A METHOD of extracting Propositions out of a Book that one would have censured.

(5) He speaks of those which the Franciscans shewed to Cardinal Granvelle, and which were afterwards sent to Rome. See the Apology for the Censures, pag. 42, 43.

Digitized by Google

ſtant Religion [D]. He paid ſuch a Reſpect to the Pope's Cenſure [E], that, tho' he did not believe, he had taught any Heterodox Doctrines, yet he would not ſuffer the Books to be reprinted, which were pretended to contain the cenſured Propoſitions (b). Valerius Andreas has committed ſeveral Miſtakes in ſpeaking of That Cenſure [F]. We are promiſed a New Edition of the Works of Michael Baius. It will contain ſeveral Pieces never yet printed. The Editor will illuſtrate it with many Theological and Hiſtorical Notes. He has compared the Editions of This Author's Works with the Manuſcripts to be met with in the beſt Libraries. There was a Report, that Michael Baius, to be revenged on the Jeſuits, who, he believed, had promoted the Cenſure of his Doctrine, employed all his Credit in Louvain to cauſe the Doctrines of Leonard Leſſius to be cenſured there (i). It ought not to be forgot, that the Bull of Pius V was very tender of his Honour [G]. His laſt Will was a Proof

(b) Val. Andreas, in Biblioth. pag. 671.

(i) See the Apology for the Cenſures paſſed on the two Univerſities, publiſhed by Mr Gery in 1688.

ing to the Conſciences of the Judges. The Phyſician Francis Blondel will ſoon afford us an Example. This is not the only Injuſtice obſerved in Perſons poſſeſſed with This Paſſion: Their double Weights and Meaſures give us another Inſtance of their Wickedneſs. Deſire their Cenſure againſt their Inquiſitors; ſhew them, ever ſo plainly, the Juſtice of your Cauſe; they will either turn a deaf Ear to it, or pay you with Nonſenſe. It is Then, that their Charity ſuffers all, and excuſes all.

[D] He wrote ſome Books of Controverſy againſt thoſe of the Proteſtant Religion.] The ſame Valerius Andreas ſupplies us with the following Titles; Reſponſio ad Quæſtiones Phil. Marnixii de Eccleſiâ Chriſti, & Sacramento Altaris, at Louvain, 1579. Apologia pro Reſponſione contra Objectiones ejuſdem de veritate Corporis Chriſti in Euchariſtiâ, at Louvain, 1581. Epiſtola de Statuum Inferioris Germaniæ unione cum iis qui ſe deſertores Romanæ Eccleſiæ vocant, & de Juramento quod eorum juſſu à Clero & Monachis exigitur, at Louvain, and at Cologne, 1579. He wrote alſo a Letter de juramento juſſu Ducis Alenzonii Antverpiæ in prætori concepto & comprobato.

[E] He paid a great Reſpect to the Pope's Cenſure.] To comment rightly on this Text, I will make uſe of the Words of the Sieur Gery, Bachelor in Divinity. "This pious and learned Doctor, ſays he, "ſpeaking of Baius (6), at the Time of his greateſt "Reputation, ſaw, all of a ſudden, a Bull appear a- "gainſt Seventy ſix Propoſitions, which the Sollicitors "of That Cenſure imputed all to him, tho' ſome of them "were none of his, others were turned in a malicious "Manner to make them obnoxious, and ſome others, "which the Bull itſelf acknowledged, might be main- "tained in a Catholic Senſe. They were not ſatisfied "with ſending to Louvain, in the uſual Form, in "1570; but a ſecond Publication was made of it "nine or ten Years after; and they affected to have "it done by a Jeſuit, in 1580; whom the Society "had without doubt ſollicited, to make a Shew of "their Credit. What did Baius do; and what did "the Faculty? Nothing elſe but humbly ſubmit, "and, for Peace ſake, and the Edification of the "Faithful, ſuppreſs all the Juſtifications, Expli- "cations, and Repreſentations, which they might "have made." However, it muſt not be ſuppoſed, that Baius wrote nothing in his Juſtification: His Letter to Cardinal Simonetta (7) proves the contrary; for he ſhews there, that Dr John Heſſels, and himſelf, had put into Cardinal Granvelle's Hands their Anſwer to certain Propoſitions, which he had communicated to them. The Scotiſts forged theſe Propoſitions, to cry down Thoſe two Doctors, and preſented them to ſome dignified Perſons, without either naming Heſſels, or Baius. If I was to be asked the Reaſon of their deſiring to cry down theſe two Profeſſors, I ſhould anſwer, that it was becauſe they had introduced a Method of Study, which had the Appearance of an unpleaſant Novelty. "After the Explication of the Maſter of the Sen- "tences, they were for reducing the Study of Di- "vinity to the Holy Scriptures, and to the Wri- "tings of the ancient Fathers (8)," and principally to thoſe of St Auguſtin. This "was not pleaſing "to Perſons poſſeſſed with quite different No- "tions, and particularly to thoſe, who, not being "willing to trouble themſelves with much Study, "think it better to follow the Opinions already re- "ceived by the Majority, than to be at the Pains "of eſtabliſhing new ones, on the ſolid Foundations "of Scripture: And theſe Perſons imagined, it was "with deſign to point at, and reflect upon, them, "whenever, in Lectures or Diſputes, any Sentiment "was advanced different from theirs, or any thing "taught contrary to the Maxims they had long "received from certain Authors." Baius was not ſatisfied with writing This Letter (9), but ſent an Apology for his Opinions to the Pope, in the Year 1569.

(6) Gery's Hiſtorical Apology for the two Cenſures of Louvain and of Douay, pag. 26, Edit. of Cologne, 1688.

(7) The Sieur Gery, p. 40, produces part of it, which he tranſlated from the Latin, which is printed in the Faſti of the Univerſity of Louvain, p. 366.

(8) Gery, Apology for the Cenſures, pag. 40, 41.

(9) It is quoted in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, Tom. 14. pag. 198, as being printed at the end of Baius's Apology at Rouen, 1666.

[F] Valerius Andreas has committed ſeveral Miſtakes, in ſpeaking of the Cenſure, of Pius V, of Baius (10).] I. He reports it for a Certainty, that the Bull of Pius V, againſt the Seventy ſix Propoſitions, was confirmed by Gregory XIII. In the New Edition of Baius, this will be ſhewn to be falſe (11). II. He aſſerts, that moſt of Thoſe Seventy ſix Propoſitions were extracted out of Baius's Books. The contrary will be proved in the New Edition. III. He contents himſelf with ſaying, that the Bull of Pius V was publiſhed at Louvain, the ſeventeenth and nineteenth of April, 1570. But, beſides that, he ſhould have ſaid the ſixteenth of November; he is guilty of ſome Omiſſions. He does not ſay, that the Bull was publiſhed either by the Pope's or Cardinal Granvelle's Order, but by the Order of the Duke d'Alba, and by That of the Synod of Mechlen. This was irregular, ſince the Pope had commiſſioned Cardinal Granvelle to notify the Bull to the Divines of Louvain, in ſuch manner as he ſhould judge moſt convenient. However, Valerius Andreas ſhould have expreſſed who Thoſe were, who gave order for the Publication of the Bull. He ought alſo to have obſerved, that, on the Days he mentions, I mean the ſeventeenth and nineteenth of April, Michael Baius declared his Opinion, in publick, upon the condemned Propoſitions. His Recantation was extorted from him by wicked Practices. The new Edition will treat of all theſe things. IV. He ſays, that ſome credible Perſons told the Pope, that ſome Divines of Louvain were writing an Apology for the condemned Propoſitions. It will be ſhewn, by the Teſtimony of Toletus, that they were falſe Informers, who reported theſe things to the Pope. V. He aſſerts, that Gregory XIII. condemned the ſame Propoſitions anew. This will be made appear to be falſe. VI. He places the Death of Baius on the ſixteenth of December; whereas it happened on the ſixteenth of September (12). I do not repeat, what I have already obſerved, concerning the wrong Chronology of his Printers (13). I ought not to add his making the Year 1551, the firſt of Baius's Regius Profeſſorſhip of Divinity: He is not miſtaken; but the Epitaph of Baius was not grounded upon This Date, ſince it mentions That Profeſſorſhip to have continued forty Years, two Years more than the Calculation of Valerius Andreas requires. Theſe Bulls againſt Michael Baius may have been multiplied, by ſome Perſons, beyond the Truth, by making no Difference between condemning a Doctrine, and publiſhing another Perſon's Condemnation of That Doctrine. In this Senſe, indeed, it may be truly ſaid, that Gregory XIII condemned the Seventy ſix Propoſitions; for he not only inſerted, in a Bull of his own, the Conſtitution of Pius V, declaring, that he found it in the Pope's Regiſter, and that an entire Obedience ought to be paid to it; but he commanded alſo, that his Bull ſhould be ſolemnly publiſhed at Louvain, by the Jeſuit Toletus, in the Year 1580. Morillon, great Vicar of Mechlen, notified That of Pius V to the Divines of Louvain, in 1567: And, in the Year 1570, he notified it to them again, with a little more Formality.

(10) Valer. Andreas, in Fabis Academicis Studii Lovanienſis.

(11) What I ſay here, and in the Body of the Article, concerning the new Edition of Baius, is taken out of a Memoir, which fell into my hands, and which comes from good Authority.

(12) He has done it in the Bibliotheca Belgica.

(13) See the Citation (c).

[G] The Bull of Pius V was very tender of his Honour.] The Letter of Baius, which has been quoted (14), adds, "that, after many long Sollicitations,

(14) Above, Citation (7)

Digitized by Google

Proof of his great Charity [H], for he left all his Eſtate to the Poor (k). He founded a College at Louvain, and dedicated it to St Auguſtin (l). He died the Sixteenth of September 1589, aged Seventy ſeven Years, and was buried in the Pope's College, of which he had been a long time Principal. His Nephew James BAIUS, Doctor of Divinity, cauſed a Monument to be built for him with a fine Inſcription (m). This Nephew followed his Uncle's ſteps. He was made Doctor of Divinty in the Year 1586 (n). He was often deputed for the Affairs of the Univerſity of Louvain, and executed his Commiſſions with great Prudence and Ability (o). He was Dean of St Peter's in the ſame City, and Regius Profeſſor of the Catechiſm (p). He publiſhed ſome Treatiſes [I]. He gave all his Eſtate to the Founding (k) Swert. in Athenis Belg. pag. 569.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) You will find it in Swertius ubi ſupra.

(n) Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 401.

(o) Swert. ib. p. 355.

(p) Valer. Andr. ibid.

" which began from the Pontificate of Pius IV, " they obtained, at laſt, a Bull of Pius V, dated the " firſt of October, 1567, which condemns Seventy " ſix (15) Propoſitions (16)." It is true, he who brought the Bull, by Commiſſion from Cardinal Granvelle, declared publickly, in the Aſſembly of the Faculty of Divinity at Louvain, that the firſt ſixty of thoſe Propoſitions were taken out of the Writings of Baius (17); but, in ſhort, the Bull did not name him; and beſides, the Condemnation was expreſſed very tenderly, ſince it allowed, that ſome of thoſe Propoſitions were capable of a favourable Conſtruction. Cardinal Palavicini informs us, that, in order to treat Baius with the greater Tenderneſs, Pope Pius V was contented with cauſing his Bull to be privately notified to the Univerſity of Louvain, by the Biſhop of Mechlen; but that Gregory XIII, finding the Evil was not remedied, judged it neceſſary to make a ſolemn Publication of it, and deputed his Preacher, the Jeſuit Francis Toletus, for that Purpoſe, who did not oblige Baius to a public Recantation, or put him to any Diſgrace. " Hic ſtuduit Baium remo- " vere à pravis illis opinionibus, cohortatus, ut ſe- " dis Apoſtolicæ judicio acquieſceret: & paucis " colloquiis id obtinuit, privata illius retractatione con- " tentus: atque hoc pacto Bajus non ſolùm illæſus " perſtitit, ſed ipſius etiam nomini verba Diplomatis " pepercere; quin per illud ejus errores manum tam " mitem experti ſunt, ut vix viderentur errores, cùm " aliquæ ex proſcriptis poſitionibus, nullis certis in " hac exceptione adnotatis, dicerentur poſſe ſuſtineri " in aliqua minùs propria ſignificatione (18).—— He " endeavoured to bring off Baius from his erroneous O- " pinions, adviſing him to acquieſce in the Judgment " of the Holy See: This he accompliſhed after a few " Conferences, and was content with his private Re- " cantation: And, by this means, Baius not only conti- " nued free from Trouble, but eſcaped being ſo much as " mentioned in the Pope's Bull. Nay, his Errors " were, in That, ſo very tenderly handled, that they " ſcarce ſeemed to be Errors; ſince ſome of the Con- " demned Propoſitions, without particularly excepting " any of them, are therein declared to be capable of " being maintained in a leſs obvious Senſe." We have obſerved, in another place (19), the Inconveniency of cenſuring a heap of Propoſitions, in ſuch a general and looſe manner, that the reſpectivè, in the Concluſion, cannot enable us to make any Diſtinctions. The Bull of Pope Pius V had this Inconveniency; and, beſides, left the Reader uncertain, on another account; for, without particularizing any thing, it affirmed, that, among the condemned Propoſitions, there were ſome, which might be maintained, in ſome certain Senſe. This was the leaſt that the Bull permitted, and there could be no queſtion, but it permits this; but it might be pretended, that it permitted much more. The placing of the Words produced this perplexing Obſcurity; a Comma was omitted: This Omiſſion made the Words capable of two very different Conſtructions; and That was the occaſion of much Conteſt. See the Latin I am going to quote, and admire the Turns and Chances of Controverſies. " Quas quidem ſententias ſtricto coram nobis exami- " ne ponderatas, quanquam nonnullæ aliquo pacto " ſuſtineri poſſint in rigore & proprio verborum ſen- " ſu ab auctoribus intento hæreticas, erroneas, ſuſ- " pectas, temerarias, ſcandaloſas, & in pias aures of- " fenſionem immitentes, reſpectivè & præſentium au- " toritate damnamus (20). —— Which Propoſiti- " ons, after having paſſed our ſtrict Examination, al- " though ſome of them may in ſome ſort be defended " in the literal and proper Senſe of the Words, and in " which the Authors intend them to be underſtood, " we condemn them reſpectively, by the Authority of " theſe preſents, as heretical, erroneous, obnoxious, preci- " pitate, infamous, and offenſive to pious Ears." That, which the Pagans called the Sport and Caprice of Fortune, is not excluded from this Sanctuary: the pretended infallible Oracle of Rome does not remedy the Miſchief. After having taken a great deal of trouble to concert all the Syllables of his Anſwer, he may ſee, that his Tranſcriber, or Secretary, by forgetting one Comma, ſhall be the Cauſe of the Damnation of an infinite Number of Perſons. Nay, farther, the Comma will do nothing there, whether you place it after poſſint, or not; the Equivocation ſtill remains. There is no Rule, either in Writing, or Printing, by which a Comma after poſſint muſt neceſſarily confine what follows to the Word damnamus. The moſt correct Books, which furniſh numberleſs Inſtances, where Commas placed, as this might be, after poſſint, do not at all hinder, but what follows, from ſuch a Comma to the next ſucceeding one, may relate to the Word poſſint, or any Word ſo ſituated.

(15) Palavicin. Hiſtor. Conc. Trident lib. 15. cap. 7. ſays, Septuginta novem Baii Poſitiones.

(16) Gery, Apology for the Cenſures, p. 43.

(17) Ibid. pag. 44.

(18) Palavicin. Hiſtor. Conc. Trident. lib. 15. cap. 7. n. 12.

(19) In Remark [E] of the Article ANGLUS (THOMAS).

A BULL of the Pope, wherein the placing of the Words cauſed an Obſcurity, which was increaſed by the Omiſſion of a Comma.

(20) St Amour's Journal, Part. 2. pag. 64 cited in the Biblioth. Univerſelle, Tom. 14. pag. 201. See alſo the Difficulties propoſed to Mr Steynert, Part. IX. pag. 18. and the new Edition of Baius's Works, Part. II. pag. 235. & ſeq.

[H] His laſt Will was a Proof of his great Charity] The Apologiſt for the Cenſures of Louvain, and Douay, ſets this Virtue of Michael Baius againſt the pretended Miracles of Leſſius. " It is a great Mi- " racle, ſays he (21), to ſee ſo much Humility, " accompanied with ſuch great Parts and Learning, " that even Toletus could not forbear giving him " the following Character, which is preſerved in " Louvain by Tradition: Michaele Baio nihil doctius, " nihil humilius, — Nothing can be more learned, or " more humble, than Michael Baius. It is a great " Miracle, to ſee ſo much Submiſſion and Patience, " as appeared in his Conduct, in regard to the " Pope's Bull. It is a great Miracle, to ſee a holy " Prieſt, whoſe many Studies and Occupations have " not abated his Piety; and who melts into Tears " at the Altar, from a lively Senſe of the Sanctity " of our Myſteries. Laſtly, it is a great Miracle, " to ſee ſo much Charity for the Poor, extending " ſo far, as to deſire no other Heirs, and which, " for their ſakes, ſtifles all Sentiments of Nepotiſm, " how juſt ſoever they might be, in him. This " will make Baius always dear to Poſterity; where- " as a Reputation, ſupported only by an artificial " Pretence to Miracles and Wonders, without Foun- " dation, will ſoon be loſt, and vaniſh away in " Smoak." Cardinal Palavicini reports, that Commendon, giving an account, to the Cardinal of Mantua, of the State, in which he found the Univerſity of Louvain, in the Yeat 1561, obſerves to him, that Michael Baius, and John Heſſelius, had taught ſome Novelties on Free-will, and that they were two Perſons very remarkable for their Learning, and good Lives (22); that Ruard Tapper had taken Umbrage at their Union, and thought they valued their Learning too much, though they were otherways very modeſt and virtuous; " But, adds he, " every one places his Pride in the Art he profeſſes, " and bears other things very eaſily. Compertum ſibi " eſſe Ruardam in Theologicis diſciplinis præclarum, " dum is, in illa Academia docens, in his duobus adhuc " ætate juvenili obſervaret infauſtam conjunctionem " ingenii & audaciæ, ſolitum eſſe dicere ſe nonniſi " ſchiſma ab illis expectare, & Theologicam lauream " diu ipſis diſtuliſſe: eos profectò videri ſcientiæ " ſuæ nimis amantes, quamvis alioqui probos & " modeſtos: & hæc ille verba ſapienter uſurpavit, " digna quæ à nobis repetantur; ſed cujuſque ſuper- " bia in ea arte quam profitetur ſita eſt, cætera " facile ſuffert (23)."

(21) Gery, Apology for the Cenſures, pag. 37, 38.

(22) Erant ambo & ſcientiâ & exemplo vitæ conſpicui. Palavic. Hiſt. Conc. Trident. lib. 15. cap. 7. n. 7.

(23) Id. ib. n. 9.

[I] James Baius publiſhed ſome Treatiſes.] A Panegyric on the Arrival of the Archduke Albert, and the Infanta of Spain: Catechiſmus, ſive Inſtitutio-

Digitized by Google

ding of a College [K], and died the fifth of October, 1614 (q). ——— The new Edition of the Works of Baius, which I mentioned as a thing to come, has appeared since the first Impression of this Dictionary [L], and been condemned at num Christianæ Religionis libri IV, and De Venerabili Eucharistiæ Sacramento & Sacrificio Missæ, libri III. (24).

(q) Id. ibid. Swertius says October 9.

(24) Ex Valer. Andreæ Bibl. Belg. pag. 401.

[K] He gave all his Estate to the founding of a College.] Swertius asserts, 1. That James Baius left the Administration of his Estate to his Nephew Giles Baius, Doctor and Professor of Divinity, and that he charged him to apply it intirely to the founding of a College, for young Persons of his Country. II. That Giles Baius, in obedience to his Uncle's Will, caused a very fine College to be built, which is justly called BAIANUM. III. That this College had been built but few Years; he takes notice in what place. Objecutus patrini desiderio, augustissimum (Collegium) ab hinc paucis annis extruxit e regione Pædagogii Falconis & BAIANUM meritò indigetatur (25). But Aubertus Miræus, who could not be ignorant of what Swertius had wrote upon it, affirms only, that he had read somewhere, that James Baius had designed the Foundation of a College, for the Reception of young Students in Divinity. De altero Collegio Sacrarum Literarum studiosis adolescentibus pariter alendis piè prudenterque cogitasse scriptum invenimus (26). Thus Writers deliver themselves, when they can only praise a Man for the good Intentions, which an Author, whom they have read, ascribes to him: For, when they know They have been actually executed, they expressly mention it. Aubertus Miræus, therefore, knew nothing of the building of the Collegium Baianum. Now this Ignorance of so notorious a Fact is something prodigious, in such a Man, as This, who so well knew his own Country, the Spanish Netherlands.

(25) Swert. Ath. Belg. pag. 355. This Book was printed in 1628.

(26) Aub. Miræus de Scriptoribus Sæculi XVI. pag. 134.

[L] A new Edition of the Works of Baius —— has appeared since the first Edition of this Dictionary.] This is the Title of it: Michaelis Baii celeberrimi in Lovaniensi Academiâ Theologi Opera: cum Bullis Pontificum, & aliis ipsius causam spectantibus, jam primum ad Romanam Ecclesiam ab convitiis Protestantium, simul ac Arminianorum, cæterorumque hujusce temporis Pelagianorum impostoris vindicandam, collecta, expurgata, & plurimis quæ hactenus delituerant opusculis aucta: studio A. P. Theologi. Coloniæ Agrippinæ, sumptibus Balthasaris ab Egmont & sociorum, M.DC.XCVI. It is a pretty large Quarto, divided into two Parts. The first contains, besides those Writings of his, which were already printed, six or seven Pieces of Baius, which had never been published. The second consists almost intirely of such, as now make their first Appearance, and relate to the Censure of some of Baius's Propositions. One of these is a Chronological Narrative of the Proceedings in that Cause, and was wrote by him, who had the Care of This Edition. This Narrative informs us, among other things, that Michael Baius was induced to form his Method of teaching Divinity, on the Scripture, and on the Fathers, and chiefly on St Augustin, for two Reasons (27). The first was, because the Protestants of the Netherlands boasted to have the Scripture, and the ancient Fathers, on their Side. The second, because many Catholic Writers (28), deserting the Hypothesis of St Augustin, came extremely near That of the Pelagians. Ruard Tapper, and Tiletan, Professors of Divinity at Louvain, disapproved this new Method of Baius, as soon as they heard of it, after their return from the Council, in the Year 1552: And it is affirmed, that Ruard cried out one Day, What Devil brought this Doctrine into our School, in our Absence? This was the beginning of a furious Storm against Baius; the Franciscans, especially, fell foul upon him. The respective Guardians of Nivelle, and of Aëth, sent eighteen Articles to the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, in the Year 1560, and desired their Judgment upon them. That University condemned them all, some, to the Number of three, as false and contrary to the Scripture; and the rest as heretical. Baius made Remarks on This Censure, and had a Mind to communicate them to some Doctor at Paris; but he gave over That Design, when he saw it impossible for him to obtain a Copy of this Decree of the Sorbonne (29). He communicated them to the Provincial of the Franciscans. He shews plainly, that the Sorbonne had censured, as Heretical, what was visibly contained in St Augustin. The Year following, a List was presented, to Cardinal Granvelle, of the Propositions extracted from the Writings of Baius, as was pretended; and yet some of those Propositions were contrary to his Opinions; others he had never disputed for, or against; and most of them were drawn up so artificially, that the very turn of the Expressions might make them suspected either of Falsity or Heresy (30). The Cardinal communicated them to Michael Baius, who returned an Answer not now to be found. The same Cardinal received Orders to impose Silence on the Parties; and by This means the Quarrel was composed: But it was renewed in the Year 1564; for Tiletan endeavoured to obtain the Censures of the Universities of Spain against Baius's Writings (31), and he sent Extracts of them to Pius IV, that they might be condemned. Other Extracts were added to These, and sent to Pius V, who issued a Bull, the first of October, 1567, wherein he condemned Seventy six Propositions. This Bull was neither published, nor fixed up, but was only read to Baius, and to the particular Faculty of Divinity at Louvain, the Twenty ninth of December, 1567, by Maximilian Morillon, Vicar-General of the Archbishop of Mechlen (32). This Vicar-General being required to give a Copy of This Bull, he refused it. He declared, that he had Orders to prohibit all the printed Books, out of which most of the Seventy six Propositions were said to have been extracted. The Dean of the Faculty represented, That, for great Reasons, it was very necessary, that the Books of Baius should not be prohibited; neither were they. This Doctor wrote to the Pope, the eighth of January 1569, and sent him an Apology, wherein he made it appear, that he had not taught those Seventy six Propositions, and that most of them, if understood in a certain Sense, were true, and the very Doctrines of St Augustin. The Answer, which the Pope returned him, the third of May, the same Year, contained an Exhortation to submit to the Censure. Baius was extreamly surprized, when That Letter of Pius V was delivered to him, to see himself treated like a Rebel, who had incurred the Punishment of Excommunication and of Irregularity. He requested Morillon to be absolved from This Sentence, but could not obtain it, without abjuring the Articles, which the Bull had condemned. Summopere autem miratus est Baius secum agi ac si suas vindicias & apologiam scribendo Pontifici, in eum fuisset rebellis, ac Excommunicationis & Irregularitatis censuras incurrisset: à quibus cùm peteret absolvi, Morillonus absolutionis beneficium ei impertiri noluit, quin prius Articulos per Bullam confixos ejuraverit (33). From that time every Body was suffered to inveigh against This Doctor, as if he had really taught those Seventy six Articles; they exclaimed against him in their Sermons, and in their Lectures: He bore this Opposition very patiently; but, in the Year 1570, he was advised, by three Bishops (34), to vindicate himself. He explained himself, therefore, on these Matters, in his Auditory of Divinity, and declared, that, among those Seventy six Propositions, there were some, which deserved to be condemned, but which he had never maintained: that others were maliciously drawn up, which he did not admit of, in the bad Construction that might be put upon them, though otherwise they were very capable of a found Interpretation. Cæpit in Scholis Theologorum quid circa hujusmodi Articulos sentiret, cum multâ humilitate ac modestiâ, aperire: declarans nonnullos ipsorum esse falsos ac jure confixos, sed à se nunquam traditos: alios esse arte ac dolo confictos, qui pravum sensum pati possunt, quem nunquam tenuit, licet & in sano intelligi quoque facilè possent (35). In the Month of June of the same Year, 1570, the Bishops of the Netherlands held a Council at Mechlen, wherein, at the Instance of the Duke d' Alba, they engaged to cause the Bull of Pope Pius V to be solemnly published at Louvain, and to be signed by all the Professors of Divinity. The Commission for it was given to Morillon, who performed it the sixteenth of November, the same Year. However, he could not

(27) Oper. Mich. Baii, part. 2. pag. 192.

(28) As Barthlomew Camerarius, Albertus Pighius, Francis Horantius, a Spanish Franciscan, and Ruard Tapper.

(29) Baii Oper. part. 2. pag. 193.

(30) Id. ib. pag. 194.

(31) The Censures of the Universities of Salamanca and Alcala were not passed till after the Death of Tiletan, Idem, pag. 195.

(32) Ibid. pag. 197.

(33) Ibid. pag. 199.

(34) Martin Richtovius Bishop of Ipres, Francis Sonnius Bishop of Bois-le-duc, and Cornelius Jansenius Bishop of Ghent.

(35) Oper. Baii, part. 2. pag. 200.

Digitized by Google

at Rome by the Congregation of the Index. It contains many inſtructive Particulars, and ſeveral things, which would carry the makers of Reflexions a great way. The Remark, which I ſhall give, concerning This Edition will make a good Supplement to this Article. The Editor was very ill treated by Father Dez, a Jeſuit, in a Work compoſed on purpoſe to defend the Church of Rome againſt the injuries he had done it (r).

(r) Quibus eum affecerat Baii nuperus editor.

not obtain the ſigning of the Formulary, which required the Approbation of the Cenſure of the Seventy ſix Propoſitions. The Faculty of Divinity of Louvain imagined this to be ſome Snare laid for them, and, though they were aſſured, by a Letter, from the Biſhop of Boiſleduc, and the Biſhop of Ghent, that there was no Deſign to ſurprize them, it does not appear, that ever they agreed to That Signing: But, the following Year, a Decree was made, importing, that the Seventy ſix Propoſitions ſhould be held for condemned, and that all the Members of the Faculty ſhould abſtain from teaching them, and that all the Books, wherein they ſhould be maintained, ſhould be taken away from the Students in Divinity (36). It is to be obſerved, that Morillon did not deliver any Copy of the Bull, which he thus ſolemnly notified. This gave occaſion to ſome to maintain, that it was not authentic, or, that, having been ſurreptitiouſly obtained, it would be revoked. Others maintained the contrary with great Heat. Pope Gregory XIII, being ſollicited by the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, in his Maſter's Name, and by Father Toletus, in the Name of ſome Divines of Louvain, to apply a ſpeedy Remedy to Theſe Diſputes, formed a Conſtitution the Twenty eighth of January, 1579, wherein he inſerted the Bull of Pius V, without approving, or confirming, the ſame, and without condemning the Seventy ſix Propoſitions anew; he was contented to ſay, that he had found it among the Records of his Predeceſſor, and to order, that Credit ſhould be given to it. He ſent the ſame Father Toletus to Louvain, in the Year 1580. This Jeſuit there ſolemnly notified the Conſtitution of Gregory XIII, and asked Baius, whether he condemned the Seventy ſix Articles, or not. Baius anſwered, I condemn them according to the Intention of the Bull (37). All the Doctors, Licentiates, Bachelors, &c. declared, that they ſubmitted to That Bull. Toletus informed Baius, in ſome Converſation, which he had with him, that he was accuſed of teaching his Diſciples, privately, the Doctrines, which Pius V had condemned. Baius denied it, and deſired to undergo all manner of Puniſhments, if That Accuſation could be legally proved. But, no Steps being made towards it, Toletus promiſed to give a good Teſtimony of him at the Court of Rome, and declared it was falſe, that the reading of Baius's Writings was forbidden. He propoſed to him the ſigning of a Formulary, which was very hard; but, however, Baius did it to procure ſome eaſe to himſelf. He was obliged to own, under his Hand, that he had taught many of the Seventy ſix condemned Articles, and that they were condemned in the Senſe, in which he had taken them. " Ei præſcripſit (Toletus) quandam Confeſſionis formulam, in qua fateri " debuit multos ex damnatis 76 Articulis à ſe eſſe " traditos, ac eo ſenſu proſcriptos quo eos docuiſ" ſet; cui formulæ optimus hic Doctor, undique la" ceſſitus ac calumniis obrutus, ut tandem pace ali" quâ frueretur, ſubſcripſit die vigeſimâ quarta Mar" tii hujus anni 1580 (38)." He wrote a Letter to the Pope, wherein he declared the Calumnies ſpread againſt him, for the Space of twelve Years concerning thoſe Articles, and deſired a Copy of the Bull of Pius V. This was granted him, in June, 1580. Father Horantius wrote a Piece againſt him, the ſame Year. He complained of two things; one was, that Baius had anſwered Philip de Marnix too civilly (39). Conquerens 1. quòd ejus epiſtolæ Marnixio ſcriptæ nimis benignæ fuiſſent (40). The other, that Baius had affirmed, according to the Doctrine of St Auguſtin, that the Scripture only is to be conſulted, in order to judge of the Church. 2. Quod Baius Auguſtinum ſecutus dixiſſet judicium de Eccleſia eſſe ex ſola Scriptura petendum (41). Baius juſtified himſelf, in a Letter, which he prefixed to his Apology againſt Philip de Marnix, in the Year 1581. He was diſturbed again in the Year 1585; for his Enemies accuſed him to the Pope's Nuncio, and required, that he ſhould be examined on certain Articles, which they had drawn up againſt him (42). It is not known, whether he underwent This Examination.

(36) Ibid. p. 202, 203.

(37) Damno ſecundum intentionem bullæ. & ſicut bulla eos damnat Ib. pag. 206.

(38) Id. ib. pag. 207.

(39) Æquo animo ferre non potuit quod Baius humaniori ſtilo ſuas ad Marnixium ſcripſiſſet epiſtolas. Id. ib. pag. 208.

(40 Compare this Man with the French Miniſter, who complained publicly, in the Year 1688, of Mr Jaquelot's Letters to the Prelates of France.

(41) Id. ib.

(42) Id. ib. pag. 209.

The Author of this Chronological Narrative takes a prodigious deal of Pains to prove to us, that Mr Leidecker, and ſome other Miniſters are in the wrong to conclude, from That Bull of Pius V, that the Church of Rome has condemned the Doctrine of St Auguſtin, and favoured the new Pelagians (43). It ſeems to me, that he ſhews clearly enough the Invalidity of That Bull, the Diſhoneſty of thoſe, who made the Extracts, the Negligence of That Pope, and the Precipitation, wherewith he condemned thoſe Propoſitions, before he had examined the Works, from whence it was pretended, that they had been taken, &c. This Negligence appeared alſo from the Rules of Grammar not being obſerved in That Bull (44). It may be alledged, that Urban VIII, in his Bull againſt the Book of Janſenius, publiſhed in the Year 1642, confirmed the Bull of Pius V and That of Gregory XIII. But the Author anſwers, that Urban VIII, did not confirm thoſe two Bulls, but upon the Suppoſition of Facts, which were falſe, and that therefore his Confirmation was void. " Quandoquidem ergo " Urbanus eas non confirmaverit, niſi ſupponendo " quæ falſa ſunt; ex iſta confirmatione nullum ro" bur accedit iſtis ſuorum Predeceſſorum Conſtitu" tionibus: quod enim in ſua origine vitioſum ac " nullius roboris eſt, rati-habitione non ſit validum, " vel, ut jura loquuntur *, Quod initio vitioſum eſt, " non poteſt tractu temporis convaleſcere: nec firmatur " tractu temporis, quod jure ab initio non ſubſiſtit (45). " —— Since therefore Urban did not confirm them, " but upon Suppoſitions, which were falſe; ſuch a Con" firmation could add no Authority to the Conſtitu" tions of his Predeceſſors: For what is originally " void, and of no Force, can never be made good by " ſubſequent Ratification; or, as the Law ſays, What " is void from the Beginning, can never become " valid by any Courſe of Time; nor does long Uſage " confirm any thing, which did not legally ſubſiſt from " the firſt." This Pope being deceived by Francis Albizzi, Aſſeſſor of the Holy Office, and Penſionary of the Jeſuits, imagined, that the Bull of Pius V had been attended with all due Formality, and had been confirmed by That of Gregory XIII. Theſe were two falſe Suppoſitions; for Pius V did not cauſe his Bull to be fixed up, or to be ſolemnly publiſhed, at Rome: And, as for Pope Gregory, he was ſatisfied with ſaying, that he found it among the Records of his Predeceſſor. Urban VIII, therefore, was made to affirm a Falſity, by inſerting, in his Bull, that the Articles, condemned by Pius V, had been condemned anew by Gregory XIII: and, to conceal the Knowledge of This Impoſture from the People, care was taken to leave the Conſtitution of Gregory XIII out of the Bull of Urban VIII, tho' the Bull of Pius V was inſerted in it. " Am" madvertendum eſt quod Urbanus VIII in Bulla " ſuperius memorata enunciaverit quidem à Grego" rio XIII confirmatam fuiſſe Pii V Conſtitutio" nem, articuloſque in ea confixos denuò fuiſſe dam" natos. Verùm hæc Urbani VIII Bulla apertè falſi " ea ſaltem in parte convincitur, ſicut & ab Joanne " Sinichio Lovanienſis Academiæ delegato Romæ con" victa eſt, ex ipſomet Gregorii XIII Diplomate, " in quo nihil de iſta confirmatione, aut de iterata " hujuſmodi articulorum diſpunctione habetur. Ne " autem id innoteſceret, Albizzius, Jeſuitarum ſti" pendiarius, qui Bullam Urbani VIII conſcripſit, " in ea quidem Pii V Bullam integram inſeruit, " ſed non Gregorii XIII Conſtitutionem, ex qua " ſingulis patuiſſet ejus mendacium, & quam falſo in " Bulla Urbani dicatur Pii V Bulla à Gregorio XIII " confirmata, proſcriptique in ea articuli iterum à " Gregorio XIII prohibiti: cum Gregorius XIII dun" taxat teſtificetur tenorem Bullæ, quam inſerit, eſſe " planè conformem tenori Bullæ, quam in Pii V " regiſtro invenit; & iſti tenori eam fidem adhiben" dam,

(43) Id. ib. pag. 210, & ſeq.

(44) Ibid. pag. 235.

* ff. de Reg. Jur. & o. Decret. eod. Tit.

(45) Ibid. p. 239, 240.

Digitized by Google

(46) Ibid. pag. 242.

" dam, quæ ipſius Bullæ protographo debetur (46). " —— It is to be obſerved, That Urban VIII, in " his Bull before-mentioned, declared, that the Con- " ſtitution of Pius V had been confirmed by Grego- " ry VIII; and that the Articles, therein condemned, " had been condemned anew. But This Bull of Urban " VIII aſſerts a Falſity, at leaſt in this Reſpect, " as was proved by John Sinnichius, Deputy for the " Univerſity of Louvain, at Rome, and from the Bull " itſelf of Gregory XIII, wherein not a Syllable of " That Confirmation, or of a ſecond Condemnation of " Thoſe Articles, is to be found. But, that this might " not appear, Albizzi, Penſionary of the Jeſuits, " who drew up the Bull of Urban VIII, inſerted in " it indeed the Bull of Pius V, but not the Con- " ſtitution of Gregory XIII, which would have diſ- " covered his whole Fraud, by ſhewing how falſely " he had made the Bull of Urban declare, that the " Bull of Pius V was confirmed, and that the pro- " hibited Articles were again prohibited by This Con- " ſtitution of Gregory XIII; when This Pope only " teſtifies therein, that the Tenor of the Bull, which " he inſerts, is exactly conformable to the Tenor of " the Bull, which he had found in the Regiſter of " Pius V; and that the ſame Obedience ought to be " paid to it, which was due to the Original." All this is much more proper to ſhew the Artifices uſed in the Condemnation of Books, than to confute Mr Leidecker; for, in ſhort, for one Roman Catholic, who believes Baius to be innocent, there are above a thouſand, who believe him juſtly condemned; and therefore the Church of Rome may, with much likelihood, be accuſed of holding This Doctor's Opinions for Heretical, which are moſt agreeable to St Auguſtin's Doctrine. This ought to make the Fate of ſome Men pitied. Though Paſſion, Irregularity, and Injuſtice, appear manifeſtly in the Proceedings uſed againſt them; yet, in the Opinion of the Majority, they will be ſuppoſed guilty. A Judgment againſt their Doctrine is ſufficient to ſecure the Prejudices of the Public. The Adverſary will enjoy the Fruit of his Frauds and Intrigues; he will conſtantly engage the Folly of the People on his Side, who generally preſume in favour of Tribunals.

A great Work of Baius is promiſed (47), if this new Edition goes off well. This will be his Commentary on the Maſter of the Sentences, and his Explication of David's Pſalms. (47) In Præfat.

BALBUS. This Name makes ſuch a Figure in the Ancient Roman Hiſtory, that it is ſtrange the Hiſtorical Dictionaries ſhould pay ſo little Regard to it [A]. If I endeavour to repair their Fault, it is chiefly in reſpect to Lucius Cornelius BALBUS, who was Conſul in the Year of Rome 714, and who had a Nephew, whom I ſhall mention either in the Text, or in the Remarks, as occaſion offers. This Conſul was born at Cadiz. He ſignalized himſelf by his great Courage in the Wars, which the Romans carried on in Spain againſt Sertorius, and againſt the Luſitanians; inſomuch, that Pompey, being very well ſatisfied with his great Services, declared him a Roman Citizen. Lucius Gellius and Cn. Cornelius, who were Conſuls a little time after, made a Law, that all thoſe, whom Pompey, with the Conſent of the Council of War, had made Citizens of Rome, ſhould be actually ſo eſteemed. By this means Balbus entered into full Poſſeſſion of his Freedom of Rome (a). He took upon him the Prænam of Lucius from one of thoſe two Conſuls, and the Name of Cornelius from the other [B]. He was ſo much eſteemed in Rome, that he had the Friendſhip of the greateſt Men of the State, as of Pompey, Craſſus, Cæſar, and Cicero, and was adopted by Theophanes (b), who was very particularly beloved and regarded by Pompey.

(a) See Cicero in Oratione pro Cornelio Balbo, & ibi Manucium & Nicolaum Abramum.

(b) Cicero ib. & Epiſt. 7. ad Attic. lib. 7.

[A] The Hiſtorical Dictionaries have paid but little Regard to this Name.] They are prodigiouſly barren on the Word Balbus. Charles Stephens remarks, that it was the Sirname of the Atilii, and that the firſt of This Family, who was called Balbus, was ſo called, becauſe he ſtammered; and that afterwards his Poſterity preſerved This Sirname. It is very likely, that This Appellation had the ſame beginning, in ſeveral Families, as it is certainly on the ſame Account, that, in all Countries, ſo many Perſons are named White, &c. And ſince there has been an Emperor of the Eaſt (1), and another of the Weſt (2), who had both of them the Sirname of Balbus, or Stammerer, from That Defect in their Speech; Why ſhould it ſeem ſtrange, that, in the time of the Roman Common-wealth, a like Defect introduced This Sirname into ſeveral illuſtrious Families? It is not, therefore, for This, that Charles Stephens deſerves to be criticized, but becauſe he miſtook the Atilii for the Accii, or Atii, and becauſe he expreſſed himſelf in ſuch a manner, as if the Atilii had no other Sirname but This: whereas they have had, among them, thoſe of Regulus, Seranus, Calatinus. Nay, there was one C. Atilius Balbus, Conſul in the Year of Rome 508, and 518, which is, perhaps, the cauſe of Charles Stephens's Error. Mr Lloyd ought to have been ſatisfied with correcting This Article; but he thought it fitter wholly to ſuppreſs it; in Imitation of Thoſe Chirurgeons, who, inſtead of curing the Wound, cut off the whole Limb: Or, as Diſputants ſerve an Objection, when they find themſelves upon pretty much the ſame Terms with Alexander, in reſpect to the Gordian Knot. Mr Hofman neither cured, nor cut off, but retained the Article as he found it in Charles Stephens.

The ORIGINAL of the Sirname Balbus. Whether Ch. Stephens has rightly applied it to the Atilii.

(1) Michael II, of That Name, who was Emperor of Conſtantinople, from the Year 820 to 826.

(2) Lewis III, of That Name, who was alſo King of France, and who died in 879.

[B] He took upon him, in reſpect to ----- the two Conſuls, the Prænam of Lucius, and the Name of Cornelius.] It was the Cuſtom of Rome, that Thoſe, who obtained their Freedom, took upon them the Name of him, who procured them That Honour. It was for This Reaſon, that the Hiſtorian Theophanes, and his Poſterity, bore the Name of Pompey. I may be asked, Why then did not Cornelius Balbus alſo take the Name of Pompey? My Anſwer is, Becauſe he choſe rather to ground his Right on a Law, than on the Kindneſs of That General. The Law, I ſpeak of, is That made by the Conſuls L. Gellius, and Cn. Cornelius, with the Conſent of the Senate, in the Year of Rome 682. It imported, that all Thoſe, on whom Pompey had conferred the Freedom of Rome, with the Approbation of the Council of War, ſhould be reputed Citizens of Rome. " Naſcitur, Judices, cauſa Cornelii ex eâ lege quam " L. Gellius, Cn. Cornelius, ex Senatus ſententia tu- " lerunt; quâ lege videmus ſatis eſſe ſanctum, uti " cives Romani ſint ii, quos Cn. Pompeius de con- " ſilii ſententia ſingillatim civitate donaverit (3). —— " The Cauſe of Cornelius, Judges, is founded on " That Law, which L. Gellius, and Cn. Cornelius, " by Decree of the Senate, enacted; which we ſee " has ſolemnly confirmed Thoſe, as Citizens of Rome, " to whom Pompey, with Conſent of his Council, " had reſpectively given That Privilege." Balbus, looking upon Thoſe two Conſuls as the true Authors of the Honour he enjoyed, took the Prænam Lucius from the one, and the Name Cornelius from the other. This is much more likely, than what Manutius ſays, That, though Balbus had been made a Roman Citizen by Pompey, yet he was nevertheleſs obliged for That Freedom to Cornelius Lentulus, whoſe Prænam, and Name, he took, according to Coſtom (4). He conjectures alſo, that This L. Cornelius Lentulus is the ſame, who was Conſul, the firſt Year of the Civil War, that is, in the Seven hundred and fourth Year of Rome. To conclude, we learn from hence, that Cardinal Baronius made too long an Enumeration of Titus's Favours to Joſephus, when he notes particularly, that, beſides the Right of a Citizen, he alſo conferred on him the Name of the Family of Flavia (5). For, in the firſt place, it was Veſpaſian, and not Titus, who made him a Citizen (6), and, after that, the Name Flavius was given him of courſe.

WHAT Name thoſe, who obtained the Freedom of Rome, gave themſelves.

(3) C. Orat. Balbo.

(4) In Annal. ad ann. 1[illegible] Balbo & Cornelio [illegible] Balbo & Cornelio [illegible] Balbo & Cornelio [

Pompey. It is on account of this Adoption, that Capitolinus names him Balbus Cornelius Theophanes [C], when he says, that the Emperor Balbinus affirmed, that he was descended from him (c). The Prosperity of Balbus raised him up Enemies, who commenced a Law-Suit against him about his Freedom: Crassus, Pompey, and Cicero, pleaded his Cause (d), and gained it. He found himself much perplexed during the War between Cæsar and Pompey; for he had great Obligations to both. It appears, that he gave the preference to Cæsar, but in such a manner, that he endeavoured to bring Matters to a Reconciliation (e). Velleius Paterculus remarks it as a great Temerity, that Balbus was so bold, as to go to Pompey's Camp, to gain over the Consul Lentulus, who was considering at what Price he should sell himself (f). It was by this means, adds he, that Balbus, tho' a Spaniard, opened his way to the Triumph, the Pontificate, and the Consulship. Pliny, indeed, observes, that Balbus was made Consul, and that he was the first Foreigner, who obtained That Dignity (g); but, as for the Honour of a Triumph, he says it was another Cornelius Balbus, a Nephew of This, who obtained it, with the Roman Freedom, the first of all Foreigners (h). We shall see wherein Paterculus's Fault consists. These two Cornelii Balbi were so rich, that the Uncle, at his Death, left Twenty five Drachmas to each Roman Citizen (i), and the Nephew caused a new City (k) to be built at Cadiz (l). The Uncle wrote a History of Julius Cæsar, in the form of a Journal (m). It was, undoubtedly, he, who contracted so very strict a Friendship with Pomponius Atticus [E]. Some have confounded Cornelius Balbus with Cornelius Gallus [F]. We shall shew, that Vossius was (c) Capitol. in Balbino.

(d) See Cicero's Oration pro Cornelio Balbo.

(e) See Remark [G].

(f) Vell. Paterc. lib. 2, cap. 51.

(g) Plin. lib. 7, c. 43

(h) Id. lib. 5, cap. 5.

(i) Dio, lib. 48.

(k) Strabo, lib. 3, p. 116.

(l) He was born there, as well as his Uncle.

(m) Sidonius Apollinaris, lib. 9, Epist. 14.

[C] Capitolinus names him Balbus Cornelius Theophanes.] I give you this Author's words: "Familiæ vetustissimæ, ut ipse (Balbinus) dicebat, "à Balbo Cornelio Theophane originem ducens, "qui per Cn. Pompejum civitatem meruerat, quum "esset suæ patriæ nobilissimus, idemque historiæ "scriptor (7). —— Of a very ancient Family, as he "(Balbinus) himself affirmed, derived from Balbus "Cornelius Theophanes, who was made a Citizen "of Rome by Cn. Pompey, being of a noble Rank "in his own Country, and also an Historian." Casaubon imagines, that This is to be understood of the Historian Theophanes, born at Mytelene, in the Island of Lesbos (8). Vossius (9), Mr de Tillemont (10), and several others, are of the same Opinion. I believe they are mistaken, and it is better to understand here the adopted Son, than the Father. Cornelius Balbus was the Son of Theophanes by Adoption: The three Titles, which Capitolinus made use of, belong to him, and the last only belongs to Theophanes. If I am told, that Balbus was not of noblest Rank in his own Country, I answer, No more was Theophanes in Mitylene. It is true, Strabo affirms, that Theophanes had a share in the public Offices, and that he became the most Illustrious of all the Greeks (11). But This does not help us to confirm the words of Capitolinus: Strabo does not ascribe to him Antiquity of Family, or Nobleness of Blood, which raised him above all the other Mitylenians; and This is the Point in question, in Capitolinus. So that the Objection signifies nothing, since it would prove too much: And it is enough for me, that Balbus's Enemies did not deny, but that he was of a very honourable Family. Hunc in eâ civitate, in quâ sit natus, honestissimo loco natum esse concedis (12). It is likely, they would not acknowledge all he ascribed to himself hereupon. There is another Objection to be feared. Balbus was Consul, and Theophanes was not: Whence comes it, then, that Capitolinus, who remarked his Quality of Historian, forgot That of Consul, much more proper, than the other, to set off the Nobility of Balbinus? I answer, that Capitolinus is not a Man, from whom much Accuracy, and Judgment, is to be expected. The worst, which may come of it, would be to say, that he applied Balbinus's Pretensions wrong, and that he thought, that Cornelius Balbus Theophanes, from whom That Emperor said he was descended, was the same Theophanes, of the Island of Lesbos, whose chief Glory was That of having been an Historian. I would not absolutely reject this Conjecture; Men of better parts, than Capitolinus, might have taken the one for the other in that place; but I rather choose to say, that he knew Balbus, of Cadiz, was Author of an History.

(7) Capitol. in Balbino, pag. 147.

(8) Casaub. in hunc locum Capitol.

(9) Vossius de Histor. Græc. pag. 147.

(10) Tillemont's History of the Emperors, Tom. 3, p. 489.

(11) Strabo, lib. 13, pag. 425.

(12) Cicero pro Cornel. Balbo, non procul init.

[D] I shall mention wherein Paterculus's Fault consists.] These are his words; "Tum Balbus Cornelius excedente humanam fidem temeritate ingressus "castra hostium sæpiusque cum Lentulo collocutus, "Consule dubitante quanti se venderet, illis incrementis fecit viam quibus non Hispanensis natus, "sed Hispanus, in triumphum & Pontificatum assurgeret, fieretque ex privato Consularis (13). —— "Cornelius Balbus, by an incredible Rashness, entring "into the Enemies Camp, to gain the Consul Lentulus, whose particular Friend he was, treated "several times with him, who was, for some time, "considering what Price to ask for his Treachery. "By this means, Balbus cleared the way to those Preferments, whereby, though he was not only born "in Spain, as several Romans and Italians were, but also of Natural Spaniards (14), yet he obtained, "in Rome, the Honour of a Triumph, and the Pontificate; and, from a private Person, became at last a "Consul." I shall say nothing of This Action of Balbus, which Cicero has greatly celebrated in the places I quote (15). I will only dwell a little on Paterculus. Either he says nothing to the purpose, or he affirms, that Balbus was raised to the Consulship, as well as to the Honour of a Triumph, and to the Dignity of Pontiff; and it would be in vain to deny This under pretence, that he did not say, & Consulatum, as this seems to be the most natural Expression, to signify, that Balbus was made Consul: I shall not take upon me to prescribe Forms to one, who spoke so politely, as That Author did; he had his Reasons for altering the turn of his Phrase, when he came to mention the Consulship. But he was mistaken in the Thing, and confounded the Uncle's Honours with Those of the Nephew. That Balbus, who negociated with Lentulus, in the beginning of the Civil War, is the Nephew, as appears by Cicero's Letters, which I have quoted. It was Balbus the Nephew, who triumphed over the Garamantes, the first Stranger honoured with a Triumph, as we learn from Pliny (16); but it was Balbus the Uncle, who was the first Stranger honoured with the Consulship, as the same Pliny informs us (17). These two Balbus's were distinguished, at Rome, by the Title of Major, given to the Uncle, and That of Minor, to the Nephew. I wonder, that Salmasius, who distinguished the Honours of both very well, did not take notice of this Fault of Paterculus (18).

(13) Paterculo. 2, c. 51.

(14) This Explication of the difference, which Paterculus makes between Hispanus and Hispaniensis (if, however his Text admit of it) seems as good as That of Lipsius, who, by Hispaniensis, understood an Inhabitant of Spain; and by Hispanus, a natural Spaniard.

(15) Epist. 32, of Book 10, ad Familiares; and the Comment. in Epist. 9, of Book 8, to Atticus.

(16) Plin. lib. 5, c. 5.

(17) Id. lib. 7. cap. 43.

(18) Salmas. in Solin. c. 9.

(19) Corn. Nepos in Vita Attici, cap. 31.

[E] He contracted a very strict Friendship with Pomponius Atticus.] This cannot be denied, when we consider, that Atticus, having resolved to end his Life by starving himself, sent for his Son-in-law, and L. Cornelius Balbus, and Sextus Peducæus, to declare to them his final Resolution (19). I think, I have read, in one of Cicero's Letters, that Balbus was one of those, who were often entertained at Atticus's Table (20). Which would prove, that he delighted in hearing good things read (21).

(20) I could not find the place; but I think I have read it in Cicero's Letters to Atticus.

(21) See, above, the Remark [F] of the Article ATTICUS.

[F] Some have confounded Cornelius Balbus with Cornelius Gallus.] It is in relation to a Fact, which is far from honouring his Memory. They make him die in the Act of Venery (22). Without doubt, the first Occasion of this Mistake, was an Error of the Press. Cornelius Gallus had been put in the List of those, who died in that Condition, on the Authority of Pliny (23); and the Printer using a B, for a G, caused several to mistake the one for the other. I find this Error in several Editions of

(22) B Ithasar Bonifacius, Histor. Ludicra, lib. 16, cap. 16, ex Tiraquello, Leg. Connub. 15, n. 27.

(23) Lib. 7, cap. 53.

Digitized by Google

was in the wrong to censure Savaro [G]; that Lloyd and Hofman deserve some Censure [H]; that Paulus Manutius is not entirely excusable [I]; that Glandorpius multiplies Persons of this Name unnecessarily [K]; that the distinction of the greater and of Tiraquellus's Commentary on the Matrimonial Laws.

[G] Vossius was in the wrong to censure Savaro.] Whilst he was taking notice of a Fault, which he believed he had found in Savaro's Commentary on Sidonius Apollinaris, he himself was mistaken (24). Savaro had affirmed, that Balbus, to whom Sidonius Apollinaris ascribes the Journal of Julius Cæsar's Life (25), is the same with Balbus Cornelius Theophanes, of whom Julius Capitolinus says, in the Life of Balbinus, That he had obtained the Roman Freedom by Pompey's Favour, and that, moreover, he was the most Noble of his Fellow-Citizens, and an Historian. Vossius refutes this Pretension of Savaro, I. Because Balbus, Author of the Journal, was an intimate Friend of Julius Cæsar, as appears by Suetonius (26), and by Aulus Gellius (27); whereas Theophanes was an intimate Friend of Pompey, which was made a Crime of to his Posterity, as Tacitus observes, in the sixth Book of his Annals. II. Because Theophanes was a Lesbian, and wrote in Greek, and Balbus lived at Rome, and wrote in Latin.

If I had a mind to be over-critical, I might object to these Reasons, I. that the same Balbus, who was one of Cæsar's intimate Friends, was also one of Pompey's Friends; and so far honoured with his Confidence, that Pompey's other Friends were jealous of him (28). It is true, that the Conjunction, which was then between Pompey and Cæsar, having permitted Balbus to cultivate the Friendship of the latter, without failing in what he owed the former, it was at last found, that Cæsar's Favours were superior to Those of Pompey: Nevertheless, Balbus obtained leave of Cæsar not to follow him against Pompey, and retired to Rome during the Civil War (29). It is true, also, that he was Cæsar's Agent there, and that, by endeavouring to bring Matters to an Agreement, he did not appear altogether free from Partiality. But, after all, it is not sufficient, in order to make a just Opposition between Balbus and Theophanes, to say, on the one side, as Suetonius does, that Balbus was an intimate Friend of Julius Cæsar, and, with Aulus Gellius, that Balbus was one of Cæsar's Agents at Rome, during his Absence; and to say on the other side with Tacitus, that Theophanes had been one of Pompey's intimate Friends and that Tiberius imputed it as a Crime to Theophanes's Posterity: For, considering That Emperor's capricious Humour, he was like enough to persecute a Family, under pretence, that it had obtained the Freedom of Rome by Pompey's Favour. Now This would be true in a literal Sense, as to Theophanes, though he should be confounded with Cornelius Balbus; since it is not only certain, that Pompey conferred That Freedom upon him, but also that he pleaded for him, when they brought it into question, and loaded him with Favours. So that Vossius's first Reason is not good. II. I might say, in the second place, that the Theophanes, whom Vossius means, lived at Rome, as well as Balbus; and since there have been Romans, who have wrote Histories in Greek, it does not follow, that Balbus is not Theophanes, because Theophanes wrote in Greek. Nay, how do we know, whether the Balbus in question be not the Cornelius Balbus, whose eighteenth Book, of the Ἐξηγητικῶν, Macrobius has quoted (30)? Simler does not doubt it (31).

But, without trifling on Disputes, which may be charged with too scrupulous a Preciseness, here is the jugulum causæ, and the decisive Point, in three words. Vossius imagined, that Savaro confounded Cornelius Balbus, with Theophanes, born in the Island of Lesbos, and Author of an History of Mithridates's War. But he has not done this. He has only confounded him with the Theophanes, mentioned by Capitolinus, and who differs very much from Him of Lesbos, though he has This in common with him, that He also received his Freedom of Rome from Pompey. Now there is nothing more reasonable, than to take the Theophanes of Capitolinus, for the Cornelius Balbus of Suetonius, and for the Balbus of Sidonius Apollinaris; for it is certain, that the same Cornelius Balbus, born at Cadiz, and honoured with the Freedom of Rome, by Pompey, was, by the Recommendation of the same Pompey, adopted by Theophanes of Lesbos (32): after which, according to Custom, he named himself Lucius Cornelius Balbus Theophanes, as Paulus Manutius, and Corradus, have observed; the former in his Argument of Cicero's Oration for the same Balbus; and the latter in his Notes on Cicero's Epistles to Atticus: And both of them have taken this Balbus for the Historian Cornelius Balbus Theophanes, mentioned by Capitolinus. So that, if there had been any Fault to be found with This, Vossius should have censured Those learned Italians, rather than Savaro, who came a long time after them.

[H] Lloyd and Hofman deserve some Censure.] I say nothing of Charles Stephens; he has been a little too dry on our Cornelius Balbus; but what he mentions of him is not ill chosen. Lloyd has cut off some Words from it, which were not superfluous, viz. That we still have Cicero's Oration for This Balbus; for they are two very different Facts, the one that Cicero pleaded such a Cause, and the other, that we still have his Plea; and it is in the latter Case, that the Readers are mostly interested. Mr Hofman lengthens the Article (33), to inform us, that there was another Cornelius Balbus, of Lesbos, firnamed Theophanes, that is, to teach us a Falsity. Lucius Cornelius Balbus Theophanes is no way different from Him, who was of Cadiz, and who is the Subject of this Article.

[I] Paulus Manutius is not entirely excusable.] I have already touched upon some of his Mistakes; here are yet two more. The one is in his Argument of Cicero's Oration for Cornelius Balbus, and in the Notes on That Passage of the Oration, where mention is made of the Adoption of This Balbus. He there says, most falsely, that Theophanes was one of Pompey's Freed Men (34); for it was not his Liberty, but his Freedom of Rome, which Pompey gave Theophanes. "Quid Magnus hic noster, says Cicero, qui cum "virtute fortunam adæquavit: nonne Theophanem "Mitylenæum scriptorem rerum suarum in concione "militum civitate donavit (35)? —What did our Pom- "pey do, who loves to join Fortune and Virtue to- "gether: did he not, in an Assembly of the Soldiers, "present Theophanes of Mitylene, the Writer of his "History, with the Freedom of the City?" The other Mistake of Manutius is in referring us, among other Authorities, to the seventh Book of Pliny, chap. 43 (36), concerning the Triumph of Cornelius Balbus the Younger, Nephew to him we are speaking of; for Pliny, in that place, speaks only of the Uncle's Consulship. One may easily be mistaken in such Cases as these. Father Hardouin, on the same Place of Pliny, refers us to a Passage of Paterculus (37), where he only speaks of Balbus the Nephew.

[K] Glandorpius multiplies Persons of this Name unnecessarily.] He ought not to have produced three Consuls called L. Cornelius Balbus. It is to multiply Beings without necessity. He says, the first is Balbus the Elder, whose Consulship he places in the Year of Rome 713. The second is Balbus the Younger, for whose Consulship he says nothing particular, contenting himself to set down the Words of Paterculus. The third is one L. Cornelius Balbus, who, he says, was made Consul for some Days, towards the end of the Year, by Augustus, and Marc Antony, and had such a vast Estate as to be able to bequeath Twenty five Drachma's to each Citizen of Rome (38). The Truth of it is, These three Consuls make but one; for Balbus, the Uncle, is the same with Him whose Consulship was of so short a Continuance. Do but consult Dion Cassius. To ascertain this Consulship, Father Hardouin says wittily, That Balbus was Consul under the Consulship of Cn. Domitius Calvinus, and of C. Asinius Pollio, in the Year of Rome 714. Consul hic fuit, quoniam ita necesse est dicere, Cn. Domitio Calvino secundum, C. Asinio Pollione Coss. Anno Urbis DCCXIV (39). To conclude, if Glandorpius had known any thing of the Passage of Pliny (40), where Balbus the Elder is called Paternal Uncle, Patruus, of Balbus the Younger, he would not have descended to the Quotation of such a bad Authority as That of Volaterranus, to inform us, that one

(24) De Histor. Græc. lib. 1, c. 23. pag. 148.

(25) Sidon. Apoll. Epist. 14. lib. 9.

(26) Suet. in Cæs. c. 81. misquoted by Vossius, cap. 71. and by Moreri, cap. 74.

(27) A. Gellius, lib. 17, cap. 9, where he says, that Julius Cæsar and Balbus wrote to each other in Cyphers.

(28) Cicero ad Attic. lib. 9, Epist. 13.

(29) Epist. Balbi ad Ciceron. lib. 9, ad Attic. p. 36, Edit. Græevii.

(30) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 3, cap. 6.

(31) Simler. in Epit. Bibl. Gesner.

(32) Et adoptio Theophanis agitata est. Cicero pro Balbo. Placet igitur etiam me expulsum & agrum Campanum perisse, & adoptatum patricium à plebeio, Gaditanum à Mitylenæo. Id. Epist. 7, ad Attic. lib. 7.

(33) In Vol. I. of his Continuation, he has made good Additions, concerning Cornelius Balbus.

(34) He repeats it in his Notes on Epist. 11, to Atticus, l. 5.

(35) Orat. pro Archia: Valerius Maximus says as much, lib. 8, c. 14.

(36) In Argument. Orat. Cicer. pro Balbo, where, instead of quoting the 43d chap. of the 7th Book of Pliny, the 37th is quoted; and, instead of the 20th of Solinus, the 42d is quoted. This Edition of Manutius is of Cologne, 1582, in 8vo.

(37) Lib. 2. cap. 51.

(38) Gland. Onomastic. Roman. pag. 277.

(39) Hard. in Plin. lib. 7, cap. 43. pag. 64. Tom. III.

(40) Lib. 5, cap. 5, pag. pag. 545.

Digitized by Google

and leſſer Conſulſhip is chimerical [L]; and that Moreri committed ſeveral Faults [M], though his Article of Balbus is very ſhort and dry.

I ſhall ſay but little of ſome other Balbus's, mentioned by ancient Authors. Lucius Lucilius BALBUS, Diſciple of Mucius Scævola, and Preceptor of the famous Servius Sulpitius, was an excellent Lawyer. He flouriſhed about the Year of Rome 670. Cicero ſays, that Sulpitius exceeded his Maſter [N], who, by the Addition of a mature Judgment to his Learning, was ſomething ſlow, whereas his Diſciple was quick and expeditious. Balbus's Writings are loſt, to which perhaps his Diſciple Sulpitius did not a little contribute, by inſerting moſt of them in his own (n). We muſt not, as Glandorpius has done, confound this Balbus with Quintus Lucilius BALBUS the Stoic Philoſopher, one of Cicero's Interlocutors in the Books de Natura Deorum (o). Publius Octavius BALBUS was Cotemporary with Cicero, who praiſes him for his Knowledge in the Civil Law, for his Wit, and Probity, and for many other good Qualities (p). Cicero gives as good a Character of Lucius Octavius BALBUS, who lived at the ſame time (q). It is likely, that one of theſe two was the Octavius Balbus, of whom Valerius Maximus reports, that, having ſaved himſelf, through a Back-door, from the Cruelty of the Triumvirs, and hearing, that they were killing his Son in his Houſe, he returned back again, and cauſed himſelf to be put to Death (r). Appian reports the Matter ſomewhat differently (s).

(n) Pomponius, lib. 2, de Origine juris.

(o) Glandorp. Onomaſtic. pag. 552. In pag. 63, Glandorpius takes, for one and the ſame Perſon, him who is made Interlocutor in the Nature of the Gods, him who is praiſed in the Oration for Cluentius, and him who is praiſed in the ſeventh Oration againſt Verres.

(p) Cicero, Orat. pro Cluentio, fol. 114, C.

(q) Idem in Verrem Orat. 7, fol. 40, B.

(r) Valer. Maxim. lib. 5. cap. 7.

(s) Appianus, de Bello Civili, lib. 4, pag. 601.

one of thoſe Balbus's was the Son of the other's Brother.

[L] The Diſtinction of the greater, and leſſer, Conſulſhip is chimerical.] Obſerve, a little, to what Extravagancy of Thought Men are ſubject. There are ſome, who, from theſe Words Pliny, Fuit & Balbus Cornelius Major Conſul, have fallen into the Chimera of two Degrees of Conſulſhip, and pretended, that Balbus was made Great Conſul, or Firſt Conſul (41). It was eaſy to ſee, that Major, in This Paſſage, does not relate to Conſul, but to the Name. Cornelius Balbus, the Elder, was Conſul.

(41) See Salmaſius, Exercit. Plin. pag. 383.

[M] And that Moreri committed ſeveral Faults.] I. It is only with an it is ſaid, that he reports, that Cornelius Balbus compoſed a Journal, or Ephemeris, of what happened daily to Cæſar. If he had known, that Sidonius Apollinaris mentioned That Journal, as a Book, which was extant, and alſo commended it (42), he muſt have rejected, That it is ſaid. Some will have it, that Symmachus ſpoke of This ſame Book, when he wrote to his Friend: "Si impar eſt "deſiderio tuo Livius, ſume Ephemeridem C. Cæ- "ſaris decerptam Bibliotheculæ meæ ut tibi muneri "mitteretur. Hæc te origines, ſitus, pugnas, & "quidquid fuit in moribus aut legibus Galliarum "docebit (43). - - - - - If Livy does not fully ſatisfy "your Deſire of having the Hiſtory of ancient Gaul, "you need only take Cæſar's Ephemerides, which I "made you a Preſent of out of my own ſmall Li- "brary. This will explain to you the Origin, Si- "tuation, Battles, Cuſtoms, and Laws of the Gauls." But others pretend, that Symmachus means only the Memoirs Cæſar had wrote himſelf, and which we ſtill have under the Title of Commentaries on the Wars of Gaul (44). It is, nevertheleſs, true, that he wrote other Memoirs, under the Title of Ephemeris, as we learn from Servius. Why might not Symmachus ſpeak of the latter? II. The Advice he gives, to take care not to confound This Author with one of the ſame Name, ſirnamed Theophanes, who was of Lesbos, as Savaro, and others have done, contains two Faults. We have ſhewn the firſt, in juſtifying Savaro from the Cenſure of Voſſius. The ſecond conſiſts, in ſuppoſing, that there was an Hiſtorian, born in the Iſland of Lesbos, whoſe Name was Cornelius Balbus Theophanes; than which nothing can be more falſe. The Hiſtorian Theophanes, born at Mitylene, in the Iſland of Lesbos, was indeed Cn. Pompeius Theophanes, becauſe Pompey had conferred the Freedom of Rome upon him; but he never added the Name of Balbus, or Balbus Cornelius, to That of his Family; and there is reaſon to be ſurprized, that Voſſius ſhould make ſuch a Slip, as to ſay, that the Hiſtorian Cornelius Balbus Theophanes, mentioned by Julius Capitolinus, was Theophanes the Lesbian, who wrote the War of Mithridates (45). III. But again, Why muſt we take care not to do as Savaro did? It is becauſe Cornelius Balbus dwelt at Rome, and becauſe Theophanes was of Lesbos. Are not theſe two Attributes incompatible in the ſame Subject, and can a better Proof be required, for a perſonal Diſtinction? See how Errors grow: Moreri, deſigning to abbreviate Voſſius's Proof, made it incomparably worſe, than it was. IV. He goes on thus: I think he is the firſt, whom Cicero defended againſt an Accuſation, for taking, unjuſtly, the Title of a Roman Citizen. Beſides, that the Expreſſion is ſo far from being clear (46), that one would think, by it, that the Cauſe of the Perſon in queſtion was the firſt that Cicero pleaded of That kind, which is neither what Moreri intended to ſay, nor what ought to be ſaid; there is This Fault in theſe Words, that they ought not to have mentioned this Fact as uncertain; when there was nothing more eaſy, than to be fully convinced of it, by reading the Arguments of Paulus Manutius, of Father Abram, &c. on Cicero's Oration, pro L. Cornelio Balbo.

(42) Quis Opera Suetonii, quis Juvenci, Martialis Hiſtoriam, quiſve ad extremum BALBI EPHEMERIDEM FANDO ADAEQUAVERIT?--- Who can come up to the Style of the Works of Suetonius, the Hiſtories of Juvencus and Martial, or the excellent Ephemeris of Balbus? Sidon. Apollinar. Epiſt. 14, lib. 9.

(43) Symmach. Epiſt. 18, lib. 4.

(44) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Lat. p. 64, where he ascribes to Suetonius what belongs to Symmachus.

(45) See, in Remark [C], Caſaubon and others who have committed the ſame Fault.

(46) The Faults of this kind in Moreri's Style are numberleſs.

[N] Cicero ſays, that Sulpitius exceeded his Maſter.] Cicero's Thought will be better comprehended from his own Words, than from mine. Read, therefore, what follows. "Cum dicendi causâ duobus peri- "tiſſimis operam dediſſet (Servius) L. Lucilio Balbo, "C. Aquilio Gallo, Galli hominis acuti & exercitati "promptam in agendo & in reſpondendo celeritatem "ſubtilitate diligentiaque ſuperavit: Balbi docti & e- "ruditi hominis in utraque re conſideratam tardi- "tatem vicit, expediendis conficiendiſque rebus. Sic "& habet quod uterque eorum habuit, & explevit "quod utrique defuit (47). —— As he (Servius) had "learned to plead under two excellent Maſters, L. "Lucilius Balbus, and C. Aquilius Gallus, he ex- "celled his ingenious and experienced Maſter Gallus's "great readineſs in ſpeaking and replying, by his "Subtilty and Diligence; and his learned and judi- "cious Maſter Balbus's deliberate Conſideration of "every thing, by his Expedition and Diſpatch. So "that he both had, what each of them had, and "made up, what each of them wanted."

(47) Cicero, in Bruto, cap. 42.

BALBUS, BALBI, or BALBO (JOHN) a Dominican Monk, flouriſhed in the XIIIth Century. He underſtood Greek, a rare thing in thoſe Days, and much more Latin, than all his Fellow Monks together. He was as much eſteemed for his good Life, as for his Knowledge, and ſome have treated him as a Saint [A]. It was for this reaſon his Image was placed in St Thomas's Church at Pavia. The Title of his Works may be ſeen in Moreri, who, inſtead of referring us to Voſſius's Book on the

[A] Some have treated him as a Saint.] This appears from the following Paſſage. "Non vi hà man- "cato chi lo riponga nel numero de' Beati, e come "tale ſi vede dipinto nel Tempio di S. Tomaſo di "Pavia, in luogo eminente vicino al ſoffitato (1).—— "There have not been wanting thoſe, who have placed "him in the Number of Saints, and he may be ſeen "painted, as ſuch, in the Church of St Thomas, at "Pavia, in a high Place near the Cieling."

(1) Alfonſo Fernandez apud Michaelem Juſtinianum in libro de gli Scrittori Liguri, pag. 312.

[B] Let

Digitized by Google

the Latin Hiſtorians, would have done well to remark, that John Balbus is far better known by the Name of Joannes de Janua, or Joannes Januenſis, than by any other. We ſhall obſerve why he went by This Name, and examine whether he be the ſame with Jacobus de Voragine [B]. We ſhall make but One Remark for all This, and for what may follow from it.

[B] Let us ſee why he went by This Name, and —— whether he be the ſame with Jacobus de Voragine.] John Balbus, a noble Genoeſe, was called Januenſis, or de Janua, becauſe he was of Genoa. He ſays himſelf, in his Catholicon, at the Word Janua, that he was of a City called Janua, which City is no other, than Genoa: From Luitprandus's Time it was rather called Janua, than Genoa; either to inſinuate more clearly, that Janus was the Founder of it, or in regard to the Reaſon, mentioned by John de Janua, namely, that this City is the Gate of Provence, Lombardy, and Tuſcany. He informs us, in the ſame Place, that he was called Frater Johannes Januenſis de Balbis, and that he had wrote ſome other Books. At the end of the Catholicon, he ſays, that, after ſeveral Years of great Labour, he finiſhed it on the Day of the Nones of March, which is the ſeventh Day of March, 1286.

WHETHER Joannes de Janua, and Jacobus de Voragine, are one and the ſame Author.

Mr Oudin, formerly a Monk of the Order of the Præmonſtratenſes, and at preſent aſſociated with the Proteſtant Church, to the great Satisfaction of the Party, which has great Reaſon to think itſelf happy, in gaining ſo great a Man, and expects many fine Pieces from his Pen; I ſay, Mr Oudin pretends, that Jacobus de Voragine, Author of the Golden Legend, and Johannes de Janua, Author of the Catholicon, are only one and the ſame Perſon (2). His Reaſon for it is, that all agree they both lived at the ſame time, were both Dominicans, both of Genoa, and therefore both called Januenſis. So that it was an eaſy thing, for thoſe, who ſaw the Name of Januenſis, at the beginning of ſeveral Manuſcripts, preceeded by the Letter J, being the initial one of the Chriſtian Names Joannes, and Jacobus, to aſcribe them ſometimes to Jacobus Januenſis, and ſometimes to Joannes Januenſis; which muſt make two Authors of one.

(2) Oudin, Supplement. de Scriptor. Eccleſ. pag. 501.

But I muſt beg leave to tell him, that his Conjecture receives a ſevere Blow from the Enumeration, which the Author of the Catholicon has given of his Works, at the Word Janua; for, though there might have been a great Diſtance of Time, from his ending the Article Janua, to his finiſhing the Catholicon, yet it is not at all likely, that, if he had wrote any Books, during that time, he would have omitted adding them to the reſt in That Article, upon cloſing That Dictionary. And therefore it may be ſuppoſed, that the Catalogue, which he gives under the Word Janua, is of the Year 1286, in which he put the laſt Hand to the Catholicon. Now it is certain, that Jacobus de Voragine publiſhed an Italian Tranſlation of the Bible in the Year 1270. What likelihood is there, that, ſixteen Years afterwards, upon mentioning the Books he had given the Public, he ſhould forget one of ſo new an Undertaking, and, in all reſpects, ſo remarkable, as the Tranſlation of the Scriptures into the Vulgar Tongue? It is not at all probable, therefore, that Jacobus de Voragine ſhould be the Author of the Catholicon. However, we ſhall not determine this Point, but wait for the Information of the Learned, and particularly of Mr Oudin. Dr Cave alſo chuſes to ſuſpend his Judgment of it (3).

(3) Cave, de Script. Eccleſ. pag. 755.

This is what I ſaid, in the Specimen of my Dictionary, but now I can ſpeak, in a more poſitive manner, againſt Father Oudin's Conjecture: I have, for my Foundation, ſeveral good Reaſons, from a very able Hand (4). Here is the Extract of a Memoir, which came from Dijon. "I believe, it may be clearly decided, that Joannes de Genoa ought by no means "to be confounded with Jacobus de Voragine. The "firſt, who is the Author of the Dictionary, entitled "Catholicon, was never cited by the Name of Jacobus. The ſecond, who is Author of the Golden "Legend, was never cited by the Name of Joannes. "The firſt is always called Joannes de Januâ, or "Januenſis, becauſe he was, undoubtedly, of Genoa, "of the Family of the Balbi. The ſecond, whoſe "Family is unknown, is generally called Jacobus de "Voragine, very rarely Jacobus Januenſis, and then "we either underſtand Archiepiſcopus, or elſe ſuppoſe, that he was called ſo, by reaſon of the ſmall "Diſtance between the Borough of Liguria, called "Voragine, the Place of his Birth, and Genoa. The "firſt was only a Dominican Monk. The ſecond was raiſed to the Archbiſhopric of Genoa. "All Authors, and the Dominicans, among others, "have conſtantly diſtinguiſhed the Names, the Country, and the Works, of Theſe two Writers. This "is carefully obſerved, by Leandro Alberti, in his "Deſcription della riviera de Genoua di Ponente. "James Bracelli, a Genoeſe, who wrote in the Year "1431, and is Author of a little Book, De claris "Genuenſibus, makes no mention, there, of Jacobus "de Voragine, becauſe he was not of Genoa; but "he ſpeaks, in it, with Praiſe of Joannes Balbus, "the Author of the Catholicon, to whom he would "not have failed to have given the Stile of Archbiſhop of Genoa, if he had enjoyed it, as he muſt "have done, according to the Opinion of Thoſe, "who confound him with Jacobus de Voragine."

(4) From the learned Mr de la Monnoie.

MULTIPLICATION of Joannes de Janua into ſeveral Authors.

Simler is ſo far from confounding two Authors in one, that, on the contrary, he has made three of one; for he ſpeaks of Joannes de Janua, of Joannes Januenſis, and of Joannes Balbus, as of three different Authors (5). He is farther miſtaken, in writing Baldus for Balbus, a Fault, which Quenſtedt followed, in his Treatiſe of the Country of Illuſtrious Men (6). Martinius alſo gives into This Fault of Multiplication. It is in the Catalogue of the Dictionaries he conſulted to make his own; at the beginning of his Lexicon Philologicum, printed at Bremen, in 1623, and afterward at Francfort, in 1655, and reprinted at Utrecht, in the Year 1697. He mentions the Catholicon, which was finiſhed the Day of the Nones of March 1286, and quotes the very Words, at the end of the Dictionary of Joannes de Janua. Immediately after, he names a Summa quæ vocatur Catholicon, publiſhed by Brother John de Janua, and printed at Venice, in 1487. It is plain, that they are only two different Editions of one and the ſame Book, and that the firſt ought no leſs to be aſcribed to John de Janua, than the ſecond. Martinius would not have failed doing it, had he known what is in the Article Janua, in the Catholicon, finiſhed in 1286.

(5) Epitom. Bibliath. Generi.

(6) Pag. 307.

OF the Book, entituled Catholicon.

I find it is not yet rightly agreed, who was the Author of the Dictionary, firſt entitled Catholicon. Mr du Cange aſcribes it to our John de Janua, and ſays, that neither Papias nor Ugutio, who had made ſome Compilations before, uſed This Title (7): But Borrichius, who wrote afterwards, and had ſeen Mr du Cange's Preface, undertakes to maintain, nevertheleſs, that Papias is the Author of the Catholicon, and that he finiſhed That Work, in the Year 1286 (8). He had found it affirmed in That Preface, that Papias did not flouriſh in the Year 1200, as Trithemius will have it, but in 1053, as the Chronicle of Albericus juſtifies; and yet he lays it down, as a certain Fact, that Papias finiſhed his Dictionary, in 1286. He ought either to have refuted Mr du Cange, or, at leaſt, to have obſerved, that he was miſtaken. This Proceding, and Silence, ſerve only to puzzle the Reader. However, it is a ſtrong Preſumption againſt Borrichius, to ſee, that he places the Concluſion of Papias's Dictionary exactly in the ſame Year, 1286, that Joannes de Janua finiſhed his Catholicon. The above-quoted Memorial aſſures me, that Papias did not write the Catholicon, which was finiſhed in 1286, and that John Balbi is the firſt, who made uſe of the Word Catholicon for the Title of a Dictionary.

(7) Du Cange, Præfat. Gloſſ. Lat.

(8) Borr. Append. Lexicis Cellarii & L. at the end of his Anal. ad Cogit. Ling. L. 1692.

It was a long time ago, that Barthius, without having conſulted the Manuſcript Chronicle of Albericus, judged, that Papias was more ancient, than he was ſuppoſed to be. Platina delivers it for certain, that he lived in the Time of Pope Innocent III; that is, in the beginning of the XIIIth Century, which agrees with Trithemius. Borrichius places him at the end of the XIIIth Century. But Barthius, in the third Chapter of the third Book of his Adverſaria, placed him under the Reign of Henry II (9), becauſe This Author carries the Liſt, which he gives, under the Word Ætas, of all the Princes of the paſt Age, no farther than Henry, whom he calls minorem, which he would not have done, if there had already

THE of Pap accord Barth

THE gliſh the C nuator Comp ons.

(9) H in the 1224 B. ii. Reg to fr. mac.

Digitized by Google

already been more than two Emperors of the Name of Henry. It is true, that Barthius raiſes a Suſpicion, which, generally ſpeaking, is juſtified by the prodigious Neglect of Thoſe, who continue, or enlarge, Compilations. This is, that, perhaps, Papias left the Article Ætas juſt as he found it in ſome old Dictionary, without continuing the Catalogue down to his own Time. Thus we find, in the Chronicle of the Abbot of Urſperg, in one Place, that the Author was at Rome, in the Year 1102 (10); in another, that he was very young, in minori ætate, in the Year 1198, and in another, that he was made an Abbot, in the Year 1215. If the Continuator had cleared up the Matter, with reſpect to his Additions, we ſhould not have met with ſo much Confuſion.

(10) See Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. lib. 2. cap. 57. and Bellarm. de Script. Eccleſ. p. 335. falſly accuſed by Zeiller, de Hiſtor. pag. 155. of having believed the Number 1102 to be falſified.

BALDUS, a famous Civilian in the XIVth Century, was the Son of Francis Ubaldus [A], a Phyſician of Perugia. He ſtudied under Bartolus, and, being but fifteen Years of Age, he propoſed ſuch a puzzling Objection to him, that he required time to conſider of it; and the Anſwer to it was not given till the next Day. So that thoſe, who ſay, Baldus began his Studies very late, are groſsly deceived [B]. A little after his promotion to the Degree of Doctor, he maintained ſome Theſes, which Bartolus oppoſed for five Hours together, without being able to obtain the Victory. He often pleaded Cauſes againſt Bartolus, and there aroſe ſuch an Emulation between them, as ſoon degenerated into Hatred. This cannot be doubted, when we ſee, that Baldus made it his endeavour to eclipſe the Reputation of his Maſter. What has been ſaid, that, upon conſulting the Pandects of Piſa, on occaſion of a Diſpute which they had, concerning the reading of a Law, Baldus was convicted of ſeveral Falſifications, and that he was puniſhed for them in an ignominious manner, ought to paſs only for a Fable [C]. He taught at Perugia, and Cardinal de Beaufort was his Scholar there, who was afterwards Pope Gregory XI. He was called to Padua about the Year 1378; but left That Univerſity, when Galeazzo Viſconti, deſigning to re-eſtabliſh That of Pavia, drew thither, by the power of his Money, the ableſt Profeſſors

[A] He was the Son of Francis Ubaldus.] Obſerve, then, that Baldus is the Chriſtian Name of This Civilian, and Ubaldus his Sirname. Moreri calls him, beſides, Peter; which is confounding the elder Brother with the younger. Petrus Ubaldus was the third Son of the Phyſician Franciſcus Ubaldus, and was a good Civilian. And ſo was his Brother Angelus Ubaldus. See Pancirollus, in the ſeventieth, and following Chapters, of the ſecond Book De claris Legum Interpretibus.

[B] Thoſe, who ſay, Baldus began his Studies very late, are groſsly deceived.] It is reported, that he was forty Years of Age, when he began to ſtudy the Civil Law, and that Bartolus having ſaid to him, tarde veniſti Balde. —— You come late Baldus. Baldus anſwered him, citius recedam. —— I ſhall return the ſooner (1). La Mothe le Vayer has lengthened Bartolus's Speech, and makes him ſay, You come late, Baldus, you will be an Advocate in the other World. Sero venis Balde, eris advocatus in alio ſæculo. I do not believe, that, if Bartolus ſaid this, he intended any Alluſion to Cato's Jeſt. That Cenſor, to deride Iſocrates's School, ſaid, That the Scholars grew old in it, that they might exerciſe their Eloquence in Hell, at the Bar of Minos (2). This Story, about Baldus, has no Foundation. Pancirollus proves, that, at the Age of fifteen Years, he ſtarted a very puzzling Objection to the famous Bartolus; that, at the Age of ſeventeen Years, he read public Lectures: and that, four Years after, he wrote a Book de Pactis, and another de Conſtituto (3). Theſe are the words of that Writer: "Opinioni "Bartoli adeo argutè contradixit, ut ille argumenti "acumine perterritus reſpondere non potuerit, com- "mendatoque juvene tempus ad ſolvendum petiit, & "ſequenti mane reſpondit. Deinde 17 annum in- "greſſus ſolenni interpretatione difficillimam legem "publicè Baldus explicuit, unde fabuloſum eſt quod "vulgò fertur, Baldum quadragenarium ad legum "ſtudia acceſſiſſe (4). —— He objected ſo ingeniouſly "to the Opinion of Bartolus, that he was ſurprized "with the Force of the Argument, and could not ſolve "it, but, commending his young Opponent, deſired ſome "time to anſwer his Objection, which he accordingly "did the next Day. Afterwards, upon entring into "his ſeventeenth Year, Baldus explained a very diffi- "cult Law in a ſolemn Lecture, whence That common "Report muſt be fabulous, that Baldus was Forty "Years old, when he firſt began his Studies on the "Civil Law." The Civilian Zaſius reports the ſame Story on the Credit of Paul Citadin; but Tiraquellus rejects it as a Fable (5). "Adducerem, ſays he (6), "quod de Baldo vulgo dicitur —— niſi ſcirem hæc "eſſe commentitia & prorſus fabuloſa, ut ex iis con- "ſtat quæ ſupra diximus. —— I ſhould mention what "is commonly reported of Baldus, —— if I did not "know it to be only an Invention, and a Fable, as "appears from what I have already ſaid." Mr Baillet obſerves, that la Mothe la Vayer, and Father Bartoli, ſeem to have adopted This Opinion, as of a Fact well atteſted, — and not a Story made at random. He refers to Preſident Tiraquellus, and to the eighth Chapter of the Elogies of Paulus Jovius (7). He cites la Mothe le Vayer, Letter 32, pag. 420, and Bartoli, Car. Hom. lit. pag. 248. I never read, that Tiraquellus was Preſident. Paulus Jovius obſerves, that Baldus's Parts were not only forward, but laſting: "Præcoci ingenio pene puer, non ad optimam "modo frugem, ſed rariſſimo etiam naturæ dono ad "longam ſenectutem pervenit (8). —— A Youth of "almoſt too early a Wit, and which yet not only pro- "duced excellent Fruit, but alſo, by an uncommon "Gift of Nature, continued even to a good old Age.

[C] *What is ſaid ------- that he was convicted of ſeveral Falſifications, and puniſhed for them ----- ought to paſs only for a Fable.] Some ſay, the Diſgrace, which he received, obliged him to exile himſelf, and to ſay, as Scipio Africanus did, that his ungrateful Country ſhould not ſupply him with a Grave: Publicè tradutum patria exceſſiſſe ferunt, & abeuntem Scipionis Africani verba protuliſſe, ingrata patria ne oſſa quidem mea habebis, ac in voluntario exilio ſenem defunctum fuiſſe (9). Others ſay, that he was condemned to be marked with a hot Iron on the Forehead, and that Bartolus protected him. Jaſon had heard of it; but he was very much in the wrong to immortalize This Hear-ſay in his Works. Such Reports ſhould never be ſo far honoured, but in theſe two Caſes; the one, when they are extreamly probable; and the other, when they are to be branded with a Note of Reprobation; that is, refuted and hiſſed at. In this latter caſe, it is very uſeful to mention ſuch Traditions, becauſe nothing is more proper to make one ſuſpect the Reports of Fame, than to ſhew the fooliſh and ridiculous Credulity of foregoing Ages. To prove demonſtratively, that Jaſon's Hear-ſay is a Fable, there needs no other reaſon than this. Jaſon knew it only by Hear-ſay; if the thing had been true, he would have read it in an hundred Places. Baldus lived a very long time with great Honour: He wrote Books; he confuted whom he thought fit; he had ſome formidable Opponents and Adverſaries. We may be perfectly aſſured, that, if he could have been reproached with an Infamy, it would have been done in more than one Book. It is there, that Jaſon, and all the World, would have learned This Diſgrace. It is the Misfortune of learned Men, who make themſelves eminent, and write much, that, ſooner or later, they will be publickly reproached with the leaſt Faults of their Youth. If other Authors become their Enemies, they muſt expect ſatirical Romances, rather than the Diſcretion of an Adverſary. Thus Pancirollus ſhould have apologized for Baldus; he ſhould have expreſsly

(1) Pancirol. de claris Legum Interpret. l. 2, cap. 70, pag. 201.

(2) Plut. in Catone, p. 350.

(3) Pancirollus, ubi ſupra, p. 203.

(4) Ibid. p. 200, 201.

(5) Zaſius, apud Tiraquell. de Jure Primigen. Præf. n. 206.

(6) Tiraquel. ibid.

(7) Baillet's Famous Children, pag. 420.

(8) To 86 Years of Age.

* One Falſification related to the Law Creditor, the firſt of the Digeſt de diſtractione Pignorum; in which, they ſay, he was proved to have ſuppreſſed an n. Bartolus defended Baldus, not by denying the Fact, but by alledging, in his Favour, the Law Ad Beſtias, 31ſt of the Digeſt de Pœnis, which qualifies the Rigour of the Law, where the Offender is, otherwiſe, of great Merit. REMARK.

(9) Pancirol. ibid. p. 201.

IN WHAT manner an Author ought to report a Hear-ſay.

Digitized by Google

sors he could meet with. A quick Repartee, which Baldus made, the first time he appeared in the College of Pavia, caused him to be admired [D]. He had a formidable Colleague there, whose Name was Philip Cassolus. This was a Man of an excellent Memory, and great Parts; but the good Opinion he had of his own sufficiency having put him upon giving a Challenge, he was overcome, and his Glory sacrificed to That of Baldus [E]. The Death of Philip did not free his Competitor from trouble; for there was such a warm Emulation between the Professor, who succeeded him, and Baldus, that they introduced the shameful and pernicious Custom of bribing Auditors by Supplications. Baldus raised a great Fortune [F]. He composed a great many Books, and there is no probability of his having studied but two Hours in a Day [G]. He must not be produced as an Instance of an Author without Faults; had he only had That of contradicting himself, he would fall very short of Perfection; but he had a great many others [H]. The Excuses he made for his Contradictions deserve to be considered [I]. He died the Twenty eighth of expressly, and openly, made use of this Observation, and not have only said; " Quæ omnia falsa esse & " alii potius evenisse non dubito, cum nulla de hoc " certa extet auctoritas, & eum Ticini decessisse con-

(10) Pancirol. ibid. pag. 202. " stet (10). All which I conclude to be false, and rather to have happened to some other Person, since we find no good Authority for it, and are certain, that he died at Pavia."

[D] A quick Repartee, which Baldus made - - - - - caused him to be admired.] He was of a small size, so that, as soon as he appeared in the Auditory, they cried out, Minuit præsentia famam, - - - His Presence lessens his Fame. He answered, without altering his Countenance, Augebit cætera virtus, - - - - Virtue will enlarge every Thing else. Pancirollus adds, Quo
(11) Ibid. pag. 203. dicto omnibus sui admirationem injecit (11). —— Which Reply made him much admired by all.

[E] The Glory of Cassolus was sacrificed to That of Baldus.] Cassolus had engaged himself to answer, upon the Spot, all Questions proposed to him concerning last Wills. The Day and Hour were appointed to make good this Challenge. The Assembly was numerous: Baldus stood up, and proposed a Question, which Cassolus could not answer. Baldus was obliged to shew the Law in Question. Judge whether the Challenger was mortified. " Philippus, qui, ut " memoriâ cæteris antecellebat, ita superbo titulo " Doctorum Doctor vocabatur, ingenio fretus, se ex " omnibus ultimarum voluntatum quæstionibus ex " tempore responsurum professus est. Statutâ ad " dicendum die, cum in magnâ expectatione esset, " surgens Baldus interrogavit, Ubi in jure cautum " reperiretur, parem non esse ejus, qui non vult, " ei, qui non potest, conditionem. Ad primam in- " terrogationem hæsitante Philippo, cum Baldus de " proposita quæstione legem ostendisset, magnam
(12) Id. ib. " gloriam retulit (12). —— Philip, who, as he excelled all others in Memory, so also was called by the proud Title of Doctor of Doctors, depending upon his Abilities, undertook to satisfy extempore all Questions concerning last Wills. The Day appointed being come, and great Expectation raised, Baldus, standing up, asked, Where it was, that the Civil Law had provided, that the Case of him, who would not, should be esteemed quite different from That of him who could not. Philip being puzzled at the first proposing the Question, Baldus produced the Law required, and gained great Glory."

[F] Baldus raised a great Fortune.] The Opinions he gave only on the Point of Substitution, brought him in above Fifteen thousand Crowns: " De jure " respondendo immensam pecuniam coëgit, qui ex " solis substitutionum speciebus plus quindecim millia " aureorum lucratus fuisse traditur. Aliunde præ- " tereà ex innumeris aliarum successionum crimi- " numque causis & contractibus peramplas opes
(13) Ibid. pag. 204. " accumulavit (13). —— He got a prodigious Sum of Money by his Practice in Law, so that one only Article of Substitutions is said to have procured him Fifteen thousand Crowns. Besides innumerable Causes of other Successions, and criminal ones, and Contracts, by which he heaped up immense Riches." He had several Lands, and lived in a pleasant Country-House near Pavia, from whence he came on his
(14) Pag. 203. Mule to the Auditory. Pancirollus adds (14), Domus vetustate vitiata adhuc hodie pro re memoranda ostentatur. - - - - - The Ruins of the House are still shewn as a Curiosity.

[G] There is no probability of his having studied but two Hours in a Day.] Pancirollus, confuting this, relates, among other Things, that Baldus, going a Journey, which hindered him from spending so much of his Time in reading, as he was used to do, said, At every Step of my Horse's Foot, I lose a Law out of my Head. — Quot gradus equus ambulabat, tot leges sibi excidere querebatur (15). It is a Sign he had acquired, (15) Ibid. and still retained his Knowledge, by much reading.

[H] But he has a great many Faults.] He advances a thousand Things singular, and contrary to the Opinion of other Civilians, and without quoting any Law: they are only his own Fancies: He quotes Laws nothing at all to the Purpose: he treats of many things quite out of their Order: he is too barren on the essential Part, and too prolix on the useless: He answers Questions no Body ever asked: and answers nothing to what every Body asks: He confounds himself by his own Subtilties, and gives himself too much liberty: The Vivacity of his Wit is the Cause of the want of Uniformity in his Opinions. " Cum " parum sibi constans sæpenumero contrarius reperia- " tur, id tamen non levitate, sed ingenii subtilitate " evenisse Paulus Castrensis autumat (16). —— His (16) Ibid. " Inconsistencies, and very often downright Contra- pag. 203. " dictions, Paulus Castrensis thinks to be owing not to the Levity, but Subtilty, of his Parts." Those, who have a quick Imagination, have commonly but a short Memory; and this is the Reason why they do not remember, when they consider a Question in one view, that formerly they maintained it in another sense. They contradict themselves without knowing it. Add to this, that a subtle Wit easily invents Arguments to prove and disprove the same things. But it is a great Defect not to be capable of suspending the Effects of This Subtilty, till the Mind is perfectly settled.

[I] The Excuses he made for his Contradictions deserve to be considered.] He said, that our Understanding alters, and that he therefore argues one Day after one manner, and another Day after another. I believe he reserved to himself, in petto, the Privilege, which he attributed to Legislators. The Bishop of Pavia asked, one Day, why the Laws were so changeable; Baldus answered him, that the same things become either lawful, or unlawful, according to the Times. In time of War some things are permitted, which are forbid in time of Peace: Therefore Justice enjoins all things, which become proper to the Times; such a Conduct is proportioned to the present Circumstances, therefore it is just. Those, who make Laws, imitate Physicians, who permit, order, and forbid, the same things, according to Times and Seasons; these are what they observe. Ipse quoque se excusat, quòd Intellectus, qui ratiocinatur, non semper sit idem, sed varius; & Episcopo Ticinensi sæpè interroganti, cur toties Leges mutarentur, respondit, flagrante bello permittitur, quod pacis tempore non licet, id ita justum esse, quod cuique suo tempore expedit, exemplo enim medicorum tempora à legum latoribus dicebat observari (17). This was Baldus's An- (17) Ibid. swer; and This is either implicitly, or explicitly, the Principle, on which Authors argue, who confute themselves, when they are to dispute against two sorts of Enemies. This Proposition is true and good, this Day, while I dispute against Pelagius; in a Year's Time it shall not be so, if I am to dispute against Calvin. See what has been said, above, concerning the Contradictions of Advocates, and the Apology Cicero makes for them (18). I remember to have read, that certain Controvertists, not being able to deny, but that the Church commands certain things, which

(18) In the Remarks [B] and [C] of the Article ANTONY (MARC) the Orator.

Digitized by Google

of April 1400 [K]. His Death was ſomething Tragical: He had a little Dog, which he loved very much, and plaid with, and kiſſed very often. In one of theſe Careſſes he was bit by the Lip, and the Dog, being mad at that time, communicated a ſubtle Poiſon to the Body of Baldus, which had no effect for a long time; but at laſt it produced the Hydrophobia, or Dread of Liquids, and cauſed an incurable Diſtemper (a). Baldus lived Seventy ſix Years (b), and left two Sons, who proved good Civilians (c). Zenobius, the Eldeſt, was Biſhop of Tiferno (d).

(a) Taken from Pancirollus de claris Leg. Interp. l. 2. c. 70, pag. 201, & ſeq.

(b) P. Jovius, Elog. cap. 8, pag. 27.

(c) Pancirol. ibid. p. 203.

(d) Ibid.

which do not ſeem agreeable either to Scripture, or to the Primitive Church, have maintained, that they were nevertheleſs juſt and true, becauſe the Holy Spirit, who guides the Church, inſpires her in every Age with ſuch Interpretations, as are moſt proper for the good of Souls. "Scripturas eſſe ad tempus adaptatas & variè intellectas, ita ut uno tempore ſecundum currentem univerſalem ritum exponerentur, mutato ritu iterum ſententia mutaretur (19). Non eſt mirum ſi praxis Eccleſiæ uno tempore interpretatur Scripturam uno modo, alio tempore alio; nam intellectus currit cum praxi (20). —— That the Scriptures are adapted to the Times, and to be variouſly underſtood, ſo that they ſhall be explained at one time, according to the Univerſal Uſage then prevailing; if this Uſage comes to alter, ſo muſt the Interpretation. ------ It is no wonder if the Practice of the Church interprets the Scripture at one time in one way, at another time in another; for the Underſtanding goes along with the Practice." I love this plain dealing.

(19) Nicolaus Cuſanus, Epiſt. 2. ad Bohemos.

(20) Idem, Epiſt. 7.

[K] He died the Twenty eighth of April, 1400.] His Epitaph confirms it; ſo that Bellarmin is deceived in placing the Death of Baldus in the Year 1400 (21). Trithemius, who placed it in the Year 1423, aſſerted a Falſehood; but Mr Moreri, who ſaid, that, according to Trithemius, the Death of Baldus ought to be placed in the Year 1423, was not in the wrong. The Dutch Edition of his Dictionary ought not to have made the Correction of 1403, inſtead of 1423.

(21) Bellarm. Script. Eccleſ. pag. 382.

BALDUS (JAMES), one of the beſt Latin Poets Germany produced in the XVIIth Century, was born at Enſiſheim, in 1603. He turned Jeſuit in the Year 1624. He taught Rhetoric and Literature for ſix Years; he was a Preacher many Years, and preached alſo at the Court of the Elector of Bavaria, and acquired an extraordinay Reputation by his Poems. There were none, even among the Proteſtants themſelves, but praiſed them in a ſingular manner [A]. One of his laſt Works was his Urania victrix, ſeu Animæ Chriſtianæ Certamina adverſus illecebras quinque ſenſuum corporis ſui. Pope Alexander VII was ſo pleaſed with it, that he ſent his Medal in Gold to the Author. Father Baldus conſecrated it to the Bleſſed Virgin [B]. Some Senators of Nuremberg diſputed which of them ſhould have his Pen [C], and it is ſaid, that He, to whoſe ſhare it fell, kept it in a Silver Caſe. This Poet died at Neubourg the Ninth of Auguſt, 1668. His Poetry is of a miſcellaneous kind; and conſiſts of Panegyrics, Treatiſes of Morality, Pieces for the Stage [D], Pieces of Devotion, Sylvæ, Odes, &c (a).

(a) Taken from Sotuel, Biblioth. Script. Soc. Jeſ. p. 356.

[A] Even the Proteſtants ------- praiſed his Poems in a ſingular Manner.] Father Southwell expreſſes himſelf upon this, in theſe terms: "Ipſis Acatholicis etiam adeo placuerunt, ut publico typo eum Horatium Germanum nominare non dubitarint. ------ The Non-Catholics were ſo pleaſed with them, that they did not ſcruple to name him, in print, the German Horace." If I am not miſtaken, this is grounded on a Letter of Barlæus. Father Baldus, having ſeen the Verſes Barlæus had wrote in Praiſe of the Duke of Bavaria, wrote a very obliging Letter to him, and ſent him a Volume of his Poems. Barlæus returned him Thanks for it, with great Complements, and ſaid to him, among other things: "Reſtituiſti nobis lyram neglectam diu & intermiſſam, ut jam merito vocari poſſis lyricorum ſcriptor, aut potius Bojorum fidicen lyræ, ut ad Horatii verba alludam (1). ------- You have reſtored the Lyre a long time neglected and unſtrung, ſo that you may now be juſtly called a Lyric Writer, or rather Maſter of the Bavarian Lyre, that I may allude to the Words of Horace." This Letter was written the firſt of March, 1644. The Jeſuit was then Rector of the College of Munich (2).

(1) See the 467*th Letter of* Barlæus, pag. 911. See alſo the 487*th, written to the ſame* Baldus.

(2) See the Table of Barlæus's Letters.

[B] He conſecrated a Medal of Alexander VII to the Bleſſed Virgin.] This is what Southwell ſays of it. "Hanc verò Jacobus Deiparæ Virgini anathema appendit, ut palam faceret cui Palladi ipſe ſuos labores conſecraret (3). ----- This Medal, James conſecrated to the Virgin Mother of Chriſt, that it might ſhew who was his Minerva, and Patroneſs of all his Labours."

(3) Sotuel, Biblioth. Soc. Jeſ. pag. 356.

[C] Some Senators of Nuremberg diſputed which of them ſhould have his Pen.] "I do not know, ſays Mr Baillet (4), whether he, who preſerved it in a fine ſilver Caſe, made on purpoſe for it, did not commit a Sacrilege; becauſe it ſeems to me, that Father Baldus had conſecrated it to the Holy Virgin, and that his Intention was, that it ſhould be hung up on one of her Images, or over one of her Altars, as Lipſius had formerly done in a like Fit of Devotion."

(4) Judgm. on the Poets, Tom. 5. n. 1507, pag. 42.

[D] His Poetry --- conſiſts of Pieces for the Stage.] There is one of them, which bears this Title: Poëſis Oſca, ſive Drama Georgicum de Belli malis & Pacis bonis carmine antiquo, Attellano, Oſco, Caſco (5). How ruſtic ſoever this Piece, and the Oſque and Caſque Gibberiſh, in which it was compoſed, may ſeem, yet I do not queſtion, but that it coſt the Author both more Time and Wit, than a grave Piece in good Latin. We muſt be cautious therefore of believing, that it was printed at Munich, in the Year 1617, as Father Southwell aſſerts. James Baldus was not capable of executing ſuch an Undertaking at the Age of fourteen Years.

(5) Compare this with the Dialogue of Mariangelus Accursius which I have mentioned in the Remark [F] of his Article.

BALDUS (a) (BERNARDIN), Abbot of Guaſtalla, born at Urbino, in the Year 1553, was one of the moſt learned Men of his time. He made ſuch great Progreſs under his firſt Tutors, that he found himſelf able to tranſlate the Phænomena of Aratus into Italian Verſe, while he was yet but a young Scholar. His Father, perceiving by theſe early Trials, that he had a very promiſing Son, ſent him to Padua in the Year 1573 [A]. Bernardin ſtudied Homer there under Emanuel Margunius (b), and

(a) His Great Great Grand-Father left the Name of Cantagallina, an illuſtrious Family of Perugia, from which he was deſcended, and took this. Fabr. Scharloncin. See below, Citation (c).

(b) He was of Candia, and Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue at Padua.

[A] His Father, perceiving his Capacity, by theſe early Trials ----- ſent him to Padua.] Correct, by this, a Fault of Nicius Erythræus. I am ſure he had no Intention to leſſen the Fame of our Baldus in any thing, and yet he did leſſen it very much; but it was done inadvertently, and for want of obſerving the order of Time. He has ſaid, that after the Lectures of Margunius (1), Baldus thought himſelf ſufficiently

(1) Not Margranius, as it is in Erythræus.

Digitized by Google

and, by himself, almost all the other Greek Poets, and understood them very well. He composed a Book at Padua concerning Machines of War (c), which made his Name fly beyond the Alps, and increased his desire of understanding French and High Dutch; for he thought it was a piece of good Manners to learn the Language of those, whose Affection he had acquired. He became Master of those two Languages with a great deal of Ease. He was forced to leave Padua on account of the Plague, and, being returned to Urbino, he applied himself for five Years to Frederic Commandino, an excellent Professor of Mathematics, and learned of him all the parts of That Science. He was extremely sorry for the Death of That learned Man; and, having applied himself to write his Life, this drew him into a design to write those of all the Mathematicians. He laboured twelve Years about it. The Commentaries, which he published in 1582, on Aristotle's Mechanics, discovered his Capacity in that sort of Knowledge. To unbend his Mind in those difficult Studies, he wrote a Poem in his Mother-Tongue concerning the Art of Navigation. Ferdinand de Gonzague, Prince of Molfetta, and Lord of Guastalla, being a great Lover of Mathematics, would have our Baldus near him. In That Court he began to write on Vitruvius, and composed the Book, De verborum Vitruvianorum significatione. A Fit of Sickness having hindred him from taking a Voyage into Spain with his Master, he employed the leisure Time, the absence of Ferdinand de Gonzague gave him, in writing a very Methodical Treatise of the Court (d), and several other Works [B]. He was made Abbot of Guastalla in 1586, without ever once asking it; and, from that time, he applied himself wholly to the Study of the Canon-Law, the Fathers, and Councils, and the Oriental Languages, without excepting the Arabic [C]. Having composed five Books, De nova Gnomonice, in the Year 1595, he translated, in the following Year, the Chaldee Paraphrase on the Pentateuch, and enlarged it with Commentaries; after which he translated the Book of Job, and the Lamentations of Jeremiah, from the Hebrew, and added Notes to them. He spent some spare Hours in explaining a Plate, which is at Eugubio [D], on which there are some old Tuscan Inscriptions. He began sufficiently able to translate some Greek Poems into his Mother-Tongue: "Apud quem tantum profecit, "ut eo duce & cereum quodammodo lucente obscu- "rissima Græcorum quorundam poëtarum loca pene- "traverit - - - - - Quamobrem eâ est incensus animi "alacritate atque fiduciâ, ut ausus sit poëmata Græca "in nostrum sermonem convertere (2). —— Under "whom he made such Proficiency, that, by his Instruc- "tion, and, as it were, shewing a Light, he was able "to understand the most difficult Passages of certain "Greek Poets —— This gave him so much Spirit "and Courage, as to attempt the Translation of some "Greek Poems into our Language." He had translated a Poem of Aratus before he went to Padua.

(c) De Tormentis Bellicis & eorum inventoribus.

(d) Libros sex de Aulâ eruditissimo methodo analyticâ conscripsit. Scharloncinus. See the following Citation.

(2) Nic. Erythr. Pinac. I. pag. 4.

[B] He wrote several other Works.] This Remark shall only contain the Titles of some of our Baldus's Writings; I mean those, which have not been mentioned in the Text of this Article, whether the Author composed them during his Master's Voyage, or at any other time. I say, then, that he translated Heronem de Automatis & Balistis; the Paralipomena of Quintus Calaber, and the Poem of Musæus; and wrote a Book of Mathematical Paradoxes; another, de Scamillis imparibus Vitruvii; another, de Firmamento & Aquis; another on the Description of the Temple by Ezekiel; another, De Historiæ scribendæ Legibus; another, of the Antiquities of Guastalla; the Life of Frederic, and that of Gui Ubaldus, Dukes of Urbino; Oeconomia Tropologica in S. Matthæum; several Latin and Italian Poems, among which That, intituled Deiphobe, is an Imitation of the Cassandra of Lycophron. The following Remarks will give the Title of some of his other Books. I shall observe here, that Nicius Erythræus has reason to say, that the Description of the Temple is a very difficult Matter, but he was in the wrong to take Jeremiah for Ezekiel. "Jerosolymitani templi —— descriptionem, says he (3), "per Hieremiam literis consignatam & traditam, rem "involutam & multis difficultatibus obsessam, evolvit, "illustravit, atque hominum intelligentiæ aperuit. — "The Description of the Temple of Jerusalem, left us, "in writing, by Jeremiah, a Subject obscured and at- "tended with many Difficulties, he cleared and illu- "strated, and made universally intelligible."

(3) Id. ib.

[C] He applied to the Study of the Oriental Languages, without excepting the Arabic.] He studied it at Rome, with John Baptist Raimondi, and also the Sclavonian Tongue, with so much Application, that he was almost a Stranger to all manner of News. Romæ dum viveret fere nescivit quid gereretur in aulis: Arabicæ enim linguæ cum Jo. Baptista Raimondo diligentissime studuit, & arcana industria Sclavonicæ, quam perfectè callebat (4). He translated the Geographical Garden of an anonymous Author out of Arabic, and composed a Dictionary of that Language. He believed, that this unknown Author lived towards the end of the Xth Century. If Marc Velserus had lived, he would have caused the Translation of that Geographical Work, and the other Writings of Baldus, to be printed (5).

(4) Fabritius Scharloncinus in ejus vita.

(5) Id. ib.

[D] He took paint in the explaining of a Plate, which is at Eugubio.] Schoockius, having but a confused Notion of this Work of Bernardin Baldus, ascribed another to him, which is none of his. "E sterquilinio "Anniano Bernardinus Baldus nuper collegit Antiqui- "tates Ethruscas anno 1637. Florentiæ evulgando "volumen typis perquam elegantibus cujus hæc in- "scriptio; Ethruscarum antiquitatum fragmenta qui- "bus urbis Romæ aliarumque gentium primordia, "mores & res gestæ indicantur, à Curtio Inghira- "mio reperta Scornelli prope Vulterram anno salutis "MDCXXXVII. Ethrusco vero CIↃCIↃCIↃCCCCXCV "(6). — Bernardin Baldus lately collected the Antiqui- "ties of Tuscany, out of some Rubbish at Annium, "in the Year 1637, and published a Volume at "Florence, in a very neat Character, with this Title; "Some Fragments of the Antiquities of Tuscany, "shewing the Origin of the City of Rome, and of "other States, together with their Customs and "Transactions, found by Curtius Ingharamius, at "Scornelli, near Volterra, in the Year of Christ, 1637, "of Tuscany, 3495." How could a Man, who knew that Baldus died in the Year 1617, commit such a Mistake? What is the more surprizing, is, that the same Schoockius, after speaking in this Manner, at the Sixty seventh Page, speaks, as he ought to do, in the Two hundred and seventeenth Page. "Si- "mili ratione egit Bernardinus Baldus, vir cætero- "quin longè doctissimus, annis abhinc ferme quin- "quaginta evulgando suam quasi divinationem in ta- "bulam Æneam Eugubinam linguâ Etruscâ veteri "perscriptam, simul abutendo operâ Marci Velseri "viri cæteroquin judiciosissimi (7). —— Such was "also the Conduct of Bernardin Baldus, otherwise ex- "tremely learned, who, about fifty Years ago, upon "publishing his Conjecture upon a Copper-Plate, en- "graved in the old Tuscan Language, at the same "time reflected upon the Work of Marcus Velserus, a "Man otherwise very judicious." Why then did he not correct his Mistake? Perhaps he had forgot it, as it happens but too often to those, who are fond of writing much. They can hardly maintain that Character, without copying, in haste, whatsoever they find in all manner of Books. See what Scharlanci-

(6) Schoockius de Fabula Hamelensi, p. 67.

(7) Ibid. pag. 217.

nus

Digitized by Google

began a very great Work in the Year 1603, I mean A Deſcription of the World. His Plan was no leſs Hiſtorical than Geographical, and extended to the leaſt Boroughs of which the Modern Writers have ſaid any thing. He finiſhed the whole Work, as to the Matter [E], but put only part of it in Order. He died the Twelfth of October 1617, after having laboured under a great Rheum for forty Days (e) [F]. He was extremely laborious [G], without Ambition, or Vain-glory, always ready to excuſe other Mens Faults, which he grounded on a very good Reaſon [H]; very devout, not only for a Mathematician, but alſo for a Churchman [I].

(e) Taken from a Letter of Fabricius Scharloncinus ad illuſtriſſimum & reverendiſſimum dominum Lælium Ruinum, Epiſcopum Bilneoregienſem, ex-Nuntium Apoſtolicum ad Poloniæ regem. See alſo Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. I. pag. 4. and the Funeral Orat on of Baldus, by Marc Ant. Virgilius, not printed in 1607, as Mr Teiſſier ſays, Bibl. p. 229, but in 1617.

nus ſays concerning this Work of Baldus. " Tabulam Etruſcam Eugubinam interpretatus fuit : in " ea autem divinatione, ut ajebat, ſubciſivas unius " menſis horas conſumpſit. —— He explained a Tuſcan Plate of Eugubio ; and ſpent, in thoſe Conjectures, as he ſaid himſelf, the ſpare Hours of one Month." Our Baldus is mentioned in the new Edition of the Eponymologium of Magirus, only to let us know, that he publiſhed a Book, in the Year 1637, the very ſame that Schoockius aſcribes to him. Is not this an admirable Choice ?

[E] He finiſhed the Deſcription of the World, as to the Matter.] Theſe are the Words of his Hiſtorian. " Totum opus ad umbilicum perduxit : non digeſſit " tamen univerſum, quatuor, aut, ni fallor, quinque " tantum tomi fuerunt ordine alphabetico diſpoſiti : " ſupereſſent ſeptem aut octo diſponendi, quantum " ex chartarum & faſciculorum mole conjicere licet. " —— He brought the whole Work to Perfection ; but had not adjuſted, I think, above four or five Volumes of it in alphabetical Order ; there might be about ſeven or eight more to be digeſted, as near as one could gueſs from the Quantity and Heaps of Papers." I do not believe, the Liſt, Fabricius Scharloncinus has given of our Baldus's Works, is imperfect ; but, according to the ill Cuſtom of moſt of thoſe, who give ſuch ſort of Liſts, he does not diſtinguiſh the Books, which have been printed, from thoſe, which have not (8). I have not tranſcribed the whole Liſt.

(8) See, above, the beginning of Remark [E] of the Article AUREOLUS.

[F] He died —— after having laboured under a great Rheum for forty Days.] I thought I might thus tranſlate Scharloncinus's Words: Poſteaquam dies 40 vehementi Diſtillatione vexatus fuiſſet. Voſſius underſtood a Catarrh, by Diſtillatio, and he is not in the wrong to pretend, that theſe two Words are ſynonymous. That of Rheum ſeemed to me the moſt proper ; becauſe a Catarrh ſeldom continues ſo long as forty Days. Moreri, by a great Miſtake, conſtrues this an Apoplexy of forty Days.

[G] He was extremely laborious.] He would riſe at Midnight to ſtudy, and read while he was eating. " In ſtudiis ſic aſſiduus fuit ut ſæpe & legeret & " comederet. S. Auguſtini de civitate Dei ter inter " prandium evolvit ; ſtatim à noctis meridie dum ei " vires firmiores eſſent ad lucubrandum ſurgebat " (9). —— He was ſo earneſt in his Studies, that he often both eat and read. He thrice went thro' St Auguſtin's Book de Civitate Dei, during the Times of his dining : So long as his Conſtitution held good, he roſe at Midnight to his Studies." He reckoned an Euclid, tranſlated into Arabick, one of his Books of Recreation. A prandio Euclidem Arabicè editum, vel Libellum aliquem Germanicum, aut Gallicum in manus ſumebat (10). After Dinner he uſed to take into his hand an Arabic Euclid, or ſome high Dutch or French Book. Happy are thoſe, who can take ſo much Pains, without impairing their Health.

(9) Scharloncinus in Vitâ Baldi.

(10) Id. ib.

Felices quibus iſta licent, miramur & illos,
Et noſtri miſeremur.

Happy are they whoſe Studies never tire ;
Ourſelves we pity, while we them admire.

[H] He was always ready to excuſe the Faults of others, which he grounded on a very good Reaſon.] If we knew the Inſides, ſaid he, of thoſe, we take for the beſt of Men, we ſhould find not one, but who deſerves Correction. Facile parcendum eſſe dicebat iis maxime qui in re levi impegiſſent, quoniam ſi quos cenſemus optimos, nudos conſpiceremus, nullum eorum non judicaremus multis dignum verberibus (11) : This may ſeem too far ſtretched : Perhaps it were better to keep to Cardinal Mazarin's Maxim. He ſaid, That the greateſt Men were like Beaſts for Sacrifice, which, though ever ſo nicely choſen, had always ſomething bad, when their Entrails were examined (12). I remember, on this Occaſion, a Paſſage of Father Rapin, which I thought very judicious the firſt time I read it. It is a Thought he makes uſe of, by way of Apology, for Cicero. There are, ſays he (13), certain things at the bottom of the Souls of the greateſt Men, which, if they could be perceived, would ſhew them to be as weak as others —— and often times the Reputation of thoſe, we ſo much admire, does not proceed ſo much from their Art in diſplaying their good Qualities, as from That of hiding their bad ones, and not ſuffering themſelves to be ſeen into.

A REFLEXION on hidden Faults.

(11) Id. ib.

(12) See the Preface of Mr Chanut's Memoirs.

(13) In the Compariſon of Demoſthenes with Cicero.

[I] He was very devout, not only for a Mathematician, but alſo for a Churchman.] He faſted twice a Week ; he communicated every Holy-Day (14), and was very charitable to the poor. His Mother ſaid, that, when he was but a Year old, he did not only look upon the Altars and Images with Joy, but alſo with Veneration (15). With Joy, I do not queſtion ; for it is uſual for Children to leap at the Sight of Guildings, Ornaments, and Images : but, as for Veneration, That is another thing ; they have at moſt but mechanical Motions, juſt as they are uſed. Our Baldus died well fortified with all the Sacraments of the Church, and in the Arms of Friars. Spiritum Deo reddidit Sacramentis Eccleſiæ omnibus rite munitus (16). Quemadmodum ſanctiſſime vixerat, ita etiam ſanctiſſime in complexu cucullatorum patrum extremum vitæ ſpiritum edidit (17).

(14) Thus I tranſl te die-bus ſe-is omnibus ſacrum faciebat : Which Words, perhaps, mean only, that he officiated every Holy-Day. But it cannot be denied, that what I ſay is conta ned in the Latin Words of Scharloncinus.

(15) Scharlon. ibid.

(16) Id. ib.

(17) Nic. Erythræus Pinacoth. 1, pag. 7.

BALESDENS (JOHN), Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and in the Council, was born at Paris. He was admitted into the French Academy about the Year 1647, in the room of Malleville ; and, if he had not given up his Pretenſions to Mr Corneille [A], he had ſucceeded Mainard, who died before Malleville. The Chancellor Seguier was his Mecenas (a). He publiſhed ſeveral Works, of which he was not the Author [B]. I think he lived till towards the Year 1676 (b). I have not found

(a) See The Hiſtory of the French Academy, pag. 230, 238.

(b) The State of France, in 1686, places Baleidens in the Li. of the dead Academiſts, between Conrart and des Marets : Conrart died in September, 1675.

[A] He gave up his Pretenſions to Mr Corneille.] See what the Hiſtorian of the Academy ſays of it. " Mr Corneille was afterwards received in the place " of Mr Mainard. Mr Baleſdens had alſo been pro- " poſed, and, as he had the Honour to belong to the " Chancellor, the Academy had That reſpect for it's " Protector, as to depute five of it's Members to him, " to know whether both Perſons propoſed were equal- " ly agreeable to him. The Chancellor aſſured them " he would leave the Society entirely at their Li- " berty ; but, when they began to deliberate on their " Choice, the Abbot of Ceriſy preſented them with " a Letter from Mr de Baleſdens, full of a great many " Compliments to them, and to Mr Corncille, to " whom he deſired they might give the Preference, " proteſting that he paid him this Honour, as his due, " on all Accounts. The Letter was read, and " commended by the Aſſembly : and he (1) was " afterwards received into the firſt Vacancy, which " was That of Mr de Malleville ; but I do not find " on what Day ; for, ſince that Time, the long and " frequent Indiſpoſitions of the Secretary of the Aca- " demy have left great Vacancies in the Regi- " ſters (2)."

(1) Mr Baleſdens.

(2) Pelliſſon Hiſt. de l'Acad. Franç. pag. 220, 230. Edit. 1672, in 12mo.

[B] He publiſhed ſeveral Works, of which he was not the Author.] Mr Pelliſſon gives this Liſt of all that found his Name in the Petition of the Dictionaries; and yet it ought to be there, according to the Menagiana [C]. He had lived in the College of Harcour [D].

Digitized by Google

that Baleſdens publiſhed (3). "He tranſlated the "Book entituled, The Penitent Sinner's Looking glaſs; "and, among other Manuſcripts, which he had col- "lected, he gave the following to the Public: Car- "tiludium Logicæ, ſeu Logica memorativa, vel Poë- "tica, R. Patris Thomæ Murnor, cum notis & con- "jecturis. Rudimenta cognitionis Dei & ſui, Petri "Seguierii Præſidis inſuiati. Elogia clarorum viro- "rum Joannis Papirii Maſſonis, in two Volumes. "Gregorii Turonenſis opera pia, cum Vitis Patrum ſui "temporis, in two Volumes. The Acts of the Convey- "ance of Dauphiné, made to the Crown of France. A "Treatiſe of Brandy, by Mr John Bronaut, the King's "Phyſician. He publiſhed, alſo, Æſop's Fables, cor- "rected by himſelf, in French, for the King's Inſtru- "ction, with Maxims Political and Moral." Mr de Marolles ſays, That Baleſdens gave him "ſeveral Letters "in a figurative Style, without mentioning a very "great Number of others, of which he propoſed "to make ſeveral Volumes, there was ſuch a pro- "digious Number of them (4)."

(3) Ibid. pag. 338.

(4) In his Catalogue of thoſe, who had made him Preſents of their Books.

[C] His Name ought to have been in the Petition of the Dictionaries, according to the Menagiana.] In Effect, theſe Words are found there; the firſt Sample of my Poetry, ſays Mr Menage, was the Petition of the Dictionaries. I was looking for Rhimes to finiſh it. Mr du Puy ſent me Claquedent to Rhime to Baleident (5). Mr Menage had the beſt Memory in the World; but yet he might miſtake one thing for another, even in thoſe, which perſonally concerned him. I do not believe, that he asked for the Rhime in queſtion, to finiſh his Petition of the Dictionaries; for That incomparable Satire was finiſhed before Baleſdens came into the Academy. He was not admitted before the Year 1647, or 1648; and That Petition was finiſhed about the Year 1642; I ſhall prove it from the Hiſtory of the Academy. Mr Pelliſſon relates, that Mr Menage ſuppreſſed That Petition, after he had made it: He goes on thus; "It remained above ten Years "concealed among his Papers, 'till a Perſon, who "had them all in his keeping, ſuffered himſelf to be "robbed of this, by a Perſon not unknown to us, "who ſoon gave ſeveral Copies of it (6)." Mr Pelliſſon had ſaid, in the ſame Page, That "a Printer "had lately publiſhed this Petition, in a ſmall Form, "with many Faults, and that it had ſince been more "correctly printed, in Quarto." Without doubt he means, by This more correct Impreſſion, the Edition of Mr Menage's Miſcellanea, which appeared in the Year 1652. However it be, the Year 1652 is the Date of Mr Pelliſſon's Book; and conſequently the Petition of the Dictionaries was finiſhed in 1642 (7). It might be ſaid, that, when Mr Menage was tired with keeping That Piece, which he had ſuppreſſed, and was reſolved to publiſh it himſelf, among his other Poems, he deſigned to enlarge it, by introducing the new Members of the Academy; and that, if Baleſdens is not among them, it is becauſe the Rhime, which Mr du Puy ſent, did not pleaſe, or was too difficult to come in there. Upon this Suppoſition, Mr Baleſdens was obliged to his Name, for eſcaping the Laſh, in the Petition of the Dictionaries, and That Name, ſo untractable, with reſpect to rhiming, produced a much more favourable Effect, than Thoſe of Tuticanus (8), and Earinus (9): But I do not think, there is any room to make this Suppoſition; for the Petition, printed in the Year 1652, does not contain the Name of any one Member, admitted into the Academy, ſince the Year 1640; and yet there were ſome among thoſe new ones, who lay open to Mr Menage, as much as he could deſire. Was good Mr du Rier a Tranſlator without Reproach?

(5) Menagiana, pag. 190, of the firſt Edition of Holland.

(6) Pelliſſon, Hiſt. de l'Acad. Franç. pag. 72.

(7) See many curious things in the Anti-Baillet, Vol. I, cap. 82, concerning This Petition of the Dictionaries.

(8) Quod minus in no ſtris ponar's amice libellis, Nomin's efficitur conditione tui. Lex pedis officio, fortunaque nominis obſtat, Quaque meos adeas eſt via nulla modos. --- Thy Name, my Friend, ſhould in my Books appear, But it diſdains poetic Chains to wear. Ovid. lib. 4, de Ponto Eleg. 12.

(9) Nomen nobile, molle, delicatum, Verſu dicere non rudi volebam. Sed tu Syllaba contumax repugnas. --- Thy noble Name my Muſe with Pleaſure tries; But the rough Syllable it's Aid denies. Martial. lib. 9, Epig. 12.

[D] He lived in the College of Harcour.] Mr de Marolles, who informs me of this, adds, That Baleſdens's Landlord was a good Man, whoſe Name was le Landez, ſince Doctor of Divinity, and Uncle to the two Mazures, Curates of St Paul, one after another (10). He ſays, That Baleſdens was, at That Time, of a merry Humour, and of a diverting Converſation.

(10) Memoirs de Marolles, pag. 32, ad Ann. 1616.

BALMIS (ABRAHAM de) a Jewiſh Phyſician, born at Lecci [A], in the Kingdom of Naples, flouriſhed at Venice in the Beginning of the XVIth Century. He compoſed a Hebrew Grammar [B], printed at Venice in Hebrew and Latin, by Daniel Bomberg, in the Year 1523. He tranſlated into Latin ſeveral Commentaries of Averroës on Ariſtotle, as alſo ſome Works of Avem Pace, and wrote a Book of his own, De Demonſtratione, and another De Subſtantia Orbis. See Geſner's Bibliotheca, and the Bibliotheca Rabbinica of Bartolocci. We muſt not forget, that he taught in the Univerſity of Padua (a), and that he took a much greater Pleaſure in confuting what was advanced by others, than in laying down any thing certain of his own [C].

(a) Simon's Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, pag. 536.

[A] He was born at Lecci.] You will find theſe Words in Geſner's Bibliotheca: "Ibidem (1) hic author "natum ſe ſcribit in Litio civitate agri Salentini quæ "à Brunduſio Hydrunto & Graia Gallipoli 24 miliа- "ribus diſtat, eodem in loco ſita ubi olim Rudiæ "patria Ennii, ex reliquiis Rudiarum nacta origi- "nem (2). —— There this Author writes, that he "was born in Litium, a City of the Salentines, which "is diſtant from Brunduſium, from Otranto, and "Græcian Gallipoli, Twenty four Miles, ſituated in "the ſame Place, where Rudiæ, the Native Place of "Ennius, formerly ſtood, and was built with the "Ruins of Rudiæ." I wonder, that neither Toppi, nor Leonard Nicodemo, have mentioned him, in the Bibliotheca Napoletana.

(1) That is, in the Preface of his Tranſlation of the Commentaries of Averroës, in Analytica, Topica, &c. Ariſtotelis, printed at Venice, in the Year 1523.

(2) Geſner in Biblioth. fol. 1, verſo.

[B] He compoſed a Hebrew Grammar.] He intituled it Mikne Abraham, that is to ſay, Abraham's Poſſeſſion. Father Bartolocci is miſtaken, when he ſays, that Daniel Bomberg tranſlated it into Latin (3). If he had conſulted the Preface, he might have ſeen, that Daniel Bomberg cauſed That Tranſlation to be made by others. Firſt of all, he employed the Author himſelf, and deſired him to make his Tranſlation literal. This Strictneſs was obſerved for ſome time: Afterwards the Author uſed a greater Freedom, in order to have ſome Elegancy: After his Death, Calonymos, who finiſhed the Tranſlation, took infinitely more Liberty, and Bomberg did not oppoſe it (4). This ſhews, that de Balmis, was no longer living in the Year 1523. Mr Simon ſays, that the Tranſlation of That Grammar is word for word, and very barbarous (5); that, in truth, there is but little Method, in That Author, but that otherwiſe he ſhews great Erudition, and that, in a great many Places, he corrects the Errors of the Grammarians, who wrote before him (6). Huetius gives a very faithful Account of the Latin Tranſlation (7). He ſays, that de Balmis began it, and that Calos Calonymos finiſhed it; that the firſt rendered it barbarous, and more obſcure, than the Original; and that the ſecond, thinking to avoid the Defects of the other, ran into the oppoſite Extream.

(3) Julius Bartoloccius, Biblioth. magna Rabbin. Tom. 1, pag. 34.

(4) See in Geſner's Biblioth. fol. 1, a Fragment of the Preface, which begins thus.

(5) Simon's Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, pag. 536.

(6) Id. ibid. lib. 1, ſub. fin. pag. 278.

(7) Huetius de Claris Interpretibus, p. 186, 187. Mr Baillet's Judgment of the Learned, Tom. 4, n. 224. p. 206, makes him ſay, that this Tranſlation was made by an unknown Hand.

[C] He took a much greater Pleaſure in confuting ------ than in laying down any Thing certain of his own.] Munſter makes this Reflection on him. "Abraham de Balmis, ſays he (8), nihil aliud agere "mihi viſus eſt quam veterum doctrinam perpetuo "convellere atque impugnare, magis in inſectando "occupatus quam in docendo. At in dubium tan- "tum vocare priſcorum præceptiones, cum interim "nihil certi ſtatuas, non docere eſt ſed ridere. —— "Abraham de Balmis ſeems to me to do nothing "but continually attack, and oppoſe, the Doctrine of "his Predeceſſors, being more taken up with cenſu- "ring, than with teaching. But, to weaken the Au- "thority of the old Maxims, without eſtabliſhing ſome- "thing new in their room, is not the way to inſtruct, "but to turn every thing into Jeſt."

(8) Munſter in Præfat. Grammat. Ebræ. apud Spizelii Felicem Literatum, pag. 958.

BALTHASAR

Digitized by Google

BALTHASAR (CHRISTOPHER) was a Man of Learning and Merit, in the XVIIth Century. He applied himſelf principally to the Study of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and This Application gave him a very great Diſguſt for the Romiſh Doctrines, and a great Deſire to embrace the Proteſtant Religion. He had a conſiderable Poſt in the Preſidial of Auxerre (a), and, becauſe he muſt either reſolve to quit that, or ſtill keep his Religion, he was for ſome time in doubt which part to take: But, at laſt, Conſcience got the better, and obliged him to leave Auxerre, his Eſtate, Office, Relations, and Friends, and go to Charenton, where he was publickly received into the Reformed Church. He perſevered in it to his Death, and edified his Brethren as well by his good Life, as by his Converſation. The Expences he was obliged to be at in Paris being too great for the Circumſtances he was in, and his Converſion expoſing him too much in ſuch a City as That, he conſidered, that it would be better for him to retire into ſome Province, and was very well pleaſed to find himſelf invited to go to Caſtres by a young and rich Counſellor of the Bipartite Court of the Edict (b), who lodged him in his Houſe, and allowed him a reaſonable Penſion. This Counſellor thought himſelf very fortunate in having a Learned Man with him, who might teach him a great many fine things by his Inſtructions and Converſation. But Mr Balthaſar, deſiring to labour for the Public, would have all his time at his own diſpoſal, and for that reaſon he took leave of his Counſellor. His Deſign was favoured by the National Synod of Loudon in the Year 1659; for That Aſſembly granted him a Penſion of Seven hundred and fifty Livres, to be paid by all the Churches of France, according to the Repartition, which was made of them (c). Before That Synod was held, he had prepared a good number of Diſſertations on material Points againſt Cardinal Baronius (d). He gave four or five of them to a Miniſter of Caſtres, who was one of the Deputies of the Province of Upper Languedoc and Upper Guienne. They were preſented to Mr Daillé, Moderator of That National Synod, who, of all the Miniſters, was beſt able to judge of the Goodneſs of thoſe Pieces. Mr Daillé was very well pleaſed with them, and gave all the Company a very advantageous Character of them. He brought them to Paris, where it was hoped they would have been printed; for they were thought to deſerve Publication. But the Event made it appear, that no Meaſures were, or could be, taken for it. The Author, who was very old, and afflicted with the Stone, happened to die; Mr Daillé died alſo; and, after this, the Church of Caſtres wrote ſeveral Letters to recover thoſe Diſſertations, but they could not ſo much as learn what was become of them. Mr Balthaſar left ſome others not quite finiſhed, and many Collections, moſt of which conſiſted of ſeparate Notes, wherein he had ſet down the Authorities and Teſtimonies he was to make uſe of againſt Cardinal Baronius. It is pity, that all this ſhould remain in a Cheſt, in the Poſſeſſion of I know not who (e). Mr Balthaſar wrote very well in Latin; his Panegyric on Mr Fouquet is in a fine Style. This is all that I have ſeen of his, and I cannot tell whether he publiſhed any thing elſe. If he had been leſs ſcrupulous about his Language, he might have made a quicker Progreſs in his Cenſure on Baronius. However, I believe what has been ſaid of his Scruples about his Latin, is ſomething Hyperbolical [A]. What is reported of his Credulity in Witchcraft ſeems to me more likely [B].

(a) It was That of the King's Advocate.

(b) His Name was Mr du Faur.

(c) It was at the Requeſt, and Recommendation, of the Synod of Upper Languedoc, and of Upper Guienne. He enjoyed already a Penſion of 300 Livres. See the Acts of the National Synod of Loudon, in the Synodicon of Mr Quick, Tom. 2, pag. 572.

(d) He gave them the Title of Diatribæ. His Work was in Latin.

(e) Taken from a Memoir, communicated by Mr de la Deveze, heretofore Miniſter at Caſtres, and now at the Hague.

[A] What has been ſaid of his Scruples about his Latin is ſomething Hyperbolical.] Among ſeveral Pieces, the Abbot de Marolles publiſhed in the latter Part of his Life, there is one, which contains the Names of Thoſe, who had preſented him with their Books, or honoured him with their Compliments, in an extraordinary Manner. There we find the following Words: "Chriſtopher Balthazar, who had made ſo "many Collections, with his own Hand, for ſeveral "manuſcript hiſtorical Treatiſes. He deſigned to "compoſe ſome Animadverſions on the Annals of "Baronius; but went a little too late about it, and "had not yet formed his Stile, intending to poliſh "it yet farther, after too elegant a Manner, inſo- "much, that he could not write one whole Page "of his Book in a Day, though he was above Sixty "three Years of Age." If the Abbot de Marolles had dated the Time, which he pointed at, we had known at what Age Mr Balthaſar obtained a Penſion from the Synod of Loudon.

[B] Notice has been taken of his Credulity in Witchcraft.] The ſame Abbot de Marolles ſupplies me with the whole Commentary on This Text. The Paſſage is ſomewhat long, but I will not abridge it: What will not ſerve for one Purpoſe, may ſerve for another. "Let us return now into our Cloſet, where "one day, in a Company of learned Men, were "Mr Balthaſar, who is ſo skillful in the Know- "ledge of Hiſtory, and Mr de Sorbieres, whoſe "Affability and Learning deſerve alſo much Com- "mendation: The one, from being a Catholic, had "embraced the pretended Reformed Religion (1), and "the other, from being a Proteſtant, was returned "to the Catholic Church. Whereupon, the firſt be- "ing taken to task, on account, that the Motives "of his Change could not be comprehended, con- "ſidering his great Knowledge, ſaid, he was induced "to it, from a Belief, that there was more Purity, "and Simplicity, in the other Communion, than "in ours: That it had re-eſtabliſhed the Holy Liber- "ty of the Goſpel, under the mild Yoke of Faith "in our Lord's Promiſes; and that it had taken "away all Abuſes, and Superſtitions, to place, in their "room, a Worſhip agreeable to the Uſage of the Pri- "mitive Church. All the Parts of his Anſwer were "diſputed; but That proving ineffectual, the Diſ- "courſe was turned to other Matters; and from the "Subject of Miracles, came to That, of the infinite "Number of Stories told of Sorcerers, and Appari- "tions, which would ſcarcely be credited by Children: "whereby it appeared, that he, who had ſhewn "himſelf ſuch an Enemy to Superſtition, admitted "it, in ſome Meaſure, by a ſufficient Credulity for "theſe Things; beſides that, having explained him- "ſelf on the vain Predictions of Aſtrologers, he diſ- "covered plainly, that he adhered but too much to "them, as well as to Thoſe of Noſtradamus, in his "Centuries, than which nothing in the World can "be more groſs. This was the Judgment of the "whole Company, in which was preſent the Abbot "Talman (2), a Man of fine Parts, Mr Baudeolt (3), "Abbot of Maſſay, and the Abbot of Verdus, who "have ſo intirely ſhook off all popular Errors, with "Mr de la Herpiniere of Blois, ſo rational, in all "his

(1) The Memoirs of the Abbot de Marolles were printed off the fifth of January, 1656. Mr Balthaſar had therefore made his Abjuration in 1655, at laſt.

(2) He ought to have ſaid Tallemant.

(3) He ought to have ſaid Bourdelot.

Digitized by Google

" his Sentiments, Mr de Marſay le Boſſu, Governor " of Gien, whoſe great Knowledge is accompanied " with a noble Elocution, and ſome others, whereof " one only endeavoured to maintain the Opinion, " which had been rejected (4)."

(4) The Abbot de Marolles's Memoirs, pag. 276.

BALZAC, a ſmall Lordſhip in Angoumois, on the River Charante, is famous for having given it's Name to, and been a long time the Reſidence of, one of the moſt Eloquent Writers of the XVIIth Century [A], namely, the famous Mr de BALZAC. His Name was John Lewis Guez, and he was the Son of William Guez, a Gentleman of Languedoc [B], who was very deſerving, and who, having devoted himſelf early to the Service of Roger de Bellegarde, Mareſchal of France, and Governor of the Marquiſate of Saluces, conducted ſeveral Affairs with a great deal of Prudence. Before he was Twenty ſix Years of Age, he was ſent to the Court of Philibert Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, about ſome Negotiations of Conſequence, which he managed very ſucceſsfully, and gained the Eſteem of This Prince. Some time after, he was Governor to the Son of the Mareſchal de Bellegarde: This young Lord was killed in the Battle of Coutras, in the Year 1587 (a). The Father died in the Year 1579 (b). So that William Guez, having loſt theſe two Patrons, found a third in the Duke de Epernon, who deſired to have him near him. His Services proved very conſiderable on ſeveral troubleſome Occaſions. Henry IV, having obſerved with what Addreſs, Integrity, and Steadineſs, This Gentleman diſpatched the Affairs, on which the Duke de Epernon ſent him to Court, would willingly have retained him in his Service (c); but found him more inclined to a Country Life, than to That of the Court, with which his Virtue would not eaſily ſuit. This good Gentleman fixed himſelf in the Province of Angoumois, where he died the Twentieth of September, 1650, at the Age of an Hundred Years [C]. He had married a Gentlewoman of the Family of Neſmond, with whom he lived Sixty four Years in perfect Concord (d). He had by her, among other Children, the Famous Mr de Balzac, whom I am going to mention. See the Latin Elogy of William Guez, compoſed by Mr de Girac, and printed at the end of the Chriſtian Socrates. I have taken from it what has been juſt now read, to which I add; I. That William Guez did ſo much reſemble Father Narni, that, the firſt time Mr de Balzac ſaw That famous Preacher, he thought his Father had diſguiſed himſelf in a Capuchin's habit (e). II. That, among ſeveral other Virtues of William Guez, Don Peter de St Romuald praiſes the Magnificence, which he ſhewed in the Structure of the Caſtle of Balzac, and in That of his Houſe at Angoulême (f). That Houſe was furniſhed with ſuch exquiſite Rarities, and particularly Pictures and other Ornaments, that the Queen Mother, Mary de Medicis, would lodge no where elſe during her abode in Angoulême. III. That one of his other Sons was called Mr de Rouſſines (g). IV. That he had a Daughter, who is very often mentioned by Monſieur de Balzac [D].

(a) Father Anſelm's Hiſtory of the great Officers, pag. 194.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) See the Choice Letters of Balzac, p. 364. Edit. of Holland.

(d) She lived 'till the Year 1653. See the 15*th Letter of* Balzac to Conrart, Book 3.

(e) Balzac, Letter 27, to Chapelain, lib. 3.

(f) St Romuald, Threſ. Chronol. ad Ann. 1627.

(g) Mr de Balzac wrote the 4*th Letter of the* 8*th Book to him.*

[A] It is famous, for having given it's Name ------ to one of the moſt eloquent Writers of the XVIIth Century.] I cannot tell what Moreri builds upon, when he ſays, that Thoſe of the Family of Guez have enjoyed the Name of the Lordſhip of Balſac. I. Firſt of all, he ought to have known, that Balzac is the Name of This Village, and Balſac That of the ancient Family of Balſac d'Entragues (1). II. Secondly, none but John Lewis Guez uſed the Name of Balzac; his Father always retained the Name of his Family (2); and if, after the Death of John Lewis, ſome of his Relations called themſelves Balzac, I do not believe it came to Mr Moreri's Knowledge. In ſhort, what has been ſaid by ſome Perſons, " That, if Mr de Balzac had not taken the " Name of his Lordſhip, his Family Name at the " Head of his Works would have prevented their " great Succeſs in the World, and that People would " not have conceived ſo favourable an Idea of his " Letters, if they had been entituled Monſieur Guez's " Letters; and that it is believed, the Name of Bal- " zac being taken for That of a Noble and Ancient " Houſe, ſufficiently known, procured him the more " Reſpect (3);" this, I ſay, is partly probable, and partly very falſe. It is probable, that ſuch a plain Name, as That of Guez, might have prejudiced an Author in the Title of a Book (4); but it is very falſe, that John Lewis Guez put the Name of Balzac in the Title Page of his Books, to avoid this Inconveniency, and to make People believe, that they came from a great Lord; This was the thing, which Sorel would be at, with his confuſed, and perplexing, Expreſſions. Once again, this is falſe: for John Lewis Guez had taken the Name of Balzac, before he thought of printing his Letters. I cannot apprehend how it happened, that Mr Menage, who cauſed This Author's Poems, and Latin Letters, to be printed, where we ſee, both in the Title, and and at the Top of every Page, the Name of Joannis Ludovici Guezii Balzacii, ſhould ſay, that they bear the Name of Joannis Ludovici Gueſæi Balzacii (5). I ſhould think, that the Printer of the Anti-Baillet put Gueſæi inſtead of Gueſii, if I did not ſee the ſame Fault, in a very correct Edition of Mr Menage's Poems (6).

(1) Sorel's Knowledge of good Books, pag. 28, Edit. of Holland, and Menage, Anti-Baillet, Tom. 1, pag. 4, obſerved it.

(2) Anti-Baillet, ib.

(3) Sorel's Knowledge of good Books, pag. 28, cited in the Judgment of the Learned, Tom. 1, pag. 4[illegible]4.

(4) See the Preface of the New Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calvinism, and in the 22*d Letter*, pag. 764, a Paſſage of the Mercure Galant on the Letters of the Chevalier d'Her....

(5) Menage, Anti-Baillet Tom. 1. p. 4.

(6) In the Index: It is the Edition of Wetſtein at Amſterdam, 1687.

[B] Balzac ----- was the Son of William Guez, a Gentleman of Languedoc.] Sometimes Mr de Balzac repreſents his Extraction, in ſuch a manner, as to give us an high Idea of it. He ſays, That Thoſe, to whom he has the Honour of being related, have founded Monaſteries in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, and that Angoulême and Toulouſe are proud of the Marks of their Piety (7). He tells us, in another Place, that the Great Grand-father of his Great-Great Grand-father was preſented with three Pariſhes, in Languedoc, by the Counteſs Alix (8). Theophilus gives us a quite contrary Idea of Mr de Balzac's Family.

(7) Balzac, Miſcellan. Works, Diſc. 14.

(8) Choice Letters, pag. 367.

[C] Who died at the Age of an hundred Years.] I have made uſe of a round Number, after Mr de Girac, whom I have quoted; but I ought to rectify the Matter a little, by means of a Letter of Mr Guez, to his Son, ſigned Guez, and dated the twentieth of November 1642 (9). He was then entered into the Eighty ninth Year of his Age. He could not therefore be an hundred Years old, the twentieth of September, 1650, which was the Day of his Death. That Letter is a preſſing Exhortation to publiſh ſome Manuſcripts, but, above all, the Apologies againſt Phylarchus.

(9) Ibid. pag 36[illegible]. Edit. of Holl.

(10) See the Latin Poems of Balzac, pag. 112. in 12*mo.*

[D] He had a Daughter, who is very often mentioned by Mr de Balzac.] She was married to Mr de Campagnolle, who died Captain of the Guards, at Montaubon, and who was the Brother of a brave Man, whom Thuanus ſometimes mentions (10). That Captain of the Guards left a Son, who was killed at the Seige of Lens (11), and a Daughter, who is the Lady of CAMPAGNOLLE, ſometimes mentioned in Mr de Balzac's Letters (12). He ſhews much Fondneſs for That Niece, and gives good

(11) See the Volume of Letters to Conrart, Book 5, Letter 3.

(12) See the 6*th Letter of the* 7*th Book, and the* 42*d of the* 9*th.*

Digitized by Google

good Advice for her Education. See his Choice Letters, Page 157, and the Forty sixth, Forty seventh, and Forty eighth Letters of the seventh Book, in the Edition in Folio. I have found a Passage, in a Letter of Costar, which concerns the Lady of Campagnolle. At Balzac, says he (13), you will see a Niece, beautiful and ingenious, who very well understands true gallantry from false, and who wants nothing but a little more of your Esteem. This he wrote to Voiture. I have seen another Book, in which there is something, which may relate to This Lady. It is there said, that Langlade (14), one of Those, whom Cardinal Mazarin employed most in his secret Negotiations, had, before he came to Court, fallen in Love with a young Lady in the Country, called Mademoiselle de Campagnol (15). "He "did not dare to propose Marriage to her; but he "had exacted a Promise from her, not to marry, "and engaged himself to let her know, when his "Fortune should be in a Condition to make her "happy. He trusted Gourville with his Engage- "ment to This young Lady, and, told him, with some "Discontent, that he did not think his Fortune was "sufficient to pretend to This Alliance, having, in "all, but Forty thousand Crowns. Gourville bid "him not trouble himself about That, but go, with "all Satisfaction, and conclude his Marriage, pro- "mising to give him as much more. Upon this "Assurance Langlade departed, and gave a great deal "of Joy to Mademoiselle de Campagnol, by shewing "her he had not forgot her. They were married, and "Langlade returned to Paris, with his new Wife, "where they found Gourville had taken a fine House "for them, and furnished it splendidly. He gave "Langlade That fine Furniture, with a great Quan- "tity of Plate and Jewels for his Wife, besides the "Forty thousand Crowns; and Madam de Parville "(16) took great Care to shew this Country Lady "all the Beau Monde. This new married Couple "lived a long time together, in mutual Satisfaction."

(13) See the 20th Letter of the Entretiens des Voiture & Costar, pag. 249.

(14) Gallantries of the Kings of France, Tom. II. pag. 239, Edition of Brussels, 1694.

(15) Ibid. pag. 242.

(16) She was a Mistress of Gourville's.

BALZAC (JOHN LEWIS GUEZ Sieur de), was born at Angoulême, in the Year 1595 [A]. He acquired an extraordinary Reputation very early. There was so lively an Imagination, so much Eloquence, and so many uncommon Thoughts, in the Letters, which he wrote in his younger Years, that those, who saw them, were charmed with them, and praised them every where: So that, being in the Service of the Cardinal de la Valette (a), he soon became known, and esteemed at Court; insomuch, that Cardinal Richelieu, to whom he had wrote several times, did him the honour to answer him very obligingly. This Answer was printed with Balzac's Letters, the first Edition whereof is of the Year 1624. He thought himself in the way of a very great Fortune [B]; his Letters sold so well, that they had a Run of several Editions. They were praised beyond measure; but not with the unanimous consent of all Readers. Some contradicting Spirits started up, either excited by Envy, which is most likely, or from a discovery of the weak Passages of Balzac's Works. These Dissentions, having reigned for some time in Conversation, became a public War in the Year 1627, and one of the most cruel, that ever was known of this kind. It was begun by a young Monk, who wrote a little Book, intituled, The Conformity of Mr Balzac's Eloquence with That of the greatest Persons of the past and present Times. Tho' this Piece was not printed, yet it went almost as publickly from Hand

(a) Sorel, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 121. of the 2d Edit.

[A] He was born at Angoulême, in the Year 1595.] I have not met with this in any Book; but observe, how I have inferred it from two Letters of Balzac. He mentions, in one of these two Letters (1), the Thanks he had given to Mr Spanheim, in 1649, for the fine Oration, which he had received from him, and which had revived in him a Passion, which Fifty three Years had taken from him. Without doubt, That Oration was his Funeral Oration on Frederic Henry, Prince of Orange: it may be supposed, that he received it in the Year 1648; for he was not quick in answering; he was, therefore, Fifty three Years of Age, in 1648, and must consequently be born in 1595. In the other Letter, dated the fifteenth of October, 1637 (2), he speaks of a Piece, which he composed, at seventeen Years of Age, and says, that it was full Twenty five Years, since his writing it. So that he was Forty two Years of Age, when he wrote That Letter, and consequently must be born in 1595. St Romuald places his Birth in the Year 1598. For he was, says he, Twenty eight Years of Age, in 1626 (3); but he forgot to prove This Reason. I do not deny, but I have found a Passage, which proves, that Balzac was born in 1596. I quote it in the Remark [B].

(1) It is the 14*th of the* 1*st Book to* Conrart: the Thanks to Mr Spanheim are in the 10*th of the* 5*th Book.*

(2) It is the 10*th of the* 3*d Book to* Chapelain.

(3) St Romuald, Chron. Abridgment, ad Ann. 1598.

A WRITING published by Balzac, at 17 Years of Age.

The small Piece, he composed, at seventeen Years of Age, is worth a Digression. He owns, that, in writing it, he committed both a Fault, and a Folly, and excuses himself, the best he can, on his Youth, and on his composing it in Holland, without designing to publish it in print (4). He took it very ill, that Heinsius revived that Fault. I have already observed (5), that this is an inconveniency, to which Authors, any thing famous, are very liable: They generally happen into some Paper Quarrel, which causes their Antagonists to search out, carefully, every little Fault of their Youth, to reproach them with in public. I do not wonder, that some have believed, that, at This Time, Balzac would not have refused to make his Fortune in Holland, under the Profession of an Huguenot. Before I read the Piece, I am mentioning, I took it to be a rash Judgment; but I have altered my Opinion, since Mr Minutoli favoured me with a Transcript of That Writing (6). He had a printed Copy of it, of the Edition, which Heinsius caused to be published, at Leyden, in the Year 1638. The Title of it is, A Political Discourse on the State of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, by I. L. D. B. a French Gentleman. It is a Pamphlet of four or five Pages, subscribed, at the end, John Lewis de Balzac. This Work is very fine, full of Wit and Thought; but I am well assured, that Baudius, who was in a public Office at Leyden, and who received a Salary from the States of Holland, would not have decided so strongly for the Justice, wherewith the States threw off the Yoke of Philip II, nor have sought for such high Compliments for Holland, nor such cutting Invectives against the Spanish Government, nor, in short, such studied Maxims, in favour of Liberty of Conscience. So that it is very excusable to suspect, that the French Gentleman, perhaps, sounded the Business, by That flying Sheet, and that, if the Republic, struck with Admiration of so fine a Pen, and so well affected, had offered a good Post, the Author, of seventeen Years of Age, would have preferred it before his Country, and his Catholicism.

(4) The 10*th Letter to* Chapelain, Book 3.

(5) See above, at the End of the Remark [C] of the Article BALDUS.

(6) He is Master of a great number of such scarce Pieces, which he always took great care to collect.

Mr de Balzac took his Journey into Holland, in the Year 1612. Theophilus was his Fellow-Traveller, whom, if we may believe Father Goulu, he, at the same time, played a very scurvy Trick (7), which occasioned the Misunderstanding between That Poet and Balzac. The terrible Letter, which Theophilus printed against him, contains a Charge of two, or three, unpleasant Adventures: I do not speak, says he, of the plundering of Authors; Doctor Baudius's Son-in-law accuses you of another sort of Theft. - - - - - I do not repeat my having formerly drawn my Sword to revenge your being cudgelled.

(7) Letters of Phylarch. Part. I. pag. 257.

[B] He thought himself in the way of a very great Fortune.] It is very pleasant to hear him relate the Reasons of his great Hopes. Read, then, the second Story, which he tells, in his Entretiens (8): it concerns himself. Among other things, you will find there the Proof of what I have said, concerning the Elogies, given to his Letters, even before they were printed. He tells us, That the Bishop of Luçon, being

(8) Entret. 8. pag. 132, Edit. 12mo.

Digitized by Google

Hand to Hand, as if it had been in Print, and no Body was ignorant, that a Feuillant, called Brother Andrew, was the Author of it [C]. Mr de Balzac desired it might be publickly confuted; which was performed in the Apology, published by Ogier in 1627 [D]. The General of the Feuillans, whose Name, at that time, was Father Goulu, took Brother Andrew's Cause in hand; and, under the Name of Phyllarchus (b), wrote two Volumes of Letters against Balzac, with an extraordinary Heat, as I shall relate in his Article. This Quarrel was the occasion of a great many Books (c), and raised such a Storm, as almost overwhelm'd Mr Balzac, as well because of the Artifices of his Enemies, as because he had given some hold to his Critics, by some very dull Hyberboles, vain Sallies, and ticklish Propositions. He let this Storm blow over, without answering his Adversary [E]. Upon whose Death, which happened in the Year 1629, a Calm ensued. The Public began to recover from the prejudices, they had suffered themselves to be possessed with against Mr Balzac, who, making a good

(b) That is to say, the nice of the ves, by way of Illusion to his quality of General of the Feuillans.

(c) See L. Bibl. Fr. pag. 121, See the Article JAVERSAC.

(9) This happened in the Year 1618.

being recalled from his Exile (9), caressed him extreamly, and complimented him as an illustrious, rare, and extraordinary, Person, and that, having invited him to Dinner, one Day, he said, to a great many Persons of Quality, at Table with him, Here's a Man (that Man was then but Twenty two Years of Age) to whom we must do good, when it lies in our Power, and we must begin with an Abbey of Ten thousand Livres a Year. Is it possible to conceive a finer beginning? Money would have been lent him upon this, at Rome, and Wagers laid on his future Advancement. Nevertheless, Matters went no farther. Cardinal Richelieu did not remember what the Bishop of Luçon had said. This puts me in mind of a Passage of the Menagiana: "Monsieur de Balzac aspired first to be a Bishop. Afterwards he desired "only to be an Abbot; but he did not succeed in "either. He even writes, in one of his Books, that "he should never be an Abbot, unless he himself "should be the Founder of the Abbey (10)."

(10) Page 190.

[C] A little Book was published against him - - - - whereof a Feuillant, called Brother Andrew, was the Author.] He was of Mans; he reconciled himself afterwards to Mr Balzac, and went to see him, at Angoulême (11). Mr Balzac entertained him magnificently, and contracted a cordial Friendship with him, which continued as long as they lived (12). He wrote several Letters to him, wherein he styles him, The Reverend Father Don Andrew de St Dennis. See, particularly, one of the Dissertations, printed with the Christian Socrates, in the first Entretien, and, among the Latin Letters, the Poem, entitled, Iter speratum, preceeded by a Letter, wherein Balzac relates the Change of That Monk with much Joy, and makes use of this fine Exclamation, a Parody on Virgil (13),

(11) St Romuald, Continuat. Chron. Ademari ad Ann. 1627.

(12) See his Concern for the Interests of Father Andrew, in the 17th and 18th Letters of the 4th Book to Conrart, written in the Year 1653.

O superi tanton' placuit concurrere motu
Æterna posthac mentes in pace futuras?

Jove, cou'dst thou view, and not avert thy Sight,
Two jarring Authors join'd in cruel Fight,
Whom Leagues of lasting Love so shortly shall unite.

DRYDEN.

(13) Virg. Æn. lib. 12. ver. 503.

(14) Page 268.

Another Latin Letter, which preceeds This (14), informs us, that Brother Andrew, who, according to Voiture's Expression, had been the Helena of That War, having heard, that Mr Balzac was dead, lamented, and praised him. But, after this, being informed, that the News was false, he became a good Friend of the supposed deceased, and therefore made it appear, that he was not in the Case of This Sentence:

Virtutem incolumem odimus,
Sublatam ex oculis quærimus invidi (15).

(15) Horat. Od. 24. l. 3.

We slight that Virtue we enjoy the most;
And never know it's Value, 'till 'tis lost.

This Circumstance must not be forgot, that This Fryar, who was then Prior of the Convent of St Mermin, near Orleans, had no sooner heard of Mr Balzac's dangerous Sickness, but he assembled all his Monks to pray with him for the sick Person (16). The latter, being recovered, gave an Incense Pot for the Altar of their Church, of Four hundred Livres Value, and an annual Revenue to supply it continually with Perfumes. If Moreri had mentioned the evident Marks Mr Balzac gave of his sincere Reconciliation with Brother Andrew, and with Father Garasse, there would not have been found so great a Want of Judgment in this Place of his Dictionary. He was esteemed, from the first, as the most eloquent Man in France. This Reputation raised him a great deal of Envy, and the Quarrel he had, toward the Year 1627, with Father Goulu, General of the Feuillans, and others, is sufficiently known. All the World, however, was persuaded of Mr Balzac's Sincerity, and Generosity, who died, as he had lived, very much of a Christian. What a strange leap, from the Year 1627, to the Year 1654, in so few Lines! And, besides, what signifies, That Sincerity, and That Generosity, which every Body was, however, persuaded of? Was That the Business in Hand? The Question was, only to know, whether Balzac was a good, eloquent, and orthodox Author.

(16) Preface to Mr Balzac's Works, and the Relation of his Death.

[D] This Piece was refuted, - - - - - in the Apology, published by Ogier, in 1627.] There have been various Reports, about the true Author of That Work. Some believed, that he, who fathered it, was really the Author of it: Others, that he only lent his Name to a Piece, composed by Balzac himself. Here is what Mr Menage says of it; "Prior "Ogier answered those Books of Father Goulu, a- "gainst Mr Balzac, in a Piece he intituled, Mr Bal- "zac's Apology (17), which is a Book, wrote with "some Learning and Elegancy. But Ogier furnished "only the Learning: The Elegancy was, altogether, "Mr Balzac's own. I have heard Mr de Racan, "and Mr de Gomberville, say so several Times, who "had seen Mr Balzac intent on That Work. And "I have read, elsewhere, that Mr de Balzac, speak- "ing of That Work, declared, that he himself was "the Father of it, and Ogier only the God-father; "that he had supplied the Silk, and Ogier only the "Canvas (18)." In all Probability, the publishing this Report made the Sieur de la Motte-Aigron fear such another Fate, which he endeavoured to prevent, by declaring, in the Preface to his Answer to Phyllarchus, that the Advice he had received from several Places, that they would give his Book a Master, obliged him to advertize all his Readers, That he was no Roger, who fought under the Arms of Leo; that he had not the Complaisance of those, who father other People's Children; that he could not endure to have his Books made for him; and that, for this, he was no more obliged to his Friends, than to the greatest Strangers in the World. He tells us, in the same Place, that his Preface, on Balzac's Letters, had been very falsely ascribed to others. This will be seen more particulrly in his Article (19).

(17) I have shewed, in the Remark [F] of Father GOULU's Article, that Mr Menage is mistaken in saying, that the Apology, published by the Sieur Ogier, was an Answer to Father Goulu's Book.

(18) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Peter Ayrault, pag. 252.

[E] He let this Storm, raised against him by Father Goulu, blow over, without answering his Adversary.] I confess, that, at this very time, he took Pen in Hand to compose his Relation to Menander; but That Piece was not printed till a long time after. The reason of This Conduct appears from these Words of Balzac's Twenty third Entretien. "You may remem- "ber the cruel Persecution kindled against me above "twenty Years ago. At that time an Angel from "Heaven would not have been heard, if he had come "down to plead my Cause. The Faction was too "strong, and too passionate, to allow the Public to "form a right Judgment. God be thanked, the "Storm is over, and, after it, succeeds a Calm. The "Face of Things being changed, it is to be hoped "that Right will also take place again." The Au-

(19) See Remark [D] of the Article MOTTE-AIGRON.

Digitized by Google

a good use of his Disgrace, and also of the indifferent Success of his Prince [F], retired to his Country-House, where he not only refined his Thoughts and Style, but his Heart also, and there preserved, by his Epistolary Correspondences [G], and the Pieces, he from time to time published, the Reputation of very great Merit, and of the best Pen in France. However, it must be confessed, that his Style seems too much laboured, and the turn of his Thoughts sometimes too much affected, and seldom natural: but, tho' his Letters have not that easy Air, and that happy Sprightliness thor, finding himself importuned anew to publish his Defence, complied with it. Menander, to whom he addresses his Relation, is Mainard (20). Though that Relation contains a Defence of some of the Passages, which Father Goulu had criticized, yet it is rather a general Answer, than a continued and compleat Refutation of the two Volumes of Phyllarchus. Balzac also vindicated some Passages, which a Doctor of Louvain, and a Doctor of Bezançon, had censured (21). I find there is a Fault in his Calculation. It appears by his Twenty seventh Entretien, that he did not resolve to publish his Apologies, till above twenty Years after the Persecution he had suffered from Phyllarchus. And yet, it is most certain, that the Volume of his Miscellaneous Works, of which the Discourse to Menander makes a very considerable part, was printed in the Year 1645, and his Bookseller says in it, That the Author could not refuse the Publication of it, at the repeated Instances of his Father, who was Ninety one Years of Age. If you compare Mr Guez's Letter, which I have mentioned in the Remark [C] of the foregoing Article, with That Advertisement to the Reader, you will find, that the Resolution of printing the Apologies against Phyllarchus was taken in the Year 1644. How can this agree with the Twenty seventh Entretien?

(20) Menage, Remarks on Ayrault, p. 252.

(21) See the Pieces, added at the End of the Christian Socrates.

[F] He made a good Use of the indifferent Success of his Prince.] The Author's Friends had promised This Work as a Master-Piece, which would silence all Critics; especially those, who accused Balzac of being incapable of writing any thing but Letters. The Event did not answer these Expectations; That Book added nothing either to Balzac's Reputation, or Fortune, and raised him some trouble from the Sorbonne. Though the Marquis d'Aytona had caused it to be burnt at Brussels (22); it was yet mentioned, with the utmost Contempt, in an Answer of the Abbot of St Germain, as a Book suppress'd by the Censure of the Doctors, and the Sentence of the Judges, a Month after it's Birth. Mr Pellisson relates, that, in the Year 1636, Balzac read some part of his Prince, which he then called the Minister of State, to the French Academy (23). This would make one believe, that, at first, he had only a Mind to write the Cardinal's Panegyric. But it is certain, Mr Pellisson was mistaken. The Prince was printed in the Year 1631. This Book was to have been followed by two others; the latter of which was called the Minister of State. Some observe, that, in his Prince, he praises the Cardinal more than the King. (See the Thirty seventh Page of the fifteenth Volume of the Bibliotheque Universelle.) But this is false. We find, in the eighth Book of This Author's Letters, the Answer the Faculty of Divinity wrote to him, to signify, that they were satisfied with his offers to alter what they had found worthy of Censure. The Latin Letter, he wrote to a Father of the Christian Doctrine, concerning This Process of the Sorbonne, is admirable. It is in the Hundred eighty seventh Page of his Epistolæ selectæ, in the Edition, of Paris, 1651, in 12mo.

(22) Balzac's Letter 43, l. 8. Entretien, 13, p. 282.

(23) History of the French Academy, pag. 221, & 167.

Observe, That some Persons have affirmed, that this Work was one of the Author's best Performances. It is thus, Sir, that you yourself have practised it in your Prince, and in your Relations to Menander, which are the two great Miracles of your Art, and the highest Pitch of Heroic Eloquence. Thus says Costar in his Defence of Voiture. Mr Richelet says, in his Remarks on some Letters, That the Prince, and the Aristippus, are two of the most Eloquent Pieces of Balzac (24). If a Judgment of the Merits of Balzac's Prince was to be made by the Number of Editions, it would be very advantageous: "At first came out "two Editions in Quarto, at the same time; then "another in the same form, but in smaller Characters, and full of Faults, which I believe was "printed at Niort, or at Poitiers. Afterwards, there "was one in 8vo, pretty good, though pirated. "After that, came out That of Bouillerot, in 8vo also, "but corrected; and lastly the Edition in 12mo, of "Courbé." These words are taken from a Letter, Mr du Rondel did me the Honour to write to me the tenth of May 1698. I am going to quote another part of it. "I have lately bought, says he, the "Prince, of the first Edition, wherein I found, with "unspeakable delight, what Mr de Balzac had written, and what he afterwards altered and cut off: "and it was on this occasion, that I first rightly apprehended what Scaliger meant by his detrahendo fecit auctiorem. Balzac, by cutting off five or six Passages, suppressed Faintness, re-animated Weakness, increased his Strength, and recovered the Attention, which was just forsaking the Reader." I make use of an Edition in 4to, of the Year 1632. The place, where it was printed, is not set down; but doubtless it was at Rouen. I have seen one, in a small 8vo, printed at Paris by Toussaint du Bray, 1632. It is called, in the Title, The second Edition corrected. Mr Perrault, who so highly commended Balzac's Aristippus (25), said nothing advantageous of his Prince. He only takes notice, that this Piece appeared after the Miscellaneous Works. I flatter myself he will not take it amiss, if I observe, that he is mistaken. For the Miscellaneous Works did not appear till a long time after the Prince (26). Let us conclude with a Passage of Gabriel Naudé: "Quibus omnibus velut coronidem "accessisse ferunt Balzaci, Viri Clarissimi, Princi- "pem, Gallica modo pumice diligentur expolitum. "Verum enimvero, quoniam ipse liber post meum "è Gallia discessum typis fuit demandatus, ut prop- "terea nondum in manus meas pervenerit; varia- "que, ut audio, ac prorsus ancipiti judiciorum "alea fuit acceptus: hoc solum de illo pronunciare "possum, quod fuit ab antiquis in simili occasione "ex formula usurpatum, Non liquet (27). —— To "all which, they say, is added, as a finishing Piece, the "Prince of the most famous Balzac, now represented "in the finest French Polish. But, as that Book was "not printed till after my leaving France, and is "therefore not yet come to my Hands, and has been, "I hear, very differently received: I can only say "this of it, as some of the Ancients did on a like "Occasion, It does not appear."

(24) Richelet's Letters, pag. 97.

(25) Perrault's Illustrious Men, pag. 176.

(26) The Licence for printing his Prince, is dated the 18th of Sept mb. 1631; and the Approbation is dated the third of October following. The Miscellaneous Works were printed in the Year 1645.

(27) Naudæus, Bibliogr. Polit. p. 47.

[G] He kept up Epistolary Correspondences.] This Correspondence was so great, that it over-powered Mr Balzac. For, besides that he composed with extream Difficulty, he knew, that his Letters would be shewn to every body, and must therefore be very exact. See how he describes his own Case in this respect. "He receives all the bad Compliments of "Christendom, to say nothing of the good ones, "which give him yet more trouble. He is per- "secuted, he is killed, with the Civilities, which "come to him from the four Quarters of the "World; and last Night there lay fifty Letters on "the Table in his Chamber, which required An- "swers; and those eloquent ones, and such as might "be shewn, copied, and printed --- (28)." He says in another place (29), "At this very time I am "speaking to you, there lie a Century of Letters "on my Table, which wait for Answers: I owe "some to crowned Heads." As he was the first in France, who acquired a great Name by this sort of Writings, so he obtained the Title of the great Epistolizer; and this he sometimes gave himself. Sciat se dignum fuisse invidiâ magni Franciæ Epistolarii (30). — Let him know he has drawn upon himself the Envy of the great Epistolizer of France. The first Letters, he published, were not near so good as those he wrote after his Retirement; and yet the latter did not sell any thing like the former. Sorel had reason to make this Observation (31); and the Critic Maimbourg was not to blame for repeating it (32). This shews the capricious Humour of the Public.

(28) Balzac, Entretien, 7.

(29) The seventh Letter of the fifth Book, in the Volume to Conrart. See also the Choice Letters, pag. 15. and the Letters to Chapelain, pag. 81, Edit. of Holland.

(30) Select Epistles, pag. 288.

(31) Sorel, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 135.

(32) Preface to the New Letters on Maimbourg's History of Calvinism.

[H] His

Digitized by Google

Sprightlineſs, which ſhines in thoſe of Voiture; yet they are very pleaſing, and have a certain lively and ſerious Gaiety, almoſt inimitable [H]. There appear alſo, in all his Writings, a great many Touches of Learning, well choſen, and well applied. In a Word, one cannot ſufficiently admire, conſidering in what condition he found the French Tongue, how he could open his way to ſuch a neatneſs of Style. It muſt not be wondered at, that his Writings ſavour of Labour. Elevation, and Grandeur, was his principal Character; which cannot be attained without Meditation. In all probability, future Ages will do his Works Juſtice, for the long Diſcredit, they ſuffered, by means of ſome Critics: Which did not hinder a great number of very excellent Judges from perſevering conſtantly in their firſt Admiration (d). He was a good Latin Poet; and his Latin Letters ſhew, that he wrote That Language in very great Purity. If he had many Enemies, who wrote againſt him [I], he had, on the other ſide, a very great number of Friends, and Admirers (e); and there were few Perſons of Merit, either French or Foreigners, who, in travelling through France, did not take the Pleaſure of making him a Viſit [K]. He was one of the forty Members of the French Academy [L]. Cardinal Mazarin endeavoured (d) See what Mr Menage ſaid of Mr Balzac's Eloquence, Menagiana, pag. 112, 113, 114. See alſo Mr Perrault in Balzac's Elogy.

(e) The great DES CARTES loved and eſteemed him very much. See his Life by Mr Baillet, Vol. I. pag. 159, & ſeq.

[H] His Letters ------ have ------ a certain lively and ſerious Gaiety, almoſt inimitable.] Let us hear what Richelet ſays (33). "Balzac does not "make a Complaint, which has not in it ſomething "witty, new, and eloquent. —— He had a pleaſing "ſprightly Melancholy: This appears in his Letters, "and he never ſpeaks of it without charming the "Heart, and inſpiring Delight. —— He diſcovers "there a certain Melancholy full of Charms, which "engages more than all the Gaiety in the World."

(33) Richelet, Lett. p. 81, 82.

[I] He had a great many Enemies, who wrote againſt him.] The Chancellor Seguier, having prevented the Publication of a Book compoſed againſt Balzac in 1636, received, a little while after, a Letter from that Author (34), which contains the following Words: "So long as there are none but theſe Pen-"Gladiators, who preſent themſelves for Licence to "appear in print, be not ſo ſparing of the Prince's "Favours, but abate a little of your Severity. If "it was a new thing, perhaps I ſhould not be diſ-"pleaſed with the Suppreſſion of the firſt Libel, "which ſhould abuſe me; but now there are as "many of them, as will make a ſmall Library, I am "very well pleaſed to ſee the Number increaſed, "and I take delight in raiſing a monumental heap "of Stones, which Envy has caſt at me, without do-"ing me any harm." Among thoſe, who wrote againſt him, beſides the Perſons already mentioned, we may reckon Daniel Heinſius, who anſwered, with ſome ſourneſs, the Criticiſms, which Balzac had made on the Herodes Infanticida. See the Thirty fifth Entretien of Balzac upon this, and the Twenty fifth Letter of the firſt Book of Chapelain, and the twentieth of the ſecond Book. Salmaſius, who was Heinſius's Enemy, and Balzac's Friend, appeared in this Diſpute, and adjudged the Victory to his Friend: but a Miniſter of Languedoc, whoſe Name was Croi (35), took arms againſt Balzac in favour of Heinſius: and yet, a little while after, he wrote very ſharply againſt Heinſius; but it was indeed on other matters. Nicolas Bourbon, of the French Academy, is alſo one of the Number. See what the Hiſtorian of the Academy ſays of it (36). We muſt not forget Coſtar, who, thinking, that Balzac had, by way of Jealouſy, engaged Mr de Girac to criticize Voiture, addreſſed to him the Defence of Voiture, and ſtuft it full of ſtinging Railleries. The Blow was felt, and the matter came at laſt to an open War. And Coſtar threw off the Mask. See how Mr Girard reproaches him for it in the Preface to Balzac's Entretiens. There are ſome Facts in the Menagiana very proper to be inſerted here. "Mr de Balzac, after having obliged Mr de "Girac to write in Latin, againſt the Letters of Voi-"ture, engaged alſo Mr Coſtar in the Defence of "Voiture, and to write againſt Mr de Girac; this "was to procure to himſelf the Praiſes of both "Parties. I paſſed through Mans in my return to "Paris, at the ſame time that the Defence was finiſhed. "Mr Coſtar gave me two Copies of it, the one to be "ſent to Mr de Pinchesne, Nephew to Mr Voiture, "and the other to Mr Conrart. He told me, that "he would willingly ſubmit it to any Alterations, "either by adding, or diminiſhing. One of the "Copies was communicated to Mr Balzac, who "ſent ſome Corrections; but, in the mean while, "the Work was printed. And, as his Corrections "came when the Impreſſion was finiſhed, an Account "was ſent him, that they were received too late; "and the Book appeared ſuch as it was, which "gave him ſome Uneaſineſs (37)." I paſs over the biting Expreſſions beſtowed on Balzac, in the Hexameron Ruſtique. See the Complaint, which Mr Menage makes, for having been introduced in it, to act a Part againſt Mr Balzac (38). I omit alſo what paſſed between Mr du Moulin, and him; for it was only a light skirmiſh of Controverſy, wherein each Party was complimented. Other Diſputes proceeded from it, which were more malignant (39); but, as far as I can remember, Mr Balzac received only this little Blow in it; Vir ingenio compto & Gallicæ eloquentiæ laude clarus Balzacus, ſed in religionis negotio pluſquam infans. —— Balzac famous for his fine Underſtanding, and his French Eloquence, but in Matters of Religion ignorant below the Capacity of a Child. Mr du Moulin gave it him in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Anſwer to Petra-Sancta. No notice was taken of it, as if the Inſult was not known. See the eleventh Letter of the ſecond Book to Chapelain. I ſhould be too tedious, if I ſhould undertake to ſpeak of one de Vaux (40), and all the other Adverſaries of Balzac.

(34) It is the 43*d of the* 3*d Book of the ſecond Part of the* Choice Letters.

(35) He is the Author of the Anonymous Anſwer to Balzac's Letter and Diſcourſe on a Tragedy of Heinſius, entituled, Herodes Infanticida; which Anſwer was printed at Geneva (tho' the Title does not mention it) in 1642.

(36) Pag. 269, Edit. 1672. See alſo the 28*th, and* 36*th Letter of the ſecond Book to* Chapelain.

(37) Menagiana, pag. 166, 167.

(38) Ibid. pag. 323.

(39) The Jeſuit Sylveſter à Petra Sancta having written ſharply againſt du Moulin's Anſwer to Balzac, was paid in the ſame Coin, by du Moulin and Rivetus.

(40) He publiſhed the Tomb of the French Orator.

[K] There were few Perſons —— who —— did not take the Pleaſure of making him a Viſit.] This was a great Incumbrance to him, as appears by theſe words of his ſeventh Entretien. "Some troubleſome "Perſons come here ſometimes, from above an hundred "Leagues diſtance, and that on purpoſe, if they "may be credited, who are almoſt the Death of "him, beginning with their firſt Compliment, that "his great Reputation, and the Celebrity, which he "has given to the Place of his Abode, have obliged "them to come and ſee A Perſon ſo well known, "and A Village ſo renowned; ſo that he ought "not to take amiſs ſo juſt and obliging a Curioſity. "Some Days ſince, one of theſe curious Perſons "began his Harangue with, The Reſpect and Venera-"tion, which he always had for him, and for the "Gentlemen his Books. Nothing can be more Hi-"ſtorical than this; by which you ſee how far the "Style of Compliments may be carried." They were not only learned Men, who went to ſee him, but great Lords alſo, and I am much deceived, if the Count de Pigneranda did not do him that Honour, when he paſſed through that Country, in his Return to Spain. Mr Balzac informs us with Pleaſure, that the ſame Count had reproached him for the ardent Zeal of his Pen, in the Defence of the Honour of France. This we find in the Letter, wherein he confutes the current Report, that he had compoſed a Manifeſto for the Prince of Condé, in 1651 (41).

(41) It is printed at the end of the Chriſtian Socrates.

[L] He was one of the forty Members of the French Academy.] Mr Pelliſon, having related, from the Regiſter of the Academy, that, on the thirteenth Day of March, 1634, Mr de Boiſrobert produced a Letter, which he had wrote, on his own Authority, to Mr de Balzac, to acquaint him, that, if he ſhould requeſt of the Society, by Letter, to be admitted among them, it would readily be granted. I ſay, Mr Pelliſon, having related this, adds, That he did not find in the Regiſter what followed upon it; but that undoubtedly Mr Balzac was, upon his Anſwer, admitted, a little while after, into the Academy (42). Mr Balzac did not find Mr Pelliſon a faithful Hiſtorian

(42) Hiſtory of the Academy, pag. 221.

Digitized by Google

endeavoured to recall him to Court (f). Queen Chriſtina was very kind to him, and deſired him to write to her (g). The greateſt Lords of the Kingdom gave him, in his Deſert (h), many Marks of their Eſteem (i). His greateſt Excellency was, that he not only lived and died in his Retreat as a good Man, but alſo as a good Chriſtian. While he was living, he ſet a-part Eight thouſand Crowns of his Eſtate for Pious Uſes (k). He cauſed two Chambers to be built for him, in the Convent of the Capuchins of Angoulême [M], where he often reſided (l). It was there that he compoſed his Chriſtian Socrates. He ſpoke ſome very fine things on his Death-bed, and, by his Will, ordered himſelf to be buried in the Hoſpital of Our Lady of the Angels in Angoulême, at the Feet of the Poor, that were buried there (m). He bequeathed twelve thouſand Livres to that Hoſpital, and left a Fund, of an hundred Livres a Year, to be given every two Years as a Prize to him, who, in the Judgment of the French Academy, ſhould beſt compoſe a Diſcourſe on a Pious Subject (n). He died the eighteenth of February 1654 [N]. The Sieur Moriſcet, a Canon of Angoulême, made his Funeral Oration, and another Moriſcet, Brother of the former, and Advocate in the Preſidial of the ſame City, cauſed a Diſcourſe to be printed in Praiſe of the Deceaſed (o). An Edition of all Balzac's Works was publiſhed at Paris, in the Year 1665, in two Volumes in Folio, with a Preface of the Abbot Caſſagnes, a Member of the French Academy. Conſult the Illuſtrious Men of Mr Perrault, and you will find there an Elogy of John Lewis Guez.

(f) See Balzac's firſt Letter to that Cardinal, in the Vol. of Letters to Conrart.

(g) See the 11*th Letter to* Conrart, lib. 3. and ſeveral others in the ſame Volume.

(h) Thus he was pleaſed to call the Place of his Reſidence.

(i) This appears in an hundred Places of his Letters.

(k) Epiſtle Dedicatory of Balzac's Entretiens.

(l) Moriſcet, Account of his Death.

(m) St Romuald, Chronol. Abrigm. ad Ann. 1654.

(n) This was not begun to be executed before the Year 16-1. See the Hiſt. of the French Academy, Edit. 2. pag. 555.

(o) St Romuald, ubi ſupra.

in this matter: He acknowledges, that Mr Boiſrobert had exhorted him ſeveral times to write a complimentary Letter to the Academy, and had even threatened him from the Cardinal, if he ſhould refuſe to write That Compliment: But he declares, that he wrote no Anſwer, and that, about five or ſix Months afterwards, he had an Account of his being made a Member of the Academy, and of his Name having been ſeen in the Sun of the little honeſt Man, Mr de la Peyre (43). From whence he concludes, that, if a Letter had been preſented, as from him, to the Academy, it was a falſe one. This is what he wrote to Mr Conrart, the Twenty ſecond of September 1653. It is not known, what anſwer he received from him to clear the matter; but it appears by a Letter of the third of November, of the ſame Year, that Mr Conrart had undeceived him. One would almoſt ſuſpect, that Mr Conrart had ſatisfied him, that he had ſeen the very Original of That Compliment under his own Hand; from whence we muſt conclude, that the greateſt Wits do not always remember the Letters they have written ſome Years before. What is unqueſtionable is, that Mr de Balzac took himſelf to be a true and abſolute Academiſt; for the Regiſter of the fourteenth of April, 1636, teſtifies, that he read ſome part of his Prince in the Academy (44); and it has been proved by his printed Letters, that he "ſent ſome of his "Works to Monſieur du Chatelet, deſiring him to "read them in the Academy, and to accompany "them with ſome of his Words, which, he ſaid, "would not only ſuffice to excuſe him to them for "the Thanks, but alſo for the Speech, which he "owed them (45)." He had juſt before ſaid, "That "the Honour which the Academy had done him, "to admit him into their Body, without obliging "him to go to Paris, were two ſingular Favours "at one time." I remember two Paſſages in his Letters, wherein he acknowledges the Gentlemen of the Academy for his Brethren. The firſt is in the ſixteenth Page of his Choice Letters, and the laſt in the Ninty fifth Page of his Letters to Chapelain.

(43) In the Year 1635, La Peyre dedicated his Book, intitled The Explication of the Times, to the Academy, with this Title, To the Eminent, adorned with the Cardinal's Picture engraved on a Copper Plate, with a Crown of Rays round it, on each of which was inſcribed the Name of an Academiſt. Hiſtory of the Academy, p. 195.

(44) Ibid. pag. 221.

(45) Ibid. pag. 106.

[M] He cauſed two Chambers to be built for him in the Convent of the Capuchins of Angoulême.] I have not read any where, but in the Menagiana, that he had a Deſign to put on the Habit of that Order. "Mr de Balzac was ſo affected with Devotion, that he "entered into a Convent of the Capuchins, where he "had a Mind to put on their Habit. Nevertheleſs, "he did not die there (46)." Perhaps he deſired, like many others, to die in the Habit of St Francis.

(46) Menagiana, pag. 238.

[N] He died the eighteenth of Feb. 1654.] The Liſt of the Academiſts, printed at the end of the ſecond Edition of The Hiſtory of the Academy, makes Mr de Balzac live 'till the Year 1657, ſince, in that Year, it names Hardouin de Perefixe, Archbiſhop of Paris, as his Succeſſor. On the contrary, the Liſt of the deceaſed Academiſts, printed at the end of the State of France, of the Year 1680, mentions Mr de Balzac as dead a conſiderable time before the Year 1654; ſince it places him before Baro and Baudouin, who died before the Year 1651. If Mr Pelliſſon had been concerned in the ſecond Edition of The Hiſtory of the Academy, the two Faults, which I have quoted, would not have been ſeen in the Liſt; one whereof relates to the time, when Balzac died, the other to the Perſon that ſucceeded him, who is not Mr de Perefixe. Moreover, Mr de Perefixe was not Archbiſhop of Paris, in the Year 1657. But Mr Pelliſſon has not examined theſe Particulars. Mr Baillet, who, without doubt, believed the contrary, is very excuſable, for having thought, that, on ſuch an Authority, he might place the Death of Balzac in the Year 1657 (47). As to the Day of his Death, Moreri, St Romuald (48), Henningus de Witte (49), Mr Perrault, and ſeveral others, ſay it was the Twenty eighth of February. But the Perſons, whom I have conſulted, informed me, that it was the nineteenth of February, according to the Contract made with the French Academy, concerning the Fund that Balzac left it, and according to a Manuſcript Letter of the Sieur Moriſcet. Laſtly, it was the eighteenth of February, if we may rely on theſe two things: the one is, that, in the Preface to Balzac's Works, it is affirmed, that the Account of his Death was written the very next Day after: the other is, that this Account is dated the nineteenth of February, 1654.

(47) Baillet, Judgm. on Poets, Tom. 4, n. 1487.

(48) In the Table of his Chronol. Journal, printed in 1664; for he ſays nothing of Balzac under Febr. 28.

(49) Diar. Biographic. ad Ann. 1654.

BANCK (LAURENCE) a Native of Norcopin in Sweden, was Profeſſor of the Civil Law, in the Univerſity of Franeker, for the ſpace of fifteen Years (a). He gained ſo great a Reputation, while he was a Student there, that, upon his Return thither from his Travels into France, Italy, Spain, &c. the Civil Law Chair was preſented to him, together with a very good Salary (b). He died the thirteenth of October 1662 (c). I ſhall mention his Works below [A], and particularly an Edition, which he publiſhed, of the famous Book of Taxes of the Romiſh Chancery [B]. It is a Work ſufficiently curious to be conſidered a little more

(a) Witte, Diarium Biogr. ad Ann. 1662.

(b) Banck. Epiſt. Dedic. Taxæ Cancellariæ Romanæ.

(c) Witte, ubi ſupra.

[A] I ſhall mention his Works below.] He publiſhed, at Franeker, in 1649, a Book intituled, de Tyrannide Papæ in Reges & Principes Chriſtianos. Seven Years after, he publiſhed Roma triumphans, ſeu Inauguratio Innocentii X. As to his Pieces, De Bancæ Ruptoribus; De Duellis; De Conſiliis & Conſiliariis Principum, &c. (1); I cannot aſcertain their Dates.

(1) Witte, Diar. ad Ann. 1662.

[B] —— and an Edition, he publiſhed, of the Taxes of the Romiſh Chancery.] I have related, in another Place (2), ſeveral things concerning theſe Taxes, and particularly mentioned the Edition of them, publiſhed by Pinet, in the Year 1564. I have obſerved alſo, that d'Aubigné quotes the Edition of Paris, in 1520. This is not the firſt, as ſome have imagined; for the Edition

(2) In Rem. [B] of the Article PINET.

Digitized by Google

more particularly, and deſerves our making ſome Reflections on it, as well to rectify what we have already ſaid of it elſewhere (d), as to illuſtrate what ſeveral other Authors have written about it, who have not explained themſelves with due exactneſs.

(d) In Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

Edition of Bois-le-duc, 1664 (3), ſhews, that this Book was printed at Rome, in the Year 1514, and at Cologn (4), in 1515; and was entituled Regulæ, Conſtitutiones, Reſervationes, Cancellari, S. Domini noſtri Leonis Papæ decimi, noviter edite & publicate, and that, in fol. 67, it has theſe Words: Taxæ Cancellariæ, per Marcellum Silber, alias Franck, Romæ, in Campo Floræ, Anno M.D.XIV, die XVIII Novembris impreſſe, finiunt feliciter. - - - - - The Chancery Taxes, printed by Marcellus Silber, alias Franck, at Rome, in the Campus Floræ, the eighteenth of November, 1514, is happily completed. This is atteſted by two of the Echevins of Bois-le-duc, together with the Town-Clerk, who had collated, Word for Word, this Edition of Rome, with That publiſhed by Stephen du Mont, Bookſeller at Bois-le-duc, in the Year 1664, and entituled, Taxæ Cancellariæ Apoſtolicæ, & Taxæ Sacræ Pœnitentiariæ Apoſtolicæ. In this laſt we find (5) the Paſſage, quoted by d'Aubigné, from the Paris Edition, in 1530 (6): Abſolutio pro eo qui matrem, Sororem, aut aliam conſanguineam vel affinem ſuam, aut commatrem, carnaliter cognovit, gr. v. Abſolutio pro eo qui Virginem deflorarit, gr. vi. (7). —— The Abſolution of him who has lain with his Mother, Siſter, or other Relation, either in Conſanguinity, or Affinity, is taxed at Gr. v. The Abſolution of him who has deflowered a Virgin, Gr. vi. This is alſo to be met with in the Edition of Franeker, in 1651 (8). I am ſurprized it ſhould be wanting in the Edition of du Pinet, entituled, Taxe des Parties Caſualles de la Boutique du Pape. This is in Latin and French, with Notes added by the Editor. He was greatly to blame, in not mentioning on what authentic Copies he formed his Edition; for it differs from the others, both in the order of Matters, and in the Denomination of Monies. This mentions only Tournois, Ducats, and Carlins; and the others only Gros: at leaſt the Ducat and Carlin is very rarely mentioned. D'Aubigné affirms (9), that the Paris Edition ſays, The Murder of a Father, or Mother, is rated at one Ducat, and five Carlins; but, in the Edition of Franeker (10), and in That of Bois-le-duc (11), it is, " Abſolutio pro eo qui interfecit patrem, ma-
" trem, ſororem, uxorem - - - - - - - g. v. vel vij (12).
" The Abſolution of him, who has murdered his Father,
" Mother, Siſter, Wife, - - - - - - - - - at g. v. or vij."
I ſay, I am ſurprized, that this Article of Inceſt ſhould be miſſing in the Edition of du Pinet (13), in which we find more enormous Articles; Theſe, for inſtance; " Abſolutio à lapſu carnis ſuper quocun-
" que actu libidinoſo commiſſo per clericum, etiam
" cum monialibus, intra & extra ſepta monaſterii, aut
" cum conſanguineis vel affinibus, aut filiâ ſpirituali,
" aut quibuſdam aliis, ſive ab unoquoque de per ſe,
" ſive ſimul ab omnibus abſolutio petatur cum diſ-
" penſatione ad ordines & beneficia, cum inhibitione,
" tur. 36. duc. 3. Si verò cum illis petatur ab-
" ſolutio etiam a crimine commiſſo contra naturam,
" vel cum brutis, cum diſpenſatione, ut ſupra, &
" cum inhibitione, turon. 90. duc. 12. carl. 16. Si
" verò petatur tantùm abſolutio à crimine contra na-
" turam, vel cum brutis, cum diſpenſatione, & inhi-
" bitione, turon. 36. duc. 9. Abſolutio pro moniali,
" qua ſe permiſit pluries cognoſci intra & extra ſepta
" monaſterii, cum rehabilitate ad dignitates illius or" dinis, etiam abbatialem, turon. 36. duc. 9. Ab-
" ſolutio pro concubinario, cum diſpenſatione ad or-
" dines & beneficia, turon. 21. duc. 5. carlin. 6 (14).
" - - - - - - - - The Abſolution and Pardon of all Acts
" of Fornication committed by a Cleric, in what " manner ſoever, whether it be with a Nun, with-
" in or without the Limits of the Nunnery, or
" with his Relations, in Conſanguinity, or Affinity,
" or with his God-daughter, or with any other Wo-
" man whatſoever; and whether alſo the ſaid Abſolu-
" tion be given in the Name only of the Cleric him-
" ſelf, or of him jointly with his Whores, with a
" Diſpenſation to enable him to take and hold his Or- " ders, and eccleſiaſtical Benefices, and with a Clauſe
" alſo of Inhibition, coſts Thirty ſix Tournois, and
" nine or three Ducats. And if, beſides the above,
" he receives Abſolution from Buggery, and the Crime
" againſt Nature, although committed with brute
" Beaſts, with the Diſpenſation and Clauſe of Inhibi-
" tion, as before, he muſt pay ninety Tournois, twelve
" Ducats, and ſix Carlin's. But, if he only receives
" Abſolution from Buggery, or the Crime againſt Na-
" ture, and committed with brute Beaſts, with the " Diſpenſation and Clauſe of Inhibition, he pays only
" Thirty ſix Tournois, and nine Ducats. A Nun,
" having committed Fornication ſeveral times within
" and without the Bounds of her Nunnery, ſhall be
" abſolved, and enabled to hold all the Dignities of her
" Order, even that of Abbeſs, by paying Thirty ſix
" Tournois, and nine Ducats. The Abſolution of him,
" who keeps a Concubine, with Diſpenſation to take
" and hold his Orders, and eccleſiaſtical Benefices,
" coſts Twenty one Tournois, five Ducats, and ſix
" Carlin's (15)." I conjecture, that du Pinet followed the Edition, which the Proteſtant Princes inſerted amongſt the Cauſes of their rejecting the Council of Trent, and which was entituled, Taxa Sacræ Pœnitentiariæ (16). Mr Heidegger recites ſome Pieces of it, which exactly agree with the Edition of du Pinet (17). It is obſerved by ſome, that there is an Epitome of the Taxes of the Romiſh Chancery, at pag. 603, & ſeq. of a Work entituled, Luculenta Deductio Cauſarum recuſati Concilii Tridentini à Proteſtantium Germaniæ Principibus publicatarum, and at the beginning of a Book of Hunnius de Indulgentiis, and at pag. 216, & ſeq. of Muſculus's Common Places (18). The Author of the Book, entituled Simonia Curiæ Romæ, printed in 1612, has inſerted in it this Paſſage of the ſaid Common Places (19). Compare this with the Remark [A], of the Article TUPPIUS.

We ſhall ſay ſomething of the Edition, publiſhed by Laurence Banck. It was printed at Franeker, in the Year 1651, in 8vo. He ſays, he conſulted the moſt ancient Copies, both printed and Manuſcript; and, by comparing them Word for Word, ſupplied from thoſe, which were moſt perfect, what was wanting in the others. He made uſe of the Edition of Cologn, in 1523, of that of Wittemburg, in 1538, of that of Venice, in 1584 (20), and of a Manuſcript, which had been communicated by John Baptiſt Sibon, a Bernardin Friar, and Reader of the College at Rome. By this means he enlarged his Edition, ſomething beyond any of the former. He added a ſort of Gloſſary, or Notes, to explain the difficult Terms. He alſo ſubjoined a ſmall Piece, in Italian, containing the Taxes in Uſe, under Pope Innocent X; and explained the Value of Money, according to the Uſage of that Time. His Notes have been of great Service to the Author of the Remarks, added to the Edition of Bois-le duc. Note, that, in the Preface of this here, it is obſerved, that the Inquiſitors have put the Tax of the Chancery in the Liſt of condemned Books. " Naſcentem ſuffocare conati ſunt ipſi Authores, &
" in Indice Liborum prohibitorum, ex Patrum Con-
" cilii Tridentini authoritate, Hiſpaniarumque Regis
" & ducis Alban. decreto, Leodii anno 1570 edito,
" inter primæ Claſſis Authores atro calculo notarunt
" (21). —— The Authors themſelves endeavoured
" to ſtifle it in the Birth, and branded it among the " Works of the firſt Claſs, in the Liſt of prohibited
" Books, publiſhed at Liege, in the Year 1570, by
" the Authority of the Fathers of the Council of Trent,
" and by the Decree of the King of Spain, and Duke
" d'Alva." I have not This Edition of the Index Librorum prohibitorum. That, which I make uſe of, and which was copied from That of Madrid, in 1667, in Folio, places, only under the third Claſs, Praxis & Taxa Officinæ Pœnitentiariæ Papæ, ab Hæreticis depravata (22): Obſerve, that it is only condemned on the Suppoſition of it's having been corrupted by Heretics; and the Index, publiſhed at Rome, by Order of Alexander VII, uſes the ſame Words with this of Spain (23). But let them ſuppoſe as much as they pleaſe, that it has been corrupted by Heretics, the Editions of it, which cannot be diſowned, as That of Rome, in 1514; That of Cologn, in 1515; Thoſe of Paris, in 1520, in 1545, and in 1625 (24); and Thoſe of Venice (25), one in the ſixth Volume of the Oceanus Juris, publiſhed in 1533, the other in the fifteenth Volume of the ſame Collection, reprinted in 1584: Theſe Editions, I ſay, are more than ſufficient

(3) It is in Latin and Dutch, in 8vo See Preface, and p. 230.

(4) By Goſwin Colinius.

(5) Taxæ Canc Apoſt. pag. 95, 96, Edit. of Bois-le-duc.

(6) See Remark [I] of the Article PINET.

(7) That is, he muſt pay 5 Gros.

(8) It is that publiſhed by Banck. See pag. 127.

(9) See Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

(10) P. 132.

(11) P. 103.

(12) That is, he muſt pay 5 or 7 Gros.

(13) It was printed at Lyons in 1564, and at Leyden in 1607, and at Amſterdam in 1701, with a new French Tranſlation. Theſe 3 Editions are in 8vo.

(14) Taxe des Parties Caſuelles de la Boutique du Pape, pag. 65, & ſeq. Edit. of Lyons, 1564 in 8vo.

(15) I have followed du Pinet's Tranſlation.

(16) See Heidegger's Myſter. Babyl. magnæ, Tom. II, p. 350, & ſeq.

(17) Ibid. p. 350, & ſeq.

(18) Daniel Francus, Diſquiſit. Academ. de Indicibus Libr. prohib. & expurgan. p. 115. Lipſ. 1684. 4to.

(19) Lydii Analecta in Clemang. pag. 17.

(20) He means that publiſhed in Tom. XV, Part. I. pag. 368, of Tractatus Tractatuum, ſeu Oceanus Juris Univerſi.

(21) Preface of Taxæ Cancell. & Pœnitent. Apoſtol. Edit. of Bois-le-Duc.

(22) Indices Libror. prohibitor. & expurgand. Hiſpanicus Romanus. Genev. 1667 in Folio, pag. 859, col. 2.

(23) Ibid. in Indice Roma. ejuſd. Edit. pag. 106.

(24) Mr Drelincourt cites theſe 3 Editions of Paris. See his Words in Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

(25) Heideg. Myſter. Babylon. magn. Tom. I. p. 547.

Digitized by Google

ficient to justify the Reproaches of the Protestants, and to cover the Church of Rome with Confusion. Our Laurence Banck was ignorant of almost all these Editions, I have particularized, as also of That of Francfort, in 1612, in 4to (26). Rivet, Voëtius, Hottinger, and several other, Helluones Librorum, great Readers, have falsely believed, that the Edition of 1520, was the first (27); for they have principally urged this Edition against the Roman Catholics, who would not allow, that ever the Taxation of the Chancery had appeared by Authority. Voëtius relates, that, in 1633, a Chancellor of Bois-le-duc declared he would abjure his Catholicism, if any one could shew him those Abominations, which the Protestants had quoted, as from the Taxes of the Romish Chancery. Application was made to Rivet, who lent his Copy of the Paris Edition, in 1520 (28). Voëtius, in giving this Account, takes Occasion to exhort, very pathetically, the Library-keepers of Protestant Universities, to preserve and buy up the authentic Copies of this Work. " Quia autem, says he (29), " hic Taxæ Pœnitentiariæ mentio facta, moneo exemplaria pauca hodiè haberi posse (quâ & quorum " arte facilè prudentiores conjiciant;) aliqua tamen " in manibus nostrorum supereſſe editionis Parisiensis " 1520, in 4°, apud Tussain Denis. Edita etiam est " Venetiis, cum quamplurimis aliis Tractatibus in " Oceano Juris. Addo, rem & librum à Pontificiis " passim negari, ubi ita usu venit, ut nostri, alle- " gando illam Taxam, mendacii & calumniæ suspecti " fiant, imò & arguentur. Accidit anno 1633, ut " quis J. Consultus idemque Senator Sylvæducensis, " desertionem & rejectionem Papatus mineretur, (mo- " re ipsis non insolito,) si quidem tam abominanda, " qualia ex Taxâ nostri referunt, demonstrari possent. " Ut ampliss. & consulto nuic Viro ex asse satisfieret, " quæsitum apud exemplari (30), me de etiam à me " postulatum est. Quod cum mihi ab ipsis pontifi- " ciis editum nullum esset, petii commodato à cele- " berrimo Theologo Andreâ Riveto. Ante biennium " alibi concertatione inter nostros & Pontificios quos- " dam obortâ super eâdem hâc Taxâ, denuo consul- " tus, commonstravi Bibliothecam D. Riveti, in quâ " certo scirem exemplar edit. Paris. 1520. haberi; " quippe quod ipse ante annos aliquot manibus & ocu- " lis meis usurpassem, & Fratribus Sylvæducensibus " ex summi illius Theolog. concessione aliquamdiu " usurpandum misissem. Velim hâc occasione obte- " statos omnes publicos Reformatarum Scholarum, " Ecclesiarum, Politiarum, Bibliothecarios, exempla- " ria illa, si quæ in ipsorum potestate sint, capsis " inclusa diligenter custodiant, ne à plagiariis aufe- " rantur; aut, si non sint, hoc agant, ut à privatis " sive Bibliopolis, sive Viris literatis, prece aut pretio " quovis redimant. —— But, since I have here men- " tioned the Pœnitentiary Fees, I must take notice, " that there are but few Copies of it now to be met " with, (by whose means, and what Contrivance, is " not difficult to be conjectured,) though we have some " of the Paris Edition, in 1520, in 4to, by Tussain " Denis, still remaining in our Hands. It was also " published at Venice, with several other Tracts, in " the Oceanus Juris. I must add, that both the Fact, " and the Book, are denied by the Papist, insomuch " that when we cite those Fees, we are not only sus- " pected, but even accused, of Forgery and Calumny. " It happened in the Year 1633, that a certain Ci- " vilian, and Counsellor of Bois-le-duc, engaged (by " an usual Bravo) to renounce Popery, if those Abomi- " nations could be proved, which our Protestants quo- " ted from those Fees. In order to give full Satisfacti- " on to this honourable and learned Person, great In- " quiry was made for a Copy of it, and, among others, " Application was made to me. As I had not an E- " dition by me, which was published by the Papists, I " borrowed one of That celebrated Divine, Andrew " Rivet. About two Years after, being consulted again, " upon another Dispute between our People, and some " of the Papists, concerning these Fees, I shewed them " the Library of Rivet, where I knew there was a " Copy of the Paris Edition, 1520; having myself pe- " rused it, some Years before, and sent it, by the Fa- " vour of that great Divine, to be perused, for some " time, by the Fraternity of Bois-le-duc. I would " take this Occasion earnestly to intreat all pub- " lic Library-keepers of Protestant Seminaries, " Churches, and Societies, who have any of these Co- " pies in their Custody, to take particular Care and " secure them in their Cases, out of the Reach of " Plagiaries; and those, who have not any of them, " to make it their Business to procure such as are to " be met with in private Hands, either of Booksellers, " or Men of Learning, at any Rate."

I take the Romish Controvertists, who have not a Word to say against the Authority of the Edition of Rome, or That of Paris, to be under great Perplexity. This appears from the Answers of Abbot Richard to the Prejugez of Mr Jurieu. This Minister had published the Abominations of the Tax of the Chancery (31). The Abbot replies, that these were only particular Facts, which had never been authorized by the Laws and Canons of the Church of Rome (32). " We find, indeed, continues he (33), that [Mr Jurieu] " relates * these Taxes from an old Book of the Ro- " mish Chancery. But is it not extremely ridiculous, " to endeavour to pass upon the World a Book of " Taxes for Laws and Canons? Would it not be " making a Jest of all Civil Law, to insert Tables " of Taxes into the Code, and reckon them in the " Number of Laws? Would not this be doing great " Honour to the Gentlemen concerned in them? " Let Mr Jurieu, therefore, inform himself, what " are the Laws and Canons of the Church of Rome; " and let him know, in the mean time, that these " old Taxes of the Chancery of Rome are not only " of no Authority in the Church, but have always " been regarded by her with Horror. These Taxes " of the Chancery began but under the Pontificate of " John XXII, about the Year 1320; and the Taxes " of the Pœnitentiary appeared only towards the " Year 1336, under Benedict XII †; and both were " immediately suppressed, and ever afterwards ranked " in the Number of prohibited Books, according to " the Remark of Mr du Mont, who printed them in " the Year 1664; which sufficiently shews the Church " of Rome's Abhorrence of those Taxes, and that she " is far from proposing, or observing, them for Rules, " as Mr Jurieu would make us believe she has " done. Let him therefore consider, that the Acts " of the Officers of the Court of Rome are but par- " ticular Acts, and not at all the Acts of the " Church." This Answer is far from sufficient; for, in the first place, the Church of Rome has never shewn, by the Suppression of these Taxes, that she has had them in Abhorrence. They have been printed thrice at Paris, twice at Cologn, and twice at Venice; and some of these Editions have been published since Claude d'Espence exclaimed publickly against the Enormities of this Book. We have seen, that the Inquisition of Spain, and That of Rome, have condemned it only as they suppose it to have been corrupted by Heretics. I must add, in the second place, that the Suppression of such a Work is not a sure Sign of disapproving the Rules it contains. This may only signify, that they repented of the Publication of it, as it gave so fair a Handle for the Heretics to reproach the Court of Rome, and to wound the Church of Rome through the Sides of the Pope. These ought to be esteemed Mysteries of State, Arcana Imperii, not to be divulged (34). Are there not Persons of the same Opinion as to Ceremonies (35)? I pass by many other Considerations, which a Controvertist might alledge against Mr Jurieu's Adversary; but I shall not content myself with observing, that Claude d'Espence exclaimed, very loudly, against the Abomination of these Taxes (36); I must also observe, that the Protestant Controvertists cite This, in all their Disputes, and that the Spanish Inquisition would have this Passage expunged from That Doctor's Book (37). Note, that the Inquisition of Rome has condemned Laurence Banck's Edition of the Taxes (38).

(26) Catalogue of the Oxford Library, pag. 132.

(27) Franci Disquisit. de Indicibus Libr. prohib. p. 115, 116.

(28) Voët. Disputat. Theolog. Tom. II, pag. 296.

(29) Id. ib.

(30) There is an Error in this Place. The Errata of the Author corr ct it, me de ex- explari. But this does not rectify the Error. Daniel Francus, Differt de Indicibus Libr. prohibit. p. 115, cites this Passage thus: quæsitum apud alios de exemplari, etiam à me postulatum, exemplar.

(31) Jurieu, Prejugés legit. contre le Papisme, Tom. I. p. pag. 295, & seq.

(32) Richard, Examen des Prejugés de Mr Jurieu, pag. 218.

(33) Ibid. pag. 319.

* Part. 2. pag. 295. of his Prejugés.

† Polydor. Virgil. de Invent. Rerum, lib. VIII, c. II.

(34) Compare this with that of Hor. de Art Poët. ver. 182. —— non tamen intus Digna geri promes in Scenam: multaque tolles Ex oculis, quæ mox narret facundia præsens. Improper Sights do but disgrace the Scene, Such had much better be describ'd than seen.

(35) See Remark [D] of the Article GRASSIS.

(36) See a Passage of Mr Drelincourt, cited in Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

(37) Index Hispan. Libror. prohibit. p. 232, col. 1.

(38) Index Rom. Libr. prohibitor. pag. 124, col. 2. & pag. 261.

BANDEL (MATTHEW), born at Castro-novo in Lombardy, flourished in the XVIth Century (a). He was a Dominican. Moreri (b) has repeated the greatest part of what Vossius had said of him; but he ought to have added some other curious matters of Fact, and not to have omitted two Circumstances, which were taken notice of by Vossius: One of which is, That the Translation of Egesippus is in Italian;

(a) These Words of Vossius, circa annum 1500. vivebat Matth. Bandellus, in pag. 677, de Histor. Latinis, are not worth regarding.

(b) Moreri under the Word BANDELLA.

Digitized by Google

Italian; The other, that the Inhabitants of Fermo caused the Harangue, which Matthew Bandel made in praise of their City, in the Year 1513, to be placed among their Records (c). Here follow some Supplements. This Friar, being at Mantua, contracted a very strict Friendship with Julius Cæsar Scaliger, which continued all his Life-time, and which he carefully cultivated in Guienne [A]. He was some Months Bishop of Agen, and there he composed, in the Italian Tongue, the Histories, or the Gallant Novels, which made him so famous. I have quoted them in the Remark [M] of the Article LEO X. and in the Remark [I] of the Article MAHOMET II. They are each of them dedicated to some Person of his Acquaintance (d). The Twenty first of his Second Part is dedicated to Lucretia de Gonzague, to whom he had been Preceptor (e). He dedicated another to his Friend Scaliger. They have been translated into French, and we must say a word about the Judgment, which the Translator made of them [B]. The Catalogue of Thuanus's Library (f) informs me, that the three first Parts were printed at Lucca, in the Year 1554, in Quarto, and the fourth at Lyons, in the Year 1573, in Octavo. I wonder, that Mr Menage did not place this Monk in the Catalogue of Ecclesiastics, who have composed Love Verses (g) [C].

