[A] There are ſo many Abſurdities in the Work.] We find there, "That, as ſoon as the Virgin was "born, the Almighty order'd the Angels to carry the "lovely Child into the Empyreal Heaven, which "they did ſeveral times; that God appointed an "hundred out of each of the nine Choirs of Angels, "that is to ſay nine hundred, to ſerve her: And that "he appointed twelve others to ſerve her in a viſible "and corporeal Form, and eighteen more of the "higheſt Rank of thoſe, who deſcended on Jacob's "Ladder, to carry Embaſſies from the Queen to "the great King: That, to regulate this invincible "Squadron the better, Michael, Captain of the "heavenly Militia, was plac'd at the Head of it: "That the firſt Conception of the Body of the moſt "Holy Virgin was on a Sunday, correſpondent to "that of the Creation of Angels: That if the Virgin "did not ſpeak as ſoon as ſhe was born, it was not "becauſe ſhe could not, but becauſe ſhe would not: "That before ſhe was three Years of Age, ſhe ſwept "the Houſe, and the Angels aſſiſted her, &c. There "are I know not how many ſuch like Extravagancies "in it." This is the Extract, which a Proteſtant Journaliſt gave of it (1). Another Journaliſt, who is a good Catholic, aſſures us (2), that nothing is to be found in the ſix firſt Chapters, but Viſions, by which Siſter Mary of Jeſus ſays, That God diſcover'd the Myſteries of the Holy Virgin to her, and the Decree he had made of creating all things. —— That, in the twentieth Chapter (3), She gives an Account of what happen'd to the Holy Virgin in the Womb of St Anne; that ſhe comes afterwards to the Birth of the Holy Virgin, to the Name which was given her, to the Angels, who were commiſſion'd to guard her, to the Employments of the firſt eighteen Months of her Childhood, to the Converſation ſhe had with God at the end of thoſe eighteen Months, to her Converſations with St Joachim, and St Anne, and to the holy Exerciſe, wherein ſhe employ'd herſelf, 'till ſhe was carried to the Temple of Jeruſalem. If any one imagines, that, among ſo many Viſions, there is nothing relating to St John's Revelations, he will be greatly miſtaken; for our Viſionary, not ſatisfy'd with explaining the twelfth Chapter of the Revelations, has enlarg'd very much on the twenty firſt, which ſhe expounds of the Conception of the Holy Virgin (4). It would be very ſurprizing indeed, if, in ſailing ſo long upon ſuch a Sea, ſhe ſhould never daſh upon this Rock. If you deſire to know the Title of her Work, in the Tranſlation of Thomas Croſet, read what follows. The myſtical City of God, Miracle of the Almighty, Abyſs of Grace, divine Hiſtory of the Life of the moſt holy Virgin Mary, Mother of God, our Queen and Miſtreſs, manifeſted, in theſe laſt Ages, by the Holy Virgin to Siſter Mary of Jeſus, Abbeſs of the Convent of the Immaculate Conception of the City of Agreda, of the Order of St Francis, and written by the ſame Siſter, by Order of her Superiors, and Confeſſors.

(1) Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Nov. 1696. pag. 140, 141.

(2) Journal of the Learned, of Jan. 16th 1696. pag. 52.

(3) Ibid. pag. 53.

(4) Ibid.

[B] The Faculty of Divinity at Paris, judg'd it proper to cenſure it.] I have met with the Cenſure, which they publiſhed, only in the Journal of the Learned, wherein I find. I. That the ſixth Propoſition imports, That God gave the Holy Virgin all that he would, and would give her all that he could, and could give her all that was not of the Eſſence of God (5). II. That the ſeventh Propoſition, is conceived in theſe Terms. "I declare, by the Force of Truth, "and of the Light, in which I ſee all theſe ineſ- "fable Myſteries, that all the Privileges, the Graces, "the Prerogatives, the Favours, and the Gifts of the "moſt pure Mary, comprehending the Dignity of "the Mother of God in it, depend and take their "Original from her having been Immaculate, and "full of Grace, in her Conception, inſomuch that, "without that Privilege, all the reſt would appear "faulty, or like a ſtately Building without a ſolid and "proportionable Foundation (6). That the ninth "Propoſition applys literally to the Holy Virgin, the "Words of the eighth Chapter of Proverbs, and in- "ſinuates, that by her Kings are raiſed and ſupport- "ed on the Throne, Princes command, and the "Rulers of the Earth adminiſter Juſtice (7). IV. That "the thirteenth Propoſition is, that if Mens Eyes "were penetrating enough to ſee the Light of the "Holy Virgin, it would ſuffice to conduct them to "a bleſſed Eternity. V. That, beſides theſe Propo- "ſitions, ſeveral others are compriz'd under the four- "teeth Article, and which are reſpectively condemn- "ed as raſh, contrary to the Wiſdom of the Rules, "which the Church preſcribes; to which is added, "that moſt of them are like the Fables and Ravings "of apocryphal Authors, and expoſe the Catholic Re- "ligion to the Contempt of impious Men and of He- "retics (9). VI. That finally the Faculty declares, "that it does not pretend to approve ſeveral other "things contain'd in the Book, and chiefly the Paſ- "ſages, where the Author wreſts the Text of Scrip- "ture, in applying it to her own Senſe, and thoſe "wherein ſhe affirms, that ſome Opinions, which "are meerly Scholaſtic, were reveal'd to her." Let us make a few Reflexions upon this.

(5) Ibid. of Nov. 26. 1696. pag. 717.

(6) Ibid.

(7) Ibid. pag. 718.

(8) Ibid. pag. 719.

(9) Ibid. pag. 720.

In the firſt Place, the School-men unanimouſly teach, that the diſtinct Character of God, and of his Creatures is, that God has nothing which comes from without, and that the Creatures have nothing, but what proceeds from without. This is what they expreſs by the barbarous Words aſeitas, and abalicitas; from whence they conclude, that all the Attributes of God are communicable to the Creature, except the Aſeitas; and, conſequently, that it is poſſible for a Creature to be eternal, à parte ante, & à parte poſt (10), and infinite as to Knowledge, Power, local Preſence, Goodneſs, Juſtice, &c. They commonly teach, that, by Power Obediential, Creatures are ſuſceptible of the Faculty of working all ſorts of Miracles, and alſo of creative Power. So that, if God did effectually confer on the Holy Virgin all that he could confer upon her, it follows, according to the Doctrines of the School, which Siſter Mary of Jeſus eſteemed much, that the Holy Virgin exiſted from Eternity, that ſhe can do all things, that ſhe knows all things, that ſhe fills all Places, and that ſhe is infinite

(10) That is, That it may neither have Beginning nor End.

Digitized by Google

in ſpite of the Oppoſition, and terrible Outcry of ſome of the Doctors of that Society [C]. How juſt ſoever the Cenſure was, it gave Offence to a great Number of Perſons. It is thought that the Apprehenſions of the Scandal it might cauſe obliged the Company finite in every reſpect. I need not ſuppoſe, that our Abbeſs of Agreda followed the Doctrine of the Spaniſh Schoolmen; for I am not concern'd whether ſhe knew, or was ignorant of it. She teaches plainly, that God gave the Holy Virgin all that he could give her, and that he could give her all his Attributes, except the divine Eſſence itſelf. This juſtifies the Concluſion, which I have drawn: Upon which, we may very well wonder, that the Sorbonne ſhould only ſay, That this Propoſition is falſe, raſh, and contrary to the Doctrine of the Goſpel (11). Is ſuch a Cenſure ſevere enough? Ought they to have been contented with ſuch weak Appellations? Is it enough to affirm, that it was a raſh Miſtake, to apply to the Virgin Mary, in a literal Senſe, theſe Words of Solomon, By me Kings reign, and Princes decree Juſtice (12).

(11) Journal of the Learned, Nov. 1696. pag. 717.

(12) Ibid. pag. 718.

My ſecond Reflexion is this. They who have carefully examin'd all that has been ſaid of the Power of the Holy Virgin, and the Share which is given her in the Government of the Univerſe, have obſerved, that the laſt Comers, deſirous to ſurpaſs thoſe, who have gone before them, have been the Cauſe, that at laſt the utmoſt Bounds of Flattery have been found out. But, as the Reaſons for continuing to proceed farther have never ceas'd (for when the Devotion of the People is to be a Maintenance for many Perſons, who deſire to live at their Eaſe, it muſt be quicken'd and reviv'd from time to time with new invented Incitements) I ſay, conſidering this, there is reaſon to wonder that the Barriers have not been broke, and that, among ſo many Monks and Nuns, who have been ſuch great Refiners, no one has yet ſaid, that the Holy Virgin governs the World alone. How comes it to paſs, that Spain has not yet produc'd Writers, who have pretended to diſcover by Revelation, that a long Experience having convinc'd God the Father of the infinite Capacity of the Holy Virgin, and the good Uſe ſhe has made of the Power, wherewith he had inveſted her, had reſolv'd to abdicate the Empire of the World; and that God the Son, believing he could not follow a better Example, had embrac'd the ſame Reſolution, and that the Holy Ghoſt, always obedient to the Will of the two Perſons, from whom he proceeds, approving this fine Deſign, the whole Trinity had committed the Government of the World to the Hands of the Holy Virgin; and that the Ceremony of the Abdication, and That of the Tranſlation of the Empire had been ſolemnly perform'd in the Preſence of all the Angels; that an Act of it had been drawn up in the moſt authentic Form; that, ſince that Day, God concerns himſelf with nothing, and relies altogether on the Vigilancy of Mary; that Orders were given to ſeveral Angels, to notify this Alteration of Government upon Earth, that Men might know to whom, and in what Manner, they ought to have recourſe for the future, in their Prayers; that it was no longer to God, ſince he had declar'd himſelf emeritus, & rude donatus, nor to the Holy Virgin, as to a Mediatreſs, or a ſubordinate Queen, but as the Sovereign and abſolute Empreſs of all things? Once more; how comes it to paſs, that ſuch an Extravagancy is yet to be brought forth? I was ask'd once, if I had never heard of ſuch a Conceit? No, reply'd I, but I would not ſwear, that this Thought has never appear'd, and yet leſs, that it will never be hatch'd in a Brain, ſick with Devotion; and, perhaps, if Mary d'Agreda had liv'd ten Years longer, ſhe would have brought forth this Monſter (13), and given us a Copy of the Act of Abdication; wherein we ſhould have ſeen, that the Trinity, willing to live henceforth a quiet Life, and acknowledge their Obligations to the Holy Virgin, who for many Ages has ſo wiſely born a conſiderable Share of the Fatigues of the Regency of the World, thought they could do nothing more proper, nor pitch upon a Reward more ſuitable to her, than to diveſt themſelves, in her Favour, of their abſolute Authority over all things. Yet it muſt be confeſs'd, that the Idea of the unalienable Action of God is ſo clearly underſtood in all the Chriſtian Communions, that there is no Reaſon to apprehend that this Monſter of Abdication could live any time, ſuppoſing it could be produc'd. We ought not to fear it in our Days: Let this ſatisfy us; nor let us trouble ourſelves with what may come to paſs an hundred Years hence; noſtros maneat ea cura nepotes. Let Poſterity look to that.

(13) As ſhe conſtantly perverted the Scripture, (ſee the Journal of the Learned, ibid. p. 720.) ſhe would not have failed to take advantage of what is ſaid in St John chap. v. ver. 22. The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son. And in 1 Cor. xv. 24. When Chriſt ſhall have delivered up the Kingdom to God even the Father.

I obſerve, in the third Place, that there is nothing more true, than the Remarks of the Sorbonne, that the Book of the Abbeſs of Agreda contains ſeveral things, which expoſe the Church of Rome to the Contempt of Impious Men, and of Heretics. It was well for the Chriſtian Religion, that the Celſus's and Porphyry's of thoſe times had it not in their Power to attack it with ſuch Weapons, as theſe Books, infinite in Number, can furniſh at preſent. What would not a Pagan Author have objected to the Church in thoſe Times, who ſhould have had the Heat and the Character of Arnobius? If Henry Stephens, and Philip de Marnix, were to return into the World, what Supplements would they not make, by the help of the Myſtical City of our Mary of Agreda, the one to his Apology for Herodotus, and the other to his Deſcription of the Differences in Matters of Religion?

IV. Laſtly, I remark, that our pretended inſpired Authors endeavour to impoſe upon Mankind. They give us for Revelation, what they have learn'd by reading. For does not the Abbeſs of Agreda affirm, That ſome Opinions, which are meerly Scholaſtic, were taught her by Inſpiration (14)?

(14) Journal of the Learned, Nov. 1696. pag. 720.

[C] In ſpite of the Oppoſition —— of ſome of the Doctors of that Society.] The following are Extracts from a Printed Book, entituled, The Caſe of Mary d'Agreda, and the Manner how her Condemnation was plotted in the Sorbonne (15). It is a Letter from an anonymous Author, to an anonymous Perſon. " The Odour of Sanctity, in which this good Reli" gious died, and the Canonization which is ſollicited
" at the Court of Rome, gave me ſuch an high Idea
" of her Perſon, that I was ſurpriz'd to hear that
" the Faculty of Divinity, at Paris, had met to con" demn her Works." Theſe are the Authors Words (16). Afterwards he ſuppoſes, " That they were
" ſome mercenary Souls, who at the Sollicitation of
" of three Prelates, to whom they were devoted,
" purſued the Condemnation of them (17). The " whole Intrigue, continued he (18), is as follows. My " Lord Biſhop, being more addicted to the Opini" ons of St Thomas, than a young Jacobin, who " ought only to ſwear in verba magiſtri, could not " bear that the Faculty ſhould, with ſo much Preci" pitation, give into the immaculate Conception of " the Virgin. The hatred he bore to Brother Thomas
" Croſet, a Recollect, and Tranſlator of that Book,
" occaſion'd by the Report which was ſpread of what
" the Tranſlator had ſaid againſt him, upon his re-
" fuſing him a Benefice in his Dioceſs, and the De-
" ſire of indemnifying A—— the King's Printer, for
" the conſiderable Loſs he had ſuſtain'd by his Works,
" and who had made uſe of the Impreſſion of this " Book, printed by H——, at Marſeilles, were the " Foundation of the Commotions among the Facul" ty; for the ready way to make a Book ſell well
" is to get it condemn'd. Every body runs to it, as
" to a Houſe on fire, and the Book, which was worth
" but twenty Pence, A—— ſells for ten Livres, be-
" ſides what is ſold under hand of a pirated Impreſ-
" ſion. This Prelate, to ſucceed the better in his
" Deſign, prepoſſeſs'd my Lord  one of the moſt
" moderate Prelates in the Kingdom: both join'd
" with my Lord †††††† a Man of a very mean Ge" nius, who may be eaſily prejudic'd, and who is " fond of Ceremonies and Triſles; you muſt know
" that theſe Lords go hand in hand. This Trumvi-
" rate influenc'd their Creatures, and gain'd Mr le
" Fevre, Syndic of the Sorbonne, who preſented
" the Book of Mary d'Agreda to the Faculty, on " the 20th of May. Deputies were appointed to " examine it. They reported ſixty eight Propoſi-
" tions (19), which they call'd heretical, raſh, ſcan-
" dalous, and offenſive to chaſte Ears. They were " printed, as qualified by the Deputies, and diſtribu-
" ted among the Doctors (20), that they might give " their Opinions of them, in the next Aſſembly (21).
" Father Meron, a Cordelier, of whom we have ſome
" fine Performances, both in Philoſophy and Chro-
" nology, deſired the Faculty not to be too haſty in " condemning

(15) Tho' it was ſaid in the Title, that it was printed at Cologne, in 1697; I believe it was printed at Paris. It is a Book in 12mo of 40 Pages.

(16) Page 3.

(17) Page 12.

(18) Page 13, &c.

(19) In the Aſſembly of the 2d of July, ibid. pag. 28.

(20) Ibid. pag. 29.

(21) Which was to meet on the 14th of the ſame Month.

Digitized by Google

Company to insert a Declaration in their Act [D], which otherwise would have been very superfluous; since the Question did not relate to the Things specified in the Declaration. We must not forget that the Father of Mary d'Agreda became a Monk in a Monastery of the Order of St Francis, wherein two of his Sons had already entered themselves Fryars, and that he lived there a very exemplary Life, and died a Saint (e). Much less ought we to forget, that great Interest has been made at Rome to procure the Canonization of Mary d'Agreda. See the beginning of the Remark [C].

(e) Journal of the Learned, Feb. 16. 1696. p. 51.

" condemning a Book, which the sovereign Pontiff " had reserv'd the Cognisance of to himself, and " had deputed Cardinals, who were at that time " examining it (22). —— The Cabal were enrag'd " at him, and he was obliged to declare, that, if they " proceeded, without regarding his Remonstrance, " he appeal'd from all that was done against the " Book to the Pope. He declares, however, That " if this Appeal injur'd the Rights of the Gallican " Church in any manner, he would desist from it " (23). From that Day, 'till the meeting of the As- " sembly, there was nothing but caballing. The " Day of the Assembly being come, Mess. du Saussoy " and Gobillon condemn'd the Book (24). —— " But " Monsr. le Caron pretended there was nothing in it, " which deserv'd to be censured; which he support- " ed with good Reasons. Each of them had his Par- " tizans, who appear'd in twenty nine successive As- " semblies. The Syndic gave those of Monsr. le Ca- " ron's Party the Name of Agredians, a Name which " they still retain." The Affair was terminated the seventeenth of September. " There was such a Noise " in the Hall of the Assembly, that it seem'd like a " Market (25). —— The next Day Mess. du Flos and " and du Mas, formerly Counsellors in the Parlia- " ment of Paris, protested against the Validity of the " Censure, and caused their Protest to be notify'd to " the Dean and Syndic of the Faculty, which is still " in Force, they not having retracted it by any Act " (26). Some time after, the Syndic and the Depu- " ties assembled again, and procur'd another Censure " —— which was read the first of October; but, be- " fore the reading, the Syndic declar'd to the Fa- " culty the Opposition which was signify'd to him by " those two Gentlemen. He said moreover, that " my Lord of Paris having caus'd them to come " to his Palace, had convinc'd them by such good " Reasons, that the Abbot du Mas yielded to them, " and that he was sure that when Monsr. du Flos should " hear the reading of the Censure, as it was drawn " up, he would assent to it. The Work of the Syn- " dic was read, and they were surpriz'd that there " were new and censur'd Propositions in it, which " they had not heard of in the Faculty, and that they " had retrench'd several of the condemned ones (27)."

(22) Ibid. pag. 30.

(23) Case of Mary d'Agreda, p. 31.

(24) Ibid. pag. 35, 36.

(25) Ibid. pag. 37.

(26) Ibid. pag. 38.

(27) Ibid. pag. 39.

My Readers may judge as they please of these Extracts.

(28) Journal of the Learned, Nov. 1696. pag. 716, 717.

[D] That the Apprehensions of the Scandal it might cause obliged the Company to insert a Declaration in their Act.] They protested in the most solemn manner, " That by this Censure they had no Design " to diminish any thing of the lawful Worship, which " the Catholic Church pays to the Holy Virgin; " that they honour'd her as the Mother of God; that " they had a particular Confidence in her Interces- " sion; that they held the Sentiments of their Fa- " thers, concerning the immaculate Conception, and " that they believed her Assumption into Heaven, " both in Body and in Soul (28)." The Author of the Letter, of which we have produc'd some Extracts in the foregoing Remark, says, That the Censure, wherein they acknowlege the Conception and the Assumption of the Virgin, was made by the Syndic and the Deputies, after the Body of the Faculty had finish'd the Judgment (29). This shews that they had not the Courage to publish the Censure of the Faculty, without qualifying it; and we may judge from thence, to what Dangers they expose themselves, who disapprove the most palpable Errors, which magnify the Honours of the Holy Virgin. They not only expose themselves to the Indignation of the People, but also to that of the Monks, and of many other Ecclesiastics: Whence they endeavour to ward off the Blow by studied Prefaces (30). What Servitude! and what a Proof that the Disease is incurable! What Livy said of the Republic of Rome, agrees at present with the Church of that Name. " Labente " deinde paulatim disciplinâ, velut desidentes primo " mores sequatur animo: deinde ut magis magisque " lapsi sint, tum ire cæperint præcipites, donec ad " hæc tempora, quibus nec vitia nostra nec remedia " pati possumus, perventum est (31). —— We may " trace the Decay of their Morals, from the first Re- " laxation of Discipline, through the several Stages " of Degeneracy, to the present times, in which we can " neither bear our Vices, nor their Remedies." The Work of Mary d'Agreda, is evidently full of Fables, and absurd Doctrines; yet, because it favours the false Ideas which People will entertain of the high Dignity, and unlimited Power of the Holy Virgin, all kind of Machines must be set at work to get it censur'd at Paris. The Author of the Letter (32) does more harm to his Church and Nation than he apprehends, when he recounts the Cabals, which were made use of by those, who wanted to have the Mystical City of the Spanish Abbess censured. There would have been no need of caballing, if the Minds of the People had not been strangely obstinate: Nor need they have had recourse to Softenings. The Censure would have pass'd, and no one would have murmur'd at it. All the Courts of the Inquisition would have prevented the Faculty of Divinity of Paris; whereas they have all remain'd silent hitherto, if I am not mistaken; though they are so ready to condemn all Works, which oppose ever so little the most doubtful Traditions, if they favour the Worship of the Saints (33).

(30) Note, that, in relation to the Votaries, those two Verses of Boileau have been apply'd.

Un Auteur à genoux dans une humble Preface, au Lecteur qu'il ennuie a beau demander grace.

An Author on his Knees, in an humble Preface, does well to beg pardon of the Reader, whom he is going to torture.

(31) Livius, lib. 1. init.

(32) The Title of it is at the beginning of the Remark [C].

(33) The Acta Sanctorum of the Jesuits of Antwerp have been condemn'd by the Inquisition of Toledo.

Note, That there is a particular Reason, which may oblige the Sorbonne to be cautious, and expose them to the Oppositions of many Doctors: Which is, that so many Consequences have been drawn from the Epithet Mother of God, that there is scarce any extravagant Opinion concerning the Excellence and Power of the Virgin, but what may be maintained in some Measure by Arguments ad hominem, which those Consequences afford. Your Adversaries lead you by Degrees where they please; you are undone by the Subtilties of the Schoolmen: If you retreat, you stand convicted of denying Consequences; from whence it happens, that those, who pretend to argue consequentially, and to favour the popular Devotion at the same time, chuse rather to advance still farther, than to retreat. And yet their System is not regular. The Divinity of Mary, in the literal Sense, is wanting to it: since the Mother of God ought to be a Goddess of course, and of the self-same Nature with her Son. And she would be so, if they would adopt the Imagination of the Cavalier Borri (34), but it has been condemned. Perhaps a time will come when they will find the Necessity of it, and by that means square this irregular Figure. It is thought that many wish for it.

(34) See the Article BORRI.

—— O si Angulus ille
Proximus accedat, qui nunc deformat Agellum (35).

(35) Horat. Sat. 6. lib. 2. ver. 8.

—— Oh! that the Gods would yeild
That Nook, which spoils the Figure of my Field.

CREECH.

Such a thing might be done in certain Circumstances, if there was a Combination of temporal and spiritual Interests. Every thing passes, when Princes concur with the Heads of an Ecclesiastical Party, during certain Dispositions of general Affairs.

Let us conclude with observing, that, if the Faculty of Divinity of Paris were in hopes that their Censure would remove a Stumbling-Block out of the way of those, who are called the New Re-united, they were deceived; for the Opposition they were forced to encounter with in their own Body, and the Discontent which broke out after the Publication of the Censure, have much more scandalized the Re-united, than the Censure could have Edified them. Besides that, what gives them the greatest Offence remains entire in the Preface to the Censure; a Preface, which is a Signal of the Continuation of a Capital Controverſy, I mean, in relation to a Worſhip, whoſe Exceſſes have excited ſome curious Perſons to philoſophize, in order to diſcover the Original of it (36). (36) See the Remark [N] of the Artic. NESTORIUS.

Digitized by Google

AGRICOLA almoſt an infinite number of Authors bear this Name, but as there are but three or four of conſiderable note, I ſhall only take Notice of them.

AGRICOLA (GEORGE) a German Phyſician, excelled in the Knowledge of Metals. He was born at Glaucha, in Miſnia, on the Twenty fourth of March, 1494. The Diſcoveries he made in the Mountains of Bohemia, after his Travels in Italy, ſo ſtrongly inclined him to go to the Bottom of the Metallic Science, that when, by the advice of his Friends, he had engaged himſelf in the Practice of Phyſic at Joachimſtal (a), he employed as much time as he could in the Study of Foſſils. To ſatisfy this Paſſion the better, he retired to Chemnits, where he gave himſelf up wholly to this Study. He ſpent there not only the Penſion, which was obtained for him from Maurice Duke of Saxony, but alſo part of his own Eſtate; inſomuch that he got much more Glory by his Labours, than Profit. He compoſed many Works on the Subject he had moſt at Heart, and ſome others on Miſcellaneous Subjects [A]. He examined what Budæus, Leonard Portius, and Alciatus, had obſerved concerning Weights and Meaſures, and found them greatly miſtaken. Alciatus undertook to to defend himſelf, but he was foiled in the Argument. Bodin maintains, that, in Compariſon of Agricola, Ariſtotle and Pliny ſaw very little into the Metallic Science (b). It muſt not be forgot, that, when Duke Maurice, and Duke Auguſtus marched to join the Army of Charles the Vth in Bohemia, Agricola followed them, to ſhew his Fidelity, though he was obliged to abandon the Care of his Eſtate, his Children, and his Wife, who was with Child (c). He died a very good Papiſt at Chemnits on the Twenty firſt of November, 1555. The Zeal, with which he oppoſed the Proteſtant Doctrine in his latter Days, to which he ſeemed not much averſe at firſt [B], rendered him ſo odious to the Lutherans, that they let him lie five days unburied [C]. They

(a) That is, The Valley of Joachim. It is a City of Miſnia.

(b) Bodin, in Method. Hiſtor. See in Sir Tho. Pope Blount his Cenſura celebr. Authorum, pag. 413. a great number of very honourable Elogies of Agricola.

(c) Uxore prægnante cum dulciſſimis liberis domi relicta, fortunis etiam omnibus poſthabitis, cum juſurandum, quo eis erat devinctus, nullo modo negligendum putaret, in exercitu eorum penè ſenex militavit. Melch. Adam. Vit. Medic. pag. 79.

[A] Many Works on the Subject he had moſt at Heart, and ſome others on miſcellaneous Subjects.] The Titles of ſome of them are as follows. De ortu & cauſis ſubterraneorum (Of the Origin and Cauſes of Subterraneous Things). De natura eorum quæ effluunt ex terra (Of the Nature of thoſe things, which flow out of the Earth). De natura foſſilium (Of the Nature of Foſſils). De medicatis fontibus (Of medicinal Springs). De ſubterraneis animantibus (Of Subterraneous Animals). De veteribus & novis metallis (Of old and new Metals). De Re metallica (Of the Metallic Science). I look upon his Speech De bello Turcis inferendo (1) (Of making War upon the Turks), to be a Political Work; his Treatiſe De traditionibus Apoſtolicis (Of Apoſtolical Traditions), a Controverſial Piece; and his Treatiſe De Peſte (Of the Plague), a Phyſical Diſſertation. Melchior Adam does not know whether theſe two laſt Works were ever printed; I am alſo ignorant of it, as to the Treatiſe of Controverſy, but I know that the other appeared at Baſil in the Year 1554. and that it was ſince twice printed before Melchior Adam publiſhed his Book. See Merklinus in his Lindenius renovatus.

(1) Printed at Baſil in 1538.

[B] Seemed not much averſe to it at firſt.] He not only diſapproved the ſordid Traffic of Indulgences, but many other Practices likewiſe. The following four Verſes of his making were affixed in the Year 1519. in the Streets of Zwickaw (2). They concern the Indulgences of Rome.

(2) He taught Greek there.

Si nos injecto ſalvabit ciſtula nummo,
Heu nimium infelix tu mihi pauper eris!
Si nos, Chriſte, tua ſervatos morte beaſti,
Jam nihil infelix tu mihi pauper eris.

If without Gold Salvation can't be bought,
How curſs'd the Wretch who is not worth a Groat?
But if Chriſt's Death has purchas'd for us Peace,
Rejoice, ye Poor, and bid your Miſeries ceaſe.

Melchior Adam was of Opinion, that four things hindered the Converſion of Agricola. 1. The raſh Writings of ſome Divines. 2. The ſcandalous Lives of ſome Reformed Sectaries. 3. The breaking of the Images, and revolt of the Country People. 4. The Inclination he had for Pomp and Ceremony (3). The three firſt of theſe gave Eraſmus an entire Diſlike to the Proteſtant Party. A great Number of other Perſons, who wiſhed for a Reformation of the Church, fell into the ſame Snare with Eraſmus. Whence it was, that Theodore Beza encountered ſo many Perſons, who had at firſt taſted of the good Seed, and afterwards returned to their wallowing in the Mire (4). When we talk thus to Men of Senſe and Reaſon, they tell us, that, conſidering the State of things at that time, it was impoſſible to ſupport or propagate one's Cauſe by downright Meekneſs and Patience; and that therefore the Providence of God, whoſe ways are always Wiſe, permitted, that Men ſhould appear, ſuch as they are, in the great Work of Reformation, to attain more naturally to his Deſign, which was, as Experience teaches us, to hinder either of the two Religions from quite ruining each other. This is a good Plea. There are certain means, which, for this very Reaſon, that they are proper to bring about half the Work, are inſufficient for the perfecting of it.

(3) Melch. Adam in Vit. Medic. pag. 80.

(4) See his Hiſtory of the Churches.

[C] They let him lie five Days unburied.] Scaliger condemned this Conduct with Reaſon; he ſays "Agricolam, quo nihil doctius, Lutherani mortuum "ſepelire noluerunt, quia manſerat Pontificius. Italus quidam ſcripſit & hortatus eſt ut ſepelirent "hominem Chriſtianum; barbaries magna. (5). —— "The Lutherans refuſed to bury the very learned "Agricola, becauſe he died a Papiſt. A certain Italian "wrote to, and exhorted them, to bury a Man, who was "a Chriſtian: this was an Inſtance of Great Barba-"rity." I dare not maintain, that it is falſe, that an Italian exhorted the Lutherans to this Office of Humanity by Letter, but I ſee no probability of it; and it may be imputed to Forgetfulneſs in Scaliger, or his Boarders. There is a Letter of Matthiolus, wherein he complains, that ſuch a venerable old Man, as George Agricola, could not find Earth enough in his own Country to cover his Body. Id. Matthiolus ad Caſpar. Nævium Med. (lib. 2. Epiſt.) queritur, hunc præclarum probumque ſenem in patria tantum terræ non inveniſſe quo ſuum operiretur cadaver (6). From hence they might pretend, that an Italian exhorted by Letter thoſe, who had the Body, to bury it. Let it not be thought ſtrange, that I lay but ſmall Streſs upon what the great Scaliger ſays here; for how can I depend upon him in relation to Agricola, when he has told us, upon another Occaſion, that he was a very impious Man, who ſcarce deſerved to be buried? "Non minus eruditus & in cenſenda "metallorum natura curioſus fuit quam vere impius, "nulli addictus religioni, ut poſt mortem vix ſepe-"liri merucrit (7). —— He was as Learned and "Curious in examining the Nature of Metals, as he "was truly impious, and addicted to no Religion; inſomuch that he ſcarce deſerved funeral Rites after "his Death."

(5) In Scaligeranis, pag. 5.

(6) Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra.

(7) Scaligerana prima, pag. 80.

Digitized by Google

They brought his Corps from Chemnits to Zeits, where he was interred in the principal Church (d). Such are the Fruits of a blind Zeal [D].

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 77, &c.

[D] Such are the Fruits of a blind Zeal.] There is no Proteſtant at preſent, who does not condemn this Treatment of his Corps; and I do not queſtion, but that, at that time, moſt of the Lutherans condemned it. Melchior Adam ſeems to lay all the Blame of it on the Miniſter of the Place. It is more eaſy, at preſent, to ſee the Miſchiefs of this falſe Zeal; Time has calmed thoſe Paſſions, which like impetuous Storms rob us of the Sight of Heaven:

Eripiunt ſubito nubes cœlumque diemque
Teucrorum ex oculis: ponto nox incubat atra (8).

(8) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 88.

—— ſable Night involves the Skies,
And Heaven itſelf is raviſh'd from their Eyes.
DRYDEN.

What will not Men do to make Repriſals, and when there is Reaſon to ſpeak thus?

Res dura & regni novitas me talia cogunt
Moliri (9).

(9) Dido apud Virgil. Æn. lib. 1. ver. 563.

—— my Cruel Fate,
And Doubts attending an unſettled State,
Force me to guard my Coaſts.
DRYDEN.

Freherus remarks, that Agricola fell into ſo great a Paſſion in a Theological Diſpute, that he contracted a violent Fever, of which he died (10). He cites only Melchior Adam, who ſays nothing of it. It is very likely, that Agricola had enraged the Lutherans by the Appearance of an exceſſive Averſion. Peter Albinus repreſents him (11) as an obſtinate Roman Catholic. I deſire you to compare this with the firſt Scaligerana.

(10) Paul. Freher. in Theatr. Viror. illuſtr. pag. 1238.

(11) In the Chronicle of Miſnia.

AGRICOLA (JOHN) a Saxon Divine, born at Iſlebe (a) on the Twentieth of April 1492 (b), was the Cauſe of great Troubles to the Proteſtant Religion, which he embraced. It has been ſaid, that he followed the Elector of Saxony, in Quality of his Miniſter, to the Diet of Spire, in the Year 1526. and to that of Augsburg in the Year 1530. But it is certain, that he made thoſe two Journeys, only in Quality of Miniſter of the Count of Mansfeld. It is true this Count accompanied the Elector of Saxony, and, during that time, his Miniſter preached ſometimes before the Elector; and this is the Original of the Miſtake. Agricola had tolerable Succeſs in preaching, which made him fancy himſelf a great Man, and ſet himſelf up in competition with Melanchthon. For this Reaſon he wrote againſt him in 1527 (c). His reſtleſs and ambitious Temper prompted him, in 1536, to aſk leave to quit his Country, where he exerciſed the Miniſtry, and was Principal of the College. His Requeſt was accompanied with Complaints; and ſeemed ſo unreaſonable to the Count of Mansfeld, that he did not obtain his Diſmiſſion without Reproaches of Ingratitude, Avarice, and Drunkenneſs; beſides being charged with exerciſing his Function careleſly, and with having diſputed more againſt the Proteſtants, than againſt the Catholics. He went to Wittemberg, where he obtained the Chair of Profeſſor and Miniſter. He taught no very inſtructive Doctrine in relation to the uſe of the Law under the Goſpel; in a word, he became the Founder of the Antinomian Sect (d). Luther, who had been his good Friend [A], attacked him very roughly, and obliged him to promiſe that he would recant his Errors; but while they were employed in drawing up the Formulary, which he was to ſign, Luther publiſhed ſome new Writings, at which Agricola was ſo piqued, that he preſented (e) a very abuſive Petition to the Elector againſt his Antagoniſt, wherein he complained, among other things, that they imputed Opinions to him, which were not his. Luther anſwered him with all his Fire, and, to clear himſelf from the Character of a Public Libeller, he ſent for Atteſtations from Iſlebe, in relation to ſome particular Inſtances of Argricola's Behaviour. The Divines of Wittemberg ran to the Aſſiſtance of Luther, and ſaid, That his Accuſations were well-grounded. The Elector of Saxony, much embarraſſed with the Affair, appointed Arbitrators between the Parties, and recommended to them to find out ſome means of an Accommodation; after which he made Agricola promiſe, that he would not retire, before the Proceſs was ended. This Promiſe was broke: Agricola retired privately to Berlin (f), without waiting for an Anſwer to the Demand he had made for Leave to depart. The Elector of Brandenburg endeavoured to reconcile him with Luther; but there was nothing to be done in it, except upon one of theſe two Conditions, either that Agricola ſhould return, and wait the deciſion of the Proceſs, or that he ſhould retract his Errors, and the abuſive Language he had given Luther in writing. He choſe the latter [B], and publiſhed a Book at Berlin, wherein

(a) A Town in the County of Mansfeld. He was as well known by the Name of Iſlebius as by that of Agricola.

(b) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Theol. pag. 409.

(c) It was in relation to the Formulary of Eccleſiaſtical Viſitation, drawn up by Melanchthon.

(d) See the Article ISLEBIANS.

(e) The 30th of March, 1540, during the Aſſembly at Smalcalde.

(f) In 1540.

[A] Luther, who had been his good Friend.] They were of the ſame City. We find that Agricola ſerved Luther as Secretary in the Conference at Leipſic, in 1519 (1), and that he was ſent to Francfort in 1525 (2), with a Recommendatory Letter from Luther to the Magiſtrates, to be one of the Miniſters of the Goſpel there. The Author, whom I cite (3), cenſures Mr Varillas, who ſaid, that Luther undertook nothing conſiderable without Agricola. This is to puſh things too far, and he cannot produce any Proof of it.

(1) Seckendorf, Hiſt. Luther. lib. 1. pag. 92. liter. r.

(2) Ibid. p. 243. lit e.

(3) Seckendorf, ubi ſupra, lib. 3. pag. 306. n. 1.

[B] He choſe the latter.] There are probably two Reaſons for this Piece of Condeſcenſion. Firſt, He had no Hopes of finding his Account in the Deciſion of the Controverſy; for he could not gain his Point without Luther's being declared a Slanderer of his Brethren. Now he muſt have been the moſt credulous of Men to entertain any Hopes of Succeſs, at this Expence, in Saxony. The People would have ſtoned the Judges, who ſhould have ſullied the Reputation of a Reformer in this manner. They would have pretended, that the Church ſtood in need of the good Fame of Luther, and that the Papiſts would draw too great an Advantage from his Diſgrace. Have we not ſeen ſome, who were but Pigmies in compariſon of Luther, eſcape, by this means, the Canonical Puniſhments which they have deſerved? Agricola's ſecond Reaſon, probably, was, that by not ſubmitting, he was in danger of loſing the Quarter's Salary which was due to him. Read what follows: "Neque tamen hoc ſcripto ſtawherein he aſked Pardon of thoſe, whom he might have offended by his Errors, and of Luther by Name, and profeſſed that he would Live and Die in the Faith, which he had oppoſed. Luther did not depend upon theſe fine Proteſtations; Agricola complained of this to the Elector of Saxony, and aſſured him, that nothing had ever given him greater uneaſineſs, than this Conteſt with the Man of God (g); and that, ſince his Offer of giving his Oath wou'd not avail him, he referred his Cauſe to the Judge of the World; humbly entreating the Elector, at the ſame time, to order him the Payment of his Salary, which was due for Three Months, and which he ſtood in need of for the Maintenance of his Wife and Nine Children (b). I believe he never wou'd have regained the Favour either of the Elector, or Martin Luther. No doubt he comforted himſelf with the Reputation, which his Office of Preacher at the Court of Berlin gave him, and with the Choice, which they made of him for compoſing a Work, which made a great Noiſe. I mean the Interim, which he drew up with Julius Phlug, and Michael Heldingus (i), in the Year 1548. It is pretended, that the Emperor rewarded Agricola largely for the Pains he had taken on this Occaſion. The War, which aroſe ſome time after, in Germany, between the Proteſtant Divines (k), made it appear that this Miniſter was a Man of a dangerous Spirit, and a great Intermeddler. He was officious in compoſing Animoſities, and did not ſpare the Gift of Elocution, which he was Maſter of, in the Conferences, which were held about theſe Matters; but he heal'd no Differences. He died at Berlin in 1566. He had been Superintendant (l) of the March of Brandenburg (m). It is ſaid that he would have reviv'd the uſe of Holy Oyl for the Sick, and that he did not queſtion, but that miraculous Cures would have attended, it as in former times (n). He wrote but few Books [C]. They carry Things too far, who ſay that he relapſed to Popery [D].

Digitized by Google

(g) See Remark [B].

(b) Taken out of Seckendorf's Anſwer to the Lutheraniſm of Father Maimbourg, lib. 3. from pag. 306. to pag. 310.

(i) He is commonly called Michael Sidonius, becauſe he was titular Biſhop of Sidon.

(k) It was on the Queſtion about things indifferent in Religion.

(l) So the Lutherans call thoſe Miniſters, who have the Inſpection of ſeveral Churches.

(m) Micræl. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 733. Edit. 1679.

(n) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Theol. pag. 411.

" tim, ut ſperaverat, Luthero de vera converſione " ſua fidem fecit; id quod ipſe Agricola literis d. 19. " Decemb. apud Electorem Saxoniæ queritur, nihil- " que tota vita ſibi gravius accidiſſe, quam ſimulta- " tem illam cum viro Dei, quem ipſe patris loco ve- " neratus ſit, & in cujus obſequio mori velit, apud " quem tamen nihil proficiat ne juramenti quidem ob- " latione, ideo ſe Deo cauſam committere. Petit tamen " ut ſibi ad alendam uxorem novemque liberos trime- " ſtre, quod reſtare ſibi dicit, ſalarium non denegetur, " ſe enim id diligenti lectione promeritum (4). —— " Nor did he by this Writing preſently convince Lu- " ther of his Converſion, as he expected; which Agri- " cola himſelf complained of in his Letters of the " nineteenth of December to the Elector of Saxony; " in which he declares, that nothing had happened " ſo afflicting to him in his whole Life, as his " Quarrel with the Man of God, whom he reve- " renced as a Father, and in whoſe Favour he de- " ſired to dye; with whom as his Offer of an Oath " could not prevail, he committed his Cauſe to " God. However he petitioned, that they would " not deny him his Quarter's Salary, for the Mainte- " nance of his Wife and nine Children, which he ſaid " was due to him, and which he had merited by his " conſtant Attendance on Preaching."

(4) Id. ibid. pag. 310. n. 16.

[C] He wrote but few Books.] The Explication of three hundred German Proverbs was one of the firſt. He abuſed Ulric Duke of Wirtemberg much in it (5). Complaints were made of it, which obliged the Author to acknowledge his Fault in a very ſubmiſſive Letter. This did not hinder Duke Ulric from alledging, among other Grievances, at the Diet of Franckfort, in the Year 1536, that they protected John Agricola in the County of Manſfeld, by whom he had been publickly affronted (6). The Author increaſed his Work with above four hundred Proverbs more in the ſecond Edition. He wrote a Commentary on St Luke; he refuted the Explication of the nineteenth Pſalm, publiſhed in German, by Thomas Muncerus, &c. (7).

(5) Id. lib. 2. pag. 135.

(6) Ib. pag. 412. lit. b.

[D] That he relapſed to Popery.] It is certain, that, leaving Saxony, he retired to the Court of Brandenburg, and that the Elector Joachim II. who had eſtabliſhed the Reformation in his Dominions, in the Year 1539, (8) received him honourably, and made him his Preacher. It is as certain that he enjoyed that Prince's Favour all his Life-time; ſo that it is falſe to ſay, as Melchior Adam, and Paul Freherus do, that Agricola was a Papiſt, tunc Pontificiis ſeſe adjunxerat, when Charles V. employed him in drawing up the Interim. I own he made great Conceſſions in that Piece; but did not Phlug, and the Biſhop of Sidon, do the ſame? Were they therefore Lutherans? The Project of theſe three Perſons was neither ſatisfactory to the Proteſtants, nor the Catholics; this is very certain: But there is a manifeſt Diſtinction to be made between thoſe, who, for the ſake of Peace, give up part of the Reformation, and thoſe who actually forſake the Proteſtant Communion, to embrace the Communion of Rome. Agricola was doubtleſs one of the firſt Claſs, but, having never been of the ſecond, he ought not to paſs for a Papiſt. Cenſure therefore theſe Words of Micrælius; " Joh. Agricola - - - - - noſter primo, " deinde ſuus, tandem Pontificiorum (9). —— John " Agricola - - - - - who was firſt of our Sect, then " of no Party, and laſtly a Convert to Popery." I cannot tell, whether, when he ſays three Lines after, " Homini Epicuræo ſimilior quam pio Theologo, ut " ſcribit Oſiander ad annum 1566. quo obiit Agri- " cola. —— More of an Epicurean, than a pious " Divine, as Oſiander writes, at the Year 1566, in " which Agricola died —— He means a Voluptary, or one indifferent to all Religions.

(7) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Theol. pag. 411.

(8) Seckendorf, lib. 3. pag. 234, & ſeq.

(9) Micræl. Syntagm. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. p. 733.

AGRICOLA (MICHAEL) a Lutheran Miniſter at Abo in Finland, was the firſt who tranſlated the New Teſtament into the Language of the Country, which contributed much to the Propagation of Lutheraniſm (a).

(a) Ex Micrælio, Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. pag. 733.

AGRICOLA (RODOLPHUS) was one of the moſt Learned Men of the XVth Century. Italy, which in thoſe times called all beyond the Alps barbarous, produced nothing, to which Frieſland could not compare her Agricola, without fearing to be overcome. This great Man was of mean Birth [A]; he was born about the Year

[A] Was of mean Birth.] I am aware, that, in the Life of Agricola, among thoſe of the Profeſſors of Groningen, it is affirmed, that he was of one of the moſt conſiderable Families of Frieſland; Ex Agricolarum familia, apud Friſios inter honoratiores ſemper habita, vir hic incomparabilis oriundus. —— This incomparable Perſon ſprung from the Agricolæ, a Family in Frieſland, eſteemed amongſt the moſt honourable. But as this Life is the ſame with that, which we find in Melchior Adam, it cannot ba-

Digitized by Google

Year 1442. in the Village of Baſſlon, two Miles from Groningen. He gave early proofs of his future Reputation; and he had ſcarce received the Degree of Maſter of Arts at Louvain, but he might have been advanced to a Profeſſor's Chair, if he had deſired it: but his Inclination was rather to travel. He went from Louvain to Paris, after having lived in the former of theſe Two Cities the Life of an Athletic, I mean with great Sobriety, Chaſtity, and Application to Labour [B]. From Paris he went to Italy, and ſtaid Two Years at Ferrara [C], where the Duke conferred many Favours on him. Theodore Gaza explained Ariſtotle in that City. Agricola, who was one of his Auditors, was heard in his Turn, and admired no leſs for his Style, than his Elocution. The Italians regretted, that ſo great a Man was not born in their Country. It was his own fault, when he returned home, that he did not poſſeſs conſiderable Employs; but his love of Books hindered him from thinking of any Settlement of this kind, or at leaſt made him ſoon quit it. He at laſt accepted a Poſt, in Groningen, and followed the Court of Maximilian the Firſt Six Months, to take care of the Affairs of That City. He acquitted himſelf happily of this Commiſſion, and had no great Reaſon to boaſt of the Gratitude of his Maſters; therefore he left them, and went to travel again. He was ſuch a Lover of Liberty, that he refuſed to accept the Headſhip of a College, which the Inhabitants of Antwerp offered him; and I know not how he could with Honour have accepted it, ſince he had refuſed to enter, under very advantageous Conditions, into the Service of the Emperor Maximilian? He preferred Quiet and Independency to every thing. After having led a very roving Life, he ſettled in the Palatinate, where the Biſhop of Worms, whom he had inſtructed in the Greek Tongue, found means to engage his Stay. It was in the Year 1482, that he came into the Palatinate; where he ſpent the remainder of his Life [D], ſometimes at Heidelberg, and ſometimes at Worms. The Elector Palatine took lance the Teſtimony of Ubbo Emmius, who was beſt acquainted with Frieſland, his own Country, of any Man: "Obſcuris natalibus apud Baſloos ortus (Rodolphus "Agricola) tantum ſibi in literis nomen paravit per "omnem Europam, ut, &c. (1) —— RODOLPHUS "AGRICOLA born at Baſſlon, of obſcure Parents, "gained ſuch a Reputation for Learning over all "Europe, that, &c."

(1) Ubbo Emmius, lib. 30. Hiſtor. Friſ. ad ann. 1490. pag. 457.

I have been ſhewed (2) two Proofs of Emmius's Opinion in Agricola's Letters. The one is, that his Twin-Siſter was ſent to Groningen to learn the Skinners Trade, pellicea opera & texturam pulvinariam; the other is, that the Father of this Girl was Receiver of the Church of his Village. He was much grieved when one of his Sons robbed him of an hundred Florins of the Money of that Revenue. "Venit ad me pater tuus turbatus & gemens, & prope "cum lacrimis queſtus eſt mihi, Henricum fratrem "noſtrum pridie ejus diei clam ſibi abſtuliſſe centum "florenos noſtræ monetæ ex pecunia ſacra cujus "curam, ut ſis, ille gerit. —— Your Father came "to me greatly diſcompoſed, and ſighing, and com-"plained to me almoſt with Tears, that Henry, our "Brother, had the Day before ſtoln from him an "hundred Florins, of that ſacred Money, which, you "know, he has the care of." Our Rudolphus, being at Groningen, wrote this to John his Twin-Brother.

(2) By Mr de la Monnoie.

[B] The Life of an Athletic, I mean with great Sobriety, Chaſtity, and Application to Labour.] The Ancients remark, that the Athletics enured themſelves to Labour, and abſtained from Wine and Women.

Qui ſtudet optatam curſu contingere metam,
Multa tulit fecitque puer: ſudavit & alſit:
ABSTINUIT VENERE ET VINO (3).

(3) Horat. de Arte Poët. ver. 412, &c.

He, who, ambitious of the Victor's Place,
Courts the firſt Honours of the duſty Race,
Enures himſelf to Toil from childiſh Years,
And Cold and Heat's Extreams alternate bears;
Flies the ſtrong Grape's entoxicating Joys,
And Venery, which manly Strength deſtroys.

This Abſtinence was remarkable in Agricola, and very uncommon in the Country where he lived, with regard to the firſt Particular. "Lovanii vixit hone-"ſtiſſime ab omni compotatione ac commeſſatione "contra gentis ſuæ morem alieniſſimus. Tantus erat "in eo bonarum literarum amor, tam indefeſſum "ſtudium, ut turpis Veneris fornices & luſtra ne "noverit quidem (4). —— He lived an exemplary "Life at Louvain, not complying with his Country's "Manners in revelling and feaſting. So fond was "he of good Literature, that he was wholly unac-"quainted with the ſcandalous Seats of Debauchery."

(4) Melch. Adam in Vitis Philoſ. pag. 15.

It was uncommon likewiſe every where, and is ſo ſtill, with reſpect to the other Particular. For, to the ſhame of Chriſtianity and of Learning be it ſaid, there appears almoſt nothing in Scholars but ſhocking Inclinations to Debauchery. They were perhaps no better in ancient Times; for which reaſon I wonder why this did not become a Proverb, Sine Venere & Baccho frigent Muſæ, as well as this, Sine Cerere & Baccho friget Venus. For this long time, the Youth, who ſtudy, have behaved as if the firſt of theſe Maxims was true.

[C] And ſtaid two Years (5) at Ferrara.] He learned Greek, and taught Latin there: He contended with Guarin which had the beſt Talent at writing in Proſe, and diſputed with the Strozza's the Praiſe of Poetry; as for Philoſophy, he treated of it with Theodore Gaza (6).

(5) In 1476. & 1477.

(6) Ex Valerio Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 798.

[D] It was in the Year 1482. that he came into the Palatinate, where he ſpent the Remainder of his Life.] Melchior Adam aſſerts this. "Cum hoc (Joanne "Camerario Dalburgio) ab anno 1482, partim Hei-"delbergæ partim Wormatiæ ad ultimum vitæ actum "uſque vixit conjunctiſſime (7). —— He lived in "ſtrict Friendſhip with this Perſon John Camera-"rius Dalburgius) partly at Heidelberg, and partly "at Worms, from the Year 1482. to his Death." But Mr de la Monnoie found fault with this Account; for this is his Remark: "Rodolphus Agricola, in a "Letter, which he wrote to James Barbirianus, "dated, by Miſtake, XCII. inſtead of XXCII. and "in another of the ſame date to his Brother John, "ſays, that, upon taking a Journey the ſame Year "to Heidelberg, he gave his Word to John of Al-"burg, Chancellor of the Count Palatine, and Bi-"ſhop of Worms, that he would return to him again "the following Year. Yet we find, by his other "Letters, that he did not return thither before the "the middle of the Year 1484. So that the Cal-"culation of Voſſius, pag. 566. De Hiſtor. Lat. "concerning the three Years of the Regency of Ro-"dolphus at Heidelberg (8), is not right. Sigiſmond "of Foligni, otherwiſe Sigiſmudus Fulginas, is alſo "miſtaken, when he ſays, that Rodolphus died by "the way in his return from Rome to his own Coun-"try. Rodolphus departed from Rome in 1480. and "died five Years after at Heidelberg. It does not ap-"per by the reading of his Works, that he exer-"ciſed the Function of Profeſſor at Worms." There is a Letter from Peter Schottus, dated the eighteenth of February, 1484, in which he ſays, That he was well pleaſed with Agricola's having began to read Lectures to the Youth at Heidelberg. "Argen-"tinam reverſus cum intellexiſſem --- te Heidelbergæ "coepiſſe purgare & linguas Juvenum & aures, ut "illæ nil ſceleroſum balbutiant, hæ vero, tuis tam

(7) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Philoſ. pag. 16.

(8) Note, that Melch. Adam does not ſay that Agricola ever taught Philoſophy at Heidelberg. Voſſius ſuppoſes that he taught it there three Years.

"peritis

took a pleasure in hearing him discourse on Antiquity, and desired him to compose An Abridgment of ancient History, which Agricola performed with great Learning. He read public Lectures at Worms, but his Auditors, having a greater Taste for the Chicanery of Logic, than for polite Literature, were not in the way of Thinking he desired. He began to study Divinity at Forty Years of Age; but despairing to succeed in it without the Knowledge of Hebrew, he apply'd himself to the Study of that Language, and, by the assistance of a Jew, he had made a considerable Progress in it [E]. Death, which seized him at Heidelberg, on the Twenty eighth of October 1485 (a), did not permit him to proceed. He submitted, with a Christian Resignation, to the Orders from above, and was buried, in a Cordelier's Habit, in the Church of the Minor Friars of that City. The Description, which is given, of his Character, may easily satisfy us, that he was a very good Man, plain, without Malice, moderate, and of a good Disposition. He was never married, tho' he had been in Love, or seemed to have been so. He had resolv'd to marry in his Youth; but, after having seriously examined what he was going to do, he laid aside his Design, not so much for fear of domestic Inconveniences, as out of a certain natural Indolence of Temper [F], which made him sink under the least Cares. One would scarce imagine, that a Person, who had div'd so far into the Study of Antiquity, as he had, should be capable of singing to Instruments Songs of his own Composition; yet in this manner he sometimes entertained the Ladies [G]. It is pretended, that, in the Affair of Religion, he had a Fore-taste of that Light [H], which appeared in the following Age. He left his Books to Adolphus Occo, a Native of Friesland, and Physician at Augsburg (b). Mr Moreri had no foundation for saying, that Erasmus and Agricola became acquainted at Ferrara [I]. Paul Freberus did not understand all that (a) Erasmus therefore was mistaken when he said that Agricola died before the Age of 40 Years. Adag. Chil. 1. cent. 4. n. 39.

(b) Taken out of Melchior Adam in Vit. Philos. pag. 13, & seq.

" peritis & dulcibus elegantiis delibatæ, omnes illas
" sciolorum insulsas & verbosas ineptias quasi magicas
" incantationes declinent: tum ego vehementer sum
" gravisus (9). —— Returning to Argentina, when I understood, that you had began at Heidelberg to purge
" the Tongues and Ears of the Youth, that the former might not utter any thing senseless or wicked,
" and that the latter, by the Infusion of your skilful
" and pleasing Elegancies, might avoid all the insipid
" and wordy Follies of Pretenders to Learning, as
" so many magical Incantations; when I understood
" this, I was greatly pleased."

(9) Centur. Epist. Philolog. à Goldasto Editarum, pag. 55, 56.

[E] Had made a considerable Progress in it.] We learn from himself that at first this Study seemed very difficult to him; " Studia Hebræa - - - primum
" ei plurimum negotii, uti scribit ipse, exhibuerunt,
" ut sibi videretur cum Antæo luctari (10). ——
" The Study of the Hebrew Tongue, according to his " own Account, gave him at first a great deal of " Trouble, insomuch that it seemed to him, as if he
" was wrestling with Antæus." Meeting afterwards with a Jew who understood that Language indifferently well, he made such a Progress in a few Months, that he could translate some of David's Psalms without Faults. Nactus Judæum ejus linguæ utcunque peritum paucis mensibus tantum profecit, ut aliquot Psalmos Davidicos in Latinam linguam citra culpam transtulerit (11). This will not authorize us to say, with Vossius, that Agricola was very skilful in the Hebrew Tongue, Hebraicè doctissimus (12); we may degrade this Superlative, without any Injustice, and treat it like a Trooper, who is dismounted, to be incorporated with the Infantry. Gesner distinguished better than Vossius; the latter has bestowed a Superlative on Agricola's Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, indifferently. But Gesner expresses himself thus; Græci & Latini sermonis peritus, & Hebraicæ linguæ non ignarus (13). —— Skilled in the Latin and Greek Tongues, and not ignorant of the Hebrew. He borrows these Words from Trithemius. Konig outdoes Vossius; for he makes use of the Superlative callentissimus, most knowing. See Varillas's third Mistake below. We may observe likewise, that Trithemius does not speak with Exactness, when he assures us, that Agricola had translated the Psalter from the original Hebrew (14); for we do not reckon the Exercises of an Author in learning a Language among his Works; but it is plain, that the Translation, which Agricola made of some of David's Psalms, was an Exercise, which his Jew corrected for him. This Jew was converted to the Christian Religion. John Dalburg, Bishop of Worms (15), kept him in his House only for the sake of Agricola, if we may believe Valerius Andreas. " Primus exsu-
" lantes è Germania Græcas restituit litteras, quibus
" ætate provectior etiam Hebraicas adjecit, præcep-
" tore usus Judæo quodam ad fidem converso, quem
" Wormatiensis Episcopus Johannes Dalburgius, solius
" Rodolphi causa, domi suæ alebat (16). —— He " was the first who restored the exiled Greek Learn-
" ing in Germany; to which, in his riper Years, he " added the Hebrew, by the Instruction of a certain
" converted Jew, whom the Bishop of Worms, John
" Dalburg, entertained in his House, wholly upon Ro-
" dolphus's Account."

(10) Melch. Adam. ibid. pag. 18.

(11) Id. ibid. pag. 19.

(12) De Histor. Lat. pag. 566.

(13) Gesn. in Biblioth. fol. 585.

(14) Apud Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 758. Gesner asserts it likewise.

(15) And not Heidelberg, as Bullart says in his Academ. of Sciences, Tom. 1. pag. 2: 6.

(16) Valer. Andreas, Bibl. Belg. 758.

[F] As out of a certain natural Indolence of Temper.] Because I cannot pretend to reach the Force of his Expressions. I shall set down the Greek Words, which he made use of. " Uxorem nunquam duxit:
" quamquam in priori ætate ducturum destinarat. Sed
" postea quam incepit diligentius se ipse introspicere,
" aversus est ab eo consilio non incommodis rei coco-
" nomicæ, sed deterruit ipsum genus vitæ suæ, &
" animus levissimis etiam curis impar, καὶ φιλόψυχος
" τι τῆς φύσεως (verba sunt ipsius epistola quadam ad
" Capnionem) ἦγε μᾶλλον ἀπραγμοσύνην καὶ ἡσυχίαν
" τοῦ παντὸς τοῦ βίου (17). —— He never married:
" though formerly he had resolved to marry. But,
" after that he began to look more carefully into him-
" self, he gave up that Resolution, not in Considera- " tion of the Inconveniences of a married State; but
" his own manner of Life, and his natural Disposi-
" tion, unequal to the lightest Cares, deterred him
" from it."

(17) Melch. Adam. Vit. Philos. p. 19. See also the Life of Agricola among those of the Professors of Groningen.

[G] Sometimes entertained the Ladies.] See what his Historian says: " Puellas amare se nonnunquam
" simulabat, verum nunquam deperibat. In earum
" gratiam vernacula lingua quædam carmina scripsit
" elegantissimè: quæ virginibus primariisque amicis
" præsentibus voce & testudine modulatissimè cane-
" bat (18). —— He sometimes pretended to be an
" Admirer of the Ladies; but was never desperately
" in love with any of them. For their Sakes he " wrote some very elegant Latin Verses in his mother
" Tongue." He understood all kinds of Music; " Ca-
" nebat voce, flatu, pulsu (19). —— He performed
" with his Voice, his Breath, and his Fingers."

(18) Melch. Adam. Vit. Philosoph. pag. 18.

(19) Id. Ib.

[H] A Foretaste of that Light.] Some one, who heard Agricola and Wesselus discourse together, testifies, that they deplored the Darkness of the Church; and that they blamed the Mass, Celibacy, and the Doctrine of the Monks concerning Justification by Works (20).

(20) Id. ibid. in Vita Professorum Groningens.

[I] Mr Moreri had no Foundation for saying, that Erasmus and Agricola became acquainted at Ferrara.] This is easily proved. Erasmus was born in the Year 1467. He studied at Deventer at twelve or thirteen Years of Age. Agricola was at Ferrara in the Year 1476, and 1477. How could he then have contracted an eternal Friendship with Erasmus in that City? If Mr Moreri had read Agricola's Prognostic concerning Erasmus, he would not have said that they became acquainted at Ferrara. Agricola was returned from Italy, when, having that he tranſcribed out of Eraſmus [K] in praiſe of Agricola. We underſtand from the ſame Eraſmus, that Agricola died for want of timely Aſſiſtance from the Phyſicians [L]. Reuchlinus has taken notice of the Funeral Oration of this Learned Man (c). Varillas will ſupply us with many Faults here [M], and give us an occaſion to relate what concerns the publication of one of Agricola's Books, entitled De Inventione Dialectica [N].

(c) Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. pag. 798.

ving read the Themes of Hegius's Scholars at Deventer, he found I know not what in that of Eraſmius, which made him deſire to ſee the Child, and, having well obſerved him, he pronounced, that he would be a great Man. Eraſmus was not twenty Years of Age, when Agricola died, and had not yet emerged from the Darkneſs, wherein impertinent Tutors had detained him; ſo that there could not be that Friendſhip between him and Agricola, which Mr Moreri ſpeaks of. Here are ſome other Miſtakes of that Author. Agricola, ſays he, was learned in all kind of Literature, and even in the Greek Language. This is, as if one ſhould ſay, Such a one is learned in all Parts of Divinity, and even in the Queſtions about Grace. Is not the Greek Tongue one of the nobleſt Parts of Literature? I do not know where Mr Moreri has read, that Agricola was two Years Syndic of the City of Groningen.

(21) In his Theat. Viror. erudit. pag. 1430.

[K] All that he tranſcribed out of Eraſmus (21)] He applies That to our Agricola, which Eraſmus ſaid of another. You muſt know, that Eraſmus, having highly prais'd Agricola, confeſſes, that one of the Reaſons, which made him ſo inclin'd to praiſe him, was, that he (Eraſmus) had been inſtructed by one (22), who had been a Scholar of Agricola (23). Upon which he diſplays his Maſter's Merit; and ſays, among other Things, That Envy itſelf could not caviſ at him, but for having too much deſpis'd Fame, for having had too little regard for Poſterity, and for having wrote nothing but by way of Amuſement. Freherus reports this Remark, as if it related to Agricola, wherein he attributes a Falſhood to Eraſmus; for Agricola's Works, collected in a Body (24), and printed at Cologne, in the Year 1539, prove, that he wrote many Things with Care, and with all his Induſtry.

(22) Alexand. Hegius

(23) Eraſm. Adag. chil. 1. cent. 4. n. 39. pag. 145.

(24) By Alard of Amſterdam. They are contained in two Volumes in 4to.

[L] He died for want of timely Aſſiſtance from the Phyſicians.] Let us ſee Eraſmus's Account of this Matter: It will not be diſagreeable to read it in his own Words. " Veluti ſi quis in morbo capitali Me-
" dicum opperiatur inſignem aut procul accerſendum;
" quæ res Hominem illum vere divinum extinxit Ro-
" dolphum Agricolam; etenim, dum cunctatur Me-
" dicus, Mors antevertit (25). —— As if any one, in a
" mortal Diſtemper, ſhould wait for an eminent Phy-
" ſician, or one a great way off; which was the Oc-
" caſion of the Death of the great Rodolphus Agri-
" cola; for Death was before-hand with the tardy Phyſician.

(25) Eraſm. Adag. Chil. 3. cent. 3. n. 62. pag. 703.

[M] Mr Varillas will ſupply us with many Faults here.] I. He ſays (26), That Agricola had ſuch a prodigious Memory, that he never forgot any thing that he had learned. This is an Hyperbole, for which I find no ground in that great Man's Hiſtory, though they have very much enlarg'd on his Talents. Would they have forgot this, which is the moſt extraordinary that can be met with? II. He became learned to a Prodigy, by Books, which were borrowed, and without a Maſter. The Hyperbole here is accompany'd with a palpable Falſhood; for we read in his Life, that he was ſent very early to the College (27), and that after he had ſtudied Grammar, he went to Louvain, where he lodg'd in the College of the Faulcon, and perform'd all the Exerciſes of a Student in Philoſophy, and became acquainted with ſeveral, who had a taſte for good Latin. He was alſo a diligent Auditor of Theodore Geza at Ferrara. —— Ibi Theodorum Gazam, Ariſtotelis Scripta enarrantem, diligenter audivit (28). It is very true, that he carried but few Books with him, in his Travels, and that, leaving the reſt of his Library with his Friends, he made uſe of borrow'd Books, according as he wanted them: But, beſides that there is no learned Man, who does not do the like in travelling; can it be ſaid that Agricola gain'd all his Learning in his Travels? III. He began his Studies, where others uſe to end them; that is, with the Hebrew Tongue. He was not only deſirous of underſtanding it in it's Purity, but with all the Alterations, likewiſe, which Time, and the refining of the Rabbies, have produc'd in it. He was equally induſtrious in acquainting himſelf with the Greek Tongue. —— Laſtly, he apply'd himſelf to Latin, without any regard to the Remonſtrances of thoſe, who pretended to diſſuade him from it, becauſe the Habit of writing and pronouncing the Hebrew ſeem'd to have introduc'd into his Mind an Incompatibility with the Roman Phraſes and Expreſſions. Who can read this without Aſtoniſhment, when he is inform'd that our Rodolphus 'did not learn Hebrew 'till a few Years before his Death, and that the Progreſs he made in it was but ſmall (29): I fancy Mr Varillas was deceiv'd by this Paſſage in Latin; it is an Apoſtrophe to Agricola, " Tranſiſti enim Hebraicas, Græ-
" caſque literas, uſque adeo ſtupenda celeritate, ut
" nequaquam Gruningiæ in ultima Friſia, ſed Hiero-
" ſolymis Athenisque natus ac educatus à doctiſſimis
" crederere. Latinas porro tanta felicitate didiciſti, do-
" cuiſtique ut, &c. (30) —— You went through the " Hebrew and Greek Learning with ſuch a ſurprizing Celerity, that you ſeem'd to have been born and educated, not at Groningen in fartheſt Frieſland, but at Jeruſalem and Athens. You attain'd likewiſe to the Latin, and taught it ſo ſucceſsfully, that, &c." This ſeems to me to be the Reaſon, why Mr Varillas imagin'd, that Agricola firſt learnt the Hebrew, then the Greek, and laſt of all the Latin Tongues, and that he often compos'd, and ſpoke in Hebrew. IV. He made ſuch a ſurprizing Progreſs in the Latin, that Eraſmus, ſo little accuſtom'd to praiſe in others the Riches which himſelf poſſeſs'd, was never weary of commending him, eſpecially after he had publiſh'd his Commentaries, ſo polite, and ſo worthy of the Age of Auguſtus, on Ariſtotle's Rhetoric and Logic. Eraſmus was ſo inconſiderable a Man, when Agricola died, that the Progreſs of his Admiration muſt not be look'd for in the Years, which preceeded the Death of Agricola. Beſides, it is an Anachroniſm to ſay, that this illuſtrious Frieſlander liv'd 'till the Time when his own Poſſeſſion of polite Literature hinder'd Eraſmus from praiſing it in others. I have yet two Obſervations; The Commentaries on Ariſtotle's Logic did not appear 'till after the Death of the Author. Eraſmus informs us of this, and ſays alſo, that they were mutilated. " Latitabant apud neſcio quos commentarii
" Dialectices, nuper in publicum prodierunt, ſed mu-
" tili (31). —— The logical Commentaries lay conceal-
" ed in the Poſſeſſion of I know not who; lately indeed
" they have come abroad, but imperfect." Certainly it is not in this Work, that Agricola's Latin, or the polite Manners of the Age of Auguſtus, are to be admired. V. The Elector Palatine —— caus'd Agricola to come to Heidelberg —— gave him the firſt Profeſſorſhip of Eloquence in the Univerſity —— and made him his Counſellor of State. Neither the Life of Agricola among thoſe of the Profeſſors of Groningen, nor that in Melchior Adam, ſay any thing like this. The Biſhop of Worms is ſaid to have invited Agricola into the Palatinate.

(26) Varillas, Anecdotes de Florence, pag. 184.

(27) Puer admodum in ludum literarium miſſus. Melch. Adam. Vit. Philoſ. pag. 13.

(28) Id. ib. pag. 15.

(29) See the Remark [E] above, and add theſe Words of Eraſmus to it; Extremo vitæ tempore ad literas Hebraicas ---- totum animum appulerat. In his decline of Age he aſſy'd himſelf wholly to the Hebrew Learning. Eraſm. chil. 1. n. 39. cent. 4. pag. 145.

(30) Paul. Jovius, Elog. cap. 32.

(31) Eraſmus ubi ſupra.

[N] Entituled, de Inventione Dialecticâ.] The following Remark was communicated to me ſince the firſt Edition. " Rodolphus Agricola compos'd no re" gular Commentaries on Ariſtotle's Logic or Rhe-
" toric. We have only his three Books de Inventione
" Dialecticâ, which were firſt printed at Louvain,
" in the Year 1516, by the Care of Alard of Am-
" ſterdam, who publiſhed them confuſedly, juſt as " he could meet with them. Some time after, one
" James le Febvre, at Deventer, gave out that he " had a Manuſcript of the de Inventione Dialecticâ,
" more ample, by three Books, than the Edition of " Louvain; but this was falſe. Alard, who went on
" purpoſe to this le Febvre at Deventer, having ſeen
" his Manuſcript, found it neither more ample, nor " more correct than that, from whence the Edition
" of Louvain was publiſh'd. He reproach'd le Febvre
" for it, who excuſed himſelf as well as he could,
" though badly enough. Since the Year 1528, Pom-
" pey Occo, having obtain'd Agricola's own Manu-
" ſcript by the Inheritance of his Uncle Adolphus,
" gave it to Alard, who, finding it very compleat,
" and well preſerv'd, caus'd it to be printed at Co-

" logne,

Digitized by Google

" logne, in 4to, with long Commentaries, in the " Year 1539. Some Years before, John Matthæo " Prisſemius, to whom Alard had communicated his " Manuſcript, had cauſed it to be printed in the ſame " City, with his own Comments. This Work, which " is Rodolphus's Maſter-piece, was always univerſally " eſteem'd for the Exactneſs of the Style (32), and " of the Arguments." This comes from the ſame hand with the Obſervation, contain'd in the Remark [D] (33).

(32) All this may be true, tho' this Work is very far from the polite Manners of the Auguſtan Age, and leſs eloquent than ſome other Pieces of Agricola.

(33) Mr de la Monnoie.

AGRIPPA (HENRY CORNELIUS), a great Magician, according to ſome [A], was a very Learned Man of the XVIth Century. He was born at Cologne, on the fourteenth of September, 1486 (a), of a Noble and Ancient Family [B]. Deſiring to walk in the Steps of his Anceſtors (b), who for many Generations had been employed by the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, he entered early into the Service of the Emperor Maximilian. He had at firſt the Employ of Secretary; but as he was equally qualified for the Sword, as the Pen, he afterwards turned Soldier, and ſerved the Emperor ſeven Years in his Italian Army [C]. He ſignalized himſelf on ſeveral Occaſions, and, as a reward of his Brave Actions, obtained the Title of Knight. He had a mind to add the Academical Honours to the Military [D]; He therefore commenced Doctor of Law, and Phyſic. It cannot be denied, that he was a very great Genius, and had a very extenſive Knowledge of Languages [E] and Things; but his too great Curioſity, his too free Pen, and his inconſtant Temper, rendered him unhappy. He changed his Situation perpetually; he brought himſelf continually into Trouble; and, to compleat his Misfortunes, he drew upon himſelf the Hatred of the Clergy by his Writings. We find by his Letters, that he had been in France before the Year 1507 (c), that he travelled into Spain in the Year 1508 (d), and that he was at Dole in 1509 (e). He read Public Lectures there [F], which engaged him in a Conteſt with the Cordelier Catilinet. The Monks in thoſe Times ſuſpected, whatever they did not underſtand, of Error or Hereſy; How then cou'd they ſuffer Agrippa to explain the myſterious Works of Reuchlinus de Verbo mirifico with Impunity? It was the Subject of the Lectures, which he read at Dole in the Year 1509, with great Reputation. The Counſellors of the Parliament themſelves were his Auditors (f). To inſinuate himſelf the better into the Favour of Margaret of Auſtria, Governeſs of the

(a) Agrippa, Epiſt. 20. lib. 7. pag. 141. Edit. 8vo. Lugd.

(b) Id. Epiſt. 18. lib. 6. pag. 970. & Epiſt. 21. lib. 7. pag. 1021. See alſo pag. 736.

(c) Epiſt. 1. lib. 1.

(d) Ep. 10. Lib. 1.

(e) Epiſt. 17. Lib. 1.

(f) See Agrippa's Expoſtulation with John Catilinet, Provincial Miniſter of the Franciſcan Brethren of Burgundy, Operum, Tom. 2. pag. 508.

[A] A great Magician, according to ſome.] Paul Jovius, Thevet, and Martin Del Rio are his principal Accuſers. We ſhall ſee, in the Remark [P], the Miſtakes, into which they fall; they are palpable; and yet a great number of Perſons are ſtill perſwaded, on the Authority of theſe Writers, that Agrippa was perfect in the Art Magic.

[B] Of a noble and ancient Family.] It's Name was de Nettesheym. Mr Teiſſier aſſures us, in the 99th Page of the ſecond Volume of his Additions to the Elogies taken out of Thuanus, that Agrippa was born at Nettesheym, in the Country of Cologne. Melchior Adam, whom he quotes, does not ſay ſo; he makes him to be born at Cologne itſelf (1), and refers us to a Letter of Agrippa, wherein we read theſe very Words, addreſs'd to the Magiſtrates of Cologne; " Poſ- " ſem vobis horum veriſſima exempla referre, niſi " civium veſtrorum pudori parcendum, & patriæ meæ " rationem habendam ducerem. Sum enim & ego, " ſi forte neſcitis, civitate veſtra oriundus, & prima " pueritia apud vos enutritus (2). —— I could give " you undoubted Examples of theſe things, had I not " a regard for your Citizens, and for the Place of my " Birth. For I muſt tell you, if you are ignorant of " it, that I was born in your City, and brought up " from my Infancy in it." Thevet is ſtill more miſtaken in ſaying, That Agrippa was born in the City of Neſtra (3). I know nothing of our Agrippa's Father, but that he ſerv'd the Houſe of (4) Auſtria, and that he died about the Beginning of the Year 1518 (5).

(1) Melch. Adam. in Vit. Medicor. pag. 16.

(2) Agrippa, Epiſt. 26. lib. 7. pag. 1041.

(3) Thevet's Hiſtory of Illuſtrious Men, Tom. 7. pag 222. Edit. Paris 12mo, 1671.

(4) Agrippa, Epiſt. 18. lib. 6. pag. 970.

(5) Id. Epiſt. 10. lib. 2. pag. 736.

[C] Serv'd the Emperor ſeven Years in his Italian Army.] Freherus, who ventures but ſeldom to go beyond the Bounds of thoſe, whom he tranſcribes, had a Mind here to play the Maſter, and to ſhew that he could tell us ſomething, omitted by Melchior Adam. But he has been very unlucky in it; for he makes theſe ſeven Years commence in 1508, and end in 1515. If he had been well acquainted with the Hiſtory of Agrippa, he would have known, that this Author was in Spain in the Year 1508, at Dole in the Year 1509, and in England in the Year 1510. This Week of Years muſt have begun in 1511, and Agrippa muſt neceſſarily have pretended that he ſerv'd under the Emperor, all the time he liv'd in Italy. But his own Letters would have betray'd him. We do not find, that he had any Employment in the Army, after he was made Profeſſor at Pavia, in 1515. Freherus, in the reſt of his Extract from Melchior Adam, contents himſelf with the Faults of That Author, and adds no other to them. See his Theatrum, pag. 1221.

[D] Add the Academical Honours to the Military.] It is proper to produce his own Words. " Utriuſ- " que Juris & Medicinarum Doctor evaſi, antea etiam " Auratus Eques; quam ordinem non precario mihi " redemi, non à tranſmarina peregrinatione mutuavi, " non in Regum inthroniſatione impudenti inſolentia " ſurripui, ſed in publicis præliis, media acie, bellica " virtute commerui (6). —— I went out Doctor of " Laws and Phyſic, having before receiv'd the Ho- " nour of Knighthood; the conferring of which Or- " der upon me was not the Effect of Sollicitation, " not borrowed from my Travels beyond Sea, nor im- " pudently and inſolently extorted from the Inaugu- " ration of Kings; but gloriouſly earn'd by Martial " Bravery, and in the Field of Battle."

(6) Id. Epiſt. 21. lib. 7. pag. 1021. See alſo pag. 737, 977.

[E] Extenſive Knowledge of Languages.] He underſtood eight, and there were but two, out of this great Number, which he did not underſtand to Perfection. He will give us this Account himſelf, without too much Modeſty: We need not be afraid of injuring him, by eſteeming him, according to the value he ſets upon himſelf. " Octo linguarum me- " diocriter doctus, ſed illarum ſex adeò peritus, ut " ſingulis non loqui modo & intelligere, ſed & ele- " ganter orare, dictare, & transferre noverim; itum " præter multimodam etiam abſtruſarum rerum cog- " nitionem, utriuſque Juris & Medicinarum Doctor " evaſi (7). —— I was moderately vers'd in eight " Languages; of which ſix were ſo familiar to me, " that I not only underſtood and ſpoke them, but was " able to play the Orator in them, dictate in them, " and tranſlate from them: then, beſides an extenſive " Knowledge of the moſt abſtruſe things, I commenc'd " Doctor of Laws and Phyſic." He was betimes in ſearch of the Philoſopher's Stone, and it appears that he had been recommended to ſome Princes, as very fit for the grand Projection, which made him run the Hazard of his Liberty ſometimes (8). It is certain, that a Perſon thought capable of making Gold, might well be afraid, that ſome Prince would impriſon him, in order to employ him for himſelf, excluſive of other Princes.

(7) Id. Epiſt. 21. lib. 7. pag. 1021.

(8) Id. Epiſt. 4. & 10. lib. 1.

[F] He read public Lectures there.] He ſeems to contradict himſelf on this Subject; for ſometimes he ſays that he did it without Reward, and ſometimes that he was rewarded for it. " Publicis prælectioni- " bus quas ad honorem Illuſtriſſimæ Principis Mar- " garetæ Dolani feci GRATIS.—In the public Lectures, " which I read GRATIS at DOLE, in honour of the " moſt illuſtrious Princeſs Margareta. Thus he ſpeaks " in the Netherlands, he compoſed at that Time a Treatiſe of the Excellency of Women (g); but the Perſecution he ſuffered from the Monks hindered him from publiſhing it. He gave up the Cauſe, and went into England (b), where he wrote on the Epiſtles of St Paul (i), though he had another very private Affair in hand. Being returned to Cologne, he read Public Lectures there on the Queſtions of Divinity, which are called Quodlibetales; after which he went to the Emperor Maximilian's Army in Italy, and continued there, till Cardinal de Sainte Croix ſent for him to Piſa. Agrippa would have diſplayed his Abilities there in quality of Theologiſt of the Council, if That Aſſembly had continued. This would not have been the way to pleaſe the Court of Rome, nor to deſerve the obliging Letter he received from Leo X [G], and from whence we may conclude that he altered his Opinion. From that Time he taught Divinity publickly at Pavia, and at Turin (k). He read Lectures on Mercurius Triſmegiſtus, at Pavia, in the Year 1515 (l). His leaving That City, the ſame, or the following Year, looked more like running away, than retiring. This appears by the 49th Letter of his firſt Book, compared with the 520th. He had a Wife and Children at that Time [H]. It appears by the Second Book of his Letters, that his Friends

Digitized by Google

(g) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of that Treatiſe, dated at Antwerp in the Month of April, 1529.

(b) His Expoſtulation is dated from London, 1510.

(i) Agrippa, Defenſio Propoſit. pag. 596.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Operum, Tom. 2. p. 1073.

in his Complaint againſt the Cordelier Catilinet (9). But he ſays elſewhere, That he was admitted into the Society of the Profeſſors of Divinity, and gratify'd with a Penſion (10). " In Dola Burgundiæ publ. lectura " ſacras literas profeſſus ſum, ob quam ab hujus ſtudii " Doctoribus in Collegium receptus, inſuper regen- " tia & STIPENDIIS donatus ſum. —— At Dole, " in Burgundy, I read public Lectures in Divinity; " upon which Account I was admitted by the Doctors " of that Faculty into the College, and was beſides " rewarded with the Place of Regent, and a PEN- " SION." The way to reconcile theſe two things, is to ſay, That at firſt he read gratis, and afterwards for Money.

(9) Operum Agrippæ, Tom. 2. p. 510.

(10) In Defenſ. Propoſit. pag. 556.

[G] The obliging Letter he receiv'd from Leo X. (11)] It is dated from Rome, the twelfth of July, 1513, and ſign'd Petrus Bembus. He is there commended for his Zeal for the holy Apoſtolical See, on the good Character which the Nuncio had given of him. " Ex literis venerabilis fratris Ennii Epiſcopi Verulani " nuncii noſtri, aliorumque ſermonibus, de tua in " ſanctam ſedem Apoſtolicam devotione, deque tuo " in ejus libertate incolumitateque tuenda ſtudio di- " ligentiaque intelleximus: quod quidem nobis gratiſſi- " mum fuit. Quapropter te in Domino magnopere " commendamus, laudamuſque iſtum animum atque " virtutem (12). —— We have been inform'd, by the " Letters of our venerable Brother Ennius, Biſhop of " Verulan, our Nuncio, and from the Report of others, " of your Devotion to the holy See, and your Care and " Diligence in defending it's Privileges and Safety; " which gave us great Satisfaction. Wherefore we " greatly commend you in the Lord, and praiſe this " virtuous Diſpoſition." Let me remark, that This Brief is of no uſe towards clearing Agrippa from the Imputation of Necromancy (13), for it preceeded his ill Reputation ſeveral Years.

(11) It is the 38th of the 1ſt Book among thoſe of Agrippa.

(12) Operum Agrippæ, Tom. 2. p. 710.

(13) It was partly alledged to this Purpoſe, apud Crenium Animad. Philol. & Hiſtor. part. 2. p. 14, 15.

[H] He had a Wife and Children at that Time.] Though I make uſe of the Plural Number, yet I know he had but one Son. " Quorſum, quæſo, in " tam ſuſpecta tempeſtate, una cum uxore filioque ac " familia conſugiſſem, relicta Domo ac ſupellectile, " rebuſque omnibus? — How could I leave my Houſe, " Furniture, and all my Effects; and whither, in " ſuch ſuſpicious Times, could I fly with my Wife, my " Son, and my Family?" Thus he ſpeaks in the forty ninth Letter of the ſecond Book. He was very happy in his Wife, whom he thus deſcribes in another Place; " Ego quidem Deo omnipotenti innumeram " habeo gratiam, qui uxorem mihi conjunxit ſecun- " dum cor meum, virginem nobilem, bene moratam, " adoleſcentulam, formoſam, quæ ita ad meam vivit " conſuetudinem, ut ne contumelioſum verbum in- " ter nos intercidat, atque, quo fœliciſſimum me " dixero, quorſum ſe res vertunt, in proſperis & ad- " verſis, ſemper æquè mihi benigna, affabilis, con- " ſtans, integerrimi animi, ſani conſilii, ſemper apud " ſe manens (14). —— I give abundant Thanks to Al- " mighty God, who beſtow'd on me a Wife after my " own Heart, a young Lady of a good Family, well bred, " young, and handſome, who lives with me in ſo com- " plaiſant a manner, that we never exchang'd an " angry Word; and, to compleat my Happineſs, the " ſame both in Proſperity and Adverſity; alike affe- " ctionate, affable, and conſtant; honeſt, prudent, and " ever employ'd in the Care of her Family." One thing he forgot to tell us, I mean, whether ſhe was rich or not; for otherwiſe he repreſents her as endow'd with all he could deſire, handſome, young, virtuous, of a noble Family, and of a perpetual Complaiſance. He loſt her in the Year 1521, and, for what Reaſon I know not, he would have her buried at Metz, where he no longer reſided (15). He took Care to order, that all the Anniverſaries ſhould be performed, which he had founded for the Soul of the deceas'd (16). He married again at Geneva, in the Year 1522 (17). He praiſes this ſecond wife as much as the firſt, for he ſays, " Ante biennium hoc ſecun- " dam uxorem duxi virginem nobilem pulcherrimam- " que, quæ adeo ad meam vivit conſuetudinem ut " neſcias iſtane priorem, anne hanc illa, uxa alteram, " in amando obſequendoque æquet, an ſuperet (18). " —— Two Years ago, I married a ſecond Wife, a " young Lady of a good Family, and very beautiful; " who behaves with ſo much Complaiſance towards me, " that you would be at a loſs to determine which of " the two equals, or exceeds, the other in Duty and " Affection." The latter was more fruitful than the former; he had but one Son by the firſt; the ſecond lay in three times in two Years, and a fourth time the Year following; " Duos iſta mihi filios peperit, ambo " ſuperſtites, filiamque unam quæ vita exceſſit (19). " —— Uxor mea jam partui proxima eſt (20). —— " She has already brought me two Sons, both alive, " and one Daughter, who is dead. —— My Wife is " at this time near her Delivery." He does not ſay whether ſhe was rich; but one of his Friends aſſures us, that ſhe was. " —— Te nunc probâ, nobili, for- " moſa, ac locuplete ductâ uxore, &c. (21) —— Ha- " ving now married a virtuous, noble, handſome, and " rich Wife, &c." But this does not convince me; for Agrippa's Letters, after his ſecond Marriage, breath as much Poverty, as before. The Cardinal of Lorrain was Godfather to his third Son, by his ſecond Wife (22). When he ſet out from Paris for Antwerp, in the Month of July, 1528, he left his Wife big with Child at Paris (23). She was brought to Bed of her fifth Son, at Antwerp, the thirteenth of March, 1529 (24), and died in Auguſt, 1529, at Antwerp, extreamly lamented by her Husband, as appears by the eighty firſt Letter of the fifth Book; ſhe was near twenty ſix Years of Age. I do not find that he makes mention of his third Marriage in his Letters; but we find that he divorc'd his Wife in the Year 1535. Ubi conjugem Mechlinienſem Bonnæ repudiaſſet anno triceſimo quinto ſupra ſeſquimilleſimum. This was what John Wierus (25) informs us of, who had been his domeſtic Servant. If Thevet had known theſe Particulars, he would not have been ſatisfied with telling us that Agrippa married Mrs Louyſe Tyſſie, of a very noble Family, at twenty three Years of Age, and in the Year of our Lord 1509 (26); he would at leaſt have mention'd the other two Marriages in general. Melchior Adam knew more of them than Thevet; for he was not ignorant that Agrippa had been twice married: Duum uxorum maritus nobilium, & liberorum aliquot parens; but, beſides that he ſeems to know nothing of the third Marriage, he is guilty of ſeveral Chronological Errors, in ſpeaking of the firſt. Theſe are his Words, " Mortuo Maximiliano, ſub diverſis & principibus & " civitatum magiſtratibus, per Italiam, Hiſpaniam, " Angliam, Galliam egit, multaque egregia facinora " deſignavit. Tandem, laborum terra marique ex- " antlatorum fatur, ac quietis & otii cupidus, ducta

(14) Epiſt. 19. lib. 2. pag. 736.

(15) Ibid. & lib. 3. pag. 846.

(16) Ibid. 19. lib. 4. pag. 846.

(17) Ibid. 33. lib. 4. pag. 800. See likewiſe pag. 851.

(18) Ibid. 60. lib. 3. pag. 818.

(19) Ibid.

(20) Ibid. 74. lib. 3. pag. 826.

(21) Ibid. 33. lib. 3. pag. 800.

(22) Ibid. 76. lib. 3. pag. 827.

(23) Ibid. 55. lib. 5. pag. 933.

(24) Ibid. 68. lib. 5. pag. 941.

(25) Wier. de Magis, cap. 5. pag. 111.

(26) Thevet, Hommes Illuſtres, p. 222, 223.

Digitized by Google

Friends endeavoured in several Places to procure him some Honourable Settlement, either at Grenoble, Geneva, Avignon, or Metz. He preferred the Post, which was offered him in this last City, and I find that, in the Year 1518 (m), he exercised there the Employment of Syndic, Advocate, and Orator of the Town (n). The Persecutions, which the Monks raised against him, as well upon the account of his having refuted the common Opinion concerning the three Husbands of St Anne, as because he had protected a Country-Woman, who was accused of Witchcraft [I], made him leave the City of Metz. What induced him to treat of the Monogamy of St Anne, was his seeing, that James Faber Stapulensis, his Friend, was pull'd to pieces by the Preachers of Metz, for having maintained That Opinion (o). Agrippa retired to Cologne, his native City, in the Year 1520. willingly forsaking a City, which the Seditious Inquisitors had made an Enemy to Learning, and true Merit (p). It is indeed the Fate of all Countries, where such Persons grow powerful, of whatsoever Religion they are. He left his own City in the Year 1521, and went to Geneva (q); but his Fortunes did not much improve there; for he complained, that he was not rich enough to make a Journey to Chamberi (r), to sollicit the Pension, which he was made to hope for from the Duke of Savoy. This Expectation came to nothing; upon which Agrippa went from Geneva to Friburg in Switzerland (s), in the Year 1523 (t), to practise Physic there, as he had done at Geneva. The Year following he went to Lyons, and obtained a Pension from Francis I. He was in the Service of That Prince's Mother, in Quality of her Physician, but made no great improvement of his Fortune there; neither did he follow That Princess (u), when she departed from Lyons, in the Month of August, 1525, to conduct her Daughter to the Frontiers of Spain. He was suffered to dance attendance at Lyons, and imploy the Interest of his Friends in vain, to obtain the payment of his Pension: and, before he received it, he had the Vexation to be informed that he was struck out of the List (x). The Cause of his Disgrace was, that, having received Orders from his Mistress to inquire, by the Rules of Astrology, what Turn the Affairs of France would take, he expressed his Disapprobation too freely, that the Princess shou'd employ him in so vain a Curiosity, instead of making use of him in more important Matters. The Lady took this Lesson very ill (y); but she was yet more angry, when she heared, that Agrippa's Astrology promised the Constable of Bourbon new Triumphs [K]. Agrippa, finding himself discarded,

(m) Epist. 12. lib. 2.

(n) See his 4th Speech, Oper. Tom. 2. p. 1090.

(o) Epist. 25. lib. 2. pag. 743. See also pag. 745.

(p) Epist. 32. lib. 2. pag. 749.

(q) Epist. 7. lib. 3. pag. 784.

(r) Epist. 24. lib. 3. pag. 794.

(s) And not in Brisgaw, as Melchior Adam says.

(t) Epist. 41. lib. 3. &c.

(u) Epist. 70. lib. 3. pag. 828.

(x) Epist. 52. lib. 4. pag. 869.

(y) Epist. 37. lib. 4. pag. 859, 870.

" uxore, virgine nobili, sedem in Allobrogibus fixit,
" ut procul negotiis sibi ac musis viveret. Invitatus
" autem ab inclyta Mediomatricum repub. munus syn-
" dici, advocati & oratoris obivit (27). —— After the " Death of Maximilian, he liv'd successively under se-
" veral Governments, in Italy, Spain, England, and " France, and distinguish'd himself by many famous
" Actions. At length, tir'd with the Fatigues he had " undergone both by Sea and Land, and desirous of
" Ease and Retirement, he married a Wife, a young
" Lady of Birth; and settled in the Country of the " Allobroges, in order to retire from Business, and en-
" joy himself, and the Muses. But, upon the Invita-
" tion of the illustrious Republic of Metz, he discharg'd
" the Offices of Syndic, Advocate, and Orator." Observe, that the Emperor Maximilian died the 12th of January, 1519, and that Agrippa travell'd into Spain in 1508, and into England, in 1510. Here is already one Anachronism. After his return from England, he staid some time at Cologne, and afterwards went into Italy, where he still resided in the Year 1517 (28). He was at Metz in the Year 1518 (29). He did not return into Italy after his Departure from thence for Metz; here is, then, another Anachronism. Remark farther, that he was already married, in the Year 1515 (30). Where are then those great Fatigues, which he underwent both by Sea and by Land, after the Death of the Emperor Maximilian, which Matrimony was to free him from? How could he settle with his Wife in the Country of the Allobroges; he, who liv'd a roving Life with her in Italy? Add to this, that he did not settle in the Country of the Allobroges, before his Journey to Metz; and that he was Syndic of Metz before Maximilian died. Melchior Adam is full of the like Mistakes. Part of those, which I have observed, are so much the more excusable, as they are committed on the Authority of Agrippa himself, who, through Forgetfulness, or otherwise, told Margaret, Queen of Hungary, That he had travell'd to such and such Places, after the Death of Maximilian, &c. See the twenty first Letter of the seventh Book. I should be glad to see some one undertake to reconcile Melchior Adam with Thevet. According to the latter, Agrippa married at twenty three Years of Age; according to the former, not 'till after an infinite Number of Travels, and a world of Affairs; when, being fatigu'd and worn out, he desir'd at last a retir'd Life.

(27) Melch. Adam. in Vit. Medicor. pag. 17.

(28) Agrip. Epist. 1. lib. 2. pag. 722.

(29) Ibid. 12. lib. 2. pag. 730.

(30) Ibid. 47, 48. lib. 1.

[I] A Country-Woman, who was accused of Witchcraft.] The Dominican, Nicholas Savini, Inquisitor of the Faith at Metz, propos'd to put this Woman to the Torture, upon a meer Prejudice, grounded on her being the Daughter of a Witch, who had been burnt (31). Agrippa did what he could to prevent so irregular a Proceeding, but could not hinder the Woman from being put to the Question; however he was instrumental in proving her Innocence. Her Accusers were condemn'd in a Fine (32). The Penalty was too mild, and far from Retaliation. [This Country-Woman was of Vapey *, a Town situated near the Gates of Metz, and belonging to the Chapter of the Cathedral. There appear'd in Metsin, the principal Accuser of this Woman, such sordid Passions, and such a total Ignorance of Literature, and Philosophy, that Agrippa, who, in his Letter of the second of June, 1519, treats the Town of Metz, as, " Omnium bo-
" narum literarum virtutumque Noverca. —— The " Stepmother of Learning and Virtue." —— Agrippa, I say, might, by this satirical Reflexion, give rise to the Proverb, " Metis avara, scientiarum noverca —
" Metz the Covetous, and Stepmother of Arts and
" Sciences." REM. CRIT.]

(31) Ibid. 39. lib. 2. pag. 754.

(32) Ibid. 40. lib. 2. pag. 757. See likewise pag. 763.

* Villa Vapeya.

[K] Promis'd the Constable of Bourbon new Triumphs.] His Complaint of being employ'd in the Follies of Astrology might well give Offence. " Scripsi
" Senescallo, ut admoneat illam, ne ad tam indig-
" num artificium ingenio meo diutius abutatur, nec
" in has nugas ulterius impingere cogar, qui multo
" fœlicioribus studiis illi inservire queam (33). ——
" I wrote to the Seneschal, desiring him to advise her
" not to misapply my Abilities any longer in so unworthy
" an Art; and that I might for the future avoid these
" Follies; since I had it in my Power to be of Service
" to her by much happier Studies." But the Misfortune was, these Follies predicted Success to the opposite Party. " Rediit in mentem scripsisse me Senescallo;
" comperisse me in Borbonii natalitiis revolutionibus;
" illum frustratis vestris exercitibus etiam in hanc an-
" num victorem fore —— dixique intra me, ô infelix
" propheta! hoc vaticinio jam omnem Principis tuæ
" gratiam concacasti: Hoc est ulcus, hic antrax, hic
" carbo, hic cancer ille, quem noli me tangere di-
" cunt, quem tu imprudens tetigisti etiam cauterio (34).
" —— I remember I told the Seneschal, in a Letter,
" that in casting the Constable of Bourbon's Nativity,
" I had

(33) Agrip. Epist. 20. lib 4. pag. 854.

