicheans, concerning the Origin of Evil and Predeſtination, ought not to be conſidered in general as attacking Predeſtination, but with this particular regard, that the Origin of Evil, the decrees of God concerning it, and the conſequences of it, are the moſt inconceivable myſteries of Chriſtianity.

IV. That it ought to ſatisfy every good, Chriſtian that his faith is founded on the teſtimony of the word of God.

V. That the ſyſtem of the Manicheans conſidered in itſelf is abſurd, indefenſible, and contrary to the ideas of order; that it is liable to retorſions, and is not able to remove difficulties.

VI. That in all events, adds he, no body can be offended at my confeſſions, unleſs he looks upon the doctrine of the moſt orthodox Divines as ſcandalous, ſince all that I have ſaid is a natural and neceſſary conſequence from their ſentiments, and that I have only laid down in a more prolix manner, what they teach more compendiouſly.

In the third Explanation he ſhows, that the objections of the Pyrrhonian Abbé againſt ſome doctrines of Chriſtianity, which he has related in his Dictionary, are of no force againſt our Religion. He firſt lays it down as a certain and inconteſtable principle, That Chriſtianity is of a ſupernatural order, and that its analyſis is the ſupreme authority of God propoſing myſteries to us, not that we may comprehend them, but that we may believe them with all the humility which is due to the infinite Being, who can neither deceive nor be deceived. From whence evidently follows, adds he, the incompetency of the tribunal of Philoſophy to judge of the controverſies among Chriſtians, ſince they ought only to be carried to the tribunal of Revelation. He draws the character of the Pyrrhonians, and ſhows that of all the Philoſophers who ought not to be allowed to diſpute concerning the myſteries of Chriſtianity, before they have admitted Revelation as the rule, there are none ſo unworthy of being heard as the followers of Pyrrho. In the fourth Explanation he examines the complaints of thoſe who had ſaid that his Dictionary contained obſcenities. He expreſſeth this accuſation in the following manner: "That the Author "relates hiſtorical facts which he has found in other authors, whom he carefully quotes, "which facts are filthy and obſcene, that he adds a commentary upon theſe hiſto- "rical narrations to illuſtrate them by teſtimonies, by reflexions, and by proofs, &c. "in which he ſometimes alledgeth the words of ſome authors, who have wrote "freely, ſome of them as Phyſicians or Lawyers, others as Gallants or Poets: "but that he never ſays any thing containing either explicitly, or even implicitly, "an approbation of impurity; that, on the contrary, he endeavours upon many oc- "caſions to expoſe it to our abhorrence, and to refute looſe morality." He afterwards proves by reaſons, by authorities, and by examples, that theſe ſorts of obſcenities, are not of the number of thoſe which we can reaſonably cenſure.

Mr Bayle made an addition to the article of Origen, upon occaſion of the Parrhaſiana of Mr le Clerc. "There are (ſays he) in that work ſome reflexions con- "cerning the diſpute between the Manicheans and the Orthodox. They are pre- "ceded by an obſervation as equitable as we could expect from a very honeſt man, "they are preceded, I ſay, by a judgment altogether agreeable to equity, truth, and "reaſon, concerning the views which I had in taking the liberty of relating the " objections of the Manicheans, and of confeſſing that natural light doth not furniſh 1702.

Digitized by Google

" Chriſtians with any means of ſolving them, whether we follow the ſyſtem of " St Auguſtin, or whether we follow that of Molina, and of the Remonſtrants, or " whether we have recourſe to that of the Socinians. Theodore Parrhaſe main" tains the contrary, and pretends that an Origeniſt is able to ſtop the mouths of
" the Manicheans . . . . . If a man of this ſort (ſays he) can reduce a Manichean to
" ſilence, what might not they do, who would reaſon infinitely better than the diſciples of
" Origen? We ſhall examin what he ſuppoſeth an Origeniſt might ſay, after having
" read all the objections of the Manicheans." Mr Bayle reduceth the anſwer of the Origeniſt to theſe propoſitions: I. God has made us free to make way for virtue and vice, bame and praiſe, rewards and puniſhments. II. He damns no man ſimply for having ſinned, but for not having repented of his ſins. III. The phyſical and moral evils of mankind are of ſo ſhort a duration in compariſon of eternity, that we cannot conclude from thence that God is not a beneficent Being and a lover of virtue. It is in this laſt propoſition, ſays Mr Bayle, that all the ſtrength of the Origeniſt lies: the reaſon is becauſe he ſuppoſeth that the torments of Hell will not be eternal, and that God after he has judged that creatures, endowed with liberty, have ſuffered enough, will afterwards make them happy to all eternity. The eternal happineſs which will be beſtowed on them according to the Origeniſt, fully anſwers the idea of the infinite mercy, though it ſhould be preceded by even many ages of ſuffering; for many ages are nothing in compariſon of an infinite duration, and there is infinitely leſs proportion between the time in which this world ſhall exiſt and eternity, than there is between a minute and a hundred millions of years. Therefore we have no reaſon to wonder that God looks upon the miſeries which we ſuffer as almoſt nothing; he who alone has an adequate idea of eternity, and who looks upon the beginning and the end of our ſufferings, as infinitely more near to one another than the beginning and the end of a minute. We ought to reaſon in the ſame manner concerning vice and vicious actions, which with reſpect to God do not continue a great while, and which in the main do not change any thing in the univerſe. If an artiſt ſhould make a clock, which by being once wound up ſhould go exactly during a whole year, excepting two or three ſeconds, which ſhould not be equal when it is firſt ſet a going, could one ſay that this artiſt could not pretend to great ſkill or exactneſs in his work. In the ſame manner if God amends in one day for all eternity the diſorders which the bad uſe of liberty has occaſioned among men, can any body be ſurprized that he has not put a ſtop to them during the moment in which we ſhall exiſt upon this Earth.

Mr Bayle obſerves that a Manichean might anſwer,

I. That it is not conſiſtent with ideal or infinitely perfect goodneſs, to beſtow a gift of which we foreſee the bad effects, without preventing them, though it is in our power: it is the eſſential and diſtinguiſhing property of ideal goodneſs, that it diſpoſeth the being poſſeſſed of it to grant favours, which by the ſhorteſt, and moſt certain means which it can contrive, render the condition of the perſon who receives them happy. This ideal goodneſs eſſentially and neceſſarily excludes every thing which can agree to a malicious being; and it is certain that ſuch a being would be very ready to beſtow favours, the uſe of which he ſhould know would prove fatal to the perſons to whom he ſhould grant them. Now if we conſult this idea of goodneſs, we ſhall not find that God, an infinitely good principle, can poſtpone the happineſs of his creatures to ſeveral ages of miſery, nor beſtow free will upon them by the uſe of which he was very certain they would procure their own damnation. But ſuppoſing that the infinite goodneſs of the Creator allowed him to beſtow upon his creatures, a liberty of which they might as readily make a bad uſe as a good one, we muſt at leaſt allow that it would engage him to watch over their conduct in ſuch a manner, as not to ſuffer them actually to ſin. As to the reaſon alledged by the Origeniſt, that it it was neceſſary to beſtow liberty upon the creature, in order to make way for virtue and vice, blame and praiſe, rewards and puniſhments; we might anſwer, that this reaſon inſtead of being an argument why an infinitely holy and infinitely good Being ſhould give free-will to creatures, is, on the contrary, what ought to have hindered him from doing ſo. Vice and blame ought to have no place among the works of an infinitely holy cauſe, every thing there ought to be praiſe-worthy, virtue alone ought to appear here, and vice be entirely baniſhed. And as every thing ought to be happy under the government of a ſupream Being infinitely good and infinitely powerful; puniſhments ought to have no place there. Virtue, praiſe, and benefits, may very well exiſt, though vice, blame, and puniſhments have no other exiſtence than what they call ideal or objective. The Origeniſt owns that this will be the caſe when all creatures endowed with freedom of will ſhall enjoy an eternal happineſs, which ſhall ſucceed to ſome ages of ſuffering. If he anſwers, that theſe bleſſings could not be a reward if creatures had not been endowed with liberty, it might be replied, that there is no proportion between eternal happineſs and the good uſe that man makes of his free-will; and therefore the eternal happineſs which God beſtows on a good man cannot, properly ſpeaking, be conſidered as a reward, it is a favour, it is a free gift. It ought 1702. not therefore to be pretended, ſtrictly ſpeaking, that it was neceſſary to confer free-will upon men in order to their deſerving the happineſs of paradiſe, and obtaining it by way of reward.

Digitized by Google

II. Impenitence being nothing elſe but a bad uſe of our liberty, it comes all to the ſame thing, whether we ſay that God damns men only becauſe they do not repent, or whether we ſay that he damns them ſimply becauſe they have ſinned. It is true that, generally ſpeaking, it ſhows a merciful diſpoſition to be willing to remit the puniſhment to thoſe who are ſorry for their faults: but when one promiſeth pardon under condition of repentance to ſuch as he very certainly knows will not repent, properly ſpeaking he promiſeth nothing, and in this caſe he is as fully reſolved to puniſh them as if he had offered them no favour at all: if he had a mind in good earneſt to exempt them puniſhment, he would hinder them from being impenitent, which is very eaſy for God to do who has an abſolute power over our hearts.

III. The Origeniſts would not dare to determine the duration of theſe torments which preceed this eternal happineſs: for not only they are ignorant of it, but likewiſe they would be afraid of making them too ſhort, leaſt they ſhould be accuſed of looſing the reins to ſinners; or of making them too long, leaſt they ſhould not give a juſt idea of the mercy of God. They would not dare to make them, for example, either of a hundred or of a million of years. They do not therefore truſt to the want of proportion between the duration of a million of ages, and an infinite duration; and we do not ſee that it ſolves the difficulty to ſay that there is infinitly leſs proportion between the duration of the earth and eternity, than there is between a minute and a hundred millions of years. What can be affirmed of theſe hundred millions of years, may likewiſe be affirmed of as many millions of ages, as there are drops of water in the ocean; ſince there is no proportion between finite and infinite. Yet in the mean while one cannot conceive that the puniſhment of a creature, which ſhould be continued for a hundred millions of ages, is conſiſtent with the ſovereign goodneſs of the creator. This number of years, which is nothing in compariſon of eternity, ſeems notwithſtanding a very long duration conſidered in itſelf, and with regard to the perſon ſuffering. Now let us diminiſh this number as much as we will, we ſhall only thereby make a diminution of rigour, and we ſhall never arrive at the ſupreme goodneſs of God except by ſuppreſſing even the laſt minute of the pains of hell. We commend the ſkill of a Clockmaker when his clock fails only in two or three ſeconds in a year; but the exactneſs of an infinitely perfect artiſt excludes abſolutely all exceptions. His goodneſs, his holineſs, his wiſdom, &c. are abſolutely ſimple, and without the leaſt mixture of the contrary qualities, without the leaſt mixture which can be conceived, or which can be in the nature of things.

Mr Bayle obſerves that "though Origen could anſwer the objections of the Manicheans, it would not follow that therefore they could be much more eaſily anſwered upon better and more orthodox principles: for all the advantage that he can find in this diſpute, proceeds from falſities which are peculiar to him, he giving on the one hand a great deal of power to free-will, and on the other hand ſubſtituting eternal happineſs to eternal miſery which he doth not admit." By ſuppoſing that eternal happineſs will follow the torments which the damned ſhall endure for ſome ages, we take away the moſt embarraſſing argument of the Manicheans; for their ſtrongeſt argument is founded on the hypotheſis, that all men, except a few, will be damned to all eternity; which is the doctrine of all the ſects of Chriſtians, excepting the Socinians.

In 1701 there was printed at Paris a book intitled Naudæana & Patiniana. Or Remarkable Particulars, taken from the converſations of Meſſieurs Naudé and Patin (1). In works of this kind, they make uſe of the name of ſome celebrated author, to introduce a great many hiſtorical and literary particulars, which have a relation to the time in which he lived, and which they ſometimes even tranſcribe from his works. Theſe Collections would not be contemptible, if one could depend upon the facts which are related in them; but they ordinarily fill them with an infinite number of things which are either falſe or uncertain, or which want many eſſential circumſtances. To make them uſeful they ſhould be attended with a Commentary both to correct them and to ſupply what is defective. This Mr * * * did with relation to the Naudæana. He both made Corrections and Additions of which he gives an account in a ſhort preface. "All the world knows (ſays he) how greedily the Ana are at preſent received. But neither is any body ignorant, that the little exactneſs which one finds in them very much diminiſheth the pleaſure which the variety of matter and liberty of ſentiments, inſeparable from books of this nature, might give the readers. It is therefore to put people in mind of making them henceforth more uſeful, that I have undertaken to add a ſort of Commentary to the pretended Naudæana. The only thing which I propoſe to do here is to fix the chronology of the facts mentioned in it, to add ſometimes abſolutely neceſſary circumſtances, and laſtly not to allow the Author to advance any thing, which is not ſupported by the teſtimony of ſome other perſon worthy of credit." Mr * * * tells us that he had a deſign of making likewiſe Additions and Corrections to the Patiniana, but that certain reaſons had obliged him to confine himſelf to the Naudæana.

(1) Naudæana & Patiniana. Ou ſingularitez remarquables, priſes des Converſations de Meſſieurs Naudé & Patin.

Father

Digitized by Google

Father de Vitry, ſent the Additions to the Naudæana to Mr Bayle, and he publiſhed 1702.
them at Amſterdam (1) with the Naudæana and Patiniana, under the title of a Second Edition reviſed, corrected, and enlarged, with Additions to the Naudæana which are not in the Paris edition. Mr Bayle added an Advertiſement to it in the name of the Bookſeller, wherein he ſays that this edition is incomparably preferable to that of Paris; that there were a great number of faults corrected in it, which disfigured the proper names ſo much that they were ſcarce to be known; that they had brought together all the paſſages which related to the ſame perſon, and which were diſperſed all over the book in the Paris edition; and laſtly, what was much more conſiderable, they had given very curious and very neceſſary ſupplements, from a manuſcript ſent them from Paris.

(1) By Francis vander Plaats 1703.

The ſecond edition of the Critical Dictionary had fatigued Mr Bayle. To di- 1703.
vert himſelf he compoſed a book intitled An Anſwer to the Queſtions of a Country Gentleman (2). He ſays in the Preface, that in compoſing it he had propoſed to write a book of a middle kind betwixt thoſe which employ our hours of ſtudy, and thoſe which we read only for amuſement. In conſequence of this he goes lightly over certain matters which might have been treated in a more compleat manner, he paſſes quickly from one ſubject to another, in order to introduce the greater variety, and when it was neceſſary to enlarge upon ſome matters, he doth it in ſuch a manner that every chapter ſhows them in a different light. He obſerves that he might have employed certain thoughts and facts which have an eſſential connection with the things which he has treated of, but that he abſtained from doing ſo, to avoid repeating things which are commonly known. He doth not doubt but ſome readers will think that he has made too many quotations, but he ſhows that this is a groundleſs complaint. It is to go againſt the nature of things (ſays he) to pretend, that an Author in a work deſigned to prove and clear up facts, ſhould only make uſe of his own thoughts, or that at leaſt he ought to quote very ſeldom. Mr Bayle adds, "That this book "is not written in the taſte which has prevailed for ſome years paſt, and of "which poſſibly the public begins already to be tired. It is not a collection of "miſcellaneous thoughts, or of maxims or characters, ſmart repartees or merry "tales. What is it then? It would poſſibly (anſwers he) be pretty difficult to de- "fine it, and I leave it to every reader to do it for himſelf; I ſhall only ob- "ſerve that this work has ſome reſemblance to thoſe books which appeared in ſo "great number in the XVIth Century under the title of Diverſæ Lectiones, or ſome "other title to the ſame purpoſe."

(2) Réponſe aux Queſtions d'un Provincial. A Rotterdam chez Reinier Leers 1704.

This work contains an agreeable and inſtructive variety of hiſtorical, critical, and literary diſcuſſions. One finds there likewiſe ſome philoſophical remarks and ſome political obſervations. As ſoon as this book appeared in Holland, one of my friends informed me that it was written by Mr Bayle. I deſired to know of Mr Bayle if this was true, and he made me the following anſwer. "I do not wonder (ſaid he) that "you have been told that I am the Author of a new book intitled, An Anſwer to the "Queſtions of a Country Gentleman. Every body here will have it that I have "wrote it, and if I were ambitious I would contradict this report, for this work is "not very proper to give a man a great reputation. It is a heap of little ob- "ſervations, which can only pleaſe thoſe who do not even neglect literary curio- "ſities, and do not, after the manner of the generality, look upon them as trifles (3)." Some time after this I deſired him to inform me whether this book would have any continuation, and told him the opinion of ſome people about it. "I will not here "repeat (anſwered he (4), what I think I told you very plainly, that I renounce "all intereſt in the Anſwer to the Queſtions of a Country Gentleman. I know how- "ever that the Bookſeller has no intention of publiſhing any other part to it. I "mean that there is no fixed reſolution or plan laid down in this matter, and "there is nothing of that kind in the preſs. Thoſe people are no doubt in the "right who ſay that it doth not ſufficiently intereſt the public, but they ought to "conſider that an Author cannot intereſt the public, except he diſcuſſes queſtions "which concern the honour and glory of a whole people, or of a whole Religion, "or at leaſt if he doth not treat of ſome important doctrine of morality, or poli- "tics. All the other ſubjects with which men of letters fill their books, are uſe- "leſs to the public, and we ought to conſider them as only frothy nouriſhment in them- "ſelves, but which notwithſtanding ſatisfy the curioſity of many Readers according "to the diverſity of their taſte. What is there, for example, leſs intereſting to "the public than the Bibliotheque choiſie of the Sieur Colomiés, which however is "a work that has been looked upon as excellent in its kind, and which almoſt "charms thoſe who are fond of literary particularities? I could name many other "books to you which are read, though they contain nothing that intereſts the "public."

(3) Letter November 9, 1703, p. 936. See likewiſe the Letter to Mr Marais, Auguſt 4, 1704, p. 1001.

(4) Letter February 8, 1704, p. 951.

In 1704 Mr Teiſſier publiſhed at Berlin, New Additions to the Elogies of learned 1704.
Men. Extracted from Thuanus's Hiſtory. Tom. III. (5). Mr Bayle had in his Dictionary criticiſed ſeveral paſſages in the two firſt volumes: Mr Teiſſier in this volume agreed that ſome of Mr Bayle's remarks were well founded, and undertakes to defend the other paſſages which had been cenſured. But in the mean time expreſſed

(5) Nouvelles Additions aux Eloges des Hommes ſçavans tirez de l'Hiſtoire de Mr de Thou. Tome troiſiéme.

Digitized by Google

1704. a great eſteem and reſpect for Mr Bayle. " I am obliged to him, (ſays he (1), for " taking the trouble of reading this work, and pointing out to me the paſſages in " which I have been miſtaken; the other Authors whom he has criticiſed ought " with me to expreſs their gratitude, and acknowledge that he has done great " ſervice to the Republic of Letters, by diſcovering their errors."

(1) Nouvelles Additions, &c. in the Advertiſement.

Mr Teiſſier ſeemed even to be diffident of the juſtneſs of his anſwers. " I do not " know (ſays he) if I have well maintained my cauſe, for I have to do with a " formidable adverſary, I mean with a Critic of vaſt erudition, exquiſite judgment, " extreme exactneſs, and who has ſignalized himſelf by ſeveral victories which he " has obtained over the greateſt Heroes of the Republic of Letters."

Mr Bayle anſwered Mr Teiſſier in a Memoir inſerted in the Hiſtory of the works of the Learned (2). He ſays that two reaſons made him haſten the publication of this Memoir: the one to ſhow Mr Teiſſier how ſenſible he was of his politeneſs, and the eſteem he had for his work; and the other to prevent the conſequences which might be drawn from Mr Teiſſier's anſwers. " It would (ſays he) be a very bad preju- " dice againſt my whole Dictionary, if among the Critical Obſervations which relate " to Mr Teiſſier's Additions, there were ſo many of them ill grounded as he pretends. " I therefore thought myſelf bound to diſcuſs ſome of them, in order to put every " reader in a condition to judge of the diſpute." He ſhows afterwards that Mr Teiſſier imputes to him things which he had not ſaid; that he would make him accountable for what is advanced by the Authors he quotes; that he ſometimes has expreſſed himſelf inaccurately, and given occaſion to people to miſtake his ſenſe; and that if he in order to ſupport his opinion has quoted Authors who in effect ſay the ſame thing that he has done, Mr Bayle has cited others to eſtabliſh his ſide of the queſtion, who are of greater weight and authority. He concludes with excuſing the errors which Mr Teiſſier may have fallen into. " This (ſays he) is what I " have to offer in defence of my remarks. I leave it to by my readers to " judge, whether they are juſt or not; but I declare at the ſame time, that al- " though they ſhould decide in my favour, they will notwithſtanding be obliged " to think Mr Teiſſier very excuſable, ſince he has followed Authors who muſt " needs have appeared well informed about theſe matters. No body can be more " perſuaded than I am that my ſmall obſervations will do no prejudice to his work; " and no body is more intereſted than I am to baniſh from the Republic of " Letters, that falſe and pernicious maxim, that a book cannot be worthy of eſteem " if it is not without errors. Matters do not go ill with ſome ſorts of books, eſpe- " cially with Dictionaries, if there are but ſeven or eight things to be corrected in " every page taking one with another."

(2) May 1704, p. 200, and the following.

(3) This anonymous writer was a Carthuſian of Paris, named Dom Alexis Gaudin. He was nephew to Abbé Gaudin, Canon of Nôtre Dame.

Mr Bayle likewiſe made uſe of Mr de Bauval's Journal to defend himſelf againſt the attacks of an anonymous writer (3), who had publiſhed a book at Paris intitled, The Diſtinction and Nature, Good and Evil: a Treatiſe wherein the error of the Manicheans, the ſentiments of Montagne, Charron, and of Mr Bayle, &c. are cenſured (4). This piece had been highly commended in ſome books printed at Paris, and they had even ſaid that Mr Bayle could not avoid anſwering it. Mr Bayle ſent for it, and after having examined it found that it required no anſwer with reſpect to thoſe who knew what he had ſaid concerning the Manicheans, and that a ſhort Memoir would be ſufficient for thoſe who did not know it. All that he had to do, was to ſhow that this anonymous Author had entirely miſtaken the ſtate of the queſtion, or at leaſt had pretended to miſtake it. In this Memoir (5) Mr Bayle obſerved that what this Author had ſaid of his own, or had borrowed from St Auguſtin tended only to ſhow. " I. That the ſyſtem of two principles is falſe, abſurd, and " evidently contrary to the ideas of the infinitely perfect Being. II. That this ſyſtem " is particularly abſurd, ridiculous, and abominable in the details, to which the Ma- " nicheans had deſcended." But theſe two propoſitions were no part of the matter in debate. Mr Bayle had expreſsly agreed to them, and conſequently there was no occaſion to prove them to him. He had only maintained that the hypotheſis of two principles, how falſe and impious ſoever, yet attacks the other hypotheſis with objections which natural light cannot ſolve. This was the only thing that this Author ought to have engaged with, and yet it is preciſely what he had neglected to do. He had ſatisfied himſelf with acting offenſively againſt the principles of the Manicheans, inſtead of ſtanding upon the defenſive, and repelling the attacks which the Manicheans might make againſt the moſt orthodox Chriſtians. The buſi- neſs here was not to make thruſts, but to parry thoſe which were made. In this manner Mr Bayle ſhows that this Author not having touched the Manichean ob- jections, he did not think himſelf intereſted in the diſpute, and that it was enough that he had informed the public why he did not anſwer him.

(4) La Diſtinction & la Nature du Bien & du Mal. Traité où l'on combat l'erreur des Manichéens, les ſentimens de Montagne & de Charron, & ceux de Monſieur Bayle, &c. Printed at Paris in 1704, in 12°.

This anonymous author had pretended that it was eaſy to deſtroy the ſyſtem of two principles by maintaining with St Auguſtin that evil is not a being but a ſimple privation: Mr Bayle owns that this being once proved would ſolidly re- fute the Manicheans in as far as they affirm that evil is a ſubſtance; but that a Manichean might eaſily get out of this difficulty, by ſhowing that this is only a diſpute about words, and a miſunderſtanding betwixt St Auguſtin and his adver- ſaries.

(5) Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Auguſt 1704, p. 369, and the following.

Digitized by Google

saries. He concludes by telling this anonymous Author, that if he thinks it proper to treat this dispute in a regular manner, he must begin anew, since he is not one jot further advanced in it than he was when he first sat down to write: but that if he has nothing to advance but what he finds in St Augustin he had better be silent. "These arguments (adds he) are able without doubt "to set the absurdities of the Manichean sect in a very strong light, but this is "not the affair in hand; the question here is only how to defend, and not at all how "to attack; nay it would not be sufficient to confound the impieties of the Ma- "nicheans by objections; one must enter into a dispute wherein we might get the "better of adversaries who would not give such advantages as they did with whom "St Augustin had to do; we ought to imagine ourselves to be engaged with "Sceptics, who being disgusted with the hypothesis of the two principles, reject it, "and yet will not embrace the other 'till we have freed it from the difficulties "with which it is encumbered. In a word, we must show by the light of na- "ture that there is a close connection betwixt the crimes and miseries of man- "kind, and the ideas of an infinitely holy, infinitely powerful, and infinitely free "being." The anonymous Author having no mind to engage in such a ticklish discussion, chose to be silent. 1704.

Mr Bayle at last fulfilled the promise which he had so often made of publishing a defence of his Thoughts concerning Comets. He began it in the month of November 1703, and resolved not to give over 'till he had finished it (1). The impression of it was begun in the month following (2), and the book appeared in the month of August 1704, under this title: *A Continuation of the Various Thoughts written to a Doctor of the Sorbonne, on occasion of a Comet which appeared in the month of December 1680. Or, An Answer to several difficulties proposed to the Author by Monsieur * (3). In the Advertisement Mr Bayle, says that though he had promised this work several times for ten years past, he had not made great haste to publish it, for several reasons which he relates: "So that when he all at once "took the resolution of composing it, he had found nothing prepared for that "purpose, and was obliged to awaken, or call very far back, his thoughts on this "subject, so that the materials were brought together and made use of at the same "time. There was only one thing in the Various Thoughts (adds he) which de- "termined me to write an apology, to wit, the parallel betwixt Atheism and Pa- "ganism; but being thus obliged to take up the pen in my own justification, I "thought myself bound to satisfy several difficulties which had been proposed to "me concerning other parts of the work, and I persuaded myself that it was neces- "sary to observe the same order in my answers which they had done in their "objections, in which they had followed the order of my chapters. I have fol- "lowed this method to the end of the first volume, but I was obliged to lay it "aside in the second, to prevent engaging myself in a labour much larger than I "had proposed. I have therefore inserted nothing in the second volume but what "regarded the parallel of Paganism and Atheism, and notwithstanding I have not "been able to go through that subject. There are some objections still left "undiscussed on this subject which I have reserved for a third volume (4)."

Mr Bayle next makes a remark which he thought very essential. "I beg of "the reader (says he) carefully to remember that this long dispute, wherein I have "maintained that Paganism is at least as bad as Atheism, is a question entirely "indifferent to the true Religion. The interests of Christianity are so separated "from those of Pagan Idolatry, that it can neither lose nor gain by Idolatry being "thought either as bad or worse than no Religion. This dispute therefore is of "the nature of those problems, wherein one may indifferently choose which "side he pleaseth, and orthodoxy not be concerned in the matter. It has been "always left to peoples choice to maintain that Arianism is worse than Sabellianism, "or that it is not; that the Nestorian heresy is more or less pernicious than the "Eutychian, and so of several other questions, wherein they who are mistaken "cannot be accused of doing the least hurt to the faith, provided they adhere to "the decisions of the ancient Councils &c." He in the next place obviates some objections, and makes some remarks to clear up this subject. We have seen that he had promised to answer at length in this work a piece of Mr Jurieu called the Short Review: he gives us here the reasons why he has not done so. "When I pub- "lished (says he) in 1694 an addition to my Various Thoughts, to answer in a few "words a pamphlet intitled the Short Review &c. I promised a full refutation of it, "yet notwithstanding I have taken no notice of it in this work, for I find that my "preliminary answer has been more than sufficient."

The principal objections discussed in the first volume of this Continuation of the Thoughts concerning Comets, relate to the following six questions. I. Whether the consent of all nations, in acknowledging a Deity, be a certain and demonstrative proof of the existence of a God. II. Whether there be any certainty in Astrology. III. If the Pagan Religion taught the practice of virtue, or of good morals. IV. If all things were made for man. V. If Historians ought to relate things incredible and superstitious. VI. If the Polytheism of the Pagans has been exaggerated. The

(1) Letter to Mr Des Maizeaux, November 9, 1703, pag. 936.

(2) See Letter to Mr Minutoli December 16, 1703. p. 940.

(3) Continuation des Pensées diverses, écrites à un Docteur de Sorbonne à l'occasion de la Comete qui parut au mois de Decembre 1680. Ou Réponse à plusieurs difficultez que Monsieur  a proposées à l'Auteur. A Rotterdam chez Reinier Leers, 1705, 2 Vols in 12°.

(4) Mr Bayle never wrote this third volume.

Digitized by Google

1704. ſecond volume is employed in ſhowing that he had reaſon in his Thoughts concerning Comets to ſay, That Atheiſm is not a greater evil than Idolatry. Mr Bayle points out the writers whom he had already alledged in that work, and cites ſeveral others, among which are Fathers of the Church, and Catholic and Proteſtant Doctors, who have affirmed that there are things as bad or worſe than Atheiſm, or who have even declared that Idolatry is worſe than Atheiſm, and who have notwithſtanding never been expoſed to eccleſiaſtic cenſures upon that account. From hence he concludes that he was intitled to maintain the ſame opinion, and that if many writers have been of a contrary ſentiment, this only proves that the queſtion in debate is of a problematical nature, and left to every body's diſcretion, and concerning which every body is at liberty to chooſe either ſide without prejudice to orthodoxy.

He likewiſe here examines the queſtion (1), Whether a ſociety entirely compoſed of true Chriſtians, and ſurrounded by other nations either of Infidels, or of worldly minded Chriſtians, ſuch as all the nations where Chriſtianity prevails are at preſent, and have been for a long while, would be able to preſerve itſelf, and declares himſelf for the negative. Upon this occaſion he acquaints us with the notion which a learned man had formed to himſelf of Chriſtianity. "I was acquainted (ſays he (2), with a "learned man, who fancied that Jeſus Chriſt had not propoſed his Religion as a "thing which could ſuit with all ſorts of perſons, but only with a ſmall number "of the wiſe. He founded his notion upon this, that a whole nation which ſhould "practiſe exactly all the rules of Chriſtianity, would not be able to preſerve itſelf "againſt the invaſions of its neighbours. Now it could not be the intention of "God, that an entire ſociety ſhould be deprived of all the human means of pre-"ſerving itſelf independant of other people. This man would therefore perſuade "me, that as the Stoic Philoſophy which was impracticable for a whole ſociety "was deſigned only for exalted minds, ſo the Goſpel in like manner was only "appointed for Aſcetics, for choſen perſons capable of abſtracting themſelves "from the world, and of devoting themſelves, in caſe of neceſſity, to the ſoli-"tude of the moſt frightful deſarts. In a word (ſaid he), we ought to conſider "the Goſpel only as a model of the utmoſt perfection, propoſed to thoſe to "whom nature ſtrengthened by Grace ſhould give a reliſh for the moſt refined "ſpirituality. Thus St Benedict, St Dominic, St Francis of Aſſiſe, and other "founders of orders, have laid down rules and obſervances, not for all man-"kind, but for interior and ſpiritual Chriſtians the number of which is very ſmall. "I anſwered this learned friend that he was evidently miſtaken, ſince it is plain "by reading the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles that the law of JESUS CHRIST is pro-"poſed to all ſorts of people, of what ſex and condition ſoever, not as a choice "which they are left at liberty to make or not, but as the only means of avoiding "eternal damnation."

(1) Continuation of the Various Thoughts &c. Tom. ii. pag. 598.

(2) Ibid. pag. 602, 603.

This book engaged Mr Bayle in ſome diſputes. He had curſorily criticiſed the ſyſtem of Dr Cudworth and Dr Grew concerning plaſtic and vital natures. Theſe Gentlemen ſuppoſe that theſe are immaterial ſubſtances, endowed with a power of forming plants and animals, without knowing what they do. Mr Bayle obſerved (3), that thereby theſe Gentlemen, without thinking of it and contrary to their intentions, had weakened the moſt ſenſible argument we have for the Being of God taken from the admirable ſtructure of the univerſe, and gave an opportunity to the Stratonicians to elude it by retortion. For if God could give to a plaſtic nature the faculty of producing the organization of animals, without its having the idea of what it doth; they will conclude from hence that the formation of the regularity which we obſerve in the world, is not inconſiſtent with want of knowledge, and ſo the world may be the effect of a blind cauſe.

(3) Ibid. Tom. i. p. 90, 91.

Mr le Clerc had adopted this hypotheſis, and thought himſelf obliged to defend it (4). He was offended that Mr Bayle had ſaid that it gave ground to elude by way of retortion one of the arguments which moſt embaraſſeth the Atheiſts. He complained that this remark would raiſe very diſadvantageous notions of the Religion and of the abilities of Dr Cudworth and Dr Grew, and that he found himſelf intereſted in this matter. He ſays that if Mr Bayle had ſufficiently underſtood their opinion, he would have ſeen that it gives no handle to Atheiſts, becauſe the plaſtic and vital natures which they maintain, are only inſtruments in the hand of God, that they have no power but what God has given them, that God governs their actions, that they are inſtrumental cauſes, produced and employed by the principal; and that we cannot ſay that a building was made without art, becauſe not only the hammers, the rules, the ſquares, the compaſſes, the axes, the ſaws, but even the hands of men which made uſe of theſe utenſils, are things deſtitute of intelligence: it is ſufficient that the mind of the Architect has conducted all theſe, and employed them to accompliſh his deſigns. It is evident then, adds he, that Atheiſts, who deny the exiſtence of the intelligent cauſe which has guided and regulated the formation of all things, cannot retort the argument which theſe two Philoſophers have oppoſed to them.

(4) Bibliotheque choiſie, Tom. v. Art. iv. pag. 283, and the following.

(5) Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Auguſt 1704, Art. viii. pag. 380, and the following.

Mr Bayle anſwered (5), that he had not the leaſt intention of doing prejudice either to the orthodoxy or the learning of theſe Gentlemen, and that he had even taken care care to prevent any ſuch thought. He adds, that the defect he had found in their hypotheſis, was not peculiar to them: that almoſt all the Philoſophers, both ancient and modern were in the ſame caſe. He ſhows that if theſe Gentlemen had conſidered their plaſtic natures as ſimple inſtruments in the hand of God, they would have fallen into all the inconveniences of the Carteſian hypotheſis which they deſigned to avoid; ſo that it muſt be ſuppoſed that they believed them to be active principles, which do not require being puſhed on and directed without interruption, but that it is ſufficient, that God ſet them in their proper places, and watch over their conduct, in order to ſet them right when it is neceſſary. Now this being granted, he maintains, that there is room for a retortion. For when we bring the order and ſymmetry of the world as a proof of the exiſtence of God, we ſuppoſe that in order to produce any regular work, the agent muſt have an idea of it: while according to Dr Cudworth the plaſtic natures which produce plants and animals have no idea of what they do. If it be anſwered, that they were created by a Being who knows all things, and that they only execute his idea's, the Stratonician will reply that if they execute them in quality of efficient cauſes, this is as incomprehenſible as the thing objected againſt, ſince it is as difficult to execute a plan which we do not know, but which another knows, as it is to follow a plan which is known by no body. Since you allow, will the Stratonician ſay, that God can give to creatures a faculty of producing excellent works without the leaſt knowledge; you ought likewiſe to own, that there is no neceſſary connexion between the faculty of producing excellent works, and the idea of their eſſence, and of the manner of their production; and conſequently you ought not to pretend that theſe two things cannot be ſeparated in nature, and that nature may not have of itſelf, what theſe plaſtic beings have, according to you, by the gift of God. To abridge this diſpute Mr Bayle reduced it to this queſtion of fact: Have theſe Gentlemen taught that plaſtic and vital natures are only paſſive inſtruments in the hand of God? Mr le Clerc (ſays he) ſeems to affirm it, by his example of an Architect who erects a very regular building, though all the tools of which he makes uſe be void of underſtanding. It is evident, added Mr Bayle, that with regard to the Architect, all his tools, and even his hands, are meerly paſſive inſtruments, which only move in as far as he puſheth them. If the plaſtic and vital natures be in the ſame caſe, I confeſs there is no retortion to be feared, but on the other hand God alone in this caſe will be the next and immediate cauſe of all generation; which would be to admit the Carteſian doctrine, which they meant to reject. 1704.

Digitized by Google

(1) Bibliotheque choiſie. Tom. vi. Art. vii. pag. 422, and the following.

Mr le Clerc replied (1) that Dr Cudworth did not look upon the plaſtic natures to be paſſive inſtruments; that they are under the direction of God, who conducts them, though we do not know in what manner; that though they act regularly, yet it is under the direction of God, who intervenes as he thinks fit, and when he thinks fit; that the ſole difference which is between their action and the faculty of beaſts, who do ſeveral things in a regular manner when men conduct them, tho' they do not know what they do, is, that we do not know how God intervenes, and that we ſee how men act. But however this be, adds he, the Atheiſts cannot retort Dr Cudworth's argument againſt him, becauſe God is Author of the order in which the plaſtic nature operates; and that according to the Atheiſts notions, matter moves of itſelf without any cauſe which regulates it, or which has given it a power of moving regularly. If any body ſhould ſay that it has it of itſelf, that would not be to retort the argument, this would be to make a ſuppoſition, which it would be eaſy to overturn.

(2) Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, December 1704. Art. xii. pag. 540, and the following.

Mr Bayle again replied (2), and began with ſtating the queſtion anew. He ſaid that the retortion was founded on this, that, if we ſuppoſe that there are beings which have the faculty of organizing animals without knowing what they do, we cannot refute thoſe who ſay that the world may have been produced without the operation of an intelligent cauſe. It would be to no purpoſe to anſwer to them, that theſe beings have received this faculty from an intelligent cauſe: for by making this anſwer we would ſtill own the compatibility of the power to organize matter with want of underſtanding, and conſequently would confute ourſelves. Mr Bayle next examines Mr le Clerc's Reply. He owns that a creature without underſtanding may under the direction of God do certain things as regularly as a cauſe endowed with underſtanding; but that in that caſe this creature would be only a paſſive inſtrument in the hand of God. And ſo the plaſtic natures of Dr Cudworth cannot be the efficient cauſe of organization, but at moſt the inſtrument. They are no more capable of diſcernment in the firſt moment of conception, than in all the other moments which follow until the organization is compleated; it is neceſſary therefore that God apply and direct them without interruption from the beginning to the end: from whence it neceſſarily follows, that they are only paſſive inſtruments in his hands, and ſo Dr Cudworth cannot avoid the retortion, except by ſuppoſing what the Carteſians ſuppoſe. The example of beaſts, adds he, confirms the difficulty; for if we conſider all the ſervices which we draw from them, we ſhall find that in all things wherein their knowledge doth not ſerve them for a guide, they muſt be puſhed or directed as if they were pure machines.

Digitized by Google

1704. Mr le Clerc had ſaid, that Madam Maſham, Dr Cudworth's daughter, had wrote him a letter, wherein ſhe complained with reaſon of Mr Bayle's proceeding with regard to her father; and that ſhe had allowed him to print it, but that he did not think it proper to do ſo; becauſe poſſibly Mr Bayle might change his opinion when he had better underſtood Dr Cudworth's ſyſtem. Madam Maſham had been prejudiced againſt Mr Bayle: but he appealed to what he had at firſt anſwered to Mr le Clerc, and added that if this Lady, who was very learned, would be pleaſed to examin the matter, ſhe would find that ſhe had been miſinformed. And in fact when ſhe had ſeen Mr Bayle's explanations, ſhe deſired Mr le Clerc to ſuppreſs the Letter which ſhe had wrote to him (1).

Mr le Clerc ſtill maintained that Dr Cudworth gave no room for retortion. He ſaid (2), that the conception of a deſign, ſuch as that of forming animals, is incompatible with a want of knowledge in the firſt cauſe; but that it is not ſo as to the ſecond cauſes, which act under the direction of this firſt cauſe: that it is not neceſſary that God ſhould direct and puſh them continually as we do paſſive inſtruments, and "(3) that he had proved this by the uſe which men make of beaſts; "whoſe organs they do not move, which act notwithſtanding in a regular manner, "in order to produce a certain effect, which they are entirely ignorant of. They "are not puſhed, as Mr Bayle ſays, in the ſame manner as if they were pure "machines, ſince they move their own members. For example, can one ſay that "a dog, who being placed in a ſort of wheel turns it about by going in it, and by "this mean turns a ſpit and what is tied to it, is employed in the ſame manner "as a jack? the jack is ſet a going merely by weights, but we do not give mo-"tion to the limbs of the dog; it is he himſelf who moves them, and though "we ſhould put in his place any ſort of machine it would never produce the ſame "effect. I own, adds he, that I cannot tell in what manner God applies himſelf to "matter and directs the immaterial forming natures, without being author of all their "actions; but we cannot reject this opinion as abſurd, after the direct proofs which "have been brought of it. Otherwiſe we muſt reject every thing of which we have "not compleat or adequate ideas, which would be to fall into a ridiculous Pyr-"rhoniſm." As to what Mr Bayle had ſaid that he preferred the ſyſtem of occaſional cauſes to all others, becauſe it ſeemed to him to be the moſt proper to eſtabliſh the being of God; Mr le Clerc declared that he would not engage in any diſpute on that ſubject. "I only thought (ſaid he (4), that after having propoſed Dr Cud-"worth's opinion as probable, I was obliged to ſhow that Mr Bayle was in the "wrong to ſay that it made way for the Atheiſts to deſtroy, by a retortion, the "ſtrongeſt argument which can be produced againſt them, and which is drawn "from the order of the univerſe. After having done this, I have no more to add "upon this ſubject. I will not enter into perſonal matters, nor penetrate into "deſigns, which cannot be diſcovered, without vexing thoſe who might be ſuppected "of them."

(1) See Letters to Mr Coſte of the 30th of April, and the 3d of July, 1705, p. 1017, and the following.

(2) Bibliotheque choiſie, Tom. vii. Art. viii. pag. 281, and the following.

(3) Ibid. pag. 286, 287.

(4) Ibid. pag. 288.

Mr Bayle recapitulated this diſpute, and examined it more thoroughly (5). He obſerved that Dr Cudworth's hypotheſis, to wit, that God has the idea of the organization of animals, doth not in the leaſt leſſen the incomprehenſibility and impoſſibility of his ſuppoſition that the true efficient and immediate cauſe of organization knows nothing at all; and that the Stratonicians may make uſe of the ſecond hypotheſis in order to conteſt the other: that they will ſhow him that theſe two things appear equally impoſſible, the one that the inventors of a machine know nothing, the other that they ſhould cauſe it to be executed by perſons who have no idea of it. Mr Bayle adds, that the example of a dog who is the cauſe of a ſpit's turning about, was out of the caſe which he had propoſed: for he had not ſaid, that we are obliged to puſh and direct beaſts in the ſervices which we receive from them, but only that in all caſes in which their knowledge doth not ſerve them inſtead of a guide, we muſt puſh them or direct them, as if they were pure machines. "(6) A dog placed in a ſort of wheel is not ignorant that he muſt walk, "and that he will be beaten if he ſtops; is not he threatened and even beat every "time he interrups his action? He is not therefore without a certain kind of know-"ledge which ſerves to direct him, he ſees the objects which are round about him, "he is afraid, and he acts by this fear, or by ſome other paſſion upon his loco-"motive faculty; and in the ſituation in which he is placed he cannot move him-"ſelf, without at the ſame time moving the wheel round its center, and by that "means turning the ſpit. It is not therefore neceſſary to puſh him or make him "move his legs, it is ſufficient to excite ſome ſentiment or paſſion in him which "may make him move. Let us obſerve, continued Mr Bayle, that the motion "which he gives to himſelf is continually under the direction of another cauſe. It "is not a motion which makes him go from place to place. The dog continues "ſtill in the ſame place although he never ceaſeth to move. From whence proceeds "this? It is becauſe his motion is continually determined by the diſpoſition of the "wheel to be ſuch as it is. Here therefore is an example which proves that "in all caſes wherein the knowledge of beaſts doth not ſerve them for a guide, "we muſt either puſh or direct them, if we want to make them ſerve for

(5) An Anſwer to the Queſtions of a Country Gentleman, Tom. iii. chap. clxxix, and the following.

(6) Ibid. chap. clxxxi. p. 1279, 1280.

Digitized by Google

" any purpoſe. All muletiers and coachmen will confirm this. A coach- 1704.
" man may be at reſt when his horſes know the way, or content himſelf with taking " notice when they do not do their duty; but when they are ignorant that they
" muſt change their road, he is obliged to be active in order to give them the
" neceſſary direction." Mr Bayle added, that as to the direct proofs which had been brought of the exiſtence of plaſtic natures, he did not believe them to be ſo ſtrong that one muſt either be a Sceptic, or embrace that opinion; but that he would not enter upon that enquiry.

(1) Ibid. chap. clxxxii. pag. 1286, 1287.

The concluſion of Mr le Clerc's laſt Reply gave Mr Bayle occaſion to ſay (1), that Mr le Clerc " had not ſufficiently reflected upon a thing which may be
" eaſily known, to wit, that the ſame zeal which inclines one man to maintain
" that a reaſon has a great deal of ſolidity for the exiſtence of God, may incline
" another man to maintain that it is weak and dangerous. Theſe two men may " have the ſame intention, they differ only in their judgment about the quality of " an argument. They ought both therefore, ſaid Mr Bayle, to abſtain from all
" ſuſpicious expreſſions, to abſtain, I ſay, not by ſaying that they will abſtain from " them, for this doth not fail to ſtrike home, but by a perfect ſilence. Equity ought " immediately to preſent itſelf to their mind, and hinder them from ſaying any " thing which may be agreeable to the malice of their readers. The warmeſt de" fenders of orthodoxy have always preſerved to themſelves the liberty of examining " the arguments for the exiſtence of God, and for any other article of faith, and
" of rejecting ſuch as they thought weak." He ſhows that in the Church of Rome they acknowledge a difference betwixt conteſting a doctrine, and conteſting ſome of the reaſons brought to prove it; and that this liberty is ſtill greater among Pro-

(2) Ibid. pag. 1290, 1291.

teſtants. " But be it as it will, continued he (2), you will eaſily obſerve that the " diſpute about Dr Cudworth's plaſtic natures doth not intereſt Religion. It is an " hypotheſis lately invented which has very few followers. Whether it doth or doth
" not furniſh the Atheiſts with a pretence to chicane, is of ſmall importance. This
" doth not in the leaſt hurt the many victorious arguments, which this learned Eng-
" liſhman has made uſe of and illuſtrated in a wonderful manner againſt Atheiſm.
" The ſyſtem of the Peripatetics has been in the ſame caſe with theſe plaſtic na-
" tures during many ages and is ſo ſtill: ſo that the diſpute of which I am ſpeaking
" only concerns two private perſons, is only a queſtion of Logic, and of Na" tural Philoſophy. All the queſtion is whether Mr Bayle has reaſon to ſay that " a certain retortion can be made, or if Mr le Clerc has reaſon to maintain the " contrary, and has not given occaſion to his readers to diſcover the embarraſſing
" conſequences and defects of his plaſtic natures."

(3) Bibliotheque choiſie, Tom. ix. Art. x. pag. 361, 362.

Mr le Clerc took this matter very differently. " When Mr Bayle (ſaid he (3),
" accuſed Dr Cudworth of giving a handle to the Atheiſts to retort ſome of the " arguments which are brought againſt them; I at firſt believed that it was be-
" cauſe he did not ſufficiently underſtand Dr Cudworth's ſyſtem, for in fact he " did not underſtand it . . . . . but as I have ſeen that he would receive no explana" tion upon that ſubject, after I had explained it to him thrice, I no longer doubted
" that he ſaid this with a deſign to excuſe the Atheiſts, as he doth in his " Thoughts concerning Comets, and in the Continuation. . . . . Being vexed, as it
" ſeems, to ſee Dr Cudworth triumph over the Atheiſts in a very glorious and ad" vantageous manner for Chriſtianity, and not daring to deny this, he thought it
" was neceſſary at any rate to blacken that great man's manner of philoſophizing,
" by accuſing him of furniſhing arms to thoſe who deny the being of a God."
Mr le Clerc afterwards ſays that all the difficulty is now reduced to this one propoſition: " Whether there can exiſt an immaterial ſelf-acting nature, which forms
" in miniature, by a faculty which it has received from God, machines ſuch as
" the bodies of plants and animals are, without having an idea of them." He maintained that this is poſſible, ſtill ſuppoſing that the creator of this nature has in himſelf perfectly clear ideas of what it doth; without which it would be impoſſible for a blind nature to act with order. But that it doth not follow from hence, that this nature is a merely paſſive inſtrument in the hand of God, becauſe according to the ſuppoſition it is a ſelf-acting nature. He alledged the example of beaſts, which men employ as active inſtruments to draw loaded carriages, and to turn milſtones in a certain order; without knowing either what they do, or why they do it, or whether they obſerve any order or no. He related likewiſe the principal actions of birds, and ſaid that how admirable ſoever thoſe actions are, yet they were performed without knowledge; ſince otherwiſe we ſhould be obliged to conclude that theſe animals have a great deal more wit, and reaſon infinitely better than man, which would be very abſurd. He owned that he had not a clear idea of theſe plaſtic natures, that he did not know how God applies them to matter, nor how he directs them without being author of their actions: but that he had a very clear idea of an active inſtrument which is Author of it's own actions, and yet doth not know what it doth, becauſe he ſaw that beaſts were in many reſpects inſtruments of this nature, and that this was the ſubject in queſtion. He added, that we ought not, as Mr Bayle did, to take out one propoſition from Dr Cudworth's ſyſtem, as if he had advanced only that, and give it up to the Atheiſts to be retorted:

Digitized by Google

1704. that Dr Cudworth had not maintained in general, that what has no idea of order can act with order; but that an infinitely powerful Being who has an idea of order may create other Beings which have it not, and who notwithstanding observe it; because he may give them a certain activity which they can only exercise in the manner which he thinks fit, and apply them to matter upon which they act of themselves, although we do not know how. After having thus explained Dr Cudworth's opinion, he says that he will not "stay here to refute particularly all Mr Bayle's "similies, which are not at all just, which make us forget the state of the question, "and which turn only upon confused ideas which he perplexeth with a design to "favour the Atheists. Neither will I take up time (adds he) in exposing his weak "reasonings, to shew that he has not understood me, and has not sufficiently "taken notice with what view I have spoken. This would be to tire the reader, "and one could not avoid troublesome repetitions and fatiguing discussions of "trifles."

Mr Bayle considered his last Answer as the end of this dispute, and contented himself with making some reflexions on Mr le Clerc's reply. "We may hence- "forth (says he (1), look upon the plastic natures of Dr Cudworth as at an end. "Not that Mr le Clerc doth not still make a great noise about it, but he only para- "phraseth what he has already said, and leaves my replies in their full force. It is "not necessary therefore to support them by any new remark; it will be sufficient to "desire the readers to compare them with his last piece." He observes that Mr Leibniz had acknowledged the justness of the retortion of the Stratonicians. "But let "us not talk any more of retortion, adds he; Mr le Clerc obviates this sufficiently "by the necessity which he supposeth there is, that God should intervene in the "work of these plastic natures. It has been proved to him, that an interrup- "ted direction would not be sufficient, from whence it follows that God directs them "without intermission, which shows that they can only be reckoned an instrumental "cause. Now in this case there is no ground for further dispute; for Mr Bayle al- "ways laid down this alternative, that either the retortion of the Stratonician must "take place, or the plastic natures are not the true efficient cause of the organization of "the fœtus. The consequence which ought to be drawn from Mr le Clerc's answer "is, that they are only an instrument in the hand of God, whether he directs them "immediately, or whether he place them like a spring in a machine, the form of "which is the permanent cause of the direction of all the pieces, or whether "he makes use of some other determination equivalent to this. Let no body "object that they are endowed with activity, for this doth not hinder them from being "a mere instrument." He says, that he had shown that Mr le Clerc could receive no advantage from the example of beasts, and that to suppose, as he did, that birds perform many things with a wonderful regularity, tho' they are neither directed by their own knowledge, nor by the laws of mechanism; is to bring back the occult qualities of the Schoolmen. "It would be (adds he (2), a sort of inhumanity to push "Mr le Clerc any farther: he himself owns that he is embarassed, which is a sign "that he is reduced to the last extremity. He is therefore sufficiently punished, "especially if we consider, that being infatuated with his plastic natures, he has ex- "posed himself to the ridicule of all the modern Philosophers. They cannot com- "prehend how a man who has shown a good taste in other things, should chuse ra- "ther to fall into the most absurd galimatias, than to part with his conceit." He says that he was persuaded, that if Dr Cudworth had foreseen the consequences of his System, he would have reformed it; and that if he had been alive when Mr le Clerc's first Answer was published, he would have been very much surprized to see his honour interested where there was so little occasion for it: that Mr Bayle's observation concerned Thomas Aquinas, Scotus, and such superior genius's, as well as Dr Cudworth and Dr Grew: that the last named gentleman gave himself no trouble about it, although Mr le Clerc had in a manner provoked him to it. "Dr "Cudworth (says he (3), would have been no less indifferent about an objection "in which he was no more concerned than almost all mankind, and would have "no doubt suspected that this was only made a pretext to serve for the begin- "ning of a quarrel. He would have imagined that there was a snake in the grass, "some old leaven, some abscess which had been forming itself a great while, "and which must needs break at last." Mr Bayle adds that knowing how touchy Mr le Clerc was, he had treated him with the utmost tenderness, and had abstained from reproaching him with not understanding Dr Cudworth's System: that Mr le Clerc to cloak his inability to answer his arguments had treated them as trifling: in a word that the victory obtained over him on the subject of the plastic natures had so confounded him, that he was beside himself whenever he returned to that subject, and that he had loosed the reins to calumny; "like parish Priests "who cry out Heretic, if any of their parishioners though agreeing in the main "to the truth of their doctrine, do not agree about the force of the reasons they "make use of to prove it."

Thus ended the controversy which Mr Bayle had with Mr le Clerc concerning the plastic natures of Dr Cudworth.

(1) Answer for Mr Bayle to Mr le Clerc concerning the 3d and 10th Articles of the 9th Tome of the Bibliotheque choisie, pag. 31.

(2) Ibid. pag. 34.

(3) Ibid. p. 35, 36.

About

Digitized by Google

About the end of the year 1705, Mr Bayle publiſhed at the ſame time the ſecond and third volumes of his Anſwer to the Queſtions of a Country Gentleman. In the Preface to the ſecond volume he obſerved that there is this difference betwixt theſe volumes and the firſt, that the firſt contained a great variety of literary and hiſtorical particulars, and few matters of reaſoning, and theſe on the contrary contained a great deal of reaſoning, and little variety of literary and hiſtorical articles. "I have not heard (adds he) that any body complained that there was too "much reaſoning in the firſt part, and many have been heard to complain that "there was not enough of it there, I have therefore thought it proper to change "the proportions, by allowing the greateſt ſhare in the continuation of this work "to what was only an acceſſory in the firſt volume." The plan of this book furniſhed him with a natural occaſion of introducing all ſorts of ſubjects: he took this opportunity of examining ſome pieces which had been lately publiſhed, wherein he found himſelf intereſted. 1705.

Dr King, Biſhop of Londonderry, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Dublin, had publiſhed a treatiſe concerning the Origin of Evil (1): Mr Bayle examined his principles, but not having the book, and conſidering that it would have been difficult to find it in Holland, he confined himſelf to ſome general obſervations upon the long extracts which Mr Bernard had given of it in his News from the Republic of Letters (2). Dr King had compoſed this work in order to ſolve the difficulties which the Manicheans raiſe in Mr Bayle's Dictionary on the ſubject of phyſical and moral evil. Experience teacheth us that man is not only ſubject to diſeaſes, pains, troubles, and ſundry other miſeries, but he is likewiſe liable to commit an infinite number of crimes. The queſtion is how to reconcile theſe facts with the common notions of the ſovereign goodneſs and ſovereign wiſdom of the infinitely perfect Being. Dr King had a great deal of penetration, and a very nice judgment. His penetration made him comprehend the whole extent and conſequences of the difficulty; he made uſe of new principles to ſolve it. He maintains that God's end in creating the univerſe, was not to procure to himſelf glory, as the generality of Divines affirm, but to exerciſe his power, and communicate his goodneſs: that it is not true that the earth was made for man, that it is the ignorance or pride of man which inſpires him with this chimerical imagination; that the quantity of happineſs in the world is greater than the miſery to be found there, an evident proof of which we have in the horror which all men have at death, and their violent deſire for life, even when they are overwhelmed with the miſeries, of which they moſt bitterly complain; that man being created of matter, becomes neceſſarily ſubject to diſeaſes, grief &c; but that pain and paſſions are uſeful for the preſervation of the body, ſince they warn it of what might deſtroy it; that the evils are ſo connected with the good that they are inſeparable; that theſe are inconveniencies which are neceſſary conſequences of the laws of nature; that phyſical evil is as neceſſary in the univerſal Syſtem of Beings, as the equality of the diameters is eſſential to a circle; and that theſe neceſſary evils do not at all intereſt the goodneſs of God.

(1) De origine mali. Authore Gulielmo King, S. T. D. Epiſcopo Derenſi. Dublinii, 1702, in 8° It was reprinted at London the ſame year.

(2) Months of May and June 1703.

But the great difficulty regards moral evil, that is, the bad choices of man, the bad determination of his will, and in a word, all that is called vice. In order to ſolve it, Dr King has recourſe to the ordinary ſolution, to wit, free-will; but he gives a notion of it very different from that of other Divines. He makes it to conſiſt in the power of chooſing, independently of the other faculties of a free agent, and of the quality of objects; ſo that this power is not determined by the goodneſs of objects, but the objects are rendered good and agreeable by its choice and determination. This perfect independence is the ſource of mens happineſs, ſince it makes him maſter of his determinations, and diſpoſer of his fate. Conſequently God would have diſturbed the happineſs of the firſt man in its ſource, if he had not left him at liberty to chuſe what he ſhould pleaſe. It was neceſſary therefore that man ſhould be capable of making a bad choice, and falling into ſin. God could only hinder the bad uſe of liberty in the three following manners. I. By not creating any Being endowed with liberty. II. By making uſe of his almighty power to prevent free agents from abuſing their liberty. III. By carrying man to another habitation, where he ſhould find no occaſion which could incline him to make a bad choice. But if none of theſe three be practicable, we muſt conclude, that the permiſſion of ſin is not blameable. Now 1. If God had created no Beings endowed with liberty, the world muſt have been a pure machine, incapable of any action; for matter is moved, but doth not move itſelf. Beſides, God has created the world to exerciſe his virtues, and to pleaſe himſelf in his work. Now the more a creature is like to him, and the more ſelf-ſufficient it is, the more agreeable it muſt needs be to him. But we cannot make any doubt that a creature which moves of itſelf, which is pleaſed in itſelf, which is capable of receiving and acknowledging a favour, is more excellent, and muſt pleaſe him who made it, more than one which is not capable of acting, feeling, and of acknowledging a favour. 2. If God ſhould interpoſe his almighty power, to prevent the bad uſe of liberty, greater inconveniencies would ariſe from thence, than from the abuſe itſelf which we can make 1705. of this liberty. It requires no less power to hinder the exercise of liberty, than to stop the course of the sun, and besides it would be necessary, that God should entirely change his manner of acting with free agents, which is to keep them in their duty by the motives of rewards and punishments. It would deprive us of what is most agreeable to us in our determinations, which is to be persuaded that we had it in our power not to determine ourselves. It were to deprive God of the exercise of one of his most excellent virtues, to desire that he should interpose his power in order to hinder all the evil determinations of the will, in which his wisdom is exercised in the most excellent manner, and in which it shines with a particular lustre. III. As to the third manner of hindering the bad use of liberty, this were to desire that God should entirely destroy human nature, which was created to dwell upon the earth and no where else. It is true that good men shall be afterwards carried to another place, where they shall continue to all eternity, but that is only after they have been prepared upon earth, like wild stocks in a nursery before they are transplanted in order to bear fruit elsewhere.

Digitized by Google

(1) News from the Republic of Letters, February and March 1705.

(2) News &c. February 1705, p. 125.

(3) Conformité de la Foi avec la Raison: ou defense de la Religion, contre les principales difficultez repanduës dans le Dictionaire historique & critique de Mr Bayle. At Amsterdam 1705.

Thus Dr King answered the objections founded upon physical and moral evil. As he supposeth that his adversaries do not admit a Revelation, he makes use only of principles drawn from natural reason. Mr Bayle did not think that his system took away the difficulties, and refuted it by several arguments which he lays down with great accuracy and force.

Mr Bernard furnished Mr Bayle with another article of great importance. He gave a critical Extract of the Continuation of the Thoughts concerning Comets (1), and attacked Mr Bayle upon the question whether the general consent of nations be a proof of the existence of God, upon the parallel of Atheism and Paganism, and upon the question whether a society entirely composed of true Christians, surrounded with other nations either of Infidels or worldly Christians, could be able to maintain itself. Every body was surprized that Mr Bernard who had always lived upon a footing of friendship with Mr Bayle, should affect to enter into a controversy with him; and it was thought that being suspected of Arminianism, he wanted by this means to ingratiate himself with the Orthodox. However he used Mr Bayle with great respect. "As I am persuaded (said he (2), that Mr Bayle searcheth after truth sincerely, I "am sure without having consulted him, that he will not be displeased that I propose "some difficulties to him in this Extract, as they shall offer themselves to my mind, not "forgetting in the mean while the rules of good manners, and the esteem, and respect, "which I have for his person and merit." Mr Bayle in the second volume of his Answer to the Questions of a Country Gentleman, answered at large Mr Bernard's objections concerning the general consent of nations. In the third volume, he examined what related to himself in a book of Mr Jaquelot's intitled, The Conformity of Faith with Reason, in answer to the principal difficulties dispersed in Mr Bayle's historical and critical Dictionary (3). Mr Jaquelot had left the Hague in order to go to Berlin, where he was Chaplain to the King of Prussia. He then declared himself openly for Arminianism; which he durst not have done in Holland, while under the authority of the Walloon Synods. In 1697 he had published a large volume intitled, A Dissertation concerning the Existence of God, wherein that truth is demonstrated, by the universal history of the most ancient times; by a refutation of the System of Epicurus and Spinosa; by the characters of Divinity which are observable in the Jewish Religion, and in the establishment of Christianity: Containing likewise convincing proofs of the Revelation of the sacred writings (4). Mr Bayle in quoting this book in his Dictionary (5), made use of an expression which infinitely displeased Mr Jaquelot. "(6) He lost all patience "when he observed that Mr Bayle in quoting his Dissertation concerning the Exist- "tence of God, had only given it the title of a fine Book. He made loud com- "plaints of this, and spread them abroad every where. It is true indeed that he "durst not own that they were grounded on Mr Bayle's having made use of the "positive fine instead of the superlative very fine, or of some sublime epithet. He "pretended that he had used the term fine ironically. As soon as Mr Bayle was in- "formed of this he sent a common friend, to protest to him that he had made "use of that epithet in its natural signification, and it is certain that he employed "it in speaking of another book concerning which no body will suspect that he "would pretend to speak ironically (7). Several people from that time foretold that "Mr Jaquelot would write against Mr Bayle with all the animosity of a bitter "enemy, that he would conceal his resentment a little in his first attack, because "he knew that the reply would give him a large field for it." Accordingly Mr Jaquelot declared in his Preface, that he had no intention of attacking either Mr Bayle's person or his morals. I esteem, said he, his erudition, his genius, his penetration, and all the fine talents which distinguish a man in the learned world. I say once more, adds he, I have no design to dive into his intentions: I leave them to be judged by God and his own conscience. He declares that he proposeth these difficulties with no other view than to obtain an answer to them.

(4) It is a book in 4° of 705 pages. See Mr Bayle's opinion concerning it in a letter to the Abbé du Bos, December 13, 1696, p. 607, and the following.

(5) In the Article PERGAMUS, a City in Asia. Rem. [C] letter (f).

(6) Entretiens de Maxime & de Themiste, ou Réponse à l'Examen de la Theologie de Mr Bayle par Mr Jaquelot, p. 14, 15.

(7) It was a book of Mr Basnage.

The greatest part of this work is only a repetition of what Mr Jaquelot had said in his Dissertations concerning the Existence of God, and concerning the Messiah (8). What relates to Mr Bayle may be reduced to these three heads. I. The liberty of indifference.

(8) The Dissertation concerning the Messiah appeared in 1699.

Digitized by Google

difference. II. The Origin of Evil. III. The objections which the Pyrrhonians may raiſe againſt ſome doctrines of revealed Religion. Mr Bayle obſerves upon this that the title of Mr Jaquelot's book is deceitful, becauſe it makes people think that it is entirely deſigned to refute Mr Bayle, whereas what concerns him makes only the ſmalleſt part of it. He finds another much more eſſential fault in it. " There is no reader (ſays he (1), who upon ſeeing this " title will not judge that Mr Bayle has attacked Religion, while all that he " has done is to ſhow that the philoſophical objections againſt what Theology " teacheth concerning the Origin and Conſequences of Sin, are ſo ſtrong that our " reaſon is too weak to ſolve them, ſo that we ought to behave ourſelves in the " ſame manner with regard to the myſtery of predeſtination, as with regard to the " other myſteries of the Goſpel; that is to ſay, believe them upon the authority " of God, though we can neither comprehend them, nor reconcile them to the " maxims of Philoſophers. If he has diſperſed ſome other difficulties in his Dic- " tionary, they are all of the ſame kind." Mr Bayle adds that if this be to attack Religion we muſt affirm that the moſt orthodox Divines do likewiſe attack it, when they ſay that the Trinity, the Incarnation, Predeſtination, and ſtill more particularly the Origin of Evil, are myſteries which our reaſon cannot comprehend, but which it ought to believe, ſubmitting itſelf to the authority of God who has revealed them. He quotes a great many divines in proof of this, who all with one voice except againſt reaſon, and do not aſk its aſſent when the queſtion is about revealed articles of faith. He cites particularly Mr Jurieu, who in vain implored the aſſiſtance of reaſon to ſolve the difficulties which preſented themſelves to his mind. " When I turn my eyes (ſays Mr Jurieu (2), upon the world, upon hiſtory, upon " events, I find abyſſes there in which I loſe myſelf, I find difficulties there which " overwhelm me. It is true that I ſee God who created all things good at the " beginning. Man at coming out of the hands of God was juſt, pure, and holy. " But preſently I find God abandoning this creature whom he had juſt placed in " the world, and ſuffering him to fall into ſin; ſin whoſe effects were to be ſo " fatal and terrible . . . . . (3) I find in the conduct of God things which are incom- " prehenſible to me, I can ſcarce reconcile his hatred of ſin with his providence . . . . " (4) Is there any body ſo inſincere as to ſay that he finds no difficulty in this, and " that he can eaſily reconcile this with God's infinite hatred of ſin? if God hates ſin " infinitely, why did not he prevent it ſince he foreſaw it? why has he made cr.a- " tures which other creatures may abuſe? why has he created men when he knew " they would damn themſelves? why doth not he ſtop theſe men in their cri- " minal courſes? why doth not he ſtop the moſt part of men in thoſe courſes " which lead them to hell? he could have ſaved a million of perſons, and have ſuf- " fered only one to be loſt. On the contrary, he ſaves but a hundred, and ſuffers a " million to be loſt. This poſſibly proceeds from his want of power in this matter: " but who can reſiſt his will, and ſince he ſaves a hundred perſons, why could not " he, by the ſame means, ſave millions? . . . . . Could it be ſaid, that a King had the " utmoſt averſion to the miſeries and calamities of his people, who foreſeeing that " three fourths and a half of them were about to deſtroy themſelves, and throw " themſelves down a precipice, ſhould open the road to them, make an eaſy way for " them, and ſuffer them to run headlong tho' he could prevent it . . . . . (5) The " common ſenſe of all men leads them to believe, that he who could have hindered " the fall of the firſt man as eaſily as he has permitted it, and who has opened all the " ways in which men have gone aſtray, tho' he could have ſhut them ſo eaſily, may " be conſidered as author of the evil which he ought to have prevented according " to his principles, and the hatred which he bears to evil, and which he could have " hindered without the leaſt trouble . . . . . (6) It is to no purpoſe to ſay that God, " before he had decreed any thing concerning the event, foreſaw that man, placed in " theſe circumſtances, would fall, and that all his poſterity would be loſt: this doth " not at all leſſen the difficulty. For I could ſtill anſwer: ſince God foreſaw that A- " dam, placed in thoſe circumſtances, would damn himſelf and an infinite number " of millions of men, by his free-will, and yet notwithſtanding placed him in thoſe " ſad circumſtances, it is evident that he is the author of all evils . . . . . And if we " would ſpeak ſincerely, we would confeſs that we can anſwer nothing for God, " which can ſilence human reaſon . . . . . (7) To conclude, I maintain that there is " no ſafe medium betwixt the God of St Auguſtin, the God of Epicurus who was idle, " or the God of Ariſtotle who meddled with nothing lower than the ſphere of the Moon. " For if we own a general Providence which extends itſelf to all things, in whatever " manner we conceive it, the difficulty recurrs, and when we think we have ſhut one " gate it comes in at another."

Such were the ſentiments of Mr Jurieu in 1686. He ſpeaks in no leſs ſtrong a manner in a piece publiſhed ten years after. " To what a height of blindneſs, " ſays he (8), muſt one be arrived to affirm that we ſhould gain our cauſe " before the tribunal of reaſon in the matter of the Trinity, the Incarnation, the " Satisfaction, the ſin of the firſt man, the eternity of puniſhments, and the reſurrection " of the body? they who ſay ſo, cannot believe it: I ſhall never be perſuaded that they ſpeak 1705.

(1) Anſwer to the Queſtions of a Country Gentman, Tom. iii, chap. cxxix, p. 642, 643.

(2) A Judgment concerning the ripid and looſe methods of explaining Providence and Grace, p. 28, of the Edition in 1686.

(3) Ibid. p. 63, 64.

(4) P. 92, 93.

(5) P. 99.

(6) P. 100, 101.

(7) P. 105.

(8) La Religion d'un Latitudinaire, p. 383, 384.

Digitized by Google

1705. "ſpeak ſincerely. For all the falſe lights of reaſon rebel againſt theſe myſteries. And "theſe falſe lights are of ſuch a nature that there is no diſtinguiſhing them from "the true, otherwiſe than by the light of faith."

This is preciſely and in a few words all that Mr Bayle has put in the mouth of the Manicheans in his Dictionary. All his objections concerning the Origin of Evil are contained in theſe of Mr Jurieu: they all tend to ſhow, that there is no hypotheſis which is able to ſolve the difficulties which our reaſon offers againſt the providence of God with regard to evil, and that conſequently we ought to hold by revelation alone. Things being ſo, Mr Bayle aſks, why Mr Jaquelot never thought of aſſiſting Mr Jurieu in his difficulties, which oppreſs him ſo ſorely that he ſeems to groan under the weight of them; and why he thought himſelf obliged to take up his pen againſt Mr Bayle, ſince he kept ſilence ſo long with regard to Mr Jurieu, who however has ſaid the ſame things?

Mr Bayle next comes to the three principal points which related to him. Mr Jaquelot reproached him with having uſed all his efforts to deſtroy free-will, thereby to give the greater force to his objections; and to ſhow that man was unjuſtly puniſhed for crimes which he was neceſſarily and inevitably obliged to commit. Mr Bayle anſwers that he had neither denied nor affirmed any thing expreſsly concerning free-will: that he took care not to engage himſelf in a preliminary queſtion which would for ever keep the principal one in ſuſpence. It is a ſubject ſo embarraſſing and fruitful in diſtinctions and equivocations, that diſputants have endleſs reſources, and that it frequently happens that they fall themſelves into contradictions: and that in fine he allowed him to chooſe whatever hypotheſis he ſhould think fit, and to go as far as Pelagianiſm if he pleaſed, which is almoſt the only poſt wherein we can make uſe of the liberty of indifference to advantage.

Before he touches upon the queſtion concerning the origin of Evil, Mr Bayle obſerves that the queſtion between Mr Jaquelot and him doth not concern any article of Faith, and that they are perfectly agreed in the ſubſtance of the doctrine. The matter in debate here is only whether our reaſon can comprehend the real and effectual agreement which is betwixt the Attributes of God, and the ſyſtem of Predeſtination, and whether it can ſolve the difficulties which conceal that agreement from us, and whether reaſon can not only convince, but likewiſe enlighten our minds upon this ſubject. Mr Jaquelot takes the affirmative with the rational Divines, and Mr Bayle takes the negative agreeably to the hypotheſis of the firſt Reformers, and their followers. He then obſerves what Mr Jaquelot ought to have done in order to ſucceed in his deſign: he ought to have proved that the perfect agreement between the theological doctrine concerning ſin, and a certain number of philoſophical maxims, can be ſhown to our reaſon; and he lays down ſeven theological propoſitions on the one ſide, and nineteen philoſophical maxims on the other, which muſt be reconciled together in order to ſhow the agreement betwixt Faith and Reaſon.

Mr Jaquelot is of opinion, that all the difficulties concerning moral evil may be ſolved by means of free-will, which according to him conſiſts in "the power which "man has over his actions, ſo that he doth what he will, becauſe he will do it, "ſo that if he did not will to do it, he would not do it, and would even do the "contrary." A being, ſays he, which is poſſeſſed of this liberty is the moſt excellent, and moſt perfect of all created beings: the power of making a good or bad uſe of his underſtanding, and the command over his actions, are ſurely the things in which man approacheth the neareſt to the Deity: God having formed this univerſe for his glory, that is to ſay, that he might be known in his works, and that he might receive from his creatures that adoration and obedience which is due to him, it was only a free Being that could contribute to this deſign; the adoration of a creature not indowed with liberty could not contribute more to the glory of the Creator, than a machine in human ſhape which ſhould bow down before him by virtue of ſprings, or a ſpeech in his praiſe, pronounced by an automaton. God loves holineſs. But what virtue could there be in this, if man was as neceſſarily determined by his nature to follow good, as the fire is determined to burn? Nothing therefore but a free creature could execute God's deſign. Mr Jaquelot concludes from hence, that although a free creature may abuſe its free-will, yet a free agent is ſomething ſo elevated and ſo noble, that its excellence and value far exceed the worſt conſequences which can flow from the abuſe which he could make of it.

Mr Bayle anſwers, that if Mr Jaquelot's principles be true, the love which God neceſſarily has to virtue would deſerve no praiſe: the holineſs of Saints and Angels would be only a mechanical holineſs, and the Devils would deſerve no blame for their hatred againſt God, ſince it is not in their power to do otherwiſe. He adds, that ſince it is one of the moſt ſublime perfections of God, that he is ſo determined to love what is good, that it implies a contradiction to ſuppoſe that he may not love it; a creature determined to good, would be more conformable to the nature of God, and conſequently more perfect than a creature which has an equal power of loving vice and hating it. Mr Jaquelot ſaid, that the ſtate of the bleſſed was a ſtate of recompence, in which their underſtanding was ſo purified that it always inclined their liberty to good, and never tempted them to evil. That is to ſay, that they ſhould always enjoy free-will, yet notwithſtanding they would never turn aſide to evil. Now ſince he declares that this ſtate is a ſtate of recompence, he muſt conſider it as a more excellent and more perfect ſtate than that in which we live. It was therefore in the power of God to have conſtantly and invariably united in man liberty and the practice of virtue. And in this caſe, all the value that liberty gives to the worſhip and obedience which we pay to God, would be found upon earth as it is in Paradice. Conſequently the glory and holineſs of God have no need of free Beings left to the bad uſe of their liberty, ſince they might be confined to a good uſe of it without being thereby leſs free. Mr Jaquelot would have more reaſon to magnify the advantages and prerogatives of liberty, and to make it be eſteemed the moſt extraordinary favour which a creature can receive, if it had ſerved only to render mankind happy. But God having foreſeen that this wonderful gift would be the inſtrument of mens damnation, he could not beſtow it upon them out of a principle of goodneſs. The preſent was too dangerous, and he would not have raiſed them ſo high, except in order to make their fall the greater. He would have done them a greater favour, if he had recalled a gift which has been ſo fatal to them. 1705.

Digitized by Google

Mr Bayle makes a ſtill ſtronger anſwer to Mr Jaquelot. All Divines agree, and Mr Jaquelot with them, that the operation of Grace doth not in the leaſt prejudice free-will, and that God, who is the maſter of hearts, infallibly directs mens liberty as he pleaſeth, without violating the laws of this liberty. From whence it evidently follows, that God by confirming man in a good choice, and by infallibly directing him to good, doth no prejudice to his free-will, and that by finally preſerving him from ſin, he doth not deprive him of this ſo precious liberty with which he had inveſted him. If it be neceſſary that men ſhould have it in their power to ſin, it is not at all ſo that they ſhould actually ſin, and God can prevent their doing ſo without prejudicing their liberty. Notwithſtanding, God far from diſpoſing man conſtantly to good, conſtitutes him in ſuch a manner, and places him in ſuch circumſtances in which he has foreſeen that he will ſuccumb, and has endowed him with a faculty of which he knew very well that he would make a bad uſe. So that though we allow man even an unlimited liberty the difficulty ſtill recurrs, to wit, whether the permiſſion and foreſight of ſin, are conſiſtent with the goodneſs and holineſs of God. Mr Bayle makes uſe of ſeveral other arguments to prove that whatever ſide we embrace, we can never make uſe of free-will to ſolve the difficulties concerning the origin and conſequences of moral evil; and ſhows that Mr Jaquelot has been obliged to cover himſelf with the ſame intrenchment that the maintainers of Predeſtination make uſe of. He ſhows the terrible conſequences of this anſwer of Mr Jaquelot, to wit, that ſince the permiſſion of ſin was neceſſary to the manifeſtation of God's glory, it was juſt and agreeable to all the divine perfections. He examines Mr Jaquelot's hypotheſis concerning phyſical evil, and the idea which he gives of the eternal pains of hell.

The third point of the diſpute between Mr Bayle and Mr Jaquelot relates to the objections which Pyrrhoniſm may raiſe againſt ſome doctrines of revealed religion. In the Critical Dictionary under the article PYRRHO we find the recital of a diſpute between a Pyrrhonian Abbé and a Roman Catholic Abbé. The principle in which they both agree is, that the myſteries of the Church of Rome, the Trinity, the Incarnation, Tranſubſtantiation, the fall of Adam, and original Sin, are doctrines undoubtedly true. From this ſuppoſition, acknowledged by both diſputants, the Pyrrhonian Abbé infers, that evidence is not the certain criterion of truth, ſince there are ſeveral evident propoſitions which are falſe if we admit the truth of myſteries. Mr Jaquelot pretends that Mr Bayle by this wanted to prove that the Trinity and the hypoſtatical union imply a contradiction; and he defends theſe two myſteries by relating what the Divines ſay upon theſe ſubjects. But Mr Bayle ſhows him that he has miſunderſtood the Pyrrhonian Abbé. The deſign of his objections is only to ſhow that theſe doctrines are oppoſite to evident propoſitions, and that they deprive us of the certainty which we found upon evidence. Mr Jaquelot ought to have proved that this is falſe, and ſhewed that this example of the falſhood of evident propoſitions, gives no ground to the Pyrrhonians to diſtruſt propoſitions which appear the moſt clear to us. But he miſtakes the matter, and raiſeth up a phantom in order to fight with it. He takes it to be the ſame thing, to own that the myſteries of the Goſpel ought to be believed though our reaſon cannot comprehend them, and to endeavour to ruin Religion by pretending that it is always contrary to reaſon. Mr Bayle wonders that ſo penetrating a genius has not obſerved that the queſtion was not to explain the difficulties of our myſteries; the objection ſuppoſeth them true, ſince from hence it is concluded that evidence is not the certain criterion of truth. All that Mr Jaquelot had to do was to deſtroy this conſequence.

Digitized by Google

1705. This diſpute did not hinder Mr Bayle from doing juſtice to Mr Jaquelot's merit. He owned that he had a fine genius, a great deal of penetration, and a lively and perſuaſive ſtile, that he had joined the ſtudy of modern Philoſophy to that of Divinity, and had ſignalized himſelf in works of reaſoning.

Mr Bayle likewiſe defended the anſwer which he had made in his Dictionary to Mr le Clerc's Origeniſt. The latter had given ſome new explanations in his Reply (1), to ſhow that the ſyſtem of the Origeniſt takes away the difficulties of the Manichean, who maintained that it was impoſſible to reconcile the permiſſion and conſequences of ſin with the ideal or ſovereignly perfect goodneſs of God. In order to prove this Mr le Clerc obſerved,

(1) Bibliotheque choiſie, Tom. xii. art. viii, p. 330, and the following.

I. That God, who produced man from nothing, was not obliged to create him ſo perfect that it ſhould be impoſſible for him to deviate from his duty; that it is a great proof of his goodneſs that he gave him the means of being happy by obſerving the rules preſcribed to him, without being under any neceſſity of violating them.

II. That they exaggerate the damage which liberty has done to men, and which they might have avoided, if he who created them had made them of ſuch a nature that they could not have departed from their duty.

III. That in order to prevent the bad uſe which man might make of his liberty, and to guide him to happineſs, the divine goodneſs has been pleaſed to propoſe to him eternal rewards, and unlimited puniſhments in the Goſpel: and that it is his own fault if he doth not avoid thoſe puniſhments and obtain theſe rewards.

IV. God knew what would come to paſs; but he was not obliged to make uſe of his almighty power, in order to prevent the evil which he foreſaw would happen by the fault of man, becauſe this evil is of a very ſhort duration in itſelf, and in all its conſequences, and occaſions no diſorder in the univerſe which God is not able to redreſs in a moment, and which he doth not at laſt redreſs for all eternity.

V. The inconvenience of paſſing through evil before the enjoyment of all the effects of the divine bounty, proceeds from the nature of man, which could not exiſt in the degree of imperfection where it is placed, without being liable to what has happened.

VI. God who foreſaw that man would fall, doth not damn him becauſe he falls, but only becauſe having it in his power to riſe again, he doth not riſe, that is to ſay, he freely retains his bad habits to the end of his life.

VII. That this is already a very conſiderable degree of mercy, ſince no body is damned except for his own fault, and that it is in our power to take advantage of this goodneſs of God, to amend our faults, and avoid the pains of a future ſtate.

VIII. God has beſtowed many other marks of his goodneſs upon men. He has endowed them with a thouſand excellent qualities; and ſurrounded them with a thouſand ſenſible goods, which they taſte with a great deal of pleaſure, which make them in love with life; he hath put it in their power to make themſelves happy after death, and he gives without delay eternal happineſs to thoſe who repent of their faults, and is ſatisfied by making the impenitent paſs through moderate puniſhments, before he puts them in poſſeſſion of eternal happineſs.

IX. God has conſidered the miſeries of mankind as nothing, in compariſon of the happineſs which he deſigns to beſtow upon them. The duration of the evils which they ſuffer here below, and in the other world, are nothing when compared to eternity. If the Manichean ſhould ſay, that, according to this principle, a certain number of ages, how great ſoever we ſuppoſe it, not having any proportion to infinite duration, torments for many millions of years may be as conſiſtent with the ideas of goodneſs, and would be as nothing, no leſs than thoſe which ſhould continue only one day: the Origeniſt will anſwer that ſince there is no proportion betwixt finite and infinite, however long you ſuppoſe the torments of a creature, ſince they are to have an end, neither will there be any proportion betwixt God's ſeverity and his goodneſs. He will add, that he doth not determine the length of the puniſhments; they ſhall be longer or ſhorter as juſtice ſhall require. The duration of puniſhments ſhall be ſhorter when they are more ſevere; and there ſhall be as great a variety of puniſhments, as there hath been of ſins. That the arguments againſt puniſhments for ſeveral ages, do not concern the Origeniſt; becauſe he is not of opinion that they ſhall continue ſo long, though he cannot preciſely determine their duration.

X. What has been ſaid above may be equally applied to moral and phyſical evil, or to the vices and to the ſufferings of men.

Mr Bayle anſwered (2).

(2) An Anſwer to the Queſtions of a Country Gentleman, Tom. iii. ch. clxxii, and the following.

I. That the principle which they lay down, to wit, that it is not contrary to the ideas of goodneſs that one creature ſhould be more perfect than another, is very true; and therefore that men have no reaſon to complain that they want that perfection which conſiſts in not departing from ones duty. But neither is this the foundation of the objections. They are founded on this, that God has permitted that they ſhould actually depart from their duty; and that they ſhould actually feel the evils of which their nature was created ſuſceptible. This, ſays he, he, is what doth not appear agreeable to the ideas of goodneſs, even granting what the Origeniſt remarks, that if men obſerved the rules which God has preſcribed to them, and which he is under no unſurmountable neceſſity of violating, he ſhould be happy. We cannot conceive that the goodneſs of a father is ſuch as it ought to be, when he makes the happineſs of his children depend upon a condition which he knows very well that they will not fulfil, and which he permits them not to fulfil, though he could eaſily procure them ſure and infallible means of fulfilling it. 1705.

Digitized by Google

II. The objection is not founded on man's not being immutably determined to good. A creature is eſſentially mutable, and ſo it would be abſurd to aſk why it was not immutable. The queſtion is only, why he was permitted to turn to evil? The conſequence from the act to the power is neceſſary, but from the power to the act is not at all ſo. The diſpute therefore doth not turn upon the poſſibility of change, but upon the actual change from good to evil. Now God could hinder this without doing any prejudice to free-will. It may be ſaid that God was not obliged to prevent it: but by this the ſtate of the queſtion is changed; for when the Orthodox undertake to ſatisfy the difficulties of the Manicheans, the queſtion is not always concerning God conſidered as juſt; but frequently concerning God conſidered as good. So that though God conſidered as juſt, is not obliged to give his creatures any thing but what he has promiſed them by way of reward, he is obliged, conſidered as good, to make them uſeful preſents, that is to ſay, it is of the eſſence of goodneſs to give good gifts. It is not beſtowing a good preſent, to give a thing which one knows will be fatal to the perſon who ſhall receive it.

III. God knew that his promiſes and threats would not hinder men to damn themſelves, and that a hundred other aſſiſtances, which he doth not beſtow upon them, would have conducted them to happineſs, without prejudice to their free-will. How can we reconcile ſuch a foreſight with the ideas of goodneſs? Is it not very evident that a real benefactor chooſeth the moſt ſure means which he knows, and ſlights thoſe which he knows to be uſeleſs?

IV. Would any body praiſe the goodneſs of a Prince who ſhould ſuffer diſorders to reign in his dominions, becauſe at laſt he could apply a remedy to it? Is it poſſible not to obſerve that ſuch a Prince would then apply a remedy not only to the faults of his ſubjects but to his own, and that he had at leaſt for ſome time ceaſed to be good, ſo that we might find in him a viciſſitude of goodneſs and wickedneſs?

V. Our nature was made ſubject to ſin, this is certain; but doth it follow from hence that it was neceſſary that we ſhould ſin? Not at all. The goodneſs of God was therefore at entire liberty not to permit Adam, who was ſubject to ſin, to ſin actually; and it is in vain to inſinuate that God would have acted contrary to the nature of things, if he had freed men from an inconvenience to which they are ſubject, that is to ſay, into which it was poſſible they might fall. But was it not likewiſe poſſible that they ſhould not fall into it?

VI. One doth not leſs will a thing when he renders the event of it infallible, than when he renders it neceſſary. Now the cauſes of the damnation of the reprobate, and conſequently their damnation was rendered infallible, ſince they were placed in conjunctures in which God foreſaw that they would ſin during their whole lives, and in which he had decreed not to give them any aſſiſtance. He therefore created them for ſin, and for the pains of hell; and if this objection be ſtrong againſt the Predeſtinarians, it muſt likewiſe be ſo againſt an Origeniſt.

VII. That it is a conſiderable degree of mercy, to ſee a man abuſe his free-will for fifty or ſixty years, without any aſſiſtance from Grace, when it is known that this abuſe will damn him, is what the ideas of our reaſon do not ſhow us. They ſhow us in the moſt evident manner, that goodneſs inclines to aſſiſt not only thoſe who have not ſufficient ſtrength to free themſelves from danger, but likewiſe thoſe who having the neceſſary ſtrength and ſkill, do not make uſe of it.

VIII. The pleaſures of this life are mixed with ſo many miſeries, that they cannot come up fully to the character of ideal goodneſs. As to that innumerable multitude of impenitents, who after a rigorous purgatory paſs to the abode of the bleſſed, we cannot in their lot ſee the marks of ideal goodneſs. Here is a repreſentation of the conduct which Origen attributes to God. A Prince deſigns to make a Gentleman his favourite. He finds him ſubject to great faults, he has infallible means of correcting them, yet doth not make uſe of them. He contents himſelf with making uſe of promiſes and threats, which he knows will produce no good effect. The young man is hurried along by his wicked inclinations, notwithſtanding the promiſes and threatnings of his Prince, he is baniſhed, and very ſeverely puniſhed, but at laſt he is called back to Court, and for the remainder of his life he enjoys the place of favourite. Can ſuch a Prince be ſaid to be eminently good? If we love any perſon, if we are good to him, we ſave him, as much as we are able, from the misfortune of committing faults, eſpecially when they are to be followed by puniſhment; and the only manner of juſtifying people who expoſe their friends to any trouble or puniſhment is, that they cannot by any other means correct their vices. But this is not the preſent caſe, ſince we ſuppoſe a King who has effectual means of correcting this Gentle-1705. man's faults, and yet instead of making use of them, has recourse to methods which he knows will be to no purpose.

Digitized by Google

IX. The bounds which are set to the duration of the pains of the next life, the degrees and varieties which are supposed to be in them, are all very proper to prove that the marks of God's goodness are infinitely more apparent in the condition of men than the marks of his hatred, and that they have incomparably more reason to praise the bounty of their Creator, than to complain of his severity. Yet notwithstanding, infinite goodness, which ought to be pure without the least mixture of the contrary quality, ideal goodness, in a word, doth not appear in the hypothesis of Origen: it escapes us even tho' we soften it after that manner. Would a father who has a moderate love for his children, desire that the great establishments which he designs for them, should be preceded by a permission of committing faults, and by a punishment of these faults, tho' only for some days? Would he desire this, if he could render them equally happy without this preliminary? Few people would desire to buy the favour of a Prince, at the price of being put to the torture three times a week for six months. We ought not to imagine that the torments of hell are small, under pretence that they continue possibly only fifty or sixty years. This term, it is true, is nothing in comparison of eternity. But it is of a frightful length with regard to human sensibility. If one should say to a person afflicted with the Gout, "the horrible pains which you suffer, shall only last "fifty days together, and after that you shall enjoy health for fifty years," he would make him quite desperate.

X. What the Origenist has replied, cannot be equally applied to moral and physical evil. Our ideas do not discover any equality betwixt these two sorts of evils: they judge a father incomparably more to blame, who doth not hinder his children, when it is in his power, from committing a crime, than a father who allows them to eat what may be prejudicial to their health.

Some persons of Quality in England had used all their efforts to draw Mr Bayle out of his solitude and to bring him over to England. They desired that he would live with them as a friend, that they might have the benefit of his hours of recreation. I shall only name the Earl of Huntington, who together with a great deal of learning was possessed of all the accomplishments of a gentleman (1). He offered him a yearly pension of two hundred pounds sterling for life, with all the liberty and 1706. conveniencies which he could wish for. He was likewise invited to the Hague. The Earl of Albemarle passionately desired that he would come and live with him (2). Baron Walef went to Rotterdam to propose it to him, and redoubled his instances in a letter which he wrote to him. "If your friends (says he (3), en- "deavour to persuade you to refuse the proposition which I have had the honour to "make to you, their friendship must needs be interested, and they can have no "other motive in doing so, but their desire of possessing you at Rotterdam. Have "not you sufficiently honoured that City with your presence, and has not the Metro- "polis of Holland, with all its advantages, a right to invite you to prefer it to a place "designed for commerce? I will not mention here the great esteem which every body "has for you, nor the regard they will pay to your merit. I know your indifference on "this head. But together with the friendship of a noble Lord who has an infinite esteem "for you, you will find libraries and walks proper to nourish, and agreeably to en- "tertain your Philosophy. Allow me, Sir, to make use of your own arms. You "have with your ordinary eloquence shown how much a man of Letters ought to pre- "fer an abode in a metropolis to that of inferior towns (4). Either renounce your "own sentiments, or grant us the favour which we desire of you. I will not "repeat what my Lord Albemarle has desired me to say to you. You will find "in his family a life more agreeable than I can describe to you. As much as you "excel other men by your profound knowledge, and the sublimity of your genius, "so much he excels by his generous and beneficent mind, by his probity, by that "equality of temper, which is one of the greatest charms in life, and which is so "rarely to be met with among the Great. . . . . Preserve, on account of your friends, "a health which you spare so little with regard to yourself, and prevent in a calm and "certain retreat the infirmities inseparable from an old age so worthy of respect as "yours is." My Lord Albemarle likewise wrote to him, and confirmed all that Baron Walef had told him by his direction. "I wish with all my heart (said "he (5), that I could find some expression able to persuade you to grant me the "favour I desire of you. I will endeavour to live with you in such a manner that "you shall not repent the choice which you shall make, by leaving you a full "liberty without the least constraint, as much as you can possibly enjoy at present. "This you may depend upon."

Mr Bayle answered Baron Walef, that it was very unhappy for him that his present situation was such as necessarily obliged him to continue in it. "Providence (adds "he (6), orders the destiny of some persons in such a manner, that when they "would be glad to enjoy a certain happiness, it doth not present itself to them, "and when it presents itself, they are no longer in a capacity of enjoying it. This "is my fate. I consider myself as a worn out old man, my constitution is so weak, "that I cannot escape being sick or very much indisposed, if I depart in the least "from

(1) This Nobleman died young and unmarried March 2, 1705.

(2) He proposed to entrust him with the education of his son, when he should be of an age to profit by his instructions.

(3) Letter February 9, 1706, p. 1065.

(4) See the Answer to the Questions of a Country Gentleman, Tom. i, chap. i.

(5) Letter February 11, 1706, p. 1067.

(6) Letter February 12, 1706, p. 1068, 1069.

Digitized by Google

" from a regularity of life, which a long habit has made neceſſary to me. I have 1706.
" not adviſed with any of my friends; for, in examining by myſelf, the reaſons which " I had the honour to repreſent to you, and which you oppoſed with all the wit
" and eloquence imaginable; I have found it too certain, that removing from
" hence will not be at all proper for me ..... Good fortune comes to me too late.
" If ſhe had offered herſelf ſooner, ſhe would have made me the moſt contented man
" in the world: I would with all imaginable ſatisfaction have complied with the " reaſons which perſuade me that living in a metropolis is advantageous to a man of " Letters. Would to God that about the year 1690, or a little before or after, ſo
" agreeable and honourable an offer as my Lord Albemarle has been pleaſed to make " me, had come in my way! This would have been the height of my wiſhes, and
" the ſure means of obtaining much knowledge, and many degrees of wit, and abi" lities which I want, and which I ſhall never enjoy." Mr Bayle wrote to the Earl of Albemarle at the ſame time to thank him for the honour he was pleaſed to deſign for him, but we have not been able to recover this letter.

Mr le Clerc flattered himſelf that Mr Bayle would acknowledge that his Origeniſt had taken away all the difficulties of the Manichean, but ſeeing him perſiſt in maintaining the contrary, he concluded from thence that Mr Bayle had pleaded his own cauſe, and intitled his anſwer, A Defence of the Goodneſs and Holineſs of God, againſt the Objections of Mr Bayle (1). " When (ſays he (2), I read the objections made
" by Mr Bayle in the firſt edition of his Critical Dictionary, againſt the goodneſs
" and holineſs of God, and which he maintains no Chriſtian Divine can anſwer; I " believed it only a ſort of trial of wit, and that he had for his diverſion cut " out a little work for our Divines ..... I continued in this opinion, until I had
" ſeen the laſt two volumes of his Anſwer to a Country Gentleman, wherein he ſeriouſly
" maintains the cauſe of the Manicheans againſt the goodneſs of God ..... (3) But " ſince he thinks himſelf bound in honour to maintain a Theſis oppoſite to the whole
" Chriſtian world, which he defies methinks in a very odious and very inſulting man" ner; he will be pleaſed to excuſe us, if, in our turn, we maintain a Theſis, which not " only honour, but likewiſe the love of truth and conſcience obliges us to defend. I
" flattered myſelf, that poſſibly he would of himſelf acknowledge the goodneſs and " holineſs of the conduct of God, after the opportunity which I had given him of " getting out of this ugly affair without hurt to his reputation; by owning that he " was convinced, and making an end of the diſpute by thanking thoſe who had re" moved his difficulties, as is the cuſtom in the Divinity and Philoſophy ſchools. But " as he has done quite the contrary, and pretends that we have not ſolidly anſwered
" him; it is neceſſary to let him ſee that we are not afraid of his arguments, and that
" we, without ſparing him any longer, ſhow how ridiculous they are."

(1) Défenſe de la Bonté & de la Sainteté divine, contre les Objections de Mr Bayle.

(2) Bibliotheque Choiſie, Tom. ix, Art. iii, p. 103, and the following.

(3) Ibid. p. 106, 107.

Mr le Clerc having thus aſſumed the character of Defender of Religion, attacked by Mr Bayle, begins by recapitulating the whole diſpute; and, laying aſide the perſon of an Origeniſt, anſwers Mr Bayle's difficulties in his own name. He declares that he has no other Confeſſion of Faith but the New Teſtament, and that this is the only book which he thinks himſelf bound to defend. But as the ſtrongeſt objection of the Manicheans is founded upon the eternity of puniſhments, which ſeems ſo clearly revealed in the Goſpel; after having rejected the opinion of Origen he lays down his own. " For my part (ſays he (4), I would anſwer that we are not well ac" quainted with the nature of the torments of the next life, that we do not know " whether at firſt there may not be divers very ſenſible puniſhments, differing not-" withſtanding according to the greatneſs of ſins, and whether God putting an " end to theſe violent puniſhments, will not be ſatisfied to deliver over thoſe who " have obſtinately abuſed his grace, to the remorſe of their own conſciences, which " will reproach them with their faults, and will add to their grief by the reflexion
" that they have loſt a happineſs which they ſhall know that others enjoy. This
" poſſibly will be the worm which never dieth, and the fire which is never quenched.
" And in this I do not ſee that there is any thing but what is moſt juſt. Sinners " might have avoided theſe puniſhments by repentance, and yet they have neglected
" to do it. They deſerve ſome puniſhment on this account." Mr le Clerc determines nothing concerning the duration or the circumſtances of theſe puniſhments: he nevertheleſs ſays, that probably the condition of the condemned will be tolerable. But he doth not pretend to advance all theſe conjectures as certain and evangelical doctrine, he only means to ſhow that we may find a very reaſonable ſenſe in the words of JESUS CHRIST relating to the pains of the next life. He adds that others may poſſibly be more happy in their conjectures, yet in the mean while he is perſuaded that there is nothing in the conduct which he attributes to God, inconſiſtent with his infinite goodneſs; but that if there be any thing in what he has advanced which is unworthy of the juſtice and goodneſs of God, he is very certain that God will not do it. This is (continues he), what I called reaſoning infinitely better than Origen, for Origen aſſures us of what he knows nothing of, as if he knew it, when he affirms that the pains of the damned ſhall not be eternal. However he looks upon Origen's opinion as tolerable, and infinitely better (ſays he) than the ſide Mr Bayle chooſes, by departing from it to accuſe God of being neither good nor holy.

(4) Ibid. p. 143.

Digitized by Google

1706. He endeavours next to ſhow that Reaſon cannot deceive us, if we make a right uſe of it; that it ſerves to prove the truth of the Chriſtian Religion, and to make us underſtand the ſenſe of the Holy Scripture: that there are in Divinity, as well as in Philoſophy, ſeveral things which reaſon cannot comprehend, but theſe things are never contrary to reaſon, and we ought not to reject them becauſe we do not comprehend them: that therefore we ought never to oppoſe the light of Revelation to the light of Reaſon, nor ſuppoſe that they may contradict one another, unleſs we reject either the one or the other, and unleſs we throw ourſelves headlong into Pyrrhoniſm, ſince truth cannot be contrary to itſelf: from hence he concludes, that Mr Bayle, who maintains that we ought to renounce our common notions of goodneſs and holineſs, cannot, if he reaſons conſequentially, believe that God is good and holy; and that he doth not ſacrifice his reaſon to faith, but deſtroys reaſon by itſelf, and involves Revelation in the ſame fate, while he endeavours to ſkreen himſelf by pretending to humble his reaſon, ſpeaking in the ſtile of the vulgar Divines, whom he ridicules.

In anſwer to Mr le Clerc, Mr Bayle publiſhed a piece intitled An Anſwer for Mr Bayle, to the III and XIII articles of the IX volume of the Bibliotheque choiſie (1). (1) Réponſe pour Mr Bayle au ſujet du III & du XIII articles du IX Tome de la Bibliotheque choiſie. This piece is dated April 25, 1706.

" I eaſily believed, (ſays he (2), that Mr le Clerc would be out of humour upon the " defeat of his Origeniſt, and of the plaſtic natures, but I did not imagine that he " would be enraged to ſuch a degree, as not to reflect upon the irregularity of the " conduct which he ſhould chooſe. It is not therefore without ſurpriſe that I have " obſerved the manner of revenging himſelf, which he has thought fit to take; but " inſtead of being angry with him, I have had a real compaſſion for him on this " account. One cannot without pity ſee a man, who enjoyed a conſiderable ſhare " of glory in the Republic of Letters, ſo touched with ſo trifling a check. He " ought to have comforted himſelf by reflecting upon his other exploits, in which he " has had better ſucceſs, or at leaſt not to have abandoned himſelf to ſuch a chagrin, " as ſhould make him declaim in a manner altogether unworthy of a man of ho- " nour and good ſenſe. He has pretended to dive into Mr Bayle's heart, he has " accuſed him of horrible deſigns, he has repeated his accuſations a hundred times " over, ſtill in a looſe manner, ſtill without the leaſt ſhadow of proof, ſtill with- " out regard to the clear and diſtinct declarations, which are to be found in a thou- " ſand places of Mr Bayle's writings." He obſerves, that the Republic of Letters would be a perfect anarchy, if it were allowed to attack our adverſaries under pretence that they conceal bad deſigns in the bottom of their hearts; and he adds, that this conduct doth not at all become Mr le Clerc, who has ſo well deſcribed thoſe who in order to render their adverſaries odious, cloak themſelves under the pretence of the intereſt of religion. " Doth it become him, after this, (ſays he (3), to de- " claim as he has done againſt Mr Bayle, juſt when he ſaw that he could no longer " ſuſtain the ſhock in the lawful methods of diſpute? Doth it become him to give " himſelf airs of being eaten up with zeal for the houſe of God? This zeal which has " come ſo late, would never have appeared, if Mr Bayle had renounced his remark " upon Dr Cudworth, and if he had not refuted the reaſons of the Origeniſt." He oppoſeth to this conduct of Mr le Clerc, the complaints which he had formerly made againſt thoſe who accuſed Grotius of favouring Socinianiſm, becauſe he gave to ſome paſſages of ſcripture a ſenſe different from that of the common orthodox writers of controverſy, and who from thence had concluded that he deſigned to ſap the foundations of Chriſtianity. " No body (ſaid he (4), cried out with more vehemence againſt " ſuch accuſations than Mr le Clerc. With how good a grace therefore doth he now " ſay, that Mr Bayle writes an apology for Atheiſts, and intends to deſtroy religion? " Is this pretended apology any thing elſe than his having rejected a bad argu- " ment?" He adds, that Mr le Clerc has been obliged ſeveral times to defend himſelf againſt the accuſation of Socinianiſm, with which he continues ſtill charged.

(2) Réponſe pour Mr Bayle, p. 1.

(3) Ibid. pag. 5.

(4) Ibid. pag. 7.

Mr Bayle afterwards lays down the ſubſtance of his doctrine on the ſubject in queſtion, and reduces it to theſe three propoſitions (5):

(5) Ibid. pag. 18.

" I. The light of Nature and Revelation teach us clearly that there is only one " principle of all things, and that this principle is infinitely perfect.

" II. The manner of reconciling the moral and phyſical evils of man, with all " the attributes of this ſole infinitely perfect principle of all things, ſurpaſſeth the light " of Philoſophy; ſo that the Manichean objections leave difficulties which human " reaſon cannot ſolve.

" III. Notwithſtanding of this we ought firmly to believe what the light of Na- " ture and Revelation teach us concerning the unity and infinite perfection of God, " as we believe by faith, and in ſubmiſſion to the divine authority, the Myſtery of the " Trinity, the Incarnation, &c.

Mr Bayle adds, that he will without all doubt be thought orthodox in the firſt and third propoſitions; and that if he be attacked on the ſecond, Luther and Calvin, and the whole body of the Proteſtant churches, and even almoſt the whole Chriſtian world, muſt be attacked at the ſame time. He is perſuaded that no body will ever be able to prove, that theſe three propoſitions are not what he has conſtantly taught in his writings, or prove that if he has eſtabliſhed them in ſome paſſages, he has maintained propoſitions contrary to them in ſome others.

Digitized by Google

He next makes ſome general Remarks on the dogmatical part of Mr le Clerc's piece, not being willing to enter into a more minute criticiſm which would have led him too far. " I will ſuppreſs (ſays he (1), a great many remarks which would ſhow " where Mr le Clerc has miſunderſtood me, where he diſguiſeth the ſtate of the " queſtion, where he complains, without reaſon, that I have not underſtood him, " where he diſcovers chimerical contradictions, where he takes the liberty of diſtin- " guiſhing into two ſpecies where there is but one, where he ſuppreſſeth what is " inconvenient for him, and adds what is convenient, &c." Mr le Clerc charged Mr Bayle with accuſing God of being neither good nor holy. " What horrible calumny! " (cries Mr Bayle (2), what malicious impoſture! or at leaſt what want of diſcern- " ment! but who will be perſuaded that ſo learned a man as Mr le Clerc has erred " through ſtupidity, and by not being able to diſtinguiſh here betwixt two things " evidently different? the one is to ſay that God is infinitely good and holy, though " our reaſon doth not know the manner in which this goodneſs and holineſs is re- " concilable with the miſery and ſins of men; Mr Bayle has ſaid no more than " this; the other is to accuſe God of being neither good nor holy; Mr Bayle " has never done any thing like this." 1706.

(1) Ibid. pag. 20.

(2) Ibid. pag. 22.

Mr Bayle doth not meddle with Origeniſm, he pretends that Mr le Clerc hath ſaid nothing new on this ſubject, and that he has made no reply to the reaſons of his adverſary; ſo that they remain in all their force, and it is ſufficient to deſire the reader to compare the pieces on both ſides to be convinced of this. Neither doth he regard what Mr le Clerc had ſaid concerning the excellence and uſe of Reaſon. He only obſerves that the reſult of the Manichean controverſy, which we have recited, was always that we ought from thence to infer the neceſſity of captivating our underſtanding under the authority of God, and that this is a principle common to all Chriſtians who admit the myſtery of the Trinity, and certain others. " Mr le Clerc (adds he (3), propoſeth ſeveral difficulties againſt this, as if the " moſt frightful Pyrrhoniſm were inevitable, in caſe revealed truths were not con- " formable to our common notions. All that I have to ſay againſt this is, that " the Unitarians have of a long time made theſe objections, and the Roman Ca- " tholics, the Lutherans, and the Reformed have refuted them." He defies Mr le Clerc to dare to ſay, that he himſelf has not departed from our common notions, by acknowledging in the Deity three perſons really diſtinct, coëſſential, and conſubſtantial, and conſequently that it is his buſineſs to anſwer the difficulties which he propoſeth againſt the common principle of Divines, to the confirmation of which Mr Bayle has made the whole preſent diſpute ſubſervient.

(3) Ibid. pag. 29.

Mr Bayle draws a parallel betwixt his opinion and that of Mr le Clerc, to the end that all the world (ſays he (4), may judge whether Mr le Clerc had cauſe to intitle his Reply, A Defence of the Goodneſs and Holineſs of God, againſt Mr Bayle's objections. He makes a ſuppoſition that Mr le Clerc and he are diſputing with a diſciple of Zoroaſter about the unity of the principle of all things. Mr Bayle (ſays he) ſhall begin the attack, and force the enemy in all his entrenchments. But the difficulty doth not lie there: the queſtion is how to reſiſt the Zoroaſtrian when he ſhall attack in his turn, and ſhall labour to prove that ſin and its conſequences are not conſiſtent with the idea of one infinitely perfect and holy Being. Mr Bayle will ſtop him ſhort at once, by declaring that he doth not admit our ideas of goodneſs and holineſs in general, as the rule of the goodneſs and holineſs of God: and by oppoſing his ſyſtem to him, which is conformable to the principles of the moſt orthodox Divines, he will defend with ſucceſs the following Theſis: " God is infinitely good " and holy, though our knowledge is too confined to be able to reconcile his good- " neſs and holineſs with the miſeries and crimes of mankind in this life, and with " the crimes and eternal torments of the greater part of mankind in the life to " come". But Mr le Clerc, who will grant to his adverſary that the common notions, that is to ſay, the ideas which we have of goodneſs and holineſs in general, ought to ſerve us for a rule whereby to judge of the goodneſs and holineſs of God, will be obliged to depart from the opinion of other Chriſtians, at firſt by denying, with Origen the eternity of hell torments; and not finding even this poſt tenable, he will be forced to betake himſelf to conjectures, and reduce the goodneſs and holineſs of God to a problem, the ſolution of which we ſhall only learn in the other world. Upon this Mr Bayle obſerves that Mr le Clerc has fallen preciſely into the caſe on which he founded his accuſation. For according to him Mr Bayle's great crime is, that he believes that no Chriſtian ſyſtem can ſolve the objections of the Manicheans againſt the goodneſs and holineſs of God: now Mr le Clerc is perſuaded of the ſame thing, ſince on the ſubject of the eternity of puniſhments, he abandons all the ſyſtems of Chriſtians, and even that of Origen, and only intrencheth himſelf in may be's and probabilities. From hence it follows that according to Mr le Clerc there is no Chriſtian ſyſtem which can ſolve the objections of Manicheiſm againſt the goodneſs and holineſs of God: " This nevertheleſs (adds he (5), is the ſole " foundation of his accuſation againſt Mr Bayle: he has therefore wounded himſelf " by the ſtroke which he aimed at him. He has from this ground of accuſation " drawn ſeveral falſe conſequences, I mean the calumnies which he has raiſed againſt " Mr Bayle.

(4) Ibid. pag. 40, and the following.

(5) Ibid. p. 68.

Digitized by Google

1706. " Mr Bayle. He has ſaid that they who maintain that we cannot anſwer the Mani-
" chean objections, attack the goodneſs and holineſs of God, and accuſe him of being " neither good nor holy, and that they cannot be admitted to profeſs that they be" lieve him both good and holy, for having no reaſon to believe him ſo, they fall
" into a manifeſt contradiction &c. Theſe conſequences, and all the reſt which I " do not particularize here, fall equally upon the accuſer and the accuſed. This can
" admit of no diſpute."

Mr Bayle, to put an end to this debate, offered (1) to Mr le Clerc that he would ſubmit to the deciſion of the Faculties of Divinity at Leyden, Utrecht, Franeker, Groningen &c. He propoſeth to him to draw up a Petition to be preſented to theſe Faculties, in which he ſhould ſpecify the puniſhment which he deſired they would inflict upon the perſon who ſhould loſe his cauſe. That Mr Bayle ſhould ſign that petition jointly with him, and that Mr le Clerc ſhould join to it ſuch propoſitions as he ſhall draw out of Mr Bayle's writings, and that he ſhould communicate them to him, and that in caſe they are to be found in ſo many words in his works, and without any eſſential mutilation, he will ſubſcribe them. The Faculties of Theology will know by this petition and thoſe extracts, that what is deſired of them is that they may be pleaſed to determine the following queſtion: Are the propoſitions extracted from Mr Bayle's books, good proofs of Mr le Clerc's accuſation againſt him? Mr le Clerc pretends that they are, and Mr Bayle denies it, and likewiſe maintains that they contain nothing contrary to the Confeſſions of Faith of the Reformed Churches in France and the Low-Countries. But as Mr le Clerc, adds he, declares that before he examined the ſecond and third volumes of the Anſwer to a Country Gentleman, he conſidered Mr Bayle's objections as a trial of wit only, and that they did not prevent his believing him orthodox; Mr Bayle is of opinion that in order to leſſen the trouble of theſe Profeſſors, it will be ſufficient if the Faculties of Divinity ſhall take the trouble of examining thoſe two volumes. It would likewiſe (adds he) take away the greateſt part of their trouble, if Mr le Clerc would mark the pages from whence he ſhall extract his propoſitions, and if Mr Bayle would likewiſe mark the pages omitted by his accuſer, the knowledge of which he ſhall think neceſſary to inform his judges more fully of the ſtate of the queſtion.

(1) Ibid. pag. 72, and the following.

Mr Bayle's enemies were not content to repreſent him as a man who endeavoured to deſtroy Religion, they ſtrove to make him paſs for an enemy to the State. This was to imitate Mr Jurieu pretty exactly. But as Mr Bayle's ſentiments were too well known in Holland, for ſuch an accuſation to make any impreſſion upon reaſonable people, his enemies thought it would be better to endeavour to ruin him in England, where they expected to find leſs difficulty. They left no means unеſſayed to prejudice the Earl of Shaftſbury againſt him. But they were diſappointed in their attempts upon this noble Lord: he was too well acquainted with Mr Bayle, with whom he had entertained a cloſe friendſhip, during the ſtay which he had made at Rotterdam. He perceived the motives of this accuſation, and diverted himſelf with it among his friends. They wrote likewiſe to the Earl of Sunderland, aſſuring him that Mr Bayle had conferences with the Marquis d'Allegre, a priſoner of war, when he paſſed through Holland on his way to England. They added, that Mr Bayle ſpread every where principles favourable to Monarchy and abſolute Power, that he continually extolled the grandeur of France, and talked contemptibly of the power of the Allies, and of the great actions of their Generals &c. My Lord Sunderland being of a warm and impetuous temper, and having as great an averſion to the principles which they attributed to Mr Bayle, as he had a paſſion for the humbling of France, and the glory of the Engliſh General, never ſpoke of Mr Bayle without tranſports of indignation and wrath. I endeavoured to undeceive him, but without ſucceſs, his prejudices were too ſtrong. I own this alarmed me. I was afraid leaſt he ſhould perſuade the Court to complain to the States of Holland, who conſidering the ſituation of affairs at this time, could refuſe nothing to England; and leaſt upon ſuch powerful repreſentations they ſhould order Mr Bayle, a perſon without great intereſt, to depart out of the Seventeen Provinces. This in all appearance was what his enemies aimed at. I had recourſe to my Lord Shaftſbury, and acquained him with Mr Bayle's danger. This Lord promiſed to ſpeak to my Lord Sunderland, but at the ſame time told me, that it were to be wiſhed that to ſtop the mouths of his enemies, Mr Bayle ſhould take occaſion in ſome of his works to mention the ſucceſs of the arms of the Allies, which were principally owing to the activity of the Engliſh Miniſtry, and the conduct of the Engliſh General. He added, that this might be done without affectation, and without departing from the character of an hiſtorian, and ſignified to me that I would oblige him by inſinuating this to Mr Bayle as from myſelf.

I thought myſelf bound to acquaint Mr Bayle with what had paſſed, and with the converſation which I had had with my Lord Shafteſbury. He anſwered me (2), that Dr Sylveſtre had before informed him that my Lord Sunderland was out of humour with him on account of pretended conferences which he had with the Marquis d'Allegre: but that this was the moſt notorious falſhood that could be imagined. As to the other ground of accuſation, which was the chief cauſe of my Lord Sunderland's diſpleaſure, pleaſure, Mr Bayle ſaid, " that he defied his moſt inveterate enemies to find in his works " the leaſt ſhadow of affectation of ſpeaking advantageouſly of the King of France, his " Miniſters or Generals, or to the prejudice of the Allies: for (adds he) we muſt not " reckon here the Thoughts concerning Comets, a book which as I have advertiſed " before the third edition, was compoſed with a deſign to be printed at Paris, &c. " It is well known that the Abbé Renaudot alledged this amongſt other reaſons to " hinder my Dictionary from paſſing into France, that it contained things againſt " the State." Mr Bayle by no means approved the advice which had been given him, as the moſt proper to deſtroy his enemies calumnies. Being incapable of flattering on views of intereſt or even of praiſing unſeaſonably, he conſidered what was propoſed to him in that light, and declared that ſuch a conduct was very unſuitable to him. " However (ſays he), the plan which you lay down for me as " what would diſarm my enemies, is the advice of a good friend, and I return you " moſt hearty thanks for it, but I find it impoſſible for me to comply with it. It would " be very unſuitable for me at the age of fifty nine years, which with regard to the " weakneſs of the conſtitution that nature has given me, is a more infirm old age " than ſeventy or ſeventy five in other men; who beſides have ſtruggled more " than theſe ſix months paſt with a weakneſs in my lungs, a hereditary diſtemper " of which both my Mother and Grandmother died, and which conſequently doth " not permit me to propoſe to make a long ſtay in this world: it would be very un- " ſuitable for me, I ſay, to write like a Courtier and flatterer of men in power. " My enemies would rejoice to have ſuch an inequality of conduct to reproach me " with." 1706.

(2) Letter July 23, 1706, p. 1096, and the following.

Digitized by Google

(1) Letter July 23, 1706, p. 1100, and the following.

Mr Bayle wrote likewiſe to the Lord Shaftſbury (1), wherein he thanked him for theſe new marks of his goodneſs: and proteſted that it was falſe that he had had conferences with the Marquis d'Allegre; that he had not ſo much as known, any other ways than by the news papers, that the Marquis had been in Holland, and was gone over to England. He added, that no body knew his principles concerning government better than my Lord Shaftſbury, ſince he had the honour to converſe with his Lordſhip more than once on that ſubject. He prayed that he would undeceive the Lord Sunderland. My Lord Shaftſbury did it with ſucceſs. He repreſented to him that Mr Bayle being confined to his cloſet, and entirely taken up with his books and his works, did not in any ſort meddle with affairs of State, that neither his genius nor his talents lay that way, and that theſe accuſations proceeded only from the animoſity of certain authors who had had diſputes with him, and endeavoured to render him odious. My Lord Sunderland at laſt found that he had been impoſed upon, and did Mr Bayle juſtice. My Lord Shaftſbury immediately informed him of this, and Mr Bayle in return teſtified (2) how ſenſible he was of the generous attention my Lord had ſhewn to his intereſt, and how joyful he was to learn " that the calumnies whereby his ene- " mies had prejudiced my Lord Sunderland againſt him, were happily diſſipated by " his Lordſhip's means."

(2) Letter October 29, 1706, p. 1123, and the following.

About this time Mr Bayle received a little book, printed at Paris, intitled, Critical Remarks on the new edition of Moreri's Hiſtorical Dictionary, publiſhed in 1704 (3). The Author (4) had drawn almoſt all his remarks from Mr Bayle's Dictionary, and had given them for his own, yet notwithſtanding this he ſometimes criticized him. Mr Bayle thought that this Piece deſerved to be known in Holland, and to make it more uſeful he thought fit to reprint it (5) with Notes to clear up ſeveral facts which the author had either miſtaken, or had not related with ſufficient exactneſs. He even pointed out the faults of his ſtile, and his ambiguous or equivocal expreſſions; and laſtly, added a long Preface for the inſtruction of thoſe who ſhould publiſh any after editions of Moreri. The relation which this ſmall piece has to Mr Bayle's Dictionary, engaged one of my friends (6) to deſire it of me, that he might add it to the fourth edition of this Dictionary. I ſent it to him, together with ſome Obſervations, wherein I marked the places which the author had borrowed from the Critical Dictionary, and where I diſtinguiſhed the errors which he takes notice of in Moreri, and which are corrected in the later editions, from thoſe which ſtill remain to be corrected in the edition of 1725.

(3) Remarques critiques ſur la Nouvelle Edition du Dictionaire hiſtorique de Morery, donnée en 1704.

(4) The Abbé Tricauld, now Canon of the Abbey of Ainay at Lyons.

(5) At Rotterdam in 1706.

(6) Mr de la Motte.

Mr Bayle at the ſame time publiſhed a fourth volume of his Anſwer to the Queſtions of a Country Gentleman (7). He ſays in the Preface, which is dated November 25 1706, that this fourth volume might have appeared much ſooner, if the preſſes of his Bookſeller had not been employed in large works, which had been begun long before, and which it much concerned him to finiſh. The five firſt ſheets of it were printed before the beginning of April. The principal and largeſt part of this volume relates to Mr Bernard's Criticiſm upon the ſecond volume of the Continuation of the various Thoughts, and turns upon the parallel betwixt Atheiſm and Paganiſm, and upon the queſtion " Whether Chriſtianity be proper to maintain Societies? ". Mr Bayle flatters himſelf that his readers will find here ſuch a variety of arguments, authorities, and hiſtories, as will not allow them to be tired. " They ought not to fear, (ſays he) " that becauſe this is an anſwer to Mr Bernard, they will find nothing intereſting in " it. Every thing here is as dogmatical, and diſengaged from perſonal diſputes, as " if neither Mr Bernard, nor any other particular perſon had been in view."

(7) At Rotterdam by Reinier Leers, 1707.

Digitized by Google

1706. Mr Bernard had likewiſe made critical Extracts of the firſt and ſecond volume of the Anſwer to a Country Gentleman (1): Mr Bayle ſays, that he could have wiſhed to have inſerted in this fourth volume an Anſwer which he had made to theſe Extracts. "This Anſwer, adds he, has been finiſhed a good while ago, and treats of "matters no leſs curious than important. In a word, it is ſuch as might render an "Author impatient to have it publiſhed. Nevertheleſs he had been obliged to reſt "content, that the publiſhing of it ſhould be referred to the volume which is to follow "this." This fifth volume did not appear till after Mr Bayle's death, and he did not live to reviſe, correct, and enlarge it as he could have done. Notwithſtanding he handles ſeveral important queſtions in it, and examines ſeveral hiſtorical facts with a ſcrupulous exactneſs.

(1) News from the Republic of Letters, January 1706, art. iv. p. 49, and February, art. ii. p. 153.

Mr le Clerc did not leave Mr Bayle's laſt Anſwer without a Reply. He repeated his accuſations with a great deal of vehemence (2); he maintained that Mr Bayle had not anſwered his principal difficulties, and that what he had objected againſt him in his laſt piece was vain and frivolous. Mr Bayle had offered to ſubmit the deciſion of their difference to the Univerſities in Holland: Mr le Clerc anſwered, that he had a much eaſier and more honourable way, which was, ſaid he, to deſire an approbation of his Dictionary, his Thoughts concerning Comets, and the Anſwers to the Queſtions of a Country Gentleman, in which theſe Univerſities ſhould declare, that they find nothing in them contrary to their ſentiments, particularly in the articles and chapters concerning the Manicheans, and Predeſtination. If they grant him ſuch an approbation (adds he) I will ſay that I was to blame in denying that he is of their opinion.

(2) Bibliotheque Choiſie, Tom. x. art. viii, p. 364, and the following.

Mr Bayle replied in a book intitled Dialogues betwixt Maximus and Themiſtus: or an Anſwer to what Mr le Clerc has wrote in his Xth volume of the Bibliotheque Choiſie, againſt Mr Bayle (3). Maximus and Themiſtus examine and criticize each in his turn Mr le Clerc's piece. They labour to defend Mr Bayle's principles, and to ſhow that Mr le Clerc has drawn falſe conſequences from them. They complain that he frequently diſguiſeth the ſtate of the queſtion, and takes no notice of the moſt ſtrong and moſt convincing things which have been anſwered to him. We ſee that this diſpute had degenerated into reproaches of Author againſt Author, and had become in a manner perſonal. Theſe reproaches were attended with many harſh and provoking expreſſions. The learned and ingenious Lord Falkland (4) ſaid, that there ought to be no more ſharpneſs in a book of controverſy than in a billet-doux. This maxim concerns Philoſophers no leſs than the Controvertiſts; or rather all the Learned ought to be Philoſophers in this reſpect: but when an Author ſees that his perſon, his honour, and reputation are attacked, it is very hard for him to contain himſelf. He thinks himſelf obliged to repel theſe injuries, and in his turn to wound his enemy in the moſt ſenſible parts.

(3) Entretiens de Maxime & de Themiſte: ou Réponſe à ce que Mr le Clerc a écrit dans ſon x Tome de la Bibliotheque Choiſie contre Mr Bayle. At Rotterdam, by Reinier Leers, 1707.

The attacks which were made upon Mr Bayle from all quarters, gave Mr Jurieu freſh courage. He thought the occaſion favourable, and that he ought to make uſe of it. He publiſhed a little book intitled, The Philoſopher of Rotterdam accuſed, attainted, and convicted (5). He repeats here his old accuſations againſt Mr Bayle, though they had been refuted in a manner which had reduced him to ſilence. He beſtows great encomiums on Meſſieurs Jaquelot and Bernard, whom he had perſecuted on ſuſpicion of Hereſy: he treats Mr le Clerc in the ſame manner, whom he mortally hated. But theſe gentlemen had wrote againſt Mr Bayle, he brings them in evidence againſt him, and he would not diſcredit his own witneſſes. In the mean while he could not help mixing ſome ſtrokes of ſatire with theſe panegyrics, he maliciouſly hints at their former diſgraces and heterodox opinions. But he made uſe of a cunning ſhift in doing this. He related under the name of Mr Bayle and of his friends, the reaſons which might be alledged againſt admitting theſe three witneſſes, and joins himſelf with them. "He is very diverting (ſays he (6), and his friends with him, in the re- "proaches which they throw out againſt theſe witneſſes. The Rotterdam Divine "is conceited, fond to diſtraction of his own productions, vaſtly in love with ſu- "perlatives, and diſcontented with the bad reception of his works. Mr Jaquelot "has been piqued upon hearing that Mr Bayle had ſpoke with ſmall eſteem of "his book concerning the exiſtence of God. Beſides he is a man more than ſuſpected, "and has not extricated himſelf with honour out of certain affairs. Another has "been cenſured by the Synods. The third is a Pelagian and Socinian, convicted "of hereſy and impiety." Mr Jurieu is at much pains to find ſome difference betwixt his principles and thoſe of Mr Bayle. We may judge with what ſucceſs by the account he gives of his own ſyſtem, which he reduceth to theſe three points (7): "I. That God could have no other end in his works, in his decrees, in his pro- "vidence, than his own glory; from which it follows that all the diſpoſitions of "the divine providence are juſt, wiſe, and reaſonable, how hard ſoever they appear "to the fleſh and oppoſite to the intereſt of the creatures. II. That there is nothing "in man, or in human things, like what is in God; the names of Being, Subſtance, "Thinking-ſubſtance, Will, Underſtanding, Liberty, Right, Juſtice, and ſuch like, are all "equivocal, and do not ſignify in God what they ſignify in man, ſo that it is in "vain to compare the conduct and rights of God with regard to man, with the "rights

(4) Killed at the Battle of Newbury September, 20, 1643.

(5) Le Philoſophe de Rotterdam accuſé, atteint, & convaincu. The title bears that it is printed at Amſterdam, but the Printer's name is not mentioned.

(6) Le Philoſophe de Rotterdam, &c. p. 39, 40.

(7) Ibid. pag. 113, and the following.

Digitized by Google

" rights of men with regard to one another; and all arguments drawn from thence 1706.
" are ſophiſms, being founded on compariſons betwixt things not to be compared to" gether, to wit, God and the creature, and the rights of God and thoſe of man.
" III. But what puts an end to all diſpute, is the ſovereign right which God has over " his creatures: that power without bounds, ought to ſilence man, with regard to every " thing that troubles him, or ſtartles his reaſon in the conduct of providence; and
" conſequently this utterly confounds all the prophane and impious difficulties which " the Author of the Dictionary furniſheth to the Manicheans and Paulicians, and
" which he diſplays in ſo pompous a manner."

Mr Jurieu ſhows that St Paul had foreſeen and mentioned theſe difficulties in his Epiſtle to the Romans (1), and that he anſwers them by ſhowing that the ſovereign right which God has over his creatures ought to ſilence Reaſon. Mr Jurieu obſerves that St Paul concludes the diſpute with this beautiful and ſublime exclamation, O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counſellor? " It is as clear as the ſun (adds Mr Jurieu (2), that by " theſe words the Apoſtle deſigns to rebuke the raſhneſs of thoſe pretenders to learn-
" ing, who demand that all difficulties ſhould be ſolved by the way of human Reaſon
" and of their philoſophical axioms, and that we ſhould confeſs that human reaſon
" is incompatible with Divine Revelation, as if what is above reaſon muſt needs al" ways be againſt reaſon." It is plain that Mr Jurieu had Mr Bayle in view here; but neither doth he forget Mr le Clerc and Mr Jaquelot. " We muſt confeſs like-
" wiſe (adds he), that this pious exclamation of St Paul ſhows the error of thoſe
" Divines, who would reconcile Reaſon and Revelation by Pelagian maxims. Surely,
" if it be true, as theſe Gentlemen pretend, that in order to get out of this labyrinth
" we need only ſuppoſe man abſolute maſter of his free-will and of his actions, this
" exclamation O the depth &c, and how unſearchable are his judgments &c, appears
" neither very well grounded, nor very neceſſary. For there is no difficulty left,
" when we ſay, that God has forſaken man becauſe he made a bad uſe of his free
" will." Here he only repeats what he had a little before ſaid in a more ſtrong manner and more at large. " I would willingly know (ſays he (3), why ſo many divines
" are afraid of this hypotheſis, (of the ſovereign right of God over his creatures); and
" chooſe rather to cry up the dignity of a free creature, and the excellence of liberty.
" This is good; but it is of no uſe in this queſtion, and beſides it leads to Pela-
" gianiſm. By ſhutting one gate, as we imagine, againſt the impieties of the Mani-
" cheans and Pyrrhonians, we open another, or at leaſt leave another open; for we " are under a neceſſity of owning, that God is the Author of that free-will which he " has beſtowed upon man, and that he is maſter of it to ſtop the courſe of its " diſorders when he thinks proper. So that we ſhall never be able to ſtop the mouths
" of the prophane by this means."

This is preciſely what Mr Bayle had ſaid: however he did not think fit to take any advantage from this piece; he did not think it worthy of his notice. He had before ſufficiently ſhown the conformity of what he had advanced, with Mr Jurieu's doctrine.

Mr Jaquelot had not begun his diſpute with Mr Bayle to make an end of it ſo ſoon, he returned once more to the charge; but inſtead of confining himſelf to the three eſſential heads of this controverſy, he digreſſed to other matters which either entered only incidentally into it, or which had not indeed the leaſt relation to it. He however by this means purſued his deſign, which was to repreſent Mr Bayle as a perſon who attacked Religion. He intitled his Reply, An Examination of Mr Bayle's Theology, diſperſed in his Critical Dictionary, in his Thoughts concerning Comets, and in his Anſwers to a Country Gentleman; wherein the Conformity betwixt Faith and Reaſon is defended againſt his Anſwer (4). Mr Bayle gave the following judgment concerning this performance in a letter to one of his friends (5). " I will tell you in confidence that Mr Jaquelot's
" book is full of malice, inſincerity, and weak reaſoning. He departs as well as I
" from the common notions of goodneſs and holineſs, and conſequently he is wounded
" by all the thruſts Mr le Clerc has made againſt me. I ſhall not fail to make this ob-
" ſervation which will embaraſs my accuſer; for he is Mr Jaquelot's friend, and even
" reviſed his manuſcript." Mr Bayle anſwered Mr Jaquelot by way of Dialogue, as he had done Mr le Clerc. This Anſwer is intitled, Dialogues betwixt Maximus and Themiſtus: or an Anſwer to Mr Jaquelot's Examination of Mr Bayle's Theology (6). Mr Bayle in the beginning obſerves, that he might neglect the firſt three hundred and four pages of Mr Jaquelot's Reply which conſiſts of four hundred and ſeventy two, becauſe they do not concern the main point in the preſent controverſy. The diſpute had been reduced to theſe three points. I. The liberty of indifference. II. The Origin of Evil. III. The objections which Pyrrhoniſm might found upon ſome doctrines of Revealed Religion. With regard to the firſt, Mr Bayle obſerves that it is not neceſſary to inſiſt upon it. " Mr Jaquelot, ſays he (7), ought to have abandoned it entirely in his Reply, ſince
" Mr Bayle had given him a carte blanche, that is to ſay, had allowed him to ſhow
" himſelf intirely Pelagian, ſince he had attacked him concerning the Origin of Evil,
" without ſuppoſing any other principle but the liberty of indifference. Mr Jaquelot notwithſtanding

(1) Chap. ix and xi.

(2) Le Philoſophe de Roterdam &c. pag. 128, 129.

(3) Ibid. pag. 118, 119.

(4) Examen de la Théologie de Mr Bayle, répanduë dans ſon Dictionaire Critique, dans ſes Penſée ſur les Cometes, & dans ſes Réponſes à un Provincial; où l'on defend la Conformité de la Foi avec la Raiſon, contre ſa Réponſe.

(5) Letter to Mr la Croze of the 25*th of October* 1706, p. 1121.

(6) Entretiens de Maxime & de Themiſte: ou Réponſe à l'Examen de la Theologie de Mr Bayle, par Mr Jaquelot.

(7) Entretiens de Maxime & de Themiſte &c. p. 4, 5.

Digitized by Google

1706. " notwithſtanding (adds he), has re-handled this queſtion as a matter of great impor" tance; Whether man is poſſeſſed of this liberty or not. His great itch for rea-
" ſoning in the Arminian way has occaſioned this. He ſhows the ſame impatience
" which new converts do, who preſently publiſh the motives of their conver-
" ſion."

Mr Bayle reproacheth Mr Jaquelot with five faults. I. That he has attacked Mr Bayle's doctrine, without ſeeming to know that it is the ſame with that of the Reformed, and afterwards ſeems to believe it to be very different from it. II. That he believes that the ſame doctrine is innocent or blameable according to the different intentions of thoſe who teach it. Mr Bayle had ſhown that Mr Jurieu had taught, before him, that no ſyſtem could ſolve the objections which may be made againſt the fall of Adam and its conſequences, and that he had laid down the ſame difficulties which Mr Bayle has done. Mr Jaquelot had been aſked why he did not ſooner attack this doctrine, which as he imagines tends to make God author of ſin, and to deſtroy Religion. To this Mr Jaquelot here anſwers (1), that he did not write againſt Mr Jurieu, becauſe he believed him ſincere in his Syſtem, and that he had not directly ſtruck at any of the fundamentals of Religion: but that he thought fit to refute Mr Bayle, becauſe he believed him ill perſuaded of the Syſtem eſtabliſhed by the Synod of Dort, and ill affected towards the principles of Religion. Mr Bayle thinks this a very extraordinary diſtinction. No body (ſays he) has ever thought of diſtinguiſhing things of this ſort. It has been always believed that if two Authors maintain the ſame doctrine, it was impoſſible to refute the one without refuting the other. He puts Mr Jaquelot in mind of his declaration in the preface to his firſt book, that he had no intention of attacking either Mr Bayle's perſon or morals, or of diving into his intentions, which declaration he had repeated in the body of the book in theſe words: I do not at all deſire to dive into this Author's ſecret views. . . . . let us forbear raſh judgments (2). But in his ſecond book he continually affirms that Mr Bayle has very bad intentions. Mr Bayle aſks him whence he has got this new light, and aſcribes this change in his conduct to his being irritated by the bad ſucceſs of his attack. He adds that Mr Jaquelot, even when he was writing his Reply, having foreſeen that the heat of the diſpute and the neceſſity of having pretexts, would oblige him to repeat his raſh judgments a thouſand times over, had formally diſavowed them and made a ſort of retractation. I only wiſh, ſays he (3), that the reader may remember that I do not pretend to ſpeak either of Mr Bayle's perſon or his morals. . . . The title of this chapter, ſays he ſome pages after (4), ſufficiently ſhows that I do not deſire to ſpeak either of Mr Bayle's intention or of his morals.

(1) Examen de la Theologie de Mr Bayle, p. 66, 67.

(2) Conformité de la Foi avec la Raiſon &c. p. 222.

(3) Examen &c. p. 60.

(4) Ibid. p. 78.

The third fault with which he reproacheth Mr Jaquelot, is, that he affirms that Mr Bayle deprives man of all ſort of liberty. To this it had been already anſwered, that Mr Bayle had neither affirmed or denied any thing on that ſubject, and that a diſcuſſion of that queſtion was uſeleſs, becauſe Mr Bayle had agreed to diſpute with him as a Pelagian. He had attacked him all along, even ſuppoſing the liberty of indifference, and by ſhowing that this liberty doth not at all weaken the Manichean objections. Mr Bayle therefore was not concerned to refute it, and yet he could have done it without deſtroying all ſort of liberty, ſince the Contra-Remonſtrants who reject the liberty of indifference, nevertheleſs maintain that man acts freely ſince he acts voluntarily and deliberately. Now Mr Bayle never undertook to deprive man of this kind of liberty. He next ſhows what might have deceived Mr Jaquelot, and led him aſide from the true ſtate of the queſtion.

The fourth fault of Mr Jaquelot is, that he attacks Mr Bayle concerning the Conformity of Faith with Reaſon, and yet ſays at bottom the ſame thing that he has done. People believed upon reading the title of his firſt book, The Conformity of Faith with Reaſon, &c. that he had undertaken to ſhow this conformity according to the plan laid down in the Anſwer to a Country Gentlemen, which is in ſubſtance this " (5) We muſt ſhow that we not only have philoſophical maxims agree" able to our Faith, but likewiſe that the particular maxims which are objected to " us as not conformable to our Catechiſm, are really conformable to it in a manner
" which may be diſtinctly conceived. . . . . (6) This Conformity requires not only
" that your Theſis be agreeable to ſeveral philoſophical maxims, but likewiſe that " it be not ſucceſsfully attacked by any other maxims of reaſon. Now it will be " ſucceſsfully attacked by them, if you cannot defend yourſelf otherwiſe than by
" unintelligible diſtinctions, or by excuſing yourſelf on account of unfathomable depth " of the ſubject." It was eaſy for Mr Jaquelot (adds he) to perceive, even before he read the above plan, that it is this which is wanted when we deſire a proof of the Conformity of Faith with Reaſon. But he has been very far from writing upon this plan. " When I ſpeak of the Conformity of Faith with Reaſon (ſays he in his
" firſt book (7), I mean that we ought not to renounce our Reaſon, in order to " embrace Religion. For though there be Myſteries in Religion which Reaſon can" not ſufficiently comprehend, it doth not follow from this that thoſe myſteries
" are contrary to reaſon. In the ſame manner it doth not follow that the infinite di-
" viſibility of body and motion, are contrary to Reaſon, though Reaſon cannot
" anſwer the difficulties which may be objected againſt theſe propoſitions." It is

(5) Réponſe aux Queſtions d'un Provincial, Tom. iii. p. 685.

(6) Ibid. p. 687.

(7) Examen &c. p. 287.

Digitized by Google

obſerved, that if Mr Jaquelot hath nothing elſe to advance he has attacked Mr Bayle very groundleſsly, ſince Mr Bayle never ſaid that we ought to renounce our Reaſon in order to embrace Religion, and on the contrary has repeated a thouſand times, that we cannot act more agreeably to reaſon, than in preferring the authority of the Scripture to the philoſophical maxims which ſet themſelves in oppoſition to our myſteries. Thus he ſhows that it is in vain for Mr Jaquelot to pretend to make a difference betwixt his doctrine and that of Mr Bayle, and that it appears by the ſtate of the queſtion laid down by Mr Bayle, that Mr Jaquelot and he do not really differ in their ſentiments. 1706.

The fifth fault he finds with Mr Jaquelot is, that he has undertaken an accommodation which was not at all neceſſary. He declares that it is his intention to ſhow that we ought not to renounce our Reaſon in order to embrace Religion. Now all the world knew that they who admit the Trinity, and the other myſteries of the Goſpel, believe themſelves very reaſonable, and that far from renouncing their reaſon, they found their belief upon philoſophical axioms, which are in the higheſt degree evident and certain. They found their belief on this, that God can neither deceive nor be deceived, and conſequently that what he ſays ought always be believed; and they employ Reaſon to find out the true ſenſe of Scripture. Every body likewiſe knew, that it is not a juſt cauſe of rejecting a doctrine, becauſe it is liable to great difficulties; and that the pre-eminence of the divine nature doth not allow us to ſubject it to the ſame duties by which men are tied to one another. All theſe truths are commonly known, and it is not this we expect from thoſe who promiſe to ſhow the Conformity of Faith with Reaſon. We expect that they ſhould ſhow that our theological ſyſtems are united with Reaſon by theſe very maxims, which it furniſheth to the enemy, and on which the objections are founded; and that the ſolution which they give ſhall diſcover the medium by which theſe philoſophical maxims and theological hypotheſes are connected together. But this is what Mr Jaquelot hath not done. He has been ſo frighted at the plan of reconciliation which was pointed out to him, betwixt ſeven theological propoſitions and nineteen philoſophical propoſitions, that he has not had the courage to approach them: he has only pretended that theſe nineteen propoſitions "are falſe maxims, which ought not at all to be made uſe "of in the preſent queſtion (1)." Mr Bayle had owned that we ought to renounce the common notions of goodneſs and holineſs in judging of the providence of God with regard to evil. This confeſſion had diſpleaſed ſeveral people. It is upon this that Mr le Clerc grounds his accuſation againſt Mr Bayle of deſtroying religion. But ſince Mr Jaquelot likewiſe refuſes our common notions, and affirms that the damned will ſuffer eternally, he ought to think himſelf involved in Mr le Clerc's accuſation, as an accomplice in the pretended impieties of Mr Bayle. From this he draws another proof, that nothing could be more deceitful than the title of Mr Jaquelot's firſt piece: The Conformity of Faith with Reaſon; or a Defence of Religion, againſt the principal difficulties diſperſed in Mr Bayle's Dictionary. To rectify this title, we ought to change it as follows: The imperfect Conformity of Faith, with ſome maxims of Reaſon; or a diſpute with Mr Bayle, wherein it is acknowledged that the philoſophical maxims, which he believed to be irreconcileable with our ſyſtems of Divinity, are really ſo. After this follows an examination of the five principles which Mr Jaquelot ſubſtitutes to the common notions which he has rejected, and it is ſhown that they are not ſufficient to ſatisfy reaſon. It is obſerved, that Mr Jaquelot, not being able to anſwer the difficulties which Mr Bayle had raiſed againſt his firſt work, had no other reſource than to invent a new Syſtem, under favour of which he might get rid of theſe objections which it was not poſſible for him to evade, if he had continued in his firſt principles. Mr Bayle ſhows, that by this new Syſtem Mr Jaquelot retracts all that he had ſaid in his firſt book, in juſtification of the permiſſion of ſin, on pretence that the glory of God is intereſted in it. He examines this new Syſtem, and proves that it is of no uſe in the ſolution of the difficulties in queſtion. He maintains, that it evidently follows from Mr Jaquelot's ſyſtem, that God has willed ſin, and is, properly ſpeaking, the cauſe of it. He proves that this Miniſter has in vain pretended, that free-will ſolves all the difficulties touching the origin of evil. He refutes his doctrine concerning the permiſſion of evil, and alſo what he anſwered concerning phyſical evil, and Pyrrhoniſm, and gives an anſwer to ſeveral remarks which he had made on the third volume of the Anſwer to a Country Gentleman. Laſtly, he gives the reaſons why he had not examined the firſt 303 pages of Mr Jaquelot's reply, and had contented himſelf with making a few obſervations, which regard principally the collection of difficulties which he had drawn out of the Critical Dictionary, and to which he had joined ſome reflexions.

(1) Pag. 317.

In this work Mr Bayle complains that Mr Jaquelot has made no anſwer to a great many embarraſſing difficulties; that he abounds in ſhifts and diſguiſes; that he treads ſincerity under foot, in order to follow the motions of perſonal hatred; that he wants only to chicane and conceal difficulties; that he mutilates the paſſages which he quotes from his adverſary, and affects to talk contemptibly of his book: he obſerves that he is ſometimes ſo confounded that he attacks his own principles; that he abandons himſelf too much to his preſumption; that he is too proud to acknowledge that he ever has been miſtaken, &c. This ſtile was not natural to Mr Bayle: he uſed to diſpute without departing from the bounds of moderation. On the contrary he uſed to diſſemble or excuſe the faults of his adverſaries, and ſoften his criticiſms with a thouſand polite and obliging ſtrokes. But he was ſoured and piqued by ſeeing that his perſon rather than his ſentiments was attacked, and that nothing was omitted in order to draw the indignation of the public upon him. This manner of proceeding ſeemed very unreaſonable to diſintereſted perſons. Mr de Bauval complained of it. "If Mr Bayle (ſays he (1), has "had ſecret and dangerous deſigns againſt Religion, that is Mr Bayle's particular "concern, the public are not intereſted in it. They who only ſeek after truth, will "not be at much pains to examine whether the accuſations againſt Mr Bayle be "well founded or not. They will mind only the principle cauſe. Now it is re- "markable that his antagoniſts attack him alone on this head, though it is certain "that almoſt all the Roman Catholics, and the greateſt part of the Proteſtants "loudly maintain the ſame thing [R]. Why ſhould they ſingle him out, and fall "ſo

Digitized by Google

(1) Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned. December 1706. p. 544.

[R] The greateſt part of the Proteſtants loudly maintain the ſame thing.] They who undertook to confute Mr Bayle upon Arminian principles, durſt not deny that his doctrine was the ſame with that of the Reformed. They ſaved themſelves only by ſaying that he had bad intentions. They in the mean while attacked the opinion of the Reformed, and pretended that it was liable to Mr Bayle's objections, Mr Jaquelot ſeeing that Mr Jurieu had declared, that it was in vain to exalt the free-will of man, and that this hypotheſis was not capable of ſolving difficulties (a), made an addition to his laſt book, in which he chargeth Mr Jurieu's ſyſtem with all the conſequences of the Manicheans. Thus Mr Bayle's adverſaries refuted one another, and in their turns adjudged him the victory. "I cannot imagine, ſays Mr Jaquelot (b), how a Di- "vine, who has well underſtood Mr Bayle's objecti- "ons againſt the hypotheſis of thoſe who for all an- "ſwer content themſelves with impoſing ſilence on reaſon, doth not perceive that it will follow from "this method of arguing, that human reaſon may be "convinced, by good and neceſſary conſequences, "that God is the cauſe of evil, and the author of ſin." He declares that "(c) all they who will not abandon "the hypotheſes on which Mr Bayle has founded his "difficulties, are indiſpenſibly obliged to ſhow the "falſhood of his conſequences, and of his objecti- "ons, in a manner capable of ſatisfying the conſcience "of a knowing and reaſonable man. Otherwiſe it "is pure obſtinacy, and a falſe honour, to reſolve to "continue in principles from which ſuch horrible "conſequences are drawn." Mr le Clerc approved of this judgment. "Mr Jaquelot obſerves very well "(ſays he (d), that if we grant to Mr Bayle, that "Reaſon cannot make a good reply to the conſe- "quences which he draws againſt Religion, from "the doctrine of abſolute Predeſtination, this is "to own, that theſe conſequences are fairly drawn, "and conſequently that the doctrine is falſe. We "muſt allow this or renounce all Logic." Mr le Clerc adds, "that the political intereſt which ſome "people had formerly in maintaining Abſolute Pre- "deſtination having ceaſed, it was high time to "renounce a doctrine, from which they ſee con- "ſequences are drawn which they own they cannot "anſwer."

(a) See above, p. cx.

(b) Addition à l'Examen de la Theologie de Mr Bayle, &c. p. 475, 476.

(c) Ibid. pag. 478.

(d) Bibliotheque choiſie, Tom. xi. p. 412, 413.

On the other ſide, Mr la Placette, not content with Mr le Clerc's and Mr Jaquelot's hypotheſes, thought himſelf obliged to anſwer the Manichean objections by the principles of the Calviniſts. But as he was a man of great moderation, he carried his regard for Mr Bayle ſo far as not to name him. His book is intitled An Anſwer to two objections which are oppoſed on the part of Reaſon to what faith teacheth us concerning the origin of evil, and the myſtery of the Trinity &c (e). "Some diſtinguiſhed authors, (ſays he (f), "have undertaken to anſwer theſe objections, eſpeci- "the firſt which is the moſt plauſible. But as they "have built upon principles which do not appear to "me to be at all ſolid, and which are not even uni- "verſally acknowledged; it were to be wiſhed "that ſome other would undertake this task, and "examine theſe objections by comparing them "with more ſolid and leſs conteſted principles." Mr le Clerc ſpeaking of this work of Mr la Placette, obſerved (g) "that it was compoſed before Mr Bayle's "death, but luckily it was not publiſhed during his "life. If Mr Bayle had ſeen it, ſays he, I am ſure, conſidering his humour, that he would have ſheltered "himſelf under the reputation of this Divine. He "would have ſaid, that he was ready to ſubſcribe "this book, without changing his opinion, and "would have pretended to be as orthodox as Mr la "Placette, to whom on other accounts no body will "compare him." Was not this to confeſs, that Mr Bayle's principles were agreeable to thoſe of this learned and judicious Divine?"

(e) Réponſe à deux Objections, qu'on oppoſe de la part de la Raiſon à ce que la Foi nous apprend ſur l'origine du mal, & ſur la myſtere de le Trinité, &c. printed at Amſterdam in 1707.

(f) Réponſe à deux Objections, &c. Preface fol. *3.

(g) Biblioth. choiſie, Tom. xiii. p. 415, 416.

Mr Naudé in 1708 publiſhed a book intitled, The ſovereign perfection of God in his divine attributes, and the perfect integrity of the Scripture taken in the ſenſe of the ancient Reformers, defended by right reaſon againſt all the objections of Manicheiſm diſperſed in Mr Bayle's writings (b). In this work Mr Naudé oppoſeth the ſyſtem of the Supralapſarians to the Manichean objections, being perſuaded that this is the only hypotheſis whereby they can be ſolved. So he is very far from approving of the hypotheſis of Dr King, Mr le Clerc, and Mr Jaquelot; nay he even refutes them with a great deal of vivacity, and at length endeavours to ſhow that Mr Jaquelot has not ſolidly anſwered Mr Bayle. He moreover maintains, that Mr Bayle has triumphed over Mr Jaquelot and Mr le Clerc. "Mr Jaquelot, ſays he (i), fol- "lowing a ſyſtem merely of human invention, en- "deavours to juſtify God from the blame of being "in any ſort the author of ſin. But he acquits him- "ſelf very indifferently, ſince by drawing conſe- "quences which neceſſarily follow from his doctrine, "we muſt conclude that God is the author of ſin, "whatever Mr Jaquelot can ſay to the contrary, and "Mr Bayle's laſt work (k) has proved this in an in- "conteſtable manner. Beſides, he makes God au- "thor of ſin in a much more odious manner. He po- "ſitively denies doctrines founded on a hundred paſ- "ſages of Scripture, he therefore gives it the lie, "which alone is ſufficient to pluck up Chriſtianity "by the roots. Moreover Mr Jaquelot frequently "contradicts himſelf, and frequently contradicts "right reaſon. All Chriſtians therefore notwith- "ſtanding his anſwer are reduced to the ſtraits to "which Mr Bayle pretends to have puſhed them. "Mr le Clerc with his Origeniſm, adds Mr Naudé, "is ſtill more unſucceſsful than Mr Jaquelot, ſince "he more formally contradicts the Scripture, and "falls likewiſe under the ſame inconveniencies. So "both the one and other have been entirely defeated "by this laſt book of Mr Bayle. I deſire to be "judged in this by thoſe who have been ſpectators "of the combat.'

(b) La ſouveraine perfection de Dieu dans ſes divins attributs, &c. printed at Amſterdam in 2 Vol. in 12mo.

(i) La ſouveraine perfection de Dieu, &c. Preface pag. xxxiv, xxxv.

(k) Entretiens de Maxime & de Themiſte, &c.

The reader will perhaps not be diſpleaſed to hear Mr Baſnage's judgment of this diſpute. "Two "pieces ſays, he in a letter to me (l), have lately ap- "peared againſt Mr Bayle, one by Mr la Placette, "the other by Mr Jaquelot, which I have not ſeen. "Methinks they may be eaſily ſet to combat one "againſt the other. If a man be a Predeſtinarian in "the terms of the Synod of Dort, he will look upon "the anſwers of Meſſieurs le Clerc, Bernard, and Ja- "quelot as bad: and the Arminians imagine that he "cannot be well anſwered by the ordinary ſyſtem. "One cannot ſay that he is well anſwered whatever "ſyſtem they take. For on the contrary, each party

(l) Letter of the 19*th of Aug.* 1707.

Digitized by Google

" ſo bitterly upon him alone, why do they make no account of the great multitude 1706.
" of Divines who are on his ſide? This is one of the principal points in the diſpute " betwixt him and his adverſaries, on which however they have inſiſted very little.
" Methinks this is what they ought to have principally laboured: otherwiſe they " may be ſuſpected of having deſigned leſs to defend Religion, than to revenge
" themſelves againſt Mr Bayle."

Mr Bayle for above ſix months had been ill of a decay of the lungs, which weakened him ſenſibly. As this was a hereditary diſtemper he judged it mortal, and his friends could not perſuade him to take any remedy. He ſaw death approaching without either fearing or deſiring it. He laboured conſtantly, and with the ſame tranquillity of mind as if death had not been ready to interrupt his work. In a Letter of thanks which he wrote to my Lord Shaftſbury, he gave an account both of his occupations and of his illneſs. " I ſhould have thought (ſays he (1), that a
" diſpute with Divines would have put me out of humour, but I find by experience
" that it ſerves for an amuſement to me in the ſolitude to which I have reduced myſelf.
" For as my diſeaſe is a diſorder in my lungs, nothing pains me more than ſpeaking.
" I therefore neither make nor receive viſits, but I divert myſelf with anſwering
" Mr le Clerc and Mr Jaquelot, whom I find conſtantly guilty of inſincerity."

His Anſwer to Mr le Clerc was already printed, and the larger part of his Reply to Mr Jaquelot: he had anſwered every thing that was conſiderable in the laſt book which the latter had publiſhed, and there was nothing left to be done but to make ſome remarks, which he reſerved for the end of it, when death prevented him. Mr Leers wrote what follows to me on that ſubject. " (2) Mr Bayle died " with great tranquillity, and without any body with him. The evening before his " death, after having ſtudied all day, he gave my Corrector ſome copy of his An-
" ſwer to Mr Jaquelot, and told him that he was very bad. Next day at nine of the " clock in the morning his landlady entered his chamber, he aſked her, but with a
" dying voice, if his fire was kindled, and died a moment after, without Mr Baſ-
" nage, or me, or any of his friends with him." He died the twenty eighth of December 1706, aged fifty nine years one month and ten days. He had at firſt made a Will in favour of Mademoiſelle Bayle, his niece, his eldeſt brother's daughter; but ſhe having died in the month of October, the ſame year, he made another at Toulouſe, whereby he appointed Mr de Bruguiere, his couſin by the mother's ſide, his heir. He bequeathed to him ten thouſand gilders in money, and all his manuſcripts, excepting the Articles which he had compoſed for a Supplement to his Dictionary, which he gave by way of legacy to Mr Leers. He left all his books of Theology and Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory to Mr Baſnage his Executor; and the reſt to Mr Paets, Treaſurer of the Admiralty of Rotterdam, as a teſtimony of his gratitude for the favours which he had received from that honourable family. He left likewiſe to Mademoiſelle Paets a golden medal of which the Count de Dhona had made him a preſent (3). He was buried in the French Church at Rotterdam: he had left a hundred guilders to the poor of that Church.

He was univerſally lamented. The Journal de Sçavans expreſſed the ſentiments of the public by ſaying, that the year could not conclude with a more ſenſible loſs to the Republic of Letters (4). A great many perſons of diſtinction honoured him with their friendſhip. His friends in France were, the Duke of Noailles, the Count de Guiſcard, the Marquis de Bonrepaux, the Marquis de Bonac, the Marquis de Bougi, Monſieur and Madame de la Sabliere, Mr du Frêne, Counſellor of the Parliament of Mets, Mr Brodeau d'Oiſeville, Counſellor of the ſame Parliament, and afterwards Lieutenant-General at Tours, Mr Thomaſſin de Mazaugues, Counſellor of the Parliament of Aix, the Abbé Bignon, Father Malebranche, both the Fathers Lamy, the Abbé Nicaiſe, the Abbé du Bos, Father de Vitry, Father Sagaens, Meſſieurs Claude, Mr Bayle, Profeſſor at Toulouſe, Mr Rainſant and Mr Oudinet, Keepers of the King's Cabinet of Medals, Mr Charles Perrault, Mr de Benſerade, Mr Menage, Mr de Longepierre, Mr de la Monnoye, Mr Marais, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, Mr de Fontenelle, Mr Lancelot, Mr Simon de Valhebert, Mr Naudis de Bruguiere, Mr du Faï, Mr Janiçon, Advocate in the Council at Paris, Mr de Larroque &c. In England: The Earls of Shaftſbury and Huntington, Dr Burnet, Biſhop of Saliſbury, Mr Juſtel, Meſſieurs de la Riviere and Dubourdieu, who had been Miniſters at Toulouſe and at Montpellier, Mr Abbadie, Mr Cappel, Profeſſor at Saumur, Mr le Vaſſor, Mr de la Touche, Meſſieurs Sylveſtre, Buiſſiere, Baÿze, Pujolas, Coſte &c. In Germany: The Counts of Dhona and Reckheim, Meſſieurs Leibniz,

(1) Letter of the 29th of October 1706, p. 1124. See likewiſe a Letter to Mademoiſelle Baricave of the 28th of October 1706, p. 1122, 1123.

(2) Mr Leers's Letter, January 18, 1707.

(3) See Letter to Mr Ancillon Auguſt 13, 1702, p. 915.

(4) Journal des Sçavans, January 1707, p. 207, of the Dutch Edition.

" pretends that the other miſtakes and wanders from " the point, and is not able to ſuſtain the weight
" of Mr Bayle's objections. It is not two different " ways which they take to arrive at the ſame end,
" but two oppoſite roads, of which the one takes
" to the right and the other to the left, and each
" maintains that his own road is the only true one.
" Add to this, that Mr Bayle has obliged Mr Jaque-
" lot to declare himſelf Arminian, after having eaten
" the bread of the Orthodox for eighteen years, and
" after having made ſolemn proteſtations in our Sy-
" nods that he was not ſo. Mr le Clerc has been o" bliged to quit the eternity of puniſhments; he has " abandoned the doctrine both of the Ancients and
" Moderns, without being able to juſtify Providence,
" or ſolve the difficulties which remain ſtill. For
" beſides moral evil, there are abundance of phyſical
" evils which give ground for the complaints and ob-
" jections of men."

Digitized by Google

1706. Leibniz, Thomaſius, Budæus, Lenfant, la Croze, le Duchat, de Larrey &c. In Italy: Mr Magliabecchi, Library Keeper to the Great Duke of Tuſcany. In Switzerland: Mr Conſtant, Mr Spon &c. At Geneva: Madam Windſor, Meſſieurs Minutoli, Bourlamachi, Chouet, Turretin, Leger, Pictet &c. In Holland: The Count de Friſen, the Earl of Albemarle, Mr Le-Leu de Wilhem, the Marquis de Bougi, Mr Paets, Mr de Wit, Mr Grævius, Mr d'Almeloveen, Mr le Moine, Profeſſor at Leyden, Mr Fremont d'Ablancourt, Mr Baſnage, Mr de Bauval, Mr Baſnage de Flottemanville, Mr Huet, Mr du Rondel, Profeſſor at Maeſtricht, Mr Drelincourt, Profeſſor at Leyden, Mr Regis, a Phyſician at Amſterdam, Mr Rou &c. In Flanders: The Counteſs de Tilly, Baron le Roy, Baron de Walef &c.

In his youth he had been at great pains to take extracts from, and make obſervations on, the books which he read. He had likewiſe then compoſed, or ſketched out, ſome books. His collections were of great uſe to him when he wrote for the public. He then had hardly any thing more to add to them; his memory was ſufficient to point out the ſources which he had occaſion for. The following is a liſt of the principal Manuſcripts which were found among his papers.

Diſſertationis ſuper Virgilii & Homeri poëmatis nuper à quodam Gallo compoſitæ refutatio: inchoata 9 Decembris 1671 (1). It is againſt Father Rapin.

Amico ſuo chariſſimo ac plurimum colendo Jacobo Abbadie Epiſtola ſuper quæſtione, an Deus poſſit ſapientiori perfectiorive modo ſe gerere quam de facto ſe geſſit (2).

Bælius Fetizoni, vel Reſponſio Bælii ad Obſervationes Fetizonis ſuper Epiſtola prædicta (3).

Collectanea quædam ad Chronologiam, Geographiam, & Hiſtoriam pertinentia (4).

Lectiones Hiſtoricæ (5). Theſe Lectures compoſe a body of Hiſtory from the Creation down to the Roman Emperors. The errors in Chronology of Authors are obſerved here, and the moſt difficult points in Hiſtory are explained.

Lectiones Philoſophicæ (6). Theſe Philoſophical Lectures are mixed with ſeveral ſtrokes of erudition. Spinoſa is confuted in them in a very lively manner.

Curſus Philoſophicus (7). This Courſe of Philoſophy is divided into four parts; Logic, Moral Philoſophy, Phyſics, and Metaphyſics. Mr Bayle compoſed it for the uſe of his Scholars, and explained it in his public Lectures. He there recites the opinions of the moſt famous Philoſophers both ancient and modern, and points out their ſtrong and weak ſide.

" An Abridgment of Plutarch's Lives of Illuſtrious Men, formed on Amiot's " Verſion, with collections or extracts from the Roman Hiſtory, which ſerve to con- " nect the lives of the illuſtrious Romans." So that by filling up the chaſms which are in Plutarch, from the other Hiſtorians, Mr Bayle has compoſed a compleat Syſtem of Roman Hiſtory.

" An Hiſtorical Index." This is a collection of every thing either curious or remarkable in Hiſtory, which Mr Bayle met with in the courſe of his reading. It begins from the year 1672. The ſubjects are diſtinguiſhed by chapters, and ranged in alphabetical order. For example, under the letter A he treats of the Antiquity which the Egyptians and other people boaſted of: and of the remarkable things relating to the Empire of Germany (8). Under the letter B he deſcribes ſome memorable Battles; and the honours paid to Beaſts. Under the letter C he deſcribes ſingular Ceremonies which were uſed upon different occaſions, and particularly thoſe which relate to the keys of cities. He relates in what manner great men have given an account of affairs with which they were charged &c. There are likewiſe in this volume, ſome ſeparate collections relating to Chronology and Hiſtory.

Judgments, or a Journal of Literature (9). " This collection contains critical reflexions on the books which he had read, and thoſe which had been communicated to him by letter or by word of mouth.

" Letters concerning the diſpute betwixt Girac and Coſtar, and ſome other letters " on various ſubjects (10)."

" An Harangue by the Duke of Luxembourg to his Judges, and a Letter concern- " ing the ſaid Harangue (11)."

" A Letter concerning Hiſtorical Phyrrhoniſm."

" A Letter in juſtification of the Reformed, concerning their firſt riſing in " arms."

" An Hiſtorical and Critical Letter concerning the Conference at Poiſſy."

Theſe three Letters were deſigned as a continuation to the New Letters concerning Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm (12).

" An Hiſtorical Diſcourſe concerning the Life of Guſtavus Adolphus, King of " Sweden." There are only the two firſt chapters of it, but they are very long. They were compoſed after the year 1683, for he mentions the laſt ſiege of Vienna by the Turks. The firſt chapter contains Guſtavus's actions unto the Treaty concluded with Poland 1629, ſome time before he entered Germany in order to make war againſt the Emperor Ferdinand II. The ſecond treats of the origin of the houſe of Auſtria, and of the various fates which it hath undergone. It contains the characters of the late Emperors, and ſhows that Ferdinand brought all his misfortunes upon himſelf, and deſtroyed the power of the Houſe of Auſtria, by giving himſelf up to the councils of

(1) A Confutation of a Diſſertation on Virgil and Homer, lately wrote by a certain French Author: begun December 9, 1671.

(2) A Letter to Mr Abbadie on the Queſtion, Whether God could act in a more wiſe and a more perfect manner than he has done.

(3) An Anſwer to Mr Fetizon's Obſervations on the foregoing Epiſtle.

(4) Collections relating to Chronology, Geography, and Hiſtory.

(5) Hiſtorical Lectures.

(6) Philoſophical Lectures.

(7) A Courſe of Philoſophy.

(8) Allemagne.

(9) Jugemens ou Journal de Literature.

(10) Lettres ſur la querelle de Girac & de Coſtar.

(11) See above An. 1680, p. xiii.

(12) See above, An. 1685, p. xxii.

Digitized by Google

of Spain, and by cruelly perſecuting the Proteſtants. This chapter contains an account of the tranſactions in Germany, and in Bohemia, 'till the year 1620. It is pity Mr Bayle did not finiſh this work: but imperfect as he has left it, and as neglected as the ſtile is, one may ſee that it comes from a maſterly hand. It is filled with fine and judicious reflexions, and lively and bold ſtrokes both concerning perſons and things. It may ſerve for a model to Hiſtorians. 1706.

The new articles which Mr Bayle had prepared for a Supplement to his Dictionary, and which he bequeathed to Mr Leers, are not many. He himſelf ſaid, that this Supplement was but little advanced, and that he was diſguſted at that ſort of labour, ſince he had for ſome years been employed in works of reaſoning (1). He had promiſed that theſe new articles ſhould not be incorporated with the new edition of his Dictionary, and that they ſhould be printed and ſold a-part, that the public might not be obliged to buy the ſame thing twice (2): but Mr Leers having left off buſineſs his ſtock fell into the hands of two bookſellers, who, without regard to Mr Bayle's intentions, cauſed it to be inſerted in their edition of the Dictionary printed in 1720. And what is yet more eſſential, they diſfigured this edition by the alterations they made in it: they have even ſometimes puſhed their boldneſs ſo far as to change Mr Bayle's ſtile, and to father entire periods upon him. They had maimed and multilated in the ſame manner the new edition of the Philoſophical Commentary, printed by the ſame Bookſellers at Rotterdam in 1713; but they have followed Mr Bayle's original edition in the collection of his Miſcellaneous Works, which contain, in four volumes in folio, all the works which he publiſhed (excepting his Dictionary) and ſome poſthumous pieces (3).

(1) Letter to Mr Des Maizeaux September 21, 1706, pag. 1114.

(2) See Letter to Mr Minutoli, January 2, 1702, pag. 843, and Letter to Mr Marais, March 6, of the ſaid year, pag. 859.

They uſed Mr Bayle's Letters no better, which I ſent to theſe Bookſellers, and which they printed in 1714. They preſumed to make ſeveral alterations and caſtrations in them. They added Notes to them filled with groſs blunders in point of Literature, baſe and malicious inſinuations, and calumnious reflexions on ſeveral perſons of diſtinction, and did not even ſpare Mr Bayle himſelf. I reſtored theſe Letters according to the originals, in an edition publiſhed at Amſterdam in 1729, and I joined what explanations I thought neceſſary to them.

(3) The poſthumous pieces are his Courſe of Philoſophy in Latin, together with a French Tranſlation, and the Fragment on the Life of Guſtavus Adolphus.

Mr Bayle had a lively, ſhining, and fruitful imagination, a great deal of diſcernment and penetration; a natural and bold ſtile, but not very correct. His converſation was lively, chearful, and the more agreeable that it was always uſeful. His memory was happy and faithful, and ſeaſonably furniſhed him with every thing he had entruſted to it. He diſputed without heat, and without aſſuming a dictating tone: and we may obſerve from his writings, that far from giving offence he was on the contrary rather too much inclined to praiſe. He was faithful and conſtant in his friendſhip, and never was any body more ready to do good offices or more diſintereſted than he. Far from being greedy of preſents, it was with difficulty that he accepted of thoſe which he could not handſomely refuſe [S]. Having a ſtrong paſſion for truth he was exceedingly ſenſible of any aſſiſtance which was given him in the diſcovery of it, and made uſe of theſe helps with the utmoſt gratitude. He abhorred all ſort of fraud and inſincerity.

Being a true Philoſopher he was without oſtentation in his manners, without ambition, and gave himſelf no airs of ſuperiority over any perſon. He was ſober even to frugality, being indifferent about all pleaſures but thoſe of the mind, he ſeemed to know the paſſions only to talk of them, and not to feel their effects. Modeſt even to ſcrupulouſneſs, he would have for ever concealed his name, if it had been in his power to do it, and it was not owing to him that the public ever ſaw his picture.

[S] Far from being greedy of preſents, it was with difficulty that he accepted of thoſe which he could not handſomely refuſe.] What follows is a proof of this, which I thought not unworthy of the curioſity of the public. The late Earl of Shaftsbury having obſerved that Mr Bayle had no watch, bought one when he went over to England, with an intention of making him a preſent of it when he ſhould return to Rotterdam. The difficulty was how to make him accept of it. He took it frequently out of his pocket when they were together, as if to ſee what a clock it was, but Mr Bayle took no notice of it. At laſt one day he took it in his hand, and after having examined it, could not help ſaying that he thought it a very fine one. My Lord Shaftsbury laid hold of that opportunity of offering it to him. But Mr Bayle with great confuſion, and piqued that my Lord ſeemed to have taken what he ſaid without deſign, as an indirect manner of asking his watch of him, excuſed himſelf in the moſt earneſt manner and with great emotion. They diſputed a long time. And my Lord Shaftsbury could not perſuade him to accept of it, 'till he had aſſured him that he had brought it from England purpoſely for him, and proved this by ſhowing him his own watch.