(c) Voss. de Hist. Lat. pag. 677.

(d) See Remark [A].

(e) See that Lady's Article.

(f) In pag. 408, of part 2.

(g) It is at the end of the Anti-Baillet

[A] He contracted a Friendship, with Julius Cæsar Scaliger, --- which he cultivated --- in Guienne.] This would scarcely be known, but from these Words: "Eodem tempore Mantuæ degebat Matthæus Bandellus insuper Dominicanus, vir eloquentissimus, "& optimus, qui postea per aliquot menses Episcopus Aginnensis fuit, & Mantuæ Marium Æquicolam summa observantia coluit, atque ibi cum Julio Cæsare arctissima amicitiæ necessitudine conjunctus fuit, quam ab eo tempore, ad supremum usque vitæ diem, in Aquitania perpetuavit. Is, "quum unam historiarum suarum, quas Aginni Etrusca lingua Boccatium imitatus conscripsit Julio dedicaret, eum non solum Scaligerum agnoscit, sed etiam illustrissimum vocat in epistola dedicationis. "Et quum in quatuor tomis ingentibus, singulas singulis summis, & nobilissimis, ac generosissimis viris dedicaverit, neminem eorum majori honore, quam Julium affecit, quum aliquot ex illis illustres vocare nulla fuisset invidia (1). ---- At the same Time lived, at Mantua, Matthew Bandel, a Dominican, a very eloquent, and excellent Man, who was afterwards, for some Months, Bishop of Agen, and, at Mantua, professed a great Esteem for Marius Æquicola, contracting also there a most intimate Friendship, and Familiarity, with Julius Cæsar Scaliger, which he continued afterwards, in Guienne, to the Day of his Death. He dedicated to him one of his Novels, which he wrote in Italian, in Imitation of Boccace, and calls him Illustrious Scaliger, in his Epistle dedicatory. And, though he dedicates every particular Novel, in all the four great Volumes, to so many several Persons of the highest Rank, yet he honours none of them more remarkably than Scaliger, though calling some of Those illustrious was far from a being Compliment." Lucretia de Gonzague wrote two Letters to Father Bandel, which intimate to us, that he was advanced to some Preferment. The first (2) shews, that he was in France (3), the second that he was in Guienne: In the first he is called Reverendo patre, but, in the other, he is stiled Monsignor P. Bandello, and he is congratulated on his new Dignity. There is no Date of the Year to it. He was not yet a Bishop, when Julius Cæsar Scaliger wrote him a Letter (4), on the Death of Fracastorius. The Answer (5), Bandel returned him, is dated Bassennii 22 Novemb. 1553.

(1) Joseph. Scaliger. in Confutatione Fabulæ Burdonianæ, p. 269, 270.

(2) Letters of Lucretia de Gonzague. Venice 1552.

(3) Page 63.

(4) Pag. 56, of his Letters, Edit. of Leyden, 1600.

(5) Letter 57, among those of Julius Cæsar Scaliger.

[B] His Novels have been translated into French, —— Here is the Judgment the Translator made of them.] Observe, first of all, that the first six were done into French, by Peter Boaistau, and the other by Belleforest. The Advertisement to the Reader, prefixed to the first Volume (6), contains these Words: "Desiring also that you would not to take it ill, if I "have not confined myself to the Stile of Bandel; for "his Phrases seemed so harsh to me, his Expressions "so improper, his Discourse so ill put together, and "his Sentences so barren, that I chose rather to "new-mould his Work, and put it into another "Form, than to be such a superstitious Imitator, "having only taken the Subject Matter of the History, as you will easily discover, if you have the "Curiosity to compare my Style with his." Observe here a Fact, which is pretty curious. Belleforest, working on the Thirty seventh Novel, was seized with such a Remorse of Conscience, that he resolved to leave off his Translation. "I will here lay down "my Pen, says he (7), and leave, from henceforth, "these Subjects, which are capable of being turned "every way, and may serve as Lessons of Instruction to some, and, to others, as Examples, to incourage them in their Follies and Wildness; for "what I have done of it, at this time, was rather to "gratify a Friend, than out of any Desire to be accessary to the Publication of any Thing of this "kind. Not that Age exempts me from speaking "merrily and jocosely; but, whatever may be concealed under them, that may colour the too soft, "and tender, Expressions, necessary to be used in "describing Amours, there are different times for "these Merriments: And, besides, I have other "Designs of greater Consequence than Bandel's Histories, or the Amours of Those, who, by their "Example, should deter us from following our sensual Appetite so far, as to become, at last, the "Entertainment of Posterity, by the Memory of our "Follies. This King (8), then, shall put an End to "my Undertaking, and make me, from henceforth, "take my Leave of all prophane Subjects, unless, "sometimes, a more solid History should enliven my "Spirits, and a longer Discourse should encourage "me still to go on with this Author, whom I have rather adorned and amplified, than followed, or "imitated." To excuse what is past, he adds this Remark. "I do not write Love Stories out of La"civiousness, but as one, who laughs at Fools, and "those, that are vainly transported with, and suffer "themselves to be conquered by, their Lusts; and "accuses Adulterers, detests the Infamous, abhors "Murtherers, and is sorry, that there are such "senseless Men in the World, who sacrifice their "Lives for so short a Pleasure, as the Ease of the "Body. In fine, I praise Virtue, and condemn Sin, "wishing, that, as I myself have taken warning, by "these Examples, so I may see others put an End "to their Folly, by the Amendment of their Lives. "If any Body takes more Delight in the merry "Stories, that are in Bandel, let him divert himself with them as much as he pleases: As for me, "(as I have said) I give him up my Share of it, "and leave him also the Happiness and Honour he "may receive from thence, by enriching this dry "Author, and also our Language, with the natural "Sweetness of his Eloquence (9)." See here a French Layman, who scruples to translate, what an Italian Monk had wrote about Love. But this Scruple did not continue long; for Belleforest finished That Translation, and even added some Supplements to it.

(6) Printed at Paris, in 1567; and reprinted, the same Year, at Antwerp.

(7) Belleforest, Tragi-Histories, Tom. III. pag. 53, 54. Edit. of Paris, 1604.

(8) Henry VIII, King of England.

(9) Belleforest, ibid. pag. 65.

[C] Mr Menage has not placed him in the Number of Ecclesiastics, who composed Love Verses.] Bandel wrote some, and was congratulated for them, by his Friends. See Julius Cæsar Scaliger's Epigram, de Bandelli amoribus Thusca lingua decantatis (10), and the four Verses I am going to transcribe:

Dum teneros loquitur dulcis Bandellus amores,
Ipse sui oblitus tela remisit amor.
Seu canit Aonium fontem fontisque sorores,
Fonti ipsi ex illo lactea vena fluit (11).

While sweet Bandellus paints Love's various Charms,
The list'ning God lets fall his useless Arms.
Or, if of Helicon we hear him sing,
His flowing Wit supplies the Muses Spring.

(10) You will find it in Remark [B] of the Article GONZAGUE (Lucretia de)

(11) Julius Cæsar Scaliger in Heroibus, pag. 327, part 1, Posmatum.

The Catalogue of Nicolas Heinsius's Library (12) informs me, that the Canti XI, &c. dal Bandello, were printed, at Agen, in the Year 1545, in 8vo.

(12) In page 200, of Part II.

Digitized by Google

BANDOLE (ANTHONY de), Advocate in the Parliament of Provence, publiſhed a French Tranſlation of Xiphilinus, at Paris, in the Year 1610, in Quarto. He alſo printed, in the ſame City, in 1609, in Quarto, a Parallel between Cæſar, and Henry IV, prefixed to Cæſar's Commentaries, tranſlated into French, and commented on by Vigenere.

BANGIUS (THOMAS), Doctor and Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Copenhagen, was born in the Year 1600 (a). He finiſhed his Studies in Humanity in the College of Ottenſee, in the Iſland of Funen, and, about the Year 1621, he went to Copenhagen, where he continued his Studies with great Succeſs. Gaſper Brochmand, Profeſſor of Divinity, and Biſhop of Sealand, made him Preceptor to his Son. Bangius was, at the ſame time, Preceptor to Chriſtian Friis, eldeſt Son of the Chancellor of Denmark. Having continued that Employ above five Years, he obtained a Penſion of the King, and went to Roſtock, from whence he returned to Copenhagen, upon the Emperor's Troops advancing towards the Baltic Sea. He finiſhed his Courſe of Divinity under Profeſſor Brochmand, and then went to Franeker, where he learned Rabiniſm and Chaldaiſm under Sixtinus Amama, by whom he was much eſteemed. He afterwards ſtudied at Wittemberg, where he received a Letter, in the Year 1630, from the Rector, and Council, of the Univerſity of Copenhagen, offering him the Profeſſorſhip of the Hebrew Tongue. He deſired to be excuſed, as not being learned enough to acquit himſelf worthily of that Office: But, being adviſed by Profeſſor Brochmand, who was then Rector, not to refuſe what was offered him, he accepted of it, upon condition that he might be permitted to imploy the Income of that Poſt in ſtudying the Arabic and Syriac Languages, for ſome Years, under Gabriel Sionita (b). This being conſented to, he went to Copenhagen, and, in the Month of September 1630, he took poſſeſſion of the Hebrew Profeſſorſhip, and afterwards was made Doctor in Philoſophy. He diſcharged this Duty, to the Advantage and Improvement of the Students, till the Year 1652, when he was promoted to the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity, vacant by the Death of Brochmand. He was made Doctor of the ſame Faculty in the Year 1653, in the King and Queen's Preſence. Three Years after, the Office of Library-Keeper of the Univerſity was conferred upon him, and he performed the Dedication of the Church of the Trinity, by a Latin Sermon (c). Being taken ill, the eleventh of October 1661, his chief Care was of the Concerns of his Soul: He Confeſſed himſelf, and Communicated the ſixth Day of his Sickneſs, and died the Twenty ſeventh of the ſame Month (d). He married, in 1638, the Daughter of a Senator, by whom he had fourteen Children, eight Sons and ſix Daughters. His Writings teſtify his Learning [A].

(a) Flemlofiæ Finorum. I chuſe rather to ſet down the name of his Country in Latin, than to miſtake the vulgar Name.

(b) He then taught at Paris.

(c) That Church was deſigned for the Religious Exerciſes of the Students.

(d) Taken from his Funeral Programma, compoſed by Peter Scavenius, Rector of the Univerſity of Copenhagen, cited by Witte, Memor. Theol. renov. pag. 1387.

[A] His Writings teſtify his Learning.] He was an Author before he was a Doctor: for, in the Year 1627, he publiſh'd an Expoſition of a Paſſage of Jeremiah (1). His Vindiciæ locorum Geneſ. xlviii. 16. Geneſ. lvi. 1. Pſalm xix. 1. appeared in the Year 1630. The Year following, he publiſhed Fontium Iſraelis Trias, Jona, Michea, Ruth; and in the Year 1634, his Exercitatio Glottologica, de Ortu Linguarum. His Exercitationes octo literariæ antiquitatis appeared in the Year 1638. The two Books, Obſervationum Philologicarum, appeared two Years after. The Hermes & Pan Hebraicus, quo vivum abſoluti Hebraici Lexicographi exemplum proponitur, was printed in 1641 (2). The Phoſphorus Inſcriptionis hieroſymbolicæ, quo Stellæburgum regium Hafnienſe illuſtratur, came out in the Year 1648, and was followed, the Year after, by the Tropæum protevangelicum, quo ex Scriptis Pontificiorum oſtenditur veram eſſe lectionem, Ipſum conteret tibi caput, & ſoli Chriſto convenire. The Exercitatio elenchtica de Nephilimis, Gigantibus vulgo dictis, oppoſita Jacobo Bouldocco was a Work of the Year 1652; and the Oliva Sacræ pacis repurgata, a Work of the Year 1654; and the Cælum Orientis & priſci Mundi, a Work of the Year 1657. I do not mention the Titles of ſome other Works, which have not been omitted in the Funeral Programma, nor by Albert Bartholin (3). Some of the Books, whoſe Titles I have mentioned, are only Orations, of which Number is the Oliva Sacræ pacis repurgata. This, however, has obtained a Place for the Author in the Catalogue of the Reconcilers of Religion (4), and has been wholly inſerted in the Irenicorum Tractatuum Prodromus, by John Duræus, or rather Dury.

(1) It is the 24th Verſe of Chap. xxiii.

(2) Father Labbe, Biblioth. Bibliothec. p. 198, ſpeaks of that Book, tho' it has no Relation to his Deſign, and aſcribes it to Thomas Bangus.

(3) In Libro de Scriptis Danorum.

(4) See Heidegger. de Concord. Eccleſ. Prot. pag. 208.

BARANZAN (REDEMPTUS), a Barnabite Fryar, was one of the firſt, in the XVIIth Century, who ventured to quit the Path of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy. La Mothe le Vayer ſays, that he may be placed among the firſt Wits of our Age (a), and that the Works of his Youth entitle him to it [A]. He adds, that this honeſt Barnabite had many times promiſed him, but always under the good pleaſure of God, That he would appear to him again, if he ſhould depart this Life. He did not keep his word, Providence having ordered otherwiſe; and he verified the Sentence of a Latin Poet.

Qui nunc it per iter tenebricoſum,
Illuc unde negant redire quemquam (b).

Who

(a) Chriſtian Diſcourſe of the Immortality of the Soul, in Vol. IV. of his Works, in 12mo, pag. 172.

(b) Catull. Epigr. 3.

[A] He may be placed among the greateſt Wits of our Age; the Works of his Youth intitle him to it.] Doubtleſs he means the Book De novis Opinionibus Phyſicæ, printed, at Lyons, in the Year 1619. Konig mentions two of This Fryar's Works. Edidit, ſays he, Uranoſcopiam & campum Philoſophicum, ann. 1620 (1). — He publiſhed two Pieces, one called Uranoſcopia, the other Campus Philoſophicus. I have had, in my Hands, a Copy of the Campus Philoſophicus, printed, at Lyons, in the Year 1619. It contained but one Volume, and treated only of Logic, very much in the manner of the Peripatetics; but the Approbation, annexed, gives me to underſtand, that This Volume is but the firſt Part of Baranzen's Courſe of Philoſophy, and that the general Title of That Courſe is, Summa Philoſophica Anneciacenſis; which confirms what I have ſaid, that That Author taught in Anneci.

(1) The Oxford Catalogue ſays Uranoſcopia ſeu univerſa Doctrina de Cœlo, 1617.

Digitized by Google

Who now does Death's benighted Way explore,
From whence the wandring Soul returns no more.

(c) In the Article BONFADIUS.

I shall mention, in another place (c), some Persons who have made such Promises. Baranzan was of Verceil: He taught Mathematics and Philosophy in the City of Anneci in Savoy. Naudé, in the Seventy ninth page of the Instruction, which he published in 1623, concerning the Society of Rosicrusians, mentions him as then dead.

BARBARUS (FRANCIS), a Noble Venetian, was a famous Man in the XVth Century. He was not only very learned, but also very skillful in the managing Affairs of Government. He was no less a Statesman, than a Man of Letters, as he made appear in all the public Employs, with which he was intrusted; and principally when he was Governor of Brescia. The Vigilance, Steadiness, Tractableness, and other great Virtues, wherewith he defended That City against the Forces of the Duke of Milan, commanded by the famous Picinin, cannot be sufficiently admired. He had Enemies within, and without, the Town, and conquered them all. The Divisions were very great in the City: the Avogadri, and the Martinenghes, were the Heads of two opposite Factions; he engaged them, by his Eloquence, to unite, and act in concert, for the Public Good. The length of the Siege, or Blockade, caused a Famine in the Town, and the Famine caused the Plague; and yet, under all these Obstructions, he had the happiness to frustrate all Attempts of the Enemy, for three Years, and force them to retire. This happened about the Year 1439 (a). Some Authors believe, that our Francis Barbarus is he, who wrote a Book de Re Uxoria, some Letters, and some Orations. It is the opinion of Volaterran (b), who adds, that he had been a Disciple of Chrysoloras, and that he forgot all his Greek in his Old-age. Volaterran might perhaps be under some Mistake [A]. Francis Barbarus died in the Year 1454 (c).

(a) Taken from Vianoli in Book 18, of The History of Venice, Tom. I. See also what he says in Book 20, pag. 708.

(b) Volaterr. lib. 21, pag. 773.

(c) Voss. de Histor. Lat. pag. 620.

[A] Volaterran might perhaps be under some Mistake.] These are the Grounds of my Suspicion. I find, in Vianoli, that Francis Barbarus, who so successfully defended the City of Brescia, was the Father of Zachary, and That Zachary was the Father of Hermolaus Barbarus (1). I find, in Gesner's Bibliotheca, that Francis Barbarus, Author of the Book de Re Uxoria, translated the Lives of Aristides and Cato from the Greek of Plutarch, and dedicated them to his Brother Zachary. I find, in Volaterran (2), that Hermolaus Barbarus was Nephew (3) of That Francis Barbarus, who defended the City of Brescia: Volaterran had mentioned this Francis Barbarus, in the Seven hundred and seventy third Page, and, among other things, had said of him what follows: "He understood the Greek Tongue well, but, as "I have heard his Relation, Hermolaus Barbarus, say, "he forgot it quite in his Old-days. Hic postremo "senescens, uti ab Hermolao ejus necessario accepi, "literarum Græcarum, quas probè tenebat, erat omnino "oblitus." The other Particulars, which Volaterran has related of This Francis Barbarus, are, that he had been a Disciple of Chrysoloras, that he had written a Book de Re Uxoria, some Orations, and some Letters, and that he acquired a great Reputation in defending the City of Brescia. Dum Brixiæ Prætor esset, eam urbem à Philippi ducis obsidione magnâ cum laude liberavit. This gives room to suspect, that Volaterran has promiscuously joined together what belongs respectively to the Father and Son. The Passage of Gesner testifies, that Francis Barbarus, Author of the Book de Re Uxoria, and Translator of the Life of Aristides, was the Brother of Zachary Barbarus. Now, according to Vianoli, Zachary Barbarus was the Son of him, who defended Brescia, and Father of Hermolaus; it should be said, then, that he, who defended Brescia, had a Son, whose Name was Francis Barbarus, who wrote the Book de Re Uxoria, and translated the Lives of Aristides and Cato out of the Greek of Plutarch, and who was Uncle of Hermolaus Barbarus. According to this, Volaterran attributes certain Things to the Father, which belong only to the Son. Moreover, he, who defended Brescia, might have had a Brother, whose Name was Zachary, to whom he had dedicated his two Translations; and then Volaterran's whole Mistake would consist, in not having known, that Francis Barbarus was the Grandfather of Hermolaus. If I had the Works of Francis Barbarus, probably, I might find some Circumstances, which would decide the Question. But, for want of that Advantage, I desired Mr de Larroque to clear my Doubt; and this was his Answer: "Mr Joli proves (4), that the Au- "thor of the Book de Re Uxoria was the Grandfa- "ther of Hermolaus, and that he published it about "the Time of the Council of Constance; for Poggio "and Paul Vergerio mention That Book, in some "Letters, dated from the City of Constance: Poggio's "Letter is written to Guerini of Verona, and That "of Vergerio to Nicholas Leontinus. They praise "Francis Barbarus for having written so well con- "cerning Marriage, though he was very young, "and not married himself. He dedicated the Tran- "slation of the Lives of Aristides and Cato to his "Brother Zachary, and died in the Year 1454. "Mr Joli distinguishes two Daniel Barbarus's." Note, I have been told, that this Preface of Mr Joli, which I have quoted, contains several Elogies of the Author of the Book de Re Uxoria, and clears up a great many Things, that concern learned Men.

Gesner and Vossius quote a Letter of Andrew Brentius, by which one may learn, that Francis Barbarus, Grandfather of Hermolaus, and Father of Zachary, had composed and translated many Books. "Nimirum in te omnia Francisci Barbari patris vir- "tutum lumina eluceſcunt: cui certe multum La- "tina lingua debet, tot tantisque ab eo libris partim "compositis, partim conversis, à quo minime dege- "nerat Hermolaus filius, te tanto patre non indig- "nus (5). — For, in you, all the Virtues of your Father "Francis Barbarus shine in their brightest Lustre: to "whom, undoubtedly, the Latin Tongue is greatly in- "debted, on account of so many Books, some composed, "and others translated, by him; and from whom Her- "molaus, a worthy Son of so great a Father, does "not at all degenerate." It is very certain, by the Testimony of Hermolaus himself (6), that his Father's Name was Zachary; so that Philip de Bergamo was much mistaken, when he made him the Son of Francis Barbarus, and Grandson of Zachary: Francisci Barbari filius, Zachariæ Barbari nepos (7). Moreri, as well here, as in a thousand other Places, translates Nepos by Nephew, which is a very gross Fault. They, who pretend to write good Latin, use Nepos only to signify Grandson: They, who are not so scrupulous in their Latin Style, use, indeed, the Word Nepos for Nephew, but they commonly add, ex fratre, or ex sorore, to take off the Equivocation; if they say Nepos only, they mean Grandson.

(1) Vianoli's History of Venice, Tom. 1, lib. 2, pag. 768.

(2) Lib. 21, pag. 777.

(3) Ex fratre nepos.

(4) In the Preface to the French Translation of the Book De Re Uxoria, printed at Paris, in the Year 1667.

(5) Andreas Brentius, Patavinus, Epistola ad Zachariam Barbarum apud Vossium de Histor. Lat. p. 621. It is affirmed in the Appendix of Dr Cave, pag. 157, that Hermolaus was the Son of Francis.

(6) See the 32*d Letter of the* 12*th Book of those of* Politian.

(7) Phil. Berg. apud Vossium de Hist. Lat. pag. 621.

Digitized by Google

BARBARUS (HERMOLAUS), Grandſon of the foregoing, was one of the moſt Learned Men of the XVth Century. He was born at Venice, the Twenty firſt of May, 1454 (a). He made ſuch great, and ſpeedy, Proficiency in his Studies, that he began to write Books at the eighteenth Year of his Age [A]. The public Employs, wherein he was very early engaged, did not prevent his earneſt application to Learning [B]. He was ſent, by the Venetians, to the Emperor Frederic, and to his Son Maximilian King of the Romans; and This Deputation was ſo far from putting a ſtop to his Pen, that it ſupplied him with matter to exerciſe it; for he did not only publiſh the Speech [C], which he delivered before thoſe two Princes, at Bruges, in the Year 1486, but he wrote alſo a Treatiſe of the Agreement of Aſtronomy with Phyſic; I ſay, he wrote it the ſame Year, as he went through the City of Cologne in his way to Mentz, at the deſire of Theodoric Flas, a Phyſician of Nuis (b). As he underſtood Greek very well, he undertook the moſt difficult Tranſlations, and began with a celebrated Paraphraſt on Ariſtotle; I mean Themiſtius. Afterwards he undertook Dioſcorides, whoſe Text he corrected as well as he could, and made a Tranſlation of it; to which he added a very learned Commentary. It is ſaid, that he alſo attempted two of the moſt difficult Treatiſes of Plutarch (c): I cannot tell whether That Tranſlation was ever publiſhed. He had a deſign to tranſlate all Ariſtotle's Works [D]; and he ſays, in one of his Epiſtles Dedicatory, that the Execution of that Deſign was a great way advanced. He had an extraordinary Facility in writing Verſes, and it is pretended, that he compoſed above Twelve thouſand [E]. But, of all his Works, there is none, which gained him ſo much Reputation, as That, which he perform'd on Pliny. He corrected near Five thouſand Paſſages of That Author, and occaſionally reſtored Three hundred in Pomponius Mela (d). This noble Work has been criticiſed [F], as well as his other Books.

(a) Geſner. in Biblioth. fol. 240, ex Trithemio.

(b) Geſner. in Bibl. fol. 317.

(c) De Iſide & Oſiride & cur Oracula ceſſerunt. Geſner. in Bibl.

(d) Hermol. Barbarus in Præfat. ad Alexandrum VI.

[A] He began to write Books at the eighteenth Year of his Age.] Geſner tells us ſo; Ab octavodecimo ætatis ſuæ anno ſcribere exorſus multa elegantiſſima opuſcula compoſuit (1). Voſſius intended the ſame thing: but, becauſe his Printer forgot two Letters, it occaſioned Mr Teiſſier to ſay, that Hermolaus Barbarus began to write at Twenty two Years of Age (2). This is his Tranſlation of theſe Words of Voſſius, Ab anno ætatis duo vigeſimo ſcribere orſus fuit (3). And thus you ſee the Errors of Printers are ſometimes of great Conſequence. It is plain, that Voſſius had written duodevigeſimo: So that two Letters, ſuppreſſed in this Word, have robbed an Author of four Years Glory. Mr Teiſſier's Fault may be ſeen in the One hundred fifty ſeventh Page of Dr Cave's Appendix.

(1) Geſn. Biblioth. fol. 317.

(2) Teiſſier's Additions to the Elogies of Thuanus, Tom. 1. p. 354.

(3) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 622.

[B] His public Employs ----- did not prevent his earneſt Application to Learning.] We muſt underſtand this with ſome Reſtriction; for it is certain, that thoſe Employs muſt have interrupted his Studies. "Honores, ſays he (4), in republica geſſi multos & magnos: quâ fide, quâ opinione, quâ gratiâ, non dixerim. Placet quidem impendiſſe annos penitus duodecim, ſed octo reipub. continuos: totum id tamen tempus literis ferè periit. —— I have diſcharged many, and great, Truſts in the Common-wealth; with what Fidelity, Reputation, and Favour, I ſhall not pretend to ſay. I have been engaged in them full twelve Years, eight of which have been entirely ſpent on the Public: And the whole Time was almoſt quite loſt to Learning."

(4) Herm. Barbar. Epiſt. 31, lib. 12, inter Politiani Epiſtolas.

[C] He publiſhed a Speech.] It was dedicated to Carondelet, who was then Chief Secretary to the King of the Romans. The Author confeſſes, that he does not publiſh it exactly as he delivered it; but he declares, at the ſame time, that he gives it entirely as he had prepared it. If he did not ſpeak it as it was compoſed, it was, becauſe the Courtiers deſired him to be ſhort, and to come ſpeedily to the main Point. They were not ignorant, that the Study of polite Learning flouriſhed at that time in Italy, and that the Ambaſſadors from That Country took a Pleaſure in making long Speeches, ſet off with all the Ornaments of Rhetoric. Nay, Hermolaus was obliged to reduce the two Speeches, which he, and his Colleague had prepared, into one; and, as the Abridgment, and the Reduction, were to be made in the Space of an Hour and a half, judge of Hermolaus's Preſence of Mind, which happily overcame all Theſe Difficulties. "Obſecro ne mirere ſi qua leges in hoc "libello quæ tunc dicta non fuerunt. Nec enim addidi nunc ea, ſed detraxi tunc, admonitus ab auricis extemplo quam limen attigi ne longus eſſem, ambitioſa reciderem, optima quæque dicerem, patientiſſimis omnino, ſed occupatiſſimis tamen Principibus, parcerem. Amputavi ſubito conſilio multa. ----- Conſiderans hoc & æſtimans quod ſeſquihoram antequam Principes adiremus ſignificatum nobis fuerit non duas orationes ſeorſum, ut cogitabamus & paraveramus, ſed unam duobus junctim habendam & recitandam eſſe (5). ---- Be not ſurprized if you meet with ſome Things here, which were not delivered. They are not now added, but were then ſuppreſſed, being adviſed, by the Courtiers, as ſoon as I appeared, not to be long, to cut off all Flouriſhes, to ſpeak only to the material Points, and to favour, as much as poſſible, Princes, who, though they had a great deal of Patience, yet had very little Leiſure. I immediately cut off many Things. ----- Conſidering, and providing for this alſo, that we were told, about an Hour and half before we were to be admitted into the Preſence, that we muſt not deliver two ſeparate Speeches, as we expected, and had prepared, but put both of them into one."

(5) Herm. Barbarus Epiſt. ad Carondeletum, inter Epiſtolas Politiani 45, lib. 12.

[D] He had a Deſign to tranſlate all Ariſtotle's Works.] See what he ſays in the Preface to his Pomponius Mela (6). "Vocant nos majora quædam ſudia, urgemuſque noſtrum illud vetus omnes Ariſtotelis libros in latinum vertendi exponendique propoſitum. Quod ſi ad exitum perduxero (nam bona ejus pars jam pridem peracta eſt) non dubito futurum, quin de reliquo in literis labore gratia mihi fiat. ---- I am intent upon greater Studies, and am carrying on the old Deſign of tranſlating into Latin, and commenting on, all Ariſtotle's Works. Which if I can bring to Perfection, as a great Part of it is already done, I do not doubt but the learned World will thank me for all the reſt of my Time, ſpent in their Service." His Tranſlation of Ariſtotle's Rhetoric was publiſhed after his Death. See the following Article.

(6) Apud Geſner. Biblioth. fol. 317, verſo.

[E] He had an extraordinary Facility in writing Verſes; and had compoſed above Twelve thouſand.] Among other Pieces of Poetry, he wrote a Poem of Six hundred Verſes, which bears the ſame Title with a Piece, written by his Grand-father Francis Barbarus, I mean, de Re Uxoria; but the Subſtance of them is very different. Francis Barbarus preſcribes Rules as well to thoſe, that would marry, as to thoſe, that are already married (7): he is ſo very particular, that he has a Chapter de cœtus ratione. Hermolaus confines himſelf to this Queſtion, Whether a wiſe Man ought to marry (8)? and concludes for the Negative.

(7) See the Titles of the Chapters of his Work in Geſner's Biblioth. fol. 240, verſo.

[F] That noble Work, on Pliny, has been criticiſed.] It has been pretended, that he had too much indulged his Conjectures and Memory. Pintianus uſed him very rudely upon it. Thoſe, who pardon him the Defects of his Memory, do not forgive the Inſtances of his Temerity; but declare, very freely, that he has undertaken to correct many things, which were no Faults,

(8) Geſn. Bibl. fol. 317.

Digitized by Google

Books [G]. He was Embaſſador from the Republic of Venice to Pope Innocent VIII, when the Patriarch of Aquileia died. The Pope immediately conferred That Patriarchate upon him. Hermolaus was ſo imprudent as to accept of it, without waiting for the Approbation of his Superiors [H], though he could not be ignorant, that the Republic of Venice had made Laws, to forbid all Miniſters, ſent from thence to the Court of Rome, to accept any Benefice. Hermolaus's Excuſes, grounded on the Pope's having compelled him to embrace the Prelacy, were not liſtened to. The Council of Ten ſignified very roughly to him, to renounce the Patriarchate, and that, if he did not, his Father ſhould be degraded from all his Dignities, and Faults, but only ſurpaſſed his Underſtanding. It is true, that, in ſeveral Editions of Pliny, great Regard has been had for Hermolaus's Corrections, ſince they have been inſerted in the Text; but it was ſaid, long ago, that this pretended Phyſician of Pliny had given him more Wounds, than he had cured. Let us ſee how Father Hardouin expreſſes it. " Ipſe " (Hermolaus) in iis quæ attigit, ſæpè nimium con- " jecturæ, memoriæ etiam plus quam hominem de- " ceat, tribuit: uti paulo acerbius eam ob rem in- " vectus in eum Pintianus olim exprobravit. Sed " conceſſa facile venia μνημονικῶν ἁμαρτημάτων, " quod minus mirum ſit memoriam excidere aliqua- " rum rerum, quam conſtare omnium: at non ve- " nia dignus æque, cum neglectis veterum exem- " plarium veſtigiis, & priſcarum ante ſe editionum " ſecurus, plurima pro arbitrio, eruditè magis quam " cautè ac verè, mutavit, vel planè peſſumdedit: " cum plurima ex iis quæ caſtigavit, non errata illa " ſint, ſed parum intellecta. Tantum nihilominus " auctoritati Barbari ſubſecuta ætas eruditionique " tribuit, ut conjecturas illius, ceu totidem κυρίας " δόξας, in contextum inſeruerit, unde eliminandæ " à nobis variis argumentis fuere. Senſit jamdudum " hanc labem operi Pliniano illatam auctor Epigram- " matis, alias haud perelegantis, in Commentarios à " Stephano Aquæo editos, de quibus agendum mox " erit. Sic enim ille:

Dum facere Hermoleos medicinam Barbarus optat
Non paucis lacero vulneribus Plinio,
Perlæſum gravius conjecta vulnerat arte:
Nec minus incauta plurima turba manu.
In tantum ut Latio jam deploratus abiret,
Ob multa in Stygias vulnera feſſus aquas, &c.

" Felicior aliquanto SIGISMUNDUS GELE- " NIUS, qui uno duntaxat archetyporum præſi- " dio, collatis inter ſe exemplaribus, non pauca re- " ſtituit, quæ Hermolao latuerant (9). —— He (Her- " molaus) in his Corrections, gives often too much " Liberty to Conjecture, and to Memory a great deal " more than any Man ought to do; for which Pintia- " nus has a little too ſeverely reproved him. But his " Faults of Memory are very excuſable, ſince it is " much leſs to be wondred at the letting ſlip ſome " things, than the retaining all: but he is not ſo eaſi- " ly to be pardoned, for ſlighting all old Manuſcripts, " and former Editions, and boldly altering, in an ar- " bitrary Manner, with more Learning than Caution " and Truth, and ſometimes plainly defacing: ſince " a great many of his Emendations appear where there " were no Faults, but only his own Miſunderſtand- " ings. And yet the ſucceeding Age paid ſuch a regard " to the Authority, and Learning, of Barbarus, that " they inſerted his Conjectures as ſo many authentic " Gloſſes into the Body of the Text, which have coſt us " a great many Arguments to remove. This Injury, " done to Pliny, was obſerved by the Author of an Epi- " gram, otherwiſe not very elegant, on the Commen- " taries publiſhed by Stephanus Aquæus, of which we " ſhall preſently ſpeak. Thus he,

While Barbarus, and other Quacks, pretend
The mangled State of Pliny's Text to mend:
Their Art ſo much in blind Conjecture deals,
It boldly gives ten wounds for one it heals.
That thus defac'd he flies the Latin Light,
And gladly ſeek Repoſe in Realms of Night.

" SIGISMUNDUS GELENIUS uſed a " much more ſucceſsful Method, who, by the ſole help " of Manuſcripts, which he collated, has reſtored a " great many Places, which Hermolaus paſſed by." I have ſet down this long Paſſage, the better to convince Mr Varillas that he was miſtaken in a Matter, which was pretty well known. But yet, I am very well ſatisfied, that Hermolaus's Work on Pliny's Natural Hiſtory deſerves Admiration, conſidering the great Number of Authors he was obliged to conſult, and the little time he had for it. He ſays, he performed it in twenty Months: He broke the Ice for others; he found Pliny in a very bad Condition, and like a Land that had lain waſte a long time, or a Houſe infected with the Plague, or haunted by Hobgobblins. Hæc erant in Pliniano codice flagitia, propter quæ non parum multi divinum opus tanquam ſenticetum, imo vero quaſi peſtilens aut lemuribus infame domicilium vitabant. Ea nos Græcis & Latinis auctoribus perlectis omnibus lucubratione viginti menſium revellere ac publicare curavimus (10). As to Volaterran's Notion, that it was an Undertaking little ſuitable to the Character of Hermolaus Barbarus; opus impar ejus dignitati & vitæ inſtituto (11), it has been very juſtly condemned, as well becauſe Hermolaus had entred upon it before he was a Churchman, as becauſe it were to be wiſhed, that many other Prelates would commit the like Faults. Utinam ſic a multis ejus dignitatis atque inſtituti peccaretur (12). Voſſius adds another Reaſon, which is, that Pliny did not make him neglect the Epiſcopal Functions; witneſs his Sermons, ſtill preſerved in Manuſcript at Padua. I ſhould rather chuſe to ſay, that, ſince the Venetians would not ſuffer him to accept that Dignity, he could not neglect the Patriarchal Functions in favour of Pliny. Note, that, having publiſhed that Work in the Year 1492, he added an Appendix to it, which he calls Secundæ caſtigationes, and which is dated at Rome, the thirteenth of January, 1493.

[G] As well as his other Books.] His Tranſlation of Themiſtius is not juſt, if we may believe Voſſius. " Ipſe ille Themiſtius ab Hermolao Barbaro, dum ni- " nium ſtudet elegantiæ, tantâ converſus eſt libertate, " ut ſæpiſſimè longè aliud dicat quam ſenſerit The- " miſtius (13): —— Hermolaus Barbarus, while he " too much ſtudied Elegancy, took ſuch liberty in tran- " ſlating Themiſtius, that he often ſaid thoſe Things " which Themiſtius was very far from meaning:" And he has ſhewn, in the Tranſlation of Ariſtotle's Rhetoric, that he did not underſtand Greek well enough, if we rely on Francis de Eſcobar (14). It is objected, that he was ſo full of Pliny, that he too often made uſe of his Words in the Tranſlation of Dioſcorides. This Tranſlation has been often criticized by Marcellus Virgilius. Doctè quidem & eleganter tranſlati, ſed (ut nonnullis videtur) nimis ad imitationem Plinii, quem dum ubique ſequitur à Dioſcoridis verbis aliquando recedere videtur. Marcellus Virgilius, qui poſt Hermolaum eoſdem libros tranſtulit, plerumque interpretationem ejus carpit (15).

[H] Hermolaus was ſo imprudent as to accept of the Patriarchate of Aquileia, without waiting for the Approbation of his Superiors] I know of no Body, who has related the Fact better, than Peter Bembus; for which reaſon it cannot be improper, or diſagreeable to all thoſe, who have not that Hiſtory, to ſee here what he ſays of it. " Eo mortuo Innocentius " Patriarchatum (ſic enim appellant) Aquileienſium " —— Hermolao Barbaro, legato apud ſe Veneto " attribuit. Quod ubi civitas intellexit, tametſi Her- " molaus ad Senatum ſcripſerat, coactum ſe à Ponti- " fice veſtem ſenatoriam mutaviſſe: quoniam tamen " ſacerdotiis cooptari cives Veneti, qui legati Romæ " eſſent, lege prohibebantur; graviter tulit, auſum " illum contra leges patrias facere. Auxit ejus rei " magnopere invidiam, quod antea ex Hermolai li- " teris, quas ad Senatum de Barbi morte dederat, " more inſtitutoque majorum comitiis ſenatoriis præ-

" judicium

(9) Hard. Præfat. in Plinium ad uſum Delphini.

(10) Herm. Barbarus in Epilogo Operis p. 425. Baſil. 1534.

(11) Volater. lib. 21. pag. 777.

(12) Cogitare debuerat Volaterranus, jam antequam ad Epiſcopatum provectus eſſet, parata majori ex parte habuiſſe, quæ ad iſtud opus pertinerent. Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 623. Hermolaus ſays only, Plinianas caſtigationes quas Legatus Romæ nec dum ſuccis initiatus inchoaveram. Præf. ad Alexand. VI.

(13) Voſſ de Philoſophia, pag. 8.

(14) Andr. Schott. Biblioth. Hiſpan. p. 333.

(15) Geſn. in Bblioth. fol. 317, verſo.

Digitized by Google

and ſoon after ſee his Eſtate confiſcated. They were inflexible: Zachary Hermolaus made uſe of all imaginable Means to obtain the Conſent of the Republic to the Patriarchate of his Son; but, not being able to gain his Point, he died of Grief [I]. His Son followed him ſoon after: Some ſay, that Grief alſo was the Cauſe of his Death [K]; but it is more likely, that he died of the Plague. Pierius Valerianus has placed him at the head of his Unfortunate Learned Men. He ſeems to me to run an extravagant Length, in ſaying, that it is not certainly known, whether Hermolaus Barbarus was ever buried [L]. This great Man died at

" judicium Patres fecerant, cujus ipſi civis nomen ad " id adipiſcendum ſacerdotium Innocentio commen- " darent. Itaque deceptos in eo ſeſe, ac propè de- " luſos querebantur. Erat omnino Hermolai, propter " ejus ſummam in literarum atque optimarum ar- " tium ſtudiis præſtantiam, magnum apud exteras " nationes nomen, apud ſuos quidem certe maxi- " mum: nam ad doctrinæ ſingularem opinionem " etiam vitæ perpetuam innocentiam adjunxerat. Si- " mul is multum patris opibus, & gratia, qui ſummo " proximum in civitate magiſtratum gereoat, mul- " tum clientelis, neceſſitudinibus, propinquitatibuſque " pollebat. Quibus tamen in rebus omnibus ſatis " ſibi præſidii non habuit: cum pluris à Patribus una " legum charitas, majeſtaſque, quam ullorum civi- " um omnibus aucta nominibus dignitas, atque cla- " ritas, fieret. Decemviri enim literas ad eum ſe- " vere ſcriptas dederunt; mora omni, excuſatione- " que ſublata, ſacerdotium repudiaret: id ſi non " faceret, patrem magiſtratu remoturos, & bona " ejus publicaturos præ ſe tulerunt. At pater, per- " ſpecta civitatis voluntate, omnibus tentatis rebus, " cum jam eam flecti & leniri poſſe diffideret, " ægritudine animi eſt mortuus. Filius non multo " poſt Romæ, editis Plinianis caſtigationibus, im- " menſi propè laboris opere, privatus plebeio mor- " bo periit. Eum vitæ finem Hermolaus habuit, " omnium ex ſua civitate, qui ante illum nati eſ- " ſent, Latinorum & Græcorum literis plane doctiſſi- " mus (16). —— Upon his Death, Innocent gave " the Patriarchate (as it is called) of Aquileia, to " Hermolaus Barbarus, Embaſſador for the Venetians " at Rome. Which, when the Senate underſtood, not- " withſtanding Hermolaus had ſignified to them by " Letter, that he had not made this Exchange of his " ſenatorial Robes, without being compelled to it by " the Pope, the Venetian Laws not allowing any of " their Citizens, who are ſent Embaſſadors to Rome, " to accept of any Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, they " were much incenſed, that he ſhould dare to infringe " the Laws of his Country. What farther heightened " their Diſpleaſure was, that, upon the News the Se- " nate had received, by Letters from Hermolaus, of " the Death of Barbus, they had, in their Aſſembly, " according to ancient Cuſtom, made choice of a Per- " ſon, whoſe Name they were to recommend to Inno- " cent, to ſucceed in That Patriarchate. Therefore " they looked upon themſelves as deceived, and in " ſome Meaſure tricked by him. The Reputation of " Hermolaus was very great in foreign Nations, on " account of his extenſive Learning; and greateſt of " all in his own; the Integrity of his Life being as " extraordinary as his Knowledge. The Wealth and " Intereſt of his Father, whoſe Office in the Republic " was next to that of the chief Magiſtrate, the Num- " ber of his own Dependants, Friends, and Relations, " were great Advantages to him. But yet all theſe " put together were not ſufficient to protect him: ſince " the ſingle Conſideration of the Value and Authority " of their Laws was of more weight with the Senate, " than all the Excellencies, which any of their Citi- " zens could poſſibly attain. The Council of Ten " wrote ſeverely to him, that, without delay or excuſe, " he ſhould renounce his Eccleſiaſtical Dignity; and " threatened to degrade his Father, and confiſcate his " Eſtate, in caſe of Refuſal. The Father, finding the " fixed Reſolution of the Senate, which he had, in " vain, tried all poſſible means to ſoften and divert, " died of Grief. The Son not long after, having pub- " liſhed his Corrections of Pliny, a Work of immenſe " Labour, died at Rome in a private Station, and of " a vulgar Diſtemper. This was the End of Hermo- " laus, who, for his Learning in Latin and Greek, was " the moſt extraordinary Perſon Venice had ever pro- " duced."

(16) Bemb. Hiſtor. Venetæ, lib. 1. fol. 18 verſo.

[I] His Father —— died of Grief.] We have juſt now ſeen, that Bembus aſſerts it. The thing is likely enough; for he was an ancient Man, and enjoyed one of the chief Poſts of the Republic. Such an hard Experience of the Decay of one's Credit in one's old Age, and to the Prejudice of a famous and dearly-beloved Son, is generally a fatal Blow. Zachary Barbarus died in the Year 1492, much reſigned to the Decrees of Providence: He was in the ſeventieth Year of his Life: He was much lamented, and his Funeral-Pomp was very magnificent. See the Letter, which Hermolaus wrote to his Friend Antonius Calvus (17). " Accedit quod ſeptuageſimum " ingreſſus annum, quamdiu in familia noſtra vixit " nemo; quod functus omnibus honoribus; quod re- " publica incolumi; quod liberis honeſto loco poſi- " tis; incredibili deſiderio & amore civitatis exceſſit, " frequentia funeris tanta (ut audio) quanta in cive " nunquam. —— We muſt add, that having entred " into his ſeventieth Year, to which none of our Fa- " mily ever before arrived; that having attained all " the higheſt Honours; that having ſeen the Republic " in abſolute Security; that having placed his Children " in honourable Stations, he died extreamly lamented " and beloved by all, and was attended, I am told, " at his Funeral, by ſuch Numbers, as no Citizen " ever had been before."

(17) It is the 32d of the 12th Book of thoſe of Politian.

[K] Some ſay, that Grief alſo was the Cauſe of his Death.] Volaterran affirms it: " Romæ deceſſit ex " animi dolore exacerbante quod orator à Friend " miſſus, præter ejus autoritatem Senatus, Patriar- " cha Aquileienſis ab Innocentio fuerat creatus, ac " propterea contumax & exul (18). —— He died at " Rome through exceſs of Grief, becauſe, being ſent " thither Embaſſador by the Venetians, and made " Patriarch of Aquileia, by Innocent, without their " Conſent, he was therefore declared a Rebel, and an " Exile." I am fully perſuaded, he died, being accounted a Rebel, and an Exile; for he always took upon himſelf the Title of Patriarch, notwithſtanding the ſtrict Orders he had received from his Sovereign to renounce the Patriarchate; but I believe he died of the Plague, and not of Grief. My Reaſon is, I. That, from the time of his Diſgrace to his Death, he was engaged in a Work, which required a great Compoſure of Mind, and a perfect State of Health (19). II. That Peter Crinitus, who lived at that time, declares, That Hermolaus died of the Plague (20). He does not relate it in general, but adds a very particular Circumſtance, which is, that Picus Mirandulanus, having heard at Florence, that Hermolaus was ſick of the Plague, ſent him an Antidote with all Speed; but the Meſſenger came too late. Paulus Jovius reports the ſame Fact. " Mors " ante diem irrepſit, & peſtilenti quidem morbo " properata, adeo ut quod à Pico Politianoque Flo- " rentiâ laboranti per diſpoſitos equos mittebatur " miræ poteſtatis antidotum, veneni celeritate præ- " verteret (21). ------ Death approached before- " hand, being haſtened by a Peſtilential Diſtem- " per, which made ſuch quick Diſpatch, that the " famous Antidote, which was ſent him with all poſſi- " ble Expedition from Florence by Picus, and Poli- " tian, came too late." So that I can eaſily believe what Hermolaus Barbarus ſays of himſelf, That he bore his Diſgrace without Uneaſineſs, and was even pleaſed with an Injury, which gave him an entire Leiſure for Study (22). His Friends were afraid he would ſink under his Diſgrace, and his Enemies declared ſo every where. It was undoubtedly by means of theſe latter, in order to rob him of the Honour of his Conſtancy and Tranquillity, that what was owing to a contagious Diſtemper, was aſcribed to Grief. See, in the Remark [P], what I quote out of Alcyonius.

(18) Volat. lib. 21, pag. 777.

(19) Viz. The Correction of Pliny.

(20) Crinit. de honeſtâ Diſciplinâ, lib. 2. c. 7.

(21) Jovius Elog. c. 36.

(22) See the 31ſt Letter of the 12th Book of thoſe of Politian.

[L] Pierius Valerianus —— ſays, that it is not certain, whether Hermolaus Barbarus was ever buried.] I ſay once more, that Pierius Valerianus ſeems to run an extravagant Length, in ſaying, that this Patriarch, dying in Poverty, and forſaken, was depri-at Rome, in the Year 1493. He expreſſes, in his Letters, a great Reſignation, and Tranquillity of Mind, in regard to the Treatment, he had received from his Country (e). I do not believe, he can be ſaid to have been a Cardinal [M]. It is reported, he had recourſe to the Devil, to know the Senſe of a Greek word [N], made uſe of by Ariſtotle. We muſt not forget, that Laurence de Medicis gave him ſome Teſtimonies of a ſingular Eſteem [O]. Mr Varillas has given us; a very entertaining and elaborate Account of Hermolaus Barbarus, but he is miſtaken in many things, and oftener than Moreri [P].

Digitized by Google

(e) See Remark [K].

I ſhall

ved of Burial: "Ob ſuſceptum inconſulto Senatu "ſuo Aquileienſe ſacerdotium exſul factus, & de "poſſeſſione ejectus, vitam inopem aliquandiu traxit, "Alexandri Pontificis ſummi ſportula quodammodo "ſuſtentatus: paucis verò poſt menſibus peſtilentia "contactus, deſertus ab omnibus, infeliciſſimo mor- "tis genere oppreſſus eſt; quique laudatione, & elo- "quentia ſua innumeros ætatis ſuæ homines illuſtra- "verat, & funere, & honore ſepulchri ita defrauda- "tus eſt, ut ubi ſepultus, quòve hominis cadaver "conjectum fuerit, ignoretur (23). —— Being exiled, "and deprived of his Eſtate, for accepting the Patri- "archate of Aquileia, without conſulting the Senate, "he lived very poor for ſome time, and was in ſome "meaſure maintained by the Charity of Pope Alexan- "der. In a few Months after, he was taken with the "Plague, and, being forſaken by all, died in the moſt "wretched manner; and he, who, by his Elogies and "Eloquence, had ſo highly honoured a great Number of "his Cotemporaries, was ſo far denied both a Funeral "and Grave, that, where his Corps was thrown, or "buried, no Body can tell." Paulus Jovius, who wrote after Pierius Valerianus, does not only ſay, that Hermolaus Barbarus was buried, but alſo mentions the Place of his Burial. "Scilicet ut nimis "ſevera patria optimi civis oſſa non haberet, quæ "ſub colle hortorum ad Flumentanam portam ſepul- "chro condita è Campo Martio ab erudita Romana "juventute ſalutantur (24). —— But that his cruel "Country might not have the Remains of ſo excellent "a Citizen, they were buried under the Hill of the "Gardens, near the Flumentan Gate, where they "are viſited by the Roman Youth from the Campus "Martius." Mr da la Rochepozai (25), and Father Oldoini (26), point out the place of his Sepulture more clearly; they place it at Santa Maria del Popolo. If Valerianus had only ſaid, that the Fear of the Plague cauſed thoſe, who ſhould have aſſiſted the Patriarch (27), to forſake him, he would not have fallen into This Hyperbole.

(23) Pier. Valerian. de Literatorum Infelicit. pag. 9.

(24) Jovius Elog. c. 36.

(25) Rochepozai in Nomenclat. Cardinal.

(26) Oldoini, in Athen. Romano.

(27) See, below, the Preface of Alcyonius.

[M] I do not believe, he can be ſaid to have been a Cardinal.] Pierius Valerianus is far from affirming it; he ſays ſome things, that are too inconſiſtent with it; but does Paulus Jovius, who has ſo clearly contradicted him as to the burying place of Hermolaus Barbarus, ſay, that this Patriarch had obtained a Cardinal's Cap? Not in the leaſt: he only ſays, that he was deſigned for that Dignity. "Tuliſti "quippe æquo animo ſuffragiorum ſeveritatem, quum "ex eo tamen pari merito tibi purpura pararetur. "Sed mors ante diem irrepſit (28). —— Thy even "Mind received the cruel Sentence unmoved, and "ſuch appeared thy great Merit, that it was juſt "about being rewarded with the Purple. But Death "approached before hand." The Author of the Nomenclator Cardinalium reports, that Tritbemius, followed in this by Pierius Valerianus, and ſeveral others, aſſert, that Hermolaus Barbarus attained to the Cardinalſhip. As to himſelf, he affirms nothing, but contents himſelf with theſe words, Cardinalis deſignatus, ſed ut fertur nondum evulgatus. — Deſigned a Cardinal, but, as it is ſaid, not declared. Voſſius quotes the Franciſcan, John Rioche, who aſſerts (29), that Hermolaus Barbarus was made a Cardinal (30). Father Hardouin affirms the ſame thing (31).

(28) Valerian. de Litterat. Infel. pag. 9.

(29) In Compendio Hiſtorico.

(30) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 621.

(31) Præf. in Plin.

[N] It is reported, he had recourſe to the Devil, to know the Senſe of a Greek Word.] This Word is ſo eſſential to the Peripatetic Natural Philoſophy, that, without firſt fixing the Senſe of it, there is no underſtanding what Ariſtotle meant, concerning the Nature of Body. I ſpeak of the Word ἐντελέχεια, which ſome Latiniſts, not being able to find a better, have at laſt rendered by That of perfectihabia. Peter Crinitus ſpeaks as if Hermolaus himſelf had boaſted of That magical Conſultation, and as if he had ſaid, that the Anſwer was given with ſuch a weak Voice, that he could make nothing of it. "Et revera perexilis vocula dæmonum & exigua "eſt, quod olim noſter quoque Venetus Hermolaus "dicebat, vocem ſe dæmonis prætenuem & pene "ſubſibilantem audiſſe, qua ille, de Ariſtotelis ſorte "entelechia interrogatus, ſibi ipſi & Georgio Pla- "centino reſponſitavit (32). ----- And, indeed, the "Voice of Devils is ſoft and low, as our Hermolaus, "of Venice, formerly ſaid, that he heard the Devil "anſwer a Queſtion, he, and George Placentinus, "had put to him, concerning the Entelechia of Ari- "ſtotle, in a faint and whiſpering ſort of Voice." I believe I have gone to the Source of this Fact, by quoting Peter Crinitus: Moſt People (33) quote only Bodin's Dæmonomania, where I have not yet met with this Tranſaction of Hermolaus (34). Some quote Menrolius, who mentions it in his Treatiſe de Entelechia. To conclude, ſome pretend, that Budæus is the Inventor of Perfectihabia: You will find theſe Words in Du Verdier Vau-Privas, And even Thoſe, who intended to praiſe him, have ſaid of him, Eſt ſœliciſſimus quidem, ſed audaciſſimus in novandis vocabulis. —— He is very happy indeed, but very bold, in coining new Words; as when he rendered Ariſtotle's Entelechia by the Word Perfectihabia (35). Note, that ſeveral Perſons maintain, that Cicero has very ill tranſlated that Word of Ariſtotle (36).

(32) Crinit. de honest. Disciplin. lib. 6. c.

(33) Fa. Rapin's Reflections Philo. op. pag. 330. Teiffier, log Ton. pag. 355.

(34) I h not had ſure to Page af Page fo this, bu have n met w in the p where it moſt li to be fou

(35) Du dier, B oth. Fra pag. 47 partag Genebr ſaid of dæus.

(36) Jo Ferreri Pedem nus con them in Treati Entele

[L] Laurence de Medicis gave him ſome Teſtimonies of a ſingular Eſteem.] He went to meet him, notwithſtanding his ill State of Health, and received him very magnificently at his Country Seat: "Cum "Hermolaus Barbarus Reipub. Venetæ nomine lega- "tiones fortè per Italiam obiret, & ad urbem Flo- "rentiam obiter accederet, Laurentius Medicis (qui "Florentinam Rempublicam non minore tum con- "ſilio, quàm fortuna gubernabat) ſtatim tanto viro "cum amicis pluribus (ut fit) obviam procedit: ni- "hil veritus, quod ægros pedes haberet, ac ſummis "doloribus vexaretur. Tum in Caiana villa (quam "infinitis propè ſumptibus ædificabat) honorificen- "tiſſimè illum accepit: ſimulque tanti hominis inge- "nio, & doctrina ſingulari provocatus, eam quoque "liberaliſſimè ſtudiorum nomine illi obtulit, cum "inſigni atque inſtructiſſima bibliotheca, quam ad "exemplum Philadelphi mira tum induſtria para- "verat, ut in eo quaſi Muſarum ſeceſſu ſimul cum "Pico Mirandula honeſtioribus diſciplinis, ac philo- "ſophiæ ſacris pro arbitrio incumberet. In quo "Hermolaus Barbarus (ut homo maximè humanus) "libenter ſe dixit & ſtudiorum cauſa, & Laurentii "merito talem animum agnoſcere: villamque ipſam, "ſi per publicas curas liceret, excipere (37). —— "As Hermolaus Barbarus, who happened to be charged "with ſome Embaſſies, from the Republic of Venice, "to Italy, took the City of Florence in his Way, "Laurence de Medicis, who then governed the Flo- "rentines with no leſs Prudence than Succeſs, went "out to meet ſo extraordinary a Man, with a great "Number of his Friends, as the Ceremony is: Not at "all regarding, that he had the Gout in his "Feet, and was in great Pain. Then he receiv- "ed him very honourably at his Villa Caiana, "which he had built at an infinite Expence: and, "at the ſame time, in reſpect to his great Abilities, "and extraordinary Learning, he offered him the "Uſe of it, for the purſuing his Studies, together "with a large and curious Library, which, in Imi- "tation of Philadelphus, he had collected with ſuprı- "ſing Induſtry, in order to enjoy this Retreat of the "Muſes, together with Picus Mirandulanus, in the "Purſuit of Learning and Philoſophy. Which kind Of- "fer, Hermolaus Barbarus, as he was perfectly com- "plaiſant, readily replied he ſhould be glad to accept, "not only for the ſake of his own Studies, but alſo in "regard to his Highneſs's great Favour, if his public "Commiſſions would have given him leave."

(37) P Crin. hone ciplin 15, ca pag. 4

[P] Mr Varillas has given a very entertaining and elaborate Account of Hermolaus Barbarus; but he

Digitized by Google

I shall cite a Passage of Alcyonius, which will shew, that our Hermolaus congratulated himself on his Disgrace, and that he never studied with so much application, as after his Country had used him ill [Q].

be it mistaken in many things, and oftner than Moreri.] He says (38), I. That Hermolaus Barbarus was esteemed, at Venice, the most remarkable of all the Nobles for the Profession of the highest, and nicest, Gallantry. II. That no Body ever saw him study, or that no Books were to be seen in his Chamber, or Closet. I question the first of these things, and the second I hold to be false. III. That, having undertaken the most laborious Task, then known, in the Republic of Learning (this was the Correction of Pliny (39), he made use of the Authority of Manuscripts, and that of The Greek and Roman Writers, who had treated on the same Subjects; and that, in such Places, where those two Assistances failed him, he made use of his own Conjectures with so much Probability and Success, that not one of them have been rejected. See the Confutation of this, in the Remark [F]. IV. That it was by this ingenious Method he discovered, that Pliny was born at Como, and that he composed a Dissertation about it, which convinced all those who read it. Of all the Authors I have consulted for a List of Barbarus's Works, I have found none, who ascribes to him any such Dissertation. It is true, that, in his Preface to Pliny, he seems to prefer the reading Catullum congerronem meum, before That of Catullum conterraneum meum, whereby he eludes a very strong Argument, which is taken from That Passage, to prove, that Pliny was of Verona. It is true also, that, independently from the reading Congerronem, which he will neither absolutely admit, nor reject; he declares, that Pliny was of Como, and not of Verona; but he does not enlarge upon this; he contents himself with three Lines: This therefore cannot be called a formal Dissertation. Now, though Varillas were in the right, as to this Point, yet he tells a great Falsity; for there is scarce any learned disinterested Critic, but always adjudged Pliny to those of Verona. "Causam dudum adjudicarunt Veronensibus eruditi, inter quos præcipui Polycarpus Palermus singulari opere de Plinii patriâ, & Scaliger in Euseb. Chron. pag. 190 (40). —— The Learned have long since adjudged the Cause to the City of Verona, among whom the principal are Polycarp of Palermo, in a particular Treatise on Pliny's Country, and Scaliger on Euseb. Chron. pag. 190." Very probably the misunderstanding Paul Jovius's Words deceived Varillas. "Novocomensibus C. Plinium secundum civem suum ab imperitis invidiosè surreptum erudita præclaraque sententia reddidisti (41). —— Your great Judgment has restored to Novocomum her Citizen C. Pliny II. whom the illiterate had robbed her of." V. He tells us, in the Secret History, That the prodigious Desire Barbarus had to remedy the Disorders in Physic, made him attempt Dioscorides in the same manner, as he had done Pliny. Which is to confound the Order of Times. Barbarus lived so short a time after the Publication of his Work on Pliny's Natural History, that he formed no new Designs; he had Books enough to finish; and I do not doubt but that he had begun with Dioscorides, before he applied himself wholly to Pliny (42). VI. Hermolaus's Friends advised him quietly to enjoy the Honour, which he had acquired by his Pliny, and his Dioscorides; but he himself told them, he must translate what Themistius had left us on Aristotle, and he performed what he had proposed. Here is a new Anachronism: the Translation of Themistius is one of the first that Barbarus published. "Themistii Peripatetici Paraphrases in aliquot Aristotelis Libros admodum adolescens Latinas effecit (43). —— He translated the Paraphrase of Themistius the Peripatetic, upon some Books of Aristotle, when he was very young." He dedicated it to Sixtus IV, who had been dead eight Years, when he published his Notes on Pliny. VII. Hermolaus did the Republic Justice, against his own Interest, and confessed, that they had Reason to be against him. He intreated the Pope to confer the Benefice on Him, who should be presented to him by the Ambassador of Venice; and expressly declared, that he would not have it, if he must purchase it at so great a Price, as the Displeasure of his Citizens. This seems to be a meer Romance: We have seen already (44), in the Passage of Peter Bembus, that Hermolaus's Father would never let go his hold, and that he only endeavoured to soften the Republic. It is certain also, that the new Patriarch always preserved his Title, and did not submit to his Temporal Superiors. VIII. I do not know where Varillas read, That the only Means, for Hermolaus's Cure, was to send him right Bezoar, and that there was some of it in a Vessel of Agate at Florence, which the Soldan Caitbay had presented to Laurence de Medicis. Peter Crinitus, who ought to know it as well as any Body, says, that the Antidote belonged to Picus Mirandulanus, who knew the Composition of it. "Pharmacon contra pestem quod ille sibi si quando incidisset asservabat diligentissimè, curat ut Romam quàm celerrimè ad Hermolaum devehatur. Dicebat autem Picus illud ipsum ex oleo scorpionum linguisque aspidum, & aliis ejusmodi venenis, confectum (45). —— The Remedy for the Plague, which he carefully kept for his own Use, whenever he should meet with that Misfortune, he dispatched to Hermolaus, at Rome, with all possible Expedition. Picus said, it was a Preparation from Oil of Scorpions, Tongues of Asps, and other Poisons of that kind."

Mr Moreri's Faults consist in saying, I. That the Senate did not approve the Choice, which Innocent VIII made of Hermolaus Barbarus, for the Patriarchate of Aquileia. II. That Hermolaus Barbarus published Pliny's Natural History. The Senate would have no less disapproved the Election of another Person; and the Republic was not displeased for what Innocent VIII had done in favour of Hermolaus Barbarus, but because the Pope pretended to dispose of the Patriarchate without consulting them, and because Hermolaus had acknowledged the Pope's pretended Right, in accepting of that Dignity, against the Laws of his Country. He published his Corrections on Pliny without Pliny's Text (46).

[Q] A Passage of Alcyonius will shew, that Hermolaus —— never studied with so much Application, as after his Country had used him ill.] Here is the Passage: it is Cardinal John de Medicis (47), who speaks. "Exsilium igitur Barbaro non solum calamitatem detraxit, sed etiam dignitatem auxit, quod quidem ita constanter, moderateque ferebat, ut facetissime jocaretur Musas illud sibi à patria impetrasse, quoniam ægrè ferrent hominem suis sacris initiatum ambitione vulgarium honorum distineri, & plebeis occupationibus impediri. Itaque plura scripsit biennio exsul quam XX. ante annos cum patria frueretur & honoribus illius florentissimus esset, recognitionem erratorum Pliniani codicis, explanationem librorum de anima Aristotelis, cum tamen ante ejusdem Philosophi libros talis argumenti in Latinum convertisset, & XVI. libros de ratione disserendi, veteres Peripatetici organon eos appellant; & V. Rhetoricos & unum Poëticum, octoque Dioscoridæ Medicos, quos alio etiam opere instruxerat quod Corollarium inscribebat. Adjecerat quoque pulcerrimam expositionem ad libros analyticos posteriores Aristotelis ante in Latinum translatos (48). —— Exile, therefore, not only eased him from Trouble, but advanced him in Dignity; and he bore it with such Constancy and Moderation, that he used to jest, and very pleasantly call it a Favour, which the Muses had obtained for him, from his Country, in order to prevent one, initiated in their Mysteries, from being otherwise taken up, and interrupted with popular Ambition, and public Employments. Therefore he wrote more, in the two Years after his Banishment, than he did in twenty Years before, when he was in Favour with his Country, and in fullest Enjoyment of it's Honours; namely, a Correction of the Errata of Pliny, an Explication of Aristotle's Books of the Soul, which he had before translated into Latin, as also his sixteen Books of The Art of Reasoning; the Peripatetics call them Organon; and five Of Rhetoric, and one Of Poetry, and the eight Books Of Physic of Dioscorides, enlarging them with a Work, which he calls a Corollary. He had likewise added an excellent Commentary on the latter Books of Aristotle's Analytics, before translated into Latin." This seems to refute what I have advanced above (49), but,

(38) Varill. Anecdotes de Florence, pag. 187, & seq.

(39) Mr Varillas says, that Pliny's Natural History contains 36 Books: he ought to have said 37.

(40) Harduin. in Plin. Tom. I, pag. 2.

(41) Jovius Elog. c. 36.

(42) See towards the end of the following Remark.

(43) Gesner. fol. 318. These Words, Hos libros Themistii paraphrasticos Hermolaus Barbarus Venetiis A. 1570, in fol. edidit, in the Journal of Leipsic, ann. 1685, pag. 461, are not exact; for that Edition was a great while after the Author's Death.

(44) Citation (16).

(45) Petrus Crinitus de honestâ Disciplinâ, lib. I, cap. 7.

(46) This Paragraph was at the End of the Remark of the Article BARBARUS (FRANCIS) in the first Edition.

(47) He was afterwards Pope Leo X.

(48) Petrus Alcyonius in Medice Legato priore de Exilio.

(49) In Remark [P], num. V, and VI.

Digitized by Google

but, if you consider it attentively, it does not; for, besides that there might be some want of Exactness in this Enumeration of Alcyonius, it is certain, that part of the Writings, which he particularizes, are rather a Revision, or a more ample Exposition, of what Hermolaus had already performed, than a quite new Undertaking; and it appears plainly, that Dioscorides had past through his Hands before his Exile, and before the Correction of Pliny's Text. It is a Confirmation of what I have said against Varillas. Farther, it ought to be observed, that the Writings, in this List, were not published before the Death of the Author, who, therefore, could not be advised to take his Ease, on account that his Pliny, and, afterwards, his Dioscorides, had acquired him sufficient Honour. We shall now see, that Alcyonius observes, that these Works of Barbarus were preserved in Manuscript, in a Library. "Et hæc quidem omnia (50) "adhuc diligentissimè asservari vidi à fratribus illius "cum, sedecim abhinc annos (51), Venetiis Bibliothecam illius excuterem, atque incredibili sum lætitia elatus cum cognovi doctissimi amicissimique "hominis elucubrationes non intercidisse, quod ne "evenisset magnopere verebar, cum in suburbano "Oliverii Caraphæ Collegæ mei ex pestilentiâ obiisset, & domestici inimique familiares fugâ saluti "suæ consuluissent, omniaque tanquam bona caduca "in medium reliquissent. Sed ejus generis scripta "ab interitu & furto vindicata fuisse narrabant Zenotelis cujusdam operâ, quem ille habebat ad manum (52). —— And all these I found were still very carefully preserved by his Brothers, upon my examining his Library at Venice, about sixteen Years ago; and it was an exceeding great Pleasure to me, to understand, that the Lucubrations of this learned and friendly Man were not lost, as I apprehended they had been, on his dying of the Plague, at the Country House of my Colleague Oliveri Caropha, and being forsaken by his Friends and Domestics, for fear of Infection, and leaving all his Papers and Things in such Confusion, and without an Owner. But they informed me, that these Writings were preserved by the Care of one Zenoteles, who attended him." I cannot deny, but that Barbarus, in the Epilogue of his Corrections on Pliny, does promise an Edition of Dioscorides; "Scire "oportet, says he (53), annotamenta hæc —— Di"oscoridi quoque prope diem emittendo profutura: "—— It will not be improper to hint, that these Annotations —— will also be of Service in an Edition "of Dioscorides, which I shall shortly publish." But I still insist, that Varillas has not distinguished the Times. A Work of this Author, on Dioscorides, had been seen, before he published That on Pliny, and after he had given a Paraphrase of Themistius. See what follows: "Primum quidem dum Themistii "nobis paraphrasin atque id juvenis adhuc tam ele"ganter Latine loquentem producit: mox edito in "Dioscoridem corollario tam variam ac reconditam "doctrinæ rerum omnium supellectilem depromit: "postremum Plinio —— succurrit (54). —— He first published an elegant Latin Translation of the Paraphrase of Themistius, while he was very young; afterwards, by publishing his Corollary on Dioscorides, he discovered an inexhaustible Fund of Learning; last of all, he undertook the Assistance of Pliny."

(50) The Work on Pliny, published by the Author himself, should have been excepted.

(51) Alcyonius supposes that Cardinal John de Medicis said this about the Year 1512.

(42) Alcyon. in Medice Legato priore.

(52) Herm. Barbarus in Monito ad Lector. ad calcem castigat. pag. 521.

(54) Jo Oporinus Ep. dedicat. Castigat. Herm. Barbari in Plin.

BARBARUS (DANIEL), Great Nephew to the preceeding, was esteemed for his Learning. He published a Commentary on the Five Predicaments of Porphyry, in the Year 1542. Two Years after, he publish'd a Commentary on the Three Books of Aristotle's Rhetoric to Theodectus, which had been translated into Latin by Hermolaus Barbarus. He had said, in a Letter to Gesner, that he hoped speedily to publish several Works of Hermolaus (a). We are indebted to him for the Edition of the Dialogues of Speron Sperone.

(a) Taken from Gesner, Bibl. p. 192, verso.

BARBARUS (DANIEL), of the same Family as the preceeding, was Patriarch of Aquileia, and famous for his Learning. He had much addicted himself to Mathematics and Philosophy, before he was dignified in the Church; but, after his Promotion to Episcopacy, he applied himself wholly to the Study of Divinity. He was so prejudiced in favour of Aristotle, that he would willingly have taken an Oath of Fidelity to him, had he not been a Christian (a). He was Embassador of Venice in England, when Pope Paul IV named him Coadjutor to the Patriarch Grimani (b). He was one of the Fathers of the Council of Trent, and expressed there a great Zeal for the Pope. He voted strongly against those, who desired the Communion in both Kinds (c). He died in the Year 1569, aged Forty one Years (d). He had published several Works [A], and doubtless, if he had lived longer, he would have published many more (e).

(a) Taken from Thuanus, lib. 46, pag. 942.

(b) Palavic. Hist. Conc. Trid. l. xvi. cap. iv, n. 22.

(c) Id. lib. xviii. cap. iv. n. 4. ad An. 1562.

(d) Voss. de Scient. Mathem. pag. 355. Thuanus, l. xlvi. pag. 942.

(e) Thuanus ibid.

(1) Voss. de Scient. Mathemat. pag 355, & 425.

(2) De Scriptor. Sæculi XVI.

(3) Teissier, Addit. to Thuanus, Tom. I. p. 354.

[A] He had published several Works.] A Commentary on Vitruvius, which was printed at Venice, in the Year 1567. La prattica della perspettiva, printed at the same Place, in the Year 1559, and in the Year 1568 (1). Catena Græcorum patrum in quinquaginta Psalmos latine versa. Aubertus Miræus (2), Moreri, Teissier (3), Konig, Paul Freberus (4), &c. ascribe to him the Commentary on the Five Predicaments of Porphyry, and the Commentary on Aristotle's Rhetoric, which I mention'd in the preceeding Article: But, as the first of these Commentaries was printed in the Year 1542, and the second in the Year 1544, it is evident they are not the production of our Daniel Barbarus, who was born in the Year 1528 (5). Freherus, by a very strange Mistake, says, that our Daniel Barbarus, who died in the Year 1569, at 40 Years, of Age, had obtain'd the Patriarchship of Aquileia from Pope Innocent VIII. to whom he was sent Embassador from Venice (6).

(5) According to Thuanus and Vossius.

(6) Freher. ibid.

(4) Freh. Theat. Vir. illustr. pag. 1465.

BARBARA, Wife of the Emperor Sigismond, was the Daughter of Herman Count of Cilia in Hungary. Sigismond had been taken by the Hungarians, and placed under the Guard of two young Gentlemen, whose Father he had put to Death. While he was under their Guard, he persuaded their Mother to let him escape. This point was not gained without having made a great many Excuses to her, for the Death of her Husband, as well as a great many Promises. Among other things, he promised her to marry the Daughter of the Count of Cilia, a near Relation of this Widow; and he performed that Promise (a). She proved the most extraordinary Woman, that ever was seen. She had no manner of shame for her lewd Life. Nor did her great Singularity consist in this; there have been but too many Princesses, who have shewn no Regard for what the World should say of them, with respect to their Impudicities. What made her her so extraordinary, was Atheism [A], which is almost without Example among Women. She did not believe there was either Heaven, or Hell [B], and laughed at those Religious Persons, who renounced the Pleasures of Life, and mortified their Bodies. Sigismond found himself also ill married upon other accounts; for his Wife Barbara plotted, with some great Lords of Bohemia, to drive him out of the Kingdom, and to marry another Husband. He discovered the Plot, and condemned the Empress to perpetual Imprisonment. When he was dead, she was set at liberty (b); and, as she had Thoughts of marrying again, some body represented to her the Example of the Turtle-Dove, which lives single all her life, after the death of her first Mate. But she answered, If you would propose to me the Example of Beasts, Let it be That of Pigeons and Sparrows (c) [C]. She grew old at Gratz in Bohemia, without forsaking her Debaucheries (d), and died there about the Year 1451. The Bohemians buried her very magnificently at Prague in the Tomb of their Kings, as Bonfinius affirms in the seventh Book of the third Decad. Prateolus does not forget her in his Alphabetical Catalogue of Heretics, which makes him very ridiculous; for she did not forge any new Doctrine, nor set up her self as the Head of a Sect; She fell into the Impieties, which are common to all times. In all Countries, profane and impious People have always ridiculed those, who, out of a Principle of Religion, undertake the Task of mortifying the Flesh, instead of following the inclination of Nature (e).

(a) Æneas Silvius in Addition. ad Anton. Panormitam de dictis & factis Alphonsi. l. iii. n. 44, p. 69.

Digitized by Google

(b) Ex Mathia, Theat. Histor. in Sigismundo, pag. 998.

(c) Æneas Silvius, ubi supra, n. 5, pag. 56.

(d) Gretii in Bohemia in vita turpi & fœdis libidinibus infami contenuit. Matesius, ibid.

(e) Barbara — stultas appellabat virgines quæ pro Christi nomine passæ fuissent, propterea quod voluptatis gaudia non gustassent. Prateolus, pag. 85.

[A] What made her so extraordinary, was Atheism, which is almost without Example among Women.] I am not ignorant of what has been lately published in a Satire on that Sex, which, in my Opinion, is Mr Boileau's Master-Piece. In this new Piece, Impiety itself is made one of the Irregularities of Women;

Dans le sexe j'ai peint la pieté caustique.
Et que seroit-ce donc, si Censeur plus tragique
J'allois t'y faire voir l'atheisme établi,
Et non moins que l'honneur le Ciel mis en oubli?
Si j'allois t'y montrer plus d'une Capanée,
Pour souveraine loi mettant la destinée,
Du tonnerre dans l'air bravant les vains carreaux,
Et nous parlant de Dieu du ton de Des-Barreaux?

Justly I've shewn the Sex's flaming Zeal.
What if still blacker Crimes I should reveal,
The Female Atheist's gigantic Pride,
Trampling on Heav'n and Hell with impious Stride;
A bold Capaneus in a Woman's Form,
Daring the Heights of Providence to storm;
Defy it's Laws, disown it's sovereign State,
And substitute that senseless Idol, Fate;
To brave the dreadful Thunder's threatning Tone,
And speak of God as Des-Barreaux has done?

But all this may be true, though there be not above four, or five Women, in France, fallen into those impious Maxims. I am willing to own, that this Prodigy is become something less extraordinary, since Women do not pretend to be so ignorant as formerly. It will require a certain Proficiency in false Metaphysics, to sink the Mind into this unhappy abyss of Irreligion. However it be, I am very much of Opinion, with the Author of the Thoughts on Comets, that Women do not deserve to be censured upon such an account. "Atheism is not their Vice: "they make it a Virtue not to enter into deep Reasonings; so that they stick to their Catechism, and "are much more inclined to Superstition, than Impiety; they are great Followers of Indulgences and "Sermons, and so much possessed with a thousand "Passions, that fall, as it were, to their lot, that they "have neither the necessary time nor capacity to call "in question the Articles of their Faith (1)." It is certain, they will sooner find the Secret of reconciling Passions and Religion together, even in Molinosism itself, than the Expedient of believing nothing.

(1) Some Thoughts on Comets, n. 147, pag. 421.

[B] She did not believe there was either Heaven or Hell.] See the Picture Bonfinius has left us of this Woman; "Barbaram Imperatricem ea tempestate "Græci diem obiisse ferunt, indomitæ libidinis mulierem, quæ inter adulteros publicè vitam duxit, "prostitutoque pudore viros sæpius petiit quam peteretur. Quum ab omni religione destituta foret, "superos ac inferos esse negabat: religiosas ancillas, "jejuniis aut orationi rebusque divinis intentas, gravius increpabat, nullis asseverans molestiis ac inedia "corpus esse macerandum: immo laute pascendum, "in delitiis & voluptatibus alendum, & post mortem, "cum nihil supersit, nullam deorum animorumque "curam esse subeundam (2). —— The Greeks relate, "that the Empress Barbara died about that Time, a "Woman of insatiable Lewdness, who spent her Life "publickly among Adulterers, and, laying aside all "Modesty, sollicited the Men much oftener than they "sollicited her. Having thrown off all Religion, she "denied there was either God or Devil: She severely "chid her Maids, who were devoutly inclined, and "spent their time in fasting and praying, and other "religious Exercises, affirming, that the Body ought "not to be mortified, or made uneasy, but much rather indulged and gratified in the most luxurious "manner; and that, as there was no such thing as a "future State, it was needless to be concerned about "Gods and Spirits."

(2) Bonfinius, Rerum Ungaricar. Decad. III. lib. vii. pag. 344, 345.

[C] If you would propose to me, said she, the Example of Beasts, let it be that of Pigeons and Sparrows.] It is one of the finest Common-Places of Mortality, to shew Man his Disorders, by comparing them with the Regularity of Beasts; Men tear each other to pieces; Man is a Wolf to Man (3); but Beasts of the same Kind do not fight with each other. It was by this means that Horace endeavoured to make the Romans ashamed, who engaged themselves in Civil Wars; The Wolves and Lyons, says he, do not do so. He supposes his Objection to be so strong, as to reduce those, against whom he urges it, to a shameful Silence.

THE Inconveniences of a System of Morality form'd on the Conduct of Beasts.

(3) Homo homini lupus. Erasm. Adag. chil. 1, cent. 1, n. 70, p. 48.

Neque hic lupis mos, nec fuit leonibus
Unquam, nisi in dispar, feris.
Furorne cœcus, an rapit vis acrior?
An culpa? responsum date.
Tacent, & ora pallor albus inficit,
Mentesque perculsæ stupent (4).

(4) Horat. Epod. 7.

Nor Wolf, nor Lion preys upon his Kind:
And shall we Man a greater Savage find?
Well may the Question turn the Monster pale,
And make the faultring Sense it's Office fail.

Juvenal made use of the same Morality in his fifteenth Satire, ver. 159.

Sed jam serpentum major concordia: parcit
Cognatis maculis similis fera: quando leoni
Fortior eripuit vitam leo? quo nemore unquam
Expiravit aper majoris dentibus apri?
Indica tigris agit rabida cum tigride pacem
Perpetuam, sævis inter se convenit ursis:
Ast homini, &c.

But Serpents now more Amity maintain:
From spotted Skins the Leopard does refrain:
No weaker Lion's by a stronger slain:
Nor, from his larger Tusks, the Forest Boar
Commission takes his Brother Swine to gore:

Digitized by Google

Tyger with Tyger, Bear with Bear, you'll find
In Leagues offenſive and defenſive join'd.
But lawleſs Man, &c. TATE.

Mr Boileau has very well tranſlated the Latin of thoſe two Poets, and joined other Examples to it (5).

(5) See his 8th Satire.

Voit-on les loups brigans, comme nous inhumains,
Pour detrouſſer les loups, courir les grands chemins?
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Un aigle ſur un champ pretendant droit d'aubeine
Ne fait point apeller un aigle à la huitaine:
Jamais contre un renard chicanant un poulet
Un renard de ſon ſac n'alla charger Rolet.
Jamais la biche en rut n'a pour fait d'impuiſſance
Trainé du fond des bois un cerf à l'audience:
Et jamais Juge entre eux, ordonnant le congrés,
De ce burleſque mot n'a ſali ſes arrêts.

Who ſees the High-way Wolf in ambuſh lye,
To rob his Brother Wolf in paſſing by?
When does the Eagle on the Eagle prey,
By ſetting up a Claim to waif and ſtray?
When does the Fox, whom conſtant Thefts maintain,
For Poultry ſtoln his Brother Fox arraign?
When does the rutting Hind a Suit commence,
And proſecute the Stag for Impotence?
When does the Judge, aſſign'd to try their Cauſe,
With baudy Orders ſtain the ſacred Laws?

Though this is a very fine and pathetic Common-Place, yet it has it's Foible: For, firſt, it may be eluded by turning it into a Jeſt; and, in the ſecond place, it may be ſeriouſly oppoſed by the Maxim;

(6) Horat. Sat. 3, lib. 2. ver. 103.

Nil agit exemplum litem quod lite reſolvit (6).

That Argument but little Force diſplays,
Which, ſolving one, another Doubt will raiſe.

that is to ſay, It may be retorted, and, by turning the Tables, the Moraliſt may loſe his Advantage. I do not pretend to approve of thoſe, who oppoſe Jeſts to Arguments; but I ſay, it is a very great Diſadvantage to an Argument, to be able to be turned into Ridicule by thoſe, who love jeſting. Let us prove this by an Example. Suppoſe any body had undertaken to perſuade Mr de Bautru, that it is better to chuſe an old Miſtreſs, than a young one, and had quoted the place of Pliny, where it is ſaid, That the Rams are fonder of old Ews than young ones; would he not have been confounded by this Anſwer, given him with a Sneer (7), That is, becauſe Rams are Rams (8). A Roman Lady made uſe of the like Thought, on ſomebody's wondering why the Females among Beaſts did not deſire the Male, but when they had a Mind to become Mothers. The Lady anſwered, It is becauſe they are Beaſts. Simile dictum Populiæ Marci filiæ, quæ miranti cuidam quid eſſet quapropter aliæ beſtiæ nunquam marem deſiderarent niſi cum prægnantes vellent fieri, reſpondit, beſtiæ enim ſunt (9). Was not this a confounding Stroke? So much for the firſt Inconvenience. The other is not leſs conſiderable; for, in ſhort, a Man, who is to be ſent to learn his Duty in the School of Beaſts, will tell you, that he deſires no better Doctrine. " For there, ſays he, I " ſhall learn to determine Right by Force: The " ſtronger Maſtiff does not ſcruple to rob the weaker " of his Share. What is more common than to ſee " Dogs fighting together? Do not Chickens attack " one another in ſight of their common Mothers? " Do not Cocks fight together ſo cruelly, that many " times the Battle does not ceaſe before the Death of " one of the Combatants? Do not Pigeons, the Symbol of Meekneſs, come very often to Blows? " What can be more furious, than the Engagement " of Bulls? Does not Force decide their Right in their " Amours."

(7) See Menagiana, p. 323. of the IIſt Edit. of Holland.

(8) Vervecum in patria crafſoque ſub aëre naſci. Juven. Sat. X. ver. 50.

(9) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. II. cap. v. in fine.

- - - - - - Ignotis perierunt mortibus illi
Quos Venerem incertam rapientes MORE FERARUM
Viribus editior cædebat ut in grege TAURUS (10).

(10) Horat. Sat III. lib. 1. ver. 108.

No Pen their Hiſtories did e'er relate,
Who in promiſcuous Love have met their Fate,
Cut off by ſome ſuperior Lover's pow'r;
As the Herd Bull no Rival can endure.

Illi alternantes multa vi prælia miſcent
Vulneribus crebris: lavit ater corpora ſanguis,
Verſaque in obnixos urgentur cornua vaſto
Cum gemitu: reboant ſilvæque & magnus Olympus:
Nec mos bellantes una ſtabulare, ſed alter
Victus abit, longeque ignotis exulat oris
Multa gemens, ignominiam plagaſque ſuperbi
Victoris, tum quos amiſit inultus amores,
Et ſtabula aſpectans regnis exceſſit avitis (11)

(11) Virg. Georg. I. 3. ver. 2

The ſtooping Warriors, aiming Head to Head,
Engage their claſhing Horns; with dreadful Sound
The Foreſt rattles, and the Rocks rebound.
They fence, they puſh, and puſhing loudly roar;
Their dewlaps and their ſides are bath'd in Gore;
Nor, when the War is over, is it Peace;
Nor will the vanquiſh'd Bull his Claim releaſe:
But, feeding in his Breaſt his ancient Fires,
And curſing Fate, from his proud Foe retires.
Driv'n, from his native Land, to foreign Grounds,
He with a gen'rous Rage reſents his Wounds;
His ignominious Flight, the Victor's Boaſt,
And, more than both, the Loves, which unrevenged he loſt.
Often he turns his Eyes, and with a Groan
Surveys the pleaſing Kingdoms, once his own.
DRYDEN.

" Shall I not learn the moſt unnatural Barbarity in " the School, where you ſend me? Do not ſome " Beaſts devour their young Ones? Shall I not learn " Inceſt there?

- - - - - - ſed enim damnare negatur
Hanc venerem pietas, coëuntque animalia nullo
Cætera delectu, nec habetur turpe juvencæ
Ferre patrem tergo: ſit equo ſua filia conjux,
Quaſque creavit init pecudes caper, ipſaque cujus
Semine concepta eſt ex illo concipit ales.
Felices, quibus iſta licent: humana malignas
Cura dedit leges, & quod natura remittit
Invida jura negant (12).

(12) M apud C Met. li ver. 32

But Piety this Paſſion muſt allow;
All Creatures elſe promiſcuous Love purſue.
Bulls know no ſhame their Daughters to beſtride;
The willing Filly makes her Sire a Bride;
The wanton Goat does his own Kids enjoy;
Nor to the Bird are his own young Ones coy.
O happy theſe! while Man by Nature free,
To envious Laws gives up his Liberty.

" Shall I not learn there to ſeize on every thing that " lies within my reach, that I may lay up Proviſions like the Ant?

- - - - - - - - - - ſicut
Parvula, nam exemplo eſt, magni formica laboris
Ore trahit quodcunque poteſt atque addit acervo
Quem ſtruit, haud ignara ac non incauta futuri (13).

(13) H Sat I. ver. 3

Great Heaps to raiſe, learn from the little Ant;
See her vaſt Stores, to guard from future Want.

" Shall I not free myſelf from the hard Slavery, which " torments ſo many People, and makes them break " out into theſe pathetic Complaints?

Que vôtre bonheur eſt extrême,
Cruels lions, ſauvages ours,
Vous qui n'avez dans vos amours
D'autre regle que l'amour même!
Que j'envie un ſemblable ſort!
Et que nous ſommes malheureuſes
Nous de qui les loix rigoureuſes
Puniſſent l'amour par la mort (14)!

(14) Verſes taken the P Fido, ing to Tranſ of the te's d Suze.

How

Digitized by Google

How exquiſite your Bliſs appears,
Cruel Lions, ſavage Bears;
Whoſe Loves no other Rule confines,
But that which Love itſelf enjoins!
How envied is your happy Fate!
How wretched is our ſlaviſh State;
Whoſe rigid Laws, againſt all Senſe,
Make Love a Capital Offence!

It cannot therefore be denied, but that the Examples, which the School of Brutes affords, of all manner of Irregularities, do ſomething weaken the moral Reflections I have mentioned in the beginning of this Remark: For, ſince Divinity aſſures us, all Beaſts are free from Sin, it cannot be ſaid, that ſome are grown diſorderly for a Puniſhment of their Faults, and that others have been preſerved regular for a Reward of their Virtue. So that whatever they do is equally regular; and, if any one ſhould ask, as Sigiſmund's Widow did, Why will you rather have me imitate the Turtle-Dove, than the Pigeon, or the Sparrow? You can give no good Anſwer, without conſulting the Grounds of Morality, as much as you would be obliged to do, if you did not at all make uſe of the Example of the Turtle-Dove. What Anſwer would Mr Boileau give to a Sophiſt, who ſhould maintain, that his rutting Hind is a very falſe Compariſon? For, to make it good, it muſt be ſuppoſed, that this Brute is capable of being in the ſame Condition with thoſe Women, who ſue a Man for Impotency. Now can a Hind be in ſuch a Caſe? Does ſhe engage her Faith to a ſingle Stag? If one fails her, does ſhe not find others? Mr Boileau's biting Invective, and Satire, would be well grounded in a Country, where there were no Laws of Marriage; but it is very certain, that, in ſuch a Country, Men would no more be ſued for Impotency, than Stags, nor condemned to ſhew their Manhood by a Congreſs, in purſuance of an Order of Court.

What I have ſaid does not at all leſſen my Belief, that the moral Obſervations, I am ſpeaking of, are very proper to affect moſt People. Therefore I do not blame Francis de Sales, who propoſed the Elephant for an Example of Chaſtity; and I condemn the Anſwer of the Empreſs Barbara. A thouſand things might be ſaid on this Subject. The Actions of Brutes are, perhaps, one of the moſt profound Myſteries, on which our Reaſon can be exerciſed; and I am ſurprized, that ſo few Perſons perceive it. But let us relate the Words of Francis de Sales: "The Elephant, ſays he (15), is one of the "moſt unwieldly, but, at the ſame time, the worthieſt "and moſt ſenſible of the whole Brute Creation. "I ſhall ſay one word of his Chaſtity; he never "changes his Female; he very tenderly loves the "Mate he has once choſen; but yet he cohabits "with her only every third Year, and then not "above five Days, and ſo privately, that he is "never ſeen in the Act: On the ſixth Day, he "makes his Appearance, and, in the firſt place, goes "directly to ſome River, and waſhes his whole "Body, nor returns to the Herd before he is puri"fied. Is not this a fine, and a chaſte, Diſpoſition "of ſuch an Animal, and a good Example to mar"ried People, not to ſet their Affections on their "Senſuality and Pleaſure, but, as ſoon as thoſe "Gratifications are over, to waſh their Heart and "Affections, and purify themſelves as ſpeedily as "poſſible, that they may afterwards have their "Minds at full Liberty, for the Performance of "Actions more pure and exalted? &c." What he ſays of the Elephant is taken from Ariſtotle (16), Pliny (17), and Ælian (18). Claud. Spencæus in his Treatiſe Of the State of Widowhood, where he ſpeaks of Monogamy, had remarked this of the Elephant, and given it, together with that of the Turtle-Dove, for eminent Examples of Modeſty and Chaſtity to Chriſtians.

(15) Introduction to a devout Life, part 3. c. 39. OF the Chaſtity of the Nuptial Bed.

(16) Ariſtot. Hiſt. Anim. lib. 5. c. 15.

(17) Plin. lib. 8. c. 5.

(18) Ælian. Hiſt Anim. lib. 8. c. 17.

BARBERINI (FRANCIS), one of the beſt Poets of his Time, was born in the Year 1264, at Barberino in Tuſcany. His Mother being a Native of Florence, he went and ſettled in that City, where the Profeſſion of a Civilian, but, above all, the beauty of his Poems, made him very conſiderable. Moſt of his Works are loſt. That, which was intituled The Precepts of Love [A], had a better deſtiny. It was printed at Rome, in the Year 1640, and adorned with fine Cuts. It was done by the Care of Frederic Ubaldini, who took that occaſion to court the higher Powers; for the Houſe of Barberini, which was deſcended from this Poet, enjoyed the Papacy at that time. At the beginning of This Work he placed the Author's Life and ſome Elogies; and, becauſe there were ſeveral obſolete words in thoſe Verſes, he added a Gloſſary to explain them, and clear, or prove, the Senſe of them, by the Authority of cotemporary Poets (a).

(a) Taken from the Acta Eruditorum, in §. 7. of Vol. I. of the Supplements, pag. 349.

[A] His Poem entitled, The Precepts of Love was preſerved.] This is equivocal; one might imagine that this Poem was a School of Coquettry, like that of Ovid, de Arte amandi; but it would prove a very great Miſtake. There is nothing more Moral than this Poem of Barberini. It contains nothing but Rules, which teach thoſe their Duty, who fix their Love on Glory, Virtue, and Eternity (1).

(1) Acta Eruditor. pag. 349, of the 1ſt Vol. of the Supplements.

BARCLAY (WILLIAM) a Learned Civilian in the XVIth Century, was of Aberdeen in Scotland, and of a very good Family [A]. Though he had been in favour with Queen Mary Stuart, he could not make his Fortune at the Court of the King of Scotland, the Son of that Princeſs. This made him reſolve to retire into France in the Year 1573 (a); and, though he was near thirty Years of

(a) The Life of John Barclay, prefixed to the Argenis, has it the Year 1571.

[A] He was of a very good Family.] Namely, That of Barclay, which is related to all the great Families of Scotland, as appears by a Patent, from King James, printed before the Argenis. I make uſe of the Word Patent, becauſe it is not a meer Letter, written to the Duke of Lorrain, as Mr Menage affirms (1), but a Letter, ſealed with the great Seal of the Kingdom, and addreſſed to all Perſons, in the uſual Form, To all to whom theſe Preſents ſhall come, Greeting. Mr Menage is very excuſable in his Miſtake; but he, who cauſed this Superſcription, Epiſtola Jacobi Scotiæ Regis, Carolo Lotharingiæ Duci, to be placed before King James's Atteſtation, is guilty, either of unpardonable Fraud, or Ignorance. He ought to have read That Writing, ſince he cauſed it to be printed, and prefixed to a Book (2). There is not a Line in it but will ſhew, that it was not a Letter written to the Duke of Lorrain. The Italian Tranſlator of the Argenis (3) tells us, That the Relations of the Lady Malleville would not agree to her Marriage with William Barclay, before they had ſeen Proofs of the Nobility he had boaſted of. He adds, That this vexed Barclay, only on account of the amorous Impatience, with which he was tranſported; for he was obliged to wait for the Arrival of a Certificate, before he could taſte the Pleaſures of Enjoyment. He goes on, and ſays, That, when the Relations of the fair Lady ſaw the Royal Atteſtation, they were the firſt, who haſtened the Conſummation. It is impoſſible to forbear wondering, when we find theſe things in the ſame Page with the King of Scotland's Certificate; for This Prince declares,

(1) Menage, Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 228.

(2) It is printed before the Argenis.

(3) His Name is Franceſco Pona; he wrote the Life of John Barclay, and prefixed it to his Tranſlation of the Argenis.

Digitized by Google

of Age, yet he went to ſtudy the Civil-Law at Bourges. Some time after, he there took his Doctor's Degree [B]; and as he had a great deal of Wit, and applied himſelf very much to Study, he ſoon made himſelf capable to teach the Civil-Law. His Uncle, the Jeſuit Edmond Hay, procured him a Profeſſorſhip in that Science, in the Univerſity of Pontamouſſon, by the Credit he had with the Duke of Lorrain, who had lately founded that Univerſity. That Duke did not only confer the chief Chair on Barclay, but made him alſo one of his Counſellors of State, and Maſter of Requeſts of his Palace. In the Year 1582 (b), Barclay married a Gentlewoman of Lorrain (c), by whom he had a Son, who became a Famous Man, and was the innocent cauſe of his Father's falling out with the Jeſuits. This young Man had ſo much Wit, that they uſed their utmoſt endeavours to get him into their Order. His Father was angry with them for it; and they with him in their turn, and did him ſo many ill Offices with the Duke, that they obliged him to leave Lorrain. He went to King James at London, who offered him a place in his Council with a very good Salary; but he refuſed thoſe Offers upon account of the condition annexed to them, which was to embrace the Religion of the Church of England. In the beginning of the Year 1604, he returned into France, and accepted the Profeſſorſhip of the Civil Law, which was offered him by the Univerſity of Angers. He taught there with great Splendor [C], till his Death, which happened towards the latter end of the Year 1605 [D]. He was buried at the Franciſcans (d). He publiſhed ſome Books [E], and declares, expreſsly, that Barclay had a Wife already (4); and this is farther certain, from the Date of the Atteſtation (5). That Date is above a Month after the Birth of John Barclay, the Son of William, and of the Lady Malleville. Judge how the amorous William Barclay was obliged to delay his Joy, by waiting for a Certificate. The Author of John Barclay's Life, in Latin, was in the ſame Error: He ſays, The Atteſtation was required, that he might prove himſelf a Perſon of Quality to his future Spouſe. Cum Anna de Malavilla contracturus nuptias ex Scotia regias literas accerſivit, quibus ingenuæ nobilitatis titulos futuræ ſponſæ approbaret.

(b) See Remark [A], of the following Article.

(c) Her Name was Anne de Malleville.

(d) Taken from Mr Menage's Remarks on the Life of Peter Ayrault, pag. 228, & ſeq.

[B] He ſtudied the Civil Law at Bourges - - - - and there took his Doctor's Degree.] Cujacius preſided at That Act (6). It is a great Fallity to ſay, that Barclay's Marriage did not interrupt his Studies, and that, having continued them, after his Wedding, from a Scholar he became a Doctor, and, from a Doctor, a Profeſſor of the Civil Law: Lequali (nozze) non rompendo il bel filo de gli ſtudii di lui, ſucceſſe che di ſcholare ch' egli era, paſſato al grado del Dotterato, riceve una lettura principale di Leggi (7).

[C] He taught, at Angers, with great Splendor.] " He went to his Lectures, attended by his Son, " and two Servants, dreſſed in a magnificent Robe, " with a great Chain of Gold about his Neck (8)."

[D] He died towards the end of the Year 1605.] Mr Moreri, being deceived by Nicius Erythræus, and others, has put down the Year 1609, inſtead of the Year 1605. He believed, with Reaſon, that our Barclay went to teach the Civil Law, at Angers, in 1604; and he found, in Nicius Erythræus, that This Profeſſor lived five Years after taking Poſſeſſion of That Place. " Ab " Andibus optimis conditionibus evocatur, ut in ipſo- " rum gymnaſio primariam Juris Civilis cathedram ob- " tineret, ubi cum jam quinquennium docuiſſet eſt mor- " rtuus (9). - - - He was invited, by the Univerſity of " Angers, on advantageous Terms, to accept the prin- " cipal Chair of the Civil Law, which he enjoyed " five Years, and then died." It was natural to conclude, that he did not die, till about the Year 1609. But the Italian Author is miſtaken, ſince, beſides the Authority of Mr Menage, I can alledge this Reaſon; William Barclay was dead before the Differences between Paul V, and the Venetians, were ended. " Ac- " cendebant hominem & pietate & jam ſenecta liberio- " rem illæ turbæ quas multi ominabantur, cum Pon- " tifex in Anglum Venetoſque diſtrictus, illum qui- " dem jam à ſacris noſtris alienum acerbare, hos au- " tem alienare videbatur. Sed tam pium conatum " intercepit fœlix & in Chriſto obitus. —— The Di- " ſturbances, which many foreſaw, from the Pope's " Violence againſt England and Venice, which ſeemed " to exaſperate the former, already alienated from " our Communion, and to alienate the latter, ſtirred " up the good Man, whoſe Piety, and old Age, had " given him a greater Degree of Freedom. But a " happy, and truly Chriſtian, Death prevented his " pious Deſign." This we find in the Preface to the Book De Poteſtate Papæ (10). The Differences between the Pope, and the Republic of Venice, were ended in the Year 1607. The Sieur Witte being, perhaps, deceived only by Moreri, has placed the Death of Barclay in the Year 1609 (11).

[E] He publiſhed ſome Books.] Among others, Præmetia, on the Life of Agricola, and a Commentary on the Title of the Pandects de Rebus Creditis & de Jurejurando. He publiſhed it in the Year 1605, at Paris. But the two Pieces, which made the moſt Noiſe, were the Treatiſe of the Papal Power, and That of the Regal Power. The Title of the firſt is, De Poteſtate Papæ, an & quatenus in Reges & Principes ſeculares jus & imperium habeat. The ſecond is entitled, De Regno & Regali poteſtate adverſus Buchananum, Brutum, Boucherium & reliquos Monarchomachos. He publiſhed this latter Work at Paris, in the Year 1600, and dedicated it to Henry IV. The other did not come out of the Preſs before the Death of the Author, who durſt not even ſay, that he was writing ſuch a Work. " Et qui- " dem de Regno libros quibus populârem am- " exagitabat nullâ diſſimulatione conſcripſit. Sed hoc " opus (de Poteſtate Papæ) ſecreto aggreſſus eſt, cum " tunc aliquid Pontifici negare hæreſis cenſeretur " (12). - - - - He never diſſembled the writing his " Book, of The Regal Power, wherein he laſhes po- " pular Ambition. But this Work (Of the Papal " Power) he undertook privately, the denying the Pope " any thing being, then, eſteemed Hereſy." He undertook theſe two Pieces, when he ſaw the Diſorders of the League, the Subjects in Arms againſt their King, and the legitimate Poſſeſſors of the Throne declared, by the Papal Bulls, to have forfeited their Crown. Lorrain, where he was advantageouſly ſettled, followed the Stream, and approved the Revolt of Subjects, and the Attempts of the Court of Rome againſt the Temporalities of Princes. He remained firm in his Principles; for he had learned them in a good School; neither muſt it be queſtioned, but that the Seditions of the Scots had been, in this Reſpect, his chief Catechiſm. Nothing is more proper to make the Republican Maxims hated, than to ſee, that they have produced Troubles, which have deſtroyed the Religion one believes to be the true one, and dethroned a Queen, by whom one was beloved. However it be, the Profeſſor of Pontamouſſon ſhewed an uncommon Steadineſs: Moſt Perſons alter their Principles as they change their Country and Intereſts; as for him, he preſerved thoſe Maxims in Lorrain, which he had in Scotland, though the Situation of Affairs was entirely reverſed. The Authority of the People, advanced above the Royal Power, ſerved, in Scotland, for the Ruin of Popery, and, in France, for the Ruin of the Proteſtants. Notwithſtanding all this, Barclay did not change his Opinion: He had found it unjuſt in Scotland, where it promoted the Catholic Religion, and found it no leſs unjuſt in France, where it promoted the ſame Religion. It is a Rarity to meet with ſo much Conſtancy in a Doctor; but thoſe, whoſe Principles turn like Weather-cocks, are every where to be found. I have ſaid, that Barclay durſt not

(4) In Lotharingia conſeduiſſe, ibique affinitatem genere moribuſque ſuis non indignam contraxiſſe. That, being ſettled in Lorrain, he had married a Wife, not at all unſuitable either in Family or Virtue.

(5) The 19*th of* March, 1582. Moreri makes it the 28*th.*

(6) Menage, ubi ſupra.

(7) Franceſco Pona, ubi ſupra.

(8) Menage, ubi ſupra, pag. 231.

(9) Nic. Erythr. Pinacoth. III, pag. 76. Paul Freherus Theatr. pag. 1515, makes him to continue Profeſſor five Years. He quotes Imperialis and Thomaſin.

(10) Mr Menage, Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 228, attributes this Preface to John Barclay the Son of William.

(11) Witte, in Appendice Diarii Biographici.

(12) In Præfat. Operis de Poteſtate Papæ.

THE League did not alter Barclay's Hypotheſis concerning the Independence of Kings.

Digitized by Google

and one among the reſt, wherein he refuted ſome Authors, who, tho' of different Religions, did yet agree in Republican Maxims in favour of Religion [F]. He had an averſion for the Calviniſts [G]; which Spirit of Bitterneſs was probably occaſioned by the Condition he ſaw his Country in, when he was forced to abandon it for the ſake of his Catholic Religion (e).

(e) Quas (liber erat) cum ideam Guillelmus videret una cum avita religione ſordeſcere, Principem vero ſuam marceſcere in infimis carceris ſitu, dolore confectus migravit, anno 1571, Lutetiam..... Which (Learning) when Barclay ſaw trampled on, together with the Religion of his Anceſtors, and his Queen reduced to the Diſgrace of a Priſon, he was ready to ſink with Grief, and retired to Paris. Vita Jo. Barclaii.

not own he was writing againſt the Maxims of the Italians; but this ought only to be underſtood of the time of the Continuance of the League; for, when it was defeated, he no longer made a Myſtery of his Work, but ſent it to the Preſs, and dedicated it to Clement VIII (13). But he took it away again from the Printer, and kept it near ten Years, during which time, he added a great deal to it, but cut off much more. He was making all the haſte he could to finiſh it, on the Apprehenſion of the Differences, which were likely to happen, between the Pope, and the Venetians; but Death hindered him from putting the laſt Hand to his Work (14).

(13) Ibid.

(14) Ibid.

[F] He refuted ſome Authors, who, though of different Religions, yet agreed on Republican Maxims, in favour of Religion.] He refuted two Proteſtants, Buchanan, and Hubert Languet: And alſo Boucher, one of the Curates of Paris, and a very violent Leaguer. This Man ſubmitted the Sovereign Authority to the People, for the good of the Catholic Religion; the others did the ſame thing for the good of the Proteſtant. So that they were all three united in the general Theſis, and all three Adverſaries to Barclay.

[G] He had an Averſion for the Calviniſts.] This appears by his Writings. Read theſe Words of Mr Menage: "He was a great Enemy to the Calviniſts "and Lutherans. In his Commentary on the Title "in the Digeſts de Rebus creditis, he ſays, ſpeaking "of Doneau, Doctor-Regent of the Civil-Law in the "Univerſity of Bourges, Hugo Donellus unus ex præ- "ceptoribus meis: vir civilis Diſciplinæ peritus, ſed "malus, quia hæreticus Calviniſta (15). —— Hugo "Donellus, one of my Preceptors, to be admired for "his Learning in the Civil Law, but to be abhorred "for his Calviniſtical Hereſy."

(15) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 229.

BARCLAY (JOHN), Son of the foregoing, was born at Pontamouſſon, the Twenty eighth of January, 1583 [A]. The Jeſuits of That Town, under whom he ſtudied, were ſo charmed with his Wit, that they uſed their utmoſt Endeavours to draw him into their Society. I have already ſaid, that this was the reaſon of his Father's going to King James, who was lately come to the Crown of England. He brought his Son along with him; his Son I ſay, who was already an Author [B], and had ſome new Works ready for the Preſs: He had publiſhed a Commentary on the Thebais of Statius, in 1601 (a), and he publiſhed a Latin Poem on the Coronation of King James, and the firſt part of the Euphormio, in the Year 1603. Thoſe two Pieces pleaſed his Britannic Majeſty very well, who loved and underſtood Learning. John Barclay dedicated to him That beginning of the Euphormio. He returned into France with his Father, who would not leave him with King James, for fear That Prince, who would willingly have retained him, ſhould engage him to abjure the Romiſh Faith. He continued at Angers, till his Father's Death; after which he went to Paris, where he married [C], and went ſoon after to London. He was there in the Year 1606, and

(a) It was printed at Pontamouſſon, and dedicated to Charles III, Duke of Lorain.

[A] Was born at Pontamouſſon, the Twenty eighth of January, 1583.] I have blindly followed Mr Menage, but reſerved to myſelf the Liberty to rectify him here by himſelf. He mentions, at Page 228, what I have taken for the Text to This Remark, and afterwards affirms, at Page 232, that John Barclay died the twelfth of Auguſt, in the Year 1621, aged Thirty nine Years and ſix Months. He muſt therefore be born in the beginning of the Year 1582. This is confirmed by another Fact, related by Mr Menage. In the Year 1603, John Barclay dedicated the firſt Part of the Euphormio to the King of England (1), and declares, in the Apology for the Euphormio, that he was but Twenty one Years of Age, when he cauſed that firſt part to be printed (2). An Author, who is but twenty Years and ſome Months old, does not uſe to ſay, that he is but Twenty one Years of Age; he expreſſes himſelf only in that manner, when he is in his Twenty ſecond Year. Barclay was, therefore, full Twenty one Years old, in 1603; and conſequently was born, not in the Year 1583, but in 1582. So that, if his Birth-day was the Twenty eighth of January, his Father's Marriage muſt be placed in the Year 1581, and not, as Mr Menage would have it, in the Year 1582. The ſame Conſequences will follow from what he ſays (3), that Barclay, being but nineteen Years of Age in 1601, printed a Commentary on Statius. He remarks, that he, who wrote the Life of John Barclay, printed before the Argenis, is ſtrangely deceived in ſaying, that John Barclay was born at Aberdeen (4). If he was miſtaken in the Place of his Birth, he was not miſtaken in the Time, which, he ſays, was the Twenty eighth of January, 1582. We read, under the Effigies of John Barclay, in the Frontiſpiece of the Argenis, that he was born the Twenty eighth of January, 1682: And thus the Engravers deceive us, as well as the Printers.

(1) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, p. 229.

(2) Ibid. pag. 231.

(3) Ibid. p. 228, 229.

(4) Ibid. pag. 228.

[B] He was an Author very early.] We have ſeen already, that, at nineteen Years of Age, he publiſhed a Commentary on Statius; he deſerves, therefore, to be inſerted in the next Edition of Baillet's Famous Children; but he would deſerve it yet more, if his true Age had been known to Nicius Erythræus: for, in that Caſe, he muſt have been an Author at fifteen Years. And, indeed, Erythræus ſays, that Barclay was but ſeventeen Years of Age, when he wrote a Poem on King James's Coronation; that is to ſay, in 1603. Annum tum agebat Joannes decimum Septimum cum de Regis inauguratione elegantiſſimum carmen edidit, maximo verborum ſententiarumque ſplendore illuminatum; quod lectum Rex adeo probavit, ut &c. (5). At that rate, he muſt have been but fifteen Years of Age, when, in 1601, he publiſhed a Commentary on the Thebais of Statius. Let us obſerve, here, a new Miſtake of That Italian Author, which proved contagious to Moreri, and ſo contagious, that it has produced another. Mr Moreri was not contented with ſaying, that Barclay was but ſeventeen Years of Age, when King James was crowned, but he has converted the printed Poem of This Author into a Speech delivered on that Occaſion. Paul Freherus places John Barclay's Birth in the Year 1585, and the Panegyric on the Coronation in the ſeventeenth Year of his Age (6).

(5) Nicius Erythr. Pinacoth. 3, pag. 76.

(6) Freher, Theat. pag. 1515.

[C] He went to Paris, and there married.] "He "married Louiſe Debonnaire, Daughter of Michael "Debonnaire, Treaſurer of the old Bandes, and of "Urſina Deniſot. —— He went afterwards, with "his Wife, into England, where he had, by her, "two Sons and a Daughter (7)." He did not marry at Rome: Moreri, who ſays ſo, did not, in the leaſt, underſtand his Nicius Erythræus, who would eaſily have informed him, that Barclay eſcaped from England, with his Wife and Son, and retired to Rome, where ſhe brought him another Son. Ibi Barclaius ex uxore quam habebat maſculam prolem ſuſcepit. Sed aliquanto poſt — clam ex Anglia unà cum uxore & filio ſe fugâ ſurripuit, ac Romam venit (8). —— Romæ novam ex uxore ſuâ maſculam prolem accepit, ac cive uno Urbem

(7) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, p. 230.

(8) Nic. Erythr. Pinacoth. 3, pag. 77.

Digitized by Google

and it was then, that he came acquainted with Mr de Peireſc. He had lately publiſhed the Hiſtory of the Gun-Powder-Treaſon. It is a Pamphlet of Six Leaves (b), printed at Amſterdam. In the Year 1610 (c), he publiſhed, at London, an Apology for the Euphormio, and his Father's Treatiſe De Poteſtate Papæ [D]. In the Year 1612, he printed a Book at Paris, intituled Pietas [E]. It is an Anſwer to Cardinal Bellarmin, who had wrote againſt William Barclay's Book of the Papal Power. Two Years after, appeared the Icon Animorum, which he publiſhed at London. From whence he went, in the Year 1616, to Paris, where he was preſented, by his good Friend Mr de Peireſc, to Mr du Vair, Keeper of the Seals. He went afterwards to Rome, being invited thither by Pope Paul V, where he publiſhed a Book of Controverſy, intituled Paræneſis ad Sectarios. He received a great many Favours from Cardinal Bellarmin, though he had written againſt him. He died at Rome, the twelfth of Auguſt 1621 (d), while his Argenis was printing in France (e) [F]. His body was carried into the Church of St Onuphrius upon the Janiculum. His Son erected a Marble Monument for him, in St Laurence's Church, on the way to Tivoli (f): We ſhall give the Reaſon, in the Remarks, why his Widow cauſed her Huſband's Buſto to be taken from thence [G]. Many believe, that John Barclay made Profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion in (b) Intituled, Series patefacti divinitus parricidii in maximum regem, regnumque Britannie cogitati, & inſtructi.

(c) See the end of the Remark [D].

(d) On the Print before the Argenis they have put the 12*th of* April.

(e) Taken from Mr Menage's Remarks on the Life of Peter Ayrault, pag. 228, & ſeq.

(f) Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. 3, pag. 80.

Urbem noſtram auxit (9). Maffeo Barberini, who was afterwards Pope Urban VIII, was God-father to our Barclay's new Son (10). In Reading theſe Words of Erythræus, one would never imagine, that Barclay's Wife did not come to Rome, 'till four Years after her Husband; and yet Gaſſendus affirms it to be true. Read the Place, where he mentions the good Offices, which Mr de Peireſc did the Husband, in the Year 1616, and the Wife and Child in 1620. Prætereo fuiſſe Peireskio non minorem circa Barclaii uxorem, filium, & Jo. Ludovicum Debonærum uxoris germanum, cum QUARTO poſt ANNO profecti Romam ad illum ſunt (11). If Mr Menage had well conſidered theſe Words of Gaſſendus, he would not have ſaid, that Barclay went to Rome, in the Year 1617, and that his Wife, his Son, and his Brother-in-law, came to him there, in the Year 1619 (12). He adds, that Barclay's Son came to Paris with his Mother, in the Year 1652; that he made no great Figure; that he compoſed Latin Verſes; and that, at the ſame time, he printed there a Latin Elogy. Erythræus ſpeaks of Barclay's Widow, as of a preſumptuous and haughty Woman: See, below, the Remark [G]. In the Latin Life of John Barclay, it is falſly ſaid, that he married Louiſe Debonnaire, after having been employed in ſeveral Embaſſies by King James.

(9) Ibid. pag. 79.

(10) Ibid.

(11) Gaſſendus in vita Peireskii ad Ann. 1616. pag. 283. See alſo pag. 288.

(12) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, p. 231, 232.

[D] He printed his Father's Treatiſe De Poteſtate Papæ.] If we believe Mr Menage (13), the printing That Book loſt him great Part of the King of England's Favour. I cannot apprehend from whence this ſhould come, ſince this Book ſtrongly confutes the Pretenſions of the Ultramontanes, and particularly Bellarmin's Arguments, and ſtoutly maintains the Independency of Kings. Could any thing be written more agreeable to King James? I conjecture, that Gaſſendus's Latin (14) has deceived Mr Menage; and this convinces us yet more effectually, how difficult it is to write very clearly in Latin. Upon examining the Paſſage more cloſely, it will appear, that the Author does not affirm, that the Book, concerning the Pope's Power, diſpleaſed King James: but it may very eaſily be ſo underſtood, without ſome Attention. The Jeſuits did not believe, that the printing of That Book had diſpleaſed the King of Great Britain: But, on the contrary, they reproached John Barclay for having put it in the Preſs with That Prince's Conſent, and with the Corrections of the Engliſh Divines. Neque vero niſi ejus (Regis) nutu patris tui librum à Britannici Evangelii miniſtris ad libidinem deformatum, Londini typis excuſum (15). Mr Menage has not rightly marked the Year of the Impreſſion. That Work was printed in the Year 1609. The Congregation of the Index condemned it the ſame Year, by their Decree of the ninth of November.

(13) Ibid. pag. 231.

(14) Joannes Barclaius qui poſt editum de Summo Pontifice opus, nec jam ſolita apud Regem, ſuoſque pollens gratia - - - - ſubduxit ſeſe ex Anglia - - John Barclay, having publiſhed the Book of the Papal Power, and not enjoying ſo much of the King's Favour as formerly, retired out of England. Gaſſend. ib. pag. 282.

(15) Eudæmon-Joannes, Epiſt. monitoria ad Jo. Barclaium. n. 1.

[E] He printed a Book at Paris, which he intituled Pietas.] Here is the remaining Part of the Title; Sive publicæ pro regibus ac principibus, & privatæ pro Gul. Barclaio parente, vindiciæ contra Bellarminum. The Letter of Eudæmon-Joannes, which I have quoted, teſtifies, that Barclay took a Journey to Paris for the printing of That Work, to do more Service to the Proteſtants of England: for it was ſaid, "that "he thought he ſhould be leſs ſuſpected of Intel-"ligence with the Enemies of the Church, if he "publiſhed That Work out of England." Ac nunc quoque non diſſimili conſilio te Lutetiam è Britannia demigraſſe, ut cum & coram apud viros principes, & ſcriptis apud cæteros, Eccleſiæ cauſam calumniis tuis traduceres, tamen quanto majore locorum intervallo ab Rege diſjungereris, hoc longius abeſſe à ſuſpicione fraudis (16). This is one of the moſt cunning and common Touches of the ODIUM THEOLOGICUM. Thoſe, who are at a loſs to anſwer the Objections, raiſed againſt the Common Doctrines, fall upon the Perſons, who propoſe thoſe Objections: They brand them as ſo many falſe Brothers, who are in League with the Adverſaries, and only retain the outward Profeſſion of Orthodoxy, to enable them to do greater Execution.

(16) Id. ib.

[F] He died - - - - - while his Argenis was printing in France] His good Friend, Mr de Peireſc, to whom he had ſent the Manuſcript, took care to find him a Printer, at Paris (17). The firſt Edition of This famous Book is That of Paris, 1621. It has been tranſlated into ſeveral Languages, as French, Engliſh, Italian, Dutch, &c. Nicius Erythræus obſerves, that it was tranſlated into Italian to ſatisfy the Curioſity of the Women. Hearing that this Book was very much cried up, they expreſſed a great Deſire of knowing the Contents of it. "Eadem in-"genii fæcunditate peperit egregium illud opus, "Argenida nomine, quod & argumenti novitate, "& verborum ſplendore, ac rerum varietate, tan-"tum commendationis habuit, ut mulierum etiam, "quæ illud miris in cœlum laudibus efferri audiebant, "ad cognoſcendum, quid illud afferret, ſtudia com-"moverit; adeo ut quidam quo animum illis exple-"ret, in Italicum ſermonem illud converterit (18). "—— The ſame Fruitfulneſs of Genius produced "that celebrated Work, entitled the Argenis, which, "for the Novelty of the Subject, the Beauty of "the Language, and Variety of Matter, was ſo "univerſally admired, as to raiſe, even among the "Women, a Curioſity to know what it contained; ſo that, in order to gratify them with an Oppor-"tunity of reading it, ſome Perſon tranſlated it into "Italian." Mr de Peireſc cauſed the Author's Effigies to be placed in the Title of the Book, with the following Diſtich, which he deſired Grotius to compoſe (19).

(17) Gaſſend. Vit. Peireſk. pag. 288, 290.

(18) Nic. Erythr. Pinacoth 3, pag. 77, 78.

(19) Gaſſ. Vit Peireſk. pag. 290.

Gente Caledonius, Gallus natalibus, hic eſt,
Romam Romano qui docet ore loqui.

His Birth in France, his Name in Scotland ſhines;
The Roman Tongue he ev'n at Rome refines.

[G] We ſhall give the Reaſon, why his Widow cauſed her Husband's Buſto to be taken from thence.] John Barclay's Tomb was near the Gate of the Church-yard, over-againſt which Cardinal Francis Barberini had erected another, for his Preceptor Bernard William. Both Tombs were exactly alike. John Barclay's Widow, being offended at ſo perfect a Reſemblance, would have demoliſhed her Huſband's Tomb; but, not being able to do That, ſhe would, in England [H]: He denied it publickly [I]. His Books of Controverſy had no great Succeſs: the others had many Admirers [K], and have not wanted Cenſurers [L]. As to the Fortune he made at Rome, it is variouſly related. Some ſay, would, at leaſt, have his Marble Buſto taken from it, and brought to her Houſe. Her Pride could not endure, that her Husband, who was Illuſtrious by his Birth, and more ſo ſtill by his Wit and Learning, ſhould be there parallelled with a pitiful Pedagogue. "Quod uxor Barclaii mulier tumido, "ut ajebant, animo atque elato, cum vidiſſet, ſta- "tim viri ſui imaginem ex ſepulchro illo, quod to- "tum demoliri non poſſet, detrahi juſſit, ac domum "ſuam afferri; quod acciperet indigne, eum cui ipſa "nupta fuiſſet, generis ſplendore clarum, ſed inge- "nii & eruditionis fama clariorem, cum homine ob- "ſcuro, ac nullius fere ingenii, &, ut ipſa dicebat, "pædagogo, componi (20)."

Digitized by Google

(20) Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth 3, pag. 81.

[H] Many believe, that John Barclay made Profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion in England.] The Jeſuit Eudæmon-Joannes lays it to his Charge, that, while he lived at the Court of the King of England, he either actually was, or at leaſt paſſed for, a Heretic. He adds, that it was ſaid, This Prince made uſe of him, to tranſlate his Preface concerning the Oath of Allegiance into Latin, and to carry it to ſeveral Princes. "Nam te quidem aliquot annis in "aulâ ejus Regis ita verſatum ferunt ut hæreticus "aut planè eſſes, aut haberere quidem certè. Cui "nonnullam etiam Latinè reddendâ, deferendâque "ad Principes præfatione ejus monitoriâ operam abs "te navatam memorat (21)." Erythræus, not daring to ſay, poſitively, that Barclay was a Heretic in England, or, at leaſt, that he profeſſed Hereſy, does yet declare it as the Opinion of all the Papiſts of that Country, that King James made uſe of John Barclay's Pen to compoſe the Book, entituled, Funiculus triplex, & Cuniculus triplex. Theſe are his Words: "Utrum autem, apud regem, incor- "ruptam catholicam religionem ſemper conſervave- "rit, vel ſaltem, ſi non animo, ſpecie tenus hære- "ticorum ſe erroribus oblinierit, incertum eſt mihi: "illud autem certum, catholicorum omnium in An- "glia fuiſſe opinionem, Regem illum in eo libro, "cui titulus eſt Funiculus triplex, & Cuniculus tri- "plex, componendo uſum fuiſſe Barclaio adjutore "atque magiſtro (22)." I know of no body, who has been more deciſive on this Queſtion, than Imperialis. He ſays, plainly, that Barclay embraced the Religion of the Church of England, and afterwards abjured it; but, that they were ſo little perſuaded of the Sincerity of his Converſion at Rome, that, after his Death, they cauſed the Inſcription, and the Statue, which his Son had put upon his Tomb, to be taken away (23). Paul Freherus attributes this to the Jeſuits: "Statuam & inſcriptionem quam ejus "demortui gloriæ filius in templo S. Laurentii extra "muros erexerat, patres Soc. Jeſu ſublatam & dele- "tam voluerunt (24). —— The Jeſuits ordered "the Inſcription and Effigies, which his Son had de- "dicated to his Memory, in St Laurence's Church- "yard, to be taken down and demoliſhed." The Truth of it is hard to be known: It is poſſible, ſomething was found among his Papers, or elſewhere, which might diſcover, that he was a Proteſtant in his Heart, and occaſion this Reſentment ſhewn againſt his Tomb. It is poſſible, on the other ſide, that the Vanity of his Wife might be the only Cauſe of the diſordering of his Tomb; and that this might give occaſion, to ſuch as are fond of Conjectures, or of idle Comments on Town-talk, to find a Myſtery in it, and ſome private Proceſs of the Tribunal of the Inquiſition.

(21) Eudæm. Joannes, Ep. Monit. ad Barcl. n. 1.

(22) Nic. Erythr. Pinath. 3. pag. 77.

(23) Imper. in Muſæo Hiſtorico.

(24) Freh. in Theatr. pag. 1015. He quotes Imperialis, and Tomaſin.

[I] He denied it publickly.] We muſt either lay aſide the moſt certain Maxims, by which we judge of Facts, or acknowledge, that John Barclay did not renounce the Catholic Profeſſion in England. He declares publickly, that he was born, and always continued, a Catholic (25), and that, though he had accepted of an Office from King James (26), he never conformed to the Church of England, nor abſented himſelf from the Catholic Aſſemblies. I was conſtant, ſays he, at the latter. He calls to witneſs the French and Spaniſh Embaſſadors, and their Fathers Confeſſors, who were alſo mine, ſays he. Here is ſomething of yet greater force. He appeals to King James, of whom he boaſts to have obtained the Privilege not to be diſturbed in his Catholic Religion. King James was yet living, when Barclay publiſhed theſe Particulars: the Embaſſadors, to whom he appealed, were not all dead. How can it be thought therefore, that he declares a Falſehood? He vindicates himſelf from another thing, which had been laid to his Charge; That of having been the Author, or Promoter, of a terrible Libel, which appeared againſt King James, as ſoon as Barclay left England. Laſtly, he makes a Recantation of certain Doctrines, in the Book, which he had written againſt Cardinal Bellarmin. He does not forget to mention, that he went away with the Royal Permiſſion. Neque furtum mei feci: impetrati regis pace publice cum familia à Britanniæ ora ſolvi.

(25) In Præfat. Paræneſis, ad Sectarios. That Book was printed in the Year 1617.

(26) In regis familia eſſe --- inter domeſticos. ----- One of the King's Domeſtics Erythræus ſays, that the King made him his Secretary: ab epiſtolis, & conſiliorum omnium participem habuit. Freherus, who quotes Imperialis. and Thomaſin, ſays, that his Place was That of Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber: titulo nobilis cubiculi regii honeſtatus.

[K] The others had many Admirers.] See, in the Works of Sir Thomas Pope-Blount (27), and Mr Baillet (28), ſeveral fine Encomiums made on Barclay. The following, if it were true, would without doubt be the greateſt of all, in reſpect to the Dignity of it's Author. It is reported, that Cardinal Richelieu was continually reading the Argenis, and that from it he took all thoſe Counſels, and Political Expedients, with which he put France into ſo advantageous a Situation. Ad immortalitatem Barclaii una ſufficiet illius Argenis, quam Richelæus ævi noſtri miraculum aſſiduis, ut ajunt (29), verſabat manibus, habebatque quaſi præceptricem ac directricem illius regiminis, quo deinceps Galliam venerabilem juxta terribilemque gentibus cæteris fecit (30).

(27) Cenſura Authorum, p. 655.

(28) Judgm. on the Poets, Tom. 4, pag. 152.

(29) Here it is, it is ſaid, which has very much the Air of a Fable.

[L] And have wanted not Cenſurers.] We have ſeen the Diſtich under Barclay's Picture, compoſed by Grotius (31). It is a great Compliment on that Author's Latin Style. However his Style has not been approved by every Body. "The Anonymous Author of "the little Book, entituled Cenſura Euphormionis, "printed at Paris in 1620, ſpeaks of the Style of "the Euphormio, in theſe terms: & quod miretur ali- "quis, latinitas quoque ipſa Romanas aures peregri- "nitate radit, & veteris ſaporis imbutum palatum "offendit. —— And what is very ſurprizing, even "the Latin of it ſounds like a foreign Language to "a Roman Ear, and is ſhocking to thoſe, who have "any Reliſh for the Elegancies of Antiquity. It is "thought, to mention this by the way, that Seton, "a Scotchman, was the Author of that little Book. "Joſeph Scaliger, in his Three hundred and eleventh "Letter to Charles Labbé, does not ſpeak at all more "favourably of That Satire of Barclay. Quanti Eu- "phormionem Barclæi jactam ex eo cognoſcere potes, "quod vix ſex folia ejus legere potuerim. —— What "an Opinion I have of Barclay's Euphormio, you "may gueſs from this, that I have ſcarce been able "to read ſix Leaves of it. Thus ſpeaks the Original "of that Letter, which I have ſeen in Charles "Labbé's Hands; for, in the Edition of Scaliger's "Letters, there is an Aſterisk in the ſtead of Eu- "phormionem Barclæi. He gives much the ſame "Account of it in his Scaligerana ſecunda: There is "a Pedant at Angers, who wrote a Satyricon, which "ſeems at the beginning to promiſe ſome thing, but in "Concluſion makes out nothing at all (32). Peter "Muſnier, a Canon of Vezelai, anſwered the Book "entituled Cenſura Euphormionis, by another, enti- "tuled Cenſura cenſuræ Euphormionis; but this An- "ſwer was ſo very indifferent, that, in all probability, "it made John Barclay himſelf write an Apology "for his Euphormio (33). But, as it has been already "obſerved, John Barclay was but Twenty one "Years of Age, when he publiſhed the firſt Part of "that Satire. His Argenis, which was written in his "riper Years, is better done. And, if he, who wrote "John Barclay's Life, printed before the Argenis, "may be believed, Cardinal Richelieu very highly "eſteemed that Performance. I ſhall conclude with "remarking, that a Benedictine, named Bugnot, who "taught Rhetoric in the Abbey of Tiron, compoſed "Latin Notes on that Work, which were printed "at Leyden in 1664, with the Argenis (34)."

(30) In Barclay's Life, before the Argenis.

(31) See the end of the Remark [F].

(32) See Mr Menage's ſecond Additions to the Life of Ayrault, pag. 539.

(33) Mr Menage ſaid, pag 231, That Barclay publiſhed, at London, in 1610, the Apology for his Euphormio, which he dedicated to Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy. How can he ſay here, that the weak Anſwer, which was made to a Criticiſm on it, printed in the Year 1620, obliged Barclay to write his own Apology?

This is the Harveſt of the learned Mr Menage; I ſhall endeavour to gather up ſome Gleanings after him, and begin with theſe Words of Balzac: "An Academiſt "of Rome, a Confident of the formidable Sciopius, knowing

(34) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 232, 233.

Digitized by Google

say, that Maffeo Barberini, who loved him very well, having been created Pope, was a great Benefactor to him, and conferred a good Benefice upon his eldeſt Son, and the Office of his Holineſs's Chamberlain (g). Others ſay, that he was forced to amuſe himſelf with the culture of Flowers, to divert the Concern he was under, on ſeeing himſelf ſo little advanced (b) [M]. But it is certain, that he died before Barberini was elected Pope. He attempted ſome Things in Poetry, and ſeveral good Judges commend the Latin Verſes, we have of his, as very extraordinary (i). His Works have been confuſedly mentioned in Moreri's Dictionary [N]. He was reviſing his Euphormio, in order to reprint it. He left behind him the Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Jeruſalem (k), and ſome Sheets of the Hiſtory of Europe (l). It could not, with any Truth, be ſaid, that King James ſent him Embaſſador to the Courts of the Emperor, King of Hungary, and Duke of Savoy [O]. He makes no mention of it himſelf, when he deſcribes the (g) Ibid. pag. 79.

(b) Imperialis & Tomaſinus, apud Paulum Freherum, Theatr. pag. 1515.

(i) See Baillet's Judgment on the Poets, Tom. 4, pag. 112; and Sir Thomas Pope Blunt, Cenſura Autorum, p. 655, (k) Ha laſciato dopo ſe l'Hiſteria de bello ſacro ch' è la medeſima ch'a il Taſſo cantato nel ſuo Goffredo. --- The ſame which was the Subject of Taſſo's Poem. Franceſco Pona, in the Life of John Barclay.

(l) Id. ibid.

" ing the Friendſhip, that was between Mr Barclay, " and myſelf, and the Love I had for his Argenis, " in order to moderate, as he ſaid, the Violence of " my Paſſion, offered to ſhew me in that new Hi- " ſtory, which we had then in Manuſcript, Fifteen " hundred Improprieties, upon a fair Computation, " beſides innumerable other Faults, and ſtrange " Phraſes (35)." Sorel, an Enemy of Balzac, paſſed much the ſame Judgment on the Style of the Argenis. " As for the Argenis, ſays he (36), if it's Latin " is eſteemed, I am of a quite contrary Opinion; " for there are an infinite number of new Words in " it, which were never current in Rome, inſomuch, " that, if Salluſt were to return into the World again, " he would be at a loſs to underſtand them." He pretends, that, in this, he only follows the Opinion of the moſt learned, who have ſome of them even gone ſo far as to ſay, That Barclay's Language was rather French, than Latin (37). He is not content with cenſuring the Style, but alſo condemns the Oeconomy of the Work itſelf, and is no leſs ſevere " on the Euphormio (38). " It is, ſays he (39), an " Hiſtory of a Perſon of mean Quality, but it is " extreamly ſilly. —— What gave this Book ſo " great a Run was it's being in Latin, and the Ra- " rity of ſeeing a modern Romance in that Lan- " guage; but it has never been conſidered, that it " is lucky for the Author, that he did not write it in " a Vulgar Language, becauſe there is now no " notice taken, that he does not underſtand how to " make each of his Perſons ſpeak agreeably to his " Character, which is the Grace of a Satire. In- " ſtead of this, he affects pedantic Expreſſions, and " makes a Footman ſpeak like a Schoolmaſter, who " underſtands Greek and Latin Hiſtory; ſo that, all " this conſidered, together with the lowneſs of the " Adventures, the Satire of Euphormio appears to " be the Work of a School-Boy, juſt beginning to " learn Wit (40)." When he grew old, he was not quite ſo ſevere in his Cenſure; but he continued his Diſlike to the Euphormio (41). That Satire, ſays he (42), was wrote in Latin by John Barclay, and tranſlated into French by John Berault, Doctor of Phyſic, of the Faculty of Paris; there is a good deal of Learning in it, with ſome touches of Satire on ſeveral Vices of the Age; but the Method of it is not the moſt ingenious, and agreeable, that ever was invented. We have already ſeen what Scaliger thought of the Euphormio; This is the Judgment he paſſes on the Style. There are a great many Faults in it, which every Body does not know: as there are Galliciſms in Beza's Poetry (43). We muſt not forget, that this Book had the ſame fate with the Treatiſe of the Pope's Power; it was condemned by the Inquiſition. The Decree orders the expunging ſome Parts of it: but Nicius Erythræus ſays, That the Bookſellers were forbid to ſell it, and all particular Perſons to keep or read it; and that, before this Order, he had read ſome Part of it. Partem Euphormionis deguſtavi tum, cum nondum lata lex erat, ne bibliopolæ cuipiam liceret eum vendere, aut cuiquam domi habere ac legere (44). Let theſe Words be well conſidered, and compared with ſome others in Page 77. It is ſurpriſing, that the Court of Rome ſhould ſhew ſo little regard to the Congregation of the Index: We ſhall ſee, that John Barclay was very graciouſly received at Rome, and moſt liberally ſupplied with every Thing, by the Bounty of the Pope, on account of the Reputation he had acquired by his Euphormio. " Romam venit, " ubi cum Pro eo quod ex Euphormione, quem " ediderat, celebratum ejus nomen eſſet, eſt ab om- " nibus humaniter exceptus, & à Paulo V, qui tum " Romanam Eccleſiam Pontifex adminiſtrabat, bonis " omnibus, quibus ſponte ſe exuerat, amiſſis, in victu, " veſtitu, ac cæteris omnibus ad vitam neceſſariis, mag- " nifice ac liberaliter habitus (45). Mr Menage has found a Fault in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Argenis (46). Barclay, addreſſing himſelf to King Lewis XIII, tells him, That the Prince, of whom he was born, deſerved in his Life-time the Sirname of Le Grand, the Great, which was not conferred upon him till after his Death. Eo es parente genitus, qui vel conſiſſione hoſtium, ſæculi ſui ſummus Magni cognomen ferre vivus debuerat, quod vos modeſtius extincto adiidiſtis (47). This is a Falſity: for John Barclay's Father, dedicating his Book de Regno, to Henry IV, in the Year 1600, gives him the Title of Henricus Magnus. Mr Menage confeſſes, that he owes this Obervationto Mr Nublé.

(35) The 10*th Diſcourſe among the* Miſcellaneous Works, pag. 405.

(36) Berger Extravagant, lib. 13, pag. 83.

(37) Sorel, Remarques ſur le Berger Extravagant, pag. 698. See alſo his Bibliotheque Franç. pag. 182.

(38) The 13*th Book of the* Berger Extravagant, and in the Remarks on the 13*th Book, and elſewhere.*

(39) Remarques ſur le Berger Extravagant, pag. 763.

(40) Ibid. pag. 765.

(41) Biblioth. Franç. pag. 182.

(42) Ibid. pag. 193. See the End of the Text of this Article.

(43) Scaligerana, pag. 23.

(44) Nicius Erythr. Pinac. 3, pag. 74.

(45) Id. ib. pag. 77.

(46) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 232.

(47) Barcl. Epiſt. Dedic. Argen.

[M] Some will have it, that he was under a Concern on ſeeing himſelf ſo little advanced.] The Author of the Italian Tranſlation of the Argenis confeſſes, that the Favours of Paul V, and Gregory XV, were no way proportionable to the Merit of John Barclay, whether it be, ſays he (48), that Fortune is pleaſed to perſecute Virtue every where, or that the Pope thought, that Poverty was the true Mother of Knowledge (49). He inſinuates, that Barclay was no good Oeconomiſt, and that his generous Temper, and numerous Family, reduced him pretty low. Ivi dunque ſi tratteneva il Barclaio con facolta non poco anguſte riſpetto la numeroſa famiglia, e gli ſuoi ſpiriti generoſi. In ſome Latin Verſes, where he introduces his Wife, who cauſes her Picture to be drawn, Barclay ſays he had but two Sons. In his Latin Life, thoſe Verſes are quoted, to prove, that he had two Sons and one Daughter. What Judgment is here!

(48) Franceſ. Pona, in the Life of John Barclay.

(49) This Propoſition is very uncertain, and often very falſe. See the Haud facile emergunt quorum virtutibus obſtat Res anguſta domi & curta ſupellex. Juvenal. Sat. 3, ver. 164. Rarely they riſe by Virtue's Aid, who lie, Plung'd in the depth of helpleſs Poverty. Dryden. See alſo the 160*th and following Verſes of the* 7*th Satire.

[N] His Works have been confuſedly mentioned in Moreri's Dictionary.] I. I have ſaid already, in the Remarks [B] and [C], that this Author has converted a Piece of Poetry into a Speech; II. And that he has falſly placed the Scene of John Barclay's Marriage at Rome; III. And his Birth in the Year 1586. IV. He is in the wrong to think, that Barclay's Satiricon Euphormionis contains five Books. Properly ſpeaking, it contains but two, for the third is only an Apology for the other two; the fifth is not Barclay's, but Moriſot's; and the fourth is not built on the Model of the foregoing. It is the Book, which the Author entituled, Icon animorum. V. Moreri knew nothing of this, ſince he ſpoke of That Icon animorum, as of a diſtinct Work from the five pretended Books of the Satiricon Euphormionis. VI. If I am not miſtaken, John Barclay publiſhed no other Pieces againſt the Proteſtants, but only the Paræneſis ad Sectarios, which he carried ready finiſhed into Italy, and printed it at Rome, as ſoon as he arrived there. And yet, Moreri tells us, that Barclay publiſhed ſome Books againſt the Proteſtants, during the melancholy and ſolitary Life he led at Rome, amidſt the Favours of Paul V, and of his Succeſſor Gregory XV. The Paræneſis ad Sectarios was printed in the Year 1617. Gregory XV was not elected till the Year 1621. VII. He adds, that Barclay publiſhed alſo, at that time, the Icon animorum. This is falſe. That Work was printed at London in 1614, two Years before the Author went to Rome.

[O] It could not with any Truth be ſaid, that he was ſent Embaſſador.] A Writer of Panegyrics, or Lives, is too apt to make uſe of great Words. If a Prince appoints any Body to carry a Packet the Life he led with King James (m); and all that can be made of it, in my opinion, is, that this Prince might make uſe of him to tranſmit, to foreign Princes, ſome Copies of the Book, he compoſed for their common Intereſts, againſt the Pretenſions of the Court of Rome. His Euphormio and Argenis have been tranſlated into French [P].

Digitized by Google

(m) Barclaius in Præf. Parænet. ad Sectarios.

of Importance, you will ſoon ſee the Diſpatch of a Courier, converted into an Extraordinary Deputation; or even into a real Embaſſy. I am willing to believe, that, if the Preſents, which King James made to ſeveral Princes, as an Author, were intruſted to Barclay, it was not as to a meer Bearer; it is likely, that the King, who knew his Merit, made that Commiſſion agreeable to him; but, after all, That Meſſage makes ſo little Noiſe; that it is a Jeſt to ſay; "Illius (Regis magnæ Britanniæ) nomine lega- "tiones obivit ad Rodolphum Imperatorem, ad "Matthiam Pannoniæ Regem, & ad (50) Emma- "nuelem Philibertum ducem Allobrogum (51). —— "He was ſent Embaſſador, by that King, to Rodol- "phus the Emperor, Matthias King of Hungary, "and Emanuel Philibert, Duke of Savoy."

(50) The Duke of Savoy's Name was Charles Emanuel.

(51) In the Life of Barclay, before the Argenis.

[P] His Euphormio and Argenis have been tranſlated into French.] I have already quoted Sorel (52), who obſerves, that the Euphormio was tranſlated into French by John Berault: I muſt add, that this Tranſlation was printed at Paris, in the Year 1640, in 8vo, and that it was preceded by two others, the Authors of which, for fear of keeping too ſuperſtitiouſly to the Letter, have left the Work at leaſt as difficult as they found it (53). Berault has ſubjoined a Key, and Commentary, to his Verſion. The Tranſlation of the Argenis was printed at Paris, by N. Buon, in 1624, in 8vo; but the Author of it is not named.

(52) Above, Catat. (38).

(53) See the Advertiſement of the Bookſeller, before the Tranſlation of Berault.

BARCOCHEBAS, or Barcochab (a), excited innumerable Diſorders in Judæa, by his Impoſtures, and drew a dreadful Calamity upon his Nation under the Reign of Adrian. He was a Jew, who declared himſelf to be the Meſſias, and found a famous Rabbi, who favoured That impious Pretenſion (b). This falſe Meſſias ſuited himſelf ſurprizingly to the Prepoſſeſſions of That miſerable People; he ſpoke of nothing but Wars, Battles, and Triumphs; and the firſt Leſſon of his Goſpel was, that they ought to rebel againſt the Romans. He had ſo much the leſs Trouble to inculcate This Doctrine, becauſe he took his time, when the Zeal of Religion had thrown the Jews into a violent Rage againſt the Emperor. That Prince had newly eſtabliſhed a Colony near Jeruſalem (c), where he had ſettled Idolatry. The Jews looked upon this as an intolerable Abomination, and a prodigious Prophanation of the Holy Places; on account of which they were very inclinable to rebel. Some pretend, that Circumciſion was forbidden them [A]: this was to force their Conſciences. The Talmud alledges another reaſon for their taking up Arms [B]. Their Impoſtor is ſaid to have made uſe of the ſame Trick, which Eunus had practiſed in Sicily, to make the Slaves revolt; that is, he kindled Straw in his Mouth, that he might be thought to vomit Fire [C]. He fortified himſelf in ſeveral places; but he choſe the City of

(a) That is, Son of the Star. He applied to himſelf the Prophecy of the Book of Numbers, chap. xxiv, ver. 17. There ſhall come a Star out of Jacob.

(b) His Name was Akiba. See his Article.

(c) Which he called Ælia Capitolina, after his own Name and of Jupiter Capitolinus, to whom he cauſed a Temple to be built there.

[A] Some pretend, that Circumciſion was forbidden them.] Spartian imputes their riſing to that Prohibition: Moverunt ea tempeſtate & Judæi bellum quod vetebantur mutilare genitalia (1). —— The Jews at that time broke out into Rebellion, becauſe they were denied the Liberty of Circumciſion. It is not unlikely, that the circumciſing of their Children was forbidden them, ſince we read in Modeſtinus, that they obtained from Antoninus Pius the Liberty of doing it; they had been diſturbed on that account, and were obliged to have recourſe to the Emperor's Juſtice. Circumcidere Judæis filios ſuos tantum, reſcripto Divi Pii permittitur: in non ejuſdem religionis qui hoc fecerit, caſtrantis pœna irrogatur (2). The Decree, which they obtained, ſeems to ſay, that ſometimes they circumciſed Children not born of their Sect. This was forbidden them on the Penalties eſtabliſhed againſt Caſtration.

(1) Spart. in Vita Adriani, cap. 14.

(2) Modeſtinus Libro Regularum, apud Caſaubon in Spartian. Adrian. cap. 14.

[B] ----- The Talmud aſſigns another Reaſon for their taking up Arms.] It is reported, that the Jews had a Cuſtom to plant a Cedar on the Birth of a Son, and a Pine on that of a Daughter; and to make the Bridal-bed of the Wood of thoſe Trees, when their Children married. It is added, that, in a Journey, which the Emperor's Daughter made into Judæa, ſome part of her Chariot happening to break, her People cut one of theſe Cedars, and brought it to her; that the Jews, not being able to bear this, roſe up in Arms, and killed thoſe, who had cut down that Tree. The Emperor, underſtanding, that the Jews were revolted, marched in great Wrath againſt them, and extirpated them. "Ob crus carpenti vaſtata eſt "Bethara. In more fuit ut cum naſceretur infans "plantarent cedrum, cum infantula, pinum; cumque "nati contraherent matrimonium, ex iis conficerent "thalamum. Die quadam tranſiit filia Cæſaris, & "confractum eſt ei crus carpenti. Cedrum iſtiuſmodi exciderunt atque ad eam attulerunt. Inſurrexerunt in eos Judæi atque eos eeciderunt. Relatum eſt Cæſari rebellare Judæos. Profectus ille "in eos iracundus, excidit totum cornu Iſraëlis (3)." The Jews would be altogether inexcuſable, if they revolted on ſo ſlight an occaſion as this. Theſe poor People do not even know how to tell a Lie to their Advantage. What Ignorance is it to give the Emperor Adrian a Daughter! To conclude, Pines are Trees, which grow too ſlowly (4) to ſerve for a Bed, by that time a Daughter will be ready to ſhare it with a Man; and many of them would have deſerved to be pitied, if they had been obliged to wait for a Huſband, 'till their Pines were grown to a ſufficient Size.

(3) In Tractatu Talmudico Babyl. Gittin fol. 57. apud Joh. à Lent, de Judæorum Pſeudo-Meſſiis, p. 7.

[C] Barcochebas is ſaid to have made uſe of the ſame Trick with Eunus ------- that is, he was thought to vomit Fire.] This we learn from St Jerome. "Tu "videlicet flammeus, immo fulmineus qui in loquen- "do fulminas. Atque ut ille Barchochebas auctor "ſeditionis Judaicæ ſtipulam in ore ſuccenſam anhe- "litu ventilabat, ut flammas evomere videretur (5). "------ Thou haſt not only the command of Fire, but "alſo of Thunder, in thy Words. And as Barcochebas, "that Ringleader of the Jewiſh Rebellion, kindled "Straw in his Mouth, and ventilated the Flame with his "Breath, that he might be thought to vomit it." Here is a Man, whoſe Words were Fire and Flame, not only in a figurative, but literal, Senſe. As for Eunus, ſee what Florus ſays of him: "Syrus quidam "nomine Eunus (magnitudo cladium facit ut memi- "nerimus) fanatico furore ſimulato dum Syriæ deæ "comas jactat, ad libertatem & arma ſervos quaſi nu- "minum imperio concitavit; idque ut divinitus fieri "probaret in ore abdita nuce, quam ſulphure & igne "ſtipaverat, leniter inſpirans flammam inter verba "fundebat (6). ---------- A certain Syrian, named "Eunus (the prodigious Slaughter he occaſioned makes "me mention him) counterfeiting a divine Inſpiration, "while he pretends to brandiſh a Lock of Hair of the "Syrian Goddeſs, he excited the Slaves to aſſert their "Liberty, and take up Arms, as it were by the Com- "mand of the Gods; and that he might prove his Com- "miſſion, having artfully conveyed into his Mouth ſome "Fire and Sulphur, in a Nutſhell, he gently breathed "out the Flames as he ſpoke." This is an Example to ſhew Sovereign Princes, how dangerous thoſe Perſons

(4) It may be ſaid of them, ..... Arbos Tarda venit ſeris factura nepotibus umbram. Virg. Georg. lib. 2. v. 58. A ſullen Tree At leiſure grows for late Poſterity. Dryden.

(5) Apologia 2. adverſus Ruffinum.

(6) Florus, lib. 3. c. 19.

Digitized by Google

of Bitter for his place of Arms, and the Seat of his Empire. It is ſaid, that, to try the Courage of his Followers, he required them to cut off one of their Fingers, and on the Remonſtrances, which were made him, he left off that Teſt, and made uſe of another Invention [D]. He ravaged a great number of places, and maſſacred a Multitude of Perſons: He was particularly barbarous towards the Chriſtians [E]. The Emperor, being informed of theſe Violences, ſent ſome Troops to Rufus Governor of Judæa, with Orders for the immediate ſuppreſſing This Sedition (d). Rufus, in obedience to this Order, exerciſed a thouſand Cruelties, but yet could not obtain his End. The Emperor was forced to re-call Julius Severus, the greateſt Captain of thoſe Times, from England, and commit to him the whole Conduct of That War (e). This General gained his Point againſt the Jews, without giving them a general Battle. He attacked them after another manner, as well becauſe of their great number, as alſo becauſe he ſaw them fight like deſperate Men. He choſe therefore rather to charge them ſeparately, to cut off their Proviſions, to ſhut them up, and ſtraighten them (f); and at laſt, all was reduced to the Siege of Bitter, in the eighteenth Year of Adrian (g). The great number of Jews, who threw themſelves into that City, was the cauſe of their making a very long Defence, and being reduced to great Extremities by Famine (h). After the taking of that place, the War was not quite ended, but did not continue long: Barcochebas periſhed in it (i), and the Jews have not failed to invent ſome Fables about it [F]. The manner, in which Adrian diſperſed the Remains of that unhappy Nation, was very cruel [G]. But all the Stories, (d) Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 4, c. 6. pag. 118.

(e) Xiphilin. in Adriano.

(f) Id. ibid.

(g) About the Year of CHRIST CXXXIV.

(h) Euſeb. ubi ſupra.

(i) Id. ib.

ſons are to a State, who pretend to Inſpiration. This laſt enthuſiaſtic Impoſtor raiſed an Inſurrection of above Sixty thouſand Men, and gave the Roman People a great deal of Trouble.

[D] It is ſaid that he tried his Followers, by obliging them to cut off a Finger, —— and that he made uſe of another Invention.] It is reported, that he drew Two hundred thouſand Men after him, who had cut off one of their Fingers, to make Proof of their Courage. The wiſe Men, not approving ſuch a Mutilation, deputed ſome Perſons to him, to know how long he would thus mangle the Jewiſh Nation, uſque quo tute Judæos mancos efficies? He anſwered, How then would you have me try their Strength? They replied, That he ſhould enroll none, but thoſe, who could pull up, with their Hands, a Cedar from Mount Libanus. He took their Counſel, and found Two hundred thouſand Men more, who gave this proof of their Strength (7). You will ſay, theſe are Jewiſh Fables. It is true, and as ſuch I relate them; and, for that Reaſon, they belong the more properly to this Dictionary.

(7) In Madraſch Rabbeti Megillot fol. 67, apud Joh. à Lent, ubi ſupra, pag. 10, 11.

[E] He was particularly barbarous towards the Chriſtians.] Indeed he made a great Slaughter of the Gentiles, but he did not force them to renounce their Religion. He play'd the part of a Converter, only towards the Chriſtians; I ſay of a Dragooning Converter, and, perhaps, worſe (8); for he condemned all thoſe to Death, who would not forſake JESUS CHRIST, and load him with Curſes. Juſtin Martyr has complained of this: Proximo namque bello Judaico Barcochebas defectionis Judæorum dux & princeps, ſolos Chriſtianos ad gravia ſupplicia niſi Chriſtum abnegarent & maledictis inceſſerent, protrahi juſſit (9). David Gans does not deny, but that thoſe of his Nation ſpilled whole Torrents of Blood (10). I am even of Opinion, that he repreſents their Executions much more dreadful than they actually were. He pretends, that, in the City of Alexandria alone, they killed above Two hundred thouſand Perſons, and that, in the Iſland of Cyprus, and the parts adjacent, they did not leave one Man alive. Tunc Judæi Bitterrenſes unxerunt eum (Barcochebam) & elegerunt ipſum in regem ſuper ſe, jugum Romanorum abjicientes. Occiderunt ex Romanis & Græcis qui in Africa innumerabiles inſtar arenæ maris, ſimiliter fecerunt Ægyptiis: incolæ urbis Alexandrinæ etiam ex Romanis interfecerunt ultra bis centena millia. Qui in Cypria, occiderunt omnes plane gentes vicinas, ut ne ſuperſtes quidem remaneret. See what will be ſaid hereafter (11), concerning the omiſſion of a Common Form in Adrian's Letters. O religious Wars, how horrible are your Cruelties!

(8) I make uſe of a perhaps, becauſe ſeveral Perſons maintain, that the Alternative of Abjuration, or Death, would have been a leſs Cruelty, than what was committed in France, by the Dragoons in 1685.

(9) Juſtin. Apologia pro Chriſtianis ad Antonin. Pium.

(10) David Gans, Germine Davidis ad Ann. 880. millenarii quarti, apud à Lent, p. 9.

(11) In Remark [I].

[F] The Jews have not failed to invent Fables on the Death of Barcochebas.] They ſay, that, after the taking of Bitter, Barcochebas's Head was brought to the Emperor Adrian, and that he asked who had killed him? and that he ordered the Soldier, who replied, It was I, to go and fetch the Body. The Soldier, being come to the Place, found a Serpent round Barcochebas's Neck. The Emperor having viewed the Body, ſaid, If this Man had not been killed by his own God, who could have hurt him (12)?

[G] The Manner, in which Adrian diſperſed the Remains of that unhappy Nation.] I have a great deal of Reaſon to make uſe of the Word Remains; for the Number of Jews, who periſhed in that War, is not to be expreſſed. The Abbreviator of Dio relates, that they had fifty Fortreſſes, and Nine hundred and eighty five very conſiderable Boroughs, razed; that they had loſt Five hundred and eighty thouſand Men in Battles and Inroads, and that the Number of thoſe, who periſhed by Famine, Sickneſs, and Fire, is infinite: So that almoſt all Judæa remained without Inhabitants (13). Let us now ſee what was done with thoſe, who happened to ſurvive ſo great a Deſolation. "An incredible Number of "all Ages and Sexes * were ſold at the ſame Price as "Horſes, in a very famous Fair, called the Fair of "the Turpentine Tree †. Wherefore the Jews had "an Abhorrence for that Fair. - - - - - Thoſe, who "could not be ſold there, were brought to Gaza ‡, "and expoſed to Sale in another Market, eſtabliſhed "there by Adrian, and which, the Chronicle of "Alexander ſays, is yet called Adrian's Market. "Thoſe, they could not ſell in Paleſtine, were tranſported into Egypt ‡‡, where they periſhed by Shipwrecks, and by Famine, or were killed by the "Pagans. - - - - - - - - When the War was ended, "Adrian prohibited the Jews, by an Edict publickly "fixed up , from returning to Jeruſalem, on pain "of Death ††, and Guards were purpoſely placed "there, to hinder them from entering it ††. That "Law denied them even the Liberty of coming "near it, or of being in any Place, where they might "have a Sight of it ‡‡. Tertullian *, and St Jerom †, go yet further, and extend That Prohibition all over Judæa; and the Jews ſeem to agree "to it, when they ſpeak of the Faſt, which they "inſtituted on account of That Decree, whereby "their Fathers had been forbidden to come into the "Country of Judæa ‡." The Author, of whom I borrow This Paſſage, with all it's Quotations (14), makes a Remark on the Fair of the Turpentine-Tree. He obſerves, that "St Jerom ſays ‡, in a certain Place, that the Jews were ſold, at Abraham's "Tent, where is kept, ſays he, an annual Fair, "very much frequented. This is not difficult to "be granted, for, in the Place, where Abraham had "lived, in the Valley of Mamre [near Hebron], and "where he entertained three Angels, there was remaining, in the IVth Century a Turpentine-Tree, "which the People of the Country ſaid had been "there from the Creation of the World." See the Remark [G] of the Article ABRAHAM: Let us return to the Calamity of the Jews. Some Authors ſay, that Adrian cauſed their Ears to be cut off, and tranſported them into Spain (15). It is very

(12) Joh. à Lent, de Pſeudo-Meſſiis, pag. 14, ex Echa Rabbati.

(13) Xiphil. in Adriano.

* Hieronym. in Jerem. cap. 31, pag. 342. b.

† Chronic. Alex. pag. 596.

‡ Id. ibid.

‡ Hiero. in Zach. cap. 11, p. 272. d.

 Id. in Iſ. cap. 6, pag. 31. d.

†† Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. 4, cap. 6, pag. 118, & Demonſtr. Evang. lib. 2, cap. 38. pag. 71. a. Juſtin. Apol. 2, p. 84. b. c. Dial. pag. 234. a.

‡‡ Juſtin. pag. 84. b. Sulpic. Sev. lib. 2. pag. 149.

‡‡ Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 118, d. Hier. in Iſ. lib. 3. p. 227.

* Apol. cap. 21, p. 20, d.

† In Judic. cap. 13. pag. 224, 225. cap. 6, pag. 31. d. In Daniel. cap. 9, pag. 595, d.

‡ Scaliger. Iſag. lib. 1. cap. 6, p. 45.

(14) Tillem. Hiſt. des Empер. Tom. 2, pag. 501, 502, 503.

‡ In Zachar. cap. 8. pag. 262.

(15) Apud à Lent, de Pſeudo-Meſſiis, pag. 17.

Digitized by Google

Stories, the Rabbins tell on this Subject, are not to be credited [H]. This War coſt the Romans a great many Lives (k). If I mention in the Remarks ſeveral Facts, which concern this War, it is becauſe the Article of Hadrian refers to them, and there was a neceſſity of ſhortening, as much as poſſible, That Emperor's Article, by means of This Reference. The Jewiſh Authors ſuppoſe, that Adrian was perſonally in that War [I], that he beſieged and took the City of Bitter, and that he diſputed, with a Rabbi, about the Doctrine of the Reſurrection of the Dead [K]. This Fact is very curious; And will be found in the Remarks. Euſebius very likely, that Part of the Idolatries, which That Emperor eſtabliſhed in the new City of Jeruſalem, did not begin 'till after the Deſtruction of Bitter, and the Death of Barchochebas. It was one of the moſt ſenſible Shocks, which that unhappy Nation ever had to ſuſtain. Adrian, knowing their Abhorrence for Swine, cauſed one of Marble to be ſet up over the Gate, which led to Bethlehem . He made uſe of the Stones of Solomon's Temple ††, for the Building of a Theatre, and ſeveral Pagan Temples. Two of his Statues, and ſome Idols, were ſet up in the Place, where That Temple ſtood ‡‡. The Statue of Jupiter was ſet up in the Place of our Saviour's Paſſion. This is what St Paulinus affirms ‡‡: but, according to St Jerom *, Jupiter's Statue was ſet up where JESUS CHRIST roſe from the Dead, and That of Venus, where he died. The Cavern, where he was born, was profaned by the Temple, and infamous Worſhip, of Adonis †. See Mr de Tillemont, to whom I am indebted for theſe Particulars (16).

(k) See Remark [E].

 Hieron. in Chron.

†† Euſeb. Demonſt. lib. 8. cap. 3. pag. 406.

‡‡ Iter Burd. p. 43. 2. Sulpic. Sever. lib. 2. pag. 149.

‡‡ Epiſt. 11. p. 134, 135.

* Epiſt. 13, pag. 102.

† Paulin. Epiſt. 11. p. 134, 135.

(16) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. pag. 509.

[H] All the Stories, which the Rabbins tell on This Subject, are not to be credited.] They ſay, that the Slaughter was ſo great in Bitter, when the Romans made themſelves Maſters of it, after a Siege of three Years and a half, that the Horſes marched up to the Mouth in Blood (17). They add, that the Blood made ſo ſtrong a Current, that it carried Stones, of the Weight of four Pounds, along with it, and ran for the Space of four Miles into the Sea. Now Bitter was four Miles from the Sea. Adrian had a Vineyard-plot eighteen Miles long, and as many wide; (it is the Diſtance from Tiberias to Zipporis) where he made a Fence or Partition with the Bodies of thoſe, who were killed in Bitter: For he would not ſuffer them to be buried, nor were they buried 'till the Reign of his Succeſſor. There were two Rivers in the Valley of Jadaim, running on different Sides of it (18); the Rabbins computed, that the Water made but two thirds, and the Blood the other third, of thoſe Rivers. For ſeven Years the Gentiles had no need to dung their Vines, they were ſo richly manured with the Blood of the Jews. The Blood carried away Stones with it of an immenſe Magnitude, and entered forty Miles into the Sea: Quinimo ſanguis rapiebat ſecum petras magnitudinis quadraginta modiorum, donec ad quadraginta milliaria uſque in Oceanum flueret (19). Three hundred Skulls of Children were found on one Stone. There are, in theſe Rabbinical Expreſſions, ſome touches of the Style, which Rabelais makes uſe of, to repreſent the Valour and Proweſſes of his Garagantua and his Pantagruel. But let us relate one more Story concerning the Slaughter of Bitter. In That City there were Four hundred Colleges, and in each College Four hundred Maſters, each of which had Four hundred Diſciples, or Scholars in his Claſs. In the firſt Attack, the Scholars made uſe of their Writing Pens (20), to kill their Enemies; but, after the Place was taken, they were packed up with their Books and thrown into the Fire. Iſta pubes principio hoſtes impetum facientes graphiis ſuis confodiebat: cum vero hi prævalerent, urbem cœpiſſent, involverunt puerulos illos cum libris ſuis, eoſque igne ſic cremarunt (21). The Jews ſay, that Adrian deſtroyed twice as many People of their Nation, as Moſes brought out of the Land of Egypt, and they eſteem him a greater Perſecutor of them, than either Nebuchadnezzar, or Titus (22). One of their beſt Chronologers affirms, that the Loſs, which their Nation ſuſtained in the time of Nebuſaraddan, or in the Time of Titus, does not come up to That, which they ſuſtained under the Reign of Adrian; for the Talmud ſays, that Four Millions of Perſons periſhed at Bitter, quadringentas myriadas. Nevertheleſs, there is, in the Ritual of the Jews, a Hymn for the ninth Day of the Month Ab, being That of the Date of Adrian's Edict, which prohibited their ſetting Foot in Judæa: I ſay there is an Hymn, wherein Nebuchadnezzar and Adrian are equally repreſented, as two great Scourges of their Nation. That Hymn names them often, but ſpeaks only once of Veſpaſian and Titus; it mentions Four hundred and eighty Synagogues burnt by Adrian. "Recordare Domine qualis fuerit Adrianus, crudelitatis conſilia amplexus, conſuluit idola ſe pervertentia. Et ſuſtulit, combuſſitque quadringentas & octoginta ſynagogas (23). ----- Remember, O Lord, "the Sin of Adrian, who, following the Counſels of "Cruelty, and liſtening to Idols, which perverted "him, deſtroyed, and burnt, Four hundred and eigh-"ty Synagogues."

(17) See the Book Echa Rabbati ſuper Thren. 11. v. 2. apud Noldium de Vita & Geſtis Herodum, pag. 453.

(18) In Tractatu Talmudico Giſſin, apud à Lent, p. 16.

(19) Ibid.

(20) An Inſtrument wherewith they uſed to write in thoſe times.

(21) Tract. Giſſin. apud eundem à Lent, p. 13.

(22) See Jo. à Lent, pag. 84.

(23) Apud eumdem à Lent, pag. 18, 19.

[I] The Jewiſh Authors ſuppoſe, that Adrian was perſonally in That War.] Euſebius ſays expreſsly, that the Emperor ſent ſome Troops to the Governor of Judæa, to chaſtiſe the Revolt of Barcochebas, and never mentions That Prince's going thither afterwards in Perſon. The Abbreviator of Dio ſpeaks only of the Generals, who were ſent into Judæa by Adrian (24). He remarks, that, during That Emperor's Stay in Egypt and in Syria, the Jews, who were diſcontented at the Building of Ælia Capitolina, durſt not ſtir, but appeared in Arms openly, as ſoon as he was gone. He adds, that Adrian ſent, againſt them, the beſt of his Generals, and particularly Julius Severus. This was a proper Place to ſay, whether he was preſent, in Perſon, when the Rebels were puniſhed; and yet That Writer mentions nothing of it: From whence it ſeems to follow, that Adrian did not at that time go into Judæa. But, not to conceal any Thing, it muſt be owned, that Dio makes a Remark, which intimates, that Adrian was preſent in That War. He ſays, that the Romans loſt ſo many Men in it, that This Emperor, writing to the Senate did not uſe the common Preamble, Si vos liberique veſtri valetis bene eſt, ego quidem & exercitus valemus. —— If you, and your Children, are well, it will give me cauſe to rejoice; I have the Pleaſure to aſſure you of my own Health, and That of the Army. One would think, that a Prince, who begins his Letter with Theſe Words, muſt be preſent in the Army; and if he is not, he ought not to make Uſe of That Compliment, neither in time of Proſperity, nor in Time of Adverſity. It does not, therefore, ſeem likely, that Dio would have made This Obſervation, if he had thought, that Adrian was near Rome, or very far from the Army, when he wrote to the Senate. This Objection may be eaſily anſwered; for, in the firſt Place, it may be ſaid, that Adrian's Abſence was the very Occaſion of his not uſing That Form; from whence it would follow, that Dio did not rightly apprehend all the poſſible Cauſes of That Omiſſion, when he aſcribed it only to the Loſs, which the Roman Army had ſuffered. It may be ſaid, in the ſecond Place, that an Emperor, who is a great way from his Army, might very well make uſe of That Form, in a Letter, wherein he acquaints the Senate with the good News, which his Generals have wrote to him. In fine, it might be maintained, againſt Dio, that the Victory, obtained over the Jews, was ſo compleat, and did ſo effectually remove all Poſſibility of a new Inſurrection, that, tho' the Roman Army had ſuſtained great Loſſes, there was room to write to the Senate, according to the Style, commonly uſed in the News of Proſperity. It is poſſible, therefore, that This Writer might make a wrong Obſervation.

(24) Xiphilin. in Adriano.

[K] And, that he diſputed with a Rabbi about the Doctrine of the Reſurrection of the dead.] This Fable ſays, that the chief Difficulty, objected by Adrian, was, that the Parts of a dead Body were diſperſed in a thouſand Places. He was anſwered, that there was a ſmall Bone in our Body, which was incorruptible, and that God would reſtore our Body again out of That little Bone. The Jews pretend, that

WHAT the Jews report of a little Bone called LUZ, which they ſay is in the Back of Man.

Digitized by Google

(l) Euſeb. ubi ſupra. (m) Tandem Trajanus Imperator miſit Adrianum ſororis ſuæ filium (this Kinsman is ſaid) ducem exercitus contra ipſos. - - - - - At laſt, the Emperor Trajan ſent Adrian, his Siſter's Son, to command his Forces againſt them. David Gans, in Germine Davidis, ad Ann. 3880, apud Lent de Pſeudo Meſſiis, pag. 9.

Euſebius ſuppoſes, that Adrian intruſted this War to his Lieutenants (l). It is at leaſt very certain, that Adrian did not command his Uncle Trajan's Troops in Judæa during the Rebellion of Barcochebas. David Gans, the Jewiſh Hiſtorian, is very much miſtaken in affirming it (m). Some ſay, that there were two Barcochebas's, one under Titus, the other under Adrian; and that the firſt, having failed in the Teſt required of him, was killed as an Impoſtor, and a falſe Meſſias. Upon his declaring himſelf to be the Meſſias, a Paſſage of Scripture was alledged to him, which imports, according to the Jewiſh Expoſition, that the Meſſias will be able to diſcern, by the Smell, whether a Perſon accuſed be Innocent or Guilty (n) [L], and it being found, that this pretended Meſſias had not a Noſe good enough to make that diſtinction, he was put to Death. This Opinion is not much followed (o).

(n) Iſaiah xi. 3.

(o) Noldius de Vitâ & Geſtis Herodum, p. 391. maintains this Opinion. Lent rejects it, pag. 14, de Pſeudo-Meſſiis.

(25) Hoornbeeck contra Judæos, l. 8. c. 5. p. 556.

that a celeſtial Dew will ſoften That Bone, and make it grow, in the ſame Manner as a little Leaven raiſes the whole Maſs, or, as a Grain of Wheat ſhoots into the Ear. Oſſiculum illud dicunt rore quodam cæleſti molliendum & extendendum ad inſtar fermenti quod in totam ſe maſſam diffundit, vel quemadmodum granum aliquod tritici in criſtam ſe exporrigit (25). Adrian would not believe any thing concerning the Incorruptibility of That Bone; but the Rabbi, with whom he diſputed, made a Trial of it; and it reſiſted every thing, Fire, Water, the Hammer, &c. Here is a long Paſſage of Manaſſes Ben-Iſrael. " Ajunt in ſpina dor-
" ſi aliquod oſſiculum eſſe, quod nunquam pereat: ex
" illo oſſiculo ſolo poſt interitum & annihilationem om-
" nium aliarum partium, dicunt, hominem inſtaura-
" tum, reſtitutumque iri, in reſurrectione mortuo-
" rum; juxta illud, quod in Bereſit Raba Paraſ. 28.
" legitur; Adrianus (cujus oſſa comminuantur) quæ-
" ſivit ex R. Jeoſuah filio Hanina, unde Deus bene-
" dictus germinare faciet hominem in futuro ſæculo?
" reſpondit ille, ex — luz, ſeu oſſiculo ſpinæ. Rur-
" ſus alter, unde noſti hoc? da mihi illud, inquit
" ille, oſſiculum, & te docebo: contudit illud in
" mola, ſed non tuſum eſt; conjecit in ignem &
" non conflagravit; conjecit in aquam, & non attri-
" tum eſt; impoſuit incudi, malleoque cecidit; ſed
" ne hilum comminutum eſt: Imperator Romanus,
" ſive quod rideret reſurrectionem mortuorum, ſive
" quod audiverat aliquod incorruptibile oſſiculum eſſe
" in corpore humano, cupiditate ejus ſciendi; vel
" quia, uti veriſimilius eſt, hæſitabat ob difficultates
" eas, quas jam recenſuimus, quæſivit ex R. Jeoſua
" filio Hanina, unde, vel quomodo reſtituerentur
" mortui, quorum membra tam longe, lateque diſ-
" perſa eſſent ac diſſipata? Reſpondit illi R. Jeoſuah,
" ex oſſiculo ſpinæ dorſi, appellato luz, quod incor-
" ruptibile eſt. Qui cum non poſſet facile adhibere
" fidem, experimento ei oſtendit ita eſſe. Hæc opi-
" nio, ſi quid antiquis credimus, non improbabilis
" eſt. Iſtud enim oſſiculum tale eſt, ut nequeat in" terire, quamvis hodie nullus ſit, qui illud noverit.
" Sunt qui arbitrentur, Davidem hujus oſſiculi men-
" tionem facere, cum ait, Cuſtodiens oſſa ejus, unum
" ex iis non conſumptum eſt. Pſalm xxxiv. 21. (26).
" —— They hold, that there is in the Spine of the " Back a little Bone, which never periſhes: and that
" from this little Bone only, after Death and Annihi-
" lation of all the other Parts, the whole Man will
" be renewed, and reſtored in the Reſurrection of the " Dead. According to what we meet with in Bereſit
" Raba Paraſ. 28; Adrian (whoſe Bones I wiſh may
" all be annihilated) asked Rabbi Jeoſuah the Son of
" Hanina, from whence the human Body was to ſpring
" up again for a future State. To which he an-
" ſwered, from Luz, or the little Bone of the Spine.
" The other replied, how do you know that? I will " take that Bone, ſays he, and ſhew you: he tried to " grind it in a Mill; he threw it into the Fire; he en-
" deavoured to diſſolve it in Water; he attempted " to break it on an Anvil with a Hammer; but all to
" no purpoſe; it remained ſtill the ſame: The Roman
" Emperor, either in order to ridicule the Reſur-
" rection of the Dead, or to be ſatisfied of the Truth
" of what he had heard of the Incorruptibility of a
" little Bone in the human Body, or which is moſt
" probable of all, being puzzled with the Diffi" culties we mentioned, urged R. Jeoſuah, the Son of " Hanina, with this Queſtion. Whence, and by what " means, ſhall the Dead be reſtored, whoſe Bodies
" have been diſperſed over the Face of the whole
" Earth? R. Jeoſuah anſwered him, From the little " Bone of the Spine, called Luz, which is incorrup-
" tible. The Truth of which being doubted, he " demonſtrated it by Experiment. This opinion, if " we have any Faith in Antiquity, is not improba-
" ble. For That little Bone is of ſuch a Nature, that it " cannot be deſtroyed, though there is no Body now
" who knows it. Some have believed, that David
" had regard to this Bone, when he ſaid, Thou pre-
" ſerveſt his Bones, one of them ſhall not periſh.
" Pſal. xxxiv. 21." Theſe doting Fools ſhould have ſaid, that this little Bone is the true Seat of the Soul.

(26) Manaſſ. Ben-Iſrael, de Reſurrectione, l. 2. cap. 15.

[L] The Meſſias will be able to diſcern by the ſmell whether a Perſon accuſed be Innocent or Guilty.] Compare this with what will be related in the Remark [C] of the Article DEMOCRITUS.

(a) See Wicquefort's Embaſſador, Tom. 1. pag. 959.

BARDE (JOHN de la), Counſellor of State, Marquis de Marolles, on the River Seine, was Embaſſador of France in Switzerland, in the Reign of Lewis XIV. He had been chief Deputy of Mr de Chavigni, Secretary of State (a). He aſſiſted at the Conferences of Munſter, as a Miniſter of the Second Rank, and ſome Endeavours were uſed to have him complimented with the Title of Excellency, but without any Succeſs [A]. He had then been named Embaſſador

[A] Endeavours were uſed to have him complimented with the Title of Excellency, at the Treaty of Munſter, but without Succeſs.] Mr de Wicquefort reports it, and adds, that the Plenipotentaries of France made their firſt attempt on the Nuncio, who anſwered, that he would not do it (1). They preſſed him to give Mr de la Barde that Title, and the firſt Viſit. The Reaſons he gave for his Refuſal were, That he would not ſet an Example, which no body would follow, nor make Mr de la Barde uſeleſs, who was very ſerviceable to the Aſſembly. He would indeed have made him uſeleſs, becauſe, if he had done him the Honour which was deſired, he muſt have put him under a Kind of Neceſſity of requiring it from all the other Embaſſadors, and of not appearing any more if they had refuſed him, as it would infallibly have happened. The Venetian Embaſſador imitated the Nuncio; and ſo la Barde was obliged to be ſatisfied with the Honours they were willing to do him. He deſired the Emperor's Miniſters at Oſnabrug to diſtinguiſh him from the other Miniſters of the ſecond Rank, and ſince they could not treat him as an Embaſſador, not to treat him as a Reſident; and provided he was treated in the third Perſon after the Italian Manner, he ſhould not pretend to the place of Honour in Viſits or Conferences. And indeed he could expect no great Diſtinction, at Munſter, or Oſnabrug, by virtue of his Credential Letters for the Swiſs Cantons. Mr de la Barde complained of an Italian Writer, for miſrepreſenting this matter, and, to convince him, affirms, that the Plenipotentiaries of France always treated him as an Embaſſador, and that they could do no otherwiſe, ſince the King's Patent, and all the Letters from Court, gave him that Character. " Avauxius ac Ser-
" vianus hunc haud ſecus ac ſeipſos invicem ha-
" buere; neque aliter poterant, cùm regio diplomate
" atque omnibus Regis atque Mazarini ad ſe atque
" ad alios litteris legatus eſſet appellatus. Id eo
" accuratius

(1) Wicquefort's Embaſſador, Tom. 1. p. 360.

Digitized by Google

ſador to Switzerland. He ſerved France, with great Faithfulneſs, and Ability, in the whole courſe of that Embaſſy. He wrote the Hiſtory of France in Latin, from the Death of Lewis XIII, to the Year 1652. That Hiſtory was long expected, as a Maſter-piece [B]: It was printed, at laſt, in the Year 1671 (b), and well received by the Public. The Style of it is good; the Narrations are without Flattery, and ſhew a great Knowledge of the Intrigues of the Cabinet. The Author has Latiniſed his Name by That of Labardæus. The Latin Names, he gives to others, would puzzle the Reader, had he not taken care to place the French Names in the Margin. He had made a French Tranſlation of this Hiſtory, which, in the opinion of ſome good Judges, was very much inferior to the original Latin (c). "As he was very learned, in Matters "of Divinity, he alſo wrote a Book of Controverſy, in Latin, againſt the "Opinion of the Proteſtants, concerning the Euchariſt (d) [C]." The Dutch Gazettes have informed us, that he died in the Year 1692, being ninety Years of Age. The Addition I would make to the Remark [C] of this Article, will be found below, [D].

(b) It is a 4to of 780 Pages.

(c) A Manuſcript Memoir communicated by Mr Lancelot, one of the under Library-Keepers of the Mazarine Library at Paris.

(d) The Abbot de Marolles's Catalogue of Authors.

"accuratius mihi dicendum fuit, quod homo quidam Italicus eâ de re ſecus ſcripſit ex alienâ lubidine, atque invidiâ in Labardæum: nam id illi ipſi tribuere nolim, qui in hujuſcemodi rebus etiam ſupra verum aliis favit, hos cùm Reſidentes, aut ad minores Principes abſque ullo Titulo miſſi eſſent, Legatos nihilo ſecius appellando (2). ---- D'Avaux and Servien regarded him as their Equal; nor could they indeed do otherwiſe, ſince his Royal Credentials, and all the King's and Mazarine's Letters, both to himſelf, and other Miniſters, ſtiled him Embaſſador. It was neceſſary to be the more particular in this Affair, becauſe it has been miſrepreſented, by a certain Italian Author, out of Envy and Prejudice to la Barde: For it cannot be aſcribed to his Manner of writing, which inclines to the other extream, and gives the Title of Embaſſador to Reſidents, and ſuch as are ſent without a Character to inferior Princes."

(2) Labardæus, Hiſt. de Rebus Gallicis, lib. 4. pag. 189, ad Ann. 1646.

[B] His Hiſtory of France was long expected, as a Maſter-Piece.] "Mr de la Barde is preparing a "Latin Hiſtory, which is to ſhew, that France has "either it's Salluſt or it's Virgil." This is what Father le Moine thought proper to intimate to the Public, in his Treatiſe of Hiſtory.

[C] He wrote a Book of Controverſy, in Latin, againſt the Opinion of the Proteſtants concerning the Euchariſt.] This puts me in mind of what I have heard his Grandſon, the Abbot of Brion, Canon of Notre-Dame at Paris, ſay, viz. That he applied himſelf ſeveral Years, with great diligence, to examine the Opinion of ſome Fathers about That Queſtion, and to compoſe a large Volume of great Learning; but, all of a ſudden, it came into his Head to deſtroy that great Work, ſo that one Morning he threw all he had wrote upon that Subject into the Fire.

[D] Here is what I would add to the Remark [C] of this Article.] This relates to his Book of Controverſy. In a Manuſcript Letter of his, to one of his Friends, dated from Solothurn, March 3, 1663, we find theſe words. "Libellum ad te de "re ſeriâ, imò divinâ, mitto, quo tibi otii mei, "ſicuti prius negotii, ratio conſtet: in eo Latinitatem "noſtram ne quæſiveris, quam de divinis ſcribendi "atque diſputandi genius vix patitur. —— I ſend "you a Treatiſe on a ſerious, and indeed a divine, "Subject, that I may ſhew you the manner of my "ſpending my leiſure Hours, as I have formerly "done in reſpect to my buſy ones: you muſt not look "for Purity in our Latin, it being ſcarce conſiſtent "with theſe Divinity Diſcourſes and Diſputations." His Friend anſwers him a little time after in this manner. "Reſtat ut de opuſculo tuo Theologico "gratias agam: in hoc ſolitam elegantiam tuam "deſideravi; neque verò tu argumenti ſeveritatem "excuſa: quid enim eſt tam contumax, quod ni"teſcere, quid tam horridum, quod poliri ameni"tate iſtâ tuâ non poſſit; ſed nimirum ingeniis "Helvetiis ſcribebas. —— I muſt not forget to thank "you for your Piece of Divinity, in which I expected to have found your uſual Elegance: the nature of the Subject is no excuſe: for what is there "ſo obſcure as not to be illuſtrated, what ſo rough "as not to be poliſhed, by your fine Pen: but you "wrote to Helvetian Underſtandings." This Anſwer is dated the 19th of the ſame Month. Theſe Paſſages will fix the Time of this Book of Controverſy to this Year 1663.

BARLETTA (GABRIEL), a Dominican Monk, diſtinguiſhed himſelf towards the end of the XVth Century [A], by a manner of Preaching much more becoming a Buffoon, than a Miniſter of the Goſpel. He was born at Barletto (a), in the Kingdom of Naples. Henry Stephens is not the only Perſon, who exclaimed againſt his manner of Preaching (b), full of mean Explications, only proper to expoſe our moſt venerable Myſteries to contempt; ſome Roman Catholics have not ſpared Gabriel Barletta on this Head [B]: And this Cenſure does

(a) In Latin Barulum.

(b) See the Apology for Herodotus, where many Scraps of Barletta may be found.

[A] He diſtinguiſhed himſelf towards the end of the XVth Century.] Altamura, in his Bibliotheque of the Dominicans, places Barletta in the Year 1470; from whence it appears, that Poſſevin was miſtaken only 200 Years. "Gabriel Barletta, ſays he "(1), Neapolitani regni, Apulus, Ordinis autem "Dominicani, Theologus & concionator utilis, cum "floreret anno 1270. —— Gabriel Barletta, of Apu"lia, in the Kingdom of Naples, of the Dominican "Order, a Divine, and able Preacher, flouriſhed in "the Year 1270." He adds, that his Sermons were printed ſeveral times, before the Edition of Venice, 1571.

(1) Poſſevin. Apparat. Sacr. Tom. 1. fol. 521, apud Altamur. p. 518. This Fault is not to be found in the Edition of Cologne, 1607. It is there, pag. 610, cum floreret Ann. 1470.

[B] Some Roman Catholics have not ſpared him.] Theophilus Raynaud, under the Name of Petrus à Valle Clauſa, wrote ſharply againſt Barletta, and reproached him particularly for his impertinent Anſwer to this Queſtion, How the Woman of Samaria knew that JESUS CHRIST was a Jew? She knew it, ſays he, by the Circumciſion. It muſt be confeſſed, that this Critic was not ſo exact as he ought to have been; for he does not only forget to mention the two other marks, whereby, as Barletta ſays, That Woman knew JESUS CHRIST to be a Jew; but he alſo makes Barletta ſay, that ſhe ſaw our Lord was circumciſed; but it is certain Barletta did not expreſs himſelf in that manner: "Prima ad habitum quem portabat ------ ſecunda "quia Nazaræus in cujus capite novaculum non aſ"cendit ---- tertia ratio ad circumciſionem: nullus "alius populus erat circumciſus. —— The firſt Mark "was that of his Habit ----- the ſecond, his never "having had his Head ſhaved, as being a Nazarene "----- the third, his Circumciſion: no other People "were circumciſed." It would ſignify nothing towards the Juſtification of this Critic, to ſay, that what he imputes to Barletta may be inferred from his words; for what a Man ſays ought never to be confounded does much greater Service and Honour to the Catholics, than the Pains the Dominicans take to justify This Preacher [C]. His Sermons were printed at Venice, in the Year 1571, in Two Volumes in 8°. The First Volume contains the Lent Sermons: the Second contains the Sermons on the Advent, Pentecost, Whitsunday, Ascension, and other Festivals (c). He was yet living, when the Turks took Otranto, in the Year 1480 (d). Some of his Friends undertook to justify him, by denying him to be the Author of the Sermons, which passed under his Name [D].

Digitized by Google

(c) Possevin. Apparat. sacri, Tomo 1. pag. 620.

(d) Altam. Bibliothec. Ordin. Prædicat. p. 1

confounded with the Consequences, which may be drawn from what he says. How many things escape not only an Orator, but also an Author, whereof he does not perceive so much as the most immediate Consequences? It is very possible therefore, that this Critic, by imputing to him those Consequences, imputes to him what he never thought of. So that, if a Man will be an exact and faithful Critic, he must prescribe this Rule to himself; "Censure the very "words themselves, which are obnoxious, and religiously forbear either to add or suppress a Tittle. "Shew the Authors the Consequences, which proceed "from them, but do not assert, that they have seen "and admitted those Consequences; wait for what "they will reply, when they are told, that they "follow naturally, and necessarily, from what they "have said." I cannot believe, that Barletta could ever have arrived at such a heighth of Impudence and Extravagance, as to utter the impudenta blasphemia, which his Critic imputes to him, in such fine Latin. It is enough to accuse him of not knowing what he said with his third Mark. I shall therefore leave his Critic to Altamura's Anger. "Pessimè "igitur à Valle Clausâ fallavit calumniaturus Barlettæ "sententiam exscribendo: respondit Samaritanam "cognovisse Christum esse Judæum videndo eum "esse circumcisum. Ubi fraudulento silentio præ-"terivit duas priores rationes, &c (2). —— Valle "Clausa, in order to vilify Barletta's Opinion, has "most abominably misrecited it, and made him say, "That the Woman of Samaria knew Christ to be "a Jew, by seeing he was circumcised. Where he "unfaithfully suppresses the two former Reasons before "given, &c." Another of his Sermons was censured with greater exactness. In that, the Question is, why the Holy Ghost deferred his coming into the World for ten Days. Barletta ascribes this to the fear of being served in the same manner as the Son of God was, and makes the Dispute between the Father and the Holy Ghost to end only by this expedient. The Holy Ghost bethought himself to take the Appearance of Wind and Fire, that he might not run any hazard among Men. What can be said meaner, and more unworthy of the Divine Majesty?

A RULE which those ought to follow, who impute certain things to an Author.

(2) Altamur. pag. 519.

[C] The Dominicans take a great deal of Pains to justify this Preacher.] To begin with the Sermon on the Pentecost, I observe, that Altamura is so far from owning, that there is any thing in it worthy of Censure, that, on the contrary, he finds it represents the Obstinacy of Mankind with wonderful Art, and is very much surprized at this rash Accusation of so eminent a Preacher. "Tanti nominis, says he (3), "concionatorem, tantoque cum fructu verbum Dei "disseminantem, ut adhuc vigeat ad perpetuum tan-"ti viri decus commune in Italia proloquium. Nescis "prædicare, Qui nejcit Barlettare (4). —— So emi-"nent and edifying a Preacher, that to his immortal "Honour it continues a Proverb in Italy, to this Day, "He who knows not how to imitate Barletta, "knows not how to preach." As for the main part of the other Objection, he answers it very poorly; for he pretends, that, according to Barletta, the Woman of Samaria knew by JESUS CHRIST's Garment, and his Hair, that he was a Jew; from whence, in arguing, she drew this Consequence, that he was circumcised. Once more, the shortest and best way is to say, that this poor Preacher did not know what he said with his third Mark: he had not known whereabout he was, had he taken it for a Subject to reason upon.

(3) Id. i

(4) He already this in 198, wi long Cr of poor Elegies.

[D] Some understook to justify him, by denying, that he was the Author of the Sermons, which passed under his Name] Leander Albertus pretends, that, in his Youth, he knew the ignorant Person, who forged those unworthy Productions, which went under the famous Name of Barletta (5). It is much to be wondred, that the new Author of the Bibliotheca of the Order, has not alledged this reason in Justification of his Brother; some would be apt to say he durst not make use of it, because what Leander Albertus had said was known to be false. But, whether it be so or not, it is at least very certain, that there are some impertinent Things in the Writings, which are incontestably ascribed to Barletta. We have seen the Censure of Father Raynaud. Moreri is in the wrong to maintain, That several Protestant Authors have made use of his pretended Sermons, to ridicule the Catholics, and that, among those, Henry Stephens is one of the first: for I dare be positive, that the Sermons, from whence Henry Stephens took his Railleries, are none of those, which Leander Albertus imputes to an Impostor. The Dispute between the Father and the Holy Ghost is one of Henry Stephens's Gaieties; now Altamura acknowledges, that Barletta is the Author of it.

(c) Albe Descript. Ital. p.

BARLEUS (MELCHIOR), a Native of Antwerp, a Latin Poet in the XVIth Century, and Son of Lambert Barleus, who was Keeper of the Records of Antwerp, above Forty Years, was educated under good Masters, and testified by several Writings, both in Prose and in Verse [A], the Progress he had made. One of his Brothers, whose Name was James, left his Country for his Religion, and made his Escape into Holland, where, after having been Regent of the second Class, in the College of Leyden, he was called to the Brill, to be Rector of the College there. Gaspar Barleus, elder Brother of Melchior [B], succeeded in the Office of Keeper of the Records, which his Father had; but, when Antwerp was again brought under the Yoke of the Spanish Government, he left his Country, and retired into Holland. He carried his eldest Son along with him, who was yet in the Cradle (a), and of whom I shall speak in the following Article.

(a) Taken from Gaspar Barleus's Funeral Oration spoken at Amsterdam, by John Arn. Corvinus, Jan 18, 1648.

(1) Valerius Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 669.

(2) Corvinus in Orat. Fun. Gasp. Barlæi.

(3) Valer. Andreas, ubi supra.

(4) Corvinus ibid.

[A] He published several Writings, both in Prose and in Verse] These are the Titles of them; Brabantiados libri 5. & Antverpiæ Encomium. De Diis Gentium libri duo, in Elegiac Verses, at Antwerp in 1562 (1). De raptu Ganymedis libri tres (2), & Bucolica, at Antwerp 1572. A Speech De vitæ humanæ felicitate; cum adjuncto carmine, De Rerum humanarum vicissitudine, ad Gasparem fratrem, at Antwerp 1566 (3). Historia de Domus Austriacæ Eminentia (4).

[B] Gaspar Barleus was elder Brother of Melchior] I make no doubt but Valerius Andreas has taken this Gaspar for him who was Professor at Amsterdam, and whose Latin Verses were so much cried up. If he has, he was grosly mistaken: That Professor was Melchior's Nephew, and not his Brother. If it be said, in order to excuse Valerius Andreas on this account, that he does not make the Mistake, which I have supposed, yet he would be in the wrong on another: for when an Author is described by his Relations, those ought never to be made use of, who are unknown either in the Commonwealth of Learning, or in the World; and consequently these words of Valerius Andreas, Melchior Barleus, Antverpiensis, Gasparis frater, would be impertinent, if they were meant of Melchior's Brother; because that Brother, though he taught at Bommel, is an unknown Person. Moreri has committed the same Fault with Valerius Andreas.

Digitized by Google

BARLEUS (GASPAR), Nephew of the foregoing, was Professor of Philosophy at Amsterdam, and one of the elegant Latin Poets of the XVIIth Century. He was born at Antwerp in the Year 1584 (a). His Father, who was a Protestant, fled into Holland, when the Duke of Parma had made himself Master of that City. He staid three Years in Leyden, after which he was called to Bommel, to be Rector of the College there. He enjoyed that place seven Years, and then died, having designed his Son Gaspar for the Ministry of the Holy Gospel. This Gaspar studied eight Years in the College of the Province of Holland at Leyden, and, being afterwards received into the Ministry, he served a Country Church near the Brill. Bertius, being advanced from the Office of Sub-Principal to the Principalship of that College, thought no Person so fit to succeed him as our Barleus. His Recommendation was successful; Barleus was made Sub-Principal, and, some time after, Professor of Logic, in the University of Leyden. He concerned himself so far in the Disputes of the Arminians, that he was removed from all his Offices, when the opposite Party had fully triumphed in the Synod of Dort, in the Year 1618. Barleus began, then, to study Physic, and, in two Years time, thought himself fit to commence Doctor. He took his Degree at Caën; but scarce ever practised at all. Some young Persons desired him to read Lectures to them in Philosophy, and polite Learning; and, as it was what he had been used to, he resumed this Employment, and regained a great Character for it, even in the University of Leyden. The Magistrates of Amsterdam, having erected a famous School in the Year 1631, offered him the Professorship of Philosophy. He accepted, and discharged it very honourably until his Death, which happened the fourteenth of January, 1648 (b). He was a Man of great Merit. There is extant a Volume of Speeches, which he pronounced on several Subjects, and which are not only commendable for the Style, but also for the Turn, and frequent Touches, of Wit. Poetry was his chief Talent: His Muse was very copious and lofty (c). There scarce happened any great Subject during his Life, on which he did not bestow some pompous Encomium, if he was not prevented by Reasons of State [A]. Cardinal Richelieu, and Chancellor Oxenstiern, were not forgot: much less did he pass by the Conquests and brave Exploits of Frederic Henry Prince of Orange. Queen Mary de Medicis, and the magnificent Reception she met with at Amsterdam (d), gave Barleus occasion to exercise his Eloquence. He published some very sharp Pieces of Controversy, against the Adversaries of Arminius [B]. That (a) By the Epistle Dedicatory of his Letters, it appears that he was born February the 12th.

(b) Taken from his Funeral Oration made by John-Arnold Corvinus. The Diarium of the Sieur Witte places his Death in 1647.

(c) See the Elogies that Borrichius gives him, Dissertat. de Poet. p. 140.

(d) In 1637.

[A] There scarce happened any great Subject, during his Life, on which he did not bestow some pompous Encomium, if he was not prevented by Reasons of State.] I make use of this Restriction, because I have read in Barleus's Letters, that he refused to write a Poem on the Coronation of the Emperor Ferdinand III, which had been requested of him. He considered, that he had to do with suspicious Persons, who would not fail to stigmatize him as a Pensionary of the House of Austria; besides, after having so highly celebrated the Victories of Gustavus over the Emperor, he did not see how he could compliment Ferdinand, on any great Honour acquired in making War with the Swedes. Here is an honest Poet! How many of his Profession get over these Scruples! They have a two-handed Pen; they do not only prepare Panegyrics for the conquering Party, be it who it will, but also, after the Event, make Verses for both Parties (1). I do not question but that there are Poets in Italy, who have complimented, or will compliment, both the Dauphin, and Prince Lewis of Baden, on the Campaign of 1693. These are the Words of Barleus: "Literas accepi Vienna, quibus petitur uti laudatione "aliqua velim prosequi Coronationem Ferdinandi ter"tii Imperatoris. Ego si sapiam abstinebo ab illa "laudatione religiosissime. Quamquam enim ea pos"sem scribere quæ ad laudes Imperatoris faciant, nec "Reip. nostræ adversentur, tamen prout sunt nostra"tium ingenia, judicarent me beneficio obstrictum "Austriacis. Scimus Cæsarem non quidem aperto "Marte nos petere, sed per latus Hispani nobis gra"vem esse. Laudavi etiam non ita pridem Gusta"vum Sueciæ Regem, ejusque adversus Cæsarem "bella probavi. Jam ut laudem Ferdinandum ter"tium ob gesta adversus Suecos feliciter bella, à pru"dentia mea impetrare non possum. Non sum ambi"dexter, sed ab omni adulatione alieniissimus. Cu"perem obsequi petitioni illustrissimi Legati, sed hoc "cavendum ne dum foris benè, domi male audiam. "Forte nimis sum meticulosus, sed & illud certum "illam Cæsaris laudationem à me profectam calum"niæ suspicionibusque oportunam fore (2). —— I "received Letters from Vienna, desiring I would "compose something in Honour of the Coronation of "the Emperor Ferdinand III. But I think it pru"dent to decline this Task entirely. For though I "might pay a Compliment to the Emperor, without "the least Prejudice to our Commonwealth, yet such "are the Suspicions of our People, that they would be"lieve me to be bribed by the House of Austria. We "know the Emperor does not strike at us directly, "but only by means of the Spaniard. Besides, I "have congratulated Gustavus, King of Sweden, on "his War with the Emperor. And I cannot think it "consistent with my Reason, to compliment Ferdi"nand III, on the very same Occasion. I scorn to "play a double Part, and have the greatest Aversion "to Flattery. I should be glad to obey the Request of "the most illustrious Embassador, but must take care "that, while I am esteemed abroad, I am not ill "thought of at home. Perhaps I am too scrupulous, "but undoubtedly an Encomium on the Emperor, com"posed by me, would give room for Suspicions and Re"flexions." Barleus's Fear was not without Foundation; and, if Reason would not suffer him to write the Panegyric of Ferdinand III, because Holland was at War with the House of Austria, and an Author should not blow hot and cold, Prudence no less advised him to forbear that Elogy. Those, who believed him a Friend to the Arminians, would have defamed him as an Enemy to God and the State, and would not have been content with declaring him such, both in private and in public. To conclude, if all the Heroes, he celebrated, paid him as well as Cardinal Richelieu (3), he had no reason to say, that the Culture of Parnassus is That of an ungrateful Soil.

(1) Compare this with what Macrobius, Saturnal. l. 2, cap. 5, pag. 337, says of a Man who had taught two Ravens, the one to congratulate Augustus, and the other to congratulate Marc Antony.

(2) Gaspar. Barlæus, Epist. 334, pag. 668: the Letter was wrote in the Year 1636.

[B] He published some very sharp Pieces of Controversy against the Adversaries of Arminius.] In the Year 1615, he published a Piece at Leyden, entituled, Bogermannus ἐλεγχόμενος, sive Examen Epistolæ dedicatoriæ quam suis ad pietatem illustrium Ordinum Hollandiæ & Westfrisiæ notis præfixit Joannes Bogermannus Ecclesiastes Leovardiensis: in quo etiam Crimina à Matthæo Slado impacta Erasmo Roterodamo diluuntur. The Year following he published a little Book, the Title whereof was, Dissertatiuncula in quâ aliquot

(3) If we believe Sorbiere, that Cardinal gave him 3000 Livres for his Elogy. Sorberiana, pag. 50.

Digitized by Google

That Wound was never healed: He was looked upon all his Life time, as a Favourer of that Sect [C], and many Perſons murmured againſt the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam, for entertaining ſuch a Profeſſor. All his Proceedings were narrowly watched, and not the leaſt Favour ſhewn him. He was terribly exclaimed againſt, for ſome Verſes he had made on the Book of a Rabbi [D]. After his Death, his Letters were publiſhed in Two Volumes (e); but the Sextus Empiricus,

(e) His Son-in-law, Gerard Brandt, called them to be printed at Amſterd. in 1667. Some of the moſt conſiderable are to be ſeen in the Coll ction of Epiſtolæ Præſtantium ac Eruditorum Virorum, published by the Arminians, in 8 in 1667, and in Folio in 1684.

aliquot Patriæ Theologorum & Eccleſiaſtarum malè ſana conſilia & ſtudia juſta orationis libertate reprehenduntur. There was too much tartneſs in that piece, and it was too ſevere on the Preachers; for he pretends (4), that Holland afforded, " Viros Prædicato-
" rii ordinis vocales plus ſatis, qui ad ſcribendos ſalutiferos libros inepti, ad prædicandum Chriſti ſapientiam elingues, tamen ad obtrectandum cum Magiſtratibus, tum diſſentientibus circa res religionis ſymmiſtis, diſerti ſint & copioſi. — Preachers louder " than they need to be, who have neither Pen to compoſe good Books, nor Tongue to deliver the Doctrines " of Chriſtianity, but can find both in the moſt full " and eloquent manner to defame not only Magiſtrates, " but alſo their own Fraternity, who differ from them " in matters of Religion." In the following Page he ſays, " Si templa aliquot Hollandiæ peragrare libeat,
" Theologos quamplurimos in ſpermologos, concionatores in convitiatores, pacis præcones in factionum principes & ſchiſmatis faciundi buccinatores
" transformatos mirabere, nec tam reformatæ amplius, quam peſſimis aliquorum moribus deformatæ religionis antiſtites eſſe jurabis. —— If you look into " ſome of the Churches of Holland, you will be ſurprized to find ſeveral Divines transformed into idle " Praters; Preachers into Slanderers; and the Meſſengers of Peace into Ringleaders and Trumpeters of " Faction and Schiſm: inſomuch that you would be " apt to regard them as Prieſts of a Religion, not " reformed, but deformed by the baſeneſs of their own " Morals." This is a moſt violent Inſult on thoſe, whoſe Character ought to have obliged him to treat them with Reſpect. This Invective was immediately tranſlated into Dutch. I cannot well tell whether it was in this Diſſertation, that he called one Vincent Drielenburch, who had ſet up for a Prophet, by the Name of Nebulo; but either in this, or ſome other, Writing, he made uſe of that opprobrious Expreſſion; which exaſperated that Perſon to ſuch a Degree, that he publiſhed a Book, wherein he calls Barleus a Knave and a Raſcal, Nebulonem & Sceleſtum, and engaged to give an Hundred Livres to the Deaconry of Leyden, and to deliver himſelf up into the Hands of Juſtice, that his Puniſhment might be exemplary, if it could be proved, by ſolid Reaſons, that he was a Knave, Nebulo. Vincentius etiam Drielenburch ſuis prophetandi partibus non defuit, nam anno ſuperiore à Gaſparo Barlæo in ſcripto quodam Nebulonis nomine deſignatus, id adeo Prophetiæ ſuæ dignitati putavit eſſe injurioſum, ut edito mox ſcripto eumdem Barlæum ſceleſtum & Nebulonem nominaret, &c. (5). A little while after, there came out a Book, which pretended to prove this Charge againſt Drielenburch, by ten inconteſtable Reaſons. He anſwered thoſe ten Reaſons, and flew out extremely againſt Barleus. The latter compoſed a Remonſtrance to the States-General during his Exile. It is dated from Francfort, in the Month of Auguſt, 1620, and intituled, Fides imbellis, ſive Epiſtola paræneticaad illuſtriſſimos & potentiſſimos Fœderatarum Provinciarum Ordines. It is a Piece very well written, wherein the ſad Conſequences of Perſecution, and the Rights of Conſcience, are very pathetically repreſented. You will find it in the Præſtantium & Eruditorum Virorum Epiſtolæ (6).

(4) Page 4.

(5) Salomon Theodotus, in Pacificatorio dilecti Belgii, pag. 176, 177.

(6) In Pag. 633, & ſeq. of the Edit. of 1684.

[C] He was looked upon, all his Life-time, as a Favourer of the Arminian Sect.] It is certain, that, after he was reſtored in the Univerſity of Leyden, he did not break off his Correſpondence with the Arminians. His Hundred and fifty ſixth Letter informs Uytenbogard, that Polyander, Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden, had diſcovered to his Friends, that all the Moderation, which appeared in the Writings, publiſhed by the Faculty of Theology, againſt the Arminians, came from himſelf: Quidquid mollius leniuſque ſcriptum reperitur in ſpecimine, à ſe profectum eſſe, reliqua aſperiora collegarum eſſe (7); but that he deſired the Arminians, who were made acquainted with it, would keep it ſecret, becauſe it would expoſe him to the Indignation of his Colleagues. Rogavit me obnixè per D. Voſſium internuncium, vobis uti ſcriberem, ne ſi fortè hæc res ad aures veſtras pervenerit, ejus in reſponſo veſtro meminiſſe velitis, ne collegarum ſuorum invidiæ ac odiis, quorum jam ſemina jacta, miſer objiciatur (8). The following Letter teſtifies, that one of Polyander's Colleagues reproached him for having told this to Barleus, an Enemy of the Church: Tu hoc dixiſti Barlæo, quem ſcis eſſe hoſtem Eccleſiæ, qui illud ipſum ad Uytenbogardum, & Epiſcopium perſcripturus eſt. Theſe Letters were written in the Year 1630. It appears, by Barleus's Letters, that he was always of the Opinion of the Remonſtrants.

(7) Barlæus Epiſt. 156, pag. 356.

(8) Ibid.

[D] He was exclaimed againſt, for ſome Verſes he had made on the Book of a Rabbi.] Manaſſes Ben-Iſrael, one of the moſt learned Men among the Jews, in the XVIIth Century, publiſhed a Book on the Creation, in the Year 1634. Barleus made an Epigram upon it, and, according to Cuſtom, ſuffered it to appear at the Head of the Work. He declared too plainly, that he preferred a good Life before the Truth of ſpeculative Doctrines. A Divine of Deventer, made a mighty buſtle about it; he publiſhed a Piece, wherein he maintained, that the Epigram was full of Blaſphemies, and that the Author of it was a Socinian. Nay, there was a Deſign to bring the Matter before the States of Holland, to convict Barleus, and all the Arminians, of Socinianiſm. Conſilia agitari uti Libellus iſte Cenſoris ordinibus Hollandiæ exhibeatur ut appareat Barleum & Remonſtrantes eſſe Socinianos (9). Barleus defended himſelf with Heat, and was very angry. He maintained, that his Words were maliciouſly interpreted, and even falſified, that they might the better colour the Arts they made uſe of, to find ſuch a Meaning as he had never thought of. " Epigramma quoddam meum - - - - - - - quæ-
" ſitis & perverſis detorſionibus malignè interpreta-
" tur. Dicit illo epigrammate contineri varia quæ
" Eccleſiæ pernicioſa, religioni Chriſtianæ probroſa,
" & in Deum ac Dominum noſtrum Jeſum Chriſtum
" impia ſunt. Socinianiſmum adhæc autori epigrammatis impingit, &c. - - - - - - - Cenſor peſſima fide
" voculam è carmine ſuſtulit, & ſuam ſubſtituit, ma-
" neamus pro vivamus. Senſus affingit verſibus meis
" de quibus ne per ſomnium quidem cogitavi (10).
" - - - - - - He maliciouſly interprets a certain Epi-
" gram of mine - - - - - - - by far-fetched and unfair
" Conſtructions. He ſays, that Epigram contains ſe-
" veral Things deſtructive to the Church, opprobrious
" to Chriſtianity, and blaſphemous to God, and our
" Lord Jesus Christ. He alſo charges the Author
" of it with Socinianiſm, &c. - - - - - - - This Cen-
" ſurer has unjuſtly ſuppreſſed an Expreſſion of mine,
" and ſubſtituted one of his own, maneamus, inſtead of
" vivamus. He conſtrues my Verſes in ſuch a Senſe, as
" I never once dreamed of." He proteſted that he was no Socinian, that he never had been one, and that he deteſted the Doctrines of the Socinians. He added, that ſome would be glad to have him a Socinian, that their Hatred of him might find a larger Field of Triumph. Non ſum Socinianus nec fui unquam, imo hoſtis ſum iſtorum dogmatum acerrimus. Vellent quidam me eſſe qui explendi in me odii materiam ſollicitè quærunt (11). If that Judgment were falſe, it was, however, not unlikely; for thoſe who engage in Controverſies about Doctrines, accuſe their Adverſaries of ſo many things, that, commonly ſpeaking, nothing can mortify them more, than to appear quite different from their Repreſentations. However it be, it was lawful for Barleus to repulſe the Calumny; but he ought not to have made ſuch ſtinging Verſes againſt the Divine of Deventer, that perhaps Archilochus would not have exceeded them. That Divine's Name, in ſhort, was Vedelius, and his Book entituled Deus Synagogæ. A Profeſſor of Utrecht (12) ſeconded him in that Attack, by a Piece called Vorſtius redivivus, which Vedelius took care to get printed. Voſſius believed, that Barleus fell ſick, by laying the Inſults of thoſe two Antagoniſts too much to Heart. See what he wrote to Grotius the fifteenth of December, 1637. " Collega Barleus jam tertium men-
" ſem laborat quartanâ. Metuitur ei à μαεχτμῶ.
" Ut

(9) Barl. Epiſt. 3 pag. 675

(10) Ib. p. 6-4. See alſo 678.

(11) Ib. pag. 67

(12) Schoo See V. ſelect. put. V pag. 1.

Digitized by Google

Empiricus, which was expected from him, never appeared. He has shewn how able he was to write History, by the Relation of what passed in Brasil, during the Government of Count Maurice of Nassau. He published that History in the Year 1647. Strange Reports were raised about his last Sickness [E], and about his Death [F]; but the Truth of it is hardly to be known: There is but little Credit to be given to Reports of this Nature; for it is notorious, from an hundred Examples, that, if an Author has distinguished himself ever so little, Fame does very much magnify the Personal or Domestic Disgraces, which befal him: And those, who are acquainted with the whole Secret, are commonly Persons too nearly concerned to publish what may occasion the least Disreputation.