(34) Ibid. 62. lib. 4. pag. 886.

Digitized by Google

discarded, murmured, stormed, threatened [L], wrote, and did, all that his Impatient Humour suggested to him; but, in short, he was obliged to look out for another Settlement. He cast his Eyes on the Netherlands, and, having after long waiting obtained the necessary Passes, he arrived at Antwerp in the Month of July, 1528 (z). One of the Causes of these Delays was the rough Proceeding of the Duke of Vendôme, who, instead of signing the Pass, tore it, saying, He would not sign it for a Conjurer (aa). In the Year 1529, Agrippa found himself invited at once by the King of England, by the Emperor's Chancellor, by an Italian Marquis, and by Margaret of Austria, Governess of the Netherlands (bb). He accepted the Offers of the latter, and was made Historiographer to the Emperor, a Post procured him by That Princess. He published, by way of Prelude, The History of the Government of Charles V, and soon after he was obliged to compose That Princess's Funeral Oration, whose Death was in some manner the Life of our Agrippa; for She had been strangely prejudiced against him [M]. The same ill Office was done him with his Imperial Majesty (cc).

(z) Epist. 21. lib. 5. pag. 932.

(aa) Conspecto, sive audito nomine meo, præcipiti ira repente erupit propyrum totam, inquiens, se nequaquam signaturum in favorem divinatoris. Epist. 30. lib. 4. p g. 920.

(bb) Epist. 84. lib. 5. pag. 951.

" I had discovered that he would this Year likewise " gain the Victory over your Armies; upon which " I exclaim'd within myself, O unhappy Prophet! " By this Prediction, you have forfeited all the Favour " of your Mistress: This is the Ulcer, the Quicksilver " Earth, the Coal, the Cancer, which we must not " touch; which yet, imprudent as thou art, thou hast " ventur'd to touch even with a Burning iron." They, who are acquainted with the History of those Times, see plainly, that our Astrologer could not make his Court worse to the Mother of Francis I. than by promising good Success to the Constable. From that time Agrippa was look'd upon as a Bourbonist (35). To silence this Reproach, he represented the Service he had done to France, by dissuading four thousand foot Soldiers from following the Emperor's Party, and by engaging them in the Service of Francis I. He alledged his refusal of the great Advantages, which were promis'd him, when he left Fribourg, if he would enter into the Constable's Service. It appears by the fourth and sixth Letter of the fifth Book, that he held a strict Correspondence with that Prince, in the Beginning of the Year 1527. He advis'd, and counsell'd him, yet refusing to go, and join him, and promis'd him Victory. He assur'd him, that the Walls of Rome would fall down, upon the first Attack; he only forgot the chief Point, which is, that the Constable would be kill'd there. " Jam fata illis propinquam " stragem suamque pernitiem denunciant: Mox illa " superba mœnia vix oppugnata corruere videbis. Eja " ergo nunc, strenuissime Princeps, quem tantæ vi- " ctoriæ ducem fata constituunt, rumpe moras, perge " intrepidè quò cœpisti prosperè, aggredere fortiter, " pugna constanter; habes electissimorum militum " armatas acies: Adest cœlorum favor, aderit & justi " belli vindex Deus; nihil formidaveris, ingens siqui- " dem te manet gloriæ triumphus (36). —— The Fates " already denounce their approaching Ruin: You will " soon see those proud Walls demolish'd, upon the slightest " Attack. Go on, then, most valiant Prince, whom " the Fates have plac'd at the Head of so signal a Vi- " ctory; make no delay; go on, and prosper, as you " have begun; attack vigorously; fight undauntedly; " you have an arm'd Force of chosen Soldiers: Heaven " assists you, and God himself will fight so righteous a " Battle; fear nothing, for a glorious Triumph awaits " you." The Death of the Constable, which happened before Agrippa went out of Lyons, puts me in mind of three Errors of Melchior Adam. He says, that Agrippa, being invited first by the Constable, and afterwards by the Chancellor, went to the Court of Burgundy, and a little while after was very unfortunate in the loss of these two Patrons. This is to fall into three Anachronisms. I. The Constable was dead, before Agrippa left France, and he never had any Design of inviting him to the Court of the Princess Margaret (37). II. The Chancellor Gattinara did indeed invite him, but it was to the Court of Charles V. and it was an Invitation which Agrippa distinguished very plainly from That, which was offer'd to him, in relation to the Court of Margaret (38). III. He was already in the Netherlands, when the Chancellor made Proposals to him.

[L] Agrippa, finding himself discarded, murmur'd, storm'd, threatned.] He had used Menaces, before his Pensions was taken from him. Enrag'd at his Salary's being stopp'd, and seeing himself despis'd, he declar'd he was tempted to perpetrate some base Act. " Crede mihi " (says he in a Letter to a Friend) (39) eò se inclinant res meæ, atque animus, ni tuis precibus celeri- " que adjuver auxilio, malo aliquo utar consilio, si- " quidem & malis artibus nonnunquam bona fortuna " parata est. —— Believe me, my Affairs, and my " Mind, are in such a Posture, that, unless I am pre- " vented by your Intreaties, and speedy Advice, I shall " attempt something vile; since good Fortune is some- " times procur'd by base Arts." When he knew that he was cashired, he wrote several thundering Letters, and threatned to publish a Discovery of all the Intrigues of those Courtiers, who had ruin'd him (40). He was so brutish as to say, That for the future he should look upon the Princess, whose Counsellor and Physician he had been, as a cruel and perfidious Jezabel: Nec ultra illam ego pro principe mea (jam enim esse desiit) sed pro atrocissima & perfida quadam Jesabele mihi habendam decrevi (41). What would he not have done in such a Rage, and in such a thirst of Revenge, if he had had so much Credit with the Devil, as they pretend he had? No Author, I believe, has asserted, That this Indignation of Agrippa was fatal to any Person of the Court of France. This unfortunate Man was not better pleased with the Court of Charles V. He presented a Petition to That Prince's Privy Council, wherein he represented what Harm and Good he could do: His Menaces were the most intelligible in the World; but no ill Consequence attended the Council's disregard of them. " Cogeretis me accep- " tam ea repulsa injuriam ad novarum rerum licen- " tiam transferre, & malo aliquo consilio (ceu quale " Hermocles dedit Pausaniæ) uti oportere —— Quin " & malis artibus fæpissimè bona fortuna parta est —— " Sed interea memineritis inter Æsopi Apologos esse, " murem aliquando, subveniisse leoni, & scarabeum " expugnasse Aquilam (42). —— You would drive " me, by this unjust Repulse, to new Plots, and wicked " Designs; such as Hermocles advis'd Pausanias to. " —— Nay very often Success attends upon base Arts. " —— but remember, in the mean time, that, in Æ- " sop's Fables, a Mouse once assisted a Lion, and a " Beetle got the better of an Eagle.

[M] For she had been strangely prejudiced against him.] He gives us the following Account of the Matter, after having complained that they suffered him to perish with Hunger. " Quod ad te scribam non habeo aliud " nisi quod ego hic egregie esurio, ab istis aulicis diis to- " tus præteritus. Quid magnus ille Jupiter, suspicari " nequeo. Ego quanto fuerim in periculo, jam primum " resciv i; tantum enim dictum est mihi; prævaluerant " cuculliones illi apud Dominam, sed muliebriter " religiosam principem, ut nisi illa mox periisset, " jam ego, quod maximum crimen est, monachalis " majestatis sacræque cucullæ reus, tanquam in reli- " gionem Christianam impius, periturus fuissem (43). " —— I have only to inform you, that I am here " perishing with Hunger, being wholly neglected by " you Deities of the Court. What the great Jupiter " himself (44) intends, I cannot guess. I have just " learned what great Danger I was in; for it has " been hinted to me; that the Brethren of the Cowl " had so influenced this bigotted Princess, that, had " not her Death intervened, I should have been con- " victed of Treason against the Majesty of Monkery, " and the sacred Cowl, (a Crime of the most heinous " Nature) and have suffered as a Blasphemer of the " Christian Religion." Generally speaking, a Mistress is more to be feared than a Master, when any Person is accused of Irreligion.

(35) Id. ib. pag. 881.

(36) Ibid. 6. lib. 5. pag. 900. This Letter was written from Lyons the 30*th of* March, 1527.

(37) We mean by this the Court of Burgundy.

(38) Epist. 8. lib. 5. pag. 951.

(39) Ibid. 25. lib. 4. pag. 850.

(40) See the 52*d and the* 62*d of the* 4*th Book.*

(41) Ibid. 62. lib. 4. pag. 884. See the 52*d Letter of the* 5*th Book, which is full of Indignation; and the* 23*d of the same Book, wherein he says,* That that Princess would be very ill advis'd, if she took him into her Service again.

(42) Ibid. 22. lib. 6. pag. 979.

(43) Agrip. Epist. 15. lib. 6. pag. 968.

(44) That is to say, Charles V.

[N] It

Digitized by Google

jesty (cc). His Treatise of the Vanity of Sciences, which he caused to be printed in 1530, terribly exasperated his Enemies (dd). That which he published soon after at Antwerp (ee), of the Occult Philosophy (ff), afforded them a still farther pretence to defame him. It was well for him that Cardinal Campegius, the Pope's Legate, and Cardinal de la Mark, Bishop of Liege, were his Advocates (gg). But their good Offices could not procure him one Penny of his Pension, as Historiographer, nor prevent his being imprisoned at Brussels, in the Year 1531 (hh). But He was soon released. The following Year he made a Visit to the Archbishop of Cologne (ii), to whom he had dedicated his Occult Philosophy, and from whom he had received a very obliging Letter (kk). The fear of his Creditors made him stay longer in the Country of Cologne, than he desired (ll). He strenuously opposed the Inquisitors, who had put a stop to the printing of his Occult Philosophy, when he was publishing a new Edition of it, corrected, and augmented, at Cologne. See the XXVIth and the following Letters of his Seventh Book. In spite of them, the Impression was finished, which is That of the Year 1533. He continued at Bonn till the Year 1535, and was then desirous of returning to Lyons. He was imprisoned in France for something, which he had wrote against the Mother of Francis I, but was released, at the Request of certain Persons, and went to Grenoble, where he died the same Year, 1535 (mm). Some say, That he died in the Hospital; but, according to Gabriel Naudé, it was at the House of the Receiver General of the Province of Dauphiné, whose Son was first President of Grenoble (nn). Mr Allard, at p. 4. of the Bibliotheque of Dauphiné, says that Agrippa died at Grenoble, in the House, which belonged to the Family of Ferrand, in Clerks-street, and was then in the possession of the President Vachon, and that he was buried in the Convent of the Dominicans. He lived always in the Roman Communion; therefore it ought not to have been said that he was a Lutheran [N]. I do not believe that

(cc) Epist. 15. lib. 6. pag. 969.

(dd) Ibid. 20. lib. 6. pag. 974.

(ee) Ibid. 14. lib. 6. pag. 968.

(ff) See the Remark [Q]

(gg) Epist. 20. lib. 6. pag. 975. Ibid. 12. lib. 7. pag. 1010. Ibid. 21. lib. 7. pag. 1022.

(hh) Ibid. 23. lib. 6. pag. 980.

(ii) Ibid. 6. lib. 7.

(kk) Ibid. 1. lib. 7.

(ll) Ibid. 21. lib. 7. pag. 1024.

(mm) John Wierus de Magis, cap. 5. pag. 111.

(nn) Naudé's Apology for Great Men, pag. 427.

[N] It ought not to have been said that he was a Lutheran.] I confess, I have not observed in his Letters, that, when he speaks of Luther, or his Followers, he makes use of opprobrious Language, or injurious Reflexions. I own farther, that he inquired particularly into the Tenets of Luther, and his Followers, in controversial Points; but this does not shew, that he approved of that Reformer's Doctrine. May not the most rigid Protestants of the Confession of Geneva give orders to purchase for them all the Books, which the Sectaries of Transilvania cause to be printed; and would it not be very ridiculous to pretend, that therefore they agree in Opinion with those Heretics? They, who embraced the Reformation of Luther, did not treat That Doctor with That Indifferency, which we meet with in Aggrippa's Letters, I mean, without praising, or blaming him. If Agrippa was the Author of the eighty second Letter of the third Book, it could be no longer doubted, that he was a stanch Lutheran; but tho' That Letter is inscribed, Agrippa ad amicum, it is certain that it was not written by Agrippa: which I thus demonstrate. The Author of That Letter tells that his Wife was brought to bed of a Son, in the Month of November 1525. Now Agrippa's Wife was brought to bed of a Son in the foregoing Month of July; this is plain by the seventy sixth Letter of the third Book, wherein it appears likewise that the Cardinal of Lorrain was God-father to the Child. It is incontestable, then, that Agrippa did not write the Letter in question. I omit that he was not at Strasburg, but at Lyons, at the time, when That Letter was written from Strasburg. So that they, who would produce this as a Proof in favour of Sixtus Senensis, who said that Agrippa was a Lutheran (45), would supply him with an insufficient Evidence. [The Truth is, Agrippa, in the nineteenth Chapter of his Apology, speaks in such lofty Terms of Luther, and with such Contempt of the principal Adversaries of that Reformer, that it is plain Sixtus Senensis was induced from thence to affirm, that Agrippa was a Lutheran. As this was a proper Place for producing this Piece, rather than certain of Agrippa's Letters, there is reason to believe Mr Bayle had not read it so carefully, as he had done the Letters. Rem. Crit.] Quenstedt confuted Sixtus Senensis by the sixth Chapter of the Treatise of the Vanity of Sciences, wherein Agrippa calls Luther an Arch-Heretic. This Confutation is infinitely more solid, than That which a Divine of Utrecht made use of, by alledging the Professorship of Divinity, to which Agrippa was preferred at Dole and at Pavia, and the Post he enjoyed under the Cardinal de Sainte Croix, for the Council of Pisa (46). This proves nothing at all; because all those Honours of Agrippa preceded Luther's first preaching against the Pope. If any one asks me, why Agrippa speaks in harsher Terms of Luther, in his Books of the Vanity of Sciences, than in his Letters, I shall not answer, that it is a Work, wherein he proposed to censure the whole World: I chuse to offer another Reason. When he composed this Treatise, it is likely he had given up the Hopes he at first conceived of Luther. I believe, that, at first, he, as well as Erasmus, looked upon this Reformer as an Hero, who would put a stop to the Tyranny, which the mendicant Friars, and the rest of the Clergy, exercised over the Minds and Consciences of Men. Being ignorant and voluptuous, they encouraged a thousand paultry Superstitions, and would not suffer, that any one should study polite Literature; they would neither emerge from their Barbarity, nor suffers others to do it: Insomuch that to be Witty, Learned, and Polite, was sufficient to expose a Man to their Hate and Indignation. Agrippa, Erasmus, and some other great Geniuses, were pleased, that Luther had broke the Ice; they expected the critical Hour of honest Mens Deliverance from Oppression; but when they saw that things did not take the Turn they expected, they were the first to cast a Stone at Luther. Let us observe, however, that Agrippa was very fluctuating in his Sentiments. He protested to Erasmus, when he sent him his Declamation on the Vanity of Sciences, that he held no other Opinions, than those of the Catholic Church. Illud te admonitum volo, me de his quæ ad Religionem attinent nequaquam secus sentire quam sentit Ecclesia Catholica (47). He wished, in his Dedication of the Apology for this Declamation to the Pope's Legate, that God would purge his Church from the Impiety of Heretics (48), and a little after he wrote to Melanthon in a most obliging manner (49), and desired him to compliment, in his Name, the invincible Heretic Martin Luther. "Salutabis mihi invictum illum hæreticum "Martinum Lutherum, qui, ut in Actibus ait Paulus, "servit Deo secundum sectam quam hæresim vocant "—— Pay my Compliments to the Invincible Heretic, "Martin Luther, who, as St Paul says in the Acts, "worships God after the way, which they call Heresy;" and expresses at the same time his earnest Desire to come out of Babylon. For, speaking of Charles V. he says, "Utinam hic Nabuchodonosor aliquando ex "bestia rediret in hominem, aut ego relinquere pos-"sem istud Ur Chaldæorum (50). —— I wish this "Nabuchodonosor would return from the Beast to "the Man, or that I could depart out of this Ur "of the Chaldees." There was a time when the Brethren were recommended to him (51); thus, what we have seen that he wrote to Melanthon, was a return of certain former Emotions, which his Disgraces, and the unjust Proceedings of the Catholic Divines, had inspired him with. However, it is ve-

(45) Sixtus Senens. Biblioth. Sanct. lib. 5. annot. 73. apud Quenstedt de Patris Illustr. Viror. pag. 144. Del Rio Disquisit. lib. 2. Quæst. 6. & Tannerus on the Treatise De Potentia Angelorum, Quæst. 3. make Agrippa a Protestant. See likewise Voëtius, Disput. part. 3. pag. 616.

(46) Voëtius ubi supra.

(47) Epist. 36. lib. 6. pag. 999.

(48) Ibid. 22. lib. 7. pag. 1013.

(49) See the 13th Letter of the 7th Book, pag. 1013. He seems to favour the New Religion in the 18th and 52d Letters of the 3d Book.

(50) Ibid. 16. lib. 7. pag. 1013.

(51) Ibid. 13, & 34. lib. 3. See likewise Epist. 1. of the same Book.

Digitized by Google

that he wrote in favour of the Divorce of Henry VIII [O]. As to Magic Art, of which he is accuſed, every one may judge as he pleaſes. One thing I aſſert; which is, that the Letters, which he wrote to his intimate Friends, without any apparent deſign of printing them, carry all the Marks of a Man uſed to religious Reflexions, and the Language of Chriſtianity. His Accuſers were not well informed of his Adventures [P]; which weakens their Teſtimony. We ſhall have Reaſon to be ſurprized at ry certain, that he lived, and died, in the Romiſh Communion. We ſhall touch upon ſome of his Opinions in the Remark [T].

[O] That he wrote in favour of the Divorce of Henry VIII.] I have read, in the Work of a very learned Man (52), "That Cranmer, going into Ger- "many, where he became acquainted with the fa- "mous Cornelius Agrippa, diſcourſed with him con- "cerning the Divorce, and ſo ſtrongly repreſented "to him the Neceſſity of it, that this great Man, "warmly defending King Henry's Purſuits, was treat- "ed with great Rigour by the Emperor, and at "laſt died in Priſon." He, who criticiſed on this Work, anſwered among other things; I. That R. Wakefield, who wrote at that time for Henry VIII. ſaid poſitively, that he anſwered the Book of the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and another, which was believed to be wrote by Vives, or Agrippa. II. That Agrippa died in France, and was never Priſoner in Germany (53). I find ſome things in Agrippa's Letters, which convince me that he was not of Cranmer's Opinion. His Imperial Majeſty's Ambaſſador at London (54) wrote to Agrippa on the twenty ſixth of June, 1531. to exhort him to maintain the Queen's Intereſt (55); and put him in mind of a Paſſage of the Vanity of Sciences, wherein Henry VIII. is cenſured. "Hodie "adhuc neſcio cui regi perſuaſum audio, ut liceat "ſibi jam plus viginti annorum uxorem dimittere, "& nubere pellici (56). —— I am informed, there "is a certain King, at this time o' Day, who is per- "ſuaded, that it is lawful for him to divorce a Wife, "to whom he has been married theſe twenty Years, "and eſpouſe an Harlot." Agrippa anſwered, that he would willingly engage in this Undertaking, provided the Emperor would ſend him his Orders, or his Permiſſion. He ſhewed very ſtrongly, that he deteſted thoſe cowardly Divines, who approved of the Divorce. The following Paſſage relates to the Sorbonne. "Non eſt mihi incognitum queis artibus "res hæc apud Pariſiorum Sorbonam tractata eſt, "quæ cæteris tanti ſceleris auſum temerario porrexit "exemplo. Vix me continere queo quin imitatus "poetam illum exclamem, Dicite Sorbonici in Theo- "logia quid valet aurum? Quantum pietatis & fidei "illorum pectore clauſum putabimus, quorum vena- "lis magis quam ſincera conſcientia eſt, qui extimeſcendas univerſo orbi Chriſtiano determinationes "auro venales fecerunt, ac ſervatam tot annis fidei "& ſinceritatis opinionem nunc tandem extrema "avaritiæ infamia corruperunt (57). —— I am not "to learn how artfully this Affair has been managed "by the Sorbonne at Paris, which ſet the reſt a "raſh Example of ſo vile an Attempt. I can ſcarce "forbear exclaiming, in the Language of the Poet, "Tell me, ye Sorboniſts, the mighty Power of Gold "in Divinity. What ſhare of Piety and Fidelity can "we think dwells in their Breaſts, whoſe Conſcience "is rather mercenary than ſincere; who have expoſed "to ſale Deciſions ſhocking to the whole Chriſtian "World; and have corrupted the Reputation of Fide- "lity and Sincerity, maintained by them for ſo many "Years, by the utmoſt Infamy of Avarice?" Nevertheleſs he repreſents the Danger, to which he ſhould expoſe himſelf, by writing againſt a Divorce, which ſo many Divines had approved, who, ſays he, bear me a Grudge on account of my Vanity of Sciences. The Ambaſſador returned to the Charge, and put him in Hopes, that the Queen of England would write to the Emperor, or to the Queen of Hungary, concerning the Method of writing on That Subject; and explained to him the reaſon, why Eraſmus, Vives, and other good Pens of the times ought not to be preferred to him (58). Agrippa looked upon himſelf as engaged in the Work; for, in the Letter, which he wrote to the Queen of Hungary, after he retired to Bonn, he repreſented, how he had applied himſelf altogether to his Office of Hiſtoriographer, though he had not yet reaped any Profit by it. I collect Memoirs, ſays he, for the Hiſtory of the War of Italy and Hungary; and I have ſtill a greater Deſign in my Head, which is to write in favour of your Aunt, Queen Catherine. "Sed longe majus his "negotium pro veſtri ſanguinis decore, pro tua, "inquam, matertera, Angliæ celebratiſſima Regina, "meis humeris impoſitum ſuſcepi, in quo licet multi "haſtenus operam ſuam collocarunt, nullus adhuc "nodum rei diſſecuit (59). —— But I have under- "taken a much greater Task than this, for the Ho- "nour of your Family, I mean, in favour of your "Aunt, the moſt illuſtrious Queen of England; in "which though many have employed their Pens, no "one has hitherto ſolved the Difficulty." I believe this Deſign was never executed; for the Author, being in Diſgrace at the Imperial Court, doubtleſs thought it not proper to expoſe himſelf to the Indignation of the King of England. If Cranmer gained him over, he muſt have made a Convert of him at ſooneſt in the Year 1532; and if Robert Wakefield publiſhed his Book before the Year 1532 (60) it is certain, that the Treatiſe, which he confutes, and which was aſcribed to Vives or to Agrippa, by no means belongs to Agrippa. Note, that Sanders, who mentions the Names of ſeveral Authors, who wrote againſt the Divorce (61), takes no notice of the latter. [Agrippa was not yet gained over, in the Year 1533, the time, in which, if I miſtake not, he publiſhed his Apology againſt the Doctors of Louvain; and he could not do it afterwards, without the ſame ſcandalous Prevarication, which he charges the Sorbonne with. "Eadem, ſays he, ſpeaking of "that famous Body, his recentibus annis determina- "vit, Papam non poſſe diſpenſare, ut frater uxo- "rem ducat fratris mortui ſine liberis, atque prop- "terea matrimonium inter Angliæ Regem & Cæſaris "amitam, velut contra jus naturale & divinum, "indiſpenſabile, pro inceſtuoſo, abominabili, & ſa- "crilego adulterio damnarunt, magna Sorbonæ infa- "mia: cum non multis annis ante pro Auguſtino "Furnario Civi ac Pratricio Genuenſi determina- "viſſet oppoſitum *. —— The ſame Society determined "lately, that the Pope could not diſpenſe with a Bro- "ther's marrying the Wife of his Brother, dying "without Children; for which Reaſon they condem- "ned, for an inceſtuous, abominable, and ſacrilegious "Adultery, the Marriage between the King of England and Cæſar's Aunt, as being contrary to Laws "Divine and Human, and not to be diſpenſed with, "to the great Scandal of the Sorbonne; which not "many Years before, had decreed the very reverſe, "in favour of Auguſtinus Furnarius, Citizen and "Senator of Genoa." It is not only in the Edition of 1536, that I find this Paſſage, which Crenius tells us was omitted in the Treatiſe of the Vanity of Sciences in the Edition of Lyons. This Paſſage appeared again in the Edition of 1539; and it is to be met with in all the preceeding Editions of that Treatiſe. REM. CRIT.]

[P] His Accuſers were not well informed of his Adventures.] I ſaid in the firſt Remark, that Paul Jovius, Thevet and Martin del Rio are his chief Accuſers, and I promiſed to ſhew their Faults; I will now be as good as my Word.

I. Paul Jovius makes him die at Lyons in a Hedge Tavern, and charges him with the infamous Suſpition of Magic, for a Reaſon, which I am going to produce. Agrippa, ſays he (62), had always a Devil with him, in the Shape of a black Dog; as they preſs'd him to repent at the Approach of Death, he took off a Collar from the Dog's Neck adorned with Studs, which formed ſome Necromantic Inſcriptions, and ſaid to him, Go unhappy Beaſt, who art the Cauſe of my everlaſting Ruin. The Dog ran immediately to the Saone, and, caſting himſelf into the River, never came out again. This Author has greatly commended Agrippa for his Wit, and Learning, ſo far as to ſay that his Learning had procured him the Dignity of a Knight, which the Emperor had beſtowed upon him. Vir educatus in literis, (52) Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation.

(53) Le Grand's Hiſtory of the Divorce of Henry VIII. Tom. 2. pag. 116. See alſo Tom. 1. pag. 249.

(54) In Agrippa's Letters, he is called Euſtochius Chapuſius; and in thoſe of Eraſmus, Euſtathius Chapuſius.

(55) Epiſt. 19. lib. 6. pag. 973.

(56) Agrippa de Vanit. Scientiarum, cap. 63. pag. 124.

(57) Agripp. Epiſt. 20. lib. 6. pag. 974.

(58) Ibid. 29. lib. 6. pag. 986. See likewiſe Ibid. 33. pag. 996.

(59) Ibid. 21. lib. 7. pag. 1024.

(60) Mr le Grand, Tom. 1. p. 249. ſays, That the Title of that Work is Cotzer. Now according to the Catalogue of Oxford, p. 246. the Cotzer was printed at London in the Year 1527.

(61) Sand. Hiſtor. Schiſm. Angl.

* Agrippa, Apolog. &c. cap. 2.

(62) Paulus Jovius, in Eloz. c. 91.

Digitized by Google

at their Oversights, and the Effects they have produced, notwithstanding the Negligence, wherewith they enquired into those Facts. After all, if he was a Magician, he & à Cæsare eruditionis ergò Equestris ordinis dignitate cohonestatus (63). Let us begin our Criticism with this.

(63) Id. ib.

It is certain, from the Testimony of Agrippa, that his Order of Knighthood was the Reward of his Military Exploits (64). Besides, he did not die at Lyons; and lastly, John Wierus, his Domestic, testifies, that the black Dog was a true Dog, and that he often led him with a hair String. "Silentio involvi, "says he (65), diutius ob veritatis prærogativam non "patiar quod in diversis aliquot scriptoribus legerim, Diabolum forma canis ad extremum Agrippæ "halitum comitem ipsi fuisse, & postea nescio quibus modis evanuisse. Satis equidem mirari hic "nequeo tantæ existimationis viros tam insulsè aliquando loqui, sentire, & scribere, ex inanissimo vulgi rumore. Canem hunc nigrum mediocris staturæ, gallico nomine Monsieur (quod Dominum sonat) nuncupatum novi ego si quis alius familiarissime, quem nimirum non raro, ubi Agrippam sectarer, loro ex pilis concinnato alligatum duxi; at verè naturalis erat canis masculus, cui alias fœmellam fere colore & reliqua corporis constitutione similem, quam Gallicè Madamoiselle (Dominam) appellabat, me presente, adjunxit. —— In justice to Truth, I shall not conceal the Matter of Fact of what I have read in several Authors, that a Devil, in the Shape of a Dog, attended Agrippa to his last Breath, and afterwards disappeared I know not how. I cannot sufficiently express my wonder, that Men of such Reputation speak, think, and write so sillily, upon no other Foundation than Common Fame. I was perfectly acquainted with this black Dog; who was of a middle Size, and called by the French Name of Monsieur; whom I have often lead after Agricola by a String of twisted Hair. He was a real Dog; and his Master, in my Presence, gave him for a Companion a Bitch of the same Colour, Size, and kind; which he called Madamoiselle." This Author adds, that Agrippa was very fond of this Dog; that he kissed him often; that he made him eat sometimes at his Table; that he took him to bed with him; and that, when Wierus and Agrippa studied at the same Table, the Dog always lay between them among a heap of Papers. Now, because Agrippa continued whole Weeks without going out of his Stove, and yet was acquainted with almost every Transaction in several Countries of the World, some silly People gave out that his Dog was a Devil, from whom he had all his Information. It is not long, since a Soldier, who is a French Refugee, told me very seriously, that when Mr de Melac (66) had his Mastiff with him, he always returned victorious. He assured me, that, in the general Opinion of the Soldiers, that Dog was a familiar Spirit, who revealed all the Enemies Posts, their Numbers, Designs, &c. to his Master. Perhaps Mr de Melac was not displeased, that it was so believed. Such a Notion might make his Soldiers fear nothing under his Conduct (67). Thus you see, on what sort of Reports Paul Jovius founded his Opinion.

(64) See above the Remark [D.]

(65) Jo. Wierus de Magis, cap. 5. pag. 111.

(66) Lieutenant General of the Armies of France: He served in the Armies of Germany, during the War, which was ended in the Year 1697. See the Remark [B] of the Article LANDAU, towards the End.

(67) See what Plutarch relates of Sertorius's Hind, in the Life of that General.

II. Let us go on to Thevet. "It cannot be denied, says he (68), "but that Agrippa was miserably enchanted to the most cunning and execrable Magic, "that can be imagined, and of which he made such "evident Profession, in the Sight, and to the Knowledge of every one (as the following Discourse "shall justify), that it is impossible to deny it by "Palliations or Disguises." Let us see what the Proofs, which this present Discourse brings, are reduced to. In the first Place, "Antony de Leve was "so fond of this Man, that, by his Counsel, Advice, and Prudence, he compassed his high Designs, and ambitious Undertakings; which made "some Persons, who were jealous of That Spaniard's "Victories, say, That, by Magic Art, he griped "his Enemies with his crooked and gouty Hands, "in such a Manner, that many valiant Captains could "not do the like, with the clashing of their Arms, "and a furious Fight (69)." In the second Place, "Agrippa's Instructions are so unreasonable, that "Dr John Wierus, though he praises and exalts "him greatly in several Places of his Works, as his "good Master, yet is sometimes obliged to give him "a kick o' the Breech, and disown him (70)." He refers us to the forty fourth Chapter of the second Book of the Illusions and Apparitions of Spirits (71), as a Proof that John Wierus laughed (with Cardan in the eighteenth Book of Subtilty) at Agrippa's wild Imaginations, which invented more than ridiculous Apparitions. In the third Place, "His Book "of Occult Philosophy was condemned and censured by the Christians ----- and for that Reason "Agrippa was forced to leave Flanders, where he "was not suffered to profess Magic; so that he went "to Italy, where he lived about three Years, and "poured out his Poison in such abundance, that several good Persons, perceiving that he had infected "the Air of Italy with it in so little a time, pursued him so close, that he retired to Dole, where he "publickly read upon the Book de verbo mirifico (72)." In the fourth Place, "He darken'd Burgundy in such "a manner with the Smoak and Mist of his Black "Art, that if he had not fled for it, it is to be "feared, they would have enlightened him with "Fire nearer than he would have desired." In the fifth Place, "He went to Lyons in a wretched Condition, and destitute of Money, where he tried "all the means he could to subsist, and got so little, "that he died in a pitiful Tavern, abhorred by every "body, who detested him as a cursed and execrable "Magician, because he always carried with him a "Devil in the shape of a Dog." Thevet adds to this the remaining part of the Story, which Paul Jovius inserted in his Elogies.

(68) Thevet's History of Illustrious Men, Tom. 7. pag. 221. Edit. of Paris, 1671. in 8 Vols in 12°

(69) Id. ib. pag. 223.

(70) Id. ib. pag. 225.

(71) I have not met with any Book with this Title, or such a Division, in the Works of John Wierus, printed at Amsterdam, 1660. in 4°.

(72) Thevet. ubi supra, p. 226.

It would be easy to shew the Insufficiency of these five Proofs. It is not necessary to refute the first, since Thevet acknowledges that Antony de Leve did not apply to Agrippa for any necromantic and wicked Charm (73), but rather on account of his surprizing and uncommon Genius (74); and, that the Emperor did not take him into his Service at the Intercession of Antony de Leve, but upon the Assurance which was given him, that, by his mature and settled Judgment, he was capable of putting an end to the weighty Affairs he had then in hand. So that the accused Person is cleared by the very Confession of the Accuser himself: It will be much more difficult to clear the latter from the Imputation of very gross Ignorance. I have not observed any Traces in Agrippa's Letters of his Correspondence with Antony de Leve; and I wonder that so many learned Persons have reported, on the Credit of such an Author as Thevet, that Agrippa was a Favourite of Antony de Leve, and a Captain in his Troop (75). He was never in the Spanish Service; but served only in the Troops of the Emperor Maximilian; and I believe he never bore Arms, after the Speech he made at Pavia in the Year 1515. Part of That Harangue is as follows: "Neque mireris, Marchio Illustris, Joannes "Gonzaga strenuiss. militum dux, quod cum me "proximis his annis fæliciss̃imis Cæsareis castris Præfectum cognosceres, nunc me sacrarum literarum "præpositum pulpito cernas (76). —— Nor wonder, Illustrious Marquis, and most valiant Commander, "John Ganzaga, that you now see me in the Rostrum, "at the Head of sacred Literature, whom not long "since you beheld a Leader in Cæsar's victorious "Army." He continued likewise some time in Italy; his Patron there was William Paleologus Marquis of Monferrat, to whom he dedicated his Treatise De triplici Ratione cognoscendi Deum —— of the three ways of knowing God, in the Year 1516 (77): He taught at Turin, and repassed the Alps about the beginning of the Year 1518 (78). Let any one shew me that Antony de Leve served the Emperor Maximilian. But he is guilty of a still more inexcusable Ignorance. Agrippa did not obtain the Title of Counsellor and Historiographer to Charles V, but by the Interest of certain Friends, whom he met with at the Court of the Princess Margaret, Governess of the Netherlands. Charles V. was not at that time in the Low Countries, but came thither some time after, so prejudiced against Agrippa, that if it had not been for the good Offices of Cardinal Campegius, and Cardinal de la Mark, he would have caus'd him to have been imprison'd. The Sieur Clavigni of St Honorine, says, that

(73) Id. ib. pag. 223.

(74) Id. ib. pag. 225.

(75) Naudé's Apology for Great Men, pag. 405. See also Teissier, Elog. taken out of Thuanus, Tom. 2. p. 99. See, below, Citation (79).

(76) Agrip. Oper. Tom. 2. p. 1075.

(77) Ibid. p. 480. & 718.

(78) See his Letters, pag. 728, 730.

Digitized by Google

he is a ſtrong Proof of the Impotency of Magic; for never any Man miſcarried more frequently than he, nor was oftner in fear of wanting Bread. We ſhall have reaſon to think the Financers of Francis I. and thoſe of Charles V. were very well ſatisfied of his Innocency in this reſpect; if we conſider how they diverted themſelves with him, when he apply'd for his Penſion. There are ſome Errors of Fact in the manner of ſome that Agrippa's End would have been as tragical as that of Lucilius Vaninius, if Cardinal Campegius, and Anthony de Leve, his Protectors, had not prevail'd upon Charles V. not to puniſh him (79). He did not ſee Agrippa; neither did he order him his Salary; ſo far was he from making uſe of his Counſels to extricate himſelf from the great Affairs he had in hand. It is a pleaſant Proof of Agrippa's great Abilities in the Civil Law, to alledge, that Charles V. admitted him into the Number of his Counſellors. He had attain'd, ſays Thevet (80), to ſo great a Knowledge in the Civil Law, that (as I have obſerved above) Charles V. admitted him into the Number of his Counſellors. He had ſaid in the foregoing Page, that Agrippa was ſo well retein'd at the Emperor's Court, that he was one of his Counſellors. Is it not well known, that the Title of King's Counſellor is given to many Perſons, to Phyſicians, Hiſtoriographers, and Authors, who have as little ſhare in the Councils of their Prince, as the meaneſt Citizen? Thevet's ſecond Reaſon proves nothing. Agrippa had ſpoke of ſome Apparitions ſo ridiculous, that one of his beſt Friends laugh'd at them; therefore he was a Magician. What would become of Bodinus, Martin del Rio, le Loyer, and moſt of the Demonographers, if ſuch a way of arguing was admitted? His third Reaſon ſwarms with Falſhoods. If Agrippa had profeſs'd Magic, they would not have been ſatisfy'd with baniſhing him from Flanders. Such a Profeſſion is not ſo mildly puniſh'd. He was never in Italy after the Cenſure of his Occult Philoſophy. This Work did not appear 'till the Year 1531. If Agrippa had pour'd out the Poiſon of his Magic, in ſuch abundance, in Italy, would Cardinal de Sainte Croix have choſen him for one of the Divines of the Council of Piſa? Would the Pope have addreſs'd ſo complaiſant a Brief to him in the Year 1515 (81)? So far is it from being true, that Agrippa, upon his being expell'd Italy, retir'd to Dole, that he did not go into Italy, 'till after he had left Dole. The fourth Reaſon takes for granted what is falſe. Agrippa brought himſelf into a Scrape at Dole, by favouring the Hypotheſis of Capnio, whoſe Book De verbo mirifico he explained. The long Quarrel between the Monks and Capnio is well known. The Cordelier Catilinet, chooſing rather to preach againſt Agrippa before the Princeſs Margaret, than to enter the Liſts with him at Dole, took occaſion to vent his Spleen againſt him at Ghent, in the Pulpit of Truth. But he does not accuſe him of Magic; he charges him only with addicting himſelf to the Jewiſh Cabala, and perverting the Scripture by cabaliſtical Explications (82). The ill-tim'd Declamations of that Cordelier, who, inſtead of prejudicing the Court and the People againſt an abſent Profeſſor, ought to have accus'd him in Form before the Academical Judges, did not hinder the famous John Collet from lodging Agrippa in his Houſe at London, nor the Emperor Maximilian, Grandfather of the Princeſs Margaret, from employing him in Italy (83). The fifth Reaſon of Thevet has already been refuted; he has only copied Paul Jovius, and both of them have been ſo imprudent as to take notice of Agrippa's Poverty. A fine means of convincing a judicious Reader that he was a great a Magician! A rare Way to perſuade the People of it, when they know, on the contrary, that whenever Fortune ſmiles on a Prince or Lord, it is preſently caſt in his Diſh, that he courts Agrippa (84).

III. As for Martin del Rio, he relates theſe three or four Particulars: I. When Agrippa travell'd, he paid his Reckonings in Money, ſeemingly good and lawful; but, after ſome Days, it was diſcover'd, that he had paid his Hoſt with pieces of Horn, or Shells (85). II. Charles V. expell'd him from his Court and Dominions, and with him two other Perſons of Quality, who had promis'd him great Treaſures by the means of Magic (86). III. The ſame Emperor did not remit the Sentence of Death againſt Agrippa, but condemn'd him to Baniſhment, after he had heard that he was fled (87). IV. Agrippa had a Boarder in Louvain, who was very inquiſitive. One Day, as he was going out of Town, he order'd his Wife not to let any body go into his Cloſet: Nevertheleſs this Boarder obtain'd the Key of it; he went in and read a Book of Conjurations; upon which there was a great knocking at his Door; which he heard two or three times, without leaving off his reading. It was the Devil who knock'd at the Cloſet-Door, and demanded, who it was that call'd him, and what he wanted; but, receiving no Anſwer, he ſtrangled him. Agrippa, returning home, ſees the Spirits dancing on the top of his Houſe; he calls them, and they inform him of what had happen'd; he order'd the Homicide to enter into the Body, and to walk ſome Turns, in the Place, which the Scholars frequented moſt, and then quit it. This was done. The Boarder, having walk'd three or four turns, fell down dead; and it was believ'd a long while, that he died ſuddenly; but certain marks of Suffocation appearing, began to make the thing ſuſpected. At length Time diſcover'd all, and Agrippa, being obliged to fly into Lorrain, begun to give vent to the Hereſies, which he had conceiv'd in his Heart (88).

Agrippa's Poverty, and the frequent Fear he diſcovers, in his Epiſtles, of being ſtarv'd for want of common Neceſſaries, are a ſufficient Confutation of the firſt of theſe Stories. When a Man has ſo compendious a Method of diſcharging his Debts, he need not fear wanting Bread. It is not true that Charles V. ever expell'd Agrippa out of his Dominions; he was too great a Politician, to puniſh, in ſuch a manner, a Magician, who was a diſtributer of Treaſures; he would have fear'd, that other Princes might make uſe of the Secrets of ſuch a conſiderable Exile to his detriment. Del Rio refutes the ſecond Story by the third; for he pretends in the third, that his Imperial Majeſty would have put Agrippa to Death, had it been in his Power, and that the Decree of Baniſhment came out after the Magician's Flight. Theſe are mere Stories. Agrippa preſented Petition upon Petition to the Emperor's Council, either for the payment of his Salary, or for his Diſmiſſion (89); and when he was tir'd with his ill Succeſs, he went to Cologne, where he exclaim'd with great Freedom, before the Magiſtrates, againſt the Monks, who ſtopt the printing of his Works (90). He liv'd quietly at Bonn, 'till he went from thence to France. Would Charles V. have permitted this in a Man whom he had baniſh'd his Dominions? Would he have ſuffer'd this in a Magician, who had avoided Death only by Flight? As to the fourth little Tale, I refer him to Gabriel Naudé, whoſe Words are theſe; We have more Reaſon to deny it, as Ludwigius * did, than Del Rio has to affirm it, ſince he tranſlated it Word for Word out of a Book, entituled, The Theatre of Nature, publiſhed in Italian and in Latin, under the Name of Stroza Cicogna, and in French and Spaniſh, under the Name of Valderama (91). We may refute it another Way; as thus, Del Rio obſerves, that the Wife, who lent the Key to the Boarder, was afterwards divorced by Agrippa. It muſt be, then, the third Wife of this Magician. Now the ſecond did not die 'till the Year 1529. So that the Adventure of the Boarder muſt have happen'd after the Year 1529. Agrippa, muſt therefore, have fled towards Lorrain after the Year 1530, or thereabouts; he muſt have taken a Houſe at Louvain, after he was inſtall'd in the Office of Hiſtoriographer of Charles V, for Boarders; but nothing is more falſe than this. For, firſt, he did not go into Lorrain as a Fugitive; he went thither to exerciſe a noble Office at Metz, which was offered to him with all poſſible Advantages, at the ſame time that he was preſs'd to accept of honourable Employments elſewhere (92). II. He did not go into Lorrain 'till 1518, and at that time his firſt Wife was alive. III. The Doctrines he maintain'd in that Country, for which he was expos'd to the Perſecution of the Monks, were neither Magical nor Heretical; they turn'd on this Queſtion, Whether St Anne, the Mother of the Holy Virgin, had three Husbands, and a Child by each; or whether ſhe had but one Husband, and one Daughter. Agrippa maintain'd the latter Opinion (93), which did infinitely more Honour to St Anne's Memory. IV. It does not appear

(79) Of the Uſe of ſuſpected Books, pag. 109.

(80) Thevet. p. 223.

(81) Agrip. Epiſt. 38. lib. 1. pag. 710.

(82) See the Expoſtulatio of Agrippa, in the 2d Tome of his Works, pag. 508.

(83) Agripp. Oper. Tom. 2. pag. 596.

(84) Thev. pag. 224.

(85) Del Rio Diſquiſit. Magicar. lib. 2. quæſt. 12. n. 10.

(86) Ibid.

(87) Id. ib. lib. 5. §. 2.

(88) Ibid. lib. 2. quæſt. 29. §. 1.

(89) See his Works, Tom. 2. from pag. 975. to 984. likewiſe pag. 1017, &c.

(90) Ibid. pag. 1033.

* Quæſt. 15. Demonomag. fol. 187.

(91) Naudé, Apolog. p. 423.

(92) Agrip. Epiſt. 9, 10. lib. 2. But particularly ſee his Thanks to the Gentlemen of Metz, pag. 1092.

(93) See Agrippa's Works, T. 2. p 583. 747.

Digitized by Google

ſome Perſons apologizing for him [Q]. Moreri declared ſtrongly in his favour; which was appear that he liv'd any where elſe, than at Antwerp, and at Mechlen, from the time of his being made the Emperor's Hiſtoriographer, 'till he retir'd to the Elector of Cologne; and I do not believe that ever he had any Boarders at Louvain: So that we might have been diſpens'd with from anſwering Martin del Rio, and his Partizans, 'till they had rang'd their Circumſtances of Time and Place in better order.

I wonder that the famous Naudé had not the precaution to object to the Accuſers of Agrippa the great Number of Hiſtorical Falſhoods, of which I have convicted them.

[Q] There are ſome Errors of Fact in the manner of ſome Perſons apologizing for him.] I have Gabriel Naudé in view. He endeavours to juſtify Agrippa, among other Reaſons, from the Favour of two Emperors, and as many Kings (94); which is to ſuppoſe, that Charles V. had a Kindneſs for Agrippa; but we need only read the Complaints of that Author, to diſcover the contrary (95). Farther, Naudé ſuppoſes, that they did not think of crying down the Occult Philoſophy, 'till a long time after it was publiſh'd; he pretends that they exclaim'd againſt that Work, only in Revenge for the Injuries, they believ'd they had receiv'd in That of the Vanity of Sciences. It is true, this latter Book gave great Offence to many. The Monks, the Members of the Univerſities, the Preachers, and the Divines, ſaw themſelves drawn to the Life in it: Agrippa was of too warm a Complexion. "Ex ejus "Libri (de Vanitate Scientiarum) qualicunque guſtu "deprehendi hominem eſſe ardentis ingenii, variæ "lectionis, & multæ memoriæ, alicubi tamen majore "copia, quam delectu, ac dictione tumultuosâ verius "quam compoſita. In omni genere rerum vitupe-"rat mala, laudat bona. Sed ſunt, qui nihil aliud "ſuſtinent, quam laudari (96). —— The leaſt taſte of "his Book (of the Vanity of Sciences) convinc'd me, "that he was an Author of a fiery Genius, extenſive "Reading, and great Memory; but ſometimes more "copious, than choice, in his Subject, and writing in "a diſturb'd, rather than a compos'd, Style. He laſhes "Vice, and commends Virtue, every where, and in "every perſon; but there are ſome, with whom no-"thing but Panegyric will go down." His Paintings were too ſtrong; his Shades too dark, and his Touches too lively. This gave them uneaſineſs, I confeſs; but it is not true that this Reſentment ſpent itſelf on a Work, which had lain in Obſcurity for many Years. Naudé would have done better to have reſerv'd this Thought for another Application; he might have met with an Opportunity ſooner or later, though he had not been a Man of ſuch great Reading, as he was. To explain myſelf; It is no rare thing for Zealots to take no notice of a Book, or the Author of it, for a long time, whatever it be, provided it does not perſonally attack them. But, if after ten, fifteen, or twenty Years, they happen to quarrel with the Author; if ſome new Work comes out, containing Diſcoveries of what they carefully endeavour to conceal from the People; the former Work immediately becomes heretical, impious, and fit to be burnt. They begin then to be eaten up with the Zeal of God's Houſe; and thereby impoſe upon honeſt People. But They, who are no Dupes, perceive plainly what ſhameful Paſſions they cover under the fair Mask of the Intereſt of Piety. Let us do Juſtice to the Divines of Louvain; they do not deſerve the Reproach, which the Apologiſt of Agrippa throws on them, upon this Account. The Occult Philoſophy was not printed, 'till after the Declamation of The Vanity of Sciences; and it is ſufficient to charge them with having made uſe of a thouſand Cavils, to diſcover ſome damnable Propoſitions in That Declamation. See the ſolid Anſwer, which was given them: It is in the ſecond Volume of Agrippa, and begins at pag. 252.

Let us, in a few Words, deſcribe the Hiſtory of the Occult Philoſophy. Agrippa compos'd this Work in his younger Days (97), and ſhewed it to the Abbot Trithemius, from whom he had learnt many things (98). Trithemius was charm'd with it, as appears by the Letter which he wrote to him on the 8th of April, 1510 (99); but he adviſes him to communicate it only to thoſe, whom he could confide in. I know not whether the Author communicated it to too many Perſons, or whether the firſt, who had a Copy of it, was indiſcreet. The Truth is, ſeveral Manuſcript Copies of it were diſpers'd almoſt all over Europe. It is not neceſſary to obſerve, that moſt of them were faulty; which never fails to happen in the like Caſes. They were preparing to print it from one of theſe bad Copies; which made the Author reſolve to publiſh it himſelf, with the Additions and Alterations, with which he had embelliſh'd it, after having ſhew'd it to the Abbot Trithemius. Melchior Adam was miſtaken in ſaying, that Agrippa, in his more advanc'd Years, having corrected, and enlarg'd, this Work, ſhew'd it to the Abbot Trithemius. He had refuted his Occult Philoſophy, in his Book of the Vanity of Sciences, and yet he publiſh'd it, to hinder others from printing a faulty and mutilated Edition of it (100). He obtain'd the Approbation of ſome Doctors of Divinity, and ſome Perſons, whom the Emperor's Council appointed to examine it. "Liber ille jam nuper per aliquos "Eccleſiæ Prælatos & doctores ſacrarum humanarum-"que literarum eruditiſſimos, & ex Cæſaris conſilio "ad hoc ſpecialiter deputatos commiſſarios, examina-"tus & probatus fuerit, deinde etiam totius Cæſarei "conſilii aſſenſu admiſſus, & ejuſdem Cæſareæ Maje-"ſtatis authentico diplomate, & appenſa in rubra ce-"ra Cæſaris aquila privilegiatus, inſuper Antverpiæ, "& poſtea etiam Pariſiis, ſine contradictione impreſſus "& publice venditus ſit (101). —— This Book has "been lately examin'd, and approv'd, by certain Pre-"lates of the Church, and Doctors, thoroughly vers'd "both in ſacred and prophane Literature, and by Com-"miſſaries, particularly deputed for that Purpoſe, by "Cæſar's Council; after which it was admitted by the "aſſent of the whole Council, and licenſed by the au-"thentic Diploma of his Imperial Majeſty, and the "Stamp of the Cæſarean Eagle in red Wax; and was "afterwards publickly printed and ſold at Antwerp, "and then at Paris, without any Oppoſition." Upon this Approbation he obtain'd a Licence from his Imperial Majeſty; and caus'd his Book to be printed at Antwerp, and dedicated it to the Elector of Cologne. His Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated at Malines, in the Month of January, 1531; and it is the thirteenth of the ſixth Book of his Letters. This Book was publiſh'd in the Year 1531. It was preſently reprinted at Paris. Theſe two Editions were ſold without any Oppoſition. The Author ſet about a third at Cologne. Father Conrad of Ulm, Inquiſitor of the Faith, had notice of it, and caus'd the Impreſſion to be ſtopp'd; but the vigorous Inſtances of Agrippa to the Magiſtrates had doubtleſs their Effect; ſince there is an Edition, of Cologne, of the Occult Philoſophy, in 1533. It contains three Books; whereas the former Editions contain'd only the firſt (102). After the Death of Agrippa, a fourth was added to it by another Hand. "Optimo jure his (libris magicis) annumeretur abo-"minabilis libellus nuper in lucem ab impio homine "emiſſus, tributuſque Henr. Corn. Agrippæ, meo "olim hoſpiti & præceptori honorando, ultra annos "quadraginta jam mortuo, ut hinc falſo ejus manibus "jam inſcribi ſperem, ſub titulo quarti libri de Oc-"culta Philoſophia, ſeu de Ceremoniis magicis: qui "inſuper clavis librorum trium de Occulta Philoſo-"phia omniumque magicarum operationum jactatur "(103). —To theſe (Books of Magic) may very juſtly be "added an abominable Work, lately publiſh'd by an "impious Wretch, and aſcrib'd to my late honoured "Hoſt and Preceptor, Henry Cornelius Agrippa, who "has been dead more than forty Years; whence I con-"clude, that it is unjuſtly inſcribed to his Manes, "under the Title of The fourth Book of the Occult "Philoſophy, or of Magical Ceremonies; which pre-"tends, likewiſe, to be a Key to the three former "Books of the Occult Philoſophy, and all kinds of "Magical Operations." Thus John Wierus expreſſes himſelf. I have ſeen an Edition in Folio of the Occult Philoſophy, in 1533, without the Place, where it was printed. The Privilege of Charles V. is prefix'd to it, dated, if I miſtake not, from Mechlen, the 12th of January, 1529.

Let us now examine the Falſhoods contain'd in theſe Words of Naudé; "The Divines of Louvain "cenſur'd his Declamation againſt the Sciences with "great Severity: John Catilinet, a Cordelier, de-"clam'd publickly againſt his Explication of the de "Verbo Mirifico, at Dole: The Dominicans of the "City of Metz wrote againſt the Propoſitions, which "he had advanc'd, in ſupport of the Opinion of

(94) Naudé's Apology for Great Men, pag. 409.

(95) Agripp. Epiſt. lib. 6. pag. 975. and elſewhere. See the 2d Volume of his Works, pag. 251, 447, 584. and the Paſſages cited below in Marginal Note (99).

(96) Eraſmi Epiſt. lib. 27. p. 1083.

AN INSTANCE of the unjuſt Behaviour of pretended Zealots.

HISTORY of the Occult Philoſophy.

(97) See the Preface.

(98) Epiſt. 33. lib. 3. pag. 810.

(99) It is at the beginning of the Book, and at the 704th page of the ſecond Tome.

(100) See the Preface.

(101) Epiſt. 26. lib. 7. pag. 1033. See alſo pag. 1045.

(102) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the 2d and 3d Book, to the ſame Elector of Cologne.

(103) Wierus de Magis, cap. 5. pag. 108.

Digitized by Google

was not to be expected from his Pen. His Faults are not many in this Article [R]. I have already mentioned the chief Works of Agrippa, and shall speak more particularly of them in the Remarks. It will be sufficient to add, that he wrote A Commentary on the Art of Raimundus Lullius, and A Dissertation on the Original of Sin, wherein he teaches, that the Fall of our First Parents proceeded from their unchaste Love. He promised a Work against the Dominicans [S], which would have pleased many Persons, both within, and without, the Pale of the Church of Rome. He held some uncommon

" Faber Stapulensis, concerning the Monogamy of " St Anne; and yet not one of these Censurers could " find any thing offensive in the two first Books of " his Occult Philosophy, which were printed LONG " BEFORE all those Pieces, as well at Paris, as at " Antwerp, and elsewhere (104)." —— Observe, that he repeats these Words LONG BEFORE, in the 416th Page. To understand the whole Mistake, we must remember, that Catilinet declaim'd, in the Year 1509; that the Jacobins of Metz wrote concerning St Anne, in the Year 1519; and that the Declamation on the Vanity of Sciences appear'd in 1530, a Year before the Occult Philosophy. " The Avarice of the " Booksellers, and the Vanity of certain Persons,—— " adds Naudé (105) —— injure this Author's Memory, " by attributing a fourth Book to him, full of magi- " cal, vain, superstitious, and abominable Ceremo- " nies, and by publishing it with the three Books of " the Occult Philosophy. —— Wierus *, in defence of " Agrippa, says, that this Book was not publish'd " 'till twenty seven Years after his Death, and that " it is very certain he was not the Author of it (106)."

(104) Naudé's Apology for Great Men, pag. 411.

(105) Ibid. pag. 413.

* Lib. II. de Præstigiis.

(106) Naudè, ubi supra. pag. 414.

These Words of Naudé, twenty seven Years after his Death, compar'd with the Latin Passage cited above (107), may embarrass the Matter; but to clear it, it is sufficient to take notice of the several Editions of John Wierus. He revis'd, and enlarged his Work six times. Naudé had doubtless an Edition, which the Author prepar'd in the Year 1526. There were at that Time twenty seven Years past, since the Death of Agrippa. My Edition was prepared thirteen or fourteen Years after; this is the Reason why the Author makes use of this Phrase in it, " ultra annos " quadraginta jam mortuo —— more than forty Years " dead." —— He always retain'd his nuper, and is to blame for it; since by this means he deceives his Readers. He makes them believe, that the fourth Book Philosophiæ Occultæ was not printed 'till twenty seven, or forty Years after the Death of Agrippa; which is false. Authors, who enlarge their Books several times, seldom take proper Care to alter the Dates.

(107) Citation (103).

In favour of those, who have not Agrippa's Works, I shall in this place inform them, how it is proved, that the Declamation against the Sciences was printed in the Year 1530, and the Occult Philosophy, in the Year 1531. By a Letter, printed with those of Agrippa, and dated the 10th of January, 1531 (108), we understand, that the Elector of Cologne had receiv'd a Copy of the Vanity of Sciences, and seen some Sheets of the Occult Philosophy, which was printing at Antwerp. The Author of the Bibliotheque of Dauphiné, has taken a very unnecessary Trouble in his Errata: He has changed 1467, into 1567. His Book says, that the Treatise of the Vanity of Sciences was compos'd at Grenoble, in the Year 1467. If you correct it according to the Errata, you must suppose that the Book was compos'd thirty two Years after the Death of it's Author. He had better have made no Correction at all. I think it would be a Mistake, whatever Year should be inserted; for I believe the Author had not resided long at Grenoble, when he died there.

(108) It is the 14th of the 6th Book, pag. 968.

[R] His Faults are not many in this Article.] I. He says Cohori instead of Gohori; Gattinaria instead of Gattinara; Rauclin instead of Reuchlin; Carniletus instead of Catilinetus. II. He tells us, That Agrippa obtained a Professorship at Padua; which is false, he ought to have said Pavia. Mr Teissier was also deceived by the Resemblance of the Words; he put Paris for Pavia: Perhaps it is an Error of the Press; however the Reader ought to be advertised, that he must not believe what he finds in Mr Teissier, to wit, that Agrippa was Professor of Holy Writ at Dole, and at Paris (109). It is to be feared, that some Compiler, who shall collect all that he finds dispersed in several Authors, will tells us, some time or other, that Agrippa professed Divinity at Dole, Paris, Pavia, Turin, Padua, Cologne, &c. By this Means no doubt it often happens that a Man's Employments are multiplied without Reason; which occasions many advantageous Reflexions on the extent of his Merit. III. The following Passage is confused. The Cardinal de Sainte Croix would have engaged him to follow him to the Council, which was to be assembled at Pisa; and at the same time the King of England, Margaret of Austria, and Gatinaria, Chancellor of the same Charles V. invited him into their Service. The Rules of Grammar lead us to refer all this to one and the same time; and at this rate Moreri will have told a downright Falshood; for it was in 1529, a long time after the Affair of Pisa, that Agrippa was invited by Henry VIII. by Margaret of Austria, and by the Chancellor of Charles the Vth. IV. There is no Chicanery to be found out in vindication of what follows: But Agrippa, who loved Liberty extreamly, preferred the Pleasure of Travelling before these Advantages; and, after having spent some time at Friburg, at Geneva, and elsewhere, he retired to Lyons. A pitiful Anachronism, and which involves other Mistakes. Moreri pretends, then, that none of these Offers were accepted; yet That of the Princess Margaret was, and, when it was offered, Agrippa thought no more of travelling; he had satisfied his Curiosity; he had been at Geneva, at Friburg, and at Lyons. V. It is not true, that Paul Jovius, Del Rio, Thevet, and others, maintain, that Agrippa kept two Spirits in the form of two little Dogs, and that he called one of them Monsieur, and the other Mademoiselle. Paul Jovius and Thevet, &c. speak only of one Dog, without mentioning his Name. VI. He ought not to have distinguished between the Book of the Vanity of Sciences, and the other Works of Agrippa, which compose two Volumes; for that Work is at the beginning of the second Volume. I say nothing of the Confusion, which runs through Moreri's Narrative, with respect to Chronology.

(109) Teissier's Eloges taken from Thuanus, Tom. 2. p. 99. Edit. of Utrecht, 1692.

[S] He promised a Work against the Dominicans.] They were the chief Directors of the Inquisition, it is no wonder, that he was more incensed against them, than against others. His Patience was lost, when he saw them so indulgent to the Errors of their Brethren, and so severe against the equivocal Propositions of other Persons. This Indulgence would have been less scandalous, had they alone been guilty of it; but the Misfortune is, People are such Fools, that whilst they commend the Zeal of an Inquisitor, who discovers Heresy wherever he thinks fit, they will not suffer any Recrimination to be used against him, and that his own pernicious Doctrines should be laid open to the Public. Agrippa intended to be very free with the Dominicans on this Head, and upon several others. " Neque tamen putetis, says he to the Magistrates of " Cologne, hunc solum articulum apud illum reperiri " hæreticum; sed alii multi, quos, cum hic nimis " longum vobisque tædiosum foret referre, enume- " rabo alibi, in eo scilicet libro quem de Fratrum " Prædicatorum sceleribus & hæresibus inscripsi, ubi " infecta sæpius veneno sacramenta, ementita sæpis- " sime miracula, interemptos veneno Reges & prin- " cipes, proditas urbes & respublicas, seductos po- " pulos, assertasque hæreses, & cætera ejusmodi he- " roum illorum facinora flagitiaque in varias transfusa " linguas, omnique populo exposita, dilucidè narra- " bo (110). —— Nor would I have you think, that " this Article of His is the only Heretical one; there " are many others of the same Stamp, which, as it " would be tedious to lay them before you at present, " I shall enumerate in another Place; namely, in the " Treatise I am composing of the Vices, and erro- " neous Opinions, of the Dominicans; in which I shall " expose to the whole World their vicious Practices, " such as the Sacraments often infected with Poison, " numberless pretended Miracles, Kings and Princes " taken off by Poison, Cities and States betrayed, " the Populace seduced, Heresies avowed, and the rest " of the Deeds of these Heroes, and their enormous " Crimes."

(110) Agrip. Opera, T. 2. pag. 1037.

Digitized by Google

uncommon Opinions [T], and never any Proteſtant ſpake more forcibly againſt the Impudence of the Legendaries than he did (oo).

We muſt not forget the Key of his Occult Philoſophy. He kept it only for his Friends of the firſt Rank, and explained it in a manner, which differs but little from the Speculations of our Quietiſts [U]. Let me obſerve likewiſe, that the Edition of his (oo) See the Preface to his Treatiſe of the Monogamy of St Anne, Oper. Tom. 2. p. 1053.

[T] Some uncommon Opinions.] I have already mentioned That, which concerns the Fall of Adam. The reſt were not of ſo dangerous a Nature, and their only Crime was their being agreeable to the Doctrines of the Reformers. His Diſſertation concerning Marriage, dedicated to Louïſa of Savoy, Mother of Francis I. ſtrikes at the Law of Celibacy, and ſhews plainly, that Adultery breaks the Conjugal Engagement. One of his Friends (111) gave him notice, that this Diſſertation had diſpleaſed the Court, and that at firſt they were afraid to preſent it to the Princeſs. I refer you to his Anſwer. He did not approve of the uſe of Images, and with all his Heart would have conſented to a Reformation, which would not have occaſioned the raiſing of Altar againſt Altar (112).

(111) Capellanus, Phyſician to FRANCIS I. See Agrippa's Letters, pag. 832, 833, 836.

(112) See Geſner in Biblioth. fol. 309. verſo.

[U] Which differs but little from the Speculations of our Quietiſts.] I ſhall produce another Obſervation of Naudé, deſigned to ſhew, that, under pretence of this Key, it cannot be maintained, that Agrippa was the true Author of the fourth Book of the Occult Philoſophy. " Nor muſt it be objected, ſays he (113), " that the ſame Agrippa ſays in ſome Paſſages of his " Epiſtles *, that he reſerved the Key of the three " Books, which he had publiſhed (114), to himſelf: " For, beſides that it may be anſwered with great " ſhew of probability, that he amuſed the World " with this Key, in order to make himſelf courted " by the Curious; as James Gohory † and Vigenere ‖ " ſay, that he pretended, with the ſame View, to " be maſter of the Practice of the Mirrour of Py- " thagoras, and the Secret of extracting the Spirit " Gold from it's Body, in order to convert Silver " and Copper into fine Gold, from which it had been " ſeparated: I ſay, beſides this Reaſon, he explains " ſufficiently what he meant by ſuch a Key, when " he ſays in the nineteenth Epiſtle of the fifth Book. " Hæc eſt illa vera & mirabilium operum occultiſ- " ſima Philoſophia, Clavis ejus intellectus eſt, quanto " enim altiora intelligimus, tanto ſublimiores indui- " mus virtutes, tantoque & majora, & facilius & ef- " ficatius operamur. —— This is that true and Oc- " cult Philoſophy of the Wonders of Nature; it's " Key is the Underſtanding; for the higher we carry " our Knowledge, the more ſublime are our Attain- " ments in Virtue, and we perform the moſt extra- " ordinary things with greater Eaſe, and more ef- " fectually." Naudé ſtopt here, but Mr de la Monnoie went farther. He did me the favour to acquaint me, that Agrippa's Sentiments agree perfectly well with thoſe of the Quietiſts. You will be convinced of this, if you examine what I am going to ſay. Agrippa makes mention of this Key in two Letters, which he wrote to a Religious (115), who addicted himſelf very much to the Occult Sciences. He repreſents to him, that, whatever is to be found in Books concerning the Virtue of Magic, Aſtrology, and Alchimy, is falſe and deceitful, when literally underſtood; that a Myſtical Senſe is to be looked for in them; a Senſe, which none of the Maſters had yet found out, and that it was almoſt impoſſible to diſcover it, without the Aſſiſtance of a good Interpreter, unleſs by Divine Inſpiration, which happens to very few Perſons (116). " O quan- " ta leguntur ſcripta de inexpugnabili magicæ artis " potentia, de prodigioſis aſtrologorum imaginibus, " de monſtrifica alchimiſtarum metamorphoſi, deque " lapide illo benedicto, quo, Midæ inſtar, contacta " æra mox omnia in aurum argentumve permuten- " tur. Quæ omnia comperiuntur vana, ficta & falſa, " quoties ad literam practicantur (117). What ſur- " prizing Accounts do we meet with in Authors of " the invincible Power of Magic, of the wonderful " Schemes of Aſtrologers, of the amazing Metamor- " phoſes of the Alchymiſts, and of that bleſſed Stone, " by which, as by the Touch of Midas, all Metals " are tranſmuted into Gold: All which are experienced " to be empty, fictitious, and falſe, when put in " practice literally. We muſt not, adds he, look for " the Principle of theſe great Operations without " ourſelves: It is an internal Spirit, which can very " innocently perform all that the Mathematicians, " Magicians, Alcymiſts, aud Necromancers promiſe, " I ſhall not explain this to you in Writing; for it " is a Thing not to be committed to Paper. It is " communicated from one Spirit to another in a " few myſtical Words. This wonderful Operator " comes not from Heaven or Hell, but is the In- " habitant of our own Breaſts." " Atque hoc eſt, " quod te nunc ſcire volo, quia nobis ipſis eſt om- " nium mirabilium effectuum operator: Qui, quic- " quid portentoſi Mathematici, quicquid prodigioſi " Magi, quicquid invidentes Naturæ perſecutores Al- " chimiſtæ, quicquid dæmonibus deteriores malefici " Necromantates promittere audent, ipſe novit diſ- " cernere & efficere, idque ſine omni crimine, ſine " Dei offenſa, ſine religionis injuria. In nobis, in- " quam, eſt ille mirandorum operator,

Nos habitat, non tartara; ſed nec ſydera cœli.
Spiritus in nobis qui viget, illa facit.

" Verum de his nobis quam latiſſime tecum confe- " rendum eſſet, & coram. Non enim committun- " tur hæc literis, nec ſcribuntur calamo, ſed ſpiritu " ſpiritui paucis ſacriſque verbis infunduntur, idque, " ſi quando nos ad te venire contigerit (118)." This is taken from a Letter, dated from Lyons the twenty fourth of September, 1527. The other Letter was written in the ſame City the nineteenth of November following: Agrippa unfolds his Myſtery in it: He ſays, That true and ſolid Philoſophy conſiſts in being united with God by an Eſſential and Immediate Contact, which may transform us into God. He adds, " The Underſtanding is the Key of this " Philoſophy; but, to be united to God, it muſt " be freed from Matter, and dead to the World, to " the Fleſh, to all the Senſes, and to the whole na- " tural Man." His Latin will expreſs this Fuſtian better: " Quod ad poſtulatam philoſophiam attinet, " te ſcire volo, quòd omnium rerum cognoſcere " opificem ipſum Deum, & in illum tota ſimilitudi- " nis imagine, ceu eſſentiali quodam contactu ſive " vinculo tranſire, quo ipſe transformeris, efficiare- " que Deus, ea demum vera ſolidaque philoſophia " ſit: Quemadmodum de Moyſe ait Dominus, in- " quiens: Ecce ego conſtitui te Deum Pharaonis. " Hæc eſt illa vera & ſumma mirabilium operum oc- " cultiſſima Philoſophia. Clavis ejus Intellectus eſt. " Quantò enim altiora intelligimus, tantò ſublimiores " induimus virtutes, tantoque majora & facilius & " efficacius operamur. Verùm intellectus noſter car- " ni incluſus corruptibili, niſi viam carnis ſuperave- " rit, fueritque propriam naturam ſortitus, divinis " illis virtutibus non poterit uniri (non enim niſi " ſibi quam ſimilibus congrediuntur) ac pervidendis " illis occultiſſimis Dei & Naturæ ſecretis omnino " inefficax eſt: Atque

Hoc opus, hic labor eſt, ſuperas evadere ad auras.

" - - - - Mori enim oportet, mori, inquam, mundo " & carni, ac ſenſibus omnibus, ac toto homini ani- " mali, qui velit ad hæc ſecretorum penetralia in- " gredi: Non, quòd corpus ſeparetur ab anima: " Sed, quòd anima relinquat corpus. De qua morte " Paulus ſcribit Coloſſenſibus, Mortui eſtis, & vita " veſtra abſcondita eſt cum Chriſto: & alibi clarius " de ſeipſo ait, Scio hominem, in corpore, vel extra " corpus, neſcio, (Deus ſcit) raptum uſque ad tertium " cœlum: Et quæ reliqua ſequuntur (119). —— " As to the Philoſophy you enquire into, you muſt " know, that the only true and ſolid Philoſophy con- " ſiſts in knowing God the Creator of all things, " and being tranſformed into the perfect Reſemblance " of Him, by an eſſential Contact or Union, and be- " coming God: as the Lord ſaid to Moſes, See I have " made thee a God to Pharaoh. This is that True " and Occult Philoſophy of wonderful Things. It's " Key is the Underſtanding. For the higher we carry " our Knowledge, the more ſublime are our Attain- " ments in Virtue, and we perform the moſt extra- " ordinary things with greater Eaſe, and more effe- " ctually. But our Underſtanding, incloſed in corrup- " tible Fleſh, unleſs it ſoar above the Ways of the " Fleſh, and exert it's own proper Nature, cannot be " united

(113) Naudé, ubi ſupra, p. 414, 415.

* Epiſt. 56. lib. 4. & Ibid. 14. lib. 5.

(114) Naudé is miſtaken, they were not then printed.

† Lib. de Myſt. Not. Comment. in Paracelſ. de Vita longa, fol. 61.

‖ In his Cyphers, fol. 26, & 27.

(115) Aurelius ab Aquapendente Auguſtinianus.

(116) Niſi fuerit divino numine illuſtratus, quod datur pauciſſimis. Agrippa Epiſt. 14. lib. 5. pag. 904.

(117) Id. ib.

(118) Id. ib.

(119) Ibid. 19. lib. 5. pag. 909.

Digitized by Google

his Works publiſhed at Lyons in two Volumes in 8vo. is caſtrated in a place, which might have diſpleaſed the Gentlemen of the Church [X].

" united to thoſe divine Virtues (for they have no " Communication but with what is moſt like them- " ſelves) and is unqualified to look into theſe moſt " abſtruſe Secrets of God and Nature.

To ſoar above, and view the chearful Skies,
In this the Task and mighty Labour lies.
DRYDEN.

" ---- He muſt die; He muſt die, I ſay, to the " World, the Fleſh, all the Senſes, and the whole " Animal Man, who would enter into theſe ſecret Re- " ceſſes: I do not mean, that the Body muſt be ſepa- " rated from the Soul; but that the Soul muſt re- " linquiſh the Body: of which kind of Death St Paul " writes to the Coloſſians, Ye are dead, and your " Life is hid in Chriſt; and in another Place he " ſays more plainly of himſelf, I know a Man, whe- " ther in the Body, or out of the Body, I cannot " tell (God knows) ſuch an one caught up to the " third Heaven; and ſo on. This precious Death, " continues he, is granted but to a ſmall number of " People, beloved by God, or favoured with a " propitious Influence of the Stars, or ſupported by " their own Merits, and the Secret of the Art.

To few great Jupiter imparts this Grace,
And thoſe of ſhining Worth, and heavenly Race.
DRYDEN.

" Hac, inquam, precioſa in conſpectu Domini morte " mori oportet, quod contingit pauciſſimis, & fortè " non ſemper. Nam id

----- Pauci, quos æquus amavit
Jupiter, aut ardens evexit ad æthera virtus,
Diis geniti, potuere.

" Primùm qui non ex carne & ſanguine, ſed ex Deo " nati ſunt: Proximè qui Naturæ beneficio ac cœlo- " rum genethliaco dono ad id dignificati ſunt: " cæteri meritis nituntur & arte, de quibus viva vox " te certiorem reddat (120)." He acknowledges ingenuouſly that he is not one of theſe Favourites of Heaven, and that he has no Hopes of attaining to this high Degree of Happineſs; for he had always found himſelf hurried away by the Vortices of Matter, a ſenſual Man, attach'd to a Wife, to the Fleſh, to the World, and to domeſtic Cares, &c. he defires only to be conſidered as a Door-keeper, to introduce others (121). " Verùm hoc te admonitum volo, ne circa " me decipiaris, ac ſi ego aliquando divina paſſus tibi " iſta prædicem, ut tale quid mihi arrogare velim, " vel concedi poſſe ſperem, qui hactenus humano ſan- " guine ſacratus miles, ſemper ferè aulicus, tum car- " nis vinculo chariſſimæ uxori alligatus, omnibuſque " inſtabilis fortunæ flatibus expoſitus, totuſque à carne, " & domeſticis curis tranſverſum actus, tam ſublimia " immortalium deorum dona non ſum adſecutus: Sed " accipi me volo velut indicem, qui ipſe ſemper præ " foribus manens, aliis, quod iter ingrediendum ſit, " oſtendo (122)."

(120) Id. ibi.

(121) Compare this with les Suiſſes de la Foi, whereof the Sieur Pariſot, ſpeaks in his Book La Foi devoillée par la Raiſon. There are ſome Extracts of it in the Nouvelles de la Rep. Lit. Octob. 1685. pag. 1140, &c.

[X] Caſtrated in a Place, which might have diſpleaſed the Gentlemen of the Church.] The Author, in that part of the Work, exclaims againſt the Law of Celibacy; and inſinuates, that thoſe who were the Defenders of it, connived at Fornication, rather than allow'd of Marriage, in Prieſts, becauſe they drew a great Revenue from permitting them to keep Concubines. He adds, That he had read of a certain Prelate who boaſted at Table, that he had eleven Thouſand Concubinary Prieſts in his Dioceſe, who paid him each a Crown a Year. This Paſſage is not in the Edition of Lyons. Crenius, who made the Diſcovery, complain'd much of the Impoſition: Theſe are his Words. " Mala fide, per Beringos fratres Lugduni " anno M. DC. in 8vo. edita ſunt Henrici Cornelii A- " grippæ —— Opera; utpote in qua multa omiſſa " ſunt Editione, quæ in prioribus erant. Atque ne " hoc gratis dixiſſe videar, capias exemplum è tractatu " de Incertitudine & Vanitate Scientiarum atque Arti- " um, in cujus C. LXIIII. p. 189. de Lenonia, ſe- " quentia hæc, quæ ex optima, recognita, plena, & " ſcholiis marginariis (retineo vocem in titulo libri po- " ſitam) illuſtrata editione, ſine loci adjectione, anno " M. D. XXXVI. in 8vo. excuſa, admodùm rara, datu- " rus ſum, in Lugdunenſi planè dempta ſunt: Jam " verò etiam Lenociniis militant Leges atque canones, " cùm in potentum favorem pro iniquis nuptiis pug- " nant, & juſta matrimonia dirimunt; Sacerdoteſque, " ſublatis honeſtis nuptiis, turpiter ſcortari compellunt: " Malueruntque illi legiſlatores ſacerdotes ſuos cum in- " famia habere concubinas, quàm cum honeſta fama " uxores, fortè quia ex concubinis proventus illis eſt " amplior. De quo legimus gloriatum in convivio quen- " dam Epiſcopum, habere ſe undecim millia ſacerdotum " concubinariorum, qui in ſingulos annos illi aureum " pendant. Hæc omnia, & alia forte plura, neque " enim integrum hactenus contuli, pro more eraſerunt " Adverſarii, clarum relinquentes documentum, illo- " rum quid editionibus tribuendum ſit (123). —— The " Works of Henry Cornelius Agrippa were unfaith- " fully publiſh'd, at Lyons, by the Brothers Beringi, " in the Year M. DC. in 8vo.; there being many things " omitted in this Edition, which were in the former. " To confirm this, I inſtance, in his Treatiſe of The " Uncertainty and Vanity of Arts and Sciences, in " the 64th Chapter of which, pag. 189, De Lenonia, " the following Paſſage, which I am going to produce " from the beſt Edition of his Works, revis'd, entire, " and illuſtrated with Marginal Scholia (I retain the " Phraſe, as it ſtands in the Title Page) printed in " 8vo. in the Year M. D. XXXVI. and now very " ſcarce; the following Paſſage, I ſay, is omitted in " the Lyons Edition. Jam verò etiam Lenociniis " militant Leges, &c. This, and, perhaps, many more " Paſſages, (for I have not collated the whole) have " been eras'd, according to Cuſtom, by the Enemies of " this Author; whence we may judge how far we are " to depend upon their Editions.

(122) Agrippa, Ep. 19. p. 909, 910.

(123) Thomas Crenius, Animadv. Philolog. Hiſtor. parte ſecunda, p. 13, 14.

AGUIRRE. The Bibliotheque of the Spaniſh Writers furniſhes Five or Six Authors of this Name. The moſt eminent among them, is, I think, MICHAEL de AGUIRRE, born at Aſpeitia, in the Dioceſe of Pampelune, in the Province of Guipuſcoa. He was a Civilian, who, whilſt he was Member of St Clement's College at Bologne, wrote in favour of the Pretenſions of Philip II. King of Spain [A] to the Crown of Portugal. He exerciſed the Office of a Judge in ſeveral Courts of the Kingdom of Naples, and afterwards he had the dignity of Counſellor in the Council of Granada in Spain. He died in 1588 (a). They, who ſhall continue the Work of Don Nicolas Antonio, will have an AGUIRRE, infinitely more famous, to inſert in it. I mean JOSEPH SAENZ de AGUIRRE, a Benedictin, one of the Learned Men of the XVIIth Century. He was Cenſor, and Secretary of the Supream Council of the Inquiſition of Spain, Firſt Interpreter of the Scripture in the Univerſity of Salamanca, and had been more than once Abbot of the College of St Vincent, when, in 1686, he was honoured with a Cardinal's Hat by Pope Innocent XI. He had undertaken a very great Work (b), which

(a) N. Anton. Biblioth. Script. Hiſpan. Tom. 2. pag. 102.

(b) An Edition of all the Councils held in Spain.

[A] Wrote in favour of the Pretenſions of Philip II. King of Spain.] His Book was printed at Venice, in the Year 1581, with this Title, Reſponſum pro ſucceſſione regni Portugalliæ pro Philippo Hiſpaniarum rege adverſus Bononienſium, Patavinorum, & Perufinorum collegia. Beſoldus inſerted it in his Collection of Councils.

[B] The

Digitized by Google

which he continued with the same diligence after his Promotion to the Purple. They, who would form a just Idea of it, should read the Prodromus, which he published at Salamanca [B], in the Year 1686, or, if they have it not, the Abstracts, which the Journalists gave of it [C]. He was thought, for some time, to be the Author of a very Learned Work against the Decisions of the Clergy of France, in the Year 1682 [D]. But at last the contrary appeared (c). The Conjecture was not improbable, considering this Cardinal's Attachment to the Doctrines of the Ultramontanes, and the pains he took to prevent the Agreement between the Courts of Rome and France, which was, nevertheless, concluded in the Month of October 1693. The Expence he was at in printing two Volumes of his old Friend Don Nicolas Antonio, is very commendable. I shall take notice of it in the Article ANTONIO.

(c) See the Remark [D].

[B] The Prodromus which he publish'd at Salamanca.] The Title of it is; Notitia Conciliorum Hispaniæ atque novi Orbis, Epistolarum decretalium & aliorum monumentorum sacræ antiquitatis ad ipsam spectantium, magna ex parte hactenus ineditorum, quorum editio paratur Salmanticæ cum notis & dissertationibus, sub auspiciis Catholici Monarchæ Caroli II. Studio & vigiliis M. Fr. Josephi Saenz de Aguirre. Salmanticæ apud Lucam Perez, Universitatis Typographum, 1686, in 8vo. —— Memoirs of the Councils of Spain, &c.

Note, that this Cardinal did not entirely execute the Plan of his Work, according to his first Ideas of it. They, who have not the four Volumes in Folio, which he publish'd at Rome, under the Title of Collectio maxima Conciliorum omnium Hispaniæ & Novi Orbis, &c. need only read the Abstracts, which the Journalists of Leipsic gave of them in their Acta Eruditorum, for the Year 1696.

[C] The Abstracts, which the Journalists gave of it] The Gentlemen of Leipsic took notice of it in their Acta, of the Month of February, 1688. The Abbot de la Roque gave an Abstract of it in his Journal of the 13th of January, 1687. I wonder That Journal did not appear in the Editions of Holland. The Article relating to the Work before us is very curious; it gives Advice, in an artful manner, to Cardinal d'Aguirre, on his declaring that he would warrant divers Decretals for genuine, which all the Learned judge to be spurious.

[D] He was thought —— to be the Author of a very learned Work (1) against the Decisions of the Clergy of France, in 1682.] The Title of it is; "Tractatus "de libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ, continens amplam "discussionem Declarationis factæ ab Illustrissimis Archiepiscopis & Episcopis Parisiis mandato regio congregatis anno 1682, Auctore M. C. S. Theolog. "Doctore. Leodii apud Matthiam Hovium 1684. superiorum permissu." I have read a Preface of the Abbot Faydit (2), wherein, among other things, he promises "a Confutation of the principal Maxims of "the Treatise, de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ "adversus quatuor propositiones Cleri, printed at "Liege, and attributed to Cardinal d'Aguirre, and "and to Monsr. Cozzoni;" and thus he expresses himself at the 148th Page. "The Author of the "Treatise de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ, or "rather the Authors, for I understand that several "Persons have had a hand in that Work, and that "all the Roman Doctors have exhausted their whole "Stock of Learning in it, though it is but a mean "Performance, these Authors, I say, maintain, &c." But let us consider a little what the Author of the Letter of an Abbot to a Prelate of the Court of Rome, on the Decree of the Inquisition of the 7th of December, 1690, against thirty one Propositions, advanc'd. "We ourselves (3), in our Assemblies, have not even "the Liberty of proposing what we may judge of Advantage to our Cause. You know whose fault it is: "Which is the Reason, why one of the Books, "which ought to have been most rigorously oppos'd "by our Divines, and even render'd infamous by an "Episcopal Censure, is spread all over France with "Impunity, and that the Abettors of the Opinions "contain'd in it, disperse, and commend it every "where, boasting that we dare not answer it. He "presently nam'd to me the Book de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ, which is a thick Volume in Quarto, "the Author of which is better known than he imagines. It is a shameful thing, continues he, that the "Clergy of France should tamely permit the Author, "who is a French Monk, to teach a Doctrine which "we all hold to be heretical; for he maintains openly, "that our Episcopal Jurisdiction is not of Divine "Right." The Anatomy of the Sentence against Father Quesnel, informs me (4), that the Book de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ was compos'd at Rome, at the Instance of the Ministers of the Holy See, and printed by their Order, under the Inspection of the Nuncio of Brussels, at Brussels itself. But if Cardinal d'Aguirre be not the Author of that Treatise, it is however certain, that he wrote against the Decisions of the Assembly of 1682. The Letter I have quoted informs me of this, in a manner, which deserves the Reader's notice, as it will inform him how this Cardinal's Book is receiv'd in France. "Our four Articles were scarce come out, adds the Author (5), but "a Crowd of Writers appear'd in opposition to them; "though scarce any one in France undertook their "Vindication. I do not say, that the Writings of "our Adversaries are formidable; most of them excite "our Pity; but yet they do mischief in Countries, "where the People are already dispos'd in favour of "the Doctrines, which they defend. —— Lastly, "The noble Rewards, wherewith the Court of Rome "knows how to pay the Zeal of those, who declare "for her, give a Lustre to the least considerable, and "the most obscure Works. Is it not by this means "alone that Cardinal d'Aguirre, from a Spanish "Monk, rose to his present Dignity? Was not the "Abbot of St Gall nominated to a Bishoprick, with a "Design of raising him to the Purple (6), as a Reward "for his writing against the four Articles, as well as "Cardinal d'Aguirre?" Lastly, public Complaints (7) were made three Years before the printing of the Letter, out of which this Passage is taken, that the Pensioners among the Clergy left the Tract de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ unanswered. The History of the Works of the Learned has inform'd us (8), that the Author of that Tract is a French Priest, whose Name is Antony Charlus, who fled to Rome on account of the Regale *. Perhaps he ought to be called Charlas, for he is probably of the same Family with the Monk of that Name, Native of l'Ile en Jourdain (9), who died in Exile, after having suffer'd many Disgraces in the Service of the Bishop of Pamiers (10).

(1) See what was said of it in the Nouvelles de la Rep. Lit. for the Month of July 1685. Artic. 1.

(2) See the Abstract of a Sermon preach'd on St Polycarpus's Day at St John's in Greve at Paris, printed at Liege 1689.

(3) It is a Bishop who is supposed to speak, p. 59.

(4) Pages 76, 77.

(5) Letter of an Abbot to a Prelate, pag. 55, 56.

(6) He was made a Cardinal in the Year 1686. His Name was Sfondrata, and he died some time after.

(7) In the Sentiments of Erasmus, published at Cologne, in 1688, pag. 155.

(8) Of the Month of May 1696, pag. 426.

* A Right belonging to the Kings of France, of disposing of Benefices during the Vacancy of an Episcopal See.

(9) In the Diocese of Toulouse.

(10) Francis de Caulet.

AJAX, the Son of Oïleus, was one of the Chief Lords, who went to the Siege of Troy. As he was the Son of a Prince, whose Dominions were of great Extent in the Country of the Locrians, it was easy for him to fit out Forty Ships for This Famous Expedition (a). He signalized himself on many Occasions; and it is pretended that there are Three Verses in the 2d Book of the Iliad, which are not Homer's, because they give a remarkable Superiority to Ajax, the Son of Telamon, over the Ajax of this Article (b), which by no means agrees with Homer's Account of these Heroes in another (c) Place. It is certain that our Ajax may be compared with any other Prince in the Grecian Army (d) for Courage, Boldness, and Activity [A]. As for

(a) Homer. Iliad. lib. 2. ver. 41.

(b) See the Scholiast of Homer on Iliad lib. 2. ver. 35.

(c) Homer. Iliad. lib. 13. ver. 01.

(d) Philostr. in Heroic.

[A] And Activity.] Homer generally gives him the Epithet ωκὺς, swift (1). The three Hands, given him by others, signify only the Rapidity of his Action in Fight. "A multis historicis Græcis tertium ma-

(1) See particularly the last Verses of 14*th Book of the* Iliad.

Digitized by Google

for Judgment and Conduct, they are out of the queſtion; they are not part of his Character. The Poets have deſcribed him as ſo undaunted, that they even tell us, that the Gods, with all their Thunder and their Storms, could not ſubdue his Inſolence; inſomuch that they found it eaſier to deſtroy than to humble him [B]. The Action, which expoſed him to the Anger of the Gods, was infamous, and brutiſh to the laſt degree. He had violated Caſſandra, the Daughter of Priam, in the Temple of Minerva, whither ſhe fled for Refuge. The Greeks themſelves were offended at ſuch a prophane Violence, and Ulyſſes adviſed to ſtone him (e). It appears, from ſome Paſſages of Ancient Authors, that Ajax denied the Fact, and offered to clear himſelf of it upon Oath (f). He confeſſed indeed, that he took the Maid in the Temple of Minerva, and that he pulled her away from the Image of the Goddeſs, which ſhe had embraced (g); but he proteſted that he did not violate her; and pretended, that Agamemnon had ſpread this malicious Report, that he might keep Caſſandra, whom he had ſeized, and whom Ajax claimed, as the firſt Poſſeſſor. We ſhall ſee, in the Remarks, how Minerva revenged herſelf on him for this Injury [C]. The Body of Ajax was thrown aſhore by the Waves of the Sea on the Iſland Delos, where Thetis buried

(e) Pauſan. lib. 10. pag. 347.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 343.

(g) Philoſt. in Heroic.

" num dicitur poſt tergum habuiſſe, quod ideo eſt " fictum, quia ſic celeriter utebatur in prælio mani- " bus, ut tertiam habere putaretur (2). —— Many " Greek Hiſtorians relate, that he had a third Hand; " the Ground of which Fiction is, that he was ſo " quick in the uſe of his Hands, that he ſeem'd to " have a third." Several interpreters apply theſe Words of Horace to him.

(2) Servius in Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 41.

—— & celerem ſequi
Ajacem (3).

(3) Horat. Od. 15. lib. 2. ver. 19.

Ajax, ſwift in purſuit.

Mr Hofman adopts their Explication, and confirms it by Homer's Deſcription of him.

----- Οἰλῆος ταχὺς υἱός.

The ſwift-footed Son of Oileus.

At firſt I could not gueſs what he meant by confirming what the Compiler of his Dictionary had ſaid concerning the Swiftneſs of Ajax's Feet, from the Authority of Homer. Quod autem ſupra, Ajacem pedibus velocem fuiſſe ſcribit hujuſce Dictionarii compilator, Homerum habet authorem; I thought it ſtrange, and incomprehenſible, that Mr Hofman ſhould ſpeak of the Compiler of his Dictionary, as of an Author diſtinct from himſelf; but at laſt I met with a Solution of this Enigma. Mr Hofman had taken Word for Word, what I have juſt now cited, out of Lloyd's Dictionary. The thing has no Difficulty in Lloyd; becauſe that Author publiſh'd his Dictionary only as an Addition to, and Correction of That of another. There are a great many Obſcurities in Books, which proceed from the ſame Principle, as That of this Paſſage of Mr Hofman. The Authors forget to make the proper Alterations, when they abridge or tranſcribe the Paſſages of another Author (4).

(4) See the Remark [G] of the Article ACHILLEA, towards the end.

[B] Eaſier to deſtroy, than to humble him.] Minerva was, in ſome meaſure, put to her laſt Shifts to puniſh him; ſhe rais'd a furious Storm; he ſaw his Ship ſink; and yet he eſcap'd upon a Rock.

Καὶ νυ κεν ἔκφυγε κῆρα, καὶ ἐχθόμενος περ Ἀθήνῃ,
Εἰ μὴ ὑπερφίαλον ἔπος ἔκβαλε, καὶ μεγ' ἀάσθη (5).

(5) Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 4. ver. 502.

By Neptune reſcu'd from Minerva's Hate,
On Gyræ, ſafe Oilean Ajax ſat,
His Ship or'e-whelm'd; but, frowning on the Floods,
Impious he roar'd Defiance to the Gods.
POPE's Odyſſ.

His Triumph at his Eſcape was horridly blaſphemous. In ſpite of the Gods, ſaid he, I am ſafe.

Φῇ ῥ' ἄκητι θεῶν φυγέειν μέγα λαῖτμα θαλάσσης· (6).

(6) Id. ib. ver. 504.

To his own Proweſs all the Glory gave,
The Pow'r defrauding, who vouchſaf'd to ſave.
Id. ibid.

Neptune, being angry at this Inſolence, ſplit the Rock in two with his Trident, and the Part, on which Ajax ſat, fell into the Sea. Thus Homer relates it, in the 4th Book of the Odyſſey. Quintus Calaber is much more particular on this Subject, and ſo prolix, that this ſingle Paſſage ſhews he was not a great Maſter of Writing. However, he informs us, that Minerva, not being ſatisfy'd with the Thunderbolts, which Jupiter had given her, deſired Neptune likewiſe to lend her all his Storms. It was the moſt dreadful Tempeſt imaginable; Minerva darted Thunder every Minute, and burnt and ſplit Ajax's Ship; yet this Furioſo ſav'd himſelf amidſt the wildeſt Tumult of the Waves, and brav'd the Gods from the Rock which he gained.

Φῇ δὲ, καὶ εἰ μάλα πάντες ὀλύμπιοι εἰς ἓν ἰοντὰς
Χώσαιντο, καὶ πᾶσαν ἀναῤῥήξαιεν θάλασσαν,
Ἐκφυγέειν (7).

(7) Quint. Calaber. lib. 14. ver. 564.

Tho' Gods ——
Shou'd dart united Vengeance on his Head,
And tempeſt Ocean from it's deepeſt Bed,
Still to eſcape he fear'd not ——

In order to deſtroy him, they were obliged to cruſh him by the fall of a Mountain, as they formerly did Enceladus. Seneca, in the Tragedy of Agamemnon, confirms this; read the firſt Scene of the third Act; you will there ſee a Deſcription of Reſiſtance and Fierceneſs carried to the higheſt Degree. The Feſtin de Pierre * is nothing to it. Poets would not be allowed at preſent to carry their Fictions ſo far on the Stage. Thus we have one Latin, and two Greek Poets, who aſcribe the Death of Ajax to Neptune; but Virgil and Hyginus (8) aſcribe the whole Honour of it to Minerva.

* A Comedy of Moliere's from whence our Shadwell borrowed his Don John.

(8) Hygin. cap. 116.

—— Pallaſne exurere claſſem
Agrivûm, atque ipſos potuit ſubmergere ponto,
Unius ob noxam & furias Ajacis Oilei?
Ipſa, Jovis rapidum jaculata è nubibus ignem,
Diſjecitque rates, evertitque æquora ventis.
Illum expirantem transfixo pectore flammas
Turbine corripuit, ſcopuloque infixit acuto (9).

(9) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 39.

Could angry Pallas, with revengful Spleen,
The Grecian Navy burn, and drown the Men?
She, for the Fault of one offending Foe,
The Bolts of Jove himſelf preſum'd to throw;
With Whirlwinds, from beneath, ſhe toſs'd the Ship,
And bare expos'd the boſom of the Deep;
Then, as an Eagle gripes the trembling game,
The Wretch, yet hiſſing with her Father's Flame,
She ſtrongly ſeiz'd, and, with a burning Wound
Tranſfix'd and naked, on a Rock ſhe bound.
DRYDEN.

[C] How Minerva reveng'd herſelf on him for this Injury.] See the foregoing Remark. I ſhall only add here, that the Storm, ſhe rais'd, caſt a great many Ships away near the Rocks of Caphareum, in the Neighbourhood of the Iſland of Eubœa, called at preſent Negropont. We cannot, without extream Imprudence, and without imputing to them a falſe Principle, condemn the Greek Poets for repreſenting a whole People as puniſh'd by that Goddeſs, for the Crime of a particular Perſon.

Unius

Digitized by Google

buried it [D]. Some Authors say, that he escaped from the Storm, and arrived safely at home [E]. The Locrians had a singular Veneration for his Memory (b). We shall relate, in the Article CASSANDRA, in what manner they were obliged to expiate his Crime. He tamed a Serpent fifteen Foot long, in such a manner, that it followed him like a Dog, and eat at his Table (i).

(b) See the Remark [D] of the Article ACHILLEA, pag. 52.

(i) Philostr. in Heroic.

Unius ob noxam & furias peccantis Oïlei.

She, for the Fault of one offending Foe,
The Bolts of Jove himself presum'd to throw.

Or, as another Poet says,

Quidquid Oïlides commiserat, omnibus unus
Peccavit Danais, omnibus ira nocens (10).

(10) Sabinus in Epist. Ulyssis.

What mighty Ills upon the Greeks were brought,
By rash Oïlides' bold and single Fault?
Mr SALISBURY.