Some years after, that Lord told me that he deſigned to ſend Mr Bayle ſome Greek and Latin books, printed in England, and deſired me to draw up a catalogue of thoſe which would be moſt acceptable to him. I ſecretly acquainted Mr Bayle with this, that he might let me know what he had moſt occaſion for. But he would not do it. "It is "not at all neceſſary, ſaid he (a), to give my Lord "Shaftsbury any liſt of books. I moſt humbly thank "him for the favour he deſigns for me: I have a "ſufficient token from him of a fine watch which "he was pleaſed to force me to accept of. At that "time I thought it a very uſeleſs piece of furniture, "but at preſent it is become ſo neceſſary to me, "that I could not now be without it, ſo that I "every moment feel how much I am obliged to "my Lord for ſo fine a preſent."

(a) Letter of the 3d of April 1705, pag. 1014, 1015.

We may by this inſtance ſee what judgment ought to be made of thoſe who have affirmed that he was a penſioner of the Court of France, &c.

Digitized by Google

1706. Picture [T]. He was jealous to excess, and possibly to weakness, of the glory of his Country, and suffered with impatience that it should be attacked; and secretly despised those who had not the same opinion of it which he had.

The fruitfulness of his imagination and the vast extent of his knowledge frequently threw him into digressions, which notwithstanding he had the art to render useful and even necessary to the consequences which he wanted to draw. His penetration made him at first sight perceive all the different sides of the most abstruse subjects; he discovered all their principles, and unfolded all their consequences. The difficulties which he found in them made him very reserved in his judgments, and frequently left him only reasons for doubting. This caution made some people accuse him of Pyrrhonism. But if it is to be a Pyrrhonian to doubt of things doubtful, should not all men be Pyrrhonians?

It has been complained that he has taken a little too much liberty in his Dictionary, and that he has taken great freedoms with regard to the female sex. These however are only quotations from Authors which are in every bodies hands, and which are generally esteemed. Mr Bayle being less touched with strokes of this kind, than probably those are who condemn him, was not shocked at the stile of these writers. He considered their coarse and unpolite expressions as the language of undisguised nature, or, if you will, as innocent liberties, and mere sports of wit, because they excited no disorders in his breast. His manners were always so pure and regular, that his most violent enemies never reproached him with any thing on that head. But in this as in all other things he was not scared at the appearance of vice, because he had a solid love for virtue. No body ought to conclude any thing against Mr Bayle's Religion, from his having related in his Dictionary the difficulties which may be raised against some important doctrines. The laws of dispute required that he should make a faithful report on both sides of the question. But it is plain that he had no intention of destroying these doctrines, because the arguments which he has recited in their favour are stronger than those which he opposeth to them. Mr Jaquelot himself owns this in his Answer to the Dialogues of Maximus and Themistus, which is one continued invective against Mr Bayle. "Libertines (says he (1), who shall read this Philosopher's works, with understanding sufficient to comprehend what they read, may easily discover that he has advanced reasons for the Existence of God, and the spiritual nature of the Soul, incomparably stronger than those with which he has furnished Pagans and others to oppose these important truths." He repeats this likewise in the Preface. Mr Bayle (says he (2), reasons with a great deal more force and evidence when he establisheth the Existence of God, than when he proposeth the difficulties with which he furnisheth Simonides against this truth. . . . . We ought to make the same judgment of the spirituality of the soul, if we read with application what he says of it, pro and con: and consequently to receive the Existence of God, and the Spirituality of the Soul, the two foundations of Religion, as principles very agreeable to Reason. But even they who do not approve of Mr Bayle's sentiments, admire the beauty and fertility of his genius, and the extensiveness of his knowledge; and they who do not do him this justice, and who affect, or pretend, to despise him, that they may raise themselves by debasing him, do not so much disparage Mr Bayle as their own discernment,

(1) Réponse aux Entretiens de Mr Bayle &c. p. 256, 257.

(2) Pref. fol. * 5.

[T] It was not owing to Mr Bayle that the public ever saw his Picture.] It was desired of him in the most earnest manner, in order to be engraved and prefixed to the English Translation of his Dictionary: but he answered that could not resolve to sit for his picture, nor to allow it to be placed before his book: that it was not in his power to conquer that reluctance, and he begged them to pardon that weakness, if they should be pleased to call it so (a). The picture which he sent to his Mother was designed to remain in the family, and we are obliged for its being made public to Mr Marais, an Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and to Madam de Merignac a Lady of distinguished merit, and a great admirer of Mr Bayle's memory and writings. They did not know that Mr Bayle had ever been drawn; but the Letter which he sent to his Mother along with his picture (b), falling into Mr Marais hands after the death of Mr Bayle, they had notice that this picture was at Montauban, in the house of one of Mr Bayle's relations. Madam de Merignac got a copy of it, which she gave at her death (c) to Mr de Francastel under-library-keeper to the Mazarine College, and Mr Marais caused a copy to be made from it. These are the only two copies of it, which are at Paris. The University of Francfort on the Oder, desired a third from Mr Marais, in order to be placed in a Hall where they had already collected eighty two portraits of famous men. Mr Bayle appears in it of a brown complexion, with lively features and very fine eyes. One easily discovers there his wit and vivacity. Some prints have been engraved at Paris from this picture. One of them was engraved by order of Madam de Merignac and Mr Marais. Mr Marais desired Mr de la Monnoye to write some verses to be placed under that print, and he composed the following Latin Distich:

Bælius hic ille est, cujus dum scripta vigebunt
Lis erit oblectent, erudiant ne magis.

Such were Bayle's looks, whose writings justly boast
We know not if they please or profit most.

Another was engraved to be placed before the Geneva Edition of his Dictionary printed in 1715, where we find the following French verses of Mr de la Monnoye, which are an imitation of the above Latin ones:

Tel fut l'illustre Bayle, honneur des beaux esprits,
Dont l'élegante plume, en recherches fertile,
Fait douter qui des deux l'emporte en ses Ecrits,
De l'agréable, ou de l'utile.

(a) Letter to Mr Des Maizeaux of the 3d of Apr. 1705, p. 1013; and of the 3d of July, p. 1024.

(b) See above, in the year 1675, pag. ix.

(c) This Lady died November 11, 1712. Her name was Magdalen Felix d'Ostrel, she was of a family of distinction in Flanders, and widow to Mr de Merignac.

Digitized by Google

ment, and discover more presumption than knowledge. It is common to find men of great learning with little genius, of much wit with little erudition, much solidity without any thing agreeable: but it is rare to find one who has so perfectly united all these qualities as Mr Bayle has done. This made Mr de Saint Evremond say (3), 1706.

(3) Mr de St Evremond's Works, Letter to Mr Des Maizeaux, Tom. v. p. 377. Edit. of Amsterdam, 1726.

Qu'on admire le grand savoir
L'erudition infinie
Où l'on ne voit sens, ni génie,
Je ne saurois le concevoir:
Mais je trouve BAYLE admirable
Qui profond autant qu'agréable,
Me met en état de choisir
L'instruction, ou le plaisir.

While some the soph profound admire,
Tho' wanting sense, and wit, and fire,
BAYLE stands my favourite confest,
Whose soul, with every talent blest,
Displays in his still various page,
The chearful wit and learned sage.

The end of the Life.

APPENDIX.

Digitized by Google

APPENDIX.

CALENDARIUM CARLANANUM.

An Historical and Chronological Journal of the Life of Mr Bayle.

ANNI ÆRÆ CHRIST.	EPOCHA NATIVIT.		YEARS OF THE CHRISTIAN ÆRA	EPOCH OF MY BIRTH.
	18. Nov. 1647.			The 18th of November 1647.
	ANNI ÆTAT.			YEARS OF MY AGE
1660, 29. Jun.	13. curr.	Initium ſtud. L. G.	1660, June 29.	13 current	I began to learn Greek.
1661, Fer. 1. ſive Domin. die 25. Decembr.	15. iniens.	I^a. Synaxis.	1661, on Sunday Decemb. 25.	15 near the beginning.	I for the firſt time received the Holy Communion.
1666, Fer. 6. die 12. Febr.	19. curr.	I^s. Profectio ex Lare paterno PdlRm; ubi aſcript. I^a. Claſſ. 3^o. Non. Maij, ſub Virodunenſi Clepoin.	1666, on Saturday February 12.	19 current	I left my father's houſe and went to Puylaurens where I entered to the firſt claſs. Mr Clepoin of Verdun, was my Regent.
1666.		Excurſio in triduum Caſtra.	1666,		I made a Journey of three days to Caſtres.
1666 die 9. Sept.	19. curr.	Reditus Carlan.	1666, September 9.	19 current	I returned to Carla.
1668, die 29. Mai.	21. curr.	Profectus Saverd. & manſio uſque ad 4 Kal. Oct. proximas.	1668, May. 29.	21 current	I went to Saverdun where I ſtaid 'till the 28th of September following.
1668, die lunæ 5. Novemb.	21. adfectus.	Egreſſus Carlan. & profectus Pdlrm. manſio uſque ad d. 19. fer. 3. menſis Febr. 1669. Logicus.	1668, Monday November. 5.	21 near the end.	I left Carla and went to Puylaurens where I continued till Tueſday February 19, 1669. I began the Study of Logic.
1669, die Feb. 19.	22. curr.	Advent. TLSm.	1669, February 19.	22 current	I arrived at Toulouſe.
1669, die 19. Mart. fer. 3.	22. curr.	Tranſit. ad def. ſub Ignat . . . no cognomine: poſtera die iterum Logicus, ſub Ignat . . no cognomine urbi quæ ſedes Imper. (1)	1669, Tueſday March 19.	22 current	I changed my Religion . . : . Next day I reſumed the Study of Logic.
1670, die 19. Aug. fer. 3.	23. curr.	Profect. ex TLSm. & advent. ad villam D. del Vivié ad Mazer.	1670, Tueſday Auguſt 19.	23 current	I left Toulouſe and came to a Country ſeat of Mr du Vivié near Mazeres.
1670, die 21. Aug.	23. curr.	Redit. ad patern. Leg. intra privat. par. moderante Rivall. Saverd. Teſt. Fratre, Guillemat. & Rivall. reſpectivè Eccleſ. . . bus Carlan. Mazer. Calmon.	1670, Auguſt 21.	23 current	I returned to the Reformed Religion, and made a private abjuration of the Romiſh Religion in the hands of Mr Rival Miniſter of Saverdun; in preſence of my Brother the Miniſter of Carla, of Mr Guillemat Miniſter of Mazeres, and of Mr Rival Miniſter of Calmont.
1670, die 21. Aug.	23. curr.	Profect. Lemann. advent. die 5. 7^br. fer. 3.	1670, Auguſt 21.	23 current	I ſet out for Geneva, where I arrived on Tueſday September 5.
1670, die 21. Nov.	23. adfect.	Ingreſſ. apud Dm. Neuſtriæ cognom.	1670, November 21.	23 near the end.	I entered to the houſe of Mr de Normandie.
1672, die 23. Mai.	25. curr.	Tranſitus Copet . . n^o. apud Don. Comit.	1672, November 21.	25 current	I went to Copet to live with the Count de Dhona.
1674, fer. 3. d. 29. Mai.	27. curr.	Profect. ex Copet. & iter in Neuſtr. apud D. Rip. advent. eò 15. Jun. proxim.	1674, Tueſday May 29.	27 current	I left Copet and went to Normandie to live with Mr Rip. I arrived there the fifteenth of June following.
1675 Kal. Mart.	28. curr.	Egreſſ. Roth. ad Urbem: inibi ingreſſ. apud Dm. Ber . . gh. 3. apr. prox.	1675, March 1.	28 current	I went from Rouen to Paris, where I entered to Mr de Beringhen's family, the 3d of April following.
1675, fer. 3. die Aug. 27.	28. curr.	Iter Sed. advent. ultima Aug. die proxim.	1675, Tueſday Aug. 27.	28 current	I ſet out for Sedan where I arrived on the laſt day of Auguſt.
1675, die 28. Sept.	28. curr.	Incluſ. cum rival. ad comp. Theſ. quæ prop. 22. Octo. & 23. poſt merid.	1675, September 28.	28 current	I was ſhut up with my Competitors to compoſe my Theſes which I defended on the 22d and 23d of October in the Afternoon.
1675 die 2. Nov.	28. adfect.	Recept. à curat. & 4 Nov. prox. Sacramenti præſt. ad ſpartam Philoſoph. quæ 14 Jul. 1681. interdict. diplom. regio.	1675, November 2.	28 near the end	I was received by the Moderators of the Academy, and on the 4th of November I. took the oath as Profeſſor of Philoſophy. The Academy was ſuppreſſed by a Royal Edict July 14. 1681.
1675, fer. 2. Nov. 11.	28. adfect.	I. Exercit. in audit.	1675, Monday November 11.	28 near the end	I began my Public Lectures.

(1) We have not been able to diſcover the meaning of theſe words: Sub Ignat . . no (Ignatiano) cognomine Urbi quæ ſedes Imperii.

Digitized by Google

Anni Æræ Christ.	Anni Ætat.		Years of the Christian Æra.	Years of my age.
1681, fer. 3. d. 2. Sept.	34. curr.	Profect. Sed. in urbem, advent. die 7. prox.	1681, Tuesday September 2.	34 current	I left Sedan for Paris, where I arrived on the 7th.
1681, fer 4. d. 8. Oct.	34. adf.	Profect. Urbe Rott. vocat. jussu D. Pa...	1681 Wednesday October 8.	34 near the end	I left Paris for Rotterdam where I was invited by Mr Paets.
1681, fer. 5. d. 30. Oct.	34. adf.	Advent. Rott.	1681, Thursday October 30.	34 near the end	I arrived at Rotterdam.
1681, fer. 6. d. 5. Dec.	35. ineunt.	Or. inaug. ob Prof. pph. & hist. in Sch. ill. recens erect.	1681, Friday December 5.	35 near the beginning.	My inaugural Oration at entering to my charge of Professor of Philosophy and History, in the Illustrious School lately founded.
1681, fer. 2. d. 8. Decem.	35. ineunt.	I. Lect. pph. 1682,	1681, Monday December 8.	35 near the beginning.	My first Philosophical Lecture.
1682, fer. 4. d. 11. Mart.	35. curr.	Epist. de comet. absol. impress. lum. compos. 11. Januar. 1681. missa in Urb. 27. Mai. inseq.	1682, Wednesday March 11.	35 current	The Impression of the Letter concerning Comets was finished, it was composed January 11, 1681, and sent to Paris the 27th of May following.
1682, fer. 3. d. 31. Mart.	35. curr.	Nunc. à D. J. Dam. Pa... paulo ante defunctam legasse duo m. Lb. Biblioth. 9.	1682, Tuesday March 31.	35 current	I was informed by Mr J. that Madam Paets, lately dead, had left me a Legacy of two thousand gilders to buy books.
1682, fer. 6. die 1. Mai.	35. curr.	Inchoata Crit. G. de l'Hist. du C. absol. 15. d. post. tradita 30. Maii Wolfa. accepta ab illo die 11. Jul. dedit libr. in L.	1682, Friday May 1.	35 current	I began the General Criticism of the History of Calvinism; I finished it on the 15th of the same month, and on the 30th I gave it to Wolfgang, from whom I received it printed on the first of July at which time it was published.
1682, mense Aug.	35. curr.	Visa, emend. & aucta. accepta edit. 2a. die lunæ 29. Nov. dedit libr. in L.	1682, In the month of August.	35 current	I revised, corrected, and enlarged that work, and received a second edition of it, when it was published on Monday November 29.
1682, mens. Oct.	35. exeunt.	Accepta à D. Fetix. m.s. Apolog. pro bell. civil. quam mihi sub. nom. Philar. d. d. & c. impress. Hag. accepta die 21. Feb. 1683.	1682, In the month of October.	35 near the end	I received from Mr Fetizon the M. S. of his Apology for the Civil-Wars, which he dedicated to me under the name of Philaretus, and which was printed at the Hague, from whence it was sent to me February 21, 1683.
1683, fer. 4. die. 2. Sept.	36. curr.	Absol. 2a. edit. Ep. ad. D. S. contra præ. Com. dedit Typog. 120. Exempl.	1683, Wednesday September 2.	36 current	The impression of the second edition of the Letter to a Doctor of the Sorbon against the presages of Comets, was finished. The Booksellers gave me 120 Copies of it.
1683, fer. 4. die 24. Nov.	37. ineunt.	Absol. imprimi à Typogr. Graef Examen Method. à D. Basn. Eccl. Rothom. compositum, & mihi dicat.	1683. Wednesday November 24.	37 near the beginning.	Mr Graef finished the impression of the Examination of the Methods by Mr Basnage Minister at Rouen, who dedicated it to me.
1683, mens. Dec.	37. ineunt.	Absol. imp. Prosel. ab. in 12. cujus auth. D. La. R. filius mihi dicav.	1683, In the month of December.	37 near the beginning.	The Impression of the Proselyte abused, in 12mo, was finished: it was wrote by Mr de Larroque the son, and dedicated to me.
1684, fer. 6. die 21. Jan.	37. curr.	Accept. Liber Heidelb. in Brueys exarat. à Theol. Cand. Lenf. postea tradit. Leers Typogr.	1684, Friday January 21.	37 current	I received from Heidelberg, a book against Mr Brueys composed by Mr Lenfant a student of Divinity. I gave it to Mr Leers to be printed.
1684, fer. 5. die 16. Mart.	37. curr.	Acceptum exemplar tractat. in quibus dissertat. lat. in L. à Villa denuò excus. Amstel.	1684, Thursday March 16.	37 current	I received a copy of the Collection which contains a Latin dissertation against Louis de la Ville, reprinted at Amsterdam.
1684, fer. 3. die 21. Mart.	37. curr.	Inchoat. Nunc. Reipub. Litterar. & die 4. Apr. inseq. transact. cum Des B. Typ. Amst. & die 27. Maii accepta exempl. mens. 1. die v. 2. Junii accept. exempl. mensis April.	1684, Tuesday March 21.	37 current	I began the News from the Republic of Letters; and on the 4th of April following, I made an agreement with Des Bordes a Bookseller in Amsterdam: on the 27th of May I received copies of the first month (of March) and on the 2d of June I received copies for the month of April.
1684, fer. 3. die 9. Maii	37. curr.	Accept. Litteræ vocat. datæ Leovard. 21. April. Sty. vet. ad Philosoph. Profess. Franek. postera die respons. petens moram: die v. 9. Junii sequente reponf. aliud gratias ag.	1684, Tuesday May 9.	37 current	I received Letters from Leewarden of the 21st of April old style, wherein a Professor of Philosophy's chair in the University at Franeker was offered to me. I answered the day after, and desired time to consider of it. And on the 9th of June following I wrote them a letter of thanks.
1684, fer. 3. die 16. Maii.	37. curr.	Accept. Literæ Paris. à D. de Frejeville nunciant. obitum Fratris Jos. qui defunc. Paris. de morb. 9. Maii.	1684, Tuesday May 16.	37 current	I received letters from Paris, by Mr de Frejeville, giving me an account of my brother Joseph's death, who died at Paris May 9.

1685, fer.

Digitized by Google

Anni Æræ Christ.	Annt Ætat.		Years of the Christian Æra.	Years of my age.
1685, fer. 2. die 5. Mart.	38. curr.	Accept. Exemplar Nouv. Lettres 2. vol. in 12.	1685, Monday March 5.	38 current	I received a copy of the New Letters concerning the History of Calvinism, in two Volumes in 12mo.
1685, fer. 2. die 8. Maii.	38. curr.	Accept. nuncius obit. patris qui contigit die Sabb. 31. mensis Martii.	1685. Monday May 8.	38 current	I received the news of my father's death which happened on Sunday March 31.
1685, fer. 4. die 27. Jun.	38. curr.	Acceptæ Amstel. Literæ Saverd. scriptæ nunciant. Fratrem ductum die 10. Jun. in carcer. Appam. inde 10. Jul. transv. Burdig. in arcem quæ vulgò Chat. Tr. ubi obiit die 12. Novembr. in sequent.	1685, Wednesday June 27.	38 current	Letters came from Saverdun to Amsterdam, which gave an account that my brother was carried a prisoner to Pamiers on the 10th of June, and on the 10th of July was removed to Bourdeaux to the Castle commonly called Château Trompete, where he died the 12th of November following.
Mense Octobr.	38. exeunt.	Versa Gallicè Epistola A. Paets de nuperis. Vide Novell. p. 1070.	In the month of October.	38 near the end.	I translated into French Mr Paets's Letter de nuperis &c. See the News from the Republic of Letters. p. 1070.
1686, men. Feb. die 25. fer. 2.	39. curr.	Absoluta impress. Responsionis ad Monit. Arnal. circa de sens. volupt. opinion. Mallebr.	1686, Monday February 25.	39 current	They finished the Impression of the Answer to Mr Arnauld's Advice concerning Father Mallebranche's opinion about the pleasure of the senses.
Die 6. & 7. men. Mart.	39. curr.	Composita Epist. appendix fut. Libri Deckkerri de adesp.	On the sixth and 7th of March.	39 current	I composed a Letter to be placed by way of Appendix to Mr Deckher's book concerning anonymous Authors.
Die 22. Mart. fer. 6.	39. curr.	* *	Friday March 22.	39 current	* *
Die 28. Octob. fer. 4.	39. desin.	* (2).	Wednesday October 28.	39 near the end	* *
1687. fer. 1. die 16. Feb.	40. curr.	Incepi morbo laborare quo intermittere coact. Nouv. de la R. non prorsus peract. mens. Febr.	1687, Sunday February 16.	40 current	I was seized with an illness which obliged me to discontinue the News from the Republic of Letters, without being able to finish the month of February.
		Abruptum omnino opus transv. in potest. D. de Beauv. qui novum adorn. mens. 7b. Abruptum quoque Colleg.			I entirely laid down that work and resigned it to Mr de Bauval who published a new Journal in the month of September. I also interrupted my lectures.
Die 10. Jun.	40. curr.	Recept. 3. pars Com. ph. quæ ante morb. absoluta fuer. & Typog. trad. & ante fin. Feb. prorsus typis descr.	June 10.	40 current	I received the third part of the Philosophical Commentary, which I had finished before my sickness, and given it to the Bookseller, who had finished the impression before the end of February.
Die 8. Aug.	40. curr.	In viam me dedi tend. Cliv. quo perventum die 13. Aug. postero die in hosp. D. Ferrand. past. in Castello usque ad 15. Septemb. Hinc Sylv. Ducis, inde Aquis gr. cum D. D. Piel & Farjon. Versus 18. Oct.	August 8.	40 current	I made a journey to Cleves, where I arrived August 13. Next day I went to lodge with Mr Ferrand Minister of the Castle, and continued with him till the 15th of September. From thence I went to Bois-le-Duc, and afterwards to Aix-la-Chapelle, with Mr Pielat and Mr Farjon. I returned to Rotterdam on the 18th of October.

(2) These two passages are cut in the original: the one related to the impression of la France toute Catholique; and the other to the first and second parts of the Commentaire Philosophique, which appeared at the same time. The third part is mentioned here below, June 10, 1687.

Digitized by Google

An ORDER of MR DE LA REYNIE, Lieutenant-General of the Police of the City, Provoſtſhip, and Viſcounty of Paris, concerning the GENERAL CRITICISM on Mr Maimbourg's HISTORY OF CALVINISM. By the King, and the Provoſt of Paris, or his Lieutenant-General of the Police.

WHEREAS it has been repreſented to us by the King's Attorney, that certain diſaffected perſons have imported and ſold in this City, ſeveral copies of a book, intitled, A General Criticiſm on Mr Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, printed, as the title page bears, at Ville-Franche by Pierre le Blanc in 1682, wherein the Author of the ſaid book, inſtead of a juſt and ſober Criticiſm allowed to men of Letters and erudition, has had the boldneſs, under the ſpecious title of a Criticiſm, to advance ſeveral calumnious and pretended facts, which tend under a falſe zeal for Religion to corrupt the fidelity of ſubjects: and it being for the intereſt of the public that the ſale of ſo pernicious a book ſhould be prevented, and that they who ſhall be found to be the Authors, or Printers, Importers, Sellers, or Venders of the ſame, ſhould be puniſhed according to the rigour of the laws; and the King's Attorney having deſired that we ſhould take cognizance thereof. WE having ſeen the ſaid book, intitled, A General Criticiſm on Mr Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, printed at Ville-Franche by Peter le Blanc in 1682, as the title bears, containing 338 Pages, and divided into 22 Letters: WE in purſuance of the ſaid petition have declared the book intitled A General Criticiſm on Mr Maimbourg's Hiſtory diffamatory and calumnious, and filled with bold and ſeditious forgeries, and as ſuch we order it to be lacerated and burnt at the Greve, by the hands of the hangman; and that, at the requeſt and by the care of the King's Attorney, informations may be drawn up againſt thoſe who have compoſed, printed, imported, ſold, or vended the ſaid book, and that proceſs may be commenced and proſecuted againſt thoſe who ſhall be found guilty, according to the rigour of the law. EXPRESSLY forbidding all Printers and Bookſellers to print, vend, or ſell, the ſaid book, under the pain of death; and all other perſons, of what quality and condition ſoever, to make any traffic or ſale of the ſame under the pain of exemplary puniſhment: and this preſent Order ſhall be publiſhed and affixed in the uſual and accuſtomed places; and particularly in the Hall of the Bookſellers and Printers of this City, that no body may pretend ignorance of the ſame. Given by Mr GABRIEL NICOLAS DE LA REYNIE Counſellor of State in ordinary, and Lieutenant-General of the Police of the City, Provoſtſhip, and Viſcounty of Paris, the ſixth day of March, one thouſand ſix hundred and eighty three,

Signed

DE LA REYNIE.

DE RIANTZ. SAGOT, Regiſter.

The above Order was read, publiſhed, and affixed with ſound of trumpet, and public proclamation, in the uſual and accuſtomed places, by me Mark Anthony Paſquier, ſworn Cryer in ordinary to his Majeſty, in the ſaid City, Provoſtſhip, and Viſcounty of Paris, living near the Hôtel des Urſins, accompanied with Stephen du Bos, ſworn Trumpeter to his Majeſty, Philip le Sieü and Louis la Coſte, deputy Trumpeters, March 9, 1683.

Signed

PASQUIER.

PRINTED BY DENIS THIERRY, IN THE RUE S. JAQUES.

ACTS OF THE CONSISTORY OF THE WALLOON CHURCH OF ROTTERDAM, CONCERNING THE SIEUR BAYLE'S HISTORICAL AND CRITICAL DICTIONARY.

November 3, 1697.

THE Committee appointed by an Act of the fifteenth of September laſt, having made a report that they had examined the Extracts which Meſſieurs de Superville and le Page, Miniſters, had made of the paſſages of a book of the Sieur Bayle, intitled, An Hiſtorical and Critical Dictionary, which relate to obſcenities, and that having compared theſe Extracts with the ſaid book, they had therein found obſcene reflections, indecent expreſſions and queſtions, and a great many obſcene quotations, as is more fully expreſſed in a Memoir which they produced concerning the ſame, wherein theſe paſſages are marked. Whereupon the Conſiſtory have thought fit, that the ſaid Memoir ſhould be kept by their Secretary, to be produced when they ſhall come to a general deliberation with regard to the ſaid book, and mean while the other members of the Conſiſtory, may further examine the ſaid Memoir, and make their remarks upon it betwixt this and a fortnight hence. And it has been thought proper in the mean time that this Act and others of the ſame nature, which ſhall be made on this ſubject, ſhall not be regiſtered in the book of Acts, except by the expreſs order of the Conſiſtory.

November

Digitized by Google

November 17, 1697.

The term of a fortnight appointed by the preceeding Act for making remarks on the Memoir mentioned in the ſaid Act being now elapſed, the other members of the Conſiſtory were aſked, if they had made any remarks on the ſame, and no body having declared that they had made any, the Report contained in the ſaid Memoir was agreed to and held as the opinion of the Conſiſtory.

The ſame Day.

The Committee above-mentioned having made a Report that they had examined the Extracts which Meſſieurs de Superville and le Page, Miniſters, had made of the paſſages of the above-mentioned book of the Sieur Bayle, in the Article of DAVID, and that having compared the ſaid Extracts with the ſaid book, they had found that the Sieur Bayle had in general drawn a very frightful picture of the conduct and government of this King and Prophet, and that in particular he treats ſeveral of his actions in an unworthy and ſcandalous manner, as this is more fully expreſſed in a Memoir which the ſaid Committee produced concerning the ſame, wherein the paſſages are marked: whereupon the Conſiſtory have thought fit that this Memoir ſhall be kept as the foregoing one, and the other members of the Conſiſtory may further examine the ſaid Memoir, and make their remarks upon it betwixt this and a fortnight hence.

December 1, 1697.

The term of a fortnight appointed by the preceeding Act for making remarks on the Memoir which relates to the Article DAVID, mentioned in the ſaid Act, being now elapſed, the other members of the Conſiſtory were aſked, if they had any remarks on the ſame, and no body declaring that they had made any; the Report contained in the ſame Memoir was agreed to, and held as the opinion of the Conſiſtory.

The ſame day.

The Committee abovementioned having made a Report that they had examined the Extracts which Meſſieurs de Superville and Le Page, Miniſters, had made concerning the paſſages in the ſaid book of the Sieur Bayle, in the Articles of the MANICHEANS, MARCIONITES, and PAULICIANS; and having compared theſe Extracts with the ſaid book, they had found that Mr Bayle had not only advanced the arguments which the Manicheans had made uſe of anciently, but had likewiſe formed new arguments in favour of Manicheiſm, which even tend to oppoſe the hypotheſes of all Proteſtant Divines, and that he in the concluſion gives the victory to the Manichean hypotheſis which had given great offence to the ſaid Committee, as they have expreſſed it more at large in a Memoir which the ſaid Committee have produced concerning it, wherein the paſſages complained of are marked: whereupon the Conſiſtory have thought fit that this Memoir ſhall be kept as the preceeding, and the other members of the Conſiſtory may further examine the ſaid Memoir, and make their remarks upon it betwixt this and a fortnight hence.

December 8, 1697.

The Committee above-mentioned having made a Report that they had examined the Extracts which Meſſieurs de Superville and le Page, Miniſters, had made of the paſſages of the ſaid book of the Sieur Bayle, in the Article of PYRRHO, and that having compared the ſaid Extracts with the ſaid book, the ſaid Committee had drawn up a Memoir of what they had found there ſcandalous and blame-worthy, which Memoir they produced to the Conſiſtory; whereupon the Conſiſtory have thought fit that this Memoir ſhall be kept as the preceeding, and that the other members of the Conſiſtory may further examine the ſaid Memoir, and make their remarks upon it betwixt this and the week following.

December 15, 1697.

The term of a fortnight appointed by the ſecond Act of the firſt inſtant, for making remarks with relation to the Article of the MANICHEANS, MARCIONITES ann PAULICIANS, mentioned in the ſaid Act; and likewiſe the term of eight days, appointed by the Act immediately preceeding this, for making remarks on the Memoir relating to the Article of PYRRHO mentioned in the ſaid Act, being now elapſed; the members of the Conſiſtory were aſked if they had made any remarks upon the ſame, whereupon no body having ſignified that they had made any, the report contained in the ſaid two Memoirs was agreed to, and held as the opinion of the Conſiſtory.

The ſame Day.

The Committee abovementioned, having made a report that they had examined the Extracts which Meſſieurs Superville and le Page, Miniſters, had made of the paſſages of the ſaid book of the Sieur Bayle in diverſe Articles with relation to Atheiſts or Epicureans; and that having compared the ſaid Extracts with the ſaid book, the ſaid Committee had drawn up a Memoir of ſuch things as they had found ſcandalous and deſerving reproof in it: which Memoir they produced to the Conſiſtory Whereupon the Conſiſtory have thought fit that the ſaid Memoir ſhould be kept as the preceeding, and that the other members of the Conſiſtory may further examine the ſaid Memoir, and make their remarks upon it betwixt this and Sunday next.

The ſame Day.

Mr le Page, one of our Miniſters, informed the Conſiſtory that the Sieur Bayle came to ſee him on the 10th of this month, to tell him that he had heard that the Conſiſtory were examining his Critical Dictionary. That this had ſurprized him, becauſe he did not think that Dictionaries were ſubject to examination; that he had been aſſured that we found fault with the articles of DAVID, the MANICHEANS or PAULICIANS, the PYRRHONIANS, and ſundry expreſſions and citations of too free a nature; that ſince it was ſo he deſigned to ſoften and rectify theſe things in a ſecond edition, either by adding or ſuppreſſing, and deſired that the Conſiſtory might be informed of this his declaration, and that he hoped they would be ſatisfied with it. Whereupon the Conſiſtory having deliberated, thought fit to appoint an extraordinary meeting on Thurſday next on the affair of the ſaid Sieur Bayle.

Digitized by Google

Thurſday December 19, 1697.

The Conſiſtory being extraordinarily met, according to the abovementioned Act, and having read over the four firſt Memoirs relating to the affair of the ſaid Sieur Bayle, mentioned in the preceeding Acts, they thought fit to acquaint the Sieur Bayle, by the mouth of their Secretary, to appear before them on Tueſday next in the afternoon, at half an hour after three of the clock, on this affair.

Sunday December 21, 1697.

The time appointed by the ſecond Act of the 15th inſtant, for making remarks on the Memoir relating to ſeveral Articles concerning Atheiſts and Epicureans, mentioned in the ſaid Act, being now elapſed, the other members of the Conſiſtory were aſked if they had any remarks on the ſame. Whereupon no body having ſignified that they had made any, the report contained in the ſaid Memoir was agreed to, and held as the opinion of the Conſiſtory.

Tueſday December 24, 1697.

The Conſiſtory being extraordinarily aſſembled, according to the Act of the 19th inſtant, the Sieur Bayle appeared before them: to whom the Conſiſtory having declared, by the mouth of their Preſident, that they had found in his book, intitled An Hiſtorical and Critical Dictionary, ſeveral paſſages which appeared to the Conſiſtory offenſive. And in the firſt place, that they had found in his ſaid book obſcene expreſſions, quotations, and reflexions; in anſwer to which the ſaid Sieur Bayle ſaid, "That he was "not prepared to anſwer, not knowing what the Conſiſtory was to propoſe to him; and added, "there was a difference betwixt a Philoſophical writer or an Hiſtorian, and a Divine; that an Hi"ſtorian ought to be faithful and impartial, and that he is accountable if he gives falſe relations; "that he might deſire of this Conſiſtory twenty audiences, of two hours each, to lay his reaſons be"fore them, but that he would not make uſe of that method, and that he deſired to prevent a long "and tedious proceſs; that he maintained that he had advanced nothing in the ſaid book as his own "opinion, which was contrary to our Confeſſions of Faith, and that he had defended the principal "points of Religion in it; that they ought not to inſiſt on what was only trifling; that he might cri"ticize upon the Extracts which the Conſiſtory had made, both with regard to facts, and with re"gard to right; but that he would not in the leaſt enter into that diſcuſſion; that in the preface "to the ſaid book he had declared that he would be ready to correct whatever ſhould be found "in it which deſerved correction; and that in the Reflexions which he had publiſhed on a "pamphlet intitled, The Judgment of the Public, he had made the ſame declaration; that he de"clared once more to the Conſiſtory, that he had reſolved to change in a ſecond Edition what"ever the Conſiſtory ſhould find fault with, and that he was already at work in correcting the "ſaid Book."

The Conſiſtory having deliberated on this Anſwer, and deſired the Sieur Bayle to come in, they told him, by the mouth of their Preſident, that they would not at preſent enter upon an anſwer to the abovementioned reaſons alledged by him, and as to the reſolution which he had declared to them, that it appeared to be too general; that he had ſpoke of correcting in a ſecond Edition, and not of retracting; that the Conſiſtory did not know when that ſecond Edition ſhould be publiſhed, and likewiſe that ſeveral accidents might intervene to prevent the execution of it; that the remarks which the Conſiſtory had made upon the ſaid book were of importance. Whereupon the Sieur Bayle had anſwered "that "he would be ready not only to make alterations in the ſaid book, but likewiſe to retract what "ſhould be thought deſerved to be retracted, and that even now, if there be any propoſitions "in it which are laid down as his own opinion, which ſhall be found contrary to our Religion, "that he declared them heretical."

After this the Conſiſtory informed him that they would cauſe the paſſages of the ſaid book to be pointed out to him, together with their remarks upon the ſame, and afterwards appointed Meſſieurs Pielat, de Superville, and le Page, Miniſters; Meſſieurs de Fanueil, Diodati, and Vermande, Elders; and Meſſieurs de Tinnebacq and de Peyſter, Deacons; to point out to the Sieur Bayle the paſſages and remarks contained in the five Memoirs which have been made on that ſubject; and to hear what the ſaid Sieur ſhould ſay concerning them, and to make a Report of the ſame to the Conſiſtory.

January 5, 1698.

The Memoirs of the Committee appointed by an Act of the 24th of December laſt, reported, that having met on the 30th following, they had laid before the Sieur Bayle, the ſubſtance of the Remarks contained in the five Memoirs made with relation to his book, mentioned in the ſaid Act, and having heard the explanations and general anſwers, and likewiſe the Sieur Bayle's offers on that ſubject, they had thought it proper that the Sieur Bayle ſhould put what he had ſaid to them in writing, which the ſaid Sieur Bayle having done, they produced a Memoir of the ſame ſubſcribed by the ſaid Sieur, which being read before the Conſiſtory, after deliberating thereupon, they thought fit to deſire the Members of the ſaid Committee to draw up a ſketch of an Anſwer to the ſaid Memoir, and to communicate the ſame to the Conſiſtory, which ſhall extraordinarily meet for that purpoſe on Tueſday next, and ordered that the Sieur Bayle be ſummoned to appear before them at that time.

Digitized by Google

A MEMORIAL presented to the Conſiſtory of the Walloon Church of Rotterdam on Sunday January 5, 1698, concerning the HISTORICAL AND CRITICAL DICTIONARY.

" GENTLEMEN,

" WHAT I had the honour to ſay to you on the twenty fourth of the laſt month; and to " repeat more at large to your Committee on Monday laſt, when they read their remarks to " me, I now give the Conſiſtory in writing with more particular explanations.

" This may be reduced to two points: The firſt is, that I have a great many things to alledge " both by way of reaſon and of example in my juſtification, without a diſcuſſion of which this " matter cannot in equity be determined by way of deciſion. The ſecond is, that if to prevent a " long proceſs, and other inconveniences, the Conſiſtory think proper to terminate this affair by way " of agreement, I will do all that is in my power to facilitate it. For that purpoſe, I in the firſt place " declare in the ſincereſt manner, that I never intended to inſert any thing in my Dictionary which could " give juſt cauſe of offence to pious ſouls. I always hoped that the liberty which I took on certain oc- " caſions would be favourably interpreted, becauſe people would obſerve that it is a Layman and a " Philoſopher who ſpeaks, and that too in a Hiſtory, a Criticiſm, and a large Commentary, and that " I have been at pains to add, wherever I thought it was neceſſary, ſalvo's and explanations which bring " back my reader to the moſt orthodox principle of our Communion, to wit, that the Scripture is the " rule of what we ought to believe, whether our reaſon can comprehend it or not. I likewiſe hoped that " every body would remember that the quality of Hiſtorian puts one under a neceſſity of relating many " things concerning the ſtrong and the weak ſide of every party, which another Author would not ſay, and " that the Fathers of the Church have minutely related impurities and obſcenities which create horror.

" I declare in the ſecond place that I am extremely ſorry, that, contrary to my intention and " hopes, ſeveral people have been offended at the liberty which I have taken, and that if I had " foreſeen this I would have carefully abſtained from it. And in order effectually to remedy this I " promiſe to rectify in a ſecond edition which I ſhall preſently ſet about, all the paſſages which have " been complained of. This appears to me to be very eaſy to be done either by ſuppreſſions, addi- " tions, or change of expreſſion. By reading the remarks of your Committee, I know theſe paſ- " ſages more diſtinctly than I did before. In my corrections I ſhall have great regard to theſe re- " marks, and the rather that I know that they were made by perſons of great abilities, and to the " good advice and information, which it ſhall pleaſe the Miniſters of the Church to favour me with; " and I ſhall much more conſider whether a thing may offend part of my readers, than whether " it be at bottom true, and not contrary to our Confeſſion of Faith.

" I promiſe, in particular, to new model the Article of the Prophet DAVID in ſuch a manner, " that no ſtumbling block ſhall be left there. As to what relates to the Manichean Hereſy, I have " very diſtinctly declared that it is horrible, extravagant, contrary to common notions, and that " it may be eaſily overthrown by the Holy Scripture. I have only maintained, that the objections " concerning the Origin of Evil cannot be ſolved by the ſtrength of reaſon, and I believed that " this was ſaying no more than what all our Divines confeſs concerning the incomprehenſibility " of Predeſtination. Notwithſtanding I promiſe to conſider that matter over again, and to ſeek " for philoſophical reaſons againſt theſe objections. And if your Reverend Miniſters will be ſo good " as to take the trouble of furniſhing me with any, I will make uſe of them in the beſt manner I am " able, and that with the greater pleaſure that Manicheiſm is an abominable hereſy with regard to Mo- " rality, and ridiculous and monſtrous with regard to Metaphyſics. What I promiſe with relation to " this Article ought likewiſe to be underſtood in particular with regard to that of PYRRHO.

" In a word, I declare that I will receive with joy, and with an intention to profit by them " all the advices that may be communicated to me, in order to render my book more uſeful to " the public, and more edifying to the churches; and eſpecially I will receive with great ſub- " miſſion the good advices of the Conſiſtory.

" I have only two things farther, Gentlemen, to declare to you. The firſt is, that I never de- " ſigned to advance as my own opinion any doctrine contrary to the Confeſſion of Faith of the " Reformed Church, of which I profeſs myſelf a member, and in which I beg the grace of God " that I may live and die. If therefore there be any ſuch doctrine found in my writings, I diſown " it, and from this day forth entirely retract it. The ſecond thing is, that I have good ground to " hope that the Conſiſtory having nothing in view but the peace and edification of the public, " will be fully content with what is above; for methinks it is all that can be required of an Au- " thor in ſuch a caſe. Beſides, that by taking the way of a formal proceſs, the Conſiſtory muſt " be ſenſible that it will be drawn into great length, that I have reaſons to offer in my juſti- " fication on every article; that it may perhaps be neceſſary to paſs from one Court to ano- " ther, and even come to printed Caſes, which will only tend to excite new troubles without " any advantage to the Church, and on the contrary will give pleaſure to our adverſaries.

" If all that I have ſaid above ſhould not be able to bring this matter to an amicable iſſue, " and if notwithſtanding thereof this affair ſhould come to be tried by way of proceſs, I deſire " that nothing that I have ſaid above may prejudice my cauſe, either as to my pretenſions of chal- " lenging ſome perſons, if that ſhall be found neceſſary, or to the method of appeal, if that " be found requiſite. I deſire likewiſe that what I have ſaid either to the Conſiſtory, or to " the Gentleman of the Committee, may not be taken as part of my Defence."

And it was ſigned BAYLE.

Tueſday, January 7, 1698.

The Conſiſtory being extraordinarily aſſembled in conſequence of the laſt Act, and finding that they were not a ſufficient number, though all the members were particularly acquainted to meet, that they might come to a reſolution on this affair, and conſidering the ſhortneſs of the time, the

Digitized by Google

Conſiſtory being to be changed on Sunday next; after having examined the ſketch of an Anſwer drawn by the Committee, mentioned in the preceding Act, they have thought fit only to read the ſaid ſketch to the Sieur Bayle, who having deſired a copy of it, the Conſiſtory came to no reſolution thereupon, but thought proper to meet again on Thurſday next.

Thurſday, January 9, 1698.

The Conſiſtory being once more extraordinarily aſſembled, in conſequence of the preceding Act, and having read the ſketch of an Anſwer, drawn up by the Committee, and communicated to the Sieur Bayle, as is mentioned in the preceding Act, unanimouſly approved of the ſame. The tenour whereof is as follows:

The Conſiſtory continuing to deliberate concerning Mr Bayle's affair, after having heard the ſaid Sieur Bayle's explanations and general anſwers, both in full Conſiſtory on Thurſday the 24th of December laſt, and on Monday the 30th of this month, in preſence of the Committee who communicated to him by word of mouth the ſubſtance of the five Memoirs drawn up by the Conſiſtory concerning his Dictionary, and have made a report of the whole on Sunday laſt, the 5th inſtant; after having likewiſe examined the paper preſented to the Conſiſtory, on Sunday laſt above-mentioned, by the ſaid Sieur Bayle, and ſigned by him, in which he lays down his intentions and deſigns more diſtinctly.

The Conſiſtory declare that they are glad to obſerve,

I. That the ſaid Sieur Bayle proteſts that he deſires to live and die in the profeſſion of the Reformed Religion which it has pleaſed God to make known to him, and in which he has continued until now, diſowning and retracting from this day forth all that he may have advanced in his works contrary to our Confeſſion of Faith, ſuppoſing that there be any ſuch thing in them, which he doth not believe, he having always had a contrary intention.

II. That the ſaid Sieur Bayle is extremely ſorry that, contrary to his intentions and hopes, many perſons have been offended at the liberty which he has taken in his Dictionary, and that if he had foreſeen this he would have carefully abſtained from it.

III. That he abhors Manicheiſm, as a hereſy which is entirely deſtroyed by the Scripture, and which is abominable, and monſtrous with regard to Morality as well as Metaphyſics, adding that he will be at all poſſible pains to refute it, which he alſo promiſeth with regard to Pyrrhoniſm.

IV. That in particular he deſigns to correct the Article DAVID in ſuch a manner, that no ſtumbling-block ſhall remain there.

V. And laſtly, that to ſatisfy the complaints which have been made againſt his Dictionary, he deſigns to ſet about a ſecond edition without delay; in which he will change, correct, rectify, and ſuppreſs, every thing that may have given offence, and that in order to render that edition more correct, he will have great regard to the Memoirs which have been communicated to him by the Conſiſtory, and to whatever advice they ſhall pleaſe to give him.

The Conſiſtory is very glad to ſee Mr Bayle in theſe diſpoſitions: but they cannot approve of divers other things which the ſaid Sieur Bayle has inſerted in his paper, as among other things, that he pretends that he could juſtify what he has advanced in his Dictionary, if it ſhould come to a diſcuſſion, and that he ſpeaks of the reaſons which he will then alledge, as reaſons which are ſufficient to juſtify him, ſo that it ſeems that it is only out of condeſcendence, and that he may not give offence to pious ſouls, that he is willing to correct and rectify his work, and not that at bottom he is obliged to do it, or that the work has need of it, becauſe in quality of a Layman, Philoſopher, Hiſtorian, and Commentator, it was lawful for him to advance many things, which would not be allowed in another Author. The Conſiſtory cannot approve of theſe exceptions, as the Preſident will repreſent to Mr Bayle more at large, yet in the mean while being willing to take the moſt indulgent method to endeavour to put an end to this affair, they are of opinion that in order thereunto it is neceſſary,

I. That Mr Bayle acquieſce in the remarks which have been made by the Conſiſtory, that he acknowledge the ſolidity of them, and promiſe to profit by them, and conform to them in a ſecond edition. Theſe remarks relate 1. to the Obſcenities diſperſed in the work. 2. The Article of David. 3. Manicheiſm. 4. Pyrrhoniſm. 5. The exceſſive praiſes given to Atheiſts, with the conſequences he draws from thence. Concerning which he ſhall declare his ſorrow that he has given ground of complaint.

II. It is neceſſary that the Sieur Bayle ſhould promiſe that for the future he will take great care to advance nothing in his writings, which may offend either the purity of Morality, or the truth of Doctrine: but on the contrary that he will dedicate the talents, which God has given him, to the defence of both, and to the edification of the Church.

III. That to repair the ſcandal already given, and for the edification of the public, Mr Bayle ſhall be earneſtly exhorted, not to wait for a ſecond edition of his Dictionary, which may be a long while hence, but with the firſt opportunity to print ſomething in which he ſhall acquaint the public with the ſentiments which he has declared to us concerning the points propoſed to him.

Afterwards Mr Bayle being come in, the Preſident once more read the before-mentioned ſketch to him, which was now held as the opinion of the Conſiſtory, and aſked him what he had to anſwer thereto. Whereupon the ſaid Sieur Bayle declared that he acquieſced in this reſolution, and at the ſame time delivered the following Memoir written and ſigned by him:

" Gentlemen,

" BEING perſuaded that the Conſiſtory have nothing elſe in view, in terminating this affair, but " ſincerely to promote the edification of the public and the glory of God, and being deſirous to " concur with them to the utmoſt of my power, in ſo good a deſign, I accept of the conditions " contained in an Act which was read to me on the ſeventh inſtant; and I declare in particular " with regard to the remarks which have been communicated to me by the Conſiſtory, that I acquieſce " in them as a rule which I will punctually follow in the correction of my Dictionary for a new edition.

" I ſhall

Digitized by Google

" I ſhall likewiſe comply with the exhortation of the Conſiſtory to the utmoſt of my power, concerning " a piece to be publiſhed before the new edition, and I hope that this ſhall not be long delayed.

" I hope and humbly deſire the Conſiſtory that they will be pleaſed not to allow theſe remarks and " other paper relating to this affair, to fall into the hands of people who may make a bad uſe of them, " by publiſhing pieces which can only do prejudice to the edification of ſouls, both in themſelves " and by the anſwers which I may be obliged to make to them. At Rotterdam, January 9, 1698."

And was ſigned BAYLE.

Thereafter Mr Bayle being withdrawn, the Conſiſtory, after having deliberated on his anſwer, reſolved to reſt ſatisfied with it, becauſe he agreed to every thing which they had deſired of him, he acquieſced in the remarks of the Conſiſtory on his Dictionary, and promiſed to publiſh, as ſoon as poſſible, a piece which ſhould acquaint the public with his good diſpoſitions. They were of opinion, that by putting an end to that affair in this manner, the Church would be more edified than by long debates; beſides, that this would be the moſt effectual means of engaging Mr Bayle to employ his talents for the advancement of our Lord's Kingdom. Being therefore called in again to the Conſiſtory, the Preſident told him, I. That the Conſiſtory was ſatisfied with his anſwer. II. That they aſſured him that the papers which had paſſed betwixt him and them, ſhould not be given to any body to be publiſhed, that this was not the practice of the Conſiſtory, and that they knew very well that after matters were determined, it was not fit to awaken them again by printed papers. III. That neither did the Conſiſtory doubt that he would on his part fulfil his promiſe of publiſhing very ſoon a paper wherein he ſhould inform the public of the good ſentiments which he had teſtified to them, and that the ſooner that paper ſhould appear, the better it would be. And this the ſaid Mr Bayle once more promiſed to do. After which the Preſident repreſented to him that the more talents God had beſtowed on him, the more he was bound to dedicate them to his glory. That he ought to labour to edify the Church, and that they hoped that for the future he would endeavour to do ſo; that the Conſiſtory earneſtly exhorted him to it, and that on that condition they prayed that God would bleſs his labours. Mr Bayle aſſured the Conſiſtory that he would anſwer their expectations, and thanked them for their good wiſhes.

All the above written Acts down to this day, January 11, 1698, were read and approved of by the Conſiſtory, this 11th of January 1698, and ſigned LE PAGE, Miniſter; PIELAT, Miniſter; DE SUPERVILLE, Miniſter; BASNAGE, Miniſter; J. V. KAEREN, Elder; F. VAN SCHONHOVEN, Elder; JOHN FANUEIL, Elder; JACOB VERMANDE, Elder; THEODORE SYSMUS, Deacon and Secretary; D. PRINS, Deacon; GOUERT COOLERANT; PETER BALDE; ISAAC RERDOES, Deacon; G. ALLART, Deacon; JOHN DE PEYSTER, Deacon.

December 7, 1698.

The Committee appointed by the Act of the 28th of September to conſider Mr Bayle's affair, made their Report. Whereupon the Conſiſtory find that

I. The printed Letter of the ſaid Mr Bayle appeared later than they had reaſon to expect, and that it would have been to be wiſhed that Mr Bayle had publiſhed it ſooner according to his promiſe.

II. That the ſaid Mr Bayle did not ſend a copy of it to the Conſiſtory: notwithſtanding he was obliged to ſhow them that he had fulfilled his engagement.

III. That the number of copies of that Letter was too ſmall, and that there have been none to be had at the Bookſellers this great while paſt; ſo that it ſeems as if it was intended that the Letter ſhould be ſuppreſſed as ſoon as it was publiſhed, and put in the hands of as few perſons as poſſible, which is contrary the intention of the Conſiſtory, which deſired that the public ſhould be informed of the declarations which Mr Bayle had made concerning that affair.

IV. And what is more important, that Mr Bayle has paſſed lightly over the matters which had given offence, and even ſpeaks of them as things that may be defended, pretending that he could defend what he has advanced in his Dictionary, becauſe, in quality of Commentator and of Hiſtorian, it was allowable in him to ſpeak otherwiſe than if he had been writing in the dogmatical way: an excuſe which he had alledged in his paper of the 5th of January 1698, but which they had told him was by no means to be received, upon which he acquieſced ſimply in the Remarks of the Conſiſtory, and acknowledged the ſolidity of them, and promiſed to ſubmit to the ſame; which is a circumſtance he ought to have taken notice of in his printed Letter, as being neceſſary to the ſatisfaction which was required of them.

For theſe and other reaſons, the Conſiſtory being of opinion that Mr Bayle's printed Letter only in part ſatisfies what he had promiſed, and ſo they might juſtly deſire ſomething farther of him, yet notwithſtanding that they might not depart from the indulgent method which they had already taken, the Conſiſtory may content themſelves with repreſenting theſe things by word of mouth to Mr Bayle, and earneſtly exhorting him to a punctual performance of his promiſes: and the Conſiſtory will take this method, being perſuaded that the Sieur Bayle will, in the ſecond Edition of his Dictionary ſincerely correct the things which have been pointed out to him, and will make good uſe of the advices which they have given him; which is the principal thing that the Conſiſtory propoſed to itſelf in the whole of this affair, becauſe they conſider it as of importance to the glory of God, and the edification of the Church.

And farther that Mr Bayle who has promiſed to make uſe of the Remarks of the Conſiſtory, may do it the more eaſily, the Conſiſtory think fit that the Miniſters who have already been employed in this affair, ſhould draw up ſome ſuccinct Memorials concerning the Remarks which the Conſiſtory have made, to which they may add ſome others on important points, that after the Conſiſtory ſhall have approved of the ſaid Memorials, they may be put in Mr Bayle's hands, that he may remember and have regard to them.

The Conſiſtory likewiſe being of opinion that our much honoured brother Mr Jurieu, one of our Miniſters, having been very ill treated by Mr Bayle in his work; it is proper to acquaint the latter of the ſame, and to exhort him for the future to behave with more moderation, both in the ſecond Edition of his Dictionary, and in the other volumes which he promiſeth to the public, the Conſiſtory having obſerved, not without grief, that ſo little regard has been had for a Miniſter whoſe miniſtry and labours have been and are of ſingular edification to the Church.

Digitized by Google

December 20, 1698.

The Committee, appointed by an Act of the 7th of December, read to the Conſiſtory the ſuccinct Memorials concerning the Remarks of the Conſiſtory on Mr Bayle's paper, and likewiſe their Remarks on the moſt important points in the Dictionary of the ſaid Sieur Bayle, which are approved of by the Conſiſtory, and it is reſolved that the ſame be communicated to Mr Bayle by Meſſieurs Pielat, Superville, Le Page, and Fanueil.

A Short MEMORIAL of the principal things to which Mr Bayle ought to have regard, in order to correct them in the ſecond edition of his DICTIONARY.

THE Conſiſtory being informed that a ſecond edition of the Hiſtorical and Critical Dictionary, is actually in the preſs, think themſelves obliged to acquaint Mr Bayle in conſequence of what has formerly paſſed betwixt the Conſiſtory and him. That he ought to remember the following things, in order to have regard to them in the corrections which he promiſed to make in his book.

1. He ſhall carefully ſhun all obſcenities, and ſuppreſs the impure expreſſions, citations, queſtions, and reflexions; remembring that purity of ſpirit, as well as of body, is one of thoſe things which are moſt recommended to us in the Scripture, and that all wiſe men ought to take great care not to favour Libertiniſm, which is but too common in this age, and to which the youth have but too great propenſity.

2. He ſhall entirely reform the article of DAVID, ſo that pious ſouls may no longer be offended at it, as he has promiſed: and in order to this he ſhall conform himſelf to what the Holy Scripture tells us of that great Prophet. He ought even to write a vindication of him, and obſerve that during the life of Saul, David was the rightful King; and far from judging of the actions of that Prince by the common and ordinary courſe of the Kings of the earth, he ſhall ſhow that he was authoriſed to extirpate the Canaanites. That the High-Prieſt, by whoſe means he conſulted God, was a particular rule to him; that we ought to be ſilent where the Scripture is ſilent; and that its ſilence, far from giving a pretence againſt David, is rather equivalent to an approbation; and, in fine, he ſhall take care to eſtabliſh well the prophetical and canonical authority of David's writings.

3. With regard to Manicheiſm, inſtead of diſplaying the ſophiſms of the Manicheans, and lending them reaſons and new objections which they never alledged, and endeavouring to free their hypotheſes from the difficulties which render it ridiculous, Mr Bayle ſhall refute them, and ſhall take care not to give the victory to ſo deteſtable and monſtrous a hereſy. For that purpoſe he ſhall correct the articles MANICHEANS, MARCIONITES, PAULICIANS, and likewiſe divers paſſages in his book which ſeem to favour their opinion, or the difficulties which they alledge againſt the permiſſion of evil.

4. He ſhall obſerve the ſame conduct with regard to the Pyrrhonians and Pyrrhoniſm, which extinguiſheth all Religion, and reform the article PYRRHO, taking care, both there and every where elſe, not to injure our myſteries.

5. He ſhall not give extravagant praiſes to Atheiſts or Epicureans. He ſhall correct the paſſages which may contain any affectation in favour of them, and he ſhall not weaken the neceſſity of believing a God and a Providence, and even a future life, with regard to the benefit of civil ſociety, and the reformation of manners. He ſhall rather inſert clauſes which may ſerve to inſpire his readers with a horror againſt Atheiſm; and ſhall endeavour to ſhow that altho' Atheiſts have been regular in their manners, that this did not proceed from Atheiſm, but only from a ſelf-love, which was always irregular. He may even bring examples, which he may know, of many Atheiſts who have been very vicious and very infamous.

6. Beſides theſe five principal heads, which have been already mentioned to Mr Bayle, and which he has promiſed to correct, as he has likewiſe promiſed to the Conſiſtory to receive all the other informations which they ſhall give him, and to make uſe of the ſame, the Conſiſtory do exhort him to take care, in the ſixth place, not to refute, except on very good grounds, what our Divines have advanced concerning certain wicked Popes; ſince tho' he may alledge ſome conjectures in defence of theſe Popes, with regard to certain facts, ſtrong reaſons may be oppoſed to him for their condemnation, and that it is unjuſt, without neceſſity, to favour the party of ſeducers, who have done ſo much hurt to the Church, and to make our authors paſs for raſh accuſers.

7. He ſhall likewiſe reviſe the Articles of NICOLE and PELISSON, which contain divers things which ſeem to lead to Pyrrhoniſm, and are hurtful to the way of Examination, by which Proteſtants pretend that we can and ought to come to the knowledge of the truth.

8. He ſhall take care in ſpeaking of Providence, not to exaggerate and magnify the difficulties of the prophane, and not give their objections an air of ſuperiority over our anſwers, even in refuting thoſe which are agreeable to Scripture: whereupon they particularly point out to him the Article of RUFINUS. He ſhall likewiſe reviſe the Article of XENOPHANES, in which he exaggerates the victories of the Devil.

9. It is likewiſe to be wiſhed that he would have greater regard to the expreſſions of the Scripture in the alluſions which he ſometimes makes.

Mr Bayle ſhall have regard to all theſe heads to conform his corrections to them, and ſhall endeavour to purge his book of every thing that may have given offence to true believers. The Conſiſtory declaring that they have only made theſe remarks on what appeared to them to be moſt eſſential, and that they do not pretend thereby to approve of the reſt of the work.

They think themſelves obliged to acquaint Mr Bayle, that Mr Jurieu, one of our Miniſters, having been very ill uſed in his book, they deſire that he may behave for the future with greater moderation, both in the ſecond edition of his Dictionary, and in the other volumes which he promiſeth to the public, and they exhort him to do ſo, having obſerved, not without ſorrow, that ſo little regard has been had for a Miniſter whoſe miniſtry and labours have been and are of ſingular edification to the Church.

Approved and Reſolved in Conſiſtory, on the 20th of December 1698.

Digitized by Google

Mr BAYLE's

Hiſtorical and Critical

DICTIONARY.

A.

AARON, High-Prieſt of the Jews, and Brother of Moſes. His Hiſtory is ſo fully related in the Pentateuch, and in the Dictionaries of Moreri and Mr Simon, that I may be excuſed from making an Article of it in this place. I ſhall only obſerve, That his Weakneſs in complying with the ſuperſtitious Requeſt of the Iſraelites, in the Matter of the Golden Calf, has occaſioned a great Variety of fabulous Notions [A]. About the Beginning of the XVIIth Century, one Monceau or Moncæius, publiſhed an Apology for Aaron (a), which was condemned by the Inquiſition at Rome, as had been foretold to the Author by the Jeſuit Cornelius à Lapide (b). In that Apology it is ſuppoſed that Aaron deſigned to repreſent the very ſame Form which Moſes exhibited ſome time after, namely, a Cherubim; but that the Hebrews fell down and worſhiped it, contrary to his Intention. An effectual Confutation of this Notion was publiſhed in the Year 1609, by one of the Doctors of the Sarbonne, who was a Canon of the Church of Amiens (c). It has been aſſerted, that this criminal Compliance of Aaron was owing to his Apprehenſions of being ſtoned to Death; and that he hoped to have eluded the Deſires of the People, by propoſing to the Women, on this Occaſion, that they ſhould contribute their Ear-Rings;

(a) 'Tis intitled, Aaron purgatus. It was reprinted at Francfort in 1675 in 8vo. This differs from the Edition in 12mo at Leipſic, in 1689, mentioned in the 17th Vol. of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, in nothing but a new Title which the Booksellers gave it.

(b) Corn. à Lapide Comment. in Exod. cap. xxxii. ver. 4. pag. 605.

(c) His Name was Viſorius; and his Book was called, Deſtructio Pſeudo-Cherubi Moncæi.

[A] Occaſioned a great Variety of fabulous Notions.] I. Rabbi Solomon held (1) that the Calf which the Iſraelites worſhiped was alive, and that Aaron ſeeing it walk and eat like other Calves, erected an Altar to it. There is ſomething analogous to this in the Alcoran (2). II. Several Rabbies, in order to excuſe Aaron, affirm, that he did not make the Golden Calf; that he only contributed ſo far towards it, as to caſt the Gold into the Fire, to free himſelf from the People's vehement Importunity; but that certain Magicians, who had mingled with the Iſraelites at their coming up out of Egypt, communicated to that Gold the Image of a Calf. As the holy Scripture declares it was Caſt-work, and faſhioned with the Graving-Tool, two Things may be ſuppoſed; either, that they prepared a Mould in the Shape of a Calf, into which they poured the molten Gold; or, that, having produced a Maſs of Gold, they gave it the Figure of a Calf by the Sculptor's Art. III. Many maintain, that Aaron did not make a whole Calf, but only the Head. IV. Some tell us (3), That the Powder of the Golden Calf burnt by Moſes, which he mingled with the Water that the Iſraelites drank, ſtuck in the Beards of thoſe who had worſhiped it; by which means their Beards appeared gilt, as a ſpecial Mark diſtinguiſhing the Idolaters. This Fable is inſerted in the 32d Chapter of Exodus, in a French Bible, printed at Paris, in the Year 1538, by Anthony Bonnemere, who ſays in his Preface, That this Bible in the French Tongue was firſt printed, at the Deſire of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty Charles VIII. in the Year 1495, and has ſince been corrected and reprinted. And in the ſame Preface he informs us, That the French Tranſlator had inſerted nothing but pure Truth, as it is found in the Latin Bible; and that nothing was omitted, but what was improper to be tranſlated. So that all which relates to the gilt Beards is to be received as undoubted Fact, as well as another Story of the ſame kind, which is alſo inſerted in this very Chapter; namely, That the Children of Iſrael ſpit ſo violently in the Face of Hur, who had refuſed to make Gods for them, that they ſuffocated him. The Book (4) from which I extract this, was written by a Walloon Miniſter, who fails not to exclaim againſt the Impudence of adding in ſome Places, and ſuppreſſing in others. But he is guilty of both: in his own Verſion he has artfully foiſted in ſome things, and drop'd others; beſides inſerting childiſh Traditions: And yet he promiſes in the Preface nothing but pure Truth, and declares, that this Tranſlation was undertaken not for the Clergy, but for the Laity, Hermits, and the lower Orders of religious Societies, who are not ſo learned as they ſhould be. Which is the very Thing that renders the Tranſlator's Unfaithfulneſs more culpable: for the skillful may eſcape the Snare; the ignorant cannot. Laſtly, The Golden Beard is not the ſole Chimera which the Rabbies have invented. Another of their Tenets is, that the Water, which Moſes compell'd them to ſwallow, impregnated with the Particles of the Gold, whereof their Calf was made, had almoſt the ſame Effect as the Waters of Jealouſy. It produced Tumours and Ulcers in the guilty, and brought no harm on the innocent (5).

(1) Corn. à Lap. in Exod. pag. 605.

(2) Aſcemeli taurum fudit corporeum, emittentem mugitum. i. e. Aſcemeli caſt a real Bull that bellow'd. Azura xxx. Lat. Cod. xx Arabici ap. Selden. de Diis Syr. Synt. 1. cap. 4. pag. 54.

(3) See pag. 829. of Jeremiah de Pours's Divine Melody.

(4) 'Tis intitled La Divine Mélodie du Saint Pſalmiſte, printed at Middelbourg in 1644 in 4to. The Author calls himſelf Jeremiah de Pours.

(5) See Salian, vol. 2. pag. 165. Bocharti Hierozoic. pars 1. lib. 2. cap. 31.

Digitized by Google

Rings; imagining that they would chuſe to renounce the Preſence of a Viſible Deity, rather than diveſt themſelves of their perſonal Ornaments: but he found, that nothing is accounted too coſtly, when the human Mind is intoxicated with Superſtition and Idolatry (d). They, who affirm that the Golden Calf was only Wood overlaid with Gold [B], find nothing in the holy Scripture, that can in the leaſt countenance any ſuch Pretence. That GOD ſuſpended the natural Effects of Fire, for the ſake of Aaron, as he did on behalf of the three Children in the fiery Furnace at Babylon, is, I am perſuaded, an Aſſertion not to be maintained; and yet there are ſome Writers who have held that Opinion [C].

(d) Corn. à Lapide in Exod. fag. 603.

[B] That the Golden Calf was only Wood overlaid with Gold.] The holy Scripture tells us expreſsly (6), that it was a Molten Calf; and, tho it is afterwards ſaid (7) that Moſes burnt it, and reduced it to Powder, it does not neceſſarily follow, that the Idol was compoſed of combuſtible Materials: It may only ſignify, that Moſes melted down the Gold again, and divided it into very minute Particles, which became imperceptible upon being thrown into the Water; like thoſe with which the Waters of the Tagus and Paſtolus are ſaid to abound. So that Francis Junius may be miſtaken when he ſays, (8) Quamvis non tam exiſtimari poſſit Vitulus iſte totus ex auro fuiſſe conflatus, quam Aurifaminis tantum modo obductus, cætera ligneus, ut quem S. Litteræ tradunt combuſtum, atque in cineres redactum. That is, But it is rather to be thought, that this Calf was only covered over with a thin Plate of Gold, the reſt of it being nothing but Wood; than that the whole was entirely of caſt Gold; ſince the holy Scripture aſſures us that it was burnt, and reduced to Aſhes. He had more Reaſon for placing Aaron at the Head of his Catalogue of antient Sculptors, Architects, Painters, Statuaries, &c. Aaron might have claimed that Diſtinction by Right of Antiquity, tho the mere Order of the Alphabet had not beſtow'd it upon him. This brings into my Mind the Aſſertion of ſome who contend that Moſes was Maſter of the profoundeſt Secrets of Chemiſtry, ſince he knew how to pulverize Gold. Many are of Opinion, that Aaron only ordered the Artificers to caſt the Golden Calf, and had no hand in it himſelf; and that Moſes did not command the Iſraelites to drink the Powder of that Gold: but, having thrown it into the Stream, the only Place they could poſſibly drink at, it may juſtly be ſaid, that he made them ſwallow the Idol they had worſhiped (9).

(6) Exodus xxxii. 4.
(7) Ibid. ver. 20.
(8) In his Catal. Artificum, p. 1.
(9) See Rivetus upon the 32*d Ch. of* Exodus, Tom. 1. p. 1184.

[C] There are ſome Writers who have held that Opinion.] A Cordelier, a Doctor of Divinity, of the Faculty of Paris, maintains, that the Miracle of the burning Buſh at Horeb, which ſtood unconſumed in the midſt of Flames (10), was repeated ſome time after, when the Fire ſlew two of Aaron's Sons, without damaging their Shirts; and again, when Aaron ſtopt the Plague which had ſwept away a great Number of Iſraelites (11), Sicuti factum eſt, quando egreſſus ignis à Domino Nadab & Abiud ignem alienum & prophanum coram Domino offerentes devoravit, id eſt, interfecit: veſtibus & tunicis eorum lineis intactis remanentibus. Idem judicium eſt de Aarone ſummo ſacerdote, qui citiſſimè profectus eſt ad populum, quem ignis egreſſus à facie Domini interficiebat: ſtetitque illæſus inter mortuos ac viventes, licet eſſet in medio flammæ fulgentiſſimæ & flagrantiſſimæ, ſecundum Joſephum, Lib. 4. Antiq. Cap. 3. (12), That is, as it came to paſs when Fire from the LORD devoured Nadab and Abihu, while they were offering ſtrange and prophane Fire before the LORD; their Coats and linen Garments remaining untouch'd: The ſame is remarkable of Aaron the High Prieſt, who ran into the midſt of the People, whom Fire, proceeding from the Face of the LORD, was conſuming; and ſtood there unhurt between the Living and the Dead, tho' in the midſt of a moſt bright and intenſe Flame, according to Joſephus, in the 3*d Chapter of his* 4*th Book of Antiquities.* To this, among other Examples, he adds that of Shadrach, Meſhach and Abednego, who eſcaped untouched out of the fiery Furnace at Babylon. Let it be here particularly remark'd, that he quotes not the holy Scripture, but Joſephus, in relation to Aaron. And the Scripture (13) determines not whether that Plague, which Aaron ſtopped, and by which 14700 Perſons periſhed, was a miraculous Fire, or ſomething elſe. The Jewiſh Hiſtorian has entirely ſuppreſſed this Miracle: he only mentions the Fire which conſumed the 250 Men that offered Incenſe. The Scripture mentions this likewiſe (14), but as a Fact preceding the Deſtruction ſtay'd by Aaron. Obſerve, Joſephus contents himſelf with remarking, that the ſupernatural Fire which conſumed Corah, and the 250 Men that offered Incenſe, did no hurt to Aaron. He does not once touch upon the Circumſtances for which Nadin cites him. We ſhall here tranſcribe his very Words. ὑφ' ἓ πάντες, ὅτι τε διακόσιοι καὶ οἱ πεντήκοντα καὶ Κορὴς, δίξαντος ἐπ' αὐτὰς, ἐφθάρησαν ὡς καὶ τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν ἀφανῆ γεγονέναι περιεώζεται δὲ μόνος Ἀαρὼν μηδὲν ὑπὸ τῆ πυρὶς βλαβεὶς, τῶ τὸν θεὸν εἶναι τὸν ἐς ἅπαν κρίσιν ἀπεσκληκότα (15). That is, By the Force of which [Fire] riſhing upon them, the 250 Men, together with Corah, were ſo entirely conſum'd, that their dead Bodies could not be found. Aaron alone remain'd unhurt; becauſe it was GOD, who directed the Fire againſt thoſe only who were guilty. Here he juſtly acknowledges the Finger of GOD, but does not particularly inform us, whether the Fire actually touched the Body of Aaron, or whether GOD only with-held it from approaching him. Father Nadin therefore ought not to have deſcended from Generals to Particulars; nor to have quoted, for that purpoſe, the Jewiſh Hiſtorian. Moſt of the Faults of this kind, which in Books are infinite, are occaſioned, either by Authors not conſulting the Originals, or by their having the Confidence to alter them with their Paraphraſes, the better to accommodate them to their own Schemes.

(10) Exod. iii. 2.
(11) Lev. x. 2, 5.
(12) Joann. Nodin. Comment. in Exod. cap. 3. pag. 142. col. 2.
(13) Num. xvi. 46, 47, &c.
(14) Ibid. ver. 35.
(15) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 4. cap. 3. Hudſon.

"AARSENS (FRANCIS) Lord of Somelſdyck, and Spyck, &c. was one of the "greateſt Miniſters the United Provinces have produced, for Negotiation [A]. "His Father, who was alſo a Man of great Abilities, enjoyed ſuch a Poſt, as enabled

[A] Was one of the greateſt Miniſters —— for Negotiation.] His very Enemies allow him this Character, when they affirm, That he (1) was the moſt dangerous Genius that ever aroſe in the United Provinces, and was the more to be dreaded, as he concealed all the Malice and Guile of foreign Courts, under the falſe and deceitful Appearance of Dutch Candour and Simplicity; that he was zealous and Maſter of the Art of Perſwaſion; that he could find Reaſons to ſupport the worſt of Cauſes; that he had (2) a Genius for Intrigue, and had entered into Leagues and Correſpondencies with thoſe Grandees of France, whoſe Conduct was not only ſuſpected, but odious to the King; and that having corrupted the French Ambaſſador's Secretary at the Hague (3), he was Maſter of all the moſt ſecret Schemes of the Miniſters of that Crown. I ſay, when they give him this Character, they deſcribe a Man admirably furniſhed with all the Talents requiſite for the moſt important Embaſſies, and the moſt delicate Negotiations. Farther, Mr Du Maurier, who always inveighs moſt bitterly againſt Francis Aarſens, takes care to prevent the Prejudice his Invectives might raiſe in his Readers; for he himſelf tells us, that his Father and this Dutch Ambaſſador were ever at Enmity (4); that there was an irreconcileable Diſagreement in their Tempers; and that the ſtrong Averſion they had conceived againſt each other, inſtead of wearing off, was continually increaſing. He even tells us, That his Father made a Speech againſt Francis Aarſens, on the 13th of November 1613, before the States General (5), wherein he reproaches him with having preſumed to ſpeak diſreſpectfully of their Gallic Majeſties, and the Lords of their Council, who were the ſolid Support of the Liberty of the United Provinces; and accuſes him of Arrogance and Vanity in his common Diſcourſes, and of Ingratitude, in returning nothing but Inſolence for all the kind Offices that France had heap'd upon him. Thus has he furniſhed us with an effectual Antidote againſt his Poiſon; for who does not know, that an Author is not to be underſtood too rigorouſly, when he is ſpeaking of his profeſs'd Enemy?

(1) Du Maurier Mem. pag. 376.
(2) Ibid. 378.
(3) Ibid. 381.
(4) Ibid. 388.
(5) Ibid. 381.

"him

Digitized by Google

" him to procure an Employ for his Son [B]. John d' Olden-Barnevelt, who at that " Time had the chief Direction of the Affairs of Holland, and all the United Pro- " vinces, ſent him into France, with the Character of Agent. There he learnt the " Art of Negotiation, under thoſe great Maſters, Henry IV. Villeroy, Rôni, Silleri, " Jeannin, &c. and ſucceeded ſo well in it, as to gain their Approbation of his Con- " duct. He had afterwards the Character of Ambaſſador conferr'd upon him, and " was the firſt, whom the Court of France conſidered in that Quality: And it was " in his Time that Henry IV. declared, the Ambaſſador of the United Povinces, " ſhould take Place immediately after the Ambaſſador of Venice. He was ſome " time after employ'd to that Republic [C], and to ſeveral Princes of Germany and " Italy, on Account of the Commotions in Bohemia [D]. Beſides which, he was ſent " upon ſeveral extraordinary Embaſſies into France and England [E], of which he " has left very exact and judicious Collections. We may obſerve from them, that " all his Inſtructions, and Credentials, in his later Embaſſies, were drawn up by " himſelf; whence we may judge, that no State ever produced a Miniſter better " qualify'd, not only to negotiate, but to inſtruct an Ambaſſador in the proper " Points of his intended Negotiation. And, indeed, in all his Embaſſies, he did " Honour to the State, as well as to the Character with which his Maſters had in- " veſted him; nor could himſelf, or his Family, regret the Time [F] he ſpent " in the Service of his Country (a)." He died in a good old Age, leaving behind him one Son, who was eſteem'd the richeſt Man in Holland [G], and well known by the Name of Monſ. de Sommerdyck (b).

(a) Taken from Wiquefort's Ambaſſador. Tom. 2. p. 435, 436.

(b) It is thus pronounc'd, tho' the Name is Somelſdyck.

[B] His Father enjoy'd ſuch a Poſt, as enabled him to procure an Employ for his Son.] His Name was Cornelius Aarſens (6); and he was Regiſter of the States. He was acquainted with Mr du Pleſſis Mornai, who was tranſacting Affairs with William Prince of Orange, whom he intreated to take his Son into his Service. This was comply'd with, and continu'd ſome Years. In 1598, this young Gentleman, who underſtood the French Tongue, and the Affairs of the Kingdom, ſucceeded Levin Calüard, who died Reſident for the United Provinces, at the Court of Henry IV. nor was he any thing more than the State's Reſident till 1609, when, upon the Concluſion of a twelve Years Truce, in which Spain treated with the United Provinces, as with a free People, Henry IV. acknowledg'd him for their Ambaſſador (7). During his Stay in France, which was fifteen Years, he received great Favours, and even Honours, from the King; who rais'd him to the Degree of Nobility, and made him a Knight, and a Baron: for which Reaſon, he was afterwards receiv'd in Holland, among the Nobility of the Province. He became at laſt ſo odious to that Court, according to Mr du Maurier, that they deſired he might be recall'd. See below, the Remark [D].

(6) Du Maurier Mem. pag. 377, 378.

(7) Ibid.

[C] To that Republic.] To this Juncture of Time muſt be referr'd what Cardinal Pallavicini reproach'd Father Paul with. He is in Poſſeſſion (he ſays) of a Letter (8) of the Sieur de Zuilichem, Secretary to the Prince of Orange, in which he relates, that, at an accidental Interview at Venice with the Sieur de Somerdyck, Ambaſſador of Holland, and Francis Paolo, the good Father aſſur'd that Miniſter of his extream Joy in beholding the Repreſentative of a Republic, which held the Pope to be the true Antichriſt. The Author of a Book, entituled Cancellaria Secreta Anhaltina, has preſerv'd ſome Fragments of this Letter, by which it appears, that Francis Aarſens, when he went to Venice, had Authority to negotiate with the Proteſtant Cantons, and that he receiv'd great Honours from them. This was a Year after the Deputation of the Swiſs Miniſters, to the Synod of Dort. Gratias ſe imprimis egiſſe, quod Civitates & oppida non Catholica Prædicantes ſuos ANNO PRÆTERLAPSO ad Synodum Dordracenſem dimiſerint (9). He was particularly thankful, that the Proteſtant States and Towns, had, THE YEAR BEFORE, deputed their Preachers to the Synod of Dort.

(8) See the Preface to the Hiſt. of the Council of Trent, tranſlated by Amelot de la Houſſaye.

(9) Carcell. Anhalt. p. 251.

[D] On Account of the Commotions in Bohemia.] This fell out in the Year 1620, and it is remarkable, " that the King of France (10) forbad his three Am- " baſſadors, the Duke d'Angoulême, the Count de " Bethune, and the Abbot des Praux, to receive the " Viſits of Mr d'Aarſens, who was employ'd by the " United Provinces, to treat with certain Princes of " Germany and Italy, concerning the ſame Affairs of " Bohemia, which were the Purport of the French " Embaſſy. Their Order imported, that the King " was not diſpleaſed with the States, with whom " he deſired always to live in perfect Harmony, but " had a particular Diſlike to Mr d'Aarſens, for ill " treating the Service and Dignity of his Majeſty. " The Ground of this Diſpleaſure, as any one will " perceive, who is the leaſt acquainted with the Af- " fairs of thoſe Times, was this: Aarſens had put " himſelf at the Head of that Party, which, in 1619, " oppos'd an Affair, which was negotiated with great " Earneſtneſs, at the Hague, by the King's Ambaſſa- " dors Boiſiſſe and du Maurier." Add to theſe Words of Mr Wicquefort, a Paſſage of du Maurier, which gives Light into them. " In the Year 1618, ſays he, " (11) Mr de Boiſiſſe was order'd by the King to com- " plain, in his Name, to the States General, of a " diffamatory Libel, written, ſign'd, and publiſh'd, " by Francis Aarſens, to the great Scandal and Diſ- " honour of the Lords of his Majeſty's Council, for " which, at that Time, he could obtain no Satisfa- " ction." It is probable, this Complaint was founded upon his having charg'd the Council of France with betraying the King, by favouring thoſe who were plotting in Holland, to reduce that Republic once more under the Yoke of the King of Spain: for, if du Maurier is to be credited, the grand Common-Place Topics of Mr Aarſens, the conſtant Theme of all his Writings, and of the Placards ſtuck up at the Corners of the Streets, was, that the Faction of Barnevelt was conſpiring with Spain, to aboliſh both the Reform'd Religion and Liberty, at once, in the United Provinces. We may apply here the Proverb, Se non è vero, è ben trovato. —— If it is not true, it is well hit off. Nothing can be a greater Confirmation of the profound Abilities of Mr Aarſens, than this Scheme.

(10) Wicquef. Ambaſſ. Tom. 1. p. 658.

(11) Du Maurier. p. 362.

[E] Extraordinary Embaſſies into France and England.] He was ſent Ambaſſador into England, in the Years 1620, and 1641 (12). The firſt Time, he was the Chief of three Ambaſſadors extraordinary; the ſecond Time, the Second. In this latter Embaſſy he was join'd in Commiſſion with the Lord of Bridérode, who took Place of him, and Heemſveliet, who was laſt in the Commiſſion. The Subject of this Embaſſy, was the Marriage of Prince William, Son of the Prince of Orange. The extraordinary Embaſſy to France, was in the Year 1624 (13). " As Car- " dinal Richelieu was but juſt come to the Helm of " Affairs, and was ignorant of the Diſlike his Prede- " ceſſors had to this Ambaſſador, he greatly eſteem'd " him, and finding him to be a Man of fine Un- " derſtanding, —— made Uſe of him to compaſs his " own Deſigns." Aarſens was appointed Envoy, either to France or England, in the Year 1628; but, being prevented by the Ice from embarking, he return'd to the Hague. —— His being accidentally thrown down by Dogs, was conſtrued by his Enemies to be an unlucky Omen. Arſenius à canibus fortè occurſantibus in terram dejectus malevolis occaſionem præbuit ſiniſtra ipſi ominandi (14).

(12) Wicquef. Amb. Tom. 1. p. 650, & 750.

(13) Du Maurier. p. 382.

(14) Barlæus Epiſt. 76. p. 217.

[F] Regret the Time.] Du Maurier ſays, that Francis Aarſens died worth an hundred thouſand Livres per Annum (15).

(15) Du Maurier. p. 377.

[G] Leaving behind him one Son, who was eſteem'd the richeſt Man in Holland.] He was Governor of Nimiguen,

Digitized by Google

Nimiguen, and Colonel of a Regiment of Horſe. He left two Sons, the eldeſt of which nam'd Francis, Lord of la Plaate, was caſt away in his Paſſage from England to Holland, after having travell'd eight Years in ſeveral Parts of Europe. The other, Cornelius, bore the Name of Sommerdyck. He had been a Colonel in the Dutch Army, and afterwards Governor of Surinam; where he was kill'd in a Mutiny of the Garriſon, in 1688. He married the eldeſt Daughter of the Marquis de St André-Montbrun, by whom he had ſeveral Children: ſhe died at the Hague, in 1695, or thereabouts.—Of ſeven Siſters, which he had, three were married to Perſons of Quality: The other four fell into ſo ſuperſtitious a Devotion, that they followed the Sieur Labbadie, the Schiſmatic Preacher, with as much Zeal, as if he had been another Apoſtle.

ABARIS, a Scythian by Nation [A], the Son of Seuthus. There have been ſo many fabulous Stories told of him, that Herodotus himſelf made a Scruple of relating them, and of informing himſelf perfectly concerning them. He only tells us (a) the Story of this Barbarian's carrying an Arrow through the World, and eating nothing. Herodotus, it ſeems, was ignorant of the marvellous Part of the Story; for they, who pretend to know it, ſay, That Abaris was carried thro' the Air upon his Arrow [B], as (a) Herod. lib. 4. cap. 36.

[A] A Scythian by Nation.] It is Suidas, who gives him this Character, and who very particularly obſerves, that he came from Scythia into Greece; and that, with the Arrow preſented him by Apollo, he fled back again from Greece, to the Country of the Hyperborean Scythians (1). Τοῦτο δ μυθολογούμενος εἰς τὸ πετόμενα ἀπὸ τῆς Ἑλλάδος μέχρι τῶν ὑπερβορέων Σκυθῶν. Ἐδόθη δὲ αὐτῷ παρὰ τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος. i. e. This Perſon's Arrow is fam'd in Story for carrying him through the Air from Greece (not from Scythia, as is commonly read in the Latin Verſion) as far as the Hyperborean Scythians. It was given him by Apollo. Euſebius (2) is likewiſe of Opinion, that he came from Scythia into Greece. If the Account of Abaris, which is in Suidas, were clear and diſtinct, we might from thence infer, that he therein takes notice of three ſeveral Countries; Scythia, where Abaris was born; Greece, to which he travell'd; and another Scythia, called the Hyperborean, whither he took another Journey. We might likewiſe infer, that he made uſe of his Arrow in flying, only in his ſecond Expedition, and conſequently that it was in Greece Apollo beſtow'd it upon him. All theſe Concluſions would be reaſonable, had we to do with an accurate Writer, or were ſure that he related Matters juſt as they ſtand at preſent in his Works; and then we might ſay, that Suidas is very ſingular in his Opinion, ſince moſt other Authors who have mention'd Abaris, tell us, that he was an Hyperborean (3), and that when he travelled to Greece, he ſet out from the Country of the Hyperboreans; and, whenever they mention his flying Arrow, they conſtantly obſerve, that he was poſſeſs'd of it before he came to Greece.

(1) Suidas in Ἄβαρις.

(2) Euſeb. Chronic. n. 1454.

(3) Herod. l. 4. c. 36. Diod. Sicul. l. 3. c. 11. Apollonii admir. Hiſt. Sect. 4. Jamblichi vita Pythag. c. 28. p. 127, &c. Harpocration, in Ἄβαρις. Scholiaſtes Ariſtoph. in Equit. Euſebius, n. 1568, &c.

[B] Was carried through the Air upon his Arrow.] Jamblichus is very expreſs as to this Point, when he ſays, (1) Ὀχεῖῳ τῷ ἐν Ὑπερβορέοις Ἀπόλλωνος διωρισθέντι αὐτῷ ἐποχούμενος, τοταμούς τε καὶ πελάγη καὶ τὰ ἄβατα διεβαινεν ἀφοβατῶν τρόπον τινα. i. e. riding upon the Arrow given him by Apollo the Hyperborean, he croſs'd Rivers and Seas, and other inacceſſible Places, as if he had been an Inhabitant of the Air. Monſ. Petit, (2) in his Account of this Arrow, takes notice of what is commonly reported concerning Witches, riding to their Nocturnal Meetings on a Broomſtick. The Journaliſt, who gives us an Extract of Mr Petit's Book, does not forget the Verſe of Villon, wherein (3) a Witch is ſtiled a Broomſtick-rider: I will here inſert the whole Paſſage, becauſe it gives us an Opportunity of making a ſhort Remark. Mr Petit (4) alledges the Tranſlation of Elijah, the Rapture of Habakkuk, that of Pythagoras, and the Arrow which the Hyperborean Apollo gave to Abaris. This (adds he) was a miraculous ſort of Arrow, and much like the Broomſtick, which, they ſay, Witches make uſe of to ride thro' the Air, to their Nocturnal Meetings. Before we make our Remark upon this, it will be requiſite to take notice of a Paſſage in another Journal, which runs thus. (5) Mr Petit, from Jamblichus, relates the Hiſtory, or rather Fable, of Abaris the Hyperborean, to whom Apollo granted the Power of flying thro' the Air upon an Arrow, juſt as our Witches go to their Nocturnal Aſſemblies, aſtride a Broomſtick. This is the Interpretation the Journaliſt gives to Mr Petit's Text, which is as follows (6): Auctor eſt Jamblichus in vitâ Pythagoræ, cap. 28. id munus Abaridi Hyperboreo ab Apolline conceſſum fuiſſe, ut per aërem quocunque vellet curſum magico invectus jaculo tendere poſſet. i. e. Jamblichus, in his Life of Pythagoras, c. 28. tells us, that Abaris, the Hyperborean, received from Apollo, the Power of directing his Courſe, as he pleaſed, thro' the Air, upon a Magic Arrow. Now here every one may perceive that the Epithet Hyperboreo may be referr'd either to the Word Abaridi, which goes before it, or to Apolline, that comes after it: The Latin Tongue is full of ſuch Equivocations. But 'tis evident, by the Words of (7) Jamblichus, cited by Petit (8), that 'tis only Apollo that is called the Hyperborean. It would be mere trifling to criticiſe on the Journaliſt upon this Account; ſince, without obſerving that this Epithet might very well belong to Abaris, as may be ſeen under the firſt Remark, it is well known that Journaliſts are not tied up to a rigid Strictneſs of Tranſlation. We muſt not forget that this was a Golden Arrow, and ſo neceſſary for Abaris's Travels, that he own'd himſelf (9) obliged to it for directing him the Way he ſhould go. Pythagoras artfully extorted this Confeſſion from him, for he robb'd him of his Arrow; and Abaris, like a blind Man who has loſt his Staff, acknowledg'd his want of it. This puts me in mind of ſome who pretend, by the help of a certain Wand, to diſcover the right Road. If all be true that is related on this Subject, I think (all Circumſtances conſidered) their Wand to be as miraculous as the Arrow of Abaris; for if, on the one hand, it has not the Power of making them fly, yet, on the other, it not only diſcovers Treaſures, Metals, the Boundaries of Lands, Thieves and Cut-throats, but likewiſe the Intrigues of both Sexes. A noted Philoſopher (10) who was conſulted about this Matter, in the Year 1689, returned for Anſwer, That this could never be done, unleſs by the Aſſiſtance of ſome intelligent Cauſe, and that this Cauſe could be no other than the Devil. Whilſt I was writing this, I was inform'd that one of the Principal of thoſe Wand-Conjurers (11) ſhew'd the laſt Summer (12) at Lions, ſuch ſurprizing Experiments of his Art, that he was ſent for to Paris, and on that grand Theatre made ſuch Diſcoveries (13), as forc'd ſeveral to declare, they had now a greater Proof than ever, and that by indiſputable Phænomena, of the Power of Dæmons to produce a great variety of Effects, under the Diſguiſe of occaſional Cauſes, ſuch as a Staff, or the like. Upon this footing the Story of Abaris's Arrow may be vindicated; for why might there not have been ſuch an Arrow formerly, ſince in our Days ſuch wonderful Effects are ſaid to have been wrought by the Frenchman's Staff? It would be worth our Metaphyſicians While to enquire how the Wand came into ſuch mighty Requeſt; for the old Proverb, Virgula Divina, and the common Saying, with the Turn of a Stick, and the Juggler's Phraſe, by Virtue of my little Wand, ſeem to be owing to the frequent Uſe of a Wand in Sorceries, according to the common Tradition. What Virtues did they not anciently aſcribe to Mercury's Rod? His Golden Wings, which he fix'd on his Feet, would have been of little Uſe to him in flying, had not his Rod contributed thereto by it's powerful Energy; and it ſeems to have ſerv'd him as an Horſe. Thus Virgil (14);

(1) Jamblich. in the forementioned place, p. 128.

(2) Petitus, de Sibylla, l. 2. c. 7. p. 200.

(3) N'en eſt, le deuſſon vif bruſſer, comme un Chevaucheur d'eſcouvettes.

(4) Nouvell. de la Repub. des Lett. Octob. 1686. Art. 1.

(5) Bibl. Univerſ. Tom. 2. p. 132.

(6) Petit, as above, p. 198.

(7) See the Words in Citation (4).

(8) Petit, p. 199.

(9) Jamblichus p. 132.

(10) Father Malebranche in the Mercure Gallant for the Month of January, 1693.

(11) James Aymar, a Peaſant of St Veran in Dauphine.

(12) In the Year 1692.

(13) See the Note [G].

Et primum pedibus talaria nectit
Aurea, quæ ſublimem alis, ſive æquora ſupra
Seu terram, rapido pariter cum flamine portant.
Tum virgam capit: Hac animas ille evocat Orco
Pallentes, alias ſub triſtia tartara mittit,
Dat ſomnos, adimitque, & lumina morte reſignat.
Illa FRETUS agit ventos, & turbida tranat Nubila.

Hermes obeys, with golden Pinions binds
His flying Feet, and mounts the weſtern Winds:
And

(14) Virgil Æn. l. 4. ſee likewiſe Homer's Iliad, and Odyſſ. l. ult. Ovid. Metam. b. 1. in the Story of Argus. Horace, Ode 10, and 24, of b. 1. Statius, in his Thebaide b. 1.

Digitized by Google

as it were upon another Pegaſus; ſo that Rivers, Seas, and Places inacceſſible to other Men, were no Obſtacle to him in his Journey. This Arrow belong'd to Apollo, and was apparently the ſame with which he ſlew the Cyclopes, who forg'd the Thunderbolts, which Jupiter made uſe of againſt the unfortunate Æſculapius (b). Apollo, after this Slaughter, hid his Arrow under a Mountain, in the Country of the Hyperboreans, and recover'd it after a wonderful Manner, the Winds bringing it back to him, upon a Reconciliation between him (c) and Jupiter. It is difficult to determine, when Abaris liv'd [C], there being ſo many different Opinions about it, as to occaſion ſome of the Moderns to fall into Miſtakes [D]: But they are more unanimous in aſſigning

(b) Hygin. Aſtr. Poet. l. 2. c. 15. p. 386.

(c) Ibid.

And, whether o'er the Seas or Earth he flies,
With rapid Force, they bear him down the Skies.
But firſt he graſps within his awful Hand,
The Mark of Sovereign Pow'r, his Magic Wand:
With this he draws the Ghoſts from hollow Graves,
With this he drives them down the Stygian Waves;
With this he ſeals in Sleep the wakeful Sight,
And Eyes, tho' cloſ'd in Death, reſtores to Light.
Thus arm'd, the God begins his airy Race;
And drives the racking Clouds along the liquid Space.

DRYDEN.

If we had the Treatiſe, which Barthius (15) promiſed on Mercury's Rod, we ſhould doubtleſs have ſeen a very curious Piece, and probably more inſtructive than the Tract of Antiſthenes on Minerva's Wand. That Goddeſs had likewiſe her Rod, with which ſhe made Perſons look either young or old, as the occaſion requir'd (16). Circe (17), the Sorcereſs, did more than all this, ſince with one ſingle Stroke of her Wand, ſhe could transform Men into Beaſts, and Beaſts into Men. Eraſmus, who (18) to all thoſe Inſtances adds the Rod, with which Moſes wrought ſo many Miracles, ſhould have taken notice, that the Devil, who mimicks God in all his Works, follow'd him likewiſe in that in making uſe of a Rod, as one of his principal Occaſional Cauſes. Huetius (19) aſſerts, That what the Poets feign of Mercury's Rod, &c. was all borrow'd from the Hiſtory of Moſes's Rod. The Devil was certainly a very ready Mimick; for Pharaoh's Magicians, by virtue of their Rods, did ſome Miracles, which reſembled thoſe of the true God (20). Nor are we to forget the Brachmans (21), who always carry a Ring and a Staff, to which they aſcribe great Virtues. I ſhall enlarge more on this, under the Article Rabdomancy.

(15) De Virgæ Mercurialis poteſtate & potentia peculiarem Tractationem ſatis myſterioden damus in Superſtitionum magno Commentario. Barthius in Stat. Tom. 2. p. 291.

(16) Hom. Odyſſ. υ. & χ.

(17) Ibid. κ.

(18) On the Adage Virgula Divina, Chil. 1. Cent. 1. n. 97.

(19) Huet. Demonſt. Evang. prop. 4. p. 208.

(20) Exod. vii. and viii.

(21) Philoſtrat. in Vit. Apollon. l. 3.

[C] When Abaris liv'd.] His Embaſſy to Athens is fix'd by ſome to the 21ſt Olympiad; by Hippoſtratus to the Third, and by Pindar to the time of King Cræſus (22). Euſebius is of the laſt Opinion, having fix'd the Journey of Abaris, and the beginning of Cræſus's Reign, to the ſecond Year of the 54th Olympiad; but afterwards he falls into a ſhameful Blunder, telling us (23), That this Magician flouriſh'd in the laſt Year of the 82d Olympiad, Abaris Hyperboranus Hariolus agnoſcitur. Abaris is allow'd to be the Hyperborean Augur. Valeſius (24) ſeems to prefer the Opinion of Porphyry and Jamblichus, according to whom Abaris flouriſh'd in the 2d Year of the 54th Olympiad, cotemporary with Pythagoras. This is inferr'd from what Porphyry and Jamblichus ſay, That Pythagoras ſhew'd his Golden Thigh to Abaris, the Prieſt of Hyperborean Apollo. If the Letters aſcribed to Phalaris were not ſomewhat romantic, one might conclude that Abaris was cotemporary with that Tyrant; but it is not probable, that the Letters in that Collection were ever penn'd by him. However, 'tis an Argument produc'd by ſome, to prove that Abaris and Phalaris were cotemporary; for 'tis very likely, that the Sophiſt, who wrote thoſe Letters, and aſcrib'd them to Phalaris, kept ſtrict to Chronology, in order to render his Fictions the more probable. Suidas places the Reign of Phalaris under the 52d Olympiad. The Opinion of Hippoſtratus may be back'd by the following Argument: Suidas (25) obſerves, that in the 5th Olympiad, the Athenians offer'd, in behalf of all the Greeks, Sacrifices that were called προπομπαι: They were offer'd before the Land was till'd, in order to obtain the Divine Bleſſing upon the enſuing Harveſt. Now the Scholiaſt of Ariſtophanes tells us (26), That when the Athenians offered the Sacrifices call'd προπομπαι, for the whole Country, there was a great Famine and Peſtilence rag'ng over the whole Earth, which forc'd the People to have recourſe to the Oracle; and that the Anſwer of the Oracle was, If the Athenians offer a Sacrifice, the Plague ſhall be ſtayed. It was therefore at that time ſo many Ambaſſadors were ſent to Athens, and Abaris, among the reſt, in the Name of the Hyperboreans. Hippoſtratus, then, would not have been much miſtaken in placing this Expedition of Abaris under the third Olympiad. If the Conjectures of Scaliger, upon a Paſſage of Firmicus Maternus, concerning the Palladium, were true, the Time wherein Abaris liv'd would be carried up much higher; for, according to ſome Authors, he muſt have flouriſh'd long before the taking of Troy. Others bring him down to the Time of Alexander the Great; this is indeed the whimſical Notion of an Orator, whoſe Opinion in this matter is not worth our regard. The Deſcription (27) which the Sophiſt Himerus has left us, of the Equipage, with which Abaris made his Appearance before the Athenians, is very ſuitable to a Barbarian: But, ſays he, he was a Scythian only in his Garb; he ſpoke Greek, and whenever he ſpoke, you would have thought you had heard an Oration in the midſt of the Academy, or the Lyceum. What an Abſurdity! Had Plato and Ariſtotle founded theſe Schools in the Time of Abaris? A certain Author (28) endeavours to reconcile theſe Difficulties, by ſuppoſing there were two Abaris's; but this Hypotheſis is inſufficient; five or ſix are neceſſary, if he would ſucceed. Two will not unite theſe differences.

(22) Apud Harpocrationem.

(23) Euſebii Chron. n. 3568.

(24) Henr. Valeſii Notæ in Notas Mauſaci in Harpocrat. p. 83.

(25) In the word προπομπαια.

(26) In Equit.

(27) Apud Photium, p. 1136.

[D] As to occaſion ſome of the Moderns to fall into Miſtakes.] Voſſius prefers their Opinion, who ſay, That Abaris flouriſh'd between the 30th and the 38th Olympiad. This Period, ſays he, (29) according to Euſebius, coincides with the Reign of Phalaris;—— Phalaris Tyrannidem exercuit ab Olypiadis xxx (it ſhould be xxxi) An. II. uſque ad Olympiadis xxxviii. An. II. teſte Euſebio. By this Hypotheſis he overthrows the Notion of thoſe, who maintain, that Abaris was the Diſciple of Pythagoras; for he remarks, that Pythagoras flouriſhed in the firſt Year of the 60th Olympiad, and died about the latter end of the 70th. He takes notice likewiſe, that no Diſciple of Pythagoras could poſſibly write Letters to Phalaris. Laſtly, he aſſerts, That all the Ancients place Abaris not only before Pythagoras, but even before Solon. Antiqui omnes de Abari loquuntur, ut non Pythagora modo, ſed Solone etiam antiquiori (30). In theſe Remarks of Voſſius there is not the leaſt Solidity; ſince Euſebius, upon whoſe Teſtimony he builds, has referr'd Phalaris to another Period, namely the 3d Year of the 53d Olympiad, and the Travels of Abaris to the 2d Year of the 54th. Voſſius ſhould have obſerv'd this, and have remember'd, that the Paſſage of Euſebius, which he does not cite, was preferr'd by Scaliger (31) to that which he quotes. Scaliger grounds his Notion upon this, That the beginning of Phalaris's Reign was plac'd by Suidas under the 52d Olympiad. Add to this, that Oroſius (32) remarks, that Cyrus and Phalaris were Cotemporaries. It is plain then that the Inferences, which Voſſius has drawn from Abaris and Phalaris living at the ſame time, are not well grounded; for Abaris might have written to Phalaris after the 52d Olympiad, and have ſeen Pythagoras after the 60th Olympiad (33). Let this be as it will, it ſhould never have been aſſerted, That, according to the Teſtimony of all the Ancients, Solon lived after Abaris; for we know that he preſcribed Laws to the Athenians (34) in the 46th Olympiad, and that Euſebius places his Abaris under the 82d (35).

(29) Voſſius de Poëtis Græcis, cap. 3. pag. 16.

(30) Ibid.

(31) Scalig. Animad. in Euſeb. n. 1452. p. 94.

(32) Id. ib. n. 1390. p. 84.

(33) Note that Abaris, according to Jamblichus, was old when he was inſtructed by Pythagoras.

(34) See Scaliger, as above, n. 1422. p. 86.

(35) See the preceding Remark, Citation (23).

Mr Moreri makes a wrong uſe of the Obſervations of Voſſius: He finds a Contradiction between thoſe who ſay, that Abaris liv'd before Solon, and thoſe who place him in the time of Tullus Hoſtilius, or of Ancus Martius, Kings of Rome. But theſe Sentiments are not contradictory; nor will any Chronologiſt ſcruple to aſſert, that theſe two Kings preceded Solon. Mr Moreri was miſled by this Paſſage of assigning the Reason that induc'd him to quit his Country, in order to travel thro' the World. A raging Pestilence (d) (say they) prevailing over the whole Earth, the Oracle of Apollo gave no other Answer than this, That the Athenians should supplicate the Gods for all other Nations. Hence it was, that several States sent Ambassadors to Athens, of whom the Hyperborean Abaris was one. He was then very old; and, since he returned to his Country, to consecrate the Gold (e), which he had gather'd, to Hyperborean Apollo, whose Priest he was, it might be said, that a Collection for pious Uses was one of the Motives that induc'd him to travel to Greece. During this Expedition, he renew'd the Alliance between the Hyperboreans, and the Inhabitants of the Isle of Delos (f). He undertook to foretel future Events; and as he spread his Prophecies in all Places thro' which he travelled, he might properly enough be stiled a walking Oracle [E]. Some say it was he who made the Palladium [F], That destin'd Pledge of Security to those Cities which possess'd it, and that he sold it to the Trojans. He made it of human Bones (g); Materials, which I fancy, the Makers of Talismans never employ. They maintain farther, That he could foretel Earthquakes [G], remove Plagues, and lay Storms, and that he offer'd Sacrifices in (d) Harpocration, on the Word Ἄβαρις.

Digitized by Google

(e) Jamblichus in vita Pythag. c. 19. See Spanheim on Callimachus, p. 490.

(f) Diodor. Sicul. l. 2. c. 47. p. 126.

(g) Namely those of Pelops.

(34) Vossius as above.

(35) Cœlii Rodig. Antiq. Lect. lib. 16. c. 22. p. 881.

(36) This Error is not in the Dutch Editions.

(37) Gyraldus de Poetis, Dial. 3. circa init. p. 319.

Vossius (36), fuerit igitur (Phalaris) temporibus Tulli Hostilii & Anci Martii. And here, by the way, give me leave to say, that he has also suffer'd himself to be impos'd upon, by this Passage of Cœlius Rhodiginus (37); Hujus (Abaridis) & Gregorius Theologus commeminit in Epitaphio ad magnum Basilium. Moreri is of Opinion (38), that St Gregory makes mention of Abaris in an Epitaph upon St Basil the Great. But I have not met with one Word of Abaris, in the Verses which St Gregory Nazianzen made on the Death of St Basil. I expected to have found among them the five or six Lines, which Gyraldus (39) cites, as taken ex Monodia in Divum Basilium. The Term Monodia seems to refer to a Piece of Poetry; but here it is a sallacious Direction. I had recourse to the Prose of that great Divine, that is, his Funeral Oration on St Basil, and could not meet with one quarter of what Gyraldus had cited. There is a particular Mistake, into which Moreri has fallen, when he says, that this Epitaph was not compos'd for St Basil.

(39) In Equit.

[E] A walking Oracle.] Clement of Alexandria has plac'd Abaris among those who foretold future Events (40). Προγιγώσει δὲ καὶ Πυθαγόρας ὁ μάγος προσευξάμενος αἰεὶ, Ἄβαρίς τε ὁ ὑπερβόρεος. Pythagoras the Great always addicted himself to Prognostications; as did also Abaris the Hyperborean. A Commentator on (41) St Gregory Nazianzen has related, that Abaris visited every part of Greece, and there uttered his Oracles. Apollonius asserts the same thing, and besides assures us, that these Oracles were still extant. (42) Ἔγραψε δὲ καὶ χρησμοὺς ταῖς χώραις περιερχόμενος, ἃ εἰσιν μέχρι τοῦ νῦν ὑπάρχοντες. i. e. He wrote also Oracles in the Countries through which he passed, which are extant to this day. The Scholiast of (43) Aristophanes says likewise, that there were some extant in his time. Abaris was not the only Person who made it his Business to travel thro' the World, and to spread his Predictions wherever he came: it was peculiar to Diviners to do so; and hence it is, that Artimedorus (44) says, when a Man dreams he becomes a Prophet, it is generally a sign, that he will undertake a Journey, or some Business: For, adds he, Diviners are accustom'd to be Vagrants. Φέρει δὲ καὶ ἀποδημίας πολλάκις καὶ κινήσεις τῷ ἰδόντι τὸν ὄνειρον, διὰ τὸ τοὺς μάντεις περινόστους. This Dream portends travelling and removing from place to place; for Diviners are generally Ramblers. They have this in common with Jugglers, and all kind of Strollers. Abaris did more than foretel things to come; 'tis said that he erected Temples; that the Temple of Proserpine in Lacedemon (45) was built by him. Plato (46) says, That he was a perfect Cheat, or rather an Enchanter, who pretended to cure Diseases by the Charm of a few Words.

(40) Stromat. l. 1. p. 334.

(41) Nicetas in Orat. 20. Gregor. Nazianz. p. 774.

(42) Apollon. admir. Hist. Sect. 4.

(43) In Equit.

(44) Artemidor. l. 3. c. 21.

(45) Pausanias, l. 3. p. 94. But he says, That others attribute the building of it to Orpheus.

(46) Plato in Charm. p. 465.

[F] Who made the Palladium.] This Discovery is owing to the great Scaliger, who (47) in two places of a Passage in Firmicus Maternus (48) has corrected the Word Azarus by substituting Abaris. The whole Passage, as it stands thus corrected, is as follows: Palladii etiam quid sit numen audite. Simulacrum est ex ossibus Pelopis factum. Hoc Abaris Scytha fecisse perhibetur. Jam quale sit considerate quod Scytha barbarus consecravit. Estne aliquid apud Scythas humana ratione compositum, & illa effera gens & crudeli atque inhumana semper atrocitate grassata, in constituendis religionibus rectum aliquid potuit invenire? Simulacrum hoc Trojanis Abaris vendidit, stultis hominibus vana promittens.—Hear likewise in what the Divinity of the Palladium consists. It is an Image made of the bones of Pelops. The Scythian Abaris is reported to have been the Artist: but could a barbarous Scythian convey any Sanctity to it? Can the Scythians produce any thing agreeable to human Reason; or can that savage Nation invent any thing fitting and proper in Religious Matters? This Image Abaris sold to the Trojans, making empty Promises to those foolish men. Scaliger has likewise corrected two Mistakes nearly of the same kind, in a Passage of the Scholiast (49) of Aristophanes. Instead of βάριν, he would have us read Ἄβαριν; and instead of βάριδος, Ἀβάριδος, which makes the Sense much more intelligible. The Passage, as corrected, is, Ὅ τε δὴ καὶ Ἄβαριν φασι τὸν ὑπερβόρειον ἀλόντα θεωρὸν εἰς τὴν Ἑλλάδα Ἀπόλλωνι θησεῦσαι, καὶ ὅτω συγγράψαι τοὺς χρησμοὺς τοὺς νῦν προσαγορευομένους Ἀβάριδος. The Meaning of this is, That Abaris, when he travell'd to Greece to consult Apollo, or to make some Oblation to him, staid in his Service, and wrote the Oracles which still go under the Name of Abaris. Valesius (50) corrects a Passage of Proclus (51), where Pythagoras is cited, ἐν τῷ πρὸς Ἄβαρον λόγῳ; he believes it ought to be read Ἄβαριν: If so, there must have been some Work of Pythagoras, (52) address'd to our Abaris. All that we know for certain is, that Pythagoras, if we will credit Jamblichus (53), explain'd his Treatise concerning Nature, and his other Tract concerning the Gods, to this Hyperborean. Plutarch (54) makes mention of a Book entituled Abaris, and compos'd by Heraclides, wherein, I suppose, were contain'd all the Adventures, both real and romantic, of this famous Hyperborean. I am surpriz'd, that Scaliger, who was in so good a Disposition to discover Mistakes, should refer us to Gyraldi, as a Fund of learned Instruction, concerning Abaris; for, as learned a Man as Gyraldus was, yet he was not very accurate in his account of this Matter (55): He says, That Valerius Harpocration has made mention of the Wonders of the Arrow, and that, according to Herodotus, it carry'd him through the Air as far as the Country of the Hyperboreans: But 'tis certain that Harpocration speaks not a Word of the Arrow, and that Herodotus says nothing of the Flight of Abaris, much less does he determine the particular Place, to which he fled. Charles Stephens and Moreri fell into this last Mistake; Legatus Athenas veniens, ad suos Hyperboreos rediit, nihil comedens, says Charles Stephens, i. e. He return'd from his Athenian Embassy to his Countrymen the Hyperboreans, without eating any thing. Moreri says, that Returning from Greece into Scythia, he eat nothing during that long Journey. This however is more excusable than the Rashness of the former, in saying, That we have still extant the Oracles of Abaris. This is to copy after another without Judgment, and without considering, that since that was asserted, those Oracles have been lost. We shall elsewhere (56) pass a general Reflexion upon the Blunders that arise from this Principle.

(47) Scalig. Not. in Euseb. n. 1144.

(48) De Errore Prof. Relig.

(49) In Equit.

(50) Valesii not. in notas Mauss. in Harpocrat. p. 83.

(51) In Timæum Platonis p. 141.

(52) Compare Jamblichus's Words, as above, cap. 19. p. 92.

(53) Jambl. Ibid.

(54) Plutarch. quomodo audiendi Poet. init.

(55) See the Remark [D], towards the End.

[G] Foretel Earthquakes.] Porphyry (57) ascribes this Power to Pythagoras, as also that of chasing away Pestilences, of stopping Hail, laying Storms, and appeasing of Tempests by Sea, and on Rivers, that his Friends might have a prosperous Passage. He adds, That Empedocles, Epimenides, and Abaris, having learn'd this Secret from Pythagoras, put it in practice upon several Occasions; πολλαχῇ ἐπιτετελεκέναι τοιαῦτα. A modern Author, having related (58), that Pherecydes,

(56) In the Remark on the Article BALBUS (Iohn) at the End.

(57) In vita Pythag.

(58) La Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 11. p. 127.

Digitized by Google

in Lacedemon, of so great Efficacy (b), that That Country, which was very subject to the Plague, was never troubled with it afterwards. He composed a great many Books (i); such as, The Arrival of Apollo among the Hyperboreans; The Marriage of the River Hebrus; a Theogony, wherein he explain'd the Pedigree of the Gods; A Collection of Oracles, and another of Conjurations, or Exorcisms, or, if you please (k), of Expiatory Prayers. All these Pieces were written in Prose, except the first. If we had the whole Speech of Himerius the Sophist, of which Photius (l) has preserv'd a Part, we could better tell, than by that Fragment, whether the great Encomiums, bestow'd by that Sophist on a certain Person, belong to Abaris or not. 'Tis, at least, past all Dispute, that he (m) praises him for his speaking good Greek. Others (n) assert, That his affable Behaviour, and plain Dealing, together with his Probity, recommended him to all Greece. I do not find, that Callimachus and Lucian, make any mention of him, though a certain great Critic (o) assures us they did. Had his Arrow been endued with the Virtue attributed to the Wand of James Aymar [H], he might have been very beneficial to the World, without fearing the Reflexion cast upon him by Origen (p), of being useless in his Generation. But we have (q) since been inform'd, that the Credit of this Wonderwor-king Wand was but short-liv'd [I], and that it met with it's fatal Doom at the Prince of Condé's Palace.

(b) Jamblich. as above, c. 19. p. 93. & cap. 28. p. 131. Apollonius also, as above.

(i) Suidas on the Word Ἄβαρις.

(k) The Greek Word in Suidas, is καθαρμός.

(l) Photii Bibl. p. 113.

(m) See the Remark [C], towards the End.

(n) Strabo, lib. 7. pag. 208.

(o) Casaubon's Notes upon Strabo, lib. 7. p. 113.

(p) Origen l. 3. against Celsus, pag. 129.

(q) This was written in the Year 1693.

ABARIS, a City of Egypt. See the Article PITHOM.

(50) He cites Diog. Laert. in Pherecyd. Cicero. 1. de Divin.

(60) Concerning Abaris, he cites Apollonius, surnamed Dyscolus, cap. 5. the same whom we have quoted above.

(61) See the Remark [B].

Pherecydes, the Master of Pythagoras (59), and Anaximander, and Abaris (60), foretold Earthquakes, propose this pleasant Question; What, says he, did they look upon the Earth as a huge Animal, and were they arriv'd at so great a Skill as to know, by feeling her Pulse, when the trembling Fit was coming upon her? Now whether the Arrow of Abaris was the Instrument with which he perform'd so many Miracles, or whether it contributed nothing thereto, it is certain that his Travels might be of great Use to Mankind. See the next Remark.

[H] Attributed to the Wand of (61) James Aymar.] Never did any thing make so great Noise, or occasion the writing of so many Books. I have understood since, that those who promis'd themselves so many Advantages, and so great a Victory over the Incredulous, found themselves greatly disappointed in their Expectations. The single History of this whole Matter might well deserve a particular Article; and perhaps I shall give you some Hints of it under the Word Rabdomancy, or upon some other Occasion. But be that as it will, I shall not recant what I advance concerning the Usefulness of this Wand. Being in the Hands of so great a Traveller as Abaris, it would reform the Manners of Mankind more effectually, than all the Missionaries and Preachers in the World. For should such a Man return upon the Stage of the World, Jealousy, that Plague of a married Life, would soon be banish'd all human Society: Neither the Italians, nor the eastern Nations, would have then occasion to set Guards over their Wives, or watch them with Argus's Eyes themselves; each Man would trust to their Honesty, and they would need no other Test, than this Wand: And the Men would not only be free from an anxious Care (62), which is too often their Ruin, but would find themselves obliged to preserve their Conjugal Fidelity, when the Reputation of it was become so necessary to them. The Appearance of a Court of Justice would strike less Terror into the Souls of Criminals, than the Arrival of an Abaris. The greatest Number of Offences, the most dangerous Sins, such I mean as are committed with the Hopes of Secrecy, would be entirely suppress'd, by thinking on the Wand; and then we might with Horace truly say:

(62) Pareq; graves in Cœl be vita, Et gravior cautis custodia vana maritis. Auf. Idyll. 1. Painful the Cares, even of a single State, More racking those which do on Wedlock wait.

(63) Horace, Ode 5. B. 2.

(63) Tutus bos etenim rura perambulat,
Nutrit rura Ceres, almaque faustitas.
\- - - - -
Culpari metuit fides,
Nullis polluitur casta domus stupris.
\- - - - -
Laudantur simili prole puerperæ.

Secure in Pastures roams the wanton Steer,
And smiling Plenty crowns the fruitful Year.
Unsully'd Faith in every Bosom reigns,
And the chast Marriage-bed inviolate remains.
Trac'd in the Child, the honest Sire is shown,
And all his Father's Virtues are his own.

I own it is not easy to conceive, that the Devil, the profess'd Enemy of Mankind, should make choice of such Laws of Intercourse with Men, which is not considered by those, who will not allow us either to call in question the Virtues of the Wand, or attempt to explain them mechanically.

[I] The Credit of this wonder-working Wand was but short liv'd.] It scarce lasted so long at Paris, as the Time of composing and printing one single Article of this Dictionary. The Prince of Condé, whose Discernment, if we consider his Education, must necessarily be fatal to all Impostors, and their credulous Followers, has pull'd down the Trophies set up by the Partizans of James Aymar. This poor Wretch was so unsuccessful in the Trials (64) he made of his Art in the Palace of Condé, that his Reputation was ruin'd for ever. The Public was made acquainted with the whole Affair, and there was no room to suspect the Truth, since it was by Order of that great Prince, that the World was inform'd of the Cheat. Nor indeed do they pretend any such Thing; they only endeavour to account for the Miscarriages of the Wand, as I shall observe by and by. They who assert, that the Favourers of these Jugglers ill-tim'd the Matter, and that, in such a Philosophical Age as this, such Artists are not to be impos'd upon the World, have, in some Respects, Reason on their Side; but, all Things consider'd, they do not argue right. There are, I allow, many more private Men, at present, than formerly, who are able to oppose the Stream, and combat Error: But then I must answer; that our Age is as easy to be impos'd upon, as any whatsoever; and, after what we have seen concerning an Explication of the Apocalypse, we have no Reason to say, the World is grown wiser now a-days. It is the same it ever was: Every Delusion, which flatters it's Passions, is pleasing; it is not asham'd of being convinc'd it was impos'd upon; nor has it, upon that Account, the less Respect for the Impostor; and cries out, as much as ever, against the Incredulity of those, who will not suffer themselves to be deceiv'd. Hear what one of our Journalists tells us in Confirmation of this Matter: "The (65) Testimony of a great Prince, and the "Letter of one of the principal Magistrates, are such "strong Proofs against James Aymar, as none of those "who give credit to the pretended Effects of the "Wand, dare to contradict. But so foolish are those "credulous Creatures, that hardly one of them will "submit to this Evidence. Mr Vallemont, who "has lately publish'd a Tract, concerning the secret "Philosophy of the divining Wand, goes about to "explain how the Peasant of Dauphiné might be mi-"staken in the Trials of his Skill before that Prince, "though he had really the Power and Gifts, of which "he boasted. This sort of Philosophers, as well as "the Explainers of Prophecies, (for both of them "are of the same Stamp) are a kind of Enthusiasts, "who will never own themselves to have been in "the wrong; and who, though they are convinc'd "of the Falsity of what they have advanc'd, treat, "as Persons of a dull Imagination, those Men of "Sense, who reject their Chimæras."

(64) See the Historical Letters, and the Political Mercury for the Month of May, 1693.

(65) Ibid. p. 565.

SINCE the Impression of what I have said, three or four Years have elaps'd without the least mention of James Aymar: Our Journalists had quite lost sight of him, and gave him over for lost. But at last they brought him again upon their Stage, in the Month of April,

Digitized by Google

April, 1697. and that to make him act a very comical Part, which would be of singular Use, were the Story they tell of it true. " Some time ago, say " they (66), the Prior of the Charter-house of Villeneuve in Avignon, travell'd through Orange with " James Aymar, by whose Assistance he pretended " to discover several Boundaries of Land that were " lost: But by chance he was made use of upon another Occasion. Three Days before, a Child was " laid at the Gate of the Convent of the Capuchins: " The Rector of the Hospital desired James Aymar to discover the Person who did it. To this " he readily consented, came to the Capuchins Gate, " where the Child had been laid, and in the View " of a great Multitude, took the Way which the Motion of his Wand directed him to, and went directly " to a Village of the County of Venaissin, nam'd Camaret, and from thence into a Farm-house, which, " he said positively, was the Place where the Child " was born. I forgot to tell you, that in the Way he " met with a Man on Horseback, and that by the " Motion of his Wand, he discover'd that he was the " Father of the Foundling. The Judge of the Place, " either of his own Accord, or at the Solicitation of " some Persons concern'd, desired James Aymar, and " those who set him to work, to make no farther Enquiry, and that he would cause the Child to be taken Home again; which was accordingly done" Upon this Narration, give me leave to make three Remarks. In the first Place, we are not certain of the Truth of this Story: for how many Men take pleasure to invent Romances, and get them inserted in the public Papers? They send them to an Author without subscribing their Name; they lay the Scene at some distance; and besides, they know that there are but few, who will give themselves the Trouble of being better informed. My second Remark is, that, though all that is related in the Historical Mercury were true, yet this will not silence the Incredulous. James Aymar, they will say, knew which Way he was to go; a false Brother, among those who knew the Intrigue of the Lying-in, was impatient to give the Alarm, and to furnish Matter for Conversation. However, he was a particular Exception to that general Proverb, A Prophet has no Honour in his own Country. That Disgrace which he met with in the Metropolis of the Kingdom, that Train, I say, of ill Success, of which Mr Buissiere (67) has publish'd an exact Account, was not able to spoil his Credit in his own Province. In the third Place, I observe, That this Property of the Wand would be of vast Advantage to the World: It would ease the Public of the Funds it is forced to establish for the Maintenance of Foundlings; for it would discover those who are their Parents, and force them to maintain them themselves. Besides, it would enhance the Fear of the evil Consequences; which Dread is such a Restraint upon Incontinence, that, without it, there would be more frequent, and more scandalous Acts of Uncleanness committed. The Female Sex, more commonly aw'd with this Fear than Men are, would be more cautious of their Chastity. To chuse out a private Cottage for Lying-in, to send for a Midwife, with her Eyes blinded, and by a round-about Way; to order the Child to be laid in the Streets in the dead of the Night; these and all the other Precautions, would signify nothing, in case the Wand had the Virtue they talk of. It would point out the Way to the very Chamber of the Lying-in-Woman, better than a Hound follows the Scent of the Hare to her Form. It would put an end to all the false Oaths that are taken (68) by those who are not willing to be at the Charge of keeping a Bastard, since the Mother would oblige them to it, by appearing, without Shame, before a Magistrate, for that very Purpose.

As nothing is so proper to undeceive the Credulous, as to shew that James Aymar himself confess'd this Cheat, I shall give the most convincing Evidence of it ‖. I have a Proof more positive than the Testimony of Mr Robert, the King's Attorney, at the Chatelet of Paris. The Letter (69) which he writ to Father Chevigny, Assistant to the Father General of the Oratory, contains only some of the bad Successes of the Wand; and afterwards these Words: " I " have heard say, that this Wand has not been more " successful in several Experiments made at Versailles, " and Chantilly; and that he had been convicted of " Falshood, and had confess'd it: But I know this by " common Report only; not thinking myself obliged " to take any Trouble in such a trifling Affair, " which shews how ready men are to believe Things, " which are new, and appear so extraordinary." The following is a clearer and fuller Proof of the Cheat. Mr Buissiere did me the Honour to write to me, That Mr Dodard, and Mr Sauveur, Members of the Academy of Sciences, had desired him to print a second Edition of his Letter, and to put his Name to it; which he promis'd to do, by Order of the Prince of Condé, who was desirous to undeceive the Partizans of the Wand: To which he will add an Account of the Search (70) which James Aymar made after those who murder'd a Patroler, in St Dennis-street; and that the Favourers of the Wand may be entirely undeceived, he will add also the Confession which James Aymar made to the Prince of Condé, That he knew nothing of all that had been attributed to him; and that what he had hitherto done, was to gain a Livelihood. This sincere Confession procured him a Present of 30 Louis-d'ors from his Serene Highness, that he might retire, as soon as possible, to his own Village; because, being no longer under his Protection, the People, whom he had falsely accused, would stop him. Mr Robert told me, (these are Mr Buissiere's Words) That if he had been put into his Hands to be punish'd, he would have caused him to be condemned to the Gallies, the Proof being beyond Contradiction. The same Letter informs me, That a Boy of 14 Years of Age, who had been instructed for that Purpose, had already impos'd upon a great many People; but as it was too soon after Aymar's Tricks, he found People on their Guard. The little Boy fail'd in his Art, to the Confusion of the Gentleman who had produced him. Mr Buissiere was appointed to examine him, and found him very cunning for his Age. They shut him up several Days without any Communication with the Gentleman: A little Money, with some Promises to settle him, and some Threats, made him confess all. This Letter of Mr Buissiere's is dated from Paris, the 25th of July, 1698. We will add to this an Extract of a Letter from Mr Leibnitz, which the Author, permitted to be publish'd in Mr Tenzelius's Journal, in the Year 1694, with (71) that of Mr Robert. He assures us, This he heard the Dutchess of Hanover, Sister-in-law to the Prince of Condé, say, she had discover'd in her House at Paris, the Impostures of James Aymar; and that she was of the same Opinion with the Prince, That 'twas better publickly to expose the Falshood of these Pretences, than to conceal them, with a view that the Belief of the Divining Wand might fright a great many Rogues, and procure the Restitution of stollen Goods. She declared that James Aymar at last confessed the Fact; that he asked pardon, and excused himself by saying, That his Impudence had contributed less to his Success, than the Credulity of others (72). " Is (Princeps Condæus) " Aimarum Lugduno accersiverat indaginis causa: " excussum multis modis homuncionem & deprehensum, tandem ad confessionem fraudis adegit; quam " sibi ignosci petiit supplex, & graviora metuens, cau- " satus non tam propria audacia, quam alienâ credu- " litate hominum falli volentium, & velut obtruden- " tium sibi, quæ alioqui non jactare ausus fuisset, sese " in hæc impulsum eo tandem perveniisse, unde pe- " dem commodè non potuerit referre. Facile con- " donavit homini magnanimus Princeps; sed erant, " qui suaderint dissimulari comperta, & conservari fa- " mam hominis vel artis, utili dolo, quod constaret, " furibus aliisque malis hominibus magnum metum " fuisse injectum, & ob famam adventantis alicubi re- " rum furtivarum pretia fuisse relata. Sed Ducissæ pa- " riter nostræ ac Principis egregii sententia fuit, po- " tiorem habendam rationem veritatis. He (the Prince " of Condé) sent for Aymar to Leyden, in order to " examine him: at length, after sifting and detecting the Fellow several ways, he forc'd him to " confess the Cheat; which, thro' Fear of worse Con- " sequences, he begg'd pardon for on his Knees; and " excus'd himself, by alledging, that it was not so " much his own Impudence, as the Credulity of Peo- " ple, who were willing to be deceived, and who as it " were forc'd that Art upon him, which otherwise " he would not have dared to boast of, that drove " him to carry on the Cheat so far that he could not " conveniently retreat. The Generous Prince pardon'd " the Man: but there were some, who persuaded him " to stifle the Discovery, and to keep up the Credit of " the Fellow, or his Art, as being of Service to the " Publick; it being certain, that Theives, and other " ill-designing Men, stood greatly in Fear of him, " and

(66) Historical and Political Mercury of April 1697, pag. 440, 441.

(67) Mr Buissiere, Apothecary to the Prince of Condé, is the Author of a Book, entituled, A Letter to Mr l'Abbé, D. L. concerning the real Effects of James Aymar's Wand, by P. B. Paris, printed for Louis Lucas, 1694.

(68) The Story imports, That James Aymar knew the Man on Horseback to be the Child's Father.

‖ The Confession which James Aymar made of his Cheat. Reflexions on it.

(69) It was printed with that of Mr Buissiere, quoted above.

(70) Mr Robert speaks of it in his Letter.

(71) Mr Pasch, at the 278*th Page of the Work cited below, calls the Father, to whom the Letter was sent,* Chevigni. 'Tis plainly a Fault in the printing for Chevigni.

(72) Leibnitius apud Tenzelii Colloq. mensir. ann. 1691. I quote it here as I find it in a Book of Mr Pasch, a learned Professor of Philosophy at Kiel. de Inventis Novantiquis, p. 779. Edit. 1700.

Digitized by Google

" and that the Value of ſtolen Goods had in ſome Pla-
" ces been reſtored, upon the News of his Arrival.
" But our Ducheſs, and this excellent Prince, were " both of Opinion, that Truth was preferably to be " regarded." Mr Leibnitz has joined to this a Remark worthy of himſelf; That it had been better to have examined, how ſo many Perſons of Merit could be deceived at Lyons, than to endeavour to find out the Natural Cauſes of the pretended Virtue of this Wand: (73) " Et ſcripſi nuper Pariſios utilius & exa" mine dignius mihi videri problema, morale vel lo-
" gicum, quomodo tot viri inſignes Lugduni in frau-
" dem ducti ſuerint, quam illud pſeudophyſicum, quod
" tractaverat Vallemontius, meliori materia dignus?
" Quomodo virga corylacea tot miracula operetur?
" Nam moralis illa quæſtio, excuſſa pro dignitate, mul-
" torum errorum popularium origines ſæpe ſpecioſas
" aperiret. I gave my Opinion lately, in a Letter to
" Paris, that it was a Problem, whether Moral or
" Logical, of more Uſe, and more worthy Examina-
" tion, why ſo many celebrated Perſons at Leyden
" were impos'd upon, than that falſe point of Natural
" Philoſophy, which Vallemontius (worthy of a nobler
" Subject) undertook to diſcuſs, viz. whence it was,
" that an Hazel Wand could perform ſuch Wonders.
" For the juſt and proper Diſcuſſion of this Moral Que-
" ſtion would unfold the Spring, how ſpecious ſoever,
" of many popular Errors." I fancy, that if the Magiſtrates of Lyons, who cauſed the Murderer to be hanged, whom James Aymar diſcovered at Beaucaire, had threaten'd to burn the Diſcoverer alive, as a wicked Magician; and had cauſed the Executioner to be preſent with all the Inſtruments of the Rack, they would have made him confeſs how he had learnt the Secret of the Aſſaſſination, and how he could find at Beaucaire, in ſuch and ſuch a place, one of the Aſſaſſins. 'Tis very probable, that thoſe Perſons, who had a mind to bring him into Reputation, that they might ſhare the Profit with him, cauſed him to play this part. Mr Buiſſiere takes notice in his printed Relation (74), That this Man had a Club of People, who cry'd him up all over Paris; and who publiſh'd in the Mercuré Gallant for February, 1693. that he had diſcover'd ſuch and ſuch a thing; than which nothing was more falſe. The Preposſeſſion was ſo great, that he would have got vaſt Sums, if he could but have maintain'd his Credit. You may judge whether his Partizans had not very good Reaſons to ſecond him. " (75) There never was an Impoſture more credited
" than this; they were ſo prejudiced in favour of this " Perſon, that they made him do things which he " never thought of, and found out Reaſons to ex-
" cuſe him when he did not ſucceed. He impos'd
" on them by the appearance of a ſimple and ruſtic
" Air, and ſpeaking only the Gibberiſh of his Coun" try; but he was at the bottom nothing leſs than " what he appeared to be: The Motion of his Wand
" was the Cauſe of the Illuſion. They ſaw the fork'd
" Stick turn ſo dexterouſly in his Hand, that they " did not perceive the inſenſible Motion of his Wriſt,
" which determined it to turn forcibly and quick,
" by the Spring which he gave to his Wand. Beſides
" his apparent natural Plainneſs, he affected to be " devout, went often to Confeſſion, every Day to " Maſs, and ſhew'd other external Tokens of a great
" Senſe of Religion; and ſaid, That he had very care" fully preſerved his Virginity, without which, as he
" ſaid, he could not ſucceed with his Wand. He " would not walk in the Streets in the day-time, for " fear, as he ſaid, of being murder'd by Thieves
" and Pick-pockets. But all this was only becauſe
" the Night ſerv'd better for his Tricks. However " ridiculous he was, yet he did not want Admirers,
" and conſequently People to cry him up: and if they " had not taken care to prevent his going out of Con-
" dé-Houſe, becauſe the Prince, who had ſent for him
" to Paris to ſatisfy his Curioſity, would have him
" try ſome things, which he had thought of, before he " was publickly ſet on work, he had been over-run
" by thoſe who came in Crowds to conſult him.
" Some wanted to know whether he could not diſco-
" ver the Thieves who were guilty of ſuch a Robbery,
" at ſuch a time, and ſuch a place, &c. Others want" ed to know, whether ſuch a Saint was not the true
" one, rather than that of another Pariſh, which pre-
" tended to be in poſſeſſion of him likewiſe. Others
" brought Relicks to him, to know whether they " really belong'd to ſuch a Saint. Nay, I my ſelf
" ſaw a young Silk-Weaver, who was contracted,
" give him two Crowns to know whether the Wo" man he was contracted to had her Maidenhead or " no. Thoſe, who ſhared the Profit, took care to " bring Griſt to the Mill; and oblig'd Perſons to " pay the Money before-hand, if they had a mind to
" ſucceed in their Enquiries."

Such a Man at Paris would have been a certain Source of Gain, and an inexhauſtible Mine to thoſe who were to ſhare in the Profit. Both ſuſpecting, and ſuſpected, Perſons would have ſtrove who ſhould pay him beſt. He would have ſqueez'd Money out of both Husbands and their Wives, Gallants and their Miſtreſſes: The Wand would have mov'd, or not mov'd, according as he was beſt paid, by one or t'other. I believe that if we could diſcover the Myſteries of theſe ſorts of pretended Prodigies, we ſhould find it to be a Combination of People in order to get Money: One boaſts of an extraordinary Talent; and others endeavour underhand to eſtabliſh the Belief of it. But I believe there are ſome Cheats, who have no need of Emiſſaries; the Credulity of the Publick is a ſufficient Preparation for their acting the Impoſture. 'Tis not long, ſince there went over the Towns of Holland a ſort of Germans, who pretended to cure all Diſtempers without any Remedies. The Patients need only, ſaid they, ſend us their Urine. Their Succeſs was the ſubject of the common Talk; every Body related ſome wonderful Circumſtances; their Lodgings, like the Pool of Bethesda, were crowded with infirm Perſons. I don't believe that thoſe who cried up the Art of thoſe Quacks were Sharers in the Profit: Some pleaſed themſelves in recommending the thing, becauſe it look'd like a Prodigy; others might find ſomething agreeable in it, becauſe the want of Effect of the common Medicines put them out of Humour with their Phyſicians. The Cheat did not laſt long; a Month or two ſet all things to rights. This (76) Impoſture was detected, and there were ſo many People undeceived, that their Approbation was changed into the utmoſt Contempt.

We muſt obſerve that Mr Leibnitz takes notice, with a great deal of Reaſon, (77) That if the Prince of Condé had not diſcovered the Impoſture, no Argument could have prevailed to this very Day with thoſe credulous People. But it is to be feared, that James Aymar's Cheats will be ſoon forgotten; and that People would be pleas'd with the ſame Farce again, if the ſame Motives ſhould revive it ſeven or eight Years hence. " Niſi Princeps Condæus cognoſcendæ rei
" tantum ſtudii, imò & ſumptus, impendiſſet, labora-
" remus adhuc & conflictaremur cum quibuſdam in-
" geniis, quibus gratius eſt per mira falli, quam nudæ
" veritatis ſimplicitati acquieſcere.—— Had not the " Prince of Condé been at great pains and even ex-
" pence, in the Enquiry, we might have ſtill conteſted
" the matter with certain Tempers, which are better
" pleas'd to be deceiv'd by ſomething wonderful, than
" to acquieſce in plain, ſimple, Truth."

(73) Id. ibid.

(74) Letter concerning the real Effects of the Wand, pag. 13, 14.

(75) Mr Buiſſiere's Letter to me, July 25. 1698.

(76) Mr Luneu a very ingenious Phyſician of Rotterdam publiſhed a ſmall Treatiſe in Dutch and French, to ſhew the Vanity and Ridiculouſneſs of this Practice. See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, by Mr Banage, May 1697. p. 408, &c. And the Paris Journal of Jan. 13. 1698. p. 30. of the Dutch Edit.

(77) Leibnitz ubi ſupra.

ABBEVILLE, in Latin Abbatis-villa, the Capital City of the Dutchy of Ponthieu in Picardy, on the River Somme, five Leagues from the Sea, in the Dioceſe of Amiens, was formerly, as the Word imports, no more than a Country-Seat belonging to an Abbot. 'Tis ſuppos'd, that this Abbot was St Riquier, or one of his Succeſſors, who, perceiving the Situation to be very pleaſant and commodious, two Leagues from his Abbey of Centula, caus'd firſt of all an Houſe (a) to be built there, and then a Caſtle, where was a Priory (b) dependant upon the Abbey. Hugh Capet, willing to make a ſtrong Place of it, in order to ſtop the Incurſions of the Barbarians, took it away from the Monks (c); and when he had fortified it, gave it to Hugh his Son-in-law, who took upon him the Title of Protector, becauſe the King his Father-in-law had committed to him the Protection of the Church of St Riquier. His

(a) Father L'Abbé in his Methodical Tables of Royal Geography, p. 322. Edit. 12mo.

(b) Sirmond. Notæ in Epiſt. 36 Alexandri III.

(c) Hariulfus a Monk of Centula, in the Chronicle of his Monaſtery, l. 4. c. 12. apud Hadr. Valeſ. Notit. Gall. p. 1.

Digitized by Google

His Son Angelram was satisfied with this Title, 'till such time as he had killed (d) in Battle the Count of Boulogne, and married his Widow; for then he took upon him the Title of Count of Ponthieu, which has been continued to his Successors. In process of time Abbeville became very considerable. It is at present so large, that there are scarce ten or twelve Cities in all France which surpass it, or which so much as equal it in Circumference. (e) Sanson, whose Words I just now cited, in his Computation made in the Year 1636, tells us, that it contained thirty five or forty thousand Souls. It was his native Country; and 'tis remarkable, that in a short time it produced three skilful Geographers, Himself, Peter (f) Duval, and Father Phillip Briet the Jesuit. The River Somme divides itself here into several Branches, which run partly within, and partly without the City. Father L'Abbé is not of Sanson's Opinion, who maintains, (g) that Abbeville was always the Capital of Ponthieu [A]; and that the other Cities of that Country were not in comparison near so antient as That [B]. Much less will he allow, what Sanson pretends, viz. That this City was formerly called Britannia [C]; and that it was one of the most flourishing Cities of all Gaul, long before Jesus Christ. We shall, in it's due Place, take notice of the whole Contest, which Father L'Abbé [D] had with him on this Subject. Abbeville is endowed with excellent Privileges;

(d) Id. Valesius ib.

(e) Sanson's Enquiry into the Antiquity of Abbeville, p. 2.

(f) The Son of one of Sanson's Sisters.

(g) Id. p. 59, 60.

[A] Was always the Capital of Ponthieu.] Father L'Abbé (1) refutes him as to that particular in these Words, "You have not read, Sir, the Titles and "Memoirs of the Abbey of St Riquier, which inform "us, that under Lewis le Debonnaire, in the Year 815, "there were, within the Walls of Centula, Two "thousand five hundred Houses, several Artificers, "a great many Streets, &c. That Abbeville is reckon'd among the Towns and Villages which de"pended upon it." If any Credit may be given to the Verse that is commonly repeated in that Country;

Turribus à centum Centula nomen habet.

The hundred Towers with which the Walls of Centula were flank'd, occasioned it's Name (2).

(1) L'Abbé, Tabl. Method. p. 320. Edit. 12mo.

(2) Id. ib. p. 316, 317.

[B] Were not in comparison near so antient as That.] "This is (3) false," say the Inhabitants of S. Riquier" "What have you in Abbeville that carries any Marks "of Antiquity? since your Collegiate Church of St "Wulfran owes it's Foundation to William de Tabluas and John his Son, Eleven hundred Years after "Christ; and the Priory of St Peter of the Order of "St Benedict, was founded but a few Years before: "for as to the Parish Church of Notre-Dame du Chatel, it only looks like a country Church." As to Fredegarius, whom Sanson has cited as his Voucher for the Existence of Abbeville in the Time of the Mayor Ebroinus; to this 'tis replied (4), That we ought to read in the Ninety sixth Chapter, not, atque Abacivo villa evadens aufugit, but atque à Bacivo villâ evadens aufugit.

(3) Id. ib. p. 320.

(4) Id. ib. p. 321.

[C] That this City was formerly called Britannia.] He grounds this Opinion on a Passage of Strabo, where he fancies 'tis said (5), "That the Deputies of Marseilles "appearing before Scipio, and being ask'd by him, "what they knew of Britannia, Narbo, and Carbilo, "not one of them could say any thing in Commen"dation of them, though they were the best Towns "in all Gaul." He supposes that it was in the Year of Rome 532. that the Deputies of Marseilles shew'd themselves so grossly ignorant. His Reason for it, is, that he, who propos'd those Questions, was the same Scipio, who lost the first Battle, which Hannibal gain'd over the Romans. He supposes that this Scipio, willing to get Intelligence of Hannibal's March, sail'd to the Mouth of the Rhosne; and that there the Deputies of Marseilles, who came to compliment him, could make no Reply to his Questions. This we shall enquire into farther, under the Article of Pytheas. Let us at present proceed to the other Hypotheses of Sanson. He observes, I. That the City of Narbonne was one of the most antient, and most flourishing Cities of Gaul; and (6) yet it is not nam'd 'till after that of Britannia, among the Three, of which Scipio desired to be inform'd. II. That the Belgium, in the Commentaries of Julius Cæsar, was a Region (7) among the Belgæ, which comprehended the Beauvaisis, the Amienois, the Artois, and perhaps also the Vermendois, and the Senlisians. III. That the Inhabitants of the Coasts of Great-Britain, came from (8) Belgium, and retain'd the Names of the Cities, from whence they came; as Cæsar informs us. IV. That, according to Pliny's (9) Calculation, the People, whom he stiles Britanni, must have been Inhabitants (10) of Ponthieu. V. That of all the Parts of Belgium, from whence People went over into England, there is none that ought to come into the Account, so much as that which is situated by the Sea-side; that is, the Country of Ponthieu: From all this he infers (11), That the Britanni of Pliny are the chief Inhabitants of Belgium, who went over into England; and that at first they retained their antient Name, and at last render'd it universal over the whole Country; and that they would not have called themselves Britanni, had not their Capital City been Britannia: It follows then, that the Capital of Ponthieu was the antient Britannia of which Scipio desir'd to be inform'd; now Abbeville is the Capital of Ponthieu: It went therefore under the Name of Britannia, the most flourishing City of the Gauls, even before the Second Punick War.

(5) Sanson's Enquiry into the Antiquity of Abbeville, p. 4.

(6) Ib. p. 8.

(7) Ib. p. 39.

(8) Ib. p. 17, 40.

(9) Lib. 4. cap. 17.

(10) Ib. p. 46.

(11) Cluver. in Germania Ant. l. 2. c. 27. chuser rather to read Brianni than Britanni.

Doubtless there is Learning and Genius in this long Train of Suppositions and Consequences, considering the Manner wherein the Author has manag'd it; But, after all, 'tis a meer Romance, an airy Phantom, founded on a Passage not duly understood. The Matter of Fact is this; Strabo (12) tells us, that Polybius has inserted among the fabulous Stories of Pytheas, "That none of the Inhabitants of Marseilles, "who had an Interview with Scipio, could say any "thing considerable, when he questioned them about "Britain, no more than any of the Inhabitants of "Narbonne, or of Corbilo, the two best Cities of "the Country." This is the true meaning of the Greek Text, as may be collected not only from the Rules of Grammar, but also from the Humour of the Stroller here mentioned; περὶ ἧς εἴρηκε Πολύβιος, μνησθεὶς τῶν ὑπὸ Πυθέᾳ μυθολογηθέντων, ὅτι Μασσαλιωτῶν τῶν συμμιξάντων Σκηπίωνι φάσκοντος εἶχε λέγειν φάσκειν μνήμης ἄξιον ἐρωτηθεὶς ὑπὸ τοῦ Σκηπίωνος ὑπὲρ τῆς Βρεττανικῆς μὲν τῶν ἐκ Ναρβῶνος, μὲν τῶν ἐκ Κορβηλλῶνος, αἵπερ ἦσαν ἄριστοι πόλεις τῶν τοιούτων (13). This Fellow, to put the better Gloss upon his romantic Stuff and Rhodomontades, used to brag, That he would inform his Readers of a thousand things, of which they never had heard before. No question then but he boldly gave out, that his Relation of Britain presented us with the first and earliest Account of that Island; and that, to prove it, he made use of this Argument; viz. That Scipio could learn nothing about it from the Inhabitants of Marseilles, nor from those of Narbonne, nor from those of Corbilo upon the Loire; though these were the most flourishing Cities of Gaul. Every one may see how Sanson has mistaken the Words of the antient Geographer, to which no question the Latin Version has not a little contributed: Cujus (Corbilonis) mentionem faciens Polybius simul Pytheæ refert commentum, Massilienſium scilicet, qui Scipionem convenerunt, nullum quicquam habuisse dignum memoratu quod diceret, interrogatus de Britannia, itemq; Narbonenſium & Corbilonenſium, cum hæ tres urbes Galliæ omnium essent optimæ. One might be apt to imagine, at first Sight, that the three chief Cities of Gaul, mentioned by the Translator, are call'd Britannia, Narbo, & Corbilo; but upon due Attention, we shall perceive that Βρεττανικὴ is here taken for the Island Britannia: And thus Strabo (14) is us'd to express himself, without the Addition of the Word Νήσος, Insula.

(12) Strabo, l. 4. p. 190.

(13) Id. ib.

(14) See among other Places, l. 1. p. 71.

[D] The Contest which Father L'Abbé had with him on this Subject.] He made his Declaration of War,

Digitized by Google

Privileges; and as it has never been taken, (b) it is ſtiled, The Virgin of the Country, and has for it's Motto, ſemper fidelis, always faithful. Whoever would be acquainted more at large with what relates to this City, the Privileges of it's Mayors, the famous Men who have been born or died there (i), &c. may conſult the genealogical Hiſtory of the Counts of Ponthieu, printed at Paris, by Francis Clouſier, 1657. in Folio. The Author only tells us his Name by theſe initial Letters, F. I. D. J. M. C. D. But 'tis eaſy to perceive that they mean Frere Ignace de Jeſus-Maria, Carme dechauſſé, i. e. Brother Ignatius de Jeſus-Maria, A barefooted Carmelite. See the Article SANSON (James).

(b) Du Val in his Treatiſe of France p. 70.

(i) 'Tis with great Reaſon that I have here added an Etcætera, for the Book is full of foreign Matters: Therein is to be found Bayard the Knight, and ſeveral other Perſons who have no manner of Relation to Ponthieu.

War, and his firſt Act of Hoſtility, in theſe Words: "Brittanniam Abbavillæus Chalcographus interpretatur Abbeville, lepidiſſimo commento, quod non tam ex Pytheæ mendaciis, quam ex ignoratione linguæ Græcæ editum malignam in lucem demonſtrabimus alias, cum primum ſingularem illum de Britannia tractatum nanciſci & legere datum fuerit. The Abbavillæan Chalcographer (ſo he ſtiles Sanſon) interprets Brittannia to mean Abbeville, upon a pleaſant Hypotheſis enough, which we ſhall ſhow in another place to be unfortunately built, not ſo much upon Pytheas's lying Accounts, as upon an Ignorance of the Greek Tongue, when it ſhall be in our Powers to procure and read over the remarkable Treatiſe De Britannia." Thus he expreſs'd himſelf in his Pharus Galliæ antiquæ, printed at Moulins 1644. He had not as yet read the Book, which Sanſon publiſh'd on this Subject at Paris, 1636. He had only ſeen the new Appearance of Brittannia, not in the large Map of antient Gaul, publiſhed by Sanſon in the Year 1627, but in a ſmall Chart publiſh'd ſince. Having at laſt peruſed the Book, he refuted the Principles upon which 'tis founded, Ann. 1646, in the Methodical Tables of the Royal Geogoaphy; and did not forget to obſerve, that, according to the Senſe, which the Sieur Sanſon gives to Strabo's Text, it muſt be ſaid, that the Inhabitants of Marſeilles were wholly ignorant with reſpect to the City of Narbonne, Ann. U. C. 532. though Marſeilles had then been built about 400 Years, and Narbonne was a very flouriſhing City. Sanſon was ſenſible of the Difficulty, and guarded againſt it as well as he could (15). But who can imagine that the Marſillians, becauſe they had frequent Wars with their Neighbours, had not Time to know what Narbonne was? The Paſſage of Juſtin (16), which Sanſon relates, informs us, that before the Year of Rome 362, they had often conquered the Carthaginians, and entered into Alliance with the Spaniards. Father L'Abbé was not much the better for his Triumph; for Sanſon made the ſame Inſults over him in his Turn, which almoſt ruin'd the Pharus Galliæ antiquæ. Note, That with reſpect to his Hypotheſis concerning Brittannia, he wrote a Reply (17) which was never printed.

(15) Sanſon as before, p. 76, &c.

(16) Juſtin. l. 43. c. 5, 6.

(17) See the Remark [A] of the Article Pytheas. towards the End.

ABBOT (a) (GEORGE) Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Author of ſeveral Books [A], was the Son of a Cloth-Worker, and born at Guilford, in the County of Surry, in 1562. He ſtudied at Oxford, and in the Year 1597 was made Maſter of Univerſity-College. Two Years after, he was advanced to the Deanery of Winchester, which he held 'till the Year 1609, when he ſucceeded Thomas Morton in the Deanery of Glouceſter. Hitherto his Advancement was not very ſhining, nor quick; but afwards it made a very great Progreſs in a very little Time; for he was made Biſhop of Lichfield, Dec. 3. 1609, Biſhop of London, Feb. 1610, and Archbiſhop of Canterbury in March following (b). His Learning and fine Talent of Preaching contributed leſs to his ſudden Advancement, than his Intereſt with the Earl of Dunbar, whoſe Chaplain he had been. His Conduct was not pleaſing to every Body. It was thought ſtrange, that he ſhould have more regard to his Secretary than to his Chaplains; and that, when he appeared abroad, he ſhould ſhow more Reſpect to the Laity than to the Clergy. It was ſuppoſed, that, having never had any Benefice with the Cure of Souls, that is, having never experienc'd the Difficulties to be met with in the Direction of a Pariſh, he was thereby become leſs capable of ſhewing any Indulgence to the inferior Clergy. His Severity towards them, and the Countenance he gave to the Nonconformiſts, were the two principal Reaſons of the Clamour that was rais'd againſt him. The latter of theſe cauſed a modern Writer to ſay, That if Laud had ſucceeded Bancroft, and the Project of Conformity had not met with an Interruption in the Time of Abbot, doubtleſs the Schiſm in England would have been at an end (c). King James was diſguſted with Abbot, becauſe he oppos'd the Deſign That King had of marrying the Prince of Wales to the Infanta of Spain. The Enemies of the Archbiſhop, being apprized of this, thought they had a fair Oppportunity of cruſhing him; for they hoped to gain the Aſcendant over this ſuperſtitious King, by alledging the Sacredneſs of the antient Canons. For the better underſtanding of this, it muſt be obſerv'd, that Abbot had accidentally kill'd the Keeper of Bramzel Park, belonging to the Lord Zouch. The Biſhop of Lincoln, who was then Lord-Keeper of the Broad-Seal, told the Duke of Buckingham, That the Archbiſhop was ipſo facto deprived of his Dignity, upon the Account of the Murther he had committed. For this he appeal'd to the Laws of England, and the Severity of the antient Diſcipline; he added, That it was to be feared the Papiſts would make an Advantage of it, if they ſhould ſuffer one to exerciſe the Office of an Archbiſhop and Primate of the Realm, whoſe Hands are defiled with Blood. In ſhort, he gained his Point ſo far, that a Commiſſion was iſſued to ſome Biſhops and Peers, to enquire into the Matter of Fact. The Event of this Enquiry was not very agreeable to the Archbiſhop's Enemies; for it was adjudg'd, That this involuntary

(a) Some call him Abbat.

(b) Athenæ Oxonienſ. Vol. 1.

(c) Ful'er's Worthies of England.

[A] And Author of ſeveral Books.] The chief are, Quæſtiones ſex Theologicæ totidem prælectionibus diſputatæ, printed at Oxford, 1598. Dr Hill's Reaſons for Papiſtry unmask'd (1) at Oxford, 1604. An Expoſition upon Jonah, by way of Sermon. The Hiſtory of the Maſſacre in the Valteline. A Treatiſe of Geography; of which the ninth Edition, which was not the laſt, is in the Year 1607. And a Treatiſe concerning the Perpetual Viſibility of the Church, printed at London, 1624. to which he has not put his Name.

(1) Dr Hill had embrac'd the Romiſh Relig on.

Digitized by Google

luntary Murthur had not disqualified him. This happened in the Year 1621. Six Years after, a new Storm was raised against him, which quite overthrew him: Nor is there any thing surprising in it; for the Favourite (d) owed him a Grudge, and could not endure that several Persons, offensive to him, frequented the Archbishop's Table, one of the most splendid at that time. The Pretence made use of, was, That this Prelate refused to license a Sermon of Dr Sibthorp, upon Apostolical Obedience, though the King had commanded him so to do: Upon which he was suspended from all his Archiepiscopal Functions, which were administred by other Prelates; among whom was William Laud, who was afterwards his Successor (e). Abbot retired to the Place of his Nativity, and afterwards to Croydon Castle, where he died on the 4th of August, in the Year 1633. His Monument is to be seen, with several Ornaments and Inscriptions, in Guilford Church. He founded an Hospital well endowed in that Town. There was another George ABBOT [B], who publish'd, in English, a Paraphrase on Job; Short Notes on the Psalms; Vindiciæ Sabbathi, &c. (f) He liv'd in the Year 1640.

(d) The Duke of Buckingham.

(e) Rushworth's Historical Collections, Tom. 1. Where is to be seen a long Memorial of George Abbot, upon the Account of his Suspension.

(f) Athen. Oxon. ib.

[B] Another George ABBOT.] The Sieur Henninges Witte was not aware of this, in his Diarium Biographicum; where he attributes to the Archbishop of Canterbury the Works of the other George, the Paraphrases on Job and the Psalms, and the Vindiciæ Sabbathi. He likewise ascribes to him, A Treatise against Bishops, and another against the Brownists. Tho' it seems very odd for a Primate of England to write against Bishops.

ABBOT (ROBERT) elder Brother to the former, born also at Guilford (a), and Student of Oxford in Baliol College: One of his first Employments was that of Lecturer at Worcester; then he was made Minister of the Church of All-Saints in the same Place; and a little after Minister of the Parish of Bingham in Northamptonshire. All this happened between the Years 1581 and 1588. He Commenc'd Doctor of Divinity at Oxford, in the Year 1597, and was admitted Chaplain in Ordinary to King James I. in the beginning of his Reign. In the Year 1609, he was made Master of Baliol College; three Years after he was advanced to the Dignity of Regius Professor in Divinity, in the University of Oxford. In his Lectures he made choice of a Subject so agreeable to King James, and managed it with that Depth of Thought and Learning, as is supposed to be the only Reason of his Advancement to the Bishoprick of Sarum: The Subject he made choice of, was, The supreme Power of Kings; which he maintained against all the Subtilties and Sophisms of Bellarmine and Suarez. This is what may be seen in his Treatise, entituled, De Supremâ Potestate Regia, printed at London, 1619. He likewise publish'd, in 1613, a Latin Book, no less agreeable than his Lectures, viz. An Answer to the Apology publish'd by Eudæmon Joannes the Jesuit, in Vindication of his Brother Henry Garnet. He did not long enjoy his Bishoprick, for he was Consecrated Decemb. 3. 1615, and died of the Stone (b) March 2. 1618. Within two Years after his first Wife's Death, he married a second, which was highly displeasing to the Archbishop his Brother (c). Some have wondered how it came to pass, that, after he had shewed his Learning and Merit both by speaking and writing; and having been successful in every thing he undertook, whether preaching, composing of Books and Lectures, disputing, maintaining of Theses, or solving to a Wonder the most knotty Questions, it has been Matter of Surprize, I say, how he came to be promoted to a Bishoprick so late. For this there are three Reasons assigned; First, That he was not Ambitious: Secondly, That he was suspected of being a Puritan: And, Lastly, That his Relations were unwilling to consent, that the Church should be Adorn'd with the Spoils of the University; and that he should leave his Professorship to be made a Bishop (d). This last Reason, in my Opinion, is not well grounded. Let this be as it will, those, who have made a Comparison between the two Brothers, prefer George as an Eloquent, and Robert as a Learned Preacher. They tell us, That George was the fittest for Business; and that Robert was the most profound Divine: They add, that the Gravity of George was attended with an Air of Severity, and that of Robert with a smiling Aspect (e). The latter was reckoned a moderate Calvinist; for he explained the Doctrine of Predestination according to the Hypothesis of the Sublapsarians. In the Note we shall give you the Catalogue of his Works [A]. There has been since him another Robert ABBOT, a Native of Cambridge, who has publish'd several Books in English. He was a London Divine, after he had been a Minister in Kent, and other Places (f). The Catalogue of the Bodleian Library makes three Robert Abbots out of one, and the Treatises, which were composed by one and the same Person, are there divided amongst them.

(a) In 1560.

(b) The Sieur Witte places his Death March 11. 1617. That which caus'd his Mistake, is, That the English do not begin their Year as other Countries do.

(c) Athen. Oxonien.

(d) Fuller's Worthies.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Athen. Oxonienses.

[A] The Catalogue of his Works.] Besides those I have already mention'd, he compos'd, A Mirrour of Popish Subtilties, London, 1594. Sermons on the 110th Psalm, 1601. Defence of the Reform'd Catholic of Mr W. Perkins, against the Bastard Counter-Catholic of Dr Bishop, and a Reply to the Answer of the same Doctor; London, 1611. Antichristi (1) demonstratio contra Pontificios, Londoni, 1603. Exercitationes de gratia & perseverantia Sanctorum, Ibid. 1618. Animadversio in Richardi Thompsoni diatribam de amissione Justificationis & Gratiæ, Ibid. 1618. His Commentary on St Paul's Epistle to the Romans was found in his Study; it contains four Volumes, and was given to the Bodleian Library by Dr Edward Corbet, the Husband of Margaret Brent, Daughter of Martha Abbot; which Martha was the only Daughter and Heir of our Robert, Bishop of Sarum (2). That learned Prelate show'd his great Skill in Polemics, by enlarging on all the Matters of Controversy, which the Epistle to the Romans affords.

(1) Scaliger very much commends that Book, in his Scaligerana, p. 1, 2.

(2) See the English authors, quoted in this Article.

Digitized by Google

ABDAS, A Biſhop in Perſia, in the time of Theodoſius the younger, was, thro' his inconſiderate Zeal, the Cauſe of a very terrible Perſecution, which was raiſed againſt the Chriſtians, who enjoy'd a full Liberty of Conſcience in Perſia, when this Biſhop took the Liberty to pull down one of the Temples, where the Perſians worſhiped the Fire. The Magi made their Complaints to the King [A], who ſent for Abdas, and, after a mild Rebuke, ordered him to rebuild the Temple. Abdas refuſed to do it, though that Prince declared to him, that, in caſe of his Diſobedience, he would cauſe all the Chriſtian Churches to be pulled down. Which Threat he executed (a); and all the Chriſtians were delivered up to the Mercy of his Clergy [B], who, being angry at the Toleration that had been granted them, fell upon them with great Fury. Abdas was the firſt Martyr, who loſt his Life on that Occaſion, if we may ſo call a Man, who by his Raſhneſs [C] (b) expoſed the Church to ſo many Misfortunes. The Chriſtians, who had long ago forgot one of the moſt eſſential Parts of Chriſtian Patience, had recourſe to a Remedy, which occaſioned another Deluge of Blood. They implored the Aſſiſtance of Theodoſius, which kindled a long War between the Romans and Perſians (c). 'Tis true the latter were worſted: But was there any Certainty that they ſhould not overcome the Romans, and that, being flushed with Victory, inſtead of perſecuting only the Chriſtians in Perſia, they would not exerciſe a general Perſecution againſt all the other Churches? Thus we ſee what Miſchiefs the inconſiderate Zeal of one Man may occaſion. The Fury of the Perſecutors could ſcarce be ſatisfied in the Space of thirty Years (d). They, who (e) ſuppreſs that Reaſon of the Rage and Violence of the Perſians, can't be excuſed. The Commonwealth of Learning might enter an Action againſt 'em, as is practiſed againſt thoſe Sellers, who (f) conceal what they ought to acquaint the Buyers with; and it were to be wiſhed, that the Publick would be more ſevere againſt thoſe Hiſtorians, who ſuppreſs certain Facts: It is ſo common a Fault amongſt thoſe Gentlemen, that it is high time to prevent it for the future, if poſſible.

(a) Ex Theodoret Eccleſ. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 39.

(b) Vedelius, a Proteſtant Divine, blames that Biſhop, apud Voet. diſp. Theol Tom. 3. p. 310.

(c) Socrates, l. 7. c. 18. Hiſt. Eccl.

(d) Theod. Ibid.

(e) See the Remark [C].

(f) Cum ex duodecim tabulis ſatis eſſet ea præſtiri quæ eſſent linguæ nuncupata, quæ qui inſcitus eſſet dupli pœnam ſubiret, à Jureconſultis etiam reticentiæ pœna eſt conſtituta. Qui ſolidum enim eſſet in prædio vitii id ſtatuerunt, ſi venditor ſciret, niſi nominatim dictum eſſet, præſtari oportere. Cicero de Offic. l. 3. c. 1. See likewiſe Grotius de Jure belli, l. 2. c. 8. n. 7. and Puffendorf de Jure Nat. l. 5. c. 3.

[A] To the King.] 'Twas Iſdegerdes, if we rely upon (1) Theodoret; but, according to (2) Socrates, the Perſecution began under Vararanes, Son and Succeſſor of Iſdegerdes. Baronius (3) dares not determine which of the two is in the right.

(1) Theod. Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 5. c. 39.
(2) Socrat. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 7. c. 18.
(3) Baron. ad ann. 420.

[B] To the Mercy of his Clergy.] So I call the Magi, who, amongſt other things, took care of Religion. It was their buſineſs to prevent all manner of Innovation in Religious Matters. Theodoret (4) compares them to a Whirlwind, which raiſes the Waves of the Sea; Τριάκοντα διελαυθότων ἐτῶν ἡ ζάλη μεμενήκει, ὑπὸ τῶν μάγων καθάπερ ὑπό τινων καταιγίδων ῥιπιζομένη. The Tempeſt continu'd more than thirty Years, being rais'd by the Magi, as ſo many Whirlwinds; ſuch was their Function in the Storm that toſſed ſo violently the Church of Perſia. Socrates (5) tells us, that they made uſe of ſeveral Impoſtures to put a ſtop to the Progreſs of the Chriſtian Religion, when they ſaw that the Love Iſdegerdes had conceived for the holy Biſhop Maruthas, gave them Reaſon to fear, that he would forſake their Religion. They were ſo bold as to hide a Man under Ground, in the Temple where the King uſed to worſhip the Fire; and they order'd him to cry out, when the King came in, "That they ought to turn out That Prince, ſince "he had been ſo impious as to believe, that a Chri-"ſtian Prieſt was a Friend of God." If what is moſt falſely ſaid by impious Men were true, viz. That Religion is a mere human Invention, ſet up by the Sovereigns to keep their Subjects within the Bounds of Obedience, may we not aſſert, that Princes are the firſt who have been taken in their own Snares? For Religion is ſo far from making them Maſters of their Subjects, that, on the contrary, it gives their Subjects a Power over them, ſince they are obliged to profeſs the Religion of their People, and not That, which ſeems to them to be the beſt: And if they are reſolved to profeſs a Religion different from that of their Subjects, their Crowns will ſit looſe upon their Heads. We ſee how the Perſian Magi threaten'd their King, though he had only careſs'd one Biſhop. Has it not been aſſerted, that the laſt (6) King of Siam was pull'd down from the Throne, for having too much favour'd the Chriſtian Miſſionaries. The ſame Socrates, who mentions the Artifices made uſe of by the Magi, to put a ſtop to the Propagation of the Goſpel, tells us likewiſe, That, after the Death of Iſdegerdes, they inſpired his Son with ſuch a Spirit of Perſecution, that the Chriſtians were treated with ſhocking Cruelty. They had endeavour'd, but in vain, to inſpire his Father with the ſame Spirit; for he was inclined to embrace the Goſpel. Socrates aſſures us of this: But he is to blame for not owning ſincerely, that the raſh Action of Biſhop Abdas afforded the Magi a very plauſible Pretence. Compare with this the Remark [B] of the Article of Junius (Francis) Profeſſor at Leyden.

(5) Socrat. l. 7. c. 8.

(6) This was wrote in 1693.

[C] A Man, who by his Raſhneſs.] All the Church Hiſtorians are not guilty of the Inſincerity, for which I blame Socrates; for Theodoret (7) ingenuouſly confeſſes, That the Biſhop, who pull'd down a Temple, occaſion'd the dreadful Perſecution of the Chriſtians in Perſia. He does not deny but that the Zeal of that Biſhop was unſeaſonable; but he maintains, that his Refuſal to rebuild the Temple is worthy of Admiration, and deſerves a Crown: For it ſeems to me, ſays he, as great an Impiety to build a Temple to the Fire, as to worſhip it. Nicephorus (8) does but tranſcribe Theodoret. For my own part, I am of Opinion, That no private Men, whether they be Metropolitans or Patriarchs, can at any time be diſpens'd with from obeying this Law of Natural Religion. The Damage, that has been done to one's Neighbour, ought to be made up by Reſtitution, or ſome other Way. Now Abdas, a mere private Man, and a Subject of the King of Perſia, had deſtroy'd another's Property, and a Property which ought to have been the more inviolable, as it related to the eſtabliſh'd Religion of the Country; he was therefore indiſpenſably obliged to obey the Orders of his Sovereign, by reſtoring what he had deſtroyed: And it was no good Excuſe to ſay, That the Temple, which he was ordered to rebuild, was deſign'd for the Uſe of Idolaters; for he was not to put it to that Uſe, and he could not be anſwerable for the Abuſe of thoſe, to whom it belong'd. Would it be a good Reaſon for keeping a Purſe, ſtollen from another, to ſay that the Man, from whom it was taken, ſpends his Money extravagantly? Let him do ſo; you are not anſwerable to God for the ill Uſe he makes of his Money: Let him enjoy what is his own; what Right have you to it? Beſides, could there be any Compariſon between the Deſtruction of a Temple, without which the Perſians would have remain'd as great Idolaters as they were before, and the Deſtruction of many Chriſtian Churches? Abdas ſhould have therefore prevented this laſt Evil by the firſt, ſince the Prince put it to his Choice. Laſtly, can any thing render the Chriſtian Religion more odious to all the Nations of the World, than to ſee, that after the Chriſtians had inſinuated themſelves, as deſiring only the Liberty of teaching their Doctrine, they are ſo bold as to deſtroy the Temples, conſecrated to the Religion of the Country, and to refuſe to rebuild them, when the Sovereign commands it? Is it not to give occaſion to the Infidels to ſay; Theſe Men deſire at firſt a mere Toleration, but in a little Time they will

(7) Hiſt. Eccl. lib. 5. c. 39.

(8) Lib. 14. c. 19. I find apud Salden. Otia theol. p. 639. that Socrates, vocat exertim rem non opportunam, calls that an ill-tim'd Action, which was done by the Biſhop. He quotes Hiſt. Tripart. l. 10. c. 30. but it is certain that That Chapter is taken from Theodoret. Voetius diſput. Theol. Tom. 3. p. 310. quotes Euſebius, who could not mention it.