" Ut convalescat, non videtur idem fore qui quondam
" (13). Affixit valetudinem opere properando quod
" nunc excuditur. Est hoc de ingressu (14) reginæ
" matris in urbem nostram, & honore pompæ ei
" exhibito. Typis prodibit augustis, plurimis exorna-
" tum picturis. Atque hoc quod dixi non dissimu-
" lat apud amicos. Sed multum metuo ne morbum
" hunc inde contraxerit, quod nimis ad animum re-
" vocaret quæ adversus eum scripta sunt à Doct.
" Vedelio, & Mag. Schoockio (15). - - - - - - - - My " Colleague, Barleus, has been afflicted with a Quar-
" tan these three Months. He is in some Danger of " a Consumption. If he recovers, he will scarce ever
" be the same Man again. He destroyed his Health,
" by applying so closely to the Work, which is now
" printing. The Subject is the Entry of the Queen-
" Mother into our City, and her magnificent Receptio-
" on. It will appear in a very fine Letter, and a- " dorned with several Copper-Plates. He owns, among " his Friends, the Account I have now given. But I
" much fear, that his Distemper is rather owing to his
" laying too much to Heart the Calumnies published
" against him by Dr Vedelius, and Mr Schoockius."
I believe, that most of Barleus's best Friends found him too much concerned for the Censure of his Epigram; for they advised him to despise his Critics, whom they lashed severely. " Tibi sum auctor ut
" eos posthac præteritione mulctes. Acerrima vin-
" dicta est contemtus: in malam rem homines ad
" civilia ingenia vexanda natos. Ex Epigrammate
" scilicet quo Manassen Judæum non proscindis con-
" vitiis, totus in te Theologorum ordo asperatus om-
" nem Hæreticorum sentinam in caput tuum infun-
" det. - - - - - - Si verpum, apellam, recutitum eum-
" dem dixisses, & virum, ut videtur, non malum
" poëticis scommatibus exagitasses, palmarium meruis-
" ses. - - - - - - - Si quid mihi apud te est fidei crabro-
" nes istos iterum dico posthac negliges. Acrius enim
" post repulsam instant, & ubi excusseris venenum
" omne in aculeos advocant tanquam ipsi læsi (16).
" - - - - - - - I desire you would, for the future, repay
" them with Neglect. Contempt is the most galling
" Method of Revenge; and fittest to be used against
" those, who are born to defame modest Merit, and
" prove a Pest to Mankind. Because your Epigram
" does not load Manasses the Jew with Reproaches,
" the whole Order of Divines are angry, and bespatter
" you with all the Filth, which Heresy ever produced.
" - - - - - If you had called him a circumcised Wretch,
" and abused him, though he does not seem to deserve
" it from you, with poetical Slander, you would have
" been admired. - - - - - - - - If I have any Influence
" over you, I again beg you would despise these Hor-
" nets. For a Repulse only makes them return to the " Charge with greater Fury, and, if you shake off their
" Venom, they only prepare to sting you with all their
" Vengeance, as though you were the Aggressor." Barleus's Epigram, which was the Cause of so much Stir, would have found a place here, if it had not lately been inserted in a little Book, which is in every body's Hands (17). I am surprized to find in it but a very small part of Barleus's Verses against Vedelius; but I wonder yet more, how Sorbiere could think, that the Passage, which he mentions, shews the Author scoffed at both Religions. These are Sorbiere's Words: " Cùm
" Vedelius nomen suum in priori scripto analytico
" epigrammatis Barlæani restituisset (18) ait

- - - - - quid tenebroso
Calumniator prave delites antro,
Et exoleta sæve tergiversator
Arcessis orco monstra perditæ sectæ?
Cur versipellis Sarmatæ malas voces
Portenta fidei, exsibilata Senensis
Commenta verbis affricas serenatis?

" Quæ sane nec Calvinianis satisfacere nec aliis, sed
" utriusque religionis ludibrio habitæ poëtam merito
" suspectum reddidere (19). - - - - - Because Vedelius
" had suppressed his Name in his first Piece, against
" Barleus's Epigram, he makes him this Reply,

Why starts the Slanderer, in his darksome Den,
The hellish Maxims of the worst of Men?
Why brings he back that cursed Sect to light,
Long since condemn'd to everlasting Night?

" which can neither be agreeable to the Calvinists,
" nor the others, but justly renders the Poet suspected
" of ridiculing both Religions." A Man must be mad or drunk to judge so; for the Verses, which we have just now read, are the most severe that can be made against Socinianism, and no Body can testify more earnestly, than Barleus has done, how much he detested to be suspected of that Heresy. This Author's Prose, which Sorbiere has quoted a little before, thunders full as violently against that Sect.

[E] Strange Reports were raised about his last Sickness.] I have heard say, that he thought himself to be made of Glass, and that he was afraid of being broke to pieces, when any body came near him. Others have told me, that he fancied himself Butter, or Straw, and durst not come near the Fire. This is inconsistent with his Funeral Oration, spoken by Corvinus, Professor of Law; for it is there affirmed, that he read a Lecture to his Scholars the Day before he died, and that he was going to read another, when a Faintness seized him, from which he never recovered. Id quod dolemus, eo accidisse momento quo se parabat ut juventuti sibi commissæ docendo debitum præstaret officium (20). " Antecessit quidem eum
" morbus cum quo luctabatur subinde, non tamen
" tantus quin aliquomodo consuetis adhuc sufficeret
" laboribus. Audiverant eum, pridie diei quo eum
" mors invasit, discipuli docentem: audivissent ea-
" dem qua occidit, nisi ipsis eum abstulisset, ita ut
" accepimus, plurimis hodie exemplis fere epidemica
" lypothymia. — He had before laboured under an
" Indisposition, which now and then afflicted him,
" but not so severely as to hinder him from going on
" with his usual Employments. His Pupils had been
" at Lectures with him the Day before he died, and
" were to have gone again the next, if a sudden
" Fainting, as I have been informed, which, by fre-
" quent Instances, was become almost epidemical, had
" not carried him off." It is very remarkable, that he had a little before made use of the same Precaution: " Inopinate eum extinxit, UT NOBIS RELA-
" TUM, Lipothymia. Inde factum ut eum extin-
" ctum ante audiverimus, quàm morti esse propin-
" quum morbus prænuntiaret. - - - - A sudden Faint-
" ness, as I have been told, carried him off. So that
" we heard of his Death, before any Distemper had
" discovered him to be in Danger." Observe, that Corvinus had just before addressed his Speech to the Disciples of the deceased. And can any one think he would have told them falsly to their Face, that they assisted at one of his Lectures, the Day before his Death?

[F] And about his Death.] Morhofius reports, that Barleus died in a Well, and that it is not known, whether he fell into it accidentally, or threw himself into it. Misero fato periit, puteo submersus, an sponte, an casu, incertum, de morte ejus jam supra diximus. It is thus he speaks, in the Three hundredth Page of his Polyhistor. Doubtless he refers us to Page 155, when

(13) The Event did not confirm this Conjecture. The like are made every Day, that prove false.

(14) This is a true Gallicism. C'est celui de l'Entrée.

(15) Epist. præst. & eruditor. Virorum, pag. 706. Edit. in fol. 1684.

(16) Rochus Honerdius in Epist. ad Barlæum, ibid. p. 795.

(17) In the Sorberiana, pag. 37, 38. Edit. of Holland, 1694.

(18) Doubtless it is a Fault of the Press. Perhaps the Author had written Silentio; for, besides its being false that Vedelius put his Name to the first Piece, the very Verses alledged suppose, that he had suppressed his Name.

(19) Sorberiana, p. 39.

(20) Corvinus in Orat. Funeb. Barlei.

Digitized by Google

when he says, that he had already mentioned This Death: But, in the One hundred fifty fifth Page, he does not ascribe it either to an Accident, or to a premeditated Design, but affirms, that Barleus became mad, and cast himself into a Well; and quotes the Sixty fourth Letter of Sorbiere. "Eo nonnullorum excrescit è fiducia nimia ambitio, ut sinistro aliorum judicio in extremam incidant insaniam. Quod Barlæo accidit, qui ob prælatum sibi Spanhemium in maniam incidit, seque ipsum in puteo suffocavit, quod de eo Sorbierius refert Epist. 64. extatque apud Duportum Musarum subcisivarum, Lib. 1. de eo Epigramma (21). —— To such an Extream are some Persons hurried by Pride and Self-conceit, that a Disappointment from the Judgment of others shall throw them into Madness. This happened to Barleus, who, on account of the Preference being given to Spanheim, fell into a Distraction, and drowned himself in a Well; This is related by Sorbiere, Epist. 64. lib. 1. And there is an Epigram upon it in Duport's Musæ Subcisivæ, lib. 1." This Quotation is very false, for here is what Sorbiere says. "The Death of Barleus, of which you desire the Particulars, is not of that Importance (22), though he was a very worthy Man; for there will always be found a greater Number of excellent Poets than Physicians. When I was at Amsterdam, they spoke variously of his Death, as if Melancholy had hastened it. It is true, that, having composed a Funeral Oration, in Verse, on the Death of the Prince of Orange, and Dr Spanheim having spoke one in Prose, he bore the Inequality of their Reward very impatiently: For, as Salmasius said, very pleasantly, they made a great Mistake, in giving the Trooper's Pay to the Foot Soldier, and That of the Foot Soldier to the Trooper. Barleus had but Five hundred Livres, and the other had Five hundred Crowns." There is nothing about Barleus's Death in the Sarberiana. We find there, indeed, that, according to the common Report, Barleus was subject to some Fits of Lunacy: "Ferebatur intervalla quædam minus lucida habere, nec aberat conjectura oculorum qui non bene sanam cerebi particulam indicabant. —— He was said to have Intervals of Phrensy, and that a Wildness about the Eyes discovered his Brain was not right."

(21) Morhof. Polyhist. p. 155.

(22) That is, of the same Importance with that of Barleus and Vissingius, who he had mentioned just before.

BARLEUS (LAMBERT), Brother of the foregoing, was born at Bommel in Guelderland, in the Year 1595 (a). He was Greek Professor in the University of Leyden. Before That, he had been Teacher of the Second Class in a College at Amsterdam [A], and, before he taught that Class, he had been Minister of the Baron de Langerac, the Dutch Embassador in France (b). He was called to Leyden to fill up the place of Jeremiah Hoelzlin, and a new Addition was made to that Office; for it was given him with the Title of Professor in Ordinary (c), which is attended with several Advantages. He made his Inauguration Speech, De Græcarum Literarum Præstantia ac Utilitate, the Twenty second of October, 1641. In 1652, he published the Timon of Lucian, with several Notes, which have nothing very extraordinary, or profound, in them, but may be useful to Youth. He died the sixteenth of June, 1655 (d). His Commentary on the Theogony of Hesiod was printed in 1658.

(a) Witte in Diario Biographico.

(b) Corvinus in Orat. Funebri Gasp. Barlæi.

(c) See the Epistle Dedicatory of his Timon of Lucian.

(d) Witte, Diar. Biogr.

[A] He had been Teacher, of the second Class, in a College, at Amsterdam.] The Dutch give the Title of Conrector to the Teacher of this Class. That is to say, The Rector's Assistant. They call the Teacher of the first Class Rector. He has an Inspection over the other Teachers.

BARLOW (THOMAS), Bishop of Lincoln, in the Reign of Charles II, was a very learned Man. He was a long time Professor of Divinity in the University of Oxford, and it has been suspected by a certain Person, that he was removed from thence for being too Orthodox [A]. He was very zealous against Popery, as he demonstrated by his Writings [B]. He had a large Collection of Books, and was a Man of great Reading. He died in the Year 1690, or thereabouts. Some small Pieces, which were found among his Papers, have been published since his Death. He has been confounded with William Barlow [C], Bishop of Lincoln, who flourished under King James I, and also died under that Prince.

[A] It has been suspected, by a certain Person, that he was removed from the University of Oxford for being too Orthodox.] This certain Person is a famous Minister, and Professor of Divinity, at Groningen; in a Word, it is James Alting. He says, in a Letter dated the thirteenth of March, 1676, That Dr Barlow was lately advanced to the Bishopric of Lincoln, on purpose that he might be removed from the University, where he taught the Orthodox Faith (1); for, adds he, the English are much inclined to Pelagianism and Socinianism: And, on this Occasion, he mentions a Book, De Unione & Communione cum Christo, the Author of which is named Sherlock.

(1) Jac. Alting. Oper. Tom. 5. pag. 391.

[B] He was very zealous against Popery, as he demonstrated by his Writings.] When there was so much Discourse about Titus Oates, and the horrible Conspiracy, which he discovered, This Bishop published a Book, wherein he maintained, against all Evasions, that it is an Article of the Roman Faith, that the Pope may depose Sovereigns, and give their Dominions to others. This was a very good way to shew, that he designed to do the Papists some Prejudice; for, of all the Means likely to stir up the Zeal of the Nation against them, there is none can do it more effectually, than to shew, that they are always ready, from a Principle of Conscience, to take up Arms against Protestant Princes. The Book, which Barlow published on That Subject, was immediately translated into French, and published under this Title: An Historical Treatise on the Subject of Excommunicating and Deposing of Kings: at Paris, by Claude Barbin, 1681 (2).

[C] He has been confounded with Wiliam Barlow.] The two Authors, who have added some Supplements to the Treatise of John Deckherrus, De Scriptis Adespotis, are fallen into this Error. Deckherrus had said, that the Jesuit, who wrote, in English, against King James, concerning the Apology for the Oath of Allegiance, was refuted by Mr Baclo, Bishop of Lincoln. One of his Friends (3) informed him, by Letter, that This Prelate's Name was not Baclo, but Thomas Barlow; "Is si placet est Thomas Barlovius magni apud Anglos nominis, & de nostratibus optime meritus. Optandum foret videre aliquando ἀνέκδοτα ipsius, quorum magnam in instructissima sua Bibliotheca copiam habet, & nuperrime uno & altero opusculo præsertim contra Curiam Romanam magnum litteratis desiderium excitavit. Historia ejus de conspiratione contra Jacobum Angliæ Regem, vulgo The Gun-powder Treason, non ita pridem publicum vidit. ----- His Name is Thomas Barlow, who is very famous in his own Nation, and deserves very well of ours. It were to be wished he would present the World with his Manuscript Pieces, which are very numerous, and, by a late Taste or two of which, chiefly against

(2) I need not advertise, that the Place of the Edition is fictitious.

(3) Paulus Vindingius. See the Book de Scriptis Adespotis, pag. 355. Edit. 1686.

Digitized by Google

" againſt the Court of Rome, he has greatly excited " the Curioſity of the Learned. His Hiſtory of the " Conſpiracy againſt James King of England, common- " ly called The Gun powder Plot, has been lately " publiſhed." The Letter, from which I have taken theſe Words, was written, at Strasburg, in 1681. It is plain therefore, that Mr Deckherrus's Friend imagined, that the Biſhop of Lincoln, who had wrote, for King James, againſt a Jeſuit, was yet living. Now this is a great Miſtake. It was in the Year 1609, that King James made uſe of the Pen of Dr Barlow, Biſhop of Lincoln, againſt Robert Parſons, an Engliſh Jeſuit. If That Doctor had been yet living, in the Year 1681, his Age muſt have been a Circumſtance very extraordinary, and thoſe would have been inexcuſable, who ſhould have mentioned his Learning, and his Books, without taking notice of his great Age. It will be to no purpoſe to uſe any Evaſions, or urge, that ſome learned Men live an hundred Years; ſince it is very well known, that the Name of the Biſhop of Lincoln, who wrote for King James, was William, and not Thomas. I do not know whether an hundred Years would have been ſufficient for Thomas Barlow to be living in 1681, and to have been a Biſhop in the Year 1609; for it is very rare to be a Biſhop, in England, before the Age of Thirty five or forty Years. The Author of the Nouvelles de la Republique de Lettres, who took a ſmall Review of Mr Deckherrus's, and Mr Vindingius's Faults, did not only overlook this, but, which is worſe, adopted it (4).

(4) See de Scriptis Adeſpotis, pag. 372.

BARNES (ROBERT) (a), Profeſſor of Divinity, and Chaplain to Henry VIII [A], King of England, was ſent, by his Maſter, into Germany, in the Year 1535 [B]. He conferred forthwith with the Proteſtant Divines, on the Subject of the Divorce: He had afterwards ſome Audiences of the Elector of Saxony, and joined with the Engliſh Embaſſadors, who propoſed to that Elector an Alliance againſt the Pope, and who deſired, that Henry VIII might be aſſociated in the League of Smalcald. They gave hopes of a Reformation in England; but, at the bottom, their only aim was to obtain an approbation of their Maſter's Divorce, and a Politic Alliance to give the Emperour more Trouble, who threatened to revenge the Injury done to his divorced Aunt. They carried back an Opinion of the Divines of Wittemberg, which was not altogether favourable for them [C]; but they ſuppreſſed the Concluſion, when they preſented it to the King. That part which

(a) See Remark [A].

[A] He was Profeſſor of Divinity, and Chaplain to King Henry VIII.] He was mentioned by theſe Titles, in the Credential Letters, which the King, his Maſter, gave him, in order to his Negotiation in Saxony; and thoſe Letters are dated from Windſor, the eighth of July, 1535 (1). His Chriſtian Name does not appear, in thoſe Letters, before That of Barnes. In Germany he gave himſelf the Name of Antony Amarius, though his true Name was Robert Barnes. When he dedicated his Lives of the Popes to the King of England, in the Year 1535, he ſigned R. Barnes, Doctor (2). It appears, in a Preface of Luther (3), that Barnes concealed his Name, and his Title of Doctor, in Wittemberg, for fear of the Perſecutors. Melanchthon calls him D. Antonius Doctor, or D. Antonius, in a Letter, which he wrote to the King of England, the thirteenth of March, 1535 (4).

(1) See Seckendorf, Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm, lib. 3. pag. 110. in the Addition.

(2) Id. in Supplementis ad Indicem l. n. 10.

(3) That which he prefixed to the Relation of the Martyrdom of Barnes, inſerted in the ſeventh Volume of his Works. See Seckendorf, lib. 3. pag. 262.

(4) It is the 26th of the 1ſt Book.

[B] He was ſent, by his Maſter, into Germany, in the Year 1533.] The Preface, which I have quoted, informs me, that Barnes reſided at Wittemberg, about the Year 1530, and that he did even lodge in the Houſe of Luther. " Quis ante annos decem hoc de- " cus in Barneſio quæſiviſſet, & quod Chriſtus ipſe " in eo nobiſcum verſatus eſſet? domeſticum enim " & commenſalem habuimus (5). —— Who, ten " Years ago, would have expected this Honour from " Barnes, and, that Chriſt himſelf, in him, ſhould " make his Abode with me? For he both lodged and " boarded with me." Barnes might have lived in Germany 'till the Year 1535, and might have received Credential Letters there, from Henry VIII, to negotiate with the Elector of Saxony. Upon This Suppoſition, the Author of the Hiſtory of the Reformation of England might very well ſay, " That, at " laſt, while the Biſhop of Hereford was at Smalcald, " that is, in the Year 1536, Barnes was ſent, by " That Miniſter, into England, where he was very " well received by Henry, and entertained by Crom- " well (6)." I ſay, upon This Suppoſition, this Account would be exact; for all that Mr de Seckendorf alledges againſt it, is, that Barnes came from England into Germany, in the Year 1535, with a Commiſſion from Henry VIII (7). He was therefore returned into England, before the Biſhop of Hereford ſent him thither, and therefore the Meſſage he was ſent on, by That Prelate, ought not to be taken for his Return Home. But can it be proved, that the Cedential Letters were not ſent to Barnes into Germany, and that he himſelf was ſent into That Country? Yes, it may: Seckendorf proves it from the Records, which have furniſhed him with many good Pieces: " Venerat Wittenbergam (Reg. x. fol. 99. " n. 42.) verno hujus anni 1535 tempore, Doctor " EX BRITANNIA ab Henrico Rege MISSUS (8). — " There came, to Wittemberg, in the Spring of the " Year 1535, a Doctor from England, ſent by Hen- " ry VIII." Melanchthon confirms the ſame thing in Greek; for he made uſe of That Language to inform his good Friend Camerarius, that there was an Envoy from England, who ſpoke of nothing but of the King's ſecond Marriage, and who ſaid, that Henry VIII cared but little for the Affairs of Religion. Ἦλθε δὲ πρὸς ἡμᾶς ξένος τις πεμφθεὶς ἐκ τῆς Βρεταvίας, μόνον διαλεγόμενος περὶ τοῦ δευτέρου γάμου τοῦ Βασιλέως, τῶν δὲ τῆς ἐκκλησίας πραγμάτων ὀ μέλει, ὥς φησι, τῷ Βασιλεῖ (9). But, though we are not allowed to make the Suppoſition before mentioned, yet we may nevertheleſs hold Dr Burnet's Account to be true. That Hiſtorian ſays only, that the Biſhop of Hereford ſent Barnes into England: he does not deny, that Barnes was returned thither before.

(5) Luther apud Seckendorf, lib. 3. pag. 262.

(6) Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reformation, Book 3. pag. 689.

(7) Seckend. lib. 3. pag. 262.

(8) Id. ibid.

(9) Melanchthon, Letter 172, of the 4th Book, dated the 11th of March 1535.

[C] He, and his Colleagues - - - - - carried back an Opinion of the Divines of Wittemberg, which was not favourable for them] Dr Burnet gives the Particulars of it very exactly; " Their firſt Sentiment " of this Matter, ſays he (10), was, that the Ordi- " nances of the Levitical Law were not moral. - - - - " Afterwards they altered their Opinion, when the " Queſtion had been a little more agitated; but they " never agreed, that a Marriage, already conſummat- " ted, could be diſanulled, and they confirmed them- " ſelves more and more in this laſt Opinion, ſo that " they condemned the King's two Marriages." He mentions this under the Year 1530. Not that he was ignorant, that This Opinion was given in 1536; but he did it, without doubt, to ſhew his Reader, all at once, the different Opinions of the Divines on the Divorce of Henry VIII. Mr Seckendorf thought ſo: for when he remarks, that the Opinion of the Divines of Wittemberg is to be found in the Hiſtory of the Reformation of the Church of England, in the Collection of Records, and Original Papers, among thoſe belonging to the Year 1530, he adds this Parentheſis (forte per occaſionem). " Annus & " dies reſponſo huic non eſt adſcriptus, & Burne- " tus illud inter acta anni 1530 (forte per occaſionem) " retulit. Lib. II. fol. 94 (11). - - - - - This Opi- " nion is without Date, and Burnet has related it " (perhaps occaſionally) among the Tranſactions of the " Year 1530. Book II. pag. 94." The Biſhop of Meaux did not know, that the Decree of Wittemberg was of the Year 1536. He ſpeaks only of Melanchthon's Opinion, as to That Year, and does not criticize Dr Burnet, for having placed the Anſwer of the Divines of Wittemberg, in the Year 1530 (12). Mr Seckendorf obſerves, that the Copy of That Anſwer, which he read in the Archives of Weimar, is

(10) Burnet's Hiſt. of the Reform. Book 2. pag. 220. ad Ann. 1530.

(11) Seckendorf. lib. 3. pag. 112.

(12) See the Hiſtory of the Variations, lib. 7. n. 58.

Digitized by Google

which must have been disagreeable to that Prince, was in the Conclusion (b). The Conduct of Barnes pleased the King of England very well; for which reason he was employed to cultivate a Correspondence with the Princes of Germany. He was sent several times to those Courts; and, among other Negotiations, he was the first who was employed in the Treaty of Marriage with Anne of Cleves [D]. He was a good Lutheran, and made no Secret of it in his Sermons; for, in the Lent Season of the Year 1540, he confuted the Sermon, which Bishop Gardiner had preached against the Doctrine of Luther. He took Gardiner's own Text, and taught a quite contrary Doctrine to what that Prelate had established concerning Justification: he even attacked that Bishop personally, after an indecent manner, and jested on the Name of Gardiner. Gardiner's Friends complained to the King about it, who ordered, that Barnes should give him Satisfaction for it; that he should sign certain Articles, and make a Recantation in the Pulpit. All this was performed, but in such a manner, that Complaints were made, that in one part of his Sermon he had the Subtilty to maintain what he had retracted in the other. Upon these Complaints the King ordered him to be sent to the Tower, from whence he never returned but to suffer Death in the midst of Flames [E]; for the Parliament condemned him as an Heretic, without giving him leave to make his Defence. A little before his Death, he declared his Belief, rejected Justification by Works, the Invocation of Saints, &c. and desired that the King would go about a good Reformation (c). The freedom of his Tongue had brought him into many Troubles a long time before. In Wolsey's Prosperity, he preached so strongly at Cambridge against the Luxury of the Prelates, that every body might easily guess he designed it against That Cardinal. This occasioned his been sent for to London, where he came off - - - - - by the Sollicitations of Gardiner and Fox, by means of abjuring some Articles proposed to him. "Afterwards he was imprisoned again on new Accusations, and then every one "believed he would be burnt. But he made his Escape, and retired into Germany, is longer than That, which is to be found among Dr Burnet's Original Pieces. Here is the Passage, which was suppressed by the Embassadors of Henry VIII. "Etsi "consentiamus cum Dominis legatis servandam esse "legem de uxore fratris non ducenda, mansit tamen "inter nos controversum quod legati statuunt dispen- "sationi locum non esse, nos vero putamus esse illi "locum. Neque enim strictius obligare nos lex po- "test quam Judæos: si autem lex dispensationem "admisit, vinculum matrimonii utique fortius est "quam lex illa altera de uxore fratris. —— Although "we agree with their Excellencies the Embassadors, "that the Law, which prohibits the marrying a Bro- "ther's Wife, is to be observed, yet we differ in this, "that they hold this Law cannot be dispensed with, "and we think it may. For we cannot be under a "stricter Obligation to the Law, than the Jews "were; and, if the Law admits of a Dispensation, "the Tie of Matrimony is more binding than that "other Law concerning the Brother's Wife." Mr Seckendorf conjectures, that the Embassadors suppressed That Passage, that their Master might still entertain Hopes, that the Divines of Wittemberg would at last approve his second Marriage.

(b) Seckendorf Hist. Lutheranismi, lib. 3. pag. 110. & seq.

(c) Taken from the History of the Reformation of England, wrote by Dr Burnet, Bishop of Salisbury, lib. 3. pag. 689. & seq.

WHETHER the Divines of Wittemberg reasoned consistently.

This Thought is very reasonable: and, in general, those Divines might very justly suppose, that there are Acts, which ought not to have been executed, and which yet, being once executed, ought to be maintained. But, I confess, I cannot well apprehend how the beginning and end of their Opinion can be reconciled. They own, on the one side, that the Ordinances of the Levitical Law are Divine, Natural, and Moral; that no Law can be made in Opposition to them; and, that the Church has always judged, that a Man's Marriage with his Brother's Widow is incestuous. "Hoc manifestum est, & negare "nemo potest, quod lex tradita Levit. xviii. 20. "prohibet ducere fratris uxorem, &c. sed divina, "naturalis, & moralis lex est intelligenda tam de vivi "quam de mortui fratris uxore, & quod contra hanc "legem nulla contraria lex fieri aut constitui pos- "sit (13):" and, on the other side, they maintain, that This Levitical Law may be dispensed with: Legati statuunt dispensationi locum non esse, nos vero putamus esse illi locum. If it may be dispensed with, Henry VIII ought to have believed, that he was lawfully married to Catherine of Aragon. But, if it is Indispensable, Divine, Natural, and Moral, and such, in a Word, as will admit of no contrary Authority; lastly, if the Church has always adjudged, that a Marriage, not conformable to This Law, is incestuous, then Henry VIII ought to have looked upon his Cohabition with Catherine of Aragon as no other than Incest, and therefore immediately he ought to have abstained from it, and the Divines of Wittemberg ought to have made no Doubt, whether they should approve, or disapprove, his Divorce. The Maxim, That there are things, which ought not to have been done, which, when once they are done, ought not to be undone, could have no place here, since the Question was about the Continuation of an Incest. Those, who love Scandal, and want an Opportunity to recriminate, would not easily agree with the Observation of Dr Burnet, "That if, in the Conduct "of the Saxon Divines, there does not appear the "Cunning, the Policy, and the Dissimulation, of the "Court of Rome, yet there appears in it, at least, "the Candour, the Sincerity, and good Conscience, "of the Apostolic Times (14)." For my own Part, I had rather suppose, that they did not reason consistently, than that they designed to have the Pleasure of reflecting on the Pope's Dispensation, and at the same time the Policy of carrying it fair to Charles V, and the Interests of his Cousin the Princess Mary: but an Adversary, who loves to give things a malicious Turn, might, by way of Reprisal, pass a severe Judgment on the Conduct of those Divines (15).

(13) Apud Seckendorf, pag. 112. Burnet's Hist. Reform. in Collection of Records, Part i. l. 2. n. 35.

(14) Burnet, Hist. of the Reformation, lib. 2. pag. 229.

(15) See the Bishop of Meaux's Hist. of the Variat. l. 7. n. 57.

[D] He was employed in the Treaty of the Marriage with Anne of Cleves.] This was a Misfortune to Barnes; "Because the King being not well pleased "with that Marriage, spared neither the Author nor "the Instruments of it." This is what the Bishop of Salisbury assures us (16). Luther has touched on another Circumstance; he says, That the true Cause of the King's hatred for Robert Barnes, was the Liberty, wherewith that Doctor dissuaded him from repudiating Anne of Cleves (17). Mr Seckendorf pretends, that Dr Burnet observes the same thing (18): I question it much; for I have not met with it in his Reformation of England.

(16) History of the Reformation, lib. 3. pag. 689. ad Ann. 1540.

(17) In Præfat. Relation. Martyrii Barnesii apud Seckendorf. l. 3. p. 262. n. 25.

(18) Ibid.

[E] He was sent to the Tower, from whence he never returned, but to suffer Death in the midst of Flames.] The Relation of his Martyrdom was sent from England into Germany. Mr Seckendorf found it in the Archives of Weimar, translated into the German Language (19). Luther published it (20), and added a Preface to it, wherein, among other things, he praises Barnes's Modesty. "He was not "ignorant, says he, of the Failings of Henry VIII, "nor did he dissemble them among his Friends; "but every where else he spoke of that Prince in "very respectful and honourable terms (21)."

(19) Ibid. n. 24.

(20) It is inserted in Vol. VII. of his Works, Edit. of Altorf, f. 422. id. ibid.

(21) Ibid. n. 25.

[F] There

Digitized by Google

" many, where he applied himſelf wholly" to the Study of the Bible, and of Divinity. He made ſo great a progreſs in it, that he became very conſiderable both among their Doctors, and Princes. When the King of Denmark ſent Embaſſadors into England, he ordered, that Barnes ſhould accompany them (d), or rather that he ſhould be one of them (e). The Biſhop of Saliſbury, whom I quote in the Margin, might eaſily be juſtified in a Point, for which he is criticized (f). There are at leaſt two Books publiſhed by Barnes [F].

(d) Id. ib. pag. 683.

(e) Fox mentions this laſt Opinion, which ſeems doubtful to Dr Burnet, ibid. p. 689.

(f) See Remark [B].

[F] There are at leaſt two Books publiſhed by Barnes.] The one contains the Articles of his Belief; the other is the Hiſtory of the Popes. The firſt was printed in Latin with a Preface of Pomeranus, at whoſe Houſe Barnes lodged at that time. It was printed in the German Language, at Nuremberg, in the Year 1531. It contains ninteen Theſes according to Luther's Principles, and ſeveral Proofs taken from the Scripture, and the Fathers. The other Book was printed at Wittemberg in the Year 1536, with a Preface of Luther: It contains the Lives of the Popes from St Peter to Alexander III, and is dedicated to the King of England: The Author wrote the Epiſtle Dedicatory the tenth of September 1535. He treats the Popes very ill; and promiſes to continue their Hiſtory down to his own Time (22). Mr Seckendorf is of opinion, that this Book deſerves a ſecond Edition (23), and has inſerted the Preface of it in his Indexes, becauſe, ſays he, it is very difficult to be met with, and may be reckoned for loſt. Quia Liber ipſe rariſſimè invenitur, & pro deperdito haberi poteſt (24). It is certain, however, that a new Edition of it was publiſhed at Leyden in the Year 1615, which contains alſo the Lives of the Popes, written by John Bale, and which is not yet very ſcarce.

(22) Ex Scholiis ſive Supplementis Seckendorfii ad Indicem I.

(23) Recudi meretur. ib.

(24) Id. in Indice III, ad Ann. 1536.

BARNES (JOHN), in Latin Barneſius, an Engliſh Benedictin Monk, was one of thoſe Roman Catholics, who, following the Examples of Eraſmus, Caſſander, Wicelius, Modrevius, Father Paul, and many others, made all their life-time Profeſſion of the Catholic Religion, though they obſerved a great many abuſes in it, which they heartily wiſhed to ſee reformed. He wrote a Book againſt Mental Reſervations, which was not at all pleaſing to the Jeſuits [A], though he dedicated it to Pope Urban VIII. His Catholico-Romanus pacificus is full of ſuch things as cannot be reliſhed by thoſe, who are called good Papiſts [B]. Doubtleſs he deſired to bring the two Churches as near one another as ever he could. The Court of Rome was very much diſpleaſed with him for it. This poor Man, of unexceptionable Morals (a), being at Paris, was apprehended [C], and ſtript of the Habit of his Order, to be carried into Flanders bound on Horſeback. He was afterwards ſent to Rome, where he remained in the Priſon of the Inquiſition, till he was removed into That of Lunatics (b). In this latter Station he ended his Days, being moſt certainly worthy of a better fate. He was a profeſſed Monk of the Convent of the Benedictins of Douay, and had been Superior there (c); but, being not able to agree with the Monks of his Order, he retired into France, and did not obey the Summons of the Benedictins, requiring (a) See Remark [B].

(b) See the French Mercury, Vol. XIV. pag. 336.

(c) Ibid. Vol. XII. pag. 752.

[A] He wrote a Book againſt Mental Reſervations, which was not at all pleaſing to the Jeſuits.] It was printed at Paris in the Year 1625, under the Title of Diſſertatio contra Æquivocationes: it was printed in French the ſame Year, and in the ſame place, under the Title of, Traité & Diſpute contre les Equivoques. The Approbation of the Faculty of Divinity ſays, that John Barnes was Doctor of Arts, of Sacred Theology, and Profeſſor of the Engliſh Miſſion, and firſt Aſſiſtant for the Congregation of Spain, and is dated the thirteenth of July 1624. The Author's Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated from Paris the thirteenth of January 1625. So that Father Theophilus Raynaud is miſtaken, when he ſays, that Barnes was carried to Rome, and impriſoned under the Pontificate of Paul V. I ſhall relate his own Words; for they inform us of ſomething concerning This poor Benedictin. " Joannes Barneſius Jeſuitis admodum infenſus, ob nonnullas ſuſpiciones de compertâ illis vitâ ſuâ, eo loco fuit apud Paulum V, ut eum tanquam novæ fidei fabrum per Albertum Auſtriacum è Gallia abductum, & è Belgio Romam avectum judicaverit carcere dignum; donec emoto cerebro inter fatuos pone S. Pauli minoris ædem ſacram fatuari deſiit cum aliorum periculo (1). —— John Barnes, a great Enemy to the Jeſuits, from ſome Suſpicions he had of their having diſcovered his Manner of Life, was ſeized in France as a Heretic, by Albert of Auſtria, and carried through Flanders to Rome, where he was condemned by Paul V, to be impriſoned; till, becoming diſtracted, he was removed to the Hoſpital of Lunatics behind the Church of St Paul the Minor, where he ceaſed to do miſchief by his Madneſs." This Paſſage was quoted by Edward Brown, in the Eight hundred twenty ſixth Page of his Appendix to the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum, printed at London 1690. See the following Remark. We read in the French Mercury (2), That this honeſt Benedictin believed, that the Jeſuits hated him mortally, after the Printing of his Book of Equivocations; that Doctor Gamaches (who was accounted one of the moſt able Divines of his Time) refuſed to give his Approbation of it, when requeſted of him; and that he wrote that Book whilſt he was Confeſſor in the Convent of Chelles (3).

(1) Theophil. Rayn. in Theologia antiqua de veri Martyrii adæquate ſumpti notione. This Book was printed at Lyons in 1656, under the Name of Leodegarius Quintinus. The Paſſage which I quote out of it, is pag. 174 of his Apopompæus.

(2) In Vol. XII, p. 752.

[B] His Catholico-Romanus pacificus is full of ſuch Things as no good Papiſt can reliſh.] It was printed at London in 1690, in the Appendix of the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum. The Author of the Appendix informs us, that he had ſeen three Manuſcripts of This Work of Barnes; and he quotes theſe words of John Baſier, Profeſſor of Divinity. " Bonus ille Irenæus (4) tametſi vitæ inculpatæ & famæ integræ fuit, mediâ Lutetiâ correptus, ſuo habitu exutus, & quadrupedis inſtar barbarum in modum alligatus ad equum, & ita vehementiſſimè avectus primo in Flandriam, deinde Romam, ibi in Inquiſitionis barathrum, deinde in maniacorum ergaſtulum erat detruſus (5). —— This good Irenæus, though of an unblameable Life, and unſpotted Reputation, was arreſted in the middle of Paris, ſtript of his Habit, and tied upon a Horſe, more like a Beaſt than a Man, in a very barbarous Manner, and ſo carried away by violence, firſt into Flanders, and then to Rome, where he was thrown into the Dungeon of the Inquiſition, and afterwards into the Receptacle of Lunatics."

(3) Mercure Franç. Tom. XII, p. 751.

(4) That is, the Benedictin Barnes.

(5) Brown, in Append. Faſciculi Rerum expetend. He quotes John Baſier, Diatriba de antiquæ Eccleſiæ Britannicæ libertate, Brugis impreſſ. 1556.

[C] He was apprehended at Paris.] They would have ſent him away the ſame Day he was taken, if the Captain of the Watch had been as impatient, as the Father Procurator of the Benedictins of Douay was. But this impatient Perſon was forced to acquieſce till next Day, and then Father Barnes was carried in a Coach to Vilette, where two Benedictins waited to go along with him, and with the Guards, who were ordered to carry him to Cambray. He was bound on a Horſe, and delivered to the Governour of Cambray, who ſent him to the Caſtle of Waerden (6). Father Theophilus Raynaud was in the wrong to ſpeak of Orders from Albert of Auſtria; for

(6) French Mercury, Vol. XII. pag. 753.

Digitized by Google

quiring him to return to Douay, or to retire into ſome other of their Monaſteries. He lodged at Paris near the College of Navarre, afterwards in the College of Burgundy, and laſtly in the Houſe of the Prince of Portugal, where the Captain of the Watch arreſted him the fifth of December 1626. He was writing an Anſwer to the Book intituled, Apoſtolatus Benedictinorum in Anglia, wherein he would have inſerted his particular Opinions about the Diſcipline of the Church (d). Father Theophilus Raynaud, concealing himſelf under a fictitious name, wrote againſt his Treatiſe of Equivocations [D].

(d) Ibid.

Perhaps it will be entertaining to the Reader, to find here the reaſon, why Barnes was an Enemy to the Jeſuits [E]: I mean the reaſon, which they have publiſhed.

for That Archduke was dead a long time before Barnes was apprehended. I have quoted This Jeſuit's Words in the firſt Remark.

[D] Father Theophilus Raynaud, concealing himſelf under a falſe Name, wrote againſt his Treatiſe of Equivocations.] I ſpeak of the Book entitled, Splendor veritatis moralis, ſeu de licito uſu Æquivocationis, pro Leonardo Leſſio, adverſus Joannem Barneſium Anglum Monachum. It was printed at Lyons, in 1627, in 8vo: The Author takes the Name of Stephanus Emonerius. I have a ſtronger proof of it, than That, which Placcius formed out of two Paſſages of Father Alegambus (7), in one of which it is ſaid, that Theophilus Raynaud compoſed, ſub nomine alieno, the Treatiſe, of which I have juſt now given the Title (8); and in the other, that he concealed himſelf under the Name of S. Emonerius (9). This is my Proof. Father Abram ſays, in his Treatiſe de Mendacio (10), that Theophilus Raynaud acknowledged the Book of Emonerius, entituled Splendor veritatis moralis, for one of his Works, and that he may eaſily be diſcovered in it. Miror te hunc pro Theophili partu agnoſcere, —— I wonder you ſhould take this for one of Theophilus's Productions: thus ſays one of Father Abram's Interlocutors; the other anſwers; "Quid ni vero agnoſcam cùm illum in ſuis "Moralibus ſuum eſſe fateatur (11)? Quem ſi abdi- "caret, nullo tamen negotio patrem vel ex ipſa "filii facie cæteriſque corporis lineamentis agnoſcere "poſſemus, Sic oculos, ſic ille manus, ſic ora ferebat.

"Why not, when he owns it himſelf in his Moral "Works? And if he ſhould diſown it, it were eaſy "to find him out to be the Father, from the Reſem- "blance it bears to him in every part of it,

The Eye, the Hand, the Face exactly like.

Here is a Paſſage of Theophilus Raynaud, which ſhews, that he acknowledged the Confutation of Barnes to be his Work, and that this Benedictine was yet living in the Year 1650. "Dixi ego ſane in præfatione "operis de Æquivocatione, adverſus Cætani ger- "manum, bipedum omnium effrontiſſimum, Joan- "nem Barneſium Anglum, qui vicenario carcere, in "quem curante ſummo Pontifice recluſus eſt, nec- "dum deterſit multiplicis adverſus Deum, & Reli- "gionem Catholicum, ac S. Benedicti familiam, "malignitatis rubiginem ---- Societatem Jeſu, &c. "(12). —— I have ſaid, in my Preface to that "Work on Equivocation, againſt Cætan's own Bro- "ther, the moſt hardened Wretch living, who, by "twenty Years Impriſonment under the Juriſdiction "of his Holineſs, has not worn off the leaſt Particle "of the Canker of his abundant Virulency againſt "God, the Catholic Church, and the Family of St "Benedict ----- that the Jeſuits, &c."

(7) Placcius de Pſeudonymis, pag. 189.

(8) Alegam. Biblioth. Soc. Jeſ. p. 432.

(9) Id. pag. 452.

(10) Printed with his Pharus Vet. Teſtamenti, at Paris in 1648, folio.

(11) He does the ſame thing in his Syntagma de Libris propriis. See the following R mark.

(12) Theop. Raynaud. Hoplot. h. §. 2. ſerm. 7. c. 12 p. 256. Edit. Lugd. 1650.

[E] This is the Reaſon, why he was an Enemy to the Jeſuits.] On his Return from Spain into the Netherlands, he aſſiſted at one of their public Diſputations, wherein the Reſpondent propoſed his Quodlibetal Theſis thus: An Joannes, in Hiſpania infamis, poſſit hic in Belgio abſque peccato infamari. That is to ſay, Can John, being infamous in Spain, be innocently defamed in the Netherlands? Such Caſes of Conſcience have been examined by Soto, Molina, and ſeveral other Writers; but in a general manner, though with the Addition of ſome particular Circumſtances. Thoſe Generalities were not kept to in the Diſputation, at which John Barnes aſſiſted; for the Queſtion was reduced to ſuch preciſe Terms, by denoting in a particular Manner the time, and place, that he believed they meant him perſonally, and he would never be perſuaded to the contrary, though they made very humble Proteſtations to him, that they had no ſuch deſign. He reſolved to revenge himſelf, and make choice of the Subject of Equivocations. Theophilus Raynaud relates this, when he mentions the Anſwer, which he wrote againſt that Book of Barnes. "Ad ſingularia locorum ac tem- "porum adjuncta, illis in oris perſamiliaria, difficultas "reſtricta eſt. ---- Clara locorum deſignatione peti- "tum ſe ratus Barneſius, bellum indixit inconcilia- "bile Societatis Jeſu Doctoribus; nec ſe ullis un- "quam vel conteſtationibus, vel mollibus ac propè "ſupplicibus verbis, flecti paſſus eſt, ut nihil minus "quam de eo notando cogitatum eſſe, in eo Theſium "programmate ac proloquio, perſuaderetur (13). "—— The Difficulty was urged with particular Cir- "cumſtances of Time or Place, according to the Cu- "ſtom of their Diſputations. —— Barnes, thinking "himſelf pointed at by the Place, which was named, "declared perpetual War againſt the Jeſuit Doctors; "nor could he ever be prevailed upon by any Eviden- "ces, or the moſt candid and even humble Declara- "tions, to believe, that there was not the leaſt Thought "of aiming at him in the Diſcuſſion of that Theſis." He does not forget to ſay, that Barnes was condemned to perpetual Impriſonment; and that, having loſt his Senſes, he was removed to the Hoſpital of Lunatics; "Barneſium, ob periculoſas novitates, —— "carceri eſſe mancipatum, poſtea autem emota "mente, in fatuorum ergaſtulo Tranſtiberino, (vulgo "gli Pazzarelli) concluſus eſt; ubi anno 1643. "erat ſuperſtes (14). —— Barnes, for his pernicious "Innovations, —— was thrown into Priſon, and "afterwards, running diſtracted, was removed to the "Madhouſe on the other ſide the Tyber, (commonly "called gli Pazzarelli*), where he was living in the* "Year 1643."

(13) Theophil. Raynaud. in Syntagm. de libris propriis, p. 22, col. 2. Apopompæi.

(14) Id. ib. pag. 23, col. 1.

BARON (PETER), Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Cambridge in the XVIth Century, was a Frenchman born (a). He excited ſome troubles in that Univerſity, by certain Doctrines, which he delivered there, in the Year 1590. It was pretended, that his Opinions came very near thoſe of the Pelagians. Whitaker, Tindal, Chadderton, Perkins, &c. oppoſed them in their Sermons, Lectures, and Books; but, at firſt, they ſpared their Adverſary's Name, becauſe of his great Age. Perceiving afterwards, that he continued to dogmatize, and that he maintained an heterodox Hypotheſis in his Summa trium de Prædeſtinatione Sententiarum; Whitaker formally declared himſelf his Antagoniſt, and refuted his Summa. The Matter was brought before Queen Elizabeth, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. A Convocation of Prelates, and Doctors of Divinity, met at Lambeth: Whitaker was ſummoned to appear there, who maintained the common Opinion with ſo much Strength, that it became glorioufly triumphant. That of Baron was condemned, and nine Articles (b) were drawn up, the twentieth of November 1595, which (a) He gave himſelf the Sirname of Stemparus, which, I believe, is as much as to ſay d'Etampes.

(b) A loco, Lambethani dicti ſunt. Alting. Theolog. Hiſt. p. 305, 306.

Digitized by Google

which were received in the Univerſity by Public Authority. Baron was diſmiſſed, and returned into France: which reſtored Peace to that Univerſity (c). Some think, that he was uſed too ſeverely [A]. We ſhall ſee the Titles of ſome Works of this Profeſſor [B].

(c) Alting. ibid.

[A] Some think, that he was uſed too ſeverely.] The Extracts of a Book of Thomas Fuller, which Mr Des Maizeaux has been ſo kind as to ſend me, ſhall be my Commentary on this place. That Book is an Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Cambridge, and is to be met with at the end of The Church Hiſtory of Great Britain, from the Birth of Chriſt till the Year 1648.

(1) Margaret Counteſs of Richmond, Mother of Henry VII, built ſome Colleges at Cambridge, and founded two Profeſſorſhips of Divinity, one at Oxford, and another at Cambridge. Thoſe who enjoy theſe Profeſſorſhips, and the Salary annexed to them, are called Margaret Profeſſors.

" A Conteſt happened between Mr Chadderton, " (afterwards Maſter of Emanuel College,) and Dr " Baro, Margaret Profeſſor (1), about ſome hetero- " dox Opinions, vented by the ſame Baro, both in " his Readings and Print, (viz. in his Commentary " on Jonah, and Book de Fide).

" Whereupon the Doctor procured Mr Chadder- " ton to be called into the Conſiſtory, in the Pre- " ſence of the Vice-Chancellor, Dr Hauford, Dr Har- " vey, and Dr Legge, where he utterly denied, that " he had ever preached againſt the Doctor, but he " propounded theſe Queſtions as erroneous and falſe.

1. Primus Dei amor non eſt in natura fidei Juſtifi- cantis. —— The principal Love of God is not in the Nature of juſtifying Faith.

2. Fides Juſtificans non præcipitur in Decalogo.—— Juſtifying Faith is not commanded in the Decalogue.

" Many Papers, in Latin, paſſed between them, " and at laſt they were conceived to come nearer to- " gether.

" The end of Peter Baro's triennial Lectures began " to draw near: now, although Cuſtom had made " ſuch Courteſy almoſt a Due, to continue the ſame " Profeſſor, where no urgent Reaſons to the con- " trary were alledged, yet the Univerſity intended not " to re-elect him for the Place, meaning fairly to cut " him off juſt at the Time, (which would be the leſs " Pain and Shame unto him,) when his Years ſhould " be expired (2). He himſelf was ſenſible of it, " and, beſides, he ſaw the Articles of Lambeth, lately " ſent to the Univerſity, and foreſaw, that Subſcrip- " tion thereto would be expected from, yea impoſed " on, him, to which he could not condeſcend, there- " fore reſolved to quit his Place. So that this his " Departure was not his free Act, out of voluntary " Election, but That whereunto his Will was neceſ- " ſarily determined; witneſs his own reply to a Friend, " requiring of him the Cauſe of his withdrawing: " Fugio, ſaith he, ne Fugarer. —— I fly for fear I " ſhould be driven away.

" Some conceive this to be hard Meaſure, which " was uſed to one of Dr Baro's Qualifications: for, I. " He was a Foreigner, a Frenchman, Turpius ejicitur " quam non admittitur hoſpes. II. A great Scholar; for " he that denieth Learning in Baro, (ſo witneſſed in " his Works,) plainly affirmeth no Scholarſhip in " himſelf. III. An inoffenſive Man for Life and " Converſation; ſeeing nothing of Viciouſneſs could " be charged upon him, which otherwiſe, in his " Conteſt with Mr Chadderton, had been urged a- " gainſt him. Laſtly, an aged Men, coming hither " many Years ſince, (when the Profeſſor's Place as " much needed him as he it,) and who had painful- " ly ſpent his Strength in the Employment. Others " alledged, that, in ſuch Caſes of Conſcience, there " is no Plea for Courteſy, and that Baro, as he was " a Stranger, had brought in Doctrines to the infect- " ing the Univerſity, the Fountain of Learning and " Religion, and therefore Archbiſhop Whitegift de- " ſigned the removing him from his Place (3).

(2) Fuller's Hiſt. of the Univerſity of Cambridge, ad Ann. 1596.

(3) Id. ibid. p. 145, & ſeq. Edit. of Lond. 1655.

This is, Sir, (they are Mr Des Maizeaux's Words) what Fuller ſays; and I chuſe to tranſlate him literally, though not ſo well, rather than run the hazard of deviating from his Senſe. He takes notice, that all the Engliſh wrote Baro conſtantly, or Baroe, and that, in Original Writings, the Doctor ſigned Baro; from whence it might be concluded, that I ſhould have called him Baro, and not Baron, unleſs it be ſaid, that he latinized his Name, when he ſigned Baro, and that the Engliſh called him according to the Latin Termination. That which is certain, is, that the Name of Baron is much more uſed in France, than that of Baro, which is not altogether unknown neither, witneſs the Continuator of Aſtrea (4).

(4) See the Hiſtory of the French Academy, pag. 321.

[B] Here are the Titles of ſome of Baron's Works.] Prælectiones 39, in Jonam, printed at London, in 1579. Summa trium Sententiarum de Prædeſtinatione. De Præſtantia & Dignitate divinæ Legis.

BARON (Vincent), in Latin Baronius, a Monk of the Order of St Dominic, was much eſteemed in the XVIIth Century, for ſeveral Books, which he publiſhed. He had the Famous Theophilus Raynaud for his Antagoniſt, and I do not know whether the Deſire of encountring ſo famous a Champion, might not make him take, for that Jeſuit's Work, what was really not ſo. He ſometimes has acknowledged himſelf miſtaken in his Conjectures on that Head. The Works of Father Baron, which are come to my knowledge, are, a Book, on Juſtification, againſt the Doctrine of the Calviniſts; a Moral Theology, divided into three Parts [A], and an Apology for his Order [B]. In his Moral Theology, he has treated on the principal Matters in diſpute between the Dominicans and the Jeſuits. He was a famous Preacher.

Here

[A] He compoſed a Moral Theology, divided into three Parts.] The firſt is deſigned againſt the Doctrine of Probability, adverſus Laxiores Probabiliſtas (1). He therein confutes Caramuel, who had wrote four Letters againſt the Diſſertation, which Fagnano, Dean of the Prelates of Rome, had inſerted in his Commentaries on the Canon-Law. Fagnano maintains ſtrongly, that an Opinion, which is thought leſs probable, ought never to be preferred before that, which is thought more probable. Caramuel confuted him, and was confuted by our Vincent Baron. Father Theophilus Raynaud was refuted by the ſame Work, in relation to an Opinion of Suarez, condemned by Clement VIII. Suarez had maintained, that Confeſſion might be made by Letters: Father Theophilus contrived ſome Expedients to defend his Brother againſt the Pope's Cenſure, and Father Baron wrote againſt thoſe Expedients. He, at the ſame time, fell upon the Janſeniſts, ſince he maintained, againſt Wendrokius, " That ſometimes, though very " rarely, there happen Caſes, wherein there may be " an invincible Ignorance, as well of the Law of Na- " ture, as of a poſitive Law (2)." In the ſecond Part, he attacks Amadæus Guimenius, and is not ſatisfied with maintaining, that the looſe Opinions, which are imputed to the Dominicans, are not their true Sentiments; he ſhews alſo, what Judgment ought to be paſſed on thoſe Opinions. He acknowledges, in his Preface, the wrong Notion he had entertained in compoſing his Work: He thought, that Amadæus Guimenius was but a fictitious Name, which Father Theophilus had given himſelf (3). In the third Part he treats of Liberty, and of the Media Scientia; and he maintains, that the Fore-knowledge of God has no other Foundation, than his Decrees; and that this Fore-knowledge is ſo far from deſtroying Man's Liberty, that, on the contrary, it eſtabliſhes it (4). This muſt not be taken for a Paradox; for whoſoever ſhould ſay otherwiſe, would not follow the Definition of Liberty, which ought to be given in the Syſtem of Phyſical Predetermination: It is by virtue of the different Ideas of Liberty, that the Diſpute may be ſpun out, and the Reader ſo deluded, as not to be able to judge of the ill Succeſs of his Cauſe.

(1) Journal des Sçavans, March 8, 1666. pag. 194.

(2) Ibid. pag. 198.

(3) Ibid. Apr. 12. 1666, p. 36.

(4) Ibid. June 21, 1666, pag. 257.

[B] —— and an Apology for his Order.] It is a Latin Work, like the foregoing: It is an Anſwer to the

Digitized by Google

Here is a Memoir, which came into my hands since the first Edition of this Work (a). " Father Vincent Baron was born at Martres, in the Dioceſs of " Ricux in Gaſcony. He entred into the Order of Dominican Friars at Toulouſe " in the Year 1622. He taught Divinity for ſeveral Years, with applauſe, in " the Convent of the ſame City, and was Prior there, as he was likewiſe at " Avignon, and in the General Novitiate of the Suburb of St Germain at Paris. " He was Definitor for his Province, in the General Chapter held in the Year " 1656. Where he preſided at the Theſes dedicated to Pope Alexander VII, which " gained him the eſteem of all the City, and of the whole Order. He was in " the Aſſembly, when the Pope ſent to tell the Definitors, and the Fathers of " the Chapter, that he was under the greateſt Concern to ſee ſo deplorable a " looſneſs in Chriſtian Morality, which had been introduced into it by certain " new Caſuiſts, exhorting them to compoſe another Syſtem, agreeable to the " Doctrine of St Thomas. This engaged Father Baron to undertake thoſe Pieces " he compoſed on that Subject. He was again elected Provincial, and after- " wards the Father General ſent him Commiſſary into Portugal, on Affairs of " Importance, wherein he was ſo ſucceſsful, that the Queen, the Court, and all " the Monks, gave teſtimony of his Merit by a public Act. He returned to " Paris to the General Novitiate, and died there the Twenty firſt of January 1674, " being ſeventy Years old. Beſides ſeveral Latin Poems, which he left as a " ſample of his capacity in Literature, he publiſhed the Books, which I ſhall " mention below [C]." You will find a very honourable Paſſage concerning him in the Hiſtorical Apology for the Cenſures of Louvain and Douay (b). The Congregation of the Index was not favourable to him [D].

(a) By the means of Mr Pinſſon des Riollets.

(b) Publiſhed in 1688, by Mr Gery, Bachelor of Divinity: this Paſſage is at p. 243.

the cruel Invective of Father Theophilus Raynaud, entituled, De immunitate Cyriacorum à Cenſuris, and to him, who pretended to ſhew, that it is well if the tenth Part of all the Works, which are aſcribed to Thomas Aquinas, be really his. Father Baron enters the Liſt alſo, with Mr de Launoi, who maintained, that many Paſſages of the Fathers, cited in a Treatiſe of Thomas Aquinas, againſt the Greeks, are forged. This Dominican was not contented to write an Apology for his Order, he made alſo their Panegyric (5).

(c) Journal des Sçavans, March 7. 1667. p. 92.

[C] He publiſhed the Books, which I ſhall mention below.] What I am going to tranſcribe is contained Word for Word in the Memoir, from which I have taken the Addition to this Article. Theologia Moralis, Paris, 1665, two Volumes in 8vo. Primus Tomus ejuſdem correctus, Editio ſecunda 1667, in 8vo. Libri Apologetici contra Theophilum Rainaudum, Paris, 1666, two Volumes in 8vo. Mens ſancti Auguſtini & Thomæ de Gratia & Libertate, 1666, in 8vo. Ethica Chriſtiana, Paris, 1666, two Volumes in 8vo. Reſponſio ad Librum Cardenæ, Paris, in 8vo. Hereſy Convicted, Paris, 1668, in 12mo. Panegyrics on the Saints, Paris, 1660, in 4to. The Book entituled Ethices Chriſtianæ ſeptemdecim loci, compoſed againſt one Matthew Moya, who had taken the Name of Amadæus, was cenſured at Rome, by the Intrigues of Cardinal Nitard, who was offended at it; and Capiſucchi, the Maſter of the ſacred Palace, who had approved of it, was turned out, and Father Hyacinthus Libelli, ſince Archbiſhop of Avignon, was put in his Room. Capiſucchi was afterwards re-inſtated, and, ſince that, made a Cardinal. I do not find, in this Liſt of the Works of Father Baron, the Exercitatio, which Mr de Launoi refutes with ſurprizing Sharpneſs, in one of his Letters, the fourteenth of his fifth Part. See the Remark [P], of the Article of (JOHN de) LAUNOI, at the beginning.

Two or three Months after I had received this Memoir, the following Account was ſent me. " Apologia pro ſacra congregatione Indicis ejuſque Secre- " tario & Dominicanis, contra Petri à Valle clauſa " Libellum famoſum inſcriptum, de Immunitate Authorum Cyriacorum à Cenſura; Romæ, typis —— " M.DC.LXII, in 4°. Advertat lector præter innu- " mera errata ex prælo paſſim ſenſum & ſtylum au- " ctorum mutantia, addita nonnulla neceſſaria ſermo- " ne ſimplici, & multa adjecta convitia: has autem " labes tollet ſecunda editio. —— An Apology for the " ſacred Congregation of the Index, and their Se- " cretary, and for the Dominicans, againſt a Libel of " Petrus à Valle Clauſa, under the Title of The Ex- " emption of Eccleſiaſtical Authors from Cenſure. " Printed at Rome, 1662, in 4to. The Reader is " to take notice, that beſides innumerable Errors of the " Preſs, which every where diſturb the Senſe and " Stile of the Author, there are ſome material Things " added in plain Language, and much Scandal: but " theſe Imperfections will be corrected in a ſecond Edi- " tion. This ſecond Edition was publiſhed at Paris, " by Simon Piget, in the Year 1666, in two Volumes, " divided into five Books. The firſt printed at " Rome, at the Inſtance of Cardinal Capiſucchi, then " Maſter of the ſacred Palace, who approved it, oc- " caſioned the removing of the ſame Capiſucchi from " his Office, by Alexander VII, a great Friend to " the Jeſuits. It was alſo put into the Index, the " Twenty eighth of February, 1664."

[D] The Congregation of the Index was not favourable to him.] Here is an Extract of their Decree, of the Twenty ſeventh of September, 1672. Duo primi Tomi operum Fr. Vincentii Baronii, inſcripti Theologiæ moralis Summa bipartita, prohibentur: tertius vero præfati auctoris ſuſpenditur donec corrigatur: ultimi autem duo Tomi ejuſdem Auctoris, ſcilicet quartus & quintus, quinque libros apologeticos continentes, pariter prohibentur (6). See the End of the preceeding Remark.

(6) See Father Papebroch, Reſponſ. ad exhibit. Errorum, p. 287.

BARONI (LEONORA), an Italian Lady, one of the beſt Singers in the World, flouriſhed in the XVIIth Century. She was Daughter of the Fair Adriana of Mantua, and was ſo admired, that a great many fine Wits made Verſes in her Praiſe. There is a Volume of excellent Pieces, in Latin, Greek, French, Italian, and Spaniſh, printed at Rome, under the Title of Applauſi poëtici alle glorie della Signiora Leonora Baroni [A]. Thoſe, who deſire to know the particular Perfections

[A] There is a Volume of Pieces, in her praiſe, under the Title of Applauſi poëtici alle glorie della Signora Leonora Baroni.] Nicius Erythræus ſpoke of this Work, when he ſaid, " Legi ego, in Theatro " Eleonoræ Baronæ, cantricis eximiæ, in quo omnes " hic Romæ, quotquot ingenio & poëticæ facultatis " laude præſtant, carminibus, tum Etruſce tum La- " tinè ſcriptis, ſingulari ac prope divino mulieris illius " canendi artificio tanquam fauſtos quoſdam clamo- " res & plauſus edunt; legi, inquam, unum Lælii " (Guidiccionis) Epigramma, ita purum, ita elegans, " &c. (1). —— I have read, in the Theatre of Leono- " ra Baroni, the celebrated Singer, wherein all the " Wits and Poets, here at Rome, have, in Italian and

(1) Nic. Erythr. Pinacoth. II, pag. 129.

Digitized by Google

Perfections of her ſinging, may read the Account given by a good Judge, who had heard her ſing [B]. It is from him I have borrowed this Account.

" and Latin Verſes, complimented and applauded her " divine Skill in ſinging; I have read, I ſay, one " Epigram of Lælius Guidiccio, ſo beautiful and ele- " gant, &c."

[B] They may read the Account given by a good Judge, who had heard her ſing.] " She is endowed " with fine Parts; ſhe has a very good Judgment to " diſtinguiſh good from bad Muſic; ſhe underſtands " it perfectly well, and even compoſes; which makes " her abſolutely Miſtreſs of what ſhe ſings, and gives " her the moſt exact Pronounciation and Expreſſion " of the Senſe of her Words. She does not pretend " to Beauty, neither is ſhe diſagreeable, nor a Co- " quet. —— She ſings with a bold and generous " Modeſty, and an agreeable Gravity. Her Voice " reaches a large Compaſs of Notes, and is exact, " loud, and harmonious; ſhe ſoftens and raiſes it " without ſtraining, or making grimaces. Her Rap- " tures and Sighs are not laſcivious; her Looks have " nothing impudent, nor does ſhe tranſgreſs a Vir- " gin Modeſty in her Geſtures. In paſſing from one " Key to another, ſhe ſhews ſometimes the Diviſions " of the enharmonic and chromatic Kind, with ſo " much Art and Sweetneſs, that every body is ra- " viſhed with that fine and difficult Method of ſing- " ing. She has no need of any Perſon to aſſiſt her " with a Theorbo, or a Viol, one of which is neceſ- " ſary to make her ſinging complete; for ſhe plays " perfectly well herſelf on both thoſe Inſtruments. " In ſhort, I have had the good Fortune to hear her " ſing ſeveral times, above thirty different Airs, with " ſecond and third Stanzas, compoſed by herſelf. " I muſt not forget to tell you, that, one Day, ſhe " did me the particular Favour, to ſing with her Mo- " ther and her Siſter: Her Mother played upon the " Lyre, her Siſter upon the Harp, and herſelf upon " the Theorbo. This Conſort, compoſed of three " fine Voices, and of three different Inſtruments, ſo " powerfully tranſported my Senſes, and threw me " into ſuch Raptures, that I forgot my Mortality, and " thought myſelf already among the Angels, enjoy- " ing the Felicity of the Bleſſed."

I have taken this from a Diſcourſe on Italian Muſic, printed with the Life of Malherbe, and ſome other Treatiſes at Paris, in 1672, in 12mo, at the end of which are theſe Words: This Diſcourſe was compoſed by Mr Maugars, Prior of St Peter de Mac, the King's Interpreter of the Engliſh Language, and, beſides, ſo famous a Performer on the Viol, that the King of Spain, and ſeveral other ſovereign Princes of Europe, have wiſhed to hear him.

BARONIUS (DOMINIC), a Florentine Prieſt and Preacher in the XVIth Century, wrote vigorouſly againſt the Church of Rome, and concurred with the Vaudois in Piedmont to maintain Orthodoxy; but, at laſt, he was eſteemed a falſe Brother, becauſe he maintained, that, in time of Perſecution, it was not neceſſary to make outward Profeſſion of the Truth [A]. Celſus Martinengue, Miniſter of the Italian Church of Geneva, wrote againſt him on that Subject, and Replies were made on both ſides. Theſe Books are become very ſcarce, I know not for what reaſon. Our Baronius compoſed a Maſs according to his own Fancy, which he thought likely to reconcile the Differences betwixt the two Religions; but he found himſelf diſappointed; for the Proteſtants rejected his Project (a).

(a) Taken from the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Vaudois, compoſed by Peter Giles, chap. 10, pag. 62, & ſeq. Geneva 1644.

[A] He maintained, that, in Time of Perſecution, it was not neceſſary to make outward Profeſſion of the Truth.] He did not therefore deſerve the Name of Antinicodemite, which Peter Giles gave him; but rather That of Nicodemite. Let us ſee in what manner That Hiſtorian ſpeaks of him. " Dominic Bar- " ronius, ſays he (1), was a Florentine, a Popiſh Prieſt, " and a Preacher of Repute, and who, in leſs dan- " gerous Times, had ſhewn ſome Zeal for the true " Religion, almoſt wholly embracing it, and con- " demning almoſt all the Papal ſuperſtitious Conſti- " tutions, except only ſome few Particulars, which " though he retained, yet he treated them ſo am- " biguouſly, that it could hardly be known what " was his Opinion of them, as appears in ſeveral " Italian and Latin Treatiſes compoſed by him, and " particularly in That of human Conſtitutions, where- " in he ſhews what may be admitted, and what " ought to be rejected. In that Book, among " ſeveral great Errors, which he condemns in the " Popiſh Church, he ſays of the Maſs ——." I do not ſet down the Paſſage, which Peter Giles alledges; but here is what follows that Quotation: " He wrote, in the ſame Stile, concerning the other " Popiſh Superſtitions: But, for all this, he endea- " voured to perſuade, that, in very dangerous Times, " and Places, People might diſſemble outwardly what " they thought of ſuch Errors, and even go to Maſs, " provided they conſtantly retained the Truth in- " wardly, and did not heartily concur in any of " thoſe Errors. He ſaid, that, in ſuch Times, and " Places, the Miniſter of Truth ought to make it " his Buſineſs to ſhew his Diſciples the Tares, and " to teach them how to diſcern them from the good " Grain, and to make them hate the Tares, and " love the Wheat with all their Heart: But, as to " the outward Profeſſion, that he ought to let the " Lord work his Pleaſure, without expoſing himſelf, " and others, to great Dangers. —— Celſus de Mar- " tinengue —— confuted, by a notable, and long, " Treatiſe, all the Reaſons Baronius alledged in " Support of his Opinion; and Replies were made " on both Sides for ſome Time. And Baronius, " thinking himſelf able to reconcile the two Reli- " gions, reformed the Maſs, in order, that, agree- " ably to what he had laid down, People might go " to it with a good Conſcience; and ſung it himſelf, " according to his own Reformation, and acted in " the ſame manner, in ſeveral other Points, thinking, " by that means, to pleaſe every Body, by trim- " ming. But his Proceding was condemned by a " great number of the truly Faithful, not only by " Words and Writings, but alſo by their Actions, " ſince they choſe rather to part with their earthly " Goods, and this temporal Life, than to ſhew any " outward Conſent to Popiſh Idolatry, and erroneous Superſtitions (2)."

(1) Peter Giles's Hiſtory of the Churches of the Vaudois, chap. 10, pag. 62.

(2) Id. ibid. pag. 64. See alſo p. 246.

BARTAS (WILLIAM DE SALUSTE Seigneur du) A French Poet. See SALUSTE.

BARTHIUS (GASPAR), one of the moſt learned Men, and fruitfulleſt Pens, of his Time, was born at Cuſtrin in the Country of Brandenburg, the Twenty ſecond of June 1587 (a). His Family was of an ancient Nobility [A]: His Father, Charles Barth, Profeſſor of the Civil Law at Francfort on the Oder, Counſellor to the Elector of Brandenburg, and his Chancellor at Cuſtrin, died the ſixth of February 1597, at Halberſtad, from whence his Widow withdrew to Hall with her

(a) Hulſemannus in Concione funebri, apud Freher. Theatr. Viror. illuſtr. pag. 1546.

[A] His Family was of an ancient Nobility.] There are but few Gentlemen of Quality, and few great Lords, who can ſhew a more ancient Original than Barthius. One of his Anceſtors ſignalized himſelf her Children; Gaſpar was ſent to Gotha, afterwards to Eiſenach, and, after that, to ſeveral Univerſities of Germany, and Italy (b). He became ſo learned in a little time, that his Childhood was admired by great Men [B], and he compoſed ſeveral Books while he was a beardleſs Boy [C]. He had a wonderful Facility in making Verſes [D]; and alſo publiſhed a great many [E]. He learnt the living ſelf in the War againſt the Vandals in the Retinue of the Emperor Lewis the Debonair, in the Year 856. He was a Bavarian; he commanded the Cavalry, and was killed in That War, as Cyriacus Spangenbergius obſerves (1). The Grandfather of Barthius was one of the chief Gentlemen of Bavaria: he went and ſettled in the Circle of the Upper-Saxony, where he bought ſeveral Eſtates, and, in the Year 1545, he was honoured by the Emperor, and the States of the Empire, with many noble Titles. "Avus idem noſter, ne in his terris minor eſſet "gentilibus ſuis alibi viventibus, à Carolo quinto, Con- "ſilio & Senatus-conſulto omnium Imperii ſtatuum "tum Spiræ præſentium, ex integro Cæſareæ Ma- "jeſtatis & ſacri Imperii auctoritate utriuſque nobilis "& miles Tornearius declaratus eſt, omniaque liberæ "& veræ nobilitatis privilegia accepit, cum ſingulari "integritatis, doctrinæ, & ſtrenuitatis teſtimonio, anno "Chriſtiano M. D. XLV (2). —— That the Rank "of my Grandfather, in this Country, might not be in- "ferior to That his Family held in other Places, he "was knighted, and declared Noble, both by the Em- "peror Charles V, and his Council, and by Decree "of all the States of the Empire, then aſſembled "at Spires, and received all the Privileges of a free "and true Nobility, with a particular Teſtimony of "his Integrity, Learning, and Courage, in the Year "1545." He enjoyed the Office of Chancellor at the Court of Albert of Brandenburgh, Elector of Mentz, Archbiſhop of Magdeburg, and Cardinal. One of his Anceſtors, whoſe Name was Herman, was Grand Maſter of the Teutonic Order, towards the end of the XIIth Century (3). The old Annals make mention of him: Munſter ſpeaks of him in his Coſmography; and the Catalogues of the Grand Maſters of That Order, even thoſe compoſed by Jerom Megiſerus, do not forget him. Others of the ſame Family are to be met with in the Relations of Turnaments, and in the Collections of the Coats of Arms of principal Noble Families of Germany. The Father of Gaſpar Barthius had ſeveral Brothers (4), who all died without Children (5). One of them had been Maſter of the Horſe to ſome great Princes, and did not want Learning (6). Barthius ſays, that he ſhall be the laſt of his Family: Superſtes nunc ego omnibus paterni mei nominis familiam meam univerſam mecum rebus humanis brevi educam (7). You ſee him in the Front of ſeveral of his Works, with the Title of S. R. Imperii Eques. The Thoughts of his Family dying with him was extreamly afflicting, and lay very much at his Heart: He often conſidered this melancholy Subject; which makes me believe, that he was very eaſily comforted on the Death of his Wife. She was barren, and likely, according to his reckoning, to outlive his Virility; for, otherwiſe, he would not have ſpoken in the manner we have ſeen. But, when he leaſt ſuſpected it, his Wife died. He ſoon took another, to ſee whether he could avoid the hard Fate, he had ſo much feared, of being the laſt of his Family. He looked upon himſelf no longer an uſeleſs Load on the Earth; this might be proper to call himſelf, while he deſpaired of having any Offſpring. He had the Happineſs to beget Sons and Daughters by a ſecond Marriage; but he forgot to correct the Places of his Commentary, where he appears to be out of Hopes of leaving a Succeſſor. If he did not care to correct his Manuſcript, he ought, at leaſt, to have added ſomething, at the end of it, concerning his ſecond Marriage being more fruitful than the firſt. If I am asked, How I came to know, that his firſt Wife was not dead, when he complained of being the laſt of his Name? My Anſwer will be, That I infer it from this ſmall Calculation. Barthius's Funeral Oration informs me, that he became a Widower in the Year 1643, and that his Mother died at Hall, the Twenty ſecond of January 1622. Now ſhe had been dead but eighteen Years, when he made his Complaints: "Ego inutile ferè pondus "terræ omnibus mei nominis mortalibus ſuperſtes "ſupervivo integro octodecennio (8). - - - I am almoſt "an uſeleſs Load on the Earth, having outlived all "my Family full eighteen Years, and being the laſt "of my Name." His firſt Wife muſt therefore have been alive at that time.

Digitized by Google

(b) Hulſemannus, ib.

(1) In Annalibus Saxonicis, cap. 100, pag. 138.

(2) Barthius in Statium, Tom. II. pag. 1026.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) Barthius ſays, at pag. 1026, 1027, of his Commentary on Statius, in the ſpace of a few lines, that he had ſix Paternal Uncles, and that his Grandfather left ſix Sons. This is inconſiſtent.

(5) Illiberes omnes—— exceſſerunt. Ibid. pag. 1027.

(6) Ibid. pag. 1025.

(7) Ibid.

BARTHIUS's cauſleſs Fear of dying without Poſterity.

(8) Id. ibid. pag. 826.

[B] His Childhood was admired by great Men.] If I am allowed to extend the Word Childhood a little farther than uſual, my Text will be very true; ſince Scaliger ſet a great Value upon the firſt Productions of Barthius. "Cujus virtutem juvenilem "ac cordatos auſus Joſephus Scaliger ſuſpexit adeo, ut "divinationis inſtar hanc illi de Barthio vocem exci- "diſſe compertum ſit, natum eſſe adhuc unum æter- "nitati ingenium, quod ſi ad maturitatem perveniret, "literas aliquandiu vivere poſſe (9). - - - - - Whoſe "juvenile Capacity, and judicious Performances, Jo- "ſeph Scaliger ſo greatly amired, that, in a ſort of "prophetic Spirit, he declared thus concerning Bar- "thius, that there was now one Genius more born "for Eternity, and, if this ſhould live to Maturity, "Learning might ſurvive ſome time longer." Daumius ſays, that ſome learned Men were not aſhamed to learn of This young Scholar: "Eo adoleſcenti uti do- "ctore non erubuerunt Taubmannus, Siberus, Schmi- "dius. Quæ Gruteri aliorumque apud exteros vi- "rorum de eo tum lata fuerint judicia, domi eorum "literæ aſſervatæ partim, partim lectæ, docent (10). "- - - - - - - - Taubmannus, Siberus, and Schmi- "dius, thought it no Diſgrace to be taught by This "Youth. The Judgment, which Gruterus, and other "Foreigners, paſſed on him, may be ſeen in their "Writings, either publiſhed, or in their own Hands." Another learned Perſon, who had been Barthius's School-fellow, ſpeaks thus of him: "Novi - - - - "ante annos ferè quinquaginta pueri præſtabiles "minas, cum ſub Wilkii p. m. manu eſſemus "συσχολασαὶ: novi ante hos XLIII. annos Wite- "bergæ adoleſcentem florentem gratia apud non- "nullos, θαυμαζόμενον ἄνω κάτω ab æqualibus "(11). - - - - - I knew him - - - - - - almoſt fifty "Years ago, a very promiſing Lad, when we were "Schoolfellows, under Wilkius: I knew him, about "Forty three Years ago, a Youth in great Eſteem a- "mong ſome, and much admired by thoſe of his own "Age."

(9) Spizelius in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 381.

(10) Daumius Epiſt. 14. ad Reinefium.

(11) Reinefius Epiſt. 15. ad Daumium, pag. 46. This Letter is dated Jan. 14. 1651.

[C] He compoſed ſeveral Books, while he was a beardleſs Boy.] Mr Baillet, who has placed him in his Catalogue of Famous Children, will give us the moſt particular Account of him. He informs us, "That, at twelve Years of Age, Barthius turned "the Pſalter of David into all ſorts of Latin Verſes; "and that, in the ſame Year, he publiſhed other "Poems in the ſame Language; and that the Col- "lection of Silvæ, Satires, Elegies, Odes, Epigrams, "and Iambic Verſes, which he cauſed to be printed "at Wittemberg in the Year 1607, comprehends all "the Poetry he compoſed from the thirteenth to the "nineteenth Year of his Age (12)." We have it from himſelf, continues Mr Baillet (13), "That, be- "ing yet but in the ſixteenth Year of his Age, he "wrote a Treatiſe, or Diſſertation, by way of Letter, "on the Manner of reading Latin Authors uſefully, "by beginning with thoſe from Ennius to the end "of the Roman Empire; and continuing them, from "the Expiration of the Latin Tongue, to the Critics "of theſe latter Times, who have reſtored the an- "cient Authors *. It is a Performance, which the "Author ſays coſt him but Twenty four Hours; "but it is ſo cloſe, and ſo full, that it ſhews Bar- "thius muſt, even at that Time, have read a pro- "digious deal; and that this Reading was ſo far from "being indigeſted, or confuſed, that it was accom- "panied with a perfect Judgment, &c." To this may be added, that he was but eighteen Years of Age, when he compoſed a Commentary on the Ceiris of Virgil, which was printed at Amberg, in the Year 1608, and contains much Learning.

(12) Baillet, Famous Children, p. 297, 298.

(13) Ibid. pag. 296.

* It is to be found in the 50th Book of his Adverſaria.

[D] He had a wonderful Facility in making Verſes.] Barthius, having obſerved, that Statius, in ſome Meaſure, congratulated himſelf on having ſpent but two Days about the Epithalamium of Stella, which contains Two hundred ſeventy eight Hexameters, adds, that Statius did not expoſe himſelf to the Cenſure of living Languages, and made it appear, by his Tranſlations out of Spaniſh and French [F], that he was not contented with a ſuperficial Knowledge of them. It is ſurpriſing to find, what a number of Authors he muſt have read, from his Adverſaria, and Commentaries on Statius and Claudian. Moſt Critics are ſatisfied with reading Prophane Authors; but this was not enough for him; he acquired alſo a great Knowledge of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, eſpecially thoſe, who lived in the middle Ages. His conſtant application to Books obliged him to relinquiſh all manner of Buſineſs, and to lead a retired life at Leipſic (c). He reſolved early to diſengage himſelf intirely from the World, and the Study of Prophane Authors, in order to apply himſelf only to the great Affair of Salvation [G]. He put this deſign in execution in the latter Years of his Life; and it appears, by his Soliloquia, publiſhed in 1654, that his Thoughts were deeply engaged on Eternity [H]. He died the ſeventeenth of September 1658, a little above Seventy one Years of Age (d). The Manuſcript Works he left behind him [I], thoſe which were printed

(c) Spizelius, in Templo Honoris referato, pag. 383.

(d) Witte, Diarium, Biogr.

of Horace (14), ſince he did not make Two hundred Verſes in an Hour, as That Poet did, whom Horace ridiculed (15). "I find a great Hyperbole, con- "tinues he, in That Criticiſm, though I am not "ignorant what it is to make a great many Verſes "in a little time; for, in three Days time, I tranſlated "into Latin the three firſt Books of the Iliad, "which Tranſlation contained a little above Two "thouſand Verſes."

[E] And alſo publiſhed a great many.] For, beſides thoſe mentioned in the Remark [C], he publiſhed a Poem at Francfort, in 1623, entituled Zodiacus vitæ Chriſtianæ; Satyricon, pleraque omnia veræ Sapientiæ myſteria ſingulari ſuavitate enarrans. It is divided into twelve Books. In the ſame Year, and Place, he publiſhed Epidorpidum ex mero ſcazonte libri III. in quibus bona pars humanæ ſapientiæ metro explicatur. His Epigrams, divided into thirty Books, and dedicated to King James, appeared under the Name of Tarræus Hebius (16). The four Books Amabilium Anacreonte decantati, were printed in the Year 1612. He wrote a Paraphraſe on Æſop's Fables in Verſe, a Tranſlation of Muſæus alſo in Verſe, and a Poem on Leander (17). I do not believe his Tranſlation of Quintus Smyrnæus, in Verſe, was ever publiſhed. He ſpeaks of it in the Five hundred eighty fourth Page of the third Volume of his Statius.

[F] He compoſed Tranſlations out of Spaniſh and French.] I do not know, that he tranſlated any thing out of the latter Language, beſides the Memoirs of Philip de Comines, which he put into Latin. He had much more Inclination for the Caſtilian Tongue, as he has ſhewn in ſeveral Places; and Don Nicolas Antonio was not ignorant of the Praiſes, which he beſtowed on the Spaniſh Books (18). I know but two Spaniſh Books, tranſlated into Latin by Barthius; one is the Celeſtina, the Author whereof was unknown to him; the other is the Continuation of the Diana of Montemajor. Here is the Title, which he gave to the Tranſlation of the Celeſtina. Pornoboſcodidaſcalus Latinus. De lenonum, lenarum, conciliatricum, ſervitiorum, dolis, veneficiis, machinis pluſquam diabolicis; de miſeriis juvenum incautorum qui florem ætatis amoribus inconceſſis addicunt, de miſerabili ſingulorum periculo & omnium interitu, at Franckfort 1624. He added ſome Notes to his Tranſlation. The Spaniſh Author of That Work, or of That Tragi-Comedy, was Rodericus Cota. The Continuation of the Diana of Montemajor, tranſlated by Barthius, is the Work of Gaſpar Gil-polo. Barthius's Tranſlation was printed, at Hanaw, in 1625, under the Title of Erotodidaſcalus, ſeu Nemoralium libri V. Mr Baillet ſays (19), That he alſo tranſlated the Pornodidaſcale of Aretin into Latin. Without doubt, it is the ſame Book, which Daumius ſpeaks of in theſe Terms: "Reliqua "quæ - - - - - - Barthius publicavit ex indiculo Col- "loquio P. Aretini de las Damas ex Hiſpanico ab "iplo tranſlato, & à nobis recuſo nuper, adjecto cog- "noſcere poteris (20). - - - - The reſt - - - - which "Barthius publiſhed from Aretin's inſtructive Dialogue, "On Ladies of Pleaſure, tranſlated by him out of "Spaniſh, and reviſed by us, will appear from the Work "itſelf here ſubjoined." You may conclude from hence, that This Latin Tranſlation of Aretin, was not made from the Original, but from a Spaniſh Tranſlation.

[G] He reſolved early to diſengage himſelf intirely from the World, - - - - - to apply himſelf only to his Salvation.] Having ſaid, that his Mother had ſome Fore-ſight of her Death, three Years before ſhe died, and that he ſurvived That good Mother eighteen Years, in perfect Health, except a Weakneſs in his Sight (21), he adds; "Cupio autem cœptis ſcribendi "laboribus demum aliquando defungi, & totum me "Chriſto dedicare, quam rem ſæpius jam orſum ha- "ctenus infinita bellorum & bellicorum tumultuum "exactionumque impedimenta hactenus ſuſpenderunt. "- - - - - My Deſire is to quit, at laſt, all farther "Thoughts of writing, and dedicate myſelf intirely "to Chriſt, which I have already very often attempt- "ted, but have hitherto been prevented by the In- "terruption of Wars, and Tumults of Wars, and "other Hardſhips." To know at what Time he ſpoke thus, one need only remember, that his Mother died in the Year 1622. See the end of the Remark [A].

[H] His Thoughts were deeply employed on Eternity.] Here is the Teſtimony, which Theophilus Spizelius has given of him: "Sacrum nimirum ad Deum "ſinceramque pietatem Barthius meditabatur acceſ- "ſum, plurimis piè literatorum ac Deo ſacratorum "hominum exemplis incitatus. Quo de imprimis "teſtatur inſigne SOLILOQUIORUM OPUS, ex- "tremis vitæ temporibus à Barthio publicatum, fla- "grantiſſimis ad Deum ſuſpiriis oppido plenum, & "vel Auguſtino ſcriptore dignum, quod etiam hemi- "plecticus quotidiè revolvere, & per priorum me- "ditationum veſtigia denuò cogitationes ſuas cœlo "immittere, conſuevit; quinimò divinum amorem, "quem intimis fibris ſemel imbibiſſet, continuis "precum ejaculationibus alendum jugiter atque ro- "borandum putavit, quouſque è ſacræ pariter ac li- "terariæ ſolitudinis diverſorio, anno ævi noſtri octa- "vo & quinquageſimo, ætatis vero ſeptuageſimo pri- "mo emigravit (22). - - - - - Barthius was ſtudying "to make his Approaches to God, and true Piety, "being incouraged to it by the Examples of many of "the piouſly Learned, who had devoted themſelves to "God. This his admirable Piece of Soliloquies par- "ticularly demonſtrates, being publiſhed by him in "his latter Years, and abounding with the moſt fer- "vent Ejaculations to God, worthy of St Auguſtin "himſelf, and which Barthius, though lame of one "Side with the Palſy, uſed every Day to turn over, "and by purſuing the Thread of his former Medita- "tions, to ſend his Thoughts again to Heaven. He "made it his Buſineſs to nouriſh and ſtrengthen in- "ceſſantly that divine Love he had eſtabliſhed in his "Heart, by the continual Exerciſe of Prayer, 'till he "departed from this ſacred and learned Retreat in "the Fifty eighth Year of our Century, and the Se- "venty firſt of his Age."

[I] The Manuſcript Works he left behind him.] Daumius has informed the Public, that there were found, among this Author's Papers, the ſecond and third Volumes of his Adverſaria (23); ſome Notes, and Gloſſaries on the Writers of Paleſtine, publiſhed by James Bongars: Benedictus Paulinus Petrocorius de Vitâ S. Martini, & Paullinus Pellæus cum Tertulliani Jona, Juretique & Barthii animadverſionibus; XXI Books of Epigrams: XII Books of Anacreontics: The Zodiac of the Chriſtian Life, corrected and enlarged in ſeveral Places: ſeveral other Poems, moſt of which had never been printed, and the reſt had been corrected: Gloſſaries on Valerius Maximus, and on the Epiſtles of Pliny the Younger. Daumius declares, that, if the Cruelty of the Times, entirely prejudiced againſt Literature, will permit it, and if, by the Liberality of ſome Mecenas, any Benefit may accrue by it

(14) Nam fuit hoc vitioſus: in hora ſæpe ducentos, Ut magnum, verſus dictabat, ſtans pede in uno. He, turning on his Heel, wents, in one Hour, Two hundred Verſes, good ones to be ſure. Hor. Sat. 4. l. 1.

(15) Barthius, in Stat. Tom. I. pag. 7.

(16) Spizelius in Templo Honoris, pag. 382.

(17) Id. ib. p. 386, 387.

(18) See the Bibliotheque of the Spaniſh Writers, Vol. I. pag. 403, 413, Vol. II. pag. 211.

(19) Judgment of the Learned, Tom. I. pag. 542.

(20) Daumius in the Preface to Barthius's Commentary on Statius, dated March 15, 1664.

(21) Barth. Commentar. in Statium, Tom. II pag. 820.

(22) Spizel. Templo Honor. p. 384, 385.

(23) Daumius, in Præf. Comment. Barthii in Statium.

Digitized by Google

printed [K], thoſe which were burnt together with his Houſe [L], and thoſe which he is known to have wrote, but are loſt no body can tell how [M]: I ſay all theſe Works make ſuch a prodigious bulk, that it is ſcarce poſſible to conceive they could be performed by one Man. I do not know whether any, who have lived to turn grey in the duſt of a Regiſtry Office, ever wrote ſo much as this Author has done. There is a Story publiſhed, which had better have been ſuppreſſed, concerning a Tour, it is pretended, he made into Holland with a fair Lady [N]. Some learned Men have complained of the printing of That Story, it to his Heirs, all thoſe Works may one Day be printed. Si diritas permittat temporum politioribus heu Muſis prorſus infenſorum, fruſtuſque ſi aliquis Mæcenatum benignitate ad relictos τῦ μακαρίτε hæredes ſit redundaturus (24). I have not heard, that any of thoſe Manuſcrips have ever ſtirred out of his Heirs Hands, except the Paulinus Petrocorius de Vita S. Martini, which Daumius took Care to get printed in the Year 1681. The Bookſellers will not catch at that Bait as they did formerly, when Barthius touched their Honour, by declaring, in a Preface, that he had a very great Number of Books, which waited only for the Courteſy of the Bookſellers, to appear in public (25); and that they ſhould be printed, as ſoon as he could meet with an induſtrious Bookſeller to undertake it (26). This produced a very ſpeedy Effect, as to ſome of his Works, and a ſlower one as to others; but, nevertheleſs, moſt of theſe Books were printed, when that Preface was mentioned in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle. Let us ſee in what Terms it was done; the Paſſage deſerves to be ſet down; it contains a Criticiſm ſomewhat ſatirical, but grounded on Reaſon. "There is a Preface before it, mentioning "the Titles of ſome Books, which the Author promiſed to beſtow on the Public, but few of which "have been printed (27), becauſe he found no Book-"ſellers, as he himſelf obſerves (28), who had the "ſame Zeal, as himſelf, for the Advancement of Literature. But, if all his Works were like this, it "it may be pronounced, that we have loſt little "more than a great many Quotations of no great "Uſe. Not but that there might be ſome good "Things in them, as well as in this: But they are, "as it were, hid under ſo great a Number of Paſ-"ſages of the Ancients, that it requires a great "deal of Patience to find them out (29)."

[K] Thoſe which were printed.] I will only here take notice of the chief of them: A great Volume in Folio, entituled Adverſaria, divided into ſixty Books. Quibus ex univerſa antiquitatis ſerie omnis generis loci tam Gentilium quam Chriſtianorum ſcriptorum illuſtrantur & emendantur, cum rituum, morum, legum, formularumque obſervatione & elucidatione, cum undecim indicibus, VII auctorum, IV rerum. At Frankfort, 1624. The Author has ſhown in it a ſurprizing Degree of Memory, Reading, and Learning; it is pity we cannot ſay as much of his Clearneſs, and Judgment. He left two other Volumes of Adverſaria of as large a Size, without reckoning his having reviſed and corrected the firſt. De quo Adverſariorum Tomo ſecundo aut tertio, uterque enim jam peractus eſt, primo etiam recenſito in iis & amotis nebulis quas illi inducere livor voluit (30). The whole contains an Hundred and eighty Books. Let us proceed to ſome other Titles. Galli confeſſoris Chriſtianæ doctrinæ compendium, ſeu ſermo Conſtantiæ habitus; C. Barthius recenſuit & Animadverſionum librum adjecit; Francfort, 1623, in 8vo, Phœbadius contra Arianos cum animadverſionibus. Guil. Britonis libri Philippidos cum notis. Claudiani Ecdicii Mamerti de Statu Animæ, libri III. cum Animadverſionibus; Cygneæ, 1655, in 8vo. Æneæ Gazæi Dialogus de Immortalitate Animarum, cum Zacharia Mitylenæo Philoſopho Chriſtiano, Græcè & Latinè, Leipſic, 1655, in 4to. Barthius publiſhed a new Tranſlation of Æneas Gazæus, and made uſe of That of John Tarinus, as to Zachary, both which Works he adorned with Notes. Soliloquia rerum Divinarum; Cygneæ, 1654, in 4to. A large Volume of Notes on Claudian, printed in the Year 1650, in 4to. And three large Volumes upon Statius, printed in 1664, in 4to. He was not well pleaſed with That Edition of Claudian, becauſe the Printer had not made uſe of a good Corrector (31). It is pity that there is no Table of Matters, nor, in general, any Index. His Commentaries on Statius are very free from that Fault.

[L] Thoſe, which were burnt, together with his Houſe.] It was a Country-houſe, which was burnt by the Careleſneſs of the Farmer, or ſome ſuch other Perſon, who inhabited it. "Cum villa noſtra urbana "non bello, non latronum manu, ſed perfidi incolæ "temeritate conflagravit (32). - - - - - - - When my "Country-houſe was burnt down, not by the Misfor-"tune of War, or the Violence of Robbers, but by the "Audacioufneſs of the treacherous Inhabitant." It is, without doubt, That which Daumius calls Incendium Sellerhuſanum, which happened in the Year 1636. "Etiam nonnulla flammis, ſays he (33), incendio "Sellerhuſano, anno M.DC.XXXVI. abſumta periere. "- - - - - - Some alſo periſhed in the Flames, in the "Fire of Sellerhuſe, in 1636." By this Misfortune, Barthius loſt his Index Appulejanus (34), all that he had wrote on Tertullian (35), his Index on Thucydides, &c. "In quo ſcriptore (Thucydide) per bellicos hos "triennales motus & exceſſiones ingens damnum ac-"cepimus, indicem enim tam in auctorem quam Scho-"liaſten (qui recentior tamen eſt quam vulgo attendi-"tur) confeceramus, is cum parte Bibliothecæ periit "(36). Flammæ - - - - - - - ingens ſcrinium manu "mea ſcriptis chartis effertum, ſimul abſtulerunt: & "ſic perierunt mihi multa juvenilia & puerilia ſcripta "(37). - - - - - - In which Writer (Thucydides) by the "Diſturbances and Removes, which War has occaſioned "for three Years together, I have met with great "Loſs; for I had made an Index, both to the Author "and his Scholiaſt, (who is much more modern, than "he is generally eſteemed,) this periſhed with part of "my Library. The Flames - - - deſtroyed a great Desk "full of my Manuſcript Works all together; and ſo "went many of my childiſh and youthful Productions." He ſays, that his Library had been already twice plundered, when the Fire made that new Havock. Adeſſe Bibliothecæ non poſſumus miris modis duabus vaſtationibus depopulatæ, & uno incendio vix dimidiatim ereptæ (38).

[M] Thoſe, which were loſt, no body can tell how.] Daumius ſays, that, after the Author's Death, they looked in vain for his Commentary on St Auguſtin. De Civitate Dei, his Book De Superſtitionibus Veterum, his Treatiſe De dubiis Scriptoribus, his Characters, and ſeveral other Writings of that Nature. Barthius quotes very often the Books I have juſt now mentioned, and gives an advantageous Idea of them. It is very likely, conſidering the Nature of their Subjects, that they were none of the worſt of his Works. He had begun a great many others, to which he referred his Readers, as if they had been already printed. See the Index Autorum of his Statius, at the Word Barthius.

[N] There is a Story publiſhed, concerning a Tour, it is pretended, he made into Holland, with a fair Lady.] Mr Colomies mentions it on the Authority of Iſaac Voſſius. He was very much to blame to print ſuch Stories, which he had only met with in Converſation. Every body knows, that they, who like to entertain a Company pleaſantly, are furniſhed with a great many little Stories, to which they add ſuch Circumſtances as they think proper, to make them more ſingular and diverting. They would not take this Liberty, if they knew, that what they ſay would be printed. However it be, the Story runs thus: "Mr Voſſius - - - - - told me one Day, that Barthius, "being come from Germany to Harlem, to ſee Scrive-"rius, he brought a very fine Lady along with him; "and that Scriverius had no ſooner ſeen her, but "he found the means to make Barthius drunk, that "he might entertain the Lady with more Liberty; "which ſucceeded according to his Deſire. Never-"theleſs, he could not do it ſo well, but that Bar-"thius, being recovered from his Drink, had ſome "Suſpicion of what had paſt; which increaſed in ſuch "a manner, that he carried the Lady back again in a great

(24) Id ib.

(25) Sequentur deinceps, uti quidem Typographorum comitas erit. Barth. Præf. in Rutilii Itinerar. it is dated Oſtob. 14, 1622.

(26) Expectant Editionem, ſi ſollertem Typographum nacti fuerimus. Id. ib.

(27) It is certain that the beſt part of them is printed.

(28) He does not obſerve this in that Preface.

(29) Bibl. Univerſelle, Tom. V, p. 210, in the Extract of Rutilius's Itinerary.

(30) Barthius in Statium, Tom. I. pag. 110. See alſo the Preface of Daumius.

(31) Id. ib. pag. 434.

(32) Id. ib. Tom. III. p. 1308. He had ſaid, in the ninth Page of the firſt Tome, Flammæ non ab hoſte ſed domeſtico ſcelere meæ tum manſioni injectæ. - - - - My Houſe was ſet on fire, not by hoſtile, but domeſtic, Wickedneſs.

(33) Daum. Præfat. in Statium.

(34) Barth. in Statium, Tom. I, pag. 9, & paſſim. alibi.

(35) Ibid. &c. p. 1338. of the third Volume, where he ſays, Notæ noſtræ in integrum fere Tertullianum - - - - - Our Notes upon almoſt all Tertullian.

(36) Ibid. Tom. II, p. 305.

(37) Ibid. Tom. I, pag. 9.

(38) Ibid. Tom. II, p. 372.

Digitized by Google

Story, and pronounced it a Fable [O]. Barthius had two Wives (e). He married the first in the Year 1630, and the second in the Year 1644. The first died in the Year 1643, without bringing him any Children. The second bore him a Son and three Daughters, and survived him (f). He happened to be four times in besieged Towns, and came off without any other loss, than only once of his Cloaths and Arms (g). He complained of having been ill used by Vossius [P]. He took Scaliger's Part very warmly against Scioppius [Q], but was no Friend to the Learned Reinesius. The latter had discovered too many of his Faults, not to make him angry [R]. It was impossible that an Author, who wrote so many things, and with so much Precipitation, could escape the judicious Censure of Reinesius. It has been pretended, that it was not always for want of Memory, that

(e) Hallemannus, in Græc. Fun. Barthii.

(f) Id. ibid.

(g) Qui intra obsidendam obsessamque urbem aliquando fuerit. Id quod nobis quater contigit, nuspiam læsis, nisi spoliatione unâ vestimentorum, & armorum direptione. Barth. in Statium, Tom. II. pag. 1041.

" a great Rage, and suffered her to be drowned in " the Rhine (39)." It must not be denied, that Barthius had a bad Reputation, as to his Morals. One of his best Friends confesses it; but he maintains, that this was ill-grounded. " De moribus quæ in- " vidi nugati sunt quorumque causa ego ignotum meo " malo abhorrebam, rem aliter quindecennali hac cum " eo conversatione comperi. Adeo quicquid de eo " dixerunt scripseruntque ego hactenus prorsus credere " abnui, cujus intima nescio an æque alii patuerint " (40). - - - - - - - - - As to the Vices, which have been " maliciously objected to him, and on account of which " I had an ill Opinion of him before I knew him, to " my own Disadvantage, I have found, by fifteen Years " Conversation with him, that he is intirely clear " of them. So that I have hitherto absolutely contra- " dicted all the Stories, which have been told, or " wrote, about him, and I believe no body knows " him so intimately as I do."

(39) Colomesii Opusc. pag. 102, Edit. Ultraject. 1669.

(40) Daumius, Epist. 14. ad Reinesium, pag. 37.

[O] Some learned Men have complained of the printing of that Story, and pronounced it a Fable.] See here what Morhofius has said of it; " Quibus (Colomesii " opusculis) adjicitur libellus Gallico sermone, cui ti- " tulus A Collection of Particulars, in quibus multa de " eruditis familiariter à Vossio aliisque suppeditata, " laudato semper autore, vir ille effutivit, quæ insig- " nis sane temeritas fuit. Multa tamen in his sunt " mendacia, quale illud de Casparo Barthio horren- " dum, qui concubinam suam Rheno suffocaverit, " quod ejus cum Scriverio amores deprehenderit (41). " - - - - - - To which (Colomesius's Works) is added " a small Piece in French, entituled, A Collection " of Particulars, wherein, with the highest Indiscre- " tion, he blabbed out several Stories, familiarly told " by Vossius, and others, of learned Men, always re- " membering to name his Author. Among these are " a great many Lies, such as that horrid one about " Gasper Barthius's drowning his Mistress in the " Rhine, on account of an Intrigue he had discovered " between her and Scriverius."

(41) Morhof. Poly hist. pag. 71.

[P] He complained of being ill used by Vossius.] Few Persons had cause to make the like Complaint; for never was so learned a Man, as Vossius, more complaisant or modest to those he censured. However, let us see Barthius's Complaint at length. " Quo loco vir doctiss. (42) " pulcrè etiam de Lutatio judicat doctum esse lectu- " que dignum Exegeten, præter quidem glossemata. " Sanè longè melius & compertius, quam nuper Jo- " annes Gerhardus Vossius, qui Lutatium ex Servio " & Higinio compositum dicere ausus est maximam " partem. Qui doctissimus homo cum alio nos loco " perperam (ut clara res est, & demonstratum jam " notis alibi) ineptiarum & absurditatis, nunquam à " nobis læsus, & ab invidis planeque egregiè ineptis " Thrasunculis incitatus, insimulare ausus sit, meritò " utriusque notæ hic habebitur, cum ea Commenta- " riis Lutatianis insint, quorum nec centesimam par- " tem Servianæ & Higinianæ Commentationes vin- " dicare possint. Idem præstantissimus vir incogitate " eodem loco scribit Lutatium à Lindebrogio primum " editum (43). - - - - - - In, which Place That learned " Man also judges favourably of Lutatius, that his " Comment and Glosses are full of Learning, and " worth reading. And, indeed, much more truly and " justly, than John Gerard Vossius, who boldly af- " firmed, that Lutatius had borrowed the greatest part " of his Performance from Servius and Higinius. This " most learned Vossius has also, in another place, with " equal Injustice, (as I have demonstrated elsewhere,) " taken the Liberty to accuse me, who never offended " him, of Impertinence and Absurdity, on the Instiga- " tion of some envious Boasters, who are themselves " remarkably impertinent; by which he has, deserved- " ly, drawn upon himself both those Accusations, since " Servius and Higinius's Commentaries cannot lay " claim to a hundredth part of what is contained in " those of Lutatius. The same excellent Man has also " hastily asserted, in the same Place, that Lutatius " was first published by Lindebrogius."

(42) That is to say, Nicolaus Loensis in chap. 18. of his Miscellanea.

(43) Barth. in Statium, Tom. II. pag. 871.

[Q] He took Scaliger's Part very warmly against Scioppius.] Three Books, wrote against that great Man's Enemy, are ascribed to him; and his Name was found out by way of Anagram, in That of Tarræus Hebeius Nobilis à Sperga. Resoluto Anagrammate Gasperis Barthii Berolinæi confirmat Excellentissimus Geisterus de Mutatione Nominum. Exemplor. dec. 1. n. 5. (44). The first of those three Books is entituled Cave canem, de Vitâ, Moribus, Rebus gestis, Divinitate Gasparis Scioppii Apostatæ Satyricon, Hanov. 1612, in 12mo. The second, Scioppius excellens; in laudem ejus & sociorum pro Josepho Scaligero & omnibus probis Epigrammatum libri III. ex triginta totis hinc inde collecti. It is printed with the first. The third, Amphitheatrum Sapientiæ, Hanov. 1613, in 8vo. See Rhodius in the place which I have quoted, and Placcius, in the 262d Page of his Pseudonymous Writers.

(44) Rhodius de Auct. suppos. n. 54.

[R] Reinesius discovered too many of his Faults not to make him angry.] They were such Faults as an ingenious Man could not have defended; they were Faults which deserved Condemnation, which is so much the more shocking and provoking. " A. Cl. " Barthio quem tu tantum non in cœlum effers, & " quem sua defensurum esse scribis nihil indigni ini- " quive expecto, tam licet ipsi in meis, si quando " lucem adspicient publicam, (lenta autem res est, & " fortasse incumbent in spongiam, ut olim illius Ajax) " quàm in ipsius mihi licere visum est experiri; non " existimo autem Soli oblocuturum esse. Sunt enim " pleraque, quæ nunc quidem produxi, adeo certa li- " quidaque, ut nisi temere litigare velit, ne calamum " quidem contradicturus mihi tingere debeat. Per- " pende, quæso, mi carissime NESTERE, ἄνευ πάθους, " ubicunque ab eo dissentio: maximè verò examina, " quæ cap. 8, lib. 2. quo ejus in Plinium Valerianum, " dictum Empericum, illatæ emendationes producun- " tur, trado & miraberis hominis doctissimi manife- " stissimas insscitias, frustrationes, & puerilia παραρά- " μα]α, audaces etiam conjecturas in autorem non " intellectum invectas deprehendes magno numero. " Istas si quis præfractè tueri præsumserit, eum ne " sani quidem capitis esse dixero; Barthium autem " mecum fore & visurum, me quamvis indigno in- " dice, id quod verum est nullus dubito. —— I ex- " pect no other than a handsome Behaviour from Bar- " thius, whom you cry up so to the Skies, and affirm " to be about publishing a Defence of his Writings. " He may try the Proof of my Works, if ever they see " the Light, (which will require some time first, and, " perhaps, they may come to the Sponge at last, as " his Ajax did) as I have done in Respect to his; " I do not suppose he will rail at the Sun. For a great " many things, I have advanced, are so clear and cer- " tain, that he can never contradict them, except for " the sake of Contradiction. Examine, I beg of you, " my dearest Nesterus, without Prejudice, the places " where I differ from him, but especially cap. 8, lib. 2, " where his Emendations on Pliny Valerianus, called " the Empiric, are considered. I there shew, and you " will be surprized to see, the most manifest Ignorance, " Mistakes, and childish Notions, and bold Conjectures, " and Misunderstandings of the Author, in great Num- " ber. If any one should obstinately presume to defend " these, I shall think him mad; but I do not doubt " but Barthius will agree with me, and see the Truth, " however unworthy I am to shew it." These are the Words of Reinesius, in a Letter which he wrote to Nesterus, that Barthius contradicted himself [S]. It is no wonder his Memory, how ſtrong ſoever it might be, ſhould often deceive him, conſidering his method of compoſing his Books [T]. He made no Collections, and ſcarce ever corrected what he had once written.

Digitized by Google

(45) It is the 6th. Neſterus, the Thirty firſt of March, 1638 (45). See alſo his fifteenth Letter to Daumius.

[S] It has been pretended, that it was not always for want of Memory, that Barthius contradicted himſelf.] " Some have obſerved, that, when he gives " his Judgment, he falls now and then into Contra-
(46) Baillet, Judgm. Tom. III. pag. 484. " dictions, for want of Memory (46)." Daumius pretends, that thoſe, who took notice of that ſort of Contradictions, knew nothing of Barthius's Deſigns. " He wrote, ſays he, all that came into his Mind, " this Day one thing, and to morrow another, on " purpoſe that, when he ſhould look over them again, " ſome time or other, thoſe Contradictions might " engage him to examine things more nicely, and " give him a better Opportunity to correct, or con- " firm, what he had written. Memini in publicis a- " licubi Diſputationibus diverſæ ſententiæ ejus loca " exagitata fuiſſe. Sed auctores ſcopum ſcriptoris neſcio " an vel per tranſennam viderint. Novi enim, hoc " conſilio, eoque fine, Barthium ea, quæ in mentem " ſibi venerant, in chartam conjeciſſe, etiam diverſis " diverſo tempore ſententiis, ut quandoque ad ea re- " vertenti illa diverſitas ampliorem de veritate cogi- " tandi ſuppeditaret materiam, occaſionemque longè " commodiorem retractandi vel ſtabiliendi quod ſcrip- " ſerat. Id quod fine capitis VI Libri undecimi & " alibi ſæpius teſtatur (47)." See how Reineſius has
(47) Daum. Epiſt. 14. ad Reineſium, pag. 37. confuted this Apology (48).

[T] It is no wonder his Memory —— ſhould fail him, conſidering his Method of compoſing his Books.] We muſt hear his own Words. " Puto jam tale quid
(48) Rein. Epiſt. 15. ad Daumium, pag. 45. " ſupra notaſſe. Non enim poteſt, ut, nullis peni- " tus rebus adjuti, omnium ſtrictam memoriam ha- " beamus. Omnino enim aliter nos commentamur, " quam ſolent homines etiam litteratiſſimi, dum au- " ctores legunt, excerpentes quædam atque ea de- " inde excerpta in Silvam Obſervationum, eam porro " Silvam in Commentaria redigentes. Nunquam tale " quid factum à nobis eſt: Sed ut cuique auctori e- " narrando benè facere volumus, arrepto illi Animad- " verſiones hoc genus imputamus, ſolius memoriæ be- " neficio nixi, quam marginalibus nonnunquam prius " Notis inſtruimus, dum cum libris veteribus Edi- " tiones comparamus. Cætera omnia è calamo flu- " unt elegante & minuto literarum ductu. Nec un- " quam ſcriptio repetitur: nec ullis lituris cruciatur: " quarum nec decem aliquas hactenus hi Commenta- " rii agnoverint (49). - - - - - - I think I have before (49) Barth. in Statium, Tom III. pag. 460. " obſerved ſome ſuch thing. For it is impoſſible for " me, who uſe no ſort of Aſſiſtance, to have a perfect " Memory of every thing. For my Method of comment- " ing is quite contrary to that commonly uſed by the " moſt learned Men, who, in reading Authors, take " Notes all along, and then afterwards reduce thoſe " Notes into a Collection, and that Collection into " Commentaries. I have never done any thing like " this: But, as I would do Juſtice in explaining each " Author, I aſcribe theſe ſorts of Obſervation to every " one reſpectively, by the ſole Strength of my Memo- " ry, which is ſometimes firſt directed by Marginal " Notes, made on my comparing the ſeveral Editions. " Every thing elſe flows from my Pen in a ſmall and " exact Letter. Nor do I ever write any thing over " again, or blot out what I have once wrote. Theſe " Commentaries have not hitherto met with ten In- " ſtances of this Kind." I do not know whether it is right to boaſt of ſuch a thing; I think the Public deſerves more Reſpect.

BASINA, Wife of Childeric King of France, and Mother of the Great Clovis, had been married to a King of Thuringia. Childeric being forced to leave his Dominions, becauſe his Lewdneſs had ſo exaſperated the People, that he had reaſon to
(a) About the Year 460. fear the worſt from them, fled (a) to the King of Thuringia. He was received by him with all manner of Reſpect; without doubt Baſina, who was a very beautiful Princeſs, entertained him admirably well. Experience has always ſhewn, that thoſe laſcivious Princes, who are expelled their Country, do not renounce their Gallantries in the place of their Retreat. Childeric was an Example of it: He fell in Love with Baſina; and, finding her not cruel, he made no ſcruple to purſue the matter ſo far as to enjoy the Wife of that ſame Friend and good Neighbour, who furniſhed him with a place of Refuge [A]. He engaged her in ſo cloſe an Amour, that ſhe could never after quit it. The French recalled
(b) Gregor. Turon. Hiſt. Franc. lib. 2. cap. 12. Childeric eight Years after they had expelled him (b). Baſina could not be eaſy with that Prince's Abſence. She left her Huſband, and went to Childeric; and, when he aſked the cauſe of her Viſit, ſhe anſwered, ingenuouſly, that it was her Love of him [B]; and that if ſhe had known any Prince beyond the Seas, who could have [A] Childeric made no ſcruple - - - - - - to enjoy the Wife of that ſame Friend - - - - - - who furniſhed him with a place of Refuge.] There would be ground enough to believe it, though the Hiſtorians had not related it. Would Baſina have run after Childeric, if ſhe had not loved him, and taſted with him the Pleaſures of Love? But we have the Teſtimony of Hiſtorians: Theſe Words are to be found in the Author of the Atchievements of the Kings of France, in the ſeventh Chapter. " Dum fuit in Toringia " cum Baſina Regina uxore Biſini Regis ipſe Childe- " ricus commixtus eſt. —— While he was in Thu- " ringia, Childeric converſed criminally with Queen " Baſina, the Wife of King Biſinus." Aimonius relates the ſame thing in the eighth Chapter of the firſt Book, " Dicebatur idem princeps conſuetudinem Stu- " pri cum ea habuiſſe, cùm exularet. —— The ſame " Prince was ſaid to have continued an adulterous " Commerce with her in his Exile." Rorico is more expreſſive: I will quote him in the following Remark.

[B] She anſwered him ingenuouſly, that it was her Love of him.] According to Gregorius Turonenſis, in the twelfth Chapter of the ſecond Book of the Hiſtory of the French, the Anſwer was thus expreſſed: " I very well know that you are an uſeful and vali- " ant Man. It is on this account, I am come to " live with you; for, be aſſured, that if I had " known of any Body, in the Provinces beyond the " Seas, who could have been more uſeful to me " than yourſelf, I would have gone and deſired to " have lived with him." The Abbot of Marolles, who thus tranſlated the Text of Gregorius Turonenſis, adds a Remark to advertiſe us, that Baſina's Meaning, in this Diſcourſe, is equivocal. This is not unlikely: I do not believe that Childeric had given any proofs of his Military Valour in Thuringia: So that the Valour, which Baſina ſpoke of, might be of another nature, and more uſeful to a Queen than a Martial one; and I am tempted to believe, that, both in Gregorius Turonenſis, and in Rorico, we ought to read virilitatem & viriliorem, inſtead of utilitatem & utiliorem. The Equivocation will ſtill remain. Baſina anſwers, I know your Virility, and that you are a very brave Man. Thoſe words are better connected than the following, I know you are an uſeful and valiant Man. Let no body object the Immodeſty of theſe words, I know your Virility; is there not as much in a Woman's ſaying to her Gallant, I know your uſefulneſs? However it be, Here is the Latin of Gregorius Turonenſis: " His regnantibus ſihave been more agreeable to her, ſhe would have gone to him. Childeric was charmed with this diſcourſe, married Baſina, and had a Son by her, who was a very brave Prince, and embraced the Chriſtian Faith. If this Woman's Conduct was worſe than That of Helena [C], That of Childeric, all Circumſtances rightly conſidered, was not better than That of Paris. Father le Cointe's excuſes are but very trifling [D]. The Author of the Galantries of the Kings of France, relates the Viſions of Baſina's Bridegroom better than Mr de Cordemoi [E].

" mul

Since

" mul Baſina relicto viro ſuo ad Childericum venit. " Qui cum ſollicite interrogaret quâ de causâ ad " eum de tantâ regione veniſſet, reſpondiſſe fertur, " Novi, inquit, utilitatem tuam quod ſis valde ſtre- " nuus, ideoque veni ut habitem tecum. Nam no- " veris; ſi in tranſmarinis partibus aliquem cogno- " viſſem utiliorem te, expetiſſem utique cohabitationem " ejus. At ille gaudens eam ſibi in conjugio copu- " lavit." The anonymous Author of the Geſta Regum Francorum (1), Fredegarius (2), and the Monk Rorico, relate Baſina's Anſwer in the ſame manner as Gregorius Turonenſis; only Rorico has explained it much better, and expreſsly ſaid, that the Diſcourſe of that Woman was full of Lewdneſs. Which is ſo far from weakening my Conjecture concerning virilitatem & viriliorem, that it ſtrongly confirms it. Theſe are the words of Rorico: " Baſina quoque " Siſini regis uxor, apud quem latuiſſe præmonſtra- " vimus Childericum, ſæpius relicto viri thoro con- " ſortium noſtri Regis eſt experta. Quamobrem & " eum nec multo poſt in Franciam eſt ſequuta, cu- " piens loco uxoris habitare cum eo. Quam Chil- " dericus cum inſperate conſpexiſſet, & ad quos uſus " de tam longinqua provincia ad eum properaſſet " inquireret, illa poſtpoſito pudore muliebri, ut erat " nimis luxurioſa, tale fertur dediſſe reſponſum: " quoniam novi utilitatem tuam & pulchritudinem, " & quod ſis habilis & ſtrenuus, è domo veni ut " habitem tecum, nam ſi in extremis terræ finibus " utiliorem te cognoviſſem, & hunc nihilominus ex- " petiſſem. Complacuit regi mulieris ſermo face- " tus, & eam gaudens ſibi ſociavit in uxorem (3). " - - - - - - Baſina alſo, the Wife of King Siſinus, " with whom, we have before ſhewn, that Childeric " had taken refuge, often left her Husband's Bed to " ſhare that of our King. For which reaſon, not " long afterwards, ſhe followed him into France " deſiring to live with him as his Wife. Childeric " being ſurprized at ſo unexpected a Viſiter, and de- " ſiring to know the Cauſe of her Undertaking ſo long " a Journey, ſhe, laying aſide all female Modeſty, as " being of too amorous a Conſtitution, returned this " Anſwer: It was becauſe I know you uſeful and come- " ly, able and vigorous, that I left my Home out of " a Deſire to live with you; for if I had known of " any one more ſo than yourſelf, though he had been " in the furthermoſt Parts of the Earth, I would " have gone to him. The King was much taken with " her pleaſant Anſwer, and married her with much " Satisfaction." This whole Relation of Rorico ſhews, that this Woman did not compliment Childeric as a brave Warriour, but as a complete Champion in Love.

(1) Apud du Cheſne, Tom. I. pag. 696.

(2) Ibid. pag. 727.

(3) Roric. de Geſtis Francorum, lib. I. pag. 802, in the firſt Vol. of du Cheſne's Edition.

[C] Her Conduct was worſe than That of Helena.] To give every Body their Due, I ought to ſay here, that this pretty Compariſon is none of my own; I find it in a modern Writer (4). " Baſina, ſays he, the Mo- " ther of Clovis, was not contented to proſtitute " her Honour to Childeric I, who fled for Prote- " ction to her firſt Husband Biſinus, or Baſinus, " King of Thuringia; but did worſe than Helena, " who at leaſt would be carried away, whereas this " Woman came into France of her own Accord, " and with ſo much confidence, that ſhe durſt tell " Childeric, that, if ſhe had known a braver Man, " and worthier of her Love, ſhe would have gone " to him to the end of the World."

(4) In la Mothe le Vayer, Tom. X. pag. 342. Letter 43.

[D] Father le Cointe's Excuſes are but very trifling.] He takes it ill, that Aimonius ſhould ſay, that Childeric married Baſina before the Death of her firſt Husband (5). He pretends, that Aimonius is the firſt who ſaid it, and loaded the Birth of Clovis with ſuch an Ignominy. He adds, that this Hiſtorian is not to be credited, conſidering the Diſtance of the Time he lived in, and his Prepoſſeſſion againſt the Merovingians. He brings two other Reaſons, one that the Germans, who were the Stem of the French, did not permit Adultery; the other, that, if Childeric had married another Man's Wife, he would have expoſed himſelf to the ſame Danger, which forced him to leave his Kingdom eight Years before. From all which Conſiderations he chuſes rather to believe, that Baſina, not being able to endure the ill Treatment ſhe received from her Husband, fled into France, and that ſhe did not marry Childeric before ſhe had certain News of her Husband's Death. He remarks, that others ſay ſhe was divorced, and that therefore, under Paganiſm, nothing hindered her from marrying a ſecond Husband. He refers us to Robertus Cenalis (6). Let us examine a little into this Diſpute. In the firſt place, I ſay, that, if the Silence of the Authors, who preceeded Aimonius, is a good reaſon, it muſt no longer be ſaid, that the King of Thuringia abuſed his Wife, or that he divorced her, or that he was dead before Childeric married her. Theſe are Facts mentioned by none of the ancient Authors. In the ſecond place, does not Gregorius Turonenſis ſay, that Baſina left her Husband, and that her firſt Anſwer to Childeric pleaſed him ſo well that he married her? Is not this almoſt ſaying in expreſs terms, that ſhe was Childeric's Wife before her firſt Husband was dead? In the third place, the Paſſage out of Tacitus, which Father le Cointe alledges to prove, that the Germans diſapproved Adultery, ſhews, that Childeric was exempted from the General Law (7); for whatever was the real Motive of the Woman's coming to him, ſhe declared it was grounded on that Prince's Valour: Beſides, the Puniſhment of Adultery was left to the Husband's Choice, and Baſina was no longer in her Husband's Country. Not to obſerve, that Laws are ſeldom made for Sovereigns. Laſtly, Childeric had nothing to fear from the Mutiny of his Subjects upon this account; he married a Stranger who was come to ſeek him: What harm could this do the French? I own that they had revolted eight Years before; but then they were alarmed, one for his Daughter, another for his Siſter, &c. for Childeric, at that time, gave himſelf up to debauchery in a very violent Manner (8). The Affair of Baſina did not at all concern them; would they have ever thought of breaking the Reconciliation by eſpouſing the Quarrel of a King of Thuringia?

(5) Le Cointe Annal. Eccleſ. Francorum, Tom. I. pag. 94.

(6) Lib. 1. de Re Gallica, Periocha 12.

(7) This is the Paſſage of Tacitus; Severa illis matrimonia, nec ullum morum partem magis laudaveris, nam prope ſoli barbarorum ſingulis uxoribus contenti ſunt, exceptis admodum paucis qui, non libidine, ſed ob Nobilitatem, pluribus nuptiis ambiuntur. Pauciſſima in tam numeroſa gente adulteria quorum pœna præſens & Maritis permiſſa. Their Marriages are very ſtrict, and no part of their Cuſtoms is more to be commended. For they are almoſt the ſole Barbarians who allow but of one Wife, except only to ſome few, who are indulged with more than one, not in regard to their Luſt, but their Nobility. Altho' they are a numerous Nation, Adultery is very rare among them, and is always left immediately to be puniſhed at the Diſcretion of the Huſband.

[E] The Author of the Galantries of the Kings of France, relates the Viſions of Baſina's Bridegroom better than Mr de Cordemoi.] Theſe are his words; " It is reported, that having intreated Childeric not " to lie with her on the Wedding-Night, ſhe ſent " him three times into the Court-Yard of his Palace, " deſiring him to obſerve, without fear, the Viſions " which ſhould appear before him; and that, by her " occult Science, he was entertained the firſt time with " Unicorns, Lions, and Leopards; the ſecond time " with Bears and Wolves; and the third time with " Dogs and Cats; from whence ſhe concluded, that " thoſe various Animals preſaged the Diverſity of the " Manners and Cuſtoms of the Race, which was to " proceed from their Marriage. It will be ſo much " the more readily believed, that this report is only " a Fable invented at pleaſure, if it be obſerved, " that the ardent Paſſion, which that Queen had for " Childeric, would, in all probability, never have " permitted her to loſe ſo much time, which ſhe " knew how to paſs more pleaſantly, than to lie in " Bed alone, while her Lover was entertained with " thoſe pretended Apparitions (9)." It cannot be denied, but that the Reaſon he alledges to confute that old Story has ſome force; but it would have had much more, if Baſina's forwardneſs itſelf did not make it too probable, that the Ardour of her Paſſion had already received ſome conſiderable Relief. After what had paſſed between them, neither Childeric nor ſhe were like to pay much regard to the Marriage Ceremony, or to defer their Embraces till the Nuptial Solemnity had authorized them: And for that reaſon Baſina might well let him reſt till the following Night. Mr de Cordemoi pretends, that Baſina

(8) When they were reproached for their Sedition, they pretended for their Reaſon, Qua ſine lege abutebatur filias noſtras. Becauſe he unjuſtly violated our Daughters. De Geſtis Francor. l. 7.

(9) Galantries of the Kings of France, Tom. I. pag. 5.

was

Since the first Edition of this Work, I have read what Father Daniel has published, against those, who say, that Childeric was expelled by his Subjects, that he was recalled at the end of eight Years, and that the Queen of Thuringia came after him, &c. This Author thinks, That what Gregorius Turonensis has wrote upon it, is nothing more than an Abstract, or Abridgment, of some Romance current in his time (c); and that the Visions, Childeric is pretended to have had on his Wedding Night, and which have been added to the Story of Gregorius Turonensis, have the Air of a Romance, as well as the rest (d). I shall mention the Quarrel commenced with Pâquier, and the Answer returned to his Criticism [F]: From this Remark, it will appear, that Disputes occasion many Faults to be committed, as well of the Heart, as of the Understanding.

(c) Father Daniel, Dissert. II, on the History of France, pag. 425, Edition of Paris, 1696.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 426.

was already with Child, and near her time, when she desired her Husband to look for Apparitions three times successively the same Night, at the Gate of his Palace, and he quotes Fredegarius for it (10); but it is certain, that his Witness contradicts him: Fredegarius says, that those Visions preceeded the Consummation of the Marriage. Cum primâ nocte jugiter stratu junxissent, dicit ad eum mulier, hâc nocte à coitu virili abstinebimus. —— Cumque Basinæ hæc universa narrasset, abstinebant se caste usque in crastinum.

(10) History of France, Tom. I. pag. 128, ex Fredeg. Scholast. cap. 12.

[F] I shall mention the Quarrel commenced with Pâquier, and the Answer returned to his Criticism.] Let us first relate Pâquier's Words: "Our ancient "Writers place Clovis among the Legitimate, but do "not consider, that, in their Account of his Life, they "affirm the quite contrary. They all agree in this, "that Childeric, having been expelled the Kingdom "for his Extortions and Cruelties, retired to Thu-"ringia, where, having been honourably received by "the King, he fell in Love with his Wife Queen "Basina: insomuch, that being afterwards recalled "by the French, he carried her away, and married "her, violating thereby the Law of Nations, and of "Hospitality; and yet the Great Clovis was born of "that Marriage (11)." Let us see, in the next place, the Censure of Father Garasse: He says, "That Pâ-"quier adding something of his own to the fabulous "Report of the ancient Chroniclers, sets forth, that "Childeric, having fled for shelter to the King of "Thuringia, fell in Love with his Wife, and ravished "her, and carrying her into France married her in "contempt of every Thing sacred (12)." He goes on thus (13), "Master Pâquier might have despised "such Dreams, and learned from Paul Æmilius, "and Gregorius Turonensis, the falsity of this Narra-"tion; and the Sieur Du Pleix has related it very judi-"ciously in the Life of Childeric —— (14). The an-"cient Chroniclers of France never judged or dream-"ed, that Clovis was a Bastard, for having married "Basina, or any other Thuringian Woman; for if "he married Basina, he might have learned of the "French Historians, that she came herself into France, "after the Death of her Husband the King of Thu-"ringia, and married Childeric her second Husband, "from which true and lawful Marriage Clovis was "born." Let us pass to the Answers returned to Garasse. First he was censured for having opposed Gregorius Turonensis to Mr Pâquier, who yet — forms his Doubts on that Author's Words (15). They were quoted and confirmed by the Testimony of Aimonius — who seems in some things to go farther than he; for he remarks, that Basina forsook her Husband, Priori abjecto viro (16). Then to the Testimony of those two Historians was added That of Nicolles-Gilles. These are his Words, in the sixteenth Page of the Life of Childeric: "During the time that Childeric "was with Basinus, King of Thuringia, he fell in "Love with his Wife, whose name was Basina; "and after he was recalled to his Kingdom, the said "Queen Basina, who doted very much on him, "forsook the said Basinus, King of Thuringia, her "Lord and Husband, and came to Childeric, who "forgetting the former Kindnesses which he had "received, married her, by whom he had Clovis "the first Christian King of France (17). It was observed, that Richard of Vasebourg authorizes this Opinion in his Antiquities of the Belgic Gaul, and that all our modern Historians follow it. But it was thought sufficient to quote Belle-Forest, who said, "That Childeric determined to marry, but in so do-"ing he appeared very ungrateful to his Host, the "King of Thuringia, whose Wife he debauched and "married, without troubling himself for the wrong "done to Basinus, or the Reproach that he might "receive for it (18)." At the Conclusion it was said, that all the Authors, who have been quoted, "are as authentic, and judicious as your (19) Logi-"cian Du Pleix, who lent you his Whim in this "Passage, to authorize your want of Judgment." The mistake was not forgotten, which Garasse made, when he said, that Clovis married Basina (20). It was called both "an impious and malicious Igno-"rance; for by that means he would make the "first Christian King of France more abominable "than those brutish Ethiopians, who, as St Jerom "says against Jovinian, defiled their Mothers Bed "without any Distinction (21)." Instances of the like Abominations were quoted there, with many Exaggerations, and long Declamations.

(11) Pâquier, Recherch. de la France, lib. 6, c. 44. pag. 588.

(12) Garasse Recherch. des Recherch. pag. 60.

(13) Id. ibid. pag. 61.

(14) Id. ibid. pag. 63.

(15) Defence of Stephen Pasquier against the Impostures and Calumnies of Garasse, lib. 2. §. 4. p. 160.

(16) Ibid. pag. 162.

(17) Ibid. pag. 163.

(18) Ibid. pag. 164. Note, the Author observes, that Ronsard confirms that Opinion in Book 4. of his Franciade, and that de Serres calls that an Illegitimate Marriage.

(19) These Words are spoken to Garasse.

(20) Defence of Pasquier against Garasse, p. 166.

(21) Ibid. lib. 3. §. 2. p. 426, 427.

This Dispute shews us part of the Corruptions, which prevail in most Writings of this Nature. The Apologist passes over one of the Faults which had been censured: He does not justify Pâquier, nor does he own, that he was rightly accused as to that Article; I mean the Rape of Basina. Our ancient Chroniclers have not mentioned it, and therefore Pâquier aggravated Childeric's Ingratitude: he made Additions, which were both fabulous and scandalous. The Authority of Gregorius Turonensis might well be alledged against him, and nevertheless his crafty Apologist supposed, that this Historian had only been alledged, in relation to the other parts of Basina's Adventures, and on that Supposition founded the most insulting Reproaches. Here are already three great Corruptions; not to acknowledge That Part of the Remarks of a Critic, which is good and just; to dissemble That, which is favourable to him in his Quotations; and to apply intirely, with much noise, to That only which may be turned into a disadvantageous Sense. Here is another Irregularity: Garasse censured some Faults, and committed others in his Censure. Gregorius Turonensis was for and against him in different Respects; he made no distinction, but quoted him in a general manner, and placed him between Æmilius and Du Pleix. Ought he not to have given him the first Rank? He perplexed himself wretchedly about a pretended Marriage of Clovis with Basina. This was done heedlesly: It appears plainly, that a Hurry of Mind, and a Distraction common enough among Authors, made him write contrary to what he thought; the Sequel of his Discourse evidently shews he did not believe that Clovis was the Husband of Basina. Yet Pâquier's Apologist falls violently upon that Passage: he takes it to be a capital Crime: His Zeal for the first Christian King of the French grows warm, and he calls the Figures of Rhetoric to his Assistance. Is this to act honestly? His Adversary had shewn him an Example of a like Corruption; for he had very wrongly armed himself with the Appearance of a great Zeal for the Honour of the Nation, on account of their first Christian King. He had preferred a Kind of Impeachment for a Crime of State, very unjustly, since, except the Rape, Pâquier had only followed our ancient Histories, and modestly represented their Consequences. How shameful is it, that Authors should be suffered to take the Liberty to engage Sovereign Princes in their petty Quarrels?

SOME Examples of the Frauds of Authors.

It is much more useful to make Readers sensible of these Faults in Writers, than to criticize Historical Falshoods: and therefore I hope what I have just now observed will meet with Approbation.

Digitized by Google

BASNAGE (BENJAMIN), the Son of N. Baſnage, Miniſter of Norwich in England, and afterwards of Carentan in Normandy, was born in the Year 1580. He devoted himſelf to his Father's Profeſſion, and was alſo Miniſter of Carentan; nay he continued ſo all his Life, though other more conſiderable Churches, and particularly that of Rouen, deſired to have him for their Miniſter. He conſidered his firſt Church as his Spouſe, from whom nothing but Death could divorce him; and therefore he would not make uſe of the liberty, which the National Synod of Charenton had given him, in the Year 1623 [A]. He aſſiſted in that Synod, as a Deputy of the Province of Normandy. In the Year 1631, he was again named by that Province to aſſiſt in the National Synod of Charenton; but the King forbad him to go thither, and took his Church from him. He was preſently after reſtored to it, and obtained leave to ſit in that Synod, as a Deputy of Normandy. The Remonſtrances, made to his Majeſty by that Aſſembly, produced this good effect. He had given ſuch Proofs of his Capacity and Prudence, that he was elected Moderator of the National Synod of Alençon in 1637. This Aſſembly wanted a Moderator, furniſhed with many Talents; for they had very nice Matters to handle. The Diſputes about Univerſal Grace had made a great noiſe; it was to be feared, that a Theological War would break out in the Reformed Churches of France, more formidable than a ſevere Perſecution; Mens minds were already very much heated, and prepoſſeſſed. This Synod ſettled Matters on a right foot, to which the Prudence and Conduct of the Moderator very much contributed. He was aſſociated with the Moderator in the National Synod of Charenton in the Year 1644. This Aſſembly deputed him to the Queen-Mother, who gave him ſome Marks of her Eſteem. He had a great number of Diſputes with the Controvertiſts; he wrote againſt the Church of Rome, and they againſt him (a). His Treatiſe of the Church was much eſteemed (b): He undertook a Work againſt the indiſcreet Votaries of the Holy Virgin, which remained imperfect. He died at Seventy two Years of Age, in 1652, which was the Fifty firſt Year of his Miniſtry. He left two Sons, who made his Name very Illuſtrious, both upon their own, and their Childrens, account [B]. It muſt not be forgot, that he was deputed to King James, and that, by That Prince's leave, he went into Scotland, where he did great Service to the Churches in their Temporal Intereſts. King James's Letter of Leave ſtyles him Deputy from all the French Churches. He is often mentioned in the Synodicon in Galliâ Reformatâ; but That Work, being in Engliſh, does not always obſerve the true Orthography of proper Names [C], which ſometimes produces Confuſion.

(a) Leſcrivain, and Draconis are the chief who wrote againſt him.

(b) If I am not miſtaken, it was printed at Rochel, in the Year 1612.

[A] He would not make uſe of the Liberty of quitting his Church, which was granted him by the Synod of Charenton, in 1623.] The Provincial Synod of Normandy had permitted him to leave his Church; That Church had appealed about it to the National Synod, and That Appeal was rejected by the National Synod of Charenton, in the Year 1623. However our Benjamin did not leave his Church.

[B] He left two Sons, who made his Name very Illuſtrious, both upon their own, and their Children's, Account.] The eldeſt, ANTONY BASNAGE, was born in the Year 1610, and followed his Father's Profeſſion, and was Miniſter at Bayeux. He ſignalized himſelf by his Conſtancy and Courage in the laſt Perſecution; the Priſon of Havre de Grace, into which he was put at the Age of Seventy five Years, did not ſhake his Reſolution. When the Edict of Nants was repealed, he was ſet at Liberty, and fled into Holland: He died at Zutphen, in the Year 1681, aged Eighty one Years. He left a Son, whoſe Name is SAMUEL BASNAGE, Sieur de Flottemanville (1), who had been Miniſter with Him of the Church of Bayeux, and is at preſent at Zutphen. He is one of the moſt learned Miniſters, who left France. He had already publiſhed a Book in Latin (2), which is a Continuation of the Critical Obſervations on the Annals of Cardinal Baronius, which Caſaubon had begun. He is now writing an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory (3). I have wrote the Article of the other Son of Benjamin Baſnage.

(1) He was born in 1638.

(2) Intituled De Rebus Sacris & Eccleſiaſticis Exercitationes Hiſtorico-criticæ, Ultraject. 1692, in 4to.

(3) He has already publiſhed three Volumes of it, in folio, entitled, Annales Politico-Eccleſiaſtici Annorum DCCXLV a Cæſare Auguſto ad Phocam uſque. They were printed at Rotterdam, for Leers, in 1706, and dedicated to the States General in 1705. He promiſes to continue this Work.

[C] He is often mentioned in the Synodicon in Galliâ Reformatâ, which does not always obſerve the true Orthography of proper Names.] For Example, in the Ninety fourth Page of the ſecond Volume of the Synodicon in Galliâ Reformatâ, mention is made of the Deputies of Charenton, Sainte Mere & le Val de Serre. It ought to have been ſaid, Carentan, Sainte Mere Egliſe, & le Val de Serre. In the Seventy fifth Page Benjamin Baſnage is ſtiled Miniſter of Charenton; and, in Pages 259, and 274, Miniſter of Quarentin; and, in Page 322, Miniſter of Sainte Mere. It ſhould be Sainte Mere Egliſe; and it ought to have been obſerved, that Carentan and Sainte Mere Egliſe are two Places, which made but one and the ſame Church among thoſe of the Reformed Religion. They had, indeed, each of them a diſtinct Place of Worſhip; but, as one was looked upon as annexed to the other, there was but one Paſtor, and one Conſiſtory for both. At Page 89, it is ſaid the Conference of Conſtantine, inſtead of the Conference of the Cotentin. Theſe are Faults of Orthography, which may confound Readers, and make them think, that there were Churches, in Normandy, called Sainte Mere, Charenton, and Quarentin. A Perſon, who ſhould be employed by Booksellers to make Additions to a Geographical Dictionary, might imagine he had made a conſiderable Diſcovery, by finding thoſe three Pariſhes in a Country, where the Geographers had not yet perceived them. Faults are like Sparks of Fire; That, which is at firſt but an Alteration of a Letter, becomes ſometimes a Complication, or Heap of monſtrous Falſities. It muſt be remedied early, principiis obſta. Here are alſo Miſtakes of another Nature. The Author of the Synodicon makes mention (4) of one Peter Baſnage, Son of Anthony, and Grand-ſon of Benjamin, and ſays, that this Peter Baſnage had no Church in the Year 1637. This is a Miſtake. Anthony Baſnage had but two Sons; the eldeſt called Mr de Flottemanville, who was born in the Year 1638. The younger was named Francis, and followed the Profeſſion of Arms, and died in the Year 1685. The ſame Author takes (5) Mr Baſnage, Miniſter of Rotterdam, to be the Son of Benjamin Baſnage; but he is only his Grandſon. Theſe ſmall Faults, which I find myſelf obliged to diſcover for the Inſtruction of Readers, do not hinder me from believing, that Mr Quick's Work (6) is very curious and uſeful, and that all the Reformed of France are very much obliged to him for the Pains he has taken to make ſuch an ample and exact Collection of their Synods, and for the long Preface, which he has added to it.

(4) Page 383.

(5) Page 497.

(6) An Engliſh Miniſter, who, in 1692, publiſhed, at London, the Synodicon in Galliâ Reformatâ; or, the Acts, Deciſions, Decrees, and Canons, of the ſeven laſt National Councils of the Reformed Churches of France, 2 Volumes in Folio.

Digitized by Google

BASNAGE (HENRY), Son of the foregoing, was born at Ste. Mere Eglise in Lower Normandy, the ſixteenth of October, 1615. He was one of the moſt able and eloquent Advocates of the Parliament of Normandy, into which he was admitted in the Year 1636. There was no conſiderable Cauſe, which he was not employed in. He went to Paris, with the Deputies of the Province of Normandy, on account of the * Tax called Tiers & Danger: It was he, who drew up the Memorial of the Province, and who was made choice of to defend That Cauſe. At the requeſt of the Marquis de Matignon, he took another Journey to Paris, to regulate the Shares of the Succeſſion with the Marquis de Seignelay (a); and it is well known, that he would have been concerned in the general Review of the Common Laws of France, if the Project, formed about it, had been put in execution (b). In the Year 1677, he was nominated Commiſſioner for the Affairs of Religion, and worthily diſcharged that Truſt. He was equally ſucceſsful in Conſultations, and Pleadings; and has made it appear, that he could prove as good an Author, as an Advocate. The Common Law of Normandy, which he publiſhed with very ample Commentaries in the Year 1678, was ſo much valued, and ſold ſo well, that a Second Edition of it, in Two Volumes in Folio, was publiſhed in the Year 1694. At the ſame time was printed a third Edition of his Treatiſe of Hypothecæ, or Pledges. And, notwithſtanding his great Age, the Author had the care of thoſe Editions: his Judgment and Underſtanding continued unimpaired. This is very rare, and happens only to thoſe, who have had both a lively Imagination, and a ſtrong Head; which was his Character. His Religion did not hinder thoſe, who were at the Head of the Parliament, and the reſt of the moſt conſiderable Members of that illuſtrious Body, from having a great Eſteem, and a particular Kindneſs, for him. He received all manner of Civilities from M. de Monthelon, firſt Preſident of Rouen, to whom he dedicated his Common Law of Normandy in the Year 1694. He died at Rouen, the twentieth of October, 1695, aged eighty Years and four Days. If he had not the pleaſure of ſeeing his Children in his old Age, yet it was a great Comfort to him to hear of the Honour, which they acquired in Foreign Countries by their excellent Writings [A]. He had alſo the Satisfaction to know, that his Son-in-Law, Mr Bauldri, Profeſſor of Sacred Hiſtory at Utrecht, had made himſelf very much eſteemed by his Lectures, and by a learned Commentary on the Treatiſe of Lactantius de Mortibus Perſecutorum (c).

* It is a Tax which the Gentry pay once in every King's Reign, for Foreſts and Woods.

(a) He had married the Marquis of Matignon's Siſter-in-law.

(b) Some Perſons of Credit have been told, that M. le Tellier, Promoter of that Project, had nominated Mr Baſnage for one of the Executors.

(c) Printed at Utrecht, in 8vo, in the Year 1692.

[A] If he had not the Pleaſure of ſeeing his Children - - - - - yet he heard of the Honour, which they acquired, in foreign Countries, by their excellent Writings.] His eldeſt Son, JAMES BASNAGE, was but a little above Twenty two Years of Age (1), when the Church of Rouen deſired him for their Miniſter, in the Room of Mr le Moyne, in the Year 1676. He ſerved that Church with much Applauſe from that time, 'till the Revocation of the Edict of Nants. Then he retired into Holland, and ſettled at Rotterdam, where he is Ordinary Miniſter (2). The Latin and French Books, which he has already publiſhed, and chiefly his admirable Anſwer to the Biſhop of Meaux, have fully juſtified thoſe, who promiſed his Hiſtory of the Church would be a very compleat Work; which has been yet farther made good by the Publication of the Work itſelf (3). His other Works are the Examination of the Methods propoſed by the Aſſembly of the Clergy of France, for the Re-union of Proteſtants to the Church of Rome, printed, at Cologn, in 1684. The Epiſtle of St Chryſoſtom to Cæſarius the Monk, together with three Epiſtolary Diſſertations, printed, at Rotterdam, in 1687, and reprinted in 1694. The Holy Communion, or a Treatiſe on the Neceſſity and Means of communicating worthily, printed, at Rotterdam, in 1687, and ſeveral Times ſince. A Treatiſe on Conſcience, with Reflexions on the Philoſophical Commentary, printed, at Rotterdam, in 1696. The Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Religion, from JESUS CHRIST, to the preſent Times, by way of Supplement to Joſephus, actually printed, at Rotterdam, in five Volumes in 12mo.

His younger Brother, HENRY BASNAGE, Sieur de Beauval (4), was admitted Advocate in the Parliament of Normandy, and purſued his Father's Steps; but the Troubles, on account of Religion, made him rather chooſe to retire into Holland, than to follow a Path ſo glorious in the Eyes of the World. He was very young, when he publiſhed a little Piece on the Toleration of Religions, which was wrote with a great deal of Spirit and Judgment. He has acquired, and is daily maintaining, an immortal Reputation over all Europe, by publiſhing the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned. The Diſputes he had with Mr Jurieu often interrupted him in That Work, and produced ſeveral very lively and ſharp Pieces, on both Sides. His Correction of Furetiere's Dictionary, which he has improved with ſeveral Additions and Emendations, and an infinite Number of Examples, taken from more polite French Writers, is a Work of very great Uſe. He is again actually reviſing it.

Though theſe Gentlemen are yet living, there is a Neceſſity of mentioning them, to prevent their being continually miſtaken the one for the other, as has been already done in ſome Books. See the Remark [C] of the foregoing Article, and this Paſſage of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle: Wherein it is ſhewn, that the Author of the Hiſtory of the Journals is not very well acquainted with Meſſieurs Bajnage. "I "have already ſaid, that this Work (5) is very ne- "ceſſary; but I muſt add, that it would be much "more ſo, if he, who wrote it, had been better in- "formed; for he has committed ſeveral Miſtakes, "which diſcredit the whole, 'till they be corrected. "For Example, ſpeaking of the Hiſtory of the Works "of the Learned, which is known to be wrote by "Mr de Beauval the Advocate, he ſays, that a French "Refugee Miniſter is the Author of it, and that his "inſerting in the Title Page, By Mr B Doctor "of the Civil Law, is only to conceal himſelf the "better: That This Miniſter, and Author of That "Work, is the ſame, who wrote againſt the Biſhop "of Meaux, and againſt Baronius, confounding, at "this rate, three very different Perſons. It is true, "we may very well excuſe him on this Article; for "it is very rare to ſee one ſingle Family produce "ſo many famous Authors; and they, who are not "well acquainted with every Branch of it, may very "eaſily confound them (6)." This Reflexion is both ingenious and judicious.

(1) He was born at Rouen in 1653.

(2) Thoſe who have the Direction of Churches are ſo called, to diſtinguiſh them from other French Miniſters, who reſide in the Towns of Holland.

(3) It was printed in Nov. 1608, in 2 Vols in Fol. See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, 1688, pag. 382, & 500. And the Journal of Utrecht, Tom. IV. pag. 24.

(4) He was born at Rouen, Aug. 7, 1656.

(5) That is to ſay, M. Chriſtiani Junckeri Dreſdenſis Schediaſma Hiſtoricum de Ephemeridibus ſeu Diariis Eruditorum.

(6) Bibliotheque Univerſelle, Tom. XXII. p. 427, 429.

Digitized by Google

BASTA (NICOLAS), by Nation an Epirote, was a good Officer of Horſe in the Spaniſh Service in the Netherlands, where the Duke d'Alba brought him in the Year 1567 (a). He ſignalized himſelf in the Defeat of la Noue before Engelmunſter in 1580 (b). The Duke of Parma gave him a very honourable Teſtimony [A], four Years after, by ſending him to the Aſſiſtance of the Elector of Cologne. His Father, whoſe Name was Demetrius, had born Arms forty Years in the Service of the Houſe of Auſtria (c). He was undoubtedly related to George Baſta [B], which is ſufficient to prevent the Cenſure of thoſe, who might perhaps be apt to blame me for publiſhing this Article. When a Perſon deſerves a place in a Dictionary, he in ſome meaſure opens the Gate to his Relations. Let this be obſerved once for all.

(a) Strada, de Bello Belg. Dec. 1. lib. 6.

(b) Id. Dec. 2. lib. 3.

(c) Ib. l. 7, ad Annum 1585.

[A] The Duke of Parma gave him a very honourable Teſtimony.] It is this: "Hunc (Blaſium Capiſuccum) & Nicolaum Baſtam veterem Epirotarum "equitum ductorem Coloniam mittens Alexander, "Colonienſibus reſcripſerat, delectos à ſe fuiſſe ſtre"nuos adeo gnaroſque militiæ viros ut horum con"ſilia, ſi occaſio ſe daret, tuto ipſe ſequi paratus "eſſet (1). - - - - - Alexander, ſending Him (Blaſius Capiſuccus) and Nicolas Baſta, the old Epirote General of Horſe to Cologn, wrote thus to the Inhabitants, that they were Perſons choſe by him for ſo remarkable a Courage and Skill in War, that, if he had Occaſion, he himſelf ſhould think it the ſafeſt Courſe to follow their Direction."

(1) Strada, de Bello Belgico, Dec. 2, l. 5. pag. 308.

[B] He was undoubtedly related to George Baſta.] Some ſay he was his Brother (2), and obſerve, that four famous Hiſtorians (3) have aſcribed a glorious Action of George to Nicolas; it is the Succour thrown into la Fere in the Year 1596. Bouteroue has not been guilty of That Fault; he very rightly gives the Name of George to him, who performed That Action (4). Few Warriors will conſent to ſuch Aſſignments of Glory, and brotherly Love ſeldom reaches ſo far. The anonymous Author, who publiſhed the Hiſtory of the Archduke Albert, in the Year 1693, gives the Name of Nicolas Baſti to him, who brought a Convoy of Proviſions into la Fere.

(2) Angell. Galluccius, de Bello Belg. l. 8.

(3) Campana, Davila, Thuanus, Buſſieres.

(4) Rodolph. Botereius Commentar. de Rebus Gallicis geſtis, lib. 3, pag. 272.

BASTA (GEORGE), a famous General, in the beginning of the XVIIth Century, was originally of Epirus (a), but born in a Village called la Rocca, near Tarentum. He commanded a Regiment of Epirote, or Albaneſe, Horſe, when the Duke of Parma took Poſſeſſion of the Government of the Netherlands in the Year 1579; and he perfected himſelf in the Military Art under ſo great a Maſter as That Duke, who, ſoon diſcovering George Baſta's Merit, made him Commiſſary General of the Horſe in the Year 1580 [A]. There was no conſiderable Enterprize, in which he did not aſſign him a principal part. During the Siege of Antwerp in 1584, he had Orders to keep the Field, to hinder any Succours from entring into the Place; and, in 1588, having reinforced the Troops, which beſieged Bonn, he contributed very much to the taking of that Town (b). In the Year 1590, he followed the Duke of Parma into France, to the Aſſiſtance of the League; and, in the Year 1592, he had the command of the Rear-guard during the firſt Retreat (c). He was alſo concerned in the Expedition of Count Charles of Mansfeld, in France, in the Year 1593 (d). After which, he went to make ſome Campaigns in Hungary, and returned into the Netherlands, where, in the Year 1596, he was charged with a very difficult Commiſſion, which he executed very much to his Honour (e); this was to throw a Supply of Proviſions into la Fere, then beſieged by Henry IV. Never was more Conduct, Secrecy, and Diligence, ſeen, than he made appear on that occaſion. But, without doubt, the beſt Theatre of his Exploits was Tranſilvania and Hungary. In the Year 1601, he obtained a ſignal Victory over Sigiſmund Battori, who had cauſed himſelf to be elected Prince of Tranſilvania. The Imperialiſts loſt ſcarce 300 Men; but Battori loſt above 10000 Men, 110 Colours, 40 Pieces of Cannon, and all the Baggage of his Army. The Town of Clauſemberg was beſieged ſoon after, and forced to yield to the mercy of the Conqueror. Baſta rid himſelf of a troubleſome Rival, who had ſhared the Honour of that Day with him, I mean the Waiwode of Walachia, whom he cauſed to be killed in his Tent, on ſuſpicion of his holding a private Intelligence with the Turks. The Year following, he quite ruined the Affairs of Battori, by the taking of Biſtric, and the Defeat of Moſes, Prince of the Sicules: So that Battori, humbly deſiring a Peace, renounced all his Pretenſions, and was ſatisfied with obtaining the Quality of a Baron of Bohemia, by way of Favour. In the Year 1603, Baſta again defeated the Army, which Moſes had raiſed, and perhaps he would have forced the broken remains of it in Temeſwere, if the approach of the Winter had not hindered him from beſieging that Place. The Severities, he exerciſed, the following Year, againſt the Proteſtants of Tranſilvania, did the Emperor great Injury. He cauſed the like to be practiſed in Hungary by the Count de Bel-joieuſe, which made

(a) Strada de Bell. Belg. Dec. 2. l. 3.

(b) Taken from Strada, ibid. & l. 6. & 10.

(c) D'Aubigné, Tom III. lib. 3, c. 9. Thuanus, lib. 102, circa fin. See all the Exploits of George Baſta, during thoſe two Expeditions, in Dondini, Hiſtor. de Rebus in Galliâ geſt.

(d) Angell. Galluccius de Bello Belg. lib. 1.

(e) Id. l. 8.

[A] The Duke of Parma - - - - - made him Commiſſary General of the Horſe.] I ſhall take this Occaſion to obſerve, that, in thoſe Times, That Office was but of a new Creation in the Netherlands. That Duke d'Alba brought it thither from Italy in the Year 1567, where it lately owed it's Birth to Ferdinand Gonzague, Governor of the Milaneze. The Duke d'Alba conferred it on Anthony Olivera, deſcended from That Martin Olivera, whom Don Pedro, King of Caſtile, had ſent for from France, to ſerve againſt the Moors of Granada (1). George Baſta diſcharged That Office very well, and it was, during his Sickneſs at Caudebec, that the Cavalry, falling off from the good Diſcipline, under which he had kept it, did not perform it's Duty ſo well in the Attack, which the Royaliſts made, upon the Duke of Parma, in 1592 (2).

(1) Ex Strada, Dec. 1, lib. 6. ad Ann. 1567.

(2) Dondinus, Hiſtor. de Rebus in Galliâ geſt. lib. 3, pag. 513.

[B] The

Digitized by Google

made Stephen Boſtkai take up Arms, who ſoon found himſelf ſtrong enough to obtain a Victory over the Imperial Troops, which That Count commanded. Baſta could only repair this Loſs in part; for if, on the one hand, the Siege, which he laid to Caſſovia, diſingaged the Count de Bel-joieuſe, he was, on the other hand, obliged to raiſe it (f). In 1605, he had the Vexation not to be able to hinder the Turks from making themſelves Maſters of Gran (g); but he had at leaſt the comfort, by his Encampment near Comorra, both to become an invincible Barrier againſt them, and to charge them advantageouſly, upon their going to take their Winter Quarters. The Peace, which was made with the Turks, the Year following, and the little time he lived afterwards, ſilenced the Hiſtorians as to any farther Account of his Exploits [B]. He was honoured with the Title of a Count (b). Some ſay the Turks never had any Advantage over him [C]. We muſt not forget, that he is an Author [D], and in very great Eſteem [E].

(f) Ex Thuano.

(g) Mercure Franç. Tom. I.

(b) Strada, Dec. 2, l. 3.

[B] The Peace - - - - - - and his Death - - - - - - - ſilenced the Hiſtorians, as to any farther Account of his Exploits.] Bonifacio Vannozzi, in a Letter dated in January, 1608, ſays, that two Letters, wrote by G. M. Praga, the Seventeenth and Twenty fourth of December, 1607, informed him of George Baſta's Death (3). I fancy that this G. M. Praga had been Secretary to this General. He lamented the Loſs of this Maſter, and commended the Kindneſs, which Count Charles, and the Counteſs his Mother, ſhewed him (4). I take notice of this, only to ſhew that this General did not die without lawful Iſſue. The Advice, which was given to G. M. Praga, makes me think, that he had a Mind to write the Hiſtory of his Maſter: That Advice is very good. Vannozzi repreſents to him, that, if a Man deſires not to paſs for a Flatterer, he muſt undertake the particular Hiſtory of ſome famous Action, in which the Perſon, whoſe Life he writes, had the principal Part. He points to one, as to George Baſta, and adds, that, by managing it in this manner, he would have an Opportunity of repreſenting the glorious Actions of a Man, without ſeeming to affect it. The great Advantage of this Method is, that it does not oblige an Hiſtorian to ſpeak of the Imperfections of his Hero; whereas an entire Hiſtory of his Life requires, that he ſhould be repreſented, not only with his Virtues, but his Vices too. Now how commendable ſoever a Perſon may be, he is not without his Faults; and ſometimes the bad Qualities are as numerous as the good. He quotes, on this Account, what Livy ſays of Hannibal: "Alcuni per fuggir'ill nome d'adulatore, tanto ambi- "to, quanto dannato, ſi danno à ſcriver' un' attion "publica, ò un tal membro di eſſa, nella quale habbia "parte principale colui, di cui noi intendiamo iſto- "riar l'attiani e la vita: verbi grazia, volendoſi porre "in Carta la vita del ſig. Co. Baſta, ſi potrebbe pig- "liare à diſcriuer' un' accidente della guerra d'Un- "gheria, ſiaſi il tumulto e la Seditione de Ribelli, "od altra impreſa, nella quale S. E. haveſſe hauuto "parte principale: & coſi diſſimulatamente metterſi "à dir delle ſue prodezze, con molto propoſito, e "fuor di ſoſpetto; che hoggi di per lo più non ſi "leggono vite e narrationi di Grandi, che non ha- "biano del fauoloſo: E per cotali ſcrittori ſon tenuti "à dire il vero, e fuggir la Menzogna: Stando che, "coſì non fuſs' egli, non vi ſia alcuno tanto lauda- "bile, che non habbia i ſuò Nei: Onde ſaggiamente "Livio, dopo una gran diceria à favor d'Annibale, "chiuſe il periodo coſì; Æquabant vitia virtutes: "Perche, come peritiſſimo Maeſtro ſapeva, che non "ſi poteva, ne doueva tralaſciar' indietro i cenni de' "vizi, del deſcritto per vertuoſo (5)." He takes notice, that Hannibal, who had but one Eye, blamed the Painter, who gave him two, and recompenced him who drew him in Profil (6). This ſhews, that he would not have any Body tell a palpable Lie in his Favour; but was very well pleaſed with thoſe, who found out the Art of hiding his Imperfections. Vannozzi afterwards hits upon a Latin Precept, which is very fine: "Convien dunque, ſays he (7), ut veritas "ante oculos habeatur, gratia, atque odiis poſthabi- "tis; melius eſt enim Hiſtoricum, & Politicum, ſi "non fert ratio temporum, ab Hiſtoria ſcribenda ab- "ſtinere, quam eam turpiter mentiendo, & adulando, "quod pleroſque factitaſſe Flavius Vopiſcus ſcripſit, "maculare. Republicæ enim intereſt, nequid om- "nino niſi quod ſit compertum & exploratum in lu- "cem exeat, &c." This means, that, if the Times will not allow of ſpeaking the Truth, it is better to forbear writing Hiſtories, than to tell Lies; for the Public is concerned, that whatever is printed be true. He concludes with another Rule; To praiſe but little, and to blame ſtill leſs. Seniamo la Lettera, ſays he (8), con quel moraliſſimo Detto: Lauda parcè, & vitupera parcius. This was well worth a Digreſſion; which I ſubmit to the Judgment of all diſcerning Men.

(3) Vannozzi, Miſcellaneous Letters, Vol. 3. pag. 189.

(4) Ibid. pag. 190.

(5) Id. ibid. p. 191, 192.

(6) Ibid. pag. 192.

(7) Ibid.

(8) Ibid.

[C] Some ſay the Turks never had any Advantage over him.] Let us hear Strada. "Militari ſcientiâ "clarum quem è Farneſianâ Scholâ ſupremum Cæſa- "rei exercitus Ducem vidimus in Pannoniâ ex Otho- "manicis copiis perpetuò victorem (9). —— Famous "for his military Knowledge, who, from the Duke "of Parma*'s School, became chief General of the Im- "perial Army, and was always victorious over the* Ot- "toman Forces in Pannonia."

(9) Strada, Dec. 2. l. 3.

[D] He is an Author.] His Maeſtro di Campo generale, was printed at Venice, in the Year 1606, and his Governo della Cavalleria leggiera, at Francfort, in 1612.

[E] And in very great Eſteem.] See here what Naudæus ſays of him in his Treatiſe of Military Study; "In equeſtris militiæ diſciplina quatuor ſeu duces ſeu "tribuni communiter proponuntur, quorum de ea re "lucubrationes tanquam abſolutiſſimæ omnium ſibi "calculos & approbationem concilarunt; ſcilicet "Georgius Baſta qui ſummus mandatorum curator in "Belgico Regis exercitu, & Cæſarianarum deinde "copiarum ductor ſummo cum imperio fuit. —— "In the Military Diſcipline of the Cavalry, four "Commanders or Captains are commonly propoſed, "whoſe Lucubrations on this Subject are univerſally "approved, and eſteemed the moſt complete; namely, "George Baſta, who was Commiſſary general in the "King's Army in Flanders, and afterwards Gera- "liſſimo of the Imperial Forces." The three others are Ludovicus Melzius, Flaminius à Cruce, and Johannes Jacobus Walhauſius.

BATHYLLUS, a young Man of Samos, paſſionately beloved by Anacreon, who mentioned him often in his Verſes [A]. Among the remaining Odes, which we have of that Poet, there is one (a), wherein he draws the Picture this beautiful Youth.

(a) It is the 29th.

[A] Anacreon - - - - - - mentioned him often in his Verſes.] Horace obſerves it: Theſe are his Words,

Non aliter Samio dicunt arſiſſe Bathyllo
Anacreonta Tejum;
Qui perſæpe cava teſtudine flevit amorem
Non elaboratum ad pedem (1).

(1) Horat. Epod. 14.

Thus for Bathyllus did Anacreon burn,
And in looſe Verſe his amorous Paſſion mourn.

Andrew Schottus ſhews an unaccountable piece of Madneſs in quoting theſe Verſes of Horace, to prove that Mæcenas loved the Pantomime Bathyllus, of whom I ſhall ſpeak hereafter (2). Charles Stephens was not leſs miſtaken, when he ſaid, that Bathyllus, the Darling of Anacreon, is the ſame with the Pantomimus, mentioned in theſe Words of Juvenal, molli ſaltante Bathyllo (3). Is not this as much as to ſay, that Juvenal and Anacreon were Cotemporaries?

(2) Andr. Schot. ad Senec. Controv. Præf. lib. 5. page 484, Edit. Th. de Jugeas.

(3) They are in Satire VI. ver. 63.

[B] Poly-

Digitized by Google

Youth. His Deſcription is not confined, like thoſe of our Romances, to the viſible parts; but extends alſo to thoſe concealed; which is the reaſon that Madam le Fevre could not fill up all the places of her Tranſlation, but was forced to leave whole Lines with Aſteriſms. This ſame Bathyllus had been loved by Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos, who cauſed a Statue to be erected to him [B], in the Attitude of a Man ſinging, and playing on the Lyre. Chabot was miſtaken in calling him Pantomimus [C]. Mr le Fevre, in endeavouring to excuſe Anacreon's diſſolute Life, has publiſhed ſome things, which were not very well known [D].

[B] Polycrates - - - - - - - who cauſed a Statue to be erected to him.] Some think, that Juvenal ſpeaks of it, when, addreſſing himſelf to the Gods, he ſays,

(4) Juven. Sat. xiii. ver. 118.

—— ut video, nullum diſcrimen habendum eſt
Effigies inter veſtras, ſtatuamque Bathylli (4).

Barthyllus' Statue at this rate may prove
Thy equal Rival, or a greater Jove.

Others read Vagelli, inſtead of Bathylli. That Statue of Bathyllus was in the Temple of Juno, at Samos, before the Altar. Apuleius has given a very particular Deſcription of it (5).

(5) Apul. Floridor. p. 350, 351.

[C] Chabot is miſtaken, in calling him Pantomimus.] Hic Bathyllus, ſays he (6), Samius fuit Pantomimus Anacreonti in maximis deliciis. Very probably his Error proceeds from the Idea he had of another Bathyllus, to whom the Title of Pantomimus very well agrees, as ſhall be ſeen hereafter.

(6) Chab. in Horat. Epod. 14.

[D] Mr le Fevre, in endeavouring to excuſe Anacreon's diſſolute Life, has publiſhed ſome things, which were not very well known.] I will here perform the Promiſe I made in the Remark [G], of the Article ANACREON. This is the moſt proper Place for theſe Things. They would have made That Poet's Article too long; but I ſhall find room enough in this of Bathyllus. I ſay, then, that, as Mr le Fevre could not be ignorant, that our Poet's Love for Bathyllus paſſed for mere Sodomy, and that Polycrates's Jealouſy of Smerdias made a great Noiſe, it is unaccountable how he could ſay, "We do not read, that Anacreon's Pleaſures were Matters of Scandal, nor that his Gaieties were ever complained of (7)." What he obſerves, in another place, is much more reaſonable. He ſays, that more ſcandalous Paſſions have been ſeen in the Auxiliary Troops of France, than Anacreon's Amours. His Latin Deſcription of them is too fine to be tranſlated: "An id potius amet quod patrum noſtrorum memoria in copiis Auxiliaribus vidit Gallia?

(7) Lives of the Greek Poets, p. 48, Edit. of Holl. 1680.

Serica cum Dominam ducebant vincla capellam,
Cui nitidum cornu multo radiabat ab auro,
Et ſegmentatis ſplendebant tempora vittis.
Illa roſa & myrto ſertiſque recentibus ibat
Altum vincta caput, dilectæ conſcia formæ (8).

(8) Epiſt. Dedicat. Anacreont.

"Or would he rather purſue thoſe Amours, which were obſerved by France among the Auxiliary Forces, in the Memory of our Fathers?

Their Miſtreſs Goat in ſilken Cords was led;
Her gilded Horns their Rays of Glory ſpread;
Her Temples with the fineſt Ribbons bound,
Her Head with Myrtles, and with Roſes crown'd,
Proudly ſhe tript, and ſcarcely trod the Ground.

This is a Piece of ſecret Hiſtory, the Circumſtances whereof, it is likely, ſeveral Readers will enquire into; a She-Goat, the Miſtreſs of an Italian General, and led in Pomp with the Ornaments of a jointed Baby. It is impoſſible to carry farther, by the moſt ſtrained Conſtructions, the Novimus & qui te tranſverſa tuentibus hircis (9).

(9) Virg. Ecl. 3.

We know who did your Buſineſs, &c.
And what the Goats obſerved with leering Eyes.

Mr le Fevre was brought into trouble for This Diſcovery: "It is not proper, ſays he (10), that People "ſhould know, that I made the Verſes about the "Crowned Goat. Your Father, to whom I formerly "told the Hiſtory of the She-Goat, mentioned in the "Dedication of Anacreon, and who is not ignorant in what manner I was treated in the Sanhedrim, will tell you my Reaſons." Here is ſomething which will facilitate an Enquiry into this Fact. The Duke de Nemours, having beſieged Lyons, in the Year 1562, "was obliged to retire, being forſaken "by Three thouſand Italians, who deſerted for want "of being paid at the appointed Time. Their living "had been ſo licentious, that the Country People "knew no better Remedy, than to burn all the She-"Goats of the Places, thro' which they paſſed (11)." I chooſe rather to quote Varillas, than d'Aubigné, who informs us, "That the Duke of Guiſe, having "a Mind, that the Duke de Nemours ſhould command at the Siege of Lyons, Tavannes cauſed the "Army to diſband, and diſguſted the Italians, by "ſaying, that he could not lead Men to War, who "forced Children and She-Goats; a thing ſo well "known in the Country, that the Peaſants left not "one She-Goat alive, after their Departure (12)." The ſame Hiſtorian ſays, that the Baron Des-Adrets, leading his Men to fight againſt the Count de Suze, made no other Speech but this, "See there the "Murderers of Women and Children, and the Lovers "of She-Goates; let us fall on (13)." Doubtleſs d'Aubigné knew this by freſh Tradition, and had read an Hiſtorian, who had named the Chiefs of thoſe infamous Soldiers, and who ſays, that Tavannes, being either little ſatisfied with the Arrival of the Duke de Nemours, who was to command the Siege, or hoping for no good Succeſs from it, retired into Burgundy; that afterwards the Duke de Nemours "marched di-"rectly into Dauphiné, where ſeveral Actions were "performed (14); but, continues he, the Duke d'Angueſol, complaining of his Pay, retired at that Time, "except ſix Companies, which accompanied Nemours, "under the Command of Brancaccio. Thoſe Italian "Troops, ſent and paid by the Pope, did much "harm wherever they paſſed, and plundered the very "Shoes of the poor Lazars they met with, and "were, beſides, ſo villainous and deteſtable in their "Lives, that they brought She-Goats along with "them to make uſe of, for their more than brutiſh "Filthineſs; which was the Cauſe that, afterwards, "the Peaſants killed, and threw into their Layſtalls, "the She-Goats in all the Places through which "they paſſed." The Author of the Hiſtory of the remarkable Things which happened in France, from the Year 1547, to the beginning of 1597, relates the ſame things. "During theſe Tranſactions, ſays he "(15), the Sieur de Tavannes came from Burgundy, "within three Leagues of Lyons, with a Deſign to "ſtorm the City; but he was too far off, although "he had then with him above Five thouſand Men, "beſides Three thouſand Italians, in the Pope's Pay, "commanded by the Count d'Angueſol (16). Theſe "Italians, who were the greateſt Pilferers in the "World, carried a great many Goats with them, "and brutiſhly copulated with the Beaſts, &c. (17)" It appears by all theſe Authors, that this happened in the Year 1562. But here is a Writer, who mentions other Circumſtances. "The Hiſtory of France, "ſays he (18), tells us, That the Duke de Nevers, "coming from Italy into France, to aſſiſt the King, "whoſe Crown the Houſe of Guiſe endeavoured to "invade, under pretence of Religion, brought from "thence Two thouſand Goats, covered with Capariſons of green Velvet, with broad Gold Galoons. "It does not give us room at the ſame time to doubt, "what uſe theſe Goats were for; it tells us, that "they were Miſtreſſes for him, and all his Officers." That Duke de Nevers, is, without doubt, Lewis de Gonzague, who married Henrietta of Cleves, the fourth of March, 1565. Now we do not read, that he went from Italy into France, with a Body of Troops, in the Year 1562. He was Lieutenant General in the Marquiſate of Saluces, and the reſt of Piedmont, belonging to France, and he received Orders to draw out thoſe warlike Troops, which were there kept in

(10) Greek Poets, pag. 34.

(11) Varill. Charles IX, Tom. I, p. 225, Edit. of Holland.

(12) D'Aubigné Tom. I, p. 214, ad Ann. 1562.

(13) Ibid. pag. 208.

(14) Theod. Beza, Eccleſ. Hiſt. lib. II. pag. 230, ad Ann. 1562. It was then, without doubt, that the She-goat ſo well dreſſed up, mentioned by Mr le Fevre, was ſeen. It was That of the General. The Soldiers verified then That Sentence of Claudian, Utque ducum lituos ſic mores caſtra ſequuntur.

(15) Page 255, Edit. 1599.

(16) Beza calls him ſo, pag. 220. of his Eccleſ. Hiſt.

(17) What I ſuppreſs here, is word for word what is in the laſt lines of Beza.

(18) D'Artagnan's Memoirs, Tom. III, pag. 466.

Digitized by Google

(19) Varillas, Hiſt. of Charles IX. Tom. II. pag. 102, Dutch Edit.

(20) Id. ib. pag. 103.

(21) Davila's Hiſt. of the Civil Wars of France, lib. 4. pag. 283.

in reſerve (19); and having diſcharged, with the Money the Pope ſent him, part of the Pay due to his Soldiers, he drew out of his Government about Thirteen thouſand Men, entered into Dauphiné, raiſed the Blockade of Lyons, beſieged and took Mâçon, and went to join the Duke of Anjou, in Champagne (20). See Davila, in the fourth Book of his Hiſtory (21). One of theſe two things muſt be true; either thoſe Goats were ſeen twice in France, or they were not ſeen in the Army of Lewis de Gonzague: But however that be, d'Artagnan's Memoirs certainly offend againſt Chronology; for, in the time of the Duke de Nevers's Expedition, the Houſe of Guiſe did not attempt to uſurp the Throne. The Proteſtant Hiſtorians, who ſpeak of theſe Goats in the Year 1562, ſay nothing like it about the Duke of Nevers's Troops, in 1567 (22). Now no Body can be ignorant, that their Silence in this Matter is of great Moment.

(22) D'Aubigné, Tom. I. Hiſt. 4, cap. 12, p. 314. The Hiſt. of Remarkable Things, pag. 220. La Popeliniere, True and Perfect Hiſtory of the Troubles, Book 3.

BATHYLLUS of Alexandria (a), a Freedman of Mæcenas, and very much beloved by him [A], invented, together with one Pylades, a new way of repreſenting all ſorts of Dramatic Pieces in Dances. This Invention was called the Italian Dance (b) [C], and comprehended Tragedy, Comedy, and Satire. Not that it was a mixture of them, but that both theſe Pantomimes preſerved the Character of each kind in the performance of their Play. They differed in this, that Bathyllus excelled in the Comic [D], and Pylades in the Tragic part (c). The Emulation, which prevailed between them, formed two Sects of long continuance: each of them left ſome Scholars, who endeavoured to make their School famous, and to perpetuate the Name of their Maſter (d); for the Followers of Bathyllus were called Bathylli, and thoſe of Pylades were called Pyladæ. Both of them preſerved the Methods and Characters of their Maſters. The Dances of the latter were grave, and proper to excite the great Paſſions of Tragedy; and thoſe of the former were merry, and ſuited with amorous Adventures and comical Subjects. They were ſuch Provocatives to Luſt, and gave ſuch irreſiſtible Temptations to the

(a) Athen. lib. 1, c. 17.

(b) Suidas in Πυλάδης. Athen. l. 1, cap. 17.

(c) Athen. ib. Plut. Symp. lib. 7, c. 8.

(d) Seneca, Nat. Quæſt. lib. 7. c. 32. See Salmaſ. in Carinum Vopiſci; Voſſ. Inſtit. Poët. lib. 2, cap. 38.

[A] He was a Freedman of Mæcenas, and much beloved by him.] See the Scholiaſt of Perſius, on theſe words of the fifth Satire,

Tres tantum ad numeros Satyri moveare Bathylli, and conſider this Paſſage of the Fifty fourth Chapter of the firſt Book of Tacitus's Annals: "indulſerat ei "ludicro Auguſtus dum Mæcenati obtemperat effuſo "in amorem Bathylli. —— Auguſtus encouraged theſe "Diverſions, in complaiſance to Mæcenas's Fondneſs "for Bathyllus." Conſult Dion alſo, in the Fifty fourth Book, and Seneca in the Preface to the fifth Book of Controverſies.

[B] He and Pylades were Inventors of a new manner of repreſenting Dramatic Pieces in Dances.] Suidas ſays expreſsly, that Auguſtus invented the Dance of the Pantomimes, Pylades, and Bathyllus being the firſt, who introduced it (1). Every body is ſenſible, that Suidas means, that Auguſtus was the firſt, who authorized, and eſtabliſhed, the Invention of thoſe two great Dancers (2). In the Greek of That Author it is Βαχχυλίδης; This fault remains in the Suidas of Æmilius Portus, though Lipſius had corrected it (3), when he rectified two Paſſages of Seneca, one of which had, Bathyllo Mæcenate (4), inſtead of Bathyllo Mæcenatis, and the other, Si Pantomimus eſſem, Pantillus eſſem (5), inſtead of Si Pantomimus eſſem, Bathyllus eſſem. Zoſimus agrees with Suidas (6): he places, among the Cauſes of the Deſtruction of the Roman Empire, the Introduction of the Dances of the Pantomimes under Auguſtus, which were unknown before, and of which Pylades and Bathyllus were the Authors. Athenæus, where he ſpeaks from himſelf, names only Bathyllus, but when he quotes Ariſtonicus, he alſo mentions Pylades (7). It is true, that, to find this in his Text, we muſt correct one word of it, as Salmaſius has very well done. The Greek runs thus, Τοῦτον τὸν Βάθυλλον Φησὶν Ἀριστόνικος καὶ Πυλάδης, ἃ ἐστὶ καὶ σύγγραμμα περὶ ὀρχήσεως, τὴν ἰταλικὴν ὄρχησιν συνίσασθαι ἐκ τῆς κωμικῆς, &c (8). We muſt read Πυλάδην, and tranſlate the words thus, "Ariſtonicus ait, Bathyllum hunc "& Pyladem qui librum de ſaltatione ſcripſit, Itali-"cam ſaltationem compoſuiſſe ex comica, &c. —— "Ariſtonicus ſays, that this Bathyllus and Pylades, "who wrote a Book on Dancing, invented the Italian "Dance from the Comic, &c." There is no likelihood that, ſince ſo many other Writers had made Pylades partaker of the Honour of the Invention, or conferred it altogether upon him, he himſelf ſhould have aſcribed it all to his Rival in a public Piece. This Paſſage of Athenæus has ſerved the ſame Critic to correct Suidas (9). The words of Suidas ſignify, that Pylades wrote concerning the Italian Manner of Dancing, which he had invented, that is, concerning the Comic, Tragic, and Satiric Dancing (10). Wolfius and Æmilius Portus underſtand it ſo, becauſe they found no fault in theſe words: Ἔγραψε περὶ ὀρχήσεως τῆς ἰταλικῆς ἥτις ὑπ' αὐτοῦ εὑρέθη. περὶ τῆς κωμικῆς καλουμένης ὀρχήσεως —— καὶ τῆς σατυρικῆς. Salmaſius pretends, that, inſtead of περὶ τῆς κωμικῆς, it muſt be read ἀπὸ τῆς κωμικῆς, and ſo on; which ſignifies, that Pylades wrote a Book concerning the Italian Dance, which he had invented and formed out of the Comic, &c. It is certain, that, by this means, Suidas would ſay a thing, which Athenæus relates poſitively. Let the Readers judge whether it might not be true, that Pylades's Book treated in particular of the three ancient Sorts of Dances, and of That, which he had ſubſtituted in the Room of thoſe three, which was neceſſarily different from each of them, though perhaps it retained them all intirely.

(1) Suidas in ὄρχησις.

(2) See Zoſimus, lib. 1.

(3) Lipſius in Tacit. Ann. lib. 1. pag. 63.

(4) Controv. Præf. lib. 5.

(5) Præf. lib. 3. Epitom.

(6) Zoſim. lib. 1.

(7) Athen. lib. 1. c. 17, pag. 20.

(8) Salmaſ. in Carinum Vopiſci, pag. 831. Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1671.

(9) Id. ibid. See Voſſius Inſtit Poët. lib. 2. pag. 180.

(10) Suid. in Πυλάδης.

[C] ------ which was called the Italian Dance.] I chuſe rather to expreſs myſelf thus; than barely to ſay, that Pylades and Bathyllus invented the Art of repreſenting a Dramatic Piece by Dancing, and the Action of the Hands. I am not ignorant, that many Authors ſpeak of it as of a thing, which began firſt under Auguſtus: for, beſides the Authorities quoted in the foregoing Remark, it is certain, that Suidas ſays, ſomewhere, That at this time (that is, under This Emperor) the Dance of the Pantomimes was introduced, unknown before, ἔτω πρότερον ὄσα (11). Zonaras alſo places the Eſtabliſhment of it under Auguſtus (12). But, becauſe Salmaſius made it appear, that the Cuſtom of acting Dramatic Poetry by the Motion of the Feet and Hands was much ancienter than Bathyllus and Pylades (13), it is better to ſay, that they only perfected That Art, and practiſed it after a new Manner. He believes, that, before their Time, the Pantomimes performed their Dances and Geſtures while Tragedy or Comedy was repreſenting, and that theſe two Men were the firſt, who diſcharged all the Actors, and introduced Dancing only on the Orcheſtra (14). I ſhall obſerve elſewhere (15) with what new Entertainments Pylades enriched the Art he profeſſed. Lipſius believed himſelf to be the firſt, who diſcovered Auguſtus to be the Inventor of That Dance (16). This Diſcovery, as we have ſeen, is not very fortunate.

(11) Suid. in Ἀθηνοδῶρος.

(12) Zonaras, lib. 1.

(13) Salmaſ. in Carinum Vopiſci.

(14) Ibid. p. 830, 831.

(15) In the Article of this PYLADES.

(16) Lipſ. in Tacit. Ann. lib. 1.

[D] Bathyllus excelled in the Comic Part.] Athenæus (17), and Plutarch (18), inform us of the difference, which was in this Reſpect between theſe two Dancers. It may be very well inferred from theſe words of Seneca the Father: "Quidam melius equitem "patiuntur, quidam jugum, & ut ad morbum te "meum vocem, Pylades in comœdia, Bathyllus in "tragœdia, multum à ſe aberant (19). —— Some can "beſt bear a Trooper, ſome a Yoke, and, to inſtance in "my own Diſtemper, Pylades in Comedy, and Ba-"thyllus in Tragedy, differ widely from each other." The Sequel of the Diſcourſe proves, that the Deſign is to ſhew, that a Perſon is not equally fit for different Parts. But, though each of theſe Pantomimes had

(17) Lib. 1. cap. 17.

(18) Sympoſ. lib. 7. c. 8.

(19) Epitom. lib. 3. Præf.

Digitized by Google

the female Spectators, that I dare not ſay of them, in my Mother Tongue, what Juvenal did in Latin [E]. The Romans divided themſelves into Parties, on account of theſe two famous Pantomimes, and it ſeems, that the Friends of Bathyllus had once the Honour of cauſing Pylades, to be baniſhed (e). The kindneſs of Mæcenas for Bathyllus may authorize This conjecture, with ſubmiſſion to Macrobius [F]. See what we ſhall ſay in the Article of PYLADES. Mention is made of Bathyllus in the eighth Fable of the fifth Book of Phædrus. The Author of Moreri's Supplement has given a very proper account of This Pantomime; but his Quotations are wrong; for the Citation from Plutarch concerns only a ſmall part of the Article, and That from Lucian has two great Defects; one is, that the Book de Pantomimi Scena, to which the Reader is referred, is a Chimera; the other, that the Treatiſe de Saltatione, where Lucian has ſaid many things of Pantomimes, does not particularly mention Bathyllus and Pylades. I believe I have diſcovered the Origin of this wrong Quotation.

(e) Dion. lib. 54.

had their Excellences and Perfection, as I have obſerved, yet they both undertook Tragedy and Comedy. Bathyllus was not the only one, who acted Plays, wherein ſome Perſons were to be repreſented in great Motion, as the Pans, and the Satyrs feaſting with Cupid; it appears, that Pylades ſignalized himſelf by repreſenting a Feaſt, given by Bacchus to the Bacchantes and Satyrs (20). Voſſius, who appropriates ſuch a Subject to Bathyllus (21), had not ſufficiently regarded the learned Diſſertation of Salmaſius.

(20) See the two Greek Epigrams mentioned by Salmaſius in Carinum Vopiſci, p. 835.

[E] I dare not ſay, in my Mother Tongue, what Juvenal did in Latin.] To ſhew how indecent this would be, ſee here Juvenal's words in the ſixth Satire.

(21) Voſſius, Inſt. Poet. lib. 2. pag. 281.

Cheironomon Ledam molli ſaltante Bathyllo
Tuccia veſicæ non imperat: Apula gannit
Sicut in amplexu: ſubitum & miſerabile longum
Attendit Thymele, Thymele tunc ruſtica diſcit.

One ſees a dancing Maſter cap'ring high,
And raves and piſſes with pure Extacy:
Another does with all his Motions move,
And gapes and grins, as in the Feat of Love:
A third is charmed with the new Opera Notes,
Admires the Song, but on the Singer dotes:
The Country Lady in the Box appears,
Softly ſhe warbles over all ſhe hears;
And ſucks in Paſſion, both at Eyes and Ears.
DRYDEN.

Father Tarteron, the Jeſuit, ſuppreſſed this Latin in his new Edition of Juvenal (22), which he tranſlated into French. He alſo ſuppreſſed ſome other Paſſages, for the Reaſons, which he alledges in his Preface. Thus much by the by.

(22) At Paris 1689.

[F] It ſeems the Friends of Bathyllus - - - - - - - cauſed Pylades to be baniſhed: The Intereſt of Bathyllus may authorize This Conjecture, with Submiſſion to Macrobius.] He ſays, that Pylades incurred Auguſtus's Indignation, becauſe the Diſpute between him and Hylas, who had been his Scholar, had raiſed a Sedition among the People. The anſwer aſcribed to Pylades by Macrobius, Sir, you are ungrateful, let them concern themſelves with our Quarrel (23), is the ſame with That mentioned by Dion, who reports, that this Pantomime, being recalled from his Exile, and reproved by Auguſtus for his Quarrels with Bathyllus, made anſwer, It is to your Advantage, Cæſar, that we amuſe the People, and hinder them from giving attention to other matters. Συμφέρει σοι, Καῖσαρ, περὶ ἡμᾶς τὸν δῆμον ἀνοδιατριβεσθαι (24). Expedit tibi, Cæſar, populum nobis tempus conſumere. Let who will take Macrobius's Part againſt Dion: as to myſelf, I prefer the latter; and I think it moſt probable, that it was not in Hylas's, but in Bathyllus's Favour, that the Emperor was angry with Pylades. In the Article of the latter, we ſhall ſee the Oppoſition between Dion and Suetonius.

(23) Καὶ ἐχαρίσεις βασιλεῦ ἔαεον αὐτὰς περὶ ἡμᾶς ἀσχολεῖσθαι. Macrob. Saturn. lib. 2. c. 7. in fine.

(24) Dion. lib. 54. ad Ann. 736, pag. 610.

[G] The Supplement of Moreri makes a wrong Quotation concerning Bathyllus. - - - - - - - I believe I have diſcovered the Origin of it.] Salmaſius quotes Lucian ſeveral times, who wrote a fine Treatiſe of Dancing. Among other Paſſages, he quotes That, which contains the Deſcription of the Equipage of a Pantomime, if I may be allowed the Liberty of That Word, to expreſs all the Inſtruments made uſe of in Dancing. Now, before he quotes thoſe of Lucian, he has theſe words, Lucianus de Pantomimi Scenâ & apparatu: By which, he does not mean to denote the Title of a Book, but only the Matter of a certain Paſſage he is going to quote. However, Mr Hofman was deceived by it; for, after having mentioned part of what relates to Pylades, in the Book of Salmaſius, he refers us to Lucian de Pantomimi Scenâ & appar. and, as he puts theſe words in Italic, it is not to be queſtioned but this proved a Trap, into which the Continuator of Moreri fell headlong.

BATHYLLUS, a Latin Poet, cotemporary with Virgil. See, in the Supplement of Moreri's Dictionary, what is recorded of him. We have only to add this Circumſtance to it, that the ſecond Paper, Virgil cauſed to be poſted up, began with the Diſtich, which Bathyllus had appropriated to himſelf, and that the next words were, Hos ego verſiculos feci, &c. Giraldus, who is a Modern Author, ought not to have been quoted, but Virgil's life by Donatus. I cannot tell where Charles Stephens found his Bathyllus, an excellent Tragic Poet, who did not ſucceed ſo well in Comedies.

BAUDERON (BRICE), a French Phyſician, born at Parei, in the Country of Charolois, flouriſhed towards the end of the XVIth, and beginning of the XVIIth Century. He applied himſelf with great ſucceſs to the Compoſition of Medicines, and publiſhed a Pharmacopœia [A], which has acquired a very great Authority. It

[A] He publiſhed a Pharmacopœia.] It was printed ſeveral times. John de Renou has obſerved, that the ſecond Edition is of Lyons, by Bennet Rigaud, in 1596; and that the third is of Lyons, by Peter Rigaud, in 1603 (1). He ſays alſo, that he had ſeen, in the third, the Fault he had cenſured. Note, he makes this Remark, in a Book, printed in the Year 1623, wherein he anſwers a Complaint of the Son of Bauderon, and exhorts him to be "more diligent another "time, in examining and correcting more particu- "larly the Writings of his Father; in order to ren- "der them more clear and intelligible to thoſe of "his Profeſſion, inſtead of confounding and making "them more obſcure (2)." From hence we may infer two Things: one, that our Bauderon was not living in 1623; the other, that his Pharmacopœia had been publiſhed with Additions by his Son. It was tranſlated into Latin, by an Engliſhman, whoſe Name was

(1) Renou, Antidotaire, lib. vi. c. iv. pag. 739, of the French Tranſlation, Edit. of Lyons, in 1637.

(2) Ibid. See the Article RENOU.

Digitized by Google

It is in French. He ſettled at Mâçon (a), and practiſed Phyſic there many Years. It is from this place he dates the Preface of a Latin Book, he cauſed to be printed at Paris, in the Year 1620 [B], wherein he tells us, he was eighty Years of Age, and had practiſed Phyſic 50. He was not living in the Year 1623 (b).

(a) See at the beginning of his Praxis, &c. the French Verſes of John Baptiſt Verjus, of Maſcon.

(b) See Remark [A].

was Philemon Holland. This Tranſlation was printed, with ſome other Pieces of the ſame Kind, at London, in the Year 1639, in folio, and at the Hague, in 1640, in 12mo (3).

(3) Merckl. Linden. renovatus, pag. 133.

[B] He cauſed to be printed at Paris, in 1620, a Latin Book.] It is in 4to, and contains Eight hundred Forty nine Pages. The Title is, Praxis in duos Tractatus diſtincta: in priore agitur de Febribus eſſentialibus, tam ſimplicibus, quàm compoſitis, confuſis, erraticis, malignis, ac peſtiferis, & ſymptomaticis, in genere & ſpecie curandis: in poſteriore, de Symptomatis & Morbis internis, à Capite ad pedes uſque.

BAUDIER (MICHAEL), a Gentleman of Languedoc, lived in the Reign of Lewis the XIII. He publiſhed ſeveral Books, which procured him the Character of a Copious, and Laborious, Author, and ſold very well. I know of no other than the following Books: Inventory of the General Hiſtory of the Turks (a): The Hiſtory of the Seraglio: That of the Religion of the Turks: That of the Court of the King of China: The Life of Cardinal Ximenes: The Life of the Cardinal d'Amboiſe: The Life of the Marſhal de Toiras: Hiſtory of the Miniſtry of Romieu: The Piedmontois Soldier's relation from the Camp of Turin of what paſſed in the Campaign of Italy, in the Year 1640.

(a) The 2*d Edition is of* Paris 1620, in 4to.

BAUDIUS (DOMINIC), Profeſſor of Hiſtory in the Univerſity of Leyden, was born at Liſle the eighth of April 1561. He began his Studies at Aix la Chapelle. His Father retired thither with his Family during the Cruelties of the Duke d'Alba, and died there in the Year 1576. A little time after, Baudius went to continue his Studies at Leyden, where he ſtaid but eight Months, and went afterwards to Ghent, whither his Mother had retired, and from whence ſhe ſent him to Geneva, where he ſtudied Divinity, and performed all the Exerciſes of a Student in that Science. In the Year 1583, he returned to Ghent, where he continued his Studies of Divinity under Lambert Daneau; then he went to Leyden, where, having applied himſelf fifteen Months to the ſtudy of the Civil Law, he was made Doctor of Law in June 1585. Some days after, he followed the Ambaſſadors, which the States General ſent into England, and became acquainted with ſeveral Perſons of Note, and particularly with the famous Sir Philip Sidney. He was admitted one of the Advocates of the Hague the fifth of January 1587, and, being very ſoon weary of the Bar [A], he went to travel into France [B], where he continued ten Years [C]. He found good Friends, and great Patrons, there: Achilles de Harlai, firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Paris, was one of the latter, and cauſed him to be admitted an Advocate in the Parliament in the Year 1592 (a). In 1602, Baudius went into England, with Chriſtopher de Harlai, whom Henry the Great,

(a) The Life of Baudius, which I ſhall quote hereafter, ſays 1591, but it appears, by his 23d Letter of the 1ſt Century, that it was in 1592.

[H] He was ſoon weary of the Bar.] Being a Walloon, he could not ſpeak Dutch well enough to plead with Succeſs; beſides he ſtood in need of an Employ, which would furniſh him with ready Money, and That is not to be expected from the Profeſſion of an Advocate, till after many Years. Add to this, that he a little fed himſelf with the Vain hopes of Court Preferment; and laſtly, that he was born a Poet, which, of all things in the World, gives the leaſt reliſh for the knotty Subtilties of the Bar. See the Advice Lipſius gives him to perſevere with Patience (1).

(1) In a Letter dated Oct. 1. 1587. It is the 2 th among thoſe of Baudius in Cent. IV. Edit. of Leyden, 1650.

[B] He went to travel into France.] He had a good Opinion of himſelf, and fancied, that he might obtain a public Character to travel honourably. He imagined, that the States would ſend him to the King of Navarre, if his Friends ſhould requeſt it of them. He communicated his Thoughts to Lipſius, who was then Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Holland: The Anſwer, which he received from him, taught him handſomely to know himſelf better, "Prioribus "(literis) agebas de legatiuncula ad Navarrenum: "quo fundamento, mi Baudi, aut qua ſpe? Nun- "quam id factum, & ut in tua perſona novum ex- "emplum Ordines inſtituant, cave credas. Tu hoc "& alia mereris, ſed male res humanas noſti, ſi me- "rita in his talibus appendis potius quam fortunam. "------- Hoc unum te moneo ne precipitent te "tuorum vota, pia, ſed improvida, qui ad lapſum "ſæpe impellunt dum cogunt feſtinare. Ne ſperne "honores, ſed nec avide appete, & qui eo minorem "te putant quia cares, tu eos habe pro minutis "(2). —— You mention, in your former Letters, the "Deputation to the King of Navarre, but on what "Foundation, my Friend, and with what Hopes? "There has not been hitherto any Inſtance of ſuch a "Deputation, and I would not have you think the "States will now begin to appoint one in your Fa- "vour. You deſerve indeed this, and a great deal "more, but you are little acquainted with the World, "if you think Fortune has not a greater Share in "theſe Things than Merit. ------ One thing I "would adviſe you, not to give too much ear to the "Perſuaſions of Friends, which though well intended "are yet unſeaſonable, and who, by ſpurring on too "faſt, are often the Occaſion of a Fall. Neither "deſpiſe Honours, nor court them too eagerly: And, "if any think the worſe of you, for not being poſ- "ſeſſed of them, you ought to think as meanly of "them." This is a very wiſe Anſwer; Seneca could ſay nothing more judicious. Baudius was never the better for this good Advice: We ſhall ſee, in the Remark [C], that he continued all his Life-time infatuated with Deputations and Embaſſies.

(2) Lipſius, in a Letter dated in the Month of Sept. 1588. It is the 22*th among thoſe of* Baudius, in Cent. IV.

BAUDIUS's Infatuation with the Quality of Deputy. See Remark [C].

[C] ------- where he continued ten Years.] He teſtifies, in ſome of his Letters, that he deſigned to end his Days there, provided he could meet with a tolerable Maintenance. "Ægrè enim ægrè Gal- "liam deſero, nec deſeram, niſi deſertus ab omni "ἐυελπίᾳ (3). ---- Ego hic aut alibi in hoc regno "ſedem exilii circumſpicio: ignoſcat mihi genius "patriæ, plane non teneor revertendi deſiderio (4). "------ I have no Thought of leaving France, nor "will I leave it, unleſs all manner of Hope firſt "leaves me. ------- I will either here, or in "ſome other part of this Kingdom, find out a Place "of Exile; my Country muſt pardon me, for I have "indeed not the leaſt Deſire of returning." He alledges ſeveral Reaſons to Thuanus, why he did not intend to return into Holland, and he makes uſe of

(3) Baudius. Epiſt. 7. Centur. I. pag. 21. It is dated from Caën, June 1. 1591.

(4) Id. Epiſt. 8. ejuſdem Cent. p. 22.

Digitized by Google

Great sent thither Ambassador (b). This Christopher was the only Son of the first President. At last Baudius settled at Leyden, being made Professor of Eloquence there in May 1602. After the Death of Merula, he read Lectures on History: and was allowed to do the same on the Civil Law. In the Year 1611, the States divided the Office of their Historiographer between him and Meursius (c), and, in consequence thereof, he wrote the History of the Truce (d). That Work is well penned. Baudius's Style was very polite, as appears by his Letters. His Friends published a great Number of them after his Death, and, from time to time, others have been added to them in the new Editions. He was a great Latin Poet [D]: the Verses we have of his leave no room to doubt it. He composed several kinds of them, and in great Numbers: and they have born many Editions. He (b) See Remark [C].

(c) Baudius, Epist. 98. Cent. 3.

(d) Taken from his Life printed at the beginning of his Poems and Letters. See Meursius also in Athenis Batavis, pag. 155.

Some Facts concerning Baudius's Abode in France, &c.

this as the strongest; That he could not leave France, while he hoped for any Thing there. "Nos "---- qui via non pervulgata ad bonam mentem "adspiramus non magis illic ad res tractandas idonei "censemur quam ὄνοι λύρας; vultures togati om- "nia virtutis præmia possident bonis de præsidio deje- "ctis, vel (quod deterius est) viri Mercuriales, quibus "quam bene conveniat cum genere literatorum disci- "mus magno nostro malo. Denique (quæ ratio "maxima est) non possum à vobis divelli quamdiu "speculæ locum videro (5). ---- We ---- who "quit the common Road, in our Search of Goodness, "are esteemed there as unfit for Business, as an Ass "to be a Musician; The Vultures of the long Robe "are in Possession of all the Rewards of Virtue, in "exclusion of the Good, or (which is worse) The "Men of Business and Traffic; whose Disposition towards "Men of Letters I know by sad Experience. Lastly, "(which is the strongest Motive), I cannot be torn "from you, whilst I have the least Hope remaining." He was too happy to return into a Country, which he spoke so ill of. He desired Thuanus to get him into the Family of the Prince of Dombes (6); and I believe he made the same Request to Scaliger (7). He was recommended to a worthy Gentleman, who, besides his Diet, allowed him Eight hundred Livres a Year (8), and, by that means, he found an Opportunity to insinuate himself into the Acquaintance of all the most illustrious Persons in the Parliament of Paris, which was then sitting at Tours. He wrote, from Caën, to Thuanus, that he was about a Work like That of George Cassander (9). I cannot say, whether any Body ever placed Baudius among the Reconcilers of Religion. He endeavoured to cause Lipsius to be invited to Paris, and was very much vexed, that this Affair was neglected; for he found a great Disappointment in it. He desired to see his Native Country again, without being at the Expence of the Journey, and in such a manner as might do him Honour, and afford him a Pretence to give himself some Airs: He hoped to be deputed to fetch Lipsius: Was there not reason enough to be vexed that they should be so backward at Paris to send for That great Man? "Lipsio equidem omnia sum- "ma cupio, & ob honorem hominis, & ob amorem "literarum. Sed tamen mei potissimum commodi "ratio à me ducebatur, cum tam ambitiosis flagi- "tationibus hoc agebam, ut huc evocaretur. Sua- "debat enim voluntas, & rerum mearum status ur- "gebat, ut in patriam excurrerem: quod ut sine "sumptu meo & cum nonnulla dignitate fieret, bella "occasio eveniisse videbatur, si quod spe ac votis "præceperam, publico nomine ad eum accersendum "Legatus forem (10)." When he wrote this to Thuanus, his Affairs were in a bad Condition (11); he kept in the Country, because his Purse was too low to maintain him in Paris. The following Letter (12) to the same, was wrote in Prison: He says, That no Body would be bail for him, and That, without it, Mr Servin's good Office, at whose Recommendation the Judges had been favourable to him, would be intirely useless. In 1597, he was at Paris, full of too presumptuous Pretensions. The Envoy of the United Provinces was so ill, that it was thought he could not recover. Baudius, flattering himself with the Thoughts of succeeding him, wrote immediately to Scaliger, and desired his Assistance to procure him the Character of Envoy of the States General to Henry IV (13). Scaliger returned him almost the same Answer that Lipsius had done about ten Years before (14). In the Year 1598, Baudius wrote to the two Envoys of Holland, at the Court of France, most humbly beseeching them to procure him some Employment in his Country's Service (15). In the Month of July, of the same Year, he was in Prison for bailing another inconsiderately. In carcerem conjectus sum nullum ob flagitium, sed ob inconsultam spondendi temeritatem (16). In the Year 1602, he went into England, with Christopher de Harlai, as his Secretary and Counsellor, and as a learned Man. Profectus sum in Angliam ut ei sim à consiliis, à secretis, ab interioribus studiis (17). The same Year he went into Holland, where he was made Professor. This is all his Letters have informed me of concerning his Abode in France. He thought himself so fit for an Embassy, and had so strong an Inclination this way, that his Professorship at Leyden could not cure him of That Passion. Above all, he would fain have been appointed to congratulate Henry IV, in the Name of the States General, upon the Report, that This Prince had been elected King of the Romans (18). "Si qua occasio aperiretur, ut ex- "tra ordinem publico nomine in Galliam legari pos- "sem, multum felicitati meæ gratularer. Sed hæc "ægri somnia sunt, ut & rumor ille qui pervagatur "de Gallo designato Rege Romanorum. Quid si "tamen ita esset, cum insit in incredibili sæpe ve- "ritas, & in verisimili mendacium, non disconveni- "ret magnificentiæ Illustrissimorum Ordinum, mitti "qui publicam lætitiam secunda Oratione testarenter "(19). ---- I should think myself very happy, if "I could meet with an Opportunity of being sent Em- "bassador Extraordinary into France. But these are "only a sick man's Dreams, as well as the Report "of the French King being elected King of the Ro- "mans. But, if it should be so, as we sometimes "find incredible things to be true, and probable things "to be false, it would not be unbecoming the Mag- "nificence of the High and Mighty States to testify "the public Joy on this Occasion by a complimenting "Embassy." In the Year 1607, he went into England to present his Poems to King James, and he had a great Notion of getting himself to be deputed to That Prince by the States General. For this Purpose he desired Mr Vander Myle, Barnevelt's Son-in-law, to recommend him to his Father-in-law; and did not question but that Barnevelt would invent some Pretence for this Deputation. But, not succeeding in this, Baudius was resolved to pursue his Design at all Events, and so undertook That Journey with no other Character than That of his own Deputy. "Si amplissimi Ordines aliquid huic mortali "mandare dignarentur quod nostra vox deferret ad "aures Regis, forte nihil admitterent cujus eos pœ- "nitere posset, & mihi tum gaudio tum honori esset "reip. causa legari, nec Baudii negotium omittere. "---- (20) Sin frustra mecum hæc blanda somnia "meditor ibo à me legatus (21). ---- If the Il- "lustrious States would vouchsafe to charge me with "a Compliment to the King, perhaps they would do "nothing they need be ashamed of, and it would be "both a Pleasure and an Honour to me, to represent "the Republic, and, at the same time, not to neglect my "own private Affairs.---But, if I only flatter myself "with vain Hopes, I will go my own Embassador."

[D] He was a great Latin Poet.] See the Judgment Borrichius (22) and Morhofius (23) pass on his Poems. The first Edition is not of the Year 1607 (24), but of the Year 1587: He dedicated it to Peter Regemorterus. This Epistle dedicatory is the second of Baudius's Letters. He had published a Book of Iambics, by itself, dedicated to the Cardinal de Bourbon (25). He dedicated some of his Poems to the King of England, and some others to the Prince of Wales, in the Edition of the Year 1607, and he went over Sea to make his Present to his two Patrons. He had the cruel Mortification to return Home without receiving the Value of a Farthing from those

(6) Ibid.

(7) Epist. 8. pag. 22.

(8) Scipio Sardinius. See Mr Servin's Letter to Baudius, pag. 38 of Baudius's Letters. See also pag. 41.

(9) Epist. 7. pag. 20.

(10) Epist. 41. Cent. 1. pag. 66. dated in the Month of August, 1595.

(11) See the 42*d, and* 43*d,* Letters of the first Century.

(12) It is the 44*th Letter.*

(13) Letter 55. pag. 70.

(14) See above, Citation (2).

(15) It is the 4*th Letter.*

(16) Epist. 48. pag. 74.

(17) Ib. 55. Cent. 1. pag. 80.

(18) See, above, the Remark [F] of the Article AGATHON.

(19) Epistol. 71. Cent. 1. pag. 103. dated from Leyden, March 25, 1603.

(20) Baudius Epist. 64. Cent. 2. pag. 253.

(21) Ibid. pag. 254.

(22) Dissertat. de Poët. pag. 140.

(23) Polyhist. p. 306.

(24) Mr Baillet believed it. Judgment on the Poets, n. 1385.

(25) See the 9*th Letter of* 1*st Century.*

Digitized by Google

He died at Leyden, the Twenty second of August 1613 (e). He had some mortifications in the latter Years of his Life [E]. He was none of those warlike Doctors in those two Princes; all he gained, by That Journey, was to become their Creditor, which was not worth his Expences. Here follow his Grievances and Complaints (26). " Arbitror te ex indicio famæ factum " esse certiorem, me superiori mense Augusto trans- " fretasse in magnam Britanniam, cujus & Monarchæ " de manu in manum tradidi Salisberiaci Poëmata " mea, quorum minus malum carmen heroicum ejus " honori inscribitur. Duo vero Gnomarum Iambi- " carum libri dedicati sunt Principi Britanniarum, " quicum horam amplius unam familiariter sum col- " locutus. Sed hac fine stetit omnis regia liberalitas, " nec teruncio factus sum propensior, ut vel meo " exemplo liquere possit, magnos terrarum dominos " posse perdere, non donare. Interim non pœnitet " suscepti itineris, nisi quod te non offenderim. " Nam & habeo reges debendi reos, & olim fors " fuat intelliget (26) Epist. 91. Cent. II. pag. 208. dated the 9th of May, 1608.

(e) Ibid. St Romuald in his Chronological Journal has it the 17th of June.

Ἦν ἄτην, ὁ τ' ἄειρον Ἀχαιῶν ἀδὲν ἔτισε.
Durabo, & memet rebus servabo secundis.

" - - - - - I suppose you have heard, that, in August " last, I crossed the Sea into Great Britain, to whose " King I presented my Poems, at Salisbury, with my " own Hand, the most tolerable Copy of Heroics be- " ing inscribed to him. The two Books of moral Sen- " tences, in Iambics, were dedicated to the Prince " of Wales, with whom I had the Honour of above " an Hour's familiar Conversation. But the Royal " Generosity reached no farther, nor was I one Brass " Farthing the better for it, so true is it, from my " Example, that great Princes can ruin, instead of " rewarding. However, I do not, in the least, re- " pent of my Journey, except only in not meeting " with you. For I have now those Princes in my " Debt, and perhaps they will some time or other " remember

How wrong to slight the bravest of the Greeks!
We must with Patience wait for better Times.

[E] He had some Mortifications in the latter Years of his Life.] He was obliged to sollicit a long time for an Augmentation of his Salary, though they could not be ignorant of the grievous Persecutions he suffered from his Creditors. He desired only to be admitted into the Sect of the Millenarians, that is, that his Salary might be raised to a thousand Gilders (27), which was hardly granted him, after many mean Sollicitations, when Scaliger's Pension was divided among several other Professors. " Multis collegarum aucta " sunt stipendia, quo nomine illis gratulor non invideo: " sane omnes videntur quasi facto agmine concur- " risse ad cernendam hæreditatem & legenda spolia " maximi virorum Josephi Scaligeri (28). Læsus " esse videor quod præteritis comitiis nulla sit ha- " bita Baudii ratio nec in augendo peculio, nec in " causâ ordinariatus, quum tamen multi collegarum " etiam plura obtinuerint quàm ausi erant sperare (29). " - - - - - Many of my Colleagues have had their Sti- " pends augmented, for which I congratulate, and not " envy, them: Indeed they seem to have flocked to- " gether on Purpose to enter upon the Inheritance, and " divide the Spoil of the greatest of Men, Joseph " Scaliger. I think I have been very ill used, in " not being taken notice of by the last Assembly ei- " ther as to increasing my Salary, or making mine a " Professorship in Ordinary, when several of my Col- " leagues have obtained even more than they could ex- " pect." Nay, at that very time, poor Baudius was the last, who was thought of, though he alledged, that he had contributed as much as any Body to That great Man's coming into Holland (30), At last his Stipend was raised, but they forgot his repeated Instances on another Account: he was left Professor extraordinary, though he had sollicited a long time for a Place among the ordinary Professors, that he might enjoy the right of Suffrage in the Assemblies of the University, without which he could not have any share in the Perquisites arising from Promotions. " Intellexi hesterna die ex sermone nostri " Heinsii herois, habitam esse Baudii rationem in " supplemento peculii. Quo nomine plurimum me " Collegio Curatorum, in primis autem benevolentiæ " tuæ debere confiteor. Sed si eadem opera in or- " dinem redactus essem, nulla ex parte beneficium " claudicaret. Nisi forte honorificentius est quod ex- " tra ordinem nobis ob sedulam in publico munere " obeundo curam ac diligentiam præmium sit de- " cretum, quam si adscriptus essem manipulo Ordi- " nariorum. Mihi quidem judicia bonorum & op- " timæ voluntatis conscientia potior est omni præ- " rogativa sententiæ dicendæ: tamen aliquid dandum " est famæ, & publico hominum errori (31). - - - - " I understood yesterday, from the Discourse of our " great Heinsius, that some Regard has been had to " the augmenting my Salary. On which Account I " own myself very much obliged to the College of Cu- " rators, but most of all to your particular Kindness. " If by the same means I could have been ranked " among the ordinary Professors, the Favour would " have been perfect in every Respect. Unless it be " thought more honourable to decree me an additional " Reward as Professor extraordinary, on account of " my great Care and Diligence in the Discharge of " my Office, than if I had been listed among those " in ordinary." Baudius was not grown the wiser for Lipsius's Advice. " I value the Esteem of good " Men, says he, and the Testimony of my Con- " science, more than the Privilege of giving my " Voice; but some Regard must be had to Fame, " and popular Error." Thus Men love to flatter themselves, and deceive the Public: They would enjoy Honours, and the glory of despising them, at the same time. " It is not, that we ourselves value, say " they, such a Degree of Honour, or such a Prero- " gative, which makes us sollicit for it; but, be- " cause the Vulgar will despise us, if we cannot ob- " tain it." But what had Lipsius said to Baudius? " Look on those as the lowest sort of People, who " shall despise you, because they do not see Fortune " favour you." If Baudius had made use of this wise Maxim, would he have said, that some Regard must be had to popular Opinions? To leave this moral Digression, our Professor attained the Right of voting before his Death: He was ranked, at last, in the Class of Professors in ordinary (32); but, by the Maxim, Turpius ejicitur quam non admittitur hospes, it had been better for him, if he had not been received into it; for he was degraded from it; and because, during That Suspension, he had taken Place of a Professor in ordinary at a Funeral, he was severely reprimanded in a full Academical Council, where he was cited to appear for several other Reasons (33). I say nothing of the Injunction he received, not to pronounce the Speech he had prepared against the Scholars of Leyden, who had, in a seditious Manner, committed many Disorders (34). He was also forbid to publish it. But it was published afterwards, and is a very good Piece. I have not hinted, that they took from him the Professorship of the Civil Law (35), and that the Academical Council declared to him, on his Admission into the Body of the ordinary Professors, that he should take Place last of all (36). He would not submit to That Sentence, but alledged his common Topic again, that some Regard ought to be had to the Errors of the People. " Fortiter contemno & Stoica firmitate con- " coquo ineptias illas & concertationes de loco, quum " ad rectam rationem & ad serium ac severum judi- " cium rem exigo. Sed obsecundandum est populo " & scenæ, cujus calculo magni sæpe viri ex ejus- " modi inanibus vel æstimantur vel depretiantur (37). " —— I heartily despise, and, with the Firmness of a " Stoic, am intirely unconcerned at those Follies and " Contentions about Place, upon a strict and serious Con- " sideration of the Matter according to right Reason. " But we must suit ourselves to the present Taste and " Times, according to which these Trifles have very " often a great Share in advancing or blasting the " Characters of Great Men." This is down right declaring, that he did not regulate his Conduct by right Reason, duly considered, but by popular Follies, duly considered. Let us pass to other Matters; his ill Husbandry made him fall into Poverty, and under the Hands of his Creditors, so as to occasion, in his Person, some Disgrace to the University: For he was put under Guardianship, as incapable of the Administration of his Estate. " Ut liberer ab impe- " riosa

(27) See the 6th Letter of the IIId Century, p. 324.