The Objection would prove too much, and might be retorted against the History of David. It is not only true in Prophane, but likewise in Sacred Writers, that Quidquid delirant reges plectuntur Achivi (11).

(11) Horat. Epist. 2. lib. 1. ver. 14.

The People suffer, when the Prince offends.
CREECH.

[D] The Island Delos, where Thetis buried it.] Lycophron informs us of this Particular (12), since the Interpreters have found it out among his Enigmas. See what Canterus and Meursius have said upon it; but do not believe all they say: for they are mistaken in relation to the Passage of Pausanias, which they make use of to confirm their Conjectures. Pausanias does not speak of the Tomb of the Son of Oïleus (13), but of That of Ajax, the Son of Telamon. Meursius's Criticism on the Greek of Pausanias is not right; instead of reading τὴν ἔσοδον πρὸς τὸ μνῆμα ὁ χαλεπὴν ποιῆσαι, he reads τὴν ἔσοδον πρὸς τὸ μνῆμα ὁι χαλεπὴν ποιῆσαι. According to this Correction, the Mysian, who spoke to Pausanias, told him, That the Sea had render'd all Access to That Tomb difficult to him; whereas, on the contrary, he related to Pausanias, That the Sea, had been the occasion of discovering the largeness of one of Ajax's Bones. Wherefore the meaning of it is, That the Sea having wash'd part of the Land away, had made the Place more accessible, less steep, &c.

(12) Lycophron, ver. 400.

(13) Paus. lib. 1. pag. 34.

[E] Some Authors say, that he escap'd from the Storm, and arriv'd safely at home.] Mr Lloyd has cited these Words of Timæus Locrus, Hist. lib. 2. Μετὰ τῆς Τροίας ἅλωσιν πολλοὶ τῶν Λοκρῶν περὶ τὰς Γηρίας ναυηγησάντων ἀνηρέθησαν· ὁι δὲ λοιποὶ σὺν Αἴαντι μόλις ἐς Λοκρίδα διεσώθησαν. That is, After the taking of Troy, many Locrians were shipwrack'd, and perish'd near the Gerean Rocks (14); the rest hardly escap'd, with Ajax, and return'd home to Locris. There is some Probability, that, instead of Timæus Locrus, he ought to have cited Timæus Tauromenita.

(14) Rocks of the Ægean Sea. See the Pictures of Philostratus.

(a) See, in the Remark [A], of the Article TELAMON, the Genealogy of Ajax, both on the Father's and the Mother's side.

AJAX, the Son of Telamon (a), was, next to Achilles, the most valiant of the Grecian Captains [A] at the Siege of Troy; where he commanded the Troops of Salamis (b), and performed many Heroic Actions, which are described in the Iliad, in Dictys Cretensis, in Quintus Calaber, and in the XIIIth Book of the Metamorphoses, in the Speech, which he made upon the Dispute concerning the Arms of Achilles. He lost his Cause; for they were awarded to his Competitor Ulysses. He was so enraged at it, that he ran mad (c). He attacked the Cattle, and made a great Slaughter among them, fancying he was destroying his Rivals for the Arms of Achilles, or his Judges, who gave them to another: But, finding that he destroyed only Cattle, he became yet more furious, and killed himself. It is said, That his Madness was of great Service to the Besiegers [B]. According to some, he was condemned, not by

(b) His Father reigned in that Island. He gave Ajax 22 Ships. Hom. Iliad. lib. 2.

(c) Sophocles in Ajace. Quintus Calaber, lib. 5.

[A] Was, next to Achilles, the most valiant of the Grecian Captains.] It is on the Authority of several Poets, that I make this Restriction:

Ἀνδρῶν δ' αὖ μέγ' ἄριστος ἔην Τελαμώνιος Αἴας,
Ὄφρ' Ἀχιλεὺς μήνισε. [ὃ γὰρ πολὺ φέρτατος ἦεν] (1).

(1) Homer. Iliad. lib. 2. ver. 275.

Ajax in Arms the first Renown acquir'd,
While stern Achilles in his Wrath retir'd.
POPE.

(2) Pindar. Nem. 7.

Pindar calls Ajax κράτιστον, Ἀχιλλέος ἄτερ, μάχα (2); strenuissimum, excepto Achille, in pugna. Sophocles says as much of him (3). And Horace no less,

(3) Sophoc. in Ajace.

---- Ajax, Heros ab Achille secundus (4).

(4) Horat. Sat. 3. lib. 2. ver. 193.

Plutarch reports, as a Tradition, which admits of no Difficulty, That Ajax was the Handsomest, the Greatest, and the most Valiant of all the Greeks, next to Achilles (5). This is built on these Words of Homer:

(5) Plut. Sympos. lib. 9. Quæst. 5. pag. 740. A.

Αἴανθ', ὃς περὶ μὲν εἶδος περὶ δ' ἔργα τέτυκτο
Τῶν ἄλλων Δαναῶν μετ' ἀμύμονα Πηλείωνα (6).

(6) Homer. Odyss. lib. 11. v. 549. See also ver. 468.

With Tow'ring Ajax, an illustrious Shade:
War was his Joy, and pleased with loud Alarms,
None but Pelides brighter shon in Arms.
POPE's Odyss.

Plutarch builds upon this the Objection, which he makes to Plato, who feigned, that the Soul of Ajax was but the twentieth, that was enrolled. Τί δῆτα (εἶπεν) ὁ δευτεραῖος μὲν ὁ Αἴας κάλλει καὶ μεγέθει καὶ ἀνδρείᾳ δὴ φέρεται μετ' ἀμύμονα Πηλείωνα? What! (says he) was not Ajax always esteemed second to Achilles in Beauty, Stature, and Courage? Moreri misrepresents this Passage entirely; his Words are; Plutarch remarks, in his Table-Talk, the reason, why Plato gives but the twenty second Place, after Achilles, to the Soul of Ajax, who was esteemed the first in Beauty, Strength, and Courage; and he makes it appear, that That Philosopher played upon the different Signification of Names.

[B] His Madness was of great Service to the Besiegers.] We must not, however, conclude from hence, that true Courage stands in need of such Assistance. The Benefits, which sometimes arise from Vice, do not hinder it from being in it's own Nature evil. I appeal to this fine Passage of Cicero: "Non desiderat "fortitudo advocatam iracundiam; satis est instructa, "parata, amata per se. Nam isto modo quidem "licet dicere utilem vinolentiam ad fortitudinem, "utilem etiam dementiam, quod & insani & ebrii "multa faciunt sæpe vehementius.

Semper Ajax fortis, fortissimus tamen in furore.
Nam facinus fecit maximum, quum, Danais inclinantibus,
Summam rem perfecit manu, prælium quum restituit insaniens.
Dicamus igitur utilem insaniam (7).

(7) Cicero, Tuscul. lib. 4. cap. 22, &c.

"—— True Bravery stands in no need of being as- "sisted by Rage and Fury; it is sufficiently equipped,
"prepared, and armed by itself. By the same Ar-
"gument, otherwise, we might prove Drunkenness
"and Madness to be useful to Bravery, because Madmen
"and Drunkards often perform great Feats.

Ajax, for Valour constantly renown'd,
Was most an Hero, in his Madness found;
When he resto'r'd the Fight, the Grecians giving Thus Madness has it's Use." (Ground.

by the Votes of the Grecian Princes, but by the Deciſion of the Trojans, of whom it was demanded, which had done them moſt miſchief, Ajax or Ulyſſes (d). This Opinion is founded upon an expreſs Paſſage in the Eleventh Book of the Odyſſey. Ajax reſembled Achilles in many things; he was equally paſſionate and impatient (e); and every where invulnerable, excepting one part of his Body [C]. It would betray a very little acquaintance with Fabulous Hiſtory, ſhould we believe that there have not been various and even contradictory Accounts of the Cauſes and Circumſtances of his Death [D]. One part of Ajax's Character was Impiety [E]; it conſiſted, not in believing, that the Gods were not endued with great Power, but in imagining, that there was no great Glory in conquering by their aſſiſtance, ſince the arranteſt Cowards might do ſo. He would only be indebted for Victory to his own Courage. It is feigned, that his Soul, having the Liberty of chuſing a Body (f) to return into the World with, preferred That of a Lion to That of a Man: ſuch was his Deteſtation of Mankind, when he remembered the Injuſtice, which was done him, in relation to the Arms of Achilles. We ſhall, in another place (g), take notice of his Poſterity, from whence proceeded the Family of Miltiades. The Poets have given Ajax the ſame Elogy, which the Holy Scriptures give King Saul, as to his Stature (h). He was the ſubject of ſeveral Dramatic Pieces, both in Greek and Latin (i). The famous Comedian Æſop refuſed to act them (k). The Greeks highly honoured this valiant Captain after his Death (l). They erected a ſtately Monument to him on the Promontory

(d) Euſtathius and the Scholiaſt on Odyſſ. lib. 11. Schol. Ariſtophan. in Equit.

(e) Plutarch. Sympoſiac. lib. 1. ſub fin. p. 629. See alſo Cicero de Officiis, lib. 1. cap. 31.

(f) Plato de Republ. lib. 10. pag. 765.

(g) In the Article TECMESSA.

(b) See Remark [G].

(i) Auguſtus had begun one of them. See Suetonius, in his Life, c. 85.

(k) Cicero de Offic. lib. 1. cap. 32.

(l) See Remark [E]. Quintus Calaber, lib. 5. Dictys Cret. lib. 5.

[C] Every where invulnerable, excepting one Part of his Body.] The Origin of this particular Circumſtance is as follows. Hercules, ſeeing Telamon uneaſy, becauſe he had no Children, begged of Jupiter to give him a Son, who ſhould have a Skin as tough as that of the Nemean Lion, and be as courageous as the Lion itſelf (8). He ſaw an Eagle, after he had finiſhed his Petition, and, taking it for a good Omen, he promiſed Telamon ſuch a Son, as he had juſt been praying for, and ordered, that the Child ſhould be named Ajax, from the Eagle (9), which had given the Preſage. He returned to viſit Telamon, after the Birth of Ajax, and, cauſing the Child to be brought to him naked, he wrapped him in the Skin of his Nemean Lion, which rendered the whole Body of Ajax invulnerable, excepting that Part, which happened to be under the Hole in the Skin, at the Part where Hercules carried his Quiver (10). Authors are not agreed, which this Part was; ſome place it under the Arm-pit (11), others in the Neck (12), others in the Side (13), others in the Breaſt. Tzetzes upon Lycophron is of the laſt Opinion. Which ſeems likewiſe to be Ovid's in the thirteenth Book of the Metamorphoſes, v. 391.

(8) Pindar. Iſthm. Od. 6. See alſo Apollodorus lib. 3.

(9) The Greeks call an Eagle αἰετὸς.

(10) See Suidas in ἀσφαδαξω. The Scholiaſt of Sophocles in Ajacem, That of Homer in Il. l. 23. & Tzetzes in Lycophr.

(11) Suidas in ασφαδάξω.

(12) Apud Tzetzen; item Scholiaſtes Homeri in Il. l. 23.

(13) Scholiaſt. Sophoc. in Ajacem.

Dixit, & in pectus, tum denique vulnera paſſum,
Qua patuit, ferro letalem condidit enſem.

He ſaid, and, with ſo good a Will to die,
Did to his Breaſt the fatal Point apply.
It found his Heart, a way 'till then unknown,
Where never weapon enter'd, but his own.

DRYDEN.

[D] Various and even contradictory Accounts of the Cauſes and Circumſtances of his Death.]. For ſome Authors ſay, that he killed himſelf in the tranſport of Paſſion, which ſeized him, upon the loſs of Achilles's Arms; others, that his Diſpute with Ulyſſes was not in relation to thoſe Arms, but to the Palladium, which was carried away from Troy, when the City was plundered. Theſe two Accounts are incompatible; for the Arms of Achilles were awarded to Ulyſſes, before the taking of Troy, and Ajax's Madneſs immediately followed this Deciſion. However it be, Dictys Cretenſis relates, that Ulyſſes carried the Palladium againſt Ajax, by the Judgment of the Chiefs, and that Ajax, tranſported with Anger, threatened to kill thoſe, who had done him this Injuſtice; but that, the next Day, he was found dead in his Tent, tranſfixed with a Sword (14). Ulyſſes, being ſuſpected of the Murder, and perceiving the Murmurs of the Army, embarqued, and ſailed away, as faſt as he could. Suidas (15) and Cedrenus confeſs indeed, that Ajax and Ulyſſes diſputed the Palladium, but not that the Judges pronounced in favour of either of them. They ſay, that they ſeparated without coming to any Determination; and that Ajax was found dead the Night following. Some will have it, that his Combat with Paris was as fatal to himſelf as his Adverſary; that he received a Wound in it, of which he died (16), at the ſame time that he killed Paris (17). Others ſay, that the Trojans, being told by an Oracle, that Iron could not hurt his Body, and that, if they would kill him, they muſt overwhelm him with Dirt, actually put him to Death in that manner (18).

(14) Dict. Cret. lib. 5.

(15) Suidas in voce Παλλάδιον.

[E] One part of Ajax's Character was Impiety.] When he went to the Army, his Father recommended to him to add always the Aſſiſtance of God to his own Courage. Ajax anſwered him, That Cowards are often Victorious, with ſuch Help; as for himſelf, he ſtood in no need of it; and that he was ſure to conquer without it.

(16) Dares Phrygius, and the Scholiaſt of Sophocles on the Argument of Ajax.

(17) Dares Phrygius.

(18) Apud Schol. Sophocl. ibi.

Τέκνον, ἀορὶ
Βάλλ' κρατεῖν μὲν, σὺν θεῷ δ' ἀεὶ κρατεῖν.
Ὁ δ' ὑψικόμπως κἀφρόνως ἠμείψατο,
Πάτερ, Θεοῖς μὲν κἂν ὁ μηδὲν ὢν ὁμῶ
Κράτος κατακτήσαιτ· Ἐγὼ δὲ καὶ δίχα
Κείνων, τάχ' οἶδα τοῦτ' ἐπισπάσειν κλέος (19).

(19) Sophoc. in Aja em, pag. 80, 81.

Mi fili, inquit, virtute
Velis vincere, ſed auxiliante Deo ſemper velis vincere.
Ipſe vero ſuperbe ac ſtulte reſpondebat:
Adjuvante Deo, inquit, etiam ignavi
Vincere ſolent. Ego vero, vel abſque
Auxilio divino, confido me iſtam attracturum eſſe gloriam.

There is a Paſſage of the like Import in the ſame Author.

----- Εἰ δέ τις θεῶν
Βλάπτοι, φυγοιγ' ἂν χῷ κακὸς τὸν κρείσσονα (20).

(20) Ibid. pag. 51.

If Jove refuſe, from Heaven's ætherial Height,
To aid the Warrior in the Day of Fight,
In vain the Braveſt to the Battle go;
Edgeleſs their Swords againſt the Daſtard Foe.

Minerva offered one day to give him Advice; but he anſwered haughtily; Trouble not yourſelf about my Poſt; I ſhall give a good Account of it; you may keep your good Offices for the other Greeks (21). Another time, ſhe offered to drive Ajax's Car in the Battle; but he would not ſuffer it (22): Nay he even effaced the Owl, which was painted on his Shield (23). He was afraid, no doubt, that this Picture ſhould be taken for an Act of Devotion to Minerva, and a diſtruſt of his own Strength. It would be unjuſt not to inform the Reader here, that Homer does not repreſent him quite ſo irreligious; for, if he does not himſelf pray to Jupiter, in preparing for his Combat with the valiant Hector, he deſires, at leaſt, that others ſhould ſupplicate That God; but in ſecret,

(21) Ibid. pag. 81.

(22) Scholiaſt. Sophoclis.

(23) Idem.

----- Leaſt the Foe ſhould hear,
And deem their Prayers the mean Effect of Fear.

POPE.

Digitized by Google

montory Rhœteum [F]. Some miraculous Adventures have been related concerning this Tomb [G]. The Miſtake, which Ronſard believed he had committed in relation to Ajax [H], was corrected in a new Edition.

Or rather Aloud; for, adds he, I ſtand in Fear of no Man (24);

From warlike Salamis I drew my Birth,
And, born to Combats, fear no Force on Earth.
Ibid.

(24) Hom. Iliad. lib. 7. ver. 194.

This is not ſufficient to ſet him up for a Model of Devotion, as is done in the Commentary on the Emblems of Alciatus. "Recte Ajax apud Homerum, "qui Deos invocat ſeſe ad arma componens; neque "enim putat ſibi felicius rei bene gerendæ auſpicium "capere poſſe, quam ab invocatione numinis (25). "—— Ajax, in Homer, does right to invoke the "Gods, when he prepares himſelf for the Fight; "he thought an Invocation of the Deity the happieſt "Prelude to Succeſs." This is to miſrepreſent the Fact: the Paſſage of the ſeventeenth Iliad, v. 645. is of no uſe here. He would not have the Trojans know, that the Greeks prayed to Heaven for the Succeſs of his Arms; This may admit of two Explications: He feared, perhaps, that the Trojans would take this Invocation of the Deity for a Sign that he diſtruſted his own Courage; or elſe He feared, that the Trojans, apprized of the Vows, which the Greeks were offering up for him, would do the ſame, and even more fervently, for Hector. The firſt of theſe two Explications makes him guilty of a Vanity very injurious to God; the ſecond repreſents him fully perſuaded of the Divine Power. But what is this to the Purpoſe, ſince he conſents they ſhould pray aloud; I ſay, conſents to it, in confidence of his own Strength and Dexterity; in a word, for this Reaſon, becauſe he fears nothing, and is unconcerned, whether the Trojans offer up counter Prayers or not? Is this an Example of Piety, which the Commentator of Alciatus ought to have propoſed? A certain Perſon was ſaying the other Day, that the Catholic Princes were in the wrong to ſuffer the Pilgrimages of Loretto, the Offerings, the Vows, the Prayers of forty four Hours, which they appoint, in order to obtain a glorious Campaign, to be put in the Gazettes; for, as ſoon as their Enemies are informed of this, they practiſe the ſame thing, and make yet larger Vows to the Saints of both Sexes. It was replied, that this ſhewed the plain dealing of thoſe Princes: They will not ſurprize the Decrees of Heaven; they will not, like Ajax, hide the Knowledge of their Requeſts from their Enemies, and the means of providing againſt them. This would be to deſire that Judgment might be given, before both Parties were heard.

(25) Comm. in Emblem. 127. Alciati pag. 547.

[F] They erected a ſtately Monument to him on the Promontory Rhœteum.] It was one of thoſe, which Alexander deſired to ſee and honour (26). I have obſerved, in another Place (27), that Pliny is unjuſtly accuſed of being ignorant of the true Situation of this Sepulchre. But if it be true, that the Greeks erected this Monument, what does Horace mean by cenſuring Agamemnon for having left Ajax unburied?

Cur Ajax, heros ab Achille ſecundus,
Putreſcit, toties ſervatis clarus Achivis.
Gaudeat ut Populus Priami, Priamuſque inhumato,
Per quem tot juvenes patrio caruere ſepulchro (28).

Say, why does Ajax, born the Greeks to ſave,
Rot on the Earth, unhonour'd with a Grave;
Whilſt Priam's Sons with hoſtile Joy deride
HIS cold Remains, their Funeral Rites denied;
Whoſe Hand had hurl'd to Pluto's gloomy Reign
So many Trojan Chiefs, untimely ſlain;
Whoſe Limbs, unburied on their native Shore,
Devouring Dogs, and hungry Vultures tore?

(26) Diod. Sicul. l. 17.

(27) In the Remark [K] of the Article ACHILLES.

(28) Horat. Sat. 3. lib. 2. ver. 193.

I anſwer, that The Poet makes uſe only of one of the Incidents of the Tragedy of Ajax; it is That, wherein Sophocles feigns, that Agamemnon would not conſent, that Ajax ſhould be honoured with Funeral Rites. He yielded at laſt to the preſſing Inſtances of Teucer. Obſerve, that ſome Authors ſay, that the Body of Ajax was not burnt, and others that it was. Dictys Cretenſis and Quintus Calaber are of the latter Opinion; Philoſtratus of the former. He tells us, that Calchas declared it contrary to the Precepts of Religion to permit thoſe to be burnt, who had killed themſelevs (29). See in the ſame Philoſtratus, how the Athenians diſtinguiſhed themſelves in honouring this Hero. Pauſanias informs us, that one of the Tribes bore the Name of Ajax (30); and that the Honours they decreed to him and his Son Euryſaces, were yet ſubſiſting (31). Thoſe of Salamis had built a Temple to Ajax (32). The whole Greek Nation invoked him ſome time before the Battle of Salamis (33), and afterwards conſecrated to him one of the Ships, which they had taken from the Perſians, in that memorable Day, as being part of the firſt Fruits dedicated to the Gods (34).

(29) Philoſtr. in Heroic.

(30) Pauſan. lib. 1. pag. 5. See Plut. Sympoſ. lib. 1. Quæſt. 10. p. 628. Herodot. lib. 5. c. 66.

(31) Pauſan. ibid. pag. 33.

(32) Id. ib.

(33) Herodot. lib. 8. cap. 64.

(34) Id. ib. cap. 121.

[G] Some miraculous Adventures —— relating to this Tomb.] Ulyſſes, having ſuffered Shipwreck on the Coaſts of Sicily, loſt, among other things, the Armour of Achilles. The Shield was afterwards thrown aſhore by the Waves near the Sepulchre of Ajax, where it hung; but the next Day it was ſtruck with Thunder. This is what Ptolemy the Son of Hephæſtion reports (35). Pauſanias ſays, in general, that the Storm threw the Arms of Achilles on Ajax's Tomb, after the Shipwreck of Ulyſſes (36). The Story was curious, and afforded too many moral Reflexions, to be omitted by the Poets. See in the Anthologia what the Greeks have ſung on that Subject (37). Alciatus borrowed one of his Emblems from thence (38). As for the Prodigies, or Miracles, for which Ajax was famed after his Death, ſee Pauſanias, at the thirty fourth Page of the firſt Book. Before I end this Remark, I ſhall add, that the Waves having half opened the Tomb of Ajax, People were curious to look into it, and obſerved that one of his Knee-Bones was as big as one of the Diſcus's or Quoits, which were made uſe of in the Games (39). The Perſon, who related it to Pauſanias, would have him judge from thence of Ajax's Stature (40). Homer ſays that he was remarkably tall.

(35) Apud Photium, pag. 484.

(36) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 34.

(37) Anthol. lib. 1. c. 22. initio.

(38) It is the 28th.

(39) Pauſan. ubi ſupra.

Αἰνὰρ ἠύς τε μέγας τε,
Ἔξοχος Ἀργείων κεφαλὴν ἠδ' εὐρέας ὤμους (41).

----- With Giant Strength endu'd,
Whoſe brawny Shoulders, and whoſe ſwelling Cheſt,
And lofty Stature, far exceed the reſt.
POPE.

(40) See ſome Miſtakes in relation to this Paſſage of Pauſanias, in Remark [D] of the foregoing Article.

(41) Hom. Iliad. 3. ver. 226.

[H] The Miſtake, which Ronſard believed he had committed.] He had ranked Ajax among the Heroes who took Troy; but he left him out in the ſecond Edition of his Franciad, having been told by Florens Chriſtianus, that Ajax killed himſelf before the taking of the Town (42). He was plainly ignorant, that, according to ſome Authors, this great Captain did not die, 'till after the ſacking of Troy; for, if he had known it, he would have told Florens Chriſtianus, that he was not ignorant of what Homer, Sophocles, Ovid, and others have related; but that he knew likewiſe the Opinion of others; and that he choſe rather to follow Dictys Cretenſis, than Homer; and thus he might have avoided the Acknowledgment of a Miſtake: A Confeſſion very ungrateful to a Poet, and even to other Authors.

(42) See Florens Chriſtianus's Notes on the Philoctetes of Sophocles.

AJAX, the Son of Teucer, cauſed a Temple to be built to Jupiter in Olbus, a City of Cilicia. The Prieſt of That Temple was Lord of the Country called Tracheotis. Several Tyrants endeavoured to invade this Country, and to ſupport themſelves in it, ſo that it became a true Theatre of Robberies. After theſe Tyrants were extirpated, it was called the Country of Teucer, and the Prieſthood. Theſe are the Names it had in Strabo's time, who adds, that moſt of it's Pontiffs had born the Name of Teucer, or That of Ajax; and that Aba, the Daughter of Zenophanes, one of the Tyrants, being allied to that Family by Marriage, became Miſtreſs of the Country, after her Father had governed it in quality of her Guardian. She was confirmed in the Poſſeſſion of it by Marc Antony and Cleopatra, to whom ſhe had made her Court with great Addreſs. After her Death, the Country returned into the Power of the lawful Poſſeſſors (a). We may infer from hence, that the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is very erroneous in this Article [A].

Digitized by Google

(a) See Strabo, lib. 14. pag 462.

[A] The Supplement to Moreri — is very erroneous in this Article.] After having thoroughly conſidered the Matter, I find the ſhorteſt way is to ſet down the whole Article of the Supplement: Here it is. Ajax, the Son of Teucer, King of Salamis, in the Iſland of Cyprus, having ſucceeded his Father, conſecrated a Temple to Jupiter, in the City of Olbus. He maintained himſelf in the Poſſeſſion of this Kingdom, againſt ſeveral Princes, who endeavour'd to make themſelves Maſters of it, and left it to his Poſterity, who moſt of them bore the Name of Ajax, or of Teucer. Strabo, lib. 14. I obſerve, in confutation of this Account, I. That it deceives the Reader, by inducing him to believe, in virtue of this Narrative, that the Town of Olbus was in the Iſland of Cyprus. II. That it is not true, that Strabo ſays, Ajax ſucceeded his Father in the Kingdom of Salamis. The indefatigable Meurſius, who took ſo much pains to diſcover the Names of all thoſe, who reign'd in the Iſland of Cyprus, did not meet with a ſingle Ajax (1). III. That it is not true, that ſeveral Princes endeavour'd to wreſt the Kingdom of Salamis from Ajax. Their Attempts were aim'd againſt Tracheotis, the Patrimony, or Demeſn of the Church of Olbian Jupiter, in Cilicia; and Strabo does not ſay, that they endeavour'd to diſpoſſeſs Ajax of it, nor that Ajax was in Poſſeſſion of it. A Man may build a Temple without being the Prieſt of it, and without poſſeſſing the Revenues, with which it is endow'd. IV. That, ſuppoſing Ajax had been both Prince and Prieſt of Trachcotis, it would be falſe, that he kept the Poſſeſſion of it, and that he left it to his Deſcendants; it is plain, from the Relation of Strabo, that the Series of lawful Succeſſors was ſometimes interrupted.

(1) See his Treatiſe de Cypro, lib. 2. cap. 7. & ſeq.

AJAX, an Eccleſiaſtic, famous for his Piety, and Exemplary Life, in the Reign of Theodoſius. He had a Brother, whoſe Name was Zeno, who was equally virtuous. They diſtinguiſhed themſelves for the practice of Virtue, at firſt, not in a Solitude, but in the City of Gaza; afterwards they addicted themſelves to a Monaſtic Life. They were often very ill treated, for courageouſly maintaining the Orthodox Faith againſt the Pagans. Ajax had married a very handſome Woman; but it is ſaid he knew her but Three times, from whence proceeded Three Sons; after which, he ſeparated himſelf from her, as to Conjugal Commerce, and wiſely governed the Church of Botolium. He brought up Two of his Sons to the Study of Divinity, and to Celibacy, and married the Third (a).

(a) Sozom. lib. 7. c. 28.

AIGUILLON, a ſmall Town of Guienne, on the Confluence of the Rivers Lot and Garonne, four Leagues below Agen [A], was erected into a Duchy, with the Dignity of Peerage annexed to it, in favour of the Duke of Maienne, in the Year 1599. The Letters Patents for it were confirmed in Parliament the Year following (a); but, the family of that Duke being extinct, the Erection of it was renewed in the Reign of Lewis XIII, in the Year 1638, by Letters-Patents, which were confirmed the ſame Year (b). Cardinal Richelieu cauſed this to be done, in Favour of his Niece, the Lady de Combalet, who was afterwards ſo well known by the Name of the DUCHESS OF AIGUILLON. We ſhall ſpeak of her in her proper place (c). She left this Dutchy by Will to her Niece Mary Magdalen Tereſa de Vignerod, Siſter to the Duke of Richelieu (d). Nothing is more remarkable in Hiſtory, than the Reſiſtance made by the Town of Aiguillon [B] in 1346, againſt the Duke of Normandy, who was afterwards King John. We are aſhamed to read the account of it at preſent; and our Military Men cannot ſufficiently expreſs their Wonder, that the Art of War was at that time ſo inconſiderable in reſpect to what it is now. If the Duke of Normandy, eldeſt Son to the King of France, had taken Aiguillon after fourteen Months Siege, he would have deſerved the greateſt Triumph; and yet, at preſent, ſuch a Town, as This was at that time, would hardly do honour to a Colonel,

(a) The 2*d of* March.

(b) The 19*th of* May.

(c) In the Article (VIGNEROD Mary de).

(d) See the State of France, Tom. 2. p. 88, 80. Edit. 168c.

[A] Below Agen.] If I had thought proper to obſerve, in the middle of what Towns Aiguillon is ſituated, I ſhould not have pitch'd upon Agen and Nerac, as Mr Moreri did; for theſe three Places form a Triangle; but I ſhould have choſen Agen and Tonneins, the one above, the other below Aiguillon, on the Garonne. This Fault is ſo much the more conſiderable, as there is no Reader but will conclude from it, that Nerac is ſituated on the ſame River.

[B] Is more remarkable ——— than the Reſiſtance made by the Town of AIGUILLON.] Papyrius Maſſon ſays, that the Siege continued fourteen Months. "Acilionem (1) urbem irrita Joannis, poſtea Regis "Francorum, & tunc Ducis Normanniæ, quatuordecim menſium obſidione memorabilem (2). ——— "The City Acilio (AIGUILLON) famous for the "fourteen Months fruitleſs Seige of John, afterwards "King of France, and then Duke of Normandy." The numerous Army of the Duke of Normandy is no leſs to be conſidered, than the length of the Siege. "This Duke came to Toulouſe, in the beginning of "January, with an hundred thouſand Men bearing "Arms. All this dreadful Multitude did nothing in "three Months, but take ſome paltry Towns in Agenois, and afterwards the City of Angouleme, from "whence they attack'd Tonneins, and then beſieg'd "Aiguillon ——— very well ſtor'd, and fortify'd, for "thoſe times (3)." The manner of the Attack is a third remarkable Particular. "This whole Century (4) "has not produc'd a more memorable Siege, if we "conſider either the Attack or the Defence. It was "attack'd three times a Day for a whole Week together; afterwards they plied it with Artillery and "Engines, both by Land and by Water." The following Citation takes in the two Paſſages of Mezerai. I fetch it from Catel (5). "Froiſſard, in the 121ſt Chapter of his firſt Volume, ſays, That when the Duke "of Normandy beſieg'd, with a hundred thouſand "French, the City of Aiguillon, in poſſeſſion of the "Engliſh, he ſent to Toulouſe for eight of the greateſt "Engines that were in that City, and when the Inhabitants of Aiguillon were upon the point of being "attack'd, it was agreed by the French Lords, that "thoſe of Toulouſe, Carcaſſonne and Beaucaire ſhould "attack them from Morning 'till Noon, and thoſe of "Rouergue, Cahors, and Agenois, from Noon 'till "Night (6)." Mezerai makes the three Aſſaults in a Day continue but a Week, which does not anſwer the Expectation,

(1) Baudrand calls it Aguillionium.

(2) Papyr. Maſſon's Deſcription of the Rivers of Gaul.

(3) Mezerai, Abreg. Chron. ad ann. 1345. Tom. 3. pag. 24. Holl. Edit. 1673.

(4) It was the XIVth Century.

(5) Id. ibid.

(6) Catel's Memoirs for the Hiſtory of Languedoc, pag. 563.

Digitized by Google

Colonel, who ſhould take it at the firſt Onſet. The Romans made almoſt the ſame Reflexion, when they compared the firſt Conqueſts of their City [C] with the Victories they gained afterwards. Mezerai ſtrangely puzzles the Affair I am ſpeaking of (e). Aiguillon had not altogether the ſame Succeſs againſt the Engliſh, as againſt the Duke of Normandy; for, when they beſieged it in 1430, they did not take the Caſtle; they took only the Town, and plundered it (f).

(e) See Remark [B].

(f) Darnalt's Antiquities of Agen, pag. 100.

Expectation he had raiſed in his Readers; for what is a Week in fourteen Months? The Idea he gives us of the Attack is certainly too narrow and confin'd. Beſides, he is guilty of a Chronological Error. According to his Account, the Duke of Normandy came to Toulouſe in the Month of January, 1346, and ſpent three Months in taking ſome paltry Towns; afterwards he took Angouleme, and then return'd towards the Garonne, took Tonneins, beſieg'd Aiguillon, and rais'd the Seige of it by reaſon of the Battle of Creci. This Battle was fought on the 26th of Auguſt, 1346. According to this Narrative of Mezerai, it is not only impoſſible, that the Siege of Aiguillon ſhould have laſted fourteen Months, but even, conſidering the Cuſtom of thoſe times, that the Siege ſhould have been very long: And it is to ſpeak improperly, to ſay, that the Duke of Normandy puſh'd it vigorouſly (7). We muſt place the Arrival of this Prince at Toulouſe in the Year 1345.

(7) Mezerai. ibid.

[C] When they compar'd the firſt Conqueſts of their City.] See Florus and his exclamatory Style. "Sora "(quis credat?) & Algidum terrori fuerant: Satricum "atque Corniculum provinciæ. De Verulis & Bo- "villis pudet, ſed triumphavimus. Tibur, nunc ſub- "urbanum, & æſtivæ Prænesteæ deliciæ, nuncupatis "in Capitolio votis, petebantur. Idem tunc Fæſulæ, "quod Carræ nuper; idem nemus Aricinum, quod "Hercynius ſaltus: Fregellæ, quod Geſoriacum: Ti- "beris, quod Euphrates. Coriolus quoque (prò pu- "dor!) victus adeò gloriæ fuit, ut captum oppidum "Caius Marcius Coriolanus, quaſi Numantiam aut "Africam, nomen induerit (8).—— Even Sora (who "would think it?) and Algidum ſtruck Terror: "Satricum and Corniculum were Provinces. Verulæ "and Bovillæ, (though now we are aſham'd of it) "were matter of Triumph. We made ſolemn Vows in "the Capitol for the Conqueſt of Tibur, now Rome's "Suburbs, and Prænesteæ's Summer Pleaſures. "Fæſulæ was, then, what Carræ was lately; the "Aricinian Grove, what the Hyrcinian Wood; Fre- "gellæ, what Geſoriacum; Tiber, what Euphrates. "The Victory gain'd over Coriolus (I am aſhamed to "ſay it) was thought ſo glorious, that Caius Marcius "Coriolanus aſſum'd the Captive City's Name, as it "had been another Numantia, or Africa." But what ſhame ſoever it was to the French, not to be able to take Aiguillon, with ſo many Men, commanded by their King's eldeſt Son, it was a great Honour to the Engliſh, that they defended the Poſt ſo long.

(8) Florus, cap. 11. lib. 1.

AILLI (a) (PETER de) Biſhop of Cambray (b) and Cardinal, was born at Compiegne in Picardy [A], in the Year 1350. His Family was very obſcure; ſome ſay He was (c) Under-Porter of the College of Navarre; but they are miſtaken. He was not entered in That College till about the Year 1372. He was admitted a Penſioner there, among the Students in Divinity. He was at that time Sollicitor for the French Nation in the Univerſity of Paris, and capable of ſetting up for a good Author, as he made it appear by his Treatiſes of Logic [B] according to the Hypotheſes of the Nominals, and his Treatiſes concerning the Nature of the Soul, and that of Meteors. He ſhewed ſuch great Penetration and Elegance in his Works, that he laid thereby the Foundation of That high Reputation, to which he raiſed himſelf. He had as good Succeſs in his Explication of Peter Lombard, in the Year 1375. This happy Application to Scholaſtic Learning did not hinder him from being a good Preacher. He took his Doctor's Degree in 1380, and had a Canonſhip given him at Noion. He was recalled to Paris Four Years after, to exerciſe the Office of Great Maſter of the College of Navarre. He had a great Number of Scholars there, and among others John Gerſon, and Nicolas de Clemangis. He pleaded with ſo much Force in 1387, before the Pope (d), againſt a Jacobin (e) who had appealed from the Judgment, which the Faculty of Divinity of Paris had pronounced againſt him, that he obtained a Confirmation of the Sentence. He wrote likewiſe a Treatiſe againſt the ſame Jacobin. This gained him ſo great a Reputation, that, in 1389, he was made Confeſſor and Almoner

(a) In Latin Petrus de Alliaco, or ab Alliaco, or ab Alyaco, or Alliacenſis, or Alliacus, or Ailliacus, &c.

(b) Thevet, & Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 548. & de Scient. Mathem. p. 182, 228, make him Archbiſhop of that City.

(c) See Remark [A].

(d) It was the Antipope Clem. VII. who reſided at Avignon.

(e) He was an Arrazonois, and his Name was John de Monteſon; who denied the immaculate Conception of the Virgin.

[A] Born at Compiegne in Picardy.] This appears by the public Regiſters of the Church of Cambray (1); ſo that we may place in the Liſt of Thevet's Untruths what he ſays concerning Peter d'Ailli's native Country. "He was born, ſays he (2), in a very obſcure "Village of Germany, called Ailly, from which, to "hide the meanneſs of his Extraction, he took his "Name. He was ſo poor, that he was obliged to "ſerve as Under-porter to the College of Navarre, "to ſupport himſelf in his Application to the Study "of Literature." Volaterran had already publiſh'd, "that Peter d'Ailli was a German (3).

(1) Apud Launoium Hiſt. Coll. Navari, pag. 137.

(2) Thevet's Illuſtrious Men, Tom. 7. pag. 85. 12mo.

(3) See Geſner, Bibl. fol. 543. verſo.

[B] By his Treatiſes of Logic.] He underſtood it perfectly, and was indebted to it for that Strength and Skill, wherewith he ſupported his own Opinions, and overthrew thoſe of others. The famous Weſſelus of Groningen ſpeaks of him in this manner. "Quis "unquam ad illum apicem Theologiæ, quo Petrus "de Alliaco conſcendit, abſque definitionibus, divi- "ſionibus, argumentationibus, inſtantiis logicalibus "perveniret? In diſputationibus dico, ubi diſcuſſione "diſerta opus eſt. Quomodo Petrus Joannem de "Monteſono in Rota de errore quatuordecim illarum "concluſionum concuſſiſſet, niſi diſtinctione multi- "plici, aut elenchi ignorantia antecedente vel conſe- "quente deluſum docuiſſet? Opus igitur Theologicis "Logicam inferre. Et GERSON iſte quo tandem "tantus ipſe Theologus, niſi per accuratiſſimam il- "lam ſuam Magiſtri Petri Logicam, evaſit (4)?—— "Who can ever arrive at thoſe Heights of Divinity, "to which Peter d'Ailli attain'd, without Definitions, "Diviſions, Syllogiſms, and Logical Inſtances? I "mean, in Controverſies, which require a rational "Diſquiſition. How could he have convinc'd John "de Monteſon of Error in his fourteen Concluſions, "before the Pope, had he not ſhew'd in what manner "he was led into them, either by heaping Diſtinction "upon Diſtinction, or by an Ignorance of the Argu- "ment in the Antecedent, or Conſequent? Divinity "therefore ſtands in need of Logical Concluſions. And "how could the famous GERSON ever have been "the great Divine he was, without this accurate Lo- "gic of Peter d'Ailli?" We muſt remark, that Mr de Launoi is of Opinion, the Words Rota de errore, &c. in the foregoing Paſſage, were the Title of a Book written by Peter d'Ailli; but I chuſe to underſtand by Rota, the Place, where the Pope heard the Diſputants. Without doubt Logic contributed much to the following Elogy of Peter d'Ailli: "A- "quila Franciæ, atque aberrantium à veritate malleus "indefeſſus (5). —— The Eagle of France, and the "indefatigable Combatant of Heretics."

(4) Weſſelus of the Authority of the Pope, &c. apud Launoium Hiſt. Navar. pag. 469.

(5) Launoi, ubi ſupra, pag. 153, 470.

[C] Almoner

Digitized by Google

Almoner to Charles VI [C], and Chancellor of the Univerſity. Five Years after, the firſt Dignity of the Holy Chapel of Paris was conferred upon him; to wit that of Treaſurer. So many different Employments did not hinder him from applying himſelf earneſtly to find out the moſt effectual means of putting a ſtop to the Schiſm, which divided the Church of Rome. He went from the King to the Anti-Pope Benedict XIII. in 1394, and gave ſuch an advantageous Character of him at his return, that it was reſolved, in the King's Council, to acknowledge him for lawful Pope. He obtained the Biſhoprick of Puy in Vellai (f), at the end of the Year 1395, and That of Cambray, in the beginning of the Year following. He was much eſteemed by Boniface IX. and he made uſe of his intereſt with him in procuring a Doctor of Divinity to be eſtabliſhed in all the Epiſcopal Churches of the Kingdom. He preached at Genoa, in the Year 1405, on the Myſtery of the Trinity, before Benedict XIII. and perſuaded That Pope to enjoin all the Churches to celebrate the Feaſt of the Trinity. He was admired for his Learning and Prudence in the Council of Piſa, in the Year 1409. He maintained, in all the Aſſemblies of Paris, which debated concerning a Remedy for the Schiſm, that the only way to put a ſtop to it was to call a General Council. Two Years after, he was promoted to the Purple (g). He went into Germany, in the Year 1414, in Quality of the Pope's Legate. He preſided at the third Seſſion of the Council of Conſtance; he compoſed Three Pieces during the ſitting of the Council: One, De emendanda Eccleſia; another, De duodecim honoribus beati Joſephi; another, De modo & forma eligendi Papæ: And no Perſon had a greater ſhare, than He, in the Affairs of That memorable Aſſembly, which laſted Three Years. He died in the Year 1425 [D], and was buried in his Cathedral of Cambray. He was a great Benefactor to the College of Navarre [E], and left great Sums, by his Will, for Services to be performed in ſeveral Churches for the Repoſe of his Soul (b). Mr de Launoi, who ſupplied me with this Account, does not forget to look upon Peter d' Ailli's Doctrine concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Power, as a Blemiſh in a beautiful Body. He imputes it to the Misfortunes of the Times (i); but I wonder he forgot another Blemiſh of This Doctor, I mean his Fondneſs for Judicial Aſtrology [F]. Laſtly; our (f) According to Moreri, it was the Biſhoprick of Bellei; but he is miſtaken.

(g) Moreri ſays it was at Piſa; but he is miſtaken.

(b) Taken out of the Latin Hiſtory of the College of Navarre, by Mr de Launoi, pag. 467, &c.

(i) Dictata hujuſmodi danda injuriæ temporis ſunt, nævus in candidiſſimo pectore. Launoi. ibid. pag. 480.

[C] Almoner to Charles VI.] See du Peyrat, pag. 345, of the Antiquities of the King's Chapel. He obſerves there, that "Peter d'Ailli never had the "Quality of great Almoner of France, nor of the "King's great Almoner: They were Titles unknown "at that Time, and did not come in Faſhion, 'till "the Reign of Charles VIII. and of Francis I. what-"ever the Author of the Gallia Chriſtiana * may ſay, "in which the Continuator of the Annals of Baro-"nius is likewiſe miſtaken."

* Claudii Gallia Chriſtiana, fol. 68.

[D] He died in the Year 1425.] It is ſtrange, that a Perſon of this Rank and Diſtinction ſhould die, without our knowing certainly where, or in what Year. Some ſay that he died in Germany, in the Year 1416. Others, that he died at Avignon, on the 8th of Auguſt, 1425, when he was the Pope's Legate in France (6). Others allow, that he died at Avignon, but place his Death in the Year 1426 (7). Mr de Launoi is contented with placing it in the Year 1425, in the 479th Page of his Book; but he had ſaid, (Page 129) that Peter d'Ailli died, when he was Legate of the Holy See in Germany, in the Year 1423 (8). "Anno poſtquam vaſtatum eſt à "Burgundionibus quinto. —— Five Years after it "was laid waſte by the Burgundians." Now, in the 126th Page of the ſame Work, he has placed this Ravage in the Year 1418. The Regiſter of the Church of Cambray ſays, that he died on the 9th of October, 1425, being Legate of the Holy See in the Lower Germany, and that, on the 9th of July following, his Body was carried to Cambray, where it was buried behind the great Altar. The difference of 1416, and 1426, proceeds from an Error of the Preſs; the Figure 1 being, by miſtake, plac'd inſtead of the Figure 2, occaſion'd two different Opinions.

(6) See Father L'Abbé, de Scriptor. Eccleſ. Tom. 2. pag. 179.

(7) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 548. Bellarmin. de Script. Eccleſ. mentions the ſame Year, but without taking notice of any City.

(8) See Launoi's Hiſt. Navar. pag. 137.

[E] He was a great Benefactor to the College of Navarre.] He was called it's ſecond Founder (9). He built the Houſe of the Divines, but not the Library. Spondanus, who affirms it, is miſtaken; it was the Work of Charles VIII. "Spondanus in annalibus "Eccleſiaſticis prodidit ab eo extructam eſſe bibliothe-"cam. Sed aberrat; id eſt opus Caroli octavi Re-"gis, cujus & nomen μονόγραμμον in Bibliotheca "vitro centies depingitur, & ſtatua in occidentali tur-"binati parietis cono erecta conſpicitur (10)." It is true, indeed, Peter d'Ailli would have part of his Benefactions to the College laid out in purchaſing Books; and that he often preſented them with Books (11). I cannot tell, whether he gave them his own Library, as Aubert Miræus aſſures us he did: "Alliacus, ſays he (12), anno 1425, Avenione mo-"riens, bibliothecam ſuam legavit Navarræo Pa-"riſiis Collegio, quam ibi magna cum voluptate ali-"quando vidimus. —— D' Ailli, dying at Avignon "in the Year 1425, left his Library to the College "of Navarre at Paris, which I have formerly ſeen "there with great Pleaſure." I don't find, that Mr Launoi ſays ſo; his Silence alone is ſufficient to refute this Flemiſh Writer.

(9) Ibid. p. 234, 475.

(10) Id. ib. pag. 475.

(11) Ibid. p. 114, 135.

(12) Miræus, in Auctario de Script. Eccleſ. c. 454. pag. 265.

[F] His fondneſs for Judicial Aſtrology (13).] Bellarmin has not overlooked this Blemiſh: "Unum "eſt, ſays he (14), in quo reprehenditur hic auctor, "quod videlicet ſenſiſſe videatur Chriſti nativitatem "prænoſci potuiſſe ex genethliacis obſervationibus, "atque ad hoc adduxerit apparitionem ſtellæ, quæ "apparuit Magis. —— There is one thing, for which "This Author deſerves Cenſure; I mean, his Opinion, "that the Nativity of Chriſt might have been cal-"culated Aſtrologically, and his appealing, in proof "of this, to the Phœnomenon of the Star, which ap-"peared to the Wiſe Men." Others obſerve, that Peter d'Ailli maintained, in his Book de Concordia Hiſtoriæ & Aſtrologiæ Divinatricis, that Noah's Flood, the Birth of JESUS CHRIST, and ſuch other Miracles, and all the Prodigies, might have been foretold by Aſtrology (15); and that he referred the Origins, Revolutions, and Deſtructions of Commonwealths, and Religions, to the Conjuctions of the Higher Planets (16). Bodin adds, That Johannes Picus, Prince of Mirandola, takes the Hypotheſes of Peter d' Arliac (17) for certain, without enquiring any farther after the Truth; though, out of thirty ſix great Conjunctions, which That Cardinal obſerved, from 115 Years after the Creation of the World, 'till the Year of our Lord 1385, not ſix of them proved true (18). [De Alliaco is the vulgar Latin Name of Peter d' Ailli (Alliacus): from whence Bodin formed his Arliac, by changing the firſt of the two ll into an r, as in Varlet, Merlin, Merluſine, from Vallet, Mellin, Meluſine. REM. CRIT.] This Paſſage of Bodin was thus drawn up in the Latin Edition, Mirum mihi viſum eſt quamobrem J. Picus Mirandulæ princeps illius hominis errores ſane pudendos in cœleſtium orbium doctrina pro certis & compertis demonſtrationibus habuerit; cum enim poſt orbem conditum anno centeſimo decimo quinto uſque ad annum Chriſti 1385, triginta ſex Jovis & Saturni concurſus tradiderit, vix tamen ullus eo quo docuit loco ac tempore deſcribitur. The ſame Bodin attacks the very Foundation of theſe Hypotheſes: "Cardinal d' Arliac, ſays he "(19), begins with the great Conjunctions at the "Time of the Creation of the World, ſuppoſing, "according

(13) See the end of the Remark [K].

(14) Bellarmin. de Script. Eccleſ. p. 384. He refers us to Sixtus Sienenſis, Bibl. Sancta, Annot. 15, & 81. & lib. 6. Annot. 10.

(15) Voſſius de Scientiis Mathem. pag. 215.

(16) Bodin. de Repub. lib. 4. pag. 448. of the firſt Edition.

(17) So he calls him.

(18) Bodin, ubi ſupra.

(19) Id. ib. pag. 549.

Digitized by Google

our Peter d'Ailli, who ſubmitted Scepters and Crowns to the Eccleſiaſtical Power; who endeavoured to multiply Feſtivals; who founded ſuch a great number of Maſſes for the Repoſe of his Soul; and who condemned John Hus to Death [G]; appears nevertheleſs in the Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth [H], as a Forerunner of Luther and of Calvin. The Carteſians likewiſe rank him in the Number of their Forerunners, in

" according to his Account, that there are 7158 " Years, following the Error of Alphonſus, which " was rejected by all the Hebrews, and at preſent " with common Conſent by all Churches. —— And " therefore it is an intolerable Error to ſuppoſe the " great Conjunction of the three higher Planets to " have fallen out in the Year of the Creation 320, " and to lay it down, that there are at preſent 7118 " Years elapſed, which is carrying it up to twelve " hundred Years before the Creation of the World." This manner of oppoſing Peter d'Ailli cannot be deciſive at preſent, when we conſider, that ſeveral learned Men prefer the Calculation of the Greek Bible, concerning the Duration of the World, before the Calculation of the Hebrew Text. Voſſius had more reaſon to inſult him, on the riſe of the Arian Hereſy, than on the Duration of the World. Theſe are Voſſius's Words; and we find by them, that our Aſtrologer placed the beginning of That Hereſy ſeven hundred Years after JESUS CHRIST, which betrays a very groſs Ignorance. " Valde etiam futile " eſt fundamentum quod arti iſti ponit. Ait ab ini- " tio mundi uſque ad diluvium fluxiſſe annos 2042. " à diluvio ad natalem Chriſti 3102. His ita con- " ſtitutis, totus eſt in eo ut oſtendat, quandocunque " mirandum aliquid contigit in terris, etiam illuſtrem " aliquam ſtellarum conjunctionem apparuiſſe in cœlis. " Atqui falſiſſimum eſt quod ſibi ſumit de anno vel " diluvii vel natalis Domini: Nec levis eſt error, ſed " ſpiſſiſſimus; in priori quidem numero, annorum " pene ſexcentorum, in altero autem, paulo paucio- " rum. Quid mirum? omnino Cameracenſis fuit Chro- " nologiæ imperitiſſimus, ut vel arguit quod Arria- " nam Hæreſim cœpiſſe dicat anno Chriſti ſeptingen- " teſimo, quam veriſimilius tum pene extinctam " dixiſſet. Ortam vero conſtat fere initio ſeculi " quarti. —— The Foundation, which he lays of " This Science, is very weak. He tells us, that " from the Creation to the Deluge were 2042 Years " (20); from the Deluge to the Birth of Chriſt 3102. " If this were admitted, it would yet reſt upon him " to ſhew, that, upon every wonderful Event, there " appeared in the Heavens ſome remarkable Conjun- " ction of the Stars. But his Hypotheſis concerning " the Year of the Deluge, and the Birth of Chriſt, " is moſt falſe. Nor is it a trivial Error, but a very " conſiderable one; being no leſs, than a Miſtake of " near ſix hundred Years in the former, and ſome- " thing leſs in the latter (21). Nor are we to won- " der at it; ſince the Biſhop of Cambray's utter Ig- " norance of Chronology appears in his placing the Riſe " of the Arrian Hereſy in the 700th Year of Chriſt, " which he might, with more appearance of Truth, " have ſaid was extinct at that Time. For it is cer- " tain it commenced at the beginning of the fourth " Century (22)." If Thevet had wrote with Judgment, would he have ſpoke of Peter d'Ailli in the following Terms? " I could wiſh that all, who ſet up " for Aſtrologers, would carefully peruſe his Books; " it would not be Labour loſt: For beſides the ex- " traordinary Obſervations I have related (23), they " would find there a Sentence drawn up againſt thoſe, " who, under the Name of true Aſtrology, take a " Pleaſure in being impoſed upon by the falſe Mask " of Aſtrology, introducing an Aſtral Idolatry, alto- " gether abominable (24)." This pretended Idolatry was no more to be feared in Thevet's Time, than the religious Worſhip of the Earth: So that if Peter d'Ailli's Books were only fit to convert this kind of Idolaters, they were almoſt uſeleſs. But, as, on the other ſide, they were calculated to keep up the Credit of Aſtrology, by reaſon of the Influences, which the Author attributes to the Conjunctions of the Planets, things of which Thevet ſays never a Word, the reading of them was much more prejudicial, than uſeful.

(20) Voſſius means 2242.

(21) Voſſius, according to his Hypotheſis, ought to have found here an Error of above 600 Years.

(22) Voſſius, de Scientiis Mathem. pag. 215.

(23) He had only mention'd the Reduction of all Ptolemy's Parallels to twelve.

(24) Thevet's Homm. Illuſtr. Tom. 7. pag. 89.

[G] Who condemned John Hus to Death.] It was not without exhorting him to ſubmit, and aſſuring him it was the beſt way he could take. " Exami- " natis dictis teſtium, & recitatis articulis erroneis, " in Patrum confeſſu, Cardinalis Cameracenſis, judex " cauſæ deputatus à Concilio, dixit ad Joannem Huſſ. " En viæ duæ propoſitæ ſunt tibi, ut ex his eligas " unam; aut te offeras omnino totum in poteſtatem " & gratiam Concilii, ejuſque decretis ſuper hac re " acquieſcas; ita namque fiet ut Concilium ob ho- " norem domini noſtri Regis Romanorum nunc præ- " ſentis, ac fratris ejus Bohemiæ Regis, clementer " acturum ſit tecum; aut ſi ex dictis articulis quoſ- " dam tenere ac defendere intendas, & deſideres aliam " audientiam, concedetur tibi quidem; ſed tunc ſcias " hic eſſe magnos & illuminatos viros, qui fortiſſi- " ma habent adverſus articulos tuos fundamenta, & " verendum eſt ne inde gravioribus involvaris errori- " bus. Id conſulendo dixerim tibi, non ut judex (25). " —— The Witneſſes having been examined, and the " erroneous Articles recited, in the Aſſembly of the " Fathers, the Cardinal Biſhop of Cambray, having " been deputed Judge of the Cauſe by the Council, " addreſſed himſelf to John Hus, in the following " Manner. You have your Choice of two Ways; ei- " ther to throw yourſelf wholly upon the Power and " Favour of the Council, and acquieſce in their Sen- " tence; which will induce the Council, in reſpect to " our Lord the King of the Romans now preſent, " and his Brother the King of Bohemia, to deal " mildly with you; or, if you have thoughts of main- " taining and defending any of the aforeſaid Articles, " and deſire another hearing, it ſhall be granted you; " but be aſſured, here are great and enlightened Men, " who can produce ſtrong and fundamental Arguments " againſt your Articles; and you muſt take care you " do not involve yourſelf in ſtill greater Errors. I " give you this Advice, as your Friend, not as your " Judge." Mr de Launoi, having related this, adds, that This Heretic choſe rather to maintain his Opinions obſtinately, and to be burnt, than to follow the wholſome Advice of Cardinal d'Ailli. Verum litigioſus homo dogmata ſua nimis pertinaciter propugnare maluit & comburi, quam uſque adeo ſalubre Cardinalis Alliaci conſilium ſequi.

(25) Launoi; Hiſt. Gymnaſii Navarræ, p. 474. ex Huſſitæ cujuſdam relatione apud Broviun ad ann. 1415. n. 47.

[H] Appeared nevertheleſs in the Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth.] " He was delegated, by " the Determination of the Council of the French " Church, to require the two Popes, who conteſted " the Papacy, to reſign the Papal See. He was an- " ſwered, that the Popes of Rome are never guilty " of Schiſm; but that the French Prelates were " purpoſely Schiſmatics. He was afterwards ſent " back again, according to the Advice of the Coun- " cil, held at Paris, with the Sieur John Mangre, " Marſhal de Boucicaud, who afterwards ſpoke his " Mind very freely to the Anti-Pope at Avignon; " nor was Cardinal d' Ailli behind hand in ſevere- " ly reproving him (26). And this ſeems to be the " Reaſon, why Henry Pantaleon ranked him among " thoſe, who, at that time, exclaimed, and wrote " againſt the Ambition of the Popes, the Corrup- " tion of the Church, and the Schiſms and Divi- " ſions, which ſprang up daily; telling us, That " he wrote a Book, entituled, Of the Reforma- " tion of the Church; which however is not to be " met with in the Catalogue of his Books, which " is very large, both in Divinity and in Mathema- " tics (27)." Nothing is more true, than what Pantaleon affirms concerning this Book of Peter d'Ailli. As to the Catalogue of the Witneſſes of the Truth, collected by Francis Illyricus, we find Peter d'Ailli in it condemning the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and laying before the Council of Conſtance a Project of Reformation; according to which, the Court of Rome was to be deprived of the numberleſs ways and means of heaping up Money; the Prelates were to be compelled to live an exemplary Life, and to diſcharge their Duties; the Pomp of Ceremonies, the unneceſſary Holidays, the Abuſe of Faſts, and the Canonization of Saints, were to be aboliſhed; and the Number of Monks, Images, and Churches to be diminiſhed (29). We may be ſure that all the Writings of Peter d'Ailli are not calculated to pleaſe the Court of Rome, ſince three or four of them have been inſerted in the Appendix of the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum & fugiendarum (30). Orthuinus

(26) See what du Pleſſis Mornai cites out of Froiſſard upon this occaſion, in his Myſtery of Iniquity, p. 480, &c. Edit. in Folio 1611.

(27) Thevet Hommes Illuſtr. pag. 88.

(28) See the Diſſertation of Mr Allix, at the beginning of the Determinatio Fr. Joannis Pariſienſ. Printed at Lond. 1686. pag. 71, 72.

(29) See du Pleſſis, Myſtery of Iniquity, p. 523.

(30) Printed at London, 1690.

Digitized by Google

in the Queſtion relating to Accidents [I]. He had been turned out of his Epiſcopal Church, if we may believe Eraſmus; who adds, That his Exile procured him a Cardinal's Hat (k). He wrote many Books [K], ſome of which were never printed [L]. He compoſed likewiſe Verſes, ſuch as they were, in the Vulgar Language [M]. Conſult the Authors cited by Moreri, and, inſtead of Friſſart, to whom he refers us; read Froiſſard.

(k) Petrum Aliacenſem Cameracenſis civitas Epiſcopum ejecit, Roma ex exule fecit Cardinalem. Eraſm. de Ratione conſcrib. Epiſtolarum, Epiſt. Conſolat.

Gratius had already inſerted in That Faſciculus this Cardinal's Treatiſe de Emendatione Eccleſiæ. What I have ſaid concerning the Diminution of the Number of Monks, does not agree with what Thevet had been informed of; to wit, That Peter d'Ailli had compoſed a Book entituled, The Buckler of Poverty, wherein he apologized for the Mendicant Fryars (31).

(31) Thevet, Hommes Illuſtr. p. 90.

[I] The Carteſians likewiſe ranked him in the Number of their Forerunners, in the Queſtion relating to Accidents.] A Profeſſor of Louvain, one of the moſt ſtrenuous Oppoſers of Mr Deſcartes, became "one "of his moſt zealous Followers, after he had found "in ſome Authors, very much approved of by the "Church, his Opinion concerning Tranſubſtantia-"tion, which was almoſt the only Point, which "ſtuck with him. Some time after, he inſerted, "in his Theological Theſes, an Abſtract of a Book, "which Cardinal d'Ailli, Biſhop of Cambray com-"poſed on the Maſter of the Sentences, to ſhew, "that the Cardinal propoſes Mr Deſcartes's Opinions, "concerning the Accidents of the Euchariſt, and re-"conciles it with the Definition of the Oecumeni-"cal Council of Conſtance (32).

(32) Baillet, Life of Deſcartes, Tom. 2. pag. 522.

[K] He wrote many Books.] His Commentaries on the Maſter of the Sentences, and the four Treatiſes inſerted in the Appendix to the Faſciculus rerum expetendarum, were printed at Straſburg in 1490. A Volume of his Treatiſes and Sermons was printed in the ſame Place, at the ſame time. Part of his Treatiſes was reprinted at Douay, in the Year 1634. under the Care of Leander de St Martin, Hebrew Profeſſor at Douay. Thevet aſſures us, "That he had "a Work of Peter d'Ailli, which was printed in "the Year 1410, on the twelfth of Auguſt, when "the Art of Printing began to be in uſe in France, "in which there is a great Number of Mathema-"tical Figures (33)." This cannot be; for the Art of Printing was not diſcoverred 'till about the Year 1440. He might have ſaid, that the Sacramentale of this Author was printed at Louvain in 1487, and his Queſtions in ſphæram mundi Joannis de Sacroboſco cum Commentariis Petri Cirveli Daronenſis Hiſpani, at Paris in 1488 (34). His Meteors was printed at Straſburg, in the Year 1504. and at Vienna, in Auſtria, in 1509. His Life of Pope Celeſtin V, was printed at Paris in the Year 1539 (35), and is to be met with in the Lives of the Saints compiled by Surius. There is a Difficulty in the Title of this Book, as it aſcribes to Peter d'Ailli the Dignity of Confeſſor to Charles V. but we had better ſuppoſe, that Charles V. is miſtaken for Charles VI. than to ſay, there was another Peter d'Ailli. Poſſevin, who believed it, is much miſtaken. The Cardinal appears to have nothing ſo much at Heart as Aſtrology; for, beſides that he preſented to the Council of Conſtance a Plan for the Reformation of the Calendar, he compoſed the following Books; Tractatus de vero cyclo lunari. Vigintilogium de concordantia Aſtronomicæ veritatis cum Theologia. Tractatus de concordia Aſtronomicæ veritatis & narrationis Hiſtoricæ (36). Tractatus elucidarius Aſtronomicæ concordiæ cum Theologia & cum Hiſtorica Narratione. Apologetica defenſio Aſtronomicæ veritatis (37). Alia ſecunda Apologetica defenſio ejuſdem (38). Tractatus de concordia diſcordantium Aſtronomorum.

(33) Thevet ubi ſupra. pag. 89.

(34) According to Geſner fol. 647. verſo, it was in 1498.

(35) All this is taken out of Mr de Launoi, Hiſt. Gymn. Navarræ, p. 476, &c. or from Father L'Abbé de Script. Eccl. pag. 180.

(36) Publiſhed at Baſil, in 1418.

(37) Publiſhed at Cologne, in Sept. 1418.

(38) Publiſh'd at Cologne, in Oct. 1418.

Du Peyrat aſſures us (39), That Bodin, in his Preface to the Dæmonomania of Sorcerers, mentions a Book, compoſed by Cardinal d'Ailli, wherein he maintained, that there is not one neceſſary Demonſtration in Ariſtotle, except That, whereby he has demonſtrated the Unity of God. There are two Particulars, which deſerve Cenſure, in this; for Bodin does not ſay, as du Peyrat intimates, That Peter d'Ailli wrote a diſtinct Treatiſe on this Subject; and he declares, that the Author had remarked ſome other Demonſtrations in Ariſtotle, though but few in Number (40).

(39) [illegible] Hiſt. Lexembourg. in Diſcourſ. Geogr. [illegible] Chimer.

(40) Bodin's Preface to the Dæmonomania of Sorcerers, pag. 14.

[L] Some of which were never printed.] They are in the Library of the College of Navarre (41); Mr de Launoi gives us a Liſt of them. Some of them contain an Anſwer to certain very curious Queſtions, as, Utrum eſſe tria ſuppoſita unius naturæ ſit perfectio (Whether three Subſtrata of one and the ſame Nature be the Perfection of that Nature): Utrum libertas creaturæ rationalis ante & poſt lapſum intrinſece ſit æqualis (Whether the Free-Agency of a rational Creature before and after it's Fall be intrinſically equal): Utrum Creaturæ rationalis conſcientia erronea ejus actum excuſare poſſit (Whether the erroneous Conſcience of a rational Creature can excuſe it's Act). This latter Queſtion puts me in mind of certain Papers, which appeared ſome time ago in Holland, concerning the Privileges of an erroneous Conſcience; in which it was ſo demonſtratively proved, that every Action, committed againſt the Light of Conſcience, is eſſentially evil, and that it muſt neceſſarily and indiſpenſibly be avoided; that the Oppoſers of this Doctrine fell into this ſhocking Opinion, That a Man muſt not always act according to the Light of his Conſcience: From whence it follows, that it is ſometimes juſtifiable to act contrary to the Dictates of Conſcience. A monſtrous Doctrine! deſtructive of all Morality; and in compariſon of which the moſt extravagant Probabiliſm is an innocent Opinion. What makes this the more ſtrange is, that they were Fanatics, who ran into this Extream; tho' They, of all Men, are moſt concerned to aſſert the Rights of Conſcience.

(41) Part of them are in Emanuel College, at Cambridge. Oudin's Supplem. de Script. Eccl. pag. 690.

[M] He compos'd likewiſe Verſes, ſuch as they were, in the Vulgar Language.] I quote my Authority in the Margin, who ſays, "That Peter d'Ailli wrote "many French Verſes in Rhime, ſuch as was pra-"ctis'd in his Time, which were tranſlated into "Latin by Nicolas de Clemangis. I have ſeen "ſome of them, ſays he (42), which were printed a-"bove an hundred Years ago. He adds, That the "ſame Author wrote a Book in French, entituled, "The ſeven Steps of the Ladder of Penitence, figured "and ſet forth under the ſeven penitential Pſalms; "printed at Paris." I am afraid la Croix du Maine impoſes upon us in relation to this laſt Work; for Mr de Launoi poſitively aſſerts, That Antony Belard made a French Tranſlation of the Latin Treatiſe of Peter d'Ailli, on the ſeven Penitential Pſalms, and that Denys de Harſi printed this Tranſlation at Lyons, in the Year 1544, in 16° (43).

(42) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 381.

Add the following Obſervation: "The French "Verſes of Peter d'Ailli, which la Croix du Maine "ſpoke of, are only thirty two in Number, and con-"tain a ſhort Deſcription of a Tyrant's Life. Nicolas "de Clemangis paraphras'd them in Latin Hexame-"ters, printed with the French Verſes of Peter d'Ailli, "at the end of a Book, entituled, The Contempt of "the Court, tranſlated from the Spaniſh of Guevara, "into French, Italian, and High Dutch, at Geneva, "in 16°, by John de Tournes, 1605. The Para-"phraſe of Clemangis is to be met with at the end "of his Epiſtles, page 355, of the Edition of Leyden. "As for the Tranſlation of Antony Belard, Antony "du Verdier ſays, page 51 of his Bibliotheque, that "it was printed in 1542, by Denys de Harſi, in 16°, "at Lyons (44).

(43) Launoi, Hiſt. Gymn. Nav. p. 479.

(44) Mr de la Monnoie's Manuſcript Remarks.

AIMON, Prince of the Ardennes, was, were are told (a), the Father of thoſe Four Worthies, ſo celebrated in our Old Romances. They are commonly called The Four Sons of Aimon. They had but one Horſe in common to them all, whoſe Name was Bayard. I ſhould not have taken notice of ſo Idle a Tale, had it not been for the ſake of obſerving, that theſe romantic Extravagancies have even crept into the Sanctuary. Popular Superſtition has introduced them into Religion; and if any one had objected to theſe Impertinent Writers, Hæ nugæ ſeria ducent in mala (b), he

(a) Horat. de Art. Poet.

Digitized by Google

he would not have been a False Prophet. The History of Luxemburgh, composed by John Bertels, Abbot of Epternach, informs us, that Renauld, the Eldest of these Four Brothers, died a Martyr to the Name of JESUS CHRIST; that he was canonized; that the Church celebrates his Festival; that Temples were consecrated to him, and, among others, the Church of St Renauld, in the Country of Cologne, to which is annexed a Convent of Nuns. There is also a Church dedicated to the same Saint at Cologne, near That of St Maurice; and the representation of the Four Brothers is painted on the Walls of the Church. They are all four on one Horse, and Renauld, the Eldest, has a Diadem round his Head, as a Mark of his Saintship. It is pretended, that, after having been a great Warrior under Charlemagne, he turned Monk at Cologne (c); that he died a Martyr, and that, because he wrought Miracles after his Death, a Church was built to him (d).

(c) Ferrarius in Catalog. Sanctorum ad 7. Januar.

(d) See Voetii Disput. Theolog. Tom. 3. pag. 508.

AYRAULT (PETER), in Latin Ærodius, Lieutenant Criminal in the Presidial Court of Angers, his native Country, was born in the Year 1536. He studied Humanity and Philosophy at Paris; afterwards he applied himself to the Civil Law at Toulouse; from thence he went to Bourges, to improve himself by the Lectures of Duarenus, Cujacius, and Doneau, three of the most Excellent Civilians of That Time. After taking his Bachelor's Degree at Bourges, he returned to his own Country, where for some time he read Public Lectures in Civil Law, and pleaded at the Bar. He was then 22 Years of Age. Some time after he returned to Paris, where he became one of the most famous Advocates of the Parliament [A]. In the Year 1563, he published, there, the Declamations of Quintilian, which he corrected in several Places, and accompanied them with Notes. The Year following, he published a Treatise of the Power of Redemption, composed by Francis Grimaudet, the King's Advocate at Angers, to which he prefixed a Preface, concerning the Nature, Variety, and Alteration of the Laws. In the Year 1567, he published a Book entituled Decretorum rerumve apud diversos populos ab omni Antiquitate Judicatarum Libri duo—— Accedit tractatus de origine & auctoritate rerum Judicatarum. He enlarged it considerably in the following Editions [B]. He left Paris, the Year following, to exercise the Office of Lieutenant Criminal in his own Country: Which he executed with so much Justice, that, like another Cassius, he was called the Rock of the Accused. During the Confusions of the League, he exercised, in the Interim [C], the Office of President in the same Court, of which he acquitted himself with the same Integrity. The City of Angers expressed their Esteem for him several ways; especially by conferring upon him the Office of Perpetual Echevin *. He had a great Quarrel with Philip Gourreau Master of the Requests, his Countryman, and published an Apologetical Letter against him in 1577 (a). He was heartily attached to the honest Party against the League; and he was obliged to be so, not only on account of his Office in the Presidial Court, but because he was Master of the Requests to the Duke of Anjou, a Place

* A kind of Magistrate something like an English Sheriff.

(a) He published two Editions of it, in one Year, at Angers, the second more ample than the first. This Piece is in Latin.

[A] One of the most famous Advocates of the Parliament.] Antony Loisel, in his Dialogue of the Advocates of the Parliament of Paris, places our Ayrault in the List of the most famous, and gives him the Preeminence over Bodin. It is true he remarks, that Bodin had no Success at the Bar. These are Loisel's Words: "Master Peter Ayrault was likewise promoted to the Post of Lieutenant Criminal at Angers, where he was born, and retir'd thither about the latter end of the extraordinary Sessions of Poitiers, in the Year 1567, though he was a skillful and learned Pleader, and succeeded much better than John Bodin of Angers; for, notwithstanding the latter was a compleat Scholar, his Pleadings at the Bar had never any Success (1)." Some of Peter Ayrault's Pleadings were printed at Paris, in the Year 1568 (2). They were reprinted at Rouen, in 1614, with the Notes and Additions of a young Civilian. Mr Menage, who tells us this (3), might have added, that they were printed at Paris, in 1598, in 8vo. with some other small Pieces of Peter Ayrault. The Secular Priests of Paris chose him, in 1564, to plead their Cause against the Jesuits; yet he did not plead it; perhaps, because it was not thought proper, that the Interest of the Clergy should be distinct from That of the Bishop of Paris. This is the Conjecture of du Boulai (4). However it be, his Pleading was published, as I just now observ'd in the marginal Note (2).

(1) Loisel, apud Menag. in Testim. de P. Ærod. prefix'd to his Life, p. 26.

(2) There are 22 of them; of which the 20th is That, which he had prepared for the Secular Priests of Paris against the Jesuits, in 1564.

(3) In his Life of Peter Ayrault, pag. 26.

(4) In the History of the University of Paris, Tom. 6. p. 966. apud Menag. in Testim. de P. Ærod. pag. 77.

[B] He enlarg'd it considerably in the following Editions.] The second Edition is of Paris, 1573, in 8vo. and contains six Books. The Third is in Folio, and the Title of it is, Rerum ab omni antiquitate judicatarum Pandectæ. There is a Paris Edition of it likewise, in 1588. After the Death of the Author, the same Pandects were printed at Paris, in the Year 1615, with the small Treatise de Patrio Jure. He had revised and corrected them. Mr Menage had promis'd (5) a new Edition of them, with short Marginal Notes, wherein he designed to shew, from whence Ayrault borrowed his Examples. This is a very learned Work. "Continet enim res ab omni antiquitate apud Indos, "Judæos, Græcos, Romanos, Francos, aliosque, ju- "catas (6). —— For it contains Cases adjudg'd from "all Antiquity among the Indians, Jews, Greeks, "Romans, French, and others." That, which he wrote in French, Of the Judiciary Forms, which the ancient Greeks and Romans made use of in public Trials, compared with the Practice of our French, is useful and curious. It was printed, the first time, at Paris, in 1575, in 8vo. The second Edition, which is of Paris, in 1588, in 4to, was enlarg'd by two Books: The third was enlarged by one Book, at Paris, in the Year 1598, in 4to (7). So that this Work contains four Books. The fourth Book, which treats of the Proceedings against dead Bodies, Ashes, the Memory of a Person, Brute Beasts, things Inanimate, and Criminals who refuse to appear before the Judge; was printed at Paris, in 1591. I forgot to observe, that his Treatise de decretis rebusve apud diversos populos ab omni antiquitate judicatis, was printed at Francfort, in the Year 1580, from the first Edition. The Abbreviators of Gesner had no other Knowledge of our Peter Ayrault, but what the Edition of Germany afforded them. They were mistaken, in supposing his Name was Paul.

(5) Ubi supra, pag. 28.

(6) Menage in the Life of Peter Ayrault, p. 27.

(7) It is thus we must translate the Words of Mr Menage, Quem postea anno 1588, duobus libris, & anno 1598. tribus auctiorem in eadem urbe publicavit.

[C] In the Interim.] Mr Menage makes this Interim to continue two Years; Eo Prætura munere per biennium functus Ærodius est (8); and yet he says, That Ayrault was not nominated to this Office, 'till the 11th of May, 1589, and that Henry the Great presented another Person to it, in the beginning of the Year 1590, ineunte Anno 1590.

(8) Id. ib. pag. 24.

(9) Ib. pag. 23.

[D] Was

Digitized by Google

Place which he had jointly with the Civilian Baudouin, before That Prince came to the Throne. The Speech, which he made before That Duke, upon his Entry into Angers, on the 7th of January, 1570, was printed with the Diſcourſe, which he addreſſed to him [D] in praiſe of his Victories, and of the Reſtoration of the Univerſity of Angers. This Diſcourſe turns chiefly on Baudouin's having dedicated two Ancient Panegyrics to That Prince; viz. That, which Eumenius made upon Conſtantius; and That, which Pacatus made upon Theodoſius. The Diſcourſe, which Ayrault publiſhed, in the Year 1589, on the Death of Henry III. and the Prejudice which the Church received by it, teſtifies his Adherence to that Monarch's Party. He neither put his own, nor the Printer's Name to it. Thuanus ſpeaks of it with Commendation (b). A Latin Tranſlation of it by the Author himſelf was found among his Papers. He wrote a Diſcourſe at that time, in which he exhorted Henry IV. to become a Catholic: But, of all his Works, That which made him moſt known in Foreign Countries, and chiefly among the Proteſtants, is his Treatiſe of Paternal Power [E]. He compoſed it during a Law-Suit, which he had with the Jeſuits, on account of his Eldeſt Son, who had taken the Habit of their Order (c). He had ſent him to their College at Paris, to render him the more capable of ſucceeding him; and, ſome time after, had the Vexation to hear, that they had perſuaded him to enter himſelf among their Order. He complained of This Proceeding to the Parliament of Paris (d); and, being informed, that they had ſecreted him, he preſented a Petition to the Pope, and obtained Letters from Henry III. to Cardinal d'Eſt, Protector of the Affairs of France, and to the Marquis de Piſani, Ambaſſador of that Crown (e); by which Letters the King preſſed them to obtain an Order from the Pope for the Releaſe of the Young Man. But all was in vain. The Treatiſe of Paternal Power, which he addreſſed three Years after to this Diſobedient Son, did not prove more effectual. Although Ayrault had other Sons, yet he was exceedingly concerned at the loſs of This. He had married Anne des-Jardins, at Paris, in the Year 1564. She was Daughter of John des-Jardins, Phyſician to Francis I, by whom he had 15 Children [F], of which Ten were living, when he died at Angers, the 21ſt of July, 1601, aged 65 Years (f). I borrow this Article from Mr Menage (g).

(b) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 95.

(c) See the following Article.

(d) The 15th of May, 1586.

(e) They are dated July 18. 1586.

(f) Sainte Marthe is miſtaken in the Elogy of Peter Ayrault, wherein he tells us he was but 63 Years of Age.

(g) The Life of P. Ærodius, written by Ægidius Menage, his Daughter's Son, and printed at Paris, 1675, in 4to.

[D] Was printed with the Diſcourſe, which he addreſs'd to him.] Mr Menage has not rightly adjuſted the Date of the Impreſſion of theſe two Pieces; he ſays they were printed in 1577, and that the Prince, who is celebrated in them, was then King of Poland, and Duke of Anjou. This is plainly to tell us, that he was not King of France; and yet the Duke of Anjou was Inaugurated at Rheims, in the Month of February, 1575, and he was look'd upon as King of France, the very Day that Charles IX. died (10). You may take it for granted, that the Speech and Diſcourſe, in queſtion, came out in 1570, and conſequently that the Subject of them was no longer King of Poland.

(10) It was on May 30, 1574.

[E] His Treatiſe of Paternal Power.] The Author wrote it in French and Latin; one of his Countrymen, whoſe Name was Jacob Frubert, tranſlated it into Italian (11). Let us ſee what Mr Menage ſays of it; " Egit cum fugitivo filio tanquam cum abſente reo, " hoc eſt annotatione & programmate.

(11) Menage ubi ſupra, pag. 28.

Qualis populea mœrens philomela ſub umbra
Amiſſos queritur fœtus (12);

(12) Virg. Georg. lib. 4. ver. 511.

" Et quæ ſequuntur; notum enim tibi carmen eſt; " Talis Petrus Ærodius amiſſum filium inſolabiliter in " ſcriptis ſuis queritur. Vide quæſo —— quos ipſe " queſtus fundat in libro tertio Ordinis judiciarii, mo- " do fratrem Johannem Ærodium, modo Renatum fi- " lium compellans. Quis vere tam ferus ac ferreus " eſt, qui cum querelas ejus legat in libello illo aureo, " & tot laudibus à Stephano Paſcaſio (13) celebrato, " quem de patrio jure ad fugitivum filium contra Jeſu- " itas ſcripſit, à gemitu & lacrimis temperare poſſit? " —— At non ſolus Ærodius fatum ſuum gemuit; " ingemuere & alii; lege Stephani Paſcaſii & Johan- " nis Bodini (14) ea de re ad Petrum Ærodium Epi- " ſtolas. Lege Antonii Arnaldi Advocati Pariſienſis " —— Orationem pulcherrimam habitam in Senatu " Pariſienſi contra Jeſuitas anno M. D. LXXXXIV (15). " —— He conſidered his Fugitive Son as a Defen- " dant, who refuſes to appear at the Suit of the Plan- " tiff, and treated him in the uſual Forms.

(13) See the 10th Letter of the 11th Book of Paſquier's Letters.

(14) Menage produces Bodin's Letter, pag. 242.

(15) Vit. Ærod. pag. 37.

As, cloſe, in Poplar Shades, her Children gone,
The Mother Nightingal laments alone;

" and ſo on; you know Virgil's Simile; juſt ſo the diſ- " conſolate Ærodius laments, in his Writings, the Loſs " of his Son. —— Do but read his Complaints in the " third Book of his Judiciary Forms, one while calling " upon John Ærodius his Brother, then on his Son " Renatus. But who is ſo ſteel'd to all Senſe of Pity, " as to refrain from Sighs and Tears, when he reads " his Complaints in that Golden Work Of Paternal " Power, ſo much commended by Stephen Paſcaſius, " which he wrote againſt the Jeſuits, and addreſs'd " to his Fugitive Son? —— But Ærodius did not la- " ment his Fate alone; others ſympathiz'd with him; read Stephen Paſcaſius' and John Bodin's Letters to " Peter Ærodius upon this Subject. Read thoſe of " Antony Arnauld, Advocate of Paris; and the beau- " tiful Oration, delivered in the Senate of Paris, a- " gainſt the Jeſuits, in the Year M. D. LXXXXIV." Mr Menage relates, in his Remarks, what Antony Arnauld ſaid upon this Subject, and the Anſwer return'd him by Peter Barni, Attorney to the Jeſuits of the College of Clermont. The Anſwer runs thus, That the Jeſuits would never receive Renatus Ayrault in France, though he was at leaſt eighteen Years of Age; but that, without diſcovering to them his Deſign, he went into Germany, where he was receiv'd (16). See the Remark [A], of the following Article.

(16) Menage, ibid. pag. 251.

[F] By whom he had fifteen Children.] We ſet apart a particular Article for his eldeſt Son: His ſecond Son Peter AYRAULT ſucceeded his Father in his Virtues and Office, and was Preſident in the Seneſchal's Court of Angers, Counſellor of the City, and Mayor. He obtained, in the Year 1603, a Profeſſorſhip of Civil Law, in the Univerſity of Angers, for William Barclay. The Speech he made before Mary de Medicis, the Mother of Lewis XIII, at Angers, on the 16th of October, 1619, may be ſeen in the 6th Tome of the French Mercury. He was deputed to the Aſſembly, which call'd themſelves Les Notables, The Eminent or Remarkable Men, who met at Rouen, in 1617. He left a Family. His Brother, John AYRAULT, was Advocate in the Parliament of Paris. Their Brother, William AYRAULT, a Benedictin Monk, Doctor of the Sorbonne, was in favour with Lewis Servin, Advocate General in the Parliament of Paris. Guyonne AYRAULT, one of their Siſters, married William Menage, the King's Advocate in the Preſidial of Angers. From that Marriage ſprang the late Mr Menage (17), one of the moſt learned Men of France.

(17) Vit. Ærod. See the Citation (g) of this Article.

Digitized by Google

AYRAULT (RENATUS) Eldeſt Son of the foregoing, was the Cauſe of great Uneaſineſs to his Father. He was born at Paris, on the eleventh of November, 1567, and was put to School to the Jeſuits (a). Peter Ayrault had a good opinion of them at that time (b); and was ſo fond of them, that he would hardly have undertaken the Pariſian Clergy's Cauſe againſt them, at that time, as he actually did afterwards in the Year 1564. Perceiving in this his Eldeſt Son a lively Wit, great Memory, and many other good Qualities, he earneſtly intreated the Provincial of the Jeſuits, and the Rector of the College of Clermont, when he committed his Son to their Care, not to ſollicit him, in any manner, to enter into their Order; and aſſured them he had other Children, whom he intended to dedicate to the Church; but that he deſigned this Son ſhould ſucceed him in his Poſt, and intended him for the Support of his Family. They promiſed to grant his Requeſt. However the Young Gentleman's great Abilities made the Jeſuits deſirous of having a Subject of this Importance in their Society; at length, after he had ſtudied Rhetoric Two Years under Father James Sirmond, they gave him the Habit of their Order in 1586. His Father, without whoſe Conſent or Privacy this was done, made a great ſtir about it. He accuſed them of Plagiariſm, and ſummoned them to deliver up his Son. They anſwered, That they knew not what was become of him. Ayrault obtained a Decree of Parliament, whereby the Jeſuits of the College of Clermont were ordered not to receive Renatus Ayrault into their Order, and to notify this Prohibition to the other Colleges. This Decree was not obeyed; the Young Man was removed from Place to Place, his Name was changed, and he was ſent into Lorain, Germany, and Italy [A]; Henry III. cauſed his Ambaſſador, and the Protector of his Affairs, to ſollicit the Pope; Ayrault wrote to his Holineſs about it; the Pope cauſed the Liſt of all the Jeſuits in the World to be ſhewed him; Renatus Ayrault, going under another Name, did not appear in this Liſt (c). Three Years of Trouble and Enquiry being employed to no Purpoſe, the Father had recourſe to his Pen, and wrote a Book concerning the Paternal Power, and addreſſed it to his Son Renatus (d). Renatus anſwered it; but his Superiors did not think fit to publiſh his Anſwer. They employed Richeome, Provincial of the Jeſuits of Paris, to refute Peter Ayrault's Book [B]. Renatus's Adventures are as follows. He entered into the Order, at Triers, on the 12th of June, 1586. He went afterwards to Fulde, where he renewed his Study of Rhetoric. He paſſed through Germany, and was taken there by the Proteſtants; He went to Rome, where he ſtudied Philoſophy a Year, under Mutius Vitelleſchi (e). He continued this Study, the Year following, at Milan, and finiſhed it at Dijon (f). Having taught the Claſſes, in the ſame City, during four Years, with great Succeſs, he left it, when the Jeſuits were baniſhed from ſeveral Cities of the Kingdom, in the Year 1594, and went into Piedmont, where he taught for two Years. He came afterwards to Avignon, where he ſtudied Divinity four Years. After which he returned to Rome; from whence he was ſent to Milan to teach Rhetoric. This he did for ſome Years; and returned afterwards into France; where he paſſed through the moſt illuſtrious Employments of his Order; He taught Philoſophy; he Preached; He was Superior of a College. He was Rector at Rheims, Dijon, Sens, Dole, and Bezançon; He was the Provincial's Aſſiſtant, and Procurator of the Province of Champagne, and afterwards of That of Lyons, at Rome. Laſtly, he died at la Fleche on the 18th of December, 1644 (g). His Father, by a Deed executed before a Notary and Witneſſes, deprived him of his Bleſſing in the Year 1593. but he did not keep his Reſentment till his Death; for a Writing was found among his Papers, in which he gave him his Bleſſing [C].

(a) Menage, Vit. Ærodii pag. 245.

(b) Quos tunc ipſe amabat & magni faciebat; Quin & eos vocari Andegavum & ibi ſedem habere aliquando voluit. Id. p. 35. See pag. 245. where he cites Ayrault, in the in the third Book of his Judiciary Order.

(c) See the Text of the preceeding Article towards the End.

(d) See the Remark [E] of the preceeding Article.

(e) He was General of the Jeſuits.

(f) At that time a Courſe of Philoſophy laſted three Years.

(g) Vita P. Ærodii. See the Citation (g) of the preceeding Article.

[A] Into Lorain, Germany, and Italy.] Antony Arnauld ſet forth, in his Plea of the Year 1594, that the Jeſuits had enticed away Renatus Ayrault, when he was but fourteen Years of Age, and that they kept him in Italy and Spain. It does not appear, that they ever ſent him into Spain (1), and he wanted but little of his 19th Year, when he took the Jeſuits Habit.

(1) Hiſpaniam quoque petiiſſe falſo creditum eſt. Menage, ubi ſupra, p. 37.

[B] They pitch'd upon Richeome——to refute Peter Ayrault's Book.] His Anſwer, as well as Renatus Ayrault's, was never printed. "Quia indecorum viſum "eſt adverſus parentes ſcribere filios, prohibitus eſt à "Rectoribus ſuis reſponſionem vulgare. Igitur id "aggreſſus eſt Ludovicus Richeomus——quod me "docuit privata ipſius Renati Ærodii ad ipſum Ri"cheomum epiſtola, cujus exemplar, quæ ſua eſt "humanitas, miſit ad me Roma Petrus Poſſinus, "Presbyter Societatis Jeſu doctiſſimus, idemque Je"ſuiticæ Hiſtoriæ Scriptor celeberrimus. Sed ne"que reſponſionem ſuam vulgavit Richeomus: qua "de cauſa neſcio (2).——He was forbid by his Superiors to publiſh his Anſwer, becauſe it was thought indecent for Children to write againſt their Parents. For which reaſon Lewis Richeome undertook it—— as I am inform'd by a private Letter of Renatus Ayrault's to the ſame Richeome; a Copy of which Peter Poſſin, a learned Presbyter of the Society of Jeſus, and the celebrated Author of the Hiſtory of Jeſuitiſm, was ſo good-natur'd as to tranſmit to me at Rome."

(2) Menage vit. Ærod. pag. 39.

[C] A Writing—in which he gave him his Bleſſing.] It was ſign'd with his own hand, and contain'd as follows; "God give his Peace, his Love, and his "Grace, to my Son Renatus Ayrault. I give him "my Bleſſing, in the Name of the Father, and of the "Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. And I forgive him "every thing wherein he may have offended me. "And I pray God to aſſiſt him with his holy Spirit, "whatever State, or Calling, he may undertake (3).

(3) Ibid. pag. 257.

AITZEMA (LEO de) a Gentleman of Frieſland, born at Doccum, in the Year 1600, was Counſellor of the Hans-Towns, and their Reſident at the Hague. He compiled an Hiſtory of the United Provinces, which ſold very well, and is of great uſe to thoſe, who ſtudy Politics; for it contains, Word for Word, the Treaties of Peace,

Digitized by Google

Inſtructions and Memoirs of Ambaſſadors, Letters and Anſwers of Sovereigns, Capitulations of Towns, and other Public Acts, each in its Original Language, and then tranſlated into Dutch, in which Language the Hiſtory is written. There are two Editions of it [A]. Although it is chiefly conſiderable, for the Authentic Pieces, which the Author collected with much Patience and Application, I would not judge of the reſt, as Mr de Wicquefort did [B]. I have been told that this Hiſtorian ſpeaks in an impartial Manner of whatever relates to Religious Diſputes. Mr Arnaud cited him for a Particular not very advantageous to the Proteſtants (a). Valerius Andreas mentions one Leo Aetſma, a Frieſlander, who printed his Juvenile Latin Verſes at Franeker, in the Year 1617 (b). Some think this Poet is the ſame with the Hiſtorian, who is the Subject of this Article (c). LEO de AITZEMA died at the Hague, on the 23d of February 1669. after having been employed there, about forty Years, in quality of Reſident for the Hans-Towns, which was procured him by FOPPIUS de AITZEMA his Uncle, Reſident of Holland [C], at Hamburgh. Our Leo was a very good Man, Serviceable to his Friends, Affable, Liberal to the Poor, and well verſed in Politics. He ſpoke ſeveral Languages, German, French, Italian, and Engliſh. His Father was Secretary of the Admiralty of Frieſland (d). It will not be improper to obſerve that there are already publiſhed Three Volumes, in Folio, of the Continuation of Aitzema; the firſt reaches from 1669 to 1679. the Second from 1679 to 1687. the Third from 1687 to 1692 (e). A Miniſter, whoſe Name was AITZEMA, wrote a Dutch Book concerning the Sibyls.

(a) See the Apology for the Catholicks, part 2. pag. 267.

(b) Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. p. 623.

(c) Konig. Bibl. p. 19.

(d) It reſided, at that time, at Doccum; at preſent it reſides at Harlingen.

(e) The firſt was printed at Amſterdam in 1685. the ſecond in 1688; and the third in 1698.

[A] There are two Editions of it.] The firſt contains fifteen Volumes, in 4*to*. which were printed ſeparately; the firſt in 1657, and the laſt in 1671: the firſt begins at the Ceſſation of the Truce, which was concluded, by the Interpoſition of Henry the Great, between Spain and the United Provinces, and reaches from the Year 1621 to the Year 1625. The laſt contains the Hiſtory of the Year 1668. The ſecond Edition is in ſeven Volumes in Folio, which were printed in 1669, and in 1671. The laſt of theſe Volumes contains a general Table of the other ſix, with an Account of the Peace of Munſter, and a Treatiſe intitled, The Lion reſtor'd; and which is a Narrative of the Tranſactions in the United Provinces in 1650, and 1651, in relation to the filling up of ſome conſiderable Poſts. This Treatiſe had already appear'd in 4*to* in the Year 1652. The Account of the Peace of Munſter had been printed in Latin in the Year 1654.

[B] As Mr de Wicquefort did.] He ſpeaks of Aitzema in the following Words. "The Hiſtory, or "the Account of the Affairs of State and of War, "which was written in Holland, in fourteen or fif"teen Volumes, contains a great Variety of Treaties, "Reſolutions, and other authentic Pieces; ſo that it "may ſerve as an Inventory to thoſe, who have no "Acceſs to the Archives of the State; but what the "Author has added of his own, is beneath the Ga"zette, in whatever Light it be conſidered. He is "Maſter of no Style; His Language is altogether "barbarous, and the whole Texture of the Work is a "meer Chaos. This is common to our Author with "moſt of thoſe, who, in that Country, attempt "to write Hiſtory, without expreſs Order and Per"miſſion; and, generally ſpeaking, they do it with"out Judgment and without Sincerity (1)." It muſt be confeſſed, This Cenſure is very diſadvantageous to our Author's Character; and indeed gives offence to many Perſons.

(1) Wicquefort's Ambaſſador, Tom. 1. p. 172. See alſo p. 446.

[C] Foppius d'AITZEMA his Uncle, Reſident of Holland.] I have met with a Paſſage relating to him in one of Puffendorf's Volumes. I find there, that, in 1636, this Foppius, Envoy of the United Provinces to the Emperor, affirmed at Ratisbon, that Salvius had inform'd him by Letter, that the Swedes intended to negotiate a Peace at the Court of Vienna; but that Salvius denied it (2). Nevertheleſs Foppius was very buſy in negotiating the Peace; but Sweden did not think him qualified for ſuch a Work; and it was thought ridiculous in him to intermeddle in ſuch a Deſign, eſpecially conſidering that, ſince he had gone over to the Roman Communion, he had employ'd every Art to inſinuate himſelf into the Emperor's Favour. Nec Aitzema idoneus tantæ rei autor habebatur, omnibus qui hominem norant irridentibus, quod iſte heic ſe ingerere non dubitaret, quem præſertim poſt ſuſceptæ ſacra Romana gratiæ Cæſaris omnibus modis adrepere conſtabat (3).

(2) Puffendorf de Rebus Succicis, lib. 9. pag. 296. n. 53. ad ann. 1637.

(3) Id. ib.

AKAKIA (MARTIN) Profeſſor of Phyſic, in the Univerſity of Paris, in the XVIth Century, was of Chalons in Champagne [A]. His Name was Sans-malice, (without Malice); but, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe times, he changed it to Akakia, which ſignifies the ſame in Greek, as Sans-malice does in French [B]. He tranſmitted it to his Poſterity, who have always bore it to this preſent time. He made a conſiderable Progreſs at Paris, under the Profeſſor Peter Briſſot (a), and acquired from

(a) Moreau, in vita Briſſoti.

[A] Was of Chalons in Champagne.] Moreri, not knowing what Catalaunenſis meant, thought, in good earneſt, that Akakia was a Catalan. He was of Catalonia, ſays he; and he refers us for it to Quenſtedt, who has poſitively declared, that This Phyſician was of Chalons; a City, the Biſhop whereof aſſumes the Title of Count and Peer of France (1).

(1) Quenſt. de Patriis Viror. Eruditor. p. 51.