Digitized by Google

will pretend to ſhare with us all Employments and Places of Truſt, and then become our Maſters. At firſt, they think themſelves very happy, if they are not burnt, afterwards very unhappy, if they have fewer Privileges than others; and then again, very unhappy if they are not the only prevailing Party. For ſome time they reſemble Cæſar, who could bear no Maſter; and then Pompey, who could ſuffer no Partner?

(9) Lucan. l. 1. v. 125. ſee likewiſe Florus, l. 4. c. 2.

Nec (9) quenquam jam ferre poteſt Cæſarve priorem, Pompeiuſve parem.

Superior Power, fierce Faction's deareſt Care,
One cou'd not brook, and one diſdain'd to ſhare.
ROWE.

The Perſecutors of the French Proteſtants maliciouſly inſpired Charles IX. with the like Thought. 'Tis ſaid, that that Prince made uſe of theſe Words, ſpeaking to the Admiral de Coligni (10), Per innanzi ci contentavate d'un poco di licenza, hora la volete del pari, fra poco vorrette eſſer ſoli, & cacciar noi altri fuori del regno. i. e. At firſt they pretend to be ſatisfy'd with a little Liberty; then they deſire to be upon an Equality; next they aſpire to govern alone; and at laſt, they would drive us out of the Kingdom. Such are the unavoidable Inconveniences, which They expoſe themſelves to, who maintain ſo warmly, That the Power of the ſecular Arm ought to be made uſe of for the Eſtabliſhment of Orthodoxy. Such were the Principles of Abdas. For what would he not have done with force of Arms againſt the Idolaters under a Chriſtian Emperor, ſince, under a Heathen Prince, who tolerated the Chriſtian Religion, he pull'd down a Temple, for which the Heathens had a very particular Veneration. Compare this with what you will meet with in the Remark [B], of the Article BRAUN (George).

(10) Davila's Hiſtory of the Civil Wars in France, l. 4. p. 158. Ann. 1566.

ABDERAME, Governor of Spain, for Iſcham Caliph of the Saracens in the VIIIth Century, endeavoured to extend their Empire over France, after they had conquered all Spain. They might have been contented [A] with the Countries they had already ſubdued; but it was very natural for them not to ſtop in ſo fine a Road of Succeſs. If we had a particular Hiſtory of Abderame, written by one of his own Party, it would doubtleſs appear, that he was very well qualified to ſatisfy the exceſſive Ambition of his Maſter; and that he was one of the greateſt Generals in the World. We ſhould meet with nothing but great Actions and Triumphs. I know that ſome Chriſtian Writers ſpeak well of him: And indeed 'tis no ſmall Praiſe to have penetrated, as he did, into the very Heart of France: But, after all, there is nothing like a Writer of one's own Party. Abderame quickly removed the Obſtacle, which Eudes, Duke of Aquitain, had raiſed againſt him; having in a little time reduced the (a) Govenor of Cerdagne, who had taken up Arms at the Sollicitation of that Duke, to the Neceſſity of killing himſelf. He treated his Widow [B] very civilly, who was Daughter of Duke Eudes, and a moſt beautiful Woman. As ſoon as he had ſuppreſt that Inſurrection, he applied himſelf with all imaginable Care to Preparations for War, in order to invade France; and (b) the Year following, made an Irruption into that Countrey with one of the greateſt Armies that had been ſeen for a long time: It ſpread far and wide, and filled every Place with Deſolation and Horror. The Memory whereof is not yet loſt, even amongſt the common People in the Countries, which were ſo cruelly ravaged. 'Tis not known whether the Gaſcons [C], whoſe Duke was a Friend to the Duke of Aquitain, made any Reſiſtance, or whether they ſubmitted to the Saracens: We only know, that Abderame, having advanced as far as Bourdeaux, took that City, and burnt all the Churches;

(a) His Name was Munuza. See his Article.

(b) In 732.

[A] Have been contented] Perhaps the World has never ſeen ſuch an Inſtance of a long Series of Victories, and large Conqueſts, as the Saracen Hiſtory preſents us with. The Idea which the Roman Poet formed of a vaſt Dominion, takes in but part of their Empire.

Latius regnes, avidum domando
Spiritum, quam ſi Lybiam remotis
Gadibus jungas, & uterque Pœnus ſerviat uni (1).

(1) Hor. lib. 2. Od. 2.

That Man a wider Empire gains,
Who his own craving Wiſh reſtrains,
Than he, whoſe Sword, and wide Command,
Join diſtant Spain to Lybia's Sand;
Than if they did his Arms obey,
And either Carthage own his Sway.
CREECH.

Reaſon prompted them both to ſtop, and not to ſtop. This ſeems a Contradiction, and yet 'tis very true: If they had ſtopt, they might have been praiſed for it upon ſeveral Accounts; but they had been blam'd likewiſe for ſeveral Reaſons. They might have been charged with Weakneſs and Imprudence. It might have been ſaid, That they neither had the Courage nor the Skill to improve the Opportunities which Providence put into their Hands; and that a little more Boldneſs and Courage would have enabled them to conquer the whole World. They, who do great Actions, are never ſecure from ſuch malicious Reflexions: If it cannot be denied that they have done great Things, it will be ſaid however, that it is nothing in Compariſon of what another would have done in the like Caſe. The Heathens would have called this a Criticiſm on Fortune for the ill Choice of her Favourites.

[B] He treated his Widow, &c.] I ſhall obſerve in another Place (2), that the Daughter of Eudes, who was married to the Governor of Cerdagne, was the moſt beautiful Princeſs of her Time; and that, being brought to Abderame, he ſent her to the Caliph. A Circumſtance, which a Saracen Hiſtorian would not lightly paſs over, as we Chriſtian Writers do. He would extol it above all that has been celebrated by the Greeks, to the Glory of Alexander, and by the Romans, to the Glory of Scipio. Alexander (3) behaved himſelf chaſtly towards Darius's Wife and Daughters, who were his Priſoners. Scipio (4) laid a Reſtraint upon his Paſſions, though he had a very beautiful Virgin in his Power, and ſent her back to a Man of Quality, to whom ſhe was contracted. A panegyrical Writer might find in the Circumſtances of Abderame's Conduct ſome Reaſons to give him the Preference. He might have kept for himſelf the Widow of a Rebel Governor: She was an extraordinary Beauty, and yet he left her untouch'd.

(2) In the Article Munuza.

(3) See the Remark [G], of the Article Macedonia.

(4) Val. Maxim. l. 4. c. 3.

[C] Whether the Gaſcons——made any Reſiſtance.] The moſt exact (5) Hiſtorians obſerve, That Abderame enter'd France, through the Country that lies betwixt the Garonne, and the Ocean; and they ſay, That Country was at that Time under the Dominion of the Duke of Gaſcony, and not under the Duke of Aquitain. They make no mention of the Siege of Arles, which, Moreri ſays, the General of the Saracens undertook; before he went into Aquitain, and before he made himſelf Maſter of Languedoc, Querci, &c. This Account is ſo much the more perplexed and confus'd, as it is certain that the Saracens were Maſters of Languedoc, before Abderame paſs'd the Pyrenees. The Way he took will furniſh me preſently with a Juſtification of the Duke

(5) Mezerai, Cordemoi.

of

Digitized by Google

Churches: After which, he was victorious in a bloody Battle [D] over Eudes, a little beyond the (c) Dordogne [E]. He croſſed Poictou; he plundered the Church of St Hilary at Poictiers, and proceeded to Tours, in order to plunder the Treaſure of St Martin's Church. It was then, that Charles Martel, ſeconded by the Duke of Aquitain, ſtopp'd the Courſe of that Torrent. The great Army of Abderame, the Number of the Towns he plundered, and of the Churches he burnt in his way through Perigord and Saintonge, made his March ſo ſlow, that Eudes had time to re-inforce himſelf with a conſiderable Army, before he joined Charles Martel: After the junction of their Armies, they march'd (d) beyond Tours to meet Abderame. The two Armies, being in ſight of one another, ſpent near ſeven Days in ſkirmiſhing; but at laſt, on the ſeventh Day, which happened to be a Saturday of the Month of October, in the Year 732 [F], the Battle was fought with a very great Loſs to the Saracens. Yet we muſt not imagine the Number of the Dead was ſo great [G] as ſome hyperbolical Hiſtorians have repreſented it to be. Abderame was kill'd in the Field of Battle; the broken Remains of his Army retired more eaſily than they could have expected [H] (e). The Duke of Aquitain, who has been falſly charged with being the Cauſe

(c) With reſpect to the Pyrences.

(d) With reſpect to Paris.

(e) See Cordemoi's Hiſtory of France, Tom. 1. p. 43, &c.

of Aquitain. The Account of Auguſtin Curio (6) is ſtill more confuſed: He ſays, That Abderame enter'd France before the Death of Munuza; that he won a Battle there againſt Eudes; that being returned thither after the Death of Munuza, he croſs'd the Rhone, and made a horrid Slaughter at Arles, and afterwards beſieged Toulouſe, without taking it, and then Bourdeaux, with very good Succeſs; and at laſt, that he plundred and burnt St Martin's Church at Tours.

(6) Hiſtor. Sarracen. l. 2. p. 111, 112.

[D] A bloody Battle.] The loſs of the Chriſtians was ſo great, if we may believe Iſidorus, Biſhop of (7) Badajox, that God only knows the Number of the French that were ſlain. According to Mezerai, (8) Duke Eudes fought with all imaginable Bravery, but at laſt he was forced to yield, with ſuch a loſs of his Men, as is not to be expreſs'd.

(7) Iſidorus Pacenſis Chronic.
(8) Mezerai, Chronol. Abridgment, Tom. 1. p. 193.

[E] A little beyond the Dordogne.] I do not apprehend what Cordemoi (9) means, when he ſays, That if Eudes had waited for the coming of Charles Martel, as he ſhould have done, the Saracens had never croſs'd the Dordogne. Did they not croſs it before (10) the Battle was fought, and before Charles Martel had paſs'd the (11) Loire? To what Purpoſe therefore ſhould he have expected him, in order to prevent the Paſſage over the Dordogne? That Hiſtorian ſhould have ſaid, That if Eudes had ſtaid for Charles Martel, he might have prevented the Irruptions of the Saracens into Saintonge and Poictou; becauſe in that Caſe he had not loſt the Battle; and having all his Troops, he might have kept the Enemy in awe, by the Favour of ſome advantageous Poſts, which he might have ſecur'd. Thus, preſerving his Troops 'till the Arrival of Charles, the entire defeat of the Saracens would have been more practicable, in whatever Province they had been met with. It is, perhaps, difficult to determine, whether the Eagerneſs, which prompted Eudes to a ſpeedy Engagement, be moſt worthy of Cenſure, or the grave and ſlow March of Charles towards the Loire. Thoſe two Generals both plaid an artful Part. Eudes was deſirous to beat the Enemy without the Help of Charles Martel; and the latter was not diſpleaſed to ſee Aquitain laid waſte by the Saracens, and the Troops of Eudes worſted. By this means he got rid of the Obſtacles, which he feared from thence, to his great Deſign of making himſelf King; and the Glory of being the Deliverer of France, would Increaſe in proportion to the ſmall Share his Rival had in it. Some Spaniſh Writers ſay (12), That Eudes was beaten between the Garonne and the Dordogne. Mezerai made uſe of better Memoirs, when he ſaid (13), "That Eudes durſt not ſtay for "the Saracens beyond the Rivers, but retired on this "ſide the Dordogne; and, being there reconcil'd to "Martel, he aſſembled his Troops, expecting that he "ſhould come and join him with the French Troops; "but Abderame broke his Meaſures, and marching "forward, croſs'd the River to attack him in his "Camp. The Duke ſtaid for him without ſtirring, "and fought with great Courage." This ſhews that his Impatience is not ſo much to be blamed, as Charles Martel's Patience.

(9) Cordemoi's Hiſtory of France, p. 404.
(10) Eudes did not go back, when he heard that Abderame had croſs'd the Dordogne; but met, and fought him. Id. ib.
(11) Id. ib.
(12) See Catel's Hiſtory of Languedoc. p. 526, 520.
(13) Mezerai, ubi ſupra.

[F] In the Year 732.] Is it not very ſtrange, that ſuch a Victory as this ſhould not eſcape Chronological Contradictions? Catel places it in the Year 725. pag. 529. of his Memoirs (14); but in pag. 531. (no very great Interval) he places it in the Year 728. "The "Year following, ſays he, which was the Year 728, "Eudo Duke of Aquitain died." Calviſius, quoting the Annals of Fulde, places it in the Year 726; Petavius (15) in 725. Formerly moſt Writers pitch'd upon the Year 725, or 726, but of late they declare for the Year 732. Father L'Abbé, Mezerai, Cordemoi, &c. agree in that, with the Annals of Metz, and the moſt ancient Chronicles.

(14) For the Hiſtory of Languedoc.
(15) Petav. Ration. temp. Part I. l. 8.

[G] The Number of the dead was ſo great.] 'Tis commonly computed at 370 or 375 Thouſand, and That of the French at 1500. This is the Computation of (16) Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius, Paulus Diaconus, and ſeveral other Hiſtorians: But it is now no longer credited. Mezerai ſays, That the whole Army of the Saracens conſiſted but of Fourſcore or an Hundred thouſand Men. We muſt remember that they fought till Night (17) without giving ground, and that they were not purſued the next Day, when it was known that they had marched all Night. But it would have been almoſt impoſſible to make ſuch a prodigious Slaughter of Men, who ſtood their Ground. A Slaughter of ſo many thouſand Soldiers can't happen but in purſuit of a flying Army, when no Quarter is given. Since therefore the Night parted the two Armies, what we read in du Haillan muſt needs be a meer romantic Story, viz. That King Abderame, and almoſt all his chief Officers, were found among the great Heaps of dead Bodies, only ſuffocated by the Numbers that overwhelm'd them. If there had been at that time any Weekly News-Writers, we might have better judg'd of the Number of the Saracens by the Gazettes publiſh'd before the Battle, than by the Deſcriptions given afterwards of it. During the March of thoſe Barbarians, the Licens'd News-Writers would have repreſented their Army as inconſiderable, and weaken'd it every Day by Deſertions and Sickneſſes: But, after the Victory, they would have corrected themſelves, and aſſur'd us, upon good Authority, that the Army conſiſted of innumerable Multitudes. One might therefore be impos'd upon both by the former and latter Gazettes; but if I were to chuſe, I ſhould rather truſt the firſt Account than the laſt.

(16) He took it from the Relation written by Eudes, to Pope Gregory II. See below, the Remark [K].
(17) See the following Remark.

[H] Retired more eaſily than they could have expected.] To rectify the popular Notions of that great Victory, it is requiſite to conſider what the moſt accurate Hiſtorians have ſaid of it. "(18) The Saracens "threw their Darts to no purpoſe; the Shields of the "French Soldiers, rais'd one above another, ſecured "them; and, when the Saracens came on Sword in "Hand, all their Efforts being not able to break ſo great "and ſo cloſe a Body, did but ſerve to put themſelves "into diſorder. Charles, who knew how to take his "Advantage, immediately attack'd them. A prodi-"gious number of them were killed by the French, "who continued to fight very cloſe: Abderame him-"ſelf was kill'd upon the Spot; but the Night com-"ing on put an end to the Fight, before Charles "was ſenſible of all his Advantages. He did not "think it proper to follow the Remains of the Sara-"cens Army, to avoid the Ambuſcades that are al-"ways to be feared, when the Enemy is very nu-"merous. Nay he caus'd his Troops to retire in "good order, and with their Swords in their Hands, "into the Camp, where they ſtaid all Night, and at "break of Day he drew them up again in order of "Battle in Sight of the Enemies Camp. There were "ſo many Pavillions in it, that, though the Field, "wherein the Battle was fought the Day before, was "cover'd

(18) Cordemoi's Hiſtory of France, Tom. 1. p. 405.

Digitized by Google

Cauſe [I] of this Invaſion, was greatly inſtrumental in obtainining the Victory [K]. It is ſurprizing, that ſo important a Victory ſhould not have been well deſcribed by the Writers of that Time, and yet that the modern Hiſtorians ſhould tell us ſo many Particulars concerning it [L].

" cover'd all over with the dead Bodies of the Sara-
" cens, Charles had ſome Reaſon to believe; that they " had ſtill a great number of Soldiers conceal'd in " their Tents, and he expected every Minute they " would ſally out; but at laſt, after a long Stay, the " French perceived that the Saracens had abandon'd
" their Camp, and ſome Spies reported, that they " had marched all Night towards Septimania. How" ever he look'd upon this Flight of an Army, which
" he eſteem'd to be more numerous than his own,
" as an Artifice to draw him into ſome Ambuſcade;
" and was ſatisfy'd with making ſure of the Saracen-
" Camp, where he found all their Baggage, toge" ther with the Booty they had gained." This is (18) Mezerai's Chronol. Abridgment. Tom. 1. p. 192.
what induc'd Mezerai to ſay, (19) That Charles did not well improve the great Advantage he had gain'd. I am willing to believe he was like many others, better qualified to gain a Victory, than to improve it: But perhaps he thought fit to let the Saracens retire quietly, that they might be the more able to ruin the Duke of Aquitain, whom he looked upon as a dangerous Enemy. With how much Difficulty did He and his Son Pepin ſubdue that Family? It was the laſt that ſubmitted to thoſe Uſurpers. To conclude; Notwithſtanding the ill Succeſs of Abderame, his Succeſſors return'd ſome Years after into France, and did a great deal of Miſchief.
(20) See the Remark [A], in the Article of Cæſar.

[I] With being the Cauſe.] There was never a more unlikely Accuſation than this is. For firſt, Eudes (21) had married his Daughter to the Governor of Cerdagne, to engage him thereby in a Civil War, which might prevent the Saracens Irruption into France. His Son-in-law periſhed in that Enterprize, and his Daughter falling into the Hands of Abderame had been ſent to the Caliph of the Saracens. Secondly, It does not appear that Eudes made any Step to facilitate the Entrance of the Saracens; he gave them no Paſſage through his Territories; they entred into Gaul through the Country of the Duke of Gaſcony, and ſo advanced as far as Bourdeaux. Beſides, it does not appear that the Saracens had any regard for the Territories of the Duke of Aquitain; they treated him like an Enemy, from the Beginning to the End; ſo far were they from reſtoring any thing to him of what they had taken from him in their former Expeditions; as they would certainly have done, if they had treated with him concerning Abderame's Invaſion. Laſtly, was there any neceſſity that Abderame ſhould be ſollicited to come into France? Had not the Saracens entred into France already? Had they not already taken Narbonne, Carcaſſonne, and extended their Conqueſts as far as the Rhone? Abderame's Expedition was but a Continuation of what his Predeceſſors had ſo well began; he was willing to carry on their Conqueſts (22) beyond the Pyrenees; and, to give a greater Eclat to his Undertaking, he refus'd to follow a beaten Path. He croſs'd the Pyrenees, thro' the Country of Biſcay; which was a ready Way to make new Conqueſts; whereas if he had gone thro' Rouſſillon, he muſt enter into a Province already conquered. As for thoſe many Annaliſts, who throw this Blemiſh on the Duke of Aquitain, their Teſtimony cannot counterbalance the Reaſons that may be alledged in his Juſtification; for they are a ſort of Men, who do but tranſcribe from one another; and the firſt took his Account from a Tradition, which ow'd it's Original to the Artifices of the Cabal that favoured Charles Martel. That Cabal had ſeveral Reaſons to charge the contrary Party with holding Intelligence with the Enemies of the Church and State. We do not find that Iſidore of Badajos, Sebaſtian of Salamanca, Roderic of Toledo, and ſuch like Spaniſh Writers, who are free from the Prejudices of that Cabal, have accuſed Eudes of having invited the Saracens into France. See what it is to be born under a lucky Planet! I don't believe that Charles Martel invited thoſe Infidels; and yet he ought to have been ſuſpected of it rather than Eudes, ſince Eudes was the firſt who was to be oppreſs'd, and Charles might think, that whilſt the Saracens were employ'd in delivering him from ſo formidable a Rival, he ſhould have time enough to get his Army ready to fight them, and that a Victory would very much ſhorten his Way to the Throne. Theſe are good holds for the malicious Interpreters of the Conduct of Great Men; and yet Charles has not been ſuſpected of holding Intelligence with Abderame.

(21) See his Article.

(22) With reſpect to Spain.

[K] Was greatly inſtrumental in obtaining the Victory.] There are ſome Hiſtorians, who make no mention of his Engagement with Charles Martel upon that Day; but others expreſsly aſſert it. Theſe are the Words of Paulus Diaconus (23): " Deinde
" poſt decem annos cum uxoribus & parvulis venien-
" tes, Aquitaniam Galliæ provinciam quaſi habitaturi
" ingreſſi ſunt; Carolus ſiquidem cum Eudone Aqui-
" taniæ Principe tunc diſcordiam habebat, qui tamen
" in unum ſe conjungentes contra eoſdem Saracenos
" pari conſilio dimicarunt, nam irruentes Franci ſu-
" per eos trecenta ſeptuaginta quinque millia Sara-
" cenorum interemerunt, ex Francorum vero parte
" mille & quingenti tantum ibi ceciderunt; Eudo
" quoque cum ſuis ſuper eos irruens pari modo mul-
" tos inteficiens omnia devaſtavit." Ten Years after, (the Saracens) coming with their Wives and Children, made an Irruption into Aquitain, a Province of Gaul, with a Deſign of ſettling in it; Charles being at that time at Variance with Eudo, Duke of Aquitain: but, uniting upon this Occaſion, they oppoſed the Saracens with Confederate Forces; for the Francs, pouring upon them, ſlew 375000 Saracens, with the Loſs of but 1500 Men on their own Side; Eudo likewiſe, ſetting upon them with his Forces, routed them with a great Slaughter. Regino likewiſe mentions the Reconciliation of Charles and Eudes: He ſays it was made before the Battle, and that afterwards they jointly attacked the Saracens. Sigebert divides the Glory of the Day between thoſe two Chiefs in ſuch a Manner, that he ſeems to allow Eudes no other Advantage than that of having forced their Camp, and deſtroyed the Remains of their Army: Eudo quoque reconciliatus caſtra Saracenorum irrupit, & reliquias eorum contrivit. Roderic Archbiſhop of Toledo will afford us a good Proof; for he ſays, (24) that the Forces of Charles Martel conſiſted chiefly of Germans, Goths, and French, who remain'd to Eudes after the Victory, which the Saracens obtained near the Dordogne. We muſt not forget the Letter, written by Eudes to Pope Gregory II. wherein he gave him an Account of the Battle. Marianus Scotus, and Otho of Friſingen mention that Letter. Anaſtaſius the Librarian (25) likewiſe mentions it; but 'tis ſtrange that he ſhould aſcribe all the Glory of that Day to the Duke of Aquitain, without ſpeaking one Word of Charles Martel. As to the Number of the Dead, he makes it 370000 on the ſide of the Saracens, and 1500 on the ſide of the French. His Authority is the Letter of Eudes, out of which he extracts a particular Circumſtance, which is ridiculous enough, namely, That on the Day of the Battel Eudes cauſed three holy Spunges, ſent him by the Pope, out of thoſe that ſerved for the uſe of his Table, to be cut into very ſmall Pieces, and made his Soldiers eat them: Which had ſo good Effect, as to ſecure thoſe, who eat of them, from being killed or wounded. The following Words of Martial will explain what is meant by the uſe of his Table,

(23) Hiſtor. Longob. lib. 6. c. 46. in Catel's Memoirs of Languedoc, p. 530.

(24) Roderic's Hiſtoria Arabum, in Catel's Memoirs, p. 529.

(25) Catel's Memoirs of Languedoc, p. 531.

Hæc tibi ſorte datur tergendis ſpongia menſis
Utilis (26).

(26) Mart. Epig. 144. lib. 14.

This uſeful Sponge, which Chance has render'd thine,
If right apply'd, will make your Table ſhine.

[L] And yet that the modern Hiſtorians ſhould tell us ſo many Particulars concerning it.] I ſhall apply here the judicious Reflexion of the Hiſtorian, who has been my chief Guide in this Article. " That " Day, ſays he (27), can never be too much taken
" notice of, and the antient Annaliſts can never be " ſufficiently blamed, for omitting all the Circum-
" ſtances of ſo memorable an Action. But on the " other Side, they, who have ſome love for Truth,
" can hardly excuſe ſome modern (28) Authors, tho'
" otherwiſe Writers of great Merit, for being ſo par" ticular in the Deſcription of the Battle. They
" ſpeak of it as if they had been preſent in all the " Councils,

(27) Cordemoi's Hiſtory of France, p. 506.

(28) He quotes in the Margin Paulus Æmilius and Fauchet.

Digitized by Google

" Councils, and had ſeen all the Motions of both " Armies: They deſcribe not only the Arms of the " French and Saracens, but alſo the manner how " Charles and Abderame drew up their Troops. They " give us long Speeches, which are neither real nor " proper: They mention Abderame's Stratagems, the " Dexterity wherewith Charles hindered them from " taking effect, and they conclude with the De- " ſcription of the different Poſtures of the dead Bo- " dies, that were found in the Field of Battle, not " omitting even the Groans of the dying, and the " Praiſes which Charles and Eudes beſtowed upon " one another."

ABDERUS, the Favourite of HERCULES. See the Remark [D] of the following Article.

ABDERA, a Maritime Town of Thrace, near (a) the Mouth of the Neſtus. Some ſay, That it was (b) built by the Siſter of Diomedes [A], and that it took it's Name from her; but that it was rebuilt by the Clazomenians, in the 31ſt Olympiad, and that they gave it their Name. According to Herodotus, they only laid the Foundations of it under the Conduct (c) of Timeſius, being driven away [B], and their Deſigns prevented. The Teians only, properly ſpeaking, built Abdera, when, being upon the Point of falling into the Hands of Harpagus, Cyrus's Lieutenant, they choſe rather to abandon their Country, than to live under the Dominion of the Barbarians. They all, therefore, embarked, and went (d) to finiſh what had been only begun by Timeſius. This gave occaſion to a (e) Proverb not well underſtood by Eraſmus [C]. I paſs over the Opinion of thoſe, who aſcribe the Foundation of that Town to Hercules [D]: I rather chuſe to take Notice of ſome remarkable Particulars, which

(a) Herod. l. 7. c. 109, 126.

(b) Solen. c. 10. See alſo Mela, l. 2. c. 2.

(c) See his Article.

(d) Herod. l. 1. c. 161.

(e) Strab. l. 14. p. 443.

[A] The Siſter of Diomedes.] No Reader can believe what Moreri ſays, without being perſwaded that Abdera, built by the Teians, took the Name of Diomedes, who reigned in it, and that Herodotus gives us this Account of the Matter. But this is only Miſtake upon Miſtake. For 1ſt, What concerns Diomedes, relates to the poetical Times; but the Abandoning of Teos, by it's Inhabitants, and their retreat into Thrace, where they built Abdera, is a Fact of the Hiſtorical Times, which falls under the 59th Olympiad. 'Tis therefore a ſtrange Overſight to join theſe two things in ſuch a manner, as to place the Fabulous Times after the Times of True Hiſtory. If you have a mind to follow Herodotus's Account of the building of Abdera, by the Teians, let us hear no more of Diomedes, who, if ever there was ſuch an Hero, muſt have been dead many Ages before: Or, if you deſign to ſpeak of That antient King of Thrace, give us notice, that you are relating an Opinion different from that, which concerns the Teians. 2. When Herodotus mentions the building of that Town, he does not ſpeak one Word of Diomedes. Laſtly, It is not true that Abdera went by the Name of Diomedes. Moreri ſhould have ſaid, that, according to Solinus, The Siſter of Diomedes built it, and gave it her Name: From whence Salmaſius (1) was in the right to infer, that Diomedes's Siſter's Name was Abdera. There is a Medal in Goltzius, which repreſents the Head of a Woman, with this Legend, (2) ΑΒΔΗΡΑΣ ΚΟΡΑΣ. The moſt (3) learned Antiquaries underſtood it of Diomedes's Siſter, who founded Abdera.

(1) Salmaſii Exercitat. Plinianæ. p. 160.

(2) The Maid of Abdera. κόρας Doricè pro κόρης.

(3) Spanheimii Epiſt. ad Laurent. Begerum.

[B] Being driven away.] Herodotus (4) ſays ſo in expreſs Words, ὑπὸ Θρηίκων ἐξελασθείς, expell'd by the Thracians. We ſhall ſee in the next Remark a Miſtake of Pinedo, in relation to this Story. In all appearance the Printers only are the cauſe of this other Miſtake, Thracibus ejectis, which is to be found in the learned Letter of Mr de Spanheim to Mr Beger. They have put it ejectis, inſtead of ejectus.

(4) Herod. l. 1. c. 168.

[C] A Proverb not well underſtood by Eraſmus.] The Proverb is, Ἄβδηρα καλὴ Τηΐων ἀπουσία; Abdera the fine Colony of the Teians: the meaning of which, according to (5) Eraſmus, is, If you make me uneaſy, I know whither to retire. Hoc ænigmate proverbiali ſignificamus, non deeſſe quo confugiamus, ſi quis præter modum pergat eſſe moleſtus. Pinedo, a Portugueeſe, who was forc'd to fly his Country, to avoid the Purſuits of the Inquiſition, underſtands this (6) Proverb in that Senſe; but he adds, that ſuch retreats are not always ſucceſsful, as he is convinc'd by Experience. " Quo (Proverbio) ſignificabatur non deeſſe " quo confugiamus, ſi nobis contumeliæ inferantur, " ut fecere Teii, ſed hoc non ſemper feliciter ſolet " evenire, & doctus & expertus loquor. The Mean- " ing of which (Proverb) is, That we are never at a " Loſs for a Place of Retreat, when we are reproachful- " ly us'd; an Inſtance of which we have in the Tei- " ans; but the Event of it is not always fortunate, " as I can aſſure from my own Experience." Had He no better Reaſon to complain, than he had to aſſert, in the ſame Page, That the Teians expell'd Timeſius the Clazomenian, who had begun to build Abdera, his Complaints would be very ill grounded. But to return to Eraſmus. I ſhall not ſo much cenſure him for his Explication of the Proverb, as for what he adds, That perhaps Cicero alluded to it in his Epiſtles to Atticus; he quotes two (7) Paſſages out of them, in which 'tis plain Cicero ſpeaks of Abdera, only to repreſent it as a Place, where Affairs were manag'd very fooliſhly, and (as we ſay) without Rhime or Reaſon. But if Eraſmus, who made uſe of a perhaps, is, notwithſtanding, liable to Cenſure; what ſhall we ſay to Moreri's poſitive Aſſertion, without doubt Cicero alludes? What ſhall we think of it, when we come to know to what he refers that Alluſion? It is not to That Fact, which Eraſmus conjectured he meant: That would have been, in Compariſon, a light Miſtake: But he ſuppoſes Cicero alludes to I know not what Luſtre, which (ſays he) it is certain the Clazomenians, being expell'd from Aſia, gave to the City of Abdera, which made it ſo famous, as to occaſion the Proverb of the Greeks, ABDERA THE BEAUTIFUL. I repeat it again; 'tis plain that Cicero mentions Abdera, only to ridicule the Government of that Place. 'Tis therefore a great Fault to ſay, That without doubt he alludes to the Luſtre, the Glory, and Beauty, of that Town. But beſides, it is not true that the Clazomenians were the Cauſe of this pretended Luſtre, which occaſioned the Proverb. I own, that, according to Solinus, they rebuilt Abdera, and made it larger than it was before, but this is all that we read of them: And, if we conſult Herodotus, we ſhall find that the Thracians did not give them time to build it. After all, is it not certain that Strabo expreſsly applies the Proverb to the Teians, who, for fear of being expoſed to the Inſolence of the Perſians, retir'd to Abdera? Is not the Name of the Teians included in the Proverb? Beſides, let Moreri inform us a little, where he has found, that, when the Clazomenians came to build that Town in Thrace, they had been expell'd from Aſia. Herodotus and Solinus ſpoke not one Word of it. Laſtly, I find every body underſtands this Proverb, rather to the Diſadvantage than to the Advantage of Abdera. Eraſmus himſelf did not reject the Explication of Vadianus, though not much to the Reputation of that City: " Exiſtimat convenire proverbium ubi quis for- " tunam tenuem, ſed cum libertate conjunctam, ante- " ponit amplis opibus, ſed obnoxiis ſervituti. Cujus " ſententiæ non refragor; nam damnatus eſt Abderi- " tarum aër & item paſcua. He thinks the Proverb " is applicable, where any one prefers an humble For- " tune, with Liberty, to large Poſſeſſions, upon the " hard Terms of Slavery. Which Opinion I have " no Objection to, for both the Climate and the Lands " of the Abderites are condemn'd." See Iſaac Voſſius, upon (8) Pomponius Mela.

(7) Epiſt. 16. l. 4. & Epiſt. 7. l. 7.

(5) Eraſmus, Adag. Chil. 2. Cent. 4. n. 53.

(6) Pinedo in Stephan. de Urbib. p. 5.

(8) Pag. 135.

[D] Who aſcribe the Foundation of that Town to Hercules.] Mr de Saumaiſe proves, only (9) by the Teſtimony

(9) Salmaſ. Exercit. Plin. p. 160.

Digitized by Google

which have been transmitted to us concerning Abdera. The Pasture-Ground about it was of such a Nature, that it (f) made Horses mad. There was such a multitude of Frogs and Rats there (g) in the Time of Cassander, King of Macedonia, that the Inhabitants were forced to retire to another Place [E]. But either they returned soon after [F], or the Town was supply'd with other Inhabitants. The Abderites have been very much decried [G] for their want of Wit and Judgment; and yet their Town has produced many great Men, such as Protagoras, Democritus, Anaxarchus, the Historian Hecataeus, (b) the Poet Nicænetus, and several others, mentioned in the Catalogues of illustrious Men. Nothing can be more strange than the Distemper, (f) Plinius, l. 25. c. 8.

(g) Justin. l. 15. c. 2.

(b) Πλεῖστοι δ' Ἀβδηρῖται ὑπὸ τῶν πινακογράφων ἀναγράφονται. Several of the Abderites are recorded by the Index-Writers. Stephanus Byzant. in verbo Ἄβδηρα.

Testimony of Tzetzes, that the Foundation of Abdera was ascribed to Hercules. He might have alledged a better Authority; for Apollodorus (10) tells us, That Hercules, having stollen the Mares of Diomedes, had notice given him, that the Bistones had taken up Arms; that, thereupon he gave those Mares to the keeping of a young Man called Abderus, whom he loved, and march'd against the Bistones; that he kill'd part of them, and put the rest to flight; that he slew likewise Diomedes; but that, at his return, he found the Mares had torn Abderus in pieces: that he built a Town near the Sepulchre of that young Man, and gave those Mares to Eurystheus. Stephen of Byzantium says only, That the Town of Abdera was so called from (11) Abderus, Hercules's Favourite: He does not say whether it was built by Hercules, or by this favourite Boy. This last Opinion is mentioned by Marcianus (12) Heracleota; perhaps the seventh Book of Strabo, if we had it entire, would determine the Matter. The Extracts we have of it only tell us, that the Name of the City of Abdera was taken from a certain Person, who was eaten up by Diomedes's Horses. Observe (13) that Hyginus seems clearly to say, That Abderus was one of Diomedes's Servants, and that he was kill'd by Hercules: "Diomedem regem Thra-
" ciæ & equos quatuor ejus qui carne humana vesce-
" bantur cum Abdero famulo interfecit. He slew
" Diomedes, King of Thrace, and his four Horses,
" who were fed with human Flesh, together with his
" Servant Abderus." Mr de Saumaise observes upon it, that we must not expect to find a great Uniformity in the antient Fables. His Observation is just: The Writers of the fabulous Times, are full of Contradictions. But perhaps it may be said, that Hyginus's meaning is, that Hercules, seconded by Abderus, kill'd this cruel King of Thrace, who fed his Horses with Man's Flesh. I will not warrant this Construction. Vigenere (14) had already observ'd, that Hyginus and Philostratus contradict one another. He might also have said, that the latter very much differs from Apollodorus; for (15) he says, that Diomedes gave up Abderus to his Mares; and that Hercules coming to rescue his Favourite, found him half devoured, and that, to punish Diomedes, he caused him to be eaten up by his (16) own Mares. Philostratus does not say, as Apollodorus does, that Hercules built a Town near the Sepulchre of his Friend; as, on the other Side, Apollodorus does not agree with Philostratus, that Hercules appointed certain Games or Exercises, in honour to the Memory of Abderus. I believe there is but one (17) Author, who has asserted, that Patroclus was Abderus's Brother. Some pretend to prove, (18) by Medals, that the Abderites were more willing to ascribe the Name of their Town to Abdera, Sister of Diomedes, than to the Favourite of Hercules.

(10) Apollodori Bibl. l. 2.

(11) Ἀπὸ Ἀβδηρίτου τοῦ υἱοῦ Ἡρμῆ Ἡρακλέους ἐρασθέντος. Saumaise has rightly observ'd, that instead of Ἀβδηρίτου, it should be Ἀβδήρου; which Name Apollodorus (he says Apollonius) gave to Hercules's Favourite. Pinedo and Berkelius say, that Passage ought to be thus corrected; but they do not tell us that Saumaise had said so before them. The first quotes Apollonius, and was not aware that it is a Fault of the Press, or of Memory, in Saumaise instead of Apollodorus. Philostratus might have been quoted.

(12) Apud Salmas. ubi supra.
(13) Hygini Fab. 30.

(14) Vigenere's Annotations on the Sepulchre of Abderus in Philostratus.
(15) Philostrat. in Icon. ibid.
(16) Vigenere asserts, falsely, that Tatian in his Discourse against the Gentiles, says, that Hercules found Abderus half eaten.
(17) Ptolem. Hephæst. apud Photium p. 484.
(18) Spanheimii Epist. ad Beger.
(19) See Glareanus, Justin Variorum & Grævius, p. 533.

[E] To retire to another Place.] Justin says, That Cassander fearing, least they should invade Macedonia, made a Treaty with them, and placed them on the Frontiers. Cassander's Fear (19) has been laught at: How could a Prince, who kept all Greece in awe, be afraid that the Inhabitants of one single Town, who fled from Frogs and Rats, should invade a whole Country against his Will? Moreri, who, 'tis likely, never knew that Justin was criticiz'd upon that Account, has done all that was requisite to free him from such a Censure; for he declares, That Cassander received very kindly the Abderites in Macedonia. They who depend upon his Dictionary, will not think of criticizing that ancient Historian. Moreri adds, that this Kindness of Cassander is to be referr'd to the Year of the World 3650, according to Eusebius's Chronology. Could any one who reads this, believe that Eusebius has not one Word of that Action of Cassander, and that he does not compute Time according to the Years of the World? But, to go to the Bottom of the Matter, I assert, that, according to Justin, the Abderites were placed by Cassander on the Frontiers of the Country, before he destroy'd the Sons of Alexander: But according to (20) Calvisius, he had entirely got rid of them, in the Year of the World 3641. And therefore Moreri's Chronology is as false, as this Account of Cassander's Kindness is contrary to the only Historian he could follow.

(20) Moreri commonly follows Calvisius's Chronology.

[F] They return'd soon after, or, &c.] What Lucian relates concerning the Distemper of the Abderites, happen'd under the Reign of Lysimachus, and consequently after they were plagu'd with Frogs; for, according to Justin (21), this last Adventure preceeded the Time wherein Lysimachus and Cassander assumed the Title of Kings. To which I add, that, under the Reign of the late King of Macedonia, the City of Abdera was in a flourishing Condition. The (22) Prætor Lucius Hortensius plundered it, but he was blamed for it by the Senate of Rome; and the Abderites were restored to their Liberty.

(21) Justin l. 15. c. 2.

(22) Livius l. 43.

(G) The Abderites have been very much decried.] We have already seen how Cicero treats them in his Letters to Atticus. He is not more complaisant in (23) another Book, wherein, having mentioned an Opinion which he thinks to be ridiculous, he adds, Quæ quidem omnia sunt patriâ Democriti quam Democrito digniora. Which better suit with the Country of Democritus, than with Democritus himself. Juvenal, who could not deny that Democritus was a Man of much Wit, and great Wisdom, pretends 'tis a Proof that great Men may be born in a thick Air, and in a Country of Fools.

(23) Cicero de Natur. Deor. l. 1.

Cujus prudentia monstrat
Summos posse viros & magna exempla daturos,
Vervecum in patria crassoque sub aëre nasci. (24)

(24) Juvenal Sat. 10. v. 49.

Learn from so great a Wit, a Land of Bogs,
With Ditches fenc'd, an Heaven fat with Fogs,
May form a Spirit fit to sway the State,
And make the neighbouring Monarchs fear their Fate.
DRYDEN.

Martial did not entertain a much better Opinion of the Abderites, when he said,

Si patiens fortisque tibi, durusque videtur,
Abderitanæ pectora plebis habes. (25)

(25) Mart. Epigr. 25. l. 10.

If Thou believ'st this Wretch a dauntless Wight,
Thy Judgment speaks the A dull Abderite.

Vigenere (26) grosly mistakes the meaning of this Passage; he thinks the Words are addrest to a Criminal, who represented on the Stage the Action of Mutius Scævola, by putting his Hand into the Fire; but they are apply'd to those, who were so silly, as to mistake it for an Act of Courage, since that Criminal did it only to keep himself from being burnt alive.

(26) Vigenere ubi supra

Nam cum dicatur, tunica præsente molesta,
Ure manum, plus est dicere, non facio. (27)

(27) Mart. ibid.

For, were he bid to burn his Hand alone,
The Fire prepar'd, and pitchy Garment on,
Shou'd he refuse — I'd swear 'twere bravely done.

Isaac Vossius, who was often particular in his Way of thinking, has given us an Apology of a new Cast for the per, which raged for some Months [H] in Abdera, in the Time of Lysimachus (i). It was a violent Fever, that came to a Crisis, and so went off, in seven Days; but it so disordered the Imagination of those that were seiz'd with it, that it converted them into Players. They were perpetually reciting Scraps of Tragedy, especially of the Andromeda of Euripides, as if they were upon the Stage: So that the Streets were full of pale and lean Actors, who were making tragical Exclamations. This continued 'till the next Winter, which proved very cold, and consequently more proper to stop this Raving. Moreri gives a very wrong Account of the Matter [I].

Digitized by Google

(i) Lucian's Method of Writing History, about the Beginning.

Mr Beger

the Abderites. He owns (28), that many of them were born, or became mad; but he pretends 'twas not a Sign of Stupidity, since Madness seldom seizes Blockheads and Fools, but frequently attacks the greatest Wits. As to the Passage of Hippocrates (29) who mentions many Abderites, whose Fever had been attended with Raving, Vossius pretends 'twas not that which occasion'd the Proverb relating to that Town, but rather the pleasing Affection of Mind, which (30) succeeded the Fever. Ex Affectu jucundissimo, qui iprum febribus succedere soleba, ut testatur Lucianus, Scripto de conscribendâ Historia. They became extreamly fond of Verses and Music, and acted the Part of Comedians in the Streets: Such a polite Phrensy as this, says he, does not fall upon stupid and phlegmatic People: Tam elegans insania non cadit in crassos & pituitosos; nedum in vervecea capita. That Author should have remembred Aristotle's Maxim, One Swallow does not make a Summer. Why does he turn into Custom and Habit the Consequences of a Fever that happened but once? What he quotes out of Lucian is a single Fact, on which such Proverbs can't be grounded. I shall observe by the way, that Erasmus did not rightly apprehend Cicero's (31) Meaning; for it must be inferred from the Words of that Roman, not that the Inhabitants of Abdera were stupid, but that, through a prodigious Roving of their Imaginations, they fell into incredible and groundless Paradoxes. "Abderitanis natura peculiatem fuisse mentis stupo-" rem indicat M. Tull. in libris de Natura Deorum. " Cicero, in his Book of the Nature of the Gods, " assure us, that the Abderites were affected with a pe- " culiar Stupidity of Mind," says Erasmus (32). Some very learned Men (33) quote them as the very Words of Cicero: So true it is, that the Collections of Men of Letters, like Virgil's Fame, receive continual Additions by removing from Place to Place.

(28) Isac. Vossius in Pompon. Melam. p. 335.

(29) Hippocrat. l. 3. de morbis vulgar.

(30) Is. Vossius, ibid.

(31) In the 1*st Book* De Natura Deorum.

(32) Adagior. Chil. 4. centur. 6. n. 27.

(33) Cicero, in the Nature of the Gods, says, Abderitani stupori mentis obnoxii sunt. Laur. Begerus Observ. in Numismquæd. p. 16. See also Lloyd and Hofman, in the Word Abdera.

Mobilitate viget, viresque acquirit eundo (34)

—— Each Moment brings,
New Vigour to her Flights, new Pinions to her Wings.
DRYDEN.

(34) Virgilii Æn. 4. l. 175.

They, who pretend that the Word ἀβδηριτολόγος, which is proverbially used in Tatian's Discourse against the Grecians, signifies a Teller of idle Stories, do not, by that, confirm the Charge of Stupidity upon the Abderites. People are not imposed upon by Fools and Blockheads. Not to say that Tatian applies that Word to the Doctrine of Democritus, who certainly was no Fool.

[H] The Distemper, which raged for some Months.] Lucian, who has described it's Symptoms, pretends to have found out the Cause of it. Archelaus, says he, a good Player, having acted Euripides's Andromeda before the Abderites, in a very hot Summer; many came out of the Theatre in a Fever, and having their Imaginations throughly affected with the Tragedy, the Ravings caused by the Fever represented nothing to them but Andromeda, Perseus, Medusa, &c. and so strongly excited in them the Ideas of those Objects, and of the Pleasure they had received from the Representation, that they could not forbear reciting and acting in imitation of Archelaus. I make no doubt, but the first, who acted this Farce in the Streets, after their Fever was over, injured several, who were growing well. Every thing contributed then to the spreading of the Contagion. The Mind is subject to epidemical Distempers as well as the Body; and nothing more is wanting, than a lucky Beginning, and due Preparation. Let an Heresiarch, or a Fanatic, start up at such a time, whose contagious Imaginations, and vehement Passions, know how to gain Ground, and they'll infatuate a whole Country in a little time, or at least a great many People. In other Places, or at other Times, they might not perhaps be able to gain three Proselytes. Recollect the Story of (35) those Virgins of Miletus, who were for some time so disgusted at the World, that they could not be cured of the Design of killing themselves, but by threatening to expose those stark naked to public View, who should make away with themselves. The very Remedy shews that their Passion was only a Distemper of the Mind, wherein the Understanding had no Share. Something like this was seen at Lyons (36) towards the end of the XVth Century. The Difference between these Distempers and the Plague or Small-pox, is only that the latter are infinitely more frequent. I should be induced to think, the Ravage which the Player Archelaus, and the Sun (37), made in the Minds of the Abderites, was rather a Sign of Vivacity than of Stupidity: However, it was always a Mark of Weakness; for which I appeal to those, who have observed what sort of Men are most affected with the Representation of a Play (38). " Quos " (terrores or errores) auxerunt Poëtæ; frequens enim " consessus theatri, in quo sunt mulierculæ & pueri, " movetur audiens tam grande carmen:

Adsum atque advenio Acheronte vix via alta atque ardua
Per speluncas saxis structas asperis, pendentibus, Maximis, ubi rigida constat crassa caligo inferum.

" The Increase of which (Terrors or Mistakes) is " owing to the Poets: for a full Audience, among " which are Women and Children, are greatly af- " fected with such pompous Numbers, as these.

Behold me here, arriv'd from Hell's Abode,
Thro' gloomy Caverns, and rough, hanging, Rocks,
Where Horror dwells, and everlasting Night,
Forcing my dangerous Way!

(35) Plutarch de fortibus fœt. mulierum.

(36) Brodæus Miscell. l. 5. c. 27.

(37) The common Maxim of the Philosophers, Sol & homo generant hominem. The Sun and a Man beget a Man, was verify'd here in a particular manner.

(38) Cicer. Tuscul. 1. c. 16.

[I] Moreri (39) gives a very wrong Account of the Matter.] 'Tis not true, that the Abderites died on the Stage, nor that the Proverb, Abderitica mens, was occasioned by the Distemper, they were then affected with. Moreri would find it very hard to prove that there was such a Proverb: It is not sufficient to maintain that the Abderites were commonly look'd upon as Fools; he should make it appear that these very Words, Abderitica mens, were made use of to denote the general Opinion the World entertained of them; but 'tis certain Erasmus does not quote any one Author, that used these Words. But I will not insist upon that Incident: nay, I am willing to give up as false the following Reflexion, viz. That a Thing of so short a duration, as that Distemper of the Abderites was, which has been only mentioned by Lucian, who made use of it with no other design, than to form the Exordium of a Dissertation; such a Fact, I say, is not sufficient to occasion a Proverb, by which a whole People are for ever render'd infamous. For if it be said, that the sero sapiunt Phryges might have proceeded from one single Error of the Phrygians, I can shew a great difference between the two Cases, since it is certain that as soon as the thing became a Proverb, it was not apply'd to the Phrygians more than any other Nation: Whereas the Reproach cast upon the Abderites, concern'd them literally, and at all times, just as (40) that which is cast upon the Normans and Gascons concerns them in a most proper Sense. But to consider this as a meer Cavil, and to come close to the Point: Moreri's Proverb, Abderitica mens, was only designed to charge the Abderites with great Foolishness; but the Distemper mentioned by Lucian was not Folly; it was a disordered Imagination, and a sort of Madness, which falls rather upon Men of great Wit, than upon Fools and Blockheads:

(39) He has committed many other Faults. See the Remarks [A], [C], and [E].

(40) 'Tis certain that the Proverbs which reflect upon Normandy and Gascony, are grounded upon lasting and habitual Faults, which pass from one Generation to another.

Moreri

Digitized by Google

(k) Laurentius Begerus. His Book was printed at Berlin, in 4to. in the Year 1691.

M. Beger (k), who publiſhed his Conjectures on a Medal of the Abderites [K], which he fancied was ſtruck in memory of this troubleſome Diſtemper, changed his Opinion, after reading the fine Diſſertation written to him (l) on that Subject, which contains ſeveral things relating to the City of Abdera. I ſhall mention ſome of them in the laſt Remark. There was a kind of Ceremony practiſed in that Town on certain Days, which might be called, in ſome Reſpect, an Auto de Fe; for it was without doubt an Act of Religion. I think Ovid is the only Author that mentions it: 'Tis one of the Imprecations, with which he loads his Enemy:

(l) By Ezekiel Spanheim. It was printed with Mr Beger's Treatiſe.

Aut te devoveat certis Abdera diebus,
Saxaque devotum grandine plura petant, (m)

(m) Ovid. in Ibin, v. 465.

A Victim, at Abdera, may'ſt thou bleed,
And all the ſtony Show'r deſcend upon thy Head.

The Commentators are ſilent upon this Paſſage. I ſuppoſe they cannot find the Origin or Circumſtances of that Ceremony. I ſhall take Notice elſewhere of a (n) Temple of Jaſon in Abdera, which Parmenio deſtroyed.

(n) In the Art. Jaſon.

Moreri is therefore to blame for ſaying that his Proverb was grounded on the Phrenzy mentioned by Lucian. Tho' I name Lucian, I am not ignorant that Moreri has only quoted Cœlius Rhodiginus, which (41) he has been already cenſured for. He had that Quotation from Charles Stephens. He, and a great many others, have anſwered, and do anſwer every day, the Hopes, which that Italian Author conceived, when he reſolved to quote no body. He hop'd to be quoted himſelf, which he ſhould not have been, if he had put in the Margins of his Book the Names of the antient Authors, whom he tranſcribed.

(41) In the Dutch Edition of his Dictionary.

[K] On a Medal of the Abderites.] It repreſents a Griffin on the one ſide, and on the other a Man's Head without a Beard, crowned with Laurel, with theſe Words, ΕΠΙΔΙΟΣ ΛΑΙΟΤ. Mr Beger was was of Opinion, that this Medal, conſecrated to Apollo, under the Title of Jupiter the Inauſpicious, ſub Jove ſiniſtro, (the ſame as ſub Vejove at Rome) was intended to denote the exceſſive Influence of the Sun's Heat, which occaſioned the Imperfection with which the Abderites were reproach'd, and which, notwithſtanding, made them good Diſciples of Apollo. Mr de Spanheim underſtands by that Inſcription, the (42) Prætor, or Governor, of Abdera; and ſays, That the Griffin having been the Symbol of Teios, as appears by many Medals, 'tis no wonder that the Inhabitants of Abdera, a Colony of the Teians, ſhould have ſtamp'd the ſame Symbol on their publick Monuments. It was the conſtant Practice of the Colonies, with reſpect to their Mother-Town: The Example of Syracuſe and Corfou, whoſe Arms were a Pegaſus, in imitation of Corinth, is a Proof of it. As for the Head crowned with Laurel, it repreſents Abderus, Hercules's Favourite, or (43) Tiſamenes, the Clazomenian, who was worſhip'd as a Hero by the Teians ſettled in Abdera. Iſaac Voſſius (44) underſtands by the Inſcription of that Medal, Jupiter Frumentarius, Jupiter the Harveſt-God, as if Ζεὺς λαῖος was the ſame thing with Ζεὺς ἐπικάρπιος; and he grounds his Explication upon the Fertility of the Soil which ſurrounded the Town of Abdera; whence the Triballi, being reduc'd to a great Scarcity, flocked thither, according to (45) Diodorus Siculus, it being the moſt fruitful Spot of Ground they could meet with. Mr de Spanheim does not deny; and he mentions another Paſſage of Diodorus (46) Siculus, wherein Abdera is reckon'd to be one of the moſt flouriſhing Towns then in Thrace. He mentions likewiſe another Paſſage out of a Letter, aſcribed to Hippocrates, wherein 'tis only ſaid, That Abdera is no obſcure Town, μία πόλιων ἀδήμος· But, notwithſtanding, he refutes Voſſius concerning the Meaning of the Medal. Before I make an end of this Remark, I muſt obſerve, that it would be very wrong to take for an Inſtance of little Wit, what paſs'd (47) between the Inhabitants of Abdera and Hippocrates, on Democritus's Account. The great Concern they expreſs'd for the Health of Democritus, their Fellow-Citizen, is a Sign of their good Judgment. 'Tis true, Hippocrates did not confirm the Opinion they had entertain'd of Democritus: They took him to be a Fool; but he ſeem'd to Hippocrates to be wiſer than his Countrymen. However this proves nothing; for I am ſure all the Cities of Greece would have judg'd of Democritus as his Countrymen did: And we ſhould at preſent entertain the ſame Opinion of a Philoſopher, who ſhould laugh at every thing; who ſhould ſay, That the Air is full of Images, who ſhould ſtudy the ſinging of Birds, and ſhut himſelf up in Sepulchres, &c. And none but Wits of the firſt Rank, who guard againſt all Prejudice, would be able to form a right Judgment of him. But that ſort of Men are very ſcarce at all Times, and in all Places. They are as ſcarce, and perhaps more, than honeſt Men, who, in Juvenal's Opinion, hardly equal the Number of the Mouths of the Nile.

(42) Epidius Lali Filius.

(43) So Mr de Spanheim calls him, whom Herodotus names Τιμήσιος.

(44) If. Voſſius in Pomp. Melam. p. 135.

(45) Diod. Sicul. l. 15. p. 354.

(45) Id. lib. 13. p. 194.

(47) See the Letters written on both Sides upon that Occaſion, among thoſe of Hippocrates.

——rari quippe boni: numerus vix eſt totidem, quot Thebarum Portæ, aut divitis Oſtia Nili. (48)

(48) Juven. Sat. 13. v. 26.

Good Men are ſcarce, the Juſt are thinly ſown;
They thrive but ill, nor can they laſt, when grown.
And ſhou'd we count them, and our Store compile,
Yet Thebes more Gates would ſhew, more Mouths the Nile.

CREECH.

ABDIAS of Babylon, an Author who deſerves to be ranked amongſt the moſt impudent legendary Writers. He is an Impoſtor, who pretends to have ſeen our Saviour, to have been one of the LXXII Diſciples, to have been Witneſs of the Actions and Death of ſeveral of the Apoſtles; to have followed St Simon and St Jude into Perſia; and to have been eſtabliſhed by them the firſt Biſhop of Babylon. The Work, that goes under his Name, is divided into ten Books, and entituled, Hiſtoria Certaminis Apoſtolici. Wolfgang Lazius (a) found the Manuſcript in a Cave at Carinthia; and, though he was a learned Man, he ſuffered himſelf to be ſo much impoſed upon by that fabulous Writer, that he prepared to publiſh it, as an important Piece. He gave credit to the Inſcription of that Manuſcript, importing that Abdias, made Biſhop of Babylon by the Apoſtles themſelves, had writ in Hebrew this Hiſtory of their Lives; and that it was tranſlated into Greek (b) by Eutropius, and into Latin by Africanus. He publiſhed it at Baſil (c) in the Year 1551, with ſome other Lives of

(a) A Phyſician at Vienna in Auſtria, and Hiſtoriographer to the Emperor Ferdinand I. See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Edition.

(b) The Preface of Julius Africanus ſays, That Eutropius was Pupil of Abdias.

(c) In Octavo.

Digitized by Google

of the Saints. It was since reprinted several times (A), in several Places. Fabricius remarks, that it is a Mistake to suppose it was inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum (d). Laurence de la Barre inserted it in his History of the Fathers at Paris in 1583 (e). 'Tis not Pope Gelasius, as Moreri would have it, but Pope (f) Paul IV. who rejected the Work of our Abdias, as an Apocryphal Piece. Several Writers, both Catholic and Protestant, have acknowledged that 'tis an Imposture. The latter pretend to have undeceived the others [B]: But this is not granted them [C]. After all, there is no great Glory in the Discovery; for this Impostor has had the Assurance to quote (g) Hegesippus, who flourished 130 Years, or thereabouts, after our Saviour's Ascension. He likewise mentions (h) a Disciple of the Apostles, called Crathon, who, as he says, wrote a History, in ten Books, of all the Actions and Sufferings of St Jude in Persia, for the Space of thirteen Years; which History, pursues he, was translated into Latin by Africanus the Historiographer. That Africanus can be no other than Julius Africanus, who died about the Year 230 (i).

(d) J. Alb. Fabr. in Cod. Apocr. N. T. p. 411.
(e) And not in 1581, as 'tis in Moreri.
(f) L'Abbé de Script. Eccles. T. 1. p. 3.
(g) See Vossius, de Hist. Gr. p. 202.
(h) Abd. Hist. Cert. Apost. l. 6. p. 83.
(i) Cave's Hist. liter. p. 72.

[A] Reprinted several times.] Mr du Pin, who mentions the Editions of 1557, 1560, and 1571; and besides, an Edition of Basil, in the (1) Year 1532. and one of Paris, in 1583. has forgot the first, which deserv'd most to be mention'd. I have not by me his Bibliotheque of the Paris Edition; and therefore I dare not affirm, that he takes notice of the pretended Edition of Basil in 1532. Now because he mentions but one Paris Edition, which is that of 1583, the Reader might very well think, that the others mentioned by him are not of Paris: And yet it is certain, that Abdias was publish'd there in the Year 1560, in 8vo, with a Preface of a Doctor of the Sorbonne, call'd John Faber. The Abbreviator of Gesner, and Dr Cave mention a Paris Edition, 1571, in 8vo. 'Tis falsly said in Magirus's Eponymologium, that this Work was printed the first time at Paris, in 1551.

(1) So I find it in the Amsterdam Edition, T. 1. p. 18.

[B] To have undeceived the others.] Consult Rivetus (2) chap 6. of the first Book of his Criticus Sacer, where, having observed the Prepossession of Lazius, and the Authority which Harding and Bellarmine ascribe to our Abdias, he adds; "Ejus nugas & men-" dacia non est quod operosius persequamur, quia jam " ocultioribus Pontificiis ita patent EX NOSTRO-RUM ANIMADVERSIONIBUS, ut eos tam " putidi commenti pudeat. I may spare my self the " pains of a farther Examination of his idle Stories, " and Inventions; since the more judicious Catholics " are so convinced by MY ANIMADVERSIONS, " as to be asham'd of so stale a Cheat." He quotes Baronius, Molanus, Possevin, and even Bellarmine, who thought better of it since; he quotes them, I say, as acknowledging the Imposture of that History of the Apostles.

(2) Rivet. Oper. Tom. 2. p. 107.

[C] This is not granted them.] Father L'Abbé (3) exclaims in a strange manner against Rivetus, on account of the Passage I have just now mention'd. He may be in the right, when he says, the Catholics found out the Imposture, before the Protestants had given them any Insight into the Matter; but he is very much to blame for his sharp and injurious Words; for thus he speaks: "Hasce quisquilias ab otioso fa-" bulatore, qui merito jure Pseudo-Abdias dicitur, " conflatas interpolatasve nullius fidei atque auctorita-" tis esse apud eruditos, docuerunt jampridem Catho-" lici Tractatores, Sixtus Senensis, Joannes Hessels-" lius, Joannes Molanus, Cardin, Baronius, Possevi-" nus, Salmero, Miræus, aliique, ut sileam Vossium, " Cocum, Rivetum, similesque Heterodoxos Criticos, " in alienis ab Ecclesia Catholica castris militantes, " atque ex Catholicorum duntaxat scriptis & observa-" tionibus sufflarcinatos. Mentitur enim pro more " Andreas Rivetus, qui libro 1. cap. 6. effatire ausus " est, oculatiores Pontificios ex suorum, hoc est, " Hæreticorum hominum, animadversionibus edoctos, " nugas & mendacia illius operis deprehendisse, ita " ut eos tam putidi commenti pudeat. Sed, amabo, " quis Calvini catulus hoc commentum subodoratus " est ante Hesselium, Molanum, Sixtum, ipsumque " adeo Paulum IV. Romanum Pontificem, qui inter " scripta à se damnata rejicit?—— Several Catholic " Writers, such as Sixtus Senensis, Johannes Hesselius, " Johannes Molanus, Cardin, Baronius, Possevinus, " Salmero, Miræus, and others, not to mention Vos-" sius, Cocus, Rivetus, and the like heterodox Cri- " tics, who fight under other Banners, than those of " the Catholic Church, and are beholden only to the " Writings and Observations of the Catholics: All " these, I say, have long ago taught, that this Trash, " cook'd up by that idle Fabulist, the Impostor Abdias, " deserv'd to have no Credit or Weight with the learn- " ed. Rivetus, therefore, would impose upon us, ac- " cording to Custom, when he has the Assurance, in " the sixth Chapter of his first Book, to declare, that " his own, that is, the Animadversions of an Here- " tic, had so undeceived the more judicious Catholics, " that they were asham'd of so stale a Device. But, " pray, which of Calvin's Whelps smelt out this be- " fore Hesselius, Molanus, Sixtus, and even Paul IV. " Pope of Rome, who has plac'd this Book in his " Expurgatory Index?" I believe this Book was condemn'd again at Rome, since the Death of Paul IV. for I don't think that Claudius Espencæus means the Condemnation made by that Pope, when he says, "Qualificunque autor sit Abdias, superiore " certè quam hæc scriberemus anno à Romanis In-" quisitoribus proscriptus est. Whatever kind of Au- " thor Abdias may be, it is certain his Book was con- " demn'd, by the Roman Inquisitors, a Year ago," Those Words are in the 5th Chapter of the 5th Book de Continentiâ. The Continuator of Magirus (4) is in the wrong to conclude from thence, that the Year meant in that Passage is 1568; for that Work about Continence was printed (5) in 1565. Peter Paul Vergerius, a Protestant Writer, who died in 1564, exclaimed against the Imposture of our Abdias, in his Iddam Lauretanum.

(3) Phil. L'Abbé, Dissert. de Script. Eccles. Tom. 1. p. 3.

(4) Epony-mol. Critic. p. 2.

(5) See Launoi, Hist. Colleg. Navar. p. 712.

ABDISSI, [A] Patriarch of Musal in Assyria, beyond the Euphrates, came to Rome in the Year 1562, and having paid his Homage to Pius IV. received the Pallium from him. The Council of Trent being then met, the Cardinal de Mula, Protector

(1) Panvinius's Life of Pius IV.
(2) Thuan. Histor. l. 32.
(3) Aub. Miræus, Politic Eccles. l. 2. c. 5. p. 217.
(4) Thuanus calls him Salaka; Spondanus, Sulaka. See the Remarks [A] in the Article Ebedjesu.

[A] ABDISSI.] Onuphrius Panvinius (1) calls him Abdeju, which, says he, signifies Servus Jesu. Surius and Spondanus give him the same Name. Thuanus (2) calls him Abdisus, and adds, that he was the Son of John de Domo Marcia, of the Town of Gezira upon the Tigris. I confess I don't well understand what is meant by domus Marcia; and therefore I can give no Translation of those two Words, that can please me; nor approve that of Moreri, who renders them Mark's House. Aubert Miræus (3) calls the Patriarch we speak of Abdiesu, and says, That he was a Monk of the Order of St Eliehorus; that he succeeded the Patriarch Simon Sulakha (4) a Monk of the same Order, who came to submit to Pope Julius III. that he was a Man of admirable Learning; that he understood many Languages, and was extraordinarily well versed in the Holy Scriptures. Thuanus's Memoirs imported, that he understood the Chaldee, the Arabic, and Syriac, and gave pertinent Answers to the Questions proposed to him. Panvinius, Surius, and Spondanus, affirm the same thing with more Circumstances. He says in his Confession of Faith, as it is set down by them, That he had been a Monk of St Anthony, in the Monastery of St Rochas, and St John, two Brothers. He had very much propagated the Roman Faith, if we may believe Aubert Miræus; but his Successors took no Care to keep it up; so that Leonard Abel, Bishop of Sidon,

Digitized by Google

Protector of the Eastern Christians, acquainted that Assembly with it. His Letters were read in the XXII Session. They imported that the People under the Jurisdiction of that Patriarch had been instructed in the Christian Faith, by the Apostles St Thomas and St Thaddeus, and by one of their Disciples, called Mark; that their Belief was altogether the same with that of the Church of Rome; that they had the same Sacraments and the same Ceremonies; that they had still some Books written from the time of the Apostles; that That Patriarchate reaches into the very Heart of the Indies, and comprehends many Nations, some of which are subject to the Turkish Emperor, others to the Sophi of Persia, and others to the King of Portugal. The Portugueese Ambassador protested immediately, That the Eastern Bishops, subject to the King his Master, acknowledged no Patriarch. Afterwards Abdissi's Confession of Faith was read (a), bearing date the seventh of March, 1562. wherein he promised to observe and teach his Inferiors a perfect and perpetual Conformity of Opinions with the Church of Rome. Lastly, they read the Letters he writ to the Council, to excuse himself for not going thither [B], and to beseech the Fathers to send him their Decrees, which he promised should be punctually observed. All those things had been read already in a Congregation, without exciting any one's Reflexions; but the Protest of the Portugueese Embassador gave Occasion to take notice of the Absurdities of that Account: Some began to murmur; the Portugueese Bishops were ready to speak their Sentiments, when the Proctor, in the Name of the Legates, diverted the Blow. Thus Fr. Paolo (b) relates the Matter: I shall examine this in another Place (c).

(a) It is to be seen in Onuphrius Panvinius's Life of Pius IV. in Surii Comment. p. 754. And in Spondanus, Contin. Annal. ad an. 1562.

(b) History of the Council of Trent.

(c) In the Article Hebedjesu.

the Pope's Nuncio in those Parts, in the Year 1583, found that the Patriarch Donha Simon, who was the second since Abdiesu, had retired towards the Borders of Persia. The Pope's Affairs were not in a better Condition, when Peter Strozza, Secretary to Paul V. publish'd at Rome, and at Cologne, in 1617, his Disputation, De Chaldæorum dogmatibus (5).

(5) See Miræus, ibid. p. 215.

[B] To excuse himself for not going thither.] This shews that Moreri is very much mistaken, when he says, "That Abdissi assisted at the Council of Trent, "and presented his Confession of Faith in the XXII. "Session." Aubert Miræus, committed the same Fault, "qui & Tridentino Concilio interfuit, who was "present likewise at the Council of Trent," says he (6), speaking of his Abdiesu. That which is more surprizing, is, That Moreri quotes Thuanus and Spondanus, though the first says not one Word of that Patriarch's pretended Journey to the Council; and tho' the second expressly says, That they read the Letters, wherein Abdysu excused himself for not coming to Trent. I shall occasionally observe a Fault, which must needs have crept into Thuanus's History: He says (7) That Patriarch came "Ad Apostolorum li- "mina Pontificem salutaturus, ut ab eo confirmatus "partem de corpore Sancti Petri acciperet. i. e. "He came to the Apostolical See, to salute the Pope, "that, being confirm'd by him, he might receive part "of the Body of St Peter." Any one, who reads these Words, would think that he came to ask an Arm or some other Piece of St Peter's Body; for to come to Rome, in order to carry away such Presents, is a thing very acceptable to that Court. But I am perswaded that instead of partem it should be pallium, as we read in Spondanus, who uses almost the same Expression with Thuanus. We may see this in his Continuation of the Annals of Baronius.

(6) Ubi supra, p. 217.

(7) Thuan. l. 32. p. 640. col. 2. edit. Francof. 1625.

ABEL, second Son of Adam and Eve, was a Shepherd. He brought an Offering to God, of the Firstlings of his Flock, at the same Time that his Brother Cain offer'd the Fruits of the Earth. God accepted the Oblation of Abel, but not That of Cain: which displeased the latter so much, that he rose up against the other and slew him. This is all the Account Moses gives us of him (a): But we might greatly enlarge this Article, if we would expatiate upon every Thing, which the Curiosity of human Wit has produc'd upon the Subject. We shall however avoid entering upon the Detail; nor shall we pretend to guess at the Age of Abel, when he was slain. It is impossible to arrive at any Certainty in this Matter; because we know not the Duration of the State of Innocence [A]; nor how much younger Abel was than Cain [B]; nor (a) Gen. iv.

[A] The Duration of the State of Innocence.] Authors are greatly divided upon this Question: Some assert, that Adam fell on the very Day of his Creation; and that he continued in Paradice but six, seven, or ten Hours (1). Others extend the Time to to six, eight, or ten Days; others to thirty four Years. Most of them build their Opinions upon a suppos'd Resemblance between Adam and Jesus Christ: For Instance, if Adam be supposed to continue in Paradice forty Days, or thirty four Years, the Reason is, because Jesus Christ fasted forty Days in the Wilderness, or lived upon Earth thirty Years (2). The Emptiness of these Reasons is obvious to Men of Sense. There are very strong Objections to the Opinion of those, who restrain the State of Innocence to a few Hours; but much stronger against theirs, who continue it to several Weeks or Years. For, with the good Leave of the Rabbins, it is certain from Moses's Account, that Adam did not know his Wife, 'till after their Departure from Paradice. Now, why should he defer the Consummation of his Marriage so long? Had he not received the nuptial Benediction from the Mouth of his Creator? Was he not commissioned, in form, to increase and multiply, and to replenish the Earth? The most substantial Reason for the Delay of this Consummation 'till after the Fall, is that of St Austin (3), that "The Woman was tempted and seduced, almost "as soon as formed. Mox creata mulier, antequam "convenirent, facta est illa Transgressio." The other Reason he gives, namely, that they were obliged to wait the Command of God, is none at all (4); for I have already observed, that this Command had been authentically notified to them. If it could be once proved, that the Innocence of the first Man continued many Days, it would effectually confirm the Opinion of those, who assert, that, had it not been for the forbidden Fruit, Adam and Eve would have preserved their Virginity for ever; and that it was in consequence of God's fore-seeing the Fall, that they were created of different Sexes. But, be that as it will, we cannot determine certainly at what Age they began to propagate. We shall in another Place (5) refute the Opinion of some, that Cain was not conceived 'till a long time after Adam's Transgression; either because his Father abstained from the Pleasures of Matrimony, in Mortification for his Offence; or because he had left Eve for some other Woman.

(1) Pererius upon Gen. B. 6. Quest. 1.

(2) Cornelius à Lapide, upon Gen. iii. 23.

(3) August. l. 9. de Genesi ad lit. cap. 4.

[B] How much younger Abel was than Cain.] The Narration of Moses seems clearly to prove, that Cain and Abel were not Twin-Brothers: Nevertheless, one of the most judicious Interpreters of the Scripture, believed, with some of the Rabbins, that they were.

(4) Potest etiam dici, quia nondum Deus jusserat, ut convenirent: Cur enim non ad hanc rem divina expectaretur Auctoritas, ubi nulla concupiscentia, tanquam stimulus, in obedientia carnis urgebat? Id. ibid. It may be said, that God had not yet commanded them to cohabit together: for why should they not wait the divine Permission, in an Affair, wherein they were not prompted by any carnal Inclinations?

(5) Infra Remarque [E], under the Article EVE.

" Rabbini,

Digitized by Google

nor in what Year of the World he was slain by his Brother [C]. For the same Reason I shall not venture any Conjectures upon the Question, Whether he died a Virgin [D]; nor concerning the Reason of Cain's quarrelling with him. Some say, The Difference between them was a Religious Dispute [E]; others, that they quarrell'd about

" Rabbini, & ex iis Calvinus, putant ex eodem con-
" ceptu Evam peperisse gemellos, Cain & Abel (6).
" The Rabbins, and among them Calvinus, think " that Eve brought forth Twins, Cain and Abel."
But, tho' we should grant this, the Uncertainty would not wholly vanish; unless we could determine precisely the Year of Cain's Birth. But, farther, it does not appear, that Abel was the Twin-Brother of Cain; neither is it certain, that he was born after him. However we may conclude it highly probable, that Cain was born in the first Year of the World, and Abel the Year after. The Revelation ascribed to Methodius, is an an apocryphal Piece, and meer Invention. It is said to have been revealed to him from Heaven, during his Imprisonment for the Faith (7), that Adam and Eve left Paradice in a State of Virginity; that they continued in it fifteen successive Years, wholly taken up with lamenting their Fall; that, at the end of this time, they begat a Son and Daughter at once, whose Names were Cain and Calmana; after which they returned to a State of Continency for fifteen Years more; after which they begat a Son and a Daughter, as before, named Abel and Debora; and that the Murthur of Abel by Cain fell out in the one hundred and thirtieth Year of Adam; which threw Him and Eve into a Fit of Grief, which lasted an hundred Years; after which they begat Seth. The Inhabitants of the Island of Ceylon pretend, that the salt Lake, found on Mount Colombo, is a Collection of Tears, shed by Eve, during an hundred Years, for the Death of Abel (8). The Rabbins will have it, that Adam lamented his Son's Death an hundred Years, in the Vale of Tears near Hebron, without any carnal Commerce with his Wife (9); which probably would have continued longer, had not an Angel from God commanded him to cohabit with Eve, because the Messiah was not to descend from the Family of Cain. Idle Tales! The State of the World was so far from requiring such a long fit of Sorrow, that, on the contrary, it demanded, that they should comfort themselves by repairing the Loss: So that it is highly probable, that Adam and Eve presently mollify'd their Grief by the mutual Satisfaction of procuring themselves another Son, in the room of Abel, who was slain. Yet one would hardly believe, how industriously this Fable of Adam and Eve's long Divorce from the Marriage-bed has been preached up. We shall treat of it under the Article LAMECH.

(6) Corn. à Lap. upon Gen. iv. 2.

(7) See the Author of Hist. Scholast. in Libr. Hist. Genes. xxv. in Perrius upon Genesis.

(8) See Chevreau's History of the World, Tom. 4. p. 255. Dutch Edition, in 1687.

(9) In Salian, Tom. 1. p. 190.

[C] In what Year of the World he was slain by his Brother.] Some have thought it probable, that this Murthur was committed the same Year that Seth was born; i. e. in the one hundred and thirtieth of Adam: It has been thought probable, I say, because Eve, in giving the Name of Seth to the Child she had brought forth, assigns this as a Reason: For God hath appointed me another Seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew (10). But it must be granted, that this is rather a Proof, that Seth was the first Child which Eve bore after the Murthur of Abel, than that his Death was immediately followed by the Birth of Seth. St Austin even denies the Right of Eldership to Seth over all the Children of Adam and Eve, born after the Death of Abel. He interprets the Words of Eve to imply, not the Appointment of another Son, but the restoring of Virtue; i. e. that Seth was considered as Successor to the Piety and Sanctity of Abel. " Potuit Adam (says he) divinitus admonitus dicere,
" postea quam Seth natus est, suscitavit enim mihi
" Deus semen aliud pro Abel (11); quando talis erat
" futurus, qui impleret ejus Sanctitatem (12). Adam,
" by Divine Inspiration, might well say, at the Birth of
" Seth, God hath raised me up another Seed instead of
" Abel; since he was to inherit his Brother's Sanctity."
But this can only be Conjecture, and if the Words of Eve, cited above, leave us full Liberty of Judgment, we shall carry the Murthur of Abel very high; for thus natural Reason will teach us. Cain and Abel made their Offerings to God, when the one's Crop, and the other's Flock, furnished them with sufficient Means. They immediately perceived how differently their Presents were received by God (13). Cain's Disgust soon after hurried him into the Design of killing his Brother. He murthured him, then, before the Age of sixty; for it was in the fiftieth Year of the World, according to Eusebius, that Adam allotted to his Sons the Manner of Life he intended they should follow. There was time enough, we are told, for Deliberation in this Affair; since, at that time, the Length of Childhood must have been proportionable to the Length of Life. With all my Heart; I shall not dispute it. I will allow, that Cain and Abel were not capable before the Age of fifty, the one to till the Earth, the other to keep Sheep; but pray let them be capable at that Age. Now, upon this Supposition, can any thing be more natural, than to believe they made their Offerings at the end of two or three Years at latest; and that in a like interval of time the envious and jealous Cain got rid of his Brother? Can any thing be more improbable than the common Opinion, that the two Brothers began to exercise their Occupations in the fiftieth Year of the World; that they made their Offerings in the hundredth, and that Cain was slain in the hundred and thirtieth? Neither Reason nor Scripture lead us to imagine, that Cain stifled his Resentment for so long a time in his Breast (14). A very judicious Author has fixed the Birth of Seth to about an hundred Years after the Death of Abel (15). Some Authors place Abel's Death in the Year of the World 102 (16). But the Generality are for the Year 130; which is thought to be the same with the hundred and twentieth ninth of Abel. I might, in support of this Opinion, refer to Cajetan, Turniel, Pererius, Cornelius à Lapide, Salian, and many other Commentators, whose Works may be compared to Children of the same Family;

—— Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diversa tamen, qualem decet esse sororum. (17)

Tho' various Features did the Sisters grace,
A Sister's Likeness was in every Face.
ADDISON.

Thus all Parties, all Bodies, all Societies, have a Variety of Authors, who copy after each other.

(10) Gen. iv. 25.

(11) Austin attributes to Adam, what, according to the Scripture, were the Words of Eve.

(12) August. de Civit. Dei. l. 15. c. 15.

(13) The Scripture speaks of but one Oblation of these two Brothers; so that the Supposition of Salian, Tom. 1. p. 185. that Cain did not perceive, till after a long Time, and repeated Offerings, that he was rejected, and his Brother in favour with God, is groundless.

(14) See the Reference to the Targum of Jerusalem, and the Annals of Eutychius in the Remark [F].

(15) Cunæus de Rep. Hebr. l. 3. c. 1.

(16) St Romuald's Abridg. Chronol.

(17) Ovid. Metam. B. 2. v. 13.

[D] Whether he died a Virgin.] Some Fathers of the Church have maintained the Affirmative (18); and the Heretics, taken notice of below, who took their Name from Abel, are of the same Opinion: but those who believe, that Abel lived an hundred and twenty nine Years, think it improbable he should die a Batchelor. The World stood too much in need of being peopled, for Continency to be a Virtue. Father Salian makes no Difficulty to declare, that the Celibacy of Abel is absolutely improbable; and shews, that St Jerom and St Austin did not doubt of his Marriage (19); and that St Irenæus is not to be charged with the Expression imputed to him by Genebrard (20), namely, that Abel was a Maid, a Priest, and a Martyr; upon the Account of which three Qualifications the Church is said to begin in him. There is another Author, who ascribes these three fine Qualifications to him (21). But if we may depend upon the Tradition of Eutychius, produced below, we can no longer question the Virginity of Abel, since, according to that, his Death preceded the Marriage of his two Brothers.

(18) St Jerom, St Basil, St Ambrose, in Corn à Lapide upon Gen. iv. 2. but Salian. in his Annals, Tom. 1. p. 184. owns, that St Jerom was not of this Opinion.

(19) Salian's Annals.

(20) Chronolog. B. 1.

(21) The Author of Miscellan. Sacr. Script. in August. Tom. 3. B. 1. ch. 2. in Salian's Citation of the Annals, Tom. 1. p. 184.

[E] Was a religious Dispute.] The Targum of Jerusalem relates, that Cain and Abel being in the Field, the former asserted that there was no Judgment, nor Judge, nor Life Eternal, nor Rewards for the Good, nor Punishment for the Wicked; and that the World was neither created, nor governed, by the Goodness of God; For, says he to his Brother, my Oblation was not received, but your's was. Abel answered him in his own Words, substituting only the Affirmative for the Negative; and, as to his principal Complaint, his Answer was, that His Works being better than those of Cain, were the Occasion of the Preference given to his Offering. The Dispute growing warm, Cain fell upon Abel, and slew him (22). This was the impious beginning of Disputes in Religion; and a fatal Presage of the terrible Confusions

(22) Selian's Citation of Paraphr. Hierosol. in Locum. Tom. 1. p. 188. See, upon this Subject, the Historical Pieces of John Billius, a German Jesuit. Filedh. Reinar. Decad. 1. p. 226, &c.

Digitized by Google

bout a Woman [F]. Nor is there a leſs Diverſity of Opinions concerning the Manner, in which this horrid Murthur was committed [G]. But it is not ſo much controverted, in what Manner they diſcover'd the Preference which God gave to Abel's Offering. The common Opinion is, That Fire from Heaven fell upon Abel's Sacrifice [H]; but that nothing of that kind happen'd to the Offerings of Cain. But, as we are very apt to fancy we diſcover the Marvellous in every Story of this Kind, ſome have ſaid (b), that there appeared the Figure of a Lion, in the middle of the Fire, which fell upon Abel's Sacrifice; which, ſay they, had relation to the Lion of the Tribe of Juda, whoſe coming was then already promis'd. I have thrown together in the Remarks a great Variety of Opinions, in relation to Abel's Story. It is indeed a Heap of abſurd Notions and Errors; but the Reader, in paſſing his Judgment upon them, muſt remember, that ſuch a Collection anſwers the End and Deſign of this Dictionary: which Caution I here give once for all.

(b) In Salian, Tom. 1. p. 19; and in Biſſelius's Ruinar. Illuſtr. Decad. 1.

Confuſions they were to cauſe in the World. It affords us likewiſe an Inſtance of the fooliſh Vanity of Man; who is never ſo much led to doubt of a Providence, as when Things do not ſucceed according to his Wiſhes. Give him but Proſperity; his Doubts vaniſh: The Reaſon is, he thinks he holds too conſiderable a Rank in the Univerſe to be overlooked by an equitable and judicious Diſpenſer of Good and Evil. " Eſt ſic Superi, ait Statius, cum " convaluiſſet à periculoſo morbo vir eximiæ probi- " tatis Rutilius Gallicus. At contra, ubi quid con- " tigerat contra quam æquum eſſe cenſerent, Deos " aut nullos eſſe, aut crudeles & injuſtos eſſe dice- " bant. —— Itaque in morte Tibulli Ovidius.

Cum rapiant mala fata bonos, ignoſcite faſſo,
Sollicitor nullos eſſe putare Deos.

" I acknowledge ye, O ye Gods! cry'd Statius, when " Rutilius Gallicus, a Man of diſtinguiſhed Honeſty, " had recovered from a dangerous Diſeaſe. On the " contrary, if any thing fell out, which they did not " like, they either denied the Being of the Gods, or " charged them with Cruelty and Injuſtice. Hence " Ovid, upon the Death of Tibullus,

When, ſnatched by cruel Fate the Good and Juſt,
Periſh, and ſink untimely to the Duſt,
(May I the bold Confeſſion be forgiven)
I almoſt think there are no Gods in Heaven.

This is the Language of one of the beſt Orators of the XVIth Century (23).

(23) Muretus's Orat. Oration. Vol. 2.

[F] Quarelled about a Woman.] Eutychius, Patriarch of Alexandria, tells us in his Annals (24) that Eve brought forth, together with Cain, a Daughter named Azrun; and, together with Abel, a Daughter named Owain: and that, the time of marrying theſe two Sons being come, Adam allotted Owain to Cain, and Azrun to Abel; and treated Cain with Severity for deſiring his Twin Siſter, who was the moſt beautiful of the two. Eutychius adds, that the two Brothers going to preſent their Offering upon the top of a Mountain, by the Order of Adam, who deſired they might perform this religious Act before their Marriage, and that the Succeſs of their Sacrifice might decide their Quarrel; the Devil ſecretly prompted Cain to murthur his Brother for the Love of Azrun; which, preventing his Offering from being agreeable to God, ſo enraged Cain againſt his Brother, that they were ſcarce come down from the Mountain, when Cain, with a Stone, daſhed out his Brother's Brains. The beautiful Azrun, whom Cain immediately after married (25), and carried with him into Exile, was indeed the Cauſe, but the innocent one, of Cain's Crime; and verifies the Aſſertion of the Latin Poet concerning the Antiquity of Wars raiſed upon the Account of Women;

(24) Eutychius's Annals. I make uſe of Pocock's Tranſlation. The Printer of Hiſtoria Patriarch. Heidelberg. Tom. 1. p. 192. puts Precopius.

Nam fuit ante Helenam Cunnus teterrima belli
Cauſa (26).

E'er Grecian Helen liv'd, the falſe, the fair,
Beauty has been the fatal Source of War.

(25) Horace Sat. 3. B. 1. v. 107.

(26) Heraclitus mentioned by Heidegger, Hiſtor. Xl.

The Arabantics (27), and the Cabbaliſts (28), agree with this Tradition of Eutychius. I have read in the Commentary of Father Merſenne upon Geneſis, Page the 1415th, and 1431ſt, that there are ſome Rabbins, who ſay, that Abel had two Twin-Siſters, and that Cain deſired to marry them both. This, ſay they, was the ground of their Quarrel. The Inclination then to Polygamy, muſt be very old. Laſtly, it appears by the Citation from the Targum, and that from the Patriarch of Alexandria, that the Death of Abel enſued immediately upon the Sacrifice, wherein God had declared in his Favour. This Chronology is a thouſand times more probable, than that which places thirty Years between the Offerings of the two Brothers, and the Murthur of Cain.

(27) Eutychius. See Hottinger's Hiſt. Orient. p. 27.

(28) In Heidegger's Hiſt. Orient. p. 161. See Selden de Jure Nat. & Gent. B. 3. ch. 2. and Buxtorf. Rabbinic. Lexicon. in Cheled, col. 2...

[G] The Manner in which this horrid Murthur was committed.] We have ſeen, that it was with the Blow of a Stone, according to ſome Authors. Others ſay, that Cain tore him in Pieces with his Teeth. Hebræorum nonnulli tradant eum fuiſſe morſibus à Cain dilaceratum (29). Others, that he knocked him down with the Jaw-bone of an Aſs: The Painters are directed by this Hypotheſis. Some pretend, that he made uſe of a Pitchfork. St Chryſoſtom puts a Sword into his Hand; St Irenæus arms him with a Scythe; Prudentius gives him a kind of Hedging-Bill.

(29) Peraſius upon Geneſ. B. 4. at ver. 8. and 9. ch. iv.

Frater probatæ ſanctitatis æmulus
Germana curvo colla frangit falcula (30).

Envious of his Brother's approved Sanctity, he broke his Neck with a crooked Hedging-Bill.

(30) Prudent. in Hamartig. præf. 15.

See Salian and Biſſelius; the one, Page 189 of the firſt Volume of his Annals; the other Page 234 and 254 of the firſt Tome of his Illuſtr. Ruinar. " It " is certain, ſays an Author (31), that Abel was " neither drowned, nor ſtrangled; for the Scripture " witneſſes, that he died with Effuſion of Blood." Some ſuppoſe, that he defended himſelf bravely; and that at firſt he had the Advantage: that he threw Cain upon the Ground, and gave him his Life; but that Cain got up, and flew him. Father Merſenne reports this Dream in the 1431ſt Page of his Commentary on Geneſis.

(31) Peraſius upon Geneſis, ch. iv. ver. 8, and 9.

[H] That Fire from Heaven fell upon Abel's Sacrifice.] St Jerom has preſerved this Tradition (32), and confirms it from Theodotion, who follows him in his Verſion of the Scripture. " Niſi illa Inter- " pretatio vera eſſet, quam Theodotion poſuit, & in- " flammavit Dominus ſuper Abel, & ſuper Sacrifi- " cium ejus; ſupra vero Cain & Sacrificium ejus " non inflammavit (33). —— If the Interpretation of " Theodotion be true; and God ſent Fire upon Abel " and his Sacrifice, but not upon Cain and his Sa- " crifice." It is generally approved of by the Fathers of the Church; and is a probable Opinion, becauſe Fire from Heaven has frequently been the Signal of God's Approbation of a Sacrifice. At the Conſecration of Aaron, God gave this Mark of his Approbation (34). Gideon, David, Solomon, (ſome add Nehemiah) were honoured with this extraordinary Favour in ſome of their Sacrifices (35). Cornelius à Lapide ſays, that Calvin and Luther laugh'd at this Deſcent of Fire from Heaven upon Abel's Sacrifice, as a Jewiſh Fable (36); but Mr Heidegger quotes a Paſſage of Luther againſt him, which plainly proves the contrary. " Etſi Moſes illud ſignum, " quo Deus oſtendit ſibi Abel munera grata eſſe, non " oſtendit, tamen veriſimile eſt fuiſſe ignem cœlo " demiſſum, quo oblatio hauſta & conſumpta in ocu- " lis omnium (37). —— Though Moſes does not record " by what Sign God declared his Approbation of " Abel's Offering, yet it is probable that Fire de- " ſcended from Heaven, and conſumed the Oblation " in the Sight of all." The Proteſtant Divines ſhare

(32) Hieron. Tradit. Hebr.

(33) Hieron. Quæſt. Hebr.

(34) Levit. chap. ix.

(35) Conf. the Book of Judges, ch. vi. 1 Kings, ch. xviii. 1 Chron. ch. xxi. 2 Chron. ch. vii. 2 Maccab. ch. i.

(36) Com. in Lapide upon Geneſis, ch. iv. ver. 4. p. 97.

(37) Luther on Genes. ch. iv. ver. 4. in Heidegger. Hiſt. Patriarch. Tom. 1. p. 161.

Digitized by Google

declare in Crouds for this Hypothesis (38), and some of them are confirmed in it by the Words of one of the Psalms (39), which Clement Marot has thus translated:

Dè tes offertes & services
Se veuille souvenir,
Et faire tous les sacrifices
En cendre devenir.

May be remember thy Offerings, and Services, and reduce thy Sacrifices to Ashes.

The Pagans boast of such kind of extraordinary Marks of the Approbation of Heaven in some Places, as we shall show under the Article EGNATIA. We know very well that the Devil mimicks the True God.

(38) See Salden's Otia Theolog. p. 337.

(39) Psalm xx.

ABELARD (Peter) in Latin Abælardus, was one of the most celebrated Doctors of the XIIth Century. He was born at Palais [A], a Town four Leagues distant from Nantes in Brittany: and, as he was of a very subtile Genius, there was nothing in his Course of Studies, to which he apply'd himself with greater Success, than Logic. He travell'd to divers Places with no other view, than to exercise himself in that Science; disputing wherever he came, throwing about his Syllogisms, and greedily catching at every Opportunity of distinguishing himself against some Thesis. Never did Knight-Errant more eagerly seek occasion to break a Lance in in Honour of the Ladies. Abelard finish'd his Studies at Paris, where he met with a celebrated Professor in Philosophy, nam'd William Champeaux (a). He became soon his favourite Disciple: but this continu'd not long: the Professor found it so difficult to answer the subtile Objections of his Scholar, that he conceiv'd a Disgust and Hatred towards him. Immediately it became Matter of Party: the older Scholars, envious of Abelard, seconded their Master's Dislike. This increased the Assurance of the young Logician so much, that he resolv'd to set up for a Teacher himself. He chose a large Theatre to act this Part on; for he erected a School at Melun [B], where the Court of France resided at that Time. Champeaux did all he could to prevent the setting up of this School; but, as he had very powerful Enemies, his Opposition was the principal Cause of his Rival's Success (b). The Reputation of this new Master of Logic, made so surprizing a Progress, as to eclipse that of Champeaux. Abelard was so elevated with this Success, that he remov'd his School to Corbeil, in order to press his Enemy close with frequent Disputes; but the great Application, with which he follow'd his Studies, threw him into an Indisposition, which obliged him to retire to his native Air. He stay'd some Years in Brittany, and then return'd to Paris; where he found that Champeaux, who had resign'd his Chair to another, and embrac'd the Religion of the Regular Canons, continued teaching among them. He disputed against him, with such force of Argument, concerning the Nature of Universals, that he obliged him to give up his Opinion

(a) Guliel-mus Campellensis. He was Arch-deacon of Paris.

(b) Quoniam de potentibus terræ nonnullos ibidem habebat æmulos; fretus eorum auxilio voti mei compos extiti, & plurimorum mihi assensum ipsius invidia manifesta conquisivit. Abelardi Epist. 1. p. 5. As he had, there, some Enemies among the great Men, I succeeded by their Assistance; and his manifest Envy procured me the Approbation of many.

[A] He was born at Palais.] His Father had applied himself a little to his Studies, before he bore Arms; and took great Care of the Education of his Children, particularly the eldest. Whether Abelard was this eldest, is uncertain; for he speaks of this Matter so ambiguously, as to give Occasion to two different Opinions. These are his Words: "Primogenitum suum, quanto chariorem habebat, tanto "diligentius erudire curavit. Ego vero, quanto amplius in studio literarum profeci, tanto ardentius in "iis inhæsi, & in tanto earum amore illectus sum, "ut militaris gloriæ pompam cum hæreditate & "prærogativa primogenitorum meorum fratribus derelinquens, Martis curiæ penitus abdicarem, ut "Minervæ gremio educarer. —— The more he lov'd "his eldest-born, the more Care he took in his Education; For my own Part, the farther Progress I "made in my Studies, the greater Desire I had to "pursue them; and so fond was I of them, as to "leave the Pomp of Military Glory, with the In-"heritance and Privileges of Eldership, to my Bro-"thers; and, renouncing the Court of Mars, to be edu-"cated in the Bosom of Minerva." Pasquier, upon the Authority of these Words, makes no doubt of calling him the eldest Son (1): but others positively affirm, that he was a younger Brother. This is the Opinion of Father Alexander. "Militaris Gloriæ "pompam cum hæreditate primogenitis fratribus de-"relinquens, says he (2), speaking of Abelard, i. e. "leaving the Pomp of Military Glory, with the In-"heritance, to his elder Brothers." Some make him the youngest of the Family (3). If I might chuse, I should not perser the last Interpretation to the former. Doubtless the Sirname of Palatinus, which he bore, was deriv'd from Palatium, the Name of the Place of his Nativity. He was so well known by the Name of Peripateticus Palatinus, that Johannes Sarisberiensis never stiles him otherwise (4). Some imagine, that this Epithet was given him on Account of some magnificent Building, where he deliver'd his Lectures (5). But this is without Foundation,

(1) Pasquier's Recherch. de la France. B. 6. ch. 17.

(2) Natal. Alex. Cent. xi. & xii. part 3. p. 2.

(3) Du Pin's Biblioth. T. 9. p. 108.

(4) See his Policraticus, p. 111. and his Metalogicus, p. 745, 802, 814, &c. Leyden Edit. 1639. 8vo.

(5) Jac. Thomasius's Life of Abelard. See below the Citation (13).

[B] A School at Melun.] I have not found, in comparing the Relation of Abelard with the Abridgment of it, given us by Pasquier, that it is abridg'd with great Exactness. The Series of his Adventures, according to the Abridgment, is as follows. Abelard went and settled at Corbeil, when he first left Paris: he returned to Paris, when Champeaux became a Monk; he was obliged to quit it a second time: and then he retired to Melun: he returned to Paris again, being informed, that Champeaux was gone to reside at his Bishoprick of Châlons: Champeaux, apprized of his Return, came back to Paris to oppose Abelard: This latter was at length obliged to quit his Design, and became a Disciple of Anselm, Lecturer of Divinity at Paris: He became afterwards himself Lecturer of Divinity; and was intreated by a certain Canon to employ one Hour every Day in instructing his Niece. He complied with this Request; and having continued this Occupation for some time, Love made himself of the Party with them. There are many Faults in this Narrative. I. Abelard did not settle at Corbeil 'till after he had been at Melun. II. When he left Melun the second time, Champeaux was retired to a Village near Paris, and not to his Bishoprick of Châlons, which was not yet given him; he being then but a Regular Canon: and I am surprized that Pasquier was not sensible how absurd it was to suppose a Bishop should leave his Episcopal See to dispute with a Regent of Philosophy at Paris. III. Abelard was not conquered in this Dispute; he quitted Paris only to pay a Visit to his Mother, who was going into a Convent. IV. Anselm read Divinity at Laon, and not at Paris, V. The Canon did not request that his Niece might be instructed; Abelard himself entreated to be entertained in the Canon's House. VI. Abelard desired the Enjoyment of Eloisa, before he gave her any Lessons. With what Distrust ought we to read a great Number of Books, when Pasquier stumbles so often in so plain a Road?

Digitized by Google

nion, which at the bottom was a diſguis'd Spinoziſm [C]. This brought the Monk into ſuch Contempt, and rais'd the Character of his Antagoniſt ſo high, that Champeaux's Logic Lectures were entirely forſaken, and the Profeſſor himſelf, to whom Champeaux had reſign'd, thought fit to become the Scholar of Peter Abelard. This latter was no ſooner in poſſeſſion of the Chair, than he ſaw himſelf expos'd more and more to the darts of Envy. The Regular Canon manag'd it ſo, that, on pretence of ſome ſiniſter Management, the Reſignation made to Peter Abelard was declared void, and a profeſs'd Enemy appointed to ſucceed him. Upon this Abelard left Paris, and retired to Melun, to teach Logic there, as before. He continued there not long; for, hearing that Champeaux had retired, with his whole Fraternity, to a Village, he came and ſettled upon Mount St Genevieve, and erected his School, as a kind of Battery [D], againſt the Pariſian Doctor. Champeaux, ſeeing the Creature of his own raiſing thus beſieged in his School, brought back the Regular Canons to their Convent: but, inſtead of relieving his Friend, it occaſioned all his Scholars to forſake him: This Deſertion was follow'd ſome time after with the Retirement of this poor Philoſopher to a Convent. From that time the Conteſt lay wholly between Abelard and Champeaux: they alone diſputed the ground; but ſuperior Age was not attended with Victory. Whilſt this Struggle yet continued, Abelard was obliged to pay a Viſit to his Mother, who, after the example of her Huſband, was preparing to embrace a Religious Life. Returning to Paris, he found his Rival made Biſhop of Chalons: therefore, as he could now give up his School, without the Imputation of flying from the Field of Battle, he determin'd to ſtudy Divinity; for which reaſon he remov'd to Laon [E], where his Schoolmaſter Anſelm read Lectures in that Science

[C] A diſguis'd Spinoziſm.] I appeal for this to the Judgment of thoſe who underſtand the following Words. " Erat in eâ ſententiâ de commu- " nitate univerſalium; ut eandem eſſentialiter rem " totam ſimul ſingulis ſuis ineſſe aſtrueret indivi- " duis, quorum quidem nulla eſſet in eſſentiâ diver- " ſitas, ſed ſolâ multitudine accidentium varietas. He " was of that Opinion, concerning the Sameneſs of " Univerſals, which aſſerts, that the ſame Thing ex- " iſts eſſentially and wholly in every one of it's In- " dividuals, among which there is no Difference as " to Eſſence, but only a Variety ariſing from a Num- " ber of Accidents (6)." The Scotiſts, with their univerſale formale à parte rei, or their unitas formalis à parte rei, are not wide of this Notion. Now I ſay, that Spinoziſm is only carrying this Doctrine farther: for, according to the Followers of Scotus, Univerſal Natures are indiviſibly the ſame in every one of their Individuals: The Human Nature of Peter is indiviſibly the ſame with the Human Nature of Paul. Upon what Fouudation do they ſay this? Why, becauſe the ſame Attribute of Man, which is applicable to Peter, agrees with Paul. This is the very Fallacy of the Spinoziſts. The Attribute, ſay they, does not differ from the Subſtance, of which it is prædicated: therefore, wherever the ſame Attribute is found, there is the ſame Subſtance; and, conſequently, ſince the ſame Attribute is found in all Subſtances, there can poſſibly be but one Subſtance. There is, then, but one Subſtance in the Univerſe; and all the Variety we ſee in the World is but different Modifications of one and the ſame Subſtance. Abelard's Antagoniſt had nothing of Weight to reply to this; and I cannot ſee what Anſwer the Cordelier Fraſſen (7), who adheres ſtrictly to the Doctrine of Scotus, amidſt the Lights of Philoſophy, which brighten this Age, could have given to Spinoza. But the reſt of the Schoolmen had nothing more to do, in order to overthrow this falſe Syſtem, but to diſtinguiſh between Identity in Number, and Identity in Species or Likeneſs. Peter and Paul have not the ſame Nature, nor the ſame Attribute, if by ſame you mean any thing elſe than like.

(6) Abelard's Epiſt. 1. p. 5.

(7) See the Capuchin Caſimir of Toulouſe in his Atom. Peripatet. T. 5. p. 132.

[D] As a kind of Battery.] It will be proper to hear his own Account of this Matter. " Quia locum " noſtrum ab æmulo noſtro fecerat occupari, extra " civitatem in monte S. Genovefæ Scholarum no- " ſtrarum caſtra poſui, quaſi eum obſeſſurus, qui lo- " cum occupaverat noſtrum. Quo audito, Magiſter " noſter ſtatim ad urbem impudenter rediens, Scholas, " quas tunc habere poterat, & Conventiculum Fra- " trum, ad priſtinum reduxit Monaſterium, quaſi " militem ſuum, quem deſeruerat, ab obſidione noſtra " liberaturus (8). —— The Place, I enjoyed, being " uſurped by my Rival, I encamped my School, with- " out the City, upon Mount St Genevieve, as it were " to beſiege my Succeſſor: upon the News of which, " my Præceptor, returning confidently to the City, " brought back what Schools he could at that time " procure, together with the whole Brotherhood, to " their former Monaſtery, as it were to relieve his " own Soldier, whom he had deſerted, from my Siege." The Life of Abelard, publiſhed by M. Thomaſius (9) in Germany, informs me of one Particular, which Andrew du Chêne, Francis d' Amboiſe, and perhaps all who have ever ſpoke of Abelard, were ignorant of. It is, that, in the midſt of his Troubles and Perſecutions, and after he had placed Eloiſa in the Paraclet, he returned to the Reading of his public Lectures on Mount St Genevieve. Johannes Sariſberienſis confirms this paſt a Doubt. " Cum primum, " ſays he (10), adoleſcens admodum, ſtudiorum cauſa " migraſſem in Gallias, anno altero poſtquam illuſtris " Rex Anglorum Henricus, Leo Juſtitiæ, rebus ex- " ceſſit humanis, contuli me at Peripateticum Pa- " latinum, qui tunc in Monte S. Genovefæ clarus " Doctor & admirabilis omnibus præfidebat. Ibi ad " pedes ejus prima artis hujus rudimenta accepi, & " pro modulo ingenioli mei quicquid excidebat ab ore " ejus totâ mentis aviditate excipiebam. Deinde, " poſt diſceſſum ejus, qui mihi præproperus viſus " eſt, adhæſi Magiſtro Alberico, qui inter cæteros " Dialecticos enitebat, & erat re verâ nominalis ſectæ " acerrimus impugnator. —— When I firſt travel- " led into France, being very young, in order to " proſecute my Studies, a Year after the Death of " Henry King of England, the Lion of Juſtice, I " betook myſelf to the Peripatetic of Palatium (11), " who at that time was a celebrated Doctor, and in " great Reputation upon Mount St Genevieve. " There, at his Feet, I was inſtructed in the " firſt Principles of this Science, and received, " to the beſt of my Abilities, whatever fell " from his Lips, with the utmoſt Eagerneſs. Af- " ter his Death, which to me ſeemed too haſty, " I was a conſtant Follower of the Teacher Alberi- " cus, who was the moſt eminent Logician of the " Times, and indeed, the moſt violent Oppoſer of the " Nominal Sect." This plainly points out the Year 1136. Abelard therefore muſt have been returned to Paris long time after the Council of Soiſſons, and have left it a few Years before the Council of Sens.

(8) Abelard's Epiſt. p. 6.

(9) He is the Son of James Thomaſius, Profeſſor at Leipſic, Author of this Life of Abelard, printed at Hall, in 1693. See Citation below (13).

(10) Jo. Sariſb. Metalog. lib. 3. c. p. 10. p. 802.

(11) i. e. Abelard, as the Author himſelf explains it, p. 814. In hac opinione, ſays he, deprehenſus eſt Peripateticus Palatinus Abelardus noſter.

[E] He removed to Laon.] Otho of Friſingen has miſplaced Facts, when he ſays, that Abelard ſtudied firſt under Rozelin, then under Anſelm of Laon, and William des Champeaux, Biſhop, of Châlons (12). The Order of Time is not obſerved: beſides this William was not a Biſhop, at the time when Abelard was his Scholar. I have met with a Book (13), in which the Author ſuppoſes, that Abelard ſucceeded this William in the Divinity-Chair, in the Year 1119: But firſt, it does not appear, that this pretended Predeceſſor taught that Science. And it is farther certain, that Abelard read Theological Lectures at Paris, before the Year 1119: for it is not poſſible, that all his Adventures, from his firſt Lectures to the

(12) Otho of Friſ. de Geſtis Frider. I. lib. 1. cap. 47.

(13) The Hiſtory of Wiſdom and Folly, collected by Chriſt. Thomaſius, Tom. 1. p. 81. In this we find the Life of Abelard mentioned above, viz. that which Jac. Thomaſ. compoſed

Digitized by Google

Science with great Reputation. He was not greatly satisfy'd with this Person's Capacity [F]; and, instead of attending his Lectures, he undertook to read himself to his School-Fellows. He explained to them the Prophecies of Ezekiel in so pleasing a manner, that in a short time his new Auditory was crowded. The Jealousy of Anselm did not long permit this: he forbid this new Master to continue his Lectures. Abelard return'd to Paris; explain'd there publickly the Prophet Ezekiel; and acquired in a short time as great a Reputation in Divinity, as in Philosophy: besides which he gain'd a great deal of Money. To perfect the Pleasures of Life, he began to think of a Mistress, and cast his Eyes upon Eloisa, Niece of a Canon, whom he preferr'd to an hundred other Ladies, whom he had it very much in his Power to charm [G]. This Canon, named Fulbert, lov'd Money, and was passionately desirous, that his Niece Eloisa should be a Scholar. Abelard laid hold of these two Foibles to ensnare him. Admit me to board with you, says he, and fix your own Price. The Good Man, imagining he had found an excellent Tutor for his Niece, who, far from being an Expence to him, would pay him well for his Board, ran headlong into the Snare (c). He intreated Master Abelard to instruct the young Girl fully, both Night and Day, and gave him permission to use correction, if she did not perform her Lessons. Our pretended Tutor ill answer'd the Expectation of Fulbert: he soon began to talk Love to his fair Scholar; and amus'd himself more in toying and kissing her [H], than in explaining an Author to her. He indulg'd this the Council of Soissons, could have fallen out in two Years: Now there is good Proof, that this Council was called in the Year 1121. Add to this, that William des Champeaux was made Bishop of Châlons in the Year 1113 (14); and that this Promotion removing him from the Schools of Paris, Abelard went to Laon, to study Divinity there. I see no Foundation for the Assertion of others, that he engaged in this Study at Châlons (15).

(c) Eam totam nostro magisterio committens, ut quoties mihi à Scholis reverso vacaret, tam in die quam in nocte ei docendæ operam darem, & eam si negligentem sentirem vehementer constringerem. Giving her up entirely to my Authority, that, as often as she was at leisure, upon my return from the Schools, to receive me, I might instruct her both by Day and Night, and if I found her negligent, might severely correct her. Abelard's Epist. p. 11.

(14) See Du Chêne's Notes upon Abelard's Narrative, p. 1147.

(15) Dupin's Biblioth. Tom. 6. p. 100. Dutch Edition.

[F] Satisfied with this Person's Capacity.] He was an old Man, who never had any great Genius; insomuch, that he was easily non-plus'd, when put out of his Rote. When he was pushed home, as he frequently was by the acute and subtile Abelard, he defended himself with meer empty Words: but his Character will be best known from what I am going to transcribe. "Accessi ad hunc senem, cui "magis longævus usus, quàm ingenium vel memo- "ria, nomen comparaverat: ad quem si quis de aliquâ "Quæstione pulsandum accederet incertus, redibat "incertior. Mirabilis erat in oculis auscultantium; "sed nullus in conspectu quæstionantium. Verborum "usum habebat mirabilem, sed sensu contemptibi- "lem, & ratione vacuum. Cum ignem accenderet, "domum suam fumo implebat, non luce illustrabat. "Arbor ejus, tota in foliis, aspicientibus à longe con- "spicua videbatur, sed propinquantibus & diligentius "intuentibus infructuosa reperiebatur. Ad hanc ita- "que cum accessissem, ut fructum inde colligerem, "deprehendi illam esse ficulneam, cui maledixit Do- "minus, seu illam veterem quercum, cui Pompeium "Lucanus comparat, dicens, —— Stat magni nominis umbra,

Qualis frugifero quercus sublimis in agro.

"I applied myself to this old Man, whom long Pra- "ctice, not Genius or Memory, had made famous; "who always sent an Enquirer back more uncertain "than he came. He was the Admiration of his "Hearers, but the Contempt of his Examiners. He "had a wonderful Flow of Words, but void of Sense "and Reason. He was a Fire that filled the House, "not with Light, but Smoke: A Tree, that appeared "Fair at a Distance, but, on a nearer View, bore "nothing but Leaves. When I approached it, in "hopes of gathering Fruit, I found it to be the Fig- "Tree which was cursed by our Lord, or that old "Oak, to which Lucan thus compares Pompey:

Still seem'd he to possess, and fill his Place,
But stood the Shadow of what once he was.
So in the Field, with Ceres's Bounty spread,
Upreares some antient Oak his reverend Head.

ROWE.

This Passage deserves to be copied: It shows Abelard's turn of Wit, and is a true Picture of a great many Persons.

[G] Whom he had it very much in his Power to charm.] Vanity was our Hero's distinguishing Foible: However, being an handsome young Fellow, and in the Flower of his Age; and having a knack at Poetry, a great Reputation, and Money in his Pocket; it is not so strange that he flattered himself with a kind Reception, wherever he should make his Addresses: "Tanti quippe tunc nominis eram, "& juventutis & formæ gratia præeminebam, ut "quamcumque fœminarum nostro dignarer amore, "nullam vererer repulsam (16). —— Such was my "Reputation, my Youth, and Beauty, that I feared "no Repulse from any Woman, whom I should think "worthy of my Affections." For a Philosopher, who had lived in great Continence (17), he reasons like a Man of no small Experience in these Matters, when the Conquest of Eloisa seems to him more easy, than that of any other Woman; and for this Reason, because Eloisa's Learning gave him the Opportunity of a regular Correspondence with her by Letters, in which he could make more open Declarations, than in Conversation. "Tanto facilius hanc mihi "puellam consensuram credidi, quanto amplius eam "litterarum Scientiam & habere & diligere nove- "ram, nosque etiam absentes scriptis internuntiis "invicem liceret præsentare, & pleraque audacius "scribere, quam colloqui. —— The more I found "this Girl improve in Learning, and the fonder she "grew of it, the greater Hopes I had of her Consent: "and it was in our Power to be present, even in Ab- "sence, by the Intercourse of Letters, and to write "more freely, than converse (18)." Love-Letters, and Amorous Verses, are no weak Instruments in Love; especially when the Lover himself can sing the passionate Songs he has composed. Abelard in this Manner touched the Heart of Eloisa, and fired her so by his charming Pen, and enchanting Voice, that the poor Lady could never overcome her Passion. "Duo, says she to him (19), fateor tibi specia- "liter inerant, quibus fœminarum quarumlibet ani- "mos statim allicere poteras, dictandi & cantandi "gratia. —— Two Qualifications, I confess, you "was particularly Master of, with which you could "immediately charm the Soul of any Woman. The "pleasing Manner of dictating, and singing, your "Verses." See the Remark [F] under her Article, where this Passage, cited more at Length, demonstrates the great Influence of these Things upon that Sex.

(16) Abelard's Works, p. 10.

(17) Frœna libidini laxare cepi, qui antea vixeram continentissime. I began to give the Reins to my Passion, who before had liv'd most continently. Abelard's Works, p. 9.

(18) Ibid. p. 10.

(19) Ibid. p. 46.

[H] In toying and kissing her.] The better to disguise his Design from the Uncle, he pretended sometimes to make use of the Liberty given him of correcting Eloisa. He tells us, that Love, not the Anger of a Teacher, prompted him from time to time to whip his Pupil; but that the Lashes he gave her, were the softest in the World. He has left us the following Plan of the Lectures he gave this young Lady. "Sub occasione disciplinæ amori penitus vacabamus, "& secretos recessus, quos amor optabat, studium "Lectionis offerebat. Apertis itaque libris, plura de "amore, quam de lectione, verba se ingerebant, "plura erant oscula, quam sententiæ; Sæpius ad Si- "nus, quam ad libros, reducebantur manus: crebrius "oculos amor in se reflectebat, quam lectio in Scrip-

"turam

Digitized by Google

this Pleaſure the more, as he had never before taſted it. He neglected his public Functions, and employ'd his time in writing nothing but Love-Verſes [I]. His Scholars ſoon perceived that his Lectures declined, and they preſently gueſs'd the Cauſe. The laſt Perſon, that heard the Report of Peter Abelard's Amours, was the good Canon Fulbert, at whoſe Houſe the Scene of them was laid. For ſome time he gave no credit to it; but at length he open'd his Eyes, and diſmiſs'd his Boarder from his Houſe. Some time after, his Niece found herſelf with Child, and writ to her Gallant, who thought it proper ſhe ſhould leave her Uncle. He ſent her into Brittany to a Siſter of his, where ſhe was brought to bed of Son (d); and, to appeaſe the Canon, he propos'd to him to marry Eloiſa privately. This Propoſal was more pleaſing to the Uncle, than to the Niece: for Eloiſa, through an Exceſs of Paſſion not common, choſe rather to be the Miſtreſs, than the Wife of Abelard, as we ſhall relate elſewhere (e). At length ſhe conſented to this private Marriage; but ſhe affirmed, upon occaſion, with an Oath, that ſhe was not married. Fulbert, who choſe rather to cover the Diſgrace of his Family, by divulging the Marriage, than to keep his Promiſe with Abelard not to diſcover it, often expreſs'd his Anger at his Niece, when he perceived her Obſtinacy in denying that ſhe was Abelard's Wife. Upon this her Huſband ſent her to the Monaſtery of Argenteuil, and oblig'd her to take the Habit of a Nun, except the Veil. The Relations of Eloiſa imagin'd, that he was laying a new Scene of Treachery in that place, and were ſo enrag'd, that they employ'd certain Perſons, who enter'd his Chamber by Night, and diſmember'd him of thoſe manly Parts, with which he had diſhonour'd the Canon's Family. This Diſgrace made him retire, and conceal his Misfortune in a Monaſtick Life; and therefore it was not Devotion but Shame, which prompted him to take the Habit of a Monk in the Abbey of St Dennis (f). The Diſorders of this Abbey, in which the Abbot was as much ſuperior to the reſt of the Monks in all manner of Impurities, as in Dignity, were the Cauſe of Abelard's leaving it: he cou'd not forbear cenſuring them; and render'd himſelf by this means ſo odious to them, that they were overjoy'd to get rid of him. He choſe his Place of Retreat upon the Lands of the Earl of Champagne [K], and erected there a School, where (d) He was named Aſtrolabius.

(e) In the Article ELOISA.

(f) In tam miſera me contritione poſitum confuſio, fateor, pudoris potius, quam devotio converſionis ad monaſticorum latibula clauſtrorum compulit. In this miſerable State of Penitence, the Confuſion of my Shame, I confeſs, rather than Devotion, drove me to take Shelter in the Incloſure of a Monaſtery. Abelard's Epiſt. p. 18.

" turam dirigebat: Quoque minus ſuſpicionis habere-
" mus, verbera quandoque dabat amor, non furor,
" gratia non ira, quæ omnium unguentorum ſuavita-
" tem tranſcenderent. —— Under the Pretence of In-
" ſtruction we gave a looſe to Love, and a Lecture pro-
" cured us that Privacy, which our Paſſion deſired.
" When we open'd our Books, we talk'd more of Love,
" than of reading; we repeated Kiſſes oftener than " Sentences; my Hands were employ'd in her Bo-
" ſom, more than on her Books; and Love oftener
" turn'd my Eyes on her, than the Intention of read-
" ing directed them to the Scripture: And the more to " prevent Suſpicion, Love, not Rage, Favour, not
" Anger, gave her Laſhes, which were ſweeter than
" the richeſt Perfumes (20)." But it ſometimes happen'd, that he had recourſe to Puniſhment in good earneſt; either when ſhe was out of humour, or the Solemnity of a Feſtival inſpired him with ſome Scruple. See the Remark [E], under the Article ELOISA. We muſt not paſs by Abelard's Reflexion on the Simplicity of the Canon. " Quanta ejus ſimplicitas eſ-
" ſet vehementer admiratus, non minus apud me ob-
" ſtupui, quam ſi agnam teneram famelico Lupo com-
" mitteret. Qui cum eam mihi non ſolum docen-
" dam, verum etiam vehementer conſtringendam,
" traderet, quid aliud agebat, quam ut votis meis li-
" centiam penitus daret, & occaſionem etiamſi nolle-
" mus offerret, ut quam videlicet blanditiis non poſ-
" ſem, minis & verberibus facilius flecterem? ——
" I was as much aſtoniſh'd at his Folly, as if he had
" truſted a tender Lamb to the Care of a ravening
" Wolf. In committing her not only to my Inſtruc-
" tion, but even Correction, what was it but to " licence my Wiſhes, and to give us Opportunities, even
" againſt our Inclination; and to put it in my Power,
" if I could not prevail on her by ſofter Methods, to
" force her to Compliance by Threats and Laſhes." As this Author often cites the antient Poets, I wonder his Thought of the tender Lamb, and ravening Wolf, did not put him in Mind of theſe Verſes of Virgil;

(20) Abelard's Works, p. 11.

Eheu, quid volui miſero mihi? Floribus Auſtrum
Perditus, & liquidis immiſi Fontibus Apros (21).

What have I done? ——
The Boar amidſt my Chryſtal Streams I bring,
And ſouthern Winds to blaſt my flow'ry Spring.
DRYDEN.

(21) Virg. Ecl. 2. v. 58. See the Nouv. Litter. againſt the Calvin. of Maimbourg, p. 41.

[I] Nothing but Love-Verſes.] After he had taſted the Pleaſures of Enjoyment, he grew weary of reading Lectures, and ſtayed in his Auditory as little as poſſible. The Night was quite loſt to his Studies (22): he was otherwiſe employ'd: he therefore deſired to dedicate the Day to Study. This was the Reaſon why his School was uneaſy to him. He repeated only his old Lectures; and if any new Thought came into his Head, it turn'd, not upon any Philoſophical Difficulty, but upon amorous Sonnets, which were ſung a long time after, in ſeveral Provinces. " Ita negligentem
" & tepidum lectio tunc habebat, ut jam nihil ex in-
" genio, ſed ex uſu cuncta proferrem, nec jam niſi re-
" citator priſtinorum eſſem inventorum; & ſi qua in-
" venire liceret carmina eſſent amatoria, non Philo-
" ſophiæ ſecreta. Quorum etiam carminum, ſicut &
" ipſe nôſti, frequentantur & decantantur regionibus,
" ab his maxime quos vita ſimilis oblectat. —— So
" careleſs was I, and negligent, in reading, at that " Time, that I produc'd nothing new, but was ſatiſ-
" fy'd with barely reciting my old Compoſitions; my " Invention was employ'd on Love Songs, not on the " Secrets of Philoſophy; many of which Songs are ſtill
" Favourites, as you very well knew, and ſung in the " Provinces, by thoſe eſpecially, who are delighted
" with the ſame kind of Life (23)." It is certain then, that he had a Genius for Poetry; but I cannot believe, that he was Author of the famous Romance of the Roſe, nor that he drew the Picture of his Eloiſa, under the Name of the Beauty. Yet this is what I have read in a Book, reprinted in Holland (24). I ſhould rather give Credit to him (25), who has taken ſo much pains to collect, and collate, the Manuſcripts of Abelard. Now he aſſerts peremptorily, that the Romance of the Roſe was wrote by William de Loris, all but the Concluſion, of which John de Meun was the Author. Other Writers, who were well informed, declare the ſame. The Hiſtory of Abelard and Eloiſa was inſerted in this Romance.

(22) Tædioſum mihi vehementer erat ad Scholas procedere, vel in iis morari pariter & laboriosum, cum nocturnas amori vigilias, & diurnas ſtudio conſecrarem. It was both very tedious and irkſome to me, either to go to the Schools, or to ſtay in them; ſince my Nights were devoted to Love, and my Days to Study.

(23) Ibid.

[K] Upon the Lands of the Earl of Champagne.] This appears, by comparing two Paſſages. The firſt is, " Ad Cellam quondam receſſi, Scholis more ſolito
" vacaturus. —— I choſe a Place of Retreat, that I
" might be at leiſure to attend my School as uſual (26)." The other is, " Nocte latenter auſugi, atque ad ter-
" ram Comitis Theobaldi proximam, ubi antea in " Cella moratus fueram, abceſſi. —— I ſtole away by " Night, and retreated to the Eſtate of Earl Theo-
" bald, which lay near, and was the Place of my " former

(24) The Hiſtory of Abelard and Eloiſa, in 1693, in 12mo.

(25) Francis d'Amboiſe. See his Apologetical Preface at the beginning of Abelard's Works, Paris 1616. in 4to.

(26) Abelard's Works, p. 19.

Digitized by Google

where he gain'd so great a Number of Auditors [L], that the Envy of other Masters, who saw themselves deserted by their Scholars, upon his account, began to raise new Persecutions against him. He had made himself two formidable Enemies at Laon (g) who no sooner perceived the Prejudice, which their Schools at Rheims receiv'd from his great Reputation, than they sought occasion to ruin him. This was afforded them by a Book, which he wrote upon the Mystery of the Trinity [M]: they pretended to discover in it a shocking Heresy; and prevail'd, by the Interest of their Archbishop, to have a Council call'd at Soissons, about the Year 1121 [N]. This Council, without giving Abelard leave to defend himself, condemn'd

(g) Albericus of Rheims, and Rotulphus the Lombard. The latter is called Leutaldus Novariensis by Otho of Frisingen.

(27) Abelard's Works, p. 26.

" former Retirement (27)." Pasquier did not understand the former; which he construes thus; " retiring to the deepest Cell of a Monastery, he read " Lectures, sometimes in Philosophy, sometimes in Divinity." Abelard by no means erected a School within the Walls of the Abbey of St Denis: if he had, he would not have been more favourable to the Monks, whose Irregularities he censur'd, and which was the Reason they were so desirous of getting rid of him, than he had formerly been. Mr du Cange explains the Word Cella very learnedly, as he does every thing. See the Remark [A], on the Article PARACLET, where I explain the different Situations of Peter Abelard.

[L] So great a Number of Auditors.] Concerning the great Number of Scholars, which he had, see the Remark [A] of the Article FOULQUES, Prior of Deuil.

[M] The Mystery of the Trinity.] The occasion, which induc'd Abelard to write upon this Subject, was, that his Scholars demanded from him a Philosophical Account of it. " They were not satisfy'd with Words; " they desired Ideas; and declar'd loudly, that it " was impossible for them to believe what they did not " understand; and that it was an Imposition upon " Mankind, to preach up a Doctrine equally incomprehensible to the Teachers and the Hearers; which was " as if the Blind should lead the Blind, according to " our Saviour himself. —— Humanas & Philosophicas " rationes requirebant, & plus quæ intelligi, quam " quæ dici possent, efflagitabant; dicentes verborum " superfluam esse prolationem, quam intelligentia non " sequeretur, nec credi posse aliquid nisi primitus " intellectum; & ridiculosum esse aliquem aliis prædi- " care, quod nec ipse, nec illi quos doceret, intel- " lectu capere possent, Domino ipso arguente quod

(29) Ibid. p. 20.

" cœci essent duces cœcorum (29)." Upon which he set himself to explain to them the Unity of God, by Comparisons drawn from human Things. Pasquier accuses him of maintaining, " That we ought not " to believe a Thing, of which we can give no Rea- " son; which, adds he, is, in plain Terms, to destroy

(30) Pasquier's Recherch. de la France. B. 6. ch. 17.

" the general Foundation of our Faith (30)." I do not ask this Author, who told him that a Professor approves all the Conceits of his Scholars, when he is so complaisant as to prevent, to the utmost of his Power, the ill Consequences of them. It is indeed probable, that Abelard did not disapprove of the Maxims, which he ascribes to his Hearers; but the Passage, quoted by Pasquier, is no Proof of this; we ought rather to found it upon these Words of St Bernard: " Quid " magis contra fidem, quam credere nolle quidquid " non possis Ratione attingere? Denique exponere vo- " lens (Abælardus) illud Sapientis, qui credit cito le- " vis est corde, cito credere est, inquit, adhibere " fidem ante rationem. —— Can any thing be more " contrary to Faith, than to refuse assent to every " thing, which Reason cannot reach? Abelard being " to explain the Saying of the Wise Man, He, who " believes hastily is light of Heart; to believe hastily,

(31) Bernard's Epist. 190.

" says he, is to give Assent before Reason (31)." The Treatise, which Abelard wrote upon this Subject, was universally approv'd, except by those of the same Profession with himself; I mean the Divinity-Professors. They were so chagrin'd, that another had explain'd and illustrated what they could not, that they cry'd out, he was an Heretic, and alarm'd the People so much, that Abelard narrowly escap'd being ston'd. " Duo illi prædicti Æmuli nostri ita me in Clero & " Populo diffamaverunt, ut pene me populus pau- " cosque qui advenerant ex discipulis nostris, prima " die nostri adventus, lapidarent, dicentes me tres " Deos prædicare, & scripsisse, sicut ipsis persuasum " fuerat. —— My two forementioned Rivals so blacken'd " me, both to the Clergy and Laity, that, upon the " first Day of my Arrival, with a few of my Scholars, " the People were near stoning us; crying out, as it " has been insinuated to them, that I both preach'd " and writ, that there were three Gods (32)." Their Cabals were so powerful, as to extort from the Pope's Legate (33), the Condemnation mention'd in the Body of this Article. They made it believ'd, that Abelard admitted of three Gods: Nevertheless, it is certain that he was very orthodox in the Mystery of the Trinity, and that all the Accusations brought against him in this Affair, were wretched Chicanery, and proceeded either from Malice or Ignorance. The Comparison he fetch'd from Logic (for Logic was his Strong hold) tended rather to reduce the divine Persons to One, than to multiply the Essence of God into Three; and yet he was accus'd, not of Sabellianism (34), but of Tritheism. His Comparaison is, that, as the Three Propositions of a Syllogism, are but One Truth; so the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, are but One Essence. " Sicut eadem Oratio est Pro- " positio, Assumptio, & Conclusio; ita eadem es- " sentia est Pater, Filius, & Spiritus Sanctus (35)." The Inconveniences arising from this Analogy, are not equal to, at least do not exceed, those, which flow from a Comparison of the Trinity with the Three Dimensions of Matter. Therefore, as no one disputes the Orthodoxy of Mr Wallis, the Oxonian Mathematician, who laid great Stress on the Analogy of the Three Dimensions, neither ought we to doubt of Abelard's, on account of his Comparison of the Syllogism. This is certain, that neither the Syllogism, nor the Three Dimensions, account for the Mystery of the Trinity. Observe, that a certain Protestant Divine made use of the Parallel of the Three Dimensions, in the Year 1685. This appears from the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Article the 3d, for July; Article the 10th, for August; and Article the 12th, for September. It was answered by another Protestant Divine, in the Year 1694. See the Examen of Mr Jurieu's Theology, by Mr Saurin, pag. 831.

(32) Abelard's Works, p. 10.

(33) Conan, Bishop of Preneste. He presided at the Council of Soissons.

(34) Otho of Frisingen, in his de Gest. Frider. says, nevertheless, that he was accused of the Heresy of Sabellius, at the Council of Soissons.

(35) Abelard's Works, p. 10.

[N] About the Year 1121.] Father Alexander (36) proves this strongly, as well against John Picard, a Canon of St Victor, who places this Council in the Year 1116, as against Binius, who fixes it in 1136. The Chronological Errors of Binius, and some others, have been already censured in the Preface to the Works of Peter Abelard. We are there told, that Platina had plac'd the Synod, which condemn'd Abelard, under Pope Lucius II; that Binius gave into the Mistake of Platina; that he is guilty of another, in placing the Council of Soissons, and that of Sens, in the Year 1140; and that Genebrard supposes but one Year to have pass'd between these Councils. To prove these to be Mistakes, it is asserted, that the Pontificat of Lucius, which continu'd not a whole Year, is to be referr'd to the Year 1145, and that twenty Years pass'd between the holding of the Councils of Soissons and Sens; and that the Bishop of Preneste, who persided at the Council of Soissons, in quality of the Pope's Legate, left France about the Year 1120, and never retnrn'd thither. We may observe more Mistakes than one, in these Words of Platina, there cited. " Qui (Abælardus) præsente etiam Lodovico " Rege, rationibus victus, non modo sententiam mu- " tavit, sed etiam monasticam vitam & religionem " induit, ac deinceps una cum discipulis quibusdam " in loco deserto sanctissime vixit. —— Who, (Abe- " lard) in the Presence of King Lewis, being overcome " by Arguments, not only renounc'd his Opinion, but " took upon him the monastic Life, and Religion, " and afterwards retiring, with some of his Scholars, " to a desart Place, liv'd a most holy Life." First, it is certain, that Abelard became a Monk, before any Council was held against him. In the second place, it was at the Council of Sens, that Lewis VII. assisted, to be Witness of the Transactions in this Heretic's Cause. Now it is false, that Abelard submit-

(36) Nat. Alexand. Eccl. Hist. Cent. 11, 12, Part 3. p. 43, &c.

Digitized by Google

demn'd him to throw his own Book into the Fire, and to ſhut himſelf up in the Cloyſter of St Medard. He was commanded ſoon after to return to the Convent of St Denis; where the Liberty, he had taken of cenſuring the corrupt Manners of the Abbot and the Religious, had expoſed him to the Hatred of them all. He happen'd to ſay, that he did not believe their St Denis to be Dionyſius the Areopagite mention'd in Scripture. This was immediately laid hold of, and carry'd to the Abbot, who was greatly pleas'd at it, as having a Pretence to accuſe him, not only of Falſe Doctrine, but even of offending againſt the State [O], an Artifice, which theſe Gentlemen never fail to put in practice, the better to ſecure their Revenge. The Abbot aſſembled his Chapter, without loſs of time, and declared that he was going to deliver up to the King's Juſtice one, who had the Aſſurance to trample upon the Glory and Crown of the Kingdom. Abelard, judging that theſe Menaces were not to be ſlighted, made his Eſcape into Champagne, and obtained, after the Death of the Abbot, permiſſion to live a monaſtic Life, wherever he pleaſed. The Political Reaſons, which concurr'd to this, are ſomething curious [P]. In conſequence of this Permiſſion, ted to the Reaſoning of his Adverſaries, and abjur'd his Opinions, in this Council. He appeal'd, from the very firſt, to the Pope. In the third place, it is no leſs falſe, that from that time he liv'd in a deſart place, with ſome of his Diſciples: for he paſs'd the remainder of his Days amidſt the Monks of Clugni. It is evident, that Platina has confounded what paſs'd in the two Councils held againſt Abelard. Moſt of the Errors, which I have rectify'd, are objected to Belleforét, in the abovementioned Preface; in which he is farther juſtly cenſured for having criticiz'd upon the Epitaph of Abelard, as if the extravagant Praiſes, there given him, were a Proof of his Imprudence, and intolerable Vanity. It is certain, that this Epitaph was compos'd by the Abbot of Clugni, after the Death of Abelard. Many Hiſtorians have not rightly diſtinguiſh'd between the two Councils, which proceeded againſt this great Man. Paulus Æmilius ſays, he was examin'd for the firſt time in that of Sens (37): Du Haillan confirms this Miſtake, and adds ſeveral others to it (38); as that Abelard was afraid to appear; that all his Works were condemn'd to be burnt; and that, the ſecond time he was ſummon'd to appear, the Biſhops diſputed a long time, before they condemn'd him. Philip of Bergame maintains, that the Heretic (39) being confuted, in the Preſence of King Lewis, by the powerful Arguments of the Learned and Catholic Biſhops, renounc'd his falſe Doctrines, became a Monk, and paſs'd the remainder of his Life, moſt Saint-like, in a Deſart, with ſome of his Diſciples. We meet with a great many Writers of Chronicles, who have copied the ſame falſe Stories. A little Book (40), which I have already quoted, put theſe Words in the Mouth of Eloiſa, "What did not thoſe two falſe Prophets aſſert, who "declaim'd ſo vehemently againſt you at the Council "of Rheims?" Theſe two falſe Prophets were St Bernard, and St Norbert. Eloiſa never mention'd their declaiming in any Council; and, if ſhe had, it could not be that of Rheims.

(37) P. Æmilius's Hiſtory of the France, in Lewis VII.

(38) Du Haillan's Hiſtory of France, in Lewis VII.

(39) They call him Baliordus in the Supplem. Chron. at the Year 1135.

(40) Hiſtory of Abelard and Eloiſa, with the paſſionate Letter, which ſhe wrote to him. Printed at the Hague, in 1693, in 12mo.

[O] Of offending againſt the State.] This Artifice has been ſo often made uſe of, ſince the Jews employed it againſt our Saviour (41), that it is ſtrange any one ſhould venture at preſent to put it in practice. Should it not be expected, that ſo worn out a Contrivance as this ſhould be incapable of Succeſs? No: The World is too unteachable, to profit by the Follies of paſt Ages. Every Age behaves, as if it were the firſt; and, as the Spirit of Perſecution and Revenge has hitherto endeavoured to engage Princes in it's private Quarrels, ſo will it endeavour to do to the end of the World: and we may apply to this Purpoſe the Saying of Solomon; The thing that hath been, it is that which ſhall be; and that which is done, is that which ſhall be done; and there is no new thing under the Sun (42). Our Poſterity may ſay, as well as we,

(41) Luke xxiii. 2.

(42) Eccleſ. i. 9.

Qui mépriſe Cotin, n'eſtime point ſon Roi,
Et n'a, ſelon Cotin, ni Dieu, ni Foi, ni Loi (43).

(43) Boileau Sat. IX. v. 305, 306.

Who ſlights Cotin, affronts his Maſter too;
No Pardon to ſuch Inſolence is due.
All Crimes into that one Cotin can draw;
The Wretch, ſays he, regards nor God, nor Law.

[P] Something curious.] Abelard, not being able to obtain from the Abbot of St Denis permiſſion to retire, had recourſe to the Engines of Policy. He knew, that the more the Monks of St Denis plunged themſelves into Irregularity, the more Authority the Court exerciſed over this Abbey, and drew the greater Profit from it. He therefore gave the King to underſtand, that it was not for his Majeſty's Intereſt, that a Religious as he was, who was perpetually cenſuring the bad Lives of theſe Monks, ſhould continue long among them. The Meaning of this was underſtood at half a Word; and Orders were given to one of the great Men at Court, to demand of the Abbot, and his Brethren, why they would keep by Force a Monk, whoſe Life was unſuitable to theirs, and who, for that Reaſon, could be of no Uſe to them, and might eaſily bring upon them ſome Diſgrace. The Conſequence was, that Abelard had leave to retire. "I remember, upon this Occaſion, that I one Day asked a Gentleman, who was relating to me numberleſs Irregularities of the Venetian Clergy, how it came to paſs, that the Senate ſuffered a thing ſo little to the Honour of Religion, and the State. He replied, that the public Good obliged the Sovereign to uſe this Indulgence; and, to explain this Riddle, he added, that the Senate was well pleaſed that the Prieſts and Monks were held in the utmoſt Contempt by the People, ſince, for that Reaſon, they would be leſs capable of cauſing an Inſurrection among them. One of the Reaſons, ſays he, why the Jeſuits there are diſagreeable to the Prince, is, becauſe they preſerve the Decorum of their Character; and thus, being the more reſpected by the inferior People, are more capable of raiſing a Sedition. I could ſcarce give Credit to ſo ſhocking a Diſorder. What would become of us, if the Sovereign Power ſhould have Occaſion to ſupport itſelf by ſuch an Expedient, and if the Clergy ſhould become more formidable by their good, than their bad Morals? This Confuſion would be a thouſand times more terrible, than that mentioned by Tacitus, when he ſays, that under a bad Government, a great Reputation is as much expoſed to Danger as an ill one. "Intravit animum militaris "gloriæ cupido, ingrata temporibus, quibus ſiniſtra "erga eminentes interpretatio, nec minus periculum "ex magnâ famâ, quam ex malâ. —— He was eager "after military Glory, an Ambition odious to the "Times; in which an ill-natured Interpretation was "put upon the Actions of eminent Men, and a great "Character was as much in Danger as an ill one (44)." But let us hear Abelard's own Words: "Intervenientibus amicis quibuſdam noſtris, Regem & "Concilium ejus ſuper hoc compellavi, & ſic quod "volebam impetravi. Stephanus quippe Regis tunc "Dapifer, vocato in partem Abbate & familiaribus "ejus, quæſivit ab iis cur invitum retinere vellent, "ex quo incurrere facile ſcandalum poſſent, & nullam utilitatem habere; cum nullatenus vita mea & "ipſorum convenire poſſent. Sciebam autem in hoc "Regii Conſilii ſententiam eſſe, ut quo minus regularis Abbatia illa eſſet, magis Regi eſſe ſubjecta & utilis, quantum videlicet ad lucra temporalia. Unde me facile Regis & ſuorum aſſenſum "conſequi credideram, ſicque actum eſt (45). —— By the Interpoſition of ſome of my Friends, I applyed to the King and his Council, and by that "means obtained what I deſired. For Stephen, the "King's Cup-bearer, demanded of the Abbot and his "Brethren, why they detained me againſt my Will; "ſince

* THE REASON why the Senate of Venice is ſaid to be pleas'd with the Irregularities of the Clergy.

(44) Tacitus, in his Life of Agricola, c. 5.

(45) Abelard's Works, p. 27.

Digitized by Google

miſſion, he choſe his Retirement in the Dioceſe of Troies, and there built an Oratory, which he named the Paraclet (h). A great Number of Scholars follow'd him thither; which again awaken'd that Envy, which had ſo often purſu'd him. But, in this Encounter, he fell into the moſt dangerous hands in the World; I mean, he was expos'd to the Attacks of two pretended Reſtorers of antient Diſcipline, and grand Zealots; who, like new Apoſtles [Q], had inſinuated themſelves into the Favour of the People. They ſpread ſo many Falſhoods concerning him, that they corrupted the Principles of his Friends, and obliged even thoſe, who continu'd to love him, to conceal it from him. They ſo imbittered his Life, that he was upon the point of abandoning Chriſtendom (i); but his Fate permitted him not to procure to himſelf this Repoſe, and engag'd him afreſh with Chriſtians, and Monks, worſe than Turks (k). The Monks of the Abbey of Ruis, in the Dioceſe of Vannes, choſe him for their Superior [R]. He hop'd he had met with an Aſylum in this Place; but he found, that he had only varied his Woe. The incorrigible Behaviour of the Monks, and the Oppreſſion of a certain Lord, who robb'd them of the beſt part of their Revenues, inſomuch that they were obliged to maintain their Concubines and Children, out of their private Incomes (l), expos'd him to a thouſand Diſquiets, and even to great Dangers [S]. In the mean time, the Abbot of St Denis expell'd the Religious from the Monaſtery of Argenteuil. Abelard, ſtruck with compaſſion for Eloiſa, their Prioreſs, made her a Preſent of the Oratory of the Paraclet, where ſhe ſettled herſelf with ſome of her Companions. From that time he made frequent Journies from Brittany to Champagne, to ſerve the Intereſts of Eloiſa, and to diſengage himſelf a little from the Fatigue of governing his Abbey. Notwithſtanding the Mutilation, which the poor Gentleman formerly underwent, he could not eſcape Scandal [T]. Thus far he has himſelf carry'd down the Story of his (h) We ſhall relate, in the Art. de PARACLET, why he gave this Name to his Oratory, and ſhall take notice of the Cavils againſt him upon this Account.

(i) See the Remark [E], of the Article (John Paul) ALCIATUS.

(k) Incidi in Chriſtianos, atque Monachos, gentibus longè fœviores & pejores. I fell into the hands of Chriſtians, and Monks, more cruel, and worſe, than Gentils. Abelard's Epiſt. p. 32.

(l) Unuſquiſque de propriis marſupiis ſe & concubinas ſuas cum filiis & filiabus ſuſtentaret. Abelard's Epiſt. p. 33.

" ſince my manner of Life was ſo different from " theirs, that it might reflect Diſgrace upon them, " and could not be of any Advantage to them. I " knew very well, that the King's Council were of " Opinion, that the more irregular the Abbey was, " the more ſubject would it be to the King, in re- " gard to temporal Profit. I imagined therefore, " that the King, and his Council, would readily " conſent to my Petition; which fell out according- " ly." A few Pages after, he ſays, that a certain Britiſh Lord had taken Occaſion, from the vitious Lives of the Monks of Ruis, to ſeize on their Poſſeſſions (46). To take from Men, who by the Sanctity of their Lives have acquired the Veneration of the People: to take from ſuch Men, I ſay, what the Charity of the Faithful has given them, is no eaſy Attempt; but there is no great Danger in robbing thoſe, who are a Scandal to the Public.

(46) Ex inordinatione ſcilicet ipſius Monaſterii nactus occaſionem. Abelard's Works, p. 33.

[Q] Like new Apoſtles.] Read what follows: " Quoſdam adverſum me novos Apoſtolos quibus " mundus plurimum credebat excitaverant. Quorum " alter (S. Norbertus) Regularium Canonicorum vi- " tam, alter (S. Bernardus) Monachorum ſe reſuſci- " taſſe gloriabatur. —— They raiſed up againſt me " certain new Apoſtles, who were in great Credit " with the World. Of whom the one (St Norbert) " boaſted to have revived the Life of the Regular " Canons, the other (St Bernard) that of the " Monks (47)." Eloiſa, at Page 42. calls them falſe Apoſtles. See, above, the Remark [N] where I confute the Author of the new Hiſtory of Abelard and Eloiſa.

(47) Abelard's Works, p. 31.

[R] The Monks of the Abbey of Ruis —— choſe him for their Superior.] The Benedictine, who has taken ſo much Pains about the Antiquities of Paris, was greatly in the wrong in cenſuring Belleforêt, for ſaying, that Abelard was Superior of an Abbey in Brittany. " That he was an Abbot in Brit- " tany is falſe; for, when he left the Paraclet, he " retired to Clugni, and ſtayed in that Fraternity " 'till his Death (48)." This Author was not ſufficiently informed. He knew not, that Abelard had an Abbey in Brittany, both before and after his leaving the Paraclet. If he had carefully read the Letter (49), from which he quotes ſome Paſſages, he would have ſeen this indiſputably proved.

(48) Du Breuil's Antiq. of Paris, p. 888. Edit. 1639. 4to.

(49) That of Abelard, which contains the Relation of his Life.

[S] And even to very great Dangers.] The Monks frequently endeavoured to poiſon him, and, not being able to accompliſh their Deſign in his ordinary Food, by Reaſon of the Precautions he took, they endeavoured to poiſon him in the Bread and Wine of the Sacrament. One Day, not having eaten of a particular Diſh, which was prepared for him, he ſaw his Companion, who had taſted it, drop down dead. The Excommunications, which he thundered againſt the moſt mutinous among the Religious, did not remedy the Diſorder. At length, he was more in fear of Aſſaſſination, than Poiſon, and compared himſelf to him, whom the Tyrant of Syracuſe placed at his Table, under a Sword, which hung only by one Thread (50.)

(50) Abelard's Works, p. 39, 40.

[T] Notwithſtanding his Mutilation —— he could not eſcape Scandal.] So malicious was the World to this unfortunate Man, that tho' they knew he was incapable of gratifying a Woman, they gave it out, that a Remainder of ſenſual Delight kept him ſtill attach'd to his old Miſtreſs. " Quod me facere ſin- " cera charitas compellabat, ſolita derogantium pra- " vitas impudentiſſime accuſabat, dicens me adhuc " quadam carnalis concupiſcentiæ oblectatione teneri, " qui priſtinæ dilectæ ſuſtinere abſentiam vix aut " nunquam paterer. —— The uſual Perverſeneſs of " Slanderers moſt impudently miſrepreſented what " was the meer effect of Humanity, giving it out, " that I was yet enſlaved to the Deſires of Fleſh, " ſince I was ever impatient at the Abſence of my " old Miſtreſs." Thus he complains in the 43d Page of his Narration. He comforted himſelf with the Example of St Jerom, whoſe Friendſhip for Paulus ſupported him againſt Calumny; and he thought that he invincibly refuted the Slander, by remarking, that the moſt Jealous truſt their Wives to the Care of Eunuchs. Father Theophilus Raynaud laughs at this Reaſon, having read many Inſtances of criminal Converſation between Women, and Men, who were diſabled. " Ex quibus omnibus liquet, " quam frigida fuerit Petri Abelardi Apologia, cum " redargutus de nimia familiaritate cum amicâ qua- " dam ſuâ, Heloiſa, repoſuit, Eunuchos, qualis ipſe " factus erat, tuto, & abſque omni periculo, poſſe " verſari cum fœminis. —— From all which it ap- " pears, how cold an Excuſe Abelard made, when, " being taxed with being too familiar with a cer- " tain Miſtreſs of his, named Eloiſa, he replyed, that " Eunuchs, ſuch as he was, might ſafely, and with- " out Danger, converſe with Women (51)." I ſhall conſider this Matter a little in the Article COMBABUS. Eloiſa was ſo paſſionately fond of Abelard, tho' unmann'd, that his Virtue could not but be in danger in her Company. See my Remarks on the Article of this Lady. The following Words of Virgil,

(51) T. Raynaud. of Eunuchs, p. 148.

—— notumque furens, quid fœmina poſſit,
Triſte per augurium Teucrorum pectora ducunt (52).

(52) Virg. Æn. L. 5. v. 6.

He knew the ſtormy Souls of Womankind, &c.
Dire Auguries from hence the Trojans draw.
DRYDEN.

repreſent

Digitized by Google

his Misfortunes, in a Letter yet extant. The Remainder of his Life must be trac'd in other Writings; the most material Circumstance of which is, that he was prosecuted a second Time for Heresy before the Archbishop of Sens. He demanded leave to vindicate his Doctrine in a public Assembly; which was granted him; and a Council call'd at Sens, at which King Lewis VII. thought fit to assist in Person. It was in the Year 1140. St Bernard was sent thither in the Character of his Accuser. They immediately read before the Assembly certain Propositions extracted from the Books of Peter Abelard; the reading of which so terrify'd the Accus'd, that he interpos'd an Appeal to the Pope. The Council, however, condemn'd the Propositions (m); but they pass'd no Sentence against the Person accus'd, and gave an Account of the Matter to Pope Innocent II. desiring of him to confirm the Condemnation. The Pope did not fail to do it (n): he order'd that the Books of Abelard should be burnt, that he should be imprison'd, and forbad him to teach any more. He was appeas'd soon after, at the Sollicitation of Peter the Venerable, who had receiv'd, with great Kindness, this Heretic into his Abbey of Clugni, and had reconcil'd him with St Bernard (o), the Promoter of that Injustice [U], which his Innocence had suffer'd in this Council. The Retirement of Clugni was the last, which Abelard had occasion for. He met with, there, every instance of Charity: he read Lectures to the Monks; he was equally humble and industrious. At length, becoming infirm, and being troubled with the Itch (p), and other Disorders, he was sent to the Priory of St Marcel, a very agreeable Place upon the Saone, near to Châlon. He died there the 21st of April, 1142 [X], aged 63 Years. His Body was sent to Eloisa [Y], who interred it in the Paraclet (q). We shall give some Account of his Writings in the Article of *Francis d'*AMBOISE; and as to what regards his Errors, and the Persecutions he met with from Councils, we shall take some Notice of them in the Article of BERENGER of Poictiers. It is remarkable, that he made no Secret of his Marriage, tho' he was a Priest, and a Canon (r). I am surpriz'd to find that he never mentions his Master (s) Roscelin [Z], who pass'd for a subtile Logician in those times, and is look'd upon as Founder of the Sect of the Nominals. He was himself likewise a Favourer of this Sect, which he found agreeable to that Vivacity of Temper, and that acute and fertile Wit, which he was Master of (t). By the help of this Science, he so puzzled and confounded People, and made use of such a Variety of Sophistry, and Syllogisms, that he left them not less astonish'd, than incapable of answering him. I am not of Opinion, that he ever engag'd in explaining the Civil Law [AA], as

(m) See the Life of St Bernard by Geoffry a Monk of Clairvaux, Book 3, Ch. 5. and the 189*th Letter of* St Bernard, inserted in the Works of Abelard, p. 272.

(n) Letter the 194*th* ibid. p. 301.

(o) See this Abbot's Letter to Innocent II. in the Works of Abelard, p. 355.

(p) Plus solito scabie, & quibusdam corporis incommoditatibus gravabatur. Abelard's Works, p. 341.

(q) See the Letter of Peter the Venerable to Eloisa, in the Works of Abelard, p. 337.

(r) Quid te Clericum & Canonicum facere oportet? What ought you, who are both a Priest and a Canon, to do? Abelard's Epist. p. 16.

(s) Otho of Frisingen's de Reb. Gest. Frid. Book 1. Ch. 47. Aventinus's Annal. Bojor. Book 6.

(t) Naude's Additions to the History of Lewis XI. p. 100.

represent in some sort the Conduct of those, who fear'd that the Passion of Eloisa might have too great an Influence on the Chastity of her Abelard.

[U] The Promoter of the Injustice.] I have considered this in the Article of BERENGER of Poictiers.

[X] The 21st of April, 1142.] This shews, that the new Author of the Life of Abelard is greatly mistaken, in supposing him alive in the Year 1170. I mean the Author of a little Book, printed at the Hague, in 1693, where, beside the History of Abelard and Eloisa abridg'd, we find three other little Pieces.

[Y] His Body was sent to Eloisa.] Pasquier affirms, that "Abelard, by his Will, ordered, that his Body "should be buried in the Monastery of the Paraclet (53)." Francis d'Amboise asserts the same (54); but alledges no other Proof, than the Authority of Pasquier. What inclines me to disbelieve this, is, that Peter the Venerable makes no mention of it in his Letter to Eloisa, wherein he gives her an account of Abelard's last Moments (55). Farther still, the Absolution of Abelard makes it credible, that his Body was sent to the Paraclet, only to gratify Eloisa. Probably she might petition for the Favour. Besides, what right had the Abbot of Clugni to make that a matter of Favour, which was settled by Will? The Calender of the Abbey of the Paraclet is a strong Proof of this; for in that we meet with these Words: "VIII of the "Kalends of January, died Peter, Abbot of Clugni, "by whose GRANT our Church has the Body of "Peter our Founder (56)." The Silence of Andrew du Chesne, in his Notes upon Abelard's Epistle, in which he relates his Misfortunes, is a strong Reason with me, against Pasquier. Some, without mentioning his Will, say, that the Body of her deceas'd Husband was given to Eloisa, because, in his Letters to her, he had often express'd his Desire that it should (57): but they neither cite such Letters, nor any Writer who had cited them. I have met with such a Passage at the 53d Page of his Works. He was, then, at his Abbey of Ruis, and was in continual Dread of being assassinated. "Quod si me Dominus in ma- "nibus inimicorum tradiderit (writes he to Eloisa) "scilicet ut ipsi prævalentes me interficiant, aut quo- "cunque casu viam universæ carnis absens à vobis in- "grediar, cadaver obsecro nostrum ubicunque vel "sepultum vel expositum jacuerit, ad cœmeterium ve- "strum deferri faciatis, ubi filiæ nostræ, imo in "Christo sorores, sepulchrum nostrum sæpius viden- "tes ad preces pro me Domino fundendas amplius in- "vitenter. —— But, if Heaven should be pleased to "deliver me into the Hands of my Enemies, and to "suffer them to prevail over me, or by whatever Ac- "cident, in my Absence from you, I may chance to go "the way of all Flesh, I intreat of you, that my Body, "wherever either buried, or expos'd, may be convey'd "to your Church-yard, where my Daughters, rather "my Sisters in Christ, having my Sepulchre frequent- "ly in view, may be the oftener prompted to pour out "their Prayers to God for me." The Absolution of Abelard is as follows: it was intended to be inscribed upon his Tomb; and it was for that Purpose, that Eloisa desired it of Peter the Venerable (58). "Ego "Petrus Cluniacensis Abbas, qui Petrum Abælar- "dum in Monachum Cluniacensem recepi, & corpus "ejus furtim delatum Heloisæ Abbatissæ & Moniali- "bus Paracleti concessi, authoritate omnipotentis "Dei & omnium Sanctorum, absolvo eum, pro "officio, ab omnibus peccatis suis. —— I Peter, Ab- "bot of Clugni, who admitted Peter Abelard, a "Monk of Clugni, and granted his Body to be pri- "vately convey'd to Eloisa, the Abbess, and to the "Nuns, of the Paraclet, by the authority of Almighty "God, and all his Saints, do, as is my Duty, ab- "solve him from all his Sins (59)." Belleforêt publish- ed a notorious Falshood, when he said, that the Bones of Abelard were dug up, and burnt (60). The Apologetical Preface of the Sieur d'Amboise proves demonstrably the contrary.

[Z] His Master Roscelin.] Salabert, Priest of Argen, in his Dissertation on the Sect of the Nominalists (61), leaves it doubtful, whether Roscelin was the Preceptor of Peter Abelard. We shall examine his Reasons under the Article ROSCELIN.

[AA] That he ever engaged in explaining the Civil Law.] Francis d'Amboise seems to be mistaken, when he fancies, that Accursius spoke of our Abelard, in his Gloss upon the Law De quinque Pedum præscriptione. Accursius's Words are, "Sed Petrus Bilar- "dus, qui se jactavit quod ex qualibet quantumcun- "que difficili litera traheret sanum intellectum, hic "dixit,

(53) Recherch. de la France B. 6. ch. 17.

(54) Apolog. Pref. to Abelard's Works,

(55) In Abelard's Works, p. 337.

(56) In Andr. Quercetan. (or du Chesne's) Notes on the History of Abelard's Misfortunes, in his Works.

(57) Cave's Hist. Litter. p. 592.

(58) See Abelard's Works, p. 343.

(59) Abelard's Works, p. 345.

(60) Belleforêt's Chronicle of France.

(61) The Title of it is, Philosophia Nominalium vindicata, printed at Paris, in 1651, in 8vo.

Digitized by Google

as some pretend. The Reader will see in the last Remark a Catalogue of the Mistakes of Mr. Moreri [BB]. You will find in a Work of Father Jacob (u) a long List of Authors who have spoken of Abelard.

(u) It is that intitled, De claris Scriptoribus Cabilonensibus, p. 142.

" dixit, NESCIO.—— But Peter Bailard who boasted " that he could strike out a good Meaning from the " most difficult Expression, upon this occasion confess'd " his Ignorance (62). Alciatus commended the Modesty of this Peter Baillard, for so ingenuously acknowledging his Ignorance in this Matter: " Magnus " ille Andreas Alciatus in illo, quem de quinque pe- " dum præscriptione scripsit Tractatu, postquam Pe- " trum Bailardum celebrem suâ tempestate Professo- " rem laudavit, quod ingenuè fassus esset, eam legem " à se non intelligi, &c. —The great Andrew Alciatus " in the Treatise which he wrote concerning the Law " De quinque Pedum præscriptione, after he had " prais'd Peter Bailard, a celebrated Professor of his " Times, for frankly owning, that he did not under- " stand that Law, &c. These are the Words of Francis d' Amboise (63): and he is sufficiently confuted by his own Expressions: for, to make Alciatus reason justly, the celebrated Professor, whom he commends, should have been a Professor of Law. Where is the Wonder, that a Professor of Logic should acknowledge, that he does not understand an intricate Passage of the Code? Besides, we find in Petrus Crinitus, that this Bailard was a Professor of Law: he calls him Johannes Bajalardus. We may conclude, that our Abelard is out of the Question in that Place; and that Pasquier, who fancied he had remarked what ought not to have been passed over, in applying to him Accursius's Words, had better have said nothing about it (64). He ought, at least, to have observed, that, in the Passage of Accursius, it is not written Petrus Abelardus, as he pretends, but Petrus Baylardus. But, if it were true, that this Commentator had our Abelard in view, it must be granted, I think, that he was in an Error; for there is no Reason to believe, that Abelard ever concerned himself with Law. Consider the Words of Crinitus. " Quæsitum est superiori ætate à viris " doctioribus quidnam in Jure nostro Civili præ- " scriptio quinque pedum significaret, qualisque foret " in eâ intellectus. Quam rem Laurentius Valla, " & alii complures, cum non satis perciperent, hâc " unâ ratione se defendebant, quod Johannes Baja- " lardus, inter eos, qui JUS CIVILE PROFITENTUR, " consultissimus, ingenuè affirmavit, se illud ignorare. " —— It was matter of enquiry among the Learned " of the last Age, what the Præscriptio quinque pe- " dum, in our Civil Law, meant. Which when " Laurentius Valla, and many others were at a loss " to understand, they had only this to plead in excuse, " that Johannes Bajalardus himself, the most knowing " among the PROFESSORS OF CIVIL LAW, ingenu- " ously declared his Ignorance of it (65)." Thomasius ought not to have inferred from this Passage, that Peter Abelard was sometimes named Bajalard (66).

(62) Fr. d'Amboise's Apology for Abelard's Works.

(63) The Words of Alciatus are, Adeo autem existimata est difficilis, ut Petrus Baylardus, non incelebris tempestate suâ Professor, ingenuè fassus est, eam à se non intelligi. It was thought so difficult, that Peter Baylard, a celebrated Professor of his Time, ingenuously confess'd he did not understand it.

(64) Pasquier's Recherch. de la France, B. 6. c. 17.

(65) Crinitus de Honestâ Disciplin. B. 25. c. 4.

(66) J. Thomasius in his Life of P. Abelard, N° 3.

The following Observation was communicated to me by Mr De la Monnoie, after he had read my Remark [AA]. As I am certain the Reader will be better able to decide this Dispute, by comparing his Thoughts with mine; he will be pleased to have it in his Power to make the Comparison. I am satisfied says he, that Accursius, upon the Law, Quinque pedum, means Abelard. I agree, Abelard did not profess the Civil Law; but he passed for a general Scholar, and one that allowed nothing to be above his Abilities; qui totum scibile sciebat, who knew every thing that was to be known, as we are told in his Epitaph. Accursius, in the cited Passage, gives us no other Idea than this; and those, who imagine, from the Words of the Commentator, that Petrus Baylardus or Bailardus was a celebrated Professor of Law, are mistaken. There never was one of this Name. Baylardus is no other than Abelard, and it is one of the ten or twelve Ways, in which this Author's Name is written. The Italians, who are accustomed to this Manner of Contraction, pronounce Bailardus for Abelardus, as Rigona for Arragona, Naldo for Arnaldo, Berto for Alberto, or Lamberto. At least, it cannot be denied, that James Philip of Bergame, an Augustin Monk, gave our Abelard the Name of Bailardus (67). This is the Observation of Mr De la Monnoie. I have one thing to add, which escap'd me in the first Edition. I am of Opinion, that Abelard died before the Study of the Roman Law was introduc'd into France. It had been reviv'd in Italy, some Years before (68), and we must imagine, that the Infancy of it's new Birth continu'd some time. It is therefore improbable, that recourse should be had to our French Logician, for the Explication of a particular Law, of great Difficulty as to it's principal Point, and but little in use. Men seldom amuse themselves in unriddling such Matters, 'till they have clear'd up those of the greatest Importance, or when they endeavour to improve upon former Interpreters. If it were allowable to apply Mr Menage's Rules, we might say, that the Bailardus of Accursius is a Corruption from the Word Bulgarus; Bulgarus, Bailgarus, Bailgardus, Bailardus. A great Alteration may be introduc'd by Degrees in proper Names, both by transcribing, and by pronouncing them ill.

(67) See the Citations below (59).

(68) See the Article IRNERIUS.

[BB] The Mistakes of Mr Moreri.] First, It is not true that Abelard taught Divinity at Corbeil, and at Melun. 2dly, To alledge, that Authors are unanimous in declaring that Eloisa was Niece to the Canon Fulbert, is a very weak Argument against Papirius Masson, who asserts that she was the natural Daughter of a certain Canon. Fulbert might certainly have a Sister, imprudent in her Conduct: I say a Sister; for he was Eloisa's Uncle by the Mother's Side; her Avunculus. I am surpriz'd, that Andrew du Chêne (69) could think of confuting Papirius Masson by the same Argument, which Mr Moreri had made use of. 3dly, It does not appear, that Abelard introduced himself into the Canon's House, on pretence of teaching Eloisa Divinity: Why then is he particular in relating what Authors, whom he ought to follow, deliver only in general? The Words, " Erat cupidus " ille valdè, atque erga neptim suam ut amplius sem- " per in doctrinam proficeret literatorium plurimum " studiosus. —— He was very covetous, and at the " same Time very desirous, that his Niece should make " a Proficiency in Learning (70);" do not imply Divinity, more than any other Science. 4thly, It does not appear that Eloisa had any great Esteem for Abelard, before they liv'd together in the same House. 5thly, It is not true, that, upon her leaving her Uncle, he carried her with him into Brittany: he sent her indeed into that Province, but continued himself at Paris, to guard, in the best Manner he could, against the Attempts of Fulbert, 'till he could appease him by offering to marry his Niece. Then he went to join her in Brittany, as we find in the Relation of his Misfortunes. The Abridgment of the History of Eloisa and Abelard, lately publish'd (71), is not exact in this Point. The Author supposes, that Abelard left Paris, at the same time that he quitted the Canon's House; that he return'd thither, as soon as he was inform'd that his Pupil was pregnant, and that he carried her off by Night, in order to marry her privately, 'till her Relations should permit him to espouse her in publick. He had no Intention of marrying her, when he convey'd her away, nor did he ever pretend, that his Marriage was to be made publick. 6thly, Eloisa did not tell him freely, that she intended not by this Marriage to rob the Church of a Doctor, who, in all likelihood, would soon become one of it's most illustrious Prelates. Nothing like this occurs in the long Detail, which Abelard has left us, of Eloisa's Arguments against their Marriage. See the Article ELOISA, Remark [X]. 7thly, he does not declare, that he marry'd her for the quiet of his Conscience: Why will Mr Moreri pretend to know Abelard's Motives to this Marriage, better than himself? 8thly, The Marriage, and the Convent of Argenteuil, ought not to have been jumbled together: there was a Space between these two Circumstances. Eloisa was sent to this Convent upon no other account, than the ill Usage of her Uncle, who was angry with her for peremptorily denying her Marriage. 9thly, It is, therefore, a very false account to say, that this Marriage was not so secret but Fulbert had notice of it; for they receiv'd the nuptial Benediction, at Church, in his Presence. " Post pauces di- " es, nocte secretis orationum vigiliis in quadam Ec- " clesia celebratis, ibidem summo mane, avunculo " ejus atque quibusdam nostris vel ipsius amicis ad- " sistentibus, (69) See the Notes upon the Life of Abelard's Mistresses.

(70) Abelard's Works, p. 11.

(71) At the Hague in 1693. 12mo

Digitized by Google

" ſilentibus, nuptiali benedictione confœderamur —
" After a few Days, having privately, in the Even- " ing, celebrated Veſpers in a certain Church; early
" in the Morning we were there join'd in Marriage,
" and receiv'd the nuptial Benediction, in the Pre-
" ſence of her Uncle, and ſome of our, or his, Friends
" (72)." 10thly, It is by no Means true, that Abe-

(72) Abelard's Works, p. 10.

lard read Lectures to a great Number of Scholars in Champagne, from the Time that the vitious Lives of the Monks of Ruis, compell'd him to return thither, and at the Time that the Abbot Suger expell'd the Nuns from Argenteuil. Father L'Enfant has copy'd ſome of theſe Errors (73).

(73) L'Enfant, a Dominican, in his General Hiſtory of all Ages, to the 21ſt of April. The Work is in 6 Vol. in 12mo. divided according to the days of the Year, and printed at Paris in 1745.

ABELIANS, or ABELONIANS, a Sect of Hereticks who roſe in Champagne, near Hippon, and who had been ſome time extinct in St. Auſtin's Days. They profeſs'd very odd Principles, and ſuch as were not likely to continue long [A]. They ordain'd that each Man ſhould be in poſſeſſion of his particular Woman; they thought it improper, and would not allow, that a Man ſhould continue ſingle; it was neceſſary, acccording to the Statutes of the Order, that he ſhould have a Help-meet like unto himſelf: but it was not permitted him to lean upon this Prop, that is, to be corporeally join'd to his Wife: She was to be to him the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, the Fruit of which was forbidden him under ſevere Penalties. Theſe People were for regulating Matrimony upon the footing of the Terreſtrial Paradice, in which Adam and Eve were united only in their Affections; or rather they followed the Example of Abel: for they pretended that Abel was married, but that he died without ever having any Knowledge of his Wife: and from him this Sect borrow'd it's Name (a). When a Man and a Woman enter'd into this Society, they adopted two Children, a Boy and a Girl, who ſucceeded to their Goods, and who married together upon the ſame Condition of not getting Children, but of adopting two others of different Sexes. They eaſily met with poor People in the Neighbourhood, to furniſh them with Children. This Account is given us by St Auſtin (b); and as he is almoſt the only Author, who mentions them, we muſt imagine, that this Sect was known but in a few Places, and of but a ſhort Continuance. It is believed, that it begun in the Reign of Arcadius, and ended in that of Theodoſius the younger. All thoſe, who compos'd, it being at laſt reduc'd to one ſingle Village, re-united themſelves to the Catholic Church.

(a) See Bochart's Sacred Geogr. B. 2. Ch. 16. who thinks that Adam's Continence, during 130 Years after the Death of Abel, gave rise to the Name of theſe Hereticks.

(b) Aug. de Hæreſ. cap. 87. See there Lambert Danæus.

[A] Not likely to continue long.] Such a State of Continency between a Man and his Wife, who had every thing elſe in common, and whoſe Union was eſteemed a true Marriage, was too great a Violence offered to Nature, to be of long Continuance. Nullum violentum durabile. Nothing violent is laſting. The Aëtians were only a more moderate ſort of Encratites and Novatians: theſe latter abſolutely condemned Matrimony; the Abelians approved of, and retained it. It is true, it was barely the Name: they preſerved it's Appearance, but denied it's Power. " Hi nomen quidem conjugii & nuptiarum retinue-
" runt, vim autem & effectum earum prorſus ſuſtu-
" lerunt (1)." Had they looked upon Marriage to be a Sacrament, their Opinion, in this Point, would have been like that of the Zuinglians concerning the Euchariſt: they would have admitted the Figure, but not the Reality: and this muſt have contributed towards extinguiſhing the Sect. You will find in Furetiere's Dictionary (2), that

(1) Danæus upon Auſtin's Book de Hæreſ. ch. 87.

(2) Furet. ou the Word Mariage.

Boire, & manger, coucher enſemble,
C'eſt mariage, ce me ſemble.

Marriage conſiſts in eating, and drinking, and lying together.

This is the natural Idea of that State: and, in this Deſcription, the laſt Character paſſes for the principal, and the ſpecific Diſtinction. This it is, which is called the Conſummation of Marriage: without this, the moſt ſolemn Contract, the Betrothing, and the nuptial Benediction, paſs for meer Preliminaries, which it is eaſy to be diſengaged from. It is this which ties the Knot, and renders it indiſſoluble. It is the End, the Mark, and the Crown of the Work: It is the nè plus ultra. It is therefore very improbable, that ſuch Numbers of People, even after the Notion became common, ſhould chuſe to ſubmit both to the Name and the Reſtraint of Matrimony, and to renounce the moſt ſhining Honours of Celibacy, without taſting of the Fruits and the Joys of Marriage. When, therefore, I ſaid that the Principles of this Sect were not calculated for a long Duration, it was not neceſſary, that I ſhould allude to the witty Saying attributed to Sixtus the Fifth: " Non ſi chiava
" in queſta Religione, non durara (3);" as much as to ſay, they would break thro' ſuch a Precept of Religion as this, in ſpight of their Teeth. To adopt a Child, among them, ſupplied the Intention of getting one; and therefore we cannot apply to the Abelians the Remark of Florus on the firſt Inhabitants of Rome: " Res erat unius ætatis, Populus Viro-
" rum (4). — It was an Eſtabliſhment calculated to con-
" tinue but for one Race, as conſiſting entirely of Men:" For, if other Cauſes had not concurred, this Sect might have continued to the end of the World. " Per ſæculorum millia (incredibile dictu) Gens æter-
" na eſt, in qua nemo naſcitur. —— They are a
" Race of People, which (incredible to relate!) is
" never extinct, tho' no one is born among them." This Pliny ſays of the Eſſenians (5), and is every Day applied to the Monks.