(28) Ibid.

(29) Epist. ult. Cent. II. pag. 313. dated Febr. 14. 1609.

(30) Pag. 324.

(31) Epist. 6. Cent. III. dated May 13, 1605.

(32) This was not yet done the 17th of March, 1610. See Letter 15. Cent. III. It was done March 23, 1611. See Letter 79, of the same Century.

(33) See Lett. 92. Cent. III, pag. 470, dated July 2. 1612.

(34) The Year 1608. See Lett. 84, and 87, Cent. II.

(35) It was without any mark of Dishonour: Nec ordine motus est quasi nescius exercendi, sed honesta missione donatus, stipendiis nullam partem imminutis, ut onere sublevaretur. Meursius Athen. Bat. pag. 156. See also Baudius, Epist. 70. Cent. III. pag. 445.

(36) Epist. 70. Cent. III.

(37) Ibid. pag. 447.

Digitized by Google

in the Cabinet, who will neither have Peace nor Truce, and who treat, as ill affected to their Country, all thoſe, who do not reject the Offers and Offices of the Mediators of Peace, as a dangerous Poiſon, and a fatal Snare. He earneſtly exhorted the States to make a Truce with Spain. It is true he durſt not put his Name to the two Speeches he publiſhed on that Subject (f). It is alſo true, that thoſe two Speeches [F], and the Verſes he made upon Spinola, excited great murmurings [G]. This pacific humour only regarded the State; for he was otherwiſe no Enemy to Poetical Quarrels: he maintained them with ſo much violence, that I do not believe, that the moſt famous Heathen Poets, for the bitterneſs of their Invectives, ſuch as Archilochus, and Hipponax, could ever heap up more abuſes, or make a more exquiſite choice of vilifying Expreſſions. He principally employed them againſt the declared Enemies of the great Scaliger. They could not bear any Contradiction, and the moſt Cunning Man would have found it a very difficult thing to ſtop their Mouths. So that there was a reciprocal Shooting, and alternate (f) He publiſhed one under the name of Latinus Pacatus, and the other under that of Julianus Rosbecius.

" rioſa auctoritate Curatoris homo jam quinquage-
" nario major, nec, ut opinor, ætatis vitio delirus,
" aut ad agnatos & gentiles remittendus - - - - - de-
" decus vero publicum fuerit nos in hoc regno li-
" bertatis adminiſtratione bonorum prohiberi quaſi
" rebus noſtris ſupereſſe non poſſimus (38). - - - - That " I may be freed from the Arbitrary Power of a Guar-
" dian, who am now above fifty Years old, nor yet,
" I think, ſuperannuated, or in ſuch a State as to
" need being put under the Care of my Relations and
" Friends. - - - - - But this is a very public Diſgrace,
" to be debarred the Adminiſtration of my own Af-
" fairs, in a Nation of Liberty, as if I had loſt my
" Senſes." We ſhall mention hereafter his keeping a Miſtreſs, which made him the Jeſt of all the Country. In a Word, this poor Man went through ſo many Vexations, that he ſays, in one of his Letters (39), he would have put an end to his Life, if God had not ordered us to keep our Station here, 'till he calls us from it. His Courage and drinking kept him up. He was not ſurprized, when the Faction of his Colleagues threatened to expel him from the Chair of the Civil Law, or to oblige him to Silence by the great Noiſe the Scholars ſhould make (40). Was it not better to live like a Hermit, than with ſuch Colleagues?

(38) Epiſt. 9. Cent. IV. dated June 13, 1613.

(39) It is the 19th of the IVth Century, p. 496.

(40) Epiſt. 81. Cent. III. p. 408, 411.

[F] The two Speeches, he made on the Peace, - - - excited great Murmurings.] We ſhould rather ſay, they had like to have ruined him; for Prince Maurice was made to believe, that he was abuſed in it, and a Report was ſpread, that the Embaſſador of France had bribed the Author, with a good Sum of Money, to write concerning the Truce. Baudius was obliged to write both to the Prince, and his Secretary, in his own Juſtification; and to deplore his ill Fortune for expoſing him to a Crowd of malicious Calumniators, or falſe Interpreters of his Words (41). " Suppoſe, ſaid he, I have not had a ſufficient Know" ledge of every particular Fact, to be able to ad-
" viſe what is moſt expedient for our Country;
" does it therefore follow, that I muſt appear to have
" acted like an ill Subject in freely ſpeaking my Senti-
" ments in ſuch a Republic as ours?" " Quod ſi
" per imprudentiam factum eſt, ut à recte ſuadendo
" mens aberraverit, quandoquidem pleraque τῶν
" καθ' ἕκαστα me latent, circa quorum cognitionem
" recti conſilii norma gubernari non poteſt: ſaltem
" nihil feciſſe arbitror præter officium boni civis,
" ſi in regno ac domicilio libertatis, quæ ſub ejus
" præſidio ſecura conquieſcit, auſus ſum uti felici-
" tate temporum, quibus & ſentire quæ velis, &
" quæ ſentias fidenter effari liceat (42)." In all Countries, there are but too many Perſons, who think no Body can differ from them on State Affairs, without being bribed by the Enemies of their Country. There are others of better Underſtanding, who know very well, that a Man may have a great Zeal for the Public Good, and, at the ſame time, be of an Opinion quite contrary to theirs; but yet make People believe, that ſuch an Opinion favours of Treaſon: they muſt do it to make others afraid to contradict them. Whether it proceeds from the Jealouſy of the Ignorant, who think, that there is no right way but their own (43), or from the Art of cunning Men, who make others believe what they do not believe themſelves, a Man is equally to be pitied, when he finds himſelf expoſed, as Baudius was, to the Fury of Slanderers. " Illud in univerſum obtinet, ſays he, vitio humana-
" næ malignitatis, ut nihil tam commode dicatur à
" viris alicujus famæ & exiſtimationis quin læva in-
" terpretatione depravari poſſit. - - - - - Quid porro
" abſurdius eo genere hominum qui me rumoribus
" diſtulerunt, quaſi redemptus eſſem pretio ab am-
" pliſſimo Præſide & Legato Jeanninio ut ſcilicet
" inanes logos pro inſigni liberalitate rependerem, &
" ſuccenturiarer doctor umbraticus viro in ſummis
" rebus trito ac ſubacto (44)? - - - - - It is univer-
" ſally true, ſuch is the Malice of Mankind, that the
" beſt Thing which can be ſaid by Men of Character
" and Reputation is liable to Miſconſtruction. - - - - -
" But what can be more abſurd, than the loading me
" with this Calumny, as if I had been bribed by the " illuſtrious Preſident, and the French Embaſſador,
" in order, it ſeems, to repay them empty Words for
" their great Liberality, and for me, who am only
" an obſcure Doctor, to be added as an Aſſiſtant to
" one, who has been ſo thoroughly verſed and em-
" ployed in the greateſt Affairs?"

(41) See Letters 2, 3, and 4. Cent. III.

(42) Epiſt. 4 Cent. III. pag. 320.

(43) Homine imperito nunquam quidquam iniuſtius, Qui niſi quod ipſe facit nihil rectum putat. Terent. Ad Ipb. act. 1. ſc. 2. Mr Morus, Præf. Notar. in Nov. Teſt. ſays, that inſtead of imperito it ſhould be ſemidocto. It is certain, that, in the Matter here in queſtion, there are no ſuch falſe and raſh Judges, as the half Learned.

(44) Epiſt. 3. Cent. III. pag. 319. See alſo pag. 321.

[G] And the Verſes which he made for Spinola.] The Marquis of Spinola went into Holland before there was any thing concluded, either about a Peace or Truce. Baudius printed a Poem in Praiſe of That Marquis; but he ſuppreſſed the Copies of it, 'till the Buſineſs, which brought him thither, ſhould more plainly appear. He only gave ſome of them to his moſt intimate Friends. " Mitto tibi exem-
" plum carminis quo gratulatus ſum Marchioni Spi-
" nolæ, quum in hanc regionem illius ergo adveniret.
" Curavi, ut vides, illud typis excudendum. Sed ex
" conſilio amicorum hactenus aſſervavi intra penetra-
" lia Veſtæ, nec communicavi niſi cum pauciſſimis in-
" timæ admiſſionis. Certe non eſt viſum conſultum, ut
" ipſi traderetur. Non quod illic quidquam ſit indig-
" num conſtanti vero vel bono cive: ſed quia non vide-
" tur, &c. (45). But yet it was known, that this Poem was printed; and the Author was like to have been baniſhed for it. He eſcaped that Puniſhment, only becauſe there were ſome equitable Perſons among thoſe, who examined that Piece of Poetry. Penè mihi ſtetit exilio hæc editionis feſtinatæ temeritas, niſi ſanior pars inſpecto carmine me omni culpa liberaſſet (46). A great many others would have pronounced, that no Body could praiſe That Marquis, without being a Traitor to the State, and a Penſioner of the Court of Spain. Pravo & ſiniſtro ingenio nati ſunt qui crimen & pene perduellionis ſcelus putant, ſi quis aſſurgere audeat in laudem hoſtis. Tales multos alit hæc ætas, & quidem inter eos ſunt qui ſedent ad clavum reip. ſub quorum maxillis edendum (47). They would, at leaſt, have appeared, outwardly, of Opinion, that whoever does not ſpeak, or write, according to their Inclinations, and prejudiced Notions, muſt neceſſarily be a Traitor: And this it is not to conſider, that Reaſon has different Faces, and does not appear in the ſame Light to all ſorts of Underſtandings. There were even particular Excuſes for Baudius: He was a good Poet, and could not avoid thinking on all remarkable Subjects; the Marquis of Spinola's coming into Holland, was a Subject of that Nature; it was, therefore, very poſſible, that Baudius made Verſes on that Marquis, only to exerciſe his Muſe on a noble Matter, without any ill Thoughts againſt the State. This was not only very poſſible, but alſo very probable. Beſides, the Expectation of ſome Piſtoles, as a Reward for ſome Verſes, is very conſiſtent with the moſt perfect Loyalty. The worſt that could be ſaid of him, was, that he

(45) Epiſt. 86. Cent. II. pag. 287.

(46) Ibid. pag. 288.

(47) Ibid. See alſo Letter 95. Cent. II. p. 302.

Digitized by Google

(g) She was delivered of a Daughter, after the death of Baudius. See Casaub. Epist. 794. pag. 1012.

alternate Broadsides, between the University of Leyden, and the College of Antwerp [H]. I have not found, that Baudius makes any mention of his Children; but I know that he left his last Wife big with Child (g), and that he was at least twice married [I], and that this was not the most unexceptionable part of his Life. Wine he had not the Zeal of the Times, that is, such a Temper of Mind as to take Fire, and startle at the very hearing the Word Spaniard. He kept his Affections cool, and wished well to the Public calmly, and without Passion, and only according to Reason. "Ego "tamen si lentum hoc negotium sperato pacis eventu "concludetur, ut ex intimis sensibus voveo, non "dubitabo virum (Marchionem Spinolam) affari, & "quidquid hujus est muneris meque omnem ipsi of-"ferre, salvo jure patriæ libertatis (48). —— But if (48) Ibid. "this tedious Treaty ends in a Peace, as I heartily "wish it may, I shall make no Scruple to apply to him, "(the Marquis Spinola,) and offer all the Service "I am capable of, consistently with the Liberty of my "Country." But the Public has occasion for quite another Disposition, That of an artificial and blind Hatred. Discourses, which feed this Passion, are at least Appurtenances of Maxims of State, Arcanorum Imperii.

[H] There was a reciprocal Storm, and an alternative Assault, between the Univerfity of Leyden, and the College of Antwerp.] See the Book entituled, Væ Victis, lusus Rhetorum advaticorum adversus Leydenses eructationes, munerario Godefrido Vrancken. It is the true Name of a Jesuit, mentioned by Alegambus (49); and yet he ascribes the Væ Victis to the Jesuit Maximilian Habbeque (50). It was printed in the Year 1609. There is mention made in it of a Writing, which I have not seen, published, the Year before, by the Jesuits of Antwerp, against one Schlassius. It would require a long List, to give the Titles of all the Pieces, printed at that Time, in the Spanish Netherlands, against the Professors of Leyden, and in Holland, against the Jesuits. Baudius was one of those, whom the Jesuits attacked after the most cruel Manner: He is terribly lashed in the Væ Victis. Scribanius did not spare him in the Year 1607, in his Dominici Baudii Gnomæ Commentario illustratæ. Baudius did not deny, but that he had wrote too passionately against the Jesuits, and seemed to be troubled for it; he hoped also, that Persons of Candor would not take rigorously, what he had only expressed according to poetical Licence. Here is what he wrote to Swertius (51): "Utinam rebus integris, te monitore & "consiliario essem usus! liber noster, si non melior, "saltem securior & latioribus auspiciis exisset in lu-"cem. Multaque nimis licenter effusa, vel privatis "laribus inclusissem ne temere erumperent, vel, quod "tutissimæ cautionis genus est, tardipedi deo com-"misissem. Nunc post culpam admissam serio ringor, "verum haud gravate veniam impetraturus confido "apud elegantioris notæ judices & benignos rerum "æstimatores, qui non abrepti præjudiciis aut parti-"um studiis, in causæ cognitione diligenter expen-"dent, quantum publicis legibus ac moribus licentiæ "Poëtarum concedatur. —— Ante omnia & vellem & "fuerat melius, non tetigisse unctos. Nec pruden-"tissimo consilio factum esse confiteor, quod tela "strinxerim in universam Sotericorum sodalitatem. "Sunt enim ex iis multi, quos ob doctrinam & vir-"tutis ac probitatis indolem revereor atque obser-"vo. —— I wish I had asked your Advice, before I "had taken one Step. My Book, if not with Improve-"ments, would, at least, have been published with "greater Pleasure and Security. Many things, too "freely touched, would either have been kept still "private, or, which is the safest Way, committed to "the Flames. I now heartily repent of my Fault, "but hope to meet with no small Favour from Judges "of the highest Rank, who estimate things fairly, and "without being influenced by Prejudice or Party, will "carefully consider, what Allowances our Laws and "Customs always make to poetical Licence. —— A-"bove all I wish, and it had better, I never had "meddled with the Jesuits. Nor was it prudent to "attack their whole Society. For there are a great "many of them, whom, for their Learning, Virtue, "and Probity, I reverence and esteem." In another Letter, wherein he owns, that his Stile was too passionate, he hopes, that the Rage, which his Enemies express against him, will excuse him with equitable Persons. He goes on, and says, "I have just "now read a Book, published against me, which is "altogether interwoven with ridiculous Lies, though "the Title seemed only to promise the Pen of a "Friend (52)." Serio pœnitet quædam nimiæ acerbitatis foras erupisse, quæ domi continuisse, & vellem & fuerat melius. —— Verum ut rem natam intelligo, non erit mihi sollicite causa dicenda apud æquos judices. Ipsa enim adversariorum procacitas & convitia sine more effusa largam materiam mihi præbent non tantum ad sperandam absolutionem, sed ad consequendam laudem moderationis ac modestiæ. Vidi enim & evolvi hesterna die à capite ad calcem librum in me conjectum, &c (53). Several Reasons shew, that the Book he had just read, was the Commentary in Gnomas (54). Now that Commentary was a Work of Scribanius (55), and yet Baudius ascribes it to Rosweide, with so much Persuasion, that he declares, nothing can alter that Belief: For, says he, this resembles the other Writings of that Jesuit, like two Drops of Water; there appears the same Genius, Humour, Stile, and Character. We may conclude from hence, by the way, that the best Judges of Stile may be mistaken in their Opinion of this sort of Likeness, and in the Consequences they draw from thence, as to Authors of Books. Non possum demoveri ab ea sententia quin existimem ac prorsus persuasum habeam, editorem hujus præclari fœtus esse Patrem Heribertum Rosweidum. Nam non ovum ovo, nec aqua è puteo tam similis est aquæ, quam liber iste refert nobis indolem, genium & characterem aliorum librorum, qui ab eodem Patre sunt expositi (56). What is remarkable in it is, that Baudius, who feared to find, in the Commentary on his Gnomæ, the Infirmities of which he knew himself guilty, had, as he said, the Comfort to find nothing in it, but such Falsities as were notorious to all those, who knew him. Verebar ne curiosus alienarum papularum observator, ea mihi ex vero objiceret, quæ serio conscientiam remorderent, & diligentius vivendi necessitatem imponerent. Nunc quæ de me inclementer dicit, pleraque talia sunt, ut risum non bilem moveant iis qui me norunt, nec ad alios judices provocandum habeo, quàm qui oculis & sensu communi non destituuntur (57). It is commonly the Fault of Satirists; they are too sparing in the Article of Spy-Money; they impute Crimes which are false, and omit those which are true. Baudius disowns the German Author, who had made his Apology in the Chair, against the Commentator on the Gnomæ. "Quidam parasitaster par-"vulus è Germania huc adveniens, me multum recla-"mante, impetravit à Senatu nostro Academico, ut "sibi liceret publice pro mea dignitate scilicet adver-"sus illum declamare. Ac ne quid ad summam fini-"steritatis deesset, aut ut caput unctius referret, "etiam orationem illam in vulgus edendam curavit. "Testari possum ex animi sententia, mihi factum istud "vehementer displicuisse. Satius enim erat me de-"seri ab omni patrocinio, quam à tam infirmo tibi-"cine causam nostram sustentari (58). —— A cer-"tain insignificant Sycophant coming hither from Ger-"many, obtained leave of our University, in spite of "all I could say to the contrary, to make a Declama-"tion in my Defence, against that Author. And "that he might completely shew his Awkwardness, "or make a sprucer Appearance, he has published "that Oration. I can truly say, I am exceedingly "displeased with this Performance. For it is much "better to be destitute of all Defence, than to take "up with so poor a one as this." I must further observe, that the Invectives, Baudius seems most to repent of, are those which relate to Princes and crowned Heads. He did not spare even the King of France, who was an Ally of the Republic. Sed horrifica dictu sunt quæ in Lojolitas, in editorem Amphitheatri, in impurissimum Schoppium stringimus. Atque utinam hoc fine sese cohibuisset stylus nostri procacitas. Sed in Pontificem, in Philippos, in Archiduces, in partium duces, evomit virus acerbitatis suæ, nec parcit ipsi Liligero regi (59).

[I] He was at least twice married.] He speaks of his Wife's Death, in a Letter of the tenth of March, 1610 (60), and he writes the Twenty first of February, 1613, that he was married again. Opinor jam te

(49) Bibli. Soc. Jes. pag. 162.

(50) Ibid. pag. 337.

(51) Letter 86. Cent. II. pag. 286, 287.

(52) He says the same thing, pag. 276, concerning the Commentary in Gnomas.

(53) Epist. 75. Cent. II. pag. 269. dated Nov. 10, 1607.

(54) See Roualt's Chronological Journal, June 17, concerning that Book, and occasionally concerning Baudius.

(55) See Alegambeus, pag. 72.

(56) Epist. 75. Cent. II. pag. 270.

(57) Epist. 86. Cent. II. pag. 288.

(58) Ibid.

(59) Epist. 58. Cent. III. p. 406.

(60) It is the 14*th, of* IIId Century.

Digitized by Google

Wine and Women were the two Rocks, on which his Reputation was ſhipwrecked [K]: This te ex fama audiiſſe mè choro maritorum iterum eſſe adſcriptum (61). I have not had time to look over every Letter, Page by Page, ſo that I cannot tell whether he mentions the Time, when he married his firſt Wife, or whether he had any Children by her, or not: but I know, that this Wife had Children by another Husband; for Baudius mentions a Son, and a Daughter of his Wife (62), and complains alſo of the Daughter's ill Houſwifry (63). Perhaps the Son-in-Law, which Theophilus gives to this Profeſſor, might be this bad Houſwife's Husband. It may be alſo, that, for want of Attention, Theophilus calls him Son-in-law, who was only privignus, the Wife's Son (64). The Author of the Væ Victis obſerves, that Baudius had no Children.

(61) Epiſt. 3. Cent. IV.

(62) Epiſt. 8. Cent. IV. pag. 486, & alibi.

(63) Epiſt. 22. Cent. III. p. 344.

(64) See above, at the end of the Remark [A] of the Article BALZAC (J. L. Guez de).

Natura quamvis liberos neget tibi
Effœte BURDI, nec tibi BAUDI, tua
Similes parentis Hecuba filios creet (65).

Tho' ſterile Burdius no Offspring knows;
Nor Hecuba, whom for his Wife he choſe,
To Baudius his Infant Likeneſs ſhews.

(65) In Epicithari mate pag. 13.

[K] Wine and Women were the two Rocks, on which his Reputation was ſhipwrecked.] Since this Remark will be ſomewhat long, I ſhall divide it into Sections.

I. As to the firſt, he confeſſes the Fact: See three fine Paſſages on that Subject, at the Head of his Letters, extracted from his own Letters. I only relate the firſt and ſecond. "Concurrant omnes, ſays "he (66), non dicam ut ille Satyricus, augures, haruſpices, ſed quidquid eſt ubique hominum curioſorum, qui in aliorum acta tam ſedulo inquirunt, "ut ea fingant quæ nunquam fuerunt, nihil inveniet "quod in nobis carpere poſſit livor, quam quod interdum ad exemplum priſci Catonis liberalius invitari nos patimur, nec ſemper conſiſtimus intra "ſobrietatem veterum Sabinorum. Huic quoque peccatulo indies moderari conamur, & pulchre procedit. —— I defy, not only as the Satiriſt ſays, Augurs, and Soothſayers, but alſo all inquiſitive Perſons whatever, who pry ſo induſtriouſly into other Peoples Affairs, and forge Facts which never happened, to diſcover, if they can, any thing in my Character, worthy of Cenſure, except my now and then indulging a little too freely, after the Example of old Cato, and breaking through the ſober Rules of the Sabines. And even this ſmall Fault I am every Day endeavouring to mend, and have gained a good deal of Ground." He expreſſes this with a better Grace, in the ſecond Paſſage: "Malignitas obtrectatorum nihil aliud in nobis ſugillare poteſt quàm quod nimis commodus ſim convivator, & interdum largius adſpergor flore Liberi patris (67). —— The moſt malicious can accuſe me of nothing but being too good a Companion, and ſometimes taſting a little too freely of the Favours of Father Bacchus." Since he has confeſſed his Fault, there is no occaſion to produce Scriverius as a Witneſs againſt him, who ſuppoſes, that Charon, having given Baudius his Choice, either to remain in the other World, or to return into this, on condition to drink Water, and take his firſt Wife again, Baudius choſe the former (68). Here is already ſomething relating to the ſecond Head; Scriverius would not have made ſuch a Suppoſition, if Baudius had lived well with his firſt Wife.

(66) In Epiſtola quadam ad Curatores Academiæ. It is the 33*d of Cent. III. of Edit. of* 1650, the Paſſage is at pag. 361.

(67) Epiſt. 26. Cent. III. p. 350.

(68) See Dominici Baudii Amores, pag. 14.

II. Never had any Man leſs need to be comforted than he, when he loſt her. His good Friend Heinſius could not forbear being merry upon it, both in Proſe and in Verſe, which he addreſſed to him; he wrote to Grotius on the ſame Subject, and told him, That our Age did not come ſhort of That, which had ſeen Xenophon make an end of his Sacrifice, notwithſtanding the News of his Son's Death; nor of That, which had ſeen Q. Martius go from the Burial of his Son to the Senate. "Baudius, ſays he to him, made "himſelf drunk the Day he buried his Wife, and "left nothing to do for the Comforters; he had effectually adminiſtered to himſelf, before their coming, "all the Conſolation it was poſſible for them to think "of. The emptineſs of his Purſe is much more "grievous to him, than the Vacancy he has met "with in his Bed. I have helped him to ſome Money, "which has revived all his Spirits; for, inſtead of That "melancholy Air, and thoſe down-caſt Looks, which "appeared in him, as if his Wife had been ſtill living, "I ſay, inſtead of that great Sadneſs, I perceived him "raiſed all at once to a ſort of Gaiety." Baudius n.ſter eo ipſo quo uxorem extulit die vinum guſtare voluit —— omnia ſolatia quæ exulceratis adhiberi mentibus ſolent ipſe occupavit. Nihil amicis in luctu reliquit quod vel imputare illi poſſent —— Stabat antea demiſſo vultu ac triſti: uxorem ejus vivere adhuc credidiſſes (69). Vix ſpes melior affulſit, reſpirare cœpit, & conſtanter multa de fragilitate vitæ diſputare: nemo funus eſſe in ædibus exiſtimaſſet (70). All theſe Pieces of Heinſius are diverting. But this Inſenſibility was not the greateſt Fault Baudius committed, in relation to that Sex. We ſhall ſee, preſently, more unlucky Incidents.

(69) Ibid. pag. 12, 13.

(70) Ibid.

As ſoon as he came into France, he ſtopped ſo long at Caën, that there was a Report he was detained there by a Miſtreſs. Non poſſe me hinc à mulierecula divelli quam impotenti amore depeream (71). He denied it, and ſaid, that the Dangers, which he had met with in the Journey, were the Cauſe of ſo long a ſtay. He ſaid alſo, that, in ſpite of the Oppreſſions of the Profeſſors, he might, at leaſt, have taught the Civil-Law at Caen, if he had not engaged himſelf elſewhere. He gives a very bad Idea of That Univerſity, as to the Faculty of the Civil-Law. "Timuerunt ſibi Juridici Profeſſores ne ego —— eos de "imperitiæ poſſeſſione dejicerem. —— Præſes de quo "retuli verbis acribus homines iſtos caſtigavit eoſque "aſſimilavit Draconi Heſperidum hortorum. Tenes "quorſum. Quid multa? frementibus miſeris iſtis "leguleis partim odio religionis, partim conſcientia "Inſcitiæ ſuæ, perfectum eſt ut qui Leidæ gradum "accepiſſent, legitimè promoti videantur (72). —— "Theſe Profeſſors of Civil-Law were afraid that I "—— ſhould diſpoſſeſs them of their Ignorance. —— "The Preſident, I told you of, ſeverely reprimanded them, and compared them to the Dragon, who watched the Heſperian Gardens. You know on what Account. In ſhort; notwithſtanding the Oppoſition of thoſe wretched half Civilians, partly from the Quarrel of Religion, and partly from the Conſciouſneſs of their own Ignorance, it was eſtabliſhed, that they, who had taken their Degree at Leyden, ſhould be allowed as regular."

(71) Epiſt. 16. Cent. I. pag. 36.

(72) Epiſt. 23. Cent. I. pag. 45. See alſo his Poem In tres Juris Perverſores, ibid. p. 35.

Scriverius believed, that Lipſius meant Baudius, when he wrote to Barclay, in the Year 1599. "Scribit ad me, queritur, ſed parum apertè, & ulcus "aliquod fermonum eâ veſte tegi equidem odoror. "Si leve curatu, parum eſt: ſin pravum aliquod & "δυσίατον (inſanabile) doleo cauſſa præclari ingenii quod ſeſe (ah temere, ah ſtulte) in barathrum "& præceps dedit. Quis illigatum te triformi Pegaſus expediet Chimerâ? Sed meliora opto (73). "—— He writes to me, and complains, but with ſo much Reſerve, that I ſuſpect ſome Ulcer at the bottom. If it may be eaſily healed, the Matter is not great; but if it be of a malignant Kind, and incurable, I ſhall be ſorry for the ſake of ſo ingenious a Man, that he ſhould, fooliſhly, and inconſiderately, throw himſelf headlong into ſuch a Pit. "Where will you find a Bellerophon to extricate you "from this monſtrous Chimæra? But I hope better Things." This ſavours of a Man drawn into, or deeply engaged in, an unhappy Intrigue.

(73) See Amores Baudii at the beginning.

To end with the worſt part, I ſhall anticipate the Order of Time, and here obſerve, that he had made a Promiſe of Marriage, which he did not keep. —— When he found himſelf a Widower, and preſſed both by his Poverty and Conſtitution, to ſeek another Wife, he charged two of his Friends to inform him of the Circumſtances of his former Miſtreſs, and declared to them, that, if ſhe was rich, he was ready to marry her before any other. He did not queſtion but that he was ſtill beloved by her. "Veteribus "amoribus meis ex animo volo, nec ullam præoptaverim, ſi ad cæteras dotes accedat etiam copioſus "imber qui olim per impluvium defluxit in ſinum "Danaes. —— Niſi moleſtum eſt, velim aliquid "temporis impartiare diſquiſitioni, quo loco res ejus "ſitæ ſint. Nam quin vivat noſtri memor, & non "immunis amorum, nullus dubito (74)." The Anſwer he received, was a Proof that he had too good an Opinion of himſelf; the Lady declared, ſhe did not love great Drinkers. Baudius apprehended her meaning, (74) Epiſt. 22. Cent. III. p. 346, dated June 1. 1610.

Digitized by Google

This expoſed him to Contempt, and Public Laughter. His very Friends made ſmart meaning, and his Conſcience was eaſed by that Refuſal; for he made a Scruple of breaking his Promiſe; but now he found himſelf free, ſince ſhe would not accept of him. "Etſi ſincero affectu nympham il- "lam proſequor, tamen magis liberandæ fidei reli- "gione, & veterum repromiſſionum ultro citroque "ſtipulatarum memoria adductus ſum, ut conſortium "ejus ambire non dedignarer, quam formæ leno- "cinio, vel divitiarum conditione (75). —— Gaudeo "me bona cum nymphæ ejus gratia liberatum eſſe "nexu veteris promiſſi, καὶ διπλεύρᾳ συναλλάγ- "ματος, cujus adhuc me nonnulla inceſſebat ſuper- "ſtitio (76)." It is remarkable, that all theſe Scruples of Conſcience did not hinder him from annexing a Condition to the Deſign of executing his promiſe. Which Condition was, that his former Miſtreſs ſhould be rich (77), or elſe he would not marry her; and, to ſoften what might be too hard in this Reſolution, he added, that, in this, he only conſidered her Intereſt; for, ſaid he, would it not be very injurious to her, to bring me Children, who could expect no other Inheritance from us, but Poverty and Hunger? "Tu "vero me tacente ſatis intelligis quam parum ex uſu "utriuſque foret, τὸν λιμὸν καὶ τὴν πενίαν (78), "infelici contubernio invicem ſociari. Quocirca niſi "tam bene fundatum ſit patrimonium amicæ, quam "unice diligo, ut ſine notabili incommodo noſtris "difficultatibus mederi queat, in rem communem eſt "ut aliud mihi ſubſidium proſpiciam. Quod ne in "eam partem velit interpretari, quaſi quidquam de- "trimenti ceperit amor ille priſtinus, quo juvenculam "forma & ætate florentem ſum complexus, teſtor ex "animi ſententia me hoc ejus cauſa facere, ne li- "beros educemus in ſpem egeſtatis atque eſuritio- "nis (79)."

(75) Epiſt. 26. Cent. III. p. 349.

(76) Ibid. 349.

(77) She was then a Widow.

(78) That is, Hunger and Thirſt.

(79) Epiſt. 24. Cent. III. p. 347.

He made his Addreſſes elſewhere, viz. to one, whoſe Name was Sophia, in whom he found nothing good but her Riches. She had a very bruriſh Father, from whom he received a thouſand Hardſhips; and ſhe ſeconded her Father for ſome time, and complained of having been ſtolen: Very probably, ſhe had been taking a Ramble for ſome Days with Baudius, which was then a piece of Gallantry in that Country. Baudius thought this Complaint very ridiculous, and moſt likely to ſtain Sophia's Reputation; and he ſaid, by way of Alluſion to Fimbria's Proceſs againſt Scævola, that ſhe had nothing to complain of, except that the Weapon was not thruſt up to the Hilt. "Nihil habet quod de nobis queratur, niſi forte "velit eam intentare accuſationem quam adverſus "Scævolam ----- quod ſcilicet non totum telum "corpore receperit (80)." Sophia was pacified, and ſeemed to diſapprove her Father's Brutality. Baudius was in Raptures at this, and ſpoke of nothing but Marriage, though he knew very well, that this Miſtreſs had no other Merit but a good Portion. The laſt Obſtacle was removed, which was a Promiſe of Marriage, Baudius had made to a proſtituted Servant, who ſued him on his Promiſe (81), and I believe, that, after this, the Marriage with Sophia was conſummated. The following Paſſages prove This Lady's ill Qualities, and her Father's Brutality. "Heſterna die graviter apud Recto- "rem queſtus ſum de ------ Renovavi etiam ve- "teres offenſas quod me in cauſa deſipientis Sophiæ "allocutus eſſet tanquam vitæ iratum, & candidatum "patibuli. Sed Sophiam iſtam ſuis moribus ulciſcen- "dam permitto, ſi quidem rata habet quæ barbarus "parens in me ruſtice & inciviliter deſignavit: nam "contrarii rumores ad me deferuntur. Nonnulli "dicunt eam honorifice & amice de nobis loqui: "quod ſi ita eſt, recte & ordine facere ipſam arbitror, "καὶ γὰρ τόγε λωΐον εἶη, & tunc paratus ſum "omnium præteritorum memoriam fideli amneſtia ex "animo delere, καὶ μὴ μνησικακεῖν. Sin talia "flagitia probat, nunquam eam ſermone fuero dig- "natus. Sunt enim qui dicant me ab ipſa proſcindi "tam cruentis convitiis, quaſi crimen ſit quod vivam "(82). ------ Yeſterday I complained heavily to "the Rector concerning. ------ I even ripped up "former Grudges, and accuſed him of having treated me, in the Affair of the fooliſh Sophia, as "One angry with Life, and a Candidate for the Gallows. As for Sophia, I leave her to the Puniſhment "of her own Manners; if ſhe indeed approves of the "rude and uncourteous Treatment I have met with "from the Brute her Father; for I have been told "the contrary. Some ſay, that ſhe ſpeaks reſpect- "fully and friendly of me; if This be true, I think "ſhe behaves with juſtice and decency; and I am then "ready to forget every thing paſt. But, if ſhe ap- "proves of ſuch vile Treatment, I will never con- "deſcend to ſpeak to her more. For I am informed "by ſome, that She reproaches me with ſuch bitter- "neſs, as if it were a Crime, that I am alive." Behold a good-natured Man! he had already ſhewn, that he was eaſy to be pacified. "Reverſus domum "------ optata omnia comperi de mea Sophia, "quæ me abſente ancillam lecti & arcanorum ſociam "miſit ad patrem ſcitatum -------- ſuper noſtra "majeſtate, an durius accepiſſem plenam familiarita- "tis repulſam, & an fera beſtia factus eſſem, amiſſa "voluntate revertendi. Ego vero oculum mihi ex- "ſculpi malim, quam pati ut tam opima conditio "elabatur è manibus (83). --------- Returning "home, I found every thing relating to my Sophia "juſt as I could wiſh: She had ſent her Chamber- "Maid and Confidant to her Father, to enquire ---- "concerning My Majeſty; whether I reſented her "abſolutely denying to admit of my Familiarity, and "whether I was ſo furiouſly enraged, as to reſolve "never to return. For my own part, I would ſooner "loſe an Eye, than miſs ſo fair an Opportunity of "being happy." This Good-nature would be leſs ſhameful, were it not for the Poverty, to which Baudius was reduced, and the great Eſtate of His Sophia. We meet with the following Words, in the Ninty fifth Page of the Dominici Baudii amores, and in the firſt Letter of the IVth Century, Page 479. This Letter was written the Twenty firſt of July 1612. "Plerique putant hanc labem non alia condi- "tione deletum iri, quam ſi inſulſum pecus uxorem "duxero, cui præter Sophiæ nomen nihil adeſt hu- "mani cordis. An ideo pereundum erat Pompeio "magno, ſi Lucullus non eſſet luxurioſus? Ego in- "vitam cogere non poſſum ut velit eſſe conjux in- "victi Jovis, & tanti non eſt ut vel illi, vel furioſo "parenti ſupplicem. Dos tamen non eſſet adſpernan- "da, niſi marita foret, & poſſet abſque muliebri "capite contingere. Poſtquam -------- reverſus "fuerit, perſuaſu amicorum decretum eſt mihi jacere "noviſſimam aleam, & exquirere an mecum lege fi- "delis καὶ ἀδόλου ἀμνηστείας paſciſci velit. Para- "tus ſum ex animi ſententia conceptis verbis jurare μὴ "μνησικακεῖν: dum & ipſa levitatis culpam agnoſ- "cat, & parentis furias non approbet. Si tergi- "verſabitur, relinquam illam ulciſcendam ſuis mori- "bus, & aliam conſortem invenero, quæ melius in- "telliget ſuam felicitatem. -------- Many think I "can never wipe off this Diſgrace, but by marrying "This Fooliſh Creature, who has nothing of Human, "but The Name of Sophia. Would Pompey the Great "have been ruined, if Lucullus had not been luxu- "rious? I cannot compel her, againſt her Will, to "be the Wife even of Jupiter himſelf; and it is not "worth my while humbly to ſue either to Her, or "her mad-brained Father. Her Fortune, I confeſs, "is not deſpicable, could it be obtained without mar- "rying, and having the Woman into the bargain. "When he returns, I have reſolved, by the Advice "of my Friends, to make one Effort more, and try, "whether we can come to terms of Agreement, on "condition of fergetting every Thing paſt. I am "ready, on my part, ſincerely to ſwear an eternal "Oblivion; provided She acknowledges her own Le- "vity, and does not approve of the injurious Treat- "ment of her Father. If ſhe ſhall refuſe to comply "with this Offer, I will leave her to the Puniſhment "of her own Manners, and look out for another "Wife, who ſhall better underſtand her own Hap- "pineſs." Some Days before he had more Courage. He had a good Opinion of himſelf: He ſays, in the ſame Letter, that he is not ſo exhauſted, but he may yet obtain a Woman of Merit, though he has been ſo fooliſh, as to pay a long Courtſhip to an impertinent Xantippe. "Non adeo exarui ex amoribus & "humoribus, ut bona mea ſapienti fœminæ vendi- "tare non poſſim, etiamſi tam inſipienter circa "Sophiam deliraverim, ut mihi Socratica fides ob- "jecta ſit (84)." He was reſolved to make a freſh Attempt; but was ſo much diſguſted at This fooliſh Creature, and her bruriſh Father, that he almoſt wiſh-

(80) Epiſt. ad Grotium, in Baudii Amoribus, pag. 85.

(81) See Letter 93, of Cent. III. p. 465; and Letter 18, of Cent. IV. pag. 496.

(82) Epiſt. 90. Cent. III. p. 471, dated July 2. 1612.

(83) Epiſt. 92. Cent. III. p. 463, dated March 3, 1612.

(84) Ibid. pag. 480.

ed

Digitized by Google

smart Jests upon it, which have been printed. Nevertheless, we must not believe ed to be again refused. "Heri mihi Heinsius noster "adfuit, & rogatu meo adductus, partim sua sponte "incitatus, recepit in se munus colloquendi serio cum "Festo Hommio περὶ τῆς Σοφίας. Is tenet cla- "vum imperii, & patris animum habet in sua manu. "Sed summa cum æquitate exspecto quemlibet even- "tum, & prope est ut malim repulsam, ita me tœdet "& contumeliarum parentis, & insulsorum filiæ mo- "rum, quæ præter nomen non possidet micam sa- "lis (85). —— Our Friend Heinsius was with me "yesterday, and has undertaken, partly at my Re- "quest, and partly of his own meer Motion, to talk "seriously with Festus Hommius about Sophia. I "am little sollicitous for the Event; nay I almost wish "to be refused, so tired am I of the Father's contu- "melious Behaviour, and the folly and stupidity of "the Daughter, who has not common Sense, and is a "Woman only in Name."

(85) Epist. ultima Cent. III. p. 475, 476, dated July 11, 1612.

We are now come to the most disgraceful Scene of All. Baudius kept a Concubine for some time. She was a Servant-Maid, who was common to several Students, and who, finding herself with Child, fathered it on Baudius alone. She insisted likewise, that he had promised her Marriage, and summoned him before the Judges, to oblige him to perform his Promise. This Affair was both matter of Scandal and Laughter; but they, who know the World, will easily believe, that it occasioned more of the latter, than the former. Baudius's Superiors could do no less than disgrace him, by suspending him from his Office. The Railleries, to which he found himself exposed, made him take a Journey to Ghent. "Inter alias causas quæ me moverant ut in viam me "darem hæc fuit non infima, ut prudenti absentia "subterducerem me ab importunis conjugii disparis "congratulationibus, quibus cottidie aures meæ cir- "cumsonabantur (86). —— Among other reasons, "which induced me to take a Journey, This was not "the least, that, by prudently absenting myself, I "might avoid the Congratulations on an unequal Match, "with which I was perpetually teized." He seemed to question, whether This Servant-Maid was with Child; but he was afraid, that, if she should lye-in, she should swear the Brat to Him; for which reason he desired his Friends to order it so, that such a Slut as she should not be admitted to take her Oath; and offered voluntarily to do whatever the Laws of Humanity required; that is, to take care of the Child, which should be born: but he thought it hard to be obliged to it. "Periculum enim est in mora, nam "propinqua partitudo appetit, siquidem paritura est, "nam permulti dubitant num sit gravida, quod si est, (86) Epist. 90. Cent. III. p. 462, dated from Ghent, Dec. 4. 1611.

Sublimi feriam sidera vertice.

"Cuperem inferi mandato, non esse illi scorto pub- "lice diffamatissimo deferendum jusjurandum tem- "pore partionis, nec habendam fidem in designando "parente tam multorum capitum.

Cum suis vivat valeatque mœchis,
Quos simul complexa tenet trecentos.

"Ego nihilominus sponte mea incitatus faciam quod "officium humanitatis injungit. Sed cogi Baudium "non decet, non opportet, à tam prostituti pudoris "scorto (87). - - - - - - - Delays are dangerous; "for she is near her Time, if she be really with "Child, which many doubt of; if so,

(87) Epist. 93. Cent. III. p. 463, dated March 28, 1612.

I'll strike my Head against the Stars.

"I could wish it were inserted in the Mandate, that "This most infamous Postitute be not allowed to give "her Oath at the time of her Delivery, and that "no credit be given to her in pointing out the Father "of the many-headed Offspring.

Well fare the Jade, with her three hundred Sparks.

"However I am willing to do every thing, which "the Laws of Humanity require. But Baudius ought "not to be compelled by so shameless an Harlot." However, he chose rather to keep Another's Child, than desert a human Creature, and comforted himself with the Reflexion, that it would be a Proof of his Manly Vigor; and that hereafter it would be no Prejudice to his future Wife Sophia, who should be a Field, for the Cultivation of which he would from thenceforth reserve his whole Strength. "Ut ut res cadet, nihil mihi evenire potest tristius "aut deterius quam quod animo præcepi, & mecum "ante peregi. Nempe futurum, ut perjurio caput "alliget, & ὑποζολιμαῖον obtrudat heroi Baudio. "Quid tum postea? Malo agnoscere alienum, quam "fœtum humanum non ali. Testimonio erit me "marem esse, & viri munia posse fungi. Nihil "inde abradetur in posterum meæ Sophiæ, cujus ar- "vo familiari reservabitur

Quidquid in arte mea possum promittere (88).

(88) Epist. 92. Cent. III. p. 464.

"- - - - - - - - However, nothing can happen to me "more unfortunate, than what I suspect, namely, that "This Jade will perjure herself, and obtrude a Ba- "stard upon the Hero Baudius. But what then? I "had rather father Another's Brat, than suffer an "human Creature to perish. Besides it will be a "Proof of my Manhood, and Ability to perform the "Duties of an Husband. My Sophia will not here- "after find she has lost any Thing by it; for the "Culture of whose Field shall be reserved

All I can promise in the Tilling-Art.

He wrote This the Twenty ninth of March 1612, when it was reported, that the Servant-Maid was ready to lye-in. "Fertur esse, ἐν ὀδύνῃ, sed nul- "lus credo,

- - - - - - - - Licet illi plurima manet
Lacryma.

"Snnt enim, quibus non potest persuaderi, eam esse "gravidam, & ego quidlibet credo cadere posse falsi- "moniæ, fraudis, & malitiæ in tam profligatam, "perditam, atque intestabilem fœminam. - - - - She "is said to be in labour; but I give no credit to it, "notwithstanding all her Tears; for some will not "be persuaded she is with Child; and I can easily "believe so profligate, abandoned, and detestable, a "Woman capable of any Falshood, Cheat, and wicked "Contrivance." He did not deny, but that he had promised the Girl Marriage; but pretended, that such a Prostitue, as she, did not deserve to enjoy the Benefit of the Laws: He did not believe, that any Faith ought to be kept with this Kind of Heretics; for he recollected, that he had read so in the Code; but, as he could not cite the place, he desired Grotius to put his Advocate upon producing That Law, in order to put a stop to the Proceedings of his Doxy. And, as This Girl's Pretensions was the only Thing, which hindered Baudius's Mistress from signing the Marriage-Contract, he desired his Friend to dispatch the Matter. "Domum reversus audivi nun- "cium perquam optabilem de meis amoribus. Om- "nia eveniunt ex animi sententia, nec quidquam "deest ad votorum summam, nisi ut eximam scrupu- "lum de pollicitatione matrimonii cum exoleto isto "propudio, labe & tabe meæ famæ & existimationis. "Hanc tu pestem ac perniciem si amolitus fueris pro "dignitate muneris quo fungeris, & pro auctoritate "qua merito vales plurimum, solidiorem capies glo- "riam, quam

- - - - - - Diram qui contudit hydram,
Notaque fatali portenta labore subegit.

"Tam viles personæ, tam diabolares victimæ publi- "carum libidinum, non sunt dignæ observatione "legum, ut memini aliquando legere in corpore "Juris, sed locus non occurrit memoriæ. Quæso "te, ut hisce literis perlectis continuo cures accersen- "dum advocatum vander Werven, qui legem hor- "rendi carminis dictet, cujus obnunciatione fulmi- "nari possit fatalis illa fundi nostri calamitas. Hoc "ego beneficium tanti faciam, ut nemini plus in vita "sim unquam debiturus. Sed maturas oro, nam "amanti & animo cupienti nihil satis festinatur (89). "- - - - - - - Returning home, I received the most "agreeable News in relation to my Love Affair. "Every thing is as I could wish, nor is any thing

(89) Epist. 93. Cent. III. p. 465, dated March 28, 1612.

"wanting

Digitized by Google

lieve All that the satyrical Scioppius has publiſhed on this laſt Head [L]. Some Tempers

" wanting to the Completion of my Deſires, but to re-
" move the Scruple about my Promiſe of Marriage to
" That Proſtitute, the Stain of my Character and Re-
" putation. If, by the Dignity and Authority of " your Function, you can rid me of This Plague, you
" will gain more Honour, than He,

Whoſe Toil the Dire, Portentous, Hydra quell'd.

" Such Infamous Wretches, ſuch Diabolical Victims
" to Public Luſt, deſerve not the Regard of the Laws;
" as I remember to have read ſomewhere in the Code,
" though the Paſſage does not at preſent occur to my " Memory. I deſire you, upon the Receipt of This " Letter, to ſend for the Advocate Vander Werven,
" who, by reciting the dreadful Denunciation, may
" terrify This Creature, who gives me ſo much Diſtur-
" bance. But be as expeditious as poſſible; for Love
" is impatient of Delay." This is what he wrote on the Twenty eighth of March. He was not clear of the Affair in the Month of June; the Girl was yet in hopes of being married to him either by fair or foul Means; and Baudius durſt not appear before his Miſtreſs, during this Suit with his Concubine. " Hoc " niſi fundamentum præſtruatur, non ſinit θυμός " ἀγήνωρ, ut viam affectem ad meam Divam, quæ " non intelligit ſua bona: nec ideo tamen demove-
" bor ab amandi propoſito, quamdiu ſpes aliqua ſupe-(90) Epiſt. 96. Cent. III. p. 468, dated June 11, 1612. " rerit expugnandi ferreum iſtud pectus (90). - - - - -
" Till This Foundation be laid, my Pride will not ſuf-
" fer me to approach my Goddeſs, who does not under-
" ſtand her own Good; yet will I perſiſt in my Reſolu-
" tion of paying my Addreſſes to her, whilſt there is
" any Hope of conquering that ſtubborn Breaſt." He was inclined to enter into Articles with the Girl, and deſired Grotius to draw them up; hoping, that the Creature, intimidated by his Threatnings, would ſign the Agreement. " A tuo diſceſſu nec patrem " τῆς ἀσόφου Σοφίας allocutus ſum, nec me conve-
" niendum curavit Mercurii mater, niſi quod audio
" eam adhuc paſcere ebriosas, futiles, & furioſas ſpes
" de matrimonio.

- - - - - - - - ſed prius Appulis
Jungentur capreæ lupis.

" Quid mihi autor es ut faciam? expectem litis even-
" tum? hoc ſpiſſum eſt amanti, cujus animo nihil ſatis
" feſtinatur. Quanquam hiſce nugis jam longum
" valedixi, ſaltem inducias pepigi. Cuperem ad me
" mitti per hunc ipſum nuncium formulam tranſa-
" ctionis, quam ipſe concepiſti. Spero me effecturum
" injecto metu majoris malitatis ut cupide ſubſignet, (91) Ibid. " & voluntariam condemnationem ſubeat (91). - - - - -
" Since your Departure, I have not once ſpoke to the " Father of the fooliſh Sophia, who, I am informed,
" ſtill entertains vain hopes of the Match. But, ſooner

The Goat ſhall mix with The Appulian Wolf.

" What would you adviſe me to do? To wait the " Event of the Suit? The Impatience of a Lover can- " not bear delay: though I have bid a long Adieu to
" theſe Follies, at leaſt have made a Truce with them.
" I could wiſh you would ſend me by the Bearer of " This The Articles of Accommodation, which you
" yourſelf have conceived. I hope, by threatning her
" with ſomething worſe, to prevail upon her readily to
" ſign Them, and ſubſcribe her own Condemnation."
The Affair was yet undecided in the Month of July
(92) See Letter 90, of Cent. III, pag. 473; and Letter 1, of Cent. IV, pag. 478. following (92), and Baudius thought it very ſtrange, that This Slut was not baniſhed out of the Country. " Tot Juſtitiæ Antiſtites unicam maleficam Circen,
" quæ meos ſenſus venenavit, amoliri non poſſunt,
" ſaltem ut Leidam contagione ſua, & ædes meas
" noxia vicinitate, non infeſtet (93). —— So many
(93) Epiſt. 1. Cent. IV. " Diſpenſers of Juſtice cannot rid me of One miſ-
" chievous Circe, who bewitched my Senſes; nor even
" prevent her from infeſting Leyden with her Conta-
" gion, and my Houſe with her baneful Neighbourhood.
He believed, that ſhe was ſuffered to continue his Neighbour, that the Indignity of ſo many Affronts might force him to retire elſewhere. Video hoc agi ut contumeliis haud tolerandis ἀγήνορι θυμῷ adigar ad diſpiciendam pedum viam, & quærendam haud
(94) Ibid. ingloriì atque inopis exilii ſedem (94). At laſt he put an end of the Affair, not by a Sentence of the Judges, but by way of Accommodation, on the Twentieth of October 1612. He conceded as little as poſſible; redemi me captum quam potui minimo (95); after which he was ſoon married. He wrote to Peter Rubens (96), that he was very well ſatisfied with his Wife. I do not know, whether he changed his Mind; but, however it be, This Marriage was of no long Continuance. Baudius died the Twenty ſecond of Auguſt 1613, being reduced to a miſerable Condition by a Delirium. Delirio ac Vigiliis conti- nuis miſerè attritus, omnique tandem robore exutus (97). His beſt Friends laughed at his Follies in Love. One of them propoſed him as an Example to all Incontinent Perſons, and exhorted them to reſtrain their Paſſions by the moſt auſtere Remedies, rather than indulge them like Baudius:

(95) Epiſt. 18. Cent. IV.

(96) It is Letter 3, of Cent. IV, pag. 482, dated Febr. 21, 1613.

(97) In Vita ejus.

Quiſquis es, exemplo tanti moveare mariti,
Parce libidinibus luxurioſe tuis.
Addita ſit potius laſcivo fibula membro,
Ut vindicta tuam tranſeat iſta domum (98).

(98) Scriverius in Epitaphio Baudii, p. 135, Baudii Amorum.

Whoe're Thou art, a Slave to Joys of Senſe,
Let This Example teach thee Continence.
Wou'd'ſt Thou avoid vindictive Fortune's Frown,
Let the ſtrong Button keep the Rebel Member down.

See the Collection, entituled Baudii Amores, publiſhed by Scriverius, in the Year 1638. You will find there, at page 77, A Cento Virgilianus of Daniel Heinſius, " ad Dominicum Baudium, qui poſtquam
" ignarus cum ancilla, cum qua tum alii, tum plu-
" rimi ſcholaſtici conſuerant, aliquamdiu congreſſus
" eſſet, ſolus præter expectationem prole ab ea eſt
" donatus —— to Dominic Baudius, who, after hav-
" ing correſponded with a Girl, who was common to
" ſeveral Students, had alone a Child unexpectedly
" fathered upon him."

No doubt, ſome will ſay, it would have been better to have pointed out, in the Margin, where theſe Things are to be found, than to produce ſo many Paſſages of This Author; but many others will be glad not to be at the Trouble of looking for them. It is to pleaſe the Lazy, whoſe number was never ſo great as in This Age, that I have taken the Pains to collect Theſe Paſſages of Baudius. Let no one complain, that I diſturb the Aſhes of the Dead; for I ſay nothing but what Baudius's Friends have publiſhed, and what other Authors have informed the Public of ſeveral times. See Spizelius (99), who cites a Book, which I would willingly have conſulted: It was printed in the Year 1675 (100).

(99) Theophilus Spizelius in Infelice Literato, p. 11.

[L] We muſt not believe all that the ſatyrical Scioppius has publiſhed on This laſt Head.] He ſpeaks too ill of him, to deſerve credit; the moſt infamous Pimping, and Magic, are the Exploits, which he attributes to him. His Latin Words cannot modeſtly be rendered into Engliſh: The Original is This: " Baudius Pariſiis, ubi multis annis in concubinatu ſum-
" ma cum infamia & velut quadruplatoris filium dece-
" bat, vixit, non tantum magiæ deditus, incantatoribus
" & ſortilegis ædes ſuas aperuit, & concubinæ ſuæ
" filiolam ad peragenda neſaria ſacra commodavit,
" Dæmoniumque de theſauris reconditis, imprimiſque
" de Petronio utrum is alicubi integer exſtaret, con-
" ſuluit; ſed etiam amicis quibuſdam majorem quan-
" dam ingenii divinitatem præferentibus ejuſdem con-
" cubinæ filium, puerum non inelegantem, turpiſſi-
" mus leno proſtituit, ut cum poſtea tumentibus pueri
" mariſcis ſcelus propalatum iri metueret, quo minus
" eum veneno contubernales tollerent, minimè impe-
" divit, actumque jam de miſſello puero fuerat, niſi
" unius contubernalium acumine expediti fuiſſent,
" anicula, quæ morbo mederi ſciret, inventa. Hæc
" nequaquam à me fingi, neminem paulò humanio-
" rum Pariſiis ignorare puto (101)." The General Senſe of which is as follows; that " Baudius, living
" many Years in a State of Fornication at Paris, con-
" verſed with Magicians and Enchanters, and con-
" ſulted the Devil about hidden Treaſures, and par" ticularly whether Petronius was any where to be " found entire; and that, having proſtituted the Son
" of his Concubine, and being in danger of being
" diſcovered,

(100) Specimen Bibliosophiſtarum Gadenenſium, publiſhed by Scheigvigio.

(101) Antiphotides Scioppianæ, pag. 166.

Digitized by Google

Tempers are expoſed to the hazard of loſing a good Name. It cannot be denied, that Baudius was of an amorous Complexion: He was but a Student in Divinity, when he fell in Love with a Girl, who lodged at the Profeſſor Lambert Danæus's Houſe (h). The Remarks will inform us farther of This Affair. He was too free in his Opinions, and even in his Diſcourſe, and had not the Prudence to accommodate himſelf to the Prejudices of the Times; This could not but create him Enemies, and expoſe himſelf to the ill Effects of their raſh Judgments (i). He conſulted Platonic Ideas too much; which is the reaſon, why he was a little too much ſcandalized at the Diſputes, which were raiſed in Holland. He foretold the ill Conſequences of them, ſome of which proved falſe, and others true. He thought They would occaſion an Alteration in the Government; in This he was miſtaken [M]; he believed they would create a Schiſm; In this he judged right [N]. They, who publiſhed his Letters, have procured more Delight

(h) See his 26th Letter Cent. II. pag. 224.

(i) See Remark [M].

" diſcovered, by ſome Marks of the Injury he had " done him, he would have ſuffered him to be poiſo- " ned, had not an Old Woman been found, who " undertook to cure the Child." If Theſe things were ſo well known at Paris, as Scioppius affirms, how came it, that the Firſt Preſident appointed Baudius to be his Son's Secretary in an Embaſſy? Scioppius invented This, or had it from ill-grounded Stories, and divulged it in revenge for the abuſive Language, which Baudius had given him, even before The Scaliger Hypobolimæus appeared (102).

(102) See Lett. 79, of Baudius, Cent. II. pag. 276.

[M] He thought They would occaſion an Alteration in the Government; in This He was miſtaken.] We muſt hear Himſelf; He declares, that, were it not for Conſcience, and Religion, he would have retired elſewhere long before, and that the violent Diſputes of the Divines, and many other Diſorders, made him fear, that the Work of the Reformation would be very much endangered by them. " Niſi me in his locis " conſcientiæ ſcrupulus, & religionis vinculum atti- " neret, jampridem captum eſſet augurium de mi- " grando, nec Leida ſpes meas includeret. Quan- " quam non peſſime mecum agitur. Sed nec ea no- " ſtri ratio habetur, quam opportuit. Theologorum " etiam noſtrorum diſſidentes, & virulentæ concer- " tationes, odia fratrum, quæ ne morte quidem fini- " untur, aliaque noſtræ militiæ flagitia, penè effici- " unt ut & illud ſuperbum nomen reformatæ religi- " onis, & ipſa cauſa incipiat mihi eſſe dubiæ ſanita- " tis. —— Præſagit mihi animus imminere his Pro- " vinciis fatalem rerum commutationem, & ex inte- " ſtinis vitiis rediturum aliquando veteris imperii de- " ſiderium. Suſpectus ſum multis, & charus accep- " tuſque non paucis, quod voce & ſtilo paſſim in- " culco ſubditorum obſequia in legitimos Principes, " & pleno ore decanto veras laudes Archiducum (103). " —— Did not a Scruple of Conſcience, and the Tie " of Religion, detain me, I had e'er now departed " in a good Hour, nor had Leyden any longer been " the Object of my Wiſhes. Though my Condition " here is far from being the worſt. But I do not " meet with proper Regard. Beſides, The virulent " Diſputes of Our Divines, The Animoſities among " Brethren, which Death itſelf cannot put an end to, " and Other Enormities of our Warfare, induces me " to ſuſpect, that the proud Name of Reformation, " and the Cauſe itſelf, is but ſhort-lived. —— I fore- " ſee a fatal Alteration in the Affairs of Theſe Pro- " vinces, and am apprehenſive, that the Inteſtine Di- " viſions, which reign among us, will make the Peo- " ple wiſh for the ancient Government. I render my- " ſelf ſuſpected to Many, and acceptable to not a Few, " by inculcating, both in Converſation and Writing, the " Obedience of Subjects to their Lawful Princes, and " celebrating the true Praiſes of the Arch-Dukes." I queſtion not, but Baudius propoſed the Doctrine of the Obedience of Subjects, which he mentions, with too much Indiſcretion, and Confidence; ſo that it is no wonder, if he was hated by ſeveral People. He was ſo bold alſo, as to inſert This Doctrine in a public Theſis; and it is obſervable, that his Academical Superiors did not oblige him to expunge it, but only ordered him to inform the Youth, that they ſhould not embrace ſuch Opinions inconſiderately. " Quærit primum ex me, an ſtatuiſſem præſidium " & auctoritatem ſuffragii commodare defendendis " corollariis periculoſæ aleæ plenis, ut eſt diſputare " in ambas partes, An religio ſit de ſubſtantia reipub- " licæ, & negare fas eſſe ſubdito privatoque homini " ob cauſam religionis arma ſumere contra Principem, " & id generis alia. Reſpondi, cauſam non videri " cur in hoc atrio libertatis non ſit fas abſque per- " vicacia ſentire quæ velis, & quæ ſentias expromere. " Tamen rogatus ut admonerem juventutem ne te- " mere & abſque delectu talibus axiomatis aſſenſum " præberet, ſignificavi me facturum (104). —— He " firſt asked me, whether I had reſolved to under- " take the Defence of dangerous Propoſitions, ſuch as " the Queſtion, whether Religion be eſſential to a State, " and the Aſſertion, that it is unlawful for a private " Man, and a Subject, to take up Arms againſt his " Prince, for the ſake of Religion. I replied, that " I ſaw no reaſon, why, in This Seat of Liberty, a " man might not, without the Imputation of Perverſe- " neſs, think as he pleaſes, and ſpeak as he thinks. " However, being deſired to admoniſh the Youth, not " to aſſent to ſuch Propoſitions raſhly, and without Ex- " amination, I promiſed to do ſo." Never was Man fitter to gain himſelf Enemies by the Liberty of his Tongue, and his Maxims, than Baudius: " We " make War, ſaid he, with the moſt powerful Prin- " ces of the World, and yet we are under the " Correction of an hundred petty Rulers: Bellum gerimus contra potentiſſimos Mundi Monarchas, & ſervire cogimur iſtis minutioribus ſatrapis (105). See the Liberty he takes of cenſuring the Divines, who had condemned Vorſtius, without hearing him. Obſerve the ill Conſequences, which, he ſays, muſt follow, if theſe Gentlemen are ſuffered to decide concerning the Honour and Merit of others, on meer Preſumptions, Suſpicions, and Hear-ſays. " Evadet " iſta effrænis audacia in optimi cujuſque deforma- " tionem, ſi præjudiciis, ſuſpicionibus, rumuſculis, & " ſuſurris, tantum licentiæ permittitur, ut fama & " fructu dignitatis exuantur viri doctrina meritiſque " ſpectabiles. Sed de negotio fratrum, & ſacrati gre- " gis, dabitur alias oportunior differendi locus (106). " ------- This unbridled Liberty, will blaſt the " Reputations of the beſt of Men, if Men of Learn- " ing and Merit muſt loſe their Characters upon Pre- " judices, Suſpicions, Rumours, and Whiſpers. But I " ſhall have a better Opportunity of conſidering the " Buſineſs of the Brotherhood, and ſacred Herd." Once again, He was very fit to gain himſelf Enemies, and I am not ſurprized, that ſo many heinous Calumnies have been ſpread concerning him. In the Year 1609, he took a Journey into Flanders. During his Abſence, a Thouſand Stories went about, that he was gone to change his Religion, that he was already provided of a good Benefice, that he had turned Monk, and an hundred other things of this Nature, which gave occaſion to the Thirty third Letter of the IIId Century. He was in ſuch dread even of the Abſurdities of Common Fame, that he wrote This Letter to Two of the Curators.

(103) Epiſt. 72, Cent. III. p. 432, 433, dated March 9, 1610.

(104) Epiſt. 99, Cent. III. pag. 471.

(105) Epiſt. 82, Cent. III. pag. 278.

(106) Epiſt. 33, Cent. III. pag. 362.

[N] He believed they would create a Schiſm; in this he judged right.] He built his Conjecture on the great Animoſity, which he obſerved on both Sides. The Points in diſpute ſeemed to him capable of being accommodated, provided The Combatants would but hear each other with a charitable Diſpoſition. It was therefore the Diſpoſition of the contending Parties, which made him fear they would come to a total Rupture. He was upon the Spot; and could ſee, in what Manner Gomarus, and his Friends, on one ſide, and Arminius, with his Adherents, on the other, mixed their private Paſſions with the Intereſt of their Doctrines. He declared freely, that the Spaniards and Hollanders would ſooner agree together, than Theſe two Eccleſiaſtical light and Uſefulneſs to the Readers, than Honour to his Memory. They are politely written [O], and are full of Wit; but he commends himſelf too much in them; He appears too Poor [P], too Importunate to his Friends, too Craving, too Vain, too Selfiſh, and too Irregular. This is to apologize for the Age, he lived in, of which he complained ſo much. It is partly by Theſe Faults, that ſeveral learned Men render themſelves contemptible in the Places, where they live, whilſt they are the admiration of Thoſe to whom they are known only by their Works. Notwithſtanding the Length of This Article already, I cannot forbear ſubjoining here a very remarkable Particular; to wit, that Baudius had undertaken

Digitized by Google

Factions. Here follow his own Words: I ſet them down, that I may not be thought to deliver my own Opinions under his Name. I am in this, and many other Places, a bare Tranſcriber. " Utinam " omnes noſtri muneris & ordinis pari voto ac ſtu- " dio in eandem mentem conſpirarent! Sed facilius " conveniet inter Belgas & Hiſpanos, quam inter " fratres, ubi ſemel in contentionem exardeſcere cœ- " perunt. Omnino res erumpet in ſchiſma, niſi for- " tibus conſiliis huic malo occurratur. - - - - - Si ſpi- " ritu docilitatis & Chriſtianæ caritatis ducerentur " duces (ut ſic dicam) partium, confectum negotium " eſſet. Sed utrinque videre eſt magnos animorum " motus, manifeſtam concurſationem, ut ſuffraga- " tores ſibi concilient, denique mentem contentionis " ſtudioſiorem, quam indagandæ noſcendæque veri- " tatis:

Iliacos intra muros peccatur & extra.

" Sed ob Atridarum culpas ſupplicium ferunt Achi- " vi: & Academia peſſimi odoris eſt non ſolum apud (107) Epiſt. 96, Cent. II, pag. 304. " extraneos, verum etiam apud noſtros cives (107). " - - - - - - O! that All of our Function and Order " would unanimouſly conſpire in Opinion! But ſooner " will the Hollanders and Spaniards come to an Agree- " ment, than The Brethren, when once they have " began to grow warm in Controverſy. The Affair " will end in a Schiſm, if The Evil be not provided " againſt with the utmoſt Prudence and Caution. - - - " Were the Leaders of each Party (if I may ſo call " them) governed by a Spirit of Teachableneſs and " Chriſtian Charity, the Buſineſs would be done. " But, on both Sides, we ſee great Animoſity, a " manifeſt Struggle who ſhall gain the moſt Converts, " and a Temper of Mind more diſpoſed for Conten- " tion, than the Diſcovery of Truth;

Alike in Guilt Beſieger, and Beſieg'd.

" The Greeks ſuffered for the Offences of the Sons " of Atreus; and the Univerſity ſtinks in the Noſtrils " not only of Foreigners, but even of our own Coun- " trymen." [O] His Letters are written politely.] We read in the Scaligerana as follows: " Baudius a une Stile " non Ciceronien, mais du temps de Domitianus: " je garde toutes les Lettres de Baudius. - - - - - - " Baudius writes in a Stile, not Ciceronian, but " ſuch as was practiſed in the Time of Domitian: " I keep all his Letters by me." Scaliger, therefore, thought them elegant, and good. It does not appear, that Baudius's Style is properly That of any Age of Latinity.

[P] He appears too Poor.] It was not ſo much the Honour of being the States Hiſtoriographer, as the Salary of That Office, which made him ſollicit for it ſo earneſtly. He put off his Creditors, 'till the Payment of his Penſion of Hiſtoriographer; That Time never came; and They would be no longer put off in That manner; inſomuch that he was reduced to Great Streights. " Flagitantium importu- " nitas efficit me moroſiorem, quam naturæ meæ " Genius, & amicitiæ tuæ reverentia patiatur. Aſſi- " due enim obtundor à moleſtis Creditoribus, quo- " rum nomina rejicio in ſpem obtinendi ejus mu- " neris; ſed tamdiu lactati ſunt hoc palpo, ut ul-
(108) Epiſt. 5, Cent. III. pag. 325. " terius produci non poſſint (108). - - - - - - - - The " Importunity of my Creditors ſowres my Temper more " than my natural Diſpoſition, and the regard I have " for your Friendſhip, allow of. I put off the payment " of what they demand by the hopes of obtaining That " Poſt; but They have been ſo long wheedled with " This Pretence, that they are reſolved to be put " off no longer." When he ſaid, that his Eſtate feared neither Thieves, Fire, nor other Calamity,

Non incendia, non graves ruinas,
Non facta impia, non dolos veneni,
Non caſus alios periculorum;

and that It reſembled That of Bias (109); The Application was not more ingenious, than true: He ſpoke like an Hiſtorian, and not like a Rhetorician. At laſt came his Penſion of Hiſtoriographer; but it was only as a drop of Water to a Thirſty Man: He foreſaw it, and had been told of it; wherefore he wanted another Remedy, viz. a rich Wife. " Si " poſſem in naſſam matrimonii illicere fœmininum " aliquod opime dotatum (agnoſcis heic facundiam " ſupplementi chronicorum) non a'pernarer dona " deorum. Sed ad eam ſpem aſpirare non audeo, " quamdiu mihi certamen erit cum hydra moleſto- " rum flagitatorum (110). - - - - - - Could I but pre- (110) Epiſt. 92. Cent. III. pag. 464.
(110) Epiſt. 15, Cent. III. pag. 335. " vail upon ſome very rich Lady to marry me, I " ſhould be thankful to Heaven for the Bleſſing. But " I dare not entertain ſuch an hope, whilſt I am " combating with an Hydra of importunate Duns." Let us add to this what he wrote to his Patron Vander Myle. " Recte dicebas nuper, nihil aliud " poſſe locare in ſolido, & ad portum bonæ ſpei " appellere quaſſatam ratem Baudii, quam opimum " aliquod conjugium: ſed procax iſtud genus divi- " tum ac fortunatarum mulierum ſpernit viros fama " meritiſque celebres, niſi cenſu quoque cenſeantur " (111). - - - - What you ſaid, the other Day, is very (111) Epiſt. 14, Cent. III. pag. 334. " true, that nothing but a wealthy Match can ſecure, " and bring Home ſafe, poor Baudius's ſcattered Veſ- " ſel; but the Misfortune is, your moneyed Ladies " deſpiſe Men, even of the greateſt Reputation, who " have not as much Money, as Merit." But no Relief came time enough: In vain did he beſeech the Curators, with the moſt moving Expreſſions, to deliver him from the hard Perſecution of his Creditors. " Humanitatis tuæ genium adjuro atque ob- " teſtor per Deum immortalem, per fas Chriſtianæ " Charitatis, per vinculum ſanctæ fidei, & quidquid " apud gentes venerandum & antiquum habetur, im- " pone tandem optatum finem diuturnæ expectatio- " ni; neu me patere longius verſari inter ſacrum & " ſaxum, ſub ictu Creditorum, qui meas aures aſ- " ſiduè moleſtis vocibus circumſonant, ut defæcato " animo ſtudia doctrinæ tractare nequeam (112). (112) Epiſt. 14, Cent. III, pag. 333, written to Mr Vander Myle, dated March 10, 1610. " - - - - - By the Eternal God, by the Laws of Chri- " ſtian Charity, by the Bond of Holy Faith, and by " whatever The World eſteems Venerable and Sacred, I " adjure, I beſeech your compaſſionate Nature, to put, " at length, a wiſhed for Period to my tedious Ex- " pectation; nor ſuffer me any longer to continue in " this Perplexity, under the Laſh of Creditors, who " are perpetually dunning me, and interrupting my " Studies." He was left to their Mercy; and, except his Perſon, they ſeized on all that was in his Houſe. The Jeſuits of Antwerp knew it, and inſulted him upon it. Read but theſe Verſes, taken from the Thirty ſeventh Page of the Væ Victis!

Pauperior Codro Catti nil continet arca.
Qui pote? Jam dicam: Baudæus in ære tabernæ
Totus erat, (noſti quam pocula ſæpe ſalutet);
Caupo tulit lectos, ſedes, menſaſque, abacoſque,
Et chlamydem & veſtes, ollas, ignemque, focumque;
Nil Baudæus habet, ſecum tulit omnia Caupo.
Nec ſat erat. Quid ages Baudi? Venderis & ipſe?
Accipe Caupo libros, vetulas has ferto papyros,
Muſeum atque oleum, laternam & lampada ſume;
Sit modo liber adhuc Baudæus obire popinas.

The Poverty of Codrus is his Fate:
You aſk, how ſo? attend, while I relate.

Baudius

Digitized by Google

undertaken a Work, designed to effect a Coalition of Religions [Q]: A Work, which, besides other Talents, required a great Share of Piety, as he himself assured Thuanus, in communicating to him his Design. You will find his own Words below.

Baudius had run up a long Tavern-Score;
(That Baudius lov'd his Glass, you knew before)
The cruel Vintner, when he cou'd not pay,
Carried Beds, Tables, Chairs, and All away:
Yet All too little: what remains there yet?
Say, Baudius! Shall your Person pay the Debt?
No! — Landlord, take my Books: if That won't do,
Away with Lamp, and Oil, and Papers too:
But at his Liberty let Baudius move,
From Tavern still to Tavern free to rove.

Scriverius, Baudius's good Friend, says little less, than the Jesuits.

(113) I take the meaning of this to be, that Baudius married a Widow with three Children.

En, cum jure trium natorum ducitur uxor (113);
Et simul in barathrum præcipitatur amans.
Sic labuntur opes: sic nil stipendia prosunt;
Pensio sic domino sæpe negata suo.
Pallia sic alius, Cajæque monilia servat:
Æra fugant inopem sic aliena famem.
Prosilit & duris urgens in rebus egestas:
Pignora stant, vacua non redimenda manu (114).

(114) Scriverius, in Baudii Amoribus, p. 13.

A Wife, at length, behold! The Lover gains,
And thence the Right, Three Children give, obtains;
Yet, cruel Fate! to Prison dragg'd must go:
Thus there's an End of Wealth, and Pension too.
Rich Cloaths and Jewels, once the wealthy Dame's, Transferr'd from Caia, now Another claims.
Whilst pressing Want, with meagre Look, stands by,
And, unredeemable, his Pledges lie.

[Q] He had undertaken a Work, designed to effect a Coalition of Religions.] What he says of it himself, is This. "Jampridem animo concepi opus, & tractatu arduum, & usu maximè necessarium, quod "ipsum olim aggressus is, de quo nuper multus "nobis sermo fuit, Georgius Cassander. Hic, tametsi nihil dicas, tamen auguror animo quid cogitationi tuæ occurrat; esse nimirum rem tantæ "molis, ut eam vix mente complecti possim, nedum "facultate consequi. Fateor equidem ad hanc provinciam deligi par esse hominem instructum omnibus ingenii ac doctrinæ copiis. Opus insuper "multiplici inquisitione, varia librorum supellectile, "plurima rerum memoria, &, quod familiam ducit, "pietate. Sed utilitatis magnitudo, & penuria talium virorum, debet etiam ad hunc honestissimum "laborem mediocres viros invitare, ut, si a spe perficiendi absint, saltem præclaræ voluntatis conscientia perfruantur. Ego mihi conscius sum quam "parum possum, sed aggrediendi studium probis "omnibus me probaturum non despero. Deum certè "confido piis conatibus adfuturum, in quem precipuè intuens, id oneris tollere decrevi. Quod si "saltem effecero, ut aliorum scribendi studia excitentur, qui digne hanc spartam exornare possint, "nihil est quod me non assecutum esse existimem "(115). —— I have, a long time, conceived the Design of a difficult, but very necessary, Work, which "was undertaken, likewise, by George Cassander; "He, I mean, of whom we had, lately, so much "Discourse. Here, I guess at your Thoughts, before "you declare them; *namely, that the Work is of so "extensive and difficult a Nature, as scarce to be "comprehended, much less executed, by me. I confess, "The Undertaking requires a Person of the greatest "Ability and Learning, much Enquiry, many Books, "a great Memory, and, above All, a pious Disposition. "But the great Usefulness of It, and the Scarcity "of Persons so qualified, is sufficient to engage Men "of moderate Talents in so generous an Undertaking; "that, if They cannot flatter themselves with the "Hopes of Success, They may, at least, enjoy the "Consciousness of a worthy Intention. I am sensible "of my own Inability; but I do not despair of approving my Intentions to All Good Men. At least, "God, I doubt not, will assist my Endeavours; in "Confidence of whose Favour, I have determined to "undertake the Task. And if I can but excite others "to employ their Pens more successfully on the same "Subject, I shall have obtained the Utmost of my "Wishes." Colomies, who has preserved to us these Words of Baudius, adds; "Opus, animo, ut puto, "conceptum, nunquam prodiit. Hinc patet, cur Baudium Georgii Cassandri Assectam in Gallia Orientali * dixerim, quod multis perobscurum, nec immerito, videbatur (116). —— This intended Work "was, I think, never published; which is the Reason, why, in the Gallia Orientalis, I call Baudius "The Page of George Cassander; which to many "seemed obscure, and not without Reason."

(115) Baudii Epist. ad J. A. Thuan. apud Colomesii Opusc. pag. 41. 42.

* Pag. 124.

(116) Colomesii Opusc. pag. 42.

(a) He is called likewise Baudouin, Balduin, Baudoin. See the Cabal Chimerique, pag. 250, Edit. 2. He wrote himself, in French, Balduin.

BAUDOUIN (a) (Francis), in Latin Balduinus, a famous Civilian, was born at Arras, the first of January, 1520. He studied Six Years in the University of Louvain; afterwards he was some time with a great Lord (b), at the Court of Charles V; and then went into France, where he acquired the Friendship of the most Learned Men (c), and, among others, That of Charles du Moulin, at whose House he lodged (d). The eager Desire of being acquainted with the most famous Ministers, induced him to travel into Germany [A]: He saw Calvin

(b) The Marquis de Bergue.

(c) Of Badæus, of Baif, &c.

(d) Ex Valerio Andrea, Bibl. Belg. p. 221. This is also to be found in Baudouin's third Reply to Calvin, fol. B. 5.

[A] The eager Desire of being acquainted with the most famous Ministers.] This is the only Fault, which the Roman Catholics could impute to Him; if we may believe his Elogist, Papyrius Massō. I have carefully perused That Author, to discover whether Baudouin ever forsook the outward Profession of the Church of Rome. But I find nothing, which can persuade me of it; for His becoming acquainted with Calvin, and Bucer, to learn, from their own Mouths, the Reason of their Separation, is no Sign, that he was a Protestant. It was meer Curiosity, and, at the most, but a kind of Distrust, which signifies nothing, unless it be added, that, having heard the Reasons of These Reformers, he found them so good, that he came over to their Side. Now Masso is so far from saying this, that, on the contrary, he tells us, that Baudouin disapproved of their Reasons. "In "Germaniam profectus à defensoribus novæ sectæ "intelligere voluit, quas ob causas à Romana & veteri Ecclesia decessissent - - - - - quorum opiniones "Non Probans, Bucerum tamen & Melanæthonem "aiebat sibi ob modestiam placuisse: Calvinum displicuisse propter nimiam vindictæ & sanguinis sitim quam in eo deprehendisset (1). - - - - - He "travelled into Germany, to learn from the Defenders of the New Sect, for what Reasons they had "separated from the Roman and Ancient Church. - - - "And, though he did not approve of Their Notions, "yet he commended Bucer for his Modesty, but was "displeased, he said, with Calvin, for That Thirst "after Revenge and Blood, which he discovered in "him." He says, I confess, that there was, formerly, an Intimacy between Calvin and Baudouin (2). But does this imply, that the latter had been a Huguenot? May not the Reader imagine, that they were acquainted at College, before Calvin became The Head of a Party? You may tell me, that Chronology does not allow of This; I reply, that you are much to blame, if you desire to be understood only by Those, who are acquainted with the Nativities of several Persons, and will take the Trouble of arguing from Thence. Your Duty is to express Baudouin's Abjuration in such clear Terms, that any Reader may see it from your Book alone, without the Help of Memory, or Reflexion. I go yet further, and maintain, that Those very Persons, who should

(1) Papyr. Masso, Elog. Parte II, p. 156, 157.

(2) Familiaris quondam iuit. Id. ibid. p. 262.

Digitized by Google

Calvin at Geneva, Bucer at Straſburg, and others in other places. Being returned to Paris, he was invited to Bourges, to be Profeſſor of Civil-Law [B]; and he diſcharged This Office with ſo much Honour, that he made his Colleague Duaren jealous of him (e). At the end of Seven Years, he left That Profeſſorſhip, to teach the Civil-Law at Tubingen (f), whither he was invited; but, being informed, in his Journey, that du Moulin deſigned to return to that Univerſity, he ſtopped at ſhould remember, that Calvin was at the Head of a Sect, before Baudouin left the College, will not find any thing, which looks like an Abjuration, in the familiaris quendam ſui; for, by explaining Theſe Words by other Paſſages of Papyrius Maſſo, They will fix upon this Senſe of Them: Baudouin, having aſſured Calvin, that he ſincerely enquired after the Truth, had ſeveral Conferences with him, in which his Wit, Docility, and Sagacity, ſo charmed Calvin, that He made a Friend of This Heretic, even before he was fully convinced of the Truth of his Doctrine. Their Intercourſe continued a long time; for two Years are not too long for ſolving the Difficulties, which Baudouin might propoſe. Calvin, who hoped to gain over, and wiſhed it paſſionately, careſſed him very much, and opened his Heart freely to him. At laſt This Prey eſcaped him: Baudouin, not finding all his Objections fully anſwered, would not embrace the new Doctrine. This is the Senſe, which might be given to the Words of Papyrius Maſſo. He ſhould not, therefore, have expreſſed himſelf in a Manner, ſo apt to miſlead the Reader.

(e) Ex Papyr. Maſſon. Elog. Par. II. p. 256, 257.

(f) Thus it muſt be called; and not Turingia, as Valerius Andreas has it.

Moreri is yet more to blame; for he cannot juſtify himſelf, by alledging the Privileges of an Elogiſt. He declares, by the Title of his Book, that he acts the Part of an Hiſtorian: he could not, therefore, allow himſelf the Liberty, which Maſſo might pretend to, under the favourable Title of Elogium Franciſci Balduini. Maſſo, intending to write the Elogy of a famous Civilian, might ſay, "I thought "it allowable to diſguiſe what is diſadvantageous to "the Memory of my Heroe." A bad Excuſe, and a continual Source of Illuſion, and Falſhood! But, after all, it comes better from a Panegyriſt, than an Hiſtorian. What ſhall we ſay, then, to Moreri, who contented himſelf with theſe Words; "He had the "Curioſity to viſit Calvin, and the other Heads of "the Proteſtants. It is ſaid alſo, that he was in-"clined to go over to their Party, but, that the "the reading of a Piece of George Caſſander hin-"dered him from it (3). He had contracted a "Friendſhip with Calvin, but it was of no long "Continuance." So far from finding the Abjuration of Popery in theſe Words, it appears clearly from them, that Baudouin never abjured the Church of Rome. Where is then The Hiſtorical Sincerity, and Perſpicuity, which require, that, if all other Books were burnt, the Hiſtory alone of a Man ſhould plainly inform every Reader whether he ſaid, or did, ſuch a thing? The Fault, which I cenſure, is, therefore, very great, if it be true, that Francis Baudouin changed his Religion: It will, therefore, appear enormous to Thoſe, who know, that he changed his Religion at leaſt ſeven times. Read the public Reproof, which he received for it; it is not expreſſed in general Terms, but attended with Circumſtances. "Ejectum te, Balduine, & excommunicatum ab om-"nibus piis, quicumque in Gallia aut Germania no-"men tuum audierunt, negare non potes. Septies "his viginti annis religionem mutaſti. Non ſæpiùs "ferè ſerpentes pellem mutant. Educatus es apud "tuos in Flandria Papiſticè. Poſteà Genevæ Chri-"ſtianam Religionem profeſſus es: eoque nomine "aliquoties ad corporis Chriſti communionem acceſ-"ſiſti: Inde Lutetiam profectus Papiſticum habitum "recepiſti. Mox Genevam reverſus, & in Calvini "contubernio, menſa, familiaritate, menſes multos "commoratus, iterum Evangelici nominis factus es. "Poſteà Biturigibus ad Papiſticam Idololatriam, "tanquam canis ad vomitum, rediiſti. Inde Argen-"toratum profectus, Evangelicum te profeſſus es: "cum Petro Martyre vixiſti. Cœnam Dominicam "in Gallorum Eccleſiâ amplius decies participaſti. "Mox Heidelbergam delatus confeſſioni Gallicarum "Eccleſiarum, ſub qua paulo antè cœnam Domini-"cam duodecies ſumpſeras, hoſtis factus es, & Hef-"ſuſianis te partibus dediſti. Tandem in Galliam "reverſus, quartùm Papiſta factus es. Horum ſi quid "falſum aut fictum ſit, volo ut mihi oculos eruas: "aut, ut calumniatorium tuum ſupplicium imitemur, "crura mihi ſuffringas (4). ----- You cannot deny, "Baudouin, that All Good Men, either in France or "Germany, who had heard of your Name, paſſed "Sentence of Excommunication on you. In the Space "of twenty Years laſt paſt, you have changed your "Religion ſeven times. Serpents ſcarce oftener caſt "their Skins. You was educated a Papiſt, in Flan-"ders, your Native Country. Afterwards, at Ge-"neva, you made Profeſſion of the Chriſtian Reli-"gion; under which Name you ſometimes partook of "the Communion of the Body of CHRIST. From "thence going to Paris, you turned Papiſt again; afterwards, returning to Geneva, and being many "Months intimately acquainted with Calvin, you be-"came once more an Evangelic. Some time after, at Bourges, you returned to Popery, as a Dog to "his Vomit. From thence going to Strasburg, you "profeſſed yourſelf a Proteſtant; and converſed with "Peter Martyr. You received the Sacrament more "than ten Times in The French Church. Not long "after, at Heidelburg, you declared War againſt "the Confeſſion of the Gallican Church, under which, "but a little before, you had twelve times com-"municated, and went over to the Party of The Heſ-"ſuſſians. At laſt, returning to France, you em-"braced Popery for the fourth Time. If This be "not All true, I give you leave to pull out my Eyes, "or (to imitate your own Puniſhment for Calumny) "to break my Legs." Theſe Words are taken from a long Letter, written to Baudouin, in the Year 1564. The ſame Computation had been already mentioned to him in the Year 1562, and with very curious Circumſtances; for he was put in mind, I. That, having deſired to be admitted to the Holy Sacrament in the French Church at Strasburg, he had made a long Declaration of his Faith in the Preſence of the Aſſembly. II. That, during his Abode at Geneva, he had made ſome public Diſcourſes on Matters of Religion. "Verboſiſſimam fidei tuæ con-"feſſionem publice in templo non infrequenti ho-"minum conventu magna & confidenti voce pro-"nuntiaſſes, ut ad ſacræ Cœnæ & corporis Chriſti "communionem recipereris ---- in publica (ut vo-"cant) congregatione confeſſuque paſtorum & docto-"rum hominum tanquam Saul inter Prophetas verba "de rebus ſacris faceres (5). ------ You had pro-"nounced, with a loud and aſſured Tone of Voice, in "a full Church, before a large Congregation, a very "long Confeſſion of your Faith, in order to be ad-"mitted to the Communion of the Euchariſt. ----- "You diſcourſed of divine Matters, like Saul among "the Prophets, in a public Congregation (as they "call it) and Aſſembly of Paſtors and learned Men." I have read this in a Letter, which Francis Hofman is ſaid to have been the Author of. Obſerve, that he is deceived in the Circumſtance of Time; for he ſuppoſes, that Baudouin made his firſt Abjuration of Popery at Strasbourg; This is falſe; he did it, there, the third time. The Proteſtants gave him the Sirname of Ecebolius, to ſignify, that he changed his Religion as often as his Linnen; and they quarrelled ſo often with him for it, in their Writings, that no One can pretend Ignorance of it (6). See the ſecond Volume of the Diſputes of Voëtius, page 780.

(3) Compare this with Thuanus's Words, quoted in the Article CHARPENTIER (PETER), and you will find a great Miſtake.

(4) Antonius Guærinius (ſo he is called in Rivetus, Tom. III, p. 1127, col. 1, but in the Epiſtle of Geſner, he is called Guæimeus, or Cynarus,) Epiſt. ad Balduinum, pag. 56, apud Rivetum, Oper. Tom. III. pag. 1127. col. 1.

(5) Epiſt. ad Franc. Balduinum de Officio tum in religione, tum in ſcriptionibus retinendo. —— Of keeping to our Duty, both in our Religion, and our Writings.

(6) See the Book, which Beza wrote againſt him.

[B] He was invited to Bourges, to be Profeſſor of the Civil-Law.] We ſhall touch on a ſecond Fault of The Writers, who ſpeak of him; They ſcarce ever diſtinguiſh at what time he was provided with ſuch, or ſuch Offices. Mr Menage, who avoided This Fault, obſerves, that he was Profeſſor of the Civil-Law, at Bourges, from 1549 to 1556 (he ſhould have ſaid, from 1548 to 1555), and that he received the Doctor's Cap, there, from the Hands of Eguinarius Baro (7). The Ceremony of This Reception was performed the twelfth of March 1549, as Mr Catherinot informs us (8). He adds, that, in the Year 1553, the Wages of Francis Duaren amounted to Nine hundred and twenty Livres, Thoſe of our Baudouin to Three

(7) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Peter Ayrault, p. 157.

(8) Catherinot's Calvaniſm of Berry, p. 4.

Digitized by Google

at Strasburg, where for a Year he read Civil Law Lectures. Afterwards he went to Heilderberg, where he was Professor of the Civil-Law and History near five Years, till he was sent for by Anthony de Bourbon, King of Navarre [C], who made him Tutor to his Bastard. He carried his Disciple to Trent, and, understanding,

Three hundred and fifty, and Those of Hugh Doneau to Two hundred and thirty. I observe This, to convict Papyrius Masso of a Falshood, who says, that Baudouin's Wages were as good, as Those of his Colleagues. "Accersitur à Biturgibus ad docendi "munus suscipiendum, futurus Collega Baronis, & "Duareni Jurisconsultorum, accepturusque de publico "honorarium QUANTUM illis daretur (9). ----- "He was invited, by the People of Bourges, to take "upon him a Professorship, in conjunction with Baro "and Duaren, Lawyers, upon a Promise of a Stipend "equal to what his Colleagues received." I have shewn, elsewhere (10), that he is guilty of Another Falshood. Mr Catherinot remarks, under the Year 1549, That Baudouin was for some time suspected of Heresy, as having been a Disciple of John Calvin at Geneva and Commensal of Charles du Moulin, at Paris. He says also, that, in 1556, Baudouin wrote against Duaren about Benefices, and that Duaren called him, in Contempt, Balbin. See, continues he, his Picture, in a Letter of Duaren, of the thirteenth of June 1555. I give some Extracts of This Letter in another Place (11). Note, that, during his Stay at Bourges, he held a Correspondence with Calvin by Letters, and assured him, that he was a good Protestant in his Heart (12). He was upbraided with having suborned a rich Widow at Bourges (13), and having left That University, without taking Leave of his Landlord (14). I only mention these Things, that some Circumstances may be seen of the Profession, which our Baudouin exercised in the University of Bourges. Mr Menage affirms, that, in 1556 (15), he made, there, the Funeral Oration of Eguinarius Baro, whose Enemy he had been, if we believe Duaren (16). "Duarenus tantam Juvenis (Bal- "duini) gloriam non ferens, nunquam se Balduino "æquum præbuit (17). ----- Duaren was so jea- "lous of young Baudouin's Reputation, that he "never was a Friend to him." I shall farther observe, that the Date of his Call to the Professorship of Bourges discovers a Mistake of Mr Bullart. He says, that This learned Man was gone to Geneva, to hear, from the Mouth of Calvin and Beza, the Reason, which had obliged them to forsake the Church of Rome (18). He acknowledges, that This Journey preceded the Time, wherein Baudouin was made Professor at Bourges. He ought, then, to grant, that Baudouin made it before the Year 1549, and consequently, when Beza was not yet a fit Person to be consulted on Those Matters. It is certain, I. That Beza was yet a Papist, and at Paris, when Baudouin cried up Calvin's and Bucer's Letters in all Companies (19). II. That Baudouin was gone from Geneva, before Beza went thither (20). This supplies us with a strong Proof of the Falshood, contained in these Words of Varillas (21): "Calvin, who pretended to raise him "by the same Ways, that Beza had gained Repute "in the Party, invited him to Geneva, received him "in his House, admitted him into the Intrigues of "the Consistory, and made use of him several Years "as a Secretary. But, whether Baudouin's Humour "was extremely fickle, as the Calvinists reproached "him afterwards, or that he discovered, that Cal- "vinism was but a refined Hypocrisy, as he declared "in a satirical Apology; he went from Geneva to "Heidelberg." Beza was not yet of the Protestant Religion, when Baudouin received so many Marks of Friendship from Calvin. Baudouin, after he had received Them, did not go to Heidelberg, but returned into France, and was seven Years Professor at Bourges. I confess, that, after This, He went again to Calvin at Geneva (22), but he did not stay long there; he suffered a severe Reprimand there, and testified his Repentance; he went soon after to Strasburg, by Calvin's Advice, and did not teach the Civil-Law at Heidelberg, 'till after he had taught it at Strasburg. "Quum illa Bituricensis conditio eum "gravaret (ostentatio enim, qua sola pollet, evanue- "rat, ut spei & votis minimè satisfaceret) non du- "bitavit huc se recipere: & quum undique liberis "eum convitiis exagitarint, qui prius amici fuerant, "humaniter à me impetrata venia admissus fuit. Feci "quidem quod necesse erat, ut severa objurgatione "correctus lapsus sui fœditatem agnosceret. Servi- "liter assensus est, & adulatoriè meis se consiliis re- "gendum permisit. Argentinam profectus nomen "dedit apud Pastorem & Seniores Gallicanæ Eccle- "siæ (23). —— Being displeased with his Situation "at Bourges, which by no means answered his vain- "glorious Expectations, he made no Scruple of retir- "ing hither; and, notwithstanding the Reproaches, "which, on all sides, were cast on him by Those, who "had formerly been his Friends, I received him kind- "ly. By a severe Reproof, which was necessary, I "brought him to acknowledge the Foulness of his Apo- "stacy. He servilely complied, and flatteringly gave "himself up to be governed by my Advice. Yet, going "to Strasburg, he went over to the Pastor and Elders "of the Gallican Church." Thus you see how Varillas informed himself of Things, which he pretended to speak of.

[C] He was sent for by Anthony de Bourbon, King of Navarre] Some say, that he was, then, in Lorrain, in the Retinue of Prince Casimir, Son of Frederic, Count Palatine (24). Others, that he was returned into France, with the Heir of the Count Palatine, who came to compliment Charles IX, on his Accession to the Crown (25). But All this does not so much as touch upon the Intrigue, which Beza mentions. He says, that, after the Death of Francis II, They, who feared to lose their Authority, in the Court of France, endeavoured chiefly to induce the King of Navarre to return back to the Romish Communion (26). They engaged him to send an Embassador to the Court of Rome, in hopes either to recover his Kingdom, or to obtain Another from the Catholic King, by the Pope's good Offices. On the other hand, Thy gave him Hopes, by suborn'd Persons, that The Protestants of Germany might unite in his Favour, and assist him in recovering the Crown of Navarre; especially, if means could be found out to reconcile the Religions. They mentioned a Professor of Heidelberg to him, whose Name was Baudouin, who was a fit Person to negotiate such Matters. He sent for him into France; he conferred with him; and, judging him fit to find out the means of An Agreement in Religion, he set him to work; and, after some rough Draughts, prepared at Paris, he sent him back into Germany, and charged him, by Name, to consult with Cassander. This Intrigue, designed to break off the Conference of Poissy, did not effect it. The Ministers had already assembled there twice, when Baudouin returned with a Project of Union, printed at Basil (27). He was reprimanded for returning too late: He found, that the Bishop of Valencia, who had promised him a Professorship of Civil-Law, had changed his Mind. All, that he could obtain, was to be Preceptor to the King of Navarre's natural Son. He went to Paris, and gained Esteem by his Lectures, in which he joined Civil-Law with History; but he lost his Reputation on the Publication of the Book against the Treaty for a Reconciliation of Religions, which he had brought from Germany. He undertook to write against Calvin, in his own Defence; the Consequences of which we shall see below.

Varillas may be said, in the main, to confirm this Account of Beza. He says, that "Baudouin went "from Geneva to Heidelberg, where he was Professor "of the Civil-Law; 'till, Cassander having inspired "him with the Desire of re-uniting all Religions, he "thought it best to begin with France, where he ex- "pected to find the least Opposition. He came to "Paris, where he communicated, to the Cardinal "of Lorrain, the famous Consultation, which the "same Cassander had drawn up for the Execution of "his Project. The Cardinal received it with so "much the more Joy, as he foresaw, that, though "it should not produce all the Effect, which it's Au- "thor expected, yet it would, at least, set the Pro- "testants at Variance, and divide the Ministers of "the Assembly of Poissy, by the Overtures of Agree- "ment, which it would suggest to the most mode- "rate among them (28)." Varillas had said just before, (9) Papyr. Masso, Elog. Part II. pag. 257. You will find the same Fault in Bullart, Acad. des Sciences, Tom. I. pag. 228.

(10) In the Article DUAREN.

(11) In the Remark [I] of the Article DUAREN.

(12) See Beza's Answer to Baudouin, Oper. Tom. II. pag. 213. 214.

(13) Beza, ib. pag. 214.

(14) Id. ib. pag. 213.

(15) He should have said 1550. See the Article DUAREN, Remark [E].

(16) Menag. ubi supra.

(17) Papyr. Masso, ubi supra.

(18) Bullart, Academ. des Sciences, Tom. I. pag. 228. The same Fault is in the Theatrum of Ghilini, Tom. II. pag. 83.

(19) Beza Respons. ad Balduin, pag. 206. Oper. Tom. II. Note, that Baudouin says, in his third Answer, fol. 80, verso, that This belongs to the Year 1546.

(20) Baldu- in. ibid. fol. 83, verso.

(21) Varill. Hist. of Charles IX. Tom. I. pag. 89. Edit. of Holland, 1686.

(22) Beza Resp. ad Bald. Oper. Tom. II. pag. 213.

(23) Calvin, Resp. ad Balduin, pag. 368. Tract. Theol.

(24) Valer. Biol. Belg. pag. 222. which agrees with Baudouin's Narrative, in his third Answer, fol. 91.

(25) Menage, Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 157.

(26) Theod. Beza ad Francisci Balduini Ecebolii Convicia Responsi. init. pag. 201, &c. Tom. II. Oper.

(27) There is neither the Place of Impression, nor the Printer's Name, inserted in it. Beza ibid. pag. 202.

(28) Varillas's Hist. of Charles IX. Vol. I. pag. 90. Edit. of Holland. See also Thuanus, lib. 28. pag. 567.

Digitized by Google

ſtanding, that Anthony was dead of a Wound, which he had received at the Siege of Roüen, he returned with his Pupil into France, and found his Eſtate and his Books plundered (g). He returned to his own Country, whither he was invited, to teach the Civil-Law in the Univerſity of Doüay [D]. He was promiſed great Advantages, fore, that, by this means, Baudouin became Preceptor to the King of Navarre's natural Son. He tells us, afterwards, how the Miniſters got "clear of the "Difficulties, which Baudouin had thrown in their "Way. But, continues he (29), They would not "have diſentangled themſelves ſo eaſily from Baudouin's ſecond Difficulty, if Fortune had not favoured them. He had perſuaded the Cardinal of "Lorrain to ſend for the moſt famous Lutheran Profeſſors of the Palatinate, and the Dutchy of Wirtemberg, to introduce them into the Conference, "where, he was ſure, they would be more zealous againſt the Calviniſts, than againſt the Catholics; and that, by this means, beſides the Pleaſure "of ſetting the Heretics together by the Ears, their "Quarrels would make them ridiculous to the Court, "where their Doctrine was before admired; and the "People, who thought them uniform, underſtanding, that they had quarrelled among themſelves, "would ſo ſuddenly change the Eſteem they had "for them into Contempt, that no Frenchman would "leave the Communion of the Church for the future. It muſt be confeſſed, that the Catholics never "received more wholeſome Advice, than This of "Baudouin; and, if it had been put in practice with "as much Diligence, as was requiſite in ſo delicate "an Intrigue, all the Evils, which the Conference "of Poiſſy produced, afterwards, would have been "prevented. And, indeed, the Miniſters, who were "not ignorant of their Adverſaries moſt private Maxims, having diſcovered what Baudouin had "propoſed to their Diſadvantage, were tranſported "againſt him with all the Exceſs of Paſſion, which "Indignation, Spite, Jealouſy, and Fury, can inſpire, when animated by a falſe Zeal, and hidden "under ſo ſpecious a Cover."

(g) Valer. Andrea, Bibl. Belg. pag. 221, 222.

(29) Varill. ib. pag. 91.

Note, That Varillas is miſtaken, when he ſays, that Baudouin carried Caſſander's Conſultation to the Cardinal of Lorrain: For it was not made 'till three Years after (30). I ſhall give, below (31), the Title of The Work, which he carried, and ſhall obſerve (32), that he was employed to mediate an Eccleſiaſtical Agreement with the Prince of Condé.

(30) See Spondanus, ad Ann. 1564. n. 27.

(31) In Remark [H].

(32) In Remark [M].

[D] He was invited, to teach the Civil-Law in the Univerſity of Doüay.] The Marquis de Bergue, and ſeveral other great Lords of the Netherlands, engaged Maximilian de Bergue, Archbiſhop of Cambray, to manage matters ſo, that This Profeſſorſhip of Civil-Law might be procured for Baudouin. They deſired to make uſe of his Advice in Matters of State and Religion (33); for they knew his Opinion was, that the Laws againſt the Sectaries ought to be mitigated (34). "Nam Balduinus in ea erat ſententia, ut veterem Edictorum ſeveritatem leniendam profiteretur, affirmaretque, retinere eâ ratione Eccleſiæ "auctoritatem neque veteres conſuêſſe, neque iis, "quæ tunc erant, temporibus, poſſe (35). —— For "Baudouin was of ſuch an Opinion, as to declare, "that the ancient Severity of the Edicts ought to be "mitigated, and to affirm, that Our Anceſtors neither "did, nor could, in thoſe Times, ſupport the Autho- "rity of the Church by ſuch means." So that there is reaſon to believe, that he returned to Paris, becauſe he would not be engaged, by the Duke of Alba, in the cruel Proceedings then in agitation. "Ac ne forte quæſitor reis datus capitalibus ſententiis provincialium ſuorum ſubſcribere cogeretur (36). "—— And leaſt, by being appointed to enquire into "the Guilt of the Accuſed, he ſhould be obliged to join "with thoſe of his own Province, in pronouncing Sen- "tence of Death on Them." The Male-contents of the Netherlands promiſed themſelves great Things from his Counſels, ſince, beſides the Principles, which I have already mentioned, he was a Perſon of great Addreſs, and perfectly knew the World: "Ut in "Belgiam venit, magnam ſui expectationem omnibus fecit. Solers animo, obſequendi gratiâ, & civili congreſſu, nec minus officii comitate, ad ingenia principum vitam inſtruxerat. Nec enim novorum hominum deliramenta ſectabatur, & rurſus in "religione ſcrupulum oderat. Humaniuſque credebat, "iniquitati temporum cedere, pietatiſque integritatem in paucis violare, quam vim adferre turbatis "conſcientiis, quas in contaminatis hominibus nulla "unquam ſupplicia eluunt (37). - - - - - - - Upon his "Arrival in the Netherlands, great Expectations "were raiſed of him. He was a compleat Courtier; "he never gave into the Follies of Upſtarts; nor was "a Bigot to Religion. Beſides which, he thought "it more becoming a Man to give way a little to the "Iniquity of the Times, and rather to recede from "the ſtrict Laws of Piety in a few Inſtances, than to "offer Violence to diſturbed Conſciences, which, in "Perſons infected with them, no Puniſhment can ever "waſh out." The Author, whom I quote, had obſerved, that Baudouin had been very well known to Lewis of Naſſau, at Heidelberg. The third Apology of This Civilian informs us, that the Prince of Naſſau, who had been his Auditor at Strasburg, had lately careſſed him much in the Netherlands (38). Let us add to this, that he was eſteemed by William, Prince of Orange. "Franciſco Balduino, juriſconſulto "egregio, pacis Eccleſiaſticæ ſtudioſo, magni facto à "Principe Arauſionenſi Wilhelmo, aliiſque Belgarum "proceribus, qui & opera ejus uſi ſunt, cur credi "non debeat, nihil cauſæ eſt (39). - - - - - - - I ſee "no reaſon, why we ſhould not give Credit to Francis "Baudouin, an excellent Civilian, who ſtudied the "Peace of the Church, and was highly eſteemed by "William, Prince of Orange, and others of the Nobi- "lity in the Low-Countries." It is Grotius, who ſays this, and who affirms, that That Prince, and other great Lords of the Netherlands, conſulted Baudouin. It was in their firſt Proceedings againſt Spain. He was preſent in the firſt Aſſemblies of Breda; and they employed him to draw up the Writing, in which they demanded, of the Ducheſs of Parma, the free Exerciſe of their Religion. He ſhewed, that Religion cannot ſubſiſt without An Outward Exerciſe, and that it requires This, as a neceſſary Support, and Nouriſhment (40). The Author, who informs me of this, obſerves, that Baudouin had been recalled from his Exile, by the Archbiſhop of Arras. Ab exilio per Archiepiſcopum Atrebatenſum (it ſhould be Atrebatenſem) revocatus (41). To underſtand This, The Reader muſt know, that, finding himſelf accuſed of Hereſy, he left his Country, and that, after his Flight, a Sentence of Proſcription was pronounced againſt him (42). It was revoked, when they recalled him, in order to conſult with him on the State of Affairs in the Netherlands. Note, that the Author, who ſpeaks of the Archbiſhop of Arras, does not relate the Thing, as he ought: The Chronicle of John Francis le Petit, to which he refers, will tell us the Circumſtances of it better: "Francis Baudouin - - - - "having before been baniſhed from Arras for his "Religion, was ſent for by the ſaid Lord, Prince "of Orange, from France, to conſult him on the "Difficulties, which then occurred; who, after his "Baniſhment, was revoked by the Chamber of "Artois, at the Inſtance of the Archbiſhop of Cambray, went to the ſaid Prince, in the City of "Bruſſels; where, having conferred with him, and "and the other above-mentioned Lords, he drew up "a Diſcourſe, in the Form of a Propoſal, concerning the Then Religious Troubles, which was ſent "to the King of Spain, directed to his own Perſon, "wherein are contained the true Means of preventing all Inſurrections, and extirpating Sects, and "Hereſies (43)." This Diſcourſe is preſerved entire, in the Chronicle of John Francis le Petit. It is ſolid, and very judicious. This Chronicle ſays, that "Baudouin luckily hit upon the true Remedy of the "Troubles, which the King, and his Council, might, "of late, have known to be ſo."

(33) Valer. Andreas Biol. Belg. pag. 222.

(34) Id. ib.

(35) Id. ib.

(36) Papyr. Maſſo, Elog. Part. II. pag. 259.

(37) Nicol. Burgundius, lib. 2. Hiſt. Belg. p. 67.

(38) Baudouin. in Reſponſ. ad Calvin. & Bezam. fol. 88, verſo. It was printed in the Year 1564.

(39) Grotius in Rivetiani Apologetici Diſcuſſione, pag. 23.

(40) Joh. Grevius, Epiſt. ad Bernhard. Brantium. It is the 3-6th of the Epiſtolæ Eccleſiaſt. & Theologicæ. Edit. of Amſt. 1684. He quotes John Petit. Tom. I.

(41) Id. ib.

(42) See Nicolas Burgundius, ubi ſupra, p. 66.

(43) John Francis le Petit, Recorder of Bethune, in Artois, in his Great Chronicle of the Netherlands, Tom. II. pag. 75. Edit. of Dordrecht, 1620.

Let us remark, by the way, that the Writers, who ſpeak of him, are in the wrong to ſay, that from the Netherlands he went to Paris. They ſhould have ſaid, that he did not go to Paris, till he had fled to Geneva, where he embraced the Proteſtant Religion (44). He boaſted, that, for the Profeſſion of the Goſpel, he had ſuffered Exile, and the loſs of all he had: but ſome affirm, that his Mother ſent him all that he could pretend to of his Patrimony.

(44) See the Words of Antonius Guærinius, above, Cita. (4).

Digitized by Google

Advantages, and was very courteouſly received by the Duke of Alba, on the Eve of That Day that Count Egmont was impriſoned: but, fearing to be choſen one of the Judges of Thoſe Perſons, whom they had a mind to put to Death, he deſired leave to be abſent for ſome Days, under pretence of fetching his Wife, and his Library; and, having obtained it, he returned to Paris, where he ſtayed. He read there public Lectures on ſome Parts of the Pandects, with the Applauſe of a Crowd of Auditors (b). He accepted the Profeſſorſhip of Civil-Law, which was offered him by the Univerſity of Bezanſon; but, underſtanding at his coming there, that the Emperor Maximilian had forbid That Univerſity to erect This Profeſſorſhip, he would read no Lectures there, though he was ſollicited to do it. He returned to Paris, where he followed the Advice of Philip de Hurault (i), which was, to teach the Civil-Law in the Univerſity of Angers. This He did near four Years, and till the Duke of Anjou, who was proclaimed King of Poland, ſent for him to Paris, at the time, when the Poliſh Embaſſy was received there [E] (k). He was deſigned for the Profeſſorſhip of Civil-Law in the Univerſity of Cracow

(b) See Remark [K].

(i) The Duke of Anjou's Chancellor.

(k) Taken from Papyrius Maſſo, ubi ſupra, pag. 258, & ſeq.

ny. " Fortunis exutum fuiſſe negant conterranei & " familiares: quia extra Cæſaris ditionem à matre & " cohæredibus permiſſum fuit ſumere quantum ex " hæreditate, ſi integra fuiſſet ejus conditio, perve- " nire ad eum poterat: ut ne quidem aſſis jacturam " fecerit. Et aliquando coram homini gratulatus " ſum, quòd tam facilè recuperaſſet, quod ſibi crede- " bat periiſſe (45). - - - - - - - - His Countrymen and " Acquaintance deny, that he was ſtripped of his For- " tunes: ſince, when he was out of the Emperor's Power, " his Mother, and Co-heirs, allowed him to take as " much of his Patrimony as he could have claimed, " had it remained entire; ſo that he did not loſe a ſingle " Farthing: And I myſelf have perſonally congratula- " ted him upon the eaſy Recovery of what he looked " upon as loſt." Obſerve, pray, a want of Exact- neſs in Papyrius Maſſo. He ſays nothing of the Jour- ney, which our Baudouin took into the Netherlands, at the Sollicitation of the great Lords, who would remedy the Diſorders, which The too great Severity of the Penal Laws, againſt the Sectaries, produced daily. He ſpeaks only of a Journey taken, during the Government of the Duke of Alba. This is to forget the principal Thing, and to reduce the Af- fair to but a ſmall part of it. What I have quoted from Valerius Andreas, Nicolas Burgundius, and ſeveral others, and which is a very conſiderable Part of Bau- douin's Life, ought to be referred to the Year 1564, under the Government of the Ducheſs of Parma. It was in That Year, that Caſſander and Baudouin were conſulted by the Malecontents. The one, viz. Caſſander, was named by the Count de Horn, and the other by Count Lewis of Naſſau (46). It was believed, that Theſe two Men were capable of accommodating the Differences of Religion. The Prince of Orange promiſed great things to Francis Baudouin, and not only deſigned to procure him a Profeſſorſhip of Civil-Law, in the Univerſity of Lou- vain, or in That of Doüay, but alſo a Seat in the Privy-Council. Baudouin, returning into France, with a Promiſe to come back again into the Ne- therlands, at a proper Time, received many Preſents from That Prince. Count Lewis of Naſſau preſſed him ſeveral times to keep his Word, and endeavour- ed to dazzle him with the Splendor of Dignities: Imminentium Honorum blanditiis allicere (47). But Baudouin thought he ſhould not find his Account in the Buſineſs he had promiſed to undertake; all his Friends adviſed him not to concern himſelf in it, and he was in hopes of a better Reward for the Pains he took to reconcile the Bourbons with the Guiſes (48). Theſe are Particulars, which deſerved to have been touched upon by Papyrius Maſſo; and yet he has not ſaid a Word of them; but, inſtead thereof, tells us, That the Spaniards offered him the Profeſſorſhp of Civil-Law, in the Univerſity of Doüay; that They promiſed him a yearly Penſion of Six thouſand Florins, and a ſhare of Fifty thouſand Florins, in the Confiſcation of the Eſtates of Thoſe, who ſhould be proſcribed; and that The Duke of Alba received him civilly, &c. It would appear very ſtrange, that the Spaniards ſhould honour a Man in this manner, who had favoured the Prince of Orange's Deſigns, if we did not remember Bau- douin's Inconſtancy, I mean, his extream Readineſs at changing Sides. The Hiſtorian, whom I quote, having mentioned a fine Diſcourſe of the Prince of Orange, adds, that it was the Fruit of Baudouin's Converſations. " Nemini mirum videri debet, tan- " tam in illo principe eluxiſſe cognitionem Philoſo- " phiæ; ex Balduini colloquiis hauſerat (49). - - - - - " No One ought to think it ſtrange, that This Prince " diſcovered ſo great a Knowledge of Philoſophy; he " acquired it by converſing with Baudouin."

(45) Calvin. Reſponſ. ad Balduin. ſub fin. p. 370, Tractatuum Theolog.

(46) Brother of William, Prince of Orange.

(47) Nicol. Burgund. ubi ſupra, pag. 68.

(48) Taken from Nicolas Burgund. pag. 67, 68.

(49) Nicol. Burgund. Hiſt. Belg. pag. 131. ad Ann. 1564.

I ſhall obſerve, in another Place (50), what he did in relation to the Maſſacre of Paris.

(50) In the Article CHARPENTIER (PETER).

[E] The Duke of Anjou - - - - - - ſent for him to Paris, at the time, when the Poliſh Embaſſy was received there.] Baudouin was this Prince's Maſter of the Requeſts (51): He gained the Favour of the Poliſh Embaſſadors, by converſing with Them, and publiſhed a Diſcourſe de Legatione Polonica, dedica- ted to John Zamoski (52); it is thought he would have gone into Poland, the Spring following, if he had not died. This is all that Papyrius Maſſo tells us of the Matter. Let us, therefore, look upon moſt of what is related by Mr Bullart, as fabulous Hyperboles. " It was, ſays he (53), during Baudou- " in's Abode at Angers, that the Poliſh Lords, who " came to offer Their Crown to Henry, Duke of Anjou, " arrived in France. A Perſon of Ability was wanting, " to receive This ſumptuous Embaſſy, and to anſwer " it. It was a material Point to return Thanks for " This Offer, without depreſſing the Royal Dignity " that was offered: It was requiſite to ſpeak both like a " King, and a grateful Man. No Perſon in France was " found better qualified to undertake this, than the pru- " dent BAUDOUIN. The Duke of Anjou having " ſent for him to Paris, This great Man appeared " in the Halls of the Louvre among the chief Per- " ſons of the State: He was Interpreter to That fa- " mous Embaſſy: He was no leſs applauded for the " Excellency of his Anſwer, than the famous Za- " moski for That of his Speech; and he made himſelf " ſo conſiderable to Thoſe Illuſtrious Embaſſadors, that " it was reſolved to ſend him into Poland to ſettle " That Crown on the Head of the new King, and to " diſpoſe That Nation to receive him: but his laſt " Sickneſs, which ſeized him at the ſame time, de- " prived him of That Honour, and the Duke of An- " jou of the Hopes he had of re-eſtabliſhing the Uni- " verſity of Cracow by his Means." Nothing could happen more glorious, than This, to a Profeſſor of Angers: How comes it then, that one of his beſt Friends does not mention it, in the Elogy, which He conſecrated to him? No good reaſon can be aſſigned for it, unleſs we ſay, that it is falſe; for it is againſt all probability, that he ſhould be ignorant of ſuch a thing, if it really happened. Writers of Elogies may be permitted to make uſe of a more figurative, and flattering, Language, than Hiſtorians; but neither Lying, nor Amplifications, ſuch as change the Nature of an Adventure, ought any more to be allowed Them, than Hiſtorians; ſo that it may be ſaid, that Mr Bullart is guilty of an inexcuſable Exceſs. Thuanus, who has exactly related what con- cerned the Poliſh Embaſſadors, their Speeches, and the Anſwers, which were made to them, ſays no- thing of our Baudouin (54). It is always the Biſhop of Poſnania, who ſpeaks, and a Chancellor, who anſwers him: Birague, Chancellor of France, replied, when They harangued Charles IX. Chiverni, Chan- cellor of the Duke of Anjou, returned an Anſwer, when They harangued This Duke, and when They read to him the Act of his Election. If any other ſpeaks beſides, it is, Nicolas Chriſtopher Radzievil, on the Poliſh Side (55), and Paul de Foix, for Charles

(51) Menag. Remarks on the Life of P. Ayrault. pag. 185.

(52) He was one of the Poliſh Ambaſſadors.

(53) Bullart. Acad. des Sciences. pag. 229.

(54) Thuan. lib. 57. init.

(55) Id. ib. pag. 47.

Digitized by Google

Cracow (l), and it is thought he would have followed the new King into That Country, if Death hath not prevented him. He died in the Arms of his only Daughter [F], in the College of Arras, at Paris, the Twenty fourth of October, 1573 (m) [G]. This is the Sum of what Papyrius Maſſo, Valerius Andreas, Aubertus Miræus, Bullart, and ſeveral others, relate of him. It is very ſtrange, that they ſhould ſo boldly ſuppreſs all that relates to his changing of his Religion (n). One can hardly infer from their Narratives, that he lived once in the Proteſtant Communion. Moreri has, either through Ignorance, or Diſſimulation, omitted the ſame Things. But, in requital, he enlarges on the Quarrel between Calvin and Baudouin. It was a very ſharp one [H]. Beza came into it with a little too much (l) Thuan. lib. 57. pag. 47.

(m) Papyr. Maſſo, Elog. Part II. pag. 261.

(n) See Remark [A].

Charles IX (56). My Remark would be of leſs weight, if Thuanus had made no manner of mention either of Zamoski, or Baudouin. But we find, that he ſpeaks of them both; and after this Manner: He ſays, That Speech of Zamoski was printed; but that it was not known, whether it had been ſpoken; In eandem rem edita, an habita ſit incertum, Oratio luculenta a Joanne Zario Zamoſcio (57): and he adds, that Baudouin cauſed another Speech to be printed, addreſſed to Zamoski. Is not This plainly giving us to underſtand, that Baudouin was not choſen to interpret That Polander's Speech, and to anſwer it in the Preſence of the whole Court? What can be ſtronger againſt Mr Bullart's Narrative?

(56) Id. ib. pag. 49.

(57) Id. ib. pag. 47. Note, that the Pages are very ill marked here in Thuanus, Edit. of Francfort, 1625.

[F] He died in the Arms of his only Daughter.] Her Name was Catherine. She was twice married; "her firſt Husband was John de Sauzay, Sieur de "Sainte Ouanne, in Poitou; and her ſecond Huſ- "band was Adam le Changeur, Sieur du Cotau, in "Berri (58)." She was born at Heidelberg (59). Her Mother's Name was Catherine Biton; and was of Bourges. She was the Widow of Philip Labbé, Great Grand-father of Father Labbe a Jeſuit, when ſhe married Baudouin (60). She had ſome Children by her firſt Husband, who, with their Grand-mother, were ruined by their Step-father, as Calvin relates it. "Ipſum minime ϛοργικὸν eſſe clamant Bituriges, "qui ſuos privignos, ſimul cum eorum avia, ſpoliave- "rit (61). —— The Inhabitants of Bourges cry out, "that he had but little Affection for his Children-in- "law, having ruined them, together with their "Grand-mother." Our Civilian was more deſirous to leave a Daughter behind him, than a Son, becauſe he feared Cicero's Deſtiny, whoſe Son inherited nothing of his Father's Eloquence. Percontanti mihi malletne filiam, quam filium habere, minime (62) inquit, Roma enim Ciceronis filium non agnoſcebat loquentem (63).

(58) Menag. Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 158.

(59) Papyr. Maſſo, Elog. pag. 261.

(60) Menag. ibid.

(61) Calvin. Tractat. Theolog. pag. 370.

(62) It ſhould be imo for minime makes a contrary Senſe to Maſſo's meaning.

(63) Papyr. Maſſo, Elog. Part. II. pag. 261, 262.

[G] He died the Twenty fourth of October 1573.] And not the eleventh of November 1572, as Valerius Andreas ſays. Thuanus places his Death on the eleventh of November 1573; Mr Menage on the Twenty fourth of October 1574; and yet he makes him but Fifty three Years, nine Months, and Twenty four Days, old, though he had placed his Birth on the firſt of January 1520. Theſe two Faults proceeded from la Croix du Maine.

[H] The Quarrel between Calvin and Baudouin was very ſharp.] I mentioned the Origin of it (64), when I ſaid, that Francis Baudouin diſperſed a little Book concerning a Re-union of Religions, whilſt the Conference of Poiſſy was held. It was an anonymous Latin Diſcourſe, compoſed by Caſſander, and entituled, De officio pii ac publice tranquillitatis vere amantis viri in hoc religionis diſſidio. When it was known at Geneva, that Baudouin deſigned to prejudice the Reformed by This little Book, it was thought proper to lay him open to the Public. For which reaſon, Calvin, in refuting This Piece, which he imputed to Baudouin, laſhed him ſeverely. His Refutation is entitled, "Reſponſio ad verſipellem "quendam mediatorem, qui pacificandi ſpecie rectum "Evangelii curſum in Gallia abrumpere molitus eſt. "—— An Anſwer to a certain turn-coat Mediator, "who has endeavoured to break off the right Courſe "of the Goſpel in France." It is in the Volume of Calvin's Opuſcula, pag. 351, and the following. Baudouin defended himſelf, by publiſhing a Work, for which he had obtained a Licence in the Year 1557: he reviſed it, and added an Appendix to it (65). In a word, it was His Ad leges de famoſis libellis & de calumniatoribus commentarius, printed, at Paris, by Andrew Wechel, in the Year 1562, in 4to. Calvin's Reply appeared in the Field ſoon after with a ſtrong Reinforcement (66); for it was accompanied with ſeveral Pieces compoſed by good Pens; beſides which, They publiſhed The Letters, which This Deſerter had written at ſeveral times to Calvin. "Reſpondit "quoque Joannes Criſpinus ejus conterraneus, & "perpetuus, quoad ejus fieri potuit, amicus. Ad- "juncta ſunt quorundam inſignium virorum ſcripta, "quibus perpetua iſtius improbitas, ſumma impuden- "tia, & extrema inſcitia ita manifeſtè redarguitur, "ut ne nunc quidem poſſit ignorantiam ſuam diffi- "teri. Additæ ſunt denique ipſius literæ variis "temporibus ad Calvinum ſcriptæ, ut horrenda iſta "defectio, ipſius apoſtatæ teſtimonio, apud omnes "bonos ſanciretur (67). —— Johannes Criſpinus, "likewiſe, his Countryman, and, as far as he could "be ſo, his Friend, anſwered him. There were "added, likewiſe, Pieces by ſome of the beſt Hands, "in which his perpetual Diſhoneſty, conſummate Im- "pudence, and extream Ignorance, are undeniably "proved. Laſtly there were added His Letters, written "at different Times to Calvin, as a Satisfaction to all "good Men of his horrid Apoſtacy." The Nature of this Collection will be more exactly known, if I give the Title of it here; which is This: "Joannis Cal- "vini reſponſio ad Balduini convicia. Ad leges de "transfugis, deſertoribus & emanſoribus, Franciſci "Balduini epiſtolæ quædam ad Joannem Calvinum "pro Commentariis. Franciſci Duareni J. C. ad "alterum quendam Juriſc. epiſtola, de Franciſco "Balduino. Antonii Contii J. C. admonitio de fal- "ſis Conſtantini legibus, ad quendam, qui ſe hoc "tempore Juriſconſultum Chriſtianum profitetur. De "officio tum in Religione, tum in ſcriptionibus, reti- "nendo, epiſtola ad Franciſcum Balduinum Juriſ- "conſultum. Ad legem III. C. Impp. de Apoſtatis, "Joannis Criſpini Commentarius ad Juriſconſultos. "—— John Calvin's Reply to the Calumnies of Bau- "douin. Some Epiſtles of Francis Baudouin to John "Calvin, by way of Commentaries on the Laws rela- "ting to Deſertors, and Vagabonds. An Epiſtle of "Francis Duarenus J. C. to another Civilian, con- "cerning Francis Baudouin. An Advertiſment of "Anthony Contius J. C. concerning the Spurious "Laws of Conſtantine, to one, who, at this time, "profeſſes himſelf a Chriſtian Lawyer. Of the Duty, "to be obſerved, both in Religion, and Writings, An "Epiſtle to Francis Baudouin, the Civilian. The "Commentary of Joannes Criſpinus on the III. C. "Imperial Law, concerning Apoſtates, addreſſed to "the Civilians." This Collection, containing an Hundred and ſeventeen Pages, was printed in the Year 1562, in 4to. Baudouin compoſed a ſecond Anſwer, which was printed at Paris, and at Cologne, in the Year 1562. Calvin, not thinking fit to refute it, publiſhed a Piece, of but One Page, wherein he informed the Public, that he would Anſwer This Adverſary no more (68). It is there, that he reproaches him with having violated the Laws of Hoſpitality, by ſtealing ſome Papers, which might be of Service to him in his perfidious Attempts. "Antequam reſ- "pondeo, ſays he (69), monendi ſunt lectores nihil "hac monedula eſſe furacius, ut hac parte fratrem "ſuum patruelem Antonium Balduinum ſuperet, cui "ob furandi ſolertiam, cognomen Ablativi à condiſ- "cipulis inditum fuit. Tanta fuit mea erga ipſum "facilitas, ut quicquid erat in bibliotheca mea char- "tarum liberè, me abſente, excuſſerit. Subripuiſſe "quæ in rem ſuam fore putabat, non aliunde peten- "da eſt luculentior probatio, quàm ex ejus ſcripto, "in quo ſe bellè prodidit. Certe fides ejus & hoſpi- "talitas hic deprehenditur (70). ------ Before I "reply, I muſt inform the Reader, that nothing is "more pilfering, than this Jackdaw, in which re- "ſpect he exceeds his paternal Uncle, Anthony Bau- "douin,

(64) In Remark [C].

(65) See Beza's Anſwer to Baudouin, pag. 202, 209; and Calvin's Anſwer to Baudouin, init.

(66) Entitled, Reſponſ. ad Balduini Convicia: It is in the ſame Volume, pag. 365, & ſeq.

(67) Beza ibid. p. 202.

(68) It is wrongly placed in the Volume of his Opuſcula; for it is before the ſecond Piece, which he publiſhed againſt Baudouin, tho' it was wrote after it.

(69) Calvin. in Præfat. Reſponſionis Theodori Bezæ ad Balduini convicia, p. 200. Oper. Tom. II.

(70) See Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 214.

Digitized by Google

much bitterneſs, even in the Opinion of ſeveral of his own Party [I]. It cannot be denied, that Baudouin was of a very inconſtant, and fantaſtical, Humour. He

" douin, who, for his cunning in thieving, was nick-
" named by his School-fellows The Ablative. He had
" ſuch eaſy acceſs to me, that, in my Abſence, he had
" the Liberty of turning over all the Papers in my " Library. That he pilfered what might be of Uſe to " him, is evident from his Writings, in which he " has finely betrayed himſelf. Here his Fidelity, and
" Obſervance of the Laws of Hoſpitality, plainly ap-
" pear." Beza ſupplied his Place, and replied to Baudouin's ſecond Piece, who ſpeedily publiſhed a third Apology againſt them. It appeared in the Year 1564, and the Title of it is, " Pro Fr. Balduino re-
" ſponſio ad Calvinum & Bezam, cum refutatione
" Calvini de ſcriptura & traditione (71). - - - - - - - -
" An Apology for Francis Baudouin, and a Confuta-
" tion of Calvin concerning Scripture and Tradition." The Preface, which Baudouin compoſed on Optatus, in the Year 1563, may be counted for the fourth Piece. It was tranſlated out of Latin into French by Peter Veil, who prefixed it to his French Tranſlation of Optatus, printed at Paris, in the Year 1564.

(71) Commentarius de ſtatu relig. & religionis in regno Galliæ, Tom. I. fol. 169. ad Ann. 1561.

This Account affords us Matter for Cenſuring a Proteſtant Writer. He mentions the Intrigues relating to the Writing of Caſſander, and adds, that Baudouin, not having been called by the Catholics, nor by the Reformed, to the Conference of Poiſſy, diſcharged all his Spleen againſt the Miniſters, and publiſhed ſome Libels againſt Calvin, and Beza, and that They anſwered him. Publicis ſcriptis inſectatus eſt Calvinum & Bezam, qui edito reſponſo ad illius probra reſpondent, & illum mendacii, perfidiæ, atque impietatis reum eſſe inſtituunt demonſtrare (72). This is to declare him the Aggreſſor; which is falſe: So that This Author is not as faithful, and exact, as he ſhould have been.

(72) Id. ib.

[I] Beza came into it with a little too much bitterneſs, even in the Opinion of ſeveral of his own Party.] The Piece, which he publiſhed concerning it, is in the ſecond Volume of his Works (73). Here is a ſmall Extract of the Letter, which Sainte Aldegonde wrote to him in the Year 1566. " Statueram præterea
" certiorem facere te quàm hic ſiniſtrè plerique inter-
" pretentur libellos iſthic ultro citroque tum in Bal-
" duinum tum in Heſhuſium ſcriptos, ex eoque ho-
" mines malevolos gravem Evangelicæ veritati con-
" ciliare invidiam. Sed quoniam audivi te harum re-
" rum ab aliis eſſe factum certiorem, volui ab hoc
" argumento ſuperſedere. Rogo tamen, obſervande
" in Chriſto parens, ut vel in harum regionum gra-
" tiam, in quibus non modo cum hypocritis eo no-
" mine nobis eſt colluctandum, verumetiam ab aper-
" tis hoſtibus gravia multa perpetienda, (qui ſuam
" tyrannidem in contentiones noſtras derivant) non
" graveres ſtylum quàm modeſtiſſimè in Evangelicæ
" veritatis Apoſtatas ac adverſarios temperare. Non " quidem quòd parcendum illis cenſeam, qui nullum
" non lapidem movent, quò nos in invidiam gravio-
" rem vocent, ſed ne (dum illis pro merito reſponde-
" tur) quod ſuis illi vaniſſimis erga nos maledictis at-
" que calumniis nequeunt conſequi) nempe ut Evan-
" gelii lucem obruant, ejuſque ſectatores apertis ve-
" ritatis hoſtibus excarnificandos tradant) id ipſum
" noſtris, etſi juſtiſſimis ac veriſſimis, non tamen, uti
" plerique exiſtimant, Evangelica manſuetudine dig-
" nis, vel accuſationibus, vel reſponſionibus, adeptos
" ſe eſſe glorientur. Id ſi feceris, uti omnino ſtatu-
" iſſe te audio, & nos magna invidia levaris, & illis
" ipſis perfidis Apoſtatis turpem maledicentiæ notam
" inuſtam reliqueris. Itaque ut facias, vehementer
" hic omnes Evangelii ſtudioſi (qui te plerique ut
" parentem amant & colunt, reverenturque ut Præ-
" ceptorem) etiam atque etiam te rogant (74). ——
" I had determined likewiſe to have informed you of
" the Miſconſtructions, which ſeveral here put upon
" the Pieces written on both Sides, both againſt Bau-
" douin, and Heſhuſius, and that ill diſpoſed Perſons
" conceive from hence a Prejudice againſt The Goſpel-
" Truth. But, hearing, that you are already ac-
" quainted with it, I thought I might be diſpenſed
" with from entring upon this Subject. Yet, O vene-
" rable Father in CHRIST, I intreat you, for
" the Sake of This Country, in which we are not
" only neceſſitated to contend with Hypocrites, as ſuch,
" but have many Evils to ſuffer from profeſſed Ene-
" mies, who impute their own Tyranny to Our Divi-
" ſions, that you would be pleaſed to temper the Keen-
" neſs of your Style, and write with as much Modera-
" tion, as poſſible, againſt Apoſtates, and the Ene-
" mies of the Chriſtian Faith. Not that I think they
" deſerve to be ſpared, who leave no Stone unturned to
" increaſe the Odium againſt us; but leaſt, by anſwer-
" ing them as They deſerve, we ſhould give them an " Opportunity of boaſting to have obtained That, by
" Our Accuſations, or Anſwers (which, though ever
" ſo juſt, and true, are, by many, thought not worthy " of the Goſpel Mildneſs) which They cannot effect by
" their ill-grounded Calumnies and Reproaches; I
" mean, The Extinction of the Goſpel-Light, and The
" Perſecution of it's Followers by the avowed Enemies
" of Truth. If you do This, as I hear you have deter-
" mined to do, you will both free us from a great
" Odium, and leave the ſhameful Brand of Calumny
" on Theſe perfidious Apoſtates. This All, who are
" Lovers of the Goſpel, here, moſt earneſtly intreat
" of you, whom They Love and Honour as a Father,
" and revere as a Teacher." It appears from theſe Words, I. That other Perſon had already informed Beza of the Prejudice, which the paſſionate Writings, that had appeared againſt Baudouin, did to the Reformed. Ill-diſpoſed Perſons took an Occaſion from them to render the Reformation odious. II. That he was moſt humbly deſired, for the future, to take off the Edge of his too ſharp Pen, if it were only in Favour of the Reformed of the Netherlands, who had, on this Occaſion, not only the Hypocrites (75), but alſo declared and violent Enemies, to deal with. III. That it was to be feared, that True and moſt juſt Anſwers, but void of Chriſtian Meekneſs, would accompliſh That, which The Impudence of Calumniators endeavoured in vain to effect, viz. That The Light of Truth ſhould be extinguiſhed, and it's Profeſſors ſuffer a cruel Perſecution. IV. That, if Beza condeſcended to This Advice, as it was ſaid he was reſolved to do, he would free the Church of Chriſt from a great Odium, and the Apoſtates would remain branded with Calumny. He anſwered Sainte Aldegonde, That, if He alone had been abuſed, he ſhould no more have been moved at it, than if he had heard a Dog bark in the Indies: But, Religion being concerned in it, he thought he was obliged to treat The Infamous Apoſtate, who had calumniated it, according to his Deſert; and that he regarded but little the Scruples of moderate Men. The impudent Lies of That Calumniator, ſays he, muſt affect them as much, as the Vigor of Our Replies. Every One may ſee, that it is neceſſary I ſhould ſet down his own Words; for many may imagine, I pervert the Senſe of them. Here they are: " Supereſt ut ad extremam tuam Epi-
" ſtolam paucis reſpondeam. Balduinum & Heſhuſi-
" um nonnulli vellent moderatius à me fuiſſe repre-
" henſos. Ego verò cuperem iſtos æquè affici im-
" pudentiſſimis eorum conviciis in homines innoxios
" contortis, ac juſtis noſtris defenſionibus. Quid non
" enim in optimum illum & innocentiſſimum Dei
" ſervum jaculatus eſt fœdus ille Apoſtata? in me
" verò quid non dixit? Et tamen Deus mihi teſtis
" eſt in animam meam, non multò magis me, ſi res
" mea privata ageretur, iſta petulantia commoveri po-
" tuiſſe, quàm ſi in his regionibus verſans audiviſſem
" canes in India latrare. Sed quum per noſtrum la-
" tus viderem Gallicas omnes Eccleſias ab iſto con-
" ductitio rabula confodi, & tanquam ſeditioſos accu-
" ſari, quotcunque iſtorum latronum telis corpora
" ſua non objecerunt, ut facere neceſſe fuit, niſi &
" Chriſti cauſam & regiam majeſtatem prodere ma-
" luiſſent, peccavi ſcilicet, quòd ejus calumniis ſic
" reſpondi, ut & ipſum ſycophantam ſuis coloribus
" depingerem, & cauſæ noſtræ bonitatem probarem.
" Itaque quod ad illum attinet, non diſſimulo me
" nullum peccatum agnoſcere, & moderatos iſtos
" nihil morari. De Heſhuſio, quoniam aliud argu-
" mentum tractabam, fateor cauſam illam potuiſſe ali-
" ter agi. Sed ſingularis illa iſtius hominis & inſcitia
" & audacia in hos veluti ſcopulos me adegit, ubi
" tamen ſpero me naufragium non feciſſe (76). ——
" It remains only to anſwer your laſt Letter in few
" Words. There are, who could wiſh I had reproved
" Baudouin and Heſhuſius with more Moderation.
" And I cannot help wiſhing, theſe Perſons were equal- " ly affected with the impudent Calumnies They have
" vented againſt innocent Perſons, as with My Juſt
" Defence. For what has not This baſe Apoſtate
" thrown

(73) Pag. 201, & ſeq.

(74) Philippus Marnixius, Epiſt. ad Theod. Bezam. It is the 6th among Beza's Letters, pag. 206, 207, Tom. III. Oper.

(75) I believe he means the Anabaptiſts.

(76) Theod. Beza, Epiſt. VII, pag. 209.

Digitized by Google

He was, with respect to Universities, what certain Persons are in relation to Mistresses, who run from one Fair to Another, and from Shore to Shore in the Sea of Love. It is very probable, that, when he lived at Bourges, in the Romish Communion, he had more affection for the Protestants, than when he communicated with Them at Heidelberg. It may also be suspected, that he neither liked Popery, nor Calvinism, nor Lutheranism, and that he would have new-modelled Them, and perhaps many other Sects, to form A New One out of Them. What is certain, is, that he aimed at a Re-union of Religions (o). On the other hand, it cannot be denied, that he had very fine Parts, an Extensive Knowledge (p), an admirable Memory, and an Eloquence so much the more persuasive, as he was a handsome Man (q), and had a strong, and pleasing, Voice (r). We are not to think, therefore, that there is any exaggeration in what has been said of his (o) See Remarks [C] [D] and [M].

(p) Papyr. Masso, ubi supra, pag. 261.

(q) Statura fuit justa, forma eximia, & per omnes ætatis gradus venusta. Id. ib.

(r) Vocem canoram, firmissima latera, ut docens, Periclis instar, fulminare videretur. Id. ibid.

" thrown out against That best and most innocent Servant " of GOD? What has he not said against Me? And " yet GOD is my Witness, that, were it only my own " private Concern, This Insolence would scarce move " me more, than if I should, in this Country, hear the " barking of Dogs in the Indies. But, when I am " sensible, that the whole Gallican Church is wound- " ded through my Sides, by this hireling Brawler, " and That All, who resist the Attacks of these Rob- " bers, which ought to be done, if we would not be- " tray the Cause of CHRIST, and the King's Ma- " jesty, are accused as seditious, I have offended, " forsooth, in so answering his Calumnies, as to paint " the Sycophant in his proper Colours, and prove the " Goodness of Our Cause. Therefore, as to Him, I " will not dissemble, that I am conscious to myself of " no Fault, and that I disregard these moderate Men. " With regard to Heshusius, as I was, then, hand- " ling another Argument, I confess the Cause might " have been otherwise managed. But the singular " Ignorance and Impudence of the Fellow drove me " upon these Rocks, upon which, however, I hope I " have not made Shipwreck."

I shall make but two Reflexions on This Answer. In the first place, it is undeniable, that Readers give some reason to believe, that they are more offended at the Bitterness of an Apologist, than at That of the Aggressor. Let a Writer defame all the World, the Dead, the Living, Sovereigns, Subjects, his Brethren in Religion, The Adversaries of his Party; let him exercise This Trade several Years successively, and become more malicious, and satirical, as he grows old; I confess, that The Readers perceive it, and blame him for it: but if, at last, This Man happens to be very ill treated by Those, whom he has provoked, you will hear an hundred times more Complaints against Them, than against Him. His very Enemies think it strange, that he was not treated with more Moderation. They have read, with pleasure, what was published to his Disadvantage; and yet they will not stick to say, that he ought to have been spared. This is an Effect of the immoderate Inclination Men have for censuring others. Some People are pleased to approve of nothing. But let us not judge so of those Moderate Persons, whose Opinion is mentioned by St Aldegonde. Doubtless, They were yet more offended at the satirical Audaciousness of Baudouin, than at the Invectives of those, who confuted him; but they could have wished, that slandering had been the Character of the Enemies of the True Religion, and that They, who defended it, had distinguished themselves by Wisdom, and a moderate Style. They hated a satirical Disposition, which mixes Defamation with Reason, in which Personal Injuries predominate; and They could not detest it without some uneasiness, whilst it was common to their Enemies, and their Friends. Wherefore, They wished, as well for This, as for some other Reasons, that it were one of the distinguishing Characters of the Catholic Writers, and that the Protestants would not, by adopting it themselves, free them from this Brand of Infamy. I observe, in the second place, That Beza indulged his Imagination too far; for, if the Book, which he wrote against Baudouin, were the only One left us, we should not only take This Civilian for a most infamous Rascal, but also for an Author without any Wit, Learning, or Merit. He has, therefore, given a deceitful Description of him; since it cannot be denied by those, who have read what Baudouin has written, and what others have said of him, that he was a Man of very great Parts. An Author may be excused, on account of the Infirmity of Human Nature for not allowing his Enemy to be Learned, Eloquent, and Ingenious. But, if he be permitted to conceal These Truths, he ought, at least, to abstain from denying Them. The Passion, which an Author shews, in the Works, he composes against the Enemies of his Religion, may proceed, sometimes, from a great Zeal; wherefore it must be said, that Anger is equivocal between Temper, and Devotion. But I cannot see, how the Haughtiness of a Writer can be reduced to an Evangelical Principle. I call Haughtiness the Contempt he expresses for his Adversary, and the Affectation of treating him as the most wretched of Authors; though the contrary be notoriously true, and is evident from his Employments, and Writings. I could wish not to have found, in the History of the Reformed Churches, that Baudouin died a wretched Pedant (77). Such an Expression ought not to have fallen from the Pen of Beza, who was then Professor of Divinity, and formerly Professor of Greek. He should have left so unpolite, and contemptuous, a Way of treating Those, who instruct Youth, to the Gentlemen of the Sword. He should not have affronted a Profession, which was of the same kind with his own. If it be said, that he did not place Baudouin's Pedantry in his being a Professor, but in his personal Defects, this is to say nothing at all; since This Civilian did not want Politeness, and knew how to converse with great Men, and enter into their Intrigues (78). An eager Desire of treating him with Contempt induced Beza to say, that, when he was proposed to the King of Navarre, in 1561, to be employed by him, That Prince did not know, that there was such a Person, as Baudouin, in the World (79). This is one of Those Things, which Authors advance at Random, and which they cannot justify afterwards. Baudouin affirms, that he was recommended to That Prince by the Queen of Navarre (80), to whom he had the Honour to pay his Duty, on the Wedding-day of That Queen's Daughter with That Prince (81). He affirms, that the Favour, and Good-will, of This Princess confirmed the Choice, which was made of him, for the Professorship of Civil Law, at Bourges. This is very probable; for, as she was Duchess of Berry, and promoted the Interest of Learning, there was no attaining to any Preferment in That University without her Concurrence. How was it possible for Beza to confute Francis Baudouin, on This Point? Some will, perhaps, say, that Zeal for Religion sometimes induces Divines to treat a Man, whom they refute, with the greatest Contempt, and as a wretched Author; for They think it expedient for the good of the True Church, that her Sons should be persuaded, that none but ignorant Men oppose her. I answer, that a Zeal, which should occasion a Conduct, so contrary to Sincerity, Reason, and Justice, and yet more to the strict Morality of JESUS CHRIST, can never pass but for a very blind Zeal. I will not mention the Inconveniences of such a Conduct. It may be said to such Men: You may easily defend your Cause, since you acknowledge, that it is so weakly attacked; your Triumphs are no sign, that you fight for the Truth.

(77) Beza, Hist. Eccles. Book 4, pag. 645.

(78) See Burgundius's Words in Remark [D], Citat. (37).

(79) Beza, in Respons. ad Bald. pag. 203.

(80) Balduinus, in III. Responsione. fol. 84.

(81) That is to say, the 20th of October, 1548.

I must make yet another Observation. Sainte Aldegonde did not give all the necessary Advice; he forgot one, which was very material: He did not advise the returning an Answer to Baudouin's Third Apology. I know, that, in Matters of Right, a Man need not be so nice, as to leave none of his Adversary's Works unanswered. In a second Reply, Things may

WHETHER, in personal Reproaches, the Aggressor ought to leave the Defendant's Writings unanswered.

Digitized by Google

his Auditory [K]. He eat, and drank, but little; and he took great Pains (s). He did not approve, that Hereticks ſhould be put to Death (t); and reproached Calvin very much, on account of Servetus (u). He was no Colleague of Cujacius, as ſome affirm [L]. I ſhall ſay ſomething concerning his Writings, and of his being accuſed of Plagiariſm [M]. Note, That Theodorus Beza ſays, that he died, either may be ſet in the beſt Light, which can be given them; and, then, a Man may promiſe himſelf, that the intelligent Reader will not think it ſtrange, if he does not enter the Liſts again: But, in Matters of Fact, relating to perſonal and defamatory Accuſations, the Aggreſſor muſt never be ſilent firſt; for, if he does not reply to the Apologies of The Accuſed, it is a Sign, that he wants Proofs, and that he is forced to ſtop at the Oppoſition of a meer Negative. Baudouin's Third Anſwer is full of giving the Lye, and recriminating; and contains ſome Facts in Vindication of himſelf; ſo that Beza ought not to have left it unanſwered; he ſhould have been put in mind to ſupport his firſt Reply by a new Piece in Juſtification of the former. In theſe kind of Quarels, He, who quits the Field, loſes the Battle; Both Plaintiff and Defendant are obliged to anſwer every new Reaſon, alledged againſt them, tho' they were to publiſh twenty Caſes in their own Defence. Take notice of the Epithet new, which I make uſe of; for, if the Accuſer, for example, or his Friends for him, ſhould multiply Writings continually, repeating the ſame Things, only with ſome ſmall Alterations as to the Form, and never anſwering either the Matters of Fact, or the Reaſons of the Accuſed, the latter may keep a profound Silence; his firſt Apology is ſufficient, 'till, among the Multitude of Caſes, publiſhed by his Adverſary, One be found, containing ſomething new.

(s) Vini ei-bique parciſſimus..... nunquam otioſus. Id. ibid.

(t) See Remark [D].

(u) See his ſecond Apology againſt Calvin.

[K] What has been ſaid of his Auditory.] Biſhops, Counſellors, and Gentlemen of the Sword, appeared there. Sammarthanus affirms This, as having ſeen it. "Homo, ſays he (82), facundiſſimus, ipſoque oris "ac totius corporis habitu non injucundus, ex hiſtoriarum & civilis diſciplinæ conjunctione, ſuis "prælectionibus gratiam & venerem afferebat. Ac "eum quidem ſæpe vidimus hoc ſplendido ſummæ "doctrinæ apparatu, Lutetiæ profitentem, cum ad "ejus auditorium permulti primæ notæ homines, "epiſcopi, ſenatores, equites, libenter & maxima fre-"quentia confluerent. - - - - - He was a moſt eloquent "Man, of a pleaſing Aſpect and Deportment; and "ſet off his Lectures by a Mixture of Hiſtory and "Civil Law. I have ſeen him often, with This "ſplendid Equipage of Learning, in the Profeſſor's "Chair at Paris, attended by many Perſons of the "firſt Rank, Biſhops, Senators, and Gentlemen of "the Army, who crowded to hear him."

(82) Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. 2. pag. 86, Edit. Jenenſ. 1606. See alſo Papyr. Maſſo, pag. 259.

[K] He was no Colleague of Cujacius, as ſome affirm.] Beza is one of them. "It is a ſhameful "thing for you, ſays he to him, to reflect upon Cal-"vin, as being of an Humor incompatible with others, "naturæ ἀκοινωνήτου; for you have rendered your-"ſelf intolerable to all your Colleagues, wherever "you came. If you deny it, Duaren, le Conte, "Cujacius, Hotman, &c. will convict you of the "contrary (83)." Baudouin replied, that Cujacius was his Succeſſor at Bourges, but not his Colleague, and that They had never ſeen each other. "Cu-"jacius Balduino in ea Schola ſucceſſit: collega nun-"quam fuit, imo alter alterum nunquam vidit. Per "literas aliquando collocuti ſunt, ſed tam amice ut "nihil magis. Imo Cujacius Balduinum rogavit in "illud ſuum collegium ut rediret. Si nobis non cre-"dis, Cujacium interrogato (84). - - - - - Cujacius "ſucceeded Baudouin in That School: he was never "his Colleague; nay, They never ſaw each other. They "correſponded ſometimes by Letter, but with the ut-"moſt Friendlineſs. Cujacius even entreated Bau-"douin to return to his College. If you do not be-"lieve me, ask Cujacius himſelf."

(83) Beza, Reſponſ. ad Bald. pag. 228.

(84) Reſp. pro Balduino 3. fol. 85.

(85) Valer. Andreas, Bibl. Belg. pag. 223.

(86) Added in the Year 1534; as it is in Guiner's Epitome, pag. 23): A Tranſpoſition of a Cypher (a common Fault of Printers) has occaſioned the Year 1534, inſtead of 1543.

[M] I ſhall ſay ſomething concerning his Writings, and his being accuſed of Plagiariſm.] In his Twenty third Year, he commenced Author; for, in 1542, he publiſhed, at Louvain, Leges de re ruſtica, item Novella Conſtitutio prima de hæredibus & lege Falcidia Juſtiniani, which he had tranſlated from the Greek, and accompanied with a Commentary (85). This was reprinted, the following Year, at Baſil (86), by Oporinus, with a large Book of Anthony Garron. In 1545, he publiſhed, at Paris, Prolegomena de Jure Civili; and, in 1546, Commentarii in libros IV. Inſtitut. Juris Civilis Juſtiniani Imperatoris. His Commentary on the Laws of the twelve Tables was printed ſeveral Times. The third Edition is of Baſil, 1557, in 8vo, by Oporinus, who printed, at the ſame time, his Juris Civilis Catecheſis, and his Commentary ad Edicta veterum Principum Romanorum de Chriſtianis, a Work, wherein he maintains Toleration, and which, for That Reaſon, was cenſured by Claude de Sainctes (87). I omit ſeveral other Books of Civil-Law, publiſhed by This Author. But the following Particular muſt not be omitted: I find in Mr Menage, that, "At the Requeſt of the "Prince of Condé, he wrote a Treatiſe of the means "of attaining to a good Reformation in Religion. "This Treatiſe having been publiſhed by a Carme-"lite, who had left his Order, and who added much "of his own to it, Baudouin complained of This Pro-"ceeding to the Prince of Condé. The Prince baniſhed "The Monk from his Court, and gave Baudouin leave "to defend himſelf. On this Permiſſion, Baudouin "wrote his Advice on the Reformation of the Church, "in Latin, and afterwards in French: and his An-"ſwer to a Preaching Calumniator, in French (88)." In Baudouin's Third Anſwer, it appears, that, by order of the Queen-Mother, he went to ſee the Prince of Condé in Priſon, and conferred with him about the reconciling of Religions, and that he was commanded to write a Book concerning This Conference, which was renewed after That Prince was ſet at Liberty. The compoſing of This Work hindered him from carrying a Letter to the Duke of Guiſe (89). Neither ought I to forget, that his Conſtantinus, ſive de legibus Conſtantini Imperatoris, printed at Baſil, in the Year 1556, was put in the Index Librorum expurgandorum, and that he paſſes for the Author of a Book, which was printed at Strasbourg, Sub Chriſtianorum Jureconſultorum nomine contra Duarenum, in the Year 1556; but he diſowned it (90). In Geſner's Epitome, Another Work is aſcribed to him, which belongs to Another Baudouin; Non hujus, ſed Petri Balduini, ſunt (91). It is Notes on Tully's Offices. It was He, who tranſlated an Hiſtory of Poland into French, written, in Latin, by John Herburt of Fulſtin, Caſtellan of Sanoc. This French Tranſlation was printed at Paris, in 4to, without the Tranſlator's Name (92). He diſguiſed himſelf ſometimes under the Name of Peter de la Roche, Petrus Rochius (93), and called himſelf Atrebatius, by way of alluſion to J C. Trebatius and to his Country (94).

(87) Claud. de Sainctes, ad Edicta veterum, fol. 6, verſo.

(88) Menag. Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 258.

(89) Ex Balduini Reſponſione ad Calvinum & Bezam, fol. 101, verſo, & 102.

(90) Valer. Andreas, ubi ſupra, pag. 225.

(91) Id. ib.

(92) See du Verdier Vau-Privas, Bibl. Franc. pag. 363.

As for the Plagiariſm, which was laid to his Charge, read what follows. "Pudendum eſt, & nimium il-"liberale illud plagium, quod ipſe inficiari non po-"teſt, de annotationibus in Juſtiniani Inſtitutiones "Brecthano præceptori ſuo ſurreptis. Omitto quæ "non modo Ferretus & Othomanus, quorum fortaſ-"ſis familiaritate tum abutebatur ex vetere illa for-"mula τὰ τῶν φίλων κοινὰ, ſed etiam maximi "ipſius inimici Baro, & Duarenus, optimo jure ex "iſtius centonibus repetunt. Omitto etiam turpiſ-"ſimorum erratorum Centurias, quas Contius & ipſe "Juris interpres in iſtius Conſtantino, quamvis exi-"guo libello, annotavit (95). - - - - - He cannot deny "That Ungenerous Plagiariſm, in his Annotations "on Juſtinian's Inſtitutes, which he ſtole from his "Maſter Brecthanus. I omit what not only Ferre-"tus, and Othomanus, whoſe Friendſhip perhaps he "abuſed, from that old Maxim, that among Friends "All Things are common, but what even his "greateſt Enemies, Baro and Duaren, have a juſt "claim to, in his Cento's. I omit, likewiſe, the "Centuriæ of moſt ſcandalous Errors, which Contius, "who was himſelf an Interpreter of Law, remarked in "his Conſtantine." That Contius, mentioned by Beza, was Profeſſor of Civil Law at Bourges, and was called Antony le Conte. Hotman is alſo mentioned in This Paſſage. He was One of Baudouin's Adverſaries, and treated him with the utmoſt Contempt (96). He

(93) Catherinot, Calviniſm of Berri, ſub. fin.

(94) He ſubſcribed the Letters ſo, which he wrote to Calvin.

(95) Beza Reſponſ. ad Balduini Convitia, pag. 203, 204.

(96) See the Book, entituled Strigilis Papirii Maſſonis, per Matagonidem de Matagonibus, pag. 269.

Digitized by Google

either in the profecution of a Law-Suit, or of Vexation, becauſe Another was preferred before him to follow the Duke of Anjou into Poland (x). Many Reflexions might be made on the Oddneſs of his Fortune [N].

(x) Theod. Beza in vita Calvini, ad Ann. 1561, pag. 381.

He even called him Hermaphrodite; and it ſeems he took this Word in it's natural Senſe; though elſewhere he takes it figuratively (97). "Uxor (inquis), "he ſpeaks to Papyrius Maſſo, mihi nulla eſt, nec "unquam fuit. Nec mirum, Maſſone: ſiquidem Bal"duini præceptoris tui ſimilis es, quem omnes di"cebant eſſe Hermaphroditum (98). - - - - - You ſay "you have no Wife, nor ever had. This is not to "be wondered at in Maſſo; for you are like your "Preceptor Baudouin, who was ſaid, by All, to be "an Hermaphrodite." He pleaſes himſelf with ſaying, that Cujacius ſlighted Baudouin: "Cum omnes "ſciant quod prædictus Cujacius non fecerit unquam "numerum de Balduino plus quam de ſuis veteribus "ocreis (99). - - - - When All know, that the afore"ſaid Cujacius made no more account of Baudouin, "than of his old Boots." Mr Menage obſerves, and wonders at it, that Cujacius never mentioned Baudouin (100). We have ſeen, that he wrote very obliging Letters to him (101).

(97) Tu es Hermaphroditus in negotiis ſtatus, ſicut fuit Balduinus in negotiis religionis. - - - You are an Hermaphrodite in Matters of State, as Baudouin was in Matters of Religion. Id. ib. pag. 284.

(98) Id. ib. pag. 281.

(99) Id. ib. pag. 269.

(100) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault. pag. 158.

(101) Above, Citat. (84).

[N] Many Reflexions might be made on the Oddneſs of his Fortune.] He was a Man of Wit, Learning, Eloquence, and Dexterity: He was a handſome Man; and he underſtood the Intrigues of the Court: Some of Theſe Qualities, which I have ſpecified, were very eminent in him. Great Princes employed him, ſeveral times, in Matters of Conſequence, which put him in the way to Preferment; and yet he could never advance himſelf much, and, I think, did not die very rich. How many Perſons, inferior in every thing to This great Civilian, riſe very high, attain to great Offices, maintain themſelves in them, acquire a good Name, great Riches, and much Authority? They have nothing ſhining in them; They do not excel in any thing, nor have any eminent Qualities: In vain do we look for That, in Them, which excites Admiration; we ſhall ſooner find it in other Perſons; who, nevertheleſs, continue always in a mean Condition, how often ſoever they have had a favourable Opportunity of raiſing themſelves. Moſt of Thoſe, who conſider This Train of Human Affairs, find ſomething in it, which diſpleaſes, and vexes them; and They diſcharge their Spleen on what They call the Injuſtice or Blindneſs of Fortune. They ſeldom hit the true Reaſon of it; and conſider but little Another Cauſe, which oftener produces This, than They imagine. They ought to know, that Eminent Qualities will not raiſe a Man to the Height, which they ſeem to promiſe, unleſs They be ſeconded by ſome other Qualities, or not croſſed by certain Defects; for, not being ſeconded, or being croſſed, they are an Inſufficient Cauſe, and, conſequently, according to the Laws of Mechaniſm, They muſt fail of their Effect. Now This is the Caſe of many of Thoſe, who are Men of Great Parts: They want certain Things, with which Theſe noble Talents would perform Wonders, and without which They can neither advance, nor ſupport, Them. The Qualities of Theſe Perſons are not well ſorted; there is not That Harmony, and Proportion, between Them, which ought to be: So that, inſtead of aſſiſting, They ruin one another: It is, therefore, no wonder, if a Man does not raiſe himſelf, and even if he miſcarries, with ſuch an Equipage. As for Thoſe, who attain to a great Fortune, and maintain themſelves in it, without having any Eminent Qualities, it is not to be wondered at. There is ſuch a Concert, or ſuch a Proportion, between Their good and bad Qualities, that they reciprocally ſupport each other, and form thereby a compleat Principle, which is ſufficient for the Production of a Thouſand profitable Adventures. It is with This, as with Machines; for, how coarſely ſoever they be made, They will play better, if their Parts are ranged, and proportioned, as They ought to be, than the moſt admirable Machine would do, if ſome Pieces were taken from it, or if ſome were added to it, which did not correſpond with the reſt. "It is not enough to "join, to a Knowledge of the World, That of Books, "much Wit, and Eloquence, and ſeveral other Emi"nent Qualities; if, otherwiſe, you are unpolite, "capricious, indiſcreet, lazy, timorous, ſelfiſh, ſub"ject to mean Jealouſies, preſumptuous, incapable "of following a tedious Buſineſs, inconſtant, fitter "to begin an hundred new Projects, than to ſupport "the Fatigue of carrying on the ſame Buſineſs for "ſome time; I ſay, if you are a Man of ſuch a "Stamp, and if, notwithſtanding your great Quali"ties, you do not raiſe yourſelf, do not blame Fate, "the Iniquity of the Age, or the Malignity of your "Neighbours; but blame yourſelf for it: impute "the Cauſe of it to the Diſproportion between the "Qualities, which have been allotted you." I reckon Francis Baudouin among Thoſe, who are in this Caſe. Note, that ſome Perſons, among Thoſe of this Stamp, do themſelves Juſtice: They know the Mixture, which renders all their fine Talents uſeleſs; and, if they murmur, it is not againſt their Neighbours, but againſt their own Temper, and againſt Nature, which counter-balances whatever Qualification ſhe had given them for riſing in the World. However, I do not intend to comprehend, in This Hypotheſis, a great Number of Particular Caſes, in which the Cauſes of a Bad, or Good, Fortune are altogether External; I mean, that They, who, notwithſtanding their eminent Qualities, remain in Obſcurity, have had no favourable Opportunity of raiſing their Condition, and that They, who have attained to great Preferments, without any Merit, have found themſelves in ſuch an active Whirl of Circumſtances, that They have had no Occaſion to ſecond it, and that their Incapacity was no obſtacle in their Way. But remember, that Baudouin did not want Opportunities: They were often thrown in his Way.

The Effect of the Proportions and Diſproportions between the Qualities of one, and the ſame, Man.

BAUTRU DES-MATRAS (MAURICE), chief Lieutenant of the Provoſtſhip of Angers. His Sons, and Grandſons, have made his Name very famous, as ſhall be ſhewed.

BAUTRU DES-MATRAS (JOHN), Son of the foregoing, was an Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and One of the beſt of them; for Anthony Loiſel, in his Dialogue about Advocates, ſpeaks of him in this manner; Bautru had a higher Flight, than They all; I do not ſay, that he was more Learned, than any of Them, but his Tongue was better hung, and, if I may ſay ſo, more Angevin (a). William and René BAUTRU DES-MATRAS were his Brothers. William, Counſellor in the Great Council, and Great Reporter of France (b), was Father of the famous Mr Bautru, of the French Academy, of whom we ſhall ſpeak hereafter. René, Aſſeſſor in the Preſidial Court of Angers [A], and Mayor of Angers in

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 209, ſpeaks of him with praiſe, and ſays, that he died the 23d of Auguſt, 1580, aged 40 Years.

(b) Ex Menagii notis Gallicis in vitam Petri Ærodii, pag. 176.

[A] René, Aſſeſſor in the Preſidial Court of Angers.] Doubtleſs Daubigné ſpoke of Him, on occaſion of a Woman (1), who was ſaid to be poſſeſſed with Devils. She has "two Devils, ſays he (2), one "is called Beelzebub, and the other Aſtaroth. The "firſt is a rude Devil, a great Enemy of the Hugue"nots, who beats every Body, and would have beat "Monſieur Matras of Angers, if he had not taken "up a Cudgel, and ſaid to him, Beelzebub, you "Rogue, if you play your tricks with me, I will beat "you like a Devil. —— The Clergy of Angers "would have theſe two Devils to be firſt examined "by the Church; one of the Judges of the Town "ſaid, that their Honour was concerned in it; and, "in

(1) Martha Broſſier of Romorantin, in 1599.

(2) Confeſſ. Cathol. de Sancy, Book I. chap. 6. pag. 352.

Digitized by Google

in 1604, was Father of Charles, Canon of Angers, known by the Name of PRIOR DES-MATRAS, and Author of some Treatises of Divinity (c) [B]. I think it is the same Prior des-Matras, who was so famous for his witty Sayings [C], that he came but little short, in them, of Mr Bautru of the French Academy.

(c) Ex Menag. ibid.

" in order to examine these Spirits, he began to speak " Latin, and Matras to speak Greek." See the Remark [B] of the Article GRANDIER.

[B] Author of some Treatises.] Here is what Mr Menard says of him, in his List of the Writers of Angers. " Carolus Bautru, Presbyter, Doctor " Theologus, & Professor, Ecclesiæ Mauricianæ Andegavensis Canonicus, maximi ingenii scientiarumque dotibus excellens, familiaque inter clarissimas " præcipua. Scripsit de sanctissimo Eucharistiæ Sacramento tractationem, brevi publicandam, quam " vidimus. Interea typis expolsuit disputationem ad " articulum quartum quæstionis 76. tertiæ partis Summæ Theologicæ Sancti Thomæ, utrum tota quantitas dimensiva corporis Christi sit in hoc Sacramento, Andegavi, apud Antonium Hernault, 1638 (1). " —— Charles Bautru, Priest, Doctor and Professor of Divinity, Canon of Angers, a Man of great Wit and Learning, and of a very noble Family. He wrote a Treatise concerning the Sacrament of the Eucharist, shortly to be published, which I have seen. In the mean time he put to the Press a Disputation on the Fourth Article of the Seventy sixth Question of the Third Part of St Thomas's Summary of Divinity, Whether the whole dimensive Quantity of the Body of Christ be in the Sacrament. Angers, for Antony Hernault, 1638."

(1) Apud Menag Annotations on the Life of Peter Ayrault, pag. 177.

[C] He was famous for his witty Sayings.] Mr Cousin observes (2), that Mr Menage's Memory supplied him with many witty Sayings, which he had learned in his Youth, and that the best of them were those of the Prior Bautru des Matras. This shews, that, in Mr Cousin's Judgment, the Prior is to be preferred before the other Bautru, as to witty Sayings: for he could not be ignorant, that Mr Menage had as well learned Those of Bautru the Layman, as those of Bautru the Ecclesiastic. The Menagiana shews us, that Mr Menage had improved much more in the School of the first, than in That of the other.

(2) Journal of the Learned, August 11, 1692, pag. 544.

BAUTRU (WILLIAM) Count de Serrant, Counsellor of State in Ordinary, Introductor of Embassadors, Embassador to the Archduchess in Flanders, and the King's Envoy in Spain, England, and Savoy, was of Angers (a), and Son of William Bautru, Counsellor in the Great Council (b). He was one of the finest Wits of the XVIIth Century. He was, above all things, admired for his Jests, and smart Repartees [A]; and we find, in the Writers of his Time, a thousand Marks of his great Reputation. One of them (c) says; He is a Man, who makes part of his Philosophy to consist in admiring but very few things, and who, for these fifty Years, has been the Delight of all the Ministers and Favourites, and generally of all the great Men in the Kingdom, and was never their Flatterer. He was admitted into the French Academy at the beginning of it's Foundation; he could not well be forgotten, being so well known to the Cardinal de Richelieu. His Marriage with Martha Bigot, Daughter of a Master of the Accompts of Paris, did not prove a very happy one. (A fine Subject for Common-Place and Reflexions!) [B] A Son proceeded from

(a) History of the French Academy, pag. 347, Edit. 1672.

(b) Menage, Remarks on the Life of William Menage, pag. 376.

(c) Costar's first Vol. of Letters, pag. 120.

[A] He was particularly admired for his Jests, and smart Repartees.] I desire no other Proof of it, than the Turn of the Poet St Amant, in laughing at Those, who loved silly Jests, and Quibbles:

Si vous oiez une équivoque,
Vous jettez d'aise vôtre toque,
Et prenez son sens malautru
Pour un des beaux mots de Bautru (1).

When Pun ambiguous you hear,
With transport you applaud the Joke:
'Tis wond'rous fine, I vow and swear;
A better Bautru never spoke.

(1) St Amant, in the Poem entitled, The Paltry Poet, pag. 228.

The Menagiana would supply me with strong Proofs, if I stood in need of them: Mr Bautru is to be found in every Page of it; and we are told, in the Preface, " That, besides the witty Sayings of Mr Menage, " there are Others to be found there, and particularly Those of the Famous Mr de Bautru, whom he " knew perfectly well; for he had been his great " Friend, and had seen and conversed with him very " familiarly." Costar's Letter, which I have quoted (2), contains several Things, whereby one may discover Mr Bautru's Genius. He had the Inspection of the Gazette (3), and it is to him, that the Advertisement of the Gazetteer of Cologne imputes what was too favourable to Cardinal Mazarin in the Paris Gazette (4).

(2) It is the 50*th of the* 1*st Vol.*

(3) Menagiana, p. 328, in Edit. 1. of Holl.

(4) Printed in 164-. See there, Pages 39, 45.

[B] His Marriage —— did not prove a very happy one. A fine Subject for Common places!] Since, what I am going to say, was printed at Paris, with Privilege, I may, doubtless, publish it in Holland, without fear of incurring the Censure of Judicious Persons. " Mr de S--- (5) was the Son of Mr de " Bautru; and, though they lived together, where " Mr de Scignelay lives at present, yet neither of " them owned themselves as Father, or Son. Mr " de Bautru said, that he would own Mr de S —— " for his Son, provided he was a good Man; perhaps he had some reason to question whether he " was so or not. The violent Suspicions, which he " had, of his Wife's Disloyalty had induced him to " prosecute her at Law, and to be revenged of her. " And, indeed, he caused his Servant to be seized, " whom he accused of having had intelligence with " his Wife, and procured him to be condemned " to be hanged, at his first Trial: The Servant ap- " pealed, and was only condemned to the Galleys, " because he made it appear, that Mr Bautru had " done himself justice, and had used him cruelly. " This Affair having made a great noise, Mr de Bautru resolved to laugh at it, as well as others, " and would say sometimes: If the Bautru's are " Cuckolds, they are not Fools. His Wife would " always be called Madam de Nogent, notwithstanding " her Marriage (6), saying, that she would not be " called Madam Bautrou by Queen Mary de Medicis, " who could, then, hardly pronounce French right." This is what I find in the second Edition of the Menagiana; in which they have adjusted This Passage, which was not intelligible in the First Edition. But, since this Lady's Name has been written after the Italian Pronunciation, it is easy to see why she refused to bear it. Quibbling prevailed at that time, and she was exposed to Raillery by various Allusions to the Word trou (Hole).

(5) In Edit. 2. of Par s, they have put Serrant at length.

(6) I do not understand This; for, to make it Sense, The Lady, must, I think, have been called Mademoiselle, or Madam de Nogent, when she married Mr de Bautru. Now this is not at all likely; for Mr de Bautru had a Brother, who was called Mr de Nogent, which shews, that That Lordship did not come into their Family by Mr de Bautru's Marriage.

If Wit could secure a Man from Cuckoldom, which so many People dread, and so many call a Trifle, Mr de Bautru would have been exempted from This Disgrace; but Wit, Courage, a noble Mien, and even the Royal Dignity, are no security against it. This Disgrace has something common with Death; but there is this difference; Death spares no Crowned Heads; and there are every where very virtuous Queens. Notwithstanding this difference, the same Common-place of consolation ought to make an infinite Number of People submit to both these Accidents with Patience. A Poet, who was a Philosopher endeavours, very nobly, to inspire an indifference for Death, by this Reason: " Good " Kings, The most formidable Monarchs, the " Greatest from it, (viz.) William BAUTRU, Count of Serrant, Chancellor to the Duke of Orleans, and Husband of Mary Bertrand, Daughter of Macé Bertrand, Lord de la Baſiniere, and Treaſurer of the Exchequer. From this Marriage proceeded two Daughters, Margaret and Mary Magdalen. The firſt was married to the Marquis de Vaubrun, her Uncle, a là mode de Bretagne, as ſhall be ſaid hereafter (d): The ſecond was married to Edward Francis Colbert, Count de Maulevrier, Lieutenant-General of the Armies of France, and Brother to Mr Colbert. The Menagiana informs me, that the Grandfather of theſe two Ladies died, being about Seventy Years of Age (d) See the following Article, Citat. (a).

Digitized by Google

" Greateſt Warriors, the fineſt Genius's, the Inven-
" tors of Arts, and the moſt Subtle Philoſophers,
" are dead; and ſhall you, an inconſiderable private
" Man, and a Slave to a thouſand ſhameful Paſſions,
" complain, that Death will not ſpare you?

Lumina ſis oculis etiam bonus Ancu' reliquit
Qui melior multis quam tu fuit, improbe, rebus.
Inde alii multi reges, rerumque potentes
Occiderunt magnis qui gentibus imperitarunt.
Ille quoque ipſe, viam qui quondam per mare magnum
Stravit, iterque dedit legionibus ire per altum,
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Lumine adempto animam moribundo corpore fudit.
Scipiades belli fulmen, Carthaginis horror,
Oſſa dedit terræ proinde ac famul' infumus eſſet.
Adde repertores doctrinarum atque leporum,
Adde Heliconiadum comites, quorum unus Homerus
Sceptra potitus eadem aliis ſopitu' quiete eſt.
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Ipſe Epicurus obît decurſo lumine vitæ,
Qui genus humanum ingenio ſuperavit, & omnis
Præſtrinxit ſtellas exortus uti ætherius ſol.
Tu vero dubitabis, & indignabere obire
Mortua quoi vita eſt prope jam vivo, atque videnti,
Qui ſomno partem, &c (7)

(7) Lucret. lib. III. ſub. fin. See Bernier's Abridgment of Gaſſendus. Tom. VII, pag. 27, Edit. 1684.

But, more to comfort thee, - - - - -
Conſider, Ancus periſh'd long ago,
Ancus, a better Man, by much, than Thou.
Conſider, Mighty Kings, in Pomp and State,
Fall, and inglorioufly ſubmit to Fate.
Conſider, even He, That mighty He,
Who laught at all the Threatning of the Sea,
That chain'd the Ocean once, and proudly led
His Legions o're the fetter'd Waves, is dead.
Scipio, That Scourge of Carthage, now the Grave
Keeps Pris'ner, like the meaneſt common Slave.
Nay, Greateſt Wits, and Poets too, that give Eternity to others, ceaſe to Live.
Homer, their Prince, That Darling of the Nine,
(What Troy wou'd at a ſecond Fall repine
To be thus ſung?) is nothing now but Fame,
A laſting, far diffus'd, but empty, name.
Nay, Epicurus Race of Life is run,
That Man of Wit, who other Men out-ſhon,
As far as meaner Stars the mid-day Sun.
Then, how dar'ſt Thou repine to dye, and grieve,
Thou meaner Soul, thou dead ev'n whilſt alive;
That ſleep'ſt and dream'ſt the moſt of Life away, &c.

CREECH.

Let us ſay the ſame to Thoſe inconſiderable private Perſons, who are vexed at the Intrigues of their Wives: " You torment yourſelves for a Thing, " from which the moſt powerful Monarchs, the " greateſt Warriors, the fineſt Wits, and the moſt " learned and zealous Doctors, are not exempted. " What are You, that you ſhould be more nice, " than they? learn, by theſe great Examples, to " bear your Misfortune patiently."

Give me leave to ſay, by the by, that our Malherbe made uſe of Lucretius's Thought, in the Epitaph of a Prince.

Je ſuis poudre toutes fois,
Tant la Parque a fait ſes loix
Egales & neceſſaires,
Rien ne m'en a ſu parer:
Aprenez, ames vulgaires,
A mourir ſans murmurer.

In common Duſt, a Monarch once, I lye;
Such is th' impartial Law of Deſtiny.
Ye Vulgar Souls, when Fate's Decrees require,
Learn hence, without a murmur, to expire.

On occaſion of this Paſſage of Malherbe, Mr Menage mentions the Epitaph of Margaret of Auſtria, which ends thus:

At vos plebeio geniti de ſanguine, quando
Ferrea nec nobis didicerunt fata, nec ullis
Parcere nominibus, patientius ite ſub umbras.

You, who of baſe Plebeian Clay are made,
Since Death, impartial, ſtrikes the greateſt Head,
Reſign, contented, to the fatal Blow,
And go, with patience, to the Shades below.

Johannes Secundus is the Author of This Epitaph. Mr Menage made a Parody of Malherbe's Verſes on occaſion of an Epic Poem (8).

(8) See his Obſervations on Malherbe, pag. 521.

I ſhall alſo obſerve, by the way, that the like Morality has been made uſe of, to teach all Men, that they ought not to complain of being ſubject to Death. It has been repreſented to them, that the greateſt Cities are deſtroyed; and are They ſo unreaſonable, as to think it ſtrange, that Man ſhould dye! " Ex " Aſia rediens, cum ab Ægina Megaram verſus navi- " garem, cœpi regiones circumcirca proſpicere. Poſt " me erat Ægina, ante Megara, dextra Piræeus, " ſiniſtra Corinthus: quæ oppida quodam tempore " florentiſſima fuerunt, nunc proſtrata & diruta ante " oculos jacent. Cœpi egomet mecum ſic cogitare: " Hem, nos homunculi indignamur, ſi quis noſtrum " interiit, aut occiſus eſt, quorum vita brevior eſſe " debet, cum uno loco tot oppidum cadavera pro- " jecta jaceant (9). —— Returning out of Aſia, as I " ſailed from Ægina towards Megara, I began to " ſurvey the Countries around me. Behind me was " Ægina, before me Megara, on my Right Piræeus, " on my left Corinth: which Cities, formerly the moſt " flouriſhing, now lye in Ruins. I began to reflect " with myſelf: What! Shall ſo inconſiderable a " Creature as Man, whoſe Life ought to be ſtill " ſhorter, complain of being Mortal, when, at one " view, we behold the Ruins of ſo many Cities?"

(9) Servius Sulpicius Epiſt. ad Ciceronem. It is the 9th of the 4th Book ad familiares, p. 193, 194.

Taſſo has copied this Thought very well.

Giace l'alta Cartago; à pena i ſigni'
De l'alte ſue ruine il lido ſerba:
Muoiono le città; muoiono i regni;
Cuopre i faſti, e le pompe, arena ed herba;
E l'huom d'eſſer mortal par che ſi ſdegni:
O noſtra mente cupida e ſuperba! (10).

(10) Jeruſalem of Taſſo, Canto 15

Here loſty Carthage lies: the poor Remains
Of it's proud Ruins ſcarce This Shore retains.
Cities muſt die; Kingdoms to Death muſt yield,
Their Pomp concealed in Duſt, and Herbage of the Field.
And grudge we Death, to theſe Examples blind?
How covetous, How proud, The Human Mind!

Conſult the thirtieth Dialogue of Balzac, and you will find there a fine Imitation of this Thought in Latin Verſe; but you will not find theſe Words of Rutilius there:

Non

Age (e), and, properly ſpeaking, without Confeſſion [C]. He was no Bigot [D], and had been very much afflicted at his Wife's Diſloyalty [E].

(e) It was in the Year 1665.

Non indignemur mortalia corpora ſolvi;
Cernimus exemplis oppida poſſe mori (11).

(11) Rutilius Numatianus Itiner. lib. I. ver. 413.

Repine no longer at Mortality;
Example teaches, that even Cities die.

Nor theſe Verſes of Auſonius:

Miremur periiſſe homines? monumenta fatiſcunt,
Mors etiam ſaxis marmoribuſque venit (12).

(12) Auſonius, Epig. 35, pag. 30.

What wonder, if the Human Frame decay?
Death ſweeps the Monuments of Art away.

Scarron, who turned every thing into Burleſque, made, as every one knows, a fine Sonnet upon this Thought. It begins thus:

Superbes monumens de l'orgueil des humains,
Pyramides, tombeaux, dont la vaine ſtructure,

The laſt ſix Verſes run thus:

Par l'injure des ans vous êtes abolis,
Ou du moins la pluſpart vous êtes demolis.
Il n'eſt point de ciment que le tems ne diſſoude:
Si vos marbres ſi durs ont ſenti ſon pouvoir,
Dois-je trouver mauvais qu'un mechant pourpoint noir,
Qui m'a dure deux ans, ſoit percé par le coude?

Ye Tombs, and Pyramids, that brave the Sky,
Proud Monuments of Human Vanity!
By Time deſtroy'd, in Ruins now Ye lye.
No Cement can reſiſt it's mighty Power:
If Time the ſtrongeſt Marbles can devour;
Should I complain, that a vile Doublet black
Betrays, in Two Years Wear, full many a Crack?

Let us not forget Authors of a low Rank: They, and firſt of all myſelf, ought to make ſome uſe of This Morality: The Faults, which eſcape us, are pardonable, becauſe the moſt famous and learned Writers, as the Scaliger's, the Salmaſius's, have committed many over-ſights. If ſuch Authors are often miſtaken, Thoſe of a mean Rank, in the Commonwealth of Learning, ought not to be aſhamed of their Miſtakes, any more than other Nations were aſhamed of being overcome, after the downfall of Carthage; Poſt Carthaginem vinci neminem puduit (13): This is what I have ſaid, in the Plan of this Dictionary (14). Obſerve, that it muſt not be pretended, that I contradict, here, what I ſaid there, and which I had enlarged on another place (15), that great Authors are moſt ſubject to commit Faults. This is very True in certain Reſpects; and, yet, their Miſtakes may ſerve for a Comfort, and Excuſe, to Vulgar Writers. But an ill uſe ought not to be made of them; we muſt endeavour to aim at Perfection.

(13) Florus, lib. II, c. 7.

(14) Towards the end of the IId Paragraph.

(15) In the new Letters againſt Maimbourg, p. 24, & ſeq.

[C] He died, properly ſpeaking, without Confeſſion.] The Menagiana affords me the Proof of this: "Mr "de Bautru was about Seventy ſeven Years of Age, "when he died. He came often to ſee me, two or "three Years before his Death, on the Days that "I held a Conference at my Houſe. I was at one "of my Friends, when word was brought me, that "he was fallen into an Apoplectic Fit. I ran to "ſee him; but he had already loſt his Senſes. Fa"ther de Harrouys was ſent for to conſeſs him. "When they told him what he was come for, he "ſaid to him, with a troubled Voice, Father, I "do not know you, neither do you know me, and "yet I muſt tell you the moſt ſecret Things that I "have done. I ſaw him die —— He died, as it "were, without ſpeaking, and even without Con"feſſion. He confeſſed himſelf, indeed; if Con"feſſion may be made by an Interpreter. As he was "ſtammering, a Footman explained to the Confeſ"ſor what his Maſter would ſay. I leave you to "think, what a Confeſſion This was (16)." If the Queſtion ſhould be asked, Why his ordinary Confeſſor was not ſent for? it may, perhaps be anſwered, Becauſe he had none. It is probable, that he was one of Thoſe, who put off the Sacrament of Penitence to their laſt Hours.

(16) Menag. pag. 104, Edit. 2, of Holl.

[D] He was no Bigot.] This may be inferred from what I have juſt now ſaid, that there was no Acquaintance between him, and the Confeſſor, who prepared him for Death. But can any thing be more expreſs than the Teſtimony of his Son? "After the Death of Mr de Bautru, when they "were about ſelling his Houſe, they found his "Chapel out of order and in decay. It is no won"der, ſaid Mr de S —— (17), for Mr de Bautru "neglected his Chapel, as much as he took care "of his Kitchen and Library." If he preſerved an outward Appearance, it was only for the Sake of Decency: Being retired to St Lazarus's, ſome One gave him That Part of the Paſſion to meditate upon, which he thought would affect him moſt; and he fixt his Thoughts on the three Dice; that is to ſay, on the Place, where it is ſaid, that the Soldiers caſt Lots for our Saviour's Garment. He loved Gaming much (20).

(17) That is to ſay, Serrant, as in Edit. 1, pag. 59.

(18) Menag. pag. 105.

(19) Ibid. pag. 97, of Edit. 1.

(20) Ibid.

(21) Ibid. pag. 104.

[E] He was very much afflicted at his Wife's Diſloyalty.] See, in the Remark [B], how he ſued his Wife, and the ſevere Puniſhment, which he cauſed to be inflicted on his Servant, her Accomplice. Is not This to be very ſenſible of the Diſgrace of the Forehead? But, on the other ſide, he ſoon laughed at it, as others did, and would ſay ſometimes, If the Bautru's are Cuckolds, they are no Fools (21). It was the moſt cunning expedient he could chuſe (22); for, if ſuch a Jeſter, as he was, had appeared ſerious, ſullen and melancholy, he would have been very much laughed at. And, when all is done, he might jeſt upon it at his Eaſe, ſince he had not connived at the Fault; it is only a voluntary Cuckoldom, which may juſtly be reproached, either ſeriouſly, or in jeſt. It is ſomewhat ſurprizing, ſays Mr Menage (23), that, for forty or fifty Years, Mr de Bautru ſhould have filled all Europe with his Jeſts, and witty Sayings, whilſt there were ſo many things to ſay againſt him. Riſum fecit, ſed ridiculus fuit. I do not know where I have read this: Aſſurance goes a great Way (24).

(22) See the beginning of Remark [B], of the Article AGESILAUS II.

(23) Menag. pag. 200, of Edit. 1.

(24) Theſe Words have been left out in Edit. 2, pag. 105, without mentioning the Author of the Latin Paſſage. It is to be found in Quintilian, Inſtit. Orator. lib. VI, c. I.

BAUTRU (Nicolas) Brother of the foregoing, was known by the Name of Count de Nogent [A]. He had five Children by his Marriage with Mary Coulon, Siſter

[A] He was known by the Name of Count de Nogent.] This Count was one of Sorbiere's Patrons, as appears by the twentieth Letter of That Author, wherein he intreats him to improve, to his Advantage, the Elogy, which he had made on Cardinal Mazarin. This appears yet better by the Eighty firſt Letter, where he thanks him for the Money, which his Eminence had gratified him with. I quote theſe Letters, that They, who deſire to know Men by public Teſtimonies, may ſatisfy their Curioſity, They may alſo ſee the Forty ſeventh Letter. The Menagiana contains ſome curious Things concerning the Count de Nogent. "He came to Paris with but "Eight hundred Livres yearly Rent; and he had "an Hundred and fourſcore thouſand, when he died. "The firſt Day he appeared at Court, he carried "the King on his Shoulders through a watery Place "in the Tuilleries. Monſieur de Nogent was an admirable Man at reviving a languiſhing Converſation. Being one Day in the Circle of the Queen-Mother, Anne of Auſtria, and perceiving the Converſation flag, and that the Queen-Mother, and the Ladies, among whom was Madam de Guimene, had been ſilent for ſome time; breaking Silence, and addreſſing himſelf to the Queen, Madam, ſaid he, is it not a very odd thing in Nature, that Madam de Guimene and myſelf ſhould be born in one Day, and but a quarter of an Hour after each other, and that ſhe ſhould be ſo Fair, and myſelf ſo Black (1)?" They, who have the Addreſs, which

(1) Page 41, of Edit. 2.

Digitized by Google

Sister of John Coulon, Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris; I. ARMAND BAUTRU, Count de Nogent, the King's Lieutenant in Auvergne, Master of the Wardrobe, and Marshal de Camp, who was killed in 1672, as he was passing the Rhine on Horseback [B]. His Body was found, fifteen Days after, in the Rhine, three Leagues below Tolhuis, where the French crossed That River. This Count had married Diana Charlotte de Caumont de Lausun, Sister to the Marquis de Lausun, who has been Captain of the Life-Guards, and Governour of Berri, and had the Honour to be betrothed with Mademoiselle de Mompensier, Daughter of Gaston of France, Duke of Orleans, and Grand-daughter of Henry the Great. II. NICOLAS BAUTRU, Marquis de Vaubrun [C], Lieutenant-General of the King's Armies, and Governour of Philippeville. He married Margaret Bautru (a), and was killed in 1675, in the Battle, which was fought beyond the Rhine, a few Days after the Death of Marshal de Turenne. III. LEWIS BAUTRU, called the Chevalier de Nogent, Colonel of Horse. IV. MARY BAUTRU, Wife of Rene de Rambures, Marquis de Rambures: From this Marriage proceeded a Son, in whose Person the Family of the Sires de Rambures ended, as to the Male Issue. V. CHARLOTTE BAUTRU, Wife of Nicolas d'Argouge, Marquis de Rannes, Cornet of the Light-Horse of the Guard, and Colonel-General of the Dragoons of France (b). He was killed in Germany, in the Month of July 1678 (c). He was Lieutenant-General. His Widow married again with John Baptist Armand de Rohan, Prince of Montauban, Son of Charles de Rohan, Duke of Mombazon (d).

(a) Grand-daughter of Mr de Bautru, the fine Wit.

(b) This Article was taken from Mr Menage's Observations on the Life of William Menage, p. 377.

(c) Merc. Galant.

(d) Menag. ibid. p. 506.

which he had, of reviving a languishing Conversation, are a great Help in the World; for, since, in the very Circles of the Queens of France, they are apt to fall into a kind of Drowsiness, which is almost as troublesome to the Company, as a Calm to Seamen; one may very well think, that a great many other Assemblies are subject to This Inconveniency. Is it not, therefore, very agreeable, that somebody should be always ready to revive the Company, that it may not be said, as Those Ladies in the Menagiana did, It rains Wearisness, as fast as it can pour? But I wonder how the Count de Nogent, endowed with This Virtue, could be so weak, as Mr Menage represents him to be, against the Attacks of Angeli. "One Day, at the King's Dinner, Angeli said to "the Count de Nogent, Let us be covered; This "is of no Consequence to us. The Count de No- "gent was so vexed at it, that it did not a little "contribute to his Death (2)." In the first Edition This was said of Mr de Bautru, the Count de Nogent's eldest Brother. It is true, that, instead of saying, that it contributed much to his Death, it is only said, that he was very much troubled at it. It were to be wished, that Mr Menage had corrected the Menagiana himself.

(2) Menagiana, p. 145.

[B] Armand Bautru ----- was killed in 1672, as he was passing the Rhine.] The News Writers of those Times informed the Public (3), That They, who believed the Count was drowned, without having been wounded, and that his Horse was the Cause of his Death, were mistaken; since, after his Body was found, it was discovered, that he was killed by a Musket-shot in the Head. They published also, that his Body was buried in the great Church of Zevenart. In the Year 1686, the Marquis de Biron married a Daughter of This Count de Nogent.

(3) Mercure Galant of 1672, Tom. III.

[C] Nicolas Bautru, Marquis de Vaubrun.] It is He, of all the Family, who seems to have been most familiar with Sorbiere: That Author's printed Letters witness it; as also his Relation of a Journey to England. From the Letter, which he wrote to him, the eighth of August, 1657 (4), we learn, that This Marquis was Colonel General of the Carabiniers of France, and of an extraordinary Valour, but that it did not hinder him from being fond of good Books; "I wait, says he to him, for the Happiness "of seeing you again at Paris, the next Winter, "in That Chamber of the Louvre, where I have "found you so often reading Tacitus, whilst the o-"ther Courtiers were employing the Morning in "powdering their Hair, and tying their Knots of "Ribbons." He was a very active Officer: His Disputes with the Count de Lorge, after the Death of Marshal de Turenne, had like to have proved very fatal to the French.

(4) It is the 47*th. See also the* 58*th.*

BEAUCAIRE DE PEGUILON (FRANCIS), in Latin Belcarius Peguilio, Bishop of Metz, was a very learned Man in the XVIth Century [A]. He descended from one of the most ancient Families of the Bourbonnois, and was one of the first Gentlemen of his Country, who applied themselves solidly to the Study of Literature. The Progress, which he made in it, induced Claudius of Lorrain, first Duke of Guise, to choose him for Preceptor to his second Son, the Cardinal of Lorrain. Beaucaire succeeded so well in this Employ, that he received many Praises for it from the Court of France, which he did not expect. He went with the Cardinal of Lorrain to Rome, where he conferred with Paul Jovius, Bishop of Nocera, which did not hinder him afterwards from confuting That Prelate's Historical Mistakes. At his return from Italy, the Cardinal of Lorrain procured him the Bishopric of Metz [B]: He carried him afterwards to the Council of Trent; and it was before That

[A] He lived in the XVIth Century.] According to Konig, he was alive in the Year 1625. Res Gallicas, says he, anno 1625, in literas redegit. ----- In the Year 1625, he wrote an History of the French Affairs. Which is false. It is true, his History was printed at Lyons, in the Year 1625, but it had been written a long time before. The Bibliographers often commit such Mistakes.

(1) That is, about the Year 1556.

[B] The Cardinal of Lorrain procured him the Bishopric of Metz.] Some say, that he only kept This Bishopric for the Cardinal. The Reader will not be displeased to find, here, the Account, which Theodorus Beza gives of the whole Matter. "At "that same time (1), says he (2), Charles of Lor- "rain, Cardinal, and Bishop of Metz, the greatest "Enemy, that our Religion had, resigned the Bi-"shopric of Metz; at which Those of the Refor-"med Religion greatly rejoiced. But, as it was "not at all likely, that such a Man, being the most "Ambitious and Covetous of any of his Rank in "the World, should voluntarily resign such a noble "Preferment, it was immediately discovered, that "this Hypocrite had only resigned his Title of Bishop, "as making a Conscience of holding so many Cro-"siers in his Hands, and reserved, in the mean "time, all the Temporalities to himself. This Ti-"tular Bishop's Name was Peguillon, one of his "Protonotaries, a Man of some Learning, but little "skilled in Divinity, who, being accompanied by "two other Bishops, viz. of Toul and Verdun, both "like

(2) Beza's Ecclesiastical History, Lib. XVI. pag. 439.

Digitized by Google

That famous Assembly, that Beaucaire delivered the Speech [C], which is at the end of his thirtieth Book (a); for you must know, that he wrote an History of his own Times in Latin, which is much esteemed. He began it, when, in the Year 1568, he had resigned the Bishopric of Metz to Cardinal Lewis of Lorrain [D], and was retired to his Country-Seat, called la Chrete, in Bourbonnois. He brought it down from the Year 1462, to the Year 1567, and left off writing it, in the Year 1588. He was, then, in his Seventy fifth Year (b); for he was born the Fifteenth of April 1514 (c). He designed to continue it (d); but it is probable, the Infirmities of Old-age prevented him. He did not intend to publish This Work [E]; for he feared he had spoken such Truths, as might raise him dangerous Enemies. It was Philip Dinet, Sieur de St Romain (e), who, having found This History in the Author's Library at la Chrete, caused it to be printed, at Lyons, in the Year 1625 (f). It is said, that Beaucaire died the Fourteenth of February 1591 (g). He was a very fit Person to draw up the Decisions of a Council [F]; for he knew how to manage the Terms so well, that all the Disputants, that were to be satisfied, were pleased with it. The manner of his voting, one Day, concerning Episcopal Authority, displeased

(a) Taken from the Preface to The History of Lewis XI, by Varillas.

(b) Belcarius, in fin. lib. XXX.

(c) Id. in Præfat. Historiæ.

(d) Id. in fin. lib. XXX.

(e) He had been the Duke of Longueville's Governor, and afterwards his Envoy in Switzerland, at several Times.

(f) In the Bookseller's Advertisement.

(g) Spondanus, ad Ann. 1566, n. 34.

" like himself, came to Metz, and alarmed a little " those of the Reformed Religion, who thought they " were come as Inquisitors, with some great Power, " to persecute them, which made many of them ab- " sent from the City. But God diverted this Storm; " and Peguillon was contented to publish a little " Book in Latin, concerning Sanctification, and the " Baptism of Infants, which was soon after answer- " ed: So that Those, who had absented themselves, " returned without any Molestation. But These Bi- " shops gained a Nick-name by it, which was given " them by those of their own Religion, who sir- " named them the Lent Bishops, because, said they, " they are as meagre as Lent, having only a small " Pension, assigned them on the Bishoprics, of which " they enjoyed the Titles, but the Cardinal the Pro- " fits." See the Remark [D].

[C] He delivered a Speech before the Council of Trent.] He spoke it on the Day, which the Fathers of the Council had chosen to give Thanks to God for the Battle of Dreux (3). The two Historians of That Council acknowledge This Prelate's Eloquence (4); but Pallavicini, who does not give such a long Extract of the Speech, is more prolix on the Praises of the Orator, than Father Paul, and remarks also, that Beaucaire had lost his Nephew in That Battle. " Belcarius Episcopus Metensis vir eloquen- " tia præclarus victorum laudes celebravit magnifica " oratione ad Synodum, publicæ felicitati gratulatus " in luctu domestico, quippe qui Gilbertum Belca- " rium sui fratris filium amiserat in conflictu, atque " hæc omnia eleganti quam scripsit historiæ consig- " nata posteritati tradidit (5). - - - - Beaucaire, Bishop " of Metz, a Man of great Eloquence, celebrated the " Praises of the Victors, in a pompous Oration before the " Council, congratulating the Public Felicity amidst Do- " mestic Affliction; for he had lost his Nephew, Gilbert " Beaucaire, in the Battle; All which he delivered down " to Posterity in an Elegant History, which he wrote."

[D] In the Year 1568, he resigned the Bishopric of Metz to Cardinal Lewis of Lorrain.] When Cardinal Charles of Lorrain made This Bishopric over to him, he reserved the Right of Reversion to himself; Regressum, ut Romani Pragmatici vocant, sibi exceperat (6). But he did not make use of this Right for himself. The Bishopric of Metz remained in Beaucaire's Hands from the Year 1555, 'till 1568 (7). It is falsely said, in the Advertisement to the Reader, before his History, that he went to Trent, with Cardinal Lewis of Lorrain, to whom he resigned his Mitre. It is certain, that he resigned it to him (8); but he followed Cardinal Charles of Lorrain to Trent. He was at Rome, in the Month of November, 1555, when the Pope gave him his Bull for the Bishopric of Metz. This I infer from his saying, that he admired the Eloquence, with which That Pope represented the Episcopal Duties to him. " Mense No- " vembri Paulus me Pontificatu Metensi cedente Lo- " tharingo Cardinale donavit, ac quum illi gratias " agerem, me mei officii admonendo, & commissum " populum commendando, facunda in primis & satis " prolixa oratione respondit, ut tam expeditam in " homine tene & in multis negotiis versato eloquen- " tiam admirarer (9)." After he had resigned, he retired Home, and, to employ his leisure Hours, wrote a Commentary on the French Affairs. " Quum " - - - - - post decimum tertium ex quo id munus " suscepissem annum, Metensi pontificatu defunctus " essem, eoque cessissem, & me ab hominum fre- " quentia subducens in Christianum fundum (10) pa- " ratum senectuti jam dudum inter nostros Boios stu- " diorum meorum domicilium secessissem, ne om- " nino otiosum vitæ extremum tempus traducere vi- " derer, commentarios rerum Gallicarum scripsi (11)."

[E] He did not intend to publish This Work.] He declares so himself. " Hos (Commentarios) me " editurum non profiteor; lateant in Christiana (12) " nostra bibliotheca, donec tuto exire possint: vere " nec in cujusquam gratiam aut odium scripsisse con- " firmo (13). - - - - I have no Intention to publish " them: let them rest in my Library of la Chrete, " 'till they may safely come abroad; I declare, that " I wrote them impartially, and with a strict regard " to Truth." This he says in his Preface; and here is what he says in the Conclusion of his Work: " Maturo judicio ne in multorum odia incurreremus, " veritas enim odium parit, ut inquit poëta Comi- " cus, non statim edendos judicavimus. - - - - - Upon " mature Consideration, to avoid giving Offence to " many, since, as the Poet says, Truth gains us Ene- " mies, I thought proper to defer the Publication of " of Them." He is very violent against the Protestants; but it is not in that Respect, that the Fear of offending several Persons made him resolve not to publish it.

(10) His Country Seat called la Chrete.

(11) In Præfat.

(12) Of la Chrete.

(13) In Præfat.

[F] He was a very fit Person to draw up the Decisions of a Council.] Father Paul mentions the Difficulty, which the Fathers of the Council found themselves in, on the Question about Marriage. " The first " Chapter concerning Abuses, importing the Re- " establishment of the Banns, ordered by Innocent III. " - - - - - was touched and retouched several times, " - - - but always so unsuccessfully, that the last Cor- " rection was the worst. Among other things, a " Point, already agreed upon, was altered; which " was, That all Marriages, made in the Presence " of three Witnesses, should be valid. And, in- " stead of one of the Witnesses, it was said, That " all Marriages, contracted without the Presence " of the Priest, should be void; which raised " the Ecclesiastic Order infinitely. - - - - - - I " have not found in my Memoirs, who was the " Author of This great Advantage, nor many other " Particulars, which I would not have failed to men- " tion, if I had known them. In the mean while, " I must not rob Francis de Beaucaire, Bishop of " of Metz, of the Honour, which is due to him: " for it was He, who, seeing the Impossibility of " reconciling such different Opinions, gave This " Decree the Form it now bears, which really ad- " mits of several Senses, but suits admirably well " with the various Opinions about That Matter (14)." We find the following Words in the Annals of Spondanus: " In quo decreto ad formam reducendo quæ " probaretur & in sessione promulgaretur, cum patres " valde perplexi essent, Franciscus Belcarius Episcopus " Metensis, vir pius doctusque & acumine ac maturitate " ingenii præstans, eum composuit quæ publicè con- " spicitur, cæteris comprobantibus (15). - - - - In the " giving of which Decree the Form, which should " be approved of, and promulged in the Session, when " the Fathers were under great Perplexity, Francis " Beaucaire, Bishop of Metz, a pious, learned, " and ingenious Prelate, drew up That, which " is publickly seen, with the Approbation of the " rest." If any one should say, that a Person, who could

(3) January 9, 1563.

(4) See Father Paul, lib. vii.

(5) Lib. 19. cap. 10. n. 5.

(6) Belcar. lib. xxvi, n. 6.

(7) Ibid. sub fin. lib. 30.

(8) Id. ibid.

(9) Id. lib. xxvii, n. 6. ad Annum 1555.

(14) Hist. of the Council of Trent, lib. viii. ad Ann. 1563, pag. 730.

(15) Spondan. ad Ann. 1563. n. 39.

Digitized by Google

pleaſed the Flatterers of the Court of Rome; inſomuch, that the Cardinal of Lorrain cenſured him for it [G], and denied, that he had ever been his Diſciple. I refer the Reader to Moreri for ſome other things which I omit. I believe there is an Exaggeration in That great Number of Books, which he aſcribes to Beaucaire, and ſome Confuſion in the Titles, which he ſets down [H]. Cardinal Pallavicini praiſed Lewis XIII for permitting a Book to be dedicated to him, in which the Alliances of Francis I with the Turks are very freely cenſured (b). That Book is the Hiſtory of France, compoſed by our Biſhop of Metz. He had a Brother, whoſe Name was JOHN, who was educated with the Conſtable of Bourbon (i), and who had a Son killed in the Battle of Dreux, and a Daughter married to Sebaſtian of Luxembourg, Viſcount de Martigues [I].

(b) Pallavic. Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, lib. v. chap. I, n. 3.

(i) Belcarius, in Præf.

could draw up a Decree ſo perſpicuouſly, that every Reader might know, that ſuch and ſuch things are condemned in it, and that only ſuch a thing is formally approved in it, would be a fitter Man to draw up the Deciſions of a Council than Beaucaire; This is my Anſwer. I agree, that ſuch a Man would be more proper for this Buſineſs, if Synodical Aſſemblies could, or would, ſacrifice Political Intereſts to Truth, and Integrity: But, becauſe They, who compoſe Theſe Aſſemblies, have not Virtue enough to act only in favour of Juſtice, or Faith enough to hope, that a good Cauſe will be ſufficiently protected by GOD, without the Aſſiſtance of Politics, there are no fitter Perſons for their Purpoſe, than thoſe, who know how to draw up Acts full of Ambiguities, and ſuch as may ſatisfy the oppoſite Parties. However, it cannot be denied, that the Biſhop, of whom I ſpeak, was a fit Tool for the Pope; ſince That Council deſigned to diſpleaſe none of the School Factions. "Who will not admire the Pru-
"dence of this Council? We are told very ingenuouſ-
"ly (16), that the Members of it reſolved to contrive
"their Deciſions in ſuch a manner, and to chuſe and "adapt their Words ſo, as not to prejudice, in the "leaſt, the different Opinions of the Schools, a"bout which the Catholic Doctors were other-
"wiſe very much divided. We are farther told,
"that it concerned the Prudence of the Council
"not to expoſe the Church to new Troubles, by the "Diſputes, which would have been raiſed among "Divines, if their Doctrine had been diſcuſſed, and
"cenſured; and that it appears, that it is one of the "Articles, on which the Pope had particularly in-"ſiſted; not having intimated his Inclination for any "particular Thing, but for the managing of the "Schoolmen's Diſputes, that he might not thwart
"any Opinion without Neceſſity, and in order to "re-unite all the Catholic Forces againſt the Sectaries.
"This was practiſed ſo exactly, ſays our Author, that
"one may ſee, by the very Words, of which the Defi-
"nitions are compoſed, that the Fathers of the Coun-
"cil have been ſcrupulouſly exact, in finding out Terms,
"which ſhould not prejudice any of Thoſe Opinions.
"If Father Paul had ſaid This, ſuch a Diſcourſe
"would have been taken for a Satire on the Court
"of Rome: But it is Cardinal Pallavicini, who ſays
"it; and, conſequently, it muſt be believed to be
"true (17)."

THE Spirit of the Council of Trent.

(16) That is to ſay, in a Book, written by a Doctor of the Sorbonne, name Sueras, and printed at Paris in 1615, concerning the Sufficiency of Attrition.

(17) Taken from the Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres, Febr. 1686, Art. I. pag. 127.

[G] The Cardinal of Lorrain cenſured him for it.] Cardinal Pallavicini, having ſaid, that the Biſhop of Metz declared, that he believed, that Biſhops received their Authority immediately from GOD, and that they were not meerly the Pope's Delegates, and that the Pope's Power is not unlimited, adds, that, in this, he went beyond his Bounds, hac in re plurimum ille cancellos tranſgreſſus eſt (18). "It was ſuſpected,
"continues he, that the Biſhop, and the Cardinal of "Lorrain, juggled, and acted in concert; but the "Cardinal, in order to remove Theſe Suſpicions, de"clared, that he had never been Beaucaire's Scholar,
"and cenſured him before the Embaſſadors of France,
"and twelve Biſhops." Fama erat, hunc Epiſcopum Lotharingi magiſtrum fuiſſe: & ſane intimam cum eo ſimiliaritatem exercerbat, atque ejus operâ nobilem illam Sedem acceperat. Unde ſuſpicio fuit, eos concorditer ſe geſſiſſe, & textum à diſcipulo obſcurè propoſitum fuiſſe dilucidatum à magiſtro interpretationis ſuæ claritate. Sed Cardinalis, hujuſce famæ conſcius, Gualterio negavit * ſe unquam Beauqueri diſcipulum fuiſſe; eum quidem à ſe agnoſci virum maximæ literaturæ, ſed minimi conſilii. Nec abſtinuit, quin illum caſtigaret coram duobus Gallis Oratoribus, & duodecim Epiſcopis (19). They, who know the Spirit of a Court, which was the Soul of this Cardinal's whole Conduct, will not build much on what he ſaid, when he found, that he was called in queſtion for Beaucaire's Opinions. He was willing to make uſe of him in ſounding the Buſineſs, in order to ſee whether any thing could be done to pleaſe the Gallican Church, but, afterwards, was as ready to diſown him, when he knew that the Court of Rome was offended at it. After all, Beaucaire was, perhaps, a Man of no great Conduct, as we may ſuppoſe This Cardinal declared. This is but too common among ſtudious Perſons.

(18) Pallavic. lib. xix, cap. 6, n. 5. pag. 284.

* Littera Gualterii ad Borromæum. 7 Decembris & ſequentibus 1562.

(19) Acta Paleotti apud Pallavicinum. ibid. n. 6.

[H] There is ſome Confuſion in the Titles, which Moreri ſets down.] He ſays, that Beaucaire compoſed a Treatiſe of Children, that die in their Mother's Womb, ---- and a Treatiſe againſt the Calviniſts.] This is to declare plainly, that the firſt of theſe two Treatiſes does not oppoſe the Tenets of the Calviniſts; which is falſe; for it is deſigned to oppoſe the Opinion, which they have, that the Children of the Faithful are ſanctified in their Mother's Womb; and, therefore, that, though they die without receiving Baptiſm, they are, nevertheleſs, ſaved. The Paſſage of Theodorus Beza, which I have alledged before (20), informs us, that this Book of Beaucaire was anſwered. An anonymous Author replied to This Anſwer; his Reply was printed at Paris, in the Year 1567, in 8vo (21), with the firſt Treatiſe of Beaucaire (22), and ſome others. Properly ſpeaking, the two Books, mentioned by Moreri, are but one and the ſame Book. Spondanus remarks, that Beaucaire publiſhed his Diſſertation againſt the Tenets of the Calviniſts, concerning the Sanctification of Children in their Mothers Womb, in 1567; but what I have ſaid before, ſhews plainly, that This Book had appeared before That time, and a little after Beaucaire's Inſtalment in the Cathedral of Metz. Now he obtained That Biſhopric in the Month of November, 1555, as I ſaid in the Remark [D]. So that it muſt be ſaid, that Beaucaire prepared a ſecond Edition of his Treatiſe, and that he did not publiſh it till the Year 1567. He inſerted ſome Letters in it, which were intercepted at Châlons, on Marne, during the Conference of Poiſſy. Theſe Letters were written by Taffin, and Theodorus Beza. Taffin, Miniſter of Metz, had conſulted the Miniſters of the Conference of Poiſſy, on the Queſtion, Whether Children, baptized by a Woman, ſhould be re-baptized. He was anſwered, That ſome Perſons, of great Judgment, did not believe that it ought to be done, and that, therefore, they had thought fit to refer the Diſcuſſion of That Point to the Church of Geneva, and to That of Zurich (23). Moreri ſays, that the Hiſtory of France, by Beaucaire, begins with the Year 1460, and ends with the Year 1580. But, had he conſulted the Authors, whom he quotes, Spondanus (24) would have informed him, that it begins with the Year 1462, and ends with the Year 1566; that the Author promiſed, indeed, to continue it, if GOD gave him Life for it, but that the Effect of this Promiſe did not appear, though the Work was not publiſhed till about forty Years after Beaucaire had finiſhed it. The Catalogue of the Bodleian Library commits the ſame Fault with Moreri: I do not wonder at it, ſince the Bookſeller's Preface contains This Error.

(20) In Remark [B].

(21) The Title of it is, Anonymi Antapologia contra Apologiam, Metenſium miniſtrorum nomine ſcriptam, pro everſione ſanctificationis Calvinianæ.

(22) The Title is Contra Calvinianorum dogma de ſanctificatione infantium in uteris matrum.

(23) Claude de Saintes, Anſwer to the Apology of Theodorus Beza, cited by Præteolus, Elench. Hæreſ. pag. 97, 98.

(24) Ad Ann. 1566. n. 34.

(25) Belcarius's Hiſt. lib. 28, n. 37.

(26) Addit. to Caſtelnau, Tom. II, p. 829, 830.

[I] His Brother JOHN —— had —— a Daughter married to Sebaſtian of Luxembourg.] Beaucaire ſpeaks of This Marriage, and ſays, that Queen Mary Stuart, the Wife of Francis II, procured him for her Niece, whom ſhe greatly loved (25). Le Laboureur confirms this. "Sebaſtian of Luxembourg, ſays he (26), partly "out of Inclination, and partly in hopes of gaining
"the Affection and Favour of Queen Mary Stuart,
"married Frances (27) de Beaucaire, Daughter of "John S. de Pegnillon, and Maid of Honour to the "ſaid Queen, who loved her entirely for her good
"Qualities. He had an only Daughter by her, whoſe
"Eſtate

(27) Her Uncle, who ſhould know beſt, calls her Mary, Book 23, n. 37. Mr le Laboureur, being better informed, calls her ſo likewiſe, in another Place.