[B] His Name was Sans-Malice, but——he changed it to Akakia, which ſignifies the ſame in Greek, as ſans-malice does in French.] We learn this from Renatus Moreau, in his Life of Sylvius, and Gabriel Naudé, in his Judgment on Auguſtin Niphus (2). See likewiſe le Mothe le Vaier, at the 277th Page of the 12th Tome of his Works; and Mr Menage, in his Origin of the French Language (3). Father L'Abbé believes, that all this is but an ex poſt facto, or pretty Alluſion, made afterwards, or perhaps a Nickname, which was given him, and which grew afterwards into a Family Name (4). He aſſigns two Reaſons for this Opinion; the firſt is that Ἀκακία does not ſignify a MAN free from Malice, but, ſimply, a Freedom from Malice. The ſecond is, that This Phyſician of Francis I. would have wrote himſelf Acacia or Akakia, if he had borrow'd a Name from the Greek Tongue. To confirm the firſt he adds, that This Phyſician, if it be true that his Name was, at firſt, Sans-malice, would have done better to quit the Feminine Name Ἀκακία, and aſſume one more Maſculine, and which ſhould have ſome relation to Ἀκακίος, Acacius, Words in uſe among the Greeks and Latins. Who would not laugh at the Simplicity or Ignorance of him, who, having the Family Name of Bald or Virtuous, ſhould turn his Name into Greek, and call himſelf Ἀλωπεκία or Ἀρετή? Theſe Reaſons are very weak. As for the ſecond, we may allow, that he ought to have wrote himſelf Acacia or Akakia; and I think That learned Phyſician did actually ſubſcribe himſelf after the latter. As for the other Reaſon, it is eaſy to ſee, that Father L'Abbé advances nothing material; for the Maſculine Ἀκακίος does not ſo fully come up to the French Word Sans-malice, as the Feminine Ἀκακία does. The Compariſon of Bald or Virtuous is improper; ſince it is certain,

(2) Fol. o, iii.

(3) At the 4*th Page of the* Paris Edition in 1694.

(4) L'Abbé's Etymologies of French Words, pag. 10.

Digitized by Google

from him moſt of what he publiſhed afterwards on Galen [C]. He was created Doctor of the Faculty of Phyſic of Paris, in the Year 1526. Francis I, one of whoſe Phyſicians in Ordinary he was, had a great eſteem for him. I cannot determine in what Year he became Profeſſor of Phyſic; but he was ſo, when Geſner publiſhed his Bibliotheque, that is, in the Year 1545. He died in the Year 1551. His Coat of Arms was, Gules and a Croſs d'Or, with four Cubes d'Or, with this Motto, Quæcunque ferat fortuna, ferenda eſt. He married Mary Chauveau, Widow of Silvan de Monthelon, by whom he had a Son, who was Profeſſor of Phyſic, as we ſhall ſee. Moſt of his Deſcendants have followed the ſame Profeſſion; though one among them had other Affairs upon his hands beſides Phyſic [D]. They, who place the Death of our Martin Akakia in the Year 1605, are ſtrangely miſtaken [E]. Marot ſpoke of him with Commendation: Mr Menage has cited his Elogium of him (b).

(b) Menage's Origin of the French Tongue, pag. 4.

tain, that Sans-malice has not the Nature of an Adjective Noun; and that, if a Perſon, whoſe Name happens to be Avec-pelure, ſhould have a mind to Greciſe it, he ought rather to take the Name of Synalopecia, than That of Synalopecius.

[C] What he publiſh'd —— on Galen.] In 1538, he publiſh'd a Latin Tranſlation of Galen's two Books, De ratione curandi, and accompanied it with a Commentary (5). Afterwards he tranſlated the Ars Medica, quæ & Ars parva, of the ſame Galen. This Work was printed at Lyons, in 1548. He is likewiſe Author of a Book, printed at Paris, in the Year 1555, with the Title of "Synopſis eorum, quæ quinque "prioribus libris Galeni de facultatibus ſimplicium "medicamentorum continentur. —— A Synopſis of "the Contents of the five firſt Books of Galen, Of "the Qualities of Simple Medicines."

(5) Geſner. Biblioth. fol. 500.

[D] Tho' one among them had other Affairs upon his Hands beſides Phyſic.] A Letter of Guy Patin, dated the twenty ſecond of July, 1664, contains theſe Words; "The King has cauſed the Brother "of M. Acakia, our Colleague, to be confined in "the Baſtile, for having wrote ſomething, which "diſpleaſed his Highneſs the Prince. It is not long, "ſince he was employed about the Marriage of the "Duke of Enguien, and had been Secretary of the "Embaſſy to Poland." Every one has heard of the Complaints, which a Friend to the Houſe of Auſtria, diſguiſed under the Name of Staniſlaus Lyſimachus, A Poliſh Knight, publiſhed in 1683, againſt the Correſpondence, which France carried on with Count Tekeli, by the means of Akakia and du Vernai-Boucauld. I have juſt read, in a Book entituled, The Journal of Amſterdam (6), that the ſame Akakia had a great ſhare in the Intrigues, which were formed, to place the Crown of Poland on the Head of the Duke of Longueville, by depoſing King Michael. It is aſſirmed, in this Journal, that the Emperor complained of this to the King of France, and that, among others, he named Mr Acakia as one of the chief Conductors of That Affair; that Mr Acakia was committed to the Baſtile; but that he purſued the Scheme, which he had began, rather with more Application, and had more leiſure to keep up the Correſpondence he had ſettled; and that his Letters and Negotiations continued their Train, notwithſtanding his Impriſonment; and that the Buſineſs was ſo far advanced, that nothing but the Death (7) of the Duke of Longueville hindered the Execution of it. The Medals were already prepared. This ſecond Impriſonment of Mr Akakia laſted but five or ſix Months, if I can depend upon one, whom I have conſulted, ſince the reading of That Journal. This Perſon told me farther, that Mr Akakia was was ſo overjoyed to find himſelf pitched upon, as a proper Perſon to foment the Troubles of Hungary, that, though he was then very ſick, he ſoon recovered Health enough to ſet out on the Expedition. Not daring to take the way of Germany, he went into England, where he embarqued for Sweden, from whence he went by Sea to Riga, and from thence to Poland; where he died. He was a Man of Intrigue; and acted vigorouſly for the Concluſion of the Peace of Oliva.

(6) It came out in Sept. 1693.

(7) He was kill'd at the Paſſage of the Rhine, June 12. 1672.

[E] They, who place the Death —— in the Year 1605, are ſtrangely miſtaken.] This the Author of the Diarium Biographicum did (8): Thus he expreſſes himſelf, under that Year; "Martinus Akakia, Gallus, "CATALAUNENSIS, Medicinæ Doctor & "Profeſſor Lutetiæ Pariſ. —— Martin Akakia, a "French Man, of CHALONS, Doctor of Phyſic, "and Profeſſor at Paris." After which he gives us the Titles of ſome Books, of which Akakia, of Châlons, is the true Author. If he had known, that Briſſot, whoſe Diſciple our Akakia was, was no longer in France, in the Year 1519, he would not have prolonged the Life of this Diſciple of his to the Year 1605; or he would have taken ſome Notice of ſo remarkable an old Age, as his would have been. His Miſtake might ariſe from hence, that a Phyſician died in the Year 1605, whoſe Name was Akakia. He was a Grand-Child of Briſſot's Diſciple. Guy Patin ſpeaks of him in this manner, with his Cynical Liberty; "Two Doctors of our Society conſpired "in writing the Apology for Theodorus Mayerne "Turquet; to wit, Seguin, who always ſupported "the Quacks, and his Brother-in-law Acakia, who "died in the Year 1605, of the Pox, which he "brought with him from Italy, whither he went "with M. de Bethune Ambaſſador at Rome (9)." If our Martin Akakia was capable of getting ſuch a Diſeaſe at the time of this Embaſſy, he muſt, without all Contradiction, have been the oldeſt Whoremaſter in Europe.

(8) Henningus Witte, Profeſſor at Riga, in Livonia.

(9) Patin, Letter VIII. of the firſt Edition.

AKAKIA (MARTIN) a Pariſian, Son of the preceeding, was created Doctor of Phyſic of the Faculty of Paris, in the Year 1572. Triſtan de Roſtaing, Knight of the Order, and Amiot Biſhop of Auxerre, became his Patrons [A]; and, at their Sollicitation, Charles IX. gave him the Office of firſt Reader and Regius Profeſſor of Chirurgery in the Year 1574. Four Years after, he was made Second Phyſician to Henry III (a). As he was ambitious of producing the moſt elaborate Lectures in the Royal Schools, which took up a great deal of his time, he feared, that the viſiting of his Patients, and the Function he was obliged to diſcharge at Court, would be too heavy a Burthen for him. So that, to preſerve himſelf from ſinking under ſo many Labours, he reſigned his Profeſſorſhip, with the King's leave, to John Martin, a Perſon

(a) See Remark [A].

[A] Triſtan and Amiot became his Patrons.] An apter Proof cannot be given of this than the Words, which I am going to cite out of a Panegyric of Henry III. It is Martin Akakia who ſpeaks; "Vix dum "igitur in publica profeſſione, qua nos Carolus Rex "Chriſtianiſſimus, Triſtando Roſtagnio Equite Tor"quato fortiſſimo, & Jacobo Amyoto Altiſſiodoren"ſium Epiſcopo de nobis referentibus, cohoneſtave"rat, quadriennium compleveramus, cum Tu nos "inter tuos Medicos allegiſti & conſcripſiſti. —— "I had ſcarce compleated four Years in the Exerciſe "of That public Profeſſion, with which the moſt Chri"ſtian King Charles, at the Requeſt of the brave "Triſtan de Roſtaing, Knight of the Order, and "James Amiot, Biſhop of Auxerre, had honoured "me, when you gave me a Rank among your own "Phyſicians." This Panegyric was printed at Paris in the Year 1578, with this Title; Martini Akakiæ Regii & Medici & Profeſſoris ob ſuam in ordinem Regiorum Medicorum co-optationem Panegyricus, Henrico Valeſio Regi Chriſtianiſſimo dictus.

[B] At

Digitized by Google

ſon very capable of That Office, as his Writings teſtify [B]. But John Martin, rightly judging that it would be incompatible with his other Employs, if he would diſcharge it conſcientiouſly, reſtored it to Martin Akakia; who diſpoſed of This Employment in favour of his Son-in-Law Peter Seguin, and died very ſoon after, in the Year 1588, being about Forty nine Years of Age. He left Two Sons, of whom I am going to ſpeak, and a Daughter, who was married to Peter Seguin, one of the moſt learned Phyſicians of the Faculty of Paris, and who exerciſed his Father in-Law's Profeſſion in the Royal College from the Year 1588, to the Year 1599. The Treatiſe de Morbis muliebribus, and the Conſilia Medica, of our Martin, are ſcarce known to any one, but under the falſe Suppoſition, that they come from the ſame hand, as the Treatiſes of Martin Akakia of Chalons. I have not met with any Bibliographer, who diſtinguiſhes the Father's Writings from Thoſe of the Son; both are aſcribed to Martin Akakia Catalaunenſis. I ſhould have been deceived in this point as well as Moreri, had I not conſulted ſome Friends [C] about it. The Two Books de Morbis muliebribus were inſerted in the Collection, which a Phyſician, whoſe Name is Iſrael Spachius, publiſhed at Straſburg, in 1597, of ſeveral Treatiſes concerning the Diſeaſes of Women; and, as for the Conſilia Medica, they are to be found in a Collection of the like Works publiſhed by Scholzius at Franckfort, in 1598. It is highly probable, that Iſrael Spachius believed the Two Books de Morbis muliebribus to be a Work of the Diſciple of Briſſot. It was, doubtleſs, He, who inſerted in the Title, Martini Akakiæ Medici Regii & in Univerſitate Pariſienſi Profeſſoris Medicinæ doctiſſimi, &c. This Work had never been printed, but had been handed about in Manuſcript. Spachius knew, in general, that Martin Akakia wrote it; and he innocently believed, that This Akakia was the ſame Author, who had publiſhed ſome Works already; thus he gave him the Titles of the Akakia of Chalons, and not That of Regius Profeſſor, which the Author would have aſſumed, if he had publiſhed his Book himſelf.

[B] As his Writings teſtify.] Renatus Moreau took care to publiſh two Pieces of this Author: to wit, Prælectiones in librum Hippocratis Coi de morbis internis, Pariſ. 1637. Prælectiones in librum Hippocratis Coi de aëre, aquis, & locis, Pariſ. 1646. He prefixed the Author's Elogy to the firſt. There are likewiſe ſome Latin Verſes of Antony Mornac prefixed to the ſecond, in praiſe of the ſame Martin, who was one of the Commiſſioners at the famous Conference of du Perron, and du Pleſſis.

(1) 'Tis that, which Akakia quotes without naming it; but what he quotes is in Centur. 2. Curat. 39. pag. 283.

[C] Had I not conſulted ſome Friends.] The Profeſſor Drelincourt was pleaſed to inform me, that Martin Akakia, Author of the Treatiſe de Morbis muliebribus, not only cites Fernel and Amatus Luſitanus, but alſo Scaliger's Work againſt Cardan, and the Coſmocritice of Cornelius Gemma. Fernel dedicated his Books to Henry II. who did not begin his Reign till the Year 1547. Amatus Luſitanus compoſed his Second Century at Rome (1) in the Year 1551 (2): I ſay at Rome; whither Pope Julius III. had invited him. Scaliger's Book againſt Cardan was not printed till 1557. That of Cornelius Gemma was written on occaſion of the Star, which appeared in the Year 1572. and was not printed till 1575. This Martin Akakia, therefore, muſt have been living in the Year 1575. Mr Drelincourt's Remarks prove this plainly. Now, as I had read (3), that Martin Akakia was Royal Profeſſor of Phyſic, in the Year 1577, and that Peter Seguin ſucceeded him, on the twentieth of September, 1594; I was deſirous of knowing what William du Val had ſaid upon this Subject, in his Catalogue of the Profeſſors of the Royal College. This I accompliſhed by the Aſſiſtance of Mr Pinſſon de Riolles (4), who took the Pains, in a moſt obliging manner, to ſend me ſeveral Particulars concerning the Akakia's. He informed me among other things, I. That the Martin Akakia of Châlons, Phyſician to Francis I, died in the Year 1551. From this Fact, and the Remarks of Mr Drelincourt. it neceſſarily reſults, that the Author of the Book de Morbis muliebribus, is not Martin Akakia Catalaunenſis. II. That it is true indeed, that Peter Seguin had a Grant, in the Year 1588, of the Office of Royal Lecturer of Chirurgery, upon the Reſignation of Martin Akakia, his Father-in-law, but that he was obliged to take out new Letters, in the Year 1594. And the Reaſon was this: During the Civil Wars, the Number of Royal Lectures increaſed much more than the Foundation could ſupport; ſeveral Perſons having ſurreptitiouſly obtained Grants of that Place. Henry IV. chaſhired Part of thoſe Lecturers, in 1594, and gave out new Letters to thoſe, whom he retained. Peter Seguin was one of the latter. And for this Reaſon his Promotion was dated in the Year 1594, by the Author of the Antiquities of Paris; but, if That Author had been exact, he would not have been contented to ſay, that Peter Seguin ſucceed Martin Akakia on the twentieth of September, 1594. He would have been afraid of making his Readers imagin, that Martin Akakia died the ſame Year, and that Peter Seguin commenced from that Time Royal Profeſſor. Now whoever ſhould ſay this, would be guilty of two great Miſtakes.

(2) He ſays ſo himſelf, pag. 136.

(3) In the Antiquities of Paris, by Father Du Breul, pag. 568.

(4) Advocate in the Parliament of Paris.

AKAKIA (MARTIN) Son of the Preceeding, was created Doctor of Phyſic, at Paris, in 1598. He was made Royal Profeſſor of Chirurgery, the Year after, by the Reſignation of Peter Seguin, his Brother-in-Law (a). He took a Journey to Rome, and died of a Diſtemper, at Paris, in the Year 1605, without leaving any Poſterity. He lies buried with his Father at St Germain de l'Auxerrois. His Brother JOHN AKAKIA, created Doctor of Phyſic, in the Year 1612, was Phyſician to Lewis XIII; and died in Savoy in the Year 1630. He left many Children [A].

(a) He reſigned his Place on being made Royal Reader in Phyſick, on the 10th of Sept. 1599. by the Reſignation of John Duret.

[A] He left many Children.] I. MARTIN AKAKIA, Royal Profeſſor of Chirurgery (1), who reſigned his Place in favour of Matburin Denyau, and died ſome Years after, in 1677, leaving a Son, who was Clerk to the Comptroller General of the Finances, and a Daughter married to Mr le Vayer de Boutigni, Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris. II. ROGER AKAKIA. He is the Man of Intrigue, taken Notice of in the Remark [D] of the firſt Akakia. III. CHARLES AKAKIA: a very pious Clergyman, attached to the Port-Royal. IV. SIMON AKAKIA de Plaſſis, Agent for the Port-Royal Ladies. V. N. AKAKIA, known by the Name of Mr du Lac. He has the Care of the Edition of the late Mr de Saci's Books on the Scripture. There were other Children of John Akakia, beſides theſe five.

(1) He had the Poſt, when William du Val publiſh'd his Catalogue in 1644.

Digitized by Google

AKIBA, a famous Rabbin, flouriſhed, a little after Titus had deſtroyed the City of Jeruſalem. He was a Jew only by the Mother's ſide; and it is pretended, that his Father was a Deſcendant of Siſera, General of the Army of Jabin, King of Tyre. Akiba lived in the Country, till he was forty Years of Age; where he had no very Honourable Employ; for he kept the Flocks of Calba Schwa, a rich Citizen of Jeruſalem. At length he applied himſelf to Study, at the Inſtigation of his Maſter's Daughter, who promiſed to marry him, if he made a great Progreſs in the Sciences. He applied himſelf ſo earneſtly to Study, for twenty four Years, in the Academies, that, afterwards, he found himſelf ſurrounded with a crowd of Diſciples, as one of the greateſt Maſters, that had been in Iſrael. He had twenty four Thouſand Scholars. He declared for the Impoſtor Barcochebas (a), and maintained, that the Words of Balaam, A Star ſhall come out of Jacob, were to be underſtood of him, and that he was the true Meſſiah (b). He was not ſatisfy'd with anointing him (c), as Samuel did the two firſt Kings of the Jews; He even ſubmitted to become his Equerry (d). The Forces, which the Emperor Hadrian ſent againſt the Jews, who, under the Conduct of this falſe Meſſiah, had committed horrible Maſſacres, extinguiſhed this Faction. Akiba was taken, and puniſhed with a cruel Death (e): His Fleſh was torn with Iron Combs; but in ſuch a manner, that they lengthened out the Torture, and put him to Death, as it were with a ſlow Fire (f). He lived one Hundred and twenty Years, and was buried, with his Wife, in a Cave, on a Mountain not far from Tiberias. His twenty four Thouſand Diſciples were buried below him in the ſame Mountain (g). I mention theſe particulars, without pretending, that they all deſerve Credit. It is thought, that he wrote a ſpurious Book, under the Name of the Patriarch Abraham [A]. Some ſay, he was guilty of a more unpardonable Offence than this; namely, that he altered the Hebrew Text of the Bible [B], in order to anſwer an Objection of the Chriſtians [C]. The Jews give him great Commendations [D]; and look upon him as a Man, who taught them all the unwritten Law [E]. The Remark, which we ſhall make upon this, will contain ſome Particulars

(a) This word ſignifies in Hebrew, Son of the Star.

(b) See Joh. à Lent. Schediaſma Hiſtorico Philologicum de Judæorum Pſeudo-Meſſiis, pag. 9.

(c) Ibid. p. 14.

(d) Ibid. p. 9, & 15.

(e) Ibid. p. 14. ex Tractatu Talmudico Eruf, fol. 21.

(f) Ibid. p. 15. ex Tractatu Talmudico Berachos, fol. 61.

(g) Ibid. p. 15. ex Autore libelli de Cippis ab Hottingero editi, & Latine tranſlati.

[A] That he wrote a ſpurious Book, under the Name of the Patriarch Abraham.] It is entitled, Sepher Jezirah; that is, The Book of the Creation. See the Remark [E] of the Article ABRAHAM, and add there this Supplement. Lambecius ought not to have ſaid that this Book of the Creation was printed the firſt time at Mantua (1); for the Edition of Mantua in 4to, with the Commentary of Abraham Ben-Doir, and ſeveral other Rabbies, whoſe Names you may find in the 536th Page of the Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, had been preceded by the Paris Edition, in 8vo, 1552. The ſame Book was printed at Baſil in Folio, in the Year 1587, with ſeveral others of the ſame Stamp. It is of great Weight with the Cabaliſts; they ſay, they work Miracles by it (2).

(1) Lambecii Hiſtor. Literar. Prodrom. p. 53. apud Placcium de Pſeudonymis, pag. 134.

(2) Placcius, ibid.

[B] He altered the Hebrew Text of the Bible.] This Alteration relates to the Age of the Patriarchs, when they began to have Children. Every one knows, they were older at that Time, according to the Bible of the LXX, than according to the Hebrew Bible. For Example; Adam, according to the Hebrew Text, was one hundred and thirty Years old, when his Wife brought forth Seth; but, according to the Tranſlation of the LXX, he was, at that time, in his two hundred and thirtieth Year. Moſt Divines prefer the Hebrew Text to the Greek. They, who contend for the Greek, are but few in Number, but, in Recompence for this, they are commonly Men of ſingular Learning. Father Paul Pezron, a Monk of the ſtricteſt Order of Ciſtertians, and Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris, is one of this Minority. He pretends, among other things, that the Jews altered the Hebrew Text in relation to the Times which paſt between the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, under Titus, and the twelfth Year of the Emperor Hadrian (3). He proves this by the Tranſlation of Aquila, publiſhed in the twelfth Year of That Emperor, which agrees very well with the Hebrew Text at this preſent time. Now as Aquila, going over from the Chriſtian to the Jewiſh Religion, put himſelf under the Tuition of Akiba; it ſeems very probable to Father Pezron, that This Alteration of the Scripture ought to be imputed to That Rabbi. It is certain that Akiba was "at that time in great Eſteem "among the Jews, and chiefly among thoſe of Paleſtine; for he was about forty Years Maſter of a "College, which they had at Jabne, or at Tiberias, "near the Lake of Genezareth (4). —— He had "many Diſciples; he paſſed for the moſt learned "Man among the Jews; and had ſo much Credit "with them, that it was he, who declared that Barcochebas was the Meſſiah (5)."

(3) Pezron, of the Antiquity of Times, cap. 16. pag. 289. Edit. of Paris 1687, in 4to.

(4) Ibid. p. 290.

(5) Ibid. p. 291.

[C] In order to anſwer an Objection of the Chriſtians.] "The Chriſtians never diſputed more ſtrongly againſt the Jews, than in thoſe Times, ſays the ſame Author (6), and never oppoſed them more "effectually. For they had nothing more to do, "than to ſhew them the Goſpel on the one ſide, and, "on the other, the Ruins of Jeruſalem, which were "before their Eyes, to convince them that JESUS "CHRIST, who had ſo plainly foretold it's Deſtruction, was the Prophet whom Moſes had promiſed. —— But they preſſed them very cloſe with "their own Traditions, which imported, That "CHRIST ſhould manifeſt himſelf at the end of "about ſix thouſand Years, by ſhewing them, that "this Number of Years was actually accompliſhed. "This greatly embarraſſed them, and is doubtleſs the "Reaſon, why it is ſaid, in the Talmud, that Akiba "and Samſai computed the Years (7) out of which "ſuch powerful Arguments were drawn againſt "them." It is certain, that the Jews might have anſwered the Objection drawn from the ſix thouſand Years, had the Bible been ſuch, as we have it at preſent; for it wants much of that Number of Years, from Adam to JESUS CHRIST.

(6) Id. ib.

(7) Talmud in Tractatu de Synedrio.

[D] The Jews give him great Commendations] They called him Sethumtaah (8), that is, The Authentic. One of them (9) ſays, it would fill a whole Volume to ſpeak of him according to his Worth. Nis Name, ſays another, ran all over the Univerſe, and we have received all the Oral Law from His Mouth; Hujus nomen (inquit autor libri Zemach David) exiit ab uno extremo mundi uſque ad aliud, atque totam legem Oralem ex ejus ore accepimus (10).

(8) See Joh. à Lent de Pſeudo-Meſſiis, pag. 9.

(9) Zacutus in Juchaſin, pag. 66. apud Lent, pag. 19.

[E] Look upon him as a Man, who taught them all the unwritten Law.] See the Paſſage juſt now quoted, and the Book, which Father Paul Pezron publiſhed at Paris in the Year 1691 (11). We find there (12), that Rabbi Akiba, the Son of Joſeph, was the firſt Compiler of the Deuteroſes, or Jewiſh Traditions, and the chief of the Traditionaries; that he collected the Traditions, which Hillel, Simeon, and other antient Doctors had invented; that he added others of his own Invention to them; that they were in vogue together 'till the end of the Vth Century, at which time others were added to them, of which the Talmud was compoſed; that Akiba (13) imployed the Rabbi Meïr, the moſt famous of all his Diſciples, to commit part of theſe Traditions to Writing, out of which the Miſna was afterwards compoſed

(10) Konig. Biblioth. pag. 19.

(11) Entitled, A Defence of the Antiquity of Times.

(12) Page 61.

(13) Page 63. ex Zemach David, p. 99.

Digitized by Google

culars of his Life. If we were to judge of his Lectures by his Precepts relating to the Close-Stool [F], we should have reason to treat them as ridiculous.

(14) The Jews pretend that Rabbi Juda, who compiled it, was born the same Day that Akiba died. R. Juda princeps natus est illo die quo obiit R. Akiba, de quo aiunt, Sol exortus est & Sol occidit. Pezron, pag. 70.

posed (14), that he was the Patriarch's Assistant (15), and the Master of Aquila, and of Rabbi Jose, who was the Author of the Grand Council of the Jews (16); that he became the Head of the Jewish Schools, in the same Year that Josephus finished his Antiquities; that he continued in this Place forty Years; that he is often cited in the Pirke-Eliezer, and that he wished eternal Damnation to all those, who should read the Works of the Christians.

[F] By his Precepts relating to the Close-Stool.] The Jewish Nation was devoted to a Spirit of such childish and chimerical Observances, that their gravest Doctors have extended their Ritual, even to the most Mechanical Actions, such as That of going to the Necessary-House. Unhappy for him who could not find out the East; for the four Cardinal Points of the Horizon are not equally favourable. I shall give the rest of their ridiculous Superstitions in this Matter in the following Words. "Dixit R. Akiba, ingressus sum "aliquando post Rabbi Josuam in sedis secretæ locum, "& tria ab eo didici. Didici I. quod non versus "Orientem & Occidentem sed versus Septentrionem "& Austrum convertere nos debeamus. Didici II. "quod non in pedes erectum, sed jam considentem "se retegere liceat. Didici III. quod podex non "dextra sed sinistra manu abstergendus sit. Ad hæc "objecit ibi Ben Hasas; usque adeo vere perstricuisti "frontem erga magistrum tuum ut cacantem obser-"vares? Respondet ille, Legis hæc arcana sunt ad "quæ discenda id necessario mihi agendum fuit (17). "—— R. Akiba said, I once follow'd Rabbi Josua "into the —— and learned three Things from him; "I. That we must turn ourselves, not Eastward and "Westward, but Northward and Southward, when "we —— II. That we must —— not standing, but "sitting. III. That we must wipe —— not with our "right Hand, but with our left. Upon this Ben "Hasas objected; Are you so harden'd in Impudence, "as to watch your Master, when he is at ——? He "reply'd, These are Secrets of our Law, to learn which "I was obliged so to do." Behold a wonderful Doctor, who explain'd the Mysteries of the Law, on his Close-Stool, without speaking a Word!

(15) Nerva, permitted the Jews to chuse a Patriarch of their own Nation.

(16) Ex Hieronymo in cap. viii. Isaiæ.

(17) Ex Baraïetha in Maskech. Berachos, fol. 62. apud Lent, pag. 10.

ALABASTER (WILLIAM) an English Divine, was born at Hadley in Suffolk. He was one of the Doctors of Trinity College at Cambridge, and accompanied the Earl of Essex, as his Chaplain, in his Expedition to Cadiz, in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. It is said, that his first inducement to change his Religion was the Pomp and Splendor of the Romish Churches, and the great Respect paid to their Priests; and that, as he became wavering, some of that Communion worked upon these Dispositions, and so dextrously took advantage of the Complaint he made of being neglected in England, that he immediately turned Papist, being satisfied, that he had no reason to expect better Preferment, at home. However that be, he embraced the Communion of the Church of Rome; but did not find his Expectations answered. He was soon disgusted with it; he did not like a Discipline, which would not admit any of the Degrees, to which he had been already promoted; and it is probable he was not better pleased with their Creature-Worship, which the Protestants are used to look upon with Horror; therefore he returned into England to resume his former Religion. He obtained a Canonship in St Paul's Church, and afterwards the Living of Tharfield in Hertfordshire. He understood the Hebrew Tongue very well, but spoiled himself by the Study of the Cabala, of which he was very fond. He gave Proofs of it in the Sermon, which he preached, when he was created Doctor of Divinity at Cambridge. He took for his Text the beginning of the First Book of the Chronicles, Adam, Seth, Enoch, and, after having touched upon the Literal Sense, he fell into the Mystical, and maintained, that Adam signified, Unhappiness and Misery; and so of the rest (a). His Method of explaining the Scripture did not please the Roman Catholics [A]. I shall give their Sense of it in the Remarks, and shew, how he got clear

(a) See Fuller's Worthies of England.

[A] His Method of explaining——did not please the Roman Catholics.] Francis Garasse, a Jesuit, having mentioned a very whimsical Opinion of Isidorus Pelusiota (1), goes on thus. "Alabaster's Exposition is "yet farther from common Sense; for he tacks to-"gether certain Rabbinical Conceits, which are plea-"sant enough, if they were but as solidly founded, "as they are subtilly invented. He tells us, in his "Apparatus, chap. 9. That Jonas and our Saviour "remain'd punctually three Days and three Nights, "the one in the Bowels of the Earth, and the other "in the Whale's Belly, in the following Manner. "Jonas, says he, was carried to the very Center of "the World, as he himself acknowledges; Ad extrema "montium descendi, terræ vectes circumdederunt me. "—— I went down to the bottom of the Mountains; "the Earth with her Bars was about me for ever. "Jonah ii. 6. Now, being thus situated, he had both "Day and Night at one time; for, looking towards "our Hemisphere, he had the Day before, and the "Night behind him, and, the next Day, quite the "contrary; so that, remaining but one Day and a "half, he continued there in reality three whole Days; "forasmuch as the Space of Time must be doubled, be-"cause he enjoy'd at once, what we have successively. "Thus our Lord being in the Womb of the Earth, "had, like Jonas, Day and Night both at one time; "forasmuch as his Soul went down to the Center of "the Earth, in order to have the Day on one Side, "and the Night on the other, and thereby to shorten "the Term of his abode, without wresting Truth; so "unwilling was he to leave his Disciples in a discon-"solate Condition. This Hypothesis, I say, is inju-"rious to the holy Scripture; as it is too much "strain'd, and sophisticated, and is just like the Fancies "of the Rabbins; and therefore it was not without "Reason, that Alabaster's Book was condemn'd at "Rome: But he was so excessively fond of his own "Conceits, that he behav'd worse, than Heliodorus; "for he chose to forsake his Religion, rather than "quit his dangerous and idle Notions concerning the "holy Scriptures (2)." I shall add the Judgment of a Flemish Jesuit to That of the Frenchman. Bonfrerius, having condemn'd those, who, by the help of the Cabala, find any thing in every Passage of the holy Scripture, goes on thus: "Quod nuper fecit "insulse nimis & irreligiose Gulielmus Alabaster, qui "in illo suo Apparatu ex inanibus ejusmodi fundamen-"tis, ne dicam quisquiliis, conatus est nobis suam "Mysticam Theologiam, & (ita ipse vocat) interiorem "Scripturæ sensum ac medullam (re ipsa aliud nihil "quam deliramenta & somnia) exprimere. Qua ex "re male audiit, & Romæ censoriam Ecclesiæ virgu-"lam merito expertus est. Quis enim ferat quempiam "in re tam seria, Scripturæ inquam interpretatione, "pro probatis mercibus vendere quæ ipse parum sano "cerebro delirarit (3)? —— Which was lately prac-"tised, with too much Folly and Irreligion, by "William Alabaster, who, in That Apparatus of his, "endeavour'd, upon this idle Foundation, not to call it

(1) You will find it at the end of this Remark.

(2) Garasse's Curious Doctrine, pag. 503. printed in 1625.

(3) Bonfrerius in the Prolegomena of his Commentary on the Pentateuch. printed in 1625.

"a Founda-

Digitized by Google

clear of the Objection made in relation to the Three Days and Three Nights, which JESUS CHRIST was to pass in the Bowels of the Earth, as Jonas did in the Whale's Belly (b). I must not omit, that his Poetry was very much esteemed. He wrote a Latin Tragedy, called Roxana, at the Representation of which, in a College at Cambridge, there happened a very remarkable Accident (c). A Lady was so frighted with the Last Word of the Tragedy, Sequar, Sequar, which was pronounced with a very furious Air, that she was distracted all her Life-time after. Alabaster was yet living in 1630. His Apparatus in Revelationem Jesu Christi was printed at Antwerp in the Year 1607. As for the Spiraculum tubarum, seu fons spiritualium expositionum ex æquivocis Pentaglotti (d) significationibus, and his Ecce sponsus venit, seu tuba pulcritudinis, hoc est demonstratio quod non sit illicitum nec impossibile computare durationem mundi & tempus secundi adventus Christi; they were printed at London (e). From these Titles we may judge of the Author's Taste; but we shall form a better Notion of it from the Words of Andrew Rivet [B], which I shall produce. We must not forget his Lexicon Hebraicum, in Folio. I have taken no Notice of his Motives of his Conversion, which he published, after having embraced the Catholic Religion; we know well enough that this is the Practice of those, who change their Religion; A Custom more in vogue at that Time, than at present. The Public had not, then, leisure to be disgusted at this sort of Books. That of Alabaster was refuted by Roger Fenton (f).

(b) See Remark [A].

(c) Fuller's Worthies.

(d) So says the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library: But it should be Pentateuchi.

(e) See the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library.

(f) His Reply is intitled, An Answer to W. Alabaster's Motives. Lond. 1599. in 4^to^

" a Foundation of Weeds and Refuse, to explain to us " his Mystical Theology, and (as he himself calls it) " the internal Sense and Marrow of the Scripture; " though in reality, nothing else but a Maaman's " Dreams. Upon which account it was of ill repute, " and deservedly felt the Church's censorial Rod, at " Rome. For who can bear, that, in so serious a " Matter, I mean in explaining the Scripture, any " one should vend for approved Wares, what are but " the delirious Productions of his own distemper'd " Brain?" He gives afterwards some Examples of this Author's Explications.

I shall quote presently a Protestant, who reproaches the Roman Catholics for tolerating the idle Fancies of Alabaster.

I have been informed by a learned Person, that most Readers do not love to be told, in general, that such or such an Author has advanc'd a chimerical Opinion. This excites their Curiosity, and they want to have it immediately satisfy'd, and even without being obliged to have recourse to some other Book, which they have in their Library. This learned Person therefore, would have thought I ought to have said nothing of Isidorus Pelusiota, or that, having observed, in general, that his Opinion is grotesque, I ought to have produc'd it; especially considering that Father Garasse's Book is seldom found in the Library of private Persons. I profit by this Advice, and find by experience it is well founded; for which Reason I have chosen, upon many Occasions, to add to my Commentaries, rather than excite the Curiosity of my Readers in vain: Isidorus Pelusiota, then, in order to compleat the Number of Days, suppos'd, That the Darkness, at the time of the Passion, ought to be taken for one Night, and that the return of the Light 'till Sun-set ought to be consider'd as a Day. Read what follows: " I answer, That it is true, there is " some Difficulty in reconciling this Passage (4) with " the Truth of History; and that it was one of the " chief Arguments, by which Julian, the Apostate, " endeavour'd to overthrow the Truth of the Gos- " pel; however it is not so desperate, but that a " true and natural Exposition may be given of it, " without having recourse to Fancies; which some " have done, though without any ill Design; as we " have seen above, concerning the Hour of the Re- " surrection. Isidorus Pelusiota, in the 114th Epistle " of the first Book of his Epistles, gives us a new " Explication of it in these Words: —— Sic habeto; " sextâ horâ Parasceves in crucem actus est Dominus, " ab hac horâ usque ad nonam tenebræ extiterunt; " has tu noctem intellige: Rursus horâ nonâ lux; " hæc tu pro die habe: Nox rursum Parasceves: " Tum dies Sabbathi: Tum nox Sabbathi Dominici " Diei. —— Take it thus; Our Lord was crucified " at the sixth Hour, on Good Friday; from this " Hour to the ninth, there was Darkness; call this " one Night; again, at the ninth Hour there was " Light; let this stand for one Day: Then follow'd " the Night of Good Friday: Then the Day of the " Jewish Sabbath: Then the Night of the Christian " Sabbath, or Lord's Day. —— It is true, indeed, ac- " cording to this Exposition, that JESUS CHRIST re- " mained three Days and three Nights, in the Bowels " of the Earth; but they are Days and Nights redu- " ced to a very narrow Compass (5).

(4) It is That of the 12*th Chapter of St* Matthew, where it is said, that the Son of Man shall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

(5) Garasse's Curious Doctrine, pag. 592, 593.

[B] A better Notion of it, from the Words of Andrew Rivet.] " Anno, 160-, says he (6), qui- " dam Pontificius Anglus Gulielmus Alabastrus, edi- " dit Antverpiæ librum, cui titulum fecit, Appara- " tus in revelationem Christi, in quo profitetur se no- " vam & admirabilem rationem afferre investigandi " Prophetiarum mysteria ex Scriptura se ipsam inter- " pretante. Ibi novam Cabbalam instituit, ex qua " quidlibet ex quolibet educit, & mutatis, vel inver- " sis, aut separatis, & disjunctis, Ebræorum vocabu- " lorum literis, aut syllabis, novis etiam significationi- " bus contra grammaticæ rationem assignatis, diversis " nominibus aut verbis, omnia pervertit, & ipsi adeò " commentum placet, ut, quamvis sæpè excipiat se " nolle præjudicare Latinæ versioni, cum tamen vi- " deat ex ea nullis fidiculis sensum, quem sibi propo- " nit, posse erui, non veretur dicere, pag. 61, De- " um Christi & Religionis Christianæ mysteria per " illam verborum formam in Ebræo legis codice ex- " pressisse, quæ sensum carnalem, & à divina mente " alienum, lectori prima fronte offerret, atque ita " voluisse ut in Ecclesia Christiana nulla passim lege- " retur versio, quam quæ secundum Ebræorum ver- " borum corticem conciperetur, ut hoc modo sapientia " divina non esset cuivis profano obvia. Sed postea " idem, per totum illud opus, ita sapientiam illam " divinam ex Scripturæ, si Deo placet, penetralibus " haurit, ut ne ulli quidem hactenus ex Patribus san- " ctissimis vel unius loci talis interpretatio in men- " tem unquam venerit, ne ipsis quidem omniscius " Pontificibus. —— In the Year 1607, a certain " English Roman Catholic, named William Alabaster, " published, at Antwerp, a Book, entituled Apparatus " in Revelationem Christi; in which he professes to " give us a new and admirable Method of investiga- " ting the mysterious Sense of the Prophecies, by " making the Scripture it's own Interpreter. In " this Work, he drew up a new Cabala, by the help " of which he extracts any thing from any thing; " and perverts the whole Scripture, by changing, or " inverting, or separating, and disjoining, the Let- " ters of the Hebrew Words, or Syllables; sometimes " by assigning new Significations to them, contrary " to the Rules of Grammar, or by substituting new " Nouns or Verbs: Nay he is so fond of his own " Comment, that, tho' he frequently assures us he in- " tends no Prejudice to the Latin Version, yet, when " he cannot, with all the torturing imaginable, wrest " That to the Sense, he would extract from it, he " is not asham'd to declare, Pag. 61, That God ex- " press'd the Mysteries of CHRIST, and the Christian " Religion, under That Form of Words, which is " in the Hebrew Code of the Law, which, at first " sight, presents to the Reader a carnal Sense, and " wide of the Divine Intention, and that it is his " Will, that no Version should be publickly read in " the Christian Church, but what is conceiv'd accor- " ding to the Bark, or external meaning of the He- " brew Words; that by this means the Divine Wis- " dom might not be obvious to the Prophane. Yet " this very Author afterwards, through his whole " Work, so exposes his divine Wisdom, by drawing " it

(6) Rivet. Isagoge ad Scripturam sacram, cap. 15. Oper. Tom. 2. pag. 937.

Digitized by Google

" it out of it's Receſſes, that none of the Holy Fa-
" thers, not even the Popes themſelves, with all their
" Infallibility, ever dream'd of one ſingle Interpreta-
" tion, ſuch as our Author gives us." Rivet, having produc'd two Examples of the viſionary Notions of this Author (7), continues his Diſcourſe thus; " A-
" lia hujus farinæ multa, pag. 57. & ſeqq. afferuntur
" à nugatore blaſphemo, quibus ſyllabas unius nomi-
" nis & verbi ſeorſim accipiens, & à ſua radice di-
" vellens, omnia ſurſum deorſum vertit: Et tamen
" in regno Pontificio toleratur hæc novitas, ubi ſim-
" plex Scripturæ ex ipſa Scriptura interpretatio hæ-
" reſeos inſimulatur. Sed de his hactenus. Videant
" Pontificii, an ſuo Alabaſtro non debeant nigrum
" præfigere theta: Nos hominis inſolentiſſimam au-
" daciam deteſtamur, etſi eum Jeſuita Poſſevinus ſuis
" Catholicis Scriptoribus inſeruerit, Appar. Sacri
" Tomo primo. —— This blaſphemous Trifler has " given us more of the ſame Stamp, Page 57, &c.
" in which, by taking the Syllables of a ſingle Noun
" or Verb apart, he everturns the whole Senſe. And
" yet this novel Practice is tolerated in a Roman Ca- " tholic Country, where the ſimple Interpretation of " Scripture by itſelf is charged with Hereſy. But
" ſo much for this Subject. I leave it to the Roman " Catholics to judge, whether their Alabaſter ought
" not to undergo the Sentence of Condemnation: For
" my own part, I deteſt the ſhameleſs Impudence of
" the Man, notwithſtanding the Jeſuit Poſſevin has
" inſerted him among his Catholic Writers." Obſerve I. That the Work, out of which this is taken, was publiſh'd the firſt time in 1626, and that the Edition in Folio, printed in the Year 1652, which I make uſe of, had been reviſed, corrected, and enlarged by the Author. II. That Alabaſter's Book had been condemn'd at Rome, the 30th of January, 1610, and that the Author was return'd to the Boſom of the Church of England, a conſiderable time before the firſt Edition of Rivet's Book. The Congregation of the Index expreſs themſelves in the following Terms; I ſet them down, becauſe they ſeem to infer that the Apparatus of Alabaſter was reprinted at Rome, with ſome Alterations and Corrections. Apparatus in Revelationem Jeſu Chriſti Auctore Gulielmo Alabaſtro Anglo, Antverpiæ 1607. Et Antitheſis, Benedicti à Benedictis Venti, contra Gulielmum Witackerum, niſi fuerint ex CORRECTIS AB AUCTORIBUS ET ROMAE IMPRESSIS, cum approbatione P. Mag. Sacri Palatii. But perhaps they meant only, that, in caſe thoſe Authors ſhould correct their Works, and ſuffer them to be printed at Rome, with the Approbation of the Maſter of the Sacred Palace, they would then licenſe the new Edition. I believe this to be the true Senſe. Samuel Andreas, a German Divine, wrote a Book (8) againſt the Cabala of Dr Henry Moor (9), wherein he produces ſome Inſtances of Alabaſter's Chimeras (10).

(7) The one is on the 9th Verſe of the 37th Chap. of Geneſis: the other on the 8th Verſe of the 4th Chap. of the ſame Book.

(8) See the Index Librorum prohibitorum, printed at Rome in the Time of Alexander VII. pag. 206.

(9) The Title is, Examen Cabalæ Henr. Mori.

(10) Andr. Exam. Cab. H. Mori.

ALAINS, in Latin ALANI, a barbarous People, who greatly contributed to the Ruin of the Roman Empire. Pliny places them in Europe, beyond the Mouths of the Danube (a); but Joſephus points out their Situation more exactly; for he places them near the Palus Mœotis, and the Tanais (b). He deſcribes a furious Eruption, which they made into Media, and Armenia, in the Reign of Veſpaſian. It was at that time, that Vologeſes, King of the Parthians, deſired That Emperor to ſend him Aſſiſtance againſt the Alani, under the Command of one of his Sons; upon which Domitian uſed his Endeavours to obtain this Commiſſion (c). This might induce Moreri to tell us, though a little confuſedly as to Chronology, that theſe Barbarians had already made themſelves known from the Time of Domitian. But this want of Chronological Exactneſs is nothing in compariſon of the reſt. He tells us, that the Alani joined with the Vandals, with the Suevi, and afterwards with the Goths, in the beginning of the Fifth Century; that they fought againſt the French in the Year 505; that they ravaged Gaul; that Gunderic, the Son of Aodegigilus, was their Chief; that, about the Year 509, they paſſed into Spain, where they ſettled; and that they were defeated there by Vallia, King of the Goths, in 418. Such groſs Miſtakes, ſurely, muſt fly in the Reader's Face; for in ſhort, a People, conquered in 418, in a Country, into which they came about the Year 509, is a Story, ſufficient to awaken the moſt languiſhing Attention. The Truth is, Moreri is guilty of an Anachroniſm of no leſs than an Hundred Years. The Alani advanced, in 406, from the Banks of the Danube to the Rhine, without meeting any Reſiſtance; and being joined by the Vandals, who had eſcaped from a Battel loſt againſt the Franks, they entered Gaul. Their King's Name was Reſpendial: the King of the Vandals's Name was Gunderic, the Son of Godiſigil, who had been killed in the late Battel. Several other Nations of Barbarians joined them, and cauſed a prodigious Deſolation in all the Gauls. Part of the Alani, under the Conduct of Utacus, who had ſucceeded Reſpendial, paſſed into Spain, in the Year 409, and ſettled in the Province of Carthagena, and in Luſitania; the other Part kept their Ground in Gaul, under the Conduct of Two Kings. The Alani in Spain, defeated by Vallia, King of the Goths, near Merida, in 418, were forced to ſubmit to Honorius. Their King Vatacus loſt his Life in the Battel (d). We meet with certain of the Alani, in the Year 464, who threw off the Yoke of the Huns, after the Death of Attila, and entered Italy in order to ſettle there; but Ricimer, marching againſt them with the Forces of the Empire, defeated them in ſuch a manner near Bergamo, that but very few of them eſcaped, and their King Beorgor was killed in the Battel. The Huns, having committed great Ravage and Slaughter in the Country of the Alani, had a long time before aſſociated themſelves with thoſe, who eſcaped their Fury. This we read in Ammianus Marcellinus (e). He gives us a long Deſcription of the Manners of the Alani (f) and ſays, they were the ſame People, to which Antiquity gave the Name of Maſſagetæ [A]; he pretends they

(a) Plin. lib. 4. c. 12. and not cap. 2. as in Moreri.

(b) Joſeph. de Bello Judaico, lib. 7. cap. 29.

(c) Cum Vologeſes, Parthorum Rex, auxilia adverſus Alanos, ducemque alterum ex Veſpaſiani liberis depoposciſſet, omni ope contendit, ut ipſe potiſſimum mitteretur. Sueton. in Domit. c. 2.

(d) Corlemoi's Hiſt. of France.

(e) Amm. Marcell. lib. 30. c. 3.

(f) See Cemark [B].

[A] The People to whom Antiquity gave the Name of Maſſagetæ.] There are two Paſſages in relation to this in Ammianus Marcellinus (1); the firſt is in the fifth Chapter of the twenty third Book, and will admit of no Difficulty; " Lucullus, per Albanos &
" Maſſagetas, quos Alanos nunc appellamus, hac
" quoque natione perrupta, vidit Caſpios lacus. ——
" Lucullus, by the Albani and Maſſagetæ, now cal-
" led Alani, forcing his Way thro' this People, came
" in ſight of the Caſpian Sea." The other is in the ſecond Chapter of the thirty firſt Book, in a Place where the Manuſcripts are ſo confuſed, that we muſt have Recourſe to Critical Conjectures, to find in it what I attribute here to Marcellinus. It is, therefore, only upon the Conjecture of the learned Valeſius, that This Hiſtorian is made to ſay atque Alanos

(1) Moreri cites the firſt Book, which is loſt.

Digitized by Google

they inhabited the vaſt Solitudes of Scythia, and gave their Name to the Neighbouring Nations, as faſt as they ſubdued them, and ſpread this Name as far as the River Ganges. Though he repreſents them Cruel and Savage [B], yet he does not make them equal the Huns in Brutality; and he remarks that they pillaged and plundered as far as the Palus Mœotis, and as far as Media and Armenia.

Alanos pervenit, veteres Maſſagetas. —— He penetrated as far as the Alani, formerly the Maſſagetæ. Now, as the firſt Paſſage plainly proves, that Marcellinus placed the Alani in Aſia, we may, I think, conteſt, with this learned Commentator, the Explication he gives of theſe Words of the Text: "Hiſter "Sauromatas prætermeat ad uſque amnem Tanaim "pertinentes, qui Aſiam terminat ab Europa. Hoc "tranſito in immenſum extentas Scythiæ ſolitudines "Alani inhabitant (2). —— The River Iſter (or the "Danube) flows by the Country of the Sauromatæ, "which reaches as far the River Tanais, the Boun- "dary of Aſia and Europe, beyond which, the Alani "inhabit the immenſe Deſarts of Scythia." Valeſius will have hoc tranſito (beyond which) to relate to the Danube, and not to the Tanais; and, in proof, he alledges Pliny, Dionyſius Characenus, Oroſius, and Tzetzes, who place the Alani in Sarmatia, and beyond the Danube; but the Queſtion is not what others have ſaid of it, but only what Marcellinus's Opinion was; and, upon this Foot, it ſeems to me, that hoc tranſito muſt be referred to the Tanais; for, beſides that the Maſſagetæ did not inhabit between the Tanais and the Danube, we find a little after, that this Hiſtorian places the Alani in the Neighbourhood of the Amazons, and makes them rob and plunder, on the one ſide, as far as Media and Armenia, and, on the other, as far as the Palus Mœotis, and the Boſporus Cimmerius. "Parte alia prope Amazonum "ſedes Alani ſunt Orienti adclines, diffuſi per populo- "ſas gentes & amplas, Aſiaticos vergentes in tractus, "quos dilatari ad uſque Gangen accepi fluvium (3). "—— latrocinando & venando ad uſque Mœotica "ſtagna & Cimmerium Boſporum, itidemque Arme- "nios diſcurrentes & Mediam (4)." All this ſhews, that he has not followed the Opinion of thoſe Authors, who placed the Alani in the European Sarmatia; for where would be the wonder, if Robbers, thus ſituated, ſhould ravage not only Media and Armenia, but likewiſe the Palus Mœotis? Marcellinus would not be the only Author, who places theſe Barbarians in Aſia; Does not Valeſius cite Procopius (5), who places them between Caucaſus and the Caſpiæ Portæ? Laſtly, What does Moreri mean by theſe Words: Pliny places them in the European Sarmatia, where Lithuania is at preſent? Doubtleſs he means, that the Sarmatia of the Ancients is the preſent Lithuania: But this is falſe; for Lithuania is but a ſmall Part of the ancient European Sarmatia. Obſerve, that Ptolemy acknowledges two Nations of Alani, one in Europe, the other in Aſia.

(2) Amm. Marcell. lib. 31. c. 2.

(3) Id. ib.

(4) Id. ib.

(5) Henr. Valeſius in Marcell. lib. 31. c. 2.

[B] He repreſents them Cruel and Savage.] They had no other Houſes than their Waggons; in them they begot, and brought up, their Children, and abode no longer in a Place, than till they had conſumed their Proviſions. Fleſh and Milk were their only Food; and they did not manure their Ground. "Nec enim ulla ſunt illis tuguria aut verſandi vome- "ris cura: Sed carne & copia victitant lactis, plau- "ſtris ſuperſidentes. —— abſumptiſque pabulis ve- "lut carpentis civitates impoſitas vehunt, mareſque "ſupra cum feminis coëunt, & naſcuntur in his & "educantur infantes (6)." They accuſtomed themſelves early to ride on Horſeback, and looked upon it as mean to travel on Foot. They were ſo fond of War, that they eſteemed thoſe happy, who died in it, and loaded thoſe with Injuries, and Reproaches of Cowardiſe, who died of Age and of Sickneſs. They took a pride in nothing more than in having killed a Man; they cut off the Heads of thoſe, whom they killed; they flayed them, and made uſe of their Skins as Ornaments for their Horſes; they had no Temples, nor worſhipped any thing but a naked Sword ſtuck in the Ground. It was their God Mars, the Patron of the Countries, which they inhabited. They foretold future Events by the help of certain Rods, ſelected with magical Incantations. "Judi- "catur ibi beatus, qui in prælio profuderit animam: "Seneſcentes enim & fortuitis morbis mundo di- "greſſos ut degeneres & ignavos conviciis atrocibus "inſectantur: Nec quidquam eſt quod elatius jactent, "quam homine quolibet occiſo: Próque exuviis glo- "riosis, interfectorum avulſis capitibus detractas pelles "pro phaleris jumentis accommodant bellatoriis. Nec "templum apud eos viſitur, aut delubrum, &c. (7)." This is the Picture, which Ammianus Marcellinus draws of theſe Barbarians; and it is not improper to repreſent to thoſe, who are acquainted only with civilized Nations, that there are others ſo ſavage, as more nearly to reſemble Brute Beaſts, than the Human Species. This may afford many Reflexions both Phyſical and Moral, and make us wonder at the infinite variety of Cuſtoms and Diſpoſitions of which our Nature is ſuſceptible, and, among which, for one that is good, we may count above an Hundred thouſand bad.

(6) Amm. Marcell. lib. 31. c. 2.

(7) Id. ib.

ALAIS, a City of France, in the Sevennes, in the Dioceſe of Nimes, five Leagues from Uſes (a), is the Capital of an Ancient Lordſhip, which was erected into an Earldom, and poſſeſſed by Charles de Valois, Duke of Angôuleme, a Natural Son of Charles IX. Lewis Emanuel de Valois was long known by the Name of Count d'Alais (b); he was Colonel General of the Light Horſe of France, Governor of Provence, and Son of This Duke of Angôuleme, and Father of Frances Mary de Valois, Wife of Lewis of Lorrain, Duke of Joyeuſe. By this Marriage the Earldom of Alais fell to the Houſe of Lorrain, ſettled in France; for, from the Marriage of the Duke of Joyeuſe with Frances Mary de Valois, ſprung Lewis-Joſeph of Lorrain, Duke of Guiſe, who died at Paris of the Small-Pox, the 30th of July 1671, aged twenty one Years (c). The City of Alais became Epiſcopal after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes [A]. Some will have it to be the Aleſia deſcribed by Julius Cæſar, in the ſeventh Book of his Commentaries. Mr de Mandajors, who is Mayor of it, wrote a Diſſertation on this Subject. See the Journal of the Learned, of the 9th of May, 1695, at the 321ſt Page of the Edition of Holland.

(a) From Baudrand's Lexic. Geograph.

(b) It is he, of whom Gaſſendus ſpeaks ſo often, and to whom he wrote ſo many Letters, Ludovico Valeſio.

(c) Father Anſelm's Genealogy of the Houſe of France, p. 175, 176.

[A] The City of Alais became Epiſcopal after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1).] It is not without reaſon that I mark this Period of Time; for it is certain, that the Suppreſſion of That Edict occaſioned the Erection of This new Biſhoprick. This Country was full of Proteſtants, who were forced, by a Miſſion of Dragoons, to ſign a Popiſh Formulary. It was, therefore, thought expedient not to let them be ſo far diſtant from their Prelate, as they would have been, if they had been ſubjected to the Dioceſe of Nimes. This new Epiſcopal Church "is compo- "ſed of two Collegiate Churches, That of Pſal- "modi, and That of the City of Alez, and has twen- "ty three Canons, and twelve Prebendaries: It's "firſt Biſhop Francis, Knight of Saulx, Abbot of "Pſalmodi, and Doctor of the Sorbonne, was conſe- "crated, by Cardinal de Bonzi, Archbiſhop of Nar- "bonne, in the Church of the Nuns of the Viſita- "tion of Montpelier, the twenty ninth of Auguſt, "1694. He is deſcended from one of the moſt an- "cient and nobleſt Families of Poitou (2)." See the Letter which Mr Pontier wrote to him, and which he publiſhed at Paris in 1695. The Journal of the Learned takes notice of it (3).

(1) In 1685.

(2) Journal of the Learned, May 9th, 1695. p. 322. Edit. of Holland.

(3) Id. pag. 321.

Digitized by Google

ALALCOMENIUM, a small Town of Bœotia: It was so called from Alalcomeneus, the Foster-Father of Minerva, according to some (a); or from Alalcomenia, one of the Daughters of Ogyges, who nursed Minerva [A], according to others (b). The Goddess was born in this Place (c), and had there a Temple, and a Statue of Ivory, held in great Veneration by the People (d). This Veneration was the Cause, as Strabo tells us, that Alalcomenium, though easy to be taken, was never plundered, and that every body abstained from using Violence towards This Place (e). But Pausanias assures us, That the Statue of Minerva was taken from thence by Sylla, and that the Temple began afterwards to be neglected. He adds, that, in his Time, the Walls of it were split, a great Trunk of Ivy having shot forth it's Branches between the Stones. Among the Epithets of Minerva, That of Alalcomenian, Ἀλαλκομενὶς, which Homer gives her, is not the least worthy of Consideration (f). Plutarch reports, That Ulysses, having been born in Alalcomenium, gave this Name to a City of Ithaca, the better to preserve the Memory of the Place, where his Mother lay in of him (g). Stephen of Byzantium says nothing of this, when he speaks of Alalcomenium, and calls a City of the Island Ithaca, Alalcomenium. What Moreri says, That Alalcomenium was remarkable for the Tomb of Tiresias, and, that, according to Plutarch, it was afterwards called Ithaca, is false (b). Hofman is still more faulty than Moreri [B].

(a) Stephan. Byzant. in the Word Ἀλαλκομενιον. Pausan. lib. 9. pag. 308.

(b) Pausan. ibid. according to the Interpretation of Scaliger in Euseb. n. 223.

(c) Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 285.

(d) Pausan. ubi supra.

(c) Ἀτείχιστος καὶ διεστήλεσαν ἡ πολις. . . . . τὴν δὲ θεὸν σεβόμενοι πάντες ἀπεῖχοντο πάσης βιας. Nunquam vastata est ob reverentiam Deæ, omnibus omnem vim abstinentibus. Strabo, ubi supra.

(f) Homer. Iliad. A ver. 8. See also Statius Theb. l. 7. ver. 330.

(g) Plut. Quæst. Gr. pag. 301. (b) See the Article TIRESIAS.

[A] Alalcomenia —— nursed Minerva.] Scaliger pretends, I. That Pausanias owns, that some have ascribed the Education of Minerva to Alalcomenia, the Daughter of Ogyges: But this is rather to guess what one believes, that Pausanias should, or would, have said, than to keep close to his Text, as every one must acknowledge, who examines the Original. II That Stephen of Byzantium mentions This Daughter of Ogyges (1). This is not to be found in the Place where that Author speaks of the City of Alalcomenium.

[B] Mr Hofman is still more faulty than Moreri.] He says, I. That Alalcomenium was a City of Bœotia, denominata à Bœotorum Alalcomeneo. It is most certain, that he does not take this last Word for the Name of a Man, but for That of a Town, as Lloyd did (2). Lloyd is in the right: these are his Words; "Alal-"comenæ urbs Ithacæ denominata à Bœotorum Alal-"comeneo, ut Plut. in Hellen. refert pag. 537. Edit. "Steph. afferens simul causam nominis." All this is true; but Hofman, by putting Urbs Bœotiæ instead of Lloyd's Urbs Ithacæ, and preserving the rest without any Alteration, is fallen into a double Mistake: On the one side, he says, That a Town of Bœotia took it's Name from itself; and, on the other, that Plutarch says it. II. He charges Plutarch falsly with advancing, Page 537, That the Sepulchre of Tiresias, and the Temple of Minerva, made this Town of Bœotia famous; whence the Poet said Ἀλαλκομενὶς Ἀθήνη. Lloyd ascribes the same thing to Plutarch, except what relates to the Tomb of Tiresias. III. Hofman gives us, as another Town, That which he calls Alalcomenium, op. Bœotiæ ad lacum Copaïdem inter Haliartum & Coronæam, Templo Minervæ clarum; this is to multiply Beings unnecessarily. I believe none of the Authors, quoted by Moreri, say, that Prince Alalcomenus set up the Statue of Venus in the Town of Alalcomenium.

(1) Scalig. in Euseb. n. 229. pag. 21.

(2) This Town is sometimes of the Neuter Gender Ἀλαλκομένιον; sometimes of the Feminine, in the Singular Number, Ἀλαλκομενία; sometimes in the Plural Number Ἀλαλκομενιαι; See Berkelius on Stephanus Byzantin. pag. 89. he forgot to say that Plutarch Quæst. Gr. pag. 301. calls it Ἀλαλκομένιον.

ALAMANDUS (Lewis), Archbishop of Arles, and Cardinal with the Title of St Cecilia, was one of the greatest Men of the XVth Century. They who speak of the Affairs, in which he was concerned, usually call him the Cardinal of Arles. He was not a Burgundian, as some Authors have said, but wanted little of being so; for the Country of Bugei gave him Birth. This is what Guichenon has shewn in his History of Bresse, as Moreri observes. Not to repeat what he says of him, I shall confine my self to other Particulars. The Cardinal of Arles presided in the Council of Basil, which deposed Eugenius IV, and elected the Anti-Pope Felix V (a). He was much commended by Æneas Silvius, as a Man perfectly qualified to preside in such Assemblies, resolute and active, famed for his Virtue, learned, and of an Admirable Memory to recapitulate what the Orators and Disputants had urged (b). As he was one Day haranguing against the Pope's Superiority over the Council, he was so much admired, that many saluted him, and others crowded to kiss his Robe. They extolled his Abilities to the Heavens; Abilities, which, though he was a Frenchman, enabled him to surpass the Italians, with all their Subtilities (c). He knew very well how to employ the Artifices of Devotion; for, upon a Session-Day, he caused all the Relicks; which were to be found in Basil, to be brought into the Assembly by the Priests, and to be placed in the room of the absent Bishops. This produced such an Effect, that when, according to Custom, they came to invoke the Holy Ghost, every one shed Tears. He drew Tears, likewise, from the Assistants, when he officiated on the Day of another Session, and when, with his bare and bald Head, he distributed the Communion to all those, who presented themselves, giving them the Kiss of Charity; and exhorting them to communicate worthily (d). He was inflexible, during the Plague, which arose in the City; neither the Death of part of his Domestics, nor any Intreaties, could prevail upon him to leave the Place; he chose rather to save the Council, at the peril of his own Life, by his Presence, than to save his Life, at the peril of the Council, by his Absence (e). He was very laborious, and of such Sobriety, that some of the Conclavists could not bear, when their Expences were retrenched, to be put in mind of the Cardinal's Example. The Answer of a Polander, upon that Occasion, deserves to be read [A]. We need not ask,

(a) He was Duke of Savoy, his Name was Amedæus.

(b) Æneas Silvius, de Gestis Basileensis Concilii, lib. 1.

(c) Prudentiam ejus magnopere commendabant, qui, licet Origine esset Gallicus, Italos tamen hac die summa homines astutia superasset. Id. ubi supra.

(d) Id. l. 2.

(e) Id. ib. I give his Latin Words in the Remark [A].

[A] The Answer of a Polander upon that Occasion deserves to be read.] "What a Comparison you "make, (said he when they proposed the Example of "Lewis Alamandus to him)! You tell me of a sober "Frenchman, who has no Gut, or rather, who is "no Man; I can see all his Actions through the "Curtain, which is between us; I never yet saw "him eat or drink; he neither sleeps in the Night, "nor ask, whether Pope Eugenius thundered his Anathemas against the President of a Council, in which he had been deposed. He deprived him of all his Dignities, and called him the Son of Iniquity [B]. Yet, notwithstanding This, Lewis Alamandus died in the Odour of Sanctity [C], and wrought so many Miracles, after his Death, that, at the Request of the Canons, and the Celestins of Avignon, and at the Sollicitation of Cardinal de Clermont, Legate à latere of Clement VII, he was canonized by that Pope in the Year 1527 (f). Odoricus Raynaldus pretends, that he repented of all that he had done in the Council of Basil; but no Proof can be given of This Repentance (g); nor can we contradict this Matter of Fact, that, a Year before his Death (h), he was one of Those, who, in the Council of Lausanne, represented the Council of Basil, as a Holy and Sacred Assembly (i). He died at sixty Years of Age (k), on the 16th of September 1450 (l). Some say he died in Savoy, at the Abbey of Hautecombe, where the Monks built a Chapel to him, and invoked him in the Celebration of the Mass (m); others say, that he died at Salon (n). His Body lies at Arles: The Bull of Clement VII permits the Removal of it from the damp Vaults under Ground to any other more convenient place in the same Church. Some affirm, after James Philip de Bergamo (o), that Lewis Alamandus published several small Works, not unworthy of his Pen; but I meet with no mention of their Titles, or the Libraries, where they are.

Digitized by Google

The Jansenists, who censured Odoricus Raynaldus for the Pretended Repentance of our Lewis Alamandus, are themselves liable to Censure [D].

(f) See the Bull for it in Launoi, Epist. 11. part. 1. pag. 79, 80. Edit. Cantab. 1689. Folio.

(g) Launoi, ibid. p. 81.

(h) Anno 1449.

(i) Sacri Basileensis Concilii. Diploma Concilii Lausannensis apud Raynaldum ad ann. 1449.

(k) See the Bull of Clement VII. in Launoi, ubi supra, pag. 79, 80.

(l) This appears from his Epitaph.

(m) Petrus Monodus in Amedæo Pacifico, cap. 6. in Launoi, ubi supra, p. 81.

(n) Moreri.

(o) Jacobus Philippus Bergom. lib. 15. Chronicor.

" nor in the Day; he is ever reading or negotiating; " he thinks on nothing less than his Belly; he is " not a Man for my Money. There is not the least " Resemblance between us." " Quos inter (they are the Words of Æneas Silvius, concerning the Diet of the Conclavists) " Cracoviensis Archidiaconus diminu- " tionem (cibariorum) tulit. Cui cum aves & arie- " tinæ carnes afferrentur, substractæ aviculæ sunt, " orante in porta famulo, ut, quod plus effet, id Do- " mino dimitteretur; sperabat namque ex arcte par- " tem, ex avibus autem non sperabat: Dominus ta- " men aviculam præoptasset. Ideoque, cum spolium " sensit, utique conquestus est publiceque testatus, nun- " quam se diem, postquam Sacerdos fuit, tulisse pe- " jorem. Ac cum rogaretur ne admirationem habe- " ret, quoniam id obtigisset Cardinali (Arelatensi) " Proh, inquit, Cardinalem mihi æquiparas, hominem " Gallicum, parcum, eventrem, aut ut verius loquar " non hominem. Ego apud eum meo infortunio sum " locatus, omnia quæ facit perlustris mihi cortina in- " dicat, nec adhuc bibere eum, aut comedere vidi; & " quod mihi molestius est, insomnes noctes insomnesque " dies ducit (quamquam nulla est apud nos dies) aut le- " git semper, aut negotiatur. Nulla ei minor quàm " ventris est cura; mihi nihil cum eo commune est (1). " —— Among whom the Archdeacon of Cracow was " abridg'd in his Diet. For, when they were bringing " him a Dish of Wild Fowl, and another of Venison, " the Wild Fowl was taken away; his Servant at the " Door intreating, that they would allow his Master " the largest Dish; for he was in hopes part of the Veni- " son might fall to his Share, which he could not have " expected from the Wild Fowl; whereas his Master " would have preferr'd the latter. When the Arch- " deacon found himself robb'd of half his Dinner, he " complain'd of it, and publickly declared, that it was " the most unfortunate Day he had met with, since " he first went into Orders. And, when he was de- " sired not to be surprized at it, since the same thing " had happen'd to the Cardinal of Arles, he exclaim- " ed, What a Comparison you make! you tell me of a " sober Frenchman, &c." Such is the bodily Constitution of those, who, in the greatest Affairs, are able to surmount the strongest Obstacles. This requires Men of Labour, detach'd from sensual Pleasures, and intrepid. The following is the Latin Description of Lewis Alamandus's Resolution of Mind, against the Fear of the Plague. " Neque illum preces, neque do- " mesticorum funera, flectere potuerunt, volentem " potius cum vitæ periculo salvare Concilium, quàm " cum periculo Concilii salvare vitam; sciebat enim, " quoniam se recedente pauci remansissent, facileque " committi fraus in ejus absentia potuisset (2)."

(1) Æneas Silvius de Gestis Basileensis Concilii, lib. 2.

(2) Id. ib.

[B] And call'd him the Son of Iniquity.] In a Bull dated at Florence, in the Year 1442, he calls him Iniquitatis filium, rebellionum & facinorum multorum reum; and he says that the Council of Ferrara, and Florence, had condemn'd him to be stript of all his Dignities; à Ferrariensi & Florentino Conciliis damnatum & universis dignitatibus privatum fuisse (3).

(3) See Launoi Epist. 11. part. 1. p. 45. p. 80.

[C] Yet, notwithstanding this, Lewis Alamandus died in the Odour of Sanctity.] This Instance, and the Beatification of Peter of Luxemburgh, by the same Bull of Clement VII (4), are a little puzzling to the Controvertists of the Roman Party; for, in short, if, as they pretend, every one, who is not united to the Pope, is out of the Pale of the Church, how came these two Persons to merit the Rank of Saints? The best answer to this, is, that the Distinction between the true and the false Pope being above the Capacity of private Persons, and a mere Question of Fact, the Error was invincible, and consequently ought not to prejudice those, who acted with Sincerity, as to the Question of Right. But have a care of the Replies, and the Consequences, which result from hence in favour of other Errors.

(4) See Mr Claude's Defence of the Reformation. part 3d, towards the end.

[D] The Jansenists who censur'd —— are themselves liable to Censure.] They alledge, first of all, the Continuator of Baronius's injurious Treatment of the Cardinal of Arles, and they observe afterwards, " that he " was forc'd to confess, in two several Places, to " wit, in the Year 1426, n. 26, and in the Year " 1450, n. 20, that God confirm'd the Holiness of " this Cardinal, by such visible and well attested Mi- " racles, that Clement VII placed him in the Num- " ber of the Blessed (5). —— The manner in which " this Author endeavours to clear himself, continue " they, is most shocking, and cannot be founded but " on a most pernicious Maxim; which is, that Per- " sons, guilty of public Crimes, may become Saints, " and be acknowledged as such by the Church, " without giving any Proof of their having repented " of their Crimes, and though there is the greatest " Reason, on the contrary, to believe, that they " persevered in them. For if the Cardinal of Arles " was guilty of certain Crimes, and ought to be " esteemed as a very wicked Man for his Behaviour " in the Council of Basil, never was Man more con- " stant in his Offence; since, when the Fathers of " the Council of Basil, in which he presided, recon- " ciled themselves to Nicolas V, it was not by ac- " knowledging in any manner, that they had done " amiss, either in opposing Eugenius, or in deposing " him, or in electing Amedæus; but, on the con- " trary, they protested, that they had done nothing, " but with a view to the good of the Church, and " that they did not declare for Nicolas V otherwise, " than by re-electing him, after the voluntary Resig- " nation of Felix; and this Union was made, without " obliging them to recant any thing they had done; " on the contrary, Nicolas V, confirm'd all the Pro- " ceedings of the Council of Basil. Therefore if all " that the Cardinal of Arles did in That Council was " criminal, never any Man shew'd greater Obstinacy " in his Crimes. Whence it follows, that if this did " not hinder him from becoming a Saint, the Con- " sequence will be, that Perseverence in the greatest " Crimes is no Bar to any one's Beatification; which " is shocking. And yet this necessarily follows from " the Words of Raynaldus, in the Year 1450, n. 20. " —— Hoc Anno Ludovicum Alamandum Archi- " episcopum Arelatensem —— vitâ cessisse tradunt, " atque miraculis post mortem corruscasse affirmant, " eumque Clemens VII, veluti Beatum, coli permisit " exarato

(5) Remarks on the 18*th Tome of the* Ecclesiastical Canons, pag. 273. These Remarks are printed with a Collection of several Pieces in Defence of the Censures of the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, against a Brief and a Bull of Alexander VII. I make use of the Edition of Geneva; they have put in the Title at Munster by Bernard Raesfeldt, in 1667, in 8vo.

Digitized by Google

" exarato diplomate Pontificio 9 Apr. an. 1527. Itaque adoranda eſt divina miſericordia, quæ exiguo temporis fluxu Ludovicum ipſum, nefandi & perniciosiſſimi ſchiſmatis auctorem, propagatorem hæreſeos, qui ex erronea conſcientia innumera in Dei Eccleſiam mala invexerat, ac tot annorum curſu in pertinacia obfirmatus profanaverat Sacramenta, pœnitentem ac reverſum in gremium Eccleſiæ ad ſanctitatis culmen brevi evexit. —— This Year, they ſay, died Lewis Alamandus, Archbiſhop of Arles, who became famous for Miracles after his Death, and was permitted to be adored as a Saint, by a Pontifical Bull of Clement VII, dated April 9, Anno 1527. We ought therefore to adore the Divine Compaſſion, which, in ſo ſhort a time, rais'd to the higheſt Pitch of Sanctity, this Lewis, Author of a wicked and moſt pernicious Schiſm, a Propagator of Hereſy; and who, out of an erroneous Conſcience, was the occaſion of numberleſs Evils to the Church of God, and who, confirm'd in Perſeverance, prophan'd the Sacraments for ſo many Years; but at laſt repented, and return'd to the Boſom of the Church. —— If this Author had only ſaid, that the great Zeal of this Holy Man, for the Reformation of the Church, had carried him too far, though he acted upon good Motives, it would have been tolerable, and not ſo contrary to the Teſtimony which God gave of his Sanctity. But to repreſent him as a wicked Man, and as an obſtinate Heretic and Schiſmatic, who had ſacrilegiouſly prophaned the Sacraments; and to tell us, that, in a Year or two afterwards, he became a Saint, fit to be canoniz'd, without giving any Proof of his Repentance of ſo many Crimes, as as are imputed to him, is to have a ſtrange Idea of Holineſs, or rather it is to join Wickedneſs and Sanctity together, to avoid confeſſing, that a Pope was miſtaken, in declaring a Man a Sinner, whom God himſelf had declared a Saint. But the Bull of Clement VII, relating to the Beatification of this holy Man, reported by Ciaconius, is ſufficient to confute this Writer; ſince it appears from thence, that the Pope does not alledge his ſincere Repentance of the Crimes he had committed; but that he yielded up his moſt pure Soul to God, after having liv'd ſixty Years." Theſe Gentlemen cenſure Raynaldus very juſtly for his bold Aſſertion of Alemandus's Repentance; and they demonſtratively confute what he advances; but they are in the wrong to accuſe him of That ſhocking Doctrine, which they ſo pompouſly diſplay: It is not true, that he joins Sanctity and Impenitence together; for he ſuppoſes, on the contrary, that the Cardinal actually did repent; and in That he acknowledges the adorable Mercy of God. If I aſſert here, that Mr Claude has reproach'd the Janſeniſts with Inconſiſtencies in relation to Odoricus Raynaldus (6), it is only to ſhew, that the Remarks, which I attribute to them, have been aſcribed to them by others.

(6) Claude's Preface to the Anſwer to the Perpetuity of the Faith defended, pag. 28, 29.

ALAMOS (BALTHAZAR) was born at Medina-del-Campo in Caſtile. Having ſtudied the Civil-Law at Salamanca, he entered into the Service of Antony Perez, Secretary of State to King Philip II, and had a great ſhare in his Maſter's Eſteem and Confidence; which was the reaſon, why they ſecured his Perſon, after That Miniſter's Diſgrace. He was kept in Priſon eleven Years. Philip III, upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, ſet him at liberty, in compliance with the Orders which his Father left him in his Will. Alamos led a private Life, till Duke d'Olivarez, Favourite of Philip IV, called him to the diſcharge of public Employments. He was promoted to the Poſt of Attorney-General in the Court of Criminal Cauſes, and in the Council of War; afterwards he was Counſellor in the Council of the Indies; and laſtly in the Council of the Royal Patrimony. He was Knight of St James, a Man of Wit and Judgment, and had a better Pen than Tongue. He lived Eighty eight Years, and left only Daughters. He acquired a great Reputation by his Spaniſh Tranſlation of Tacitus, and by the Political Aphoriſms, which he inſerted in the Margin; but there are different Opinions of this Work [A]. It was publiſhed at Madrid in the Year 1614.

[A] There are different Opinions of this Work.] This Difference of Opinions relates much more to the Aphoriſms, than the Tranſlation, as will appear by the following Citations. " As for the Aphoriſms of " Alamos, they are not ſuch, as they are thought to " be; for you will ſcare meet with any thing in them " like an Aphoriſm, or that comes near the force of " what is expreſs'd in the Text of the Tranſlation. " And whereas Aphoriſms ought to be more ſententious than the Text; the Words of the Text are " always more ſententious, than his Aphoriſms. Laſtly, to be ſhort, his Aphoriſms are generally mere " paraphras'd Tranſlations of the Tranſlation itſelf; " an inſipid and tedious thing to a Reader of Underſtanding and Taſte. This being ſuppos'd, I ſhall " not ſcruple to ſay, That Alamos's Tranſlation is " much better than his Aphoriſms. And it is a Judgment, which the Author of the Hiſtorical and Political Bibliography has made before me, in the " Article of the Latin Hiſtorians. Tacitus illuſtrated, ſays he, (it is the Title of Alamos's Tranſlation) " is much eſteemed by our Travellers; but, to judge rationally of it, the Notes are no better than the impertinent New Thoughts of Lewis d'Orleans on this Author, or than the Aulic and Political Remarks of Count Hanibal Scot of Piacenza, which Lipſius rightly calls Leaden Notes. — Yet a certain Spaniſh Secretary, whoſe Name is Juan Oñate, took the Pains to rank theſe Aphoriſms under particular Titles, in an Alphabetical Order, and made no Difficulty to entitle them, Alma de Cornelio Tacito *. Nay farther, one Jerome Canini tranſlated them into Italian, and inſerted them in the Italian Verſion of Adriano Politi, as ſomething very excellent; witneſs the Title, —— Operi di Corn. Tacito illuſtrate con NOTABILLISSIMI AFORISMI del Signor D. Baldaſſar Alamo (1). —— The Works of Cornelius Tacitus, illuſtrated with the CELEBRATED APHORISMS of Signor D. Belthaſſar Alamos."

* The Soul of Cornelius Tacitus.

(1) Amelot de la Houſſaye's Critical Diſcourſe before his Tranſlation of Tacitus's Annals, printed in 1690. This Diſcourſe had already appeared before his Morals of Tacitus, in 1686. It is a little enlarg'd in the Editions of the Annals.

Here are already two Authors, who ſpeak with Contempt of theſe Aphoriſms, and two, who ſet a great Value on them. This difference of Opinion will be leſs ſurprizing, if we reflect, that, in the Year 1683, Mr Amelot had not the ſame Notion of them, as he had in 1686, and in 1690. Let us conſult the Preface to his Tiberius (2). " It is very true, " ſays he, that Alamos not only tranſlated Tacitus, " but wrote likewiſe a great number of Remarks upon him; which he calls Aphoriſms, and which " Antony de Covarruvis, who approved his Book, " repreſents as the principal Part of the Work * —— " I confeſs that it is excellent, both in reſpect of the " Tranſlation, which is as perſpicuous as the Original " is obſcure, as likewiſe of the Aphoriſms, which are " in every Margin; moſt of which are properly Paraphraſes and Verſions of the Sentences of Tacitus, " and the reſt moral or political Concluſions, drawn " from the Events, which he relates; but, notwithſtanding the great Reputation of this Author, I hope " my Work will be very well received by thoſe, who " are proper Judges in this Matter; and the more, becauſe my Undertaking was much more difficult than " that of Alamos. For all his Aphoriſms—are ſo many " detach'd Pieces and Scraps, and, as the Proverb " ſays, Sand without Lime or Cement; whereas, in my " Chapters, I throw into a continued Diſcourſe all " the Latin Citations, which are in the Margins, " and collect into an uniform Body all theſe diſtinct " Pieces. Upon this Occaſion Juſtus Lipſius ſays, " a Man muſt undertake ſuch a Work, to know how " difficult it is." The Words of Lipſius, as they are cited by Amelot, are as follows. " Nec vero nudas " & ſparſas ſententias dedimus, ne diffluerent, & eſſet, " quod dicitur, Arena ſine Calce: Sed eas aut inter " ſe

(2) Printed at Amſterd. in 1683.

* Aun es la principal parte y de mas momento de ſta Obra.

Digitized by Google

1614, and was to have been followed by a Commentary [B] which was never printed, that I know of. The Author compoſed theſe Two Works, during his Confinement, and endeavoured, in that Condition, to obtain a Licence for the Impreſſion [C]. He left ſome other Works, which were not printed: Advertimientos al govierno, addreſſed to the Duke of Lerma, about the beginning of the Reign of Philip III: El Conquiſtador; it contained Advices in relation to the Conqueſts to be made in the New World: Puntos politicos o de Eſtado. Dom Garſias Tellode de Sandoval, Knight of Calatrava, Son-in-Law to Alamos, gave notice of theſe Manuſcripts to Dom Nicolas Antonio (a), from whom I have borrowed the greateſt part of this Article.

(a) See the Bibliotheca Scriptor. Hiſpan. Tom. I. pag. 141.

" ſe haud indecenter vinximus, aut interdum velut " cœmento quodam commiſimus noſtrorum verborum, " è mille aliquot particulis uniforme hoc & cohærens " corpus formantes. Hoc totum quam arduum mihi " fuerit, fruſtra dixerim apud non expertum —— " eo major mihi moleſtia, quod per hæc aliena veſti- " gia ſic iverim, tanquam in liberrimo ingenii cur- " ſu †.

† Lipſius in Præfat. Doctr. Civilis.

[B] Was to have been followed by a Commentary.] The King's Licence expreſsly mentions this Commentary. Antony Covarruvias ſpeaks of it as of a Book, which he had read, and tells us alſo the Diſpoſition, and principal Parts of the Work, in his Approbation, prefix'd to the Tranſlation, Another Approbator ſpeaks of this Commentary by Name. Alamos mentions it ſeveral times in his Prefaces, and promiſes to clear up the Obſcurities of Tacitus in it: Yet Nicolas Antonio is ſilent in this Matter; and, what is more ſtrange, does not ſo much as mention the Tranſlation; he only tells us, That Alamos wrote Aphoriſms on Tacitus.

[C] Endeavoured, in that Condition, to obtain a Licence for the Impreſſion.] I make this Obſervation, not to lengthen out the Article, as ſome Readers of precipitate Judgments may imagine. I propoſe a Breviate of a Caſe, in relation to a ſmall Proceſs entered againſt Don Nicolas Antonio, with great Appearance of Reaſon. He pretends that Emanuel Suciro tranſlated Tacitus's Works into Spaniſh, after Antony de Herrera had tranſlated part of them, and after Balthaſar de Alamos and Carlos Coloma had tranſlated them entire. " Poſt Antonii de Herrera aliqualem, Balthaſaris de " Alamos & Caroli Coloma illuſtrium virorum in- " tegram operam, in hujuſmet autoris interpretatione " poſitam (3)." Now, he acknowledges, that Sueiro's Tranſlation was printed at Antwerp in 1613; and it is certain, that That of Alamos was printed at Madrid in 1614. It is the Date, which Don Nicolas Antonio gave to the Aphoriſms of Alamos (4). Farther, Alamos ſets down in his Preface the Reaſons why he continued his Deſign of publiſhing his Tacitus, after Sueiro's Tranſlation appeared. It is therefore, I think, impoſſible to vindicate Don Nicolas Antonio againſt the Objection of Mr Amelot de la Houſſaie; which ſhews, ſays he, citing what I have juſt now produced, that Don Nicolas Antonio miſtook, when he ſuppoſed the Tranſlation of Emanuel Sueiro to be later than That of Alamos (5). There is but one thing to be pleaded in his Excuſe, which is to ſay, that perhaps Sueiro was not ignorant, when he undertook his Work, that Alamos had already obtained a Licence for publiſhing one of the ſame kind, which had been read and approved by Antony Covarruvias. The News of it might reach him at Antwerp; for in the Year 1594, King Philip II. ordered Covarruvias to examine the whole Work of Alamos; and, in the Year 1603, Philip II. granted a Permiſſion to print it. Alamos relates all this in his Advertiſment to the Reader, which by the by, overthrows the Conjecture of thoſe, who fancy that he filled the Margins of his Tranſlation with Aphoriſms, only to excel That of Sueiro (6). The Aphoriſms were a principal Part of his Work, from the time, that it was approved by Antony Covarruvias.

(3) Nic Anton. Bibl. Hiſp. Tom. I. pag. 273.

(4) Id. ibid. pag. 140.

(5) Y aunque agora avia Salido otro Tacito traduzido por Manuel Sueyro, no quiſe que dexaſſe de publicarſe el mio, &c.

(6) Critical Diſcourſe before Tacitus's Morals, and before his Tranſlation of the Annals.

ALBERTUS MAGNUS, a Dominican, Biſhop of Ratiſbon, and one of the moſt famous Doctors of the XIIIth Century, was born at Lawingen, on the Danube, in Suabia, in the Year 1193, or 1205 [A]. Moreri's Dictionary gives us an Account of the ſeveral Employs, which were conferred upon him, and the Succeſs of his Lectures in ſeveral Towns (a). I ſhall confine my ſelf to ſome Fabulous Reports concerning him. It has been ſaid, that he practiſed the Art of Midwifery; and it was thought improper for a Perſon of his Profeſſion to ſet up for a Man-Midwife (b). The Foundation of this Story is, That there went a Book under the Name of Albertus Magnus, containing ſeveral Inſtructions for Midwives, and ſo much Knowledge of their Art, that it was thought he could not have been ſo well ſkilled in the Trade, if he had not exerciſed it. But the Apologiſts for Albertus Magnus maintain, that he was not the Author of that Book [B], nor of another De Secretis Mulierum [C], wherein

(a) See likewiſe Bullart, Academy of Sciences, pag. 145. and the Remark [H] below.

(b) See Theophilus Raynaud Hoplo h. §. 2. Serm. 3. cap. 10. pag. 361.

[A] In the Year 1193, or 1205.] Voſſius juſtly cenſures Nicolas Reuſnerus, who placed the Birth of Albertus in the Year 1293, and his Death in the Year 1382; thus ſetting out with a Miſtake: " Quæ mag- " na eſt ἀνισοροπία peccantis in ipſo operis ingreſſu, " velut cantherius in porta, ut dici ſolet, nam ab " hoc Alberto icones & elogia ſua auſpicatur (1)." Thus Voſſius expreſſes himſelf, without remembring that, through as great a Miſtake as this, he had (page 62) placed Albertus's flouriſhing Condition in the Year 1160, and his Death, at Eighty ſeven Years of Age, in the Year 1208; and that he had made him cotemporary with Urban IV. and the Emperor Rodolphus.

(1) Voſſius de Scient. Math. pag. 362.

[B] That he was not the Author of that Book.] It is entitled, De Natura rerum, and treats at large, and minutely, of the Practice of Midwifery. The Author maintains, that this Subject is not unworthy the Pen of a Monk, ſince the Ignorance of Midwives deſtroys many Children, and deprives them for ever of heavenly Bliſs. Peter of Pruſſia, a Monk of the Order of St Dominic, maintains that This Book, De Natura rerum, was compoſed by Thomas Cantipratanus, a Diſciple of Albertus; and he does not deny, that ſeveral Precepts are to be met with in it, for procuring a happy Delivery, which cannot be expreſſed without obſcene Words; But it is not Nature, he ſays, but human Senſuality, which ſullies theſe Ideas (2). " Admodum ſuccenſet in blaterones illos, qui Alberto " impoſuerunt quod egiſſet obſtetricem: Falſus tamen " Cantipratanum ad inſtructionem obſtetricum, in " Opere perperam ſuppoſito præceptori ejus Alberto, " tradidiſſe modos & vias fœlicis obſtetricationis, cu- " jus precepta chartis committi, nec voce tradi poſ- " ſunt, abſque expreſſione Multorum quæ libido non " natura fœdavit (3)." It would be curious enough, to have ſeen Albertus Magnus undertake to deliver a Woman, and ſet his Hand to the Work. See the Remark [A] of the Article HIEROPHILUS.

(2) Petrus de Pruſſia in Alberti Magni vita, cap. 18.

(3) Theoph. Raynaud. Hoplotli. §. 2. Serm. 3. cap. 10. pag. 361.

[C] Nor of another De Secretis mulierum.] Naudé makes uſe of theſe two Proofs: I. Albertus's Name is not prefixed to the Work; he who commented upon it would deceive us, when he maintains the contrary. II. Albertus's Authority is often made uſe of in this very Book; and therefore the Author lived ſome time after him (4). Theſe two Proofs are inconcluſive; and the Conſequence drawn from the ſecond is of no weight. Many Reaſons may oblige a Man not to put his Name to a Book; and no Authors cite themſelves more willingly than thoſe, who ſuppreſs their Names; nor is any thing more common, than to quote cotemporary Authors. See the Remark [K].

(4) Naudé's Apology for Great Men, pag. 524.

Digitized by Google

in are many Things, which could not be expreſſed but in obſcene and filthy Terms; which raiſed a great Clamour againſt the pretended Author of it. His Apologiſts cannot always have recourſe to a poſitive Denial of Matter of Fact; They acknowledge there are ſome Queſtions in his Commentary on the Maſter of the Sentences relating to the Practice of the Conjugal Duty [D], in which he was obliged to make uſe of Terms, which gave Offence to chaſte Ears (c); but they alledge, what he obſerves himſelf in his own Juſtification, that ſo many monſtrous Things are revealed in Confeſſion, that it is impoſſible not to touch upon ſuch Queſtions. It is certain, that Albertus was the moſt inquiſitive of Men. He expoſed himſelf, upon that account, to other Accuſations. It has been ſaid, that he was in ſearch of the Philoſophers Stone [E]; and even that he was a notorious Magician [F], and that he had formed a Machine,

(c) Theoph. Rayn. ubi ſupra.

[D] Some Queſtions —— relating to the Practice of Conjugal Duty.] Peter of Pruſſia, when he could not deny the Fact, endeavoured to juſtify the Lawfulneſs of it; and ſhews, in the eighteenth Chapter of his Book (5), That it is uſeful, and even neceſſary, for us to be acquainted with natural Things, not excepting the moſt obſcene; and that, therefore, Albertus and other Caſuiſts were in the right to treat of Subjects full of Obſcenity; for, without it, Confeſſors would not be qualified to remedy the Complaints of their Penitents. "Qualia item "multa ab Alberto de uſu conjugii in 4. S. d. 31. "ſub finem, ſcripto comprehenſa fatetur, illud ex ipſo "Alberto ibidem præfatus [dicendum primo, quod "hujuſmodi turpes quæſtiones nunquam tractari de"berent, niſi illa cogerent monſtra quæ his tempo"ribus in confeſſione audiuntur] ne ergo Confeſſa"rii rudes ſint medicinæ, quam facere debent adeo "frequentibus morbis, juſtum cenſuit Albertus in illud "oletum ſtylum demittere (6)." We are told, that it were to be wiſhed, that none but Confeſſors would concern themſelves with ſuch Obſcenities; but that there muſt be Books, to which we may have Recourſe in Caſes of Conſcience, which relate to That filthy Subject. "Neceſſarium eſt enodationem ſoli"dam atque legitimam dubiorum circa fœditates "illas emergentium proſtare alicubi apud probatos "Doctores cujuſmodi fuit Albertus, qui proinde re"prehenſione vacat, etiamſi illum veluti ſcriptionis "putorem ſuis commentariis immiſerit (7)." But it would be yet more neceſſary to aboliſh that which makes this ſort of Writings neceſſary, for, how good ſoever an Author's Intention may be, it is to Books of this Nature, rather than to numberleſs others, we ought to apply Horace's

(c) The Title of the Chapter is, Quod ſcire naturalia etiam impudica utile ſit & neceſſarium.

(6) Theoph. Raynaud. ubi ſupra.

(7) Id. ibid.

---- Peccare docentes
-------- Hiſtorias ----- (8).

---- Tales, the Bawds to Vice.

CREECH.

(8) Horat. Od. 7. lib. 3. ver. 19.

[E] That he was in ſearch of the Philophers Stone.] Naudé informs us, that Mayer, the great Patron of the Alchymiſts, was not aſhamed to affirm in his Symbols of the Golden Table of the twelve Nations *, that St Dominic was the firſt who had the Knowledge of the Philoſophers Stone; and that thoſe, to whom he left it, communicated it to Albertus Magnus, who by that means cleared all the Debts of his Biſhoprick of Ratisbon in leſs than three Years (9). Mayer builds his Opinion upon three Books of Chymiſtry, which he aſcribes to Albertus Magnus. Naudé anſwers, that he is in the wrong to attribute them to him (10), and for this reaſon, becauſe not one of them has been inſerted among his Works, or ſpecified by Trithemius; and becauſe That of the Quinteſſence was falſly aſcribed to him by Francis Picus †. To prove this laſt Fact, he does not imitate Velcurion ‖ and Guilbertus , who maintained, that Albertus laughed at Alchymiſts, and their pretended Tranſmutations, in his third Book of Minerals ‡. He does not alledge this Proof, ſince Albertus in That maintains a quite contrary Opinion; but he ſhews, that the Author of the Quinteſſence ſtyles himſelf Monk of the Order of St Francis, and ſays, that he compoſed it, when he was in Priſon. Theſe two Circumſtances muſt undoubtedly relate to John de Rupeſciſſa.

* Lib. 6.

(9) Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 519.

(10) Ibid. pag. 520.

† Lib. 2. de Auro.

‖ Lib. 3. Phyſic. cap. 13.

 Alchym. impugnatæ, lib. 2. c. 7.

‡ Traſlatu 1. cap. 9.

[F] That he was a notorious Magician.] Trithemius endeavoured long ago to juſtify him from this Accuſation. This appears from theſe Words: "Non "ſurrexit poſt eum vir ſimilis ei, qui in omnibus "literis, ſcientiis, & rebus tam doctus, eruditus, & "expertus fuerit. Quod autem de Necromantiâ ac"cuſatur, injuriam patitur vir Deo dilectus (11). —— "There aroſe no one after him, who deſerved to be compared to Him, for univerſal Knowledge and Experience. As to the Accuſation of Necromancy brought againſt him, it is an Injury to this Favourite of Heaven." Naudé pretends, that this Accuſation can only ariſe from two Works, which went under the Name of Albertus Magnus, and on the Androïs. So that here are two Proofs: Let us ſee then what he ſays of each.

(11) Trithem. de Scriptor. Eccleſ p. 195.

I. The firſt of theſe two Books is entituled, de Mirabilibus; the other is the Mirrour of Aſtrology, which treats of the licenſed and prohibited Authors, who have wrote on this Science (12). Francis Picus  and Martin Del Rio †† agree, that they do Albertus Magnus a great Injury, who believe him to be the Author of the Book de Mirabilibus, and therefore the latter clears him in theſe very Terms; "Alberto "Magno tributus liber de Mirabilibus, vanitate & "ſuperſtitione refertus eſt, ſed magno Doctori partus "ſuppoſititius. —— The idle and ſuperſtitious Book "de Mirabilibus, aſcribed to the famous Dr Albertus "Magnus, is a ſpurious Work." The Mirrour of Aſtrology "was condemned by Gerſon ‖‖ and Agrippa ‡‡, as ſuperſtitious to the higheſt Degree; and "by Francis Picus , and many others, becauſe the "Author of it aſſerts a very erroneous Opinion, in "favour of Books of Magic; which, he maintains, "ought carefully to be preſerved, becauſe the Time "approaches, in which, for certain Reaſons, which "he does not ſpecify, Men will be obliged to peruſe "and conſult them on ſome Occaſions (13)." It ſeems, then, that if our Albertus had compoſed ſuch a Book, he muſt have been conſidered as a Magician; but Naudé does not allow this Conſequence, ſince the Jeſuit Vaſquez expreſsly declares ††, "that Books of "Magic are neceſſary, and that Magicians are tole"rated by God, that Libertines may in ſome Mea"ſure be reclaimed from Atheiſm (14)." Beſides, Naudé takes it for granted, that Roger Bacon is the Author of That Work, as Francis Picus maintains, in his firſt Book againſt Aſtrologers (15). So much for the firſt Proof of the Accuſation. Let us ſee how the ſecond is anſwered.

(12) Naudé, ubi ſupra, p. 523, 524.

 Lib. 7. de Præno. cap. 7.

†† Diſquiſit. Mag. lib. 1. cap. 3.

‖‖ Libro de libris Aſtrolog. non tolerandis, Propoſit. 3.

‡‡ In Epiſtolis.

 Lib. 7. de Præno. cap. 2.

(13) Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 525.

†† Part. 1. Quæſt. 2. Art. 3. Diſput. 2c. cap. 4. at the beginning.

(14) Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 527.