(3) Carbet. Confeſſ. of Sancy, B. 1. c. 1.

(4) Florus, L. 1. c. 1.

(5) Pliny, B. 1. c. 17.

ABELLI (Anthony) Doctor of Divinity, a Jacobin, Abbot of Notre Dame de Livri, in Aulnoi, Confeſſor to the Queen-Mother, and formerly her Preacher, publiſh'd Sermons upon the Lamentations of Jeremiah, at Paris, in the Year 1582. I only copy la Croix du Maine and du Verdier Vau-Privas, and if I do not correct their Errors, at leaſt I will propoſe my own Doubts [A]. If Mr Moreri had done the ſame, perhaps by this time we might have arrived at the Truth. The Confeſſion of Authors, that they are ignorant of ſuch or ſuch Particulars, is the ſureſt way to excite the curious to communicate their Diſcoveries to the Public: A Conſideration, which will frequently engage me to propoſe my Doubts. Mr Moreri had ſo many Opportunities, which I have not, of conſulting thoſe, who might rectify ſuch things as theſe, that he ought to have done more upon this Occaſion than barely copy la Croix du Maine.

[A] I will propoſe my own Doubts.] It ſeems to me a little ſtrange, that a Jacobin ſhould be in poſſeſſion of an Abbey, and receive his Title from it. I know of no Part of France called Aulnoi. If it ſhou'd be read Laonois, it is another thing, but ſtill I find no Abbey in the Diocele of Laon named Livri (1). The

(1) See the State of France, publiſh'd by Mr. [illegible]

Abbey

Abbey of this Name is in the Dioceſe of Paris. Laſtly, I find, in the Act, by which the Univerſity of Paris ſwore Fealty to Henry IV. Apr. 22. 1594. among thoſe, who ſubſcribed it, one Francis Abely, Abbot of Ivri, Preacher and Almoner to the King (2). Thoſe, who have Leiſure, may conſider whether or no what relates to ſeveral Perſons be not here collected, and applied to one (3).

My Doubts have procured me the following excellent Illuſtration of this Matter. "Aunoi, or Aulnoi, "is very right. There is the Abbey of Nôtre Dame "de Livri in Aunoi, in Alneto (4), of the Order of "St Auguſtin, in the Deanery of Chelles, and Dio- "ceſe of Paris. In order to obtain this Abbey, we "muſt ſuppoſe, that Anthony Abelli transferred him- "ſelf from the Order of St Dominic to that of "St Auguſtin, which is very eaſily done, and practi- "ſed every Day. As to Francis Abely, Abbot of "Ivry, I ſuſpect it is a Miſtake, and that this Francis, "who was apparently the Succeſſor of Anthony, "ought to be ſtyled Abbot of Livri, there being no "Abbey of the Name of Ivri in France." This Illuſtration was communicated to me by Mr De la Monnoie. The Abbot Baudrand has informed me, that the Abbey of Livri is three Leagues diſtant from Paris, as you go to Meaux, in a little Diſtrict named Aulnoy, in which there are ten or twelve Villages, and that he knows nothing farther concerning it's Boundaries. Theſe two Accounts ſufficiently clear up my Difficulties.

(2) Mr de Launoi's Hiſt. of the College of Navarre, p. p. 372.

(3) This is too often the fault of Tranſcribers of Manuſcripts.

(4) Claud. Robertus, in his Nomenclatura Abbatium Galliæ.

ABELLY (Lewis) Biſhop, and Earl of Rhodes, who died October 4. 1691, aged 88 Years (a), was a Native of Paris, and Rector of St Joſſe, in that City. He wrote ſeveral Works, particularly a Treatiſe of Divinity, entituled Medulla Theologica (b), upon which Account Boileau gives him the Epithet of Moëlleux, Pithy, or full of Marrow [A], and which differs widely from the Maxims of the Janſeniſts [B]. He was (a) The Mecure Galant, of Oct. 1691.

(b) The firſt Edition is that of Paris, in 1651. A ſixth was publiſh'd in 2 Vol. in 12mo. in 1659.

[A] The Epithet of Moëlleux, Pithy, &c.] In reciting this Paſſage, I ſhall make no Scruple to begin it a little higher; for beſides, that there is no Danger of any one's being diſpleaſed with the Length of the Quotation, it will ſerve to confirm what I ſhall advance in the following Remark.

(1) The Author means the Abbot Auberi, Canon of St Capelli, a famous Moliniſt, Brother of that Mr Auberi, who wrote the Hiſtory of Card. Mazarin. See Suite du Menagiana, p. 8. Edit. Holl.

Alain touſſe & ſe leve, Alain (1) ce ſavant homme,
Qui de Bauni vingt fois a la toute la Somme,
Qui poſſede Abelli, qui ſait tout Raconis,
Et même entend, dit-on, le Latin d'A Kempis.
N'en doutez point, leur dit ce ſavant Canoniſte,
Ce coup part, j'en ſuis Sûr, d'une main Janſeniſte,
Mes yeux en ſont temoins: j'ai vu moi-meme hier
Entrer chez le Prelat le Chapelain Garnier.
Arnaud, cet Heretique ardent à nous de truire,
Par ce miniſtre adroit tente de le ſeduire.
Sans doute il aura la dans ſon Saint Auguſtin
Q'autrefois Saint Louis erigea ce Lutrin.
Il va nous inonder des torrens de ſa plume,
Il faut, pour lui répondre, ouvrir plus d' une volume.
Conſultons ſur ce point quelque Auteur ſignale;
Voions ſi des Lutrins Bauni n' à point parlé.
Etudions enfin, il en eſt tems encore,
Et pour ce grand projet, tantôt, dès que l'Aurore
Rallumera le jour dans l'onde enſeveli,
Que chacun prenne en main le MOELEUX ABELLI (2).

(2) Boileau's Lutrin, Canto 4. 169, &c.

Then Allen roſe, collected and prepar'd,
He regularly hemm'd, then ſtroak'd his Beard,
And claim'd as Prolocutor to be heard.
The learned Seer Attention might demand,
The only Scholar in the reverend Band.
The learned Seer had oft Abelli read,
And fill'd with Raconis his muddy Head.
Nay, great A-Kempis he could conſtrue too;
And all his knotty Paſſages undo.
Then thus he ſpoke: Believe me, Sirs! I know
Some Janſeniſt muſt aim this fatal Blow.
It muſt be ſo; we're in the Prelate's Snare;
Theſe Eyes ſaw Chaplain Garnier enter there.
Arnaud endeavours, by this artful Friend,
The Prelate to his Purpoſes to bend.
Sirs, he moſt certainly has ſomewhere heard,
That this litigious Desk St Louis rear'd.
Then, grown polemical, he'll proudly think
To drown us all with Deluges of Ink.
Now 'tis our Duty timely to prepare,
And ſtand a reſolute defenſive War,
Conſider then; does Bauni nothing ſay
Of Desks? None of the Fathers lean that Way?
I find this Argument will ask much Oil,
Cloſe Reading, indefatigable Toil.
Then, till Aurora kindles up the Day,
And lights her Lamp, extinguiſh'd in the Sea;
Let each in hand PITHY ABELLI take,
And what the learned Doctor dictates, ſpeak.

If theſe Verſes contain'd nothing more than the Agreement between Bauni and Abelli, they would ſufficiently declare the Anti-Janſeniſm of the latter; but there are other Arrows in this Quiver, which are directed to the ſame Mark, and carry home. The Author has given us, in the Margin, a Note, to explain the Reaſon of the Epithet, and it was rightly done. When I reflect upon the Conjectures, which the Critics would form, ſhould the French Language one Day meet with the Fate of the Latin, and the Works of Boileau be preſerv'd, I repreſent to myſelf a thouſand Whims. For, ſuppoſe that the Medulla Theologica of Mr Abelly were entirely loſt, and ſcarce any Author extant, who takes notice of it, nor any Note in the Margin of the Latin, over againſt the Word Moelleux, what a ſtir would the Critics make to find out the Reaſon of this Epithet, and how many Miſtakes would they run into (3)? I fancy to myſelf, that ſome one of them, ill ſatisfy'd with the Conjectures of all his Predeceſſors, would at length pretend to diſcover, that Abelly was diſtinguiſh'd by this Epithet, in alluſion to the Offerings of Abel, which were not dry, like thoſe of Cain, but a real Sacrifice of Beaſts. Upon this Occaſion he would quote the Sacrum pingue dabo, nec macrum ſacrificabo: he would ſay, that the Parts of the Victim were not all of equal Efficacy, and that the Fat, under which is comprehended the Marrow, was of ſingular Uſe. The more learned he happen'd to be, the farther would he run on from one extravagant Conceit to another, and heap Chimeras on Chimeras. Upon this Occaſion, as well as many others, we ſhould ſee accompliſh'd that Expectation in the ninth Satire of Mr Boileau,

Et deja vous croiez, dans vos Rimes obſcures,
Au Saummaiſes futurs preparer des tortures.

Thy Rhimes, even now obſcure, thro' learned Pains,
Prepare the Rack for future Critics Brains,

(3) Compare what Father Bouhours ſays in the 4th Dialogue of his Maniere de bien penſer, p. 399. on the ſubject of theſe Words of Boileau, Profes dans l'Ordre des Côteaux.

It were to be wiſh'd, ſays ſome one, that a good Commentary were wrote upon the Satires of this Author (4) ‡. It is certain ſuch Writings ſoon grow obſcure in many Places. The Catholicon d'Eſpagne, and the Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy, are a Proof of this. The Publick is very much indebted to the Author, who publiſh'd Remarks upon the laſt of theſe two Satires, in the Year 1693, and upon the firſt in 1696. He is a curious and diſcerning Writer, and very fit for this Work.

(4) Nouvelles de la Rep. de Lett. Oct. 1684. Art. c.

‡ This Deſign has been executed ſince the Death of Mr Bayle, by Mr Broſſette. He publiſh'd in 1715, at Geneva, the Works of Boileau, with Hiſtorical Notes, communicated by the Author himſelf, in 2 Vol. 4to. It was reprinted at Amſt. in 1718. in Fol. and 4to. and in 1722 at the Hague, in 4 Vol. 12mo.

[B] From the Maxims of the Janſeniſts.] One of theſe Gentlemen complains bitterly, that Mr De la Berchere, Archbiſhop of Aix, had ordered the Director of his Seminary, to follow Abelly, and no longer teach the Moral Divinity of Grenoble (5). He aſſerts, that there are three falſe Principles in Abelly's Medulla Theologica, of which, The firſt overthrows that moſt certain Direction of a good Conſcience, acknowledged by the Heathens themſelves, which forbids the doing of an Action, the Lawfulneſs, or Unlawfulneſs, of which is doubtful. The ſecond reduces to nothing the greateſt of all the Commandments, namely, that which obliges us to love God above every thing. The third is directly repugnant to that Care, which the Cardinal Grimaldi took, to ſecure

(5) Compoſ'd by Mr Genet, whom the Cardinal Grimaldi, Predeceſſor of Mr de la Berchere, ſent for to his Seminary, in order to teach his Morality there himſelf, and who was afterwards made Biſhop of Vaiſon.

Digitized by Google

was Author likewiſe of The Life of Vincent de Paul, Founder, and firſt Superior General, of the Congregation of the Miſſion; a Treatiſe on the Principles of Chriſtian Morality; another on Hereſies; another on the Tradition of the Church in relation to the Worſhip of the Virgin Mary, &c. This laſt Work, which was printed a ſecond Time at Paris, in the Year 1675, gave great Pleaſure to the Proteſtants, as it furniſh'd them with good Weapons againſt the Converters, who would make them believe, that whatever there might be extravagant in this kind of Devotion, it was owing wholly either to Monkiſh Opinions, or to Abuſes, which the Biſhops were every day correcting: The ſame Book was uſeful to thoſe of that Perſuaſion againſt the Biſhop of Condom's Work (c). In truth, Mr Abelly became the Patron of the moſt extravagant Conceits, in relation to the Worſhip of the Bleſſed Virgin. This was deſtroying the Attempts of another Prelate, and the Intentions of thoſe, who publiſh'd, or approved, The wholſome Advice of the Bleſſed Virgin to her indiſcreet Votaries. Mr Abelly was a Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris; he reſign'd his Biſhoprick to another, when his Age would not ſuffer him to diſcharge the Duties of his Office, and retir'd to the Houſe of St Lazarus. He diſcover'd a Secret in the Life of Mr Vincent, which was pleaſing to many [C].

(c) Entitled, An Expoſition of the Doctrine of the Catholic Church.

ſecure the Obſervation of the Rules of St Charles in the Sacrament of Penance, by diſtinguiſhing a great Number of Caſes, in which the Confeſſors may either refuſe, or defer Abſolution. Mr Abelly therefore was accuſed of teaching, Firſt, That one may follow an Opinion leſs probable and leſs certain, in doing that which is a Sin according to the contrary Opinion, which ſeems to us more probable: Secondly, That it is not certain, that the Precept of loving God above all things obliges us always, in virtue of itſelf, but only by Accident. Thirdly, That one may without Scruple conſtantly abſolve thoſe, whoſe Life is a perpetual Viciſſitude of Confeſſing and Sinning. See the Advertiſements to the Reverend Fathers, the Jeſuites of Aix, in Provence, concerning a printed Paper, entitled, " A Ball, danced at the " Reception of the Lord Archbiſhop of Aix." This Advertiſement was publiſhed in 1687, in 12mo.

It is eaſy to ſee, that Mr Abelly's Book is meant in the following Paſſage of the Menagiana. " As " they were talking of the Marrow of A—— Mr " L'Abbé le Camus, at preſent a Cardinal, ſaid, that " the Moon was in the Wane, when he wrote it (6)." A new Proof of the Contempt, which the Janſeniſts had for this Work.

(6) Menagiana, p. 65. of the 1st Dutch Edit.

[C] A Secret —— which was pleaſing to many.] He informed the Public, that Mr Vincent had drop'd all Correſpondence with the Abbot of St Cyran, after having heard him declare, that the Council of Trent was only a Cabal, and an Aſſembly of Schoolmen, with the Pope at the Head of them (7). Whoever is convinced of this, cannot be a Roman Catholic.

(7) Abelly's Life of Vincent de Paul, B. 2. c. 12. See The lawful Preſumptions againſt Janſenism, p. 134.

ABERDEEN, an Epiſcopal City of Scotland, under the Archbiſhoprick of St Andrews, including an Univerſity. It may be conſidered as ſeparated into two Cities; for there is Aberdeen at the Mouth of the Don, and Aberdeen at the Mouth of the Dee. The former is call'd Old Aberdeen, the other New Aberdeen. They are but a Mile diſtant from each other. The Biſhop's See, and the Univerſity, are at Old Aberdeen: the other is a richer, and more trading, Place. The Univerſity was founded in the Year 1480, the Biſhoprick in the Year 1100: it was tranſlated from Murtlac, as Hector Boëthius, a Scotch Hiſtorian (a) informs us. This City is call'd indifferently in Latin Abredonia, Aberdonium, and Aberdona. Mr Moreri endeavours to refine upon this Article [A], but without Succeſs.

(a) In Baudrand's Lexic. Geogr. p. 4.

[A] Mr Moreri endeavours to refine upon this Article.] He quarrels with thoſe, who ſay, that Aberdonne, or Aberdon, Aberdonia, Aberdone, or Devana, is a City. " There is not a City (ſays " he) in all Scotland of this Name; but there are " two Towns, one of which is called New-Aberdeen, " and the other Old-Aberdeen: and if theſe Names " are jumbled together, it muſt be in Books or " Maps, that are very incorrect." It would be unneceſſary to prove, that, not only in common Speech, the Diſtinction of Old and New Aberdeen is not made uſe of, but that, even in Books, it is very little obſerved. For what Authors ever ſaid, The Biſhoprick of Old Aberdeen, The Univerſity of New Aberdeen? What Hiſtorians are not ſatisfy'd with barely mentioning Aberdeen, when they ſpeak of this Epiſcopal City? Mr Moreri plainly forgot his own Criticiſm, when under the Article SCOTLAND, he ſays, St Andrews has one Univerſity, and Aberdeen another; for, otherwiſe, he ought to have ſaid Old Aberdeen.

ABGILLUS (John), Son of a certain King of the Friſons, led ſo exemplary a Life, that he gain'd the Sirname of Prêſtre, or the Prieſt. He accompany Charlemagne in his Expedition to Paleſtine; and, inſtead of returning to Europe with Charlemagne, after taking of Jeruſalem, he advanc'd as far as the Indies, made vaſt Conqueſts there, and founded the Empire of the Abyſſins, which from his Name, was called The Empire of John the Prieſt *. He compos'd two Hiſtories, one comprehending the Voyage of Charlemagne to the Holy Land, the other his own Expedition to the Indies. This laſt Work contains a Deſcription of the Country, and of the different People, which inhabit it. If Suffridus Petri (a) was capable of imagining theſe Hiſtories to have been any other than paultry Romances, compos'd in the Ages of Ignorance, and in which Charlemagne is introduc'd with ſuch an extraordinary Bravery, as if he had been one of the imaginary Heroës, Palmerin of Oliva, Huon of Bourdeaux, or Geoffrey Great-Tooth: if, I ſay, Suffridus Petri was capable of conceiving this, he deſerves all the hard Words, which Voſſius has given him (b); for what can be invented more fabulous, than the Conqueſt of Jeruſalem by Charlemagne?

* We call him in Engliſh, Prieſter John.

(a) He ſpeaks of this Author, and his Works, in his Treatiſe de Scriptor. Friſiæ.

(b) O Hominem valde ſimplicem, ac prope dixerim inſipientem, qui vanis adeo ac ſtultis commentis habuerit fidem! ——O very weak, and I had almoſt ſaid, ſtupid Man, who could ſo eaſily credit ſo fooliſh Inventions! Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat. p. 300.

Digitized by Google

ABYDUS, a City of Egypt. Stephen of Byzantium calls it a Colony of the Mileſians [A], which receiv'd it's Name from one Abydus. Strabo ſpeaks of it, as a very ruinous Town; but he ſays, that it appears to have been very large, and the principal Town of the Country, next to Thebes (a). The famous King Memnon reſided in it, and built there a magnificent Palace (b). The Temple and Sepulchre of Oſiris are a great Ornament to this City, and recommend it extreamly. The greateſt Lords of Egypt affected to be buried there, that they might have their Monuments near that of Oſiris (c). The Oracle of the God Beſa was no ſmall Ornament to this Place. All the neighbouring People were great Worſhippers of this Deity, who gave his Anſwers in writing to thoſe, who had not the convenience of conſulting him in Perſon. It was ſufficient at that time to inform him by Letter of one's Requeſt (d). This Oracle was ſtill in being in the Reign of Conſtantius, Son of Conſtantin the Great, and was the Cauſe of great Diſorders [B]. Abydus was 7500 Paces weſtward of the Nile (e) but a Canal was cut, which conducted the Waters of that River to it (f). It was above Dioſpolis and Tentyris (g), and below Ptolemais (h), which was the largeſt City of Thebais, and as big as Memphis. The Inhabitants of Abydus had an Averſion to the Sound of Trumpets [C]. There has been much talk of certain Thorns, which grew in their Territory (D), and which are ſaid to have conſtantly born Flowers of the Shape of a Crown. The Name of it is thought to be at preſent Abutich. John Leon does not ſay, what Mr Moreri aſcribes to him, that it ſtood in the place, where the Patriarch Joſeph was buried [E]. There was a City, called Abydus, upon the Side of the Helleſpont, of which I ſhall take no Notice at preſent, tho' Moreri's Dictionary wants to be ſet right upon this Article.

(a) Strabo, L. 17. p. 559. Edit. 1587.

(b) Memnonis Regiâ & Oſiris Templo inclytum. Famous for the Palace of Memnon, and the Temple of Oſiris. Plin. L. 5. c. 9. Strabo, L. 17. p. 559.

(c) Plutarch of Iris and Oſiris, p. 352.

(d) Amm. Marcellinus. L. 19. c. 12. p. 227, 228.

(e) Plin. L. 5. c. 9.

(f) Strabo, L. 17. p. 559.

(g) Plin. L. 5. c. 9.

(h) Strabo, L. 17. p. 579.

[A] A Colony of the Mileſians.] This is not clear. I allow that they ſettled Colonies in Egypt; but it was near the Mouth of the Nile: Their Power conſiſted at that time in Naval Force; and their Trade did not require a Situation ſo diſtant from the Coaſt, as Abydus was. Beſides, They did not ſettle in Egypt 'till the Reign of Cyaxares, King of Media (1): Whereas Abydus was a conſiderable City before that time; ſince Memnon not only kept his Court, but built likewiſe a magnificent Palace, there.

(1) Strabo, L. 16. p. 551.

[B] Was the Cauſe of great Diſorders.] The Manner how is as follows: Thoſe, who conſulted the Oracle by writing, ſometimes left their Letter in the Temple, after they had received their Anſwer (2). There were People ſo malicious as to ſend ſome of theſe Letters to Conſtantius; who, being of a mean, ſuſpicious, credulous, and captious Diſpoſition, threw himſelf into a terrible Paſſion. "Qui ut erat "anguſti pectoris, obſurdeſcens in aliis etiam ni"mium ſeriis, in hoc titulo ima, quod aiunt, auri"cula mollior, & ſuſpicax, & minutus, acri felle "concaluit (3)." Immediately he ſigned a Commiſſion for proſecuting thoſe who were guilty, on pretence, that many of them had conſulted their Deity concerning the Life of the Emperor, and the Name of the Perſon, who was to ſucceed him. The Head of the Commiſſion, a violent and avaritious Perſon, found Means to involve whom he pleaſed in this Proſecution. This gave Occaſion to numberleſs Acts of Violence, as you may read in Ammianus Marcellinus.

(2) Amm. Marcellinus. L. 19. c. 12. p. 227, 228.

(3) Amm. Marcell. at the Year 359.

[C] Had an Averſion to the Sound of Trumpets.] This we may learn from Ælian, provided we correct him according to the Conjecture of Berkelius (4). Σάλπιγγος ἦχον βδελύττονται Βυσιρῖται, καὶ Ἄβυδος ἡ Αἰγυπτία (it is in the Editions of Ælian Ἄβυ ἡ Αἰγυπτία) καὶ Λύκων πολις. —— The Buſiritæ, and the Egyptian Abydus, and Lycopolis, abhor the Sound of a Trumpet (5). Strabo confirms this Conjecture, when he ſays, that the Uſe of Muſic, both vocal and inſtrumental, was forbidden in the Preludes to the Sacrifices, which were offered to Oſiris in the Temple of Abydus (6).

(4) Berkelius upon Steph. de Urbibus, p. 14.

(5) Ælian. de Animal. L. 10. c. 28.

(6) Strabo, L. 17. p. 562.

[D] Thorns, which grew in their Territory.] Athenæus mentions this (7): but we muſt ſubſtitute the Word Ἄβυδον for Ἄβυλον in that Place, according to the very probable Conjecture of Berkelius (8). The Matter of Fact, according to Athenæus, is this. The Thorns, which grew about the Temple of Tindium, were thought to be always in Bloom: but the Foundation of this Notion, according to Hellanicus's Remark (9), was that, whenever the People aſſembled in this Place, the Thorns were covered with Wreaths of Flowers of various kinds. Demetrius relates, that ſuch kind of Thorns grew about Abydus, and that it was currently reported among the Egyptians, that the Ethiopian Soldiers, whom Tithon ſent to King Priam, having heard that Memnon was ſlain, threw down their Chaplets of Flowers, before Abydus, upon theſe Thorns, whence it came to paſs, that the Flowers, which they produced, reſembled Crowns (10).

(7) Athen. L. 15. c. 7.

(8) Berkelius upon Steph. de de Urbibus, p. 14.

(9) Upon the Ægyptiaca, in Athen. B. 15. c. 7.

(10) Demetrius upon the Ægyptiaca, in Athen. B. 15. c. 7.

[E] The Patriarch Joſeph was buried.] Mr Moreri quotes John Leon, p. 8. At firſt Sight, one would think he meant Page the eighth; but we are to look for his Quotation in Book the eighth. Now what we meet with there is this: that it is a Miſtake to believe, that the City Meſre Hatichi was the Reſidence of the Kings of Egypt in the Days of Joſeph and Moſes. He confutes this Opinion by alledging, that theſe antient Kings dwelt on the Weſt-Side of the Nile; which he proves by two Arguments; the firſt is, the Situation of that City, which, the Scripture tells us, the Jews built for Pharaoh: the ſecond is, the Situation of a very antient Building, which is ſaid to be the Sepulchre of Joſeph. He remarks a few Pages after, that the Town, where this Sepulchre is, ſtands upon an Arm of the Nile, and is at preſent called El Fiium. I do not find that he makes any mention of our Abydus.

ABIMELECH, King of Gerar, in the Land of the Philiſtines, was cotemporary with Abraham. This Patriarch, being retired with his Family, into the Land of Gerar, his Wife Sara, tho' Ninety Years of Age (a), found herſelf expos'd to danger: ſhe was taken away by Abimelech, who thought her ſo fair, as to deſire to make her his Wife. Abraham might have avoided this Accident, by declaring himſelf to be Sara's Huſband: but, fearing to be ſlain, he pretended, that ſhe was his Siſter, and deſired her to ſay, that he was her Brother (b). This was the ſecond Time he made uſe of this Artifice (c); which certainly does not deſerve the Encomiums, beſtowed on it by St Chryſoſtom [A]. It is believed, that the Philiſtine King was ſtruck with a Diſtemper,

(a) See the laſt Remark on the Article SARA.

(b) Gen. xx.

(c) He made uſe of it, Gen. xii.

[A] The Encomiums, beſtowed on it by St Chryſoſtom.] We ſhall point out in another Place (1), what is blameable in this Diſſimulation of Abraham. Every one may judge, as he pleaſes, of his ſecond Fall. The Danger which Sara's Honour was expos'd to the firſt Time, ſeems, at firſt ſight, to render a Repetition of the Fraud more inexcuſable; but, on the other Hand, does it not ſeem more juſtifiable to make uſe

(1) In the Remarks on the Article SARA.

Digitized by Google

Distemper, which render'd him impotent [B]: but, however that be, it is certain that Divine Providence permitted him not to satisfy the Passion which he had conceiv'd for Sara. He was inform'd in a Dream, that she was married to a Prophet, and that he should die, if he did not restore her to her Husband. He fail'd not accordingly to restore her to him, and to reproach him for his Deceit. Abraham, in excuse for himself, among other Reasons, alledg'd that he was really the Brother of Sara, born of the same Father tho' of a different Mother. Thus the Scripture makes him excuse himself. Mr Moreri very improperly supplies the sacred Text with the Words of Josephus, who falsly supposes, that Abraham pretended, that Sara was his Brother's Daughter (d). He follows the same Author, in relation to a Fact, of which the Scripture speaks not a word; I mean, the pretended Alliance contracted between Abraham and Abimelech, upon the Restitution of Sara. The Scripture is content to say, that Abimelech made great Presents to this Patriarch, and offered him the Liberty of sojourning in what part of his Country he pleas'd. It is true, there was an Alliance between them; but it was not contracted till some Years after (e): I mean the Treaty of Beersheba. Josephus, as if he were possess'd of Memoirs of a Remedy, which had succeeded, than at first to make the Experiment of it; and is it not past doubt, that the first Trial had all the Success which Abraham could hope for? He not only preserv'd his Life, but was loaded with Presents, and recover'd his Wife untouch'd; a Circumstance, which, perhaps, he did not expect; I say perhaps, for I dare not write, what St Chrysostom dar'd to preach. "You know, says he "to his Auditors, that nothing chagrins a Husband "so much, as to suspect that his Wife has been in "the Power of another; and yet this just Man em- "ploy'd all his Efforts, that the Act of Adultery might "be accomplish'd (2)." One would expect, after this, that the Preacher should censure the Patriarch: but, on the contrary, we find him bestowing great Encomiums on his Courage, and his Prudence: On his Courage, which enabled him to conquer the Stings of Jealousy, so far as even to advise an Action of this Nature; on his Prudence, which pointed out to him this Expedient, so certain to extricate him from the Difficulties and Dangers, which surrounded him. St Chrysostom does not forget to represent, in lively Colours, the terrible Power of Jealousy, in order to magnify that great Courage, which could surmount this Passion; but, on the other Hand, he derogates from the Prudence of Abraham, in saying, that, as he was sensible, that Sara was too handsome to be able to escape the Incontinency of the Egyptian, whether he called her his Wife, or his Sister, he determin'd to call her his Sister, hoping by that means to save his Life. "Behold, crys St Chrysostom, with "what Prudence this good Man found out a sure "way to elude all the Snares of the Egyptians." After that, he excuses his having consented to the Adultery of his Wife, for this Reason, because Death, which was not as yet dispoil'd of his Tyranny, inspir'd at that time great Terror. Ὅτι ὔπω ἦν καταλυθεῖσα τὸ θανάτου ἡ τυραννὶς, διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τῇ μοιχείᾳ τῆς γυναικὸς αἱρεῖται κοινωνῆσαι ὁ δίκαιος, καὶ μονονυχὶ ὑπηρετήσασθαι τῷ μοιχῷ εἰς τὴν τῆς γύναικος ὕβριν ἵνα τὸν θανατον διαφύγῃ (3): Because the Tyranny of Death was not yet dissolved, therefore this just Man consented to the Adultery of his Wife, and was, as it were, subservient to the Adulterer, to his Wife's Disgrace, in order to escape Death. After this Encomium on the Husband, he goes on to the Praises of the Wife, and says that she freely accepted of the Proposal, and did her utmost to play the Farce well (4). Upon which, he advises Wives to imitate her Example, and crys out, "Who does not admire this "great readiness to obey? Who can ever sufficiently "praise Sara, in that, after such Continence, and at "so great an Age, she was willing to expose her- "self to an Adulterer, and give up her Body to "Barbarians, in order to save the Life of her Hus- "band (5)?" I believe no Preacher now a-days would dare to handle so delicate a Subject as this, in such a Manner: he would give too great occasion for Raillery to the prophane; and I very much suspect that the Inhabitants of Antioch, naturally given to slander, could not hear such a Sermon, without taking too great a Liberty in making ill-natur'd Reflexions. St Ambrose is not less sparing in his Commendations of Sara's conjugal Love (6), and we shall see, under the Article ACINDINUS (Septimius), that St Austin was under almost the same Illusion. 'Tis strange, that these great Luminaries of the Church, with all their Virtue, and all their Zeal, should be ignorant that it is unlawful to save either one's own Life, or another's, at the Expence of a Crime.

(d) Joseph. Antiq. B. 1. c. 11.

(e) Genes. xxi. 31, 32.

(2) ὁ μὲν τοι δίκαιος σκυθάζει, καὶ πάντα ποιεῖ ὥστε εἰς ἔργον τὴν μοιχείαν ἐκβηναι. Chrysost. Homil. 32. in Genesis.

(3) Id. ib.

(4) Παντα ποιεῖ ὥστε τὸ δρᾶμα λαθεῖν. She did every thing she cou'd, that the Fiction might be conceal'd. Id. ib.

(5) Τίς κατ' ἄξιαν ταύτην ἐπαινέσειεν; ἥτις μετὰ τοσαυτην, καὶ ἐν ἡλικίᾳ τοιαύτῃ, ὑπερ τοῦ τὸν δίκαιον διασωσαι, ὁσον εἰς τὴν οἰκείαν γνώμην καὶ εἰς μοιχείαν ἑαυτὴν ἐξέδωκεν, καὶ συνουσίας ἠνέσχετο βαρβαρικῆς. Id. ib.

(6) Ambrof. de Abrah. Lib. 1. c. 2.

[B] Of a Distemper, which render'd him impotent.] To extinguish the Ardour of his Lust, God sent him a Disease, which put all the Physicians Art to a stand. God admonish'd him, in a Dream, to have nothing to do with the Wife of this Stranger. Abimelech, finding himself a little better, some time after, declared to his Friends the Cause of his Distemper, and restored Sara to Abraham. Thus Josephus relates the Affair (7); little solicitous, according to Custom, to adapt his Narration to that of Moses; or rather, bold enough to give him the Lie. For does not Moses say, that Abimelech, after his Dream, rose early in the Morning, and call'd all his Servants, in order to communicate to them, what he had learnt in his Sleep (8)? Could he have done this, had he been given over by his Physicians? Josephus was sensible of the Difficulty; but, in order to remove it, he boldly supposes, against the Authority of the Scripture, that this Prince did not communicate his Dream to his Friends, 'till his Distemper was a little abated, some time after his Dream. Some think Abimelech was not afflicted in his own Person, but in those of his Women (9): and that, when the Scripture relates that God heal'd him, it only means his taking off the Seal, which he had fixed to all the Wombs of the House of Abimelech (10). I could soon be prevail'd upon to approve of this Interpretation; because I see no trace of Abimelech's Distemper in the whole 20th Chapter of Genesis, except these Words. God heal'd Abimelech, and his Wife, and his Maid-Servants, and they bare Children. But as the following verse mentions only the Affliction of these Women, it is sufficiently probable, that all the Evil, which God sent upon Abimelech, consisted in that. I shall, in another Place (11), answer a Question, which may be put to me: Why this Prince, if he was in perfect Health, did not gratify that Passion, which had prompted him to take away Sara. I am not surprized at the fabulous Accounts, which the Jews have published, upon this Story: nor should I wonder at their Conduct, if they had invented a thousand Chimeras concerning our Abimelech. They say, that all the Channels of the Body were stop'd up, both of Man and Beast, both of Male and Female, so that nothing could either enter, or come out (12). They could no longer eat, nor drink; they could no longer void their Excrements, &c. The Men, besides, were seiz'd with such a Frigidity, that Abimelech was incapable of discharging the Duty of a Man, either to Sara, or to any other Woman. A celebrated Protestant Divine (13) adopts this Tradition, as far as concerns the latter Part, and rejects the rest, as ridiculous, or superfluous. He says, that, as the Devil sometimes (14), by his Impediments, prevents married People from paying their conjugal Duty, it is not improbable, but that God might send such a kind of Affliction on the Family of Abimelech, for a good and holy Purpose; which was to preserve the Chastity of Sara, and to make it appear very evident, that she had received no Stain in the House of Abimelech. He believes, therefore, that the Domestics of Abimelech were struck with the Disease of Barrenness: the Men, by an Impotency like that occasioned by Witchcraft; the Women, by an entire shutting up of the

(7) Joseph. Antiq. B. 1. c. 11.

(8) Genes. xx. 8.

(9) Salian's Annals, T. 1. p. 469.

(10) Genes. xx. 18.

(11) In the Remark [C] of the Article SARA.

(12) Mercerus. See Riveti Exercit. in Genes. Operum, T. 1. p. 395.

(13) Rivet. Heidegg. follows his Steps. Hist. Patriarch. T. 2. p. 165.

(14) It is truly call'd Nouër Feguillette.

Digitized by Google

moirs preferable to those of Moses [C], ventures to place this Treaty before the Birth of Isaac, whereas the Scripture places it after the Rejection of Ismaël, which did not come to pass, till after Isaac was weaned. Mr Moreri has follow'd the same Guide, when he assures us, that Abimelech shew'd great Kindness to Isaac, who had retired into the Land of Gerar. It is not indeed impossible, but this might be the same Abimelech; but it is more probable it was the Successor of him, who took away Sara [D]. It is certain that Isaac, on account of a Famine, which arose, retired the Gates of Life, or by a Contraction of the Parts, which rendered them incapable of Conception. That's too much by half, some one may say, it was sufficient to the Designs of Providence, that the Men were bewitch'd. But it must be reply'd, that the closing up of the Parts of the Women being a Fact, which Moses expressly mentions, it must by no means be drop'd as superfluous. This matter is explain'd two ways; neither of which entirely clears it up. Some say, that Moses's Meaning is, that the Wife and the Maid-Servants of Abimelech could not bring forth, when their Time was come: they had violent Pangs, and difficult Labour; but this must be at the time of which the Prophet Isaiah speaks: The Children are come to the Birth, and there is not strength to bring forth (15). Others say, that his Meaning is, that they did not conceive. The first Interpretation cannot be reconcil'd with Genesis, unless we can suppose that all the Women, which belong'd to Abimelech were with Child, when Sara was taken from her Husband (16): which is not likely. The other supposes Sara to have staid longer in this Prince's House, than she really did; for it could not be known in a very short time, whether so great a Number of Women had all lost the Faculty of Conception. This Difficulty oblig'd a very skillful Interpreter to say, that the Punishment, which God sent upon the Family of Abimelech, was known in a Manner, of which we have no Notion (17). Lastly, The Rabins make but little Difference between the personal Affliction of Abimelech, and the personal Affliction of the first Ravisher of Sara (18). They say of this latter, that he was seiz'd with the Disease Ratan, which is the most troublesome of all Ulcers, and the most destructive of the Joys of Love (19). Solomon Jarchi will have it, that the King of Egypt's Plague, was a Disease in his Head, caused by a Worm, bred in his Brain: "Morbus perturbati cerebri ob innatum ipsi Vermiculum, quo qui laborant, iis gravis fit concubitus, & liberi gignuntur ulcerosi (20).—— The Disease of a disturbed Brain, caused by a Worm bred in it; which whoever is troubled with, finds it difficult to perform the matrimonial Duty; and his Children are born ulcerous." Some think, these last Words spoil all; for they imagine, that, for the Honour of Sara, the Plague of Pharaoh must have render him absolutely impotent. See the Remark upon the Article of this holy Woman.

(15) Isaiah xxxvii. 3.

(16) God had entirely clos'd up EVERY womb of the House of Abimelech. Gen. xx. 18.

(17) Mercerus in Rivetus, Oper. Tom. 1. p. 395.

(18) Pharaoh King of Egypt.

(19) Mercerus, ubi supra.

(20) Heidegg. Hist. Patriarch. T. 2. p. 154.

[C] Memoirs preferable to those of Moses.] I have a long time conceived an Indignation against Josephus, and those who excuse him upon this Head. One, who made an open Profession of Judaism, the Belief of which is founded upon the Divinity of the Scripture, has yet the Assurance to relate things otherwise, than he must have read them in Genesis: he alters, he adds, he drops Circumstances; in a Word, he sets himself up in Opposition to Moses, in such a Manner, that one of the two must be a false Historian. Is this to be born, and ought we not to conclude, either that he did not scruple to scandalize his Nation, or that he thought the particular Opinion he entertained of the Fabillity, and consequently of the Non-Inspiration of Moses, was common among the Jews? He deserves the following Rebuke of Theodore Beza very justly. "Hoc ego semel pronuncio, quod tu nunquam falsum esse ostendes, si verus est multis locis Josephus, mentitum esse multis locis Mosen & sacros omnes Scriptores. Sed nos potius ipsos pro veris ipsius Dei interpretibus, illum vero pro sacerdote rerum sacrarum valdè imperito, atque etiam negligente & prophano Scriptore, habebimus. —— I pronounce this once for all, which you can never disprove, that if, in many Places, Josephus be in the right, Moses and all the sacred Writers must be in the wrong. But we will rather esteem them the true Interpreters of God himself, but him a very unskilful Priest of sacred Things, and even a careless and prophane Writer (21)." I am of Opinion, that all the antient Historians have taken the same Liberty with regard to old Memoirs, which they consulted. They have tacked Supplements to them; and, not finding the Facts unfolded and embellished to their Fancy, they have stretched and dressed them up as they pleased; and this is what at present we receive for History.

(21) Beza's Answer to Balduin. Oper. Tom. 2. p. 222.

[D] It was the Successor of him, who took away Sara.] I do not build upon the long Life, which we must allow to Abimelech, if he was alive at the time when Isaac came to Gerar. This Journey was later than the Purchase, which Jacob made of the Right of Eldership: we may suppose therefore, that Isaac was then eighty Years old; for he was sixty when Esau and Jacob were born: and Esau was already a great Hunter, when he sold his Birth-Right. On the other side, Abimelech, who took away Sara, was a King, and married, before Isaac was born: He must then, at least, have been a good hundred Years old, when Isaac journied to Gerar. But is this much? Did not Men at that time live to above an hundred and fifty Years (22)? One would scarce believe one's own Eyes, that learned Men (23) should be capable of objecting these Words of The Preacher, Omnis potentatus vita brevis (24): As if, supposing the Canonical Authority of this Book, it was contrary to Revelation, that a Man's Reign should continue an hundred Years. Who does not see, that if this Passage has that Weight, which is attributed to it, we must deny the Truth of all Histories, which inform us, that there have been Reigns which continued upwards of fifty or sixty Years? What then is it which induces me to believe, that Abimelech, who took away Sara, was not the same who entered into Alliance with Isaac? why it is this: This latter Abimelech readily believed, upon Isaac's Word, that Rebecca was but his Sister; and when he was undeceived, not by the Words, but by the Actions, of Isaac, he reproved him mildly for his Deceit, without saying to him, You follow your Father's Example; Abraham heretofore played me the same Trick. Now is it probable, if he had been already imposed upon by Abraham, that he would have again fallen into the same Snare, or if he had, that he would not have passed a severe Rebuke upon Isaac, on Account both of his Father's, and his own Hypocrisy? He would hardly have forgot Abraham's, which drew such Misfortunes upon him. St Chrysostom thought this so likely, that he boldly declared from the Pulpit, that Abimelech actually did reproach Isaac with Abraham's Dissimulation. "Rex, adhuc habens recentem memoriam eorum, quæ tempore Patriarchæ rapta Sarâ tulerat, increbebat eum, reumque argens dicebat, cur hoc fecisti? — Hanc deceptionem & olim sustinuimus à patre tuo (25). —— The King, having fresh in his Memory what he suffered for the Rape of Sara in the Patriarch's Time, reproached him, and charging him with his Guilt, said unto him, What hast thou done? —— Thus was I heretofore deceived by your Father." But all this has no better Foundation, than Rhetorical Licence, which is sometimes carried as far as that of the Poets and Painters,

(22) Abraham liv'd to 175. and Isaac to 180.

(23) Pererius upon Genes. xxvi. Pref. to Salian's Annals, T. 1. p. 52c.

(24) The Geneva Version renders it, All Tyranny is of short Continuance.

(25) Chrysostom's 1st and 2d Homilies.

—— Pictoribus atque Poëtis
Quidlibet audendi semper fuit æqua potestas (26).

(26) Hor. Art of Poetry, ver. 9.

Poets and Painters equally may dare;
In bold Attempts an equal Power they share.
CREECH.

Two things seem to favour Moreri's Opinion. First, The King of Gerar, both in Abraham's and Isaac's Time, had the same Name; and there was a General of his Army, whose Name was Picol, at both these Times. Secondly, Rebecca, beautiful as she was, was not tired into the Land of Gerar, where one ABIMELECH then reign'd. The Beauty of Rebecca occaſioned her Huſband's making uſe of the ſame Policy, which Abraham had had recourſe to, on account of Sara's Beauty. Iſaac fearing to be ſlain, if it ſhould be known that he was the Huſband of the beautiful Rebecca, made her paſs for his Siſter. Abimelech diſcover'd the Cheat, by obſerving, as he look'd through a Window, a certain Sport [E] which paſſed between them; and having ſent for Iſaac, ſaid to him, Behold of a ſurety ſhe is thy Wife, and how ſaidſt thou, ſhe is my Siſter?——What is this thou haſt done unto us? one of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife [F], and thou ſhouldſt have brought guiltineſs upon us. At the ſame time, he forbad his Subjects, on pain of death, to offer the leaſt Injury to Iſaac, or Rebecca. This Remonſtrance, and this Decree, muſt have been ſincere; and we Moderns ought to be careful not to miſrepreſent theſe Matters (f). The Proſperity of Iſaac caus'd a change in the Friendſhip of Abimelech. For, perceiving the great Wealth, which Iſaac acquired, he very freely gave him to underſtand, that he muſt depart. He obey'd; and continuing to proſper, notwithſtanding the Oppoſition made to him in ſeveral places, on account of the Pits, which he dug, his Alliance was courted by Abimelech, whoſe Offers were favourably receiv'd (g).

Digitized by Google

(f) Turſellin, in his Epiſt. Hiſt. p. 10. Edit. of Franeker, in 1692, is guilty miſtaken in theſe Words, Iſaac, going to Gerar, for Corn, by the Providence of God, preſerv'd his Wife's Chaſtity from the Luſt of Abimelech.

(g) Geneſ. xxiv.

not taken away, as Sara had been; the Reaſon of which might be, that Abimelech was grown old, and remembered likewiſe the ill Conſequences of the Rape of Sara. I anſwer, firſt, that the Kings of certain Countries affected all to take the ſame Name; as the Kings of Egypt did that of Pharaoh. Why then might not Abimelech be the common Apellation of all the Kings of Gerar? Picol might perhaps be the Name of a particular Employ. Perhaps too this Employ might have deſcended from Father to Son. Secondly, I reply, that Iſaac's Abimelech might not be a young Man, tho' he was not the ſame, who took away Sara. I frankly own, I believe he was a good old Man; becauſe he formed no Deſign upon the beautiful Rebecca, tho' he did not believe her to be married; and becauſe he does not tell Iſaac, that ſhe had been in Danger from him, but from his Subjects; and, as theſe People were ſo debauched, that every beautiful Stranger, who was thought not to be married, was in great Danger; I can ſee no Reaſon more probable for Abimelech's Continency towards Rebecca, than his old Age. There is a Time (ſay youthful Libertines) when one is too wiſe.

[E] A certain Sport.] Some have imagin'd, that the Scripture intended, under the Word Sport, to expreſs, modeſtly, the conjugal Duty, which Iſaac happen'd to be paying his Wife, at a Time when Abimelech was looking out of Window. "Putant qui-"dem honeſtè ſignificari eo vocabulo copulam carna-
"lem. Sed non fit veriſimile prudentiſſimum & ſan-
"ctiſſimum virum tam incautè rem habuiſſe cum
"uxore, ut id per feneſtram proſpicere, ut Scriptura
"inquit, Rex poſſet Abimelech. Credibilius igitur
"eſt eo vocabulo ſignificatos eſſe tales jocos & blan-
"ditias in amplexando & oſculando, quales inter con-
"juges agitari turpe non eſt: extra conjugium vero
"neſas eſt (27). —— Some think, that carnal Copula-
"tion is modeſtly hinted at under that Word: but it
"is not likely, that Iſaac, a prudent and holy Man,
"would have to do with his Wife, in ſo unguarded
"a Manner, that King Abimelech, according to the "Scripture, could behold it from his Window. It is "more probable, that that Word implies only ſuch
"kind of ſporting and toying, by embraces and kiſ-
"ſes, as is decent between married People, but out of "Wedlock unlawful." Others will not hear of this ſort of Explanation; they ſay, that Iſaac was too wiſe, and too prudent, to take his Meaſures ſo ill; and that, upon ſuch Occaſion, he took care to be in a Place, where the Neighbours could not overlook him from their Windows. "We muſt therefore underſtand,
"ſay they, by the Word Sport, a certain Paſs-time,
"which, though it was not the laſt Act of the "Play, was yet too familiar between Perſons not mar-
"ried, however they might be otherwiſe a-kin."
This Paſs-time muſt mean ſomething elſe, than talking familiarly, jeſting, and laughing together; for a Brother and Siſter may do all this very modeſtly, and without giving occaſion to ſuch a Concluſion as Abimelech drew from the ſporting of Iſaac and Rebecca. This Explication appears to me incomparably more reaſonable, than the former: and, yet, it muſt be allowed, that Fondneſs might ſometimes hinder Iſaac from obſerving that great Precaution, which rigid Moraliſts would have exacted from the Patriarch: for, in ſhort, it cannot be denied, that Abimelech, looking through a Window, ſurpriz'd him diverting himſelf with Rebecca at a certain Game, whence he could not but certainly conclude they were Man and Wife. Take notice, that they had been marry'd forty Years: Iſaac was, then, eighty Years old. St Auſtin, in his Book againſt Fauſtus the Manichean, a great Exploder of the Patriarchs, defends Iſaac in a ſolid Manner (28); and, indeed, it is too rigorous to expect, that a Patriarch, or a Biſhop, if he is married, ſhould not recreate himſelf a little with his Wife, without cloſing all his Window-Shutters. For we muſt have this good Opinion of their Prudence, that if Nature inclines the greateſt Men to a little indulgence, they will walk ſo cautiouſly upon this ſlippery Road, as to take care that no Obſervation ſhall be made of them from their Neighbour's Window. Cornelius à Lapide does not know what it is he is confuting, when he fets himſelf againſt the firſt Explication. "Judæi
"impuri, ſays he, jocum hunc intelligunt copulam
"conjugalem. Sed apage hos Cynicos! Quis credat
"Iſaac publicè, & ſpectante Rege, tam inverecundum,
"lubricum, & cynicum fuiſſe (29)? —— The un-
"chaſt Jews underſtand this Sport of matrimonial Co-
"pulation. But away with theſe Snarlers! Who can
"believe, that Iſaac was ſo immodeſt, lewd, and bru-
"tiſh, publickly, and in the King's Sight?" This is not the thing: no one pretends, that Iſaac was, then, in the middle of the Street: he was in his Chamber; and had not ſufficiently faſten'd his Window-Shutters: This is the whole Matter; and, if this is too much, you will be obliged to condemn the Patriarch, and to act the Cato againſt him. It is well known that Cato expell'd one Manlius from the Senate, becauſe at noon Day, and in the Preſence of his Daughter, he had given his Wife a Kiſs (30). This Manlius would have been Conſul, probably, the next Election. Some pretend to diſcover an allegorical Myſtery (31) in this Sport of Iſaac and Rebecca, of which certainly neither they, nor the ſacred Hiſtorian, in the leaſt dreamt. I ſhall not place theſe Errors among thoſe which I am compiling. It would be an Attempt like that of drinking the Sea dry. It were to be wiſh'd, that the greateſt part of theſe myſterious Conceits had been unknown to the World.

[F] One of the People might lightly have lien with thy Wife.] The Philiſtines muſt have been furious Folks in Love-Matters; ſince Abimelech, their King, is ſurpriz'd, that no one had lain with Rebecca, who paſs'd only for Iſaac's Siſter. We learn from hence, at the ſame time, their great regard for Marriage. As for unmarried Women, they ſeem, in this Country, to have thought they were the firſt Comer's Right. Witneſs Dina, the Daughter of Jacob, who was decoy'd by them, as ſhe was taking a Walk. She was firſt enjoy'd, and then demanded in Marriage (32).

(27) Pererius upon Geneſis, Ch. xxvi.

(28) Auſtin againſt Fauſt. B. 22. Ch. 46. Mr Thiers quotes part of this Paſſage, in the 4th Part of his Treatiſe of Sports and Diverſions.

(29) Corn. à Lapide upon Gen. xxvi. 8.

(30) Plutarch in his Cato Major, p. 316.

(31) See Pererius upon Geneſis, ch. xxvi.

(32) Gen. xxxiv.

ABLANCOURT (NICOLAS PERROT, Lord of) See PERROT.

ABRABANEL

ABRABANEL (a) (Isaac) a celebrated Rabin, was born at Liſbon [A], of a Family which pretended to be deriv'd from King David [B]. He puſh'd his Intereſt very far in the Court of Alphonſo V. King of Portugal, and was there honoured with the higheſt Offices; which he enjoy'd till the Death of that Prince: but he found a great Alteration under the new King. Abrabanel was Forty five Years old [C], when John II. ſucceeded his Father Alphonſo. All who were concern'd in the Management of Affairs in the preceeding Reign, were turn'd out; and, if our Rabin is to be credited, there was a ſecret Deſign of putting them to death, under pretence, that they had been contriving to betray the Crown of Portugal to the King of Spain. He was not appriz'd of this, when, in obedience to the Orders he had receiv'd to wait upon the King, he went to Liſbon with all haſte; but being inform'd upon the Road of the Plot, which was hatching againſt his Life, he retir'd with expedition into the King of Caſtile's Dominions. All his Eſtate was confiſcated, upon the Return of the Soldiers, who had Orders to bring him dead or alive. He loſt, upon that occaſion, together with all his Books, the beginning of a Commentary upon Deuteronomy, which he was much concern'd at. Some Chriſtian Writers [D] do not agree, that the Cauſe of this Diſgrace was ſo little owing to his Miſconduct, as he pretended. They are of the ſame Opinion, in relation to his other Perſecutions [E]. Be that as it will, being ſettled in Caſtile, he apply'd himſelf to teaching and compoſing. He wrote, in the Year 1484, his Commentary on the Books of Joſhua, Judges, and Samuel: after which he was ſent for to the Court of Ferdinand and Iſabella, and had Employments conferr'd upon him during eight Years, namely till the Jews were driven out of the Territories of the Catholic King, in 1492. He did all he could by his Prayers and his Tears [F] to avert this dreadful Storm; but he did not ſucceed, and was obliged, as well as the reſt, to depart with his Wife and Children. He retir'd to Naples, and there compos'd, in 1493, his Commentary on the Books of Kings. As he was a Courtier, he did not forget to recommend himſelf, by the Knowledge he had acquir'd in the Courts of Portugal and Arragon; inſomuch that he inſinuated himſelf into the good Graces of Ferdinand King of Naples, and afterwards of Alphonſo. He follow'd the Fortune of the latter, when Charles VIII. King of France drove him from Naples; for he paſs'd over with him into Sicily [G]. After the Death of Alphonſo,

(a) He is called likewiſe Abrabaniel, Abarbanel, Abarbinel, Abravanel, Avravanel. Abarbenel.

[A] Was born at Lisbon.] His Anceſtors were of Caſtile. "E majoribus Caſtellam Hiſpaniæ, ex pa-
(1) Act. Lipſ. for the Month of Nov. 1686. p. 529.
" rentibus Olyſſiponem Luſitaniæ agnovit patriam.—
" He claimed Caſtile of Spain as the Country of his
" Anceſtors, and Olyſſipon Luſitania as the Country of " his Parents." Thus the Journal of Leipſic informs us (1). Don Nicolas Antonio will have it, that the Family of Abrabanel was ſettled at Seville for many Ages (2). He had it from Bartolocci; and he quotes the Rabin Solomon ben Virga (3), who has aſſerted almoſt the ſame thing in his Hiſtory of the Jews (4), tranſlated into Latin by Gentius, and quoted below.
(2) (3) N. Ant. Bibl. Hiſp. Tom. 1. p. 627, &c. Tom. 2. p. 686.

(4) Or Scheveth Jehuda.

[B] Pretended to be derived from King David.] Abrabanel has in part declared (5), that at the time of the Deſtruction of the firſt Temple, two Families of the Race of David paſſed into Spain, one of which ſettled at Lucene, and the other at Seville, where it left a Poſterity. In another Place (6) he gives us the Hiſtory of this Tranſmigration. The Rabin Solomon ben Virga introduces one Thomas, who makes a long Deduction of the ſame Story to Alphonſo King of Spain, and relates, that the Family of Abrabanel deſcended from the Kings of Juda; but Alphonſo wou'd believe nothing of it, and raiſed inſurmountable Difficulties againſt theſe Genealogies (7). The Jews, to get over the Difficulty, ſuppoſe, that Abrabanel loſt his Genealogical Books in the Hurry of his Removal (8). Mr Huet relates (9), that Manaſſé ben Iſraël affirms in his Conciliator, that theſe two Families, ſprung from David, retired into Spain, after the Ruin of the ſecond Temple. This Rabin had a very particular Intereſt in this ridiculous Story; for his Wife was of the Family of Abrabanel (10). Farther, it is not eaſy to know who this Alphonſo is, who converſes ſo long with this Thomas, in the Book of Solomon ben Virga. Some call him a King of Portugal (11); and as they inſiſt that the Abrabanel, whom Thomas mentions, is our Rabin, we cannot doubt but they take him for King Alphonſo V. and that this Alphonſo is the laſt King of Caſtile, who bore that Name (12). He might ſpeak upon good Grounds thus far; but he is guilty of an Error, when he places near two Centuries between this King and our Rabin; for this latter was born in the Year 1437, and that King died in 1350, aged 38 Years.

(5) (6) Comment. upon Zech. xi. p. 293. and upon 2 Kings xxv. p. 305. in the Acta Lipſ. Nov. 1686. p. 528.

(7) In Scheveth Jehuda, §. 11, &c. in the Acta Lipſ. Nov. 1686. p. 528.

(8) Acta Lipſ. Nov. 1686. p. 528.

(9) Huet's Demonſtr. Evang. p. 708. Edit. Leipſ. Ann. 1694. 4to.

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Acta Lipſ. 1686. p. 529.

(12) Nicol. Anton. Bibl. Hiſp. T. 1. p. 627.

[C] Forty five Years old] Nicolas Antonio has inſerted, at the end of his Bibliotheque d' Eſpagne what Father Bartolocci had told him concerning Iſaac Abrabanel. He has by that corrected ſome Faults which had been before printed in the Article of this Rabin: but he ſeems to me not to have expreſs'd himſelf with Exactneſs, when he ſays, "Juvenis adhuc, ſed
" benè doctus, in Caſtellæ regnum tranſiit, cum Jo-
" hanni II. Portugalliæ Regi parum eſſet gratus.
" —— He was yet a Youth, but a good Scholar,
" when, being diſagreeable to John II. King of Por-
" tugal, he went into the Kingdom of Caſtile (13)." He talks in that Place of an Age, which generally cannot have afforded time enough to acquire much Learning. This is what cannot be applied to forty five Years of Age. It is certain then, that the Author of the Bibliotheque d' Eſpagne believed that the Rabin was much younger than that, when he fled into Caſtile: he was therefore in an Error.

(13) Id. T. 2. p. 686.

[D] Some Chriſtian Writers.] They ſay that Abrabanel deſerved the Treatment he met with; and that he would have been puniſhed more ſeverely, upon the Diſcovery of his ill Deſigns, if the good-natured Diſpoſition of King John had not been ſatisfied with baniſhing him. They add, that Remorſe of Conſcience made this Rabin take the Reſolution of quitting Portugal, and eſcaping by Night into Caſtile, with an extraordinary Readineſs (14).

(14) Acta Lipſ. Nov. 1686. p. 529. See likewiſe F. Bartolocci's Bibl. Rabin. T. 3. p. 874.

[E] They are of the ſame Opinion, in relation to his other Perſecutions.] They ſay, that he intruded himſelf into the Court of Ferdinand and Iſabella, by means of a Bank which he eſtabliſhed in the Kingdom of Caſtile; that he amaſs'd great Treaſures, by making uſe of all the Artifices of his Nation: that he tyrannized over the Poor, that he was very uſurious; that he had the Vanity to aſpire to the moſt illuſtrious Titles, and thoſe which ſolely belonged to the great Families of Spain; and beſides that, being a ſworn Enemy of the Chriſtian Religion, he contributed more than any one elſe to the Storm, which overwhelmed him and all his Countrymen (15).

(15) Ibid.

[F] By his Prayers and his Tears.] He himſelf relates in one of his Books (16) what he did upon this Occaſion. Solomon ben Virga gives an Account of it in his Hiſtory of the Jews (17), with a tragical Deſcription of the terrible Miſeries, which fell upon three hundred thouſand Jews, who were obliged, in one Day, to depart out of the Dominions of the Catholic King.

(16) His Comment. on the Books of Kings, in Nic. Anton. Bibl. Hiſp. T. 1. p. 627.

[G] He paſſed over with him into Sicily.] Nicolas Antonio, correcting his Article of Abrabanel, upon

(17) Nic. Ant. Bibl. Hiſp. ibid.

Digitized by Google

Alphonſo, he retired to Corfou, and there began his Commentary on Iſaiah, in the Year 1495. He had the Satisfaction of recovering, by what Accident I know not, what he had formerly wrote upon the Book of Deuteronomy. He came back into Italy, the following Year, and went and ſettled at Monopoli in Puglia (b), where he wrote many books. He finiſh'd his Deuteronomy, and compos'd his Sevach Peſach (c) and his Nacalath Avoth (d), in the year 1496. The following year, he compos'd his Majene Hajeſchua (e); and in 1498, his Maſchmiah Jeſchua (f) and his Commentary on Iſaiah. Some time after, he went to Venice, to make up the difference, which had ariſen between the Venetians and Portugueſe, concerning the Spice-Trade, and he ſhew'd ſo much Prudence and Ability, that he gain'd the Eſteem and Favour of the great Men. At Venice he compos'd his Commentary on Jeremiah, in the year 1504. Some ſay, that he compos'd, likewiſe, at that time, his Commentary on Ezekiel and the twelve leſſer Prophets. In the year 1506, he compos'd his Commentary on Exodus; and died at Venice in the year 1508, [H], aged 71 years. He left three Sons, Juda, Joſeph, and Samuel [I]. The eldeſt was a Phyſician and a great Poet, and compos'd many Verſes in Honour of his Father. It is ſaid, that Samuel embrac'd Chriſtianity at Ferrara, and receiv'd the Name of Alphonſo, which was That of the Duke. Abrabanel wrote many other Books [K] of which we cannot determine the Date, and of which (b) Obſerve, that he continu'd there about ſeven Years. Bartolocci Bibl. Rabin. T. 3. p. 875.

(c) i. e. the Sacrifice of the Paſſover.

(d) i. e. The Inheritance of the Fathers.

(e) i. e. The Springs of Salvation.

(f) The Preacher of Salvation.

the Conferences which he had with Father Bartolocci, ſays that this Rabin followed King Ferdinand into Sicily, whom Francis had dethroned, and that, after the Death of this Prince, he retired to Corfou (18). Here is certainly a Miſtake; the Author takes Ferdinard for Alphonſo: it was with Alphonſo (19) that Abrabanel went into Sicily, as Father Bartolocci remarks (20), and not with Ferdinand. He continued at Meſſina 'till the Death of Alphonſo in the beginning of the Year 1495, and then he went to Corfou (21). It was there he began his Commentary on Iſaiah in 1495. If he had not paſſed over into this Iſland till after the Death of Ferdinand, we may be ſure he could not be there in 1495. Thus the Appendix of Nicolas Antonio ſtands in need of another Appendix to correct it.

(18) N. Anton. Bibl. Hiſp. Tom. 2. p. 689.

(19) He was the ſecond of this Name. He ſucceeded Ferdinand the Ballard, and had for Succeſſor, Ferdinand II.

(20) Bart. Bibl. Rabin. Tom. 2. p. 875.

(21) Id. ibid.

[H] In the Year 1508.] Father Bartolocci gave D. Nicolas Antonio the Hint of this Year, who had already printed, that our Rabin was Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue at Padua, about the Year 1510. We have here a Proof of Mr Moreri's Negligence. He had by him this Author's Spaniſh Dictionary, and yet did not take the Pains to conſult the Appendixes, which makes a conſiderable Part of it, and which clear up, and correct, many Paſſages of the Work. Thus he has preſerved the Miſtake relating to this Profeſſorſhip of Padua, without obſerving that the Author himſelf had corrected it at the end of his Book, and excuſed himſelf, as having been miſled by Buxtorf. "Venetias inde profectus memoratur, ex quâ urbe in Germaniam aut in Profeſſionem Patavinam Hebraicæ Linguæ, quod Buxtorfium & alios ſecuti nos literis in Bibliothecâ noſtra mandarimus, potuit conferre ſe. Conſtat autem Venetiis eum Septuaginta (22) annos natum ſuperioris ſeculi anno octavo diem ſuum obiiſſe. Quo cum non benè convenit quod circà annum decimum Profeſſorem, ut ibidem diximus, Patavinum egerit (23). —— He is ſaid to have gone from thence to Venice; whence he might proceed either to Germany, or to his Hebrew Profeſſorſhip at Padua, as I have related in my Dictionary, upon the Authority of Buxtorf, and others. But it is certain, that he died at Venice, aged Seventy, in the eighth Year of the laſt Century: which does not agree with the Account I have there given of his diſcharging the Office of Profeſſor at Padua, in the tenth Year." Thus Nicolas Antonio excuſes himſelf. He does not abſolutely deny this Profeſſorſhip at Padua; he is ſatisfied with ſaying, that he had not exactly marked the Time. Mr Moreri therefore ought not to have told us, that, in 1510, Abrabanel taught the Hebrew Tongue at Padua.

(22) He ought to have ſaid 71.

(23) N. Anton. Bibl. Hiſp. Tom. 2. p. 630.

[I] He left three Sons, Juda, Joſeph, and Samuel.] At firſt ſight he ſeems to have left four, if it be true what N. Antonio reports (24), that Leon, who wrote the Dialogues of Love, was his Son. But we muſt obſerve, that the Author of theſe Dialogues may very well be the ſame with Juda, the eldeſt Son of Abrabanel. This Juda was commonly called Meſſer Leone (25). His Book of Love is very well known: Denis Sauvage, and Pontus de Tiard having tranſlated it into French. The Author is generally quoted under the Name of Leo Hebræus. He is called Meſtre Leon Abarbanel Medico Hebræo in a Spaniſh Tranſlation printed at Venice in 1568, in 4to.

(24) Ibid.

(25) Bartholo. Bibl. Rabin. Tom. 2. p. [illegible].

Juda ABRABANEL left his Father, when the French conquered the Kingdom of Naples; and retired to Genoa to practiſe Phyſic there (26). Samuel ABRABANEL was alive in the Popedom of Julius III. as appears by a Petition, which he preſented to Cardinal Sirlet, Protector of the Neophytes (27). He left Naples in 1540, and carried with him the Value of two hundred thouſand Crowns (28). His Father dedicated to him the Commentary on Pirke Avoth, which he compoſed in the Year 1496 (29).

(26) Ibid. p. 881.

(27) Id. ibid.

(28) Id. ibid. p. 688. from R. David Ganz.

[K] Abrabanel wrote many other Books.] The following are ſet down in the Leipſic-Journal (30): Commentaries on Geneſis, Leviticus, and Numbers: Raſch Amana (31) Sepher Jeſchuoth Meſchico, a Work on the Traditions concerning the Meſſiah: Zedek Olamim; this relates to the Rewards and Puniſhments of another Life: Sepher Jemoth Olam; it is an Hiſtory from Adam: Maamar Machaſe Schaddai; it is a Treatiſe of the Prophecy and Viſion of Ezekiel, againſt the Rabin Maimonides: Sepher Atereth Sekenim: Miphaloth Elohim (32): Sepher Schamaim Chadaſchim: Lahakath Nebhiim. The Sieur Theophilus Spizelius remarks, that John Buxtorf, the Son, had ſhown him a great many Diſſertations taken from the Words of Abrabanel, which he had tranſlated into Latin (33). They muſt be like thoſe of the ſame Rabin, which the ſame Buxtorf has tranſlated and publiſhed with the Book Coſri. He ſhew'd him likewiſe other Tranſlations, which he had made from ſome Books of this Rabin. The Commentary on Haggai was tranſlated into Latin by Adam Scherzerus, and inſerted in the Trifolium Orientale, publiſh'd at Leipſic, in 1663. In the ſame Town was publiſh'd, in 1686, the Commentary on Joſhua, Judges, and Samuel. See what is ſaid concerning this Edition, in the Leipſic-Journal, whence I have borrowed this Article. In the ſame Year, 1686, they printed at Leyden the Commentary on Hoſea, with a Preface on the twelve leſſer Prophets; the whole tranſlated into Latin, with Notes, by Francides Huſen. M. de Veil, a converted Jew, publiſhed at London, in 1683, Abrabanel's Preface to Leviticus. See the Leipſic-Journal, for the Month of January, 1684. N. Antonio will furniſh you with the Titles of ſeveral other Works of this Rabin, ſometimes with the Time and Place of the Impreſſion, as far as the Rabinical Dictionary of Plantavitus would inform him. Mr Moreri ought not to have ſaid, that Abrabanel wrote a Commentary on the Talmud, but a Piece of the Talmud, entituled Pirke Avoth. N. Antonio, his only Source, might have ſo well explain'd this to him, as not to ſuffer him to miſtake. Father Simon, who tells us many curious Particulars relating to Abrabanel's Books, obſerves that the Book compos'd by this Rabin, under the Name of Nahalat Avoth, Profeſſion of the Fathers, is a Commentary on the Treatiſe Pirke Avoth, and that both the one and the other were printed at Venice, in 4to, in the Year 1545: that there is a very learned Preface of this Author, at the beginning of his Book, Nahalat Avoth, in which he explains the Succeſſion of Tradition among the Jews, which is a very obſcure point (34).

(29) Id. ibid.

(30) Act. Liſp. Nov. 1686. p. 531.

(31) i. e. the Head of Faith. It was tranſlated into Latin, by W. Vorſtius, and printed with his Notes, at Amſterdam, in 1638. N. Ant. Bibl. Hiſp. Tom. 1. p. 629.

(32) i. e. the Works of God. It treats learnedly of the Creation of the World, and examines where Moſes had all that he has wrote in the Book of Geneſis. Simon's Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament.

(33) Spizelius's Specim. Bibl. Univ.

(34) Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament.

Digitized by Google

which some have not yet been printed. Many of the Noble Venetians, and the chief of the Jews, solemniz'd his Funeral with great Pomp. His Body was interr'd at Padua, in a Burying-Ground without the City. A little while after, the Rabin, Juda Mentz, Rector of the University, was buried in the same Place. The Siege of 1509 so destroy'd every thing about that Place, that this Burying-Ground was no longer to be distinguish'd. Abrabanel was Master of great Talents: he was upon a level with the famous Maimonides; and some even rank him above him. The Jews pretend, that he entirely overthrew all the Arguments and Objections of the Christians. These latter, justly contemning what he wrote in the Jewish Controversy, yet greatly esteem his other Interpretations. They find him to be a subtile, clear, learned, and honest, Commentator. He does not canonize the Opinions of his Masters; and censures very freely the Plagiarism, and other Faults, which he found them to be guilty of. His great Weakness was his being too sensible of the Persecutions, which the Jews suffer'd, and in which he bore a considerable part. The Memory of this Misfortune animated him with such Fury against the Christians, that he treated them with the utmost Indignation. He has scarce wrote one Book, in which his Anger and Thirst of Revenge is not to be trac'd; and the wretched Condition of his Nation is uppermost in every thing he compos'd. He hop'd by this means to revive the expiring Synagogue (g); and I suppose he found it a Relief from that Oppression of Choler, which would have choak'd him, had he not discharg'd it upon Paper. Nor is he the only one, who has found Relief from this Remedy. We know some, who have stood in great need of it, tho' they were not ignorant, like him, of the Precepts of the Gospel. I do not meet with his Professorship at Padua [L], nor his Journey to the East [M]. These are Facts in which Mr Moreri is grossly mistaken, as he is in what he relates concerning his Travels into Germany [N].

(g) From the Acta Eruditor. Lipsiæ for the Month of Nov. 1686. p. 528, &c.

Abrabanel was indefatigable in his Studies: he spent whole Nights in it; and was capable of fasting a long time. He wrote with great Ease: the implacable Hatred, which he shew'd in his Writings against the Christians [O], did not hinder his living with them in a civil, chearful, soft, and obliging manner.

[L] I do not meet with his Professorship at Padua.] See the Remark [H]. The learned Gentlemen, who have given us an historical Abridgment (35) of the Life of Abrabanel, and who have trac'd him almost Year by Year, from his leaving Spain, to his Death, would not sure have pass'd over so remarkable a Circumstance: Whence I conclude, that, since they make no mention of it, the Author himself had said nothing of it. Now it is not probable, that, having mentioned so many things not so much to his Honour, as a Professorship at Padua, he should say nothing of this Employ, if he had been actually invested with it. And if other Writers had mention'd it upon any good Grounds, I believe the Leipsic Gentlemen would not have been ignorant of it, or pass'd it by in Silence. It is therefore a Fact a little apocryphal, to say no worse.

(35) Act. Lipsi. Nov. 1686, p. 523, &c.

Add to this, that Father Bartolocci, who has given us an exact Series of this Rabin's Adventures, takes no notice of it.

[M] Nor his Journey to the East.] I look upon it to be false, for the abovementioned Reason; namely, the Silence of these Gentlemen: Nay, though this Journey were real, Mr Moreri has still advanc'd a great Falsehood. He supposes, first, that Abarbanel taught Hebrew at Padua, in 1510; and, in the second place, that the eager Desire he had to shew his hatred to the Christians induc'd him to go into the East, to live there with those of his own Sect, and that it was there he compos'd that great Number of Books, which are still extant. We have seen that he died in 1508; which is enough to convince us that all this is meer Chimera.

[N] These are Facts in which Mr Moreri is grossly mistaken; as he is in what he relates concerning his Travels into Germany.] I did not dare to treat this as false, whilst I was perswaded, that D. Nicolas Antonio, had faithfully cited Buxtorf; for, supposing his Quotation just, we must believe, that Abrabanel had mention'd his own Travels into Germany, in his Commentary on Pirke Avoth. "Profugus ergo is in Germaniam venit, quod ipse ait in Commentariis ad librum Talmudicum Pirke Avoth, — Buxtorfio teste, in tractatu de Abbreviaturis Hebræorum, p. 100 (36). — In his Exile, he retired to Germany, as he tells us himself, in his Commentaries on the Talmudic Book, Pirke Avoth, — according to Buxtorf, in his Treatise de Abbrev. Hebr. p. 100." All I could say, therefore, upon this Supposition, was, that, at least, it was certain, that Abrabanel did not visit Germany, after his Banishment from the Territories of the Catholic King; because, upon leaving them, he embark'd for the Kingdom of Naples, and arriv'd there soon after. I discover'd likewise Moreri to be in an Error; Abarbinel, says he, was in the Number of the Exiles: He retired, first, to Germany, and then to Italy. And I had the more Reason to be surpriz'd at this Mistake, as I knew that D. Nicolas Antonio had corrected it, upon better Information, from Father Bartolocci. But, upon consulting the Book quoted, I found that the Author takes no notice, that Abrabanel mention'd his own Travels into Germany: See what Buxtorf says: "Hic titulus (Morenu, i. e. Doctor Noster) novus est, infra ducentos annos natus in Germania, inde in Italiam traductus, quod valde miratus fuit Don Isaac Abarbinel ex Hispania in has terras veniens, ut ipsemet scribit in Commentario Pirke Abhoth, cap. 6. (37) — This Title (Morenu, i. e. our Doctor) is new, having arose in Germany, within these two hundred Years, and from thence transplanted into Italy; which Don Isaac Abrabanel was very much surpriz'd at, as he himself writes in his Commentary on Pirke Avoth." I could no longer doubt, that D. Nicolas Antonio mistook Buxtorf's meaning; and it is an Error, which he does no retract in the Place where he informs us, what Father Bartolocci had told him concerning Abrabanel. Observe, that this Father proves demonstrably the Falseness of these supposed Travels into Germany, which, says he (38), some mention upon the Authority of Buxtorf. I doubt not but this will stop the Course of this erroneous Quotation.

(36) N. Ant. Bibl. Hisp. Tom. 1. p. 623.

(37) Buxtorf de Abbrev. Hebræ. p. 115. Edit. 2.

(38) Bart. Bibl. Rabin. Tom. 3. p. 688.

[O] Which he shew'd in his Writings against the Christians.] His Commentaries on the Scriptures, but chiefly those he made upon the Prophets, are so full of Venom against Jesus Christ, the Church, the Pope, the Cardinals, the Clergy, and all Christians in general, particularly the Roman Catholics, that Father Bartolocci was of Opinion, that the Jews ought not to be suffer'd to read them (39). Upon which he remarks, that the reading of the Commentaries on the lesser Prophets had been forbidden them, and that they dared not to keep them, "In his etiam pluribus in locis canino dente Christianam Religionem mordet & lacerat, ideoque merito illorum lectio & retentio Judæis interdicta est, nec eos apud se retinere audent, publicè saltem & palam, propter metum Christianorum (40). — For in many Passages of these he tears to pieces the Christian Religion, in so enrag'd a Manner, that the reading and keeping of them is forbidden the Jews, nor dare they be in Possession of them, at least openly, for fear of the Christians."

(39) Bibl. Rab Tom. 3. p. 876.

(40) Id ib. p. 873.

ABRAHAM,

Digitized by Google

ABRAHAM, the Father, and Source, of the Faithful, was the Son of TERAH. He descended from Noah by Shem, from whom he was distant nine Generations. The Opinion, which supposes him to be born in the 130th Year of Terah (a), seems to me more probable, than that which places his Birth in the 70th Year of the same Terah. There is great probability, that he was born in the same City, from whence the Holy Scripture tells us his Father retired, in order to go into the Land of Canaan (b). It was a City of Chaldæa named Ur. Abraham went out of it with his Father, and staid with him at Haran 'till his Death. After this he resum'd his first Design, which was a Journey to Palestine. We may read in the Scripture the several Stations he made in the Land of Canaan; his Journey into Egypt, where his Wife was taken from him, who was likewise his Sister by the Father's side (c); his other Journey to Gerar, where she was taken from him in the same manner, and restor'd again, just as before; the Victory, which he gain'd over four Princes, who had plunder'd Sodom; his Complaisance to his Wife, who was willing he shou'd have Children by their Handmaid Agar (d); the Covenant, which God made with him, seal'd with the Sign of Circumcision, his Obedience to the Order which he had receiv'd from God to slay his only Son; the manner in which this Action was stop'd; his Marriage with Ketura; his Death at the Age of 175 Years; and his Burial, by Sara, his first Wife, in the Cave of Macpelah. It would be useless to enlarge upon these Particulars. The Protestants have them at their Fingers ends; they fetch them from their Source, from their tendereſt Years; and as to the Roman Catholics, they have no need of any other Dictionary to instruct them, than Moreri's and Simon's. It would be more agreeable to the Nature of this Collection, to dwell upon the Falshoods and groundless Traditions relating to Abraham, but the number of them would be sufficient to tire the Patience of the most indefatigable Writers. For, what a Variety of Conjectures is there concerning the Motives of his Conversion [A]? What Exploits has he not been made to perform against Idolatry [B], both (a) It is, according to the Hebrew, 352 from the Deluge, and 2008 from the Creation.

(b) Genes. xi. 31.

(c) See the Article SARA.

(d) See the Article AGAR.

[A] Concerning the Motives of his Conversion.] It is a common Opinion, that Abraham imbibed with his Milk the Poison of Idolatry; and that Terah his Father made Statues, and taught that they were to be adored as Gods (1). The Jews say, that Abraham for a long time followed the Craft of his Father Terah (2): That is, that he made and sold Idols. Others say, that the Impiety, which reigned in this Country, consisting in the Adoration of the Sun, and Stars, Abraham was a long time entangled in this Mire. "Ipsum longo tempore Chaldæorum delirio "de Astrorum divinitate innutritum fuisse (3). —— "He had been educated for a great while in the "Chaldæans senseless Opinion of the Divinity of the "Stars." Maimonides lays it down as Matter of Fact, that Abraham was educated in the Religion of the Zabians, who acknowledged no other God but the Stars (4). He extricated himself from it, by the Reflexions he made on the Nature of the Stars. He admired their Motions, Beauty, and Order; but observed likewise their Imperfections; and concluded from thence, that there was a Being superior to the whole Machine of the World, an Author and Director of the Universe. Suidas does well to cite Philo, to prove that Abraham arrived at the Knowledge of God by these kind of Reflexions; but, when he reports, upon the Authority of the same Author, that Abraham, from the Age of fourteen Years, was so highly enlightened, as to have the Courage to say to his Father Terah, Renounce this pernicious Trade of Idolatry, with which you deceive the World, this is not a consistent Account of the long Idolatry of Abraham. It is certain, that Josephus, without taking Notice that this Patriarch had been a long time infected with Idolatry, maintains, that by his own Genius, and by contemplating the Universe, he found out the Unity of God, and a Providence, and that he was the first, who ventured to combat popular Error upon that Head (5). He met with an Opposition sufficiently formidable to induce him to leave his Country. This is perhaps the first Instance of Banishment for Religion's Sake. Upon this Footing, Abraham, under the Law of Nature, should be, with regard to this kind of Punishment, what St Stephen was, under the Law of Grace, with regard to his Sufferings. He should be the Patriarch of the Refugees, no less than the Father of the Faithful. It cannot, I think, be denied, that his Father was an Idolater, since the sacred Scripture, calling him by his Name, assures us of it (6); but all that can be inferred from thence is, that Abraham, before the Age of Discretion, was of the Religion of his Father. It is the inevitable Fate of Children to follow the Religion of those who educate them. At fourteen Years of age, as Suidas relates, he made use of his Reason: he perceived the Gulph, in which his Father was plunged, and he fled from it, in such a Manner, that, upon God's commanding him to leave his Country, Terah resolved to accompany him. St Epiphanius relates, that Idolatry having began in the Time of Sarug, Great-Uncle of the Patriarch Abraham, the Idols consisted only of flat Painting; and that Terah was the first who made them of Clay (7).

(1) Suidas in Σαρουχ.

(2) In Genebrard's Chron.

(3) Philo in Salian, Tom. 1. p. 387.

(4) Maim. More Nevoc. c. 29. p. 3.

(5) Joseph. Antiq. B. 1. c. 7. See likewise Recognit. Clem. B. 1.

(6) Your Fathers dwelt on the other Side of the Flood in old Time, even Terah, the Father of Abraham, and Nachor, and they served other Gods. Jos. xxiv. 2.

(7) Epiph. Hæres. B. 1. p. 7, 8.

[B] What Exploits has he not been made to perform against Idolatry?] I would not accuse Philo of contradicting himself; tho' we find him relating in one of his Works, that Abraham was a long time infected with the extravagant Opinions of the Chaldæans (8); and in Suidas's Dictionary, that Abraham, at the Age of fourteen Years, was sensible of the Absurdities of Idolatry: for what can be depended upon, or what regard can be had to Numbers and Quotation from an Author, so mutilated and corrupted, as Suidas? Perhaps he might have wrote not fourteen, but fifty Years. There is an old Tradition, which makes Abraham of this latter Age, when he left the Bosom of Idolatry. It is related (9), that his Father, having undertaken a Journey, intrusted him with the Sale of his Statues; and that a certain Person, pretending to buy, asked him How old he was? Fifty Years old, reply'd Abraham. Wretch that thou art, adds the other, at the Age of Fifty, to adore a Being of yesterday! This confounded Abraham. Some time after a Woman brought him some Meal to offer to the Idols; instead of which he took a Hatchet, and broke them to pieces, placing the Hatchet afterwards in the Hand of the biggest. Terah, upon his Return, demanded the Occasion of this Destruction. Abraham answered him, that a Dispute arose among the Idols, which of them should eat first of an Offering, which a certain Woman brought them; upon which That God, (says he) which is bigger than the rest, got up, and broke the others to pieces with a Hatchet. Terah answered him, that he endeavoured to impose upon him, and that these Idols could not perform such a thing. Abraham immediately retorted these Words of his Father against the Worship of false Gods: but Terah did not understand Rallery; he delivered up his Son to the Inquisition. Nimrod, the grand Inquisitor, as well as Conqueror, of the Country, exhorted Abraham to the Adoration of Fire: At last, after many Answers and Replies on both

(8) Καλδαιους μικρον τινα χρονον. Cavilling a long time. Philo of Abraham, p. 361.

(9) R. Moses Haddarschan in Bereschet Rabba, in Heidegger's Hist. Patr. Tom. 2. p. 36.

Digitized by Google

both in Chaldæa, and the City of Haran [C]? How many Sciences [D], and how many Books [E] have not been attributed to him? The Jews aſcribe to him the Privilege both Sides, he ordered him to be thrown into the middle of the Flames, ſaying, Let your God deliver you. Haran, Brother of Abraham, waited impatiently for the Event, reſolving in himſelf to follow the Party which got the better; to be of Nimrod's Religion, if Abraham was burnt, and of Abraham's Religion if he was not. Abraham came out whole and untouch'd from the middle of the Flames; and Nimrod thereupon having demanded of Haran, in whom he believed, and receiving this Anſwer, I believe in the God of Abraham, commanded him to be thrown into a Furnace. Haran was ſo roughly handled there, that he died ſoon after in the Preſence of his Father (10). The Reaſon, why the Fire had ſuch Power over him, was becauſe his Faith was not ſo lively as that of Abraham, and that he was not predeſtinated to great Things, as Abraham was (11). This is by no means a new Tradition; for St Jerom reports it; and he ſeems even to adopt it, as far as relates to the miraculous Preſervation of Abraham in the midſt of the Fire (12): For, as to the ſuperſtitious Cruelty of Terah, in acting the Part of an Informer to the Holy Office againſt his own Son, he ſays nothing of it. St Epiphanius, who is likewiſe ſilent as to this Matter, maintains on the contrary, that Terah ſurviv'd Haran, as a Puniſhment for his Blaſphemy in making Gods of Clay; and, that before him, no Father had ever ſeen his Children die a natural Death (13). The Ambiguity of the Word Ur (14), may have given Occaſion to theſe Fables. Thoſe, who lay a Streſs on the Words of God to Abraham, I am the Lord, that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees (15), imagine that he ſaved him from ſome great Perſecution, becauſe he makes uſe of the ſame Phraſe at the beginning of the Decalogue, to ſignify the Deliverance from Egypt (16). But this is to ſearch for Myſteries unneceſſarily. We meet with no Footſteps of this Perſecution in Scripture; and therefore we may proportionably rank in the ſame Claſs of imaginary Notions the Fire, which did no Injury to Abraham, and that which Maimonides borrows from (17) a certain Treatiſe of the Agriculture of the Egyptians. We find there, that Abraham, having maintained in a public Diſpute againſt the Idolaters, that Fire was not worthy of Divine Honours, was thrown into Priſon, deſpoil'd of his Effects, and condemned to Baniſhment. The King was afraid, leaſt the Authority and Eloquence of ſo great a Man ſhould convert his People from the Adoration of Fire. Cedrenus aſcribes the Death of Haran to a very unlikely Cauſe; pretending that it was for endeavouring to ſnatch the Idols of Terah out of the Fire, which Abraham had thrown in. This Attempt muſt be vain, ſince he himſelf periſhed by the Flames.

(10) They found this Circumſtance upon Gen. xi. 28.

(11) The Jews, in Lyranus, and Toſtatus, in Salian's Citation, Ann. Tom. I. p. 402.

(12) Hieron. Hebr. in Geneſ.

(13) Epiph. Hæreſ. B. 1. p. 8.

(14) It is the proper Name of a Town, and ſignifies likewiſe, Fire. In Eſdras B. 2. c. 9. the Latin Verſion ſays, Qui elegiſti eum de igne Chaldæorum.

(15) Gen. xv. 7.

(16) Paulus Burgenſis, in his Add. to the Poſtil. of Lyranus upon Geneſis.

(17) Ibid. See his Mor. Nevochim, Part 3. c. 29.

[C] And the City of Haran.] It is pretended, that he became there a Converter; and that, whilſt he was labouring to make Proſelytes among the Men, Sara was doing the ſame among the Women (18); and that we muſt underſtand in this Senſe the Words of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, that Abraham went out of Haran, with Sara his Wife, Lot, his Brother's Son, all the Riches they had acquired, and all the Souls they had gotten (19). They will not have us underſtand this of the getting of Children, but of propagating the Faith: And they confirm this Explanation by a Metaphor, which the Apoſtle St Paul makes uſe of, at the 19th Verſe of the 4th Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Galatians. My little Children, of whom I am in travail again, until Chriſt be form'd in you. It is more probable, that the Souls, which they had gotten, were the Slaves which they had purchas'd, together with the Children, who were born of theſe Slaves; not but that Abraham, without doubt, endeavour'd to inſtruct the Infidels, as far as his Zeal and his Prudence would permit him; and, if he converted any, they probably follow'd him into the Land of Canaan. There are, who think, that his Father did not ſerve falſe Gods, till after his arrival at Haran (21). But this ſeems abſurd: for, as it is very probable, that (22) this Family abandon'd Chaldæa, to avoid a Perſecution, which it had reaſon to fear, on account of it's deſerting Idolatry; it would be very ſtrange, if it's Head ſhould not have been tainted with it, till in that very Country, to which they fled for Refuge.

(18) See Onkelos, the Chaldee Praphraſe, and Fagius, who tranſlated it.

(19) Gen. xli. 5.

(21) Teſt. in Pererius upon Gen. xi.

(22) This is built upon the Teſtimony of Joſephus, and the Book of Judith, ch. v. St Auſtin affirms it in his de Civit. Dei. Lib. 16. c. 13.

But the worſhip of Idols, of which Abraham had cur'd Terah, before they left their Country, might poſſible revive in the Mind of the good old Gentleman: for, in thoſe times of Ignorance, few Men had Strength enough to maſter their natural Inclination to Idolatry entirely. It is even believ'd, that Nachor, the third Son of Terah, was never quite converted, but that, however, he left his Country, in order to join his Father at Haran (23). Perhaps it might be he, who reviv'd the Veneration for Idols, in the Mind of the old Man, which Abraham had effac'd. It is certain that Laban, Grandſon of this Nachor, was an Idolater. Some of the Fathers of the Church have thought, that Terah was neither a Believer in his Life time, nor at the point of Death. See the 31ſt, and 37th Homilies of St Chryſoſtom. How will they prove this? And how ſhall the contrary be proved to them? The Hiſtory of Abraham is attended with numberleſs Difficulties, in which both Sides of the Queſtion do not want for Reaſons. But poor Father Bolduc, who believ'd that this Patriarch built Monaſteries at Haran, and carry'd with him into Paleſtine only the youngeſt of the Monks (24), is not one of thoſe, who can alledge any Reaſon for his Opinion.

(23) See St Auſtin, ibid.

(24) See Heidegger's Hiſt. Patriarch. Tom. 2. p. 88.

[D] How many Sciences.] They ſay, he underſtood Aſtronomy. This is what Beroſus relates of him, without naming him, if we may believe Joſephus (25). Some will have it, that he taught Arithmetic and Aſtronomy to the Egyptians. Joſephus affirms this (26); and Nicolas Damaſcenus would have confirm'd it, had he ſaid that Abraham taught Geometry and Arithmetic to the Egyptians; but he ſays no ſuch thing. Mr Heidegger, at the 144th Page of his ſecond Tome, cites the 4th Book of Nicolas Damaſcenus's Hiſtory, as if this were to be found there; but he miſtakes the Words of Joſephus for thoſe of Nicolas, in the 16th Chapter of the 9th Book of Euſebius's Præparatio Evangelica. This Patriarch communicated Aſtronomy to the Phœnicians, and Egyptians, according to Eupolemus, and Artapan (27); but, after all, theſe Things are not Articles of Faith. The Authors, who attribute ſuch ſort of Things to him, weaken the Force of their own Teſtimony, by the Falſhoods which they mix with them. One ſays, that Abraham reign'd at Damas (28); another, that he ſojourn'd twenty Years in Egypt, with his whole Family, in the Court of King Pharethon (29); a third does him the Injuſtice to think, that the Motive of his Journey into Egypt, was a Deſire to be acquainted with the Opinions of the Egyptians, concerning the Deity, with a Deſign of following them, if they were better than his own, or to undeceive that People, if their Belief was erroneous (30). Some Moderns think, that he did not teach Mathematics to the Egyptians (31); but the Reaſon they give appears to me to be falſe. They ſay, that the Intention of Sara by the King of Egypt, made Abraham ſo uneaſy, that he was not capable of reading Lectures on ſuch abſtract Sciences as theſe, which, like Poetry, require eaſe and freedom of Mind:

(24) See Heidegger's Hiſt. Patriarch. Tom. 2. p. 88.

(25) Antiq. B. 1. c. 7.

(26) Ibid. c. 8.

(27) Alex. Polyhiſt. cited by Euſebius. Præp. Ev. c. 17, 18.

(28) Nic. Damaſc. in Joſeph. Antiq. B. 1. c. 7. Juſtin ſays the ſame, B. 36. c. 2.

(29) Artap. in Euſebius Præp. Ev. B. 9. c. 18.

(30) Joſeph. Antiq. B. 1. c. 8.

(31) See Salian, Tom. 1. p. 414.

Carmina ſeceſſum ſcribentis & otia quærunt.

From Noiſe and Care the Poet muſt be free.

But we muſt carefully obſerve, that Joſephus has well diſtinguiſh'd the Times; he ſays that Abraham's Conference with the wiſe Men of Egypt was after the Reſtoration of Sara, and when he was contented in his Mind, as well on account of the Favours, which Pharaoh heap'd upon him, as becauſe he was ſatisfy'd that his Wife had brought back her Honour untouch'd.

[E] And how many Books.] There is a Book of the Creation, which was for a long time aſcrib'd to him (32). It is mention'd in the Talmud (33): The Rabins Chanina and Hoſchaia, were accuſtom'd to read it on the Eve of the Sabbath. The Author of a Book, entituled Coſri, ſays, that this Work of Abraham is very profound, and ſtands in need of a long Interpretation; that it teaches the Unity of God; that, in one light, it ſeems to contradict itſelf, but, in another, that it is very conſiſtent. All the Jews do not attribute this Book to this great Patriarch. Some of them declare loudly, that it is a ſpurious Work, and condemn the boldneſs of the Rabin Akiba,

(32) See Remark [A], of the Article AKIBA.

(33) See Heidegg. Hiſt. Patriarch. Tom. 2. p. 143.

Digitized by Google

vilege of having been born circumcis'd (e), and to have had the ſame Soul with Adam (f). They believe that this Soul belong'd afterward to David, and that it will be That of the Meſſiah, as Bartolocci remarks in his Rabinical Dictionary. The Mahometans likewiſe have related ſeveral idle Stories concerning this Patriarch, as may be be ſeen in Al-Koran, and in one of their principal Authors, named Keſſæus. They make him take a Journey to Mecca, and pretend, that he began there to build a Temple [F]. See the Bibliotheque Orientale of Mr d'Herbelot, from page the 12th to the 16th; we meet with many curious Particulars there. If we had the Book, which Hecatæus compos'd, about Abraham (g), we ſhould perhaps ſee many things, which at preſent have never been heard of. The Chriſtians reſolv'd not to be the only Perſons, who have invented no idle Stories concerning Abraham; they have made him plant Trees of a ſingular Virtue [G].

I ſhall here mention a few more of the Dreams of the Rabins. They ſay, that the Egyptian Bondage was a Puniſhment for ſome Faults which Abraham had committed; for he had conſtrained the Diſciples of Wiſdom to take up Arms, and had ſuffer'd Perſons inſtructed in the Law of God to relapſe into Idolatry. Thus they underſtand thoſe Words of the Scripture, where it is ſaid, He arm'd his trained ſervants, which were ere born in his houſe, three hundred and eighteen (b); and that he reſtor'd the Perſons (i), which the King of Sodom demanded back (k). Father Bartolocci makes a great Buſtle about this matter, but does not confute it well [H]. They ſay likewiſe, firſt, that the ſight of a precious Stone, which hung about Abraham's Neck, cur'd all Diſeaſes; and that God hung this Stone in the Sun, after the Death of Abraham (l): ſecondly, That this Patriarch taught his Children Magic, whom he had by his Concubines (m).

(e) In Hottinger's Oriental Hiſt. B. 1. c. 6.

(f) This muſt be underſtood of thoſe among the Jews, who believe'd the Metempſychoſis.

(g) Joſeph. Antiq. B. 1. c. 7.

(h) Gen. xiv. 14.

(i) Ibid. 21.

(k) Bartol. Bibl. Rabin. Tom. 3. p. 529.

(l) Ibid. p. 562.

(m) Ibid. p. 594, Tom. 1. p. 703.

ba, whom they look upon to be the the real Author of the piece (34). "Quis dedit Poteſtatem Aquibæ "ſcribendi librum Jezira, nomine Abrahami Patris "noſtri (35)? —— Who gave Aquiba the Liberty of "writing the Book Jezira, under the Name of our "Father Abraham?" The Supplement to Moreri has a very curious Article upon this Subject, taken from the Critical Hiſtory of Father Simon. Conſult it, at Page 48, and 536, of the Rotterdam Edition. In the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, the Heretics, the Sethians, vented an Apocalypſe of Abraham, as St Epiphanius remarks (36). Origen has quoted a pretended Work of this Patriarch, in which a good and a bad Angel are introduc'd diſputing concerning his Salvation, or Damnation (37). The Library of the Monaſtery of St Croſs, upon Mount Amara in Ethiopia, contains, they ſay (39), the Books, which were compos'd by Abraham, in the Valley of Mamre, where he taught Philoſophy to thoſe, by whoſe help he had defeated the five (40) Kings, who had taken Lot his Nephew. The Work of the Creation was printed at Paris, in the Year 1552, tranſlated into Latin by Poſtel, with Notes. Rittangel, a converted Jew, and Profeſſor at Konigsburg, gave a Latin Tranſlation of it, with Notes, in 1642 (41).

(34) Abr. Zachut. in the Book Juchaſin. p. 52. in Heidegg. ibid.

(35) Preface of Zohar. Mantuan. in Heidegg. ib.

(36) Epiph. Hæreſ. p. 256.

(37) Orig. Homil. 35. upon Lu c. in Heidegg.

(39) Kircherus's Traité de Biblioth. p. 140. Paris Edit.

(40) It ſhould be four.

(41) Spizel. Specim. Biblioth.

[F] That he began there to build a Temple.] They contend, that Adam, being driven from Paradice, begg'd of the good God, to permit him to build a Houſe on the Plan of that which he had ſeen in Heaven; a Houſe, I ſay, which might be a Place for him to direct his Prayers to, and about which he might march in Devotion. Upon which God let fall a Tent, reſembling the Houſe, which Adam had ſeen. Adam apply'd this Tent to the Uſes he deſir'd. After his Death, Seth built a Houſe of Stone and Mud, upon this Model; the Deluge deſtroy'd it; but Abraham and Iſmael rebuilt it, by the Order of God. Others ſucceſſively repair'd it, in proportion as it fell to decay; and, at length, Hejazus, in the Year of the Hegira, 74, put it into the Condition it is now in; and it is the Oratory of the Temple of Mecca (42). See the Remark [I] of the Article AGAR.

(42) Pocock his Notes upon the Specim. Arab. Hiſt. p. 115.

[G] Of a ſingular Virtue.] Gretſer teſtifies, that he read in a Greek Manuſcript, in the Library of Augsbourg, that Abraham planted a Cyprus, a Pine, and a Cedar; which united themſelves into one Tree, each, nevertheleſs, retaining it's proper Root and Branches: That this Tree was cut down, when they were preparing Materials for Solomon's Temple; but that they could not poſſibly fit it to any Part: That Solomon, ſeeing this, reſolved to make a Bench of it: that a Sybil, being brought thither, would not ſit upon it; and prophecy'd that the Redeemer of Mankind ſhould die triumphantly on this Wood: That Solomon encompaſſed it with thirty Croſſes of Silver; and that it continued in this Situation 'till the Death of Jeſus Chriſt (43). This puts me in mind of the Oak of Mamre, under which Abraham is ſaid ſometimes to have cooled himſelf. This Oak, they tell you, was ſtanding in the Reign of Conſtantius (45). "Drys, i. e. Quercus Mambre "juxta Hebron, in quâ, uſque ad ætatem infantiæ "meæ & Conſtantii regis imperium, terebynthus "monſtrabatur pervetus, & annos magnitudine in-"dicans, ſub quâ habitavit Abraham. Miro autem "cultu ab Ethnicis habita eſt, & velut quodam in-"ſigni nomine conſecrata (46). —— The Oak of "Mamre, near Hebron, where not many Years ago, "when I was a Child, and in the Reign of Con-"ſtantius, was ſhewed a Turpentine-Tree very old, "and declaring it's Age by it's Bulk; under which "Abraham dwelt. The Heathens have a ſurpriſing "Veneration for it, and diſtinguiſh it by ſome ho-"nourable Appellation." And ſome have carried the Matter ſo far, as to ſay, that it has been ſeen within theſe three hundred Years. We muſt not they ſay, diſtinguiſh it from that Reed of Seth, which the Traveller Mandeville (a rare Evidence!) ſaw near the Town of Hebron (47).

(43) Greſſet of the Cross, B. 1.

(45) Iſidor. B. 17. c. 7. in Boniface's Hiſt. Ludicr. p. 285. He had better have cited St Jerom, as I have done.

(46) Hieron. in Locis Hebr. Litt. D. See Remark [G], of the Article BARCHOCHEBAS.

[H] But does not confute it well.] He pretends that theſe Words of the King of Sodom, Give me the Perſons, and take the Goods to thyſelf (48), ſignify in the literal and true Senſe, Suffer thoſe, whom you have inſtructed in your Belief, to return to the Worſhip of Idols; but that Abraham proteſted before the People, that he would not do it. The Author quotes the 22d, and 23d Verſes of the 14th Chapter of Geneſis; and then he accuſes the Talmudiſts of Impudence and Blaſphemy, in ſaying that the Patriarch agreed to the Requeſt of the King of Sodom. He had reaſon to condemn them for ſuppoſing, that this Prince demanded back Perſons converted to the true Religion; for he did not require the Domeſtics of the Patriarch, but only thoſe Subjects, whom the four Kings had taken in the Pillage of Sodom (49). But Father Bartolocci is greatly miſtaken in ſuppoſing that Abraham did not reſtore them. What he quotes from Scripture is manifeſtly againſt him.

(47) See Boniface's Hiſt. Ludicr. p. 289. His Book was printed at Venice, by Balconius, in 1652, in 4to. and reprinted at Bruſſels, for John Mommartius, in 1656. in 4to.

(48) Gen. xiv. 21.

(49) It is ſaid at the 16th Verſe, that Abraham brought back Lot his Brother, and likewiſe his Wives, and the People.

ABRAM (NICHOLAS), a Lorrain Jeſuit, born in the Dioceſe of Toul, in the Year 1589, enter'd into the Society in 1606; and profeſs'd the fourth Vow in 1623. He was a polite Scholar; and appear'd to his Superiors ſo good a Divine, that he was raiſed to the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity, in the Univerſity of Pont-a-Mouſſon. He exerciſed this Employ ſeventeen Years; and died the ſeventh of September 1655. He taught the Belles Lettres, before he enter'd upon the Study

Digitized by Google

Study of Divinity (a). He publiſh'd ſeveral Books [A]. It is ſomething ſtrange, that, being an Author of Diſtinction, he ſhould be ſo little known in foreign Countries [B].

(a) Taken fr m Nathan. Sotuel's Bibl. Script. Societ. Jeſu. p. 622.

[A] He publiſhed ſeveral Books.] Notes on the Paraphraſe of the Goſpel of St John, compos'd in Greek Verſe by Nonnus: A Commentary on ſome of Cicero's Orations: A Commentary on Virgil: A Collection of Theological Tracts, entitled, Pharus veteris Teſtamenti, five ſacrarum queſtionum, Libri XV. Maxims of a Chriſtian Life; and a Hebrew Grammar in Latin Verſe. He tranſlated into French, from the Italian of Bartoli, The Life of Vincent Caraffa, The Man of Letters, and The Contented Poverty (1). His Commentary on Cicero is a Work of great Labour; his Analyſis of Logic is good and exact; the Notes are filled with much Learning; but as he has ſcattered with great Profuſion the Fruits of his Lucubrations, he has fallen into a Prolixity, which is tireſome to the leaſt lazy. This Commentary comprehends only the laſt Volume of Orations, as far as the ſecond Philippic incluſively; and yet it is in two Volumes in Folio. They were printed at Paris in 1631. The Commentary on Virgil is much ſhorter; which makes it more uſeful for Schools. We find, at the end of his Pharus Veteris Teſtamenti, a long Treatiſe of Truth and Falſhood (2); in which he does not give into the Maxims of the rigid Caſuiſts.

(1) From Nathan. Sotuel. Bibl. Script. Soc. Jeſ. p. 622.

(2) Printed at Paris, in 1648, in Fol.

Mr De la Monnoie has informed me, Firſt, That this Jeſuit has ſupplied, in ſeventy one Greek Verſes, after his manner, the Hiſtory of the Adultereſs, which was wanting to the eighth Chapter of Nonnus's Paraphraſe (3): Secondly, That Reineſius ſpeaks of this Nicolas Abram, in the 155th Page of his Letters to Hoffman and Rupert. I have conſulted that Place, and I find there this Elogium: "Si me "cum tot rationibus audire hic noles, vel hujus "(Nic Abrami) auctoritati cede. Eſt enim ſane "quam doctiſſimus, & maxime idoneus explicando "Tullio.—If you will not liſten to theſe many Reaſons "of mine, at leaſt ſubmit to the Authority of this "Author (N. Abram). For he is indeed a very "learned one, and the beſt qualified to explain Tully."

(3) It is an Error. Fr. Nanſius, who publiſh'd an Edition of Nonnus, in 1589, is the true Author of this Supplement. Mr de la Croze has inform'd me, that F. Simon ſpeaks of it at the 330*th Page of his* Hiſt. Crit. of Commentators.

Add to this Teſtimony that of another learned Perſon of the ſame Country. "Ad intelligendas, atque "ad uſum transferendas, Orationes Ciceronis ſufficet "Commentarius Jo. Thomæ Freigii, niſi quis addere "malit prolixos Commentarios Nic. Abrami Jeſuitæ, "multâ rerum varietate inſtructos (4). —— The "Commentary of Jo. Thomas Freigius is ſufficient "for the underſtanding and applying of Cicero's "Orations, unleſs any one chuſes to add the long "Commentaries of Nic. Abraham the Jeſuit, which "are fraught with a great Variety of Matter."

(4) J. And. Bolius, de Prudentia & Eloquentia comparanda, p. 400.

[B] So little known in foreign Countries.] His Notes upon the Paraphraſe of Nonnus were printed at Paris, for Stephen Cramoiſi, in 1622; and it does not appear, that Heinſius had any Knowledge of them, when, in 1627. he publiſhed the ſame Paraphraſe with a large Commentary. It is that, which he calls Ariſtarchus ſacer. Neither had Mr Cave heard of this Jeſuit's Notes, ſince he takes no Notice of them in that Paſſage, wherein he reckons up the ſeveral Editions of Nonnus (5). Aubert le Mire and Father Oudin are as ſilent concerning them: the one, in his Auctarium de Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, printed in 1639; the other, in his Supplementum de Script. Eccleſ. printed in 1686. The Manner, in which Mr Simon often quotes this Work of Father Abram (6), ſhewed that he eſteemed it, and that it is a Book, which does not deſerve to be unknown. But there is ſomething ſtill more remarkable. Martin Schoockius, whoſe principal Employ was an immenſe and prodigious Reading, declared in his old Age, that he had never before heard of ſuch an Author, as Nic. Abram. "Hanc ſi tuitus fuiſſet neſcio quis "Nic. Abramus (jam primitus eum noſſe incipio) "prolixo examine haud opus fuiſſet (7). —— Had "one Nic. Abram (this is the firſt time I ever "heard of him) ſeen this, it would not have ſtood "in need of a long Diſcuſſion."

(5) Hiſt. Later, p. 290. London Edit. in 1688, in Folio.

(6) Hiſt. Crit. of the Commentary on the New Teſtament, ch. 23.

(7) Sch. de Fœnore unciario, p. 107, printed in 1668.

ABSTEMIUS (LAURENCE) born at Macerata, in the Territory of Ancona, apply'd himſelf to the Study of the Belles Lettres, and made a conſiderable Progreſs therein. He taught them at Urbin, and was Librarian there to the Duke of Guido Ubalde (a), to whom he dedicated a little Book, in which he explain'd ſome difficult Paſſages of Antient Authors (b). It was in the Pontificat of Alexander VI. that he publiſh'd this Work; and another entitled Hecatomythium, dedicated to Octavianus Ubaldini, Count of Mercatelli. The reaſon of this Title was, that the Work was a Collection of an hundred Fables. In the Sequel to it he doubled the Number. They have been frequently printed [A] with thoſe of the Antient Fabuliſts, Eſop, Phædrus, Gabrias, Avienus, &c. which Nevelet has collected in a body with Notes. Abſtemius did not always confine himſelf to an Imitation of thoſe Antient Originals; he mixes ſometimes among his Fables ſome Droll Tale, and does not always ſpare the Clergy [B]. We meet with his Conjectures on ſome Paſſages of the Antients in the firſt Volume of Gruterus's Critical Theſaurus; we meet with them, I ſay, under the Title of Various Annotations. They are but few in Number, and fill but 15 Pages. There is a Preface of his at the beginning of Aurelius Victor, in 1505 (c). I know not whether he ſurviv'd this Edition long. He is one of thoſe, whom Laurentius Valla has cenſur'd.

(a) See Gruter's Theſ. Crit. Tom. 1. p. 878.

(b) Opuſculum de Nonnullis locis obſcuris. See the Epiſtle dedicatory of his Hecatomythium.

(c) Epit. Bibl. Geſner.

Take notice of the Remarks communicated to me [C] ſince the firſt Edition.

[A] They have been frequently printed.] Geſner takes notice of the Edition of Strasbourgh in 1522. That, which Nevelet made uſe of, is more modern by eighty eight Years. The Notes, which he has added to it, are but few: and certainly it is not for their ſake, that the Impreſſion has been ſo often repeated. He wrote none upon Abſtemius's Fables; as they wanted none.

[B] And does not always ſpare the Clergy.] The following is a Proof of it. The 104th Fable is this: A certain Prieſt was intruſted by his Biſhop with the Care of a Convent, where there were five Nuns, by each of which he had a Boy at the Year's end. The Biſhop, hearing this News, was in a great Paſſion, ſent for the Prieſt, chid him ſeverely, and called him Traytor, and a ſacrilegious Wretch, for daring to defile the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt. My Lord, ſays he, you intruſted me with five Talents; and lo, I have gained five others. The Biſhop was ſo well pleaſed with this facetious Reply, that he gave the Prieſt full Abſolution. The Moral, which the Author has laid down at the end of the Fable, is no better than the Fable itſelf, in reſpect of the like Profanation of Scripture. When we cannot juſtify an ill Action (ſays he) with good Reaſons, we muſt turn it off with a Jeſt (1). It is certain this has often ſucceeded: but a Biſhop, who ſhould excuſe ſuch a Profanation as this for it's Pleaſantry, would not do his Duty much better, than the Guardian of the five Nuns.

(1) Fabula indicat, peccata, cum ratione nequeant, urbanitate diluenda. Abſtem. Fab. CIV.

[C] The Remarks communicated to me.] "The "Conjectures of Abſtemius, inſerted in the firſt Vo- "lume of the Theſ. Crit. of Gruter, are only an "Extract of a Work, entitled Obſcurorum locorum "(2), dedicated to the Duke of Urbino. Gruter, "who has given us this Extract, has placed at the "beginning a little marginal Note, in which he "ſays, that Laurentius Valla had criticis'd upon "Abſtemius.

(2) See the Quotation (b) of this Article.

Digitized by Google

" Abſtemius. I doubt much of the Truth of this; " there not occurring any Footſteps of this preten- " ded Criticiſm in the Works of Laurentius Valla, " whom beſides Abſtemius has greatly praiſed in the " Preface to his ſecond Hecatomythium, and with " whom he could not have much Contention, as " he ſurviv'd him at leaſt forty eight Years. He " is the firſt, I beleive, who wrote the Fable of the " Multiply'd Talents. Le Bandel, Vervilie, and " others, have related it after him." This is taken from a Letter ſent me by Mr De la Monnoie.

ABUCARAS (THEODORE) was a Prelate [A] very zealous for Orthodoxy, which he ſhew'd in more than forty Diſſertations which he wrote, either againſt the Jews or the Mahometans, or the Hereticks, or in general on Religious Subjects. Genebrard tranſlated into Latin, and publiſh'd, fifteen of theſe Diſſertations. Gretſer, adding theſe to the reſt [B] which Father Turrien, or himſelf, had tranſlated, publiſh'd an Edition, which ſeem'd complete (a). But he forgat ſomething; for Mr Arnold printed at Paris, in 1685, a Treatiſe by Abucaras, which had never yet appeared from the Preſs. He found it in the Oxford Library. He did not accompany it with Notes, not daring to meddle with the grand Myſteries, which the Author examines in that Treatiſe (b): viz. the Incarnation, and the Hypoſtatical Union. It is uncertain when Abucaras liv'd. The Jeſuit Turrien believes he was the Diſciple of Johannes Damaſcenus. This places him in the VIIIth Century. Gretſer places him a little earlier [C], not diſtinguiſhing him from that Abucaras, who was ſo far engaged in the Troubles of the Church of Conſtantinople, in the Time of the Patriarch Ignatius and of Photius. This Abucaras followed the Party of Photius, and undertook to go upon an Embaſſy for him, with Zachary, Biſhop of Chalcedon, to the Court of the Emperor Lewis II. His Buſineſs was to preſent to this Prince the Book, which Photius had compoſed againſt Pope Nicolas, and to exhort him to ſhake off the Pope's Yoke. But he had ſcarce began his Journey, when Baſilus the Macedonian, who had uſurp'd the Empire, after having murthur'd the Emperor Michel, recalled him, and commanded him to ſtir no farther in the Affair. Two Years after (c) he appeared before the Council of Conſtantinople, and humbly begg'd Pardon for having been in the Intereſts of Photius, and proteſted that he was drawn in to eſpouſe them by Violence and Artifice. He gained his Ends: the Patriarch reconciled him to the Church, and gave him a Place in the Aſſembly (d). Mr Arnold was acquainted with a learned Man in England, who believed that Abucaras liv'd in the VIIth Century (e). The Works of this Author were inſerted in the Supplement to the Paris Edition of the Collection of the Fathers, in 1624.

(a) It is in Greek and Latin, and printed at Ingolſtad, in 1606, in 4to.

(b) Arnold's Preface.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Nicet. Paphlag. in the Life of Ignatius, in Cave's Hiſt. Liter. p. 557.

(e) In 869.

[A] A Prelate.] Some ſtile him Archbiſhop of Caria (1), others Epiſcopum Cariæ, Καρῶν Ἐπίσκοπον, Biſhop of Caria (2). Mr Arnold thinks, that Abucaras was Biſhop of Charron in Meſopotamia: this was likewiſe the Opinion of Joſias Simler (3). Photius had deſigned him for the Biſhoprick of Laodicea, as Mr Cave obſerves.

(1) Cave's Hiſtor. Liter. p. 557. Oudin's Supplement, p. 250.

(2) Spizelius's Specim. Bibl. Konigius's Bibl. vet. & nov. and Arnold's Preface.

(3) Simler's Epit. Bibl. Gein.

[B] Gretſer, adding theſe to the reſt.] The Journal des Savans gives us a wrong Notion of this Jeſuit's Edition. Genebrard (ſay they) has tranſlated and publiſhed fifteen Diſſertations of this Author, and Gretſer had added them to his Collection of the Works of Anaſtaſius the Sinaite, in two Manuſcripts in the Bavarian Library. Had they underſtood the Latin of Mr Arnold, they would not have been guilty of this Miſtake. " Theodori Abucaræ Diſ- " ſertationes quindecim jam diu Latine vertit & " edidit Genebrardus, deinde Theodorum Anaſtaſio " Sinaitæ ob argumenti ſimilitudinem conjunxit Ja- " cobus Gretſerus, deditque ex duobus codicibus " Manuſcriptis Ducis Bavariæ Maximiliani. —— " Genebrard had, ſome time before, tranſlated into " Latin, and publiſhed fifteen Diſſertations of Theo- " dorus Abucaras; afterward Jacob Gretſer joined " Theodorus with Anaſtaſius the Sinaite, on ac- " count of the Reſemblance between their Subjects, " and publiſhed them from two Manuſcripts of Maxi- " milian Duke of Bavaria (5)" There are three Particulars in this Paſſage: Firſt, That Gretſer publiſh'd the Works of Abucaras, after the Publication of fifteen of the Pieces by Genebrard: Second, That Gretſer publiſhed them from two Manuſcripts of the Duke of Bavaria: Third, That he joined them with Anaſtaſius the Sinaite. There is nothing of all this in the Journal de Savans. We are not there told, that Gretſer publiſhed more Pieces than Genebrard, nor that the Bavarian Manuſcripts were aſſiſting to the Editions of Abucaras: it only ſays, that they were of uſe to the Edition of Anaſtaſius, of which Mr Arnold made no mention. Farther, we muſt not imagine, that all the Works of Anaſtaſius the Sinaite were publiſhed with Theodore Abucaras: there is only the Treatiſe, entitled Ὁδηγος, The Guide, added to the Works of Abucaras, in Gretſer's Edition.

(5) Arnold's Preface.

[C] Gretſer places him a little earlier.] In reading Mr Arnold's Preface, one is almoſt convinc'd, that this Jeſuit did not dare to advance any thing concerning the Age of Abucaras. " Gretſerus vero, quis fu- " erit Abucaras, quo ſæculo floruerit, ab Antonio " Velſero, S. S. Theol. D. Eccleſiæ Friſingenſis Ca- " nonico, Præpoſito Spaltenſi, cujus honori librum " ſuum dedicavit, diſcere volebat (6). —— But Gret- " ſer deſired to be inform'd, who Abucaras was, and " when he flouriſh'd, from Antony Velſerus, Doctor " of Divinity, Canon of the Church of Friſingen, and " Provoſt of Spalta, to whoſe Honour he dedicates his " Book." Mr Arnold, by ſaying nothing more of Gretſer, plainly inſinuates, that we need look no further in the Preface of this Jeſuit. But we find it otherwiſe: namely, that Abucaras, whom he mentions in the Life of St Ignatius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, is the ſame who compos'd the Diſſertations.

(6) Arnold's Preface.

ABUDHAHER. It is the Name of the Chief of the Karmatians [A], under whoſe Conduct they profaned and laid waſte Mecca, in the Year of the Hegira

[A] The Karmatians.] It is the Name of a Sect, which roſe in Arabia, about the Year of the Hegira 278 (1). The firſt Head of this Sect was a Blaſphemer, and an Impoſtor; who, drawing to his Party thoſe among the Inhabitants of the Fields and Deſarts, who had leaſt Religion, gain'd an abſolute command over them. We meet with ſeveral Etymologies of the Name Karmatians, in Pocock (2). The Sect was but ſmall at firſt; but it made an incredible Progreſs. They poſſeſs'd themſelves of the greateſt Part of the Provinces of Eraki, and Hejazi; and ſpread themſelves over Syria, and as far as the Gates of Grand Cairo (3).

(1) According to us, the Year 891.

(2) Pocock's Notes on Specim Hiſt. Arab. p. 371. This Specimen was printed at Oxford in 1650.

(3) Ibid.

Digitized by Google

Hegira [B] 317. They robb'd the Pilgrims, and murther'd 1700 of them, within the very Walls of the Caaba (a) whilſt theſe poor ſuperſtitious Wretches were marching round this ſacred Oratory, as their Form of Prayer directed them. The Karmatians were not ſatisfy'd with this Slaughter; they carry'd away out of the Temple a piece of black Marble, which was had in Veneration there, as a Preſent from Heaven (b); they pull'd down the Gate of the Temple, and fill'd the Pits Zamzam, one of the moſt ſacred parts of the Place, with the dead Bodies. To encreaſe the Calamity, Abudhaher affronted the Mahometan Religion many ways; he led his Horſe to the Entrance of the Caaba, that he might lay his Dung there; and he told the Mahometans, they were Fools to call that Building by the Name of God's Houſe; for, added he, if God had any regard to this Temple, he would have immediately cruſh'd me with a Thunder-bolt for profaning his Houſe in ſo outrageous a manner [C]. The Veneration of the Mahometans for this Temple was not leſſen'd upon that Account: they continu'd to go in Pilgrimage thither every Year. When the Karmatians were inform'd of this, they determin'd to ſend back the black Marble, which they had kept twenty-two Years. Some time after they rallied the Folly of their Devotions: This People, ſaid they, believe they are in poſſeſſion of the black Marble: but we ſent them another in it's room: the Object therefore of their Veneration is a falſe and ſuppoſititious Being. They had a more important Deſign [D] in theſe Words, than the bare Pleaſure of an Inſult. They receiv'd for anſwer, that they need only be witneſs of the Proof, and that, if the Stone ſwam upon Water, they might be convinc'd it was genuine. Accordingly it did float in the preſence of the Karmatians; and by this means all thoſe Doubts and Scruples, which the jeſting of theſe prophane Wretches might raiſe, were remov'd (c). This is a little Specimen of the Legends of the Eaſtern People. You will meet with many curious Particulars relating to Abudhaher, and the Karmatians, in the Oriental Dictionary of Mr d'Herbelot (d). He calls them Carmathians, and he writes the Name of their Cheif Abu-Thaher.

(a) The Name of a Part of the Temple deſign'd for Adration and Prayer.

(b) See the Remark [K] of the Article AGAR.

(c) Pocock's Notes upon Spec. Hiſt. Arab. p. 118, 119. from Abulfida, and Ebn Yuſef.

(d) In the Article CARMATH, p. 256, &c.

[B] The Year of the Hegira, 317.] Abulfeda, and Ahmed Ebn Yuſef, point out this Year; and ſay, that the Stone was not recover'd, till 339: But Saffioddin ſhortens the Time: he places this carrying away of the Stone in the Year 319, and the Reſtitution of it, in 335 (4).

(4) Pocock's Notes upon Specim. Hiſt. Arab. p. 119.

[C] In ſo outrageous a Manner.] Ahmed Ebn Yuſef ſays, that the Mahometan Religion never ſuffered a Calamity comparable to that (5).

(5) Ibid.

[D] A more important Deſign.] They were in Hopes of inviting the Caravans of Pilgrims to them; imagining, that theſe good People would go where the Stone was kept. This is the Reaſon, why they would not accept of a Ranſom for it: they were deaf to Prayers and Promiſes. But, finding that Mecca was as much frequented as ever, and that no one came to pay their Devotions to the Stone, which they preſerv'd, they returned it. This they did, with a Reſerve of ſome Right in it to themſelves; for, when they gave it out that they had returned only a counterfeit Stone, they intended without doubt to raiſe Scruples in Mens Minds, and to ſhare the Pilgrimages, at leaſt, ſooner or later. The People of Mecca foreſaw the Conſequence; and thought proper to give it out, that the Stone had been put to the Proof, and it's Genuineneſs confirmed.

ABULFEDA, (Ismael) Prince of Hamah, a City of Syria, ſucceeded his Brother, in the Year of the Hegira, 743 [A], which anſwers to the Year of Chriſt 1342, and died three Years after, at about the Age of 72 Years (a). He was a Lover of Study, and particularly that of Geography, as may be gathered from a Work entitled, Choraſmiæ & Mawaralnahræ, hoc eſt, Regionum extra fluvium Oxum deſcriptio, ex tabulis Abulfedæ Iſmaëlis, Principis Hamah; i. e. A Deſcription of Choraſmia, and Mawaralnahre, or the Regions beyond the River Oxus, from the Tables of Abulfeda Iſmaël, Prince of Hamah (b). It was printed at London in 1650. The Author quotes a great many Arabian Writers. It was compos'd long before he aſcended the Throne; for it is remark'd at the end of the Book, that it was finiſh'd in the Year of the Hegira 721, which is the 1321 of Chriſt. We are oblig'd to the learned John Gravius for the London Edition. He added to the Original, which is in Arabic, a Latin Tranſlation, and a Preface, in which he informs us, that he conſulted five different Manuſcripts;

(a) Pocock in his Notes on Specim. Hiſt. Arab. p. 363. ſays that he was born in the Year of the Hegira 672.

(b) The Arabic Title ſignifies Canon, or rather Rectificatio Terrarum, according to Gravius. For which reaſon Konig was not in the wrong to ſay that Abulfeda wrote a Geographical Work entitled Directorium Regionum.

[A] The Year of the Hegira 743.] This we are aſſured of from the Arabian Author of a Book entitled Al Sacerdan (1). Therefore the Jeſuit Blancanus was miſtaken, when he places Abulfeda in the IVth Century of Chriſtianity (2). This Error ought to have kept him from another Miſtake, in giving this Geographer the Title of Prince of Syria, Aſſyria, and Perſia. A little Attention might have ſhewn him, that an Arabian Author and a Mahometan could not be King of Perſia 400 Years after Chriſt. Voſſius, having related the Opinion of Blancanus, is content to ſay, that Abulfeda was not ſo antient by a great deal: but, for the reſt, he allows him the Style and Title of Prince of Syria, Aſſyria, and Perſia (3). He comes pretty near the Truth, as to his Chronology; when he ſays that it is three hundred Years ſince Abulfeda flouriſhed (4). Inſtead of this, Mr Moreri charges him with believing, as Blancanus did, that this Prince of Syria liv'd in the IIId or IVth Century: But it is certain, adds Mr Moreri, that he lived much later; perhaps in the VIIIth or IXth, or even in the Year 1200. He might have omitted the Word perhaps; he might have aſſerted, that he liv'd in the XIVth Century; ſince his Work was finiſhed in the 721ſt Year of the Hegira, as is declared at the end of it. There is a falſe Print in the Dutch Edition of Moreri in this Place. They make J. Gravius ſay, that our Abulfeda lived in the beginning of the XIIIth Century; and yet he has placed the Death of this Prince in 1345. What I am moſt concerned at is, that the learned E. Pocock aſſerts, that Abulfeda took poſſeſſion of the Government of the Province of Hamah, in the 710th Year of the Hegira (5). This cannot be reconciled with what J. Gravius has aſcertained. It is more reaſonable to depend upon this latter, than the other, becauſe Abulfeda is Gravius's principal Subject; whereas Pocock ſpeaks of him only by way of a ſhort Digreſſion. But is it not very hard, that we cannot depend upon Men of ſuch great Abilities in the Eaſtern Learning, as Pocock; and that at the ſame time that they publiſh any thing, one of their Colleagues ſhall ſhew the Falſeneſs of it?

(1) Gravius's Preface.

(2) He calls him Abifeldee in his Chronol. Mathem.

(3) Voſſius de Mathem. Diſcipl. p. 250.

(4) He calls him Abifeldeas, and Abulfedæas. See the Epitom. Bibl. Geſn.

(5) Pocock's Notes on the Specim. Hiſt. Arab.

Digitized by Google

nuſcripts; the firſt is Erpenius's Tranſcript from the Copy in the Palatine Library; the ſecond is the ſame Copy, which is now in the Vatican; two others belong'd to Pocock; the fifth was bought at Conſtantinople. We learn farther in this Preface, that Ramuſius is the firſt, who commended this Work of Abulfeda, and pointed out the Uſe of it; that afterward Caſtaldus made uſe of it to correct the Longitudes and Latitudes of ſeveral Places; that Ortelius often mentions it in his Theſaurus Geographicus, not as having ſeen it, but upon the Authority of Caſtaldus; that Erpenius, out of concern that no one had given it to the World, reſolv'd to publiſh it, and would have done it, if Death had not taken him off in the middle of his Deſign; that Schickard was the firſt, who borrow'd from it ſeveral Remarks of profound Learning, and 'till then unknown, which he inſerted in his Tarich Perſicum: but as the Copy belonging to the Imperial Library, which was lent him by Tengnagelius, was not legible in ſeveral Places, he left the greateſt part of the Pains and the Honour to John Gravius (c). It is ſurprizing, that Mr Moreri cou'd heap together ſo many Miſtakes in one Article [B], as he has done in this of Abulfeda. Spizelius did not know in 1668; nor Konig in 1678, that Abulfeda had been in England (d). (d) Spizel. Specim. Bibl. Univ.

(c) It follows from hence, that Fabricius, in his Specimen. Ling. Arab. p. 99. was wrong in ſaying, in Konig, that Schickard had tranſlated into Latin a Work of Abulfeda. Spizelius in his Specim. Bibl. cites the ſame Fabricius, as ſaying, that Schickard had tranſlated all this Work.

[B] Mr Moreri could heap together ſo many Miſtakes in one Article,] We have already ſeen ſome of them. The reſt are as follows. Firſt, When he ſays, that ſome are of Opinion, that Abulfeda was of Nubia, he manifeſtly confounds him with the Author of the Geographia Nubienſis, of whom we ſhall treat in his proper Place. At leaſt, he betrays his Ignorance that theſe two Authors ought to be diſtinguiſhed; for, had he known it, he would not have related this Opinion, and let it paſs uncenſured. Secondly, He confirms this firſt Obſervation, by adding that Abulfeda diſpoſed his Geography into Climates. This agrees better with the Author of Geographia Nubienſis than with Abulfeda. This latter has given us only a Deſcription of ſome Parts of Aſia, ſituated beyond the Oxus, which he places under the 25th and 26th Climates. The Nubian Geography is diſpoſed in a very different Manner. It makes but ſeven Climates, and adheres to this Diviſion of the Antients; referring all the Deſcription it gives of the known World to That. Let me obſerve by the way, that Abulfeda fixes his firſt Climate in Arabia, and not, as the Nubian Geography does, on the moſt weſtern Coaſt of the Atlantic Ocean; and that his firſt Meridian paſſes thro' Cape St Vincent. Thirdly; We have ſeen, ſays Mr Moreri, at preſent, but the firſt Climates of Abulfeda; we are put in Hopes of the remaining ones this Year: This is a downright Falſhood: what is publiſhed of Abulfeda relates not to the firſt Climates, but to the 25th and 26th. Fourthly; An Author ſhould not make uſe of ſo indeterminate a Phraſe as This Year; for his Reader, at the end of ten Years, will not know what Year he means; he muſt have recourſe to the Date of the firſt Impreſſion: this is to be met with but in few Books: and, where it is to be found, it is not always a good Guide, ſince there often paſs many Years between the Compoſition and the Publication of a Book. This is an Inſtance of the Difficulty, into which a Reader is led by the Expreſſion this Year. Where is the Perſon, who, in reading Moreri, can gueſs in what Year the other Climates of Abulfeda were promiſed? It is a very long Year; it has reigned to the ſixth Edition inclusively. Fifthly, William Poſtel was the firſt who brought this Work into Europe, of which he publiſhed an Abridgment in Latin. Here are two new Errors of Moreri. Simler is the only Author he quotes, who has any Relation to this. But all that Simler ſays, is, that Poſtel, having brought this Work from the Eaſt, left an Abridgment of it, which he had tranſlated at Venice, with Ramuſius (6), who had a Deſign of publiſhing the ſecond Tome of his New World. There is a great deal of Difference between bringing a Book from the Eaſt, and being the firſt who brought it from thence; between publiſhing a Book, and leaving the Manuſcript for another's Uſe. It is certain, that Ramuſius did not publiſh what Poſtel left with him; and if it be true, that Abulfeda, which was in Arabic in the Palatine Library, as Moreri obſerves, had been brought into Europe by Poſtel, and that this was the firſt Copy we had in the Weſt, this does not acquit Mr Moreri of aſcribing more to Authors than they really ſay; and we have reaſon to complain of ſuch Falſifications. They deſerve to be particularly cenſured.

(6) Simler calls him Rhamnuſius by Miſtake; and Spizelius the ſame.

ABULPHARAGE (Gregory) the Son of a Phyſician named Aaron, was himſelf likewiſe a Phyſician, and acquired a great Reputation in this Art; inſomuch that they came to conſult him from the moſt diſtant Countries. He was of Malatia [A], near the Euphrates, and would at this time have been but little known, had he confin'd himſelf to the Knowledge of Medicine: but he underſtood Hiſtory; and there is a Work of this kind, after his manner, ſtill extant, which does honour to his Memory. Not that our Age judges ſo favourably of it, as the Eaſtern People do. They are extravagant in their Commendations, either becauſe they have but few truly learned Men among them, or becauſe it is to their Taſte. However that be, there are an hundred Hiſtorians in the Weſt, whoſe Compoſitions are not inferior to thoſe of Abulpharage, whom no one has yet thought fit to dignify with ſuch Titles, as are given him [B]. He liv'd at the end of the XIIIth Century, and profeſs'd Chriſtianity

[A] He was of Malatia.] I have in vain looked for this Town in Pocock's Prefaces, in Ortelius's Theſaurus, and Mr Baudrand's Geography. But Chance has been more favourable to me than Enquiry; for in turning over, with other Views, that which is called the Nubian Geography, I found, that Malatia is a fortified Town, fifty one Miles from Samoſata, towards the Source of Euphrates (1).

(1) Geogr. Nub. Clim. 4. p. 5, & 197.

Mr Baudrand has informed me, that he mentions this Town under the Word Melita and Melitene. It is true: he places it in leſſer Armenia, upon the Euphrates, and ſays, it is called at preſent Malatiah.

[B] Such Titles, as are given to him.] Pocock met with this Paſſage at the beginning of a Copy of Abulpharage, wrote in the 900th Year of the Hegira: "Dixit Dominus noſter, Pater Sanctus, eximius, "doctrina & eruditione inſignis, doctorum Rex, "excellentium excellentiſſimus, temporum ſuorum "exemplar, ſæculi Phœnix, ſapientium Gloria, Doctor "divina ope fultus, Mar. Gregorius Abulpharai, fi- "lius excellenter ſapientis Aaronis, Medici Mala- "tienſis. —— Theſe are the Words of Mar. Gregory "Abulpharaï, (Son of the excellently-wiſe Ahron, "Phyſician of Malatia) our Lord, and Holy Father, "moſt excellent of the Excellent, famous for Learn- "ing and Knowledge, King of the Learned, Pattern "of his Times, Phœnix of the Age, Glory of the "Wiſe, a Teacher favoured by Heaven." At the end of another Copy he met with the following: "Pater "& Dominus noſter, Rex doctorum, & corona vi- "rorum

Digitized by Google

Christianity [C]. This did not hinder several Mahometans from studying under him [D]. The current Report of his abjuring his Religion, when he found himself near Death, ought to be rank'd among the numberless Fables of this kind, which are rais'd among all Sects [E]. He has divided the History, which he compos'd in in Arabic, into Dynasties. It is an Abridgment of Universal History from the beginning of the World to his own Time. The Division consists of ten Parts. The Subjects of each may be seen in the Supplement to Moreri. Edward Pocock (a) publish'd this Book of Abulpharage, with a Latin Translation, in 1663. He added to it a Supplement, which contains a short Sequel to this History with regard to the Eastern Princes. He had before publish'd, in 1650, a short Extract from the ninth Dynasty of this Author, with many learned Notes. The Title of it is, Specimen Historiæ Arabum, sive Gregorii Abul Farajii, Malatiensis, de Origine & Moribus Arabum succincta Narratio: i. e. A Specimen of the Arabic History, or a succinct Relation of the Origin and Manners of the Arabians, by Abulpharage, of Malatia. Abulpharage could not be so exact in the Affairs of the Greeks and Romans, as those of the Saracens and Tartar-Moguls. This latter piece is the best of the Work. It relates, in a very instructive and credible manner, the prodigious Conquests of Zingis-Chan. All that Abraham Zacuth says of them, in his Juchasin, is stoln, together with other Matters, from the History of Abulpharage. We cannot guess why Abraham Ecchellensis (b) gives our Author the Name of Gregorius Bar Hebræus Syrus (c) [F].

(a) Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, and Arabic Lecturer.

(b) Pref. Bibliot. Πολυγλώττων, Parisi.

(c) Pocock's Preface.

" rorum virtute præstantium, dubiorum in Theolo-
" gicis occultorum Ἐπιλύτης, Christianorum Prin-
" ceps primarius, sectæ Jacobiticæ Medulla, Mar.
" Gregorius, dominus, Pater, unicum ævi decus, &
" sæculi Phœnix. —— Our Lord and Father, King
" of the Learned, and Crown of the Virtuous, Solver
" of Doubts in Divinity, Chief Head of the Christians,
" Marrow of the Jacobite Sect, Mar. Gregory, Lord,
" Father, sole Glory of the Age, and Phœnix of the " Times." Add to these what he met with at the beginning of a Syriac Grammar, composed by this Author; " Pater noster sanctus, Rex Doctorum,
" Mar. Gregorius, Doctor Orientis, qui idem est
" Abul-Pharaï, filius Ahronis, Medici Militinienfis,
" i. e. Malatiensis.

[C] Professed Christianity.] He was, we see, of the Sect of the Jacobites. This is more probable, according to Pocock, than what a learned Jew has advanced, that Abulpharage was of the Sect of the Melchites. " Cui potius fidem habemus, quam docto
" cuidam Judæo, qui eum vocat Ebnol Koff, Chri-
" stianum Malatiensem, secta Melchitum (2).

(2) Pocock's Pref. to Specim. Hist. Arab.

[D] This did not hinder many Mahometans from studying under him.] One of Pocock's Copies contains these Words of a Mahometan: " Author Libri est
" Abul-Pharaï Ebn Hocima, vir multæ lectionis va-
" riisque Scientiis instructus, & penitus imbutus,
" præcipue autem medicinæ gloriâ Sæculo suo clarus,
" adeo ut ad eum de plagis Orientalibus frequentes con-
" tenderent. Christianus erat, à quo tamen didice-
" runt multi è Muslemorum eximie doctis. Ferunt
" ipsum morti propinquum à fide Christiana defci-
" visse. —— The Author of the Book is Abul-Pharaï
" Ebn Hocima, a Man of great Reading, and tho- " roughly vers'd in many Sciences, but particularly
" famous in his Time for his Skill in Physic; inso-
" much that People came in Crouds to him from the " Eastern Countries. He was a Christian; and yet
" many of the learned Mussulmen were his Disciples.
" He is reported to have renounced the Christian " Faith, when he was near Death." Ebn Chalecan, a famous Author, who wrote the Lives of illustrious Men, was the Writer of these Words, if we may believe the Remark written by another Hand in the same Place of the Copy (3).

(3) Pocock's Pref. to Compend. Dynast.

[E] Which are raised among all Sects.] We have mentioned the Report concerning the last Hours of Abulpharage. The Mahometans could scarce believe, that so great a Man was inwardly a Christian; they chose rather to think, that he concealed his real Sentiments, 'till the Approach of Death put an end to his Reasons for dissembling them. This Prejudice universally prevails. Every one imagines, that the Truths of his Religion are so clear, that the Men of Genius of another Party cannot but be convinced of them; and that it is only worldly Motives which prevent their making an open Profession of them. They flatter themselves, that at the fatal Hour, when the eternal Doom affects the Mind most strongly, these Dissemblers will give Truth the Glory, and throw aside the Mask.

Dii longæ noctis, quorum jam numina nobis
Mors instans majora facit (4)!

(4) Dido in Silius Italic. Lib. 8. v. 140.

Ye Deities of everlasting Night,
Whose Forms, in Death, rise larger to the Sight!

For, according to Lucretius,

—— Veræ voces tum demum pectore ab imo
Ejiciuntur, & eripitur persona manet Res (5).

(5) Lucret. lib. 3. ver. 57.

Truth then breaks forth, extorted by our Fears,
And all the Man, without Disguise, appears.

It is from this wrong Principle so many idle Stories arise, which are inserted in Moreri's Dictionary, relating to Peter du Moulin, Joseph Scaliger, &c. It is likewise the Source of I know not how many Discourses, in which certain Persons are made to say, The Religion I profess is the best for this World, but not in the Article of Death. See the Remark [DD] of the Article MAHOMET.

[F] The Name of Gregorius Bar Hebræus Syrus.] Upon this Occasion, I shall make this short Remark. Pocock repeats two Passages, in which our Author is named Mar Gregorius, and one, in which he is called Mor Gregorius; he makes no Reflexion upon the first of these Names; he never says, that Abulpharage was called Marc. Upon which I say, the Supplement to Moreri must be mistaken, in saying that the Name of this Author was Marc Gregory. The Word Mar, which is a Title of Honour as Mr in our Language, might be mistaken for the Christian Name Marc. I observe the same Fault in the Perpetuity of the Faith defended (6): the Patriarch of Babylon, who reunited himself to the Church of Rome, under Pope Paul V. is there styl'd Marc Elias; but the Author, cited for it, calls him Mar Elias (7).

(6) B. 5. c. 10.

(7) Petrus Strozza, de Chaldæor. Dogm. See Aub. Miræus's Polit. Eccles.

ABUMUSLIMUS (a) General of the Army under the first Caliphs of the Race of Abbasi. The Province of Chorasan surrender'd to Abbasi in the Year of the Hegira 125 (b). He accepted it, and died the same Year. Ibrahim, his Son and Successor, sent Abumuslimus into this Country, at the Age of Nineteen. These tender Years did not hinder him from driving out Nasrus, who govern'd the Province in the Name of Caliph Merwan. After the Death of Ibrahim, which came to pass in the Year of the Hegira 131, Saffahus, his Brother, was raised to the Dignity of Caliph. He left the Government of the Province of Chorasan to Abumuslimus, and made use of him

(a) Mr d'Herbelot, who makes a long Article of him, calls him Abou-Moslem.

(b) It is so. 742.

Digitized by Google

him to get rid of his Counſellor Abumuſlimas, who became ſuſpected by him. He died in the Year 136, and was ſucceeded by Almanſor, his Brother, who, after he had receiv'd the moſt important Services from Abumuſlimus, treacherouſly caus'd him to be murthur'd. Abdalla had revolted in Syria: Abumuſlimus, being ſent againſt him at the Head of a gallant Army, entirely routed him. Almanſor, more touch'd with the Scandal he pretended Abumuſlimus had utter'd againſt him, than with the Importance of the Victory, ſent for him, in order to put him to death. Abumuſlimus, juſtly diſtruſting him, refus'd to wait upon his Maſter; but, ſuffering himſelf to be deceiv'd by the Careſſes made to him, he put himſelf into the Power of Almanſor, who threw him into the Tigris. This was in the 137th Year of the Hegira, which anſwers to our 754. It is computed, that Abumuſlimus caus'd the death of 600 Perſons. He paſs'd for one a little vers'd in Magic, and he was of a Sect, from which That of the unfortunate Spinoza was not very different [A]. Erpenius did not underſtand the Words of Elmacin upon this Subject [B]. What I have here advanc'd (c), and the two Remarks below, are what I will not pretend to warrant. I report them on the Authority of another. Only the Parallel of Spinoziſme is my own; and I am not over ſatisfied, that he who criticizes Erpenius, knows more of the Point in queſtion, than Erpenius himſelf.

(c) Taken from Elmacin's Hiſt. Saracen. B. 2. c. 1, &c.

[A] Spinoza was not very different.] The Sect, which Abumuſlimus profeſſed, taught a kind of Metempſychoſis, but not like that of Pythagoras (1). His did not deſtroy the Soul; it only ſent it from one Body to another; but the other Metempſychoſis is thus deſcribed by the famous Traveller Peter de la Valle, in the Place, where he mentions certain Mahometan Heretics, who called themſelves Ebl Eltahkik, Men of Truth and Certainty. "They believe "(ſays he) no other God, but the four Elements "—— that there is no Rational Soul, nor another "Life after this; but that every Man is but a "Mixture of the four Elements, of which he is "compoſed during his Life, joined together and ani- "mated by that ſtrict Union, which keeps them "connected together, and which, upon his Death, "is diſſolved and diſperſed among the four ſimple "Elements, and conſequently returned to God, out "of which it was created; and the ſame, with re- "gard to every thing elſe in the Earth, and in the "Heavens: in a Word, that the four Elements are "the whole of every Thing, even God and Man; "and conſequently the elements are Eternal, and "the World, with all it's Viciſſitudes and Changes, "is eternal (2)." Whatever Difference there may be between this Opinion, and the Syſtem of Spinoza, the Foundation of them both is the ſame: It is maintained on both Sides, that the Univerſe is but one ſingle Subſtance, and that all That, which we call Generation and Corruption, Life and Death, is nothing more than a certain Combination, or Diſſolution of Modes. Elmacin calls the Metempſychoſis, which Abumuſlimus believed, the Metempſychoſis of Reſolution.

(1) Beſpier's Remarks on Ricaut's Preſent State of the Ottoman Empire.

(2) Peter de la Valle, T. 3. P. 39. cited by Beſpier himſelf.

[B] Erpenius did not underſtand the Words of Elmacin upon this Subject.] He makes him ſay, that Abumuſlimus follow'd the Sect of the Defending Succeſſion, profitebatur ſectam ſucceſſionis deſcendentis (3). He ought to have ſaid, that he follow'd the Sect, which taught the Metempſychoſis of Reſolution, profitebatur ſectam eorum qui credunt Metempſychoſim reſolutionis. It is thus, the Sieur Beſpier cenſures and corrects the Tranſlation of Erpenius in this Place (4).

(3) Elmacin. Hiſt. Jarac. B. 2. c. 3. p. 100.

(4) Beſpier's Remarks on Ricaut's State of the Ottoman Empire, p. 665.

ACACIA or ACAKIA (MARTIN). See AKAKIA.

ACAMAS, Son of Theſeus (a), follow'd the reſt of the Grecian Princes to the Siege of Troy. He was deputed with Diomede, on an Embaſſy to the Trojans, to demand back Helen. This Embaſſy was fruitleſs, as to the principal Deſign of it; but it turn'd to the Advantage of Acamas, in what is call'd Good Fortune in Affairs of Gallantry. Laodicea, Daughter of Priam, fell in Love with him, and having in vain ſummoned to her Aſſiſtance Honour and Modeſty, was obliged to open her Mind to Philobia, Wife of Perſeus, and to beg her Aſſiſtance in an Affair of the utmoſt Importance (b). Philobia, touch'd with Compaſſion for her, entreated her Huſband to procure Laodicea the Completion of her Deſires. Perſeus took pity on the poor Lady; and, being beſides deſirous to oblige his Wife, he made a Friendſhip with Acamas, and obtain'd a Viſit, from him in the City, of which he was Governor (c). Laodicea did not fail to be preſent there, attended by ſome Trojan Ladies. There was a magnificent Feaſt; after which Perſeus put her to bed with Acamas, pretending to him, that ſhe was one of the King's Concubines. Laodicea return'd home very well ſatisfy'd; and, at the end of nine Months, was deliver'd of a Boy, which was brought up by Æthra, Aunt of Acamas by the Mother's Side [A]. This Child was call'd Munitus [B]: we ſhall ſee in the Remarks what became of him (d).

(a) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 5. & lib. 10. p. 325, & 343.

(b) Παρακαλεῖν τε αὐτὴν ὅσον οὐκ ἤδη δεομένην ἀρήγειν αὐτῇ. Parthenii Erotic. c. 10.

(c) It was called Dardanus.

(d) Taken from Hegeſipp. de Rebus Mieſ. lib. 1. cited by Parthen. in his Erot. c. 16. and from Tzetzes upon Lycophron.

Acamas

(1) Scholiaſt. Euripid. in Hercul. See Pauſanias, l. 10. p. 342.

(2) Quintus Calaber, lib. 13. v. 496. See Pauſanias, ib.

(3) Tzetzes in Lycoph. cited by Meziriac, on Ovid's Epiſtles, p. 143.

[A] Was brought up by Æthra, Aunt of Acamas by the Mother's ſide.] You muſt know that Caſtor and Pollux, making an inroad into Attica to recover their Siſter Helena, took the City of Aphidna, where that fair one was ſent by her Raviſher. Æthra, the Mother of Theſeus, had been ſent there at the ſame time. They took her Priſoner, and brought her to Lacedemon. She was there when Paris carried Helen away, and was ſent from thence to Troy. Demophoon and Acamas follow'd the (1) other Greeks, chiefly to deliver the good old Lady, either by paying her Ranſom, or by taking the City. They met her in the Streets, during the ranſacking (2) of Troy; and having underſtood who ſhe was, they mutually embrac'd each other. It was then that Æthra (3) made Munitus known to his Father Acamas. She had educated him; for Laodicea had truſted her with the Secret of what had paſs'd in Perſeus's Houſe. John Cornarius made a groſs Miſtake in his Tranſlation of Parthenius: He render'd thoſe Words, ὃν ὑπ' αἴθρᾳ τραφέντα μετὰ Τροίας ἅλωσιν διενόμισεν ἐπ' οἴκου, by theſe, quem ſub dio enutritum poſt Trojæ captivitatem tranſportavit in domum. i. e. whom, having been brought up in the open Air, he carry'd home, after the taking of Troy. He ought to have ſaid, having been educated by Æthra. We ſhall cite Plutarch preſently, who ſays, That ſome have called all this a fabulous Story.

[B] This Child was call'd Munitus.] He follow'd his Father into Thrace, where he died by the bite (4) of a Serpent. Plutarch calls him Munychus, Μυνυχος, in the Life of Theſeus; but, ſince Parthenius, Lycophron, and Tzetzes call him conſtantly Munitus, Μυνιτος;

(4) Parthen. in Erotics, c. 16.

Digitized by Google

Acamas was one of the Heroes, who were hid in the wooden Horſe (e). He had, afterwards, an Adventure in Thrace, ſomething like the former, but attended with very unfortunate Conſequences. Phillis, the King's Daughter, fell in love with him: He immediately offer'd her Marriage: the Fair was promis'd to him, with the Dowry of a Crown. He demanded permiſſion to return home. Phillis oppos'd it with the utmoſt Intreaties; but obtaining only an Oath from him, that he would return, ſhe preſented him with a Box, conſecrated, as ſhe ſaid, to Rhea, Mother of the Gods. She recommended to him not to open it, till he ſhould have no Hopes of ſeeing Thrace again. Acamas landed in the Iſle of Cyprus [C], and reſolv'd to ſettle there. Phillis, upon this, hang'd herſelf, uttering imprecations againſt the Traytor. He open'd the Box, and found himſelf ſeiz'd with ſtrange Viſions. He mounted his Horſe, and ſpurr'd him ſo unluckily, and in ſo violent a manner, that they were both thrown to the Ground, and Acamas accidentally fell upon his own Sword. Tzetzes relates this Story (f); but he has confounded Acamas with Demophoon (g); for, it is with the regard to the latter, that all Authors relate the Fate of the unhappy Phillis. See her paſſionate Letter to Demophoon, invented by Ovid. It appears by this Epiſtle, that their Marriage had been conſummated:

> Turpiter hoſpitium lecto cumulaſſe jugali
> Pœnitet, & lateri conſeruiſſe latus (h).
>
> But, to admit thee looſely to my Breaſt
> Is Treaſon, fatal to my preſent Reſt. Mr E. LLOYD.

We muſt not forget, that one of the Tribes of Athens was named Acamantis [D] from the Name of our Acamas (i), and that by the Appointment of the Oracle. Stephen of Byzantium makes him the Founder of a City in Phrygia the Greater [E], and makes him

(e) Tryphiodorus de Excid. Troiæ. See alſo Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 21.

(f) Upon Lycophron.

(g) Who was likewiſe the Son of Theſeus.

(h) Ovid. Phyll. ver. 57.

(i) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 5. & lib. 10. p. 322. See likewiſe Suidas, and Stephen of Byzant.

υἱτος; it muſt be believ'd that Plutarch's Text has been alter'd in that Place, or that the Author did not well remember the true Pronounciation of that Word. Does it not happen daily, that when we cite any Author by Memory, we confound ſometimes one or more Syllables in his Name? I ſhall conſider this farther in the Article EPHORUS. I do not know whether it ought not to be imputed to forgetfulneſs what Plutarch ſays, that it was Demophoon who lay with Laodice. But perhaps he had read it in ſome Author unknown to us. Tzetzes too might have found in ſome of theſe Authors, which are loſt, that the Adventures of Phyllis related to Acamas: However it be, neither of the Brothers have been Looſers, at the Foot of the Account; for if, on one Side, Plutarch takes from Acamas the delightful Moments he paſs'd with Laodice, and beſtows them on Demophoon; Tzetzes, on the other Side, deprives the latter of the agreeable Nights he paſs'd with Phyllis, and gives them to Acamas. But, to be ſerious; if Meurſius had well weigh'd the Paſſages, where the Son of Laodice is called Munitus, he would not have made (5) uſe of Plutarch's Words, to prove that the Harbour of Munychia had not taken it's Name from Munychus the Son of Pantacles, as is commonly ſaid, but from Munychus the Son of Demophoon and Laodice. Plutarch's Words are (6), Οἱ δὲ καὶ τοῦτο τὸ ἔπος διαβάλλουσι, καὶ τὴν περὶ Μουνυχίᾳ μυθολογίαν, ὃν ἐκ Δημοφῶντος Λαοδίκης κρύφα τεκούσης ἐν Ἰλίῳ συνεκθρέψαι τὴν Αἴθραν λέγουσι. i. e. Some reject this Verſe, ('tis that where Homer ſays that Helen brought Æthra with her to Troy) as alſo the Story of Munychus, who, being the ſpurious Child of Demophoon and Laodice, is ſaid to have been brought up at Troy, under the Care of Æthra.

(5) Meurſius, lib. 1. c. 14. lect. Attic. cited by Meziriac. who repeats the ſame Miſtake in his Comment. on Ovid's Epiſtles, p. 144.

(6) Plut. in Theſeo, ſub fin. p. 16.

[C] Acamas landed in the Iſle of Cyprus.] There was a Mountain in that Iſland, which was called Acamas, from the Son of Theſeus. Heſychius atteſts it, and remarks, That the River Bocarus, which paſt by Salamina, had it's Source in that Mountain. Geographers (7) ſpeak of Cape Acamas, very famous in the ſame Iſland; and ſome obſerve alſo (8), that the whole Iſland was formerly called Acamas. But no body that I know of among the Antients ſaid, That Cape Acamas borrow'd it's Name from a City, which Acchamas, the Athenian, a Friend of the Trojans, that fled from thence, built on that Cape, and to which he gave his Name. That City, and the Athenian Acamas's Friendſhip for the Trojans, are both alike chimerical. I would fain know where Brother Stephen (9) of Luſignan, Reader in Divinity to the Dominicans of Paris, in the XVIth Century, met with this extraordinary Piece of Learning.

(7) Strabo, lib. 14. Ptol. lib. 5. c. 14. Plin. lib. 5. c. 31.

(8) Philonides apud Plin. ibid. Stephanus on the Word Κυπρος.

(9) Hiſtory of Cyprus, p. 4. & 29.

[D] One of the Tribes of Athens was nam'd Acamantis.] Mr Moreri calls that Tribe Acamante; but I meet with no French Author, but what ſays la Tribe Acamantide. I ſhall here take notice of another of this Writer's Miſtakes, to ſave myſelf the trouble in another Place (10). He ſays, That Homer, in the 2d Book of the Iliad, mentions one Acamas, a Thracian Prince, who came to the Aſſiſtance of Priam; and of another Acamas, the Son of Antenor, whoſe admirable Modeſty cauſed him to be placed in the Number of the Gods. It is true, that Homer, in the forecited Book, ſpeaks of that Thracian Prince; and ſays (11), elſewhere, that Ajax kill'd him. It is true likewiſe, that he ſpeaks of Archilocus, and Acamas, Sons of Antenor; and deſcribes them as very expert in all kind of Combats, μάχης εὖ εἰδότε πάσης; but he ſays nothing of the Deification of the chaſt Acamas. Mr Moreri wants but little of being the Author of this Story; for, ſtrictly ſpeaking, he would be ſo, if Charles Stephens had not ſupply'd him with this Foundation to build on; "Fuit & alius ejuſdem nominis filius Antenoris, "qui tempore belli Trojani cœlebs erat, & diis ſimilis "habebatur. i. e. there was alſo another of the ſame "Name, the Son of Antenor, who, in the time of the "Trojan War, was a Bachelor, and reverenc'd as a "Godlike Perſon." As this Author cites no Writer in proof of this Fact, it was not in my Power to enquire after this pretended Celebacy; and, if I durſt freely conjecture, I would ſay that the Printers have put cœlebs for celebris, in ſome Book that Charles Stephens copied: Not that I deny, but that Homer obſerv'd ſometimes (12) that ſuch and ſuch Heroes were kill'd before they were married. But ſuppoſe this Trojan was unmarried; and that he is celebrated for being like the Gods, muſt it be concluded from thence, that his Chaſtity was ſo extraordinary, as to procure him divine Honours? If all thoſe on whom Homer beſtows the Epithet θεοείκελος, God-like, had been Deified, what would have become of poor Atlas's Shoulders?

> —— contentaque Sydera paucis
> Numinibus miſerum urgebant Atlanta minori
> Pondere (13).
>
> 'Ere Gods grew numerous, and the heavenly Crowd,
> Preſt wretched Atlas with a lighter Load.
> CREECH.

(10) The other Faults that were mark'd in the firſt Edition are ſuppreſs'd here. As theſe Faults occur in moſt of the Editions of Moreri, it is thought proper to ſet them down in this place. They are as follow: 1ſt, he cites the 1ſt Book of Strabo, in relation to the Promontory Acamas, in the Iſle of Cyprus: whereas he ought to have cited the 14th. 2dly, He calls Acamante the Son of Theſeus. 3dly, He ſays, that Suidas mentions one Acamantides, a Philoſopher of Eliopolis; whereas Suidas calls him Acamantius.

(11) Iliad. lib. 6. v. 7.

(12) See Iliad, lib. 4. v. 474.

(13) Juven. Sat. 13. v. 47.

[E] Stephen of Byzantium makes him the Founder of a City in Phrygia the Greater.] He calls it Acamantium. Geographers ſay nothing at all of it. The Abbreviator of that Writer, or the Copyiſts, have maim'd

him war with the Solymeans. I will not pretend to determine, whether Phædra or Ariadne [F] was the Mother of Acamas, upon which point Mr Moreri behaves as uſual.

maim'd that Paſſage in ſuch a Manner, that no Senſe can be made of it, without ſupplying ſomething. But ſupply it as you pleaſe, you will be never the better inform'd by it of the War between Acamas, and the Solymæans.

[F] Whether Phædra or Ariadne.] I find two learned Men of a contrary Opinion in this Queſtion. Meziriac (14) affirms that Acamas was the Son of Phædra; but all the Proof he ſeems to give for it, is, That Demophoon the Brother of Acamas was the Son of Phædra; which he proves by the Letter that Sabinus writ to Phillis under the Name of Demophoon. Mr de Valois (15) pretends, That Ariadne was the Mother of Acamas, and cites the Scholiaſt (16) of Homer for it; he adds, that Demophoon was the Brother of Acamas, according to that Scholiaſt; and that Euripides (17) confirms it. Neither of thoſe Gentlemen remark'd, That it ſignifies nothing to the Queſtion, whether Acamas and Demophoon were Brothers; for they might be ſo, altho' the one was the Son of Ariadne, and the other of Phædra.

(14) On Ovid's Epiſt. p. 137.

(15) Henr. Valeſius in Harpocrat. P. 4, & 5.

(16) In Odyſſ. O.

(17) In Ione.

ACARNANIA, a Country ſituated on the Ionian Sea, between Ætolia and the Gulph of Ambracia. It is ſaid that the Taphians and the Teleboans were the firſt Maſters of it; and that Cephalus conquer'd it, after he was eſtabliſh'd in the Lordſhip of the Iſlands near Taphos, by Amphitryon (a). They add (b), That Alcmeon, the Son of Amphiaraus, made himſelf Maſter of it, after the ſecond Theban War; and that he gave it the Name of his Son Acarnan. He had aſſociated himſelf with Diomedes, and they had conquer'd Ætolia, which fell to the ſhare of the latter. Some time after, they were ſummoned to accompany the Expedition to Troy: one of them, viz. Diomedes, went to join the other Greeks, but Alcmeon kept himſelf quiet in Acarnania (c). This was of ſervice to the Acarnanians ſeveral Ages after; for they made a great Merit of it at Rome [A], having repreſented there, that, among all the Greeks, their Anceſtors alone did not go to the Siege of Troy. This notable Reaſon was alledg'd by the People of Rome, when they embrac'd their Party againſt Ætolia [B]. So true it is, that, on certain Occaſions, Policy does not refuſe to make uſe of the moſt ridiculous Pretences. The Etolians and the Arcananians kept (d) a long time united, either to repulſe the Macedonians and the other Greeks, or to maintain their Liberty againſt the Roman Arms; but at laſt they were tired, and loſt their Courage. The Year conſiſted of but ſix Months (e) in Acarnania. The Inhabitants of that Country were very laſcivious, if we may believe ſome Dictionaries [C]. It is more

(a) Strabo, lib. 10. p. 317.
(b) Id. ib. p. 318.
(c) Id. ib.
(d) Strabo, lib. 10. p. 317.
(e) Macrobius, Saturn. lib. 1. c. 12. p. 242.

[A] They made a great Merit of it at Rome.] The Hiſtorian Ephorus furniſhed them undeſignedly with an Opportunity of doing this: for, being informed of what he related concerning Alcmeon, they ingeniouſly turn'd it to their own Advantage with the Romans, who pretended that the Founder of Rome deſcended from Æneas. This is Strabo's Conjecture (1): Τούτοις δ' ὡς εἰκὸς τοῖς λόγοις ἐπακολουθήσαντες οἱ Ἀκαρνᾶνες σοφίσασθαι λέγονται Ῥωμαίους, καὶ τὴν αὐτονομίαν παρ' αὐτῶν ἐξανύσασθαι, λέγοντες, ὡς ἡ μετάσχοιεν μόνοι τῆς ἐπὶ τὴς προγόνους τὴς ἐκείνων φρατρίας ὅτε γὰρ ἐν Ἰταλικῇ καταλόγῳ φράζοιντο, ὅτε ἰδίᾳ ὅδε γὰρ ὅλως τόνομα τῦτ' ἐμφέροιτο ἐν τοῖς ἔπεσιν. —— It is probable the Acarnanians, taking the Hint from this Story, artfully prevailed upon the Romans to allow them the free Uſe of their Country Laws; pretending, that they alone were not concerned in the War againſt the Anceſtors of the Romans, as not being mentioned either in the Ætolian Catalogue, or ſeparately, or indeed at all in Homer's Verſes. But this Pretence was groundleſs; for Strabo (2) ſhews by the Catalogue (3) in the ſecond Book of the Iliad, that the Acarnanians ſupply'd their Quota for the Expedition to Troy.

(1) Strabo lib. 10. p. 328.

(2) Id. ib.

(3) Homer deſcribes only their Country, and does not mention it by the Name of Acarnania.

[B] Was alledged by the People of Rome, when they embrac'd their Party againſt Ætolia.] After the Death of Alexander, the Son of Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, Acarnania had every thing to fear from the Ætolians, and did not confide much in that Prince's Widow, who was Guardian of her two Sons; wherefore they implored the Aſſiſtance of the Romans, which was not refuſed them. Word was ſent to the Ætolians, that they ſhould not moleſt a People, who alone had not aſſiſted the Greeks againſt the Trojans (4). "Acarnanes quoque diffiſi Epirotis adverſus Ætolos auxilium Romanorum implorantes, obtinuerunt à Romano ſenatu, ut legati mitterentur, qui denuntiarent Ætolis, præſidia ab urbibus Acarnaniæ deducerent; paterenturque eſſe liberos, qui ſoli quondam adverſus Trojanos, auctores originis ſuæ, auxilia Græcis non miſerint. —— The Acarnanians, diſtruſting the Epirotes, implored the Aſſiſtance of the Romans againſt the Ætolians, and obtained from the Senate an Embaſſy to be ſent to the Ætolians, to demand of them, that they ſhould withdraw their Garriſons from the Cities of Acarnania, and ſuffer a People to enjoy their Liberty, who alone gave the Greeks no Aid againſt the Trojans, from whom the Romans were deſcended." Plutarch reports two as ridiculous Facts as this (5). "Agathocles the Tyrant of Syracuſe —— laught at "thoſe of Corfu, who ask'd him, for what Reaſon "he ravaged their Iſland; Becauſe, ſaid he, your Anceſtors formerly received Ulyſſes. And when "the Inhabitants of the Iſland of Ithaca complained "to him, that his Soldiers took their Sheep: And your King, ſaid he to them, being arrived in our Country, did not only take our Sheep, but alſo put out our Shepherd's Eye." But the following Account is more ridiculous ſtill (6). "Mahomet, the "ſecond of that Name, Emperor of the Turks, in "a Letter to Pope Pius the Second, ſaid, I wonder the Italians ſhould league againſt me, ſeeing "we have our common Original from the Trojans; "and that 'tis my Intereſt, as well as theirs, to revenge the Blood of Hector upon the Greeks, whom "they favonr againſt me." Thus chimerical Evils, forged by the Poets, have ſerved as an Apology for real Evils.

(4) Juſtin. lib. 28. c. 1. See La Mothe Le Vayer Letter 95. Tom. 2. p. 325.

(5) Plutarch de ſera Numinis vindicta.

(6) Montagne's Eſſays, B. 2. c. 36. p. 763.

[C] Very laſcivious, if we may believe ſome Dictionaries.] We ſhall quote Mr Lloyd firſt, "Mollitiei "& laſciviæ notati leguntur (Acarnanes) teſte Luci"ano in Dial. Meretriciis, unde proverbium Porcellus Acarnanius in laſcivos. i. e. The Acarnanians, "as Lucian witneſſes in his Dialogue of Harlots, are branded in Hiſtory with Effeminacy and Wantonneſs, whence that proverbial Character of the Laſcivious, "An Acarnanian Swine." Mr Hofman transferred this whole Paſſage into his Dictionary; and Moreri's Account is this: "The Acarnanians were ac"cuſed of being too laſcivious and too finical. This "was the cauſe of that reproachful Proverb of the "Antients, Porcellus Acarnanius." You may meet with the ſame Account in Pinedo's Notes (7) on Stephen of Byzantium. I have conſulted the Dialogue of the Courtezans of Lucian, and do not find there that the Inhabitants of Acarnania paſt for voluptuous and effeminate. It is true, the Courtezan Muſarium, in anſwer to her Mother, who reproached her for making no Advantage of the Favours ſhe granted Chereas, and who thought it very ſtrange that ſhe ſhould not hearken to a Peaſant of Acarnania,

(7) Theo. de Pinedo in Steph. Byzant. p. 50.

Digitized by Google

more certain that Modeſty was not to be diſcovered there in the Womens Garments [D]. It is not true that Cicero ſpeaks of a City that was called Acarnania [E]. I have obſerved, that the Inhabitants of this Country, kept themſelves a long time united with the Etolians; but I muſt add, that there were frequent Wars between theſe two People; and that the Etolians greatly haraſs'd the former. Polybius tells us this, when he relates, that the Acarnanians, upon the firſt Application made to them by the King of Macedon, declar'd War againſt the Etolians (f). He commends them for obſerving a generous Policy, in preferring the Honourable to the Profitable, and that in the moſt preſſing Dangers (g).

(f) Polyb. Hiſt. lib. 4. c. 30.

(g) Id. ib.

(8) Ἀεί μοι φαί, Χαιρίας καὶ χοιρίσκος ἀκαρνάνιος. Lucian. Dialog. Meretric. p. 723. Tom. 2.

(9) In mollem & amabilem atque in delicias habitum dicebatur. i. e. It was apply'd to thoſe, who were effeminate, amiable, and Favourites. Eraſm. chil. 2. cent. 3. n. 69. p. 445.

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Varro de Re ruſtica, lib. 2. c. 4.

(12) Lucian. Dial. Meretric. p. 721, 722.

(13) Ὥσπερ δὲ καπηλεῖς τὰ δαλαφάκια τρέφουσι. As Cooks bred up Pigs. Athen. lib. 14. p. 636.

(14) Philoſtrat. in vita Apollonii, lib. 4. c. 7.

nia, ſaid to her, What! ſhould I quit Chereas to give myſelf to that Blockhead, who ſmells as rank as an old He-Goat? (8) No! Chereas for my Money: He is ſmooth, as they ſay, and a Hog of Acarnania. Eraſmus ſuppoſes, that by an Acarnanian Hog is meant (9) an effeminate Favourite; and that it was an Alluſion to the Comedy of Ariſtophanes, where a Hog is the Symbol of the Inſtruments of venereal Pleaſures (10). Alluſum, opinor ad porcellum quem inducit Ariſtophanes ἐν Ἀχαρνεῦσιν ſymbolum eorum membrorum quibus obſcœnæ voluptates peraguntur. I believe the concealed Meaning of Muſarium's Anſwer is not underſtood; for my own Part, I own I do not comprehend it; for which Reaſon I ſhall not criticize upon thoſe who aſſert that the Inhabitants of Acarnania were reputed laſcivious. If it were true, I wonder Authors ſhould make no mention of it. Laſtly, Eraſmus is not miſtaken about the figurative Signification of the Word χοίρισκος. The Latins had adopted that Figure. Varro ſays (11), "Noſtræ mulieres, maxime nutrices, naturam, qua "fœminæ ſunt, in virginibus appellant porcum & "Græcè χοῖρον. —— Our Women, eſpecially Nurſes, "call the Diſtinction of Sex in Virgins, Porcus, "in Greek χοῖρος." See the Italian Etymologies of Mr Menage, at the Word Potta. I am not ſatisfied with this Conjecture, and propoſe it only to try if more ſagacious Perſons than myſelf cannot account for it better. Chereas (12) always paid his Courtezan with Hopes: it was the only Coin he had. As ſoon as my Father is dead, ſaid he, and I am in poſſeſſion of my Patrimony, you ſhall diſpoſe of all my Eſtate, and I will marry you. Muſarium, being allured by theſe Promiſes, gave him the Uſe of herſelf, and her Purſe. Had ſhe not Reaſon to ſay to her Mother, Here is a Gallant that I can neither fleece nor ſhear! but I feed an Hog of Acarnania; the Profit of which will come all at once. It is indeed the Property of thoſe Animals: nothing is got by feeding them, 'till after all the neceſſary Expences have been laid out in fattening them; but at laſt they make amends with Uſury. Perhaps Acarnania was as Weſtphalia is at this time, a plentiful Country for Hogs: and from thence it was that the Cooks (13) of the great Cities of Greece ſent for Hogs to fatten them; which may be the Reaſon why the Courtezan made uſe of the Epithete ἀκαρνάνιος.