Digitized by Google

(28) In 1575, she married Philip Emanuel of Lorrain, Duke of Mercœur. Brother of Louise of Lorrain, Wife of Henry III.

" Estate she managed with as much Care and Pru-
" dence, as she had shewn in the Education of This " great Heiress (28)." Brantôme had not forgot this; for, in the List of the Ladies, who were eminent in the Court of Catherine de Medicis, he places Madam de Martigues, formerly called Mademoiselle de Villemontois, a great Favourite of the Queen of Scotland (29). Mr le Laboureur, Tom. I, pag. 318, says, that the Lady de Villemontois was Mary de Beauxaire, Daughter of John, Lord of Puy Guillon, Seneschal of Poitou.

(29) The Lives of Illustrious Ladies, f. 94.

BEAULIEU (Lewis le Blanc Sieur de) Minister, and Professor of Divinity at Sedan, in the XVIIth Century, was a Man very commendable for his Learning and Virtue. A great many Theological Theses were maintained under his Direction, and collected into one Volume, after his Death, and printed in England. The Public was so well pleased with them, that This Edition was soon sold off, and Another published in the same Country, in the Year 1683 (a). If he had not been a Frenchman, a Preface would have been prefixed to the first, or second Edition, giving an Account of the Author's Life; for the French are very apt to let the History, or the Life, of a Kinsman, famous for his great Parts, and learned Works, fall into oblivion. The Impossibility I find of fixing the Time, and Place, of the Birth of Lewis le Blanc, the Time of his Promotion to the Ministry, and to the Professorship of Divinity, and other Historical and Chronological Circumstances, must be imputed to such a Negligence. I can say nothing more, than that he died in the Month of February 1675, and that he was well beloved by the Marshal de Fabert (b), one of the greatest Wits of his Age. Some of his Sermons were printed at Sedan, in the Year 1675. It is not in them, that the brightest Merit of the Author is to be looked for, but in his Theses, wherein he treats, with a wonderful Clearness [A], and great Penetration, the most important Matters of Divinity, and applies himself chiefly to remove the Misunderstandings, which have so greatly multiplied Controversies. He lays down the true state of the Question; he clears up things that are ambiguous, and makes it appear, that many Disputes, which are thought to be real, are only Disputes about Words. It is scarce credible, how much this Method prejudiced a great many ignorant Persons against him [B]. They imagined, that he endeavoured to bring back the Reformed to the Communion of the Church of Rome. They, who knew his Virtue, and Piety, did not suspect any such thing of him; nor they, who were capable of judging right of his Theses: But many People in the remote Provinces knew him no otherwise, than as they had been told, that he shewed, that, in some things, the Divines of both Parties did not so much differ from each other, as was believed. These Gentlemen, being unwilling to lessen the Subjects of Division, which they would rather have increased, or being accustomed to interpret things ill, or rashly believe those, who give a bad Turn to the Actions of their Neighbours, looked upon Mr de Beaulieu as a false Brother, who was promoting the great Design of re-uniting both Churches [C], which the Cardinal de Richelieu was so fond of. This Professor's Penetration obliged him to (a) It is the third. The first is That of Sedan, in 4to. The two English Editions are in Folio.

(b) He was Governour of Sedan.

[A] He treated the most important Matters with wonderful Clearness.] Because Mr Nicolle will be sooner believed, than myself, I shall quote a Passage of his Lawful Prejudices against the Calvinists. " One of " their Professors of Sedan, whose Name is Lewis le " Blanc, has particularly signalized himself on this " Subject, in his Theses of Justification. That Pro-" fessor, who justly deserves the Praise of having an " extraordinray clear Head, and of being a very fit " Man to unravel Questions, which are perplexed " by the different use of Terms, examines, in his " Theses, the chief Differences between the Catho-" lics and Protestants, on this Head, and concludes, " on all the Articles, that The Catholics are in the " right, and The Protestants only contrary to them " in Words (1)."

(1) Nicolle Prejug. legit. cap. 11, p. 197, 198, Hall. 1683.

[B] This Method prejudiced a great many ignorant Persons.] They are not only weak Men, who have entertained Suspicions against Mr Beaulieu: See here what an ingenious Minister has published; " I re-" spect Mr le Blanc's Memory; but the concern for " Truth obliges me to remark, what no one is ig-" norant of, namely, that This Divine wrote after " a manner, which made his Orthodoxy much sus-" pected. Thinking to clear up Matters, to remove " useless Disputes, or Those, which turn only on " Words, and to take away all Equivocations, he has " extremely straitned the Space, which separates us " from the Church of Rome. He has reduced the " most important Controversies almost to nothing: " And, by This Conduct, as also by his great Mild-" ness, and the strong Inclination, which he always " shewed for Peace, he has given many Persons occa-" sion to rank him among the Latitudinarians (2). " —— The famous Mr le Blanc de Beaulieu, for " whose Memory I have otherwise a great Venera-" tion, is not a Divine, whose Pen is to be borrow-" ed, to describe the Opinion of the Reformed, " about controverted Matters with the Papists. - - - - " He was a little too Neutral in the Quarrel, which " we have to decide with Them (3)." Hæc ille (Le Blanc, pag. 796, n. 56.) qui laxus nimium est controversiarum quas tractat arbiter, quo factum ut nimium partium adversarum conciliationi intentus, à communi via Reformatorum sæpe discesserit (4).

(2) Saurin's Examination of Mr Jurieu's Theology, pag. 259.

(3) Id. ibid. pag. 477.

(4) Leydecker. Præfat. in Aphoris. Lud. de Dieu, §. 6.

[C] It was believed, he was promoting the great Design of re-uniting both Churches.] These false Suspicions increased, when a certain Report was spread abroad, That the Marshal de Turenne, being very fond of re-uniting both Religions, had founded the Professor of Sedan, and received a Letter from him, which was shewed to all the Ministers, in order to surprize them. This Report was not altogether groundless; for Mr Jaquelot says, that, in 1672, the Agent, who was employed in This Affair, came to Vassi, in Champagne - - - - - with a Credential Letter, signed Lewis, and a Letter from Monsieur de Turenne, to Mr de Beaulieu, Professor of Divinity at Sedan, and with That Professor's Answer to Monsr. de Turenne, - - - - - and the Signatures of the Pastors of Picardy and Champagne, whom he had visited; but he adds, that This Answer did no Injury to Mr de Beaulieu's Reputation (5). Note, that he produces (6), an Act of the Synod of the Isle of France, which justifies the Ministers, who had signed. The Piece, in which he mentions these things, is a Letter against Mr Benoit, Minister of Delft, who did not fail to answer it; and who, among other Remarks, made this, that the Signatures of the most innocent Ministers contained This Restriction; " And I promise to contribute to " it, as much as lies in my power, with a safe Con-" science (7)." He adds, that this last Clause, " taken " from

(5) Jaquelot's Letter to the Pastors and Governors of the Walloon Churches of the United Provinces, p. 32. dated from the Hague, Sept. 13. 1698.

(6) Ibid. pag. 33.

(7) Benoit's Apology, presented to the Governors of the Walloon Churches, pag. 40.

Digitized by Google

to avoid certain Terms, commonly received, which he found somewhat inconvenient. He did it, particularly, as to the Doctrine of the Certainty of Salvation. This gave Mr Arnauld an occasion to quarrel with him [D]. Mr de Beaulieu had no Children; his Widow, who was a very understanding and virtuous Woman, shewed an Heroic Constancy in the last Persecution (c). She could never be forced to make any Abjuration; so that, after many Vexations, which she endured, she died without betraying her Profession in the least. Mr le Blanc, Counsellor in the Presidial of Sedan, Brother to Mr de Beaulieu, endeavoured twice to make his Escape into Holland, after his Abjuration, but was taken in the Way, and brought back again into his Country. The King forgave him the Punishment of the Gallies, to which he had been condemned for designing to leave the Kingdom against the Prohibitions (d).

(c) Mr Quick speaks of it in his Prolegomena to the Synodicon in Gallia Reformata.

(d) Remarks on the Confession of Sanci, pag. 555, Edit. 1699.

Mr de Beaulieu has been very often cited, in the Quarrel between two French Ministers, who disputed, among other things, about the Principle of Faith. What I cite out of their Writings, may serve to discover his Opinions, and Character [E], and,

" from Mr de Beaulieu's Letter, was a Snare laid for " the Simplicity of good Souls. - - - - - It is certain, " that Three sorts of Persons were concerned in This " Project. I. Ill-minded Persons. II. Plain and " honest Men. III. Wise and clear-sighted Persons, " but dazzled, either with the seeming Usefulness of " the Thing, or with the Name of Mr de Beaulieu, " a Man of great Merit, but of too Apostolic a Sin- " cerity, to disintangle himself from the Craftiness of " the Marshal de Fabert, an old Courtier, and who " did not scruple to deceive People (8)." There is a small Mistake here; for the Marshal de Fabert had been dead above seven or eight Years, before This Project was set on foot. Monsr. de Turenne was the Promoter of it.

(8) Id. ibid. pag. 41.

[D] This gave Mr Arnauld an occasion to quarrel with him.] He accused him of having renounced the Opinions of the Calvinists in four Points of the Doctrine of the Certainty of Salvation (9). Mr de Beaulieu published a particular Thesis on This Subject, in Answer to Mr Arnauld. The latter replied after his Adversary's Death (10): A Disciple, and intimate Friend, of the deceased, answered Mr Arnauld's Reply (11). I have compared The Disciple's Answer and Mr Arnauld's Reply together, but could not determine which was right, or which was wrong; They are properly Questions of Fact, about which a thousand Equivocations, and all the Art of Disputation, may be used on both Sides. A Man must have more leisure, than I have, to examine This thoroughly. Nevertheless, I believe, if Mr de Beaulieu had written his Apology himself, his Cause would have been better defended.

(9) Arnauld's Overthrow of The Morality, cited by Peter Jurieu; Justification of the Morals of the Reformed, Book IV. chap. xiv. pag. 405. Edit. of the Hague 1685.

(10) In his Book intituled, Calvinism convicted anew, c. 19.

(11) See the Justification of the Morals of the Reformed, Book VI. chap. xiv. pag. 366.

[E] What I quote out of their Writings, may serve to discover his Opinions, and Character.] Let us begin with a Passage of Mr Saurin: He had just said, That Mr le Blanc's Name is not so much authorized, as famous, among us (12); and here is what he adds: What Mr Jurieu mentions of Mr le Blanc " is more " fit to cry down his Doctrine, than to give it cre- " dit: For Example, Is it not a fine way of defend- " ing the Authority of the Scripture, and the Truth " of the Christian Religion, to say *, That it is ne- " cessary, that That, which is the first Principle of " Faith, should not be proved by itself, nor by another " Principle; and yet, that the Principle of Faith " should not be an evident Thing, because, as in Hu- " man Sciences, there are certain Principles, which " are the first, on which all others depend, which " neither depend on themselves, nor on other Princi- " ples, so it is with the Doctrine of Faith. They, " who know the A, B, C, of the Art of Thinking " and Reasoning, know also, that a Proposition, " which is not self-evident, and is not mediately, or " immediately, demonstrated by another self-evident " Proposition, cannot be a Principle of Science, or " of Faith, nor so much as pass for a true Proposi- " tion, whilst it remains in That Obscurity. —— Mr " Jurieu adds, after Mr le Blanc, That, though the " Scripture, that is to say, the Divinity of the Scrip- " ture, be not self-evident, it ought not to be conclu- " ded, therefore, that it is not the first Principle of " Faith, and that it ought to borrow it's Authority " from elsewhere (13). These Words neither agree " with right Reason, nor the Word of God. The " Divinity of the Scripture is evident by it's Cha- " racters —— Mr de Beaulieu reasons no better, " when he answers the Objection, which the Ene- " mies of Christianity make against the Holy Scrip- " tures in this manner. As for those impertinent " Questions, which are asked us, How do you prove, " that the Apostles wrote their Books by Divine In- " spiration? We answer, That they require an unjust " thing of us; viz. that we should demonstrate a " thing, which is not to be demonstrated. We, there- " fore, confess freely, that we cannot demonstrate it, " that is to say, prove and demonstrate it Mathema- " tically; But we deny, that it follows from thence, " that Those Books cannot be the first and certain " Rule of Faith, because it is the Property of the " Principles of Faith not to be evident (14)." See, in Mr Saurin's own Book how he confutes These Maxims.

(12) Saurin's Examination of Mr Jurieu's Theology, pag. 260.

* Page 24, col. 1.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 261.

(14) Id. ib. pag. 262.

We must insert Mr Jurieu's Answer here. " It " is a curious Thing, says he (15), to see how Mr " Saurin uses Mr de Beaulieu, whom he calls, else- " where, a most Excellent Man. But, here, because " he is of Mr Jurieu's Opinion, and of That of " the whole Church, concerning the Evidence of " the Principle of Faith, he must needs be a Man " of no very sound Orthodoxy; he favoured Popery, " and Arminianism; he was a great Latitudinarian; " he saved as many Persons as he could; he propo- " sed such Absurdities, that he deserved to be sent " back to his A, B, C; and it is imprudent to own " one's self his Disciple. The Truth is, we can hard- " ly believe our own Eyes. Here we may perceive " what advantage the Living have over the Dead, " as the Wise Man tells us: Such a one pulls the " dead Lion by the Beard, who durst not have come " within a thousand Paces of him, if he had been " alive. —— They, who knew the late Mr de Beau- " lieu, know, that he was the most reserved Man " in the World in speaking his own Opinions; A " faithful Historian of Those of others, but most re- " served as to his own; giving his Resolution only " on notorious things, and such as were owned by " all Divines. So that, unless he had been out of " his Wits, it is not to be imagined, that he would " have explained his Mind about such nice Propositi- " tions, had he not been persuaded, that he followed " the common Road. How could a Man, who " made it his Study to know the Opinions of all " Divines, and who seldom declared his own, be ig- " norant of a Matter of Fact, known to Mr Saurin, " who never saw but the Outside of great Libraries? " Or, was Mr de Beaulieu so foolish, and so wicked, " as to establish an Impiety, of which he was the " Author, as a public Opinion? Whom does Mr " Saurin hope to persuade of this? They, who have " read the first Part of this Work, about the Mat- " ter of Fact, will be ashamed of Mr Saurin's Rash- " ness: Since they will see, that our Orthodox Di- " vines, since Calvin, have spoken as Mr de Beau- " lieu did; and that, in This, and almost in every " thing else, he is but an Historian. But does not " Mr de Beaulieu advance some hard Things, about " this Question, which are peculiar to him? For Ex- " ample *; That the Proofs, which are alledged for " the Divinity of the Holy Scriptures, are not of the " Nature of Those, which are called de Fide, in the " Schools; that they are not drawn from any Princi- " ple, or Rule, of Faith, and that, by themselves, " they cannot make an Article of Faith. Has any " Body said so? Yes; It has been said, Calvin has " said it in stronger Terms: he calls Those, who " build Faith on the Characters of the Scripture (16), " foolish and impertinent." These Proofs are not of Those, which are called de Fide (17). —— " The

(15) Jurieu's Defence of the Universal Doctrine the Church, p. 372, 373.

* Disput. Tom. IV. de S. Script. N° 9.

(16) Jurieu, ubi supra, p. 378, 379.

(17) Jurieu, ibid. pag. 381.

" other

Digitized by Google

and, consequently, will not be superfluous. Some are persuaded, that there is great Misunderstanding in This Contest [F]. His Doctrine concerning the Efficacy of Baptism was also censured. See the Book, which I quote (e), printed at Amsterdam in 1695. See, I say, the fifth Leaf of the Preface, and the Treatise, which makes the Conclusion of it. See also Mr Saurin, pag. 522, 550, &c. of his Examination of Mr Jurieu's Theology. To conclude, I have just now discovered, that Mr de Beaulieu was born at Plessis Marli (f), where his Father was Minister, and that he died at the Age of Sixty Years, and six Months.

(e) Collection of several Treatises concerning the Efficacy and Necessity of Baptism.

(f) A Lordship which belonged to M. du Plessis Mornai.

* Saurin, pag. 399.

" other Accusation against Mr de Beaulieu *, of being " a Latitudinarian, of enlarging the Way to Salvation, and of saving as many Persons as he could, is " also ridiculous, since it is inconsistent with the " Doctrine, which Mr Saurin lays to his Charge. " He was rigid as to the Doctrine of Grace, and " believed, that the Holy Ghost produced the Certainty of Faith, without Means, as we have seen. " — This Accusation — is entirely grounded on " his explaining the State of some Controversies " otherwise than they are commonly understood. " But, if he should be deceived, it would only be a " meer Error of Fact; for he never favoured any relaxed Opinion, nor established the Indifferency of " Religions, nor a general Toleration of all Sects, " as Mr Saurin does." Let us end with Mr Saurin's Reply. " I speak of Mr de Beaulieu with all the " Esteem and Respect, which he deserves; and I " put a great Deference between him, and Mr Jurieu; not for the reason, which Mr Jurieu supposes, that is, because the one is dead, and the " other living; but because the living does not resemble the Dead in every thing. Nevertheless, I " observe Mr de Beaulieu's Faults as Those of a great " Man. This I may do. I do not send him back " to his A, B, C, as Mr Jurieu accuses me of doing, two or three times. I say only, That Those, " who know the A, B, C, of the Art of Thinking and " Reasoning, know also, &c (18) This is certain, " and may be said by Those, who are persuaded — " (19). I do Mr de Beaulieu no wrong in calling " him a Latitudinarian. He was not so in the " odious Sense, which Mr Jurieu puts upon the " Word, in taking a Latitudinarian for a Kind of " Atheist. But he was so, in some Degree. The " manner, in which he explains the State of some of " our Controversies, with the Papists, and other " Sectaries, about Justification, the Certainty of Salvation and other matters, is a Proof of it: And " our Learned and Sincere Divines do not deny it." Since Mr Jurieu replied nothing, I end the Remark here.

(18) Saurin, Defence of the true Doctrine of the Reformed Church, p. 164, 165.

(19) Note, that Mr Saurin has not said, as his Adversary supposes, and on which he grounds his Exclamations, Those, who know their, A, B, C, but Those, who know the A, B, C, of the Art of Thinking. The Suppression of the last Words is unfair.

[F] There is great Misunderstanding in This Contest.] Consider well the above-mentioned Words of Mr de Beaulieu (20). They inform us, that he believed the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures could not be Mathematically demonstrated. Let us compare That with This Answer of Mr Saurin. " If, by Mathematical Demonstration, Mr le Blanc understands " such a Demonstration, against which Flesh and " Blood can make no Objection, I acknowledge, " that the Divinity of the Scripture cannot be Mathematically demonstrated: but, notwithstanding, it " may be Morally demonstrated, so as to remove all " doubts, which is manifestly contrary to Mr Jurieu's Principles (21)." The comparing of these two Passages shews, that Mr de Beaulieu, and Mr Saurin, teach the same Thing in the main. They both own, that the Divinity of the Scripture cannot be Mathematically proved: But you will say, does not Mr Saurin maintain, That it may be proved by Moral Demonstration? I own it; but I should be very much mistaken, if he could prove, that Mr le Blanc did not teach the same Thing. I am sure, That great Divine never denied, that the Proofs of the Divinity of the Scriptures are as strong as Moral Demonstration. He had no Interest in denying it; for, because a Man owns, that a thing cannot be proved by Mathematical Demonstration, it does not follow, that, if he argues well, he must acknowledge, that it cannot be Morally demonstrated. Let us farther shew the Misunderstanding of This Dispute. Mr Saurin fancies, that, according to the Principles of his Adversary, the Proofs of the Divinity of the Scripture do not exclude all Manner of Doubt. This is full of Equivocation. His Adversary does not pretend, that They, who perceive the weight and force of Those Proofs, ought still to entertain some doubt; he does not deprive them of full Certainty, and entire Persuasion. He pretends only, They do not see, that the contrary is impossible; as it appears to be in Things, which have been Mathematically demonstrated. It happens daily, that we are fully convinced of a Thing, and have not the least doubt about it, though we know, that the contrary is possible. A Traveller, lodging in an Inn, the Master of which he never knew, eats, without fear, what is set before him; He knows very well, that his Meat may be poisoned, and that there is no Metaphysical, Physical, or Moral Contradiction, in supposing, that his Meat has been mixed with Poison, by chance, or out of Malice. He is not ignorant, that such things have been done; nevertheless, he is persuaded, that he ought not to fear any thing in This Case; He eats with a full Persuasion, that he shall not be poisoned. We have still less doubt, when we eat at a Friend's House; and, yet, we are convinced, that it is possible, the Meat may be poisoned. Therefore a Divine must not be censured for saying, that we are perfectly convinced of the Truth of the Doctrine, which our Pastors declare to us, though the Reasons, on which they ground them, do not prove to us, that it is impossible the thing should be otherwise. Let us remember, that Mr Saurin gives up all Pretension to Geometrical Proofs; He is satisfied with Moral Demonstration, against which Flesh and Blood only can raise any Objections. Now This is exactly his Adversary's Doctrine; They quarrelled therefore for they knew not what. Mr Jurieu declares, that he has not said any thing, which can imply, that he excludes Conviction of Conscience (22); he maintains, that he has laid down, that the Characters of Divinity, which appear in the Revelation, " Are able to produce a Kind of Certainty in a Man, who has any " Equity, and is not prejudiced, without the Assistance of the Spirit of God. But, first of all, " there are no Men in the World, who are not " prejudiced. All, who are not yet converted, are " full of the Prejudices of the Flesh. Besides, we " do not require I know not what Certainty; but " a Certainty, which surpasses all Certainty, even " That of Sciences grounded on Demonstration (23). " — Surely, Those Characters are not such as " can produce, in a well-disposed Mind, a Certainty " of Speculation equal to the Certainty of Geometrical Sciences (24). — He says, first, That " there are none of Those well-disposed Minds in " the World, before Grace. II. That a Man, of " Equity, and no Prejudices, might obtain a Kind of " Certainty of the Divinity of the Scriptures, even " without Grace. III. That the Certainty, which " we require, is a Certainty, which surpasses That " of Geometrical Demonstration (25)." Observe farther, That Mr Jurieu declares, that he meant, " that Those internal and external Characters, placed " and ranged, by the Arts of Logic and Rhetoric, in " the Works of our learned Men, by laying down, " at first, self-evident Principles, and leading the " Mind from one Conclusion to another, make a " better Proof to Reason, than common Moral Demonstration; But that These same Characters, " nakedly proposed, and without Art, do not make " up Moral Demonstration, especially to the illiterate, who must be led by the Hand, and are not " able to understand several Things, which require " Study and Penetration. Most of our simple and " illiterate People never consider attentively That " Demonstration, which is called Moral. But These " same Characters, put together, which do not make " up Moral Demonstration to the Mind, especially " in the common Sort of People, form a Proof of " Sentiment, which is beyond all Exception, and " which is as lively as the Impression of the Sun on " the Eyes (26)." Thus these Gentlemen are at last of the same Opinion: The one does not pretend to any Mathematical Demonstration, nor the other neither.

(20) Citat. (14).

(21) Saurin's Examination of Mr Jurieu's Theology, pag. 262, 263.

(22) Jurieu's Defence of the Universal Doctrine of the Church, pag. 341.

(23) Id. ib. pag. 344.

(24) Id. ib. pag. 345.

(25) Ibid.

(26) Id. ib. pag. 343.

Digitized by Google

ther. The latter is for Moral Demonſtration, which the other grants him. The moſt plauſible thing, which can be ſaid in Mr Saurin's Favour, is, that, at firſt, Mr Jurieu did not well explain his Opinion, and that he ſeems not to have explained it, but by contradicting himſelf, according to cuſtom. I believe alſo, that, when he began to meditate on this Subject, he did not very well know the Nature of Moral Demonſtration. He formed too great an Idea of it; and This was, probably, the Reaſon, why he durſt not ſay, that the Proofs of the Divinity of the Scripture amounted to ſuch an high Degree of Evidence. If he had known the true Nature of This Kind of Demonſtration, he would have leſs expoſed himſelf. Moral Demonſtration does not lie, like Geometrical, in an indiviſible Point; It has a greater compaſs, and extends, from a Great Probability, to a very Great Probability. Theſe are it's bounds, and, conſequently, there is a great way to go from the Place, where our Proofs begin to be called Moral Demonſtration, to the place, where they begin to be called Phyſical, or Metaphyſical, or Geometrical, Demonſtration. Perhaps, That, which deceived Mr Jurieu, was his ſeeing, that the Certainty, and Evidence, with which we know, that there was ſuch a Man as Julius Cæſar, ſuch a Republic as Rome, &c. does not paſs for Science, but for Human Faith, for Opinion, and, at moſt, for the Effect of Moral Demonſtration; and, becauſe he did not ſee, that the Inſpiration of the Scripture could be proved by as convincing Reaſons, as Thoſe, which prove, that Cicero exiſted, he feared to ſay, that there was Moral Demonſtration for This Inſpiration. If he entertained ſuch a Thought, he did not know the true Nature of Things; for it is not true, that the Foundation of the Certainty and Evidence, with which we know, that there was a Roman Republic, is meer Moral Demonſtration, nor that our Perſuaſion in that Reſpect is an act of Human Faith, or Opinion: It is Science properly ſo called; it is the Concluſion of a Syllogiſm, whereof the Major and Minor are clearly and neceſſarily true Propoſitions. There is at leaſt Phyſical Demonſtration in it. The School Philoſophers were not ignorant of This. " Ille actus non eſt fidei, ſed ſcientifi-
" cus; innititur enim non humano teſtimonio, ſed
" repugnantiæ phyſicæ, qua video non potuiſſe tot
" homines conveniſſe ad mentiendum. —— Ille aſ-
" ſenſus oritur à duobus principiis, quæ non patiun-
" tur diſſenſum. Primum eſt hoc: impoſſibile eſt
" tot homines tot ſæculis convenire ad mentiendum.
" Secundum eſt: hoc dicunt tot homines tot ſæculis
" (27). —— This Act is not of Faith, but ſcientifi-
" cal; for it depends not on human Teſtimony, but
" Phyſical Contradiction, by which I ſee, that ſo many
" Men could not conſpire in a Lye. —— This Aſſent
" ariſes from two Principles, which demand our Aſ-
" ſent: The firſt is: It is impoſſible ſo many Men
" ſhould, for ſo many Ages, agree in a Lye. The
" ſecond is; This is affirmed by ſo many Men for ſo
" many Ages." However it be, Mr Jurieu explained himſelf better at laſt.

(27) Petrus Hurtadus de Mendoza, Diſput. 8. de Anima §. iii, n. 24, pag. 570.

REFLEXION on Mr Saurin's attributing the Objections of Unbelievers to Fleſh and Blood.

Let us take notice of Mr Saurin's Remark, That, " if, by Mathematical Demonſtration, Mr le Blanc " underſtands a Demonſtration, againſt which Fleſh " and Blood can raiſe no Objection, he acknow- " ledges, that the Divinity of the Scripture cannot " be mathematically demonſtrated." It were to be wiſhed, that we had a general Rule to diſtinguiſh the Objections, which proceed only from Fleſh and Blood; for each Chriſtian Sect aſcribes the Objections, which are made by Others, to That Principle, and ſo the Ball is toſſed back again, and the Diſputants are ſo far from deciding a Controverſy, by maintaining, that a Doctrine is only oppoſed by Difficulties, ſuggeſted by Fleſh and Blood, that it is an everlaſting Diſpute, whether a Difficulty, or an Objection, proceeds from ſuch a Principle. I add, that there are ſome Truths, againſt which the moſt prejudiced, and moſt paſſionate, Men will not diſpute, though it be never ſo much their Intereſt to oppoſe them. Porphyry, a great Enemy of the Chriſtian Religion, and a great Zealot for Paganiſm, did not deny certain matters of Fact, alledged by the Chriſtians. The Intereſt of his Cauſe required, that he ſhould deny them; for it is a very great Advantage, in a Diſpute, to reject both the Matters of Fact, and the Conſequences of them. Mr Saurin, who is fully perſuaded, that the Objections, which the Reformed alledge againſt the Church of Rome, do not proceed from Fleſh and Blood, knows very well, that, when the Queſtion is about ſome Miracle, wrought by Relicks, They deny the Fact, and add, That, though the Miracle ſhould be certain, it would not prove the worſhiping of Relicks to be lawful. So that, according to the beſt Laws of Diſputation, carefully obſerved by the Orthodox, Porphyry might have thought himſelf obliged not only to deny the Conſequences of the Facts, alledged by the Chriſtians, but the very Facts themſelves. Fleſh and Blood, I mean his Prejudices, and Paſſions, might lead him to it; for the more things we require our Adverſaries to prove, the more we puzzle and tire them. How comes it, then, that That Enemy of JESUS CHRIST did not deny certain Facts alledged by the Apoſtles? Is it not becauſe they could be ſupported by much clearer Reaſons, than Thoſe, which he alledged for what he denied? I decide nothing: it will ſuffice to ſay, that ſometimes Fleſh and Blood lay down their Arms, and ſubmit to a Light, which does not pleaſe them.

(28) Saurin's Examination of Mr Jurieu's Theology, pag. 202.

BEAUMONT (FRANCIS de) Baron Des-Adrets, was one of the Noblemen of France, whoſe Courage and Military Actions made the greateſt Noiſe in the Religious Wars, under the Reign of Charles IX. He was of Dauphiné, and had learned the Profeſſion of Arms in Piedmont, which was the beſt, and moſt famous, School of War in that Age. It is pretended, that the Deſire of revenging himſelf of the Duke of Guiſe, who had been againſt him in a Law-Suit (a), made him declare for Thoſe of the Proteſtant Religion (b). They add, that Catherine de Medicis wrote a Letter to him to excite him to Revenge, and even that ſhe permitted him to make uſe of the Huguenots, that he might the better ruin That Duke's Authority in Dauphiné. The Duke of Guiſe, Governour of That Province, had made la Mothe Gondrin his Lieutenant there: he was his Creature, and a Gentleman of great Courage (c). Des-Adrets, judging, that he could not begin his Undertakings more ſucceſsfully, than by ridding himſelf of That Gentleman, practiſed upon ſome People in Valence, and managed his Intelligence in ſuch a manner, that la Mothe Gondrin, overwhelmed by the Sedition, which was raiſed in That City, was ſtabbed, there, in cold Blood. So that Valence was the firſt Town, which the Baron made himſelf maſter of, and where his Dignity was increaſed; for, whereas he was before Colonel of the Legionaries of Lyonnois, Dauphiné, Provence, and Languedoc (d), he was choſen, the next day after the Sedition (e), Adminiſtrator of Affairs, till the Prince of Condé's farther Declaration. From That Time, he over-run all the Country, and, underſtanding, that the Proteſtant Party had made themſelves Maſters of Lyons, he went thither, and aſſumed all the Authority to himſelf [A], without much inquiring,

(a) It was a Law-Suit againſt the Vidame of Amiens. See Remark [L].

(b) Allard's Life of the Baron Des-Adrets, cited by Maimbourg, Hiſt. of Calvaniſm.

(c) Varilles, Hiſtory of Charles IX.

(d) Beza, Eccleſ. Hiſt. lib. xi. p. 221.

(e) Apr. 28, 1562.

[A] He aſſumed, at Lyons, all the Authority.] Notwithſtanding the Pains Varillas took to trace all the Steps of Des-Adrets, he was miſtaken as to the Government of Lyons. He always built on This Foundation, that, as ſoon as That City declared for the Reformed, the Prince of Condé ſent Mr de Soubiſe to ring, whether it would be acceptable. With Five hundred Men, he defeated the Three thouſand, which St Vital brought with him into the Neighbourhood of That City, to ravage the Country; he ranſacked le Forez, ſecured Grenoble, where he compelled the whole Parliament to go and hear a Proteſtant Sermon; he plundered and burnt the great Charter-Houſe; ſeized on Pont St Eſprit; entered, like Thunder, into the Country of Avignon; and had, doubtleſs, taken the chief City of it, to treat it as the Pope's Troops had treated the City of Orange, had he not been informed, within a League of Avignon, that the Catholics had made themſelves Maſters of Grenoble. He marched That way immediately, and ſpread ſuch a Terror among the Catholic Troops, that Maugiron, who commanded them, fled into Savoy, and durſt not return into Dauphiné. Grenoble was ſoon reduced under our Baron's Power, who treated That City more kindly, than they had reaſon to expect. He was much more barbarous in other Places [B], which he ſeized by main Force, and where he exerciſed great Cruelties by way of Repriſals [C]. The Victory, which he obtained, againſt the Count de Suz, at Vaureas, made him Maſter of Orange, and of the County of Venaiſſin, and made Avignon tremble a ſecond time. He defeated all the Pope's Troops; he entered into Provence; and overthrew all that appeared againſt him. Nevertheleſs, there were ſome Diſappointments, or private Jealouſies, which made him fail of relieving Ciſteron. This Diſgrace was followed by ſome others: The Duke of Nemours, after the ill Succeſs of the Siege of Lyons, won two Battles againſt the Baron Des-Adrets; but durſt not engage with him a third time; and to be Governour there (1): for, when he ſpeaks of the firſt Diſcontent of Des-Adrets, he ſays, it proceeded from the News, that Soubiſe was entered into Lyons (2). This ſuppoſes, that, after having commanded there for ſome time, he left That Poſt, and that Des-Adrets ſucceeded him, but that Soubiſe was ſent thither again to the Excluſion of his Succeſſor. This Hiſtorian is miſtaken; The firſt, who commanded in the City of Lyons, after it had declared for the Cauſe, was the Baron Des-Adrets (3): Soubiſe was not ſent thither, but when he was thought to be a fitter Man for That Poſt, than the Baron; and he continued in it 'till the Peace. Varillas would have known this Gradation, had he conſidered well his own Words: "Des-Adrets, ſays he, ---- approaching Lyons, under Pretence of bringing a ſpeedy Succour to the Calviniſts of That great City, who had luckily ſeized upon it, flattered them ſo, that he perſwaded them to obey him, and to write to the Prince of Condé, that they ſhould be very well pleaſed to have him for their Governour (4)." I add, that Maimbourg (5), and his Copier (6), are miſtaken, when they ſay, that Des-Adrets ſeized on Vienne, and Grenoble, before he ſeized on Lyons. It is certain, that the firſt thing he did, after having made himſelf Maſter of Valence, was to haſten to Lyons, which he knew the Proteſtants had ſeized, three Days after the Sedition of Valence (7). Mr Allard did not know This Fact: he places the Expedition to Lyons after the Conqueſt of Vienne, which, as he ſays, happened after the Reduction of Grenoble (8).

Digitized by Google

[B] He was very barbarous in ſeveral Places.] For example; he treated the Garriſon of Montbriſſon, which had ſurrendered at Diſcretion, very cruelly. They repreſented to him, in vain, the Laws of Humanity; he would divert himſelf with ſeeing Thoſe miſerable Soldiers precipitated: they were brought to the Top of the Platform, above the Tower. Thoſe, who had not the Courage to precipitate themſelves, were caſt down headlong; and not ſo much as their Chief (9) was pardoned. Only one Soldier was ſaved. Twice he took a run from one end of the Platform to the other, as if he deſigned to leap farther, but ſtopt ſhort on the brink of the Precipice. Des-Adrets ſaid to him, with a ſharp Tone, It was enough to have twice ſounded the Ford: the Soldier replied, boldly, That he would give him four times to do it. Theſe Words ſoftened the Baron's ill Humour in ſuch a Manner, that he gave the brisk Fellow quarter, who durſt make uſe of his Jeſts in ſuch a preſſing Extremity (10). Some ſay (11), that the Baron's Soldiers, as barbarous as their General, received Thoſe, who were thrown down from the Tower, with horrid Cries, and Shouts, on the Points of their Halberts, and Pikes. Caſtelnau Mauviſſiere relates, in this Manner, the Cruelty, which he pretends Des-Adrets uſed in another Place (12). "About "Two hundred Catholics, ſays he (13), who had "compounded to ſurrender the Town, retired into "the Caſtle, thinking, that the Capitulation would "be kept. Nevertheleſs, the Baron Des-Adrets cauſed "them to be thrown down headlong from the Top "of the Caſtle, notwithſtanding the public Faith, "which was ſworn, ſaying, That it was to revenge "the Cruelty, committed at Orange. Some of Them, "who were thrown down out of the Windows, "from a very great Heighth, laying hold of the "Bars, the ſaid Baron Des-Adrets, very unhumanly, "cauſed their Fingers to be cut off. One of Thoſe, "who were precipitated, falling down from the Top "of the Caſtle, which was ſituated on a great Rock, "chanced to take hold of a Branch of a Tree, which "he would not let go: they ſhot, and threw many "Stones, at him, but could not hit him. The Baron, "wondering at it, ſaved his Life; and he eſcaped, "as it were by a Miracle. When I was in Dauphiné, I went to ſee the Place with the Queen-"Mother; He, who was ſaved, was ſtill living near "That Place." D'Aubigné aſcribes the taking of Mornac to Montbrun, Lieutenant of Des-Adrets, and obſerves, that Montbrun endeavoured, in vain, to moderate the Slaughter; that one of Thoſe, who were thrown down, "continued hanging on ſome "Branches, and that ſome Soldiers having ſhot at "him, without wounding him, Montbrun ſaved him, "and made him ſerviceable to him (14)." He ſays alſo, that Thoſe of Orange "placed ſeveral dead "Bodies on Floats, and let them go down the River "Rhone to Avignon, with theſe Words written on "their Breaſts, "Toll-Gatherers of Avignon, ſtop not "theſe Tormentors; for they have paid Tribute at "Mornac." All theſe Facts are taken from Beza's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory (15), which ſhews plainly, that Des-Adrets was not the Author of what was done in Mornac. So that the Supplement to Moreri muſt be corrected by This, as well as the Memoirs of Caſtelnau, and Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm.

[C] He was cruel, by way of Repriſal.] Here we muſt take notice of a great Falſity of Maimbourg. After having mentioned the Cruelties of Des-Adrets, he adds theſe Words; "There were indeed ſome "Catholics, who, being juſtly incenſed at ſo many "horrid Crimes, abuſed the Right of Repriſals, and "treated them almoſt in the ſame Manner, of their "own Authority; but there were but few, who pe-"riſhed ſo (16)." He ſuppoſes, then, that Des-Adrets began to excerciſe Theſe Barbarities, and that the Catholics only followed his Example, and made uſe of them by way of Repriſals. But this is either groſs Ignorance, or prodigious Inſincerity; for Hiſtorians, leaſt ſuſpected of Partiality towards thoſe of the Proteſtant Religion, confeſs ingenuouſly, that the Cruelties, which were exerciſed at Orange, preceeded Thoſe of Des-Adrets. Do but read Varillas's Hiſtory of Charles IX (17), and you will find there, that, before the Leaps of Mornac and Montbriſſon, the Catholics had exerciſed the moſt enormous Cruelties at Orange, and particularly That of precipitating People from the Tops of Rocks, or on Pikes and Halberts. See the Article SERBELLON (FABRICIUS), where I mention Theſe ſtrange Barbarities.

(1) Varillas's Hiſtory of Charles IX, Tom. I, pag. 183.

(2) Id. pag. 213.

(3) See d'Aubigné, Tom. I, pag. 203, and Beza, Eccleſ. Hiſt. lib. xi, pag, 222, & ſeq.

(4) Varillas, pag. 200.

(5) Maimb. Hiſt. of Calvin. p. 273.

(6) Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(7) Beza ibid. pag. 221, and Book 12, pag. 255, & ſeq.

(8) Allard's Life of Des-Adrets, pag. 42, and 39, cited by Maimb. Hiſt. of Calviniſm.

(9) A brave Man, whoſe Name was Moncelas.

(10) See Varillas, Charl. IX, Tom. I, pag. 212.

(11) Allard, ubi ſupra.

(12) At Mornac, in the County of Venaiſſin.

(13) Caſtelnau, Memoir. lib. iv. cap. 2.

(14) D'Aubigné, Hiſt. Univ. Vol. I. pag. 207.

(15) Book 12, p. 271.

(16) Maimb. Hiſtory of Calviniſm, lib. iv, pag. 275, Ed. Holl.

(17) Tom. I, p. 203, 204.

CONFUTATION of Maimbourg.

Digitized by Google

and found it more proper to uſe Artifices, to induce This formidable Leader of the Proteſtants to change ſides [D]. They endeavoured to prevail upon him by Promiſes, and Threats [E]; they ſhewed him, that he had great Enemies in his Party [F]: At laſt, they ſtaggered him in ſuch a manner, that his Conduct became more and more ſuſpected by the Prince of Condé, and the Admiral. The Concluſion was, that they ſecured his Perſon [G], at Romans, the Tenth of January, 1563 (f). He did not come out of Priſon, but by the Treaty of Peace, which was concluded the (f) Varillas, Hiſtory of Charles IX.

Barbarities. Caſtelnau, whom I have already quoted, makes uſe of this memorable Reflexion; "Indeed it "ſeemed, that, by a Judgment of God, the Cruel- "ties were reciprocal on both ſides; and Orange "was thought to be the Foundation of Thoſe, which "were committed by the Huguenots, in cold Blood, "in Dauphiné." Let us not forget the Baron's Anſwer to his Officers, when they repreſented to him the Injuſtice he was going to commit, and the Evils, which it might draw on their Party. "He replied, with a Face, whoſe natural Deformity was much increaſed by Fury, that the Puniſhment, which he was going to inflict, was neceſſary to ſtop the Cruelty of the Catholics, and "that, in order to reduce them to the Laws of a "fair War, which they had firſt violated at the taking "of Orange, it was neceſſary they ſhould know, "that the Calviniſts could wage a cruel War, as well "as themſelves (18)." Varillas, who ridicules Theſe two Excuſes, could not confute him as to theſe Words, which they had firſt violated at the taking of Orange, ſince he had already obſerved, of himſelf, "that the "Baron heard of the Cruelties, committed at Orange, "with thoſe inward Tranſports of Joy, which a "bloody Man is capable of, when an unexpected "Accident gives him an Opportunity of committing "all manner of Exceſſes, without being reproached for "having been the Aggreſſor (19)." I refer my Reader to the Anſwers, which Des-Adrets made to d'Aubigné, who asked him, one day, three things: "Why he "had committed ſome Cruelties ſo ill becoming his "great Valour? Why he had forſaken a Party, to "which he was ſo much indebted: and, then, why "he had no Succeſs in any thing, ſince he had for-"ſaken That Party, though he had acted againſt "it (20)?" He anſwered, to the firſt Point, "That "no body commits a Cruelty in returning one; "that the firſt are called Cruelties, and the ſecond "Juſtice. Having, thereupon, made an horrible Diſ-"courſe, of above Four thouſand Murthers, commit-"ted in cold Blood, and of the Invention of unheard "of Torments, and chiefly of the Leaps of Majcon, "where the Governour taught the very Children to "ſee the Huguenots die without Pity, he ſaid, that "he had ſerved them ſomething like it, having Re-"gard to the Time paſt, and to the Time to come: "with Reſpect to the Time paſt, not being able to "endure, without great Cowardice, the tearing in "pieces his faithful Companions; and, as for the Time "to come, there were two Reaſons, which no Cap-"tain can diſapprove; the one, that the only Means "to put a ſtop to the Cruelties of an Enemy, is to "return them the like (21); whereupon he men-"tioned Three hundred Horſemen, ſent back, ſome "time ago, to the Enemies Army, on Waggons, "having each of them a Hand, and a Foot, cut off, "to change a mercileſs War into a courteous one." All his other Anſwers are full of Senſe; to which I refer my Readers as I have ſaid already, contenting myſelf to obſerve, here, I. That Theſe Leaps of Maſcon are to be found in the Article of That City. II. That our Baron juſtified himſelf more faintly to the Duke de Nemours, than to d'Aubigné. See the following Remark.

(18) Varill. Hiſtory of Charles IX, pag. 211.

(19) Pag. 204.

How Des-Adrets juſtified his Cruelties.

(20) D'Aubigné, Vol. I, Book iii, chap. 9, pag. 216, Edit. 1626.

(21) Admiral Coligni had taken this Method to correct the Engliſh. See the Application that was made of this, in the New Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calvinism, Tom. I, pag. 188, 196.

[D] The Duke de Nemours uſed Artifice.] If we may believe Varillas, the Duke de Nemours prevented Des-Arets, by writing a Letter to him, deſiring him to treat two Italian Soldiers, who were fallen into his Hands, as Priſoners of War (22). But Beza ſays, the Baron wrote firſt to the Duke, to deſire him to ſet at Liberty two Italian Soldiers (23). There is no queſtion but that Varillas is miſtaken; for Des-Adrets's Letter, ſet down at length in Beza's Hiſtory, begins with the Requeſt of the Liberty of Thoſe two Italian Soldiers. Varillas has commited another Fault; for he does not faithfully report the Subſtance of That Letter: he pretends, that the Baron imputed the bloody Executions of Vaureas, Boulenne, and Pierrelate, to the Neceſſity of obliging the Catholics to a fair War with the Calviniſts, whom they hanged as faſt as they took them; and that he added, that, after having obtained this Point, ſo neceſſary to his Party, that he could hardly find any Soldiers before, he obſerved exactly the Military Laws, which had learned in Piedmont. There is nothing like This in Des-Adrets's Letter; he only confeſſes, that, at Pierrelate and Boulenne, two Towns, which he had taken by Aſſault, he could not, to his great Grief, with-hold the Soldiers from taking their Revenge on Four or Five hundred Men, whom they found there. His Apology does not conſiſt in alledging juſt and neceſſary Motives of his Cruelties, nor in ſaying, that, having attained the end, for which he had commited them, he deſiſted from them; he only denies them; and he does it, as Beza obſerves, in a very faint and ſoft Stile. Varillas ſays truly, that the Duke de Nemours, apprehending by That Letter, that Des-Adrets was diſcontented, cauſed a Conference to be propoſed to him, which was accepted.

(22) Varill. Charl. IX, Tom. I, pag. 272.

(23) Beza, Eccleſ. Hiſt. Tom. III, pag. 292.

[E] They endeavoured to prevail with him by Promiſes.] They wrote very civilly to him (24), and, after having repreſented to him, that the way, he took, would infallibly lead him to a Confiſcation of Body and Eſtate, they tempted him with a Promiſe of the Collar of the Order, and with That of a Company of fifty Men at Arms, with the Sum of an Hundred thouſand Livres; and, if he choſe to live out of the Kingdom, they engaged themſelves to ſend him the Sum of an Hundred thouſand Crowns. The Duke de Nemours uſed all manner of Promiſes and Flatteries, when he conferred with Des-Adrets.

(24) It was the Marſhal de Briſſac, who wrote to him. Theod. Beza publiſhed his Letter, Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 291.

[F] They repreſented to him, that he had great Enemies in his Party.] The Marſhal de Briſſac communicated a Letter of the Admiral to him, which he had received in the following Manner. Soubiſe, who ſuſpected Des-Adrets, had acquainted the Admiral with it; the Soldier, who carried the Letter, was intruſted with an Anſwer to it; but, inſtead of carrying it to Soubiſe, he brought it to the Marſhal de Briſſac (25). Here are the Contents of it, as far as they relate to This Baron; "As to what you write "to me, concerning the Baron Des-Adrets, every "Body knows him to be what he is; but, ſince he "has, hitherto, ſerved ſo well in This Cauſe, "we muſt bear his Inſolence a little; for it is to "be feared, that his Inſolence may be changed into "Fury. Wherefore my Opinion is, that you uſe "your Endeavours to bring him to a Conference, "and bear with him as much as you can."

(25) Beza, ibid.

[G] They ſecured his Perſon.] Here is a Paſſage of Caſtelnau's Memoirs. "The Duke de Nemours, know-"ing Des-Adrets to be a good Captain, and a Per-"ſon of great Credit and Reputation, thought it "more expedient for the King's Service to gain "him over, than to oppoſe him by Force; which "he did ſo dexterouſly, with fair Promiſes, and "ſmooth Words, (as being a very perſuaſive Prince, "and who always knew how to prevail upon Men "by his winning Addreſs) that the Huguenots never "had, ſince, a greater Enemy in That Country, than "This Baron, who began, from that time, to con-"trive Miſchief againſt them. The Huguenots, be-"ing very vigilant, had notice of it; for they had "Spies every where. Which was the Reaſon, why "the Baron Des-Adrets, being gone to Valence, "was taken Priſoner by Mouvans, (by Advice of "Cardinal de Chatillon, and of the Sieur de Curſol, "ſince made Duke of Uſez,) who ſent him to Ni-"mes, where he was in very great Danger, and "would hardly have eſcaped with Life, had it not "been for the Peace; by Virtue of which he was "ſet at Liberty (26)." See the twelfth Book of Beza's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, where the Detention of Des-Adrets is mentioned at large. "After divers In-"terrogations and Anſwers —— Peace intervening, "he was releaſed, and ſent to his Houſe, without any "Abſolution or Condemnation." Theſe are Beza's Words (27).

(26) Caſtelnau's Memoirs, Book 4, chap. 11.

(27) Beza Hiſt. Eccleſ. Book xi, p. 305, 307.

[H] He

Digitized by Google

the same Year; and then he professed his first Religion, and, afterwards, bore Arms against the other; but without any Success or Glory [H]; for which he is not the only Person, who has given very bad Reasons (g). This General shewed no longer the same Vigilancy, Activity, Intrepidity, and Presence of Mind, which had been admired as Prodigies, whilst he served the Cause. All Those great Qualities, and the Victories, which he obtained over the Papists, did not hinder the Protestants from looking upon him as a Goliah, who dishonoured the Battles of Israel, by his barbarous Conduct [I]. He died without Honour, in an ignominious Old-Age, equally despised by both Parties (b); much unlike That Baron Des-Adrets, Quantum mutatus ab illo! who had been dreaded as far as Rome (i); for they were apprehensive there, that

(g) See Remark [H].

(b) Maimb. Hist. of Calvinism, pag. 275. See Rem. [K].

(i) Brantome's Elogy of Monluc.

[H] He served in the Catholic Party, without any Success, or Glory.] See, here, what is to be found in the same Historian. "Being fallen so low, He (28) "went yet farther, since; having born Arms against "Those of the Reformed Religion, as well in Dauphiné, as in other Parts of France, being Colonel "of a Regiment of Foot, in which he got nothing "but Shame, with such a loss of his Reputation, "that he was never since employed, but remained "in his House, a Spectator of other Men's Miseries "(29)." D'Aubigné says, that he was defeated, when the Army of the Duke of Deux Ponts entered France, in the Year 1569 (30). He says, elsewhere (31), that, at Lyons, at the return of the King of Poland, an Usher refused Admittance to Des-Adrets; and it was on this Occasion, that He asked him the three Questions, mentioned before (32). He desired to know of the Baron, why he had so little Success in the Catholic Armies. "Child, answered he, with a Sigh (33), "nothing is too hot for a Captain, who has no more "Interest in the Victory, than his Soldiers: With "the Huguenots, I had Soldiers; and, since, I have "had none but Merchants, who think on nothing "but Money: The others feared nothing, and were "full of Revenge, Passion, and Honour; I could "not keep in the Reins of the first; but the latter "have worn out my Spurs." To speak the Truth, These Reasons are very weak; and, to confute them invincibly, it would be sufficient to refer the Readers to the great Number of general, and particular, Battles, in which the Protestants Troops were beaten. What! were not the Papist Soldiers full of Revenge and Passion? Did they not hear continually their Priests, who exhorted them to take Vengeance of the Huguenots, for their plundering and prophaning of Churches? is there any thing, which inspires more Fury, than such Discourses? What shall we say of the Decrees (34), "which permitted all manner of "Persons, and even ordered all Communities to fall "upon the Huguenots, at the ringing of the Alarm-"Bell, to pursue them strenuously every where, and "and to kill them without Mercy, as so many wild "Beasts, mad Dogs, and Wolves, that destroyed "all the Kingdom: So that, through the Crimes of "one Party, and the Revenge of the other, there was "nothing to be seen, in all the Provinces of France, but "Burnings, Blood, and Slaughter, and a Thousand frightful Images of Death?" Could the Catholic Soldiers be free from Passion and Revenge amidst such dismal Objects? Was it more necessary to use Spurs for them, than Reins for the Huguenots? Monluc and Tavanes, and several other Commanders of the same Party, make it appear, that it was the Baron Des-Adrets's own Fault. At the Bottom, he did the Protestants more wrong, than he thought: and the Bishop of Meaux knew how to take advantage of the Disposition, he ascribed to them, of having been full of Passion, and Revenge (35). But here is another Reason more false, than That which he gave to d'Aubigné. "Never "any Man acquired so great a Reputation in so short "a Time; and never any great Commander lost it "sooner: For the Duke de Nemours, who was sent "against him, and who could not defeat him by "open Force, had no sooner brought him over to "his Party, but they represented him as the weakest, "and most unfortunate, Officer, of the Royal, and "Catholic, Party. Not but that he had always the "same Valour, and Experience; but there is a great "Difference between fighting for, and against, one's "King: For every thing is permitted in a Revolt; "and a Commander shews himself such as he is; "whereas, in the Service of his Prince, he must appear such as he ought to be; and he is more subject to Military Discipline. In effect, the Baron "Des-Adrets was as furious, as valiant; he signalized "himself more by the Terror of his Arms, than by "the Reputation of his Conduct; and he made more "Noise, than other Men of his Quality, because "he was more cruel, and dreadful. In the King's "Army, they would not have suffered his Fury; "and the Law of Reprisals was so punctually observed, that both Parties were obliged to keep "Faith, and to wage a fair War (36)." Though it be my Interest to find Faults in Authors, since They are so many Materials for my Work, I am truly concerned, that so judicious a Person, as Mr le Laboureur, should have published such bad Reasoning. Ask him, Why Des-Adrets was a great Commander during his Protestantism, and a very pitiful Officer in his Catholicism? He will answer you; it is because, in a Revolt, a Man does all that he can do; but, in a lawful War, all that he ought to do. There was never a more false Maxim, or more injudiciously applied, than This; since it is certain, that, in a Civil-War, the King's Party acts with more Boldness, and Confidence, than the Other: For the rebellious Party, finding itself sufficiently odious, will not begin the Breach of Military Discipline, the Violation of Capitulations, Slaughters in cold Blood, against the public Faith, &c. It is the Prince's Party, which gives itself more Liberty, in that respect, pretending to have only to do with People convicted of Felony, and actually under Sentence of Death: It seldom makes a fair War, but when the other Party resolves to use Reprisals. At least, Matters stood so in the Religious Wars, under Charles IX, and, consequently, This Maxim was very ill applied. Besides, I wonder, that Mr le Laboureur did not take notice of the Passage of Brantome, which he quoted a little after. That Passage is a Parallel between our Baron, and Monluc, wherein, though Brantome makes the latter a little less cruel, than the other, he says, nevertheless, that they might be compared in all things, both very brave, and valiant, both very capricious, both very cruel; both Companions in Piedmont; and both very good Captains. According to Mr le Laboureur's Maxim, Des-Adrets would never have acquired the Reputation of a great Captain, if he had always served his Prince: Why, then, did Monluc acquire That Reputation, or why did he preserve, and perfectly maintain, it, even when, according to Mr le Laboureur, a fair War, and the Law of Reprisals, were punctually observed? Why then did Des-Adrets lose all his Reputation, since That of Monluc was not lessened?

(28) That is, the Baron Des-Adrets.

(29) Beza, Hist. Eccles. lib xii. pag. 307.

(30) D'Aubigné, Tom. I. pag. 403.

(31) Ibid. pag. 215.

(32) In Remark [C].

(33) D'Aubigné, Tom. I. pag. 217.

A Passage of D'Aubigné criticised.

(34) Maimbourg, Hist. of Calvinism pag. 276.

(35) See Mr de Meaux's Hist. of the Variations, lib. x. n. 39.

A Criticism on a Passage of Mr Le Laboureur.

(36) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Casteln. Tom. II. pag. 23.

[I] The Protestants disapproved of —— his barbarous Conduct.] Besides what has been already said on this Subject (37), I shall observe, here, that it was said, that he taught his Children to be cruel, and to bathe themselves in Blood (38). The eldest, who was afterwards a Catholic, was very busy in the Massacre of Paris. He died at the Siege of Rochel, with Contrition for the great quantity of Blood, that he had shed. The Protestants are little concerned, whether This Hear-say of Brantome be true, or not; for They were the first, who condemned This Baron's cruel Disposition (39). But every Body is concerned not to suffer the Licence of Him, who published the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary: He says, That, after a great Slaughter, Des Adrets made his two Sons bathe themselves in the Blood of the Catholics. Father Maimbourg supplied him with This Gloss (40). Both of them should be told, that they ought not to take so great a Latitude in their Paraphrases. Their Witness, grounded on a Hear-say, made use only of the Word Blood. What right had they to pretend, that he spoke of Human Blood? Do not Butchers contract an Habit of Cruelty, by the effusion of the Blood of Beasts? A Writer,

(37) In Remark [B].

(38) Brantome's Apology of Monluc.

(39) See Beza's Hist. Eccl. lib. xi. pag. 221.

The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary criticised.

(40) Hist. of Calvinism, pag. 274.

Digitized by Google

that he would fit out a Fleet, to pay the Pope a Viſit. We ſhall ſpeak of his Children in one of our Remarks [K].

Here is a Supplement, which I borrow from a Work, which I have read ſince the firſt Volume of This Dictionary was printed off. The Baron Des-Adrets, being but fifteen Years of Age, was One of the Two hundred Gentlemen of Dauphiné, who were in the Army, which Odet du Foix, Lord of Lautrec, commanded in Italy, in the Year 1527 (k). He ſignalized himſelf every-where. In 1532, he obtained the Standard of the Company of the Lord Deputy S. Martin, Lieutenant in the Government of Provence (l). He had ſome Diſpute with George d'Urre de Venterol, to whom That Company was given in the Year 1537, and who hindered him from obtaining the Lieutenancy (m). This diſpleaſed him ſo much, that he proteſted he would ſerve no more, and retired to his Father in Dauphiné. Some time after, he went to Turin, to his Uncle Boutieres (n), General of the Army of Piedmont, who left him the Conduct of ſome Legionaries of That Province, which made part of the Garriſon of the Town. He continued in this Employ till the Diſgrace of Boutieres, which happened in 1544, and which obliged the Uncle and Nephew to retire into Dauphiné (o). A long Sickneſs hindered our Baron, above three Years, from bearing Arms. He had a Troop of Horſe under the Marſhal de Briſſac, Lieutenant-General for the King in Italy (p), and was afterwards made Colonel-General of the Legionaries of Dauphiné (q). He received three Wounds, at the Siege of Vulpian, in the Year 1555. The Charge of Colonel of the Legionaries of Provence, Lyonnois, and Auvergne, was given him; and he led them, with thoſe of Dauphiné, to the Duke of Guiſe, at Turin, in the Year 1557 (r). He loſt his Baggage, and his Liberty, at the taking of Moncalve, in the Year 1558 (s), and accuſed Pequigni, who was Governour there, of the Loſs of that Town. He cited him before the King, and loſt his Cauſe [L]. His Reſentment, for (k) Allard's Life of the Baron Des-Adrets, pag. 3, 4.

(l) Ibid. pag. 7.

(m) Ibid. pag. 9.

(n) Brother to Des-Adrets's Mother.

(o) Allard, ibid. p. 10.

(p) Ibid. pag. 12.

(q) Ibid. pag. 14.

(r) Ibid. pag. 16.

(s) Ibid. pag. 19.

A Writer, who quotes an Author, ſhould keep religiouſly to his Expreſſions, and not commit the Sophiſm, à dicto ſimpliciter ad dictum ſecundum quid. Let him conjecture, if he pleaſes; but he ought not to give his Conjectures as matter of Fact.

[K] We ſhall ſpeak of his Children in one of our Remarks.] Brantome, whom we have quoted concerning the eldeſt, ſays, That there was a younger, who was the King's Page; but Beza will tell us more Circumſtances about him. "The greateſt Evil, ſays "he, ſpeaking of This Baron (41), was, that, growing worſe and worſe after this, he forſook the Reformed Religion, and carried his Children to Maſs; "the eldeſt of which, having been bred up in Germany, during the Troubles at the Court of the "Elector Palatine, became, ſoon after, one of the "moſt vitious young Men in France; but GOD "did not let him live long. The other two were "Twins, and were born at Geneva during the Troubles, to one of which John Calvin was God-Father." Mr Allard relates, that He, who had been the King's Page, and of whom he mentions a very bold Action, "was involved in the Maſſacre on "St Bartholomew's Day (42). Davila ſays, in his "fifth Book of the Civil-Wars of France, that the "two Sons were called, the one Colonel Montaumor, "and the other Colonel Rouvray, and that one of "them was killed in the Maſſacre on St Bartholomew's "Day. The other died of Sickneſs (43)." Let us relate the bold Action of the Page. "The King "ordered him one Day to call his Chancellor; This "Page found him at Dinner; and, having told him, "that the King would ſpeak with him, and the "Chancellor having anſwered, that, after he had "dined, he would go and receive the King's Orders: "How! ſaid the Page, will you defer one Moment, "when the King commands you? And, thereupon, he "took one end of the Table-cloth, and threw all "that was upon it to the Ground. This Story was "told the King by the Chancellor himſelf, and his "Majeſty, laughing, ſaid only, that the Son would "be as violent and paſſionate as the Father (44)." Obſerve, that this Writer has not well apprehended theſe Words of Davila. "Nel Medezimo Palazzo (45), "furono amazzati Teligni genero dell' Amiraglio, "Guerchi ſuo luogotenente —— i Colonelli Montaumar, e Rourai, il figlivolo del Barone de S. Adrets, "e tutti quelli della ſua corte (46). —— In the Palace Medezimo, were killed Teligni, the Admiral's Son-in-law; Guerchi, his Lieutenant —— the Colonels Montaumar and Rourai, the young Son of the Baron de S. Adrets; and all theſe in his own Court." He does not pretend to ſpeak of two Colonels, that were the Sons of our Baron, nor is it well known, whether, by his Baron de S. Adrets, he meant ours. If he did, I fancy he was miſtaken. Let no one object theſe Words of d'Aubigné; "The Marquis de Reſnel, "Brother of Prince Porcian, was killed by Buſſi d'Amboiſe, and the Son of the Baron Des-Adrets, "about a Law-ſuit, which he had with his Couſin-"German (47);" for the meaning of them is, that Buſſi d'Amboiſe, and the Son of That Baron, killed Reſnel.

(41) Beza's Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. xii. pag. 307.

(42) Allard, Life of Des-Adrets, pag. 81.

(43) Id. ib. pag. 90, 91.

(44) Ibid. pag. 82.

(45) That is, The Admiral's Houſe.

(46) Davila, lib. v p. 272. Edit. of Venice, 1650.

(47) D'Aubigné, Tom. I. lib. i. c. 4. pag. 456.

Mr le Laboureur ſaid, in 1658, that the Family of Beaumont was extinct (48). I have been informed, by Mr d'Hoſier, by means of a Friend, that Suſanna de Beaumont, Daughter and Heireſs of our Baron Des-Adrets, was married to Cæſar de Vaucerre, Lord of Teis, and St Deſier, in Dauphiné. Their Poſterity continues to this Day. Mademoiſelle Des-Adrets, who died Maid of Honour to the Ducheſs of Orleans, after the Year 1680, and who had been a Proteſtant, was deſcended from This Suſanna. Her Brothers were the Marquis Des-Adrets, who is Captain of a Ship, and the Chevalier Des-Adrets, who was Aide de Camp of the Marſhal Duke of Noailles, when he was killed at the Siege of Roſes, in June, 1693. He had been Captain of a Ship; but was caſhired, becauſe he would not aſſiſt at the Lectures, which Mr Renaude, Engineer of Marine, read at Breſt, by the King's Order.

(48) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau, Tom. I. pag. 22.

I ſhall inſert here the Addition, which I publiſhed at the end of the firſt Volume of this Dictionary. It contains theſe Words: I have juſt now received (49) the Life of our Baron Des-Adrets, compoſed by Mr Allard, wherein Mr le Laboureur's Miſtake is thus laid open. "The Family of Beaumont is not extinct, "as Mr le Laboureur believed, ſpeaking of the Baron "Des-Adrets, in his Additions to the Memoirs of "Caſtelnau. It continues ſtill in the Branches of Pompignon in Languedoc, of Breſſet, in Auvergne, of "Autichamp, and of St Quintin, in Dauphiné. It "is true, that That of Baron Des-Adrets ended in "two Daughters, the eldeſt of which, whoſe Name "was Suſanna, was twice married; the firſt Marriage was with the Lord of Tarvanas, in Piedmont; "and the ſecond with Cæſar de la Vauſerre, to whom "ſhe brought the Seat of Des-Adrets. The other's "Name was Eſther, Wife of Antony de Saſſenage, "Lord of Iſeron (50)."

(49) In the Month of Sept. 1696, by the Care of the obliging Mr Pinſſon des Riollets.

(50) Allard's Life of Des-Adrets, pag. 1, & 2.

[L] He cited Pequigni before the King, and loſt his Cauſe.] I ſhall ſet down Mr Allard's Narrative. "The Baron, having accuſed Pequigni of the Loſs "of the Town, and of his Liberty, and Baggage, "pretended, that he ought to endemnify him for "the Damage he had ſuſtained: For this end, he "ſummoned him before King Francis II, who had "ſucceded Henry II, where he maintained his Cauſe "admirably well, and ſaid, that Pequigni ſuffered "the Enemy to enter without Oppoſition; that he "might eaſily have defended the Breach, ſince it "was but ſmall, and the number of thoſe, who refor it, against the House of Guise was managed by Catherine de Medicis (t), and had the Consequences, which we have already seen. The Author, whom I quote, gives a very particular Account of it, as also of This Baron's Actions, which he performed after his Return to the King's Party. He makes them more considerable, than other Historians do; but he owns, that this brave Captain was suspected of Intelligence with the Huguenot Party, that he was imprisoned, that he justified himself [M], and received Orders to raise a thousand Foot, which he conducted to Turin (u). He was there during the Massacre on St Bartholomew's Day. He soon returned into Dauphiné, and, seeing the small Account they made of him, he retired to la Frette (x), in the Graisivodan (y). He refused to sign the Formularies of the League, in the Year 1577 (z). He went to compliment the Duke of Maienne, at Grenoble, in the Year 1581 (aa), and performed, there, an Act of his ancient Valour [N]. He accompanied la Valette, who was sent into Dauphiné against Lesdiguieres, in the Year 1585 (bb). At last, being tired with so many Fatigues, oppressed with Age, and extreamly disgusted with the World, he retired again to la Frette, where he lived a Year with visible Marks of his Return into the Bosom of the Church. He died, therefore, a true Catholic, after having made his Will, the Second of Febr. 1586, and was buried in a Chapel of the Parochial Church, which belonged to his House (cc). The Reader will not be displeased to see the Titles, which he gave himself, whilst he was at the Head of the Protestants of his Province [O], nor to know, that his Countenance discovered the Fierceness of his Temper [P].

"ſolved

Digitized by Google

(t) Mr Allard, ibid. pag. 2c. 2<, produces this Queen's Letter.

(u) Ibid. pag. 81.

(x) Ibid. pag 83.

(y) It was one of his Houses.

(z) Ibid. pag. 84.

(aa) Ibid. pag. 87.

(bb) Ibid. pag. 89.

(cc) Ibid. pag. 90.

" solved to pass through it, very inconsiderable; " that, if he denied it, he would make him con- " fess it in a Duel. This Dispute appeared singu- " lar to the Court; and these two Enemies had " some Friends among the Great Ones, who hin- " dered the Decision of it for some time. It went, " nevertheless, in favour of Pequigni, by the Credit " of the House of Guise, which began to be very " great in France; and they were forbid to attempt " any thing against each other, on the Penalty of " being punished as guilty of High-Treason: Where- " upon, the Baron was so enraged, that he swore " he would be revenged on the Guises; and This " was the Reason, why he embraced, afterwards, " the Protestant Party: This is what Thuanus says; " and it is agreeable to Truth (51)."

(51) Ibid. pag. 19, 20.

[M] He was suspected of Intelligence with the Huguenot Party, was imprisoned, and justified himself.] At his Return into Dauphiné, after the Battle of Moncontour, " he was obliged to retire to his " House, because Gordes, Governor of the Province, " had conceived a great Hatred against him (52). " It is thought, that he suspected him of being still " inclined to the Huguenot Party, and even of ha- " ving favoured the Armament, which was made, " near Geneva, by Count Lodowick of Nassau, and " of holding Intelligence with him. —— Whatever " there was in it, it is certain, that Gordes made " but little account of him; at which the Baron " murmured highly, and made some Complaints, " which were somewhat bold, and even rash; which " coming to the King's Ear, Gordes received Orders " to cause him to be arrested; which he did. He " was carried to Genoble, and from thence to Lyons, " and imprisoned in Pierrecise. At first, he was " thought a lost Man, and so much the more, " because Letters were intercepted from Princes, " and the Admiral, in his Favour, and because " the chief Heads of the Protestants interceded for " his Liberty (53)." He obtained it by the Peace, which was concluded in the Month of January, 1571 (54). He appeared before the King in his Council. " There he declared, that, being innocent, " he supplicated his Majesty to suffer him to re- " nounce the Benefit of the Edicts of Pacification, " made in favour of those, who had acted against " his Interests, under Pretence of Religion or Policy; " that he had never done any thing, for which he " might be blamed; that, if any Person was so bold " as to maintain, that he was criminal in any res- " pect, he was ready to make him deny it, Sword " in Hand, if his Majesty would be pleased to per- " mit it. The King answered him, That he was per- " suaded of his Innocence, and good Intention; " that he had never questioned his good Conduct, " and Zeal for his Service; that he was extreamly " satisfied with him; that he always believed his " Intentions were good, and other things of that " Nature, of which he desired his Majesty to grant " him an Act: Which was willingly done. It is in " the Registers of the Chamber of Accompts (55)."

(52) Ibid. pag. 75.

(53) Ibid. pag. 76.

(54) Ibid. pag. 77.

(55) Mr Allard has published this Act, p. 79, 80, 81.

[N] He performed, at Grenoble, in 1581, an Act of his ancient Valour.] The Duke de Maienne " being at Grenoble, in 1581, the young Pardaillan, " Son of la Mothe-Gondrin, spoke haughtily and in- " juriously of the Baron Des-Adrets, because of the " Loss of his Father at Valence. The Baron was " informed, in his Retirement, what Terms he made " use of, and also, that he said, if he met him, he " would abuse him: Which obliged him to come " to Grenoble, where, having waited upon the Duke " of Maienne, and having been kindly received by " him, he said, several times, and also in the Pre- " sence of Pardaillan, that he had left his Solitude, " and was returned into the World, to see if any " One bore him any Grudge, and to give him Sa- " tisfaction; that his Sword was not so rusty, nor " his Arm so weak, or his Strength so much impaired " by Age, but that he was able to give Satisfaction to " all those, who had any Complaint against him. " Pardaillan neither said, nor did, any thing, that " might give occasion for a Quarrel; so that Des- " Adrets retired again, being satisfied with this last " Bravery (56)."

(56) Ibid. pag. 87, 88.

[O] The Reader will see the Titles, which he gave himself, whilst he was at the Head of the Protestants of his Province.] They are as follows: " Francis de " Beaumont, Lord Des-Adrets, Gentleman in Or- " dinary of the King's Chamber, Colonel of the " Legionaries of Dauphiné, Provence, Lyonnois, Lan- " guedoc, and Auvergne, Governor, and Lieutenant " General for the King in Dauphiné, and my Lord " the Prince of Condé's Lieutenant in the Christian " Army, assembled for the Service of God, the Li- " berty and Deliverance of the King, and the Queen- " Mother, the Preservation of their States and Gran- " deur, and of Christian Liberty in the said Coun- " tries (57)." In the Chamber of Accompts of Grenoble, " there are several Ordinances drawn up " in his Name - - - - - wherein he takes That Qua- " lity upon him, and, in others, he calls himself, " Chief Governor of the Companies assembled for the " Service of God, &c. There are some, which are " thus directed; To all the True and Faithful Sub- " jects of the King, our Sovereign and Natural Lord, " associated in the Confession of the Reformed Churches, " and Well-wishers to the Peace and Tranquillity of " this Country of Dauphiné, Greeting, and Peace " through our Lord Jesus Christ (58)." Was he not a very fit Person to use such Language? Was he not a new Apostle, well qualified to imitate St Paul's Evangelical Salutation?

(57) Ibid. pag. 28.

(58) Ibid. pag. 29.

[P] His Countenance discovered the Fierceness of his Temper.] Thuanus, who observed him so nicely, at Grenoble (59), in the Year 1572, that he was able to delineate him by Memory, so as any one might know him again, gives this Description of him: " Erat " jam totus canus, sed cruda adhuc ac viridi sene- " ctute, Oculis truculentis, naso aquilino, facie ma- " cilenta, sed ruboribus interfusa, ut lutum sanguine " maceratum, quod in P. Corn. Sulla observatum est, " ori inspersum diceres, de cætero corporis habitu " prorsus militari (60). - - - - - He was now quite " grey-headed, but of a vigorous and robust old Age; " he had fierce, sparkling, Eyes, a sharp Nose, a " lean Visage, but flushed; so that you would say, " as

(59) Thuan. de Vita sua, lib. i. pag. 1165.

(60) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

" as was observed in P. Corn. Sulla, that his Face " was ſprinkled with a Mixture of Dirt and Blood; " for the reſt of his bodily Conſtitution, it was al- " together military."

BEAUNE (RENAUD de) Archbiſhop of Bourges, and, afterwards, of Sens, in the Reign of Henry IV. See SAMBLANÇAI (WILLIAM).

BEDA (NOEL), Doctor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris, was the greateſt Clamourer, and the moſt mutinous and factious Man, of his Time. He was a Picard (a), and lived in the Reign of Francis I. He declared himſelf a ſworn Enemy to all thoſe, who deſigned to make Learning flouriſh again (b); and it was on this ſcore, that Eraſmus, and Faber Stapulenſis, incurred his Indignation. He pretended to have found a great many Hereſies in the Paraphraſes of Eraſmus, and publiſhed a Book on that Subject. Eraſmus juſtified himſelf, and, accuſing him in his Turn, convicted him of a great number of Calumnies [A]. Beda, inſtead of proving, that he had been no Calumniator, or, inſtead of confeſſing, that he had not rightly apprehended his Adverſary's Meaning, had recourſe to the Art of Caballing: He read Eraſmus's Books over again; he made new Extracts out of them, as unfaithful as the former [B], and gave them to be cenſured by the Faculty of Divinity; where his

(a) Etaſm. Supputat. Errorum Bedæ, fol. 22.

(b) Beza's Hiſt. Eccl. lib. i. p. 2.

[A] Eraſmus convicted him of a great Number of Calumnies.] See the Book entituled, Supputationes Errorum in cenſuris Natalis Bedæ per Eraſmum Roterodamum. It was printed in the Year 1527. The Reverſe of the Title page will inform you, that Eraſmus found One hundred eighty one Lies, Three hundred and ten Calumnies, and Forty ſeven Blaſphemies, in a pretty ſmall Book of his Cenſurer; and This, without dealing rigorouſly with him; for he was ſpared in many things, which deſerved to be taken notice of. " Ac ne quis queratur iniquam " ſupputationem, non imputavimus illi tam multa " indocte, ſtulte, & ſine mente dicta. Non impu- " tavimus tam multas propoſitiones, quas in cenſuris " omiſit, &c (1). ----- And, leſt any one ſhould " think my Computation unfair, I have not charged " him with many things, unlearnedly, fooliſhly, and " inconſiderately, advanced. I have not imputed to " him the many Propoſitions, omitted by him in his " Cenſures, &c." A Man of Honour, and Conſcience, would have made it his chief Buſineſs to vindicate himſelf againſt ſuch kind of Liſts; but Beda, and Thoſe like him, find their Account better in repeating their firſt Accuſations an hundred times over, juſt as if nothing had been anſwered to Them. If Eraſmus may be credited, his Adverſary's Book diſpleaſed Francis I ſo much, that he prohibited the Sale of it. " Impotenter & infeliciter edito libro ſic debac- " chatus eſt in me, ut Rex Chriſtianiſſimus mox, ubi " rem cognovit, vetuerit codices divendi, haud du- " bie vetiturus excudi, ſi tempeſtive monitus fuiſſet (2). " ----- He railed ſo againſt me, in a weak and un- " fortunate Work, that the moſt Chriſtian King, being " informed of it, immediately prohibited the Sale of " the Book, and, no doubt, would have put a Stop " to the printing of it, had he had timely Informa- " tion." The Book, which Beda publiſhed, at the ſame time, againſt Faber Stapulenſis, was likewiſe prohibited; nevertheleſs, the Copies of theſe two Books were ſuffered to be diſperſed. " Urit homi- " nem, quod liber, quem in Jacobum Fabrum ſcrip- " ſerat, edicto regio ſuppreſſus eſt, etiamſi non eſt " ſuppreſſus (3). —— He is nettled at the Royal " Edict, which ſuppreſſes his Book againſt James Fa- " ber, though, in Reality, it be not ſuppreſſed." " Nec " juſſus premere preſſit, ſed eluſit Regis edictum, cu- " rans ut in Germaniam ſpargeretur, & iſtic clam di- " ſtraheretur (4). ---- Though commanded to ſuppreſs " the Book, he did not obey, but eluded the King's " Edict, contriving to have it diſperſed, and private- " ly ſold, in Germany.

I ſhall ſet down, here, a Paſſage of Mr Chevillier's Book about the Origin of Printing at Paris. " Fran- " cis I --- was ſo exaſperated againſt Dr Noel Beda, " who had refuted the Paraphraſes and Annotations " of Eraſmus, and againſt the Faculty, who had ap- " proved, and cauſed his Book to be printed (5), " that, the Doctor, being gone to the Court about " ſome Buſineſs of his Society, was kept Priſoner " there for a whole Day, not obtaining his Liberty, " but on Condition to appear whenever it ſhould " be required, and a Letter under the Privy-Seal " was ſent to the Parliament, dated from Amboiſe, " the ninth of April 1526, whereby they were or- " dered to put a Stop to the Sale of Beda's Book. " I have read, in a Copy of the Regiſters of that " Court, a Letter of Jodocus Badius, wherein he " ſays, that he had printed Six hundred and fifty " Copies of This Book, many of which had been " ſent into Spain, Italy, Germany, and England; " that he had about fifty compleat Copies left, and " promiſed not to diſtribute them (6). ---- More- " over, Lewis de Berquin, a private Lutheran, and " and a Friend of Eraſmus, with whom he held " Correſpondence by Letters, preſented twelve Pro- " poſitions out of Beda's Book, pretending they con- " tained ſome Impieties, and Blaſphemies, and re- " quired, that the Faculty ſhould be obliged to con- " demn, or prove them by the Holy Scripture. The " King heard this Accuſer favourably; and, the tenth " of July 1527, he ſent the Propoſitions, by the " Biſhop of Bazas, to the Rector, whom he ordered " to cauſe them to be examined by the four Facul- " ties aſſembled together, and not by the Doctors " of Divinity only, quos in hac materiâ ſuſpectos " habebat, as the Regiſter of the Faculty ſays, --- " I find no written Account of what the Judgment " of the four Faculties was (7)." Take notice, that the Divines of Paris had rendered themſelves ſo much ſuſpected of Paſſion and Anger, that the King would not permit them to be Judges in This Cauſe, without joining with them the three other Faculties. It will not be amiſs to ſee in what manner he bridled Theſe Zealots: Here is an Extract of the Letter, which he wrote to the Parliament, the ninth of April 1526. " And, becauſe we are " duly informed, that the ſaid Faculty, and their " Agents, write indifferently againſt every Body, " ſlandering their Honour and Reputation, as is done " againſt Eraſmus, and may endeavour to the like " againſt others, We command you ---- to write " immediately to Thoſe of the ſaid Faculty, or their " Deputies, and to forbid them ----- to write, " compoſe, or print, any thing whatſoever, either " in general, or in particular, before it has been " reviſed and approved by you, or your Deputies, " and debated in a full Court (8)." Theſe Regula- tions did not continue long, though they ſeemed worthy of a general and perpetual Eſtabliſhment.

(1) Eraſmus in the Reverſe of the Title-Page of his Supputat. Errorum in Cenſuris Bedæ.

(2) Eraſm. Epiſt. 73. lib. xix. p. 892, dated Nov. 1527. See alſo Ep. 24. lib. 20. pag. 974. & Epiſt. 4. lib. 24. p. 1281.

(3) Id. Epiſt. 62. lib. 19. pag. 877, dated Nov. 30, 1527.

(4) Id. Ep. 71, lib 39. pag. 886. See alſo Epiſt. 14. lib. 20.

(5) That of Beda againſt Eraſmus. It was printed at Paris, by Jodocus Badius in 1526, in fol.

(6) Chevillier's Origin of Printing at Paris, pag. 174.

(7) Ibid. pag. 175.

(8) Ibid. p. 179, 180.

[B] He made new Extracts out of them, as unfaithful as the former.] The more he found himſelf convicted of Calumny, the more he endeavoured to ruin him, whom he had calumniated. He, therefore, reſolved to try, whether, by producing the ſame Accuſations a-new, under a Form ſomewhat different, he might not make a better Advantage of them. " Urit " hominem ----- quod ego reſpondens & meam " innocentiam & illius impudentiam ſic omnibus ob " oculos poſui, ut in ſpeculo non poſſit evidentius. " Itaque prorſus animo gladiatorio parat vindictam, " non ſe purgans, quod non poteſt, ſed eaſdem ca- " lumnias alia ſpecie rurſus ingerens. ---- Habet " ſexcentas propoſitiones è paraphraſibus decerptas--- " eas ut narrant ad Facultatem defert, & in aliquot " jam audio pronunciatum. Sed quomodo proponit " artifex? Omittit quæ rem explicant, quæ calum- " niam excludunt: addit de ſuo quæ faciunt ad ca- " lumniam: proponit velut à me dicta hoc tempore " quæ dicuntur ab Evangeliſtis aut Apoſtolis, & ad " Eccleſiæ primordia pertinent (9). --- He is vexed, " ſo

(9) Eraſm. Epiſt. 62. lib. 19. pag. 817.

Digitized by Google

his fiery Temper, and his factious and violent Declamations againſt the Novelties of thoſe Times, and againſt Thoſe, who were not zealous enough to ſuppreſs them, gave him a kind of tyrannical Sovereignty [C]. This he abuſed in ſuch a manner, that, at laſt, they were obliged to give him up to the Secular Power, which, to

" to find my Innocence, and his own Impudence, re-
" preſented, in my Anſwer, as faithfully, as in a Glaſs.
" He, therefore, prepares, with the Fury of a Gla-
" diator, to take his Revenge, not by vindicating him-
" ſelf, which is out of his Power, but by repeating
" the ſame Accuſations under another Form. - - - - -
" He has ſelected Six hundred Propoſitions out of my
" Paraphraſes. - - - - - he preſents them, they ſay,
" to the Faculty; and, as I am informed, Judgment
" is given upon ſome of them. But how does This " crafty Fellow propoſe them? He omits whatever
" tends to explain the Matter, or to remove Scandal:
" he adds of his own what contributes to Calumny:
" he propoſes, as if advanced, at preſent, by, me what
" was ſaid by the Evangeliſts, or Apoſtles, and rela-
" ted to the Infancy of the Church." Beda omitted none of the knaviſh Tricks of an unfaithful Maker of Extracts. He ſuppreſſed what was proper to juſtify the Accuſed Perſon, and to diſcover the Calumny: He added what would ſtrengthen his Accuſations; he turned to one Senſe what had been ſaid in another. There is nothing more eaſy, than to cauſe an innocent Opinion to be condemned by ſuch Artifices: See the Seventy third Letter of the nineteenth Book of Eraſmus. He contrived another Artifice; for he made choice of ſome Heads of Accuſation, and, having put them into French, he ſent them to the Court, to incenſe the Great Men, the Women, and all France, in general, againſt Eraſmus (10). He had already alledged the Title of King of France, which Eraſmus gave to the King of England, in dedicating a Book to him (11); I ſay, he had already alledged it, to render this poor Author odious at the Court of the Moſt Chriſtian King. I do not know, whether any one told him to his Face, that he was very much in the wrong, not to endeavour, before all things, to juſtify himſelf; and that it was diſgraceful to leave Eraſmus's Liſts unanſwered, ſuch Liſts as convicted him plainly of groſs Errors, and ſhameful Calumnies. " Quum meæ ſupputationes " ob oculos omnium poſuerint hominis inſcitiam cum " pari malitia conjunctam, non cogitat de purgando, " ſed articulos aliquot decerptos ex acervo calumnia- " rum & Gallicè verſos miſit in aulam regiam. - - - - " Nunc eoſdem articulos vobis ingerit, ſcilicet in " ordinem digeſtos, ut novi videantur, perinde quaſi " nihil ſit reſponſum (12). —— Though my Computa- " tions plainly diſcovered the Ignorance and Malice " of the Man, yet he never thinks of juſtifying him- " ſelf, but, ſelecting ſome Articles out of an Heap of " Calumnies, he turns them into French, and ſends " them to Court. —— Now he repeats the ſame Ar- " ticles to you, drawn up in ſuch an Order, that They " may appear new, as if they had never been re- " plied to." He ſhould have anſwered This without having recourſe to ſo many unfair Practices. Perhaps Eraſmus was the only Perſon, who reproached his Adverſary with This. " Niſi Beda " prorſus diffideret ſuæ cauſæ, reſponderet ſaltem " ad quædam loca tam impudenter calumnioſa va- " naque, ut res manibus, quod aiunt, ſentiri poſſit. " Nunc, hoc omiſſo, quod in primis curatum opor- " tuit, vim parat, concitat facultatem, ut articulorum " turba, ſuffragiis, & autoritate, me opprimat (13). " —— Did not Beda entirely diſtruſt his own Cauſe, " he would at leaſt reply to ſome Paſſages, ſo impu- " dently ſcandalous and falſe, that the thing may be " felt, as the Proverb has it. But, having omitted " This, which was his principal Concern, he now pre- " pares Force, and ſtirs up the Faculty, to oppreſs me " by a Multitude of Articles, by Votes, and by Au- " thority." I ſay, Eraſmus was perhaps the only Perſon, who reproached him after this Manner; for, commonly, They who are not concerned in the Injuſtice of an Inquiſitor, govern themſelves by the Rule of Thinking more, than Speaking.

(10) Idem. Epiſt. 71, lib. 19, pag. 88.

(11) Ibid. Epiſt. 73, lib. 24, pag. 1309.

(12) Id. Epiſt. 71, lib. 19, pag. 886.

(13) Id. Epiſt. 73, lib. 19, pag. 892.

[C] His factious Behaviour —— gave him a Kind of tyrannical Sovereignty, in the Faculty of Divinity.] I do not know, whether any thing is more difficult, than to obtain an equitable Judgment, in a Proceſs of Doctrine, againſt ſuch a Man as Beda. He was naturally violent; he indulged this violent Diſpoſition with the greater Licence, as he covered himſelf with the fair Pretence of the Intereſt of Truth: He boldly defamed his Adverſaries in his Books: He called moderate Perſons baſe Prevaricators, which was a good means to oblige part of the Judges to ſide with him againſt their Conſciences; for there is no pleaſure in expoſing one's ſelf to be defamed by the Aſſeſſors of an Inquiſition: In a word, it was the ready way to tyrannize over the Faculty of Divinity. Here is the moſt faithful Deſcription, which can be ſeen, of the manner, how a Man of Beda's Stamp may extort an Academical Decree, a Synodal Sentence, &c. Michael Angelo never painted more to the Life. " In omni conſeſſu ſemper fuerunt, qui ſtu- " diis & improbitate rerum ſummam ſibi vindicant, " nec temere fit, ut melior pars vincat. Per illos " primùm res privatim decernitur, mox excluduntur " integriores, adhibentur idonei, præfatio commendat " concordiam, adduntur minæ; hic, inquiunt, ap- " parebit, qui ſint Lutheranæ factionis. Si quis dix- " erit aliquid æquius, mox audit à frementibus, Lu- " thero pejor. Sunt ingenia modeſta, quæ malunt " quieſcere, quàm cum talibus contentionem ſuſci- " pere. Sunt qui in gratiam privatam deflectant à " ſua ſententia: ſunt qui metuant aut ſperent aliquid, " eoque premant quod judicant optimum: ſunt qui " non intelligant, quod nudè proponitur: ſunt qui " iiſdem affectibus excæcati ſunt, quibus Beda: ſunt " quos utcunque ſanos clamor ac tumultus aliorum, " ita ut fit, agit in furias. Ita non fit, ſed extorque- " tur ſenatuſconſultum. In quo prodendo rurſus qui " extorſerunt admiſcent affectus ſuos, aliis vel inſciis, " vel conniventibus. Et hoc dicitur collegii decre- " tum (14). —— In every Aſſembly, there have been " Men, who, by dint of Induſtry and Diſhoneſty, gain " a Superiority over the reſt; nor is it without cauſe, " that the better Part prevails. Every Thing is firſt " determined in private by theſe Men; afterwards " Thoſe of Integrity are excluded; ſuch, as are for " their Purpoſe, only admitted; they begin with re- " commending Unanimity, and end with Threats; " Now, ſay they, we ſhall diſcover, who are of the " Lutheran Faction. If any one delivers himſelf with " more Moderation, than uſual, preſently it is mur- " mured, that he is worſe than Luther. There are " moderate Tempers, which chuſe to be quiet, rather " than contend with ſuch Perſons: Others there are, " who ſacrifice their Opinion to private Favour: with " ſome, Hope or Fear prevails, and induces them to " ſtifle what they judge to be beſt: Some do not un- " derſtand what is nakedly propoſed: others are blin- " ded by the ſame Paſſions with Beda: There are, " who, though ſound of Mind, are driven to a Kind " of Madneſs by the Clamour and Noiſe of Others. " Thus a Decree is not made, but extorted. In the " framing of which, They again, who extorted it, " intermix their own Paſſions, the reſt either not per- " ceiving, or conniving at it. And This is called A " Decree of the Faculty." What he ſays in the fourth Fol. of his Supputatio Errorum in cenſuris Bedæ, is, likewiſe, a true Picture. " Deliguntur Deputati ad " id idonei, quos optant ii, quorum autoritas vel " improbitas vincit in collegiis, in quibus frequen- " ter, quod ait Livius, major pars vincit meliorem, " nonnunquam minor ſed importunior ſuperat & ma- " jorem & meliorem. Allegatur Relator. Decerni- " tur. Interim cum ſcribis res eſt. Et hinc inſulci- " untur quædam obiter, quæ vel non ſentiuntur, " vel diſſimulantur. —— Deputies are pitched upon, " proper for the purpoſe, who are choſen by Thoſe, " whoſe Authority, or Knavery, has acquired a Superio- " rity in the Colleges; in which, as Livy obſerves, " The greater Part prevails over the Better, and " ſometimes the Leſs, but more importunate, conquers " the Greater and Better. An Informer is appointed. " A Decree is drawn up. In the mean time Scribes " are employed. Hence ſome things are frequently re- " peated, which are either not perceived, or are con- " nived at." That, which is to be lamented, is, that the Management, deſcribed in this Paſſage, is put in practice, even when the Queſtion is to condemn what deſerves it moſt. See the Complaints made againſt the Cenſure of a Book of Mary d'Agreda (15). Obſerve, that our Beda accompliſhed his Deſign:

(14) Eraſmus, Epiſt. 71, lib. 19, pag. 839.

(15) In Remark [C], of the Article MARY D'AGREDA.

Digitized by Google

to punish him for his high Offences, condemned him to make the Amende honorable, and to confess, at the Gate of the Cathedral Church of Paris, in the Presence of a great Number of People, that he had spoken against the King and the Truth. He was, moreover, condemned to Banishment (c). This happened in 1535. He had very much opposed the Design, which Francis I had, to cause the Sorbonne to give a favourable Opinion for the Divorce of Henry VIII. He was not in the wrong in the main; for all, that was done to corrupt some Universities in France, was a true Mystery of Iniquity; but he ruined his Cause by his Passionate Behaviour, and his mutinous Carriage [E]; and even involved himself in the sign: The Faculty of Divinity censured Erasmus's Book, the Twenty seventh of December, 1527. It is true, This Censure was not made public till four Years after (16).

(c) Beza, Ibid. p. 15.

(16) See Chevillier, Of the Origin of Printing at Paris, pag. 173.

[D] He was condemned to make the Amende honorable.] Bartholomew Latomus, who was then at Paris, wrote this News to Erasmus. "Beda tuus "fecit emendam, ut vocant, honorabilem, cum hac "confessione quod contra veritatem & Regem loquu- "tus esset, quæ verba ante ædem divæ Virginis "magno populi concursu præeunte præcone palam "pronunciavit: ne forte Lutheranum illum fuisse "putes. Sed tamen detinetur adhuc in carcere, de- "trudendus in Monasterium aliquod, ut ferunt, ubi "& quando Regi visum fuerit. —— Your Beda has "made the Amende honourable, as they call it, "with this Confession, that he had spoken against "Truth and the King; which words he pronounced "openly at the Door of the Cathedral of the blessed "Virgin, with a Cryer preceeding him, and before a "great Concourse of People: This I inform you of, "that you may not think he was a Lutheran. How- "ever, he is still kept in Prison, to be thrust into "some Monastery, they say, where and when the "King pleases." This Letter of Latomus, dated the Twenty ninth of June 1535, is the Twenty seventh of the Twenty seventh Book of Erasmus.

Some Facts concerning Beda, in the Affair of the Divorce of Henry VIII.

[E] He spoiled his Cause by his passionate Behaviour.] Messieurs de Bellai, who concerned themselves extreamly in the good Success of Henry VIII's Divorce, speak very ill of Beda in their Letters. "I "have never yet seen This King (of England), nor "those that are in Credit with him, in so fair a way, "as they are at present in; to which what your Di- "vines have done has wonderfully contributed, ac- "cording to the Advice, that is come from the Em- "bassadors. But there is one Beda of That Number, "who is a dangerous Person; and there would be "no need of having many such in a good Com "pany." This is what John du Bellai, Bishop of Bayonne, wrote from London to Mr de Montmorency, the Twenty ninth of December 1529 (17). His Brother, William du Bellai, wrote to Francis I, the ninth of June, 1530, that Beda had committed great Disorders in the Assembly of the Faculty. "During "which Discourses, says he, and whilst their Beadle "was collecting the Names and Opinions of the De- "liberators, to see what the Opinion of the Majority "was, one of the said Gentlemen, our Masters, "stood up, and took the Roll out of his Hand, and "tore it; and thereupon, they all arose in great "Disorder and Tumult, some beginning to cry out, "that they had done and spoke enough about it, and "that the greatest and soundest Party was of Opinion "to deliberate no more about it, without writing to "you, Sir, and to the Pope. In this manner the "Company departed; and the King of England's "Embassadors, who were walking in a Gallery, see- "ing them come out in such disorder, and with "such a noise, and hearing all the Discourse, which "passed between them, retired very much displeased "to their Houses, putting a very ill Construction "upon this Business. And they told me, they knew "very well heretofore, what were the secret Practi- "ces of Beda, and his Accomplices, to render the "Consultation such as they had found it (18)." Du Bellai adds, I. That, at his Request, the first President sent for Beda, Barthelemy, Tabary, and some other Ringleaders of this Discord and Faction, and made them promise, that they would meet again the next Day. II. That the same first President "made "the said Beda come to him in the Church of our "Lady, about another Circumstance, and remonstrated "to him his Abilities, and the Inconvenience, to which "he might put the King, and was so urgent with "him, that he swore expressly, not only not to hin- "der the King's Letters from being obeyed, but to "use his Endeavour, as if it were for his own Life, to "make the thing pass without noise or scandal (19)." III. That, though, "at first, he would not trust "too much to this Promise, forasmuch as, notwith- "standing another Promise formerly made to the "great Master, the said Beda had begun this Faction, "without which the Business might have been deter- "mined without any trouble to the King. Never- "theless, seeing the first President would trust to "Beda for it, he (du Bellai) would not write again "to the King about it." The Letter of the fifteenth of August of the same Year is curious. Du Bellai informs Mr de Montmorency, I. That the Business "had been carried on by such wicked Intrigues, "that, says he, I have often seen the King's Business "in danger to suffer greatly by it; and I assure you, "that, if I had not daily made use of the Assistance "of the first President, who, besides the Authority "of his Place, has great Credit with the said Beda, "and his Accomplices, such an inconveniency would "have happened by the Attempt of a foolish, I dare "not say an ill, Man, that the Ability of a thousand "wise Men would hardly have remedied it without "extraordinary Trouble; and perhaps any other "Judge, not infected with the Persuasion, which I "perceive in the said President, that the before men- "tioned Beda, when he speaks Theologically, is "infallible and impeccable, would have called That "a Mortal Sin, which the said President can hardly "believe to be a Venial Sin: However, the King "has appointed Commissioners to enquire into the "Abuses and Insolencies of the said Beda, and his "Accomplices." II. That the English Embassadors had obtained an Order, from Francis I, to the Beadle of the Faculty of Divinity, to give an authentic Duplicate of some Act signed with Beda's own Hand; and that they had addressed themselves to the King, because to have it "by the leave of the Faculty, was "to go back to A, B, C, considering the Tyranny here- "tofore usurped by the said Beda, and his Adhe- "rents." III. That the first President (20) "is so "much persuaded of the Sanctity of Beda, that he "cannot believe the Faults he sees in him, which "are such, to speak the Truth, that, if I had com- "mitted such in self, and had a dozen Heads, I "should have deserved to lose them all; as any Body "may see, that will read the Legend, which the "two Presidents, le Viste, and Pocellot, will make "of them. Nevertheless, My Lord, I do not con- "clude, that the said Beda is the only wicked Per- "son; for he has Companions enough, that would "be glad to give the King occasion to do some- "thing hastily against them, to acquire the Name of "Martyrs with the Mob. I had often heard of "their malicious Undertakings under the Title and "Colour of Honesty and Hypocrisy; but I could "never have believed the tenth Part, if I had not "seen it (21)." These words are worth their weight in Gold; for they wonderfully represent the Character of many of those turbulent Zealots, who cause a thousand Disorders in a State, by the desire they have to domineer over the Multitude, and who willingly expose themselves to Persecution, that the People, interesting themselves in their Disgrace, may make an Insurrection, and finish what their Intrigues have begun. The Bishop of Bayonne, in his Letters to Mr de Montmorency, confirms the greatest Part of what his Brother had written; "The Business of the "King of England, says he (22), was proposed at "Paris, after it could be deferred no longer; Beda "played the Devil there, and the Assembly broke up "without coming to any Conclusion; the King will "have them begin again, and, if it be necessary, to "send

(17) See the Hist. of the Divorce of Henry VIII, by Mr le Grand. Tom. III, p. 421.

(18) Ibid. p. 455, 406.

(19) Ibid. pag. 468.

(20) It was Lizet, whom Beza derided so much. William du Bellai represents him here as a weak Person, and unfit for the Office he bore.

(21) Le Grand's Divorce of Henry VIII, Tom. III, pag. 473.

(22) In a Letter, dated June 1st, 1530, apud le Grand, ubi supra, pag. 489.

Digitized by Google

the Crime of Perjury. He had much Credit with the firſt Preſident Lizet (d), a Man much more fit to act the part of a bad Controvertiſt, as he did before his Death, than to be at the Head of the firſt Parliament of France. Beda was one of the chief Promoters of the Death of Lewis de Berquin, as we ſhall relate in the Article of That Proteſtant Martyr. In general, there was no one in Paris, who ſhewed more Violence againſt Thoſe, who are called Heretics, than himſelf (e); and This is the reaſon, why Beza (f) aſcribes the Puniſhment, which was inflicted on Beda, of being confined to Mount St Michel, where he died the eighth of January, 1537 (g), rather to the juſt Judgment of God, than to That of Men. He had been Principal of the College of Montaigu. You will find, below, the Titles of his Works [F].

(d) See Remark [E], and Eraſmus, Epiſt. 56, lib. 3, pag. 1941.

(e) Beza, ubi ſupra, pag. 7, 14.

(f) Ibid. pag. 15.

(g) See Romuald, Journ. Chronol. Tom. I. pag. 132, where he ſpeaks particularly of the Eſteem, which the Faculty of Divinity had for Beda.

" ſend him the ſaid Beda. —— I was told, that the " Gentlemen of the Faculty were gone into the " Conclave, to re-aſſume the Buſineſs relating to the " King of England, Beda, Barthelemy, and their " Adherents, being the Authors and Promoters of it, " who, after ſo many Alarms on their Part, as you " have heard, have no ſooner been out of the Preſence of their Dean —— but they have, of their " own particular Authority, undertaken to break " what was generally done and concluded in ſo great " an Aſſembly (23). —— You know, my Lord, " that I formerly told you, that Beda was ſuſpected " of a Deſign to get the Regiſter falſified by the " Beadle; and I would not give him time to increaſe " That Suſpicion, rather than leſſen it (24)." By Theſe Strokes of the Pencil we may know the true Character of This Perſonage.

(23) Letter, dated Auguſt 11, 1530, ibid. p. 491.

(24) Letter, of Aug. 15, ibid. p. 502.

[F] The Titles of his Works.] De unica Magdalena contra Jacobum Fabrum & Judocum Clichtoveum, at Paris 1519. Contra commentarios ejuſdem Fabri in Evangelia & Epiſtolas libri II. & contra Eraſmi paraphraſes liber I. at Paris 1526. Apologia adverſus clandeſtinos Lutheranos, at Paris 1529. Apologia pro filiabus & nepotibus Annæ contra eumdem Fabrum. He is thought to be the Author of the Reſtitutio in integrum benedictionis cerei paſchalis (25).

(25) Aubert. Miræus, de Scriptor. Seculi. xvi, p. 21.

BEDELL (WILLIAM), Biſhop of Kilmore, in Ireland, was born in the Year 1570, at Black Nottey, in Eſſex. He ſtudied at Cambridge, where he took his Bachelor's Degree, in the Year 1599. He left That Univerſity to exerciſe the Miniſtry at St Edmondſbury, in Suffolk, which he did very zealouſly, without any Interruption, 'till he was made Chaplain to the Embaſſador, whom King James ſent to the Republic of Venice (a). During his eight Years abode at Venice, Bedell contracted a very intimate Friendſhip with Father Paul, and, when he returned into England, he brought the famous Mark Antony de Dominis along with him, as alſo ſeveral Manuſcripts, of Father Paul's, and, among others, The Hiſtory of the Council of Trent. He returned again to St Edmondſbury, and, amidſt the Functions of the Sacred Miniſtry, he tranſlated into Latin The Hiſtory of the Interdiction, and That of the Inquiſition, which Father Paul had given him; and dedicated them to the King. He tranſlated, alſo, the two laſt Books of The Hiſtory of the Council. In the Year 1615, he was provided with a conſiderable Benefice, in the Dioceſe of Norwich, which he poſſeſſed twelve Years, applying himſelf very much to his Duty, and caring but little to make a noiſe in the World. He was ſo little known, that no one could give any Account of him to Diodati, a Divine of Geneva [B]. Nevertheleſs, his Reputation reached into Ireland, where, with a general Conſent, he was nominated to the Headſhip of Trinity College (b). He would not accept of This Place, without the Command of his Superiors; and, being commanded to do it by King James, he joyfully obeyed, and diſcharged the Duties of That Employment to Admiration. Two Years after, he was promoted to the Biſhoprics of Kilmore and Ardagh, in the Province of Ulſter, being, then, in his Fifty ninth Year (c). He found Theſe two Dioceſes in great Diſorder, and was very active in reforming Abuſes. He began with the Plurality of Benefices, and, to ſet a good Example, he reſigned the Biſhopric of Ardagh, and kept only That of Kilmore. He made ſome Regulations as to (a) It was Henry Wotton.

(b) This College is at Dublin.

(c) It muſt be, then, in the Year 1629.

[A] Bedell contracted a very intimate Friendſhip with Father Paul.] The Intimacy, which This Famous Venetian Divine had with William Bedell, was without any reſerve; he diſcovered his Heart to him, which was more imbued with the Faith of the Reformed Churches, than with That of the Council of Trent. Nothing, perhaps, more clearly evinces Father Paul's reformed Faith, than the Particulars, which Dr Burnet publiſhed in the Life of our Biſhop of Kilmore: I ſhall ſpeak at large of it in another place (1). I ſhall only obſerve here, that Father Paul aſſiſted Bedel in learning the Italian Language, and that Bedell helped the other to learn the Engliſh Tongue. Father Paul confeſſed, that he received from him ſome other Inſtructions, which were more conſiderable: See, hereafter, the Remark [H]. I add, that Bedell tranſlated the Liturgy of the Church of England into Italian; and that he had the Liberty of conferring with Father Paul when, and as often as he would, even when none but Perſons known to him were ſuffered to come near him, by reaſon of the wounds, which That Father had received (2).

(1) In the Article SARPI.

(2) Dr Burnet, in the Life of William Bedell.

[B] No one could give any Account of him to Diodati.] What I ſay here would be no Encomium of a Perſon of little Merit; but, as to our Bedell, who was an able Divine, and a Miniſter, who performed his Office ſo worthily, one cannot ſay of him, that he was little known, without extolling to the Skies, at the very ſame time, his Modeſty, Humility, Diſintereſtedneſs, and ſeveral other truly Paſtoral Virtues, and very rarely to be found. Where are there Churchmen of great Abilities, who do not endeavour to make a Noiſe in the World, but chiefly to reach the Ears of Princes, and Favourites? Let us ſet down Dr Burnet's Remark; " Diodati, ſays he " (3), That famous Divine of Geneva, being come " into England, could meet with no one, who " could give him any tidings of him, though he was " very well acquainted with the Clergy. He was " much ſurpriſed, that ſuch an extraordinary Man, " ſo much admired in Venice, ſo tenderly cheriſhed " by Perſons of the greateſt Merit, ſhould be ſo " little known in his own Country: he had loſt all " hopes of ſeeing him, when, meerly by accident, " he met him in the Streets of London, where they " expreſſed their great Surprize and Joy to each " other. Diodati preſented him afterwards to " the learned Dr Morton, Biſhop of Durham, whom " he informed of the particular Eſteem, which Father Paul had for him; and That Prelate gave " him a very favourable Reception."

(3) Burnet, ibid. pag. 35.

[C] He

Digitized by Google

to Residence: He was very zealous for the Conversion of the Roman Catholics, and, thinking, that nothing could contribute more to it, than a Translation of the Scriptures into the Irish Language [C], he caused it to be undertaken. This Business met with many Obstacles. He expressed a great Zeal for the Re-union of the Lutherans and Calvinists [D]. He did not approve of Those, who made use of a passionate Stile against Popery [E], and did not think them fit to undeceive Those, who erred. He took a quite different Method: He was a Man of an Apostolic Charity;

[C] He set on foot a Translation of the Scriptures into the Irish Language.] He had learned That Language; "and, though he was too old to speak it, "yet he understood it so well, that he made a com- "plete Grammar of it, which, it is said, was the first (4) Ibid. pag. 119. "that ever was made (4)." In favour of the new Converts, "he caused the Common-Prayers to be "read every Sunday in Irish, and assisted at them "himself. —— The New Testament, and the Li- "turgy, had been already translated into Irish; but, "judging, that the Old ought no longer to remain "untranslated, he sought for some one, who was (5) Ibid. pag. 120. "Master of that Language, to translate it (5); —— "and, casting his Eyes upon one King," aged about seventy Years, he put him into Orders, provided him with a Living, and desired him to set about it. This Person, not understanding the Oriental Languages, was obliged to translate it from the English; His Work was revised by Bedell, who, after having compared the Irish Translation with the English, compared the latter with the Hebrew, with the LXX, and with the Italian Version of Diodati. When This Work was finished, he resolved to be at the Charge of the Impression; but his Design was stopped: Advice was given to the Lord Lieutenant, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, that it would be a shameful thing for a Nation to publish a Bible, translated by such a des- (6) Ibid. pag. 124. picable Man, as King was (6). There was a Clergy- man, who obtained the Benefice of This old Man, and thrust him out of it with Ignominy and Violence (7) P. 125. (7). He was not only deprived of it, but also at- tacked in his Reputation. "It is usual, says Dr Bur- (8) P. 129. "net (8), for those, who commit an Injustice, to "justify it by another, to load their Adversaries "with Calumnies, and frequently to repeat their Ac- "cusations, in order to prepossess the People against "them, and to oppress them so much, that they "may not be able to obtain any Redress, but entire- "ly sink under such a weight of Malice." Bedell used all his endeavours to prevent the Oppression of This poor Translator, and prepared Matters to have the Irish Bible printed in his own House; but the Troubles followed; and he did not live long enough to execute his Resolution. The Manuscript was not lost; for, by the Diligence of the famous Christian Philosopher, Mr Boyle (9), they were printing of it, (9) P. 131. when Dr Burnet published the Life of our Bishop (10).

(10) That is, in the Year 1685.

[D] He expressed a great Zeal for the Re-union of the Lutherans and Calvinists.] He was not content- ed to impart his Thoughts by Letters to Mr Durry, but did also assist him in the Expence, he was obliged to be at, to negotiate this Union, and gave him an annual Pension of Twenty five Pistols, which he paid (11) Burnet, in the Life of William Bedell, pag. 132. regularly to his Correspondent in London (11). This Mr Durry's Name in Latin is Duræus: The pains, he took, to execute his Project of Re-union, are almost incredible. I believe, without making much haste, he took as many Journies, as the Jesuit Matthieu, who was called The Postillion of the League. They may be compared in some things; but they dif- fer in many others. One was the Minister of a League, which was already formed, and which, be- ing actually in Arms, had none but violent Designs. The other was the Minister of a meer notional Con- federacy, which was only to be built on the Mo- deration of Men. So that it is no wonder, if one of them rode Post, and the other travelled at his leisure. There is, among the Treatises, which Du- (12) This Book is entitu- led, Irenicorum tra ctatuu nProdromus. ræus published in 1662 (12), William Bedell's Opi- nion on the Questions, which the Undertaker of the Re-union had proposed to the Divines. This Pre- late made it appear, that he was fit for such an Undertaking. A great Number of Lutherans, being settled at Dublin, refused to communicate with the Church of Ireland. They were summoned before the Archbishop's Council; They answered, that the German Divines did not find, that the Presence of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist was taught, con- formably to their Doctrine, by the Church of Ire- land. The Archbishop sent them to the Bishop of Kilmore; who gave them such a solid Answer, that the German Divines, who saw it, advised the Luthe- rans of Dublin to communicate with the Church of That Place. Dr Burnet says upon This, that the Church of England has given no positive Definition of the manner how the Body of Christ is present in the Sacrament: So that Men of different Opinions may practise the same Worship, without being obliged to declare themselves, and without any Presumption, that they act against their Belief (13). I have always (13) Burnet, ubi supra, pag. 133. heard it said, that there would be no better way to prevent Schisms, and Disputes, than to avoid Par- ticulars, and to allow of as General Formularies as may be.

[E] He disapproved of those, who made use of a pas- sionate Stile against Popery.] He preached one Day, among other things, as follows: "Give me leave, "my Brethren, to speak my Thoughts freely; I (14) This Prelate touches upon the two greatest Faults of Those, who manage Con- troversies. The one is, that they will rail too much at their Ad- versaries; the other is, that they do not faithfully repre- sent the Opinions, which they refute: They dissemble the strong Rea- sons of the opposite Party; they stick to false In- terpretations, &c. "am very sensible, it will displease many Persons; "but That shall not hinder me from discharging my "Conscience; and I hope Men of Understanding "will not take it amiss. I have long ago been of "Opinion, that the manner, in which many Per- "sons treat their Adversaries, in their Writings, "and in their Sermons, deserves Censure; They "give a loose to their Pens, and Tongues, and what "they say is only a Series of Calumnies, and in- "jurious Language; They think they have done "Wonders, when they imitate their Enemies, or "when they surpass them in them in That Way, in "which He, who does the best, does, really, the "worst; they endeavour to justify their Proceedings "by the Text; Answer a Fool according to his Folly, "without considering the other Text, Answer not a "Fool according to his Folly, least thou become like "unto him. But they are, sometimes, the more in- "excusable, because, not understanding their Ad- "versaries Opinion, or, at least, disguising, and making "it more unreasonable, than it is, the Proofs, which "they bring, have nothing that is solid, and con- "sist only in passionate Words about ambiguous "Terms, which each Party takes in a different (15) These Words of Jesus Christ were the Text on which the Bishop preached. "Sense (14). —— Let us not envy the Papists, and "other Heretics, the Glory of outdoing our Adver- "saries in railing; because the more one excels in "this Art, the more one is remote from the great "Pattern of Charity, who says, Learn of me, for I "am meek and lowly in Heart (15). - - - - - It is not "with sharp and cutting Expressions, but with solid "Reasons, that Error is to be confuted. - - - - - - - "It is our Duty to confound Error, not to cavil, or "to rail. It is said, that Alexander, having heard "one of his Soldiers scoff at his Enemy Darius, re- "primanded him smartly in these Words; Friend, "I listed thee to fight against Darius, and not to treat "him unworthily, as you do (16). But, in truth, "Jesus Christ, our Captain, is but little obli- "ged to Those, who treat their Adversaries in this "manner; and it is very probable, that, if he was yet "on Earth, he would say to them; Preachers of my "Gospel, I am willing you should refute Popery, and "that you should oppose my Enemy Antichrist, and "all the Sects, which fight under his Banner; but I "have not called you to give them ill Words. These "are my Sentiments concerning the manner, in which "we ought to treat Those of the Romish Commu- "nion: Perhaps they do not conform to the Practice "of Luther, Calvin, and some other great Men. "But our Conduct must not be regulated according "to the Example of others: They were Men; and "perhaps they had the failure of too warm a "Zeal (17)." (16) I be- lieve the Bi- shop mistakes one for ano- ther here: It was Mem- non, a Gene- ral of Dari- us, who said so to a Sol- dier, that slandered A- lexander. Plutarch Apophth. pag. 174. But, as the Ancients are not always uniform in applying these kind of Sayings to the same Per- sons, the Bi- shop might, perhaps, have read what he says.

This is a small part of the Extract, which is given us of This Sermon, in This Prelate's Life. He, who gave it, informs us, that This Sermon was preached a little after the Difference, which happened in the (17) Burnet's Life of Wil- liam Bedell, p. 145, 147.

House

Digitized by Google

Charity; and it was his kind Uſage of the Papiſts, which, with the ſpecial Protection of GOD, ſaved him from their Fury [F], when they made ſuch a Maſſacre in Ireland, in the Year 1641. His Houſe, where ſeveral Perſons had taken Sanctuary, was ſpared for two Months; and, at laſt, when the Papiſts reſolved to employ Force againſt Thoſe Perſons, they had ſuch a Regard for him, as to deſire him to ſend them away; which if he did not, they declared, that they had Orders to ſeize him. But he choſe rather to give himſelf up to the Diſcretion of the Rebels, than to put thoſe out of his Houſe, who came for Refuge there. So they took him Priſoner, with his two Sons, and brought them, with thoſe few Perſons, that were in his Houſe, to the Caſtle of Lochwater. He had the Liberty to preach in his Priſon; and, a little while after, he was ſet at Liberty, with his two Sons, by an exchange of Priſoners. He was carried to the Houſe of an Iriſh Miniſter, and died within a few Days (d), with the moſt Chriſtian Diſpoſitions, that a true Prelate can have. His End anſwered the good Life he had led; he was the greateſt Example, that theſe latter Ages can parallel with the holy Paſtors of the Primitive Church (e). The Iriſh Catholics, whoſe Hatred for the Proteſtants, and Spirit of Rebellion, inſpires them with more Fierceneſs, than the Nature of their Climate, and Education, admired his Virtue, and gave him very ſignal Marks of their Reſpect, on the Day of his Burial [G]. His Learning was great [H]; and he would have teſtified it to the Public by a greater Number of Books [I], if he had printed all Thoſe, which he compoſed. They were almoſt all loſt; for the Rebels ſcattered his Papers, and his whole Library. He was Seventy two Years of Age, when he died, and was yet very vigorous; neither did he uſe Spectacles (f).

(d) Feb. 7, 1642.

(e) It is what Dr Burnet, Biſhop of Saliſbury, ſhews very particularly, and with great Eloquence, in the Life of this Prelate. See the following Citation.

(f) Taken from his Life, compoſed by Dr Burnet; tranſlated into French by L. D. M, and printed at Amſterdam, 1687, in 12mo.

Houſe of Commons in Ireland, where there were many Papiſts. Dr Burnet's Judgment upon it is well worthy of attention. He gives us, ſays he (18), ſuch a fine Method of handling Controverſies, that the Advice will, I think, be found to be as extraordinary, as it is little practiſed.

(18) P. 143.

[F] It was his kind uſage of the Papiſts, which ſaved him from their Fury.] Their Bitterneſs, (I make uſe of the Biſhop of Saliſbury's Words) was not ſtrong enough to reſiſt the Sweetneſs, which he had ſhewed on all Occaſions, and which made them ſay very often, that He ſhould be the laſt Engliſhman, who ſhould be driven out of Ireland. He was the only Perſon in the County of Cavan, who was not diſturbed in his Houſe, nor in the Church-yard, or Church, which were full of poor perſecuted People (19). When the Rebels ſent him Word to diſmiſs all thoſe, who ſheltered themſelves under his Roof, they added, That, as he had done good to ſeveral People, and had not diſobliged any Body, they had more regard for him, than for any Engliſhman in Ireland (20). See the following Remark.

(19) P. 181.

(20) P. 205.

[G] The Iriſh Catholics - - - - - - - gave him very ſignal Marks of their Reſpect, on the Day of his Burial.] The titular Biſhop of Kilmore had taken poſſeſſion of the Biſhopric: It was neceſſary to deſire his leave, that Biſhop Bedell ſhould be buried in his Church-yard: He alledged, at firſt, that it was holy Ground, which ought not to be prophaned by ſuch Burials; but, at laſt, he granted all that was deſired, and, accordingly, on the ninth of February, 1642, "the "Body of the deceaſed was buried near that of his "Wife, as he had deſired in his Life-time. On this "ſad Occaſion, the Iriſh would pay him extraordi- "nary Honours; The Chief of the Rebels drew up "his Troops, and made them accompany the Corps "in great Ceremony, from Mr Shereden's Houſe, to "the Church yard of Kilmore; They would alſo have "had Mr Clogy (21), perform the Office, according "to the Liturgy of the Church of England; but, "though the Gentry would have paid him this Com- "pliment, it was not thought fit to make uſe of it, "for fear of ſtirring up the Rage of the Mob, which "was already too much exaſperated. When the "Body was laid in the Ground, they fired a Vol- "ley, and cried out in Latin, requieſcat in pace ul- "timus Anglorum, — Peace be with the laſt of the "Engliſh; and, indeed, they had very often pro- "teſted, that they had more Conſideration for Be- "dell, than for any of the other Engliſh Biſhops, "and that he ſhould be the laſt that ſhould be remo- "ved from them (22)."

(21) He had been Miniſter of Cavan, and had lived a long time with William Bedell. It is he, who furniſhed Dr Burnet with Memoirs, to write this Prelate's Life.

(22) Burnet, ibid. pag. 222, 223.

[H] His Learning was great.] Father Paul declared, that he had learned more from William Bedell, in all the ſpeculative, and poſitive, parts of Divinity, than from any other Perſon he had converſed with (23). This ſame Father had read the New Teſtament in Greek, with ſo much Exactneſs, that he had made Notes upon each Word; but he found, by Bedell's Criticiſms, that he had not well underſtood certain Paſſages; and was very much pleaſed to learn the true Senſe of Them, which This learned Engliſhman ſhewed him (24). Marc Antony de Dominis deſired the ſame Doctor to examine the ten Books of his Eccleſiaſtical Republic. "Bedell corrected many Miſ- "applications of Scripture, and many Quotations of "the Fathers, in it; for That Prelate, being alto- "gether ignorant of the Greek Tongue, muſt needs "have committed a great many Faults;" the Number of which was ſo great, that Bedell could not correct them all (25). He obſerved ſome Miſtakes, in the Works of the learned Uſher, Archbiſhop of Armagh. "They were neither many, nor of any great Mo- "ment; but, becauſe they did not anſwer the un- "common Exactneſs of That great Man, he thought "he was obliged to point them out to him: which "he did; and the Archbiſhop received his Cenſure "with his uſual Mildneſs, and Humility (26)." He ſtudied much, "and chiefly the original Text of "Scripture, of which he had ſo often read the "Hebrew, and the Greek of the LXX, that he had "them as fluent as the Engliſh Tranſlation (27)."

(23) Burnet, ubi ſupra, pag. 8. Wotton atteſts this Fact, in a Letter, which he wrote to the King of England, inſerted in the Life of William Bedell. pag. 37, 38.

(24) Burnet, ibid. pag. 10, 11.

(25) Ibid. pag. 11, 12.

(26) Ibid. pag. 230.

(27) Ibid. pag. 227.

[I] He had compoſed a greater Number of Books.] I have ſaid, in the Body of this Article, that he publiſhed a Latin Tranſlation of ſome of Father Paul's Works. I muſt obſerve, at preſent, that Marc Antony de Dominis was much better ſatisfied with Bedell's Tranſlation, than with That of Newton. The latter tranſlated the two firſt Books of The Hiſtory of the Council of Trent; and the other tranſlated the two laſt (28). Bedell publiſhed a Book of Controverſy in the Year 1624, and dedicated it to the Prince of Wales. This Book was a Confutation of ſome of Wadſworth's Letters. This Wadſworth, Fellow Student, and Chamber-Fellow of Bedell, was provided with a Benefice in the ſame Dioceſe with Bedell, and was ſent into Spain, about the ſame time, that Bedell was ſent to Venice (29). I ſay, he was ſent into Spain, in the ſame quality of Chaplain, and to teach the Infanta Engliſh, when her Marriage had been agreed upon with King James. He ſuffered himſelf to be perſuaded to forſake his Religion and his Country, and publiſhed ſome Letters, containing the Motives of his Change (30). Bedell confuted them. It is believed, that his Anſwer had ſome Effect on Wadſworth's Heart, though it did not induce him to make an outward Profeſſion of the Reformed Religion. It is thought ſo, becauſe the Son of this new Catholic came to Bedell at Kilmore, and told him, "That his "Father had ordered him to return him Thanks for "the Pains he had taken to inſtruct him; that he "read his Book continually, and he had heard him "ſay ſometimes, after the reading of it, that he would "make his eſcape." Bedell mentions a Diſcovery, which was made, of the Number of the Beaſt, in the Inſcription of a Theſis, dedicated to Pope Paul V (31). It was found, that the numeral Letters of theſe Words, Paulo V. Vice Deo made 666; but he does not pretend

(28) This is what I find in the French Life of Mr Bedell, pag. 25, 26. Now This is to ſuppoſe, that This Work of Father Paul is divided into but four Books; but all the Editions that I have ſeen conſiſt of eight Books.

(29) I ſet down the very Words of the Life of William Bedell; tho' I found ſome difficulty in them; for it ſeems there are above twelve Years between Wotton's Embaſſy to Venice, and the Treaty of Marriage of the Prince of Wales with the Infanta.

(30) Burnet, ibid. p. 4, 5.

(31) Ibid. pag. 14.

Digitized by Google

pretend to be the Author of the Discovery: However he was so (32), and he did Father Paul, and other Divines of the Republic of Venice, a very great Pleasure, when he communicated it to them (33). He wrote a very long Treatise on these two Questions; Where was the Reformed Church before Luther; and what was the Fate of Those, who died in the Bosom of the Church of Rome, before the Reformation? He was resolved to publish it; and the Learned Archbishop Usher often pressed him to it: The Irish Rebellion occasioned the Loss of This Work (34), and of a great Collection of critical Expositions on different Passages of the Scripture, together with his Sermons, and learned Paraphrases on all the Epistles and Gospels of the Day, according to the Liturgy of the Church of England (35). The Irish seized on them, and the other Manuscripts, whereof there was a great Chest full; only his great Hebrew Manuscript was fortunately taken out of the Hands of these profane Men, and is preserved in the Library of Emanuel College. This good Luck happened by means of an Irishman, whom he had converted, who, mixing with the Rebels, brought away This Manuscript, and some other Books, with him. One would be apt to believe, that it is the same, which is mentioned in the Twenty fifth Page. Now it is said there, that Bedell bought, of Rabbi Leo, chief Chacham of the Synagogue - - - - the fine Manuscript of the Old Testament, which he gave to Emanuel College; though he had a great Value for it; for it is said, that it cost him it's Weight in Silver.

(32) Wotton assured King James of it. ibid.

(33) Ibid. pag. 13.

(34) Ibid. pag. 229.

(35) Ibid. pag. 227.

BEGAT (JOHN), Counsellor in the Parliament of Dijon, was deputed to Charles IX, in the Year 1563, to present an Address to His Majesty, against the Edict, which granted the Protestants the Exercise of their Religion, after the first Civil-War. The States of Burgundy were resolved not to suffer the Assemblies of the Protestants, notwithstanding That Edict; and, to make the Court approve of it, Begat was sent thither, who spoke vigorously on That Subject. Afterwards he published an Apology, wherein he pretends to shew, by several Arguments, that Two Religions ought not to be suffered in one State, and that Toleration is offensive to GOD, and against the Public Peace. The Protestants published a Writing against it (a) [A].

(a) Ex Thuano, lib. 36, pag. 730, ad Ann. 1564.

[A] He published an Apology - - - - the Protestants published a Writing against it.] I have not yet seen any Catalogue of Authors, who make any mention of This Work of Begat; which made me resolve to find it out: besides, we shall see, in this Article, the little Regard, they had then in France, for the Royal Authority. The Province of Burgundy did not only refuse to comply with the King's Pleasure; but decided, after a mature Deliberation, in the Assembly of the States, that they would not obey his Will. When such things as these are represented to the French, since the Revolution, which happened in England, in the Year 1688, they know not what to say, and could wish, that the Proofs of these Recriminations were no where to be found. I have the Remonstrance of Begat, in Latin, printed at Cologne, in the Year 1564. It is entitled, Responsum conventus trium ordinum ducatus Burgundiæ de edicto pacis nuper in causa religionis factæ, ad Christianissimum Galliarum Regem, Carolum Nonum, anno 1563. I wonder it should be so little known; for it was translated into several Languages, as I have just now seen, in the Paradoxical Miscellanies of Peter de St Julien. The Passage is so curious, that it deserves to be produced entire. "To speak of a more "recent Affair, when the Parliament of Burgundy, "assembled at Dijon, deputed Mr John Begat, Coun- "sellor in the same, to lay before the King the "Reasons, why That Court had not proceeded to "the Publication of the Edict of January (1), (where "the said Begat spoke so well, and so learnedly, "that no other Remonstrance was better received "in our Time: which may be judged so, because "the same French Remonstrance has been translated "into Latin, Italian, Spanish, and High Dutch) it "happened, that the said Begat fell into private Dis- "course with the Chancellor de l'Hospital, on the "same Subject; and, as the Counsellor insisted up- "on the Privileges of Burgundy, and said, that the "King had sworn, and promised, to observe them, "the said Sieur de l'Hospital (as knavish, as a Chan- "cellor) replied, that it did not belong to Subjects "to act against their King ex sponsu (they were his "Words); and that all Contracts of Sovereign Princes "with their Subjects bind them no longer, than "they think fit (2)."

(1) I believe he is mistaken, and that he confounds the Edict of January, 1561, with the Edict of Pacification, of the Month of March, 1563.

(2) Peter de St Julien, Dean of Chalons, Paradoxical Miscellanies, p. 123.

BELLAI, an illustrious and ancient Family in Anjou, which has produced some great Men. See, in Moreri, a long Series of the Genealogy of the du Bellai's, and a pretty large Account of the Persons of That Name, who have most distinguished themselves. I shall avoid Repetitions, as much as I can, in speaking of William du Bellai, and of his Brother John du Bellai: I mean, that, as far as can be done, I shall omit what Moreri has already mentioned.

(a) He founded the Branch of Langei.

BELLAI (WILLIAM du), Lord of Langei, was Son of Lewis du Bellai (a), and of Margaret de la Tour-Landri. He did Francis I great Services, both by his Courage, and Parts; he was no less a good Captain, than an able Negotiator; and his Pen was as good, as his Tongue, and his Sword. His Dexterity in penetrating into the Intrigues and Designs of his Enemies, by his Spies, was surprizing. See, in Moreri, what Brantome said of him, and add to it, what I relate below [A]. He was [A] His Address, in penetrating into the Designs of his Enemies, was surprizing: add to it what I relate below.] Francis de Billon observes, that the Lord of Langey never began the Execution of any Military Undertaking, before he had made use of his Pen to discover the State of things (1). He reports, afterwards, these Words of Charles V. Langey's Pen has fought more against me, than all the barbed Lances of France (2). He commends This Lord's Secretaries very much; for, after having spoken of a Person, who offered Two thousand Crowns of Gold, in vain, for a Copy of a Letter, which a Cardinal had written to Francis I, he adds, that This "Person went away confounded, as having presumed, "that he had to do with such good Merchants, as Those "of the late Marquis du Guast, whom a Secretary "of the famous Langey (whose Name was Landry), "by the Help of Money, sounded to the very Bot- "tom of their Thoughts: which he did out of Af- "fection to a Master, who, in Case of Necessity, "had a voluntary Sacrifice made him of the Hearts "of his Secretaries, and other Gentlemen: Hence "it is, that The Saying, Langey's Education, is still "used in many Places, to his Praise, and to put "France in Mind of the serviceable Persons of his "Time (3)." If the Author, who has spoken so much of the great Effects of the Pen, and alledged so many Examples of it, had known what I have now quoted, he would have adorned his Work, entituled Arma Anserina, with it (4).

(1) Billon, in his Impregnable Fort of the Honour of the Female Sex. Fol. 236, verso, Edit. of Paris, 1555, in 4to.

(2) Id. ibid. fol. 237.

(3) Id. ibid. fol. 245, verso.

(4) Printed at Leyden, in 1679, in 12mo.

[B] He

Digitized by Google

was one of the chief Springs, which moved ſome Univerſities of France to vote according to the Paſſions of Henry VIII, King of England, when That Prince reſolved, by way of Divorce, to quit his Wife, and be at Liberty to marry Anne Bullen. It was the Intereſt of France to favour the King of England, in this Matter; for the divorcing of Queen Catherine was an Affront to the Emperor, and a Pleaſure to Henry VIII. This Affront on the one Side, and Pleaſure on the other, were very proper to form a ſtrict Alliance between the King of England, and Francis I; which was the reaſon, why William du Bellai uſed his utmoſt Endeavours in Favour of Henry VIII. He was ſent ſeveral times to the Proteſtant Princes of Germany: He dexterouſly warded off the Blows, which were aimed at him there, in relation to the Severity, with which his Maſter puniſhed Heretics [B]. He was made a Knight of the Order, and Lieutenant General in Italy. He had compoſed An Hiſtory of his own Times [C], in Latin, divided into Ogdoades (b), and, afterwards, by the King's Order, he tranſlated it into French: Somebody ſtole this Work; ſo that the Public has been deprived of it, except ſome Fragments, and three or four Books, which MARTIN DU BELLAI, the Author's Brother, inſerted in his Memoirs [D]. You will ſee, in the Remarks, what Judgment Montagne paſſed on This

(b) La Croix du Maine imagined, falſly, that William du Bellai had wrote a Book, entituled Ogdoades, which was different from his Hiſtory of France.

[B] He dexterouſly warded off the Blows, which were aimed at him in relation to - - - - the Puniſhment of Heretics.] See the Subſtance of his Speech in the ninth Book of Sleidan: It was not poſſible to make a more artful Apology, than That, which he made for the Puniſhment, which Francis I, had inflicted on ſome of his Subjects, who had embraced the new Opinions. But Langey's Converſations were, at leaſt, as artful as his Speeches: he conferred with the Doctors, and conſelt to them, that, on divers Points, the Opinions of the King, his Maſter, did not much differ from Thoſe of a Book, which Melanchthon had publiſhed (5). Father Maimbourg was very angry, upon this Occaſion, with Sleidan. "How "is it poſſible, ſays he (6), that the Lord du Bellai (7) "could have ſaid ſo falſe a thing and ſo contrary "to all Probability? He, who, in the beginning of "That ſame Year, had followed the King in a famous Proceſſion, where That Prince ſhewed ſo much "Zeal for the Catholic Religion, and, after which, "he cauſed ſix Men, convicted of Lutheraniſm, to "be burnt alive, with a ſlow Fire. One might as "well ask, how can a cunning and dexterous Embaſſador make uſe of any Diſguiſe, when he deſires to obtain things of great Importance, which "a ſincere Acknowledgment would infallibly make "him loſe?" Father Maimbourg confeſſes (8), that du Bellai declared, that They, who were puniſhed in France, were ſuch as the Proteſtants of Germany would not acknowledge. The ſame Jeſuit does not cenſure Sleidan for having ſaid, that du Bellai proteſted the King his Maſter had not declared againſt Lutheraniſm, by the Puniſhment, to which he had condemned ſome of his Subjects, and that none but malicious Calumniators could be guilty of ſo extravagant an Aſſertion. "Illum animadverſiſſe quidem in ſuæ ditionis quoſdam: ſed hoc ad ipſorum injuriam nullam pertinere, tametſi malevoli dicant quum illos è medio ſuſtulit ipſorum quoque cauſam veluti præjudicio quodam condemnaſſe: rogat autem ne tam ineptis calumniis moveantur (9)." Father Maimbourg muſt therefore have believed, that The Embaſſador ſpoke in this Manner: Now what can be ſaid more contrary to Sincerity, more falſe, and more unlikely? Was it not notoriouſly known, that, at Paris, they gave no more Quarter to the Lutherans, than to the Zuinglians? See what has been ſaid, on all this, againſt Father Maimbourg, in the Critical Anſwer to his Hiſtory of Calviniſm (10). We have, here, an Article of the Religion of Sovereigns, and of the Embaſſadors Catechiſm; which is, That Hereſy ought to be perſecuted at Home, and careſſed in foreign Countries, in order to ſtir up a Civil War in a State, which it is their Intereſt to weaken, or in order to make an advantageous Alliance. It is the Embaſſador's Trade to act according to the Doctrine of Equivocations; and it ſhould have been chiefly invented for them. But, to go on, Sleidan's Honeſty has been diſplayed in it's full Luſtre by Mr Seckendorf. He quotes William, and his Brother John du Bellai's Letters, written to Melanchthon; wherein they aſſured him of the good Sentiments of Francis I (11). Nay, he quotes a Letter, which That Prince wrote to the League of Smalcalde, to excuſe the Puniſhments in queſtion (12). The Confederate Princes were plainly impoſed upon; and were made to believe many things, to hinder them from coming to an Accommodation with Charles V. A Modern Hiſtorian (13) obſerves, that William du Bellai's Diſcourſe to the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, aſſembled to deliberate on the Divorce of the King of England, was all a Cheat: And why ſhould he have been more ſincere to the Prejudice of Francis I, in Germany?

(5) It was his Loci Communes.

(6) Maimb. Hiſtory of Lutheranism, lib. 3, pag. 232.

(7) In the preceding Page he is called William de Langey, Lord of Bellai, whereby the Order is inverted.

SLEIDAN juſtified againſt Maimbourg's Accuſations.

(8) Pag. 231 of his Lutheraniſm.

(9) Sleidanus, lib. 9, fol. 218.

(10) Letter 18, p. 333, 3*d Edition.*

(11) Seckendorf, lib. 3, pag. 190. See alſo pag. 253, n. 12.

(12) Ibid. pag. 104.

(13) Le Grand's Hiſtory of the Divorce of Henry VIII, Tom. I, pag. 179.

[C] He compoſed An Hiſtory of his own Times in Latin.] Scævola Sammarthanus was much miſtaken, when he ſaid, that This Work was the Hiſtory of France, from the beginning of the Monarchy, to the time of the Author. Hiſtoriam de rebus Gallicis ab ipſa imperii origine ad ſua uſque tempora, tum Latinè tum Gallicè, gravissimo ſtilo perſecutus eſt (14). If he had read the Prefaces, he would not have ſaid ſo; for William du Bellai declares, in expreſs Words (15), That his Memoirs begin with the Infancy of Francis I. He adds, that he had, at firſt, prefixed to them, by way of Introduction, a Diſcourſe about the Origin of the Gauls, and French, and the Reduction of Thoſe two Nations into one, which threw off the Roman Yoke; but that, afterwards, he laid aſide That Diſcourſe, and enlarged it ſo much, that he made a ſeparate Work of it, and one of the ſeven Ogdoades, which made up his Hiſtory. He treated, in That Ogdoade, I. Of the Antiquity of the Gauls and French; II. Of the Diviſion of Gaul and France; He gave, there, a Geographical Deſcription, and reconciled the Modern Names with the Ancient, as well as he could; III. Of the Laws and Cuſtoms, as well Military, as Political, and of the Offices, and Dignities. He accommodated the Time paſt to the preſent, as well, and as near, as he could (16). Martin du Bellai does no leſs clearly condemn Scævola Sammarthanus. "My deceaſed Brother, ſay he (17), "Meſſire William du Bellai. - - - - had compoſed "ſeven Latin Ogdoades, which he tranſlated, by the "King's Order, into our Vulgar Language, where- "in might be ſeen, as in a clear Glaſs, not only "a Picture of the Occurrences OF THIS AGE, "but alſo a wonderful Dexterity of Writing, accord- "ing to the Judgment of the moſt Learned." If it had been a compleat Hiſtory of the Monarchy, would he have recommended his Brother's Memoirs by the ſole Occurrences of this Age, and by the Stile?

(14) Sammarth. in Elog. p. 12.

(15) In his Prologue. See p. 454, of the Memoirs of Martin du Bellai, Edit. of Rochel, 1573, in 8vo.

(16) Ibid. pag. 457.

(17) In the Preface.

Note, That the Work of the Antiquity of the Gauls, and French, is ſo full of Fables, that one would think the Author did not ſo much deſign to write a Hiſtory, as to forge a Romance. Non Francogallicæ hiſtoriæ, ſed Amadiſicarum fabularum inſtituiſſe tractationem videtur. Thus Francis Hotman ſpeaks of it, at the end of the fourth Chapter of his Francogallia.

[D] Of which there remain - - - - three or four Books, which MARTIN DU BELLAI - - - - - inſerted in his Memoirs.] He was both a Soldier and an Author, as well as his Brother. He was Knight of the King's Order, Captain of the fifty Men of Arms of his Ordinances, and his Lieutenant-General in Normandy. He left ſome Memoirs, which reach, from the Year 1513, when he came to Court, to the Death of Francis I. "They are, ſays he (18), "Memoirs both of Peace and War, of which I can "partly ſpeak as an Eye-witneſs; for I was perſonally

SOME Facts concerning Martin du Bellai.

(18) In his Preface.

Digitized by Google

This Book [E]. The Prologue contains very important Pieces of Advice to Historians, and very solid Reflexions on the Indignities, which are offered to History [F]. It is through a palpable Mistake, that a Book, concerning Military Discipline,

" sonally present, in several Places, on this, and the " other, side of the Alps; and, as for the rest, I " could have certain Advice from those, who were " present." Of the ten Books, which make up This Work, there are but three, which belong to William du Bellai, if we may rely on the Title-page, on the Preface of Martin du Bellai, and on the Title of the Prologues of the Ogdoades: But, if we consider the Running-title, and the particular Title, which is at the Head of each Book, we shall find, that the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth, Books belong to William du Bellai, and that the first, second, third, fourth, ninth, and tenth, belong to Martin. That, which belongs to William, is taken from the fifth Ogdoade, and reaches from the Year 1536, to the Year 1543 (19). The whole Work of William consisted of seven Ogdoades; but the first did not relate to Francis I; It treated of the Antiquities of the Gauls and French, &c. as I have already observed (20). The other six were designed for That Monarch's Reign. The ten Books, which remain, written partly by William, and partly by Martin, were printed at Paris, in the Year 1569, in Folio, by the care of René du BELLAI, Baron de la Lande, Son-in-law of Martin. Some quote an Edition of Paris, in Folio, in the Year 1572. I have seen one, which was printed off at Paris, the twentieth of October 1587, in Folio, by Peter de Voirnir, the King's Mathematical Printer, and was sold by Peter de Fuillier. Du Chesne, in his Bibliotheque of the Writers of the History of France (21), says, that there is a Geneva Edition, in 8vo, 1594; but he says nothing of That of Rochel, 1573, in 8vo. Hugh Sureau translated This Book into Latin, and published it at Frankfort, in Folio, in the Year 1574. Martin du Bellai died at Glatigni, the ninth of March, 1559 (22). He had married Isabella Chenue d'Yvetot, and, by This Marriage, he became Prince of Yvetot (23).

(10) Preface of Martin du Bellai.

(20) In Remark [C].

(21) Pag. 85.

(22) La Croix du Maine, Bibl. Fr. pag. 314.

(23) Ibid. pag. 313.

[E] What Judgment Montagne passed on This Book.] These are his Words (24). " It is always pleasant to " see things, written by those, who have experienced " how they ought to be managed; but it cannot be " denied, that a great want of That Freedom, and " Liberty, of writing is evidently discovered in Those " two Lords, which is conspicuous in the old French " Writers, as in the Sire de Joinville, Domestic " Servant of St Lewis, Eginard Chancellor of Charlemagne, and, of later Memory, in Philip de Commines. We have, here, rather a Plea for King " Francis against the Emperor Charles V, than an " History. I do not believe they have altered any " thing as to the main; but they make a Trade of " judging of Events, often against Reason, to our " Advantage, and of omitting all that is ticklish, in " the Life of their Master; witness the removal " of Messieurs de Montmorency and Brion, which is " here forgotten; nay, the very Name of Madam " d'Estampes is not to be found in it. Private " Actions may be concealed; but, to pass over in " Silence, what every Body knows, and Matters, " which have produced such public Effects, and " of such great Consequences, is an inexcusable " Fault. In short, to have a full Knowledge of " King Francis, and of the Things, which happened " in his Time, you must look elsewhere if you will " believe me. The Advantage, which may be " reaped from the reading of This History, consists " in the particular Account of the Battles, and War-" like Exploits, wherein These Gentlemen were " present, in some private Sayings, and Actions, of " some Princes of their Time, and in the Practices, " and Negotiations, conducted by the Sieur de Langey, where there are many things, which deserve " to be known, and Discourses, which are not " vulgar." If Moreri had read the Memoirs of these Gentlemen, one might very well say, that he knew but little how to judge of Books; for he says, the Stile of William du Bellai is pompous, and magnificent; and such as Persons of Quality ought to write in. First of all, it is certain, that the Stile of This Illustrious Person is not pompous and magnificent; it is incorrect; and it does not appear, that the Author took any pains about it; besides it is full of broken Latin Terms; which shews, that the Author does himself Justice, when he declares, that he had no regard to the Perfection of the Stile. In the second place, Persons of Quality do not write in a pompous Stile; It is not by this Character, that one may discover, whether an Author be a Person of Quality, or not: A professed Rhetorician, or preaching Monk, write an hundred times more pompously, than a Courtier.

MORERI judged ill of the Stile.

[F] The Prologue of his Ogdoades contains very important Pieces of Advice to Historians, and very solid Reflexions on the Indignities, offered to History.] There never was more occasion to attend to This, than at present; but the worst of it is, that most of those, who are guilty of the Faults, censured by William du Bellai, do not commit them through Ignorance. It is Malice, Animosity, or the Desire of pleasing the People, and of getting Money by it, which engage Writers to falsify their Relations. Whatever may be the Cause of This Disorder, I shall set down a long Passage of This Author. He observes, very judiciously, That it is necessary, that They, who are acquainted with Affairs, be speedy in publishing Them; for, otherwise, it becomes too difficult to trace things back to their Original. " Slowness in History, says " he (25), is of so much the more dangerous Conse-" quence, because the Lives of Mortals are short: " and, if nothing be committed to writing by those, " who know, and remember, the Affairs of their " Times, They, who come after, though they are " Masters of a good Stile, and use Diligence, can-" not write with certainty, and agreeably to the " Truth. This we may, already, have observed in " some of the last preceeding Years, of which to " speak truly, and at large, is a difficult Matter, " partly through the Negligence, and partly through " the Rashness of the Historians themselves, who, " nevertheless, complain, that they have not Mate-" rials, worthy of their Studies, and Labour; but " they would have done better, both for themselves " and us, if they had written nothing, rather than " have published under the Title of an History, a " Parcel of fabulous and lying Stories, of which we " have, at this Day, a greater Plenty, than we " have of true Histories. I have read, in some Chro-" nicle (which I believe some will think to be a " Dream) that a King of France, after Dinner, " chased a Stag from Compiegne to Loudun, which is " about 100 Leagues. Every one knows, that the " virtuous, and praise-worthy, Prince, Charles, Duke " of Orleans, after he had been thirty Years a Priso-" ner in England, for the Service of the Crown of " France, at last returned home, and died, loaded " with Years and Honour: yet we read, in more " than twenty Authors, that he was beheaded at " Paris for High-Treason. Did not the last King of " Scotland die in a Battle against the English, in the " Year 1514? and yet I have read, that he returned " Victorious, and Triumphant, into his own King-" dom. I avoid Prolixity, in recounting a great " Number of these Lies, which are certainly pub-" lished only through the Rashness, Carelessness, and " Indiscretion, of Those Historians, and Writers of " Chronicles, who, oftentimes, deliver That for " certain, which they first heard, without having " any regard to the Credibility of the Person, who " related it to Them; or else by setting down what " is commonly reported among the People; which, " generally, has very little Truth in it: from whence " it proceeds, that Readers, who are better infor-" med, are not very willing to believe other good " ancient Authors, thinking that they wrote after " the same manner. Thus, in another Case, Car-" dinal Bessarion (26), seeing so many new Saints ca-" nonized at Rome, whose Lives he knew, and did " not approve of; These new Saints, said he, make " me very doubtful and scrupulous with respect to what " is said of the Ancient ones. And I wish these Wri-" ters of Chronicles would be quiet, or else give " Names to their Books, answerable to the Con-" tents, and that Those, who are able and willing " to speak the Truth, were so zealous for the Ho-" nour and Glory of their Country, as to write in their

(25) William du Bellai, Prologue of his Ogdoades, pag. 435, &c. Rochel Edit. 1573, in 8vo.

(26) See Bodin's Words in Rem. [G], of the Article LAUNOI (John de) towards the end. He applies them to those lying Historians, who hinder us from believing others.

Digitized by Google

Discipline, is ascribed to William du Bellai [G]. I believe he is the Author of the other Works, which are ascribed to him [H]; but I do not think they were ever printed. I except The Epitome of the Antiquities of Gaul, which was printed, with some other small Pieces, in the Year 1556. La Croix du Maine assures us, that William

" their own Language, what they have seen, or " heard, from credible Persons. Then the Men of " Letters might enrich their Stile, and make it ele- " gant, without the Trouble of searching the Truth " amidst so many Lies, Contradictions, and Incon- " sistencies, which are published by the said Writers " of Chronicles, who foolishly depend upon the Hear- " say of the first Person they meet with."

[G] It is through a palpable Mistake, that a Book, concerning Military Discipline, is ascribed to William du Bellai.] Du Verdier ascribes This Book absolutely to him; but la Croix du Maine gives us to understand, that he is not sure of it: He neither notes the Year, nor the Place, where it was printed, but says only, That the Instruction of the Military Art is to be found printed under the Name of the said Sieur de Langey. Du Verdier is more exact; he gives the Title in this Manner; Instructions about War, extracted out of the Books of Polybius, Frontinus, Vegetius, Cornazan, Machiavel, and several other good Authors, by Mess. William du Bellai, &c. printed at Paris, 4to, and 8vo, by Michael Vascosan, 1553. Brantome was fully persuaded, that the same Book had appeared under it's Author's own Name: " The Book, says " he (27), which Monsieur de Langey wrote concer- " ning the Military Art, shews him to be a better " Captain, than That, which Machiavel wrote on " That Subject, does him: It was a foolish thing " for the latter, who did not know what War was, " to compose a Book about it; just as if a Philoso- " pher should write a Book of Hunting, as le Fouil- " lou did." It is easy to prove, by the Book itself, that William du Bellai is not the Author of it. The Author of the Work was but a Gendarme in the Company of the Sieur de Negrepelisse, in the Year 1528. He was at the Siege and taking of Troja, under Monsieur de Lautrec; he retired to Barletta, a Town of Apulia, after he came out of Prison; for he had been taken Prisoner, when the Company, in which he served, was defeated, in the Retreat, which the Marquis de Sallusses made from before Naples. He says all these things himself in his Book: Now nothing of all this can agree with William du Bellai. He was a great Lord in the Year 1525, when the Queen Regent sent him into Spain to Francis I. He was, in 1527, one of those, who were present at the Judgment, given against Monsieur de Bourbon (28). The King sent him the same Year into Italy, with Money, to the Confederate Princes, and to promote the Interests of the League with Pope Clement VII. He was sent into England in the Year 1529, and 1533. He was, then, Gentleman of the King's Chamber. Being Governour of Turin, in the Year 1537, he was sent into Germany to demand a Diet, in which the Pretensions of the Emperor, and of the King of France, to the Duchy of Milan, might be discussed. He was not therefore commanded, the same Year, in Quality of a Captain of a Company of Foot Soldiers, to assist the Sieur de Roberval in making himself Master of the Valleys of St Martin, and Lucerne. Now the Author of the Military Discipline says, towards the end of the second Book, that he received such an Order: It is, therefore, most certain, that the Lord de Langey did not compose That Book. These are such demonstrative Reasons, that he, who makes use of them (29), does not think it necessary to add this; " If Mess. William du " Bellai was the Author of it, he would not praise " himself (30) for having a perfect Knowledge of " War, and Learning, nor call himself, speaking in " the third Person, my Lord of Langey (31), as " Mambrin Poseo (32), an Italian Translator, and " the last French Correctors, have very well obser- " ved: Moreover, the Sieur de Langé, who forgets " himself but little, or not at all, in his Memoirs, " and who curiously quotes the Places, where he " was, makes almost no mention of himself in all " That Expedition, undertaken by Monsieur de Lau- " trec." Let us not be contented with knowing only, that This Work was ascribed to a Person, who was not the Author of it, but let us know the Reason of this Mistake, and the true Father's Name. Raimond de Pavie, Sieur de Forquevauls, a Gentleman of Gascogne, is the Author of This Work. He communicated a Copy of it to William du Bellai, as to his good Lord and Friend, and to whose Judgment he had first submitted it. This Copy was found among the Papers of That Lord (33); This is the Origin of the Mistake. If the Author's Kinsman had acquainted the Public with the Truth of This Fact, before Naudé published his Syntagma de studio militari (34), it is probable, That Syntagma would not have retained the common Error, which we find in these Words; " Qui (Erricus Roanus) nunc in Tellina " Valle sub Christianissimo Rege castrorum præfectus, " idem omnino facit, quod quondam in Alpibus Tau- " rinis Guilielmus Bellajus Langæus, eodem munere " defungens, fecerat, editis etiam libris de re militari, " quos postea Mambrinus Roseus Italica, & omnes " ferme populi sua lingua reddiderunt, ob summam " ejusmodi librorum, qui ab expertis & celeberrimis " nostra & patrum memoria ducibus compositi fuerunt, " utilitatem (35). —— Who (Henry de Rohan) now " Marshal de Camp in the Valteline, under the most Chri- " stian King, does the same, which was formerly done by " Bellai, Lord of Langey, having published A Trea- " tise of Military Affairs, which afterwards Mam- " brinus Roseus translated into Italian, and all other " Nations into their respective Languages, on account " of the great Usefulness of such Kind of Books, which " have been written, in our own and our Fathers Me- " mories, by experienced and famous Generals." Naudé is moreover mistaken, in supposing, that the Books in question were printed during the Life of William du Bellai. He seems to value That Work much. His Judgment was therefore different from That of a Commentator on Onosander, of whom the Baron de Forquevauls complained in this manner: "This Mi- " litary Discourse is indeed a necessary Work, and " useful to those, who profess the Trade of War, " and which will continue a long time esteemed, and " prized, in the Hands of the most Understanding " Men, in spite of the Slanders, and contrary Opi- " nion, of a Modern Author, who, in his Annota- " tions on the Military Art of Onesander, a Greek " Writer, strives to despise one, with whom this Au- " thor is not to be compared, in this Science, though " he wrote more like a Doctor than a Soldier, du- " ring the leisure, and idle Time, which the good " Table, and the Amours of a certain Abbot with " his Wife, afforded him (36), and though he has " extracted his Commentaries from divers Authors; " whereas the Text of him, whom I am speaking " of, was conceived on Horseback, and written, " Sword in Hand, by the Sieur de Forquevauls (37)." What was la Croix du Maine thinking of, when he said, That the Constable, Anne de Montmorency, passed for the Author of the Book in question (38). Did he not know, that the Constable, was a Man of no Learning or Reading, and was not able to write? Let us see from whence his Doubt proceeded: " It " is, says he, because, in reading that Book, I found, " that the Author of it praises Messire William du Bel- " lai, Lord of Langey, very much, and recommends " him for his Learning and Skill in War; which " makes me believe, that he is not the Author of it, " but that those Memoirs were found in his Library, " without the Name of him, who wrote them, and " that it was presupposed it was his own Work, be- " cause he had promised to write some Memoirs. I " do not assert, that he is the Author of them, nei- " ther do I deny it." If he had read the Work well, he would have found stronger Proofs, than That, which he draws from the Praises given in it to William du Bellai.

[H] I believe he is the Author of the other Works, which are ascribed to him.] See the Catalogue of them in the French Bibliotheques of la Croix du Maine, and du Verdier. Some of the chief of them were, perhaps, never finished: It is probable, la Croix du Maine gave That for a perfect Work, which the Author only promises in the Prologue of the Ogdoades.

(27) Brantome's Memoirs, relating to the great French Captains, Tom. I, p. 382.

(28) John du Tillet, in his Collections of the Ranks of France, cited by the Baron de Forquevauls. See the following Citation.

(29) The Baron de Forquevauls, in the Life of several great French Captains, pag. 332, 333.

(30) In the 4th Chap. of the 3d Book, of Edit. 1. by Michael Vascosan and Gualliot du Pré.

(31) This Reason is good for nothing, if it be built wholly upon the Words my Lord: An infinite Number of Authors imitate Julius Cæsar, who speaks of himself in the third Person. Will. Du-Bellai followed this Method in his Memoirs.

(32) It should have been Mambrin Roseo.

(33) See the Lives of many French Captains, by Francis de Pavie, Baron de Forquevauls, pag. 351.

(34) The Lives written by the Baron de Forquevauls, were printed at Paris, in the Year 1643. The Syntagma Rei militaris came out at Rome, in the Year 1637.

(35) Naudæus, Syntagm. de studio milit.

(36) Here is a Fact for the Curious, in Secret History: I do not exhort them to search it out; they will do it without being desired, and I do not believe the thing is very difficult.

(37) The Baron de Forquevauls, ubi supra, pag. 354.

(38) La Croix du Maine, Bibl. pag. 139.

Digitized by Google

William du Bellai was born about the Year 1498, at Glatigni, in le Perche (c). I believe he is miſtaken, as to the Time [I].

(c) La Croix du Maine. Bibloth. Franç. pag. 139.

[I] La Croix du Maine aſſures us, that he was born, in 1498, at Glatigni —— I believe he is miſtaken as to the Time.] After having ſaid, Page 139, that William du Bellai was born in the Year 1498, or thereabouts, he places his Death, in the following Page, on the ninth of January, 1543, at the Age of Forty ſeven Years, or thereabouts. Would a Man, ever ſo little exact, ſay ſo? Would he not place, either 1496, on one ſide, inſtead of 1498, or 45 on the other, inſtead of 43? But this is not the chief thing. Brantome obſerves, that Langey died, not very old, and might have lived longer (39). Can any one ſpeak thus of a Man about Forty four Years of Age. Moreover, Cardinal du Bellai was Sixty eight Years of Age, when he died (40); now he died in 1560; he was, therefore, born in the Year 1492. It cannot, then, be ſaid, that William du Bellai was born in the Year 1498; for he was older than his Brother, the Cardinal (41). I have juſt now diſcovered, that he died in his Climacterical Year. Rabelais obſerves it, in the Twenty firſt Chapter of his third Book, after having ſaid, that he died the tenth of January 1543. The Author of the Remarks on the Confeſſion of Sanci gave me notice of this Paſſage.

(39) Brantome's Illuſtrious Frenchmen, Tom. I, pag. 384.

(40) Teiſſier, Additions to Thuanus, Tom. I, pag. 184.

(41) Sammarth. in Elog.

BELLAI (JOHN du), younger Brother of the foregoing, was a Man of great Merit. He concurred, with his elder Brother, in favouring the Paſſions of Henry VIII, and decoying the Proteſtants of Germany, in order to ſerve Francis I, whoſe Affairs required, that a Quarrel ſhould, at any rate, be fomented between the Emperor, and England, by the Divorce of Catherine of Arragon, and that the Confederates of Smalcalde ſhould be amuſed with Lies, about the pretended Inclination of Francis I, to give the Lutherans ſome Satisfaction. This Conduct would have been more inexcuſable in John du Bellai, who was a Biſhop, than in his Brother William, who was a Lay-man; I ſay it would have been more inexcuſable, if That Biſhop had not been alſo an Embaſſador, and a Stateſman (a). The Definition of Perſons, inveſted with That Character, is well known. Let us add, that it is not unlikely, that John du Bellai had a ſincere Deſire, and even ſome Hopes, of a Reformation, and that, upon this Proſpect, he ſincerely encouraged Melanchthon to come into France; for he inclined, for ſome time, towards Lutheraniſm, and even reformed himſelf privately as to the Article of Celibacy, by a Marriage of Conſcience, which he contracted [A]. He was Biſhop of Paris, when, in 1534, he was ſent to Rome to ſoften Matters, in relation to the King of England; but he had no good Succeſs, and could not hinder the Pope from fulminating an Excommunication againſt Henry VIII. He was promoted to the Cardinalſhip, by Pope Paul III, in the Year 1535, and died, in 1560, at Rome, where he had retired, after the Death of Francis I. He was a Man, who would willingly have quitted the Mitre, and Croſier, to take the Helmet, and Sword [B]. If it be true, that he condemned

(a) He was Biſhop of Bajonne, in the Year 1527, when Francis I. ſent him Embaſſador into England.

[A] He reformed himſelf privately, as to the Article of Celibacy, by a Marriage of Conſcience.] Brantome affirms it, in this manner; "I have heard a "Lady of great and ancient Quality ſay, That the "late Cardinal du Bellai, being Biſhop and Cardinal, "had married Madame de Chatillon, and died marri"ed; this ſhe ſaid, diſcourſing with Monſieur de "Manne, of Provence, of the Family of Seulal, and "Biſhop of Frejus, who had attended the ſaid Car"dinal fifteen Years at the Court of Rome, and had "been one of his private Protonotaries; and, hap"pening to ſpeak of the ſaid Cardinal, ſhe asked him, "Whether he had never told, and confeſſed to him, "that he was married? Monſieur de Manne was much "ſurprized at this Queſtion. He is yet living, and "can tell whether I aſſert a Lye; for I was there. "He anſwered, That he had never heard him, or "others, ſay ſo. Well then, I tell you ſo, replied "ſhe; for there is nothing more true, than that he "was married, and died really married to the ſaid "Lady Chatillon (1)." This Lady was the Widow of Monſ. de Chatillon, who was wounded before Ravenna, and who died of his Wounds at Ferrara (2). He had been in great Credit in the Reign of Charles VIII. His Widow, young and fair, was choſen Lady of Honour to the Queen of Navarre, and gave her the good Advice which That Queen mentioned in her Hundred Novels. Admiral de Bonivet crept into This Princeſs's Bed through a Trap-Door, but he got nothing there but a ſcratched Face (3). The Queen would have complained of this Attempt to her Brother Francis I, if the Lady Chatillon had not given her "This good Advice, which is one of the fineſt "and wiſeſt, and the moſt proper to avoid Scandal, "that could have been given, even by a firſt Preſident "of Paris; and which ſhewed, nevertheleſs, that the "Lady was as Cunning and Crafty in ſuch Myſteries, "as Wiſe and Diſcreet; and therefore it is not to "be doubted, that ſhe kept her Marriage with the "Cardinal very private. —— I believe, that the "Cardinal, her ſaid Husband, who was one of the "moſt Learned, Eloquent, Wiſe, and Prudent, Men "of his Time, had taught her to ſpeak ſo well, and "give ſuch good Advice. —— I think, the ſaid "Cardinal du Bellai might have done it; for, at that "time, he inclined much to Luther's Doctrine and "Religion (5)."

(1) Brantome's Lives of the Gallant Ladies, Tom II, pag. 153.

(2) Idem. pag. 154.

(3) Ibid. pag. 155.

(4) Ibid.

(5) Idem. pag. 159.

[B] He would have quitted the Mitre and Croſier to take the Helmet and the Sword.] Brantome ſhall be my Witneſs again. He ſays, that, when Charles V ſo haughtily braved the King of France, at Rome, it was a Misfortune for Francis I, not to have any Embaſſadors there, that were Swords-men (6). "And "yet, had it not been, continues he, for Cardinal "du Bellai, who was as quick, and haſty, as any "Military Man, (and indeed he looked like one; for "he was qualified for any thing, and one of the "greateſt Men, both for Learning, and War) things "had not gone well there, and the King had been "much diſgraced. Which makes me think, that "there never were any Gown-men, who deſerved "more to be Embaſſadors on all Occaſions, than This "Cardinal (as he has demonſtrated in many Em"baſſies, before he was a Cardinal, in Italy, Ger"many, and England), and the Biſhop of Dax, of "the Houſe of Nouailles, in Limoſin, who ſerved "our Kings worthily in That Station, in England, "and at Venice (where I have ſeen him), and af"terwards at Conſtantinople. I will not wrong many "other worthy Perſons of their Character, whom "I have ſeen in ſuch a Station; but, in my Opi"nion, Cardinal du Bellai, and the Biſhop of Dax, "have ſurpaſſed them all; for they could as well "have made uſe of their Swords, as of their eloquent "Tongues: And, indeed, an Embaſſador is as often "obliged to treat of Affairs relating to War, as of "State Matters." Thuanus (7) and Sammarthanus (8) have obſerved, that This Cardinal removed the Fear of the Pariſians, who were in dread of Charles the Fifth's Army, and that he prepared all things for a vigorous Defence, having cauſed the City to be fortified. Moreri has ſaid the ſame, but with little Exactneſs;

(6) Id. Elogy of Francis I, in Tom. I, of his Memoirs, pag. 246.

(7) Thuan. Hiſtor. lib. 26, p. 538.

(8) Sammarth. in Elog. pag. 13.

Digitized by Google

condemned Anne du Bourg [C] to be burnt, his Vote muſt have been given at a Diſtance; for he was at Rome, when the Trial of Anne du Bourg was ſet on foot.

Exactneſs: He will have it, that John du Bellai did theſe things, when Charles V. entered into Provence, in 1537, and that the King, quitting his Capital, left This Cardinal there, and made him his Lieutenant-General, to provide for the Security of Picardy, and Champagne. Here are two Miſtakes: The Irruption of Charles V into Provence happened in the Year 1536; That, which put the Pariſians in fear, and occaſioned him to order their City to be fortified, happened likewiſe in the Year 1536 (9); but it concerned Picardy, and not Provence. It is That, which Charles V cauſed to be made by the Count of Naſſau. Thuanus (10) refers the Care of Cardinal du Bellai, for the City of Paris, only to the Invaſion of Champagne, in the Year 1544. But he is miſtaken.

(9) Mezerai, Abridg. Chron. ad Ann. 1536.

(10) Thuan. ubi ſupra.

[C] It has been ſaid, that he condemned Anne du Bourg.] This is to be found in Mr Teiſſier. Many blamed him, ſays he (11), for being the firſt, who condemned Anne du Bourg to be burnt alive; for which Reaſon, ſay they, God took him out of this World, forty Days after the Execution of This Illuſtrious Martyr. The Calculation would not be right, according to the Annals of Spondanus, who places This Cardinal's Death on the ſixteenth of February 1560 (12); for we find, elſewhere, that du Bourg was executed the Twenty third of December 1559 (13). The Author, whom Mr Teiſſier quotes, ſays, that This Cardinal died the ſixteenth of February, and fifty Days after du Bourg. His Calculation is leſs remote from the Truth, than That, which Mr Teiſſier imputes to him; nevertheleſs, it is not exact; and therefore This Obſervation is chimerical.

(11) Addition to the Elogies, Tom. I, pag. 174. He quotes Continuat. Sleidan. per Michael Lundord. lib. 2. He ought to have ſaid Lundorpium.

(12) Spond. Annal. ad Ann. 1560, n. 34.

(13) Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 3, pag. 248.

BELLARMIN (Robert), an Italian Jeſuit, was the beſt Writer of his Times, in Matters of Controverſy. He was born at Monte Pulciano (a), in the Year 1542, and admitted among the Jeſuits in the Year 1560. His Mother, Cynthia Cervini, was Siſter of Pope Marcellus II. He was ordained Prieſt, at Ghent, by Cornelius Janſenius, in 1569, and, the Year following, he taught Divinity at Louvain. He was the firſt Jeſuit, who taught this Science in That famous Univerſity, and he did it with extraordinary Succeſs. Having lived ſeven Years in the Netherlands, he returned into Italy, and, in 1576, he began to read Lectures on Controverſy, at Rome; which no Jeſuit had yet done in That City. He acquitted himſelf ſo well, that Sixtus V, ſending a Legate into France, in the Year 1590, gave him Robert Bellarmin, as a Divine, who might be very uſeful, if any Diſpute about Religion ſhould happen to be diſcuſſed. He returned to Rome, ten Months after, and was ſucceſsfully promoted to ſeveral Offices, either in the Society, or at the Pope's Court, till, in the Year 1599, he was honoured with the Cardinal's Hat. It is ſaid, that they were forced to threaten him with an Anathema, to make him accept of That Dignity. Three Years after, the Archbiſhopric of Capua was given him, which he reſigned, when, in the Year 1605, the new Pope (b) would have him near his Perſon. He was employed in the Affairs of the Court of Rome, till 1621. Then he left the Vatican, and retired to a Houſe of his Order, where he died, the ſeventeenth of September, in the ſame Year 1621. In his laſt Sickneſs, he was viſited by Pope Gregory XV, whom he entertained with the Compliment of the Centurion [A], Lord, I am not worthy, that thou ſhouldeſt come under my Roof. He charged the Jeſuit Eudemon-Johannes to teſtify publickly, that he died in the ſame Faith, which he always profeſſed, and maintained with his Pen (c). It appears, that, on the Day of his Funeral, he was looked upon as a Saint [B]. It is certain, that no Jeſuit did more Honour to his Order, than He, and that no Author maintained the Cauſe of the Church of Rome, in general, and That of the Pope in particular, better than He. The Proteſtants knew it very well [C]; for moſt of their learned Divines wrote againſt

(a) A Town of Tuſcany.

(b) To wit, Paul V.

(c) Taken from the Bibliotheque, compoſed by Alegambus.

[A] He entertained Pope Gregory XV with the Compliment of the Centurion.] Suppoſing, as he did, that the Pope is the Vicar of the Son of God, he did not ſee, in the Application of this Paſſage, all the Prophanation, which others ſee in it; and, perhaps, he thought he ſaid nothing but what was very pious. Alegambus relates This as a fine Circumſtance of Bellarmin's laſt Hours. "Inviſit eum decumbentem Gregorius XV Pontifex Max. ac bis peramanter amplexus ſacrum ſe pro ejus valetudine facturum promiſit. Ipſe Chriſti Vicarium obſequioſiſſime reveritus uſurpavit illud Centurionis, Domine, non ſum dignus ut intres ſub tectum meum (1). - - - - Pope Gregory XV viſited him, as he lay ſick, and, twice embracing him very lovingly, promiſed him, he would pray for his Health. Bellarmin, out of profound Reſpect to the Vicar of Christ, addreſſed him in the Words of the Centurion, Lord, I am not worthy, that thou ſhouldeſt come under my Roof." The Spaniſh Embaſſador, who made uſe of the ſame Words of the Centurion to a Prince, whom he looked upon as an Heretic, cannot be ſo eaſily excuſed. Balzac, who alledges this Example to his Cenſor, blames it at the ſame time. "What would he have ſaid of the Compliment of That Spaniſh Embaſſador in England, who received a Viſit of King James, with theſe Words of the Maſs: Domine, non ſum dignus ut intres ſub tectum meum (2)?"

(1) Alegambus, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 409.

(2) Diſcourſe I, to Cardinal Bentivoglio, in the Sequel of the Chriſtian Socrates, pag. 442, 443.

[B] It appears that, on the Day of his Funeral, he was looked upon as a Saint.] The Swiſs of the Pope's Guard were poſted round the Coffin, to keep off the Crowd, who endeavoured to throw themſelves on the Corps, to touch and kiſs it. All that he had made uſe of, was taken away, and diſtributed to thoſe, who deſired to have Relics of Them for devout Purpoſes. "Adverſus undam populi concurſantis ad oſculum tactumque ſacri pignoris adhibere oportuit Helvetios è ſtipatoribus Pontificiis. - - - - - Quicquid rerum in uſu habuit raptum diſtractumque in poſtulantes eſt ad venerationem (3)." When Bellarmin reſigned his Archbiſhopric of Capua, the whole City was greatly afflicted at it: Some kiſſed his Garment; others rubbed their Roſaries devoutly againſt it; and every one preſſed for his Bleſſing (4). Theſe are Preludes of Worſhip, which may, in time, be followed by a Canonization in Form. It is pretended, that he foretold ſome things, and wrought ſome Miracles (5); and, becauſe, after his Death, the Odour of his Sanctity was rather increaſed than diminiſhed, the Congregation of the Rites was ordered, a-new, in the Year 1674, to proceed to the neceſſary Informations concerning his Life, and Miracles, to the end, that, if there be occaſion, he may be beatified (6).

(3) Alegambus, Biblioth. Script. Soc. Jeſu, pag. 409.

(4) Alegambus, ibid.

(5) Idem. pag. 410.

[C] No Author maintained the Cauſe of the Church of Rome better than He. - - - - - The Proteſtants knew it very well.] "They grant, that he "is

(6) Sotuel, in Bibliotheca Scriptor. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 722.

Digitized by Google

against him for the Space of forty or fifty Years. Their Professors, Lectures, and Theses, made his Name resound every where; Ut littus Hyla, Hyla omne sonaret (d). He was attacked on all Sides, and his Adversaries did not forget to examine, whether he had not contradicted, and afforded Weapons against, himself [D]. It is the Subject of a Book, which must needs have perplexed him not a little. There are some indiscreet and rash Men to be found every where; and therefore it is no wonder, if some Protestant Writers have published Falshoods against Bellarmin, of which his Party took Advantage [E]. There is no great Inconvenience in this, when unknown Writers

(d) Virgil. Eclog. 6, ver. 44.

" is the most subtle Enemy of the Truth, that has " hitherto undertaken to oppose it: That Demetrius, " the Silver-smith, spoken of in the nineteenth of " the Acts of the Apostles, did not use so much Art " in working his little Silver Shrines of Diana, as " this cunning Artisan of Error did, in re-building " the Palaces, and Altars, of Superstition: Which " has given occasion to compare him to That Marcion, of whom Tertullian says, that, Dedecus suum " ingenio obumbrat, qui cum causas ubique ferè pessimas tueatur & impiorum dogmatum patrocinio " verissimum se Satanæ atque Antichristi satellitem " præbeat, agit tamen ingenio, ut speciosis coloribus " inducat omnia, & distinctionum præstigiis, & umbris, eludat ea quæ solidissimâ veritate constituta " sunt (7). - - - - He has the Address to disguise the " badness of his Cause; and, though he generally undertakes to defend the worst, and, by patronizing " impious Tenets, shews himself a true Minister of " Satan, and Antichrist, yet he has the Art of giving " a specious Turn to every thing, and, by subtle Distinctions, of eluding what is built upon the strongest " Reason." Be sure not to believe what Alegambus says, viz. That Beza owned, that Bellarmin had overthrown all the Protestant Authors. Nec ipsi hostes ausi sunt diffiteri, ex quibus Theodorus Beza, unus hic liber, ajebat, res omnes humi proturbat (8). It is a Jest to alledge such things, without quoting the Book, where they are to be found. On such Occasions, the very Line, or, at least, the Page, ought to be quoted, otherwise every one will take such an Assertion for an ill-grounded Hear-say. I am fully persuaded, that Beza had not such a good Opinion of Bellarmin, and that, if he had, he would never have owned it. Alegambus says another thing, the Falshood whereof is not so obvious; which is, That a new Lecture was founded at Cambridge and Oxford, to confute Bellarmin. " In Angliæ Academia Cantabrigiensi primum, mox etiam in Oxoniensi, nova prælectio instituta est, ad controversias Bellarmini, si possent, refellendas (9)."

(7) Ancillon's Critical Miscellanies of Literature, Tom. I, pag. 348. See also Whitaker, in the Preface to his Treatise de Scriptura.

(8) Alegamb. Bibl. Soc Jesu, pag. 411.

(9) Id. ibid.

[D] It has been examined, whether he has not contradicted himself.] A Minister of Lithuania, whose Name was Andrew Crastovius, composed a Work entituled, Bellum Jesuiticum (10), in which he objects to the Jesuits Two hundred and five Contradictions. Sometimes Bellarmin does not agree with the other Jesuits, but most frequently Bellarmin confutes himself, in That Book.

(10) It is a Book in 4to, of 161 pages, printed at Basil, in the Year 1594.

I have said elsewhere (11), that He was reproached with having made use of, and opposed, the same Principles, according as he was to dispute either against the Protestants, or against the Enthusiasts. Here are some Particulars concerning that sort of Contradiction. " Some, being willing to excuse " Bellarmin's Contradictions, and want of Memory, " have said, that the great number of Persons, who " had a Hand in the Fabrick of This Work, I mean, " of his Writings, like the Builders of Babel, introduced this Confusion, for want of Understanding " one another: But Those of his Communion are " so far from taking this for an Excuse, that they " reject it, as injurious to him: Fuligati, who wrote " his Life, says, that he never employed an Amanuensis. - - - - - I believe, the true cause of Bellarmin's Contradictions, is, that the present necessity of attacking, or defending, is a more powerful Object, than any other; he cared but little, " whether he was consistent with himself, or not, " provided none should believe, that he agreed with " his Adversaries (12). - - - - Bellarmin has often verified This Observation in his Books of Controversy: When he disputes against the Libertines and " the Schwencfeldians, about the necessity of the " Scripture, he speaks like a Protestant. And, when " he disputes against the Protestants, on the same " Subject, he argues like a Schwencfeldian. If he " undertakes to confute the Pelagians about the Perfection of Works, he makes use of all the Arguments of those, whom he calls Calvinists: If he " has to do with the Calvinists, he makes use of " the Reasons and Distinctions of the Pelagians. If " he writes against the Anabaptists concerning the " Baptism of Children, he proves it by the Scripture: If he disputes with Us about Tradition, the " Baptism of Children is one of the Points, which " seems to him to prove the necessity of it, and of " which the Scripture does not speak after a convincing manner, as he says. This puts me in mind " of the Comparison, which I have seen somewhere, " of Bellarmin with a certain African, whose Name " was Leo, whom he himself compares to That Amphibious Bird of Æsop, who was sometimes a Bird, " and sometimes a Fish; a Bird, when the King of " Fishes exacted a Tribute; and a Fish, when the " King of Birds exacted it. Ut Leo quidam Africanus in Granatensi Regno natus, & postquam subjugatum est illud Regnum, in Africam profugus, " de se fatetur, si Afros vitio aliquo notari sentio, " me Granatæ natum profiteor; si Granatenses malè " audiant, mox Afer sum; Bellarminus certè multò " quàm ille elgantius aviculam illam imitatur, qui nimirùm respondet, Tom. I. Controv. l. 1. c. 7. " Patres secutos esse septuaginta Interpretum Editionem; Idem. Tom. I. Controv. l. 1. c. 20. de 3. " Esdræ agens, ait Patres secutos esse Hebræos, & " tamen illud alterum, notate, quanta vi verborum " efferat. Negari (inquit) non potest. Ipse tamen " id ipsum loco posteriori negat (13). - - - - - Thus " One Leo Africanus, born in the Kingdom of Granada, but who, upon the Reduction of That Kingdom, fled into Africa, confesses of himself; If I " hear the Africans charged with any particular Vice, " I profess myself a Native of Granada; if the " People of Granada are reproached, presently I am " an African. Bellarmin certainly imitates That Bird " with more Elegance, than He; when he replies, " Tom. I. Controv. l. 1. cap. 7. that the Fathers " followed the Edition of the Septuagint; whereas, " Tom. I. Controv. l. 1. c. 20. treating of the third " Chapter of Esdras, he says, the Fathers followed the " Hebrew: and yet observe how strongly he asserts " the former; It cannot be denied, says he: yet he " himself denies it in the latter Place."

(11) In Remark [B], of the Article ANTONY (MARC), the Orator. Citat. (7).

(12) Ancillon's Critical Miscellanies of Literature, Tom. I, pag. 352.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 354.

(14) This Calculation does not agree with the Year 1650, the Date of Th. Raynaud's Book, and with what that Jesuit says, that Bellarmin laughed at That Libel.

[E] The Protestant Writers published Falshoods against Bellarmin, of which his Party took Advantage.] The Jesuit John Argentus makes mention, in the Apology of his Order, of four Libels newly come out against the Society, the third of which is levelled directly against Bellarmin, and relates many things, which had caused, attended, or followed, his Death. Nevertheless, This Cardinal was yet living. Doubtless, Theophilus Raynaud meant This Libel, when he said, that, Twenty five Years before (14), a Book was published in Germany, wherein Bellarmin was accused of having killed many Children, to hide his Incontinence (15). It was said, moreover, that the Cardinal, being at last moved to Repentance, had gone to our Lady of Loretto, to see whether he could expiate his Crimes; but that the Priest, to whom he had confessed them, was seized with so much Horror, that he commanded him to be gone; which threw Bellarmin into a Despair, of which he died soon after. This is the Substance of That Libel. Bellarmin read it, and laughed at it. Doubtless, he made many Reflexions on a Book, which asserted his Death. Theophilus Raynaud thought, that Father Gretser had given himself a needless Trouble in refuting these kind of Stories, and that they did great Prejudice to the Protestants (16); for one might learn from thence what Judgment was to be made of the pretended Letter of St Udalric, which says, that Six thousand Children's Heads were found in the Wells of Pope Gregory II, after

(15) Th. Raynaud's Hoplotheca, §. 2, Serie 2, cap. 1, pa. 166, 167.

(16) It appears from the Bibliotheca of Alegambus, that Gretser published Vindicatio illustrissimi Cardinalis Bellarmini à criminationibus & insectitia Lutherani Magistelli Ernesti Zephirii, at Ingolstad, 1611, in 4to, and Castigatio libelli famosi adversus illustr. Cardinalem Bellarminum, translated into High Dutch, by Father Conrad Vetter, 1615.

Digitized by Google

Writers commit this Fault; but, when Professors of Reputation impute to This Cardinal what he never taught, they injure their Cause, and expose themselves to great Mortifications. A Professor of Sedan, who has been very much talked of in Holland, is guilty of this Fault. It is remarkable, that Bellarmin did not follow the Doctrine after he had driven away the Priests Wives. "Hæ- "reticis, vel ad unam horam vagum mendacium, "in lucro ponitur. Revera tamen ex hoc menda- "cio decessit illis haud exiguum. Siquidem inde "deprehensum est, qua fide ex horum mendaciloquo- "rum majoribus quispiam, ex commentitia S. Udal- "rici Epistola, sex millia capitum infantilium, intra "puteum Gregorii secundi, cùm is uxores sacerdo- "tibus abstulisset, reperta dixerit. Non est enim "ovum ovo similius, quàm hoc de Bellarmini infan- "ticidiis scriptum, & illa S. Udalrici Epistola de cæ- "dibus per Clericos & Sacerdotes scortatores, adver- "sus quam subdititiam S. Antistitis Epistolam, & ipse "Bellarminus l. de Cleric. cap. 22. & Baronius anno "591. aliique certarunt." It is no ways necessary, that the Falsities, published against Bellarmin, should have a retroactive Effect on the Story of the Six thousand Childrens Heads; but it is certain, that no better Service can be done to the Jesuits, and in general to any Party, which one undertakes to defame, than to publish Calumnies, which may easily be confuted. It is worthy of Observation, that, among so many Persons, possessed with an unconquerable Itch of publishing Satires, so few have the Art of poisoning them as they ought. Most of Those, who attempt it, are ignorant, that, in order to succeed well in it, that is, to direct the Blow right, a Man must religiously observe these two things: One is, to advance nothing but what may be proved; and, above all, to abstain from Accusations, which may easily be confuted: The other is, not to maintain obstinately what has been once confuted. I had forgot a third Advice, which is, carefully to dissemble one's Passion, and to hide the Appearances of it. I own, that a Man, who acts quite contrary to these Rules, finds but too many Persons, in his Party, who greedily swallow down all that he says; but it is This very thing, which does a great Prejudice to their Cause; because the other Party grows angry, and looks upon their Adversaries, from whom so many Satires, so greedily swallowed, proceed, as Men destitute of Reason, Equity, and the Assistance of Grace. These are not Reflexions at random, but grounded upon Experience. See how Father le Tellier takes advantage of some Stories, which are spread abroad without knowing whether they be true or false. Read what follows:

NECESSARY Qualifications for a good Satirist.

"For Example; What will it avail the Jesuits of "China to have been the first, and almost the only "Persons, who submitted, and without the least Re- "sistance, to the Apostolical Vicars, as soon as they "appeared there in 1684; since, notwithstanding "this, their Enemies published again, the last Sum- "mer, by the Pen of their Secretary, the Gazetteer "of Holland, that the Holy Father was extreamly "angry with the Jesuits, because they would not "acknowledge the Bishops, whom he sent to China? "Can it be questioned, but that, some Years hence, "This Lye will appear again in it's turn on the "Stage? Likewise, what will it avail the Jesuits of "Germany to have an Attestation, signed by four of "the Elector Palatin's chief Counsellors, all Prote- "stants, wherein they testify, that the History of "the Jesuit, counterfeiting a Voice from Heaven, "to deceive That Prince, and to animate him to "the Destruction of Heresy, is a meer Fable? Will "this Attestation hinder some good Protestants, "who shall continue the Jesuitical History, from "making, some time or other, a Chapter about "This chimerical Adventure, on the Credit of the "Gazeteer of Holland (17)?"

(17) A Defence of the new Christians, Part I, pag. 29. Edit. of Paris, 1687.

Is it not strange, that the Author of the Religion of the Jesuits had rather follow his blind Passion, than make a good use of this Passage of Father le Tellier? So far from it, that he brought the Apparition of the Palatinate again on the Stage; and omitted nothing to make his Readers reject the Attestation of the Elector Palatin's Protestant Counsellors (18). I have it from very good Hands, that he blamed the Minister a Refugee, who inserted This Attestation in his Abridged History of Europe (19). Such Persons spoil the Trade, they take in hand. They should leave Satire to moderate Writers, who would compose them in a more dexterous and persuasive Manner.

(18) The Religion of the Jesuits, printed at the Hague, 1680, pag. 77. See Remark [P], of the Article LOYOLA.

(19) Month of August, 1686, pag 160.

[F] A Professor of Sedan —— is guilty of this Fault.] He maintained some Theses, in the Year 1674, concerning the Power of the Keys, and charged Cardinal Bellarmin with having said, "That a con- "trite Man, full of Faith, and desirous to be recon- "ciled with GOD, perishes eternally, except he can "get a Priest to reconcile him before Death. WHICH "I NEVER READ, added he, WITHOUT ASTONISH- "MENT AND INDIGNATION (20)." This implies, that he had often read these words in Bellarmin; and yet they are not to be found in That Author. The Guardian of the Irish Capuchins (21) disputed against these Theses, and complained, at first, very vehemently of the wrong, which was done to Bellarmin. He continued the Dispute with the same violence, and confounded the Professor. This was not all. When the Dispute was ended, the King's Attorney presented his Petition against the said Professor (22); the Consequence of which was, that the Author of the Theses made his Recantation in Writing, which was signed by him, and three other Ministers.

(20) These de potestate clavium, p. 21, cited by the Abbot de Cordemoi, Letter to the New Catholics, p. 117.

(21) He was called Father Robert.

(22) Certificate of the Sieur Rambour, the King's Attorney at Sedan, cited by the Abbot de Cordemoi, ubi supra, p. 118.

No one has any reason to think it strange, that such an Accident should be mentioned in a Dictionary of this Kind; for it would avail nothing, for the future, to be silent about it. And, though I should have the Discretion not to say any thing of it, it would not be less known in Holland, where the Journal of the Learned is in every Body's Hand. Four Years ago, every one might have read, there, the Substance of what I have just now related; and besides, that the Authentic Proofs of Mr Jurieu's Recantation, (for it was he, who composed, and maintained, these Theses) are three Certificates produced by the Abbot de Cordemoi; one was made by the King's Attorney at Sedan, the other by the Count de la Bourlie, Governour of the same City, and the last by Father Nicolas d' Hibernie, A Capuchin (23). I have read these three Certificates, in the Book of the Abbot de Cordemoi; they are dated in the Year 1689. It may easily be imagined, that this Disgrace afflicted those of the Protestant Religion, and pleased the Roman Catholics.

(23) In the Abstract of a Letter from the Abbot de Cordemoi to the Catholics of the Isle of Arwert, in Xaintonge, printed in the Journal of the 24*th of* April, 1690, pag. 277, Edition of Amsterdam.

It is against my Will, that I am forced to make an Addition to this Remark, in This Edition; but, Mr Jurieu having published something very outrageous against me on this Subject, it will be proper to produce, here, both his Words, and my Reply. "The "great blank, which remains in the last Pages of this "Sheet, is a Temptation to me, which I cannot "resist, to alledge a notable Example of the Trifles, "and the Malignity, which This Book is said to be "full of. The Case is this: Mr Jurieu, in a public "and printed Dispute, quoted a Passage out of Bel- "larmin, wherein through the Slip of the Author's "Pen, or the Printer's Mistake, instead of attritus, "there was contritus; which made Bellarmin say, "That a Man, weeping, penitent, and contrite, was "damned, if he did not receive the Sacerdotal Ab- "solution: Whereas Bellarmin said, that a Man, "grievously bemoaning his Sins, through a Sense "of Attrition, was damned, if he did not receive "the Priest's Absolution. This moved a Monk to "make a great Clamour. Mr Jurieu, in a Time of "Persecution, granted him, what he would have "granted him any where else, even in a Country, "where the Protestant Religion had been the pre- "vailing Religion: that is, He acknowledged, that "there was a Fault in the printed Copy, proceeding "either from the Author's Hand, or from the Prin- "ter, and that Bellarmin's Opinion was such as the "Monk said. Any sincere Person would have owned "as much in Amsterdam, or London. Is this a Story, "which, after having been printed in several Satires, "deserved to pass, through a third and fourth Im- "pression, into a Book, which was designed for Im- "mortality? Can any thing be more mean, or piti- "ful? There is therefore both Malice, and Mean- "ness, in it (24)." These are Mr Jurieu's Words; and, in the following manner, I confuted them. "I "find, (24) Jurieu's Judgement of the Public on the Sieur Bayle's Critical Dictionary, p. 46, 47.

Digitized by Google

Doctrine of the Jesuits, concerning Predestination [G]; and that he did not favour loose Principles of Morality, nor the Expressions, which Indiscreet Zealots had insensibly introduced into the Litanies [H]. The Complaisance, which he had for his Superiors,

" find, that Bellarmin's Business sticks in his Stomach: I do not wonder at it; but Prudence should not have suffered him to make an Addition of it at the end of his Work. Silence had been best. The less certain things are stirred, the less they are troublesome. What I have said of That Affair is no Example of Trifling and Malignity. Without it, I should have ill performed the Duty of an Historian; since the Original Design of my Work was to observe the false Accusations, to which the Persons, of whom I was to speak, may have been exposed. If I had omitted This in the Article of Bellarmin, might it not have been justly said, that I was Partial, and that I omitted Things, which I could not pretend to be ignorant of? I borrowed it, not from a Satirical Book, as he falsely says; but from a Book of Controversy, and from the Journal of the Learned. I do not examine the Turn, which he takes, to cover his Fault; I only desire my Readers to have recourse to my Dictionary, in order to compare the Pieces, which are produced there, with his Reflexions. By this Comparison it will appear, how much Nature suffers in him, when he is obliged to perform some Act of Humility, and Sincerity. I am not surprized at it; for, when a Bow has been always bent one way, it is very difficult to bend it the contrary way, at the first undertaking. It is the same thing with the Fibres of our Brains (25)."

(25) Reflexions on a Pamphlet, entituled, Judgment of the Public, &c. pag. 15.

Most of my Friends thought, that I had too much neglected to make use of my Advantages: Opportunities, say They, have not failed you, but you have been wanting to Them; and a Man ought to avoid this Reproach, in a Paper War, no less, than in a true War. Why did you not fully expose This Author's Subterfuges? Could you not have confounded him by such and such Reflexions? I excused myself with the most proper means to put an end to this Discourse; which was by saying, that such Observations should not be squandered away in a loose Sheet; and that it was better to reserve them for another Edition of my Dictionary. I have considered the matter, since, more than once, and have found, that the best way is to leave my Readers to reflect on this little Incident. It will not be difficult for them to compare all the Pieces of This Process together, nor to discover, in Mr Jurieu's Apology, the grimaces, and contortions, of a Man, who suffers the rack. After all, it belongs to the Abbot de Cordemoi to refute This Apology. It is my Business, rather to be the Historian, than the Author, of the Reflexions, which This Quarrel may afford.

[G] Bellarmin did not follow the Doctrine of the Jesuits concerning Predestination.] He was a good Thomist, and no ways a Molinist. But, how great soever his Authority was among his Brethren, he had but few Imitators. The small number of Anti-Molinists, in That great Body, was, nevertheless, of some use. I cannot better explain this Thought, than by setting down the words of the Author of the History of the Congregation de Auxiliis. " We sometimes " meet with Men of an extraordinary Genius, who " have acquired Credit, and have made themselves " necessary to their Society; and who, raising themselves above the Fears and Considerations, to which " others think themselves obliged to yield, teach the " Truths, which they have learned from good Studies, more freely, not being able to resolve to " betray their Consciences, or to act against their " Knowledge. The Society bears with them, and " suffers this little Revolt, because they know how " to make it serviceable to their Party, and turn it " to their Advantage and Glory; besides they know, " there is no danger, that such an example should " be followed by a great number, and cause a Schism " in the Schools of the Society. Nay it is for their " Grandeur, and agreeable to their Principles, to " have grave Doctors of all Opinions, as it may promote their Capital Doctrine of Probability. No " one knows what may happen. Things may take " a quite contrary Turn; and, if the Society should " find themselves obliged, (at least in some Provinces) " to change their Opinion about Grace, as they did " in France about the Pope's Authority, it would " not be consistent with their Dignity to look for " grave Doctors elsewhere, on whose Authority " they might ground their Change. Among the " Divines, of whom I speak, we may reckon Father " Tiphaine, so famous for his two Works, De Hypostasi, and De Ordine, and the Author of the Thesis, which was maintained at Rome in 1674, whose " Opinions concerning Predestination, and Grace, " are altogether agreeable to Those of St Austin (26)." I have set down this Passage at length, not only because it may be inferred from it, that Bellarmin was very much confidered in his Order, and that he knew it well, but also by reason of a certain Salt, with which these words are sprinkled, which is very proper to excite many Notions.

(26) Abridged History of the Congregation de Auxiliis, pag. 31.

[H] He did not favour loose Principles of Morality, or the Expressions of Indiscreet Zealots —— in the Litanies.] The Patrons of This Morality did not approve of the Delay of Absolution; but Cardinal Bellarmin " preached, before some Popes, the necessity, " and usefulness, of this Delay; and his Sermons are " so full of this Doctrine, that it plainly appears, he " laid it much to heart, and put it in practice very " carefully. One may see some very fine Passages, " extracted out of them by Cardinal d'Aguire, in " his eighth and tenth Dissertations on the third " Council of Toledo (27)." He, who supplies me with these words, is a Jansenist, who published a Memorial, containing, I. A Summary Deduction of the Origin and present State of the Doctrinal Disputes in the Netherlands, and of the true means to put an end to them: II. A succinct Answer to the three Accusations of Jansenism, Rigorism, and Novelty (28). He says, that the " Learned and Pious Cardinal Bellarmin might have passed for an Innovator, as well as " for a Rigorist, if he had done, in these times, " what he did on divers occasions for the Re-establishment of Discipline, and for the Reformation of " Abuses. The Alterations he made in his Archbishopric of Capua; the Order, which he settled in the " Bishopric of Monte-Pulciano, which he governed " some Years, in the Absence of the right Bishop; the " Advice, which he gave Pope Clement VIII, for " the Reformation of the Church; That, which he " addressed to his own Nephew, Bishop of Theana, " for his Conduct, and for the Administration of his " Diocese; the Sermons, which he preached in the " Apostolic Palace, and in the two Churches, I have " already named, are so many witnesses of the holy, " and necessary, Novelties, which he endeavoured " to introduce, and of which he made the Obligation " known. —— Every one knows, that it is chiefly " upon This (29) that the Accusation of Novelty was " first formed. But, if it be an Innovation, Cardinal Bellarmin cannot be cleared. For he made " such Alterations in the Litanies of the Holy Virgin, as would, now-a-days, make Those exclaim " greatly, who are so lavish in bestowing the Epithet " of Innovator, and That of Enemy to the Worship of the Holy Virgin, that nothing is more common, " in their Writings, than these kind of Accusations " against the most Catholic Persons, and Those, who " are most truly devoted to the Worship of The Mother of GOD. But this most Pious and Learned " Cardinal cannot be accused of Novelty in This, " without accusing Pope Paul V of it, by whose " Order he made those Alterations. He gives an account of it in a Preface, wherein he says, That he has retrenched several Verses of the Litanies of our Lady of Loretto, because they were too metaphorical, such as these, TURRIS EBURNEA, HORTUS CONCLUSUS, and the like; and that he had omitted others, because, though they may admit of a good Sense, they are susceptible of an harsh one, from whence the Enemies of the Church take occasion to blaspheme, such as these are: MARIA, DEI ET HOMINUM MEDIATRIX, INTERCEDE PRO NOBIS; AB OMNI PECCATO LIBERA NOS DOMINA; and others of that nature. For such kind of Invocations seem to attribute to the Holy Virgin what is proper to JESUS CHRIST as GOD."

(27) Memorial, &c. See the Citation following.

(28) Printed at Delft, by Henry van Rhin, 1696. It contains 28 Pages in 4°.

(29) To wit, the correction of some Expressions, which scandalize the Heretics; as some in the Psalter, ascribed to St Bonaventure, which seem to ascribe to the Holy Virgin what belongs only to GOD, or to JESUS CHRIST, ibid. p. 20.

Digitized by Google

periors, in ſuffering ſome things to be altered in his Writings, and altering ſome Paſſages himſelf, concerning the Efficacy of Grace, does not hinder him from being, in the main, an Auguſtinian Doctor [I]. He brought himſelf into Trouble, almoſt for the ſame Reaſons, which ſo much embroiled the Abbot de la Trappe with the Monks [K]. Some [I] What was altered in his Writings —— concerning the Efficacy of Grace, does not hinder him from being an Auguſtinian Doctor.] Let us illuſtrate this by a Paſſage taken out of a Janſeniſt Book. "There "is reaſon to believe, that the Doctrine of This Cardinal, on This Point, was, originally, very agreeable to St Auguſtin's Notions, when he ſent his "Controverſies to be printed in Germany, and that "it was one of the Opinions, which his Brethren "of That Country took the Liberty to alter, in "hopes, ſays the Author of his Life, to do more good "among Heretics. I do not fear making a raſh "Judgment, in attributing this Alteration to Father Gregory of Valentia, That famous Martyr of "the Molinian Grace. He was at Ingolſtadt, whilſt "they printed Bellarmin's Controverſies there; and "he cauſed ſome Theſes to be maintained there, in "the Year 1584, which are, perhaps, the firſt of "the Society, in which this new Invention of the "Scientia Media appeared, which he thinks to be "neceſſary in order to defend Human Liberty againſt "the new Heretics. I will not deny what is ſaid "of the Heroic Patience of Father Bellarmin, for "which the Author of his Life commends him on "This Occaſion: yet it appears, by the Reviſion "he made of his Work, in 1608, that he found it "had been too much ſoftened, or rather too much "corrupted, in relation to the Efficacy of Grace. "And This Author of his Life, after having praiſed "his Modeſty, and his Humility, in ſuffering the "Alterations of ſome of his Opinions, teſtifies, that, "on the other ſide, he firmly ſtood to Thoſe, which "he believed to be either of Faith, or very much "authorized in the Church *: It cannot be conceived, "ſays he, how inflexible he appeared on ſuch Occaſions, "as was plainly ſeen by what happened in relation to "what he had taught, in his Books, concerning Predeſtination, the Aſſiſtance of Divine Grace, &c. That "is, They could never make him change his Opinion "in relation to Free-Predeſtination, which makes, "as he ſays, Part of the Faith of the Church; nor "concerning Grace, which he believes to be efficacious, not meerly by the Event, nor becauſe "it pleaſes the Will to conſent to it; but by itſelf, "and of it's own Nature: Which he poſitively ſays "to be agreeable to St Auguſtin's Doctrine, and alſo "to the Holy Scriptures. This he had always at "Heart: And the Congregation de Auxiliis, which "was juſt broke up, and where he had heard the "Dominicans maintain the true Influence of Grace, "of itſelf, with ſo much Solidity, cauſed, without "doubt, ſome Remorſe of Conſcience in him, for "having had a Patience, ſo prejudicial to Truth, "in permitting his Sentiments to be altered upon "This Subject; or in having altered them himſelf, "by virtue of the Promiſe, which he had made, "when he was admitted among the Jeſuits, to follow the Opinions of the Society, as it's Conſtitutions obliged him to do. That which is certain, is, That he corrected, not all that was to "be corrected, the Society being too far engaged "to abandon him, but ſome Paſſages, in which it "did not appear, that he acknowledged any other "manner of Operation in Grace, than That, which "is called Objective, and Moral; he will have it "known on the contrary, that he admits of an effective, and phyſical, Operation: Voluntatem moveri per gratiam etiam efficienter & phyſice; Deum "aſpirare voluntati bonum deſiderium, afflare initium "bonæ voluntatis: quæ aſpiratio ſive afflatio phyſica actio eſt & Deo propria ‡. —— That The Will "is influenced, likewiſe, Effectively and Phyſically, "by Grace; That God inſpires the Will with good "Deſires, or inſpires the firſt Motions of good Inclinations; which Inſpiration is a Phyſical Operation, "and proper to God. This he repeats ſeveral "times: For fear, ſays he †, that any one ſhould "imagine, that we only admit of a Moral Influence "on the Will by Grace." The Janſeniſt Author, having quoted ſome other Paſſages of The ſame Work of Bellarmin, concludes thus: "By all this it appears ſufficiently what we ſhould have found in "Bellarmin, if his Work had not been altered by "other Hands; and what That blind Obedience "can do, which the Jeſuits promiſe to yield to the "Society, when they are received into it; even "in relation to the Doctrine of the Church. But "it appears alſo, that the firſt and laſt Opinions of "Bellarmin were for the Doctrine of Grace, efficacious by itſelf, and that the Engagement, which "he was under to the Society, not having permitted him to expunge all that had been inſerted in "his Works without his Knowledge, nor to alter "the Foundation of the Opinions, which they had fathered upon him, yet he could not forbear giving "Teſtimony to the Truth before his Death, knowing well, that he had ſaid enough to overthrow "all that remained in his Works, contrary to St Auguſtin (30)." Let us obſerve, that Robert Abbot ſtrongly attacked Bellarmin in relation to the Alterations in the new Editions of his Works (31).

(30) Gery's Apology, p. 177, 178.

(31) Rob. Abbotus, de ſuprema poteſtate Regia, Præl. II. Art. III.

[K] He brought himſelf into Trouble, almoſt for the ſame Reaſons, which ſo much embroiled the Abbot de la Trappe with the Monks.] Bellarmin wrote a Book de Gemitu Columbæ, wherein he ſays, That one of the Things, which ought to make pious Souls lament and groan, is the great Remiſſineſs, into which ſome Religious Orders are fallen. Bitter Complaints have been made of This, as of a biting Invective (32). But the Cardinal has not wanted Apologiſts, who have maintained, that what he complained of, is but too true; and that the want of Reformation is ſo viſible in divers Places, that They, who live in this Diſorder, and do not perceive it, verify the Maxim, Senſibile juxta ac multo magis intra ſenſum poſitum non facit ſenſationem (33). Let us quote a Paſſage of Theophilus Raynaud: "Audivit Bellarmi"nus aſper & mordax, quia in libro de Gemitu Co"lumbæ fontem unum lacrymarum propoſuit, Re"ligioſorum aliquorum Ordinum laxationem, quam "homo ille ſpiritu barytono uſpiam cerni inficiatur, "& utinam vel in ſpeciem verè inficiaretur. Sed "tanti fuit, Bellarminum mordere quoquo modo. "Nam eſſe aliquas Religiones laxatas, & quibus re"formatio ſit neceſſaria, res eſt adeo nota, ut nemo "niſi cœcus non videat, ait Major in. 4. d. 38. "q. 23. Sed non eſt novum aliquos ita cæcutire, "præſertim in cauſa propria, ut notum eſt ex eo "exemplo quod recitat Nider lib. 2. de Reform. "Relig. cap. 9. Epiſcopi ex ordine collapſo aſſumpti, qui, audiente ipſo Nidero, pertinaciſſime infi"ciatus eſt, ſuum Ordinem eſſe collapſum, & refor"matione egere, quantumvis (inquit Nider), luce "foret clarius toti mundo, contrarium eſſe verum "(34). - - - - - Bellarmin was taxed with Calumny "and Invective, becauſe, in his Book de Gemitu Co"lumbæ, he makes one Source of Tears to be the "Decay of Diſcipline in ſome Orders; the truth of "which This Author (He, who complained of Bel"larmin) abſolutely denies; and I wiſh he could with "reaſon deny it, even as to Appearances. But it "was worth while to attack Bellarmin at any rate. "For, that ſome Religious Orders have relaxed Diſcipline, and ſtand in need of Reformation, is ſo "notorious, that no one, that is not blind, but ſees "it, as Major ſays, in 4. d. 38. q. 23. But it is "no uncommon Thing for People to be thus blind, "eſpecially when the Caſe is their own; as appears "from the Inſtance, alledged by Nider, lib. 2. de "Reform. Relig. c. 9. of a Biſhop, taken from a "fallen Order, who, in the hearing of Nider himſelf, obſtinately denied, that his Order was fallen, "and ſtood in need of Reformation, when (ſays Nider) "it was as clear as the Noon-Day, that the contrary was true." The Pſeudonymous Philadelphus de novo lacu, who wrote a Treatiſe de modernis Jeſuitarum moribus, tells us, that it is queſtioned, whether Bellarmin be the true Author of the Gemitus Columbæ (35). This doubt ſeems to me very unreaſonable; for This Treatiſe came out whilſt That Cardinal was living, and was inſerted in the Collection of his Works. Obſerve, that the Dominican Gravina, is one of Thoſe who wrote againſt this Gemitus. See the Remark [B] of the Article KELLER.

(32) The Author of this Complaint is a Monk, againſt whom the Jeſuit Bæza ſaid ſomething, lib. 4. de Jesu figurato, cap. 1, n. 32. See Theophilus Raynaud, Erotemat. de malis ac bonis libris, pag. 112.

(33) Theoph. Raynaud. ibid.

(34) Id. ibi.

(35) See pag. 108, of Mr Mayer's Diſſertation; De Bellarmini fide ipſis Pontificiis dubia. See, below, Citat. (67).

[L] Some

* Sin verò dogmata ipſa fidei, &c. eius in operibus cenſura notabantur, dici non poteſt quàm ſtantem ſe immutabilemque præberet. Clarè id agnitum eſt in his quæ evenere circa editas opiniones de prædeſtinatione, de auxiliis divinæ gratiæ, &c. lib. 2, cap. 5.

‡ Recognitio oper. Bellarm. Ingolſtadii, 1608, p. 96.

† Pag. 97.

Digitized by Google

Some have thought, that he did great Prejudice to the Roman Catholics, by his Books of Controverſy [L], becauſe the Objections of the Heretics are to be found in them. An ingenious Man, not being able to find Bellarmin's Works in any Book-ſeller's Shop in Italy, ſuſpected that they were forbidden to be expoſed to Sale, for fear the Opinions, which the Author confuted, ſhould be known [M]. The whole Body of Controverſies, publiſhed by this Cardinal, comprehended, at firſt, three Volumes in Folio; but they were divided into four, in the Edition of Cologne, 1615, becauſe

[L] Some ſaid, that he did great Prejudice to the Roman Catholics by his Books of Controverſy.] Father Theophilus Raynaud confeſſes, that ſome have thought, that, perhaps, it might be very expedient to ſuppreſs Cardinal Bellarmin's Controverſial Books, as well becauſe the Heretics may eaſily make a wrong uſe of them, taking what is for their Turn out of them, and leaving the reſt, as becauſe the Catholics may be deceived by them, for want of underſtanding the Anſwers to the Objections. Some have thought, that Cardinal du Perron was of This Opinion; and, perhaps, they were not miſtaken: Nay, it is ſaid, that he openly declared it in Converſation, not conſidering the Conſequences of it. But, when he came to know, that he was charged with judging in this manner of Bellarmin's Books, he ſtrongly denied it. Doctiſſimus Card. Perronius cum hoc ſibi calumnioſum de Bellarmini Controverſiis judicium affingi inaudiſſet, copioſè & validè illud deterſit, ut refertur in ipſius Bellarmini vita lib. 2. cap. 7 (36).

(36) Theoph. Raynaud, de bonis ac malis libris, pag. 223.

He wrote a Letter to That Cardinal, wherein he confuted this Accuſation with all his Induſtry and Strength. This Letter, dated from Rome the tenth of February 1605, is in the Life of Bellarmin, compoſed by Fuligatti, and in the Diſſertation of Mr Mayer, whom I quote before (37), and who informs us, that Cardinal Bentivoglio proteſted he had heard Cardinal du Perron paſs this Judgment on Bellarmin's Controverſies. Sanctè teſtari - - - - - ſe ex ipſius Cardinalis Perronii ore propriis hoc excepiſſe auribus de Bellarmini Controverſiis judicium (38). The Collector of the Perroniana had not heard him ſay the ſame thing, or elſe he did not think fit to mention it; for here is all he ſays: "Cardinal Bellarmin has a very fine and clear Wit. He has treated "very well of the Sacraments in genere; nothing "can be better. But we cannot ſay the ſame of the "Treatiſe de Euchariſtia. When he found any Sub-"ject already well ſcanned, and examined, by others, "he explained it wonderfully well by the beauty and "clearneſs of his Wit; but, when he found a Sub-"ject intricate and much confuſed, he loſt himſelf "in it (39). He often made uſe of the Tranſlations "of the Greek Fathers, without having recourſe to "the Greek; I wonder at it, ſince he underſtood "it very well. Among other Books, he makes uſe "of the Præparatio Evangelica for praying to the "Saints, and quotes it, in Latin, from the Tranſla-"tion of Trapezuntius, which is very different from "the Greek, and which contains a Clauſe, not at "all to be found in the Greek." That my Readers may judge of all this, I have ſet down here the Paſſage of Cardinal Bentivoglio. "Tale era il con-"corſo generale intorno alle ſue controverſie (40) "benche non rieſcono mai tanto uniformi i giuditi, "che non vi ſiano ancora di quelli frà i più dotti "Cattolici, è più verſati in materie ſimili, che ha-"verebbono qualche volta deſiderato di vederlo "ſtringere, ed abbater con forza maggiore alcuni "argomenti heretici, e con maggior pienezza ripor-"tare quei tanti, e ſi manifeſti vantaggi, che poteva "dargli in ogni queſtione la Dottrina Cattolica; "meco più d'una volta in Francia moſtro d'aver "queſto ſenſo particolarmente il Cardinal Perrone, "quel gran Cardinale, quel ch'e ſtato l'Agoſtino Fran-"ceſe del noſtro ſecolo: del reſto lo riconoſ-"ceva ancor egli un per de più dotti, e più emi-"nenti, e più benemeriti ſcrittori, che haveſſe hav-"uto la Chieſa ne i tempi noſtri (41). - - - - - Such "was the general Opinion of his Controverſial Wri-"tings; though the Judgments paſſed on them were "not ſo uniform, but there were ſtill ſome among "the more learned Catholics, who wiſhed to have "ſeen him combat ſome Heretical Arguments more "forcibly, and with more eaſe obtain thoſe ſo great "and manifeſt Advantages, which the Catholic Do-"ctrine might have given him on every Queſtion. "Cardinal Perrone, in particular, declared to me, "more than once, in France, that this was his Opi-"nion; That Great Cardinal, who was the French "Auguſtin of our Age: yet even He acknowledged "him for one of the moſt eminent and moſt deſerving, "Writers, which the Church has had in our Time." By this it appears, that the Cenſure was reduced to This, that Bellarmin had not always confuted the Reaſons of the Heretics with all the Strength and Victory, which the Goodneſs of his Cauſe might have ſupplied him with. Obſerve, that ſome Proteſtants confeſs, that he ſets down their Reaſons and Objections honeſtly enough. Mr Heidegger praiſed him among others things, "quod non perinde malig-"nus atque Jeſuitæ alii, Valentia imprimis, Vaſques, "Becanus, Maldonatus, &c. meliore ut plurimum "fide adverſariorum ſuorum argumenta allegavit, & "amantior quam illi veritatis, ſicubi erravit, pru-"dens ſcienſque errare non videtur (42). - - - - That, "being more candid, than the reſt of the Jeſuits, "particularly Valentia, Vaſques, Becanus, Maldona-"tus, &c. he generally repreſented the Arguments of "his Adverſaries more impartially; and that, as he "appeared to have a greater Regard, than They, to "Truth, if he was miſtaken, his Errors do not ſeem "to be voluntary." Let the Reader judge as he pleaſes of the Narrative of the Dominican Vincent Baron. That Monk engaged in Controverſies, and diſputed ſometimes with Proteſtant Divines. He affirms, that he heard one of them ſay, that Bellarmin had done them a very great Piece of Service, by putting their Divinity into good Order, and by giving more force to their Arguments, than they had in their Writers. Whereupon Father Baron praiſes Bellarmin's Plain-dealing, but without forgetting to ſay, that he had throughly confuted the ſame Reaſons of the Proteſtants, which he had repreſented with all their Force (43). He adds, that he had heard ſay, in That Cardinal's Juſtification, that, in a Diſpute about Myſteries, the Arguments of thoſe, who attack are more eaſily apprehended, than the Arguments of thoſe, who reply. "Hoc ſolum ad-"junxerim quod in defenſionem Bellarmini me aliàs "audiviſſe memini, myſteria fidei hoc habere, quòd, "cum ſuperent captum rationis humanæ, faciliora "ſunt ſenſui argumenta quæ impugnant, quàm reſ-"ponſa, quæ defendunt (44)." This is to tell us plainly, that Complaints were made, that Bellarmin propoſed the Objections of the Heretics better, than he confuted them. I ſhall examine, in another Place (45), whether They, who are ſo honeſt as to ſet down fairly the Arguments of their Adverſaries (which but few Perſons do), behave anſwerably to the Spirit, which prevails, more or leſs, in all Communions, of not permitting the Sale of Heretical Books.