II. Some Perſons have believed, that brazen Heads might be made under certain Conſtellations, which would give Anſwers, and direct a Man in all his Affairs. One Yepes relates , that Henry de Villeine had made one at Madrid, which was broke to pieces by the Command of John II. King of Caſtile. Virgil, Pope Silveſter, Robert of Lincoln, and Roger Bacon, had the like Heads, if we may believe certain Writers (16). Albertus Magnus was judged to be more ingenious; for it is pretended that he "had formed "an entire Man of this ſort, having worked thirty "Years without interruption, in forging him under "divers Aſpects and Conſtellations; as for Example, "the Eyes, --- when the Sun was in a Sign of "the Zodiac correſpondent to ſuch a part; which he "caſt of mixed Metals, and marked with the Cha"racters of the ſame Signs and Planets, and of their "divers and neceſſary Aſpects; and thus the Head, "Neck, Shoulders, Thighs and Legs, faſhioned at dif"ferent Times, and connected together in the Form of "a Man, had the Ingenuity to reveal to the ſaid Al"bertus the Solution of all his principal Difficul"ties (17)." This is what is called the Androïs of Albertus Magnus. It was broke, they ſay, by Thomas Aquinas, who could not bear it's everlaſting Tittle tattle with Patience. Henry de Aſſia and Bartholomew Sibylla aſſure us, that it was "compoſed "of Fleſh and Bones; but by Art, not Nature:

(15) Idem, pag. 526.

 Apud Emanuel de Moura, §. 2. cap. 15. art. 6.

(16) Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 528.

(17) Idem, pag. 529, 530.

"Which

Digitized by Google

a Machine, in the ſhape of a Man, which ſerved him for an Oracle, and explained all the Difficulties, which he propoſed to it. I could eaſily be induced to believe, that, as he underſtood the Mathematics, he had made a Head, which, by the help of Springs, might form certain articulate Sounds; but what Folly is it to ground an Accuſation of Magic upon this? Some pretend that he was juſtify'd from this Imputation by an extraordinary Miracle [G]. Though he was as well qualified, as any Perſon, to be the Inventor of Artillery, there is Reaſon to believe that they, who aſcribe the Invention of it to Him, are miſtaken [H]. It is ſaid (d), that he had naturally a very dull Wit, and that he was upon the point of leaving the Cloiſter, becauſe he deſpaired of attaining to what his Fryar's Habit required of him; but that the Holy Virgin appeared to him, and aſked him, in which he would chuſe to excel; in Philoſophy,

(d) See Vol. I. of Bzovius's Annals.

" Which being, however, judged impoſſible by modern Authors, and the Virtue of Images, and planetary Rings and Seals, being then in great Vogue, " it has been always believed ſince - - - - that ſuch " Figures were made of Braſs, or of ſome other Metal, " which was faſhioned under the Influence of Hea- " ven, and of the Planets (18). Upon this foot Naudé refutes Albertus's Accuſers; namely, by ſuppoſing, that the pretended Androïs was compoſed of Metal. He ſhews, by very ſtrong Reaſons, that it could neither hear, nor ſpeak, nor ſerve the Devil as an Inſtrument for Speech; and that, if the Devil had ſpoke through this Machine, he would have done it without the help of the metallic Organs, of which it was compoſed. So that it would not have been neceſſary to employ ſo much Time, and ſo many Ceremonies, in forging ſuch a Machine; A Bottle or a Trumpet would have been as proper to reſolve all the Difficulties of Albertus. Laſtly, Naudé remarks, that They, who mention This Androïs, bring no Proof of the Fact. Toſtatus, notwithſtanding all his Wit and Learning, was very credulous; therefore his Authority proves nothing. If any one will maintain, that ſuch a Tradition muſt have ſome Foundation, Naudé aſſigns a very plauſible one (19), which is, that Albertus might perhaps have in his Cloſet a Head, or Statue of a Man, like thoſe Machines of Boëthius, of which Caſſiodorus ſpeaks ††† : " Metalla mugiunt, Diomedis in ære grues " buccinant, æneus anguis inſibilat, aves ſimulatæ " fritinniunt, & quæ propriam vocem neſciunt ab " ære dulcedinem probantur emittere cantilenæ. —— " Metals bellow; Diomedes's Cranes chatter in Braſs; " A brazen Serpent hiſſes; Imitated Birds chirp; " and Things, which have no Voice of their own, " are found, in Braſs, to counterfeit the Sweetneſs of " ſinging."

(18) Idem, pag. 531. He cites Pereg. Quæſt. 3. Decad. cap. 2. Qu. 3.

(19) Naudé, ubi ſupra, p. 539, 540.

††† Lib. 1. Variar. Ep. 45.

[G] He was juſtified from this Imputation by an extraordinary Miracle.] According to Father Theophilus Raynaud, the Accuſers of Albertus ſay, that, on Twelfth-day, he treated William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans, who paſt by the City of Cologne; and that, to make his Entertainment the more remarkable, he changed the Winter into a Summer full of Flowers and Fruits. " Horridam hye- " mem in florigeram fructiferamque æſtatem vertit, " ut ſcribit Trithemius in Chron. Spanh. anno 1254 " (20)." Trithemius in effect relates this. They add to this the ſpeaking Head, the Book de Mirabilibus, and That de ſecretis mulierum. Father Theophilus does not refute theſe Accuſations by the Elogies, which ſeveral Hiſtorians beſtow upon the Virtues of the Accuſed. He has recourſe to the Teſtimony, which God himſelf gave of the Sanctity of Albertus by ſeveral miraculous Operations, and by preſerving his Body from Corruption to this Day: Teſtimonium quod ejus ſanctitati Deus perhibuit patratis in ejus gratiam miris pleriſque operibus, & ipſius Alberti corpore ad hunc uſque diem à tabe & putrefactione exempto. This Apologiſt adds, that the Metamorphoſis of Winter into Summer, and the ſpeaking Head, are two great Falſities; and that the two Books in Queſtion are falſly attributed to Albertus Magnus; and that St Thomas does not ſay *, that he formerly broke the ſpeaking Head, in his Maſter's Houſe. " Hyems in veris amœnitatem verſa, & caput æne- " um articulate loquens, ad Deum Fabulinum ſunt " ableganda tanquam conficta & falſo jactata de tanto " viro - - - libri autem Magici, qui Alberto affin- " gebantur, ſunt ſuppoſititii (21)." See what this Jeſuit relates of certain Machines, which utter very harmonious Sounds. He will allow, that Albertus might have a Head ſo ingeniouſly contrived, that the Air, which was blown into it, might receive the Modifications requiſite to form a human Voice. As to the Exemption from Putrefaction, read the following Extract from Thevet; " Our Albertus, ha- " ving lived Eighty ſeven Years, died in the Year " of our Redemption 1280, at Cologne, whither he " had retired to Study; and there his Body is bu- " ried, in the middle of the Quire of the Convent " of the Dominicans, and his Entrails were carried " to Ratisbon; his Body was yet entire in the Time " of the Emperor Charles V. and was taken up by " his Command, and afterwards replaced in it's firſt " Monument (22)". The Jeſuit Raderus wrote ſome Latin Verſes on the Preſervation of his Body from Putrefaction (23). They end thus;

Illius doctas mirentur ſæcula chartas,
Miror ego ſalvas poſt tria ſæcla manus

Let the famed Writings of the wond'rous Sage (24)
The Admiration prove of every Age;
Thy learned Hands, Albertus, I admire,
After Three Centuries preſerved entire.

(20) Theophil. Rayn. Hoploth. §. 2. Serm. 1. cap. 14. pag. 149.

* III. contra Gent. cap. 104.

(21) Theophil. Raynaud. p. 150.

(22) Thevet's Hommes Illuſtres, Tom. 2. pag. 87.

(23) Bullart, Academy of Sciences, Tom. 2. pag. 140. mentions them.

(24) i. e. Ariſtotle.

Moreri ſays but Two hundred Years, inſtead of Three hundred. Neither his uſual Practice, nor his Diſpoſition, incline him to leſſen Things of this Nature.

[H] They, who aſcribe the Invention of it to him, are miſtaken.] " John Matthew de Luna *, who liv'd " above an Hundred and twenty Years ago (25), " maintains, though againſt the conſtant Opinion of " Polydorus, Mazius, Mayer, Pancirolus, Florentius, " Rivault, and Bezoldus, that Albertus Magnus found " out the Uſe of great Guns, Fuſils, and Piſtols; but " I cannot find, in all thoſe Authors, any thing which " comes near this Opinion, except that the Experi- " ment was made of theſe Engines in his Time, by " a German Monk, whom they call Berthold Schu- " uartz, or by a Chymiſt, who, in the Judgment " of Cornazanus, an ancient Author, liv'd in the " City of Cologne, in which it is certain that Alber- " tus continu'd to reſide, after he took the Habit of a " Dominican (26)." Thus Naudé refutes John Matthew de Luna. The laſt thing he affirms is falſe; for the Hiſtorians of Albertus tell us, That he enter'd into the Order of St Dominic, in the Year 1222; That, after his Superiors had ſent him to Cologne, to teach Divinity and Philoſophy, and he had acquitted himſelf of that Employment to the aſtoniſhment of his Auditors, he diſtinguiſh'd himſelf at Hildeſheim, at Friburg, at Ratisbon, and at Strasburg; that he return'd to Cologne, in the Year 1240; that, among other Diſciples, he had Thomas Aquinas there, to whom he reſign'd his Chair, when he went to profeſs in the City of Paris; that, having taught three Years at Paris, he return'd to Cologne; that he was made Provincial of his Order, in the Year 1254; that he perform'd the Viſitation of the Provinces on Foot; that he went to Rome, by order of Alexander IV, where he was made Maſter of the Sacred Palace, and read Divinity Lectures; that he returned into Germany in the Year 1260; that he was elected Biſhop of Ratisbon there; that, at three Years end, he obtained leave to reſign his Biſhoprick; that he return'd to his Cell at Cologne; that the Pope commanded him, a little while after, to preach the Cruſade all over Germany and Bohemia; that, in 1274, he aſſiſted at the Council of Lyons; that he had the Character of the Emperor's Ambaſſador there; and that, at laſt, he returned to Cologne (27). How could Naudé, who was ſo deeply read, be ignorant of theſe ſeveral Stations of Albertus Magnus?

* Libro de Rerum inuent cap. 12. fol. 10.

(25) Theſe are Naudé's Words, pag. 518. of his Apology for Great Men, Paris 1625.

(26) Moreri, in the End of this, treats only of Gun-Powder, of which Naudé ſays nothing.

(27) See Bullart's Academy of ciences, Tom. 2. pag. 146, &c.

[I] Our

Digitized by Google

loſophy, or Divinity; that he made choice of Philoſophy; that the Holy Virgin aſſured him he ſhould ſurpaſs all Men in that Science; but that, as a Puniſhment for his not chuſing Divinity, he ſhould, before his Death, relapſe into his former Stupidity. They add farther, That, after this Apparition, he ſhewed a prodigious deal of Wit, and improved in all Sciences, with a Quickneſs, which aſtoniſhed all his Maſters; but that, Three Years before his Death, he forgot, in an inſtant, all that he knew; and that, being at a ſtand, in a Lecture of Divinity at Cologne, and endeavouring in vain to recal his Ideas, he was ſenſible that it was the Accompliſhment of the Prediction. Whence it was ſaid, the he was miraculouſly converted from an Aſs into a Philoſopher, and afterwards from a Philoſopher into an Aſs. It is needleſs to obſerve that this is a meer Story; they who will believe me in this, ſtand in no need of my Opinion, and would form this Judgment without expecting it; and as for thoſe, who judge otherwiſe of it, they will not change their own Opinion, by finding here, that I am of a different. Our Albertus was a very little Man [I]. He died at Cologne, the 15th of November 1280, being Eighty ſeven or Seventy five Years old. He wrote ſuch a prodigious number of Books, that they amount to twenty one Volumes in Folio, in the Edition of Lions, 1651. A Dominican of Grenoble, called Peter Jammy, procured it.

(e) By Mr de la Monnoie.

Two or three Particulars, which have been communicated to me (e), ſhall be produced below [K].

[I] Our Albertus was a very little Man.] "Some "write, That, kiſſing his Holineſs's Feet, upon his "Arrival at Rome, the Pope commanded him to riſe, "thinking he was yet on his Knees; though he was "really ſtanding (28)." The ſame Story is told of ſome other Perſons. See the Remark [H], of the Article ANDRE (JOHN); and remember the Logicians Diſtinction between quantitas molis, and quantitas virtutis. Little Albert the Great puts me in mind of it (29).

(28) Id. ib. pag. 148.

(29) The non eſt in tanto corpore mica ſalis, carries the ſame Diſtinction.

[K] Particulars, which—— ſhall be produc'd below.] "The Book De Secretis Mulierum, falſely aſcribed to "Albertus, is the Work of one of his Diſciples, "named Henry of Saxony; under whoſe Name it has "been printed ſeveral times. Theſe are Simler's "Words: —— Henrici de Saxonia Alberti Magni "diſcipuli liber de ſecretis mulierum, impreſſus Au"guſtæ anno D. 1498, per Antonium Sorg (30).—— "Henry of Saxony, the Diſciple of Albertus Mag"nus, his Book De Secretis Mulierum, printed at "Ausbourg, in 1498, by A. Sorg. —— And in Thua"nus's Catalogue you meet with — Henrici de Saxo"nia de ſecretis mulierum, de virtutibus herbarum, "lapidum, quorundam animalium, aliorumque in 12°. "Francof. 1615 (31). —— Henry of Saxony, of the "Secrets of Women, of the Virtues of Herbs, Stones, "of ſome Animals, and other Things, in 12°, Franc"fort, 1615. —— Albertus's Name being more fa"mous than That of Henry, plainly gave occaſion "to this Suppoſition. —— John Picus de Mirandula, "ſays, That Albertus, in his riper Years, condemn'd "the Books of Magic, which he had compos'd in "his Youth. —— Androïs is not the Term made uſe "of, when they ſpeak of Albertus Magnus's Artificial "Man. It is a Word abſolutely unknown, and in"vented by Naudé, who boldly applies it, as if it "had been generally received."

(30) Simler. Epitome Biblioth. Geſn. pag. 332.

(31) In the 156th Page of the ſecond Part.

ALBRET, a Family. It was, for ſome Ages, one of the moſt Illuſtrious of France, for the great Men it produced, whoſe Merit was diſtinguiſhed by the moſt Eminent Dignities of the Kingdom. Every one knows that this Family was in poſſeſſion of Navarre and Bearn. Moreri ſpeaks of it at large; I refer my Readers to him, without examining into the Truth of every thing he has advanced in relation to it. I ſhall only take Notice of one Omiſſion; Namely that this illuſtrious Houſe was extinct, by the Death of the Marquis d'Albret (a) who was killed in Picardy, in the Houſe of the Marquis de Buſſi-Lamet. He married the only Daughter of his Uncle, the Mareſchal d'Albret, in the Year 1662; but this Marriage produced no Children. It is probable the Mareſchal conſulted the Intereſts of his Family, more than the Inclinations of the two Couſins; for it is ſaid, there was but little Harmony between the Huſband and the Wife. She married again with the Count de Marſan, one of the Sons of the Count d'Harcourt. Her firſt Huſband, the Marquiſs d'Albret, was in a fair way of being advanced to the Chief Military Offices: He was already Field-Mareſchal, and would have ended the Campaign, of 1678, under Mareſchal Schomberg, who was ſent to the Frontiers of Champagne, in the beginning of the Month of Auguſt. Whilſt his Flying Camp drew near Charleville, the Marquis d'Albret demanded of him a Furlough for a few Days. It was not queſtioned, but it was upon an Affair of Gallantry. However it be, he was ſlain at the above mentioned Gentleman's Houſe, who cleared himſelf by proving, that he was then in another place (b). This was the Bed of Honour, in which the only remaining Branch of ſuch a line of Heroes ended his Life. His Family deſerved to end on a more glorious Occaſion. The Marſhal d'Albret died Governor of Guienne, two Years before. He had obtained the Staff of Mareſchal of France in 1653. They, who pretend that he earned it by ſecuring the Prince of Condé, are ignorant of the Matter of Fact. It was not he, (but Mr de Guitaud) who arreſted him (c): He only conducted the Prince to Bois de Vincennes. He commanded, at that Time, the Gendarmes of the Guard. He learned the Trade of War in Holland, and was called the Count de Mioſſens. It is under this Name that he is ſo greatly celebrated by Mr de St Evremont (d). He was Knighted the firſt of January, 1662, and made Governor of Guienne in the Month of November, 1670. In 1645, he married Magdalen de Guenegaud, youngeſt Daughter of Gabriel de Guenegaud, the King's Treaſurer (e). He was one of Scarron's Heroes, as appears evidently from that Writer's Works.

(a) His Name was Charles Amanieu d'Albret.

(b) See the 120th Letter of Buſſi-Rabutin, part 1. pag. 202. Edit. Holl.

(c) See Benjaminus Priolus de Rebus Gallicis, lib. 5. c. 3.

(d) See St Evremont's Miſcellaneous Works, Tom. 2. pag. 71, 77, &c. Edit. Holl. 1693.

(e) See Father Anſelme, Tom. 2. pag. 285.

Digitized by Google

ALBUNEA, a Famous Place (a), near Tibur in Italy. See the laſt Remark of the Article TIBUR.

(a) At preſent Tivoli.

ALBUTIUS SILUS (CAIUS) a Famous Orator in the Reign of Auguſtus, was born at Novara, and had raiſed himſelf there to the Office of Ædile; but quitted his Poſt on occaſion of an Inſult offered him by ſome Perſons, who had loſt their Cauſe. He was their Judge, and gave Sentence againſt them; upon which they dragged him by his Feet from the Tribunal. This Affront induced him to leave his Country immediately, and repair to Rome; where he became acquainted with the Orator Munacius Plancus. Emulation breeding ill blood between them, he ſet up a ſeparate Auditory; and at laſt ventured to plead Cauſes. He met with ſome Diſgraces at the Bar [A], which obliged him to quit it. Being old, and troubled with an Impoſthume, he returned to Novara, where, aſſembling the People, he repreſented to them, in a long Speech, the Reaſons, which gave him a diſreliſh of Life, and then ſtarved himſelf to death (a). Seneca the Father, who had often heard him plead, gives an ample Account of him, and recites ſeveral Abſtracts from his Speeches (b). He commends him as one, who would neither ſuffer, nor do an Injury; and this he calls the higheſt degree of Probity; Homo ſummæ probitatis, qui nec facere injuriam, nec pati ſciret. Seneca, the Philoſopher, would have defined the Nature of Probity better. Albutius compoſed a Treatiſe of Rhetoric, as may eaſily be inferred from a Paſſage of Quintilian (c).

(a) Sueton. de Clar. Rhetor. c. 6.

(b) Seneca, Præfat. lib. 3. Controverſ. & alibi paſſim.

(c) Albutius non obſcurus Profeſſor atque autor, Scientiam bene dicendi eſſe conſentit (Rhetoricam). Albutius, an eminent Profeſſor and Author, allows Rhetoric to be the Science of ſpeaking well. Quint. Inſtit. lib. 2. cap. 5.

[A] He met with ſome Diſgraces at the Bar.] It happened, once, that he addreſs'd himſelf to his Adverſary in theſe Words, intending nothing more by them, than a fine Rhetorical Figure, Swear by the Aſhes, and by the Memory of your Father, and you ſhall gain your Cauſe. After he had illuſtrated and ſet off the Thought to the beſt Advantage, the Advocate on the other ſide reply'd, We accept the Condition. Albutius anſwered, that he intended to offer no ſuch Terms; that it was only a rhetorical Figure, and that all figurative Expreſſions muſt be excluded, if Things were thus taken literally. The other Advocate reply'd, That Men could live without theſe Figures, and that they might be baniſh'd, with all his Heart. The Judges gave it for the Oath, and Albutius loſt his Cauſe, for a rhetorical Flouriſh. He was ſo vex'd at it, that he renounc'd the Profeſſion (1). The ſame Account is given of it by Suetonius; "Cum, in lite quadam centum virali ab adverſario, quem ut impium erga parentes inceſſebat, jusjurandum quaſi per figuram ſic obtuliſſet; Jura per patris matriſque cineres, qui inconditi jacent, & alia in hunc modum: arripiente eo conditionem, nec judicibus aſpernantibus, non ſine magna ſui invidia negotium afflixit (2)." From that Time, Maſters have recommended to their Diſciples not to apply theſe Figures unſeaſonably (3).

(1) Seneca, Præf. lib. 3. Controv.

(2) Sueton. de Claris Rhetor. c. 6.

(3) Quintil. lib. 9. c. 2.

ALBUTIUS (TITUS) a Philoſopher of the Epicurean Sect, went, in his Youth, from Rome to Athens, and gained ſuch a Taſte for the Manners of the Greeks, that he was fonder of paſſing for a Greek, than a Roman (a); which occaſioned a Jeſt of Scævola [A], to which Lucilius gave a very malicious turn in one of his Satires, as we learn from Cicero (b). The ſame Author informs us, I. That Albutius was a zealous Epicurean (c), and that he would have been a better Orator, had he been leſs attached to the Sect of Epicurus (d). II. That he was well verſed in the Greek Learning (e), and that he publiſhed ſome Harangues (f). III. That he had ſerved in ſome of the Offices of the Republic; that he governed Sardinia in the Quality of Pro-Prætor (g); and that he could

(a) Cicero in Bruto, cap. 26, 35.

(b) Id. l. 1. de Finib. cap. 3.

(c) Id. lib. 1. de Nat. Deorum, cap. 33.

(d) Id. in Bruto, cap. 26, 35.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Ibid. de Provinc. Conſular. cap. 7. & in Piſonem, cap. 38.

[A] A Jeſt of Scævola.] It conſiſted in this; when he received a Viſit from Albutius at Athens, he ſaluted him in Greek, and made all his Attendants ſalute him in the ſame Language. The Ridicule cannot be conceived without thinking on the Action itſelf. Cicero, upon this Occaſion, expreſſes himſelf thus. "Res vero bonas verbis electis graviter ornate que dictatas quis non legat niſi qui ſe planè Græcum dici velit, ut à Scævola eſt Prætor ſalutatus Athenis Albutius, quem quidem locum cum multa venuſtate & omni ſale idem Lucilius, apud quem præclare Scævola,

Græcum te, Albuti, quam Romanum atque Sabinum
Municipem Pontî, Titii, Annî, Centurionum,
Pæclarorum hominum ac primorum ſigniferumque,
Maluiſti dici. Græce ergo Prætor Athenis
Id quod maluiſti, te, cum ad me accedi' ſaluto:
Χαῖρε, inquam, Tite: Lictores, turma omni', cohorſq;
Χαῖρε. Hinc hoſtis Muti Albutius, hinc inimicus (1).

(1) Cicero de Finib. lib. 1. c. 3.

"—— Who would refuſe to read a good Subject treated "of with Weight and Beauty, and in choice Phraſes, "but one, who plainly affects the Manners of Greece; "ſuch as Albutius; who, when he was Prætor at "Athens, was ſaluted in Greek by Scævola; a Cir- "cumſtance repreſented with great Elegance and Wit "by the Poet Lucilius, who introduces Scævola addreſſing himſelf thus to Albutius;

So fond of Grecian Cuſtoms was you grown,
That you abjur'd the Citizen of Rome.
Hence, when at Athens, once ('tis known to Fame)
To viſit me, a Prætor there, you came,
Χαῖρε, O Titus! was my Compliment,
And Χαῖρε, Titus! thro' the Circle went.
—— The Jeſt too keen Albutius could not bear,
And Wit divided the once friendly Pair.

In this Paſſage Cicero expreſsly declares, That Albutius was, at that Time, Prætor at Athens, and yet the Verſes of Lucilius teſtify, that Albutius, upon viſiting Scævola, was ſaluted in Greek, and in a bantering manner; which offended him, and made him Scævola's Enemy. Is it not very evident, that, according to Lucilius, it was Scævola, and not Albutius, who was then Prætor? Had Albutius been Prætor, he would have received, not made Viſits; or if he had made any, he would not have met with ſo ſatirical a Reception. It is therefore ſurprizing, take it which way you will, either that Cicero ſhould ſay, that Albutius was Prætor; or, if he ſaid that Scævola was, as it is very likely he did, that the Error, which has crept into the Editions, has never been corrected. It ought to be read, ut à Scævola eſt Prætore ſalutatus Athenis Albutius (2); and not, ut à Scævola eſt Prætor ſalutatus Athenis Albutius. Mr Dacier cites theſe Verſes of Lucilius, and tranſlates them in ſuch a manner, as to declare, that Scævola was Prætor at Athens, when he derided Albutius, who was come to pay his court to him (3). Corradus thinks, that Albutius ſtudied at Athens, and that Scævola paſs'd through it, in his Way to Rhodes, as mentioned in the firſt Book de Oratore (4).

(2) Corradus, in Brutum Ciceronis, pag. 189. would have it corrected thus. Other Critics are of the ſame Opinion. See the Cicero of Mr Gronovius.

(3) Dacier on Horace, Sat. 2. l. 2. pag. 121. Ed.t. Holl.

(4) Corradus ubi ſupra.

Digitized by Google

could not obtain from the Senate the Proceſſion [B] which he deſired, to thank the Gods for his Exploits; that he was accuſed of Bribery and Corruption [C], and baniſhed [D]; and that he went to philoſophize at Athens (b). Scævola's Jeſt ſowed the Seeds of Diſcord between

(b) Cicero Tuſcul 5. cap. 37.

[B] That he could not obtain from the Senate the Proceſſion, &c.] Cicero relates this, in order to deprive the Friends of Gabinius and Piſo of the Conſolation they drew from it. He ſhews them that the Caſes were not parallel: "Hac conſolatione utuntur, "etiam T. Albutio ſupplicationem hunc ordinem de- "negaſſe, quod eſt primum diſſimile: Res in Sar- "dinia cum maſtrucatis latrunculis à Proprætore "una cohorte auxiliaria geſta, & bellum cum maxi- "mis Syriæ gentibus ac tyrannis conſulari exercitu "imperioque confectum. Deinde Albutius, quod à "Senatu petebat, ipſe ſibi in Sardinia ante decreve- "rat: Conſtabat enim, Græcum hominem ac levem "in ipſa provincia quaſi triumphaſſe. Itaque hanc "ejus temeritatem Senatus ſupplicatione denegata no- "tavit (5). —— They comfort themſelves with this "Reflexion, that Titus Albutius was denied a public "Thankſgiving by the Senate; but there is a manifeſt "Diſparity between the two Caſes; firſt, between the "Tranſactions of a Pro-Prætor in Sardinia, with but "one auxiliary Cohort, and a War with the greateſt "Nations and Kings of Syria, carried on and finiſh'd "with a conſular Force. In the next place, Albutius "had decreed himſelf, in Sardinia, the very Thing "he petition'd the Senate for: For it is well "known, that this Mimic of Greece, this Trifler, "celebrated a kind of Triumph in That Province. The "Senate therefore branded this his Preſumption with "the refuſal of a public Thankſgiving." It is thought, that Albutius commanded in Sardinia, in the Year of Rome, 639 (6).

(5) Cicero de Provinc. Conſular.

(6) Father Pronſt in his Commentary in uſum Delphini, on Cicero de Claris Oratoribus.

[C] That he was accuſed of Bribery and Corruption] The following Paſſage puts this paſt diſpute; "Mu- "tius autem Augur, quod pro ſe opus erat, ipſe dice- "bat, ut de pecuniis repetundis contra T. Albutium. "Is oratorum in numero non fuit; juris civilis intel- "ligentia, atque omni prudentiæ genere præſtitit (7). "—— The Augur Mutius (Scævola) ſpoke, in perſon, "to what regarded himſelf; as in the Accuſation of "Bribery and Corruption againſt T. Albutius. He "was not an Orator; but excell'd in a thorough Know- "ledge of the Civil Law." It is not very certain, that Mutius Scævola was the Accuſer: I ſhould chuſe to ſay, that he was only concern'd in the Cauſe, and obliged to clear up, or maintain, ſome Point, which related to it, and was part of the Accuſation againſt the Defendant. He had Eloquence enough for a thing of this nature; but otherwiſe he was no Orator; as plainly appears from the Words I have quoted. Some Critics prefer this reading; Mutius autem Augur, quod opus erat, per ſe ipſe dicebat (8); with all my Heart; this reading will ſtill leave room to conjecture, that Scævola was only accidentally engaged in the Cauſe, and ſpoke but to ſome particular Circumſtance of it. This Conjecture, which I ſhall mention again in the Remark [F], is ſtrongly confirmed by a Reaſon, which Cicero alledg'd againſt the Perſon, who conteſted with him the Right of accuſing Verres. He ſays, That Caius Julius, having a like Diſpute with Cneius Pompeius, in the Affair of Albutius, made uſe of two Arguments; the one was, that Pompey had been Quæſtor to Albutius; the other, that the Inhabitants of Sardinia had deſired him to accuſe Albutius (9). It was adjudg'd, that Pompey ſhould not be the Accuſer. This Office, therefore, remained with Caius Julius. The Reader, if he knew it not before, may learn from hence, by the way, that the Romans did not approve, that a ſuperior Magiſtrate ſhould be accuſed by his Subaltern. "Neque fere unquam venit "in contentionem de accuſando qui Quæſtor fuiſſet, "quin repudiaretur. Itaque neque L. Philoni in "C. Servilium nominis deferendi poteſtas eſt data, "neque M. Aurelio Scauro in L. Flaccum, neque "Cn. Pompejo in T. Albutium: Quorum nemo prop- "ter indignitatem repudiatus eſt, ſed ne libido vio- "landæ neceſſitudinis autoritate judicum comproba- "retur (10). —— No Quæſtor ever demanded the Right "of Accuſation, but he was rejected. Thus L. Philo "was denied the Liberty of accuſing C. Servilius, M. "Aurelius Scaurus of accuſing L. Flaccus, and Cn. "Pompeius of accuſing T. Albutius: None of which "were ſet aſide as unworthy; but, leſt the Authority "of the Judges ſhould ſeem to countenance an Inclina- "tion to violate the Laws of Relation or Friendſhip." Apuleius ſeems to confute what I have endeavoured to prove; for he ſays, in his ſecond Apology, That C. Mutius accus'd A. Albutius. But it is eaſy to anſwer this Objection; for, on the one ſide, the Perſons of whom Apuleius ſpeaks, have different Names from thoſe whom I am here ſpeaking of; and, on the other, what Apuleius ſays of his C. Mutius cannot be applied to our Scævola. It is certain that our Albutius's Name was Titus, and not Aulus, and that our Scævola was called Quintus Mucius; and, as he was Augur, he was often denoted by that Office; Quintus Mucius Scævola Augur. The Accuſer, whom Apuleius ſpeaks of, was a young Man, who then made his firſt Appearance at the Bar. "Neque autem gloriæ causâ me "accuſat, ut M. Antonius Cn. Carbonem, C. Mutius "A. Albutium —— quippe homines eruditiſſimi ju- "venes laudis gratiâ primum hoc rudimentum foren- "ſis operæ ſubibant, ut aliquo inſigni judicio civibus "ſuis noſcerentur, qui mos incipientibus adoleſcenti- "bus ad illuſtrandum ingenii florem apud antiquos "conceſſus, diu exolevit (11). —— He does not accuſe "me, with a view of eſtabliſhing a Reputation, as "M. Antonius did, when he accuſed Cn. Carbo, and "C. Mutius, in his Accuſation of A. Albutius. —— "Theſe were young Gentlemen of promiſing Geniuſes, "who, ambitious of Fame, made theſe firſt Eſſays at the "Bar, in order to diſtinguiſh themſelves by ſome no- "table Cauſe to their Fellow Citizens: A Practice, "which the Ancients allowed in Youth, at their firſt "ſetting out, to diſplay their opening Talents; but is "now diſuſed." This does not agree with our Mutius Scævola: He was Conſul in the Year of Rome 636 (12); he was old, when Cicero was but eighteen Years of Age, that is to ſay, in the Year of Rome 665; and Albutius was not accus'd, till after his return from Sardinia, where he was Pro-Prætor, in the Year 649. See the following Remark. Perhaps the Tranſcribers of Apuleius have by degrees chang'd C. Julius into C. Mutius. It is certain, that C. Julius was the Accuſer of Albutius, and, if Apuleius had nam'd him, he would have been exact in this reſpect; but he cannot be juſtified in what he advances, that all the Accuſers, he names, were young Adventurers, who endeavour'd to ſignalize their ſetting out in the World, by ſome famous Cauſe. He borrows all theſe Examples from Cicero, as the famous Grævius has judiciouſly obſerved (13); why then does he reduce them all to one Species, ſince Cicero ranks them under different Claſſes (14)? Is it not, becauſe they would not have ſerv'd his purpoſe, if they had been divided? This is a fruitful Source of Falſifications in matters of Facts. If they do not ſuit an Author's Purpoſe, as they ſtand, it is but turning and wreſting them as he pleaſes, and they anſwer his Intention.

(11) Apul. Apolog. 2.

(12) Cicero in Lælio, at the beginning.

(13) Grævius, Notis in Ciceron. de Offic. lib. 2. cap. 14.

(14) He alledges his Accuſation againſt Verres as one Example: Therefore he did not pretend to cite only theſe, who had let up for Accuſers in their Youth.

[D] And baniſh'd.] We do not meet with this in the ſame Paſſages of Cicero, where Albutius's Trial is mentioned, and it muſt not be wondred at; for, when an Author does not write the Life of a Man, he ſays no more of him, than what relates to the Subject in hand. When Cicero took ſome notice of Albutius's Trial, he had only in view the Perſons who had ſpoken, or intended to ſpeak, againſt the Accuſed; it was not, therefore, neceſſary, that he ſhould mention the Iſſue of the Cauſe. When he ſpoke of Albutius's Baniſhment, his only aim was to ſhew the good Uſe a Man may make of his Exile; and therefore it was not neceſſary to remark the Cauſe of Albutius's Baniſhment. It is our Buſineſs to weave theſe different Paſſages into one Contexture; by which means we ſhall find, that Albutius, having been accuſed of Corruption, upon the Petition of the Inhabitants of Sardinia, was condemn'd, and baniſh'd. "Albutius, CUM in Sardinia triumphaſſet, Romæ "damnatus eſt (15).—— Albutus, after he had triumph- "ed in Sardinia, was condemn'd at Rome. —— Quid "T. Albutius, nonne animo æquiſſimo Athenis exul "philoſophabatur? Cui tamen illud ipſum non acci- "diſſet, ſi in republica quieſcens Epicuri legibus pa- "ruiſſet (16). —— Did not Titus Albutius philoſo- "phize, with great calmneſs of Mind, at Athens; "which he could not have done, had he ſtaid at home, "and obey'd the Laws of Epicurus." Gaſſendus cited this

(15) Cicero in Pisone.

(16) Id. lib. 5. Tuſculan. cap. 37.

(7) Cicero in Bruto.

(8) Corradus in Brutum Ciceronis, pag. 189. Douza in Lucilium, pag. 99.

(9) Cicero, Divinat. in Verrem.

(10) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

between them [E]. The Dictionaries are not free from Faults upon this Subject [F]. I do this Paſſage very ill; for, inſtead of ſi in republica—— paruiſſet, he gave it, niſi in republica —— paruiſſet (17). They, who require a Proof of my Aſſertion, that Albutius was accuſed, at the Petition of the Inhabitants of Sardinia, may find one in the following Words. "Julius hoc ſecum authoritatis ad accuſandum afferebat, quod, ut hoc tempore nos ab Siculis, ſic tum ille ab Sardis rogatus ad cauſam acceſſerat (18). —— Julius claim'd the Right of Accuſation, upon this Authority, that he undertook the Cauſe, at the Requeſt of the Sardinians, as we do now at the Requeſt of the People of Sicily." To which may be added theſe Words of the 14th Chapter of the 2d Book de Officiis: Aut patrocinio, ut nos pro Siculis, pro Sardis Julius. So we muſt read it with Lambinus; or pro Sardis contra Albutium Julius, with Manutius. Conſult Suetonius (19).

(17) Gaſſend. de Vita Epic. lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 188. in Folio. where the Citations in the Margin are very erroneous.

(18) Cicero, Divin. in Verrem.

(19) Sueton. in Julio, cap. 55.

[E] Scœvola's Jeſt ſow'd the Seeds of Diſcord between them.] This is what Lucilius particularly took notice of in his Satires, Hinc hoſtis Mutî Albutius, hinc inimicus.

A Jeſt divided the once friendly Pair.

A learned Man believes, that they were frequently engaged on contrary Sides, particularly in the Cauſe of Granius, accuſed by Albutius, and defended by Mutius. He ſays, that at leaſt, Mutius was much pleaſed, that Granius was acquitted. He proves this by a Paſſage of Cicero, to which he confeſſes that others give a different Explication; to wit, That Albutius accuſed Mutius of Corruption. "Sæpe inter ſe diſſentirent & contenderent; ut, quum Albutius Granium oppugnabat, & Mutius eum defendebat, certe illo abſoluto gaudebat, ut libro ſecundo de Oratore ſcriptum videbis, quamvis aliter alii verba illa ſint interpretati, & putarint ipſum Scœvolam ab Albutio de pecuniis repetundis accuſatum fuiſſe, quod ut nos de viro tali credamus adduci non poſſumus (20)." I can neither reconcile myſelf to the Senſe, which this Critic rejects, nor to that which he approves. I ſhould rather think Cicero meant, that Scœvola was concern'd in the Proceſs of Corruption, entered againſt Albutius; and ſo far concern'd, that the Juſtification of Albutius was to reſult from His Condemnation. I ſuppoſe, in conſequence of this Conjecture, that Scœvola's Cauſe depended upon that of Albutius, and that from hence it was that he paſs'd for Albutius's Accuſer. He was acquitted, I ſuppoſe, honourably; which occaſioned the Conviction of Albutius. I ſuppoſe farther, that the latter appeal'd to the Crier Granius's Regiſters, in order to convict Scœvola, and that his Proof was judg'd inſufficient. Granius was pleas'd at Scœvola's Acquitment, and was rallied as if he had rejoic'd, that the Judges had no regard to his Books, or his verbal Proceſſes. This I take to be the Import of Cicero's Words, "Bella etiam eſt familiaris reprehenſio quaſi errantis, ut quum objurgavit Albius Granium, quod quum ejus tabulis quiddam Albutio probatum videretur, & valde abſoluto Scœvola gauderet, neque intelligeret contra ſuas tabulas eſſe judicatum (21)." If any other Proof is required of the Enmity between Albutius and Scœvola, I can add, that Lucilius introduced Scœvola jeſting upon Albutius's Style (22). I ſhould be glad to know whence Father Prouſt had it, that Lucilius's Anger againſt our Scœvola proceeded from the Affection he had for Albutius, againſt whom Scœvola had pleaded (23). If Lucilius was Albutius's Friend, he verify'd the Maxim, That a Jeſter prefers his Jeſt to his Friend;

—— dummodo riſum
Excutiat ſibi, non hic cuiquam parcit amico (24);

for we have ſeen how this Satiriſt diverted himſelf at the Expence of Albutius.

(20) Corradus in Brutum Ciceronis, p. 185.

(21) Cicero, lib. 2. de Orat. c. 70.

(22) See below the Remark [G].

(23) Prouſt Comment. in Ciceron. de Orat. lib. 2. n. 72. in uſum Delphini.

(24) Horat. Sat. 4. lib. 1. ver. 34.

[F] The Dictionaries are not free from Faults upon this Subject.] I. Charles Stephens pretends, that Varro ſpoke of our Titus Albutius, as of a Poet, who had wrote Satires after Lucilius's Manner, Luciliano Stylo. But, when we conſult Varro, we find that he ſpeaks of one Lucius Albutius. "Nonne item Lucius Albutius, homo (ut ſcitis) apprimè doctus, cujus Luciliano charactere ſunt libelli, dicebat, in Albano fundum ſuum paſtionibus ſemper vinci à villa, agrum enim minus dena millia reddere, villam plus vicena (25)? —— Did not Lucius Albutius, a very learned Man (as you know) and whoſe Writings are in the Style and Manner of Lucilius, ſay, that the Revenue of his Farm at Alba was ſcarce half that of his Villa?" II. It is not true, that Lucilius laugh'd at Albutius as one, who intermix'd Greek with Latin Words; Charles Stephens did not take the Poet's Meaning; he fancied that the χαῖρε belongs to Albutius; whereas it muſt be referr'd to Scœvola, and his Attendants. Lloyd and Hofman have not corrected theſe two Faults. Obſerve, that I do not pretend to deny, that Albutius intermix'd Greek Phraſes with Latin. III. What Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman ſuppoſe, is very precarious; to wit, That the Father of the Witch Canidia was the ſame Albutius, ſpoken of in the ſecond Satire of the ſecond Book of Horace. Mr Dacier believes they are two Albutius's (26). IV. Theſe three Dictionary-Writers are miſtaken, when they take the Albutius of the ſecond Satire of the ſecond Book of Horace for a downright Miſer. We ſhall ſoon ſee the contrary. V. Moreri is miſtaken, when he fancies, that the Albutius, whom Cibero ſpeaks of, in the beginning of the firſt Book de Finibus, is not the ſame with him, whom he mentions in the firſt Book de Naturâ Deorum, and in the fifth Book of the Tuſculan Queſtions. VI. It is not true that Horace ſays, That there was an Albutius, the moſt covetous of all Men, who was wont to correct his Servants before they executed his Commands, for fear, as he ſaid, he ſhould forget to do it, if they did not exactly obey his Orders. Moreri, who aſcribes all this Diſcourſe to Horace, was deceived by Charles Stephens; though the latter does not expreſsly aſcribe this little Fable to Horace. All that Horace ſays of the Matter is this.

(25) Varro de Re ruſtica, lib. 3. cap. 2.

(26) Dacier's Remarks on Sat. 1. lib. 2. pag. 40.

Mundus erit, qui non offendet ſordidus, atque
In neutram partem cultus miſer: hic neque ſervis,
Albutî ſenis exemplo, dum munia didit,
Sævus erit: neque, ſic ut ſimplex Nævius, unctam
Convivis præbebit aquam (27).

(27) Horat. Sat. 2. lib. 2. ver. 65.

—— He lives well, who keeps the middle State,
And neither leans too much to this, nor that:
Such, when he bid his Slaves do this and this,
Will not be rigid, as Albutius is;
Nor yet, like Nævius, when he makes a Feaſt,
With coſtly Ointment will he waſh his Gueſt.

CREECH.

The meaning is, that true Cleanlineſs lies in the middle between Naſtineſs, and a too ſcrupulous, and over nice Exactneſs (28). If he had ſeen the exceſſive and ſervile Care that is taken by the People in keeping their Houſes clean in ſome Parts of Holland, he would have call'd it a falſe Neatneſs. Albutius and Nævius are produced as two Examples of vicious Extreams; the former as an Inſtance of too much Formality; the latter of too little. Some Interpreters have changed the Characters; and miſtaken Nævius for a Prodigal, and Albutius for a covetous Man (29). But, perhaps, the Words of Horace do not relate to Covetouſneſs and Prodigality; but only rather to Neatneſs and it's contrary. This latter Defect is ſometimes attended with ſuperfluous Expences. Some Perſons are extravagant in Dreſs, in Furniture, and in Eating; and yet have not the Reputation of being well dreſs'd, of diſpoſing the Ornaments of their Apartments to Advantage, or of keeping a good Table. However it be, Albutius here is not an Example of Covetouſneſs. I ſhall conclude, by obſerving, that Albutius's Severity towards his Slaves is not a Circumſtance forg'd by Moreri; he had read it in his Patron (30): but did not know that the Original of it is in an ancient Scholiaſt. "Aſper in exigenda à ſingulis impenſâ ratione caſtigandoque, adeò ut ſervos nonnumquam caſtigaret prius, & cæderet, quam peccaſſent, dicens vereri ſe ne cum peccaſſent cædere tunc ei non vacaret (31). —— Rigid in exacting an Account from every one of their Taſks; to ſuch a Degree, that he ſometimes corrected, and beat his Servants, before they offended, pretending, that he fear'd he ſhould not, then, have an Opportunity of doing it."

(28) See Mr Dacier on this Paſſage.

(29) The old Commentators, Lambinus, Cruquius, &c. d. l.

(30) Charles Stephens.

(31) Vetus Commentator in Horat. d. l.

[G] I

Digitized by Google

I do not believe, that our Titus Albutius is the ſame, whom Horace ſpeaks of [G] in the ſecond Satire of the ſecond Book. We meet with nothing concerning the Phyſician ALBUTIUS, whom Pliny ranks among the moſt Famous (i).

(i) Plin. lib. 29. cap. 1.

[G] I do not believe, that our Albutius is the ſame, whom Horace ſpeaks of.] We have ſeen, that Horace's Albutius was a Man of too great Exactneſs; that he never forgave his Domeſtics an Offence; that he would have one do preciſely this, and another that; and that he deſcended to Particulars, in a pedantic manner. He, whom Lucilius deſcribes, as one who affected ſo much the Greek Politeneſs and Elegancy, that he deſired to paſs for a Greek (32), was cut out to furniſh Horace with the Example he wanted; ſince every Perſon, who affects the Manners of foreign Countries, mixes with them I know not what of forced and extravagant, which turns the thing into Ridicule. See the Behaviour of the Country 'Squires ſo often ridiculed by Moliere, with regard to Faſhions in which they never obſerve a Medium. I can ſcarce believe, that Horace brought upon the Stage the Albutius of Lucilius; nor do I think it ſtrange, that Torrentius believed he did. Mr Dacier chuſes to ſay, That the Albutius, mentioned by Horace, was the Son of him, whom Lucilius ſatirized. I believe, that Albutius's Affectation of what was Greek, related chiefly to the Language. We find, beſides, from a Jeſt of Lucilius, that he was too nice in the diſpoſition of his Words. " Collocationis eſt componere & ſtruere verba, ſic ut " neve aſper eorum concurſus neque hiulcus ſit, ſed " quodammodo coagmentatus & levis. In quo lepide " ſoceri perſona luſit is, qui elegantiſſime id facere " potuit, Lucilius,

Quam lepide lexeis compoſtæ, ut teſſerulæ omnes
Arte, pavimento, atque emblemate vermiculato.

" Quæ cum dixiſſet in Albutium illudens, &c. (33) " —— The Collocatio (or Diſpoſition) conſiſts in " ranging the Words in ſuch a manner, that the Pe- " riod ſhall neither be harſh, nor diſcontinuous, but " as it were cemented and poliſh'd. Lucilius rallied " this careful Style very elegantly, as he was very " capable of doing, in the Perſon of Mutius the Augur (34), comparing it to ſmall Tyles, wrought artificially, upon a Pavement, into variety of emblematical Figures. Applying this in a bantering way to Albutius, &c." The Verſes of Lucilius repreſent a ſort of Style in Writing, which may be called Inlaid, or Moſaic, Work.

(32) See Mr Dacier, ubi ſupra.

(33) Cic. de Orat. lib. 3. cap. 43. See likewiſe his Orator, cap. 43, &c.

(34) We learn from hence, that Lucilius ſometimes introduced him ſpeaking in his Satires.

ALCASAR (Lewis de) a Spaniſh Jeſuit (a), was born at Seville, in the Year 1554. He entered among the Jeſuits in the Year 1569, in ſpite of the Oppoſition of his Family, which had great Poſſeſſions. After teaching Philoſophy, he taught Divinity above Twenty Years at Corduba, and at Seville. He applyed himſelf chiefly to diſcover the Myſteries contained in St John's Revelations, and employed near Twenty Years in this Work (b). The Book he compoſed upon this Subject is one of the beſt, which the Roman Catholics have produced on the Apocalypſe [A]. It is entituled, Veſtigatio Arcani Senſus in Apocalypſi, and has been printed ſeveral times [B]. It is pretended that Grotius borrowed many of his Notions from it (c). The Author maintains, that the Apocalypſe is fully accompliſhed as far as the twentieth Chapter, and finds the Two Witneſſes in it, beſides Elias and Enoch (d). He makes no Scruple of rejecting the Ancient Fathers; and, as his Principal Studies tended only to the Explication of this Book, the other Work, which we have of his, is but a Commentary on the Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, which have ſome relation to St John's Revelation. It was printed, after his Death, with this Title, In eas Veteris Teſtamenti partes quas reſpicit Apocalypſis, nempe Cantica Canticorum, Pſalmos complures, multa Danielis, aliorumque librorum capita, libri V. So that here are Two Volumes in Folio, which are, properly ſpeaking, but a Commentary on the Revelations; but there is an Appendix to each: That of the Firſt Volume is a Treatiſe de Sacris ponderibus & menſuris; and That of the Second a Treatiſe de malis Medicis. Alcaſar died at Seville, the 16th of June, 1613. aged ſixty Years (e). You will find an Examen of ſome of his Apocalyptic Hypotheſes, in a Work, which Mr Heidegger publiſhed at Leyden, in the Year 1687, entituled, Myſterium Babylonis magnæ.

(a) They make him a Portugueſe in the Index of the B ſh p of Meaux's Explication of the Revelations.

(b) Sotuel, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 557.

(c) Biſhop of Meaux's Preface to the Revelations, p. 13. Edit. Holl.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Alegambus had given him 63 Years. Father Sotuel corrected this Miſtake.

(f) In the 1ſt and 2d Diſſertation.

[A] The Book —— is one of the beſt, which the Roman Catholics have produc'd on the Apocalypſe.] This is Nicolas Antonio's Account of it. " Inſignem " poſuit operam in adornando atque illuſtrando Apo- " calypſis libro obſcuriſſimo. Edidit namque lucubra- " tiones ſuas ad ipſam ingenioſas quidem, eruditas, " elaborataſque, ut cenſet Cornelius à Lapide. Sed " quiſnam ſponſor erit, telo eum quamvis acuto & " forti ſcopum tetigiſſe (1). —— He took remarkable " Pains in explaining and illuſtrating that obſcure " Book, The Apocalypſe. For he publiſhed his own " Lucubrations on it, ingenious indeed, and elaborate, " in the Opinion of Cornelius à Lapide. But, as " ſharp and ſtrong as his Arrow may be, who will an- " ſwer for him, that he has hit the Mark?" I am certain there is no Bankrupt, or impriſon'd Debtor, but could find Security much eaſier, than your Interpretors of the Apocalypſe, were there a Tribunal on Earth to aſſeſs thoſe at a large Fine, who ſhould warrant falſe Interpretations. When a Man flatters his Paſſions, where no Danger attends his Opinions, he is apt to be credulous; but it would be in vain to demand ſuch Securities, as Don Nicolas Antonio would require.

(1) Nicol. Anton. Biblioth. Script. Hiſpan. Tom. 2. pag. 14.

[B] Printed ſeveral times.] Father Alegambus mentions only the Edition of Antwerp, by John Keerberge, in 1614, and immediately after ſays, that the other Volume was poſthumous. If the firſt had been printed but in 1614, it would have been Poſthumous, and ſo there would have been no Reaſon to diſtinguiſh the one from the other. We muſt believe then, as Don Nicolas Antonio obſerves, that the firſt was printed at Antwerp, by Keerberge, in the Year 1604. Beſides this Edition, Nicolas Antonio ſpeaks of that of 1619; Antverpiæ apud Nutios, and that of Lyons, 1616. Draudius quotes theſe two laſt Editions, and beſides them one of Antwerp, by Keerberge, in 1611 (2). Father Sotuel, beſides the Edition of 1614, mentions only the two laſt of Nicolas Antonio, and ſays alſo, that the other Volume is poſthumous. So that his Reviſion of Alegambus is not ſo exact as it ought to be.

(2) Draud. Bibliotheca Claſſ. p. 22.

ALCÆUS, a Native of Mitylene in the Iſland of Leſbos, was one of the greateſt Lyric Poets of Antiquity. Some ſay, That he was the Inventor of this Species of Poetry.

—— Age, dic Latinum,
Barbite, carmen,
Leſbio primum modulate civi (a):

(a) Horat. Od. 32. lib. 1. ver. 3.

Begin,

Digitized by Google

Begin, ſweet Harp, a Roman Strain
Thoſe Meaſures and thoſe Airs maintain,
Firſt ſtruck by great Alcæus' noble Hand. CREECH.

He flouriſhed in the forty fourth Olympiad (b) at the ſame time with Sappho, who was likewiſe of Mitylene. The Scandalous Chronicle [A] ſays, that Alcæus, one day, requeſted I know not what Favour of Sappho, but that Sappho, who was not, at that time, in ſo good a Humour as ſhe uſed to be, refuſed him what perhaps ſhe offered him the next day (c). However it be, he had other buſineſs upon his Hands beſides making Verſes: he wanted to give a Proof of his Courage in War, but was not very ſucceſsful in it; for he ran away, and left his Arms behind him, when the Athenians gained a Battel againſt the Leſbians (d). But it was ſome Comfort to him in his Diſgrace, that the Conquerors cauſed his Arms to be hung up in the Temple of Minerva at Sigeum; which they would not have done, with ſuch a Mark of Diſtinction, had they not thought it a glorious Monument of their Victory (e). Alcæus did not forget this Circumſtance in the Verſes he wrote on this unlucky Adventure [B]. His Muſe, whom he employed in the midſt of War, either in Catches, or Love Songs, or in celebrating his Miſtreſs (f), who was ſuch another truſty Support as himſelf [C]: His Muſe, I ſay, was not ſilent on the Defeat of the Leſbians. It is well known, that ſhe was not always ludicrous, and that ſhe could treat the graveſt Subjects with a ſuitable Dignity

(b) Euſeb. in Chronic.

(c) Le Fevre's Lives of the Greek Poets, pag. 27.

(d) Herod. lib. 5. cap. 95.

(e) Id. ibid.

(f) Horace. See his words below in the Remark [C].

[A] The ſcandalous Chronicle.] I have ſet down Mr le Fevre's own Words, and am very much miſtaken, if he fetch'd this little Fable any where elſe than from Ariſtotle's Rhetoric. Ariſtotle cites theſe Words of Alcæus:

Θέλω τὶν εἰπεῖν, ἀλλά μ᾽ κωλύει
Αἰδώς.

And this Anſwer of Sappho,

Αἰ δ᾽ ἦχέ σ᾽ ἐσλῶν ἵμερ☉, ἢ καλῶν,
Καὶ μή τι εἰπεῖν γλῶσσ᾽ ἐκύκα κακον,
Αἰδώς κε τυ σ᾽ οὐχ εἶχεν ὄμμα[ι],
Ἀλλ᾽ ἔλεξες περὶ δικαίω (1).

(1) Ariſtot. Rhetor. lib. 2. cap. 6. Note, that I read, and accent theſe Greek Words, as Scaliger did in Euſeb. p. 85. Edit. 1658.

The Import of the Verſes is This. Alcæus declares he has ſomething to ſay, but that Modeſty forbids him; Sappho replies, that if his Requeſt were honourable, and his Tongue were not prepared to utter ſomething immodeſt, Shame would not have appear'd in his Face, and he would not be at a loſs to make a reaſonable Propoſition.

ALCÆUS.
Fain wou'd I ſpeak, but muſt, thro' Shame, conceal
The Thought my eager Tongue wou'd ſtrait reveal.

SAPPHO.
Were your Requeſt, O Bard, on Honour built,
Your Cheeks wou'd not have worn theſe Marks of Guilt;
But in prompt Words the ready Thought had flown,
And your Heart's honeſt Meaning quickly ſhown.

They, who are qualified to judge of Mr le Fevre's Books, Men, as he ſays in his firſt Journal, whoſe Souls are capable of different Forms, and who underſtand, at half a Word, wherein the Beauty of Thoughts and Expreſſions conſiſts, are ſenſible, that theſe Words of Alcæus are one of thoſe Declarations of Love, which require the critical Minute, and that Sappho apprehended perfectly what he meant. Her Anſwer is wiſe, but it is perhaps too ſerious upon this Suppoſition.

[B] The Verſes he wrote on this unlucky Adventure.] HE, among all the Latin Poets, who moſt reſembles Alcæus, confeſſes, as well as He, in his Poems, that he fled from the Battle, and threw down his Arms, as being uſeleſs in Flight.

Tecum Philippos & celerem fugam
Senſi, relicta non bene parmula,
Quum fracta virtus, & minaces
Turpe ſolum tetigere mento (3).

(3) Horat. Od. 7. lib. 2. ver. 9.

The bloody Wars, Philippi's Field,
Ignobly having loſt my Shield,
With thee I ſaw, ſecure from Wound;
I ſaw the Flight, when Pompey proud
To Cæſar's ſtronger Virtue bow'd,
And baſely bit the bloody Ground.
CREECH.

The ſame Adventure happen'd to Archilochus before Alcæus, and he confeſs'd it publickly (4). Perhaps Horace would not have been ſo ingenuous, if he had not had theſe great Examples before his Eyes. Chabot is miſtaken, when he maintains, that Plutarch refutes Herodotus in relation to Alcæus's Flight (5). Plutarch ſays only, that Herodotus ſuppreſs'd a fine Action of Pittacus, but not the cowardly Behaviour of Alcæus (6).

(4) See Remark [H] of his Article.

(5) Chabot, in Horat. Od. 13. lib. 2.

(6) Plut. de Malign. Herodoti, pag. 858.

[C] His Miſtreſs, who was ſuch another truſty Support as himſelf.] Horace informs us, that Alcæus's Miſtreſs was a Boy, whoſe Name was Lycus, and who had black Eyes and black Hair.

Qui ferox bello; tamen inter arma,
Sive jactatam religarat udo
Littore navim,
Liberum & Muſas, Veneremque, & illi
Semper hærentem puerum canebat,
Et Lycum nigris oculis, nigroque
Crine decorum (7).

(7) Horat. Od. 32. lib. 1. ver. 6.

He fierce in Arms; yet, midſt his Cares,
When Dangers preſs'd, and noiſy Wars,
And ſtain'd his charming Harp with Blood;
Or, when he ſtemm'd the angry Seas,
Or when, arriv'd, he ſat at eaſe,
And laugh'd at all the Fury of the Flood;
The Muſes he in ſounding Verſe,
Wou'd ſing, and Venus' Praiſe rehearſe,
With her th'attending wanton Boy;
Or Lyco's Face, ſurprizing fair,
With coal-black Eyes, and auburn Hair,
By Nature fitted to entice to Joy.
CREECH.

It is apparently He, who had a Mole upon his Finger, which, in the Poet's Eye, was a beautiful Ornament. Nævus in articulo pueri delectat Alcæum, at eſt corporis macula nævus, illi tamen hoc lumen videbatur (8). Cicero ſays, in another place, that, though Alcæus had ſhewed a great deal of Courage, he had filled his Verſes with an exceſſive Pederaſty; Fortis vir in ſua republica cognitus, quæ de juvenum amore ſcripſit Alcæus (9)? He was ſo amorous, that he compares himſelf to a Hog, who, whilſt he eats one Acron, devours another with his Eyes; Juſt ſo, ſays he, when I am enjoying one Girl, I am wiſhing for another. Ὡς τὰν βάλανον τὰν μὲ ἔχει, τὰν δ᾽ ἐπέλαι λαβεῖν. Κάσῶ παῖδα καλὴν τὰν μὲ ἔχει, τὰν δ᾽ ἐπέλαι λαβεῖν. Scipio Gentilis relates this in his Notes on Apuleius's Apology, pag. 65.

(8) Cicero de Natur. Deor. lib. 1.

(9) Id. Tuſcul. Quæſt. 4. cap. 33.

Digitized by Google

Dignity [D]; particularly the fine Common-place Topic againſt Tyrants. Alcæus, in That, followed an Inclination, which was confirmed by his own Adventures, and his perſonal Intereſts; for he had vigorouſly oppoſed the Invaders of the Liberty of his Country, and particularly Pittacus [E], who became an Uſurper, though he was one of the Seven Sages of Greece. He ſet Alcæus at Liberty, whom he had taken Priſoner, ſaying, that it was better to forgive, than to puniſh, an Offence (g). Some ſay, that Alcæus was expelled with many others; but that at length he put himſelf at the head of the Exiled, made War againſt the Tyrants, and drove them out (b). I find in Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus nothing more, than that the Inhabitants of Mitylene elected Pittacus for their General, againſt the Poet Alcæus, and his Adherents, whom they had baniſhed (i). Others ſay, that, having abuſed Pittacus's Clemency, and continuing to cabal, and inveigh againſt him, he had no longer Favour ſhewn him (k); which Ovid expreſſed in theſe Words;

(g) Heraclitus apud Diog. Laërt. in Pittaco, lib. 1. n. 76.

(b) Dacier on the 13th Ode of the 2d Book of Horace.

(i) Dionyſ. Halicarnaſſ. Antiq. Rom. lib. 5. cap. 82.

(k) See Dionyſ. Salvagnius Boëſſius, Comment. in Ibin. pag. 102, 103. Edit. 4to.

Utque lyræ vates fertur periiſſe ſeveræ,
Cauſa ſit exitii dextera læſa tui.

Or may thy Satire too ſevere be found,
And Thine, like poor Alcæus' Muſe, be crown'd
With Vengeance from the Hand it dares to wound.

This is the more probable, as Alcæus paſs'd for one, who did not oppoſe Innovations, as ſuch, but becauſe others had introduced them (l). It is a very common Infirmity. There are only ſome ſmall Fragments of his Poems remaining.

(l) Οὐδ' αὐτὸς καθαρεύων τῶν τοιούτων νεωτερισμῶν. Ne ipſe quidem purus ſtudii ejuſmodi novandarum rerum. Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 425.

[D] His Muſe —— could treat the graveſt Subjects with a ſuitable Dignity.] This made Horace ſay,

Et te ſonantem plenius aureo,
Alcæe, plectro, dura navis,
Dura fugæ mala, dura belli.
Utrumque ſacro digna ſilentio
Mirantur umbræ dicere: ſed magis
Pugnas & exactos tyrannos
Denſum humeris bibit aure vulgus (10).

(10) Horat. Od. 13. lib. 2. ver. 26.

Alcæus too, whoſe golden Strings
With manly Strokes ſound loftier things;
He ſings the Dangers, and the Fears,
Of Flights, of ſailing, and of Wars.
With ſilent Awe the Shades admire
The tuneful Numbers of his Lyre:
The vulgar Ghoſts throng moſt to hear
Of Kings depos'd; of Feats of War
And drink them with a greedy Ear.
CREECH.

Mr Dacier remarks on theſe Words, I. That Alcæus's Style was noble and ſtrong, and that he treated of more lofty Subjects, than Sappho, who ſays of him in Ovid,

Nec plus Alcæus conſors patriæque Lyræque
Laudis habet, quamvis grandius ille ſonet.

--- The wide World reſounds with Sappho's Praiſe.
Tho' great Alcæus more ſublimely ſings,
And ſtrikes with bolder Rage the ſounding Strings,
No leſs Renown attends the moving Lyre,
Which Cupid tunes, and Venus does inſpire.
POPE.

II. That Horace gives him a Golden Plectrum, becauſe he is ſpeaking of that Part of his Works, wherein he deſcribes the Civil Wars, which happened at Mitylene, and the different Factions of the Tyrants Pittacus, Myrſilus, Megalagyrus, the Cleanactides, and others (11), and that thoſe Poems were called Στασιαστικὰ ποιήματα, Poems on Seditions. He cites this Paſſage of Quintilian: "Alcæus in parte operis aureo "plectro merito donatur, qua tyrannos inſectatur. "Multum etiam moribus confert, in eloquendo bre- "vis & magnificus, & diligens, plerumque Homero "ſimilis, ſed in luſus & amores deſcendit, majoribus "tamen aptior (12). —— Alcæus deſerves the Golden "Plectrum, which is given him, in that Part of his "Poems, in which he laſhes Tyrants. In this he is "greatly uſeful to the Manners of Mankind, being "conciſe and majeſtic in his Language, and much like "Homer; However he ſometimes deſcends to Mirth "and Love; tho' naturally qualified for loftier Subjects." Add to this the Epithet of Threatning, given to his Muſe:

(11) See Strabo, lib. 13. p. 424.

(12) Quintil. lib. 10. cap. 1.

----- Alcæi MINACES
Steſichorique graves Camænæ (13).

(13) Horat. Od. 9. l. 4.

[E] Had vigorouſly oppoſed —— Pittacus.] He inveighed againſt him in very vulgar Terms. He called him Splay-Foot, Fat-Guts, &c. as we learn from Suidas under the Word παχέτης, and from Diogenes Laertius in the Life of Pittacus. The Moderation of the latter was very praiſe worthy, and appeared ſo to Valerius Maximus: "Pittaci quoque modera- "tione pectus inſtructum, qui Alcæum poetam & "amaritudine odii & viribusingenii adverſus ſe pertina- "ciſſimè uſum, tyrannidem à civibus delatam adep- "tus, tantummodo quid in opprimendo poſſet admo- "nuit (14). —— Pittacus likewiſe was a Perſon of great "Moderation, who, having ſeized on the kingly Power, "aboliſhed by the People, only ſhewed the Poet Al- "cæus, who employed all the Bitterneſs of Hatred, "and the Force of Wit, in abuſing him, what he could "have done in the way of Oppreſſion."

(14) Valer. Maxim. lib. 4. cap. 1.

ALCÆUS, an Athenian (a), and a Tragic Poet, was the firſt, according to ſome, who compoſed Tragedies. If we may believe Suidas, he is not the ſame with the Comic Poet ALCÆUS, the Fifth of the Ancient Comedy, and the Son of Miccus. It ſeems, he renounced his Country, which was the City of Mitylene, and paſſed for an Athenian (b). He left ten Pieces, whereof one was entituled Paſiphaë: It was that which he produced, when he diſputed with Ariſtophanes in the Fourth Year of the Ninety ſeventh Olympiad (c). Athenæus cites ſome others: It is not certainly known, whether the Endymion, cited by Pollux, belongs to Alcæus the Tragic, or Alcæus the Comic Poet: But it is probable, that the Piece entituled Cælum, was written by the former, ſince Macrobius cites it as a Tragedy (d). I find, in Plutarch, a Poet ALCÆUS, different from all the preceeding (e), and who is perhaps the ſame, whom Porphyry mentioned as a Writer of Satirical Iambic Verſes, and Epi-

(a) Suidas.

(b) Μιτυληναῖος, εἶτα Ἀθηναῖος. Id.

(c) Scholiaſt. Ariſtophanis in Argumento. Pluti.

(d) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 5. c. 22.

(e) Plut. in Flaminio, pag. 373.

Digitized by Google

grams, and who wrote a Poem concerning the Plagiarism of the Historian Ephorus (f). The Alcæus of Plutarch lived in the Hundred and forty fifth Olympiad, in the Year of Rome 555, as appears by the Ode he composed on the Battle, which Philip, King of Macedon lost in Thessaly. This Ode represented Philip as running away faster than a Stag, and magnified the Number of the Slain, in order to chagrin him the more. Nevertheless Plutarch tells us, that Titus Flaminius, who gained the Battel, was more offended at Alcæus's Verses, than Philip; because the Ode mentioned the Ætolians before the Romans, and seemed thereby to give the Ætolians the chief Honour of the Victory. Philip defended himself against Alcæus's Song by another [A]. It must be confess'd, that Plutarch makes the Roman Consul too apt to take Offence. We are told likewise of one ALCÆUS, a Messenian, who lived in the Reign of Vespasian, and in That of Titus (g). Some of his Epigrams are in the Anthologia. I know not which of these Alcæus's suffered a very remarkable kind of Death [B] for his Lewdness. Vossius, at the forty second Page of his Notes on Catullus, believes it was He, who satirized Philip King of Macedon. He takes him for the Comedian by mistake; for the Comic Poet was cotemporary with Aristophanes.

(f) Porphyr. apud Euseb. Præp. Evangel. lib. 20. cap. 3. pag. 467.

(g) Tzetzes in Lycophr. apud Gyrald. de Poët. Dialog 10. pag. 512. Edit. 1696.

[A] Philip defended himself against Alcæus's Song by another.] Plutarch gives us the Substance of it in these two Lines:

Ἄφλοισ᾽ ἢ ἄφυλλ᾽, ὀδοιπόρε, τᾷ ἐπὶ τύτῳ
Ἀλκαίῳ σανὸς πάσσυ᾽ ἁλίσκε᾽ (1).

(1) Plutarch. in Flamin. pag. 373.

This leafless, barkless Trunk, O Passenger, is erected as a Gibbet for Alcæus.

[B] Suffered a very remarkable kind of Death.] Isaac Vossius gives us (2) this Epitaph, taken out of an Anthologia, which was never printed:

Ἀλκαίᾳ τάφ᾽ ἔτ᾽, ὃν ἔκτανεν ἡ πλαθύφυλλ᾽
Τιμωρὸς μοιχῶν γῆς δυσάτηρ ῥάφαν᾽.

(2) Isaac Vossius in Catullum, pag. 42.

This is Alcæus's Tomb, who died by a Radish, the Daughter of the Earth, and Punisher of Adulterers.

The meaning of this is, that Alcæus suffered the Punishment of Adulterers, which consisted in a certain manner of impaling. They thrust one of the largest Radishes they could find up the Adulterer's Fundament, or, for want of Radishes, they made use of a Fish, with a very large Head; as the Scholiast of Juvenal informs us, on these Words of the tenth Satyr,

---- Quosdam Mœchos & * Mugilis intrat.

* The Mugilis is a Sea-Fish with a large Head.

This helps us to understand this Menace of Catullus.

Ah tum te miserum, malique fati,
Quem, attractis pedibus patente porta,
Percurrent raphanique mugilesque (3).

(3) Catull. Epigr. 15. See Parthenius, Muretus, and Achilles Statius on this Passage.

Ah! wretched Thou, and born to luckless Fate,
Who art discovered by the un-shut Gate!
If once, alas! the jealous Husband come,
The Radish, or the Sea-Fish, is thy doom.

Lucian speaks of this sort of Punishment, but does not say whether the Criminal died of it, and differs but little from his Scholiast. They both tell us, that the Adulterer was usually well beat; but the Scholiast says, that the Radish was not thrust up his Fundament, 'till he was ready to expire under the Blows he had received. Lucian insinuates the quite contrary; for the Letcher, of whom he speaks, having been soundly beat, leaped down from the Tiling, and ran away with the Radish sticking in his Posteriors. Καὶ ἅμα τῇ πτώσει ἀλεκτρυὼν διέφυσε ῥαφανίδι ἢ πυγὴν βεβυσμένῳ (4). De tecto desiliens aufugit natibus raphano oppletis. Vossius ought not to have concluded from this Passage of Lucian, that this Punishment was not Mortal; for it is very probable, that if the Patient had not run away, it would have cost him his Life sooner or later. The two Verses, which Vossius cites, and which he takes for the Discourse of an Adulteress, who said to her Godmother, that if the Punishment of the Cross was inflicted upon their Gallants, instead of the Radish, no one would have any thing more to say to them, are a better Poof, than the Words of Lucian (5). The Commentators on Diogenes Laertius rightly apprehended what Menedemus aimed at, when he said to an insolent Adulterer, that the Juice of Radishes was useful: Πρὸς ἢ τὸν δεσυνόμφιον μοιχὸν, ἀγνοεῖς, ἔφη, ὅτι ἓν μόνον κεφάλαιον χυλὸν ἔχει χρησὸν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ῥαφανίδας (6). Audacter exultanti adultero, ignoras, inquit, non modo brassicæ succum inesse utilem, sed & raphano.

(4) Lucian. de morte Peregrini.

(5) Ex Hesychio in βαφανιδωθῆναι. See also the Scholiast of Aristophanes in Nubibus.

(6) Diogen. Laert. lib. 2. n. 128. See Aldobrandinus & Menage.

ALCHABITIUS, an Arabian Astrologer, composed an Introduction to the Knowledge of the Celestial Influences [A]. He wrote likewise concerning The Conjunction of the Planets, and a Treatise of Optics, which was found in a Convent of Germany, and brought to the Author of the Book de Lumine Animæ. His Astrological Works, translated by John of Seville (a), were printed at Venice in 1491, with the Exposition of John of Saxony, and, in 1521, with the Corrections of Antony de Fantis, a Physician of Treviso in Italy (b). It is not well known at what time Alchabitius lived.

(a) Joannes Hispalensis.

(b) Gesner in Bibl. & ex eo Vossius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 354, & 359.

[A] Composed an Introduction to the Knowledge of the Celestial Influences.] The Title of the Book in Gesner and in Simler, is, Isagoge ad magisterium judiciorum astrorum, vel ad scrutanda stellarum magisteria. Vossius gives it in another manner, but which comes to the same Sense; Isagoge ad scrutanda astrorum indicia (1). But Moreri, mistaking one Word for another in Vossius, initia for indicia, gives us an incomprehensible Title; An Introduction to the Knowledge of the beginning of the Stars. It appears that Vossius thought it ought to be indiciorum, where Gesner and Simler have put judiciorum.

(1) Vossius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 399.

Note, That Alchabitius's Treatise of the Conjunction of the Planets was translated into French by Orontius Finæus (2), and that Mr de la Mare, in his Preface to the Works of the four Brothers Guions, quotes the Manuscript Notes of Peter Almatius, Counsellor in the Parliament of Dijon, on Alchabitius de inimicitiis Planetarum. I have this from Mr de la Monnoie.

(2) See du Verdier, pag. 20. of his Bibliotheque.

ALCHINDUS, a Physician and Astrologer among the Arabians. Cardan reckoned him among the Twelve Sublime Geniuses, whom he looked upon as the chief of those, who excelled in the Sciences (a). This is to exceed Albohazen Haly, and Haly Rodoan, who call him the great Astrologer, and even Rasis and Mesue, who style him the most Learned and most Experienced Physician, and even Averroes and Wimpina, who call him the Subtile Philosopher. One may judge of his Parts and Learning by his Two printed Books, De Temporum Mutationibus, and De Gradibus Medicinarum

(a) Card. de Subtilit. lib. 16. Naudé in his Apology for Great Men, pag. 354. amplifies Cardan's Testimony too much.

Digitized by Google

Medicinarum compoſitarnm inveſtigandis. We meet with many others, which are very often cited by Authors, under the Titles, De ratione ſex quantitatum: De quinque eſſentiis: De motu diurno: De vegetabilibus, and De Theoricâ magicarum artium. This laſt Work induced all the Demonographers to repreſent Alchindus as a dangerous Magician. Francis Picus, and Conrad Wimpina, have amply diſcourſed of the Hereſies, Blaſphemies, and Abſurdities, which are to be met with in this Book. The famous John Picus does not ſeem to have judged ſo diſadvantageouſly of him, ſince he ſays, that he knew but Three Men, who had ſo much as touched upon the natural and lawful Magic, to wit, Alchindus, Roger Bacon, and William Biſhop of Paris. What is moſt to be depended upon, according to Gabriel Naudé, from whom I borrow this Article, is I. That this Work is full of Superſtition, and Doctrines quite contrary to our Faith, and ſuch as are to be expected from a Mahometan, who writes his Thoughts with great Freedom. II. That he cannot be accuſed of Magic, ſince he was ſo far from amuſing himſelf with the Theurgic or Goetic Magic, that his ſole View was to account in a natural Way for all that is attributed to good or bad Angels; which Petrus de Apono and Pomponatius have done after him (b). Theſe Philoſophers, in ſupport of their Opinion, maintain that Sublunary things depend wholly on the Heavenly, and that they mutually receive their Properties from each other, and that each receives them from the whole, by means of certain material Effluvia, which, paſſing from the leaſt to the greateſt, are the Cauſe, they tell us, of all the Phænomena in Nature. We cannot certainly ſay when Alchindus lived; but we muſt not place him in the XII Century, ſince Averroes makes mention of him. There is a JAMES ALCHINDUS, whom ſome confound with the ALCHINDUS of this Article [A].

(b) Naudé, ibid. and the following Page.

[A] Whom ſome confound with the Alchindus of this Article.] Wolfgang Juſtus ſays, that James Alkindus lived under Pope Eugenius III. in the Year 1145, cotemporary with Averroes and Avicenna: He ſays, that he was an Arabian Phyſician and Philoſopher (1). The Bibliographers attribute the ſame Books to Alchindus, and to James Alkindus. Voſſius ſeems to diſtinguiſh between them; for, when he ſpeaks of Alchindus, he aſcribes to him only the Treatiſe de ſex quantitatibus, and does not mention his Age; but he places James Alkindus in 1235, and aſcribes to him, among other Books, a Treatiſe de radiis ſtellarum (2). It is, doubtleſs, the ſame Book, which Geſner alledges under the Title de radiis ſtelliciis, and which he believes to be a Work of James Alkindus, though the Name of James is not joined there with that of Alkindus. One would imagine by the Title alone, that it belongs to Him, who was ſuſpected of Magic.

(1) Apud Merklinum in Lindenio renovato.

(2) Voſſius de Scientiis Mathem. pag. 61. & 179.

ALCIATUS (ANDREW) a great Civilian, flouriſhed in the XVI Century. He was the Son of a rich Merchant of Milan [A], and was born in the Month of May, 1492 (a). It is pretended, that his Mother in bringing him forth, felt ſcarce any of the uſual Pains of Labour (b). Having ſtudied Humanity under Janus Parrhaſius, who taught at Milan (c), he applied himſelf to the Civil-Law at Pavia and at Bologna (d), and attended chiefly the Lectures of Jaſon in the former of theſe Univerſities, and thoſe of Charles Ruinus in the latter (e). After he was created Doctor, he betook himſelf to the Bar in the City of Milan (f), till he was called to the Profeſſorſhip of Civil Law by the Univerſity of Avignon [B]. He filled the Chair

(a) See Remark [E].

(b) Panzirol. de Claris Legum Interpret. lib. 2. cap. 169.

(c) Minos in Vita Alciati.

(d) Mr Teiſſier in his Eloges taken from Thuanus, Tom. 1. pag. 3c. quoting Minos, ſays that Alciatus ſtudied at Verona: but I have not found this.

(e) Panzirol. ib.d.

(f) Minos in Vita Alciati.

[A] He was the Son of a rich Merchant of Milan] I have followed Panzirolus, the only Author, whom I have conſulted, who makes him the Son of a Perſon of that Profeſſion: "Ex Joanne pecunioſo ne-"gotiatore Mediolani ferè nullo parentis dolore natus "& educatus fuit (1)." Others make him rather the Son of a Gentleman of an ancient Family; "An-"dreas Alciatus in pago Alciato ſeu Alzato Medio-"lanenſi natus è nobili Alciatorum familia." This is the Opinion of Claudius Minos (2). It cannot be objected to me, that in ſome Countries the quality of Merchant, and That of Gentleman, are not incompatible; for, where they are united, an Hiſtorian ſeldom takes notice of the leaſt, without ſpeaking of the moſt conſiderable. Wherefore, ſince Panzirolus has only mentioned the Occupation of Alciatus's Father, he ſeems not to have been of Claudius Minos's Opinion.

(1) Panzir. de Claris Legum Interpretr. lib. 2. cap. 169. pag. 353.

(2) Minos, in Vita Andreæ Alciati, Ghilini, Lorenzo Craſſo, Paul Freher, Bullart, &c. ſay he deſcended from a noble and ancient Family.

[B] He applied himſelf to the Bar in the City of Milan, till he was called —— by the Univerſity of Avignon] I ſhall be cautious of adopting the Narrative of Panzirolus. That would lead me to aſſert, that Alciatus, having been created Doctor of the Civil and Canon Law, in the Year 1517, being a little above twenty two Years of Age, taught firſt at Pavia, and afterwards at Avignon; Primum itaque Ticini profeſſus, poſtea Avenioni docuit (3). But this would be giving the Lie to Alciatus himſelf, who declares in a Speech, which he made at Pavia, that, when he obtained ſix hundred Crowns Salary, at Avignon, he had never appeared in any Chair. "Avenioni cum nunquam ad eam diem cathedram "aſcendiſſem ſtipendium ſexcentorum mererer (4)." Panzirolus's Account is, moreover, ſuſpected of Falſhood; he betrays an extream Negligence; we find there, that Alciatus was not quite Twenty three Years of Age in 1517, and yet his Epitaph, related by Panzirolus, three Pages after, declares, that he was near Fifty nine Years of Age in the Month of January 1550: he was therefore Twenty five in 1517. What Panzirolus affirms, that Alciatus publiſhed his Paradoxa and his Diſpunctiones about the Year 1517, cannot be cleared up by Claudius Minos; for there never was a Chaos of a Book more abſurd, than the Paſſage where this laſt Writer ſpeaks of the Edition of Alciatus's Paradoxes. "Duodecim poſt "annos, ſays he (5), cum civilis & pontificii ju-"ris profeſſoriis inſignibus donatus eſſet, Paradoxa "& Diſpunctiones in publicum emiſit, opus, ut ipſe "dicit, elaboratum horis ſucciſſivis, & à candidato ad-"huc & tirone. — Twelve Years after, whenhe was in-"veſted with the Profeſſorſhip of Civil and Canon Law, "he publiſhed his Paradoxa and Diſpunctiones, a "Work, according to his own Account, compoſed at his "leiſure Hours, and when he was as yet but a Can-"didate and a Student." It is not eaſily ſeen, to what the Word duodecim relates; for all that goes before is an Account of Alciatus's different Stations, and of his manner of teaching the Civil Law. If theſe Words of Minos imported, that Alciatus publiſhed his Paradoxes twelve Years after his Promotion to the Doctorate, all this Chaos would be reduced into order; but, then, what would become of Panzirolus, who places the Edition of That Book about the time of his taking the Degree of Doctor; that is, about the Year 1517? What would become of Tiraquellus,

(3) Panzir. ubi ſupra.

(4) See the Comment-aries upon his Epiſtles, pag. 612. of the Paris Edit. 1561. in 8vo.

(5) Minos in Vit. Alciati.

Digitized by Google

Chair with ſuch great Abilities, that Francis I. thought him a proper perſon to promote the Study of the Civil-Law in the Univerſity of Bourges. He invited him thither in 1529 [C], and, the Year following, he doubled his Penſion, which was at firſt Six hundred Crowns. Alciatus profeſſed the Civil-Law Five Years at Bourges, and acquired a great Reputation there. But he made uſe of an Artifice to obtain an Increaſe of his Salary [D]. He mixed a great deal of Literature with the Explication of Tiraquellus, who ſays, that Alciatus wrote a conſiderable Work before he was twenty Years of Age (6)? "It is That, which is extant under the Title of Paradoxes of the Civil Law, which he divided into "ſix Books, and dedicated to the Chancellor du Prat, "when he was at Bourges in 1529, twelve Years after having publiſhed it in his own Country, when "he aſſumed the Doctor's Cap; but ſeventeen or "eighteen Years after the Compoſition of it (7)." The Work, which I cite, informs me, that Alciatus's firſt Eſſay was an Explication and Correction of the Greek Terms, which we meet with in the Digeſts; that this Book was publiſhed firſt in Italy, and ſome time after at Strasburg, in 1515. I have read, in a certain Author (8), that the firſt Dedication Alciatus made of his Works, is dated in 1513, and that it is That of the three laſt Books of the Code. What is very certain, is, that he publiſhed his Paradoxes, dedicated to the Chancellor Antony du Prat, about the Year 1517 (9). He publiſhed his Diſpunctiones about the ſame time, dedicated to John Selve, Preſident of the Senate of Milan, and his Prætermiſſa, dedicated to James de Minut, Counſellor in the ſame Senate, and ancient Profeſſor of the Civil Law at Orleans. He was Profeſſor at Avignon in the Year 1521; for he ſays, in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Treatiſe de Verborum ſignificatione, dated at Bourges the firſt of May, 1529, that he had dedicated it to his Scholars eight Years before.

I have been informed, that Budæus, in a Letter written to Chriſtopher Longueil, in the Month of February 1520 (10), mentions a Viſit, which Alciatus made him ſome time before at Avignon. Mr de la Monnoie communicated to me this Particular. I add, that ſome Letters of our Alciatus were publiſhed at Utrecht, which ſhew, that he was Profeſſor of the Civil Law at Avignon in the Year 1518 (11); that his Salary amounted to Five hundred Crowns, and that he had Seven hundred Auditors. Two Years after he wrote, that they allowed him Six hundred Crowns, beſides other Gratuities; and that his Auditory was compoſed of above Eight hundred Perſons, among whom there were ſome Prelates, Abbots, and Counts (12). He left That Profeſſorſhip, and returned to Milan, about the end of October 1522. Among other things, which induced him to this Retreat, the principal was, that his Salary was not punctually paid him, the City of Avignon being in debt by Reaſon of the Contagious Diſtemper. Beſides, they gave him to underſtand, that if the Plague returned, he muſt conſent to a Diminution of his Salary. But he rejected the Condition (13). He applied himſelf to the Bar in his own Country, and found this Employment more advantageous than he expected (14). He ſtayed in Italy, 'till he accepted the Profeſſorſhip which was offered him in the Univerſity of Bourges (15).

[C] He invited him thither in 1529.] I chooſe to follow Minos and Mr Catherinot (16), rather than Panzirolus. The latter anticipates this Invitation by by an whole Year. "Deinde anno 1528, Bituriges, "quo magna ſtudioſorum multitudo ad ejus famam "confluxit, amplo 1200 aureorum ſtipendio à Rege "Franciſco eſt conductus (17). —— At length, in "the Year 1528, he was retained at Bourges by "King Francis, with a Salary of Twelve thouſand "Crowns; whither the Fame of his Abilities drew "from all Parts a great Number of Students." I do not object to Panzirolus, that his Penſion was at firſt but Eighteen hundred Livres, and that, being doubled, the next Year, it amounted to the Sum which he has laid down: I have greater Inſtances of Inaccuracy to charge him with. He ſays, I. That Alciatus lived but few Years in France; becauſe Francis Maria, Duke of Milan, ordered him to return, and threatned him with the Confiſcation of all his Effects in caſe of Diſobedience. II. That Alciatus, being returned home, taught for ſome Years at Pavia; 'till he retired to Bologne in 1532, on account of the Wars, It is certain, that Alciatus lived five Years at Bourges: This appears by the Verſes, he wrote on his leaving it.

Urbs Biturix, invitus amans te deſero amantem,
Quinque per æſtates terra habitata mihi (18).

And therefore, ſince, according to Panzirolus, he was invited thither in the Year 1528, he could not have left it till 1533. How could he then have taught for ſome Years at Pavia, after his Removal from Bourges, and retire afterwards to Bologne, in the Year 1532? His Diſſertation concerning Duels, dedicated to Francis I, is dated from Avignon the firſt of March, 1529. The Preface to his Paradoxes is dated from Bourges the Twenty fourth of Auguſt 1529. This is deciſive againſt Panzirolus. There remain yet two Errors to be cenſured, one of Moreri, the other of Paul Freherus. The former ſays, that the Liberality of Francis I. drew Alciatus into France, where he taught at Avignon; according to the latter, Alciatus went to teach in That City, immediately upon his leaving Parrhaſius's School (19). It is an abſurd Miſtake to ſay, that the Liberality of a King of France invited a Profeſſor into another Prince's Country; and who does not know, that when Alciatus left Parrhaſius's School, he went to ſtudy at Pavia and at Bologne, and that he took his Doctor's Degree in 1517, and that he publiſhed ſome Books before he was Profeſſor at Avignon?

[D] He made uſe of an Artifice to obtain an Increaſe of his Salary.] He contrived the matter ſo by his Intrigues, that a Profeſſorſhip was offered him by the Univerſity of Padua. Voſſius, who informs me of this, was afraid, leſt by deferring to return an Anſwer to the Offer, which was made him of a Profeſſorſhip in the Univerſity of Cambridge, he ſhould be ſuſpected of the ſame Artifice; for, adds he, it is a piece of Cunning generally put in Practice: "Quis, rerum mearum ignarus, aliud ſibi perſuadere "poſſit, quam diutinam hanc in reſpondendo ceſſa"tionem inde duntaxat, aut potiſſimum ſaltem, pro"manare, ut Vocatione Anglicana aliquid mihi apud "Batavos lucelli acquiram? Scimus id pleriſque mo"ris eſſe. Nec notam hanc effugit ſummus Juriſ"conſultus, Andreas Alciatus, cùm Biturigibus Pa"tavium vocaretur. Et ille quidem callide hoc ege"rat ipſe, ut vocaretur. Mihi, ut ſcis, ne per ſom"nium tale quid cogitanti ſponte apud vos profeſſio "oblata eſt. Ille item, immane quantum aucto ſti"pendio, apud Biturigas remanſit. Ego, uti hoc "nunquam egi, ita nec quicquam acceſſionis (quam "quidem ſcio mihi minimè invideres) conſequar re"manendo, niſi ſimul acceſſio fiat fortè novi la"boris (20). —— Who, that is unacquainted "with the State of my Affairs, would put any other "Conſtruction on my long Neglect in returning an "Anſwer, than that I hoped this Invitation from England might be improved to my Advantage in Holland? Nor was the great Civilian, Andrew Alciatus, clear from this Suſpicion, when he was "invited from Bourges to Pavia. He indeed art"fully contrived this Invitation. As for myſelf, "you know, that I never ſo much as dreamt of the "Profeſſorſhip in your Univerſity, 'till it was offered "me. He, likewiſe, continued at Bourges, upon his "Stipend being greatly augmented. I, as I never "acted in this manner, ſo I ſhall receive no addi"tional Advantage (which I am ſure you would not "envy me) by continuing here; unleſs at the ſame "time an additional Service be required of me." I ſhould feel ſome Remorſe of Conſcience, did I not acknowledge, that Mr de la Monnoie acquainted me with this Paſſage of Voſſius. Beſides which, He has imparted to me the following Particulars. "It ap"pears, by the twelfth Letter of the ſecond Book "of Sadolet's Letters, that Alciatus, from the firſt "Year of his Abode at Bourges, had, or pretended "to have, a Deſign to profeſs the Law at Bologne. "Two

(6) Tiraq. de Jur. Primigen. pag. 158. apud Baillet, Enfans celebres, p. 126. where you will find the following Authors quoted, viz. Ghilin, Theatr. Literat. pag. 1. & Picinel. Athen. Milan. pag. 26, 28.

(7) Baillet Enfans Celebres, pag. 126.

(8) Paſquier's Recherches, lib. 9. cap. 39. pag. 901.

(9) See the Preface to the Paradoxes, prefix'd to the Edition of 1529.

(10) Beginning the Year in January.

(11) Epiſt. Gudii, &c. pag. 76.

(12) Ibid. pag. 78.

(13) Ibid. pag. 96.

(14) Ibid.

(15) Ibid. pag. 106.

(16) He ſays, in the firſt Page of his Hiſtory of Calviniſm in Berri, that Alciatus read his firſt Lecture at Bourges, on Monday, Apr. 19. 1529.

(17) Panzir. de claris Legum Interpr. lib. 2. cap. 169.

(18) See Minos, ubi ſupra.

(19) Freher. in Theatr. Viror. illuſt. pag. 826.

(20) Voſſius Epiſt. 48. pag. 91, 92. It is dated from Leyden, June 1. 1625.

Digitized by Google

of the Laws, and happily baniſhed That barbarous Language, which had prevailed, till then, in the Lectures and Writings of the Civilians. Thuanus extols him highly for This: I ſay, Thuanus, who, otherwiſe, was but little acquainted with his Hiſtory [E]. This Profeſſor's Extemporary Harangue to Francis I, who came into his Auditory [F], pleaſed that Monarch much. Francis Sforza, Duke of Milan, thought himſelf obliged to recal into his Country ſo eminent a Man, and compaſſed his Deſign by giving him the Dignity of a Senator, beſides a great Salary. Alciatus, therefore, went to teach the Civil-Law at Pavia; but a little after he came to the Univerſity of Bologne (g), where he reſided Four Years. Afterwards he returned to Pavia, from whence he went to Ferrara (b), being invited thither by Duke Hercules d'Eſt, who endeavoured to make that Univerſity famous. It recovered it's Splendor under a Profeſſor, who was ſo much followed; but, at the end of Four Years, Alciatus left it, to return to Pavia, where at laſt he met with the true Remedy for his inconſtant

(g) He made his Inaugural Speech there on the 3d of Nov. 1537.

(b) He made his Inaugural Speech there in 1543.

" Two Italian Letters of Bembus, one of the ſeventh " of July, 1533, and the other of the Twenty third " of February, 1533, contain many Particulars concerning the Deſign, which the Republic of Venice " had of inviting Alciatus to Padua (21). The Pro" feſſors of That Univerſity were in terrible Appre" henſions about it; and among others, Franceſchin " da Corte, in Latin, Franciſcus Curtius; who, to " prevent the coming of ſuch a Colleague, ſpread a " Report, That the Duke of Milan, Francis Sforza, " erroneouſly called Francis Maria by Panzirolus, " had forbad him, on very ſevere Penalties, to leave " the Profeſſorſhip of Pavia, Sotto pena di confiſca" tione, Upon pain of Confiſcation of his Goods." To clear this Account from all Intricacy, we muſt, I think, ſuppoſe, that the Twenty third of February, 1533, in the Letter of Peter Bembus, is of the Year 1534, beginning the Year in the Month of January; for, without, it we cannot be perſuaded, that Alciatus was at Pavia, when that Letter was dated; He, who had profeſſed five Years at Bourges, and who did not begin to profeſs there 'till 1529. In conſulting the Latin Letters of the ſame Bembus, I find, that he writ to our Alciatus on the fifteenth of July, 1532, to exhort him to come and take Poſſeſſion of the Profeſſorſhip, which was offered him in the Univerſity of Padua. He removes the Objection which kept him in ſuſpence, which was, that the Republic of Venice would not promiſe him the ſame Species of Crowns, which he demanded (22). Bembus tells him, that he ought not to diſengage himſelf from his Promiſe on ſo trivial an Account, and if you come, ſays he, I will undertake, that you ſhall have in a very little time all the Money, which you deſire, and other Advantages too. He wrote to him again on the Twenty firſt of April, 1534. Alciatus was then at Pavia, but diſcontented. Bembus declares, that, as for his Part, he was very well ſatisfy'd with his Excuſes; but that the Curators of the Univerſity of Padua were not; and that they were perſuaded, that the Requeſt which he had made of the Profeſſorſhip of Civil Law among them, was grounded on a Motive of Intereſt; that is to ſay, That Alciatus would not have deſired the Profeſſorſhip in the Univerſity of Padua, but in order to make uſe of the Offer of this Poſt to procure a larger Salary from the Duke of Milan. " Utinam tam æqui in te Judices præfecti ludi Pa" tavini eſſent, neque ſibi perſuaſiſſimum haberent, " te propterea profitendi Jus Civile hac in urbe locum " poſtulaviſſe, ut eo tradito apud Ducem iſtum tuum " utercre, ad largius atque uberius ab eo ſtipendium " promerendum (23)."

(21) Theſe Letters of Bembus, are in the 645*th and* 646*th Pages of the Collection, entitled*, Lettere di XIII. Huomini illuſtri, printed at Venice, 1560. in 8vo. See likewiſe the 29*th and* 30*th Letter of the* 16*th Book of* Bembus.

(22) Cum tu nummos aureos ſolares petieris, illa tibi tantum aureos eſt pollicita. Pet. Bembus Epiſt. 20. lib. 6. pag. 634.

(23) Idem, Epiſt. 30. lib. 6. pag. 635.

Alciatus had before made uſe of the ſame Artifice, at Avignon. He employed one of his Friends (24) to contrive the Matter ſo, that he might be invited to Bologne or Padua. He had no Intention of accepting theſe Offers; but he hoped to procure a better Salary by this Means. This appears from ſome Letters he wrote at that Time, and which were printed at Utrecht in the Year 1697. " Si mille mihi aurei " Ferrariæ conſtituerentur, eo non irem: Et ſatis " non poſſum mirari, qui tibi in mentem venerit, " hanc conventionem cum eo tractare; cum de Pa" tavino, aut Bononienſi Gymnaſio ſolum tibi man" data dederim: Quamvis nec mihi diſpliceant tua " iſta conſilia: Non quod in has Academias ven" turus ſim, ſed quod Avenionenſes, ſi ſciverint ab " aliis quoque me ſollicitari, ne eos deſeram time" bunt, & augebunt ſtipendia. Quare cum eis po" tiſſimum velim hæc diſſemines, quos conjectabis ido" neos eſſe; ut in Avenionenſem Academiam literas " harum rerum indices dent (25). —— If they would " ſettle upon me a thouſand Crowns a Year at Ferrara, " I would not go thither; and I cannot enough won" der how you could think of entring into ſuch a Ne" gotiation, ſince I commiſſioned you to treat only con" cerning the Bolognian and Pavian Schools: however " I am not diſpleaſed with your Deſigns; not that I " have any Thoughts of ever coming into thoſe Uni" verſities, but becauſe the People of Avignon, when " they find I am courted by others, will fear I " ſhould deſert them; to prevent which they will aug" ment my Stipend. Wherefore I deſire you would " impart this Deſign to thoſe, whom you ſhall judge " proper for it, that they may ſend Letters to the " Univerſity of Avignon, in Confirmation of theſe " Matters." His Friend caballed at Padua, to induce the German Scholars to deſire the Republic of Venice to ſend for Alciatus (26). The latter deſired him not to trouble himſelf about it, ſince he was engaged for two Years in the City of Avignon. His Letter is dated the Twenty ſixth of September, 1520. What Meanneſs! What ſordid Love of Gain!