[D] That Modeſty was not to be diſcovered there in the Womens Garments.] The Manner in which Apollonius cenſures the Athenian Ladies, informs us of this; "From whence have you the Faſhion, ſays "he to them (14), of thoſe pompous Garments of "Purple, of Carnation, of dried Roſes, of Fillemot, "Yellow, Green, and ſuch like, wherewith you "dreſs yourſelves like a Meadow in the Month of "May? For it was never ſeen that the Women of "Acarnania ever prankt themſelves up in that "Manner." This is according to the French Tranſlator *. The Latin (15) Tranſlator had ſaid, "Coc- "cineæ atque etiam purpureæ croceæque veſtes unde "à vobis ſumptæ? Cum neque Acarnanides mulie- "res ita exornentur." It appears plainly that Apollonius would not have argued in this Manner, if the Women of Acarnania had not the Repute of dreſſing themſelves in an immodeſt Manner. This ſeems to favour the Dictionaries, which aſſure us that the Acarnanians were defam'd as laſcivious Perſons; nevertheleſs the Conſequence would be ſomewhat ſtrained. Thoſe Authors want a more preciſe Authority. Artus Thomas quite miſtook the meaning of Apollonius's Words, which he undertook to comment on. He ſays (16), "The Acarnanians were formerly very expert "in Chariot-Races, according to the Report of Pau- "ſanias in the ſixth and laſt Book of his Eliacks, "having formerly been held for wiſe People, and "very great Politicians, for having ſo well ordered "their State and Commonwealth, that ſome ſay "Ariſtotle compoſed an hundred and fifty Books "only on the Subject of the Laws and Govern- "ment of that Nation: But the Books are loſt with "their Policy. This is the Reaſon why Philoſtra- "tus ſpeaks here of their Wives." Oh! —— the wretched Commentary! the Senſe here is quite the Reverſe of the Text.

* Vigenere.

(15) Alemannus Rhinucinus, p. 167.

(16) Artus Thomas, Lord of Embry, his Annotations on the Life of Apollonius, Book iv. ch. 7. p. 800. of Vol. 1.

[E] It is not true that Cicero ſpeaks of a City that was called Acarnania.] Mr Moreri however aſſerts it, and adds, It is in Sicily, and famous for a Temple dedicated to Jupiter. He cites Cicero, Orat. in Verrem, and Servius in lib 5. Æneid. Mr Hofman goes much farther, for he notes two Circumſtances, the one, that that City was near Syracuſe; the other, that it was burnt by the Goths. He had read all this in Charles Stephens. The Truth is, Cicero does not ſpeak of Acarnania, but of Acradina, one of the four Parts of Syracuſe (17). "Ea tanta eſt urbs ut "ex quatuor urbibus maximis conſtare dicatur, qua- "rum una, &c. —— altera autem eſt urbs Syra- "cuſis cui nomen Acradina eſt: In qua forum maxi- "mum, pulcherrimæ porticus, ornatiſſimum pryta- "neum, ampliſſima eſt curia, templumque egregium "Jovis Olympii. —— The City is ſo ſpacious, that "it is ſaid to conſiſt of four large Towns, one of "which, &c. —— Another Part of Syracuſe is cal- "led Acradina, in which is a very large Forum, moſt "beautiful Porticos, a ſplendid Prytaneum, a mag- "nificent Court, and a fine Temple of Jupiter Olym- "pius." Servius, cited by Moreri, ſays only (18), that Acarnania is a Part of Epirus, and not a ſmall Country of Egypt, as Mr Hofman will have it (19).

(17) Cicero in Verrem, Orat. 6. fol. 77. verſo.

(18) Servius in Æneid. lib. 5. v. 298.

(19) Item Regiuncula Ægypti. Servius in Æneid. lib. c. Hofman on the Word Acarnania.

ACCARISI (Francis) a Civilian, born at Ancona, went thro' his Studies at Sienna, where Bargalio and Benevolento gain'd a conſiderable Reputation in the Science of the Law. He had a great Friendſhip for them both; but much more for the firſt, than the other. The Reaſons for this difference were natural; Bargalio's Cloſet was always open to him; (a) beſides, he had praiſed him very much in a Speech which is printed, and which contains the Elogies of the Family of the Accariſis, and on his Death-Bed had intruſted him with the Care of publiſhing his fine Diſputation de Dolo. The firſt Public Employ of our Accariſi was to explain the Inſtitutes at Sienna, which he did during ſix Years. Afterward they committed the Explication of the Pandects to him; and becauſe many Ultramontanes went to ſtudy at Sienna, the Great Duke Ferdinand I. determin'd to have a Profeſſor there, who ſhould explain the Civil Law in the ſame manner as Cujacius had explain'd it. Accariſi was choſen for that Office, and acquitted himſelf worthily of it; after which he was promoted to that of Ordinary Profeſſor in Law, vacant by the Death of Bargalio, and fill'd that Place honourably for twenty Years. His Reputation was ſpread abroad: All the Univerſities of Italy deſir'd to have him, and offer'd him very advantageous Conditions. He reſiſted

(a) Ab illo factus fuerat omnium ſuorum ſtudiorum particeps. i. e. He partook of All his Studies. N. c. Erythræus, Pinacoth. 2. cap. 25.

Digitized by Google

sisted these Temptations a long time, in consideration of the Sweetness he enjoy'd at Sienna: But the Attack was renew'd so often, that he was at last overcome, and prevailed upon not to persist in the Resolution he had taken to die in his first Post: A Resolution scarce to be parallell'd among Persons of his Character [A]. It was Rainucio Farnese, Duke of Parma, who made him yield to the Temptation, by adding to the Promises he made him, and to the Glory of succeeding Sforza Oddus, and Philip Marini, the Title of His Counsellor, wherewith he honour'd him. The Great Duke would not suffer Accarisi to continue long in the Service of another Prince, but made him soon return [B], by giving him the first Professorship in Law in the University of Pisa; so that Accarisi left the Duke of Parma, and went to exercise the Employ which was given him at Pisa, in which he continu'd 'till his Death, which happen'd four Years after; he died, at Sienna, Oct. 4. 1622. The Author (b), who furnishes me with this Article, and who is the only Person cited by Mr Moreri, does not say that Accarisi writ divers Treatises of Law, nor that Rainucio Farnese endeavour'd in vain to draw him to him. They are two Mistakes of Mr Moreri, who beside did not understand the meaning of IV. Non. Octobris, which he interprets to mean the 26th of September. We take notice of another Mistake of his in the second Remark.

(b) Janus Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. 2. c. 25.

[A] Scarce to be parallell'd among Persons of his Character.] One of the most common Faults among Professors is their not fixing in the Universities where they have their first Employ. Instead of looking upon that first Vocation as a kind of Marriage, they consider it only as a transient Engagement, as an Interim, and a resting Place: They only stay there in expectation of something better: They have no more Affection for the second Call than for the first, and are not for pitching their Tents for the last time, 'till they have attained the best Professorships. It has been said of some Persons, that they make the Tour of all Religions in a little time; others run through all the Universities as soon as they can. Some of those who do not remove, take care to be well paid for their Constancy. It costs those, who desire to retain them, a considerable Addition of Wages. Tacitus, who doubtless comprehended many Defects under the Phrase Professoria lingua (1), would not have excluded him, of whom I speak, if he had known him. Churchmen are not exempt from this little Infirmity; we know the Complaints of rigid Moralists against certain Prelates, who, beginning with a Bishoprick of a mean Revenue, rise by Degrees to the most eminent Metropolitan Cities. This is a Spiritual Polygamy, or something worse: For according to the Sense of the antient Canons (2), a spiritual Marriage is contracted between the Pastor and his Flock. The Christian Societies, which belong to the smaller Benefices, are sensible of the Effects of this Humour.

(1) Annal. lib. 13. cap. 24.

(2) Ne Virginalis paupercula Societate contempta ditioris a Julteræ quærat amplexus. Hieron. Ep. ad Oceanum, Tom. 2. p. 744. See the Author of a French Book, entitled, Advice to the Jesuits of Aix on an Interlude, p. 37.

Parcius ista viris tamen objicienda memento (3). (3) Virgil. Eccl. 3. ver. 7.

See the Remark [H] of the Article ALCIATUS (ANDREW).

[B] But made him soon return.] This was the Success of all that Sollicitation and Bribery, which the Duke of Parma made use of to procure Accarisi. I confess he gained him at last, but he was soon taken from him again by the same Means he had made use of to take him from others. Yet Mr Moreri says, that Accarisi did not go to the Duke, and that he would have done too much Violence to his Inclination, if he had left his Country, where he was detained by the Favours of Ferdinand, Great Duke of Tuscany. A new Fault, which cannot be excused! for we read in Nicius Erythræus, that when Accarisi went to serve the Duke of Parma, it was at least twenty Years since the new Office, which the Great Duke Ferdinand had caused to be created in the College of Sienna, had been bestowed upon him. We read also in the same Author, that Accarisi was Professor but four Years at Pisa, whither he was called a little after his Engagement at Parma. But he died in 1622. four Years after he had accepted the Professorship of Pisa; so that the Duke of Parma must have compassed his Design about the Year 1616. at which time there was no Great Duke of the Name of Ferdinand. Mr Moreri says himself, in his Article MEDICIS, that Ferdinand I. died in 1609, and that Ferdinand II. succeeded him in 1621.

ACCARISI (JAMES) a Native of Boulogne, and Doctor of Divinity. I have but two Particulars to add to Mr Moreri's Account of him. The first is, that the Speeches, which he has published, are Compositions, recited by himself at Rome, Cologne, Mantua, and other Places: The other, that he was four Years Professor of Rhetoric at Mantua, in the University founded by Duke Ferdinand, Ann. 1627 (a).

(a) Aub. Miræus, Script. Eccl. Sæc. 17. p. 251.

ACCIAIOLI (DONATO) a Person celebrated as well for his Learning, as the great Offices he discharged at Florence, the Place of his Nativity. He flourished in the XVth Century. This great Man would have been more eminent for Learning, if the public Affairs had permitted him to dedicate more Time to his Studies, and if the Tenderness of his Constitution had not shortened his Life (a). There can be no greater Proof of his Honesty and Disinterestedness than the small Patrimony he left to his Children. His Daughters were portioned for Marriage at the public Expence (b), as were formerly those of Aristides; which demonstrates, at the same time, how well satisfied the Public was with the Services he had done it. He was sent into France to demand Succours against Pope Sixtus IV. who extreamly harassed the Florentines; but he died, before he had passed the Alps (c), at Milan, in the Month of August, 1473, in the 39th Year of his Age (d). His Body was carried to Florence, and interr'd in the Church of the Carthusians (e). The Inscription on his Tomb is in the Style and Manner of Politian. His Works are principally A Translation of some of the Lives of Plutarch [A] into Latin; The Life of (a) Jovius in Elog. ch. 16.

(b) Volaterr. B. 21.

(c) Jovius in Eleg. c. 86.

(d) Varillas Anecd. de Florence. p. 169.

(e) Jovius in Eleg. ch. 16.

(1) Vossius de Hist. Lat. p. 624.
(2) Konig. Bibl. Vet. & Nov. p. 4.

[A] Some of the Lives of Plutarch.] He should be the Author of Four, if Vossius (1) and Konig (2) are to be credited; namely, those of Hannibal, Scipio, Alcibiades, and Demetrius: but as it does not appear, that Plutarch compos'd either the Life of Scipio, or that of Hannibal; it is more probable, that Acciaiolus was originally of Charlemagne; and Commentaries on Ariſtotle's Ethics and Politics. This Life of Charlemagne, being ſometimes join'd with thoſe of Plutarch, has led George Wicelius into a ſurprizing Blunder. He ſpeaks of this Life as if it were the Work of Plutarch himſelf (f); ſo wholly taken up was he in the Learning of the Times. Some have accus'd Acciaioli of Plagiariſm [B] in his Commentary on Ariſtotle's Ethics: others, on the contrary, are extravagant in the Praiſes [C] they beſtow on him for this Work. He was highly eſteem'd by the Cardinal de Pavia, as appears by the Letters he receiv'd from him, which are to be found in a printed Collection of the Cardinal's Letters.

Digitized by Google

(f) Hagiolog. fol. 178. apud Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat. p. 624.

The Reader will find below a conſiderable Supplement to this Article [D].

nally the Author of the Lives of theſe two famous Commanders (3), than that he tranſlated them from the Greek. Voſſius does not ſeem to be aware of this. He was plainly miſled by the Abridger of the Bibliotheque of Geſner. Father Ménétrier is poſitive, that Acciaioli impos'd upon the Public, in pretending to have tranſlated the Life of Hannibal, from the Greek (4).

(3) Poccantius de Script. Flor. p. 51. ſays expreſsly, dictavit proprio Marte vitam Annibalis & Scipionis. He had no Aſſiſtance in writing the Lives of Hannibal and Scipio.

(4) See the Journal des Savans, Sept. 2. 1697. p. 654.

[B] Some have accus'd Acciaioli of Plagiariſm.] It is aſſerted, that he borrow'd his Commentary on Ariſtotle's Ethics, without acknowledging the Debt. "Scripta, "quæ ſub nomine Acciaioli ea de re circumferuntur, "non Acciaioli commentaria, ſed Argyropyli Præ"lectiones Florentiæ habitæ, & ab Acciaiolo deſcriptæ "editæque, à pleriſque exiſtimantur. —— It is gene"rally thought, that the Commentary, which is handed "about under the Name of Acciaiolus, is not his own, "but tranſcrib'd, and publiſh'd, from the Lectures of "Argyropylus, deliver'd at Florence." After this manner Simon Simonius ſpeaks of it in his Dedication to a Book, printed in 1567 (5). Gabriel Naudé renew'd this Accuſation a long time after in very poſitive Terms. "Argyropylus Byzantinus, ſays he (6), cu"jus Prælectiones, Florentinæ habitas, non abſque "manifeſto plagii crimine, ſibi poſtea vendicavit Do"natus Acciaiolus. —— Argyropylus, the Byzan"tine, whoſe Lectures, read at Florence, Donatus "Acciaiolus claim'd to himſelf, not without the ma"niſeſt Guilt of Plagiariſm." Mr Moreri has confounded the Ethics of Ariſtotle, with the Commentary upon them. "It has even been thought, ſays "he, that the Ethics of Ariſtotle, addreſs'd to Nicho"machus, which Donatus has publiſh'd, were in the "Stile and Manner of the ſame Argyropylus; though "Volaterran maintains the contrary." Obſerve this Author's Skill in tranſlating the eaſieſt Latin, I mean the Latin of Voſſius. He had read theſe Words in Voſſius; "Imo, Commentaria illa in Nicomachia Ariſto"telis multi arbitrantur non ipſius eſſe Acciaioli, ſed "Prælectiones eſſe Argyropyli, ab Acciaiolo autem "deſcriptas, inque lucem emiſſas. Nihil tamen de eo "Volaterranus (7). —— Nay, many are of Opinion, "that Acciaiolus himſelf was not the Author of the "Commentary on Ariſtotle's Piece to Nicomachus, but "that he compos'd, and publiſh'd it from the Lectures "of Argyropylus. Yet Volaterran mentions no ſuch "thing." This is doubly to confound Things: it is to take the Commentary for the Text; and to conſtrue the Silence of an Author into a formal confutation of a Charge. The learned Conringius has juſtify'd Donatus againſt Naudé; not by ſhewing, that Argyropylus did not furniſh Materials for the Work, but by alledging, that Acciaiolus acknowledged to whom he was indebted (8). Can we deſire a more authentic Confeſſion, than the following? "Johannes Argyrophylus Byzantinus, cum Florentiæ "inter cætera Philoſophiæ opera Ariſtotelis libros, "qui ad Nicomachum de moribus ſcribuntur, mirificè "eſſet complexus, eos tuo nomine Latinos fecit, pu"blicèque deinde explicuit, non ſine magna audien"tium approbatione: habent enim libri duo ſummam "dignitatem, admirabilemque doctrinam, ordinem "vero prope ſingularem. Itaque ſi accurata & ex"quiſita quædam explanatio accedat, magnum audi"toribus afferent fructum; quod ego jam inde ab "initio mecum conſiderans una cum pleriſque aliis, "qui hujus quoque præceptoris diſciplinam ſequun"tur, in iis audiendis præcipuam curam diligentiam"que adhibui. —— Poſteà vero cum viderim hos "libros à te, & ab iis omnibus, qui ingenio vehe"menter excellunt, libentiſſimè legi, ulterius progre"diendum ratus, EXPOSITIONEM HUJUS DOCTORIS, "accommodatam præcipuè menti Philoſophi, literis "mandare conſtitui, ut ii, qui adeſſe non potuerunt—— "hæc, quæ nos EX EJUS ORE ACCEPIMUS, perci"pere & ipſi pro arbitrio poſſent; quare traductionem "illius ac ordinem explicandi pluribus verbis ſecuti "ſumus, lata interdum & diffuſa oratione utentes, ut "explanatio aperta magis magiſque omnibus eſſet "communis (9). —— John Argyrophylus, the By"zantine, having, at Florence, among other Philo"ſophical Works, finely introduc'd the moral Writings "of Ariſtotle, addreſs'd to Nicomachus, tranſlated "them, under your patronage, into Latin, and after"wards read public Lectures upon them, not without "great Applauſe from his Hearers; for the Subject of "theſe two Books is very noble, the Inſtruction admi"rable, and the Method almoſt peculiar to them. "And therefore the Hearers muſt receive great Bene"fit from them, when accurately and judiciouſly ex"plain'd; which Conſideration, from the beginning, "induc'd me, and ſeveral other Pupils of the ſame "Maſter, to attend his Lectures, with the utmoſt "Care and Diligence. —— But afterwards, when I "perceiv'd that thoſe Books became in great Requeſt "with you, and all Men of exalted Senſe, I determi"ded to publiſh this great Maſter's EXPLANATION, "accommodated chiefly to the taſte of Philoſophers; "that they, who could not attend his Lectures, might, "whenever they thought fit, underſtand what WE "RECEIV'D FROM HIS OWN MOUTH. I have "therefore given his Tranſlation, and method of Ex"planation at large, making uſe frequently of a copi"ous and diffuſe Style, to render his Interpretation the "more intelligible and familiar." If Voſſius had ever heard of this Paſſage, would he have been ſatisfy'd with oppoſing the Silence of Volaterran to the Accuſers of Acciaioli? He might have read it in Geſner's Works (10). Is it not very ſtrange, that a poor Author, who has ſo ſolemnly declared in his Preface, that he publiſhes only a paraphraſtic Tranſlation of the Lectures of Argyropylus, ſhould for ſo long Time be accus'd of Plagiariſm?

(5) Sim. Simonii Comment. in Ariſtot. Ethic.

(6) Naud. Bibliogr. polit. p. 16.

(7) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat. p. 624.

(8) Conring. Introd. in Polit. Ariſt. p. 649, 659. in Thomaſius's Plag. Literar. p. 153.

(9) Don. Acc. Præf. to Coſm. Med. Comment. in Eth. Ariſt. ad Nichomach.

(10) Geſn. Biblioth. fol. 216.

[C] Extravagant in the Praiſes.] This appears by comparing the Text of Paul Jovius, with the Paraphraſe of Mr Varillas. "Eruditâ & pereleganti "Commentatione magnum lumen attuliſſe judicatur "Moralibus Ariſtotelis, expoſis ſcilicet ſophiſtarum "interpretum ineptiis, quum, Euſtratii Græci placita "ſecutus, certiore ubique veſtigio niteretur (11). —— "He is thought to have given great Light into Ari"ſtotle's Ethics, by a very learned and elegant Com"mentary; in which he explodes the fooliſh Gloſſes "of the Schoolmen, and follows the Opinions of Eu"ſtratius the Greek, as the more certain Foundation." This is the Text; the Paraphraſe is as follows: "He "did not fail to tranſlate the Morals of Ariſtotle, "with much greater exactneſs, than his Predeceſſors "in that Work; and ſo clear them of thoſe ridiculous "Interpretations, which both the antient and modern "Schoolmen had put upon them. This he did in "an excellent Commentary ‖, in which he ſhew'd, "that, whoever engages in this Labyrinth with any "other Guide ‡, than the famous Euſtachius, can"not avoid going out of his Way (12)." I need not apprize the Reader, that the Author of the Anecdotes goes farther than his Original, as well with reſpect to Acciaioli, as Euſtratius (13); and that, inſtead of paying a Compliment to the latter, as was his Intention, he degrades him to the loweſt Rank of Interpreters: he ſhould have ſaid, avec un autre, not ſans un autre. Beſides, what would Father Bouhours ſay to his par un admirable Commentaire? Theſe Words are ſo ill plac'd, that one would think the Schoolmen had given their ridiculous Interpretations, by an excellent Commentary.

(11) Jovius Elog. cap. 16.

‖ The Conſtruction of the French is—Interpretations ridicules, que ſes Sophiſtes leur avoient données, par un admirable Commentaire—

‡ The French of Varillas, by miſtake, ſays, ſans un autre guide—

(12) Varill. Anecd. de Flor. p. 169.

[D] The Reader will find below, a conſiderable Supplement to this Article.] I may venture to give it this Character, ſince it is a Memoir communicated to me by a very able Writer (14), "The Treatiſe, which "Matthieu Palmieri has left, of the Origin of the "Family of the Acciaioli, may be of conſiderable "Uſe

(13) So it ought to be writ, and not Euſtachius.

(14) Mr de la Monnoie.

Digitized by Google

" Uſe in rectifying and ſupplying the Article of Do-
" nato Acciaioli. This Treatiſe, written in Latin
" by Matthieu Palmieri, was tranſlated into Ita- " lian by Donato Acciaioli, Knight of Rhodes. The " Original has not yet appear'd; the Tranſlation a" lone was printed at Florence, in 4to, in the Year
" 1588, for Bartholémi Sermatelli, as an Appendix
" to the Hiſtory of the Ubaldinis, and the Life of " Nicolas Acciaioli, great Seneſchal of the Kingdoms
" of Sicily and Jeruſalem. We are there told that " our Donato was born in 1428; that he was buried
" at the public Expence; that Chriſtopher Laudin
" ſpoke his Funeral Oration *. The other Particulars
" are too long to be repeated. —— Sabellicus, in " his Dialogue de Reparatione Linguæ Latinæ, (a Dia" logue, by the way, commonly cited as the Work
" of an anonymous Author) and Vives, in his 5th
" Book de tradendis Diſciplinis, have ſpoken with " Commendation, of the Life of Charlemagne, by Do-
" nato Acciaioli. The Florentine Hiſtory of Leonard
" d'Arezzo, tranſlated from Latin into Italian by
" this Donato, was printed at Venice, in Folio, in
" 1473, according to Father L'Abbé's Account, p.
" 341. of his Supplem. Nov. Biblioth. M.SS."

* Poccian-tius de Script. Flor. p. 51.

ACCIAIOLI (Zenobius) a Florentine, and Monk of the Order of St Dominic, diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his public Writings. His Office of Librarian of the Vatican under Pope Leo X. proves him to have been a Man of Letters. He continu'd in this Employ from the Year 1518 to his death, which happen'd in 1520. He liv'd 58 Years. He was ſkill'd in Greek and Hebrew, and has tranſlated ſome Pieces of the antient Fathers into Latin: viz. Olympiodorus on Eccleſiaſtes; the Treatiſe of Euſebius againſt Hierocles; the twelve Books of Theodoret de Græcarum Affectionum Curatione; and Juſtin Martyr. As he was both a Poet and an Orator, he has exercis'd his Talent of Panegyric on every thing, both in Verſe and Proſe. There are extant his Poems, and Sermons on the Epiphany, beſides Verſes and Orations in Honour of Leo X. There are publiſh'd likewiſe ſome Letters, which he writ to Picus of Mirandola; a Treatiſe entitled de Laudibus Urbis Romæ; A Panegyric on the City of Naples, deliver'd in a general Chapter of the Order; and A Chronicle of the Convent of St Mark at Florence. He collected likewiſe in one Volume the Greek Epigrams of Politian, and publiſh'd them in the Year 1495. (a)

(a) Taken from Ambroiſe d'Altamura Biblioth. Orcin. Prædicat. p. 243.

Ambroiſe d'Altamura, whom I have follow'd Step by Step in this Article, has evidently tranſgreſs'd the Laws of Accuracy, as appears from the following account of Mr de la Monnoie. Of all the Works of Zenobius Acciaioli there are extant only the Tranſlation of Euſebius's Book againſt Hierocles, That of Olympiodorus upon Eccleſiaſtes; and Theodoret's Cure of the falſe Opinions of the Gentiles. The pieces of Poetry, mention'd by Gyraldus, whether Greek, or Latin, were never printed. Some think he did not dye till the Year 1537, becauſe Jerome Alcander, his Succeſſor in the place of Librarian of the Vatican, did not enter upon his Office till that year; in like manner as Zenobius began his employ in the Year 1518, after Philip Beroaldus the younger, who died the ſame Year.

ACCIUS (Lucius) a Latin Tragic Poet, Son of a Freed-Man [A], was born, according to the Chronology of St Jerom, in the Conſulſhip of Hoſtilius Mancinus, and Atilius Serranus, in the year of Rome 583. But it will appear below, that this Authority is not to be depended upon [B]. He diſtinguiſh'd himſelf before the death

[A] Son of a Freed-Man.] The more I conſider theſe Words of Moreri, " Marcinus and Serranus, " whom antient Rome ſaw rais'd to the Dignity of " Conſuls, were his near Relations," the more difficult I find it to aſſign any other Reaſon for his Blunder, than this. He had read in Charles Stephens the following Words, " Natus parentibus libertinis, Mar-" cino & Serano Conſulibus," and, not ſufficiently attending to the Terms parentibus and libertinis, he thought he might affirm, that the Poet was related to theſe two Conſuls. He ought, however, to have chang'd Marcinus into Mancinus. See how St Jerom expreſſes himſelf. " Lucius Accius, Tragœdiarum " Scriptor clarus, natus, Mancino & Serrano Conſu-" libus, parentibus libertinis (1). —— i. e. Lucius " Accius, a famous Tragic Poet, born in the Conſulſhip " of Mancinus and Serranus, of free Parents." Father Briet attributes to A. Gellius two or three Particulars relating to Accius, which St Jerom has a right to (2).

(1) In Chron. Euſebii, the 2d Year of the 162th Olympiad.

(2) Brietius de Poët. Lat. p. 5.

[B] That this Authority is not to be depended upon.] I ſay this, without having demonſtrative Reaſons againſt this Chronology: I have only Difficulties to alledge on both Sides. Cicero often convers'd with Accius. This I prove in Remark [H]. Now Cicero was born in the Year of Rome, 647; and it is not likely that he had convers'd much with this Poet before the Age of 20. Accius, therefore, muſt have been alive in the Year of Rome 667. He ſhould be at that time 84 Years of Age, according to the Chronicle of Euſebius. I confeſs there is nothing impoſſible in this; but there is little Appearance of Probability; ſince Gyraldus could not believe, that the Poet, with whom Cicero had ſo often convers'd, was the ſame Lucius Accius, ſo many of whoſe Tragedies are quoted. He thinks there were two Poets of the ſame Name. Add to this, that Corradus, who allows not this Diſtinction, ſcruples to carry the 20th Year of Cicero, higher than the 70th of Accius: inſomuch, that, on account of a Paſſage in Cicero, he places the Birth of Accius 40 Years later, than St Jerom has fix'd it (3). But this is not all: Cicero, in his Firſt Philippic, informs us, that one of Accius's Tragedies was perform'd during the Celebration of the Games, which Brutus had given, and at which he was not preſent, having retir'd from Rome, upon the Murthur of Julius Cæſar. This Piece was greatly applauded; but the People's Approbation was more in favour of Brutus, than Accius. The Applauſe was too diſtant in Time, to belong to the Poet; " Niſi forte Accio " tum plaudi & ſexageſimo poſt anno palmam dari " putabatis, non Bruto. —— Unleſs you thought, that, " after an interval of 60 Years, Accius, and not " Brutus, received the Applauſe and the Palm." If you reckon theſe 60 Years from the Death of Accius (4), he muſt have died in the Year of Rome 650; and, conſequently, we are not to believe Cicero, when he pretends to have heard ſome things from Accius's own Mouth. If you count them from the Time, when this Piece firſt appear'd upon the Stage, you will make the Orator a very weak Reaſoner, in ſuppoſing that a good Performance on the Stage is never applauded but at the firſt Repreſentation; which is entirely falſe. However this Side of the Dilemma is more eligible, than to fix the Death of Accius to the 3d Year of Cicero. If then the Paſſage in the Firſt Philippic does not prove, that Accius died before the Year of Rome 667, let us extend the Poet's Life to that Period; but, as we have no ſufficient Aſſurance (5) of St Jerom's Accuracy, let us not ſcruple to aſſert, that Accius might then be between ſixty and ſeventy Years of Age; and that, if he liv'd to the

(3) Corrad. upon Cicero's Brutus. p. 198.

(4) P. Minucius upon the firſt Philipp. counts it 15; having forgot what Cicero ſays of his Converſations with Accius. Obſerve by the by, that the Opinion reported in the Jugemens des Savans, &c. Tom. 2. p. 15. is falſe; namely, that Accius died in the Year of Rome 618. in the 61ſt Olympiad.

(5) See the Remark [O].

A 2 e

Digitized by Google

death of Pacuvius; one of his Plays being acted the same year that Pacuvius [C] brought a Performance of his own on the Stage. This latter was then eighty years old, the former but thirty. The name of Accius's Play, which was presented that year, is not recorded; but some Authors, who have quoted this Poet (a), have furnish'd us with the Names of Several of his Tragedies. He made choice of the noblest Subjects, that ever appear'd on the Athenian Stage; such as Andromache, Andromeda, Atreus, Clytemnestra, Medea [D], Meleager, Philoctetes, The Seige of Thebes, Tereus, The Trojan Matrons, &c. He did not always borrow the Subject of his Plays from the Greeks: He compos'd one, the Story of which is entirely Roman: It was call'd Brutus [E], and treated of the Dethronement of Tarquin. If it be true, that He was Author of a Piece entitled The Wedding, and another call'd the Merchant (b) we shall have reason to rank him likewise among the Comic Writers [F]. His Genius was not confin'd to the Stage. He wrote some other Books, particularly Annals, which Macrobius, Priscian, Festus, and Nonnius Marcellus, refer to. His Friend and Patron was Decimus Brutus, who was Consul in the year of Rome 615, and who gain'd several Victories in Spain, which procur'd him the honour of a Triumph some time after (c). This Brutus was so fond of the Verses, in which Accius celebrated him, that

(a) Nonnius Marcellus, Varro, A. Gellius, &c.

(b) Vossius de Poet. Lat. c. 1. cites these two pieces, and the latter of them upon the Authority of Varro: but I have not been able to find it in Varro.

(c) In the Year 623. See the Fasti of Sigonius.

Age of Pacuvius, there is no reason why we should not apply to him and Cæsar, the Story related by Valerius Maximus. "Is (Poëta Accius) Julio Cæsari amplissimo & florentissimo viro in Collegium Poëtarum venienti, nunquam assurrexit, non majestatis ejus immemor, sed quod in communium studiorum comparatione aliquanto superiorem se esse confideret. Quapropter insolentiæ crimine caruit, quia ibi voluminum non imaginum certemina exercebantur (6). —— When Julius Cæsar came into the College of Poets, he (the Poet Accius*) refus'd to rise from his Seat, though to the most renown'd Hero of the Age; not that he forgot the Respect due to his high Rank, but because he was conscious of some Superiority over him, in their common Attainments. This Behaviour, therefore, was not thought insolent, because in that Place they did not contest the Prize of Birth, but of Learning.*" This last Thought is not unlike that, which the Author (7) of the Satire against the French Academy (8) makes use of. I confess, that there is some Difficulty in extending the Life of the Poet Accius to the height of Julius Cæsar's Prosperity; and it is this which obliged Corradus to suppose, that Valerius Maximus meant in this Passage Sextus Julius Cæsar. But why may we not suppose him to mean That Caius Cæsar, who was kill'd by Marius's Soldiers, and who had so great Credit, though but an Edile, that his Disputes with Sulpitius the Tribune rais'd a Civil War (9)? He was one of the principal Orators of his Times, and a good Tragic Poet. But, however that be, let it be remember'd, that Cæsar had a happy Genius for Poetry. "Feruntur & à puero & ab adolescentulo quædam scripta, ut Laudes Herculis & Tragœdia OEdipus (10). —— He is said to have been the Author of some Pieces in his younger Days, as The Praises of Hercules, and the Tragedy of OEdipus.

(6) Valer. Maximus, lib. 3. c. 7.

(7) St Evremont, according to some. See the Hist. of the Fr. Acad. p. 69. but in the Chevræana this Satire is ascribed to the Count d'Etlan.

(8) Entitled The Comedy of the Academics: in which Godeau having said to Colletet, I perceive you to be an excellent Musician; return'd this Answer, We are all equal, being the Sons of Apollo.

(9) Ascon. Ped. in his Orat. pro M. Scauro.

(10) Suetonius, in his Life of Cæsar.

[C] The same Year that Pacuvius.] Cicero relates it upon the Authority of Accius himself. "Ut Accius iisdem Ædilibus ait se & Pacuvium docuisse Fabulam, cum ille octoginta, ipse triginta annos natus esset (11). —— As Accius reports, that he and Pacuvius taught Dramatic Poetry in the same Edileship, the latter being eighty, himself but thirty Years of Age." Cicero's Words are iisdem Ædilibus; but, some Manuscripts giving a false Reading, it has been asserted, that these two Poets published their Works in iisdem Ædibus, in the same House, paucis quidem annis interpositis, a few Years the one after the other (12); which is manifestly a double Mistake. Corradus thinks, that Accius mentioned this Circumstance of his Life in his Annals (13): but Vossius is of Opinion, that it was in a Work entitled Didascalia (14). The Reason he gives for it is, that Accius in this Work expressly treated of Poets and Poetry, as may be gathered from what Charisius and A. Gellius have cited from it. But this Reason is of no Weight: Vossius in proving against Corradus, refutes himself. This Writer had recourse to the Annals of Accius, because, says he, a Poet never speaks of himself in a Dramatic Piece. But Terence's Prologues prove the contrary. How came Vossius, who alledges this Reason, not to see, that Accius might very naturally acquaint his Audience in a Prologue, that a Play of his was brought upon the Stage, at the same time with one of Pacuvius's? Add to this, that, besides his Annals and Didascalia, Accius was the Author of some Books, which had no Relation to the Stage.

(11) Cicero in Bruto.

(12) Crinitus de Poet. Lat. ch. 5. Glandorp. Onomast. p. 3.

(13) Corrad. upon Cicero's Brutus.

(14) Vossius de Hist. Lat. p. 32.

[D] Medea.] The Conjecture of Father Lescalopier, that the Verses, quoted by Cicero, in the second Book of The Nature of the Gods, are borrowed from the Medea of our Poet, is highly probable (15). These Verses describe the Astonishment of a Shepherd, who, having never seen a Ship, discovered, from the top of a Mountain, That which carried the Argonauts. The good Father Crinitus, in consequence of this Passage, imagined that Cicero had quoted a Tragedy of Accius entitled The Argonauts (16). But, though this Poet had composed such a Tragedy, Crinitus is still to be blamed for building upon so uncertain a Foundation. The Author, whose Conjecture I have just mentioned, need not have proved to us, from the Testimony of Crinitus, that the Grammarians mention the Medea of Accius: he might at once have quoted Nonnius Marcellus for it. I have found, in the Fragments of the Tragic Poets, collected by Scriverius, that the Lines relating to the Ship Argo, belong to a Tragedy called Medea.

(15) See Lescalop. Commentar. in Cicer. de Nat. Deor. p. 382.

(16) Crinitus de Poet. Lat. lib. 6. ch. 7.

[E] It was called Brutus.] Manutius without Reason believes, that it was acted at the Celebration of the Games of Apollo, at which the Brother of Marc Antony presided in the Room of Brutus, who absented himself from Rome (17); but it is plain, from Cicero's Epistles, that it was the Tereus of Accius, which was then represented (18). It is surprizing, that the greatest Part of the Commentators on Cicero should be ignorant of this. Maturantius thinks they acted the Atreus: Beroaldus and Hegendorphin are for the Brutus.

(17) P. Manutius upon Cicero's 1st Philipp.

(18) Cicero's Epist. to Atticus, B. 16. Epist. 2, 5.

[F] Among the Comic Writers.] Donatus, the Grammarian, will not suffer us to doubt of it: for he reckons it among the Perfections of Terence, that he was content to write Comedies without falling under the Temptation of becoming a Tragic Poet; Which, among other things, adds he, was above the Reach of Plautus, Afranius, Accius, and almost all the great Comic Writers. As I have not servilely translated my Author Word for Word, it may be proper to let him speak for himself. "Hæc cum artificiosissima Terentius fecerit, tum illud est admirandum, quod & morem retinuit, ut Comœdiam scriberet, & temperavit affectum, ne in Tragœdiam transiliret, quod, cum alias rebus minime obtentum esse à Plauto, & ab Afranio, & ab Accio, & multis fere magnis Comicis invenimus (19)." We may gather from hence, that, at first, Accius confined himself to Comedy: but, his great Reputation arising from his Tragedies, Donatus seems not to have been so accurate as he should have been, in ranking him among the Comic Poets. Mr Dacier knew very well that he was a Tragic Poet, and has expressly asserted it in his Remark on this Verse of Horace;

(19) Don. de Trag. & Comed.

Nil comis Tragici mutat Lucilius Attî (20)?

(20) Horat. Sat. 10. lib. 1. ver 53.

Notwithstanding which he translates it after this Manner: Lucilius —— ne trouve-t-il rien à changer dans les Comedies d' Attius? —— Does Lucilius find nothing to alter in the Comedies of Attius?

[G] Hung

Digitized by Google

that he hung them up at the entrance of the Temples, and Monuments [G], which he built with the ſpoils of the Enemy. This might, indeed, be owing to a Principle of Vanity rather than of Friendſhip, and may prove, that, if he was fond of the Poet, he was more ſo of the Praiſes he beſtow'd upon him: but, in any light, it ſhews that Decimus Brutus thought Accius's Poetry excellent. Beſides, he was a Perſon well qualify'd to judge of this kind of Writing [H]. I do not find, that Cicero accuſes Accius of Harſhneſs, and too much Affectation in his Stile: this relates to another Poet [I]; as Mr Moreri might eaſily have perceiv'd, had he not ſervilely copied after others. Not that Accius, who, in other reſpects, was greatly eſteem'd as a Poet, (d) was never reproach'd with Ruggedneſs of Stile. A. Gellius has a very juſt Reflexion in anſwer to this Cavil [K]. The Anſwer he return'd thoſe, who aſk'd him, why he did not plead at the Bar, ſince he met with ſuch ſucceſs upon the Stage, carries [G] Hung them up at the Entrance of the Temples.] Cicero and Valerius Maximus relate this. "Decimus "quidem Brutus, ſays the former (21), ſummus ille vir "& imperator, Accii amiciſſimi ſui carminibus templorum & monumentorum aditus exornavit ſuorum. "—— That great Commander, Decimus Brutus, "adorned the Entrance of his Temples and Monuments with the Verſes of his dear Friend Accius." —— Valerius Maximus gives this Account: "Similiter honoratus animus erga Poëtam Accium "D. Bruti, ſuis temporibus clari ducis, extitit, cujus "familiari cultu & prompta laudatione delectatus, "ejus verſibus templorum aditus, quæ ex manubiis "conſecraverat, adornavit (22). —— Decimus Brutus, a famous General of his Times, ſhewed great "Favour to the Poet Accius, with whoſe eaſy Addreſs, and ready Talent at Panegyric, he was ſo "well pleaſed, as to adorn the Entrance of the "Temples, which he conſecrated with the Spoils of "War, with this Poet's Verſes." —— Scriverius has quoted another Paſſage in the following Terms: "Amatus etiamnum in tantum Attiu, à Decimo "Bruto fuiſſe dicitur, ut Attianis verſibus templorum & monumentorum frontes & aditus exornare "conſueverit (23). —— Decimus Brutus was ſo "fond of Attius, that he was wont to hang up his "Verſes as Ornaments to the Fronts and Entrances "of his Temples and Monuments." Theſe he gives us for the very Words of Cicero in his Brutus; but I am ſure they are not to be found there. Very likely ſome modern Author deceived him in this manner. He had quoted Cicero's Brutus in relation to the Age of Pacuvius, and Accius; then he had reported what relates to D. Brutus, and had contented himſelf to expreſs the Senſe of Cicero's Words, and had cited for it idem Cicero. Hereupon Scriverius, I ſuppoſe, imagined that Cicero's own Words were cited; and that they were taken out of the ſame Book which was quoted before; without taking the trouble of examining into the Truth of the Quotation. Thus you ſee how the moſt laborious and the moſt ingenious Compilers love to find their Work done to their Hands. Voſſius (24), being doubtleſs deceived by Scriverius, cites Cicero pro Archia & in Bruto, in relation to this Action of D. Brutus. The Illuſion is perhaps ſtill more antient than this: Scriverius might not have it at firſt Hand. How careful ſoever he was to collect all that has ever been related of Accius, yet he forgot the Paſſage of Columella, which we ſhall produce preſently (25).

(d) See Remark [A].

(21) Cicero pro Archia Poëta, cap. 11.

(22) Valer. Maxim. lib. 8. cap. 14.

(23) Scriver. in Teſſim. de Attio.

(24) Voſſius de Poet. Lat. p. 7.

(25) In the Remark [N]

[H] Qualified to judge of this kind of Writing.] Paterculus (26) has given a great Encomium of this Brutus in few Words, in relation to his Military Virtues: But the following is Cicero's Elogium on his Learning: "D. Brutus M. filius, ut ex familiari "ejus L. Accio poëta ſum audire ſolitus, & dicere "non incultè ſolebat, & erat cùm literis Latinis, "tùm etiam Græcis, ut temporibus illis, ſatis eruditus (27). —— Decimus Brutus, the Son of Marcus "Brutus, was wont to expreſs himſelf with great Politeneſs, as I have been informed by his intimate "Acquaintance, the Poet Accius; and was well verſed "(conſidering the time he lived in) both in the Learning of Rome and of Greece."

(26) Vell. Paterculi. lib. 2. cap. 5.

(27) Cic. in Brut. p. 197.

[I] This relates to another Poet.] To wit, Attilius, whom Cicero mentions not only in one of his Letters to Atticus (28), Hoc enim Attilius, poëta duriſſimus, but alſo in another place. That other Paſſage deſerves to be produced at length, becauſe it ſhews what Judgment ought to be paſs'd upon thoſe who deſpiſe their own Tongue, and the Authors of their own Nation (29). "A quibus tantum diſſentio, "ut cum Sophocles vel optime ſcripſerit Electram, "tamen male converſam Attilii mihi legendam putem, de quo Licinius,

Ferreum ſcriptorem opinor, verum ſcriptorem tamen
Ut legendus ſit (30).

"Rudem enim eſſe omninò in noſtris poëtis aut inertiſſimæ ſegnitiæ eſt, aut faſtidii delicatiſſimi. Mihi "quidem nulli ſatis eruditi videntur quibus noſtra "ignota ſunt.——With whom I ſo far differ in Opinion, that, however beautiful the Electra of Sophocles may be in the Original, I ſtill think the ill Tranſlation of it by Attilius deſerves to be read; whom Licinius called An harſh Writer, indeed, but a Writer worthy of being read. If our Poets are rough and unpoliſhed, it proceeds either from the moſt ſlothful Neglect, or the moſt delicate Niceneſs. For my own part, I think no Man Scholar enough, who is unacquainted with our own Authors." Suetonius mentions the Electra of Attilius, as we ſhall make appear in that Poet's Article. Doubtleſs the Electra was a Tragedy; yet Attilius is only counted in the number of Comic Poets in the Catalogue of (31) Volcatius Sedigitus; and, according to Voſſius's Remark, the Fragments, which Cicero, Varro, and Macrobius (32) cite of him, reliſh more of the Sock, than the Buskin. Whoever ſhould pretend to make a difficulty of this, would be greatly deceived. Are not Corneille and Racine Tragic Poets only and abſolutely? yet they have compoſed Comedies; and if Moliere had taken it into his Head to compoſe a Tragedy, as it is ſaid Scarron had a Mind to do at laſt, would he immediately have ceaſed to be a Comic Poet? A majori parte ſumitur denominatio. —— A Thing takes it's Name from that, which particularly diſtinguiſhes it. See the Remark [F]. But to return to the pretended Accuſation againſt Accius's Style: It muſt be obſerved, that Cicero cited this Poet often; and that in his Oration pro Sextio he conſidered him as a great Poet: Summi Poëtæ ingenium non ſolum arte ſua, ſed etiam dolore exprimebat. —— He expreſſed the Genius of this great Poet not only by his Art, but by his Concern. The Paſſage is curious: We learn from it, that the famous Actor Eſop made uſe of Accius's Verſes which had ſome Relation to Cicero's Exile; I ſay he made uſe of them to make the People ſenſible of that Injuſtice. The Romans were very apt to apply particular Sentiments of a Play to the preſent Times. See Suetonius (33), and the firſt and the tenth Philippic of Cicero: They teach us that while a Tragedy of Accius was performing, the People did not ceaſe to teſtify the Friendſhip they had for Brutus by their Applauſes.

(28) Id. Epiſt. 20. lib. 14. ad Attic.

(29) Id. de Finib. lib. 1.

(30) Voſſius de Poët. Lat. p. 7. places the Words of Licinius in this order.

(31) Apud A. Gell. lib. 15. c. 24.

(32) I believe that Voſſius de Poet. Lat. p. 8. is deceived in what relates to Macrobius.

(33) Sueton. in Cæſ. c. 84.

[K] A very juſt Reflexion, in anſwer to this Cavil.] Accius, going into Aſia, paſs'd through Tarentum, where he ſaw Pacuvius, who was retired thither in his old age. He ſhew'd him the Tragedy of Atreus, which he had in his Pocket, and read it to him. Pacavius found it to be partly very ſublime and poetical, and partly very rough and indigeſted. Accius acknowledg'd the friendly Criticiſm, and promis'd himſelf from thence Succeſs in his future Productions; the Minds of Men being like Apples, which are never good, if they are not hard and green, before they are ripe. But it is better to weigh the Words of the Original (34). "Tunc Pacuvium dixiſſe aiunt "ſonora quidem eſſe quæ ſcripſiſſet & grandia, ſed "videri

(34) A. Gel. lib. 13. cap. 2.

Digitized by Google

carries no leſs good Senſe with it [L]. Tho' he was ſhort of Stature, he caus'd a very large Statue of himſelf to be erected in the Temple of the Muſes (e). The Reſpect paid to him was ſo great, that a Player was puniſh'd [M], only for mentioning him by Name upon the Stage. We ſhall ſee, in the Remarks, whether Valerius Maximus's Account of one Accius, a Poet, who refus'd to riſe, and pay his Compliment to Julius Cæſar, in an Aſſembly of the Poets, be applicable to our Accius. Cicero ſpeaks very contemptibly of one Accius, who wrote an Hiſtory; and, as our Tragic Poet

(e) Notatum ab auctoribus & L. Accium Poëtam in Camænarum æde maximâ formâ Statuam ſibi poſuiſſe, cum brevis admodum fuiſſet. Plin. Hiſt. Nat. lib. 34. cap. 5. Charles Stephens is miſtaken, in ſaying that Dec. Brutus erected this Statue to him. Lloyd and Hofman have adopted this Miſtake.

" videri ea tamen ſibi duriora paulum & acerbiora. " Ita eſt, inquit, Accius, uti dicis, neque id ſanè me " pœnitet, meliora enim fore ſpero quæ dëinceps " ſcribam. Nam quod in pomis eſt, itidem, inquit, " eſſe aiunt in ingeniis, quæ dura & acerba naſcun- " tur, poſt fiunt mitia & jucunda: ſed quæ gignun- " tur ſtatim vieta & mollia atque in principio ſunt " uvida, non matura mox fiunt, ſed putria. Relin- " quendum igitur viſum eſt in ingenio quod diès " atque ætas mitificet. This puts me in mind of a piece of Advice Lipſius gave to young Men. The extravagant Fondneſs he had conceiv'd for I know not what conciſeneſs of Style, which diſguſts the Readers of that great Man's Letters, or makes them laugh, did not hinder him from condemning thoſe young Men, who affect Brevity. He ſaid it was the direct Road to a meagre, thin Style; and that they ought to have many Superfluities at that Age, which might be pruned, as they advanc'd farther in Years (35). " Adeò " juventutem ad brevitatem non voco, ut etiam ab- " ſterream, ſive quia tuto adſumere vix poteſt, & bre- " vitatis imitatio facillimè ætatem hanc decipit: ſive " quia nec utiliter poteſt, & juvenili illo brevitatis " ſtudio aridus plerumque & exſuccus ſtilus evadit, " nec facile ad laudatam illam temperiem venitur, " niſi initio ubertas quædam & luxuries ſit quam ætas " paullatim depaſcat. —— I am ſo far from adviſing " Youth to Brevity, that I deter them from it as much " as poſſible; either becauſe it is unſafe, and apt to " deceive tender Years; or becauſe it is uſeleſs, and by " this juvenile Affectation of Brevity, a Style becomes " dry and inſipid; nor is it eaſy to arrive at that happy " Temperament in Writing, unleſs at firſt there be " ſome redundancy and luxuriancy of Style, which " Time, by little and little, may wear off." Balzac (36) was of the ſame Opinion. " Amputanda plura " ſunt efflorescenti illi ætati, quàm inſerenda; faci- " leque eſt remedium ubertatis; ſterilia nullo labore " ſuperantur. —— That Age requires more pruning; " that cultivating: Redundancy is eaſily remedied, but " Barrenneſs with great Difficulty." But to return to Accius, it has been well obſerv'd in the Dictionary of Charles Stephens, and in thoſe that were built on the ſame Foundation, That Quintilian excus'd him, by laying the Blame on the Time in which he liv'd (37). " Tragœdiæ Scriptores Accius atque Pacuvius clariſſi- " mi gravitate ſententiarum, verborum pondere & " autoritate Perſonarum. Cæterum nitor & ſumma " in excolendis operibus manus magis videri poteſt " temporibus quàm ipſis defuiſſe. Virium tamen Ac- " cio plus tribuitur, Pacuvium videri doctiorem, qui " eſſe docti affectant, volunt. —— Among the Writers " of Tragedy, Accius and Pacuvius are the moſt fa- " mous, for the Weight of their Sentiments, the E- " nergy of their Expreſſions, and the Dignity of their " Characters. The want of Poliſhing and Finiſhing " was owing rather to the Times, than to the Poets " themſelves. The Learned attribute more of Genius " to Accius, and of Learning to Pacuvius." One would think that Quintilian copies theſe Verſes of Horace;

(35) Lipſ. in Inſtit. Epiſt.

(36) Balzac. in Epiſt. ſelect.

(37) Quintil. Inſtitut. Orat. lib. 10. cap. 1.

Ambigitur quoties uter utro ſit prior, auſert
Pacuvius docti famam ſenis, Accius alti (38).

(38) Horat. Epiſt. 1. lib. 2. ver. 55.

When Accius and Pacuvius are compar'd,
Both are eſteem'd; both meet with great Reward.
Pacuvius all the Critics Voices gains
For Learning, Accius for his lofty Strains.

CREECH.

There is a Paſſage of Ovid, which ſeems to charge I know not what of Savage and Brutal upon Accius's Style; but, every thing conſidered, I ſhould rather underſtand by it the cruel Actions deſcrib'd by him in his Tragedies. Ovid's Sentiment is, that if one were to judge of a Man's Manners by his Writings, Accius muſt be accounted Brutal; Terence a Lover of good Chear; and thoſe who treat of warlike Matters, brave and valiant Men.

Accius eſſet atrox, coniviva Terrentius eſſent,
Eſſent pugnaces, qui fera bella canunt (39).

For Cruelty would Accius cenſur'd be,
And Terence prais'd for Mirth and Jollity.
Who Wars alarms, and Martial Deeds indite,
Of courſe muſt be the Dev'l and all in Fight.

(39) Ovid. Triſt. lib. 2.

[L] Carries no leſs good Senſe with it.] Quintilian has preſerv'd this little Circumſtance. " Aiunt (40) " Accium interrogatum cur cauſas non ageret; cùm " apud eum in Tragœdiis tanta vis eſſet, hanc reddidiſſe " rationem, quòd illic ea dicerentur quæ ipſe vellet, " in foro dicturi adverſarii eſſent quæ minimè vellet. — " In my own Tragedies, anſwered he, I ſay what I " pleaſe, but at the Bar, I am oblig'd to hear what I " diſlike." I know a Man of Wit, who made uſe of a like Reaſon, to divert his Son from the Study of the Law, and to encourage him to the Study of Divinity. " What is more convenient, ſaid he to him, than to " ſpeak before Perſons who cannot contradict you? " This Advantage have Preachers. And what more " inconvenient than, when you have done ſpeaking, " to hear yourſelf confuted, and oblig'd, without " Mercy, to give an Account of all you have ſaid? " This the Condition of an Advocate." This puts me in mind of a Thought of Mr Montagne: " As for " the Gift of Eloquence (41), ſays he, ſome have a " Facility and Readineſs, and which may be called " Gift of Utterance, ſo eaſy that they are ready up- " on every Occaſion: Others are ſlow, and ſpeak on- " ly what is premeditated and elaborate. —— If I " were to give my Opinion in theſe two different Ad- " vantages of Eloquence, of which Preachers and " Lawyers now a-days make the chief Profeſſion, the " ſlow ſpeaker ſeems to me the beſt qualify'd for a " Preacher, the other for a Lawyer; becauſe the Em- " ployment of the former gives him as much time " as he pleaſes to prepare himſelf; and he goes on " with the Thread of his Diſcourſe, without any in- " terruption: But the Lawyer is oblig'd to enter every " Moment into the Liſts, and the unforeſeen Anſwers " of his Adverſary diſconcert his Meaſures in an In- " ſtant (42)." —— The Advocate's Buſineſs is more difficult than the Preacher's, and yet we find more tolerable Advocates, in my Opinion, than Preachers, at leaſt in France.

(40) Quintil. Inſtit. Orat. lib. 5. cap. 13.

(41) Montagne's Eſſays, B. 1. chap. 10. at the beginning, p. 52, 53.

(42) The ſame, p. 54.

[M] A Player was puniſh'd.] Being brought before the Judges to give Satisfaction for this Injury, he ſaid in defence of himſelf, that it was lawful to name a Man who gave his Pieces to be repreſented on the Stage. Publius Mutius, before whom the Cauſe was try'd, condemn'd him. The ſatyric Poet Lucilius, had not the ſame Succeſs; for the Comedian, who had offended him, by naming him on the Stage, was acquitted. So true is it, that all Judges are not of the ſame Humour, or that ſome Perſons are more conſidered than others. The Author, who reports theſe two Caſes, expreſſes himſelf thus (43): " Mi- " mus quidam nominatim Accium poëtam compellavit " in ſcena: cum eo Accius injuriarum agit: hic " nihil defendit, niſi licere nominari eum cujus no- " mine ſcripta dentur agenda. —— Caius (44) Cœ- " lius judex abſolvit eum injuriarum qui Lucilium " poëtam in ſcena nominatim læſerat, Publius Mu- " tius eum, qui L. Accium poëtam nominaverat, con- " demnavit. —— A certain Player mention'd the " Poet Accius by Name, upon the Stage: Accius ſued " him for Damages: the other only pleaded in his De- " fence, that it was lawful to name a Perſon, who " wrote for the Stage. —— Caius Cælius, the Judge, " acquitted him, who had affronted the Poet Lucilius, " by naming him on the Stage; Publius Mutius con- " demn'd him, who had offered the ſame Inſult to " Accius." Glandorpius did not know where this

(43) Autor Rhetoricor. ad Herenn. lib. 1.

(44) Ibid. lib. 2.

Digitized by Google

Poet compos'd Annals, ſome will have it, that Cicero abus'd him in this Place. Others deny it [N]. At the ſame time liv'd an Orator, of no ill Reputation, named Accius, againſt whom Cicero defended Cluentius. He was of Piſaurus; which might make him paſs for one of our Poet's Relations [O]. It is not true, that Cicero ſpeaks likewiſe of another celebrated Orator of this Name, ſurnamed Navius. Mr Moreri blunders here. He did not conſider, that this Accius Nævius is no other than a famous Augur, whom he takes notice of, a few Pages after, under the Article ACTIUS NÆVIUS (f). He is no leſs deceiv'd, when he diſtinguiſhes between the Tragic Poet, and the Annaliſt, cited by Macrobius. What he adds, that Aulus-Gellius ſpeaks likewiſe of Accius the Hiſtorian, diſtinct from the Writer of Tragedies, ch. 9. Book 3. is doubly falſe. This Author mentions no Accius, in that place; and wherever he ſpeaks of Accius, he muſt be underſtood to mean the Tragic Poet. Some Authors have expos'd themſelves to Ridicule for having imitated, or admir'd, the Latin of this Accius [P], in an Age, when the Language was in much greater Purity.

(f) Cic. de Divin. lib. 1. mentions him. Moreri cites lib. de Divin. in Verr. which is a falſe Quotation.

Story was to be met with, but (45) reports it only on the Credit of a (46) modern Author, whoſe falſe Gloſs he copies, to wit, that the Defendant was condemn'd, becauſe he had not prefix'd any Titles of Honour or Reſpect to Accius's Name. Sine præfatione honoris nominaverat.

(45) Glond. Onomaſt. p. 3.

(46) Catanæus, from whom Glandorp does not cite the Paſſage; but it is found in the Commentary on Plin. 3. Epiſt. lib. 5. p. 291.

[N] Others deny it.] I am inclin'd to be of their Opinion; for, beſides that Cicero, who was ſo often nam'd, and ſo often cited our Accius, either with Commendation, or, at leaſt, without blaming him, would, with an ill Grace, abuſe him in his 1ſt Book de Legibus; I obſerve, that theſe Abuſes are altogether oppoſite to the Character of him, who is the Subject of this Article. Elevation, Grandeur, and Force, were the Character of Accius; and we have ſeen (47) the Teſtimony of Horace and Quintilian, concerning him; to which we may add two Verſes of Ovid, and a deciſive Decree of Paterculus.

(47) In the Remark [K].

Ennius arte carens, ANIMOSIQUE Accius oris
Caſurum nullo tempore nomen habent. (48)

(48) Ovid. Amor. lib. 1. Eleg. 15. ver. 19.

Ennius, the Artleſs, Accius the SUBLIME,
Shall ſtand, unmov'd, the rude Attacks of Time.

(40) Paterc. lib. 2. cap. 9.

" Clara (49) etiam par idem ævi ſpatium fuere ingenia, in togatis Afranii, in Tragœdiis Pacuvii atque " Attii uſque in Græcorum comparationem EVECTI, " magnumque inter hos ipſos facientis operi ſuo locum; adeo quidem ut in illis limæ, in hoc pene " plus videatur fuiſſe SANGUINIS. —— About the " ſame time flouriſh'd, in Oratory, Afranius, in Tragedy, Pacuvius, and Accius, whoſe Reputation rival'd that of the moſt famous Greeks; inſomuch " that there ſeem'd to be more Correctneſs in the latter, " but more Life and Spirit in the former." If this new Evidence, which I have produc'd, be as ſtrong as the foregoing; this, which follows, goes beyond all I have already reported; for here Accius is preferred to the great Euripides; " Accius poëta (50) ſuo " ingenio præcelluit Euripidem, qui fuit altus & in" genio ſublimus. —— The Poet Accius had a Genius " ſuperior to That of the lofty and ſublime Euripides." Another (51) celebrates Accius and Virgil for the two moſt excellent Poets of Rome: " An Latiæ Muſæ " non ſolos adytis ſuis Accium & Virgilium recepêre, " ſed eorum & proximis & procul à ſecundis ſacras " conceſſere ſedes? —— Did the Latin Muſes receive " not only Accius and Virgil into their Temple, but " even Poets of an inferior Claſs?" Is it likely that ſuch a Man wrote an Hiſtory worthy of this Cenſure of Cicero (52): " Nam quid Accium memorem, cu" jus loquacitas habet aliquid argutiarum, nec id ta" men ex illa erudita Græcorum copia, ſed ex librari" olis Latinis? In orationibus autem multus & in" eptus, ad ſummam impudentiam. —— Why ſhould " I mention Accius, in whoſe wordy Style there is " indeed ſome Wit; but a Wit borrow'd from the " trifling Productions of the Latins, not from the " learned Græcian Stores? Beſides, in his Speeches he " is tedious and impertinent, even to the higheſt De" gree of Aſſurance." Obſerve well, that the Annals of the Tragic Poet Accius were in Verſe; and that Cicero ſpeaks here only of thoſe who had writ Hiſtories in Latin Proſe; for he ſays nothing of Ennius. Our beſt Critics think that this Paſſage of Cicero is corrupted; and that we muſt not read Accium, but Macrum. So that the Cenſure will fall on the Hiſtorian Licinius Macer. Voſſius (53) embraces this Opinion; but when he brings for a Proof the Friendſhip that was between Siſenna and him, whom Cicero abus'd, when, I ſay, he concludes from thence, that Cicero did not ſpeak of Accius, he is miſtaken; for, by his good leave, Accius and Siſenna, were very near of the ſame Age. (54) Siſenna was old after the Civil War of Marius and Sylla; that is to ſay, about the Year 672 of Rome, and Accius was not dead in 665.

(49) Cicero in Bruto. c. 78. See alſo the Oration pro Cluentio.

(50) Acron. upon Horace, Epiſt. 1. L. 2.

(51) Columella de Re Ruſtica, lib. 1. Præf.

(52) Cicero de Legibus, lib. 1.

(53) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. lib. 1. c. 10.

(54) Vell. Paterc. lib. 2. c. 9.

[O] Paſs for one of our Poet's Relations.] St Jerome obſerves (55), ſpeaking of the Poet Accius, That he was carried to Piſaurum, when the Romans ſent a Colony there; and that there was a ſpot of Ground near the City, called Fundus Accianus. It was his Share of the Land, which was divided among the Inhabitants of That new Colony. Scaliger obſerves (56) upon this, That the Colony of Piſaurum was not ſettled 'till four Years after that of Bologna; that is, in the Year of Rome 568, fifteen Years before Accius was born. We may ſay, therefore, that St Jerome was miſtaken. Rome was a properer place of Reſidence for a Poet, who was the Glory of the Theatre in thoſe Times, than a Colony: But we muſt not imagine this Miſtake to be without any Foundation. Perhaps the Father of Accius follow'd thoſe, who conducted the Colony to Piſaurum; and perhaps The Patron to whom he ow'd his Liberty, was one of the chief Commiſſioners of That new Settlement. Now ſuppoſing he follow'd his Patron, he might have had That Land to his ſhare, which was afterwards call'd Fundus Accianus, and, among other Children, he might have left the Father of the Orator Accius. See how Cicero (57) ſpeaks of This Orator. " T. Ac" cium Piſaurenſem, cujus accuſationi reſpondi pro " A. Cluentio, qui & accurate dicebat & ſatis copi" oſe, eratque præterea doctus Hermagoræ præceptis, " quibus etſi ornamenta non ſatis opima dicendi, ta" men ut haſtæ velitibus amentatæ, ſic apta quæ" dam & parata ſingulis cauſarum generibus argu" menta traduntur. —— Titus Accius of Piſaurum, " to whoſe Accuſation I anſwer'd, in Defence of A. Clu" entius; who ſpoke accurately and fluently enough, and " was beſides vers'd in the Precepts of Hermagoras, " which, though deſtitute of the Pomp of Rhetoric, yet, " like the Darts flung by light-arm'd Soldiers, furniſh " us with apt and ready Arguments, in every kind of " Cauſe." Scaliger does not cenſure St Jerome, for having confuſedly (58) placed the great Reputation and Death of Pacuvius, in the third Year of the 156th Olympiad, and the great Reputation of Accius, in the ſecond Year of the 160th Olympiad. This can only ſerve to confound thoſe, who know that Pacuvius was fifty Years older than Accius. For if it ſhould be ſuppos'd, that Pacuvius died about 90 Years of Age, in the Year in which St Jerome ſpeaks of his Death, it muſt be ſaid that Accius was about 40 Years of Age, in the third Year of the 156th Olympiad; and yet, according to St Jerome, he was born in the Conſulſhip of Mancinus and Serranus, which falls under the ſecond Year of the 152d Olympiad. So that, as I hinted in the ſecond Remark, we muſt not depend entirely upon That Chronologiſt in this Caſe.

(55) In Chron. Euſeb. n. 1876.

(56) Scalig. Anim. in Euſeb. ib. ex Paterculo, lib. 1. cap. 15.

(57) Cicero in Bruto. c. 78. See alſo the Oration pro Cluentio.

(58) Pacuvius of Brunduſium was called a five Writer of Tragedies: He liv'd at Rome, would ſeldom appear'd Painting and Dramatic Poetry. Afterwards retiring to Tarentum, he died about 90 Years of Age. Euſeb. Chron. n. 1685.

[P] The Latin of this Accius.] Perſius and Martial were very ſevere upon People. (59)

(59) Perſ. Sat. 1. v. 76.

Eſt nunc (60) Briſæi quem venoſus liber Acci,
Sunt quos Pacuviuſque & verrucoſa moretur
Antiopa, ærumnis cor luctificabile fulta.

Some fond are grown of Fuſtian Accius' Rage,
Or love Pacuvius' antiquated Page.

(60) Caſaubon upon that Paſſage ſuppoſes that it ſhould be read Briſeis, and that it was the Title of a Tragedy of Accius. Scriverius, in Teſtim. de Attio, is miſtaken in believing that Perſius does not ſpeak of the Tragic Poet.

So

So great Antiopa in Grief appears,
The Tragic Tale diſſolves them into Tears.

Here what Martial ſays of them in the 91ſt Epigram of the 11th Book.

Attonituſque legis Terrai frugiferai,
Accius & quidquid Pacuviuſque vomunt.

You are extreamly fond of obſolete Expreſſions, ſuch as Terrai frugiferai, and whatever Accius and Pacuvius pour forth.

Had they imitated thoſe old Authors, in the manner our fineſt Wits imitate Marot at preſent, and the other Poets of the XVIth Century, in Fables, Ballads, Pindaric Odes, Stanzas, &c. compos'd deſignedly in their antiquated Style, I do not ſee that any Body could reaſonably have found Fault with them. But I ſuppoſe they made uſe of that obſolete Style in good earneſt, and took it for a Standard of Eloquence, either entirely adopting it, or mixing it with the Language of their own Times. See (61) the good Advice which Phavorinus gave a young Man in this Way of thinking. We are not ſubject at preſent to this Diſtemper. More Perſons are diſguſted even with a common Expreſſion, or run too eagerly after new coin'd Words, than affect to retain obſolete Expreſſions (62). Whenever the old Language is made uſe of, it is by way of Pleaſantry in Sallies of Wit; and Burleſque Works. It is only in Latin, that Authors are yet found, who are fond of the oldeſt Phraſes. Doubtleſs there was another ſort of Men among the antient Romans, when Latin was come to it's Perfection. Theſe were perpetual Admirers of the old Poets, without uſing, or intending to make uſe of, their ſuperannuated Expreſſions; their Intention was only to mortify the Writers of their own Time, by extolling thoſe of Antiquity above them. Horace apprehended their Deſign perfectly, when he ſaid,

Sic fautor veterum, ut tabulas peccare vetantes,
Quas bis quinque viri ſanxerunt, fœdera regum
Vel Gabiis, vel cum rigidis æquata Sabinis,
Pontificum libros, annoſa volumina vatum
Dictitet Albano Muſas in monte locutas.
- - - - - - -
Jam Saliare Numæ carmen qui laudat, & illud
Quod mecum ignorat, ſolus vult ſcire videri,
Ingenii non ille favet, plauditque ſepultis,
Noſtra ſed impugnat, nos noſtraque lividus odit. (63)

(63) Horat. Epiſt. 1. lib. 2. ver. 23.

So fond of all that's antient are we grown,
Nothing, forſooth, of modern Date will down.
Or'e the Decemvirs Laws devout we pore,
And antient Leagues, with Sabines made, adore.
The Augur's Leaves tranſported we admire,
And Bards, grown obſolete, can never tire.
Theſe flow'd not, ſure, from any human Skill:
*The Muſes gave them from th'*Aonian Hill.
- - - - - - -
When Numa's Song above our Verſe you raiſe,
And, what you underſtand not, dare to praiſe,
'Tis not, that fond of antient Bards you're grown;
Envy forbids you to applaud our own.

This is a Diſtemper from which our Age is alſo exempted. We are contented to place Greece and antient Rome above our own Age; but we do not prefer the Speeches and Poems of the XVth and XVIth Centuries, before thoſe which are made at preſent.

(61) Aulus Gellius, lib. 1. cap. 10. See likewiſe Ibid. cap. 7.

(62) The Orator Siſenna had this Affectation. Cicero in Bruto. Salluſt was accus'd of it; Sueton. in Aug. c. 86. & in vita Gramm. c. 15. and of the contrary Affectation, that is, of coining new Words. Aul. Gell. lib. 1. cap. 15.

ACCO. Charles Stephens reports that ſhe was an Old Woman, who ran mad with Vexation, by ſeeing in a Looking-glaſs how homely old Age had made her. He cites the 15th Chapter of the 6th Book of Cælius Rhodiginus, but (a) nothing like it is to be found there. The Continuator of Moreri adds, That this Woman pleas'd herſelf with ſpeaking to her Image before a Looking-Glaſs; and that oftentimes ſhe ſeem'd to refuſe, what ſhe moſt deſired. Plutarch adds, continues he, that Mothers us'd to frighten little Children, and keep them to their Duty, with her Name. He cites the 16th Book of Cælius Rhodiginus, and Cicero's Second ad Atticum. I ſhall criticiſe on this Paſſage [A] below. In the mean time let us hear what Rhodoginus ſays in a Paſſage, which is not (b) cited. Acco doated in ſuch a manner, that when ſhe look'd in her Glaſs, ſhe entertain'd herſelf with her Reſemblance, as if it had been another Woman; ſhe was ſeen to make uſe of Signs, Promiſes, Threats, Smiles, and of all that is practiſed in Converſation. Others write, that ſhe endeavoured ſometimes to drive a Nail with a Spunge as if ſhe had held a Hammer. Rhodoginus ſays no more of her. As for Plutarch, he (c) only ſays, that Chryſippus did not approve of frightning us from our Sins by the Divine Juſtice; For, ſaid he, we don't want Arguments againſt what is ſaid about Divine Puniſhments, which ſhew that ſuch Diſcourſes reſemble thoſe of good Women, who frighten little Children with Acco and Alphito [B], to hinder them from idling away their time. Plutarch ſhews afterwards that Chryſippus contradicted himſelf.

(a) Lloyd alters nothing, except that he cites Rhodiginus at the 16th Book, chap. 2.

(b) The 2d chap. of the 15th Book. He ſays, that he read this in the Epitome of the Adages of Tarræus and Dydimus.

(c) Plutarch. de Stoicorum repugnant. p. 1040. B.

[A] Criticiſe on this Paſſage.] Firſt, None of the three Authors mentioned have ſaid, That Acco ran mad with Vexation, for having ſeen herſelf ugly in a Looking-glaſs; and that ſhe ſeem'd to refuſe what ſhe moſt deſired. This is aſcribed to Plutarch by Name, and for this Reaſon, becauſe, after having reported Acco's Folly, her being deceiv'd by her own Image, and her Diſſimulation, the next Words are, Plutarch adds.—But I. This is to aſſert that Plutarch reported theſe three Facts; and conſequently is to deceive the World, ſince That Author only relates what I have cited of him. II. How careleſs is it to cite only Cicero 2d ad Atticum? Does he mean the 2d Letter or the 2d Book? muſt the Reader be left to gueſs which? Muſt he be at the trouble to examine what Letter, what Book it is? They, who ſhall have the Patience to look for it, will yet loſe their Labour. They will find in the 19th Letter of the 2d Book. Certi ſumus periiſſe omnia: quid enim ἀνατόμεθα tam diu? My third Cenſure is, that Cicero is falſely cited; He ſays nothing of Acco. The Greek Word he made uſe of, and which many other Authors uſe to ſignify what we call wheedling, evading, raiſing Difficulties about things, which we heartily wiſh for; that Word, I ſay, which Eraſmus (1) plac'd among his Proverbs, gave occaſion to ſuſpect that Acco was an Hypocrite; but it is only a Conjecture; and it ought not to be permitted an Author to cite Plutarch, or Cicero, or Cælius Rhodiginus, for Conjectures which other Perſons have advanc'd.

(1) See Acciſare, in Adag. chil. 2. cent. 2. n. 99.

[B] Who frighten little Children with Acco, and Alphito.] I do not believe there is any Country in the World where there is not the like Cuſtom. I have heard it condemn'd by very ingenious Doctors. The ancient Romans had their Manducus, wherewith they threaten'd Children, as I ſhall obſerve under that Word.

ACCORDS (STEPHEN TABOUROT, Lord of) Advocate of the Parliament of Dijon, and afterwards the King's Advocate of the Bailiwick and Chancery of the ſame Town, was born in the Year 1549 (a). He was a Man of Wit and Letters, but too fond of Trifles. This appears from a Work of his, entitled Bigarrures (The Miſcellany),

(a) It appears from an Inſcription round his Picture, that in 1584 he was 35 Years of Age.

Digitized by Google

Miſcellany), the firſt Edition of which is of Paris, in 1582 [A]. I have quoted it upon ſome occaſions (b). This was not his firſt Performance; for he had printed ſome Songs (c): which la Croix du Main, and du Verdier Vau-Privas, were not aware of. His Work, which he calls Les Touches (The Touches), was printed at Paris in the Year

(b) See the Table of Matters in the Word ACCORDS

(c) See the 4th Book of his Miſcellany, the Paris Edition, for Maucroy, in 1602, in 12mo. p. 477.

[A] A Work of his, entitled—The Miſcellany, the firſt Edition of which is of Paris, in 1582.] He points out this Year in the Preface to the ſecond Edition, and he ought rather to be believed, than La Croix du Main, and Du Verdier Vau-Privas, who place the firſt Edition of the Miſcellany in 1583. The firſt Book of the Miſcellany is divided into twenty two Chapters, which treat, among other Matters, of the Rebus's of Picardie, of Puns, of Antiſtrophes, of Alluſions, of Acroſtics, of the Ecchо, of Leonin Verſes, and other Sorts of Meaſure, pleaſantly and ingeniouſly contrived, of Epitaphs, &c. All theſe are full of Mirth and Gaity, as La Croix du Main aſſures us (1). The Printer does not diſſemble, that he publiſhed this Work without the Author's leave, "Who declared publickly, (ſays he) (2) that Age, Time, and his Profeſſion, had altered his Humour and Inclination; and that it would ill become him to lay claim to what he compoſed in his early Years, and in the Flower and Gaity of his Youth; being then ſcarce eighteen Years old; and that, when he ſhall have given proof of his Abilities, in ſome noble and learned Subject, he would adviſe not to ſtrangle his natural and illegimate Off-ſpring, got out of Marriage; for ſo he uſed to call his three firſt Books. Whence I judged that he was only looking about for an Excuſe; which determined me to publiſh this Copy." Our Author, on his part, does not fail to pretend Ignorance. "I was very much ſurprized, ſays he (3), when I ſaw the firſt Impreſſion of this Book, the Memory of which I thought was extinct. But, upon reading it again, as a new Work, not having ſeen it theſe fourteen Years, I preſently diſcovered my own Genius and Style, at a time, when I compoſed it, firſt, for my own Diverſion, and afterwards for that of others; in which I obſerved no Method, but threw together my Thoughts, without Connexion, as Whim and Fancy directed. The Book conſiſts of looſe detach'd Pieces, written upon Scraps of Paper, adjuſted together at different Times, a great part of which I always believed was loſt. But, as every one is fond of his own Work, I had ſome Thoughts, at that time, of ſending the Remainder of my Papers, which have encreaſed ſince that time, together with thoſe, which had been omitted." Notwithſtanding this He adopts and owns this ſecond Edition. "Upon which account, continues he (4), I have read over this idle Book from one end to the other, which I never did before, in order to re-publiſh it according to my own true Conception of it. And as ſince that time I have recollected ſome little Pieces of a curious Nature, and others have been kindly communicated to me by one of the moſt learned Men in France, on the ſame Subject, I have added them to it in the Manner of an Appendix by the Author."

(1) Biblioth. Fr. p. 80.

(2) A. Paſquier's Advertiſement to the Reader, at the beginning of the Miſcellany.

(3) The Author's Preface to the Edit. of the Miſcellany. It is dated at Verroney, Sept. 15. 1584.

(4) The ſame, fol. A. v.

Paſquier diſapproved of Tabourot's making Additions to his Miſcellany. It was ſtaying too long, he thought, in places which ought only to be paſſed by; and which ought to be conſidered as a Traveller's Inn, not as his Lodging. Such a Work ſhould be looked upon as an Excurſion, not as a fix'd Abode. Youth is an excuſe for ſpending a few Hours in ſuch Trifles; but if, ſome Years after, an Author applies himſelf to retouch them, and to make Additions, it ſeems as if he intended tanquam ad Sirenum ſcopulos conſeneſcere, to grow old at the Sirens Rocks. After this manner Paſquier expreſs'd himſelf in a Letter to the Sieur Tabourot, in the Year 1584. "I have read over your entertaining Miſcellany, and I read it with Pleaſure, not only on account of that Friendſhip I bear you, but likewiſe for that genteel and lively Wit, with which it abounds; or rather becauſe it is ſomething whimſical, and diverſify'd with a great Variety of fine Strokes. I could wiſh there had been no Additions made to the firſt Impreſſion. If I judge right, many of the Additions do not reliſh of your Wit; and I ſhould eaſily be perſwaded, that ſome other Hand has beſtowed theſe ill-tim'd Alms upon you. We ſhould conſider ſuch Subjects as matter of meer Diverſion, not as a Duty incumbent on us, and which requires our whole Attention. You will find by this, that I love and honour you, ſince I take the Liberty, for the firſt time, to addreſs myſelf thus freely to you (5).

(5) Paſquier's Letters, B. 8. Tom. 1. p. 492, 493.

I believe Des Accords did not regard this Advice, and that he made ſtill farther Additions to his Miſcellany, when he reprinted it. I have the Paris Edition of 1614, where we find not only the fourth Book of the Miſcellany; but likewiſe the facetious Tales of the Sieur Gaulard, &c. collected by the Sieur Des Accords. This fourth Book is not preceded either by a ſecond or third; nevertheleſs the Author gives many Reaſons why he calls it the fourth (6), and, among other things, ſays, that "this whole Volume would not have been new and uncommon enough, if he had followed the Example of the generality of Authors." He confeſſes, that he added the Tales of the Sieur Gaulard to promote the Sale. "They, ſays he (7), who have purchaſed only the firſt Book, in order to laugh and be merry, will be induced to buy this likewiſe for the ſake of the entertaining Pieces I have mixed with it; ſuch as the Apophthegms, or deſigned Blunders, or abſurd Reflexions of Mr Gaulard; which have been imitated by ſeveral others in France; but it is unjuſt to rob our Burgundian of the Glory of the Invention. By this means I act like the Widow of a certain Caſtilian, who would not ſell his Horſe, without his Cat.

(6) Preface to the 4th Book of the Miſcellany.

(7) The ſame, fol. A. iii.

Obſerve, that the fourth Book of the Miſcellany is more ſerious than the firſt. It is divided into three Chapters. The firſt contains certain Obſervations uſeful in the Education of Children: the ſecond relates to the Change of the Sir-Name; the third contains many particular Remarks on the French Poetry. The Work ends with a Dicourſe on pretended Sorcerers, and their Impoſtures. The whole abounds with curious Matters, and may be read with profit. This particular Character of the fourth Book is one of the Reaſons, which the Author alledges in juſtification of his having publiſhed it before the ſecond or third. It will be proper to produce his own Words. They will convince us, that he had not given up his ludicrous way of writing, upon Paſquier's Letter to him, ſince he apologizes for continuing it. "I did this (8), ſays he (9), chiefly with a Deſign of ſhewing by the Stile of this Book, that my Mind is diſpoſed to other Subjects, as well as Burleſque ones, and to ſtop the Mouths of a Set of ignorant Detractors, who have maliciouſly objected this to me. And as to thoſe who diſapprove, that a Man of my Profeſſion ſhould deſcend to ſuch Trifles both in Proſe and Verſe, I refer them to the learned preliminary Letter of the great Paſquier's French Epiſtles, who has ſhewn, as well from ſtrong Reaſons, as Examples, that we ought not to confine our Genius ſo obſtinately to one ſingle Profeſſion, as never to allow it to unbend itſelf in more lively and gay Studies. I certainly commend thoſe, who, like the Germans, can reſtrain themſelves from following more than one Profeſſion at once; but we muſt not therefore blame others, who, having a Genius for ſeveral, are able to manage them ſo well, as in every one to be little, if at all, inferior to the particular Profeſſors of each. It is well known, that the French Genius is full of this Vivacity and Variety, and it is againſt our Inclinations when we are tied down to one Science. Why then ſhould it be thought wrong in me, that I ſpend That Time (which others trifle away) in this honourable Employ, which is not empty and fruitleſs if we examine it nearly?

(8) i. e. publiſh the 4th Book before the 2d and 3d.

(9) Preface to the 4th Book of the Miſcellany, fol. A. ii.

But he gives another Reaſon, which particularly ſhews, that he ſubmitted but a little time to the Attacks of his Critics, and that he had no Intention to ſuppreſs the ſecond Book, tho' a little too looſe. "In the ſecond, ſays he (10), I treat in the ſame manner of Periphraſes, Hyperboles, Metonymies, Metaphors, Synechdoches, &c. and That in the propereſt French Terms I could chuſe, and with ſuch entertaining

(10) Pref. to the 4th Book of the Miſcellany, A. iii.

Digitized by Google

Year 1585 [B]. It is a Collection of ingenious Pieces of Poëtry, it must be confeſs'd; but for the moſt part on obſcene Subjects, which he handled too freely, according to the vitious Practice of thoſe Times. The ſame Vein runs thro' his Miſcellany. He was reproach'd with this, which oblig'd him to juſtify himſelf [C]. Some aſcribe to him A Dictionary of French Rhimes [D]. Laſtly, The Lordſhip of Accords is an " entertaining Examples, as muſt give the Reader Plea-

" ſure. At preſent I ſhall take no notice of what may " appear in it too looſe and offenſive to the Ears of our " preſent ſqueamiſh Critics, as well as Thoſe former" ly; and ſhall paſs on directly to the fourth, in " order to ſatisfy Thoſe of a more ſerious turn of " Mind, who will have reaſon to thank me for
" ſome Diſcoveries never touched on, I believe, be" fore."

[B] His Work which he calls —— The Touches, was printed at Paris, in 1585.] He divided it into three Books and dedicated the firſt to a Prelate, namely Pontus of Tyard, Lord of Biſſy, and Biſhop of Chalon. He boaſts of having compoſed them (11) in two Months, at Verdum upon Saone, in the Year 1585 (12); and tells us they are a kind of Epigrams, to which the Name of Touches is properly applied; " For it is a kind of light Fencing, in which with " my Foil I give only a Touch, which ſcarce " ſcratches the Skin, and cannot wound the Fleſh " (13)." In another place he tells us (14), " That " The Touches is a Term borrowed from Fencers, " who call the Thruſt given with their Foils a " Touch, the Mark of which appears upon the Cloaths " of him that was hit, by reaſon of the Chalk, " with which the Foil is whiten'd, &c." The Touches of Des Accords, which are generally printed at the end of the Miſcellany, are different from thoſe I am here ſpeaking of.

(11) In the Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(12) This is a Proof that he did not regard Paſquier's Advice.

(13) Epiſt. Dedicat.

(14) Advertiſement of the Touches, printed with the Miſcellany.

[C] He was reproached with this, which obliged him to juſtify himſelf.] I have quoted his Apology (15) in another place; and ſhall add here, that his Printer has thought fit to confirm it. " I have " publiſhed, ſays he (16), the whole Copy, not ca-
" ſtrating any of thoſe Expreſſions, which may be " thought too looſe and indecent, provided they " were witty; for, notwithſtanding the Author
" would have regard paid to chaſte Ears, and would
" deſignedly have ſuppreſs'd ſeveral Paſſages, yet,
" having heard him hint, that it was ipſum evitare
" Priapum, and that an infinite Number of fine
" Strokes would loſe all their Beauty, without this
" Liberty, I choſe rather to follow his Opinion,
" than his Advice. He will pardon me for diving
" ſo far into his Thoughts; and let the following
" Lines of Catullus apologize for me;

(15) In the Remark [M] of the Article MAROT.

(16) Andr. Paſquet.

Caſtum eſſe decet pium Poëtam
Ipſum, verſiculos nihil neceſſe eſt;
Qui tum denique habent ſalem & leporem,
Si ſunt Molliculi, & parum Pudici *

* Carm. 16. ver. 5.

Chaſte muſt the Bard in every Action be,
Whilſt his gay Muſe from this Reſtraint is free.
Then only Verſe can Wit and Humour know,
When wanton and ſcarce chaſte the Numbers flow.

" And I will venture to affirm, that this ought to " be ſo far from offending any Perſon (ſome Hy" pocrites excepted) that, on the contrary, it will
" ſerve to put our Youth in mind, not to amuſe
" themſelves ſo much in theſe curious Enquiries,
" ſince they are to be met with in ſuch Abundance,
" as is enough to create a Diſguſt towards them; and
" will occaſion their applying themſelves to the rea" ding of good Books, whence they may reap Ad" vantage: for I am fully perſwaded, that the Mul-
" tiplicity of Books, which we have at preſent, muſt
" prevent the mind from examining into, and care-
" fully peruſing, the beſt; even tho' we were ſure
" to meet with Authors, who could teach us to find
" out a Hare's Form, or tell us where ready-chaw'd
" Meat was to be had. As to the Smut, I cannot " imagine it will be ſo offenſive, as Virgil's Pria-
" peia, the Epigrams of Catullus and Martial, Ovid's
" Amours, Terence's Comedies, Petronius Arbiter, and " in ſhort, the fineſt Pieces of Antiquity, which are
" propoſed to our Youth as Patterns of Excellency;
" whereas our Author's Immodeſty can never be " conſidered in ſuch a Light. But farther, every " thing in this Book is curious, genteel, and inge-
" nious; and the Author need not apologize for
" himſelf, by alledging the Levity of the Subject."
The meaning of all this is, that Des Accords did not take this Liberty, in order to favour the Paſſions of the Heart, but purely to amuſe the Imagination, and not to rob his Poetry of that Seaſoning, which would render it more agreeable and high-flavoured, according to the Taſte, which prevailed for many Ages. He was not ignorant of the Maxim, that coarſe Smut is leſs dangerous than that which is delicate: for thus he applys it, in his own Vindication.

" Des Amadis (17).
" Qui voudra voir ces Ecrits,
" Les liſe aupres de S'amie,
" Car ils donneront envie
" A tous deux d' être laſcifs.

(17) Des Accords in the Touches, printed with the Miſcellany, at Paris, for Maucroy, in 1662. 12mo pag. 82.

Of The Amadis.

You who would know the Force theſe Lines impart,
Read them before the Miſtreſs of your Heart.
The tender Tale the melting maid will move,
And both diſſolve in Extacies of Love.

D'un Lecteur d'Amadis, qui blâmoit les Bigarrures.

Toi, qui permets les lectures
D' Amadis, & ne veux vas
Qu'on liſe les Bigarrures,
Cauteleuſment tu as Apperceu que les mot gras
N' entrent vivement dans l' ame,
Pour ſuborner une dame,
Comme les mignards appas.

On a Reader of the Amadis, who found fault with the Miſcellany.

Whilſt you with wanton Amadis engage,
But ſhun the Miſcellany's ſportive Page,
Wiſely your nice Diſcernment you approve,
That coarſe Expreſſions leſs the Paſſions move,
Than thoſe ſoft Touches, which the Fair inſpire,
Spight of themſelves, with looſe and warm Deſire.

This puts me in mind of a Thought of Sorel. " The " Poets, ſays he (18), who compoſe Works liable to " the Cenſure of the Magiſtrate, and which are u-
" ſually burnt by the Hands of the Executioner,
" are very great Fools, in imagining, that they are
" pleaſing to Debauchees; whereas it is impoſſible to " read their obſcene Collections without deſiring to " quit the Sport, they being ſo leud and wicked, as " to create Horror in the Reader." But, not to diſſemble any part of his Sentiment, I muſt obſerve, that he qualifies this a little. " But, when I give " this as my Opinion, purſues he (19), I am aware,
" that it may be ſaid, that we ought not then to " forbid the reading of them, ſince they inſpire Men
" with a hatred to Vice. But generous Minds on" ly find the Effect: and we ought not enjoin ſuch
" Penances, as expoſe Men to Temptation. There " are but too many, who take a Pleaſure in being
" converſant with Filth."

(18) Sorel's Remarks on the Extravagant Shepherd, B. 11. p. 379. Edit. of Roüen, in 1646. in 2 Vol. 8vo.

(19) The ſame, p. 379.

(20) Biblioth. Franſoiſe, p. 156.

(21) The ſame, p. 222. and obſerve, that he ſays, this Dictionary of French Rhimes was printed at Paris for Galiot du Pre, 1572.

[D] Some aſcribe to him A Dictionary of French Rhimes.] La Croix du Main had made him Author of a Book, entitled French Rhimes (20); but he corrected himſelf, and acknowledged (21) that it ought to be aſcribed to John le Fevre, a Native of Dijon, Secretary an imaginary Fief, founded upon a Device of his Anceſtors [E]. Obſerve that WILLIAM TABOUROT, his Father, who was Advocate of the Parliament of Dijon, King's Council, and Maſter extraordinary of the Chamber of Accounts, is much commended by Peter of St Julian, in his Work Of the Origin of the Burgundians (d). He died the 24th of July 1561, in the 46th Year of his Age (e).

Digitized by Google

(d) See la Croix du Main, p. 154.

(e) See his Epitaph in his Son's Miſcellany.

(24) Pref. to the 4th Book of the Miſcellany.

(25) Ibid. c. 2. B. 4.

Secretary of the Cardinal de Givri, and Canon of Langres. This Retractation is juſt; for Des Accords declared, that this Work did not belong to Him. Theſe are his Words, at the end of his Chapter on French Poetry: "I ſhall hereafter, ſays he (22), give "my Opinion more fully, in the Collection I am "preparing of the French Poetics; in which I find "the way ſmooth'd for me, with great Learning "and Labour, by Pelletius, divinely and much to "the Purpoſe by Ronſard (as he does every thing), "and with great Addreſs (conſidering his Time) "by Quintil the Critic, and ſeveral others: whoſe "Aſſiſtance I ſhall make uſe of, mentioning their "Names, and referring to their Text, in compiling "a Sequel to the Dictionary of French Rhimes, by my "Uncle, Mr Le Fevre, which I ſhall ſhortly publiſh."

(22) Bigot-rures, B. 4. c. 3. p. 494.

What inclines me to believe he kept his Word, is a Paſſage which I meet with in the Dictionary of French Rhimes, printed at Paris, in 1596, by the Heir of Euſtace Vignon, in Octavo. The Author begins thus: "At firſt, ſays he (23), I collected this "Dictionary, by way of Amuſement, almoſt as it is "at preſent, as to the Quantity of Words, being "deſirous to aſſiſt the Defect of a treacherous "Memory. Afterwards meeting with That of "the Sieur Des Accords, enriched with ſeveral Re-"marks upon Rhime, I was prompted to review "my own, and to philoſophize a little upon this "Subject; which I have not done without Succeſs."

(23) Pref. to the Dictionary.

[E] The Lordſhip of Accords is an imaginary Fief, founded upon a Device of his Anceſtors.] Let us hear his own Account: "Since in my Diſcourſe, ſays he (24), on changing the Sir-Name (25), I blame "thoſe who do it; and ſince, by aſſuming the Title "of Lord of Accords, I declare myſelf worthy of "the ſame Cenſure; I muſt inform you, that my "Name is compoſed of the firſt Letters of the ſe-"veral Chapters of my firſt Book, by way of Acro-"ſtic (26); and after the ſame manner the ſecond "Book informs you of it's Age, and the Place "where it was compoſed. But to raiſe the Subject, "I did not put my real Name, but a Lordſhip "framed upon a Device of my own, which was a "Drum * (27), round which I put theſe Words "A tous Accords, which had been conſtantly my "Father's, Grand Father's, and Great Grand Fa-"ther's Motto. In the Chapter of particular Re-"marks on the French Poetry, you will find the Occa-"ſion of erecting this Device into a Lordſhip." It is proper to produce what he relates in the Chapter to which he refers us. He had ſent a Song to "a "beautiful and virtuous young Lady, Daughter of "the late learned Preſident of Bourgogne, Mr Begat, "who, ſays he (28), did me the Honour to be in "Love with me. —— And whereas, continues he, "I had ſubſcribed the Sonnnet only with the "Words of my Device A tous Accords, ſhe was the "firſt, who, in her Anſwer, chriſten'd me Seigneur "des Accords, as her Father often afterwards called "me; for which Reaſon, in all my Writings ſince "that time, I have made choice of this Sir-Name, "and even in theſe Books." He gave himſelf likewiſe, by way of Anagram, the Name of Torvobatius, as Mr Baillat aſſures us (29).

(24) Pref. to the 4th Book of the Miſcellany.

(25) Ibid. c. 2. B. 4.

(26) The 1ſt Letter of the 1ſt chapter is an E; that of the 2d an S; and ſo on to the 1ſt of the 16th chap. which is a T; and all together they make ESTIENNE TABOUROT (Stephen Tabourot). This had been done by others before. See Mr Baillet in his Diſguiſed Authors, pag. 442, 446.

* In French Tambour.

(27) It was then a Speaking Device, and a plain Alluſion to his real Name Tabourot.

(28) Miſcellany, B. 4. c. 3. p. 491. 492.

(29) Ubi ſupra, p. 440, 607.

ACCURSIUS, Profeſſor of Civil Law in the XIIIth Century, was a Florentine. He acquired a very great Reputation by the Comments he compoſed on the Body of the Law. It is ſaid that he begun but late to ſtudy the Law; and that he was 40 Years of Age [A] when he firſt attended the Lectures of the famous Azo. He had applied himſelf before that time to other Studies. The Progreſs he made in the Civil Law was ſo great, that he became a famous Profeſſor in that Science, which he taught at Bologna; and, afterwards burying himſelf in Retirement, he compos'd A Perpetual Comment on the whole Law, which appeared ſo convenient and uſeful to young Students, that the former Gloſſes were no more ſpoken of, which doubtleſs were not ſo well diſpoſed, nor ſo compleat. Some think that the Contradictions, which are obſerv'd in Accurſius, do not proceed from his Inconſtancy, or a Defect of Memory, but from this, viz. that in reporting the different Opinions of thoſe, who had preceeded him, he had diſtinguiſhed them only by the initial Letters of their Names: Which Letters diſappearing in ſeveral Places, was the Cauſe of his Readers taking that for His Opinion, which he only produced in Proof of another's Sentiments. His Authority was formerly ſo great [B], that ſome call'd him the Idol of the [A] And that he was 40 Years of Age.] Others ſay that he was but 28. "Jam quadragenarius, vel, ut "alii ſcribunt xxviii. annos natus jus civile ab Azone "audivit. —— At the Age of 40, or as others write "xxviii, he learnt Civil Law from Azo." Theſe are Pancirollus's Words (1), in the 147th Page of his ſecond Edition, which is That of Venice, 1655. Sir Thomas Pope Blount (2), citing Pancirollus, and Konig, puts 37, and not 28 Years. The Citation of Konig is good, but that of Pancirollus is not, unleſs my Edition differs from the firſt. Forſter would have been more properly cited (3); for he reports, that Accurſius became a Diſciple of Azo, at 37 Years of Age. See the Remark [F].

(1) Pancir. de clar. Leg. Interpr. lib. 2. cap. 29.

(2) Pope Blount's Cenſ. Celeb. Autor. p. 286.

(3) Forſter's Hiſtory of the Civil Law, lib. 3. c. 12.

[B] His Authority was formerly ſo great.] I cannot cite any thing more proper or entertaining, in this Place, than a Paſſage quoted by one of the modern Civilians, with whom the Gloſſographers were leaſt in Eſteem. "Noſtis (4) quanta ſit autoritas gloſſatoris. "Nonne heri dixit Cyn. Gloſſam timendam propter "præſcriptam Idololatriam per Advocatos, ſignificans "quod ſicut Antiqui adorabant Idola pro Diis, ita "Advocati adorant Gloſſatores pro Evangeliſtis. Vo-"lo enim potius pro me Gloſſatorem quam Textum; "nam ſi allego Textum, dicunt Advocati diverſæ "partis & etiam Judices, credis tu quod Gloſſa non "ita viderit illum Textum, ſicut Tu, & non ita bene "intellexerit, ſicut tu? Ego recordor (& ſit illud pro "novo) quod dum eſſem Scholaris, eram ſatis acu-"tus, & dum ſemel eſſemus multi Socii in una colla-"tione, auſus fui unum Textum allegare contra "ſententiam Doctoris mei: tantam audaciam habui. "Dixit unus Socius, Tu loqueris contra Gloſſam, quæ "dicit ſic. Et ego reſpondi, etſi Gloſſa dicit ſic, ego "dico ſic; ignarus auctoritatis Gloſſatorum. Crede-"bam enim quod eſſent quales ſunt in libris Gram-"maticæ, ſicut ſuper Virgilio & Ovidio, ſed tamen "non ita eſt; fuerunt enim Gloſſatores maximæ ſci-"entiæ viri & auctoritatis. Magis ergo ſtandum eſt "eis qui viderunt totum corpus Juris, quam nobis "qui non vidimus. — "You know the great Autho-"rity of a Commentator. Was it not ſaid yeſterday "by Cyn. that a Comment was a terrible thing, on "account of That Idolatry always paid to it by the "Advocates; intimating, that as the Antients adored "Idols for Gods, ſo the Advocates adored Commen-"tators for Evangeliſts. I had much rather have "the Comment, than the Text, favour my Opinion; "for, if I appeal to the Text, the Advocates, on the "other ſide, and even the Judges, cry out, Do you think

(4) Raphaël Fulgoſius de Action. & Oblig. apud Fr. Hottomannum, Præf. Conſi-lorum.

Digitized by Google

(a) Taken out of Pancirollus, lib. 2. cap. 2. de claris Legum Interpret. p. 147, &c.

the Advocates (a). Moſt Interpreters have taken as much (b) or more (c) Care to explain his Gloſs, as to comment on the very Text of the Law. Some Critics, great Lovers of polite Language, have exclaim'd with great vehemence againſt the barbarous Stile of this Author [C], but the general Opinion is, that he was a great Genius; and that his Defects proceeded from the Age wherein he liv'd [D]. He liv'd very much at his eaſe, having both a fine City and Country-Houſe, and two Sons, who were very ſtudious, as we ſhall ſee preſently. Some Perſons ſay, that he had a very learned Daughter [E], and initiated in the Profeſſion of the Civil Law. He died in the Year 1229. at 78 Years of Age [F]. His Tomb is to be ſeen at Bologna, in the Church of the Cordeliers, with this (d) very ſhort and plain Inſcription, Sepulchrum Accurſii Gloſſatoris Legum, & Franciſci ejus filii.——The Tomb of Accurſius, the Commentator of Law, and his Son Francis. He ſaid there was no need of Theology [G] to teach us Divine Things, ſince the Roman Laws ſufficiently inſtructed

(b) Arth. Duck of the Uſe and Authority of the Roman Civil Law, lib. 1. cap. 2. in Pope Blount's Cenſ. celebr. Autor. pag. 236.

(c) Forſter's Hiſtory of the Civil Law, lib. 3. c. 12.

(d) Pancirol. ib. p. 149.

" think the Comment did not ſee the Text, and " underſtand it, as well as you? I remember, that, " when I was a School-Boy, I was very acute; and " that, many of us being together at the ſame Le- " cture, I had the Courage to cite one Text, againſt " the Opinion of my Maſter. One of my School-fel- " lows immediately ſaid, You ſpeak againſt the Com- " ment, which ſays thus. I reply'd, Though the " Comment ſays ſo, I ſay otherwiſe; ſo ignorant " was I of the Authority of the Commentators. For " I conſidered them in the ſame Light, as the Com- " mentators upon Grammatical Books, ſuch as Virgil " and Ovid: but the Caſe is otherwiſe; for the Com- " mentators were Men of the greateſt Learning and " Authority. It muſt therefore be ſafer to rely upon " their Authority, who had a full View of the whole " Body of the Law, than upon our own Judgment, " who have not." Hottomanus cites ſome other Paſſages of the ſame Author, which confirm the ſame thing; and informs us, that the Comment, put in Ballance againſt the Opinion of any Two Doctors, carried it always before the Judges. Si ſententia Gloſſatoris duobus Doctoribus eſt contraria, profecto in judiciis prævaleret ſententia ipſius Gloſſæ (5).

(5) Raphaël Fulgoſius, Id. ib. ubi ſupra.

[C]. Exclaim'd with great Vehemence againſt the barbarous Style of this Author.] Ludovicus Vives (6) was one of them. See Bernartius alſo in his Treatiſe of the Profit that reading of Hiſtory brings. Many Authors have been found among the Civilians of the XVIth Century, who have cenſur'd This Barbarity of Style. It ſeems Alciatus rouz'd them up, and gave them the firſt taſte for uniting Polite Literature with the Civil Law. Budæus, one of the warmeſt Cenſurers of Accurſius, contributed alſo to it (7). It cannot be denied, but that the Ignorance of good Literature, made the Commentators fall into divers Miſtakes. Albericus Gentilis declar'd himſelf much their Partizan; he (8) would not own that Accurſius put this Maxim in uſe, Græcum eſt, non poteſt legi, with which he (9) was reproach'd. He believes that thoſe Words are no where to be found in this Commentator; and makes him more learned in the Greek Tongue, than is generally thought. However it be, the Proverb Græcum eſt, non poteſt legi, paſſes for having deriv'd it's Original from theſe Commentators. It is pretended that, when they met with a Greek Word, they paſs'd it over, and gave for a Reaſon, that it was Greek, and could not be read; and having thus leap'd over this Ditch, they reſum'd the Explication of the Latin.

(6) Ludov. Vives, de cauſis corrupt artium, lib. 1. p. 62. & lib. 7. p. 206. See alſo Braſſicanus inter Epiſtol. Eobani Heſſi.

(7) See Paſquier's Recherch. de la France, l. 9. c. 39. p. 901. who gives the firſt Place to Budæus, and the ſecond to Alciatus.

(8) Alb. Gentilis de Juris interpretibus, fol. 29.

(9) See Sich. in præf. ad Cod. Theod. & Alciatum, cap. 10. l. 2. Diſpunct.

[D] That he was a great Genius, and that his Defects proceeded from the Age wherein he liv'd.] I ſhall only cite two Authors (10). " Hanc ſignificationem " in animo habuit Fr. Accurſius, Gloſſatorum vete- " rum Coryphæus, homo ingenii prorſus ſtupendi, " qui in tantis diſciplinarum tenebris ipſam diſcipli- " narum diſciplinam accuratiſſime intellexit, cum non " juriſdictionem, ſed juriſditionem ſcribendum cenſuit. " —— This was the Senſe of Francis Accurſius, the " Coryphæus of antient Commentators, a Man of a " prodigious Genius, who, in ſuch a dark Age of " Learning, thoroughly underſtood all the Principles of " Literature; for he was of Opinion it ſhould be wrote " Juriſditionem, not Juriſdictionem." This is the Teſtimony of a German: let us hear a Frenchman next (11). " Antiqui (Interpretes juris) inter quos Accur- " ſius & Bartolus principatum tenent, de ſermone non " valdè anxii, rerum quas tractant curam ſolam habue- " runt: quas cum noſſent, quantum in illa barbarie " & codicum depravatione noſſe poterant, explicare " niſi inconditè & barbarè nequiverunt, quod non " tam eis quam ſeculo illi tribuendum, quo linguæ & " bonæ literæ prorſus jacebant. —— The Ancients " (the Commentators on Law) among whom Accurſius " and Bartolus claim the Precedence, regardleſs of the " Language, employ'd their whole Concern upon the " Matter of their Compoſitions; which as they under- " ſtood no farther, than That Age of Barbarity, and " corrupt Copies of Books, permitted them; it was im- " poſſible they ſhould explain otherwiſe, than in a " rude and barbarous Manner; but this is not ſo " much to be aſcribed to them, as to the Age, in " which Languages and Learning were at a very low " Ebb." Note, that Barthius gives Accurſius the Chriſtian Name of Francis, and he is not the only (12) Perſon that does it: I follow'd theſe Authors in the firſt Edition, but I reject their Authority in this.

(10) Barthius in Animadv. in Claudiani Ruſin. lib. 2. v. 85. pag. 1200, & 1201.

(11) Rolandus Mareſius Epiſt. 40. lib. 1. p. 176, 177. Edit. Lipſ. 1687.

(12) Arth. Duck, nd. Pope Blount do it alſo. See Pope Blount, ubi ſupra.

[E] A very learned Daughter.] Pancirollus (13) mentions her only by hear-ſay. " Filiam quoque habuiſſe " dicitur, quæ jus civile Bononiæ publice docuit.—— " He is reported likewiſe to have had a Daughter, who " taught the Civil Law publickly at Bononia." When a Fact of this Nature is doubtful, it is very likely to be falſe; for ſuch Things are too remarkable to remain in uncertainty, if true. So that I do not give much Credit to what I have juſt now read in the Theatrum of Paul Freherus (14), that Accurſius had Daughters, who for their excellent Erudition, were employ'd to read publick Lectures at Bologna. I hope Freherus will not take it ill that I ſhould diſtruſt John Frauenlobius, of whom he cites a German Book.

(13) Pancir. ubi ſupra, p. 149.

(14) Paul. Freher. Theatr. Erudit. pag. 784.

[F] He died in the Year 1229, at 78 Years of Age.] You ſee nothing like it in the Theatrum (15) of Paul Freherus, which was compil'd with ſo much Labour, and during ſuch a long Time. But you will find, on the contrary, that Accurſius flouriſh'd in the Year 1236, that he died in the Year 1279, and that he wrote a Comment on the Authentics, in the Year 1236. He is himſelf cited for this laſt Particular, by (16) John Fichardus, in his Lives of the Civilians.

(15) Id. ib.

(16) Apud Freher. ib.

But that Citation is falſe, as appears from the following Obſervation communicated to me from good Hands (17). " Volaterranus ſays (18), That Accurſius be- " gan to ſtudy the Law at 40 Years, and that he di- " ed in the Year 1279. in the ſeventy eighth Year " of his Age; from whence it ſhould follow, that " he was born in the Year 1201. In the mean " time Accurſius himſelf informs us, in the Authen- " tic, Ut præp. nom. Imper. at the Word indictiones, " that he actually writ in the Year 1220. and on " the laſt Law but one in the Code De Accuſatio- " nibus, that he writ in the Year 1227. which he " could not have done, if the Calculation of Vola- " terran were true: Otherwiſe Accurſius muſt have " profeſſed the Law a long time before he ſtudied " it. Theſe Epochs of 1220, and 1227, exclude " that of 1236, which is faulty, and cannot be ad- " mitted by thoſe, who place Accurſius's Death in " 1229."

(17) Mr de la Monnoie.

(18) Volat. lib. 21. pag. 781.

[G] There was no need of Theology.] Conringius (19) cenſured him for it, as he ought to do; theſe are his Words; " Ridicula eſt Accurſii gloriatio in gl. " ad l. 10. ſect. 2. ff. de J. & J. nihil opus eſſe " Theologiæ ſtudio ad cognoſcenda divina, ut quæ " ex legum Romanarum libris affatim queat peti. " —— Accurſius's Boaſt (in gl. ad l. 10. ſect. 2. ff. " de J. & J.) that the Study of Theology was of no " uſe towards the Knowledge of Divine Things, they " being abundantly contained in the Books of the " Roman Laws, is very ridiculous.

(19) Conrin. de Civili Prudent. c. 3. in Pope Blount, ubi ſupra.

[H] Mr

Digitized by Google

ſtructed us in them. Mr Moreri is very much out in quoting [H] the Sieur Catel. Francis Hotomanus had no reaſon to ſay that Odofred taught Azo and Accurſius, for Odofred and Accurſius were both Scholars of Azo, and afterwards Profeſſors at the ſame time at Bologna. Albericus Gentilis remark'd this Miſtake of Francis Hotomanus (e).

(e) Alberic. Gentilis in his Dialogue de Juris Interpretibus, fol. 60.

[H] Mr Moreri is very much out in quoting.] Let us compare theſe two Authors Texts with each other, which will be ſufficient to demonſtrate the Miſtake. Catel having ſaid that Montpellier was one of the principal Cities of France (20), in which the Roman Law was read publickly, adds, "For we find that "the great and antient Civilian Placentinus, who "lived before the Commentator Accurſius, read the "Law publickly in the City of Montpellier, of which "he makes frequent mention in his Summa, which "he compoſed (he tells us in the Inſtitutes) during "his abode at Montpellier, as thoſe have obſerved "who wrote his Life. He died at Montpellier the "twelfth of February 1192, and lies buried in "St Bartholomew's Church-yard." Now hear Moreri. The Sieur Catel maintains that Accurſius died at Montpellier in 1192. That which he adds ſtands in great need of Correction; "Others, ſays he, as "Fiſcardius and Trithemius, place him in the following Century; nay, the laſt ſays, that he proſeſs'd at Bologna in 1240. But they may be miſtaken, in confounding that Great Man with his "Son Francis Accurſius, who was a Man of Merit "and Learning; and who was Profeſſor of Law at "Bologna, and Counſellor to Richard King of England." The Father ought to have been placed in the XIIIth Century, and then they would not have been in danger of confounding him with the Son: So that Mr Moreri's Doubt is very ill grounded. There was no King of England at that time, whoſe Name was Richard.

(20) Catel's Memoirs of the History of Languedoc, p. 293.

ACCURSIUS (CERVOT) Son of the Foregoing, was more in haſte to take his Degree than his Father: For he deſired to be Doctor of Law before the Age of Seventeen Years, and obtain'd his Requeſt, after it had been a long time diſcuſs'd, whether the Laws (a) permitted it. He apply'd himſelf to compoſing Comments, and added them to thoſe of his Father; but they were not much eſteem'd. Deterior Interpres ineptas gloſſas, & longè à vero diſtantes, paternis addidit; quæ Cervotianæ vocatæ ut plurimum rejiciuntur, (b)——Being a worſe Interpreter, he added his own Gloſſes to thoſe of his Father: they were call'd from him Cervotian, and are generally rejected.

(a) Pancirol. de clar. Leg. Interpr. lib. 2. c. 19.

(b) Id. ibid.

ACCURSIUS (FRANCIS) elder Brother of the Former, was ſo eſteem'd by the Bologneſe, that when they heard, that he intended to follow the King of England into France, to teach the Law, they forbad him to abſent himſelf, and threatened to confiſcate all his Eſtate, if he went out of their City. He thought he had outwitted them, by ſelling all his Eſtate to a Friend; but his Cunning prov'd ineffectual, for they confiſcated it nevertheleſs. This oblig'd him to return; and he obtain'd the Reſtitution of his Eſtate. He had taught at Toulouſe, and found himſelf one Day very much puzzl'd on the Subject of Intereſts. James of Ravanna, one of the moſt learned Civilians of his Time, crept in among his Auditors incognito, pretending to be one of the Scholars, and urged ſuch Objections to him, as were not eaſily anſwered. Some have ſaid that Accurſius, at his return to Bologna, was Profeſſor of Law there with Bartolus, and that having had a Diſpute with him on the reading of a certain Law, they ſent to conſult the antient Manuſcript of the Pandects at Piſa about it. But what probability is there, that he lived 'till the Time of Bartolus's being Profeſſor [A] (a)?

(a) Ex Pancirolo, ibid. pag. 143.

[A] 'Till the Time of Bartolus's being Profeſſor.] Bartolus was born in the Year 1313. and was admitted Doctor of Law at the Age of twenty one Years; that is, in the Year 1334 (1). So that Accurſius, the Son, muſt have lived at leaſt 120 Years, if he had ſeen Bartolus in his Profeſſion; for he had been (2) emancipated by his Father. Let us ſuppoſe, that he was but fifteen Years of Age, when he was emancipated, and that the Year of his Emancipation was the laſt of his Father, yet we ſhall find that in 1334, he muſt have been 120 Years old. Pancirollus's Conjecture is probable enough; (3) which is, that Accurſius, who was Bartolus's Colleague, was the Son of one Accurſius, who taught the Law at Reggio, his native Country, about the Year 1273, and that he taught likewiſe at Padua. William Duranti makes frequent mention of him.

(1) Pancirol. de clar. Leg. Interp. cap. 67.

(2) Id. ib. cap. 29.

(3) Id. ibid. cap. 42.

Let me add here another Obſervation of Mr De la Monnoie, "Antonius Auguſtinus ſpeaks in ſeveral "Places (4) of his Emendations on that Diſpute of "Bartolus in relation to the reading of a certain "Word in the laſt Paragraph of the Law Si creditor "at D. de Diſtract. pign. and is inclined to believe, "that Bartolus had that Diſpute rather with Baldus, "than with Francis the Son of Accurſius. Alexander of Imola, cited by the ſame Antonius Auguſtinus, believed alſo, that the Conteſt happened "between Baldus and Bartolus. But Bartolus himſelf having poſitively declared in Writing, that it "was with Francis the Son of Accurſius, the Expedient, which Pancirollus had found out, ſeems "rather to be admitted:" and I own myſelf of the ſame Opinion.

(4) Particularly in the 13th chapter of the 4th Book.

ACCURSIUS (MARIANGELUS) was one of the Critics, who lived in the XVIth Century: He was of Aquila [A], in the Kingdom of Naples. His ruling Paſſion

[A] He was of Aquila.] Beſides the Teſtimony of Toppi, approved by the Silence of Leonard Nicodemo; the following Verſes confirm this,

Ut volucrum Regina ſupervolat æthera, & alti
Immotum lumen ſolis in orbe tenet,
Sic illa genitus Mariangelus Urbe ——
Alite quæ à Jovia nobile nomen habet,
Felici ingenio ſolers ſpeculatur. ——
As, ſoaring high in Air, with ſteady gaze,
The Queen of Birds the Sun's bright Orb ſurveys,
So Mariangelus,
Sprung from That Town, which bears the Eagle's Name,
On Learning's Wings ſoars to Immortal Fame.

They are to be met with in a Piece of Francis Arſillus (1), printed at the end of a Collection of Verſes, entituled

(1) Leonardo Nicodemo miſtakes in calling him Arillius. Addiz. alla Bibl. Napolet. p. 170.

Digitized by Google

Paſſion was to ſearch for and collate old Manuſcripts, in order to correct the Paſſages of the Ancients. The Diatribæ, which he printed at Rome, in Folio, in the Year 1524, on Auſonius, Solinus, and Ovid, ſhew his Capacity in that kind of Learning. He had taken a great deal of Pains about Claudian [B], but That Work was not publiſh'd, though the Author aſſures us he had corrected above ſeven hundred Paſſages of it from the Ancient Manuſcripts. Barthius (a) has expreſs'd his Concern, that a Work of this nature was not printed, nor the others (b) reprinted. He does not think Accurſius contemptible on the ſcore of Wit, and finds him often to be very judicious. This Critic compoſed Latin and Italian Verſes [C]; he underſtood likewiſe both Muſic and Optics, and he travell'd to the North [D]. They who inform us of this, might add, That he underſtood the French, Spaniſh, and German Languages (c) perfectly: That he collected a great number of Antiques, which were repoſited in the Capitol, and that he ſpent 33 Years in the Court of Charles V. to whom he was very agreeable, and from whom he receiv'd many Favours. It muſt not be forgot that his Edition of Marcellinus (d) is larger [E] by five Books than the preceeding. That Edition is of Auſburg, 1533. He pretends to have corrected five thouſand Faults in that Hiſtorian (e). In the ſame Year, and in the ſame City, he publiſh'd the Letters of Caſſiodorus in Twelve Books, with the Treatiſe of the Soul added to it; and we are (f) oblig'd to him for the Firſt Edition of That Author. As there were ſome Latin Writers in his time, who affected to make uſe of the moſt antiquated Terms, he ridicul'd them very pleaſantly in a Dialogue [F], which he publiſhed

(a) Barth. upon Statius, Tom. 2. p. 399. Tom. 3. p. 1602. upon Claudian, p. 826. See alſo the 18th Chap. of the 20th Book of his Adverſaria.

(b) It was done with regard to Auſonius, in the Edition of Amſt. 1671. but not according to the Extent of the Title, which promiſes Notas integras Accurſii; the entire Notes of Accurſius.

(c) Nicolo Toppi Biblioth. Napolet. p. 206.

(d) Henry Valeſius's Preface to Ammian. Marcell.

(e) Toppi, ubi ſupra.

(f) Leonard Nicodemus's Additions to the Biblioth. Napolet. p. 170.

entituled Coryciana, which was publiſhed at Rome in the Year 1524. There is in that Collection, a Protrepticon of our Accurſius ad Coricium (2), which contains eighty ſeven Verſes. The Title of Arſillus's Piece is, De Poëtis urbanis ad Paulum Jovium. Pierius Valerianus, cotemporary with Accurſius, ſirnames him Aquilanus, not only in his Commentary on the 12th Book of the Æneid, but alſo in ſome Latin Verſes, which he addreſſes to him (3). We may be certain therefore, that Barthius was miſtaken in the native Country of Accurſius. He ſuppoſed him to be born at Amiternum (4). Konig, not being aware of this Miſtake, adopts it all along. What led Barthius into the Miſtake, was the following Sentence of Accurſius: "Nec placuit reticere, ne quis "(quod Salluſtius civis ait meus) modeſtiam in con- "ſcientiam duceret (5). —— I thought proper not "to conceal it, leaſt (as my Fellow-Countryman Sal- "luſt ſays) any one ſhould conſtrue my Modeſty into "Diſſimulation." The Reaſon why Accurſius called Salluſt his Countryman, Salluſt, I ſay, who was born at Amiternum, is, becauſe the City of Aquila roſe upon the Ruins of Amiternum, and was in ſome manner ſubſtituted in it's Place. It is but five Miles from the Ruins of Amiternum. Conſult Mr Baudrand.

(2) He was a German, whoſe Name was Goritz, according to Mr de la Monnoie.

(3) Lib. 4. Amorum, apud Leon. Nicodem. ubi ſupra.

(4) Ipſe Salluſtii civis, Amiterninus nempe, Barth. in Stat. Tom. 2. p. 399.

(5) Mariang. Accurſ. in Teſtudine.

[B] He had taken a great deal of Pains about Claudian.] Since the Fatigue of his Travels in Germany and Poland did not hinder him from correcting near ſeven hundred Faults in That Poet, we may imagine, that he apply'd himſelf, with great Diligence, to the ſame Task, at his more leiſure Times. "TALIS, "ſays he (6), non ALES, legitur in codicibus (CLAU- "DIANI) etiam noviſſimè recognitis. Qui tantam "abeſt ut non etiam nunc verſibus ſint claudi ac de- "formes, ut eos ex vetuſtis exemplaribus, dum Ger- "maniam Sarmatiaſque nuper peragramus, ſeptin- "gentis fere mendis inter equitandum eluerimus.—— "We read it TALIS, not ALES, in all the Edi- "tions (of CLAUDIAN*) even the lateſt revis'd;* "an Author, ſo mutilated and deform'd, even at pre- "ſent, in his Verſification, that, in my Paſſage thro' "Germany and Sarmatia, I corrected near ſeven hun- "dred Faults out of the ancient Manuſcripts, as I tra- "vell'd on Horſe-back."

(6) Accurſius's Diatr. in Auſonium. Theſe Words are retrench'd in the Edition of Auſonius of 1671.

[C] Latin and Italian Verſes.] Hear what Accurſius himſelf ſays of this Matter, in a Fable entituled Teſtudo, which he added to his Diatribæ. He relates in it the Perſecutions he ſuffered at Rome from his Detractors, who imputed the moſt innocent Things to him as a Crime. Addreſſing himſelf to two young Princes of the Houſe of Brandenburgh, to whom he dedicated his Book, he ſays, "Noviſtis ipſi principes, "quàm mihi veſtitum prope militarem probro ver- "terint; tum fidibus ſcire, muſicen callere, philoſo- "pho indignum prædicent, quantúmque invaſerint, "quod & Opticen cum literarum ſtudiis, vernaculoſ- "que cum Latinis numeris, conjunxerim. —— Your "Highneſſes know, how they even reproach'd me with "the Military Garb I wore; then they cry'd, it was "unworthy of a Philoſopher to play on the Violin, "and underſtand Muſic; and how furiouſly they at- "tack'd me for joining Optics to the ſtudy of Letters, "and the Poetry of our own Language to that of "the Latin." He ſays likewiſe, that he was writing the Hiſtory of the Houſe of Brandenburgh from the Memoirs with which he was ſupply'd.

[D] And he travell'd to the North.] We have already heard his own Account of the great Number of Paſſages, which he corrected on his Saddle, as he croſs'd Germany and Poland. That, which follows, will inform us, that he remarked the moſt trifling Things, even the Songs with which Children were lulled to ſleep; but he drew no very good Conſequence from them; as we ſhall ſee: "Nuper non in Panno- "nia ſolum, atque adeo apud ſeptentrionales pleroſ- "que populos, verum etiam ultra Sauromatas, non "ſine admiratione audivimus ad ſuadendum nutricio "more infantibus ſomnum dici Li lu, Li lu, tum "& La lu, La lu, & La la, La la; Quod noſtrates fere "Nan na, Nan na, & Ni na, Ni na, etiam mora qua- "dam vocem ſuſpendentes, paſſim dicere conſueve- "runt. Movit porro nos majori quadam admira- "tione quod infantes ipſi & horriduli & ſordiduli "vix dum fari incipientes mammam atque tatam "Latine balbutiunt, ipſis quoque matribus non "intellecti. Ut videri poſſint & hæ quoque voces "naturales magis quam arbitrariæ (7). —— Lately, "ſays he, not only in Pannonia, and among moſt of "the Northern People, but even beyond the Sauro- "matæ, I have been ſurprized to hear Children "lulled aſleep by their Nurſes, with a Li lu, "Li lu, and La lu, La lu, and La la, La la; "which thoſe of our own Country every where call "Nan na, Nan na, and Nin na, Nin na, with "a ſhort Pauſe of the Voice. But what ſurprized "me more was, that the little dirty Brats, ſcarce "beginning to ſpeak, liſp'd out, in Latin, Mamma "and Tata, which is not underſtood even by the "Mothers themſelves: whence it ſhould follow, that "theſe Words are Innate, and not Arbitrary." He was in the wrong to think, that the Mothers did not underſtand what their little Children would ſay, for it was they who taught them theſe Words.

(7) Id. ib.

[E] His Edition of Marcellinus is larger.] Toppi had no good Memoirs relating to this Fact: He has omitted what he ought to have ſaid, and advanced what he ought not to ſay. He has not ſaid that Accurſius added five new Books to thoſe which were already printed, and mentions only the ſixth. But it is not true that the ſixth was found; the thirteen firſt Books of that Hiſtorian are yet wanting. Leonardo Nicodemo cenſured Nicolas Toppi, as he deſerv'd, for it (8).

(8) Leon. Nicodem. ubi ſupra.

[F] In a Dialogue which he publiſhed in the Year 1531.] Becauſe all thoſe who will have my Book may not have that of Leonardo Nicodemo, let us copy the Title of that Dialogue at large: "Oſco, Volſco, "Romanoque, Eloquentia, interlocutoribus, Dialo- "gus ludis Romanis actus. In quo oſtenditur verbis "publica publiſh'd in the Year 1531. He added a ſmall Treatiſe (g) of Voluſius Metianus, an ancient Civilian. He wrote alſo a Book concerning the Invention of Printing [G]. He is accus'd of Plagiariſm in his Auſonius; for it was ſaid, that he made uſe of the Labours of Fabricio Varano, Biſhop of Camerino, as his own; but he clear'd himſelf of it upon Oath, and proteſted that he had never borrow'd any thing, which he had read in any Book, to adorn his own. The Form of his Oath is remarkable [H]. Several other Works of His wou'd have been printed, if his Son Caſimir, who was a Man of Learning [I], had liv'd longer (h).

Digitized by Google

(g) The Title of it is, Diſtributio, item vocabula, ac notæ partium, in rebus pecuniariis, pondere, numero, & menſura.

(h) Toppi Biblioth. Napolet. p. 200.

" publica moneta ſignatis utendum eſſe, priſca vero " nimis & exoleta tanquam ſcopulos eſſe fugienda. " Si quid itaque, lector optime, antiquitatem amas, " ut ſane debes, libellum hunc ingenti quamvis pecu- " nia à Bibliopola te tibi redemiſſe non pœnitebit. " Nam præter quam quod vocibus partim Oſcis, par- " tim Volſcis, conſcriptus eſt, Latina quoque iſtuc " verba exoletiora nimiſque priſca, quibus Aborigines, " Picus, Evandrus, Carmentaque ipſa loquebantur, " affatim collata ſunt; Quæque omnia apud Ennium, " Pacuvium, Plautum, alioſve hujus notæ priſcos " Autores abſtruſiora leguntur; Itemque recentio- " rum cacatas Apulei & Capellæ chartas; hujuſmo- " dive aliorum. Quæ ut certè ſunt evitanda, ita " tamen ab eo qui docti nomen ferat agnoſcenda " ſunt, ut cum aliquando in eas offenderit, de illo- " rum ſenſu ei turpiter hæſitandum non ſit (9). —— " A Dialogue held at the Roman Games; The Speakers, " an Oſcian, a Volſcian, and Roman. In which is " ſhewn, that we ought to make uſe of Current Phraſes, " and avoid, as Rocks, thoſe which are too old and " obſolete. If therefore, Courteous Reader, you have " any Value, as you ought to have, for Antiquity, you " will not think the Purchaſe of this little Book too " dear at any Price. For, beſides that it is written " partly in the Oſcian, and partly in the Volſcian, " Language; you will find in it a large Collection of " the more antient and obſolete Latin Words, made " uſe of by the Aborigines, Picus, Evander, and " Carmenta herſelf; together with all the abſtruſe " Expreſſions which are read in Ennius, Pacuvius, " Plautus, and other antient Authors of the ſame " Character, likewiſe the low contemptible Style of " more modern Authors, ſuch as Apuleius, Capella, " and the like. Which, tho' we ought certainly to " avoid imitating them, yet ought they to be ſo far " known to him, who pretends to the Name of Scho- " lar, that, whenever he lights upon them, he may " not betray his Ignorance of their meaning." The following is Andr. Schottus's Opinion of this Work: " De Apuleïo, Metamorphoſeos ex Lucio Patrenſi, " ſeu Luciano, ſcriptore, audi, amabo, quæ in Dia- " logo olim ante hos ipſos octoginta annos à Ma- " riangelo Accurſio (homine, ut illis temporibus per- " erudito, quique Naſonem, Auſonium, ac Solinum " Diatriba illuſtravit) Oſce ac Volſce conſcripto, ut " ſæculi degenerantis nimium à prima eloquentia in- " ſaniam veluti aceto aſperſa ſatyra perſtringeret, au- " di inquam, & riſum contine ſi potes, &c (10). —— " Obſerve, I beſeech you, the following Account of " Apuleius, Author of the Metamorphoſis from Lu- " cius Patrenſis, or Lucian, which was given about " eighty Years ago by Mariangelus Accurſius (an " Author very learned for the times, and who cri- " ticized upon Ovid, Solinus, and Auſonius) in a " Dialogue written after the Oſcian and Volſcian " Manner, as a ſevere Satire upon the Folly of the " Age, which degenerated too much from the ancient " Eloquence; hear, I ſay, his Account, and forbear " laughing, if you can, &c.

(9) Taken out of Leon. Nicod. ubi ſupra.

(10) Andr. Schottus, lib. 1. Quæſt. Tullianar. pag. 59. apud Leon. Nicodem. ubi ſupra.

Obſerve that this Work of our Accurſius is in 8vo. but chiefly take Notice of the following Obſervation, communicated to me by Mr De la Monnoie: " The " Dialogue of Mariangelus Accurſius againſt the Cor- " rupters of the Latin Tongue, might have been " printed in the Year 1531. but we muſt believe, " that it had already appeared ſome Years before, " ſeeing Jeffery Tory cites it in his Champ fleuri, " printed by himſelf in 4to. in the Year 1529. There " are beſides, ſays he, a thouſand other ways of ſpeaking " which Hieronymus Avancius, a Native of Verona, " takes notice of in the beginning of his elaborate " Annotations on the Works of the antient Poet Lu- " cretius, which I leave to the Curious, and Lovers of " Antiquity, and which may be ſeen and read at " large in a Dialogue, entitled, Oſci & Volſci " Dialogus ludis Romanis actus. —— A Dialogue " between an Oſcian and a Volſcian, held at the Ro- " man Games. That Piece is hinted at by Paul Jovius " in the Elogy of Baptiſta Pio, whom it attacked " chiefly. The Title of the Dialogue is ſingular, " and of a very modeſt Length; but I can ſcarce " conſtrue the firſt Words of it, Oſco Volſco Roma- " noque eloquentia interlocutoribus. Perhaps it ſhould " be read, & eloquentia, &c."

[G] A Book concerning the Invention of Printing.] I do not pretend to have ſeen it, and only report it on the Credit of Toppi (11); but the following I am aſſured is matter of Fact. It was believed (12) that our Accurſius had writ with his own Hand in the firſt Leaf of a Grammar of Donatus, printed on Vellum; that this Donatus, with another Book, entitled, Conſeſſionalia, were the firſt Books printed, and that John Fauſtus, Citizen of Mentz, Inventor of that Art, had put them to the Preſs in the Year 1450. Mr Chevillier (13) obſerves, that That Accurſius was living in the Year 1500. Yet, for all that, he makes ſome Difference between his Teſtimony and That which was given by Ulric Zel, Bookſeller in Cologne, in the Year 1499. I ſay, he makes ſome Difference between them, in regard to Time. Donatus, ſays he, had been longer printed, when Accurſius writ this, than when Zel ſpoke of it (14). Every Man apprehends, that a Year more or leſs is of no Conſequence here. Beſides, ought it to be ſaid, that a Man, who paſſed thirty three Years in the Court of Charles V. was living in 1500?

(11) Toppi Biblioth. Napolet. p. 200.

(12) Chevillier's Orig. of Printing at Paris, p. 21. he cites the Biblioth. Vaticana, compos'd by Angelus Roccha, and printed at Rome in the Year 1591. Boxhornius in Theatr. Holl. p. 138. cites that Paſſage of Angelus Roccha, at length.

[H] The Form of his Oath is remarkable.] It is this: " (15) Quod dii hominesque, fas, fidesque audiat, " ſacramenti religione, ac ſi quid eſt jusjurando ſan- " ctius, affirmo, idque rite pariter ac ſine dolo malo " dici, cæteriſque accipi volo, me nec ullius unquam " ſcripta perlegiſſe ac ne conſpexiſſe quidem, unde " vel tantillum lucubrationes noſtræ rediniri juva- " rique datum fuerit. Quin immo laboraſſe, quoad " id fieri licuerit, ut ſi quippiam alterius, poſt ob- " ſervationem quoque meam, editum occurrerit, è " noſtris protinus aboleverimus. Quod ſi pejerem, " tum Pontifex perjurio, malus autem genius Dia- " tribis contingat, uſque adeo ut ſi qua bona aut " ſaltem mediocria in ipſis fuerint, imperitorum tur- " bæ peſſima, doctis leviuſcula triciſque viliora cen- " ſeantur, famæ ſi qua manent munera, vento evo- " lent, proque vulgi levitate ferantur. —— In the " Name of Gods and Men, Truth and Sincerity, I ſo- " lemnly ſwear, or, if any thing be more binding than " an Oath, I affirm upon That, and deſire what I " ſay may be received as the Truth, and nothing but " the Truth, that I never either read, or ſo much " as ſaw, the Works of any Author, from whence " my own Lucubrations might receive the leaſt Help " or Improvement; Nay that I have even laboured, " as far as it was poſſible, whenever any Author has " publiſhed the ſame Sentiments with myſelf, imme- " diately to blot it out of my own Works. And if I " am forſworn, may the Pope puniſh my Perjury, " and an evil Fate attend my Criticiſms; that, what- " ever in them is Good or even Indifferent, may ap- " pear to the unskilful Many very Bad, to the Lear- " ned Trifling and of no Importance; and whatever " little Reputation I am ſtill Maſter of, may it be " given to the Wind, and looked upon as the Gift of " the ill-judging Vulgar." How many Reflexions might be made on this Oath!

(13) Chevill. ib. & pag. 281.

(14) Id. ibo pag. 284.

(15) Mariangelus Accurſius in Teſtudine, ad Calcem. Diatrib.

[I] His Son Caſimir, who was a Man of Learning.] It is probably He, whom the learned and famous Patron of learned Men, Vincent Pinelli, entertained ſome time in his Houſe; for although Gauldo gives Accurſius's Son the Name of Francis, he ſeems to doubt of the Matter. Thus he ſpeaks; " Præter " hos domi habuit Benedictum Octavianum res Phi- " loſophicas Theologicaſque doctum. —— Marian- " geli Accurſii filium Franciſcum, ni fallor, inſig- " nem Moribus & Doctrina (16). —— Beſides theſe, " he entertained in his Houſe Benedictus Octavianus, " learned in Philoſophy and Divinity. —— Francis, " the Son of Mariangelus Accurſius, if I miſtake " not, of celebrated Morals and Learning"

(16) Gualdus, in vit. Vinc. Pinelli.

ACHÆUS,

Digitized by Google

ACHÆUS, Couſin German of Seleucus Ceraunus, and of Antiochus the Great [A], Kings of Syria, became a Powerful Monarch, and held the Dominions, he had ſeiz'd, a conſiderable time; but at laſt his Uſurpation was puniſh'd in a terrible manner. At firſt he ſerv'd his Maſter with wonderful Fidelity; for having accompanied Seleucus Ceraunus in his Expedition againſt Attalus (a), he caus'd the two Captains, who had kill'd Seleucus, to be put to death, and regain'd all the Provinces, which Attalus had conquer'd, and refus'd the Title of King, which the Suffrages of his Troops, and Favourable Circumſtances, put into his Hands. He reſiſted thoſe Temptations generouſly, and would only conquer for the Lawful Succeſſor of the Monarch, whoſe Death he had revenged; that is, for Antiochus, the younger Brother of Seleucus. But his Good Fortune blinded him; for, as ſoon as his Victories had made him Maſter of all Attalus's Dominions, except only the City of Pergamus, he aſſum'd the Title of King. He maintained this Uſurpation with much Prudence and Courage, and no Prince on this ſide the Taurus made himſelf ſo much feared, as He (b). The Great and Noble Provinces, which he poſſeſſed on this ſide of That Mountain, did not ſatisfy his Ambition; He projected likewiſe the Conqueſt of Syria, when he heard that Antiochus was gone to make War upon Artabazanes (c). He was in hopes either that Antiochus would periſh in That Expedition, or that it would continue ſo long, that He ſhould have time to take Syria, before the return of that Monarch. He relied alſo much on the Rebellion of ſome Provinces which had but juſt revolted. He departed, then, from Lydia with a great Army, and in his March he writ to the Subjects of Antiochus; but when he drew near Lycaonia, he perceived that his Soldiers refuſed to bear Arms againſt their Ancient King. This made him declare to them, that he would deſiſt from his Enterprize. He returned back, and, having plundered Piſidia, he diſtributed ſuch a conſiderable Booty among them, that he entirely regained their Affection (d); we may infer from hence by the way, that thoſe, who ſay, that he declared himſelf King of Syria, ſpeak without exactneſs. Antiochus, having glorioufly finiſh'd the War againſt Artabazanes, ſent Ambaſſadors to Achæus to complain of his taking the Title of King, and openly favouring the Ægyptians (e). This Reproach was not altogether ineffectual; for we find, that Antiochus (f) made a Truce with their Prince, becauſe he knew that Achæus, his Ally in appearance, was really in their Intereſt. This ſhews, that the Uſurper had ſome regard to the Complaints of Antiochus, and that he made a ſhew of joining with him againſt Ptolomy King of Ægypt. This latter endeavoured in vain to include him in the Treaty of Peace; for Antiochus always rejected the Propoſal, and could not bear, that the King of Ægypt ſhould plead in favour of Rebels (g). As ſoon as he was at Liberty, he apply'd himſelf diligently to recover the Dominions, which Achæus had uſurped: He gained his point, and obliged the Uſurper to take Shelter in Sardes, where He blocked him up, and after a long Siege made himſelf Maſter of the City (h). Achæus fell into his Hands by Treachery: Being prevailed upon to ſally out of the Citadel of Sardes, He was delivered up to Antiochus, who cauſed him to be cruelly and ignominiouſly put to death. He cut off the Extremities of his Members, and afterwards his Head, which was ſewed in an Aſs's Skin, and ordered the remainder of his Body to be hung on a Croſs (i). This happened in the Year of Rome 540. It was a fit Example to be made, and doubly uſeful [B]. I ſhall not remark Mr Moreri's Faults; they may be eaſily known by only comparing his Narrative with mine; but I ſhall diſtinctly point out the Miſtakes of Francis Patricius [C].

(a) It was towards the end of the 139*th* Olympiad, and in the Year of Rome 533. Calviſius Chronol. p. 278.

(b) Taken out of Polybius, lib. 4. cap. 13. p. 322.

(c) A Prince, whoſe Dominions were ſituated near the Caſpian Sea. See Polybius, lib. 5. cap. 13. pag. 408.

(d) Polyb. lib. 5. cap. 13. pag. 409, 410.

(e) Id. ib. p. 409.

(f) Id. ib. cap. 15. pag. 416.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 418.

(h) Id. lib. 7. cap. 3.

(i) Id. lib. 8. cap. 5, & 6.

[A] Couſin German of Seleucus Ceraunus, and of Antiochus the Great.] He was the Son of Andromachus, who was the Brother of Laodice, Wife of Seleucus Callinicus (1), and Mother of thoſe two Princes. Let us obſerve, that he was a good Son, for knowing that Andromachus was impriſoned in Alexandria, he forgot nothing to releaſe him out of that Captivity. The Rhodians, knowing his Diſpoſition, ſent Ambaſſadors to King Ptolomy, to demand Andromachus of him. Their Deſign was to make a Preſent of him to Achæus, to engage him to break the Promiſe he had made with the Byzantines to aſſiſt them. There was at that time a ſtrong War between the Rhodians and the Byzantines. The King of Egypt made ſome Difficulty to give up Andromachus; he knew that ſuch a Priſoner might be uſeful to him in Time and Place, for he was yet embroil'd with the King of Syria, and he was not ignorant of the great Power of Achæus. But at laſt, to oblige the Rhodians, he was willing to deliver up his Priſoner to them, that, if they judg'd it fit, they might ſend him to his Son, which they did. And by this, and ſome other means, they procured Achæus's Friendſhip, and took from the Byzantine the chief Foundation of his Hopes (2). Note that Achæus was married (3) to Laodice, the Daughter of King Mithridates, who had been very well educated by Logbaſis (4), an Inhabitant of Selge, a City of Piſidia. This Lady maintained the Siege of Sardes, with her Husband, and was conſtrained to ſurrender herſelf, after he was put to Death (5).

(1) Polyb. lib. 4. cap. 13. pag. 324. & lib. 8. cap. 6. pag. 531.

(2) Id. lib. 4. cap. 3.

(3) Id. lib. 8. cap. 6. p. 531.

(4) Id. lib. 25. cap. 17. pag. 525.

(5) Id. lib. 8. cap. 6. pag. 532.

[B] It was a fit Example to be made, and doubly uſeful.] For it was a Leſſon to Men, not to be too credulous, nor to abuſe the Favours of Fortune. We will tranſcribe the Words of Polybius, the Author of this Piece of Morality. (6) Κατὰ δύο τρόπους ἡ ἀνωφελὲς ὑπόδειγμα γενόμενος τοῖς ἐσομένοις, καθ' ἕνα μὲν πρὸς τὸ μηδενὶ πιστεύειν βάδιως, καθ' ἕτερον δὲ, πρὸς τὸ μὴ μεγαλαυχεῖν ἐν ταῖς ὑπεραγίαις. πᾶν δὲ προσδοκᾶν ἀνθρώπους ὄντας. —— An Example of double Uſe to Poſterity; teaching us, firſt, not to give Credit haſtily to any one; and, ſecondly, that we ſhould not be too much elevated with good Fortune, but expect every thing, as we are Men *.

(6) Id. lib. 8. pag. 528. Edit. Caſaub.

[C] I ſhall diſtinctly point out the Miſtakes of Francis Patricius.] He pretends, that the Subjects of Achæus, overburthen'd with Taxes, revolted, and murthered him, with all his Family, and caſt his Body into the Pactolus, in order to make him drink Golden Waters (7). "Acæus, Lydiæ Mæoniæque "Rex, gentilitio avaritiæ crimine ardebat; is ſiquidem "crebra ac gravia populis tributa ſemper imperabat, "in quibus exigendis ſævus, improbus atque inexo- "rabilis erat: verum cum tantam injuriam diutius "populi ferre nequirent, nocturna teſſera inter ſe "data, ſubito hominum concurſu illum cum omni "familia trucidaverunt, & regia incenſa ejus cadaver "unco tractum in Pactolum flumen demerſerunt, "ut

* Homo ſum, Humani nihil me alienum puto. Ter. Adelph.

(7) Franciſcus Patricius, lib. 4. de Regis Inſtitutione, tit. 9. pag. 242.

Digitized by Google

" ut auriferas aquas ſemper potaret. —— Achæus, " King of Lydia and Mæonia, was very avaritious, " a Vice peculiar to his Family: he impoſed frequent " and heavy Tributes upon his People; in collecting " of which he was cruel, unreaſonable, and inex- " orable: but his Subjects, unable to bear ſuch inju- " rious Uſage any longer, conſpired together by Night, " and the Multitude, ſurrounding him on a ſudden, " maſſacred him and his whole Family, and, ſetting " Fire to the Palace, dragged his dead Body, and " threw it into the River Pactolus, that it might " drink Golden Waters for ever." Obſerve firſt that he is miſtaken in pretending that our Achæus was a Lydian iſſued from the ancient Kings of the Countrey, and Heir of their Avarice. He had in his Thoughts the Riches of Cræſus, and the Requeſt of Midas (8). He had better have remembred that Achæus was a Syrian. But this Fault is ſmall in compariſon of the reſt; for all the Circumſtances of this Narrative are falſe. Mr de Boiſſieu is perſwaded that the bad Interpreters of theſe Words of Ovid, (8) See Ovid's Metamorph. lib. 11. v. 103.

Morte vel intereas capti ſuſpenſus Achæi,
Qui miſer, aurifera teſte, pependit, aqua (9).

(9) Ovidius in Ibin, v. 301.

Or baſe Achæus's Sentence mayſt thou ſhare,
Suſpended on a Gibbet, high in Air,
Whom rich Pactolus from his Banks beheld Aloft exalted o're the Lydian Field.

have deceived that Writer. He obſerves (10) with Reaſon, that the meaning of them is, that the Body of Achæus was hang'd upon the Banks of the Pactolus. He adds, that Zarottus is the firſt who div'd into the Poet's Thought, and that Leopardus diſcovered it plainly, and therefore that Lipſius ought not to have taken to himſelf the Reputation of the firſt Diſcovery of the true Senſe of That Paſſage. (11) " Hanc eſſe Poëtæ " noſtri mentem primus vidit Zarottus, ſed quaſi per " nebulam; & omnino Paulus Leopardus, Emendat. " lib. 1. c. 20. ideo non erat, quò Juſtus Lipſius, l. 1. " de Cruce, cap. 4. principem ſibi hujus loci expla- " nationem tribueret. Valeat autem Alciatus cum " ſua illa explicatione quam, l. 9. c. 24. Parergon " Juris inſeruit. —— Zarottus was the firſt, who " diſcovered this to be the Poet's Meaning, but as it " were thro' a Cloud; after him Leopardus thorough- " ly ſaw it, in his Emend. lib. 1. c. 20. Therefore " Juſtus Lipſius had no reaſon to arrogate to himſelf " the Honour of having firſt explained it, in his " firſt Book de Cruce, c. 4. But away with Alciatus " and his Explanation, which he inſerted in the 24th " Chapter of his 9th Book of his Parergon Juris." However it be, Francis Patricius applies his Examples very ill. Achæus was not puniſhed for his Avarice, but for his Ambition. There is nothing in the Puniſhment of Aquilius, whom they (12) aſſociate with him, becauſe Mithridates poured melted Gold into his Mouth, which bears any Reſemblance to Antiochus's Revenge.

(10) Dionyſ. Salvagni Notæ in Libellum Ovidii in Ibin, p. 63.

(11) Id. ib.

(12) Patricius, ib. p. 243.

ACHÆMENES was the Father of Cambyſes, and Grandfather of Cyrus, firſt King of Perſia, if we may believe Herodotus (a). There are other Paſſages, wherein That Author ſeems to ſpeak of an Achæmenes much ancienter than the other; for he ſays that the Perſian Nation (b) was divided into different Families, whereof the moſt Illuſtrious were compoſed of the Paſargadæ, under which were comprehended the Achæmenidæ, from whom the Kings of Perſia deſcended. In another Place (c) he introduces Cambyſes, the Son of Cyrus, exhorting the Chief Lords of Perſia, on his Death-bed, and above all the Achæmenidæ, not to ſuffer the Medes to recover the Kingdom. This ſeems to give us the Idea of an Achæmenes, the Stock of thoſe Achemenidæ, much ancienter than the Grand-father of Cyrus. Stephen of Byzantium makes mention of one ACHÆMENES, the Son of Ægeus, who, he pretends, gave his Name to a Province of Perſia, call'd Achæmenia. Others ſay (d) that this Achæmenes was the Son of Perſeus; others infer it from the Kings of Perſia being deſcended from Perſeus [A]. Almoſt all the Commentators of Horace are unanimous in aſſerting, that the Achæmenes, whom he mentions in the 12th Ode of the 2d Book, as a very wealthy Perſon, was a King of Perſia [B]; but if ſo, he muſt have reigned before the Medes had ſubdued the Perſians; for from the Foundation of that great Monarchy by the Medes, which was the ſecond diſtinguiſhed by the Name of Univerſal, we do not meet with any King of this Name amongſt them. Cyrus paſſes conſtantly for their firſt King; and They, who pretend there were Two before him (e), diſtinguiſh them very plainly both from his Father Cambyſes, and from his Grand-Father Achæmenes. However it be, the Epithet of Achemænians is often given the Perſians in the ancient Latin Poets; and even at this time Perſia is call'd Azemia (f), and the Perſians Agemis (g).

(a) Herod. lib. 7. cap. 11.

(b) Id. lib. 3. cap. 125.

(c) Id. lib. 3. cap. 65.

(d) Nicolaus, lib. 2. Hiſtor. apud Magni Etymol. Autorem.

(e) Marſham, Chron. Can. p. 605. Edit. Lipſ.

(f) Bizarus Hiſt. Perſ. lib. 1. p. 5.

(g) Teixera in Itiner. Indiæ, cap. 6. apud Pinedo in Steph. pag. 145.

[A] The Kings of Perſia being deſcended from Perſeus.] Mr Chevreau (1) gives it as Herodotus's Opinion, " that the Perſidæ, that is, thoſe of the Houſe " of Perſis, or Perſeus, were deſcended from the " Achæmenidæ, Allies of the Paſargadæ." He aſſures us in the ſame Page, " that, according to the " Teſtimony of Herodotus, the Kings of Perſia came " from Perſeus or Perſis, and that the Perſidæ were " deſcended from the Achæmenidæ, that is, from the " firſt who had the Name of Achæmenes in that Fa- " mily." This is a very confus'd Account. Herodotus does not ſay in general, that the Perſidæ deſcended from the Achæmenidæ; he ſays (2) it only of the Kings of Perſia, that is, of (3) Cyrus, and of thoſe who reign'd after him. He diſtinguiſhes the Perſians into different Claſſes, one of which he particularly diſtinguiſhes by the Name of Perſians; another he calls Paſargadæ, under which he places the Achæmenidæ. He ſays in another Place (4) indeed, that the Perſians acquir'd that Name, from the time that Perſeus, the Son of Jupiter and of Danaë, left them his Son Perſeus, whom he had by Andromeda; but he does not ſay, as Mr Chevreau ſuppoſes, That the Kings of Perſia were deſcended from Perſeus. Mr Chevreau's Argument proves thus far, That Cyrus was not inferior in Birth to the Kings Media, or to the Kings of Perſia, ſeeing theſe deſcended from Achæmenes, as well as Cyrus; he proves that they deſcended from him, becauſe the Perſidæ did. Beſides the Miſtake I have already remark'd, he ſuppoſes farther, That the firſt, who bore the Name of Achæmenes, was antienter than Perſeus the Son of Jupiter. Mr Dacier perfectly retain'd what he repeated from his Memory only of this Paſſage of Mr Chevreau (5).

(1) Chevreau's Hiſt. of the World, Book 1. ch. 5. p. 95. 96. Edit. of Holl. 1687.

(2) Herod. lib. 1. cap. 125.

(3) Plato in 1. Alcib. pag. 440.

(4) Herod. lib. 7. cap. 61.

(5) Dacier on Horace, Tom. 2. p. 243.

[B] Was a King of Perſia.] Mr Moreri ſays in plain Terms, That Achæmenes was the firſt King of the Perſians; and that all the Princes, who governed that Monarchy to Darius, were deſcended from him. But firſt of all I would ask him, Why, in ſpeaking of Cyrus, he attributes the firſt Foundation of the Perſian Monarchy to him, and why in giving us a Liſt of the Kings of Perſia, he does not place Achæmenes before Cyrus, but the latter before all the reſt? Beſides, I would fain be inform'd, of what Darius he ſpeaks; for there were two or three Kings of that Name in Perſia. Does he mean him, who was conquered by Alexander the Great? In That Caſe he would be too deciſive; the Ancients do not agree that That Darius was of the Royal Family. If he means Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes, he expreſſes himſelf improperly; the Phraſe all the Princes is not proper, when we would ſpeak but of two Perſons out of more than twelve. I cannot tell why Mr Dacier (6) limits the Epithet of Achæmenidæ to the

(6) Dacier, ib.

Digitized by Google

the time of Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes; when he ſays, That the Deſcendants of Achæmenes, King of Perſia, bore his Name unto That Darius. I do not queſtion but they bore it after him. For, beſides that his (7) Son Xerxes carries up his Lineage in a direct Line to Achæmenes; we meet with one Tigranes, General of the Medes (8), diſtinguiſh'd by the Appellation Achæmenides: and we find an Achæmenes, mention'd above, who was the Brother of Xerxes. I ſay nothing of Sapor, called Achæmenes in Ammianus Marcellinus (9); it is a corrupted Paſſage. Mr Chevreau, wondering, without doubt, to ſee five Generations between This Xerxes and Cyrus, believ'd that This Prince counted his paternal Anceſtors on the one Side, and his maternal on the other; inſomuch that he pretended to deſcend from Achæmenes only by the Mother's Side: but this is not to be found in Herodotus; unleſs we alter the Greek Text, according to a very probable Conjecture of Mr de Saumaiſe (10).

(7) Herod. lib. 7. cap. 11.

(8) Ib. cap. 62.

(9) See Valeſius upon Amm. lib. 19. cap. 2.

(10) Salmaſ. Exerc. Plinian. p. 1183.

ACHÆMENES, the Son of Darius I. of that Name (a), King of Perſia, and Brother of Xerxes (b) by Father and Mother, had the Command of Egypt (c) after Xerxes had again reduc'd it under the Yoak of Obedience, which it had the Boldneſs to ſhake off. Some time after he commanded the Egyptian Fleet (d), in the famous and fatal Expedition againſt Greece. We do not find what other Employs he had during the Life of the King his Brother; but we find that, Egypt being again revolted, after the Death of that Monarch, Achæmenes was ſent thither to reduce it. This Undertaking was unfortunate; for he was beaten by Inarus, Head of the Rebels, aſſiſted by the Athenians.

(a) Herodot. lib. 7. cap. 97.

(b) Ib. c. 7.

(c) Ib. c. 97.

(d) Ib. lib. 3. cap. 12. Died. Sicul. lib. 11.

ACHERI (Luke de) a Benedictine of the Congregation of St Maur, was Born at St Quentin in Picardy, in the Year 1609. He made himſelf Famous by the Publication of ſeveral Books, which lay hid a long time in Manuſcript in the Libraries. He began, in 1645, with the Edition of the Epiſtle attributed to St Barnabas. Father Hugh Menard, Monk of the ſame Congregation, had a Deſign to publiſh This Epiſtle, and had already illuſtrated it with ſeveral Notes; but, Death preventing him from executing his Reſolution, Father Luke d'Acheri undertook it. So that, by his Care, the Epiſtle of St Barnabas was printed in Greek and in Latin, with Father Menard's Notes in the year 1645. At Three Years end Dom. Luke publiſh'd the Life, and Works, of Lanfranc, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Chronicle of the Abbey of Bec. In 1651, he publiſh'd the Life and Works of Guibert, Abbot of Nogent, with ſome other Treatiſes. Having afterwards collected ſeveral rare and curious Pieces, and hoping to get a great many more ſuch, he formed the Deſign of publiſhing a moſt ample Compilation of them that he could, under the modeſt Title of Specilegium. He publiſh'd his firſt Volume in the Year 1655. That Volume was followed by Twelve others; the laſt whereof was printed in the year 1677 (a). That Collection, in thirteen Volumes in Quarto, is very much eſteemed by thoſe, who endeavour to clear up Eccleſiaſtical Matters in every particular: But we meet with no Pieces in it, but ſuch as have been compoſed ſince the Decay of the Roman Empire in the Weſt. The ſame Author publiſh'd the Rule of the Solitarians, compoſed by the Prieſt Grimlaic; and ſome Aſcetic Works [A]. His Prefaces, and ſmall Notes, ſhew that he had ſome Learning. He had a hand in the critical Work, which appeared in the firſt Volume of the Acts of the Saints of St Benedict's Order; and it is to him, and to Father Mabillon, that the Title of thoſe Acts attributes the Labour of having Collected and Publiſh'd them. Luke d'Acheri died at Paris the 29th of April 1685, in the Abbey of St Germain's, where he had been Library-Keeper (b).

(a) See in the Journal de Savans of Feb. 28. 1678, why This Specilegium was not continued.

(b) See the Journal des Savans of Nov. 26. 1685. and Mr Baillet. Tom. 3. of his Judgement des Savans, p. 318.

[A] And ſome Aſcetic Works.] He did not put his Name to the Collection, which he publiſhed of them, and of which I am going to give the Title, as I find it in the Bibliotheca Bibliothecarum of Father L'Abbé, "Aſceticorum, vulgo ſpiritualium, opuſculorum, "quæ inter patrum opera reperiuntur; Indiculus "Chriſtianæ pietatis cultoribus ab Aſceta Benedi-"ctino Congregationis ſancti Mauri digeſtus, Pariſiis "in 4to. 1648. —— An Index of the Aſcetic, commonly called Spiritual, Tracts, which are found among the Works of the Fathers; digeſted for pious Chriſtians, by a Benedictine Aſcetic of the Congregation of St Maur. Paris, in 4to, 1648." Mr Teiſſier ſays, in his Additions to that Work of Father L'Abbé, that Luke d'Acheri publiſh'd the Life of St Auguſtin at Paris, in the ſame Year.

ACHILLES. There have been ſeveral of this Name. The firſt who bore it, had no other Mother than the Earth, and did Jupiter a very good Office; for having received the Goddeſs Juno in his Cave, when ſhe fled from the Amorous Purſuits of that God, he entertained her with ſuch perſuaſive Diſcourſes, that ſhe conſented to conſummate the Marriage [A]. We are not informed in what manner ſhe teſtified her Gratitude to her Hoſt, who had inſpired her with ſuch Tractableneſs; but we know that Jupiter, in Acknowledgment of this Service, promiſed Achilles, that thenceforth whoever ſhould bear his Name, ſhould be famous. For which Reaſon, the Son of Thetis became an Hero. The Name of the Preceptor of Chiron was ACHILLES; and from thence it was that Chiron gave the Name of ACHILLES to the Son of Thetis, his Pupil. This is ſufficient to overthrow all thoſe cold and forced Etymologies of the Word ACHILLES, which depend on the perſonal Qualities of the Son of Thetis [B]. The Inventor of the Oſtraciſm among the

[A] That ſhe conſented to conſummate the Marriage.] Theſe Words of Photius, συνελθεῖν τῷ Διΐ, ſignify ſo much (1), as appears by what follows; καὶ πρώτην μίξιν Ἥρας καὶ Διὸς ταύτην γένεσθαι φασίν. — And it is ſaid, that This was the firſt time that Jupiter enjoy'd Juno.

(1) Father Schottus tranſlated them wrong by ad Jovem redire.

[B] Etymologies —— which depend on the perſonal Qualities of the Son of Thetis.] It is diverting enough

Digitized by Google

the Athenians was named ACHILLES. A Son of Jupiter and of Lamia bore that Name. He was so handsome a Man, that, by the Sentence of the God Pan, he carried the Prize of Beauty, which was disputed with him. Venus being displeased with that Judgment, caused Pan to fall in Love with Ecchо, and metamorphosed him in such manner [C], that he became a frightful Object. Another ACHILLES, the Son of Galata, was born with white Hair. There were fifty four others of the Name of Achilles, all very famous; two of which were remarkably brutish (a). I am going to make a separate Article of the most celebrated Person of this Name.

(1) Taken out of the 7th Book of Ptolomy the Son of Hephæstion, Novæ ad variam eruditionem Historiæ apud Photium, n. 190. pag. 488, 489.

to read the Inventions of Greece on that Subject. It not only deserves the Epithet of lying (2), and (3) fabulous upon that Account, but also That of male fetiata, which the French Term oiseuse does not fully come up to.

(2) Græca mendax. Juven. Sat. 10.

Ask the Greek Grammarians, why This Hero was called Achilles; some will answer you, because he was very troublesome to his Mother, and to his Enemies: Others, because he harass'd the Trojans greatly: Others, because, having learned the Secrets of Physic, he quieted Pain: Others, because he had but one Lip: Others, because he was qualified to command: Others, because he had never suck'd; and others, because he went away from his Preceptor Chiron, without ever having eat of the Fruits of the Earth. If we were to shew by what Analysis of Grammar they found so many Etymologies in the Name of Achilles, we should make this place, as it were, stand an end with Greek. For which Reason, I refer the Reader, if he pleases, to the great Etymologicum, to Eustathius (4), to Tzetzes (5), &c. Messieurs Lloyd and Hofman, who, following the Examples of Fungerus, and others, have enrich'd the Article of the Son of Peleus with their Etymological Observations, ought at least to have appriz'd us, that much Pains had been taken in vain by those, who will have it, that the Word Achilles depends on the personal Qualities of the Hero of the Iliad. They might have refuted that Pretension, by shewing that there were Achilles's before him, and given us a Reason a thousand times more natural than all the rest, why this Hero was called Achilles; I mean That which I have already reported, to wit, that the Preceptor of his Preceptor was called by this Name.

(3) Μυθοτεκος Ἑλλας, Greece the Mother of Fable. Nonn. Dionys. lib. 1.

(4) Eustath. in lib. 1. Iliad.

(5) Tzetzes in Lycophron.

[C] And metamorphosed him in such manner.] Photius (6), who preserv'd some Fragments of the seven Books, which Ptolomy, the Son of Hephæstion, has filled with the most curious Trifles of fabulous Antiquity, has maimed what regards Achilles, the Son of Jupiter and of Lamia, in such manner, that a Man must give himself the trouble of guessing that it was with the Goddess Venus he contested the Prize of Beauty. This Conjecture is grounded on the Indignation of Venus against the Judge, who conferred the Prize on Achilles. Venus, to punish that Judge, made him in love with Ecchо, and withal so ugly, that his Figure alone made him the Object of Hatred. Thus Schottus understood the Text of Photius. But Mr de Meziriac (7) divides the Effects of Venus's Anger, between Pan and Achilles; the former became in love, and the latter the ugliest Fellow in the World. It signifies nothing to consult the Original, to know whether the Translation of Andrew Schottus is preferable to that of Meziriac: For if, on the one side, it may be said, that the Rules of exact Grammar are in favour of Schottus, it may be said, on the other side, that the Greek Authors do not subject themselves to such Rules; and that it is no uncommon thing, when several Persons are concern'd in the same Period, for the Pronoun He, Him, to relate indifferently, either to the remotest, or to the nearest Person. The Latin Authors are not more scrupulous in this Particular. The Grammar of the French Tongue is most wonderfully exact in this Matter; for it requires the same proper Name to be repeated two or three times in a few Lines, rather than to leave the Reader's Mind in suspence. If we consult Reason, either for or against Meziriac, and Father Schottus, we shall hardly know how to determine the Point. A Person, who has lost his Cause, may, perhaps, revenge himself only on his Judge. Thus Apollo was satisfied with punishing Midas (8), who had blamed the Sentence of Superiority pronounced in favour of Apollo, and in prejudice of Pan. Upon this Supposition Meziriac would lose his Cause: But a Person may revenge himself sometimes, both on his Judge, and his Rival (9); and upon this footing Father Andrew Schottus should be mistaken in his Translation; for, according to him, Venus being displeased, takes no Revenge on him, who obtains the Victory. It is true also, that, according to the other Interpreter, she does no great harm to the unjust Judge: she is satisfied with making him in love with a Nymph, who, according to the Tradition of the Ancients (10), had a Daughter by him. When all is done, it seems as if Meziriac were in the wrong; and if he were not, Photius or his Ptolomy would be to blame, for not having declared, that the same Venus, who had made Pan in Love with Ecchо, made him unfortunate in his Love. That Circumstance ought particularly to have been mentioned; and there would not have been wanting some, whose Opinion would have confirmed it; for this Nymph's Rigour towards the God Pan has been mentioned by some Authors. Of all the Labours of the Pen, That of abridging well, is, perhaps, the most difficult; it requires more than a common Discernment, to judge what are the Circumstances, the Suppression whereof makes an Abridgment obscure or not. Justin is not the only Person that wanted This nice Discernment. I have made use of this Thought in some other parts of this Work.

(6) Photius Bibliothecæ. n. 190.

(7) Meziriac's Commentary on the Epistle of Briseis to Achilles, p. 253.

(8) Ovid. Metam. lib. 11.

(9) Amchne, Marsyas, Thamyris, the Daughters of Pierus, are a Proof that Revenge is also sometimes taken of a Competitor.

(10) There was a different Tradition from that; I shall take notice of it in the Article PAN.

In the former Edition I have perfix'd a kind of Preface to the following Article, which I suppress with Regret. It contained an Elogium of the late Mr DRELINCOURT, Professor of Physic at Leyden. It was the general Opinion, that I had offended so strangely against Custom, and had introduced this Piece so improperly, that, in order to put a stop to so general a Censure, I am obliged to blot it out. But I declare it my Intention, that this Testimony of my Gratitude and Esteem be considered as given in this Place, in the same manner as if it were repeated Word for Word.

ACHILLES, the Son of Peleus and Thetis, was one of the greatest Heroës of Ancient Greece. He was born (a) at Phthia in Thessaly; and in his Infancy was dipt in the Waters of Styx to make him invulnerable: and he would have been so in every part, if his Mother had had the Precaution to hold him by one Heel, after having held him by the other (b), but, as she forgot that, one of her Son's Heels remained capable of being wounded; and it was in that place that Death seized him. Yet we must not imagine, that all Authors agree in this Story; for we meet with some, who mention several Wounds receiv'd by Achilles, in different parts of his Body (c). I shall mention another Precaution of Thetis in the Remarks; which is, that, to make her Son immortal, she anointed him with Ambrosia (d), and put him under live Coals. He was educated under the Care of the Centaur Chiron; it was the best School in the World in those Ages. Chiron educated him in a very singular manner; since, instead

(a) Servius in Æneid. lib. 2. ver. 197.

(b) See the Remark [A] Numb. V.

(c) Dictys Cret. lib. 2. Dares Ptolemæus Hephæst. lib. 6. apud Phot. ubi supra. Eustath. in Odyss. 11.

(d) See the Remark [A] Numb. V.

Digitized by Google

instead of Milk, or Bread, or such kind of Food, he fed him with Lions Marrow [A], or [A] Fed him with Lions Marrow, or with that of some other Beasts.] Libanius (1) in three Places, and Priscian (2) in one, speak only of Lions Marrow: Gregory Nazianzen (3) adds the Marrow of Stags; the Scholiast of Homer (4) that of Bears: The Author of the great Etymologicum (5) mentions only the Marrow of Stags: Apollodorus (6) speaks of that of wild Boars and Bears, and adds the Entrails of Lions to it: Statius (7) joins the Entrails and Marrow of Lions together; or according to the reading of some old Manuscripts, the Entrails of Lions, and the Marrow of She-Wolves. See Num. II. below. Philostratus (8) adds to Milk and Honey, the Marrow of Fawns of Hinds, and the Marrow of Roe-Bucks. Tertullian (9) speaks only of the Marrow of wild Beasts in general. Eustathius (10) expresses himself in a more indefinite manner, speaking only of the Marrow of Beasts. Suidas (11) says only Marrow.

(1) Progym. p. 70. D. p. 97. C. p. 129. A, &c.

(2) In Præexercitat. Rhetor.

(3) Orat. 2. pag. 324. C.

(4) In Iliad. lib. 16.

(5) In Ἀχιλλεύς.

(6) Lib. 3.

(7) Achill. lib. 2.

(8) In Heroic. pag. 706. B. & in Icon. 2. pag. 781. C.

(9) De Pallio; See below Number VIII.

(10) In Iliad. lib. 1. pag. 11.

(11) In χιλὴ.

I. Girac should not have denied, that Achilles was fed with the Marrow of Lions.

It is so common a Tradition among the Ancients, that Chiron fed Achilles with the Marrow of Lions, that we cannot enough wonder, that so learned a Man as Mr de Girac should accuse Mr Costar (12) of a gross Ignorance, for having made use of these Words: You was nourished from your Infancy with the Juice, the Substance, and the Soul of good Books, in like manner as Achilles was with the Marrow of Lions. Mr de Girac upon this puts a Question unbecoming an exact Critic, seeing it alters the State of the Question, and imputes to Mr Costar more than he really said. Where did he find, says he, that Achilles was nourished only with Lions Marrow? But what follows is worse still. Having alledged among other Reasons to support his Opinion, that according to Plutarch, Achilles was fed with things which have no Blood; he adds, that he does not believe that any Author of Credit ever affirmed, that Achilles was nurs'd with the Marrow of Lions: And yet, immediately after, he himself cites St Gregory Nazianzen, who remarks, that St Basil had not, like Achilles, A Centaur near him, to present him with the Fabulous Marrow of Lions and Stags. Which shews, continues Mr de Girac, that St Gregory look'd upon it as a fictitious and impossible Story. Be it so: He will still be a credible Witness for all that. For to be so in things of this Nature, it is neither necessary we should be convinc'd of the Truth of the Facts we report, nor that they should really exist, nor even that they should be possible; it is enough that we are not ourselves the Inventors of the Story. Now without doubt this is St Gregory Nazianzen's Case: he does not affirm what he relates of the Centaur Chiron and of Achilles, without having read of any such thing. I will allow farther, that he does not believe it; but still he did not invent the Story; and this is sufficient to make him worthy of Credit. Neither the Moral nor the Physical Truth is to be inquired into upon this occasion, but only the Truth of the Relation. Mr de Girac, who will have it that the Marrow of Stags was the only Food of Homer's Hero, according to the common Opinion of the Ancients, doubtless esteemed the Authors, who reported it, worthy of Credit, altho' there is no Reason to think either that they firmly believed it, or that the thing is true. He has certainly placed St Gregory Nazianzen upon the same foot, with regard to the Marrow of Stags: He cannot therefore reasonably except against him, in relation to that of Lions: And consequently he himself produces a Witness worthy of Credit, immediately after having said, That he did not believe there were any.

(12) Reply to Costar, sect. 7. pag. 59. Edit. Holl. 8vo.

II. Proofs that Achilles was nurs'd with Lions Marrow.

His quoting St Gregory Nazianzen upon this occasion, is not so much to be wonder'd at, as his Ignorance of what two Modern Authors, who are in every body's Hands, have put beyond all Doubt. One is Mr de Meziriac, who has proved, by the Testimony of the Scholiast of Homer, on the 16th Iliad, by That of Libanius, in his two Speeches, the One For, and the Other Against, Achilles; and by that of Statius, in the 2d Book of his Achilleid, that this Hero was fed with the Marrow of Lions. The other is Barthius, who, upon this Passage of Statius, besides the double Testimony of Libanius, cites these Words of Priscian (13), as a farther Confirmation of the matter of Fact: "Deinde sequitur victus, ut in "Achille, quod Medullis Leonum pastus est. This Evidence is as strong, as That, which Mr de Girac produces to prove, that Achilles was brought up with another kind of Food

(13) In Progymn. Rhetoricis ex Hermogene.

It must not be dissembled, that Barthius deprives us of Statius's Evidence for the Marrow of Lions: For instead of lubens, he pretends it must be read lupæ, in the Passage, where Achilles speaks thus:

Dicor &, in teneris & adhuc crescentibus annis,
Thessalus ut rigido senior me monte recepit,
Non ullas ex more dapes habuisse, nec almis
Uberibus fatiasse famem, sed spissa leonum
Viscera, semianimesque lupæ (14) traxisse medullas.

(14) Others read lubens.

Nurs'd in a Cave by the Thessalian Sage,
No common Food sustain'd my tender Age;
Nor Mother's Milk did e'er my Thirst assuage:
But the fierce Lion's Entrails, raw in Blood,
And the Wolf's Marrow, were my savage Food.