(42) Heidegger Hiſtor. Papatus, pa. 312.

(43) Baronius Apolog. lib. 4. Sect. 4. pag. 161, 162.

(44) Id. ib. pag. 162.

(45) In Remark [G], of the Article CHRYSIPPUS.

[M] An ingenious Man —— ſuſpected, that they were forbidden to be expoſed to ſale, for fear of making known the Opinions, which They refuted.] The ingenious Perſon, whom I mean, is Sir Edwin Sandys. See what he ſays: "I proteſt, it was never "in my Power to find Bellarmin's Works, or Thoſe "of Gregory de Valentia, or any other of that Na-"ture, in any of the Bookſellers Shops. But, in-"ſtead of them, I found infinite Heaps of Inve-"ctives, and Declamations, every where; which "made me conjecture, that they were deſignedly "ſuppreſſed, and kept within the Incloſures of the "Monaſteries, leaſt, by the free and common reading "of them, wherein the Author muſt of neceſſity "have alledged the Arguments, and Tenets of the "Proteſtants, ſome Flower might be ſmelt, and "ſome Fruit, or Seed, of the Proteſtant Religion "might be taſted. I leave it to more ſagacious "Perſons to enquire whether this Conjecture of mine "be true, or not (46)." Let us add King James's Words. "Fama proditum eſt, neſcio quàm verum, "libros controverſiarum Bellarmini in Italia non per-"mitti vulgo, propterea quod objectiones ejus nimis "validæ

(46) Survey of the State of Religion, pag. 224. Edit. in 12mo. 1642.

(37) In Citat. (35). See pag. 184, &c. of this Diſſertation.

(38) John Frider. Mayer, ibid. pag. 192.

(39) Campanella Synt. de libris propriis, cap. 4, Art. 9, judges of it almoſt after the ſame manner: Bellarminus, ſays he, controverſias hic tempeſtate plurimum illuſtravit, clarus, non inelegans, magnus in labore, ſed modicus tamen in inventione.

(40) That is to ſay of Bellarmin.

(41) Memorie, overo diario del Card. Bentivoglio, pag. 121, 122, Edit. Amſtel. 1648.

Digitized by Google

becauſe ſeven new Treatiſes were added to the firſt Volume, whereof the laſt is the Reviſion, and Correction, which the Author made, of all his Works [N]. It is thus, that the Writers of the Bibliotheque of the Jeſuits have explained themſelves; but This is not exact [O]. Beſides this Body of Controverſies, he compoſed many other Books, which amount to three Volumes in Folio, in the Edition of Cologne, 1617 (e). Some of his Sermons, and many of his Letters, have been publiſhed ſince his Death (f). His Life has been written by four, or five, Authors [P]; the laſt, if I am not miſtaken, is Daniel Bartoli. The raſh Judgment, Scaliger paſſed on Bellarmin, cannot be ſufficiently condemned [Q].

(e) Alegambus, p. 411.

(f) Sotuel, in Bibl. oth. Jeſuit. pag. 724.

Though this Jeſuit had eagerly maintained the Pope's Power over the Temporalities of Kings, yet he diſpleaſed Sixtus V, and had the Mortification to ſee his Work inſerted in the Index of the Inquiſition [R]. What he wrote on the ſame Subject

(47) Jacobus Rex, in Proteſtatione Anti-Vorſtiana, apud Mayer. Diſſ. de fide Bellarm. pag. 183.

" validæ ſint, reſponſiones autem nimis debiles (47). " —— It is reported, with what Truth I cannot " ſay, that the Controverſial Works of Bellarmin are " not permitted to be publickly ſold in Italy, becauſe " his Objections are too ſtrong, and his Anſwers too " weak."

[N] The Reviſion, and Correction, which the Author made, of all his Works.] I have read a curious Particular in Mr Chevillier, which I ſhall relate here with great Pleaſure. " This Cardinal, ſeeing, that " his Controverſies were printing in divers Places, " and that many Faults were left in them, thought " he ought to endeavour to remedy this Evil. He " made ſuch an exact Copy of his Book, and corrected " it ſo well, that there remained not one Error in the " Manuſcript; and he gave it to a Bookſeller of " Venice, to have a moſt exact Impreſſion of it. But " it happened quite contrary to his Hopes. The " Printer neglected this Edition ſo much, that it pro- " ved the moſt faulty of all. This famous Author, " being vexed at it, took Pen in Hand to acquaint " the Public with it, after having ſeen, that That " Impreſſion, being accounted an Original one, had " carried the Evil into a ſecond, and had alſo much " infected the fair Edition of Ingolſtadt, to which it " ſerved for a Model. He publiſhed his Book, en- " tituled, Recognitio Librorum omnium Roberti Bel- " larmini, wherein he inſerted a Correctorium, which " ſhews all the Faults of That Edition of Venice, and " was printed in octavo, at Ingolſtadt, in the Year " 1698. He complains, in the Preface, pag. 125, " that, in above forty Places, the Printer makes him " give a Negative, for an Affirmative, Anſwer, and " an Affirmative for a Negative. And the Errata, " which he made, fills Eighty eight Pages. Et quod " graviſſimum eſt (animadverti) ſuprà quadragintà " locos ita eſſe corruptos, additis vel detractis negan- " tibus particulis, vel alio modo immutatis, ut contra- " rium omninò ſenſum contineant, quod certè ſummo me " dolore affecit —— tamen quoniam animadverti non " paucos errores editionis primæ Venetæ in Editionem " ſecundam Venetam, & in Ingolſtadienſem ex Venetâ " expreſſam, tranſiſſe, ideò in Correctorio notavi Li- " bros, Capita, Paragraphos, Columnas, Literas, & " Verſus (48)." Note, that This Correctorium was, at firſt, printed at Rome, in the Year 1607, and that, in the Year 1596, the Author, cauſing his controverſial Works, reviſed, and enlarged, to be printed at Ingolſtadt, had acquainted the World, that he did not acknowledge the preceeding Editions for his. Not that they contained any Opinions, which ought to be diſapproved, but on account of the Faults of the Impreſſion, as he told Poſſevin, in the Year 1598 (49).

(48) Chevillier, of the Origin of Printing at Paris, pag. 162.

(49) Taken out of Poſſevin, in Appar. Tom. II, p. 388.

[O] What the Writers of the Bibliotheques of the Jeſuits have ſaid of the Correction of his Works, is not exact.] I find, in a Work, printed in the Year 1608 (50), that, before That Year, Bellarmin's Controverſies had appeared, in four Volumes. The firſt Edition in three Volumes, in Folio, is of Ingolſtadt, 1586. The following Year, they were reprinted again, at the ſame Place, in Octavo. A new Edition was made of them in the ſame City, in 1588, and another in the Year 1590. The firſt Edition, in four Volumes, is of Venice, apud Minimam Societatem. An Appendix of ſeveral particular Treatiſes was added to it (51). It muſt be ſaid, then, that Alegambus, and his Continuator, are not exact, ſince they give us That of Cologne, 1615, for the firſt Edition, in four Volumes. They ſay alſo, that the firſt Edition of the firſt Tome came out in the Year 1581, That of the ſecond in the Year 1583, and That of the third in the Year 1592. This is contrary to Poſſevin's Relation, and wants Exactneſs on another Account; for They ſhould have named the Place, where theſe pretended firſt Editions were made.

(50) Apparatus ſacer Poſſevini, Tom. II, pag. 330.

(51) Id. ib.

[P] His Life has been written by four or five Authors.] Mr Teiſſier reckons up nine of them, and ranges them in this manner; 1. Daniel Bartoli; 2. Didacus Ramirez; 3. Jacobus Fuligatus; 4. Georgius Robertſonus; 5. Johannes Morinus; 6. Marcellinus Cervinus; 7. Petrus Morinus; 8. Sylveſt. Petra Sancta; 9. Tarquin. Galluccius (52). But we muſt reduce the Number; James Fuligatti, John Morin (53), Peter Morin (54), and Sylveſter Petra Sancta, ought to paſs only for one Hiſtorian of Bellarmin; for the three laſt have only tranſlated the Italian Work of Fuligatti; and, if Petra Sancta, who tranſlated it into Latin, made ſome Additions to it, he ought not, therefore, to be conſidered as one of the Hiſtorians. If George Robertuſſon wrote This Cardinal's Life, ought he not to appear, in his Place, in the Body of Mr Teiſſier's Book? But he no where appears there. We meet with only one Georgius Robertſonus there, who was Author of the Life of Robert Rollocus, a Scotch Divine. Note, that Tarquin Galluccius did not compoſe Bellarmin's Hiſtory, but only his Funeral Oration. Mr Mayer gave a more exact Liſt (55); he quotes the Life of Bellarmin, written by James Fuligatti, and printed at Rome, in the Year 1624, in 4to; Daniel Bartoli de vita Bellarmini, at Rome 1618 (56), in 4to; Marcellinus Cervinus de vita & moribus Bellarmini, at Sienna 1622, in 8vo; Didacus Ramirez in vita Bellarmini ex variis authoribus concinnata; & Nicolao Antonio in Bibliotheca Hiſpana memorata; And the Account de pio obitu Bellarmini ex literis Eudæmono-Johannis, printed at Dilingen, in the Year 1621. He quotes alſo Gallutius, Alegambus, Sebaſtiani Badii decora Roberti Cardinalis Bellarmini (57); the Elogies of Euſebius Sarrini, a Florentin Abbot of the Order of Citeaux; Ughelli, in the Four hundred fifth Page of the ſixth Volume of the Italia Sacra; Imperialis; Andrew du Sauſſai; & Nicius Erythræus. He forgot Edward Coffin, an Engliſh Jeſuit, who wrote a Book de morte Cardinalis Bellarmini, printed at St Omer, in the Year 1623, in 8vo: he diſguiſed himſelf under theſe two Letters C. E (58). Note, that Didacus Ramirez was a Spaniſh Jeſuit, who died the eighth of April 1647 (59).

(52) Teiſſier, Bibl. Biblioth. in indice X, pag. 306.

(53) Father of the Oratory; his French Tranſlation of Fuligatti was printed at Paris, in 1635, in 8vo, according to Teiſſier, pag. 193.

(54) A Jeſuit: His French Tranſlation of Fuligatti was printed at Paris, in 1628, in 8vo, according to Mayer. Diſſ. de fide Bellarm. pag. 165.

(55) Mayer, ibid.

(56) It is probably an Error of the Preſs; for that Work of Bartoli was not printed till 1677.

(57) Sotuel, Biblioth. Societ. Jeſuit. pag. 724. calls him Badus, and places the printing of his Book at Genoa, in 1671, in 4to. Mr Leti ſpeaks very amply of This Badus, a Phyſician of Genoa, in the fourth part of the Italia Regnante.

(58) Sotuel de Scriptor. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 186.

[Q] The raſh Judgment Scaliger paſſed on Bellarmin cannot be ſufficiently condemned.] Let him ſay, as much as he pleaſes (60), that if any One would give him a Bellarmin, he would not accept of it, and that he would take care not to loſe his Time in reading ſuch an Author, who writes ill, quod male ſcripſit non legam, nec male bonas horas collocabo. But he is inexcuſable in ſaying, that Bellarmin did not believe any thing of what he printed, and that he was a meer Atheiſt (61). It is to uſurp GOD's Right who is the only Judge of Thoughts, and he who ſearches the Reins and the Hearts. It is to ſet a bad Example, and to authorize the fury of thoſe, who ſaid, that Calvin, Beza, &c. preached againſt their Conſcience, and had no Religion.

(59) Id. ib. pag. 173.

(60) In Scaligeranis, pag. 29.

(61) Ibid.

[R] He had the Mortification to ſee his Work de Pontifice Romano inſerted in the Index of the Inquiſition.] From This Fact Mr Arnauld draws a good Argument ad hominem againſt thoſe, who preach up the Authority of the Congregations of the Index. We find, ſays he (62), that Bellarmin's Work de Romano Pontifice " was proſcribed by Sixtus V, becauſe he " judged, as well as thoſe, to whom he had given " it to be examined, that it had done great Prejudice " to the Pontifical Dignity, by ſaying,, that the " Power, which they pretended, that J. C. gave to " his

(62) Arnauld's Difficulties propoſed to Mr Steyaert. Part 9, pag. 38, & ſeq. He quotes the 7th Chapter of the 2d Book of the Life of Bellarmin, written, in Italian, by Father Fuligatti, and tranſlated into Latin by Sylveſter à Petra Sancta, both Jeſuits.

Digitized by Google

ject againſt William Barclay was treated ſtill worſe in France [S]. Among all the Roman Catholics, who have wrote againſt him, none has ſo fully diſcovered the weak Parts of his Works, as John de Launoi [T]. We ſhall mention two of Bellarmin's Thoughts, which ſhew, that he loved Peace, and that he was not pleaſed with the Ambition of the Cardinals [U]. The Proteſtants have taken notice of one thing, which he ſays, concerning the Merit of Works, viz. That Becauſe of the Uncertainty

" his Vicar, on Earth, over the Temporalities of " Kings, is not direct, but only indirect; and it " was for this reaſon, that, theſe Books de Romano " Pontifice, were inſerted among the Prohibited. " This is what theſe two Jeſuits (63) give us to un- " derſtand, ſomewhat obſcurely, to induce us to be- " lieve, that this proceeded not ſo much from the " Pope, as from Bellarmin's Enemies, who had per- " ſuaded him to it: Doctrina Bellarmini autoritatem " illam MINUI, quam Chriſtus Dominus Vicario ſuo " in terris dedit ad Eccleſiæ dignitatem firmitatem- " que; idque fieri in opinione ipſius circa Dominium " temporarium, quod Pontifici competit item IN RES " TEMPORARIAS. By which Theſe Authors under- " ſtand the Power, which it is believed, at Rome, " the Pope has, to depoſe Kings; as appears by the " following Page, where Bellarmin's Book againſt " William Barclay on this Subject of depoſing Kings " is called: Tractatio de Poteſtate Pontificis IN RES " TEMPORARIAS, adverſus Gulielmum Barclaium. " So that it was not for want of having underſtood " Bellarmin's Doctrine right on this Subject, that " he received the Affront of having his Books put " among the condemned Writers; but becauſe That " Pope was not ſatisfied with the indirect Power, " which he gave him, over Kings, and would have " a direct one. And this continued as long as That " Pope lived. For theſe ſame Authors acknowledge, " that it was not, till after his Death, that the Car- " dinals expunged them ex indice probroſorum ſcrip- " torum. Pray, Sir, tell us, whether you think, " that any Jeſuit will own, that it would have been " a mortal Sin to read Bellarmin's Books de Romano " Pontifice, during the Life of Sixtus V, and that, " if a Prieſt had done it, he would have deſerved to " be deprived, by a Sentence, of the Power of preach- " ing, confeſſing, and directing Souls."

(63) Fuligatti, and Petra Sancta, in the Life of Bellarmin.

Conſult the Diſſertation of the famous Mr Mayer, de fide Bellarmini ipſis Pontificiis ambigua, printed at Amſterdam 1697, and you will find, there (64), a long Paſſage of Fuligatti, and ſome others. Conſult alſo the ſecond Tome of the French Mercury; it will inform you " That, towards the end of the Year " 1586, when the firſt Book of the Controverſies of " Bellarmin was brought into France, of the Impreſ- " ſion of Ingolſtadt, Stephen Michel, a Bookſeller of " Lyons, being at Paris, joined with another Book- " ſeller in publiſhing That Book; which they began " to do; and, notice thereof being given to the " King's Attorney-General, he cauſed one and twenty " Sheets, already finiſhed to be ſeized, and forbad " them to continue the printing of it: It was on ac- " count of the third Controverſy, where he treated " de Summo Pontifice, and where he attributed an in- " direct Power to the Pope over Emperors, Kings, " and Sovereign Princes, and divers other things a- " gainſt the temporal Sovereignty of Kings (65)." One may therefore ſay of the medium, which Bellarmin obſerved, between the Ultramontain Canoniſts, and the Doctors of the Sorbonne, what Herennius Pontius declared in relation to the Conduct of his Son, who ſaved the Lives, but not the Honour, of the Roman Soldiers. Iſta quidem ſententia ea eſt, quæ neque amicos parat, neque inimicos tollit, ſervare modo quos ignominia irritaveris (66). —— It is an Opinion, which neither gains you Friends, nor loſes you Enemies, barely to preſerve Thoſe, whom you exaſperate againſt you by Ignominy. This Jeſuit obſerved a mean which diſpleaſed the Court of Rome, without pleaſing the Court of France. It is the common fate of moderate Opinions; they neither procure you Friends, nor appeaſe your Enemies, and they leave you for a mark to the two Factions, which place themſelves in the oppoſite Extreams.

(64) Pag. 177, & ſeq.

(65) French Mercury, Tom. II, pag. 32.

(66) Titus Livius, lib. 9, Decad. I.

[S] What he wrote on the ſame Subject againſt W. Barclay, was treated ſtill worſe in France.] I mean his Tractatus de poteſtate ſummi Pontificis in Temporalibus adverſus Gulielmum Barclaium, printed at Rome in the Year 1610. Mr Mayer obſerves, that King James wrote againſt This Treatiſe, and that the Senate of Venice, and the Parliament of Paris, condemned it. He gives us, in Latin, the Decree of That Parliament, and refers us to the Continuator of Thuanus (67). He ſays alſo, that This Work of Bellarmin wanted but little of being burnt at Paris by the Hands of the Common Executioner: " Faces jam " accendebat carnifex, ut pœnas à ſcripto & ſcriptore " ſumeret, niſi Reginæ animus, & iteratis & non de- " ſinentibus Jeſuitarum deprecationibus fractus, illas " extinxiſſet (68). —— The Executioner already be- " gan to light the Fire, to puniſh The Work and it's " Author, had not the Diſpoſition of the Queen, in- " fluenced by the repeated and inceſſant Intreaties of " the Jeſuits, extinguiſhed it." See the ſecond Tome of the French Mercury, and you will find, there (69), the Subſtance of the Remonſtrance of Mr Servin, the King's Firſt Advocate, and the Decree of the Parliament (70), in theſe Terms: " The Court forbids all " Perſons, of what Quality and Condition ſoever, on " the Penalty of High-Treaſon, to receive, retain, " communicate, print, cauſe to be printed, or to ex- " poſe to ſale the ſaid Book. And enjoins thoſe, " who ſhall have any Copies of the ſaid Book, or " know any Perſons, who have, to declare it ſpeedi- " ly to the Ordinary Judges, that diligent ſearch " may be made after them, at the Requeſt of the " Subſtitutes of the ſaid Attorney-General, and that " the Guilty may be proceeded againſt, as is requi- " ſite (71)."

(67) Jo. Frider. Mayer, S. Reg. Majeſt. Suec. per Germaniam Suecic. Conſiliarius in Sacris Primarius, Doct. & Profeſſ. Theolog. & Eccleſiæ Hamburgenſis ad D. Jacobi Paſtor. Differt. de Bellarmini ſive ipſis Pontificiis dubia, pag. 180.

(68) Id. ib. pag. 183.

(69) French Mercury, pag. 33, & ſeq.

(70) Novemb. 26, 1610.

(71) French Mercury. ib. pag. 36.

[T] No One has ſo fully diſcovered the weak Parts of his Works, as John de Launoi.] Mr Mayer will inform you fully of This, in his Book. See alſo the Remark [I] of the Article LAUNOI (JOHN).

[U] He loved Peace, and had not learnt the Ambition of the Cardinals.] Peter de St Romuald ſays, that the moſt excellent of all Bellarmin's Works, " treating of Controverſies, was proſcribed at Rome, " and inſerted in the Index of Infamous Books. —— " Which he bore, adds he, with the ſame Patience, " as he ſuffered the Contradictions of a certain Car- " dinal, in the Conclave, ſaying to thoſe, who " wondered at it, that an Ounce of Peace was worth " more than a Pound of Victory. Being alſo asked " (perhaps on account of that Cardinal) how it hap- " pened, that there were ſo few Cardinals in the Ca- " talogue of the Saints; it is, ſaid he, becauſe they " aſpire to be Moſt-Holy: A ſmart Anſwer for thoſe, " who know what theſe Words ſignify in Italy; per- " che vogliono eſſer ſantiſſimi (72)." The meaning of which is, that the Deſire of being made Pope hinders the Cardinals from acquiring Holineſs, though That Deſire be a longing after the Title of Moſt Holy Father. The Critical Miſcellanies of Mr Ancillon inform me, that Mr Godeau, " who wrote Bellarmin's " Elogy, ſays, that one of his uſual Sayings was, that " the Cardinals are not Holy, becauſe they would " be Moſt Holy, that is to ſay Popes, who are cal- " led Moſt Holy Fathers: An Opinion, which he " had from his Uncle Marcellus II, who cried out, " one Day, at Table, Non video quomodo qui lo- " cum hunc altiſſimum tenent ſalvari poſſint (73), I " do not ſee how thoſe that are ſeated in St Peter's " Chair can be ſaved (74)." The Reſpect, which I have for the Memory of the late Mr Ancillon, a Man of much Piety and Learning, is not inconſiſtent with the Liberty I am going to take. I do not find an exact Connexion between the Cardinal's Thought, and That of the Pope. Bellarmin's Intention was, not to ſay, that a Pope can hardly be ſaved, but that the Deſire of being made a Pope attaches the Cardinals in ſuch a manner to earthly Things, and unjuſt Intrigues, that they can make no Progreſs in the Way of Holineſs. But Pope Marcellus II had not this Thought; he only conſidered the Obſtacles, which a Man, who is actually Pope, meets with in the way of Salvation. So that Bellarmin's Jeſt does not ſeem to me to be part of his Uncle's Inheritance. If it be objected againſt me, that a Pope ſtands in need of as many Intrigues to perform the Part, which he acts in the World, as a Cardinal to attain to the Pontificate;

(72) Peter de St Romuald Abridg. Chronol. ad Ann. 1621, p. 416, 417.

(73) Onuphrius in Marcello II. apud Ancill. ibid. p. 329.

(74) Ancillon's Critic. Miſcel. Tom. I, pag. 328.

Digitized by Google

certainty of our own Righteouſneſs, and for fear of Vain-Glory, the ſureſt way is to put our whole Truſt in the alone Goodneſs and Mercy of God (g). Neither have they forgot what he preached at Louvain, in 1571, on the Excellency of the Bible. They make uſe of it to confute all, that he has ſaid ſince, in his Works, againſt the Perfection and Sufficiency of the Scripture (b). The Book, which ſupplies me with theſe Words, contains many ſolid and curious Remarks concerning Bellarmin. I find in it, that This Cardinal, might, perhaps, have been Pope, if he had not been a Jeſuit [X]; for Henry IV told the French Cardinals, who went to the Conclave, after the Death of Clement VIII, that he ſhould be very glad if Bellarmin was made Pope (i). I have read alſo, that the ſame Jeſuit acquired the Eſteem of Henry IV, whilſt he was at his Court, whither he was ſent with Cardinal Henry Cajetan (k), and that it is certain, the beſt of his Works is

(g) Bellarm. lib. v, de Juſtific. cap. 7, n. fit tertia, apud Daille, Reply to Cottibi, Part III, cap. 24. pag. 303.

(b) Ancillon's Critical Miſcellanies of Literature, Part I. pag. 333.

(i) Ancillon, ubi ſupra, p. 329.

(k) Id. ibid. pag. 333.

cate; I ſhall anſwer, that it is another Queſtion, and that it is to exceed the Limits, which ought to be put to the Senſe of the Words, which Bellarmin made uſe of. I go further, and maintain, that, though the ſame Cardinal had ſaid, on ſome other Occaſion; That Popes are ſo far from deſerving to be canonized, that they can hardly keep themſelves from Hell; it cannot be pretended, that the Italian Words, which you have ſeen before, are the Copy of his Uncle Pope Marcellus's Exclamation. That Exclamation puts me in mind of the Sally of a Frenchman, who heard ſomebody praiſe the Piety, and moral Severity, of Innocent XI, in the Year 1689. "The Catholic "Church, ſaid he, has no need of ſuch a Pope; it "were better for her to have a Sovereign Pontiff, "who underſtands the Art of aggrandizing himſelf, "and of taking hold of all Opportunities, according "to the Politics of the moſt refined Courts. The "Greatneſs, and Majeſty, of the Catholic Church, "require a Head, not endowed with the Virtues of a "Prieſt, but with the Talents of a cunning Politician. "They require a Head, who has the Courage to "damn himſelf, for the Good and Increaſe of his "Dominions; this is the way to perform the Office of a good Shepherd, who gives his Life for "his Sheep; this is to devote one's ſelf for the Republic, better than Codrus, and the Decii did (75). "A ſcrupulous, and devout Pope, like good Adrian VI, "is only fit to let the Temporals of the Church "periſh (76), which are ſo advantageous for the Maintenance of the Spirituals." Such was This Frenchman's Diſcourſe.

(75) Codrus pro patria non timidus mori. Horat. Od. 19, l. 3.

(76) See Remark [Q], of the Article HADRIAN VI.

[X] He might, perhaps, have been made Pope, if he had not been a Jeſuit.] He had more Votes, than any of the reſt, in the firſt Scrutiny of the Conclave of Leo XI (77); nevertheleſs, they did not think of him, then, in earneſt. It was in the following Conclave (78), that they looked upon him as a fit Man to be Pope, and that they endeavoured to procure him the Pontificate; but Cardinal Aldobrandini's Faction made this Deſign miſcarry. Bellarmin's Virtue, and the too great Power of the Jeſuits, were the two chief Conſiderations, which hindred him from ſucceeding Leo XI. "Aldobrandino —— fuggiva. —— Bellar-"mino come Gieſuita ſcropoloſo, è che tal volta "haveva improvato molte attioni di Clemente "Zio, è di lui ſteſſo (79). —— Haveva Bellarmino "grand' amici per eſſer egli di letteratura, è bontà "ſingolare, mà l'eſſer Gieſuita, è di conſcienza de-"licata, lo rendevano poco amabile, appreſſo molti, li "quali moſſero ogni pietra, per rovinarlo. —— Fù "rinovata, è ſparſa per tutto la memoria del diſ-"greſſo dato à Bellarmino da Siſto V, che gli fece "prohibire l'opera ſua de poteſtate Papæ: furono diſ-"corſe al vivo tutte le conſeguenze, che potevano "deviare dall' eſaltatione di un Gieſuita; & inſomma "s'adoprornò in maniera, che s'aquietò affatto il tut-"to (80). —— Aldobrandino —— fled away. —— "Bellarmin, as a conſcientious Jeſuit, and who had often diſapproved of many Actions of Clement, his "Uncle, and of Clement himſelf. —— Bellarmin had "great Friends, on account of his Learning, and ſingular Goodneſs; but his being a Jeſuit, and of a "tender Conſcience, rendered him diſagreeable to many, "who left no Stone unturned to ruin him. —— The "Memory of Bellarmin's Diſgrace with Sixtus V, who "prohibited his Book De Poteſtate Papæ, was revived, "and ſpread every where: Every Conſequence, which "might hinder the Promotion of a Jeſuit, was thoroughly diſcuſſed; and they employed their Intereſt "in ſuch a manner, that the whole Affair was dropped." Let us ſet down, here, a Paſſage of Mr Ancillon. "I have always heard ſay, that the Court of Rome "will take care not to place a Jeſuit in the Papal "Chair, and that Europe ought not to deſire it; be-"cauſe they would infallibly make themſelves Maſters of the Holy See; inſomuch that all the other "Orders might look upon themſelves as excluded "from it for ever, and that by this means they would "make their Power, which is already very great, "almoſt infinite and boundleſs: If we believe thoſe, "who write on this Subject, it ſeems this Maxim is "not new in the Court of Rome. They have di-"ſtruſted the Jeſuits a long time, and are on their "guard againſt them, in this reſpect; and we read, "in the Life of Bellarmin himſelf, that Clement VIII, "ſpeaking of That Cardinal, who had already made "himſelf famous, ſaid, Dignus, ſed Jeſuita eſt (81)." We have a Proof, here, of the raſh Judgments, which are only grounded on firſt Appearances. If you do not examine things thoroughly, and if you conſider only the firſt Impreſſions, which they make on the Mind, you will imagine, that, in order to obtain a Dignity, it is a very great Advantage to belong to a very powerful Body; but, if you take the pains to reflect, you will find almoſt an invincible Obſtacle in This very Thing. Within theſe ten Years (82) we have ſeen two Examples of this. Nothing contributed ſo much to exclude the Cardinal of Furſtemberg from the Archbiſhopric of Cologne, and the Cardinal of Bouillon from the Biſhopric of Liege, as their being recommended, and protected, by the Court of France, whoſe Power was ſuperior to That of other States. Refer to This what I have ſaid in Remark [H], of the Article INNOCENT XI, and remember the Thought of Florus, ipſa ſibi obſtat magnitudo. I have already applied it, on a quite different Occaſion (83).

(77) Conclave di Leone XI, pag. 44.

(78) Year of Paul V.

(79) Conclave di Paolo V, pag. 512.

(80) Ibid. p. 519, 520.

(81) Ancillon's Critic. Miſcell. pag. 330, 331.

(82) I write this in the Year 1698.

(83) In the Article ACHILLEA, Citat. (29).

Note, That Monſ. Godeau obſerves, "that Baro-"nius, having made ſome Overtures to Bellarmin "of the Thought, that he, and ſome other Cardinals, "had of making him Pope, he received the Propoſal "as an Injury, was downright angry at it, and re-"ſolutely anſwered, that, if the taking up of a Straw "from the Ground could make him Pope, he would "not ſtoop to take it up (84)." I wonder that Mr Ancillon has not ſpoken of the ſolemn Vow, which Bellarmin made, if the Papal Dignity, which he did not deſire, ſhould be conferred upon him. He engaged himſelf not to enrich his Relations. Theſe are the Terms of his Vow; "Die 24 Septembris anno 1614. "ſer. 6, in domo Novitiorum S. Andreæ degens, & "exercitiis ſpiritualibus vacans, matura præhabita de-"liberatione in ſacrificio Miſſæ, cum ſumpturus eſ-"ſem S. Dom. noſt. corpus, votum vovi Domino in "hæc verba: Ego Robertus, Cardinalis Bellarminus, è "Societate Jesu religioſus profeſſus, voveo Deo om-"nipotenti in conſpectu B. V. Mariæ, ac totius cœ-"leſtis curiæ, quod ſi fortè, quod non cupio, & "precor Deum, ut non accidat, ad Pontificatum aſ-"ſumptus fuero, neminem ex conſanguineis vel af-"finibus meis exaltabo ad Cardinalatum, vel tem-"poralem Principatum, vel Ducatum, vel Comita-"tum, vel quemcunque alium titulum, neque eos "ditabo, ſed ſolùm adjuvabo, ut in ſtatu ſuo ci-"vili commodè vivere poſſint. Amen, Amen (85). "—— On the Twenty fourth of September, in the "Year 1614, being in the Houſe of the Novitiates "of St Andrew, and intent upon ſpiritual Exerciſes, "after mature Deliberation in the Sacrifice of the "Maſs, and being about to receive the Body of our "Lord; I made a Vow to God in the following "Words: I Robert, Cardinal Bellarmin, a profeſſed "Religious of the Order of Jesus, vow to Almighty God, in the Sight of the bleſſed Virgin "Mary, and the whole Heavenly Choir, that if, "which I do not deſire, and wiſh to God may never "happen,

(84) Godeau, Eloge of Cardinal Bellarmin, apud Ancillon, ubi ſupra, pag. 332.

(85) Fuligattus in vita Bellarm.

Digitized by Google

is his Book de Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis (l). I wiſh I had not met with theſe two Facts there; for they are not true [Y]. The Inſcription, which was put under this Cardinal's Print, imports, that he had preſerved his Virginity, and his Baptiſmal Innocency, and that he had never told a Lie (m). When he was dying, he bequeathed one half of his Soul to the Holy Virgin, and the other half to JESUS CHRIST (n). He was ſo patient, that he ſuffered Flies, and ſuch ſmall Inſects, to be very troubleſome to him [Z]. He let them alone, ſaying, that they had no other Paradice, than the Liberty to fly, and light, where they pleaſed. He was a Man of a ſmall Stature, and of a mean Outſide; yet he diſcovered the Beauty of his Wit in his Face (o). He expreſſed himſelf with Clearneſs, and premeditated the Words, which were to repreſent his Thoughts, ſo exactly, that no Raſures appeared in his Writings (p). His Hebrew Grammar is pretty well eſteemed; though it is thought, that he had but an indifferent Knowledge of That Language (q): ſome ſay, that he was quite a Stranger to Greek (r). I do not believe the Pope ever (m) Quam à matre virginem carnem acceperat, quam à ſacro lavacro innocentiam, Deo reddidit, ſibi nullius in omni vita mendacii conſcius. Andr. Caroſus. Memorab. Eccleſiaſt. p. 538.

(l) Id. ibid. pag. 373.

(n) Id. ibid. pag. 535.

(o) Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. I, pag. 87.

(p) Id. ibid.

(q) Simon's Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, lib. 3, cap. 12.

(r) See, towards the end of Remark [Y].

" happen, I ſhould ever be elected Pope, I will never " raiſe any of my Family or Kindred to the Purple, " Temporal Principality, Dukedom, Earldom, or any o- " ther Title; nor will I enrich, but only aſſiſt them " to live comfortably in their Civil Capacity. Amen, " Amen."

[Y] Ancillon advances two Facts concerning Bellarmin, which are not true.] Every one knows, that Cardinal Cajetan, Legate of Sixtus V, in France, made it his chief Buſineſs to cauſe Henry IV to be excluded from the Crown. It was not at the Court of That Monarch, that Bellarmin, That Legate's Chaplain, acquired the King's Eſteem; for he was not there; he was at Paris, among the Leaguers, and uſed his utmoſt Endeavours for the Intereſt of the Rebels. This is what the Miniſters have not failed to object; Read this Paſſage of Drelincourt; " Whence comes it, that Thoſe of the Proteſtant Re- " ligion were in the King's Camp, whilſt Bellarmin, " Panigarola, and ſuch Perſons, were at Paris, " preaching up Sedition, and the Pope ſent ſome " Legates to authorize the League, and to throw " Oil into a Fire, which he ought to have ex- " tinguiſhed with his Tears, and his own Blood (86)?" As for what concerns the Treatiſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, it is a good Work in it's kind; but it is far from being Bellarmin's beſt Book. There are ſeveral Treatiſes in his Volumes of Controverſies, which diſcover his Wit, Learning, and Capacity, more nobly. Twenty ſmall Pieces, every one as good as That, de Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, would not have raiſed him to the Degree of Honour, which he deſerved for the Form alone, in which he cloathed his Body of Controverſies; for ſee, here, the Commendation which a Learned Engliſhman gave him, on this Subject: " Vir erat, haud inficior, admirandæ induſtriæ, " doctrinæ, lectionis ſtupendæ, Bellarminus: qui ut " primus, ita ſolus, immanem illam molem, & im- " menſum chaos controverſiarum, ſtupendâ ingenii " dexteri felicitate, artificio ſingulari, excoluit, in or- " dinem redegit confuſum prius, accuratâ diligentiâ, " & multorum annorum ſtudio, eleganter expolivit: " præripuit ille palmam ſecuturis omnibus, & ſibi " deſponſatam vel deſtinatam cuicunque laudem ab- " ſtulit. Nam ab illo, qui tractant hodiè Contro- " verſias, ut ab Homero Poëtæ, ſua omnia ferè mu- " tuantur (87). - - - - Bellarmin was, I confeſs, a " Man of ſurprizing Induſtry, Learning, and Reading; the firſt, and only Perſon, who, with Abilities, and Diligence, happily poliſhed, and reduced into Form, the immenſe Chaos of Controverſies. In this be ſurpaſſed All that came after him, who, in treating ſuch Subjects, borrow almoſt every thing from him, as the Poets do from Homer." Conſiderable Faults have been obſerved (88), in the Treatiſe, which Calixtus, and Mr Ancillon, pretend to be the beſt of all This Jeſuit's Writings. See Boſius, in the ſecond Chapter of his Introductio in Notitiam Scriptorum Eccleſiaſticorum, with Mr Crenius's Notes. Librum, ſays he (89), omnium, quos Bellarminus edidit, optimum vocat D. Calixtus, tractatu de conjugio Clericorum, ſectione 202. If we may believe Father Labbe, the firſt Edition of This Book of Bellarmin is of the Year 1617 (90). Father Sirmond took great care of it, as the Author had deſired him (91). Several other Editions were made of it, which the Printers ſpoiled extreamly; but, at laſt, a very correct one was publiſhed at Paris, by Cramoiſi, in the Year 1658, in 8vo. Father Labbe, who reviſed the Proofs, formed the Plan of a Work upon it (92), which ſome very good Judges take for the beſt he compoſed. I mean his Diſſertatio de Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis; which was printed, at Paris, in two Volumes, in 8vo, in the Year 1660. The Authors of the Bibliotheque of the Jeſuits knew nothing of the firſt Edition of This Treatiſe of Bellarmin; one of them, viz. Alegambus, mentions none, and Sotuel mentions only That of Cologne 1622, in 8vo. A new one was made in the ſame City in the Year 1684, in 4to; and the Continuation, which Andrew de Sauſſai publiſhed, in the Year 1665, was joined to it. Bellarmin's Omiſſions were very conſiderable, as appears by the Supplement of Father Oudin, which was mentioned in the News from the Republic of Letters, in the Month of April, 1686.

Remark a Miſtake of Boſius. He ſays, there is no truſting to Bellarmin's Judgment about the Greek Writers, becauſe he did not underſtand the Greek Language; and that This Ignorance, which appeared in his other Books, was moſt conſpicuous in the Treatiſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, as Caſaubon obſerved. " Græcarum Litterarum prorſus ἀμύητον " fuiſſe ſicut omnia illius ſcripta, ſic eximiè hic liber " noviſſimè ab eo profectus, Caſaubono judice exer- " citat. 16. ſect. 150. oſtendit, ut proinde judiciis " illius de Græcis ſcriptoribus ſatis tuto fidi non poſ- " ſit." Boſius had juſt before ſaid, that the firſt Edition of This Work of Bellarmin is of the Year 1616 (93). How could he believe then, that Caſaubon had ſpoken of it, in that manner, in a Book, which was printed in the Year 1614? But, after all, will you ſay is it true, that Caſaubon ſpoke of This Work; for, in this Caſe, Boſius's Error will be very inconſiderable? I anſwer, there is a great probability, that he had This Treatiſe of Bellarmin in view. There is an Edition of Cologne 1613, ſet down in the Catalogue of Oxford: and I have ſeen one of Lyons, 1613, in 4to, Reviſed and Corrected by the Author. So that This Work was plainly enough hinted at, in That Paſſage of Caſaubon, where it is ſaid, that it was the laſt Book of Bellarmin, which appeared; we may, therefore, affirm, that Father Labbe is miſtaken, in placing the firſt Edition of it in the Year 1617.

(86) Drelincourt of the Triumph of the Church, Part II, pag. 444.

(87) Montacut. Præf. ad Apparat. apud Thomas-Pope Blunt, Cenſ. Author. pag. 638.

(88) Bailet's Judgment of the Learned, Part II, pag. 90, 91.

(89) J. Andr. Boſius, Schediaſm. de Comparanda Notitia Scriptor. Eccleſ. cap. 2, pag. 425, Edit. Crenian. Lugd. Bat. Ann. 1699.

(90) Labbe, Præf. Differ. de Script. Eccleſ.

(91) Id. ib.

(92) Id. ib.

(93) Father Labbe ſays the Year 1617. See above, Cita. (90).

[Z] He ſuffered Flies - - - - to be troubleſome to him.] This deſerves to be ſet down in Fuligatti's own Words. " Inter inſignes Bellarmini virtutes, alii po- " nunt miram ejus in perferendis vexationibus pa- " tientiam, quam Jacobus Fuligattus laudat ſequen- " tibus verbis: Culices, modicellas aviculas, ſicut & alia parva naturæ incommoda, velut à DEO tra- ditas ad exercitium patiendi, vultu adeò miti per- ferebat, ut nec ipſe oppoſita manu, nec exciente ventulum aliquo, eas conaretur abigere. Aliquando Clementi Merlino R. rotæ auditori, dum ſermones familiares, ut fit poſt negotia deciſa, ſererent, re- tulit, ſe nocte ejus diei, qui eſt Catharinæ virgini ſacer, adeò ad renes à beſtiolis quibuſdam nequam ac damnificis morſu fuiſſe vexatum, ut magno ſenſu converſus ad CHRISTI, præpendentis è cruce Domini, ſimulacrum dixerit: ô Domine, ſi hoc quicquid eſt damni, quod certè parum eſt, mihi tantum af- fert moleſtiæ, ecquænam erunt ſupplicia damnato- rum? ſi apud gebennam impios manent tormenta tàm ærumnoſa, ne, precor, in ea me projicias, ete- nim impar ero iiſdem ſuſtinendis. Cardinalis Croſ- centius addit, Bellarminum ita ſe patientiæ velut victimam deſtinaſſe, ut muſcas à vultu ne depelle- ever ſent him to Louvain, to put an End to the Diſputes of Michael Baius there, or to make a Report of them at Rome [A A]. So many Perſons have attacked him, and ſo many have defended him, that Catalogues have been made of both. The Liſt of his Defenders was compoſed by Beraldi, an Italian (s).

Digitized by Google

(s) Baillet, Tom. I, of the Anti's, pag. 81, 82.

" ret quidem, tametſi odioſæ nimium eſſent, ſicuti " Romæ in æſtu ſolent; cùmque hoc mirarentur, qui " aderant, ipſe juviter, Haud æquum eſſe, ajebat, " perturbare animantes illos, quibus non utique ſu- " pereſſet paradiſus alius, quàm volitandi libertas, ac " poteſtas, ubi malunt, commorandi (94). —— Among " the remarkable Virtues of Bellarmin, others place " his wonderful Patience, in enduring Vexations, " which James Fuligatti celebrates in the following " Words: He conſidered Gnats, a little flying Inſect, " and other ſmall Vexations, which Nature throws " in our Way, as ſent by GOD, to exerciſe our " Patience; and he ſuffered them ſo calmly, that he " neither endeavoured to drive them away with " his own Hand, nor permitted any one elſe to do " it. In a Converſation, once, as is uſual after the " Fatigue of Buſineſs, with Clemens Merlinus, Au- " ditor of the Rota, he told him, that, on the Eve " of the Feſtival of St Catherine, he was ſo tor- " mented with the biting of pernicious Inſects at " his Reins, that, through the Acuteneſs of the Pain, " turning to the Figure of our Saviour on the Croſs, " he cried out, O Lord! if This trifling Affliction " gives me ſo much uneaſineſs, what muſt the " Damned endure? If ſuch dreadful Miſery awaits " the Wicked in Hell, O! never throw me into it, " for I ſhall be unable to ſupport it. Cardinal Cre- " ſcentius adds, that Bellarmin had ſo devoted him- " ſelf to Patience, that he would not drive the Flies " from his Face, though they were extreamly trou- " bleſome, as is uſual at Rome, in hot Weather; " which when the Standers by expreſſed their Won- " der at, he mildly told them, It was unjuſt to di- " ſturb thoſe little Creatures, whoſe only Paradice " is the Liberty of flying, and reſting, where they " pleaſe." It is certain, there is a way of ſpinning out Conſequences from the Evangelical Precepts, or Counſels, which leads almoſt neceſſarily to That Patience, which is attributed to Bellarmin; but nevertheleſs Reaſon ſhews us, that it is no ways likely, that JESUS CHRIST, or his Apoſtles, in recommending to us ſo expreſsly the Contempt of the Conveniencies of Life, intended to forbid us the right of freeing ourſelves from the Vexation of Bugs, and of driving away a Fly, which is troubleſome to us.

(94) Antreas Caroles, Memorab. Eccleſiaſt. pag. 535.

[A A] I do not believe the Pope ever ſent him to Louvain to put an End to the Diſputes of Baius, or to make a Report of them at Rome.] Mr Leydecker ſays, I. That Bellarmin was ſent thither to inform himſelf of Thoſe Diſputes, and to pacify them; or, at leaſt to give the Pope an Account of them. II. That he acquitted himſelf very well of This Commiſſion, and that, after having heard Michael Baius, he returned to Rome, very angry for having found, that he treated, as Pelagian Doctrines, ſeveral Opinions of the Schoolmen, which were Bellarmin's own (95). I can find no trace of this Deputation in the Writers of This Jeſuit's Hiſtory; and I know, that he made but little Noiſe, when he went to Louvain. He acquired his firſt Reputation in the ſeven Years, that he taught Divinity in That Place (96); and, as he was an Auguſtinian as to the Points in diſpute between Baius, and his Antagoniſts, it is not at all likely, he was ever angry with That Doctor, for the Reaſon, which Mr Leydecker mentions.

(95) Melch. Leydecker, Diſput. Hiſtorico-Theologica II, de vatio Janſenianarum fato. See the Preface to the Edition of the Works of Baius, 1696, and pag. 213, of Part II.

(96) Nicius Eryth. Pinacoth. I, pag. 85.

BELLEAU (REMI), a French Poet of the XVIth Century, was born at Nogent le Rotrou. I ſhall not ſay much of him; for Moreri has already obſerved almoſt all that I could have collected. This Poet turned the Odes of Anacreon into French, and deprived them of a great part of their Beauty, if we may believe ſome Authors (a); but others maintain, that he equalled the Original, and that, if he had loved drinking as well as Anacreon did, he would have out-done him. Do not truſt too much to This Encomium; for it is taken from a piece of Poetry, made by Scævola de Sainte Marthe, in praiſe of the French Tranſlation, of which I am ſpeaking (b). Paſquier thinks, that, in point of Gaiety, Belleau was another Anacreon in his Time (c) [A]. He acted one of the chief Parts in the Cleopatra, and the Rencounter of Jodelle, when they were acted before King Henry, at Paris, in the Palace of Reims ——— and in the College of Boncour (d). He died in 1577, and in his fiftieth Year (e). He commented on the ſecond Part of the Amours of Peter Ronſard.

(a) Teſſier, Addit. Tom. I, pag. 468, Edit. in 8, He quotes the eighth Vol. of Celsa, pag. 859.

(b) Sammarth Elog. lib. 3. pag. 13, 14.

(c) Paſquier, Recherch. lib. 7, cap. 7, pag. 622.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 618.

(e) Thuan. lib 64, pag. 204.

[A] Belleau, according to Paſquier, was another Anacreon in his Time.] This was alſo the Opinion of Andrew du Cheſne. " The Country of Perche, " ſays he (1), produced This genteel and learned " Poet, among others, in the Reign of Henry II, " whom I look upon as another Anacreon of our " Age, in Matters of Gaiety: I mean, Remi Belleau, " whoſe Deſign was to imitate Sannazarius in his " Works. For, as the Italian Sannazarius made the " Shepherds of his Arcadia ſpeak in Proſe, in which " he placed all his Tuſcan Poetry; ſo our great " Belleau has done the like in his Paſtorals."

(1) Du Cheſne's Antiquities of the Towns of France, pag. 2, 6.

BELLEFOREST (FRANCIS de), was born in the Month of November, 1530, near Samatan, a Town of the Country of Cominges, in Guienne (a). He was but ſeven, or eight, Years of Age, when his Father died: His Mother, finding herſelf without an Eſtate, did all ſhe could to keep him ſome time at School. He was educated ſome Years in the Houſe of the Queen of Navarre, Siſter to Francis I. He ſtudied, afterwards, at Bourdeaux, under Buchanan, Vinetus, Salignac, Gelida, and ſome other learned Men; then he went to Toulouſe, to ſtudy the Civil-Law there; but his Genius made him apply himſelf to quite another thing. He trifled away his time in making French Verſes, to pleaſe the Ladies, and, having ſpent ſeven or eight Years among the Delights of the Nobility, and in the triſles of Gallantry, he went to Paris, where he attended the Profeſſors Lectures, and contracted a ſtrict Acquaintance with divers learned Men, and even inſinuated himſelf into the Company of ſeveral Perſons of Quality (b). He gained little, or nothing, by all This; inſomuch, that, if the Bookſellers had not bought the Productions of his Pen, he had not had Bread to eat. Study was his Inheritance; and he was one of thoſe Authors, who maintain their Families by dint of their Pens: His beſt Friends tell us, that, by the Bleſſing of GOD on the Labour of his Hands, he maintained his

(a) La Croix du Maine, Bibl. Franc. pag. 88.

(b) Du Verdier Vau Privas, Biblioth. Fr. p. 366, 367.

Digitized by Google

his Family by his Books [A]. And, therefore, it is no wonder, if he wrote ſuch a great Number of Books (c), and undertook to write upon ſo many different Subjects, which were beyond the reach of his Abilities: He was obliged to follow the Direction of the Bookſellers, and to turn himſelf every way, according to the Taſte of the Public; that is, according as certain Books, good or bad, ſold well. It is ſaid of him, That he had Moulds, in which he caſt new Books with great Expedition (d). He died at Paris, the firſt Day of January, 1583, and was buried in the Franciſcans Church, as he had deſired in his Will (e). Thevet, who was not a more conſiderable Author, boaſted publickly, that Belleforeſt made him a public Reparation, on his Death-bed [B]. They had been much embroiled together. La Popeliniere ſpeaks very ill of theſe two Authors [C]. Ghilini has committed a great many Faults in a ſhort Elogy of Belleforeſt [D]; and, if he had been as ill informed in every thing elſe, his Works would be of no value.

(c) You will find a large Liſt of them in the Bibliotheque of la Croix du Maine, and in That of du Verdier Vau-privas.

(d) Du Haillan, Epiſt. Dedicat. prefixed to The Hiſtory of France, Edit. of 1584.

(e) La Croix du Maine, ubi ſupra, pag. 91.

[A] His beſt Friends tell us - - - - - - that he maintained his Family by his Books.] Du Verdier Vau-Privas (1) declares himſelf Belleforeſt's intimate Friend, and Admirer. I received, ſays he, as much Satisfaction from our Correſpondence by Letters, as I was afterwards ſorry for his Death. - - - - - His Name will be immortal among Men, ſo long as the World endures, by reaſon of the fine Works, which he compoſed. Now ſee how he ſpeaks of his Friend's Fortune. Belleforeſt was intimately acquainted with Ronſard, Baif, Belleau, Vigenere - - - - Chopin, the Ornament of the Palace of Paris, and many others; he was careſſed by Princes, beloved by the Nobility, and eſteemed by all the virtuous Men of this Kingdom; but his Fortune was ſo mean, that he lived only by his Study; and the Labour of his Hands and Mind, being bleſt with, and ſupported by, the Divine Grace, relieved the Neceſſities of his Family.

(1) Biblioth. Franc. pag. 367.

[B] Thevet - - - - - boaſted publickly, that Belleforeſt made him Reparation, on his Death-bed.] There is nothing more diſhoneſt than This Man's Proceeding. He glories in the Humility, which his Adverſary expreſſed to him, on his Death-bed; and yet he abuſes him, as much as he could have done, before their Reconciliation. Theſe are his Words: "There "are ſome, who, having no more Learning than "Munſter, have, nevertheleſs, been ſo bold as to ſcrawl "after him, and new-mould him; which is the ſe"cond Head, on which I ground my Complaint "againſt Thoſe, who, not having been much farther "than the Smoak of their Chimnies, their Stoves, "or Cottages, dare, in the mean Time, perſwade "themſelves, that there is no Spot of Ground, but "what they have ferreted: but it is only in Imagi"nation. To cover their too preſumptuous Under"takings, they have ſtollen, here and there, as "much as they could; and, ſometimes, they have "cut off ſmall Pieces from the Diſcourſes, which "they have caſtrated: So that moſt of their "huge Books are only compoſed of patched Pieces, "which have ſo ill a Grace, that, by what I "can hear, they ſerve only to wrap up But"ter, and Sugar. If I ſpeak ſo openly, it is becauſe "I am ſorry Belleforeſt was ſo indiſcreet as to patch "up Munſter's Coſmography. I queſtion not but "ſome will think, that what I ſay of it proceeds "from a Spirit of Revenge, and that, having been "provoked by him, I intend at preſent to pour out "the Fury of my Anger upon him. GOD ſhall be "my Witneſs: And, truly, if he had offended me "more than he did, I would not ſatirize, and ſpeak "ill of, a dead Man. Beſides, at the end of his "Life, acknowledging the Wrong, which he knew "he had done, in printing thoſe Books, wherein, "againſt his Conſcience, he aſperſed the Characters of "good Men, and of thoſe, who patronized and ſup"ported them; he ſent for me, and, in the Preſence "of two Doctors of the Sorbonne, and of his Phyſi"cian, and Bookſeller Gabriel Buon, after having kiſ"ſed my Hands, he confeſſed publickly, that he "felt his Conſcience burthened for the blame he had "laid on me; for which he asked my Pardon ſeveral "times. As for me, I deſired him, the beſt I "could, not to think any more of it: foraſmuch "as we are all Men (2)."

(2) Thevet's Illuſtrious Men, Tom. VII, pag. 292, 293. Edition of 1671, in 12mo.

[C] La Popeliniere ſpeaks very ill of theſe two Authors.] I ſhall ſet down, ſomewhat at length, what he has ſaid of them, and I hope, it will not diſpleaſe thoſe, who love to ſee things in the original Authors, and who would find it difficult to procure the Author, whom I quote. "Theſe two Men, "ſometimes Friends, and ſometimes Enemies, have "deſerved the worſe of Learning, as they were "unworthy to treat of it. Nay, they were as deſti"tute of Wit, Judgment, Memory, and all the "Qualifications of a good Genius, as they were ſup"plied with Boldneſs to interpret ill, and write "worſe, what they never underſtood. And, be"cauſe ſome haſty Travels of the one, and the Itch "of Writing, which poſſeſſed the other, made their "Eſſays acceptable to the Vulgar, who neither will, "nor can, take time to examine things well; they "ſet up for Scribblers, at ſuch a rate, that all the "Printers of Paris, preferring their mean Capacity "to all Judicious Works, ſtrove to buy up, publiſh, "and make them appear to all the World. And, tho' "they were never well inſtructed in their Youth, "nay, without any conſiderable Experience of the "things of this World, and, moreover, poor and "deſtitute of all the Means, which the moſt know"ing Men have always called the Wings of Virtue; "yet theſe univerſal Wits have paſſed through all "Profeſſions. There is no Language, or Science, "but what they have prophaned. Nay, they have "ſcribbled Hiſtories, Particular, and Univerſal, ac"cording to their fooliſh Fancies. How can one "help it? As all Seaſons are attended with certain "Accidents, which bring evil to All, and good to "none, the Cauſes whereof are unknown to us, and "cannot be imputed to the Faults of Men: So there "have always been, and ever will be, certain pri"vate Men, in all States, who, being only fit to "confound and ſpoil every thing, undertake nothing, "but what will prejudice others, and profit no Body. "Theſe Men are like Itching, the Forerunner of a "Sickneſs to Thoſe, who are troubled with it. "Their Hands itched; they could not forbear writ"ing; not for the Public Good, but for their par"ticular Profit; which they kept up with the wretch"ed Labour of their unruly Pens. So that I have "often lamented, that, France being ſo well provi"ded with good Writers, ſuch low Genius's, who "can boaſt of nothing but an aſſiduous, and uſeleſs, "Labour, ſhould find People, who will throw a"way their Time in reading their Nonſenſe, their "Annals, Hiſtories, and Univerſal Geographies, con"trived, formed, hatched, and publiſhed in their "ſolitary Dens. Thoſe, who do not take the Pains "to inform themſelves of the Particulars of the "World, and chiefly to obſerve the Courſe, and "Iſſue, of each Man's private Actions, cannot be"lieve, how much prejudice Belleforeſt and Thevet "have done to Youth, and conſequently to the "State; explaining abundance of Paſſages ſo ill, and "many times in a quite contrary Senſe; corrupting, "and falſifying, Matters; and taking many things "for granted, which they had ridiculouſly fancied "in their own weak Brains. Without mentioning a "World of other Impertinences, wherewith they "have patched up their ſilly Writings. Neither of "the two Cato's would in this have excuſed Belle"foreſt, (though he boaſted to have written as much "as St Auguſtine) if Poverty made him ſpeak like a "Jay, that is, like a Beaſt. For he has ſhewed him"ſelf too brutiſh on all accounts towards Poſterity (3)."

(3) Popeliniere's Hiſtory of Hiſtories, pag. 456.

[D] Ghilini has committed a great many Faults, in a ſhort Elogy.] What he ſaid of our Belleforeſt contains, in all, but Twenty two Lines. Theſe are his Errors: He takes Cominges for a City of Gaſcogne: he affirms, that Belleforeſt publiſhed ſeveral Works in Latin, and, among others, The Annals of France in two Volumes; The Hiſtory of nine Kings of France, whoſe whose Names were Charles; The Universal History, or an Abridgment of Cosmography. All this is false: These Works, and all the other Books of This Author, were written in French. Ghilini adds, that there is a Catalogue of the Illustrious Men, who have made themselves famous, in Monasteries, both by their Learning, and their Actions, and An History of the Holy Martyrs, in three Volumes, writen by This Author. But there is no manner of likelihood, that This Catalogue was ever printed. La Croix du Maine never saw it; and he knew only, that Belleforest mentions it in the Hundred ninety third Leaf of his Cosmography. Du Verdier Vau-Privas, an intimate Friend of Belleforest, says nothing of This Catalogue; and no one is ignorant, that Authors refer to Works, which they have not yet made Public. The same du Verdier informs us, that "The Life, "Passion, and Burial of St Dionysius, the Areopagite, "and of his Companions, who were his Fellow-"Martyrs, collected out of divers Authors, by the "late John, Doctor of Divinity, great Prior of the "Abbey of St Denis in France, and done into French "by Belleforest, is printed in the Third Volume of "the History of the Lives and Deaths of the "Saints (4)." This is the notable ground, on which Three Volumes of the History of the Holy Martyrs are ascribed to Belleforest by Ghilini, not as a Translation, but as an Original. He attributes also the Translation of St Cyprian's Works to him. If he had consulted Vau-Privas, he would have read there, that This Writer translated only some Treatises of St Cyprian (5), and that all the Works of That Saint were translated by James Tigeou. Lastly, Ghilini is somewhat to be blamed for not knowing the Year of Belleforest's Death, and for placing it about the Year 1600. As for the excessive Praises, with which he crowns This Author's Memory, They might be reckoned among his Faults, were it not that many other Writers might lead him into This Profusion. I shall quote but one of Them. René de Lusinge, speaking of Belleforest, says, He is a Man of great Reading, who is not ignorant of any Thing, which is left confused in Antiquity, the Passages of which he clears up with great Care, and in good Language (6).

Digitized by Google

(4) Du Verdier, pag. 372.

(5) Id. ibid. p. 371, 372.

(6) René de Lusinge, The manner of reading History, cited by Mart. Zeillerus, de Histor. Chronol. & Geograph. Part II, p. 172.

BELLEY, a City of France, and Capital of the Province of Bugei, is very ancient, since the Episcopal See was established there in the Year 412 (a). Consult the Dictionary of Moreri, and add to it what follows: "The Diocese of Belley ——— "has four Towns, six large Boroughs, and more than Two hundred Villages, "being extended ten Leagues in Diameter (b). The Dignity of a Prince of the "Empire is added to That of Bishop of Belley; a Title, which was given by the "Emperors to the Archbishop of Bezançon, and his three Comprovincials, or Suf-"fragans, Basil, Lausanne, and Belley. The Sovereignty of the City of Belley, "and it's Territory, which is pretty wide, belonged to the Bishop. But he was "deprived of it gradually, by a powerful and neighbouring Prince, under the "Disguise and Appearance of Protection. There are still extant, in the Archives "of the Church, several Excommunications issued on this Occasion, and many "others of Opposition, and Resistance; but, in these Cases, Right is on the side "of Power (c)." Since That Time the Revenues of the Bishopric have greatly decreased; for "it's largest Possessions consisted in the Rights, which This Rebel "Lordship has usurped, and which were confined almost wholly to the City (d)." This is what I borrow from a Work of Mr Camus, Bishop of Belley, published in 1644; in which he deduces these Facts, with some Observations, in order to refute a Monk, who had spoken disrespectfully of This Bishopric [A]. I find, in Guichenon, that John de Passelaigue, Bishop of Belley, obtained of Lewis XIII, in 1635, "a Confirmation of all the Privileges, granted to the Bishops of Belley, by the "Emperor Frederic ——— excepting however the Regale, and the coining of "Money (e)." This John de Passelaigue succeeded John Peter Camus, who began to govern This Diocese in the Year 1609, and who found many Disorders in the Convents [B], particularly in That of St Sulpice. I shall take Occasion to remark the

(a) Guichenon's Hist. of Bresse and Bugey, Continuat. of Part II, pag. 12.

(b) John Peter Camus, Bishop of Belley, pag. 137, of his Anti basilic.

(c) Ibid. p. 138.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Guichenon, ubi supra, pag. 35, 36.

[A] Some Observations, in order to confute a Monk, who had spoken disrespectfully of This Bishopric.] This Monk had written a Book, entitled The Anti-Camus. At the Thirty ninth Page were These Words. It is very strange, that a little neglected Bishopric behind the Alps, whose Name is scarce to be met with in the Archives of the Church, and whose Pastor, for want of Employment at home (his District is so small) goes about preaching, like a Franciscan, should pretend, not only to equal, but to exalt itself above the Popes, to abolish their Order, and reform their Regulations. "The Diocese is not so small, replies Mr Camus "(1), but I can name to him five Archbishoprics, "and more than Twenty five Bishoprics, in France, "of smaller Extent; more than twelve of which the "sole Provinces of Languedoc and Provence can furnish. I will prove to him twenty Archbishoprics, "and an Hundred and twenty Bishoprics, in Italy, of "smaller Extent, than the Diocese of Belley. — It is "not behind the Alps, if you do not consider the "Alps on the Side of Italy, in like manner, as, "with regard to us, the Archbishopric of Turin is "hid behind the Alps. Though it were in the Alps, "Would it be the less considerable? How many "noble Archbishoprics, and Bishoprics, are there in "this Great World of Hills? Ambrun, Tarantaise, "Grenoble, Guyenne (2), Maurienne, Syon, Lausanne, "Constance, Basil, Arles, Ivrée; All Dioceses of "Note, Churches Famous, and celebrated for their "Antiquity and Extent. —— I will prove to him "that the Antiquity of the Diocese, which he calls "so small, is more than a thousand Years, and that "there are, in France alone, more than thirty or "forty Bishoprics of later Date. —— Bishoprics are "not to be measured by their Revenues: otherwise a Curacy of Sicily, which I could name, and "which has but One Cure, with Thirty thousand "Crowns per annum, would be a large Archbishopric" (3). Here are some particulars, which will gratify the Curiosity of several Readers, though they are not necessary to the Article of Belley.

(1) P. 137, of the Anti-basilic.

(2) He should have said Geneva.

(3) Ibid. p. 139.

[B] John Peter Camus found many Disorders in the Convents of the Diocese of Belley.] The following is part of the Description, which he gives of these Disorders. "There was An Abbey (4) of Monks, "richly founded, whose Abbot was an Huguenot "Captain, a married Man, and Governor of a "neighbouring Fortress, who kept the whole Country about him in Awe and Fear (5)."

He took it into his Head to keep a Stud in the Convent, and "having collected a great Number of "Mares, which are very large and fine in Bresse, he "sent for Stallions from Spain and Germany, and "large Asses from Auvergne which are of an enormous "Size, in order to produce Mules by their Mixture with the Mares, according to the Method established in This Stud. —— The Church, which "was as large as a Cathedral, served as a Repository "for Hay, Straw, and other Forrage, necessary for "the Sustenance of these Animals, during four or "five Months of the Winter, that the Earth is all "covered with Snow. The Monks had but just the "Liberty of part of the Choir about the Altar, to "sing the Service in, where they continued to do it

(4) It is, without doubt, That of St Sulpice, of the Order of Citeaux.

(5) Antibasilic, pag. 351, 352.

Digitized by Google

the pious Fraud, which was publiſhed concerning the Foundation of This Monaſtery [C].

" it with Negligence enough. In the Abbot's Houſe " were ſeveral Huguenot Soldiers, with their Trulls " (a Baggage inſeparable from the pretended Reformation of Thoſe of the fifth Goſpel); and there " they ſaid their Prayers, ſung their Pſalms, and " lived, in ſhort, a merry Life, like Reapers at " Harveſt, Grape-gatherers, or Conquerors, when " they divide the Spoils of their Enemies. —— The " pretended reformed Abbot, to ſtop the Mouths of " the Monks, and prevent their Complaints, augmented their Prebends, or Canonical Portions, " and, thro' Artifice, and worldly Prudence, careſſed " them extreamly, admitting them to his Table in " the Citadel, where he entertained them like an " Abbot and a Captain, ſupporting them in their " Humours, and protecting them againſt all the " neighbouring Nobility. The Intimacy became ſo " great, that they ſtyled him Our Abbot, and He " Them My Monks, and ſaid My Abbey, when he " ſpoke of their Houſe.

" You are not to think, that the Monks ſpent " their Time in catechiſing the Soldiers, Governors " of the Stud, and their Companies, which might have " been formed into another Stud of Rational Brutes. " —— This Convent became A Church Militant: " for you might ſee Monks a-hunting with Soldiers, " each with his Musket on his Shoulder: the " Monks never ſtirred abroad but upon large Horſes, " and the better according to the Permiſſion and Indulgence of the Abbot, always well armed, with " Sword and Piſtol, and often with Carbine: they " were ſeen every Day traverſing the Country in " This Equipage; inſomuch, that it might be ſaid " of them, as of the Shulamite, in the Canticles, " that they were Choirs of Warriours, and Batallions " of Choriſters (6).

(6) Ibid, p. 353.

This fine Management continued eight or nine Years. The Biſhop ſometimes threatned to inform the Parliament, or the King's Governor, or Lieutenant, of it, in order to put a Stop to ſuch ſcandalous Proceedings: but the Monks, on the one ſide, made themſelves whiter by their Exemptions and Privileges, than their Habits; and, on the other, threatned him with the Power of the Abbot, who, as a formidable Scourge, kept the Nobility, Church, and People of the Country, in awe. And, as a Proof of his Violence, and Power, he went ſo far, as even to make an Attempt on the Perſon of the Governor, who had a Man ſlain at his Feet, after the Manner related in the French Mercury. - - - - The King, to puniſh this Attempt, commanded the Citadel to be razed; and the Tyrant was turned out of it, as well as of his Abbey; and afterwards, retiring among the Huguenots of Languedoc, from whence he ſprung, he was aſſaſſinated by Thoſe of the ſame Party, and his neareſt Relations, during the Siege of Montauban. The Abbey was put into the Hands of a Profeſſed Abbot of the ſame Order, who, at leaſt, removed the Scandal of the Stud (7).

(7) Ibid, p. 354

At the Foot of the ſame Hill, is a Convent of Nuns, of the ſame Order: of whom the above-named Monks call themſelves the Fathers; and are indeed ſo; for they have the Direction and Viſitation of them. Here are no traces, or footſteps, of a Cloyſter, nor any kind of Regulation. It is a General Landing Place to all Companies; a true Watering-Place of Africa: and ſurprizing Intercourſes are there carried on, under the Pretence of Relation and Conſanguinity. Whenever The Captain-Abbot, mentioned above, came, with the Officers of his Regiment, to ſee his Stud, he went down to pay a Viſit to the Monaſtery of the Valley, where he was received with great Reſpect; and we may ſuppoſe, that he made them fine Exhortations from the ninth Verſe of the ſeventh Chapter of the Firſt to the Corinthians. Thus there was a perpetual Intercourſe of Converſations, and Familiarites. —— A continual Flux, and Reflux, of Companies; the Great entered, the Small went out; The Gate was open to All, without reſpect to Sex, or Age. - - - - - In ſhort, Confuſion reigned there; and the Wound became ſo deſperate, for want of Judgment and Diſcretion, that Licentiouſneſs was there taken for Innocent Freedom, and Libertiniſm ſupplied the Place of Liberty (8).

(8) Ibid.

In vain did the Biſhop publickly exhort, and remonſtrate, again and again, againſt theſe Abuſes. " At " laſt, he gave them to underſtand, that he was " bound in Conſcience not to ſuffer theſe Irregularities any longer; ſince the Council of Trent had " ordered the Biſhops and Ordinaries to ſee that the " Nuns keep their Vows, whatever Privileges their " Orders might lay claim to: Having apprized them " of this; do but hear the Vanity and Preſumption " of Two Reverends, who, at different Times, had " had the Conduct of this B'eſſed Flock; and who " expreſsly oppoſed This Reformation: the firſt replied, that the Council of Trent had been held " by Biſhops, and, conſequently, that they were " not bound to obey it, becauſe their Order was " privileged, and exempt from the Juriſdiction of " Biſhops, and that the Councils of Monks were " their General Chapters. The Other, more artful, " alledged, that This Council having conſiſted but " of [trente] thirty Biſhops, though there had been " forty or fifty, it could have no Place in the Univerſal Church, of which the Monks made the " moſt illuſtrious Part, the moſt perfect and compleat, as being in a State of Perfection. There " was One Nun, of a fine, I know not whether of " a good Wit, who, being prepoſſeſſed (not to ſay " prompted *) by theſe exceilent Tutors, or rather " Fathers, replied, one Day, to the Remonſtrances " of M. D. B. My Lord, You ſeem to me reſolved " to broil us all alive, though we have not deſerved " it. To which He replied readily, but coldly: My " Siſter, you plainly ſhew, by your Diſcourſe, that " you are very lively, and but little dead to yourſelf. I mean very little mortified: for, as The " Fiſh, which is yet alive, leaps from the Gridiron, " and tumbles among the Coals, which a dead " one does not do: So thoſe Nuns, who are not " well dead to the World, and whoſe Paſſions are " alive, and often vivifying, chuſe rather, like Salamanders and Piralides, to live amidſt the Fire " of Converſation, according to the Thought of St " Bernard, who compares a Monk, converſing with " the World unhurt, to the Miracle of the three " Children in the Furnace, than to remain enclofed " within a Grate †, crucified with JESUS CHRIST, " their Spouſe. So little able were M. C. the Abbot, " who ſucceeded the Captain, and all the Superiors " of the Order, either to confine, or reform, theſe " good Ladies, of whom, out of Decency and Modeſty, I ſhall ſay no more, leaving the reſt to the " Imagination of the Reader, who, from what has " been ſaid, may form conjectures of what is hid " under the Curtain of Silence (9)."

* The Original is a Play upon Words. Siffiée, (pour ne dire Souffiée).

† The ſame Word (Grille) in French, ſignifies both a Gridiron, and a Grate of a Monaſtery.

(9) Anti-baſilic, p. 355.

The Book, from whence I borrow Theſe Fragments, has not been omitted by Mr Baillet, in his curious Liſt of ANTI's, any more than the ANTI-HERMITE, and ANTI-MOINE, of the ſame Mr Camus. He ſays of the two latter, that they ſhared ſo in the fate of the reſt of this Author's Works, that it is ſcarce known, that there ever were ſuch Books. If they continue running on, with the ſame Precipitation, as hitherto, to Annihilation, the Memory of them will very ſoon be effaced; and it will be difficult to preſerve even their Names in Bookſellers Catalogues (10). This is equally applicable to That entitled, The Anti Baſilic, in anſwer to the Anti Camus, by Olenix of Bourg-l'Abbé, I have, therefore, reaſon to believe, that the long Extracts, I have given of this Work, will be more agreeable, than if I had made uſe of a Reference, which would have been uſeleſs to the greateſt Part of my Readers.

(10) Baillet's Anti's Art. 106.

It will be proper to take notice of ſome Inſtances of Neglect in the Narrative of Mr Camus. I. He does not Name the Huguenot Abbot, nor the Citadel, of which he was Governor. I ſupply this Defect, and ſay, that he ſpeaks of Peter d'Eſcodeça, Lord of Boïſſe, Baron of Pardaillan, Colonel of Horſe of the Regiment of Champagne, and Governor of the Citadel of Bourg in Breſſe. II. He was of Guienne, and not of Languedoc. III. The Diſorder, he was guilty of, ſhall, if you pleaſe, continue eight or nine Years, but not in Sight of Mr de Bellei, who was not conſecrated Biſhop, till the Year 1609. Now the Citadel of Breſſe was razed in the Year 1611 (11). IV. The King, at that time, was not, as yet, out of his Minority; V. And it cannot be ſaid, that the Governor committed all theſe Outrages under the Minority of Lewis XIII.

(11) See Tom. II. of the French Mercury, pag. 133.

[C] The pious Fraud, which was publiſhed concerning the Foundation of This Monaſtery.] " The An-

Digitized by Google

" cient Manuſcript Chronicle of Savoy ------ im-
" ports, that Amé, the ſecond of the Name, Firſt
" Earl of Savoy, and Lord of Bugey, made a Vow
" to found an Abbey in his Eſtates, in order to ob" tain Iſſue; after which he had a Son, called Hum-
" bert, who falling ſick, and being in danger of dy-
" ing, before the Accompliſhment of the Vow, his " Father built, and founded, the Abbey of St Sul-
" pice, in Bugey, at the Perſuaſion of the Counteſs
" of Savoy, his Wife." The Words of the Chronicle are Theſe.

It happened one Night, that the Counteſs, as ſhe lay in Bed, ſighed ſeveral Times; The Earl enquired the Reaſon of it. Sir, ſaid ſhe, I fear the loſs of our Son Humbert. Why ſo? replied He: Becauſe, ſaid the Lady, you have made a Vow to our Lord to found an Abbey, in caſe GOD grants us Iſſue, and you have forgotten to perform it, and ſeem not to care for it. Then the Earl replied; Doubt not, but I will, ſhortly, accompliſh it, GOD willing. Then he ſought for a proper Place; and, finding it, he built a fine Abbey on a Mountain, ſituated in Bugey, under the Name of the Confeſſor, St Sulpice; which he properly endowed, and eſtabliſhed an Abbot, and Monks, to praiſe GOD for the Iſſue he had granted him. Paradin, in his Hiſtory of Savoy *, has exactly followed the Manuſcript Chronicle of Savoy; and adds, that, when the Abbey was finiſhed, and the Vow accompliſhed, the young Prince of Savoy recovered; placing the Time of this Foundation before the Year 1118 (12). Guichenon refutes all this very ſolidly: he ſays, that he found, in the Archives of St Sulpice, that, in the Year 1130, " Fifteen Monks, of the Order of Cite-
" aux, and one Bernard, who was their Superior,
" went to the Mountains of Bugey, by Permiſſion of
" Hugh, Abbot of Pontigni, with a Deſign of doing
" Penance there, and leading an auſtere Life; and " that Amé, the firſt Earl of Savoy, who was prepa" ring to go to the Holy Land, in order to engage
" their Stay, granted them Letters, and Privileges.
" ----- As to the Occaſion of the Foundation, it is " certain, that the Hiſtorians of Savoy are miſtaken,
" in publiſhing, that it was after the Birth of the " young Earl Humbert, Son of the ſaid Amé ----
" for the Grants of Earl Amé import the direct con" trary; the firſt of which, dated at Yenne, in the " Preſence of Pontius, Biſhop of Belley, and Hum-
" bert, Biſhop of Geneva, has theſe Words: Igitur
" quicumque iſta legerit, & audierit, hoc donum me
" feciſſe cognoſcat, tempore quo in montanis fratres
" hoſpitando retinui, ſcilicet antequam de uxore mea
" habuiſſem infantem; i. e. Be it known to all, who
" ſhall read, or hear, theſe Preſents, that I beſtowed
" this Gift, at the time, when I entertained the Bro-
" therhood in the Mountains; that is, before I had
" a Child by my Wife: and the ſecond; Noverit
" omnis tam extraneus, quam propinquus, hanc meam
" donationem feciſſe, antequam de uxore mea, Matil-
" di nomine, liberos aliquos procreaſſem: i. e. Be it
" known to All, Strangers as well as Natives, that
" this Grant was made before my Wife Matilda had
" brought me any Children (13)."

I cannot perſuade myſelf, that Chance, or Ignorance, produced the Falſhood, which Guichenon has refuted. It is rather the Effect of the Artifice of the Eccleſiaſtics. They bring Water to their Mill whatever way they can; and, to encourage the Great to build Monaſteries, or give pious Donations, they forge Inſtances of Fruitfulneſs, or Recovery, or ſome other temporal Advantage, which they aſcribe to a Liberal Piety.

* Book III, chap. 41.

(12) Guichenon's Hiſtory of Breſſe, and Bugey, Continuat. of Part II, pag. 101.

(13) Ibid. pag. 102.

BELOY (PETER de (a), Advocate-General in the Parliament of Toulouſe, had not yet this Employ, when he wrote for the Rights of the King of Navarre, againſt the League. If he had been a Proteſtant, he would have done nothing, in This, but what had been very natural, and required no extraordinary Virtue; but, as he was a Roman Catholic (b), and at Paris, when he publiſhed That Work againſt the League, he ought to be looked upon with ſome Admiration. That Work is entituled, A Catholic Apology againſt the Libels, Declarations, Councils, and Conſultations, made, written, and publiſhed, by the Leaguers, Diſturbers of the Peace of the Kingdom of France, who have taken up Arms, ſince the Deceaſe of Monſeigneur, the King's only Brother; by E. D. L. I. C. It came out in the Year 1585, and was tranſlated into Latin [A]: The Writers of the League called it an infamous Libel [B], and the Author found himſelf expoſed to a ſevere Perſecution [C]. He was a learned Civilian,

(a) He is ſo call'd, and not Peter Bellot.

(b) See The Novenary Chronology of Cayet, Tom. I. fol. 17, verſo.

[A] His Catholic Apology was tranſlated into Latin.] I have ſeen two Tranſlations of it in That Language. One of them, if we believe the Title, was printed, at Paris, by James Petit Chou, 1586. In the other, we find neither the Place of the Impreſſion, nor the Printer's Name; but the Title is longer than in the Original; and there is an Advertiſement of the Tranſlator.

[B] The Leaguers called it an infamous Libel.] See the Book, entituled, An Anſwer of the true French Catholics to the Advertiſement of the Engliſh Catholics for the Excluſion of the King of Navarre from the Crown of France. The Edition, which I make uſe of, is of the Year 1589. On the back of the Title-page, you find a Catalogue of the Diffamatory Libels, at which That Anſwer is levelled: The Catholic Apology by Belloy is the Third of Thoſe Libels. I have ſeen a particular Anſwer to the chief Heads of That Work of Beloy, which paſſes for a Piece of Bellarmin's. The Author calls himſelf Franciſcus Romulus. He neither attacks his Adverſary, about the Genealogy of the Houſe of Bourbon, nor about the Baſtardy, which was objected to Henry IV, by reaſon of his Mother's Marriage with the Duke of Cleves; nor about the Diſpute of the Preference of the Uncle to the Nephew; but reduces all to Religion, and to the Foundation of the Bull, which declared the King of Navarre to have forfeited the Succeſſion, and to be uncapable of reigning, only on account of his Hereſy. The firſt thing, which Franciſcus Romulus undertakes to ſhew, is, that the Author of the Apology is no Catholic, as he boaſts himſelf to be, but a meer Heretic, or perhaps an Atheiſt. Nos igitur, ut ejus veſtigiis inſiſtamus, demonſtrabimus primum Auctorem Apologiæ falſo ſibi Catholici nomen aſſumere, cum aut hæreticus, aut fortaſſe etiam Atheus ſit (1). This it is to be over-fond of certain particular Doctrines, which, at the bottom, are not eſſential to Religion. They, who are fond of theſe particular Doctrines, impudently maintain, that whoever oppoſes them is a Falſe Brother, a Prevaricator, a Spy, a Traytor, and, to ſay all in a Word, an Atheiſt. In all Communions, there are ſome ſuch opinionated Perſons, without excepting the Proteſtants, who have quitted France. Bellarmin may ſerve to ſhew them their Illuſion; for He, whom he accuſed of Hereſy, and whom he ſuſpected of Atheiſm, always profeſſed the Catholic Religion, like a very good Man. Here is a Paſſage of Anthony Arnauld: " Who wrote That outrageous Anſwer
" againſt the Catholic Apology, but the Jeſuits,
" who induſtriouſly publiſhed the moſt falſe and
" ſcandalous Things imaginable againſt the Perſon,
" and Rights, of his preſent Majeſty (2)?"

(1) Franciſcus Romulus, Reſponſ. ad præcipua capita Apologiæ, quæ falſo Catholica inſcribitur, pag. 5.

(2) Arnauld's Plea againſt the Jeſuits, in 1594, pag. 23.

[C] He found himſelf expoſed to a ſevere Perſecution.] Cayet relates, that, at the time of his writing his Book (3), they drew up a Parallel between the chief Writer of the Royaliſts, and the chief Writer of the Leaguers (4). He means Peter Beloy, and Lewis d' Orleans. It was ſaid, " that both of them
" publiſhed their Books without their Names; He,
" who wrote for the League, was more eloquent,
" but a Calumniator; He, who wrote for the King
" of Navarre, was more learned, and a true French-
" man. The Writer of the League, contrary to the " Royaliſt, was firſt rewarded for his Writings, and
" was made Advocate-General in the Sovereign Court
" of the Kingdom, during the Power of the League;

(3) That is, in the Year 1605.

(4) Novenary Chronology, Tom. I, fol. 20, verſo.

Digitized by Google

lian, and a Man of great Reading. He had already publiſhed ſome other Books [D]. Du Pleſſis Mornai acknowledges him for the true Author of the Catholic Apology (c).

(c) Memoirs, Tom. I, pag. 657. See alſo Thuanus, lib. 10, pag. 628.

I ſhall produce the Fragment of a Letter, which will be a good Supplement to This Article [E].

I add, to what I have already ſaid, the true Duration of his Impriſonment. Cayet is ſatisfied with ſaying, that it laſted more than two Years (d); but Beloy relates, that it continued four Years. I ſhall produce his Words, which will ſerve as a Supplement to the Liſt, I give, of his Works [F].

(d) See Remark [C].

" and ſince he has met with much Trouble and Vexa-
" tion. - - - - But He, who wrote in defence of the " Majeſty of Kings, had Trouble and Afflictions, and " was impriſoned in the beginning. In the Year 88,
" (5) he was clapt up in the Jail belonging to the " Parliament (6). After the Death of the Duke of " Guiſe, he was removed, and ſtrictly kept in the " Baſtile for two Years; and, having found means
" to eſcape, he fled to St Dennis, where he found
" Monſ. de Vic, Governor for the King, who re" ceived him, preſented him to his Majeſty; and,
" for a Recompence of his Troubles, he is at this " Day Advocate-General in one the Parliaments of
" this Kingdom (7)." The Fate of theſe two Authors, was, therefore, an Image of what was ſaid to the Rich Man (8); but it was an imperfect one; for Levois d' Orleans proſpered again, after having endured ſome Fatigues, much more inconſiderable, than what he deſerved, by reaſon of his furious Rebellions.

(e) See Remark [E].

(6) Thuanus, lib. 93, pag. 251, ſays it was by the King's Order.

(7) Thuanus ſpeaks of it, lib. 82, pag. 33.

(8) Luke xvi, 25.

[D] He had already publiſhed ſome other Books.] La Croix du Maine mentions the four following: A Declaration of the Right of lawful Succeſſion to the Kingdom of Portugal, belonging to the Queen-Mother of the Moſt Chriſtian King, at Antwerp, and at Paris, 1582, in 8vo. A Panegyric or Remonſtrance for the Senechal and Judges - - - - of Toulouſe, againſt the King's Notaries, and Secretaries of the ſaid City, at Paris, 1582, in 4to. A Verbal Petition for the above-ſaid Lords, and Officers of Toulouſe, containing an Apology for, and Defence of, the Advertiſement, publiſhed in the Name of the Doctors Regents of the Univerſity of Toulouſe, at Paris, 1583, in 8vo. A brief Explication of this preſent Year 1583, according to the Gregorian Calendar, at Paris, 1583, in 8vo. La Croix du Maine adds, that a Work of the ſame Beloy was printing at Paris, in 1584. viz. A Computation of the Times ſince the Creation of the World, 'till 1582, divided into two ſeveral Columes; and that he would ſpeak, in another Place, of the Latin Works of This Author. The Catalogue of the Bodleian Library mentions two Books; Petri Beloii variorum Juris Civilis, liber 4. & Diſputatio de ſucceſſione ab inteſtato, &c. at Paris, 1583, and the Collation of the Edicts of Pacification with the Explication of the ſaid Edicts, at Paris, in 1600, in 8vo. Beloy is Author of a Commentary on the Edict, which ordered the uniting of the King's Patrimony to the Crown-Lands, at Toulouſe, 1608, in 8vo.

[E] A Fragment of a Letter, which will be a good Supplement to this Article.] Here you have what the Author of the Notes on the Confeſſion of Sanci, and on the Catholicon, was pleaſed to write to me; " I have a Book, which might have given you much " Light concerning the famous Civilian, Peter Beloy:
" The Title of it is; *A Reply to the Anſwer, which
" the Leaguers have publiſhed againſt the Examination,
" which was drawn up, of their pretended Diſcourſe con" cerning the Salic Law of* France, 1587. There is " in it an ample and fine Genealogy of Peter Beloy,
" in honour of That Learned Man, and which " proves him a Gentleman of a Family originally
" of Bretagne, and tranſplanted into Languedoc, and " elſewhere; but the moſt ſingular thing, I find in
" it, is, that it appears, that Peter Beloy was already
" Priſoner in the 1587; and, conſequently, that it
" was King Henry III, who cauſed him to be im-
" priſoned, in complaiſance to the Guiſes, who ac-
" cuſed him, moreover, of being a Shuffler, and a
" Heretic, and who had already cauſed him to be
" accuſed, the foregoing Year, before the King, by
" a Biſhop, —— whom I ſuſpect to be G. Roze,
" of having wrote the Book, for which, Thuanus in" forms us, that Francis le Breton, who was the Author
" of it, was hanged, in 1586. It appears, there,
" alſo, that Beloy was of a Family, whereof all the " Members, and particularly himſelf, had always " been good Catholics; that, at the Age of Twenty
" one Years, he was named Regent of the Univer-
" ſity of Toulouſe, by the Univerſity itſelf, and by
" the Parliament; that, afterwards, after having per" formed the Function of an Advocate, four or five " Years, at Toulouſe, he was made Counſellor in the " Preſidial of That City, with Marks of a moſt ho-
" nourable Diſtinction by the Parliament of Paris;
" and that, what had given an Advantage againſt
" him, at Paris, to his Enemies, the Leaguers, was,
" that, during this long Abode, which he was obliged " to make there, as a Deputy of his Brethren, to the " Court (9), his Zeal for his Prince, and his Coun-
" try, had moved him to oppoſe ſeveral ill Deſigns
" of the League. Moreover, I muſt obſerve, that,
" ſince it is certain, that he was already a Priſoner,
" in 1587, there is no Reaſon to ſay, that he was " not impriſoned 'till 1588. Mr Menage has quoted
" a Diſcourſe at the opening of one of the Settings
" of Parliament, ſpoken by Peter Beloy, in the Year
" 1609 (10)." The Author of this Letter has inſerted part of theſe Facts in the ſecond Edition of his Notes on the Confeſſion of Sanci (11), and he obſerves one thing, which I ought not to omit; which is, that our Beloy was born in the City of Montaubon (12), and that his three elder Brothers were killed in the King's Service againſt the Huguenots.

(9) For an Affair againſt the Notaries of Toulouſe.

(10) Menage's Origin of the French Tongue, at the Word Chaperon.

(11) Pag. 20, 21. Edit. of 1699.

(12) I had made him a Native of Toulouſe, on the Authority of la Croix du Maine.

[F] This Remark will ſerve as a Supplement to the Liſt —— of his Works.] The Epiſtle Dedicatory (13) of his Expoſition of Daniel's Seventy Weeks contains theſe Words. " Finding myſelf at Leiſure,
" during the laſt Summer, I was preſſed, and almoſt
" compelled, by my Friends, to look over again,
" and review, part of The Computation of Times (14),
" which I formerly drew up in the Priſon of the " Baſtile of Paris, where I was confined during the " four Years Tyranny of the League, in order to
" the Publication of This Eſſay." Conclude from this, that he would have publiſhed other Works of this Nature, and the more from his calling this little Diſſertation on Daniel's Weeks, The firſt Eſſay of his Hiſtorical Diſcourſes. We muſt, therefore, add this Diſſertation to the Catalogue of Beloy's Works. It is entituled, An Expoſition of the Prophecy of the Angel Gabriel, touching the ſeventy Weeks, deſcribed by the Prophet Daniel, in the ninth Chapter of his Prophecies, by Mr Peter de Beloy, &c. at Toulouſe, 1605, in 8vo. The following have, likewiſe, been omitted. Of the Origin and Inſtitution of ſeveral Orders of Knight-hood, as well Eccleſiaſtical as Secular, dedicated to Monſeigneur the Dauphin of Viennois, Duke of Bretagne; at Montauban, for Dennis Haultin, 1604, in 8vo. An Arrêt of the Parliament of Toulouſe, pronounced in Appeal as of a Grievance reprehended by Father John Journé, a Monk of the Order of St Dominic, and Provincial of the ſaid Order in the Province of Toulouſe, on the Proceeding againſt him, ordered by the Biſhops of Condom and d' Aure, containing The Pleading on this Affair, by Mr Peter de Beloy, Counſellor and Advocate-General of the King in the ſaid Parliament, at Paris, according to the Copy printed at Toulouſe, in 1612, in 8vo (15).

(13) It is addreſſed to Mr Brulart de Sillery, Keeper of the Seals.

(14) See, above, in Remark [D].

(15) Taken from a Manuſcript Memoir, communicated by Mr Lancelot, of the Mazarine Library at Paris.

Digitized by Google

BELOT (N.), Advocate in the King's Privy-Council, under the Reign of Lewis XIII, publiſhed a Book, which gave occaſion to place him, with little Honour, in the famous Petition of the Dictionaries [A]. He undertook to prove, that our Language ought not to be made uſe of in learned Works, alledging, among other Reaſons, that the communicating the Secrets of Sciences to the People has produced great Evils. He promiſed another Work [B], wherein he was to ſhew the Particulars of That Proof.

[A] He publiſhed a Book, which gave Occaſion to place him - - - - in the famous Petition of the Dictionaries.] Mr Pelliſſon makes mention of it: "At that "time, if I am not miſtaken, the Sieur Belot, Ad- "vocate, dedicated alſo a Book to the Academy, "which I could not find, and which is not men- "tioned in the Regiſters, entituled, An Apology for "the Latin Tongue; and it was That, which gave "occaſion to This fine Paſſage in the Petition of the "Dictionaries.

"La pauvre langue Latiale
"Alloit être trouſſée en male,
"Si le bel Advocat Belot, &c (1)."

(1) Pelliſſon's Hiſtory of the French Academy. p. 195, 196.

What Mr Pelliſſon means by & cætera contains eleven Verſes, which are theſe;

Du Barreau le plus grand falot,
N'en euſt pris en main la defenſe,
Et protegé ſon innocence.
En quoy, certes, & ſa bonté,
Et ſon zele, & ſa charité,
Se firent d'autant paroiſtre,
Qu'il n'a l'honneur de la connoiſtre;
Semblable à ces preux Chevaliers,
Ces Paladins Avanturiers,
Qui, deffendant des Inconnuës,
Ont porté leur nom juſqu' aux nuës.

Thy Language, Latium, ill had fared;
But Belot, Advocate prepared,
Thy Patron ſtands, Thy ſtrong Defence,
And vouches for Thy Innocence.
In truth, Belot's a generous Friend,
A Tongue, he knows not, to defend.
Like thoſe adventurous Knights of old,
Don Quixots ſo renown'd and bold;
Who, fighting for a Fair unknown,
Great Proweſs have in Combat ſhewn.

I have That Book, which Mr Pelliſſon could not find; and I am going to ſay ſomething of it; for it muſt be but little known, ſince, in the Year 1650 (2), it eſcaped the moſt curious Enquirers. The Title of it is: An Apology for the Latin Tongue, againſt the Preface of Monſieur de la Chambre, in his Book of new Conjectures about Digeſtion, dedicated to Monſeigneur Seguier, Chevalier, Chancellor of France. It was printed, at Paris, in the Year 1637, in 8vo, and contains about eighty Pages, including the Epiſtle Dedicatory, the Preface, &c. The Author ſays (3), that he was forced to publiſh it, and tells the occaſion of it. "You muſt know, that Monſieur de la "Chambre —— having obliged me to give him my "Opinion concerning his firſt Treatiſes, my Free- "dom made me find Fault with him as to the Lan- "guage; and, having, nevertheleſs, continued to "write in French, he thought himſelf obliged to "prefix a Preface to his Book, entituled, New Con- "jectures about Digeſtion, in favour of our Language, "againſt the Latin, which, being addreſſed to me, "under the Name of Reader, I found myſelf ob- "liged to anſwer it by this Apology, which my "Friends got out of my Hands, by making uſe of "the Authority of ſuch Perſons, as might command "me to give it to the Public (4)." At the end of his Book, he added the Letter, which he wrote to the Gentlemen of the French Academy.

(2) It was at the Time that Pelliſon was writing the Hiſtory of the Academy.

(3) In the Preface.

(4) Belot, Preface, fol. A. ii.

[B] He promiſed another Work] Note, that he would have Mr Seguier intereſt himſelf in This Cauſe for political Reaſons. The Welfare of the State, ſaid he, and That of Religion are concerned in it. According to his Account, the ancient Romans ſuffered by having uſed the vulgar Language in every thing. "Such are the Effects, which the Secrets of the "Learned, unſeaſonably diſcovered to the People, "have produced among the Romans, and whereof "the Example would be as dangerous to our Mo- "narchy, as it was prejudicial to That Empire. I "omit the fine Conſiderations, which might be drawn "from each Science, and which would make it more "clearly appear, of what Moment it is to keep "them ſecret, or, at leaſt, not to declare them but "to ſuch Perſons, as may be qualified for it. You "will find matter of Wonder, and Aſtoniſhment, in "in a Treatiſe of Politics, which I have enti- "tuled, France, or The perfect Monarchy, when you "come to conſider, that the Knowledge of Philo- "ſophy, imparted to the People, has produced ſo "many Buſy-Bodies, and Sophiſters, the Knowledge "of Divinity ſo many Heretics, and Atheiſts, That "of Morality ſo many Hypocrites, and falſe Virtues, "and That of Phyſic (becauſe 'tis profeſſed in our "Language) ſo many Quacks, and Murtherers, who "kill more Men than the Plague, and the War, "both together, and who have no other way of "livelihood, than That of killing ſo many People "with Impunity (5)." It is not uſeleſs to preſerve the Memory of ſuch falſe turns of the human Mind; They are Poiſons, which may ſerve as Remedies.

(5) Belot's Apology, pag. 28, & ſequ.

BEMBUS (PETER), a noble Venetian, Secretary to Leo X [A], and afterwards Cardinal, was one of the beſt Writers of the XVIth Century; though it muſt be agreed, that he made himſelf ſometimes ridiculous, by an affected way of making uſe only of ancient Latin Words [B]. His Hiſtory of Venice was very much cenſured

[A] He was Secretary to Leo X.] He wrote a great many Letters for That Pope; he was handſomely rewarded for them; and, beſides, he had the Honour of being looked upon as the Author of all Thoſe Letters; for they came out under his Name, and with Thoſe, which he had wrote for himſelf. The latter are divided into ſix Books, and the others into ſixteen. Leo X had another Secretary, who was as great a Puriſt as Bembus (1). He made choice of them before he came out of the Conclave, where he was promoted to the Papacy (2). Mr Graverol, the Advocate, would have publiſhed, with ſome Notes, the Letters, which they wrote for That Pope, if an untimely Death had not put a ſtop to That Work.

(1) It was James Sadolet, who was afterwards Cardinal.

(2) Bembus, Hiſt. rerum Venetar. in fine.

[B] Made himſelf ſometimes ridiculous by an affected way of making uſe only of ancient Latin Words.] "How many Follies has the Affectation of making "uſe only of Cicero's Words, and of what is called "pure Latinity, cauſed certain Italian Authors to "commit? Who would not laugh to hear Bembus "ſay, that a Pope was elected by the Favour of "the Immortal Gods, Deorum immortalium benefi- "ciis?" I take theſe Words from the Author of the Art of Thinking (3). Before him, Juſtus Lipſius had judiciouſly, and pleaſantly, criticized Bembus's Latinity (4). He blames him, among other things, for having ſaid, that the Senate of Venice wrote to the Pope; Put your Truſt in the Immortal Gods, whoſe Vicar you are on Earth: — ut fidat Diis immortalibus, quorum vicem gerit in terris. After this, we ought not to wonder, that he made uſe of the Word Goddeſs, ſpeaking of the Holy Virgin. It is in a Letter (5), where Pope Leo X reproaches the Inhabitants of Recanati, for having given bad Timber for the Building of our Lady of Loretto,

(3) Art of Thinking, Part III, chap. 19, pag. 366, Edit. of Amſterdam, 1685.

(4) Lipſius, Epiſt. 57, Centur. II, Miſcellan. pag. 177.

(5) The 1-th of the 8th Book.

Digitized by Google

censured by Lipsius, upon That Account. It has been also criticized by others, with respect to Sincerity (a). His Letters have not been more spared [C]. He began betimes to run the hazard of being an Author [D]; and he was very successful in it; for his Azolani had an extraordinary Run (b). He was much taken notice of at the Courts of the Duke of Ferrara, and of the Duke of Urbino, which were then the most polite of That Country, and the Rendezvous of the finest Wits (c). He publickly testified his Gratitude for the Esteem, with which the Duke and Duchess of Urbino honoured him, for he wrote a Book in their Praise (d). He was a good Italian, and Latin, Poet; but he was justly censured for having published some loose and obscene Poems [E]. He is one of Those, who have been accused of having spoken

(a) See Bodin, Method. Histor. cap. 4, pag. 93.

(b) See Remark [D].

(c) Joh Casa in vita Bembi.

(d) Entitled, De Guidone Ubaldo Feretrio, deque Elizabetha Gonzaga, ad Nicolaum Teupolum.

Loretto, and commands them to furnish better, least, says he, it should seem, that you deride us, and the Goddess herself; —— Ne tum nos, tum etiam Deam ipsam, inani lignorum inutilium donatione, lusisse videamini. The Words, which Christianity has consecrated, as, fides, excommunicatio, seem barbarous to This Writer; he chooses rather to make use of persuasio for fides, and of aqua & igni interdictio for excommunicatio. Lipsius finds some other Faults in him, as some Italicisms, and also some Solecisms. The same Lipsius, in his Notes on the ninth Chapter of the first Book of his Politics, comprehends, in a few Words, what he had more amply shewed in the above-cited Letter. Among other things, he says; "Cum tam curiosè à verbis sibi caverit, repe-"rio alibi, quæ non dicam Tulliana non sint, sed "vix Latina. —— Notwithstanding his great Care "in the Choice of his Words, I meet with some, "which are not only not Ciceronian, but scarce Latin." The Phrase afferre naves, which he criticizes, would be more pardonable in a Dutchman, because the same Word in Dutch, which signifies to bring, signifies also to carry, which creates sometimes very pleasant Expressions from Dutchmen, who begin to speak French. The History of Venice, which Lipsius criticized so much as to the Stile, appeared, to our Mr Balzac, the Work of a mean Wit, and of a dry and grovelling Author (6).

(6) See his Dissertation on a Speech, spoken at Rome, pag. 273. It is the 9th Discourse of his Miscellaneous Works.

[C] His Letters have not been more spared.] His Friends have been challenged to shew any one of them, that do not grossly trespass against Grammar, and that is not remarkable for some egregious Childishness, and moreover without any Solidity. "Ut cæ-"teram carminum ejus obscœnitatem taceam, quid "ejus epistolis ineptius, & quidem illis quas Ponti-"ficis maximi nomine & de rebus maximis scripsit, "& ad viros maximos? Mentiar ego cum Scipione "Gentili *, & luam gravi pœna, si vel unam mihi "in tot illis voluminibus Epistolam ostendant ama-"tores ejus, quæ non insigni aliquo vitio Gramma-"tico laboret, aut puerili aliqua ineptia conspicua "sit & demonstrabilis. Ne quid de rebus ipsis atque "scientiis dicam sapientiæ inanissimis, & mire lan-"guidis, & (repetendum est enim, quod ejus pro-"prium maxime est) ineptis (7). - - - - To say no-"thing of the other Obscenities to be met with in "his Verses, what can be more trifling, than his "Letters, even Those, which he wrote, in the Pope's "Name, on Affairs of the greatest Importance, and "to the greatest Men? Let me pass for a Liar with "Scipio Gentilis, and suffer great Punishment, if "his Favourers can shew me but one Letter in so "many Volumes, which does not somewhere remark-"ably offend against Grammar, or is not conspicuous "for some childish Impertinence. I say nothing of "the Subject Matter of them, and That surprizing "Emptiness, and (I must again repeat it, as being "peculiar to him) That Impertinence."

* Comment. in Ep. Pauli ad Philem, cap. 18.

(7) Lanzius, Orat. contra Italiam, pag. 783.

[D] He ventured betimes to run the Hazard of being an Author.] During the three Years (8) he was in Sicily, a Scholar of Constantine Lascaris, Professor of the Greek Tongue, at Messina, he composed a Latin Treatise de Monte Ætna, which was printed in 1486 (9). Being returned home to his Father, he followed him some Years after to the Court of Hercules d'Est, Duke of Ferrara. He made himself beloved, and respected, there; and it was at this time, that he wrote his Azolani. They are Discourses on Love, so called, because it is supposed, that they were made in the Castle of Azolo. He was, then, but twenty six Years of Age (10). This Italian Book had great Success, both among Men and Women; one would have past for a Novice in Italy, who should have been a Stranger to it. "Eos libros tanta hominum, mulierum etiam, "medius fidius, approbatione, & tanquam plausu ex-"ceptos recentes esse meminimus, ut extemplo cuncta "eos Italia cupidissimè lectitarit, atque didicerit: ut "non satis urbani aut elegantes ii haberentur, quibus "Asulanæ illæ disputationes essent incognitæ (11)." It has been printed several Times. One John Martin, Secretary to Cardinal de Lenoncourt, made a French Translation of it, which he published in the Year 1545.

(8) That is, from 1482, to 1485.

(9) Bembus, Epist. 6, l. 2.

(10) Joh. Casa, in vita Bembi, pag. 143.

(11) Id. ib.

He translated it from the Italian Edition of the Year 1540, which had been preceeded by three or four others, since That of the Year 1515; and he observes this, to prevent any Person from wondering at the Differences, which were between his Translation, and the Original, printed by Aldus, in the Year 1515 (12). "If they please to consider, says he (13), "that Bembo's Work has been three or four times re-"printed since That Time, and that the said Signior "Bembo has cut off some things from it, which seem-"ed superfluous to him, and also that the last Im-"pression (which I have followed,) is of the Year "1540, made, (as it is to be supposed) by his Au-"thority, and Permission; my Opinion is, that they "will not say, that I have wronged the Author in "any thing." This was of some use to Gaffarel, who, finding himself censured for employing his Pen in Matters ill-becoming a Clergyman, excused himself by the Authority of divers Examples; and by name, That of the Azolani of Cardinal Bembo (14). It might have been objected to him, that That Work was composed by a young Gentleman, who was not yet engaged in the Ecclesiastical State: but he might have replied, that the Author published a new Edition of it, after his Cardinalship.

(12) There it, in the 183*d Page of the second Part of the Catalogue of the Library of* Nicolas Heinsius, Gli Asolani di Pietro Bembo. Ald. 1505. It is certain, that they were printed in That Year. See the 8*th Letter of the* 4*th Book of* Bembus.

(13) John Martin's Advertisement to the Reader. It is to be found at the end of the Book.

(14) Gaffarel's Preface to the Unheard of Curiosities.

[E] He has been censured for having published some loose and obscene Poems.] We have seen already (15), what Lanzius reproaches him with; here is a Passage of Scaliger: "Petrus Bembus elegiaco (carmine) "eam partem corporis humani celebravit, sine qua "nulla obscœnitas foret. Legatur ejus Elegia, cujus "initium:

Ante alias omnes, meus hic quas educat hortus,
Una puellares illicit herba manus:

"quod poëma merito vocare possis obsceniissimam ele-"gantiam, aut elegantissimam obscenitatem. Unius "& quadraginta distichorum est (16). - - - - - - Peter "Bembus celebrated, in Elegiac Verse, That Part of "the Body, without which there would be no Obsce-"nity. Read his Elegy, which begins thus:

Of all the Plants, which in my Garden grow,
This most the Female Touch desires to know.

"which Poem may deservedly be called The Most Ob-"scene Elegance, or The Most Elegant Obscenity. It "consists of Forty one Distichs." Thuanus and Menage, shall serve as new Witnesses; the former by these Words; "Illius (Bembi) multa licentiosius, ut "temporum nequitia & domini cui serviebat mores "ferebant, scripta extant (17); - - - - - There are ex-"tant several loose Compositions of the same Bembus, "which are owing to the Vice of the Times, and the "Manners of the Master, whom he served." And the latter by this Remark: "If it was true, "that John della Casa was excluded from the Car-"dinalship for his Poem, Cardinal Bembo was more "fortunate than He; for the licentious Verses, which "he wrote in his Youth, and which are yet more "licentious than Those of the Capitolo del Forno, did "not hinder him from being made a Cardinal (18)."

(15) See, above, Citat. (7).

(16) Scaliger, Confutat. Fabulæ Burdonum, pag 323.

(17) Thuanus, lib. 3, sub fin. pag. 66.

(18) Menage, Anti-Baillet, cap. 120.

[F] - - - - and

Digitized by Google

ſpoken of the Word of GOD with great Contempt [F]. Perhaps he only found fault with the Stile of it. Authors differ about the Sex of his Children [G]; but they agree, in ſaying they were illegitimate, and three in Number. One of his Letters informs us, that his two Grandmothers lived a hundred Years [H]. He died in the Year 1547 (e), in his Seventy-ſeventh Year (f). Speron Sperone ſays, he ſet a great Value on the Knowledge of Languages [I]. If this Article be ſhort, it is becauſe Moreri has ſpoken at large of Cardinal Bembo.

(e) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 3, ſub. fin.

(f) And not in his 68th Year, as Moreri ſays, after having obſerved, that he was born, in 1470, and that he died in 1537.

Upon the Death of his Mother, he wrote a very fine conſolatory Letter to his Father BERNARD BEMBUS. He ſays in it, that ſhe had lived Forty eight Years with her Huſband, in a Concord, which no Complaint had ever interrupted [K]; and he ſeems to be very much afflicted for the Loſs of This good Mother. He [F] - - - - - - and for having ſpoken of the Word of GOD with great Contempt.] I can go back no farther, than a German Author, whoſe Name is Thomas Lanzius, who publiſhed ſeveral Speeches, for, and againſt, the Nations of Europe. He ſays, without quoting any Body (19), that Bembus adviſed a Friend not to read St Paul's Epiſtles, for fear of ſpoiling his Stile. "Advertite, auditores, inepti hominis impietatem cum pari ſtultitia conjunctam. Is ſiquidem "Epiſtolas omnes Pauli palam condemnavit, eaſque "deflexo in contumeliam vocabulo Epiſtolaccias eſt "auſus appellare, cum amico autor eſſet ne illas attingeret, vel, ſi cœpiſſet legere, de manibus ejiceret, ſi "elegantiam ſcribendi & eloquentiam adamaret (20). "—— Obſerve, Gentlemen, the equal Impiety and "Folly of the Man. He openly condemned All St Paul's "Epiſtles, and contemptuouſly dared to ſtile them Epiſtolets, adviſing a Friend not to meddle with them, "or, if he ſhould begin to read them, preſently to "throw them by, if he loved Elegance of Stile, and "Eloquence." Others pretend, that, having heard, that Sadolet explained the Epiſtle to the Romans, he ſaid to him; Let theſe Fooleries alone, they do not become a grave Man: Omitte has nugas, non enim decent gravem virum tales ineptiæ (21). We ſhall ſee, in another place (22) a Story, which was ſpread abroad, which would induce one to think, that he did not believe the Immortality of the Soul.

(19) Konig quotes Scipio Gentilis, Comment. ad Epiſt. Pauli ad Philemon, pag. 40.

(20) Lanzius, ubi ſupra.

(21) Gregor. Michael, Not. in Curioſitates Gaffarelli, pag. 111.

[G] Authors differ about the Sex of his Children.] Moreri gives him two Sons and a Daughter; but Imperialis obſerves, that Bembus kept a Concubine all his Life-time, by whom he had three Daughters (23). It is certain, that Bembus had a Son, whoſe Name was Torquato, to whom Manutius dedicated his Virgil. I do not queſtion but that Imperialis is miſtaken; for John della Caſa, who wrote the Life of Bembus with great Application, ſays expreſsly, that his Miſtreſs had two Sons by him, to wit, Lucilio and Torquato, and a Daughter, whoſe Name was Helena, who was married to Peter Gradenigue. He remarks alſo, that This Miſtreſs was a fine Woman, and that Peter Bembus, a well-ſhaped, polite, gallant, and courteous Man, was greatly beloved in all Companies. During his Abode at Ferrara, Duke Hercules d'Eſte, and Lucretia Borgia, the Wife of Alphonſus d'Eſte, ſhewed him a particular Friendſhip (24).

(22) In Remark [P], of the Article MELANCHTHON.

(23) Imperialis, in Muſæo Hiſtor.

(24) John della Caſa, in the Life of Bembus.

[H] One of his Letters informs us, that his two Grandmothers lived a hundred Years.] This Letter being ſhort, I ſhall ſet it down at length (25): It appears by it, that Bembus would willingly have ſacrificed theſe two old Women to the Life of his deceaſed Brother. "Petrus Bembus Herculi Strotio. Avias ambas meas effœtas, deploratasque fœminas, & jam prope centum annorum mulieres, mihi fata reliquerunt: unicum fratrem meum juvenem ac florentem abſtulerunt, ſpem & ſolatia mea. Quamobrem quo "in mœrore ſim ipſe facile potes exiſtimare. Reliqua ex meis intelliges. Heu me miſerum! Vale. "Id. Jan. 1504. Venetiis. —— Peter Bembus to "Hercules Strozza. Fate has left me both my Grandmothers, wretched old Women, and now almoſt an "hundred Years old: but it has robbed me of my only "Brother, in the Flower of his Youth, my Hope and "Conſolation. You may, from hence, eaſily gueſs at "my Affliction. The Reſt my People will inform you "of. Farewel. Venice. The Ides of January, 1504." He was much more affected with his Mother's Death. See the Remark [K].

(25) It is the 110*th of the* 3*d Book*, pag. 486.

[I] He ſet a great Value on the Knowledge of Languages.] So far as to prefer it before the Marquiſate of Mantua. "Jo ſo nulla per riſpetto à que glorioſi: "ma quel poco che io ne ſo delle lingue, non lo cangierei al Marcheſato di Mantoua (26). - - - - - I am "not vain of my Knowledge in any Language; but the "little I know of them I would not exchange for the "Marquiſate of Mantua." A Writer of Dialogues makes no ſcruple to aſcribe to his Interlocutors, what they never ſaid; and therefore I ſee no great reaſon to believe, that Peter Bembus was really of This Opinion, having no other Proof for it, than This Author's Dialogue. Some have quoted Speron Sperone, as if Bembus had only mentioned his Talent of writing in Latin (27); but it is certain, from the Words that I have cited, that Bembus ſpoke, in general, of the Knowledge of Tongues: And it muſt not be imagined, that he pretended to exclude the Greek, which he had learned in Sicily under Laſcaris, ſo far as to write it very well (28).

(26) Speron Sperone, in the Dialogue Delle Lingue, fol. 107, verſo.

(27) Teiſſier, Addit. to Thuanus, Tom. I, pag. 11.

(28) John Caſa, in Vita Bembi.

[K] His Mother had lived Forty eight Years with her Huſband, in a Concord, which no Complaint had ever interrupted.] Theſe are his Words: "Cum duæ "eſſent cauſæ quibus maximè commoveri debui ad "luctum, una quod me parente optima meique amantiſſima orbatum viderem; altera, quod te privari lectiſſima prudentiſſimaque conjuge, cum qua "duodequinquaginta annos SINE ULLA QUERELA "concordiſſimè vixiſſes, tibi patri meo acerbiſſimum "atque luctuoſiſſimum putarem futurum; harum "duarum cauſarum altera me abs te levari ſentiebam, &c (29). - - - - Tho' I have two Reaſons to "be afflicted; the One, The Loſs of the beſt and "fondeſt of Mothers; the Other, The extream Con"cern, which muſt affect you, O my Father, at being "deprived of the choiceſt and moſt prudent of Wives, "with whom you have lived Forty eight Years, in "the utmoſt Concord; yet you yourſelf afford me Re"lief from one of theſe Occaſions of Sorrow, &c." This Letter, dated from Urbino, the Twenty ſecond of November, 1509, is a great Elogy of the Mother, and an illuſtrious Teſtimony of her Son's Affection. It deſerves to be read from the beginning to the end. Bernard Bembus had already ſome Grandſons. His Wife had lived near ſeventy Years. There is another Letter of Peter Bembus, wherein he ſhews his Brotherly Affection; for he gives there a lively Repreſentation of his Siſter's Unhappineſs, that he might obtain ſome Remedy for That Lady's Misfortunes from the Patriarch of Venice. She was married to a Man, who gave himſelf over to all manner of Lewdneſs, and who beſtowed that Affection, which was due to his Wife, on Proſtitutes. "Marcelli ejus mariti meretricio amore animus turpiter "abalienatus (30). De Marcello etiam ſpero fore, "ut cum ſe ille meretricia conſuetudine plenâ infamiæ, plena calamitatis, liberatum per te ſolutumque ſedato animo atque placato cognorit, tibi gratias agat, quod illum belluarum more ſine pudore, "ſine lege, ſine ullo officio degentem, ad hominum "vitam rationemque traduxeris (31). - - - - - As for "Marcellus, I am in hopes, that, when he comes "ſeriouſly to reflect, that you have freed him from the "Infamy and Danger of a Life ſpent among Harlots, "he will return you thanks for bringing him over "from a brutal, ſhameleſs, and irregular, Conduct, "to the Life and Reaſon of a Man." He abuſed her horribly, without being moved to pity by her Patience, and Silence, and by that Modeſty, whereby ſhe endeavoured to bring him back to his Duty. "Nolo tibi commemorare quot aut quantas indignitates Antonia ſoror univerſum biennium pertulerit, dum prudens atque optima mulier, humanitate, pudore, continentia, labore etiam ſummo ſuo, "quodque in hujuſmodi rebus ſolet eſſe difficillimum, "taciturnitate, viri improbitatem, perditiſſimoſque "mores placare, ac flectere in melius, cupit (32). "—— I forbear to recount to you the many Indignities

(29) Petrus Bembus, Epiſt. vi lib. I, pag. 420.

(30) Id. Epiſt. i, lib. v, pag. 559.

(31) Ibid. pag. 562.

(32) Id. ib. pag. 560.

Digitized by Google

He was blamed for having followed the Custom of Flatterers, with whom the Merit of the living always exceeds That of the dead; for he published, that Paul III, was more learned, than Leo X. It is worth while to see how he justified himself [L]. After the Death of Navagier, in 1530, the Council of Ten pitched upon Him to write The History of the Republic of Venice (g) [M]. His Age of sixty Years would have made him decline This Trouble, had he not been more willing to incommode himself, than not to do this Service to his Country (h). I must say a Word of the Design, it is pretended he had, to refuse the Cardinalship [N]. His Historian enlarged on this Point, and did not fail to say, that his Narrative would pass for a Fable, with many Persons, who judge of their Neighbours by themselves. He has nobly expressed This Common-place [O], as will be seen below (i); and I shall examine it more at large, in the last Remark of this Article.

(g) Bembus Epist. 25. lib. 3. pag. 501.

(h) Id. init. Histor. Rerum Venet.

(i) Citat. (40).

" nities my Sister Antonia has suffered for full two " Years; whilst That prudent, and best of Women, " endeavours, with Complaisance, and Modesty, with Pa- " tience, and even the greatest Pains, and (what is " uncommon in such Cases) with Silence, to reform " the abandoned Morals of her Husband, and bring " him back to the right way." This is a finer Letter, than the other; it is dated from Urbino, the seventh of July, 1510, which occasions a small Difficulty; for it is supposed there, that Bembus's Mother was yet living: " Curandum tibi certe est ne Soror mea, " ne Pater, ne Mater, ne universa nostra familia - - - " secure tandem ac planè liberè irrideamur (33). - - - - " It is certainly incumbent on you to take care, that " my Sister, Father, Mother, and whole Family, be not, " securely, and with Impunity, made the Subject of " Mockery and Derision." And we have seen, that he wrote a Letter of Consolation to his Father, upon his Widowhood, in the Month of November, 1509. It were to be wished, that so many Letters of great Men were not wrong dated (34).

(33) Id. ib.

(34) See Remark [B], of the Article AMMONIUS (ANDREW).

[L] It is worth while to see how he justified himself from the Charge of Flattery.] When, in 1535, he published the Letters, which he had written in the Name of Leo X, he dedicated them to Paul III, and declared him much more learned, than Pope Leo X was. " Eas autem ad te, Paule, potissimum literas " mitto; quia Pontifex maximus es, ut Leo decimus " fuit, & in optimarum artium disciplinis multo, " quam ille, habitus doctior. Vera enim fateri om- " nes non solum honestè possumus, sed etiam debe- " mus. —— I, therefore, dedicate these Letters to " you, Paul, because you are Pope, as was Leo X, and " esteemed more learned, than He. For we not only " may, but ought, to confess the Truth." This Elogy was looked upon as exorbitant; Bembus's Character, and the Remembrance of the great Favours he had received from Leo X, were not to be seen in it. " Esse nonnullos, qui me in laudando Paulo " Pont. Max. longius progressum esse putent, quàm " aut mei mores, aut summa in me Leonis X of- " ficia, aut veritas omnino ipsa postularit (35). - - - - " Some there are, who think I have gone further in " commending Pope Paul, than my own Character, " or the Favours I received from Leo X, or than even " Truth itself demanded." He answered Molsa, who gave him Notice of This Censure, That he had only given the Preference to Paul III, as to Literature, which the Domestic Misfortunes of Leo X had hindered him from making any great Progress in; that he had taken care not to judge which of the two surpassed the other in Prudence, Firmness, Temperance, Goodness, and Liberality; that it was not difficult to know, that Paul had more Learning, than the other; that he had never failed to acknowledge the Favours of Leo X, though he was less indebted to him for his Fortune, than to Julius II. " Tametsi mediam plus partem earum quas habeo " fortunarum omnium Julius secundus Pont. Max. " cui nunquam inservivi, contulit (36). - - - - Tho' " Pope Julius II, whom I never served, conferred " on me more than half the Fortunes I possess."

(35) Bembus, Epist. 85, lib. 6, pag. 701.

(36) Id. ib. pag. 702.

[M] He was pitched upon to write the History of the Republic of Venice.] They would have him to begin it, where Sabellicus had ended it (37), and continue it down to his own time. This Interval comprehended Forty four Years (38). He did not compleat it; for he ended his Work at the Death of Julius II. This History is divided into twelve Books, and was printed at Venice, in the Year 1551, and reprinted, the same Year, at Paris, by Michael Vascosan, in 4to. It was afterwards printed at Basil, with the other Works of Bembus, in three Volumes, in 8vo, in the Year 1567. Neither He, nor any one else, could reap any Benefit from Andrew Navagier's Labour, who had a like Commission, and who, at his Death, had ordered all his Writings to be burnt (39). We have seen, in the Remark [B], what Judgment was passed on the History written by Bembus.

(37) About the Year 1486.

(38) Bembus, in it. Histor. Rerum Venetar.

(39) Id. ibid.

[N] It is pretended, he had a Design to refuse the Cardinalship.] Mereri speaks of it at large; but he has not discovered the Beauties, with which John della Casa, whom he copies, has adorned That Narrative. This Historian of our Bembus declares, he is not ignorant, that several People will reject this Part of his Narrative; and That, since most Men judge of others by themselves, it will not be believed, that Peter Bembus sincerely despised a Degree of Honour, which almost every one judges to deserve the most passionate and earnest Wishes; but that, as for himself, who writes, whilst things are yet fresh in Memory, and whilst part of the Actors are yet living, he ought not to be suspected of an Imposture; but that, after all, he is not afraid of the Appearances of Falshood, which attended the Truth he was about to publish, remembring very well, that the Fault of Those, who venture to advance Untruths in History, is as great, as the Fault of Those, who dare not speak out the Truth. I do not represent the Beauties of the Original, any more than Mereri; and therefore I shall set down the Author's own Words for the sake of those, who understand Latin. " Non " sum nescius multos fore, qui nostræ orationi hac " in re parum fidei habeant: plerique enim omnes, " quid de aliena voluntate credendum sit, de sua " conjecturam faciunt: itaque incredibile multis vi- " sum iri intelligo, Bembum id verè atque ex animo " aspernatum esse, quod omnes fere summa cupidi- " tate expetendum atque optabile esse existiment; " tametsi scribimus hæc recenti hujus facti memo- " ria, multisque, qui in agendo adfuerunt, superstiti- " bus, quos mendacii atque impudentiæ nostræ cons- " cios ac testes habere cur velimus causa nulla est. " Sed quoniam par eorum peccatum esse censemus, " qui mentiri in historia audent, atque eorum, qui " dicere verum reformidant; mendacii speciem, ve- " rum cum dicturi essemus, non horruimus (40)." I find myself obliged to say here, that I am none of Those, of whom John della Casa foresaw the Incredulity. I have seen so many Characters in Peter Bembus's Letters, not only of an honest Man, and a generous and assiduous Friend, but also of a learned Person, who preferred the Calmness of a retired Life, which permits an entire Consecration to the Muses, before the Vanities and Pomps of a Court, that I can easily imagine, he wished in earnest not to be a Cardinal.

(40) Joannes Casa, in vita Petri Bembi, pag. 150, Collect. Bateslii.

[O] His Historian says, that this will pass for a Fable with Those, who judge of their Neighbours by themselves; and he has nobly expressed This Common-place.] It is what we have seen in his Latin Words; and, consequently, there remains only for me to prove, that there is a Common-place in them; which I shall easily do. One of the Difficulties, which attend the writing of History, is, that the Readers are apt to look upon the noblest Actions, of which they find themselves incapable, as so many Lies: This has been observed long ago. " Ac mihi quidem, said Sal- " lust (41), - - - - - in primis arduum videtur, res " gestas scribere; primum, quod facta dictis exæ- " quanda sunt; dehinc, quia plerique, quæ delicta " reprehenderis, malevolentia & invidia dicta putant, " ubi de magna virtute, atque gloria bonorum me- " mores, quæ sibi quisque facilia factu putat, æquo " animo accipit, supra, veluti ficta, pro falsis ducit. " - - - - - For my own Part, I look upon the writing " of History to be the most difficult Task; first, be- " cause the Actions and Stile must correspond; then, " because

(41) Sallust. in Proem. belli Catilin. pag. 6, 7.

Digitized by Google

" becauſe moſt Readers think, when you find fault,
" it is through Malevolence and Envy; and becauſe,
" when you celebrate the remarkable Virtue and Glory
" of good Men, what each Man thinks he could with
" eaſe have performed himſelf, he admits to be true,
" but, what is above his Capacity, rejects as falſe." Pericles had already made the ſame Obſervation concerning Thoſe, who hear a Funeral Oration. " The " Praiſes, ſaid he, which the Auditors think themſelves capable of deſerving, are not ſubject to be
" criticiſed; but, if they exceed their Strength, they " render them envious and incredulous, and are looked
" upon by them as Fiction, and a Piece of Flattery."
Eatenus tolerabiles ſunt alienæ laudes, quatenus ſeipſum quiſque parem arbitratur alicui illarum aſſequendæ: quibus vero imparem, iis invidet, fidemque non habent (42). The Foundation of all this is, that every one is apt to meaſure other Men's Actions by his own. " Quæ volumus & credimus libenter, they are
" Julius Cæſar's Words (43), & quæ ſentimus ipſi,
" reliquos ſentire ſperamus. —— What we deſire,
" and willingly believe, and what we ourſelves think,
" we hope are the Sentiments of others." Nothing is more eaſy, than to deceive Thoſe, who never deceived others, aud nothing is more difficult than to draw thoſe into a Snare, who have always acted fraudulently (44). The Reaſon, both of This Facility, and This Difficulty, may eaſily be gueſſed at. A good, plain, and ſincere, Man does not ſuſpect any Inclination to Deceit; and for That Reaſon, he acts without much Precaution; but a Knave, thinking, that others are like himſelf, keeps on his Guard againſt all the Artifices, which he knows he ſhould make uſe of on the like Occaſions. It is uſual to judge diſadvantageouſly of Thoſe, who miſtruſt every thing, and who readily believing all the ill Reports, which are ſpread concerning their Neighbours, deny, or queſtion, or put an ill Conſtruction on, the beſt, and the moſt laudable Actions, which they hear of. What Phædrus ſaid of certain Perſons, who take the Deſcriptions or Cenſures of Vice for perſonal Affronts, may be applied to them; Are you ſo imprudent, ſaid he to them, as to reveal the Secrets of your Hearts in ſuch a manner?

Suſpicine ſi quis errabit ſua,
Et rapiet ad ſe, quod erit commune omnium,
Stultè nudabit animi conſcientiam (45).

Others had already made uſe of This Thought. Cicero had ſaid; " Neminem nomino; quare iraſci mihi
" nemo poterit, niſi qui ante de ſe voluit confiteri (46). —— I name no body; no body, therefore,
" can be angry with me, but He, who is reſolved
" to betray himſelf." St Jerom ſaid; " Quando ſine
" nomine contra vitia ſcribitur, qui iraſcitur, accuſator
" eſt ſui (47). —— Since we write againſt Vice, with-
" out pointing out the Offenders, He, who takes it
" ill, is his own Accuſer." It is therefore pretended, that Theſe credulous Men, with regard to Slanders, who are, otherwiſe, incredulous as to the Praiſes of their Neighbours, ſhew, thereby, the bad State of their Minds, their Diſpoſition to Evil, and their Inability for what is Good. Faber made uſe of this Common-place againſt Thoſe, who pretended, that he had acted contrary to Piety, in maintaining, that the Paſſage of Joſephus, relating to JESUS CHRIST, is ſpurious. They will make it appear, ſays he, that Impiety ſeems but a Trifle to them, if they accuſe others of it without Reaſon. " Si quis
" tamen aliter judicaverit, & meum ſcribendi con-
" ſilium in crimen detorſerit, is, ut ait ἠθικώτατος
" poëta.

Stulte nudabit animi conſcientiam.

" Quemadmodum enim & recte & vere olim pro-
" nunciavit Amphis,

Ὅστις ὑμνύοντι μηδὲν πείθεται,
Αὐτὸς ἐπιορκεῖν ῥᾳδίως ἐπίσταται.

" Sic non minus vere dici poteſt, Qui ob rem nul-
" lam alios impietatis inſimulant, eos ſatis aperte
" oſtendere quam leve peccatum exiſtiment tam di-
" rum ſcelus (48)." The two Greek Verſes of this Paſſage have a very fine Senſe; they ſignify, that He, who will not believe his Neighbour's Oaths, will eaſily be guilty himſelf of Perjury: which is much like theſe Words of Tertullian to a Maker of raſh Judgments; ſi potes iſta de aliis credere, potes & facere. ----- If you can believe theſe things of others, you are capable of doing them yourſelf. One of Thoſe, who wrote againſt Marc Antony de Dominis, laid a great Streſs upon This Common-place. " Hic aliud argumentum adducam, quo oſtendam,
" conſcientiam tuam & fidem meritò nobis & cor-
" dato cuivis ſuſpectam eſſe debere. Noſti, opinor,
" Oratoris dictum, cujus veritatem quotidiana ex-
" perientia declarat: Ut quiſque peſſimus eſt, ita de
" aliis peſſimè ſuſpicatur. Qui faſtu tumet, ſuperbus;
" qui divitiis inhiat, avaros; qui ſanctitatem fingit,
" hypocritas; qui dolos verſat, proditores; qui nullâ
" fide & conſcientiâ eſt, conſcientiam penſi non ha-
" bere unà ſecum omnes exiſtimat (49). ----- Si
" Vigilantianis, qui nullos caſtos ex Clero credebant,
" benè objicit Hieronymus, ſatis oſtendunt quàm
" ſanctè vivant, qui malè de omnibus ſuſpicantur;
" certè ſatis conſcientiam tuam, quam jactas puram,
" quam ſit tetra & impia oſtendis, qui de Scripto-
" ribus Romanis, Pariſienſibus, modernis, antiquis,
" Græcis, Latinis, Imperatoribus Chriſtianis, Sum-
" mis Pontificibus antiquiſſimis, Conciliis generalibus
" pleniſſimis, ſex Chriſtianis ſæculis, tetra & impia
" non ſuſpicaris modò, ſed certiſſimè aſſirmas, ubi
" ne leviſſima quidem juſtæ ſuſpicionis umbra eſt (50).
" ---- I will here produce another Argument, to
" ſhew, that we, and every honeſt Man, ought to " ſuſpect your Conſcience and Faith. You know, I
" preſume, the ſaying of the Orator, the Truth of " which is confirmed by every Day's Experience, The " worſe a Man is himſelf, the more apt he is to ſuſ-
" ſpect others. The haughty Man ſuſpects every one
" elſe of Pride; The covetous Man, of Avarice; the
" Pretender to Sanctity, of Hypocriſy; the Trickſter,
" of Knavery; and the Man of no Faith or Conſcience,
" of the want of both ----- If St Jerom objects,
" with reaſon, to the Vigilantians, who believed none
" of the Clergy were chaſt, that They, who ſuſpect ill
" of others, ſhew how holily themſelves live; ſurely
" you betray the Impiety and Foulneſs of your Con-
" ſcience, whoſe Purity you boaſt; when, without the
" leaſt Shadow of juſt Suſpicion, you not only ſuſpect,
" but confidently affirm, baſe and impious Things of
" of the Roman Authors, Pariſian, Modern, Ancient,
" Greek, Latin, Chriſtian Emperors, Ancient Popes,
" the fulleſt General Councils, and the ſix Chriſtian
" Centuries."

Obſerve, that there is no Subject, on which the Roman Catholics have made more uſe of this Common-Place, than That of Continency; for they have affected to ſay, that Thoſe, who accuſe the Clergy of not obſerving it, and Thoſe, who think the Obſervation of it to be almoſt impoſſible, are laſcivious Men, who judge of others by themſelves (51). The Jeſuit, who wrote againſt Thuanus, under the falſe Name of Joannes Baptiſta Gallus, was ſo audacious as to ſay, that That great Man, having the Reputation of loving Women, eaſily believed, that other Men had the ſame Fault, and alledged Nero to him. " Quod de Nerone ferunt, qui cum perditiſſime &
" impuriſſime viverit, caſtum eſſe poſſe neminem cen-
" ſebat (52). —— As they report of Nero, who, be- " ing himſelf addicted to the moſt ſcandalous Debau-
" cheries, believed no Man could be chaſt. Oſten-
" dunt, continues he, ajebat S. Hieronymus, de hære-
" ticis agens, quam caſtè vivant, qui benè de aliis
" ſentire aut loqui nequeunt. σφῶς ἀτασθαλίης
" διαμετρέισθαι ἄπαντας. —— St Jerom, treating
" of Heretics, ſaid, They ſhew, how chaſtly they live,
" who cannot think, or ſpeak, well of Others: They
" meaſure others by their own Impurity." The Greek is quoted as out of Gregory Nazianzen. What is alledged of Nero, is to be found in Suetonius, and in ſtronger Terms. " Ex nonnullis comperi, ſays the " Hiſtorian (55), perſuaſiſſimum habuiſſe eum nemi-
" num hominum pudicum, aut ulla corporis parte
" purum eſſe: verum pleroſque diſſimulare vitium, &
" calliditate obtegere: ideoque profeſſis apud ſe ob-
" ſcœnitatem, cætera quoque conceſſiſſe delicta. ---
" I have been informed by ſome, that he was fully
" perſuaded, that no Man was chaſt or pure in any " part of his Body; but that many only diſſembled
" Vice, and artfully concealed it: for which reaſon,
" when any one made Profeſſion of Obſcenity before
" him, he allowed him every other Vice." If I add to all this a cruel and impudent Invective of Scioppius againſt Theodorus Beza, it is only to confute it. He aſſerts, that the reaſon, for which That Miniſter ſuſpected

(42) Thucydid. lib. 2, p. 100, 101, Edit. Latinæ Francof. 1589.

(43) Cæſar. de bello Civili, lib. 2, pag. 295.

(44) See the French Verſes, which I have produced in Remark [A], of the Article EVE.

(45) Phædrus, lib. 3, in Prologo.

(46) Cicero pro lege Manilia.

(47) In Rufin. lib. 1. cap. 3.

(48) Tanaquillus Faber, Epiſtol. 42. lib. 1. pag. 128.

(49) Fidelis Annoſus Verementanus Theologus (that is to ſay, John Floyd, an Engliſh Jeſuit) in Hypocriſi Marci Antonii de Dominis octoëta, pag. 116, 117. Alegambus calls him Annotus Fidelis Verimontanus.

(50) Id. ib. pag. 134.

(51) See the New Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, pag. 681.

(52) Jo. Baptiſta Gallus, in Notationib. in Jac. Auguſti Thuani Hiſtoriarum libros, cap. 9.

(53) Sueton. in Nerone, cap. 29.

Digitized by Google

pected the Falſity of the Hiſtory, which we read in the eighth Chapter of St John, is, becauſe it is ſaid there, that JESUS CHRIST remained alone with the Woman, who was accuſed of Adultery (54). " Talis Beza, qui in octavum caput Johannis affirmat, " ſibi mulieris in adulterio deprehenſæ hiſtoriam ſuſ- " pectæ fidei ac veritatis eſſe, quòd CHRISTUS dica- " tur ſolus cum ſola fœmina remanſiſſe: ſibi nempe " conſcius, quid ſolus ipſe cum Candida ſua ſola agere " conſueverit: qui, ſicut Spartani, quòd Martiales ac " bellatores eſſent, omnes Deorum dearumque imagi- " nes atque ſtatuas haſtatas faciebant, tamquam Deos " omnes virtute bellica præditos exiſtimarent; ita " ipſe propter ſuam libidinem & impudicitiam, CHRI- " STUM quoque Sanctum Sanctorum, &c (55). - - - - " Such is Beza, who, on the eighth Chapter of St " John, affirms, that he ſuſpects the Truth of the " Story of the Woman taken in Adultery, becauſe " CHRIST is ſaid to have been left alone with the " Woman: being conſcious to himſelf of what was wont " to paſs between him and his Candida, when alone " together: And, as the Spartans, worſhippers of " Mars, and Warriours, made the Statues of all their " Deities armed with Spears; ſo this Man, being " himſelf libidinous and immodeſt, ſuppoſes CHRIST, " the Holy of Holies, &c." Never was Satire ſo ill grounded as This; for it is true, indeed, that the Hiſtory of This Woman was ſuſpected by Beza; but it is no ways for the reaſon, which Sciopius alledges: Beza gives ſeveral reaſons for it; and, if he obſerves, that JESUS CHRIST was left alone with The Woman, it is not becauſe ſuch a Circumſtance contains a Motive of ſome diſhoneſt Suſpicion, but becauſe the thing itſelf does not agree with the Sequel of the Text, and does not ſeem probable (56).

(54) The Franciſcan Feuardentius had already publiſhed the ſame Lie, in the 13*th Chap. of the* 4*th Book of his* Theomach a Calviniſtica, p. 164.

(55) Sciopius, in Scaligero hypobolimæo, fol. 15. verſo.

(56) See the Notes of Beza on the 8*th Chap. of St* John.

BEME, Murtherer of Admiral de Chatillon, on St Bartholomew's Day, would not deſerve a Place in This Dictionary, were it not, that many Perſons, knowing a Man by ſome very enormous Crime, deſire to know what became of him afterwords, and of what manner of Death he died. Now they cannot well ſatisfy their Curioſity, without much Trouble, when the Perſon in queſtion is of mean Rank; wherefore, it muſt be a great Pleaſure to them, when a Book is put into their Hands, whereby they are enabled to ſatisfy themſelves immediately. Let thus much be ſaid, once for all, in regard to ſuch like Articles. BEME, then, a German by Nation [A], educated in the Houſe of the Duke of Guiſe, made himſelf the chief Executioner of the Maſſacre, which was reſolved upon againſt the Admiral (a). It was Beme, who, as ſoon as the Chamber Door was broke open, aſked him, Art thou the Admiral? And, knowing by his Anſwer what he had aſked, he run his Sword through his Body, and then gave him a great cut, with his Back-ſword, over his Face. It was He, who anſwered the Duke of Guiſe, enquiring If the Buſineſs was done, that it was done, and who threw the Body, by the Duke's Order, out of the Window. He was taken in Xaintonge, by the Garriſon of Bouteville, in the Year 1575. He promiſed a great Ranſom, and to cauſe Montbrun to be releaſed, whom the Catholics had taken in Dauphiné. The Deſire alone of ſaving Montbrun, kept Beme from being put to Death; wherefore he was in great fear, when he heard, that Montbrun was executed; He bribed a Soldier, who ſaved him on a good Horſe, with a Piſtol at his Saddle Bow. Bertanville, Governor of the Place, finding, that he was eſcaped, mounts on a cropt Horſe alone, and overtakes Beme, and the Soldier; and, having no other Weapon but a Sword, makes at both of them; the Soldier would not wait for him; but Beme cried out to him, Thou knoweſt that I am a dangerous Fellow, and fired his Piſtol; the other, anſwering, I will not ſuffer thee to be ſo any longer, thruſt his Sword up to the Hilt into his Priſoner's Belly. Thus d'Aubigné relates the Fact (b). Beza ſays much the ſame (c) [B]; but we ſhall ſee below, that Thuanus relates the Matter with other Circumſtances [C]. Mezerai calls This Murtherer N. Dianovitz-Beſme (d).

(a) Thuan. lib. 42. pag. 1075.

(b) D'Aubigné, Hiſt. Tom. II. lib. 2. cap. 16. p. 749.

(c) Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 16. pag. 479.

(d) Mezer. Tom. III. in fol. pag. 385. Edit. 1685.

[A] He was a German by Nation.] He was born in the Country of Wirtemberg, and it is ſaid, he was the Son of One, who had been intruſted with the Artillery (1). The Author of the Book, de furoribus Gallicis (2), obſerves, that it was ſaid, that the Cardinal of Lorrain had married one of his Baſtards to Beme. He calls him always Benſius: It is probably a Fault of the Printer for Bemeſius. Cavriana, whom I ſhall quote below, ſays, that This Perſon had been Page to the Duke of Guiſe, the Father.

[B] He was ſlain by Bertanville - - - - - - - - Beza ſays much the ſame.] Let us relate what he ſays; for it contains ſome other Circumſtances. Speaking of the Defeat of the Reiters (3), commanded by Thoré, Son of the Conſtable Anne de Montmorency, he ſays, that Clervant was taken Priſoner there; " And had " it not been for the Credit of divers Lords his Rela- " tions (and becauſe, about the ſame, Beſme, one of " the chief Murtherers of the Admiral, as well for " That, as for other Reaſons greatly beloved by the " Duke of Guiſe, had been taken by Thoſe of the " Reformed Religion near Ponts in Poictou) (4) he " would hardly have ſaved his Life. - - - - - - Some " time after, he was conducted to Paris, and much " carried about, to try if they could exchange him " for Beme; but, though he was in very great Dan- " ger of his Life, being deſired to agree to That Ex- " change, he generouſly anſwered, that he would " never conſent to be exchanged for ſuch a deteſtable " Murtherer; and GOD favoured him ſo much, " that, having been put to ranſom - - - - - - he was " at laſt ſet at liberty, and Beme, thinking to make " his Eſcape from the Caſtle, where he was a Priſo- " ner, was retaken, and cut in pieces, as he deſer- " ved, except that it was not done by the Hands of " a Common Executioner (5)." Cavriana, having ſaid, in his Diſcourſes on Tacitus, that Beme ſhot the Admiral with a Piſtol, adds that This Murtherer was killed in the ſame manner, ſome time after, as he was returning from Spain. Fu pochi anni dapoi venendo d'Eſpagna con ſomigliante ſpezie di morte del ſuo fatto premiato. This Account is not ſo clear, and ſo particular, as it ſhould be; but ſome other Writers have cleared up the Matter.

[C] Thuanus relates the Matter with other Circumſtances.] He ſays, that Beme, returning from Spain, whither the Duke of Guiſe had ſent him to buy Horſes, or, under That Pretence, to renew the Correſpondence, which the late Cardinal of Lorrain had kept up with Philip II, was taken near Jarnac; that he offered his good Offices to releaſe Montbrun, and a very conſiderable Sum; but that his Propoſals were not regarded, and that, on the contrary, Thoſe, who had taken him, ſollicited the Rochellers to buy him of them for a thouſand Piſtoles, and afterwards to puniſh him with the utmoſt Severity for the infamous Murther of the Admiral; that the Rochellers, for fear of repriſals, and by the Counſel of la Noüe, rejected theſe Offers; that Bretouville, Governor of Bouteville, being unwilling to ranſom ſuch a Priſoner, and fearing, that, if he ſhould put him to Death, he would ſet an example, which might be attended with ill Conſequences, found out an expedient; which was to ſuborn a Soldier to ſupply Beme with the

(1) The Life of Admiral Coligni, pag. 129.

(2) He diſguiſed himſelf under the Name of Erneſtus Varamundus Fritilius.

(3) In 1575.

(4) He ſhould have ſaid Xaintonge.

(5) Bera, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 16, pag. 479.

Digitized by Google

(6) Thuan. lib. 60, ad Ann. 1575, p. 125, 126.

(7) Mezerai, Hiſt. of France, Tom. III, in Fol. p. 380.

(8) Tous be calls him, who, in d'Aubigné, is called Bertantville, and in Thuanus, Bretovilla.

(9) That is, Bouteville.

the means to eſcape. This Soldier, and Beme, made their Eſcape accordingly; but they fell into the Ambuſcades, which Bretouville had laid for them, and Beme was killed with ſeveral Stabs (6). Mezerai relates the Matter much in the ſame manner (7): He ſays, that the Conſiſtory of Rochel would have given a thouſand Crowns for That Priſoner, to have puniſhed him publickly; but the Wiſeſt, and Bertoville (8) Governour of the Place (9), apprehended a Retaliation.

Peter de St Romuald ſays, "that the Rochellers de- "fired to have Beme, at the Perſuaſion of la Noüe, "who would have put him to a ſevere and ſhameful "Death; and that Beme, being mortally wounded by "Bertoville, and afterwards killed by the Soldiers, "was, at laſt, ſent to the Baron de Rufec, at his "great Sollicitation, who cauſed him to be honour- "ably buried at Engoleſme; and that the Soldier, "who had endeavoured to favour his Eſcape, being "grievouſly wounded, came off with a Ranſom, and "was baniſhed the Place (10)."

(10) St Romuald, Journal. Chronolog. at the 24th of Auguſt, p. 214.

BENCIUS (FRANCIS), an Italian Jeſuit, was born at Aquapendente, in the Year 1542 [A]. He ſtudied the Belles Lettres at Rome, under Marc Antony Muretus, and made ſo happy a Progreſs under the Lectures of this Great Rhetorician, that he became one of the moſt excellent Orators of That Time. He was likewiſe a very good Latin Poet. There is ſomething very ſurprizing in the Manner, in which it is ſaid he came to a Reſolution of taking the Habit of a Jeſuit [B]. He taught Rhetoric for many Years, at Rome, in the College of the Society, and died there, the ſixth of May, 1594 (a). He had three Brothers, who were likewiſe Jeſuits (b): His Father was yet alive in the Year 1590 (c). You will find, in Moreri, the Titles of ſome of his Works; I ſhall confine myſelf to his Speeches [C].

(a) Alegambus, Bibl. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 115.

(b) Ibid.

(c) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Poems of Bencius.

[A] He was born at Aquapendente in the Year 1542.] The Elogies, extracted from Thuanus by Mr Teiſſier, inform us, that Bencius was born in a Village of Tuſcany, called Aquapendente, which was the Patrimony of his Father (1). The Latin Words of Thuanus are, Patrimoniali Etruriæ oppido, cui Aquæpendenti nomen, natus (2). The Word oppidum being equivocal, and ſignifying ſometimes a Borough, ſometimes a Town, it muſt not here be taken for a Village, but a Town. I know not whether Thuanus had reaſon to ſay, that the Father of Bencius was Lord of it. Alegambus ſays no ſuch thing; and it is not uſual with That Author to ſuppreſs what may enhance the Birth and Riches of the Writers of his Order.

(1) Teiſſier's Elogies, Tom. II. p. 206, Edit. of 1696.

(2) Thuani, Hiſtor. lib. cix, p. 612.

I have two reaſons for fixing the Birth of Bencius to the Year 1542; the one is, that he died in the Year 1594: This is attended with no difficulty; the other is, that we find in Alegambus, that he died in the Fifty ſecond Year of his Age. Alegambus is a little confuſed in his Figures; however I was of Opinion there was no Error in This; but I am ſurprized, that, in making The Errata of his Work, he did not reſtify the following. Annos natus XX, in Societatem eſt aſcitus, XV Cal. Junii, anno Chriſti MD.LXX (3). —— Anno Salutis MD.XCIV, migravit e vitâ, ætatis ſuæ LII, poſtquam venit in Societatem XXVII (4). He ſays, that Bencius, having become a Jeſuit in 1570, at the Age of twenty Years, was in the Fifty ſecond Year of his Life, and Twenty ſeventh of his Profeſſion, in 1594. Theſe Computations deſtroy each other. Nicius Erythræus is more conſiſtent; for, having once ſaid, that Bencius became a Jeſuit at the Age of twenty Years, he allows him Fifty two Years of Life, and Thirty two of Jeſuitiſm (5).

(3) Alegambus, Bibl. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 114.

(4) Ibid. pag. 115.

(5) Nic. Erythr. Pinacoth. II, pag. 115.

[B] There is ſomething very ſurprizing in the manner of his coming to a Reſolution of taking the Habit of a Jeſuit.] They, who would read the Particulars of this Adventure, may conſult Alegambus, and Nicius Erythræus. They will there read of nocturnal Apparitions, of a Crucifix, and many other things. I ſhall only obſerve, that Nicius Erythræus goes farther, than the other Author. The latter is ſatisfied with telling us, that, from the time Bencius firſt confeſſed himſelf, which was to ſome of the Jeſuits, he took it into his Head, that he ſhould one Day be of their Order (6): but, according to Nicius Erythræus, he thought he heard, during his Confeſſion in the Church of the Jeſuits, a Voice, which pronounced theſe Words; You ſhall alſo be, one Day, of the Number of theſe Religious (7): Alegambus, as I have already obſerved, does not extenuate what advances the Credit of his Society. It is probable, therefore, Nicius Erythræus has here expreſſed himſelf hyperbolically: the Fact, in paſſing from Mouth to Mouth, was exaggerated before it reached the Ears of This Writer.

(6) Ex eo tempore ſubiit animum ea cogitatio, Et tu de illis eris. Alegambus, p. 114, 115.

(7) Viſus eſt vocem in hæc verba audire. Et tu quoque aliquando Religioſorum illorum numerum augebis. Nic. Erythr. Pinacoth. II, pag. 155.

[C] I ſhall confine myſelf to his Speeches.] Some of them were printed ſeparately; and Manuſcript Copies of others were handed about. Theſe Copies became imperfect, in proportion as they multiplied. This made the Author reſolve to publiſh an Edition of his Speeches in 1590 (8). He dedicated it to Cardinal Aſcanio Colonna. He publiſhed likewiſe the ſame Year a Collection of Latin Poems, and dedicated it to Cardinal Francis Sforza. His Speeches, to the Number of Twenty ſix, are accompanied with a ſhort Diſſertation de Stylo & Scriptione, and contain, among other Pieces, the funeral Oration of Muretus, That of Alexander Farneſe, Duke of Parma, and That of Cardinal Alexander Farneſe. The Poems are divided into four Books. They were reprinted with the Speeches, at Ingolſtudt, in the Year 1599; and there are added to them Two Dramatic Poems of the ſame Author (9), which had been publiſhed ſeparately. The Edition of Cologne, for John Kinchius, in 1617, in 12mo, contains all This. It is pretty correct; but the Paper and Character are very bad. The Publiſher has not added the Poem in Hexameter Verſe, entituled, Quinque Martyres, or the five Martyrs, in which Bencius has celebrated the Martyrdom, which Five Jeſuits ſuffered in the Indies, in 1583. This Work, divided into ſix Books, was printed at Venice, in the Year 1591, and dedicated by Benedictus Georgius to Cardinal Octavio Aquaviva, Nephew of Claudius Aquaviva, General of the Jeſuits. I have the Edition of Antwerp, in 1602, in 12mo. The Author ſets off the Simplicity of Hiſtory with Poetical Fictions, of which he gives the Reader notice: Si qua viſa, & quæ ſpeciem habent miraculi, inſerta ſunt, factum eſt, ut Poeticum Artificium Hiſtoriæ ſimplicitati mederetur. Relations in Proſe have often need of the ſame Advertiſement.

(8) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of this Edition.

(9) Entituled Ergaſtus, and Philotimus.

Mr Teiſſier affirms, that Nicius Erythræus ſays, that This Jeſuit tranſlated Ariſtotle's Rhetoric ſo well, that it is difficult to find a more perfect Work of the Sort (10). I have not met with This in Erythræus's Elogium of This Jeſuit: I only find, that Muretus dedicated his Latin Verſion of Ariſtotle's Rhetoric to Bencius, and that the latter read Lectures on the ſame Work (11).

(10) Teiſſier's Elogies, Tom. II, pag. 207.

(11) Nic. Eryth. Pinacoth. II, pag. 157.

BENEDICTIS (ELPIDIO de), had a good Share in the Eſteem and Affairs of Cardinal Mazarin. He was his Secretary during his Nunciature in France, and afterwards his Agent at Rome. He acquitted himſelf ſo well of That Employ, that the Cardinal praiſed his Fidelity and good Conduct, in his laſt Will, and recommended him to the Moſt Chriſtian King. This Recommendation was not fruitleſs; for the Abbot Benedictis was declared Agent of France at Rome, and loaded with Riches. He was ordered, by the Cardinal's Heirs, to cauſe a ſumptuous Funeral Service to be performed for him in the Church of St Vincent and St Anaſtaſius, which had been his Eminence's Pariſh. He performed it admirably well, and publiſhed a Deſcription of This Funeral Pomp (a). He was ordered to cauſe a Funeral Solemnity to be performed for the Queen-Mother (b), with all manner of Pomp, in the Church of St Lewis, which is That of the Nation; he performed it like a Man, who perfectly underſtood theſe ſort of Ceremonies. The Deſcription of Theſe Funerals is to be ſeen in a Book, which he publiſhed (c). He wrote another, which is an authentic Monument of his Zeal for the Honour of his Benefactor; for, having been informed, that a Book was handed about, which ſtrangely defamed Cardinal Mazarin, he publiſhed a Collection of divers Memoirs in Italian, which he thought proper to confute That Satire. He enlarged it ſoon after, and added ſome Political Reflexions to it. He tranſlated the Treatiſe of the Prince of Conti, concerning the Duty of Great Men, into Italian. I ought not to forget the Chronological Tables, which he publiſhed. Thoſe who have ſeen the Houſe and Garden, which he cauſed to be built near Rome, or who have read the Deſcription, which he gave of them, under the Title of Villa Benedicta Literaria, muſt grant, that he underſtood Architecture, and knew how to adorn and embelliſh a Houſe. He is the Author of the Decorations, which are to be ſeen in a Chapel, dedicated to St Lewis, in the Church of the ſame Saint, which Chapel he cauſed to be built almoſt from the Foundation (d).

Digitized by Google

(a) This is the Title of it; Pompa funebre nell' Eſequie celebrate in Roma al Cardinal Mazarini nella Chieſa de Santi Vincenzo & Anaſtaſio.

(b) Anne of Auſtria, Mother of Lewis XIV.

(c) Entitled, Il mondo piangente & il cielo feſteggiante nel funerale Apparato dell' Eſequie celebrate in Roma nella Chieſa di San Luigi de Franceſi alla glorio à memoria di Anne d'Auſtria Regina di Francia.

(d) Bx Bibliotheca Romana Prop. Mandoſii Cent. 4, n. 71.

BENI (PAUL), Profeſſor of Eloquence, in the Univerſity of Padua, from the Year 1599, 'till his Death, which happened in the Year 1625, was one of the moſt copious Writers, that flouriſhed in his Time. He was a Greek by Nation [A], as it has been lately ſaid; and was not born at Eugubio, in the Duchy of Urbino, as many Perſons affirm. He lived a long time among the Jeſuits; but he left their Society, becauſe they would not permit him to publiſh a Commentary on Plato's Feaſt: The Obſcenity of the Subject obliged them to refuſe him the Permiſſion he deſired. The Reputation, which his Works procured him, moved the Senate of Venice to chooſe him to ſucceed Riccoboni, in the Chair of Eloquence; but he did not anſwer the Hopes, which were conceived of him. He tired his Auditors with long, wordy, Diſcourſes, void of Matter, and pronounced in a languid manner, which, together with ſome other Reaſons (a), and the pleaſing manner, in which his Colleague, Vincent Contarini, delivered his Learning, made his Auditors deſert ſo faſt, that, ſometimes, there were not ſo many Perſons in his School, as are required for the ſigning of a Contract (b). This did not diſcourage him from his Study, nor leſſen his extraordinary Application to his Books, and his Pen. One may eaſily be convinced of this, by the great number of Books, which he gave the Public, wherein there is, doubtleſs, a great deal of Learning and Wit. He ſingly maintained a Quarrel againſt the Academy della Cruſca [B], with ſuch Succeſs, as rendered him formidable to many Authors [C]. The Reſpect, they have, at Padua, for the Memory of Livy, did not hinder our Paul Beni from attacking That Hiſtorian with the utmoſt Vigor (c). Conſult Moreri's Dictionary; for I only mention what he has omitted.

(a) Oderant autem univerſi morboſas quaſdam animi anguſtias quibus ipſe indolis haud ita liberalis referebat indicia. Imperial. in Muſeo Hiſtor. p. 160.

(b) In eo gymnaſio crebris jactaret ir ſermonibus male de Benii rebus actum fore, ſi pactum ei aliquod fuiſſet celebrandum, quando vel duobus eidem in ſchola ſua teſtibus contigiſſet egere. Id. ib.

(c) Taken from Paul Freherus, in Theatro, pag. 1518.

[A] He was a Greek by Nation.] I was ſurprized to find This affirmed in the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned (1), and, in order to know, which of the two ſaid ſo, The Author of That Journal, or the Author of the Book, mentioned by Him, I conſulted the Life of Taſſo, and found theſe Words in it (2); "All "the Learned Men in Italy ------ have followed "Paul Beni's Opinion unanimouſly. That Learned "Greek, tranſplanted into Italy, made it appear, in "an elaborate Compariſon of the Poems of Homer, "Virgil, and Taſſo, that the modern Poet had com- "prehended all the Beauties of the two Ancient in "his Work, without imitating their Faults." I thought it was a Miſtake; for I knew, that Tomaſini, and Lorenzo Craſſo, affirm, that he was born at Eugubio; and he calls himſelf Eugubinus, in the Titles of ſome of his Books, and in the Inſcription, which he deſired might be put on his Tomb; and, therefore, I followed This Opinion in the firſt Edition of This Dictionary. But I have been freed from my Error by the Abbot de Charnes, and That in ſuch a Manner, as engages me to think myſelf happy in having ſaid, that I eſteemed and honoured him very much. He ſupplied me with a Paſſage, which does not permit me to doubt, that our Beni was born in Candia (3). It is true, He was but a Child, when he came into Italy.

(1) Month of December, 1690, in the Extract of the Life of Taſſo, compoſed by the Abbot de Charnes.

(2) In the Preface.

(3) It is taken from the firſt Diſcourſe of Paul Beni, on the Compariſon of Homer, Virgil, and Taſſo, printed in 1607.

[B] He ſingly maintained a Quarrel againſt the Academy della Cruſca.] Every Body knows, that the Italian Dictionary of That famous Academy of Florence, is a Work of great Importance; "Which was, "doubtleſs, the reaſon, why, as ſoon as it appeared, "it met with almoſt as many Critics, as Readers. "Among others, Beni did not ceaſe to cry down "This Work, and to declame againſt the Authors of "it, as ſo many Monopolizers of the Italian Lan- "guage: He undertook to make it appear, that they "had neither Ability, nor Authority, requiſite to "decide in ſuch a Manner. The Book, which he "publiſhed on That Account, was printed at Padua "in the Year 1613, in Quarto, under the Title of "Anti-Cruſca, ô vero, Il Paragone della Lingua Italiana, nel qual ſi monſtra chiaramente que l'antica "ſia inculta e rozza à la moderna regola, &c (4). --- "The Gentlemen of the Academy choſe to anſwer "him with the Pen, inſtead of proceeding againſt "him any other way. But, if we may believe Toma- "ſini, This Method, which was, beſides, the longeſt, "and the moſt perplexing, did not ſucceed to their "Honour. For it occaſioned a furious Reply from "Beni, who produced it as a Defence of the Anti- "Cruſca. He publiſhed it under the Title of Il Ca- "vacanti, ô vero, la Difeſa del Paragone della Lin- "gua Italiana, &c (5). ------- The End of This "Combat was ſo glorious for Beni (in the Opinion "of Tomaſini) that he obtained the Victory over all "the Academy della Cruſca, and was proclaimed De- "fender of the Italian Tongue (6)." Let us ſee the Words of Tomaſini. "Adverſus Academicos Cruſ- "cantes, & Dictionarium Italicum ab iiſdem editum, "Anti-Cruſcam condidit. Cui cum reſpondiſſent "Academici, cumulatè libro iiſdem altero ſub Caval- "cantis nomine ſatisfecit, ſeque à variis eorumdem "jurgiis validè adeo vindicavit, ut toto orbi clariſſi- "mus acerrimuſque Italici Idiomatis Defenſor fuerit "acclamatus (7)." It is ſaid, that he obtained as great a Victory over Theſe Gentlemen ſome time after, in defending Taſſo againſt their Cenſures (8).

(4) Baillet, Article 162, of the Anti's.

(5) Ibid.

(6) Ibid.

(7) Tomaſini, Elog. Tom. I, pag. 351.

[C] — which rendered him very formidable to many Authors.] He was ſummoned to appear at Rome, on the Account of the Book, he publiſhed, on the Affairs de Auxiliis, without knowing them. "What he ſuf- "fered

(8) Baillet, Article 162, of the Anti's.

Digitized by Google

" fered from Eccleſiaſtical Judges, made him but " little wiſer. He inveighed, ever after, againſt Au- " thors of different Merit, without ſo much as ſpar- " ing Livy. So that he became the Terror of the " Writers of his Time; ſome of whom durſt not pub- " liſh their Compoſitions, for fear of expoſing them " to his unmerciful Cenſure (9)."

(9) Id. Ibid.

BENNON, Biſhop of Miſnia or Meiſſen, in Germany, in the XIth Century, was canonized by Hadrian VI. The Bull of the Canonization, dated the Thirty firſt of May, 1523 [A], grounds Bennon's Merit, I. On his having been the only Biſhop of Germany, who was true to the Court of Rome, in the Quarrels between Gregory VII, and the Emperor Henry IV. II. On the Miracles, which he had performed [B] in his Life-time, and after his Death. This Canonization had been a long time ſollicited at Rome, and perhaps had never been obtained, if Luther had not ſhaken off the Pope's Yoke, in the ſame Country, where the Body of Bennon lay: But the Court of Rome, thinking, that the Inſtitution of a new Saint, would ſupport the ſtaggering Faith of That Country, yielded, at laſt, to the Inſtances of the Biſhop of Meiſſen, who went to the Pope with powerful Recommendations from Charles V, the Archbiſhops of Magdeburg, and Saltzburg, and the Marquiſſes of Miſnia. Luther was not ſilent on this Occaſion; but publiſhed a Treatiſe in High-Dutch, which he entituled, Againſt the new Idol, and old Demon, of Meiſſen. Emſer wrote ſharply againſt This Treatiſe of Luther, and boaſted inſultingly, that, notwithſtanding the Invectives of This Enemy of the Church, a wonderful Concourſe of People had aſſiſted at the Ceremonies of This new Solemnity; and he preſaged, that it would continue for ever. His Prediction was ſoon convicted of Falſhood [C]; That of Bennon was confuted at the ſame Time (a) [D]. Emſer thought himſelf particularly obliged to write, upon this Occaſion, againſt Luther; for he had publiſhed the Life of Bennon, in the Year 1512; wherein, among other things, he alledged divers Reaſons, why the Bull of Canonization had not been yet obtained, after ſo much Expence, and ſo many Sollicitations (b). There is a ſtrange Miſtake in Moreri's Dictionary (c).

(a) Taken out of Seckendorf's Hiſtory of Lutheranifm, lib. i, pag. 285.

(b) Ex eodem Seckendorfio, ib. pag. 286, in Additione.

(c) See Remark [A].

[A] Dated the Thirty firſt of May 1523.] We find the ſame Date in Moreri's Dictionary. And That is not wrong. But we find there alſo, that Pope Adrian IV diſpatched This Bull; which is an unpardonable Falſity. Adrian IV lived in the XIIth Century.

[B] Grounds his Merit on ſome Miracles, which he performed.] The chief of them are; I. That the Keys of his Cathedral, which he had thrown into the River Elbe, after he had ſhut up That Church againſt the Emperor and his Embaſſadors, were found in the Belly of a Fiſh, and carried back to the Prelate. II. That he paſſed over the Elbe dry-ſhod. III. That he turned Water into Wine. IV. That, with a kick of his Foot, he cauſed a Fountain to ſpring up; and this is ſufficient ground for the Church of Rome to boaſt, that the Fable of Pegaſus has had it's Accompliſhment among the Chriſtians. V. That he celebrated Maſs in two places at one and the ſame time. VI. That, after his Death, he came, in a Dream, and put out an Eye of William Marquis of Miſnia (1). One may eaſily gueſs, that Luther did not ſpare Theſe Miracles.

(1) Apud Seckendorf. Hiſtor. Lutheran. lib. i, pag. 285.

[C] Emſer's Prediction was ſoon convicted of Falſhood.] The Inſpectors, or Viſitors, who were ſent into Miſnia in the Year 1539, having notified to the Country Prieſts, that they ſhould conform themſelves to the Confeſſion of Augsburg, went, ſoon after, to exhort the Canons of the Cathedral Church of Meiſſen to do the ſame. Their Dean, Julius Pflug, having convened the Chapter, it was reſolved, to leave Matters as they ſtood. Whereupon, they were enjoined not to perform any Act of Religion in the Church, according to the ancient Ritual; and Bennon's Tomb was demoliſhed, as an Object of Bealitic Idolatry (2). Behold, then, a Worſhip, which, inſtead of being eternal, as Emſer had prognoſticated, was but of fifteen Years continuance. A wiſe Man ought to be extreamly reſerved concerning future Events, even when Appearances are favourable; and I think thoſe are to be pitied, whoſe Profeſſion requires, that they ſhould keep up the Hopes of the People; for very often they are obliged to make Almanacks againſt their Knowledge.

(2) Id. ibid. lib. iii, pag. 221.

[D] The Prediction of Bennon was confuted at the ſame time.] His Life ſays, That he declared, when he was dying, that he had obtained, by his Prayers, that the Worſhip, eſtabliſhed in his Cathedral, ſhould never ceaſe. In eo tamen maxime falſum eſſe apparet, quod, teſte Emſero, moriturus dixerit, precibus ſuis effectum eſſe, ut cultus Eccleſiæ Miſnenſis perpetuus ſit futurus (3). This Worſhip was ſingular, and was not to be ſeen at Rome itſelf. The Intervals of the Pſalmody were ſo contrived, in the Cathedral of Meiſſen, that, every Hour of the Day and Night, they ſung the Praiſes of the Cœleſtial Court. Ut nullum diei aut noctis tempus cantu & Deorum hymnis ac laudibus vacet (4). Bennon died like a falſe Prophet, if he declared, when he was dying, that this would always continue.

(3) Ibid. lib. i, pag. 286, litera a.

(4) Emſerus apud Seckendorf. ibid.

BENSERADE (a) (ISAAC de), one of the fineſt Wits of the XVIIth Century, was of Lions, near Roan (b). He was born a Proteſtant, as appears by his Chriſtian Name; but was not bred in That Religion; for he was but a Child, when his Father turned Catholic. The Reaſon why the Biſhop, who confirmed him, did not take from him the Name of Iſaac, is very ſingular [A]. It is ſaid, that his Anceſtors were very conſiderable [B]; but every one does not agree to This. When his

(a) Thus he ſpelt his Name in a Letter, which he did me the honour to write to me, the 18th of May, 1685. I found Benſeradde at the end of the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Paraphraſe on the nine Leſſons of Job. The Abbot Tallemant calls him always Benſerade.

(b) Diſcourſe concerning the Life of Mr Benſerade, before his Poems; Edit. of Paris, 1697, and of Holland, 1698. Tallemant is the Author of That Diſcourſe.

[A] The Reaſon why the Biſhop - - - - - did not take from him the Name of Iſaac, is very ſingular.] Benſerade was but ſeven or eight Years of Age, when the Biſhop, who confirmed him, asked him, If he would have his Jewiſh Name changed for a more Chriſtian one? With all my Heart, anſwered he, provided you will give me ſomething to boot. The Prelate, ſurprized with the Child's Wit, would not change his Name, but ſaid, We muſt leave it him; he will make it very illuſtrious. This Particular has been communicated to me by a good Hand; and I think it will be found in the Life of Benſerade, written by the Abbot Tallemant, if ever it be printed.

This is what I ſaid in the Year 1694; and my Conjecture has proved true: That Diſcourſe of the Abbot Tallemant is to be found at the beginning of Benſerade's Works, printed at Paris in the Year 1697, and in Holland 1698. The Particular, I have mentioned, is to be found in it.

[B] It is ſaid, his Anceſtors were very conſiderable.] It is the Cuſtom for a Perſon, who is admitted into the French Academy, to make the Elogy of Him, to whom he ſucceeds. Mr Pavillon, Succeſſeur

Digitized by Google

his Father died, he left him very young, with a very small Estate, and very much encumbered; so that he chose rather, as it is said, to give it away, than to go to Law about it (c). He made himself known to the Court by his Verses, and his Wit, and had the good Fortune to please Cardinal de Richelieu [C], and Cardinal Mazarin [D]; so that they put him in a Condition, not only to live handsomely, but also to lay up something

(c) Tallemant, ibid.

fessor of Mr de Benserade, praised him with great Delicacy: See, here, in what manner he handled what related to his Extraction. "This is not a Place, "where the Nobility of This illustrious Man ought "to be displayed. Here the Chance of Birth makes "no one to be esteemed or despised: Hence it is, "that, in the Funeral Pomp of the deceased Mem"bers, the Images of their Ancestors are not car"ried before them; we only take care to expose "their Talents, and their Works, to the public "View. Let the Elogy of the Deceased be, every "where else, adorned with the Name of the ancient "Lords of Maline; let others reckon, among his "Ancestors, Him, who, in the beginning of the "last Century, was great Master of the Artillery: "my Business, here, is only to speak of That, which "made him admired in his Life-time, and will per"petuate his Memory after his Death (1)."

(1) See the Historical Letters of Feb. 1692, p. 169, 170.

Here is what is to be found in the Discourse of the Abbot Tallemant: "Tho' Mr de Benserade spoke "but little of his Father, yet he did not for"get his Ancestors, one of whom had been Cham"berlain to one of our Kings, and Castellan of the "Castle of Milan - - - - - By the Mother's Side, he "was related to the Vignancours, and to the la Portes; "his Mother bore the last Name, which was That "of the Mother of Cardinal de Richelieu. —— She "would not willingly allow she was related to the "Cardinal, saying, often, in her Family, she was "not the la Porte, they took her for. —— Admi"ral de Brézé looked upon Benserade as a Person "belonging to him." It is affirmed, in the Epistle dedicatory of his Works (2), that he had the Honour to belong to the great Cardinal de Richelieu. I desire you to compare this with the following Passage of the Menagiana. By what I have heard, "Mr de "Benserade was Son of an Attorney of Gisors; and "I was much surprized, when the Abbot Regnier "read here, the other Day, Mr Pavillon's Speech, "which he made, when he was admitted into the "Academy, wherein he gives Mr de Benserade a "magnificent Genealogy. But I should not esteem "him less, if he was of a meaner Birth. The Learn"ed ought to value themselves for being the Sons "of their own Works. Mr de Benserade had a pret"ty House at Gentilli, and, over the Gate of That "House, he had set up a Coat of Arms, with an "Earl's Coronet, which he had given himself. One "of his Friends, seeing it, said, one Day, Poets may "do these things (3)." Observe, that Mr Pavillon says nothing of what is mentioned by the Abbot Tallemant concerning Benserade's Ancestors; which makes me suspect, that they have followed some general Notions; for they would not have swerved so strangely from Uniformity, if they had followed Genealogical Titles, well proved. Whatever may be said of Benserade's Ancestors, his Father's Obscurity cannot be doubted. Some had heard say, that he was an Attorney of Gisors(4), and others, that he had been Justice in Eyre (5). His Son made but little mention of him, though he did not forget his Ancestors (6). Would you have a greater Proof of a mean Condition? Take notice of another thing. A great many Persons can prove their Father's Nobility, better than That of their Grand-father, and, if you would oblige them to prove That of their Great-Grand-father, they would find it more difficult still. Persius has made this Observation (7). It is quite the contrary here. We must skip over some Degrees, in going back, if we would get clear of Genealogical Darkness. Our Benserade finds nothing to please him in his Father, or his Grand-father; he finds his Nobility only in past Ages. It is certain, that Nobility of Blood is, sometimes, like Those Rivers, which fall down a Precipice, and, having run some Miles under Ground, rise again (8). Genealogical History, which is commonly preceded by fabulous Times, is often interrupted by some Periods of obscure Times. It is a Geographical Map, which has it's Desarts, and unknown Countries. See Mr Pavillon, who was obliged to make a Leap of One hundred and fifty Years back to unite two illustrious Ends in the Family of Benserade. I shall make hereafter (9) an Antithesis of Persius's Verses, in another Sense.

(2) Printed at Paris, by Charles de Serci, in the Year 1697.

(3) Continuation of the Menagiana, pag. 53, Edit. of Holl.

(4) Menagiana, ibid.

(5) Tallemant's Discourse on the Life of Benserade, init.

(6) Id. ibid.

(7) See Remark [B], of the Article GENTILIS (Scipio).

(8) Such is the Guadiana in Spain.

(9) In Remark [E], of the Article GENTILIS (Scipio).

I know not what to say of one NICOLAS BENSERADE, to whom Erasmus wrote some Letters (10), and of whom he speaks, as of a very good Man, who had done him much good, and who had some Learning (11). He is called a Civilian (12). Would our Mr de Benserade have placed him among his Ancestors?

(10) See the 21st and 24th Letters of the 9th Book of Erasmus. One of them is dated in the Year 1499; and the other in the Year 1498.

(11) In the Table of Erasmus's Letters.

(12) Erasm. ibid. See also Epist. 24, lib. 5, pag. 323.

[C] He had the good Fortune to please Cardinal Richelieu.] Mr Pavillon informs us, that This Cardinal took care of the Education of Benserade. "You "have seen, says he (13), in This worthy Member, "the Fruit of the Care, which the great Car"dinal de Richelieu took of his Education; He, "who gave Birth to your learned Assembly, edu"cated him in his Youth; and, as Men are only "considered by you in relation to their Wit, before "you had associated him, he might have boasted, "that you were Children of one and the same Fa"ther." These Words might induce one to think, that Benserade was known to This Cardinal only as a very hopeful young Man, who deserved so much the more That chief Minister's Protection, as he was the Son of a converted Huguenot; but, if we consider the Circumstances of the Time, if we consider, that the Cleopatra of Benserade was printed in the Year 1630 (14), we cannot doubt, but that he had actually a Share in Richelieu's Esteem, in Quality of an Author, and a fine Wit.

(13) Historical Letters, of Feb. 1692, pag. 171.

(14) See Remark [O].

[D] —— And Cardinal Mazarin.] Give me leave to insert here a long Passage of a Book, the Title whereof is somewhat surprizing (15). Many Readers will be well pleased to see it here, without being obliged to turn to another Book: Besides, some of them may chance not to have the Arliquiniana in their Closets. "Your Story puts me in mind of a Thing, "which made Benserade's Fortune: I have it from "himself. Were you acquainted with him? Yes, "said I, I conversed with him till his Death: He "was the quickest Wit, and the most zealous Friend, "that ever I saw; he was a good, and gallant, Man, "and I will tell you, one Day, some particular things "of him. You know then, replied Arlequin, that "Benserade came young, agreeable, and full of merit, "to Court. He applied himself to Cardinal Mazarin, who loved him, but with such a Friendship, "as produced no Advantage to him. Benserade, "continuing to follow his Genius, made gallant "Verses every Day, which gained him a great Repu"tation. The Cardinal, being one Evening with the "King, related to him after what manner he had "lived in the Pope's Court, where he had spent his "Youth. He said, that he loved the Sciences, but "that his chief Application had been to polite Learn"ing, and especially Poetry, wherein he succeeded "pretty well; and that he was, at That Pope's Court, "what Benserade was at That of France. Soon af"ter, he retired to his Apartment. Benserade hap"pened to come in, an Hour after; and his Friends "told him what the Cardinal had said; they had "scarce ended, when Benserade, being filled with "Joy, left them bluntly, without saying any thing. "He ran to the Cardinal's Apartment, and knocked "as hard as he could, to be heard. The Cardinal was "just gone to Bed; Benserade was so pressing, and "made so much Noise, that they were obliged to "let him in. He went, and fell on his Knees by the "Bolster of his Eminence's Bed, and, having begged "a thousand Pardons for his Rudeness, he told him "what he had heard, and thanked him, with an "inexpressible Ardour, for the Honour he had done "him in comparing himself to Him, as to the Re"putation he had for Poetry; adding withal, that "he was so proud of it, that he could not contain "his Joy, and that he should have died at his Door, "if he had been hindred from coming to pay him "his Acknowledgment for it. This Zeal pleased the "Cardinal

(15) Entitled Arliquiniana. I cannot see why they chuse rather to say Arliquiniana, than Arlequiniana, since every one says Arlequin, and not Arliquin.

Digitized by Google

something for his latter Years. He had some Pensions assigned him on a Bishopric, and two Abbeys (d) [E]; so that he might be looked upon as a kind of Ecclesiastic (e). The Queen-Mother gave him a Pension of Three thousand Livres, when, upon the Death of Cardinal de Richelieu, he lost his Pension (f). He found means to subsist at Court, by means of the Thousand Crowns of the Queen-Mother, and by That of some rich and liberal Ladies (g). I have read somewhere, that the Court had resolved to depute him to the Queen of Sweden; but it was not put in Execution [F]. His Sonnet.

(d) Menage, Anti Baillet, Article 145. See also towards the end of Remark [D].

(e) See the Anti-Baillet, ibid.

(f) See the beginning of Remark [E].

(g) Discourse concerning the Life of Mr de Benserade.

" Cardinal very much. He assured him of his Protection, and promised him that he would not be " useless to him; and indeed, six Days after, he sent " him a small Pension of Two thousand Livres; " some time after, he had other considerable Pensions on Abbeys; and he might have been a " Bishop, if he would have been a Churchman (16)." The Abbot Tallemant will not agree to this latter Fact. See the following Remark.

(16) Ariquiniana, pag. 235. Edit. of Holland.

[E] He had some Pensions assigned him on a Bishopric, and two Abbeys.] He obtained one from Cardinal de Richelieu, " from the Time that his first Works " appeared: it was continued to him till That Cardinal's Death; and he would, perhaps, have found " the same Protection with the Duchess of Aiguillon, " if the four following Verses, which he made after " the Cardinal's Death, had not offended her very " much:

Cy-gist, ouy gist, par la mort-bleu,
Le Cardinal de Richelieu,
Et ce qui cause mon ennuy,
Ma pension avecque luy.

Here lies, ay here doth lie, morblew,
The Cardinal de Richelieu,
And, what is worse, my Pension too.

" This Pension was pretty considerable, as I have " been assured; which was a terrible Loss to him, " and which would have very much incommoded him, " if it had not been made up by another of Three " thousand Livres, which the Queen-Mother gave " him (17)." Let us admire here the Power of the Habit of Jesting. A Poet, who has a turn this way, will rather hazard his Fortune, than lose the Opportunity of a Jest, even the most unnatural Opportunity, and the most opposite to Decency; for what can be conceived more indecent, than to jest on the Death of the greatest Man that ever was in the Ministry of France? And if, for this reason alone, Pleasantry be improper, it is still more so, when the Poet, who jests on that Subject, had received a considerable Pension from the deceased. I cannot blame the Duchess of Aiguillon for suppressing this Pension; She was less to be blamed for it, than Mr Benserade. But let us proceed to other Favours, with which this fine Wit was gratified. Cardinal Mazarin procured him a " Pension of a thousand Crowns on the Abbey of St " Eloy —— and, when he died, left him a Pension of " Two thousand Livres on the Bishopric of Mende. " Lastly, Benserade had yet another Pension of Two " thousand Livres on an Abbey of the Abbot de Fourilles, called Haut-Villiers. —— Besides this, he " had a yearly Rent of Five hundred Crowns on the " Town-house of Lyons, and a great deal of ready " Money (18)." He would willingly " have had a " Title; and perhaps they would not grant him this " Favour, because he had not, at first, dedicated " himself wholly to the Church. But, if he did not " obtain That, which he HAD EARNESTLY " DESIRED (19), he met with something, which " he did not expect (20)." We are told, afterwards in what manner he received the Three hundred Pistols, which the King sent him one Morning (21). That Prince gave Ten thousand Livres for the Figures, wherewith the Roundo's of Benserade on Ovid's Metamorphoses were adorned.

(17) The Abbot Tallemant, ubi supra.

(18) Tallemant, ibid.

(19) I write this in Capital Letters, to shew the Opposition between the Abbot Tallemant, and the Author of the Ariquiniana, who says, that Benserade would have been a Bishop, if he had been willing to be a Churchman. See Citat. (16).

(20) Tallemant, ibid.

(21) Ibid.

The Abbot Tallemant says, " It may perhaps be " wondered at, that, being so well to pass as he was, " he jested so much on his Poverty: But, in answer " to this, we need only distinguish the times; it was " at his first coming to Court." If the Dates were well enquired into, it would perhaps be found, that This Apology is not right, and that Mr Benserade complained of Poverty, even when he did not feel the Inconveniencies of it. He would not be the only Poet, who has been guilty of This Fault; and it is an Irregularity, which deserves more to be censured, than That, for which Seneca was blamed, who praised and recommended Poverty in the midst of an excessive Opulency. It is better to do this, than to complain of being poor, when one is in very good Circumstances. However it be, our Benserade is an example, which may be alledged against the Author of a pretty Roundo, which I mention elsewhere (22), and which begins thus, Le bel Esprit au siecle de Marot. His Verses helped him to attain a pretty good Fortune, and put him in a Condition to be able to lend the Ladies a Coach and Footmen. Doubtless, he deserved a Reward; but they should not have assigned him Pensions on the Revenues of the Church, non bos quæsitum munus in usus. See the Remark [G] of the Article THOMAS. There is no question, but several other Wits envied him, as well on account of his Coach, as because he had the Advantage of frequently dining at the best Houses in Paris. One of them (23) composed a Sonnet with this Conclusion:

(22) In the New Letters against Maimbourg, pag. 590, &c seq.

Il frequente les bonnes tables,
Et je ne mange que chez moi:
J'en connois de plus miserables (24).

Abroad to Dinner he can roam;
But I, alas! must eat at home.

(23) The Abbot Esprit.

(24) This Sonnet was made on Job. Tallemant, ubi supra.

This is the taste of the ancient Parasites.

Si tristi domicœnio laboras,
Turani, potes esurire mecum (25).

If there no Invitation be,
Turanius, you may fast with me.

(25) Mart. Epigr. 80, lib. 5. See also Epigr. 78, 79, lib. 12.

Let us observe, that this Sonnet " was very improper " at that Time; for sickness and weakness obliged " Mr de Benserade, towards the latter end of his " Life, to dine seldom abroad, and to make few " Visits (26)."

(26) Tallemant's Discourses on Benserade.

[F] The Court had resolved to depute him to the Queen of Sweden; but it was not put in Execution.] I have read this in a Letter of Costar to the Marchioness of Lavardin. Costar's words deserve to be set down; since they inform us, that Benserade was not in very good Circumstances at that time. It is an ill Custom among ingenious Gentlemen not to date their Letters. If Costar had dated his, we should know the Year, wherein Benserade was to have had This Employment. " You have been informed, that the " Queen sends him to Sweden, and that he will set out " in a Week or ten Days. He has waited in vain, a " long time, at Paris. I do not know whether Stockholm, and the Northern Air, will be more favourable to his Fortune, than That of the Court has " been. I am sure, that all the Ice and Snow of the " North will not be able to extinguish That noble " Fire, which animates him, and that the Presence of " the bravest and most ingenious of Queens will " inspire him with things, worthy to be conceived " under a better Heaven, and milder Climate (27)." See, in the Collection of the fine Pieces of the French Poets, the Jest, which This Embassador made on the Meanness of his Equipage. Scarron could not be silent on the Miscarriage of this Deputation: See how he dates an Epistle to the Countess de Fiesque;

(27) Costar, Letter 165, of Vol. I, pag. 480.

L'an que le Sieur de Benserade
N'alla point à son Ambassade (28).

The Year, in which the Sieur Benserade did not go upon his Embassy.

(28) Tom. V, pag. 231. I speak of the Collection published by the Author of the Journey into Spain.

This does not inform us, in what Year it was. I cannot tell why Mr Tallemant says, that some One

Digitized by Google

Sonnet of Job, compared with That of Urania, raiſed his Fame greatly [G]; for how great an Honour was it, to be the Head of a Party againſt Voiture (b), and to have, on Parnaſſus, the Faction of the Jobelins, diſputing the Ground with the Faction of the Uraniſts? It is certain, This Diſpute divided the whole Court, and the Wits, and that ſome very illuſtrious Perſons declared, againſt Voiture, for Benſerade. The latter ſucceeded wonderfully in the Verſes, which he made for Interludes [H]; but he miſcarried in his Roundo's upon Ovid (i). He was admitted, ſomewhat late, into the French Academy, ſince it was in the Year 1674; and he was then above ſixty Years of Age. He ſucceeded Chapelain in this Place, and made his Elogy, which diſpleaſed the Count de Rabutin (k), and which was rather an Homage paid to Cuſtom, than an Effect of Sincerity. Some Years before his Death, he applied himſelf to pious Works, and tranſlated almoſt all the Pſalms (l): Another Homage paid to Cuſtom;

(b) He was the Author of the Sonnet of Urania.

(i) See the Menagiana, pag. 189, of Edit. 2. of Holland.

(k) See that Count's Letters, Part iv, Lett. 91.

(l) Tallemant's Diſcourſe on Benſerade.

made theſe two Verſes in his Gazettes; for Scarron's Epiſtles ought not to be called by That Name.

[G] His Sonnet of Job - - - - - - - raiſed his Fame greatly.] This Sonnet, and That of Urania, occaſioned a World of Verſes, which may be ſeen in the Collection of choice Pieces. I believe, that, during the Courſe of This Conteſt, one of the fineſt and moſt ingenious Pieces was the Gloſe à Mr Eſprit (29). Sarrazin compoſed it: he had declared for the Sonnet of Urania. Balzac wrote a ſevere Cenſure of theſe two Sonnets, which is to be found at the End of his Chriſtian Socrates. When one examines this Cenſure, one cannot but ſay, that there are ſome excellent Pieces, which have great Imperfections. There are certain Beauties and Graces, which ſhine in ſuch a Manner, in the midſt of the Faults, which eſcaped the Author, that Theſe Faults are not taken notice of. But, after all, I do not ſee, that theſe two Sonnets paſs, at this time, for the beſt Pieces of their Authors. See what a good Critic (30) ſaid of them; "Many "Perſons have concerned themſelves in this Conteſt "(31); and it it carried to ſuch a Height, that con"ſiderable Wagers are laid in favour of the one, and "of the other. But it is to be feared, that the ſame "thing may happen to theſe two Pieces, that hap"pened to Thoſe two Sonnets, which divided Par"naſſus into two famous Factions, under the Names "of the Jobelins, and the Uranins. For, being ex"amined more narrowly, they loſt a great deal of "their Worth and Eſteem.

(29) You will find it among Sarrazin's Poems, pag. 86, Edit. of 1658, in 12mo.

(30) Mr Sallo, in the Journal of the Learned, Jan. 26, 1665, pag. 48, Edit. of Holl.

(31) It is That, which was raiſed on the Joconde of Mr de Bouillon, Secretary to the late Duke of Orleans, and on the Joconde of Mr de la Fontaine.

The Author of the Epiſtle which ſerves as a Preface to the new Tranſlation of Perſius and Juvenal (32), relates a curious Particular, which I cannot omit. "Thus (33) a great Prince, who knew a great "deal, but who had ſtill a better Taſte, than Capa"city, for good things, judged ſo well, in two "ſmall Verſes, of the two famous Sonnets, which for"merly amuſed the whole Court, and divided it into "two Cabals of Wits, whoſe War was very inno"cent. Voiture had ſome formidable Partiſans; and "ſo had Benſerade: but, in truth, the Deciſion of "the Prince of Conti, which Nature alone dictated "to him, gave the Cauſe to the Jobelins, and That "without Appeal. This is the Decree.

(32) Made by the Jeſuit Jerom Tarteron, and printed at Paris, in 1689.

(33) That is to ſay, in judging by what paſſes in ourſelves when we read.

L'un eſt plus grand, plus achevé;
Mais je voudrois avoir fait l'autre.

The One is more Grand, and more Perfect; but I would rather have been the Author of the Other.

"The firſt Verſe relates to Voiture, and the ſecond "to Benſerade; who, I believe, was very well ſa"tiſfied with the wiſh of a Judge, who was ſo much "the more incorruptible, as, in reading the terms, "which he made uſe of, every Body perceives he "judged without any partiality." The Abbot Tallemant makes no mention of theſe two Verſes of the Prince of Conti; though he ſays, that the Prince ſaid, he never ſaw a finer Sonnet than That of Job. "The "End of it, ſaid his Highneſs, is the moſt lucky in "the World; but, though the other Verſes are very "gallant, yet they ſeem rather careleſs, than poliſhed "and finiſhed." Madam de Longueville declared for the Sonnet of Voiture (34). Note, that Benſerade made his Sonnet upon ſending the Paraphraſe, he had compoſed, on Job, to a Lady (35); obſerve this, I ſay, as a Proof of the prophane Licence, which amorous Poets give themſelves. Ought the Patience of Job, That Canonical, Divine, and Sacred, Example, to ſerve as an Introduction, or Text, to a Declaration of Love? Ought not a Chriſtian Poet to have more reſpect for the Hiſtories of the Bible? Ought he to have ſet his Patience, and his pretended Miſery, above That of Job, under pretence that he was in love, and durſt not declare it?

(34) Tallemant's Diſcourſe on Benſerade. He relates ſome Particulars concerning the War of the Uraniſts, and Jobelins.

(35) Id. ib.

[H] He ſucceeded wonderfully in the Verſes, which he made for Interludes.] Theſe Verſes were of quite a new Invention; They characterized, at the ſame time, the Poetical Deities, and the Perſons, who repreſented them. The Author of the News from the Republic of Letters, has mentioned This Singularity by the by. "Mr de Benſerade read (36) a Piece of "his own Compoſition, which was wonderfully ap"plauded. It is an abridged Picture of the forty "Academiſts, as to their Perſons, their Talents, Ad"ventures, and Fortunes. He ſpeaks freely of every "one of them; but with That ingenious and inimi"table Turn, which he made uſe of in his Verſes "for Interludes, perſonally proper to the Ladies and "Lords of the Court, who were to appear in the "Entries (37)." Mr Perrault explained this much better: Let us ſee what he ſays of it; "I am going to "ſpeak of another Kind of Poetry, which has been ad"ded to the Ancient; I mean the admirable Verſes, "which Mr de Benſerade made for the King's Inter"ludes. Heretofore, when they made Stanza's, up"on Jupiter, for Inſtance, who, making his Entry, "ſtrikes the Cyclops with his Thunder-bolt, thoſe "Stanza's ſpoke only of Jupiter, as Jupiter, and not "at all of the Perſon, who repreſented him. But "Mr de Benſerade turns his Verſes in ſuch a manner, "that they are equally underſtood of both; and, as "the King generally repreſented Jupiter, ſometimes "Neptune, and other times Mars, or the Sun, no"thing is more admirable, than the delicate and art"ful Manner, in which he praiſes him, without ad"dreſſing himſelf to him. The Perſon, who is re"preſented, and the Actor, are both pointed at; "which creates a double Delight, by giving two "things to be underſtood at one time, which, being "ſeparately fine, become ſtill finer, when joined to"gether (38)." I add a third Witneſs to theſe two, becauſe he deſcribes the Verſes in queſtion more fully in ſome Reſpects, and becauſe he ſupplies me with a Proof of two following Remarks. "We have loſt, "ſays he (39), a fine Wit, who excelled in the Art "of fine and agreeable Rallery, both in his Converſa"tion, and in his Writings; eſpecially in the inge"nious Verſes for Interludes, which he made ſeveral "Years for the whole Court. He was an Original "in this Kind; the Ancients have not ſupplied him "with any Model of This Sort of Rallery, and no "one has hitherto ſucceeded in imitating it. He "joined, to the Deſcription of the Gods, and God"deſſes, and other Perſons, who were repreſented "in theſe Interludes, ſome lively and natural Pictures "of the Courtiers, who repreſented them: He often "diſcovered their Inclinations, their Amours, and "even their moſt private Adventures, in ſo fine, ſo "pleaſing, and ſo nice, a manner, that thoſe, whom "he pointed at, were the firſt, who were pleaſed "with it, and that his Jeſts did not affect them with "Reſentment, or Vexation, which is an eſſential "Mark of their Perfection." See alſo the firſt Letter of the ſecond Part of the Count de Rabutin, and the Diſcourſe of the Abbot Tallemant. In That Diſcourſe you will find, that Benſerade had a Quarrel with the Preſident de Perigni, and with Moliere, who had both made Verſes for Interludes. Which ſhews, that he deſired to be the only Perſon, who ſhould be employed in this Buſineſs.

(36) The Day, when Mr Corneille the younger was admitted into the French Academy.

(37) Month of January, 1685, p. 37.

(38) Parallel of the Ancients and Moderns, Tom. II, pag. 112, Edit. Holl.

(39) Collection of witty Sayings, printed by the Widow Cramoiſi, 1693, pag. 204, Edit. Holl. This Book is aſcribed to Mr de Callieres, of the French Academy, and Plenipotentiary of France, at the Treaty of Ryſwick.

Digitized by Google

Cuſtom; but which may alſo proceed from a good Principle [I]. He died in the Month of November, 1691, in his Eighty ſecond Year (m); others ſay, that he died before he was eighty Years of Age (n). He had a Penſion from the Duke of Orleans, and an Apartment in the Royal Palace (o). He was a very honeſt Man, and of an admirable Converſation; having a good Talent at Jeſting [K], and telling People their Faults, without making them angry [L]. He had a bold way with him, which made him behave familiarly towards thoſe of the firſt Quality; ſo that he might ſay what he would, without being contradicted; nay, he ſeemed to have an aſcendant over the moſt conſiderable Perſons. —— His Familiarity had even ſomething imperious in it; for he was not contented with taking the Liberty of contradicting others, but would not ſuffer his own Compoſitions to be criticized, and defended them ſo conceitedly, that thoſe very Perſons, whom he conſulted, could not ſpeak their Thoughts without expoſing themſelves to his Anger (p). He was ſincere, and very officious, eſpecially to the Ladies; for his Coach, and his Servants, were always at their Service (q). He was not learned [M]; but I would not alledge, as a Proof of his Ignorance, that he could not tell, one Day, what Difference there is between the Hamadryads and the Dryads [N]. He began early to appear in Print; for it is ſaid, that his Tragedy of Cleopatra was printed in the Year 1630; which made ſome ſay, that he was more than a Jubilate Author [O]. Furetiere abuſed him too

(m) See the Hiſtorical Mercury of Nov. 1691, pag. 537.

(n) The Abbot Tallemant, ubi ſupra.

(o) Hiſtorical Mercury, Nov. 1691, pag. 537.

(p) Abbot Tallemant, ibid.

(q) Ibid.

[I] It was perhaps in compliance with Cuſtom, that he tranſlated the Pſalms in his old Age; which might alſo proceed from a good Principle.] I am the more inclined to believe This proceeded from a good Principle in Mr de Benſerade, becauſe his Submiſſion to GOD was very great during his laſt Sickneſs. Let us quote the Abbot Tallemant for it. "No Man "could begin his Life with more Gallantry, nor "end it with more Piety, or a greater Submiſſion "to the Will of GOD, than Mr de Benſerade. He "ſuffered ſuch violent Pains, that Job, whoſe Patience "he had celebrated, did hardly ſuffer ſharper; they "were ſo terrible, that one of a leſs lively Tem- "per, and much leſs ſenſible than he was, could not "have been able to bear them (40)."

(40) Tallemant's Diſcourſe on Benſerade.

[K] He had good Succeſs in Jeſting.] A Paſſage, which I have juſt now quoted (41), ſhews, that he was Maſter of this Talent. Here is another Teſtimony, taken from the ſame Author. It is a Teſtimony, which may be called practical; for it conſiſts in an Example. "A Courtier was ſuſpected of being "Impotent, and would not own it; he meet Benſe- "rade, who had often jeered him about it, and ſaid "to him, Sir, notwithſtanding all your poor jeſting, "my Wife is lately brought to Bed, Alas! Sir, re- "plied Benſerade, the World never doubted of your "Lady (42)." You may find ſome of his witty Sayings in the Continuation of the Menagiana, and in the Diſcourſe of the Abbot Tallemant.

(41) Citat. (39).

(42) Collection of witty Sayings, pag. 24, 25.

[L] He told People their Faults, without making them angry.] Nothing is more true, than the Saying, Obſequium amicos, veritas odium parit, that is, Friends are made by Complaiſance, and Enemies by ſpeaking Truth. They, therefore, who know how to make Truth appear without That odious Look, which commonly attends it, muſt needs have a very ſingular Dexterity. This was the Talent, which Benſerade was praiſed for by his Succeſſor. "What a wonder- "ful Addreſs, to make the moſt paſſionate Men "bear jeſting, and to praiſe the Modeſt, without "offending their Modeſty; to ſpeak the Truth in "the midſt of a Court, without prejudicing his For- "tune, and to divert thoſe very Perſons, whoſe "faults he reproved. Amiable Cenſor, whoſe inge- "nious Verſes, being purged from the Gall of Satire, "found the admirable Art of reproving All, and of- "fending none (43)." Mr Pavillon cannot be accuſed of having carried the Matter too far, though what is ſaid in ſome Factums (44) ſhould be true; for there is no general Rule, but will admit of an Exception: It is the Author of the Factums, who may be ſuſpected of overſtraining things. He ſays (45), that Benſerade "had ſet up for a Gallant in the old Court, "by Songs and Ballad-Verſes, which had gained him "a Reputation during the Reign of bad Taſte, Double "Meanings, and Points, which ſtill keep their Credit "with him. They have drawn upon him, continues "he, ſome Threats, and melancholy Adventures, "which have ſerved by way of Date to certain bur- "leſque Gazettes." At Page 28 of the third Factum, he ſays, that "the ſcandalous Liſt, which Benſerade "drew up, of the Academy, and which he had the "Aſſurance to read publickly in one of the ſolemn "Aſſemblies, contained ſuch ſhocking and outrageous "things, that they drew upon him the Threats of a "Perſon of the firſt Quality, who was concerned in "them; inſomuch that, notwithſtanding his Impru- "dence, he was obliged to ſuppreſs it out of reſpect "to his own Shoulders (46)."

(43) Pavillon's Speech made to the French Academy. See Hiſtorical Letters, Feb. 1692. pag. 170.

(44) Furetiere.

(45) Pag. 19. of Factum II.

(46) The Abbot Tallemant, ubi ſupra.

[M] He was not Learned.] This was ſo well known, that no ſcruple was made of owning it, when Mr Pavillon was admitted into the French Academy, a Day favourable to Mr Benſerade, wherein they were rather diſpoſed to give him more than his Due, than to take from him what belonged to him. See, here, how Mr Charpentier expreſſed himſelf in the Anſwer he made to the Diſcourſe of the new Academiſt. "The Society has loſt one of it's Ornaments in Mr "de Benſerade: He was an original Wit, and owed "all his Reputation to himſelf alone. He equalled "the Ancients, without borrowing any thing of "them; NEITHER WERE THEY VERY WELL "KNOWN TO HIM; and, if any of their Thoughts "have appeared in his Writings, it was rather an "effect of Chance, than of Imitation. He ſhewed, "that one could ſtill produce ſomething new under "the Sun; and this Character of Novelty was ſo na- "tural to him, that, whenever he would forſake it, "he was no more the ſame Man; and the Correſ- "pondence, which he held with the Graces, became "interrupted, when he followed other Ideas, than "his own." I do not wonder that this want of Erudition was not ſuppreſt; for it afforded matter for a delicate and refined Elogy.

[N] He could not explain the Difference between the Hamadryads, and the Dryads.] The Thing is This: We ſhall ſee, that he came off with a Piece of Wit. "Being one Day at the Opera, in the Box of "the Duke of Orleans, the King's Brother, the Du- "cheſs of Orleans asked him, What difference there "was between the Hamadryads, and the Dryads? "He found himſelf much perplexed; but, not think- "ing it fit to be ſilent, and perceiving, that an Arch- "biſhop, and a Biſhop, waited in the Paſſage for the "Ducheſs's going out, being unwilling to ſhew their "Croſiers in the Box, he replied, There was as much "difference as between Biſhops, and Archbiſhops. This "immediately raiſed a laugh, and, the Ducheſs re- "peating it the next Day at her Toillet, ſome one, "looking upon a Clergyman, his Friend, ſaid, point- "ing to him, Here is one your Highneſs may make a "Dryad, and Hamadryad of, whenever you are "pleaſed to go about it ſeriouſly (47)." Mr Benſerade's Perplexity in this Caſe does not ſeem to me a true Sign of Ignorance; for I am ſure, that the Queſtion of the Ducheſs of Orleans would have put ſeveral celebrated Regent Doctors to a ſtand (48). Theſe things are better known when we firſt leave the College, than after we have grown old in more ſublime Studies.

(47) Tallemant, ibid.

(48) See the Article DRYADES.

[O] He was more than a Jubilate Author.] This Expreſſion is borrowed from a Cloyſter. A Monk of fifty Years Profeſſion, is a Jubilate Religious, who is excuſed from Matins, and the Rigors of the Rule, in ſome Places (49). The Convents have formed This Expreſſion on the Duration of the Jewiſh Jubilee, which was of fifty Years (50). See how Mr Menage proves, that Mr Benſerade was more than a Jubi-

(49) See Furetiere, at the Word JUBILE.

(50) Ibid.

Digitized by Google

too much in his Factums (r). Sarrasin had a fling at him, in the Funeral Pomp of Voiture: It is He, whom he calls Rousselin de Grenade, in the third Chapter of The great Chronicle of the noble Vetturius; and he makes use of this Name, because Benserade was red-haired [P]; and because he used to say, in jest, and by reason of the Resemblance of Names, that he was descended from the Abencerrages. I found this written with a Pen, in the Margin of a Copy of The Funeral Pomp of Voiture, in possession of a Person, who knew the Secret History of that Time. It appears by this Chapter of Sarrasin, that Benserade had supplanted Voiture, in the House of Madam de Saintot [Q]. I was in hopes to have found many things relating to the Life of Mr de Benserade, in the Collection of the finest Pieces of the French Poets (s): The Title assured me of it; but, when I came to read the Page, referred to in the Table, I did not meet with one Line of History in it.

(r) See pag. 18, of Factum II, and pag. 27, of the IIId. Edit. of Holland.

(s) This Collection is in five Volumes. The Author of the Memoirs, and Journey to Spain published it at Paris, in the Year 1692. It was presently reprinted at Amsterdam.

a Jubilate Author. He supposes, that the Cleopatra of This Author was printed in the Year 1630, and then goes on in this manner; "He died in the "Year 1691, aged eighty Years: So that he wrote "That Piece Sixty one Years ago; and I suppose, "that he was at least twenty Years of Age when "he composed it. Moreover, it is to be observed, "that a Piece for the Stage was seldom printed "until a Year after it had been acted the first "Time (51)."

(51) Menagiana, pag. 335, Edit. 2 of Holl.

Mr Menage is mistaken, in supposing, that The Cleopatra of our Author was printed in the Year 1630; and I am surprized, that, having so many Opportunities of coming at the Truth of this Fact, at Paris, he neglected to inform himself, or to employ, in the Enquiry, some of those young Persons, who attended his Mercurials. By Accident, I have met with a Copy of the first Edition of the Cleopatra of Benserade (52); and have found, by this means, that this Piece was printed for Antony de Sommaville, in 4to, and finished the Twenty ninth of March, 1636.

(52) It is the Ortbography of his Name, both in the beginning, and at the end of the Epistle Dedicatory, and in the King's Privilege.

Let us add, to this, these Words of the Abbot Tallemant. "He had scarce left the College, when "he produced two or three Dramatic Pieces; "I have seen two of them, one of which was en-"tituled, Iphis and Hiante, and the other Marc "Antony (53): Both of them had pretty good Suc-"ces; But, if he loved Comedy, he was no less "fond of the Actresses; and it is said, that, with "the late Marquis d' Armentieres, who was then "an Abbot, he left the Sorbonne, where their Pa-"rents would have had them study, and went al-"most every Day to the Hotel de Bourgogne, where "they met their Mistresses, who were la Valiote, "and the Fair Roze (54)."

(53) It is likely the same, which Mr Menage calls Cleopatra.

(54) Tallemant's Discourse on Benserade.

[P] Benserade was red haired.] The Abbot Tallemant believes, that Benserade loved the fair Roze, "because of the likeness of their Hair: Her Hair "was of a lively fair Colour; as for him, he con-"fessed freely, that he was red haired, and called "himself so, and thereupon compared himself with "some of the greatest Lords of the Court, without "troubling himself whether it would please them or "not (55)."

(55) Ibid.

[Q] He had supplanted Voiture, in the House of Madam de Saintot.] Sarrazin expresses himself thus: How Vetturius came to the Court of Queen Lionelle de Galle: How he fell in Love with her, and how he was driven from thence by the Intrigues of Hunault d'Armorique, and of Rousselin de Granade. The Manuscript Notes of my Copy (56) inform me, that Madam de Saintot was denoted under the Name of Lionelle de Galle, because of Gaillonet, her Father's House. Mr de la Hunaudaye, who was a Breton, was denoted by Hunault d' Armorique.

(56) See towards the end of the Text of this Article.

BERAULD (NICOLAS), in Latin Beraldus, ought to be reckoned among the Learned of the XVIth Century. He was Tutor to Admiral de Coligny [A]. Erasmus praises him in more than one place [B], and confesses, that, passing through Orleans, in his Way to Italy, he lodged at his House [C], and received many Favours from [A] He was Tutor to Admiral de Coligny.] See here the Proof of it. "Natus est hic Gaspar anno "MDXVII. mensis Feb. die XVI. qui cum puer in-"dolem virtutis atque ingenii mirificam ostenderet, "mater cum patre mortuo bonis literis ab ineunte "ætate imbuendum curavit: eique Nicolaum Berauld-"dum, qui tum eruditionis laude in primis totius "Galliæ florebat præceptorem attribuit (1). —— "This Gaspar was born in the Year 1517, the six-"teenth of February; who discovering, in his Youth, "surprizing Talents of Virtue and Wit, his Mother "and deceased Father took care to train him up very "early to Learning; and, for this Purpose, put him "under the Tuition of Nicolas Berauld, the most fa-"mous Person for his Learning in all France." The ancient Life of This Admiral says no more; but That, which was published in the Year 1686, has more Circumstances. It informs us, that "Berault "was first of all made Tutor to the Elder, who, "having abundance of Wit, made a great Pro-"gress under so good a Master (2). Afterwards "he was also Gaspar's Tutor, and did not find him "of a more penetrating Wit (for few such were "found), but of a Spirit more disposed to Obedience, "so that, in a little time, he not only taught him "Latin, but also Philosophy. As Mr de Montmo-"rency, who was but newly made Constable, loved "his Sister, and her Children, he found time, not-"withstanding his great Occupations, to take care "of the Education of his Nephews; wherefore he "ordered Berauld to come to him regularly once a "Week, and to give him a true Account of all, "that he should observe in them, whether good "or bad. Now Berauld, being come to him, ac-"cording to his Command, and having told him, "that he was more satisfied with Gaspar, than with "Odet; The Constable took the one for the other, "and told him, he knew how to remedy it, for "that he designed Gaspar for the Church; and "that Odet, as the eldest, should keep up the Honour "of his Family. — Berauld, being surprized at this "Answer, asked him, Whether it was requisite, that "an Ecclesiastic should be ignorant, and a Man of the "World learned? This Discourse of Berauld made "the Constable perceive, that he had mistaken the "Matter; and he was very well pleased to hear, "that Gaspar had so good a Disposition for Learn-"ing, and that there was reason to hope something "good of him. But, Berauld having related this "Conversation to his Scholar, he was so afraid of "being made a Churchman, that they could no lon-"ger prevail with him to look into a Book.

(1) Vita Gasp. Colinii, pag. 33, 34, Edit. Ultraject. Ann. 1645.

(2) Life of Gaspar de Coligny, pag. 8, 9.

[B] Erasmus praises him, in more than one place.] What he says of him, in his Ciceronianus, is a Mixture of good and bad: for, if on the one hand he allows him the Talent of Speaking well, he says, on the other hand, that he had not the Talent of Writing well, and represents him as very indolent. "Agnosco dictionis illaborato fluxu Pino non dissi-"milem: verum is in hoc genere nunquam nervos "intendit suos, dicendo quam scripto felicior. Quid "possit, satis divino, sed est magni laboris fugitan-"tior (3). —— I acknowledge, he is not unlike "Pinus, in the easy flow of his Stile: but he never "exerts himself this way, being a happier Speaker, "than Writer. What he is capable of doing, I can "easily divine; but he is of an indolent Disposition, "and hates Trouble." In the following Remark, the Praises he gives him are more pure, and in greater Number. Observe, that he dedicated his Book, de Conscribendis Epistolis, to him, in the Year 1522.

(3) Erasm. in Ciceron. pag. 74.

[C] He lodged at his House.] Let us set down the whole Passage: it will afford us a Point of Criticism on the Modern Historian of Admiral de Coligny.

Digitized by Google

from him. We learn thereby, that Berauld lived at Orleans. Some ſay he was born there [D]; but others affirm, he was of Languedoc [E]. He wrote upon Pliny [F]; of which Father Hardouin has made no mention, in his excellent Catalogue of the Commentators on That ancient Author. He expreſſed a juſt Concern, in his Preface, for the Abuſes of the Preſs. Doubtleſs, the Reader will be well pleaſed to ſee his Complaint [G], and the Catalogue of ſome other Pieces, which he publiſhed [H]. One thing has been lately reported, whereby it appears, that he was an honeſt

" Nicolaus Beraldus lepide nimirum hoſpitalis teſ-
" ſeræ meminit in ſubſcriptione ſua. Nam memini
" cum olim eſſem Aureliæ Italiam aditurus me ho-
" minis hoſpitio uſum, atque apud eum dies aliquot
" ſanè quam benigne comiterque habitum. Etiam
" nunc audire mihi videor linguam illam explanatam
" ac volubilem, ſuaviterque tinnientem & blande ca-
" noram vocem, orationem paratam ac pure fluen-
" tem: videre os illud amicum & plurimum huma-
" nitatis præ ſe ferens, ſupercilii nihil: mores ve-
" nuſtos, commodos, faciles minimeque moleſtos:
" quin & interulam ſericam velut apophoretum ob-
" tulit abituro, vixque ab homine impetravi ut lice-
" ret recuſare (4). —— Nicolas Berauld makes
" diverting mention of our former Acquaintance, in his
" Subſcriptions. For I remember, when I was at
" Orleans, deſigning to go to Italy, I was entertained
" in a very friendly manner at his Houſe for ſome Days.
" Even now I fancy I hear That voluble, ſweet, and " harmonious, Voice, That ready and flowing Elocu-
" tion: I have now before my Eyes That friendly,
" and humane, Aſpect; That graceful, eaſy, and gen-
" teel, Behaviour: And, upon my Departure, he pre-
" ſented me with a ſilken Veſt, which I could
" ſcarce prevail with him to permit me to refuſe."
This Letter is dated the Twenty firſt of February, 1516; from whence it may be inferred, that Berauld was not young, when he was made Preceptor to the Sons of the Marſhal de Chattillon. But how ſhall we reconcile That Volubility of Tongue, which Eraſmus, an Ear-Witneſs, aſcribes to him, with the following Words? " The Admiral had two things in " him, which ſeemed extreamly oppoſite, viz. a great
" Vivacity of Wit, and a very ſlow Speech; ſo that
" one would have ſaid, that he muſed upon what " he was going to ſay. The Politicians would have
" it to be a Piece of Cunning to gain time to ob-
" ſerve thoſe with whom he had to do. - - - - - It
" is much more likely, that it was a Fault, which " he had contracted by the conſtant Attendance up-
" on his Maſter, Nicolas Berault, in whom the ſame
" Thing was obſerved (5)."