(24) Call'd Franciſcus Calvus.

(25) Epiſt. Gudii, &c. pag. 79.

(26) Ibid. pag. 78.

[E] Thuanus —— who, otherwiſe, was but little acquainted with his Hiſtory] He ſuppoſes, I. That Alciatus, after having taught a long time at Bourges, was Profeſſor at Avignon; but the contrary is true. II. That Alciatus left France, in the decline of his Age; whereas he was but forty Years of Age, or thereabouts. III. That Alciatus, being return'd into Italy, read firſt at Bologna, and afterwards at Ferrara. He read at Pavia, before he went to Bologna. IV. That Alciatus died in the Year 1551; but his Epitaph ſays it was on the 12th of January, 1550. It is true, ſome Authors report, That Alciatus's Epitaph mentions Fifty eight Years, eight Months, and four Days, which would prove that he died the 12th of January, 1551; but others report, that it gives him but Fifty ſeven Years, eight Months, and four Days (27). Thuanus's Miſtake is not ſo conſiderable, as that of Forſter, adopted by Mr Doujat (28), and that of Imperialis. The latter places the Death of Alciatus in the Year 1559 (29). Forſter places it in the Year 1548 (30). But let us particularly remark the Error of the Aſtrologer, who, having ſaid that Alciatus died at Ferrara, in the Year 1546, adds, that it was of a Wound from Saturn and the Sun. " Andreas Alcia" tus didicit literas Græcas à Pomponio Gaurico Pa" tavii —— obiit Ferrariæ anno 1546, ex Saturno " in oppoſitione horoſcopi, & Sole Martis tetragono " ſauciato. In converſione annua non ſolum directi" ones Aphetarum, ſed annuæ converſiones penitus " commaculatæ interimunt (31)." This is what Luke Gauric notes, under the Figure of the Nativity of our Civilian. He ſuppoſes him to be born, the eighth of May, 1492, at one Hour, and thirty Minutes, after Sun-riſing. Is not this a pretty Art? It has Rules, according to which a Man ought to die ſeveral Years before his Death. I have ſeen one of Alciatus's Letters, dated the third of September, 1530, wherein he ſays, that he is juſt entered upon his Thirty ſeventh Year, or that he is but little more than Thirty ſeven Years of Age. Vix trigeſimum & ſeptimum annum attingenti (32). This would prove that he was born in 1494, or 1493.

Inconſiſtencies in relation to the Age of Alciatus.

(27) Ghilini Teatro de Literati, parte 1. pag. 11.

(28) Doujat. Prænot. Canon. p. 619.

(29) Imper. in Muſæo Hiſtor. pag. 52.

(30) Forſter. Hiſtor. Juris Civil. lib. 3. cap. 41. pag. 542.

(31) Lucas Gauricus in Schematib. fol. 73.

(32) Epiſt. Gudii, &c. pag. 106.

[F] This Profeſſor's extemporary Harangue to Francis I. who came into his Auditory.] Minos reports this Fact: Panzirolus ſays nothing of it; but, inſtead of it, tells us, That the Dauphin, having aſſiſted at one of Alciatus's Lectures, preſented him with a Medal, to the value of Four hundred Crowns. It was

Digitized by Google

ſtant Humour [G], I mean Death, on the 12th Day of January, 1550 (i). He was not full Fifty eight Years of Age. Paul III. gave him an honourable Reception, in his Paſſage through Ferrara, and offered to advance him to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities. Alciatus was contented with that of Prothonotary, and would not renounce the Profeſſion of the Civil-Law [H]. The Emperor created him a Count Palatine, and a Senator. Philip, King of Spain (§*), paſſing through Pavia, preſented him with a Gold Chain. It is thought that Alciatus died of a Surfeit, which he got by over eating himſelf (k); for he was not only very covetous, but likewiſe a greater Eater [I]. He was the ſame, which the Inhabitants had given the Dauphin. I have already ſaid, on other Occaſions, That, when a Fact of this nature is variouſly reported by Authors, or does not appear in moſt of thoſe, who write a Perſon's Elogy, it cannot be depended upon. Yet this Fact ought to be excepted out of this Rule; for we find among Alciatus's Works (33) the Diſcourſe, which he made when Francis I. aſſiſted at one of his Lectures.

(i) Panzir. de Claris Leg. Interp. lib. 2. cap. 16o. See concerning the Time of his Death, the Remark [E] towards the End.

(k) Ex cibo, quem largiorem ſumere conſueverat, morbum contraxit. Id. ib.

(33) Tom. 4. pag. 870. Edit. of Francfort 1617.

[G] The true Remedy for his inconſtant Humour.] If I had taken Advantage of all that I have met with in Authors, concerning the ſeveral Stations of Alciatus, I ſhould have repreſented him as more inconſtant, than he really was. It is ſufficient, that he went from Avignon to Bourges, from Bourges to Pavia, from Pavia to Bologne, from Bologne to Pavia, from Pavia to Ferrara, from Ferrara to Pavia, and all this before ſixty Years of Age. Thevet ſo ill diſpoſes his Account of this learned Civilian, that any Reader would infer from it, that Alciatus returned into France, after the Duke of Milan had recall'd him from Bourges. We have ſeen that Panzirolus makes him go from Pavia to Avignon. Moreri ſends him from Bourges to Orleans, and from Orleans to Padua. Mr Teiſſier makes him Profeſſor at Milan (34). He cites Paſquier, in the Twenty ninth Chapter of the ninth Book of his Recherches: He ſhould have cited the Thirty ninth Chapter; but Milan is not to be found there. Theſe are Paſquier's Words: "I heard "three or four of Alciatus's Lectures in the City of "Pavia. Coming from thence to Bologne, where "Marianus Socinus, the Nephew of Bartholomew, "read Lectures, I found that the Italian Scholars, "in general, had a greater Eſteem for him, than for "the other. Nay, thoſe, who had any Suit in Law, "choſe rather to make uſe of Socinus, becauſe, ſaid "they, he never loſt any time in the ſtudy of hu"man Learning, as Alciatus did." Mr Teiſſier, citing this Paſſage, ſays, That Bartholomew Socinus taught the Civil Law at Bologne, when Alciatus was Profeſſor at Milan. Theſe two Facts are not to be found in Paſquier. If I would have made a general Collection of all theſe Circumſtances, what a Weather-cock ſhould I have made of our fickle Profeſſor? but I ſhould have been a thouſand times more to blame, than the Authors of theſe Falſhoods, if I had made uſe of them to his prejudice. He was not ignorant, that he was cenſured for his frequent Changes of Univerſities, and, among other Reaſons, he endeavour'd to juſtify himſelf by this, that no one finds fault with the Sun, for running round the Earth, to animate all things by it's Heat, and it's Beams: He added, That when any one praiſes the fixed Stars, he does not deſign to condemn the Planets (35). There was an inſufferable Vanity in theſe Compariſons; it was to conſider himſelf as a Source of Light, which was to run ſucceſſively through all the Republic of Letters, that the Darkneſs of Ignorance might be expell'd from every Place by his Preſence. But let us allow him his Compariſon, and tell him, that he ought to have reſembled Copernicus's Sun, have kept his Center, and illuminated from thence all who approach'd him. It is much more honourable for a Philoſopher to be viſited by a great Number of Scholars, in the place of his Reſidence, as Abelard was (36), than to ramble up and down in ſearch of Scholars. And, doubtleſs, if the love of Glory alone poſſeſſes a Man's Soul, without being mix'd with the love of Gain, or a fantaſtical Humour of being ſoon diſguſted with the ſame Things, we ſhould not ſee ſo many Perſons ſtruck with Alciatus's Diſtemper. The Idea of true Glory would inſpire a Man with a Reſolution not to wander in ſearch of great Theatres of Action, but to convert the Place of his own Reſidence into ſuch a Theatre, how ſmall ſoever it be: He would remember Ageſilaus's Anſwer. He happened to be placed, on a Day of Ceremony, beneath his Rank; Εὖγε, ſays he, δεῖξω γάρ ὅτι οὐκ οἱ τόποι τὸς ἄνδρας ἐντίμους, ἀλλ' οἱ ἄνδρες τὸς τόπους ἐπιδεικνύουσι· —— I am ſatisfy'd; for I will ſhew that a Man does not receive Honour from his Place, but his Place from him (37). He would ſee that it is much more glorious to do a thing gratis, than for Reward, and that the nearer a Man comes to a free Gift, that is, to a Profeſſion without a Salary, the nearer he approaches to what is great and noble; whereas he recedes from it, and becomes a Man of a mean and mercenary Spirit, in proportion as he increaſes the Wages, which he extorts. This is to reduce the Profeſſion of Learning to the Nature of the moſt Mechanic Arts. A Shoemaker, or a Hatter, who will be better paid for his Work than another, gains the Reputation of an excellent Workman by it. To pretend, that an Encreaſe of your Salary is a Proof that you are eſteem'd the greater Preacher, or more learned Profeſſor; is it not to judge of your Trade, as we judge of that of a Shoemaker, or a Hatter? This is the direct way to cry down Learning, and to draw Contempt upon thoſe, who profeſs it; for a falſe Taſte of Glory, join'd with Covetouſneſs, generally occaſions the Fault, for which Alciatus was blamed; I mean the violent Deſire of making the Tour of all the Univerſities; which I have already taken notice of in another Place (38). Surely this is to ſet up one's Learning to public Sale, and to proclaim, That he who bids moſt ſhall have it.

(37) Plut. in Apophth. Lacon. init. pag. 208.

A Reflexion on the Rambling Humour of ſome Profeſſors.

[H] And would not renounce the Profeſſion of the Civil Law.] He congratulates himſelf upon it, in a Letter which he wrote to Paul Jovius, whom Pope Paul III. had amus'd a long time with deceitful Promiſes. I am very glad, ſays he, that I did not ſuffer myſelf to be deceived by that Pontiff, who invited me to go to Rome, upon the Promiſe of great Rewards. Upon this he ſet forth the ſolid Advantages of his Profeſſion, in oppoſition to the imaginary Hopes of a Cardinalſhip. "Mihi gratulor, quod ab eo (inveterati "aſtus ſene Principe) me decipi non ſim paſſus, quum "me, uti ſcis, magnis propoſitis præmiis Ticino, "Ferraria, atque Bononia, in Urbem accerſeret. "Tum enim ex jure meo magis cautus fui, quam tu "ex ſapientiæ præceptis prudens Philoſophus. Cur "enim pro inani aut incerta ſpe purpuræ, hos tantos "primi ſuggeſtus honores relinquerem, opimis præ"ſertim firmatus ſtipendiis? Cur has tantas contem"nerem circumfuſæ juventutis ſalutationes? & hanc "denique tot conſultoribus januam pulſantibus exiſti"mationem magno lucro, & non obſcura cum laude "quæſitam, ineptè ſtulteque deſererem (39)? —— "For why ſhould I quit theſe firſt-rate Honours, at"tended too with great Advantages, for the vain and"uncertain Hopes of the Purple? Why ſhould I de"ſpiſe that awful Reſpect, which is paid me by the"ſurrounding Crowd of Students? and why ſhould I"fooliſhly forſake the great Reputation I acquire, not"without conſiderable Gain, from ſuch a Number of"Perſons, who are continually knocking at my Door to"conſult me?" Note, by the by, that this confutes thoſe who ſay, that he refus'd a Cardinal's Hat, which the Pope offer'd him (40). This Story is the fruit of an Hyperbole, the darling Figure of many People. The whole Truth of the Matter is this, That the Pope, the better to perſuade Andrew Alciatus to come to Rome, gave him to underſtand that it would be a means to open his Way to the Sacred College. Such a Diſcourſe is very far from the Offer of a Cardinal's Cap.

(38) In the Remark [A], of the Article ACCARISI.

(39) Alciat. Epiſt. ad Paulum Jovium. It is prefix'd to the firſt Volume of Jovius's Hiſtories, and dated from Pavia, the ſeventh of October, 1549.

(40) Teiſſier. Elog. Tom. 2. pag. 304. Edit. 1683. & Tom. 1. pag. 31. Edit. 1696.

(§*) [Alciatus, to whom it is ſaid that Philip made a Preſent of a Gold Chain, died in 1550. Now this Prince came to the Crown but upon the Abdication of the Emperor his Brother. If Mr BAYLE had recollected this, he would have ſaid the Prince of Spain, and not the King of Spain. This little Piece of Inadvertency is properly Panzirolus's, whom Mr BAYLE only copies here. Rem. Crit.]

(3) See the Speech he pronounced at Ferrara, in 1543. Oper. Tom. 4. pag. 812. and Claud. Minos in his Life.

(35) See Remark [A] of the Article FOULQUES.

[I] For he was not only very covetous, but likewiſe a great Eater.] Panzirolus expreſſes himſelf thus;

Avarior

Digitized by Google

He was a corpulent and tall Man (l). After the Death of his Mother, who was much advanced in Years, he had a mind to lay out his Eſtate in founding a College; but, having received an Affront from ſome inſolent Scholars, he gave over that Deſign, and made choice of Francis ALCIATUS for his Heir, a Young Man of great Hopes, whom he had educated (m), though he was not nearly related to him (n). This Francis Alciatus ſucceeded to Andrew's Eſtate and Profeſſorſhip, and made himſelf famous at Pavia by his Lectures in Civil-Law. Cardinal Borromeo, who had been his Diſciple, invited him to Rome, and was ſo good a Patron to him, that he obtained for him, from Pope Pius V, a Biſhopric, the Office of a Datary, and a Cardinal's Hat (o). There are ſome Treatiſes of Civil-Law wrote by this Cardinal Alciatus, who died at Rome in the Month of April, 1580, being a little above fifty Years of Age. See Nicius Erythræus, in the Forty ſeventh Chapter of the ſecond Pinacotheca. Thoſe, who ſay that our Alciatus lived always a ſingle Life, are miſtaken [K]. He ſet up for an Author betimes, as I have obſerved in the Remark [B]. He publiſhed many Law Books, and ſome Notes on Tacitus, whoſe Latinity appeared to him very harſh [L]. Muretus, in one of his Speeches, very much inveighs againſt this Delicacy (p). Alciatus was not ſenſible of this; for he was already dead; but other Critics, particularly Floridus Sabinus, who attacked him in his Life-time, made him feel their Teeth and Nails (q). His Emblems were very much eſteemed, and ſome Learned Perſons have adorned them with Commentaries [M]. His Poems were

(l) Vir fuit corpulentus, proceræ ſtaturæ. Panzir. de Clar. Leg. Interpr. lib. 2. cap. 169. Mr Teiſſier, Tom. 2. p. 304. of his Elogies, ſays he was a Man of a middle Stature.

(m) It is not therefore, true that there was at Naples, in 1688. a Grandſon of the Great Alciatus. See Dr Burnet's Travels into Italy. If there was, he muſt have been very old.

(n) Moreri ſays, he was his Nephew.

(o) Panzir. ubi ſupra.

(p) 'Tis the 11*th of the* 2*d Tome. See alſo* Bodin, Meth. Hiſtor. cap. 4. pag. 85.

(q) Cl. Minos in Vita Alciati.

Avarior habitus eſt, & cibi avidior. He adds, That Alciatus, having once received Three hundred Crowns for his Advice, and hearing, that Marianus Socinus had received a larger Fee upon the ſame Occaſion, ſaid, they had found a better Merchant, but not a better Lawyer. Take this by the way, for a Confirmation of what has been quoted out of Paſquier (41). "Here are more Tidings of Alciatus's Covetouſneſs. He is taxed with two Things. The "one is, That his Method favours of I know not "what Oſtentation of the Doctor. —— The other "is, that Covetouſneſs had ſo far got the Aſcendant "over him, that his Tongue, his Pen, and his Doctrine, ſeemed to be at the Service of that Lord, "who paid him beſt. Nay, I remember, that ſpeaking of Jaſon, in his Parerga, he ſeems to preach "in favour of Money; for he praiſes him, becauſe "his Salary had been augmented; which Alciatus "knew very well how to make his Advantage of, "having drawn Twelve hundred Crowns from the "Univerſity of Bourges, beſides his Licences and "Degrees; the Prices of which he cauſed to be "trippled, following the Steps of Dr Jaſon, who was "the firſt that took fifty, and an hundred, Crowns, "for the Degrees and Honours he conferr'd on the "Civilians; whereas before his Time they were "wont to pay but three or four Crowns. And, "therefore, he ſays, it is lawful for himſelf, Decius, "Ruinus, and the other Doctors, to enrich themſelves by theſe Gratuities paid by the Scholars. "From whence it is eaſy to gather, that he did "not fail to alledge the Example of Jaſon againſt "thoſe, who cenſured him for being ſo fond of Money, that they, who had a Mind to take a Doctor's, "Bachelor's, or Licentiate's, Degree from him, were "obliged to pay down their Crowns in abundance. "That which makes me perſiſt in this Opinion, is, "that, in the laſt Chapter of the fifth Book of his "Parerga, renewing his Diſcourse concerning Jaſon, he complains of Princes, and Lords, who ſet "ſuch a mean Value on learned and knowing Men; "whereas in former Times, and even in Veſpaſian's "Time (according to the Report of Suetonius) That "Emperor cauſed Fifteen hundred Crowns of the public Money to be given to the Greek and Latin Orators, and Rhetoricians: He alſo adds the Authority "of the Rhetorician Eumanius, who exerciſed his "Profeſſion at Autun, to whom Fifteen thouſand "Crowns of the public Money were given yearly, "by Order of the Emperors Dioclesian, and Maximilian." Theſe are Thevet's Words, in the 279th Page, of the ſeventh Tome, of his Hiſtory of Illuſtrious Men.

(41) In the Beginning of the Remark [G], after the Citation (32).

[K] Thoſe, who ſay that our Alciatus liv'd always a ſingle Life, are miſtaken.] Let us ſee what he ſays in a Letter, which he wrote to his Friend Francis Calvus, after he came from Milan to Avignon. "Vice "verſa & ego te rerum mearum admonco; multis "affectum me ærumnis patria exceſſiſſe, Uxorem "vivam & ſoſpitem ibi reliquiſſe; cæteros fato functos; fortunis pleriſque amiſſis, virtuti ſoli innixum non omnino concidiſſe. Libros & Bibliothecam omnem conſervaſſe. In præſentia Jus Civile "Avenione profiteo (42). —— I will now, in my "turn, give you an Account how my Affairs ſtand; "I have left my Country in great Affliction of Mind; "I have left behind me my Wife, alive, and in "Health; the reſt of my Relations are dead (43); "my Virtue alone ſupports me from entirely ſinking "under the Loſs of the greateſt part of my Fortunes; "I have preſerved my Books, and my whole Library, "and, at preſent, I profeſs the Civil Law at Avig"non." Let us then correct theſe Words of Mr Teiſſier, he liv'd always a ſingle Life (44).

(42) Epiſt. Gudii, &c. pag. 75.

(43) Yet he ſays, lib d. pig. 96. in a Letter, written in 1522, that his Mother and his Uncle, by his Father's ſide, were living.

(44) Teiſſier. Addit. aux Elog. Tom. 2. pag. 34.

[L] Whoſe Latinity appeared to him very harſh.] This Complaint eſcap'd him in a Letter to Paul Jovius: "Alciatus non dubitat affirmare dictionem ejus "præ illa Pauli Jovii eſſe ſenticta (45) —— Alciatus "does not ſcruple to affirm, that his Style, in Compariſon of Paul Jovius's, is like a Place covered with "Thorns and Briars." On another Occaſion, he expreſſes himſelf in a very different manner: "Certat "in Tacito ſermonis gravitas cum elegantia (46). —— "In Tacitus, Dignity of Style contends with Elegance." I refer the Examination of this to the Article TACITUS.

(45) Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. lib. 1. pag. 160.

(46) Vide Canonherii Diſc. Politic. in Tacit. pag. 3.

[M] His Emblems were very much eſteemed, and —— adorn'd with Commentaries.] Scaliger the Father, who was not laviſh of his Praiſes, as every one knows, gives this Account of That Work: "Alciati præter "emblemata nihil mihi videre contigit. Ea vero "talia ſunt, ut cum quovis ingenio certare poſſint. "Dulcia ſunt, pura ſunt, elegantia ſunt, ſed non "ſine nervis; ſententiæ verò tales, ut etiam ad uſus "civilis vitæ conferant (47). —— I have not met "with any Work of Alciatus, except his Emblems. "But they are, I think, equal to any Work of Genius. They are entertaining, chaſte, and elegant, "and not without Strength; the Sentences likewiſe "are ſuch, as may even be of Service to the Purpoſes "of Civil Life." Theſe Emblems were tranſlated into French, Italian, and Spaniſh (48). There are at leaſt three French Tranſlations; That of Bartholomew Aneau, That of John le Fevre, and That of Claudius Minos (49). The latter not only tranſlated, but commented upon them: One of the moſt learned Humaniſts of Spain (50) thought them worthy of a Commentary of his own compoſing. Pignorius, a learned Italian, formed the ſame Judgment of them; and after them, a Profeſſor of Friburg (51), publiſhed them with their's and his own Notes, and added thoſe of Frederic Morel at the end. This Edition is a very good one: 'Tis pity we cannot diſtinguiſh in it what belongs to each Commentator: It came out at Padua, in the Year 1661, in 4to. I do not mention Sebaſtian Stockhamerus, whoſe Labours are not much eſteemed. "Sebaſtianum Stockhamerum vix Com"mentatoris nomine dignor, quia in ſola epigram"matis reſolutione occupatur, pauciſſimis, iiſque ſa"tis vulgatis, ſententiis & fabulis additis; ad hæc "vix mediam emblematum partem hoc ſuo more ex"plicat (52). —— Sebaſtian Stockhamerus ſcarce de"ſerves the Name of a Commentator; for he is "wholly taken up in the Analyſis of an Epigram, "adding

(47) Jul. Cæſar Scalig. lib. 6. de Poetic.

(48) Joh. Matthæus Toſcanus in Peplo Italiæ, lib. 3.

(49) See the Bibliotheque of la Croix du Maine.

(50) Sanctius Brocenſis.

(51) Joannes Thuilius Mariæmontanus, of Tirol, Philoſopher and Phyſician, and formerly Archdeacon of Friburgh, and Profeſſor in ordinary of Humanity, in the Univerſity of Brisgaw.

(52) Thuilius in Præf. Claudius Minos, gives much the ſame Judgment of it in his Preface.

Digitized by Google

were much commended, as Mr Baillet ingeniouſly obſerves in the Third Volume of his Jugemens ſur les Poëtes, n. 1286. He is not one of thoſe, who have perſiſted in their firſt Sentiments; for we find, in his Parerga, a Work, which he publiſhed in his old Age, a Retractation of ſeveral things, which the fire of Youth had occaſioned him to advance with too great Precipitation; and, when his Diſpunctiones were printed in 1529, he gave the Public to underſtand (r) that, in reviſing this Work, he did not pretend to give his Approbation to every thing he had inſerted in it in his Younger Days, nor to deprive himſelf of the liberty of altering his Opinions. This Remark was made by an Apologiſt of the Emperor Juſtinian (s).

(r) See the Preface to the Book.

(s) Gabriel Trivorius, Obſervat. Apologet. ad Inſcript. Orationis ad Anteceſſores, pag. 187. Pariſ. 1631.

A Letter was printed at Leyden (t), in 1695, wrote by Andrew Alciatus, which he did not intend to make public; for it contains a lively Deſcription of the Abuſes of a Monaſtic Life. He wrote this Letter to Bernard Mattius, who had been his Colleague, and who turned a Fryar of the Order of St Francis on a ſudden, and without conſulting his Friends. He repreſented to him his Imprudence with great Learning and Eloquence. This Piece of Alciatus was compoſed in four Days; and was found in Scriverius's Cloſet (u). It is dated the 7th of June 1553 [N].

(t) By Mr Matthæus, Profeſſor of the Civil Law at Leyden.

(u) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Mr Matthæus.

" adding a few, and thoſe the moſt trite and common " Sentences; beſides, he does not explain half the Em- " blems, after this his Manner." I omit likewiſe the Jeſuit, who explained the ſame Emblems publickly at Paris (53); but I believe the Reader will not be diſpleaſed to ſee the Title, which Bartholomew Aneau (Bartholomæus Anulus) prefixed to His Tranſlation. It is This. Andrew Alciatus's Emblems tranſlated Verſe for Verſe, according to the Latin, and digeſted into Common Places, with Summaries, Inſcriptions, Schemes, and brief epimythic Expoſitions, according to the Natural, Moral, or Hiſtorical Allegory. The Editions of this Work of Alciatus are numberleſs; there are Two hundred and twelve Emblems in That of Thuilius, which I make uſe of; I am therefore ſurprized, that Paul Freherus ſhould ſay, That this Book contains but One hundred Emblems (54).

(53) Minos, ibid.

(54) Paul. Freher. in Theatro.

[N] It is dated the 7th of June, 1553.] If this Date be right, we muſt reject all the Authors, who place Alciatus's Death on the twelfth of January, 1550, or 1551, and who alledge his Epitaph as a Proof (55). But there is a Miſtake in the Date of this Work, and I believe it was compoſed before the Year 1520, and that it is the ſame Piece, which Alciatus feared Eraſmus would cauſe to be printed. " Quod ut fa- " cias te quoque ipſe oro: Nec minus ut de unguibus Eraſmi reglutines orationem illam meam ad " Matthiam Minoritam, cum id quæſo, ne, ſi in cineratiorum iſtorum manus inciderit, parata ſint " mihi cum eis æterna bella (56). —— This I in- " treat you to perform; as alſo, that you would get " out of Eraſmus's Clutches That Oration of mine to " Matthias Minorita; leſt, if it falls into the Hands of " thoſe Blowers of the Coals, I ſhould be drawn in to " wage eternal War with them." This is what he wrote to his Friend Francis Calvus, the Twenty ſixth of September, 1520. Some of this Civilian's Letters were publiſhed at Utrecht in 1697, which inform us of many Particulars, and chiefly of the Encomiums he beſtowed upon himſelf with all a Boaſter's Vanity.

(55) See the Remark [E].

(56) Epiſt. Gudii, &c. pag. 80. See alſo pag. 81, 82, and Mr Burman's Preface.

ALCIATUS (JOHN PAUL) a Gentleman of Milan, was one of thoſe Italians, who left their Country in the XVIth Century, to embrace the Proteſtant Religion, and who afterwards refined ſo much upon the Myſtery of the Trinity, that they formed a New Party, equally odious to the Proteſtants and Catholics. Alciatus had bore Arms; he began his Innovations at Geneva, together with a Phyſician, whoſe Name was Blandrata, and an Advocate, whoſe Name was Gribaud, to whom Valentinus Gentilis aſſociated himſelf (a). The Precautions, which were taken againſt them, and the ſevere Proceedings carried on againſt the latter, made the reſt more timorous, and induced them to look out for another Stage (b). They made choice of Poland, where Blandrata and Alciatus ſowed their Hereſies with good Succeſs. They invited Gentilis thither [A], who did not fail to join them (c). He had obligations

(a) See Aretius, in the Hiſtory of Gentilis's Condemnation.

(b) Beza in Vit. Calvini.

(c) Id. ib.

[A] They invited Gentilis thither.] I have followed Aretius and Theodorus Beza, who agree in this, That Gentilis did not go into Poland, 'till after Blandrata and Alciatus had publiſhed their Opinions there (1); and I give up the Author of the Bibliotheca Antitrinitariorum, who affirms that Alciatus and Gentilis went into Poland together about the Year 1562 (2). Staniſlaus Lubienietzky ſays almoſt the ſame thing. " Valentinus iſte & Paulus Alciatus Pedemontanus, " cum Genevæ ob odia Calvini acerrima ſubſiſtere " non poſſent, anno 1563 in Poloniam venerant (3). " —This Valentinus and Paulus Alciatus of Piedmont, " when they could no longer continue at Geneva, on " Account of the inveterate Prejudices againſt Calvin, " in the Year 1563, came into Poland." But theſe Authors are not exact enough to deſerve the Preference. Hornius deſerves it ſtill leſs, who ſays, That George Blandrata, and Paul Alciatus, both Phyſicians, (he is miſtaken in regard to Alciatus) fled from Switzerland into Poland, being terrified at the Puniſhment of Servetus and Gentilis. In the ſame Page of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, he affirms, that they followed the Tritheiſm of Valentinus Gentilis (4). But it is certain that Alciatus's Hereſy was meer Socinianiſm. *Horniu*s's Chronology cannot be better confuted, than by a Letter of Peter Martyr, written at Zurich, the eleventh of July, 1558. He informs Calvin, in this Letter, that he had ſeen Gregory the Phyſician, and John Paul the Piemontois; that they were exhorted not to diſturb the Union of the Church, and to conform themſelves to the Formulary of the Italian Church of Geneva; that they could not prevail with them, and that, upon Bullingerus's Opinion, they were adviſed to leave the City; that they did ſo; that the Phyſician ſaid, he was going into Tranſylvania; and that John Paul went to Chiavenne. We muſt not read Gregorium Medicum, in Peter Martyr, but Georgium Medicum; who is no other than George Blandrata, as Johannes Paulus Pedemontanus is no other than our Alciatus. If Calvin had not expreſsly ſaid, that all theſe Heterodox Italians, and by Name John Paul Alciatus, ſigned the Formulary, I ſhould be much tempted to think, that thoſe, whom Peter Martyr ſpeaks of, refuſed to ſubſcribe to it. However it be, they were not at Geneva a little after their Subſcription; for they ſubſcribed on the eighteenth of May, 1558, and were at Zurich the eleventh of July following. Gentilis was not executed 'till 1566. He left Geneva ſome Months after the Subſcription, and went into the Country of Gex, where he conferred with Alciatus; which ſhews, either that Alciatus did not go to Chiavenne, when he left Zurich, or that he did not long continue there. See the Article BLANDRATA, where I endeavour to clear up the Chronology in relation to theſe Perſons.

(1) Aretius in his Hiſtory of Gentilis's Condemnation. See alſo the 81ſt Letter of Beza.

(2) Bibl. Antitrinit. pag. 26, 27.

(3) Lubieniec's Hiſtory of the Reformation in Poland, pag. 107.

(4) Theſe Miſtakes are to be found in the Edition of 1687, enlarged with Mr Leydecker's Notes, and his Continuation.

Digitized by Google

tions to Alciatus, at whoſe Requeſt the Bailiff of Gex had releaſed him out of Priſon [B]. It is pretended, that they went from Poland into Moravia. We ſhall relate in it's proper Place what Gentilis's Fate was. As for Alciatus, he went to Dantzic, where he died in the Opinions of Socinus [C]; for it is not true that he turned Mahometan [D]. He had wrote Two Letters to Gregorius Paulus, the one in 1564, and the other

[B] At whoſe Requeſt the Bailiff of Gex had releaſed him out of Priſon.] 'Tis not certain whether his Requeſt alone effected this; Sandius intimates, that there was a Bribe in the Caſe; "In oppido nomine Gajum in carcerem conjicitur (Gentilis), unde, cum evadere non poſſet, quod eſſet pauper, à ſocio ſuo Paulo Alciato redimitur. Quem utpote loquepletem, præterea vero nobili genere ortum, immo & militem, ſimili modo non audebant aggredi (6). "—— In the Town of Gex, Gentilis was thrown into Priſon; out of which, when he could not eſcape by reaſon of his Poverty, he was redeemed by his Aſſociate John Paulus. They dared not proceed againſt the latter in the ſame manner, on Account of his Wealth, the Nobility of his Extraction, and his Profeſſion, which was That of a Soldier."

(6) Bibl. Antitrinit. pag. 26.

[C] Where he died in the Opinions of Socinus.] This cannot reaſonably be queſtioned, after the Proofs which Martin Ruarus (7) has given of it. He ſays, That this Perſon, having lived ſome Years at Dantzic, as a good Chriſtian, when he was dying, recommended his Soul to JESUS CHRIST his Saviour; and then adds (8). "Catherine Wemera, "my Wife's Grandmother, who was intimately acquainted with him, and who aſſiſted at his Death, told it often to her Husband, David Werner Buttel, "who is yet living; and ſhe died but three Years "ago. My Mother-in-law told me but yeſterday, "that ſhe had often ſeen Alciatus's Widow in this "City, who ſurvived her Husband ſome Years." He adds occaſionally, that he heard Andrew Woïdovius ſay, That Alciatus, being in danger of his Life from the Scholars of Cracow, who took him for an Arian, eluded their ill Deſigns, by telling them, that he was not an Arian, but a Marian; for that he believed in JESUS CHRIST the Son of the Living God, and of Mary; the Name of Mary ſaved him: "Ridiculo ſchemate evaſiſſe, cum ſe non Arianum "ſed Marianum eſſe diceret, quod cum illi quid ſibi "vellet quærerent reſpondiſſe, credere ſe Jeſum "Chriſtum Dei vivi & Mariæ filium. Illi, non mi"nore ſtupore quam malitia obſeſſi, audito veneran"do Mariæ nomine incolumem dimiſerunt. This is a Caſe, in which the Maxim of the extravagant Votaries of the Holy Virgin was verified, that one is ſometimes more ſpeedily ſaved by invoking the Name of Mary, than That of Jeſus (9).

(7) Not Martin Bucerus, as it is in the Biblioth. Antitrinit. pag. 72.

(8) In a Letter written to Calovius, and dated from Dantzic, a. d. III. Non. Apr. 1640. 'Tis the 4th of the firſt Century of Ruarus's Letters.

(9) Velocior eſt nonnunquam ſalus invocato nomine Mariæ, quàm invocato nomine Jeſu. S. Anſelmus de excellentia Virginis, cap. 6.

[D] It is not true that he turned Mahometan.] We have juſt now ſeen the Proofs of it; and who can forbear ſaying, upon this Occaſion, that it were to be wiſhed, that thoſe, who maintain the good Cauſe, were not ſubject to certain Faults, which prevail among the Perſecutors of Orthodoxy? An Exceſs of Credulity, a miſtaken Hate, I mean an Hate, which comprehends the Perſon of the Heretic, as well as his Hereſy, makes us ſwallow all the Stories, which are reported to the Diſadvantage of an Hereſiarch. If it be reported, that he has killed himſelf, that the Devil has carried him away, or that he died raving and blaſpheming, it is believed, without waiting 'till the Report be confirmed. Accounts of it are diſperſed up and down by Letters; nay, what is worſe, it gets into Print; and thus a Falſhood is ſown, the Seed whereof is never loſt, ſo fruitful is the Soil it falls upon. The firſt is not long the only Publiſher of it. Care is taken to convey it from Book to Book, as a great Motive of Zeal, or a Subject for Reflexions. The Proteſtants have been as much miſtaken as the Catholics, as to the pretended Mahometiſm of John Paul Alciatus. Both have been careful enough to report it:

Iliacos intrà muros peccatur & extra (10).

(10) Horat. Epiſt. 2. lib. 1. v. 16.

Spondanus inſerted it in his Eccleſiaſtical Annals; and no doubt Father Maimbourg copied it from him (11), though he did not cite the Author, as Moreri does. The famous Calovius publiſhed it; Ruarus wrote to him as above: His Letter had been printed two Years, when a new Edition was publiſhed of Micræli's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory; yet he, who took ſo much Pains to add many Things to it, did not throw out the Falſhood, for which Calovius was cenſured. I cannot tell, whether Ruarus made a true Diſcovery of the Original of this Fable. He believes, that a Letter from Theodorus Beza (12) was the Foundation of it. This Letter relates, that Valentinus Gentilis, being interrogated concerning his Friend Alciatus, anſwered, He is turned Mahometan, and I have had no Correſpondence with him a long Time. The two Conjectures of Ruarus are not amiſs; I. Gentilis thought this would pleaſe the Judges, by whom he was tryed. We meet with, every day (13), ſomething like this in our Gazettes; to wit, That Deſerters relate a thouſand things, which they think will tickle the Ears of thoſe who queſtion them. II. Gentilis, who acknowledged a very ſingular Generation or Filiation in our Lord, was inclined enough to place the Samoſatenians and Mahometans in the ſame Category. Two Sectaries, which quarrel, hate each other more at firſt, than they hate the Stem, from whence they are ſeparated: So that Gentilis was an improper Evidence concerning Alciatus, after the violent Diſputes, which diſunited them in Poland. Voetius (14) and Lætus (15) cited only this Letter of Theodorus Beza, when they ſaid that Alciatus turned Mahometan. Hornius quotes no Author, though he reports the thing with the utmoſt Confidence; "Alciatus, ſays he (16), tranſiit ad Tur"cas, ac Muhammedijmum amplexus, inter eos vitam "finiit. —— Alciatus went over to the Turks, "and, having embraced Mahometaniſm, ended his "Life among them." Hornbeck likewiſe cites no Authority in the Apparatus to his Diſputes againſt the Socinians, where he ſays, two or three times, that Alciatus embraced Mahometiſm. "Dignam pœ"nam dedit, quando eum Deus ad Muhammedanos pro"labi fivit; nempe ne alibi quam inter Infideles iſtos "nomen ultra ſuum profiteretur (17). —God deſervedly puniſhed him, by ſuffering him to deſert to the Ma"hometans; that his Name might be no longer heard "of, but among theſe Infidels." It may be ſuſpected, that this Story was not meerly grounded on Beza's Letter, if we do but lightly examine the Hiſtory of the Poliſh Reformation; for, when we find there, that the Author, having mentioned one Adam Neuſſerus (18) who was at laſt obliged to fly to Conſtantinople, adds, that Alciatus had a like Fate, we can ſcarce doubt of the Truth of it, ſince ſuch an Hiſtorian reports it. But if this Author's Words be cloſely examined, it will be found that his Teſtimony amounts to nothing. Thus he expreſſes himſelf, Page 200. "Exacto trimeſtri neceſſe habebat (Adamus Neuſſerus) "periculo ſibi ad exploratoribus Cæſareis imminente "ſolum vertere, & Conſtantinopolim (quam & Al"ciati fortunam fuiſſe ſupra vidimus, adeo Turcæ "ante Chriſtianos æquitate & humanitate longe "ſunt!) confugere. —— After three Months Adam "Neuſſerus found it neceſſary to change his Reſi"dence, to avoid the Danger, which threatened him "from Cæſar's Spies, and to fly to Conſtantinople; "which was the very Fate of Alciatus, as we have "ſeen above; ſo far do the Turks excel the Chriſtians "in Equity and Humanity." Theſe Words refer us to a foregoing Paſſage; I think it is to Page 109. Now if, on the one ſide, we find there, that ſome Authors have charged Alciatus with turning Mahometan; we find, on the other, that they were his Enemies, who forged this Impoſture. This is, doubtleſs, what the Sieur Staniſlaus Lubienietzky meant. The Reader muſt perceive it, notwithſtanding the Typographical Errors, which wretchedly maim That Work. "De Alciato, ſays he (19), ſcriptum accepi "eum, epiſtolis ad Gregorium Pauli anno 1564, & "1565, Hufterlitzii datis, diſſuaſiſſe ſententiam quod "Chriſtus extiterit antequam ex Maria naſceretur, & "accerrimè dogmati vulgari de Trinitate reſtitiſſe, "ita ut Mahometiſmum conſilii in primordio refor"mationis ſat ancipiti & arduo ignarus ei prætuliſſe "ſcribatur, ſed à Calvino & inventorum ejus æmu"lis odio interneçino iri eum & alios veritatis aman"tes flagrantibus (20). —— I have been informed, "that

(12) It is the 81*ſt.*

(13) I wrote this in the Year 1693.

(14) Voet. Diſput. Tom. 3. pag. 781.

(15) Jo. Lætus, Compend. Hiſt. Univ. pag. 436.

(16) Horn. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. pag. 351. Edit. 1681.

(17) Hornb. Appar. pag. 29. ſee likewiſe pag. 23.

(18) In the printed Edition it is Neuſnerus; but that Edition ſwarms with Errors, eſpecially in the Proper Names.

(19) Hiſtor. Reformat. Poloniæ. Pag. 109.

(20) I think it ſhould be à Calvino eſſe inventum & emiſſarios ejus contra [illegible]

Digitized by Google

other in 1565, dated from Huſterilts, in which he maintained that JESUS CHRIST did not exiſt before he was born of the Holy Virgin (d). There was Reaſon, then, to blame Moreri, who made him an Arian, and afterwards a Mahometan (e). Perhaps, before he went to Dantzic, he made the Tour of Turkey, without any deſign of turning a Renegado, but only to ſecure himſelf from Perſecution [E]; which perhaps occaſioned the Report of his pretended Mahometaniſm. Calvin and Beza repreſented him as a Madman [F].

(d) Bibl. Antitrinit. pag. 28.

(e) See his Dictionary in the Article ALCIATUS, where he is confuted.

" that Alciatus, in his Letters to Gregorius Paulus, " dated at Huſterlitz, in the Year 1564 and 1565, diſ- " ſuaded him from the Opinion, that Chriſt exiſted be- " fore he was born of Mary and ſtrenuouſly oppoſed the " Vulgar Notion of the Trinity; inſomuch that he is " ſaid inadvertently to have recommended to him a " kind of Mahometaniſm, even in the doubtful and " hazardous beginnings of a Reformation; but that " it was found out by Calvin and his Followers, " who were inflamed with the moſt deadly Hate to- " wards him, and all Lovers of Truth."

[E] Perhaps —— he made the Tour of Turkey —— to ſecure himſelf from Perſecution.] This puts me in mind of Peter Abelard, who was on the Point of ſeeking an Aſylum among the Infidels, againſt the Agents or Promoters of Orthodoxy. He had been very ill treated, and was more alarmed than any other; for, whenever he was told that there would be ſpeedily an Aſſembly of Eccleſiaſtics, he immediately believed it was deſigned to condemn HIM. Beſides he found, by Experience, the great Credit of thoſe Agents; and it was not eaſy to eſcape them under Princes of their own Party. They ſend circular Letters; and, before their Enemy arrives at any Town, the Deſcription of his Errors has already alarmed the Inhabitants of it, and exaſperated them againſt him. There was a Time, when they, who had the Pope's Ear, could make the beſt part of Europe an uninhabitable Country to a Perſon, whom they were reſolved to decry as an Heretic; and the poor Wretch might, in ſome Senſe, apply to himſelf the Pſalmiſt's Exclamation, Whither ſhall I go then from thy Spirit; or whither ſhall I go then from thy Preſence? —— If I take the Wings of the Morning, and remain in the utmoſt Part of the Sea; —— even there alſo thy right Hand ſhall hold me. Pſal. cxxxix. —— Therefore, it is no wonder, that Peter Abelard was induced to retire among the Mahometans or Pagans. He was in hopes, that, in paying Tribute, he might have the Liberty to profeſs Chriſtianity, out of the Sphere of Activity of the Odium Theologicum, and he fear'd, that, unleſs he did ſo, he ſhould always find himſelf within the Influence of That Sphere. Theſe are his Words. " Deus ipſe mihi teſtis eſt, " quotiens aliquam Eccleſiaſticarum perſonarum con- " ventum adunari noveram, hoc in damnationem " meam agi credebam. Stupefactus illico, quaſi ſu- " pervenientis ictum fulguris expectabam, ut quaſi hæ- " reticus aut profanus in conſiliis traherer aut Synago- " gis —— Sæpe autem (Deus ſcit) in tantam lap- " ſus ſum deſperationem, ut, Chriſtianorum finibus " exceſſis, ad Gentes tranſire diſponerem, atque ibi " quietè ſub quacumque tributi pactione inter inimi- " cos Chriſti chriſtianè vivere (21). —— God himſelf " is my Witneſs, that, as often as I heard, that an " Aſſembly of Eccleſiaſtics was to meet, I fancied it " was called for my Condemnation. In the utmoſt " Conſternation thereupon, I immediately expected, " as ſome Thunder-Clap, to be dragg'd before Coun- " cils and Synagogues, and to be accuſed as an He- " retic, or profane Perſon. —— Often likewiſe (God " knows) I fell into ſuch Deſpair, that I purpoſed to " quit Chriſtendom, and to take Refuge among the Pa- " gans; there, at the Expence of a Tribute, to live " as a Chriſtian, among the Enemies of Chriſt." Now, as Alciatus had yet more to fear from Popery, than Abelard, and that he found but little Safety in Countries, where other Chriſtians were Maſters,

(21) Abælardi Oper. pag. 32.

----- Tenent Danai, quà deficit Ignis (22);

Where'er the raging Fire had left a Space,
The Grecians enter, and poſſeſs the Place.
DRYDEN.

(22) Virgil Æn. lib. 2. ver. 505.

his capricious Humour might well create in him a Deſire of trying the Toleration of the Turks, and then might induce him to change his Mind, and reſolve upon going to Dantzic. Let us learn from hence to diſtruſt certain Accounts, though adopted by conſiderable Authors.

[F] Calvin and Beza repreſented him as a Madman.] The former ſays, that, on the Day, when the Italians, ſuſpected of Heterodoxy, were required to ſign a Formulary, Alciatus flew into a violent Paſſion. " Inter quos Princeps fuit Joannes quidam Paulus Al- " ciatus, homo non ſtolidi tantum & veſani ingenii " ſed plane phreneticus ad rabiem uſque (23). —— " Among them the Chief was one John Paulus Al- " ciatus, a Man, not only Fooliſh and Ignorant, but " Frantic even to Rage." —— The latter ſays, that he was a giddy-headed, and frantic Fellow; " Paulus " quidem Alciatus, Mediolanenſis, homo jam antea " planè phreneticus & vertiginoſus (24)."

(23) Calvin. adverſ. Valent. Gentil. pag. 639. Tractat. Theolog.

(24) Beza Epiſt. 31.

ALCIATUS (TERENCE) an Italian Jeſuit, deſcended from the ſame Family as Alciatus the Civilian, was born at Rome in the Year 1570. He ſtudied the Civil-Law five Years before he turned Jeſuit, and entered into That Society in the Month of March, 1591. The Employments he had in it teſtify, that they looked upon him as a conſiderable Man. He was thirteen Years Præfect of the College of Rome; he taught Philoſophy five Years, and Divinity ſeventeen in That City. Afterwards he was Director of the Penitentiary of the Vatican, and Sub-Superior of the Maiſon Profeſſe. He aſſiſted at the Ninth General Congregation of the Jeſuits, as Deputy of the Province of Rome, and, when he died of an Apoplexy on the 12th of November, 1651, he was Sub-Provincial. He was not leſs eſteemed out of the Society; for, beſides that he was a long time Qualificator of the Congregation of the Holy Office, and Conſultor of the Congregation of Rites, he was choſen by Pope Urban VIII to refute Father Paul. He prepared an Edition of the Acts of the Council of Trent, which he intended as an Apology for that Aſſembly againſt all kind of Adverſaries, and particularly againſt This Formidable Venetian. He had already collected a great number of Materials for this Important and Laborious Work, when Death took him out of the World (a); but, though he had ſpent ſeveral Years upon this Undertaking, he had ſcarce began to digeſt it into Form. Father Sforza Palavicini, who was engaged in the ſame Deſign, informs us why Father Alciatus was ſo backward in his Performance [A]. If Moreri had but caſt his Eye on the Preface of Cardinal Pallavicini,

(a) Sotuel. Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jeſu.

[A] Father Alciatus was ſo backward in his Performance.] He laid it down as a Rule, never to deny a thing, without bringing Proofs of the Negative; inſomuch that he ſpent many Years in ſearch of Memoirs, which might furniſh him with Proofs. Cardinal Palavicini pretends, that this was a Work of Supererogation; becauſe no Law obliges a Man to prove what he denies: It lies upon the Accuſer to prove

Digitized by Google

Palavicini, he would not have put the Acts of the Council of Trent among Father Alciatus's Works. We muſt only inſert among them one Sermon on the Paſſion, preached before Pope Clement VIII in 1602, and the Life of Peter Fabri, a Companion of St Ignatius Loyola. Father Alciatus, diſguiſed under the Name of Eminius Tacitus (b), tranſlated it into Italian from the Latin of Nicolas Orlandino (c). This Tranſlation was printed at Rome in 1629. The Latin was printed at Lyons in 1617. Moreri obſerves, that Pope Urban VIII declared, that Father Alciatus deſerved a Cardinal's Hat. Nicius Erythæus reports the ſame (d). If it be aſked, what prevented this Jeſuit from obtaining what he deſerved; I anſwer, had not Urban the VIIIth the diſpoſal of theſe Hats? The Reply is very obvious; This Dignity is to be conferred on ſuch a number of Perſons for Political Reaſons, that, they, who are thought worthy of it, cannot always be admitted to it.

(b) Leo Allatius in Apibus urbanis, p. 238. and Alegambus, call him Erminius.

(c) Sotuel's Bibl. Societ. Jeſu.

(d) Nic. Erythr. Pinacoth. 2. cap. 47.

prove his Charge; and if he does not do it, he deſerves the Puniſhment of Retaliation. But the accuſed Perſon may content himſelf with a bare I deny it: This is ſufficient to acquit him, whilſt nothing is proved againſt him: "Là dove queſti s'era fatto lecito, " d' accuſare ſenza provare, il che dalle leggi è punito " colla pena del talione; quegli non volle negare ſenza " haver la prova della falſita; dal che ogni legge il di " obligava. Quindi fu che ſpece moltiſſimi anni in " cercar memorie certe di que' ſucceſſi (1)." By this Cardinal's good leave, I do not think, that, upon this occaſion, it was ſufficient to deny what Father Paul affirmed. When the Laugh is againſt us, we cannot bring too many Proofs in ſupport of our Cauſe. The Cardinal adds, that Father Alciatus compoſed very ſlowly, as being ſcrupulouſly exact in whatever he wrote; beſides which, old Age, and the Affairs of the Society, were new Obſtacles. " Dapoi la fred- " dezza dell' età decrepita, la natura perpleſſa, la pen- " na altrettanto lenta, quanto eſquiſita, le occupazioni " de' noſtri governi domeſtici hanno cagionato ch' egli " ſia morto con laſciar ſolo qualche veſtigio dell' opera " conceputa in idea (2)." We may learn from hence, that ſome Perſons, through too much care of becoming good Authors, never become Authors at all.

(1) Palavicini's Introduction to the Hiſt. of the Council of Trent.

(2) Id. ibid.

ALCINOE, Daughter of Polybius, the Corinthian, and Wife of Amphilocus, ran mad for Love of one Xanthus, of the Iſland of Samos, who lodged at her Houſe. This was not the ſtrangeſt part of her Adventure; the great Matter of Surprize is, that it was Minerva who inſpired her with this Diſeaſe of Love, to puniſh her for not having diſcharged her Promiſe to a Woman, who had worked for her. This Woman prayed to Minerva to revenge her; and thus her Prayers were heard. Alcinoe, influenced by this Goddeſs, fell ſo deſperately in Love with her Gueſt, that ſhe forſook her Houſe and her young Children, and embarked with him. But, at Sea, ſhe reflected on her Conduct, ſhe bewailed it, ſhe remembered, with Tears and Cries, her young Huſband, and her Children; laſtly, all the good Words of Xanthus, who promiſed to marry her, being too feeble a Conſolation, ſhe caſt herſelf into the Sea (a). A great Exploit, and highly worthy of the Goddeſs Minerva! See the Remark [C] of the Article EGIALEA, and the Remark [D] of the Article MYRRHA.

(a) Parthenii Eroticorum. c. 27.

ALCINOUS, King of the Phæacians, in an Iſland, which is, at preſent, called Corfu, was the Son of Nauſithoüs (a), and Grandſon of Neptune and Periboëa [A]. He married his Niece Arete, the only Daughter of Rexenor, the Son of Nauſithoüs, and had five Sons by her, and a Daughter whoſe Name was Nauſicaa, whom Homer greatly celebrates (b). He praiſes the Mother much more, and makes a Heroine of her. He gives us likewiſe very long Deſcriptions of Alcinous's Palace and Gardens. According to his Account, theſe Gardens produced the moſt excellent Fruits in the World, without any viciſſitude of Winter and Summer, and in every Month of the Year. It was, doubtleſs, by his Gardens that Alcinous chiefly immortalized his Memory [B]. He received Ulyſſes with great Civility [C], whom a Storm had caſt a-ſhore

(a) Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 6, & 7. We muſt not call him Naſitoüs, as Moreri does.

(b) Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 6. ver. 62.

[A] Grandſon of Neptune and Periboëa,] Britannicus aſſures us, that Alcinous was the Son of Phæax, and that Phæax was the Son of Neptune, and of Corcyra (1). I find indeed the latter of theſe two Circumſtances in Stephen of Byzantium, but not that this Son of Neptune and Corcyra was the Father of Alcinous.

(1) Britann. in Juvenal. Sat. 5. ver. 151.

[B] It was doubtleſs, by his Gardens, that Alcinous chiefly immortaliz'd his Memory.] The Poets, in general, ſtrive to out-do each other in ſpeaking of his Gardens. Lloyd cites many Paſſages from them; let us content ourſelves with this of Juvenal:

——————— Illa jubebit
Poma dari, quorum ſolo paſcaris odore,
Qualia perpetuus Phæacum autumnus habebat (2).

(2) Juven. Sat. 5. ver. 149.

To him are ordered, and thoſe happy few,
Whom Fate has rais'd above Contempt and you,
Moſt fragrant Fruits; ſuch in Phæacian Gardens grew;
Where an eternal Autumn ever ſmil'd,
And golden Apples loaded Branches fill'd.
Revd. Mr WILLIAM BOWLES.

And let us add to this the Teſtimony of an Author in Proſe. " Antiquitas nihil prius mirata eſt quam " Heſperidum hortos, ac regum Adonis & Alcinoi " (3) —— Antiquity admired nothing beyond the " Gardens of the Heſperides, and thoſe of the Kings " Adonis (4) and Alcinous." Lloyd cites Theophilus, Patriarch of Antioch, who mentions theſe Gardens in his third Book ad Autolicum, but he ſays that we muſt correct the Reading Antinous, and ſubſtitute Alcinous. He cites likewiſe theſe Words of St Gregory Nazianzen;

Ἡ σὴ τραπέζα τῆς ἅλσεος Ἀλκινόοιο
Τερπνοτέρη (5).

Thy Table is pleaſanter than the Gardens of Alcinous.

(3) Plin. lib. 19. cap. 4.

(4) I know not whether Pliny rightly underſtood what he had read, concerning the Gardens of Adonis. They were not ſuch as be takes them to be.

(5) Gregor. Nazianz. Carm. ad Vitalian.

I have not obſerved, that the Poets feign, that this Prince was the Orchard-Keeper, as Moreri will have it. Charles Stephens led him into this Error; for in his Dictionary we find an Alcinous different from the King of the Phæacians, and diſtinguiſh'd by the Office of Hortorum cuſtos; which the Author proves by the ſecond Book of Virgil's Georgics, and by ſome Verſes of Ovid and Statius; which relate, not to this, but only to Alcinous's Gardens. Probably this Miſtake might ariſe from a Blunder of ſome Tranſcriber, or Printer, who put cuſtos, inſtead of cultor.

(6) In Epithet.

[C] He receiv'd Ulyſſes with great Civility.] Several Authors, as Raviſius Textor (6), and Decimator (7), attribute

(7) In Sylva vocabul. & in Theſauro linguarum.

Digitized by Google

a-ſhore on the Coaſt of the Phæacians; he offered him his Daughter, and cauſed him to be conducted to Ithaca loaded with Preſents. Now, as Ulyſſes told the Company an hundred old Women's Stories, during the Feaſt, to which he was admitted, it is thought that this occaſioned certain Proverbs, which were in uſe among the Ancients [D]. However it be, Alcinous's Kingdom was a jovial Country; the People there loved good Cheer, and the Conveniencies of Life [E], which however did not hinder them from being active, and very good Seamen (c), and Alcinous from being a very juſt Prince, as appears from theſe words:

(c) Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 6. ver. 270. lib. 7. ver. 35, 107. lib. 8. ver. 247, 253, &c.

Ἀλκίνοος ——— δικαιότατος βασιλήων (d).

(d) Orpheus.

Alcinous ——— the juſteſt of Kings.

attribute this Reception to Nauſicaa, the Daughter of Alcinous, without allowing the Father any ſhare in it. But they forget, that ſhe only gave Ulyſſes Cloaths, and Advice, without the City; and that ſhe had a Father and Mother, who perform'd all the Honours of Reception, and Hoſpitality. See the Article NAUSICAA.

[D] Certain Proverbs, which were in uſe among the Ancients.] Moreri ſays, that "Ulyſſes related the Fable "of the Cyclopes, of the Læſtrigones, and others, "leaning, as they ſay, with his Elbow on the Ta-"ble; which gave occaſion for that Proverb of the "Ancients, which Eraſmus did not forget, "Alci-"nous's Table;" or, as Plato expreſſes it, Muſt I re-"late the Story of Alcinous to you?" This is nothing to the Purpoſe. I. The Phraſe and others is obſcure, and quite careleſs. II. The Proverb of Alcinous's Table did not ariſe from Ulyſſes's Story-telling, but from the good Cheer, which Alcinous uſually provided. See the following Remark. Beſides, it is not true, that Plato expreſſes himſelf by way of Queſtion: He declares only that he will not repeat the Fable of Alcinous (8). It is yet more falſe, that what he ſays is, in other Terms, the ſame thing with the Table of Alcinous. It is certain that we find, in the Index of Eraſmus's Adagia, Alcinoi Menſa, and Alcinoi Apologus, as two different Proverbs. The firſt is not an Article in the Body of the Book; it is only added, by way of Supplement to the Proverb, Sybaritica Menſa (9); and is taken from theſe Words of Gregory Nazianzen, Οὐκ ὡς λωτοφάγοις πανίαν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἀλκινόου τραπέζης; non ad Lotophagorum inopiam, ſed Alcinoi menſam. Hadrian Junius, who made a Collection of Proverbs after Eraſmus, wherein he places Alcinoi Horti as a capital Proverb, cites, in the Explication of it, this other Paſſage of the ſame Father, concerning the Table of Alcinous;

(8) Plato de Rep. lib. 10.

(9) It is the 65th of the 2d Cent. in the 2d Chiliad.

Καὶ δόμον αἰγλήεντα καὶ Ἀλκινόου τραπέζης.

The Dome magnificent could'ſt thou afford,
And rich Alcinous' hoſpitable Board.

Lloyd cites another Paſſage, in which this holy Doctor makes uſe of the ſame Phraſe. As for the Alcinoi Apologus, Eraſmus repeats it twice. Firſt he underſtands it of old Wives Tales, de longis & anilibus fabulamentis, and juſtifies it by the Stories, which Ulyſſes told at the Table of Alcinous. "Prodigioſas "ac deridiculas fabulas & protentuoſa mendacia de "Lotophagis, Læſtrygonibus, Circe, Cyclopibus at-"que id genus aliis plurimis miraculis, fretus vide-"licet Phæacum inſcitia barbarieque (10). —— His "monſtrous and abſurd Tales, and portentous Lies, "concerning the Lotophagi, the Læſtrigons, Circe, "the Cyclopes, and the like wonderful Events, which "be told, relying upon the Ignorance and Barbarity of "the Phæacians." But, in another Place (11), he tells us that he had met with another Signification of the ſame Proverb, in the fourth Book of Ariſtotle's Rhetoric (12), but that he would ſuſpend his Deciſion, till he ſaw more clearly into the Matter, either by the Commentaries of St Gregory Nazianzen on thoſe Books of Ariſtotle (13), or by ſome other means. I ſcarce meet with any one, who pays the leaſt Regard to this latter Paſſage of Eraſmus. They ſtop at the firſt; as if the true Senſe were to be found there: But it is far from being to be met with in that place; for if we conſider never ſo little what Eraſmus ſays on Ariſtotle's Words, we ſhall wholly diſtruſt the Explication he has given in another Place. I own this Paſſage of Ariſtotle is obſcure, that it is differently read, and that perhaps there is an Hiatus in it; but there is no probability, that by the Apologue of Alcinous, we ought to underſtand a Tale of a Tub. Yet Gilbert Couſin, who made a Collection of Proverbs after Eraſmus, fancies ſo; though he conſiders the thing only according to Ariſtotle's Citation (14). There is a Paſſage in Ælian, where Alcinoi apologi, Ἀλκίνου ἀπόλογοι, can only be taken for the Diſcourſes of Ulyſſes to that Prince in the Odyſſey (15).

(10) Eraſm. Adag. n. 32. cent. 4. chil. 2. p. 469.

(11) Id. n. 82. cent. 1. chil. 5. pag. 1057.

(12) It is the 16th Chapter of the 3d Book in the Edition of Geneva, 1605.

(13) I never heard of theſe Commentaries.

(14) Cognat. in Proverb. n. 210. He quotes, as Eraſmus does, the fourth Book of the Rhetorics.

(15) Ælian. var. Hiſt. lib. 13. c. 13.

[E] The People there lov'd good Cheer, and the Conveniencies of Life.] Alcinous made no Secret of this to Ulyſſes: We love, ſaid he to him, Feaſts, Muſic, Dancing, change of Apparel, Bathing, and the Bed.

Ἀλλ' ἡμῖν δαὶς τε φίλη, κίθαρίς τε, χοροί τε,
Εἵματά τ' ἐξημοιβὰ, λοετρά τε θερμὰ, καὶ εὐναί (16).

(16) Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 8. ver. 248.

To dance, to dreſs, to ſing, our ſole Delight,
The Feaſt, or Bath, by Day, and Love by Night.
POPE's Odyſſ.

Horace expreſſes it in this Manner;

——— ——— Alcinoique
In cute curanda plus æquo operata juventus,
Cui pulcrum fuit in medios dormire dies, &
Ad ſtrepitum citharæ ceſſatum ducere curam (17).

(17) Horat. Epiſt. 2. lib. 1. ver. 28.

Alcinous' idle Youth, whoſe ſole Deſign
Aim'd at ſoft Blandiſhments, and being fine,
Indulg'd at eaſe, who ſlept out half the Day,
And lull'd their Cares with Dancing, Songs, and Play.

I need not obſerve, that by Alcinoi juventus, muſt be underſtood the young Lords of Alcinous's Court. Athenæus ſomewhere remarks the voluptuous Life of the Phæacians.

ALCYONIUS (PETER) was one of thoſe learned Italians, who cultivated uſeful Literature in the XVIth Century. He acquired a conſiderable Knowledge of the Greek and Latin Tongues, and wrote ſome Rhetorical Pieces, which deſerved the Approbation of good Judges. He was a long time Corrector of the Preſs at Venice, in the Houſe of Aldus Manutius [A], and ought conſequently to have a ſhare in the Praiſes,

[A] A long time Corrector of the Preſs at Venice, in the Houſe of Aldus Manutius.] Paul Jovius's Account falls ſhort of this. He only ſays, "Cum "diu in Chalcographorum Officinis, corrigendis er-"roribus menſtrua mercede operam navaſſet, multa "obſervatione ad præcellentem ſcribendi facultatem "pervenit (1). —— Having been employ'd a long time "in Printing-Offices, in correcting Errors of the "Preſs, for a monthly Stipend, by long Obſervation he "arriv'd at an excellent Faculty of Writing." What relates to Aldus Manutius, is borrowed from Varillas, and I confeſs that I do it trembling, conſidering the great Number of Faults, which that Writer committed, about the learned Men, whom he has mentioned in his Anecdotes of Florence. "The Public, ſays "he (2), is obliged to him for that Exactneſs of Aldus "Manutius,

(1) Paul. Jovius, in Elog. c. 123. pag. 265.

(2) Varillas Anecdot. pag. 103.

Digitized by Google

Praiſes, which are given to the Editions of that Learned Printer. He tranſlated ſeveral Treatiſes of Ariſtotle into Latin (a), but without Succeſs. Sepulveda wrote againſt theſe Tranſlations, and obſerved ſo many Faults in them, that Alcyonius found no better Remedy for his Diſgrace, than to buy up as many Copies of Sepulveda's Works as he could find, in order to burn them [B]. Paul Jovius accuſes him of a ſecond Fault, which is more diſgraceful than the firſt; namely of having been an impudent Paraſite [C], who made no ſcruple of eating two or three times a day out of his own Houſe. I cannot tell whether we ought to give entire Credit to Paul Jovius in this Matter; for he quarrelled with Alcyonius (b) upon hearing, that he was his Rival in the Commiſſion of writing Hiſtory [D]. The Treatiſe, which Alcyonius publiſhed concerning Exile, contained ſo many fine Paſſages among other very mean ones, that it was thought he had tacked ſeveral Parts of a Treatiſe of Cicero de Gloria to his own Thoughts, and afterwards, to prevent being convicted of the Theft, had thrown into the Fire that Manuſcript of Cicero [E], which was the only one in the World (c). The Two Orations, which he made, after the taking of Rome, in which he

(a) See the Liſt of them in the Bibliotheque of Geſner.

(b) Epiſtles of Princes, fol. 92. verſo.

(c) Jovius, Elog. c. 123.

" Manutius, in printing the beſt Greek and Latin Au" thors, which we admire at preſent; for he was all
" his Life-time Corrector of that famous Printing-
" Office." This laſt Particular is falſe, for Alcyonius was Profeſſor at Florence, under the Pontificate of Hadrian VI.

[B] Sepulveda - - - - - - - obſerv'd ſo many Faults in them, that Alcyonius found no better Remedy, &c.] Paul Jovius remarks this. " Quum aliqua ex Ari-
" ſtotele perperam inſolenterque vertiſſet, in eum Se-
" pulveda vir Hiſpanus, egregie de literis meritus,
" edito volumine peracuta jacula contorſit - - - - - -
" tanto quidem eruditorum applauſu, ut Alcyonius
" ignominiæ dolore miſere conſternatus, Hiſpani ho-
" ſtis libros in tabernis, ut concremaret, gravi pretio
" coemere cogeretur (3). - - - - - Having tranſlated
" ſome Pieces of Ariſtotle, after a wretched and igno-
" rant Manner, Sepulveda, a Spaniard, well deſer-
" ving of the learned World, attack'd him very ſevere-
" ly upon it - - - - - with ſuch Applauſe from the learn-
" ed, that Alcyonius, greatly affected with Grief,
" at the Ignominy thrown upon him, was forced to
" buy up, at a great Price, the Books of his Spaniſh
" Enemy, that he might burn them." See the Epiſtles of Princes, collected by Ruſcelli, and tranſlated by Belleforet, Fol. 93. See alſo the Twenty ſeventh, and the laſt Letter of the third Book of Longolius.
" Si bene te novi, ipſe tu denunciabis, ut hominis,
" ad tantæ contumeliæ nuncium, vultum videas:
" quod unum ſanè ſpectaculum tibi magnopere invi-
" deo (4). - - - - If I know you well, you will your-
" ſelf carry the News (namely, that Sepulveda's Work was printed,) that you may obſerve the " Man's Looks, when he hears of ſuch a Slur upon
" his Character; a Sight, which I greatly envy you the
" Pleaſure of."

(3) P. Jovius ubi ſupra.

(4) Longolius Epiſt. ultim. lib. 3. fol. 25[illegible]. verſo.

[C] Paul Jovius accuſes him - - - - - - - of having been an impudent Paraſite.] Let us ſet down his own Words: " Cùm nulla ex parte ingenuis, ſed planè
" plebeis & ſordidis moribus fædaretur; erat enim
" impudens gulæ mancipium, ita ut eodem ſæpe die
" bis & ter, aliena tamen quadra, cænitaret; nec in ea
" fœditate malus omnino medicus, quod domi de-
" mum in lecti limine per vomitum ipſo crapulæ o-
" nere levaretur (5) - - - - - - He was a Man, not of " ingenuous, but downright plebeian and ſordid, Man-
" ners; he was a ſhameleſs Slave to his Appetite;
" inſomuch, that, in one and the ſame Day, he would
" dine three or four times, but always at another's
" Expence; nor was he altogether a bad Phyſician
" in this beaſtly Practice; ſince, afterwards, before he " went into Bed, he diſcharged the intemperate Load
" of his Stomach." Varillas mentions only Alcyonius's Drunkenneſs; he accuſes him of getting drunk as often as he had an Opportunity for it. Latomus, whoſe Verſes Paul Jovius alledges, mentions two of this Perſon's Exceſſes; that of Drinking, and that of Eating too much.

(5) P. Jovius Elog. c. 123. pag. 265.

[D] His Rival in the Commiſſion of writing Hiſtory.] He, who informs us of this, adds, That it was not true, that Alcyonius was to compoſe an Hiſtory, and that Paul Jovius was told ſo, only to make them quarrel (6). Cardinal de Medicis diverted himſelf with theſe Feudes of the Learned; he took delight in diſquieting Alcyonius, by protecting Sepulveda. Note, that Alcyonius extolled to the Skies the firſt Decad of Paulus Jovius's Hiſtory, in the ſecond Part of his Treatiſe de Exilio (7).

(6) Letters of Princes, fol. 93.

(7) Ibid.

[E] Had thrown into the Fire that Manuſcript of Cicero.] Paul Jovius is not the only Perſon, who mentions this unlucky Trick. Paul Manutius in his Commentary on theſe Words of Cicero; librum tibi celeriter mittam de glorias (8), —— I will ſpeedily ſend you my Book de Gloria), ſpeaks of it thus: " Li-
" bros duos ſignificat, quos de gloria ſcripſit: qui uſ-
" que ad patrum noſtrorum ætatem pervenerunt.
" Nam Bernardus Juſtinianus in indice librorum ſuo-
" rum nominat Ciceronem de Gloria. Is liber poſtea,
" cum univerſam bibliothecam Bernardus monacha-
" rum monaſterio legaſſet, magna conquiſitus cura,
" neutiquam eſt inventus. Nemini dubium fuit, quin
" Petrus Alcyonius, cui monachæ medico ſuo ejus
" tractandæ bibliothecæ poteſtatem fecerant, homo
" improbus furto averterit. Et ſane, in ejus opuſculo,
" de Exſulio, adſperſa nonnulla deprehenduntur,
" quæ non olere Alcyonium auctorem, ſed aliquanto
" præſtantiorem artificem, videantur. —— He means
" the two Books, which he wrote de Gloria; which " were handed down to the Age of our Fathers. For
" Bernardus Juſtinianus, in the Catalogue of his Books,
" mentions Cicero de Gloria. This Book, purchaſed
" not without great Pains, when Bernardus bequeathed
" his Library to a Monaſtery of Nuns, was after- " wards not to be found. It was generally believed,
" that Peter Alcyonius, Phyſician to the Monaſtery,
" to whom the Nuns entruſted the Management of this
" Library, privately made away with it. And, to
" ſay the Truth, there are ſome ſcattered Paſſages in " his Work de Exſulio, which do not favour of Alcyo-
" nius's Pen, but of a more excellent Artiſt." We underſtand, by this Paſſage, that Alcyonius was a Phyſician by Profeſſion. See the Remark [I]. Now ſince he was Phyſician to a Convent of Nuns, it cannot, I think, be true, that he ſpent all his Life in Manutius's Printing-Office. This is a new Proof of Varillas's Error.

(8) Cicero, Epiſt. 27. lib. 15. ad Atticum.

I have two things to remark againſt this Hiſtorian. The firſt is, that, in the Fragment of his Lewis XI, he imputed the Plagiariſm, and the Deſtruction of the Treatiſe de Gloria to Philelphus, and cited the leſſer Elogies of Paul Jovius. He was informed (9), that there was no ſuch thing there. No doubt he profited by this Advice, in publiſhing his Lewis XII; for, after having obſerved the ſame thing concerning Philelphus, he adds: " Nevertheleſs it is not certain " that he was guilty of this Crime, which paſſes
" for one of the greateſt that can be committed in the " Affair of Literature; and ſome Authors impute it
" to a learned Perſon of the ſame time, whoſe Name
" is Alcyonius, and maintain that he appropriated
" this Work of Cicero to himſelf, after having chang-
" ed the Title of it, which was de Gloria, into that
" of de Exſulio (10)." To this latter Fact he applies the Citation of Paul Jovius. Had he entirely ſuppreſs'd what concerns Philelphus, he would have come off better; for where could he find that Philelphus was accuſed of this Fraud? Beſides Alcyonius is not charged with publiſhing Cicero's Book, and changing only the Title of it; his Vanity might eaſily have been forgiven, if he had only been guilty of this; the Pleaſure of having that Work of Cicero would make one forget the Trick; but he is accuſed of having taken a rich Embroidery out of it, and tacking it to his own Rags, and afterwards of burning that whole Work of Cicero. " Ex libro de Gloria Ciceronis,
" quem nefaria malignitate aboleverat, multorum ju-
" dicio

Remarks upon VARILLAS.

(9) Nouvelles de la Rep. de Lettres, June 1685. Article 1ſt, towards the End.

(10) Varillas, Hiſt. of Lewis XI. Book 1 pag. 30. of the Dutch Edit.

Digitized by Google

he very eloquently repreſented the Injuſtice of Charles V, and the Barbarity of his Soldiers, removed in ſome meaſure the Suſpicions, which were entertained againſt him (d). They are Two very good Pieces. There is mention of a Speech which he compoſed upon the Knights, who died at the Siege of Rhodes (e). He was Profeſſor at Florence in the Pontificate of Hadrian VI; and, beſides his Penſion, had Ten Ducats per Month from Cardinal de Medicis, for Tranſlating a Work of Galen (f). Having heard that this Cardinal was elected Pope, he deſired Letters of Diſmiſſion from the Florentines; but, not obtaining them, he went nevertheleſs to Rome, full of the hopes of raiſing himſelf there (g). He loſt all his Eſtate, in the Troubles, which the Colonnas excited in Rome; and, ſome time after, when the Emperor's Forces took the City, in the Year 1527, he received a Wound, as he was making his Retreat to the Caſtle of St Angelo; into which he forced his way, notwithſtanding the Soldiers, who purſued him, and joined Clement VIIth. He was afterwards guilty of baſe Ingratitude towards That Pope; for, upon the raiſing of the Siege, he went over to Cardinal Pompey Colonna, at whoſe Houſe he fell ſick, and died in a few Months.

(d) Jovius, ibid.

(e) Letters of Princes, fol. 93.

(f) Viz. De partibus Animalium.

(g) Letters of Princes, fol. 95.

" dicio confectum crederetur. In eo enim tanquam " vario centone præclara excellentis purpuræ fila, lan- " guentibus cæteris coloribus, intertexta notabantur " (11). —— It is thought he compoſed it out of " Cicero's Book de Gloria, which he wickedly and " maliciouſly deſtroyed. For in this Patch-work Com- " poſition there appear interſperſed ſeveral beautiful " Threads of the fineſt Purple, whilſt the reſt of the " Colours are faint and languid (12)." My ſecond Remark is, that when Varillas mentions Francis Philelphus, in his Secret Hiſtory of Florence, he imputes nothing to him in relation to the Book de Gloria; he accuſes Alcyonius alone of That ſcandalous Action. He ſays (13), that " this wretched Plagiary was o- " bliged to comfort the Proveditor Cornaro in the " Exile, to which he was condemned, for having " been defeated in the War againſt the Turks, tho' " it was not his own Fault. Algionus (14) ſent him " the Book, entitled De fortiter toleranda exilii for- " tuna. And as this Treatiſe was only compoſed out " of Sentences, though very ill thrown together, of " Cicero's Book de Gloria, it was much eſteemed; " notwithſtanding the more judicious obſerved that " there was no Coherence in it. Algionus, raviſhed " with the Succeſs of his Work, altered his Deſign " of publiſhing This Piece of Cicero. And, know- " ing very well that no one, beſides himſelf, had a " Copy of it, he threw it into the Fire, for fear it " ſhould be found ſome time or other among his Pa- " pers, and his Theft ſhould be diſcovered by that " means." If we compare this Relation with That, which is in the Life of Lewis XI, we ſhall have reaſon to wonder, how one and the ſame Man could relate the ſame Fact with ſo many inconſiſtent Varieties. Having not this Treatiſe of Alcyonius, I cannot determine, whether Varillas has juſtly remarked the Subject and Occaſion of it. I can only ſay, that the Title he gives it does not agree with That which Geſner ſet down, Medices Legatus, ſive de Exilio liber; and that a Paſſage of this Book (15) diſcovers to me, that John de Medicis, who was Pope Leo X, is introduced ſpeaking in it. But what I cannot determine by myſelf, I can affirm on the Word of a Friend of mine, whoſe Exactneſs and Capacity I am thoroughly acquainted with (16). His Obſervation, communicated to me, is as follows: " The Legatus Me- " dices, ſeu de Exilio, of Petrus Alcyonius is ſo far " from being wrote for the Conſolation of the pre- " tended Proveditor Cornaro, that it is dedicated by " the Author ad Nicolaum Shombergum Pontificem " Campanum (17), and there is not one Word in the " whole Book that can either directly or indirectly " relate to Cornaro. This Work, printed at Baſil in " 1546, is divided into two Books, the Title of which " runs thus; Petri Alcionii Medices Legatus, ſeu de " Exilio, ad Nicolaum Shombergum Pontificem Cam- " panum. It is written by way of Dialogue; and " John de Medicis, who was afterward Pope Leo X, " Julius de Medicis, and Laurence de Medicis, are the " Interlocutors. This is the Reaſon, why Medices " is put in the Title; and, becauſe the Author ſup- " poſes that theſe Interlocutors diſcourſed together a " little while after Pope Julius II. had ſent John " de Medicis as his Legate, at the Head of the Ar- " my, which was to retake Bologna, the Word Le- " gatus was added to that of Medices." What follows is certainly a great Miſtake. Nevertheleſs he repented of it before his Death (to wit, Alcyonius) and made a kind of Honourable Amends *, prefixed to the two Speeches, which he compoſed at Venice on the Deſolation cauſed by the Lutherans at Rome (18). Doubtleſs Varillas intended to tranſlate theſe Words of Paul Jovius: " Verum non multo poſt confirmatæ ſuſpi- " cionis invidiam duabus ſplendidiſſimis orationibus " peregregiè mitigavit, quum in clade urbis vehe- " mentiſſime invectus in Cæſarem, populi Romani " injurias & barbarorum immanitatem ſumma per- " fecti Oratoris eloquentia deploraſſet. —— Not long " after he wonderfully took off from the Odium of a " confirmed Suſpicion by two moſt elegant Orations, " when, upon the City's Deſolation, he inveighed moſt " vehemently againſt Cæſar, and lamented the Injus- " ries of the Roman People, and the Cruelty of their " inhuman Foes, with all the Eloquence of a perfect " Orator." Is there the leaſt Shadow of any thing relating to the Lutherans in this Paſſage? Is there any Traces of Repentance in it; any Footſteps of an Honourable Amends on Account of the Book de Gloria? Has Jovius any other Deſign than to ſhew that Alcyonius's Speeches were ſo much admired, that People were the more inclined to believe, that he might be the Author of the fine Paſſages in the Book, entitled, de Exilio? I don't believe theſe Speeches were compoſed at Venice.

I am ſurprized, that Pierius Valerianus, who regretted the Suppreſſion of a Work, with which he charged Alcyonius, took no notice of the Suppreſſion of the Treatiſe de Gloria. Having related that Peter Marcellus could not put the laſt Hand to ſome Works by Reaſon of his Sickneſs; he adds: " Quatuor tamen " libros exactiſſimæ interpretationis in Mathematicas " diſciplinas Braccius ejus filius ab interitu vindicarat, " vel ipſius auctoris de ſe teſtimonio abſolutos; at- " que ii Barbarorum manus effugerant, Braccii ip- " ſius diligentia in Arcem Ælian aſportati. Sed " enim in Petri Alcyonii manus cum incidiſſent, " ita ſuppreſſi ſunt, ut nuſquam amplius appare- " rint (19). —— However, his Son Braccius preſer- " ved from Deſtruction four Books of moſt exact " Lectures upon Mathematical Learning, which were " perfectly finiſhed, as appears from the Author's own " Teſtimony. Theſe eſcaped the Hands of the Barba- " rians (20), being conveyed by the Care of Braccius " to the Ælian Tower. But when they fell into " Peter Alcyonius's Hands, they were ſo ſuppreſſed, " as never afterwards to appear."

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, Dr Bourdelot, Phyſician to the King, and to the Ducheſs of Burgundy, did me the Favour to ſend me his Copy of the Treatiſe of Alcyonius. It is a ſmall Book in 4to, printed at Venice in the Year 1522, in ædibus Aldi & Andreæ Aſulani Soceri. The Title of it is, Petri Alcyonii Medices Legatus de Exſilio; it contains two Parts (21), which are both dedicated ad Nicolaum Schonbergium Pontificem Campanum. I found the Information, which Mr de Larroque had ſent me concerning this Work, to be true. It does not contain any thing which relates to the Exile of the Venetian Proveditor. The three Interlocutors conſider only their own Condition. They were all of the Houſe of Medicis, and continued ſtill under the Misfortune of Baniſhment. John de Medicis comforts himſelf, and them too: He is the chief Actor in this Piece, and alledges the Reaſons and Examples; in a Word, the Author beſtows upon him his Erudition, and his elegant Style. Note, that this Book of Alcyo-

(11) Jovius, Elog. cap. 223. p. 266.

(12) Page 269.

(13) Page 268.

(14) So his Name is written throughout the whole Edition of the Anecdotes.

(15) It is very curious: read it in Les Opuſcles de Colomies, chap. 15.

(16) Mr de Larroque.

(17) He was afterwards a Cardinal: I mention him in the Article SCHOMBERG (Nicholas).

* Amende Honorable.

(18) Varillas, Anecdot. pag. 108.

(19) Pierius Valerian. de Litterat. Infelicit. p. 76.

(20) He means the Army of Charles V. which plundered Rome in 1527.

(21) The running Title of the firſt is, Medices Legatus prior; and the running Title of the ſecond is, Medices Legatus poſterior.

Digitized by Google

(b) Pierius Valerianus, de Literat. Infelicitat. pag. 63.

Months (b). His Vanity hindered him from becoming more learned [F], and his Practice of Detraction raised him many Enemies [G]. The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is nothing to the purpose in this Article [H]. For it is only a faithful Copy of Varillas's enormous Faults. Some learned Men have very much commended Alcyonius, and his Translations [I].

We find something concerning him in the Letters of Longolius, which is not much to his Advantage [K].

nius was printed at Geneva, in the Year 1624, in 8vo, with two Treatises of Cardan (22).

(22) That de Sapientia, and That de Consolatione

[F] His Vanity hindred him from becoming more learned.] This is the Opinion of Pierius Valerianus; "Non displicuisset mihi Alcyonius, si, quantum stylo "profecerat, amicorum consilium de rebus adhibere "voluisset, qui, nisi ipsimet sibi tantum arrogasset, "futurus omnino fuerat è primoribus; multam enim "Græcis, Latinisque literis operam impenderat, & "disciplinis variis oblectatus erat (23). —— Alcyonius "would not have displeased me, if, as he was Master "of a good Style, he had but consulted his Friends "in relation to the Subject-matter of his Compositions; "for, had he not depended so much upon his own Judg- "ment, he would have been one of the first Class of "Authors; for he had bestowed great Pains in the "Greek and Roman Learning, and was Master of "many Sciences."

(23) Pierius Valerian. de Litterat. Infelicit. p. 63.

[G] His Practice of Detraction raised him many Enemies.] Let us hear the same Evidence again: "Is eo primum infelicitatis incommodo flagellatus est, "quod dum de litteratis omnibus male sentit, dica- "cissima omnes obtrectatione lacerabat, unde om- "nium tam doctorum quam imperitorum in se odium "concitarat. —— He was particularly unhappy in "this Respect, that, having an ill Opinion of the Learn- "ed in general, he was perpetually detracting from "their Merits; by which means he drew upon him- "self the Hatred both of the Learned and the Igno- "rant." See below the Remark [K].

[H] The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is nothing to the Purpose in this Article.] I. They have not taken notice, that the Algionus of Varillas's Anecdotes is a Chimera of the Transcribers. No doubt the Author gave it Alcionius in the Original of those Memoirs; and consequently they should not have distinguished the pretended Algionus from Peter Alcyonius, whom Moreri had justly placed in the XVIth Century. This put me in mind, that Claude du Verdier, in his Censura in omnes penes autores (p. 73.), says, that Peter Avionius had remarked many Errors in Apuleius's Book de Mundo. The Errata corrects Avionius by Alcionius. Notwithstanding which, Avionius is cited in the fifty sixth Page of the Plagiariorum Syllabus, printed at Amsterdam, in 1694, with the Amœnitates Theologico-Philologicæ of Mr Almeloveen. II. They should have considered, that, according to Varillas, this pretended Algionus, having deplored the Ravages, which Charles the Fifth's Army committed at Rome in the Pontificate of Clement VII, should have been placed in the XVIth Century. III. That which was taken out of the Anecdotes is not purged from any Errors.

[I] Some learned Men have very much commended Alcyonius, and his Translations.] I shall only mention what was wrote to Erasmus by Ambrosius Leo Nolanus, in the Year 1518. This Friend, who was an able Physician, informed him, that the Senate of Venice had caused it to be proclaimed by Sound of Trumpet, that all those, who aspired to the Professorship of the Greek Tongue, vacant by the Death of Mark Musurus, should present themselves; and that two Months should be appointed for taking their Names; and examining their Abilities and Knowledge of the Greek Authors. "Statutum est tempus duo- "rum mensium quo competitores & nomina dent, "& legendo & aperiendo Græcos autores ostendant "qui viri sint, & quantum lingua & ingenio polle- "ant (24)." Leo adds, that several of Musurus's Disciples prepared themselves to dispute his Succession, and that Alcyonius, one of the most polite among them, distinguished himself by many admirable Translations. It is better to express this according to the Original; "Inter eorum elegantiores unus Petrus "Alcyonius multa è Græco in Romanum sermonem "elegantissimè vertit. Nam Orationes pleraque Iso- "cratis ac Demosthenis tanta Arpinitate expressit, ut "Ciceronem ipsum nihilominus legere videris. Ari- "stotelisque multa vertit tam candidè ut Latium glo- "riabundum dicere possit; en Aristotelem nostrum ha- "bemus. Idem ipse juvenis, ut est literarum opti- "marum utrarumque maximus alumnus, ita tui quo- "que amantissimus, ac studiorum tuorum laudator "summus (25). —— Among the more polite of these, (25) Ibid. "Peter Alcyonius rendered many things from the pag. 531. "Greek into the Roman Tongue, with the greatest "Elegance. For he expressed several of the Orations "of Isocrates and Demosthenes, so nearly in the Ci- "ceronian Style, that you would imagine you was "reading Cicero himself. And so fairly did he trans- "late many of Aristotle's Pieces, that Latium might "boast an Aristotle of it's own. This young Author, "as he is the greatest Follower of the best, and of "both kinds of Learning, so is he very much your "Friend, and extreamly fond of your Works." Eras- mus, answering this Letter, the fifteenth of October, the Year following, caus'd Peter Alcyonius to be complimented in his Name, and confess'd, that he had never heard of him. It were to be wish'd, since there are different Opinions about Alcyonius's Translations, that the learned Mr Huet had done him the Honour to take notice of him, when he compos'd his Dialogues de Interpretatione.

I shall add at this time another Testimony to that of Leo Nolanus. I find that Gabriel Naudé very much commends Alcyonius's Translations, in his Treatise de Fato & Vitæ Termino. He tells us, that this Translator, having examin'd three Objections, which may be made to those, who say that the Treatise de Mundo is a Piece of Aristotle's, has recourse, afterwards, to every thing, which may prevent his being obliged to confess, that it is a spurious Piece, concluding with these Words; But let us leave these disagreeable Questions to the Grammarians. "Difficultates "ejusmodi amoliri tentet: atque ne supposititium "hunc fœtum, quem una cum legitimis aliis ELE- "GANTISSIMÆ de Græco Latinum fecerat, agnoscere "cogeretur, vertit se in omnes partes, tandemque his "verbis concludit: Sed morositatem ejus generis quæ- "stionum Grammaticis relinquamus (26)."

(26) Gabr. Naudeus de Fato & Vitæ Termino, pag. 32.

[K] We find something concerning him in the Letters of Longolius, which is not much to his Advantage.] We have already seen (27), that, in the Opinion of Longolius, Alcyonius's Looks, upon the News of the publication of Sepulveda's Book, would be an entertaining Sight. Here is something worse. Alcyonius, having passionately desired to carry one of Longolius's Letters to Mark Antony Flaminius, went away without taking it with him, upon which Longolius makes this Reflexion: "Nosti hominis ingenium: Ille enim "& cœnæ quam ei opiparam hic dederamus, & lau- "dum quibus à nobis ornatissimus discesserat, & lite- "rarum quas summa contentione ut festinanter scri- "berem pervicerat, oblitus, profectus esse dicitur. "Quod vos idcirco scire volui, ut meis verbis hac de "inhumanitate cum eo expostuletis (28). —— You "know the Nature of the Man: After an handsome "Entertainment, which I prepared for him, and the "many Praises I bestowed upon him, he forgot it all, "and went away, without taking with him the Let- "ters, which, at his own earnest Sollicitation, I had "written in haste. This I thought fit to inform you "of, that you may expostulate with him in my Name, "concerning this uncourteous Treatment." Longolius adds, That it was fortunate enough; since he had said some things in his Letters, which he desired Alcyonius, as well as others, should never be acquainted with. Is not this to insinuate that he was thought capable of breaking open a Letter? "Quanquam id ipsum de "quo queror non omnino incommodè nobis cecidis- "se videri possit, ea enim iis literis incautè commise- "ram quæ illum in primis celatum esse cupiebam. "Perfecerat scilicet pristinæ nostræ consuetudinis usus, "ut magis quibuscum agerem in mentem mihi veni- "ret, quam cui literas daturus essem satis meminis- "sem (29)." If he be the Person mentioned in another Letter of Longolius (30), as a learned Man conjectures (31), what a Picture is drawn of him? What unpolite

(27) In Remark [B].

(28) Christoph. à Longolius Epist. 21. lib. 2. fol. 203. verso.

(29) Id. ib. fol. 204.

(30) It is the 20th of the 2d Book.

(31) Mr de la Monnoie: I am obliged to him for these Passages of Longolius, or Longueil.

(24) Epist. Eras. 28. lib. 10. p. 530.

Digitized by Google

unpolite Behaviour, what outrageous Detraction is imputed to him; and what Contempt is ſhewn for his Perſon! What makes it doubtful whether our Alcyonius is intended in that Letter, is, that a little after Longolius mentions him without any ſeeming diſlike to him; but this Reaſon for doubting is no convincing Proof; ſince the Picture given of him agrees with that, which another Author, of the ſame Age, has drawn of the ſame Alcyonius. Gyraldus, having ſaid (32), That Pierius Valerianus was a ſincere Man, adds immediately after; "diverſæ naturæ eſt "Petrus Alcyonius Venetus, mordax & maledicus, "nec pudens magis quam prudens - - - - - - mitte de "hoc nebulone plura, qui bellum bonis omnibus indixit, flagris & fuſte coërcendus - - - -". - - Peter Alcyonius, the Venetian, was of a different Diſpoſition; a Back-biter, and a Detractor, nor more modeſt than prudent. - - - - - - - - But no more of this paultry Fellow, who was at open War with all good Men; and who deſerves the Correction of the Whipping-poſt, or a good Caneing." Note, that the ſame Author owns, that he compoſed very good Lyric and Iambic Verſes, and that he boaſted to have wrote an excellent Tragedy on the Death of JESUS CHRIST (33).

(32) Lilius Gregorius Gyraldus de Poëtis ſui temporis Dialog. 1. pag. 542. Edit. 1696.

(33) Id. ib.

ALCMAN, a Lyric Poet, flouriſhed in the Twenty ſeventh Olympiad (a). Some ſay he was a Lacedemonian, and others, that he was born at Sardes, the chief City of Lydia. What is certain, is, that he was a Freeman of Sparta [A], and that the Lacedemonians thought it much to their Honour, that they had ſupply'd Greece with ſuch a Genius [B]. He wrote many Verſes, of which there are but few extant, which are cited by Athenæus, or ſome other Ancient Author. He was a Man of a very Amorous Diſpoſition, and is looked upon as the Father of Genteel Poetry [C]. Nay, it has been ſaid, I think, that he was the firſt, who introduced the Cuſtom of ſinging Love-Songs in Company (b). The Name of one of his Miſtreſſes is preſerved (c): She was Megaloſtrata, a Poeteſs. If he had ſtopped here, there would not have been ſo much Reaſon to complain of him; but it is ſaid, that he was likewiſe in love with one Chœeron (d). Alcman was one of the greateſt Gluttons of his time (e); this Quality would have been attended with great Inconveniences, if Poetry had been in thoſe Times upon the ſame Foot it has often been; I mean, very unfit to maintain it's Maſter. He died of a very ſingular Diſeaſe; for he was eaten up with Lice (f). He muſt not be diſtinguiſhed from the Poet Alcmæon [D]; and I ſee no neceſſity for acknowledging Two Alcmans, one of Lacedemon, and the other of Meſſena [E].

(a) Suidas in Αλκμάν.

(b) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 600.

(c) Id. ibid.

(d) Id. lib. 10. p. 416.

(e) Ibid. & Ælian. Var. Hiſtor. lib. 1. cap. 27.

(f) Ariſtot. de Hiſtor. Anim. lib. 5. cap. 31. Plin. lib. 11. cap. 33. Plutarch, in Sylla, pag. 474.

[A] A Freeman of Sparta.] This appears from an Epigram, which Plutarch inſerts in his Treatiſe of Exile (1). The Author of that Epigram makes Alcman ſay, That if he had been educated in Sardes, the Country of his Anceſtors, he had been only a poor Prieſt of the Goddeſs Cybele, deprived of his Manly Parts; but that he is at preſent a Citizen of Lacedemon, well inſtructed in the Greek Learning, which makes him ſuperior to the Kings of Lydia. The Latin Interpreter has ill tranſlated the firſt Verſe of that Epigram,

(1) Oper. Moral. pag. 599.

- - - - - Σάρδεις ἀρχαῖος ταλήρων νόμος.

- - - - - O mea majorumque meorum Patria Sardes!

for we muſt conclude from this Tranſlation, that Alcman was born at Sardes (2), which the Greek Words do not import: Thus it happens, that a Tranſlator is ſometimes a ſower of Diſſenſion, when he leaſt thinks of it. The Tranſlator of the Greek Epigram into Latin was not aware, that, by adding the Word mea, he ſhould induce many Authors obſtinately to maintain, that Alcman was not born at Lacedemon. How many Writers are there, who conſult only the Verſions, and who make uſe of all the Proofs, which the Verſion ſupplies them with, whether the Greek Original will allow it or not? Salmaſius has learnedly corrected this Epigram (3); but I do not well apprehend what they mean, who refer us to him, as to a Judge, who has put an end to the Diſpute about Alcman's Country. The Queſtion is, whether this Poet was born at Lacedemon, or at Sardes in Lydia. Suidas maintains the former Opinion (4), Crates the ſecond (5). Velleius Paterculus (6), and Ælian (7), deny what Suidas affirms. Of what uſe is the Epigram in putting an end to this Diſpute, ſince it does not inform us, where Alcman was born, but only that he was not educated in Sardes, the Country of his Anceſtors; that he was educated after the Greek Manner, and that he enjoy'd the Freedom of Lacedemon? This may equally ſignify theſe two things; either that Alcman was carried into Greece, being a Child, or that his Father went and ſettled there, before this Son was born. In this latter Caſe, Alcman might have been born in the City of Lacedemon. Scaliger was of this Opinion, but he founded it upon a bad Reaſon. "Ego "Laconem fuiſſe arbitror, quum Laconica dialecto "uſus ſit (8).——I am of Opinion that he was a La- "cedemonian, ſince he writes in the Doric Dialect." If he had thought of the Epigram, mentioned by Plutarch, he would have ſeen the inſufficiency of this Reaſon. Alcman, not having been educated in Lydia, but in Greece, and living at Lacedemon, muſt needs have made uſe of the Doric Dialect, which was that of Sparta. How harſh ſoever it was, yet he wrote his Poems in it. Ὦ ποιήσαντι ἄσματα, ὐδὲν ἐς ἡδονὴν αὐτῶν ἐλυμήνατο Τ Λακώνων ἡ γλῶσσα, ἥκιστα παρεχομένη τὸ εὔφωνον (9). Cui in cantibus pangendis nihil omnino Laconica lingua obfuit, etſi nihil ea in vocibus appellandis habet ſuavitatis.

(2) Amiot is guilty of the ſame Error.

(3) Salmaſ. Exercit. Plinian. p. 885.

(4) He ſays he was born at Meſſoa, which was a part of Lacedemon, according to Strabo, as he is corrected by Salmaſius, ubi ſupra.

(5) Apud Suidam in Αλκμάν.

(6) Alcmana Lacenes falſo ſibi vindicant. Patercul. lib. 1. ſub fine.

(7) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 12. cap. 50.

(8) Scalig. Animadv. in Euſeb. n. 1300.

(9) Pauſan. lib. 3. p. 96.

[B] The Lacedemonians thought it much to their Honour, that they had ſupply'd Greece with ſuch a Genius.] The Paſſage of Paterculus, which I have cited, proves this; theſe Words of Statius

- - - - & tetricis Alcman cantatus Amyclis (10).