III. A Passage of Plutarch ill translated.

What Mr de Girac makes Plutarch say, discovers to us, that he did not consult the Greek: and as he alledges some of the Remarks, which Vigenere made use of in his Notes on Philostratus, it is very probable he was misled by these Words of That Author (15): Plutarch says that Chiron nurs'd Achilles, form his Birth, with things, which had no Blood (16). Meziriac shewed, many Years ago, that Amiot had led Vigenere into this Mistake; and that instead of saying with Amiot (17), But this Philinus, like a new Chiron, feeds his Son, in like manner as Achilles was brought up, from his Infancy, with Food, from which no Blood was drawn; to wit, with the Fruits of the Earth, it should be said, But this new Chiron nourishes his Son in a manner quite different from That, in which Achilles was brought up (ἀντιστρόφως τῷ Ἀχιλλεῖ) to wit, with Meat without Blood. Xylander may be involv'd in the same Mistake; for his Latin Translation imports, Nostrum autem, quo pacto Achillem Chiron nutriens iste statim à natalibus Sanguine Carentibus. There is an Hiatus in the Passage of Plutarch; but the Word ἀντιστρόφως must still be understood to mean Contrary, a Sense commonly given to it by the Lexicons.

(15) Vigenere's Comment. on Philostr. of Achilles's Food, Edit. in 4to pag. 544.

(16) Comment. on the Epistle of Briseis, pag. 249.

(17) Plutarch's 4th Book of Table Conversations, ch. 1.

IV. Property of the Bones of Lions; Whether it be true that they are without Marrow.

What I have urg'd in proof of the Validity of St Gregory's Testimony, shews that Mr de Girac cited Ælian, Pliny, and Aristotle, to no purpose, to shew that Lions have no Marrow; or that if they have any, it is the least imaginable. He might have appeal'd to Galen likewise, in his 11th Book de Usu Partium, Cap. 18. And this Fact should seem past Dispute, since the Moderns seldom call the ancient Naturalists to account for it, even when they are accusing them of several Mistakes, in relation to Lions. Consult Vossius, in the 52d Chapter of his 3d Book, de Origine & progressu Idololatriæ: Franzius & Bochart in their Treatises, de Animalibus sacræ Scripturæ: Father Hardouin, in his Commentary on the 37th Chapter of the 11th Book of Pliny (18), &c. If Vossius were to be credited in this Matter, we might pretend that Athenæus found fault with Aristotle upon this Subject. But when Athenæus (19) himself is consulted, it appears, that he makes no mention of Marrow; and that he only attacks the pretended Hardness of Lions Bones, which Aristotle made so great, that Sparks of Fire, he says, fly from them, upon Collision, as from a Flint. This might be denied, without disputing whether they were destitute of Marrow. The Text, then, might be certain; and Mr Furetiere should have inserted it among his other Remarks, under the Word LION, if the contrary had not been incontestably prov'd. Borrichius (20) mentions two Skeletons of Lions, anatomiz'd at Copenhagen, the one sixteen, the other two Years before; and he assures us, that there was a great Quantity of Marrow, copiosam medullam, found in the Bones of that Animal; and he quotes Severinus, who relates, That Tiberius Carafa brought up a Lion, whose Bones were found hollow and full of Marrow, like Those of other Beasts. But though it were certain, that Lions have no Marrow, Mr de Girac should not have had recourse to

(18) Observe, That Hofman's Continuat. Lexici Univers. Tom. 1. p. 1002. attributes this only to the Lions Teeth, as also the producing Sparks of Fire by Collision.

(19) Athen. Deipnosoph. lib. 8. cap. 11.

(20) In his Treatise, pro Hermetis, Ægyptiorum, & Chimicorum Sapientia, printed at Copenhagen, 1672.

Digitized by Google

or with that of ſome other wild Beaſts. The Etymologiſts have not neglected their Intereſts to that Reaſon, ſince Facts, borrow'd from the Pagan Mythology, are not to be confuted in that manner, eſpecially when it is affirm'd, that no Author worthy of Credit ſpeaks of them. The Teſtimony alone of ſome antient Authors is ſufficient to make Him loſe his Cauſe, even though the Naturaliſts ſhould aſſure us of the Impoſſibility of the Thing.

V. A Remark againſt Barthius. Deciſive Authors find themſelves ſometimes lead into a Scrape.

From whence it appears, That Barthius engages himſelf in a ſuperfluous Refutation, when, in commenting on the Verſes of Statius, which I have cited below, he cries out very ſeriouſly; It is a ſtrange Fable, ingens fabula, ſince a Child who ſhould take in any ſuch Food, only by ſucking, would die; every thing in Lions, their very Breath, being poiſonous, eſpecially to ſuch an Age: in conſequence of which he cites a Paſſage of Ariſtotle, importing that Lions have no Marrow. All this is Labour loſt; ſince the Ancients themſelves, who had examin'd things a little, conſider-ed theſe Stories only as Sallies of Wit and Imagination. Would not a Man have little to do, who ſhould ſpend his time in confuting, from Principles of Philoſophy, the Stories of the ſame Achilles's Heel, and his burnt Lip? It is fabled, that his Mother, having plung'd him in the Waters of Styx, to render him invulnerable, could not procure that Advantage to his Heel, becauſe ſhe held her Son by it. Fulgentius, in the 7th Chapter of his 3d Book, and the Scholiaſt of Horace, on the 13th Ode of the 5th Book, remark, that ſhe held him by the Heel. Thoſe, who ſay that he died of a Wound in the Heel, as Hyginus, in his 107th Chapter, and Quintus Calaber, at the 62d Verſe of the 3d Book, agree upon the whole with the other two. Servius, on the 57th Verſe of the 6th Book of the Æneid, ſays in general, that he was invulnerable, excepta parte qua à matre, tentus eſt. That part excepted by which his Mother held him. Others have reported, that, to conſume all that was mortal in her Son's Body, ſhe laid him every Night under live Coals, and that in the Day ſhe anointed him with Ambroſia, and that but one of the Child's Lips was burnt; which was occaſioned by his having lick'd that Part.

(21) Apollodorus, lib. 3. Scholiaſt. Homeri Iliad. Ψ. v. 36. Scholiaſt. Ariſtoph. P. 184. A.

Many (21) Authors mention This Conduct of Thetis; and ſay farther, that ſhe had deſtroy'd, by this means, ſix of her Children; but her Husband, having ſurpriz'd her in it, was the Cauſe that Achilles, who was the ſeventh, eſcap'd. Nevertheleſs Tzetzes (22) condemn'd this Story as falſe, and ſays, that he does not know from whence Lycophron borrow'd this Lie, that Thetis had ſeven Children by Peleus. This is another Example, which may be added to that of Mr de Girac, to ſhew the Danger, to which an Author expoſes himſelf by too deciſive a Confidence: for Mr de Meziriac cites four very grave Authors, who all agree to what Lycophron writes. There is good Reaſon to ſay, when we hear mention made either of ſome extraordinary Phraſe, or of ſome uncommon Fact, that it is a good Bait to draw in Wagerers, that is, your raſh Scholars, who are always ready, on ſuch an Occaſion, to lay Wagers that ſuch a thing is not to be found in any Author; and they ſeldom fail to loſe. But what is moſt aſtoniſhing, is, they ſometimes deny things the moſt eaſy to be met with. I ſhall give ſeveral Examples of this Behaviour in This Dictionary.

(22) See the Commentary of Meziriac, p. 248.

(23) Barth. Comment. in lib. 2. Achill. vol. 3. p. 1754.

But we muſt not take our leave of Barthius (23), without obſerving that he pretends, that the reading Lupæ, inſtead of Lubens, does Statius much Honour, who, by this means, does not contradict Ariſtotle, and obſerves the ſame Diſtinctions with Apollodorus; the latter having affirm'd that Chiron made Achilles feed upon the Entrails of Lions, and the Marrow of wild Boars and Bears. But Barthius, taking upon himſelf once more the Air of Confutation, rejects the Marrow of the She-Wolf, as a manifeſt Abſurdity; and ſays he is convinc'd, that if a Child ſhould take that kind of Food but once, he would die before the next Day. Wherefore, adds he, Gregory Nazianzen reconciles it better, by adding the Marrow of Stags, to that of Lions. Barthius here ſeems to be inconſiſtent with himſelf, having ſaid, in the foregoing Page, that the rejecting of the Marrow of Lions was a ſign of Judgment in Statius, and that the approach of Lions is very dangerous to Children.

VI. The Fable of Achilles being fed with Lions Marrow was a proper Fiction.

It muſt be remark'd, That the Reaſon, why Apollodorus, and ſome others, have rather mentioned the Entrails, than the Marrow, of Lions, as the Food of Achilles, ſeems to be owing to their Opinion, that theſe Creatures have ſcarce any Marrow; for otherwiſe, Marrow was a more ſuitable Diet, conſidering the Character, under which the Poets repreſent him. It is not ſo much under the Idea of Valour, though they aſcribe This to him in an eminent Degree, as under That of an Invincible Anger. Homer propoſes to himſelf this Character of him in the Iliad, where, according to the Obſervation of Horace, he takes for his Theme,

—— gravem
Peleidæ ſtomachum cedere neſcii (24). (24) Horat. Od. 6. lib. 1. ver. 5.

The fierce Pelides' haughty Rage,
Who knew not how to yield.
CREECH.

And begins his Poem thus,

Μῆνιν ἄειδε θεὰ Πηληϊάδεω Ἀχιλῆος,
Οὐλομένην, ἣ μυρί' Ἀχαιοῖς ἄλγε' ἔθηκε.

Achilles' Wrath, to Greece the direful Spring
Of Woes unnumber'd, Heavenly Goddeſs ſing.
POPE.

Now it is certain, that in order to trace this Character to it's Source, in the marvellous Fictions of Antiquity, nothing could be better imagin'd, than Lion's Marrow, for the Nouriſhment of this Hero; ſince it is the moſt juicy, and, as is pretended, contains the ſpecific and ſeminal Parts of the Animal. Homer hints to us in the Example of little Aſtyanax, that it was the favorite Morſel of an indulged or ſpoiled Child:

Ἀστυάνακτ', ὃς πρὶν μὲν ἓῦ ἤπι γύναι πατρὸς
Μυελὸν οἶον ἔδεσκε καὶ οἰῶν πίονα δημόν (25). (25) Homer. Iliad 22. ver. 500.

Aſtyanax ——
He, who with tender Delicacy bred,
On Marrow, and the choiceſt Dainties fed.

And Jeſters tell the Mothers ſometimes, that it is a Son-in-law's Bit. Beſides, there is no Beaſt ſo angry as the Lion; and it is ſuppoſed, that it was from him Prometheus borrowed the Principle, which ſubjected the firſt Man to Anger:

Fertur Prometheus addere principi
Limo coactus particulam undique
Deſectam, & inſani leonis
Vim ſtomacho appoſuiſſe noſtro (26). (26) Horat. Od. 16. lib. 1. ver. 13.

When bold Prometheus firſt began,
As Story goes, to make a Man,
From every thing he ſnatch'd a Part,
To furniſh out his Clay,
And to compleat his rude Eſſay;
And plac'd the Lion's Fury in his Heart.
CREECH.

Not but that it would have ſerv'd the Purpoſe as well, to have given Achilles a Lioneſs for his Nurſe. Virgil followed This Idea, in ſome Reproaches of Cruelty:

—— duris genuit te cautibus horrens
Caucaſus, Hyrcanæque admorunt ubera Tigres (27). (27) Æneid. lib. 4. See Macrob. Saturn. lib. 5. cap. 11.

Falſe as thou art, and, more than falſe, forſworn,
Not ſprung from noble Blood, nor Goddeſs-born,
But hewn from hard'ned Entrails of a Rock;
And rough Hyrcanian Tygers gave thee ſuck.
DRYDEN.

And the Bragadochio in the Comedy of the Viſionaries, is not far from it in this Rhodomontade:

Le Dieu Mars m'engendra d'une fiere Amazone,
Et je ſucai le lait d'une affreuſe Lionne,

I was begotten by the God Mars upon a Warlike Amazon, and ſuck'd the Milk of a horrid Lioneſs.

By

Digitized by Google

Intereſts on this occaſion; they have made their Advantage of this Tradition, for they pretend that the Name of Achilles is derived from it [B]. He was not contented to inure his Body to the moſt laborious Exerciſes, but he adorn'd his Soul with a great Variety of uſeful Knowledge. But if we may believe Homer, it is to Phœnix, and

VII. Whence the Fiction of the Marrow of a Stag. Swiftneſs of Foot was formerly an Heroic Quality.

By this Key we are led to the Reaſon, why ſome chooſe to prefer the Marrow of Stags, before any other, for the Food of Achilles: Becauſe they were ſtruck with the Tradition, which aſcribes to him great Swiftneſs in running, and which induced Homer to honour him continually either with the Elogy of πόδας ὠκὺς, ſwift-footed, or ſome other Epithet of the ſame Signification, ποδώκης, ποδάρκης, πόδας ταχὺς, ποσὶ ταχέεσσι, πραπιδεσσι, &c. With us, at preſent, this is but the Merit of a Biſcaian Lacquey *, but anciently (28) it was an heroic Quality: And therefore Homer's only Fault in the uſe of it is, His patching up his Verſe too frequently with it. It was therefore thought neceſſary to feign, that an Hero of an extraordinary Swiftneſs was nouriſhed with the Marrow of Stags; and the Ancients were ſo fond of this Notion, that they did not take notice, that the Marrow of ſuch a timorous Animal was otherwiſe very improper for This Thunderbolt of War, This Lion-hearted Hero.

'Αχιλλῆα μεξήνορα θυμολέοντα· (29)

who, ſhewing the utmoſt Diſdain for the General of the Army, among other opprobrious Expreſſions added;

Va ſac à vin, yeux de chien, cœur de cerf.

So Vigenere (30) tranſlates this Verſe of the 1ſt Book of the Iliad,

Οἰνοβαρὲς, κυνὸς ὄμματ' ἔχων, κραδίην δ' ἐλάφοιο·

O Monſter, mix'd of Inſolence and Fear,
Thou Dog in Forehead, but in Heart a Deer!

POPE.

VIII. Faults of ſome of Tertullian's Interpreters.

I do not think that, if the Matter were to be decided by a Majority of Voices, it would be judg'd that Achilles was fed with the Marrow of Stags, nor that Mr de Girac could ſupport his haſty Aſſertion, that Marrow was the only Food of Homer's Hero, according to the common Opinion of the Ancients. But if this ſhould be true, an old (31) French Tranſlator of the Treatiſe de Pallio would not be excuſable, for having reſtrained to this Marrow, what Tertullian ſaid of That of wild Beaſts in general. Tranſlators have no ſuch Right. "Ille ferarum medullis educatus, un-"de & nominis (32) conſilium, quando quidem labiis "vacuerat ab uberum guſtu: —— He having been "fed with the Marrow of Stags, from whence he had "his Name, as having never ſuck'd at the Breaſt with "his Lips, &c." Theodorus (33) Marcilius ſtumbled likewiſe at theſe Words, pretending, that Tertullian hints at the Etymology ſine chilo, ἄνευ χειλῶν, which is viſibly falſe, as Salmaſius obſerves. I might have remark'd another Miſtake of the ſame Author, as follows: He ſays that Achilles, according to Velius Longius, cited by Caſſiodorus, had his Name from the Word χείλος, as being one of thoſe Perſons who are called Chilones, or Labiones, that is Thick-lip'd. Lucretius calls them (34) Labioſi, and obſerves that a Lover, who would excuſe the Imperfections of his Miſtreſs, ſays, labioſa, φίλημα, great Lips are large and ſpacious Fields for Kiſſes. But it is falſe, that Achilles had his Name from χείλος, a Lip, upon this account; he was rather ſo called, becauſe he was maim'd in that Part, although Salmaſius denies it, notwithſtanding an expreſs Paſſage of Photius, which I have already mentioned, and what Agameſtor (35), an old Poet, cited by Tzetzes, poſitively ſays of it; Salmaſius's Words are (36), "Si chilones dicti à mag-"nis & improbis labris, Achilles dictus fuerit quaſi "ἄνευ χειλέων, non quod ſine labris fuerit, ſed quod "labiorum miniſterio non uſus fuerit infans. —— "If the Chilones are ſo called from their large and "monſtrous Lips, Achilles is ſo called quaſi ἄνευ χει-"λέων, not that he had no Lips, but becauſe he made "no uſe of them in his Infancy." I do not deny, but that Apollodorus ſays, that the Son of Thetis, whoſe firſt Name was Ligyron, was called Achilles by Chiron, becauſe he had never apply'd his Lips to the Breaſt (37). Ὅτι τὰ χείλη μαζοις ὐ προσήνεγκε, quod mammis labra minime admoviſſet,

[B] That the Name of Achilles is derived from it.] I have taken Notice of the Etymologies of this Name in the Remark [B] of the foregoing Article; but I muſt ſpeak particularly of That before us at preſent. It always accompanies the Tradition, which ſays that Achilles was fed with nothing but the Fleſh and Marrow of Animals. The Connexion between theſe two Things ariſes from the Greek Word χυλὸς, which properly ſignifies the Nutriment, which the Earth ſupplies us with. But ſome Authors build a pleaſant Opinion upon this. I ſhall give it in the proper Terms of Father Gautruche, in his Poetical Hiſtory. I rather chuſe This Work, than any other, becauſe it has been printed ſeveral Times (38), and in ſeveral Languages, and is eſteem'd a Book fit for every Body's reading. Now no Faults ought more carefully to be remark'd, than thoſe, which may miſlead the greateſt Number of Readers. Father Gautruche ſays (39), Inſtead of Milk and other common Food, Chiron nurſed him only with the Marrow of Lions, or of wild Bears, in order to produce in his Pupil the Courage and the Strength of theſe Animals. Whence, according to the Opinion of ſome, being nouriſhed without any kind of Meat, he was called Achilles, that is to ſay, WITHOUT CHYLE. Though the laſt Period of this Paſſage does not appear in the laſt Edition, yet I ſhall remark, I. That it is an Error, to ſay that a Perſon is nouriſhed without Meat, when he is only fed with the Marrow of Beaſts; for the Marrow is unqueſtionably comprehended under the Word Meat, and is not comprehended among thoſe Viands, which are permitted in Lent. II. That it is not true, that Marrow is not converted into Chyle, or that whoever is fed only with Marrow, muſt neceſſarily be without Chyle. Theſe Remarks will not ſeem ſuperfluous to thoſe, who ſhall conſider, that this Doctrine of Father Gautruche is in a great many Copies of his Works, and in other Writers (40), and that in the Edition, where his Faults are dropp'd, we are not told, why they were ſuppreſs'd.

The Foundation of this Miſtake ariſes from the Term χυλὸς, (which Euphorion made uſe of in ſome Verſes, cited by the Author of the great Etymologicum, and by Euſtathius,) being taken for that ſoft and whitiſh Subſtance, into which the Stomach converts the Aliments, and which the Phyſicians call Chyle, from the Greek Word χυλὸς: Whereas by χυλὸς ought to be underſtood, as Mr de Meziriat (41) took it from Euſtathius, the Nouriſhment we receive from the Product of the Earth. Natalis Comes (42) has wrong tranſlated Euphorion; for he makes him ſay that Achilles had taſted no Milk. Vigenere and Fungerus, depending upon the Authority of St Gregory Nazianzen, have not been more ſucceſsful. They attribute to St Gregory that, which is but in the Latin Tranſlation of the Commentaries of Nicetas Serronius, Archbiſhop of Heraclea, in the XIth Century, on the Orations of that Father, printed with his Works (43). Fungerus concludes, that Achilles was nurs'd ſine cibo, becauſe his only Diet was the Marrow of Stags. The other will have it (44), that χυλὸς ſignifies Gravy, and that Achilles was nouriſhed without Juice, becauſe he was not fed with the common Food of Men, but with the raw Fleſh of Savage Beaſts. Francis Alunno adopts one half of this laſt Error. "Fu nutrito, ſays he (45), "nel monte Pelio da Chirone Centauro, ne mai in "quel tempio mangio cibo cotto, perche fu nominato "Achille, perche à in Greco ſignifica ſenza, & chilos "CIBO COTTO. —— He was brought up on Mount "Pelion, by Chiron the Centaur, and having never "fed upon any thing but raw Fleſh, he was called "Achilles, from Alpha, which in Greek ſignifies "Without, and Chilos, DRESS'D MEAT." Some, taking the Word χυλὸς ſimply for Nouriſhment, ground the Etymology of Achilles (46) on this, that his Preceptor Chiron, after a certain time, neither provided for him the Marrow of wild Beaſts, nor any other kind of Food, ſo that he was oblig'd to ſupport himſelf by the Fortune of the Chace. But was this to live without Nouriſhment? This is, perhaps, the worſt Account of them all.

(28) See the prodigious Swiftneſs, which Virgil, Æneid. 7. v. 817. gives a young Amazon called Camilla; and Father la Cerda's Obſervations upon it.

(29) Homer. Iliad. 7. ver. 228.

(30) Vigenere's Comment on Philoſtrat. de Nutrim. Achill.

(31) Edmund Richer, who publiſh'd his Verſion at Paris, in 1600, 8vo.

(32) Salmaſius approves of thoſe who read Concilium.

(33) Not. Critic. in Tertull. de Pall. p. 77. Pariſ. 1614. 8vo.

(34) Lucret. lib. 4.

(35) In his Poem on the Wedding of Thetis and Peleus, which is thought to have preceded that of Heſiod on the ſame Subject. Neither Voſſius nor Lorenzo Craſſo make any mention of this Poet.

(36) Salmaſ. in Tract. de Pall. p. 281. Edit. 1656.

(37) Apollodor. lib. 3. p. 235.

(38) An Edition of it was publiſh'd at Utrecht in 169c. to which was added the Tranſlation in Latin and Dutch. The Latin Tranſlation had already appeared by it ſelf. The Engliſh publiſh'd it in their Language in the Year 1671.

(39) Poetical Hiſtory, B. 2. chap. 15. p. 158. Edit. of the Hague, 1681. which is the 4th.

(40) Among others, in the Hiſtorical Dictionary of Juighe.

(41) Comment. on the Epiſtle of Briſeis, pag. 248. where the Poet Euphorion is miſcalled Euphoron.

(42) Mythol. lib. 9. cap. 12.

(43) This Verſion is printed with the Works of St Gregory.

(44) Comment. on Philoſtrat. of the Nurture of Achilles, pag. 543.

(45) In his Fabrica del Mondo, which is a Dictionary on Boccacio, Dante, Petrarch, &c. printed at Venice in 1588. Folio.

(46) Comm. on Alciatus's Emblems, p. 624. of the Edition of Thuilius at Padua, 1661. in 4to.

Digitized by Google

and not to Chiron [C], that the Quality of Achilles's Preceptor, and Foſter-Father is to [C] If we may believe Homer, it is to Phœnix, and not to Chiron.] Many Perſons are not aware of this. Decimator (47) ſays, that Achilles, after having been educated by Chiron, who taught him the Military Art, Muſic, and Morality, was put under the Direction of Phœnix, who taught him both to Speak and Live well, as he boaſts of it himſelf. He proves this, as to Muſic and Morality, from theſe Verſes of Ovid, in the 1ſt Book de Arte amandi.

Phyllirides puerum citharæ præfecit Achillem,
Atque animos molli contudit arte feros.

Chiron his Pupil to the Lyre inclin'd,
And humaniz'd, by Sounds, his ſavage Mind.

I ſet them down without altering any thing, either in the Orthography, or in the Citharæ præfecit, which ought to be changed into Citharâ perfecit. Every body may ſee, that there is not a Word of the Study of Morality in thoſe Verſes. His Proofs, as to Phœnix, are theſe Words of Homer:

Τηνικά με πρόεηκε διδασκέμεναι τάδε πάντα,
Μύθων τε ῥητῆρ' ἐμεναι, πρηκτῆρα τε ἔργων. (48)

He had me teach thee all the Ways of War,
To ſhine in Councils, and in Camps to dare.
POPE.

But provided we read with Attention the Book of the Iliad, from whence this Authority is borrowed, it will appear, that Decimator is miſtaken. The Expreſſions of Phœnix teſtify, that he was the firſt Preceptor of Achilles. You would eat nothing, repreſents he to that Hero, unleſs I firſt took you on my Knees, and carved your Meat. The Wine which you diſcharged into my Boſom, in your troubleſome Infancy, has often ſully'd my Cloaths.

Ἐνθ' ὔπ' ἐθελήσκεις ἔμ' ἄλλῳ
Οὐτ' ἐς δαιτ' ἰέναι, οὔτ' ἐν μεγάροισι πάεεσθαι·
Πρίν γ' ὅτε δή σ' ἐπ' ἐμοῖσιν ἐγὼ γένασι καθίσας,
Ὄψα τ' ἀσαιμι προταμών, καὶ οἶνον ἐπισχών.
Πολλάκι μοι κατέδινεας ἐπὶ ςήθεσσι χιτῶνα
Οἴνῳ ἀποβλύζων ἐν νηπίῃ ἀλεγεινῇ· (49)

Thy infant Breaſt a like Affection ſhow'd,
Still in my Arms, (an ever-pleaſing load)
Or, at my Knee, by Phœnix wouldſt thou ſtand,
No food was grateful, but from Phœnix' Hand.
POPE.

It was neceſſary to produce the Greek; for it conveys ſo filthy an Image, that it might elſe have been thought I had not fairly tranſlated it *. See the 11th Paragraph below. But however it be, this ſhews, that, if we will make uſe of the Authority of Homer, with reſpect to Phœnix, we muſt renounce what others report concerning Chiron; or that at leaſt we muſt not give Chiron the firſt Education of Achilles, and leſs ſtill make it continue, until he had taught his Scholar the Military Art, Muſic, and Morality. When a Perſon is arriv'd at an Age fit for Inſtruction in theſe Sciences, he eats no longer on his Foſter Father's Lap, nor throws up his Wine on his Cloaths. Add to this that they, who ſuppoſe that Achilles was brought up by Chiron, ſay that he was taken away from under his Diſcipline, to be ſent, diſguis'd in a Female Dreſs, to the Court of King Lycomedes, where his Diſguiſe ſoon procured him opportunities of converſing familiarly with the King's Daughter, as appeared by the Child ſhe brought into the World. Now it is not likely that they appointed him a Tutor after he became a Father; and conſequently there is no room for placing the Guardianſhip of Phœnix after That of Chiron. The Faults of Decimator are to be found in the Theſaurus Scholaſticæ Eruditionis of the laſt Edition, tho' that Work was often corrected by learned Humaniſts (50). (51) Dempſter has likewiſe ſaid, that Achilles, having been inſtructed by Chiron in his Infancy, was educated by Phœnix, when he was of a more advanced Age. Obſerve, that I do not intend to deny, that, after Achilles became a Father, Phœnix was ordered to teach him (52) how to conduct himſelf in the Trade of Arms, and the Councils of War: But I do not call this appointing him a Tutor.

I cannot tell whether Malherbe ever took notice of this; but it is certain that he expreſſed himſelf like one, who was well ſatisfied, that Achilles had but one Preceptor. For thus he ſpeaks of that Warrior in the fourth Book of his Poems, p. 106.

Ou de Phenix, ou de Chiron,
Il eût fait ſon apreniſſage.
Whether he ſerv'd his Apprenticeſhip with Phœnix or Chiron.

We muſt allow him only Phœnix, if we are to be determined by Homer, who makes no mention of the Preceptorſhip of Chiron; and only Chiron, if we follow the Crowd of Authors. Yet Mr Menage has ſaid, in his Notes on this Paſſage of Malherbe, That Chiron was the firſt Tutor of Achilles, and Phœnix the ſecond. I do not rely on the Authority of Tzetzes, who, by an Allegorical Explication of what he had read in ſome Authors, that Phœnix, blinded by his own Father, was brought to Chiron, who reſtored him to his Sight, pretends that the meaning of this is, that Chiron gave the young Achilles to his Care; for, beſides that there is nothing more cold, or forced than this Thought; it is certain that Tzetzes by no means proves the Fact. By his pretended Allegories he endeavours to reconcile Homer with Lycophron; but how will he reconcile Homer, who ſays, that Achilles, yet a little Child, was under the Conduct of Phœnix: I ſay, how will he reconcile him with thoſe who ſuppoſe Achilles to have been educated by Chiron from ſix Years of Age (53), to Manhood, 'till he had not only learnt to ſit aſtride on the Back of his (54) Preceptor, but alſo till he had inured himſelf to (55) the moſt violent Exerciſes; without reckoning many other things, which Chiron taught him; as the Military Art, Muſic, Morality, (as Decimator informed us before) and Phyſick, but particularly Botany and Law, as an ancient Author called Staphylus (56), and others inform us? Statius, in the ſecond Book of his Achilleis; Claudian, in his Panegyric on the third Conſulſhip of Honorius; and Sidonius Apollinaris, in his ninth Poem, ſpecify what Achilles learnt of Chiron. Note, that on the pretended Teſtimony of Homer, they aſcribe to Chiron, in the Commentaries on the Emblems of Alciatus, what belongs only to Phœnix. Nothing is more frequent among Authors than theſe quid pro quo's.

I ſaid, that Homer has taken no notice of Chiron's Preceptorſhip. You will ask me then, what mean theſe Words of Eurypylus to Patroclus in the eleventh Book of the Iliad,

- - - - ἔτι δ' ἤτια Φαρμακα πάσεω
Ἐσθλά, τά σε πρωτὶ φασιν Ἀχιλλῆος δεδιδάχθαι,
Ὃν Χείρων ἰδίδαξε δικαιότατος Κενταύρων. (57)

With healing Balms the raging Smart allay;
Such as ſage Chiron, Sire of Pharmacy,
Once taught Achilles, and Achilles Thee.
POPE.

I anſwer, That they do not ſignify, that Chiron was the Preceptor of Achilles, but only that he taught him Phyſic. Every one ſees the Difference of theſe two Things. Menconis, in his Travels, names an hundred Perſons, who taught him Receipts and Secrets for Cures; yet thoſe People had not been his Schoolmaſters, nor had educated him in his Youth. Profeſſors in Phyſic, who teach their Auditors an hundred good Remedies in public, or communicate ſome very rare Receipts to diſtinguiſh'd Friends in particular, are they therefore what we call Young Maſter's Tutor or Governor? And, without going farther than this Paſſage of Homer, do we not ſee that Achilles imparted to Patroclus Remedies, though he was not his Preceptor? To enter then into Homer's Thought, we muſt ſay that Achilles was educated by Phœnix from three or four Years of Age, 'till he was capable of learning to Diſcourſe well, and perform fine Actions; but yet that, during that time, and afterwards, he did not fail to attend the Lectures of Chiron. It

IX. Examination of a Paſſage where Homer ſpeaks of Chiron.

(47) Decimator in Theſauro Linguarum. Leipſic 1606. in F.ho.

(48) Homer. Iliad. lib. 9. ver. 442.

(49) Id. Il. ver. 482.

* Mr Pope has omitted the two laſt Lines, as unworthy of Homer, and too nauſeous to be tranſlated.

(50) The firſt Author of the Theſaurus is called Baſilius Faber Soranus: He was Rector of a Colle e at Erford, and he publiſhed his Book in the Year 1571. after having employ'd 36 Years in teaching the Latin Tongue. The Work was reprinted in 1625; with the Corrections and Additions of Buchnerus, who died in 1661. at the Age of 70 Years, after having been Profeſſor in Poetry 45 Years, and in Eloquence 30 Years, at Wittemberg. He alſo corrected and augmented that Dictionary for the Edit. of 1605. Laſtly, Chriſtopher Celſius corrected it again, for the Edition of the Year 1686, and afterwards for that of 1692.

(51) Paralip. ad Roſinum, lib. 2. c. 11.

(52) Iliad. lib. 9. p. 446.

(53) Pindar. Nem. Od. 3.

(54) Τῷ αὐτῷ πάλῃ καὶ διδασκάλῳ χρώμενος. Making uſe of the ſame Perſon both as his Coach-Horſe, and his Tutor. Greg. Nazianzen. Orat. 20.

(55) Statii Achill. lib. 2. ver. 382.

(56) He is cited by Natal. Comes, lib. 9. c. 12. and in the Commentaries on Alciatus's Emblems.

(57) Iliad. 11. ver. 829.

Digitized by Google

to be given. The Uneaſineſs of Thetis did not permit her to leave her Son in Chiron's Cave, ſo long as ſhe deſired; ſhe (e) took him from thence when he was but nine Years of Age, and diſguiſing him in a Woman's Habit, hid him among the young Ladies in the Court of Lycomedes, King of the Iſland of Scyros, as ſoon as ſhe was inform'd of the Preparations, which were making againſt the Trojans. The Reaſon of her Conduct was this; ſhe knew, on the one ſide, that if her Son went to Troy, he would never return from thence; and, on the other, that Calchas had foretold that the City of Troy ſhould never be taken without Achilles. The Device of Thetis ſtood her in no ſtead; the Seer Calchas diſcover'd to the Greeks (f) where Achilles lay hid, whom they had ſought for in divers Places without finding him: Upon this Ulyſſes, being deputed to the Court of Lycomedes, eaſily diſcover'd Achilles [D], and brought him away

(e) Apollodor. lib. 3. p. 235.

(f) Statius, Achill. lib. 1. ver. 493, &c.

is thus a certain Scholiaſt took Homer's Thought: For he obſerves, that Apollonius, who feigns, that Chiron went to the Sea-ſide to wiſh the Argonauts a good Voyage, and that his Wife attended him, holding Achilles in her Arms, and ſhewing him to Peleus, follow'd the Poets, who came after Homer, and ſuppoſed, with them, that Chiron nurſed the little Achilles; a Thing never mentioned by Homer. Ἠκολούθησεν Ἀπολλώνιος τοῖς μεθ' Ὅμηρον ποιηταῖς ὑπὸ Χείρωνος λεγων τὸν Ἀχιλλέα τραφῆναι. Ὅμηρος δὲ οὐδὲν τοιοῦτον λέγει (58).

(58) Schol. Apollon. lib. 2. ver. 558.

X. Authors who have mentioned the Preceptorſhip of Chiron, and that of Phœnix.

Apollonius is very excuſable, ſince he only followed the Crowd; for who has not ſpoke of Chiron, as having educated Achilles? Is it not what Orpheus (59), Pindar (60), Euripides (61), and ſo many other Poets have ſung (62)? Xenophon (63), Plato (64), Apollodorus (65), Pliny (66), Plutarch (67), Pauſanius (68), Clemens Alexandrinus (69), Philoſtratus (70), Libanius (71), St Gregory Nazianzen, (72), and ſeveral others leſs ancient (73), have they not ſaid the ſame thing? But, on the other ſide, they (74), who have mentioned the Preceptorſhip of Phœnix, are not fewer in Number. We ought not, then, to be very much ſurprized, if, according to ſome ancient Authors, Phœnix and Chiron are both repreſented as having been the Preceptors of Achilles: We can only ſay, that theſe Authors had not examined the thing narrowly enough, or that they had no regard to the Inconſiſtency, which reſults from the Circumſtances of the Preceptorſhip of Phœnix, and the Circumſtances of the Preceptorſhip of Chiron.

(59) Argon. ver. 378.

(60) Nem. Od. 3.

(61) Iphig. in Aul. ver. 709.

(62) Senec. Troad. Act. 3. ver. 833. Stat. Silv. 1. lib. 2. ver. 89. Achill. lib. 2. ver. 196. and in ſeveral other places. Valer. Flaccus, lib. 1. ver. 254, & 402. Auſonius Protrept. ver. 20. Claudian. de 3. Conſul. Honor. ver. 61.

(63) De Venat. pag. 973. A. & 974. C. (64) Hipp. Tom. 1. p. 371. cap. 3. de Repub. Tom. 2. pag. 391. B. (65) Lib. 3. (66) Lib. 25. cap. 5. (67) Sympoſ. lib. 4. cap. 1. pag. 660. F. & de Muſic. pag. 1146. A. (68) In Lacon. p. 197. (69) Stromat. lib. 1. pag. 306. B. (70) In Heroic. p. 682. A. & 705. A. (71) Progymn. pag. 71, A; pag. 97, C; pag. 129, A; pag. 142, C; pag. 143, A; & Declamat. 4. pag. 259, D. (72) Orat. 2. pag. 324. (73) Euſtath. in Homer. pag. 11. 34. & 840. Scholiaſt. Homeri in Iliad. lib. 1. ver. 50. & lib. 16. ver. 14. & 36.

(74) Theſe are the Names of the principal: Scholiaſt. Homeri Iliad. 9. ver. 168, & 448. Dictys, lib. 2. Xenophon, Conv. pag. 897, A. Plato 2. de Repub. Tom. 2. pag. 390, E. Cicero 3. de Orat. n. 15. Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 297. Quintil. lib 2. cap. 3. Statii Sylv. 3. lib. 5. ver. 191. Plutarch. Tom. 2. pag. 4, 26, & 2. Lucian. Dial. Mort. Philoſtr. Lemn. p. 136. Libanius, Progymn. pag. 99.

I had therefore Reaſon to deny, in my Plan, that Statius, ſpeaking of Phœnix and of Chiron as of two Preceptors of Achilles, was in the leaſt favourable to Decimator and his Party; for beſides that Statius does not tell us, whether they exerciſed this Employ both together, or one after the other, or which of the two was the firſt, he cannot be reconciled with Homer, who, in caſe of Competition, ought to carry it from him with an high hand. Conſider theſe two Paſſages well:

Non tibi certaſſet juvenilia fingere corda
Neſtor, & indomiti Phœnix Moderator alumni,
Quique, tubas acres lituoſque audire volentem,
Æaciden alio frangebat carmine Chiron. (75)

(75) Stat. lib. 5. Silva 3. ver. 191.

In forming thee, nor Neſtor wou'd employ,
Nor Phœnix, Tutor of th'unconquer'd Boy,
A Guardian's Care; nor He, who cou'd controul,
With ſofter Notes, Achilles' warlike Soul;
Tho' Martial Muſic was the Hero's Choice,
And his Heart bounded at the Trumpet's Voice.

This is the firſt; The other is,

—— tenero ſic blandus Achilli
Semiſer Æmonium vincebat Pelea Chiron.
Nec ſenior Peleus natum comitatus in arma
Troica, ſed caro Phœnix hærebat alumno. (76)

(76) Id. lib. 2 Silva 1. ver. 88.

Thus, for his Pupil, Chiron's flattering Tale
O'er the reluctant Father cou'd prevail.
The Sire refus'd the Grecian Arms to ſhare,
But ſent Achilles to the Trojan War,
Truſting the darling Charge to Phœnix' tender Care.

Xenophon (77) and Lucian (78), who allot theſe two Preceptors to Achilles, are expoſed to the ſame Battery as Statius; and beſides they differ from Homer, whom Decimator alledges: Obſerve that, tho' Statius (79) ſays, that Phœnix accompanied Achilles to Troy, it does not follow from thence that he ſuppoſes he was Chiron's Succeſſor; for he ſays clearly enough, that Phœnix had had the Care of Achilles before that Voyage; for he calls the latter the Alumnus (the Pupil) of Phœnix (80). As for Tzetzes, who tells us, in his Commentary on Lycophron, that Peleus, having brought Phœnix to Chiron's Cave, where Achilles was educated, ſaid to him, Behold your Son; tutor him as a good Father ought to educate his Child; he proves nothing againſt me; nor is he in the leaſt favourable to thoſe who have recourſe to the Diſtinction of Governor and Preceptor, which is ſo clear in Plutarch, with regard to the Son of Philip King of Macedon. See the Article LYSIMACHUS. The Poets, I believe, cannot ſhew us the ſame Diſtinction in thoſe remote Ages; and, however it be, it does not appear that Peleus joined Chiron in the Tutelage of his Son with Phœnix. And if Tzetzes, expreſſing himſelf very ill, meant ſo, he deſerves no Credit. He is too modern an Author to deſerve to be followed in a Matter of Fact, which can neither be reconciled with Homer, nor with the ancient Authors, who have attributed the Education of young Achilles to Chiron.

(77) In Conviv.

(78) In Dial. Achill. & Ant.

(79) Ubi ſupra. & lib. 3. Silv. 2. ver. 96.

(80) Meurſius and Canterus underſtand by the Word πρόφρων πρόφρος which Lycophron made uſe of to denote Phœnix, that the latter had been Achilles's Foſter-Father.

XI. Homer cenſur'd for the Speech of Phœnix.

I ſhall put an end to this Remark, already too long, with a bold Stroke, which I cannot forbear. I dare affirm, that we need only read the Speech of Phœnix, in the ninth Book of the Iliad, to admire at thoſe, who at preſent admire That Poem. For is That Speech worthy the Majeſty of Epic Poetry? And Horace, who, according to Mr Moreri (81), boaſts in the ſixth Satyr of the firſt Book, that he had learned the Iliad by heart, had doubtleſs forgot that Speech full of a thouſand Impertinencies, when he gave the Author of the Iliad this Elogy, that he always runs directly to the Mark, that he haſtens to the Event; ſemper ad Eventum feſtinet (82). If ſo, would he amuſe a Deputy of the Greek Army, who had a very important and preſſing Commiſſion; I ſay, would he amuſe him with old Wives Stories, and with a Recital of his former Adventures?

(81) In the Article HORACE, but it is a Miſtake.

(82) Horat. de Arte Poët. ver. 148.

[D] Eaſily diſcovered Achilles.] Mr Moreri pretends, with little Exactneſs, that Ulyſſes diſcovered him, by cauſing a Merchant to preſent him with Toys and Arms; for if we adhere to what Ulyſſes himſelf ſays of it (83), in his Speech to the Generals of the Army, it was He, who not only preſented thoſe Toys and Arms to Achilles, but alſo to all the young Ladies of the Court. If we refer it to Hyginus, and Philoſtratus the younger, it is Ulyſſes again, who preſented them, being one of Ambaſſadors of the Greeks, ſent to Lycomedes to demand Achilles of him. If we leave it to Statius, it may be ſaid indeed, that it was not Ulyſſes himſelf, the Chief of the Greek Embaſſy, who preſented the Toys, but not that he employed a Merchant to do it. Some Moderns (84) ſay, that he did it himſelf in the Diſguiſe of a Merchant.

(83) Ovid. Metam. lib. 13. ver. 175.

(84) Textor, Officin. lib. 2. cap. 32. Nat. Comes Mythol. Lib. 6. cap. 1. Vigenere on Philoſtr. in the Summary of Achilles's Nouriſſment. Pomey in Pantheo Mythico, &c.

Digitized by Google

away without Trouble, tho' he was ſo much in Favour with the Princeſs Deïdamia; the King's Daughter, that ſhe ſuffer'd herſelf to be with Child by him [E]. From hence ſprung Neoptolemus, or Pyrrhus, as ſhall be obſerv'd in it's proper Place. Achilles fought an infinite Number of fine Battles, during the Siege of Troy, and before they encamped before the City. The great Quarrel, which aroſe between Him and Agamemnon about their Miſtreſſes, (for (g) Agamemnon having reſtor'd Chryſeïs, who was His, took Briſeïs away, who belong'd to Achilles) obliged the latter to keep in his Tent, without troubling himſelf any more with the War; and nothing was able to make him change his Reſolution, but the Death of his dear Friend Patroclus, to whom he had lent his Armour (h), of which Hector deprived him, as well as of his Life. Upon which, Vulcan, at the Requeſt of Thetis (i), made a new Suit of Armour for Achilles [F]. The Death of Patroclus was ſoon after reveng'd [G]; Achilles fought chant. I dare not maintain that this is forged: but it very certain, that it is not built upon good Authority. Langius pretends (85), that Lycomedes did what he could by his Tears and Prayers, to hinder Achilles from following Ulyſſes, and accuſes Cicero for having taken the Son for the Father, in theſe Words: "Nec enim —— Trojam Neoptolemus ca-"pere potuiſſet, ſi Lycomedem apud quem erat educa-"tus cum multis lacrymis iter ſuum impedientem "audire voluiſſet. —— Nor could Neoptolemus "have taken Troy, had he ſuffered himſelf to have "been prevailed upon by the Tears of Lycomedes, who "would have prevented his Expedition." Langius is miſtaken, and not Cicero. See the Remark [A] of the Article PYRRHUS, the Son of Achilles.

(g) Homer, Il. l. 1. v. 323, &c.

(h) Ib. l. 16. v. 818.

(i) Ib. l. 18. v. 462, &c.

(85) Vſon Cicero de Amicitia, cap. 20.

[E] Suffered herſelf to be with Child by him.] Achilles was ſo young at that time, that there are but few Examples of ſuch a forward Generative Faculty as his. And yet good Inſtruction was then more early; nor was there room for the Complaint of Montagne in the twenty fifth Chapter of the firſt Book of his Eſſays, when he ſays, They teach us to live when Life is paſt. An hundred Scholars have had the Venereal Diſtemper, before having attained to Ariſtotle's Leſſons of Temperance. But, if I had mind to moralize on the Poetical Hiſtory, I ſhould ſay to Montagne, that this Adventure of the Son of Peleus is an Admonition, that though Education be implanted never ſo early, it will ſink under the Weight of Nature.

(86) Ὡς ἐγένετο ἐυνιατὴς. Barthius cites theſe Words in the 1570*th and* 1685*th Pages of the* 3*d Tome of his Commentaries on* Statius, and nevertheleſs he ſays in the 1584*th Page, that* Apollodorus does not mention Achilles's Age.

I ſhall obſerve by the way, that the Fictions of the Ancients would be more tolerable than they are, had they taken care not contradict each other ſo much; but it ſeems they looked on their fabulous Hiſtory as a Country, wherein every Body did what he pleaſed, without any Dependance on others. Apollodorus ſays, That Achilles was but nine Years of Age (86), when he was carried into the Iſle of Scyros, and that they had began already to talk of the Expedition to Troy. According to Statius, the Preparations of the Greeks had already continued a Year, when Ulyſſes was ſent to the Iſland of Scyros to fetch Achilles from thence. When Ulyſſes came there, Achilles was already a Father (87): Judge then whether Nature had been ſlow in granting him the Abilities of a Man, and whether he long deferred the Exerciſe of them on young Deïdamia. Statius durſt not keep to the Calculation of Apollodorus, for he gives Achilles (88) at leaſt twelve Years before the taking of him out of Chiron's Cave. I cannot tell how Barthius could find (89), that, according to the Calculation of Statius, the Son of Achilles muſt be above a Year old at the Time of Ulyſſes's Embaſſy; for though the young Hero had enjoyed the Fair one the very firſt Day, his Son could have been but three Months old at the Arrival of Ulyſſes. Some have ſaid (90), that he repeated the Doſe to his Miſtreſs, after her firſt Lying-in, and that he had another Son by her. But, ſeeing he was born (91) before the Voyage of the Argonauts, between which, and the Expedition of Troy, the Chronologers (92) place at leaſt thirty Years, judge whether the ancient Poets adjuſted their Chronology well.

(87) Stat. Achill. ver. 234.

(88) Ibid. 396.

(89) Barth. in Statium, Tom. 3. p. 1684. 1736.

(90) Euſtathius in Iliad. 11. & Ptol. Hephæſt. apud Phot.

(91) Apollon. Argon. lib. 1. ver. 558. Valer. Flaccus, Arg. lib. 1. ver. 236.

(92) See Calviſius ad ann. Mundi 2727, & 2767, and F. L'Abbé, Chronol. Franc. Tom. 1. pag. 127.

[F] Made a new Suit of Armour for Achilles.] No body ought to object that Charles Stephens and Lloyd, Hofman, Moreri, &c. ſpeak of the impenetrable Armour, which Thetis cauſed Vulcan to make for her Son, for the Expedition of Troy. For though ſhe had rendered his Body already invulnerable, by plunging it in the River Styx, we know that few Precautions ſeem ſuperfluous to motherly Fondneſs. Malherbe deſigned to ſpecify theſe two Precautions of Thetis, when he ſaid:

Bien que ſa mere eût à ſes armés
Ajoute la force des charmes (93).

Though to the youthful Hero's Arms
His Mother adds the Force of Charms.

(93) Malherbe, lib. 3. pag. 75.

But yet he did not particularize them, becauſe his Expreſſion rather inclines one to think, that Thetis gave her Son enchanted Armour, than that, beſides having charmed his Body, ſhe preſented him likewiſe with Armour of Proof. Mr Menage (94), who juſtly cenſures the Ambiguity of the Expreſſion, acknowledges moreover, that Thetis made uſe of this double Expedient; which in the main does not claſh with probability. It is not the Buſineſs of a Dictionary Writer to ſuppreſs a Thing under Pretence that it was unneceſſary. It is ſufficient that he finds it in Authors; being at Liberty, however, if he thinks proper, to arm us with his Philoſophical Reflexions. Now it is certain, that an ancient Author called Philarchus, or Phylarchus has left in Writing, That Thetis, finding ſhe could not hinder Achilles from going to the Siege of Troy, ſupplicated Vulcan to make him a Suit of Armour (95), proof againſt all human Force. Vulcan, having forged the Armour, declared that he would not deliver it, until he had obtained of Thetis the greateſt Favour ſhe could grant him. She excuſed herſelf from it, offering to teſtify her Acknowledgment by any kind of Service: But, finding he required a Perſonal Acknowledgment, ſhe promiſed to pay him with her Perſon, provided the Armour fitted Achilles, which was to be tried upon herſelf, who was of her Son's Stature. Vulcan, ſatisfied with the Bargain, gave Thetis the Armour, who put it on, and run away with it; the poor Cripple, not being able to overtake her, threw his Hammer after her, and hurt her in the Heel.

(94) Menage's Obſervations on Malherbe, p. 372.

(95) Apud Natal. Comitem Mythol. lib. 9. cap. 12. Tzetzes in Lycophron, pag. 30. takes ſome Notice of it. What I report, and is not given us by Natalis Comes, is in the Scholiaſt of Pindar. in Nem. Od. 4.

It may then be ſaid in general, that Thetis cauſed impenetrable Armour to be made for her Son's firſt Campaign. But ſince Homer is the chief Source, from whence every thing relating to this Article ſhould be drawn, it ought not to have been forgot, that, after the Death of Patroclus, from whom Hector had taken Achilles's Armour, Thetis obtained another from Vulcan. It is one of the fineſt Epiſods of the Iliad, and it ſerved Virgil as a Model for one of the beſt Paſſages of the Æneid. It deſerved therefore to be touched upon. Obſerve, that, according to Servius (96), the Armour, which Patroclus wore when he was killed, was made at Pelea by Vulcan.

(96) Servius in Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 843.

[G] The Death of Patroclus was ſoon after revenged.] Moreri had reaſon to ſay, That Achilles ſoon reſumed the Arms, which the Loſs of Briſeïs had made him lay down. In effect, ſince the Iliad comprehends the Actions of but one Year, according to the Sentiment of Father Mambrun (97) in his Treatiſe of Epic Poetry, few Months only muſt have paſſed between the Retreat of Achilles, and his Return to the Army, after the Death of Patroclus. Therefore Malherbe fell into a ſtrange Miſtake, when he reported as a certain Fact, that Achilles had been nine Years before the City of Troy without fighting.

Achille à qui la Grece à donné cette marque,
D'avoir eu le courage auſſi haut que les cieux,
Fut en la même peine, & ne put faire mieux,
Que ſoupirer neuf ans dans le fond d'une barque (98).

So Great Achilles, fam'd for warlike Might Thro' Greece, and equal to the Gods in Fight,

(97) Mr Menage, in his Obſervations on Malherbe, p. 441, believes that it comprehends much leſs.

(98) Malherbe, Poëſ. l. 5. p. 125.

Nine

Digitized by Google

fought with Hector (k), and having kill'd him, faſten'd him to his Chariot, and dragged him round the Walls of Troy [H]. Priam went in Perſon (l) to beg the Body of him, and obtain'd for it a great Ranſom. There are various Opinions concerning the Death of Achilles; ſome ſay that Apollo killed him (m), or that he (n) aſſiſted Paris to kill him, by directing his Dart to the Part, which was not invulnerable; others ſay that Paris (o) killed him treacherouſly in a Temple, where Achilles was gone to treat about his Marriage with Philoxena, the Daughter of Priam. The Greeks made a magnificent Funeral for him, of which Moreri's Dictionary has mentioned ſome Circumſtances, with very little Exactneſs [I], to ſay no worſe. They (k) Homer. Iliad. lib. 22. ver. 312.

(l) Ib. lib. 24. v. 555.

(m) Quintus Calab. lib. 3. ver. 62. Euripid. in Philoctete.

(n) Virgil. Æn. lib. 6. ver. 57. Ovid. Met. lib. 12. ver. 599.

(o) Dictys Cret. lib. 4. Dares Phrygius, Hygin. fab. 110. Servius in Æn. 6. ver. 57.

Nine Years conceal'd within his Veſſel lay,
And for his Miſtreſs ſigh'd the Hours away.

Sarrazin, being probably deceived by this Place of Malherbe, whom he intended to imitate, has ſaid in a very fine Ode,

Achille, beau comme le jour,
Et vaillant comme ſon épée,
Pleura neuf ans pour ſon amour,
Comme un enfant pour ſa poupée.

Nine Years, Achilles, fair as Day,
And valiant as his Sword in Battle,
Cry'd for his Miſtreſs, ta'en away,
Like little Maſter for his Rattle.

(99) Menage, as above.

But Mr Menage (99) corrected this Fault in the Edition he procured of Sarrazin's Works; he cauſed Neuf Mois, Nine Months, to be put inſtead of Neuf Ans, Nine Years. Finally, the Compariſon of Achilles to a Child, that cries for it's Baby, has it's Foundation in the Iliad; where we ſee that Achilles, having, loſt his Concubine Briſeïs, runs all in Tears to make his Complaint to his Mother, and that the good Lady comforts him, as if he were a little Boy.

(100) Homer. Iliad. lib. 1. ver. 361.

Χειρὶ τό μιν καταρέξεν, ἔπος τ' ἔφατ' ἐκ τ' ὀνόμαζε,
Τέκνον, τι κλαίεις; τι δέ σε φρένας ἵκετο πένθος;
Ἔξαυδα, μὴ κεῦθε νόῳ ἵνα εἰδομεν ἄμφω (100).

She ſeiz'd his Hand - - - - - - -
And thus the Sorrow of his Soul explores.
Why grieves my Son? Thy Anguiſh let me ſhare,
Reveal the Cauſe, and truſt a Parent's Care.
POPE.

The Majeſty of the Epic Poeſy ſuffered theſe Meanneſſes in thoſe Times. Therefore let us not regard them. Let us agree that Homer was a fine Genius, let us be pleaſed with the Fruitfulneſs and Eloquence of his Muſe, but let us add, (101) Horat. Sat. x. lib. 1.

—— Sed ille,
Si foret hoc noſtrum fato delapſus in ævum, &c. (101).

(102) Æn. lib. 1. ver. 483.

—— But He,
Were he to live in theſe corrected Times, &c.

(103) Iliad. lib. 23. ver. 13. & lib. 24. ver. 16.

[H] Dragged him round the Walls of Troy.] Perhaps no Poet, before Virgil, ever aſſerted, that the dead Body of Hector was dragged three times about the Walls of Troy:

(104) In Ajace, ver. 1045.

Ter circum Iliacos raptaverat Hectora muros (102).

(105) In Androm. ver. 108, 399.

Thrice round the Trojan Walls Achilles drew
The Corps of Hector, whom in Fight he ſlew.
DRYDEN.

(106) Metam. lib. 12. ver. 501. Amorum, lib. 2. Eleg. 1. ver. 32. & In Ibin, ver. 333.

The Number of Turns, remarked by Homer, relate only to the Sepulchre of Patroclus; and it is very probable, that Virgil converted the three Circuits about the Sepulchre, of which Homer (103) had expreſsly made mention, into three Compaſſes round the Walls; I ſay, that he changed them in that manner, either through a Defect of Memory, or for the ſake of the Verſe. The Liberty taken in this Alteration has ſcarce been imitated by any Body; you no more find the three Circuits round the Walls in the Authors who lived after Virgil, than in thoſe who preceeded him. Sophocles (104), Euripides (105), Ovid (106), Seneca (107), Statius (108), Dictys Cretenſis (109), Plato (110), Cicero (111), Hyginus (112), Philoſtratus (113), Libanius (114), Servius (115), Tzetzes (116), Euſtathius (117), mention indeed of the dragging of Hector, but not the Number of Turns. As much as I can remember, there is only the Author of the Leſſer Iliad, in Latin Verſe, who mentions three Courſes round the Walls, and three round the Tomb. This Author's Name is Pindarus Thebanus; he was cited by the old Scholiaſt of Statius, which Voſſius did not know (118). Barthius has mentioned him often in the great Volume of his Adverſaria, and elſewhere (119). I know that Auſonius, in the Summary of the twenty ſecond Book of the Iliad, declares that Hector was dragged three times round the Walls of Troy; but I know alſo that he was cenſured for it (120), and that this Error made one of his Commentators believe, that Auſonius was not Author of all the Summaries which we have under his Name. Finally, the Treatment of the dead Body, the Diſcourſe which Achilles had with Hector, ready to expire, the Liberty he granted to every one of inſulting and ſtriking the dead Body, that Venal Soul, which ſuffered itſelf to be at laſt perſuaded, by rich Preſents, to ſend Priam the Body of his Son, are Things ſo far remote, I will not ſay from Heroic Virtue, but from the moſt Common Generoſity, that it muſt neceſſarily be judg'd, either that Homer had no manner of Idea of Heroïſm, or that he had only a Deſign to deſcribe the Character of a meer Brute. He repreſents Achilles to us, as wiſhing himſelf ſavage enough to eat Hector's Fleſh raw.

(107) Troad. Act. 3. ver. 413. Agam. Act. 3. ver. 447.

(108) Achil. 2. ver. 6.

(109) Lib. 3.

(110) De Republ. lib. 3. Tom. 2. pag. 391. B.

(111) Tuſcul. I.

(112) Cap. 106.

(113) In Heroic. pag. 697.

(114) Progymn. pag. 100. D.

(115) In Virg. Ecl. 3. ver. 6.

(116) P. 75.

(117) In Homeri Iliad. χ. ver. 401.

(118) De Hiſtor. Lat. pag. 819.

(119) See his Commentary on Statius, Tom. 1. pag. 340, & Tom. 3. p. 393. 1600.

(120) See the Diatribes of Mariang. Accurſ. upon Auſonius.

Αἰ γὰρ τως αὐτόν μοι μένος κε θυμὸς ἀνείη
Ὠμ' ἀποταμνόμενον κρέα ἔδμεναι (121).

Cou'd I myſelf the bloody Banquent join!
No! —— to the Dogs thy Carcaſe I reſign.
POPE.

(121) Iliad. lib. 22. ver. 346.

The Poet did not ſo much as comprehend, that, to do more Honour to his Hero, he ought not to have aſcribed to his Enemy ſo much Cowardice and Weakneſs as he does.

[I] Funeral —— which Moreri's Dictionary has mentioned ſome Circumſtances with very little Exactneſs.] This Author has ſaid, that the Gods lamented the Death of Achilles ſeventeen Days; but he ought not to have cited Homer, without quoting the Place, where he ſpeaks of it. Now it cannot be in the Iliad, for he ſtrictly obſerved the Rule, which forbids to bury the Hero of an Epic Poem, in the Poem itſelf. Virgil obſerved it alſo. He ought to have ſaid then, that Homer ſpeaks of Achilles's Funeral in the twenty fourth Book of the Odyſſey, where he introduces that Epiſode on the Occaſion of Penelope's Suitors, killed by Ulyſſes. They have done wrong in the Edition of Amſterdam, to put the Continuators on Homer in the Place of Homer himſelf. But this is not all: They ſhould not have ſaid The Gods in general, without ſpecifying what Homer particularly mentions, to wit, That Thetis, accompanied by the Sea Goddeſſes, came to the Camp of the Greeks, to ſolemnize the Funeral Rites of her Son jointly with them, and that the nine Muſes aſſiſted with their mournful Elegies. He might have cited Pindar for this laſt Circumſtance.

Τὸν μὲν ἔτε θάνοντ' ἀοιδαὶ ἐλίποντ' ἀλλά οἱ
παρά τε πυρὰν, τάφον θ' Ἑλικώνιαι παρθένοι
ἔςαν, ἐπὶ θρῆνοντε πολύφαμον ἔχευαν. ἔδο-
ξεν ἄρα δ' ἀθανάτοις ἐσλόν γε φῶτα κὶ φθιμένον σὺμενος Θεᾶν διδόμεν (122)

(122) Pindar. Isthm. Od. 8. pag. 755.

Digitized by Google

(p) See the Remark [B] of the Article ACHILLEA.

They buried him in the Promontory Sigæum [K]; and after the taking of the City, they ſacrificed Philoxena on his Tomb, as his Manes required. This Warrior, the moſt violent of all Warriors, and ſo Brave, that his Name became ſignificant of the Higheſt Valour [L], was very fond of Muſic [M] and Poetry (p), and paſs'd for the handſomeſt

In Death the Theme of Heavenly Verſe,
Each weeping Muſe attends his Hearſe,
Ordain'd, in never-dying Song,
The Hero's Glory to prolong.

What the Dictionary adds, on the Authority of Homer again, that, after theſe ſeventeen Days, the young Men of Theſſaly performed Achilles's Funeral Rites, where they wept, crowned with Flowers of Amaranth, ſhould, one would think, be found in the ſame Place of the Odyſſey, where the ſeventeen Days Mourning are mentioned. Yet it is not there; and I am much afraid, that Mr Moreri made uſe of ſome Book, where the Ceremony was ill related, which Philoſtratus takes Notice of in the Picture of Neoptolemus. It is, that the Greeks, having been ordered by the Oracle of Dodona, to go every Year and celebrate the Anniverſary of Achilles, the Theſſalians were the firſt, who added Crowns of Amaranth to the other Ceremonies.

[K] They buried him in the Promontory of Sigæum.] Almoſt all the Dictionaries obſerve this. Lloyd rejecting the other Citations of Pliny, which he had found much corrupted in Charles Stephens, preſerves that of the twelfth Chapter of the fourth Book; but not juſtly; for Pliny does not ſpeak there of the Tomb which was at Sigæum, but of That, which was ſaid to be in an Iſland of the Euxine Sea. He ſays, in the thirtieth Chapter of the fifth Book, that there had been a City called Achilleon, near the Tomb of Achilles, on the Coaſt of Sigæum. It is to be wondered at, that, after the Correction of this Paſſage, Iſaac Veſſius (123) ſhould yet accuſe Pliny of placing Achilles's Tomb on the Banks of Rhœtum, and that of Ajax on the Banks of Sigæum; Pliny has done quite the contrary. Solinus (124), by a Miſtake common enough to him, tranſported this Sepulchre to another neighbouring Cape, to wit, That of Rhœteum, where the Tomb of Ajax was. This Miſtake is in the Emblems of Alciatus.

(123) In Melam, pag. 98.

(124) Polyhiſt. cap. 40.

Æacidæ tumulum Rhœteo in Littore cernis (125.)

(125) Alciat. Embl. 136.

------ You ſee
Achilles' Tomb on the Rhœtean Shore.

His Commentators own, that he is miſtaken, except Pignorius, who maintained the contrary. It is nevertheleſs certain, by the unanimous Teſtimony of Authors, that the Tomb of Achilles was on the Shore of Sigæum. We have already obſerved, that it was a Cuſtom to go thither every Year, to offer Sacrifices to him; the Tradition was, that his Apparition appeared there in Armour, and in a threatning Poſture; which did not hinder Apollonius from wiſhing he could converſe with it (126). I think it was given out likewiſe, that Miracles were wrought at his Tomb. See the following Article.

(126) Philoſtr. in vitâ Apollon. lib. 4. cap. 3. & 4.

[L] His Name became ſignificant of the Higheſt Valour.] Mr Moreri pretends, without citing the Book or the Chapter, that Aulus Gellius has ſaid, that when they would ſpeak of a Brave Soldier, they called him an Achilles: But it is not true, that Aulus Gellius has ſaid any ſuch thing. He ſays only, in the eleventh Chapter of the ſecond Book, that Sicinius Dentatus was called the Roman Achilles, for having performed very ſurprizing Actions in War. Our Author reports ſome Circumſtances concerning them, taken out of that Paſſage of Aulus Gellius, without telling us from whence he borrows them: So that he quotes this Author, not when he ought, but when he ought not; not when he borrows what is really His, but when he gives him what is not his due. If he had cited Servius (127), he would have alledged a better Proof. Now the Name of Achilles was given, not only to denote Martial Vigour, but even That ſhewn in the Wars of Venus; witneſs the Debauchee, in Petronius, who finding himſelf already dead in thoſe Parts, which are not to be named, cries out, Funerata eſt illa pars corporis qua quondam ACHILLES eram *. Perhaps he was more vexed at this, than Milo was, when he loſt the Strength of his Arms, and Cicero would have thought him more worthy of Cenſure, than that Athlétic, for very good Reaſons. "Quæ vox poteſt eſſe contemptior, quam Milonis Crotoniatæ, qui, cum jam ſenex eſſet, athletaſque ſe in curriculo exercentes videret, adſpexiſſe lacertos ſuos dicitur, illacrymanſque dixiſſe, at hi quidem jam mortui ſunt? Non verò tam iſti quam tu ipſe nugator, neque enim ex te unquam es nobilitatus, ſed ex lateribus & lacertis tuis (28). —— Can any thing be more ridiculous, than the Complaint of Milo the Crotonian, who, in his old Age, when he ſaw the Wreſtlers exerciſing themſelves in the Ring, is ſaid to have looked at his own Arms, and to have cried out with Tears, But theſe, alas! are now dead —! Theſe Men are not ſuch Triflers, as you are, whoſe Nobility roſe not from any Merit of your own, but from the Robuſtneſs of your Sides and Arms."

(127) Servius in Virgil. Ecl. 3. ver. 20. & in Ecl. 4. ver. 34.

* Petron. Sat. C. 129.

(128) Cic. de Senect. cap. 9.

The Dictionary of Charles Stephens, in the Edition of Paris 1620. reviſed and corrected by Frederic Morel, Royal Profeſſor, and in that of Geneva 1662. corrected again from a great Number of Faults, as the Title informs us, attributes to Aulus Gellius, when rightly quoted, not that Brave Soldiers, but that Captains of an extraordinary Valour had the Appellation of Achilles; and that Money, or Silver (Argentum) was called Achillean, becauſe it was inſuperable, or when it was inſuperable. "Tantæ fortitudinis fuiſſe fertur (ACHILLES) ut, teſte Gellio, lib. 2. c. 11. inſigni fortitudine duces A- CHILLES appellentur, & Argentum vocetur ACHILLEUM, quod ſit inſuperabile & inſolubile (129)." The Latin Text of Charles Stephens may be conſtrued both the forementioned ways; and I confeſs alſo, that by pleading a Confuſion and Inaccuracy in the Period, he may eſcape the Cenſure of having imputed to Aulus Gellius, what concerns this pretended Achillean Money. But neither Charles Stephens, nor his Correctors, nor Mr Lloyd, nor Mr Hofman, who followed him cloſely, can juſtify themſelves for having miſtaken argentum for argumentum. For the Epithet, borrowed from Achilles, is applied to an inſuperable Objection. And in the Schools they commonly call the principle Argument of a Sect, it's ACHILLES. Which was not ſo much becauſe Achilles was an invincible Warrior, as in illuſion to the intricate Difficulty, which Zeno of Elæa propoſed (130) againſt the Reality of Motion. He compared a Tortoiſe to Achilles, in order to ſhew that a ſlow Motion, which ſhould preceed a quick one never ſo little, could never be outſtript by it. Calepinus, who otherwiſe cites Aulus Gellius erroneouſly, reads argumentum and not argentum, which teaches us that the Evil proceeds from an ancient Source, which formed as it were two kinds of Copiſts. One having, it is probable, loſt half of the Word argumentum, thro' the Error of the Printer, who ſubſtituted argentum, were the Cauſe, that their Deſcendants preſerved this laſt Word from Hand to Hand; the other have not yet degenerated in this reſpect; ſo that thoſe who apply to them, as Calepinus's Correctors did, avoid the Blunder of the former.

(129) Car. Stephanus in Dictionario. Voc. Achilles.

(130) See Ariſtot. lib. 6. Phyſic. cap. 9. & ibi Simplicius, & Themiſtius. See alſo Diogen. Laert. lib. 9. in Zenone.

[M] Was very fond of Muſic.] Mr Moreri is not accurate in his Account of this: He ſays, That Homer has often ſhewed us, that the Sound of the Lyre had a marvellous Power to divert Achilles's Anger, and calm that furious Paſſion, which gave the Trojans ſo much Trouble. He adds, That Athenæus obſerved it alſo after Theopompus. But it is certain that we are only told in Homer, that the Deputies of the Army found Achilles ſinging the brave Actions of great Men to the Lyre, to divert himſelf.

Τὸν δ' εὗρον φρένα τερπόμενον φορμίγγι λιγείῃ
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Τῇ ὄγε Θυμὸν ἔτερπεν· ἄειδε δ' ἄρα κλέα ἀνδρῶν (131).

Amus'd at eaſe, the God-like Man they found,
Pleas'd with the ſolemn Harp's harmonious Sound.
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
With this his Leiſure he diverts *, and ſings
The Immortal Deeds of Heroes and of Kings.
POPE.

(131) Iliad. lib. 9. ver. 186.

* The Reaſon of the Alteration of Mr Pope's third Line (which he gave, With this he ſoothes his angry Soul, &c.) is to accommodate it to Mr Bayle's Sentiment. Perhaps the Nation might ariſe from the Ambiguity of the Words θύμον ἔτερπε, which ſignify both mentem delectare, and iram mitigare.

Achilles,

Digitized by Google

handſomeſt Man of his Time [N]. If his Beauty made him amiable to the Women, he Achilles, having been affronted by Agamemnon, had at that time abandoned the common Cauſe out of Spite and Anger. This is all that Homer tells us of it. As for Reflexions, he makes none on the Employ, wherein the Deputies found Achilles: Athenæus (132) indeed concludes from thence that Homer intended to ſignify, that the Lyre was of great help to that Hero, in moderating the violent Heat of his Anger. But it is not true, that Athenæus makes this Remark after Theopompus, and I am very much miſtaken if the Cauſe of Moreri's Error be not a Paſſage of Voſſius in his Treatiſe of Muſic. This learned Man, having cited Athenæus for the Obſervation, which we have juſt now ſeen (133), goes on to ſay, that the Embaſſadors of the Getæ, who were ſent on a Treaty of Peace, or a Truce, to Perſons, whoſe Wrath was to be appeaſed, preſented themſelves playing on the Lyre, and alledges Athenæus for his Authority, who reports it out of the forty ſixth Book of the Hiſtory of Theopompus. Mr Hofman is very near in the ſame Error, as I have obſerved. They would have found their Account a little better in Philoſtratus (134); for he obſerves, that Chiron, perceiving that Achilles could not conquer his Anger, taught him Muſic.

Some have ſaid, that Achilles did not ſing the fine Exploits of great Men on the Lyre, but the Evils which Love had made him ſuffer:

Talis cantata Briſeïde venit Achilles
Acrior, & poſitis erupit in Hectora plectris (135).

Thus to his Lyre his Loſs Achilles ſung;
(On every Note the fair Briſeis hung)
Then ruſh'd on Hector, doom'd, alas! to prove
The Force of Valour raiſed by injur'd Love.

Ille Pelethroniam cecinit miſerabile carmen
Ad citharam, citharâ tenſior ipſe ſuâ (136).

His Lyre he tun'd to his complaining Song,
Himſelf more tortur'd, than the Lyre he ſtrung.

Theſe are Slanders on our Hero, which may be refuted by the Anſwer which Alexander the Great made to Him, who offered him the Lyre of Paris: I care but little for This, ſaid he to him, but I would willingly ſee That of Achilles, on which he ſung the Actions of the Heroes of former Times. Plutarch, who reports the Thing thus in the Life of This Prince, attributes another Anſwer to him elſewhere (137), to wit this: I have nothing to do with it: for I have that of Achilles, to the Sound whereof he repoſed himſelf, in ſinging the Praiſes of valiant Perſons; but That of Paris has too ſoft and effeminate an Harmony, being employed only in Love Songs. This is not the only Example, which ſhews that Plutarch made himſelf ſuch a Maſter of certain Facts, that ſometimes he turned and applied them one way, and ſometimes another. Surely Alexander did not give both theſe Anſwers, and it is probable the laſt is the Invention of the Hiſtorian. As for the Words, for I have that of Achilles, it is very probable Alexander wiſhed to have it, but undoubtedly it is not true, that he was really in Poſſeſſion of it. Ælian (138) relates the Fact conformably to the firſt Narrative of Plutarch. A Commentator on Ælian (139) aſſures us, that Homer repreſents Achilles, in divers Places, ſinging the Exploits of great Captains to the Lyre. But he is miſtaken; Homer does it but in one Place; and his Error, being that of a Man much ſuperior in Point of Literature, might comfort Moreri, if he were yet living. Kuhnius (140) does not correct this Miſtake. Statius, who ſuppoſes, againſt the expreſs Words of Homer, that Achilles ſung his Amours, and his Briſeïs, during his Retreat, aſſures us in other Places, that, from his moſt tender Youth, he had employed his Muſical Inſtruments in Chiron's Cave, to celebrate the great Actions of the Ancients.

----- Nec major in iſtis
Sudor, Apollineo quam fila ſonantia plectro
Cum quaterem, priſcoſque virûm mirarer honores (141).
No greater Toil, than when the Lyre I ſtrung,
And Heroes were the Subject of my Song.

They were the Combats of Hercules, thoſe of Pollux, and thoſe of Theſeus, which he ſung before his Mother, who came to viſit him in this Cave, to which he added his Father's famous Nuptials.

----- Canit ille libens immania laudum
Semina, quî tumidæ ſuperarit juſſa novercæ
Amphytrioniades: crudum quo Bebryca cœſtu
Obruerit Pollux: quanto circumdata nexu
Ruperit Ægides Minoi brachia Tauri.
Maternos in fine thoros, ſuperiſque gravatum
Pelion (142).

The Lyre he takes: then, How Amphytrion's Son
Each cruel Labour patiently o'ercome,
Well-pleas'd he ſings; and next how Bebryx fell,
(Thy Cœſtus, Pollux, ſent his Shade to Hell)
The Minotaur and Theſeus next employ
His lengthen'd Song; and laſt his Mother's Joy,
To grace her Nuptials when the Gods were met,
And Pelion groan'd beneath the Heavenly Weight.

I own Philoſtratus makes him ſing ſeveral Subjects, under the tuition of Chiron, which related infinitely leſs to War, than to Love; Hyacinthus, Narciſſus, Adonis, Hilas, &c. (143)

We ſhall end this Remark with ſomething relating to the Lyre itſelf of Achilles. It is ſaid, that Corybas (144) the Son of Jaſius, and of Cybele, being gone into Phrygia with his Uncle Dardanus, ſettled the Worſhip of Cybele there, and gave his Name to the Corybantes, who were the Prieſts of that Goddeſs, and brought thither the Lyre of Mercury. It was kept at Lyrneſſus, from whence Achilles carry'd it away, when he ſeiz'd on That City. Homer is not of this Opinion; for he ſays (145), that the Lyre of This Hero was found in the City of Eetion, that is, in Thebes of Phrygia, when the Greeks plunder'd it.

[N] For the handſomeſt Man of his Time.] Inſtead of this Fact, of which there are ſuch authentic Proofs, Mr Moreri obſerves only, that Philoſtratus ſays, that Achilles was of a fine Stature. Achilles boaſts Himſelf, in the twenty firſt Book of the Iliad, that He is both Tall and Beautiful, καλός τε μέγας τε.

And when Homer ſpeaks of Nireus, he remarks that, after Achilles, he was the handſomeſt of all the Greeks:

Νιρεὺ, ὃς κάλλιϛος ἀνὴρ ὑπὸ Ἴλιον ἦλθε
Τῶν ἄλλων Δαναῶν, μετ' ἀμύμονα Πηλείωνα (146).

Nireus, in faultleſs Shape, and blooming Grace,
The loveliеſt Youth of all the Grecian Race,
Next to Achilles.

POPE.

See the Scholiaſt of Homer on the 131ſt Verſe of the 1ſt Book of the Iliad, where he ſays (147), that Achilles, the handſomeſt of all the Heroes, had a Face ſo like a Woman, that it was eaſy for him to paſs for a Maid at the Court of Lycomedes. Statius ſays,

----- Plurimus illi
Invictâ Virtute decor, fallitque tuentes
Ambiguus, tenuique latens diſcrimine ſexus (148).

A graceful Form cloath'd his Heroic Mind,
Ambiguous, and to either Sex inclin'd.

As for his Stature, I ſhall paſs by what Philoſtratus ſays, in the Life of Apollonius (149), that the Shade of Achilles, being conjured up by that Philoſopher, appeared at firſt five Cubits tall, and afterwards twelve, and of a Beauty impoſſible to be expreſs'd. Neither will I aſſert with Lycophron, that Achilles was nine Cubits tall; This is not what we call a fine Stature: It can only be of Service to Quintus Calaber (150), who made a Giant of him, and is by no means a Juſtification of the Sieur Moreri. We may ſay then, that it is very true, that the Author (151) whom he cites,

(132) Athen. lib. 14. pag. 624.

(133) Voſſius de Muſic. pag. 45. The Paſſage of Athenæus is in pag. 627.

(134) In Heroic. pag. 705. C. See alſo Ælian. Hiſt. div. lib. 14. cap. 23.

(135) Statii Silv. 4. lib. 4. ver. 35.

(136) In his Priapeia 69.

(137) Plutarch of Alexander's Fortune, lib. 1. cap. 6.

(138) Ælian. Hiſtor. Var. lib. 9. cap. 38.

(139) Scheffer upon this Paſſage of Ælian.

(140) Kuhnius in Ælian ibid.

(141) Statii Achill. lib. 2. ver. 442.

(142) Statii Achill. lib. 1. ver. 188.

(143) Philoſtratus in Heroic. pag. 705. calls them τὰς ἀρχαίας ἥλικας, which Vigenere tranſlates, The Ancients, who were in the ſame Age with Achilles. This is very ambiguous; he muſt better uſed the Word Century than Age, and doubtleſs Philoſtratus did not mean that they were contemporary with Achilles, but that they were ſo with each other.

(144) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 6.

(145) Iliad. lib. 9.

(146) Ibid. lib. 2. ver. 673.

(147) See Plato in Conviv.

(148) Achill. lib. 1. ver. 336. See alſo Dictys Cret. lib. 1.

(149) Lib. 4. chap. 5. Vigenere cites Book 3. and ſays, That the Shade appeared firſt of the Height of ſeven Cubits.

(150) Lib. 1. ver. 514. lib. 3. ver. 716, & 722.

(151) In Heroic. pag. 705.

Digitized by Google

(q) Printed at Leyden in 1693. See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, May 1693. pag. 511.

he lov'd them as well on his ſide [O]; and it is even ſaid that his Amours extended to Perſons of his own Sex [P]. We ſhall ſee in the following Article what he did after his Death, and a Miracle he wrought, which Tertullian has taken Notice of. I refer you to the Homericus Achilles (q) of the late Mr Drelincourt, as a Collection of the moſt compleat Literature that can be met with in Relation to this Hero of Paganiſm.

cites, gives This Hero a fine and tall Stature, and a Face that ſhot forth Rays, a Noſe neither Aquiline nor hooked, but ſuch as it ought always to continue. Thus Vigenere tranſlates it, apparently from the Latin Verſion: I ſhould chooſe to render it, ſuch as it ought to be, and give This Signification to the Verb μέλλω.

[O] He loved them as well on his ſide.] The Incontinency of Achilles was both a forward and a laſting Fruit: We have ſeen, that he got Deïdamia with Child at ten Years of Age: And his future Atcheivements of this kind were anſwerable to this early Beginning. It was not long before Iphigenia experienced his Abilities (152), in the ſame way; and if Diana believed that they offered her a Virgin-Sacrifice in the Perſon of this Daughter of Agamemnon, ſhe was deceived. Achilles had taken Care, that, if the worſt came to the worſt, Iphigenia ſhould not go out of the World without having taſted both the Joys of Conception, and the Pains of Labour. He ſaw Helen on the Walls of Troy, and became ſo furiouſly in love with her, that he had no Reſt, and was forced to have recourſe to his Mother (153), and to beg of her to procure him by ſome means or other the Enjoyment of this Beauty. A fine Employ for a Mother! Thetis accepted of it, and invented a kind of Pimping, which conſiſted in making her Son believe, that he enjoyed the Fair One: But it was a meer Dream; and yet This imaginary Repaſt appeaſed Achilles's Appetite. Though he loſt Briſeïs, he did not lie alone; he was too careful in providing for his Bed. He could find Relays at Home in caſe of Neceſſity; Diomedea (154) ſupplied the Place of Briſeïs. He had no ſooner ſeen Polyxena, the Daughter of Priam, than he deſired to make her his Wife; and not being able to ſatisfy this Deſire in his Lifetime, he required that, after his Death, ſhe ſhould be ſacrificed to him (155), that he might enjoy her in the Elyſian Fields. He had ſo well deſerved in this World to be called (156) ἐρωτικός, ἀσελγής, ἀκρατής, ἐρωτικώτατος (Amorous, Incontinent, &c.) (157), that it was thought he would ſtand in need of Women, even in the other, and therefore they married him there both to Medea and Helen. He was accuſed (158) of having fallen in love with the Amazon Penthesilea, after he had taken her Life away, and of having gratified his Paſſion on her dead Body. We ſhall take Notice of this in the Article THERSITES. See alſo the Article TENES.

(152) See Tzetzes in Lycophron.

(153) Id. ib.

(154) Ilias 9. ver. 660.

(155) Seneca Troad. ver. 943.

(156) Libanius, rogymn. pag. 101. B. & pag. 127. A. Declam. IV. pag. 256. B. & Orat. IX. pag. 258. C.

(157) Plutarch. in Amator. pag. 761. D.

(158) Tzetzes in Lycophr. Libanius, Prog. p. 101. C. & pag. 153. A.

[P] Perſons of his own Sex.] Some will have it (159), that Troilus, the Son of Priamus, died ſmothered in the Arms of the laſcivious Achilles, who would have violated him, but found too much Reſiſtance. A very malicious Turn is given to the Choice, which Ajax ſuggeſted to Menelaus, when he adviſed him to cauſe the News of the Death of Patroclus to be carried to Achilles by the handſome Antilochus. Philoſtratus (160), who ſays plainly enough what ſort of Acquaintance there might be between the Hero and the Meſſenger, who was choſen, is miſtaken in relation to the Author of this Choice; for it was not Menelaus, as he ſays, who caſt his Eyes on Antilochus; it was Ajax (161), who propos'd it to Menelaus. But it is chiefly with reſpect to Patroclus, that they have given a criminal Turn to the Paſſion of Achilles. Plato (162) takes his part upon this againſt Æſchylus. Xenophon (163), is of Plato's Opinion in it. Sextus Empiricus (164) handles the Matter like a Man of his Profeſſion, I mean Pyrrhonically. But Lucian and Philoſtratus (165) declare him guilty of it: One of them pretends that Achilles was not enough upon his Guard in lamenting his Friend's Death, and that he ſuffered the Truth to eſcape him in theſe Words.

(159) Servius in Æn. 1. Lycophron, ver. 307. & ibi. Tzetzes.

(160) In Antil. pag. 670. & Icon. pag. 783. D.

(161) Hom. Il. 16. ver. 628, 651, 653, 655.

(162) In Conviv. Tom. 3. pag. 180. A.

(163) Ibid. pag. 898. A.

(164) Pyrrh. hyp. 3. pag. 152. A.

(165) Philoſtr. in Epiſt. pag. 903. A.

(166) Lucian in Amor lib. pag. 1071. Tom. 1. Ed. Salmurienſis.

Μηρῶν τε τῶν σῶν εὐσεβὴς ὁμιλία
Καλλίων. (166)

Femorum & tuorum ſancta converſatio
Melior,

What ſhall we ſay of this Diſtich to the 44th Epigram of the 11th Book of Martial?

Bryſeïs multum quamvis averſa jaceret,
Æacidæ propior levis amicus erat.

What tho' Briſeis lay not by his Side,
His ſmoth-fac'd Friend her Abſence well ſupply'd.

ACHILLEA, an Iſland of the Euxine Sea, called alſo the Iſland of Heroes, the Iſland Macaron (a), or the Iſland of the Bleſſed, Leuce, &c. was, according to ſome, over againſt the Boryſthenes, and, according to others, over againſt the Danube. The Name of Achillea was given it, becauſe the Tomb of Achilles was to be ſeen there (b), and becauſe it was conſecrated to that Hero. Thetis (c) or Neptune gave it him, and he obtained Divine Honours there, a Temple, an Oracle, an Altar, Sacrifices, and the like. Some ſpeak of this Iſland (d) as if it were uninhabited, and that it was unſafe to paſs the Night in it; which obliged Perſons, who went on Shore there, to return on Board toward the Evening, after having ſeen the Antiquities of the Place, the Temple, and the Gifts, which were conſecrated to Achilles. This Hero was not there alone; the Souls of many other Heroes had likewiſe their Abode there [A]; and as for Achilles, he muſt neceſſarily have been preſent both in Body and Soul; for he married Helen there (e), and had a Son by her, whoſe Name was Euphorion, whom Jupiter loved criminally, and without Succeſs, and whom he killed with a Thunderbolt, to puniſh him for his Refuſal. Others ſay (f), that Achilles had Iphigenia to Wife in this Iſland, whom Diana had tranſported thither, after having communicated to her the Gift of Immortal Youth, with a Divine Nature. Laſtly, others pretend, that the Wife, whom he married in the other World, was the famous Medea (g); but the moſt common Opinion gives him Helen to Wife. It is

(a) Plinii Hiſt. Nat. lib. 4. cap. 13. item c. 12. auſan. lib. 3. pag. 202.

(b) Mela, lib. 2. chap. 7. Scylax, pag. 28.

(c) The Author of Peripl. enti Euxini, published by J. Voſſius: Quintus Calaber. ſub fin. lib. 3.

(d) Amm. Marcell lib. 22. chap. 8. you will find his Words in the Remark [A].

(e) tol-m. Hephæſt. apud. hotium. pag. 480.

(f) Anton. Liberalis cap. 27.

(g) Tzetzes in Lycophron. Schol. Apollon. lib. 4.

[A] The Souls of many other Heroes had likewiſe their Abode there (1)]. This appears from a Paſſage of Pauſanias (2), where he relates that Leonymus, General of the Crotoniates, having been at the Iſland of Leuce to be cured of a Wound, reported, That he had ſeen there Achilles, the two Ajax's, Patroclus, Antilochus, &c. I wonder Ammianus Marcellinus forgot this in the Paſſage, where he tells us, that this Iſland was a dangerous Place: "In hac Taurica Inſula Leuce ſine Habitatoribus ullis Achilli eſt dedicata; in quam ſi fuerint quidam fortè delati, viſis antiquitatis veſtigiis temploque & donariis eidem heroi conſecratis, veſperi repetunt naves; aiunt enim non ſine diſcrimine vitæ illic quemquam pernoctare (3). —— In this Tauric the uninhabited Iſland of Leuce, is conſecrated to Achilles; at which, whoever happen to arrive, after having viewed the Remains of Antiquity, the Temple, and the Gifts conſecrated to That Hero, go back to their Ships at Night; for they ſay, that no one can paſs the Night there, without endangering his Life."

(1) Dionyſ. Perieg.

(2) auſan. lib. 3. pag. 202.

(3) Amm. Marcell. lib. 22. cap. 8.

[B] The

Digitized by Google

is the Opinion, which Philoſtratus and Pauſanias followed (b). The firſt relates (i), That if Strangers, who landed upon this Iſland, could not ſail again the ſame Day, they were obliged to paſs the Night in their Ships, where Achilles and Helen paid them a Viſit, and drank with them, and entertain'd them with ſinging their own Amours, and Homer's Verſes. He adds, that, at that Time, Achilles cultivated the Talent of Poetry, which Calliope had beſtowed on him [B], with ſo much the more Care, as he was not interrupted by Warlike Occupations. He adds, beſides, that thoſe, who ſailed near this Shore, heard Muſic, which fill'd them with an Admiration, mix'd with Horror; and that they heard likewiſe the neighing of Horſes, claſhing of Arms, and warlike Shouts. Maximus Tyrius, and Arrian, tell us things no leſs ſurprizing [C]. It was here, no doubt, that Achilles wrought the Miracle, which Tertullian ſpeaks of [D]. He wrought many more, among which That, which he perform'd againſt the Impiety of the Amazons [E], who endeavoured to plunder his Temple,

(b) Pauſan. lib. 3. pag. 162.

(i) In Heroic.

[B] The Talent of Poetry, which Calliope had beſtowed on him.] Some will have it, that, when Plutarch relates, that Minerva, the Goddeſs of Science, diſtilled Drops of Nectar and Ambroſia into the Lips of Achilles, who refuſed all kind of Nouriſhment, he would intimate to us that This Hero was Maſter of Univerſal Science. Ἡ Ἀθηνᾶ τῷ Ἀχιλλεῖ νέκταρές τε καὶ ἀμβροσίας ἐνέχεε μὴ προσιεμένῳ τροφήν (4). Minerva Achillem, Nutrimentum reſpuentem, Nectare & Ambroſia inſtillatis alluit. It is one of the Authorities alledg'd by Lorenzo Craſſo (5), to prove, that Achilles ought to be ranked among the Greek Poets. A Punſter might call this infuſing Knowledge into him, or there never was any ſuch thing. But however it be, Plutarch's Words are of no uſe to prove what Lorenzo Craſſo infers from them: They are to be underſtood of a real Nouriſhment of the Body, as appears from the 19th Book of the Iliad, from whence they are taken. Homer tells us, That Jupiter, having perceived that Achilles would neither eat nor drink after the Death of Patroclus, bid Minerva infuſe Nectar and Ambroſia into him, to prevent his being ſtarved to Death.

(4) Plutarch. de facie in orbe Lunæ, p. 938. Edit. Par. 1624.

(5) Iſtoria de Poeti Greci, p. 6. where he cites the Latin Verſion of Plutarch, as if he read aluit, and not alluit. Aluit is at leaſt as good.

- - - - Οἱ νέκταρ τε καὶ ἀμβροσίην ἐρατεινὴν
Στάξον ἐνὶ ῥῑνῶσ' ἵνα μὴ μιν λιμὸς ἵκηται. (6)

E'er Thirſt and Want his Forces have oppreſt,
Haſte, and infuſe Ambroſia in his Breaſt.

POPE.

(6) Homer. Il. 19. v. 347.

Recourſe muſt be had to Philoſtratus, to prove this Hero to have been a Poet (7). He is an Evidence, who is very clear in his Teſtimony.

(7) Philoſtr. Heroic. in Achil. fol. 719. & in Neoptol. fol. 338.

[C] Maximus Tyrius, and Arrian tell us Things no leſs ſurprizing.] The former tells us, that Achilles reſided in an Iſland near the Euxine Sea, oppoſite to the Danube, and that he had Temples and Altars there; that it was difficult for any one to land there without firſt offering Sacrifice; and that Mariners often ſaw Achilles in the Figure of a beautiful Youth, who danced a warlike Dance in golden Armour; ſome heard him ſing, without ſeeing him; others both ſaw and heard him. It happened, that a certain Perſon inadvertently falling aſleep in this Iſland was awaked by Achilles, and conducted into a Tent, where he was entertained at Supper. Patroclus filled the Wine, and Achilles plaid on the Lyre; Thetis and the other Deities were preſent (8). Arrian had heard ſay, and believed it, that thoſe, who were caſt a Shore on this Iſland by a Storm, went to conſult the Oracle of Achilles, to know whether he would accept of that Victim in Sacrifice, which they themſelves ſhould ſelect from the Herd; and that at the ſame time they depoſited on the Altar the Value of it, according to their own Eſtimation; that, if the Oracle rejected their Propoſitions, they added ſomething more to the Price, until they found by it's Conſent, that they had come up to the full Value of it; that, this being done, the Victim preſented itſelf voluntarily in the Temple, without attempting to eſcape; that Achilles appeared in a Dream to thoſe, who came near the Iſland, and directed them to the moſt convenient place of Landing; that he ſhewed himſelf alſo ſometimes to thoſe, who were awake, &c. (9). Arrian, among other Reaſons, thought this worthy of Credit, becauſe Achilles died young, and was remarkably beautiful, and ſo conſtant in his Love and Friendſhip, that he would willingly have died for the Objects of his Love. ὡς καὶ ἐπιτεθνάναι ἐλάσθαι τοῖς παιδικοῖς. The Ambiguity of

(8) Maximus Tyrius Orat. 27.

(9) Arrian. in Peripl. Ponti Euxini.

the laſt Word, and the leaſt Reflexion on the Danger, to which he expoſed himſelf, in order to revenge the Death of Patroclus, would induce many Perſons to rank Arrian among thoſe who ſay, that that the Paſſion of theſe two Perſons exceeded the Bounds of Friendſhip (10). See the Remark [P] of the Article ACHILLES, together with one of the ſtrange Stories related below (11) from Arrian; I mean the Story of certain Birds, who ſwept the Temple of Achilles every day, in the Iſland Achillea.

(10) Some learned Perſons have thought that he gives the Elegy of Adonis under the Name of Achilles, in order to make his Court to the Emperor Hadrian. See Caſaubon in Spartianum, vit. Hadriani, cap. 14, & Triſtan. Comment. Hiſtor. Tom. 1. in Hadrian.

[D] The Miracle which Tertullian ſpeaks of.] Tertullian, as Mr Moreri remarks, informs us, That Achilles cured an Athletic in a Dream, whoſe Name was Cleonymus (12): that is, in plain Engliſh, Cleonymus dreamed, that he ſaw Achilles, who directed him to the neceſſary Remedy. Tertullian makes uſe of this Fact, and many others of the like nature, againſt the Epicureans, who would not acknowledge any thing ſupernatural in Dreams. This Adventure is but little known, for no traces of it are to be met with in a great Number of Authors, who have amply ſpoken of Achilles. Pamelius, in his Commentary on Tertullian, only refers us to Homer, who, to the beſt of my remembrance, takes no notice of this Viſion. A Paſſage, cited by Leo Allatius, gives ſome Light into the Matter (13). It imports, that Leonymus, General of the Crotonians, in the War againſt the Locrians, was wounded by an unknown Hand, in an Attack upon a Party of the Enemies Troops, who took no care to entrench themſelves, becauſe they were conſecrated to the Heroes, whoſe Protection was thought to be ſufficient; that The General, finding no Cure, conſulted the Oracle at Delphi, which informed him, that Achilles, who had wounded him, would alſo cure him; upon which he went to the Iſland of Leuce, to offer up his Prayers to That Hero; that he ſaw certain Heroes in his Sleep; that Achilles cured him; that the reſt ordered him to diſcover certain things to Mankind; and that Helen in particular charged him to tell Steſichorus, who was become blind for having wrote againſt her, that he muſt recant, if he would recover his Sight. It is clear that this Hiſtory, and that which Pauſanias (14) and Conon (15) relate, are the ſame in the main: But in Pauſanius it is Ajax the Son of Oïleus, who wounded Leonymus, and afterwards cured him. In Conon it is not Leonymus, who was wounded and cured by Ajax, but Autoleon. There are ſome other Differences, which I omit, contenting myſelf with conjecturing, that the Cleonymus of Tertullian came from This Leonymus. Laſtly, I muſt not paſs over what the Author, cited by Leo Allatius (16) ſays; which is, that Homer, keeping ſome Sheep near Achilles's Tomb, obtained, by his Offerings and Supplications, a Sight of That Hero, who appeared to him, ſurrounded with ſo much Glory, that Homer could not bear the Splendor of it; and that he was not only dazzled, but blinded by the Sight.

(11) In the Remark [F].

(12) Tertull. lib. de Anima, cap. 46.

(13) Allatius de patria Homeri, pag. 145.

(14) Pauſan. lib. 3. pag. 162.

(15) Apud. Photium Cod. 186. Narrat. 18. See Mezeriac on Ovid's Epiſtles, pag. 332. two centures ſome Miſtakes made by Vigenere on the Paſſage of Pauſanias.

(16) His Name is Hermias. The Paſſage, which Leo Allatius cites, is taken out of a Comment upon Plato's Phoed. not printed.

[E] That which he performed againſt the Impiety of the Amazons.] Give me leave to relate the Fact, according to Vigenere's Tranſlation. It has it's Beauties, though the Style be antiquated. After having told us, that the Amazons built Ships, in order to go and plunder the Temple of Achilles, he goes on as follows. Eſtans abordees en l'Iſle, la premiere choſe qu'elles firent fut de commander à ces eſtrangers de l' Helleſpont d'aller coupper tous les arbres aultour du Temple, &c. (17) - i. e. Having landed at this Iſland, the firſt thing they did was to bid theſe Strangers of the Helleſpont cut down all the Trees round about the Temple: But their Axes, flying back upon them, de-

(17) Philoſtrat. in the Neoptol. of Vigenere's Tranſlation. fol. 341. Tom. 2. Fo. di. imp. gio.

Digitized by Google

Temple, was not the leaſt. That which relates to the Flight of Birds [F], is miſrepreſented by Mr Moreri, who moreover gives us a ſeparate Article of a Fountain called ACHILLEA [G], wherein Achilles was wont to bathe himſelf, and which had a wonderful Quality. Achilles was not the only Perſon, who wrought Miracles in the Iſland of Leuce; his Wife Helen ſhar'd this Reputation with him (k), as we ſhall ſtroyed them on the ſpot, and they fell ſtone-dead under the Trees. Whereupon the Amazons, crowding about the Temple, fell a ſpurring their Horſes; but Achilles giving them a furious Look, as when he ruſhed on Scamander before Troy, ſo terrify'd their Horſes, that their Fright proved ſtronger than their Bridles. So that prancing and curvetting, and imagining that what they carried on their Backs was a new and extraordinary Weight, they threw down the Amazons, and, like wild Beaſts, trod them under foot; their Mains ſtanding erect through Fury, and their Ears prick'd up; and thus, like cruel Lions, they tore them to pieces, devoured their Arms and Legs, and made a moſt horrid Carnage of their Bowels. When they were glutted with this Feaſt, they fell a prancing and galloping through the Iſland, full of Rage and Fury, with their Jaws bloody, till they came to the top of a Cape, from whence perceiving the ſmooth Sea, and taking it for a fine large Plain, they ran headlong into it, and ſo periſh'd. As for the Ships of the Amazons, an impetuous Whirlwind falling upon them (when they were empty and deſtitute of all their Rigging) cauſed them to daſh one againſt another, as it were in a Sea Fight; ſo that they were broke to pieces, eſpecially thoſe whoſe Sides were attacked by the Beaks and Prows of other Ships, as commonly happens to Veſſels which have no Pilots. So that all the Wrecks meeting together near the Temple, where there were many Bodies half dead, and breathing ſtill, and ſeveral Limbs horribly ſcattered up and down, with the Fleſh, which the Horſes, being not uſed to ſuch Food, had rejected, That holy Place muſt needs have been very much prophaned. But Achilles ſoon purged and expiated it; as it was an eaſy thing to do, in an Iſland of ſuch ſmall extent, againſt which the Sea beat on all Sides. Achilles having therefore let in the Waves, every thing was waſhed and made clean in a trice.

(k) See the Remark [D].

[F] That which relates to the Flight of Birds.] What Moreri aſcribes to Pliny, namely, That no Bird is ſeen to fly there, is miſrepreſented. Pliny's Words are: "Perdices non tranſvolant Bœotiæ fines in Attica, nec "ulla avis in Ponto, inſulâ quâ ſepultus eſt Achilles, "ſacratam ei ædem (18). —— That is, Partridges "do not fly beyond the Frontiers of Bœotia in Attica; "nor any Bird beyond the Temple of Achilles, which "is in an Iſland of the Euxine Sea." Salmaſius pretends, that by theſe Words muſt be underſtood, that no Bird ever ſoar'd above this Temple; and he proves by a Paſſage of Antigonus Caryſtius, that this was anciently believed (19). And, whereas he proves from an expreſs Paſſage of Arrian, that the Birds came into the Temple every Morning to ſcatter the Water, with which they had wetted their Wings, and to ſweep the Temple afterwards with them (20); he inſults Solinus for having ſaid, That no Bird comes into the Temple of Achilles; and that if any one happens to come near it, he flies from it again as faſt as he can. Salmaſius ſays, That Solinus has nothing but what he borrowed from Pliny; and that the latter had ſaid the ſame thing with Antigonus Caryſtius; but it is more likely, that Pliny had not the Thought of Antigonus Caryſtius in view, and that Solinus had read the Fact elſewhere, adorned with more particular Circumſtances, than thoſe of Pliny. For what Negligence would it not be in the latter, if, intending to inform us, that Birds did not fly over the Temple, he ſhould make uſe of an Expreſſion which ſignifies, that they never flew beyond it? Theſe two things are ſo little alike, that there is nothing more eaſy than never to go over a Houſe, and yet to leave it behind; as it is not more difficult to fly above a Houſe, without paſſing beyond it. Beſides, the Ancients were ſo fond of diverſifying their Miracles, that it is improbable, after what had been related from the time of Antigonus Caryſtius, that the Story of the Birds flying away at the ſight of the Temple of Achilles, ſhould not be broached till the time of Solinus. However it be, it cannot be proved from Pliny againſt Solinus, that the Birds came into it; and after all, Mr Moreri will be found to have imputed to Pliny more than he really ſaid, and to have ſuffered himſelf to be deceived by theſe Words of Charles Stephens, in the two above-cited Editions (21). Achilles inſulam nulla avis tranſvolat. — i. e. No Bird flies over Achilles's Iſland. Plin. 10. 29. 10. But he will take his Revenge with Uſury on Mr Hofman, who attributes the ſame thing to Strabo alſo. It was owing, no doubt, to his ſeeing that Mr Moreri cited Strabo immediately after Pliny, and for want of taking notice, that That Citation from Strabo, with that of Pomponius Mela, which follows it, relate to other Matters contained in the Article. Nullam hic avem volare, ſays he, Plin. l. 10. c. 19. habet & Strabo, l. 13. (22).

(18) Plin. lib. 10. cap. 29.

(19) Salmaſ. Exercit. Plinian. in Solin. cap. 19. pag. 215.

(20) In Periplo Ponti Euxini. Philoſtratus has ſaid almoſt the ſame thing. In that Iſland (ſays he, according to the Tranſlation of Vigenere, Tom. 2. fol. 337.) there is a certain Species of white Birds, which are aquatic, and ſmell of the Sea, which Achilles makes uſe of to cleanſe his ſacred Grove, ſweeping it with the Wind of their Wings, and ſprinkling it with their Feathers, wetted with Sea-water; for which they fly but very little above the Ground.

(21) In the Remark [I], of the Article ACHILLES, towards the Middle.

(22) Hofman upon the Word ACHILLEA.

[G] A ſeparate Article of a Fountain called ACHILLEA.] This Article appeared to me at firſt Sight worthy of Criticiſm; it ſeemed to me, that this Fountain was not called ſo Subſtantively; but by way of Epithet, or Adjectively, in common with every thing, which belonged to Achilles. In a Word, Fons Achilleus, and the Fountain of Achilles, appeared to me the ſame thing. Now as it would be ridiculous to make an Article of the Word Jacobean, in giving an Account of That Well of Jacob, ſpoken of in the fourth Chapter of St John (23), which a Latin Tranſlator might call Fontem Jacobeum if he pleaſed; I could not help thinking, that the Epithet Achilleus, which Freinſhemius makes uſe of, ſpeaking of the Fountain of Achilles, ought not to be made a ſeparate Article. But, after having conſulted Athenæus (24), I found that this Criticiſm would be precarious, becauſe it appeared to me that it might be conteſted, whether this Fountain was called Ἀχίλλειον Subſtantively, or Adjectively, and whether it might not appear in it's alphabetical Order, with as much Reaſon as the Iſland Achillea. It is to be found in the Geographical Theſaurus of Ortelius (25), under the Word Achillæum, and afterwards under the Word Achilleus fons; which is however better than the Achillea, fons Mileti, of Mr Hofman.

(23) Theſe who tranſlate it; there was a Well of Jacob there, would do better to render it Jacob's Well was there, or as the Port-Royal has it, There was a Well there which was called Jacob's.

I ſhall not examine, whether Freinſhemius has well explained the Paſſage of Athenæus, which regards the Singularities of this Fountain (26). I am ſatisfied with obſerving, That Athenæus ought at leaſt to have been cited, according to Freinſhemius, that is to ſay, at his ſixth Chapter, and not at the ſecond, of the ſecond Book. Mr Hofman follows Mr Moreri in quoting, and they were both ſhewn the Way by Ortelius. But this is nothing in Compariſon of Moreri's Blunder, who gives us Ariſtobulus the Son of Caſſander, inſtead of Ariſtobulus Native of Caſſandria.

(24) Ἐν Μιλήτῳ πρήνην εἶναι Ἀχιλλείου καλεομένην. Athen. lib. 2. cap. 6.

(25) Edit. Hanov. 1611, in 4to.

We cannot complain too much of the Negligence of thoſe who make Supplements to Dictionaries; for very often they tack certain things to them, which contradict thoſe already there, and generally they forget to accommodate the Addition in ſuch manner to the Foundation on which they build it, that no Diſſonance may reſult from it. It is Horace's Rule,

(26) Freinſh. Supplem. in Q. Curt. 2. 7. 24. ADVICE to thoſe who make Supplements to Dictionaries.

Primo ne medium, medio ne diſcrepet imum (27).

(27) Horat. de Arte Poet. ver. 154.

The Piece muſt be conſiſtent with itſelf.

For Example, thoſe who enlarged the Dictionary of Charles Stephens, made no Difficulty under the Word Achillea, to inſert theſe Words of Ortelius, crude as they were, and without the leaſt Alteration, "Video à Nebriſſenſi Cacariam, & à Carolo Stephano "Cacariam in ſuis Dictionariis poni, ſed pro ponti in"ſula, quam dicunt apud Melam Colliſaria dici, ex "depravata fortè lectione, &c. —— I find Cacearia "in the Dictionary of Nebriſſenſis, and Cacaria in "that of Charles Stephens; but they both appear to be "a falſe reading for an Iſland of Pontus, which in "Mela is ſaid to go by the Name of Colliſaria." Which is odd enough; for it makes Charles Stephens ſpeak of his own Dictionary, in the Dictionary itſelf, as if he cited another Work; and yet he ſeems uncertain, in citing himſelf, of what he had advanced without any Appearance of Doubt in the Paſſage, which he quotes.

[H] Ahon-

Digitized by Google

ſhall obſerve under the Article STESICHORUS. Abundance is here more dangerous than Scarcity [H].

[H] Abundance is here more dangerous than Scarcity.] If the Reader finds in this Work ſeveral Relations of Prodigies, and Miraculous Traditions, he muſt not imagine, that it is my Intention to put them off for true; I fear no Accuſers on this Head. If this were my Deſign, I would relate but very few of them. I am very ſenſible that in theſe Subjects; Credulity is the Source of Abundance (28); but at length it runs into ſuch exceſs, that it generally cures thoſe who are not incurable. CREDULITY is a Mother, whoſe own Fruitfulneſs deſtroys her ſooner or later in the Minds of thoſe, who make uſe of their Reaſon. So that it would have been the Intereſt of the Pagans, who intended to deify their Heroes, to have attributed but few Miracles to them. The Maxim πλέον ἥμισυ παντὸς, The Half is more than the Whole, and That other, ne quid nimis, Too much of one thing is good for nothing, are applicable here. They, who have ſo multiplied the Sacred Winding-Sheets, the Pictures of the Holy Virgin painted by St Luke, the Hairs of the ſame Saint, the Head of St John Baptiſt, the Fragments of the true Croſs, and an hundred Things of this Nature, ought to reflect on theſe two Maxims; for, by encreaſing the Doſe, they have weakened the Force of it, and have adminiſtered both the Poiſon and the Antidote at once; Ipſa ſibi obſtat magnitudo (29). — It's own Bulk is it's Ruin. Achilles had the ſame Fate in the Iſland of Leuce, as at Troy: The ſame Miracles, which might deceive the Reader, are ſufficient to undeceive him; as the ſame Spear, which wounded Telephus, ſerved him as a Balſam to heel the Wound.

(28) Prodigia eo anno multa nuntiata ſunt, quæ quo magis credebant ſimplices ac religioſi homines, eo etiam plura nuntiabantur. Liv. lib. 34. cap. 45. ---- i. e. That Year many Prodigies were ſaid to have happened, and the more they were credited by fooliſh and ſuperſtitious Perſons, the more they encreaſed.

(29) Florus in Præm.

Vulnus Achillæo quæ quondam fecerat hoſti,
Vulneris auxilium Pelias haſta tulit (30).
Nyſus & Æmonia juvenis qua cuſpide vulnus
Senſerat, hac ipſa cuſpide ſenſit opem (31).

(30) Ovid. Remed. Amor. lib. 1.

(31) Propert. lib. 2. eleg. 1.

Ev'n in his Foe a Friend the Trojan found,
And the ſame Spear both gave and heal'd his Wound.

But I forget that the Number of thoſe, who are undeceiv'd by the multiplication of Prodigies, is ſo ſmall, in compariſon of thoſe who are not, that it is not worth my while to alter my Courſe, and to take the two Maxims above for my Polar Star, when I trade in this Merchandiſe (32). We ſhall find a Miſtake of Camerarius in the Remark [Q] of the Article PYRRHUS, King of Epirus, concerning a pretended Miracle of our Achilles.

(32) I beg pardon for this far-fetched, or, if you will, non-ſenſical Figure.

ACHMET, the Son of Seirim. He wrote a Book of the Interpretation of Dreams, according to the Doctrine of the Indians, Perſians, and Egyptians. It was tranſlated from Greek into Latin, about the Year 1160, by Leo Tuſcus (a), who dedicated it to Hugo Echerianus [A]. It was publiſhed in Latin, in the Year 1577 (b), from a very mutilated Manuſcript, found in the Library of Sambucus (c); but it was ſaid to be a Work of Apomaſares (d). The learned Leunclavius inform'd the Public (e) of this Miſtake, in his Annals of the Turks. Mr Rigault is the firſt who publiſhed this Work in Greek. He added it to Artemidorus, on account of the Similitude of the Subjects, and publiſhed them together at Paris, in the Year 1603. He alter'd nothing in the Latin Tranſlation of Leunclavius, and made no Notes on the Text (f). He believes that Achmet, the Son of Seirim, is the ſame whom Geſner mentions. But the Achmet of Geſner was the Son of Habramius (g), and a Phyſician, and Author of a Work divided into ſeven Books, entituled, Peregrinantium Viatica, which was in Greek, in the Library of Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, the Emperor's Ambaſſador at Venice, when Geſner compoſed his Book. John Anthony Sarrazin was in poſſeſſion of the ſame Work (h), as he aſſures us, in his Notes on Dioſcorides. The two Greek Copies of the King of France's Library, from which Mr Rigault publiſhed his Book of Dreams, do not import that the Author called himſelf Achmet, the Son of Seirim. It is true, that, as the Beginning is wanting, it may be conjectured, that when they were whole, the Author's Name might appear at the Head. But laſtly, theſe are but Conjectures, which may receive Strength from another Conſideration; which is, that the Name of Achmet is writ with a freſher Hand on one of the two Copies. That Name did not appear in the Copy, which Leo Tuſcus made uſe of in the XIIth Century, in compoſing his Tranſlation: This is inferred from the Italian Tranſlation of that Work, compos'd by Tricaſſo (i). Mr Rigault took the Exordium, and gave it in Latin; though he ſuppoſes that it was not Achmet himſelf, but Leo Tuſcus, who compos'd it (k). Barthius had the Tranſlation of this Leo, and believes that his Copy was written in that Tranſlator's Time (l). The Specimen he gives of it makes it appear, that it was not tranſlated literally, and that many Paſſages of it were omitted. What is moſt remarkable is, that the Names of Achmet and of Seirim are in the Title of the Manuſcript with thoſe of Syrnacham, Baram, and Tarphan. The firſt of theſe three laſt Perſons was Interpreter of Dreams (m), at the Court of the King of the Indies; the ſecond at the Court of Saaniſan, King of Perſia; and the third, at the Court of Pharaoh, King of Egypt (n). Barthius conjectures from hence, that Achmet and Seirim were alſo two Interpreters of Dreams in ſome Barbarian Court. However it be, the Work was compiled by a Chriſtian; for the Author begins it in the Name of the Holy Trinity (o). Mr Rigault looks upon the Greek Text only as an antient Tranſlation of the Work. The Original was in Arabic.

(a) Rigault's Præf. to Achmet's Book.

(b) Leunclavius, at Frankfurt, in 8vo.

(c) Barthius, Adverſ. lib. 31. cap. 14.

(d) That is, Abumaſhar, or Albumaſar. See the Catal. Oxonienſ. pag. 35.

(e) Rigault. ubi ſupra.

(f) Yet 'tis ſaid he did, in the Catalogue of Oxford. pag. 5.

(g) Geſn. Biblioth. fol. 2. verſo.

(h) Rigault. Ubi ſupra.

(i) Patrice Tricaſſo des Cerſars, of Mantua. See the Biblioth. of Du Verdier, pag. 942.

(k) Ex Pref. Rigault.

(l) Ubi ſupra.

(m) Syrnacham, in the Edit. of Rigaltius.

(n) This appears by the beginning of the 2d, 3d, and 4th, Chapters of the Book.

(o) See the end of the 2d Chapter.

Lambecius makes Achmet to flouriſh in the IXth Century, at the Court of Mamoum, Caliph of Babylon. Mr du Cange is not of that Opinion. See his Greek Gloſſary, at the Word μαμῶν.

[A] To Hugo Echerianus.] Barthius calls him Hugo Eteriarius, and ſays that he was an Excellent Author, Scriptorem ævo ſuo lueulentum (1). There is a falſe Print in Barthius, as well as in theſe Words of Mr Rigault, Hugoni Echeriano dedicavit. It ought to have been Hugo Eterianus, Hugoni Eteriano. Allatius, in the eleventh Chapter of the ſecond Book de perpetuo conſenſu Eccleſiæ Occidentalis & Orientalis, is miſtaken in citing Hugo Ætherianus. Baronius, Bellarmin, and many others, write Hugo Etherianus, but Eterianus is more correct. It is the Name of an Eccleſiaſtical Author of the XIIth Century. This was communicated to me by Mr de la Monnoie.

(1) Barth. Adverſar. lib. 31. cap. 14.

ACIDALIUS

Digitized by Google

ACIDALIUS (VALENS) would have been one of the beſt of the modern Critics, if a longer Life had permitted him to bring the Talents he had received from Nature to Perfection (a). He was born at Wiſtoch, in the Frontiers of Brandenburgh, and having viſited ſeveral Univerſities of Germany, Italy, and of other Countries, where he made himſelf much beloved [A], he reſided at length at Breſlaw, the Capital of Sileſia. He waited a long time for an Employ in this place; but, not ſucceeding, he went over to the Communion of the Church of Rome, where he ſoon met with the Rectorſhip of a School [B]. It is ſaid, that four Months were hardly expired, when a very ſtrange Accident happened to him. He was following the Proceſſion of the Holy Sacrament, and on a ſudden fell into a Phrenzy. He was carried home, and died ſoon after. Some gave out, that he had killed himſelf [C]. His Death was a great Loſs, for he had Wit, and was a very induſtrious Perſon. His great Application to Study was the cauſe of his Death, if we may believe Thuanus (b), who ſays, that by ſitting up too late, while he was compoſing his Divinations on Plautus [D], he contracted a Diſtemper [E], of which he died in three Days, on the 25th of May, 1595. He was juſt entered into his 29th Year [F]. We have ſeveral Books written by him (c). A little Tract, printed in 1595, to ſhew that Women were not rational Animals, mulieres non eſſe homines, was falſely aſcribed to him [G]. I have (a) Adoleſcens ſummæ Spei & Eruditionis. A Youth of the greateſt Hopes and Learning. Thuan. lib. 113. pag. 687.

(b) Ibid.

(c) See the Remark [D].

[A] Where he made himſelf much beloved.] The Eſteem, which the Illuſtrious Perſons of Italy had for him, may be ſeen by the Literary Correſpondence, which he held with Vincent Pinelli, Jerom Mercurialis, Antony Riccoboni, Aſcanius Perſius, &c. He reſided three Years in that Country (1).

[B] The Rectorſhip of a School.] Barthius affirms this: Rector Scholæ Neuſſanæ factus (2); ſays he, He was made Rector of the School of Neuſſa. I believe he ought to have ſaid Neiſſanæ, or Niſſanæ. Neiſſe, which Acidalius always calls Nyſſa in his Letters, is three or four Leagues from Breſlaw. The Biſhop of this Name reſides there (3). He, who was then in That See, had John Matthew Wacker for his Chancellor, a Patron of Learning, and the Learned. He invited Acidalius to Neiſſe, and lodg'd him at his Houſe. See Acidalius's Letter (4). I have not obſerved in thoſe, which he writ from that Place, that he ever mentioned the Rectorſhip of the School.

[C] That he had killed himſelf (5).] Chriſtian Acidalius, the Brother of Valens, durſt not ſpeak out plain, when he complained of the Calumnies which were ſpread abroad concerning his Brother's Death; but it muſt be no longer queſtioned, after what Barthius writ in one of his Books, that the Subject of his Complaint was the Report which was ſpread, that Acidalius had killed himſelf; a Theme of great Outcry from the Pulpit. Let us hear how Chriſtian Acidalius ſpeaks of it, after having ſaid that his Brother was pompouſly buried. "Ut mirari ſatis nequeam "calida multorum in judicando nimium præcipi- "tantium & temerariorum ingenia, qui, & ipſius "morbi & loci etiam ſæpe ignari, quicquid maledi- "cendi libido dictavit, vel fama, quæ

Tam ficti pravique tenax quàm nuncia veri,

"de obitu ipſius ſparſit, propagare porro in exteras "etiam regiones & propugnare, imo neſcio quas "tragœdias etiam in concionibus ad plebem, ubi reg- "nare ſolent, excitare non erubuerunt. —— So that "I cannot ſufficiently admire the raſh and haſty Judg- "ments of certain Perſons, who were not aſhamed to "propagate in foreign Countries, the falſe Reports, "which Calumny, and Fame,

Alike the Voice of Falſhood and of Truth,

"had ſpread concerning his Death, and to dreſs up "I know not what Tragical Story, in their Ha- "rangues to the People, whoſe Paſſions they command" (6)." He does not deny that his Brothrer was diſordered in his Brain, which deprived him of his Reaſon. "Graviſſimum illud febrium acutarum "ſymptoma Paraphrenitidem aliquoties ſenſit, quod "extremum malorum animam etiam ſua ſede ejecit "(7). —— He was ſometimes taken with a Para- "phrenitis, that worſt Symptom of Acute Fevers, which "ſhakes the very Soul itſelf from her Seat." But he maintains that very able Phyſicians, and Mr Wacker's Family, at whoſe Houſe Mr Valens lay ſick, aſſiſted him 'till he died. Perhaps there is nothing in which Fame oftener deceives us, than in relating the Sickneſs and Death of illuſtrious Perſons; wherefore Preachers, and all Moraliſts in general, ought to be very reſerved in their Reflections on them. One cannot too much diſtruſt the raſh Credulity, or artful Malice of this kind of Newſmongers.

(1) Valens Acidal. in Epiſt. pag. 209, 215.

(2) Apud Konig. Biblioth. pag. 6.

(3) Niſſa ad fluvium cognominem, Epiſcopi Wratiſlavienſis ſedes. Niſſa, upon the River of that Name, the See of the Biſhop of Breſlaw. Buno in Cluverii Introd. lib. 3. cap. 13. pag. 196. Edit. Amſtel. 1697.

(4) P. 228, 318.

(5) Barthius wrote this with his own Hand, in his Copy of Acidalius's Poems. See Konig. Bibl. Vet. & Nov. pag. 6.

(6) Chriſtian Acidalius's Preface to the Epiſtles of Valens Acidalius, published at Hanover, in 1606.

(7) Id. ibid.

[D] His Divinations on Plautus.] On the one ſide he had the Satisfaction to ſee them promiſed in the Catalogue of Francfort (8); and on the other, the Vexation of being obliged to make an hundred Complaints againſt the Slowneſs of his Bookſeller. In a Word, they were not publiſhed 'till after his Death. Barthius ſet a Value on that Work; "Pauci eum "Comici locum aſſecuti ſunt —— ſolus Acidalius "rectum ſenſum percepit, ut alia multa in Comico "(9). —— Few (ſays he) have hit the Poet's Senſe "in that Paſſage —— Acidalius alone diſcovered it, "as he did in many others." Mr Teiſſier ſays, That the Commentary of Acidalius on Quintus Curtius is much eſteemed (10). He dedicated it to the Biſhop of Breſlaw, who rewarded him well for it, as it appears from the Author's Thanks in his eighty ninth Letter. He wrote Notes on Tacitus, on the twelve Panegyrics, and on Velleïus Paterculus, beſides Speeches, Letters, and Poems (11). This laſt Work inſerted in the Delights of the German Poets, contains Epic Verſes, Odes, and Epigrams, which Borrichius thought to be of little Value (12). His Diſſertation de conſtitutione carminis Elegiaci, pleaſes Barthius (13).

(8) Valens Acidal. Epiſt. pag. 317, 326.

(9) Barth. in Statium, Tom. 1. pag. 239.

(10) Teiſſier's Elogies, taken from Mr de Thou Tom. 2. pag. 315.

(11) Ibid.

(12) Borrich. Diſſert. de Poët pag. 125.

(13) In Claudian. apud Konig. Biblioth. pag. 6.

[E] He contracted a Diſtemper.] Thuanus does not ſay what that Diſtemper was; but we learn from another Hand that Acidalius heated his Blood in ſuch manner, by ſitting up late, whilſt he was commenting on Plautus, that from that time he became ſubject to Fevers. This we learn from his Brother. "Uratiſlaviæ, quæ Sileſiorum Metropolis, per ſeſqui- "annum plus minus utrumque ſe mihi præſtitit, "(preceptorem & patrem) donec inde Nyſſam evo- "catus familiari morbo ſuo, quem ex nimiis vigiliis "in adornandis Plautinis Divinationibus ſuis, con- "traxerat, FEBRI SCILICET ACUTIS- "SIMA opprimeretur (14). —— During his A- "bode, for half a Year, or thereabouts, at Breſlaw, "the Capital of Sileſia, I found in him both a Præ- "ceptor and a Father; 'till being invited to Nyſſa, "he was there ſeized with, and died of, that habi- "tual Diſtemper, which he had contracted by too "great an Application to his Divinations on Plautus, "I mean A MOST ACUTE FEVER." He was more than once dangerouſly ill in Italy, and he informed his Friends in his Letters, that a Fever was his common Diſorder in that Country. See Page 97 and 112 of his Letters.

(14) Chriſt. Acidal. ubi ſupra.

[F] He was juſt entered into his twenty ninth Year.] Thus I render Thuanus's Latin Words, cum vix annum 28. exceſſiſſet. Du Rier renders them, having not attained to his twenty eighth Year. Let the Reader judge which of us has hit the true Senſe of Thuanus. Mr Baillet ſays that Acidalius was but twenty ſeven Years and ſome Months old (15). Perhaps he had found out that Thuanus had not been exactly informed of this young Author's Age.

(15) Baillet's Jugement ſur les Poët. n. 1346.

[G] A little Tract —— was falſly aſcribed to him.] Geiſſer cleared him from this falſe Imputation, as appears from theſe Words of Placcius; "Prioris "auctor quomodo non ex vero ſit habitus Valens "Acidalius, vide apud Geiſſerum decadis 3. n 8. (16).

(16) Placcius de Anonymis, pag. 72.

—— How

Digitized by Google

I have read ſomewhere, that he was a Phyſician [H], and that he intended to have wrote Notes upon Aulus Gellius, if he had lived longer. Niſi juveni illi fata quietem miſerabiliter properaſſent.——Had not Death ſnatched him away ſuddenly (d). It appears from his Letters, that he was preparing an Edition of Apuleius. Mr Baillet places him among his Famous Children, and ſays that he illuſtrated Plautus at ſeventeen or eighteen Years of Age, not to mention ſeveral Latin Poems, which are extant, and which he compoſed at that ſame Age. One of his firſt printed Works is Velleius Paterculus, publiſh'd by himſelf at Padua, in the Year 1591. He himſelf ſays, That he was aſhamed of this early Production of his Pen, and he was ſurpriz'd when he heard that it had been reprinted in France (e). Lipſius, who writ ſome Letters to him (f), wherein he expreſſed his Love and Eſteem for him (g), was of Opinion that he would prove a great Man: Ipſe Valens (non te fallam augur) gemmula erit Germaniæ veſtræ, vivat modo.——Valens himſelf (I certainly foreſee) if he lives, will become an illuſtrious Ornament of your Germany. This he wrote to Monavius in 1594. as may be ſeen in the beginning of Acidalius's Letters.

(d) Scioppius de Arte Critica, pag. 18.

(e) Val. Acidal. Epiſt. pag. 70, 78, 127.

(f) Ibid. pag. 160, 161, 299, 25:.

(g) The XIth and XXVIth of the Centuria ad Ital. & Hiſp.

" —— How Valens Acidalius came to be miſta-
" ken for the Author of the former Piece (17), See
" Geiſſer, decad. 3. n. 8. I ſhall take notice of this Diſſertation in the Article of GEDICCUS; but I muſt here obſerve how it came to be aſcribed to Acidalius. Being deſirous to indemnify his Bookſeller, who had printed his Quintus Curtius, and who often complained that he had been a Loſer by it (18); he happened to meet with a Copy of the Book
I am ſpeaking of, which had been already tranſcribed by ſeveral People: He read it, and, finding it a diverting Piece, he tranſcribed it, and made a Preſent of the Copy to the Bookſeller, as a Piece which might turn to good Account. However, he did not adviſe him to print it: He thought, without doubt, that it was ſufficient to let him know that it would make Amends for the Loſs he had ſuſtained; but he told him, that it was his Buſineſs to look to himſelf, and conſider whether the Satirical Strokes of that Piece would not bring him into Trouble. This Diſcourſe did not diſcourage the Bookſeller; he made all the haſte he could to get the Diſſertation printed. As ſoon as it came out it was greatly exclaimed againſt, and the Bookſeller proſecuted for it; and becauſe he confeſſed of whom he had the Copy, there was a terrible outcry againſt Valens Acidalius, who was amazed to ſee that meer Sallies of Wit ſhould alarm
People ſo much. " Obſtupeſco ad judicia ſæculi
" noſtri, & tam irritabiles animos illorum θεολογημά-
" των. Jocos nemo fere jam admittit, & ex leviſſi-
" ma quiſque re gravem calumniandi cauſſam & an-
" ſam captat (19). —— I am aſtoniſhed at the ill
" Judgment of the Times, and the captious Temper
" of the Reverend Gentlemen. At preſent no Jeſt
" will go down, and the lighteſt Matter gives an
" Handle to Calumny." He deſired his good Friend
Monavius to intercede for the Bookſeller with the Magiſtrates and Profeſſors of Leipſic, and to prevent their doing any thing which might bring a Diſgrace upon himſelf. He was afraid that his Enemies would not be contented with the many Aſperſions they had caſt upon him; nay, he feared that they would raiſe the Mob upon him; and of all things in the World, he deſired to have nothing to do with the Clergy.
" Nomen meum ſic traductum jam in vulgus calum-
" nioſis fabulis ſatis ſit, quod eſt nimio plus ſatis: ulte-
" rius ne quid furori populari concedatur. In primis
" à Theologis & Concionatoribus ne quid noceatur
" mihi, cum quibus nolo committi, nec quicquam
" magis opto quam illorum Tribunitiis edictis nun-
" quam miſceri, nec ſcriptis publicis inceſſi (20). ——
" Let it be ſufficient, that my Name is already become
" the public Object of Reproach; tho' That, I think,
" is too much: let not popular Reſentment be farther
" let looſe againſt me. But, above all, let me receive
" no Prejudice from the Eccleſiaſtics, with whom I
" deſire to have no Quarrel: nor is there any thing I
" more earneſtly wiſh, than not to be the Object either
" of their tribunitial Edicts, or their Writings." He died ſome Months after, and becauſe the Scandal occaſioned by the publiſhing of this Book was ſtill freſh in every one's Memory, People were the more diſpoſed to deſcant upon the Circumſtances of his Death. " Quæ
" calumniæ inde potiſſimum natæ ſunt, quod recens
" adhuc eſſet fabula illa in Apologetica epiſtola ſatis re-
" futata, quæ multorum animis altè nimis inſederat,
" ut facile eſſet improbis quidvis in invidiam trahere,
" &c. (21) —— Which Scandal aroſe from hence, that
" this Story, which I have ſufficiently refuted in my apo-
" logetical Epiſtle, was yet freſh, and had taken ſo deep
" root in the Minds of many; inſomuch that it gave a
" handle to unreaſonable Men to blacken my Reputa-
" tion." To conclude; I ſhall obſerve, that he affirms this Diſſertation had been handed about for a conſiderable time, and that in all likelihood it was written in Poland.

(17) That is the Diſſertation to prove that Women are not rational Animals.

(18) Ut id genus hominum lucri cupidum eſt, cum aviditati ejus emolumentum Editionis non ſatis reſpondiſſet, queſtum perſæpe de jactura ſua. As they are a Set of Men eager of Gain, becauſe the Profits of the Edition did not anſwer his Expectation, he often complain'd of his Loſs. Val. Acidal. Epiſt. Apolog. ad Calcem Epiſtol.

(19) Ibid.

(20) Ibid.

(21) Chriſt. Acidal. in Præf. Epiſt.

Few will wonder, that Acidalius was afraid of coming off by the worſt, if he brought the Clergy upon his Back; for, as it is very natural, to entertain an ill Opinion of one's Neighbour, theſe Gentlemen are very often compar'd to Æolus;

> Æole, namque tibi Divûm Pater atque hominum Rex
> Et mulcere dedit fluctus, & tollere ventos (22).
>
> O Æolus! for to thee the King of Heaven
> The Power of Tempeſts and of Wind has given.
> Thy Force alone their Fury can reſtrain,
> And ſmooth the Waves, or ſwell the troubled Main.
> DRYDEN.

(22) Virgil. Æn. lib. 1 ver. 65.

But there is this difference in the compariſon, that they are more expert at raiſing, than appeaſing a Storm. This latter Effect demands Men of Conſequence and Weight:

> Tum pietate gravem ac meritis ſi forte virum quem
> Aſpexêre, ſilent——
> Ille regit dictis animos, & pectora mulcet (23).
>
> If then ſome grave and pious Man appear,
> They huſh their Noiſe, and lend a liſt'ning Ear.
> He ſooths with ſober Words their angry Mood,
> And quenches their innate Deſire of Blood.
> DRYDEN.

(23) Ibid. ver. 151.

The other Effect is more eaſily produc'd.

[H] That he was a Phyſician.] Scioppius calls him ſo (24). Indeed he took his Doctor's Degree, but it was only ad honores; for he never practiſed Phyſic, nor ever deſign'd to do it. " Medicum τῇ πράξει nec ago,
" nec agere propoſitum unquam fuit: certò conſilio
" tamen inter ejus artis candidatos nomen dedi, nec
" pœnitet, &c. (25) —— I neither practiſe Phyſic, nor
" was it ever my Intention ſo to do; though, for cer- " tain Reaſons, I thought proper to rank my ſelf among
" the Candidates of that Science." He had ſaid a little before, " Dabam illic me τοῖς Ἀσκληπιάδαις, quorum
" ſacris & in Italia fueram initiatus; —— It was there I
" enroll'd my ſelf among the Sons of Æſculapius, into
" whoſe Myſteries I was initiated even in Italy."
What he ſays in another Place imports ſomething more, " Inde rediens cum ſolenni illorum ſtudiorum (Medicinæ) honore (26). —— Returning thence with
" the ſolemn Honour of that Science (Phyſic).

(24) Scioppius de Arte Critica, pag. 18.

(25) Val. Acidal. Ep. pag. 215. See alſo pag. 194, 209.

(26) Ibid. pag. 249.

ACINDYNUS (GREGORY) a Greek Monk of the XIVth Century. He aſſociated himſelf with Barlaam, who, after he had embraced the Greek Religion, made it his Buſineſs to extirpate the Heſycaſtes, whoſe Number was very much increaſed among the Monks of Mount Athos. The Hesycastes were contemplative Votaries, whose Name is a sufficient Proof, that, even in those Days, there were Quietists in the World. In the Rapture of their Devotion they pretended, that they saw a Brightness, resembling that which appeared about Jesus Christ, when he was transfigured on Mount Tabor, and affirmed this Light to be Uncreated, tho' altogether distinct from the Essence of God (a). Acindynus, seconding the ardent Zeal of Barlaam, wrote against the Illusions of these Fanatics, and was one of the Sticklers against them in the Council of Constantinople. But he had the Misfortune to meet with Antagonists, who had more Credit and Interest than either he, or Barlaam, and who drew upon them several Censures and Condemnations in several Councils. The ill Success he met with in That of Constantinople, about the Year 1337, did not deter him from charging openly with Heresy the Favourers of Gregory Palamas, for which he was cited by the Patriarch of Constantinople in 1341. He appeared before the Council, and was obliged to hold his Tongue, upon Pain of Excommunication. Six Years after he was yet more vigorously pursued, because John Cantacuzenus, who was become Emperor, had a Kindness for Palamas. The Censures and Excommunications, which at several times fell upon Acindynus, reduced him at last to a more sedate, and altogether obscure, Life. James Gretser, a German Jesuit, publish'd at Ingolstad in 1616, Acindynus's two Books, De Essentia & Operatione Dei. Leo Allatius has also published a Poem (b), and some Fragments of the same Author (c), who having had the Fate to pass for a Heretic [A] a considerable time, has found at last more learned and more equitable Judges [B].

Digitized by Google

(a) See the Authors quoted by Maimbourg, in his History of the Schism of the Greeks, lib. 5. pag. 143, &c. of the Dutch Edition.

(b) Orthod. Græc. Tom. 1. from pag. 769, to pag. 773.

(c) In Book 2. cap. 16. de Consensu. in the Appendix to Cave's Histor. Liter. Script. Eccl. pag. 34. Consult that Appendix about this Article.

[A] To pass for a Heretic.] As in the heat of a Dispute we are only intent upon pressing our Adversaries, we are often blinded to such a degree, as not to perceive, that we pass from one Extream to another; or at least that we stretch our Arguments so far, that they prove too much. I make no doubt, but this was the reason, why Barlaam and Acindynus laid themselves open to their Adversary Palamas, and that, being orthodox at the bottom, they often argued like Heretics. Prateolus has not fail'd to place them in his Catalogue; but it is impossible to make any thing of the Sentence of their Condemnation, in the manner he relates it. What we find least obscure in his Book concerning Barlaam and Acindynus, is, That the Council, which was called in order to condemn them, was held in the presence of the Blessed and most famous Emperor Michael Andronicus Palæologus, and John his Son, in the Reign of Henry VII. Emperor of Germany, John XXII. being Pope of Rome, in the Year of our Lord 1313 (1). This whole Passage swarms with Errors: For first of all, in the Century here in question (2), there was no other Emperor of Constantinople who could be distinguished by the Title of Blessed by a Roman Catholic, but Michael Palæologus, who was reconciled to the Holy See, and died in Communion with it. Now he was neither called Michael Andronicus, nor had he a Son called John; and besides he died in 1283. Secondly, the Emperor, whose Son's Name was John, had no other Name but that of Andronicus Palæologus, and began to reign in 1328. so that neither John XXII. nor Henry VII. were his Cotemporaries. Lastly, It is false that Acindynus was condemned about the Year 1313. Father Gualtier, in his Chronological Tables, does not forget Barlaam and Acindynus, whom he ranks among the Heretics, upon the Authority of Prateolus.

(1) Prateol. in Elench. Hæret. pag. 86. Edit. Colon. 1605. in 4to.

(2) The Word Century is taken here in a General Sense for the Space of 100 Years, beginning where one pleases.

[B] Has found at last more—equitable Judges.] See the Authors quoted by Mr Moreri; I mean Pontanus upon Cantacuzenus, and Spondanus's Annals. See likewise those of Bzovius, Father Gretzer (3), Father Maimbourg (4), and the Authors cited by him in the Margin.

(3) Gretzeri Notæ in Cant. cuz. & in Editione Acindyni.

(4) Maimbourg's Hist. of the Greek Schism, B. 5.

ACINDYNUS (SEPTIMIUS) was Consul of Rome with Valerius Proclus, in the same Year that Constantine, Son to Constantine the Great, was kill'd, near Aquilea (a). He had been Governor of Antioch, and during his Government there happened an Event, mentioned by St Austin (b), which deserves to be taken notice of. A certain Man, not paying into the Exchequer a Pound of Gold, at which he had been assess'd, was committed to Prison by Acindynus, who swore withal that he would cause him to be hang'd, if he did not pay that Sum upon a certain Day, which he appointed. The limited Time was near expiring, and the poor Fellow still unable to satisfy the Governor: He had indeed a beautiful Wife, but who was bare of Money as well as himself; and yet it was from her alone he began first to be in Hopes of Liberty. A very rich Man being desperately in love with this Woman, offer'd her the Pound of Gold, on which her Husband's Life depended, and asked no other Recompence for it but a Night's Lodging (c). She, being instructed by the Scripture, that She had no Power over her own Body, but her Husband, communicated to the Prisoner the Offer of this Gallant, telling him withal, that she was ready to accept of it, if he would give his Consent, he who was the true and lawful Master of his Wife's Body; and if he thought his Life worth redeeming at the Expence of a Chastity, whereof he had the sole Disposal. He thank'd her for it, and gave her leave to lie with her Lover. She obey'd; giving her Husband the Use of her Body, not in the common way of gratifying the Appetite of the Flesh, but to indulge the Desire he had to live (d). The Spark gave her a Purse with the promised Sum of Money, but stole it afterwards cunningly from her, and imposed upon her another Purse filled with Earth. The Good Woman, returning home, (for she had met her Gallant at his Country-House) no sooner found out the Cheat, but she complained of it publickly, and demanded Justice of the Governor, to whom she very ingenuously related the Fact. Acindynus began with accusing himself, as having by his Severity and Menaces drove these innocent People to such desperate Remedies, and first of all condemned himself to pay the Pound of Gold into the Exchequer; afterwards he adjudged to the obedient Wife That Piece of Ground, out of which the Earth had been taken, which was found

(a) In 340. according to Calvisius.

(b) Augustin on our Lord's Sermon on the Mount, B. 1. c. 16.

(c) Pollicens pro una Nocte, si ei misseri vellet, se auri libram daturum. Id. ib.

(d) Illa Corpus non nisi marito dedit, non concumbere, ut solet, sed vivere cupienti. Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

found in the ſham Purſe. St Auguſtin dares not decide [A] whether this Woman's Conduct be right or wrong, and inclines rather to approve than to condemn it [B]; which is ſomewhat ſurprizing [C]. We have obſerved before (e), the ſame looſe Principle of Morality in St Chryſoſtom, in relation to Abraham and Sarah's Conduct.

(e) In the Remark [A] of ABIMELECH.

[A] Dares not decide.] This is plain from theſe Words: "Nihil hic in alteram partem diſputo; liceat "cuique æſtimare quod velit (1).—I do not decide up- "on this Queſtion, let every one judge as he pleaſes." In another place he queſtions whether a Woman's Chaſtity would be violated, in caſe, to ſave her Huſband's Life, and by his own Order, ſhe ſhould lie with another Man; "Scrupuloſius diſputari poteſt utrum "illius mulieris pudicitia violaretur, etiam ſi quiſquam "carni ejus commixtus foret, cum id in ſe fieri pro "mariti vita, nec illo neſciente ſed jubente, permitte-"ret, nequaquam fidem deſerens conjugalem, & po-"teſtatem non abnuens maritalem (2).—It is a nice "point to be determined, Whether that Woman's "Chaſtity would be violated, even tho' ſhe ſhould be "carnally known by another, who ſhould ſubmit to this "for the ſake of her Husband's Life, and that by his "own Conſent; in which ſhe neither deſerts her conju-"gal Faith, nor denies the Authority of her Husband." Rivetus, having quoted theſe Words, adds (3), That St Auguſtine relates, that the ſame Caſe happened under the Emperor Conſtantine (4), when Acindynus, &c.

(1) St Auſtin, in our Laſt Remark [A] of Mart, lib. 1. cap. 10.

(2) In contra Fauſt. Manich. lib. 22. cap. 37.

(3) Riveti Exercitat. 74. in Geneſ. Oper. Tom. 1. pag. 281.

(4) It is Conſtantius, in the Book of St Auſtin, which I have quoted.

[B] Rather to approve than to condemn it.] This evidently appears by theſe Words: "Non ita exiſtiman-"dum ut hoc etiam femina, viro permittente, facere "poſſe videatur;—Quamquam nonnullæ cauſæ poſ-"ſint exiſtere ubi & uxor mariti conſenſu pro ipſo "marito hoc facere debere videatur—Nihil hic in al-"teram partem diſputo—Sed tamen narrato hoc facto, "non ita reſpuit hoc ſenſus humanus, quod in illa "muliere viro jubente commiſſum eſt, quemadmodum "antea, cum fine ullo exemplo res ipſa poneretur, "horruimus (5).——We are not to imagine in general "that it is lawful for the Wife to do this, even with "her Husband's Permiſſion——tho' there may happen "Caſes, in which ſuch a Liberty may be allowed—— "I pronounce nothing in this point—However, now I "have mentioned this Fact (to wit, the Caſe of the "Wife, whoſe Husband was impriſoned by Acindynus) "this Woman's Behaviour, in Obedience to her Huſ-"band, is not ſo contrary to the general Senſe, nor "ſhocks us ſo much, as at firſt ſight it may do, when "the Queſtion is propoſed without any Inſtance." I know not what Grounds the Proteſtant Divine, whom I have quoted in the foregoing Remark, has for his Aſſertion, when he aſſures us, that St Auguſtin rather inclines to condemn than to juſtify the Woman. "Quo facto Acindyni explicato, liberum unicuique "permittit Auguſtinus æſtimare quod velit, quamvis "in eam partem propenſior videatur, quod id fieri "non liceat (6).—After laying down this Story of A-"cindynus, St Auſtin gives every one leave to judge as "he thinks fit; tho' he ſeems more inclined to condemn "the Lawfulneſs of the Action..

(5) St Auſtin, Ubi ſupra.

(6) Rivet. Ubi ſupra.

[C] Which is ſomewhat ſurprizing.] So great a Divine as he was, ought ſurely to have known, that our Life, which is but a temporal and a periſhing Good, ought not to be ſo dear to us, as to be thought worthy of being redeemed by our Diſobedience to the Law of God. For as Diſobedience is a Sin, which makes us liable to eternal Puniſhment, and a Moral Evil, which offends an Infinite Being, it is no leſs againſt common Prudence, than the Dictates of ſound Reaſon, to chuſe to commit a Sin, rather than loſe one's Life. I ſay nothing of thoſe wide Abyſſes of Corruption, which are opened every where under our Feet, by aſſerting, that an Action, which would be criminal, if done without a deſign to ſave one's Life, becomes innocent, when done to prevent Death. Acindynus's Priſoner would have acted the ſhameful Part of a Pander, no doubt, and conſented to the Act of Adultery, properly ſo called, if he had ſuffered his Wife to lie with the Spark merely to gain a Pound of Gold; but becauſe he conſented, only to ſave his Life, it ceaſes to be a Conſent to Adultery; nay, it becomes a lawful thing. Who does not ſee, that if this Morality took place, there is not one Precept in the Decalogue, to which the Fear of Death might not diſpenſe with our Obedience? Where are the Exceptions in favour of Adultery? If a Woman may be diſpenſed with for violating the Command of not defiling her Body, when by that means ſhe may reſcue her Husband from Capital Puniſhment, ſhe will likewiſe be free to tranſgreſs it, when her own Life comes in queſtion; for God no where exacts from us, that we ſhould love another more than ourſelves. Therefore we may with Impunity, it ſeems, violate the Law of Chaſtity, in order to avoid Death. And why will not the ſame Reaſon make Murther, Theft, Perjury, the abjuring of one's Religion, &c. lawful? The greateſt Men are apt to miſtake and loſe their Way, even in the ſmoothеſt and moſt beaten Roads. Is it ſo difficult to find, that St Paul did not pretend, that a Husband had Power to diſpoſe of his Wife's Body to whom he pleaſed; when he ſaid, That the Wife has no power over her own Body, but her Husband? Nevertheleſs you ſee that St Auſtin puzzles himſelf with theſe Words of the Apoſtle, and that he lays great Streſs upon the Diſtinction, marito jubente, poteſtatem non abnuens maritalem. We ſhall take notice elſewhere (7) that he has made uſe of this Doctrine of St Paul to juſtify Abraham and Sarah in relation to Agar's Concubinage. Let us now hear a Divine, who tho' he lived ſeveral Ages after This Father of the Church, yet proves a better Caſuiſt in this Point. "Qua in re (that is, concerning the Adventure of the "Wife whoſe Husband was Acindynus's Priſoner) mi-"rum eſt talem ac tantum virum potuiſſe dubitare, "cum ex ſacra Scriptura conſtet apertiſſime malum "aliquod pœnæ nunquam eſſe redimendum malo cul-"pæ, & vitam potius eſſe deponendam, quam ut eam "nobis aut aliis ſervemus id facientes ex quo Deus of-"enderetur. Nullo modo itaque cenſendum eſt li-"citum eſſe adulterii remedium vel marito, vel uxo-"ri, vitandæ alterius necis cauſa; quin potius mor-"tem expectare convenit, imo vero ultro expetere, "quam alterutrius caſtitatem prodere, ob cujus con-"ſervationem multæ pudiciſſimæ fœminæ non ſolum "ab aliis occidi ſuſtinuerunt, ſed etiam (quod tamen "probare nolim) ſibi ipſis vim intulerunt, non ſo-"lum inter Ethnicas, ſed etiam inter Chriſtianas (8). "It is ſtrange, that ſo great a Man ſhould heſitate in "this Matter, when it is plain from the ſacred Scrip-"tures, that no Evil of Puniſhment is ever to be "bought off at the Expence of the Evil of Sin, and that "we ſhould rather part with Life, than preſerve it for "ourſelves or others, by doing what will offend God. "And therefore we muſt by no means think, that either "the Husband or the Wife is at liberty to have recourſe "to the Remedy of Adultery, in order to ſave either's "Life: they ought rather to await Death, nay even "voluntarily to ſeek it, than betray each other's Cha-"ſtity; for the ſake of preſerving which many the "moſt chaſt Women, not only among the Heathens, but "even Chriſtians, have not only ſubmitted to die by the "Hands of others, but have violently deſtroy'd them-"ſelves; which latter Action, however, I by no means "approve.". He quotes the Example of Sophronia, of whom in it's Place. Conſult the Amœnitates Juris of Mr Menage in the Chapter, entituled, De mariti lenocinio: Adulterarum viros ordinare non potuiſſe. 'Tis the 10th Chapter of this Work: See the 52d Page of it, in the Leipſic Edition of 1680, in 4to.

(7) In the Remark [I], of the Article of SARA.

(8) Rivet. Ubi ſupra.

ACONTIUS, (JAMES) a Philoſopher, Civilian, and Divine, born at Trent, in the XVIth Century (a). He embraced the Reform'd Religion, and going over into England in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, he received many Inſtances of That Princeſs's Bounty, as he acknowledges himſelf in the Frontiſpiece of the Book [A], which he

(a) Moreri falſly places him in the XVth Century.

[A] In the Frontiſpiece of the Book, which he dedicated to her.] Inſtead of an Epiſtle Dedicatory, he contented himſelf with a Canonizing Inſcription, which begins with, DIVÆ ELIZABETHÆ ANGLIÆ, FRANCIÆ, HIBERNIÆ REGINÆ. He declares, that he inſcribes his Book to

Digitized by Google

he dedicated to her. I mean the famous Collection of the Stratagems of the Devil, which has so often been translated, and reprinted. The first Edition of it is That of Basil, in 1565. soon after which the Author died in England (b). James Grasserus procured a second Edition of it in 1610. wherein we find indeed Acontius's Letter, de Ratione Edendorum Librorum, containing very wholsome Cautions to those, who design to set up for Authors; but the Editor has omitted his Treatise of Method (c); which is a good Piece [B], tho' the Author only published it as an Essay (d). He had composed in Italian a Book of Fortification, which he himself turn'd into Latin during his Stay in England (e); but I think it was never printed. He was also writing a System of Logic (f), which I suppose Death hindered him from finishing. 'Twas great Pity, for he was a Man of a just way of Thinking, and great Discernment and Penetration. He had framed to himself the most rational Idea of such a Work, and thought himself obliged to bestow the more Pains and Care upon it, because he foresaw, that an Age more refined, than that he lived in, was advancing [C]. His Conjecture was well grounded [D]. His Principles in Religion were not the same with those of Calvin; he had a great Inclination to Toleration, and held in general certain Tenets, which have render'd him very odious to some Protestant Divines [E]. I have met with but few Particulars of his Life. He says of himself, by the

(b) Grasseris's Epistle to the Reader before Strategematã Satanæ.

(c) See the Title of it, at the End of the Remark [B].

(d) Post illud tempus, quo excidit nobis inchoatum illud de Methodo opusculum, scis me bis sedem ac locum, mutasse. - - Since the time that this imperfect Work de Methodo came out of my hand, you know that I have twice changed my Station. Acontii Epist. ad Joh. Wolfium Tigurinum de Ratione edendorum Librorum, pag. 410.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Id. ib.

to her, as a Tellimony of his Gratitude: "In signum memoriamque grati animi ob partum ejus liberalitate, quum in Angliam propter Evangelicæ veritatis professionem extorris appulisset, humanissimeque exceptus esset, literarum otium. —— As the Sign and Memorial of a Mind full of grateful Sentiments for That Tranquility, which her Bounty afforded his Studies, when, exiled for professing the Protestant Religion, he took Shelter in England, and was received with the greatest Humanity." In his Letter to Wolfius, he says, That his Pension relieved in some measure his Indigence, and afforded him leisure to Study. "Ut autem quicquid est operæ id istam in artem (muniendorum oppidorum) conferrem, ex parte privatis sum rationibus adductus, etenim in hoc voluntario meo exilio inopiam UTCUNQUE sublevat, & otii ad alia studia suppeditat NONNIHIL, impetrato mihi ab hujus sapientissimæ atque optimæ Reginæ liberalitate honesto stipendio (1). —— I am induced, partly by private Reasons, to cultivate this Science (Fortification) as far as I am able; since, in this my voluntary Exile, it procures me a KIND OF MAINTENANCE, and affords me SOME Leisure for other Studies, by obtaining for me an honourable Pension from the Liberality of this Wise and Good Queen." What Restrictions are here! And how well they shew the Difficulty of satisfying the Expectations of Refugees? Observe, that he obtained this Pension, not as a Divine, but as an Engineer, which appears by the Reason he himself alledges, why he spent his time principally in the Study of Fortification.

(1) Acontii Epist. ad Wolfium, de Edendorum Librorum ratione, pag. 411.

[B] Which is a good Piece.] This is the Judgment which a learned Cartesian gave of it (2), in a Letter which he wrote to Father Mersennus, soon after the Publication of Des Cartes's Meditations. "He said, he relished above all things the Method which Mr Des Cartes had made use of in handling his Subject; he admired it's Usefulness, and extolled it's Excellencies above That of the Schools: More particularly he esteemed his Judgment, and the Reasons he had to prefer the Analytical or Resolutive Method, to the Synthetical or Compound, as well in teaching, as demonstrating. He had not 'till then met with any thing like it, except the little Book De Methodo, composed by James Acontius, who, besides that excellent Treatise, has also given a fine Specimen of the Analytical Method, in his Book of the Stratagems of the Devil, which he recommends to the Perusal of all those, who love the Peace of the Church; though Acontius plainly discovers in it the Prepossession of his Sect, and intended by it to Favour those of his own Party (3)". That little Piece of Acontius, under the Title of, Methodus sive recta investigandarum tradendarumque artium ac scientiarum ratio. —— (The Method, or right Rule, of investigating and delivering Arts and Sciences), was inserted in a Collection of Dissertations de Studiis bene instituendis, printed at Utretcht, in 1658.

(2) Heulnetus. His Letter is dated Aug. 29. 1641. apud Baillet, Life of Des Cartes Tom. 2. pag. 138.

(3) Baillet, ubi supra,

[C] That an Age more refined—was advancing.] We must hear what he says himself, after having mentioned the other Reasons which rendered his Design very difficult in the Performance: "Intelligo etiam me in seculum incidisse cultum præter modum, nec tam certe vereor eorum qui regnare nunc videntur judicia, quam exorientem quandam seculi adhuc paulo cultioris lucem pertimesco. Etsi enim multos habuit habetque ætas nostra viros præstantes; adhuc tamen videre videor nescio quid magis futurum (4). —— I am sensible too, that I am fallen into an extreamly polite Age; and yet I am not so apprehensive of the reigning Geniuses, as the approaching Brightness of still politer Times; for though the present Age has produced, and continues to produce, many Great Men, yet I fancy I foresee an Æra of superior Politeness arising upon us."

(4) Acont. ubi supra, pag. 412.

[D] His Conjecture was well grounded.] I am of opinion, that the XVIIth Century produced a greater Number of Learned Men, than the XVIIth, and yet the former was not so enlightened as the latter. Whilst the Reign of Criticism and Philology continued, every Part of Europe produced Prodigies of Erudition. The Study of the new Philosophy, and of modern Languages, having introduced another Taste, That Universal and Profound Literature has disappeared; but in recompence, a certain Genius more refined, and accompanied with a more exquisite Discernment, has spread itself over the Commonwealth of Learning: People are now-a-days less learned, and more subtle. Therefore Acontius had Reason to foresee, at a Distance, an Age, which would be a more formidable Judge of the Logic, he intended to write, than That wherein he lived. However, I would not be thought so presuming, as by my own Authority to adjudge the Superiority to our Age; for in this I do but conform myself to the Opinion of the most acute and refined Critics. "We live in an Age, says one of them (5), wherein People attend more to good Sense and Reason, than any thing else; and it may be said in our Commendation, that we are already better acquainted with the Character of ancient Authors, and more intimately familiar with their Genius, than those, who went before us. The Difference between them and us, is, That, in the last Age, People were more ambitious of Erudition than they are at present. —— 'Twas the Genius of those times, wherein nothing was more in Vogue than a vast Capacity, a great Memory, and profound Literature. They studied Languages to the bottom; applied themselves to reform or restore the Text of ancient Authors by far-fetched Interpretations; cavilled about an equivocal Word; laid stress upon a Conjecture, in order to establish a Correction; in short, they stuck to the literal Sense of an Author, because they had not Force enough to raise themselves up to his Spirit, and to be thoroughly acquainted with him, as we have at present, because we are more Reasonable, and less Learned; and set a greater Value upon plain good Sense, than an extensive, but perverse, Capacity."

(5) Rapin's Preface to the Comparison of Thucydides and Livy.

[E] Odious to some Protestant Divines.] That I may not be arraigned for advancing this without any Ground or Proof, I shall quote the Words of a Minister of the Hague (6): "Jacobus Acontius (de quo jure quod de Origine dici solet, ubi bene nemo melius, ubi male nemo pejus) —— fuit —— vir verè doctus, sed ingenii, ut acris quidem, ita & elatioris,

(6) Saldenus de libris, pag. 337, 338.

Digitized by Google

the by, that he had bestowed a great part of his Life in the Study of Bartolus, Baldus, and such like barbarous Writers, and many Years at Court (g). Acontius's Letter, which was published in 1696 (h), shews a clear and exact Genius, and which was acquainted with sound Logic. It is dated from London the 5th of June 1565. and serves to illustrate a thing which he had advanced concerning Sabellius, and which had been censured. Note, That tho' most Protestant Divines look upon this Man with Horror, yet some amongst them have very much commended him [F].

(g) Id. ib.

(h) By Mr Crenius, p. 131, &c. of the 2d part of his Animadversiones Philologicæ & Historicæ.

" elatioris, & justo liberalioris: quin à nescio quali " scepticismo & indifferentissimo in ipsam Theologiam introducendo haudquaquam alieni, quod tractatu suo de Stratagematis Satanæ testatum satis fecit, " libello, (Simone Goulartio judice) omnium malorum pessimo *. Voetius ei adscribit † quod " vel imperite vel subdole communem confessionis " conceptum molitus sit, sub cujus vexillo militari " possunt & ipsi Ariani. —— James Acontius (to whom may be applied what is generally said of Origen, that where he did well, no one did better, where he did ill, no one worse) was a truly learned Man, but of a Genius too Elate and Free, and too Sceptical in Matters of Religion, as appears by his Treatise de Stratagematis Satanæ: A Book (according to Simon Goulartius) of all bad Books the worst. Voetius charges him with cunningly, or unskilfully, drawing up a Confession of Faith, under whose Banner the Arians themselves might fight." What is here mentioned of Simon Goulart is not to be found (as far as I know) in any of his Books; I believe it is taken from Uytenbogardus, who says in one of his Works, that, when he studied at Geneva, he was censured by Simon Goulart for reading Acontius, who told him, that his Book of the Stratagems of the Devil, was the worst Book in the World, esse librum omnium malorum pessimum (7). I have met with another Passage of Voetius concerning this Matter, wherein that Doctor places Acontius among the Heretics, who came out of Italy, under Pretence of Reformation (8), and assures us, that if the Venom which lies hid in some Places of his Book ‖, had been taken notice of, he had either been Excommunicated, or constrained to sign a Confession of Orthodoxy. " Judicetur quis anguis " in herba latuerit, quod hic vir in fundamentalibus " assertionibus nunquam τὸ ὁμοούσιον trium personarum " statuerit, nec adversarios, Samosatenum, Photinum, " Arrium, Eunomium, Pneumatomachos, aut eorum " errores rejecerit, contentus solos illos rejectos, qui " negarent filium non esse alium à patre (9). —— " Judge what a Snake is concealed in the Grass, when " this Author, in his Fundamental Assertions, never " lays down the Sameness of Essence of the Three " Persons, nor rejects the Errors of Samosatenus, Photinus, Arrius, Eunomius, and the Pneumatomachi *, " being contented with disclaiming only those, who de- " nied, that the Son is not distinct from the Father."

* Trigland. Hist. Eccles. pag. 232.

† Voet. Polit. Eccles. part. III. in Indice, & pag. 31. & 398.

(7) Uytenbogardus in his History written in Belgic, cap. 1. pag. 7. Edit. in 4to.

(8) Voetius's Theological Disputations, Tom. 1. p. 495.

‖ Pag. 114, 123, 341. Edit. Basil. 1610.

(9) Voetius, ubi supra, pag. 501.

* Opposers of the Divinity of the Holy Ghost.

[F] Some amongst them have very much commended him.] Mr Crenius furnishes us with Proofs for both these Assertions. He observes (10), That Conradus Bergius declares, that Acontius argued prudently and piously. This Bergius was Minister and Professor of Divinity at Bremen. The Book, wherein he speaks to this Purpose, is entituled, Praxis Catholica divini Canonis contra quasvis hæreses & schismata, &c. and printed at Bremen, in 1639. in 8vo. Rivetus, being in Possession of one of these Books, ex dono autoris, wrote in it some Remarks, of which I shall mention That, which relates to Acontius. " Miror " cur, p. 524. tanti faciat vir doctus judicium Acon- " tii, hominis ambiguæ fidei & Socinianorum vel " prodromi, vel commilitonis, cujus rei gratiâ ab " Arminianis toties recusus est & commendatus, etiam " in varias linguas vulgares translatus. Huic homini " scopus fuit, ut ex toto libro apparet, ad tam pauca " necessaria doctrinam Christianam arctare, ut om- " nibus sectis in Christianismo pateret aditus ad " mutuam communionem. Vellem doctiss. & pium " virum à talibus laudandis & imitandis abstinuisse " (11). —— I wonder this Learned Author, at " his 524th Page, should so highly extol the Judg- " ment of Acontius, a Man of ambiguous Principles, " and either the Fore-runner or Fellow-Soldier of the " Socinians; upon which account he was so great a Fa- " vourite with the Arminians, that they reprinted his " Work many Times, translating it into several Vul- " gar Languages. This Gentleman's Aim, as appears " from his whole Book, was to reduce the Christian " Doctrine to so few Fundamentals, as to open the " Door to a general Communion of all the Sects in " Christendom. I wish this learned and pious Au- " thor had abstained from commending and imitating " such Writers." The Book, whence I had this Passage, informs me farther, that Isaac Junius (12), Minister at Delft, plac'd Acontius, the Remonstrants, and Socinus, in the same Class, and look'd upon the first as a Man, who had a mind to reduce all Sects into one, and enclose them in the same Ark, as Noah did all sorts of Animals in his, wherein they were preserved, though sustain'd by different Food. We see in the same Book, the Account which Peltius gave of Acontius, which is, that by reducing to a small Number the Points necessary to Salvation, and requiring a Toleration for the particular Opinions, which were against the other Articles, he opened a wide Door to all manner of Heresies (13). Lastly, we find in the same Book, that not only Arminius and Grevinchovius have given great Commendations to our Acontius, but also that Amesius and George Pauli (14), two Reformed Divines, have very much applauded him. " Ja- " cobo Arminio tamen in Respons. ad Excerpta Theol. " Leidens. p. 65. Acontius est divinum prudentiæ ac " moderationis lumen,——(Acontius is a divine Lumi- " nary of Prudence and Moderation). Amesio præ- " fat. ad Puritan. Anglicanos & Grevinchovio in Ab- " stertione calumn. Smoutii, p. 125. apud B. Hul- " semannum in Dedicat. Supplementi Breviarii Theo- " logici, p. 6. idem Acontius est ἀνατόμιστος ἐν ταῖς " γραφαῖς, qui sementem Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ calore " & rore cœlesti fovit sedulo.—— (The same Acontius " was very mighty in the Scriptures; and one, who " diligently cherished the Growth of the English " Church, with Warmth and Heavenly Dew (15)."

(10) Thom. Crenius's Philological and Historical Animadversions, part. 2. pag. 32.

(11) Rivet. apud Crenium, ibid. pag. 31.

(12) Isaac Junius in Examine Apologiæ Remonstrantium, pag. 46. apud Crenium, ibid.

(13) Peltius in Dedicatione Harmoniæ, apud Crenium, ib. pag. 31.

(14) In Reformato Augustano, seu Apologia pro dictatis suis de Aug. Confess. See Crenius, ibid. p. 32.

(15) Cren. ibid. p. 34.

ACOSTA (Uriel), a Portuguese Gentleman, was born at Porto about the end of the XVIth Century. He was educated in the Romish Religion, which his Father fincerely profest (a), though descended from one of those Jewish Families, which were constrain'd to receive Baptism. He was educated like a Person of Quality, and, after several Studies, apply'd himself at last to Civil-Law. Nature had endow'd him with good Inclinations [A], and Religion had made so deep an impression upon him, that he ardently desir'd to fulfil all the Precepts of the Church, in order to avoid Eternal Death, which he very much dreaded. Therefore he diligently apply'd himself to the reading of the Gospel, and other spiritual and godly Books; and

(a) Pater meus verè erat Christianus.---My Father was truly a Christian. Uriel Acosta in his Exemplar Vitæ Humanæ, inserted by Mr Limborch, at the end of his Friendly Conference with a Jew, concerning the Truth of the Christian Religion.

[A] Nature had endow'd him with good Inclinations.] He was so tender-hearted and compassionate, that he could not forbear shedding Tears at the recital of any Misfortune, that had befallen his Neighbour; and Modesty had taken so deep Root in his Soul, that he feared nothing more than what might offend it, and put him to the Blush. He was courageous, and susceptible of Anger on a lawful Occasion, and check'd the Insolence of those rude Men, who take delight in insulting others, still chusing to side with the weaker. This is the Character he gives of himself. Infirmorum Partes adjuvare cupiens, says he (1), & illis potius me socium adjungens.

(1) Uriel Acosta in his Exemplar Vitæ Humanæ, p. 340.

Digitized by Google

and often consulted the Decisions of Casuists about the Heads of Confession; but the more Enquires he made, the more he found his Scruples and Difficulties increase, till, at last, they entangled him to such a Degree, that, being unable to get out of the Labyrinth; he fell into most terrible Agonies of Mind. He did not think it possible for him punctually to discharge the Duty and Conditions, which Absolution requires, according to sound Casuists, and thus he despair'd of Salvation, in case it could not be obtain'd any other Way. But, because it was difficult for him to abandon a Religion, to which he had been accustom'd from his Infancy, and which had taken deep Root in his Mind, thro' the Force of Persuasion, all he could do in his Condition was to examine, whether All the Notions he had imbibed of a Future State were not meer Fiction, and whether They were agreeable to Reason. He fancy'd that Reason incessantly suggested to him Arguments against Them. He was then 22 Years of Age, and This was the Course he took: He first turn'd Sceptic, and afterwards concluded, that the Road, into which Education had led him, would never carry him to Salvation. In the mean time, he studied the Law, and obtain'd a Preferment (b), at 25 Years of Age. Now, being unwilling to be without Religion, and the Profession of the Roman Catholic Religion affording him no Rest, he apply'd himself to the Reading of Moses and the Prophets, and, having found them more satisfactory than the Gospel, he was at last persuaded, that Judaism was the true Religion; but, not being permitted to profess it in Portugal, he resolv'd to leave his Native Country. Accordingly he resign'd his Place, and embark'd for Amsterdam with his Mother and Brothers, whom he had the Courage to catechise [B], and whom he had effectually brought over to his Opinions. As soon as they arriv'd there, they were admitted into the Synagogue, and were circumcis'd according to Custom: upon which he chang'd his Name of Gabriel into that of URIEL. It was not many days, before he found that the Manners and Customs of the Jews were not conformable to the Laws of Moses: He cou'd not forbear censuring this Nonconformity; but the Chief of the Synagogue gave him to understand, that he must follow their Tenets and Customs in all Points, and that if he receded from them never so little, they would excommunicate him. These Threats did not discourage him; He thought it would not become a Man, who had abandon'd the Conveniences of his Native Land for Liberty of Conscience, to yield to Rabbies who had no Authority [C]; and that it would argue want of Spirit and Piety, if he should

(b) The Dignity of a Treasurer of a Collegiate Church.

[B] Whom he had the Courage to catechise.] He does not forget the Circumstances, which were proper to heighten the Sacrifice he made to his Religion. He observes that he relinquished a profitable and honourable Post, and a fine House, which his Father had built in the best Part of the City (2). He adds the Dangers of embarking; for the Descendants of Jews cannot go out of the Kingdom, without the King's particular Leave. Navem adscendimus non sine magno periculo: non licet illis qui ab Hebræis originem ducant à regno discedere sine speciali Regis facultate (3). Lastly, he says, That if it had been known, that he entertained his Mother and Brothers with his Thoughts about the Jewish Religion, it would have been his utter Ruin; but his Charity made him overlook the Danger. Quibus ego fraterno amore motus ea communicaveram, quæ mihi super religione visa fuerant magis consentanea, licet super aliquibus dubitarem: quod quidem in magnum malum meum poterat recidere, tantum est in eo regno periculum de talibus loqui (4). We may here observe by the Way, that the Spaniards and Portuguese have omitted nothing, that the subtilest and severest Politics can invent, to maintain a Party. They have made use of every Method, for the Support of Christianity, and the Destruction of Judaism; and they cannot be accused, without Injustice, of having committed the Church to the Protection of Heaven, with a temper of Mind, dispos'd patiently to expect every thing from the Efficacy of their Prayers. On the contrary, one would think they followed the Advice which the Heathen Poet has given in an Affair relating to Agriculture,

> Non tamen ulla magis præsens fortuna laborum est,
> Quam si quis ferro potuit rescindere summum
> Ulceris os: alitur vitium, vivitque tegendo;
> Dum medicas adhibere manus ad vulnera pastor
> Abnegat, aut meliora deos sedet omina poscens (5).
>
> Receipts abound; but, searching all thy Store,
> The best is still at hand, to launce the Sore,
> And cut the Head; for, till the Core be found,
> The secret Vice is fed, and gathers Ground:
> Whilst, making fruitless Moan, the Shepherd stands,
> And, when the launcing Knife requires his Hands,
> Vain Help, with idle Prayers, from Heav'n demands.
>
> DRYDEN.

(2) Ibid. pag. 347.

(3) Ibid.

(4) Ibid.

(5) Virgil. Georgic. lib. 3. ver. 452.

Or else one would be apt to say, that they have squared their Conduct by the Reproaches which Cato made to the Romans, when he blamed them for confiding solely in the Assistance of the Gods, who, added he, never hear the Prayers of the Slothful, for Sloth is a Sign of the Anger of Heaven. "Vos — "inertia & mollitia animi alius alium exspectantes cunctamini, videlicet diis immortalibus confisi, qui "hanc rempubl. in maximis sæpe periculis servavere. "Non votis, neque suppliciis muliebribus auxilia "deorum parantur; vigilando, agendo, bene consulendo, prospere omnia cedunt. Ubi socordiæ "tete, atque ignaviæ tradideris; nequicquam Deos implores: irati infestique sunt (6). —— Unactive and Effeminate in Mind, you stand idly gazing on each other, relying on the Assistance of the Immortal Gods, who have often preserv'd this Republic in the greatest Danger. But be assured, that the Assistance of Heaven is not to be obtained by Wishes, and womanish Supplication: Success attends alone on Vigilance, Action, and wise Councils. If you give yourself up to Sloth and Idleness, it is in vain to implore the Gods; they are angry and unpropitious." Lastly, one may say, that the Lesson which they are most apt to practise, is the latter part of the Axiom, which a Modern has set down in these Words: We must, as it were, so wholly abandon ourselves to Providence, as if all human Prudence were useless; and we must so govern ourselves by the Dictates of human Prudence, as if there were no Providence (7). Without doubt they would laugh at an Author, who should blame them for using Christianity like an old Palace, so much decay'd, that it wants Props on every Side; and Judaism, like a strong Fortress, which one must cannonade and bombard continually, in order to weaken it. We may justly condemn certain Methods of supporting the Good Cause; but after all, as good as it is, it stands in need of Support; and Distrust is the Mother of Safety. See the Remark [E], of the Article LUBIENIETSKI, and the Remark [B], of the Article DRABICIUS.