(4) Idem, Epiſt. 14, lib. i. p. 56.

(5) Life of Gaſpar de Coligny, pag. 18.

[D] Some ſay, that he was born at Orleans.] Nicolai Beraldi AURELII - - - - dialogus. - - - - The Dialogue of Nicolas Beraldus of Orleans. Thus ſpeaks Geſner (6). See alſo Rocolles, Page 214 of the true Hiſtory of Calviniſm. I ſhall ſet down his Words in the following Remark.

(6) Geſner, Bibl. 518.

[E] Others affirm, that he was of Languedoc.] " Their Mother, Louiſe de Montmorency, aſſiſted with
" the Advice of her Brother, took care of their Edu" cation, and gave them Nicolas Berault, born in " Languedoc, for their Tutor, but he had acquired
" Literature at Paris, whither he came very young."
Theſe Words are in the eighth Page of the new Life of the Admiral. Geſner might be deceived by the long Abode, which Berauld made at Orleans, where he was Profeſſor of the Civil-Law, if I am not miſtaken. Rocolles ſpeaks of it thus, at the Two hundred and fourteenth Page of the true Hiſtory of Calviniſm: Nicolas Berauld, of Orleans, A great CIVILIAN. Geſner mentions a Speech of Berauld, de Juriſprudentia vetere ac novitia.

(7) Father Hardouin obſerves, and with reaſon, that the firſt, who wrote upon Pliny, was John Andrew Valerienſis Antiſtes in Corſica. I believe it ſhould be Alerienſis.

[F] He wrote upon Pliny.] He is the third of the Commentators on That Author, mentioned by Eraſmus. Hermolaus Barbarus is the firſt (7), Budæus the ſecond, and John Cæſareus the fourth. " Poſt hunc (Budæum) Nicolaus Beraldus, homo ſu-
" pra peritiam humanarum literarum, Mathematices
" etiam pulchrè callens, quodque hic vel præcipuum
" erat ſani judicii, non minore ſtudio quam religione
" veſatus eſt in hoc labore. Nuper omnium po-
" ſtremus Joannes Cæſareus, in omni genere lite-
" rarum exercitatiſſimus, non infelicem operam præ-
" ſtitit (8). - - - - - After Budæus, Nicolas Berauld,
" a Man ſkilled beyond the Knowledge of human Li- " terature, well verſed likewiſe in Mathematics, per- " formed This Task, and, what demonſtrated the " Soundneſs of his Judgment, with no leſs Religion,
" than Care. Laſt of all, Joannes Cæſareus, a
" thorough learned Man, beſtowed his Pains not un-
" ſucceſsfully." Eraſmus ſpeaks thus, in the Preface to Pliny, which was printed at Baſil, by Froben, in the Year 1525. He aſſures us, that he had corrected many Paſſages, and that Pliny had never appeared in a better Condition. In cæteris item ita vigilatum eſt, ut meo periculo non dubitem polliceri nunquam hactenus exiſſe Plinium felicius tractatum (9). Nevertheleſs Father Hardouin ſays nothing of this Edition, and he only reckons Cæſarius (ſo he calls him) among thoſe, who wrote on ſome Part of Pliny. He aſcribes to him only ſome Scholia on what relates to Fiſhes, in the ninth Book. Mr Chevillier goes, then, too far, in theſe Words of the One hundred ninety firſt Page of his Origin of Printing at Paris; " I wondered, when I ſaw, that nothing was
" ſaid, there, of John Cæſarius, and that no men-
" tion was mention was made of his Work,
" neither in the Preface, nor in the Liſt of the chief
" Editions of That famous Author, which was in-
" ſerted in the firſt Volume (10)." This will ſerve as a Note, or Appendix, to what is ſaid concerning the Omiſſion of Berauld, in the Text of the Article.

(8) Eraſm. Præfat. in Plin. It is printed among his Letters, in Book xxviii, pag. 1082.

(9) Ibid. pag. 1083.

(10) That is, in Father Hardouin's Edition.

[G] His Complaint of the Abuſes of the Preſs.] " James Fontaine, Profeſſor of the Civil-Law in " the Univerſity of Paris - - - - - very much ap-
" proves the Advice, which Nicolas Berauld gave to " Sovereigns, to redreſs this Evil, and to make E-
" dicts to remove all thoſe from the noble Art of " Printing, who, for want of Learning, ſhould be " judged uncapable of exerciſing it. Quarè pruden-
" tiſſimè in Præfatione operis ſui Pliniani admonet
" longè eruditiſſimus Nicolaus Beraldus, ut aliquo
" publico decreto inſolentiſſima iſta ignorantum Im-
" preſſorum audacia reprimatur; quibus hoc debe-
" mus ſtudioſi, quòd pro unaquâque literâ inveni-
" mus plagam, pro Syllabâ crucem, pro libro tor-
" mentum. Sed rei indignitas, quæ loqui compulit,
" etiam tacere cogit. - - - - - The very learned Be-
" rauld very prudently adviſes, in the Preface to his " Work on Pliny, to repreſs, by public Decree, the " uncommon Impudence of ignorant Printers; to whom
" the Learned owe That Perplexity and Torment,
" which every Letter and Syllable of a Book affords
" them (11)." Theſe Words of James Fontaine are to be found in the Elogy, which he made upon Bertholdus Rembolt a famous Printer. It occurs in the Sexte of the Decretals, printed, by Chevalon, in the Year 1520 (12).

(11) Chevillier's Origin of Printing, pag. 183.

(12) Id. ib.

[H] Some other Pieces, which he publiſhed.] Here are Thoſe, which Geſner mentioned; Dialogus, quo rationes explicantur, quibus dicendi ex tempore facultas parari poteſt; deque ipſa dicendi ex tempore facultate; at Lyons, 1534: De Juriſprudentia vetere ac novitia oratio, cum erudita ad antiquorum lectionem ac ſtudium exhortatione, at Lyons, 1533: Notes on the Ruſticus, and on the Nutricia, of Politian. It is true, that Geſner is not poſitive, as to this laſt Work. Fertur etiam in Politiani Nutricia ſcripſiſſe, ſi bene memini (13). Jodocus Badius, dedicating the ſecond Part of Politian's Works to Lewis de Berquin, in the Year 1512, excuſes himſelf as well as he can, for not having yet printed the moſt learned, and moſt ſolid Epiſtle, which Berauld had compoſed againſt Laurentius Valla, and dedicated to his good Friend, Lewis de Berquin. Rocolles ſays, that This Work of Berauld was entituled, Of Recrimination, againſt Laurentius Valla, Anthony of Palermo, and Bartholomew Ficius (14). The Catalogue of the Bodleian Library mentions a Dictionarium Græco-Latinum Nicolai Beraldi, printed at Paris, in the Year 1521, and another Book, entituled Syderalis abyſſus, printed at the ſame Place, in 1514.

(13) Geſn. ubi ſupra.

(14) Rocolles's True Hiſtory of Calviniſm, pag. 214.

Digitized by Google

honeſt Man [I]. He was very much eſteemed by Stephen Poncher, Biſhop of Paris, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Sens (a), a Prelate of great Authority in the Kingdom, and a Patron of Learning. His Son, FRANCIS BERAULD, was a very learned Man. He underſtood Greek well, and taught it at Montbeillard, in the Year 1554 (b). He taught at Lauſanne, when Beza went thither in 1549 (c). He taught there alſo, in the Year 1557 (d). He was at Geneva in the Year 1561 (e). He was Principal of the College of Montargis, in the Year 1571 (f); from whence he went to Rochel, to exerciſe the like Employment (g). He was a good Greek and Latin Poet (h). It is unneceſſary to obſerve, that he was a Proteſtant. He tranſlated ſome Books of Appian [K].

(a) This appears by a Letter from Budæus to Eraſmus. It is the 60*th of the third Book of Thoſe of* Eraſmus.
(b) Colomeſ. in Galliâ Orient. p. 17.
(c) Ant. Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 14.
(d) Melch. Adam. in vita Stuckii.
(e) Colomeſ. ibid. pag. 55.
(f) Ibid. pag. 46.
(g) Ib. and pag. 38. See the Letter, which Beza wrote to him; it is the 71*ſt of thoſe of* Beza.
(h) Colomeſ. ibid. pag 22, 40.

[I] He was an honeſt Man.] Madam de Chatillon, and her Brother, the Conſtable de Montmorency, had a Mind to make a Churchman of Gaſpar de Coligny, and, knowing from him, that it was againſt his Inclination, he ordered Berault to inſinuate their Pleaſure to him, thinking that, as he had all along governed his youthful Spirit, he knew better how to prevail with him, than any one elſe. They repreſented to him, that his Scholar might forget him in the Profeſſion of Arms; but that, in an Eccleſiaſtical State, he would always ſtand in need of him, and load him with Benefices. They could not have taken a more cunning way to engage him to do what they deſired: But Berauld, who was more honeſt, than intereſted, inſtead of uſing all the Endeavours, which they expected, only repreſented to his Pupil the Advantages of the Dignity of a Cardinal, and at the ſame time pointed out to him the Dangers of it, and adviſed him not to ingage in it againſt his Inclination (15).

[K] He tranſlated ſome Books of Appian.] Henry Stephens made choice of him to tranſlate Annibal's Wars, and Thoſe of Spain. "Sicut hoſce duos Libellos "à me ex Italia (uti dixi) allatos primus edidi, ita "etiam primus latinè vertendos curavi, & quidem "delecto ad id munus viro Græcæ linguæ non pa- "rum perito, Franciſco Beraldo Aurelianenſi (16). "----- As I was the Firſt, who publiſhed theſe "two Books, which, as I ſaid, I had brought with "me from Italy, ſo was I the Firſt, who got them "tranſlated into Latin, having, for that Purpoſe, "made choice of Francis Berauld of Orleans, a Man "not a little ſkilled in the Greek Language." He ſhews, in his Notes, why he preferred Francis Berauld's Tranſlation before That of Cælius Secundus Curio.

(15) The Life of Admiral de Coligny, printed in 1686, pag. 10, 11.
(16) Henricus Stephanus, in Præf. Appiani.

BERAULT (CLAUDE), Author of The Commentary on Statius, in uſum Delphini, died at Paris, in the Month of March, 1705. He was Regius Profeſſor of Syriac, after the Death of Mr d'Herbelot.

BERAULT (MICHAEL), Miniſter, and afterwards Profeſſor of Divinity at Montauban, flouriſhed about the end of the XVIth Century, and beginning of the XVIIth. He became very conſiderable among Thoſe of his Party. He had been a Monk, if we may believe Scaliger, who gives him the Character of a learned and able Man (a). He was pitched upon, in 1593, to diſpute againſt Perron, in the Conference of Mante, as I have ſaid in another Place (b); and he publiſhed a Work againſt the ſame Perron, in the Year 1598 [A]. During the Civil-Wars, he greatly favoured the Intereſts of the Duke de Rohan, and he publiſhed, with That View, ſeveral Pieces, which brought him into Trouble [B]. In 1605, he almoſt publickly made Intereſt, to be appointed Deputy to the General-Aſſemblies of the Proteſtants (c). He informs us of an Æra, which is very curious: I mean That, which induced many Proteſtant Divines of France to begin to read the Fathers (d).

(a) Scaligerana, at the Word BERAULT, pag. 29.
(b) In Remark [B], of the Article ROTAN.
(c) Hiſtory of the Edict of Nants, Tom. I, pag. 425.
(d) See the Preface to his Book, entituled, A Defence of the Vocation of the Miniſters.

[A] He publiſhed a Work againſt the ſame Perron, in 1598.] It was printed at Montauban, by Dennis Haultin, and dedicated to the Magiſtrates, and People, of the Town. It is an Octavo of Four hundred ninety eight Pages, entituled, A ſhort and clear Defence of the Vocation of the Miniſters of the Goſpel againſt the Reply of Meſſire James Davy, Biſhop of Evreux, drawn up Article by Article from the ſame Reply.

[B] ---- Some Pieces, which brought him into Trouble.] The King's Commiſſary at the National Synod of Charenton, in 1631, demanded, among other things, "That the Miniſters ſhould be prohibited "from meddling with State Affairs (1). This was "aimed at Beraud, Miniſter of Montauban, a Man "of a warm Spirit, and who went faſt. During the "laſt Troubles, he had written a Book, in which, "not ſatisfied with juſtifying the taking up of Arms, "he undertook to maintain, that the Miniſters themſelves had a Call to bear them, and to ſhed Blood. "The Commiſſary aggravated the Importance of "This Opinion, which was dangerous in ſuch a Man, "as Beraud, who, beſides the Quality of Miniſter, "had That likewiſe of Profeſſor of Divinity. He "firſt pronounced the Condemnation of the guilty "Perſon, and then ordered the Synod to cenſure "him. Before they could give any Anſwer in the "Affair of Beraud, it was neceſſary to hear him (2). "He owned the Book; He pretended, he had not "taught in it the Doctrine he was charged with, "and excuſed whatever was ſuſpicious in it from "the Malice of the Times. He ſaid, there were, "indeed, ſome ambiguous Expreſſions in it; and that "he deteſted the Conſequence, which was drawn from "them. The Commiſſary would not admit of this "kind of Excuſe; and he convicted Beraud of having "expreſsly written, in a Preface to his Book, the "Things, of which he was accuſed. So that he "was ſeverely cenſured by the Synod, who treated "the Expreſſions of his Book as ſcandalous Terms, "which he had improperly made uſe of. This Doctrine was condemned, and the Miniſters were "forbid to teach it. In the mean time, Beraud "was ſecluded the Synod; and, before his re-eſtabliſhment, he incurred a freſh Cenſure on the "Part of the Commiſſary."

After the Deputies of the Synod had harangued the King, Berauld was permitted to take his Seat in the Aſſembly (3).

(1) Hiſt. of the Edict of Nants, Tom. II, pag. 518.
(2) Ibid. pag. 519.
(3) Ibid. pag. 523.

BERENGARIUS (PETER), of Poitiers, Diſciple of Abelard, eſpouſed his Maſter's Intereſt very much, who was condemned by a Council (a) in 1140; and becauſe he looked upon St Bernard as the chief Cauſe of his Condemnation, he wrote moſt vehemently againſt him. He publiſhed An Apology for Abelard (b), wherein he

(a) Held at Sens.
(b) It is printed with the Works of Abelard at Paris, 1616.

Digitized by Google

he ſets forth, that his Enemies prepared the Judgment of the Trial amidſt their Cups [A], and that the accuſed, ſeeing the ill Diſpoſition of his Judges, deſired, that his Cauſe might be referred to the Pope [B]; that, nevertheleſs, they condemned him, and that St Bernard prepoſſeſſed the Holy Father, with ſo much Diligence, that Abelard was ſpeedily condemned at Rome, without being heard [C], and even without giving him time to appear before the Tribunal, to which he had appealed. Upon this the Apologiſt relates the Reaſons, which might be alledged in favour of St Bernard, viz. That the Zeal of GOD's Houſe had eaten him up; that the Leproſy, which diſfigured the Body of the Church, would have ſpread all over it, if the Evil had not been ſtifled in it's Birth; and that, to ſave the Readers the trouble of turning over ſeveral Volumes, it had been thought fit to give a ſhort Liſt of Abelard's pernicious Propoſitions. He, who made Thoſe Extracts, cannot be excuſed; and, whether St Bernard alone was at the Trouble of doing it, or whether, beſides the Propoſitions extracted by him, he produced Thoſe, which others ſupplied him with, it is certain, that This Paſſage of his Life does little Honour to his Memory [D]. The Liſt, which he produced, contained ſome things, which Abelard had never ſaid, nor [A] He ſets forth, in his Apology for Abelard, that his Enemies prepared the Judgment of the Trial amidſt their Cups.] A more ſatirical Deſcription cannot be ſeen, than That, which Berengarius gives of the Preliminaries of That Synodal Judgment. He ſays that, after the Fathers of the Council had well eat and drank, they cauſed Peter Abelard's Writings to be read to them. While it was read to them, they ſtamped with their Feet, they laughed, they jeered, they drank; and when they heard any thing, which was new to their Ears, they gnaſhed their Teeth againſt the Author, and demanded of each other, If they would ſuffer ſuch a Monſter to live? They had drank ſo much, that they fell aſleep; ſo that, when their Reader met with ſome ſuſpicious Paſſages, and asked, If they did not condemn it? They ſtarted out of their Sleep, and ſaid, half aſleep, ſome damnamus, and others only namus. Berengarius's Words have greater force, than mine; therefore give me leave to produce them. He applies the Thoughts of the ancient Latin Poets very prettily. "Poſt aliqua Pontifices inſultare, pedem pedi applodere, ridere, nugari conſpiceres, ut facile quilibet judicaret illos non CHRISTO vota perſolvere, "ſed Baccho. Inter hæc ſalutantur cyphi, pocula "celebrantur, laudantur vina, Pontificum guttura irrigantur. —— Lethæi potio ſucci Pontificum corda jam ſepelierat. Ecce, inquit Satyricus,

------ inter pocula quærunt
Pontifices ſaturi quid dia poëmata narrent.

"Denique cum aliquid ſubtile divinumque ſonabat "quod auribus pontificalibus erat inſolitum, audientes omnes diſſecabantur cordibus ſuis, & ſtridebant "dentibus in Petrum, & oculos talpæ habentes in "Philoſophum, hoc, inquiunt, ſineremus vivere monſtrum. —— Cujus (vini) calor ita inceſſerat cerebris, ut in ſomni letargiam oculi omnium ſolverentur. Inter hæc ſonat lector, ſtertit auditor. Alius "cubito innititur ut det oculis ſuis ſomnum, alius "ſuper molle cervical dormitionem palpebris ſuis "molitur, alius ſuper genua caput reclinans dormitat. "Cum itaque lector in Petri ſatis aliquod reperiret "ſpinetum, ſurdis exclamabat auribus Pontificum, "damnatis? Tunc quidam vix ad extremam ſyllabam "expergefacti, ſomnolenta voce, capite pendulo, "damnamus ajebant. Alii vero damnantium tumultu excitati, decapitata prima ſyllaba, namus inquiunt." I cannot forbear inſerting here this ſhort Story. A Judge was wont to fall aſleep ſometimes on the Bench: "One Day the Preſident, gathering "the Votes of the Court, and coming to ask his: "he anſwered, ſtarting out of his Sleep, and not "being quite awake, That his Opinion was, that the "Man ſhould be beheaded. But the Buſineſs in hand "is about a Meadow, ſaid the Preſident: Let it be "mowed then; replied the Judge (1)." Balzac had perhaps read this in a burleſque Piece of Francis Hotman, diſguiſed under the Name of Matago de Matagonibus, againſt Matharel. "Nota omnibus, "ſays he, eſt hiſtoria de eo qui cum dormiens à præſide excitatus & ſententiam interrogatus eſſet, ſemiſomnis dixit, ſuſpendatur, ſuſpendatur, credens "criminalem proceſſum eſſe. Cui præſes, quinimo, "inquit, agitur de prato; ergo defalcetur, reſpondit "ebrius."

(1) Balzac, Ariſtip. pag. 199.

[B] Seeing the ill Diſpoſition of his Judges, he appealed to the Pope.] Otho Friſingenſis ſays, that Abelard apprehended he ſhould be overwhelmed by popular Tumults, and that, to avoid this Misfortune, he demanded to be referred to the Court of Rome. Dum de fide ſua diſcuteretur, ſeditionem populi timens, Apoſtolicæ ſedis præſentiam appellavit (2). He had reaſon to diſtruſt a Mob, animated by the Declamations of his Accuſers, who cried him down as a Deſtroyer of the moſt Holy Myſteries of the Goſpel.

(2) Otho Friſing. de geſtis Frider. lib. i, c. 48.

[C] At the Inſtigation of St Bernard, he was condemned without being heard.] The ſame Injuſtice was done him, in the Council of Soiſſons, and this was done on a very ill Pretence; which was, That they feared the Subtilty of his Logic, and the Force of his Eloquence. Libros quos ediderat propria manu ab Epiſcopis igni dare coactus eſt, nulla ſibi reſpondendi facultate, eo quod diſceptandi in eo peritia ab omnibus ſuſpecta haberetur, conceſſa (3). The Preſident d'Argentré, had reaſon to find fault, that, upon ſuch an account, they ſhould tranſgreſs one of the moſt Sacred Laws of Juſtice; that No Man ought to be condemned unheard; audiatur & altera pars.

(3) Id. ibid. cap. 47.

Qui ſtatuit aliquid parte inaudita altera,
Æquum licet ſtatuerit, haut æquus fuerit (4).

(4) Seneca Medea, Act. II, ſc. II.

He, who determines any thing, without hearing the other ſide, though he determines right, is unjuſt.

Here is what He, who publiſhed Peter Abelard's Works, ſays of That Author; "Queritur eum non "fuiſſe auditum in Concilio contra eum coacto, quod "omnes quantumvis docti & ſubtiles ejus acumen ingenii, linguæ verſatilis volubilitatem, eloquentiæ "flumen aureum, vel potius fulmen igneum & triſulcum, ſyllogiſmorum gryſos & contorta enthymemata, reformidarint (5). —— He complains, that "Abelard was not heard, in the Council, which was "called againſt him; becauſe All of them, learned and "ſubtile as they were, dreaded the Acuteneſs of his Wit, "the Volubility of his Tongue, the golden Flow, or "rather Lightning, of his Eloquence, with the Subtility and Pointedneſs of his Syllogiſms and Enthymema's

(5) Argentré apud Franc. Amboeſium, Præf. Apolog. ad opera Abælardi.

[D] —— this Proceeding of St Bernard does little Honour to his Memory.] Zeal and Solitude made him very choleric, and very credulous, if we may believe the ſame Author (6). This Obſervation was made by a more ancient Author, though it has not retained all the Impreſſions of it's Original; for ſee what Otho Friſingenſis ſays: "Erat autem Bernardus Claræval"enſis Abbas tam ex Chriſtianæ religionis ſervore "zelotypus, quam ex habitudinali manſuetudine quodammodo credulus, ut & Magiſtros, qui humanis "rationibus ſeculari ſapientia confiſi nimium inhærebant, abhorreret, & ſi quicquam ei Chriſtianæ "fidei abſonum de talibus diceretur, facile aurem "præberet (7). —— Bernard, Abbot of Clairvaux, "was both paſſionately zealous for the Chriſtian "Religion, and, thro' an habitual Mildneſs of Diſpoſition, a little too credulous; inſomuch, that he "abhorred thoſe Teachers, who, depending on worldly "Wiſdom, ſtuck too much to human Reaſon; and, "whenever they were reported to him to have advanced any Doctrine contrary to the Chriſtian Faith, "he

(6) Argentré, ibid.

(7) Otho Friſing. de Geſt. Frid. lib. i, c. 47.

Digitized by Google

nor written; and some things, which Abelard never understood according to the Sense, which was imputed to him (c). This is what the Apologist intended to shew, in the second Part of his Work; but he did not write it; and he had his Reasons for it [E]. In the mean time, he gave St Bernard to understand, in the first Part, that he should not persecute others on account of their Doctrine, since his own Writings were not free from Errors. He maintained, against him, That he had taught a Thing, which he would not have failed to insert, as a monstrous Doctrine, in his Extracts out of Abelard, if Abelard had vented it (d). This Recrimination of Berengarius was useless; he had to do with one of those privileged Persons, who acquire the Benefit of Impunity, by the great Services, which they pretend they have done to the Cause [F]. He had no better Success in representing to That Informer the Indulgence, which was shewn to the Errors of some Fathers of the Church. Besides This Piece of Berengarius, we have two Letters of his, one to the Bishop of Mende, the other against the Carthusians. They are printed with Abelard's Works. He supports, in all his Writings, the Character of a fiery, sowre, Spirit, which Petrarch gave him [G]; but he says, that his Invective against the Carthusians was

(c) See Remark [I].

(d) Viz. That the Soul was created in Heaven. Dum dignitatem animæ sanctitas, originem ei fidercam flore jejuni eloquii nundinaris. Quod si in Petri opusculis hujus vecordiam reperisses, non est dubium, quin eam inter illa quæ peperiti capitulorum monstra locasses. Bereng. in Oper. Abelardi, p. 315.

"he readily believed it." Thus the Providence of God dispenses good and evil: Most of Those, who have a great Zeal, become credulous and suspicious, and easily conceive an extraordinary Animosity against Those, whom they suspect; They write Letter upon Letter against them (8); They alarm the Consciences of others, and give themselves no rest, 'till they have inspired their Prepossessions into every Body. If a Book is to be examined, God knows how difficult it is for them them to understand the true Sense of the Author, and to put the most equitable Construction upon his Words. See the Remark [I].

(8) D. Bernardus cum eo simultates gravissimas exercuit, ita ut literas acrimoniæ plenas scripserit ad varios, Argentré, ibid.

[E] He did not write the second Part of his Apology for Abelard; and he had his Reasons for it.] Perhaps he did not give the true Reason of his Silence. This Reason was, probably, the fear of stirring up all the Monks, and the Clergy, against him, and of being exposed thereby to the People's Indignation, and a thousand Mischiefs. He knew how odious he had made himself by the first Part of his Book; but the second would have much more exasperated the People. The first contained only hard Words, and Reproaches, with some Recriminations, which could do but little Prejudice to St Bernard; but the second would have convicted him of Knavery, or Ignorance, and consequently of being an unjust Persecutor. The plainer the thing had been, the more angry they would have been with Berengarius, the Destroyer of an holy Reputation, so usefully established in the Minds of People. So that he found it more proper to be silent, and to justify his Silence by shameful Nonsense. He declared, that Time had made him wise, and that he had embraced St Bernard's Opinion, and refused to protect Doctrines, which sounded ill, though they were not bad in the main: Lastly, That if he had said any thing against the Man of God, he desired it should be looked upon as said in jest, and not in earnest. Processu temporis meum sapere crevit: & in sententiam Abbatis pedibus, ut dicitur, ivi. Nolui esse patronus capitulorum objectorum Abelardo, quia etsi sanum saperent, non sane sonabant. ----- Si quid in personam hominis Dei dixi joco, legatur non serio (9). And yet, a little before, he had said, that his Censure of St Bernard was well grounded. It is the true Sense of these Words; Legant eruditi viri Apologeticum quem edidi, & si dominum Abbatem juste non argui, licenter me redarguant. Is not this the Nonsense of a Man, who dares not say, that he is in the right, and who is ashamed to confess, that he is in the wrong?

(9) Berengar. in Oper. Abælardi, p. 322, 323.

[F] He had to do with one of those privileged Persons, who acquire the Benefit of Impunity by the great Services, which they pretend they have done to the Cause.] St Bernard had a very agreeable Stile: The whole World was over-run with the Productions of his Pen; his Books flew every where; and were in great Numbers. Mirantur homines in te liberalium disciplinarum ignaro tantam ubertatem facundiæ, quia emissiones tuæ jam cooperuerunt universam superficiem terræ (10). The Reputation of his Sanctity, Zeal, and Miracles, was no less spread, than That of his Pen. Jamdudum sanctitatis tuæ odorem ales per orbem fama disperfit, præconisavit merita, miracula declamavit (11). With all these Advantages, he was able to ruin any Man's Reputation; much less could so great a Philosopher, as Abelard, expect to pass for Othodox in spite of him. Berengarius has very happily represented the Authority of the Man of God in this manner, "Damnatur, proh dolor! absens, "inauditus, & inconvictus. Quid dicam, quidve non "dicam? Bernarde,

Nil opus est bello, veniam pacemque rogamus,
Porrigimus junctas ad tua lora manus.
Jura cadent rerum, vertetur sanctio legum,
Si vis, si mandas, si sic decernis agendum,
Quem penes arbitrium est & vis & norma loquendi (12).

(10) Ibid. pag. 322.

(11) Ibid. pag. 303.

(12) Ibid. pag 307.

"He is condemned, alas! absent, unheard, and unconvicted. What shall I say, or what shall I not say? O Bernard,

Enough of War; henceforth let Discord cease;
Vanquish'd, to Thee we humbly sue for Peace;
Right shall be Wrong, Unlawful Law shall be;
For Right and Law depend alone on Thee.

Where is the Orthodoxy, that can hold out against such Accusers? The People are so much prepossessed, that they will scarce suffer one to make a Defence; It cannot be done without charging the Promoter of the Process, and the Informer, with Calumny; but there is no enduring This. What? shall we suffer so great a Servant of God to be defamed, as an egregious Calumniator? God forbid; the Honour of the Church is too much concerned in it. Thus an inconsiderable private Man may say; "I shall be Ortho"dox, or Heterodox, according as such a one pleases; "for, if he attacks my Doctrine, they neither dare, "nor can, absolve me; My Justification would disgrace "him, and would rejoice the Enemy too much. "In vain might I accuse him, in my turn; no re"gard would be had to it: I have not laboured "for the Good of the Church like him; I do not "deserve the Immunities, which are due to his Stu"dies, and indefatigable Vigilance. A great many "People would take it ill, that I should dare to pub"lish Apologies, and would say to me, if they durst "speak their Mind, what Caligula said to his Bro"ther. What? Do'st Thou take an Antidote against "Cæsar (13)? I should seem to them worthy of a "new Accusation, because I did not sink under the "first." Quintus Scævola, who was one of the honestest Men of his Time, was treated in the same manner; "Diem Scævolæ dixit posteaquam compe"rit eum posse vivere: cum ab eo quæreretur quid "tandem accusaturus esset eum, quem pro dignita"te ne laudare quidem quisquam satis commodè "posset, ajunt hominem (ut erat furiosus) respon"disse, quod non totum telum corpore recepisset "(14). ----- When he found Scævola was out of "Danger, he entered an Action, against him; and, "being asked, what he had to alledge against a Per"son, whose Merit deserved the highest Praise, the "enraged Fellow is said to have replied, Because he "did not receive the whole Weapon in his Body."

(13) Trucidandus frater, quem metu venenorum præmuniri medicamentis suspicabatur. Antidotum inquit, adversus Cæsarem? Sueton. in Calig. c. 29.

(14) Cicero, pro Sex. Roscio.

[G] He supported, in all his Writings, the Character of a fiery, and sowre, Spirit, which Petrarch had given him.] These are Petrarch's Words in his Apology: "Damnavit Bernardus Clarævallensis Abbas

"Petrum

Digitized by Google

(e) Voluit recare in eis immoderatam licentiam linguæ, quia velut quidam Geometræ totum orbem mensurabant. Ibid. pag. 323.

was only designed to reclaim them from their detracting Temper (e). They, who have said, that he was of a small Stature, have misunderstood the Author they quote (f). At the bottom, the Reproaches of Heterodoxy, which he made to St Bernard, are meer Cavils, and serve only to shew, that, when a Man insists too rigidly on certain Expressions, without putting on That Spirit of Equity, which looks for the Sense of an Author in the Design, and Principles, of his Works, it is easy for him to discover Erroneous Propositions. I do not pretend, that all the Errors, imputed to Abelard, have as bad a Foundation as This [H]; but it cannot be denied, as to the greatest part of them [I]; and therefore St Bernard's Friends had now just Reason to complain, that some Errors are found in his Works, by making use of his own Method against him. It is for the Advantage of the Public, that some Men should be obliged to cry out,

(f) See Remark [G].

— — — — — — Eheu
Quàm temerè in nosmet legem sanximus iniquam ! (g)

(g) Horat. Sat. iii, lib. i, ver. 66.

— — — — unthinking that we are,
T' establish Precedents against ourselves.

The

" Petrum Abælardum literatum quondam virum. " Huic iratus Berengarius Pictaviensis vir, & ipse " non insacundus ac discipulus Petri, contra Bernar- " dum librum unum scripsit, non magni quidem " corporis, sed INGENTIS ACRIMONIAE. De " quo postmodum à multis increpatus se excusavit " quod adolescens scripsisset, & quod sibi viri sancti- " tas nondum penitus nota esset. - - - - - - Bernard, " Abbot of Clairvaux, condemned Peter Abelard, a " very learned Man. Enraged at This, Berengarius, " of Poitiers, himself not ineloquent, and besides a " Disciple of Peter, wrote one Piece against Bernard, " not very bulky indeed, but of Great Acrimony. " Being reprehended by many for it, he pleaded, in " his Excuse, that he wrote it in his Youth, when " he was not as yet sufficiently acquainted with the " Sanctity of Bernard." Francis d'Amboise, not considering this Passage with sufficient Attention, found in it, that Berengarius was a little Man; " De Be- " rengario - - - - - Petrarcha in Apologia ait ipsum " fuisse facundum, non magni corporis, sed ingentis " acrimoniæ (15). - - - - - Petrarch, in his Apology, " says, that he was an eloquent Man, of small Sta- " ture, but great Acrimony." This ought to teach Authors, and, first of all, myself, to be continually on their Guard against those Distractions of Mind, which are so often the Cause, that we apply, to one thing, what Those, whom we transcribe, have said of another.

(15) Præf. Apologet. ad Opera Abæl.

[H] The Reproaches of Heterodoxy, which he made to St Bernard, are meer cavils. —— The Errors imputed to Abelard have not All as bad a Foundation as This.] For example, no wrong was done him, in accusing him of having too far extended the Power of Free-will, and the Necessity of Grace too little. He expressed himself so clearly upon This (16), that whoever should undertake to justify him, would imitate the Insincerity of Those, who, on other questions, maintain, that he was an Heretic. Neither must there be any cavilling about certain Articles, which it is difficult not to adopt, when once the Doctrine of Free-will is embraced. We may, therefore, say, that it is very true, that Abelard had a great Indulgence for sins of Ignorance, and that he damned no body for Philosophical Sin (17). He seems also to me to have taught plainly, that JESUS CHRIST did not die to redeem us from the Tyranny of the Devil; but that the Love, which GOD shewed to Mankind by the Incarnation of his SON, should incline us to love him reciprocally; and to follow the Instructions, and the example, of an Incarnate GOD. This Doctrine is half Socinian, and, according to St Bernard, whoever maintains it deserves less to be confuted, than to be cudgelled. Annon justius os loquens talia fustibus tunderetur, quam rationibus refelleretur (18)? Here is another offensive Doctrine; viz. that Things, which never were, nor ever shall be, are not possible. This was, without doubt, Abelard's Opinion (19); and I do not see, that They, who say, that GOD is determined by his Infinite Wisdom to do what is most worthy of himself, can consistently with themselves deny This Philosopher's Doctrine. See the Remark [M]. I omit some other Opinions, which might reasonably have been imputed to him, and which are either true, or indifferent to Religion.

(16) See his Exposition of the Epistle to the Romans, pag. 652, & seq.

(17) See his Works, pag. 4[illegible], 591, 592.

(18) Bernard. Epist. ad Innoc. Papam.

(19) See pag. 1112, 1117, of his Works.

[I] —— but it cannot be denied as to the greatest Part of them.] This Assertion was falsely imputed to him: " Deus pater plena est potentia, Filius quædam " potentia, Spiritus Sanctus nulla potentia. - - - - - " GOD the FATHER is Full Power, The SON Some " Power, The HOLY GHOST No Power." They, who are most partial to St Bernard, own, that he did not apprehend the Author's Opinion. " Abælardi " mentem assecuti non videntur S. Bernardus, Abbas " S. Theodorici, & Anonymus, qui ipsi tribuunt, &c. " (20). —— St Bernard, Abbot of S. Theodoric, and " an Anonymous Author, do not seem to have under- " stood Abelard's Meaning, when They impute to him, " &c. Non ideo in Sabellianam aut Arianam hæ- " resim impegit, non Trinitatem destruxit, non blas- " phemiam dixit in Spiritum Sanctum, non Deorum " novorum annuntiator fuit, ut maximi illi viri fer- " vore disputationis abrepti ipsi improperarunt (21). " —— He was not a Sabellian, or an Arian, he did " not destroy the Trinity, he did not blaspheme against " the HOLY GHOST, he was not a setter forth of " new Gods, as these Great Men, carried away by " the Heat of Disputation, have hastily asserted." The Thing speaks of itself, when the whole Passage of Abelard is examined. He was found a Heretic in these words: " Spiritus quamvis ejusdem substantiæ " sit cum patre & filio, unde etiam Trinitas ὁμοούσι- " os, id est, unius substantiæ, prædicatur, minimè " tamen ex substantia patris aut filii, si proprie loqui- " mur, esse dicendus est, quod oportet ipsum ex pa- " tre vel filio gigni, sed magis ex ipsis habet pro- " cedere. —— The Spirit, though he be of the same " Substance with the FATHER and the SON, whence " the Trinity is said to be ὁμοούσιος, or Consubstan- " tial, yet he must not be said to be of the Substance " of the FATHER and SON, properly speaking, be- " cause he must be begotten of the FATHER or SON, " or rather proceed from them." But, if the Laws of Equity had been ever so little followed, it might have been apprehended, that he acknowledges the Substance of That Doctrine, and that he has nothing Particular, but one of Those Abstractions of Logic, which will always be unavoidable by Those, who will argue about the Difference of the Three Persons. He was charged with teaching that the HOLY GHOST is the Soul of the World (22), and that there is no sin, either in Action, or in the Will, or in Lust, or in the Pleasure, which excites it, and that we should not desire to stifle these things. He maintains, in his Apology, that he had never said, nor wrote, such a Proposition (23). There is mention made of an Apology, which he published, wherein he partly denied the Propositions, that were objected against him, as to the words, and altogether as to the Sense. Ad Cluniacense Cœnobium se contulit. Apologeticum scribens prædictorum capitulorum, partim verba, ex toto autem sensum negans (24).

(20) Natalis Alexander, Sæc. xi, xii, Part. III, pag. 19.

(21) Id. ib. pag. 21.

(22) Nothing is worse grounded than This. See Father Alexander, ibid. pag. 27.

(23) Oper. Abæl. pag. 333.

(24) Otho Frising. lib. i, cap. 49.

But there is some reason to believe, that This Apology is lost (25). In That, which we have, he maintains, that he never wrote one of the Books, from which some of the Doctrines, which are imputed to him, were taken, and that That Work is ascribed to him with the same Malice, or with the same Ignorance, as all the Propositions of the Catalogue; " Sed sicut cætera contra me capitula, ita & hoc quo- " que (25) See the Notes of Andrew du Chene, on Abelard's Relation, pag. 1161, 1162.

Digitized by Google

The Miſchief is, that the Event does not always prove prejudicial to the Aggreſſor; for we ſee, to this Day, the unfortunate Abelard covered with Shame and Ignominy [K], whilſt his Adverſary is invoked as a Saint. He had been condemned at Soiſſons, in a Council, where the Pope's Legate preſided; which Legate underſtood nothing of the State of the Queſtion [L]. Gerſon believed, that the famous Berengarius, who denied the Real Preſence, was a Scholar of Peter Abelard (b); perhaps he took him for Him, who makes the Subject of This Article; however he is miſtaken, ſince Abelard was not ten Years of Age, when the Adverſary of the Real Preſence died.

(b) Gerſon, Oper. Tom. iv. Alphabeto 60, Lit. Q. fol. 212.

They, who would know more particularly, whether Berengarius had Reaſon to pretend, that Abelard was not an Heretic, who deſerved the Perſecutions, which were raiſed againſt him, will do well to conſult Mr du Pin, who paſſes an equitable Judgment on This Man's Doctrine; and particularly on the fourteen Propoſitions extracted out of his Works, and read in the Council of Sens. It cannot be denied, ſays he (i), but that his Opinions concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity were Orthodox, and that he believed the three Divine Perſons to be of the ſame Nature. I ſhall ſet down all that he has ſaid about this Propoſition of Abelard; GOD cannot do but what he does [M]. It is a more important and difficult Queſtion, than can be imagined. I ſhall

(i) Du Pin, Biblioth. of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, Tom. IX, pag. 122, Edit. of Holl.

" que per malitiam vel ignorantiam prolatum eſt." Berengarius, his Apologiſt, denied it with more reſtriction. " Indiculum vidimus, in quo non Petri " dogmata, ſed nefandi commenti capitula legimus. " —— Hæc & alia indiculus tuus continet, quorum " quædam, fateor, Petrus & dixit & ſcripſit, quædam " verò neque protulit neque ſcripſit. Quæ autem " dixerit, & quæ non dixerit, & quam Catholica " mente ea quæ dixerit ſenſerit, ſecundus arrepti " Operis tractatus Chriſtiana diſputatione ardentur & " impigrè declarabit (26). —— I have ſeen an Index, " in which I have read, not the Tenets of Peter, but " Articles impiouſly invented. —— Your Index con- " tains Theſe and Others, ſome of which, I confeſs, " Peter both ſpoke, and wrote, and ſome he never " either produced, or wrote. What he has ſaid, and " what he has not ſaid, and with how Catholic a Diſ- " poſition he conceived what he has ſaid, The ſecond " Treatiſe of the Work, complained of, will warmly " and zealouſly declare, in a Chriſtian Diſputation." Some accuſe Abelard of having taught, that there are as many Heavens, as Days in the Year; and they add, that he was anſwered, That he ſuppoſed ſo great a number of them, that he might ſecure one, which would fit him (27). But this is rather Jeſting than Diſputing. It was, therefore, a very great Piece of Injuſtice to give the Cauſe for the Accuſer, without knowing, whether the Accuſed acknowledged the Work, out of which Theſe Propoſitions were extracted, for his own; whether he owned, that they were faithfully extracted; whether he underſtood them in the Accuſer's Senſe, &c.? And the Pope, who, from the Extracts, condemned the Books to be burnt, and Abelard to a Cloyſter, without informing himſelf, whether Abelard taught thoſe things, was more unjuſt, than the Synod of Sens. The Accuſer's Letters, and the Meſſenger, whom he ſent to the Court of Rome, and who ſaid all that was neceſſary to make Abelard odious (28), compleated the Oppreſſion. Francis d' Amboiſe has deſcribed very lively the Part, which St Bernard acted in This whole Proceſs. It was That of a Trumpeter ſounding the Charge, and That of an Incendiary ſetting Fire to the Powder (29): ſince he ſent to the Pope all the filth he could collect, and which ill-affected Peaſons had gathered either out of his Adverſary's Writings, or Lectures, or out of the Papers, which were publiſhed under his Name. And, therefore, I do not wonder, that Horſtius inveighed againſt Francis d'Amboiſe (30); but I cannot tell whether he cenſured him for a thing, which deſerved it; I mean for having ſaid, that Peter the Venerable wrote to Innocent II, that Abelard, oppreſſed by the Vexations of ſome Men, who treated him as an Heretic, appealed to the Holy See. Ait Abælardum —— gravatum vexationibus quorundam qui illi nomen hæretici quod valdè abominabatur imponere volebant, Majeſtatem Apoſtolicam ſe appellaſſe. Whoever wrote thus to the Pope, plainly laid the Blame upon St Bernard; but This Buſineſs was not tranſacted in this Manner. Peter the Venerable ſaid only, that Abelard gave out, he was perſecuted. Quæſivimus quo tenderet, gravatum ſe vexationibus, &c. Majeſtatem Apoſtolicam ſe appellaſſe reſpondit.

(26) Berengar. in Oper. Abæl. p. 310.

(27) Garaſſe, in his Summary of Divinity, pag. 304, and in his Curious Doctrine, pag. 266.

(28) Quod melius Nicolaus iſte meus, imo & veſter, viva referet voce. Bernard. Epiſt. ad Innoc. II. in Operib. Abal. pag. 275.

(29) Hoc claſſico multi ad arma ſpiritualia excitati ſunt --- Admovet faces incendii ut dominationem ab eo (Pontifice) extorqueat. Ambaſſ. Franc. Apol.

(30) Notis in Bernard. fol. 37.

[K] We ſee, to this Day, the unfortunate Abelard covered with ſhame and ignominy.] Thus he is charged to the end of the World with all the Errors, which were imputed to him in the Council of Sens, and with ſeveral others. Peter of Pergamo charges him with denying, that GOD is the Author of all Good, that he is a ſimple Being, that he alone is Eternal, and that every thing, which exiſts, is either Creator, or Creature (31). Bernard of Luxenburg aſcribes the ſame Things to him, upon the Credit of the other. Prateolus has followed Bernard (32), and has been copied by the Jeſuit Gaultier (33). Belleforêt, and du Haillan, have done like Prateolus. The Writers of the Catalogues of Heretics, who like Sheep follow one another, Sanderus, Alphonſus de Caſtro, &c. have not failed to adopt theſe Accuſations. But, on the other hand, They, who inſerted him in the Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth (34), knew not what they did: He had indeed ſome particular Opinions about the Euchariſtical Accidents; but it was rather in ſuppoſing the Real Preſence, than in denying it.

(31) Petr. Pergam. apud Bern. Lutzenburg. Catal. Hæret.

(32) Prateol. Elench. Hæret.

(33) Gault. Tabul. Chronol.

(34) See the Life of Abelard, by Thomaſius, printed in the firſt Part of the Hiſtoria Sapientiæ & Stultitiæ, at Hall, in Germany, in 1693.

[L] The Legate, who condemned him, underſtood nothing of the State of the Queſtion.] After the Condemnation was pronounced, one of the Accuſers muttered, that he had read in Abelard's Book, that GOD the Father is the Only Almighty (35). The Legate, having a very good Ear, heard it, and anſwered, that they ought not ſo much as to believe, that a Child was capable of falling into ſo great an Error, ſince, according to the common and public Faith, there are three Almighties. A Doctor, laughing at the Legate, could not forbear quoting theſe words of St Athanaſius; & tamen non tres omnipotentes, ſed unus omnipotens. —— And yet there are not Three Almighties, but One Almighty. His Biſhop cenſured him for it; but he was boldly anſwered with a Paſſage of Daniel, concerning ignorant Judges, who deſerve more to be condemned than Thoſe, whom they judge. " Sic fatui filii " Iſraël, non judicantes neque quod verum eſt cog- " noſcentes condemnaſtis filium Iſraël. Revertimini " ad judicium, & de ipſo judice judicate." He added of his own; " qui talem judicem quaſi ad inſtru- " ctionem fidei & correctionem erroris inſtituiſtis, " qui cum judicare deberet, ore ſe proprio condem- " navit. —— Who have ſet up ſuch a Judge, as it " were for Inſtruction in the Faith, and Correction " of Error, who, when he ought to have judged, " condemned himſelf out of his own Mouth."

(35) Oper. Abæl. p. 24.

[M] Mr Du Pin's Judgment on This Propoſition of Abelard, GOD cannot do but what he does.] Neither does he deny, that Power, Wiſdom, and Love, " are Attributes common to the three Divine Per- " ſons; nay he declares the contrary in expreſs words: " but he attributes Power to the FATHER, Wiſdom " to the SON, and Love to the HOLY GHOST, by " by way of Appropriation; in which he does not " ſeem to recede from the Doctrine of the Fathers " and Divines. But he does not think, and ſpeak, " as others do, in the Third Propoſition, wherein he " maintains, that GOD cannot do but what he does, " and cannot do all that he does not; not but that he " acknowledges, that the Power of GOD in itſelf " can extend to other Objects; but he pretends, that, " being conſidered as joined to the Wiſdom and Will " of GOD, he cannot will, or do any thing, but " what he wills, and actually does (36)." You will ſee this more at large in the Subſtance, which Mr du Pin

(36) Du Pin, Biblioth. of Eccleſiaſtical Authors. Tom. IX, pag. 122, Edit. Holl.

Digitized by Google

ſhall add to this, that the Proteſtants are more inclined to condemn Abelard [N], than many Catholics are, and I ſhall quote a Paſſage of Mr Joli, a Canon of Notre Dame at Paris.

Pin has given of one of Abelard's Works (37). "In "the third Book, he treats particularly of the Power "of GOD; and he maintains, that GOD can do "but what he does, and cannot do all that he does "not, becauſe GOD can do but what he wills: now "he cannot have the Will to do any thing but what "he does, becauſe he does neceſſarily will all that "is fit to be done; from whence it follows, that, "whatever he does not, is not fit to be done; that "he cannot have the Will to do it; and conſequently "that he cannot do it. He himſelf confeſſes, that "this Opinion is peculiar to him; that ſcarce any "body elſe approves of it; that it ſeems contrary to "the Doctrine of the Saints, and to Reaſon, and "to derogate from the greatneſs of GOD. Here- "upon he raiſes a difficult Objection againſt himſelf: "A Reprobate, ſays he, may be ſaved; but he cannot "be ſaved except GOD ſaves him: therefore GOD "can ſave him, and conſequently do ſomething, which "he does not. He anſwers, that it may be ſaid indeed, "that this Man may be ſaved, as to the Poſſibility "of human Nature, which is capable of Salvation; "but that it cannot be ſaid, that GOD can ſave him, "with relation to GOD himſelf, becauſe it is im- "poſſible, that GOD ſhould do what he ought not "to do: He explains this by divers Examples: A "Man that ſpeaks may hold his Tongue; but a "Man that does actually ſpeak cannot be ſilent: the "Voice may be heard, but a deaf Man cannot hear "it: a Field may be manured, though a Man cannot "manure it, &c (38)."

(37) Book III, of the Introduction to Divinity.

(38) Du Pin, ibid. Tom. IX, pag. 119, 120.

I may perhaps examine this Doctrine in one of the Remarks on the Article WICLIFFE.

[N] The Proteſtants are more inclined to condemn Abelard than many Catholics.] "Hornbeck, at the be- "ginning of his Apparatus ad controverſias & diſpu- "tationes Socinianas, obſerves Abelard's Hereſies. "—— Perizonius in his Specimen Apologeticum anti- "Gualterianum (39) accuſationibus Jacobi Gualterii "Jeſuitæ oppoſitum, in his fifth Defence, de fide im- "plicita, gives likewiſe an ample Deſcription of Abe- "lard, and of his Opinions, and ſhews at large, "Pontificios, & nominatim Jeſuitas, in multis cum "Abailardo convenire: —— that the Roman Catho- "lics, and particularly the Jeſuits, agree in many "things with Abelard. He draws a Parallel between "them, and ſhews, in another Place of That fifth "Defence, Quàm pulchrè Socinianis præluxerit, mi- "nimè obſcurum eſt: - - - - - that it is well known how "he prepared the way to Socinianiſm. Beckmannus, "in his Theological Exercitations, Exercit. 2 ſays, "that, Socinus hunc errorem, Chriſtum pro peccatis "noſtris non eſſe mortuum, è lacunis veterum hau- "ſit; quippe, anno Chriſti 1140, in Gallis Petrus "Abailardus (quem Bernardus & Otho Friſingenſis "Abailardum, Platina Baillardum, vocant) idem do- "cuit (40). - - - - - - - Socinus borrowed This Error "(that Chriſt did not die for our Sins) from the An- "cients; ſince, in the Year 1140, Peter Abelard "(whom Bernard and Otho of Friſingen call Abailard, "and Platina Baillard*) taught the ſame in* France. "Joly, a Canon of Notre Dame at Paris - - - - ſays, "in his Treatiſe of the Reſtitutions of Great Men, "That Abelard's Enemies, being jealous of his Re- "putation, did ſo much impoſe upon St Bernard, "who proceeded honeſtly in the matter, that we "find, that the Book of the Sentences was condem- "ned to be burnt under the Name of Abelard, as "being the Author of it; though it was of Peter "Lombard, Biſhop of Paris: a Work, nevertheleſs, "adds he, which is known to be canonized in the "Sorbonne; and on which all the Scholaſtic Divinity "is founded. He ſays again, That the ſame Abe- "lard was very much abuſed and perſecuted by the "Monks of St Denis in France, and by St Gildas "(41) of Ruys, near Vannes, in Bretagne; becauſe "he reproved their Vices (42)."

(40) Ancillon, Mélange Critique de literature, Tom. I, pag. 4.

(41) He ſhould have ſaid, and by thoſe of St Gildas.

(42) Ancillon, ubi ſupra.

I ſhall obſerve two things, upon This Paſſage of Mr Ancillon: the one is, that, in effect, Abelard's Opinions, about the Doctrine of Grace, are much the ſame with Thoſe, which the Jeſuits maintain. But Mr du Pin obſerves, that, if This Author's Doctrine "be not conformable to St Auguſtin's Doctrine "- - - - - neither is it Pelagian, nor Semipelagian, "ſince he acknowledges the Neceſſity of Grace for "the beginning of good Actions, and maintains on- "ly, that GOD has given an equal Grace to all "Men, whereof every one may make a good uſe, "or reject it (43)." The ſecond thing I have to obſerve, is, that I ſhall enquire, in another place, whether the Book of the Sentences, condemned to be burnt under the Name of Abelard, be That of Peter Lombard.

(43) Du Pin, ubi ſupra, pag. 122.

(39) This is an Anti, omitted by Mr Baillet.

BERENICE, the Name of ſeveral Women and Cities. We ſhall ſpeak of ſome of Theſe Women; and, as to the Cities, we ſhall only obſerve, that Ortelius reckons nine of them, and that the two chief were in Africa, one in Pentapolis, and the other in the Red-Sea. The latter received This Name in honour of Berenice, the Mother of Ptolomy Philadelphus (a), and the other in honcur of Berenice, the Wife of Ptolomy, the Third of That Name (b). Berenice is a Greek Name [A].

(a) Plin. lib. vi, c. 29.

(b) Solinus, cap. 27.

[A] Berenice is a Greek Name.] It was formed from That of Φερενίκη, that is to ſay, Victory-Bearer, by the Macedonians, who changed Ph. into B. See Plutarch (1), and Steph. Byzantinus (2). Hence it is, that ſome Authors call Her Pherenice, whom others call Berenice. There are ſome, who, inſtead of Berenice, ſay, in Latin, Beronice.

(1) Plutarch. in Quæſt. Græcis 292, E.

(2) Stephan. Byzantin. voce Βέρονικα.

BERENICE, Daughter, Siſter, and Mother, of ſome Perſons, who carried the Prize at the Olympian Games (a), obtained, by reaſon of ſuch Singularity, leave to aſſiſt at Thoſe Games, which had been forbidden other Women, by a public Decree [A]. Some ſay ſhe obtained This Privilege, before her Son was Victor [B]. It

(a) Un Berenice, quæ filia ſoror, mater Olympionicarum. Plinius lib. 7. cap. xlii. ex Editione Harduini, quæ juxta MSS. omnes habet Berenice, cum libri ed ti habeant Pherenice.

[A] She obtained the Privilege of aſſiſting at the Olympic Games; which had been forbidden Women by a public Decree.] This Prohibition ſuppoſes, that They did not truſt to the Suggeſtions of Decency and natural Modeſty. The Champions were ſtark naked; which alone ought to have baniſhed the fair Sex from Theſe Shews: Nevertheleſs, They did not rely upon This: Laws were made, and publiſhed, to forbid Women the Sight of Theſe Exerciſes. Thus far there was no harm in it: They were ſenſible of the great Power of Curioſity: But who would not condemn the extream and cruel Rigour of Theſe new Legiſlators? They ordered, that, if any Woman was ſurprized in Theſe Aſſemblies, or if ſhe paſſed the River during That Time, ſhe ſhould be thrown headlong from the Top of a Hill (1). It is no wonder, that no Woman ſuffered this terrible Puniſhment (2). The Sight of ſome naked Men could not be a Charm, or Allurement, ſtrong enough to make them blind to ſo great Danger; and, if there was found a Woman, who did not obſerve this Prohibition, it was becauſe ſhe thought ſhe ran no hazard; for ſhe was diſguiſed in Man's Apparel, and did not think, that a ſingle Leap would betray her. She was probably ſo overjoyed to ſee her Son come off Conqueror, that ſhe threw herſelf a little too merrily over the Barrier: Nay, how do we know, but that her Cloaths catched in

(1) See Pauſanias, Book v, pag. 133.

(2) Id. ibid.

Digitized by Google

It was enough, that they knew her Father, and her Brothers, had obtained This Advantage, and that they saw her, accompanied by her victorious Brothers, present her Son, ready to dispute these kind of Crowns. Pausanias's Narrative differs from this, and is, perhaps, better. He says, that the Inhabitants of Elis made a Law, which condemned all Women, who, by stealth, should be present at the Olimpic Games, or pass over the Alpheus (b), on any Occasion whatever, during the Time, which was forbid them, to be cast headlong from a Rock (c). There was but One, who disobeyed this Order; her Name was Callipatira, according to some, Pherenice according to others [C]. After the Death of her Husband, she pretended to be One of Those, who instructed young Men in the Exercise of the Olympic Games, and, under This Disguise, she presented herself in the Field of Battle with her Son, whom she brought thither as an Athlet, whom she had instructed, and who prepared himself for the Combat. Seeing her Son obtain the Victory, she leaped over a Barrier, which served as an Inclosure to the Masters of the Combatants, and discovered her Sex by This Action. She would have been proceeded against according to the Laws, were it not that the Judges thought they ought to acquit her, because they found, that her Father, and her Brothers, and now her Son, had obtained the Prizes of Those Games: So much Glory, in One Family, procured This Lady her Pardon. But They made a Law, that, for the future, the Masters of the Athlets themselves should come naked to Those Shews. It must not be forgotten, that This Berenice was the Daughter of That Diagoras the Rhodian, who was so famous in the Public Games of Greece (d). I do not know whether any Modern Commentator observes This. It is easy to find out in what Time This Berenice lived [D].

(b) It is the Name of a River, near which the Olympian Games were celebrated.

(c) Pausan. lib. v, pag. 153.

(d) See Remark [C].

in something, by an unfortunate Accident? However it was, she afforded, without thinking of it, a new Spectacle, which disturbed the Solemnity, and occasioned a Tryal, from which she came off victoriously. I say, without thinking of it; for we must not believe, what a learned Critic says, that she put off her Cloaths, to discover her Sex, when she saw her Son's Victory. "Scribit autem (Pausanias) ne- "mini fuisse suspectam, donec viso filio victore ve- "stem, abjiceret mulieremque se ostenderet (3). - - - "But Pausanias writes, that she passed unsuspected, "'till, seeing her Son come off Victor, she threw "aside her Cloaths, and discovered, that she was a "Woman." He is in the wrong to ascribe This to Pausanias, who intended no more, than that The Lady, getting over the Barrier, discovered a Nakedness, which ought to have been concealed. These are his Greek Words; Τὸ ἔρυμα ἐν ᾧ τὰς γυμνὰς ἔχουσιν ἀπειλημμένας τοῦτο ὑπερπηδῶσα ἡ καλλιπάτειρα ἐγυμνώθη. Septimentum id, quo magistros seciuſos habent, transiliens nudata est (4). Romulus Amasæus has mis-translated it, transiluit veste posita, as Sylburgius has observed.

(3) Scheferius in Ælian, lib. x. cap. 1.

(4) Pausan. lib. 5, pag. 153.

[B] Some say, that she obtained This Privilege, before her Son was Victor.] Valerius Maximus affirms it; these are his Words: "Pherenices quoque non "vulgaris honos, cui soli omnium fœminarum gym- "nico spectaculo interesse permissum est, cum ad "Olympia filium Euclea certamen ingressurum ad- "duxisset Olympionico patre genita, fratribus eam- "dem palmam affecutis latera ejus cingentibus (5). "- - - - Uncommon was the Honour paid to Pherenice, "who alone, of all other Women, had the Privilege "of being present at the Athletic Games: This Lady, "born of a Father, who had been crowned a Victor, "and attended by her Brothers, who had all obtained "the same Honours, presented her Son Eucles to con- "tend for the Prize at the Olympic Games." Ælian says the same thing, and that the Cause was pleaded, and that Pherenice gained it (6). There is no room to doubt, but that Euclea, in Valerius Maximus, is the Name of the young Champion, who was brought into the Lists by Berenice. Pausanias does not call him so; but Pisidorus, or Pisirodus (7). It ought not to be conjectured, that Euclea, in the Greek Authors, who supplied Valerius Maximus with This Event, was the Epithet of the Games, and not the Name of the Champion, and that the Latin Writer, for want of Attention, took an Epithet for a Proper Name: I say This Conjecture ought not to be mentioned, since we find an Athlet called Eucles, who was, at least, Berenice's Nephew (8). It must be said, then, that some Greek Authors gave her Son the Name of Eucles, and that Valerius Maximus followed them. See the following Remark.

(5) Val. Maxim. lib. viii, sub. fin.

(6) Ælian. lib. x, cap. 1.

(7) Pausan. ubi supra; he says, Πεισίροδος, and lib. 6, pag. 184. Πεισίδωρος: the one ought to be corrected, by the other; for it is plain, that one and the same Person is meant in both the Passages. It is best to read Pisidorus in both.

(8) Apud Pausan. lib. vi, p. 183, 184.

[C] Her Name was Callipatira according to some, Pherenice according to others.] This Pausanias observes, in his fifth Book (9): but, in the sixth (10), he seems plainly to prove, that Callipatira, and Pherenice, were two Sisters, Daughters of the famous Athlet Diagoras. He says, that Diagoras had the good Fortune to obtain some Victories, and to have three Sons, who obtained some, and some Daughters, whose Sons likewise carried the Prizes. He says DAUGHTERS, in the Plural Number; from whence it must be concluded, that Diagoras's two Grand-children, of whom he speaks, were not Brothers, but only first Cousins, Sons of two Sisters. He calls one of These two Grand-children, Eucles, and the other Pisidorus. He says, that Eucles was the Son of Callianax, and of Callipatira, Daughter of Diagoras. He does not name the Mother of Pisidorus, but says only, that his Mother, disguised like a Master of the young Athlets, brought him into the Lists of the Combatants. I say again, that, since he speaks of Diagoras's Daughters in the Plural Number, and since he says, that Diagoras's Grand-sons, by the Daughters side, had obtained some Victories, he must have pretended, that the Mother of Eucles, and the Mother of Pisidorus, were Sisters: Now the Name of Eucles's Mother was Callipatira; we may, therefore, reasonably think, that the Name of Pisidorus's Mother was not Callipatira, but Pherenice; for it is the Name, which many give her, in the fifth Book of Pausanias: and, if some called Her Callipatira, who, under the Disguise of a Master of the Athlets, brought her Son Pisidorus to the Combat of the Olympian Games, it must be attributed to the same Causes, which make so many careless Writers confound the Actions of one Person with Those of another.

(9) P. 153.

(10) P. 184.

[D] In what Time This Berenice lived.] Pausanias informs us, that she was the Daughter of Diagoras, and Sister of Dorieus (11). Now Dorieus fought for the Lacedæmonians, against the Athenians, at the time that Conon was General of the latter (12); and, therefore he flourished about the XCVth Olympiad. Consult the Remark [D] of the Article DIAGORAS the Rhodian, in which I enquire when he lived.

(11) Pausan. lib. 6. pag. 184.

(12) Idem. pag. 185.

BERENICE, a courageous and revengeful Woman, having lost her Son, by the Contrivance of Laodice, mounted, well armed, on a Chariot, and pursued the Murtherer so briskly, that she killed him. His Name was Cæneus, and had only executed a Royal Order. She missed him, in throwing her Javelin at him, but killed him with a Stone; afterwards she drove her Chariot over him, and retired, through the Enemy's Troops, to the Houſe, where ſhe believed her Son's Body was hid. This we find in Valerius Maximus (a). There is ſome Probability, that This Author has confounded what relates to two different Perſons. The Commentators are puzzled about it [A]. See the Remark.

Digitized by Google

(a) Valer. Maxim. lib. ix. cap. 10, ſub. fin.

[A] Valerius Maximus has confounded what relates to two different Perſons. The Commentators are puzzled about it.] Oliverius, who wrote long Notes on Valerius Maximus, full of trivial Erudition, pretends, that the Berenice in queſtion was alſo called Laodice, and that ſhe was Siſter of Mithridates, who waged ſuch a long War with the Romans. Whereupon, he relates, that This Lady was firſt married to Ariarathes, King of Cappadocia; that her ſecond Husband was Nicomedes, King of Bithynia; and that the two Sons, which ſhe had by Ariarathes, having been killed by Mithridates, the one immediately, and the other mediately, ſhe armed herſelf, and purſued Cæneus, who had executed the Order of Mithridates, and puniſhed him, as Valerius Maximus relates. I obſerve, againſt This, I. That Valerius Maximus was ſo far from intending to ſpeak of a Woman, whoſe Name was Berenice, or Laodice, that he remarks, that Laodice cauſed the Son of Berenice to be killed. II. The firſt Part indeed of our Commentator's Narrative is to be found in Juſtin (1); but we do not find there, that the Siſter of Mithridates, who was the Wife of Ariarathes, and of Nicomedes, had any other Name, than That of Laodice. III. We do not find there, that the ſecond Son of Ariarathes and Laodice was killed by Order of Mithridates; we find, on the contrary, that he died of Sickneſs. Nec multo poſt adoleſcens ex ægritudine collecta infirmitate decedit (2). IV. The latter Part of This Narrative is manifeſtly contradicted by Juſtin: See in what manner he relates, that Laodice endeavoured to revenge herſelf of her Brother, after having loſt her two Sons. Nicomedes, her ſecond Husband, ſuborned a very handſome Youth, to make it believed, that there remained yet a third Son of Ariarathes, and ſent Laodice to Rome with Orders to teſtify, that Ariarathes had left three Sons, whereof the laſt was yet living, and demanded his Father's Kingdom of the Romans. It is too bold to advance ſeveral Facts, with their Circumſtances, without being able to cite Authorities for them. Where did Oliverius read, that the Siſter of Mithridates mounted on a Chariot, and purſued Cæneus, the Murtherer of her ſecond Son, &c? I ſhall obſerve, by the way, that Freinſhemius had no reaſon to accuſe Juſtin of contradicting himſelf, or of confounding Hiſtory prodigiouſly (3). Juſtin ſpoke of two Laodices, married to two Ariarathes's. The firſt killed five of her Children, after the Death of her Husband, and would have killed the ſixth, the only one that remained, if her Relations had not prevented it (4). The People got rid of This furious Woman. The ſecond Laodice married That Son of Ariarathes, who was the only remaining one. This will plainly appear in another Place (5). I wiſh Juſtin was guilty of no other Confuſions, and Contradictions.

FAULTS of Oliverius, the Commentator on Valerius Maximus.

(1) Juſtin. lib. xxviii, cap. i, ii.

(2) Ibid. lib. xxviii, c. ii.

(3) See Grevius's Juſtin. pag. 548.

(4) Juſtin. lib. xxxvii, cap. i.

(5) In the Artic. CAPPADOCIA, Remark [I], n. III.

Father Cantel obſerves, that Oliverius was in the wrong to aſcribe the Action, which Valerius Maximus relates, to Mithridates's Siſter. He believes, that Valerius Maximus meant Berenice, and Laodice, Wives of Antiochus Theus, and both Daughters of Ptolomy Philadelphus. It is not univerſally agreed, that they were Siſters: Polyænus, quoted by one of Father Cantel's Fraternity (6), ſays, that Laodice, the Wife of Antiochus Theus, was her Husband's Siſter, and Daughter of Antiochus Soter. As for Berenice, the other Wife of Antiochus Theus, it is generally agreed, that ſhe was the Daughter of Ptolomy Philadelphus. Nevertheleſs, Father Cantel is not to be condemned; he has Appian's Authority for what he ſays (7). He has ſome reaſon to believe, that Valerius Maximus meant the Wives of Antiochus Theus; but he ſhould have cenſured him for having made an Addition to the ſad Fate of Berenice. The Valour, which That Author aſcribes to his Berenice, and her good Succeſs, mentioned by him, againſt her Son's Murtherer, do not agree with the Wife of Antiochus; for ſhe was ſo far from being able to revenge her Son's Death, that ſhe was cruelly murdered, with him, in the Place, whither ſhe had fled. But it is true, that it was one Laodice, who was the cauſe of This Misfortune (8). But, ſince Father Cantel believed, that the Author, whom he commented, had the Hiſtory of the Wives of Antiochus Theus in view, he ſhould not have marked the Six hundred ſixty fourth Year of Rome in the Margin: This Chronology differs too much from That, which belongs to Theſe two Princeſſes (9).

EXAMINATION of the Opinion of Father Cantel, One of the Commentators in Usum Delphini.

(6) By Father Hardouin, on Pliny, lib. v, cap. 12, pag. 25.

(7) Appian. in Syriacis circa finem.

(8) See Juſtin, lib. xxvii, cap. i.

(9) Antiochus Theus began to reign about the Year of Rome 402. See Calviſius, ad Ann. Mundi 3689.

BERENICE, Daughter of Ptolomy Auletes, King of Egypt, ſucceeded her Father before his Death. I do not find, that ſhe excited the Egyptians to expel him (a); and there is ſome probability, that they were inclined, of themſelves, to get rid of a troubleſome Yoke, without being animated to it by Her: But it is certain, that, as ſoon as the Father was driven out, the Daughter was crowned [A]. This baniſhed Prince implored the Aſſiſtance of the Romans, and obtained, at laſt, that Gabinius, Governor of Syria, ſhould endeavour to reſtore him. Pompey performed it; for the People of Rome, relying on ſome Verſes of the Sybil, would not concern themſelves with This Re-eſtabliſhment. On the other ſide, Berenice did her utmoſt Endeavours to maintain herſelf on the Throne; and, though ſhe feared the Romans, ſhe made no Propoſals of Accommodation to her Father, nor ſhewed him any Civility (b). And, believing that a Huſband would be of great Uſe to her, ſhe invited a Prince, whoſe Name was Seleucus, deſcended from the Kings of Syria, and ſhared with him her Bed, and her Scepter. She was ſoon weary of him, not finding him a Man of any Merit; and cauſed him to be killed (c). Afterwards ſhe caſt her Eyes on Archelaus, the Son of him, who had forſaken the Party of Mithridates, to join (a) See Remark [C].

(b) Ἐπιτηκὲς μὲν ἦδειν πρὸς αὐτὸν καίτοι φοβουμένη τοὺς Ῥωμαίους ἔπραξε. Ea quamquam Romanos metuebat nihil tamen manſueti Ptolemæo exhibuit. Dio. lib. 39, pag. 130.

(c) See Remark [C].

[A] As ſoon as the Father was driven out, the Daughter was crowned] Strabo obſerves, that That Prince had three Daughters, and that the eldeſt, who was legitimate, was placed on the Throne (1). This Narrative is not exact, if it be ſuppoſed, that Porphyry gave a true Account of This Revolution; for he affirms, That Cleopatra, or Tryphene, and Berenice, Daughters of Ptolomy, reigned together, the firſt Year of their Father's Flight, and that, Tryphene being dead, her Siſter Berenice reigned two Years alone (2). This ſhews, that Berenice was not the eldeſt, and confirms my Opinion, that ſhe did not plot to dethrone the King: The Suſpicion rather falls on her Siſter Tryphene. I do not pretend to deny, that it is poſſible Ambition might prompt them to favour the Malecontents, and open a way to the Throne for themſelves, by the Depoſition of their Father; I pretend only, that the ancient Books do not contain this Fact. Mr Baudelot maintains the contrary (3); but I am certain, that, if what he alledges out of Dio Caſſius, Porphyry, and Photius, be examined, his Opinion will not be found to be confirmed thereby. His ſtrongeſt Allegation is, that Ptolomy, ſtifling all fatherly Affection, cauſed his Daughter Berenice to be put to Death for what ſhe had done. It is plain, that, without making her an Accomplice in the Revolt of the Egyptians, one may think ſhe was guilty enough in her Father's Judgment, by conſidering only, that ſhe accepted the Crown, and uſed all manner of means to maintain her Uſurpation.

(1) Strabo, lib. xvii. pag. 547.

(2) Porphyr. apud Euſebium, in Chron. pag. 60. Edit. Scaligeri 1658.

(3) Baudelot de Dairval's Hiſtory of Ptolomy Auletes, pag. 131, 167, & ſeq.

Digitized by Google

join with Sylla. She offered herſelf to him in Marriage [B], and promiſed him, that he ſhould ſhare in her Royalty. He was, then, in Gabinius's Army; and he might eaſily have been hindered from going to Berenice, if Gabinius had not rather, for his particular Intereſt, given him the Liberty to marry That Princeſs [C]. Archelaus married her, and put himſelf at the Head of Her Army to repel the Romans, who prêtended to reſtore King Ptolomy. He was ſlain in Battle; Ptolomy re-entered Alexandria, and cauſed his rebellious Daughter to be put to death without Mercy (d). Such was the Fate of Berenice. A modern Author has very well unfolded the Intrigues (d) Ex Dione, lib. xxxix, pag. 130, 131.

[B] She offered herſelf to Archelaus in Marriage.] I have reaſon to ſay This; but Father Noris had no reaſon to ſay it. "Archelaus à Berenice ſpe nup-"tiarum Alexandriam evocatus, eadem uxore ducta, "copias contra Gabinium ducens, victus prælio oc-"cubuit, menſe regni ſexto, ex Strabone, lib. 12. "pag. 385 (4). ----- Archelaus, being invited to "Alexandria by Berenice, upon an Offer of Marriage, "after having wedded her, lead an Army againſt "Gabinius, and fell in Battle, in the ſixth Month "of his Reign, according to Strabo, lib. 12. pag. 385." Had I had no other Author to quote but Strabo, I would not have ſaid, as Father Noris did, that Berenice gained him, by a Promiſe of Marriage. I do not find in Strabo, that That Princeſs had any Thought of Archelaus; I find only that the Egyptians, having expelled their King Ptolomy, ſought for a Prince of the Royal Blood, to marry him to Berenice, and that Archelaus, knowing this, offered himſelf to them, under the ſuppoſed Quality of the Son of Mithridates Eupator, and was accepted, and reigned ſix Months. Ταύτην ζητουμένην ἀνδρὸς βασιλικοῦ γένους ἐνεχείρισεν ἑαυτὸν τοῖς συμπράττουσι, προποιησαμένῳ Μιθριδάτου τοῦ Εὐπάτορος υἱὸς εἶναι, καὶ παραδεχθείς, ἐβασίλευσεν ἐξ μῆνας (5). Ei cum quæreretur maritus regio ſanguine natus, dedit ſe Archelaus auxiliariis ſuis, ſimulavitque ſe filium eſſe Mithridatis Eupatoris, itaque receptus ſex menſes regno potitus eſt. This affords us an Example of the great Care, with which a Writer ought to relate what he finds in Authors. The leaſt Liberty, he takes, is ſufficient ſometimes to injure a Perſon's Honour. It is not decent, or becoming the Dignity of a Queen, to offer herſelf in Marriage, and to entice a young Man by the Hopes of marrying her. It belongs to her Subjects to procure a ſuitable Match for her; which is the Account Strabo gives in relation to Berenice. The Caſe ſhould not therefore have been repreſented as Father Noris has done it, or elſe he ſhould have quoted other Authors, than Strabo. If Dio had been quoted, Berenice might have been decried as a Princeſs, who, after having uſurped the Throne of Him, to whom ſhe owed her Life, went in queſt of an Husband, and offered herſelf, and her Crown, as a Price of the Protection ſhe ſtood in need of. See the following Remark.

(4) Noris's Cenotaph. Piſan, pag. 225.

(5) Strabo, lib. xii, pag. 384. See alſo lib. xvii, pag. 548.

[C] Gabinius, who could have hindered him from going to Berenice, choſe to let him eſpouſe This Princeſs.] Gabinius preſently diſcovered Archelaus's Deſign, and ſecured him; which might have put an end to The Buſineſs: But, fearing he ſhould not find Difficulty enough in the reſtoring Ptolomy to have room to demand all the Sums, which That Prince had promiſed, he ordered the matter ſo, that his Re-eſtabliſhment met with ſome Obſtacles. In this View, he found no better Expedient, than to ſuffer Archelaus to put himſelf at the Head of the Rebels. Archelaus paſſed for a Man of Courage, and had a great Reputation: To drive him from Alexandria ſeemed a great Exploit to Gabinius, for which he might honourably demand great Rewards from Ptolomy. Beſides, Gabinius did not releaſe his Priſoner, 'till he had extorted a great Sum from him (6): So that he took Money on all Hands, that is of both Parties. A notable Inſtance of the Tricks that are plaid to Sovereigns. Sometimes one Campaign would end a War, if Generals, for their private Advantage, did not dexterouſly ſupply the Enemy with an After-game. Take notice, they were obliged to ſpread a Report, that Archelaus had made his Eſcape (7). Gabinius, being well paid for the leave he had given him to eſcape, pretended, without doubt, to be angry with Thoſe, who kept him. A new Scene of The Comedy! But I obſerve, that Strabo knew nothing of all this Management of Gabinius. He ſays, that Archelaus was brought to Berenice, without Gabinius's Privacy. Λαβὼν δὲ τοῦτον κομίζεταί δία τινὸς (or τίνων) εἰς τὴν βασίλισσαν, καὶ ἀναδείκνυται βασιλεύς. Eo (Gabinio) neſciente, per amicos quoſdam ad Reginam deductus, rex declaratus fuit (8). Thus he frees that Roman General from a great Reproach. Strabo clears Berenice in great Meaſure, and induces us to believe, that ſhe was not guilty of her Father's Expulſion. He ſays plainly, that That Prince was expelled by the Inhabitants of Alexandria, who afterwards ſet the Eldeſt of his three Daughters on the Throne, and cauſed one Cybioſactes to come from Syria, who pretended to be deſcended from the Kings of Syria, and gave him the Queen in Marriage. She, being diſpleaſed with the Baſeneſs ſhe obſerved in him, cauſed him to be ſtrangled a few Days after. It is ſaid, that he cauſed Alexander's Body to be put into a Glaſs Coffin, to appropriate to himſelf That of maſſy Gold, out of which he took it. I have read this Fact in a Modern Writer, who quotes Strabo and Suetonius, two Authors, who ſay not a word of it (9). The latter ſays in general, that That Prince was ſordidly avaricious. "Alexandrini Cybioſactem eum "(Veſpaſianum) vocare perſeverarunt, cognomine "unius è regibus ſuis turpiſſimarum ſordidum (10). "----- The Inhabitants of Alexandria continued to "nick-name Veſpaſian Cybioſactes, from one of their "Kings, who was moſt ſordidly covetous." Τέτου μὲν ἓν ὀλίγων ἡμερῶν ἀπεσφαγαλλισεν ἡ Βασίλισσα, ὑ φέρουσα τὸ ϛάναυσον αὐτῇ καὶ τὸ ἀνελευθερον: They are Strabo's Words: Hunc intra paucos dies regina ſtrangulavit, cum ejus ſordes illiberalitatemque pati non poſſet (11).

(8) Strabo, lib. xvii, pag. 548.

(9) The Abbot de St Real, in his Ceſarion, Entret II, pag. 78.

(10) Suetonius in Veſpaſ. cap. xix.

(11) Strabo, lib. xvii, pag. 548.

You will tell me, that, in the foregoing Page, That Writer mentions one Ptolomy, who being come from Syria, had carried off The golden Urn, but drew no profit from This Action, being ſoon overthrown: But how do you know, that This is to be underſtood of Berenice's Husband? Do you not ſee, that Strabo gives only the Title of Cybioſactes to the latter, and that he gives the Name of Ptolomy, and the Sirname of Coccus, and Pariſactus, to the other? Ἐσύλησε δ' αὐτὴν ὁ Κόκκης καὶ Παρείσακτος ἐπικληθεὶς Πτολεμαῖος: aureum Ptolemæus cognomento Coccus & ſubditicius rapuit (12). Do you not know, that Dion calls Him, that was married to Berenice, Seleucus (13)? Can it be believed, that, if Strabo had pretended to ſpeak of the ſame Man, in the Five hundred forty ſixth, and Five hundred forty ſeventh Pages, he would have expreſſed himſelf as he does? There is no Word, or Phraſe, in his Narrative, which inſinuates, that the Syrian, who carried away the golden Tomb, is the ſame Cybioſactes, whom Berenice put to Death. Nevertheleſs, read the learned Reflexions of Mr Baudelot, who believes, as well as the Abbot de St Real, that Cybioſactes, and Ptolomy Coccus, are one and the ſame Perſon (14).

(12) Ib. ibe pag. 546.

(13) Dio, lib. xxxix, pag. 130.

(14) Baudelot de Dairval's Hiſt. of Ptolomy Auletes, pag. 170.

[D] Archelaus was ſlain in Battle.] This does not agree with the ſeventeenth Book of Strabo, where we read, that Ptolomy, being re-eſtabliſhed in his Kingdom, cauſed his Daughter, and his Son-in-law Archelaus, to be put to Death. Καλαχθεὶς ὑπὸ Γαβινίου Πτολεμαίῳ, τόν τε Ἀρχέλαον ἀναιρεῖ καὶ τὴν Θυγατέρα. Ptolemæus, à Gabinio reductus, Archelaum ac Filiam interimit (15). But I had rather depend on the twelfth Book of Strabo, than on the ſeventeenth; becauſe Plutarch plainly confirms, what Strabo relates in the twelfth Book, that Archelaus was ſlain in Battle. Τέτον μὲν ἓν ὁ Γαβίνιος ἀνεῖλεν ἐν παραλόξῃ, καλάγων τὸν Πτολεμαῖον. Eum Gabinius Ptolemæum reducens in pugna occidit (16). Plutarch ſets forth, that Marc Antony performed ſeveral courageous Actions in Gabinius's Army, when Ptolomy was re-eſtabliſhed, and that he did likewiſe an Act of Humanity, which was much praiſed; namely, that he cauſed the Body of his Friend Archelaus to be ſought for, and made a ſplendid Funeral for him. Is not this a Proof, that Archelaus

(6) Ex Dione, lib. xxxix, pag. 131.

(7) Dio, ibid.

(15) Strabo, lib. xvii, pag. 548.

(16) Ibid. lib. xii. pag. 384.

Digitized by Google

trigues, which were carried on at Rome, for the Re-eſtabliſhment of Ptolomy; but he is miſtaken as to the Circumſtances of Archelaus's Detention [E].

Archelaus was killed in Battle? Γεγονὼς γὰρ αὐτῷ συνήθης καὶ ξένῳ ἐπολέμει μὲν ἀναγκαίως ζῶντι, τὸ δὲ σῶμα πεσόντος ἐξευρὼν, καὶ κοσμήσας βασιλικῶς ἐκήδευσε. Nam quùm familiaritas ei cum illo & jus hoſpitii interceſſiſſet, bellum cum vivente geſſit neceſſario, corpus interfecti requiſitum regio cultu funeravit (17). Dio Caſſius relates the matter in ſuch a manner, as plainly ſhews, that Archelaus was killed in the Fight, which decided the Quarrel between the Father and the Daughter, and that, after That Victory of Gabinius, the Egyptians were obliged to open the Gates of Alexandria to Ptolomy, who cauſed Berenice and divers others to be put to Death.

(17) Plutarch. M. Antonio, pag. 917.

[E] A Modern Author —— is miſtaken as to the Circumſtances of Archelaus's Detention.] The Modern Author, whom I mean, is the Abbot de Saint Real. See the Ceſarion, which he publiſhed in the Year 1685. The Miſtake, which I deſign to take notice of, conſiſts in his ſuppoſing, that Archelaus departed privately from Gabinius to marry the Queen of Egypt (18); and that, being taken Priſoner in a Battle, after the Romans had made themſelves Maſters of Peluſium, Gabinius gave him the Aſſiſtance, which was neceſſary for his Eſcape, upon paying a great Ranſom (19). Dio Caſſius, whom he quotes, ſays, in expreſs Words, that Gabinius let Archelaus eſcape, before the Army marched towards Peluſium, and before there was any Battle (20).

(18) St Real, Cæſarion, pag. 80. Edit. Holl. 1685.

(19) Ibid. pag. 82.

(20) Dio, lib. xxxix, pag. 131.

BERENICE, Daughter of Coſtobarus, and Salome, Siſter of Herod the Great [A], was firſt married to Ariſtobulus, Son of the ſame Herod, and of Mariamne, and lived unhappily enough with him; for, becauſe he had a Brother married to the Daughter of Archelaus, King of Cappadocia, he often upbraided Berenice with having undermatched himſelf in marrying her, and that, in ſo doing, he had made himſelf much inferior to his Brother. Berenice, all in Tears, reported theſe, and other Diſcourſes, to her Mother, and incenſed her greatly: Inſomuch, that Salome, who had a great Power over Herod, made him jealous of Ariſtobulus, and was the chief Cauſe that induced That cruel Father to make away with him (a). Though Berenice had five Children (b), ſhe married again with a Brother of Antipater's Mother; which Antipater was Herod's Son. Having loſt This ſecond Huſband, ſhe went to Rome, and gained the Eſteem of Auguſtus: But, above all, ſhe inſinuated herſelf into the Favour of Antonia, the Wife of Druſus [B], which, afterwards, ſtood her Son Agrippa in good ſtead. The firſt time the latter went to Rome, his Mother Berenice was yet living [C]; but, the ſecond time he went thither, ſhe was dead.

(a) Joſeph. de Bell. Jud. lib. i. c. 17.

(b) Three Sons and two Daughters: The Sons were Agrippa, the firſt of That Name, King of Judæa; Herod, King of Chalcis, and Ariſtobulus: The Daughters were Herodias, and Mariamne. Ibid. c. 18.

(1) Montacut. in Apparat. V. n. 74, p. 191. apud Noldium, de vita & geſtis Herodum pag. 297.

(2) Corn. à Lap. in Act. xxv. ver. 13. pag. 363. apud Noldium, ibid. pag. 296.

(3) Strabo, lib. xvi, pag 526.

(4) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii, cap. 11.

[A] She was Daughter of Coſtobarus, and of Salome, Siſter of Herod the Great.] Joſephus ſays ſo in expreſs Words: It is, therefore, through want of Memory, that Dr Mountague queſtions, whether it was ever determined, that Berenice was the Daughter of Coſtobarus, or of Joſeph. Quam (Berenicen filiam Salomes) vel è Coſtobaro vel Joſepho, nam non minime pro certo traditum, genuerat (1). Cornelius à Lapide believed falſly, that Herod was the Father of our Berenice (2).

[B] She inſinuated herſelf into the Favour of Antonia.] There is a Paſſage in Strabo, which deſerves to be produced. Καίσαρ καὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς ἐτίμησε τοῦ Ἡρῴδε καὶ τὴν ἀδελφὴν Σαλώμην, καὶ τὴν ταύτης θυγατέρα Βερενίκην: That is; The Emperor honoured the Sons of Herod, and his Siſter Salome, and Berenice, the Daughter of Salome (3). It is probable, theſe two Women went together to Rome, to diſpute the Kingdom of Judea with Archelaus, the Son of Herod; for it is known, that Salome went thither, at That Time, with her Family (4).

[C] The firſt time Agrippa went to Rome, his Mother Berenice was yet living.] For we read, in Joſephus, that Agrippa lived familiarly with Druſus, the Son of Tiberius; and that he acquired the Friendſhip of Antonia, the Wife of Druſus, the Brother of Tiberius, by reaſon of the Eſteem, which Antonia had for Berenice, the Mother of Agrippa (5). That Hiſtorian adds, that Agrippa, out of reſpect to his Mother, reſtrained his Natural Inclination, which prompted him to be laviſh of his Fortune; but that, after her Death, he was ſo prodigal, that he quite exhauſted it. Having neither Money nor Credit left, he returned to Judea, from whence, after divers Adventures, he came back to Rome, and went to ſalute Tiberius in the Iſland of Capreæ. He was, at firſt, very well received by him; but he had, afterwards, good need of Antonia's Protection. I do not know, where Noldius had read, that Berenice died at Antonia's Houſe (6).

(5) Ibid. lib. xviii, cap. 8.

(6) Noldius de Vita & Geſtis Herodum. p. 297.

BERENICE, Grand-daughter of the foregoing, and Daughter of Agrippa, the firſt of That Name, King of Judæa, was much talked of on account of her Amours. She was betrothed to one Marc, the Son of Alexander Lyſimachus, Alabarche; but he died before the Marriage was conſummated. A little after, ſhe was married to her Uncle Herod, who, at the Requeſt of Aprippa, both his Brother, and Father-in-law, was made King of Chalcis, by the Emperor Claudius (a). She was but ſixteen Years of Age, when her Father died (b). She loſt her Huſband in the eighth Year of the Emperor Claudius (c), and behaved very ill in her Widowhood; for the general Opinion was, that ſhe committed Inceſt with her Brother Agrippa. To put a ſtop to Theſe Reports, ſhe endeavoured to marry again, and offered herſelf to Polemon, King of Cilicia, provided he would change his Religion (d). It will eaſily be believed, that ſhe required this Condition rather out of Vanity, or Policy, than out of Zeal; but it is no uncommon thing for a zealous, and amorous, Woman to ſet up for a Converter. Polemon, having more Regard to the Riches, than the Reputation, of the Lady, who courted him, accepted her Offers, cauſed himſelf to be circumciſed, and married her: And, if he did not continue all his Life-time in the Bonds of This Marriage, it was not his own Fault, but That of Berenice; ſince This lewd Woman left him, and returned whither ſhe pleaſed [A]. He forſook Judaiſm

(a) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xix, cap. 4.

(b) Ib. c. 7.

(c) Ibid. lib. xx, cap. 3.

(d) Ib. c. 5.

[A] This lewd Woman left Polemon, her Husband, and returned whither ſhe pleaſed.] I ſhall here tranſcribe A Paſſage, which is full of Faults. That Berenice, of whom our Xiphilinus makes mention, was the Daughter of Archelaus, and the Wife of Herod, after whoſe Death, ſhe married Polemon King of Lycia, whom ſhe left, propter nimietatem coitus, ut quidam dixerunt, ſays Joſephus, lib. 20. cap. 2. This is what

Digitized by Google

daism immediately, to return to his first Religion (e). Berenice's ill Life did not hinder her from practising the Jewish Observances. She had made a Vow, and, to accomplish it, she went to Jerusalem, and submitted to the Custom, which was, That before any Person offered his Sacrifices, he spent thirty Days in Prayer, and Supplication, without drinking Wine, and had his Head shaved. Whilst she observed these Ceremonies, she received a thousand Affronts from the Roman Soldiers, and was in Danger of her Life: In vain did she go bare-foot, to interceed for the People with the Governor Florus; she obtained nothing, not so much as the Civilities, which her Quality, and Sex, made indispensable (f). She was still in Favour with her Brother Agrippa; and she seconded him in his Design of preventing the Desolation of the Jews, by exhorting them to submit to the Romans. But all these Exhortations, accompanied with Tears, proved ineffectual (g); so that Berenice, either to avoid being involved in the Ruin of the Nation, or to exercise her Parts, went to Vespasian and Titus, and gained the one so fortunately by her Liberality, and the other by her Beauty [B], that she was in a fair way of becoming a Roman Empress. She ensnared Titus, and saw the Hour, that, of a favoured Gallant, he would become her Husband [C]: But the Murmurs of the Roman People frustrated her Hope; she

(e) Ibid.

(f) Id. de Bell. Jud. lib. ii, c. 26.

(g) Ib. cap. xxviii, xxix.

what I find in the Annotations of the Sieur de Canque on the History of Dio Cassius, abridged by Xiphilinus (1). Let us observe, in the first place, that the Berenice, spoken of in those Words, is the Mistress of Titus; and then let us reckon up the Faults. I. She was not the Daughter of Archelaus. II. Polemon was not King of Lycia. III. The Reason, why she left him, was not because he performed, too often, what is called the Conjugal Duty. It was rather a quite contrary reason. For see how the Jewish Historian, quoted by the Author of the Annotations, expresses himself: ἡ μὲν ἐπὶ πολὺ συνέμεινεν ὁ γάμος, ἀλλὰ Βερνίκη δι' ἀκολασίαν, ὡς ἔφασαν, κα]αλείπει τὸν Πολέμωνα. Id tamen conjugium diuturnum non fuit, propter intemperantiam, ut fertur, discedente ab eo Berenice (2). If This Author had consulted the Translation of Genebrard, he would not have fallen into the Error, which he has committed; he would have read there; This Marriage did not continue long; and it is said, that it was by reason of Berenice's Intemperance, who left him. Granting, that the Words of the Jewish Author, considered in themselves, may have I know not what ambiguity, which may make one doubt, whether the Matter in question be the Husband's, or the Wife's Irregularity, was there no means to remove the Ambiguity? Was it not sufficient to observe the ill Life of Berenice? They, who know how she lived, will readily acknowledge, that she could not be displeased with a Man, for being indefatigable in the Exercises of Love. All Persons, Berenice among the rest, generally speaking, admit of This Maxim, Too much of Nothing (3); but the Varieties are infinite, when the Question is to fix the bounds between too much and enough: Opinions are very different. If the Constitution of Berenice be no Argument against the general Thesis, it is One against the Application of it; it is not affected by it; it calls That Mediocrity, which others call Excess. It is not indeed such, as literally fulfils the Sentence of the thirtieth Chapter of Proverbs; " Tria sunt insaturabilia, & quartum " quod nunquam dicit, sufficit, Infernus, & os vulvæ, " & terra quæ non satiatur aqua; ignis vero nunquam " dicit, sufficit. ----- There are three things, that " are never satisfied, yea a fourth, which saith not, " It is enough; The Grave, and The Womb, The " Earth, that is not filled with Water; and the " Fire, that saith not, It is enough:" or such, as salfifies That of Pindar;

- - - - - - - Ἀναπάυσις
Ἐν πάντι γλυκεῖα ἔργω. Κόρον δ' ἔχει
Καὶ μέλι καὶ τὰ τερπν' ἄνθε' Ἀφροδίσια (4).

In ev'ry Exercise, 'tis best
Alternately to work and rest:
Honey, and Love's inviting Joy,
Too largely if we taste them, cloy.

But, at last, it gives the Lie to This Maxim; Nature is satisfied with a little.

The Author, whom I refute, should rather have placed Polemon's Offence in the Defect, than in the Excess, and compared That Monarch with the first Husband of Queen Joan of Naples. It is true, Polemon came off cheaper than the other; for he did not lose his Life, as the other did.

Some Caviller will perhaps tell me, that Mr de Canque's meaning is, that Berenice forsook Polemon, because he was not able to supply her amorous Desires; but I maintain, that the Words are not ranged in such a manner as to be so understood. Whatever his Thought was, they plainly signify, what I suppose, and, consequently, they represent Berenice as a Woman of a most extraordinary Humour. See what I shall quote out of the Letters of the Count de Bussi Rabutin, in the Remark [D] of the Article GLEICHEN.

[B] She gained Vespasian by her Liberality, and Titus by her Beauty] Tacitus informs us, that This Lady intrigued to place the Crown on Vespasian's Head. I do not wonder at it; she had more to hope for from him, than from his Competitors, if he came to the Empire. " Mox per occultos suorum nuntios " excitus ab urbe Agrippa, ignaro adhuc Vitellio, " celeri navigatione properaverat. Nec minore animo " regina Berenice partes juvabat, florens ætate forma- " que, & seni quoque Vespasiano magnificentia mu- " nerum grata (5). —— Afterwards, Agrippa, upon " secret Intelligence from Those of his Party, left the " City, and set sail with all Expedition. Queen " Berenice, with equal Resolution, favoured his De- " signs, being then in the Flower of her Youth and " Beauty, and agreeable to old Vespasian on account of " the Magnificence of her Presents." The same Historian informs us, that Titus loved her, and that it was thought she was the cause, why he did not finish his Journey, but return into Judæa, after he heard of Galba's Death at Corinth. " Fuere qui accensum " desiderio Berenices reginæ vertisse iter crederunt. " Neque abhorrebat à Berenice juvenilis animus: sed " gerendis rebus nullum ex eo impedimentum (6). — " Some believed, that the Love of Berenice stopped his " Journey; nor indeed was he averse to the Lady; but " This was no Interruption to his Affairs." This Historian refutes Calumny in two words: He owns, This Queen touched the Heart of Titus; but he declares, it was but an amorous Amusement, which did not prevent him from attending to his Affairs.

[C] She saw the Hour —— that Titus would become her Husband.] Agrippa, and his Sister Berenice, took a Journey to Rome, in the fourth Consulship of Vespasian; great Honour was done them; she lodged in the Palace; she lay with Titus; and began to dispose of all things like a lawful Wife: But Titus, understanding, that the People were scandalized at it, sent her away. This is what Xiphilinus relates (7); and he observes, that Berenice was, then, in her Prime, and in great Lustre. Βερενίκη δὲ ἰσχυρῶς τῆς ἥβης. Berenice maxime florebat (8). Nevertheless, she was then Forty four Years of Age; for the fourth Consulship of Vespasian fell in the Year of JESUS CHRIST 72 (9), and she was sixteen Years of Age, when her Father died (10), that is to say, the third Year of the Emperor Claudius (11), which was the Forty fourth of JESUS CHRIST. This may be easily calculated. Besides, she entred young into the Lists, and had contended vigorously, and without Intermission; she had a Husband, and perhaps Children, in the sixteenth Year of her Age: She had had a second Husband, and some Gallants, and yet she

(1) They are at the end of the French Translation of Xiphilinus, by Antony de Baudole, and printed at Paris, in 1610, in 4to.

(2) Joseph. Antiq. Jud. lib. xx, cap. 5, (and not cap. 2.) pag. 693.

(3) Id arbitror adprimè in vita esse utile, ut ne quid nimis. Terentius, in Andria. Act. i. Sc. i. See also in Erasmus, Chil. i, Cent. vi. n. 96. pag. 226, several such like Sentences.

(4) Pindar, Nemeor. Od. vii. p. 180. See a like Sentence of Homer, in Remark [E], of the Article XENOPHANES.

(5) Tacit. Histor. lib. ii, cap. 81.

(6) Ibid. cap. ii.

(7) In Vespasiano.

(8) Xiphil. in Vespas. pag. 222.

(9) See Calvisius.

(10) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 19, cap. 7.

(11) Ibid.

Digitized by Google

she retained only the Title of the Emperor's Mistress, or Concubine. In the XVIIth Century, the French Stage resounded with the Amours of Titus and Berenice [D]. She had too beautiful a Sister for them to love each other [E]. The Holy Scripture makes mention of Berenice [F]. Great Mistakes have been committed in relation to This Princess.

she was in her greatest Lustre at Forty four Years of Age. This was enough to expose her to Envy. Suetonius observes, that the Separation was with Regret on both sides. "Nec minus libido (suspecta erat in Tito) propter exoletorum & spadonum greges, propterque insignem reginæ Berenices amorem, cui etiam nuptias pollicitus ferebatur. - - - - Berenicem statim ab urbe dimisit invitus invitam (12). - - - - Nor was Titus less suspected of Lust, on account of the many Catamites and Eunuchs, as also from his remarkable Love for Berenice, to whom he is said to have promised Marriage. - - - - He immediately dismissed Berenice from the City, to the great Regret of both." Titus did himself great Violence in sending away Berenice, to put a stop to the Complaints of Slanderers. Berenice was much vexed at being sent away: no doubt she would rather have suffered the Continuance of Calumny: And, if it be true, that Titus had promised her Marriage, as was reported, we may very well believe, that she loudly exclaimed against the Unfaithfulness of Men. It is probable, that, to moderate her Grief, Titus represented to her, that it is was a Sacrifice he was obliged to make to the Murmurs of the whole City; but that, after having given way to This Torrent for a while, they should meet again. It is certain, that Berenice behaved, as if she had been sent away in this manner: Some time after she returned to Titus; but she got nothing by it; for he would not hear of her any more. I believe, Xiphilinus is the only Historian, who has observed, that Berenice was sent away twice, the first time in the Reign of Vespasian, and the second in That of Titus. Ὁ δὲ δὴ Τίτος οὐδὲν ὅτε φονικὸν ὅτε ἐρωτικὸν μοναρχήσας ἐπραξεν, ἀλλὰ χρηστὸς καίτερ ἐπιβουλευθεὶς, καὶ σώφρων καίτοι καὶ τῆς Βερονίκης ἐς Ῥώμην αὖθις ἐλθούσης, ἐγένετο (13). Titus, from the Time that he became sole Emperor, neither committed Slaughter, nor was a Slave to Love; but was courteous, though plotted against; and chaste, though Berenice was returned to the City. Xiphilinus probably is not mistaken, tho' Aurelius Victor, and the other Historians, mention but one Dismission. "Ut subiit pondus regium, Berenicen nuptias suas sperantem regredi domum - - - - - præcepit (14). - - - - When he had taken upon him the Royal Authority, he commanded Berenice, who was in Hopes of being married to him, to return home." These Words of Aurelius Victor, compared with what he had said before, convict him of extream Negligence. He says, here, that Berenice was in hopes of marrying Titus, and he had said, just before, that she was his Wife. "Cœcinam Consularem, adhibitum cœnæ, vix dum triclinio egressum, ob suspicionem stupratæ Berenices UXORIS SUAE, jugulari jussit. - - - - Cœcina, of Consular Dignity, whom he had invited to his Table, had scarce left it, when, by the Emperor's Order, he was put to Death, on Suspicion of having violated his Wife Berenice." Let us infer from hence, that Berenice lent an Ear to other Lovers, besides the Emperor. This is common enough in the Mistresses of great Princes. I cannot pass over an Error of Noldius. He says, in Page 408, that Dio Cassius, or Xiphilinus, are mistaken in placing Berenice's Divorce under the Reign of Vespasian, since Aurelius Victor affirms, that Titus did not send her away, 'till after he had taken Possession of the Crown. Ut subiit Pondus Regium (15). This Noldius says, Page 408; but, at Page 409, he affirms, that Berenice returned to Rome, to make a new Attempt on Titus's Heart, and that her Design miscarried. He quotes Xiphilinus for This. What! After having said, that an Author is mistaken, should we affirm what he advances? Should we prove it by his Testimony?

(12) Sueton. in Tito, cap. vii.

(13) Xiphilin. in Tito, fub. init.

(14) Aurel. Victor, in Epitom.

(15) Noldius, de Vita & gestis Herodum.

[D] In the XVIIth Century, the French Stage resounded with the Amours of Titus and Berenice.] Two Pieces, entitled Berenice, were acted at the same time: One was composed by Corneille, and the other by Racine; each of them had it's Partizans: The Abbot de Villars published some Critical Observations on both. I should not have known, that he is the Author of Those Observations, if I had not read these Words in the Sentimens de Cleanthe (16). "Would you have questioned it, if you had recollected the Critic on the two Berenices? - - - - For what reason should we have escaped That Critic on two excellent Poets, one of whom did not vouchsafe to answer him, and the other declared, in but two Words, why he did not answer him (17)?"

Here are some Extracts, which seem to me worthy of the Place I give them. "I am very sorry, says a Lady, writing to the Count de Rabutin, that I cannot send you the Berenice of Racine, this Day; I expect it from Paris, and I am sure it will please you; but, for that Purpose, you must have a refined Tenderness; for no Woman ever carried Love and Delicacy so far as she does. Good God! What a pretty Mistress! And what pity it is, that a single Character cannot make a good Piece: Racine's Tragedy would be perfect (18)." The Count answered her: "I have just now read Berenice. I do not find so much Tenderness in it, as I expected. I remember, that, when I pretended to have some, I could have out-done Berenice: Titus does not seem to me to love her so much as he says, since he uses no Endeavours, in her favour, with the Senate, and the People of Rome. He yields immediately to the Remonstrances of Paulinus, who, finding him shaken, brings the People, and Senate, of Rome, to engage him; whereas, if he had spoken resolutely to Paulinus, he would have found every one ready to submit to his Will. I would have done so myself; and, by this means, I should have joined Love and Glory together. As for Berenice, if I had been in her Place, I would have done as she did, that is, I would have left Rome full of Rage against Titus; but Antiochus should not have been the better for it (19)." Here is the Reply, that was made to him. "Your Heart is not so indifferent as I believed it to be, since you remember still, that you could have out-done Berenice in Point of Tenderness, and you must have carried it to a very high Pitch, to have surpassed her: I commend, and esteem, you for it. He, who pretends to Love, must not do it by halves (20)." From these three Passages, we learn, what Judgment was passed on Mr Racine's Berenice, and how much the Ladies are naturally inclined to approve of Those Hearts, which have the utmost Tenderness. I do not find, that the Count de Rabutin's Criticism is well grounded; for he would have had the Poet falsify an Event, which ought to be preserved on the Stage. Berenice's Dismission is so well known in History, that they, who had not found it in the Tragedy, might justly have exclaimed against the Author. Without doubt, Mr Racine foresaw this; and it is probable this was the Reason, why he represented Titus's Passion inferior to That of the Lady: This might displease the Fair Sex; but the Author found, that this Inconvenience did not equal the other.

(16) It is the fictitious Name of him, who criticized the Conversations of Father Bouhours. The Abbot de Villars, whom he points at here, had published the Treatise, de la Delicatesse, for Father Bouhours, against Cleanthe.

(17) Sentimens de Cleanthe, Part II, p. 2. 1672.

(18) The 133d Letter of Court de Bussy Rabutin's Letters, Part. III, pag. 246. Edit. Holl. This Letter is dated from Dijon, July 28, 1671.

(19) Ibid. Lett. 148, Part III, pag. 268.

(20) Ibid. Lett. 152, p. 279, 280.

[E] She had too beautiful a Sister, for them to love each other.] Josephus observes, that Drusilla, the the Sister of Berenice, listened to the Proposals of Felix, Governor of Judæa, to secure herself from her Sister's Jealousy, who could not endure, that she (Drusilla) should be so beautiful. Drusilla was courted by Felix, whilst she was married to Azizus, King of Emesenians. She yielded, and married Felix, and she even seems to have abjured the Jewish Religion (21). The Hatred of Brothers is great; and some Maxims might be quoted upon this Subject; but, if I am not mistaken, the Hatred of Sisters exceeds it. We may touch upon this in some other Place (22).

(21) Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5. pag. 693.

(22) In Remark [B], of the Article DRUSILLA.

[F] The Holy Scripture makes mention of Berenice.] We find, in the Twenty fifth Chapter of the Acts, that Agrippa and Berenice came to Cæsarea, to salute Festus, and that, having been told of St Paul, who was then in Prison, they had a mind to hear him; and that, for this Purpose, they went to the Place of Audience, with great Pomp (23), and heard St Paul.

(23) Μετὰ πολλῆς φαντασίας cum multa ostentatione seu ambitione Act. Apostol cap. xxv. ver. 23.

Digitized by Google

Princeſs [G]. I could not take notice of all the Queens, who have born this Name. I ſhall remark ſome Errors of Moreri [H], Hofman, Charles Stephens, &c. [I].

[G] Great Miſtakes have been committed in relation to This Princeſs.] Sabellicus believed, that ſhe was the Wife of Ariſtobulus, and afterwards of Antipater (24). This is to confound two Berenices, viz. the Grand-mother, and the Grand-daughter, together: The former was married, the firſt time, to Ariſtobulus, and, the ſecond time, to an Uncle of Antipater, and not to Antipater himſelf. This is, then, a ſecond Miſtake of Sabellicus. As for the Berenice, whom he ſpeaks of (the Miſtreſs of Titus) ſhe had neither of Theſe two Husbands. I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage of Juvenal, which is, doubtleſs, to be underſtood of the latter Berenice, who was beloved by Titus, and who was ſuſpected of Inceſt with her Brother Agrippa;

> Grandia tolluntur cryſtallina; maxima rurſus
> Myrrhina, deinde adamas notiſſimus, & Berenices
> In digito factus pretioſior: hunc dedit olim
> Barbarus inceſtæ, dedit hunc Agrippa ſorori,
> Obſervant ubi feſta mero pede ſabbata Reges,
> Et vetus indulget ſenibus clementia porcis (25).

> Rich Chryſtals of the Rock ſhe takes up there,
> Huge Agat Vaſes, and old China Ware:
> Then Berenice's Ring her Finger proves,
> More precious made by her inceſtuous Loves;
> And infamouſly dear: A Brother's Bribe;
> Ev'n God's Anointed, and of Judah's Tribe;
> Where bareſoot they approach the ſacred Shrine,
> And think it only Sin to feed on Swine.
>
> DRYDEN.

The Scholiaſt of Juvenal underſtands, here, by Berenice, a Siſter of Ptolomy, King of Egypt, and, by Agrippa, a Son of Julia, Daughter of Auguſtus; That Son of Julia, and of Agrippa, whom Tiberius put to Death, after the Deceaſe of Auguſtus (26). To ſay no worſe, it is prodigious Careleſſneſs in This Scholiaſt; for it appears plainly, upon a little attention, that Juvenal ſpeaks of an Agrippa, who lived in Judæa, which can no ways agree with the Son of Julia. Beſides that, according to Noldius's Obſervation (27), no one ever ſaid, that Agrippa, and his unchaſte Siſter Julia, were ever accuſed of Inceſt. It is not eaſy to reprove the Scholiaſt on the other Point, becauſe the repeating of the Word dedit made ſome learned Men believe, that the Poet ſuppoſes here two Perſons, who gave each a Diamond of great Value to his Siſter; I. A King of Egypt. II. An Agrippa. This Explication is not good. The whole muſt relate to Agrippa, King of the Jews, and to his Siſter Berenice: And we learn a Particular here, which Joſephus did not touch upon; namely, that Berenice received a Diamond of great Value from her Brother, and that ſhe wore it, which cauſed their inceſtuous Love to make the greater Noiſe. Baronius thought, that Juvenal alluded to a precious Stone, mentioned by Pliny, which Ptolomy, King of Egypt, gave to his Wife, who was alſo his Mother, as Baronius pretends. Alludere videtur pretioſo lapidi, quem prius dedit Ptolemæus Ægypti Rex uxori ſimul & matri. Verum Plinius tradit fuiſſe topazion (28). A modern Author, whom I have already quoted ſeveral times (29), finds many Faults in This Opinion of the Annaliſt. I. Juvenal ſpeaks of a Diamond, enchaſed, or ſet in a Ring; but the precious Stone, mentioned by Pliny, was a rough Topaz, which was afterwards made into a Statue. II. It was not Ptolomy, who gave This Topaz to his Mother; but it was Polemon, Governor of the Iſland, where the Topaz was found, who gave it to Berenice, Mother of the King, that ſucceeded Him, who then reigned. III. Pliny does not ſay, that Ptolomy Philadelphus made a Preſent of This Stone to his Wife Arſinoë, who was alſo his Siſter; he ſays only, that they made a Statue of Arſinoë, the Wife of Ptolomy Philadelphus, of That Stone, and that This Statue was four Cubits high, and that it was conſecrated in a Temple, which was called The Golden Temple. We may add a fourth Cenſure; which is, That we do not find, that any King of Egypt married his own Mother, and that This agrees leſs with the Father of Ptolomy Philadelphus, than with any other. It is of his Wife, that Pliny ſpeaks, when he ſays, that the Topaz in queſtion was brought to Queen Berenice. I am much leſs ſurprized at theſe Faults of Baronius, than to find Father Hardouin of Opinion, that Juvenal's Words are to be underſtood of the Diamond of the ſame Berenice, mentioned by Pliny, the Wife of Ptolomy Lagus, and Mother of Ptolomy Philadelphus (30). The Juvenal Variorum contains many Miſtakes in relation to Berenice. There is in it a Note, which ſays, that the Berenice, mentioned by That Poet, was Queen of Judæa, and Herod's Wife: that, according to others, he meant Berenice, Herod's Wife, and, after her Husband's Death, Miſtreſs to her Brother-in-law, that is, to Agrippa, her Husband's Brother. This is all wrong; for, in the firſt Place, here are two different Herods, which they have not taken care to diſtinguiſh by any Mark whatever. One of them muſt be He, who ſlew the Children of Bethlehem; the other muſt be the King of Chalcis, Brother of Agrippa, the firſt of That Name. Now, the firſt of the two Herods had no Wife, whoſe Name was Berenice; and there was no Berenice, Queen of Judæa. Neither was there any Berenice in Judæa, whoſe Inceſt conſiſted in the Love of her Brother-in-law. The Inceſt, mentioned by Joſephus, and Juvenal, conſiſts in the Amours of Agrippa, the ſecond of That Name, with his own Siſter Berenice. That, which deceived the Author of the Annotation, is, that Berenice was the Widow of Herod, King of Chalcis, and Brother of an Agrippa, when her Love for Agrippa was ſpoken of: But the Agrippa, of whoſe Brother ſhe was Widow, was not He, with whom ſhe committed Inceſt. She was Daughter of That other Agrippa, and Siſter to This. There is another Remark in the Juvenal Variorum, the Author of which calls himſelf Lubin. This Lubin makes uſe of a pleaſant manner of arguing. After having ſaid, that Herod Agrippa was Berenice's Brother, he proves, that the Love of That Agrippa for Berenice was Inceſt, becauſe ſhe had been married to her Uncle Herod. Herodes Agrippa dedit inceſtæ ſuæ ſorori Berenice, cum qua inceſtum commiſerat, UTPOTE quæ ante nupta erat patruo ſuo Herodi. Noldius, who obſerved two Faults in This Variorum, and who placed them to the Account of Schrevelius, the Compiler of That Commentary (31), took no notice of This.

[H] I ſhall remark ſome Errors of Moreri.] The firſt Berenice, of whom he ſpeaks, is the Mother of Ptolomy Philadelphus, King of Egypt. What he ſays of her is not to be found in the Author, whom he quotes (32). The ſecond is the Daughter of Ptolomy Philadelphus, and Wife of Ptolomy Evergetes: He quotes Ælian, and Juſtin, who do not ſay what he relates. He ſhould have quoted Hyginus (33) who mentions what relates to this Queen's Head of Hair. As for the Temple of Berenice the Guardian, I confeſs, I cannot diſcover the Source of it, and, therefore, I dare not affirm, that Moreri has advanced a Falſhood. I have many ſuſpicions about it. He ſhould have remembered, that he had ſaid, in the Article of ARSINOE the Daughter of Antiochus Soter, that Berenice, the Wife of Ptolomy Evergetes, was the Daughter of Magus King of Cyrene (34), and Brother of Ptolomy Philadelphus, and, conſequently, Uncle of Ptolomy Evergetes. At that time, Berenice, the Wife of Ptolomy Evergetes, was but his firſt Couſin; at preſent, ſhe is his own Siſter. Every one ſees how much ſuch Variations confound the Readers, and are ſufficient to make them weary of the Study of a Dictionary. Such a Chaos ſhould be cleared, by obſerving, who They are, that relate things one way, and who Thoſe, that relate them another way. The third Berenice, according to Moreri, is Siſter to the ſecond, and Wife of Antiochus Soter, King of Syria. He ſhould have ſaid Antiochus Theus, and not Antiochus Soter; the former was the Son of the latter, and was married to a Daughter of Ptolomy Philadelphus, whoſe Name was Berenice (35). The fourth is the Daughter of Ptolomy Auletes. I have made an Article about her; ſee the Remarks of it. The fifth is Berenice the Siſter of Agrippa II of That Name. What Moreri ſays, that This Princeſs was with her Brother Agrippa in the Year 55, when St Paul pleaded his Cauſe in their Preſence, and in That of the Proconſuls Felix and Pontius (36) Feſtus, ſuppoſes

(24) In Paraphraſi ad Titum Suetonii apud Noldium, de Vita & Geſtis Herodum. p. 414.

(25) Juven. Satir. vi. ver. 154.

(26) He had been confined by Auguſtus, to the Iſland Planaſia, Tacit. Ann. lib. i. cap. 3. and not in Sicily, as the Scholiaſt ſays.

(27) De Vita & geſt. Herodum, pag. 412.

(28) Baron. Annal. ad Ann. 58. n. 164. He quotes Pliny, lib. 37. c. 8.

(29) Noldius, ubi ſupra, p. 412.

(30) Hardouin in Plin. lib. xxxvii. cap. 8. pag. 392. Tom. V.

FAULTS in the Edition of Juvenal Variorum.

(31) Noldius de vit. & Geſtis Herodum, pag. 411, 412.

(32) He cites Appian; he would have done better to have quoted Pauſanias, lib. i pag. 6.

(33) Aſtronom. lib. ii. cap. 24.

(34) He ſhould have ſaid Magas; He was King of Cyrene; and it is true, that, according to Juſtin, lib. xxvi. cap. 3, he married his only Daughter Berenice to his Brother's Son; I mean, to Ptolomy, ſirnamed Evergetes. This Magas was the Son of a Macedonian, of mean Condition, and of Berenice, who was afterwards Wife of Ptolomy Lagus. Pauſanias, lib. i. pag. 6.

(35) See Juſtin, lib. xxvii, cap. 1.

(36) It ſhould be Portius.

Digitized by Google

ſuppoſes that Thoſe two Proconſuls commanded in Judæa at the ſame time, which is falſe (37). He ought not to have quoted Strabo; for what He ſays relates to another Berenice, whom Moreri forget, viz. the Grandmother of Titus's Miſtreſs.

(37) Acts xxiv. 28.

[I] ----- Of Hofman, Charles Stephens, &c.] I. Hofman's firſt Miſtake conſiſts in affirming, that the Berenice, mentioned by Juvenal, was the Daughter of Herod the Aſcalonite (38), and Wife of her Brother Agrippa. This is, at leaſt, a double, or tripple, Miſtake; for That Herod had no Daughter, whoſe Name was Berenice, nor a Son, whoſe Name was Agrippa: She, whom Juvenal ſpeaks of, was Daughter of the firſt Agrippa, and was never married to her Brother Agrippa, the ſecond of That Name; it was only believed, that ſhe had an inceſtuous Commerce with him. St Chryſoſtom was miſtaken, or ſpoke figuratively, when he called her the Wife of Agrippa (39). II. It is a ſecond Miſtake to ſay, that the Berenice, whom Titus loved, is different from Her, whom Juvenal mentions. Hofman makes them different, ſince he treats of Her, who was Titus's Miſtreſs, in an Article apart. III. It is not true, that the Berenice of Juvenal made a Journey to Jeruſalem with her Head ſhaved and bare-footed. Hofman ſhould have ſaid, that, in order to accompliſh a Vow, ſhe went to Jeruſalem, where ſhe obſerved the Ceremonies required in ſuch Caſes; which were, that, before any Sacrifices were offered, they put up Prayers for thirty Days, had their Heads ſhaved, and abſtained from Wine. This is all that Joſephus tells us concerning This Journey of Berenice (40). It is true, he obſerves, that ſhe went bare-footed to the Governor's Audience; but this cannot be ſaid to be a Journey to Jeruſalem. IV. What ſignifies it to quote the Twenty fifth Chapter of the Acts, and the ſixteenth Book of Strabo, immediately after having ſaid, that Berenice went to Jeruſalem, with her Head ſhaved, and bare-footed? Is This mentioned in the Book of the Acts? And does not Strabo ſpeak of a Berenice, who was the Grand-mother of This: LLOYD has committed the firſt and third Fault of Hofman; and it is from Him, that the latter traſcribed them. CHARLES STEPHENS falſifies Pliny's Teſtimony; He makes him ſay, That Ptolomy Philadelphus built a fine Town on the Red-Sea, and called it Berenice, after his Mother's Name. Pliny ſays only, that That Town bore the Name of Ptolomy Philadelphus's Mother. Berenice, Oppidum matris Philadelphi nomine (41). This puts me in mind of a Fault of Hofman, which I had omitted: He makes Pliny ſay, that That Berenice gave her Name to a City, which ſhe cauſed to be built. Thus much concerning the firſt Fault of Charles Stephens. The ſecond is his having ſaid, that there was a Berenice, the Daughter of Herod the Aſcalonite, who married her Brother Agrippa. We have already found This Fault in Lloyd, and Hofman; Lloyd took it from Charles Stephens. Some one will tell me perhaps; "you miſunderſtand theſe Words; "Berenice, Herodis Aſcalonitæ filia, quæ nupſit "etiam Agrippæ fratri (42). You explain them, as "if the Meaning of them were, that Berenice mar- "ried her own Brother; but they muſt be under- "ſtood in this Senſe; that ſhe was married to Agrip- "pa's Brother, which is the Senſe of Lloyd and Hof- "man's Words. Berenice Herodis Aſcalonitæ filia, "Agrippæ fratris uxor." I anſwer, That I explain the Latin Words of theſe three Authors in the moſt natural Senſe; and that, ſince the two latter confirm the Words alledged, by the Authority of Juvenal, they meant, without doubt, that Agrippa was the Husband, and not the Husband's Brother. I can, at leaſt, convict them of a Falſity: They ſuppoſe, that Berenice, the Wife of Agrippa's Brother, was the Daughter of Herod the Aſcalonite: This is falſe; ſhe was the Daughter of Agrippa, the firſt of That Name, who married her to his Brother Herod, King of Chalcis. The third Fault is, his quoting Strabo for the pretended Daughter of Herod the Aſcalonite; whereby it appears, that Charles Stephens knew not, that Strabo ſpeaks only of the Daughter of Salome. That Daughter makes a ſeparate Article in his Dictionary: which ſhews, that he did not take the one for the other, but that he fancied to himſelf two diſtinct Perſons; which might paſs for a fourth Miſtake.

(38) He who ſhew the Children of Bethelem.

(39) Apud Cornel. à Lapide in Act. xxv, ver. 3, cited by Noldius, pag. 404.

(40) De bello Judaic. lib. ii. c. 26.

(41) Plin. lib. vi. cap. 29. p. 733.

(42) They are in Charles Stephens.

BERGAMO (JAMES PHILIP de), an Auguſtin Monk, was born at Bergamo, in the Year 1434. He compoſed, in Latin, a Chronicle from the Creation of the World, down to the Year 1503 [A]; and a Treatiſe of Illuſtrious Women. He was of a very conſiderable Family [B], and became a Monk in the Year 1451 [C]. He had a particular Devotion for Nicolas Tollentin, by whoſe Interceſſion he believed himſelf to have been cured of the Plague, in 1474 (a). He died at Bergamo, in the Year 1518, in the Monaſtery of his Order, of which he had been Prior, and had repaired it at a very great Expence (b). Conſult Moreri's Dictionary, under the Word FORESTA. What you meet with faulty, there, may be corrected by comparing it with This Article.

(a) See His Chronicle, at the Year 1446, fol. 290.

(b) Taken from Phil. Elliſius in Encomiaſt. Auguſtin. p. 314, 315.

[A] He compoſed, in Latin, A Chronicle from the Creation of the World down to the Year 1503.] Voſſius obſerves, that the firſt Edition is of Breſcia, and that it ends at the Year 1485, and not 1436, as Poſſevin affirms (1). Bellarmin has committed the ſame Miſtake (2). The ſecond Edition is of Venice, and comes down to the Year 1503. Voſſius ſays, that the Author remarks, at the end of the Book, that he was then Sixty nine Years of Age. This Work was re-printed at Paris, in the Year 1535, with a Continuation down to That Time. It was tranſlated into Italian, and publiſhed, at Venice, in the Year 1540, in Folio. This Edition contains Additions to the Work of the firſt Compiler, down to the Year 1539. The Author of theſe Additions was One Bernardino Bindoni, of Milan. I am of Opinion, that Philip of Bergamo continued the Work after the Year 1503, and that Part of what follows was His; but This Italian Verſion does not diſtinguiſh the Additions, which came from another Hand. I have not found, at the end of the Year 1503, that the Author gives us the Account of his Age, as related by Voſſius.

(1) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Lat. lib. iii. cap. 11. p. 602.

(2) Bellarm. de Script. Eccleſ. pag. 411.

This Chronicle is tolerably good, eſpecially as to the Times, near which the Author lived. He has taken care to diſtinguiſh the Famous Men, who lived in each Century, and he gives us ſome Particulars relating to the Moderns, which are curious enough. Geſner, in 1544, knew no Edition of This Book (3).

(3) Geſner, Bibl. fol. 360. verſo.

[B] He was of a very conſiderable Family.] It was That of the Foreſti. Matthew de Bergamo, who was of this noble Family, and a very learned Civilian, obtained, of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, very great Privileges, both for himſelf, and his Poſterity. He was created a Count Palatin, with the Right of inſtituting Notaries, Doctors, Knights, and Judges, in every part of Italy, and of legitimating Baſtards, &c. A Liſt of all theſe Privileges is to be met with in Our Author's Chronicle (4). They have been confirmed by all the Lords, who have been in Poſſeſſion of Bergamo. The Letters Patents of this Grant of Lewis of Bavaria were dated at Trent, the twentieth of January, 1330 (5).

(4) Phil. Bergom. Chronica. fol. 249. ad Ann. 1330.

[C] He became a Monk, in the Year 1451.] He affirms, ſomewhere in his Chronicle, according to Voſſius, that John Rochus admitted him into his Convent, with ſome other young Perſons, in the Year 1451; but I find, in the Italian Verſion of This Chronicle, that it was John of Novara, Superior of the Auguſtins of Bergamo, who aſſociated him to his Order, the firſt of May, 1451. He had been ſpeaking of John Rochus, Reformer of the Auguſtins, and their General, who died at Mantua, in the Year 1461, aged ſeventy Years. Immediately after, he ſpeaks of John of Novara, who had ſtrongly ſeconded John Rochus in the Work of Reforming the Order, and who ſucceeded him in the Dignity of Prior of the Convent of Crema, in conſequence of which he was promoted to the ſame Office in the Convent of Bergamo. They, who have the Latin Edition, which Voſſius made uſe of, may examine whether he is miſtaken. The Italian, which I conſult, was made from the Edition of Paris, corrected from many Errors.

(5) Id. ibid.

[A] I ſhall

Digitized by Google

BERGIER (NICOLAS), was born at Reims, in the Year 1557. He ſtudied there in the new Univerſity, which the Cardinal of Lorrain had lately eſtabliſhed, and was alſo a Teacher in it for ſome Years. From the College he went to the Count de Saint Soupplet, Great Bailiff of the Province, to be Tutor to his Children, and, afterwards, embraced the Profeſſion of an Advocate, in which he had very good Succeſs. The Inhabitants of the City of Reims, who knew his Merit and Capacity, made him their Syndic, and deputed him often to Paris, upon the Affairs of the City. This brought him acquainted with ſeveral learned Men, and, amongſt others, with Meſſ. Peireſc, and Du Puy, to whom he communicated the Deſign of his Book of the High-Ways of the Roman Empire, and who encouraged him greatly to put it in Execution. For this End, Mr Peireſc communicated to him the Map of Peutinger (a). But of all the Friends, and Patrons, which his good Qualities procured him, the chief, and moſt famous, was Nicolas de Bellievre, Preſident a Mortier, in the Parliament of Paris; who procured him a Brief of the Crown, conſtituting him Hiſtoriographer, with a Penſion of Two hundred Crowns, and entertained him at his Houſe, where he ſpent the Remainder of his Life. He died the fifteenth of September, 1623, in the Caſtle of Grignon, belonging to Monſ. de Bellievre. The Epitaph, which That illuſtrious Preſident made to the Memory of his Friend, is to be found at the beginning of The Hiſtory of Reims, printed in 1629 (b). I ſhall ſpeak, below, of Bergier's Works [A]. See alſo, at the end of this Dictionary, the Diſſertation on the Day, Remark [B].

(a) See Gaſſendus, in the Life of Peireſc.

(b) A Memoir, communicated by Mr Oudinet, Keeper of the Cabinet of Medals of Lewis XIV. I give it as I received it.

[A] I ſhall ſpeak of Bergier's Works.] Beſides the Hiſtory of the High-ways of the Roman Empire, he compoſed alſo le bouquet Royal, which is a Relation of the Coronation of Lewis XIII, printed at Reims, in the Year 1637; A Treatiſe of Day-break, printed at Reims, in the Year 1629, and which had been printed at Paris, in the Year 1617, under the Title of Archemeron (1); Le deſſein de l' Hiſtoire de Reims, printed in 1637. He wrote the Life of St Albert, with the Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of his Body from Reims to Bruſſels, in the Year 1612, at the Requeſt of the Archduke Albert. He received a Chain of Gold as a Reward, ſent him by that Prince; but the Work was not printed; and the Manuſcript is in the Hands of the Author's Heirs, with ſome other Papers, written with his own Hand, concerning the Excellency of Learning; and the Antiquity and Excellency of Poetry, and Speculative Muſic (2).

(1) Conſult my Diſſertation on the Day, at the end of the laſt Volume, and chiefly in Remark [B].

(2) Taken from a Memoir, communicated by Mr Oudinet.

BERIGARDUS (CLAUDIUS), one of the moſt ſubtile Philoſophers of the XVIIth Century, was of Moulins. He acquired ſuch a Reputation in the Univerſity of Paris, that the Great Duke of Florence drew him to That of Piſa (a). He taught Philoſophy, there, twelve Years (b); after which, he was invited to Padua, for the ſame Profeſſion. He was diſcharging it honourably, when, in 1643, he publiſhed a Book at Udina, which greatly diſpleaſed ſeveral Divines [A], though it was approved by the Holy Office. He had publiſhed another at Florence, in the Year 1632 (c). His Cut, prefixed to the Book, printed in the Year 1643, makes him Fifty one Years of Age; but the Year of the Century is not marked.

(a) See the Preface to his Circulus Piſanus, in lib. 8. Phyſicor. Ariſtot.

(b) See his firſt Epiſtle dedicatory.

(c) Entitled, Dubitationes, Gul. Galilæi. Lyncei.

[A] He publiſhed a Book —— which greatly diſpleaſed ſeveral Divines.] The Title of it is Circulus Piſanus. See, here, the Judgment, which an Archdeacon of Canterbury paſſed on it. "Hunc (Cæſalpi-
" num) eâdem impietatis viâ & ratione non modò ſe-
" cutus eſt, ſed ſuperavit, Claudius Berigardus Moli-
" nenſis, qui unà cum impiâ Ariſtotelis diſciplinâ
" obſoletam illam quoque veterum Ionicorum (quem-
" admodum de iis ipſe cenſuit ac alii plerique cen-
" ſuerunt) revocavit; cùm enim diſputationes ſuas
" dialogorum conſuetudine perſcripſit, ſermonem in
" duas perſonas Charilaum & Ariſtæum diſtribuit,
" quorum alter Ariſtotelem, qui præter materiam,
" quendam primum motorem, providentiæ tamen
" expertem, potuit, alter antiquos iſtos defendit, quos
" omnia corporea eſſe velle, nullumque primum mo-
" torem ab univerſo corporeo diſtinxiſſe putavit.
" Atque adeo uno eodémque opere diverſas cùm Epi-
" cureæ tum Peripateticæ impietatis rationes adorna-
" vit, quanquam Ariſtotelis diſciplinam fuſiùs & ar-
" dentiùs excoluit, atque eam potiſſimum quam libro
" Phyſicorum octavo, libriſque de Cœlo & rerum
" Generatione, tradidit, quibus univerſam mundi fa-
" bricam ſine Providentiâ architectrice extruxiſſe ſe
" putat Philoſophus. Neque nefaria ſua dogmata diſ-
" persè uno aut altero capite (ut Cæſalpinus) inſinua-
" vit, ſed apertè omnem Peripateticæ impietatis ratio-
" nem ſecutus eſt, neque numinis providentiam ut
" ille è rerum naturâ tollere ſatis habuit, niſi & falsè
" dictis (qualia vir non admodum facetus potuit) in-
" creparet (1). —— Hunc autem ſicut & Cæſalpinum,
" quanquam multò uberiùs rem tractavit, & quidem
" integrum peripateticæ impietatis ſyſtema deſcripſit,
" hoc loco redarguere operæ pretium non exiſtimo,
" quòd in uno Ariſtotele vincantur qui ab eo ſteterunt
" omnes (2). —— He (Cæſalpinus) was not only fol" lowed but ſurpaſſed, in this Way and Method of " Impiety, by Claudius Berigardus of Moulins; *who,
" together with the blaſphemous Doctrine of* Ariſtotle,
" revived That of the ancient Ionians, *obſolete both in " his own, and the Opinion of Others: for, writing
" his Diſputations in the Way of Dialogue, he divides
" the Diſcourſe between two Perſons,* Charilaus *and
" Ariſtippus; of whom the One defends* Ariſtotle,
" *who, beſides Matter, ſuppoſed a certain Firſt Mover,
" but denied a Providence, the Other vindicates thoſe
" ancient Philoſophers, who, be ſuppoſed, would have
" every thing to be corporeal, and to have made no
" diſtinction between the firſt Mover, and the Corporeal
" Univerſe. And thus, in one and the ſame Work, has
" he diſplayed the different Arguments both of the* Ari-
" ſtotelean *and Peripatetic Impiety, though he more
" largely and zealouſly cultivated the Doctrines of " Ariſtotle, That in particular, which he has deliver-
" ed in the Eighth Book of his Phyſics, and his Book,
" de Cœlo & Rerum Generatione, in which the Phi-
" loſopher pretends to have raiſed the Fabric of the " Univerſe without an Architectal Providence. Nor " has he inſinuated his wicked Tenets in One or Two " Chapters (as* Cæſalpinus *has done) but has openly
" eſpouſed the whole Peripatetic Impiety; nor was he
" ſatisfied, like him, with deſtroying a Providence,
" but (which requires no very great Degree of Wit)
" muſt ridicule and laugh at the Notion. ----- But " it is not worth my while, at preſent, to confute this " Author, any more than* Cæſalpinus, *though he has " handled the Subject much more copiouſly, and indeed
" delineated a compleat Syſtem of Peripatetic Impiety,
" becauſe, in* Ariſtotle *alone, All his Followers ſtand
" condemned.*" Mr de Villemandy, a French Miniſter (3), paſſes the ſame Judgment; for he looks upon Berigardus as a great Favourer of Pyrrhoniſm, and a Propigator of Impiety: "Veſtigiis ejus (Pomponatii)
" inſtitit Berigardus in Circulis Piſanis ſub ſæculi hu-
" jus initium. Quanta ab his, nonnulliſque aliis
" ejuſdem ordinis doctoribus, malorum ſeges in ſcientiis,

(1) Samuelis Parker, Diſput. de Deo. &c. pag. 67.

(2) Ib. ibid. pag. 68.

(3) He was Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Saumur, at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and he has been ſince Rector of the Walloon College at Leyden.

Digitized by Google

" ſcientiis, ſocietate civili, & religione luxuriarit, no-
" runt eruditi (4). —— Berigardus in his Circuli Piſa-
" ni tred in His (Pomponatius's) Steps, about the " beginning of this Century. The Learned know what
" a plentiful Crop of Evils has ſprung up, by means of
" theſe and the like Teachers, in The Sciences, in Ci-
" vil Society, and in Religion." He explains himſelf more fully in another place. " Ipſorum quidem dubi-
" tationes, contendendique pruritus, eò uſque non
" evagantur, ut vel Divinam Providentiam, vel etiam
" Exiſtentiam, aperte ſummoveant; ita tamen proce-
" dunt eorum nonnulli, ut ſummovere velle videan-
" tur: utcunque ſit, ſuſpecta eſt admodum eorum reli-
" gio ac fides. Cum, ex. g. Claudius Berigardus, in
" Circulis ſuis Piſanis, res omnes Phyſicas, imo &
" Divinas pleraſque, ex principiis Ariſtotelis ita decla-
" rat & aſtruit, ut eaſdem illas ex oppoſitis Anaxi-
" mandri hypotheſibus, purum atheiſmum redolenti-
" bus, continuò impugnet ac ſubvertat; an quicquam
" in rebus Phyſicis ſtabile & immotum relinquit?
" Nonne contrà perpetuâ ſua ille libratione cunctas
" ſuſpendit? Deinde quò tendit aſſumpta hæc Ana-
" ximandri hypotheſis, quam Berigardus Ariſtotelicæ
" longè præfert, niſi eò ut in Supremi Numinis ejuſ-
" que Providentiæ locum infinitam quandam mate-
" riam, infinitis corporibus diſſimilaribus, ex ſeipſis
" mobilibus, conflatam, hoc eſt, in Veri Dei locum
" Cæcam Naturam ſubſtituat (5)? —— Their Scepticiſm, and Itch of Diſputation, do not run ſuch lengths, as openly to ſet aſide the Providence, or Exiſtence, of God; yet ſome of them proceed ſo far, that they ſeem inclined to deny both: be it as it will, there is great reaſon to ſuſpect their Religion and their Faith. For inſtance, when Claudius Berigardus, in his Circuli Piſani, ſo lays down and eſtabliſhes all Phyſical Effects, and even many Divine, upon Ariſtotle's Principles, as immediately to attack, and overthrow, them by the Oppoſite Hypotheſes of Anaximander, which ſavour of downright Atheiſm, can be he ſaid to have left any thing certain, and that may be depended upon, in Natural Philoſophy? On the contrary, does he not bring every thing into doubt by his continual Wavering? Laſtly, whither tends this Hypotheſis of Anaximander, which Berigardus has aſſumed, and prefers to That of Ariſtotle, but to ſubſtitute an infinite Matter, compoſed of infinite diſſimilar, ſelf-moving, Corpuſcles, in the Room of a Supream Deity, and his Providence; that is, Blind Nature in the Room of the True God?" He quotes him, page 100, as having ſaid a Thing, which is full of Libertiniſm; but it is worth remarking, that the Words, which he aſcribes to him, and which are printed in Italics, are not to be found in his Work. Theſe are his Words. " Ex iis duci quidem notionem Virtutis cujuſdam,
" quæ omnia diſpoſuerit, ac ſapientiſſime regat, ſed
" hanc nihil aliud eſſe, quam Univerſi totius corporei
" vigorem, ab ipſo ſola ratione diſtinctum: cujus
" Univerſi ſingulæ partes, divinitatis participes, ſe
" ipſis miſceantur ad omnia componenda, nullo alio
" Intellectu ordinante, quam ſua ipſarum energia,
" perinde ad finem optimum tendente ac ſi ab ali-
" qua mente dirigerentur (6). ------ Hence we de-
" duce the Notion of a certain Virtue, which diſpoſed,
" and moſt wiſely governs, all things; but that This
" Virtue is nothing elſe but the Energy of the whole
" corporeal Univerſe, and is diſtinct from it only in the " Order of our Ideas; that All things are formed by
" the Intermixture of the ſeveral Parts of This Uni-
" verſe, each partaking of Divinity, and ranged in " order by no other Intellect, than their own Energy,
" tending as ſurely to the beſt end, as if directed by
" any Mind whatever." Mr de Villemandy ſhould, therefore, have told his Readers, that he did not quote the Text of Berigardus, but the Paraphraſe of his Thought. I have quoted That Author, in the Article RUFINUS, Remark [C].

(4) Petrus de Villemandy, in Scepticiſmo debellato, pag. 11.

(5) Id. ibid. pag. 28, 29.

(6) Villemandy, ubi ſupra, pag. 100. He quotes Berigard. Circulor. Piſanor. Parte II. Circulo 19.

BERYTUS, a maritime Town of Phœnicia, near Mount Libanus, was alſo called Beroë [A]. It was ſaid, that Saturn built it (a). It had a good Harbour, the Deſcription whereof is to be found in the Itinerary of John Phocas (b). Strabo ſays, that it was ruined by Trypho, and rebuilt by the Romans (c). It was Auguſtus, who rebuilt it (d), and made a Colony of it, which was called Julia Felix (e), and enjoyed the Jus Italicum (f). Agrippa led two Legions thither (g). It was one of the three Cities, in which the Civil-Law was publickly taught [B]; The other two were Rome, and Conſtantinople. There is ſome reaſon to believe, that there were more Profeſſors in Berytus, than in either of the other two [C]. The Conflagrations, Inundations, and Earthquakes, which ruined it ſeveral Times, did not hinder the Law-Schools from

(a) Stephan. Byzant. in voce Βηρυτός.

(b) See Berkelius, in Steph. Byzantin. voce Βηρυτός.

(c) Strabo, lib. xvi. pag. 520.

(d) Euſeb. in Chron. n. 2003.

(e) Plinius, lib. v. cap. 20. p. 274.

(f) Ulpianus de Cenſibus apud Scalig. Animadv. in Euſebium, n. 1003, pag. 121.

(g) Strabo, ubi ſupra.

[A] It was alſo called Beroë.] Neither the Teſtimony of Euſebius, alledged by Father Hardouin (1), nor That of Stephanus Byzantinus, alledged by William Grotius (2), ſerve me for a Proof; for I have not found, that Euſebius, or Stephanus Byzantinus, ſay ſo. My Proofs are Thoſe, which Scaliger found in the Epigrams of John Barbucalles, on the burning of Berytus, and in the Forty firſt Book of the Dionyſiaca of Nonnus (3), and Thoſe, which Mr Menage diſcovered in the third Book of the ſame Dionyſiaca (4), and in an Epigram of the Anthologia (5), where Bertrand (6) would, without Reaſon, have changed the Word Βερόη into That of Βηρυτός (7).

(1) Nam, & Beroëam appellatam eſſe auctor eſt Euſebius in Chron. Harduin. in Plin. lib. v. cap. 20. pag. 574.

(2) Guil. Grotius de vitis Jriſconſ. lib. ii, cap. 6. pag. 144.

(3) Scalig. Animad. in Euſeb. n. 1713. pag. 130.

(4) Menagius, Jur. Civil. Amœnit. cap. xxiv. pag. 132.

(5) It is in the firſt Title of the fourth Book.

(6) Bertrand. de vitis Juriſconſ. p. 4.

(7) Mr Menage, and Will. Grotius, as cited abo e, conſute him.

[B] It was one of the three Cities, in which the Civil-Law was publickly taught.] In all the Roman Empire, there were but theſe three Cities, which were permitted to have Schools of Law. This is ſurprizing, when we conſider the Extent of That Empire; and more ſurprizing ſtill, when we think of the many Univerſities, which are at preſent in Europe. What a Change of Cuſtoms? The ſeven United-Provinces, which are but a Point in the Map, in compariſon of the Roman Monarchy, have twice or thrice as many Schools of Civil-Law, as there were in That vaſt State. Let us prove what ought to be proved: " Hæc autem tria volumina (they are Juſtinian's
" Words) (8) à nobis compoſita tradi eis tam in regiis
" urbibus (9), quàm in Berytienſium pulcherrima ci-
" vitate (quam & legum nutricem bene quis appellet)
" tantummodo volumus: quod jam & à retro princi-
" pibus conſtitutum eſt, & non in aliis locis, quæ à " Majoribus tale non meruerint privilegium. — We " will, that theſe Three Volumes, compoſed by us, be " delivered only to Thoſe of the Royal Cities (Rome
" and Conſtantinople) and the flouriſhing City of
" Berytus, which may deſervedly be called The Nur-
" ſery of The Law: it having been ſo conſtituted and
" appointed by Our Predeceſſors, and no other Places
" having deſerved to enjoy ſuch a Privilege." Theſe Words inform us, that the Predeceſſors of Juſtinian fixed the number of the Schools of Civil-Law to Three; but it is not known, at what time This was done. The firſt, who, in Mr Menage's Opinion (10), has mentioned the School of Berytus, is Gregory Thaumaturgus (11), who lived under Alexander Severus. The Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Euſebius makes mention of a young Martyr, who ſuffered death under the Reign of Maximian, and who had ſtudied at Berytus (12). That School was, then, very flouriſhing (13). It was no leſs ſo, when Zachary of Mitylene wrote againſt Ammonius: He calls Berytus μητέρα τῶν νόμων, parentem legum. He flouriſhed in the VIth Century. His Treatiſe is in the eleventh Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum, in the Edition of Paris, 1644.

(8) Juſtinian. Præfat. in Digeſta de juris docendi ratione.

(9) That is, Rome, and Conſtantinople.

(10) Menag. Amœnit. juriſ. p. 133.

(11) In Oratione Panegyrica, ad Originem.

(12) Euſebius de Martyrib. Palæſtinæ, cap. 4. pag. 323.

[C] There were more Profeſſors in Berytus, than in either of the other two.] The Title de ſtudiis liberalibus urbis Romæ & Conſtantinopolitanæ, in the Theodoſian Code, and in That of Juſtinian, informs us, that there were but two Profeſſors of Law at Rome, and two at Conſtantinople. Now, as Juſtinian addreſſes the Conſtitution, de juris docendi ratione, to eight Profeſſors of Law, we muſt conclude, that there were four of them in the School of Berytus. See Mr Menage (14).

(13) See Bertrand in Vitis Juriſ. pag. 5, who quotes lib. i, C. qui æt. ſe excuſ.

(14) Menag. ubi ſupra.

Digitized by Google

from being ſet up there again [D]. The Metropolitan Dignity, which Theodoſius the Younger granted to the Biſhops of Berytus, was only titular [E].

[D] The Conflagrations, &c. did not hinder the Law Schools from being ſet up there again.] For proof of this, I will give you the following Words of Francis Baudouin. " Berytum Syriæ " urbem fuiſſe nutricem legum Ro. ait. noſter. " Juſt. ut & Juriſprudentiæ Eunapius vocat, & " ante utrumque Nonnus multo magis. Quid igi- " tur? Tempore Conſtantii terræ motu convulſam " fuiſſe ait Cedrenus. Sed fuiſſe reſtitutam & tempore " Juſtiniani noſtri floruiſſe conſtat. Cum vero Juſti- " nianus jam illi ſuos juris civilis libros explicandos " tradidiſſet, ecce horribiliori terræ motu cum audi- " toribus & doctoribus abſorpta eſt. Teſtis eſt Aga- " thias. Sed idem teſtis eſt eo caſu minime deterri- " tum Juſtinianum fuiſſe quominus illam inſtaureret. " Ergo rurſus inſtauratam eſſe quo magis ſemper ex- " taret ſedes juriſprudentiæ. Mirum vero, ecce " paulo poſt inundatione & incendio iterum vaſtatam " eſſe lego. Nam id teſtatur vetus liber Græcorum " Epigrammatum. Necdum tamen ceſſerunt talibus " tempeſtatibus qui afflictæ juriſprudentiæ opem ferre " debuerunt (15). —— Berytus, a City of Syria, was " called, by Juſtinian, the Nurſery of the Roman " Law; by Eunapius, the Mother of the Civil-Law; " and by Nonnus, before them both, much more. " What then? Cedrenus tells us, it was thrown down " by an Earthquake in the Time of Conſtantius. But " we know, that it was rebuilt, and that it was in a " flouriſhing Condition in the Reign of our Juſtinian. " But no ſooner had Juſtinian delivered to it his Books " of Civil-Law, to be explained, but it was ſwal- " lowed up, together with it's Auditors and Doctors, " by a more dreadful Earthquake. Agathias teſtifies " This. But the ſame Author informs us, that Juſti- " nian was not in the leaſt deterred by this Accident " from rebuilding it. It was therefore reſtored, that " it might for ever be The Seat of Law. Yet, ſtrange " to relate! I read, that it was, very ſoon after, " deſtroyed by an Inundation, and Conflagration. This " is teſtified by an old Book of Greek Epigrams. Yet " theſe great Calamities did not prevent Thoſe, whoſe " Duty it was, from ſuccouring the Diſtreſſed Law.

(15) Franciſcus Balduinus, ad L. ſi pact. C. de part. ſub fin.

[E] The Metropolitan Dignity —— of it's Biſhop was only titular.] Theodoſius the Younger, being impoſed upon by Euſtathius, Biſhop of Berytus, made this Decree (16). " Propter multas juſtaſque cauſas " Metropolitano nomine & dignitate civitatem Bery- " tum decernimus exornandam, jam ſuis virtutibus " coronatam. Igitur hæc quoque Metropolitanam " habeat dignitatem, Tyro nihil de ſuo jure deroge- " tur. Sit illa mater Provinciæ majorum noſtrorum " beneficio; hæc noſtro. —— Many and juſt Reaſons " moving us thereto, we decree, that the City of " Berytus, already crowned with it's Virtues, be " adorned with the Metropolitan Title and Dignity, " ſaving to Tyre it's full Rights and Privileges. Be " She the Mother of the Province, by the Favour of " our Predeceſſors; This by Our Own." The Emperor declares, that he will not leſſen the Rights of the Metropolis of Tyre in any manner whatever: He did not pretend, then, that the Biſhop of Berytus ſtruck at any of Thoſe Rights. Nevertheleſs, Euſtathius, ſpurred by Ambition, uſurped Authority over many Churches, which depended on the Metropolis of Tyre. Complaints were made of it to the Council of Chalcedon, who reſtrained him within his Bounds; and the Privilege, which Theodoſius had granted him, was like That, which Marcian afterwards granted to the City of Chalcedon. " Chalcedonenſem civitatem, in qua ſanctæ " fidei concilium geſtum eſt, Metropolis privilegia " habere ſancimus, nomine tantum, ſalva videlicet " Nicomedienſium civitati propria dignitate. —— " We decree, that Chalcedon, where was held a Coun- " cil of the Holy Faith, ſhall enjoy the Privileges of " a Metropolis, in Name only, that is ſaving the " juſt Dignity of the City of Nicomedia." Conſult Father Noris (17).

(16) It is in the 11th Book of the Code of Juſtinian. Tit. xxi.

(17) Noris de anno & epochis Syro Macedonum Diſſert. 4. cap. 3. p. 400, 401. Edit. Lipſ. 1696.

ST BERNARD, Abbot of Clairvaux, flouriſhed in the XIIth Century. He acquired ſo great an Eſteem, that the whole Weight of the Church ſeemed to lie on his Shoulders, and that Kings and Princes made choice of him for the general Arbitrator of their Differences [A]. It is certain, that he had very great Talents, and a great deal of Zeal; but ſome pretend, that his Zeal made him too jealous of Thoſe, who acquired a great Name by the Study of Human Learning; and they add, that his mild and eaſy Temper rendered him too credulous, when he heard any ill Report of Thoſe learned Perſons. They believe, that, by reaſon of theſe Principles, he ſuffered himſelf to be too much prejudiced againſt Abelard [B]. It is difficult to imagine, that he was free from human Paſſions, when he made it his whole Buſineſs to procure Anathemas againſt all Thoſe, who appeared to him to be Heterodox: But it is very eaſy to conceive, that his great Reputation, and the Ardour, with which he ſollicited the Condemnation of his Adverſaries, impoſed upon the Judges, and made the accuſed Perſons ſink under the Weight of Thoſe irregular Proceedings. However it be, he verified the Interpretation

[A] He acquired ſo great an Eſteem, that ----- Princes made choice of him for the general Arbitrator of their Differences.] It will not be improper, upon this Occaſion, to hear Francis d'Amboiſe: thus he expreſſes himſelf. " Plus favoris in " humilitate adeptus, quam Salomon in omni gloria " ſua, ita omnes in ſui admirationem ----- ad fa- " mam ſui nominis, ad ſui amorem & obſervantiam, " rapuit, ut ad eum totius Orbis Vota concurrerent, " ut ab ejus monitis & exemplis tota res monaſtica " & eccleſiaſtica pendere viſa ſit, ut ab ejus oraculis " Præſules, Principes, Populi, conſilium expeterent, " eumque induciarum ac pacis arbitrum agnoſcerent, " & ſe ejus orationibus omnes Ordines cupiverint " eſſe commendatos (1). ---- Having gained more " Favour in his Humility, than Solomon in all his " Glory, he was ſo generally admired and beloved, " that he had the good Wiſhes of the whole World, " that Monaſtic and Eccleſiaſtical Affairs ſeemed " wholly to depend on his Precepts and Example; that " he was conſulted as an Oracle by high and low, " and acknowledged as the Arbiter both of Truces " and of Peace, and that all Orders of Men deſired " to be recommended to his Prayers.

(1) Fr. Amboiſius Præfat. Operibus Abælardi præfixa.

[B] His Zeal made him jealous ----- and his eaſy Temper made him credulous ----- with regard to learned Men, and particularly Abelard.] I have quoted a long Paſſage of Francis d'Amboiſe, in the preceding Remark: here is another ſtill longer. " Pace " igitur Sancti Abbatis liceat dicere quod de eo au- " ſus eſt Annalibus mandare ejus diſcipulus, Claræ- " vallenſis quondam Monachus, demum Abbas Mo- " rimontanus, Otho, Epiſcopus, Friſingenſis, Leo- " poldi Pii Marchionis Auſtriæ filius, Frederici I. " Ænobarbi, cujus vitam ſcripſit, patruus, qui quam- " vis Abbatem ſuum in magna habuerit veneratione, " tamen ſcribit eum ex Religionis Chriſtianæ fervore " zelotypum, & ex habitudinali (ſic enim loquitur) " manſuetudine quodammodo credulum, ut Magiſtros " qui humanis rationibus & ſeculari ſapientiæ confi- " denter nimium inhærebant abhorreret, & de tali- " bus ſiniſtrum quid recitanti facile aurem præberet, " juxa illud Feſti, τὰ πολλὰ γελάμματα εἰς μα- " νιαν περιτρέπει. C. fieri potuit ut ſibi in ani- " mum induxerit quædam eſſe dicta aut ſcripta ab " Abælardo quæ non eſſent, aut quæ in pejorem " partem accipi non deberent (2)." ------- Let " me, therefore, by the Holy Abbot's Leave, repeat

(2) Ibid.

" what

Digitized by Google

tation of his Mother's Dream. She dreamed, when she was with Child of him, that she should be delivered of a white Dog, whose Barking should be very sonorous [C]. Being frighted at this Dream, she consulted an honest Monk, who said to her, Be of good Courage; you will have a Son, who shall keep God's House, and bark much against the Enemies of the Faith [D]. St Bernard did more, than the Prediction imported; for he barked sometimes against chimerical Enemies, against Errors, which were either meer Trifles, or unjust Interpretations of the Words and Thoughts of others (a): And, whether he was in the right, or in the wrong, he could give the Alarm admirably, and make the Thunder of his Triumphs resound [E]. He was more successful in exterminating the Heterodox, than in the Ruin of Infidels; and yet he attacked the latter, not only with the Force of his Eloquence, but with the extraordinary Arms, likewise, of Prophecy. By this means he increased the Troops of the Crusade more than can be expressed; but all the fair Promises, with which he fed them, vanished in Smoke; and, when it was complained, that he had sent a vast Number of Christians to the Slaughter, without stirring out of his Country, he came

(a) See Remark [L] of the Article BERENGARIUS.

" what has been recorded, in Annals, by a Disciple of " His, formerly a Monk of Clairvaux, I mean Otho, Bi- " shop of Frisingen, Son of Leopold the Pious, Marquis " of Austria, and Uncle of Frederic I. Ænobarbus, " whose Life he wrote; who, though he held his " Abbot in great Veneration, yet writes, that he was " blinded by a mistaken Zeal for the Christian Reli- " gion, and, through an habitual Mildness of Temper, " was become very credulous; insomuch, that he had " in abhorrence Those Teachers, who too confidently " adhered to Human Reasons, and worldly Wisdom, and " readily believed every Thing ill, which was reported " of such Persons; according to That of Festus, Much " Learning hath made thee mad. And this, perhaps, " occasioned him to take it into his Head, that some " things were said, or written, by Abelard, which " were not, or which should not have been taken in " a bad Sense."

[C] His Mother dreamed - - - - - she should be delivered of a white Dog, whose Barking should be very sonorous.] Her Name was Aletha; her Husband, the Father of St Bernard, was called Tesselinus. " Cum mater Aletha uxor Tesselini in utero gesta-
" ret, somnio vidit præsagium futuri partus, catel-
" lum scilicet se parituram totum candidum, in
(3) Id. ibid. ex Willelmo vitæ Bernardi, lib. i. " dorso subrusum, & clarè latrantem (3). - - - - - -
" His Mother Aletha, the Wife of Tesselinus,
" being with Child, saw, in a Dream, a Presage
" of the future Birth; to wit, a little white Dog,
" with a reddish Back, and barking with a shrill
" Tone."

[D] An honest Monk told her - - - - - she should have a Son - - - - - - who should bark much against the Enemies of the Faith.] I shall again quote Francis d' Amboise. " Cui (Alethæ) de illo terricula-
" mento anxiæ & scisciranti respondit religiosus qui-
" dam vaticinii spiramine afflatus: optimi catuli mater
" eris, qui Domus Dei custos futurus, validos pro
(4) Ibid. ex eodem. " ea contra inimicos fidei editurus est latratus (4).
" - - - - Aletha, greatly terrified, enquired of a cer-
" tain Monk, who, with a Spirit of Prophecy, said
" to her; you shall be the Mother of a most excel-
" lent little Dog, who shall guard the House of God,
" and bark strongly against the Enemies of the Faith."
He does not descend to the particular Explication of the White and Red, as others do, who say, That the Whiteness of This Dog signified, that St Bernard would be mild and courteous to the Friends of the House; that is, to pious Persons: And, that the Redness of the Dog signified, that he would be wild and fierce to the Impious, and Strangers; and that he would bark continually at them (5): For it is the Property of a good Dog to caress his Master's Friends and Domestics; and to fly with great Fury at Strangers, with continual barking, and even with biting. In peregrinos ferus & atrox eos cauda erecta continuis latratibus, imo morsibus, interdum insectetur (6). Francis d' Amboise, omitting this Distinction of the two Colours, observes, that St Bernard confirmed the Prophecy, and spared no body. Firmavit vaticinium nec enim ulli pepercit (7). He fell upon Abelard, Arnauld of Bresse, Peter de Bruys, Gilbert Porretanus, &c. In a Word, they do not do him Justice, who call him only a Hound, or a Mastiff Dog; he may, in some sense, be compared to Nimrod, and stiled, A mighty Hunter before the Lord (8).

(5) See Philippus Cæsius a Zeelen, in cælo Astronomico-poëtico. p. 256.

(6) Id. ibid.

(7) Fr. Amboes. in Præf. Apolog. ad Abælardi Opera.

(8) Genes. x, 9.

Give me leave to digress a little concerning the Dream of St Bernard's Mother. It was a lucky Thought of Him, who explained it; for, in short, can there be a better Symbol of Vigilance, than a Dog? Can there be a more natural Image of the Assaults, given to Error, as well viva voce, as in Writing, than the Barking of a Dog? Only we must take care not to carry the Comparison too far; since there are but too many Persons, in all Countries, and in all Ages, who, to avoid being called dumb Dogs, bark in Season, and out of Season, and bite, and tear, all who do not please them. Those Dogs, that were kept at Rome, to guard the Capitol, were designed to make a Noise at the approach of Robbers: And, for that Reason, it was not thought strange, that they barked in the Night, if they heard any body; for it is an unseasonable Time, which gives ground for Suspicions; and, therefore, they let them bark, whether Those, whom they heard go by, were honest Men, or Thieves; But, if these Dogs had barked, in the Day-time, at Those who came to the Temple to pay their Devotion, They would have had their Legs broken. I borrow this from an ancient Roman; the Application is easy to be made. " Anseribus cibaria publice locantur, & canes alun-
" tur in Capitolio ut significent si fures venerint. At
" fures internoscere non possunt, significant tamen,
" si qui noctu in Capitolium venerint: & quia id
" est suspicionsum, tametsi bestiæ sunt, tamen in eam
" partem potius peccant quæ est cautior. Quod si
" luce quoque canes latrent quum deos salutatum ali-
" qui venerint, opinor iis crura suffringantur, quod acres
" sint etiam tum quum suspicio nulla sit (9)." The Public maintains you to guard the Truth; make a Noise, then, against all Comers, if you have Ingenuity enough to compare yourself to a Dog, who cannot discern any Person through the Darkness of the Night. If you are in Darkness, either by reason of your Incapacity, or because Passions cloud your Judgment, and if you have the Honesty to acknowledge the Obscurity, which surrounds you, you ought to be excused; but if you pretend to the Quality of a Great Doctor, who acts only for the Glory of God, without any Motive of Personal Revenge; and, if, nevertheless, you involve a great Number of good Men in your Informations, your Libels, and Denunciations, you deserve to be punished; you are unworthy of your Station; you are a Dog, that falls indifferently on Friends and Foes; which must needs cause a thousand Disorders. You are one of those English Mastiffs, on which the Jesuit Maimbourg once employed one of the four Parts of his Sermon (10). Many Pamphlets, stuffed with Lamentations, and Extracts of complaining Letters, have appeared in Holland within these few Years, as if a very considerable Part of the Ministers, fled from France, had conspired to introduce the most abominable Errors, wherever they are dispersed (11). But, after all, not one guilty Person has been discovered, what Pains soever have been taken to do it. Ought such Dogs, destitute of Discernment, to go unpunished?

A Thought of Cicero, concerning the Dogs of the Capitol, applied to the Depositaries of Truth.

(9) Cicero pro Roscio Amerino, cap. xx.

(10) See the Preface, prefixed to the Defence of the French Translation of the New Testament, of Mons, Edit. of Cologne, 1668.

(11) The Bishop of Meaux drew great Advantages from them, in his Advertisements. See the History of the Works of the Learned, May, 1692, pag. 409, & seq.

[E] He could give the Alarm, admirably, and make the Thunder of his Triumphs resound.] I only tread in the Steps of the Sieur d' Amboise, a very good Catholic. He observes, that St Bernard's Letters, written to the Prelates of Rome, and to the Pope, came off with saying, that the Sins of Those, who had taken up the Cross, had prevented the Effect of his Prophecies [F]. There is no Impostor, but may shelter himself behind such an Intrenchment. St Bernard was canonized: He is one of the greatest Saints in the Romish Communion; and it is pretended, that he wrought a world of Miracles, both in his Life-time, and after his Death. Observe, that he once went up to his Neck into the Water, to free himself from the Temptation, into which the Sight of a Woman had led him (b). The best Edition that we have of his Works, is That of 1690. It is the second, which the learned Father Mabillon took care to procure. The Journalists of Leipsic have spoken very exactly of it (c): It is accompanied with several learned Prefaces. It is acknowledged, in one of them, that St Bernard taught, that the Souls of the Blessed are received into Heaven, and into the Society of the Angels, as soon as they are separated from their Bodies, but that they enjoy only the Sight of the Humanity of JESUS CHRIST, and not the Sight of GOD.

Digitized by Google

(b) Vita Bern. lib. i, cap. 3. apud Lyserum, Tract. de Polygam. pag. 130.

(c) In Sect. xi, Supplementorum, Tom. I. pag. 565.

Pope, were the fittest in the World to prejudice, and exasperate, them against Abelard; they mentioned nothing but Sacrileges, Lyons, and Dragons. "Legite, si placet, librum, quem dicit, Theologiæ, "legite & alium, quem dicunt, sententiarum, nec "non & illum qui inscribitur, Scito te ipsum, & "animadvertite quantæ ibi silvescant segetes sacri- "legiorum & errorum. - - - - Leonem evasimus, sed "Incidimus in Draconem (12). - - - - Read, I beseech "you, his Book (as he calls it) of Divinity; Read "another (as it is called) of his Sentences, and "That entituled, Know thy self; and observe how "plentifully Sacrilege and Error springs up in them. "- - - - - We have escaped a Lion, but are fallen in- "to the Claws of a Dragon." He was not contented to write in his own Name, but dictated some Letters for the Archbishop of Reims, and three of his Suffragans, in which they demanded the Thunders of the Court of Rome; and, when they had obtained the Condemnation of the Propositions, they had sent to the Pope, they published it abroad as a compleat Victory; though, at the bottom, the Pope had pronounced nothing against Abelard's Person. Their Flourishes, and the great Stir they made, prevented every where the Cause of the Accused from being heard. They prepossessed the Minds of every one. These are the common Artifices of Caballers; I do not say, that others never make use of them. "At "accusatores potentissimi, tanquam albis equis trium- "phantes, lætum pæana cantarunt, victoriamque suam "toto orbe disseminarunt; ita ut miser ille inaudi- "tus apud probos quamplurimos male audiret, & "ejus exemplaria, quæ Galliam Italiamque splen- "dore collustrarant, tanquam horrendi criminis car- "mina vel voracibus rogis cremanda traderentur, "vel in situ, squalore, & cinere veterum bibliothe- "carum latitantia putrescerent. (13). - - - - - But his "most powerful Accusers, triumphing as it were on "white Horses, sang a joyful Pæan, and spread their "Victory over all the World; insomuch, that the "poor Wretch was condemned, unheard, by many "good Men, and his Works, which were the Orna- "ment of France and Italy, like blasphemous, or ob- "scene, Poems, were either thrown into the Fire, "or rotted in old dusty Libraries."

(12) Amboesius, ubi supra.

(13) Id. ib.

(14) Read the History of the Crusades, by Father Maimbourg, lib. iv, pag. 33, & seq. of Part II, Edit. Holl.

(15) The Author of Several Thoughts on Comets, p. 779, 780.

[F] When he was reproached with the ill Success of his Crusade, he came off with saying, that the Sins of the Croises has prevented the Effects of his Prophecies.] This is, in truth, the whole Center of his Manifesto (14); for, if he alledges the Example of Moses, to shelter himself under the inviolable Authority of so great a Name, it is because he pretended, that the Members of the Crusade were no less polluted with Crimes, than the Children of Israel, and that therefore both had diverted the Effects of the Promises. See what a modern Philosopher (15) thought upon This.

BEROALDUS (MATTHEW) [A], born at Paris, taught the Hebrew Tongue at Orleans, in 1565. Those of Rochel offered him an Employ in their College, in the Year 1571 (a). I believe he did not accept of it. He was in Sancerre, when the Marshal de la Châtre besieged it, a little after the Massacre of Paris (b); and He did the Inhabitants great Services by his wise and courageous Counsels [B]. At his leaving Sancerre, he retired to Sedan, where he read Historical Lectures. Some were offended at the manner, in which it is pretended, that he spoke of Francis I, in his Lectures [C]. I cannot tell at what time he was Minister of Geneva [D]; but it

(a) Colomes. Gall. Orient. pag. 45.

(b) See the History of Sancerre, pag. 199.

[A] He was called MATTHEW.] Theophilus Raynaud, by Mistake, calls him Michael (1). Thomasius, I find, doubts, whether This be a Mistake (2): He should not have doubted of it.

(1) Theoph. Rayn. de bonis & malis Libris, pag 166, & in Theol. Nat. pag. 66.

(2) Thomasius de Plagio Literar. pag. 189.

[B] And did the Inhabitants of Sancerre great Services by his wise and courageous Counsels.] D'Aubigné observes this in two Places. "The Sancerrois, "says he (3), composed also a Council, in which "they found themselves particularly happy in Be- "roaldus, formerly Hebrew Reader at Orleans. He "accompanied his Counsels with Courage. - - - - - "The Besieged, being very much astonished at this "News, wanted to be supported by their Pastors; "but chiefly stood in need of the wise and coura- "geous Counsels of Beroaldus; according to which, "they resolved to endure all the Miseries of a Siege, "and that they, who would not consent to it, "should be thrown over the Walls (4)."

(3) Tom. i. lib. i. ch. 9. pag. 578. ad Ann. 1572.

(4) Ibid. ch. 12, pag. 599, 600.

[C] Some were offended at the manner, in which it is pretended, that he spoke of Francis I, in his Lectures.] A Minister, who was then at Sedan, and who abjured his Religion afterwards, published what follows. "It is to be noted, that Matthew Beroal- "dus, a learned Man among them, and one of their "Professors, being retired from Sancerre to Sedan, "was desired, by the President la Louëtte, and some "others, to read some Lectures; which he did in "the same Place, where they preach, and delivered "a System of Chronology, which he said he had "made. Now, being come to the Reign of King "Francis I, a Prince of Glorious Memory, and "whom we may justly call the Father of Learning, "and Restorer of Sciences, in This Kingdom of "France; Advantages, which cannot be sufficiently "valued, and which all Europe felt afterwards: Be- "ing, I say, come to the Reign of This Great and "Virtuous Prince, he spoke so impudently, and ir- "reverently, of him, and of his most Illustrious, "and most Christian, Posterity, that I know not one "Man, breathing the Air of France, but would have "been scandalized at it. The President, the Bayliff, "and other Magistrates, and all the Ministers, re- "siding then at Sedan, were present; who, if they "had had a Christian, and French, Heart, and not "ungrateful for the Benefits arising from Learning, "which That Good Prince revived, would certain- "ly have been offended at it as well as myself, and "would not have tolerated such a Person. At least, "the President, and others, who had Authority in "the City, should have given Notice of it to the "Lord of the Place, who, being well affected to "the Good of The Crown, and the King's Service, "would, I am sure, have punished him according "to his Deserts. But is was smothered. I spoke "of it myself to the President, shewing him some "other Faults, which the said Beroaldus had com- "mitted in Chronology; and I exhorted him, by the "Obedience, which we all owe to our Prince; and it cannot be queſtioned, that he was ſo; and, ſince he taught Philoſophy there, in the Year 1576 (c), there is ſome reaſon to believe, that he exerciſed the Miniſtry, there, at that time. He publiſhed a Book of Chronology, in the Year 1575, in which there is, doubtleſs, much Learning, but little Solidity. In ſtriving to do Honour to the Scripture, he loſes himſelf in a Labyrinth, which he cannot get out of. He pretends, that no other Guide is to be followed, in the Doctrine of Times, but the Writings inſpired by GOD [E]. Scaliger has plainly ſhewed the Inſufficiency of this Hypotheſis; but he has inveighed too much againſt The Author. Moreri goes too far, when he affirms, that, beſides the Latin Chronology, there appeared many other Works of Beroaldus, and that he died about the Year 1575, or 76. La Croix du Maine, whom he quotes, does not ſay ſo; but only, that Beroaldus was no longer living in the Year 1584, and that it was probable, his other Compoſitions would be publiſhed by the Care of his Son, the Sieur de Verville.

Digitized by Google

(c) See Remark [D].

" for the Honour of our Nation, to perform his " Duty in it; who anſwered me ſomewhat coldly, " that he could have wiſhed it had not been ſaid, " and that it was, in truth, a Piece of Imprudence. " Yet he made his Report of my Remonſtrance; " which incenſed them the more againſt me; tho' " without any outward Appearance of it, except a " few croſs Looks: but they waited for an Oppor- " tunity (5)." I am willing this Diſcourſe ſhould be as much ſuſpected of Falſhood, as any one pleaſes; and, if it be falſe, ſo much the better for this Dictionary; which ought principally to contain the Errors of other Books. Let this be ſaid with reſpect to a great many other Paſſages, which ſhall be quoted.

(5) Defence of Matthew de Launoy, and Henry Pennetier, lately Miniſters, &c. pag. 32. This Book was printed at Paris, in 1577.

[D] I cannot tell, at what time he was Miniſter of Geneva.] Beza does not determine it; He only gives Beroaldus the Quality of his Colleague in the Church, which imports, as Colomies (6) well obſerves, that Beroaldus exerciſed the Miniſtry at Geneva. He alſo taught Philoſophy there, as the ſame Colomies obſerves (7), and as may be proved by the Epiſtle Dedicatory, which Lambert Danæus prefixed to the Treatiſe of Hereſies: It is ſaid there, that, in 1576, Matthew Beroaldus taught Philoſophy at Geneva. Here are Beza's own Words: Aliam igitur rurſus rationem iniit vir beatæ memoriæ, & meus ſuperioribus annis in hac Eccleſia collega, Beroaldus (8). I believe Beroaldus went to be Profeſſor at Geneva, after he had been ſo at Sedan. Scaliger ſays, that he read with great Applauſe, and was admired at Sedan, and at Geneva, where there were ſome great Men (9).

(6) Colomeſii Gallia Orient. p. 46.

(7) Ibid. pag. 45.

(8) Beza in Acta Apoſtol. cap. xiii. ver. 20, where he treats of the 450 Years, that paſſed from Joshua to Samuel.

(9) In Scaligeranis.

[E] He would have no other Guide —— than the Writings inſpired by GOD.] In conſequence of this Maxim, he ſtruck Cambyſes, and Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes, out of the Catalogue of the Kings of Perſia: for, ſays he, Thoſe Names appear no where in the Scripture; — quæ nomina, quia nunquam extant in Scriptura, è nobis ſunt prætermiſſa (10). Voſſius pretends, that he is miſtaken as to the Fact; and that, if he was right in that Reſpect, he would, nevertheleſs, be much to blame in denying the Exiſtence of Thoſe Kings, under pretence that the Scripture makes no mention of them. Scaliger calls this manner of explaining the Times Fanatical and Prophetical (taking the laſt Word in an odious Senſe) and maintains, that, if the prophane Authors had not ſupplied us with ſome Light, the Chronology of the Scripture could never have been diſentangled. Actum erat de Chronologia ſacra, abſque exoticis monumentis foret (11). He calls Pareus Hierophantam Beroaldinum.

(10) Beroald, lib. iii. Chron. c. 8. apud Voſſium de Scient. Mathem. pag. 233.

(11) In enchoChronol. prophetiæ, pag. 5, apud Voſſium, ibid.

BEROALDUS (FRANCIS), Sieur de Verville, Son of the foregoing, was born at Paris [A], the Twenty eighth of April, 1558 (a). He was a Man of Learning and Parts; but he did not make choice of proper Materials to perfect his natural Gifts. He took the pains to tranſlate Polyphilus's Dream (b), and afterwards to compoſe a Piece of the ſame Stamp; it was entituled, The Travels of Fortunate Princes; which he called Steganographical. He wrote ſeveral Books of Chymiſtry, and ſeveral Tomes of Romances (c) [B], which are very tedious, and little better, than the Writings of Nerveze, and the Sieur des Eſcuteaux. Perhaps he would have done better to have continued exerciſing himſelf on the ſame Subjects, by which he appeared firſt in public. Being but Twenty two Years of Age, he publiſhed ſome Commentaries on the Mechanics of James Beſſon (d). He had ſcarce tried his Fortune this way, but he ran after the Philoſopher's Stone. In the Year 1583, were publiſhed His Spiritual Apprehenſions, Poems, and other Philoſophical Works, with ſome Enquiries after the Philoſopher's Stone (e). The Year after, he publiſhed a Poem, entituled, The Idea of a Republic (f).

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 430.

(b) Sorel Biblioth. Franç. pag. 173.

(c) Ib. pag. 177, 256.

(d) Printed at Lyons, in 1580, and 1581, as La Croix du Maine ſays, pag. 91.

(e) La Croix du Maine, pag. 92.

(f) Idem. pag. 480.

[A] He was born at Paris.] Mr de Marolles ought, then, to ſtrike him out of the Liſt, which he has given, of the Illuſtrious Tourangeaux (1).

(1) Memoirs, pag. 255.

[B] He wrote ſeveral kinds of tedious Romances.] He was Author of The Adventures of Florida, Minerva's Cloſet, The Maid of Orleans, The Hiſtory of Herodias, " and ſome other Works, wherein he in- " troduces ſome Lords and Ladies, whoſe Converſations are not very ingenious; but, what is to be " eſteemed therein, is, the Sentiments of Honour " and Virtue, which are the fineſt in the World, " with many Secrets of Nature and Art, by means " whereof many extraordinary things are perſormed; " whereas the ancient Romanus referred every thing to " Magic, for want of Invention and Learning (2)."

(2) Sorel Bibl. Franç. pag. 177.

BERQUIN (LEWIS de,) a Gentleman of the Country of Artois, was burnt for the Proteſtant Religion, at Paris, the Twenty ſecond of April, 1529 [A]. He was

(4) In the Diſcourſe concerning the Church, at the end of the Life of Henry IV.

(5) The Night following, which was the Eve of St Martin, the Corn was blighted all over France, which cauſed a Famine, and Plague, in divers Places. Beza Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. i. pag. 8.

[A] He was burnt, at Paris, the Twenty ſecond of April 1529.] We have a Proof of this Chronology in a Letter of Eraſmus, dated the firſt of July 1529 (1). It contains an ample Relation of the Life and Death of Lewis de Berquin. It is expreſsly noted there, that he was burnt decimo Calend. Majas. This Proof would fix the Day of his Death, were it not for another Letter of Eraſmus (2), in which the Execution of Berquin is placed on the ſeventeenth of April, XV Calend. Majas (3). This Letter is dated the ninth of May 1529. All, that Eraſmus can do, is to fix us to the Month of April 1529; we muſt look on all the other Varieties as Miſtakes. Mezerai is miſtaken in the Year, and perhaps alſo in the Day: He affirms, that Berquin was burnt on the Twenty firſt of April, of the Year 1528 (4). John Crepin, in the Acts of the Martyrs, places the Death of This Perſon in the Month of May, in general, 1529. Beza places it on the Tenth of November, in the ſame Year (5), both in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and in another Work. Frugibus nocte poſt interitum illius proxima (qui fuit undecimus dies Novembris anno Domini

(1) The 4th of the 24th Book, pag. 1277.

(2) The 40th of the 30th Book.

(3) Bodin, De republ. lib. iv. cap. ult pag. 475.

Digitized by Google

was Lord of a Village, of which he bore the Name (a), and was very much esteemed in the Court of France, and honoured with the Title of the King's Counsellor (b). He lived a good Life, and regularly observed the Precepts of the Church. He was a Layman, and unmarried; yet he was never censured, in relation to his Chastity. Erasmus, who had learned these Particulars from some Persons, whom he could depend upon, adds, that they had also informed him, that Berquin abhorred Lutheranism (d), and that the great Crime, which was found in him, was, that he openly professed to hate morose and peevish Divines, and Monks, who were no less fierce, than ignorant (e). He spoke very ill of them publickly. This paved the way to a bloody War, that began with a Quarrel, which he had with one of the most violent Inquisitors of That Time (f) [B]. It was not long before they accused him as an Heretic: Certain Propositions were extracted from a Book, which he had published; whereupon he was Imprisoned; but the Judges, finding no Crime in him, acquitted him [C]. The Accusers pretended, that he had escaped Punishment by the Royal Authority; as for him, he said he was not beholden to any thing but the Justice of his Cause; and he behaved as formerly. He translated some of Erasmus's Books into French [D], and added something of his own to them. Immediately, Noel Beda, and his Emissaries, began a new War; They extracted several Things out of Those Books, and, having informed against them, as pernicious Errors, they occasioned the Author's second Imprisonment. The Cause being judged, some Monks went to tell him the definitive Sentence, which was passed upon him: Which was, that his Books should be burnt; that he should retract his Errors, and submit to such Satisfactions, as should be prescribed to him; and that (a) Erasmus, Epist. iv. lib. 24. pag. 1278.

(b) Id. Epist. 44. lib. 30. pag. 1931.

(d) Ibid. pag. 1279.

(e) Hoc ajebant in eo crimen esse gravissimum, quod ingenuè præ se ferebat odium in morosos quosdam theologos ac monachos non minus feroces, quam stolidos. In hos palam debacchabatur, nec stomachum suum dissimulare poterat. Ib.

(f) Guilhelmus Quernus, or a Quercu.

mini 1329.) in tota Gallia frigore perustis, & gravissima tum fame tum etiam peste consequuta (6). Spondanus plainly shews, that Beza is in an Error, by the fourth Letter of the Twenty fourth Book of Erasmus, which, being dated the first of July 1529, mentions Berquin's Execution; but he is afterwards mistaken, when he gives the Reason, why he thinks, that Beza falsified That Date (7). He says, It was done to make what was to be said on the Judgments of God more probable. Beza says, that Heaven declared for Berquin, and reversed the Sentence of the Judges, because, the following Night, the Frost spoiled all the Corn in the Kingdom; from whence a great Famine, and Mortality, ensued. Judicium Sententia veluti cælitus rescissa triumpharit, frugibus nocte, &c (8). Nothing was more easy than to criticize Beza with Justice on this Point: For first, it is to dispose of the particular Providence of God a little too rashly, to say, that the Plagues, which desolate a whole Kingdom, are a Vengeance for the unjust Death of one Man. In the second place, Frost can do but little damage to Corn, the tenth, or eleventh, of November. They sow at that time, almost all the Kingdom over: and it is at least very certain, that the greatest Part of what is sowed is out of danger at that time. So that, if Beza had, with a premeditated Design, falsified the Date, he would have taken care not to pitch upon the Eve, or the Day, of St Martin. The right Time, noted by Erasmus, was much properer for his Reflexion; for Cold may hurt the Fruits of the Earth towards the end of April. Thus you see how Spondanus might have confuted the moral Reflexion of Beza. If he had criticized him from my first Consideration, he would have disarmed himself; for he is as much accustomed, as any one, to say, that such or such Evils happen as Punishments for This or That. One of Those, who wrote against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism (9), observes, that Berquin was executed, the Twenty second of March, on the Eve of St Martin, the Pope, in the Place Maubert. What he adds of Dr Merlin, and which I shall relate below (10), persuades me, that he copied Beza; only he took notice, that, the Month of November not being a Time, wherein Corn can receive any damage by the Cold, he sought another St Martin's Eve.

Let it not be wondered at, that the Day of such a Martyrdom was not well known to the Protestant Writers, and that they have variously reported The Date of it. The Battle of Cerisoles, the Death of Antony de Bourbon, King of Navarre, the Barricades of Paris, in the Time of Henry III, were not better dated by great Authors. See the Extract, which Mr Bernard gave, of a Book of Father du Londel, in his News from the Republic of Letters, page 224, of the Month of February, 1699.

[B] He had a Quarrel with one of the most violent Inquisitors.] Berquin was no Coward; he must have had a great Courage, since he feared neither an A Quercu, nor a Noel Beda. He durst, not only defend himself against them, but even attack them: Beza praises him for it. "Adfuit autem animi tanta generositas, ut maxime omnium tunc metuendos crabrones in ipsis eorum cavis, Bedam videlicet & a Quercu (de quibus scripserat, procul illos configens, Erasmus, Lutetiæ Betam sapere & Quercum concionari) Matælogorum ejus seculi principes, in ipso eorum sterquilinio sit ausus non modò utcunque lacessere, sed impietatis etiam accusatos non unius anni certamine tum voce tum scriptis strenuè exercere (11). —— He was a Man of such Courage, that he ventured, not only to attack, upon their own Dunghill, but vigorously to pursue, with an Action of Impiety, during a Contest of more than one Year, both in Speech and Writing, Those most formidable Hornets, Beda and a Quercu, of whom Erasmus, lashing them at a Distance, wrote, that, at Paris, a Birch-Tree pretended to Learning, and an Oak to Oratory." See, here, what Erasmus says, concerning the Process, wherein Berquin was the Aggressor. "Non enim solùm promittebat sibi absolutionem, verumetiam victoriam esse in manibus, sed malle seriùs aliquanto finiri causam, quo magnificentiùs triumpharet. Jamque mutatis vicibus, ipsam facultatem sacratissimam, monachos & Beddaicos reos peragebat impietatis. Nam quædam arcana deprehenderat in illorum actis (12). —— For he not only promised himself an honourable Acquittal, but even that he had the Victory in his Hands; but was willing that the Determination of the Cause should be protracted, that he might triumph the more splendidly. And now, changing Hands, he brought an Action of Impiety against the most sacred Order, The Monks, and Bedaists: for he had discovered some secret Transactions of Theirs." See the Remark [A], of the Article BEDA, Citation (7).

[C] He was accused as an Heretic —— but the Judges —— acquitted him.] He was accused of condemning the Custom, which Preachers have, of invoking the Holy Virgin, instead of invoking the Holy Ghost. It is said, that he did not approve, that the Holy Virgin should be called the Fountain of Grace, and that, in the Evening-Hymn, she should be called our Hope and our Life. He said, that This was more applicable to Jesus Christ, and that the Scripture does not favour the Modern Usage. These are the Trifles, for which he was imprisoned, and in danger of being treated as an Heretic. Ob hujusmodi nænias ductus est in carcerem, reus hæreseos periclitatus est. At Judices, ubi viderunt causam esse nullius momenti, absolverunt hominem (13). I do not wonder so much, that Erasmus called them Trifles, as that Berquin was acquitted upon such Opinions.

[D] He translated some of Erasmus's Books into French.] Among others, The Panegyric on Marriage (14), The Manual of the Christian Soldier (15), and The Complaint of Peace. See the Remark [K].

(6) Id. in Iconibus.

(7) Spondan. Annal. ad Ann. 1529. n. 14.

(8) Beza, in Iconibus.

(9) Recollés's True Hist. of Calvinism, pag. 217.

(10) In Remark [H].

(11) Beza, in Iconibus.

(12) Erasm. Epist. iv. lib. 24. pag. 1280.

(13) Id. ib.

(14) Idem. Epist. xci. lib. 19, pag. 923.

(15) Idem. Epist. iv. lib. 24.

[E] If

Digitized by Google

that, if he refuſed, He ſhould himſelf be burnt. Being a Man of an inflexible and intrepid Spirit, he would not ſubmit to any thing; and he would probably have been burnt, if ſome Judges, perceiving the exceſſive Animoſity of the Accuſers, had not contrived the Matter ſo, that the Buſineſs was examined again. Many are of Opinion, that this was done at the Recommendation of the Lady Regent, Mother of Francis I, to ſave Berquin. During theſe Tranſactions, Francis I returned from Spain; and, hearing of the Danger his Counſellor was in, from the Faction of Beda, he wrote to the Parliament to take great care of what ſhould be done, and that he would hear Lewis de Berquin's Cauſe himſelf. Some time after, The Priſoner was ſet at Liberty: This raiſed his Courage in ſuch a manner, that he was ſo bold, as to accuſe his Accuſers (g): He brought an Action of Irreligion againſt them, and flattered himſelf with obtaining a compleat Victory (b). If he had followed the judicious Advice of Eraſmus, he would have looked upon it as a great Triumph, not to be oppreſſed by theſe Men [E], inſtead of hoping to bring them to Reaſon. But if, on the one Side, he came off the worſe for having had the Boldneſs to reſiſt, to their Face, Thoſe, with whom Eraſmus, for very good Reaſons, adviſed him to have nothing to do [F]; it was, on the other ſide, a great Advantage to him; becauſe, by falling a Victim to their Hatred, he procured to himſelf the Crown of Martyrdom. He was impriſoned the third time; the Sentence pronounced againſt him, condemned him to make the Amende Honorable for his Errors (i), and to ſuffer perpetual Impriſonment [G]. He refuſed to ſubmit to This Sentence: He would have acknowledged, thereby, that his Opinions were erroneous; ſo that he was condemned, as an obſtinate Heretic, to be ſtrangled in the Greve (k), and afterwards burnt (l). He ſuffered Death with an extraordinary Conſtancy. He was about forty Years of Age. It is ſaid, that the Monk, who attended him on the Scaffold, declared, that he obſerved in him ſome Signs of Abjuration [H]. But ſee what Eraſmus

(g) See Remarks [B], and [E].

(b) Taken for the fourth Letter of the 24th Book of Eraſmus. See a more exact Relation of this Trial in one of Berquin's Letters to Eraſmus, dated from Paris, April 17, 1526, and publiſhed by John Fechtius, in Hiſtoriæ Eccleſiaſt. Supplemento, pag. 874.

(i) See the Acta Martyrum, collected by John Crepin, pag. 211, Edit. of 1556.

(k) Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 7, ſays, by Miſtake, in the Place Maubert.

(l) Id. ibid. & fuſe apud Eraſmum, ubi ſupra, pag. 1278.

[E] If he had followed the Advice of Eraſmus, he would have looked upon it as a great Triumph not to be oppreſſed by Thoſe Men.] Few Perſons of Senſe, and who are uſed to reflect on what they ſee, or read, will think on Berquin's Conduct, without applying to him the Fable of the Wolf and the Crane. He was not ſatisfied with having eſcaped out of the Hands of his Accuſers, but he would alſo have the Prize and Honour of the Victory, as a Reward of his Conteſt: Is not This to imitate the Crane, who required a Reward, after having got her Neck, whole and ſafe, from out of a very dangerous Paſſage?

Ingrata es, inquit, ore quæ noſtro caput
Incolume abſtuleris, & mercedem poſtulas (16).

(16) Phædr. Fab 8, l. i.

You are ungrateful, after drawing your Neck, ſafe, out of my Mouth, to demand a Reward.

Theſe Verſes of Horace may be very well applied to Berquin:

Cervi luporum præda rapacium
Sectamur ultro, quos opimus
Fallere, & effugere eſt triumphus (17).

(17) Horace, Od. iv. l. iv.

We, like the Stag, the brinded Wolf provoke;
And, when Retreat is Victory,
Ruſh on, though ſure to die.

CREECH.

[F] - - - With whom Eraſmus, for very good Reaſons, adviſed him to have nothing to do.] He had received Letters from Berquin, but had never ſeen him; and, fearing to be involved in the Proſecutions againſt Innovators, he was not very well ſatisfied to find his own Thoughts, with Thoſe of Berquin (18), in one and the ſame Book; and he exhorted the latter to be quiet, or, at leaſt, not to expoſe him to Danger. " Your Adverſaries, ſaid he to him, will " never own the Crime, of which you accuſe them; " think that Beda is an Hydra with ſeveral Heads; " you have to do with an immortal Enemy; a Faculty, " a Society, never dies; do not truſt to the Protection " of the Prince. The Favour of Kings is changeable; an Informer prejudices them; the Fear they " have of Churchmen, and their Deſire of being " no more fatigued with their importunate Sollicitations, force them to grant them what they demand." Here are his Latin Words. " Crebris " epiſtolis hortatus ſum, ut vel arte quâpiam ſemet " extricaret à cauſa, putà curarent amici, ut præ" textu regiæ legationis longius proficiſceretur: ſor" taſſis Theologos paſſuros ut cauſa tempore evane" ſceret, nunquam paſſuros ut impietatis crimen, quod " illis objiciebat, agnoſcerent. Etiam atque etiam " cogitaret qualis excetra eſſet Bedda, quotque capi" tibus afflaret venenum: Tum expenderet ſibi cum " immortali adverſario rem eſſe; facultas enim non " moritur: ſimul illud cogitaret, qui cum tribus " monachis belligeratur, eum cum multis phalangi" bus habere rem, non ſolum opulentis ac potenti" bus, verum etiam improbiſſimis, & in omni ma" larum artium genere inſtructis. Illos non con" quieturos, donec ei procuraſſent exitium, etiamſi " cauſam haberet meliorem quàm habuit CHRISTUS, " neque plus ſatis fideret Regis præſidio. Principum " enim favores eſſe temporarios, ac delatorem artibus " facilè in diverſum trahi illorum affectus. Poſtremò, " ut nihil horum accidat, magnos etiam Principes " vel delaſſari talium improbitate, vel metu non" nunquam cogi ut cedant (19)."

(18) Berquin tranſlated ſome of Eraſmus's Works into French, and added to them ſomething of his own.

(19) Eraſm. Epiſt. iv. lib. 24, pag. 1280.

[G] The Sentence, pronounced againſt him, condemned him to make the Amende Honorable, and to ſuffer perpetual Impriſonment.] I have followed the Acta Martyrum of John Crepin; but I ſhall obſerve, wherein the Relations differ. Beza makes no mention of an Amende Honorable; and he ſays, that Berquin's Books were to be burnt in the Preſence of the Author, which Crepin does not remark. Eraſmus mentions four Heads of Puniſhment; the Books were to be burnt; the Author was to recant; his Tongue was to be bored through, and himſelf to ſuffer perpetual Impriſonment (20). Beza, and Crepin, have not forgot this latter Head. Eraſmus adds, that the Cauſe was judged by twelve Commiſſaries; that Budæus, who was one of them, exhorted Berquin, before his Condemnation, to retract (21); that Berquin, having heard the Sentence, appealed to the King, and to the Pope, and that the Judges, full of Indignation on that Account, condemned him to be burnt the next Day. Eraſmus relates all this on Hear-ſay (22). See the Remark [K].

(20) Ibid.

(21) Rocolles, True Hiſtory of Calvinism, pag. 216, ſays, that Budæus, a great Friend of Berquin's, uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to ſave him.

[H] The Monk, who attended him on the Scaffold, declared, That he had obſerved in him ſome Signs of Abjuration.] A Perſon (23), whom Eraſmus thought worthy of Credit, wrote to him, that he asked This Monk, If Berquin had not acknowledged his Errors, at his laſt Breath? And that the Monk anſwered him, He had; and ſeemed to have no manner of doubt, but that Berquin's Soul was in the Abode of the Bleſſed. Eraſmus's Friend was near the Place of Execution, and gave him a faithful Account of it. He informed him, that no one could hear the Speech, which Berquin made to the People, the Archers making a great Noiſe on purpoſe to drown " it

(22) Eraſm. Epiſt. iv. lib. xxiv. pag. 1280, and Epiſt. xvii. lib. xxvii. pag. 1522. Epiſt. xlviii, lib. xxx. pag. 1937.

(23) His Name was Montius.

Digitized by Google

(m) Id. Beza in Iconibus.

mus ſaid upon This [I]. Beza believed (m), that Berquin would have been, in France, what Luther was in Germany, if Francis I had done for him, what the Duke of Saxony did for Luther. It is certain, that he was a Man of great Parts, and of great Courage. Nicholas Berauld was one of his beſt Friends, as Badius Aſcenſius affirms, in dedicating the Works of Politian to them.

Since the firſt Impreſſion of this Article, a Book has been publiſhed, wherein the different Proceedings againſt Lewis de Berquin are well cleared up. I ſhall give the Subſtance of them in the laſt Remark of This Article.

it: No one cried JESUS, when the Sufferer was ſtrangled, though it be commonly practiſed towards ſacrilegious Men, and Parricides (24). If what Beza relates were true, we ſhould certainly find it in Eraſmus's Relation: His Friend would not have kept it ſecret. Beza ſays, "that Dr Merlin, at that "Time Penitentiary of Paris, who went with him "to the Place of Execution, could not forbear ſay-"ing aloud to the People, after his Death, to the "great Regret of his Accuſers, and Judges, that, "perhaps, for above an hundred Years paſt, no one "had died a better Chriſtian, than Berquin (25)." It is probable, Beza, afterwards, diſcovered the Falſhood of This; for, if he had believed the Thing to be true, why ſhould he not have placed it in his Icones? It is certain, that many pious Frauds are handed about in ſuch Caſes, which an Hiſtorian ought to diſtruſt.

(24) Ex Eraſmo, ubi ſupra, pag. 1277, 1278.

(25) Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. i, pag. 8.

[I] See what Eraſmus ſays upon this.] He freely declares, that he believed the Franciſcan, who attended Berquin on the Scaffold, told a Lie: He adds, that "it is always their Cuſtom in ſuch Caſes. Theſe "pious Frauds ſerve to maintain them in the Ho-"nour of having vindicated Religion, and to juſtify "to the People Thoſe, who have accuſed and con-"demned Heretics." At ego Franciſcani dictis nihil habeo fidei, præſertim quum hoc ſit iſtis ſolenne, poſt extinctum hominem ſpargere rumores, quòd in incendio cecinerit palinodiam, quo ſimul & vindicatæ religionis laudem auferant, & multitudinis invidiam calumniæque ſuſpicionem effugiant (26). He knew, from the firſt Hand, ſome of theſe Frauds, which had been practiſed at Bruſſels; and he relates them in few Words. If People were reaſonable, they would make ſuch Accuſers and Judges ſtand in awe of them; for, in ſhort, can any thing be conceived more ſhocking, when it is examined without Prejudice, than to repreſent to one's ſelf a Man condemned to the Flames, becauſe he will not violate the Faith, which he has ſworn to the True GOD? But the Authors of theſe Executions were ſo far from fearing any thing on that Account, that they became more inſolent for it; for they were in hopes to render themſelves more formidable. This was one of the Inconveniencies, which Eraſmus found in the Execution of poor Berquin. Periculum eſt, ne Beddis ſua ſponte plus ſatis inſanientibus nimium accedat animorum (27).

(26) Eraſm. ubi ſupra, pag. 1278.

(27) Ibid. pag. 1282.

[K] There has appeared a Work, in which the Proceedings againſt Berquin are well cleared up.] It is A Treatiſe of the Origin of Printing at Paris, by Mr Chevillier. Thus he gives an Account of Theſe Proceedings. The thirteenth of May, in the Year 1523, the Parliament cauſed Lewis de Berquin's Books to be ſeized, and ordered, that they ſhould be communicated to the Faculty of Theology to have their Opinion concerning them. They found upon him the Book De Abrogandâ Miſsâ, with ſome others of Luther and Melancthon; and ſeven or eight Treatiſes, whereof he was the Author, ſome entituled, Speculum Theologaſtrorum. De Uſu & Officio Miſſæ, &c. Rationes Lutheri, quibus omnes Chriſtianos eſſe Sacerdotes molitur ſuadere; The Debate of Piety and Superſtition. They found alſo ſome Books, which he had tranſlated into French, as, The Reaſons why Luther cauſed the Decretals, and all the Books of the Canon Law, to be publickly burnt: La Triade Romaine; and others. The Faculty, having examined theſe Books, judged, that they plainly contained Luther's Hereſies and Blaſphemies. Their Opinion is dated Friday the Twenty ſixth of July, 1523, and addreſſed to the Court of Parliament. After having cenſured each Book in particular, they concluded, that all of them ought to be burnt; that Berquin, having made himſelf a Defender of the Lutheran Hereſies, ought to be obliged to make a public Abjuration, and to be forbidden to compoſe any Book, for the future, or make any Tranſlation prejudicial to the Faith (28). "The Parliament order-"ed, that this Opinion ſhould be ſignified to him. "He anſwered, in Writing, and verbally, to it, in "the Preſence of the Judges. Upon his Anſwer, "he was made Priſoner, the firſt Day of Auguſt, "and, four Days after, his Sentence was read to "him, which ſent him back to the Tribunal of the "Biſhop of Paris, to be judged by him, on the "Caſes reſulting from the Proceſs. The eighth of "Auguſt, the King cauſed him to be taken out of the "Priſons of the Epiſcopal Court, by Captain Fre-"deric, and brought the Cauſe before his Council, "where he was judged by the Chancellor, and "condemned to abjure ſome heretical Propoſitions; "which he did. Theſe are the Terms of the Regiſters of the Parliament. He was no ſooner "delivered from this Danger, but he began again "to utter Hereſies in his Books, and in his "Diſcourſe; and, to be leſs obſerved, he retired "into the Dioceſe of Amiens, where he offended "the People, and the Clergy, in ſuch a manner, "that the Biſhop was obliged to come to Paris, "and make his Complaint to the Parliament, who "cauſed him to be taken up; and he was declared "a Relapſed Heretic, by the Sentence of two Coun-"ſellors of the Court, choſen to take Cognizance of "the Fact of Hereſy, and inveſted with the Autho-"rity of the Holy See, by a Brief of Pope Clement "VII, dated the twentieth of May, 1525, regiſtered "in the Court, which the Queen Regent had ob-"tained from Rome, in the King her Son's Abſence. "Theſe Eccleſiaſtical Judges gave him up to the "Parliament, as to the Secular Power. His Proceſs "had been committed to a Counſellor. The Morn-"ing when it was to be reported, the Parliament re-"ceived a Letter from the King, who was returned "from Spain, dated the firſt of April, 1526, where-"by he ordered the Proceedings to be ſtopped: "And, at laſt, after many Letters written, he ſent "a Lieutenant of his Guards, with the Provoſt of "Paris, who took him out of Jail, kept him ſome "time in the Louvre, and gave him his Liberty (29)." The Faculty of Divinity having cenſured Eraſmus's Colloquies, the Univerſity prohibited the reading and teaching them in the Colleges. "Then Berquin "wrote to Eraſmus, that the matter ought not to "be delayed any longer; that he ought to join with "him; that now was the time to ruin all the Au-"thority of the Doctors in the Church, and to cry "them quite down, the Occaſion being favourable. "Nunc tempus eſſe, ut Theologis omnis in poſterum "detraberetur auctoritas. His Cauſe remained in "ſuſpenſe. It conſiſted in a Sentence, pronounced "againſt him by two Counſellors, Judges delegated "by the Pope (which Eraſmus aſcribes to the Prior "of the Carthuſians, to That of the Celeſtins, and "to a Third, whom he does not name). It con-"ſiſted alſo in a Reproach, which he had made to "the Faculty of Theology, for having approved "the impious Doctrine, as he falſly called it, of "Doctor Beda. - - - - Puffed up with the Protection, "which he had received from the Court, flattering "himſelf with the vain Hopes of deſtroying the "Faculty, and uttering Errors continually, he would "purſue his Abſolution, contrary to Eraſmus's Coun-"ſels, who adviſed him, very wiſely, to deſiſt from "this Enterpriſe, and to leave the Kingdom. —— "Twelve Commiſſaries were deputed to judge him; "who, having found him convicted of Hereſy, cau-"ſed him to be arreſted. They had agreed toge-"ther, that his Books ſhould be burnt, that his "Tongue ſhould be bored, and that he ſhould be "only condemned to a perpetual Impriſonment, pro-"vided he would abjure his Hereſy. The Learned "William Budæus, who was one of his Judges, "did his utmoſt, for three Days, to perſwade him "to ſave his Life, by recanting his Errors: But, "not being able to conquer his Obſtinacy, Sentence "was pronounced againſt him, and he was burnt at "the Grève, in the Month of April, 1529 (30)."

(28) Chevillier's Origin of Printing at Paris, pag. 176.

(29) Ibid. pag. 177.

(30) Ibid. p. 177, 178.

Digitized by Google

BERSALA [A] (ANNE), Daughter, and chief Heireſs, of Wolfard de Borſelle (a), and of Charlotte de Bourbon-Montpenſier (b), who were married the ſeventeenth of June, 1468, was the Wife of Philip of Burgundy, Son of Antony of Burgundy, Lord of Bevres, one of the Natural Sons of Philip The Good, Duke of Burgundy (c). She brought him, for her Dowry, the Lordſhip of Vere [B], and that of Fluſhing, and ſome others; and had one Son, and two Daughters by him. Her own Father, and her Huſband's Father, made a very great Figure [C]. This Lady's Merit, and ſome Paſſages concerning her Conduct, and her Misfortunes, ſhall be the Subject of our laſt Remark [D]. We ſhall, there, ſee, among other things, that Eraſmus greatly eſteemed her.

(a) Fabert. Hiſt. of the Dukes of Burgundy, Part I, pag. 162.

(b) Anſelm. Hiſt. of the Royal Family, pag. 272.

(c) Pontus Heuterus, Rerum Burgundiç. lib. vi. pag. 7.

[A] BERSALA.] Thus Eraſmus latinizes the vulgar Name BORSELLE.

[B] She brought her Husband the Lordſhip of Vere.] It is in Zealand, in the Iſland of Walcheren, and has been ſince erected into a Marquiſate. It is vulgarly called Teer-Vere.

[C] Her own Father, and her Husband's Father, made a very great Figure.] For it is ſaid (1), that Wolfard de Borſelle's firſt Wife was Mary, the Daughter of James I, King of Scotland, who brought him the Country of Boncam (2); and that he was a Marſhal of France (3). It is more certain he was made a Knight of the Golden Fleece (4). Lewis Gollut places him in the Liſt, and calls him Count de Grand-Pré. Mr Fabert does the like; but I can ſcarce believe, that they are in the right; for I find, that Antony of Burgundy, Natural Son of Philip The Good, was made Earl of Grand-Pré, and of Chateau-thierri, by Lewis XI, in the Year 1478 (5), which is about the time that Wolfard de Borſelle received the Collar of the Order. If we had no other Proof of the Rank he held, than his Marriage with a Daughter of Lewis of Bourbon, Earl of Montpenſier, and Dauphin of Auvergne, third Son of John I, Duke of Bourbon, we could not doubt, but that he made a great Figure in the World. Thus much concerning the Father of Anne de Borſelle. Let us ſay a Word of her Father-in-law, and of her Husband. Antony of Burgundy, ſirnamed the Great Baſtard, was made Knight of the Golden Fleece in the Year 1456 (6). He obliged the Moors to raiſe the Siege of Ceuta; he led the Vanguard at the Battle of Grandſon (7), and remained Priſoner in That of Nancy. He entered, afterwards, into the Service of Lewis XI, who gave him very fine Lands, as I have already ſaid (8). Charles VIII granted him Letters of Legitimation in the Year 1485, and made him Knight of the Order of St Michael. From the Marriage of This Baſtard of Burgundy with Mary de la Vieville, contracted in the Year 1459, proceeded Philip of Burgundy, Lord of Bevres, who was made Admiral and Governour of Artois, and Knight of the Fleece, at Bruges, in the Year 1478. He was alſo provided with the Government of the Earldom of Flanders; and he married Anne de Borſelle (9).

(1) Fabert. Hiſt. of the Dukes of Burgundy, Tom. I. pag. 162.

(2) I believe it ought to be Buchan.

(3) Anſelme, Hiſtory of Great Officers, pag. 152.

(4) Gollut, Memoirs of Burgundy, pag. 744.

(5) Anſelm, Geneal. of the Royal Family, pag. 221.

(6) Ibid. pag. 220.

(7) The Year 1476.

(8) Above, Citat. (5).

(9) Taken out of Father Anſelm, p. 220, 221.

[D] This Lady's Merit, and ſome Paſſages concerning her Conduct - - - - - ſhall be the Subject of our laſt Remark.] If we believe Eraſmus, ſhe was extreamly obliging and generous. "Vivi pervenimus, ſays he, in a Letter dated in the Month of February, 1497, ad Annam Principem Verianam. Quid ego tibi de hujus mulieris comitate, benignitate, liberalitate memorem? Scio rhetorum amplificationes ſuſpectas haberi ſolere, præſertim iis qui ejus artificii rudes non ſunt. At hic me nihil allevare, imo re vinci artem noſtram, mihi credas velim. Nihil unquam produxit rerum natura aut prudentius, aut candidius, aut benignius (10). —— I have lived to ſee Anne, Princeſs of Vere. Need I tell you of this Lady's Courteſy, Good-Nature, and Liberality? I know, Rhetoricians are uſually ſuſpected of Amplification, eſpecially by Thoſe, who are not unacquainted with the Art. But, here, believe me, I exaggerate nothing; the Subject is even too great for me. Nature never produced ſo much Modeſty, Prudence, Candor, and Humanity." He had but lately received a thouſand Marks of her Kindneſs and Liberality. "Tam illa in nos beneficia ſuit - - - - tantis illa me officiis cumulavit, nullis a me ſtudiis provocata (11). - - - - She was ſo beneficent to me, ſhe heaped ſo many Favours on me, unasked." The Year following, he wrote a Letter to his good Friend James Battus, who was Tutor to This Lady's only Son: See, here, in what Terms he prailed her: "O te beatum, ô ſuperis charum, ſi tu iſtos ſcopulos enavigâris: ſi felicitate tuâ, quæ mihi quidem ſumma videtur, ſine invidia frui poſſis. Quod ut fore confidam, dominæ virtus facit, cui ſuperos omnes propitios, benéque volentes eſſe, non dubito. Evenit mihi, mi Batte, in iſta, quod in te ſæpenumero ſolet, ut tum ardentiùs amare, mirarique incipiam, quum abſum. Bone Deus, qui candor, quæ comitas in ampliſſima fortuna, quæ animi lenitas in tantis juriis, quæ hilaritas in tantis curis; tum quæ animi conſtantia, quæ vitæ innocentia, quod in literatos ſtudium, quæ in omnes affabilitas (12). —— O happy Thou, and Favourite of Heaven, if you can ſail clear of theſe Rocks, and enjoy That Happineſs, which appears to me the greateſt poſſible, without provoking the Envy of others. That this will be your happy Lot, I cannot doubt, when I reflect on the Goodneſs of the Lady you ſerve, on whom Heaven, I am ſure, will always ſmile. It happens to me, dear Battus, in regard to This Lady, as it is wont with reſpect to yourſelf; I begin to love, and admire, her with the greateſt Ardor, when I am abſent from her. Good God! What Candor, what Courteſy, amidſt the ampleſt Fortune! What Lenity of Mind, amidſt ſuch great Injuries! What Chearfulneſs amidſt ſo many Cares! Then, what Conſtancy of Soul! What Innocence of Life! What Liberality to Men of Learning! What Affability to All!"

(10) Eraſm. Epiſt. xiv. lib. iv. pag. 268.

(11) Id. ib.

(12) Id. Epiſt. xxiv. lib. iv. pag. 293.

I would not mention the Letter he wrote to this ſame Friend, in the Year 1500, if it did not teſtify This Lady's Liberality to the Clergy. He wiſhed ſhe would make choice of him for an Object of her Bounty, ſince the Productions of the Pen were more laſting, than the Voice of Preachers: He adds (13), that he would go into Italy to take his Doctor's Degree, which could not be done without ſuch Expence, as he found himſelf unable to ſupport, if ſhe did not open her Purſe for his Aſſiſtance. "Oſtendes quanto amplius ego ſim meis literis decus dominæ allaturus, quam alii, quos alit, Theologi. Nam illi vulgaria concionantur, ego ſcribo quæ ſemper ſint victura. Illi indoctè nugantes, uno aut altero in templo audiuntur: mei libri à Latinis, à Græcis, ab omni gente toto orbe legentur. Ejuſmodi indoctorum Theologorum permagnam ubique eſſe copiam, mei ſimilem vix multis ſeculis inveniri; niſi fortè adeò ſuperſtitioſus es, ut religio tibi ſit in amici negotio mendaciolis aliquot abuti. Deinde oſtendes nihilo illam pauperiorem futuram, ſi ut Hieronymus jam depravatus, ſi ut vera Theologia inſtauretur, aliquot aureis adjuverit, cum tanta ex illius opibus turpiſſimè pereant (14). —— You will ſhew this Lady, how much greater Honour it will be to her to be celebrated in my Writings, than in Thoſe of ſome other Divines, whom ſhe ſupports. They preach vulgar Things; I write what will live for ever. They, illiterate Triflers, are liſtened to in one or two Churches at moſt; My Works are read by Latins, by Greeks, by every Nation in the whole World. You will tell her, that there is every where great Plenty of ſuch illiterate Divines, but that many Ages ſcarce produce a ſingle Eraſmus; unleſs, perhaps, you make a Conſcience of being a little to ſerve your Friend. Laſtly you will ſhew her, that ſhe will not be the poorer, if ſhe contributes a little of That Gold, ſhe is ſo laviſh of on the moſt unworthy Objects, towards reſtoring St Jerom, now greatly corrupted, and True Divinity." She found herſelf embarraſſed in the Year 1498, and even under a kind of Confinement. "Apud dominam Verienſis oppidi res hoc erant loco, ut nec colloqui ſine ſummo periculo potuerim, nec abire ſine gravi ſuſpicione. Noſti cauſam Præpoſiti, qui ut nunc in vinculis eſt, ita domina in tutela (15). —— The Affairs of the Princeſs of Vere were in ſuch a State, that I could neither

(13) See the 47th Letter of the 8th Book.