Alcman the Theme of rough Amyclæ's Song;

(10) Stat. Silv. 3. lib. 5. ver. 153.

is a farther Proof. Add to this the Monument erected to Alcman, near the Temple of Helen (11).

(11) Pauſan. ubi ſupra.

[C] Is looked upon as the Father of Genteel Poetry.] This is evident from this Paſſage of Athenæus (12). Ἀρχύτας ὁ Ἁρμονιακὸς, ὡς φησι Καιμαιλέων, Ἀλκμᾶνα γεγονέναι Τ ἐρωτικῶν μελῶν πατέρα, καὶ ἐκδέξαι πρῶτον μελὸς, ἀκόλαστον ὄντα καὶ περὶ τὰς γυναῖκας καὶ Τ τοιαύτην μέσαν εἰς τὰς διαλείβας. Archytas Harmoniacus writes, as Chamæleon tells us, that Alcman was the firſt Inventer of Love Verſes, that he had a great Paſſion for Women, and was the firſt, who introduced that kind of Poetry, which is ſung in Meetings and Aſſemblies.

(12) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 600. See likewiſe Suidas, in Ἀλκμάν.

[D] He muſt not be diſtinguiſhed from the Poet Alcmæon.] St Jerome, in the Chronicle of Euſebius, having ſpoke of Alcmæon, under the thirtieth Olympiad, mentions Alcman under the Forty ſecond, and makes uſe of this Citation, ut quibuſdam videtur. Scaliger reads Alcman in the firſt Paſſage, inſtead of Alcmæon. It is plain, by the Reign of Ardys, King of Lydia, in whoſe Reign Crates plac'd Alcman, that this Poet flouriſhed about the thirtieth Olympiad, which is the Time, wherein Alcmæon is placed in the Chronicle of Euſebius. If this Reaſon is not ſufficient to ſhew, that thoſe two Names belong to one and the ſame Perſon, it will undeniably prove, that Alcmæon, Αλκμαίων, and Alcman, Αλκμάν, differ only in the Dialect; and that the firſt ought to be changed into the ſecond, by the Rules of the Doric Dialect. See the Commentary of Salmaſius on Solinus, pag. 885. The Alcman of the Forty ſecond Olympiad, is a Chimerical one. Euſebius placed him there, becauſe he had read ſome Authors, who were miſtaken, in relation to Alcman's Age.

[E] I ſee no neceſſity for acknowledging two Alcmans, one of Lacedemon, and the other of Meſſena.] I think Suidas

Digitized by Google

Suidas is the only Author, who makes this Diſtinction. But his Authority is not very great, when he quotes no Author, and mentions no Circumſtances. This is the Caſe of his Alcman of Meſſena; he ſays nothing of him. Let us remember that he ſaid, That the true Alcman was born at Meſſoa, ἀπὸ Μεσσόας. This Place being not famous, ſome Tranſcribers thought it ſhould be ἀπὸ Μεσσήνης, in the Authors who had reported the ſame thing with Suidas. Their pretended Correction produced a new Alcman, who was tack'd to Suidas's Patch-work. This Conjecture appears to me more probable, than That of Lilius Gyraldus. He acknowledges but one Alcman; but he will have him to be born at Meſſena, and changes ἀπὸ Μεσσόας in Suidas into ἀπὸ Μεσσήνης. Scaliger juſtly rejects this Conjecture (13).

(13) Scalig. Animadv. in Euſeb. n. 1360.

ALCMENA, the Daughter of Electryon, King of Mycenæ [A], was the Wife of Amphitryon, and the Mother of Hercules. She was delivered of this Son, whilſt her Huſband was living; and yet Hercules was not the Son of Amphitryon, but of Jupiter, who, aſſuming the Form of Alcmena's Huſband [B], was admitted without any ſcruple to the Matrimonial Functions. He was ſo well pleaſed with the ſport, that he continued the Night to three times it's uſual Length [C]. Behold the Origin of Hercules! moſt Modern Authors ſay, that Alcmena was already with Child, by Amphitryon; but Apollodorus inſinuates plainly enough, that ſhe was yet a Maid [D]; which is more for the Honour of Jupiter. However it be, Amphitryon returned home the ſame Day, which [A] The Daughter of Electryon, King of Mycenæ.] The Poet Aſius ſays ſhe was born of Amphiaraus, and Eriphyle (1). Others ſay indeed, That Electryon was her Father, but, according to them, her Mother was Anaxo, the Daughter of Alcæus, the Son of Perſeus (2), and not Lyſidice, the Daughter of Pelops and Hippodamia, as Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Hofman, &c. ſay ſhe was (3). The Scholiaſt on Pindar is for Lyſidice (4).

(1) Pauſan. l. 5. p. 165.

(2) Apollodor. Bibl. lib. 2. p. 96. Scholiaſt. Homeri in Iliad. Ξ. ver. 323.

(3) See their Dictionaries.

(4) In Olymp. Od. 7.

[B] Aſſuming the Form of Alcmena's Husband.] Diodorus Siculus obſerves, that Jupiter took this Method, becauſe he would not uſe any Violence, and becauſe, in the way of Perſuaſion, he had no Hope of prevailing upon ſo chaſte a Lady as Alcmena was (5). The ſame Hiſtorian obſerves, that, on this Occaſion, Jupiter was not moved by that laſcivious Paſſion, which he had felt ſo often for other Women, and that his only Inclination was to get an Hero. For which Reaſon he did it not in haſte; he employ'd much time in the Work, three ſucceſſive Nights. Our Phyſicians would laugh at ſuch a Reaſon. I cannot tell why Plautus makes Jupiter ſpeak thus to Amphitryon.

(5) Diodor. Sicul. l. 5. cap. 2.

Tu cum Alcumena uxore antiquam in gratiam
Redi: haud promeruit quamobrem vitio verteres,
Mea vi ſubacta eſt facere (6).

(6) Plaut. in Amphitr. ſub finem.

—— Be reconciled, as before, to your Wife Alcmena; ſhe has not deſerved your Reproaches; my Power compelled her to this Action.

For, ſince Jupiter had put on the Form of the Huſband, it was not neceſſary to uſe any Violence; and we have juſt now ſeen that he aſſumed this Shape, only becauſe he would not employ any violent Methods. A modern Author alledges this Example of Alcmena, to prove that a ſincere Ignorance is a good Excuſe, and quotes ſome fine Lines of Moliere (7). A thouſand things might be ſaid upon this Subject; it affords Matter for a great variety of Reflexions.

(7) See the new Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm, pag. 280, &c.

Note, that ſome Perſons will have Plautus's Thought to be this. Alcmena was conſtrained to let me enjoy her, ſince I had the Power of aſſuming your Reſemblance. If it be ſo, it muſt be ſaid, that the Intention of the Poet was much better than his Expreſſion.

[C] He continued the Night to three times it's uſual Length.] Jupiter was ſo well pleaſed with the Lady, that he made the Night laſt all that Day, and the Night following; which moved Lycophron to call Hercules τεισέσπερον λέων, the Lion of three Nights, as Lucian did likewiſe (8). Perhaps Vigenere alluded to theſe Words of Hyginus: Qui tam libens cum ea concubuit, ut unum diem uſurparet, duas noctes congeminaret (9). The Dialogue of Lucian, which takes notice of the long Night, which Jupiter ſpent with Alcmena, informs us, that Mercury went with Orders to the Sun, to ſtand ſtill three Days, that Jupiter might have time enough for the Production of Hercules; one Night not being ſufficient for the Generation of ſo great a Warrior. It ſeems Jupiter did his beſt; for the Weight of the Child had like to have burſt his Mother. Τοῦτον ἓν ἐν μιᾷ νυκτὶ γενέσθαι ἀδύνατον (10). Hoc una nocte abſolvi non poteſt.

(8) Vigenere upon Philoſtrat. Tom. 2. fol. 17. Edit. 4to.

(9) Hygin. cap. 29.

(10) Lucian. Dial. Merc. & Solis. See Diod. Sicul. lib. 5. c. 2.

Tendebat gravitas uterum mihi, quodque ferebam
Tantum erat, ut poſſes auctorem dicere tecti
Ponderis eſſe Jovem (11).

(11) Ovid. Metam. lib. 9. ver. 288.

My Womb extends with ſuch a mighty Load,
As Jove the Parent of the Burthen ſhow'd.
Mr GAY.

Many Authors are of opinion, that this Night was not trippled, but only doubled (12). Others ſay, that it laſted nine times longer than uſual. St Jerome, who might have read this in the Writings of two Fathers of the Church (13), made no uſe of it, and kept to the Tradition of the double Night: In Alcmenæ adulterio duas noctes Jupiter copulavit. From that Time Jupiter took his leave of Women; Alcmena was the laſt Mortal whom he lay with. Niobe was the firſt; fixteen Generations paſs'd between the one and the other (14). Such was the Duration of Jupiter's Intrigues on Earth. Now, as his Diverſion with Alcmena was the laſt of the kind he was to take in this World, was it not reaſonable that it ſhould laſt longer than uſual? Alcmena wondered at the length of the Night (15): It ſeem'd therefore long to her; this makes for her Honour. And indeed ſhe was a very virtuous Woman (16), and would not have merited, though ſhe had loſt her Sight, the Satire of the following Diſtich.

(12) Amor. lib. 1. Eleg. 13. Propert. lib. 2. Eleg. 22. Capella, lib. 2. c. 39.

(13) Clem. Alexandr. in Protrept. pag. 20. Arnobius, lib. 4. pag. 145. whoſe Words are theſe, Quis illum in Alcmena novem noctibus fecit pervigilaſſe continuis?

Cum longas noctes Moreta ab amore rogaret,
Favit amor votis, perpetuaſque dedit.

(14) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 5. cap. 2.

Long Nights Moreta (17) aſk'd, in love to burn;
Love heard her Wiſh, and gave her Night etern.

(15) Hygin. cap. 29.

(16) See Remark [B].

Soſia, Amphitryon's Valet, made an Obſervation worthy of him, when he perceived that the Night was longer than it uſed to be; he wiſh'd thoſe Gallants Joy, who had paid dear for their Bargains.

(17) The Counteſs de Moret, Henry the Great's Miſtreſs.

Ubi ſunt iſti ſcortatores qui ſoli inviti cubant?
Hæc nox ſcita'ſt exercendo ſcorto conducto malé (18).

(18) Amphitr. Act. 1. Scen. 1. ver. 130.

Where are thoſe intriguing Sparks, who, againſt their Will, lie alone? This Night is calculated for the full Enjoyment of a dear-bought Wench.

[D] That ſhe was yet a Maid.] Apollodorus relates, That Electryon, going to revenge the Death of his Sons, put his Kingdom, and his Daughter Alcmena into the Hands of Amphitryon, after having made him ſwear, that he would abſtain from Alcmena, till his Return (19). Amphitryon, having inadvertently killed him, a little while after, was obliged to ſeek a Retreat. He went with Alcmena into Bœotia, and as ſhe declared that ſhe would marry Him, who ſhould revenge the Death of her Brothers, he engaged in purſuit of this Revenge, and, aſſociating himſelf with others, made War with the Teleboes, who had killed Alcmena's Brothers (20). Being returned to Thebes victorious, and triumphant, he underſtood that ANOTHER HIMSELF had enjoy'd the Lady. It is plain that he had not the firſt Favour; doubtleſs Alcmena had put off the Ceremony of the Wedding, or at leaſt the Conſummation of her Marriage, till Amphitryon

(19) Apollodor. Bibliotheca. lib. 2. pag. 99.

(20) Id. ib. pag. 101.

Digitized by Google

which ſucceeded the Long Night, which That God had paſſed with Alcmena. He was not ſo well received by his Wife, as he might have expected, after Abſence; and he ſoon diſcovered the Reaſon of it, by the account, which She gave him of the Tranſactions of the preceeding Night. They, who ſhall put themſelves in his Place, may tell us what he thought of the Matter. He immediately had recourſe to the Soothſayer, and learnt from Tireſias, that Jupiter, in the Form of Amphitryon, had enjoyed Alcmena. He muſt bear it, as well as he could; and it does not appear, that his Chagrin continued very long; for, the Night following, he got his Wife with Child, who was already ſo by a God (a). Juno, out of her uſual Jealouſy, prevented the Delivery of this Lady, as long as ſhe could; it was only the Dexterity of a Servant Maid, which eluded the Ill Intentions of Lucina [E], who hindered Alcmena from being (a) Hyginus, c. 29. ſays, That he lay no more with her, and ſpeaks only of Hercules. See Apollod. Biblioth. lib. 2. pag. 97.

phitryon had conquered the Teleboes. Jupiter, knowing that Amphitryon was upon his Return, and that there was no other time to crop this Flower of Virginity, but whilſt Amphitryon was on his Journey, prevented him, and did his Buſineſs before the Huſband's Arrival. Apollodorus adds, That Amphitryon, having enjoy'd Alcmena, got her with Child; this Child was a Night younger than Hercules. Αλκμήνη δ' δύο ἐμήνυσε παῖδας. Διὶ μὲν Ἡρακλέα μιᾷ νυκτὶ πρεσβύτερον, Ἀμφιτρύωνι Ἰφικλέα (21). Alcmena vero duos peperit filios: Jovi quidem Herculem una nocte grandiorem, atque Amphitryoni Iphiclem. This is a farther Confirmation of what I am to prove. The Scholiaſt upon Homer is more preciſe than Apollodorus: He ſays plainly, That the Marriage was not conſummated 'till after the return of Amphitryon (22). In Plautus's Comedy Matters go otherwiſe. Amphitryon leaves his Wife with Child, when he goes to the War (23). A great Temptation indeed to Jupiter! It would be much worſe, if Plautus had obſerved the Unity of Time, as Mademoiſelle le Fevre will have it. In that Caſe, it muſt be ſaid, That Jupiter interrupted the whole courſe of Nature, by ſtopping the Sun, to divert himſelf the longer with a Woman big with two Children, and ſo near her time, that, if he had ſtay'd a little longer, the Midwife would have been obliged to ſay to him, give me your Place. This is an unlucky Alternative for Plautus. For either the Time of his Comedy muſt be ſeveral Months; or he muſt ſuppoſe a Woman, ready to be delivered of Twins, a very tempting Morſel to the greateſt of all Monarchs; and this, with ſuppoſing at the ſame time, that the King of Gods and Men had already begot one of theſe Twins. Take notice that the Poet does not feign, that Jupiter diſguiſed himſelf in the Shape of Amphitryon, in order to come like a good Husband to the Aſſiſtance of Alcmena, in her Labour; it was the Viſit of a very amorous Spark. See how Mercury expreſſes himſelf in the Prologue,

(21) Id. ib. pag. 103.

(22) Schol. Homeri in Iliad. ξ. ver. 323.

(23) Gravidam ego illam hic reliqui cum abeo. Act. 2. Scen. 2. ver. 34. Et cum te gravidam, cum te pulcrè plenam adſpicio, gaudeo. Ibid. ver. 52. Mercury affirms the ſame thing in the Prologue.

Et meus Pater nunc intus hic cum illa cubat,
Et hæc ob eam rem nox eſt facta longior,
Dum ille qua cum volt voluptatem capit.

My Father, within there, is now in Bed with her; and it is upon this Account that the Night is longer than uſual, to give him an Opportunity of ſatisfying his Appetite.

As for theſe Words of Soſia,

Hæc nox ſcita eſt exercendo ſcorto malè conducto.

This Night is calculated for the full Enjoyment of a dear-bought Wench.

He illuſtrates them thus:

Meus Pater nunc pro hujus verbis rectè & ſapienter facit
Qui complexus cum Alcumena cubat amans animo obſequens (24).

(24) Plauti Amphytr. Act. 1. Sc. 1. ver. 133.

—— My Father in this Buſineſs acts a very wiſe Part; as he loves the Sport, he has pitched upon Alcmena for a Bedfellow.

He congratulates himſelf for having removed all Interruptions to Jupiter's Joy, and prepares to continue his good Offices, 'till the Gallant be ſatisfied.

Bene & proſperè hoc hodie operis proceſſit mihi;
Amovi à foribus maximam moleſtiam,
Patri ut liceret tuto illam amplexarier.
- - - - - - -
Erroris ambo ego illos & dementiæ
Complebo, atque omnem Amphitruonis familiam
Adeo, uſque ſatietatem dum capiet Pater
Illius quam amat (25).

(25) Ibid. Act. 1. Sc. 2. ver. 1, 2, 3, 5, &c.

Thus far Succeſs attends upon my Counſels; I have removed the greateſt Obſtacle from the Door, that my Father may take his ſwing of Pleaſure in full Security. —— I will perplex them both with Miſtakes, and fill them with Madneſs; and not only the Maſter and Man, but Amphitryon's whole Family; 'till my Father is cloy'd with the Enjoyment of his Miſtreſs.

[E] The Dexterity of a Servant Maid, which eluded the ill Intentions of Lucina (26).] I follow Ovid's Narrative. Alcmena had been ſeven Days in Labour, with horrible Pains. Galanthis, one of her Women, came in, and went out, and, being apprehenſive of ſome Charm, upon ſeeing a Woman ſetting at the Door, and muttering to herſelf, with her Hands joined on her Knees, ſhe told her that Alcmena was delivered. Lucina (for it was ſhe, who was ſitting in that Poſture) no ſooner heard theſe Words, but ſhe disjoined her Hands, and roſe up, which cauſed Alcmena to be delivered.

(26) She was the Goddeſs of Childbirth.

- - - - ſubſedit in illa
Ante fores ara, dextroque à poplite lævum
Preſſa genu, digitis inter ſe pectine junctis,
Suſtinuit partus, tacita quoque carmina voce
Dixit, & inceptos tenuerunt carmina partus.
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Una miniſtrarum, media de plebe, Galanthis
Flava comas, aderat, faciendis ſtrenua juſſis,
Officiis dilecta ſuis. Ea ſenſit iniqua
Neſcio quid Junone geri, dumque exit & intrat
Sæpe fores, Divam reſidentem vidit in ara,
Brachiaque in genibus digitis connexa tenentem;
Et, quæcunque es, ait, dominæ gratare; levata eſt
Argolis Alcmene, potiturque puerpera voto.
Exſiluit, junctaſque manus patefacta remiſit
Diva potens uteri: vinclis levor ipſa remiſſis (27).

(27) Ovid. Metamorph. lib. 9. ver. 298, &c.

She hears the groaning Anguiſh of my Fits,
And on the Altar at my Door ſhe ſits.
O'er her left Knee her croſſing Leg ſhe caſt,
Then knits her Fingers cloſe, and wrings them faſt.
This ſtay'd the Birth; in muttering Verſe ſhe pray'd.
The muttering Verſe th' unfiniſh'd Birth delay'd.
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Among the Theban Dames Galanthis ſtands,
Strong limb'd, red hair'd, and juſt to my Commands.
She firſt perceiv'd, that all theſe racking Woes
From the perſiſting Hate of Juno roſe.
As here and there ſhe paſs'd, by chance ſhe ſees
The ſeated Goddeſs; on her cloſe-preſs'd Knees
Her faſt-knit Hands ſhe leans; with chearful Voice
Galanthis cries, whoe'er thou art, rejoice,
Congratulate the Dame, ſhe lies at Reſt,
At length the Gods Alcmena's Womb have bleſt.
Swift from her Seat the ſtartled Goddeſs ſprings,
No more concealed, her Hands abroad ſhe flings;
The Charm unloos'd, the Birth my Pangs reliev'd; Galanthis' Laughter vex'd the Pow'r deceiv'd.

GAY.

Pauſanias,

Digitized by Google

being delivered. She was brought to bed of Two Boys; He, of whom Jupiter was Father, was called Hercules; and He, who was the Son of Amphitryon, was named Iphiclus (b). It is said, That she married Rhadamanthus, after the Death of Amphitryon, and that her Tomb was to be seen adjoining to That of Rhadamanthus, near Haliartus, in Bœotia (c). Others say, That she was buried at Megara, and that the Oracle ordered it so, when Hercules's Children consulted it, on a Dispute between them, some being willing that she should be carried to Argos, and others maintaining that she ought to be brought to Thebes (d). She died on the Frontiers of Megara, as she was returning from Argos to Thebes (e). Hercules was already dead; she survived him to her great Grief; but on the other hand she had the Satisfaction of holding in her hands the Head of Hercules's Persecutor, and of tearing out his Eyes [F]. It is related, that her Corps disappeared in the Ceremony of the Funeral, and that a Stone was found in her Bed (f). Which made Pausanias say, That she was metamorphosed into a Stone (g). Antoninus Liberalis tells us, that, whilst the Heraclidæ were preparing the Funeral Rites of Alcmena, Jupiter ordered Mercury to steal her away, and to transport her to the Fortunate Islands, in order to marry her to Rhadamanthus. This Order was obey'd; and a Stone was placed in her Coffin. They who carried it, finding it very heavy, opened it, and, instead of a dead Body, found a Stone, which they deposited in the sacred Grove, where was afterwards a Chapel of Alcmena, at Thebes (h). Diodorus Siculus remarks only, That she disappear'd, and that the Thebans paid her Divine Honours (i). They continued to shew her Chamber in Pausanias's Time (k). Her Altar was seen at Athens at the same time (l). The Present, which she received from Jupiter, for the long Night's Lodging he had with her, was shewed many Ages after at Lacedemon, as a singular Curiosity (m). Very surprizing things have been related concerning her Tomb [G]. Consult the Article AMPHITRYON.

(b) Apollod. Biblioth. pag. 103.

(c) Plutarch. in Lysandro, pag. 443. Antonini Liberalis Metamorph. cap. 33.

(d) Pausan. lib. 1. p. 33.

(e) Id. ibid.

(f) Plut. in Romulo, pag. 35.

(g) Pausan. lib. 9. pag. 254.

(h) Antonin. Liberal. ubi supra.

(i) Diod. Sic. lib. 5. c. 4.

(k) Pausan. lib. 9. pag. 206. Hellen'd about 150 Years after the Birth of Christ.

(l) Id. lib. 1. pag. 17.

(m) See the Article TELEBOES, Remark [D].

Pausanias does not relate the Story with the same Circumstances. He says, That the Figures of certain Women (28) were seen at Thebes, whom Juno had sent to prevent Alcmena's Delivery. The Daughter of Tiresias (29) deceived them, by crying out that Alcmena was delivered (30). In Pliny's Time they looked upon the Posture I have mentioned as a kind of Witchcraft. "Adsidere gravidis, vel cum remedium alicui adhibetur, digitis pectinatim inter se implexis, veneficium est: idque compertum tradunt Alcmena Herculem pariente. Pejus, si circa unum ambove genua: item poplites alternis genibus imponi (31). —— To sit by Women with Child, or when a Medicine is administered to any one, with one's Fingers joined together in the Fashion of a Comb, is Witchcraft; and this was experienced, when Alcmena was in Labour of Hercules. The Charm is stronger, if this be done upon one or both Knees; as also if the Posture be cross-legged." We shall see in another Place the Licence, which Plautus took, in supposing that Alcmena was delivered without Pain (32).

[Rabelais, B. 3. cap. 48. has very properly rendered the Text of Ovid and Pliny. If Mr BAYLE had known this, he would doubtless have produced it here. REM. CRIT.]

[F] The Satisfaction of holding in her Hands the Head of Hercules's Persecutor, and of tearing out his Eyes.] Apollodorus informs us, that the Sons of this Hero found a good Asylum in Athens against Eurystheus and that Hyllus, one of them, having killed him, cut off his Head, and gave it to Alcmena, who dug out the Eyes with a Weaver's Shuttle: Καὶ ἣ μὲν κεφαλὴν ἀποτεμοῦσ' Ἀλκμήνη διδοῦσα, ἣ δὲ κερκίσι τοὺ ὀφθαλμοὺς ἐξώρυξεν αὐτῷ (33). Egypte caput amputatum Alcmenæ dedit. Hæc autem illic textoriis radiis oculos effodit.

(28) They were called Φαρμακίδες. We should call them at present, Witches.

(29) Her Name was Historis.

(30) Pausan. lib. 9. pag. 290.

(31) Plin. lib. 28. cap. 6. pag. 579.

(32) In the Remark [E], of the Article TELEBOES.

(33) Apollod. Bibl. lib. 2. pag. 151.

[G] Very surprizing things —— concerning her Tomb.] Agesilaus, King of Sparta, intending to remove the Relicks of Alcmena to Lacedemon, sent some People to Haliartus, who opened her Monument. They found in it two earthen Vessels, a Bracelet of Brass, and a copper Table, on which certain Letters were engraven, which no one understood. As they resembled the Egyptian manner of Writing, Agesilaus caused them to be transcribed, and sent the Copy to the King of Egypt, desiring him to enquire of his Priests the Purport of them (34). Plutarch adds, that Agetoridas, who was deputed for this Purpose by Agesilaus, went to Memphis, where the Prophet Chonuphis decyphered the Inscription. It contained a Precept addressed to the Greeks, to live in Peace, to honour the Muses, and to compose their Differences according to the Rules of Equity. The Letters of the Inscription were like the writing, which Hercules learnt in the Reign of King Proteus. The most remarkable Particular is, that the Inhabitants of Haliartus, having had a very bad Harvest, and great Inundations, believed that the e Evils proceeded from having permitted the Removal of Alcmena's Tomb. We read the same Reflexions in divers Legends, concerning the dismembring or translating of the Bodies of Saints.

(34) Plutarch. in Libro de Socratis Genio, pag. 576, &c.

ALCMÆON. Many Persons have been called by this Name. The last Perpetual Archon of Athens was called ALCMÆON. After him other Archons were created, whose Office continued but ten Years. This Alteration happen'd in the VIth Olympiad, a little before Romulus built the City of Rome (a). Herodotus speaks of an ALCMÆON, who lived at Athens in Crœsus's Time, and who performed many good Offices to the Ambassadors, whom That King sent to Delphi (b). Crœsus, having heard of it, invited him to his Court, and gave him leave to take as much Gold out of his Treasury as he could carry. We read, in Herodotus, the Expedient, which ALCMÆON made use of to carry a great Weight of it. Crœsus made him many other Presents, insomuch that he put him in a Condition of adding a very great Lustre to his Family at Athens, where it became one of the most considerable. The ALCMÆONIDÆ (so they called ALCMÆON's Posterity) distinguish'd themselves on several Occasions, and chiefly by strenuously opposing the Tyranny, which Pisistratus and his Sons endeavoured in vain to perpetuate there. I believe this ALCMÆON was the same, who was General of the Athenians, in the War, which was undertaken for the Protection of the Temple of Delphi, at the Sollicitation of Solon (c). I find an ALCMÆON in Plutarch, who was a great Enemy of Themistocles (d). There are many Faults in Moreri's Dictionary relating to the Word

(a) Eusebii Chron.

(b) Herod. lib. 6. cap. 125.

(c) Plut. in Solone, pag. 84.

(d) Id. in Vita Aristid. sub fin. pag. 334. E.

Digitized by Google

ALCMÆON [A]. I am going to give ſeparate Articles of two Perſons who bore this Name.

[A] There are many Faults in Moreri's Dictionary relating to the Word Alcmæon.] I. It is not true, that Alcmæon, the laſt perpetual Archon, lived about the Year 301, or 300, of Rome. Euſebius, who is cited for it, places the end of the perpetual Archons before the Foundation of Rome. II. Beſides, the Year 301 of Rome does not anſwer to the Year of the World 3300, but to the Year 3530, or thereabouts, according to Petavius; or the Year 3498, according to Sethus Calviſius. III. Alcmæon, the perpetual Archon, is not the ſame Alcmæon, who received ſo many Preſents from Cræſus (1). He preceded the beginning of That King's Reign about One hundred and ninety Years. IV. The laſt Year of That Reign anſwers to the 206th Year of Rome. V. Herodotus, who is cited, does not ſay, that Alcmæon ſucceeded his Father Megacles in the Office of Annual Archon; nor that the Ambaſſadors of Cræſus asked Alcmæon, whether he would accompany their Maſter to Delphi; nor that, after he had promiſed them to do it, That King preſented him with as much Gold as he could carry; nor that, perceiving that Alcmæon had loaded himſelf with Gold beyond his Strength, he cauſed him to be carried with the Burthen to his Houſe, becauſe he could not walk under it. I cannot imagine for what Reaſon Herodotus is quoted, when his Narrative is ſo ſtrangely falſified. VI. Alcmæon, the Son of Amphiaraus, did not marry Callirhoe, after the Death of Alphesibœa his firſt Wife; the latter was yet living at the time of the ſecond Marriage,

(1) Yet it is ſo affirmed in the Dutch Edition of Moreri's Dictionary. The Supplement to the Dictionary ſays only, that this Alcmæon had been an annual Archon of Athens.

> Amphilochi frater ne Phegida ſemper amaret,
> Callirhoe fecit parte recepta tori (2).
>
> Leſt Phegeus' Daughter ſhou'd engroſs his Heart,
> Callirhoë in his Bed obtained a Part.

(2) Ovid. de Remed. Amor. ver. 455.

VII. Plutarch does not ſay, that the Fable of Alcmæon ſignifies that he killed his Mother, that is to ſay, his Part, in order to go and live in the Country, which is expreſſed by the River his Father-in-law. One would think, that Moreri read in Plutarch, that Alcmæon caſtrated himſelf; which ſeems to be the Natural Senſe of theſe Words, he killed his Mother, that is to ſay, his Part. I am willing to believe, that inſtead of Partie (Part), the Author gave it Patrie (Native Country); but this does not juſtify him; for Plutarch does not ſay, that Alcmæon killed his Native Country, or that he abuſed it: On the contrary he tells us, that Alcmæon, ſhunning Magiſtracies, Seditions, Factions, and Calumnies, made choice of a ſmall Retreat, in order to live quietly, and that thus he fled from the Furies (3). VIII. The Chronicle of Euſebius is cited ſtill more improperly, to explain what the Fable ſays of Alcmæon; for of what uſe is it towards explaining this Fable, to ſay, That the City of Thebes was plundered, that Tireſias was taken Priſoner, and that his Daughter Manto was conſecrated to the Service of Apollo? IX. It is not true, that Euſebius relates theſe Things, as falling out in the One hundred and eighty ſeventh Year of Abraham. He ſays nothing of the ſacking of Thebes; he ſpeaks in general of the ſeven Captains, who attacked this City, and of their Poſterity, which renewed the War; I ſay, he ſpeaks of the firſt of theſe two Expeditions under the Year 784, and of the laſt under the Year 823. X. Neither Euſebius, nor any other Hiſtorian, obſerve that Alcmæon's Expedition againſt Thebes was unſucceſsful (4); for it was at that Time that the Epigones plundered the City, &c. XI. They did not carry away the poor blind Teresias: He had fled, with the other Thebans, before the Enemy entered the City. XII. They did not collect a great Booty, to revenge the Diſgrace of their Fathers. It ought to have been ſaid, that, to revenge the Diſgrace of their Fathers, they undertook a ſecond Expedition. XIII. It is not true, that the Philoſopher Alcmæon made it appear, that the Moon has a peculiar Property, which never ends; he ſuppoſed the Eternity of this Planet: It can only be a Suppoſition; and it is a more unpardonable Negligence in a Prieſt, than any other Author, to ſay, That it has been made appear, that the Moon is eternal, and that the Immortal Soul turns continually as the Sun. XIV. Euſebius does not ſpeak of Alcmæon the Philoſopher; doubtleſs he meant the Poet, when he ſaid; Alcmæon clarus habetur, & Leſches Lesbius, qui parvam fecit Iliadem. —— Alcmæon is reckoned famous, as is Leſches of Lesbos, who wrote the leſſer Iliad. XV. Theſe Words of his are in the Thirty firſt Olympiad, and not in the Sixty ninth. XVI. It is equally falſe, that Plutarch, in the Life of Solon, cites an Hiſtorian, whoſe Name is Alcmæon. Theſe are Plutarch's Words; they will ſerve to ſhew how haſty Tranſcribers fall into the greateſt Miſtakes. Οὐ μὴν τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ὃ τὸν Ἀλκμαίωνα τοῦ στρατηγεῖν ἀπεδείχθη τὸν πόλεμον, ὡς λέγειν φησὶν Ἕρμιππος ὁ Ἐυάνθη τὸν Σάμιον. Οὐδὲ γὰρ Αἰσχίνης ὁ ῥήτωρ τοῦτ' εἴρηκεν, ἐν ταῖς τῶν Δελφῶν ὑπομνήμασιν Ἀλκμαίωνα, ὅλον, Ἀθηναίων στρατηγὸν ἀναγέγραπται (5). He was not appointed General for this War, as Hermippus ſays Euanthes of Samos delivered. For the Orator Æſchines ſaid no ſuch thing, and, in the Commentaries of Delphi, Alcmæon, not Solon, is the Athenian General. Lloyd and Hofman found the pretended Hiſtorian Alcmæon in this Paſſage of Plutarch: In Delphorum Commentariis, ſay they, citatur à Plutarcho in Solone. It is plain that theſe Commentaries of Delphi are the Work, which they aſcribe to Alcmæon, and which they pretend to have been cited by Plutarch. I wonder that Voſſius fell into this Miſtake: Alcmæon, ſays he (6), in Delphorum commentariis, Ἀλκμαίων ἐν τοῖς τῶν Δελφῶν ὑπομνήμασι, citatur à Plutarcho in Solone.

(3) Plut. de Exilio. pag. 602.

(4) Moreri, both in the Lyons Edition, 1688, and in that of Holland, expreſſes himſelf thus, After his unfortunate Expedition to Thebes.

(5) Plut. in Solone, pag. 84. A.

(6) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Græc. pag. 501.

ALCMÆON, the Son of Amphiaraus and Eriphyle, the Siſter of Adraſtus, kill'd his Mother in obedience to his Father's Command. I am going to tell you the Reaſon of ſo ſtrange a Command. Amphiaraus looked upon Eriphyle as the Cauſe of his Death. He had reſolv'd not to go to the Theban War; for, being a great Soothſayer, he foreſaw, that, if he went, he ſhould die there. Moreover, he had promiſed with an Oath, That, if he ſhould have any Diſpute with Adraſtus, he would refer the whole Matter to the Deciſion of his Wife. They differ'd about the Expedition to Thebes. Adraſtus would have Amphiaraus engage in it; but Amphiaraus refuſed, and diſſuaded others from it. Eriphyle decided the Affair, as Adraſtus deſir'd, being bribed by a fine Necklace (a), which Polynices offered her (b), and which ſhe accepted, contrary to her Huſband's Command not to take any thing of Polynices. Hence ſhe has furniſhed many Topics and moral Thoughts to the Cenſors of the Fair Sex. It is well known, that Amphiaraus, flying, when the Army was routed, was ſwallowed up in an Abyſs, which a Clap of Thunder opened under his Feet. He had ordered his Sons, before he march'd againſt Thebes, to kill Eriphyle, as ſoon as their Age would permit. All the Generals, except Adraſtus, periſhed in this War. Ten Years after, their Sons reſolv'd to revenge this Affront, and made choice of Alcmæon for their Generaliſſimo. Eriphyle, bribed again by Preſents, ſollicited them to this War. Theſſander, the Son of Polynices, preſented her with a Necklace (c), and a Robe (d). Alcmæon, tho' greatly inclin'd to kill his Mother before he accepted the Command of the Forces, yet marched againſt Thebes, without executing Amphiaraus's Order. This Expedition proved very fortunate; the Thebans, by the Advice of

(a) See concerning this Necklace the Remarks on the Article CALLIRHOE.

(b) Hyginus ſays, c. 73. That Adraſtus gave her the Necklace, and that Eriphyle diſcover'd the Place where Amphiaraus hid himſelf.

(c) Diod. Siculus is rather to be credited, who ſays, That Theſſander gave her only the Peplum, or Robe; he could not give the Necklace, ſince Eriphyle had it already.

(d) Call'd in Greek πέπλος.

Digitized by Google

of Tiresias, abandoned their City; it was plundered, and destroyed. Alcmæon, transported with new Rage, upon hearing, that Eriphyle had suffered herself to be corrupted by Presents against him also, no longer scrupled to kill her, after consulting the Oracle about it. Some maintain, that his Brother Amphilochus assisted him in this Parricide; but most Authors deny it. Alcmæon, haunted by the Furies for this Action, retired to Psophis in Arcadia, where he expiated his Crime, with the usual Forms, under the Protection of Phegeus, and married Arsinoe (e), the Daughter of the same Phegeus, to whom he made a Present of the Necklace and the Robe, which were given to Eriphyle. A great Famine arising, recourse was had to the Oracle, which ordered Alcmæon to fly to Achelous. He arrived there, after much rambling up and down, where he renewed the Ceremonies of the Expiation, and married Callirhoë, the Daughter of Achelous; and settled on a Corner of Land, which that River had form'd by throwing up a quantity of Sand [A]. Callirhoë declared she would not lie with him, if he did not make her a Present of Eriphyle's Necklace and Robe. This obliged him to return to Phegeus, from whom he obtained the Necklace, having made him believe that the Oracle had declared to him, that the Furies would not cease to persecute him, 'till he had offered the Necklace to Apollo. Phegeus was afterwards informed, that Alcmæon designed this Present for Callirhoë; upon which he ordered his two Sons to pursue and kill him, which they did: And, because Arsinoë was offended at it, they carried her in a Box to Tegea, and charged her with the Murther. Some say that Alcmæon, during his Madness, diverted himself with the Propheteſs Manto, the Daughter of Tiresias; and that he had two Children by her (f). See the Sequel to this in the Article of CALLIRHOE. Alcmæon's Furies made a great Noise on the Stage of Ancient Greece (g), but we have none of those Tragedies left [B]. What has been said of his Tomb, deserves to be considered [C]. The Oropians, who were beforehand with all other Nations in placing Amphiaraus among the Gods, excluded Alcmæon from Divine Honours, which they conferred on his Father and his Brother (h), on account of his Parricide (i). It is observed, that a Persian, called Orontes, resembled him perfectly (k).

Some Historians say, that, after the second War of Thebes, Alcmæon went into Ætolia, being invited thither by Diomedes, and that he assisted him in conquering That Country, and Acarnania; and that being both summoned to accompany the Expedition of Troy, Diomedes went, but Alcmæon staid in Acarnania, and built a City there, which he called Argos of Amphilochus, in Honour of his Brother (l). Note, that he practised the Trade of Divination in Acarnania (m).

(e) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 2[illegible] calls her Alphesibea.

(f) Taken from Apollodorus l. 3. p. 18[illegible]. &c. See also Diodor. Sicul. lib. 5. c. 6.

(g) Alcmæon olim Tragicorum pulpita lallavit cum furore suo, nunc nullam sui nominis fabulam habet. Barth. in Statium, Tom. 2. p. 449.

(h) Pausan. lib. 1. pag. 33.

(i) Plutarch. in Arato, p. 1028.

(k) His Name was AMPHILOCHUS: See the Remarks on this Article.

(l) Strabo, lib. 7. pag. 225. See lib. 10. pag. 318.

(m) Clem. Alexandr. Stromat. lib. 1. pag. 334.

[A] He settled on a Corner of Land, which that River had formed by throwing up a Quantity of Sand.] It will not be amiss to illustrate Apollodorus by a Passage of Pausanias, which imports, that, after Alcmæon had killed his Mother, he fled from Argos to Psophis, where he married Alphesibea the Daughter of Phegeus (1). His Marriage did not cure him of his Phrenzy; so that he had recourse to the Oracle, which ordered him to retire to a new Land, which was made since the Murther of Eriphyle. He was assured that the Furies would not pursue him thither. Meeting, then, with a Piece of Land, thrown up by the Waters, at the Entrance of the River Achelous, he settled there, and married Callirhoe.

(1) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 255.

[B] We have none of those Tragedies left.] I question not but the two Verses, mentioned by Plutarch, in one of his Books, are taken out of some of those Pieces. The common-place Topic, which Plutarch there touches upon, is of greater Importance than is generally believed to be. It relates to a general Fault, to wit, of those who reproach their Neighbours with a Vice, which they themselves are guilty of, or which is less than their own. Alcmæon reproaches Adrastus for being the Brother of a Woman, who had killed her Husband: Adrastus answers, And you have killed your own Mother. He, who is very guilty himself, must not set up for a Cato, and a Censor. Οὐκοῦν μηδὲ μοιχὸν λοιδορήσῃς, αὐτὸς ὢν παιδομανής. Μηδ' ἀσώλων αὐτὸς ὢν ἀνελεύθερος,

Ἀνδροκτόνου γυναικὸς ὁμοσπόρῃς ἔχων;

Τὸν Ἄδραστον ὁ Ἀλκμαίων. Τί δ' ἐκεῖνος; οὐκ ἀλλότριον ἀλλὰ ἴδιον ἑαυτῷ σφετέρων ὀνειδίζων,

Σὺ δ' αὐτόχειρ γε μητρὸς ἦ σ' ἐγείνατο (2).

(2) Plut. de capienda ex inimic. utilit. pag. 88.

Non itaque adulterium objicit alteri, ipse insano puerorum amore flagrans, neque prodigalitatem sordidus ipse.
Alcmæon Adrastum hoc maledicto incessit,
Tibi quæ maritum suum interfecit est soror.
Quid Adrastus? Non alienum sed proprium ei reponit opprobrium,
Matrem necasti tu manu tua tuam.

[C] What has been said of his Tomb, deserves to be considered.] This Tomb was at Psophis in Arcadia; it was but indifferently adorned; but it was surrounded with such high Cypresses, that they covered with their Shade the Hill, which commanded the City. They were never cut, because it was thought they were consecrated to Alcmæon; and they were called the Virgins (3).

(3) Id. ibid. Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 255.

ALCMÆON, born at Crotona, was a Disciple of Pythagoras. It is thought he was the first who wrote upon Physics (a). He held very heterodox Opinions; as, that the Moon was eternal, and that the Soul always turned round like the Sun. This is what Laërtius says of him. Cicero represents this Philosopher's System better; for how careless is it, among all the Planets, to which Alcmæon attributed an eternal Nature, to pitch upon That, whose Alterations are the most sensible, I mean the Moon? Laërtius should therefore have said, as Cicero did (b), that This Philosopher ascribed a Divine Nature to all the Celestial Bodies, and even to our Souls. But, as it is the Fate of false Systems to be incoherent, we find that our Alcmæon argued very inconsequentially, when he made so great a Distinction between the Knowledge of the Gods, and that of Men. He said, that the Gods knew things evidently, and Men only conjecturally. This may be said by those who acknowledge One only True God; but they who take the Planets, and human Souls, for so many Gods, become ridiculous; culous when they pretend, that Human and Divine Knowledge do essentially differ. It is not true that Alcmæon died of a pedicular Distemper [A].

(a) Phavorin. in omnimoda Histor. apud Laert. l. 8. in Alcmæone. Clem. Alex. Stromat. l. 1. Theodoret. Serm. 1.

(b) Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. 1. c. 11. Laërt. ubi supra.

Digitized by Google

[A] It is not true that he died of a pedicular Distemper.] Antigonus Carystius mistook the one for the other, when he said (1) that Alcmæon the Philosopher, had this Disease; he took Alcmæon, the Disciple of Pythagoras, for Alcman the Poet. Charles Stephens does not only say, that the Philosopher Alcmæon died of a pedicular Disease, but also that he was the first, who died of it; for which he alledges Ælian. Both these Assertions are false; Ælian is not speaking of our Alcmæon; but observes several things concerning Alcman the Poet: Having said, that the Philosopher Pherecydes died of the Distemper here in Question (2), he would doubtless have given him the Precedence over Alcmæon, if he had mentioned the latter in relation to this kind of Disease. Charles Stephens's Errors are likewise to be met with in Father Lescalopier (3).

(1) Antig. Caryst. Histor. mirab. cap. 95. Meursius took notice of this Error in his Notes.

(2) Ælian. Var. Histor. lib. 4. c. 28.

(3) In Ciceron de Nat. Deor. p. 41.

ALDRINGER, a famous General, in the Reign of the Emperor Ferdinand the Second, raised himself solely by his Merit. He was of the Country of Luxemburgh, and of very obscure Birth [A]. In his younger Days he engaged in the Service of some Gentlemen, who went into France; he apply'd himself with them to Study, and made a great Progress in it. Being come into Italy, he was made Chancellor to Count Madrucci. He went afterwards to Trent, where he had an honourable Employment in the Chancery; but the Jealousy of his Colleagues, and their Conduct, so greatly disgusted him, that he left his Post, and, enrag'd at Fortune, determined to follow the Profession of the first Man he should meet with in his Way. He took the Way of Inspruck, and, meeting a Soldier near the Bridge, who was returning into Italy, he entered himself a private Soldier. He became a Sergeant soon after; and, as he was Master of his Pen, he was employ'd to draw up all the Accounts of the Company, and to write the Answers, which the Captain was to give. He gave his Captain such an Insight into Affairs, as opened to him the Way to an higher Employment. This Promotion occasioned the Lieutenant of the Company to be made Captain, and Aldringer to be advanced to the Lieutenant's Place. He defended himself so well, with but fifty Men, in a disadvantageous Post, that he maintained it, notwithstanding all the Attacks of the Enemy. From that time the Reputation of his Courage spread as far as that of his Capacity: Several Colonels offered him a Company; the Nephew of the Archbishop of Saltzburg was one of them. On account of his Youth, he had occasion for such a Man in his Regiment; he gained him, and acquired so much Honour, by Aldringer's good Counsels, that, to testify his Acknowledgment, he made him his Sergeant-Major. Aldringer was afterwards Lieutenant-Colonel, and then Colonel; and made it so fully appear, that he understood his Profession thoroughly, that he was thought worthy to command in Chief, in the Expedition to Mantua (a). He joined the broken Remains of the Battle of Leipsic (b), very opportunely, with the Troops which he brought from Italy; and perhaps, if Count Tilly had delay'd giving Battle till the Arrival of these Troops, as he was advised to do, the Event would not have been so fatal to the Imperialists. Aldringer left Tilly, some time after, to retire into Bohemia, on account of the Jealousies, which the ill State of Affairs sowed between the Imperialists and the Bavarians (c); but this Dis-union did not continue long. He was, in the Month of March 1632, with Tilly on the Banks of the Leck, to dispute the Passage of that River with the King of Sweden. He was at that time Great Master of the Artillery (d). The Wound, he received in his Head, contributed much to the Advantage the Enemy had in passing the River; but did not hinder him from serving the same Campaign; he joined Count Wallestein in Bohemia, notwithstanding the Efforts of the Enemy to hinder this Junction: he was obliged to return in haste into Bavaria, to oppose General Horn's Troops. The Success was various, on both sides, in those Parts, all the Remainder of that Year, and the beginning of the following. The most glorious Exploit of Aldringer, during that time, was his contributing, in 1633, to the raising the Siege of the City of Constance. He march'd afterwards to join the Duke of Feria, who had brought some Spanish Troops from Italy. It has been thought, that Wallestein had given Aldringer private Orders to frustrate the Duke's Designs [B]; and

(a) In 1630. Taken from Galeazzo Gualdo Priorato in the 6th Book of the History of the Wars of Germany.

(b) In 1631.

(c) Priorato lib. 2. at the Year 1631.

(d) Blanc's History of Bavaria, Tom. 4. pag. 374.

[A] Of very obscure Birth.] Puffendorf says, Humili apud Lucemburgicos loco ortus; and adds (1), that he was, at first, Footman to certain French Barons, and afterwards a Secretary. According to another Historian, his Condition was not so mean; he makes him first study, then go to the War, then serve as a Secretary, and afterwards take up Arms again. "Luxemburgi tenui sed honesto loco editus, primam ætatem literis dedit (2). —— Born at Luxemburg, "of private, but reputable, Parents; he spent the "first part of his Life in Study." He makes him naturally abstemious, Ingenio prompto atque acri, & natura vini abstinens (3). which was a very bad, and very prejudicial, Quality, in a Soldier, in Germany.

(1) Puffendorf, Rerum Suecicarum, lib. 6. pag. 357.

(2) Joh. Cluverus Epit. Histor. lib. 11. Append.

(3) Id. ibid.

[B] It has been thought, that Wallestein had given Aldringer private Orders to frustrate the Duke's Designs.] The Historian of Bavaria, whom I have cited, says (4), "That the Swedes desired only to come to a "general Engagement, though they were not so advantageously posted, as the Catholics. The Duke "of Feria, continues he, seeing a fair Opportunity, "endeavoured in vain to oblige Aldringer to engage "with the Enemy, and could never obtain any thing "from a Man, who was under the Correction of "Wallestein; and the Swedes retiring as it were in "Triumph, about the end of October, the ill Conduct "of Aldringer, which cost the Catholic Union dear, "displeas'd the Duke of Feria so much, that he died "soon after of Grief." This Historian had said, in the foregoing Page, that "Aldringer, being in the "Secret of Wallestein, seldom acted without his "Orders; and that a Piece was published, at that "time, which imported, that, whilst Wallestein wrote "to the Emperor, that he was about to send Al"dringer to the Duke of Bavaria, to get rid of him "entirely, he gave him private Orders to serve him only

(4) Blanc's History of Bavaria, Tom. 4. pag. 424.

Digitized by Google

and that this was the true Reaſon, and the ſecret Motive, why Aldringer would never conſent to give Battle. However we muſt not imagine, that he was privy to all the Plots of Walleſtein; he had only a certain Complaiſance for him, which, without ruining the Affairs of their common Maſter, very much advanced the private Intereſts of That General. The like Intelligences are practiſed in moſt Armies. He was kill'd in the Year 1634, at Landſhut a Town of Bavaria, and it was never known, whether it was by his own Soldiers, or by the Swedes. He had been created a Count (e). He was a Man of excellent Qualities [C]; 'tis pity they were attended with an exceſſive Avarice and Cruelty [D]. Such is commonly the Fate of Man; He reſembles thoſe Lands, which promiſcuouſly produce both good and bad Herbs.

(e) Blanc, ib.d. p. 43[illegible].

" only by acting upon the defenſive with the little " Reinforcement, which he commanded: Which Al- " dringer not having punctually performed, Galas " let him know from Walleſtein, that he would never " pardon him this Diſobedience."

[C] He was a Man of excellent Qualities.] He had a very quick and penetrating Wit, great Skill, a refined Underſtanding, and great Courage; he diſtinguiſhed himſelf in Councils of War by the Force of his Reaſons, and by the Probability of his Conjectures; he was beſides a good Writer; he ſpoke ſeveral Languages, and had extracted the Quinteſſence of the Maxims of ſeveral Countries. The Politics of an Italianiz'd Spaniard did not out-do his; " Le da " lui praticate varie nationi, l' oſſervate diverſe maſ- " ſime, è gli inveſtigati genii è inclinationi di molti " popoli lo reſero coſi accorto nelle attioni, che alcuno " Spagnuolo Italianato non lo avanzava (5)."

(5) Priorato's Hiſtory of the Wars of Germany, lib. 9. pag. 291. Edit. 4to

[D] Attended with an exceſſive Avarice and Cruelty.] He was void of Compaſſion, and exacted Contributions with the utmoſt Rigour; he had no regard to the neceſſities of the Soldiers, ſo that he was neither belov'd by the People, nor by the Army. He made a good hand of it at the ſacking of Mantua; and no Officer in the Imperial Army gained ſo large a ſhare of Plunder as he (6). It was believed that his own Soldiers ſlew him on the Bridge of Landſhut, the Opportunity of doing it without diſcovery being favourable. " Fu colpito è fatto cader morto, non ſenza ſuſ- " petto cio diveniſſe dalla parte de' ſuoi per vendetta " d' alcune ingiurie fatte lero, eſſendo egli per la ſua " ſeverita piu temuto che amato della militia (7)."

(6) Id. ibid.

(7) Idem, pag. 284.

ALDROVANDUS (a) (ULYSSES) Profeſſor of Philoſophy, and Phyſic, at Bologne, his Native Country, was one of the moſt inquiſitive Men in the World with reſpect to Natural Hiſtory. His Cares, his Labours, and his Expences, on that account, are incredible. He travelled into the remoteſt Countries, without any other Motive, than that of enquiring into the Productions of Nature there. Minerals, Metals, Plants, and Animals, were the Objects of his Enquiries, and of his Curioſity: But he applied himſelf chiefly to the Knowledge of Birds; and, in order to have very exact and lively Repreſentations of them, he employed the moſt excellent Artiſts of Europe [A], for above thirty Years, at his own Expence. Theſe Expences ruin'd him; he found himſelf at laſt reduced to the utmoſt Neceſſity; and it is ſaid that he died in the Hoſpital of Bologne, loaded with Years (b), and blind, in the Year 1605 (c). A remarkable Example both of Publick Ingratitude [B], and Private Curioſity. A thouſand Reflexions might be made on this Adventure; but I leave them to others, and ſhall only content myſelf with this ſingle Obſervation, That Antiquity does not afford any Example of ſo extenſive and difficult an Undertaking, as This of our Ulyſſes, with regard to Natural Hiſtory. Pliny, I confeſs, treats of a greater Variety of Subjects, but he only glances upon them, and ſays but little of each; whereas Aldrovandus collected every thing he could meet with. His Compilation comprehends ſeveral large Volumes in Folio (d); but the whole Honour of it muſt not be aſcribed to him [C]; for there came out a Work, after his Death, in which it is thought

(a) Deſcended in the Counts of this Name, according to Aubertus Miræus de Scriptor. ſæc. XVI. pag. 154.

(b) Bullart. Academy of Sciences, Tom. 2. pag. 110, ſays he was 80 Years old.

(c) See Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato, p. 1047.

(d) See Remark [D].

[A] He employ'd the moſt excellent Artiſts of Europe.] Let us ſee what Aubertus Miræus has collected on this Subject: " Pictori cuidam ea in arte " unico triginta & amplius annos annuum aureorum " ducentorum ſtipendium perſolvit. Delineatores ce- " leberrimos, Laurentium Benninum Florentinum, " & Cornelium Suintum Francofurtenſem ære ſuo con- " duxit, nec non Jacobi Ligotti, Sereniſſimi Etruriæ " ducis Pictoris eximii, opera in hac eadem provincia " Florentiæ quandoque uſus eſt, ut quo maximo fieri " poſſet artificio aves eæ deſignarentur. Tandem Sculp- " torem habuit inſignem Chriſtopherum Coriolanum " Norimbergenſem, atque ejus nepotem, qui eas " adeo venuſte adoeque eleganter exſculpſerat, ut " non in ligno ſed in ære factæ videantur (1). " —— He paid an annual Stipend of Two hundred " Crowns, for more than thirty Years, to a Painter, " the firſt of his Profeſſion. He hired the moſt cele- " brated Drawers, Laurentius Benninus the Floren- " tine, and Cornelius Suintus of Francfort; beſides " which he employ'd, at Florence, the moſt ſerene " Duke of Tuſcany's famous Painter, James Ligotius, " to delineate his Birds, in the moſt exquiſite manner " poſſible. At laſt he engag'd, as his Sculptors, Chri- " ſtopher Coriolanus, of Nuremberg, and his Ne- " phew, who carved them ſo beautifully, and elegant- " ly, that they ſeemed not expreſs'd in Wood, but in " Braſs."

(1) Aubert. Miræus de Scriptoribus ſæculi XVI. pag. 154.

[B] A remarkable Example of publick Ingratitude.] We muſt not imagine that no one helped this Naturaliſt in the Expences he was at. " The Senate of " Bologne, Cardinal Montalto, Francis Maria, Duke " of Urbino, and others of the chief Perſons of Italy, " contributed willingly to it, by ſupplying the Pain- " ters, and Sculptors, which Aldrovandus had under " him, with Money for their Maintenance —— " After having dedicated twelve Books of his Orni- " thologia, or Hiſtory of Birds, to Pope Clement VIII, " and ſome others to thoſe, who had favour'd his " Labours with their Benefactions, he bequeathed the " the reſt by Will to the magnificent Senate of Bo- " logne ------- who aſſigned a conſiderable Sum of " Money to John Cornelius Uterverius, born at Delft, " in Holland, Profeſſor in that Univerſity, and ſince " to Thomas Demſter, a Scotch Gentleman, Profeſſor " likewiſe in the ſame Place, to collect, and cauſe " theſe Books to be printed, which ſo highly deſer- " ved Publication (2)."

(2) Bullart, Academy of Sciences, Tom. 2. p. 110.

[C] The whole Honour of it muſt not be aſcribed to him.] It appears, by the Catalogue of Books of Phyſic, that moſt of the Volumes of Aldrovandus's Natural Hiſtory, were printed after his Death (3). The Ornithology (4), in three Volumes in Folio, and the ſeven Books of Inſects, in one Volume of the ſame ſize, are the only Works, which he publiſhed. The Volume of Serpents, the three Volumes of Four-footed Beaſts, the Volume of Fiſhes, that of Bloodleſs Animals. The Hiſtory of Monſters, with the Supplement to that of Animals, in twelve Volumes, the Treatiſe of Metals, and the Dendrology (5), came out at different Times, under the Care of different Perſons, after the Death of Aldrovandus. The Volume

(3) Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato, pag. 1047.

(4) i. e. The Hiſtory of Birds.

(5) i. e. The Hiſtory of Trees.

Digitized by Google

thought he had no other ſhare, than that of furniſhing the Plan [D], or at moſt ſome imperfect Memoirs. I explain this in the Remarks. It is impoſſible, I think, that he could write ſuch a prodigious Number of Books, as Imperialis gives us a Catalogue of (e); and it is not to be wondered at, that, being imploy'd in ſuch different Reſearches, which require the greateſt Attention, he often gave for Verſe, what was moſt contrary to the Rules of Poetry (f); and that he was not much ſkilled in Greek (g). A Poet, who was once Pope, has given us a pretty Elogium of him [E].

(e) In Muſæo Hiſtorico. See alſo Paul Freherus's Theatr. pag. 1317.

(f) Voſſius de Orig. Idolol. lib. 3. cap. 91. pag. 1227.

(g) Ezek. Spanhem. apud Konig. Bibl. p. 24.

of Serpents was prepared for the Preſs by Bartholomew Ambroſin (6). That of Quadrupedes, with cloven Feet, was firſt digeſted by John Cornelius Uterverius, and afterwards by Thomas Demſter, and publiſhed by Mark Antony Bernia, and by Jerome Tamburin. That of Quadrupedes with continuous Feet, and that of Fiſhes, was prepared for the Preſs by Uterverius, and publiſhed by Tamburin. That of Quadrupedes, with Fingers or Claws, was compiled by Ambroſin. The Hiſtory of Monſters, and the Supplement, were collected by the ſame, and publiſhed at the Expence of Mark Antony Bernia. The Dendrology is the Work of Ovid Montalbanius (7).

(6) Profeſſor of Phyſic of the Univerſity of Bononia, and Keeper of the Muſæum and Phyſic Garden.

(7) Ex Lindenio renovato, ubi ſupra.

[D] There came out a Work after his Death, in which he had no other ſhare, than that of furniſhing the Plan.] The Abbot Gallois has ſo well repreſented the Judgment, which ought to be formed of this great Work, that I believe I ſhall oblige the Reader more by producing the Paſſage at length, than by abridging it. His own Words, then, are as follows. "Aldrovandus is not the Author of this Book (8), nor of "many others, which nevertheleſs were publiſhed in "his Name. But it happened to the Collection of "Natural Hiſtory, of which theſe Books make a part, "as to thoſe great Rivers, which, during their whole "Courſe, preſerve the Name they had at their Spring, "though, at laſt, the greateſt part of the Waters "they diſembogue into the Sea, does not belong to "them, but to other Rivers, which mix with them. "As the ſix firſt Volumes of this great Work were "Aldrovandus's, though the others were compoſed "by different Authors, after his Death, they are yet "aſcribed to him, either becauſe they are a Continu-"ation of his Deſign, or compiled out of his Me-"moirs, or wrote upon his Plan, or, perhaps, with "a View of recommending the latter Volumes by "ſo famous a Name (9)." They, who would be acquainted with the Plan of this Compilation, need only caſt their Eyes on the following Words; the Abbot Gallois goes on thus: "There is ſcarce any "thing written about theſe Trees but what has been "collected in this Volume. For this Author is not "ſatisfy'd with mentioning all that he had read in "Naturaliſts concerning them; but he obſerves alſo, "according to the Method of Aldrovandus, what the "Hiſtorians have wrote, what the Legiſlators have "ordained, and what the Poets have feigned, about "them. Moreover he explains the different uſes "theſe Trees are put to in Oeconomics, in Phyſic, "in Architecture, and in other Arts. Laſtly, he "takes Notice of the moral Sayings, Proverbs, De-"vices, Enigmas, Hieroglyphics, and many other "things, which relate to his Subject (10)." He did not forget to conſult Medals, and to borrow from them what might be uſeful to his Deſign (11).

(8) The Dendrology.

(9) Journ. of the Learned, Nov. 12. 1668. pag. 425.

(10) Ibid.

(11) See Spanhem. de Præſt. Numiſm. Diſſert. 3. ſub fin. pag. 252.

[E] A Poet, who was once a Pope, has given us a pretty Elogium of him.] I mean Maphæo Barberini, or Urban VIII. He wrote the following Epigram, in Praiſe of Aldrovandus.

Multiplices rerum formas, quas pontus & æther
Exhibet; & quidquid promit & abdit humus,
Mens haurit, ſpectant oculi, dum cuncta ſagaci,
Aldrobande, tuus digerit arte liber.
Miratur proprios ſolers induſtria fœtus,
Quamque tulit moli ſe negat eſſe parem.
Obſtupet ipſa ſimul rerum fœcunda creatrix,
Et cupit eſſe ſuum quod videt Artis opus (12).

(12) Lorenzo Craſſo, Elogies of Learned Men, Tom. 1. pag. 137, 138.

Curious retiring Nature to purſue,
And dreſs'd in all her Shapes the Pow'r to view;
Whether in Earth's dark Womb conceal'd they lie,
Or on her Surface catch th' admiring Eye;
Whether in Seas they ſwim, or cut the yielding Skie;
Thro' ev'ry Form thy tow'ring Genius ſoars,
And all the vaſt Variety explores.
Great Nature's Comment, hence, theſe Volumes roſe;
Here Art, ſagacious, all her Beauties ſhows.
See Induſtry, unconſcious of her Worth,
Start at her Offspring, and deny the Birth;
While Nature fain would claim the better Part;
And call that Her's, which is the Work of Art.

Lorenzo Craſſo has given us another Epigram with this.

ALEANDER (JEROM) Archbiſhop of Brindiſi, and Cardinal, in the XVIth Century. Alexander VI. deſired to have him in his Service [A], and intended him for Secretary to his Son. He changed his Mind ſoon after, and ſent him to negotiate in Hungary; but Aleander happened to be ſick at that time, and could not go from Venice, where he reſided. Lewis XII. ſent for him into France, in the Year 1508 [B], to be Profeſſor of Philology in the Univerſity of Paris. Aleander was then Twenty eight

[A] Alexander VI. deſired to have him in his Service] I make uſe of this Expreſſion, becauſe the Author, whom I follow, reduces the thing to a meer Deſign, which was never put in Execution. According to his manner of Expreſſion, Aleander was never in the Service of that wicked Pope. If ſo, all thoſe Reflexions, which were made to the Diſadvantage of Aleander, occaſioned by the pernicious School of Alexander VI, and Cæſar Borgia, wherein it is pretended that he was educated, ſtand for nothing. I ſhall not pretend to decide the Matter, and leave the Reader the trouble of examining into the Affair. "Aleandrum (qui paulo ante Cancellarius Leodienſis, "& olim famoſiſſimi Cæſaris illius Borgiæ ſeu Ducis "Valentini Secretarius fuerat, famulus hero dignus, "& pars aulæ Romanæ ſub Alexandro VI.) peſſime "deſcribit Lutherus (1). —— Luther gives a very bad "Character of Aleander, who a little before was "Chancellor of Leige, and lately Secretary to the "moſt infamous Cæſar Borgia, or Duke Valentine; "a Servant worthy of his Maſter, and part of the "Roman Court, in the Pontificat of Alexander VI."

(1) Seckendorf de Lutheran. lib. 1. pag. 125. n. 3.

[B] Lewis XII. ſent for him into France, in the Year 1508.] Paliavicini does not mention this Year; but, becauſe he ſays that Aleander was ſent for to Paris at Twenty eight Years of Age, I did not think myſelf miſtaken in ſetting it down; ſince, as a farther Confirmation, Aleander's Epitaph imports, that he died in the Year 1542, aged Sixty two Years within thirteen Days (2). He was therefore born the thirteenth of February, 1480. For thoſe, who remark the Day of his Death, place it on the firſt Day of February (3). I am ſurprized at the Negligence of the Authors of his Epitaph. They ſay that he was born in Carniola, in the Year 1479, and that he died at Rome in the Year 1542, being within thirteen days of Sixty two Years. This cannot be true, except by ſuppoſing, that the Year 1479 did not begin in January, and that the Year 1542 began with it: Now it is ridiculous to ſuppoſe, in an Epitaph, a manner of reckoning time ſo deſtitute of Uniformity. I wonder that the Author of the Nomenclator did not perceive this falſe Suppoſition. He ſays one thing, which is inconſiſtent with Father Pallavicini; to wit, That Aleander was but twenty Years of Age, when he taught in the Univerſity of Paris.

(2) In Nomenclatore Cardinalium pag. 132. & in Iſtoria de' Poeti Greci of Lorenzo Craſſo, pag. 278.

(3) Oldoinus in Athenæo Romano, pag. 317.

Digitized by Google

eight Years of Age. He gained a great Reputation in this Poſt. He entered into the Service of Everard de la Mark Biſhop of Liege, who ſent him to Rome, to facilitate his Promotion to the Purple, againſt the Oppoſition of France. Leo X. found him a Perſon of ſuch good Parts, that he deſired to retain him, to which the Biſhop of Liege conſented. Aleander was at firſt placed with the Cardinal de Medicis (a), whom he ſerved as his Secretary: After the Death of Acciaioli, he was made Library-Keeper of the Vatican. But the great Stage, on which he began to appear with conſiderable Luſtre, was Germany, at the beginning of the Troubles, which the Reformation raiſed there. He was ſent thither as the Pope's Nuncio, in the Year 1519. He acted the Part of an Ambaſſador, and a Doctor, as occaſion required. He ſpoke three Hours ſucceſſively in the Diet of Worms, againſt the Doctrine of Luther (b), but it is ſaid, that he did not repreſent it faithfully (c). He could not prevent Luther's being heard in that Diet, and refuſed to diſpute with him; but he obtained, that his Books ſhould be burnt, and his Perſon proſcribed; and drew up the Edict which proſcribed him (d). He was the Pope's Nuncio to Francis I, before Pavia, in the Year 1525, and fell into the Hands of certain Soldiers, who uſed him ill [C]. He was ſent a ſecond time into Germany, in the Year 1531, where he found a conſiderable Alteration of Affairs, if we may believe what we are told he wrote concerning them. The People, in the Proteſtant Towns, had in ſome meaſure laid aſide their Animoſity againſt the Pope; but, in the Catholic Towns, they ſhewed an extream Deſire to ſhake off the Yoke of Rome, and to enrich themſelves with the Treaſures of the Church, as the Proteſtants had done. The Occaſion of this Change in the latter was, that, having expected great Liberty, provided they could ſhake off the Pope's Yoke, they found, that the Yoke of the Secular Power, under which they lived, was not eaſier. Aleander did what he could to hinder Charles the Fifth from making a Truce with the Proteſtants of Germany, but without Succeſs. He was created Cardinal by Paul III, and deſigned to preſide in the Council with two other Legates (e). In the mean time he went into Germany as the Pope's Legate, in the Year 1538. This Commiſſion continued a Year. His Death happening on the firſt Day of February 1542, hindered him from preſiding in the Council. Some ſay that he died by the Ignorance of his Phyſician [D]. I have not mentioned all his Nunciatures. Moreri will ſupply what I have omitted. Aleander publiſhed ſome Books [E]. He underſtood Hebrew and Greek very well: and they attribute a ſurprizing Memory

(a) Who was Pope Clement VII.

(b) See Palavicini's Hiſtory of the Council of Trent. It was in the Year 1521.

(c) See Seckendorf's Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm lib. 1. pag. 149.

(d) Palavic. lib. 1. cap. 28. n. 5.

(e) The Cardinals Campegius and Simonetta.

[C] He fell into the Hands of certain Soldiers, who uſed him ill] We meet with the following Account of this Matter in a Letter of Jerom Negro to Mark Antony Michieli, dated from Rome the twentieth of March, 1525 (4). "The Archbiſhop of "Capua has related to us a ſtrange Adventure of "Aleander, Biſhop Elect of Brindiſi, and Nuncio of "his Holineſs to the Moſt Chriſtian King: namely "that, in the greateſt Fury of the Fight, and "in ſuch a Confuſion as you may imagine, the "poor Gentleman running away, dreſt in a manner "becoming his Epiſcopal Dignity, fell into the Hands "of three Spaniards, who, not knowing him, forced "him with Threats and Bravadoes to ſet himſelf at "Three thouſand Ducats Ranſom, and led him in "this Equipage through the Camp, turning ſometimes back, and commanding him ſharply to follow them. The frighted Biſhop ran after them like "a Footman, without daring to diſcover that he "was an Apoſtolical Nuncio. But, being come to "Pavia, he was known by the Viceroy of Naples, "and by the Marquis of Peſcara, who delivered "him with great Trouble and Difficulty from this "Priſon and Servitude: Nevertheleſs, to acquit himſelf of his Oath, he was obliged to give each of "the aboveſaid Soldiers Two hundred Ducats, to "ſatisfy them. I underſtand he is going to Venice; "he will tell you the Story of his Misfortunes himſelf.

(4) Letters of Princes, tranſlated by Belleforet, vol. 96.

[D] Some ſay that he died by the Ignorance of his Phyſician (5).] This does not well agree with his Epitaph, which teſtifies, that a languiſhing Diſeaſe contracted by the Toils of his Embaſſies, killed him; Mox diverſis legationibus pro ſummis Pontificibus ad omnes ferè Chriſtianos Principes fideliter & diligenter perfunctо, & IDEO IN TABEM DELAPSO. Perhaps a Paſſage of Paul Jovius, ill underſtood at firſt, and afterwards metamorphos'd, from hand to hand, into different Senſes, occaſioned what has been ſaid of the Ignorance of Aleander's Phyſician. However it be, we learn from Paul Jovius, that Aleander ruined his Health by taking too much care of it, and that he was a very bad Phyſician to himſelf, in making uſe of too many unneceſſary Remedies. Lætatus eſt ea purpura per annos quinque (6), perva-ſurus haud dubie ad exactam ætatem, niſi nimia tuendæ valetudinis ſolicitudine intempeſtivis medicamentis, ſibi hercle inſanus & infelix medicus, viſcera corrupiſſet (7).

(5) See The Judgment of the Learned on the Poets, Tom. 3. n. 1273. pag. 194.

(6) It ſhould be concluded from hence, that he was made a Cardinal in 1537.

(7) Paulus Jovius Elog. cap. 98. p. 231.

[E] Aleander publiſhed ſome Books.] Mr de la Rochepozai (8) gives me new Reaſon to complain of his Careleſſneſs. He ſays, that Aleander, though very capable of treating on the moſt ſublime Subjects, condeſcended to write on Human Learning, and to publiſh ſome ſmall Pieces, the Subject whereof was very inconſiderable; De re --- literaria licet inferiori bene mereri non dedignatus eſt, exilis argumenti operulis editis, quæ tamen autoris nomen & famam nec elevant neque imminutum cunt (9). Every one, who reads this, will expect to find nothing but Opuſcula in the Catalogue of Aleander's Works, which follows theſe Words of the Nomenclator. Yet the next Sentence run thus. "Scripſit vaſtum opus adverſus ſin-"gulos diſciplinarum profeſſores, in quos cenſuram "acerbius & felicem exercuit calamum; Tabulas in "Grammaticam Græcam, ſeu potius Grammaticam "ad literas Græcas; Dialogos duos feſtiviſſimos, "quorum alter Cicero relegatus inſcribitur, alter vero Cicero revocatus; Carmina quædam illuſtrium "poetarum Italorum carminibus indita; Epiſtolas "multas, quarum quatuor habes inter epiſtolas Fede-"rici Nauſeæ, & alias in quibus de rebus Eccleſiaſti-"cis agit; Annotationes item quaſdam in Bibliothe-"ca Cardinalis Sirleti. —— He wrote a very large "Work againſt Profeſſors of all kinds: whom he cen-"ſured with great Bitterneſs, and upon whom he ex-"erciſed his happy Talent of Writing. He wrote like-"wiſe Tables of the Greek Grammar, or rather a "Grammar itſelf of the Greek Tongue: Two very di-"verting Dialogues, one inſcribed Cicero baniſh'd, "the other Cicero recall'd (10): The Works of ſome "famous Italian Poets inſerted among his own Poetical "Compoſitions: Several Epiſtles; four of which you "have among the Epiſtles of Frederic Nauſeas; and "others, in which he treats of Eccleſiaſtical Matters: "Laſtly, Some Annotations on the Bibliotheca of Car-"dinal Sirlet." If the Reader is offended at finding a large and immenſe Work, where he expected but a ſmall Diſſertation; his Diſguſt encreaſes, when he finds in a Catalogue of an Author's Works no Mark of Diſtinction between what is printed, and

(8) Biſhop of Poictiers, who wrote the Nomenclator Cardinalium.

(9) Nomenclator Cardinal. p. 131. Edit. 1614.

(10) I have ſhewn this to be falſe in the Article LANDO (HORTENSIO).

Digitized by Google

Memory to him [F]. I do not believe there was any reaſon to ſay, that the Hebrew was his Mother-Tongue, or, to expreſs myſelf more plainly, that he was born a Jew [G]. There was more reaſon to accuſe him of being paſſionate (f). He wrote his own and what is not. This Defect reigns throughout the Nomenclator, the Athenæum of Oldoini, and ſeveral other Bibliographers. Aleander's great Work, wherein he cenſured all ſorts of Profeſſors, was never printed. It is ſaid, that he was finiſhing it, when he died. Mentre andava compiendo una vaſtiſſima Opera contra i Profeſſori di tutte le Scienze, fu aſſalito in Roma dalla morte (11). This is what Moreri meant by theſe Words, He died the firſt of February 1542, when he was about publiſhing a conſiderable Work. Moſt Writers have copied Paul Jovius in this Point. " Quum vaſtum opus vaſta illa memoria adverſus " ſingulos diſciplinarum profeſſores agitaret, Romæ " interiit (12). —— He was preparing a prodigious " Work, by the help of that prodigious Memory of " His, againſt Profeſſors of all kinds, when Death " ſeized him at Rome." The Continuators of Geſner and Konig were acquainted only with the Tables of the Greek Grammar, among Aleander's Works. Draudius did not know ſo much. The Catalogue of Oxford contains but a ſmall Poem of this Author's.

(f) See the end of the Remark [G].

(11) Lor. Craſſo, Iſtor. de Poeti Greci, pag. 277.

(12) Jovius in Elog. cap. 98. pag. 231.

[F] Attribute a ſurprizing Memory to him.] I look upon Paul Jovius's Account of this Matter as a meer Poetical Flight, tho' he gave it in Proſe; which is, that Aleander remembred every thing that he read, and could repeat it a long time after, without miſtaking Things, or Words. " Detur hoc incomparabili " inuſitatæ memoriæ felicitati, quæ in Hieronymo " Aleandro ſupra cujuſque vel antiqui ſeculi captum " admiranter excelluit, ut ejus ex vero depicta facies " vel in pudenda ingenii ſterilitate inter fœcundiſſi- " mas imagines conſpiciatur, quando nihil eum cun- " cta volumina cupide perlegentem vel rerum vel " verborum omnino ſubterfugerit, quin ſingula me- " moriter vel à multis annis longo ſepulta ſilentio " recitaret (13). —— We muſt aſcribe this to that un- " common Happineſs of Memory, which was remark- " able in Jerom Aleander, beyond the Comprehenſion " even of ancient Times; inſomuch that a true Picture " of this Author, tho' of a ſhameful barrenneſs of " Genius, might claim a Place among the Repreſen- " tations of the moſt fertile Wits; ſince, notwithſtand- " ing his univerſal Knowledge of Books, which he " read over with great Eagerneſs, nothing, either as " to the Matter or the Expreſſion, eſcaped his Me- " mory; but he could repeat every Particular by Heart, " though many Years after he firſt read them." It is hard to believe this without Experience: but, as a Memory does not ceaſe to be very good, though it does not come up to the Degree, which Paul Jovius mentions, I do not queſtion the perfect Knowledge of divers Languages, which Aleander's Epitaph attributes to him; Hebraïcæ, Græcæ, Latinæ, aliquotque aliarum linguarum exoticarum ita exacte docto, ut eas recte & apte loqueretur & ſcriberet. —— So perfectly ſkilled in the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and other foreign Tongues, that he could both ſpeak and write them juſtly and properly.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 230.

[G] I do not believe there was any Reaſon to ſay ----- That he was born a Jew.] Luther and his Diſciples gave it out as a certain Truth, during Aleander's firſt Nunciature in Germany; and we find the following Account of it in Luther's Works (14). " Ve- " nit his diebus Hieronymus Aleander, vir ſua opi- " nione longe maximus, non ſolum propter linguas " quas eximie callet, ſiquidem Ebræa illi vernacula " eſt, Græca à puero illi coaluit, Latinam autem " didicit diutina profeſſione, ſed etiam mirabilis ſuis " videtur ob antiquitatem generis. Nam Judæus na- " tus eſt, quæ gens immodicè gloriatur de Abraham " vetuſtiſſimo ſe originem ducere. An vero baptiſatus " ſit neſcitur. Certum eſt eum non eſſe Phariſæum, " quia non credit reſurrectionem mortuorum, quoniam " vivit perinde atque cum corpore ſit totus periturus, " adeo nullum à ſe pravum affectum abſtinens. Uſ- " que ad inſaniam iracundus eſt, quavis occaſione " furens. Impotentis arrogantiæ, avaritiæ inexple- " bilis, nefandæ libidinis & immodicæ, ſummum " gloriæ mancipium, quamquam mollior quam qui " poſſit elaborato ſtylo gloriam parare, & pejor quam " qui vel conetur in argumento honeſto. At ne neſ- " ciamus, ceſſit feliciſſime ſimulata defectio ad Chri- " ſtianos. —— Here is juſt arrived Jerom Aleander, " in his own Opinion the moſt famous of Men, not " only on account of the Languages he perfectly under- " ſtands; for Hebrew is his Mother Tongue, Greek " grew familiar to him from his Youth, and Latin " he attained by long exerciſe; but admired likewiſe " by his own Country-men for the Antiquity of his " Race. For he was a Jew by birth; a People which " boaſts extravagantly of their Deſcent from Abraham " who lived ſo many Ages ago. Whether he was " ever baptized, is unknown. But it is certain that " he is not a Phariſee, becauſe he does not believe the " Reſurrection of the dead; ſince he lives, as if he " were to periſh entirely with the Body, and denies " himſelf no Gratification of his depraved Affections. " He is choleric even to Madneſs, falling into a " Paſſion upon every Occaſion; of outrageous Arro- " gance, unſatiable Avarice, ſhameful and immoderate " Luſt; an abandoned Slave to Fame, though too in- " dolent to acquire it by an elaborate Style (15), " and too diſhoneſt even to attempt it by juſt and " proper Reaſoning. As for his pretended Converſion " to Chriſtianity, it has turned out greatly to his " Advantage." This Picture repreſents Aleander to us not only as a Jew, who pretended to become a Convert to Chriſtianity, and whoſe Baptiſm was doubtful, but alſo as one, who did not believe the Immortality of the Soul, and who plunged himſelf into the moſt infamous Pleaſures; as a Man furiouſly paſſionate, covetous, and proud to the higheſt Degree. He anſwered the Accuſation of being born a Jew, and declared before the Diet of Worms, that his Anceſtors had the Dignity of Marquis in Iſtria, and that he had given good Proofs of his Noble and Illuſtrious Extraction, when he was made Canon of Liege. He appealed to ſeveral Perſons, who heard him, and knew his Family. Mr Seckendorf informs us of this Particular. He found it in the Archives of the Duke of Weimar, where the Acts of the Diet of Worms are kept, among other Manuſcripts of that time. Aleander's long Speech is abbreviated in thoſe Acts, and it is from thence that this illuſtrious Lutheran furniſhed us with the above-mentioned Account of Aleander's Family, which he tranſlated from his own Words into Latin (16). " Tandem " queſtus eſt à Luthero ſpargi quaſi Aleander gente " Judæus eſſet: Deum immortalem! dixit, multi hic " ſunt boni viri quibus notus ſum ego & familia mea, " & aſſerere ego vere poſſum, majores meos Marchio- " nes in Iſtria fuiſſe (17); quod vero parentes mei " ad inopiam redacti ſunt, fato tribui debet. Natales " meos ita legitimavi, ut in Canonicum Leodienſem " receptus ſim, quod factum non foret, niſi ortus " eſſem ex familia illuſtri vel ſpectabili." What induces me to believe, that this Reproach of being born a Jew was unjuſt, is no trifling Reaſon. Hulric Hutten publiſhed an Invective againſt Aleander, wherein he was ſo angry, that he threatened to kill him: " Omnem advertam diligentiam, omne adhi- " bebo ſtudium, omnia tentabo conaborque, ut qui " furore, amentia, & iniquitate gravis acceſſiſti, vita " inanis hinc efferaris. Neque enim exſpectandum " adhuc tibi eſt, ut ſtilos hic doctorum virorum ſen- " tias, ſed futurum crede, ut fortium gladiis conſo- " diare (18). —— I will watch every Opportunity, " I will make it my whole Buſineſs, I will try every " Art and Means, that one ſo full of Rage, Mad- " neſs, and Iniquity, may not depart with his Life. " For you muſt not expect, that the Learned here will " expreſs their Reſentments againſt you with their " Pens; depend upon it, the Swords of the Brave " will revenge their Quarrel on you." He was not ignorant that our Nuncio had refuted the Reproach of Judaiſm before the Diet, and had boaſted that he deſcended from a moſt illuſtrious Family; but he is ſo far from engaging to maintain this Charge, that he denies it was ever brought againſt him. I am not concerned, whether he had reaſon to deny it, or not; the Proof I draw from his Silence is the ſame; for if he had believed there was any Ground for this Accuſation, he would, at leaſt, have maintained, that Aleander denied his Jewiſh Extraction falſly. But, on the contrary, does he not affirm, that the Counts, to whom he ſaid he was related, did not acknowledge

(14) Tom. 1. fol. 496. apud Seckendorf. de Luther. lib. 1. pag. 125. n. 4.

(15) Paul Jovius ſays, That Aleander learn'd only to ſpeak well, and that, when he attempted to write, he perceiv'd his weak ſide too late.

(16) Seckend. de Luther. pag. 143. lit. k.

(17) It is ſaid in his Epitaph, that he deſcended è Comitibus Lancii, in Carnia Petrenſoſæ in Iſtria.

(18) Hutten. in Aleandrum.

Digitized by Google

own Epitaph, which shews that he was not dissatisfied with his Condition, as some have charged him with being [H]. Erasmus mentions him frequently in his Letters, and almost always to his Disadvantage [I]. He complains, among other things, of the acknowledge him for their Kinsman? "Nihil intel- "lexisti proxima auditione, cum multis quidem ex- "cusares Judaicam originem, nemo objiceret. Nam "esse malum, quacunque etiam gente editum, scie- "bant omnes. Itaque nemo magnopere putabat ge- "neris pravitatem tibi objiciendam: adversum mores "fremebant infense multi. Et poterat sentiri jam "manifeste quæ esset animorum commotio: tu ta- "men, quasi illic potissimum expurgatione opus effet, "multis tractabas locum eum ad fastidium usque au- "dientium: sed tanta cum fiducia, ut plane certus "tibi esse videreris neminem intelligere, quam im- "pudenter ibi mentireris omnia. Illo enim post "multa erupisti, ut ad nobilissimum Comitum, qui te "penitus ignorant, & quos tu haud satis nosti, ge- (19) Id. ib. "nus, originem tuam referres (19). —— At the next "Hearing, you behaved quite like a Fool, when you "took so much Pains to refute, what no one objected "to you, the Charge of having been born of Jewish "Parents. Every one knew you to be a Rascal, what- "ever was your Extraction. Therefore no one thought "it of much Importance to object to you the Vileness "of your Origin; whereas many inveighed strongly "against your Morals. The Disposition of the Au- "dience towards you was very evident; yet, as if "the Refutation of this Charge was of the highest "Consequence, you dwelt upon it with such tiresome "Prolixity, that the Hearers were quite sick of the "Subject; and That, with such an Air of Assurance, "as if you were convinced, that no one understood, "how impudently false every thing you said was. For, "at last, you had the Confidence to refer your Birth and "Origin to a Noble Family of Counts, who know "nothing of you, and whom you yourself know very "little of." Now, as the least Story, which is handed about, becomes at last considerable; I would not deny, that the Slander, which was spread against this Nuncio, was grounded upon what Paul Jovius says, that the Jews admired Aleander's Skill in the Hebrew Tongue, and that they were much inclined to believe that he was of their Nation: "Latinæ "Græcæque literæ quum sæpe alacriter jactabundo "pro vernaculis haberentur, Hebraicas admirantibus "Judæis & suæ stirpis eum facile credentibus, soler- "tissime didicit (20)." They, who shall have a (20) Jovius Elog. cap. 98. p. 231. mind to criticize upon me, are desired to observe, that I do not pretend, that Paul Jovius's Book occasioned this Calumny; the Notion, I think, might have been broached long before Paul Jovius took any Notice of it.

"What Luther says, that Aleander was very cho- "leric, is very true: We may believe Josse Gentin, "this Cardinal's Secretary, in a Letter to Nausea "Bishop of Vienna *. He tells him, with the great- * Lib. 8. Epist. ad Nauseam à variis Scriptarum, p. 353. "est Simplicity, after having informed him of the "Death of Aleander, that he knows not where to "go, after the Death of his Master, for fear of find- "ing one more passionate still. Hactenus, says he, "alium Mecenatem Romæ non quæsivi, eo quod im- "modestia & furor hujus mei defuncti inculcat mihi "timorem ne faciam Glauci cum Diomede permu- "tationem. —— Hitherto I have not looked out for "another Mecenas at Rome; for the intemperate "Disposition of my deceased Patron makes me afraid "of making Glaucus's Exchange with Diomedes." See the Margin (21).

(21) This Supplement comes from Mr. de la Mennoie.

[H] He wrote his own Epitaph, which shews that he was not dissatisfied with his Condition, as some have charged him with being.] It consists of two Greek Verses, importing, that he died willingly; since he should thereby avoid being a Witness of many things, the Sight of which was more insufferable than Death.

Κάτθανον ἐκ ἄεκων, ὅτι παύσομαι ὧν ἐπιμάρτυς
Πολλῶν, ὥνπερ ἰδεῖν ἄλγιον ἦν θανεῖν.

This would be the Disposition of all Men, if Reflexion, Reason, and Sense were capable of surmounting those Mechanical Impressions, which make us in love with Life. But, setting aside this profound Morality, I say it is very strange, that Paul Jovius should produce such an express Evidence against himself, as this Epitaph. He had said, that Aleander, angry with his Fate, which took him off one Year before his Climacteric, died complaining of this Anticipation: Interiit fato suo vehementer indignatus, quum se præreptum anno uno ante climactericum inter anxia supremaque suspiria quereretur (22): and, immediately after, he adds, that Aleander ordered, by his Will, that a Greek Distich of his own Composition, should be inserted in his Epitaph, containing this Thought: (22) Jovius, ubi supra.

Exceffi è vitæ ærumnis faciliſque lubenſque,
Ne pejora ipſa morte dehinc videam.

Tranquil of Heart, and with a willing Mind,
The World, and all it's Miseries, I resign'd;
Pleas'd to awake from Life's uneasy Dream,
Nor longer see what worse than Death I deem.

Lorenzo Crasso gives nearly the same Account of Aleander's Indignation at his Fate: "Fu assalito in "Roma dalla Morte, contro la quale mostrossi anche "negli ultimi sospiri sdegnato (23). —— He was (23) Lor. Crass. Hist. di Poet. Gr. pag. 278. "seized with Death at Rome, at which he ex- "pressed great Indignation, even with his last Breath." He foretels, says Paul Jovius, new Misfortunes ready to fall on our Heads, novas clades imminere nobis ominatur; but nothing is more false than this: Aleander considered the time to come only accidentally; all his Thoughts were employ'd on the past; he only declared his Belief, that the World would not mend. So that here is a second Error of Paul Jovius. As to the first, he cannot be justified, without being moreover charged with monstrous Calumny, in representing Aleander as a Cheat upon his Death-bed, who ordered, by his Will, that Posterity should be made to believe a notorious Falshood, to wit, that he died in great Discontent of Mind. Lorenzo Crasso says, that Scraderus inserted the Sepulchral Inscription of Aleander in his Monuments of Italy, with the Latin Translation of the two Greek Verses (24); (24) Id. ib. pag. 278. This Translation is the same which Paul Jovius mentions; and is about as good as this; "Non in- "vitus obii, quia quiesco; tellis multorum quæ "videre pejus est morte (25). —— I did not die (25) Chytræus, l. 1. fol. 438. relates it, apud Seckendorf, lib. 1. pag. 128. lit. b. "unwillingly, because I am at Rest; having been Wit- "ness of many things, which to see is worse than "Death." This is the Consequence of making use of a Language but little known; all the Force and Grace of the Greek Distich have escaped the Translators.

Let me insert in this Place a Remark, which was communicated to me by a learned Person: Josse Gentin says, in his Letter to Nausea, that Aleander, having disposed his Affairs three Days before he died, servitoribus & aliis præsentibus pronunciavit suum quod fieri cupiebat epitaphium, —— declared to his Servants and others what kind of Epitaph he desired to have, quod hoc districho clausit; κάτθανον, &c. which he concluded with this Distich, κάτθανον &c. This shews, adds he, that the Epitaph did not consist altogether of two Verses, but that they were only the Conclusion of the Epitaph. I am not of this Opinion. I believe Gentin meant that his Master comprehended in this Distich all the Inscription he intended for his Tomb.

[I] Erasmus mentions him frequently in his Letters, and almost always to his Disadvantage.] Aleander, being naturally of a warm Temper, and being moreover interested in the Ruin of Lutheranism, by his Quality of Nuncio, sent into Germany to stifle that Party in it's Birth, could not suffer the Moderation of Erasmus. This was not all; Erasmus's Enemies did not cease to defame him, as a Favourer of Lutheranism: Thus the reciprocal Friendship and Esteem, which was between him and the Nuncio, suffered a great Diminution upon Aleander's first coming into Germany. "Hieronymum Aleandrum Nun- "cium apostolicum, hominem apprime doctum, mi- "hique vetere ac jucundissima necessitudine conjun- "ctum, miris mendaciis in me conati sunt irritare "—— Quid multis? persuaserant homini, ut acri "ingenio prædito, ita credulo, me parum amice de "ipso & sentire & loqui. Nec defuerunt qui coales- "centem

Digitized by Google

the ill Offices he had done him with the Biſhop of Liege, with whom Aleander had

" centem amicitiam novis ſubinde delationibus diſcin" derent (26). ——They endeavoured by ſurprizing Fal-
(26) Eraſm. Epiſt. 24. lib. 17. pag. 767.
" ſhood to exaſperate againſt me Jerom Aleander, a very " learned Perſon, and my old and intimate Friend.——
" In ſhort, he was ſo credulous, though a Man of acute
" Parts, as to be perſuaded by them, that I thought and
" ſpoke of him not like a Friend. Nor were there want-
" ing ſome, who contrived, by new Calumnies, to pre-
" vent the Renewal of our Friendſhip." This is to ſpeak but ſlightly of Aleander's ill Diſpoſitions, if it be true, as it is highly probable, that it is He, who is denoted elſwhere (27), by the Title of Bull-Carrier, Διπλωματοφόρος; for That Bull-Carrier did his utmoſt Endeavours to ruin Eraſmus; and it was well for the latter, that the Emperor did not comply with every thing he deſired of him; " Me quo ini-
(27) Idem, in the 24th Letter of the 25th Book, pag. 1379.
" nus oppreſſerit, per illum non ſtetit: perierat Eraſ-
" mus, ſi pronas aures Principum reperiſſet.—— If I
" was not ruined, no Thanks to him: Eraſmus had
" been loſt, if the Great had lent a favourable Ear
" to him." A Letter, which Eraſmus had written to Luther, and which the Friends of the latter had made public, exaſperated Aleander to that Degree, that he endeavoured to ruin his ancient Friend, both with the Pope, and with the Biſhop of Liege. " Hæc
" (Epiſtola) dedit anſam Aleandro, jampridem ini-
" quo in me animo, ut me perditum iret, conatus
" Leonis animum irritare in me, ſimul Leodienſis
" Epiſcopi, qui prius pene deperibat, ut ita loquar,
" Eraſmum. Nam ipſe Leodienſis oſtendit mihi li-
" teras, quas ad eum à Roma ſcripſerat Aleander,
(28) Id. Ep. 113. lib. 19. pag. 949.
" ſatis odioſe me attingentes (28). —— His Letter
" induced Aleander, already prepoſſeſſed againſt me, to
" contrive my Ruin, which he endeavoured to do,
" by exaſperating Pope Leo againſt me; as alſo the
" Biſhop of Leige, who before was doatingly fond,
" if I may uſe the Expreſſion, of Eraſmus. For the
" Biſhop himſelf ſhewed me the Letters, which Ale-
" ander wrote to him from Rome, in which he ſuf-
" ficiently diſcovered his Spleen againſt me." He affected to ſay that Eraſmus's Works were the Source of all the Heretical Doctrines, then maintained. " Jam
" audio multis perſuaſum ex meis ſcriptis extitiſſe
" totam hanc Eccleſiæ procellam. Cujus vaniſſimi
" rumoris præcipuus autor fuit Hieronymus Alean-
" der, homo, ut nihil aliud dicam, non ſuperſtitioſe
(29) Id. Ep. 34. lib. 20. pag. 1040.
" verax (29). —— I am now informed, that it is a
" general Perſuaſion, that all this Storm, which has " fallen upon the Church, was raiſed by my Writings.
" The chief Author of this groundleſs Report was Je-
" rom Aleander, a Perſon, to ſay no more of him,
" not over ſcrupulous with regard to Truth." He not only found fault with Eraſmus's Religion, but reflected alſo upon that great Man's Learning, and his Works. This appears by a Letter, which Eraſ-
(30) The 53d of the 18th Book.
mus wrote to him in the Year 1524 (30), in which he opens his Heart to him. He looked upon him as ſo enraged an Enemy, that he took him for one of the chief Promoters of the Cenſures, which the Sorbonne had publiſhed againſt his Books, and for the true Author of the Invective, which paſſed under the Name of Julius Cæſar Scaliger. " Non tamen
" erant prodituræ Cenſuræ, niſi quidam oleum camino
" addidiſſent. Lutetiæ fuit Eccius, &, ut ſuſpicor,
" Aleander; quem ſuſpicor hac de cauſa præcipue
" veniſſe, ut Eraſmo moliatur exitium. Julii Sca-
" ligeri libellum tam ſcio illius eſſe, quam ſcio me
" vivere. Id tamen diſſimulandum eſt, ne magis in-
(31) Id. Ep. 56. lib. 30. pag. 1941.
" ſaniat prodito fuco (31). —— However theſe Cen-
" ſures would never have appeared, had not a certain
" Perſon thrown Oil upon the Fire. It is well known,
" that Eccius was at Paris, and, as I ſuſpect, Ale-
" ander; whoſe principal Deſign in coming thither, I
" ſuſpect to have been, a Plot againſt Eraſmus. I am
" as ſure, that the Book of Julius Scaliger is His,
" as that I am now alive. But this muſt be diſſembled,
" leaſt he ſhould grow more furious, upon pulling off the
(32) In Remark [M] of the Article ERASMUS.
" Maſk." I have ſhewn elſewhere (32), that Eraſ-
mus was miſtaken in relation to this laſt Fact; Scaliger's Oration was the Work of Him, whoſe Name it bears; and, to ſay, that, in the Year 1531, Aleander went to Paris, chiefly to contrive Eraſmus's Ruin, is to think one's ſelf too conſiderable a Man, and to be ignorant of the Nature of the Charge, which the Pope gave this Nuncio. We ſhall ſee in another Place (33), whether Eraſmus had reaſon to attribute a Book, which bore the Name of Dolet, to Aleander. He meant this Nuncio in the twenty fourth Letter of the twenty fifth Book. Aleander's Paſſion muſt therefore have been extream; for he, whom Eraſ- (33) In the ſame Remark.
mus complains of, had handed about a Paper (34) at the Court of Rome, wherein he told the Pope, that he wondered that, ſo many thouſands of Men having periſhed in Germany, in the War of the Peaſants, Eraſmus, the Author of this furious Tumult, was yet living. We cannot be ignorant, who the Author is, whom Eraſmus denotes, ſince we find theſe Words in another Letter: " In me impudentiſſimis
" argumentis cauſam agit (Albertus Pius) & agit
" hoſtiliter, docere laborans, me fuiſſe occaſionem,
" cauſam, autorem & principem, totius hujus negotii.
" Quod idem agit Aleander in ſuo Racha, demirans
" me adhuc ſpirare, quum in Germania tot hominum
" millia ſint trucidata (35). —— Albertus Pius car-
(34) In which he explained the meaning of the Hebrew Word Racha.
(35) Eraſm. Epiſt. 99. lib. 20. pag. 1052. It is dated from Baſil, Dec. 23. 1528.
" ries on the Cauſe againſt me with moſt impudent
" Arguments, and declares open War againſt me;
" taking a great deal of Pains to ſhew, that I was
" the Occaſion, the Cauſe, the Author, and Ring-
" leader of this whole Affair. Aleander does the
" ſame, in his Racha, in which he expreſſes his Won-
" der, that I am yet alive, after the Slaughter of
" ſo many thouſand Men in Germany." In another Place (36) he denotes him by the Name of VERPUS, which ſhews that he believed ſtill, that Ale-
(36) In the 43th Letter of the 30th Book, pag. 1931. See alſo the 74th Letter of the ſame Book.
ander was born a Jew. If Aleander wrote this Book, he held a very ſtrict Correſpondence with Eraſmus, and had the ſame Table, the ſame Chamber, and the ſame Bed with him; and had received beſides good Offices from him; for thus Eraſmus expreſſes himſelf: " Cum altero fuit mihi olim non tectum
" modo ac menſa, verum etiam cubiculum & lectus
" communis: adeoque à me nulla læſus eſt injuria,
" ut, quum illi res eſſent anguſtiores, commendatri-
" cibus literis meis nonnihil etiam adjutus ſit, nec
" uſquam illius in ſcriptis meis niſi honorifica men-
" tio (37). —— The other ſhared not only my Houſe
(37) Epiſt. 24. lib. 25. pag. 1379.
" and my Table, but even my Bed (38); and ſo far
" was He from receiving an Injury from me, that,
" when his Circumſtances were a little embaraſſed, I
(38) It was probably at Venice, when Eraſmus was employ'd by Aldus Manutius.
" aſſiſted him in ſome meaſure by Letters of Recommen-
" dation; nor did I ever mention him in my Writings
" but with Reſpect." We muſt neceſſarily underſtand this of Aleander, when we remember another Letter (39), wherein we find theſe Words: " Ut
" video, tibi propemodum perſuaſit (Aleander); at " ego, qui è domeſtico convictu ac lectuli quoque
(39) The 58th Letter of the 30th Book of Eraſmus, pag. 1945.
" contubernio totum intus & in cute nôvi, tam ſcio
" eſſe ovum illius, quàm ſcio me vivere. —— I find,
" Aleander has perſuaded you of the contrary; but
" I, who, from my Intimacy with him, ſee into his
" very Thoughts, am as certain This Work (40) is (40) He means Scaliger's Oration.
" His, as that I am alive." Let us end this diſadvantageous Relation with a Paſſage, which concerns Aleander's Morals. If we may believe Eraſmus, he lived at Venice the Life of an Epicurean in the Year 1533. Nunc Venetiæ planè vivit Epicureum, non ſine dignitate tamen (41). —Not without Dignity. Doubtleſs he means, by this Dignity, the double Mitre, which he had mentioned in the ſixtieth Letter. Aleander (41) Epiſt. 62. lib. 30. pag. 1943.
gemina mitra inſignitus, nam Brunduſinus & Oretinus eſt; apud Cæſarem agit legatum Anglicum (42). This (42) Epiſt. 60. lib. 30.
latter Term is equivocal, and perhaps Eraſmus did not write Anglicum, but Angelicum, to denote the Office of Apoſtolical Nuncio, which Aleander had at that time in Germany. However, it had not been amiſs to have hinted, in a marginal Note, that he was not the King of England's Ambaſſador to the Emperor Charles V; for the Reader will naturally underſtand it ſo. Monſ. de la Monnoie happily conjectures, that Anglicum was owing to Eraſmus's having written, by way of Abbreviation, āplicum for apoſtolicum.