(6) Sallust. in Bello Catilin. pag. 160.

(7) Cotin, Oeuvres Gallantes, Tom. 1. in his Discourse on the Truth of Dreams, p. 260.

[C] To Rabbies who had no Authority.] There is certainly a great Difference between the Tribunal, which our Acosta stood in fear of in his own Country, and the Tribunal of the Synagogue of Amsterdam. This ſhould betray his Sentiments upon this Occaſion; wherefore he perſiſted in his former Courſe. Accordingly he was excommunicated, which had ſuch an effect, that his very Brothers, I mean thoſe, whom he had inſtructed in the Jewiſh Religion, durſt neither ſpeak to him, nor ſo much as ſalute him, when they met him in the Streets. Under theſe Circumſtances he compos'd a Book in Juſtification of himſelf; wherein he ſhewed that the Rites and Traditions of the Phariſees were contrary to Moſes's Writings. He had ſcarce begun this Book, when he embrac'd the Opinion of the Sadducees; for he was fully perſuaded, that the Puniſhments and Rewards of the Old Law reſpected this Life only; grounding His Opinion principally upon this, that Moſes makes no mention either of the Joys of Heaven, or of the Torments of Hell. When his Adverſaries were inform'd, that he had embrac'd this Opinion, they were extreamly pleas'd, becauſe they foreſaw it wou'd be a good Plea in juſtifying to the Chriſtians the Proceedings of the Synagogue againſt him. This was the Reaſon, why, even before his Book went to the Preſs, they publiſh'd a Treatiſe concerning the Immortality of the Soul, compos'd by a Phyſician (c), who forgot nothing, that might contribute to brand Acoſta for an Atheiſt: Nay They even encourag'd Children to abuſe him in the Streets, and to throw Stones at his Houſe. Nevertheleſs he publiſh'd a Book againſt the Phyſician, wherein he ſtrenuouſly oppos'd the Immortality of the Soul (d). The Jews had recourſe to the Tribunals of Amſterdam, and impeach'd him, as a Perſon who overthrew the Principles both of Judaiſm and Chriſtianity. He was impriſon'd, and admitted to Bail in 8 or 10 days. The Impreſſion of his Book was confiſcated, and the Author fin'd 300 Gilders. All this did not ſtop him: Time and Experience puſh'd him on much farther. He examin'd whether the Law of Moſes came from God, and fancied he had found ſufficient Reaſons to be convinc'd, that it was a meer Contrivance of Human Wit; but inſtead of concluding from thence, Therefore I ought not to return to the Jewiſh Communion, he drew this Conſequence, Why ſhould I obſtinately remain ſeparated from it all my Life-time, expos'd to ſo many Inconveniencies, and a Stranger as I am, in a Country, the Language whereof I cannot ſpeak? Having conſider'd all theſe things he return'd to the Pale of Judaiſm 15 Years after his Excommunication, recanted what he had ſaid, and ſubſcrib'd whatever they pleas'd. Some days after, a Nephew of his, who lodg'd in his Houſe, inform'd againſt him. This was a Youth, who had taken notice, that his Uncle did not obſerve the Laws of the Synagogue, either in point of Diet, or otherwiſe. This Accuſation was attended with ſtrange Conſequences: For one of Acoſta's Relations, who had reconcil'd him to the Jews, thought himſelf obliged,

Digitized by Google

(c) In the Year 1623.

(d) Entitled, Examen Traditionum Philoſophicarum ad Legem Scriptam.--- The Philoſophical Traditions compared with the written Law. [Perhaps Philoſophicarum is a Miſtake for Phariſaicarum.]

This latter can only inflict Canonical Puniſhments, whereas the Chriſtian Inquiſition can put a Man to Death, for it delivers over to the Secular Sword all thoſe it condemns. Therefore I do not wonder, that Acoſta was leſs afraid of the Jewiſh Inquiſition, than of that of Portugal: He knew that the Synagogue had no Tribunals, which intermeddled with any Proceſs, Civil or Criminal, and therefore look'd upon their Excommunications as a meer brutum Fulmen; he did not find this Canonical Sentence attended either with Death, Whipping, Priſon, or a pecuniary Mulct. Wherefore he thought, that ſince he had Courage enough not to betray his Religion in Portugal, he ought, with much more Reaſon, have the boldneſs to ſpeak, according to his Conſcience, among the Jews, even at the Peril of Excommunication from them; which was all he had to fear from Men, who have no Magiſtrates of their own. "Quia "minimè decebat, ut propter talem metum terga "verteret, ille qui pro libertate natale ſolum, & uti-"litates alias contempſerat; & ſuccumbere hominibus, "præſertim JURISDICTIONEM non habentibus, in "tali cauſa nec pium nec virile erat; decrevi potius "omnia perferre & in ſententia perdurare (8). —— "As it was unbecoming a Perſon to turn his Back "thro' ſuch a Fear; one who had forſaken his na-"tive Land, with all it's Conveniencies, for the ſake "of Liberty; and as, in ſuch a Caſe, it was neither "pious nor manly to ſubmit to Men, eſpecially ſuch "as had no JURISDICTION, I determine rather to "hold it out to the laſt, and to perſiſt in my Opinion,"

(8) Uriel Acoſta, ubi ſupra.

But it fared with him as with moſt People, who judge of complicated Evils. They imagine 'tis in the Union of two or three Puniſhments that a Misfortune conſiſts; and that a Man would deſerve but little Pity, ſhould he ſuffer but one of them; but They Experience the contrary, when Providence expoſes them to but one of theſe two or three Diſgraces. They feel it much heavier than they imagined it would prove. The Inquiſition of Portugal ſeem'd dreadful to the Jew Acoſta: Why ſo? Becauſe he beheld it join'd with the Power, either mediately or immediately, of impriſoning, torturing, and burning, Criminals: If he had conſidered it only with relation to it's Excommunication, he would not have been much afraid of it. This was the Reaſon of his contemning the Menaces of the Synagogue of Amſterdam. But he was ſenſible, by Experience, that the bare Power of Excommunication is very terrible, tho' altogether unaided by the Secular Sword. Every body look'd upon him as a Monſter after his Excommunication: His very Brothers avoided meeting him, and durſt not take notice of him. Ipſi Fratres mei, quibus ego Præceptor fueram, me tranſibant, nec in plateâ ſalutabant, propter metum illorum (9). The Boys hooted at him in the Streets, and loaded him with Curſes; they gathered in Crowds about his Houſe, and threw Stones at his Windows; jamque faces & ſaxa volant, He could not be quiet either at home or abroad. Pueri iſtorum, à Rabinis & parentibus edocti, turmatim per plateas conveniebant, & elatis vocibus mihi maledicebant, & omnigenis contumeliis irritabant, hæreticum & defectorem inclamantes. Aliquando etiam ante fores meas congregabantur, lapides jaciebant, & nihil intentatum relinquebant ut me turbarent, ne tranquillus etiam in domo propria agere poſſem (10). The Evils, to which his Excommunication ſubjected him, were ſo violent, that at laſt he found himſelf unable to ſupport them; for as great an Averſion as he had to the Synagogue, he choſe rather to return to it by a ſeeming Reconciliation, than to be openly ſeparated from it. For this Reaſon, he ſaid to certain Chriſtians, who had a mind to turn Jews, that they did not know what Yoke they were going to ſubmit their Necks to. Neſciebant quale jugum ſuis verticibus imponerent (11). But how great was his Perplexity, when, having refus'd to undergo the ignominious Penance impos'd on him by the Synagogue, he ſaw himſelf ſtill detained by the Bonds of Excommunication? Thoſe, who met him in the Streets, ſpit at him, and Children were taught to do the ſame. Multi eorum tranſeunte me in plateâ ſpuebant, quod etiam & pueri eorum faciebant ab illis edocti; tantum non lapidabar, quia deerat facultas (12). His Relations perſecuted him, and no body would attend him, when he lay ſick. To be ſhort, (9) Acoſta. Exempl. Vitæ Human. pag. 347.

(10) Ibid.

(11) Ibid. pag. 348.

(12) Ibid. pag. 349.

Digitized by Google

obliged, in Honour, to profecute him with the utmoſt Severity [D]. The Rabbies, and all the People under them, were acted by the ſame Spirit, eſpecially when they heard that our Acoſta had diſſwaded two Chriſtians, who were come from London to Amſterdam, from turning Jews. He was ſummon'd before the grand Council of the Synagogue, who declar'd to him they would excommunicate him a ſecond time, if he did not give them the Satisfaction which they ſhou'd require of him. He found the Terms of it ſo very hard, that he anſwer'd, He cou'd not ſubmit to them. Whereupon they reſolv'd to drive him from their Communion; and 'tis impoſſible to relate the many Inſults offer'd him from that time, and how much he was perſecuted by his Relations. Having paſt ſeven Years in this ſad Condition, he reſolv'd to declare, that he was ready to ſubmit to the Sentence of the Synagogue; for they had given him to underſtand, that, by means of this Declaration, he would eaſily come off, becauſe the Judges, being ſatisfy'd with his Submiſſion, would mitigate the Severity of the Diſcipline. But he was deceiv'd, and made to undergo with the utmoſt Rigour the Penance, which they had at firſt impos'd upon him [E]. This is what I have extracted, without any Diſguiſe or Alteration, (and without pretending to warrant the Truth of the matters of Fact) out of a ſmall Piece compos'd by Acoſta (e) and publiſh'd and confuted by Mr Limborch (f). 'Tis thought he writ it ſome few days before his Death, having firſt reſolv'd to lay violent hands upon himſelf. He executed this ſtrange Reſolution a little after he had fail'd in his attempt of ſhooting his principal Antagoniſt as he paſſed by his Door (g); for, his Piſtol miſſing Fire, he lock'd himſelf up, and with another Piſtol ſhot himſelf (h). This happen'd at Amſterdam, though in what Year is not certainly known [F]. This Inſtance favours thoſe, who condemn the Liberty of philoſophizing in Matters of Religion; for the principal ſtreſs of their Arguments lies in this, that ſuch a Method leads a Man inſenſibly either to Atheiſm or Deiſm [G]. I ſhall juſt mention the Reflexion, which

(e) Ex'tid, Exemplar Humanæ Vitæ.

(f) See the Citation (a).

(g) It was either his Brother or his Couſin. Limborch in Præf. ad Exemplar Vitæ.

(h) Limborch, ibid.

ſhort, they tormented him to ſuch a Degree, that at laſt they extorted from him the Submiſſion they deſired. Duravit pugna iſta per annos ſeptem, intra quod tempus incredibilia paſſus ſum (13).——This Struggle continued for ſeven Years, during which I ſuffered incredible Perſecutions. We ſhall ſee in the Remark [E], what kind of Puniſhment they impos'd upon him, He was then more than ever ſenſible, how terrible even thoſe People are, who, without any legal Juriſdiction, inflict the Laws of Diſcipline.

(13) Acoſta, ubi ſupra, pag. 345.

I am cautious of declaring my Approbation of the Reaſons of the Independants; who think it ſo unjuſt, that the Church ſhould arrogate to herſelf the Power of Excommunication, that is, of inflicting Puniſhments, which are ſometimes more ignominious and defaming than a Branding-Iron; and which expoſes a Man to more temporal Misfortunes, than the afflictive Pains which the Civil Magiſtrate impoſes. The Sentence of the Judge does not ſet aſide the Acts and Offices of Humanity, much leſs the Duties of Conſanguinity. But Excommunication often arms Fathers againſt their Children, and Children againſt their Fathers; it ſtifles all the Sentiments of Nature; it breaks the Bonds of Friendſhip and Hoſpitality; and reduces People to the Condition of ſuch as are infected with the Plague, nay ſometimes to a worſe and more abandon'd State.

[D] One of his Relations —— thought himſelf obliged, in Honour, to profecute him with the utmoſt Severity.] Theſe are the ill Offices he did him: Acoſta was upon the point of marrying a ſecond Wife; he had a great many Effects in the Hands of one of his Brothers, and it concerned him very much to continue his Partnerſhip with him. Now this Relation croſs'd him in all theſe Particulars; for he broke off the March, and engaged Acoſta's Brother to detain all his Effects, and to have no more Dealings with him. This Procedure ought to be conſidered as one of the Reaſons, which confirmed Acoſta in his Impiety; for without doubt he perſwaded himſelf, that this Violence and Injuſtice was authorized by ſome Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, wherein the Law commands Brothers, Fathers, and Husbands, not to ſpare the Lives of their Brothers, Children, and Wives, in caſe of Apoſtacy (14). And we muſt take notice, that he made uſe of this as a Proof againſt the Law of Moſes; for he pretended that a Law, which overthrew Natural Religion, could not proceed from God the Author of that Religion (15). For, argued he, Natural Religion eſtabliſhes a Bond of Amity among Relations, &c. See how Mr Limborch has anſwered this Sophiſm (16).

(14) See Deuteronomy, xiii.

(15) Uriel Acoſta, ubi ſupra, pag. 352.

(16) Philip à Limborch in his Confutation of Uriel Acoſta pag. 361, &c.

[E] With the utmoſt Rigour the Penance, which they had at firſt impoſed upon him.] His own Account of it is as follows. A great Crowd of Men and Women being aſſembled in the Synagogue, to ſee this Spectacle, he entered the Place, and, at the time appointed, went up into the Pulpit, and read with a loud Voice a Paper, wherein he acknowledged that he had deſerved Death a thouſand Times, for not keeping either the Sabbath-day, or his promis'd Faith, and for having diſſuaded the Converſion of certain Chriſtians, who were inclined to embrace Judaiſm: That, in Atonement for theſe Crimes, he was ready to ſuffer whatever they ſhould decree, and that he promis'd never to relapſe into the ſame Faults. Being come down from the Pulpit, he was ordered to retire to one of the Corners of the Synagogue, where he ſtripped himſelf naked, from the Waſte upwards, and pulled off his Shoes; then the Door-keeper tied his Hands to one of the Pillars; after which the Maſter-Chanter gave him thirty nine Stripes with a Whip, neither more nor leſs; for in theſe Ceremonies they take care not to exceed the Number, which the Law preſcribes. Next came the Preacher, who ordered him to ſit on the Ground, and declared him abſolved from his Excommunication, and that the Doors of Paradiſe were not ſhut againſt him as before. Et ita jam porta cæli mihi erat aperta, quæ antea fortiſſimis ceris clauſa me à limine & ingreſſu excludebant (17). Acoſta put on his Cloaths again, and went and laid himſelf down flat on his Belly, at the Door of the Synagogue, and all that went out trod over him. I thought the Reader would be pleaſed to find here this ſmall Specimen of Jewiſh Ceremonies (18).

(17) Acoſta, ubi ſupra, pag. 350.

(18) Taken from the Exemplar Humanæ Vitæ of Uriel Acoſta, pag. 349, 350.

[F] Though in what Year is not certainly known.] 'Tis very probable that he kill'd himſelf ſoon after the Ceremony of his Abſolution, enraged at the Treatment he had received, contrary to the Hopes he had entertained of a mitigated Puniſhment. But this will not preciſely determine the time of his Death, becauſe it is not known in what Year he performed this Penance. If it were known how long he had been under Excommunication, when the Phyſician's Book was publiſhed, in 1623, it would not be difficult to make an exact Computation, ſince he obſerves, that his firſt Excommunication laſted fifteen Years; that the ſecond continued ſeven, and ſoon followed the other. It is ſuppoſed, in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, that he killed himſelf in the Year 1647 (19), but others ſay it was in 1640 (20).

(19) Biblioth. Univerſ. Tom. 7. pag. 327.

(20) Joh. Helvicus Willemerus in his Philoſophical Diſſertation concerning the Sadducees, pag. ult. He quotes Mullerus's Judaiſm, Proleg. pag. 71.

[G] That ſuch a Method leads a Man inſenſibly either to Atheiſm or Deiſm.] Acoſta ſerves them for an Example. He would not acquieſce in the Deciſions of the Catholic Church, becauſe he did not find them conformable to his Reaſon; and he embraced Judaiſm, becauſe he found it more agreeable to his Natural Notions. Afterwards he rejected an infinite Number which Acoſta made on the Jews endeavouring to render him the more odious, by affecting to ſay, That he was neither Jew, Chriſtian, nor Mahometan [H].

Digitized by Google

Number of Judaical Traditions, becauſe he thought they were not contained in the Scripture; nay, he rejected the Immortality of the Soul, upon pretence that the Law of God makes no mention of it: And laſtly, he denied the Books of Moſes to be divinely inſpired, becauſe he thought that natural Religion did not agree with the Ordinances of That Legiſlator. Had he lived ſix or ſeven Years longer, he would, perhaps, have denied Natural Religion itſelf, becauſe his wretched ſcanty Reaſon would have puzzled him with Difficulties about the Hypotheſis of Providence, and of the Free Will of the Eternal and Self-exiſtent Being. It is certain, that Mankind, even in making uſe of their Reaſon, ſtand in need of Divine Aſſiſtance; without which it will prove a blind and erroneous Guide: And we may compare Philoſophy to certain Powders ſo very corroſive, that, having conſumed the proud and ſpongy Fleſh of a Wound, they would corrode even the quick and ſound Fleſh, rot the Bones, and penetrate to the very Marrow. Philoſophy is proper at firſt to confute Errors, but if ſhe be not ſtopped there, ſhe attacks Truth itſelf; and when ſhe has her full Scope, ſhe generally goes ſo far, that ſhe loſes herſelf, and knows not where to ſtop. This muſt be imputed either to the Weakneſs of Man's Underſtanding, or to the ill uſe he makes of it's pretended Force. By Good Fortune, or rather through a wiſe Diſpenſation of Providence, there are few Men, who are capable of thus abuſing their Reaſon.

[H] Affected to ſay, that he was neither Jew, Chriſtian, nor Mahometan.] This Accuſation, anſwered he, carries both Malice and Ignorance with it; for, had he been a Chriſtian, they would have looked upon him as an abominable Idolater, who, together with the Founder of Chriſtianity, deſerved to be puniſhed by the true God, as an Apoſtate. If he had followed the Religion of Mahomet, they would not have made him leſs odious: Therefore he had no way of eſcaping the Laſh of their Tongues, but by devoutly addicting himſelf to the Phariſaical Traditions. Let us conſider his own Words: " Scio adverſarios iſtos, ut nomen meum coram indocta plebe dilanient, ſolitos eſſe dicere, iſte nullam habet religionem, Judæus non eſt, non Chriſtianus, non Mahometanus. Vide prius, Phariſæe, quid dicas, cœcus enim es, & licet malitiâ abundes, tamen ſicut cœcus impingis. Quæſo, dic mihi, ſi ego Chriſtianus eſſem, quid tuiſſes dicturus? Planum eſt, dicturum te, fœdiſſimum me eſſe idololatram, & cum Jeſu Nazareno Chriſtianorum doctore pœnas vero Deo ſoluturum, à quo defeceram. Si Mahometanus eſſem, norunt etiam omnes quibus me honoribus fuiſſes cumulaturus: & ita nunquam linguam tuam poſſem evadere; unicum hoc effugium habens, nempe ad genua tua procumbere, fœdiſſimos pedes tuos, tuas inquam nefarias & pudendas inſtitutiones, oſculari (21). —— I know that my Adverſaries, in order to blacken my Name in the Sight of the ill-judging Vulgar, were wont to ſay, This Man has no Religion; He is neither Jew, Chriſtian, nor Mahometan. Conſider firſt, thou Phariſee, what thou ſayeſt; for thou art blind, and, in ſpight of thy abundant Malice, thou ſtumbleſt like a blind Man. Pray tell me, if I were a Chriſtian, what would you ſay? It is certain you would call me a vile Idolater, and condemn me, together with Jeſus of Nazareth, the Teacher of the Chriſtians, to expiate by Puniſhment my Apoſtacy from the True God. Were I a Mahometan, every one knows with what kind of Honours you would load me. Thus I could never eſcape your Cenſure: One way indeed there is; namely to fall down at your Knees, and kiſs your filthy Feet, I mean your wicked and ſhameful Inſtitutions." He makes uſe of another Anſwer: For he asks his Adverſaries, whether, beſides the three Religions they have mentioned, (and of which the two laſt were, in their Opinion, not ſo much Religion, as an Apoſtacy from God) they acknowledge any other? He ſuppoſes that they acknowledge Natural Religion as true, and as a Means of rendering us acceptable to God, and ſufficient to ſave all Nations, the Jews excepted. 'Tis That, he tells them, which is contained in the ſeven Precepts, which Noah, and his Deſcendants down to Abraham, obſerved. Then, ſaid he, according to yourſelves, there is a Religion, on which I may depend, although I deſcend from the Jews; and if my Prayers cannot engage you to give me leave to mingle with the Crowd of other Nations, yet I ſhall not fail to aſſert this Liberty to myſelf. Upon which he launches out in the Praiſes of Natural Religion.

(21) Acoſta, ibid. pag. 351.

How much the Notion of Neutrality in Matters of Religion, offends and provokes the Minds of Men.

By the firſt of his Anſwers we may plainly ſee, that the Objection of the Jews was more ſpecious than ſtrong; more glittering than ſolid; more proper to ſerve their own Ends, than agreeable to the exact Rules of Argumentation; and at the bottom ſomewhat fallacious. What makes it look plauſible and ſpecious is This: The Mind of Man is ſo contrived, that, at the firſt Impreſſion, a Neutrality in the Worſhip of God is more ſhocking to him than a Falſe Worſhip; and therefore, when he hears of any one's abandoning the Religion of his Fathers, without embracing another, he is ſeized with more Horror, than if he were told that ſuch an one had quitted a better Religion for a worſe. This firſt Impreſſion dazzles and affects him to ſuch a Degree, that he makes it his Standard to judge of ſuch Perſons by; and his Reſentment is thereby proportionably raiſed. He does not allow himſelf time maturely to examine, whether in reality it is better to liſt one's ſelf under the Devil's Banner, in ſome of thoſe Falſe Religions, which That Enemy of God and Man has introduced, than to obſerve a Neutrality. Therefore we may imagine, that the Phariſees, who perſecuted Acoſta, laid ſo much ſtreſs upon their Objection, only becauſe they found it proper to ſtartle and confound the People, and to engage the Chriſtians in their Quarrel. I confeſs they would not have made ſo much Buſtle, had he embraced Chriſtianity at Amſterdam or Mahometaniſm at Conſtantinople; but, in effect, they would not have accounted him leſs abandoned, leſs damned, or leſs an Apoſtate: Their Temper would have been owing to their Policy, and the effect of their juſt Fear of the Reſentment of the Religion Eſtabliſhed. If we judge from the firſt Impreſſions of Things upon us, there are but few Proteſtants who, upon the News that Titius had left the Profeſſion of the Reformed Religion, without embracing any other Perſuaſion, would not aſſert that he was more criminal than if he had turned Papiſt: But I would fain ask theſe Proteſtants, Have you good Ground for This? Have you well examined what you would ſay, in caſe he were become a great Bigot to Popery; if you ſhould ſee him loaded with Relicks, running mad after Proceſſions, and, in ſhort, practiſing all the Extravagancies of Idolatrous and Superſtitious Monks? Could you anſwer, that you would ſtill ſay the ſame, if you ſhould be informed that he was turned Jew or Mahometan, or a Worſhipper of the Pagods of China? To repeat it once more, the Mind of Man is thus contrived; the firſt thing, that ſtrikes it, is the Rule of it's Paſſions: We lay hold of the preſent Circumſtance, and do not conſider what we ſhould ſay in another Conjuncture. This private Perſon has left us, and has embraced no other Sect: we muſt attack him on this ſide. —— His Indifference is now his greateſt Crime; but if he were turned Heathen, we ſhould attack him on that ſide too, and we ſhould ſay, at leaſt we ſhould think, if he had but ſtood Neuter, and attach'd himſelf in general to the Religion of Nature, it were ſomething; but, as it is, &c.

By the ſecond Anſwer, Acoſta deprived his Adverſaries of a great Advantage; for he ſheltered himſelf againſt that ſtrong Battery, It is better to be of a falſe Religion than of none. However, upon the whole, we muſt conclude, that he was of a deteſtable Character, and a Genius ſo ill turned, that he miſerably loſt himſelf in the Labyrinths of his miſtaken Philoſophy.

ACRONIUS (JOHN), taught Mathematics and Phyſic at Baſil, with a great deal of Reputation, and compos'd ſome Books, De Terræ motu; de Sphæra; de Aſtrolabii & Annuli Aſtronomici confectione. He was of Friezland, and died at Baſil in the Flower of his Age, in the Year 1563. This Author has escap'd the Diligence of Vossius (a) though Swertius, and Valerius Andreas had given him a Place in their Bibliotheque of the Netherlands; wherein however they have forgot to insert another JOHN ACRONIUS, who was a Minister, and perhaps a Native of the same Province with the former. This Minister was of a Restless, Seditious, Spirit; he abandon'd the Congregation of Wesel, at a time when she was threatened with an imminent Danger; They found, at Deventer, that they could not chuse him Pastor of their Church, without admitting at the same time a very disagreeable Member into their Society; He left the Church of Groningen with disgrace; and at Franeker he discover'd his want of Abilities to discharge the Trust of Professor of Divinity, into which he had intruded. Lastly, he was Minister at Haerlem, where he behav'd himself as usual; that is, he contradicted, oppos'd, and censur'd every one, without distinction. The Historiographer of That City does not deny him the Character of a very Learned Man, but gives him at the same time That of a Turbulent Spirit (b). Some have compared him to Heshusius, against whom the following Distich was handed about,

Digitized by Google

(a) He makes no mention of him in his Book De Scientiis Mathematicis.

(b) Theodorus Schrevelius.

Quæritur, Heshusi, quarta cur pulsus ab urbe?
In promptu causa est, seditiosus eras.

The Cause, Heshusius, of thy Exile's known;
Thou wert a Mover of Sedition grown.

Acronius wrote in Flemish a Book de Jure Patronatus, wherein he inserted several Quotations from the Canon-Law (c). I am inclin'd to ascribe to him the Elenchus Orthodoxus pseudo-religionis Romano-Catholicæ, printed at Deventer in 1615. He may very well be the Author of the Treatise, De studio Theologico, which Mr Konig attributes to Him, who wrote about the Sphere. The same Konig speaks of one RUARDUS ACRONIUS, who publish'd some Catechetical Expositions in 1606. He might have added, that, in the beginning of the Troubles of Arminianism, he wrote something against the Arminian Hypothesis, concerning the Power of Magistrates in Matters of Religion; and that 'twas He, who publish'd a Sermon, which Uytembogard had preach'd at the Hague before the Troubles, much different from the Doctrine, which he afterwards maintain'd, in relation to the same Question (d). Ruardus Acronius was one of the six Advocates for the Reform'd against the Arminians, in the Famous Conference held at the Hague in 1611.

(c) See Martin Schoockius. Exercitat. sacr. pag. 255. Edit. in 4to.

(d) Ex Voetii Polit. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 126.

ACTOR [A] is the Name of several Persons mention'd in Fabulous History. I. It is the Name of one of Hercules's Companions in the Amazonian War, who having receiv'd a Wound, resolv'd to return home, and died by the way (a). II. It is also the Name of Patroclus's Grandfather; for Menetius, Patroclus's Father, was Son of ACTOR and Ægina. This Actor was a Locrian, according to some (b), but he settled himself in the Island of OEnone, after having married Ægina, Daughter to the River Asopus, by whom he had Menetius. Others say, that he was a Thessalian, Son of Myrmidon, who was Son of Jupiter (c), and that the Nymph Ægina having already had a Son by Jupiter, call'd Æacus, went into Thessaly, where Actor made no scruple to marry her, notwithstanding the Apprenticeship she had serv'd in Matters of Love (d). He had by her several Children, who conspir'd against him, which oblig'd him to send them into Exile, and bestow his Kingdom upon Peleus, with his Daughter Polymele. Peleus was Son to Æacus, and consequently Ægina's Grandson, and had fled for Sanctuary to Phthia, where Actor reigned; thither, I say, he fled, after he had kill'd his Brother Phocus. III. There was likewise one ACTOR, Son of Hippasus, who sail'd with the Argonauts (f). IV. Another, who was Son of Neptune and Agamede [B], Daughter of Augeus (g). V. Another, who was Son of Axeus [C], and Father

(a) Charles Stephens in his Historical Dictionary.

(b) Scholiast on Homer. in Il. 18.

(c) Eustath. in Iliad. 1. Schol. Apollon. in lib. 4.

(d) Scholiast on Pind. in Olymp. 9.

(e) Eustath. in Iliad. 2.

(f) Hygin. cap. 14.

(g) Id. cap. 157.

[A] ACTOR.] Mr Moreri has, without any reason, changed this Word into Actorius; but this is a small Fault in comparison of that, into which he falls some few Lines after, when, by these Words, Quæ fuit Actoridæ cum magno semper Achilla, he pretends to prove, that Ovid, from whom he quotes them, has made mention of one Actorius. How came he not to see, that there is no mention made in that Passage of any Person called either Actorius or Actorides, but only of Patroclus, whom the Poets, for the sake of Versification, are used to denote by the Patronymic ACTORIDES, i. e. descended from ACTOR?

[B] Son of Neptune and Agamede.] Munkcerus in his Commentary upon the 157th Fable of Hyginus, pretends that Homer's Scholiast makes this Actor Son of Neptune and Moliones; but the Scholiast says no such thing. Homer, in the 749th Verse of the 11th Iliad, mentions two Brothers whom he calls Ἀκτορίωνε Μολίονε, Actorionas Molionas. Whereupon his Scholiast says, that by these Words we must understand Cteatus and Eurytus, Sons of Actor and Moliones; or, according to some, of Molione and Neptune. Homer thought them Sons of That God, for he adds, That they would have been slain, had not Neptune, their Father, succoured them in the Engagement, by covering them with a thick Mist.

Ἐι μὴ ὄφρα πατὴρ εὐρυκρείων Ἐνοσίχθων
Ἐκ πολέμυ ἐσάωσε, καλύψας ἠέρι πολλῇ (1).

(1) Homer. Iliad. lib. 13. ver. 750.

Neptune, their Sire, to save his Offspring, shrouds
The youthful Heroes in a Veil of Clouds.

[C] Who was Son of Axeus.] Homer calls him Axeus, Οὓς τέκεν Ἀξυόχη δέμω Ἀκτορος Ἀζείδαο (2).

(2) Id. Iliad. lib. 2.

Meziriac remarks a Fault (3) of the Author of the Great Etymologicum, who thought that the same Actor,

(3) Upon Ovid's Epistles pag. 44.

Digitized by Google

Father of Astyoch, (h), by whom the God Mars had two Sons, who at the Siege of Troy commanded the Forces of Aspledon, and Orchomenus, two Towns of Bœotia. VI. Another ACTOR, Son of Phorbas, built a Town in Elis, his Native Countrey, which he call'd Hyrmine, after his Mother's Name (i). Augias King of Elis, who according to some, was his Brother (k), and whose Stables, clean'd by Hercules, have made so much noise, associated both him and his two Sons in his Kingdom (l). His two Sons were call'd Eurytus and Cteatus, and poetically Molionides, because their Mother's Name was Molione; see the Article MOLIONIDES. VII. Lastly, there was one ACTOR, describ'd as an Hero of the first Rate among the Aurunci [D].

(h) Homer. Iliad. 2. Pausan. in Bœot.

(i) Pausan. lib. 5. pag. 148.

(k) Apollodor. Bibl. lib. 2. pag. 138. Edit. Salmur.

(l) Pausan. ubi supra.

Actor, mentioned here by Homer, was the Father of Patroclus. 'Tis what Homer never meant. He speaks of one Actor a Bœotian, Grandson to Erginus, and Great-Grandson to Clymenus. Meziriac quotes for this Pedigree Eustathius upon the second Iliad, and Pausanias in his Bœotics; but Pausanias makes Clymenus Grandfather to Actor, but not Great-Grandfather (4).

(4) Pausan. lib. 9. pag. 311.

[D] One Actor, described as an Hero of the first Rate among the Aurunci.] He is thus described by Virgil, in the twelfth Book of the Æneid:

—— Validam vi corripit hastam,
Actoris Aurunci spolium, quassatque trementem,
Vociferans: Nunc O nunquam frustrata vocatus
Hasta meos, nunc tempus adest: te maximus Actor,
Te Turni nunc dextra gerit —— (5).

(5) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 12. pag. 93. &c.

He seiz'd the Launce Arunican Actor wore;
Which with such Force he brandish'd in his Hand,
The tough Ash trembled like an Osier Wand.
Then cry'd, O ponderous Spoil of Actor slain,
And never yet by Turnus toss'd in vain,
Fail not this Day thy wonted Force. ——

DRYDEN.

ACTUARIUS [A], a Greek Physician, of whom there are extant several Works [B]. Ambrosius Leo of Nola, who has translated some of them, and gives him great Commendations, owns that he could not discover who he was, nor of what Country (a). Peter Castellan, in his Lives of Illustrious Physicians, and Wolfgang Justus in his Chronology of Physicians, confess the same thing (b). Mr Moreau, in his Treatise of Bleeding in the Pleurisy, believes that he liv'd about the Year 1100 [C].

(a) Apud Gesner. Bibl. fol. 3. verso.

(b) See Mercklinus in his Lindenius Renovatus, pag. 6.

[A] Actuarius.] Some call him John, Son of Zacharias (1); others chose rather to make him Son of John Zacharias (2). Vossius, who approves the latter, in the thirteenth Chapter of his Book, De Philosophia, mentions a little after one John Actuarius, who lived in the Time of Constantine Ducas (3), as is inferred from his having a Sister, upon whom Michael Psellus composed a Monody. If it should happen, that This John Actuarius did not differ from the Physician here in question, Vossius will have been in the wrong to distinguish them, and not to give the Physician the Name of John: But by the Remark [C] it will appear, that there's little likelihood of their being the same Person. Mr Du Cange shews, that the Title of Actuarius denotes a particular Dignity belonging only to the Physicians at the Court of Constantinople; and he confesses he is ignorant of the Reason of it, notwithstanding all the Enquiries of Father Pontsines. He owns also, that he does not know, whether our Actuarius, whom he calls John, Son of Zacharias, was in possession of that Dignity (4).

(1) Hyde's Catal. Bibl. Oxon. & Mercklinus in Lindenius renovato.

(2) Gesner's Bibl. and his Abridgers.

(3) He began to reign in 1059.

(4) Glossar. Græc. pag. 46.

[B] Of whom there are extant several Works.] They were printed at Paris, in a Volume in Folio, by Henry Stephens in the Year 1567. having been printed before in another Place in three Volumes in 8vo. They have likewise been printed singly more than once. The chief of them are, De actionibus & affectibus spiritus animalis ejusque nutritione, Libri II. De Urinis, Libri VII. first translated into Latin by Ambrosius Leo, and printed at Venice in 1519. and afterwards revised and illustrated with Notes, by James Goupil. De Medicamentorum Compositione: Ruel has translated this Treatise. Methodi Medendi Libri VI. translated by Henry Mathisius of Bruges, and printed at Venice in 1554 (5).

(5) See Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato, pag. 6, 7.

[C] That he lived about the Year 1100.] Mr du Cange durst not place him in the Reign of Alexis (6), although his Book, De affectibus Spiritus Animalis, is dedicated to Joseph Racendytes; and though Nicetas, in the third Book of the History of Alexis, n. 5. speaks of one Racendytes. He approves what Lambecius decided concerning this Physician's Time (7), which is, that he lived in the Reign of Andronicus the Elder; because in the Manuscript of one of his Books, which is in the Emperor's Library, there is a Title, which shews that it is dedicated to Apocauchus. But we know that Apocauchus lived under That Andronicus. Mr du Cange observes, that Actuarius relates in the beginning of his Method of Cures, that the Emperor his Master sent him to the Hyperborean Scythians. Mr Moreau is therefore a little out in his Reckoning; for Andronicus the Elder did not begin his Reign before the Year 1332.

(6) He means, but he had done better to have expressed it, Alexis Angelus who began to reign in the Year 1195.

(7) De Bibl. Cæsar. lib. 6. pag. 713.

ACŪNA (a) (CHRISTOPHER) a Spanish Jesuit, born at Burgos, enter'd into the Society in the Year 1612, at 15 Years of Age. After having spent some Years in Study, he went into America, and labour'd to convert the Natives of the Kingdoms of Chili, and Peru, and was Professor of Moral Divinity. He return'd to Spain in the Year 1640, and gave the King his Master an Account of the Commission he had receiv'd to examine the River of the Amazons. The following Year he publish'd a Relation of that River at Madrid. He was sent to Rome in the Quality of Procurator of his Province; and having pass'd into Spain, honour'd with the Title of Qualificator of the Inquisition, he return'd to the West Indies. He was at Lima, when Father Sotuel, from whom I have extracted this Account, publish'd the Bibliotheca of the Jesuit Authors at Rome in the Year 1675. The Relation of our d'Acuna is entituled, Nuevo descrubimiento del gran rio de las Amazonas. A New Description of the great River of the Amazons. The Author was ten Months successively on that River, and had Orders to inform himself exactly of the State of it, that the King might be enabled to make the Navigation of it easy and commodious. For this purpose, he embark'd at Quito (b) with Peter Texeira, who had advanc'd thus far up the River, and whom they thought proper to send back again thither. They embark'd in the Month of February 1639 [A]; and did not arrive at Para, till the Month

(a) It is pronounced Acugna, but the Spaniards write Acuña.

(b) It is a City of Peru.

[A] In the Month of February 1639.] I own freely, that I have not by me the Relation of Father Christopher de Acuña *; and therefore I take this Date from Mr Chevreau, and prefer it to the Month of January, the Spaniards do not put an Apostrophe between the Article de, and a proper Name which begins with a Vowel.

* I don't call him d'Acuña; for I have observ'd in D. Nic. Antonio, that

Digitized by Google

Month of December following. It is believ'd that the Revolutions of Portugal, which made the Spaniards loſe all Brazil, and the Colony of Para at the Mouth of the River of the Amazons, were the cauſe that the Relation of this Jeſuit was ſuppreſs'd (c), for fear that, being uſeleſs to the Spaniards, it might become ſervicable to the Portugueſe. The Copies of it became very ſcarce, inſomuch that the Publiſhers of the French Tranſlation at Paris (d) declar'd that there remain'd no more of them, except that which the Tranſlator had made uſe of, which is perhaps That of the Vatican. Mr de Gomberville is the Author of this French Verſion, but it was not publiſh'd till after his Death; and a long Diſſertation is added to it, which deſerves the peruſal. The Relation itſelf likewiſe is well worth reading. Thoſe who have it not, may meet with a Specimen of it in the Journal of Paris (e), in that of Leipſic (f), and in Mr Chevreau's Hiſtory (g).

(c) See the Preface to the French Tranſlation.

(d) In 1682, in 12*mo.*

(e) Of the 19*th of* April, 1683.

(f) Pag. 323. Anno 1083.

(g) In Tom. 4. pag. 171. Edit. of Holland.

January, noted in the Journal of Leipſic; becauſe the Faults, which the Printers of that Journal have committed in the foregoing Page, give me ſome Reaſon to diſtruſt them. I find at Page 324. of That Journal, that the Governor of Braſil cauſed Peter Texeira to go up the River of the Amazons in the Year 1639. and that Texeira could not arrive at Quito in leſs than a Year's time (1). He did not therefore embark again at Quito in the Month of January 1639. as is aſſerted at Page 325. Mr Chevreau is more to be credited, when he declares, that Peter Texeira departed in the Month of October 1637. and gave an Account of his Voyage to the Viceroy of Peru (2), in September of the Year 1638. Mr Chevreau (3) does not name the Author of the Relation right, for he calls him Chriſtopher d'Alcuna.

(1) Ada Erudit. Lipſ. Ann. 1683.

(2) He was called the Count de Chincon.

(3) Chevr. Hiſtory of the World, Tom. 4. pag. 171.

ADA, Daughter of Hecatomnus (a), and Siſter of Artemiſia, Queen of Caria, married her own Brother Idrieus, and reign'd with him in Caria, after the Death of Artemiſia, who ſurviv'd her Huſband Mauſolus but two Years (b). Idrieus reign'd ſeven Years [A], and died of a Diſtemper, without leaving any Poſterity. His Widow, having reign'd about four Years, was dethron'd, by Pexodares her younger Brother (c), who, to maintain his Uſurpation, allied himſelf to a Perſian Lord, whoſe Name was Orontobates, to whom he gave his Daughter in Marriage [B]. Her Name was Ada, as was That of the dethron'd Queen; and her Mother's Name was Aphneis, Daughter of Synneſis, King of Cappadocia. Orontobates ſucceeded his Father-in-Law in the Kingdom, at the end of ſix Years, and defended Halicarnaſſus againſt Alexander (d). The Revolutions of thoſe Times were favourable to Ada. She implor'd that Conqueror's Protection againſt the Uſurper, deliver'd the City of Alinda to him, which continu'd faithful to her, and promis'd to endeavour to make him Maſter of many others (e). Alexander gave her a very kind Reception, and reeſtabliſh'd her in her former Authority over all Caria, after having ſubdued the City of Halicarnaſſus. Out of Gratitude for his Favours, ſhe ſent him all kind of Refreſhments, Comfits, Paſtry, and delicate Meats, with the beſt Cooks ſhe could find: But he return'd her for anſwer, that he had no occaſion for ſuch Things, and that his Governor Leonidas had already provided him with more excellent Cooks, in teaching him, that to dine with Appetite, he muſt riſe early and walk; and that to make a good Supper, he muſt eat but a ſlender Dinner (f).

(a) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 452.

(b) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 16. I take the Duration of the other Reigns from him.

(c) Strabo, & Diodorus, ibid.

(d) Arrian. lib. 1.

(e) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 17. Strabo, ibid.

(f) Plut. in Alexandr. pag. 677.

[A] Idrieus reigned ſeven Years.] Diodorus Siculus tells us this (1). Mr Chevreau, who has converted the Years into Months (2), would perhaps have had more Reaſon to lengthen the time, than he had to ſhorten it; for Idrieus was yet living, when Iſocrates wrote his Philippic. Now if we believe Hermippus (3), he compoſed it a little before his own Death, and That of Philip: So that Philip muſt have lived 'till the tenth Olympiad, ſeeing Iſocrates died a few Days after the Battel of Chæronea, which was fought in the ſecond Year of the tenth Olympiad, about two Years after the Death of Philip. Becauſe therefore the Reign of Idrieus did not begin 'till about the third Year of the hundred and ſeventh Olympiad, (for I have ſhewn in the Remarks on the Article ARTEMISIA, that her Husband Mauſolus, whom ſhe ſurvived two Years, did not die 'till the end of the hundred and ſixth: the ſeven Years which Diodorus gives him, are not ſufficient. Yet I believe his Chronology is more to be depended upon than that of Hermippus. Where would Hermippus place the Reign of Ada, and that of Pexodares, whereof the one continued four Years, and the other ſix, and both of which preceded the Expedition of Alexander?

(1) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 16.

(2) Chevr. Hiſt. du Monde, Tom. 4. pag. 33. Edit. Holl.

(3) See the Summary of this Harangue.

[B] He gave his Daughter in Marriage.] Valeſius thought that Philip King of Macedon demanded this Daughter of Pexodares for his Brother Arideus, and cites Plutarch for it (4). But that Hiſtorian does not tell us, whether the Daughter of Pexodares, of whom he makes mention, was called Ada; but it may very well be inferred from his ſaying, that ſhe was the Eldeſt (5), for we know beſides, that Orontobates, having married a Daughter of Pexodares, thought himſelf lawful Poſſeſſor of the Kingdom of Caria. So far then Valeſius ſeems to me to be in the right; but he had no reaſon to ſay, that Philip deſired that Alliance for his Brother Arideus; Pexodares firſt offered it, and ſent Ambaſſadors to Philip for that Purpoſe. On the other ſide, Arideus was not the Brother, but the Son of Philip. Plutarch ſays it expreſſly. He adds a Circumſtance, which affords us a remarkable Inſtance of the Intrigues of Courts. Alexander's Friends alarmed him on the Propoſals of Pexodares's Ambaſſador: They ſuggeſted to him, that Philip's Aim in this Alliance was to put Arideus in a better Capacity of ſucceeding to the Kingdom. Alexander, to ward againſt this Blow, diſpatched a Perſon to Pexodares, to repreſent to him, that he ought rather to caſt his Eyes on Alexander, than on Arideus, who was a Baſtard, and almoſt a Fool. Pexodares did not heſitate in his Choice; but Philip, diſcovering what was carrying on, reproved Alexander ſharply, telling him he would ſhew himſelf unworthy of being his Succeſſor, if he was ſatisfied with the Daughter of a Carian, and Vaſſal of a Barbarian Prince. At the ſame time he exil'd all his Son's Confidents, and writ to the Corinthians to ſend him the Meſſenger, bound Hand and Foot, whom Alexander had ſent to Caria. He was a Comedian, whoſe Name was Theſſalus.

(4) Valeſii [illegible] Harpocrat. pag. 99.

(5) Plutarch. in Alexand. pag. 669.

ADAM,

Digitized by Google

ADAM, the Stock and Father of all Mankind, was produc'd immediately by God on the Sixth Day of the Creation. His Body having been form'd of the Duſt of the Earth [A], God breath'd into his Noſtrils the Breath of Life; that is to ſay, he animated him, and made him that Compound Creature, which we call Man, comprehending an Organized Body, and a Rational Soul. The ſame Divine Being, which produc'd Adam, plac'd him a fine Garden (a), and, to give him an opportunity of impoſing Names on the Brute Creation, he caus'd them all to appear before him. Afterwards he caus'd a Deep Sleep to fall on Adam, and took out of him a Rib [B], of which he form'd Woman. Adam knew that This Woman was Bone of his Bone, and Fleſh of his Fleſh; and liv'd with her, without any Shame on account of their being naked. There was a Tree in the Garden, of which God had forbid them to eat, on pain of Death. Yet the Woman, ſeduced by a Serpent (b), did not abſtain from eating of it, and perſuaded Adam to eat of it likewiſe. From that time they perceived that they were naked [C], and made themſelves Aprons with Fig-leaves ſewed together. God came and pronounced on them the Puniſhment, which he reſolv'd to inflict upon them, drove them out of the Garden, and made them Cloaths of Skins. Adam called his Wife Eve, and conſummated his Marriage. He became the Father of Cain, and of Abel, and afterwards of Seth, and of many other Sons and Daughters, the Names whereof are not known, and died at the Age of 930 Years (c). This is all that is certain in this matter. A great number of other things, which have been related of him, are either very falſe, or very uncertain; it is true, we may judge of ſome, that they are not contrary to the Analogy of Faith, nor to Probability. I place in this rank what is ſaid of his prodigious Knowledge [D]: We read indeed nothing in Geneſis, but what is leſs proper to (a) It is commonly called the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, and the Garden of Eden.

(b) See the Remarks on the Article EVE, concerning this Serpent.

(c) See the firſt Five Chapters of Geneſis.

(1) Garaſſe's Curious Doctrine, pag. 232.

[A] Of the Duſt of the Earth.] If we may believe Father Garaſſe (1), Photius reports, the Egyptian Tradition, That Wiſdom laid an Egg in the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, out of which came our firſt Parents like a couple of Chickens. I believe Photius has ſaid no ſuch thing, and I am much miſtaken, if it be not a licentious Paraphraſe of that Jeſuit, forged on what Photius relates concerning a certain Mariner, whoſe Name was Oé, whom ſome made to iſſue ἐκ τοῦ πρωτογόνου Ὠοῦ (2), that is, according to Father Garaſſe in another Book (3), of the Race of the firſt Man, whoſe Name was Oon (Egg): Or, according to Father Schottus, è primo parente Ὠου. Many Enquiries might be made about this Egg, which ſerved, according to the Doctrine of the Ancients, for the Generation of Things, when the Chaos was reduced into order. We ſhall touch upon ſome Particulars of it under the Word ARIMANIUS.

(2) Phot. ex Heſiadio, Biblioth. pag. 1583. n. 279.

(3) Theologica l Summary, pag. 26. where he reports this with many Alterations.

[B] And took out of him a Rib.] A modern Author (4), deſigning to ſhew, that the Roman Catholics are in the wrong to think themſelves more learned than the Proteſtants, reproaches them, among other Miſtakes, with that of a Preacher (5), who ſaid that Adam was form'd of one of Eve's Ribs. He reported, that a Philoſopher having propoſed theſe three Queſtions to Theodorus, a Diſciple of St Pacomus; What Man is he, who was not born, yet is dead? What Man is he, who was born, yet did not die? And, What Man is he, who was both born and died, yet is not rotten? Had for Anſwer, that the three Perſons in Queſtion were Adam, Enoch, and Lot's Wife. Adam was not born, added the Preacher, for he was form'd of one of Eve's Ribs. His Sermon was printed at Vienna, in Auſtria, in the Year 1654, with the Approbation of the Sub-Dean of the Profeſſors in Divinity, who was at that time Father Leonard Bachin, a Jeſuit. That Approver declares, that he read the Book, and that he found nothing in it contrary to Faith, or Manners: A Proof of the little Attention wherewith Cenſors of Books examine certain Manuſcripts.

(4) Daniel Francus, de indicib. Libror. prohibit. Epiſt. Dedicat.

(5) His Name is Florentine Schilling, Regular Clerk of St Paul, and a Barnabite.

[C] They perceived that they were naked.] The Scripture ſays, that their Eyes were opened. This Expreſſion made ſome People believe that Adam and Eve were blind, till they had tranſgreſs'd the Commandment of God. "Neque enim cœci creati erant, "ut imperitum vulgus opinatur (6).——For they were "not created blind, as the ill-judging Vulgar think." St Auſtin refutes this Miſtake very ſtrongly, in ſeveral Parts of his Writings (7), and tells us, that this opening of our firſt Parents Eyes conſiſted in their being ſenſible of certain corporeal Motions, which they were ignorant of before; and that it was this, which inſpired them with Shame. "Extitit in motu corporis quædam "impudens novitas, unde eſſet indecens nuditas, & fe-"cit attentos, reddiditque confuſos (8). —— There "was a certain impudent Novelty in the Motion of "their Bodies; whence Nakedneſs became indecent; "and which excited their Attention, and put them to "the bluſh."

(6) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei. lib. 14. cap. 17.

(7) Ibid. & lib. 11. de Geneſi ad liter. cap. 31. & lib. 1. de Nupt. & Concupiſc. cap. 5. & lib. 1. Locutionum in Geneſ. n. 9. & lib. 2. de Peccat. Merit. & Remiſſ. cap. 22.

(8) Ibid. de Civit. Dei, lib. 14. cap. 17.

[D] What is ſaid of his prodigious Knowledge.] Mr Moreri is not contented with affirming in general, that Adam had a perfect Knowledge of Sciences, and chiefly of Aſtrology, of which he taught his Children ſeveral curious Secrets; he adds alſo, that Joſephus ſays, that Adam ingraved ſome Obſervations he had made on the Courſe of the Stars on two different Tables. I have ſearch'd for this in Joſephus, but find only, that the Deſcendants of Seth, the Son of Adam, invented Aſtronomy, and cauſed their Inventions to be engraven on a Pillar of Brick, and a Pillar of Stone, to preſerve them from the general Deſtructions, which, according to the Predictions of Adam, were to happen, once by Fire, and once by a Deluge (9). When a Perſon is capable of falſifying in this Manner an Author, whom he cites, he ſeldom regards the Words of his Evidence ſo cloſely, as to make them ſay nothing, but what they really depoſe; ſo that I do not wonder, that Mr Moreri attributes to our firſt Father the Impoſition of Names on Plants; I ſay I do not wonder at it, though the Scripture makes him only Author of the Names of Beaſts. They, who infer from this Impoſition of Names, that Adam was a great Philoſopher, do not deſerve to be refuted. To return to the prodigious Knowledge attributed to Adam; I ſay, that, according to the common Opinion (10), he knew more the very firſt Day of his Life, than any Man beſides can learn by long Experience. Scarce any thing, beſides future Events, the Thoughts of the Heart, and one Part of individual Beings, eſcaped his Knowledge. Cajetanus, who ventures to rob him of the perfect Knowledge of the Stars, and of the Elements, was much cenſured for it. Some, having made it a Queſtion, whether Solomon ought not to be excepted out of the general Poſition, which gives the Preference to Adam's Knowledge, above That of all other Mortals, have been reduced to acknowledge, That Adam was more knowing than Solomon. It is true, Pinedo excepts Politics; but no Regard is paid to his particular Opinion; and it is determined, that the ſpeculative Underſtanding of the firſt Man was endow'd with all the Philoſophical and Mathematical Knowledge, which human Nature is naturally capable of; and that his practical Underſtanding poſſeſt a conſummate Prudence, with reſpect to every thing which Men ought to do, either in a private or public Capacity; and, beſides, contain'd all moral Sciences, and all the liberal Arts, Rhetoric, Poetry, Painting, Sculpture, Agriculture, Writing, &c. Every one knows, with what Emulation Mankind have ſtrove to heap Praiſes upon Ariſtotle. Every Idea, and every Compariſon had been exhauſted, when a good Carthuſian, being willing to outdo the moſt extravagant of all his Panegyriſts, maintained, That

(9) Joſephi Antiquitat. lib. 1. cap. 2.

(10) See Salian's Annals Tom. 1. pag. 107, 113.

Digitized by Google

to give us this Notion, than the contrary; and yet it is very probable, that Adam came out of the hands of his Creator endued with innate Science, and that he did not loſe it by Sin; as the bad Angels are not become leſs knowing ſince their Fall, and as the Crimes of Learned Perſons do not deprive them of that Knowledge they enjoy'd before. What ſome affirm concerning the Beauty of Adam [E], may be alſo plac'd in the rank of probable things; but it is altogether falſe that he was created of both Sexes [F]. It is a groſs miſtake of the words of Scripture (d) to imagine any ſuch thing. The Revelations of Antoinette Bourignon [G], would be improperly

(3) So God created Man in his own Image, in the Image of God created he him, Male and Female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

Ariſtotle's Learning was as extenſive as That of Adam (11). Some Rabins have been ſatisfy'd with equalling the firſt Man to Moſes and Solomon, in point of Learning (12); but others have maintained, that he excelled the Angels themſelves, and have alledged the Teſtimony of God himſelf, in proof of it (13). They ſay, that the Angels having ſpoke of Man with ſome Diſdain, when God conſulted them on his Creation, God anſwered them, That Man was more knowing than they; and, to convince them of it, he preſented all kinds of Beaſts to them, and ask'd them their Names. They could not tell what to anſwer; and then he ask'd the ſame Queſtion of Man, who named them all after each other; and being interrogated, what ſhould be his own Name, and what was God's Name; he anſwered right, and gave to God the Name of Jehovah. According to the ſame Rabins, the meaning of this Aphoriſm of their Doctors, that Adam's Stature extended from one end of the World to the other, is, that he knew all things (14).

(11) Henry de Haſſia. He lived in the beginning of the XVIth Century.

(12) See Rivinus's Serpent. ſeduct. pag. 50.

(13) Idem, pag. 49, 56, 57.

(14) Ibid. pag. 56.

[E] Concerning the Beauty of Adam.] If ſome Authors had been contented to ſay, that he was a fine Perſon, and well made, they would have ſaid nothing but what was probable; but inſtead of this, they have fallen into the Gaieties of Rhetoric, and Poetry, and even into viſionary Notions of this Matter. It has been fabled, that God, intending to create Man, aſſumed a perfect, and beautiful, human Body; and and that he formed the Body of Adam on that Model, whence God might ſay, in relation to this Body, that he made Man after his own Image. They add, That this Apparition of God, under an human Form, was the firſt prelude to the Incarnation; that is, that the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity cloathed himſelf with the Appearance of the ſame Nature he was one Day to aſſume in the Fleſh, and that, under the likeneſs of the fineſt Man that ever was, he laboured in the Production of Adam, whom he made a Copy of that great and divine Original of Beauty, which he had aſſumed. " Hanc ſpeciem divinamque pulchritudinem " clementiſſimus formoſiſſimuſque aſſumens, quam " erat poſt multa tempora uſque ad carnem & oſſa aſ- " ſumpturus, creabat hominem, largiens ei ſpeciem " hanc tantam, ipſe primus Archetypus, ſpecioſiſſimus " ipſe ſpecioſiſſimæ prolis creator (15). —— The " moſt Clement and Fair, aſſuming this divine Form " and Beauty, which he was in proceſs of time to " cloath himſelf withal, even to Fleſh and Bones, crea- " ted Man, beſtowing on him this noble Form, himſelf " the Original Archetype, the moſt beautiful Creator " of a moſt beautiful Creature." It can be no wonder, after this, that theſe Exclamations ſhould be made; " Quantam qualemve credas fuiſſe primi hominis illius " venuſtatem? quantum in ore decus, quas gratias " inſediſſe (16)? —— What, and how great, muſt he the Beauty of the firſt Man? And what Charms muſt dwell in his Countenance?" For in ſhort, the Form, which the WORD aſſum'd, was like That, which was ſeen by St Peter on Mount Tabor, and by Moſes on Mount Sinai, and like That, which Moſes and Elias appeared in on the Day of the Transfiguration. But what is ſtill more wonderful is, That Adam himſelf ſaw his own Maker, and the manner how his Body was formed by the fair Hands of it's Author. " Cum fingeretur homo, manus illas divinas aſpexit, " ambroſioſque vultus illos, pulcherrima brachia cor- " pus ſuum fingentia, ſinguloſque artus ducentia (17). " —— When Man was created, he beheld thoſe di- " vine Hands, that ambroſial Countenance, and thoſe " beautiful Arms, which form'd his Body, and faſhion- " ed every Member of it." A very learned Man publiſhed theſe airy Notions (18); and there are People enough, who approve, at leaſt, one part of them.

(15) Eugubin. in Coſmopœia apud Salian. Annal. Tom. 1. pag. 106.

(16) Id. ib.

(17) Id. ib.

(18) Salian. Tom. 1. p. 106.

[F] That he was created of both Sexes.] Many of the Rabins believed that Adam's Body was created double, Male on one Side, and Famale on the other; and that both theſe Bodies were joined together by the Shoulders; the Heads looking towards places directly oppoſite, like the Heads of Janus (19). Now they pretend that, when God made Eve, he only divided This Body into two: That, which was of the Male Sex became Adam, and That, which was of the Female, became Eve. Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael, the moſt learned Rabbi of the XVIIth Century, maintained This fantaſtical Opinion, if we believe Heidegger (20). The learned Maimonides, the Honour and Glory of the Jewiſh Nation, had (21) already maintained it, if we may believe the ſame Witneſs. Eugubinus varied from it, only as to the Situation of the two Bodies; for he pretends that they adhered together by the Sides, and that they reſembled each other in all things, except the Sex. The Male Body was on the right, and embraced the other by the Neck with his left Hand, while the other did the like to him with the right Hand. Both were animated; both fell into a deep Sleep, when God intended to form Eve, that is, ſeparate her from the Male Body. We need only be able to read the Scripture, to confute all thoſe chimerical Notions. Before I paſs on to other Matters, I ſhall juſt take notice of thoſe Androgynes, of which Pluto has ſpoke ſo largely (22). They were Hermaphrodites, with four Arms and four Legs, and two Faces turned towards each other on one Neck. This duplicity of Members gave them much Force, and made them very inſolent upon that account; ſo that they thought on nothing leſs than making War with the Gods. A Conſultation was held in Heaven on the manner of reducing them to Reaſon; and Jupiter's Opinion was followed, which was to divide them aſunder. Each of the Parts preſerved a ſtrong Inclination to a Re-union; and this is the Origin of Love, according to this Philoſopher. But ſome Alterations were neceſſary to be made in the Situation of certain Members, in order to make their Re-union fruitful. I ſhall obſerve by the way, that they, who ſpeak of theſe Audrogynes of Plato, ſeldom report the Matter as it really is. They make him ſay, that Men, in general, were of this kind at firſt; but his Account relates only to certain of them: He acknowledges that there were alſo Males and Females, of the ſame kind with thoſe at preſent. See the Remark of the Article SALMACIS. The Author of a Book entituled, The New Viſionary of Rotterdam (23) aſſures us, that, according to the Rabins, Adam and Eve were both Hermaphrodites before their Fall (24). He is the only Author I know of, who aſcribes this Opinion to the Rabins.

(19) See Heidegger's Hiſtor. Patriarch. Tom. 1. pag. 128.

(20) Conciliat. in Geneſim apud Heidegger. ibid. See Hoornbeeck who refutes him in the firſt Chapter of the fourth Book de converſionibus judæis.

(21) In More Nevoch. pag. 2. cap. 30. apud Heidegg. Tom. 1. pag. 128. But obſerve, as Mr Van Dale has informed me, that Heidegger does not give a faithful Account of the Opinion, which Manaſſeh ben Iſrael and Maimonides have moſt approved.

(22) Plato in Convivio, pag. 1185. Edit. Francof. 1602.

[G] The Revelations of Antoinette Bourignon.] This Lady's Works prove, that ſhe had very particular Opinions; but perhaps ſhe advanc'd nothing more ſtrange, than what concerns the firſt Man. She pretends, that, before the Fall, Adam had the Principles of both Sexes in himſelf, and the Power of producing his Likeneſs, without the help of a Woman: And that the Neceſſity, which both Sexes are under, at preſent, of uniting for the ſake of Propagation, is a Conſequence of the Alteration Sin made in the human Body. " Men, ſays ſhe (25), think they were " created by God as they are at preſent, though it " is not true; ſeeing Sin has diſfigured the Work of " God in them, and inſtead of Men, as they ought " to be, they are become Monſters in Nature, divi- " ded into two imperfect Sexes, unable to produce " their like alone, as Trees and Plants do, which " in that Point have more Perfection than Men or " Women, incapable to produce by themſelves, but " in Conjunction with each other, and accompany'd " with Pain and Miſery." The Particulars of this Myſtery are explain'd in another Work, as it was revealed from God to Mrs Bourignon (26). She believed that ſhe had ſeen, in an Extacy, how Adam was made before Sin, and in what manner he was able alone to produce other Men. Nay, ſhe believ'd ſhe had learn'd, that he had put this rare Fecundity in practice,

(23) It was printed in the Year 1686.

(24) P. 56.

(25) Preface of the Book entitled, The New Heaven and the New Earth, Amſt. 1679.

(26) Continuation of the Life of Madam Bourignon, pag. 315.

Digitized by Google

perly alledg'd in confirmation of this falſe Gloſs. The romantic Narrations of James Sadeur [H] might as well be employ'd for that Purpoſe. Neither is it more true that Adam was produc'd with Circumciſion (e), and that, being diſpleas'd at it, he committed the Fault of thoſe, whom St Paul mentions in one of his Epiſtles (f). We may place likewiſe in the rank of Fable, what has been ſaid of his gigantic Stature [I], his practice, by the Production of the human Nature of Jeſus Chriſt. Though the Paſſage is ſomewhat long, yet I ſhall beg leave to tranſcribe it, as it will ſhew us to what Extravagancies the human Mind is liable.

(e) The Jews aſſert this. See Bartolocci Bibl. Rabin. Tom. 1. pag. 291.

(f) 1 Cor. vii. 18.

" God repreſented to her in a Viſion, without the " Aſſiſtance of corporeal Eyes, which could not have " endured ſuch Brightneſs, the Beauty of the firſt " World, and the manner how he form'd it out of " the original Chaos: All was bright, tranſparent, " and radiant, with an ineffable Light and Glory. " In the ſame ſpiritual manner he made the firſt " Man Adam appear to her, whoſe Body was more " pure and tranſparent than Cryſtal, all light and " flying, in appearance; in and through which were " ſeen Veſſels and Streams of Light, penetrating from " the inſide to the outſide, through all his Pores; " Veſſels, which contained moſt lively and diapha- " nous Liquors of all Sorts and Colours, not only of " Water and Milk, but alſo of Fire, Air, &c. His " Motions were wonderfully harmonious; every " thing obey'd him; nothing reſiſted nor could an- " noy him. He was of a larger Stature than Men " are at preſent; his Hair ſhort and curl'd, inclining " to black; his upper Lip covered with ſmall Hair: " And, inſtead of the beſtial Parts not to be named, " he was made like as our Bodies ſhall be reſtored " in eternal Life, after a manner which I know not " whether I dare reveal. In this Region of his Bo- " dy, was ſituated the Structure and Reſemblance " of a Face; which was a Source of admirable O- " dors and Perfumes: From thence likewiſe Men " were to ſpring, whoſe Principles he had all with- " in himſelf: for there was a Veſſel in his Belly, " which bred ſmall Eggs, and another Veſſel full of " Liquor, which impregnated the Eggs. And when " Man grew enflamed with the Love of his God, " the Deſire he had that there ſhould be other Crea- " tures, beſide himſelf, to praiſe, love, and adore the " divine Majeſty, made that Liquor, by the Fire of " God's Love, to ſpread itſelf on one or more of theſe " Eggs with unconceiveable Delight; which, being " impregnated, came out ſome time after from the " Man, by the forementioned Canal, in the form of " an Egg, and a little after hatch'd a perfect Man. " After this manner there will be an holy and endleſs " Generation in the Life eternal, quite different from " that which Sin produc'd by the means of the Wo- " man, whom God form'd of the Man, by taking " that Veſſel out of Adam which contained the Eggs, " which the Woman now poſſeſſes, and from which " Men proceed at preſent, according to the new " Diſcoveries in Anatomy. The firſt Man, whom " Adam produc'd by himſelf in this glorify'd State, " was choſen by God to be the Throne of the Di- " vinity, the Organ and Inſtrument by which God " would communicate himſelf eternally with Man- " kiud; that is, Jeſus Chriſt, the Firſt-Born, united " to the human Nature, both God and Man (27)."

(27) The Jame.

I wiſh the Author of The New Viſionary of Rotterdam had not inſulted, in ſo gay a manner, the Viſions of this Maid, and thoſe of the Miniſter, whom he attacks. He might have turn'd the latter into Ridicule, for his Notions concerning Adam and Eve's Marriage, without playing the Buffoon ſo much upon the Subject. I only add two ſhort Remarks. The firſt is, that Antoinette Bourignon ought not to have expected her own Reſurrection; for, according to her Principles, the groſs Matter, which was added to Man's Body after the Fall, and which rots in the Grave, will not riſe again (28); and the Reſurrection is nothing elſe but the re-eſtabliſhing of Man in his State of Innocency: A State wherein, according to the fine Revelations of Antoinette, there were no Women. An Heretic, whoſe Name was Amaulry, was formerly condemn'd at Paris (29), for maintaining, among other Errors, That at the end of the World both Sexes ſhall be re-united together in one Perſon, and that this re-union began in Jeſus Chriſt; and that if Man had continued in the State, wherein God produc'd him, there would not have been any diſtinction of Sexes (30). Faber Stapulenſis believ'd, that, in the State of Innocency, Adam might have begotten a Man like himſelf, without the help of a Woman (31). So that Mrs Bourignon was not the firſt who broach'd this Opinion, though ſhe has added much of her own to it; for inſtance, That perpetual Propagation, which, ſhe ſays, will be in Paradiſe, in the ſame manner that Man would have multiply'd, if he had preſerv'd his Innocency. What ſhall we ſay to Paracelſus, who believ'd that our firſt Parents had not the neceſſary Parts of Generation before they ſinned, but that, after the Fall, they came out of them, like Excreſcences, or Tumours in the Throat? Negabat primos parentes ante lapſum habuiſſe partes generationi hominis neceſſarias, poſtea acceſſiſſe ut ſtrumam gutturi (32). My ſecond Remark is, that This Lady attributes to Jeſus Chriſt, born of Adam, all the Apparitions of God, ſpoken of in the Old Taſtament; and that ſhe believes, that when he reſolv'd to cloath himſelf with the Corruption of our Fleſh and Blood, in the Womb of the Holy Virgin, he enclos'd his Body there, either by reducing it to the ſmallneſs it had at it's firſt Conception or Birth, or ſome other way inconceiveable to our groſs Reaſon (33).

(28) Preface to the New Heaven.

(29) In the beginning of the XIIIth Century.

(30) Prateoli Elench. Hæret. in the Word Almaricus. & Defenſ. Relat. de Burign. inſerted in the Acta Erudit. Lipſ. pag. 150.

(31) Apud Cornel. à Lapide in Geneſ. cap. ii. ver. 24.

(32) Paracelſus apud Voſſium de Philoſophia, cap. 9. pag. 71.

(33) Continued Life of M. Bourignon, pag. 317.

Theſe two Reflexions, which were ſufficient in the firſt Edition of this Work, are not ſo in this; for there are Perſons ſo captious, as to object, that my Article of ADAM contains intolerable Obſcenities. I anſwer, that They are too nice and ſcrupulous; and that they are ignorant of the Privileges of Hiſtory. They, who write the Life of a wicked Man, may and ought to repreſent, in general, the exceſſes of his Debauchery; and what choice ſoever they make of Words, they muſt neceſſarily relate impure things, and ſuch as ſully the Imagination. This is inevitable. All they can do is to avoid Particulars, and too groſs Expreſſions; and this I have done. They likewiſe, who write the Hiſtory of Sects, whoſe Doctrines or Actions have been impure, find themſelves under the ſame Neceſſity. The moſt cautious Style can never hinder them from preſenting filthy and obſcene Images to their Readers. That which juſtifies me in particular, is, that I relate Abſurdities contain'd in a Book, which is publickly ſold. Beſides, I have the Example of the ancient Fathers on my ſide, who have inſerted the moſt ſhocking Impurities of Heretics in their Works.

[H] The romantic Narrations of James Sadeur.] It is a pretended relation of certain Hermaphrodite Nations of Terra Auſtralis. See the Article SADEUR.

[I] His gigantic Stature.] Philo believed that Adam exceeded the ſize of all other Men both in Body and Soul (34); but the Talmudiſts go much farther; they affirm, that Adam was extended from one end of the World to the other, when God firſt form'd him; that after he had tranſgreſs'd, the Hand of the Lord was heavy upon him, and reduc'd his Stature to the Meaſure of an hundred Ells (35). Some ſay that God did it at the Requeſt of the Angels, who were afraid of ſo gigantic a Creature; but they ſuppoſe that God left to the firſt Man the height of nine hundred Cubits. See the firſt Volume of the Rabinical Dictionary of Father Bartolocci, pag. 65, 66. Barcepha takes notice of certain Authors, who ſay, that the Terreſtrial Paradiſe was ſeparated from our World by the Ocean, and that Adam, being driven out of this Paradiſe, croſs'd the Sea on foot, to come into our World, and that he found it every where fordable; his Stature was ſo enormous (36). This is juſt the Orion or the Polyphemus of the Poets;

(34) Philo de Opific. Mundi.

(35) In the Book Sanhedrim.

(36) In his Treatiſe, de Paradiſo.

—— —— quam magnus Orion
Cum pedes incedit medii per maxima Nerei
Stagna viam ſcindens, humero ſupereminet undas (37).

(37) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 10. ver. 763.

—— —— He ſtood,
Like tall Orion, ſtalking o'er the flood:
When with his brawny Breaſt he cuts the Waves,
His Shoulders ſcarce the topmoſt Billows laves.
DRYDEN.

ſummo

Digitized by Google

his Books [K], his Sepulchre [L], and of a Tree planted on that Sepulchre [M], &c. But we muſt be careful not to doubt of his Salvation, as the Abbot Rupertus did (g), and leaſt of all to believe him condemn'd to Infernal Flames, as the Tatianites did (b). Nor are we oblig'd to adopt the Opinion of Origen, St Auguſtin, St Athanaſius, and others, that Adam was one of the firſt of thoſe, who roſe from the dead with JESUS CHRIST (i); and we are yet leſs oblig'd to believe, that his Repentance would have kill'd him with Grief, if God had not ſent the Angel Raziel to comfort him (k). But Reaſon requires us to believe, that his Faith and his Prayers obtain'd Mercy for him, and that he made a very good End; without imagining at the ſame time, that he made a Speech to his Children before his Death, and recommended to them particularly to honour their Mother, and to bury her near him. It is (g) Rupertii Comment. in Geneſ. cap. xxxi.

(b) Epiphan. Hæreſ. 46. Euſebii Hiſt. lib. 3. cap. 27.

(i) Apud Corn. à Lapide in Geneſ. cap. v. ver. 5.

(k) See Reuchlinus de Art. Cabbal. pag. 8. & Heidegger's Hiſt. Patriarch. Tom. 1. pag. 160.

—— —— ſummo cum monte videmus
Ipſum inter pecudes vaſta ſe mole moventem,
Paſtorem Polyphemum, & littora nota petentem (38).

(38) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 3. ver. 655.

—— —— When, on the Mountain's Brow,
We ſaw the Giant-Shepherd ſtalk before
His following Flock, and leading to the Shore.

—— —— graditurque per æquor
Jam medium, necdum fluctus latera ardua tinxit (39).

(39) Id. ib. ver. 664.

—— —— Thro' Seas he ſtrides,
And ſcarce the topmoſt Billows touch'd his Sides.

DRYDEN.

The Arabians have no leſs an Idea of the Stature of our firſt Parents, than Moſes Barcephas's Authors. The following is a Narrative of Mr Monconis. " My " Arabian told me how the Caravan of Cairo arriv'd " firſt at Mecca, and how, after having offer'd their " Prayers, they went to the Foot of the Mountain, " which is a League diſtant from thence, to wait " for the other Caravans of Damaſcus and of Bagdat, " which came the following Days to Mecca; and " that being all arriv'd on the ninth of the twelfth " Moon, which is Diel Heghe, at the end, I ſay, of " the ninth Day, which is Aſſer, all the three Ca- " ravans aſcended to the top of the Mountain, on the " Summit whereof (which is very low, like thoſe " Hillocks, which ſtand alone in the midſt of Plains) " they believe that Eve laid her Head, when Adam " knew her the firſt Time; and that her two Knees " were two Muskets ſhot diſtant from each other, " on two other Hillocks in the bottom of the Plain; " on each of which places they have erected a round " Pillar, between which (to be a good Agi, that is, " Pilgrim) you muſt paſs, both aſcending and de- " ſcending the Mountain, on the top of which is " a Moſque, made like a Niche, into which but ſe- " ven or eight Perſons can enter (40)." I find that one John Lucidus is cited, who believed that Adam was one of the greateſt of all Giants (41), and who uſed to prove it by theſe Words of Scripture, according to the Vulgar Tranſlation, Nomen Hebron ante vocabatur Cariatharbe: Adam maximus ibi inter Enacim ſitus eſt (42). Upon the Authority of this Paſſage, St Jerom fancies that Adam was buried at Hebron (43). But it was proved to him, that neither the Hebrew Text, nor the Tranſlation of the LXX, make mention of Adam, or of any Sepulchre (44). The Geneva Tranſlation renders it, the Name of Hebron before was Kariath-Arbah, which Arbah had been a very great Man among the Hanakins. The Engliſh Verſion renders it after the ſame manner. There is a Mountain in the Iſland of Ceylon, called the Peak of Adam, becauſe, according to the Tradition of the Country, it was the place of his Reſidence (45). The prints of his Feet are yet to be found there, above two Palms in length. Pythagoras would not infer ſuch a gigantic Stature from thence, as that which others attribute to Adam; I ſay, Pythagoras, who judg'd of Hercules's Stature by the length of that Hero's Foot (46). It is alſo ſaid that there are ſome Remains on that Mountain, of the Tears which were ſhed for the Death of Abel; but others ſay, that Adam and Eve lamented his Death in a Cave in Judæa, where their Beds of Stone are to be ſeen of thirty Foot length (47).

(40) Moncon. Travels, part 1. pag. 372, 373. Edition of Lyons.

(41) Joh. Lucidus, lib. 1. de Emendat. Temp. cap. 4. apud Pererium in Geneſ. lib. 4. quæſt. 3.

(42) Joſhua, cap. xiv. ver. ult.

(43) Hieron. in Matth. cap. xxvii.

(44) Pererius ubi ſupra.

(45) Ludov. Romanus Patricius in ſua Navigat. apud Biſſelium illuſtr. Ruinar. Decad. 1.

(46) A. Gellius Noct. Att. lib. 1. cap. 1.

(47) Apud Salden. Otia Theol. pag. 346.

[K] His Books.] The Jews pretend that Adam wrote a Book concerning the Creation of the World; and another on the Deity (48). Maſius mentions the former (49). A Mahometan Author, whoſe Name is Kiſſæus, reports, that Abraham being gone into the Country of the Sabæi, open'd Adam's ſtrong Box, wherein he found his Books with thoſe of Seth, and Edris (50). This laſt Name is that which the Arabians give to Enoch. They ſay that Adam received twenty Books fallen from Heaven, which contain'd divers Laws and Promiſes, and Threatnings, from God, and Predictions of many Events (51). Some Rabbies attribute the 92d Pſalm to Adam, and there are ſome Manuſcripts, where the Chaldaic Title of that Pſalm imports that it is a Song of Praiſe, recited by the firſt Man on the Sabbath-day (52). The good Euſebius Nierembergius, who was Credulity itſelf, reports two Canticles, which he faithfully copied out of the Revelations of the ever bleſſed Amadeus, in the Library of the Eſcurial (53). It is ſaid, that Adam was the Author of theſe two Pieces; he made the one the firſt time he ſaw Eve; the other is the penitential Pſalm, which he and his Wife ſung after their Fall.

(48) Heideg. Hiſt. Patr. Tom. 1. pag. 481.

(49) See Salian. Tom. 1. pag. 230.

(50) See Stanley's Eaſtern Philoſophy, B. 3. cap. 3.

(51) Hotting. Hiſt. Orient. pag. 22. cited by Lyſerus in Polygamiâ Triumphatâ pag. 145.

(52) Gaſpar Schottus Technic. Curioſ. pag. 556.

[L] His Sepulchre.] We have already ſeen, that St Jerom imagined, without any ground, that Adam was buried at Hebron; but we have as much Reaſon to be of his Opinion in that, as to think with many others, that Adam was buried upon Mount Calvary (54). I confeſs the latter Opinion is preferable per la predica, for the Preacher's Uſe; for it is much more fertile of Alluſions, Antitheſes, moral Application, and all kind of Rhetorical Figures: But ſuch a Reaſon is fit for little elſe, than to ſerve as an Anſwer to thoſe, who may ask, why St Jerom's Opinion had fewer Followers than the other. But, Compariſons aſide, it is enough for us to be informed, that the Fathers generally believed, that the firſt Man died in the Place, where Jeruſalem was built afterwards, and that he was buried on a neighbouring Hill, which was called Golgotha, or Calvary; which is that where Jeſus Chriſt was crucified. If you ask me how Adam's Grave could reſiſt the Waters of the Deluge, and how his Bones could maintain their place, in order to receive the ſprinkling of the Blood of our Lord; for there lies the Myſtery;

(53) Lib. 2. cap 13. de Orig. Sacræ Script. cap. 13. apud Schottum, ibid.

(54) See Salian. Ann. Tom. 1. pag. 225. where he ſhews that St Jerom himſelf adopts that common Opinion in ſome places.

Hic hominem primum ſuſcepimus eſſe ſepultum,
Hic patitur Chriſtus: pia ſanguine terra madeſcit,
Pulvis Adæ ut poſſit, veteris cum ſanguine Chriſti
Commixtus, ſtillantis aquæ virtute lavari (55);

(55) Tertullian. Carm. contra Marcion. lib. 2. cap. 4.

Here Tradition ſays the firſt Man was buried; Here Chriſt ſuffered: The pious Earth is wet with Blood, that the Duſt of Adam, mixt with the Blood of Chriſt, might be waſh'd with the Virtue of the aiſtilling Water:

If, I ſay, you put this Queſtion; Barcepha will quote a Doctor upon you, very much eſteem'd in Syria (56), who ſaid that Noah dwelt in Judæa; that he planted the Cedars, wherewith he built the Ark, in the Plains of Sodom, that he took Adam's Bones with him into the Ark; that, after he was come out of the Ark, he divided them among his three Sons; that he gave the Skull to Shem; and that the Offspring of Shem, having taken poſſeſſion of Judæa, buried this Skull in the ſame Place where Adam's Grave had been.

(56) Dom. Jacobus Orrohaita (ſive Edeſſenus) St Ephrem who lived in the IVth Century was his Diſciple. See Salian, pag. 226. Corn. à Lapide, p. 13.

[M] A Tree planted on that Sepulchre.] Cornelius à Lapide ſays, that the Hebrews have a Tradition, that by the Command of an Angel Seth put ſome of the Seed of the forbidden Tree into Adam's Mouth, who was already buried; and that it produc'd a Tree, of which the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt was made; and that it was but juſt that the ſame Wood, which had caus'd Adam to ſin, ſhould be That, on which Jeſus Chriſt ſhould expiate Adam's Sin (57). That Jeſuit refers us to Pinedo, who

(57) In Geneſim. cap. iii. ver. 9. pag. 74.

Digitized by Google

is giving one's self too much Liberty, to forge such direct Speeches [N]. We have related elsewhere (l) the Opinions concerning the Duration of his State of Innocence.

(l) In the Remark [A] of the Article ABEL.

who related this Fable at length. But what does he mean by the Hebrews? Doubtless he means the Jews. Now, do the Jews own that Jesus Christ expiated Adam's Sin by the Punishment of the Cross, to which their Nation condemn'd him under Pontius Pilate? When an Author is full of a thing, he thinks others are so too, and does not always perceive the Absurdity of attributing his own Thoughts to them. Lastly, this Fable has been variously reported; for we find in a Rabbi, who liv'd long before Jesus Christ, and whose Work is entituled, Gale Rasejah (58), that the Angels brought to Adam, in the Desert, a Branch of the Tree of Life, which Seth planted, and that it became a Tree, whereof Moses made good Use; for, after having made out of it the Rod, with which he wrought so many Miracles, he sweetened the bitter Waters with it, and erected likewise the Brazen Serpent on part of it. Some say that Adam sent Seth to the Gate of the Garden of Eden, to desire the Angel's who defended the Entrance, to grant him a Branch of the Tree of Life, which they comply'd with (59).

(58) See concerning this Rabbin, and his Works, the Nouv. Liter. for July 1686. Art. 3. pag. 770. taken from Mœbius of the Brazen Serpent.

[N] To forge such direct Speeches.] I have Salian in view, in this Censure. Not contented with the Speech, he made a long Epitaph for Adam, wherein he denotes his own Name by these three Letters, J. S. P. (60). He made Epitaphs also for Abel, Abraham, and Sarah, &c. In truth this is scarce pardonable, except in Authors, who are just come from teaching Rhetoric; and I am fully persuaded that the Sirmonds, the Petavius's, the Hardouins, and the rest of the great Authors of the Society of the Jesuits, will judge of it, as I do.

(59) See Selden's Otia Theolog. pag. 608.

(60) Tiey signify, Jac. Salianus Posuit.

ADAM, Archdeacon of the Patriarchal Chamber, and Superior of the Monks of Chaldæa, was sent to Rome at the beginning of the XVIIth Century, by Elias, Nestorian Patriarch of Babylon. This Patriarch, having caus'd the Profession of Faith, which Paul V. had sent him, to be examin'd by his Bishops, commission'd Adam to present it to That Pope, with the Alterations he had made in it; but order'd him at the same time to correct what the Pope should find amiss in it. This Embassy of our Adam was an Embassy of Obedience. This Monk, being come to Rome, acquitted himself of his Commission with all imaginable Care. He had brought a Writing with him, wherein he pretended to reconcile the Faith of the Eastern Churches with That of the Church of Rome, and to make it appear that their Differences were but a Verbal Dispute [A]. He had first shewed this Writing to his Patriarch, and afterwards, by his order, to all the Bishops of the Party, and he had employ'd a whole Year in going from City to City to procure the Approbation of those Bishops. Peter Strozza, Secretary to Paul V. was order'd to answer this Writing. The Answer savour'd more of Inflexibility than Condescension; for he explain'd every thing with the utmost Rigour; and the Legate of the Patriarch was not only oblig'd to submit to the Doctrines, but to the very Expressions of the Church of Rome. He sign'd whatever the Pope propos'd to him, and, not satisfy'd with abjuring all the Errors of his Nation, he wrote several Books, and address'd them to his Countrymen, to communicate to them the new Lights he had acquir'd at Rome. He departed from thence after an abode of Three Years; and carry'd with him a Brief from Paul the V. to his Patriarch Elias, rejecting all the Terms of Accomodation, which that Patriarch had propos'd, and obliging him to condemn every Expression, which might cover any Error (a). Adam was accompanied by two Jesuits (b), who had Orders to labour at the entire Re-union of that Sect.

(a) Taken from the 16th Chapter of the 5th Book of the Perpetuity of the Faith defended. Mr Arnaud cites the Treatise of Peter Strozza, de Dogmatibus Chaldæorum.

(b) Nic. Godignus. lib. 1. de Rebus Abassinorum apud Aub. Miræum, de Statu Relig. Christ. pag. 226.

[A] Their Differences were but a verbal Dispute.] The Sieur de Moni, in his Critical History of the Levant, seems fully persuaded, that the Patriarch Elias had reason to maintain, that there is but a mere verbal Difference between the Nestorians of the present Time, and the Catholics. The Nestorianism of the present Time, says he (1), is but an imaginary Heresy; the Difference of their Opinion consists only in Equivocations; the Nestorians understanding the Word Person in another Sense, than the Latins. Why then did they not acquiesce in the Explanation, which the Patriarch of Babylon gave of their Notions? The Reason was, because, in order to keep up a Decorum, and out of a false Punctilio of Honour, it was necessary to maintain that Nestorianism was a dangerous Heresy; otherwise they would have prostituted the Honour of the Oecumenical Councils. This is what the Sieur de Moni would have said in a free Country; but in France he was obliged to qualify his Expressions; The Councils, says he (2), having condemn'd the Heresy of Nestorius, it seemed necessary to make it appear at Rome, that Nestorianism was a true Heresy, since it had been condemn'd by the Church in a general Council. He adds, with the same caution, That some might infer, from the very Acts of the ancient Councils, that Nestorianism is but a nominal Heresy; and that if Nestorius and St Cyril had understood each other, they might have reconcil'd their Opinions (3).

(1) Moni's Critical History of the Belief and Customs of the Nations of the Levant, pag. 93.

(2) Id. ib.

(3) Id. ib.

ADAM, (John) a French Jesuit, was a famous Preacher of the XVIIth Century [A]. He was of Limousin, and enter'd among the Jesuits in the Year 1622, at 14 Years of Age (a). His Superiors, finding him qualify'd to succeed in the Pulpit, apply'd him to it, after he had taught Humanity, and Philosophy. He exercis'd the Trade of Preaching Forty Years, and was follow'd in the chief Cities of France, and in the Louvre itself (b). He began, as it was reasonable he should, in the Provinces; but when he had sufficiently signaliz'd himself in them, he was sent to Display his Talents on the grand Theatre of the Kingdom. The Circumstances of the Times favour'd him, the Disputes of Jansenism having already heated the People; and never was Man more fit than Father Adam, being a rash Adventurer, to be let loose against That Party. He was hot and undaunted, and had all the Qualifications of a great Declaimer. The Sermons, which he preach'd in Lent at Paris in St Paul's Church in the Year 1650, made a great Noise. The Preacher push'd Matters so far, that,

(a) Sotuel, Biblioth. Societatis Jesu, pag. 397.

(b) Id. ib.

[A] Was a famous Preacher of the XVIIth Century.] See the Letter which Mr de Balzac writ to him on the 15th of January 1643, after having read the fifteen Sermons, which that Jesuit had sent him (1).

(1) It is the 11th of the 3d Book of the 1st part of the Lettres Choisies, pag. 109. Edit. of Holl.

Digitized by Google

that, had it not been for powerful Patrons, they would have forbad him the Pulpit [B]. He had Honesty enough to acknowledge [C], that St Austin was no ways favourable to Molinism; and was very angry with that Ancient Doctor. The Jansenists did not pass by this Affront [D]. They publish'd an Answer to his Sermon, and were not satisfy'd with apologizing for St Austin; but refuted some other Propositions of that Jesuit, and particularly That, which related to the Inspiration of the Canonical Writers [E]. Father Adam had no regard to the Complaints, which were made

[B] They would have forbad him the Pulpit.] This we learn from a Letter of Guy Patin, written the twelfth of April, 1650; Our Archbishop, says he, has forbid the Pulpit to Mr Brousel, a Doctor of Navarre, and Canon of St Honore, who is a great Jansenist, for having preached within these three Days a little too boldly. Father Adam, a Jesuit, would have felt the same rigour, for having preached against St Austin in St Paul's Church, and for having called him the hot African and the petulant Doctor, if the Credit of the Jesuits and of the Capuchins had not diverted the Archbishop from it (2).

(2) Patin's Letter 37. pag. 162. of the 1*st part, Edit. of* Geneva, 1691.

[C] He had Honesty enough to acknowledge.] This must be understood, cum grano salis, with some Restriction; and we should be deceived, if we imagined, that this Jesuit retained nothing of the Artifices of those, who pretended that St Austin is neither favourable to the Calvinists, nor to the Jansenists: For in the same Sermon, which raised such an outcry, and which he divided into two Parts, he designed by the second to shew from the Doctrine of That Father, that Jesus Christ died for all Men, without Exception; and he had already published a Book, entitled, Calvin defeated by himself, and by St Austin's Weapons, which he has unjustly usurped in his Doctrines of Grace, Free-will, and Predestination (3). Now he made no Difficulty to say, that Jansenius and Calvin taught the same thing in the Doctrine of Grace; and a few Days after his Sermon, he replied to one, who reproached him for it, I fear nothing; no one can attack my Sermon, nor my Book about Grace, without undertaking at the same time to support Calvin (4). What are we to understand then by the Honesty which I ascribe to him? Why, that the Liberty he took in giving his Opinion of St Austin's Errors, plainly intimated, that he did not esteem him a proper Model of Faith in those Matters.

(3) Defence of St Austin against Father Adam.

(4) The same.

[D] The Jansenists did not pass by this Affront.] A few Days after, they published a Pamphlet of sixty Pages in Quarto, entitled, A Defence of St Austin, against the Errors, the Calumnies, and the scandalous Invectives which Father Adam, the Jesuit, preached in St Paul's Church on the second Thursday in Lent, on this Text of the Gospel, "I am not sent but to the "lost Sheep of the House of Israel." They accused him of having said, "I. That St Austin was intricate "and obscure in his Writings; that, being an Afri- "can, violent and full of Heat, he was often too pas- "sionate, that he ran into Extreams, and had ex- "ceeded the Bounds of Truth in opposing the Ene- "mies of Grace; as it happens sometimes, that a "Man, who designs to strike his Enemy, does it "with such Violence, that he dashes him against a "Tree, and gives him a Counter-Blow contrary "to his Intention. II. That St Austin himself, in "establishing Original Sin, against the Pelagians, "was carried away to an excess of Error, in saying "that Original Sin was punished in Children, who "died without Baptism, with the Torments of Fire, "and with Damnation. III. That St Austin was not "steady in his Notions, since, according to the Ob- "servation of Mr Gamache, he changed his Opinion "three times about the Doctrine of Grace." These Reproaches, and some others of the same kind, had already appeared in a Book of Father Adam. Those, who have not that Book, may find them in a Work, which is easy to be consulted; I mean the Vindiciæ Augustinianæ, wherein Father Adam is the first of St Austin's modern Adversaries, whom Father Norris refuted.

[E] Which related to the Inspiration of the Canonical Writers.] "It is not surprizing, that Father Adam "should assert in his Sermon, that St Austin was "carried too far by the Ardor of his Zeal, since, in "a naughty Book, full of Fallities and Errors, he "has laid it down *, That this Weakness is not so "criminal, but that God suffers it in those Authors, "whom he inspires, and whom we call Canonical "----and that the Natural Fire of St Paul was "likewise apt to incline him to Expressions of this "nature ---- To prove that there are some Frail- "ties in Canonical Authors, and that they follow "their own Imaginations in expressing the things "which God has revealed to them, he says, That "when the Prophet Elias complained of the Impiety "of the Age, he said to God, that Faith was ex- "tinguished in the Hearts of all Men, and that he "alone remained of all who adored him on the Earth. "—— David affirms, that there was never more "Corruption and Disorder seen, than in his Time, "that there was not one Man to be found who would "perform a good Action." This is the Doctrine which Father Adam's Censurers reproached him with. The result of it is, that the inspired Doctrine, and the Expressions of those who are inspired, are two different things; that God is the Author only of the first, but that he left the other to the Imagination of the Person inspired, and that this did not hinder his Imagination from exceeding the Dictates of the Holy Spirit. Without doubt this was Father Adam's Sentiment; for the Examples of Elias and David, which he alledges, would not serve the Purpose of one, who believes, that it was revealed by God, that Elias was the only Worshipper of the True God, and that in David's Time there was not one good Man on the Earth. Whoever therefore makes use of such Examples must be convinced, that God only revealed, that the Number of good Men was small. Thus the Imagination of an inspired Author may make that universal which is given him with Restriction; and thus he may fall into the Sophism, à dicto secundum quid ad dictum simpliciter: In a Word, This is to adulterate Revelation, to deceive the Church, to lie. The Jansenists did not fail to exclaim against this Doctrine, as being impious, and opening a Door to a thousand Attempts against the Authority of the Scripture (5). "For, said they (6), "if God suffers any Frailty in the Canonical Au- "thors, whom he inspires, if there is a Natural Fire "in St Paul, which is not from God; every thing, "which the Libertine or Heretic finds in Holy Writ "contrary to his Sentiments, he will say proceeds "from the Frailty or Natural Fire of the Writer, "and not from the Spirit of God. ---- To allow "of any Infirmity, or any Influence of meer Na- "tural Disposition in the sacred Writers, is to give "every one the Liberty of judging of This, and of "throwing out of the Scripture what he pleases, "as proceeding rather from the Weakness of Man, "than the Spirit of God. ---- The Libertine will "deny the Eternity of Hell Torments, and when "St Matthew says, Go ye cursed into everlasting "Fire, he will say it was an extravagant Expression "denote the long Continuance, and Greatness of the "Torments prepared for the Wicked, proceeding from "to the Imagination of the Evangelist (7)." Those Gentlemen pretended that Father Adam only made use of this Doctrine, that he might shift off the Force of St Paul's Expressions, which seemed hard to him, and contrary to his Sentiment, and to teach us the Art of playing with the Words of the Apostle of the Gentiles about Grace and Divine Predestination, as well as with those of St Austin. If he finds himself pressed by the Ninth Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, where St Paul says, that God will have Mercy, on whom he will have Mercy, and whom he will he hardens; he may answer, that St Paul's Natural Fire carried him into Expressions of this Nature; that it is a Frailty which God suffers in Canonical Authors; that it is the Expression of a thing revealed after the Imagination, Disposition, and Temper of St Paul (8).

(5) Ibid. pag. 11.

(6) The same.

(7) Pag. 16.

(8) Compare this with what is said pag. 34. in the Advice to the Refugees.

I omit their Answer to the Instances of Elias and David; and shall only observe, that they found a great Mistake in matter of Fact in the first of those Citations; for the Canonical Author, who relates

* Third Part, cap. 7. pag. 622.

Digitized by Google

made against his Sermon, and against a Book, wherein he had thrown out several Expressions concerning St Austin, which gave great Offence. He retracted nothing, and continued writing in the same Strain. The Jansenists renew'd their Complaints, and their Writings; and a particular Conflict arose between them and Father Adam. They criticiz'd the Books, which he publish'd, some of which he compos'd for the use of pious Minds, in Opposition to those Gentlemen. To this end, he publish'd the Psalms of David, the Hymns and Prayers of the Church in Latin, and in French. Every body knows that the Jansenists endeavour'd to recommend themselves by their French Translations of those Books. They attack'd likewise the Poetry of Father Adam; I mean the Translation, which he had made, of the Hymns in French Verse [F]. But this Paper War continued but a very little time between them. His Writings began in 1650. and ended in 1651 [G]. It is plain, they found that he did the Church and the Society more Service by his other Talents, than by his Pen. He was therefore sent to Sedan to settle a College of Jesuits there. He would have found it very difficult to succeed in this Design, had the Marshal de Fabert liv'd, who was of all Men the least a Bigot, and most firmly settled in the Principles of Honesty. The Protestants were very easy under his Government; but the Scene was chang'd after his Death (c). They met with great Molestation from This Jesuit, and were oblig'd to pay large Sums of Money, and to establish Funds, which put him in a Capacity of founding the College he had projected. He publish'd a Scheme to which Mr de St Maurice, Professor in Divinity at Sedan (d), return'd an Answer which remain'd without Reply. He liv'd some Years at Sedan, where he promoted the Interests of his Order, and the business of making Proselytes, to the utmost of his Power.

(c) Which happened in the Month of May 1662.

(d) He liv'd at Maestricht, upon his leaving France after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, till his Death, which fell out in the Year 1700, Aug. 20. Father Adam laid many Snares in his way, but he found an Adversary, who avoided them ingeniously.

relates Elias's Complaint, does not mention it as the Expression of a Man inspired, but as the Expression of a Man who was deceived, and to whom God revealed that he was in an Error. Therefore that Author did not deviate from the utmost Historical Exactness in reporting this False Complaint of Elias. These Gentlemen put the Public in mind, "That "among the Propositions extracted from the Public "Lectures of the Jesuits of Louvain, acknowledged "by them, and censured by the Faculties of Louvain "and of Douay, in the Year 1588. are the two fol- "lowing; I. To constitute Holy-Scripture, it is not "necessary that the Words should be inspired by the "Holy Ghost. II. It is not necessary that the sacred "Authors should be immediately inspired by the Holy "Ghost, with every Truth and every Sentiment, con- "tained in their Writings." But, whatever Appellation these two Propositions deserve, yet they are very different from the Doctrine of Father Adam, and much less dangerous (9).

(9) See Mr Simon's Answer to the Opinions of some Divines of Holland, cap. 12. and his Critical History of the New Testament, cap. 23. the Bibliotheque Universelle, Tom. 10. pag. 132. Tom. 11. p. 80. and Tom. 19. pag. 499.

I have enlarged upon this, because I observed that it was an unknown Fact to those who, on Occasion of the Sentiments of some Divines of Holland, have lately wrote so much concerning the Inspiration of the sacred Books. All Communions have their Father Adam; there are Writers to be found every where to whom the same Lecture ought to be read, which was read to that Jesuit. The following are the Words of Mr Saurin, Minister of Utrecht, to Mr Jurieu, Minister of Rotterdam (10). "The "Comparison which M. J. made between the Ima- "gination of the Prophets, which received Impres- "sions from above, and a Wheel, which, being set "a-going, continues in Motion, though the Hand, "which impelled it, be removed (11), is another "Prophanation. For though he did not apply it to "the greater Prophets, it will necessarily lead to "them; unless he can shew that their Imagina- "tions, when wrought upon, did not run beyond "the Impression, by their own Impetuosity, like the "Wheel, which is put in Motion, as he says hap- "pened to other inspired Persons, in whom God "produced these extraordinary Motions for Signs and "Prodigies, and who often went farther, than they "ought to do. By what Mark would he have us "distinguish those Prophets, whom God sends for "Signs, if their Imagination, being once stirred, con- "founds what comes from God with their own Folly, "and if they report Truth and Falshood together, un- "der the external Appearance of Persons out of their "Senses, and disordered in their Imaginations? This "Mixture of Divine Inspiration, and Extravagancy "concealed under the exterior Resemblance of Mad- "ness, is inconsistent with the Idea which we have "of the Wisdom of God (12)." Some Persons are of so warm an Imagination, that they never report any thing that is told them without improving upon it: They only retain the thing, and never remember the Expressions of him, who related it to them: They substitute others in their room, cloathed with all their Fire, and consequently an unfaithful Representation of what was told them. These Persons easily believe that the Prophets and Apostles treated in the same manner the Idea's which the Holy Ghost communicated to them.

(10) In 1692.

(11) See the 20th Pastoral Letter of 1689.

(12) Saurin. Examination of Mr Jurieu's Doctrine, designed as an Answer to a Libel entitled, Mr Jurieu's Second Apology, pag 21.

[F] The Translation, which he had made, of the Hymns in French Verse (13).] What is to found in relation to this in the ninth Part of the Difficulties propos'd to Mr Steyaert, deserves to be reported: "No Liturgy, for these many Years, has been "more esteemed than that whereof the Title is: "The Office of the Church, and of the Virgin, "in Latin and French, with the Hymns translated "into Verse; otherwise called les Heures de Port- "Royal; or, the Port-Royal Primer. Four Edi- "tions were published of it in one Year; which "gave so much Jealousy to the Jesuits, that they left "nothing undone to cry it down. They made silly "Objections against it, which were immediately an- "swered. They opposed to it Father Adam's Prayer- "Book, under the Name of Les Heures Catholiques, "the Catholic Primer, as if the other was Here- "tical. The Hymns in it were also translated into "Verse, but so ridiculously, that it only served to "raise the Credit of those of the Port-Royal. Lastly, "they informed against them to the Inquisition of "Rome, and made use of all their Credit to have "them condemned there (14)." Cardinal Spada intimated to Mr de St Amour, that if that Work of Father Adam was presented to the Tribunal of the Inquisition, they would condemn it. Mr de St Amour answered, That if the Primer, which he defended, was to be decried. - - - - they might as well condemn it without that of Father Adam: And that he did not think it proper to accustom those Fathers to compose a silly Book, whenever they saw a good one appear, which did not please them, in hopes of having them both condemned, under pretence of holding the Balance even, and of keeping both Parties in Peace (15).

(13) See M. Daillé's Reply, Part 2. pag. 19. and Part 3. pag. 234, & 424.

(14) Difficulties propos'd to Mr Steyaert, part 9. pag. 42.

(15) Ibid. pag. 45.

[G] Begun in 1650. and ended in 1651.] Father Sotuel mentions but five of Father Adam's Works. The last is his Answer to a Letter of Mr Daillé, which came out in 1660. These are the Titles of his other Books: Calvinus à seipso & à S. Augustino profligatus, (Calvin defeated by himself and St Austin) Parisiis 1650. in 8vo. Psalmi Davidis Latinè & Gallicè cum Canticis undecim quibus utitur Ecclesia, (The Psalms of David in Latin and French, with eleven Hymns used by the Church) Parisiis 1651. in 12mo. Fidelium regula ex Sacra Scriptura & sanctis Patribus deprompta, (A Guide to the Faithful, extracted from the Sacred Scriptures, and the Holy Fathers) Parisiis 1651. in 12mo. Preces Catholicæ Latinè & Gallicè, (Catholic Prayers in Latin and French.) Parisiis 1651. in 8vo. and 12mo.

[H] An

Digitized by Google

Power. At length, the Government itſelf was diſguſted at him; and, whether it was that they dreaded his bold and intriguing Spirit, or that they perceiv'd, that his Manner of Preaching had not all the Gravity requiſite in a Place, where there was a Proteſtant Univerſity, they were pleas'd that his Superiors recall'd him: I have been told, that ſome Inſtances were made for it. He had been ſent to preach at Loudun, while the Proteſtants held a National Synod there, about the end of the Year 1659. It is likely, this engag'd him in the compoſing of a Work, which made him known to the Proteſtants of France, more than any thing elſe, and more than many Authors of the Firſt Rank are known to them. A Miniſter of Poictiers (e) having chang'd his Religion, a little after the breaking up of that Synod, wrote a Letter, wherein he maliciouſly cenſur'd the Faſt, which That Aſſembly had enjoyn'd all the Reform'd Churches of the Kingdom to keep (f). Mr Daillé, who had been Moderator of the Aſſembly, anſwer'd his Letter. The other reply'd; Father Adam would engage in the Controverſy, and publiſh'd an Anſwer to Mr Daillé's Writing in the Year 1660 [H]. Mr Daillé reply'd to them both in one Book. Perhaps he never ſucceeded better than upon this Occaſion, nor was any Piece ſo much read by all ſorts of Perſons among the Proteſtants; which is the Reaſon, why Father Adam, who appears almoſt in every Period in it, and often under ſuch a Character as makes an Impreſſion, is more known to them than an hundred Authors, who ſurpaſs him. This Work of Mr Daillé remain'd without Reply [I], and it is not to be wonder'd at: They, who ought to have anſwered it, were inferior to ſuch an Adverſary, who could have triumphed over them even in a bad Cauſe. I do not know in what Year Father Adam was Procurator of the Province of Champagne at Rome; the Bibliotheque of the Jeſuits does not remark it (g); but it informs me, that in 1674. he was Superior of the Maiſon Profeſſe at Bourdeaux. I think he died in that Employ about the Year 1680. He publiſh'd ſome Controverſial Sermons on the Euchariſt, which was the Goſpel of the Day all over France, during the Quarrel between Mr Arnaud and Mr Claude; I ſay, he publiſh'd them ſince the Impreſſion of Father Sotuel's Work, and I think he preach'd them in the height of the Conteſt. They are not ill turn'd, but they are a little too Dramatic, Mr Claude being ſometimes introduc'd as ſpeaking in them. I ſay this only upon hear-ſay. Father Adam paſs'd through the hands of Father Jarrige, but met with a milder Treatment, than from many others, and came off at a ſmall Expence [K]. He was not the firſt who ſpoke

(e) His Name was Mr Cottibi.

(f) See Mr Daille's Life pag. 33, &c.

(g) Rexit Collegium Sedanenſe in Provincia Campaniæ, à qua electus eſt Procurator ad Urbem. ---- He govern'd the College of Sedan in the Province of Campania, from whence he was elected Procurator for the City. Sotuel Biblioth. Soc. Jeſu, pag. 397.

[H] An Anſwer to Mr Daillé's Writing in the Year 1660.] Father Sotuel entitled that Work, Reſponſum ad Epiſtolam D. Allii Miniſtri Charentonenſis Hæretici. This is to latinize Mr Daillé's Name after a wretched manner, and is a Sign that Father Sotuel read but few Books of Controverſy. For is there any Controvertiſt, to whom Mr Daillé's Latin Works are unknown, and who conſequently does not know that That Miniſter's Name in Latin is Dallæus? They, who have a confuſed Notion, that there was a Miniſter of Charenton, whoſe Name was Mr Allix, would believe without Heſitation, that Father Adam wrote a Book againſt him, if they had no other Light than what the Article of that Jeſuit affords in the Continuator of Alegambus; and thus the leaſt Miſtake in Proper Names is enough to lead the Reader into an Error. Any one, who ſhould once miſtake Mr Allix for the Allius of that Continuator, might very well give him a place in the Catalogue of the Famous Children, and ſend him to Mr Baillet (16) as an Additional Article; for he would imagine that That Book was printed in the Year 1660. and refuted by a famous Jeſuit.

(16) He publiſh'd a Book in 1688. entituled, Of the Children which became famous by their Studies or their Writings.

[I] This Work of Mr Daillé remained without Reply.] The Curious will be glad to ſee here what the Son of that Learned Miniſter obſerved concerning This Book. He ſays, "It is in every body's hands, "and was ſo well received, that two Editions have "already been made of it. Thoſe of our Communion, "for whom it was chiefly compoſed, find, with Sa"tisfaction, moſt of our Controverſies treated in it "after a manner very proper to inſtruct them, and "our Religion cleared from every thing which it's "Enemies commonly charge it with. And if we "may draw any advantage from the Silence of our "Adverſaries, it ſeems as if they had condemn'd "themſelves, ſeeing hitherto neither of them have "oppos'd any thing againſt it; tho' they often pro"mis'd the contrary, and have been reproach'd for "it ſeveral times (17)". Mr Daillé, the Son, has mention'd one thing, which clearly inſinuates, that Father Adam was the Converter of the Miniſter Cottibi. It ought, therefore, to be taken Notice of, as one of the great Actions of the Hero of this Article. Let us hear then Mr Daillé's Hiſtorian once more. "Not only the new converted Roman, who was the "Party concerned, defended himſelf by publiſhing a "large Anſwer; but as if his Cauſe had not been ſe"cure enough in his own Hands, a famous Jeſuit "came to his Aſſiſtance, of whom ſome of his Com"munion ſaid, that he was the firſt Man of the "World only by his Name. The Reader will eaſily "ſee, that Father Adam is meant by this, who, to de"fend his PROSELYTE, publiſhed a ſecond An"ſwer at the ſame time, of the ſame Size, and Force "with his.

(17) Abridgment of Mr Daillé's Life, printed in 1670.

The Phraſe, Firſt Man, made uſe of in the above Paſſage, ſupply'd me in the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, with a Marginal Note, which ſhall make, at preſent, part of the body of this Column It is as follows: "I have heard ſay, that the Queen-Mother "having asked a great Lord, who attended her to "one of Father Adam's Sermons, what he thought of "it; he thanked her for his having been ſo well "convinced by it of the Hypotheſis of the Præ-Ada"mites. Being deſired to explain this Riddle, he "anſwered, This Sermon convinces me that Adam is "not the firſt Man of the World." You will find this Story in the Continuation of the Menagiana (18); and you will farther be informed, that the great Lord, who gave the Queen this Anſwer, was the Prince de Guemené, and that the Sermon which gave occaſion to the Jeſt, was very ill received both by the City and the Court (19). Father Adam made a very odious Compariſon in it between the Pariſians and the Jews, who crucified our Lord. He compared the Queen to the Virgin; and Cardinal Mazarine to St John the Evangeliſt. Note that others aſcribe this Witticiſm to Benſerade. Read his Life before the laſt Edition of his Works (20).

(18) Page 30. of the Edition of Holland.

(19) It was a Sermon on the Paſſion, preached by Father Adam at St Germain de l'Auxerois.

[K] Came off at a ſmall Expence.] I find three Paſſages relating to this, in the Works of the Ex-Jeſuit Jarrige. The firſt is as follows: Father John Adam, one of the beſt Preachers they have, interpreted the Treatiſe of Generation to one Urſuline of the Convent of St Macaire, and gave as exact a Deſcription of the Parts, which contribute to the Procreation of Children, as the Sieur du Laurens in his Anatomy (21). The ſecond contains theſe Words; All thoſe who were of the College of Poictiers in the Year 1646. know the Quarrel between John Adam and James Bi*rout. They attacked each other in ſuch an hoſtile manner,*

(20) Year 1697.

(21) Jarrige, the Jeſuit placed on the Scaffold, cap. 1.

Digitized by Google

ſpoke diſreſpectfully of St Auſtin [L], and who endeavour'd to perſuade, that St Paul often carry'd his Subject farther than it wou'd bear [M], thro' too lively an Imagination.

ner, that, by the Providence of God, all their Impurities came to Light, and James Biroat remained convicted, &c. (22) The third informs us (23), that John Adam, the moſt excellent of their Preachers, was the Son of a Taylor. Of theſe three Paſſages, the firſt alone can hurt the Memory of Father Adam; for the ſecond makes the Impurities, which were diſcovered in conſequence of their Quarrel, fall on Biroat's Head alone. Thus all, that the ſcandalous Chronicle, and private Memoirs, had revealed to Father Jarrige, concerning Father Adam, is reduced to ſome Lectures of Anatomy read to a Nun, on the Generation of Children. Once again, this is to come off cheaply out of the Hands of Jarrige. This will be allowed me by any one, who reflects but the leaſt on the Character of that Author's Works. If he had told us the Nun's Age, we might form a better Judgment of the Nature of the Offence. To diſcourſe on ſuch Points before a young Nun is doubtleſs a great Sin, becauſe it is morally impoſſible but that ſuch a Converſation muſt excite in her impure Thoughts; but I would willingly have a Caſuiſt of good Senſe, who is neither of too looſe, nor too rigid Morals, examine this Queſtion; Would a Nun of ſuch an advanced Age, that ſhe could hear a Lecture of Anatomy on the Organs of Generation, with the ſame Indifference as an Explication of the Parts of the Ear, commit a Sin by her Curioſity in hearing ſuch a Lecture? I believe it will be granted me, that it is very lawful for a Woman, of what Condition ſoever, to be acquainted with all that is ſaid concerning the Circulation of the Blood: It is no Sin for her to know that the moſt ſubtle Parts of the Chyle paſs from the Inteſtines into the Lacteal Veins, and from thence ſucceſſively into the Reſervoir of the Chyle, into the Ductus Thoracicus, into the ſubclavian Vein, into the hollow Vein, into the right Ventricle of the Heart, into the Artery of the Lungs, into the Vein of the Lungs, into the left Ventricle of the Heart, and into the great Artery. There is no harm in her underſtanding the opening and ſhutting of the Valves, which are at the Extremities of the Veins and of the Arteries, the Anaſtomoſes, the Secretion of the Urine, &c. Why then would it be criminal in her to finiſh her Courſe of Anatomy, and to acquaint herſelf minutely with the Structure both of the Internal and external Parts, deſigned for the Procreation of Children? The Crime cannot conſiſt in the bare Knowledge of theſe things; it muſt conſiſt then in the impure Thoughts which might accompany, precede, and follow ſuch a Study: But I ſuppoſe, in the preſent Caſe, the Perſon to be as calm, as if ſhe was ſtudying the Anatomy of the Ear. This is the point, on which the Argument muſt turn. I do not ſet up here for a Caſuiſt, but leave the Queſtion to be decided by thoſe, to whom it properly belongs; and ſhall only remark, that, for the greater Security of their Virtue, it is better, that Perſons, who are not of a Profeſſion, which obliges them to know theſe things, and chiefly thoſe, who have made a Vow of Chaſtity, ſhould never have ſuch a Curioſity, or ever ſatisfy it: So that Father Adam could not have owned the Fact, without acknowledging that he had committed a Fault. The moſt charitable Conſtruction is, that his Pupil had a mind to apply this Maxim; Amare licet, ſi potiri non licet. Dum caremus veris, gaudia falſa juvent.— We may love, tho' we can't enjoy; and, whilſt we are deprived of real Pleaſures, let us divert our ſelves with imaginary ones.

(22) Ibid.

(23) Jarrige, Anſwer to James Beaufes, cap. 14.

A Doubt propoſed to the Caſuiſts on an Anatomical Curioſity.

[L] He was not the firſt, who ſpoke diſreſpectfully of St Auſtin.] Mr Sarrau in a Letter to Mr de Saumaiſe in 1646, tells him that the Jeſuits affirmed every day from the Pulpit, that St Auſtin was not a Rule of Faith, and that he had advanced many things indiſcreetly, to clear himſelf from the Objections, which were made to him. Non eſt hic Pater regula fidei. Ut ſe expediret ab argumentis hæreticorum ſui temporis multa liberius & inconſideratius dixit quibus non tenemur (24). Father Adam, four Days after his Sermon, confeſſed to a Perſon, who repreſented to him the Prejudice his Sermon might cauſe, That Gabriel à Porta, a Jeſuit, ſaid often, that it were to be wiſhed that St Auſtin had never wrote concerning Grace (25). Some Divines had very freely declared, long before the Birth of Janſeniſm, that St Auſtin had puſhed things too far, and that when he determined to oppoſe certain Errors, he receeded ſo far from them, that he generally ran into the oppoſite Extream: For Example, when he oppoſed the Error of the Pelagians, he ſeemed to incline too much towards that of the Manichees; and, in oppoſing the Manichees, he ſeemed to adopt the Hereſy of Pelagius. An Iriſhman, whoſe Name is Paul Leonard, cites Genebrard, Cornelius Muſſus, Biſhop of Bitonto, Cajetanus, and Sixtus Sinenſis, for this (26). But Father Annat cites many others in the ſame Book; wherein he endeavours to prove that St Auſtin is not of Janſenius's Opinion (27). See what Father Norris anſwered to that great Cloud of Witneſſes, produced againſt the great Biſhop of Hippo. Some Proteſtants are not far from the ſame Thought, that St Auſtin over-ſtrained things. I do not ſpeak of the Philoſophical Commentary (28), wherein Father Adam's Judgment is approved in ſome meaſure; nor of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle (29), wherein St Auſtin is repreſented juſt as Father Adam could have deſired it: I ſpeak of Mr Daillé, who not only involves St Auſtin in the general Accuſation he raiſes againſt the Fathers, of ſeeming to fall down one Precipice, when they would ſhun another (30), but charges him likewiſe with having treated his Subjects too much after the fluctuating manner of the Academic Philoſophers (31). A little Book was publiſhed ſome time ago, entituled, An important Advice to Mr Arnaud, on a Project of a new Bibliotheque of Janſeniſt Authors; which ſpeaks of a third Party then forming, which was to be neither Janſeniſt, nor Moliniſt, and which would place St Auſtin between Heaven and Earth, neither too high, nor too low. Such a Medium would reconcile Animoſities, if People would but be reaſonable. Upon this Scheme, every one would be at liberty to be Janſeniſt or Moliniſt, as he pleaſed. Ought it not to ſuffice the Jeſuits that St Auſtin is not a Rule of Faith? Or do they require more in the Books, out of which the Deputies of the Janſeniſts extracted above an hundred Propoſitions levelled againſt the Authority of this Father? (32)

(24) See Sarrau's Letter, pag. 196.

(25) Defence of St Auſtin againſt Father Adam, pag. 24.

(26) Paul Leonard's Anſwer to the Expoſtulat. contra Scientiam mediam, pag. 117, 118.

(27) Annati Auguſtinus vindicatus à Bajanis.

(28) Part 3. pag. 4. See alſo the Supplement, p. 2.

(29) Tom. 14. pag. 287.

(30) Daillé of the Uſe of the Fathers, pag. 153.

(31) Ibid. pag. 393.

[M] To perſuade, that St Paul often carried his Subject farther than it would bear.] There is a Paſſage of Father Cauſſin in the Cenſure of Father Adam's Sermon (33) where St Paul and St Auſtin are compared to "two great Seas, which pour ſo violently over one "Shore, by the impetuoſity of the Wind, that they "ſeem as if they would leave the other dry for a "while; but as the Ocean after having ſpread itſelf "largely on one ſide, returns within the Bounds pre"ſcribed to it by God; ſo theſe, after having launch'd "out againſt the rebellious Spirits, which riſe againſt "the Truth, return to a peaceable Equality, to edify "the Houſe of God *." This is that Wheel which takes more Turns than it is commanded, to which we have ſeen that Miniſter compare the prophetic Spirit (34). St Paul and St Auſtin overflow their Banks ſometimes, but, like the Tide, they return afterwards to the Bounds which God has ſet them. A fine way of anſwering all the Paſſages of St Paul which diſpleaſe! It is but ſaying he had then overflowed all the Country, and that his Return muſt be expected into the Channel, which God had allotted him. Sir Edwin Sandis informs me of a thing, which is too much to the Purpoſe to be omitted here. He ſays (35), I have it from very good Hands, that in Italy they have ſuch a lively Jealouſy againſt ſome Parts of the Scripture, and chiefly againſt the Epiſtles of St Paul, that not long ago ſome Jeſuits, exalting St Peter as an excellent Man, in their public Sermons, and among their Favourers in private Converſation, cenſured St Paul as a Perſon of a petulant and hot Brain, who in moſt of his Diſputes had ſuffered himſelf to be carried away ſo immoderately by the Sallies of his Zeal, and the Acrimony of his Spirit, that no great account was to be made of his Aſſertions; and that the reading of him is very dangerous, ſavouring of Hereſy in divers Places; and perhaps it had been better that he had never writ. In conformity to which I have heard Roman Catholics ſay many times, that they have already often conſulted among themſelves about cenſuring and reforming St Paul's Epiſtles. Though, to ſpeak my Sentiments, I cannot give credit to it; the

(32) In 1653. See the Hiſtorical Memorial concerning the five Propoſitions, p. 82.

(33) Pag. 17.

* In his Holy Court, Tom. 3. Maxim 6. of Predeſtination.

(34) Above, towards the end of the Remark [E].

(35) Account of Religion, chap. 26. pag. 215.

Digitized by Google

Undertaking in itſelf being ſo blaſphemous and abominable, and the Scandal ſo deſperate in theſe Times. But, however, it is certain, that they eſteem St Paul below all the ſacred Writers: And I can affirm from my own Knowledge and Hearing, that ſome of them teach in their Pulpits, that that holy Apoſtle had no other Aſſurance of his Doctrine, than the Conferences he had with St Peter; and that he durſt not publiſh his Epiſtles before St Peter had approved them. Behold the Abſurdity of theſe Men! If the Epiſtles of St Paul were approv'd by St Peter, they are as authentic as can be deſired.

ADAM (MELCHIOR) liv'd in the XVIIth Century. The indefatigable Care he took to collect, frame, and publiſh the Lives of a great number of learned Perſons, deſerves, that ſomebody ſhould do him the like Office; and yet I think no body has yet done it. Mr Moreri undertook to record him, but he forgot his Promiſe when the Time of performing it preſented itſelf (a). The Promiſe and the Non-performance have ſubſiſted hitherto in all the Editions of his Dictionary (b). One would think it difficult to forget a Writer, to whom we are oblig'd for ſo many Articles. As for me, who find my ſelf very much indebted to his Labours, I would teſtify my Gratitude to him by giving the Particulars of his Life at large, but I can no where find the neceſſary Materials for it. All that I have met with is as follows: MELCHIOR ADAM was born in the Territory of Grotkaw in Sileſia, and perform'd his Studies in the College of Brieg, where the Dukes of that Name took great Care to encourage Literature, and chiefly the Reform'd Religion (c), I mean that, which a Roman-Catholic would call Calviniſm. The young Man learn'd to be a good Proteſtant in that School. To continue his Studies, he had his Share in the Bounty, which a great Lord (d) beſtow'd for the Maintenance of a certain number of Scholars. He became Rector of a College at Heidelberg (e), and it was in that City that he publiſh'd the firſt Volume of his Illuſtrious Men in the Year 1615. The firſt Volume, which contain'd the Philoſophers, and, under that Name, the Poets, the Humaniſts, the Hiſtorians, &c. was follow'd by three others: That, which contain'd the Divines, was printed in the Year 1619. That of the Civilians follow'd it; and laſtly, That of the Phyſicians. Theſe two laſt were printed in 1620. All the Learned, whoſe Lives we ſee in theſe Four Volumes in 8*vo.* liv'd in the XVIth. Century, or in the beginning of the XVIIth. and are Germans or Dutchmen; but there is a Series of twenty Divines of other Countries, whoſe Lives our Author publiſh'd ſeparately in the Year 1618. All his Divines are Proteſtants. Although he compos'd but few Lives, yet he beſtow'd much time on that Work, and took great pains with it, becauſe he abridg'd the Writings, which furniſh'd him with the Materials; whether they were Lives properly ſo call'd, or Funeral Orations, Programmas, Elogies, Prefaces, or Family Memoirs. I ſay nothing of the Summaries, which he plac'd in very great numbers in the Margin. He omitted ſome Perſons, who were no leſs conſiderable, than many of thoſe he has taken notice of [A]. The Lutherans are not pleas'd with him (f): they find him too partial, and will not allow his Collection to ſerve as a Rule to judge of the German Literati by (g). He died in the Year 1622. He compos'd other Works [B]. Conſult Mr Baillet, in the 177th and 178th pages of the 2d Tome of his Judgment of the Learned.

(a) Under the Word ADAM, he ſays look for MELCHIOR ADAM; but when we turn to Melchior, we meet with nothing about him.

(b) This I wrote in June 1698.

(c) Melch. Adam in Epiſt. Dedicat. German. Theol.

(d) Joach. Bergerus. See the Epiſtle Dedic. of his German Philoſophers.

(e) Henn. Witte, Diarium Biogr.

(f) See Konig, Bibl. Vet. & Nov. pag. 8. who refers to Henningus Witte, Præfat. Memor. Theologor. pag. 17, 18.

(g) Morhofius Polyhiſt. pag. 192, 209.

[A] He omitted ſome Perſons, who were no leſs conſiderable, than many of thoſe he has taken notice of.] He acknowledges this himſelf; but he declares that there was no Affectation in it, and that a want of Memoirs was the only Cauſe of it. He propoſed to himſelf to ſupply this Defect in ſome other Volumes. Theſe are his Words; "Quædam mihi monendus aut rogandus "es, mi lector. Primum ne præteritos aut omiſſos "non paucos queraris, haud indignos, qui hoc in "theatro appareant. In eo mea, mi lector, culpa "nulla eſt: ſed penuria fecit hiſtoriæ; quam nanciſci "nullam uſpiam potui. Malui itaque prorſus tacere "de multis præſtantibus viris; quàm, ut ille de Carthagine, pauca dicere, & trita illa Natus eſt; obiit; "ſcribere. Suppleri tamen poterit hic defectus, volente Deo, & mutuas operas tradentibus bonis patriæque amantibus; ſi hujus Voluminis tomus ſecundus fuerit adornatus. Quod idem dictum volo, "de reliquis vitis Juriſconſultorum & Politicorum, Medicorum, ac Philoſophorum (1). —— I have ſome things, Reader, to inform you of, and ſome things to requeſt of you. Firſt, that you would not complain of the Omiſſion of many Perſons, not unworthy to appear upon this Stage. The Fault, Reader, is not my own, but is owing to the want of Materials, which I could by no means procure. I choſe therefore to ſay nothing of many excellent Perſons, rather, than like him of Carthage, to ſay but little, and to write down the thread-bare Account, He was born; he died. However, this Defect may be ſupplied, God willing, and by the Aſſiſtance of good Men, and Lovers of their Country; when the ſecond Tome of this Work ſhall be prepared. Which Notice I deſire may be underſtood to regard the other Lives of Civilians, Politicians, Phyſicians, and Philoſophers."

[B] He compos'd other Works.] To wit, Apographum monumentorum Heidelbergenſium. Notæ in Orationem Julii Cæſaris Scaligeri pro M. T. Cicerone contra Ciceronianum Eraſmi. Parodiæ & Metaphraſes Horatianæ (2). It is not true, as is aſſerted in the Catalogue of Oxford, that he was the Author of an Hiſtoria Eccleſiaſtica Eccleſiæ Hamburgenſis & Bremenſis. It is the Work of a Canon of Bremen, whoſe Name is Adam, who lived in the XIth Century. Conringius and Poſſevinus, who placed him in the Xth, are miſtaken. See Mollerus, at the 65th Page of the firſt part of the Iſagoge ad Hiſtoriam Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ.

(1) Melch. Adam. Præfat. Theol. Germanor.

(2) Ex Dirio Biogr. Hen. Witte.

ADAM, a Joyner of Nevers, and a French Poet. Look for BILLAUT.

ADAMITES (a), a ridiculous Sect, which, according to ſome Authors, was a Branch of the Carpocratians and Valentinians (b). Theodoret aſſigns one Prodicus as it's Founder [A]. St Epiphanius pretends, that they deriv'd their Name of Adamites from (a) St Auſtin gives them the Name of Adamiani, after St Epiphanius, who calls them Ἀδαμιανοί.

(1) Theodoret. Hær. Fab. lib. 1.

(2) Baron. ad Ann. 175. num. 33.

(b) See Danæus upon Auguſt. de Hæreſ. cap. 31.

[A] Theodoret aſſigns one Prodicus as it's Founder (1)]. Baronius places him in the Year 120, and makes him more antient than Valentinus; which induces him in another place (2) to cenſure thoſe, who reckon him among the Diſciples of Valentinus. If this be true, Lambertus Danæus, whom I have cited, deſerves no Credit: I ſhall ſpeak of this Prodicus in a ſeparate Article.

Digitized by Google

from one Adam, who liv'd at the time, when they were ſo call'd (c). It is more likely, that Adam, the Stock of all Human kind was the Original, whence this Name was borrowed, as St Auſtin informs us (d); for theſe Wretches imitated the Nakedneſs, in which our firſt Parents liv'd, during the State of Innocency, and condemn'd Marriage, becauſe Adam did not know Eve till after his Fall, and Expulſion from Paradiſe. They believ'd, then, that if Man had perſevered in his Innocency, there would have been no Marriage. Therefore they made Profeſſion of Continency, and a Monaſtic Life (e). As for their Nakedneſs, they only obſerv'd it, when they were aſſembled for the Exerciſe of their Religion (f) [B]. Their Place of meeting was in a Stove, where they expell'd the Cold by means of a Fire kindled under the Chamber; they put off their Cloaths upon going into it; and Men and Women ſat together, the Eccleſiaſtics as well as the Laity, in the ſame condition as when they came out of their Mothers Womb. They ſeated themſelves without Order upon Benches, rais'd one above the other; then they perform'd their Devotions; after which they put on their Cloaths again, and went home. Whoever committed an offence, was no more receiv'd into their Aſſembly [C]. They ſaid, that ſuch an One, having, like Adam, eat of the forbidden Fruit, was to be driven, like him, out of Paradiſe; ſo theſe People call'd their Church. This is St Epiphanius's Account of this Sect [D], not founded on the Authority of Books, or the Report of any one among them; but on the Relation of ſome other Perſons. He does not know, whether this Sect was entirely aboliſh'd in his time, or whether it was yet ſubſiſting

(c) Epiphan. in Synopſi Tomi 1. lib. 2. p. 397.

(d) Auguſt. de Hæreſ. cap. 31.

(e) See the Remark [C].

(f) Epiph. Hæreſ. 52.

[B] They only obſerv'd it, when they were aſſembled for the Exerciſe of their Religion.] Danæus is in the wrong, then, when he places among their Errors, that Chriſtians of both Sexes ought to go naked in the Streets. Oportere Chriſtianos homines verſari in PUBLICO, in cœtu Eccleſiæ, in precibus, nudos, ſive mares ſint ſive fœminæ (3).

(3) Danæus, in Auguſt. de Hær. cap. 31. fol. 83.

[C] Was no more received into their Aſſembly.] St Epiphanius teſtifies, that theſe Perſons profeſt Continency, and the monaſtic Life, and that they condemn'd Marriage. Μονάζοντες τὸ ἀγκρατεύεσθαι ὄντες, καὶ γάμον μὴ δεχόμενοι (4). —— Monachorum ac continentium inſtituta ſectantur, nuptiaſque condemnant. So that we cannot doubt, but that their Diſcipline condemn'd Fornication and Adultery, and that they excommunicated thoſe from their Aſſemblies, who were guilty of theſe Crimes. And it is obſervable, that though this ancient Father will not allow of what the Adamites pretended, namely, that they ſtripp'd themſelves naked, becauſe they were no more aſhamed of their Nakedneſs, than Adam was; I ſay, it is remarkable, that though St Epiphanius rather attributes their Conduct to an inſatiable Luſt, which required Incitements in view (5); yet he does not ſay, that any impure Actions were committed in their Aſſemblies. So that Baronius falſly charges him with calling their Aſſemblies Brothels, lupanaria. He made uſe of the Terms φωλεὸς latibulum, and σπήλυγα, caverna (6), implying a Den, Cave, or Cavern; as appears by his remarking, that it is the Name he would give to Hæretical Conventicles; where he plainly alludes to what is ſaid in the Goſpel, that They (the Buyers and Sellers in the Temple) had made the Houſe of God a Den of Thieves (7). The Notion of corporeal Impurity, or carnal Commerce between the Sexes, has no room here. Father Gaultier is much in the wrong then, to ſay, in citing St Epiphanius, That the Adamites, leaving their Cloaths at the Door of their Aſſemblies, mix'd indifferently with the Women, which fell in their Way, mulieribus promiſcuè utentes (8). As for the Citation of Alphonſus de Caſtro, which we ſee after That of St Epiphanius, in the Margin of Father Gaultier, it only multiplies the Number of Falſe Accuſers. Lambertus Danæus, who accuſes the Adamites of the ſame Impurity, does not cite St Epiphanius, but Clemens Alexandrinus, quoted by Theodoret. "Extinctis "in ſuo cœtu lucernis, promiſcue coëunt, quemad- "modum ex Clemente Strom. notat Theodoretus (9). "—— Putting out the Lights in their Aſſemblies, "they mix promiſcuouſly, as Theodoret remarks from "Clement. Strom." It will ſoon appear that this Paſſage was not produc'd to the purpoſe. It is ſomething ſtrange, that neither St Epiphanius, nor St Auſtin, heard of any ſuch thing; for Fame ſeldom lets ſuch Tranſactions die, when once it has them in her Power, unleſs they are found to be notoriouſly falſe. Yet it does not always happen that Fame loſes it's hold even in this Caſe. See, in the following Remark, the means of reconciling theſe two Fathers with Clemens Alexandrinus.

(4) Epiphan. in Synopſi Tom. 1. lib. 2. pag. 397.

(5) Ἔνθεν ἀκωφείᾳ ἡδονῆς κόραις ὀφθαλμῶν ἐμπεσίσης τὴν θήλειαν. Id initiatæ, libidini tribuunt quæ ejuſmodi oculis illecebras objicit. Epiphan. Hær. 52. pag. 460.

(6) Ibid. pag. 459.

(7) Matth. xxi. 12.

(8) Gaulter. Tab. Chronogr. Seculo 2. cap. 33.

(9) Danæus, ubi ſupra.

[D] This is St Epiphanius's account of this Sect.] He does not ſay, that every Man ſeiz'd his Woman in their Aſſemblies: This has been touch'd upon in the preceeding Remark. Neither does he impute to them the Hereſies of Prodicus which Father Gaultier gives a Liſt of (10), and which Moreri imputes to them in general. But Moreri is not ſo much to blame in this, as in aſſerting, That St Epiphanius calls their Temples infamous Places on account of the abominable Crimes, which they committed in thoſe Caves of Horror and Proſtitution. This Author adds, That they rejected Prayer. Danæus ſays the ſame, on the Credit of Clemens Alexandrinus. "Deum "à nobis precandum & orandum eſſe negant, quia "ſcit ipſe per ſe quibus egeamus. Clemens hoc de "illis tradit. Lib. 7. Strom. (11) —— They deny, "that we ought to pray to God, becauſe of himſelf "he knows our Wants. Clemens reports this of "them in his Strom. Book 7." Yet St Epiphanius and St Auſtin ſay the contrary; Γυμνοὶ γὰρ ὡς ἐκ μητρὸς —— συνάγονται, καὶ ἕστως τὰς ἀναγνώσεις καὶ εὐχὰς καὶ πᾶν ὅτιῶν ἐκτελοῦσι. They aſſemble, as naked as they came out of their Mothers Wombs, and in this Condition they read and ſay their PRAYERS, and perform their other Exerciſes of Religion. Thus ſpeaks St Epiphanius, in the Summary of the 2d Book of the 1ſt Tome: And St Auguſtin's Words are, "Nudi itaque "mares fœminæque conveniunt, nudi lectiones au- "diunt, nudi ORANT, nudi celebrant ſacramenta "(12). —— The Men and Women meet together na- "ked; they hear Sermons naked; they ſay their "Prayers naked; and adminiſter the Sacraments "naked." The means of reconciling theſe two laſt Fathers with Clemens Alexandrinus would be, to ſuppoſe that the Adamites, to whom the latter gives Prodicus for Founder, did not follow all the Errors of Prodicus. This Suppoſition has nothing extraordinary in it. Generally thirty or forty Years are ſufficient to render the Principles of a Sect very unlike thoſe of it's Founder. Therefore it betrays want of exactneſs to attribute all the Extravagancies of Prodicus to the Adamites, under pretence that he was their Founder. In truth it is certain, from the Teſtimony of St Epiphanius and St Auſtin, that they ſtript themſelves quite naked in their Aſſemblies; but Clemens Alexandrinus (ſo far is he from ſaying any ſuch thing of the Followers of Prodicus) obſerves, that before they came to an Engagement, they caus'd the Candles to be taken away, which might have put them to the bluſh. Τὸ καταισχῦνον αὐτῶν τὴν πορνικὴν ταύτην δικαιοσύνην ἐκποδὼν ποιησαμένης φῶς τῆς τοῦ λύχνου περιπροπῆ μιγνυσθαι (13). Lumine amoto, quod eorum fornicaturiam hanc juſtitiam pudore afficiebat, averſa lucerna coire. So that Danæus had no Reaſon to apply to the Adamites, what that Father reported of the Followers of Prodicus. In a Word, when I conſider the Calumnies of the Pagans againſt the Primitive Chriſtians, and thoſe of the Catholics againſt the Proteſtants, as to their Nocturnal Aſſemblies, I do not readily believe all the Imputations of the prevailing Party.

(10) Ubi ſupra.

(11) Ibid.

(12) Auguſt. de Hæreſ. cap. 31.

(13) Clem. Alex. Strom. lib. 3. pag. 430.

[E] In

Digitized by Google

subsisting. Evagrius makes mention of some Monks of Palestine, who, thro' an excess of Devotion, and to mortify their Bodies, went, Men as well as Women, into solitary Places, quite naked, excepting those Parts, which Modesty forbids to name; where they expos'd themselves in a very strange manner [E] to the Extremities both of Heat and Cold (g). We shall speak of the Modern ADAMITES, under the Article PICARDS. I find, that both Catholics and Protestants reproach each other [F] with having Adamites among them: but perhaps neither Party has more reason than the other for this Charge. If I had no other Authority, than that of Lindanus (b), I shou'd scarce believe, that, in the year 1535, Adamites were seen in Amsterdam, among the richest and most noble Families, who ran about stark naked; some of whom were fanatical enough to climb up on Trees, where they waited in vain for Bread to fall from Heaven to them, till they fell themselves half dead to the ground. I shall quote an Author (i) in another place (k) who attests part of these Facts.

(g) Evagr. Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 21.

(b) Lindan. Dubitantii Dial. 2. pag. 171.

(i) Lambert. Hortens. in Hist. Tumult. Anabaptist.

(k) In the Remarks of the Article PICARDS.

[E] In a very strange manner.] They outdid the other Monks, whom the same Evagrius mentions; who, having no Garment of their own, (since the same, which one Monk wore one Day, served another the next Day) had, at least, the use of some Garment (14). The Solitaries, of whom I speak, were satisfied with wearing only a Girdle, and as for the rest, they renounc'd Humanity as much as they could; they would not eat of the Food which serv'd other Men; but fed like Beasts, and eat but just as much as would keep them alive: At last they became like Beasts; their Figure alter'd, and their Sentiments also. When they saw other Persons, they ran away, and if they found themselves pursued, they fled, as fas as they could, to some inaccessible Hole. Some of them appeared in publick again, and pretended to be Fools, to shew the greater contempt of Glory. They went to eat in public Houses; they entered into the public Baths; they convers'd, and wash'd, with the other Sex; but with so much Insensibility, that neither the Sight, nor Touch, nor even the embraces of a Woman, caus'd any Emotion in them. They were Men with the Men, and Women with the Women; they would be of both Sexes. Μετὰ ἀνδρῶν δὲ ἄνδρας εἶναι, μετὰ γυναικῶν τε αὖ γυναῖκας, ἑκατέρας τε μετέχειν ἰθέλειν Φύσεως, καὶ μὴ μιᾶς εἶναι (15) —— Cum viris quidem viri sunt, fœminæ vero cum fœminis; non enim unius, sed utriusque simul sexûs, esse cupiunt. It is likely they had not much trouble in counterfeiting the Fool, and that they were so in reality; we may, at least, apply to them what Rutilius Numatianus said, though unjustly, of all kinds of Solitaries:

(14) Evagr. Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. c. 21.

(15) Ibid.

Quænam perversi rabies tam stulta cerebri
Dum mala formides, nec bona posse pati (16)?

What Madness 'tis, whilst Evil you avoid,
To fly the Good, and leave it unenjoy'd?

(16) Rutil. Itiner. lib. 1. ver. 445.

Lastly, Their Nakedness was very contrary to the Principles of those Religious, of whom I shall speak in the following Remark, neither would it agree well with the Doctrine of Father Sanchez.

[F] Reproach each other.] Mr Moreri assures us, that there are Adamites in England, who hold their Assemblies by Night, and teach only these Words, Swear, Forswear, and do not discover the Secret. It was proper to inform him, in the Edition of Amsterdam, that there were no such People in England, that the Civil Government there is too good to suffer an Infamy of that nature, which could not be concealed, and that it is likewise very improbable, that there are any in Poland; for he had said, that there are still remaining some of these mistaken People in that Country. He could not defend himself, by saying that he does not pretend, that these People shew themselves naked in public, but only that they undress themselves in their Nocturnal Meetings, which the best Government may be ignorant of; I say, he could not alledge this in his Justification, since he just before mentioned the Adamites of Bohemia, who went always naked, as is pretended. So that, if Mr Moreri understood what he said, he must assert, that there are yet People in England, both Men and Women, who go always naked, out of a Principle of Religion. Now this is what the Government would not suffer, and cannot be ignorant of. Behold here a Catholic who maintains, that there are Adamites in Protestant Countries. I say nothing of those idle and ridiculous Stories concerning Holland, which are to be seen in the Sorberiana, pag. 17. Let us produce, on the other side, a Minister who says there are Monks in Italy call'd Adamites, who go naked, in consequence of the Vow they make, and in compliance with the most sacred Rules of their Order. " Ac ne nunc quidem, says " he (17), nomen ejus (hæresis Adamianorum) ex- " taret, nisi Monachi quidam, qui se falso pietatis & " vitæ austeritatis prætextu commendant, horum hæ- " reticorum impudentes prorsus mores retinuissent, " & inter sanctissima ordinis & regulæ suæ præcepta " posuissent, quales ii qui etiam nunc hodie Adamitæ " dicuntur, vigentque plurimum in Italia —— Vivunt, " enim nudi, non necessitate quidem adacti vel inopia " vestimentorum, sed ex voti professione. —— The " very Name of this Heresy (of the Adamites) would " be extinct, did not certain Monks, who recommend " themselves under the false Pretence of Piety and " Austerity of Life, retain the very impudent Manners " of these Heretics, and place them among the most sa- " cred Precepts of their Order and Institution; such " as are Those, who even at this time are called Ada- " mites, and flourish chiefly in Italy. —— For they " live naked, not compelled by Necessity, or for want " of Garments, but in compliance with their Vow." I wish he had been more eager to prove this Fact, than to make a Comparison between the Conduct of these People, and that of the ancient Monks, who never saw themselves naked (18), and who said, that a Man of their Profession could not contemplate his own Nudity, without behaving unworthy of himself (19). A modern Casuist, who is none of the most rigid (20), counts it nevertheless a venial Sin, propria verenda aspicere ex quadam curiositate absque alia mala intentione; and a mortal Sin, aspicere verenda alterius sexus, operta vestibus ita subtilibus, ut parum aspectui obstent (21). To see a Person, of a different Sex, swim naked, is, according to him, a mortal Sin. Two Men of a grave Character, as two Bishops, who should look upon each other naked, commit, says he (22), a mortal Sin. De Bernia tells us of a Man, who never handled his Pudenda without his Gloves (23). Why might not a Casuist require, that a Man should abstain from touching them naked, as well as from contemplating them naked? An ancient Philosopher, thro' an Affectation of Chastity, never touched them with, or without a Glove; he receeded in that respect very far from the Principle of Anacharsis (24). This ancient Philosopher was the severe Xenocrates. Aristoteles, irridens Chalcedonium Xenocratem, quod mejendo virilibus non admoveret manum, inquit, " puræ quidem manus at inquinata " mens (25)."

(17) Lamb. Danæus in Aug. Hær. cap. 31.

(18) Apud Socrat. Hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 23. & Sozomen. lib. 1. c. 13.

(19) See in the Historia Ludicra of Balthasar Bonifacius, pag. 181. how St Jerome maintain'd, that a Virgin ought to blush at seeing herself naked; and some Examples of this quoted by Theodoret.

(20) Sanchez de Matrimon. lib. 9. Disputat. 46. n. 27, 28.

(21) Ibid. n. 25, 26.

(22) Ib. n. 27, 28.

(23) Apud la Mothe le Vayer, Hexam. Rust. pag. 79.

(24) See Plutarch de Garrulitate, pag. 505, & Clemens Alexand. lib. 5. Stromat. pag. 508.

We shall prove in the Remark [N] of the Article HADRIAN VI, that la Mothe, le Vayer ought not to have taken the Passage of Bernia in a literal Sense.

(25) Athen. lib. 12. p. 530.

Digitized by Google

ADONIS, Minion of the Goddeſs Venus, was the Son of Cinyras King of Cyprus [A]. The Poets have pretended, that Myrrha (a), that King's Daughter (b), became ſo deſperately in Love with her Father, that ſhe caus'd her ſelf to be introduc'd into his Bed, without his knowing who ſhe was. Some ſay ſhe made uſe of the Artifice of Lot's Daughters (c). Adonis was the Fruit of this Inceſt. He was perfectly beautiful, and appeared ſo lovely in the Eyes of Venus, that ſhe ſtole him away [B], and devoted herſelf wholly to his Company. Heaven itſelf ſeem'd an unpleaſant abode to her in Compariſon of the Hills and Woods, where ſhe follow'd Adonis, who was a great Hunter [C]. Judge whether the Poets did not exert all the Figures of their Art (d), to repreſent the inexpreſſible Grief, which ſeized the Heart of that Goddeſs, when a wild Boar had kill'd her dear Adonis [D]. Never was a Mourning

(a) See the Article MYRRHA.

(b) Ovid. Metam. lib. 10. v. 337.

(c) Hygin. cap. 164.

(d) Ovidii Metam. lib. 10. Bion εἰδύλλ. α. See alſo Theocritus, εἰδύλλ. λά. ...nd among the Moderns Mr Menage in his Greek Poems, pag. 167.

[A] The Son of Cinyras King of Cyprus.] Almoſt all Authors agree that Cinyras reigned in that Iſland (1), though ſome have ſaid, that he firſt reigned in Aſſyria (2). See the Article BYBLUS. Ovid makes him to be born in the Iſland of Cyprus; but he ſays, That Myrrha, flying from her Father who would have killed her, after he had diſcovered her Inceſt, travelled through Arabia, and was delivered of Adonis, in the Country of the Sabæi (3). He would have done well to have remarked in few Words, that Cinyras had paſt from the Iſland of Cyprus to Arabia, or that Myrrha had embarked in that Iſland. When Adonis was born, his Mother had been already metamorphoſed into the Tree, from whence Myrrh diſtils. We underſtand from Ptolomy, the Son of Hephæſtion, That Venus, ſeeking Adonis, of whoſe Death ſhe had heard, found him at Argos, a City of Cyprus, in the Temple of Erithian Apollo. Whence ſome have affirmed, that he was killed in that Iſland. Propertius is of this Number, when he ſays in the thirteenth Elegy of the ſecond Book,

(1) See Meurſius of the Iſland of Cyprus, lib. 2. cap. 9.

(2) Apollod. lib. 3. pag. 238.

(3) Metam. lib. 10. ver. 480, & 513.

Teſtis, qui niveum quondam percuſſit Adonim
Venantem Idalio vertice, durus aper.

Witneſs the cruel Boar, fated to kill Adonis, hunting on th' Idalian Hill.

There was a Temple of Adonis and Venus at Amathûs in the Iſland of Cyprus (4). Strabo ſays, that Byblus was the Reſidence of King Cinyras, and that there were ſome Temples of Adonis to be ſeen there (5). Note, That Antoninus Liberalis relates, that Myrrha, whom he calls Smyrna, was born on Mount Libanus, and that her Father's Name was Theias (6). Panyaſis plainly gave him the ſame Name, and not that of Thoas, as we read at preſent in Apollodorus (7). We read the ſame likewiſe in Probus, on the tenth Eclogue of Virgil, with this additional Circumſtance, that the ſaid Thoas was King of Syria and Arabia: Probus borrowed this from Antimachus.

(4) Pauſan. in Bœoticis.

(5) Strabo, lib. 16. pag. 520.

(6) Antonin. Liberalis, cap. 34.

(7) See Muncker's Notes on Hygin. cap. 58.

[B] She ſtole him away.] This Fact was but little remarked by the ancient Writers: I wonder at it; for it was univerſally known. The Painters made it the Subject of their Pictures, as they did the Rape of Ganymede. This Plautus informs us of.

ME. Dic mihi; numquà vidiſti tabulam pictam in pariete,
Ubi aquila catamitum raperet, aut ubi Venus Adoneum?
PE. Sæpe (8).

(8) Plaut. in Menæchmis Act. 1. Sc. 2. v. 34.

ME. Tell me; did you never ſee a Picture on a Wall, where the Eagle carries away the Catamite, or Venus Adonis?
PE. Often.

[C] An unpleaſant Abode to her in compariſon of the —— Woods, where ſhe followed Adonis, who was a great Hunter.] Read this Paſſage of Ovid:

Abſtinet & cœlo: cœlo præfertur Adonis:
Hunc tenet: huic comes eſt: aſſuetaque ſemper in umbra
Indulgere ſibi, formamque augere colendo,
Per juga, per ſilvas dumoſaque ſaxa vagatur (9).

(9) Ovid. Metam. lib. 10. ver. 532.

Ev'n Heav'n itſelf with all it's Sweets unſought,
Adonis far a ſweeter Heav'n is thought.
On him ſhe hangs, and fonds with every Art;
And never, never knows from him to part.
She, whoſe ſoft Limbs had only been diſplay'd
On roſie Beds beneath the Myrtle Shade,
Whoſe pleaſing Care was to improve each Grace,
And add more Charms to an unrivall'd Face,
Now, buskin'd, like the Virgin Huntreſs, goes
Thro' Woods, and pathleſs Wilds, and Mountain Snows. EUSDEN.

Virgil repreſents Adonis under another Idea than that of a Hunter,

Nec te pœniteat pecoris, divine poeta,
Et formoſus oves ad flumina pavit Adonis (10).

(10) Virgil. Ecl. 10. ver. 18.

The Sheep ſurround their Shepherd, as he lies:
Bluſh not, ſweet Poet, nor the Name deſpiſe;
Along the Streams his Flock Adonis fed,
And yet the Queen of Beauty bleſt his Bed. DRYDEN.

Few Authors, I think, have repreſented this Favourite of Venus under the Character of a Shepherd. Servius, upon this Paſſage, relates ſome Particulars no leſs different from the common Tradition, than This. Some have ſaid, that he was inſpired by the Muſes with this Inclination for Hunting (11). It ſeems they bore a Grudge to Venus, for cauſing ſome of them to fall in Love with Mortals. To be revenged of her, they ſung ſeveral Airs before Adonis, which gave him a violent Paſſion for Hunting. Perhaps he became odious to Diana upon this Account: for two of a Trade ſeldom agree. Whence ſome have ſaid, that Diana's Anger was the Occaſion of a wild Boar's killing this Boy (12).

(11) Tzetzes on Lycophron.

(12) Apollod. lib. 3. pag. 238.

[D] When a wild Boar had killed her dear Adonis.] Theocritus feigns, that Venus, having cauſed the wild Boar to be brought before her, chid him roughly; but that he alledged in his Excuſe the violent Paſſion, which had ſeized him at the Sight of ſo fine a Thigh: that he was eager to kiſs it; but did it in too paſſionate a manner; that he was ſo diſpleaſed with himſelf for what he had done, that he thought his Tusks deſerved to be cut off, and that he burnt them himſelf (13). Thus a learned and polite Writer (14) explained the laſt Verſe of that Idyll of Theocritus. The Editions have it ἔκαιε τὺς ἔρωτας, exuſſit amores; but he believes it ſhould be read ὀδόντας, dentes, inſtead of ἔρωτας. This cruel Kiſs puts me in mind of a Thought of the Chevalier Marini: He introduces the God Pan, who boaſts that the Spots which are ſeen in the Moon, are Impreſſions of the Kiſſes he gave it. Surely he attacked her very forcibly. What Careſſes! by adding a little more to them, they would be like thoſe of Apes, who, it is ſaid, ſmother their young ones ſometimes with embracing them. What would Horace have ſaid to this, ſince upon a much ſlighter Occaſion, he expreſſes himſelf thus,

(13) Theocriti Εἰδύλλ. 31, or 30. according to other Editions.

(14) Mr de Longe-Pierre: See his Tranſlation of Bion, pag. 47. Edit. of Paris 1686.

ſive puer furens
Impreſſit memorem dente labris notam.
Non ſi me ſatis audias
Speres perpetuum dulcia barbare
Lædentem oſcula, quæ Venus
Quinta parte ſui neſtaris imbuit (15).

(15) Horat. Od. 13. lib. 1.

Or, when the ruffling amorous Youth
Hath preſs'd thy Lips with eager Tooth,
And left a Mark behind:

Digitized by Google

Mourning more famous, and more immortaliz'd than this; Almoſt all the People in the World perpetuated the memory of it by a long Train of Anniverſary Ceremonies [E]. Some Authors ſay, that it was not a wild Boar, but a God under the Form of that Beaſt, who kill'd Adonis. According to ſome it was Mars (e); according to others Apollo (f). The former ſay, that Mars did it to ſatisfy his Jealouſy, and to be reveng'd of Venus, who preferr'd this Rival before him. The latter ſay, That Apollo was hurry'd to this Exceſs of Violence, to revenge his Son Erymanthus, who was ſtruck blind, for having ſeen Venus, while ſhe was bathing, being newly come from the Arms of her Adonis (g). The place of the Wound ſeems to indicate ſome principle of Jealouſy.

(e) Servius in Eclog. 10. Firm. Matern. pag. 22. Nonnus. Dionyſ. l. 41. Cyrillus in Eſaiam.

(f) Ptolem. Hephæſt. apud Phot. pag. 472.

(g) Διότι ἴδοι λουμένην Ἀφροδίτην ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀδώνιδος μίξεως. Quod poſt congreſſum cum Adonide lavantem Venerem vidiſſet. Ibid.

Trux aper inſequitur, totoſque ſub inguine dentes
Abdidit (b).

And now too late to fly the Boar he ſtrove,
Who in his Groin his Tuſks impetuous drove. EUSDEN.

(b) Ovid. Metam. lib. 10. ver. 715.

But the ſecond Tradition does not agree with their Account, who reported that Adonis was an Hermaphrodite, who enjoy'd Venus as a Male, and, as a Female, gave himſelf to Apollo (i). Others, without aſcribing to him both Sexes, have not ſcrupled to ſay that he was the Minion of Venus and Bacchus [F]. There is a Scholiaſt, who aſſures

(i) Ptolem. Hephæſt. ubi ſupra, pag. 485.

Coy Lydia, all thy Hopes are vain,
Still to endure the pleaſing Pain
Of a ſurprizing Kiſs;
Which Venus doth in Nectar ſteep,
And hang upon the balmy Lip,
To draw us on to Bliſs.
CREECH.

Perhaps we may ſpeak of theſe amorous Bites under the Article FLORA.

Note, That a very good Critic has informed me that the Correction ὀδόντας for ἔρωτας is not neceſſary. He ſays, the true Explication of that Verſe is, That the Boar τῷ πυρὶ προσελθών, caſting himſelf into the Fire, ἔκαιε τὼς ἔρωτας, burnt at the ſame time his Love. There is not only Reaſon, but alſo ſome Wit in ſaying, that this Boar, being firſt burnt by his Love, had in his turn found the means to burn it. Politian made uſe of this Thought in the Epigram, which he made on Picus Mirandula who caſt his Love Verſes into the Fire. Add to all this, that it is very difficult to imagine how the amorous Boar could have put his Teeth into the Fire, and burnt them, without burning himſelf likewiſe.

(16) Venus in the 31ſt Idyll. of Theocr. calls him her Huſband. Σύμῳ τὸν ἄνδρ' ἔτυψας; Tun' meum virum percuſſiſti? Bion in his Idyll. on the Death of Adonis repreſents Venus βοώσα τοῖσιν, calling upon her Huſband: & Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. 3. pag. 360. ſpeaks of a Venus of Syria, married to Adonis. See the 15th Idyll of Theocritus, & Firm. Maternus, de Err. Prof. Relig. pag. 21.

[E] Long Train of Anniverſary Ceremonies.] Ariſtophanes, in his Comedy of Peace, reckons the Feaſt of Adonis among the chief Feſtivals of the Athenians. Almoſt all the People of Greece celebrated it: The Women acted the chief Part in it, in lamenting the Death of this Gallant, or Husband, of Venus (16). " Fœminæ miſerabili planctu in primævo flore ſuciſam ſpem gentis ſolitis fletibus conclamabant, ut " lacrymare cultrices Veneris ſæpe ſpectantur in ſollemnibus Adonidis ſacris (17). —— The Women, " with mournful Cries, bewailed the Hopes of " the People cut off in the Flower of his Age; " in like manner as the Votaries of Venus are " often ſeen to do, upon the ſolemn Feſtivals of " Adonis." They repreſented Funerals in Picture, as Plutarch tells us in the Life of Alcibiades, and in that of Nicias. The Courtezans were not the leaſt forward to celebrate this great Solemnity, as may be gathered from a Paſſage of the Poet Diphilus, reported by Athenæus (18). They did not forget to make two Beds, on one of which they laid the Figure of Venus, and on the other that of Adonis. This is what we learn from Theocritus (19). The Wits laugh'd at a religious Worſhip, which conſiſted in weeping. " Quid abſurdius, quam —— homines " jam morte deletos reponere in Deos, quorum omnis cultus eſſet futurus in luctu (20). —— What " more abſurd, than to deify Perſons already dead, " whoſe worſhip was to conſiſt wholly of Grief?" St Auſtin approves this Raillery; " Sacra ſunt Veneris, ſays he (21), ubi amatus ejus Adonis, aprino " dente extinctus, juvenis formoſiſſimus, plangitur. " —— There are Rites of Venus; wherein her Favourite Adonis, a moſt beautiful Youth, killed by " the Tuſks of a Boar, is commemorated with Lamentations." The People of Syria were yet greater Fools in this reſpect, than the Greeks; for, not contented with Sighing and Weeping, they diſciplined themſelves likewiſe; and, after having whipped themſelves, and wept ſufficiently, they performed the Sacrifice of the Dead to Adonis, and ſhaved their Heads. The Women, who refuſed to be ſhaved, were obliged to proſtitute themſelves a whole Day to Strangers, and the Money which they got by it, was employed in a Sacrifice, which was offered to Venus. The Mourning ended with Joy; for they feigned that Adonis was reſtored to Life. Lucian, who tells us thoſe Circumſtances, ſays farther, that the Syrians pretended that Adonis was killed by a Boar in their Country (22). See the Remark [I] where we ſhall obſerve, among other things, that this Feaſt was ſtill celebrated at Alexandria in St Cyril's Time. The Proceſſion was pompous; for the Queen herſelf carried the Image of Adonis in it. Arſinoe, the Wife of Ptolemy Philadelphus, received the Incenſe of Praiſe from Theocritus for this (23). The Women, who accompanied the Queen, carried Flowers and Fruits, and a hundred other things. 'Tis ſaid, that all theſe, and the Image itſelf of Adonis, were to be caſt into the Sea, or into Fountains. See Heſychius, Zenobius, Suidas, the Scholiaſt of Theocritus, cited by Fabricius at the ſeventy fifth and ſeventy ſixth Pages of his Hierology of the ancient Greeks. The Gardens of Adonis became proverbial to ſignify any thing of no long Continuance. It is plainly in this Senſe, that Plato, Plutarch, and the Emperor Julian made uſe of that Proverb; the Original whereof came from thoſe Pots and Baskets of Flowers, which were carried in Proceſſion at the Feaſt of Adonis. See Eraſmus at the twenty third Page of his Adagies. Laſtly, it is probable that the Celebration of this Feſtival continued as long at Antioch as at Alexandria. Julian, the Apoſtate, made his Entry into the firſt of thoſe Towns in the Year 362. when they celebrated the Feaſt of Adonis there, which was taken for a bad Omen. " Evenerat autem iiſdem " diebus annuo curſu completo Adonia ritu veteri " celebrari, amato Veneris, ut fabulæ fingunt, apri " dente ferali deleto. Et viſum eſt triſte, quod amplam urbem Principumque domicilium introeunte " Imperatore, nunc primum ululabiles undique plan- " ctus & lugubris ſonus audiebantur (24). —— It " happened at the ſame time, that the annual Rites " of Adonis were celebrated, the Favourite of Venus, " as Story tells, who was killed by the Tooth of a " wild Boar. And it ſeemed ominous, that, upon the " Emperor's making his public Entry into a large " City, the Reſidence of Princes, there ſhould be heard " on all Sides Howlings and mournful Cries." A like Accident appeared a bad Omen to the Athenians upon two Occaſions (25).

(17) Amm. Marcell. lib. 19. cap. 1.

(18) Athen. lib. 7. pag. 292.

(19) Theocr. Idyl. 15.

(20) Cicer. de Nat. Deorum. lib. 1. cap. 15.

(21) Auguſt. de Civitat. Dei, lib. 6. cap. 7. See alſo Firm. Matern. ubi ſupra.

(22) Lucian. de Dea Syria.

(23) Theoc. Eidyl. 15. See the Summary of that Idyll.

(24) Amm. Marcell. lib. 22. cap. 9.

(25) Plut. in Alcib. pag. 200. in Nicia, pag. 532.

[F] Minion of Venus and Bacchus.] In the Place, where Athenæus mentions ſome Examples of Ænigmatic Expreſſions (26), he does not forget the the Oracle, which was given to Cinyras; It is as follows:

(26) Athen. lib. 10. cap. 22. pag. 456.

Ὦ Κινύρα

Digitized by Google

assures us, that Adonis was beloved by Jupiter (k); and that Proserpine fell in Love with him in Hell [G]. Yet she had some Compassion for her disconsolate Rival, who earnestly desir'd the Restitution of her Lover (l): She consented to his Absence for six Months, in favour of Venus. It was reported, then, that Adonis pass'd six Months with Venus, and six Months with Proserpine. The Scholiast, whom I have cited, contradicts himself hereupon [H]; and some do not speak so advantageously of Proserpine's Complaisance (m). This division of the Year has been allegoris'd; as if we were to understand by it either the successive Stages of the Seed, which at first lies under ground, and afterwards rises above the Surface of the Earth (n), or the Period of the Sun's alternate Revolution thro' the Southern and Northern Signs of the Zodiac (o). These Explications seem not so solid to me, as the Sentiment of those, who reduce the Fable of Adonis to the History of Osiris (p). The Ancients do not agree about the Country, where the Scene of Adonis was laid; some placing it in Syria, others in the Island of Cyprus, or in Egypt, as will appear in the Remarks. Two things are related of Hercules, very opposite to each other, in relation to our Adonis; one is, that he was in love with him, and that Jealousy made Venus direct the Centaur Nessus how he might lay an Ambush for Hercules (q): The other, That this Hero, seeing many People come out of a Temple, in a City of Macedonia, had a mind to enter and perform his Devotions there; but, hearing that Adonis was the Divinity of the Place, he ridicul'd the Worship paid to him (r). Some report, that Adonis was born of Jupiter, without the concurrence of a Woman (s). St Jerome believ'd, that the Prophet Ezekiel spoke of the Festival of Adonis [I]. Lastly, It is difficult (k) Scholiast. Theocriti in Syracus. sive Eidyl. 15.

(l) Selden. de Diis Syris, lib. 2. cap. 11. pag. 250. and the Remark [I].

(m) See the Remark [G].

(n) Scholiast. Theocriti Eidyll. 15.

(o) Macrobii Saturnal. lib. 1. cap. 21.

(p) See the third Volume of the Bibliotheque Universelle, pag. 7. Berkelius upon Stephen of Byzant. in the Word Ἄμαθος.

(q) Ptol. Hephæst. apud Photium, pag. 473.

(r) Scholiast. Theocriti, ad ver. 21. Eidyll. 5. See also Zenobius & Apostolius in Proverbiis.

(s) Val. Probus in Ecl. 10. Virgil. ex Philo-Stephano.

Ὦ Κινύρα βασιλεῦ Κυπρίων ἀνδρῶν δασυτρώκτων,
Παῖς σοι κάλλιος μὲν ἔφυ θαυμαζέτατός τε
Πάντων ἀνθρώπων, δύο δ' ἀυτὸν δαίμον' ἔχητον
Ἡ μὲν ἐλαυνομένη λαθρίοις ἱρητμοῖς, ὁ δ' ἐλαύνων.

A Son, O Cinyra, is given to thee,
Who fairest of the Human Race shall be:
Two Deities his Favours shall contest;
One he shall press, by t'other shall be prest.

Athenæus adds, that Venus and Bacchus are meant in these Lines; for both of them were in love with Adonis. Plato, the Comic Poet, had reported this Oracle (27). He is not the only Poet, who has taken notice of this Amour of Bacchus. We find two Verses in Plutarch, which tells us, that Bacchus, having seen the Fair Adonis, in the Island of Cyprus, fell in love with him, and carried him away (28). What Plutarch adds, is curious, and may serve upon occasion for a Lesson to those, who give us so many Oriental Genealogies of the Pagan Religion, and Mythology. One of the Personages of Plutarch's Dialogue maintains very seriously and gravely, That Adonis and Bacchus are the same Divinity, and that the Jews abstained from Swine's Flesh because Adonis was killed by a wild Boar. Now he pretends, that their Religion, their Feasts, their Ceremonies were much the same with those practised in Greece to Bacchus; and he says likewise, that their Lecrites were so called from Λύσιος, Ἔυιος, Lysius, Evius, two Names of that Deity. Ausonius declares, that Bacchus, Osiris, Adonis, &c. were one and the same God (29). Macrobius goes yet farther (30).

(27) In Adonide, apud Athen. lib. 10. cap. 22. pag. 456.

(28) Plut. Sympos. lib. 4. cap. 5.

(29) Auson. Epigr. 30.

(30) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 1. cap. 18, & 21.

[G] Proserpine fell in love with him in Hell.] If we may believe Apollodorus (31), she did not stay so long before she fell in love with him; she was enamoured of him in his very Cradle. Venus, being charmed with the Beauty of this Child, put him in a strong Box, and shewed him only to Proserpine; who protested that she would keep him. Jupiter was obliged to decide the Quarrel; and this was his Sentence: That Adonis should be at his Liberty the first four Months of the Year, and that he should stay the next four with Proserpine, and the last four with Venus. It had been better to have placed Adonis's Portion in the middle of the Year; and perhaps it was so before the Abbreviators or Copiers of Apollodorus had put his Book into the Condition we now find it in. However it be, Adonis refused the Vacation which Jupiter allotted him, and renounced it in favour of Venus; for he presented her with his own four Months. Others say (32), I. That the Muse Calliope being charged with the Decision of the Dispute by Jupiter, ordained that Adonis should belong six Months to Venus, and six Months to Proserpine. II. That Venus, angry that she was not allowed to engross his whole Time, inspired all the Women of Thrace with so violent a Passion for Orpheus, the Son of Calliope, that each endeavouring to take him from the other, tore him in Pieces. One of the Complaints, which Venus makes of her Son, in the Dialogues of Lucian, is, That he sends her sometimes to Mount Ida in search of Anchises, and sometimes to Mount Libanus for the fair Assyrian, half of whom he had robbed her of, by the Care he had taken to make Proserpine in love with him (33). Arnobius (34), and Clemens Alexandrinus (35), mention this Goddess's Passion for Adonis; and it is without Reason that Sylburgius would place in the Greek Father Ἀϊδωνεῖ instead of Ἀδώνιδι; for if we should read Ἀϊδωνεῖ we should make Clemens Alexandrinus affirm a Fashood, to wit, that Proserpine's Love for Adonis was an Adultery. Meziriac is the Author of this last Remark. See the 403d Page of his Commentary on Ovid's Epistles. Calliope's Judgment puts me in Mind of these two Verses:

(31) Apollodor. Bibl. lib. 3. pag. 240.

(32) Hygin. Astronom. lib. 2. cap. 7.

(33) Lucian. Dial. Veneris & Lunæ.

(34) Arnob. lib. 4. pag. 145.

(35) Clem. Alexandr. in Protrep. pag. 21.

Et vitula tu dignus & hic, & quisquis amores
Aut metuet dulces, aut experietur amaros (36).

So nice a Difference in your singing lies,
That both have won, or both deserve the Prize.
Rest equal happy both, and all who prove
The bitter Sweets and pleasing Pains of Love.
DRYDEN.

(36) Virgil. Ecl. 3. v. 99.

[H] Contradicts himself hereupon.] He tells us, on the one side, and with little Probability, That Adonis abode six Months with Proserpine, and six Months with Venus, without touching them, they having separate Beds. Ἄνευ τοῦ συγκαθευδεῖν καὶ προσφιλεῖσθαι (37); and, on the other side, that he pass'd six Months in the Arms of Venus, and as many in the Arms of Proserpine. Ἐξ μῆνας ἐποίησεν ἐν ταῖς ἀγκάλαις τῆς Ἀφροδίτης, ὥσπερ καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἀγκάλαις τῆς Περσεφόνης (38). Observe, that the like was related concerning the Agreement between Ceres and Pluto; namely, that Proserpine should remain six Months with Him, and that she should go and finish the Year with Ceres. The Ancients had not variety enough of Invention: they apply'd the unravelling of their Fables to too many Subjects. Besides, Egypt, Phœnicia, and the Island of Cyprus, which were the Scenes of Adonis, are not distant enough from the Sun, from the Month of September, to the Month of March, to induce one to say, That Adonis is then in the Grave, or in the Shades below: And I wonder what Mr Moreri meant by his six Months, in which the Days are so short, and the Nights so long. For in the Countries, which I speak of, the Difference of the longest and shortest Day of the Year, gives no room for this Expression. Many more things might be corrected in the Adonis of that Author.

(37) Scholiast. Theocrit. ad v. 21. Eidyl. 5.

(38) Ibid.

[I] That the Prophet Ezekiel spoke of the Festival of Adonis.] St Jerome thought that the Tammuz in these Words of Ezekiel, Then he brought me to the Door of the Gate of the Lord's House, which was towards the North, and behold there sat Women weeping for difficult to comprehend why the Ancients feign'd that Venus hid, or buried her Favourite under Lettuces [K], ſince they obſerv'd, that that Plant cauſes Impotency. Perhaps their Allegory may be explain'd, by ſuppoſing they meant, by it, that Venus had exhauſted her Favourite, and paſs'd him ſo often thro' the Alembic, that he was only fit to be compar'd to the Terra Damnata, and the Caput Mortuum of the Chymiſts: But they do not hint at any ſuch Meaning. They do not all agree, that he died of his Wound [L]. There was a River near Byblus call'd Adonis, which deſcended from Mount Libanus; it became red once a Year, becauſe the Winds drove a large quantity of Duſt into it of the Colour of Vermillion. They thought this a proper time to lament Adonis; it being the ſeaſon, when they ſuppos'd he was wounded on Mount Libanus, and his Blood ran down into the River (t).