(14) Id. Epiſt. xlvii, lib. viii. pag. 449.

(15) Id. Epiſt. xxiii. lib. ix, pag. 482. It is dated from Paris, 1498. See alſo the 25th Letter of the ſame Book.

Digitized by Google

" ther converse with her without the greatest Danger, " nor depart without being greatly suspected. You " know the Cause of the Provost, who as he is now " in Bonds, so the Lady is in Custody." Matters did not go better the following Year. " Veriana " duris Fatis premitur, ut sublevanda potius, quam " oneranda, videatur (16). —— The Princess of Vere " is greatly distressed, and seems herself to stand in " need of Assistance, rather than to be farther bur- " thened." But the Steddiness of her Courage against ill Fortune was a fine Subject of Praise. See the Letter, which Erasmus wrote to her in the Year 1500. I shall borrow but one Passage from it: It will inform us, that she was married very young; and that, being a Widow, after an uncomfortable Marriage, she would not marry again, though many Suitors offered themselves, with great Sollicitations. " Nam te qui- " dem non tam in viduis, quàm in virginibus, pono: " siquidem quod olim puella admodum nupsisti, id " quidem partim parentum autoritati, partim generi " propagando datum: & ejusmodi fuit conjugium, " ut non tam sit imputanda voluptas, quàm patientia " spectata. Quod autem nunc ista adhuc ætate vi- " renti, & penè puellari, nulla procorum instantiâ " possis à continentiæ proposito divelli, quod in for- " tuna tam affluenti tam nihil indulges tibi, id ego " non viduitatem, sed virginitatem existimo: in quo " si, ut confido, perseverabis, ego te, mihi crede " audacter, non in adolescentularum choro, quarum, " ut ait Scriptura, non est numerus, non in octoginta " Solomonis concubinis, sed in quinquaginta Regi- " nis, & Hieronymo quidem, ut spero, approbante, " annumeravero (17). - - - - - - - - For I reckon you, " not among the Widows, but the Virgins; since you " married very young, and That, partly in obedience " to the Commands of your Parents, and partly for " the Sake of Posterity: and since your Marriage was " such, as must be considered rather as the Trial of " your Patience, than the Gratification of your De- " sires. Now, since, in the Flower of your Youth, no " Sollicitation of Suitors can divert you from a deter- " mined State of Continency; since, amidst such an " Affluence of Fortune, you so little indulge yourself; " I esteem you rather as a Virgin, than a Widow; " which State if you persist in, as I trust you will, " believe me, I shall reckon you, not in the Company " of young Maids, of which, the Scripture says, there " is no number; not among the fourscore Concubines of " Solomon; but among the fifty Queens, with the " Consent, I hope, of St Jerom himself."

(16) Id. Epist. xx. lib. ix, pag. 478. It is dated in 1499.

(17) Id. Epist. ult. lib. ix. pag 503, 504.

I must say something of her only Son Adolphus of Burgundy. He was Admiral of Flanders, and made Knight of the Golden-Fleece, at Brussels, in the Year 1516. Erasmus praised him for his good Qualities, and dedicated his Book of Virtue to him. He died at his Castle of Bevres in Flanders, the seventh of December, 1540 (18). He left a Son, and two Daughters; the latter left some Posterity (19); but the Son had no Children by his Wife Louisa de Croy, who was Daughter of Philip de Croy, Duke of Arschot (20). He was made Marquis of Veer-Vere by Charles V (21); and, in the Year 1546, he received the Collar of the Order of the Golden Fleece (22). He died in the Year 1558 (23). The sixteenth Letter of the tenth Book of Erasmus is written to Adolphus of Burgundy; Principi Veriano. It is dated from London, 1512. The same Year he wrote to him, from Paris, a very excellent Letter, which is, in some Editions, at the End of the Enchiridion militis Christiani.

(18) Father Anselme, Geneal. of the Royal Family, pag. 221, 222.

(19) See Father Anselme, ibid.

(20) Id. ib.

(21) Pontus Heuterus, Rerum Belgic. lib. vi. pag. 8.

(22) Anselme, ibid.

(23) Lud. Guicciard. Descript. Belgii. pag. 322.

BERTELIER (PHILIBERT), Register of the inferior Court of Justice at Geneva, where he was born, should not have had a place in this Dictionary, had not his Article been proper to be the Supplement of another (a); and to shorten That of Calvin, which, probably, will be very long. This Bertelier lived in the middle of the XVIth Century. He distinguished himself only by his vile Actions; but, as he committed one, which pleased the Controversists much, since it supplied them with ample Matter to defame Calvin's Memory, this gave occasion to his being quoted as a Person of Consequence; and gave him a Figure in some considerable Writings (b). He pretended, that the Republic of Geneva had sent him to Noyon, with orders to make an exact Enquiry, there, into Calvin's Life and Conversation; and that, having performed his Commission, he found, that John Calvin had been convicted of Sodomy; and that, at the Bishop's Request, the Punishment of Fire was commuted into That of being branded with the Flower-de-luce. He boasted to have an Act, signed by a Notary, which certified the Truth of the Process and Condemnation. Bolsec affirms (c), that He, and many Others, had seen That Act; and This is the Ground of That horrid Accusation, so much spoken of, and which has been inserted in many Books. The matter of Fact, whether Calvin was branded with a hot Iron, for the Crime of Pederasty, is only grounded on the Authority of Bolsec, who affirms, that he saw the Act, which Bertelier brought from Noyon. We shall see, in the Article BOLSEC, that his Testimony is of no weight in Things, which are laid to Calvin's Charge. That of Bertelier cannot be better; for he was an ill Liver, and against whom Sentence of Death had been pronounced [A]; and who,

(a) That of (JEROME) BOLSEC.

(b) See Remark [D].

(c) In the History of Calvin, published in 1577.

[A] He was a Person of an ill Life, and against whom Sentence of Death had been pronounced.] Mr Drelincourt, Minister of Paris, will supply me with a Proof of this Fact, which the boldest Sophisters cannot deny. He has inserted the Extract of a Letter, which he received from Mr Lullin, Counsellor, and ancient Syndic of Geneva, in a Book, printed at Geneva, and licensed by the Republic (1): These are the Contents of That Extract.

" In the mean time, I shall not refuse, for your " particular Satisfaction, to acquaint you with what " I have learned, and what I can assure you I have " just now read, in the ancient Records of our " Council; wherein I find, that Philip Bertelier " was a Native of This City, and had the Office " of Secretary (which is elsewhere called Register) " of the Inferior Court of Justice; which Post is " much below That of Secretary of State, which " he is said to have had; and that, being accused " of Sedition and Conspiracy against This State, and " Church, he ran away, and, not appearing to an- " swer for himself, was condemned, as being attaint- " ed, and convicted, of Those Crimes, to lose his " Head, by a Sentence pronounced against him, the " sixth of August, 1555. About two Years after, " he went to Law with a private Person of this " City, in a foreign Court of Justice, whither he " had fled; and, it being requisite, for the Honour " and Interest of our Republic, and of That private " Person, to make This perfidious Man known, an " Attestation was granted of the Judgment, given " against him, in the Terms, which you shall see " in the following Copy, dated the fifth of February, " 1557. This is the true Character of Bertelier, " whose Testimony is so much extolled in the Book " of the late Cardinal de Richelieu. As for what con- " cerns his being sent, or deputed, to Noyon, to make " a Report of Calvin's Life, it is a Fact not only " falsly supposed, and whereof no kind of Mention " is made in our Records; but it is also contrary to " all probability. For, besides that no Envoy, or " Deputy, was ever sent from our City, upon pub- " lic Business, who was not in a higher Station, than " That of Bertelier; and that such Employs are on- " ly given to Counsellors of the little Council; It is " notorious, as you know, that we had some consi- " derable

(1) The Title of it is A Defence of Calvin, and it was printed in 1667, in 8vo.

Digitized by Google

who, beſides, had no Party againſt him, in Geneva, more inexorable than Calvin [B]. It is no ways neceſſary, in order to confute this Accuſation, to make uſe of the juſt Exceptions, which invalidate the Teſtimony of theſe two Perſons (d). There is, in the Act itſelf, an infallible Mark of Reprobation [C]; and nothing ſurprizes me more, than to ſee ſo great a Perſon, as Cardinal de Richelieu, depend on this piece of Bertelier [D], and alledge, as his principal Reaſon, that the Republic

(d) See Rivet Cathol. Orthodox. Oper. Tom. III. pag. 8. & ſeq. and in Jeſuita Vapulante, cap. ii. pag. 495, & ſeq. eiuſd. Tom. where he ſhews Leſſius, that, by his own Rules, Bertelier and Bolſec can be no Evidence againſt Calvin.

" derable Perſons of Noyon in our City, who retired " hither, with Calvin, ſoon after him: And, among " others, a Canon, whoſe Name was Mr Collemont, " and Mr de Normandie, Lieutenant-Civil of the " City of Noyon, whoſe Family is ſtill One of the " moſt conſiderable among us, and from which I am " deſcended by the Mother's Side; by whoſe means, " it was very eaſy to receive all the Information, which " could have been deſired, without going farther. " Add to this, that it is certain, This Bertelier was " always Calvin's Enemy; becauſe he had often re- " primanded, and cenſured him for his vicious and " ſcandalous Life; and that he had ſtrenuouſly op- " poſed his wicked and pernicious Deſigns. This " appears by Calvin's Letters to Viretus, and to Bul- " linger, in the Months of September, and November, " 1553; in which he cries him down as a vicious " and audacious Man: Beza repreſents, likewiſe, the " wicked Qualities of Bertelier, in Calvin's Life (2)."

(2) Drelinc. Defence of Calvin. pag. 148.

Here follows the Copy of the Atteſtation of the Republic of Geneva, againſt Philibert Bertelier (3).

(3) It is in Mr Drelincourt's Book, pag. 151.

" We, the Syndics and Council of Geneva, to All " Thoſe, to whom theſe Preſents ſhall come, do cer- " tify, that, on the ſixth of Auguſt, of the Year " 1555, was publickly given, and pronounced, by " Sound of Trumpet, a criminal Sentence againſt " Philibert Bertelier, and his Accomplices, named " in the ſaid Sentence; by which, for the horrid and " deteſtable Crimes of Conſpiracy againſt the Holy " Inſtitution, and Chriſtian Reformation, and againſt " this City, and the public Good and Tranquillity " thereof, the ſaid Philibert Bertelier, as one of the " Authors of the Conſpiracy, and an Enemy to this " City, and to the Peace, Union, and Tranquillity " thereof, has been condemned to be bound, and " brought to the Place of Champel; there to have " his Head cut off; his Body to be quartered, and " his Members to be ſet up in the four moſt eminent " Places round about this City, for an Example to " others, who ſhall commit ſuch Crimes: This we " atteſt and certify. And, therefore, we have " ordered, and commanded, theſe Preſents to be " given under our uſual Seal, and ſigned by our Secre- " tary. Given at Geneva, the fifth of February, 1577."

[B] He had no Party againſt him - - - - more inexorable than Calvin.] Bertelier, having been excommunicated, in the Year 1552, by the Conſiſtory of Geneva (4), made his Complaint to the Senate. The Miniſters were ſent for, to give their Reaſons for it; and both Parties being heard, the Senate confirmed the Excommunication. Eighteen Months after, Bertelier had recourſe again to the Senate, who, after having heard Calvin's Oppoſition, pronounced, that Bertelier ſhould be admitted to the Holy Sacrament. As ſoon as Calvin heard this News, he deſired the Syndics to aſſemble the Senate; and, when they were met, he repreſented his Reaſons, and concluded, with an Oath, that he would rather loſe his Life, than give his Conſent, that ſuch a Man ſhould receive the Lord's Supper (5). This is what Calvin wrote himſelf. His Hiſtorian will tell us more of it (6). The Clamour, which was raiſed againſt the Miniſters, as if, in ſome reſpects, they had invaded the Rights of the Sovereignty, was the Reaſon, why the Council of Two hundred ordered, that the final Judgment of Cauſes of Excommunication ſhould belong to the Senate; and that the Senate might abſolve the excommunicated, as they ſhould think fit. By virtue of this Decree, the Senate granted Letters of Abſolution to Bertelier, which were ſealed with the Seal of the Republic. The Sacrament was to be adminiſtered within two Days, when Calvin came to hear of what had paſt; he ſoon reſolved what to do, and preached againſt the Contempt of the Sacrament; he raiſed his Voice, lifted up his Hands, and ſaid, that he would imitate St Chryſoſtom; that he would not oppoſe Force to Force, but that he would rather ſuffer himſelf to be maſſacred, than that his Hands ſhould preſent the Holy Myſteries to Thoſe, who had been judged unworthy of them: This was a Thunder-bolt, which confounded Bertelier's Faction; ſo that it was not thought fit, that he ſhould preſent himſelf to the Communion. The next Day after the Sacrament, Calvin, accompanied by his Conſiſtory, deſired leave of the Senate, and of the Council of Two hundred, to ſpeak to the People about this Matter, for as much as it concerned the Abrogation of a Law, made by the People. This made ſo great an Impreſſion on the People's Minds, that it was reſolved the Sxviſs Cantons ſhould be conſulted about it; and that the Decree of the Two hundred ſhould be ſuſpended; but that none ſhould ſay, that the ancient Regulations had been in the leaſt infringed. In eam ſententiam animis non mediocriter immutatis itum eſt, ut ſuſpenſo illo Diacoſiorum decreto ſtatueretur petendum eſſe à quatuor civitatibus Helveticis judicium, nec interea præjudicium ullum fieri receptis legibus oportere (7). By this means the Conſiſtory obtained a compleat Victory, and, in a manner, made the Senate, and the Council of Two hundred, buckle to. What would they not have done in a Democratical Country? Is it poſſible to rule over Men, who tell the People, from the Pulpit, that they had rather ſuffer themſelves to be killed, than conſent, that Holy Things ſhould be prophaned? St Chryſoſtom's Example, properly alledged, is an artful way of threatning the Government with an Inſurrection.

(7) Beza, ib.

[C] There is, in the Act itſelf, an infallible Sign of Reprobation.] No one knows when it was drawn up, or by whom, or the Names of the Witneſſes, or, in general, any of the Circumſtances, which are never forgotten, except when People fear to ſupply Thoſe with Arms, whoſe Intereſt it is to deny a Thing. What I am going to ſay, carries a much greater Force with it. If Bertelier's Act had not been ſuppoſititious, there would have been, at Noyon, authentic and public Teſtimonies of the Trial, and Puniſhment, in queſtion; and, therefore, They would have been publiſhed, as ſoon as the Catholic Religion began to ſuffer by Calvin's Means. Unleſs we ſuppoſe a continual, and more unheard of Miracle, than was ever yet known, All the Inhabitants of Noyon would not have kept the Secret, and ſpared the Reputation of a Countryman of theirs, who was ſo odious to them (8). I carry this Thought farther in another place (9), and therefore leave it here as it is. I add, that, if what Bertelier ſaid was true, he would have had his Paper, when he fled from Geneva; I mean, that his pretended Commiſſion would have preceded the Matter, for which he was condemned to death in the Year 1555; for it is plain, that he had not the Commiſſion, he boaſted of, after That time. But can any one believe, that, before the Year 1555, when Thoſe, who were called Heretics, durſt not ſhew themſelves, for fear of being burnt, a Deputy from Geneva ſhould go boldly to Noyon, to inform himſelf of Calvin's Life? Who will believe, that, if Bertelier had had an authentic Act of Calvin's Infamy in the Year 1554, he would have kept it ſo cloſe, that the Public ſhould have no knowledge of it before the Year 1577? Was it not a Piece, which the Clergy of France would have bought for it's weight in Gold? But why do I loſe time in confuting ſuch a ridiculous Romance, as This is?

(8) In 1551, Public Prayers and Proceſſions were made at Noyon, on a falſe Report of Calvin's Death, to thank God for it. Non dubito quin jam audieris me patriæ eſſe ſuperſtitem. Ita urbem mortuam lugere cogor (Calvin ſaid this on occaſion of the Fire, which deſtroyed that City in the Year 1552,) quæ ſuperiore anno ob falſum mortis meæ rumorem ſolennes habuit ſupplicationes, ut de Chriſto triumpharet. Calvin, Epiſt. 140, dated Decemb. 5, 1552.

(9) In Remark [K], of the Article BOLSEC, and more amply in Remark [U], of the Article BEZA.

[D] It is ſurprizing to ſee Cardinal de Richelieu depend on This Piece of Bertelier.] " That, ſays he " (10), which ought to paſs for an undeniable Con- " viction of the Crimes, imputed to Calvin, is, that " ever ſince he was charged with This Accuſation, " the Church of Geneva has neither proved the con- " trary, nor even denied the Report, which Berte- " lier, ſent by Thoſe of That City, made at Noyon. " This Report was ſigned by the moſt eminent Per- " ſons of the City of Noyon, and made with all uſual " Forms of Juſtice: And by the ſame Report it ap- " pears, that That Arch-Heretic, having been con- " victed of an abominable Sin, puniſhable only by " Fire, the Puniſhment, which he had deſerved, " was,

(10) A Method to convert Thoſe, who have ſeparated themſelves from the Church, lib. ii. cap. 10, pag. 319.

(4) It is of him, that theſe Words of Calvin's Letter to Bullinger, (which is the 162d,) muſt be underſtood. Quidam ob effrenes ſuas libidines & multa flagitia, cœnæ uſu privatus donec reſipiſceret.

A Victory obtained by the Conſiſtory of Geneva, againſt the Magiſtrates.

(5) Ex Epiſtola Calvini ad Viretum. It is the 154*th, and is dated* Septem. 4. 1553.

(6) Beza, in Vita Calvini ad Ann. 1553.

Digitized by Google

public of Geneva did not undertake to ſhew the Falſhood of This Piece [E]. This is not a Place to examine, whether they had reaſon to make light of This Lie [F]. There is no Article of a Dictionary more uſeful to a Reader, than This [G].

" was, by the Interceſſion of his Biſhop, commuted " into That of the Flower-de-luce. And the Church " of Geneva, which does not deny This Report con- " cerning Calvin's Life, would not have failed to " have done it, if they had believed, that it could " have been done without offending againſt Truth." Is it not ſtrange, that a chief Miniſter of State, whoſe Credit was not inferior to That of the King, ſhould depend on a blind Act, which an inconſiderable Phyſician of Lyons had pretended to have ſeen in the Hands of a mean Perſon? An inconſiderable private Man muſt, then, have had more credit, than Cardinal de Richelieu, to find out the old Records of Noyon? The Truth is, This Cardinal made all imaginable Enquiry into the pretended Proceedings againſt John Calvin, at Noyon, and that he diſcovered nothing (11); and yet he maintained the Affirmative on the Credit of Jerome Boljec. Can ſuch a ſtrange Conduct be excuſed? Mr Drelincourt cannot believe, that That great Man was guilty of it, and lays all the Blame on Thoſe, who publiſhed the Book, entituled, Methode pour convertir, &c (12).

(11) See the Defence of Calvin, by Mr Drelincourt, p. 9.

(12) Ib. pag. 71. See alſo pag. 140, &c.

[E] - - - - And alledge, as his chief Reaſon, That the Republic of Geneva did not undertake to ſhew the Falſhood of this Piece.] In the foregoing Remark, we have ſet down Cardinal Richelieu's own Words: They ſhew, that he lays his Streſs on the Silence of the Republic of Geneva. Mr Drelincourt ſhews him, by ſome plain Inſtances, that there is nothing more falſe, nor more abſurd, than to pretend, that They, who ſuffer an Accuſation to be ſpread abroad againſt themſelves, give occaſion to believe, that They are convinced it is well-grounded. The firſt of theſe Examples is Cardinal Richelieu himſelf; " That Thoſe, " who could not bear his Elevation, and his Power, " ſaid ſtrange things of him; and that ſome of Thoſe " Things have been publiſhed, and ſome Books have " been filled with them. Becauſe no Juridical Infor- " mation has been made to juſtify the contrary, muſt " we therefore believe, that the Relations of That " Illuſtrious Cardinal, and Thoſe, who honour his " Memory, look upon Thoſe Things as certain " Truths (13)?" Rivetus, Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden, made uſe of the like Reaſoning, in anſwer to an Objection of Leſſius, taken from the Silence of Calvin's good Friends. " Itane? Ergo quotieſ- " cunque libuerit infami alicui agyrtæ crimina con- " fingere in viros bonos, neceſſariumne erit libellos " illos famoſos diſcutere, ut homines iſti, ſi tamen " homines, qui famam aucupantur ex adverſariorum " nomine, applaudant ſibi, quod tandem repererint " qui ſe cum illis voluerint componere, & exiſtima- " rint talia eſſe reſponſione digna, quæ contemptu " potius erant diluenda (14). —— What! Shall " it be neceſſary, as often as an infamous Fellow " invents an Accuſation againſt Good Men, to re- " fute his libellous Books; and thus give ſuch Men, " if they deſerve the Name of Men, who build their " own Fame on the Reputation of their Adverſaries, an " Opportunity of triumphing, in that they have found " Perſons, who will enter the Liſts with Them, and " think Thoſe Things worthy of an Anſwer, which deſerve " to be refuted rather with Contempt?" Here is a Jeſuit, who agrees perfectly with Theſe Miniſters. " How long is it, ſince it is not allowable to be ſilent, " without being looked upon as convicted of the " Crimes, which are imputed to us? It does not " appear, that This is the Opinion of the Wiſeſt, " and of Thoſe, whoſe Example may ſerve as a Rule " to others. Who is ignorant, how many fooliſh " things the Enemies of France are uſed to publiſh " againſt it, in their Gazettes, and Libels? Who " does not know how many infamous and abomi- " nable Reports Mr Jurieu has ſpread againſt the " Popes, and againſt the Church of Rome, in his " Parallel, in his Prejugez, and in ſo many other " Books, with which he fills the World? So that, " if the King does not keep Perſons on purpoſe to " confute Theſe Foreign Gazettes, in every Parti- " cular; and if none are to be found among the " Catholics, who will loſe their Time in confuting, " ſeriouſly, theſe idle Fancies of Mr Jurieu, that " the Popes have pretended to Univerſal Monarchy: " that, in order to it, they have occaſioned a Schiſm " between the Greeks and the Latins; that, after- " wards, to end the Quarrel, they have - - - - &c. " I ſay, unleſs the King, or the Pope, take care " to have theſe Fooleries, and Slanders, refuted, " will not the Gazetteer of Holland, and Mr Ju- " rieu, have reaſon to ſay, They dare not anſwer; " there is therefore reaſon to believe, they cannot do " it? Would the Author of the Morale Pratique have " condemned them upon ſuch an Account? I am " willing to believe, he would be aſhamed to own " it. Why, then, might not the Jeſuits neglect " to anſwer Libels, which are, in their Opinion, " no leſs fabulous, nor leſs deſpicable, than the Ga- " zettes of Amſterdam, and the Hiſtorical or Pro- " phetical Syſtems of Mr Jurieu? Ought they to " be more nice in Point of Reputation, than Thoſe, " whom GOD has placed over us? Ought they not, " or at leaſt may they not, after Theſe great Ex- " amples, deſpiſe what concerns only their particu- " lar Honour (15)?"

THAT the Silence of an accuſed Perſon concludes nothing in certain Caſes. Some curious Examples of This.

(13) Drelincourt, ibid. pag. 84.

(14) Rivet. Oper. Tom. iii, pag. 9, & 496.

[F] This is not a Place to examine, whether They had reaſon to make Light of This Lie.] Mr Drelincourt, and Father le Tellier's, Maxim is in general very good and true; but there are ſome particular Caſes, wherein it is better not to make uſe of it. I ſhall not decide whether the Republic of Geneva had done better to make a public Declaration againſt Boljec, in relation to the pretended Deputation of Bertelier. It ſeems at firſt ſight, that the Advantage, which the Catholic Controverſiſts have pretended to draw from the Silence of That Republic, ſhews, that they were in the wrong to be ſilent, I mean, not to make it appear, by a public Act, that Theſe Perſons were impudent Liars: But They, who conſider, that nothing can ſtop the Pens of a Sort of Men, and that, if you ſilence them in one Point, they will turn to ſomething elſe, will eaſily perceive, that an Act of the Republic of Geneva would not have ended This Diſpute. I agree to the Maxim, that, ſometimes, the beſt way to be revenged of an impudent Calumniator, is to return him no Anſwer (16). However I believe, that Beza did not well apply this Maxim, when he made uſe of it in relation to Boljec. An Anſwer would have puffed him up with Vanity; and he would have concluded from it, that his Slanders had touched the Proteſtants to the quick, which would have filled him with Joy. I grant it: But it had been better to have let him enjoy This Pleaſure, attended with the infamous Character of a public Calumniator, with which a good Anſwer would have branded him, than to give him, and others, a Pretence to boaſt, that the Republic could not deny the Matter in queſtion. Qui tacet conſentire videtur. Thoſe Truths, which are called Maxims, no leſs claſh with each other, than Errors, and Truths.

(15) Father le Tellier's Defence of the New Chriſtians, Part I, pag. 25, 26.

(16) Genus ultionis eſt eripere ei qui fecit contumeliæ voluptatem. Solent dicere, miſerum me, puto non intelleXiſſe! Adeo fructus contumeliæ in ſenſu & indignatione patientis eſt, ut optime Seneca cap. 17, de Conſt. Sapientis. Hunc fructum quærebat Boljecus, quem ei adimit viventi ſapientia. Rivet. Oper. Tom. III. pag. 496.

[G] There is no Article of a Dictionary more uſeful to a Reader, than This.] One of the greateſt Uſes, which may be drawn from Reading, is, to learn the Weakneſſes of the Heart of Man, and the ill Effects of Prejudices in Point of Religion. Can there be a more remarkable Inſtance of it, than This? What muſt not a Man naturally be, or what will he not become, by a blind and furious Zeal for Religion, ſince a Monk, who turned a Proteſtant Phyſician, and afterwards a Popiſh Phyſician, and who was expelled two or three times, with a Brand of Infamy, from the Places where he was ſettled, no ſooner produces an Accuſation on the Credit of a Fugitive, condemned to death, upon refuſing to appear before his Judges, an Accuſation, than which none was ever worſe contrived, and worſe proved, but it is adopted, and conveyed from Book to Book; a thouſand Conſequences are drawn from it; and Authors of the firſt Rank, the great Cardinal Richelieu himſelf, propoſe it to the Heretics as a powerful Motive of Converſion: And all this propter majorem Dei gloriam? O QUANTUM EST IN REBUS INANE (17)!

(17) Perſius, Sat. i, ver. 1.

Digitized by Google

BERTRAM (CORNELIUS BONAVENTURA), born at Thouars, in Poitou, was a conſiderable Man, in the XVIth Century, for his Knowledge in the Oriental Languages. He ſtudied Hebrew at Paris, under Angelus Caninius, and, afterwards, at Cahors, with the Civilian Francis Roaldus. He had much ado to avoid being maſſacred, at Cahors, in the Year 1572; but, at laſt, he made his eſcape, and fled to Geneva; where, at the end of two Years, he was made Hebrew Profeſſor, in the room of Rodolphus Cevalier. He wrote ſeveral conſiderable Books, during his abode at Geneva [A], and continued to apply himſelf to his Studies, when he went to Franckenthal, in the Palatinate. He publiſhed a Book, there, in the Year 1586, entituled, Lucubrationes Franckenthalenſes. He left That Poſt to go to Lauſane, where the Magiſtrates of Bern offered him a Profeſſorſhip, which he exerciſed 'till his Death, which happened in the Year 1594. He was in his climacterical Year, when he died (a), by which we may judge, that he was born in the Year 1531. It muſt not be forgot, that he was a Miniſter, and that he exerciſed That Office in Geneva (b); where he married Genevieve Denoſſe, Niece of Beza's firſt Wife, in whoſe Houſe ſhe had been educated from her Youth. She was very tenderly beloved by her Aunt (c). Bertram was a good Critic, as Beza, Caſaubon, and ſeveral other learned Perſons, have publickly acknowledged (d).

(a) Taken from Thuanus, at the End of Book 109.

(b) See Beza's Preface to Mercerus in Jobum, printed in 1573.

(c) Ant. Fayus, de vita & obitu Th. Bezæ, pag. 48.

(d) See Colomeſii Gall. Oriental. pag. 73, 74.

[A] He wrote ſeveral conſiderable Books during his abode at Geneva.] He publiſhed the Theſaurus of Sanctes Pagninus, with Additions, part whereof he took out of the Writings of Mercerus and Cevalier, and the reſt he ſupplied out of his own Stock. He publiſhed, alſo, a Comparatio Grammaticæ Hebraicæ & Arameæ, and a Treatiſe de Politia Judaica. Thuanus knew no more of them: He places this laſt Treatiſe above the other Books, compoſed by This Author. Qui ex omnibus ejus operibus maxime commendatur (1). He might have added, that Bertram contributed, as much as any one, to the Edition of the Commentary of Mercerus on the Book of Job. This is acknowledged in the Preface; "Cæterum "ne ſua quidem laude fraudandus Cornelius noſter "videtur, ejuſdem Merceri quondam diſcipulus & "nunc meus in hac Eccleſia Collega. Huic ſiqui"dem non parva ex parte debetur iſtius libri editio, "cum vix alius reperiri potuiſſe videretur, qui hæc "à Mercero minutiſſimis characteribus ac fugien"tibus pene literis in adverſariis deſcripta legendo "conſequeretur (2). —— Nor muſt we deny due "Praiſe to our Cornelius Bertram, formerly a Diſ"ciple of Mercerus, and at preſent my Colleague in "This Church; to whom we are not a little indebted "for the Publication of This Book; there being ſcarce "any other Perſon capable of decyphering the exceed"ing ſmall, and almoſt inviſible, Characters of Mer"cerus in his Adverſaria." Mr Simon mentions another Work of Bertram; he ſays, that This Profeſſor, aſſiſted by Beza, la Faye, Rotan, Jaquemot, and Goulart, reviſed the French Tranſlation of the Bible in the Year 1588, and that, being more learned in the Hebrew Tongue, than all thoſe, who had preceeded him, he took a great deal more Liberty in the Reformation, which he made, both in the Tranſlation, and in the Notes (3). What Mr Simon ſays farther concerning This Reviſion, is not only to be found in his Critical Hiſtory, but alſo in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary. I obſerve, that, according to Thuanus, the Work, entituled Lucubrationes Franckenthalenſes (4), was publiſhed in the Year 1586, and entituled ſo, becauſe the Author lived at Franckenthal. How then, may it be ſaid to me, could he have a hand in the Reviſion, which was made at Geneva, in the Year 1581. This is no difficulty at all. When Mr Simon ſays, that another Reformation of the Tranſlation of Geneva was made in the Year 1588, he intends only to mark the Date of the Impreſſion, and does not pretend, that the whole Work was done in the Year 1588. It is well known, that ſuch Reviſions commonly take up ſeveral Years. So that Bertram might have been the chief Director of This, though it was not printed 'till a long time after he was gone from Geneva. I add, that he was, particularly, the Author of the Figures of This Bible, and of their Explication (5). Theſe Words of the Preface, prefixed to This Bible, muſt therefore be underſtood of Him. "We have alſo added ſome Fi"gures, but at the end, and out of the Body of this "Work, which may ſerve for the underſtanding of "ſeveral Paſſages, wherein a learned Perſon of our "Society, who is very well verſed in the Hebrew "Tongue, and in the reading of the Old Teſtament, "has been particularly concerned." Mr Colomies has applied them to our Bertram (6).

(1) Thuan. lib. 109, ſub fin.

(2) Beza in Præfat. illius Comentarii.

(3) Critical Hiſt. of the Old Teſtament, lib. ii. chap. 24. pag. 347.

(4) To give the whole Title, we muſt add here, ſeu Specimen expoſitionum in difficiliora utriuſque Teſtamenti loca. In Mr Simon's Critical Hiſtory, and in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, it is Frankellatenſes, inſtead of Franckentallenſes.

(5) Teſſier, Elog. de Mr de Thou, Tom. II. pag. 202.

(6) In Gallia Orientali, pag. 73.

BERULLE (PETER de), Cardinal, and Founder of the Fathers of the Oratory in France, was born the 4th of Febr. 1575, and died the 2d of October, 1629 (a). You will find many Particulars concerning him in Moreri's Dictionary, and in Mr Perrault's Illuſtrious Men; but you will not find, in either of them, that he was expoſed to the Laſh of the Carmelites [A], who induſtriouſly decried him as a very diſhoneſt Man; nor that he oppoſed the Deſign, which Cardinal Richelieu had formed, of humbling

(a) Perrault's Illuſtrious Men, Part I, pag. 30, 34.

[A] He was expoſed to the Laſh of the Carmelites.] This is what I have read in a Book of the Biſhop of Bellei (1). "Mr de Berulle, being Supe"rior of the Oratory —— was made Superior, by "Delegation and Commiſſion from the Pope, of "certain Nuns of great Piety and Edification (2), "whom he had brought from Spain, and introdu"ced into France. The Monks of the ſame Order, "who wanted to have the Direction of Them, "clamoured loudly both at Rome, and in France. "But, failing of Succeſs (becauſe, at the Court of "Rome, The Direction of Nuns by Monks is held "in Abhorrence, for Reaſons, which Experience "ſufficiently evinces) they ſet themſelves to libel "him; they called him Anti-Pope, concealed Hu"guenot, impious Wretch, Libertine; in ſhort, they "threw the moſt ſcandalous Reflexions upon him. "They accuſed his Morals, cenſured his Doctrine, "and blackened his Reputation every way; at laſt, "Theſe Contradictions, by a wonderful Providence "of GOD, who can bring Good out of Evil, and "Light out of Darkneſs, gave birth to thoſe excel"lent Works of the State and Glories of JESUS, "and That of his Life; which dazzled the Eyes "of his Adverſaries, and ſtruck them dumb." Some of them arrived to ſuch a Pitch of Raſhneſs and Preſumption as to maintain, that the Pope could not give the Direction of Nuns to any but Monks of the ſame Order (3).

There is, among the Works of Cardinal Berulle, a Narrative of the Quarrel, which The Carmelites had with him. Their Pretence was a certain Memorial, which he had drawn up, by way of Formulary for a new kind of Vow (4). It was a Vow of Servitude to JESUS CHRIST, and the Virgin Mary. This Author did not anſwer their Writings; but he compoſed a Diſcourſe Of the State and Glories of JESUS, as an Apology for his Memorial. "Inſtead of Anſwer, and Reply, ſays he (5), "after ten Years of Patience and Silence, after three "Years of Storms and Tempeſts, raiſed in France and "Italy, by Spirits fit for this Employ, after many "Calumnies,

(1) The Anti-Baillic, in anſwer to the Anti Camus, p. 141.

(2) That is, Carmelite Nuns.

(3) Ibid. pag. 202.

(4) This Memorial is in the Works of Cardinal Berulle, pag. 278, &c. Edit. of Paris, in 1657, in Folio.

(5) Part III of his Works.

Digitized by Google

humbling the Houſe of Auſtria [B]; nor that it was pretended, that he died by Poiſon [C]. What I ſhall ſay of the Edition of his Works will rectify an Overſight of Moreri [D]. I ſhall refute, likewiſe, an Error of Mr Perrault [E]. Cardinal Berulle had a Brother, a Counſellor of State, one of whoſe Grand-ſons was Maſter of the Requeſts, Intendant at Lyons, and afterwards Firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Grenoble (b). The Brother of this latter was called The Abbot de Berulle, and was Maſter of the Requeſts, and Prior of St Romain du Puy, near Lyons, and died about the End of the Month of June, 1704 (c).

(b) Mercure Gallant, of July, 1704. pag. 99.

(c) Ibid. pag. 100.

" Calumnies, and ſix injurious and diffamatory Li-
" bels, induſtriouſly ſpread, even in foreign Coun" tries; I produce This Diſcourſe in Evidence, and " produce it, not to ſpeak of their Perſons, their
" Deſigns, their Conduct; but, to ſpeak of JESUS."

[B] He oppoſed the Deſign - - - - of humbling the Houſe of Auſtria.] He was ſeconded by Marillac, Keeper of the Seals, and by ſome other Members of the Privy-Council of Mary de Medicis (6). The Reaſons, which They alledged, againſt ſuccouring the Duke of Mantua, are to be found in Mr le Vaſſor (7), who adds; " Berulle, a Man, whoſe Poli" tics are of a Religious Turn, diſplayed them in " a Council of the Queen-Mother, and ſupported
" them by the falſe Arguments, which his myſtical Divi-
" nity, and his Imagination, naturally lively and fer-
" tile, ſuggeſted to him in Abundance. The Keeper
" of the Seals liſtened to him, as to a Prophet in" ſpired from Heaven. Berulle ſpoke to him after " his own Heart. —— Certain Carmelite Nuns of " the Fauxbourg St Jaques, great Viſionaries, whom
" Berulle, their Director, the Keeper of the Seals,
" and the Queen-Mother, conſulted as Oracles,
" greatly applauded the Project (8). GOD had re-
" vealed to them, in their Prayers, and their Extа-
" ſies, that ſuch was his Will (9)." We ſhall ſee, in the following Remark, how This Hiſtorian excuſes his Wiſhing, that the Houſe of Auſtria might not be humbled.

(6) Le Vaſſor, Hiſt. of Lewis XIII, Tom. VI, pag. 1.

(7) Ibid. pag. 2.

(8) To wit, that which the Keeper of the Seal had formed, in raiſing himſelf on the Ruins of Cardinal Richelieu's Fortune.

(9) Le Vaſſor, ubi ſupra, p. 2, 3.

The Political Will of Cardinal de Richelieu ſhews us the Partiality of Cardinal Berulle for Spain. I ſhall cite This Paſſage. " Your Majeſty (it is Car-
" dinal Richelieu, who addreſſes himſelf to Lewis
" XIII) might, by this means, have for ever freed
" the Griſons from the Tyranny of the Houſe of " Auſtria, if Fargis, your Embaſſador in Spain, had " not, at the Sollicitation of Cardinal Berulle, with" out your Knowledge, and contrary to the expreſs
" Orders of your Majeſty (as he has ſince confeſſed),
" made a very diſadvantageous Treaty, to which
" you at laſt adhered, to pleaſe the Pope, who pre-
" tended to have ſome Intereſt in This Affair (10)."
The Abbot Richard cites theſe Words, in his Hiſtory of Father Joſeph, after having ſaid, that " The " Treaty, made by the Lord du Fargis, - - - - was
" diſclaimed, becauſe he had not followed the In-
" ſtructions of Father Joſeph (11)." He adds, that it was reſolved in the King's Council, to take no notice of this Fault of du Fargis: but that, " inſtead
" of ratifying what he had done, another Project
" ſhould be ſent him, agreeable to which he might
" rectify the firſt; which The Embaſſador accord-
" ingly executed (12)."

(10) Political Will of Cardinal Richelieu, chap. i, pag. 11.

(11) Richard, Hiſt. of the Life of Father Joſeph, Tom. I, pag. 313. See, likewiſe, the true Life of Father Joſeph, pag. 132, Edit. of the Hague, in 1705, in 12mo.

(12) Ibid.

[C] It was pretended, that he died by Poiſon.] " He died ſuddenly, as he was ſaying Maſs - - - - -
" This Accident made it ſuſpected, by ſeveral, that " Richelieu had poiſoned him. The Duke of Or- " leans inſinuates This in a Letter to the King.
" Cardinal Berulle, my Couſin, ſays Gaſton, did me
" very great Service, in my Reconciliation with the " Queen my Mother. But it proved fatal to him,
" ſince his Death followed ſo ſoon after *. Is not
" This to carry the Malignity too far? Berulle was " in a languiſhing Condition more than a Year. The " noble Parts, in him, were found injured, and " corrupted. Perhaps the Cenſorious might look " upon it as the Effect of a ſlow Poiſon, ſent him
" by Richelieu, who was chagrined at his Riſe.
" However it be, Berulle was univerſally acknow" ledged to be a perfectly good Man. If he was " out in his Politics, it was owing to the Tender-
" neſs of his Conſcience, and to a falſe Zeal for " Religion, which made him ſincerely think, that his " Opinion was more advantageous to the Good of " the State, and the Re eſtabliſhment of the Romiſh
" Worſhip in France, and other Countries (13)."

* Letter of the Duke of Orleans, to the King, in 1631.

(13) Hiſt. of Lewis XIII, Tom. VI, p. 204, 205.

Obſerve, that le Vaſſor neither rejects, nor adopts, the Calumny of the Cardinal's Enemies. It is a Sign he did not think it very probable.

[D] What I ſhall ſay of the Edition of his Works will rectify an Overſight of Mr Moreri.] Part of the Works of Cardinal Berulle had been printed at different Times during his Life; the other Part was found among his Manuſcripts (14). Francis Bourgoign, at the Requeſt of the Fathers of the Oratory, whoſe General he was, cauſed them to be collected into one Body (15). Father Gibieuf, who knew more of them than any other, ranged them in order, and enriched them with Arguments and Summaries (16). They were printed at Paris, in the Year 1644, in Folio; and a ſecond Edition was publiſhed at the ſame Place, in 1657, in Folio. Father Bourgoign (17) dedicated them to the Queen-Regent, Anne of Auſtria; and added a Preface, which is not, as Mr Moreri pretends, an Abridgment of the Life of Berulle, but rather an Elogy on his Piety, and a general Idea of his Works.

(14) Francis Bourgoign, Preface to the Work of Cardinal Berulle.

(15) Ibid.

(16) Ibid.

(17) Moreri calls him Bourgoin: This is wrong: Peter Nimes ſhould be given without Alteration.

[E] I ſhall refute an Error of Mr Perrault.] He aſſirms, that Cardinal Berulle, having conducted the Princeſs Henrietta Maria into England, gained there the Love and Veneration of every one (18). Yet we read, as follows, in a Letter, which This Cardinal wrote to That Princeſs, the Twenty ſixth of October, 1625. " The Duke of Buckingham is pleaſed to " make great Complaint to the King, by his Con" fident Mr Gerbieres, who arrived ten or twelve
" Days after me, that I had conſpired, and attempted,
" in England, againſt his Life and Fortune (19)."

(18) Perrault's Illuſtrious Men, Tom. I, pag. 34.

(19) Works of Berulle, pag. 861, Edit. Paris, 1657.

BEVERNINGK (JEROM), was one of the ableſt Men, of the XVIIth Century, for Embaſſies, and important Negotiations. He was originally deſcended from a noble Family of Pruſſia [A]; but he was born at Tergou, in Holland, the Twenty fifth of April, 1614. That Town, which boaſts, with reaſon, of having produced ſo great a Man, ſaw him in the Number of it's Counſellors, in the Year 1645; and in the Number of it's Burgomaſters, in the Year 1668. He was deputed by it, in the Year 1646, to the States of the Province, where he gave ſuch good Proofs of his Capacity, that, not long after, they employed him in Affairs of Conſequence. In [A] He was originally deſcended from a noble Family of Pruſſia.] His Grandfather, John Van BEVERNINGK, a Gentleman of Pruſſia, came into Holland in the Year 1575, with the Count de Hohenlo. The States gave him a Company of Foot. He was made afterwards Lieutenant-General of the Artillery. He married the Daughter of Dirck Lonck, Burgo-Maſter of the City of Tergou, and Treaſurer General of the Province of Holland. From This Marriage proceeded Melchior Van BEVERNINGK, Captain of Foot in the Service of the States General, and Commander of the Caſtles of Argenteau and Dalem. He married Sibylla Standert, Daughter of Leonard Standert, Eſq; Captain of Foot, and Governor of Knodſenburgh, over againſt Nimegen, and of Catherine Hauſſart, Daughter of Francis Hauſſart, Chamberlain to the Queen of Hungary. Our Mr Van Beverningk proceeded from the Marriage of Melchior Van Beverningk, and Sibylla Standert.

[B] The

Digitized by Google

In the Year 1650, the States of Holland deputed him, with Mr Van Brederodé, to the States of Utrecht, to desire them to be at the Extraordinary Assembly of the United Provinces, which was to be held at the Hague. In 1651, the same States of Holland deputed him to assist at That Great Assembly of the United Provinces. In the Year 1653, the City of Tergou deputed him to the Assembly of the States General. The same Year, he was sent to the Protector, and the Republic, of England, in the Quality of Deputy Extraordinary: The Year following, This Character was changed into That of Embassador Extraordinary. He concluded the Peace between Holland and England, the Twenty eighth of April, 1654. During the Course of this Embassy, he had the Office of Treasurer General of the United Provinces conferred upon him. He possessed it 'till the Year 1665; and it was his own Fault that he held it no longer; for the States General desired him to continue in That Office, and did not consent to the laying down his Commission, 'till they saw, that neither their Reasons, nor their Intreaties, could prevail upon him. He received a very advantageous Testimony, that they were perfectly satisfied with his Conduct; and they gave him, in particular, some Marks of the Esteem they had for his Person (a). In the Year 1659, he had the good Fortune to contribute, with other Deputies, to the composing the Differences, which were raised in the Province of Groningen. It may be said, that he was born for this kind of good Fortune; which appears by the many Treaties of Peace, or Alliance, which he concluded [B]. He was twice sent to Cleves, in the Year 1666. The first Time, he concluded a very strict Alliance with his Electoral Highness of Brandenburg (b); the second time, he concluded a Peace with the Bishop of Munster (c). The Year following, being invested with the Character of Embassador, he concluded the Treaty of Peace with England, at Breda (d). In 1668, he was sent in the Quality of Embassador Extraordinary to Aix la Chapelle, for the Treaty of Peace between France and Spain; which Treaty was concluded the second of May. In the same Year 1668, he was nominated to go, with Prince Maurice of Nassau, in the Quality of Embassador Extraordinary to the Emperor; but the States General changed their Mind as to That Embassy. The States of Holland gave Mr Van Beverningk some Marks of their Regard for his important Services (e). In the Year 1671, he went to the Court of Spain, in the Quality of Embassador Extraordinary, to dispose his Catholic Majesty to a Negotiation about his Differences with France, and he succeeded in it to the Satisfaction of his Masters. In the Year 1672, he followed the Prince of Orange to the Army, as Deputy of the States. After this he had a Mind to live a quiet Life, and thought he ought to be satisfied with the Glory he had acquired, and that he had performed all that a good Subject owes to his Country; but his Country wanted him too much to let him enjoy a retired Life. The redoubled Instances of the States, and of the Prince of Orange, obliged him, in the Year 1673, to engage himself in one of the most important Negotiations, that had yet occurred. I mean the Conferences at Cologne. At first, the City of Aix la Chapelle had been chosen, to negotiate the Peace between the Princes, who were then at War; but it was found more proper to go to Cologne. Mr Van Beverningk appeared there with the Character of Embassador Extraordinary. The carrying off of the Prince of Furstenberg produced the Effect, which was expected from That bold Attempt, viz. the breaking off of the Conferences in relation to France. Nevertheless, the Negotiation was continued with the Allies of that Crown; and it was done with all manner of Success; for Mr Van Beverningk brought the Elector of Cologne, and the Bishop of Munster, back again into the Alliance of the States General (f). He was made Curator of the University of Leyden, in the Year 1673. It is an Office, which is not commonly given but to Those, who have served their Country in great Employments. When he expected to enjoy the Repose, which he had so long wished for, he found himself engaged in a most difficult Negotiation: He was so earnestly sollicited to go to Nimegen, in the Quality of Embassador Plenipotentiary from the Republic, for the General Peace, that, after having excused himself several times, he could not refuse That important and laborious Commission. The Obstacles, which he was to overcome, cannot be expressed:

(a) The Council of State presented him with a Golden Cup, enamelled.

(b) Feb. 16, 1666.

(c) April 19, 1666.

(d) July 31, 166,.

(e) They made him a Present of a fine Set of Silver Dishes and Plates.

(f) The Treaty of Peace with the Bishop of Munster was signed April 22, 1674; and That with the Elector of Cologne, the 11th of May following.

[B] The many Treaties of Peace, or Alliance, which he concluded.] Here is a Passage, which, in a long Parenthesis, will serve as a Commentary upon these Words. "Monsieur Patius (1) being "Embassador in Spain, and having, by his great "Capacity, preserved, and increased, in the Queen "of Spain, and her Council, the good Impressions, "which Monsieur Van Beverningk (a Man born to "make Peace in the World, having given it, in "Cromwel's Time, and afterwards at Breda, to the "English, and Dutch, at Cleves to the Bishop of "Munster, at Aix la Chapelle to the French and Spaniards, and, lately, at Cologne, to the Archbishop "of Cologne, and to the Bishop of Munster, and having not a little contributed to the Peace, lately "made with England, and who, for that reason, "might well be called the Peace-Maker) had made "upon them, to oppose early, by just and effectual "Means, the Ambition of the French; Stoupe does "not know any other way of revenging himself upon him, but by Calumny, and falsly accusing him "of being an Arminian. He is also foolishly afraid, "that, if Mr Patius should go through Switzerland, "he would not come off very cheap. I am sure, that, "if he should happen to pass by that Country, the "Swiss, as well the Protestant, as the Catholic, "Cantons, would receive him with their usual Civility, and with the Respect due to his Character, "and to his great Merit, and that they would give "him public Thanks for having so much contributed "to the Preservation of Religion, and the Liberty of "Europe." This is to be found in an Answer, which was made to Mr Stoupe's Letter about the Religon of the Dutch (2).

(1) It should be Paets. It is He, whom I speak of in a marginal Note of the first Article SAINCTES, Remark [F].

(2) Pag. 234, 235. The Title of that Answer is, The true Religion of the Dutch. It was printed at Amsterdam, 1675, in 12mo.

[C] The

Digitized by Google

preffed: A leſs conſummate Induſtry and Experience, than His, could never have compaſſed it; for, except the French Embaſſadors, almoſt all the reſt made it much more their their Buſineſs to retard the Treaty of Peace, than to advance it. Nevertheleſs, after the taking of Ghent, it ſeemed, that the Peace was become, at laſt, a neceſſary Evil for Holland; and People were ſo ſenſible of the fatal Conſequences, which the taking of That Place might have, that they ardently deſired an end of the War. Mr Van Beverningk had Orders to go to the King of France, at his Camp of Wetteren (g); and, after the Reception he met with [C], it was no longer doubted, but that a Peace would be concluded. It was ſigned, between France and Holland, the tenth of Auguſt, 1678; after which, Mr Van Beverningk ſerved effectually, as a Mediator, to conclude That between France and Spain, the eleventh of September, in the ſame Year. He alſo concluded a Treaty of Peace, and of Commerce, between Sweden, and the States General, the twelfth of October, 1679. After ſo many honourable, and happy, Negotiations, he enjoyed, at laſt, That quiet Life, which he had ſo long wiſhed for. He retired to a fine Lordſhip (b), which he had, a ſmall League from Leyden, where he chiefly employed himſelf in the Culture of all ſorts of Plants, which he ſent for from all Parts of the World. But this pleaſant and innocent Occupation, ſo like That, which ſome great Princes have betaken themſelves to, after their Triumphs, and the Government of the State, did not hinder him from regarding the Common-Wealth of Learning. He exerciſed his Function of Curator of the Univerſity, with great Vigilance. He felt the beginning of his laſt Sickneſs, a little after having ſpent one Morning in peruſing the Manuſcripts of the famous Library of Iſaac Voſſius, which had lately been bought for the Univerſity of Holland (i). As ſoon as he was got into his Coach again, he began to ſhudder. This was the beginning of a Fever, which encreaſed daily, and of which he died, the thirtieth of October, 1690, at the Age of Seventy ſix Years. His Wife ſurvived him (k); but he had no Children by her; ſo that as he was an only Son, no Perſon remains to bear his Name, in this Country. He was buried at Tergou, in a Marble Chapel, which he had built. His Relations cauſed his Epitaph to be engraved on a Touchſtone. It is a fine Inſcription, which may be ſeen entire in the Remark [D]. It contains an Abridgment of a Life, which might fill

(g) He arrived there May 30, 1678.

(b) The Name of it is, Oud. Teilingen.

(i) That of Leyden.

(k) She was born at Amſterdam, May 11, 1635: Her Name is Joan le Gillon, She is originally of a noble Family of Picardy.

[C] The Reception he met with from the King of France.] See the Anſwer, which the King of France gave to the Letter of the States General, and the Memorial, which he ordered to be delivered to Mr Van Beverningk, with the ſame Anſwer. There is nothing in it, but what tends to facilitate the Advancement of the Peace; the Stile is mild and civil; and many Advances are made in it. Every Body may be convinced of it (3). There was a particular Circumſtance in This Embaſſy, which is not known, but deſerves to be ſo. It ſhews, on one ſide, the Diſtinction, with which the King of France regarded the Perſon, who had been ſent to him, and, on the other ſide, with what Principles of Honour, and Diſintereſtedneſs, Mr Van Beverningk behaved himſelf. When he came away from Wetteren, the King would make him a Preſent of two of his Pictures, enriched with Jewels, each of which were worth about Eight hundred Livres. It is not uſual to give two Pictures, but one only. He anſwered the Perſon, who offered him This Preſent from the King, that he thanked His Majeſty for the Honour; but that he did not think proper to accept of it. Nevertheleſs, he made a Preſent to the Bearer of the two Pictures, as if he had accepted of Them. The King's Letter to the States contains, among other things, that the Sieur Van Beverningk's Perſon and Conduct had been very acceptable to him.

(3) All this is inſerted in the 2d Part of the 2d Vol. of The Acts and Memoirs of the Negotiations of the Peace of Nimegen, pag. 407, Edit. Amſt. 1680.

[D] His Epitaph may be ſeen entire in the Remarks.] Here it is; The Lines are placed here, as they are in the Original:

Perilluſtris. ac generoſus. vir
HIERONYMUS. VAN. BEVERNINGK,
Theilingæ. Toparcha.
Senator. Judex. Conſul. Goudanus.
In. conſeſſu. præpot: ord: gen: Aſſeſſor
Idem. aliquoties. extra. ordin:
Communi. Belgicæ. Fœd: ærario. Præfectus
Lycei. Batavorum. Curator
In Hiſpan: & Fœd: Belg: finibus. regundis Adjutor.
Legatus Wilhelmo. III. in exercitu. datus.
Weſtmonaſterium. Cliviam. II. Bredam
Aquisgranum. Bruxellas. Madritum
Coloniam. Agripp: Noviomagum:
Ad. Gall: item. Regem.
Wetteræ. Morinorum. caſtra habentem.
Cum poteſtate. res. componendi. miſſus.
Ad. Cæſarem. vero. deſignatus. Orator.
Re. niſi. perfecta. nunquam. reverſus.
De. maximi. præterea. momenti. rebus. domi
De. amicitiis. parandis
Et. fœderibus. pangendis foris,
A. Patriæ. Patribus. paſſim
Feliciter. conſultus. & adhibitus.
Natus. Goudæ. xxv. April. MDCXIV.
Mortuus. Theilingæ. xxx. Octob: MDCXC
Satur. honorum
Hoc. monumento. conditur
Cum
Optima. vitæ. fortunarum. que. ſocia
Joanna. Le Gillon
Nata. Amſt. xi. Maji. MDCXXXV
Mortua.
ΘΑΝΑΤΩ. ΠΑΝΤΕΣ. ΟΦΕΙΛΟΜΕΘΑ.

The very Illuſtrious and Noble
JEROM VAN BEVERNINGK;
Lord of Teilingen;
Senator, Judge, and Counſellor, of Tergou;
Deputy in the General Aſſembly of the States;
Sometimes Deputy Extraordinary;
Treaſurer General of the United Provinces;
Curator of the Univerſity of Leyden;
Aſſiſtant in ſettling the Boundaries of Spain, and the United Provinces.
Deputy of the States in the Army of William III.
Sent Plenipotentiary to Weſtminſter, To Cleves twice, To Breda,
To Aix la Chapelle, To Bruſſels, To Madrid,
To Cologne, To the French King,
Encamped at Wetteren.
Appointed Embaſſador to the Emperor,
He returned not, 'till he had finiſhed his Negotiation.
Conſulted, with ſucceſs,

Digitized by Google

fill a whole Volume; and, if Mr Van Beverningk had taken the pains to compose some Memoirs concerning his Embassies, it would be the most instructive, and most curious Book, that could be seen. He always succeeded in his Negotiations; which is an Honour, whereof we find but few Examples among those, who have had the Management of so many public Affairs. He was laborious and industrious, and never discouraged at any thing (l). The French and Dutch Writers equally praise him. I could alledge many Proofs of it; but shall be satisfied with producing what Mr de Wicquefort [E], and Mr de Saint Didier [F], have said of him. As for Sir William Temple, he seems to be a little vexed at the signing of the Treaty of Nimegen; but, notwithstanding, he owns, that Mr Van Beverningk put a Stop to the Complaints of his Enemies (m). He might have said, that the Magistrates of Amsterdam wrote a very obliging Letter to him, in which they thanked him for the Conclusion of the Peace (n). They assured him, that they had taken much Pains with the Members of the States of Holland, that he might be employed in That Negotiation. They knew very well, that they stood in need of such a Man, as He, to make it succeed. The Town, where he was born, shewed him, upon that Occasion, how much they esteemed him. The City of Tergou made him a Present of two Silver Handirons, in the Year 1679, in Consideration of the last Treaty of Peace, and for other important Services, done to the State and the City.

(l) Taken from some Memoirs, which came from good Hands.

(m) Memoirs, pag. 417. Edit. of the Hague, 1692.

(n) Dated August 14, 1678.

In Domestic Affairs of the greatest Consequence,
And in public Treaties abroad,
By the Fathers of his Country.
He was born at Tergou, April 25. 1614;
Died at Teilingen, Octob. 30, 1690;
Full of Honours;
And lies buried, in This Monument,
With
The best Companion of his Life and Fortunes,
JOANNA LE GILLON;
Born at Amsterdam, May 11, 1635.
Died.
DEATH IS A DEBT WE ALL MUST PAY.

[E] What Mr Wicquefort —— said of him.] "Jerom Beverningk is, doubtless, one of the ablest "Men of the United Provinces for Negotiations. "The City of Tergou, which otherwise does not "want able Men, deputed him several times to the "Assemblies of the States of the Province of Holland, and to the Colleges of the Generality, and he "always perfectly answered what might be expected "from his great Ability. It was He, who, in the "Year 1654, made the Treaty with Oliver Cromwell, which gave Peace to the United Provinces; "but it had like to have involved them in a Civil "War, because the Interests of the Prince of Orange, "according to some, had not been well managed in "it. The Province of Holland was so well satisfied "with the Service he did them at That Juncture, "that They procured him the Office of Treasurer "General, that is to say, of first Minister of the "United Provinces. There is no Affair, though "ever so difficult, but what he can clear up, when "he will apply himself to it. If any one desires "proofs of it, he need only look into the Treaty, "which he concluded at Cleves, with the Bishop of "Munster, in the Year 1666. Nor was He less "successful in his Negotiations at Madrid, concerning the important Interests of the Provinces of the "Netherlands. If he did not succeed at Cologne, it "must be imputed to the Ill-disposition of the Parties "concerned, and to the unlucky Juncture of Affairs, "rather than to his Way of managing Things. Hence "it is, that he was intrusted with the whole Negotiation at Nimegen; and the States made choice of "him to go, and conclude it with the most Christian "King near Ghent. He is weary of so many Employments; so that, whereas others strive for them, "he avoids them; choosing rather to enjoy himself "in his Country Retirement, than to be troubled "with the Cares, which Business brings upon him, "and which are often no less troublesome to him, "than to Those, who negotiate with him. A better Pen, than mine, is requisite to draw up Mr Van Beverningk's Character, because, if all the Parts of "it be well examined, it will be found, that, abating "his uneven Temper, there is nothing in him, but "what is Excellent (4)."

(4) Wicquefort's Treatise of Embassadors, Tom. II, pag. 443.

[F] —— and Mr de Saint Didier.] Of all the Places, where this Author speaks of Mr Van Beverningk, I shall select but these three. "Mr Van Beverningk's quick Return, occasioned by this News "(5), which made him set out from his House, to "repair to Nimegen, with all speed, confirmed the "Conjecture of a private Agreement between Holland and France. This Embassador appeared to be "so zealous for the true Interest of his Country, that, "if any private Negotiation was to be expected, it "could not be by any other means (6). —— He is a "Man of a quick Wit, who knows what is best, and "attains to it the shortest way. He is Vigilant and "Laborious. He has been employed by the States "in several Embassies, and in all the Treaties, which "have been made since 1650; but he loves a retired "Life, and it was with some kind of uneasiness, that "he left his Country-House near Leyden, to go to "Nimegen (7). —— Mr Van Beverningk is a Man "of no less Ability, than Dispatch (8)."

(5) He means That of the Battle of Cassel.

(6) History of the Negotiations of Nimegen, Tom. I, pag. 64, ad Ann. 1677.

(7) Ibid. pag. 187.

(8) Ibid. Tom. II. pag. 29.

BEZANITES, or BEZANIANS, an imaginary Sect, which never existed but in the Heads of some Makers of Catalogues of Heretics. There would be reason to wonder, that such absurd Writings, as Those Catalogues are, have not been suppressed in their Birth, by Persons of Authority; I say, there would be reason to wonder at it, if it were not known, that Those Persons of Authority are very often the least knowing, and the most persuaded of this wrong Maxim, that one may use indifferently Fraud or Force against one's Enemy; —— dolus an virtus quis in hoste requirat (a)? These Persons did not perceive, that those Catalogues, being full of impertinent and notorious Falsities, were only proper to inspire the Heretics with a very great Contempt for the Writers of the prevailing Party. They only considered the Advantage, which would accrue from the Heretics being thought to be divided into a thousand Sects. However it be, if Prateolus may be believed (b), there arose a Sect under the Reign of Charles V, and under the Pontificate of Julius III, about the Year 1550 (c), which was called the Bezanites, or the Bezanians, from Theodorus Beza. The only Proof, that he could bring for it, would be, that he had read such a Thing in a Book of Lindanus; for it is very true, that Lindanus says so (d); but without quoting any Body. That which is very certain, is, that (a) Virgil. Æn. lib. ii, ver. 320.

(b) In Elencho Hæreticorum, voce Bezanitæ, pag. 93.

(c) At that time Beza was not a Minister; he was only Professor of the Greek Tongue.

(d) Dubitantii Dialogo II, pag. 152.

Digitized by Google

one might boldly lay any Wager, though never ſo great, to be paid to Thoſe, who could prove, that ſome People, in the XVIth Century, made a ſeparate Sect, in the Quality of Beza's Diſciples. The ſame may be ſaid in relation to a great many other Sects, which fill up the Alphabet of Prateolus. Perhaps the chief Reaſon, which induced him to mention the pretended Sect of the Bezanites, was the Deſire of adorning his Work with the Calumnies, which were publiſhed againſt Beza [A]. If, inſtead of rewarding Lindanus, they had puniſhed him for his Lies [B], he would not have been tranſcribed by ſo many Perſons, among whom a Carthuſian of Germany is, doubtleſs, the moſt ridiciculous [C].

[A] Prateolous would not, perhaps, have mentioned the Bezanians, but for the deſire of adorning his Work with the Calumnies which were publiſhed againſt Beza.] My Conjecture will appear very probable to Thoſe, who ſhall conſider, that, Prateolus having but five or ſix Lines to beſtow upon his pretended Bezanites, has filled ſeven or eight Pages with the moſt diſgraceful Things, he could find, againſt That famous Miniſter, in the Writings of Lindanus, Claudius de Saintes, and John le Viel. Beſides, he miſrepreſents and relates unfaithfully what he takes from them. I am going to give an Example of it. Lindanus had quoted Peter Viretus, who ſaid, that ſome Schoolmaſters took delight in repeating, a thouſand times, to their Scholars, that a Man is happy, when he can trample upon the Fear of Death, and infernal Torments. It is a Paſſage of Virgil. Teſtatur P. Viretus lib. 2. de Miniſt. Verbi eſſe quoſdam ludimagiſtros ex illo Epicuri grege porcos, qui in ſcholis ſoleant ſuis ſæpe ſcholaſticis occinere illum vere beatum qui, uti eſt apud Virgilium,

——— metus omnes, & inexorabile Fatum
Subjecit pedibus, ſtrepitumque Acherontis avari (1).

(1) Lindanus, Dubitantii, Dial. ii, pag. 246.

Lindanus adds, that Beza had rendered himſelf ſuſpected of the like Epicureiſm, as his Brethren of Paris and Orleans witneſs. What does Prateolus? He maintains, that Lindanus had ſaid, that, when Beza was Schoolmaſter, he often repeated This Paſſage of Virgil to his Scholars (2). Is not This to falſify an Author? Afterwards, Lindanus, who had quoted, hitherto, no Authority againſt Beza, quotes one Fabricius (3), who accuſes That Miniſter of having ſold his Benefices, and of loving the Fair Sex to exceſs. Beneficia eccleſiaſtica ——— publice venderet, & alienas uxores permoleret tam familiariter, ut publicus matronarum haberetur maritus. This is ſoon ſaid; but where are the Proofs?

(2) Prateol. in Elencho Hæret. pag. 94.

(3) Michael Fabricius pro Fran. Balduino.

[B] Inſtead of rewarding Lindanus, they ſhould have puniſhed him for his Lies.] It is certain, that Prateolus has ranged a great many Sects in an Alphabetical Order, which never exiſted, and that he had no other Authority for it, than Lindanus. Father Gaultier, a Jeſuit, gives us a Liſt of theſe ſame Sects, in his Chronographical Table, on Prateolus's Teſtimony. If he is not his only Author, he is at leaſt his chief Authority. An hundred Authors have ſpoken, and do ſtill ſpeak, of theſe Sects on the Credit of That Jeſuit. Obſerve the prodigious and horrible Propagation of the Fault of a ſingle Writer, I mean Lindanus. When one conſiders, that This Author, having been preferred to a ſmall Biſhopric, was afterwards promoted to a greater, and received great Honours at Rome (4), and that none of all the Superiors, to whom he was to give an account of his Conduct, cenſured him for the Boldneſs, with which he had created ſo many Sects (5); it can be no longer wondered at, that there ſhould be ſo many Liars, among Thoſe, who engage in Controverſies. If Lindanus's Superiors had required him to prove, that certain Diſciples of Beza, diſtinct from Thoſe of Calvin, and from Thoſe of the other Reformers, had formed a great, or ſmall, Body, ſeparate from the other Sectaries; and if, for want of good Proofs, they had condemned him to the Puniſhment of public Impoſtors, and declared him unqualified for meddling with holy Things, they had eſtabliſhed a Precedent, which would have reclaimed all credulous, or deceitful, Writers, who report ſo many Falſities. But, inſtead of bringing him into trouble for it, they looked upon him as a valiant Champion of the Catholic Cauſe, and raiſed him more and more. Who would therefore ſcruple to calumniate Heretics? One might apply theſe Words of Horace to That Author:

Ulla ſi Juris tibi pejerati
Pœna, Barine, nocuiſſet unquam;
Dente ſi nigro fieres, vel uno
Turpior ungue;
Crederem. Sed tu ſimul obligaſti
Perfidum votis caput, enitescis
Pulchrior multo, juvenumque prodis
Publica cura.
Expedit matris cineres opertos
Fallere, & toto taciturna noctis
Signa cum cœlo, gelidaque divos
Morte carentes (6).

(6) Horat. Od. viii. libe ii.

Barine, did Revenge o'retake,
And blaſt as oft as you deceive;
Were but one Nail, or Tooth, more black,
Thy Vows I would at laſt believe:
But ſtill more fair, more bright thy Face,
More Crowds of Lovers flock to vieto,
As each falſe Oath procured a Grace,
And tempted Thee to prove untrue.
It profits thee to be forſworn
By All that other Mortals fear,
Th' Eternal Gods, thy Mother's Urn,
By whirling Heav'n, and ev'ry Star.

CREECH.

(4) Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 323, 324.

(5) He made them out of nothing, ex nihilo ſui & ex nihilo ſubjecti; this is what is called Creation.

There is another Reflexion, which would well deſerve to be weighed. If the Queſtion had been to defame the Taylors, or ſome other Tradeſmen of an Imperial City, Lindanus, I believe, would not have affirmed any thing publickly, without being certain of the Fact; but, becauſe Religion, and the Glory of GOD, was concerned in it, he publiſhed all that came into his Head, without any Examination, or Remorſe. So that, if we conſider the matter well, the Zeal of Controverſiſts, inſtead of increaſing their Virtue, ſtifles the Knowledge, and all the Scruples, which might keep them in the way of Probity, in Things purely Human: QUOD NOTANDUM (7).

(7) See Remark [O]. of the Article CAYET.

[C] Lindanus's Lies have been moſt ridiculouſly tranſcribed by a Carthuſian of Germany.] His Name is Theodorus Petreius ——— his Catalogus Hæreticorum was printed in the Year 1628. See what Hoornbeeck ſaid of it in his Summa Controverſ. pag. 321.

BEZA (THEODORUS), one of the chief Pillars of the Reformed Church, was of Vezelai, in Burgundy. He was nobly born, both by his Father's and Mother's Side [A], the Twenty fourth of June, 1519. He was hardly weaned, when his Uncle,

[A] He was born Noble, both on his Father's and Mother's Side.] His Father, who was Bailiff of Vezelai, was called Peter de Beze, his Mother's Name was Mary Bourdelot. "P. à Beza ejus oppidi præ" ſecto, & Maria Bourdelotia, utroque Dei gratia " genere nobili (utinam verò potius veri Dei cogni" tione imbuto) & integræ famæ parente natus. ——— " Born of Peter Beza, Bailiff of That Town, and " Mary Bourdelot, both, by GOD's Grace, of noble " Birth, and unblemiſhed Fame; I wiſh I could rather " ſay, inſtructed in the Knowledge of the True GOD." Beza, who ſpeaks in this manner, in an Epiſtle Dedicatory

Digitized by Google

Uncle, Nicolas Beza, Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, would have him at his Houſe, where he was very affectionately educated, 'till the beginning of December, 1528 (a), when he was ſent to Melchior Wolmar, at Orleans, who had a wonderful Skill in inſtructing Youth. He lodged ſeven Years at Wolmar's Houſe, who improved him wonderfully in Claſſical Learning, and inſtructed him in Religion, out of the Word of GOD (b); that is, he educated him in the Proteſtant Religion. Wolmar had been ſent for to Bourges, by the Queen of Navarre, to teach the Greek Tongue there. He left That Employment, and returned into Germany, his Country, in the Year 1535. Then Beza was ſent to ſtudy the Law at Orleans. This Study pleaſed him but little: He ſpent the beſt of his Time in reading good Greek and Latin Authors, and compoſing Verſes. He made ſuch good ones, that he diſtinguiſhed himſelf by them, in a particular manner; inſomuch that he was taken notice of and beloved by the moſt learned Men in the Univerſity of Orleans. He took his Licentiate's Degree, there, in the Year 1539 (c), and went to Paris, where ſome good Preferments were provided for him [B], which combated for ſome time the Reſolution he had taken to return to Wolmar, and make public Profeſſion of the Reformation. The Pleaſures of Paris, the Honours, which were offered him, and a great many other Snares of Satan, he ſays, did not choak the good Seed; he never forſook the Reſolution of renouncing Popery, though the Temptations of the World made him Irreſolute [C]. He had provided againſt Thoſe of the Fleſh by a Marriage of Conſcience (d); that is to ſay, by a Promiſe, which he made to a Woman, to marry her publickly, as ſoon as the Obſtacles, which hindered him at That Time, ſhould be removed, and, in the mean time, not to engage himſelf in the Eccleſiaſtical State. He faithfully performed Theſe two Promiſes; but a dangerous Sickneſs was neceſſary to extricate him from the Snares, which entangled him in the Mire. The frightful Image of approaching Death made him renew ſo earneſtly the Vow, he had formerly made, to profeſs the Reformed Religion, that, as ſoon as he had recovered ſufficient Health to travel, he fled to Geneva, with This Woman. He arrived there the Twenty fourth of October, 1548; and, before he reſolved upon what Courſe of Life he ſhould take, he went to ſee Melchior Wolmar, at Tubingen. The Year following, he accepted the Profeſſorſhip of the Greek Tongue at Lauſanne;

(a) Antony la Faye, de vita & obitu Th. Bezæ, pag. 9, anticipates This Time, and is miſtaken; he ſays, that Beza was ſent, at five Years of Age, to be educated by Wolmar, at Orleans. Mr Teiſſier, Addit. to the Eloges, Tom. II, pag. 362, ſays the ſame thing.

(b) Veræ pietatis cognitione ex Dei verbo tanquam limpidiſſimo fonte petita tu me ita imbuiſti ut, &c. Beza, Epiſt. ad M. Wolmarum. See below, Citation (e).

(c) Anno Domini 1539. Cal. Auguſti, quum annum ætatis viceſimum eſſem ingreſſus. Id. ibid. He reckons wrong; he was already in his 21ſt Year.

(d) See Remarks [C] and [Y].

(1) It is That of his Confeſſion of Faith, which he publiſhed in Latin, in 1560. See Citat. (e), of this Article.

dicatory to Wolmar (1), tells us elſewhere, that his Anceſtors had been rich for ſeveral Generations, and great Benefactors to the Church. " Sum enim ego " (ne neſcias) Dei gratia, non ex Monachis, non ex " adulterio, vel ſtupro, ſed honeſtis avis & atavis " prognatus; &, ne ad allegorias tuas confugias, ſcito " Bezarum familiam, ſi forte quæcunque ante ducen- " tos & amplius annos in Monachos ſuperſtitioſe lar- " gita eſt reciperet, tam fore locupletem quam ægre " hodie ſeſe in ſua inopia tuetur (2). — You are to " know, that I am not the Offspring of Monks, that " I was not begotten in Adultery or Whoredom, but " am ſprung from honeſt Parents, and reputable An- " ceſtors; and, that you may not fly to your Allegories, " know, that the Family of the Beza's, if it could re- " cover what it has ſuperſtitiouſly beſtowed on Monks " for Two hundred Years, and more, would be as " wealthy, as it is now ſcarce able to ſupport itſelf in " it's Poverty."

(2) Beza ad Claudium de Xaintes, Apologia Altera, ſub. fin.

[B] He went to Paris, where ſome good Preferments were provided for him.] His Uncle, the Counſellor, had been dead ſeven Years (3); but another Uncle, Abbot of Froidmont, had no leſs kindneſs for This Nephew. He deſigned to have reſigned to him his Abbey, worth Fifteen thouſand Livers yearly Rent; which, with two other good Benefices, which Beza was already provided with, and which had been procured him without his Knowledge, would have put him in a very good way. " Huc accedebat quod duobus pin- " guibus & opimis Beneficiis me alioqui macrum ado- " leſcentem, & præterea, quod vere teſtor, iſtarum " rerum prorſus ignarum & abſentem, onerarunt, quo- " rum vectigalia aureos coronatos annuos plus minus " ſeptingentos æquabant (4)." Beſides, his elder Brother was very ill, and could not live long; the Succeſſion to his Benefices was an approaching Hope. He died ſoon after; and This Death increaſed Beza's Income conſiderably. Ex Fratris morte auctiores mihi reditus eſſent facti (5). It is eaſy to judge, that a young Man, ſo well ſettled already, and who had ſuch great Talents, many Friends and Relations, and an uncommon Reputation, built on the Succeſs of his Latin Verſes, which the Public had ſeen, might promiſe to himſelf all ſorts of Preferments. " Quum- " que mihi præter illa impedimenta, quæ antè " commemoravi, triplicem laqueum Satanas circun- " dediſſet, nempe voluptatum illecebras quæ ſunt in " ea civitate maximæ; gloriolæ dulcedinem, quam " ego non parvam, ex meorum præſertim Epigram- " matum editione, ipſius quoque M. Antonii Flami- " nii doctiſſimi poëtæ, & quidem Itali, judicio eram " conſequutus; ſpem denique maximorum honorum " mihi propoſitam, ad quos ex ipſis aulicis proceribus " aliquot me vocabant, incitabant amici, pater & " patruus hortari non deſinebant; voluit Deus Opt. " Max. ut ----- tandem ex his quoque periculis " evaderem (6). ------- And though, beſides the " Obſtacles, already mentioned, Satan laid a triple " Snare for me; to wit, the Allurements of Pleaſure, " which are very great in That City; the Sweets of " Fame, which I had acquired no ſmall Degree of, " particularly by the Publication of my Epigrams, and " in the Opinion even of the very learned Italian Poet " M. Antony Flaminius; laſtly, the Hopes given me " of the greateſt Honours, to which ſome of the Cour- " tiers themſelves invited me, my Friends prompted, " and my Father and Uncle perpetually exhorted me, " to accept of; yet it pleaſed GOD ------ to extri- " cate me even out of theſe Dangers."

(3) Verheiden, p 209, who ſays he was ſtill living, is miſtaken.

(4) Beza Epiſt. ad Melch. Wolmarum.

(5) Ibid.

(6) Ibid.

[C] The Temptations of the World made him irreſolute.] This ought to be no wonder to us. At ſuch an Age, a witty and handſome Man, who wants nothing to divert himſelf, has much ado to reſiſt Temptation. In vain did the Woman, to whom Beza had promiſed Marriage, put him in mind of marrying her; the Revenue of the Benefices, which he muſt have renounced, confuted all her Inſtances: One may eaſily believe what Beza ſays upon it. But the Force, with which He, at laſt, broke theſe Bonds, is ſo much the more admirable. " Quum mihi & juveni & à meis otio, pecunia, re- " bus denique omnibus potius quam conſilio, abun- " danti, Satanas omnia illa impedimenta derepente " objeciſſet, fateor me inani illarum rerum ſplendore " & vanis blanditiis ita fuiſſe pellectum, ut me to- " tum huc & illuc abripi facile paterer —— Uxo- " rem mihi deſpondi, ſed clam, id tamen fateor & " uno tantum & altero ex piis amicis conſcio, par- " tim ne cæteros offenderem, partim quod adhuc " non ſatis poſſem à ſcelerata illa pecunia quam ex " ſacerdotiis, de quibus ante dixi, percipiebam, ut " impurus canis ab uncto corio, abſterreri. —— Ego " tum interea ſemper in luto hærere, inſtantibus meis " ut tandem certum aliquod vitæ genus amplecterer, " & patruo mihi omnia deferente, adeo ut quum " una ex parte me premeret conſcientia, & conjux " de promiſſo appellaret; ex altera vero perſonatus

" Satan

Digitized by Google

Lausanne; and, after having exercised it about nine or ten Years, he returned to Geneva [D], where he was admitted a Minister (e). During these nine Years, he did not confine himself to Greek Lectures; he read some also, in French, on the New Testament [E], which were for the Instruction, and Consolation, of several Refugees of both Sexes, who lived at Lausanne. He published several Books during his Abode in that City [F]; and, before he quitted the Professorship, which he exercised

(e) Taken out of the Epistle Dedicatory of Beza to Melchior Wolmar, before his Confession of Faith, which is at the end of his Works in Folio. Edit. of Geneva, 1582.

" Satan mihi placidissimo vulta blandiretur, & ex " fratris morte auctiores mihi reditus essent facti, " quasi omnis consilii inops inter istas animi curas " jacerem (7). —— I confess, I suffered myself to " be easily carried away with the empty Show, and " Allurements, of Those Temptations, which Satan " suddenly threw in my way, when I was young, idle, " and fuller of Money, than Discretion. —— I en- " tered into a Contract of Marriage, but secretly; " yet with the Privacy, I must confess, of one or " two of my pious Friends, partly that I might not " offend the rest, and partly because I still hankered " after the wicked Profits of those Benefices, I be- " fore spoke of. —— In the mean time I continued " plunged in the Mire, notwithstanding the Instances " of my Friends, that I would, at length, embrace " some settled way of Life, and the ready Compliance " of my Uncle in every thing; insomuch that, on the " one side, Conscience pressing me, and the Lady cal- " ling me to the Performance of my Promise; and, " on the other side, allured by worldly Temptations, " and an Encrease of my Income by the Death of " my Brother, I remained utterly Irresolute and In- " determined."

(7) Ibid.

[D] After having exercised the Greek Professorship about nine or ten Years at Lausanne, he returned to Geneva,] This is what he says himself, in his Answer to Claudius de Saintes. Novem circiter annos Græcas literas docuisse (8). Antony la Faye has made use of an even Number, viz. ten Years compleat; " Inciderunt postea tempora, quæ Bezam ad " migrandum Lausanna, ubi DECEM annos integros " hæserat Græca docendi munere defungens, induxe- " runt (9). —— Beza was, afterwards, induced to " go to Lausanne, where he taught Greek TEN " whole Years." Beza, in another Place of his Books, says, that from Lausanne he returned to Geneva, after ten Years stay there. " Inde vero tan- " dem, id est post annum decimum —— in hanc " urbem iterum tanquam in placidissimum por- " tum redii (10)." Neither He, nor la Faye, have judged it proper to explain all the Reasons of his leaving Lausanne: What they say of it does not hinder us from suspecting, that there was I know not what in it, which would be fit for secret Memoirs. " Inciderunt Tempora, quæ Bezam " ad migrandum Lausanna induxerunt. - - - - Beza " was induced to go to Lausanne (11). - - - - - Inde " — partim quod meipsum cuperem Theologiæ totum " consecrare, partim alias ob causas quas nihil hic " attinet commemorare - - - - in hanc urbem - - - - " redii (12). - - - - - I returned from thence to this " City, partly that I might dedicate myself wholly " to Divinity, and partly for Reasons, which it sig- " nifies nothing to repeat here." His Enemies, who made Mountains of Mole-hills, published, that he had been expelled That City. See Lindanus, at the Hundred fifty second Page of the second Dialogue of of his Dubitantius; and Baudouin, in his third Answer, fol. 146. verso, where he says, Docuit Lausannæ multis annis - - - - illinc turpiter atque ignominiose pulsus. - - - - He taught many Years at Lausanne, from whence he was expelled with Ignominy. This is false; but there was something, I know not, which gave occasion to this Lie. Mr Teissier mistook one thing for another, when he said, that Beza exercised the Professorship of Philosophy, for ten Years, at Lausanne (13).

(8) Beza, Apologia Altera, pag. 359.

(9) Ant. Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 18.

(10) Beza, Epist. Dedicat. ad Melch. Wolmarum.

(11) Fayus, in vita Beza, pag. 18.

(12) See Remark [F F], of the Article CALVIN.

(13) Beza, ubi supra. Addit. to Thuanus, Tom. II, pag. 363.

One of my Friends (14), a famous Professor at Lausanne, having read what goes before, used all his Endeavours to help me to some Explanations; but his Endeavours proved vain: However, I here give you an Abstract of his Letter, which is of some Moment. " I thought I could have given you some " Light into Beza's Life, and particularly as to his " leaving This University to go to Geneva. You " intimate, that there is something concealed in this " matter. I know it has been reported, and even " an Author, whose Name I have forgot, says, that " it was because he had got his Maid with Child; " But, if it had been so, it would have been known " at Geneva, as well as here; and he would not " have gone away honourably, Bona cum venia Am- " plissimi Magistratus Bernensis, as he says in his " Letter to his Preceptor Wolmar: And, to conclude, " he would not have come every Year, as he did, " to Lausanne, and have been so well received. " They shewed him so much Respect, that the Coun- " cil used to go out, and meet him, as our Memoirs " testify." I am uncertain whether the Author, meant here, be not Reboul (15), That satyrical Writer, who was beheaded at Rome for his Pasquinades (16).

(14) Mr Constant de Rebecque.

(15) See the Satire which he entitled, Acts of the Universal Synod of the Holy Reformation, pag. 93.

(16) See the Remarks on The Confession of Sancy, pag. 436. Edit. 1699.

[E] He read Lectures, in French, on the New Testament.] He made choice, at first, of the Epistle to the Romans, and afterwards of Those of St Peter. They were, as it were, the Seeds of That great Work, which he published some time after; I mean his Latin Translation of the New Testament with Notes. He revised it several Times, and made many Corrections in it. None but Those, who are ignorant of the Difficulty of such a Work, will think it strange, that he should make some Alterations in each Edition. Illas tamen aliquoties emendatas ab ipso mirabitur nemo, qui operis difficultatem cum dignitate conjunctam, ut decet, perpenderit (17). It is true, This created some Trouble to Those, who had made use of the first Editions; They were always in Fear, that a new one would come out, which would overthrow what they had looked upon as certain; but, to be uneasy at This, is to be angry with Nature, which will have our Knowlede to be very limited, and to increase by Degrees. Cruel Reproaches were made against Beza on this Account. " Nisi quis " septies tuas Novi Testamenti editiones emat, nes- " ciet quid ajas aut quid neges. Memini typogra- " phum eruditum Hieronymum Commelinum hoc " mihi ante decennium dixisse, quod crebra muta- " tione consilii hoc tantum adeptus es ut plurimi " nihili faciant Novum Testamentum litera læsum at- " que sensu flexiloquum. Et olim quidam Doctor " Cantabrigiensis mihi retulit, quod Cantabrigiæ plu- " res aversati sunt religionem ducti per te ad cre- " dendum quod Novum Testamentum depravatum " est, sicut per Edwardum Livilejum quod Vetus " ulceratum (18). - - - - - - One must purchase your " seven Editions of the New Testament, to know what " you affirm or deny. I remember a learned Printer, " Jerom Commelinus, told me, ten Years ago, that, " by frequently altering your Mind, you had gained " This, that many Persons had no Dependance on " Your New Testament. And, not long ago, a certain " Cambridge Doctor informed me, that many at Cam- " bridge disregarded Religion, being induced, by " you, to believe, that the New Testament is corrupt, " as they had been, by Edward Livilejus, that the " old one is very much so."

(17) Ant. Fayus in vita Bezæ, pag. 15.

(18) Joh. Drusius in Epistola ad Theod. Bezam M.S. apud Colomesium in Icone Presbyterianorum, p. ult. But Colomies is mistaken in ascribing this Letter to Drusius. See a Letter of Sixtinus Amama, before Drusius's Book, de Nazaræis. Speak of it in the Article BROUGHTON, Citat. (11).

Note, that the first Edition of the Work of Beza is of the Year 1556. He published a second, ten Years after, and dedicated it to the Queen of England. The fifth Edition came out in the Year 1598. He dedicated it again to the same Queen, by a new Epistle, and suppressed the first: He should not have suppressed it; for it explains, at large, the Method, and Design, of the Author.

[F] He published several Books during his Abode at Lausanne.] The first was a French Tragi-Comedy, entituled Abraham's Sacrifice. Jacomot translated it into Latin, in the Year 1598. Almost at the same time James Brunon translated it into the same Language, at Amsterdam. It has passed through several Impressions. Let us see what Pasquier says of it. About the same time, Theodorus Beza lived, a fine Latin and French Poet. He composed, in French Verse, Abraham's Sacrifice so much to the Life, that, in reading it formerly, it drew Tears from my Eyes (19). Beza went frequently to Geneva, during the Vacations, to visit Calvin, who exhorted him to dedicate his Talents to the Service of the Church, and who advised him, particularly, to (19) Recherches de la France, lib. 7, cap. 7, p. 615.

Digitized by Google

exercised there, he made a Journey into Germany, with the Character of a Deputy [G]. He had, then, the Pleasure of conferring with Melanchthon. Having settled at Geneva, in the Year 1559, he attached himself to Calvin in a particular manner, and, in a little time, was made his Colleague in the Church, and University. He was sent to Nerac, at the Instigation of some Great Persons of the Kingdom, to convert the King of Navarre, and to confer with him about Matters of Consequence (f). This happened when the Guises had invaded the King's Authority, under the Reign of Francis II, to the Prejudice of the Princes of the Blood. The King of Navarre having signified, both by Letters, and by Deputies, that he desired Beza should assist at the Conference of Poissi, the Senate of Geneva readily consented to it. No better Choice could have been made for the Good of the Cause. Beza spoke to finish what Marot had begun. Beza followed this Advice, and translated, into French Verse, the Hundred Psalms, which remained to be translated. They were printed, with the King's Privilege, in 1561. The Translation of the Remainder of the Psalms of David shows what he could do, though he has not so happily succeeded as Clement Marot in his fifty (20). After he had recovered from the Plague, he made an Ode to return thanks to GOD for it. It is pretended, that Jodelle made this Tetrastich at that Time.

(f) Cumque eo de rebus gravissimis communicaret, tot potissimum ut illi suadimo, & Deus ejus animum dispraeser, verae religionis gustum aliquem instillarent. Act. Exper. Antoine & Jean de Bourbon, Roi de Navarre, pag. 21.

(20) Ibid.

Beze fut lors de la peste accueilli
Qu'il retouchoit cette harpe immortelle;
Mais pourquoi fut Beze d'elle assailli?
Beze assailloit la peste à tous mortelle (21).

(21) We shall examine, in the Article JODELLE, whether it was he, who composed this Tetrastich.

Beza was seized with the Plague, when he was retouching This Immortal Lyre. But why was Beza attacked by It? Beza attacked That General Mortality, The Plague.

A REFLEXION on the Book de Puniendis Haereticis.

One of the most remarkable Works, published by Beza, during his Abode at Lausanne, was the Treatise de Haereticis à Magistratu puniendis. He published it in answer to the Book, which Castalio, disguised under the Name of Martinus Bellius, had composed on That important Subject, a little after the Execution of Servetus (22). Castalio treated the general Thesis of Toleration: Beza maintained, against him, that the Magistrates ought to punish Heretics. The Author of his Life maintains, that This Work was published very seasonably to settle fluctuating Minds: Scriptum utriusque Beza tum refutavit, tempore in speciem importuno, sed re ipsa opportunissimo ad cohibendos levium hominum in Religione fluctuantium vagos & incertos aestus (23). It cannot be denied, that the Fear of Capital Punishment is of great Force, towards silencing Those, who may have any Doubts to propose against the prevailing Religion, and to maintain the Unity of External Communion: But it is with the Doctrine, which authorises This Practice, as it is with the Invention of Bombs and Carcasses, and of all kinds of Machines of War. They, who make use of them first, draw great Advantages from them, and, whilst they are the strongest, Things go very well with them: But, when they are the weakest, They are destroyed by their own Inventions. If Beza's Party had been the strongest all the World over, and if it could have maintained it's Superiority, the Doctrine, de Puniendis Haereticis, would have done great Service: It would have repressed the Zeal, or the shuffling Humour, of Innovators; but, because, within a quarter of a League of Geneva, They were exposed to the Caprices of the strongest, and did not know whether GOD would permit the Sect of Socinus to prevail. It was very imprudent to maintain, that the Magistrates ought to inflict the Punishment of Death on Heretics: A present Advantage ought not to blind our Eyes so much, as to hinder us from reflecting on the Consequences: On such an Occasion, the Maxim of Regulus is to be made use of:

(22) Servetus was burnt at Geneva, in 1553.

(23) Papin, in vita Bezae, pag. 15. Note, that by the Colloque between Beza and Castalio.

Hoc caverat mens provida Reguli,
Dissentientis Conditionibus
Fœdis, & exemplo trahenti
Perniciem veniens in ævum (24).

(24) Horat. Od. v, l. iii.

Wise Regulus did This prevent:
He scorn'd base Terms, which Carthage sent,
Nor would he err, by his Advice,
Tempt future Times to Cowardice.

CAVEAT.

I do not mention the other Reasons, which may confute this Doctrine; I dwell only on That of Expediency, alledged by the Writer of Beza's Life. This Expediency is but a Trifle in comparison of the Evil, which the Book de Puniendis Haereticis produces daily: for, whenever the Protestants complain of the Persecutions, which they suffer, the Right, which Calvin and Beza have acknowledged in the Magistrates, is alledged against Them: Hitherto we have seen no one, who has not come off wretchedly, as to This Objection ad hominem. But let us proceed to other Books, published by Beza, before he left Lausanne. He published a short Explanation of Christianity, ex Doctrina de aeterna Dei Praedestinatione; an Answer to Joachim Westphalus, concerning the Lord's Supper; two Dialogues on the same Subject, against Tillemannus Heshusius (25); and an Answer to Castalio, concerning the Doctrine of Predestination. Beza, at that time, had not as yet tempered his Fire, and his gay Disposition, which made him let fall I know not what Railleries in his Works, which he expunged, when he published new Editions. "In his quidem (dialogis) "posita quaedam liberiore calamo quàm rei qua de "agebatur majestati convenirent scripta mutavit, ut "& in nonnullis aliis scriptis, è quibus jocos aliquot "(ut erat ingenio lepido & faceto dum ætate adhuc "vigente esset) postquam maturior factus est, & "Συνέσεως γεγενῆσθαι in consilium adhibuisset, e"rasit (26)."

(25) The one entitled, Κρανοσκοπία, the other Ὅτος συλλογισμός.

(26) Ant. Fayus, in vita Bezae, pag. 17.

I express myself thus, as a Translator of the Words of Antony la Faye; for, if I would follow the Judgment of some Lutheran Authors, I should be obliged to make use of Terms, which exceed Raillery. Conrad Schlusselburgius pretends, that there are such scurrilous and lewd Revilings in Beza's Works, that they become Those only, who have had no other School, than the Stews. What he has said upon This, has been carefully gathered up by the Author of the Calvino-Turcismus. I can only cite Him, not having the Book of That famous Lutheran. "Omis"sis aliis, Theodorum Bezam exempli gratia pro"ponit, ex cujus scriptis, non modo contra Papistas, "sed etiam Lutheranos, hoc (inquit) abundè potest "demonstrari. Et haec adeo sunt vera, ut ipsos Sa"cramentarios pigeat & pudeat futilitatum & blas"phemiarum, quas Beza sine metu divinae majesta"tis evomuit, sicut ipse Lavaterus fateri cogitur, & aliquot nobiliores Calvinistas apud ipsum Bezam "conquesti sunt. Et quamquam Beza excuset omnia, "vocans scurilem urbanitatem: haec tamen urbanitas "(inquit iste Patriarcha) non Theologos in pietatis "schola versantes, sed lenones effrontes, & scurras "spurciloquos in ludo meretricio à Thaide vel "Candida profuga eruditos decet. Unde haud "dubiè noster ille Beza flosculos suarum elegantia"rum decerpsit. Mox fortius urgens atque probans "hoc de Bezae maledico & clumbi in disputationibus "& scriptionibus charactere. Si quis (inquit) de "hac re ambigere velit, ille duos famosissimos dialo"gos Bezae contra D. Heshusium legat, qui certè "non ab homine, sed ab ipso incarnato Beelzebub, "exarati esse videntur. Horret animus blasphemias "obscenas, & diabolico atramento tinctas, referre, "quas iste impurus convitiator & dibrus in dialogis "illis, in articulo gravissimo, blasphemè impiè & scur"riliter eructavit. Certè adeo sunt foedae, ut ipse "Beza paulò post, quo speciosiùs priorem editionem "supprimeret, secundum procurarit, in qua septem ſpoke well; he knew the World; he had a ready Wit, and much Learning. His Speech was heard with attention, till he touched upon the Real Preſence. An Expreſſion, which he made uſe of, cauſed a murmuring [H]. In the remaining part of this Conference, he behaved like a Man of great Capacity, and never ſuffered himſelf to be ſurprized by the Artifices of the Cardinal of Lorrain. He did not return to Geneva, when the Conference was ended; for, being a Frenchman, Catherine de Medicis would have him ſtay in his own Country. He preached often at the Queen of Navarre's, at the Prince of Condé's, and in the Suburbs of Paris. After the Maſſacre at Vaſſi (g), he was deputed to the King, to complain of That Action. The (g) March 1, 1562.

" folia integra omiſit, & loca plurima expunxit quæ " erant in editione priori. Quanquam iſte bonus & " gravis Superintendens, hac qualicunque caſſigatione " non contentus, optat ut non modò iſti dialogi in " univerſum, ſed ſimul alia ejus omnia impia & " blaſphema ſcripta, quæ ſunt plurima, aboleantur, " ne à teneris, pii, & coſtii hominibus videantur " in æternum. Sic ille (27). - - - - Omitting others, " he propoſes Theodore Beza as an Inſtance; from " whoſe Writings, not only againſt the Papiſts, but " even the Lutherans, This (he ſays) may be " abundantly demonſtrated. And Theſe Things " are ſo true, that the Sacramentarians them- " ſelves are tired, and aſhamed, of the Follies " and Blaſphemies, which Beza, without Fear of " the Divine Majeſty, has given vent to; as Lu- " therus himſelf is forced to acknowledge, and " ſome of the more noble Calviniſts have complained " to Beza himſelf. And, though Beza excuſes it all, " by calling it Pious Raillery; yet This Raillery " (ſays the Patriarch) is more becoming of the " Stews, than Divines, brought up in the School " of Piety. And, indeed, Beza ſeems to have ga- " thered the Flowers of his Elegances in the former. " Afterwards, as a farther and ſtronger Proof of This " ſlanderous Character of Beza in his Diſputations, " and Writings; If any one (ſays he) is not ſatiſ- " fied of the Truth of This, let him read the two " infamous Dialogues of Beza againſt Heſhuſius, " which certainly appear to be the Work, not " of a Man, but of Beelzebub himſelf incarnate. I " tremble to repeat the obſcene and diabolical Blaſ- " phemies, which This filthy Slanderer, and Athei- " ſtical Writer, has impiouſly and ſcurrilouſly poured " forth, in theſe Dialogues, on the moſt important " Article. Indeed They are ſo foul, that Beza him- " ſelf, that he might have the better Colour for ſuppreſ- " ſing the firſt Edition, procured a ſecond, in which " he omitted ſeven entire Leaves, and expunged " ſeveral Paſſages, which were in the former Edi- " tion. Though This good Superviſor, not ſatisfied " with this Correction, wiſhes, that Theſe Dialogues, " as alſo all his other wicked and blaſphemous Wri- " tings, which are many in number, were entirely " abolished, that they might never more be ſeen " by conſcientious, pious, and chaſt Men. Thus far " He." Remember, that this Conrad is a very paſſionate Writer.

(27) Guilielmus Reginaldus, in Calvino-Turcismo, lib. iii. cap. 19. p. 671, 672. He quotes Conrad. Schluſſelb. in Theol. Calviniſt. lib. i. fol. 92. in Preſat. lib. iii. fol. 24. 35. & lib. ii. fol. 77, 78, 227.

[G] He made a Journey into Germany, with the Character of a Deputy.] This was the Reaſon of his Journey. An Aſſembly of Thoſe of the Reformed Religion was detected, at Paris, in the Year 1557. It conſiſted of Four hundred Perſons, whereof ſeven were burnt, and the reſt impriſoned (28). The Churches had Recourſe to ſome Princes of Germany, to endeavour to obtain the Lives of Thoſe poor Priſoners from Henry II. Farel, Beza, and John Budæus, Son of the great William Budæus, were the three Deputies, who went to the Court of the Elector Palatine, to That of the Landgrave of Heſſe, and to That of the Duke of Wirtemberg, in the Year 1558. Theſe three Princes earneſtly recommended the Cauſe of Thoſe Priſoners; but the Court of France paid little Regard to Theſe Recommendations. Beza, as he paſſed through Franckfort, had the Pleaſure of ſpeaking with Melanchthon (29). This is what Antony la Faye ſays; but, according to Beza, the Motive to This Journey was, to deſire the Interceſſion of Thoſe Princes for the Vallies of Piedmont, which were, then, in Poſſeſſion of the King of France, that is, in the Year 1557 (30). He acknowledges, nevertheleſs, in the Life of Calvin, that That Interceſſion was deſired for the Priſoners at Paris, and that it was not made in vain. "Par-

(28) Antoine la Faye, in vita Calvini, about Six score [illegible] and the reſt fled.

(29) Faye, in vita Bezæ, pag. 17.

(30) Beza ad Cl. de Xaintes, Apolog. & Oper. Tom. II. pag. 235.

" tim intervenientium Germanorum Principum le- " gatione, quam ſummâ celeritate Calvinus procura- " vit, tempeſtas illa nonnihil conquievit (31). - - - - (31) Beza in vita Calvini.

" The Storm was ſomething appeaſed, partly by the " Interpoſition of ſome German Princes, which Calvin, " with great Expedition, procured." He finds fault with Claudius de Xaintes, who placed This Journey in the Year 1556.

[H] An Expreſſion, which he made uſe of at the Conference of Poiſſi, cauſed a murmuring.] The Expreſſion was This: " We ſay, that the Body of " JESUS CHRIST is as far from the Bread and " Wine, as the higheſt Heaven is remote from the " Earth (32)." Let us ſee, now, what the Effect of it was; and let us make uſe of Beza's own Words. " This ſingle Expreſſion (though many others, as " contrary and repugnant to the Doctrine of the " Church of Rome, had been ſaid by him) was the " Cauſe, that the Prelates began to ſtir, and to mur- " mur, ſome ſaying blaſphemavit: others aroſe to " be gone, not being able to do any thing worſe, " becauſe of the King's Preſence: Among others, " Cardinal de Tournon, Dean of the Cardinals, who " was ſeated in the chief Place, required of the " King, and the Queen, that Silence might be im- " poſed on Beza, or that He, and his whole Com- " pany, might be permitted to retire. Neither the " King, nor any of Princes, ſtirred; and audience " was given to proceed. Silence being made, Beza " ſaid; I deſire you, Sirs, to hear the Concluſion, " which will ſatisfy you: And then he returned to " his Diſcourſe, which he continued to the end (33)." (33) Ibid. pag. 521. Catherine de Medicis ſaid, in her Letter to Mr de Rennes, Embaſſador of France at the Emperor's Court, " That Beza, ſpeaking of the Sacrament, forgot " himſelf, in a Compariſon, ſo abſurd and offen- " ſive to the Ears of all the Aſſiſtants, that ſhe " was near ſilencing him, and ſending all the " Miniſters away, without ſuffering them to pro- " ceed any farther; but that ſhe abſtained from it, " leaſt People ſhould go away imbued with his Do- " ctrine, without having heard what ſhould be " anſwered him (34)." Obſerve the Parentheſis, which the Hiſtorian made uſe of (35). Nothing will better diſcover the Weakneſs of Mens Minds. An old Cardinal, and many Biſhops are ſcandalized, are going away, and cry out Blaſphemy: for what? Becauſe they heard a Miniſter ſay, that JESUS CHRIST is not corporeally preſent in the Symbols of the Bread and Wine of the Euchariſt: for it is what That Expreſſion, ſo offenſive to the Ears of all the Aſſiſtants, amounts to: Can there be a worſe grounded, or more childiſh, Cauſe of Offence? When People teach, that the Body of JESUS CHRIST is preſent but in one Place at one Time, and that it is always ſeated in Paradice at the Right-Hand of GOD, They plainly maintain, that it is as remote from the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, as Paradiſe is from the Earth. Now the Prelates of the Conference of Poiſſi could not be ignorant, that the Miniſters teach, that the Humanity of JESUS CHRIST is always in Heaven, at the Right-Hand of GOD; and that it can be preſent but in one Place at one Time: and They could not expect, that Beza would not explain the Doctrine of his Party: They ſhould not, therefore, have been offended at this Expreſſion; (for once again, it adds nothing to the Doctrine of the Miniſters); or elſe They went to the Aſſembly with This Perſuaſion, that the Miniſters would betray their Opinions, and only endeavour to deceive the King. I ſee but one Thing, which can excuſe the Irritation of the Prelates. It may be ſaid, that ſome Expreſſions offend us, though they import no more, than ſome Expreſſions, at which we are not offended

(32) Beza Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. lib. iv. pag. 316.

(34) Apud Maimbourg, Hiſt. of Calviniſm, pag. 223, 224. Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau, Tom. I. pag. 703, ſpeaks the Queen's Letter.

(35) (The many others, as contrary and repugnant to the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, had been ſaid by him.) Beza Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 521.

A REFLEXION on the Offence, which the Prelates took, at the Conference of Poiſſi.

The Civil-War followed soon after; during which the Prince of Condé kept him with Him. Beza was at the Battle of Dreux, as a Minister [I]. During the Imprisonment of the Prince, he always kept with Admiral de Coligni, and did not return to Geneva, 'till after the Peace of 1563. He did not see France again 'till 1568, and That was in order to go to Vezelai, where his Presence was necessary [K]. He had written several Books after his Return to Geneva; and he published others after his Return from Vezelai [L]. He returned into France again, in the Year 1571, to assist at the National Synod of Rochel, of which he was elected Moderator. The following Year he assisted at That of Nimes, and opposed the Faction of John Morel, who designed to introduce a new Discipline. The Prince of Condé sent for him to Strasburg, in the Year 1574, in order to send him to Prince John Casimir, Administrator of the Palatinate; which shews, that it was well known, that he understood other Things, besides Lectures, and Books. The Conference of Mombelliard, in offended. For Example, the Parts, which Modesty does not permit to name, may be denoted by modest Words; and yet These Words signify the same thing, as Those, which are called obscene. If the latter are offensive, it is not because of the Thing itself, which They signify, but because we think, that He, who uses them, against Custom, does not pay us That Respect, which Decency requires (36). Upon This Footing, The Bishops of Poissi might be more offended at the Minister's Doctrine, represented by a Comparison, than at the same Doctrine nakedly and plainly represented: But then, their Scandal was not grounded on a Zeal for Religion: For the Comparison, which Beza alledged, is not more contrary to God, or to the Christian Faith, than the plainest Exposition of the Doctrine of the Protestants. It was not, then, for the Interest of God, that they were scandalized; but only because they supposed, that the Minister did not pay sufficient Respect to his Auditors, when he made use of such Expressions. They, who would make such an Apology for These Prelates, would ascribe to them a most criminal Vanity. What shall we say then? Is it better to say, that They acted like Children; that They were not offended at the Things, but at the Words? This would not be for their Honour. I am surprized, that such a grave Historian, as Mezerai, durst say, that This Proposition of Beza was passionate, and offensive; that Beza was ashamed of it himself; that it strangely offended the Ears of the Catholics; and that the Prelates trembled with Horror at it (37). It is plain, Mezerai thinks These great Tremblings reasonable; and he makes himself ridiculous by it; for it is the same thing, to say; The Body of Jesus Christ is not present in the Holy Sacrament; and to say, It is at an infinite Distance from it.

(36) See the Art of Thinking, Part I, chap. 14.

(37) Mezerai, Abridg. Chron. ad Ann. 1561.

[I] He was at the Battle of Dreux, as a Minister.] I add This Clause, least any of my Readers should suspect, that he assisted there, to fight, and handle the Sword. Claudius de Xaintes reproaches him for it. This is Beza's Answer. "Intersui sane prælio, & "inchoanti & desinenti (quidni enim hoc facerem "eo rite vocatus?) & quidem quod magis mireris "palliatus, non armatus: nec mihi quisquam vere "vel cædem cujusquam vel fugam objecerit (38). "--------- I was indeed present at the Battle; "(and why should I not, being properly called?) and, "which you will more wonder at, in the Habit of my "Order, not armed: nor can any one justly charge me "with the Slaughter of one Man, or with Flight.

(38) Beza, ad Claud. de Xaintes, Apolog. Altera Oper. Tom. II. pag. 362.

[K] He went to Vezelai, where his Presence was necessary.] Nicolas de Beze, Bailiff of Vezelai, fled to Geneva for Religion, where he died, a little while after, of the Plague, at the House of Theodorus, his Brother by the Father's Side. The latter, having a Mind to order the Affairs of the Family of the deceased, and to endeavour at the same time to save Part of his Estate, took a Journey to Vezelai. Hæc fuit occasio Bezæ Vezelios suos revisendi, partim ut fratris defuncti liberis prospiceret, partim ut nonnullas Patrimonii sui Reliquias dispersas colligeret, quod & fecit quantum locus, tempus, & res permiserunt (39). He endeavoured to persuade a Sister, which he had in a Nunnery, to forsake the Church of Rome. She was an old Nun, very obstinate in her Religion, who would not listen to her Brother's Remonstrances (40).

(39) Ant. Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 48.

(40) Id. ib.

[L] He had written several Books after his Return to Geneva; and he published others after his Return from Vezelai.] Soon after his Settlement in the Church of Geneva, he drew up a Confession of Faith in Latin, which he had formerly written in French, to justify himself to his Father, and to endeavour The good old Man's Conversion. He published This Confession in Latin, dedicated to his good Master Melchior Wolmar, in the Year 1560. His Pen was quiet, whilst he followed, in the Armies, either the Prince of Condé, or Admiral de Coligni; but, as soon as he returned to Geneva, he wrote two Answers, the one to Castalio (41), and the other to Francis Baudouin. Afterwards, he attacked Brentius, and James Andreas, upon their Doctrine of Ubiquity; and then wrote his Book de Divortiis & Repudiis, against Bernardin Ochinus, who had written in Favour of Polygamy. He attacked also the Errors of Flacius Illyricus. He answered Claudius de Xaintes, Selneccerus, James Andreas, and Pappus, &c. and turned David's Psalms into all sorts of Latin Verses. He published a Treatise of the Sacrament, and a Book against Hofmannus; some Sermons on the Passion of Jesus Christ, and on the Canticle of Canticles; a Translation of That Canticle into Lyric Verse; and an Answer to Genebrard, to whom That Translation had given new Occasion to repeat his Slanders. In 1590, he published his Treatise de Excommunicatione & Presbyterio, against Thomas Erastus. Some time after, he examined the Book of Saravia, de Ministrorum Evangelii gradibus. I omit the Titles of some other Books; They may be seen in the Lists, which Antony la Faye has placed at the end of his Work, de vita & obitu Theodori Bezæ, from whence I have borrowed what I have just now said. I have not met with, there, all the Productions of Beza's Pen. The Icones of the Illustrious Persons, who set their Hand to the Work of the Reformation (42), is not mentioned there, nor the Ecclesiastical History of the Reformed Churches. This last Work is very curious; It extends from the Year 1521, to the Peace of the thirteenth of March 1563. I do not wonder, that They have not inserted in This List the ingenious, but too burlesque, Letter of Benedictus Passavantius to the President Lizet (43). La Faye makes no mention of it; but, as for some other satirical or burlesque Pieces, which some attribute to Beza, he maintains, that they are mistaken. "Dicteriis plenos libros composuit, Haranguam ad "Cardinalem Lotharingum, de furoribus Gallicis, "vitam Catharinæ Mediceæ, & similis notæ chartas. "Atqui tam verum est libros illos fuisse compositos à "Beza, quàm verum est (quod isti ignoranter & te"merè deblaterant) ab Amirallii ministro scriptum fu"isse librum, cui nomen est Matagonis de Matagoni"bus (44). —— He wrote Books, full of satirical In"vectives, The Speech to the Cardinal of Lorrain, "concerning the Madness of the French Nation, The "Life of Catharine of Medicis, and the like. And "it is as true, that these Pieces were written by Beza, "as it is true (which these Persons ignorantly and "rashly blab out) that the Book, entitled Matagonis "de Matagonibus, was written by The Admiral's Mi"nister."

(41) He had criticized on Beza's Translation of the New Testament.

(42) Printed at Geneva, in 1580, in 4to.

(43) See the New Letters against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, pag. 144.

(44) Ant. Fayus, in vita Beza, pag. 70, 71.

Garasse maintains, that Beza, "gives himself, jest"ingly, the Name of FRANTOPIN, in writing "against Dr de Xaintes, in That little Macaronic Book, "which begins with These Words; Tu facis bene de "sufficiente, Domine Magister noster, post habere bibi"tum quatuor bonas fides de vestro vino Sorbonnico, in "dejunando Theologaliter, &c (45)." He attributes also a Book to him, entituled, A Parallel of Henry II with Pilate (46). Observe, that there is a great Fault in the List of Antony la Faye: It does not mention the Date of the first Editions, nor when, and how many times, the Books of Beza were reprinted.

(45) Garasse, Doctrine Curieuse, pag. 1022.

(46) Id. ib. pag. 1012.

[M] The

Digitized by Google

in 1586, engaged him againſt James Andreas, a Divine of Tubingen. Beza would have had the Diſpute managed ſyllogiſtically; but he was obliged to yield to the Deſires of his Adverſary, who would not be confined to the Rules of Syllogiſms. The Succeſs of This Diſpute was as uſual [M]; each Party boaſted to have gained the Victory, and publiſhed an Account accordingly. Beza loſt his Wife, in the Year 1588; but this Domeſtic Affliction, great as it was, did not hinder him from going to the Synod, which Thoſe of Bern had aſſembled. The Doctrine of Samuel Huberus, concerning our Juſtification before GOD, which, he ſaid, conſiſted in an inherent Quality (b), was there condemned. Beza married again, the ſame Year, to a Widow, who ſurvived him [N]. The Inconveniencies of old Age began to come upon him, in the Year 1597, and obliged him to ſpeak but ſeldom in public; and, at laſt, he deſiſted altogether from it, in the beginning of the Year 1600. His poetical Vein was not ſo dried up, in the Year 1597, but that he wrote ſome Verſes, full of Fire, againſt the Jeſuits, occaſioned by the Report, which was ſpread of his Death

(b) De noſtra ad tribunal Dei juſtificatione per fidem, tanquam inſtrumentum quo Chriſtus juſtitia noſtra apprehenditur, profeſſus eſt ſe penitus aſſentiri, quum antea & ſcripto & verbo docuiſſe juſtitiam noſtram apud Deum eſſe qualitatem quandam patibilem in nobis inhærentem. Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 55.

[M] The Succeſs of the Diſpute of Mombelliard was as uſual] Antony la Faye aſſerts this: "Utrinque "placide diſceſſum eſt ſine lite, aut amarulentiâ; ſed "nullo fructu, ut fere ſemper in talibus palæſtris pub- "licis contingere ſolet (47). — Both Parties retreat- "ed peaceably, without Strife, or Bitterneſs; but "with no Advantage gained on either ſide, as is uſual "in ſuch Kind of Public Diſputes." Some Gentlemen, who had left France for their Religion, and had fled to Mombelliard, gave occaſion to This Diſpute. The Count of Mombelliard deſired the Canton of Berne to name Deputies, to conſer with the Divines of Wirtemberg; he deſired alſo the Republic of Geneva to ſend Beza to the Conference; This he did in compliance with the Deſire of the Refugees. Abraham Muſculus, Miniſter of Bern, and Peter Huberus, Profeſſor of the Greek Language in the ſame City, were the Swiſs Deputies: Beza, and Antony la Faye, were the Deputies of Geneva. James Andreas, and Luke Oſiander, were the chief Deputies of Wirtemberg. Moſt of them heard only Beza and James Andreas, and ſaw but little Light in This Diſpute of ſeveral Days, becauſe it was not managed Syllogiſtically; for, when two Perſons anſwer each other, by long Diſcourſes, it is almoſt impoſſible to perceive, whether they remove the Difficulties. "Jacobus An- "dreas perpetua & declamatoria oratione utebatur. "Quare illius veſtigiis inſiſtere Beza coactus eſt. Un- "de non tam facilis, expedita, aut perſpicua fuit tota "illa dierum aliquot diſceptatio (48). ------ James "Andreas uſed a long and declamatory Way of Speak- "ing. Beza was, therefore, obliged to do the ſame. "Hence it was, that This Diſpute, which laſted ſo "many Days, was not at all cleared up." A Man is ſcarce ever worſted upon theſe occaſions, if he knows but how to prattle. The Parties agreed not to publiſh the Relation of This Conference; but, when it was known, that Letters were diſperſed all over Germany, which were read in the Courts of Princes, and in private Converſations, and that Theſe Letters proclaimed the Victory of James Andreas, and that, at laſt, the Divines of Wirtemberg had publiſhed the Conference with Marginal Notes; Beza was obliged to publiſh a Counter-Relation.

(47) Fayus, pag. 53.

(48) Ibid.

I have lately read, in a Work of Abraham Scultetus, that The Political Reaſons, as well on the Part of the French Refugees, as on that of the Count de Mombelliard, contributed much more to the appointing this Conference, than the Theological Reaſons. The Refugees ſent for Beza, becauſe they thought, that, if he conferred amicably with Dr Andreas, about the Controverted Matters, They ſhould live more eaſy in the County of Mombelliard, and that, perhaps, the Duke of Wirtemberg might come over to their Side. As for the Count, he had been an Ubiquitarian in his Youth; but, having heard Beza's Sermons and Lectures, he declared freely, that he had ſeen many things at Geneva, and in Swiſſerland, of which James Andreas had never ſpoken a word to him, and that he had ſcarce ſeen any thing there, of what the ſame Doctor had often told him. Genevæ, & in Helvetia, vidi multa, de quibus nihil, pauca eorum, de quibus ſæpe audivi ex D. Jacobo (49). This was to declare, that That Perſon had not drawn the Picture of the Calviniſts very faithfully. From that time, the Count was more kind to the Reformed, and afforded a Retreat to Thoſe, who fled from France for their Religion. But, when it was repreſented to him, that the Duke of Wirtemberg had no Son, and that the Houſe of Auſtria would not ſuffer a Favourer of the Huguenots to inherit That Duke's Succeſſion; I ſay, when it was repreſented to him, that he had made himſelf ſuſpected, both by his Journey to Geneva, and by his Kindneſs to the French Refugees, he conſented to the Diſpute between Dr Andreas and Beza; but his Aim was not ſo much to promote the Truth, as to clear himſelf from the Suſpicion of Calvinijm. Non tam ut veritati conſuleret, quam ut ſe de Calviniſmo purgaret (50). This is what Daniel Toſſan replied to Chriſtopher Pezelius, who had asked him the Reaſon of the Conference of Mombelliard. Scultetus, who relates it (51), was at Dinner, where This was ſaid (52). If we had a Collection of ſuch like Table-talk, as large as That, which is found in Plutarch's Works, we might learn a great many curious Things from it.

(49) Abrah. Scultetus, Narrat. Apologet. pag. 26.

(50) Id. ib.

(51) Scultet. ibid. pag. 25, & ſeq.

(52) Toſſan, Profeſſor at Heidelberg, had invited Chriſtopher Pezelius, a Divine of Bremen, to dine with him, in 1591.

[N] He married again, the ſame Year, to a Widow, who ſurvived him.] The Name of his firſt Wife was Claudine Denoſſe: See below the Remark [Y]. Their Marriage continued forty Years: The Name of his ſecond Wife was Catherine de la Plane, who took great Care of him as long as he lived. Catharina Plania, Aſtenſis, Franciſci Taruffi Januenſis Vidua, quæ ei uſque ad ultimum Spiritum magno ſubſidio fuit (53). Patin is miſtaken, when he ſays, that Stephen Paſquier wrote ſome Verſes on the three Marriages of Beza.

(53) Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 55.

Uxores ego tres vario ſum tempore nactus,
Cum juvenis, tum vir, factus & inde ſenex.
Propter opus prima eſt validis mihi juncta ſub annis,
Altera propter opes, tertia propter opem (54).

(54) Patin, Letter cc6. Tom. III, pag. 490. It is the 176*th Letter of the firſt Edit.*

The Meaning of Theſe Verſes is; I married three Wives, at ſeveral times; in my Youth, in my Manhood, and in my Old-Age. I married the firſt Wife for the Delights of Love; the ſecond, becauſe ſhe was Rich; the third, that ſhe might nurſe me in my Infirmities. But This could not agree with Beza, ſince he had not had three Wives. Some ſay, that Paſquier made theſe Verſes on himſelf (55). He, who obſerves This, is, nevertheleſs, in the Error of Guy Patin concerning Beza's three Wives. He married again, for the third time, at ſeventy Years of Age, and had ſent word of it to his intimate Friend Junius, a Dutchman (56), in theſe Words; If it be a Folly to marry again at ſeventy Years of Age, I have lately committed it. He was an old Cock, which could not break off from Venus's Chariot, to which he had been harnaſſed from his Youth (57). Theſe are the Words of a credulous Monk, who is but ſeldom well-informed of what he ſays. If He, and Patin, had conſulted the ninteenth Book of Stephen Paſquier's Letters, They would have ſpoken with more exactneſs. Paſquier relates, that, having heard it ſaid, that Theodore Beza was married again, he wrote This Tetraſtich in Favour of the Perſon, who ſhould marry three Wives (58). Beza's ſecond Wife was wonderfully careful of him; He left her Heireſs of all his Eſtate in Geneva. "Eo- "rum quæ Genevæ habebat hæredem ex aſſe inſti- "tuit Catharinam Planiam conjugem ſuam; qua ſene- "ctutem pſius ſuſtentante, & gloriam ex officiis aſſi- "duis erga ipſum, annorum ſeptendecim ſpatio, quæ- "rente, vivebat (59). ------- He left Catharine "de la Plane, his Wife, who ſupported his old Age, "and placed all her Glory in taking the greateſt Care "of him, for ſeventeen Years, ſole Heireſs of his "Eſtate at Geneva." Beza never had any Children (60).

(55) St Romuald's Chronological Abridgment, ad Ann. 1615.

(56) He was no Dutchman, nor in Holland, when Beza married again.

(57) St Romuald. Abridg. Chronol. p. 391. ad Ann. 1605.

(58) Paſquier's Letters, Tom. II, p. 486.

(59) Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 74.

(60) Id. ib.

[O] He

Digitized by Google

Death, and that, before he expired, he had made Profeſſion of the Romiſh Faith [O]. The laſt Verſes, which he compoſed, were a Votiva Gratulatio, to Henry IV, after he had been kindly received by him, near Geneva, in the Month of December, 1600 (i) [P]. He lived 'till the thirteenth of October, 1605, and preſerved his Good Senſe to the laſt [Q], and expreſſed great Sentiments of Piety with his laſt Breath. He was Man of an extraordinary Merit, and who did his Party very great Services [R]. He was

(i) La Faye, pag. 61, ſays, in 1599, but is miſtaken.

[O] He wrote Verſes —— on occaſion of the Report that was ſpread of his Death —— and that he had made Profeſſion of the Romiſh Faith.] They, who invented, and ſpread, this Story, were but little acquainted with the True Intereſt of Their Church. Theſe kind of Frauds may be ſpread, to ſome advantage, againſt a Sect, which has neither Authors, nor Printers; but They muſt needs be prejudicial, when they are boldly employed againſt a Church, which has a thouſand Preſſes, and Pens, in her Boſom, which let nothing fall to the Ground, and take the Ball at the firſt rebound. Was it not great Folly to imagine, that the Proteſtants would loſe ſuch a fair Opportunity of exclaiming againſt Monkiſh Impoſtures and Cheats, and to draw many thundering Concluſions from their Aſſurance in reporting a Falſhood, which was ſo eaſy to be confuted? The Miniſters of Geneva were not ſilent on This Occaſion. They publiſhed two Pieces, attended with all the Authenticity neceſſary to refute This fooliſh Lie: One of Theſe Pieces was in Latin, and the other in French. Editis nomine ſuo publicis duobus ſcriptis, altero Latine (cui Beza redivivus nomen fecerunt) altero Gallice (61). Beza, in a Letter to William Stuckius, confuted the ſame Story (62); and the Jeſuit Clement du Puy, who was looked upon as the Inventor of This Fable, drew a ſhower of ſatirical Verſes on himſelf in particular, and on his own Order in general, which Beza's Muſes, old as they were, made very formidable (63). It was eaſy to forſee This; ſo that They were but dimſighted Perſons, as to their own Intereſts, who invented ſuch a Romance. There are raſh Perſons in all Communions. See the Article BELLARMIN, Remark [E].

(61) Fayus, pag. 59.

(62) See alſo the Preface of his New Teſtament, Edit. 1598.

(63) Ant. la Faye has theſe Verſes of Beza, pag. 60, 61.

I muſt not omit, that the Jeſuits aſſerted, that this Story was invented by the Proteſtants, to be imputed to them. See the Scaligerana, under the Word Velſerus, and the Notes on the Book, entituled, La Confeſſion de Sanci, wherein you will find an Abſtract of the Letter, which they publiſhed, in 1598, under the Name of a Savoyard Gentleman, in which they maintained, that The pretended Letter, which was attributed to Them, about the Death, and Converſion, of Theodorus Beza, was a meer Impoſture of Beza himſelf, and the Bezæans at Geneva. The Author of the Notes obſerves, that Stephen Paſquier had no regard to This, and that the Jeſuit Richcome gave out, as certain, the Story of This Miniſter's Converſion, in a Book, reprinted in the Year 1599 (64).

(64) Taken from the Notes on The Confeſſion of Sanci, pag. 421, &c. Edit. 1699.

Obſerve, that, in 1591, there was a Report, that Beza was dead. This falſe News was written by a Miniſter to Mr du Pleſſis Mornai, who anſwered him in theſe Terms: You have made me ſorrowful by the Death of Beza, quam nondum certò accepi, quanquam jam olim animo præcepi. We have loſt three or four Stars; I ſee nothing but thick Clouds over us. This we find in the Ninty fourth, and Ninty fifth Pages of the ſecond Volume of his Memoirs.

(65) Spon. Hiſt. of Geneva, l. iii. pag. 319. Edit. of Utrecht, 1685.

[P] He was kindly received ----- by Henry IV.] Dr Spon reports the Speech, which Beza made to That Prince, and the King's Anſwer (65). Mr de Perefixe thought, falſly, that Henry IV entered into Geneva, and that he was harangued there by This Miniſter (66). He received the Deputies of Geneva at Luyſel (67), a Quarter of a League from St Catharine's Fort, which Fort was two Leagues from Geneva. Thuanus ſays, that the King made Beza a Preſent of Five hundred Crowns (68).

(66) Pereſixe, Life of Henry IV.

(67) Matthieu, Hiſt. of the Peace, lib. iv. pag. 661. La Faye calls this Place Elucetum; Thuanus, lib. 152, Luiſellum.

(68) Thuan. lib. 125. pag. 229.

[Q] He was ſenſible to the laſt.] His Hiſtorian makes no mention of what Thuanus obſerves concerning This Venerable Old Man's Memory. " Præſen-
" tium memoriam debilitata quippe mente evanidam
" amiſerat, præteritorum dum ingenio valebat im-
" preſſam ſervaverat. Itaque & totos Pſalmos He" braice, & quodcumque caput ex B. Pauli Epiſtolis
" propoſuiſſes, integrum Græce recitabat, nec in iis
" quæ olim didicerat judicio carebat, ſed quæ dixerat
" ſtatim obliviſcebatur (69)." The Meaning of this is, that, in divers Reſpects, Beza's Memory was very good, and very bad; very good, as to Things which he had learned during the Vigor of his Mind; (for he could repeat all the Pſalms in Hebrew, and all St Paul's Epiſtles in Greek, by heart), and very bad, as to Things preſent; for, a little after having ſaid any thing, he forgot, that he had ſaid it. He continued in This Condition almoſt two Years, if we may believe Thuanus, who ſeems to have been furniſhed with very good Memoirs on this Head. And, indeed, Caſaubon affirms, that, in Point of Erudition, Beza ſhewed himſelf, in the latter Years of his Life, ſuch as he had appeared Twenty Years before. He diſcourſed ſo clearly upon ancient Hiſtory, that one would have thought he had juſt been reading Plutarch, and the like Authors. He ſpoke Latin, and ſometimes Greek, as before: But, after having amply diſcourſed on the Subject of the new King of England, he would, often, ask, in the ſame Converſation, Whether it was true, that Queen Elizabeth was dead? " Venerandus ſenex Theodorus
" Beza cum per longinquitatem ætatis factus ſit ob-
" livioſus, adeo ut poſt frequentes de novo Rege
" Angliæ ſermones ſubinde me rogaret de Regina,
" an verum eſſet quod fama jactaret, illam fatis con-
" ceſſiſſe. Idem tamen in literis viſus nobis eſſe
" quem ante annos viginti noveramus. Loquitur
" Latine, interdum & Græce, ut antea: audivimus
" de hiſtoria veteri diſſerentem è re nata luculen-
" tiſſime, ut videretur recens eſſe à lectione Plutarchi
" & id genus autorum (70)." Thuanus was miſ-informed of the Circumſtances of Beza's Death; He ſays, that This Miniſter, as he was going out to Church, was ſeized with a ſudden Convulſion, of which he died. The Truth is, that, for ſome Weeks, his Strength declined viſibly, and that there was nothing ſudden, or unexpected, in his Death. See la Faye, pag. 65, 66.

(70) Caſaubon. Epiſt. 297, ad Scaliger.

[R] He did his Party great Services.] Leti relates, that Sixtus V. cauſed two Conferences to be held, at which he was preſent, to deliberate about the means of depriving the Proteſtant Party of the great Support they had in the Perſon of Theodorus Beza (71). What could be ſaid more to the Honour of This Miniſter, than the repreſenting him as a Man, who made the Pope, and Cardinals, uneaſy, as to Affairs of State; for there was no Controverſy in the Caſe? Leti pretends, that, in the Year 1587, the Deputy of the King of Navarre, to the Cantons, made uſe of Beza's good Offices, to obtain ſome Levies in their Country; That Beza went from Town to Town, over all the Proteſtant Cantons, and that he animated the Swiſs in ſuch a manner, that they furniſhed Prince Caſimir with great Sums; that the Catholic Cantons, ſeeing this, informed the Court of Rome of the great Prejudice this Perſon did to the Catholic Cauſe; that, upon This, Sixtus V cauſed two Conferences to be held, the Reſult whereof was, that all manner of means ſhould be employed, to oblige this Miniſter to leave Geneva; after which, nothing would be more eaſy than the Converſion of That City; and that the Converſion of Geneva would be the total Ruin of Hereſy, both in Swiſſerland, and France; that Mr de Sales, Biſhop of Geneva, being at That Time at Rome, was deſired to declare, in the Pope's Preſence, by what means he thought they might diſlodge This old Miniſter from his Poſt; that he declared, the only means was, to ſupply the Duke of Savoy with neceſſary Forces for the Conqueſt of Geneva; that Beza, not doubting, that there was a Deſign upon his Life, would take ſuch care of himſelf, that they muſt not expect any enterprize againſt his Perſon would ſucceed; that, after This Diſcourſe of Mr de Sales, the Deſign was laid aſide of getting rid of This Miniſter by Aſſaſſination, or by Poiſon; foraſmuch as they were informed, that his Highneſs of Savoy had tried all Expedients for This Purpoſe in vain.

BEZA, it is ſaid, was the Subject of ſome Conſultations at Rome.

ATTEMPTS againſt his Perſon.

(71) Leti, vita di Siſto V. Part II. lib. iii. pag. 262, & ſeq. Edit. 1686.

I have three things to obſerve upon this Narrative. I. Antony la Faye does not ſay, that Beza made a Journey was expoſed to a great Number of Slanders and Calumnies: But he made both Catholics, and Lutherans, ſee, that he knew how to defend himſelf, and that he had both Teeth and Claws. He had a great ſhare in Scaliger's Eſteem [S]. I criticize Moreri only in five Things [T]. Mezerai treats This Miniſter very ill; he adopts the Story for Truth, which had been ſpread, of an Accuſation of Sodomy, entered againſt Beza, before the Parliament of Paris; and another Story of his running away with Candida, a Taylor's Wife. This appears unworthy of a judicious Hiſtorian [U]. The a Journey to Switzerland, in the Year 1587; and yet he ſeldom forgets theſe ſort of things. An Expedition like This, the Effects of which were, it is ſaid, ſo great, and of ſuch general Influence for the Good of the Cauſe, could not have been unknown to, or ſuppreſſed by, him. II. Francis de Sales was not Biſhop of Geneva, under Sixtus V: Clement VIII made him Coadjutor of That Biſhopric. III. The Diſcourſe, which is aſcribed here to This Prelate, does not agree with Theſe Words of Moreri; Beza, with whom Francis de Sales had ſome Conferences at Geneva, confeſſed to him, that the Catholic Religion was the only true Religion (72). Upon ſuch a Confeſſion, the Prelate would have adviſed The Pope to offer all manner of Dignities to This Miniſter. The Deſcription of the Care, which it was ſaid, at Rome, that Beza took of his Life, is hyperbolical. "Non faceva paſſo, ſenza un cumulo grande "di precautioni, è ſenza pigliar cento & mille miſure, non coſtumando di praticar niſſuno, ſenza "eſſer ſicuro d'un inveterata conoſcenza, ne voleva "domettici in ſua Caſa, della di cui ſede non ne "foſſe ſicuro ultro che quei ſuo perverſi Settarii lo "cuſtodivano come ſuoi Demoni tutelari, nè uſciva "mai di Caſa ſenza haverne cinque ò ſei à lato, è "quel che importa, che per maggior ſicurezza non "metteva mai li piedi fuori della Citta (73)." The Meaning of This is; "that he never ſtirred without "the utmoſt Precaution; that he converſed with "none but his moſt intimate Acquaintance; that his "very Domeſtics were only Thoſe of his Sect; that "he never went abroad without five or ſix of them "about him; and that, for the greater Security, he "never ſet foot out of the City." But it is true, that he made uſe of Precaution. See one of his Pieces againſt Claudius de Xaintes. You will find, there, that They upbraided him with not daring to go out of Geneva, for fear of being killed, like another Cain, by the firſt, who ſhould meet him. Geneva pedem non audes effere, ne te quiſquis invenerit ut alterum Cain occidat. He anſwered, that, if God called him to it, he would go any where without Fear; though he was not ignorant of the Ambuſhes, which were laid for him, and which he would avoid as prudently as he could. "Etſi mihi appoſitos à tuis illis & veneficos & ſi"carios non ignoro (hæ ſunt enim artes Romanæ) "quorum etiam unus jam hic deprehenſus pœnas "dedit - - - - Interea me ſane libens domi contineo, "& veſtras inſidias quam prudentiſſimè poſſum "evito (74)."

Digitized by Google

(72) In the Article SALES (Francis de).

(73) Leti, ibid. pag. 264.

(74) Beza, Oper. Tom. II. pag. 362.

[S] He had a great Share in Scaliger's Eſteem.] This appears by his Epicedium on Beza's Death. He inſerted an ill Preſage in it, which proved falſe. Addito etiam de fato urbis in qua deceſſit omine, quod tamen haftenus eventu caruit (75). It is ninety Years, more or leſs, ſince Thuanus made This Obſervation, and it has not hitherto (76) appeared, that Scaliger's Preſage has been confirmed in the leaſt. It was not one of Thoſe Poetical Predictions, which are of no greater Conſequence, than Thoſe of a Fanatical Commentator on St John's Revelation. Nor do I believe, that the Deſire of comparing Beza to St Auguſtin, which might have ingaged an hundred other Poets to hazard This Prediction, made Scaliger ſpeak in This manner. It is very probable, that, conſidering the State of Things, He feared for the City of Geneva the Fate of That of Hippo, which was taken by the Vandals, a little after the Death of it's Biſhop. So that it was rather a Political Conjecture, than a Poetical Rapture. The Event has proved it to be ſo; which ſhews, that the ſureſt way is not to judge at all of Things to come. Scaliger's ill Preſage is This;

A falſe Prediction of Scaliger.

(75) Thuanus, lib. 134. pag. 1082.

(76) I write this in May, 1699.

Utque Dei famulo non Hippo ſuperſtite capta eſt,
Cum quateret Lybicas Vandalus Hoſtis opes,
Indulſit tibi ſic præſentia numinis, iſto
Cernere ne poſſes ulteriora malo.
Atque utinam celeres rapiant procul omina venti,
Et potius mendax finxerit iſta metus.
Sed te felicem, &c.

And, as, ſecure 'till holy Auſtin died,
Hippo, untaken, ſtem'd the Vandal Tide;
So Heav'n withholds, in Kindneſs, from Thy Eyes
Approaching Ills, and greater Miſeries.
Far may the Winds the luckleſs Omen bear;
May it be nothing but the Child of Fear;
Yet Happy Thou, &c.

There are certain Things in the Scaligerana, to the Diſadvantage of Beza; but do we ceaſe to eſteem a Man, when, for Example, we make no Difficulty to confeſs, that the many Affairs, he was concerned in, and the Multitude of Books, he compoſed, hindered him from acquiring much Learning?

[T] I criticize Moreri only in five Things.] I. Beza was not yet paſt Childhood, when he was brought to Paris: His Mother carried him thither, as ſoon as he was weaned. Mater —— mariti imperio obſecuta Lutetiam uſque me recens ablactatum perduxit. Beza writes This to Wolmar. II. We ſhall ſee below (77), whether we ought to believe, That a ſcandalous Epigram drew the Reſentment of Juſtice on Beza —— and that he was accuſed of a more horrible Crime, than Fornication, and that his Debaucheries brought a Diſeaſe upon him. III. It is not true, that Calvin often procured important Commiſſions for Beza, that he might aſſiſt at ſome Conferences againſt the Lutherans. I do not think there were any Conferences, during Calvin's Life, at which Beza was preſent; for the Diſpute of the Year 1557 muſt not be reckoned; Chance brought it about (78); It was but a trifling Buſineſs; They went into Germany upon another Deſign. IV. It is not true, that Beza is the Author of the Confeſſion of Faith of the Reformed Churches. The Confeſſion of Faith, which he compoſed firſt in French, and afterwards in Latin, is a different Piece from the Confeſſion of the Churches. V. Beza did not preſide in the Synod of Nimes, in the Year 1572. The following Faults are to be imputed to Moreri's Printers: They have placed Beza's Birth in the Year 1619, inſtead of 1519. They have quoted Antony Pale De vita & obitu Theod. Beze: It ſhould be Antony la Faye, and Bezæ.

(77) In Remark [U].

(78) Beza, Apol. ad Cl. de Xaintes, pag. 295.

[U] What Mezerai ſays, appears unworthy of a judicious Hiſtorian.] If he had been contented to ſay, that we read, in many printed Pieces, that Beza was accuſed of This abominable Crime, it would be no ſtrange Thing; for he would have ſaid nothing but what is very true. Perhaps Two hundred Authors might be quoted, who, tranſcribing one another, have ſpoken of This Proceſs. Mezerai goes much farther; He maintains the Thing? he warrants it; and can produce no Proof for it; This may be called the Conduct of a raſh Hiſtorian. Let us ſet down his Words. "He may, without prejudice to any Religion, "very well be called a very wicked Man, and a "Soul wholly corrupted; who, like a filthy Harpy, "ſpoiled the moſt Holy Things with his malicious "Railleries; and whoſe Heart brooded nothing but "bloody, and altogether execrable, Deſigns. Neither was there any manner of Villany, wherewith "he did not defile his Youth; the Poems, whereof "he deſigned to cover the Lewdneſs with the Title "of Juvenilia, make ſufficient mention of it: But, "beſides, it is certain, that he fled to Geneva, to "avoid the Puniſhment, he deſerved, for the Sodomy, whereof he was accuſed before the Parliament of Paris; and that he carried his Candida "away with him, who was a Taylor's Wife, and "who was yet living in the beginning of This Century, after he had ſold certain Benefices, which he "had of his Uncle, and, among others, the Priory "of MEZERAI criticized.

Digitized by Google

The Poems, entituled Juvenilia, have raiſed great Clamours [X]. It cannot be denied, that they contained Verſes too licentious, and little becoming the Chaſtity of Chriſtian Muſes; but, if the Author's Enemies had been reaſonable, they would rather have praiſed him for the Grief he expreſſed for them (k), than have put an (k) See Remark [X].

" of Longjumeau; beginning, in this manner, the " Reformation of his Life, with Simony and Adul- " tery (79)." Mr Maimbourg gives only a Paraphraſe of Theſe Words of Mezerai, when he drew an horrible Picture of Beza (80); but, inſtead of following the Example of Mezerai, who quotes no body, he quotes Bolſec, Spondanus, Florimond de Remond, Claudius de Xaintes, &c. Had he had better Witneſſes, he would, doubtleſs, have produced them; ſo that it is unqueſtionable, that Mezerai had no other Authorities, than Thoſe, which Maimbourg quotes. Once again, This is moſt ſhameful in ſo famous and illuſtrious an Hiſtoriographer. Truly, an Hiſtorian would write very pretty Stories, ſhould he mention all the abuſive Language, which Controverſiſts give each other, of what Religion ſoever they be. They are not to be believed in perſonal Facts, with which they reproach their Adverſaries, unleſs they ſupport them with authentic Acts; ſo that Mezerai, having only followed Claudius de Xaintes, and Florimond de Remond, who brought no Proofs for Their Slanders, has injured himſelf greatly with Perſons of Judgment.

(79) Mezerai, Hiſt. of France, Vol. III. pag. 64.

(80) Maimb. Hiſt. of Calviniſm, pag. 217.

THE WAY to know whether an Accuſation be falſe.

Suffer me to make an Obſervation here, which may be of uſe in the Diſcuſſion of perſonal Facts. Several Authors have maintained, I. That Beza left France, to avoid the Conſequences of a Proceſs of Sodomy, which, they ſay, was entered againſt him, in the Parliament of Paris. II. That he carried a certain Taylor's Wife away with him. Beza has publickly maintained, that they were two enormous Calumnies; that he had lived an unblameable Life at Paris; and that he left it, neither out of Fear, nor for Debt, but for his Religion; and that he had never attempted his Neighbour's Wife, any more than the Kingdom of the Indies. Lutetiæ inculpatè & bona integraque exiſtimatione —— viviſſe. Inde non fuga, non clam, non vi, non metu, non ære alieno oppreſſum (quæ tu mihi falſiſſime & mendaciſſime impingis) ſed unius religionis ſtudio —— ad veram Eccleſiam juſtis itineribus ultro conceſſiſſe. - - - - - - Coram Deo juratus teſtari poſſum non magis unquam mihi contigiſſe ut cujuſquam uxoris pudicitiam attentarem, quam ut Indorum regnum invaderem (81). Thus far, no Man of any Religion whatſoever is obliged to believe, that Beza was either innocent, or guilty; no one is obliged to believe, either that his Miniſter would not deny an infamous Crime, if he was not innocent of it; or that his Prieſt would advance a heinous Accuſation, if it were not true. The Reader, therefore, muſt ſuſpend his Judgment, 'till the Accuſation be proved: But, on the other ſide, he muſt give it for the accuſed Perſon, when he ſees, that the Accuſation remains without Proof, and chiefly in the Circumſtances, which I am going to mention. If the Fact in queſtion be of ſuch a nature, that it may be proved authentically; and, if the Accuſers want neither Good-will, nor Induſtry, it muſt be concluded, that, if they do not prove it, They are Calumniators. This is ſufficient to convict Beza's Accuſers of Calumny. A Proceſs, entered againſt a Prior of Longjumeau, before the Parliament of Paris, is a Thing, which may be eaſily verified. The Accuſers, Their Attorney, Their Petition, The Commiſſion of Information, The Verbal Proceſs of the Commiſſioners, are ſettled Perſons, or Pieces, which are preſerved by public Authority; and it can never be thought, that a wretched Fellow, who flies away as faſt as he can, has Credit enough to aboliſh the Proceedings, and to ſilence the Complaints of the Party againſt him. The Taylor, whoſe Wife was ſaid to have been debauched, lived as long as the pretended Seducer; ſo that it was eaſy for him to bring his legal Depoſition. How comes it then, that ſuch a one as Claudius de Xaintes, and ſo many Eccleſiaſtics, who publickly accuſed Beza, could never produce any Vouchers, nor a formal Depoſition of This Taylor? Perhaps Beza's obliging Language diſarmed them: On the contrary, he treated Them like Dogs; his Jeſts, and his ill Language, pierced them through and through; and all their Writings breathe the moſt violent Hatred. So that They had, on the one ſide, all imaginable means of coming at Proofs; and, on the other, a moſt paſſionate Deſire of finding Them; and yet they have not produced Them. From whence any equitable Perſon ought to conclude, that They are meer Calumniators.

(81) Beza, Apolog. altera ad Claud. de Xaintes, Oper. Tom. II. pag. 359.

This is the Subſtance of my whole Argument. The Thing is of ſuch a Nature, that, if it were true, legal, and authentic, Proofs would not be wanting. The Accuſers have all the Skill, and all the Addreſs, neceſſary for finding theſe Proofs: They have the greateſt Intereſt in the World in finding Them: They have not found them; It muſt, therefore, be concluded, that it is, becauſe there were none. There were none; it muſt, then, be again concluded, that the Thing in queſtion was falſe and chimerical.

I have enlarged on This Thought, becauſe it may ſerve to clear up the Uncertainties, occaſioned by ſo many raſh Writers, who tranſcribe the moſt heinous Accuſations from one another, without attempting to prove them; whilſt, on the other Hand, the Accuſed, and their Friends, do not ceaſe to cry out againſt the Calumny.

[X] The Poems, entituled Juvenilia, raiſed great Clamours.] They were printed at Paris, in the Year 1548, in the Printing-Houſe of Jodocus Badius Aſcenſius, by Conrad Badius, for himſelf, and Robert Stephens, with a Licence of the Parliament for Three Years. The Author's Effigies is in the ſecond Page; wherein he is ſaid to have been, then, Twenty nine Years of Age. He dedicated This Work to his Profeſſor Melchior Wolmar. Theſe Poems conſiſt of Silvæ, Elegies, Epitaphs, Pictures, Icones, and Epigrams. It is in vain to tell the Controverſiſts, that Beza produced theſe lewd Poems before he was a Proteſtant; for he himſelf contradicts Thoſe, who make ſuch an Apology for him. He acknowledges, that, from ſixteen Years of Age, he had imbibed the Knowledge of the pure Goſpel; and that, when he abjured Popery outwardly, he had long before made a Vow of that Abjuration (82). The firſt thing he returns GOD thanks for, in his Teſtament, is, quod anno ætatis ſuæ 16 veræ Chriſtianæ Religionis cognitione ac luce donatus ſit (83). Note, that Morton, having confeſſed, in the firſt Edition of his Catholic Apology, that Beza, while he was a Papiſt, was ſuch as he is repreſented; erat, erat, ſed dum in volutabro veſtro miſer bæſerat —— dum Papiſta bircus fuit, &c (84), has corrected This in the ſecond Edition, and maintained that Beza always had the Character of an honeſt Man. Brerleius took the Advantage of the firſt Edition (85). It is in vain, likewiſe, to have recourſe to Recrimination; for neither Muretus, nor John della Caſa, nor an hundred other Poets, who had no Reformation, nor any new Church to ſet up, were obliged to diſtinguiſh themſelves by a ſingular Virtue and Piety. The ſhorteſt way is, to place Theſe Poems of Beza among the Sins of his Youth, for which he asked Pardon both of GOD and the Public (86). It is certain, that he endeavoured to ſuppreſs them (87), as much as his Enemies endeavoured to revive them; and, if he conſented, at the Age of Seventy eight Years, to a new Edition of his Latin Verſes, he did not deſign Thoſe ſhould be inſerted, which gave offence. I wonder the contrary was believed (88); for not only the Authors, who are quoted, do not ſay, that Beza gave ALL his Verſes, to be printed with the faireſt Characters, that were to be found at the Stephens's; but it is certain alſo, that the Edition, which then was made, does not contain the licentious Verſes of the Juvenilia. Conſider well Theſe Words of la Faye. " Accidit ut de Bezæ poë- " matis ageretur, & generoſ. D. Zaſtrizellus peteret " à Beza ſibi donari illa carmina, quæ cum ipſe, tum " Paludius, vita digna judicarent. Id quum impetraſ- " ſent, Beza concedente, curavit ille in unum colli- " gi Sylvas, Elegias, Epitaphia, Epigrammata, Ico- " nes, Emblemata, Catonem Cenſorium, & ut ele- " gantiſſimis typographii Stephaniani formis excude- " rentur effecit anno 1597 (89). —— The Diſcourſe " happened to turn upon Beza's Poems; and D. Zaſtri- " ſellus deſired Beza to give him thoſe Pieces, which " both He, and Paludius (he was Zaſtriſellus's Tutor) " ſhould think worthy of being preſerved. Beza con- " ſenting, He took care, that his Sylvæ, Elegies, " Epitaphs, (82) Epiſt. Dedicator. Confeſſionis Fidei ad Wolmarum.

(83) Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 73.

(84) Morton. Apol. Cathol. Part I. lib. ii. cap. xxi.

(85) Brerleii Apol. Proteſt. p. 550.

(86) See the Preface to his Poems, addreſſed to Andrew Dudithius, dated May 14, 1569; his Notes on Matth. i. 19; his Anſwer to Claudius de Xaintes, &c.

(87) Ant. Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 9, 10.

(88) Jugem. ſur les Poëtes, Num. 1336.

(89) Ant. Fayus, p. 59.

Digitized by Google

an ill Construction upon the Epigram on Candida and Audebert [Y]: They accused him of having a Hand in the Murther of the Duke of Guise; This we may examine in the Article POLTROT. They have said, that he wished to return into the Bosom of the Catholic Church [Z]. It is not true, that a Dominican confounded him in a Dispute [AA]. We shall see, in another Place (l), whether Bolsec may be credited.

(l) In the Article BOLSEC, Remark [L].

After having committed the Fault of publishing his Juvenilia, I think there was no other way left for him to avoid suffering for it, but to live a very obscure Life, or very remote from Theological Disputes; for, under what Figure soever he had appeared, his Enemies would have taken Advantage of This Blot, to lessen his Reputation. He had This chiefly to fear in whatever Party he should signalize himself in point of Controversy. And it is not to be questioned, but that, if the same Arms, he made use of against the Papists, had been employed, by him, against the Protestants, some " Epitaphs, Epigrams, Icones, Emblems, and Cato " Censorius, should be collected together, and had " them printed, with the most beatiful Types, which " the Stephens's Printing-House could furnish, in the " Year 1597." Mr Baillet has shewed his Civility, and his Equity (90).

(90) Enfans celebres, Art. 56.

You will find a good Justification of Beza in the Critical Miscellanies of Mr Ancillon (91): He relates a fine Passage of Mr Daillé (92), whereby we learn, that the Infidels reproached the Primitive Church, that they gave their best Employments to Those, whom the Scandal of their Ill Lives had rendered odious and infamous among the Pagans. Mr Ancillon refers us to his Apology for Calvin, Luther, Zuinglius, and Beza (93).

(91) In Vol. I. pag. 386. & seq.

(92) Taken from the xix Sermon on 1 Tim. iii.

(93) In Pag. 398.

[Y] An Ill Construction was put upon the Epigram on Candida and Audebert.] There is nothing so ill grounded, as the enormous Accusation built on This Epigram. See the Article AUDEBERT. They who pretend, that the Candida of Beza was his Wife, are mistaken; for Beza's Wife was never with Child; and there are some Verses on Candida's Pregnancy in the Juvenilia of This Author. Quænam illa est Candida? uxor mea scilicet, quam in meis versiculis prægnantem superis commendo, quum uxor mea nunquam etiam conceperit (94). I have not been able to discover any Thing concerning Beza's Wife, except that she was of no high Birth; and that their Correspondence began four Years before they left the Kingdom, and before they married in the Face of the Church. Her Husband gives a good Character of her. " Uxorem mihi ea quam illa tempora ferebant " ratione —— quatuor circiter annos ante voluntarium meum exilium despondi, genere equidem imparem, sed ea virtute præditum mulierem cujus me " pœnitere ab eo tempore minime oportuerit (95). Scaliger says, that she was the Daughter of an Advocate, and barren; and afterwards cries out, What a foolish Woman (96)! The Historian of the Husband speaks otherwise of Her; He praises her for several good Qualities, and chiefly for her conjugal Affection; but it is the common Stile of Those, who write the Life of a Learned Person; His Wife, if ever he had any, is always a Woman of great Merit, and of a peaceable Temper. The Funeral Orations of Professors never omit This Topic, though The Makers of them have but too often a Socrates to praise. However it be, let us see the Elogy of Beza's first Wife. " Anno 1588. mense Aprili è vivis excessit Claudia " Denossa Bezæ conjux, cum qua conjunctissime & " honestissime vixerat annos quadraginta. Fuit illi " casus hic gravissimus: erat enim fœmina multum " laudata, sedula, frugi, & viri sui in primis studiosa (97). - - - - - - - - - In the Month of April, 1588, " died Claudia Denossa, the Wife of Beza, with " whom he lived forty Years lovingly and honourably. This was a very great Misfortune to " him; for she was a Lady of great Merit, Diligent, " Thrifty, and particularly careful of her Husband." Not a word of her Family: This makes me question, what Scaliger says, that she was the Daughter of an Advocate: And besides, would Beza have confessed so freely, that he had married beneath himself, if his Wife had been the Daughter of an Advocate of Paris? This Under-matching has something in it, which I cannot unravel, and which leaves room for Suspicion. Beza, as handsome as an Adonis (98), Polite, Learned, Witty, wanting no Money, under-matches himself! One of Those, who have answered Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, denies, that the Candida of Beza is one Dame Claudia, a Taylor's Wife; and, among other Reasons, He makes use of this; When Beza speaks of the Clasp, he complains, that coërcet globulos duos rubentes, intra cæca jubet manere claustra; These Expressions, says he, of a Woman's Breast, do not suit a Taylor's Wife (99). Who told him, that a Taylor's Wife of Paris might not wear a Clasp in Those Days, to hide her Breasts? This Apologist makes some minute Observations, which he would have done better to have suppressed.

(94) Apolog. Altera ad Claud. de Xaintes, Oper Tom. II. pag. 359, 360. See also his Epistle dedicatory to his Poems.

(95) Epist. Dedicator. Poëmatum. See also the second Answer to Claudius de Xaintes, pag. 360.

(96) In Scaligeranis, at the Word Beza.

(97) Ant. Payus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 54.

(98) See the Description Maimbourg gives of him; History of Calvinism, pag. 217. It appears, by the Scaligerana, that Beza had the Presence of a Prince. Fuit valde pulcher senex --- fuit valde præstanti forma, ut judicaretur aliquis princeps.

(99) See the Book, entitled, The true History of Calvinism, pag. 171.

I cannot give credit to what I have read in one of Mr Ancillon's Works, which is, that Beza's first Wife was Frances de St Marcel d' Avençon, Sister of a Bishop of Grenoble, and the Widow of Nicolas Odeuoud, Brother of John IV, First Consul of the same City of Grenoble, her first Husband, and of Philip de Poy, Lord of Fiancé, her second Husband (100). Such an eminent Nobility cannot agree with the Under-matching, which the pretended Third Husband confesses so ingenuously. Besides, Mr Ancillon had not well informed himself of what concerns Beza's Marriages; He admits three of Them, and applies to them Pasquier's Epigram (101), which I have set down in the Remark [N].

(100) Ancillon, Mélange Critique, Tom. I. pag. 379.

(101) Id. ibi. pag. 405.

[Z] He is charged with wishing to return into the Bosom of the Catholic Church.] See, in the Remark [O], the Report, that was spread, of his dying a good Catholic, in the Year 1597. I have an Author to quote here, whose Name and Temper agree very well (102). " Did he not lately most humbly supplicate our most " Christian King to obtain for him the Absolution " of our Holy Father? The same Prince told it, two " several times, to a Prelate; and I am sure he " would not revoke it for all the Huguenotism in " the World. Cry out, and murmur at it, as much " as you will. The Sieur Corneille, a late Minister, " told me, that the same Beza, advising him to forsake all their Errors, and return to the Faith of " the Catholic Church, protested to him, that he " would do the same, if he could easily get out of " Geneva. If you have a Mind to know more of it, " he will tell you the Day, the Place, and his Discourse, with so many Particulars, that you cannot " doubt of it, &c." Thus the Franciscan Feuardentius speaks of Beza. One is amazed to see him quote Henry IV, with so much Confidence; as for the Ex-Minister, Corneille, his Quotation signifies nothing. Compare This with the Remark [R], towards the End.

(102) Feuardent. Entremangeries miniftriales, Book iii. chap. 24. pag. 327.

[AA] It is not true, that a Dominican confounded him in a Dispute.] Alfonsus Fernandez relates, in his Annals of the Dominicans, printed at Salamanca, in the Year 1617, that Father Sebastian Michael, a Religious of the Order of St Dominic, mortified the Pride of the Huguenots in Montpellier, and chiefly That of Beza, who travelled often from Geneva to Montpellier. Rivetus says, upon This, that, at the Time of This pretended Triumph, Beza was in his Eighty first Year; and that he was not in a Condition to undertake long Journeys; and that it is certain, that, neither in that Year, nor after, did he set Foot out of the Territories of Geneva. " Cum tamen certum sit " Bezam, tum octuagesimum primum annum agen- " tem, illo anno nec potuisse, si voluisset, Montem- " pessulanum adventare, nec ab illo tempore Geneva " excessisse, aut saltem fines Genevensium (103)." I do not believe, that, in any time of his Life, This Minister made frequent Journeys from Geneva to Montpellier. We have seen (104), that They reproached him for not daring to go out of Geneva. Rivetus

(103) Rivetus in Jesuita vapulante, Oper. Tom. III. p. 439. In this Treatise of Rivetus are divers Answers to Beza's Accusers.

(104) At the end of Remark [R].

Digitized by Google

ſome Reformed Writers would have thrown in his Teeth his Audebert, and his Candida [BB]. Among the Roman Catholics, He, who treated him with the greateſt Moderation, is more eaſy to be pointed out, than He, who treated him with the greateſt Anger. They, who have ſhewn ſome Moderation and Equity towards him, are but a few in Number; They, who have diſcharged the Fury of their Animoſities againſt him, are numberleſs: But I do not believe, there are many, whoſe Paſſion is ſo extravagant, as That of the Author of the Doctrine Curieuſe. I ſhall mention one of his Calumnies [CC]: It is ſo ſtrange, that one can hardly believe one's own Eyes in a Thing of this Nature. He was publickly cenſured for it by a Catholic Rivetus did not know, that, in the Year 1601, Beza went to Lauſanne (105); he took, then, his final leave of That City.

(105) Ant. Fayus, in vita Bezæ, pag. 19.

[BB] Some Reformed Writers would have twitted him with his Audebert and his Candida.] We ſhould preſume too much upon the Privileges of Orthodoxy, and belie Experience, if we ſhould believe, that all Thoſe, who write in the Defence of Truth, reſiſt the Impreſſions of Reſentment in ſuch a Manner, as to ſee only, in the Writings of their Adverſaries, what Juſtice requires they ſhould find in Them. Beza's Epigram on Audebert is, at the bottom, but a witty Conceit; It is free from the Abominations, which the Miſſionaries pretend to diſcover in it; but, to ſee this Purity in it, one muſt either be the Author's Friend, or have no Partiality for, or againſt, him; for, when once a Man is very angry, and would be revenged for the Injuries he has received from an Author, He gives a criminal Turn to his Words. The Proteſtants of the Confeſſion of Geneva do not doubt, but that Thoſe of the Confeſſion of Augsburg are Part of That True Church, which leads to Heaven: Nevertheleſs, ſome of the Lutherans were ſo offended, becauſe Beza had written againſt their Party, that they adopted the Slanders of the Roman Catholics, as to his Juvenilia. See here a long Paſſage of the Calvino-Turciſmus, in which we ſee the Sentiments of a famous Lutheran Divine. "Et quanquam Theodorus "Beza aliter de vita moribuſque Calvini ſcribat, tamen contra Theodorum Bezam iſti arguunt hæc eſſe "veriſſima, nec unquam luculentur & ſolidè à Calviniſtis refutata. Nam quod ad Bezæ teſtimonium "attinet, quum Theodorus Beza (inquiunt) * eadem "hæreſi, & eodem ferme peccato nobilitatus ſit, ut "hiſtoria de Candida meretricula (& Audeberto) teſtatur; nemo ipſi hac in parte fidem habere poteſt. "Nihil certè apud hominem moderatum & æquum "valere poteſt ejus quæcunque vehementiſſima licet "conteſtatio, ſi verum eſt quod juxta iſtos †, Certò "conſtat Theodorum Bezam à pueritia imbibiſſe vatum "impudicitiam, & impudentiam, totamque ætatem explendis ſuis libidinibus & cupiditatibus, "ac deſcribendis ſuis amoribus, & ulciſcendis ſuis "rivalibus exercuiſſe, atque in meretricem lenam, "& cynedum transformatum eſſe. De quo item conſtat & hoc ‡, quod obſcæniſſimos verſus ſcripſit "ad Germanum Audebertum Aureliæ, & eundem "tanquam Adonidem à Theodoro Beza factum eſſe "(106). —— And, though Beza gives a different "Account of the Life and Character of Calvin, yet "They contend, againſt Theodore Beza, that theſe "things are moſt true, and that they were never "clearly and ſolidly refuted by the Calviniſts. For, "as to the Teſtimony of Beza, ſince Theodore Beza "(ſay They) was remarkable for the ſame Hereſy, and "almoſt the ſame Crime, as appears from the Story "of the Harlot Candida (and Audebert); no one can "believe him upon this Head. And, indeed, his "ſtrongeſt Atteſtation can have no weight with a Man "of Moderation and Equity, if what They ſay be "true; viz. It is notorious, that Beza, from his Infancy, had imbibed the Immodeſty and Impudence "of the Poets, and had ſpent his whole Life, in "gratifying his luſtful Inclinations, in deſcribing his "Amours, and revenging himſelf on his Rivals, and "that he was metamorphoſed both into a Bawd, and a "Catamite. Of whom it is likewiſe true, that he "wrote the moſt obſcene Verſes to Germanus Audebert, who is deſcribed by Theodore Beza as another "Adonis." The ſame Blindneſs, which engaged Schluſſelburgius to write ſuch things, would have appeared in ſome Reformed Authors, if Beza had followed the Footſteps of Claudius de Xaintes, or of Ronſard (107); if he had been Chaplain to the Duke of Guiſe at the Battle of Dreux; if he had harangued againſt The Proteſtants at the Conference of Poiſſi; in a word, if he had perſecuted them by his Books, Intrigues, Sermons, Journies, &c. Let us ſay, then, that the Glory, he acquired, in maintaining the Cauſe of the Reformed, with great Zeal, cauſed his Poems to be taken notice of, which, without That, had never been exclaimed againſt: And, if it were permitted to compare Small Faults with Great Ones (108), One might remember, here, what ſhall be ſaid in another Place of John de la Caſſa. His Capitolo del Forno would have remained unknown, with ſo many other more infamous Poems, if he had not been raiſed to the Function of an Inquiſitor. To conclude, I add, that, if Beza had been a great Perſecutor of the Huguenots, and expoſed to their Libels for his Juvenilia, the Writers of the other Party would have maintained, that there was no harm in the Epigram upon Audebert and Candida, and that a Man muſt be given over to a Spirit of Slander, a perpetual Character of Hereſy, to, &c.

(107) Remarks [D] and [E], of the Article RONSARD.

(108) Si parva licet componere magnis. Virgil. Georg. I. iv. ver. 176.

[CC] I ſhall mention one of Garaſſe's Calumnies againſt Beza.] "The Fourth, who was guilty of a "great Piece of Folly in relation to the Sacrament, "was Beza; for This Man, who had Wit enough "to make a laſcivious Epigram, though he committed childiſh Faults in the Quantity of his Latin "Verſes, never ſpoke of any Thing relating to Divinity, without expoſing himſelf to the Deriſion of "the Learned. George Fabricius tells us, In reſponſione ad Apologiam Bezæ, that the ſaid Arch-Heretic, being at the Conference of Poiſſi, made a long "Diſcourſe, in the Form of a Paraphraſe, on the "Words of the Conſecration, in which he equally "ſhewed his Malice, and his Folly. For, ſaid he, "Sirs, I muſt inform you, that there is an eſſential "Error crept into the New Teſtament, in the Words "of the Conſecration; for, whereas we read, Hoc eſt "corpus meum; Hic eſt calix meus *, it ſhould certainly be read in the Negative; Hoc NON EST corpus meum; Hic NON EST calix meus †, and that "CHRIST pronounced ſo in expreſs Terms; but that "the Evangeliſts, and St Paul, who were our LORD "JESUS CHRIST's Secretaries, have, unfortunately, "or through too much Precipitation, forgotten the Negative, as it appears often, continues he, in the Pandects of Florence, and the Civilians obſerve, that "Thoſe, who tranſcribed them, have often forgot the "Negative, and, by that means, made ſome Laws "quite contrary to the Intention of the Founder: Thus, "ſaid Beza, the Evangeliſts, having forgotten the "NON, are the cauſe, that we debate, at this Day, "a moſt clear Truth: For, what probability is there, "that the Body of CHRIST ſhould be contained in a "little roundiſh Wafer? I ſay, Sirs, that Non plùs "eſt in COENA, quàm in COENO; He is as much in "the Mire, as in the Sacrament. At this Diſcourſe, "the Doctors, and particularly Eſpencæus, and Claudius de Xaintes, were in a manner ſtupified with "Aſtoniſhment, ſeeing the Impudence and Folly of "the Man: And Claudius de Xaintes to confound "him having produced the Confeſſion of Augsburg, "which the Calviniſts of France had embraced, which "has theſe Words in expreſs Terms: CHRISTI corpus in Euchariſtiâ ADESSE: Beza anſwered, that it "ought to be corrected; that the ſame Fault was in "it, as in the Evangeliſts; and that, by changing "one Letter, it might be read ABESSE; viz. that "the Body of JESUS CHRIST was abſent from the "Euchariſt (109)." We ſhall ſee how This abſurd

* This is my Body; This is my Blood.

† This is NOT my Body; This is NOT my Blood.

(109) Garaſſe, Doctrine Curieuſe, pag. 283, 284.

Diſcourſe

* Conrad. Schluſſel. Calviniſt. Theolog. l. ii. fol. 72.

† Idem. lib. 1. fol 92.

‡ Fol. 93.

(106) Guilielmus Reginaldus, in Calvino-Turciſmo, lib. ii. cap. 11, p. 274.

Digitized by Google

Catholic Writer [DD]: But he was not aſhamed of it, and choſe rather to make uſe

Diſcourſe of Father Garaſſe was confuted by a Perſon of his own Communion.

[DD] He was publickly cenſured for it by a Catholic Writer.] I mean, by the ſame Mr Ogier, who wrote in favour of Balzac, ſome time after, and who was a very good Preacher. He did not put his Name to the Book, which he entituled, Jugement & Cenſure du Livre de la doctrine curieuſe de François Garaſſe, and which he publiſhed at Paris, in the Year 1623. However, it is certainly known, that he was the Author of it. Never was Writer ſo bore down, or cruſhed by his Adverſary, as Garaſſe was by Mr Ogier, in relation to This ſilly Story. The Cenſurer did two things: Firſt, he ſhewed, by three Reaſons, that nothing is more abſurd, than to ſuppoſe, that Beza ſpoke in this Manner; and, afterwards, he proved, that the Witneſs, quoted by Garaſſe, did not ſay what was imputed to him.

Let us ſee his three Reaſons. "Is it likely, that "Beza, one of the chief Miniſters of the Conference "of Poiſſi, held ſuch a Diſcourſe, as Garaſſe fathers "upon him, and ſaid that we muſt read, Hoc non "eſt corpus meum; ſince That curſed Corruption "does not only ruin the Catholic Belief concerning "the Holy Sacrament of the Euchariſt; but alſo "That of the Heretics, and of Beza, and his own "Party. Certainly, if our LORD had ſaid, This is "not my Body; as the Catholics could not conclude the "Reality of the Body from That Expreſſion; ſo the "Zuinglians could not draw Their Signification of "Body from it; and much leſs the Calviniſts their "Flowings, Irradiations, Participations, of the Body "of CHRIST, which They add to the Significa-"tion; ſince he would abſolutely have ſaid, This is "not my Body. Add to this Conſideration, that one "muſt be, not only a Beaſt, as Garaſſe ſays, but "worſe than a Beaſt, more inſenſible than a Log, "more ſtupid than a Lump of Lead, to entertain "ſuch a Thought, that our Lord JESUS CHRIST "ſaid, Hoc non eſt, &c. For cui bono? Wherefore "ſhould he tell his Diſciples, that the Bread was "not his Body, rather than any other Meat, that "was on the Table; nay, rather than the Table "itſelf? Beſides, What Coherence, what Conſe-"quence, what Reaſoning is there in Theſe Words; "This is not my Body, which is given for you; This is "not my Blood, &c. without adding any explanatory "Words, to denote which was That Body, and "That Blood, which was to be given, and ſhed, "for the Salvation of Mankind? As for myſelf, I "own, that, though I conſider theſe Words never "ſo attentively, I cannot conceive any Reaſon, or "Conſequence, in Them; and I firmly believe, that "one muſt be a Fool, and a Mad-Man, to be able "to find any. Finally, Who will believe, that Beza "made, at the Conference of Poiſſi, that fine Speech, "which Garaſſe aſcribes to him, who preſented This "Form of Confeſſion concerning the Euchariſt to "the Biſhops with his own Hands? Confitemur "CHRISTUM JESUM in ſua ſancta Cœna nobis of-"ferre, dare, & exhibere veram ſubſtantiam corporis "& ſanguinis per operationem Spiritus Sancti; - - - - "We confeſs, that CHRIST JESUS, in the Euchariſt, "offers, gives, and exhibits to us the true Subſtance "of Fleſh and Blood, by the Operation of the Holy "Spirit. And what follows; as may be read in "the Anſwer of Claude de Xaintes to Beza's Apo-"logy. And, though Theſe fine Words, ſo Ortho-"dox in Appearance, vaniſh into airy Notions, and "Figures; yet in what manner ſoever they be taken, "they are inconſiſtent with That pretended Nega-"tive (110)."

(110) Jugement & Cenſure de la Doctrine Curieuſe. chap. viii. pag. 89, 90.

He tells us, afterwards, of the Compariſon he made between Garaſſe's Narrative, and That of the Civilian, Gabriel (111) Fabricius, whom Garaſſe had quoted for the Voucher of his Story. He relates, "That Francis Baudouin, alias Balduin, having de-"ſerted the Sect of the Calviniſts, was, a long time, "expoſed to their Calumnies, and Curſes. Beſides, "- - - - - he compoſed very learned Treatiſes againſt "Calvin's Doctrine, and, among others, a Preface "to an Edition, which he publiſhed, of Optatus "Milevitanus, with this Superſcription Joanne Lu-"canio (112)." He adds (113); "If the Miniſters "hated This Civilian much, They feared him no leſs, "becauſe of his Ability, and profound Learning; "inſomuch that all the Works of the Catholic Do-"ctors, wherein any Point of their Doctrine was "ſolidly confuted, were aſcribed by Them to Bal-"duin. It happening, then, that Dr de Xaintes, af-"terwards Biſhop of Evreux, having compoſed a "Book entituled, Examen doctrinæ Calvinianæ & "Bezanæ de Cœna Domini (114); Beza wrote an "Apology by way of Anſwer to it, wherein he "furiouſly inveighs againſt Balduin, as the chief "Author of the Examen. De Xaintes anſwered by "a Reply, entituled, Reſponſio ad Apologiam Theod. "Bezæ, &c. And, on the other ſide, Gabriel Fa-"bricius undertook to defend his Maſter Balduin's "Cauſe, and compoſed a Libel, entituled, Gab. Fa-"bricii Reſponſio ad Bezam Vezeliam Eceboliam (115), "which, to ſpeak properly, is a Menyppæan Satire, "wherein he diſplays Beza in all his Colours, never "calling him by any other than a Feminine Name, "treating him, as the moſt laſcivious and profligate "Woman in the World, and uſing the keeneſt "Strokes, that Satire can invent againſt an Enemy. "It is out of This little Book, that Garaſſe - - - - "took That Speech of Beza, at the Conference of "Poiſſi, which might be tolerated, if Fabricius had "made him harangue in the ſame manner, that "Rapin makes Cardinal de Pelve diſcourſe, in the "Catholicon. But it is ſo far from being ſo, that "there is nothing that looks like a Speech in all the "Book. Fabricius ſays only, that Beza, without "racking his Brain with ſo many Forms of Confeſ-"ſion, Commentaries, and Explanations of this Paſ-"ſage, Hoc eſt corpus meum, ſhould have ſaid, with "the utmoſt Boldneſs, that it is an Error of the Tran-"ſcribers, who, inſtead of Hoc non eſt, as the Evan-"geliſts wrote it, have careleſsly left out the Ne-"gative, and wrote Hoc eſt, &c. Here are Fabri-"cius's own Words, in the ſeventeenth Page of "my Copy. Et fortaſſe ut tandem te expedias, "& tot commentariorum plauſtra faceſſere jubeas, re-"curres ad talem emendationem: & quia noſtri cor-"rectores dicunt in ipſis etiam Pandectis Florentinis, "ſæpe deeſſe negationem, tu tali artificio ſtatim te "liberes, & adverſariis os obſtruas, præſertim cum "alios multos Evangeliorum locos ſimiliter ſcilicet e-"mendaris, partim ex conjectura, partim ex manu-"ſcriptis, ut ais, exemplaribus. From which Words "it is as clear as the Sun at Noon-day, that Fabri-"cius means This; Eum qui ſemel verecundiæ fines "tranſierit, naviter oportere eſſe impudentem. - - - - "That He, who has once trangreſſed the Bounds of "Modeſty, may perſevere in Impudence: That, ſince "Beza had the Aſſurance to corrupt the Scriptures "in ſeveral Paſſages of leſs moment, He might car-"ry his Impudence farther, and corrupt This Paſ-"ſage, Hoc eſt corpus meum, ſubſtituting, in the "room of it, Hoc non eſt, &c. The following Im-"poſture of Garaſſe is of the ſame Stamp, when "he ſays, That Claudius de Xaintes, hearing Beza "ſpeak in This Manner, produced the Confeſſion "of Augsburg, to confound him, which has theſe "Words, Chriſti corpus in Euchariſtia adeſſe; and "that Beza anſwered, that it ought to be read abeſſe. "Garaſſe wonders at Beza's Folly; and I admire "at Garaſſe's Stupidity, who hopes to make his "Readers believe, that Beza, who would never "ſubſcribe to the Confeſſion of Augsburg, notwith-"ſtanding all the Entreaties of the Cardinal de Lor-"rain, nor give his Opinion about That Confeſ-"ſion, made This fooliſh and impertinent Reply "to Dr de Xaintes. - - - - The Truth is, Fabricius "derides Beza according to his uſual Cuſtom: Ubi "id eviceris, ſays he, facile deinde efficies, quod præ-"terea ſuſcipis, ut perſuadeas, tam fuiſſe hactenus te-"mulentos omnes Proteſtantes, &c. —— When you "ſhall have proved This, you will then induce us to be-"lieve, what you farther ſuſpect, that the Proteſtants "have been hitherto, in general, ſo beſotted, &c. "And a little after; Ingenua profecto & ingenioſa "fuerit

(111) And not George, as Garaſſe had ſaid, for which the Prior Ogier cenſures him.

(112) Jugement & Cenſure de la Doctrine Curieuſe, p. 91.

(113) Ibid. pag. 92. & ſeq.

(114) Printed at Paris, in 1567.

(115) Printed at Paris, 1567, in 8vo.

Digitized by Google

uſe of a pitiful Shift, than to confeſs the Truth [EE]. I have read, ſomewhere, in his Works, that Sturmius affirmed, that Beza might truly ſay, I believe but one thing, which is, That I believe nothing (m). What Calumny is this! Prateolus muſt be reckoned among the Authors, who have been the moſt diligent Tranſcribers of the (m) Note, that Bezi, Apol. i. ad Claudium de Xaintes, Oper. Tom. II. pag. 294. ſaid this of Francis Baudouin. Vir ſane nullius fidei, ut tanquam alter Socrates verè poſſit illud uſurpare, Hoc unum credo quod nihil credo.

" fuerit illa tua emendatio, ut ubi in eorum de cœna " confeſſione ſcriptum eſt corpus adeſſe, ſcribatur abeſſe. " Facilem enim lapſum ebrii ſcriptoris fuiſſe, in tanta " affinitate unius literulæ. Certainly, it would be " an ingenious Correction, if inſtead of adeſſe, as the " Confeſſion of Augsburg has it, you ſhould read " abeſſe; and, if you ſhould ſay, that it is an Er- " ror, eaſily crept into the Text, through the Care- " leſſneſs of ſome drunken German, by reaſon of the " Affinity and Reſemblance between the two Letters, " d and b (116)." You may be ſure, This Cenſurer did not forget to inſult Garaſſe for his Boldneſs in mentioning This Circumſtance, that the Doctors, and particularly Eſpencæus, and Claudius de Xainctes, were ſtruck with Amazement. He ends with a very good Reflexion. " This way of proceeding, ſays " he (117), is greatly prejudicial to the Converſion " of Erring Souls, and particularly of Thoſe, which " Garaſſe pretends to bring over to the Church by " means of his Book. For, pray tell me, what He- " retic, what Atheiſt, would truſt him, after he " has been ſurprized in ſo manifeſt a Falſhood? " Who will not preſume, that a thouſand Abſur- " dities, which he relates of ſeveral Heretical Au- " thors, are of the ſame Stamp, and that he quotes " the Ancients with as little Sincerity as the Mo- " derns? - - - - - I have it from good Hands, that " the chief Reaſon, which retained the great Caſau- " bon in the Errors, wherein he was brought up, " was his having perceived the like Tricks in ſome " modern Divines, which made him conceive a very " bad Opinion of Thoſe, who would triumph over " their Enemies with falſe Colours."

(116) Ibid. pag. 95.

(117) Ibid. pag. 96, 97.

ERRORS of Mr Ogier.

Let us obſerve ſome ſmall Miſtakes in This Judicious Cenſurer. The Reaſon, why the Proteſtants calumniated Baudouin, was not becauſe he had forſaken Their Religion, and compoſed learned Works to confute Them. See the Remark [H] of his Article; where you will find, that he drew their Indignation upon him for having concerned himſelf with ſome Intrigues, wherein they thought there was a Deſign of deſtroying them, under Pretence of reconciling both Religions. You will find there, that they took him for the Author of a ſmall Piece, which Caſſander had written, and which was not a Book of Controverſy, but rather an Explication of the Duty of a good Man in the Condition the Church was then in. In ſhort, you will find there, that The Slanders preceded the Preface to Optatus Milevitanus. To theſe Faults of the Prior Ogier may be added theſe others. The Proteſtants imputed only the Anonymous Book of George Caſſander to Baudouin. It is falſe, that Beza looked upon him as the chief Author of the Examen Doctrinæ Calvinianæ, written by Claude de Xaintes; He was contented to ſay, that Baudouin had ſupplied This Doctor with ſome Things, which conſiſted much more of Matters of Fact, than Arguments.

[EE] He choſe rather to make uſe of a pitiful Shift, than to confeſs the Truth.] Firſt of all, he ſuppoſes, that the Queſtion is only, Whether Fabricius ſpoke thoſe Words ſeriouſly, or by way of Irony (118)? He confeſſes afterwards, that his Adverſary builds on the ſeventeenth Page of Fabricius's Book; and then he expreſſes himſelf thus: " Not to mul- " tiply Words in vain, I anſwer, that, not having " Fabricius's Book at preſent in my Poſſeſſion, to " verify the Paſſage, and not being able to procure " it, what Diligence ſoever I could uſe, I muſt " refer myſelf to the Truth of my Extracts, which " I made very punctually above twelve Years ago; " by which I perceive, that Monſieur Augier did, " out of Simplicity or Cunning, what the Mini- " ſters do maliciouſly in the Books of the ancient " Fathers; for he took one Part of the Paſſage, " which was favourable to him, and dropped the " other. - - - - - To prove, then, that Fabricius did " not ſpeak ironically, and that he did not falſly " accuſe Beza of having ſubſtituted a Negative in " the ſacred Words of the Evangeliſts, he ſhews evi- " dently, in the Sequel of his Diſcourſe, that Beza's " Belief was ſuch, and that he had certainly cor- " rupted the Paſſages of the Goſpel. Theſe are his " Words, which deſerve to be ſeriouſly conſidered. " Ipſe Illyricus de illa explicatione & INVENTIONE " Bezana loquens, vocat phantaſticam inventionem, " qualis eſt amantium in Pictura & Poëſi, ut ibi ſuos " amores eſſe ſomnient, ubi non ſunt. Illum abſens " abſentem auditque videtque; & ita, inquiebat Illy- " ricus, ſe cum CHRISTO in Euchariſtia Beza geſſit, " ut Phædria cum Thaide apud Terentium, cum " ait; Volo ut cum milite iſto præſens abſens ſies " & mecum tota ſis; Ita Beza ſua illa phantaſtica & " imaginoſa inventione vult ut CHRISTUS in Eucha- " riſtia præſens & abſens ſiet, & ita ſit ut non eſſe di- " catur. - - - - The Illyrian himſelf, ſpeaking of This " Explication and INVENTION of Beza, calls it a " fantaſtical Invention, like That of Lovers, in " Painting or Poetry, who fancy the beloved Object " to be, where it is not. Thus, ſaid he, Beza dealt " with CHRIST in the Euchariſt, as Phædria, in Te- " rence, does with Thais, when ſhe ſays; Though " in Company with This Soldier, I would have you " be abſent, and only preſent with me. Thus Beza, " in That fantaſtical and imaginary Diſcovery, would " have CHRIST to be preſent in Abſence, and ſo to " exiſt, as to be ſaid not to exiſt. Monſieur Augier " may plainly ſee by theſe Words, that Fabricius, " whom he repreſents to us as a Buffoon, purpoſely " to leſſen his Authority, did not ſpeak jeſtingly, " as he ſuppoſes, but with all the Serioufneſs, which " ſuch Matters deſerve (119)." The Inſincerity, which reigns in theſe Words of Father Garaſſe, cannot be ſufficiently repreſented. An indigent Layman, living in a Place remote from great Cities, might make uſe of This Excuſe, I could not procure ſuch a Book; I could not verify ſuch a Paſſage; but, if he lived at Paris, and if his Honour engaged him to juſtify a Quotation, there would be reaſon to laugh at This Excuſe, and to call it a Cheat. But Garaſſe was, then, at Paris; ſo that he might eaſily have found Fabricius's Book; and no Author was ever more obliged to purge himſelf from Calumny. It was therefore prodigious Confidence, and invincible Obſtinacy, to ſay, I could not find This Book, what Diligence ſoever I uſed. What! Shall a Jeſuit, who can be ſupplied by the Libraries of his Order, in the furthermoſt Part of a Province, with any Book he ſtands in need of, tell us, that he could not find, at Paris, the Work he quoted? His Adverſary could meet with it there, and does not ſay, that he uſed any Diligence to find it. Why had he not Recourſe to That Copy, if all other Helps failed him? Mr Ogier durſt not have refuſed him; His Refuſal would have been a Proof of Garaſſe's Innocence. There is ſomething worſe ſtill; This Jeſuit took a Paſſage of Fabricius out of his Colleſtions, and gave it as the Sequel of That, which his Adverſary had mentioned; I ſay, as a Sequel artificially ſuppreſſed by his Adverſary. But it appears plainly, that Mr Ogier ſuppreſſes nothing, and that Fabricius's Words, which Francis Garaſſe quoted, relate to another Thing. What would have become of him, if the Reply, which Mr Ogier was going to make, had not been ſtopped by the Reconciliation between them? Would he have found new means to have diſpenſed with himſelf from fairly acknowledging his Calumny, Raſhneſs, Impoſture, and Impudence?

(118) Garaſſe, Apologe de la Doctrine Curieuſe, chap. xxvi. pag. 349.

(119) Ibid. pag. 350.

I ſhall ſay it often; I ſhall not be weary of repeating it; It is very uſeful to collect Examples of the Inſincerity of Authors, and the Pieces, which it has occaſioned. It were to be wiſhed, that ſuch Men, as Langius and Gruterus, had ſpent Part of the Time they beſtowed upon Polyanthea's, in making ſuch Compilations. Garaſſe would have often appeared in them; He was a Satirical, Hot-headed, Scurrillous, and Raſh Man, who told a Lie boldly, and denied it afterwards. It was his Intereſt, that the Doctrine

Digitized by Google

the abusive Language against This Minister. He omitted nothing of what Surius, and such like Writers, had collected (n). Cardinal Richelieu made use, in his Method, of some of Their Rhapsodies. I shall remark against him [FF]. Let us not forget, that Beza was buried in St Peter's Cloyster, and not in the Burying-place of Plein-palaix, because the Savoyards had boasted, that they would take him up, and send him to Rome (o). La Faye says, that This was done for some Reasons, which it was not necessary to mention. The Feuillant Peter de St Romuald brings a ridiculous Charge against him, when he accuses him of Rebellion, in having stiled Queen Elizabeth Queen of France [GG]. I am (n) See his Elenchus Alphabeticus Hæreticorum, and his History of the State and Success of the Church, in the form of a Chronicle, Edit. Paris, 1583, 2 Vol. in Folio.

(o) Spon's History of Geneva, pag. 357.

Doctrine of Those, who hold, that a Man, who dies in the Service of People infected with the Plague, is a Martyr, should be true. See Theophilus Raynaud, in the Treatise de Martyrio per Pestem. He says, that Father Garasse was persuaded, by the reading That Book, that the Crown of Martyrdom was to be obtained by that means, and was induced thereby to expose himself to the Danger of the Plague (120). He died in That Manner; and had published so many Calumnies, and discovered so much Knavery, that scarce any Thing but a true Martyrdom could expiate such Crimes. Observe, that some Persons will rather sacrifice their Lives, than a false Point of Honour; Garasse would not own his Calumnies upon any Account, and made no Difficulty to shut himself up with Those, who had the Plague (121).

(120) See Numb. 44 of the Theologia antiqua de vera Martyrii notione, at pag. 163, 164, of the Apompæus of Theophilus Raynaud.

[FF] A Remark against Cardinal Richelieu.] Let us first set down his Words. "Beza, being an Ecclesiastic, and in Possession of some Benefices, forsook the Church of Rome, at the time when the Parliament summoned him to appear before them, about an extreamly wanton and scandalous Poem *, he had composed; but, knowing himself to be guilty of such great Excess, he answered that August Senate only by his Flight, and retired to Geneva †. To learn what he was, we need no other Witness than himself, having discovered, by the Verses, which he made in Imitation of Catullus and Ovid, that he had given himself up to an enormous and monstrous Lewdness (122), for which reason, his own Fraternity call him The Shame of France, a Simonist, a Man guilty of all Vices, and even of That, which drew Fire from Heaven ‡." This is what The Cardinal says, in the tenth Chapter of the second Book of his Method, pages 321, 322, of the Edition of Paris, 1663. Mr Martel, Professor of Divinity at Montauban, and at Puylaurens, before the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and, since That Revocation, at Bern, opposes the Testimony of Stephen Pasquier against These Words of the Cardinal, and adds, That it is not a Frenchman, who called Beza a Simonist, and a Sodomite. It is Costerus, a Flemish Writer and a Jesuit. I cannot tell by what Rhetorical Figure they pretend to rank him among the Fraternity of our Ministers (123). As for what he says of Costerus, he refers us to the Twenty first Chapter of the second Book of the first Part of Morton's Catholic Apology; where, it is certain, the Latin Words, quoted by the Cardinal, Galliæ probrum, &c. are to be found, as taken from the first Chapter of the third Book of One of Costerus's Works. This Cardinal, or Those, who published his Method, cannot be excused for This false Quotation: They found it necessary, that the Name of a Reformed Writer should appear next to the Galliæ probrum, &c. For, though it should be proved, that Costerus's Words are to be seen in the Writings of the Lutheran Schlusselburgius, it would not justify them; since it is very evident, that That Lutheran cannot pass for one of Beza's Fraternity. As for what remains, it must be confessed, that a Flemish Jesuit was not the First, who charged Beza with such Abominations. Costerus did but transcribe several Frenchmen, and by name, Claudius de Xaintes. A Chronological Mistake of the Cardinal might be taken notice of: He says, in a Marginal Note, that Beza retired to Geneva, in the Year 1554, aged Fifty five Years (124). He should have said, in the Year 1548, being Twenty nine Years of Age.

* It was an Epigram, addressed to a Woman, whose Name was Candida.

† In 1554, being 55 Years of Age.

(122) The Cardinal quotes, in the Margin, some Verses of the Epigram de Audeberto & Candida.

‡ Galliæ probrum, Simoniacus, Sodomita, omnibus vitiis co-opertus.

(123) Martel, Answer to the Method of Cardinal Richelieu, Book ii. chap. 10. p. 186, 187.

(124) It is certainly an Error of the Press for 35, for, in the following Note, Beza's Birth is placed in the Month of June, 1519.

[GG] Peter de St Romuald ridiculously accuses him of Rebellion, in stiling Queen Elizabeth Queen of France.] "This same Year, 1581, says he (125), "Theodore Beza, Minister of Geneva, published his "Book, entituled, Icones Virorum illustrium pietate "& doctrina, which he dedicated to Elizabeth, Queen "of England, stiling her Queen of France. Cer- "tainly, a Frenchman cannot use such Terms, with- "out declaring himself a bad Subject; for it is say- "ing, that the King, his Master, is an Usurper, and "that the Crown does not belong to him, but to ano- "ther. Can This be done in a printed Book, with- "out Felony and Treason? But what better can we "expect from an Heretic?" He has repeated the same Charge, Word for Word, in another Book (126); which proves, that he was thoroughly satisfied with This Remark; which, however, is childish, nonsensical, and superstitious. I excuse him Errors of Fact; such as, that the Icones of Beza came out in 1581, and that they were dedicated to the Queen of England. It was to James, King of Scotland, that the Author dedicated Them, the first of March 1580; and it is the Year 1580, which I find marked in my Copy: But if our Feuillant is to be pardoned for such Mistakes, as These, he cannot be excused the Error of Right, into which he is fallen. I confess, that Beza, in dedicating his Remarks on the New Testament to Queen Elizabeth, gives her the Title of Angliæ, Franciæ, Hiberniæ, & circumjacentium Insularum Regina: but it is absurd to pretend, that This is felonious and treasonable, and that the King of France is thereby determined to be an Usurper. For I. Beza ought not to be considered, at That Time, as a Subject of the King of France: he had renounced his Country for the Sake of his Religion, and had taken Shelter in foreign Lands: he was become a Citizen of Geneva, and actually exercised, there, the Office of Professor, and Minister. II. A Private Person, who, in a Letter, gives Princes the Titles, which they usually assume, does not set himself up as a Judge of their Pretensions; he does but follow the Usage, which he finds established; and, when he complies with the Formulary of Subscriptions, he does not engage himself to examine, whether such or such Titles are justly assumed, or no. I go farther, and say, III. that, even when we doubt whether a Prince has a Right to a Kingdom, we yet observe the Usage of Subscriptions, in an Epistle Dedicatory, or other Letter. Beza, for example, fully persuaded, that Charles IX, and Henry III, lawfully possessed France, yet gives Elizabeth the Titles, which she assumed in England. It is, therefore, the utmost impertinence, to conclude, that he treated the King of France as an Usurper. In the IV, and last, place, I say, that Usage, or Custom, authorizes Those, who give the same Titles to Possessors, and Pretenders, and that the Latter, 'till they have renounced their Titles, and Pretensions, are called Kings, or Lords, of such a Country, at the same time that the actual Possessors are acknowledged as Kings, or Lords, of the same Country. We have, among other Examples, the Conduct, which France observed towards Uladislas King of Poland, and Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden. We were in strict Alliance with the One, and even as King of Sweden; yet we did not scruple to give the other the Title of King of Sweden. Mr le Labourer has inserted, in his Account of Poland (127), a Letter, which was written by the King of France to King Uladislas, the Twenty fourth of November 1645, at the time when there was such strict Friendship between Queen Christina, and France. The Subscription of the Letter is; To the most High, most Excellent, and most Mighty Prince, our dear and well-beloved Cousin, The King of Poland and Sweden. A Spanish Author, who, in dedicating a Book to the most Christian King, stiled him King of France and Navarre, would not, I believe, be called to an Account for it, in a Time of Amity. Nor do I think, the Grand Signior would be such a Turk, as to punish a Greek Bishop, who, in writting to the

(125) Peter de St Romuald, Abrege du Thresor Chronol. Tom. III. pag. 364.

(126) In his Journal Chronologique, under Jan. 13, 1610, the Birth-day of Theod. Beza, as he first wrote, but he is mistaken, and should have said Jun. 24.

(127) Part I, pag. 14.

Digitized by Google

I am ſurprized, that Balzac quarrels with certain anonymous Perſons on the ſame Account [HH].

Duke of Savoy, ſhould call him King of Cyprus, or, in writing to the King of Spain, ſhould ſtile him King of Jeruſalem; and who, in caſe of an Accuſation, ſhould reply, that he had innocently followed the Uſage of Inſcriptions, without intending to derogate, in the leaſt, from the Fidelity, which he owed his Highneſs. Is there any Prince in Chriſtendom, who does not acknowledge Two Kings of Navarre; One in France, and the Other in Spain; the One only titular, the other in actual Poſſeſſion? Does This gives occaſion for Complaints, or Threats? Would an Engliſhman be proſecuted, who, in an Epiſtle Dedicatory to Lewis XIV, ſhould ſtile him King of France, or King of the French, which is the ſame Thing? Are not the Kings of France ſo ſtiled, in England, not only in common Converſation, but even in Hiſtories, and Public Acts?

[HH] I am ſurprized, that Balzac quarrels with ſome anonymous Perſons, on the ſame Account.] I ſhall produce his Words, without refuting them; ſince That is ſufficiently done in the preceding Remark. "Let Thoſe, who have loſt Countries, "flatter themſelves with Thoſe, which They re- "tain. It may ſerve by way Amuſement, or Play- "Thing, formed by the Imagination, after the loſs "of eſſential Things. It would be cruelty to refuſe "their Grief this light Conſolation. Queen Eliza- "beth of England may ſtile herſelf Queen of France, "and the Engliſh may ſpeak the Language of their "Miſtreſs. Let them, if They pleaſe. But I can- "not allow Frenchmen to talk thus. It was well "ſaid by a Frenchman, ſpeaking of King James, "Succeſſor of Elizabeth; He has certainly too much "of a Name, or too little of a Kingdom; and, if "the King of France be at London, whom will he "ſend Embaſſadors to at Paris? However, as it is "every where the Cuſtom to ſpeak improperly, and "as every Thing in the World is a Farce, This may "be allowed among the reſt. But it muſt be plaid "in England, and not in France, or Places un- "der the Protection of France. A Frenchman can- "not uſe ſuch Terms, without forgetting, that he "is a Frenchman, without declaring himſelf a bad "Subject, without ſaying, that the King his Maſter "is an Uſurper. Publickly to degrade his Prince, "to give his Crown to another Prince by a ſolemn "and printed Acknowledgment, can This be done "without the Crime of Felony? I think not, Sir! "and, for fear of putting myſelf farther into a Paſ- "ſion, let us change the Diſcourſe (128)." I fancy he glances at Theodore Beza, and that Peter de St Romuald has only tranſcribed him.

(128) Balzac, Entret. xli. pag. 384, 385.

It will not, perhaps, be improper to remark, that Noel Beda had before had the ſame Quarrel with Eraſmus, on account of the Dedication of One of his Books to the King of England. See the Remark [B] of the Article BEDA, Citation (11).

BIBLIANDER (THEODORUS), Profeſſor of Divinity at Zurich, in the XVIth Century, was born at Biſchoffſſel (a), near St Gal, in Swiſſerland. He was an univerſal Scholar (b); but he excelled chiefly in the Expoſition of the Scripture. He was Profeſſor of Divinity at Zurich, from the Year 1532, to 1560, and died of the Plague in the ſame City, the Twenty fourth of September 1564 (c). If any one aſks, Why his Profeſſorſhip ended before his Life? I anſwer, That it was, becauſe he ſtirred certain Queſtions, which cauſed ſome Diſturbances [A], in which he departed too much from the common Doctrine of the Proteſtants, about Predeſtination. To prevent the Schiſm, which might have ariſen from too long a Conteſt upon Thoſe Points, it was thought proper to declare Bibliander Emeritus; I mean, to treat him as a Veteran, and to give him to underſtand, that his Age, and his long Services, required, that, as a Reward, They ſhould grant him a quiet Life, and an honourable Diſmiſſion. I cannot tell whether he apprehended the true meaning of this Compliment, or whether it vexed him; but I know, that he left off teaching. As he underſtood the Oriental Languages, he ſet about a new Edition of the Koran, the Text of which he corrected according to the Rules of Criticiſm, by comparing the Arabic and Latin Copies together. He added to it the Life of Mahomet, and his Succeſſors, and an Apologetical Preface, which raiſed a great Outcry [B]. He publiſhed ſeveral other

(a) In Latin Epiſcopicella, or Epiſcopocella.

(b) Vir fœcundiſſimi ingenii, & Theologiæ exegeticæ communis in Helvetia parens Hottinger. in Biblioth. Tigurina, pag. 72.

(c) Id. Hottinger. ibid. Thuanus, Bucholcer, Melchior Adam, &c. place his Death on the 26*th of* November.

[A] He ſtirred certain Queſtions, which cauſed ſome Diſturbance.] Pantaleon has not ſpecified Theſe Queſtions; he ſays only, They were little agreeable to the common Opinion, and that Bibliander loſt Part of his Authority upon That Account. Pantaleon ſcribit ante obitum motas ab ipſo fuiſſe quæſtiones quaſdam novas & inſolentes unde auctoritati aliquid deceſſerit, ſed quales illæ fuerint quæſtiones, non addit (1). But Henry Alting has not expreſſed himſelf in general Terms; He ſays, that Bibliander had embraced Eraſmus's Errors concerning Predeſtination, and that, for this Reaſon, Thoſe of Zurich diſcharged him from the Functions of his Office, under Pretence, that his Old-age made him unfit for it, and put Peter Martyr in his Place (2). This latter Fact is not to be conteſted, under Pretence, that Peter Martyr was called to Zurich in the Year 1556, to ſucceed Pelican. He might have been Profeſſor at Zurich for ſome Years, and yet ſucceed Bibliander; for all Profeſſors of Divinity have not the ſame Functions aſſigned them. See, below, the Remark [E], at the end.

(1) Melchior Adam in vit. Theol. pag. 403.

(2) Altingii, Theol. Hiſtor Loc iv. apud Teiſſier, Addit. to Thuan. Tom. I. pag. 255.

[B] He added, to the Verſion of the Koran, an Apologetical Preface, which raiſed a great Outcry.] The Title of it is, Apologia ad reverendiſſimos patres ac dominos, epiſcopos & doctores Eccleſiæ Chriſtianæ, in qua rationes redduntur editionis voluminis quod continet Alcoranum & ejus confutationes, & vitas Mahumetis atque ſucceſſorum ipſius. This Work was printed by Oporin, in the Year 1543, in Folio (3). Bibliander corrected the Text of the Koran, by comparing the Latin and Arabic Manuſcripts together, and made ſome Marginal Notes, which ſhew, or refute, the Abſurdities of That Book. This did not hinder the Spaniſh Inquiſitors from condemning This Edition of the Koran; They condemned not only the Prefaces, but the Koran itſelf (4). This is as clear as the Day; and yet ſome Authors ſay, that They only condemned the impious Prefaces, and the pernicious Notes, which are in Bibliander's Edition. Father Theophilus Raynaud maintains, that the Koran itſelf deſerves to be proſcribed, and ſhews, that Sanctarellus, who ſays, that the Index forbids the reading of it, only becauſe of the Pieces, which Bibliander added to it, argued but weakly (5). I ſet down That Jeſuit's Remark ſomewhat at length, that the Reader may have a more particular Notion of Bibliander's Deſign. We ſhall ſee, that This Miniſter did

(3) Note, that the Preface of Bibliander was printed by itſelf, in the Year 1638, by the Care of John Fabricius of Dantzic.

(4) See the Index librorum prohibitorum, pag. 765, Edit. 1667.

(5) Theoph. Raynaudus, Erotem. de malis & bonis libris. n. 341, pag. 200.

Digitized by Google

other Books [C], and compoſed a great many, which were never printed, the Manuſcripts whereof are kept in the Library of Zurich (d). He had a hand in a Tranſlation of the Scripture (e). I have endeavoured in vain to find out what Age he was of when he died: I give no Credit to Melchior Adam; and I wonder he was not ſenſible of his Error [D]. Moreri relates very ill what he takes from Thuanus, concerning Bibliander [E]. I am

(d) Hottinger in Biblioth. Tigurina, pag. 72, 73.

(e) See Remark [E].

did not think it proper, that the Books of Adverſaries ſhould be deſtroyed. "Tractans hoc punctum "Antonius Sanctarellus Tract. de hæreſi, c. 14. dub. unico, propoſitione 7. ait, Alcoranum per ſe non "prohiberi, ſed ratione ſcholiorum impiorum, notarumque ac præfationum Lutheri ac Melanchtonis, quibus Baſilienſis editio Alcorani, per Theodorum Bibliandrum damnatæ memoriæ ſcriptorum "adornata, contaminatur. Hoc verè & rectè autor "ille. Et addere æquè poterat, ipſius Bibliandri "Apologiam, qua Alcorano patrocinatus eſt, digniſſimam fuiſſe quæ configeretur. Omnium quippè "librorum prohibitorum indemnitati ſtudet meribulus ille, uſque adeò, ut non erubuerit contra "Theodoſii & Valentiniani Imperatorum legem de "comburendis Neſtorii libris grunnire. Hæc igitur "concedo Sanctarello. Sed addit quo everti videantur quæ ſic ſunt conſtituta; addit enim rationem, "cur Alcoranus prohibeatur, eſſe, quia in eo agitur "de Religione nationis, hoc tempore maximè potentis, & ad corporum voluptates patentiſſimum "oſtium aperientis; quæ ſunt valida corruptelæ illectamenta. Hæc, inquam, ratio monſtrare videtur, Alcoranum non vetari tantùm ratione impiarum Bibliandri annotationum, vel ratione Præfationum Lutheri ac Melanchtonis, ſed per ſe ac "ratione contextus ipſiuſmet Alcorani, quo Apoſtaſiæ hami, quos diximus, apponuntur (6). - - - - - (6) Id. ibid. n. 342, pag. 201.
"Antonius Sanctarellus, handling This Point, in his "Treatiſe of Hereſy, chap. 14. Prop. 7. ſays, that "the Koran is not prohibited on it's own Account, "but by reaſon of the impious Scholia, Notes, and "Prefaces, of Luther and Melanchthon, which de"file the Baſil Edition of the Koran, by Theodore "Bibliander of accurſed Memory. This is juſtly and "truly obſerved by This Author. And he might, "with equal Juſtice, have added, that the Apology "of Bibliander himſelf, in which he patronizes the "Koran, was moſt worthy of Cenſure. For This Sot "pleads for the Indemnity of all prohibited Books, "ſo far as impudently to arraign the Edict of the Em"perors Theodoſius and Valentinian for the burning "of Neſtorius's Books. Thus far, then, Sanctarellus "is right. But he adds, what ſeems to overthrow "This Determination. For he adds, that the Reaſon, "why the Koran is prohibited, is, becauſe it treats "of the Religion of a Country, at This Time very "powerful, and which opens a wide Door to corpo"real Pleaſures, the Source of all Corruption. This "Reaſon, I ſay, ſeems to prove, that the Koran is "not only forbidden on account of the impious Anno"tations of Bibliander, or the Prefaces of Luther "and Melanchthon, but on it's own Account, on Ac"count of the very Text of the Koran, on which "The Hooks of Apoſtacy, which I have ſpoken of, "hang."

[C] He publiſhed ſeveral other Books.] Here are the Titles of ſome of Them: Evangelica Hiſtoria, quam ſcripſit B. Marcus, &c. una cum vita Johannis Marci Evangeliſtæ collecta ex probatioribus auctoribus, at Baſil, 1551. He added to it the Protevangelium Jacobi, for which he was cenſured. Expoſitio vaticinii de reſtitutione Iſraëlis, de inſtauranda urbe Jeruſalem & Templo, terraque dividenda rurſus in tribus, quod ultimis octo capitibus Ezechielis legitur. This Work was inſerted in the Commentaries of Pelican on the Scripture. Purgatio ſcriptorum Joannis Oecolampadii, & Ulrici Zuinglii, qua & acta eorum obiter defenduntur contra calumniatores. This Piece was printed before Zuinglius's Works. De fatis Monarchiæ Romanæ ſomnium Vaticinium Eſræ Prophetæ explicatum non conjectatione privata, ſed demonſtratione Theologica, Hiſtorica & Mathematica. Ad Julium III Papam & cæteros Eccleſiæ Romanæ præſides conſideratio de Judæorum & Chriſtianorum defectione à Chriſto, & Eccleſia & fide Catholica: itemque de Judæorum & Chriſtianorum converſione ad Chriſtum Jeſum, & Eccleſiam Dei ſanctam & fidem Catholicam, at Baſil 1553. De ſumma Trinitate & fide Catholica, at Baſil 1555. De myſteriis ſalutiferæ paſſionis, & mortis Jeſu Meſſiæ expoſitionis hiſtoricæ, libri tres, in the ſame Place, 1555.

[D] I wonder Melchior Adam was not ſenſible of his Error.] He affirms, that Bibliander was born in the Year 1514 (7), and that, at laſt, he died very old, in the Year 1564, valde ſenex. Can this be ſaid of a Man of fifty Years of Age? He adds, that his poring too much on Books had ſo weakened his Sight, that, coming one Morning into his Stove, in his declining Age, and ſeeing his Cat playing on a Table, he took her to be his Maid, and bid her good-morrow. "Ex nimiis ſtudiis ætate declivi "ἀμβλυωπίαν contraxit. Accidit ergo ut aliquando, "cum diluculo ſurrexiſſet, hypocauſtum ingreſſus "feli in menſa geſticulanti, ancillam ſuam eſſe ratus, "fauſtum fuerit diem precatus, quem ſelis, ut po"tuit, reſalutavit." A fine Circumſtance, and moſt worthy to be tranſmitted to future Ages?

(7) If this were ſo, it would have been obſerved, as ſomething very extraordinary, that he had been made Profeſſor of Divinity in the Year 1532; but no one obſerves it.

[E] Moreri relates very ill what he borrows from Thuanus.] I. It is not true, that Thuanus places Bibliander's Death on the Twenty ninth of November: He makes uſe of this Expreſſion; VI Kalend. Decembris; which ſignifies the Twenty ſixth of November. II. It is true, that he ſpeaks of Leo the Jew. He made uſe of theſe Words, Leo Judæ, which muſt be tranſlated Leo Juda, or Leo of Juda. But it is very true, that Bibliander was One of Thoſe, who put the laſt Hand to the Bible of Leo Juda, to That Bible, which is called the Zurich Bible, and which was printed in That City in the Year 1543. Leo Juda had advanced very far in the Latin Tranſlation of the Scripture when he died; and he made his Colleagues promiſe, that they would finiſh This Work. Quem Leo Judæ inchoaverat, & moriens ut opus perſequeretur Collegis in fidem religioſe adactis tranſcripſerat (8). Bibliander tranſlated the laſt eight Chapters of Ezekiel, Danile, Job, Eccleſiaſtes, the Songs of Songs, and the Forty eight Pſalms, which remained to be tranſlated. Peter Cholin made the Tranſlation of the Greek Books, which the Proteſtants call Apocrypha (9). It is of Cholin only, that Thuanus ſays, he underſtood the Greek Tongue very well. Bibliander Chunredi Pellicani & Petri Cholini Tugienſis Græcæ linguæ peritiſſimi opera adjutus. Moreri does not tranſlate This well by Theſe Words; Bibliander, aſſiſted by Conrad Pelican, and by Peter Cholin, two learned Men in the Greek Tongue. This is his third Fault. The fourth is much more conſiderable. A long time after, ſays he, the Spaniſh Divines cauſed This Bible of Zurich to be reprinted at Lyons, having been reviſed by William Roville (10). Here are Thuanus's Latin Words; Hiſpani Theologi diu poſt recognitam per Gulielmum Rouillium denuo Lugduni excudendam curaverunt. William Roville is the Printer of Lyons, whom Thoſe Divines employed; but it was not He, who reviſed the Tranſlation, but the Spaniſh Divines themſelves. Father Simon makes no mention of This Edition of Lyons; He ſays, that the Divines of Salamanca cauſed This Bible to be reprinted in fair Characters at Salamanca, and made very ſmall Alterations in it (11). It is no wonder, that honeſt Mr du Rier, of the French Academy, has ill tranſlated Cicero, Seneca, and Livy, ſince he has committed ſo many Faults in tranſlating Thuanus. For Moreri does but tranſcribe du Rier's Tranſlation in This Place. As for what Thuanus ſays, that John Stuckius was put in Bibliander's Place, This neither agrees with Alting, who ſays, that Peter Martyr ſucceeded Bibliander; nor with Hottinger, who ſays, that Joſias Simler ſucceeded him for a time (12); and that Stuckius, having been ſome time the Subſtitute of James Ammien, Profeſſor of Rhetoric, and Logic, was ordinary Profeſſor of Divinity, from the Year 1571, to the Year 1607 (13). It is certain,

(8) Thuan. lib. xxxvi, pag. 726.

(9) Simon, Hiſt. Critique du Vieux Teſt. pag. 324.

(10) In the Elzevirs publiſhed by Mr Teiſſier, there is Rauville.

(11) Simon, ubi ſupra, pag. 323.

(12) Rudedonatus, lampadem ad tempus vicariam tradidit D. Joſiæ Simlero. Hottinger. in Biblioth. Tigur. pag. 72.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 169.

Digitized by Google

I am juſt informed (f), that it is found, in the Proſopography of Pantaleon, that he lived ſixty Years [F], being born in 1504, and dying in 1564.

(f) By Mr Breſler.

tain, that, when Bibliander reſigned his Profeſſorſhip, Stuckius, a young Man of eighteen Years of Age, was, then, in France (14). He was at Paris the Year following, where he received a Commiſſion to join with Peter Martyr in the Conference of Poiſſi. He continued a long time in France; afterwards he went into Italy; and he did not begin to have any Academical Offices at Zurich, before the Year 1568. Nevertheleſs, it is affirmed, in his Life, that he ſucceeded Bibliander in the Office of Profeſſor of the Old Teſtament (15). This was in the Month of February, 1571. Bibliander had been dead a long Time. No matter for That; his Office continued vacant many Years: There are many Examples of This. Thuanus is not ſo exact in This Point, as he ſhould have been; for all his Readers will believe, that Stuckius was made Profeſſor of Divinity in the Year 1564. He ſhould have told us, what Year Stuckius had This Profeſſorſhip conferred upon him.

(14) Melch. Adam. in vitis Theol. pag. 767.

(15) Ibid. pag. 770.

[F] That he lived Sixty Years.] This we find in the German Edition of the Proſopographia (16), not in the Latin Edition (17) where we ſee on the contrary, that he died in the Year 1560, being about fifty Years old. Pantaleon diſcovered this Error, and corrected it in the German Edition.

(16) Printed at Baſil, for Leonard Oſſen, 1578, in Folio.

(17) Printed at Baſil, for Nicolas Brylinger, 1566, in Fol.

The End of the First VOLUME.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google