Digitized by Google

(t) Lucian. de Dea Syria.

(30) Ezek. viii. 14. for Tammuz (39), is Adonis. He did not forget to remark the two Faces, under which this Feſtival appeared: Firſt of all they bewail'd Adonis as dead; and afterwards they ſung, and celebrated him as reſtored to Life. Plangitur à mulieribus quaſi mortuus, & poſtea reviviſcens canitur atque laudatur (40). St Cyril relates ſeveral Particulars of This Feaſt: He ſays, That it was ſtill celebrated in Alexandria (41); and, when he explains theſe Words, Wo to the Land —— that ſendeth Ambaſſadors by the Sea, even in Veſſels of Bulruſhes upon the Waters (42); he will have it to be underſtood of the Letters, which were ſent to make known the Arrival of Adonis. " They took, ſays he (43), an earthen Veſſel, and " writing a Letter to the Women of Byblus, as if " Adonis were really found again, and putting it " into the Veſſel, they ſeal'd it up, and caſt it in- " to the Sea, after having uſed ſome Ceremonies. " This Veſſel, as they aſſerted, came of itſelf to By- " blus, on certain Days of the Year, and certain Wo- " men, favour'd by Venus, having received it there, " ceas'd from weeping, after having open'd the Let- " ter; as if Venus had found her Adonis again." Lucian ſays, That he ſaw the Paſt-board Head at Byblus, which the Egyptians ſent thither every Year, without any other Ceremony, than caſting it into the Sea. The Winds carry'd it directly to Byblus, in ſeven Days, which was the uſual time ſpent in going from Egypt to that City. Procopius Gazæus relates this as well as St Cyril (44). According to the latter, the Greeks believed, that Venus deſcended into Hell to recover Adonis; and, it being known, ſaid they, at her return, that ſhe had found him (45), it was proper that the mournful Beginnings of the Feaſt ſhould terminate in great Rejoicings.

(40) Hieron, Comment in Ezech. lib. 3.

(41) Cyrill. in Eſaiam, l.b. 2.

(42) Iſaiah xviii. 1, 2.

(43) Cyrill. ubi ſupra.

(44) Procop. Gaz. Comment in Iſaiah xviii.

(45) Ἀνελθόντος δὲ ἐξ Ἅιδου καὶ μὴν καὶ ἡυρῆσθαι λεγόντος τὸν ζητούμενον συνήδεσθαι καὶ ἀναπτᾶν. Cyrill. ubi ſupra.

[K] Under Lettuces.] It is Callimachus who tells us, That Venus hid Adonis under Lettuces (46). According to Cratinus ſhe did the ſame by Phaon, of whom ſhe was greatly enamour'd. What had Athenæus done with his Wits, when he advanc'd, that the Poets intended to ſignify by this Allegory, that Lettuces cauſe a kind of Impotence in thoſe, who commonly eat of them? Would Venus have made choice of them to cover her Favourites with, had they had ſuch an Efficacy? Would ſhe not have abhorr'd the very Name and Sight of them? Would ſhe not have fear'd, that the very touch of them would have been attended with ill Conſequences? Obſerve a Difference between Callimachus and Eubulus; the latter ſaid, That, when Adonis was dead, Venus buried him under Lettuces; from whence he infers, that That Plant is of no uſe but for the Dead (47). The Original of all theſe Stories might very well proceed from the Report, That Adonis, having eaten of a certain Lettuce, which grew in the Iſland of Cyprus, was kill'd by a wild Boar. They, who conſider in what part the Boar wounded him, will eaſily find the unravelling of all this. Adonis was become impotent, from having eaten too many of thoſe Lettuces: This is the Reaſon why it is feign'd, That afterwards he receiv'd a mortal Wound in the Groin. So that the Word καταφυγών ought not to be ſubſtituted in the room of καταφαγών (48); and it is much more reaſonable to think that Nicander ſpoke of this Lettuce, as having been the Food of Adonis, than to think, that he ſpoke of it as of an Aſylum, which Adonis ſought, to eſcape the Boar.

(46) Apud Athenæum, lib. 2. cap. 28. pag. 69.

(47) Apud Athen. ibid.

(48) In the Paſſage of Nicander, reported by Athenæus, ibid.

I muſt acquaint my Reader, that Mr de la Monnoie is not of this Opinion. He was pleaſed to communicate to me the following Remark upon this Subject. " The καταφυγών of the Manuſcripts is much to be " preferr'd before the καταφαγών of the printed Co- " pies. Nicander, in the Place, which Athenæus " cites, ſpeaks of a kind of Lettuce, under which, he " ſays, Adonis took Shelter, when the Boar kill'd " him. This makes very good Senſe; whereas there " would be little Senſe in ſaying, That Adonis had " eat too much of that Lettuce, when the Boar kill'd " him; the Expreſſion would not be clear, nor co- " herent, and it would only be a confus'd Mixture " of Allegory and Fable. Moreover it muſt be con- " ſidered, that θρίδαξ being of the Feminine Gender, " there ſhould be ᾗς or ἣν καταφαγών, becauſe ὅ is " then adverbially taken for quo." It is certain, that Caſaubon prefer'd καταφυγών to καταφαγών (49). He confirm'd his Opinion by the Words, which are found in the ſame Page of Athenæus, ἐν καλαῖς θριδακίναις ἀτορύψαι (50), in pulchris lactucis abdidiſſe: But he ſhould have obſerved that Athenæus does not report them, 'till after having quoted a long Paſſage of a Poet, who ſaid, That if any one eats of theſe Lettuces, he can do nothing with a Woman (51). Obſerve well, that this Poet's Words follow immediately upon what Nicander ſaid. Now it is a ſign that Athenæus did not write ὅ καταφυγών, but ἣν, or ᾗς καταφαγών. And it is a more evident ſign of it, becauſe we ſee, that That Author, having cited Callimachus, who ſaid, That Venus hid Adonis under Lettuces, obſerves that it is an Allegory, deſigned to ſhew that thoſe who commonly eat of that Herb, become weak and impotent with regard to Venus. Ἀλληγορήντων τῶν ποιητῶν ὅτι ἀσθενεῖς εἰσὶ πρὸς ἀφροδίσια οἱ συνεχῶς χρώμενοι θριδακι. Ea quidem allegoria Poëtis innuentibus qui aſſidue lactuca veſcuntur ad venerem eſſe invalidos. It is of no Importance, that Nicander has confounded Allegory with Fable: The Poets are full of ſuch Mixtures. Beſides it is obſervable, that he miſunderſtood the Word he would explain. Ἐρίνθιν λάγεσθαι φησὶ παρὰ Κυπρίοις θρίδακα (52). Lactucam à Cypriis dicit vocari Brenthin. He miſtook a Firr-Tree for a Lettuce (53). This Miſtake induc'd him to alter the Tradition; for he was ſenſible, that it would be ridiculous, to ſuppoſe, that Adonis hid himſelf under a Lettuce; and therefore he ſays, that he fed upon it.

(49) Caſaubon in Athen. lib. 2. cap. 27. pag. 144.

(50) Caſaubon ſays, καταρύψαι: Which makes the ſame Senſe.

(51) Amphis in Salemo.

(52) Athen. ubi ſupra.

(53) See the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, Tom. 3. pag. 28.

[L] They do not all agree, that he died of his Wound.] Conſult the third Volume of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle (54). We may add to the Remarks we find there, a Paſſage of Ptolemy, the Son of Hephæſtion (55); it is That, where he ſays, that this Verſe of the Hyacinthus of Euphorion,

(54) Pag. 31.

(55) Apud Photium, pag. 472.

Κώκυτὸς μιῆνος τὸν ἀφέλκυσε νίψεν Ἄδωνιν,

Cocytus only waſh'd Adonis' Wounds;

was not underſtood. It ſignifies quite another thing, from what it is generally thought to imply; for it informs us, that one Cocytus, a Diſciple of Chiron, had cur'd Adonis of his Wound, receiv'd by the wild Boar. The Ceremonies of the Feſtival, may convince us, that Adonis did not die of it. His Votaries mourn'd at firſt, as if he were really dead, and afterwards rejoic'd, as if he were return'd into the World again. " It is obvious to conjecture, that this Fable " was built upon ſome ſtrong Expreſſions of the Egyp- " tians, or the Phœnicians, who uſed to ſay, that " They, who recover'd from a great Fit of Sickneſs, " or eſcap'd any imminent Danger, were rais'd again " out of the Grave. Many Examples of it are found " in the Pſalms (56)." Add to this, " That it was the " Cuſtom of the Oriential Nations, to conſecrate " Golden Figures of the Parts of the Body, in which " they had ſuffer'd any Inconvenience. We find an " Inſtance of this in 1 Sam. vi. 4. Adonis having been " wounded in the Groin, and being cur'd of his " Wound, conſecrated a Golden Phallus —— They " had a very great reſpect for that Figure in the My- " ſteries of Oſiris (57)." We find here a Confirmation of the foregoing Remark; The Clouds vaniſh, and

(56) Bibliotheque Univerſelle, Tom. 3. pag. 31.

(57) Ibid. pag. 33.

Digitized by Google

and the Day begins to appear. Venus thought ſhe had loſt for ever, not the Life, but the Sex of her Husband; whether it was that a wild Boar had actually injured him in That; or that Witchcraft, or ſome other Principle, unknown to us, had brought a fatal Mortification upon thoſe Parts. Hinc illæ lacrimæ; This was the Cauſe of her Tears. But the Wound, being heal'd, or the Charm remov'd, Venus was perſuaded, that her Husband reviv'd again, and that he return'd to her from the loweſt depths of Erebus; and this was the Occaſion of her Joy: And, in order to preſerve the Memory of all this more myſteriouſly, and more honourably, the Feſtival of Adonis was ordered to be celebrated every Year, in ſuch and ſuch a manner. It would be eaſy to adapt the Explications of Macrobius to this Hypotheſis; his Sun deſcending to the inferior Parts of the Zodiac, and remounting afterwards to the ſuperior Parts; his wild Boar, the Image of Cold, and conſequently of thoſe, who are included in the Canon-Law under the Title De frigidis & maleficiatis; his Venus deſpairing, becauſe ſhe was the Widow of her Sun; and afterwards rejoicing at the return of that beautiful Luminary, which rendered her fruitful. Every body ſees, that it would not be difficult to make a proper uſe of the Agreement between Venus and Proſerpine; I mean thoſe Seeds concentered in the Boſom of the Earth for ſome Months, out of which they ſpring afterwards for the Propagation of the Species.

ADRASTUS, King of Argos, the Son of Talaüs and Lyſianaſſa (a), the Daughter of Polybius, King of Sicyon, acquir'd a great Reputation in the Famous War of Thebes, wherein he engag'd to maintain the Rights of his Son-in-Law Polynices [A], who was excluded from the Crown of Thebes by his Brother Eteocles (b), notwithſtanding the Agreement paſs'd between them. Adraſtus, being followed by Polynices, and Tydeus his other Son-in-Law, by Capaneus, and Hippomedon, his Siſter's Sons, by Amphiaraus, his Brother-in-Law, and Parthenopeus (c), march'd againſt the City of Thebes; and this was the Expedition of the ſeven Worthies, ſo much ſung by the Poets: They all periſh'd in it, except Adraſtus, whom his Horſe ſav'd. It was a Horſe of conſequence, whoſe Name was Arion; we ſhall ſpeak of him in his place. This firſt War was follow'd by ſome others; for Adraſtus, not having been able to obtain the Bodies of the Argians, who were kill'd before Thebes, had recourſe to the Athenians (d), who, under the Conduct of Theſeus, conſtrain'd the new King of Thebes (e) to comply with Adraſtus's Requeſt. This Satisfaction did not put an end to the War; for the Sons of thoſe, who had ſucceeded ſo ill in the firſt Expedition, wag'd a ſecond War, ten Years after, which was call'd the War of the Epigones [B], and ended with the taking and plundering of Thebes. None of the Chiefs periſh'd in it (f), except Ægialeus, the Son of Adraſtus. It was a kind of Compenſation, ſome times practis'd by Fortune (g). This Loſs touched Adraſtus ſo ſenſibly, being moreover weakened by old Age, that he died with Grief [C] at Megara (h), as he was leading the victorious Army back, which had taken the City of Thebes. It is a Proof, that he was perſonally preſent in the ſecond Expedition [D], which, nevertheleſs, but few Writers have taken notice of. Thoſe of Megara greatly honour'd his Memory; but it was nothing in compariſon of what thoſe of Sicyon did [E]. Theſe built him a Tomb in the moſt conſpicuous part of their City, and inſtituted Feaſts and Sacrifices to him, which they celebrated every Year with great Shew and Magnificence. We may ſee in Herodotus in what manner Calliſthenes, Tyrant of Sicyon, aboliſh'd

(a) Pauſan. lib. 2. pag. 50.

(b) Ibid. lib. 9. pag. 286.

(c) Hygin. cap. 7. Apollod. lib. 3. Diodor. Sicul. lib. 5. cap. 6.

(d) Pauſan. lib. 1. pag. 37.

(e) Eteocles and Polynices both killed each other.

(f) Hygin. cap 71.

(g) See the Remark [H].

(h) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 41.

[A] The Rights of his Son-in-law Polynices.] Pauſanias ſays, that Adraſtus had married his Daughter to Polynices, before the Diſpute about the Succeſſion of Thebes (1); but others pretend, that this Marriage was not made, till Polynices, excluded by his Brother, had retir'd to Adraſtus. They relate, that Tydeus fled for Refuge thither at the ſame time, and that the latter of theſe two Refugees was cover'd with the Hide of a Boar, and the former with the Hide of a Lion; which was the reaſon of Adraſtus's giving them his Daughters in Marriage; for he recollected the Oracle (2), which had commanded him to marry them to a Boar, and a a Lion (3). The Supplement of Moreri ſays falſely that Tydeus, being ask'd why he wore the Hide of a wild Boar, anſwer'd, that it was becauſe his Father Oeneus was the Conqueror of the wild Boar of Calydonia. He did not give this Anſwer; and it was not Oeneus, but Meleager who kill'd that furious Boar. The Oracle, which was given to Adraſtus, is likewiſe miſ-reported in that Supplement.

(1) Pauſan. lib. 9. pag. 286.

(2) It is in the Second Act of Euripides, ad Phœniſſ. ver. 41. See Statius alſo, Theb. lib. 1. ver. 395.

(3) Hygin. cap. 64. Apollodorus, lib. 3. ſays, That one of them bore the Head of a Boar on his Shield.

[B] The War of the Epigones.] Had they been aware, in the compoſing of the third Volume of Moreri, that this War was only ten Years later than the Firſt, they would not have tranſlated the Word Epigones by, they, who were born after the Siege of Thebes: they would only have ſaid, they who ſurviv'd their Fathers: or, in general, the Deſcendants of the firſt Chiefs.

[C] That he died with Grief.] The Supplement pretends that he caſt himſelf into his Son's Funeral Pile, and cites Hyginus, Fab. 242. and Herodotus, Lib. 5. Now it is obſervable, that Herodotus ſays nothing of Adraſtus, which has been taken notice of in that Article of the Supplement. The only thing, which may be ſuſpected to have been borrow'd from Herodotus, is at the Beginning of the Article in theſe Terms: Adraſtus was obliged to retire to King Polybius, in the City of Sicyon, who gave him a good Reception, and his Daughter Amphitea in Marriage; but this does not agree with the Account of Herodotus, who ſays that Polybius left his Kingdom by his Will to Adraſtus his Daughter's Son. See the following Remark. The Citation of Hyginus is yet worſe; for Hyginus does not ſpeak of our Adraſtus there, but of another, who was the Father of Hipponoüs, and who caſt himſelf into the Fire to obey an Order of Apollo. Hipponoüs did as much, upon the ſame Principle. The Author of the Index of Hyginus, in the Edition of of Amſterdam in 1681. gives to Hercules for Sons the Adraſtus, and Hipponoüs, we are here ſpeaking of; and yet he pretends, that the ſame Adraſtus is the Father of Ægialeus, of whom Hyginus ſpeaks in the 71ſt Chapter, and who is manifeſtly the Father-in-law of Polynices, and the Son of Talaüs. He miſtook the Senſe of theſe Words: "Hercules Jovis fi-"lius ipſe ſeſe in ignem miſit. Adraſtus & Hipponoüs "ejus filius ipſi ſe in ignem jecerunt ex reſponſo "Apollinis (4). —— Hercules, the Son of Jupiter, "threw himſelf into the Fire. Adraſtus, and Hip-"ponous his Son, threw themſelves into the Fire, in "Obedience to the Oracle of Apollo."

(4) Hygin. Fabul. cap. 242.

[D] That he was perſonally preſent in the ſecond Expedition.] I can add a ſecond Evidence to Pauſanias; I mean Pindar, who aſſerts poſitively, that Adraſtus, having collected, and taken away his Son's Bones, brought back his Army ſafe to Argos (5.) He does not, then, ſuppoſe he died by the way at Megara, as Pauſanias does; but ſtill theſe are two conſiſtent Authorities to ground the preſent Fact on, namely, that Adraſtus was at the ſecond War of Thebes.

(5) Pindar. Pyth. Od. 8.

[E] In compariſon of what thoſe of Sicyon did.] The Scholiaſt of Pindar (6) reports, that Dieuticbides maintains, that they had only the Cenotaph of Adraſtus at Sicyon, and that his real Tomb was at Megara (7).

(6) Schol. Pindari in Od. 9. Nem.

(7) Dieuticbides, lib. 2. Hiſt. Megaric.

Digitized by Google

liſh'd theſe Ceremonies, out of Hatred to the Argians (i). You muſt underſtand, that Adraſtus was King of Sicyon (k), in virtue of the Will of Polybius, his Grandfather by the Mother's ſide, to whom he once fled for Refuge, being conſtrain'd to depart out of Argos [F]; and that, during his Reign, he made the City of Sicyon very famous (l), by the Pythian Games, which he eſtabliſh'd there (m). Some Writers remark, that his Hereditary Kingdom was that of Sicyon, and that he obtain'd that of Argos by Election; the Mildneſs of his Nature occaſioning the Argians to invite him [G], to come and civilize their barbarous Manners. Homer does not ſay ſo much; but only, that he reign'd firſt at Sicyon (n). Servius, on Æneid. Lib. 6, gives the ſame account; and we read the ſame thing in Pindar (o), and in his old Scholiaſt. They give him commonly but two Daughters, Argia, the Wife of Polynices, and Deipila the Wife of Tydeus (p), but he had beſides two Sons, Ægialeus and Cyanippus: and a Daughter, whoſe Name was Ægialea, who married Diomedes, the Son of Tydeus, and gave him great uneaſineſs by her immodeſt Behaviour. Some ſay, that he was the firſt, who built a Temple to the Goddeſs Nemeſis, and that upon that account ſhe had the Name of Adraſtea [H]. But I am certain they confound him with another Adraſtus. He, who built the firſt Altar to that Goddeſs, erected it on the River Æſepus in Phrygia (q). We do not find that our Adraſtus was ever in Aſia; and yet we meet with a King of that Name in Phrygia, at the time of the Siege of Troy (r). There is more reaſon, therefore, to attribute the Eſtabliſhment of the Worſhip of Nemeſis to an Aſiatic Prince, whoſe Name was Adraſtus, than to a King of Argos of that Name. Herodotus ſpeaks of an ADRASTUS, who fled to the Court of Cræſus King of Lydia, and who kill'd that King's Son by an Accident (s). The Article of that Adraſtus in Moreri's Dictionary is tolerably good [I].

(i) Herod. lib. 5. cap. 67.

(k) Id. ibid. See alſo Pauſan. lib. 2. pag. 50.

(l) Pindar. Nem. Od. 9.

(m) The Scholiaſt of Statius apud Barthium, Tom. 2. p. 361. upon theſe Words of the Thebaid, lib. 2. ver. 179. Quis te ſolio Sicyonis avitæ Excitum infrenos componere legibus Argos Neſciat?

(n) Homer. Iliad. lib. 2. ver. 79.

(o) Pindar. ubi ſupra.

(p) Statii Theb. lib. 1. ver. 393.

(q) Antimachus apud Strabo. lib. 13. pag. 405.

(r) Homer. Iliad. lib. 2. ver. 337.

(s) Herod. lib. 1. cap. 35. & ſeq.

[F] Being conſtrained to depart out of Argos.] It is ſaid, in the Supplement to Moreri, that Adraſtus was driven out of the Kingdom of Argos by his Brother-in-law Amphiaraus, and obliged to retire to the City of Sicyon; but, by an inexcuſable neglect, they have not cited any Authority for this. The Reader muſt traverſe a great deal of Ground to meet with Evidences. I have ſearched ſo long, that at laſt I have diſcovered the Source in Pindar, where I find that Adraſtus left Argos, and retired to Sicyon, by reaſon of Amphiaraus's Attempts, and the overthrow of the Family of Talaüs, which were no longer in poſſeſſion of the Sovereign Power (8). That Poet adds, that Adaſtrus ſtopped the Courſe of this Evil; and that the Marriage of Eriphyle with Amphiaraus was the Bond which re-united the contending Parties, and quieted the Troubles. Amphiaraus was not therefore the Brother-in-law of Adraſtus, when the latter was obliged to retire to Sicyon. Pindar does not ſay, that this Fugitive Prince married King Polybius's Daughter, nor that Talaüs was killed by Amphiaraus; but both theſe Facts, the former of which is ſo contradictory to Herodotus, are in the Scholiaſt of Pindar. Diodorus Siculus ſays, That the Marriage of Amphiaraus with Eriphyle the Siſter of Adraſtus, did not appeaſe the Differences, ſince a little before the Wars of Thebes, the two Brothers-in-law were yet contending for the Crown (9). They were divided on another Point; Amphiaraus was unwilling to be of the Expedition, and Adraſtus paſſionately deſired that he might. Eriphyle was choſen Arbitreſs of their Diſpute, and gave the Cauſe for her Brother. Apollodorus ſays partly the ſame Thing, though confuſedly enough (10). Barthius has miſrepreſented what Diodorus Siculus ſays; for he ſuppoſes, that Eriphyle was the Daughter of Adraſtus (11). The Latin Tranſlation of that Hiſtorian, printed at Baſil in 1548. ſays falſly, That Eriphyle adjudged the Crown to her Husband.

(8) Pindar. Nem. Od. 9.

(9) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 5. cap. 6.

(10) Apollod. lib. 3. pag. 187.

(11) Barth. in Stat. Tom. 2. pag. 170. See alſo pag. 914.

[G] The Argians to invite him.] If Mr Moreri had known this Particular, he would have taken care not to have affirmed, That Adraſtus quitted the City of Sicyon after four Years Reign, without any body knowing the Reaſon of it, and came to reign at Argos, where he had two Daughters, &c (12). However it be, here is a Subject for Hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm; namely the Diſagreement of the Ancients about the two Kingdoms of Adraſtus; I mean in relation to the Title, and the Order of Succeſſion. See the Article TALAUS.

(12) He ſhould have ſaid three Daughters and two Sons.

[H] And that upon that Account ſhe had the Name of Adraſtea.] The Scholiaſt of Pindar ſays, That this Name was given to the Goddeſs Nemeſis, on account of the Compenſation I have taken notice of. Adraſtus was the only Chief, who ſurvived at the firſt Siege of Thebes, and his Son was the only Chief, who was killed at the ſecond. The Balance is much more juſt, according to the Hypotheſis of thoſe, who aſcribe the whole Conduct of the ſecond War to the Epigones; but they who pretend that Adraſtus was preſent, and who give him the Glory of leading back the Victorious Army, neceſſarily ſuppoſe that he commanded there. He ſhould have periſhed, therefore, in this ſecond Expedition, to make the Balance even between Him and the ſix Colleagues who accompanied him in the firſt.

[I] The Article of That Adraſtus in Moreri's Dictionary is tolerably good.] I only find theſe ſmall Faults in it. I. He makes Adraſtus to be the Son of Gordias, inſtead of making him the Son of Midas, and Grandſon of Gordius, conformably to the Latin Tranſlation of Herodotus. I know very well that the Greek Text imports that he was the Son of Gordius, and Grandſon of Midas (13); but I am certain likewiſe on the one ſide, that Moreri had not Abilities to rectify Tranſlations by the Greek Originals; and on the other ſide, that there is a Greek Reading agreeable to that Tranſlation. II. He ſhould not have omitted, that Cræſus uſed ſuch Expiatory Ceremonies in favour of Adraſtus, as were uſed for the Purification of involuntary Homicides. III. It ought not to have been ſaid, That Adraſtus killed himſelf on the Body of the Son of Cræſus, but on his Tomb; for Herodotus notes, That Cræſus, having excuſed and comforted the Murtherer, cauſed his Son to be buried. IV. Laſtly, he ought not to have cited Clio, or Li. The Names of the Muſes, given to the Books of Herodotus, are of no uſe in Quotations, eſpecially when a French Book is compoſed for ſuch Popular Uſe as Moreri's Dictionary; however he ought to have ſettled the diſtinct Eſtimate of Clio, by adding, or, the firſt Book.

(13) Herod. lib. 1. cap. cap. 35.

ADRIANI (JOHN BAPTIST) born at Florence, in the Year 1511, of a Patrician Family, wrote the Hiſtory of his own Times in Italian. His Work is a Continuation of Guicciardin, and begins at the Year 1536 [A]. Judgment and Sincerity, Diligence

[A] And begins at the Year 1336.] Not having it by me, I muſt be contented with the Teſtimony of Thuanus; but I apprize my Reader, That, according to Spondanus (1), our Adriani begun his Hiſtory at the Year 1537. and finiſhed it at the Year 1574. It comprehends twenty two Books, and was printed at Florence by the Giunti, in the Year 1583. in Folio, and at Venice, in two Volumes in 4to. in the Year 1527. Marcello Adriani, the Author's Son, publiſhed this Hiſtory, and dedicated it to Francis de Medicis, Great Duke of Tuſcany. It contains the Space of forty four Years, if we may believe Bocchi (2).

(1) Spond. ad Annum 1534. n. 11. pag. 426.

(2) Bocchi. ubi ſupra. pag. 49.

[B] Had

Digitized by Google

Diligence and Exactneſs reign through out it; and it appears that Coſmo, Great Duke of Tuſcany, a Prince of a prodigious Genius, and conſummate Prudence, had communicated his Memoirs to the Author [B]. Thuanus, from whom I borrow this, acknowledges ingenuouſly, that he was oblig'd to this Hiſtory for many things, and that none ſupply'd him with more Materials (a). He thinks it ſtrange that the Italians do not conſider Adriani according to his Merit. Beſides this Hiſtory, there are extant ſix Orations of this Author's Compoſition, to wit, the Funeral Oration of Charles the Vth; that of the Emperor Ferdinand; that of Eleonora of Toledo, Wife of Coſmo, Duke of Florence; that of Iſabella, Queen of Spain; that of Coſmo, Great Duke of Tuſcany; and that of Jane of Auſtria, the Wife of Francis de Medicis (b). He died at Florence in the Year 1579. I believe him likewiſe to be the Author of A long Letter concerning the Ancient Painters and Sculptors, which we meet with at the beginning of the 3d Volume of Vaſari. He was the Son of the Learned MARCELLO VIRGILIO (c), Secretary of State to the Republic of Florence, and Profeſſor of Literature in that Univerſity. He ſucceeded him in the Place of Profeſſor (d), and left a Son nam'd MARCELLO ADRIANI, who was very learned, and who exercis'd the ſame Function (e), and took the Title of, Il Torbido, (The Troubled) in the Academy de Gli Alterati (f). There are ſome Authors, who find our John Baptiſt a little partial againſt Pope Paul III (g).

(a) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 68. ſub fin.

(b) Jac. Rilli's Literary Memoirs of the Univerſity of Florence, pag. 45.

(c) Mich. Pocciantius de Script. Florent. p. 103.

(d) Rilli, ubi ſupra, pag. 253.

(e) Id. Ibid. pag. 255.

(f) Bocchi in the firſt Book of Elogies, publiſh'd with Kilii, p. 48.

(g) Spondan. Annal. ad Ann. 1545. n 18. pag. 492.

[B] Had communicated his Memoirs to the Author.] Thuanus had already declared his Opinion of this in the thirty ſeventh Book, on Occaſion of the private Conferences, which Catherine de Medicis had with the Duke of Alba, at the Interview of Baionne. The Proteſtants, ſays he, who are a very ſuſpicious People (3), gave out, That the Extirpation of their Sect was contrived in theſe Conferences. What happened afterwards will plainly ſhew Poſterity whether it was falſe, or not. He adds, That John Baptiſt Adriani, a very ſincere and judicious Hiſtorian, and whom, it is likely, the Memoirs of the Duke of Florence had ſupplied with many Particulars (4), has reported, that according to the Advice of the King of Spain, explained by the Duke of Alba, it was concluded in that Interview, That the Heads of the principal Proteſtants ſhould be cut off, and that afterwards they ſhould fall upon them all, after the manner of the Sicilian Veſpers. I wiſh d'Aubigne had not exceeded the Author, whom he copied. Almoſt all Hiſtoriani, ſays he (5), and among them John Baptiſt Adrian, who had the Cyphers and the Secrets of the Duke of Florence, unanimouſly agree, that the Wars of the Netherlands, and the Maſſacres, which followed afterwards, were projected there. It is not to be queſtioned but that Thuanus is the Original which d'Aubigné copied; but does not the Copier give himſelf too much Liberty? Does he not lay that down as matter of Fact, which Thuanus only advanced as a Probability? Does he not ſpeak of the Great Duke's Cyphers and Secrets, of which Thuanus has not ſaid a Word? For Commentarii does not ſignify Cyphers and Secrets. The more heinous an Accuſation is, the more we ought to attend to the Terms of the Depoſition, even when Appearances are favourable, as in this Caſe. If Zeiller had caſt his Eyes on this Paſſage of Thuanus, he would not have ventured to ſay, that Adriani's Hiſtory ended with the Death of Charles V. (6)

(3) Genus hominum ſuſpicax. Thuan. lib. 37. p. 749. ad Annum 1565.

(4) Ex Coſmi Etruriæ Ducis Commentariis, ut vero ſimile eſt, multa hauſit. Id. ibid.

(5) D'Aubigné, Hiſt. Tom. 1. lib. 4. cap. 5.

(6) Zeiller. de Hiſtoricis, part. 2. pag. 1.

ADRIANUS, or Adrian, Emperor, Pope, &c. Look for HADRIAN.

ADRICHOMIA (CORNELIA), a Nun of the Order of St Auguſtin, in the XVIth Century, the Daughter of a Dutch Gentleman, acquir'd much Reputation by the Knowledge of Poetry, which ſhe made uſe of conformably to her Profeſſion; for ſhe tranſlated David's Pſalms into Verſe, and compos'd ſeveral other Sacred Poems. James Faber Stapulenſis admir'd this Lady's Wit and Learning. Cornelius Muſius kept a ſtrict, but very honourable, Correſpondence with her. This is what Francis Swertius relates of her (a). I wonder, that Valerius Andreas, whoſe Collection of the Writers of the Netherlands is much more copious, than that of Francis Swertius, takes no notice of this Illuſtrious Dutch Maid. He could not be ignorant of what the other had ſaid of her.

(a) Athen. Belgic. pag. 181.

ADRICHOMIUS (CHRISTIAN) was born at Delft in Holland, in the Year 1533. He was a Prieſt zealous for his Religion, and apply'd himſelf to Study. He was a conſiderable time Director of the Nuns of St Barbara, the Place of his Birth; but the Religious Civil Wars obliging him to go into Exile, he retir'd firſt into Brabant [A], and afterwards to Cologne, where he undertook a conſiderable Work, which was printed after his Death [B]. The Subject of it was a Deſcription of the Holy-Land in general, and of the City of Jeruſalem in particular; as we find by his Theatrum Terræ Sanctæ, printed with Geographical Maps at Cologne in 1593 in Folio. It is pretty well eſteem'd, and would have been yet more, if the Author had not truſted too much to the Manethon, and Beroſus, and ſuch other Chimerical Writings, of the Monk Annius of Viterbo. He ſometimes aſſum'd the Appellation of Chriſtianus Crucius; under which Name he publiſh'd the Life of JESUS CHRIST at Antwerp (a), with an Oration de Chriſtiana Beatitudine, which was deliver'd in a General Chapter (b). He died at Cologne in the Month of June 1585, being the thirteenth Year of his Exile, and was bury'd in the Monaſtery of the Canoneſſes of Nazareth, of which he had been Director for ſome time (c).

(a) In 1578.

(b) The 23*d of* July, 1570.

(c) Ex Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. p. 131.

[A] Into Brabant.] The Author, quoted by Mr Moreri and my ſelf, expreſſes himſelf thus; Inde à primis Geuſio-Calviniſtis pulſus, Machliniæ, Trajecti & Coloniæ vixit (1). I do not queſtion in the leaſt, but that Moreri is miſtaken in taking Trajectum for Utrecht; he had better have tranſlated it Maeſtricht.

(1) Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belgic. pag. 132.

[B] Which was printed after his Death.] What Mr Moreri aſſerts, That Adrichomius himſelf publiſhed this Work, and that his Theatrum Terræ ſanctæ is diſtinct from the Deſcription of the Holy Land, &c. is falſe.

Digitized by Google

ÆGIALEA, Daughter of Adraſtus King of Argos. See EGIALÉA.

ÆRODIUS, a Learned Civilian of the XVIth Century. Look for AYRAULT.

AFER (DOMITIUS) a famous Orator under Tiberius, and under the three following Emperors, was of Niſmes (a). After his Prætorſhip, not finding himſelf greatly rais'd, and being ambitious of exalting himſelf by any Method, he turn'd Accuſer againſt Claudia Pulchra, Couſin to Agrippina (b). He gain'd his Cauſe, and by this Succeſs he found himſelf in the Number of the Firſt Orators, and in the Favour of Tiberius, who bore an implacable Hatred to Agrippina [A]. The Commendations his Eloquence receiv'd from this Emperor made him reliſh the Trade; inſomuch that he was ſeldom without ſome Accuſation, or ſome Defence, upon his Hands; which gain'd greater Reputation to his Tongue, than his Honeſty; till at length he loſt much of his Fame, even as an Orator, when old Age, having wore out his Mind (c), could not prevail with him to leave off Pleading [B]. The Accuſation of Claudia Pulchra fell out in the Year of Rome 779. The Year after her Son Quintilius Varus was accuſed by the ſame Orator, and by Publius Dolabella (d). No body wonder'd, that Afer, who had been a long time poor, and who had not well manag'd the Gains of the former Accuſation, ſhou'd return to the Charge; but it was thought ſtrange, that a Relation of Varus, and of ſo great a Family, as Publius Dolabella was, ſhou'd join with this Informer. Afer died in the Reign of Nero, in the Year of Rome 812 (e). It was reported that he died at Table of exceſſive Eating (f). Quintilian, who, in his youth, was greatly attach'd to this Perſon [C], makes frequent Mention of him

(a) Euſeb. Chron. n. 2000.

(b) Tacit. Annal. lib. 4. cap. 52.

(c) Niſi quod ætas extrema multum etiam Eloquentiæ dempſit, dum ſeſſa mente retinet ſilentii impatientiam. Id. ib. See in the Remark [B] a Paſſage of the 11th Chapter of the 12th Book of Quintilian.

(d) Tacit. Annal. 60.

(e) Id. Ann. lib. 14. cap. 19.

(f) Euſeb. Chron. ad 2060.

[A] Tiberius, who bore an implacable Hatred to Agrippina.] This Princeſs was ſo well ſatisfied, that it was the Emperor, who occaſioned the Proceſs againſt her, that ſhe ſhewed no Reſentment for it to Domitius. The latter meeting her one day in the Streets, turned from her: She imagined this Behaviour proceeded from Shame, and having cauſed him to be called, ſhe bid him fear nothing, and told him, That it was not he, but Agamemnon, who was the Cauſe of all this: Θάρσει Δομίτιε· οὐ γὰρ σύ μοι τούτων αἴτιος εἶ ἀλλ' Ἀγαμέμνων Bono ſis animo, Domiti; non enim tu horum cauſa es, ſed Agamemnon (1). It is a ſign that ſhe had read the Iliad.

(1) Dion. Caſſ. lib. 59. ad an. 792. pag. 752.

[B] Old Age, having wore out his Mind, could not prevail upon him to leave off pleading.] This is too common an Infirmity. Few Perſons know how to retreat in time, or can ſay with Horace;

Eſt mihi purgatam crebro qui perſonet aurem;
Solve ſeneſcentem maturè ſanus equum, ne
Peccet ad extremus ridendus & ilia ducat (2).

(2) Hor. Epiſt. 1. lib. 1.

There ſounds, methinks, ſtill thro' my well-purg'd Ear
A little Voice, ſond Horace have a care,
And whilſt 'tis well releaſe thy aged Horſe,
Leaſt, when he runs but with unequal Force,
And ſtretches hard to win, he breaks his Wind,
And, laugh'd at, diſtanc'd, baſely lags behind.

CREECH.

Poets and Orators ought to be moſt careful of withdrawing from their Buſineſs at a proper time; becauſe they ſtand moſt in need of the Warmth of Imagination: yet it too frequently happens that they perſiſt in their Career till the loweſt Decline of Age. They think the Public is obliged to drink the very Dregs of their pretended Nectar. But, if formerly the Legiſlators limited the Time, wherein People might marry, (for they prohibited it to Women of 50 and Men of 60 Years of Age) (3) and, if they ſuppoſed that, after a certain Age, it was time to leave off thinking of Procreation, either becauſe of the Extinction, or the Weakneſs, of the Faculties; every Author ought, for the ſame Reaſon, to ſet Bounds to himſelf in the Production of Books, which is a kind of Generation, for which every Age is by no means proper. The Compariſon, which Horace makes uſe of, puts me in mind of a Precept, which Virgil has left us; and which old Poets ought to apply to themſelves.

(3) Quid eſt quare apud poetas ſatiricum Iupiter deſierit liberos tollere? trium ſexagenarius factus eſt, & illi lex Papia ſibu'am impoſuit? Lactant. lib. 3. cap. 16. Capiti Papiæ Poppææ legis à Tiberio Cæſare, quaſi ſexagenarii generare non poſſent, additio abrogavit. Sueton. in Claud. c. p. 23. & ibi Commentatores.

Hunc quoque, ubi, aut morbo gravis aut jam ſegnior annis,
Deficit, abde domo, nec turpi ignoſce ſeneſtæ.
Frigidus in Venerem ſenior, fruſtraque laborem
Ingratum trahit, &, ſi quando ad prælia ventum eſt,
Ut quondam in ſtipulis magnus ſine viribus ignis,
Incaſſum furit (4).

(4) Virgil. Georg. lib. 3. ver. 95.

But, worn with Years, when dire Diſeaſes come,
Then hide his not ignoble Age, at home.
For, when his Blood no youthful Spirits move,
He languiſhes, and labours in his Love.
In vain he burns, like haſty ſtubble Fires,
And in himſelf his former ſelf requires.

DRYDEN.

I ſay, old Poets ought to profit by this Leſſon, and not think to climb Parnaſſus, when they are become like that Horſe which Pliny ſpoke of, after Ariſtotle (5): "Generat mas ad annos triginta tres.——Opun- "te & ad quadraginta duraſſe tradunt adjutum modo "in attollenda priore parte corporis.——The Male ge- "nerates till thirty Years of Age.—At Opus they ſay "he holds out till forty, with the Aſſiſtance however "of lifting up the fore part of his Body." They obſcure their firſt Glory by it, in Imitation of our Domitius Afer. See the Article JOHN DAURAT. Some dedicate their Muſes to divine Poetry in their old Age; theſe are commonly inſipid Productions (6): I ſay commonly, for there are very excellent Works compos'd by old Men on all Subjects.

(5) Plin. lib. 8. cap. 42.

(6) See Baillet's Judgment of the Poets, Tom. 3. pag. 246. See alſo what he ſays of Writings compos'd in old Age, Tom. 1. of his Judgment of the Learned, pag. 389.

[C] Was greatly attach'd to this Perſon.] Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman, in their Dictionaries, Glandorpius, at the 306th Page of his Onomaſticon, and others, remark, that Quintilian informs us of this Particular in his 5th Book: Confitetur ſenem Domitium ſibi adoleſcentulo cultum: But they all agree, that he adds, that the Authority, which Domitius had acquir'd, was much diminiſhed, ſed priore autoritate multum imminuta. I have not found this in that Paſſage of Quintilian; he ſays (7), "Sufficiebant alioqui "libri duo à Domitio Afro in hanc rem compoſiti, "quem adoleſcentulus ſenem colui, ut non lecta "mihi tantum ea, ſed pleraque ex ipſo ſint cognita.— "The two Books of Domitius Afer upon this Subject "were otherwiſe ſufficient; for I was a Follower of "the old Orator in my Youth; ſo that I receiv'd In- "ſtruction as well from the Author, as his Writings." He ſhould have quoted the 11th Chapter of the 12th Book of Quintilian. It is there we meet with the Decline of Domitius's Authority; which affords us a Confirmation of the Precept, which the Author had before given, concerning the Retreat, which Orators ought to make, when their Age will not ſuffer them to maintain their former Character. "Non quia pro- "deſſe unquam ſatis ſit, & illa mente, atque illa facul- "tate prædito nunc onveniat operis pulcherrimi quam "longiſſimum tempus; ſed quia decet hoc quoque "proſpicere, ne quid pejus quam fecerit, faciat. Ne- "que enim ſcientia modo conſtat Orator, quæ augetur "annis,

(7) Quintil. lib. 5. cap. 7.

Digitized by Google

him (g). He tells us, that there were many agreeable Narrations in his Pleadings; and that there were public Collections of his Jests, some of which he relates. He mentions likewise two Books which this Orator publish'd concerning Evidences. It was well for him, on a certain occasion, that he had a ready, as well as a flattering, Wit, or else he had been undone. It was when Caligula became his Accuser (b), and pleaded in Person against him (i). Domitius, instead of defending himself, repeated that Prince's Plea [D], with signs of Admiration, and then kneeled down, and begg'd Pardon, declaring that he dreaded Caligula's Eloquence, more than his Imperial Quality. He was not only pardon'd, but rais'd to the Consulship, by the Deprivation of those, who were then in Office. His Crime was very slight; he had erected a Statue to Caligula, and remark'd in the Inscription, That that Prince was in his second Consulship, at the Age of 27 Years. He thought to make his Court by it; but the Emperor brought an Action against him for it, pretending that he reproach'd him for his Youth, and his infringing the Laws (k). Afer had some adopted Children: Pliny the Younger will inform you so, and tell you besides some curious Circumstances concerning them [E]. The Abbot Faydit, in his Remarks on Virgil, pag. 5. makes him of the Royal Family of the Domitians.

(g) Quintil. lib. 5. cap. 7. & lib. 6. cap. 3. See also Pliny's Epist. 14. lib. 2. & ibi Catanæum, pag. 121.

(b) Dion Cass. lib. 59. ad Ann. 792.

(i) He read his Plea.

(k) Dion. lib. 59.

" annis, sed voce, laterum firmitate; quibus fractis " aut imminutis, ætate, seu valetudine, cavendum " est, ne quid in Oratore summo desideretur, ne in- " tersistat fatigatus, ne quæ dicet parum audiri sentiat, " ne se queratur priorem. Vidi ego longe omnium " quos mihi cognoscere contigit, summum oratorem, " Domitium Afrum valde senem, quotidiè aliquid ex " ea quam meruerat autoritate perdentem, cùm, agente " illo, quem Principem fuisse quondam Fori non erat " dubium, alii (quod indignum videbatur) riderent, " alii erubescerent, quæ occasio fuêre illis dicendi, " malle eum deficere quam desinere. Neque erant " illa qualiacunque mala, sed nimiora. Quare ante- " quam in has ætatis veniat insidias, receptui canet, " & in portum integra nave perveniet (8). —— Not " that it is sufficient once to have been useful, or that " the longest possible Continuance of so fine a Profes- " sion is improper for a Person endu'd with these " Abilities; but because he ought to provide against " this likewise, that he does not degenerate from his " former Excellency. For Science (which indeed in- " creases with Years) will not alone make an Orator; " he must have Lungs, and Strength of Sides; and if " these are broken or impair'd by Age or Sickness, he " must take care that the great Orator is not found " deficient, that he does not stop short for want of " Breath, that he is not sensible he is not heard, and " that he is not the first to complain of himself. I " myself saw the greatest Orator, of all I ever knew, " Domitius Afer, in his very old Age, continually " losing part of that Authority, which he had meri- " ted; insomuch that, when he pleaded, (he, who un- " doubtedly was once the first at the Bar) some, which " appear'd very indecent, laugh'd, others blush'd for " him; which occasioned them to say, they had rather " he would faulter, than conclude. Nor was this a " slight Inconvenience, but a Matter of great Conse- " quence. Wherefore an Orator, before he falls into " these Snares of Age, should sound a Retreat, and " sail into Port with a sound Vessel." I omit Moreri's great and capital Omissions; they may be well enough known only by comparing. I shall only remark, that his Citation of Suetonius, and of Dion, in Caligula, is nothing to the purpose. For besides that it is not customary to cite Dion without refering to such or such a Book, and that it is only his Abbreviator Xiphilinus, who is cited with reference to such or such an Emperor, it is not true that Suetonius speaks of Domitius Afer, either in the Life of Caligula, or in any Work, which we have remaining of his. So that, when Scaliger advances, in his Notes on the Chronicle of Eusebius, that what has been said of that Orator by St Jerome, was taken out of Suetonius, he must necessarily have regard to Books that are lost since the Death of That Father. Mr Hofman gives us two Domitius Afers instead of one, and makes use of the bad Citation, for which we have censur'd Mr Moreri.

(8) Quintill. lib. 12. cap. 11. pag. 590.

[D] That Prince's Plea.] Caligula was so charm'd with that Piece of his own, that when one of his freed Men, who had contributed much to pacify him, ventur'd to reproach him for the Process enter'd against Domitius, he answered, I ought not to have suppress'd a Discourse of such Importance. As much as to say, What, should I have taken so much Pains about this Plea for nothing? should I rather have renounc'd the Praises which my Rhetoric deserv'd, than expose the Life of Domitius? There are but too many great Men of Caligula's way of thinking: They believe every thing ought to be sacrificed to their Passions. They, who said, that the Cardinal de Lorrain chose to expose the Catholic Religion to all the Dangers of the Conference of Poissy, rather than deprive himself of the Honour of displaying his Learning and Eloquence upon that Occasion (9), knew him pretty well.

(9) See the Remark [D] of the Article LORRAIN (Charles of).

[E] Curious Circumstances concerning them.] Domitius adopted two Brothers, whose Names were Domitius Tullus, and Domitius Lucanus. He caus'd afterwards their Father's Estate to be confiscated, and left them his own in some manner against his Intention; for it is very probable that he was prevented by Death from revoking the Will, which he had made in their Favour. Domitius Lucanus, Son-in-law of Curtius Mantia, render'd himself odious to his Father-in-law. He had a Daughter, in whose Favour Mantia would not make his Will, but on condition, that Lucanus should set her at Liberty; but, when she was made free, Domitius Tullus adopted her. This was a Collusion of the two Brothers: They enjoy'd their Fortunes in common; wherefore, by the Daughter's being again in her Father's Power, by means of this Adoption, Domitius Lucanus came in for a share of Mantia's Inheritance, though the latter had used many Precautions to hinder him from it (10). Domitius Tullus was his Brother's Heir, preferable to the Daughter, who was common to them. He fed many with Hopes of being his Heirs; by which means he procured all the Careses, all the Presents, and all the officious Assiduities, to himself, which are used to rich old Men, whose Inheritances are courted; but he deceived them all. The Young Lady, whom he had adopted, was his Heiress, and all his Legacies were given to his Relations. He particularly remembered his Wife, for he left her a good Estate. She undervalued herself in marrying him, considering the wretched Condition, to which Age and Diseases had reduced him. He might have disgusted a Woman, in his Condition, though she had been his Wife in his Youth and Vigour. How much more Reason was there for his being disagreeable to a Wife, who began her Correspondence with him when he was so infirm. Nevertheless this Lady bore the distastfulness of her Condition so patiently, and supported her Husband's infirm and decay'd Life with so much Charity, that she regain'd the good Opinion of the Public. This poor Wretch was so impotent in all his Limbs, that his Servants were obliged to wash and clean his Teeth, which caus'd him to complain of being every Day obliged to lick his Slaves Fingers. Yet he had no mind to die (11). Pliny's Words, which give us this Account, and which contain so many Characteristics of Manners, deserve to be produc'd at length. " Accepit (uxor) amœnissimas villas, ac- " cepit magnam pecuniam uxor optima & patientis- " sima, ac tanto melius de viro merita, quanto magis " est reprehensa, quod nupsit. Nam mulier, natalibus " clara, moribus proba, ætate declivis, diu vidua, " mater olim, parùm decorè sequuta matrimonium " videbatur divitis senis, ita perditi morbo, ut esse " tædio posset uxori, quàm juvenis, sanusque duxisset. " Quippe omnibus membris extortus & fractus, tan- " tas opes solis oculis obibat; ac ne in lectulo qui- " dem, nisi ab aliis, movebatur. Quinetiam, fœdum " miserandumque

(10) Fuit fratribus illis quasi fato datum, ut divites fierent invitissimis à quibus facti essent. ---- It was the Fate of those Brothers, to become rich even in spight of those, by whom they were made so. Plin. Epist. 18. lib. 8.

(11) Ibid. pag. 493.

Digitized by Google

" miſerandumque dictu, dentes lavandos fricandoſ-
" que præbebat. Auditum eſt frequenter ab ipſo,
" quum quereretur de contumeliis debilitatis ſuæ, ſe
" digitos ſervorum ſuorum quotidie lingere. Vivebat
" tamen, & vivere volebat, ſuſtentante maximè uxore,
" quæ culpam inchoati matrimonii in gloriam perſe-(12) Id. ib. " verantia verterat (12). —— She (his Wife) came " into Poſſeſſion of the fineſt Villas, and a large Eſtate;
" a Wife, the beſt and moſt patient, that ever was,
" and who deſerv'd ſo much the more from her Huſ-
" band, as the Cenſure ſhe underwent in marrying was
" the greater. For it was thought ſcarce decent, that
" a Lady, of great Birth, of Reputation, advanc'd in " Years, who had been long a Widow, and formerly a
" Mother, ſhould be fond of marrying a rich old Man,
" ſo worn with Diſeaſes, that he might have diſguſted
" a Wife, whom he had married in his Youth, and in " Health. For he was ſo diſtorted and broken in all
" his Limbs, that he could only enjoy his great Wealth
" in Sight; nor even ſo, without being turn'd in his " Bed by others. Nay, which is filthy and wretched
" to relate, he was oblig'd to have his Teeth waſh'd and
" clean'd by others. He was frequently heard, in com-
" plaining of his Infirmities, to ſay, that he every " Day lick'd his Servants Fingers. Yet he liv'd, and
" deſired to live, being ſupported chiefly by his Wife,
" who turn'd the falſe Step of beginning ſuch a Mar-
" riage to her own Honour by perſevering in it."
This Lady's Virtue would certainly have been more worthy Admiration, had ſhe foreſeen the long Continuance of her Husband's Infirmities. But, after all, ſhe deſerves to be praiſed; for tho' the hopes of purchaſing a large Jointure, at the price of ſome very vexatious, but ſhort, Diſguſts deceiv'd her, yet her Condition never appear'd to ſit uneaſy upon her; but ſhe did her Duty always with a good Grace. What fine Deſcriptions are there in that Letter of Pliny! how ſtrongly does that miſerable, impotent Wretch, in his Fears of Death, repreſent human Weakneſs! An Infirmity, of which we ſhall ſpeak elſewhere (13), and which was in thoſe Times much more ſcandalous than at preſent; for it was taken for a courageous and reſolute Action to put an end to too tedious a Sickneſs. How perpoſterous is it, on the other ſide, to ſee a Man, who had a Daughter, and Grand-children, give out that he expects an Heir out of another Family; and that they need only lay a formal Siege to his Inheritance to take the Place! What ſordid Traffic! What Cunning! It was ſuch like Perſons as this, who found their Account in thoſe, who courted their Inheritance.

(13) In one of the Remarks on the Article MECENAS.

—— Dominus tamen & Domini Rex
Si vis tu fieri, nullus tibi parvulus Aula
Luſerit Æneas, nec filia dulcior illo.
Jamdudum & carum ſterilis facit uxor amicum (14). (14) Juvenal Sat. 5. verſ. 137.

Woud'ſt thou become his Patron and his Lord,
Wou'dſt thou be in thy turn by him ador'd?
No young Æneas in thy Hall muſt play,
No ſweeter Daughter lead thy Heart aſtray.
O! how a barren Wife does recommend!
How dear, how pleaſant is a childleſs Friend,
Rev. Mr BOWLES.

But if this Avarice was baſe, That of the Perſons, whom it cheated, was no leſs ſordid. They would have been leſs blamable, if they had courted the Favour of one, who had no Children, and if they had not exclaimed againſt Domitius Tullus, after his Death. Their Complaints were laugh'd at, as they diſcovered their Shame; the deceaſed was praiſed, and his Conduct was thought uſeful to ſuch a corrupt Age as That. Let us once more employ Pliny's Pencil. " Varii tota civitate ſermones: alii fictum, ingratum, im-
" memorem loquuntur, ſeque ipſos, dum inſectantur
" illum, turpiſſimis confeſſionibus produnt, qui de illo,
" uti de patre, avo, proavo, quaſi orbi querantur: alii
" contrà hic ipſum laudibus ferunt, quòd ſit fruſtratus
" improbas ſpes hominum, quos ſic decipere pro mori-
" bus temporum prudentia eſt (15)——The whole City (15) Plin. ubi ſupra.
" was divided; ſome call'd him falſe, ungrateful, and
" forgetful; and, whilſt they reproached his Memory,
" betray'd themſelves by ſcandalous Confeſſions, com-
" plaining of him, as if they had been diſinherited by
" a Father, Grand-Father, or Great-Grand-Father:
" others extol him for this very thing, in that he diſ-
" appointed the unreaſonable Hopes of ſome Men, whom,
" conſidering the Morals of the Times, it was Wiſdom ſo
" to deceive."

AFRANIUS Quinctianus, a Roman Senator of a bad Reputation by reaſon of his infamous Lewdneſs, enter'd into the grand Conſpiracy againſt Nero, which coſt Seneca his Life, in the Year of Rome 818. He had a perſonal Reaſon to hate that Prince, who had compos'd a ſevere Satire in Verſe againſt him. He denied, a long time, that he was an Accomplice in that Conſpiracy, but confeſt it at laſt, in hopes of his Pardon. He ſhewed more Courage in his Death, than his manner of Life promis'd (a). (a) Tacit. Annal. lib. 15. cap. 49, 56, 70.

* She is called Hagar in the Engliſh Verſion of the Bible.

AGAR *, the Handmaid, and afterwards the Concubine of the Patriarch Abraham, was an Egyptian (a). There is ſome probability, that he took her into his Service, when he was return'd from Egypt, and had recover'd his Wife, whom King Pharaoh had taken from him. But it is falſe to ſay, as the Jews do [A], That Agar was That King's Daughter. Every one knows, that Sarah, finding herſelf barren a long time [B], deſired her Huſband to try whether he could have Children by this Servant; and that Abraham, overcome by her Sollicitations, and doing alſo an Act (a) Geneſis xvi. 1.

[A] As the Jews do.] It is thought that the Chaldee Paraphraſt was the firſt, who publiſhed this falſe Tradition. He pretends, that Pharaoh, having taken away Sarah, gave her his own Daughter Agar for an Handmaid; and that Sarah brought her with her into the Land of Canaan. Rabbi Joſua is of the ſame Opinion (1). Another Rabbi gives this turn to the Story; that Pharaoh, ſtruck with the Prodigies, which were wrought upon his own Perſon, ſince he had taken away Sarah, ſaid to Agar, My Daughter, it is better for you to be a Servant in this Family, than Miſtreſs in another (2). But Abraham Zacuth will not allow her to be of ſuch illuſtrious Extraction; he ſays, that ſhe was a Servant of Curia, the Wife of Pharaoh, and that Curia gave her to Sarah, after the Death of her Husband (3). St Chryſoſtom ſays, that Pharaoh himſelf gave this Handmaid to Abraham (4). The Scripture obſerves, indeed, that, among other Preſents, which he made him, he gave him Women Servants (5). If he gave him this Damoſel, we need not queſtion, but that he choſe her from among thoſe of a ſervile Rank. I could willingly believe, what Philo ſays, that ſhe embraced Abraham's Religion (6); but as to what he adds, that That Patriarch abſtained from enjoying, her as ſoon as he perceived that ſhe was with Child, I am not concerned either to deny or affirm it. Theſe are Myſteries, which we ought not to pry into; it muſt be ſuppoſed that they paſt under the Veil of Night, or behind the Curtain, and we muſt leave them to the Covert of their natural Darkneſs. The Jews, always ſoaring up to the Marvellous, attribute Agar's Converſion to the Miracles, which were performed in Pharaoh's Houſe on Account of Sarah's Rape (7).

[B] A long Time.] It is ſaid, in Geneſis, that Abraham had dwelt ten Years in the Land of Canaan, when he firſt lay with Agar; from whence the Jews have inferred, that an Husband ought not to cohabit with a Woman after he has found her barren for the Space of ten Years (8). An abſurd Conſequence; as well becauſe Abraham had been married above ten Years to Sarah, when ſhe propoſed her Handmaid to him (9), as becauſe he had not the

(1) R. Joſhua the Son of Karcha in Pirke Eliezer. cap. 26. apud Heidegg. Hiſt. Patr. Tom. 2. pag. 192.

(2) Salom. Jarchi apud Heidegg. ib.

(3) In the Book Juchaſin apud Heidegg. ib.

(4) Apud Corn. à Lapide in Geneſ. p. 171.

(5) Geneſis xii. 16.

(6) In his Book de Abrahamo.

(7) Apud Corn. à Lapide, ubi ſupra.

(8) Aben-Ezra in Geneſ. xvi. 3. apud Heidegg. ib. pag. 197.

(9) Sarah's Barrenneſs was known before Abraham went out of his Country to go to Haran. See Geneſis xii. ver. 30.

Digitized by Google

Act of Obedience, according to the Translation of some Interpreters [C], went in unto Agar with all the Success that his Wife could have desired; I say, his Wife; for it was upon her own Account, that she desir'd her Servant might bear Children, and, being incapable of giving her Husband any Herself, she was willing to oblige him by Proxy (b). They, who shall think it little agreeable to the Practice of our Age, that so much Sollicitation was requisite to prevail with Abraham to comply with such a Request, and are chiefly surpriz'd that this Request came from his own Wife, ought to remember, that all Times, and all Nations of the World, are not alike. However it be, Agar, finding herself with Child, became as proud, as if she had done a very great Exploit; but her Insolence was soon abated. Sarah, who could not brook her haughty Behaviour, treated her with such Severity, as oblig'd her to leave the House [D]. Agar did not return, till she had humbled herself, according to the order she had receiv'd from an Angel, who told her that she should be delivered of a Son, who should quarrel with every body [E]; soon after which she was deliver'd of Ishmael, who was educated with his Father till he was at least 15 or 16 Years of Age [F]. It is not known, whether these two Women agreed very well all that time; but we find that Agar was at last oblig'd to depart with her Son. Sarah would absolutely have it so, because she had seen Ishmael mocking at something [G]. Abraham sent the Mother and the Child away with a very small Viaticum. The Bottle of Water, which he gave them, being emptied, poor Agar saw the Hour that her Son must die of Thirst [H]. To avoid this Sight, she went and sat down at a distance from the (b) Ecce concluſit me Dominus ne parerem, ingredere ad ancillam meam, si forte ſuſcitem ex illa ſuſcipiam filios: Behold now the Lord hath reſtrained me me from bearing; I pray thee go in unto my maid, it may be that I may obtain children by her. Geneſ. xvi. 1.

the least Intention of forsaking her, after he had lived ten Years with her in the Land of Canaan without Issue.

[C] Doing also an Act of Obedience, according to the Translation of some Interpreters.] The Vulgar Translation says, Cumque ille acquieſceret deprecanti; and the Version of Geneva, And Abraham obeyed the Word of Sarah (10). St Austin gives this latter Sense to the Words of Scripture; for, after having observed, that Abraham was so complaisant, as to cohabit with, or to leave, Agar, just as it was agreeable to Sarah's Inclinations, he makes this Exclamation, "O virum viriliter utentem fœminis, conjuge "temperanter, ancilla OBTEMPERANTER, nulla in- "temperanter (11)! —— O illustrious Man, in the "Use of Women a Man indeed; yet conversing with "his Wife temperately, with his Handmaid OBE- "DIENTLY, and with no Woman intemperately!" He had already made use of this Expression, "Usus est "ea (concubina) non ad explendam libidinem, nec "insultans, sed potius OBEDIENS conjugi (12). "—— He conversed with her (his Concubine) *not "to gratify his Lust, or to insult her, but rather in "*OBEDIENCE to his Wife.

(10) Geneſ. xvi. 2. The Engliſh Verſion in like manner gives it, And Abraham hearkened unto the voice of Sarah.

(11) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 16. cap. 25.

(12) Id. ib.

[D] Treated her with such Severity, as obliged her to leave the House.] Who would ever have thought that this would have one day served as an Apology for Persecution? Yet the copious and inventive Mind of St Austin found this Secret in it. He maintained, from Sarah's Conduct towards Agar, that the True Church may inflict Chastisements on the False, exile it, torment it, and so on. He was severely reprimanded for this Assertion in the Philosophical Commentary on the famous Words, Compel them to come in (13).

(13) Comment. Philoſ. part. 3. pag. 62.

[E] Who should quarrel with every body.] The Angel said to her, He will be a wild Man; his Hand will be against every Man, and every Man's Hand against him (14). If it were permitted to look for Types here, as St Austin did, one would think, that Ishmael was an Emblem of certain snarling Polemical Writers, who are for snapping at every body, and who, to declare War the better against human kind, run every Moment out of their Sphere, scribbling on every Subject, right or wrong, and always in a defamatory and libellous Style. All Ages and Countries produce these Copies of Ishmael. Some of them indeed differ from their Original in this, that, tho' they cast Stones at every body, few Persons take the trouble to return them; but let them quietly enjoy a wretched Impunity, which increases their Insolence, and their Frenzy.

(14) Geneſ. xvi. 12.

[F] 'Till he was at least fifteen or sixteen Years of Age.] It is proved thus: Ishmael was fourteen Years old, when Isaac was born; for he was born when Abraham was eighty six Years of Age (15), and Abraham was an hundred Years old, when Sarah was delivered of Isaac (16). Now the latter was weaned before Ishmael was sent away; therefore, &c. I shall not amuse you with the Opinion of those Jews, who believe, that Isaac sucked twelve or five Years (17); for if there were any Foundation for the this Opinion, I should have allowed a longer time for Ishmael's abode with Abraham, than what I have here advanced. See the Remark [H].

(15) Ibid. xvi. 16.

(16) Ibid. xxi. 5.

(17) Apud Hieronym. cap. 21. in traſt. Hebraicis. See Salian. Tom. 1. pag. 474. Corn. à Lapide in Geneſ. p. 199. takes it for granted, that Iſaac was not weaned till five Years of Age; Salian p. 474. cites St Jerome, Del Rio, and Pererius for the ſame Opinion, which is his own.

[G] Had seen Ishmael mocking at something.] The Translation of the LXX imports, that Sarah's ill Humour proceeded from her having seen Ishmael play with Isaac. The Vulgar Translation followed them in it; Cum vidiſſet Sara filium Hagar Ægyptiæ ludentem cum filio ſuo. The Hebrew Text particularizes nothing; it leaves us to guess, whether the Son of Agar laught at Sarah or Isaac, or at the Feast that was made when Isaac was weaned, or at something else; or whether he made himself too familiar with, or superior to, Isaac; or lastly, whether he attempted to beat him. Some Interpreters have advanced many idle Notions hereupon; for they believe, that either Sarah saw Ishmael perform some Acts of Idolatry, or that he played some lewd Tricks, or that he endeavoured to kill Isaac. "Hebræi nonnulli acci- "piunt de luſu idololatriæ, quaſi videlicet idola fin- "gentem & colentem Iſmaëlem vidiſſet Sara —— "Alii venereum hunc fuiſſe luſum ſtatuunt —— & "detectionem turpitudinis. Neque deſunt qui Iſ- "maëlem fratri necem molitum eſſe exiſtiment (18). Some pretend, that he shot an Arrow at him with a Design of killing him (19). It is said, that the Hebrew Word for Mocking (20) has four Significations, in Scripture, viz. Pastime, Idolatry, an amorous Game, and a desperate Fight. To prove the third Signification, they alledge the twenty sixth Chapter of Geneſis, where it is said, That Abimelech looking out at a Window, saw Isaac sporting with Rebecca his Wife. But it is to extend the Signification of the Word beyond it's due Limits, to pretend, that it implies, in that Passage, the Work of the Fleſh. It is sufficient to understand by it a certain Familiarity, which shewed that they were not Brother and Sister, but Husband and Wife: for that was the Conclusion Abimelech drew from it. The most probable Account of the Matter seems to me to be this: Ishmael gave himself some Airs of Contempt, which made Sarah fear, that he would one day dispute the Birthright, if it was not prevented in time.

(18) Heidegg. ibid. pag. 205.

(19) R. Eliezer Pirk. cap. 30. ap. Heidegg. ib. who cites also Baal Hathurim.

(20) Lyranus apud Pererium in Gen. xxi.

[H] That her Son must die of Thirst.] Supposing that the mocking, which Sarah was offended at, was on occasion of the Feast that was made when Isaac was weaned, Ishmael must have been sent away at about sixteen Years of Age. If it be supposed, that this Mockery was much later in time, than that Feast, his Age will be so much the more increased at his leaving his Father. But make him as young as you can (which will be to allow him at least sixteen Years of Age) will it not appear very strange, that his Mother was obliged to carry him on her Shoulders at that Age, to lay him under a little Tree, to take him up again, to carry him in her Arms, and to give him drink? Read that Passage of Scripture concerning Ishmael; it represents to us a Child in swaddling Cloaths, or very near it. We cannot get out of this Plunge by supposing that this

Fact

Digitized by Google

the place, where she had laid Ishmael. An Angel came to her Relief, and discover'd a Well to her, where she fill'd her Bottle; and by this means she sav'd her Son's Life. She married him afterwards to an Egyptian Woman. Thus far the Scripture carries the History. Many of the Rabbins, pretend, without any Reason, that Agar is the same with Ketura, who was Abraham's Wife after the Death of Sarah (c). But this Error is much more tolerable than the ridiculous Superstition of the Saracens, who honoured the Stone, on which Agar [I], as they said, granted Abraham the last Favour, as an holy Relick. Their Writers do not mention the Reason; and acknowledge but a very remote Relation between Agar, and the Stone [K]. An Author, cited by Eusebius, certainly meant this Agar, when he said that Abraham married an Egyptian Servant-Maid, by whom he had twelve Children, who seiz'd on Arabia, and divided it among themselves (d). The Rabbins have advanced another Fable, to wit, that Ishmael came to Life again, before he was born; for, say they, his Mother lost her Fruit for a Punishment of her Vanity, and by the Fatigue of her Journey; but her deference for the Angel who advised her to humble herself to her Mistress, obliged God to re-animate her Child. Cornelius à Lapide assure us in the 171st Page of his Commentary on the Pentateuch, that Tostatus believ'd this Story.

Calvin is falsly accused of inveighing bitterly against Abraham and Sarah, on account of the Concubinage of Agar. But there is more Reason to say that St Austin's Apology for the Patriarch's Conduct is very weak. See the Remarks [I] and [K] of the Article SARAH.

(c) Targum Jonathanis, Paraphrasis Hierosolym. Jarchius, R. Eliezer apud Heidegg. Hist. Patriarch. Tom. 2. pag. 136.

(d) Melo. apud Alexand. Polyhist. cited by Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. 9. cap. 19.

Fact was misplaced; for it is expressly declared, that Sarah sent Ishmael away because she would not have him share the Inheritance with Isaac. And therefore Ishmael was not sent away 'till after Isaac was born; and consequently he was as able to seek for Water, as his Mother; he was no longer οἷοι νῦν βροτοί εἰσιν, an Infant to be carried upon Shoulders, &c. (21) I foresee that I shall be told, that neither the Translation of the LXX. nor the Vulgate import, That Ishmael was carried on his Mother's Back; and that it ought therefore to be concluded, that the Hebrew Text does not clearly favour my Supposition. With all my Heart; the rest of the Narrative is sufficient for me, and I submit it to the Judgment of every Reader, who considers the thing without Prejudice. Perhaps the best Solution would be to say, that, as they lived longer in those Ages, they did not come out of Childhood so soon as we: This would do very well, if it were not attended with the Consequence of making Ishmael twenty Years old when he was thrust out of doors; for, according to this Answer Isaac must have sucked longer, than they sucked in the Time of the Maccabees. Now in that Age Children sucked three Years (22); we ought therefore to acquiesce, with St Jerome, and many of the Moderns, in the old Hebrew Tradition, which I took notice of, to wit, that Isaac was not weaned 'till five Years of Age. Tho' I cannot but express my wonder, that they, who follow it (23), should not perceive the difficulty attending it; which does not cease to be very great, even supposing, as I do, that Isaac did not such suck at the Breast so long as was usual in the time of the Maccabees.

(21) That is to say, As Men go now, such Men as live in these degenerate days.

(22) The Mother of the Maccabees told her Son, that she suckled him three Years, 2 Maccab. vii. 37.

(23) Moreri is of this Number.

[I] The Stone on which Agar, &c.] What idle Stories! as if Abraham, who was a great Lord, and whose Retinue amounted to above three hundred Domestics, able to bear Arms, could not provide a Bed for a Concubine of this kind. He did not take her, but at the Sollicitation of his Wife; Sarah performed in some manner the Functions of the Paranymph; it was more like a Wedding, than any thing else; and yet they tell us, that a Marriage of this sort was consummated on a Stone. This Story might be probable enough, if it were related of a Master of a Family, who was afraid of his Wife, and whom a thousand reasons might induce to do the Feat by Stealth, and wherever Occasion offered; being persuaded, that if he missed his Opportunity, in hopes of a better, he might be disappointed for Life. However it be, we understand by Euthymius Zigabenus, that the Saracens honoured and kissed a Stone, which they called Brachtan, and when they were asked the Reason of it, some answered, it was, because Abraham knew Agar on that Stone; others, that it was, because he tied his Camel to it, when he prepared to offer up his Son Isaac (24). The same Author says, That this Stone was the Head of the Statue of Venus, the Deity, which the ancient Ishmaelites worshipped. The form of the Anathemas which a Saracen is obliged to recite who embraces Christianity, confirms this Author's Account; for it imports, that That Stone was the Image of Venus (25), and that the Saracens spoke of it as of a thing, which had served Abraham for the abovementioned Purposes. On this Occasion, I shall observe, that the Stone, which was worshipped by the Arabians, and which they took for the God Mars, was black and unhewn. Τὸ δὲ ἄγαλμα λίθος ἐστὶ μέλας, τετράγωνος, ἀτύπωτος. —— Simulacrum autem est lapis niger, quadratus, nullam figuram incisam habens (26). Ridetis temporibus priscis Persas fluvium coluisse —— INFORMEM Arabas lapidem (27). —— You think it ridiculous, that in ancient Times the Persians worshipped a River —— the Arabians an UNHEWN Stone. Maximus Tyrius, who had seen it, says only, that it was square (28). The Mother of the Gods, whom the Phrygians adored with a very extraordinary Zeal, was nothing more than a plain Stone; and they gave only a Stone to the Roman Ambassadors, who desired to establish the Worship of that Divinity at Rome; "Is legatos "comiter acceptos Pessiuntem in Phrygiam deduxit, "sacrumque iis lapidem, quem matrem Deûm incolæ "esse dicebant tradidit, ac deportare Romam jus- "sit (29)." How absurd soever the Idolatry of those was, who worshipped the Stone which Jacob set up for a Pillar, and anointed and consecrated to God (30); it was yet more tolerable, than That of the Saracens; for Jacob's Stone served him for a Pillow, in a Night, which he past, as one may say, with God, the Dreams and Visions, with which he was entertained, representing heavenly Things in so lively a manner to him. The Saracens durst not have said so much, in relation to their pretended Stone of Agar. Scaliger has collected a great deal of curious Learning concerning this Stone of Jacob (31); but what the learned Pocock has said concerning That, which the Saracens honoured, is no less considerable. I am going to take some Notice of it.

(24) Euthym. Zigab. in Panoplia, apud Vossium de Orig. Idol. lib. 2. cap. 31. & lib. 6. cap. 39.

(25) Ἐντύπωμα τῆς ἀφροδίτης ἔχειν. Effigiem Veneris habere. See Vossius ibid. lib. 2. cap. 31. pag. 467. Edit. Francofurt.

(26) Suidas in Θεὸς ἄρης.

(27) Arnobius, lib. 6. pag. 196.

(28) Maxim. Tyrius Dissert. 38. pag. 384.

(29) Livius lib. 39. cap. 11.

(30) Genes. xxviii. 18.

(31) Scalig. Animadv. in Euseb. n. 2150.

[K] But a very remote Relation between Agar and that Stone.] You must consult Pocock, if you would be exactly inform'd of their Religion hereupon (32). The black Stone, which they adore, is in the Temple of Mecca, in a Corner, two Cubits and one third from the Ground. They suppose that it was one of the precious Stones of Paradise, and that it descended from thence with Adam: that it was carried thither again at the Time of the Deluge; that it was sent into the World again, when Abraham built the Temple; and that the Angel Gabriel put it into the Hands of that Architect (33). It was, at first, whiter than Snow, and brighter than the Sun; but it become black, by being touched by a Woman who had her Menses. Others say, That the Sins of Men made it lose it's Whiteness and Lustre; others affirm, that it was sully'd by being much kissed and handled. It would be very difficult to prove from the Arabian Authors, what St John Damascenus and Euthymius assert, That there was a Venus's Head engraven upon it. There is another Stone, which they esteem sacred, and on which they pretend a Figure is to be seen; but it is a Figure of Feet, and not of a Head; it is the Print of Abraham's Feet, when he rested on that Stone, either, building the Temple (34), or while his Daughter-in-law (35) washed his Head, when he made

(32) Pockii Notæ in Specim. Histor. Arab. pag. 113, &c.

(33) See the Remark [F] of the Article ABRAHAM.

(34) Ex Abulfeda.

(35) The Wife of Ishmael.

Digitized by Google

made Iſhmael a Viſit (36). This laſt Stone is ſhut up in an Iron Cheſt. Ahmed Ebn Yuſef pretends to to have ſeen and kiſs'd it, and to have drank Water there out of the Well Zanzam, and to have taken notice, that the Print of the Right Foot is deeper than that of the Left, and that the Toes are as long as the Fingers of the Hand (37). They hid this Stone in one of the Hills of Mecca, when the Karmatians committed a thouſand Prophanations in the Temple, and carried the black Stone away (38). Now ſince Euthymius, and the Catechiſm for the Uſe of the converted Saracens, remark, That the Stone, on which it was pretended that Abraham had to do with Agar, or to which he tied his Camel, was in the middle of the Oratory, in medio domus templi, this muſt not be underſtood of the Black Stone (for that is fix'd in a Corner of the Temple); but of the Stone, in which Abraham's Footſteps are to be ſeen. Beſides, though no Arabian Writer ſays, That the Reaſon why they venerate that Stone, is, becauſe it ſerv'd the Patriarch for the Purpoſes mentioned by Euthymius, we muſt believe, that the Tradition, which Euthymius ſpeaks of, relates rather to the Stone, in which Abraham's Footſteps are imprinted, than to the Black Stone; from whence two Things are to be concluded. I. That Euthymius, and the Catechiſt of the Saracens, had not a diſtinct Knowledge of theſe People's Errors, as to the Worſhip of Stones. II. That the Arabian Writers did not acknowledge any near and direct Relation between Agar and the venerable Stones of Mecca. Agar is no farther concern'd in it, than inaſmuch as Abraham ſet his Feet on it; while her Son Iſhmael's Wife waſh'd his Head. There is a third remarkable Stone at Mecca; it is white, and paſſes for Iſhmael's Sepulchre; it is in a kind of Incloſure, near the Foundations of the Temple. From all theſe Particulars we may infer, That it is very eaſy to deceive a Man in Matters of Religion, and very difficult to undeceive him in them. He is fond of his Prejudices, and finds Leaders, who indulge him in them, and who ſay within themſelves, "quando-"quidem populus vult decipi, decipiatur. —— Since "the People will be impos'd upon, let them be impos'd "upon." They find their Account in this, both in point of Authority and Profit: When the Diſeaſe is become inveterate, the moſt diſintereſted fear, that the Remedy may prove worſe than the Diſeaſe. Theſe dare not cure the Wound, and it is the Intereſt of others, that it ſhould not be cur'd. Thus an Abuſe is perpetuated: Diſhoneſt Men protect it; and honeſt Men tolerate it.

(36) Ex Ahmed Ebn Yuſef & Safiodino.

(37) In the Life of Iſmael.

(38) See the Article ABUDHAHER.

(f) Plato in Convivio, init. pag. 1174.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 11, 6.

(h) See Athen. lib. 5. pag. 217. & Caſaub. in Athenæum, pag. 379.

(i) In his Convivium.

(k) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib 14. cap. 13. See alſo Athen. lib 5. pag. 187.

(l) Plato in Protagora, pag. 220. Athen. lib. 5. pag. 216. Max. Tyrius Serm. 10. pag. 106. Ælian. ib. lib. 2. c. 21.

(m) In the Remark [U] of the Article EURIPIDES. See the Scholiaſt of Ariſtoph. ubi ſupra.

AGATHON, a Tragic and Comic Poet [A] Diſciple of Prodicus (a), and Socrates (b), is greatly celebrated for his Beauty in Plato's Dialogue (c), in which he is farther commended for his Good Nature (d). Some Authors report, that he was a very Good Man, and that his Table was magnificent (e). Perhaps they found this on the ſplendid Entertainments he gave, after his firſt Tragedy had obtained the Prize (f), and he had been crowned in the Preſence of above 30000 Men (g), in the 4th Year of the XCth Olympiad (h). Plato ſuppoſes, that the Diſcourſes, which he recites, on the Nature of Love, in one of his Books (i), were held the day after that Solemnity, at the ſecond Entertainment, which Agathon gave. The Pieces of This Poet were ſo full of Antitheſes, that he replyed one day to a Perſon, who was for expunging them, You are not aware, that you rob Agathon of himſelf (k). He was the Darling of Pauſanias the Ceramian, and follow'd him to the Court of Archelaus, King of Macedon (l). He often quarrelled with him; but it was with a view of affording him a more ſenſible Pleaſure by their Reconciliation. Thus he explained himſelf to that Prince, who aſked him the Cauſe of their frequent Quarrels, as Ælian informs us in the XXI Chapter of the Second Book of his Various Hiſtory. I have taken notice, in another place (m), of what is related concerning Euripides's Paſſion for Agathon. The Anſwer of the former is miſrepreſented in the Hiſtorical Dictionaries [B]. The Scholiaſt of Ariſtophanes ſeems to aſſure us, that Agathon

(a) Plato in Protagora, pag. 220.

(b) Scholiaſt. Ariſtoph. in Ranis, act. 1. ſcen. 2.

(c) Plato ib. & in Convivio, pag. 1175.

(d) Id. in Protagora. pag. 220.

(e) Ἀγαθὸς τὸν τρόπον καὶ τὴν τράπεζαν λαμπρος. Moribus bonis, & menſa lautus. Scbol. Ariſtoph. ibid. See alſo Suidas in Ἀγάθων.

[A] A Tragic and Comic Poet.] No body queſtions his writing Tragedies; it will be ſufficient therefore to prove, that he was a Writer of Comedies. For this I may appeal to the Scholiaſt of Ariſtophanes, on the ſecond Scene of the firſt Act of the Frogs. Οὗτος ὁ Ἀγάθων κωμῳδοτοιὸς τῷ Σωκράτης διδασκάλω. This Agathon, a Writer of Comedies, when Socrates taught. Obſerve, that he ſpeaks of the ſame Poet, who is one of Plato's Interlocutors in the Feaſt, and who moſt certainly compos'd Tragedies. I appeal likewiſe to theſe Words of Philoſtratus, Καὶ Ἀγαθων δὲ ὁ τῆς τραγῳδίας ταυτης, ὃν ἡ κωμῳδία σωφρονα καὶ καλλιεπῆ οἶδε, πολλαχοῦ τῶν ἰαμβείων γοργιάζει (1). Agathon, the Tragic Poet, whom the Comic Muſe acknowledged ſkillful and elegant, frequently imitates the Style of Gorgias in his Iambics. I am aware, that theſe Words may ſignify, that he was praiſed in Comedies; but they may be taken in this Senſe, That he ſhewed both his Capacity and Elegancy in the Comedies, which he compoſed. A learned Critic conjectures, That Socrates hinted at our Agathon, when he ſaid, that it was the buſineſs of the ſame Poet to compoſe both Tragedies and Comedies; and that whoever has a Genius for Tragedy, is equally capable of excelling in Comedy (2). Τὸ αὐτὸ ἀνδρὸς εἶναι κωμῳδίαν καὶ τραγῳδίαν ἐπίστασθαι ποιεῖν, καὶ τὸν τέχνῃ τραγῳδοποιὸν ὄντα καὶ κωμῳδοποιὸν εἶναι (3). Ejuſdem viri officium eſſe tragœdiam comœdiamque componere, eumque qui arte tragicus eſt eſſe quoque comicum. It is, I think, to multiply Beings unneceſſarily, to give us a Comic Poet Agathon, different from ours. It is what Voſſius (4), Moreri, Hofman, &c. have done.

[B] The Anſwer of the former is miſrepreſented in the Hiſtorical Dictionaries.] I have ſet it in it's true Light, in another Place (5): the following is a very confuſed Account of it: "Agatho Philoſophus Pythago-"ricus, frequens antithetis, adhibitus quondam con-"vivio Archelao rege, cujus erat familiariſſimus, in-"terrogatuſque ab eo, cum jam eſſet annorum 80, "ſi robur adhuc illum ſervaret? Sanè, inquit, non "ſolùm ver, ſed autumnus ſolet bona & proſperita-"tem adferre (6).——Agatho, the Pythagorean Phi-"loſopher, a great Lover of Antitheſes, being once in-"vited to a Banquet by King Archelaus, with whom "he was very intimate, and being asked by him whe-"ther, at the Age of fourſcore, he yet retained any "Vigour; reply'd, ſurely not only the Spring, but the "Autumn, is wont to produce good things and Proſpe-"rity." Let us reckon up the Miſtakes of this Account. I. The Agathon, who was fond of Antitheſes, and was in the Court of Archelaus, was not a Pythagorean. II. He was but about forty Years of Age, when Archelaus gave occaſion for the abovementioned Reply (7). III. It was not Agathon, but Euripides, who gave this Anſwer. IV. The Queſtion did not turn upon perſonal Strength, but upon Beauty; and the Anſwer had no regard to the Goods of Fortune. V. It would be an Abſurdity to take the Age of eighty Years for the Autumn of Life. VI. I believe no Philoſopher, of the Sect of Pythagoras, was called Agathon. All theſe Faults of Charles Stephens are to be found in the ſecond Edition of Lloyd; nay we ſee the pretended Teſtimony of Ælian more exactly remark'd in it (8). This Exactneſs is prejudicial to the Author; for, ſince he was not ignorant in what Chapter the Fact was to be found, he is more inexcuſable in copying all the Miſtakes of the Dictionary which he undertook to correct. Mr Hofman followed him Letter by Letter, and diſtinguiſh'd between this Agathon and Him, who was at the Court of Archelaus. Mr Moreri ſpeaks alſo of a Pythagorean Philoſopher, named Agathon, who, at the Age of eighty Years, anſwered

(1) Philoſtr. de Vitis Sophiſt. lib. 1.

(2) Kuhnius in Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 21. pag. 104.

(3) Plato in Conviv. in fine, pag. 1207.

(4) Voſſius de Poët. Græcis, pag. 39, 50.

(5) In the Remark [O] of the Article EURIPIDES.

(6) Charles Stephens in the Word AGATHO. pag. 117.

(7) See the Article EURIPIDES, ubi ſupra.

(8) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 13. cap. 4. Lloyd in the Word AGATHO.

Digitized by Google

Agathon died at the Court of Archelaus (C); and we may conclude from the Words of Ariſtophanes, that he was not living, when the Comedy of the Frogs was acted [D], that is in the ſecond Year of the XCIIId Olympiad (n). There remains nothing of Agathon but what we find in Ariſtotle, in Athenæus, &c. who cited him. They are beautiful Sentences enough, and confirm what has been ſaid of his Paſſion for Antitheſes [E]. I ſhall give an Inſtance of them, wherein we meet with a very judicious Maxim relating to the Deceitfulneſs of Appearances [F]. Ariſtophanes ſatirizes

(n) See Sam. Petit's Miſcellany, lib. 1. cap. 14. pag. 50.

anſwered that Monarch, That the Autumn produced Flowers and Fruits, as well as the Spring. He mentions afterwards Agathon, a Tragic Poet; and Agathon a Comic Poet.

[C] That Agathon died at the Court of Archelaus.] Ἀρχελάῳ τῷ Βασιλεῖ μίσχει τελευτῆς μετὰ ἄλλων πολλῶν συνῆν ἐν Μακεδονίᾳ (9). That is, He lived with many others in Macedonia at the Court of King Archelaus until his Death. This may either ſignify, 'till the Death of Archelaus, or 'till the Death of Agathon. For which Reaſon I do not give theſe Words as a certain Proof.

(9) Schol. Ariſtophan. in Ranas, act. 1. ſc. 2.

[D] That he was not living, when the Comedy of the Frogs was acted. We find theſe four Verſes there,

ΗΡ. Ἀγάθων δὲ τί ϛιν; ΔΙ. ἀπολιπών μ' ἀποίχεται,
Ἀγαθὸς ποιητὴς, καὶ ποθεινὸς τοῖς φίλοις.
ΗΡ. Ποῖ γῆς ὁ τλήμων; ΔΙ. ἐς μακάρων εὐωχίαν (10).

(10) Ariſtophan. in Ranis, act. 1. ſcen. 2. ver. 83.

HE. But where is Agatho?
BA. He has left me, and is gone. —— A good Poet, and dear to his Friends.
HE. Unhappy Man! to what Country is he gone?
BA. To the Banquet of the Gods.

[E] What has been ſaid of his Paſſion for Antitheſes.] Kuhnius has given us three Sentences of Agathon, as a Specimen of his Taſte (11). The two firſt were cited by Ariſtotle, and the other by Athenæus. The Senſe of the latter is, If I tell you the Truth, I ſhall not pleaſe you; and if I pleaſe you, I ſhall not tell you the Truth (12). Thoſe cited by Ariſtotle ſignify, the one, that the only impoſſible thing with God is, to cauſe, That what has been created, ſhould not have been created (13); the other, That Fortune loves Art, and Art loves Fortune (14). Voſſius imagin'd, that this laſt Sentence belong'd to Agathon the Comic Poet (15); but he had better have aſcrib'd it to the Tragedian, and have obſerv'd, that the Spirit of Antitheſes adjudges it to him. I ſay this without pretending, that it is certain that Agathon, the Tragic Poet, differs from Agathon the Comic Poet. Mr Moreri copied Voſſius, according to Cuſtom. I wonder Kuhnius did not produce this;

(11) Guſtum antithetorum Agathonis dare poſſumus. Kuhnius in Ælian. lib. 14. cap. 13. pag. 735.

(12) Athen. lib. 5. c. 13. pag. 211.

(13) Ariſtot. Eth. Eudemior. lib. 5. cap. 2. pag. 182.

Τὸ μὲν πάρεργον ἔργον ὡς ποιήμεθα,
Τὸ δ' ἔργον ὡς πάρεργον ἐπονήμεθα (16).

(14) Id. ib. cap. 4. pag. 183.

Operis luco ducimus acceſſorium,
Et in opere ſatagimus ut acceſſorio.

(15) Voſſius de Poet. Gr. pag. 59.

(16) Agath. apud Athen. lib. 5. init.

[F] A very judicious Maxim on the Deceitfulneſs of Appearances.] Agathon obſerves, That it is likely ſeveral Things may happen, which are not likely. Εἰκὸς γίνεσθαι πολλὰ καὶ παρὰ τὸ εἰκός. Veriſimile eſt & multa fieri præter veriſimile. Thus Voſſius reports this Sentence; and he obſerves, that Ariſtotle alledg'd it in more than one Place (17). That great Philoſopher cited it in the following manner, in the 24th Chapter of the 2d Book of his Rhetoric.

(17) Voſſius Inſtit. Poët. lib. 1. p. 16.

Ταχ' ἄν τις εἰκὸς αὐ τὸ τῦτ εἶναι λέγοι,
Βροτοῖσι πολλὰ τυγχάνειν ὐκ εἰκότα (18).

(18) Agathon apud Ariſtot. Rhetor. lib. 2. cap. 24. pag. 448.

Fortaſſe aliquis veriſimile id ipſum eſſe dixerit,
Mortalibus multa evenire non veriſimilia.

We may compare, with this Maxim, that of St Bernard; Ordinatiſſimum eſt, minus interdum ordinatè fieri (19); that is, It is very conſiſtent with Order, that ſometimes things ſhould be done out of Order. Mr de Balzac reports this Thought ſo ill, that of a very fine Maxim he makes frightful Untruth. Tho' the Affairs of the World, ſays he (20), ſometimes alter their Courſe, and go into an unuſual Channel; and though this is only likely, as Agathon ſaid, That many things happen againſt Likelihood, nevertheleſs, generally ſpeaking, like Enterprizes produce like Events. The Adverb only produces a Monſter here, and if it was an Error of the Preſs (21), I wonder the Corrector was not ſtartled at it. For what is more monſtrous, than to maintain, that it is never probable that a thing ſhould happen agreeable to probability? This is the fine Axiom aſcribed to our Agathon, in the Prince of Balzac: but the Sequel of the Diſcourſe ſhews, that if the Poet's Thought was marr'd on the Paper, it was not ſo in the Mind of the Writer: It is certain that Mr de Balzac meant to ſay, with Agathon, that this very Thing is likely, that many Things happen againſt likelihood. Euripides was ſo fond of this Maxim, that he has repeated it five Times; for, as Mr Coſtar ſays (22), he ended his Medea, his Alceſtes, his Andromache, his Bacchæ, and his Helena, with the following Sentence;

(19) Bernardi Epiſt. 276. ad Eugen. III.

(20) Balzac in his Prince, n. 142. pag. 100. Edit. of Rouen in 1632. 4to.

(21) Enlement inſtead of ſurement. Note that there are ſome Gaſconiſms wherein ſculement ſignifies n.éme.

(22) Coſtar. Sequel of the Defence of Voiture, pag. 403.

Πολλὰ δ' ἀέλπτως κραίνουσι θεοί,
Καὶ τὰ δοκηθέντ' ὐκ ἐτελέσθη,
Τῶν δ' ἀδοκήτων πορὸν εὗρεν θεὸς.

The meaning is, The Gods ſport with human Foreſight, and equally deceive our Hopes and our Fears. Sometimes they divert Events which all Men expected, and, opening Paſſages and Ways unknown, make Deſigns to ſucceed, which were in Appearance impoſſible. Seneca made a very good uſe of this Thought, to encourage thoſe who are terrify'd at the likely and probable Approaches of ill Fortune. How many things, ſays he, have happened, which no body expected? How many others have never appear'd, tho' every body expected them? Nothing is ſo ſure among thoſe things, which we fear, but it is yet more certain, that our Fears and our Hopes prove ſometimes groundleſs. Seneca's Words are more ſtrong: It will be better to tranſcribe them. "Veri" ſimile eſt aliquid futurum mali? Non ſtatim verum
" eſt. Quàm multa non exſpectata venerunt, quàm
" multa exſpectata nunquam comparuerunt? ——
" multa intervenium, quibus vicinum periculum vel
" prope admotum, aut ſubſiſtat, aut deſinat, aut in
" alienum caput tranſeat —— habet etiam mala for" tuna levitatem: Fortaſſe erit, fortaſſe non erit. In" terim dum non eſt, meliora propone —— nihil tam
" certum eſt ex his quæ timentur, ut non certius ſit
" & formidata ſubſidere, & ſperata decipere (23). ——
" Is any Misfortune likely to befal you? It does not " therefore immediately become certain. How many " unexpected things have come to paſs? How many
" look'd for Events have never happen'd? —— Many " things intervene, by which an approaching Danger
" may ſtop ſhort, or ceaſe to be a Danger, or fall up-
" on another Head. —— Even ill Fortune has her
" Fickleneſs: Perhaps it will be; perhaps it will not " be. In the mean time, whilſt it is not, hope the
" beſt. —— Nothing, in all the Ills we dread, is ſo
" certain, but it is ſtill more ſo, that what we fear
" ſometimes vaniſhes, and what we hope for ſometimes
" diſappoint us." Cardinal Palavicin is very angry with Fra-Paolo, who took the Reception of the Doctrine of Zuinglius by the Evangelical Cantons, as a manifeſt Proof, that an higher Cauſe, than Zuinglius, was the influencing Motive. I omit Palavicin's Reflexions, but ſhall copy what he borrows from Ariſtotle, namely, That it happens ſometimes, that the moſt probable things are falſe; for if they were always ſeparated from Falſhood, they would be certain and not probable. I am going to ſhew, that he builds upon this Maxim, when he accuſes thoſe of Raſhneſs and Preſumption, who pretend to judge of the Providence of God. Such a Perſon is a devout Chriſtian, therefore he is predeſtinated to Salvation: Such a Perſon is a Mahometan, and wicked, therefore he is predeſtinated to Damnation. Raſh Conſequences, and which are often groundleſs! This is Cardinal Palavicin's Remark: The whole Paſſage is as follows. "Per
" tanto chi aſcrive le proſperità della miglior cauſa ad
" una volonta che dio habbia di farla ſtabilmente
" prevalere alla rea, diſcorre con pietà probabile e
" ſaggia: quantunque talora s'inganni, ſecondo l' in-" ſegnamento

(23) Seneca Epiſt. 24. pag. 187.

Digitized by Google

rizes him severely on account of his Morals, in one of his Comedies (o). I believe we ought to distinguish him from that Agathon, whom the Philosopher Plato lov'd so tenderly [G]. The Mistake of Budæus was doubtless voluntary, when he said in the 27th Chapter of the Institution of a Prince, that Euripides kiss'd a Lady, at Archelaus's Table, who was called the Fair Agatha.

(o) In Thesmophoriazusis.

" segnamento del Filósofo: Che talvolta il più pro-
" babile è falso; perciòche se da falsità fosse esente,
" non saria probabil, mà certo. E se basta il potes-
" si ingannare accioche ogni giudicio, quantunque
" dubitativo della Providenza divina chiamisi pre-
" sontuoso; chiamerassi presontuoso chiun que dall
" haverlo Dio fattio nascere fra Christiani e viver
" divotamente, prende conghiettura che l'habbia de-
" stinato alla vita eterna; e'l contrario s'avvisa di chi
" nacque Saraceno e vive scelerato: Essendo mani-
" festo poter succedere che il primo si danni, e'l se-
" condo si salvi (24). ——— Thus he, who ascribes
" the Success of the better Cause to the immediate In- " fluence of Heaven, reasons probably and justly; tho'
" he may sometimes be deceived; according the Senti-
" ment of the Philosopher, that the most probable Thing
" sometimes prove false, because, if it were exempt
" from Falsity, it would not be probable, but certain.
" Now, if the bare Possibility of being mistaken
" renders all Judgment concerning divine Providence,
" though express'd with Doubt, presumptuous, cer-
" tainly it is great Presumption in any one to imagine,
" that because he is born a Christian, and lives de-
" voutly, therefore he is predestin'd by God to eternal
" Life, and to judge the contrary of one, who is born
" a Saracen, and lives wickedly; it being evidently
" possible, that the former may be damn'd, and the
" latter sav'd."

(24) Palavicin. Istor. del. Concilio, lib. 3. cap. 8. in fine. p. 303.

Not only the Physicians, but the News-Writers, likewise, ought to profit by the Sentence of Agathon. A Professor of Leipsic exhorts Physicians not to speak without much Precaution, if they would do Honour to Physic. He would not have them promise too much, nor terrify their Patients so greatly, but speak always conditionally, and with a perhaps (25). All this, in virtue of Seneca's Maxim produc'd above. The like Advice may be given to your great Coffee-House Politicians: I mean those among them, who have a good deal of Sagacity and Judgment. Their Conjectures are generally right; nor have they often occasion to repent of their decisive Air, with which they deride the Hopes or Threats of the Gazetteers. This gives them a still greater Boldness to reject magisterially every piece of News, which shocks Probability; but they are sometimes mistaken; for the Event confirms, upon some Occasions, the most impertinent and the most extravagant News that can be reported, and which they had condemn'd as Chimera's, or as Things inconsistent with the Wisdom, which had 'till then appear'd in the Councils of the State. This Rule is not always safe, and sometimes ensnares those Reasoners upon public Affairs, who trust too much to it. It is therefore Prudence to act considerately, and not to pronounce definitive Decrees, under pretence of having the most plausible Appearances on our side. But if in this Case it is not reasonable to play the Dictator, what Blame do not they deserve, who promise the greatest Successes, against all Appearances, and publish these Promises as grounded on St John's Revelation?

(25) Bibl. Universelle, Tom. 4. p. 80, 81. in the Extract of the Miscellanea Curiosa Medica of Christianus Langius.

[G] From that Agathon, whom the Philosopher Plato lov'd so tenderly.] That Philosopher compos'd a very tender Distich, and so full of Sense, that a Latin Poet found Matter in it for seventeen Verses. Let us transcribe a whole Chapter of Aulus Gellius here (26). " Celebrantur duo isti Græci verticuli, mul-
" torumque doctorum hominum memoria dignantur,
" quod sunt lepidissimi & venustissimæ brevitatis. Ne-
" que adeo pauci sunt veteres scriptores, qui eos Pla-
" tonis esse Philosophi affirmant; quibus ille adole-
" scens luserit, quum tragœdiis quoque eodem tem-
" pore faciendis præluderet.

(26) Aulus Gellius, lib. 19. cap. 11.

Τὴν ψυχὴν, Ἀγάθωνα φιλῶν, ἐπὶ χείλεσιν ἶσχον.
Ἦλθε γὰρ ἡ τλήμων ὡς διαβησομένη (27).

(27) Note that Diogen. Laertius, lib. 3. n. 32. says, mentioning those two Greek Verses, that they were made by Plato for Agathon: They are thus translated in the Greek and Latin Editions of Diogenes Laertius.
Suavia dans Agathoni, animam ipse
In labra tenebram?
Ægra etenim properans tanquam abitura fuit.

" Hoc distichon amicus meus, οὐκ ἄμουσος adolescens,
" in pluris verticulos licentiùs liberiusque vertit:
" qui quoniam mihi quidem visi sunt non esse me-
" moratu indigni, subdidi.

Dum semihulco savio
Meum puellum savior;
Dulcemque florem spiritus
Duco ex aperto tramite:
Animula ægra & saucia
Cucurrit ad labias mihi,
Rictumque in oris pervium,
Et labra pueri mollia,
Rimata itineri transitus,
Ut transiliret nititur.
Tum si moræ quid plusculæ
Fuisset in cœtu osculi;
Amoris igni percita
Transisset, & me linqueret:
Et mira prorsum res foret,
Ut ad me fierem mortuus,
Ad puerum at intus viverem.

" That Greek Distich is much celebrated, and thought
" worthy of being recorded by many learned Men, as " being most witty and most beautifully concise. Nor
" are there a few among the antient Writers, who
" affirm it was compos'd by Plato the Philosopher;
" with which he diverted himself in his Youth, and
" at a time when he was making Essays towards
" Tragedy."

Τὴν ψυχὴν, Ἀγάθωνα φιλῶν &c.

My Soul (in kissing Agathon*)*
Flys to my Lips, and wou'd be gone.

" A young Gentleman, a Friend of mine (no Enemy
" to the Muses), has paraphras'd this Distich in several " Verses; which, as they seem to me not unworthy of " being produc'd, I have here subjoin'd.

Dum semihulco savio, &c.

Whilst on thy Lips, to taste the Bliss,
I print the burning, amorous, Kiss,
And drink thy balmy Breath; my Soul,
Thro' Love impatient of controul,
Mounts to my Lips in extasy,
And fain would pass, to dwell in Thee.
If, then, Dear Youth, we should delay,
And on the Kiss prolong our stay,
The wanton Thing would take her Flight,
Struck with Love's Fire, and leave me quite;
And strange would my Condition be,
Dead in myself, but yet alive in Thee.

Observe that Plato was but fourteen Years of Age, when our Poet Agathon obtained the Prize of Tragedy, so that it is not very likely, that he sighed for him, but for an Agathon much younger (28).

(28) Athen. lib. 5. cap. 13. p. 217.

AGESILAUS, the first of the Name, King of Sparta, succeeded his Father Doryssus, who was the fifth King from Eurysthenes. The Reign of this Agesilaus was very long [A], and yet it affords an Historian scarce any materials. The Histories of [A] Was very long.] In saying this, I rely more on the Authority of Eusebius than on that of Pausanias. The latter assures us, that Doryssus, and his Son Agesilaus, did but just shew themselves on the Throne; Δι' ὀλίγου σφᾶς τὸ χρεὼν ἐπέλαβεν ἀμφοτέρους. ——— Death soon seized them both (1). But Eusebius makes them reign seventy three Years: he gives twenty nine Years to the Father's Reign, and forty four to

(1) Pausan. lib. 3. p. 82.

Digitized by Google

(a) The Reign of AGESILAUS began in the Year of the World 2992. according to Helvicus, 24 Years after the Death of Solomon.

of thoſe Remote Times (a) have not been preſerved. Pauſanias ought not to have ſaid, that Lycurgus gave Laws to Lacedemon [B] in this Reign (b). Charles Stephens, Lloyd and Hofman confound this Ageſilaus with Ageſilaus II. for they ſay of the latter, that he was the Sixth King of Lacedemon.

(b) Pauſan. lib. 3. pag. 82.

to the Son's. Calviſius quotes Pauſanias for this Duration: This is to make a judicious Choice of one's Witneſs.

[B] That Lycurgus gave Laws to Lacedemon.] Meurſius proves, in his Antiquities of Lacedemon, that Lycurgus publiſhed his Laws in the thirtieth Year of Archelaus, the Son and Succeſſor of Ageſilaus.

AGESILAUS, the ſecond of the Name, King of the Lacedemonians, was the Son of Archidamus. He had perhaps Ambition enough to deſire the Kingdom in excluſion of his elder Brother Agis; but, however that be, it was not perceived, till after the Death of Agis, that he was deſirous the Order of Succeſſion ſhould be broke in upon for his ſake. This Deſire had all the Succeſs he could expect; for they did Leotychides, Son of Agis, the Injuſtice [A] to exclude him from the Crown in Favour of Ageſilaus (a). The latter repaired by a great number of fine Actions what was irregular in this firſt ſtep, and tho' he was of a diminutive Stature, an unpromiſing Aſpect, and lame [B], he juſtly acquired the Reputation of a great Captain. He was brave, vigilant, and ready; he improved every Advantage to the utmoſt, and knew how to make the beſt uſe of Occurrences; he underſtood all the Stratagems of War, and he had the Art of deceiving his Enemies, at the ſame time that he let them know his

(a) This happened according to Calviſius, in the 3d Year of the 95th Olympiad.

[A] They did Leotychides —— the Injuſtice.] We cannot give their Treatment of him any other Name, if we examine well the Reaſons of it. Ageſilaus did not deny, but that, according to the Laws of the Country, the Crown belonged to his Brother's Son; but he maintained that Leotychides was not the Son of Agis; and made uſe of theſe two Methods of Proof. He ſaid in the firſt Place, that Timea, the Mother of Leotychides, was ſo fond of Alcibiades, who had fled to Lacedemon for Refuge, that her Husband ſuſpected, that the Child, which ſhe had ſome time after, had no other Father, than that Gallant. This concerned Leotychides. It was of Him that Timea was delivered about that Time: It was He, whom Ageſilaus did not acknowledge for his Son but on his Death-bed. Ageſilaus alledged in the ſecond Place the Teſtimony of Neptune. He ſaid, That Agis was driven from his Wife's Bed by an Earthquake, and that Timea was brought to Bed of Leotychides above ten Months after (1). Theſe two Reaſons ſtand for nothing; the Maxim, Pater eſt quem nuptiæ demonſtrant, —— Wedlock makes the Father, ruins them entirely. If, whenever a Husband takes Umbrage at ſeeing his Wife pleaſed with the Viſits, or private Converſations, of a Stranger, he ſhould exclude from the Inheritance the Children born about that Time, What a Confuſion would it introduce? Therefore, though it ſhould be true what an Hiſtorian ſays, That Timea made no Scruple of calling her Son by the Name of Alcibiades, before her Women, inſtead of Leotychides (2), nothing could be legally concluded from this Fact in favour of Ageſilaus. Timea herſelf ought to have declared what ſhe meant by this Language (3), and whether ſhe uſed it in earneſt, or by way of inſult, or meerly in jeſt. Much leſs could they have alledged the Indiſcretion of Alcibiades, if it had been true that he boaſted of his Familiarity with Timea, not thro' a Principle of Gallantry, but out of an Ambition of giving Kings to Lacedemon (4). An hundred Reaſons of this kind ought not to have balanced the Act, by which Agis acknowledged Leotychides for his Son, in the Preſence of good Witneſſes, on his Death-bed. The ſecond Reaſon of Ageſilaus was an idle Story; for let Neptune be never ſo much the cauſe of Earthquakes, how could it be proved, that Agis durſt not lie with Timea after the Earthquake in queſtion? A Lying-in ten Months after the laſt Careſſes of an Husband (5), is no Proof in Law. The Maxim, Pater eſt quam nuptiæ demonſtrant, and the Deciſions of Phyſicians, remove all Suſpicions. So that it may be ſaid that the Lacedemonians, a People who piqued themſelves upon a very rigid Morality, took away a Crown for Reaſons, which, in a well regulated Court, would have been inſufficient to have excluded a Man from the Inheritance of an Acre of Land. But the Misfortune of Leotychides was, that Lyſander the moſt intriguing, the moſt deceitful, and the moſt factious of all Men, who had gained a Reputation in the City proportionable to his Abilities, and the Victories which he had obtained over the Enemies, took it in his Head to cauſe Ageſilaus to be crowned (6). No fundamental Law can hold againſt ſuch Perſons: If you alledge the Divine Law to them, they explain it their own way. This Lyſander did, when he heard that a Prophet of Lacedemon would have pleaded, in favour of Leotychides, an Oracle, which forbad the Lacedemonians to ſuffer a lame Perſon to reign. This, ſays Lyſander, does not relate to the Defects of the Feet, but the Defects of the Blood; and it is Leotychides, who would make your Kingdom halt, not being of the Race of your Kings.

(1) Ex Plut. in Ageſil. p. 597. & Xenoph. de Rebus Græcis, lib. 3. pag. 214.

(2) Duris, apud Plut. ubi ſupra.

(3) According to the Maxims of the Law, the Evidence which a Perſon gives againſt himſelf is not received.

(4) Plut. in Ageſil. pag. 214.

(5) Note, that the Ancients allow'd ten Months for the Term of Child-bearing; Matri longa decem tulerunt faſtidia menſes. Virg. Ecl. 4. ver. 61. & La Cerda upon that Paſſage.

(6) Plut. & Xenoph. ubi ſupra.

[B] Tho' he was of a diminutive Stature, an unpromiſing Aſpect, and lame.] He was always the firſt to rally his own Lameneſs (7), as is commonly practiſed by Men of Wit in the like caſe; by which means they diſconcert the Schemes of the Laughers. " Materia petulantibus, & per contumeliam urbanis " detrahitur, ſi ultro illam & prior occupes. Nemo aliis " riſum præbuit, qui ex ſe cepit. Vatinium homi- " nem natum & ad riſum, & ad odium, ſcurram fuiſ- " ſe venuſtum ac dicacem, memoriæ proditum eſt. " In pedes ſuos ipſe plurima dicebat, & in fauces " conciſas: Sic inimicorum, quos plures habebat " quam morbos, & in primis Ciceronis urbanitatem, " effugit (8). —— The Invectives of the ill-natured, " and the Raillery of the Witty, are diſappointed by " being beforehand with them. No one is liable to " be laughed at by others, who firſt laughs at him- " ſelf. Vatinius, a Man deſigned by Nature the " common Object of Ridicule and Contempt, is report- " ted to have been an ingenious and talkative Droll. " He was always jeſting upon his own Feet, and his " little Mouth: Thus he eſcaped the Ridicule of his Ene- " mies, of whom he had more in Number than Diſeaſes, " and particular of Cicero." The Pleaſantry of Ageſilaus, and the Strength wherewith he endured the moſt painful Exerciſes, made amends for all his bodily Defects (9), for without theſe his deſpicable Outſide would have been very prejudicial to him. Λέγεται μικρός τε γένεσθαι καὶ δῆλον συκαταφρόνητος. He is ſaid to have been ſmall of Stature and of a contemptible Aſpect (10). The Ephori had fined his Father for having married a little Woman (11), from whence they concluded would ſpring but a diminutive Race of Kings. Cornelius Nepos ſpeaks more expreſsly of Ageſilaus's ill Mein than Plutarch. " Atque hic tantus vir, " ſays he (12), ut naturam fautricem habuerat in " tribuendis animi virtutibus, ſic maleficam nactus eſt " in corpore, exiguus & claudus altero pede, quæ res " etiam nonnullam afferebat deformitatem; atque ig- " noti faciem ejus cùm intuerentur, contemnebant. " —— This great Man, as he experienced Nature " favourable in beſtowing on him the Virtues of the " Mind, ſo he found her unpropitious in regard to his " Body, being little and lame of one Foot, which ren- " dered him in ſome manner deformed; inſomuch " that thoſe who were unacquainted with him, at " firſt Sight were apt to deſpiſe him." Never was the minuit præſentia famam more true than with reſpect

(7) Plut. ibi pag. 569. Ea

(8) Seneca de Conſtantia Sapientis, cap. 17. pag. 692.

(9) Plut. in Ageſil. pag. 596.

(10) Id. ibi.

(11) Id. ibi.

(12) Corn. Nepos in ejus Vita, cap. 1.

Digitized by Google

his True Intentions [C]. He was desirous they shou'd understand the Trade of Arms; otherwise it wou'd have been difficult for him to have drawn them into his Snares (b). He had the Art likewise of deceiving his own Soldiers, by giving them, instead of the bad News he received, a fictitious Relation of some great Triumph (c). This deserves to be remarked, to undeceive those, who believe, that it is only since the Invention of the Gazette, that the Public has been imposed upon in this way. As soon as Agesilaus was on the Throne, he advised the Lacedemonians to prevent the King of Persia, who was making great Preparations for War, and to attack him in his own Dominions (d). He was chosen for this Expedition, and gained so many Advantages over the Enemy, that if the League, which the Athenians and Thebans had formed against Lacedemon, had not crossed his Enterprizes, he would have carried his victorious Arms into the Center of the Persian Monarchy. He quitted all these Triumphs with a good Grace, to come to the Assistance of his Country, and freed it very fortunately, by the Battel which he gained over the Allies in Bœotia [D]. He gained another Battel near Corinth (e); but he afterwards had the Vexation to see the Thebans obtain signal Victories over the Lacedemonians. These Misfortunes raised many Malecontents against him; but, after all, they did not obscure his Glory. He had been sick during the first Advantages, which the Enemy gain'd (f); and when he was fit for Action, he prevented, by his Valour and Prudence, the Consequences of the last Victories of the Thebans; insomuch that it was the general Opinion, that, had he been in Health at the beginning of the War, the Lacedemonians would not have been worsted, and that they would have been entirely subdued in the end without him (g). It cannot be denied that he loved War, more than the Interests of his Subjects required (h); for if he could have lived in Peace, he would have saved his Country many Losses, and would not have engaged it in Undertakings, which ended only in a very great Diminution of the Power of the Lacedemonians. This insatiable Thirst for War and Slaughter, push'd him, in his old Age, on an Enterprize, which was generally disapproved (i). He was above eighty Years of Age, when he undertook to lead Troops into Egypt, to support Tachus, who had revolted against the Persians. But, being disgusted at Tachus, he forsook him to take the part of Nectanabus, a Relation of Tachus, whom he powerfully assisted; after which he designed to return to Lacedemon; but he died of a Fit of Sickness by the Way, in the third Year of the CIVth Olympiad [E]. He was Eighty four Years of Age, whereof he had reigned Forty one (k). Mr Moreri has committed

(b) Plut. in Agesilao, pag. 617. E.

(c) Ibid. pag. 605. Xenophon. de Rebus Græcis, lib. 4. pag. 224.

(d) Cornel. Nepos in Agesil. vita, cap. 2.

(e) Ex Cornel. Nepote, ibid.

(f) Plut. in Agesil. pag. 611. B.

(g) Talem se imperatorem præbuit, ut eo tempore omnibus apparuerit, nisi ille fuisset, Spartam futuram non fuisse. Corn. Nep. ibid. cap. 6.

(h) Plut. in Agesil. pag. 616. B.

(i) Id. ib. C.

(k) Plut. p. 617, 618. Corn. Nepos in Agesil.

respect to him. Fame went before him into Egypt, and represented him there under the most pompous Ideas. As soon as they heard of his landing, they ran in Crowds to see him: Judge then how they were surprized, to see a little Man lie on the Grass in a mean and slovenly Garment. They could not forbear laughing, and applying to him the Fable of the Mountain, which brought forth a Mouse (13). Their Contempt was not lessened, when they saw the Choice he made of the Refreshments sent him by the King (14). See below the Remark [G].

(13) Plut. ibid. p. 616. See the Artic. TACHUS.

(14) Corn. Nepos, ubi supra.

[C] He deceived his Enemies, at the same time that he let them know his true Intentions.] The Reason was, They did not believe so expert a General would discover his Designs. "Vidit, si quo esset iter "facturus palam pronunciasset, hostes non crediturus, "aliasque regiones occupaturos, nec dubitaturos aliud "esse facturum ac pronunciasset. Itaque cum ille "Sardis se iturum dixisset, Tissaphernes eamdem Ca- "riam defendendam putavit (15). He knew that if "he publickly declared the Rout he was about to take, "the Enemy would not believe him, and would post "themselves in a quite different Place, nor would "doubt of his acting contrary to his Declaration. Ac- "cordingly, when he gave out, that he would march "to Sardes, Tissaphernes thought proper to stay and "defend Caria." We should improperly apply here the Thought of Mr Wicquefort: Sir George Downing, Ambassador of England, had not Probity nor Prudence enough to be perswaded, that no Minister deceives more securely nor more pleasingly, than he who never deceives; because in keeping the High-road, those, who look for By-ways and Evasions, can never meet him (16). The Comparison between such a Minister, and our Agesilaus, would be a very lame one; for this King of Lacedemon, in publishing his Intentions, deceived his Enemies, only because on other Occasions he had concealed his Intentions. A General, who pursues this Scheme, can seldom make use of a more successful Stratagem, than that of spreading a true Report of his Marches. The Contrivance will be good, because it is new, and the Enemy has not yet been deceived by it. Read this Passage of Xenophon; it is Cambyses who speaks to his Son Cyrus, and who compares new Stratagems in War to new Airs of Music. Καὶ σφόδρα μὲν καὶ ἐν τοῖς μουσικοῖς τὰ νέα ἐυδοκιμεῖ, πολὺ δὲ καὶ ἐν τοῖς πολεμικοῖς μᾶλλον τὰ καινὰ μηχανήματα ἐυδοκιμεῖ, ταῦτα γὰρ μᾶλλον καὶ ἐξαπατᾷν δύνανται τοὺς πολεμίους (17). And as in Music what is new is most esteemed, so in War the newest Stratagems are the best; for they are most likely to deceive the Enemy. We shall observe in another Place (18), that some Men, by dint of Folly, avoid being imposed on.

(15) Ibid. cap. 3. See also Plutarch in Agesilaus, pag. 600. F.

(16) Wicquefort's Ambassador, pag. 170.

(17) Xenoph. Cyropæd. circa fin. pag. 21.

(18) In one of the Remarks of the Article SIMONIDES.

[D] Which he gained over the Allies in Bœotia.] The Battle was fought at Coronea. Xenophon, who served under Agesilaus in it, gives the same Account (19); as does Plutarch (20). Lambinus, in his Commentary on these Words of Cornelius Nepos, apud Coroneam quos omnes gravi prælio vicit, would, without necessity, correct the Word Χαιρώνειαν of Plutarch, by that of Κορωνείαν. Plutarch mentioned these two Places, without pretending, that the Battle was fought in the first. But, says Lambinus, could Agesilaus, going from Phocis, advance into Bœotia, as far as Chæronea, if Chæronea is in Phocis? No, doubtless; but this IF is false, and Lambinus shews by it, that he was but little versed in Geography. See the Commentary of Kirckmaierus on Cornelius Nepos, at pag. 722. Charles Stephens erred yet more grossly, when he placed Chæronea in Peloponnesus. Lloyd and Hofman followed him in this Error.

(19) Xenophon. de Rebus Græc. lib. 4. pag. 225.

(20) Plut. in Agesil. pag. 605.

[E] He died of a Fit of Sickness by the Way, in the third Year of the hundred and fourth Olympiad.] A Storm having obliged him to put into Harbour, he was carried into a Desart Place, called the Port of Menelaus, where he died (21). Hic cum ex Ægypto reverteretur —— venissetque in portum qui Menelai vocatur, jacens inter Cyrenas & Ægyptum, in morbum implicitus decessit (22). It was in the third Year of the hundred and fourth Olympiad, according to Calvisius: But we see by this, that his Calculation is false; for from the third Year of the Ninety fifth Olympiad, the beginning, as he says, of the Reign of Agesilaus, to the third Year of the hundred and fourth Olympiad, there are but thirty six Years: And yet he allows forty one Years to that Reign.

(21) Plut. pag. 618.

(22) Corn. Nepos. in Vit. Agesil. sub fin.

Digitized by Google

mitted some Mistakes here [F]. We shall see in the Article CONON, whether Cornelius Nepos and Justin have done their part in the History of Agesilaus. This Prince would never suffer his Effigies to be made either in Relievo, or in Flat-Painting (l); nay he forbad it by his Last Will. Some have been of Opinion, that he did this, because he was sensible he was not an handsome Man, diffidens formæ suæ (m). Never any Person lived in greater Simplicity than he [G]. But he knew very well how to couch the Spirit, the Heart, and the Religion of a Sovereign [H], under this outside (l) Plut. in Agesil. See also Cicero's Epist. ad Famil. 12. lib. 5. pag. 260. Edit. Græv.

(m) Apul. in Apolog. pag. 282.

Reign. Let us then place the beginning of it, with Helvicus, in the second Year of the Ninety third Olympiad, and the end in the third Year of the hundred and fourth.

(23) See the Remark [A] concerning the two first Mistakes.

[F] Mr Moreri has committed some Mistakes here.] It is false; I. That Leotychides was the Natural Son of King Agis. II. That Lysander zealously maintained Leotychides's Pretensions (23). III. That Agesilaus ever encamped near the City of Heronce, in Bœotia (24). IV. That he had a noble Presence, and full of Majesty (25). V. That he said, That the Oracle which excluded the Lame from the Crown, ought to be understood of the Imperfections of the Mind, or of Birth. These two last Faults belong to the Supplement of Moreri. I pass over his giving the Egyptian a wrong Name, to whom Agesilaus did Service: His Name was not Nactenebon.

(24) I do not believe that there was a City called Heronce, either in Bœotia, or any where else.

(25) See the Remark [B].

[G] In greater Simplicity than he.] He was the worst cloath'd of any Person in his whole Army (26). After his Asiatic Expedition, wherein he had acquir'd such an high Reputation, which had received an additional Lustre from the Battle of Coronea, he liv'd in Sparta, as a good Lacedemonian of the old Times would have done. He alter'd nothing in his Garments, in his Bathings, or in his Meals; and, what was perhaps more difficult, he would not suffer his Wife to be better dress'd than before, nor permit her to distinguish her Daughter, in Procession, by finer Cloaths than those of other young Ladies. He would not repair the Gates of his House, though they were so old and ruinous, that they seem'd to be the same, which Aristodemus had built in that place (27). Observe, That Aristodemus was one of the Heraclidæ, to whose Share the City of Sparta fell, and from whom descended the Kings of Lacedemon, divided into two Families on account of the two Sons which he left. " In hoc (Agesilao) " illud in primis fuit admirabile, cum maxima mune- " ra ei ab regibus & dynastis civitatibusque conferren- " tur, nihil unquam in domum suam contulit, nihil " de victu, nihil de vestitu Laconum mutavit. Do- " mo eadem fuit contentus, qua Eurysthenes proge- " nitor majorum suorum (28) fuerat usus, quam qui " intrarat nullum signum libidinis, nullum luxuriæ " videre poterat; contra plurima patientiæ atque ab- " stinentiæ. Sic enim erat instructa, ut nulla in re " differret à cujusvis inopis atque privati (29). —— " What was the most worthy of Admiration in him, " (Agesilaus) was, that, though he receiv'd the most " magnificent Presents from Kings, Dynasts, and Re- " publics, he apply'd no Part of them to his own Fa- " mily, made no Alteration in his manner of living, " nor any change in his Lacedemonian Dress. He was " content with the same House, in which Eurysthenes, " the Progenitor of his Ancestors, liv'd; which who- " ever enter'd, could perceive no Signs of Luxury or " Excess, but many of Content and Frugality. For it " was furnish'd in all respects like the House of an in- " digent and private Person." When it was known that Agesilaus was arrived in Egypt, they sent him all sorts of Provisions: He chose only the most common; and left the Perfumes, Comfits, and Delicacies (30) to his Servants. The Egyptians, instead of admiring this Behaviour, derided the Prince, and took him for a silly Fellow, who did not know what was good. " Ille præter vitulina, & hujusmodi genera " obsonii, quæ præsens tempus desiderabat, nihil ac- " cepit, unguenta, coronas, secundamque mensam " servis dispertiit, cætera referri jussit. Quo facto " eum barbari magis etiam contempserunt, quod eum " ignorantia bonarum rerum illa potissimum sump- " sisse arbitrabantur (31)." You will find in Plutarch, I. That this Prince behav'd in the same manner, when the Thracians sent him Presents. II. That he derided them, when they offer'd him divine Honours (32).

(26) Plut. in Agesil. pag. 603. C.

(27) Id. ib. pag. 606.

(28) He had done better to have said Aristodemus, as Plutarch did, for Agesilaus did not descend from Eurysthenes, but from Procles, the second Son of Aristodemus.

(29) Corn. Nepos, c. 7.

(30) Plut. in Agesil. pag. 616.

(31) Corn. Nepos, ubi supra, cap. 8.

(32) Plut. in Apophth. pag. 210. See also Athenæus, lib. 14. pag. 657.

[H] The Spirit, the Heart, and the Religion of a Sovereign.] Plutarch testifies, that those, who govern'd in Lacedemon, acknowledg'd no other Justice, than that which tended to the Advantage and aggrandizing of the State (33). It was among them the Rule and the Measure of Law and Honesty; if a thing was useful to the Public, it immediately pass'd for lawful. I believe Plutarch says the Truth; but he ought not to have confin'd his Observation to the City of Sparta alone. Those of Athens (34), and Thebes, had no better Principles; and, generally speaking, they are the Maxims of all States: The only Difference is in Degrees; some save Appearances better than others. However, Agesilaus was quite abandon'd to this iniquitous Morality. Being suspected to have induc'd Phebidas to surprize the Citadel of Thebes, in full Peace, and by a Fraud, which made all Greece exclaim, he represented, That they ought first to examine, whether the Action was of Advantage to the State; and that every Person ought, in his private Capacity, to do what tended to the Advantage of the State (35). He obtain'd, that Phebidas should be acquitted, and that a Garrison should be sent into the Citadel. In his Egyptian Expedition, did he not abandon Taebus, who had hired his Assistance, and embrace the Interests of Nectanabus, for this Reason alone, because it was more for the Interest of the Lacedemonians to support the latter than the former? An Action, which under the Mask of public Good, was downright Treachery, as Plutarch himself observ'd. Ἀτόπῳ καὶ ἀλλοκότῳ πράγματος παρακαλύμματι τῷ συμφέροντι τῆς πατρίδος χρησάμενος· ἀπὸ ταύτης γε τῆς προφάσεως ἀφαιρεθείσης τὸ δικαιότατον ὄνομα τῆς πράξεως ἦν προδοσία (36). Absurdo & indigno facinori commodum prætexens patriæ: quando hoc quidem velamento detracto nomen iftius facti verissimum erat proditio. In Conversation Agesilaus talk'd of nothing but Justice; his Discourses upon this Subject were the finest in the World (37). Hearing that a certain thing was pleasing to the great King (38), he demanded, How is he greater than I, if he is not more Just? Fine Theory! but his Practice did not answer it, when his Kingdom was in question. I am apt to believe, that, for private Views, he could not easily have acted against Conviction; and this is the Reason why I pretend, he had the Religion of a Sovereign. How many Kings and Princes are zealous for their Religion, Just and Honest in themselves; but if it be thought for the public Good to annoy their Enemies, most of them, if not all, follow the Maxims of Lacedemon? I believe a Book, entituled, The Religion of a Sovereign, would sell well; it would cause the Religio Medici to be forgotten.

(33) Plut. in Agesil. pag. 617. Idem in Alcibiade.

(34) See the Remark [C] of the Article ARISTIDES.

(35) Idem in Agesil. pag. 608.

(36) Id. ib. pag. 617.

(37) Id. ib. pag. 608.

(38) The Greeks gave this Appellation to the King of Persia. See the Remark [A] of the Article ARTABANUS IV.

Two Days ago I heard a Person of Merit say, that an Italian Prince, demanding too advantageous Conditions, in negotiating a Treaty of Peace with a powerful Monarch, who had taken most of his Dominions from him, the Envoy of that Monarch answered him, But what Security will you give the King my Master, if he complies with all your Demands? Answer him, reply'd the Prince, that I engage my Word to him, not in quality of a Sovereign, for, as such, I must sacrifice every thing to aggrandize myself, and lay hold of every Opportunity of contributing to the Glory and Advantage of my Dominions; tell him, then, that I engage my Word to him, not in this Quality (which would be to promise nothing) but as a Gentleman, and an honest Man. Though this Language does not answer the Ideas of those, who have introduc'd, in the Style of the Chancery, the set Form, We promise upon the Faith and Word of a King, yet it is very Sincere, and very Just.

Let us make two Remarks more. First, I distinguish between the Belief of Urban VIII, and that of Mapheus Barbarini. The Religion of a Sovereign, as such, and Religion, personally speaking, are two things.

My other Remark is this. Agesilaus had a very great respect for his Gods; he would not suffer their Temple to be plundered nor prophan'd, neither in Greece, nor in the Country of the Barbarians; and he reckon'd those as sacrilegious, who treated an Enemy outside of Regularity, and philosophical Frugality. He had such a great Tenderness for his Children, that he would amuse himself with them in the most childish Exercises [I], such as riding on a Hobby-horse.

Digitized by Google

It will not be useless to remark the small Account he made of those, who greatly prided themselves in feeding and dressing Horses for the Races of the Olympic Games. He wou'd persuade them it was a trifling Ambition; and that it was an Affair of Expence, not a Proof of Merit or of Virtue; and for this purpose he persuaded his Sister to dispute this Prize (n). This Lady having prepared her Horse for the Exercise, came into the Lists and gained the Victory. She was the first Woman who obtained this Honour (o). Her Name was Cyniſca. I cannot think Dicæarchus was ignorant of this, tho' he complains that he could not find what the Name of Ageſilaus's Daughter [K] was. He might have known it, if he had done what Plutarch did [L].

(n) Plut. in Ageſil. pag. 606. D.

(o) Pauſan. lib. 3. pag. 88, 96.

(39) Corn. Nepos, in Vit. Ageſil. cap. 4.

Enemy ill that had taken Refuge in a Temple (39). During the March of his Troops, he lodg'd always in the most sacred Temples, that the Gods might be Witnesses of his most private, domestic, Actions. Ἐκεῖνος μὲν γὰρ ἀποδημῶν καθ' αὑτὸν ἐν τοῖς ἁγιοτάτοις ἱεροῖς· ἃ μὴ πολλοὶ καθορῶσιν ἀνθρώπων πράττοντας ἡμᾶς, τούτων θεοὺς ποιούμενος ἐπόπτας καὶ μάρτυρας. Tendebat enim, cum iter faceret, ſolus in ſanctiſſimis delubris, ac quibus rebus paucos adhibemus arbitros, earum Deos faciebat inſpectores (40). This was his Perſonal Religion; but when he considered himself in the Character of a King, the Good and Advantage of his Kingdom were his principal Divinity, to which he sacrificed Virtue and Justice, divine and human Laws. I cannot tell, whether all, who quote this Sentence of Euripides,

(40) Plut. in Ageſil. pag. 603.

Nam ſi violandum eſt jus, regnandi gratia
Violandum eſt: aliis rebus pietatem colas (41).

(41) Cic. de Offic. lib. 3. cap. 21.

for if Juſtice be ever to be violated, it is to be violated for the Sake of a Kingdom: in other Caſes follow Virtue; whether every one, I say, who cites this, comprehends the full Force of it. It represents the Sentiments of those, who acquire Kingdoms, and of those who govern States; they fall sometimes into Superstition. Consider Ageſilaus's private Conduct; it was very regular, aliis rebus pietatem colas; he does not swerve from Equity; but in the Capacity of a King, regnandi gratia violandum eſt. As a Man, he will deal with you sincerely, amicus uſque ad aras; but, as a Prince, if he speaks his real Sentiments, he will tell you, I will obſerve the Treaty of Peace, ſo long as the Good of my Kingdom requires it; I will deſpiſe my Oath, when Maxims of State will have it ſo. If he would rather have the Perſians break the Truce, than begin to violate it himself, it is because he expected to find his Account in this Conduct of the Perſians. "Multum in eo consequi se dicebat, quod "Tissaphernes perjurio suo & homines suis rebus abalienaret, & Deos sibi iratos redderet (42). ——— "This, he said, would be much for his Advantage; "ſince Tissaphernes, by his Perjury, would loſe the "Favour of Men, and incur the Anger of the Gods."

(42) Corn. Nepos, ubi ſupra, c. 2.

Our good Ageſilaus, who would have thought it an Offence against good Morality, to be well cloathed, and to live luxuriously, made no Scruple to usurp a Kingdom. Thus certain Casuists damn every Woman without Remission, who dresses too delicately: They cannot bear their Ribbons, or their Jewels; but at the same time they not only permit Men to revolt, and to engage in Civil Wars, but even exhort them to it.

[I] In the moſt childiſh Exerciſes.] Being surprised one Day riding, among his Children, on a Hobby-Horse, he only said to him, who saw him in that Posture, forbear to ſpeak of it, 'till you are a Father (43). We must not, upon this Occasion, apply these Verses of Horace.

(43) Plut. in Ageſil. pag. 610. See likewiſe Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 12. cap. 5.

Ædificare casas, plostello adjungere mures,
Ludere par impar, EQUITARE IN ARUNDINE LONGA
Si quem delectet barbatum, amentia verset (44).

(44) Horat. Sat. 3. lib. 2. ver. 247.

If any, grown a Man, delights to raiſe
Dirt-Pies, and, like a Child, at Puſh-pin plays,
Yokes Rats and Mice unto a little Plough,
And RIDES UPON AN HOBBY-HORSE, or ſo,
Sure he is Mad. CREECH.

For the Poet is not describing those, who, in Compliance to their own Children, amuse themselves at home in this Manner. La Mothe le Vayer is not exact, when he says, that King Ageſilaus, as well as Alcibiades, was ſurpris'd in playing boyish Tricks among Children, and that the Philosopher Socrates gloried in it (45). He cites Seneca in the last Chapter of the first Book de Tranquillitate. Here are many Errors: I. He ought to have specified, that Ageſilaus play'd the Boy only with his own Children. II. The Treatise de Tranquillitate contains but one Book. III. Nothing is said either of Alcibiades, or of Ageſilaus, in the Chapter cited. IV. It is not said there, that Socrates gloried in playing with Children; it is only said that he was not ashamed of it. Cum pueris Socrates ludens non erubeſcebat. V. Valerius Maximus, and Ælian, who mention this Sport of Socrates, say that Alcibiades surpris'd him at it. "Non erubuit tunc, cum interposità arundine cruribus suis cum parvulis filiolis ludens ab Alcibiade risus est (46). —— He did not "bluſh, when, riding upon an Hobby-horſe among his "little Sons, he was laugh'd at by Alcibiades. Σωκράτης δὲ κατελήφθη ποτὲ ὑπὸ Ἀλκιβιάδου παίζων μετὰ Λαμπροκλέους ἔτι νηπίου (47). Socrates was once "ſurpris'd by Alcibiades, playing with Lamprocles, "yet a Child." But I do not remember to have read, that others surpris'd Alcibiades at it. VI. These two Authors observe that Socrates plaid with his own Children.

(45) La Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 1. pag. 217. Edit. 12mo.

(46) Valer. Maximus, lib. 8. c. 8. ſub fin.

(47) Ælian. ubi ſupra.

[K] I cannot think that Dicæarchus was ignorant of —— the Name of Ageſilaus's Daughter.] Cyniſca was not only the first Woman who obtain'd the Prize in the Chariot-Races of the Olympic Games, but the most Illustrious of all those Ladies, who obtain'd the like Victory afterwards (48). The Poet Simonides honour'd her with an Epigram (49). She consecrated Horses of Brass as a Monument of her Victory, which were placed at the Entrance of the Temple of Jupiter Olympius (50). Her Statue, made by Apelles, and adorn'd with divers Inscriptions, was to be seen in the Temple of Juno at Elis (51). The Lacedemonians erected a Monument like that of a Hero, Ἡρῶον, to her (52). So that it is not likely that the Name of Ageſilaus's Sister was unknown to any Greek Historian.

(48) Pauſan. lib. 3. p. 88.

(49) Id. ib.

(50) Id. lib. 5. pag. 159.

(51) Id. lib. 6. pag. 178.

(52) Id. lib. 3. p. 96.

[L] He might have known it, if he had done what Plutarch did.] This latter Historian informs us, that Dicæarchus was very angry, that neither the Name of Ageſilaus's Daughter, nor of Epaminondas's Mother, was known. Ὁ Δικαίαρχος ἐτηγάνακτησεν· Stomachabatur Dicæarchus, &c. As for myself, continues he, I have found in the Regiſters of the Lacedemonians, that Ageſilaus's Wife's Name was Cleora, and that the Name of one of his two Daughters was Apola, and the Name of the other Prolyta. I am not surprised, that Dicæarchus was vex'd at the Negligence of the Historians; for we are naturally desirous of knowing the Families of great Men. It was a little strange, that the Names of Ageſilaus's Wife and Daughters were only to be met with in the Archives of Lacedemon.

(53) Plut. ubi ſupra, pag. 606.

AGESIPOLIS, the first of the Name, King of Lacedemon, succeeded his Father Pausanias, who had taken Refuge in a Temple, (a), when he found, that his Conduct, in concluding a Peace with the Thebans, was disapprov'd. They permitted him

(a) In that of Minerva at Tegea. Pauſan lib. 3. pag. 86.

Digitized by Google

him to continue in that Asylum, and placed his Son Agesipolis on the Throne, under the Guardianship of Aristodemus (b). This happened in the 3d Year of the XCVIth Olympiad (c). He was of Age, when the Lacedemonians resolved to attack the Athenians and Thebans at the same time: but as they judged it imprudent, in such a War, not to be secure of the Argians, they began with them (d). Agesipolis, who was to command against them, made a scruple of it, because they demanded a Truce of him. He desir'd to satisfy his Doubts, by consulting with Jupiter upon this case of Conscience; which he did in Person, in the famous Olympian Temple. He demanded, whether he might reject the Proposals, which the Argians made, of a Truce; and whether he might not pretend, that they had mis-timed their Proposition, by delaying to talk of Peace, till the Lacedemonian Troops were upon the Point of attacking them? The Oracle answered, that the Demands of the Argians were unjust, and that they might honourably be refused (e). Agesipolis, as a still farther Precaution, immediately had recourse to the Oracle of Delphi, that he might inform himself, whether the Opinion of the Son (f) was agreeable to That of the Father (g) [A]. The Answer of Apollo was the same with That of Jupiter; upon which Agesipolis hesitated no longer, but caus'd his Army to march towards Argos. The Argians sent two Heralds to him, to desire Peace: He answered, that the Gods thought proper he shou'd reject their Offers, and continued his March. There happened an Earthquake the first Day of his encamping in their Country; and as Part of his Troops looked upon it as an Admonition to them to return, he dissipated their Superstition, by remarking that this Prodigy had come to pass after their Entry into the Enemy's Country. Upon this he marched farther, approached the City of Argos, and pressed the Siege of it closely. He wou'd, perhaps, have taken it, had not the Loss of some of his Soldiers by a Thunder-clap, and other Omens, obliged him to retire (b). We must not forget his Emulation: When he had entered the Country of the Argians, he informed himself how far Agesilaus had formerly ravaged it; and this Curiosity was only that he might surpass the Exploits of that Commander, as if he had rivalled him in the Athletic Games (i). The general Peace which the Lacedemonians procured to Greece (k) by the Negotiations of Antalcides, their Ambassador, at the Court of Persia, in the Second Year of the XCVIIIth Olympiad, was soon followed by a particular War, which they declared against the Inhabitants of Mantinea. Agesilaus declining the Command of the Troops, Agesipolis marched against the Enemy. He ravaged the Territory of Mantinea, and at length took the City. The Stratagem he

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Diod. Sicul. lib. 14. cap. 90.

(d) Xenoph. de Republ. Gr. lib. 4. pag. 314.

(e) Ὁ δὲ θεὸς ἐπισήμαινεν αὐτῷ ὅσιον εἶναι μὴ δεχομένῳ σπονδὰς ἀδίκως ὑποφερομένας. Cui Deus respondit fas ei esse inducias non rite oblatas respuere. Xenophon. de Rebus gestis Gr. lib. 4. pag. 312.

(f) That is, Apollo.

(g) That is, Jupiter.

(b) Taken from Xenophon, ubi supra.

(i) Ὅσπερ πένταθλος πάντη ἐπὶ τὸ πλέον ὑπερβάλλειν ἐπειρᾶτο. Tanquam enim pentathlos omnino illum superare contendebat. Id. ibid.

(k) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 14. c. 111. pag. 650.

[A] If the Opinion of Apollo was agreeable to that of Jupiter.] We may collect from hence a Truth, which is otherwise evident enough; namely, that the Pagan Religion was founded upon Notions of the Deity as false as Atheism. I do not speak of the Sentiments of the common People only, or the Abuse of particular Persons: I speak of the public Worship, performed by the most eminent Persons, and supported by the Authority of the State. We have here an Instance of a King of Lacedemon, who, after having offered solemn Sacrifices, as Preparative to an Expedition (1), and even after a favourable Answer from the greatest of the Gods, goes and consults another Deity, being uncertain whether he will contradict, or confirm this Answer. He was, therefore, of Opinion, that the Decisions of Jupiter could not always be followed with a safe Conscience, and he supposed, that the Sentiments Apollo were not always conformable to those of Jupiter. Was not this to believe, that all the Gods, without excepting the greatest, were limited in their Knowledge, and that between Them and Men there was only the Difference of more or less? At this rate, the tot capita, tot sensus, —— so many Men, so many Minds, was applicable to Inhabitants of Heaven, as well as Earth. They consulted Jupiter, as we consult the most famous Advocate of Parliament, when we intend to commence a Law-Suit. This Advocate's Answer does not satisfy a cautious Client; but he desires to have the Advice of other Counsel; and there are, who consult the most able Doctors in every Court of the Kingdom. The Pagans did so with respect to their Oracles: They consulted several of them upon the same Point, to see whether the Gods would contradict each other, and to take their Measures the better, by comparing their respective Answers. Thus their Gods were as chimerical, as the Deity of Spinoza; for it is as impossible that a limited Nature should be God, as it is impossible that the World should be the Supream Being which governs all things by a wise Providence. To confirm what is here advanced concerning the false Idea, which the Pagans entertained of God: They were not scandalized at the different Fate of their Victims. Those which were offered to one Divinity encouraged their Hopes, while those offered to another alarmed their Fears. Apollo and Diana, Twins of Jupiter, often contradicted each other; the Brother rejecting an Offering, the Sister accepting it. Paganism found nothing scandalous in this. The Heathens would willingly have found a greater Harmony in the Promises of good things; but in short they did not believe, that the Divine Nature was free from Ignorance, Caprice, and Disagreement: So that they acquiesced in this, as an unavoidable Effect of the Nature of Things. We must not imagine, that Cicero's Objections opened the Eyes of many among them. "Quid quum pluribus Diis immolatur, qui "tandem evenit ut litetur aliis, aliis non litetur? "Quæ autem inconstantia Deorum est, ut primis mi- "nentur extis, bene promittant secundis? Aut tanta "inter eos dissensio, sæpe etiam inter proximos, "ut Apollinis exta bona sint, Dianæ non bona "(2)? —— Whence is it, that in consulting several Gods at a time, we sacrifice to some and not "to others? And what Inconstancy of the Gods is it, "to threaten in the first Entrails, but to appear "propitious in the second? Or is there such a Dis- "agreement among them, even those the nearest re- "lated, that Apollo's Victims shall promise Success, "but Diana's not?

A modern Author has made use of this Conduct of Agesipolis, to shew that, in relation to the Oracles, the greatest of the Gods of Paganism did not preserve, his Advantage, or his Superiority. He says, (3), The Oracles of Jupiter, such as those of Trophonius, Dodona, and Hammon, had not so much Credit as That of Delphi —— For they never equalled the latter either in Esteem, or in Duration. And this is proved, besides the Consent of most Authors who have spoke of it, by what Xenophon reports of Agesipolis *, who, after having consulted Jupiter Olympius, and received his Answer, had recourse to Apollo at Delphi, as a Judge without Appeal, whether he was of the same Opinion with his Father. Aristotle imputes this kind of Religious Ridicule to one Hegesippus in the second Book of his Rhetorics. This Passage furnishes Matter for two Observations. The

(1) Ἐπεὶ... τὰ διαβατήρια θυομένῳ ἐγένετο, ἐλθὼν εἰς τὴν Ὀλυμπίαν χρησόμενος. Quum pro felici transitu sacrificasset, Olympiam Oraculum consulturus proficiscitur. Xenophon. de Gestis Gr. ib. 4. pag. 312.

(2) Cicero de Divinat. lib. 2. c. 17.

(3) La Motte le Vayer's Letter 106. Tom. 11. pag. 449.

* Lib. 4. Historiar.

Digitized by Google

he put in practice upon this occasion is too curious to be omitted [B]. There is some Probability, that it was in this War, that Pelopidas and Epaminondas extricated themselves from a Danger [C], to which their Valour and Friendship exposed them. He was sent some years after [D] with a fine Army against the Olynthians (l). Amintas, King of Macedon, and Derdas, Prince of Elymea (m), gave him a powerful Assistance. He marched towards Olynthus, and, finding no Army to oppose him, he ravaged the Country, and made himself Master of Torona. But, as he fatigued himself extreamly, notwithstanding the violent Summer-Heats, he was seized with a Continual Fever, which carried him off in seven days (n) in the fourteenth year of his Reign (o). See my Critical Remarks on Mr Moreri [E]. Agesilaus was not pleased with this Loss, as it

(l) Xenoph. de Republ. Gr. lib. 5. pag. 329.

(m) Xenoph. ibid. p. 327. says, Ἐλαμίας ἀρχοντα, but it is probably a Fault of the Copier for Ἐλιμείας.

(n) Id. ibid. pag. 329.

(o) Diod. Sicul. lib. 14. cap. 3. & lib. 15. cap. 23. pag. 674. ad ann. 1. Olymp. 100.

The first is, that the Notions of the Gallican Church concerning the Council, and the Pope, tho' speaking ex cathedra, may be compared to those of Paganism concerning the Oracles of Jupiter, and of Delphi. The Olympian Jupiter, when he answered a Question, met with great Esteem in the Minds of the People; much Deference was paid to his Authority; but in short, his Opinion, tho' delivered ex cathedra or rather ex tripode, did not pass for Infallible. Behold the Pope of the Gallican Church! The Apollo of Delphi was the Judge without Appeal: Behold the Council! My second Observation is, That Agesipolis was in earnest in what he did; there was no Religious Banter in the Case. As for what concerns Hegesippus, I answer nothing for him. He was perhaps malicious enough to attempt ensnaring the Oracles, that he might insult them if they did not agree. He might have said, It is a shame for you to answer Yes, and No. Ἡγήσιππος ἐν Δελφοῖς ἐπηρώτα τὸν θεὸν, κεχρημένος πρότερον Ὀλυμπιάσιν, εἰ ἀυτῷ ταὐτὰ δοκεῖ ἅπερ τῷ πατρί, ὡς αἰσχρὸν ὂν τἀναντία εἰπεῖν (4). Hegesippus, having received an Answer from the God at Olympia, interrogated him at Delphi, whether he was of the same Opinion with his Father, as if it were scandalous for the Gods to disagree in their Answers. If our Agesipolis had had any ill Design against Apollo, in Imitation of that malicious Person, whose Story Esop relates (5), he would have been bit; for the Answer of Delphi was the same with that of Olympia.

(4) Aristot. Rhetor. lib. 2. cap. 23. pag. 445. F.

(5) Esop in his 16th Fable, whose Title is Κακοπεράγμων, The Malicious. He was one, who held a Sparrow in his Hand, and ask'd the Oracle, Is what I have in my hand alive or not? His Design was to have kill'd the Sparrow, if the Oracle had answer'd It is alive?

[B] The Stratagem he put in practice upon this Occasion is too curious to be omitted.] He stopped the Current of the River, which ran through the middle of the City: This caused an Inundation, which weakened the Foundations of the Houses and Walls in such a manner, that the Inhabitants feared they would fall; and, as they foresaw, that if any part of the Wall should fall, their City would be taken by Assault, they capitulated. They obtained but very hard Conditions; for they were forced to go and live in the Country, being divided into four Cantons, and their City was dismantled: Their Magistrates would have been punished with Death, if Agesipolis's Father had not interceded for them (6). Xenophon who relates these Particulars, omits a particular Circumstance, which Pausanias takes Notice of. Agesipolis turned the Course of the River towards the Walls of the City. Now the Brick, of which the Wall was built, not being burnt, melted in the Water, as Wax melts by the Heat of the Sun. The Reason, why the Mantineans preferred crude to burnt Brick was, because it was not so apt to break, when the Walls are battered. Agesipolis did not invent this Stratagem, but put it in Practice, upon hearing that Cimon had made use of it, to take the City of Eione on the River Strymon (7).

(6) Xenoph. lib. 5. pag. 323.

(7) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 242, 243.

[C] Pelopidas and Epominandas extricated themselves from a Danger.] Plutarch relates, that the Thebans sent Succours to the Lacedemonians, in the Expedition of Mantinea, and that the Wing, wherein these two celebrated Warriors fought, giving way, they did not retire. Pelopidas received seven Wounds, and fell on a heap of dead Men. Epaminondas ran to him, and opposed himself alone against many, fully resolved to die, rather than forsake his Friend. He was wounded in two Places; yet he defended himself vigorously, when Agesilaus came at the Head of some Troops of the other Wing of the Army, and rescued them both (8). You will tell me, that Xenophon does not mention any Battel, when he relates what past in this War of Mantinea; but I answer, that Pausanias observes, that Agesipolis had gained a Battel, before he laid Siege to the City; Ὡς δὲ ἐκράτησεν ὁ Ἀγησίπολις τῇ μάχῃ, καὶ εἰς τὸ τεῖχος κατέκλεισε τῆς Μαντινίας (9). After that Agesipolis, had subdued the Mantineans in Fight, had drove them within the Walls of the City. And I add, that Xenophon himself remarks, that there were some Auxiliary Troops in the Army of Lacedemon (10). Note, that the Event mentioned by Plutarch, preceded the Stratagem, by which Phebidas made himself Master of the Fortress of the Thebans (11). This Chronological Character agrees with the Expedition of Agesipolis against Mantinea.

(8) Plut. in Vita Pelopidæ, p. 280.

(9) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 242.

(10) Xenophon. lib. 5. pag. 323.

(11) Plut. ubi supra.

[D] He was sent some Years after.] I only make this Remark, to censure Pausanias, who reports that Agesipolis, abandoning with regret the Argian War, turned his whole Resentment against the Olynthians. Οὕτω μὲν δὴ ἐκ τῆς Ἀργολίδος ἀνάζευξεν ἄκων, ἐπὶ δὲ Ὀλυνθίους ἐτράπετο αὖθις στρατιάν (12). Invitissimus itaque ille ex Argivorum finibus castra movit, & contra Olynthios belli impetum convertit. Who would not believe, in reading this, that the Expedition of Olynthus succeeded immediately that of Argos? Who would not imagine, that Agesipolis, when he left the Territories of Argos, took the way of Macedonia; yet it is false. Some Years past between these two Expeditions. The War of Mantinea, of which the same Pausanias has taken some Notice, followed That of Argos, and preceded that of Olynthus six Years. Let us, upon this Occasion, remark a Fault of Calvisius. He has placed the War of Argos in the fourth Year of the Ninety sixth Olympiad, a little after the Death of Pausanias King of Macedonia (13). Now Agesipolis came to the Throne the same Year, in which this Pausanias died (14), and, being a Minor, was put under the Tuition of Aristodemus (15). So that if Calvisius was exact, the War of Argos must concur nearly with the first Year of the Reign of Agesipolis, and must have been conducted by Aristodemus; for it is certain, that, under the Minority of Agesipolis, his Tutor was placed at the Head of the Army, when this King was obliged to take the Field (16). Calvisius does not fail to observe, that Aristodemus went thither in the third Year of the Ninety sixth Olympiad, because Agesipolis was under Age (17). He is mistaken in placing the first Year of his Reign in the second Year of the Ninety sixth Olympiad, and the War of Argos too soon after the Death Pausanias King of Macedonia.

(12) Pausan. lib. 2. p. 86.

(13) Sethi Calvisii Chronol. ad ann. mundi 3557. pag. 162.

(14) Diod. Sicul. l. 14. cap. 90. pag. 637.

(15) Xenoph. de Reb. gest. Græcorum, l. 4. p. 301. Pausan. ubi supra.

(16) Xenophon. ubi supra.

(17) Calvisius, p. 160.

[E] See my Critical Remarks on Mr Moreri.] "Agesipolis was surprized with a burning Fever, and "returned continually to the Coolness of the Waters of a certain Temple of Bacchus, which was "at Aphitis, whither he caused himself to be carried, "and died on the seventh Day of his Fever, after "he was gone out of the Temple, that he might "not defile it by his Death." These are Mr Moreri's Words. It would be unjust to criticise on the Expression, returned continually to the Coolness, (revint toujours à la fraicheur) for it is easy to see that the Printers have have put revint (returned) instead of rêvant (thinking of, or raving after) (18). But two Observations may be made: One is, that he ought to have expressed himself thus; Remembring the Temple of Bacchus, which he had seen at Aphitis, he desired to enjoy it's Shade, and the Coolness of the clear Waters, which were there. He was carried thither alive, but died out of the Temple the seventh Day of his Fever (19). In the second Place, it is a chimerical Gloss to tell us, That out of a religious Respect for the Sanctity of the Temple, he would not die in it. Has Xenophon, or any other Author worthy of Credit, said so? To save myself the Trouble in another Place, I shall here remark an Error, which Mr Moreri has committed in his Article of AGESIPOLIS II. He assures us that That Prince, having been a Hostage in his Youth, answered those, who reproached him with it, that it was because Kings suffer for the Faults of their Kingdom. This Answer is as false, as it is contrary to the satirical Sentence,

(18) They have put it rêvant in the Edition of Holland.

(19) See Xenophon. lib. 4. pag. 329, 330.

Digitized by Google

it was expected he wou'd have been [F]; but bewailed and regretted it a long time, as Xenophon informs us (p). Observe, that Ageſipolis left no Poſterity (q); and that Cleombrotus his Brother and Succeſſor was the Father of AGESIPOLIS II. (r), who reigned but one Year (s), and whoſe Apophthegms were more memorable than his Actions: For we meet with no Account of the former, whereas Plutarch has preſerved a ſmall Collection of the latter (t).

(p) See the Remark [F].

(q) Pauſan. lib. 2. p. 86.

(r) Id. ibid.

(s) Diod. Sicul. lib. 15. cap. 60.

(t) Plut. in Apophtheg. Lacon. pag. 215.

(20) Horat. Epiſt. 2. l. 1. ver. 14.

Quidquid delirant Reges, plectuntur Achivi (20).

The People ſuffer, when the Prince offends.
CREECH.

The Matter of Fact is this. It was ſaid to him one Day, As great a King as you are, you have been an Hoſtage, with the chief of the Youths of Lacedemon; but your Wives and your Children were not. Becauſe, replied he, it was juſt, that we ſhould bear the Puniſhment of our own Faults ourſelves (21).

(21) Plut. in Apophth. Laconic. pag. 215.

[F] Ageſilaus was not pleaſed with this Loſs, as it was expected he would have been.] Xenophon inclines us to believe, that an Emulation reigned between thoſe two Princes, very fit to produce Enmity. But Plutarch repreſents them to us as ſtrictly united in Friendſhip. He obſerves that Ageſipolis was mild and modeſt, and intereſted himſelf but little in public Affairs, and that he ſuffered himſelf to be gained by his Colleague Ageſilaus (22), who knowing him to be of an amorous Complexion, was always talking to him of handſome Boys, and not only flattered his Paſſion for them, but even aſſiſted him in the Gratification of it. Εἰδὼς ἔνοχον ὄντα τοῖς ἐρωτικοῖς τὸν Ἀγησίπολιν, ὥσπερ ἦν αὐτὸς, ἀεί τινος ὑπῆρχε λόγος περὶ τῶν ἐν ὥρᾳ· καὶ προῆγε τὸν νεανίσκον εἰς ταυτὸ, καὶ συνήρα καὶ συνέπραττε (23). Qui autem teneri ſciret Ageſipolim, ſicut ſe, amoribus, ſermonem aſſidue de formoſis adoleſcentibus inſerebat, eodem illum impellebat, ſociuſque erat ei in amore & adjutor. He adds, that theſe kind of Amours were not looked upon as criminal in Lacedemon. The following Paſſage informs us, that Ageſilaus regretted the Loſs of this Colleague. Ἀγησίλαος δὲ τοῦτο ακούσας, ὑφ' ᾧ τις ἂν ὤετο, ἐφήσθη ὡς αντικάλῳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐδάκρυσε καὶ ἐπόθησε τὴν συνουσίαν (24). Ageſilaus, upon this News, did not rejoice, as was expected, at the Loſs of a Rival, but ſhed Tears, and lamented the Death of a Friend.

(22) Plut. in Ageſil. pag. 607. A.

(23) Id. ibid.

(24) Xenophon. de Rebus geſtis Græc. lib. 5. pag. 330.

(a) He was five Degrees remov'd from him. Plut. in Agide, pag. 796.

AGIS, King of Lacedemon, deſcended from Ageſilaus II. in a direct Line (a), met with a very unfortunate End. He intended to reform his Kingdom, by the re-eſtabliſhing of Lycurgus's Laws; but he ſunk under the weight of an Undertaking, which could not but be diſpleaſing to thoſe, who poſſeſſed great Eſtates, and who had ſo much accuſtomed themſelves to the Sweets of a voluptuous Life, that they were no longer capable of reliſhing the ancient Diſcipline of Lacedemon. Agis, in the Flower of his Age, conceived the Deſign of this Reformation, out of a refined Deſire of Glory [A], and practiſed it firſt of all in his own Perſon: His Cloaths, and his Table, were according to the manner of the old times; which deſerved ſo much the more Admiration, becauſe his Mother Ageſiſtrata, and his Grand-mother Archidamia, had brought him up effeminately (b). Upon founding the Diſpoſition of his Subjects, he found the younger ſort leſs averſe to his Project, than thoſe, who had enjoyed the Relaxation of Diſcipline for many Years. The greateſt difficulty, he feared, was from the Women [B]. They were in more Credit at that time than ever; for they never reign more abſolutely, than when Luxury is in Faſhion. The Mother of Ageſilaus did by no means find her account in this Reformation; ſhe would have loſt her great Wealth by it, which enabled her to be concerned in a thouſand Intrigues: and therefore ſhe immediately oppoſed the Deſign of Agis, and called it a chimerical Project. But her Brother Ageſilaus, whom Agis had engaged in his Intereſts, knew how to manage her in ſuch a manner, that ſhe promiſed to ſecond the Enterprize. She endeavoured to gain the Women; but, inſtead of ſuffering themſelves to be perſuaded, they addreſſed themſelves to Leonidas, the other King of Lacedemon, and moſt humbly intreated him to fruſtrate the Deſigns of his Colleague. Leonidas durſt not openly oppoſe it, for fear of exaſperating the People, to whom the Reformation was pleaſing, becauſe it would be uſeful to them. He only croſſed it by Intrigues, and ſpreading Suſpicions, as if Agis aſpired to the Tyranny by depreſſing the Rich, and raiſing the Poor. Nevertheleſs Agis propos'd his new Laws to the Senate, which contained the Aboliſhment of Debts, and a new Diviſion of Lands. Leonidas, ſupported by (b) Ἐντεθραμμένος παιδιοῖς καὶ τρυφαῖς γυναικῶν τῆς τε μητρὸς Ἀγησιστράτας καὶ τῆς μάμμης Ἀρχιδαμίας, αἱ πλεῖστα χρήματα Λακεδαιμονίων ἐκέκτηντο. Enutritus eſſet in opibus & deliciis muliebribus matris Ageſiſtratæ & aviæ Archidamiæ, quæ in Lacedæmoniis erant pecunioſiſſimæ. Id. p. 797.

[A] Out of a refined deſire of Glory.] Plutarch's Narrative (1) inſinuates plainly to us, that Ageſiſtrata ſhewed her Son the Prejudice he would do himſelf by his Plan of Reformation, conſidering the great Eſtate ſhe poſſeſt; but he deſired her to be willing to ſacrifice her Riches to her Son's Glory. For, ſaid he to her, I can never equal other Monarchs on the Score of Riches: The Servants of the Satrapæ, the Servants of the Financiers of Seleucus, and Ptolemy, are richer than all the Kings of Lacedemon; but if, by my Temperance, and the Greatneſs of my Soul, I can raiſe myſelf above the Luxury of thoſe Princes, and if I can introduce an Equality of Goods in my Kingdom, I ſhall attain to true Grandeur; I ſhall paſs for a great Prince. This is to refine upon Self-love: You will be ſurpaſſed, what Progreſs ſoever you make in a certain Road; take quite the contrary, wherein you ſhall have no Rivals: They, who make a Compariſon between you and others, will maintain, that, in it's kind, your Merit is by no means inferior to that of others. But could this be ſaid, if the Diſpute turned on Qualities of the ſame kind, ſome manifeſtly Inferior, and others manifeſtly Superior, as the Opulency of Agis, and That of the King of Syria, would have been?

(1) Plut. in Agide, pag. 798.

[B] From the Women.] The Lacedemonians were the beſt Husbands in the World; they communicated the Affairs of the Common-wealth to their Wives, much more than their Wives communicated their Domeſtic Affairs to them (2). At the time we are ſpeaking of, almoſt all the Riches of Lacedemon were fallen to the Diſtaff; they were at the diſpoſal of the Female Sex, which fruſtrated the Deſigns of this Prince. The Ladies fear'd they ſhould loſe their Riches, their Pleaſures, and their Credit, all at once; and perhaps they were not miſtaken. But let us hear Plutarch himſelf. Now it muſt be obſerved, that moſt of the Riches of Lacedemon were at that time in the Hands of the Women, which made the Undertaking more difficult: For the Women not only were againſt it, becauſe it would deprive them of their Pleaſures, in which they plac'd their Happineſs, for want of knowing the true Good, but alſo becauſe they ſaw that the Honour, which was paid them, and the Power and Authority which they had, on account of their Riches, would be taken from them (3).

(2) Plut. ibid.

(3) Plut. ibid.

[C] Alledged

Digitized by Google

by the Rich, oppoſed this Project ſo powerfully, that there was one Voice more for throwing it out, than for carrying it. He paid dear for the Succeſs of his Affair. Lyſander, one of the Ephori, who had been the great Promoter of the Reformation, brought an Action againſt him, alledged the Celeſtial Signs [C], and perſuaded a Prince of the Blood Royal, whoſe Name was Cleombrotus, and who was Son-in-Law to Leonidas, to ſecure the Kingdom to himſelf. Leonidas, ſeized with Fear, took Refuge in a Temple, where his Daughter, the Wife of Cleombrotus, came to him. He was cited, and becauſe he did not appear, he was declared degraded from his Dignity, which was conferred on Cleombrotus. He obtained leave to retire to Tegea. The New Ephori entered a Proceſs of Innovation againſt Lyſander and Mandrochidas: Theſe latter perſuaded the two Kings to unite, and to make void the Election of theſe Ephori. Which was done, but not without raiſing great Commotions in the City. Ageſilaus, one of the Ephori, who ſucceeded thoſe, who were turned out, would have cauſed Leonidas to have been killed on the Road to Tegea, if Agis had not eſcorted him with a ſufficient Guard. The Reformation might have been eſtabliſhed at that time, if Ageſilaus had not found Means to elude the good Intention of the Two Kings. During theſe Tranſactions, the Acheans deſired aſſiſtance; it was granted them, and Agis had the command of the Troops. He acquired a great Reputation in That Campaign [D]. At his Return he found Affairs ſo embroiled by the ill Conduct of Ageſilaus, that it was impoſſible for him to ſupport himſelf. Leonidas was recalled to Lacedemon; Agis retired into one Temple, and Cleombrotus into another. The Wife of the latter behaved in ſuch a manner, as to gain an univerſal Applauſe (c). Leonidas was ſatisfied with the Exile of his Son-in-Law; after which he applied himſelf wholly to the Ruin of Agis. One of the Ephori, who was unwilling to reſtore what Ageſiſtrata had lent him, was the chief Inſtrument of the Misfortunes of that Family. Agis did not come out of his Place of Refuge, but only to bathe himſelf: As he was returning one Day from the Bath to the Temple, this Ephorus ſeized him, and dragged him to Priſon. He was tried, condemned to Death, and delivered to the Executioner. His Mother and Grandmother earneſtly ſollicited, that at leaſt a King of Lacedemon might have leave to plead his Cauſe before the People. But it was feared his Words would make too great an Impreſſion; and that very Hour they ſtrangled Agis. The Ephorus, who was Debtor to Ageſiſtrata, ſuffered that Princeſs to enter into the Priſon: He permitted the Grandmother to do the like; and then cauſed both of them to be ſtrangled one after the other. Ageſiſtrata died glorioufly (d). The wife of Agis (e), a very rich Princeſs, and very wiſe, and one of the fineſt Women of Greece, was forced out of her Houſe by King Leonidas, and conſtrained to marry that Prince's Son. He was a Youth as yet incapable of Marriage. He ſucceeded his Father; his Death was at leaſt as tragical as that of Agis, whoſe Deſigns he had endeavoured to execute. His Name was Cleomenes (f). Mr Moreri miſrepreſents what Agis ſaid [E] to thoſe, who pitied his Fate. Other Dictionaries are very faulty on this Article [F]. Meurſius ought not to have ſaid that this Agis reigned Nine Years (g); for the Paſſage of Diodorus Siculus, which he appeals to, relates to another Agis. The AGIS of this Article loſt his Life in the CXXXVth Olympiad. Plutarch's Conſiderations on this King's Puniſhment may be ſeen under the Article AMPHARES.

(c) Her Name was CHELONIS. See her Article.

(d) See the Article AMPHARES.

(e) Her Name was Agiatis.

(f) Taken out of Plutarch, in Vita Agidis & Cleomenis.

(g) Meurſius de Regno Lacedæmon. pag. 87.

[C] Alledged the Celeſtial Signs.] The Affair was this (4). Once in every nine Years the Ephori contemplated Heaven in a ſerene Night, and without a Moon; and if they ſaw a Star fall, they judg'd that the Kings had ſinned againſt God; upon which they were ſuſpended from their Dignity, 'till an Oracle from Delphi, or Olympia, re-eſtabliſh'd them. Lyſander, pretending to have ſeen this Phænomenon, entered an Action againſt the King, and produc'd Witneſſes, who declared that Leonidas had had two Children by an Aſiatic Woman. Now there was an ancient Law, which forbad the Heraclidæ (5) to have Children by a foreign Woman. Is it not very odd, that ſuch a Government as this, wherein the Fortune of Kings depended on the good Pleaſure of an Ephorus, who had ſeen a Star fall, ſhould ſubſiſt ſo long?

(4) Plut. in Agide. pag. 800.

(5) That is, the Deſcendants of Hercules, of which Number were the Kings of Lacedemon.

[D] Acquired a great Reputation in that Campaign.] Having join'd Aratus, General of the Acheans, near Corinth, his Advice was to give the Enemy Battle on the other ſide of the Iſthmus; but he ſubmitted his Judgment to that General's Opinion, who thought it better not to come to an Engagement. Aratus own'd this himſelf in his Book. Yet one Baton of Sinope pretended, that Agis diſſuaded the Fight, which Aratus had reſolved upon (6). Is it not very ſtrange, that an Hiſtorian ſhould relate things concerning a General, which are contrary to the Relations of that General himſelf? Is it credible, that his Account ſhould be falſe, to the prejudice of it's Author? This Boldneſs may be ſuffer'd for ſome Months, and for certain Reaſons; but, when Events have paſs'd that Term, the Actions of great Men ought no longer to be contradicted.

(6) Plut. in Agide, pag. 801.

[E] Mr Moreri miſrepreſents what Agis ſaid.] Agis ſeeing one of the Serjeants weep, ſaid (7), Weep not, for ſince they put me to Death by ſuch a crying Act of Injuſtice, my Merit is greater than that of the Authors of my Death. Inſtead of this, Mr Moreri makes him ſay, Weep not, for thoſe who weep, are much more to be pitied than I am. This is not the only Fault of that Article. Mr Moreri ſays falſly, I. That in the beginning of Agis's Reign, an Ephorus, whoſe Name was Epitadeus, caus'd an Order to be made, That Fathers might diſinherit their Children. II. That Agis reſtified the Words of that Order, which re-peopled the City in a little time. III. That the moſt Conſiderable lent a helping hand to the Deſign of Agis. Read Plutarch, and you will ſee, Firſt, That Epitadeus had caus'd his Decree to be paſs'd a long time before. Secondly, That Agis had not the good Fortune to procure the leaſt Alteration. Thirdly, That the richer People oppos'd his Deſign. Is this to conſult Originals? Is this to underſtand them?

(7) Ibid. pag. 408.

[F] Very faulty on this Article.] Charles Stephens confounds this Agis with another more ancient, and diſtinguiſhes him from him, whom the Lacedemonians hang'd. Mr Hofman is guilty only of the former of theſe two Miſtakes; Lloyd corrects neither of them.

Digitized by Google

AGREDA (a) (MARY de) a Religious Viſionary, and famous for a Work, which the Sorbonne cenſured, lived in the XVIIth Century. Francis Coronel, her Father, and Catherine d'Arena, her Mother, who lived at Agreda, a Town of Spain, founded a Convent in their Houſe on the 19th of January, 1619. A Particular Revelation induced them to it. This Mary took the Nun's Habit in it, at the ſame time with her Mother and Siſter; ſhe profeſſed, with her Mother, on the Second of February, 1620 (b). She was elected Superior, in the Year 1627. and during the firſt Ten Years of her Superiority, ſhe received ſeveral Commands from God, and the Virgin Mary, to write the Life of the Holy Virgin. She reſiſted theſe Orders till the Year 1637. when ſhe began to write it. Having finiſhed it, ſhe burnt it with ſeveral Writings, which ſhe had compoſed on other Subjects: She followed in this the Counſel of a Confeſſor, who directed her in the abſence of her Ordinary Confeſſor. Her Superiors, and the firſt Confeſſor, reprimanded her ſeverely for it, and commanded her to write the Life of the Holy Virgin a ſecond time. God and the Holy Virgin repeated the ſame Command to her. She began to obey on the 8th of December, 1655 (c). She divided the Work into three Parts, contained in eight Books, which have been printed at Liſbon, at Madrid, at Perpignan, and at Antwerp. The firſt was tranſlated out of Spaniſh into French, from the Edition of Perpignan, by Father Croſet, a Recollect. This Tranſlation was printed at Marſeilles in the Year 1696 (d). There are ſo many Abſurdities in the Work [A], and yet ſo capable of pleaſing the paſſionate Votaries of the Holy Virgin, that the Faculty of Divinity of Paris judged it proper to cenſure it [B]. They attained their End, in (a) She is commonly call'd ſo for brevity ſake; but it is not her Family Name; it is only the name of the Town, where the Monaſtery was, of which ſhe was Superior.

(b) The Profeſſion of her Siſter was deferr'd becauſe ſhe was not of age: Journal of the Learned of the 16th of Jan. 1696. pag. 51, 52. Edit. Holl.

(c) It is the Day of the Conception of the Virgin in the Kalender.

(d) Taken from the Journal of the Learned, ubi ſupra.