The Reader ſhould, at leaſt, ſee one Paſſage of Eraſmus, to the Advantage of Aleander: " Etiamſi
" nominaſſes iſtum, qui Aleandrum Eraſmo præfert
" in omnibus, nihil erat periculi. Nam & ipſe plu-
" rimum tribuere ſoleo Aleandro, præſertim in lite-
" ris, nihiloque magis me lædi puto, ſi doctior eſt,
(43) Epiſt. 4. lib. 21. pag. 1063. See likewiſe pag. 814.
" quam quod ditior eſt aut formoſior (43).—— You
" might ſafely have named him, who prefers Aleander
" to Eraſmus in every thing. For I always pay a
" great

Digitized by Google

had a Brother, who was a much greater Maſter, than he, of the Art of Diſſimulation [K].

(a) They are diſtinguiſhed by the Appellations of Aleander the elder, and Aleander the younger.

ALEANDER (JEROM) of the ſame Family with the Preceding (a), and Grandſon of Jerom Amalthus, by the Mother's ſide, was one of the learned Men of the XVIIth Century. Upon his quitting Frioul, his Native Country, to go to Rome, he was made Secretary to Cardinal Octavio Bandini, which Employ he diſcharged with Honour near twenty Years. He ventured early to appear in Print; for he had ſcarce taken his Degree of Civilian, before he publiſhed a Commentary on the Inſtitutes of Caius. He did not ſuffer his Pen to be idle at Rome; for being one of the firſt who was admitted into the riſing Academy of the Humouriſts, he had always ſome Compoſition ready to produce before them, and wrote likewiſe a very learned Treatiſe, in Italian, on the Device of that Aſſembly. The Fertility of his Genius, and his Studies, appeared in ſeveral Works on different Subjects. He explained ſome Pieces of Antiquity [A]; he wrote on the Queſtion concerning Suburbian Churches, and publiſhed a Book againſt That, which an anonymous Author (b) had compoſed on this Subject, in Favour of the Proteſtants. A Volume of his Verſes was publiſhed, and was followed by an Apology for the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, againſt the rude Attacks of the Cavalier Stiliani. Urban VIII. expreſſed his Eſteem for him advantageouſly; for he laboured to draw him from the Service of Cardinal Bandini, in order to place him in That of the Barberinis: ſo that Aleander became Secretary to Cardinal Francis Barberini, the Pope's Nephew. He went with this Cardinal into France, when he was ſent thither with the Character of Legate à Latere. He did not ſink under the Fatigues of this long Journey, but bore them with Reſolution, notwithſtanding the Weakneſs of his Conſtitution, and his want of Health. He was not ſo much Maſter of himſelf, with regard to good Cheer. He had agreed, with ſome of his intimate Friends, to treat one another every three Days by turns. Amidſt ſuch a Variety of Delicacies, he could not forbear eating more than was proper, conſidering his weak Stomach; ſo that he fell ſick, and could not recover of his Illneſs (c). The Cardinal his Maſter, made a magnificent Funeral for him in the Academy of the Humouriſts, and his Brethren, the Academics, carried his Body to the Grave (d). Gaſpar de Simeonibus ſpoke his Funeral Oration on the 31ſt of December 1631. It was printed at Paris in the Year 1636. Aleander had ſuch an elegant and genteel way of writing, that the Compliment, which one of his Friends made him upon it, deſerves our Notice [B].

(b) Salmaſius.

(c) Mr Baillet, in his Judgment on the Poets, n. 1420. and Witte in his Diarium Biograph. part. 2. pag. 40. place his Death in the Year 1631. Witte calls him Alexander.

(d) Taken from Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. 1. See alſo Alatius in Apibus Urbanis, pag. 123, 124, 125.

[A] He explained ſome pieces of Antiquity.] They were two Marbles, a Table, and a Statue. The Table contained the Figure, and the Symbols, of the Sun; the Statue was ſurrounded with a Girdle full of carved Work. The Title of this Work of Aleander is as follows: Explicatio antiquæ tabulæ marmoreæ ſolis effigie ſymboliſque exculptæ: explicatio ſigillorum zonæ veterem ſtatuam marmoream cingentis. It is in Quarto, printed at Rome, in the Year 1616, and at Paris, in the Year 1617. I do not queſtion but his Acquaintance with Father Morin was owing to this Work. It appears, by the Book, entituled, Eccleſiæ Orientalis antiquitates (1), that they correſponded by Letters.

(1) It was printed at London in 1682. and at Francfort in 1683. 12mo.

[B] Such an elegant and genteel way of Writing, that the Compliment —— deſerves our notice.] Nicius Erythræus told him often, When I read your Works, I find myſelf a learned Man; but when I read thoſe of other Writers, who pretend to Eloquence, I find myſelf very Ignorant; for I underſtand nothing in them. How few Latin Authors are there, at preſent, who deſerve this Compliment? I do not ſpeak of thoſe, who write in the Chancery, or Scholaſtic, Style, but of thoſe, who write as Orators, and who labour their Phraſes. They are generally fit only to mortify the Preſumption of their Readers, who find themſelves every Moment ſtopt by ſome Alluſion, or ſome Metaphor, ſo confuſedly expreſt, that they are altogether in the Dark. The Misfortune is, that the Reader is ſeldom mortify'd by this means, ſince Self-love prompts him to impute the Cauſe of theſe Obſcurities, not to his own Ignorance, but to the Nonſenſe of the Author. However, I fancy the Reader will be pleaſed to read Nicius Erythræus's genteel Compliment in the Original. "Scribendi ejuſdem ratio tum in ſoluta "oratione tum in verſibus adeo erat pura, adeo perſpi-"cua, ut ſæpe ex me audiret tum demum me mihi-"met doctum eruditumque videri, cum ſua legerem; "cum autem in aliorum ſcripta, qui ſe eloquentes di-"ci vellent, incurrerem, tum plane me indoctum om-"niumque rerum rudem agnoſcere, eò quod verbum "prorſus in illis nullum intelligerem (2)." This ought to have been a ſtrong Inducement to him, not to leave any Obſcurities in his Elogies; and yet they are not altogether free from it. Some think he has not expreſs'd clearly, whether it was at Rome or Paris, that good Cheer was ſo fatal to Aleander; they believe it was at Paris (3). As for myſelf, I do not queſtion the contrary; the Agreement of treating one another two or three times a Week, by turns, favours more of Perſons, at eaſe, and at Home, than of Travellers. Beſides, the Journey, which the Legate Francis Barberini took into France, in the Year 1625, laſted but few Months; and Aleander did not die 'till the Year 1631.

(2) Nicius Erythr. Pinacoth. 1. pag. 46.

(3) See the Judgment of the Learned on the Poets, Tom. 4. n. 1420. pag. 54.

(44) Ep. 57. lib. 2. pag. 1011.

ALEGAMBUS (PHILIP) a Flemiſh Jeſuit, was born at Bruſſels, the Twenty ſecond of January 1592. He ſtudied Claſſical Learning in his own Country; after which he went into Spain, and entered into the Duke of Oſſuna's Service; whom he followed into Sicily, when he went to take upon him the Office of Viceroy there. Finding within himſelf a Call to a Religious Life, he took the Jeſuit's Habit at Palermo, lermo, on the ſeventh Day of September, 1613. He performed his Noviciate, and his Courſe of Philoſophy, in the ſame City, and his Divinity Studies at Rome; from whence he was ſent into Stiria, to teach Philoſophy in the Univerſity of Gratz. Having diſcharged the Duties of this Function to the Satisfaction of his Maſters, he was made Profeſſor of School-Divinity, and ſolemnly promoted to the Doctorate in the Year 1629. During theſe Tranſactions, the Prince of Eggemberg, Favourite of the Emperor Ferdinand II, had a mind to ſend his Son to travel, and to appoint a prudent and learned Jeſuit to be his Confeſſor in his Travels. Father Alegambus was thought fit for this Employ, and was taken out of the Schools to travel with this young Lord. He was five Years with him, and ſaw Germany, France, Spain, Portugal, and Italy. Being returned to Gratz, he taught Moral Divinity there, and was the Spiritual Father of the Youth. In the Year 1638, the young Prince, whom he had accompanied in his Travels, was nominated by the Emperor Ferdinand III, for the Embaſſy of Obedience to Pope Urban VIII. He deſired Father Alegambus to accompany him; upon which this Jeſuit travelled to Rome, in Quality of the Ambaſſador's Confeſſor. When this Function was over, the General of the Jeſuits retained him to be his Secretary for the Latin Diſpatches, which related to Germany. Alegambus, having diſcharged the Duties of this laborious Function for four Years ſucceſſively, was obliged to leave it; a continual Application to Writing having greatly impaired his Sight. Upon this they gave him the Prefecture of Spirituals in the Maiſon Profeſſe, and the Office of confeſſing in the Church; of which it is ſaid he acquitted himſelf with great Applauſe. He died at Rome of a Dropſy, on the ſixth Day of September 1652 (a). He wrote but few Books [A]; and yet he deſerves the Elogy of a very good Author; for the Bibliotheque of the Writers of his Order is a good Book in it's kind, and excels by much all the Works of this Nature, which were wrote before That time. He muſt neceſſarily have taken a great deal of Pains in collecting the Materials; a Work, which requires two Talents, ſeldom found together, great Patience, and great Eagerneſs. He was obliged afterwards to put theſe Materials in order; and this was the moſt laborious part of his Work; becauſe a Man is no longer ſupported by the ſtrong Inclination, which prompted him to ſearch for the Materials, which he wanted. It was at Rome that Alegambus compoſed his Bibliotheque; for which he had collected ſo many Memoirs (b); and it was printed at Antwerp in 1643. He ſo greatly enlarged the Work, which the Jeſuit Ribadeneira had begun on this Subject [B], that, whereas the Work of the latter is but a very ſmall Octavo, his is a pretty large Folio. I ſhall mention, in the Remarks, what has been ſaid for or againſt it [C]. He intended a new Edition, and, during the nine Years he ſurvived the former,

Digitized by Google

(a) Taken from Sotuel's Bibl. Scriptor. Societ. Jeſu. Rome 1675. pag. 706, 707.

(b) Sotuel, ibid.

[A] He wrote but few Books.] The Catalogue of his Works, according to Father Sotuel, is as follows: Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jeſu, Antverpiæ, 1643, in Folio. Vita P. Johannis Cardin Luſitani ex Societate Jeſu, Romæ, 1649, in 12°. Heroes & Victimæ charitatis Societatis Jeſu, Romæ, 1658, in 4to. Mortes illuſtres & geſta eorum de Societate Jeſu, qui in odium fidei ab Hæreticis vel aliis occiſi ſunt, Romæ, 1557, in Folio.

[B] The Work, which the Jeſuit Ribadeneira had begun on this Subject.] That the Reader, who deſires to know the Hiſtory of the Bibliotheque, of which we ſpeak, may not have the trouble of turning to another Volume, I ſhall obſerve here, that Peter Ribadeneira begun, in the Year 1602, the Catalogue of the Jeſuit Authors. This Catalogue conſiſted of but few Sheets; he enlarged it afterwards, and publiſhed it at Antwerp, in the Year 1608. It was printed at Lyons, the Year following, with ſome Additions, and Corrections, in relation to ſome Particulars concerning the French Jeſuits, with which the Author was unacquainted. Father Julius Nigroni perceived, that this Work ſtood in need of Correction in many other Places, particularly with reſpect to the Italian Jeſuits; upon which a new Edition was publiſhed, in the Year 1613, at Antwerp. Father Andrew Schott had the Care of it; and it was conſiderably enlarged (1); but was ſtill a very defective Work; which was the Reaſon why Alegambus undertook to put it into a better Condition, and to make it fitter to give an advantageous Idea of the Erudition of the Society. He publiſhed it in the Year 1643. It was ſtill farther enlarged by the Jeſuit Sotuel, whoſe Edition was publiſhed at Rome, in the Year 1675, and no doubt it will require ſtill farther Additions, both becauſe the Society of the Jeſuits continually affords new Authors, and becauſe many things eſcaped the laſt Continuator, which might make the Bibliotheque of the Order more perfect. The ſecond Tome of the Bibliotheque Romaine (2), informs us, that the Jeſuit Bonanni is preparing a Catalogue of the Writers of his Society, who have publiſhed any thing ſince the Year 1675. The Exactneſs of Alegambus is doubtleſs wonderful; but yet there are ſome Faults, both of Omiſſion and Commiſſion, in his Book. He does not always mention the firſt Edition of Books, which is a conſiderable Fault, to be found in all the Compilations, which have hitherto appeared. No one has yet undertaken to publiſh an exact Collection of all the Editions, and carefully to obſerve the firſt. Geſner, and his Continuators, have been very negligent in this reſpect. Father Sotuel, willing to avoid the minute Particulars, on which Alegambus ſometimes enlarges a little too much, is too conciſe and barren. He was not ſo well qualify'd for this Work, as Alegambus. The Curious, and even thoſe, who excuſe him on account of the Orders, which he might have received from his Superiors, in relation to the anonymous, and pſeudonymous Writers, look upon his Work, in this reſpect, as much inferior to that of the former, in which ſo many obſcure Authors are brought to light.

(1) See Alegambus's Preface.

(2) Printed at Rome in 1692. The Author's Name is Proſper Mandoſio.

[C] What has been ſaid for or againſt it.] Mr Baillet will ſupply us with a Comment on the Text of this Remark. Let us begin with the fair ſide.

He ſays (3), that "the Bibliotheque of the Writers "of the Society - - - - - - - - - is a grand Collection, "which ſurpaſſes all thoſe of the ſame Nature, and "that it ought to be conſidered as one of the moſt "perfect of the kind:" That, according to Nicolas Antonio (4), "the Jeſuits have ſhewn, by this Work, "how curious and induſtrious they are in the things "which concern them, and that, having built on the "Foundation of Ribadeneira, they raiſed this great "Edifice; the Beauty whereof conſiſts particularly in "the Exactneſs and Proportion of it's Parts, and of "which the whole Credit is due to Alegambus, a "Writer ſo careful and exact, that there is no Danger "of being deceived by him; becauſe he is not only "free from Confuſion, and never takes one Author "for another, but alſo becauſe he does not attribute "any Book to the Jeſuits, which they did not write, "and becauſe he is exact and faithful, in his Repre"ſentation of thoſe, which really come from the So"ciety." Mr Baillet adds, "that it is no ſmall Praiſe

(3) Baillet's Judgment of the Learned, Tom. 2. n. 112. p. 130.

(4) Præf. Biblioth. Scriptor. Hiſpan.

"- - - - - to

Digitized by Google

mer, he collected many Particulars, which might serve for Corrections, or Additions. Father Sotuel made use of them, when he published a new Edition of this Bibliotheque at Rome, in 1675 (c).

(c) Id. ibid.

It cannot be denied that there are many inconsiderable Authors taken Notice of in this Book, and many Authors of the first Rank. But some pretend, that should it be continued, there would be a very sensible Disproportion in it; that is to say, the great Men would be incomparably fewer in the Continuation, than in what has hitherto appeared. This gives me an Opportunity of communicating to the Public what passed in a Conversation between some learned Persons in the Year 1697 [D].

" -------- to have avoided a Fault with so much " Care, into which most of the other Regulars have " fallen, who have given an account of the illustrious " Men of their Order; who, thinking to do Honour " to their Communities, by increasing the Number of " their learned Men and Saints, indifferently, and " without Choice, have plac'd a great many Authors " among their Brethren, who did not belong to " them; whereas there is scarce one to be seen in the " Bibliotheque of the Society, who had not been a Je- " suit. Nay, that the Writers, who left their Society, " as Papyrius Masso, Gaspar Scioppius, Mark Antony de " Dominis, Christian Francken, &c. do not appear in " it." Or that if they are seen there, it is only in relation to their Works, which preceded their Departure; that, in this View, we find there Francis de Macedo, a Portuguese, who from a Jesuit became a Cordelier, and Claudius Dausquey, a Fleming, who left the Society for a Canonship at Tournay. Lastly, Mr Baillet observes, that, according to the Author of the News from the Republic of Letters (5), Alegambus, " suited himself to the Taste of our Age, that " is, of all Persons of good Sense; that this Taste con- " sists in observing a Chronological Exactness in every " thing relating to History; that it is this, which oc- " casioned the Approbation of the Applauses bestowed " upon Alegambus, who takes notice every where of " the Time, and Place, of the Birth of Authors, the " Age when they became Jesuits, their Employments, " and their chief Actions, according to the Series of " Time, and that there is something extreamly plea- " sing in this Exactness.. Lastly, continues Mr Baillet " (6), as the Society of the Jesuits has been hither- " to the most Learned of all regular Societies, that " is to say, at least, the most abundant in all sorts of " Writers (except in Physic) -------- we may " judge from thence of the Advantage, which may " be drawn from this copious Bibliotheque, which is " well enough written, without any affectation of a " particular Style, and without too far-fetch'd Orna- " ments -------- dispos'd in a very fine Method, " and embellish'd with a great Number of laborious " and useful Tables." This is the fair Side of it's Character. Let us now proceed to the Imperfections of this Bibliotheque.

(5) In July 1684. Art. 5. where he indirectly condemns those, who are contented to extract a Man's Qualities in fine Phrases, without taking notice of his Country, Family, and Employments; and where he says, That one cannot read the Lives of several Roman Emperors, without being disgusted, and without complaining of the Carelessness of the Historians, who mention neither the Place where they were born, nor their Family, nor their Age, nor by what means they raised themselves.

Mr Baillet says (7), that " as the most perfect Bo- " dies are not always free from Spots and Defects, " when their Beauty consists only in the Size and " Proportion of their Parts, it will be no surprize to " hear, that this fine Bibliotheque has met with it's " Censors as well as others; that some think they " discover in it something of that Affection for one's " own Society, which inclines a Man to represent the " Writers of it always to their Advantage; that they " add, that, in effect, there is nothing to be met " with in this huge Volume, but Elogies; and that, " among such a great Number of Authors and Books, " it does not appear that Alegambus and Sotuel ac- " knowledge one that is bad, except, perhaps, those, " who have been put into the Inquisition, or into the " Index; that others have observed, that there is " scarce one Writer in all this Bibliotheque, who is " not represented to us as a Saint. It is true, that " reasonable Persons ought to be satisfied with seeing " a solemn Protestation at the beginning, and end of " the Book, that he does not pretend to warrant what " is said of the Holiness and Virtues attributed to his " Brethren, no more than the other Encomiums, " which are bestowed upon them." It is more difficult, according to Mr Baillet (8), " to answer two " other Accusations; the first is, that Alegambus, be- " ing deceived by some false Memoirs, which ill af- " fected Persons sent him, calls Mr Marion, Mr Ser- " vin, and some other illustrious Magistrates, and good " Catholics, Heretics. The second is, that he was " so indiscreet as to reveal certain things, which it " was of the utmost Importance to the Society, to " keep private and suppress; as for Example, when " he affirms, that the Amphitheatre of Honour [*§], " written against the Royal Authority, by one Bu- " narscius, is the Work of a famous Jesuit, though " Father Coton had assured King Henry the Great " of the contrary; and that some other Books, writ- " ten against Episcopacy and Hierarchy in general, " and against the Clergy of France, and the Sorbonne " in particular, were composed by some Fathers of " the Society; though the chief among the Jesuits " of France, who governed the Houses of Paris, " having been called upon to answer this Charge, " had protested, even under their own Hands, that " the Jesuits were not the Authors of these Libels." Mr Baillet adds, that " Sotuel, was more discreet in " this Point than Alegambus; for in his Edition we " do not find the Writings of the false Smith, and " of the false Of-Jesu, which gave so much Offence; " nor the Books of Guimenius, of Vernant, and of " the Apologist for the Casuists; nay, he took care to " tell us beforehand, that his Silence, in relation to " these Books, ought to pass for a disowning, and a " private Condemnation, which the Society makes " of them. But it cannot be denied, on the other " side, that he has preserved Alegambus's Faults in " many other Places, and that his Edition is not so " exact and fine, as that of Alegambus." See the foregoing Remark. I shall take notice of a small Defect of this Bibliotheque, at the End of the Remark [C], of the Article ANNAT.

(6) Baillet, ubi supra, pag. 137.

(7) Id. ibid. pag. 15.

(8) Id. ibid. pag. 135.

[§*] [This Book is ascribed to the Jesuit Carolus Scrivonius, in the Catalogue of Ribadeneira; at Lyons, in 8vo. for Pillehotte; and, at Antwerp, ex officina Plantiniana, 1613, 8vo. REM. CRIT.]

[D] What pass'd in a Conversation of some learned Persons in the Year 1697.] Some Gentlemen, who came to Delft, with the Plenipotentiaries of France, being one Day in Company with some French Refugees, and some Persons of the Country, the Conversation, according to the Custom of Men of Letters, turned upon Books and learned Men. Most of them acknowledged the Decay of Learning; and they observed, more than once, with great Joy, that the Society of Jesuits scarce produces any learned Men at present. The Bellarmins, the Sirmonds, and the Petaviuses, add they, have left no Successors; their Places, and those of many other less famous Men, are still vacant. Mr * was almost the only Person, who did not approve of this Censure, and who desired the Company to consider, that those, who take Delight in such Discourses, are guilty of two Faults; for " in the first place, said he, they lightly touch upon " what concerns other Orders, and Communities, " but insist much on That of the Jesuits. This re- " spect of Persons is very unjust. Have the Uni- " versities of France any Professors of Physic, which " make so great a Noise as Fernel, and Sylvius? Or " any Professors of the Civil Law, who come near " Deneau, Duaren, Hotman, and Cujacius? Shew us, " if you can, a Casaubon, a Scaliger, or a Salmasius, " in the Protestant Party. Shew us a Grotius, an " Heinsius, or a Vossius, in Holland. Did not these " Men die without leaving any Successors? Have they " left Places, which are filled up? Let us confess " then, that the Decline, which you affect to appro- " priate to the Jesuits, is common to all the Parties " and Communities of Europe; it is a Defect of the " Times, and not of their Society. Do not imagine, " says he, (which was his second Reflexion) that I pre- " tend, that this part of the XVIIth Century, in " which we live, is inferior to the former Part, or " to the foregoing Age. I believe, on the contrary, " that, upon the whole, it ought to have the Pre- " ference, and that it is the Alteration of our Taste, " which is the only Reason of what you call the " Decay of Literature. The Study of Critical Learn- " ing is fallen; Men apply themselves to the reason-

Whether there are as learned Jesuits now, as formerly.

Digitized by Google

(9) See Remark [D] of the Art. de ACONITUS.

" ing Part (9); they improve their Minds much " more than their Memory; they are desirous to think " delicately, and to express themselves politely. This " Application does not indeed produce those great " Volumes, which impose on the Publick, and which " raise a Man to a great Reputation; but in truth it " strikes out more Light, and forms a Genius more " valuable than the great Learning of the Gram- " marians, and Philologers. The Jesuits have fol- " lowed this new Taste; and this is the Reason, why " their learned Men are not of the same Stamp with " those, who lived formerly. Have you observed, " as I have done, continued he, the considerable Num- " ber of illustrious Men, at present in their College " at Paris? Father Benier is so consummate in Lan- " guages, that all the Strangers of Europe and Asia " desire his Company, and converse with him, as if " he was their Countryman. Can a more extensive " share of Literature be seen, than That of Father " Hardouin? Is not Father Commire one of the best " Latin Poets at present in the World? Is there any " Writer, who exceeds Father Bouhours in the Pu- " rity of the French Language, and in the Beauty of " his Compositions, or Father Jouvency, in point of " Philology, or Father de la Beaune in a fine Latin " Style, by whose Care Father Sirmond's Works have " been lately published? Are there better Pens in France " than Father le Tellier, Father Daniel, Father Doucin, &c.? I name you some of them, but without " pretending to wrong many others, whom I do not " name." This was the Discourse of Mr *, if the Person, who informed me of this Conversation, related it faithfully. My Readers may judge of it as they think fit.

ALESIUS (ALEXANDER) a famous Divine of the Confession of Augsburg, and Author of several Books (a), was born at Edinburgh in Scotland, the Twenty third of April 1500. He made a wonderful Progress in School-Divinity; and entered early the Lists against Luther. It was at that time the Controversy in fashion, and the great Field of Battle, wherein young and old Authors endeavoured to give Proofs of their Merit. He had his Share, a little while after, in the Verbal Dispute, which Patrick Hamilton maintained against the Ecclesiastics [A], concerning certain new Opinions, which he had gained a Relish of at Marpurg. He endeavoured to bring him back to the Catholic Religion, but could not prevail upon him; and began himself to entertain Doubts concerning his own Religion, from this Gentleman's Discourse, but much more from the Constancy he shewed on the Wood-Pile, on which David Beton, Archbishop of St Andrews, caused him to be burnt. The Doubts of our Alesius would perhaps have been attended with no Consequence, if they had let him quietly enjoy the Canonship, which he possessed in the Metropolitan Church of St Andrews; but he was persecuted with so much Violence, that he was forced to retire into Germany [B], where at length all his Doubts vanished. At first indeed he wavered a little between the two Religions, as may be seen in his Answers to Cochleus: But at last he embraced Lutheranism, and persevered in it to his Death. It is true, that, between several Parties, which arose in that Sect, he sometimes inclined to the side of the less Orthodox. Thus, in 1560, he maintained the Doctrine of George Major concerning the Necessity of Good Works [C]. I forgot to observe, that the Alteration, which happened in England, with respect to Religion, after the Marriage of Henry VIII with Anne Bullen, occasioned Alesius to repair to London in 1535. He was greatly countenanced

(a) See Remark [C].

(1) Beza in Iconibus.

(2) Lewis Rabus, in the 4th Book of his History of Martyrs; Budæus in Εὐαγγελ. pag. 38. Hondorf Prompt. pag. 64. Justus de Academiis, p. 45. place it as Buchanan does. See Jacobi Thomasii Orat. de Alexandro Alesio, pag. 307.

(3) Buchan. Rerum Scoticarum, lib. 14.

(4) Exposit. in Psal. 37. fol. 164. See also his Answer to Cochleus, p. 9.

[A] He had his Share, a little while after, in the Verbal Dispute, which Patrick Hamilton maintained against the Ecclesiastics.] Beza has, in few Words, given us the Elogy of this Protestant Martyr, who was of a Family related to the Kings of Scotland. He places his Martyrdom in the Year 1530 (1). Buchanan places it in the Year 1528 (2), and says, the Earl of Arran's Brother was his Father, and the Duke of Albigni's Sister, was his Mother. He observes, that, a little after his Execution, the Death of a Dominican, who had been his Accuser, occasioned a great Consternation in the Minds of the People. This Dominican's Name was Alexander Campbell; he was a young Man of great Genius, and Learning: He had often discoursed with Hamilton, about the Interpretation of Scripture, and had confessed to him, that he acknowledged most of the Doctrines for true, which pass'd at that time for Paradoxes. Hamilton, remembring this Confession, treated him as a vile Wretch, when he found that he was his Accuser, and cited him before the Throne of God. These Words affected him in such a Manner, that he lost his Senses, and died mad some time after (3). Alesius relates many Particulars concerning the Execution of Patrick Hamilton (4), which Rabus inserted in his German History of Martyrs.

[B] He was persecuted with so much Violence, that he was forced to retire into Germany.] This Persecution was raised against him, for preaching warmly before a Provincial Synod, in 1529, against fornicating Priests. The Provost of St Andrews, whose lewd Intercourses were known to every body, apply'd the Sermon to himself, and fancied it was preach'd on purpose to turn the Eyes of the whole Congregation upon him. He resolved to be revenged the first Opportunity; and, as he was of a Temper a thousand times more fit for a Soldier than a Canon, he made choice only of violent means. Hearing that the whole Chapter was assembled to send Complaints against him to King James V, he came to the Assembly with an armed Retinue, and ordered Alesius to be seized; who exhorted him to moderate his Anger; nay, he drew a Sword upon him, in answer to his just Remonstrance. The poor Canon was so terrified, that he threw himself at the Provost's Feet, and humbly begged his Life of him. He came off with a kick on the Stomach, which made him fall into a Swoon: After which he was carried to Prison: All the rest of the Canons were likewise imprisoned; but the King, being informed of the Matter, ordered them to be set at Liberty. Alesius alone was not released; on the contrary, he was clapped into a dreadful Dungeon, where he remained One and twenty Days. His Liberty was of no long Continuance; he thought he ought to acquaint the Magistrates with the ill Treatment he had suffered: Whereupon the Provost, who had forbid him to acquaint them with it, caused him to be imprisoned again, and represented to the Archbishop, that he had published heretical Opinions in his Synodal Sermon, and that he deserved to be punished. He was so vexed at Alesius's being let out of Prison, while he was on a Journey, that he wanted by all means to send him thither again, without suffering him to finish a Mass, which he had began. But at last the Intreaties of the Canons softened him; he waited 'till the end of the Mass, to remand him back to Prison. Now, as they knew he would be confined again in the Dungeon the next Day, they advised the Prisoner to make his escape in the Night, and to leave Scotland. He followed this Advice, and went into Germany, in the Year 1532 (5).

(5) Jacobus Thomasius in Oratione de Joh. Alesio.

[C] He maintained the Doctrine of George Major, concerning the Necessity of good Works.] The Title of his Book is, De necessitate & merito bonorum operum disputatio proposita in celebri Academia Lipsica, ad xxix diem Novemb. 1560. This Dispute is the fifth inter Anti-Tapperianas; and thus we have an Anti to to add to Mr Baillet's Collection. Upon this Occasion, I shall set down the Titles of his principal Works. Commentarii in Evangelium Joannis, & in utramque Epistolam countenanced there by Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by Latimer, and by Thomas Cromwell, who was at time in great Credit with the King; and he taught publickly. The Fall of theſe Favourites obliged him to return into Germany, where the Elector of Brandenburgh made him Profeſſor of Divinity, at Francfort on the Oder, in the Year 1540. Aleſius had a Diſpute, there, two Years after, upon the Queſtion, Whether the Magiſtrate may and ought to puniſh Fornication [D]. He held the Affirmative, Epiſtolam ad Timotheum. Expoſitio in Pſalmos Davidis. De juſtificatione, contra Oſiandrum. De ſancta Trinitate, cum confutatione erroris Valentini Gentilis. Reſponſio ad 32 articulos Theologorum Lovanienſium, &c.

Digitized by Google

[D] He had a Diſpute —— upon the queſtion, whether the Magiſtrate may and ought to puniſh Fornication.] This Diſpute did not turn upon Adultery, but on ſimple Fornication: for though the Puniſhment of Adultery is as rare, as the Crime is frequent, yet it is accounted lawful among Chriſtian Doctors. So that Aleſius had only an Antagoniſt to oppoſe, who maintained againſt him, that the Magiſtrate neither can, nor ought, to puniſh Fornication. The final Deciſion of this Diſpute was put off; and it is very probable, that Aleſius, being angry at this Delay, would live no longer among People, who appeared ſuch Favourers of the Impunity of Fornication. " Cum A. 1542, " ſays Thomaſius (6), inter ipſum & alium quendam " exorta eſſet controverſia de quæſtione, poſſit ne ac " debeat Magiſtratus Politicus ſcortationem punire? " veramque ſententiam, hoc eſt affirmantem, ac Phi- " lippi quoque Melanchthonis calculo approbatam *, " defendente Aleſio, nihilominùs hujus diſputationis " deciſio jubcretur differri: offenſus, ut apparet, hâc " bonæ cauſæ procaſtinatione Aleſius, non expectato " Principis adventu, diſceſſit †." Such an indignation did not ill become a Profeſſor of Divinity, who had ſeen the riſe of the Reformation, and who would naturally wiſh that he might not live to ſee Morality return to it's former Relaxation. Nothing could reflect greater Honour upon the Proteſtant Religion, than the Severity of it's Maxims, in relation to Chaſtity; for the Obſervation of theſe Maxims is the moſt difficult Victory we can obtain over Nature, and that which beſt ſhews our Dependance upon God, by the reciprocal Ties of his Protection and Love. It was, therefore, matter of great Scandal, that, in the Year 1542, a Proteſtant Divine, who maintained, that Magiſtrates may, and ought to, puniſh Fornication, ſhould meet with Oppoſition, and, in ſome meaſure, ſink under it. At preſent, as we are accuſtomed to a Toleration of this Crime, ſcarce any one is offended at it. A very honeſt Man aſſured me, lately, that the Magiſtrates of Strasburg have ſuch an Indulgence for a Girl, who ſuffers herſelf to be got with Child, that, provided ſhe pays the Fine, at which this kind of Fault is taxed, they reſtore her to her former Character, and inflict Penalties on thoſe, who dare, in the leaſt, to reproach her for the future. This is, doubtleſs, a more ſingular Privilege, than that of reſtoring, by Patent, ſuch Families as have derogated from their Nobility; and if I may be allowed to laugh upon ſo ſerious an Occaſion, I would ſay, that the Magiſtrates of Strasburg ought to have ſtipulated the Preſervation of this Privilege, when they capitulated with France, and when, after the Peace of Ryſwick, they demanded a Renewal of their Capitulation (7). I am aware, that they do not pretend, by this Prerogative, to overthrow the Truth of that ancient and undeniable Axiom.

(6) Thomaſ. ubi ſupra, pag. 318.

* In Epiſtola Reſponſoria ad Academiam Francofordianam; ſee Part. 1. Conſil. Theol. Phil. Melanchton. pag. 523.

† See Phil. Melancht Epiſt. ad Camer. pag. 413, 414.

(7) See the Mercure Hiſtorique of June, 1698.

---- Nulla reparabilis arte
Læſa Pudicitia eſt, deperit illa ſemel.

No Art can Modeſty, when loſt, reſtore,
Once forfeited, 'tis ne'er recover'd more.

They do not pretend, phyſically ſpeaking, to reſtore a loſt Maiden-head; this would be to oppoſe the true Senſe of the Axiom: but, morally ſpeaking, they pretend to reſtore it; ſince they patronize the Reputation of a lewd Girl, and ſecure her from Reproach; inſomuch that ſhe may carry her Head as lofty as an honeſt Woman. Nay, 'tis ſaid, that the Efficacy of their Sentence is ſuch, that Women, who have had Children, and who, by paying their Fine, have renewed their Reputation, meet with Husbands as eaſily, and almoſt as advantageouſly, as if they had not committed the Fault. But I would rather aſcribe this to the weakneſs of the Men, who marry them, than to their Perſuaſion of the Efficacy of the Sentence (8). However, we may apply to thoſe, who ſuppoſe that the Payment of a Fine makes amends for Crimes of this Nature, what was ſaid to thoſe, who fancied that a little fair Water could waſh away the Stain of Murder.

Ah! nimium faciles, qui triſtia crimina cædis
Fluminea tolli poſſe putatis aqua (9).

Fools! on external Sprinklings Streſs to lay,
And think that they can waſh the Stains of Guilt away.

The ſame honeſt Man aſſured me, that what he knew for certain of the Cuſtoms of Strasburg; he had been informed was practiſed in ſome other Parts of Germany. Such Laws would have made the Divine, whoſe Article I am writing, very angry; for this is ſo far from puniſhing Fornication, that it is in ſome degree to reward it, ſince the Advantage of appearing every where without fear of Reproach, is a Benefit, which greatly exceeds the Damage ſuſtained by the Payment of the Fine, which ſometimes is not one half of the Money, which is got by Proſtitution.

I have heard ſome very judicious Perſons ſay, that the Practice of a great many Countries is rather a Reward, than a Puniſhment, of Fornication. This Practice requires, that whoever owns himſelf to be the Father of a Baſtard, ſhall be condemned to keep it, and to give the Mother a Sum of Money. An Order for the Maintenance of the Child cannot paſs for a Puniſhment; ſince the Law of Nature plainly lays this Obligation on every Man. Nothing therefore but the Money, which is paid to the Girl, can be called a Puniſhment; but, beſides that it is a very light Puniſhment to the Father, it is, properly ſpeaking, a Reward to the Mother. " Now it is very " ſtrange, ſay theſe Gentlemen, that Chriſtian Tri- " bunals ſhould decree Rewards to Women for lo- " ſing their Honour, and ſcandalizing the Public." Some one replied, that the Loſs they ſuffered, and which rendered it more difficult for them to get a Husband, required ſome Amends, as an Act of Juſtice. " No, anſwered they, it is not an Act of " Juſtice, but meer Favour and Grace: Juſtice does " not require, that thoſe who ſuffer by a voluntary " Tranſgreſſion of the Laws of God, and of Human " Honour, ſhould be indemnified. And, if the So- " vereign will beſtow Favours, he ought to make " choice of more worthy Objects. Would a Man " be obliged to reward a Girl, who, in committing " a Robbery for his Sake, or through his Inſtiga- " tion, ſhould loſe an Arm or a Leg? The Judge " would be ſo far from decreeing her any Repara- " tion for the Loſs ſhe ſuſtained, that he would con- " demn her to a corporal Puniſhment. The ſame " would happen in all puniſhable Caſes, wherein " ſhe ſhould loſe a Limb, in executing her Lover's " Counſels. Fornication alone is excepted out of this " Rule: Let us call it then the common Offence, and " the privileged Caſe, Words ſeparately appropria- " ted to other things (10), and about which a Book " was publiſhed at Paris, in the Year 1611 (11)." Upon this ſome one alledged, that the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam, being tired with the Complaints of ſo many Servant Maids, who accuſed their young Maſters of having got them with Child, had made a Law, that, for the future, theſe ſort of Creatures ſhould be paid but twenty five Florins; for which they ſhould be obliged to keep the Child; that they thought by this means to lay a reſtraint upon Lewdneſs: for they were ſenſible that the Profit, which accrued to theſe Girls from their ill Conduct, induced them either to make Advances, or to yield to the firſt Sollicitation; and that, in a Word, their Lewdneſs ought to be deprived of all Hopes of Gain, and not encouraged by the Expectation of what the

(8) I have been aſſured, that they themſelves make a jeſt of it, and ſay, that this kind of Injury carries nothing off the Premiſes; imitating thoſe, who rally themſelves firſt to weaken the Raillery of others. See the beginning of the Remark [B] of the Article AGESILAUS II.

(9) Ovidius Faſtor. lib. 2. ver. 45.

(10) They call a common Offence the Crimes of an Eccleſiaſtic, which are judged by the Tribunals of the Church; and a privileged Caſe the Crimes of an Eccleſiaſtic, which come under Cognizance of Secular Judges.

(11) Written by Benigne Milletot, Counſellor in the Parliament of Dijon.

Digitized by Google

tive, with Melanchon. I cannot tell, whether he took it ill, that the Decision of this Dispute was delay'd; and whether this Discontent was the occasion of his leaving Francfort with so much Precipitation; but it is certain, that the Court of Brandenburgh conplained of him, and that they wrote to the University of Wittemburgh to have him punished. The Affection he had for Melanchon made People believe, that he was retired to Wittemburgh [E]; but he chose rather to go to Leipsic, where he refused, in 1543, a Professorship in the University, which Albert, Duke of Prussia, designed to erect at Koningsberg, and which was erected there the following Year. It is not certain, whether he had a Professorship in the University of Leipsic at that time; or whether they only gave him Hopes of the Divinity-Chair, which he afterwards enjoy'd till his Death, which happened on the seventeenth of March 1565 [F]. He was miraculously preserved from Death in his Youth [G]. The Esteem and Authority he possessed appear from the great Number of Conferences, at which he assisted [H]. He married an English Woman, by whom he had two Daughters, and a Son.

Courts should think proper to adjudge them. To this it was answered, that it is not certain, that such Laws have been made at Amsterdam, tho' the Fame of them was spread over other Towns of that Country. Whether it be true or false, it is very certain, that this proves, that People are not ignorant, that the common Conduct of the Courts of Judicature is too favourable to Fornication, and that it encourages young Women to Debauchery, rather than lays a Restraint upon their Modesty. And this is plain from hence, that Sovereigns, in punishing Transgressors of the Decalogue, are not directed by the Sinfulness of the Action, but by the temporal Prejudice, which the State receives from it. Hence it is that they punish Robbers and Murderers; but, because Fornication seems more useful than prejudicial to the temporal Good of the State, they connive at it, and behave in such a manner, as to make People think, that they are not displeased with having their Towns peopled per fas & nefas. If they laid the Law of God to Heart in this Point, they would increase the Fear of Infamy, instead of removing it; they would impose large Fines, to be paid, not to the Girls, who transgress, but to Hospitals; they would brand with Disgrace both the Tempter, and her, who could not resist the Temptation; and, because Infamy is not sufficient among Persons of mean Birth to stop a certain Coquetry, which animates the Tempter, which prevents him, and assures him of Victory with the utmost ease, they would inflict a more sensible Punishment, for which they could not fail of finding the proper Methods.

(12) I write this in 1698.

Ecclesiastical Discipline is very near fallen into the same Relaxation. It is but few Years (12) since a young Gentleman's Tutor made his Addresses, in a Town of ----- to a young Coquet; and soon obtained what he desired of her. As soon as her Relations perceived that she was with Child, they endeavoured to marry her to our Spark. He refused it; for, besides that the easiness of his Conquest was no great Inducement to him to think of marrying her, he did not believe himself to be the only Person, who had a Finger in the Pye, or that the Child was more his own Manufacture than another's. The only Method of obliging him to take her to Wife, was to threaten him, that, if he did not marry her, he should lose the Benefice he had in England. He married her, and thereby preserved his Benefice. Such was the Reward of Coquetry; a Coquetry, which had been carried to the most scandalous Excess. What would the ancient Fathers say, if they were to return into the World? they might well cry out, casting their Eyes on the Face of the Church, O donus antiqua, quam dispari dominaris domino! It is the Fate of all Religions, as well as all Politic Bodies, to be the worse for Age. Men, indeed, are more corrupt in their Youth, than in an advanced Age. But it is quite otherwise with Republics. There is nothing like new Laws (13). Laws are like Bread and Eggs, pan d' un di, ovo d' un' hora. —— Bread for a Day, an Egg for an Hour. The flourishing State of a Code, (I mean the Practice and Observation of the Laws) is That of Infancy. See the Complaint of a Poet, who had described some Abuses of Augustus's Age. It resembles that of Jesus Christ, from the beginning it was not so (14).

(13) See the beginning of the Remark [M] of the Article NESTORIUS.

(14) Matth. xix. 8.

(15) Horat. Od. 15. lib. 2.

----- Non ita Romuli
Præscriptum, & intonsi Catonis
Auspiciis, veterumque norma (15).

Not so, at first, great Romulus prescribed;
Severe the Laws, when Cato was our Guide.
With better Principles our Fathers liv'd,
And juster Maxims were, of old, receiv'd.

In this respect, Sects and Communities, &c. resemble MAN, who is innocent only in the Cradle, and a Year or two after. Let us observe, that there are some Protestant Countries (16), where they still use some Severity against Fornication, both with respect to Women and Men. But I am sure that our Alexander Alesius would require something farther still. What would he say of other Countries?

(16) Geneva, and more still in the Canton of Bern.

I must farther observe, that the Courts, which adjudge a Pecuniary Profit to loose Women, or which condemn them to marry those, who debauched them, do it to avoid many Inconveniencies: but they increase thereby the Disorders of Impurity; for every Sentence they pronounce of this kind is a real Advantage to one naughty Woman, and a Motive of Hope to twenty more. Every Girl, who gets a Husband this way, is an Encouragement to others to attempt the same Methods. This abuse has been perceived in France: The new Laws are not so favourable there, as the old ones were, to those Ladies, who make too great an Advantage of the Privileges of Marriage. It is a Sacrament, which has a retroactive Virtue, and which, like that of Penance, is a Plank after Shipwreck. It makes one enter again into the Port of Honour; it repairs old Breaches; it legitimates Children unlawfully begotten (17); To say nothing of the thick Veil, with which it covers new Breaches, current Faults, and daily Offences.

(17) See Remark [A] of the Article ARIOSTA.

[E] The Affection, which he had for Melancthon, made People believe he was retired to Wittemburgh.] Melancthon, in his Two hundred and ninetieth Letter, expresses some uncertainty, whether Alesius did not doubt of his Friendship. In his Two hundred eighty eighth Letter, he declares, that he observed in him certain Whims and Starts of Temper, παροξύνσεις καὶ παροξυσμοὺς ὀργῆς.

[F] His Death happened on the seventeenth of March 1565.] The Calendar of Peter Eberus notes, that Alesius died on the eighteenth of March, 1565, being Seventy five Years of Age: the first Fault is very small, since it is but of one Day; but the second is of ten Years, and therefore more considerable. Alesius himself wrote, in the Register of the University of Leipsic, that he was born in the Year 1500. Bucholcerus (18), and Reusnerus (19), give him as long a Life as Paul Eberus. This whole Remark is taken out of Thomasius. Bucholcerus might have been reprimanded for another thing, viz. for saying that Alesius lived and taught in Germany, after his coming to Wittemburgh; that is to say, after the Year 1533.

(18) Chronol. p. 613.

(19) Isagog. Hist. p. 635.

[G] He was miraculously preserved from Death in his Youth.] He says, in one of his Books (20), that he often recollects (but that the Thought chills his very Blood), that as he was tumbling towards a Precipice, on the Top of a very high Mountain, he felt himself transported to another Place, without knowing how, or by whom; which he attributes to the Faith of his Relations, and not to the small Papers, which he carried about him, containing some Verses of St John's Gospel, according to the Custom of Children in those Times.

(20) Epistola dedicatoria Commentar. in Joannem. See likewise Præfat. in alteram ad Timotheum, apud Jacobum Thomasium, in Orat. de Alesio, pag. 395.

[H] The great Number of Conferences, at which he assisted.] In the Year 1555, when those of Nuremberg desired Melancthon to come and compose the

Dissentions

Digitized by Google

a Son. He had but one Daughter living, when he died. I have extracted this from a Speech of James Thomasius, Professor at Leipsic, in the Year 1683, in 8*vo*. His whole Account is accompanied with Citations. I did not think my self obliged to copy them: They, who would apply to the Originals, will easily meet with the Speech, which points them out.

Dissentions, which the Disciples of Andrew Osiander caused in their City (21), he brought Alesius along with him, who performed his Part very well in the Disputes they engaged in (22). Melancthon knew him to be very capable of this; he had had him for his Assistant in 1554, in the Conference of Naumburg, which was held to appease the Theological Troubles of Prussia. Camerarius praises Alesius very much on this Account. "Alexander Alesius, patria Scotus, "valde carus Philippo Melancthoni, rei Theologicæ "intelligentissimus, & artifex excellens congruentium "disputationum, & vir dignitate atque doctrina ex-"quisita præstans (23). —— Alexander Alesius, a "Scotch Man, greatly in Favour with Philip Melan-cthon, thoroughly versed in Divinity, who had an excel- "lent Talent at Disputation, and famous for his extra- "ordinary Merit and Learning." He had observed in another Place, that Granvelle, who presided in the Conference of Worms, in the Name of Charles V, in 1541, would not let Alesius speak, whom the Elector of Brandenburg had sent thither. "Qui qui-"dem & paratus erat & cupidus conflictus, sed huic "obstitit jussum præsidis, qui & Alesium ad pugnam "instructum sciret, & talem administrationem rei vi-"ciosam esse animadverteret. —— Who was both "ready and eager to engage; but was prevented by "Order of the President, who knew that Alesius was "come prepared for the Combat, and observed, that "such a Management of the Affair would be wrong."

(21) Camerar. in vita Melancthonis. Thomasius ubi supra pag. 321.

(22) Beza in Iconibus.

(23) Camerarius, ubi supra, ibid.

ALEXANDER AB ALEXANDRO [A], a Neapolitan Civilian of great Learning, flourished about the end of the XVth Century, and beginning of the XVIth [B]. He applied himself to the Profession of the Law with ardor, first at Naples, and afterwards at Rome (a); but he spent all the Time he could steal from the Fatigues of Pleading, in the Study of polite Literature, and at last entirely quitted the Bar, to lead a more calm and agreeable Life with the Muses. The Reason he alledges for abandoning the Profession of an Advocate [C], was the Ignorance or Corruption of those who administered Justice; which inclined him rather to live a retired Life, than to take much Pains in studying the Civil Law, since his Labours would avail nothing against the Rashness of a corrupt Judge (b). He had seen many Examples of this Disorder at Rome, which he mentioned to Raphael Volaterranus, who asked him the Reason of his Retreat. It is somewhat strange, that, among so many Men of Learning, who were his Cotemporaries, or who wrote Elogies of the learned Men of those

(a) Alexander ab Alex. Genial. dier. lib. 2. cap. 1.

(b) Ibid. lib. 6. cap. 7.

[A] Alexander ab Alexandro.] I give him his Latin Name according to the Grammarians. They who translate it Alexander of Alexandria are mistaken (1). Our Author was of a Neapolitan Family of the Name of Alexander. It is pretended, that it had before produced some Illustrious Persons, as Moreri relates after Lorenzo Crasso. Every one knows Balzac's pleasant Reflexion. "Was there not, says he (2), "a Grammatico-Civilian in the Kingdom of Naples, "who assumed the Name of ALEXANDER AB "ALEXANDRO? Can any thing be more mag-"nificent and more glorious than to be twice an "Alexander, an Alexander by one's Name, and an "Alexander by one's Lordship (3)?"

[B] Flourished about the End of the XV*th Century and beginning of the* XVI*th.*] My reason for saying this, is, that our Author, speaking of the Calamities of the Kingdom of Naples, carries them down to the Death of Frederic, the Son of Ferdinand I (4), that is, to the Year 1504. besides, he speaks of Jovianus Pontanus, as of a Person no longer in being (5). Now Jovianus Pontanus did not die before the Year 1505. This is what escaped those, who placed the Death of our Alexander in the Year 1494, in which Moreri gives them a much stronger Proof of his Approbation than of his Uncertainty.

[C] The Reason he alledges for abandoning the Profession of an Advocate.] To give the Author's Reason it's full Force, I must set it down in his own Words. "Quæ cum viderem, says he (6), patro-"nisque contra vim potentiorum aut gratiam nihil "præsidii esse, nihil opis, frustra nos in legum con-"troversiis & ediscendis tot casuum varietatibus tam "pensiculate editis tantum laboris & vigiliarum sus-"cipere, tantoque nos studio fatigari dicebam, cum "ad ignavissimi impurissimique cujusque temeritatem, "qui juri dicendo præsideret, quem leges virum bo-"num esse volunt, non æquo jure sed ad gratiam "& libidinem judicia ferri, decretaque legum tanto "consilio edita convelli & labefactari viderem. —— "When I saw these things, and that it was impos- "sible for the Advocates to support their Clients a- "gainst the Power and Favour of the Great, I said, "it was to no Purpose to take so much Pains, and "undergo so great a Fatigue, in studying the Law, "and thoroughly considering all it's Variety of Cases; "since I could not but observe, that the Issue of Suits "depended not on the Justice of the Cause, but on "the Favour and Affection of a lazy and corrupt "Judge, whom the Laws suppose to be a good and "upright Man; and that the judicial Decrees, so "equitably contrived, were every Day broke in upon, "and weakened." It was much better to quit the Bar, than to imitate the Practice of some Advocates, who, having lost many good Cases, undertake to defend the worst. I have read not long ago, "That "one of the most famous Advocates of this Age, "whom his Brethren asked, why he took upon him "to plead bad Causes, answer'd them smiling, that "He did it, because he had lost a great many good "ones. This is a bad excuse, continues the Author; "an Advocate, who, having examined a Cause, "finds it unjustifiable, ought to leave it (7). I have met with another Passage in the Book of Alexander ab Alexandro, which shews the Integrity of his Heart (8). One of his Friends, seeing, that he did not push his Fortune, advised him to make use of the Expedients, which had succeeded so well with such and such Persons, whom he named to him; who had been raised by Favour to Honours and Mitres, in spite of the Merit of their Competitors, and who had attained to Favour by unlawful Methods. Our Author was not ignorant of these Examples, and knew some that were worse; he had seen in his Youth a very honest Man, well versed in Latin and Greek, who, having struggled with an extream Poverty, while he relied only on his Virtue and Learning, resolved to try another way: He engaged in such villanous Arts, as are improper to be mentioned, and in a little while he became Rich and Powerful, and was possessed of good Preferments. "Eo vesaniæ processit, ut, coactus "inopia, obscœnis & libero homine indignis artibus "vacaret (quibus vero artibus non libet dicere, ita "fœdæ & pudendæ sunt) confectaque fuit sibi res "ex sententia; namque haud multo post & sacerdotio "& opibus auctus, affluens & beatus, tranquillissime "vitam egit (9)." But these Examples did not stagger our Advocate; he chose rather to be contented with a mean Fortune, than to hazard his Conscience. "Longe igitur multumque præstat, satiusque fuit "uti ingenio meo, vacuumque his molestiis modico "civilique cultu contentum esse, neque in ambitio-"nem non necessariam incurrere, quam bona animi, si "qua sibi homo studio & labore paravit, ea turpi quæstu "pessimo

(1) Simon Goulart did so in his Translation of Philip de Comines.

(2) Balzac's Preface to his Socrate Chrestien.

(3) To speak accurately he should have said, that Alexander was both his Christian Name, and the Name of his Family. We meet with the same in other Persons: See Mollerus, in his Treatise De Scriptoribus Homonymis.

(4) Alexander. ab Alex. Genial. dier. lib. 3. c. 12. sub fin. pag. 736.

(5) Id. lib. 1. cap. 1.

(6) Id. lib. 6. cap. 7.

(7) Journal des Sçavans, 1690. pag. 301. Dutch Edit.

(8) Alex. ab Alex. lib. 6. cap. 16.

(9) Id. ibid.

Digitized by Google

thoſe times, ſcarce any one mentions him [D]. We ſhould know but few Particulars of his Life, if he himſelf had not touched upon ſome of them in his Work (c). We find there, that he lodged in a Houſe, at Rome, which was haunted with Spirits (d); ſo that here is an Evidence to be produced againſt the Incredulous; an Evidence, I ſay, who pretends to have ſeen, and who relates the ſurprizing Pranks of the Apparition, which diſturbed the Houſe. He tells us farther, that, when he was very young, he went to Philelphus's Lectures, who explained Cicero's Tuſculan Queſtions at Rome (e). We may gather from the Twenty firſt Chapter of the fourth Book, that he was at Rome, when Nicolas Perottus, and Domitius Calderinus, read public Lectures there on Martial [E]. I do not find, that he ſpeaks of the Office of Prothonotary of the Kingdom of Naples, which it is ſaid he exerciſed with great Reputation (f). I cannot tell when he died, but I know that he was buried in the Monaſtery of the Olivetans (g). Every one blamed him for the Affectation he ſhewed, in not quoting the Authors, who furniſhed him with his Materials (h). Tiraquellus remedied this Omiſſion by a learned Commentary, which was printed at Lyons in 1587 (i). It was reprinted at Leyden in two Volumes in 8*vo*, in the Year 1673, with the Notes of Dionyſius Gothofredus, Chriſtopher Colerus, and Nicolas Mercerus, on the ſame Text. I find by Geſner's Bibliotheque, that the Edition, publiſhed at Paris, of this Work of Alexander ab Alexandro, in the Year 1532, was more exact than the reſt, and that Gerard Morrhius, who corrected it, had collated with the Originals the Paſſages, which the Author had taken from others. He muſt, then, have collated a great many; for the ſix Books of the Dies Geniales are ſcarce any thing but a large Collection, relating to the Hiſtory and Cuſtoms of the ancient Greeks and Romans; beſides ſeveral Grammatical Queſtions. Exactneſs is not in it's Perfection in this Work [F]. I do not believe, that the French Tranſlation of this Work, by Bernard de la Roche (k), was ever printed. The Author of the Neapolitan Bibliotheque had no Succeſs in the Article of our Alexander [G]; but the Additions of Leonardo Nicodemo are very curious on this Subject [H].

(c) Entitled, Genialium dierum libri VI.

(d) Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 23.

(e) Eum ego adoleſcentulus ſenem inter cæteros cœvos meos colui & obſervavi. Ibid. lib. 1. cap. 23.

(f) Panzirol. de clar. leg. Interpret. lib. 2. cap. 122.

(g) Leand. Albert. Deſcript. Ital. pag. 277.

(h) Barclaius, de regno, lib. 6. cap. 6. Cypræus de Sponſal. cap. 13. n. 61. Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 609. Meibonius de Vita Mæcenatis, pag. 138.

(i) Entitled, Semeſtria in Genialium dierum Alexandri ab Alexandro, lib. 6. in fol. It was reprinted at Francfort, in fol. in 1594.

(k) La Croix du Maine, pag. 476.

Alciatus

(10) Id. ib. "peſſimo Exemplo fœdare (10)." The Advice, which was given him, is much like this.

(11) Juven. Sat. 1. ver. 73.

Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris & carcere dignum,
Si vis eſſe aliquis. Probitas laudatur & alget (11).

Would'ſt thou to Honours and Preferments clime?
Be bold in Miſchief, dare ſome mighty Crime;
Which Dungeons, Death, or Baniſhment deſerves,
For Virtue is but dryly prais'd, and ſtarves.

DRYDEN.

He dedicated his Book to the Duke of Atri. This Duke was very learned, as we ſhall obſerve under AQUAVIVA.

[D] Scarce any one mentions him.] Yet, if we may believe Moreri, all the great Men of That Age, as Georgius Trapezuntius, Theodorus Gaza, Domitius Calderinus, Pontanus, &c. were his Friends and his Admirers. All that can be gathered from the Book itſelf of Alexander ab Alexandro, is, that, in his Youth, he heard the Lectures, which Philelphus read at Rome, who was then very old (12), and that he was entertained ſometimes, together with ſome very learned Men, at the Houſes of Jovian Pontanus (13), Hermolaus Barbarus (14), Sannazarius (15), Gabriel Altilius (16), &c. This is not a ſufficient Warrant to affirm, that certain Perſons admire certain Perſons. See the following Remark.

(12) Alex. ab Alex. lib. 1. cap. 23.

(13) Id. ib. lib. 1. cap. 1. See alſo lib. 3. cap. 8.

(14) Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 1.

(15) Ibid. lib. 2. cap. 1.

(16) Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 1.

[E] Was at Rome, when Nicolas Perottus, and Domitius Calderinus, read public Lectures there on Martial.] This is all that can be gathered from what he relates concerning Nicolas Perottus, and Domitius Calderinus: As for that great Intimacy, which Panzirolus pretends there was between them (17), it muſt be looked for elſewhere, and I cannot tell whether it be poſſible to find any Proofs of it. I queſtion not, but Panzirolus truſted to his Memory for this Particular, without conſidering, that the Memory is a Mould, in which Objects change their Form very eaſily.

(17) Adnotandum familiaris fuit: Panzirol. de claris legum Interpret. lib. 2. cap. 122.

[F] Exactneſs is not in it's Perfection in this Work.] I chuſe rather to alledge the Teſtimony of one of the Commentators, than to paſs this Cenſure on my own Authority. Let us hear then what Nicolas Mercerus ſays. "Eſt profecto, mi Linoceri (18), verum quod aiunt. "Fuit Alexander vir eruditus & multæ lectionis: multa ad utilitatem publicam ſcripſit eleganter, multa tamen, ut hominum eſt infirmitas, minus accuratè, vel memoriæ vitio, vel imprudentia lapſus. "Quæ lectoribus indicari magni interfuit. —— The "common Opinion, Friend Linocerius, is very true. "Alexander was a Man of Learning and great read-"ing. He wrote many Things for public Uſe with "Elegance; but in many things, ſuch is human In-"firmity, he was deficient, for want either of Memory "or Skill. It was highly proper to inform the Reader "of this." I am not the only Perſon, who complains, that Editors of Books, cum notis Variorum, leave out the Epiſtles Dedicatory, and the Prefaces (19). They ſhould do, as was done in the laſt Edition of Diogenes Laertius (20). If the ſame had been practiſed in that of Alexander ab Alexandro, I might have given a better account of this Author and his Book.

(18) He, to whom he dedicates his Notes.

(19) See Crenius, Chap. 1, of the firſt part of the Animadverſiones Philologicæ & Hiſtoricæ, and the Remark [R], of the Article MAROT.

(20) That of Amſterdam, 1692, which contains moſt of the Prefaces, &c. of the foregoing Editions.

[G] The Author of the Neapolitan Bibliotheque had no Succeſs in the Article of our Alexander.] He only refers his Readers to three or four other Books (21), and was ignorant, that Alexander Juriſconſultus Neapolitanus, Author of the four Diſſertations, of which he gives the Title (22), is the ſame with Alexander ab Alexandro; inſomuch that he ſpeaks twice of the ſame Man, without knowing that they are different Authors. The Title of the four Diſſertations is as follows. "Alexandri Juriſconſulti Neapolitani Diſ-"ſertationes quatuor de rebus admirandis, quæ in "Italia nuper contigere, id eſt, de ſomniis quæ à vi-"ris ſpectatæ fidei prodita ſunt, inibique de laudibus "Juniani Maii ſomniorum conjectoris: de umbrarum "figuris & falſis imaginibus: de illuſionibus malorum "dæmonum, qui diverſis imaginibus homines delu-"ſere: de quibuſdam ædibus, quæ Romæ infames "ſunt ob frequentiſſimos lemures, & terrificas ima-"gines, quas author ipſe ſingulis fere noctibus in "Urbe expertus eſt: Romæ, in 4to. Abſque anno "nec apud quem. —— Alexander, the Neapolitan "Civilian, his four Diſſertations concerning the won-"derful Things, which have lately happened in Italy, "viz. of Dreams, related by Men of unqueſtionable "Veracity, herein this of the Praiſes of Junianus "Maius, Interpreter of Dreams; of the Shapes and "deceitful Appearances of Spectres; of the Illuſions "of Evil Spirits, who deceive Men by various Ap-"pearances; of certain Houſes at Rome, which are "infamous on account of frequent Apparitions, and "frightful Sights, which the Author himſelf was every "Night a Witneſs of at Rome, in 4to." They have neither ſet down the Printer's Name, nor the Year of the Impreſſion. We ſhall ſee, in the following Remark, that theſe Pieces have been incorporated with the Dies Genialis.

(21) Nicolo Teppi Biblioth. Napolet. pag. 6.

(22) Id. ib. pag. 7.

[H] The Additions of Leonardo Nicodemo are very curious on this Subject.] He proves, that Alexander

Digitized by Google

Alciatus believed, that ALEXANDER ab Alexandro was yet living, in the Year 1521. I ſhall give his own Words, becauſe they contain his Opinion of this Writer [I].

ab Alexandro is the Author of the four Diſſertations, becauſe moſt of the Particulars they contain are to be met with in the Dies Geniales: For Example, that which relates to the Praiſes of Junianus Maius, and the Interpretation of Dreams (23), is to be found in the eleventh Chapter of the firſt Book, where this Junianus is repreſented as one, who had daily a crowd of Dreamers attending him, whoſe Dreams he interpreted in a very intelligible manner, whereby many Perſons avoided Death, or great Troubles. Read the Twenty third Chapter of the fifth Book (24), where you will find what concerns the Apparitions and Hobgobblings, which haunted the Author's own Houſe. We find the Title of an Edition in Folio, of the Dies Geniales in Nicodemo's Additions: I ſhould take it for the firſt, if a Paſſage of Alciatus did not hinder me (25). The Title is this. "Alexandri de Alexandro "Dies Geniales. Ne quis opus excudat denuo infra "ſeptennium, ſub diris imprecationibus Apoſtolica "autoritate interdictum eſt. —— Alexander ab Alex-"andro, his Dies Geniales. It is ordered by Apoſto-"lical Authority, and upon pain of dreadful Anathemas, "that no one reprint this Work, 'till ſeven Years are "expired." There is at the end, "Romæ, in ædi-"bus Jacobi Mazochii, Rom. Academiæ Bibliopolæ. "Anno Virginei partus 1522, Kalend. April. Pontif. "S. D. N. de cujus nomine pontificali adhuc non "conſtat, anno primo. —— At Rome, for James Ma-"zochius, Bookſeller to the Academy of Rome, in "the Year of Chriſt 1522, the Kalends of April, in "the firſt Year of the Pontificate of S. D. N. whoſe "pontifical Name is not yet known." Nicodemo mentions a Fragment of a Letter of Jerome Niger (26), which is not very complaiſant to the Neapolitans in general, or our Alexander in particular. "Quel libro "d' Aleſſandro de gli Aleſſandri è intitolato Dies Ge-"niales, à ſimilitudine delle notti Attiche d' Aulo Gel-"lio, è de' Saturnali di Macrobio, coſe cavate di quà "è di là. Ed in vero ha molto del Napoletano, con "ſopportazion del Sannazaro parlando. Vendeſi ſei "carlini, al parer mio troppo caro. —— This Book "of Alexander ab Alexandro is entituled, Dies Ge-"niales, in imitation of the Noctes Atticæ of Aulus "Gellius, and the Saturnalia of Macrobius, which "are Collections from different Authors. In truth it "favours much of the Neapolitan, in ſpeaking of San-"nazarius with Patience. It is ſold for ſix Carlins, "a Price, in my Opinion, much too great." I ſhall give an Article concerning Junianus Maius, the Artemidorus of his Age.

(23) Entituled, Miracula de ſomniis apud nonnullos cognita & comperta, & quæ ipſe expertus fui.

(24) Leonardo Nicodemo, ſays the ninth Book, thro' miſtake.

(25) I quote it in the Remark [I].

(26) This Letter is dated from Rome, the 21*th of* June, 1522.

[I] I ſhall give his own Words, becauſe they contain his Opinion of this Writer.] I take them out of a Letter, which he wrote from Milan, the ſixth of May, 1521, and which was printed in the Year 1697 (27). "Alexandri Juriſconſulti Neapolitani librum, "quem ad nos miſiſti, diligenter legi. Vir eſt do-"ctus & diligens, & non parum ſtudioſos adjuvabit: "ſuſpicor tamen eum quandoque falli. —— Si is "aliqua tecum familiaritate junctus eſt, velim ab eo "exquiras, ut Alpheni Juriſconſulti vetuſtiſſima ſcrip-"ta, commentarioſque Senatus conſultorum, quæ vi-"diſſe ſe, emiſſeque Romæ, ait, commodato det. "Eorum autem mentionem facit capite quarto & ſep-"timo primi libri: ſuſpicor enim neſcio quid Parrha-"ſianum, quem ſcis eos authores plerumque adducere "ſolitum, quos nunquam viderat. —— I have care-"fully peruſed the Book of Alexander the Neapolitan "Civilian, which you ſent me. He is a learned and "induſtrious Writer, and not a little uſeful to the Stu-"dious; but I ſuſpect he is ſometimes miſtaken. —— "If you have any acquaintance with him, pray beg the "favour of him to lend you the ancient Works of Alphenus the Civilian, and the Commentaries on "the Senatus Conſulta, which he ſays he ſaw, and "purchaſed, at Rome; he mentions them in the fourth "and ſeventh Chapters of his firſt Book: For I ſuſpect "him of imitating Parrhaſius, who, you know, was "wont to alledge Authors, whom he never ſaw."

(27) Epiſt. Gudii, &c. pag. 91.

ALEXANDER THE GREAT, King of Macedonia. Look for MACEDONIA.

ALEXANDER VII. Pope. Look for CHIGI.

ALEXANDER VIII. Pope. Look for OTTOBONI.

ALEXIS, a Piemontois. There is a Book of SECRETS under the Name of this Alexis. It was printed at Baſil in 8*vo*, in the Year 1563, being tranſlated from the Italian into Latin by Wecker (a). It was likewiſe tranſlated into French, and printed ſeveral times with Additions. There is a Preface to it, wherein Signor Alexis informs the Public, that he was born of a Noble Family; that he applied himſelf to ſtudy from his Childhood; that he learned Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabic, and ſeveral other Languages; that, being particularly fond of the Secrets of Nature, he had collected as many of them as he could in his Fifty ſeven Years Travels; that he had piqued himſelf upon not communicating them to any one, but that, at the Age of Eighty two Years and ſeven Months, ſeeing a poor Man dead at Milan, whom he could have cured, if he had communicated one of his Noſtrums to the Chirurgeon, he was touched with ſo great a Remorſe of Conſcience, that he nearly turned Hermit, and in this Solitude diſpoſed his Recipes for Publication. The Hawkers carry them to Country-Fairs, with their other little Books, covered with blue Paper. It is true they have only the choice Remedies of Signor Alexis; the whole Collection would be too great a Volume for them.

(a) Merclin. in Lindenio renovato, pag. 28.

(a) Acron calls him Marcus, but it ſhould be Servius, according to William Grotius, Vit. Juriſc. pag. 86. See Aulus Gellius, lib. 6. cap. 5. & Pomponius, in lib. 2. D. de Orig. Juris.

ALFENUS VARUS (PUBLIUS) born at Cremona, firſt a Shoemaker, and afterwards a Diſciple of the famous Civilian, Servius Sulpitius (a), and at laſt Conſul, was a very learned Man in the Civil Law [A]. He was buried at the Public Expence. This is all that is ſaid of him by one of the old Scholiaſts upon Horace, in his

[A] A very learned Man in the Civil Law.] This Paſſage of Ammianus Marcellinus againſt the Advocates of his Time; "Hi, ut altius videantur jura "callere, Trebatium loquuntur, & Caſcellium, & "Alfenum, & Auruncorum Sicanorumque jamdiu le-"ges ignotas (1). —— Theſe Men, that they may be "thought more deeply verſed in the Science of the Law, "are ever talking of Trebatius, Caſcellius, and Alfenus, "and the obſolete Laws of the Aurunci and Sicani." This Paſſage, I ſay, is ſufficient to convince us of the great Authority of the Name of Alfenus, in matters of Law. Add to this the Teſtimonies alledged by Bertrand, in the firſt Book of his Civilians (2).

(1) Amm. Marcel. lib. 30. cap. 4. Pag. 594.

(2) Pag. 56, 57. Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1675.

Digitized by Google

his Notes on a Paſſage, which relates to our Alfenus [B], whoſe Conſulſhip, they ſay, fell out in the Year of Rome 754 (b). I will not warrant this. Alfenus wrote Forty Books of Digeſts, which are mentioned in the Index of the Pandects, and ſome Books of Collections, Collectaneorum. Aulus Gellius cites both theſe Works; and, tho' he refutes what he quotes out of them, yet he repreſents the Author as a Man, who was a great Enquirer into Antiquities [C]. The Civilian Paulus wrote an Abridgment of Alfenus's Books (c). If it were true, that there was an Alfenus among the Counſellors of the Emperor Alexander Severus [D], who was a Diſciple of Papinian, as ſome affirm from a very intricate Paſſage of Lampridius, he might be deſcended from the other; tho' it muſt be confeſſed that there were ſome Alfenus's different from the Diſciple of Sulpitius. There was an Alfenus mentioned by Cicero in his Oration for Quinctius, and an Alfenus, General of the Army under Vitellius, and Prefect of the Prætorium, who did not behave like a Man of Courage, when his Party was overcome by That of Veſpaſian (d). Donatus, in the Life of Virgil, ſpeaks of an Alfenus [E], who, with ſome others, exempted the Lands of that Poet from the Fate, to which thoſe of the Neighbourhood were expoſed, when, after the Defeat of Brutus, they were aſſigned to the Soldiers. Very learned Perſons believe, that He, who did Virgil that kind Office, was the ſame Alfenus, who had been formerly a Shoemaker, and the ſame Alfenus, whom Catullus ſpeaks of (e). This is attended with ſome Difficulty [F]. See my Remarks, in which Moreri is ſometimes ſhewn to be guilty of unpardonable Miſtakes.

(b) See Cruquius in Hor. Sat. 3. lib. 1.

(c) Guil. Grot. Vitæ Juriſconſ. pag. 86.

(d) Tacit. Hiſtor. lib. 2. cap. 29, 43. & lib. 3. cap. 36, 55, 61. & lib. 4. cap. 11.

(e) Dacier upon Horace Sat. 3. lib. 1.

[B] On a Paſſage, which relates to our Alfenus.] The Words of Horace deſerve to be produc'd.

—— —— Alfenus vafer, omni
Abjecto inſtrumento artis, clauſaque taberna,
Sutor erat, ſapiens operis ſic optimus omnes
Eſt opifex, ſic rex ſolus (3).

(3) Horat. Sat. 3. l. 1. ver. 130.

Skillful Alfenus, though he loſt his Awl,
And threw away his Laſt, and ſhut his Stall,
And broke his Threads, yet was a Cobler ſtill;
Thus each Mechanic, if he has but skill,
Is wiſe, and only King. CREECH.

[C] Aulus Gellius —— though he refutes what he quotes out of them, yet repreſents him as a great Enquirer into Antiquities.] This relates to the Signification of theſe Words, argentum purum putum, which were in the Treaty of Peace, concluded between the Republic of Rome, and that of Carthage. The Romans were to receive every Year a certain Tribute of Money, purum putum, that is of good Alloy. Moreri imagined, that the proper name of that Tribute was purum putum, which is a pleaſant Conceit enough. Aulus Gellius rejects, not without reaſon, the Senſe, which Alfenus gave to theſe Words (4); and, if we were to judge of this Civilian's Capacity from hence, he would ſoon loſe his great Reputation. He believed that purum putum was formed from purus, as novicius and propicius are form'd from novus and propius, in order to give more Force to the Signification of the primitive Word. Aulus Gellius refutes him ſolidly, and ſhews that putum ſignifies That, from which all Superfluities are retrench'd. He does not cite the Book, which Moreri quotes, to wit, the fourth and thirtieth of the Digeſts, nor That, which Bertrand alledges, to wit, the thirtieth of the ſame Digeſts; but he cites the Thirty fourth. As for the other Work, which he cites, it is entituled, Conjectaneorum, in the Edition of Henry Stephens; but I find that Bertrand, and William Grotius, read it Collectaneorum. This laſt Title ſeems to agree better with the Paſſages of the Pandects, where Servius is cited upon the Teſtimony of Alfenus, Servius apud Alfenum notat, putat; but it would be wrong to prefer, upon this Account, the latter Title to That, which Henry Stephens preferred. Bertrand makes Aulus Gellius ſay what he does not, to wit, that the Work, entituled Collectanea, conſiſted of four Books. Theſe are Aulus Gellius's Words: In libro digeſtorum trigeſimo & quarto, conjectaneorum autem ſecundo, in fœdere, inquit, &c (5). I do not queſtion, but that, ſince Bertrand ſaid, that Aulus Gellius quoted the thirtieth Book of the Digeſts, he believed that & quarto related to the following Words, and that, without taking notice of what follows, he concluded, that the fourth Book of the Collectanea had been cited; from whence, nevertheleſs, he had no reaſon to infer, that the Work contained but four Books, and that Aulus Gellius ſaid ſo. Neither the critical Remarks on this Work of Bertrand, inſerted in the Edition of Leyden, nor William Grotius, have taken notice of theſe ſmall Miſtakes. Aulus Gellius ſpeaks to the Advantage of Alfenus: "Alfenus "Juriſconſultus, Servii Sulpitii Diſcipulus, Rerum- "que antiquarum non incurioſus (6). —— Alfenus, "the Civilian, Diſciple of Servius Sulpitius, and a "curious Enquirer into Antiquity."

(4) Aulus Gell. lib. 6. cap. 5.

(5) Id. ib.

(6) Lib. 6. cap. 5.

[D] That there was an ALFENUS among the Counſellors of the Emperor Alexander Severus.] The Paſſage of Lampridius, as it is printed, is ſo erroneous in ſome reſpects, that nothing can be concluded from it, for the Exiſtence of an Alfenus, in the Reign of Alexander Severus. See Caſaubon on that Paſſage. However Moreri ſhould not have cited Horace, nor Aulus Gellius, for his Alfenius, ſurnamed the younger, who lived, ſays he, in the Reign of Alexander Severus.

[E] Donatus —— ſpeaks of an ALFENUS.] Moreri, giving an Article of this Perſon, pag. 170, calls him Alphenius Varus, a Roman Knight, and cites Donatus in vita Virgilii. But Donatus does not ſtyle him a Roman Knight; and, beſides, in the beſt Editions (7), it is Alphenus, Varius, as two different Perſons, and not Alphenius Varus, as one Perſon. It muſt, nevertheleſs, be confeſs'd, that theſe Verſes of the ninth Eclogue of Virgil, ver. 26.

(7) That of Hackius at Leyden 1680.

Immo hæc, quæ Varo necdum perfecta canebat,
Vare, tuum nomen (ſuperet modo Mantua nobis, Mantua væ miſeræ nimium vicina Cremonæ)
Cantantes ſublime ferent ad ſidera cygni;

Or what unfiniſh'd be to Varus read;
Thy Name, O Varus (if the kinder Powers
Preſerve our Plains, and ſheild the Mantuan Towers,
Obnoxious by Cremona's neighbouring Crime)
The Wings of Swans, and ſtronger-pinion'd Rhyme,
Shall raiſe aloft, and ſoaring beat above,
Th' immortal Gift of Gratitude to Jove.
DRYDEN.

are applied, by the Grammarian Servius, to an Alfenus Varus, who was ſent by Auguſtus to command beyond the Po, after Pollio had loſt that Government. The ſame Grammarian obſerves, that ſome Perſons have applied theſe other Verſes of Virgil to the Civilian Alfenus Varus, Succeſſor of Servius Sulpitius;

Nam neque adhuc Varo videor, nec dicere Cinna
Digna, ſed argutos inter ſtrepere anſer olores (8).

(8) Virgil. Eclog. 9. ver. 35.

I nor to Cinna's Ears, nor Varus dare aſpire,
But gabble, like a Gooſe, amidſt the Swan-like Quire.
DRYDEN.

The reaſon was, becauſe Alfenus Varus the Civilian was ſomething of a Poet. Servius confutes them, by ſhewing, that this Elogy ought to be underſtood of the Poet Varius, whom Horace praiſed ſo much.

[F] This is attended with ſome Difficulty.] A Perſon, who applies himſelf with ſuch Ardour to the Civil Law, that, by his great Progreſs, he not only wipes off the Diſgrace, ariſing from the Mechanic Trade, which he

Digitized by Google

he had exercised in his Native Country, but succeeds likewise the greatest Civilian at that time in the Republic of Rome, must probably be too sedate, to join with Catullus, and other Sparks of the same Stamp, in their Debauchery. But the Alfenus, of whom Catullus speaks, was of this Knot of Rakes.

(9) Catull. Epig. 37. Mr Dacier upon Horace, Sat. 3. lib. 1. cites the 27th Epigram of Catullus.

Alphene immemor, & unanimis falsè sodalibus (9)!

Forgetful Alphenus, and false to your unanimous Companions!

He introduced Catullus to his own Whore;

Varus me meus ad suos Amores
Visum duxerat è fore otiosum,
Scortillum, ut mihi tum repente visum est,
Non illepidum, nec invenustum (10).

(10) Catull. Epig. 10.

Varus carried me Home from the Forum, being disengaged, to see his Mistress; who appeared to me, upon a sudden View, a smart, pretty, Wench.

And therefore it is not very likely, that he was the Disciple of Sulpitius. Muretus was censured for saying, that Varus, who carried Catullus to his Mistress, was Quintilius Varus; and the Censure was grounded on this, that there were at least Fifty seven Years between the Defeat of the three Legions of Varus, and the Visit, which Catullus speaks of. I make use of this Reason (11). There must be fifty Years, more or less, between this Visit, and the Consulship of Alfenus (12), and therefore it is very unlikely, that the Shoemaker of Cremona, if he was Consul in the Year of Rome 754, had such an intimate Acquaintance with Catullus fifty Years before: For a Country Shoemaker, who leaves his Trade, in order to study in the Capital City, can be no Boy, when he is intimate with Persons of Distinction. Add to this, that he, who did Virgil that good Office, commanded beyond the Po forty Years before the Consulship in Question (13). So that there is reason to doubt, whether Alfenus, who was Consul in the Year of Rome 754, be the same with Virgil's Benefactor: For it is seldom that a Man attains to great Dignities, when the usual time of arriving at them has been long over. This was the Case of those, who, after a Government of a Province, were forty Years without obtaining the Consular Dignity.

(11) Scalig. in Catull. Epigr. 10.

(12) It is placed in the 754th Year of Rome.

(13) Servius in Ecl. 9. ver. 29.

ALFONSUS. See the Kings of this Name under That of their respective Kingdoms.

ALYPIUS, of Antioch, lived in the Reign of Julian the Apostate. He had already commanded in England, when That Prince took it into his Head to rebuild the Temple of Jerusalem, and appointed him Overseer of the Work. Alypius promoted the Design with great Application, and was assisted in it by the Governor of the Province (a). Yet he was obliged to desist from the Undertaking; the Flames, which issued out of the Earth, rendring the Place inaccessible. Eight Years after, he found himself involved in a terrible Persecution, which destroyed a great number of People, and which was first raised against those, who had made use of Magic to discover the Successor of Valens. When the Commissioners for informing against the Guilty had set the Affair a-going, nothing was to be seen but accused Persons, who were immediately Condemned and Punished. Alypius, who had betaken himself to a private Life, in order to enjoy the Pleasures of Quiet, was attacked by the Informers, and accused of being a Poisoner (b). He was banished, and all his Estate confiscated. His Son Hierocles, being condemned to Death on the same Accusation, was happily saved, as he was led to the Place of Execution (c). The News of this fortunate Event mitigated Alypius's Affliction in his Exile. It is very probable, that the Author of the Geographical Piece, which pleased Julian the Apostate very much, is the same with our Alypius [A]; but I do not believe, that this Work is a Description of the Old World, which James Godfrey translated out of Greek into Latin [B]. I know nothing of one ALYPIUS, who wrote a Treatise of Music, entitled Εισαγωγη μουσικη, Introductio Musica, mentioned by Cassiodorus; Meursius was

(a) See Remark [A].

(b) See Remark [A].

(c) See the manner how, in the Article HIEROCLES.

[A] The Author of the Geographical Piece, which pleased Julian the Apostate, is the same with our Alypius.] This Author lived in the Reign of Julian the Apostate. We have two Letters, which that Prince wrote to him, which testify, that Alypius was the Brother of Cæsarius, and that he exercised a considerable Employ (1). This last Character agrees admirably well with Alypius of Antioch, who, after having been Deputy-Governor in England, was sent to Judæa to superintend the Building of the Temple. Ammianus Marcellinus informs us of these Particulars. "Ambitiosum quondam apud Hierosolymam templum —— instaurare sumptibus cogitabat immodicis: Negotiumque maturandum Alypio dederat "Antiochensi, qui olim Brittannias curaverat pro "præfectis. Cum itaque rei idem fortiter instaret "Alypius, juvaretque provinciæ rector, metuendi "globi flammarum prope fundamenta crebris assultibus erumpentes fecere locum, exustis aliquoties "operantibus, inaccessum (2).—— He resolved to re-"build the magnificent Temple, which was formerly at "Jerusalem, at an immense Expence, and committed the "Dispatch of the Work to Alypius of Antioch, who had "formerly commanded in Brittain under the Præfects. "But, as Alypius was carrying on the Work with "great Expedition, and was assisted in it by the "Governor of the Province, there issued forth "dreadful Balls of Fire, with frequent Eruptions, "near the Foundations, which sometimes burnt the "Workmen, and rendered the Place inaccessible." Thus he speaks in the Twenty ninth Book: "Ecce "autem Alypius quoque, ex Vicario Britanniarum, "placiditatis homo jocundæ, post otiosam & repositam vitam (quoniam huc usque injustitia tenederat manus) in squalore maximo volutatus, ut veneficii reus, citatus est cum Hierocle filio (3).—— Alypius too, formerly Deputy-Governor of Brittain, a "Man of a pleasant and easy Temper, after a Life of Ease "and Retirement (for the Hand of Injustice reached "even thither) was treated as the greatest Criminal, "and arraigned for poisoning, with his Son Hierocles."

(1) See Remark [B].

(2) Ammian. Marcell. lib. 23. cap. 1. pag. 350. ad ann. 363.

(3) Id. lib. 2). cap. 1. pag. 556. ad ann. 371.

[B] I do not believe, that this Work is the Description of the old World, which James Godfrey translated out of Greek into Latin.] This Description is an anonymous Work, composed in the Reign of the Emperors Constantius and Constans. There was an ancient and very barbarous Latin Translation of it, which Salmasius communicated to the learned James Godfrey, who caused it to be printed, with the Greek Text, and with a new Translation, accompanied with Notes (4). Vossius seems to believe, that the Author of this Descriptiption is the same Alypius, who sent a Geographical Treatise to Julian the Apostate; but if so, continues he, it must be said, according to the Remark of James Godfrey, that Alypius composed it before he commanded in England, for there is nothing said of that Island in it, but on the Credit of others: "Britannia Provincia, sicut qui "fuerunt narrant, valde maxima." As for me, I should readily conclude from this Passage, that Alypius did not write this Description; and this is my Reason. It was long, since his having been Lieutenant in England, when

(4) Vossius de Scient. Math. pag. 243.

Julian

Digitized by Google

was the firſt who publiſhed it in Greek (d). Mr Hofman would have done better to have omitted this Article entirely [C].

(d) Voſſius de Scient. Math. pag. 94.

Julian gave him a Commiſſion to rebuild the Temple of Jeruſalem. "Negotiumque maturandum Alypio "dederat Antiochenſi, qui OLIM Brittannias cura- "verat pro Præfectis (5). —— He committed the "Diſpatch of the Work to Alypius of Antioch, who "had FORMERLY commanded in Britain under the "Prefects." He ſent his Geography to the Emperor, while he commanded under him in ſome Province. He was therefore able to ſpeak of England, as an Eye-witneſs. He is not, then, the Author of the Deſcription of the old World, in which there is nothing ſaid of that Iſland, but on the Credit of others, who had travelled thither. Let no one object to me, that he wrote two Books, the one before he went into England, the other under Julian the Apoſtate, and that the firſt is the Deſcription, publiſhed by Godfrey; for it is very probable, that, if he was Author of that Deſcription, he would have inſerted it in the Work, which he ſent to Julian, and thus the firſt Work would have been diſregarded. It would have been loſt, then, and the Book, which Godfrey tranſlated and adorned with Notes, would not be extant at this preſent time. We underſtand from Julian, that Alypius was a Poet: Ἔχει γάρ, ſays he (6), καὶ τὰ διαγεγραμμένα τῷ πρόσθεν βέλτιον, καὶ κεκοσμηκὼς αὐτὰ προσθεὶς τοῖς ἰάμβοις. —— It contains likewiſe much better Deſcriptions than the former; beſides which you have given it a Poetical Turn by the Iambics, which you have added to it. Afterwards he approves of the manner, in which Alypius treated the People, and praiſes him for uſing ſometimes Mildneſs, and ſometimes great Reſolution. Περὶ δὲ τὴν διοίκησιν τῶν πραγμάτων, ὅτι δεξιῶς ἅμα καὶ πράως ἀπαντᾷ παρεγγυᾶν προθυμοῦμαι, σωφρονοῦμεν. μίξαι γὰρ πρᾴοντα καὶ σωφρονοῦντα ἀνδρείᾳ καὶ ῥώμῃ, καὶ τῇ μὲ χρῆσθαι πρὸς τοὺς ὑπηκόους τῇ δὲ τῶν πονηρῶν ἀπαραιτήτως πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν, ἃ μικροῦ δεῖ φύσεως, οὐδ' ἁρμόττον. —— As to your Conduct in Affairs of Government, I am pleaſed to find, that you ſtudy to tranſact every thing with Aſſiduity and Humanity; for it requires no ſmall Ability and Virtue ſo to temper Lenity and Moderation with Vigor and Reſolution, as to uſe the former towards good Men, and exert the latter for the Puniſhment of the bad.

(5) Amm. Marcell. lib. 23. c. 1.

(6) Julian. Epiſt. 30.

[C] Mr Hofman would have done better to have omitted this Article entirely] I. In the firſt Place, he writes Alipius. II. He ſays, that Alipius of Antioch is Author of the Deſcription of the old World. III. That this Deſcription was publiſhed in Latin, in the Reign of Conſtantius and Conſtans. IV. That there was another Alipius of Antioch, who wrote a Treatiſe of Geography. V. That Ammianus Marcellinus aſſerts This. This is all Mr Hofman's Account; in which there are many Faults of Omiſſion; but the worſt is, the little he has ſaid is quite full of Faults of Commiſſion.

ALYPIUS, a Philoſopher of Alexandria, cotemporary with Jamblicus, and one of the ſubtileſt Logicians of his Time, was as little as a Dwarf; but his Wit made up for this Imperfection. He had many Diſciples, to whom he gave only verbal Inſtructions, without dictating any Thing to them. Which was the reaſon why they left him, to follow Jamblicus, under whom they might improve both by Lectures and Writings. Jamblicus, having had ſome Converſation with our Alypius, admired his Judgment, and his Genius; and even compoſed his Life, wherein he praiſed his Virtue, and the firmneſs of his Soul. Alypius died, very old, in the City of Alexandria (a).

(a) Euneapius in Vita Jamblic.

ALYPIUS, Biſhop of Tagaſta, where he was born (a), was one of St Auſtin's good Friends. He was baptized, with him, at Milan, in the Year 388. Five Years after, he travelled into Paleſtine; and if, on the one hand, the great Character he gave St Jerom of St Auſtin, ſerved to cement the Friendſhip of thoſe Fathers, it ſeems, on the other hand that, at his return into Africa, he cooled St Auſtin's Affection. This is aſcribed to his relating the ſcandalous things, which St Jerom's Adverſaries ſpoke of him at Jeruſalem. Alypius was not promoted to the Biſhoprick of Tagaſta, till the Year 394, a Year after his Travels into Paleſtine. He aſſiſted at the Council of Carthage, in the Year 403, in which an Attempt was made to bring over the Donatiſts to the Unity of the Church. The Benefactions, which Pinianus beſtowed on the Church of Tagaſta, when he went thither in the Year 409, with the two Melania's, and Albina his Mother-in-law, expoſed Alypius to Calumny, as if, by his fine Diſcourſe and Dexterity, he had extorted too much from theſe good and charitable Perſons. The Inhabitants of Hippo murmured furiouſly againſt him, becauſe they looked upon him as the cauſe of their looſing the Prey, which they thought they had in their Hands. They had obliged Pinianus, even againſt his Will, to promiſe them that he wou'd embrace the Prieſthood in their City; His great Eſtate induced them to this Violence; but, the next Day, he left Hippo, and returned to Tagaſta, and did not think himſelf obliged by ſuch a forced Promiſe as his was. Alypius was one of the ſeven Catholic Prelates, who diſputed, in 411, with ſeven Donatiſt Biſhops, in the famous Conference of Carthage. In 419, he was deputed to Honorius, by the Church of Africa. Pope Boniface received him with many Marks of Friendſhip, and employed him to tranſmit to St Auſtin ſome artful Letters, which the Pelagians diſperſed in the Churches. St Auſtin, the beſt Writer of his Time, was deſired to refute them. He undertook it, and exerted all his Skill in it (b); but Alypius confuted this Hereſy more ſtrongly, by the ſevere Decrees, which he obtained at the Court of Honorius, againſt the Pelagians [A]. We ſhould be better acquainted with his Actions and

(a) It is a Town in Africa.

(b) Taken from Baronius's Annals, under the Years, which I have mentioned.

[A] The ſevere Decrees, —— againſt the Pelagians.] Baronius does not affirm, that the African Churches ſent Alypius to the Emperor, to deſire leave to make uſe of the ſecular Arm againſt the Followers of Pelagius; he only conjectures it, and grounds his Conjecture on the Orders, which were diſpatched, in the ſame Year, by the Emperor Honorius, againſt the Pelagians of Africa. But Mr Maimbourg does not ſpeak of this as a doubtful Matter; for, having made an odious Compariſon between the Conduct of the Proteſtant Miniſters and that of the Pelagians, he adds (1), "That which has "filled and his Merit, if we had the Work, which St Auſtin promiſed, in a Letter, which he wrote to St Paulinus [B]. To conclude, Alypius was very near being married. See the Remark [B] of the Article St AUGUSTIN.

(1) Maimbourg Hiſtoire du Pontificat de St Leon, lib. 1. pag. 33. Duteh Edit.

Digitized by Google

" filled all France with Joy, is, that ſo juſt a Decree " was ſoon followed by That famous Edict of October, " which gave the fatal Blow to this Hereſy, by for- " bidding the public Exerciſe of the pretended Re- " formation, deſtroying all their Temples, and ba- " niſhing thoſe Miniſters, who refuſed to renounce " their Errors. And this is exactly what the Em- " peror Honorius did againſt the Pelagians, at the " Requeſt of the Clergy of Africa, preſented by Aly- " pius. For, by the Edict which that Prince granted " him for the Good of the whole Church, that He- " reſy was exterminated out of the Empire; they, " who might yet be ſuſpected of it, were forbid- " den to meet, and thoſe falſe Biſhops, who would " not ſubſcribe to it's Condemnation, were expelled " from their Sees."

[B] The Work, which St Auſtin promiſed in a Letter —— to St Paulinus.] Becauſe what he ſays in that Letter (2) may give a general Notion of Alypius's Merit, it will not be improper to produce it here, " Eſt etiam aliud quo iſtum fratrem amplius diligas, " nam eſt cognatus venerabilis & verè beati Epiſcopi " Alypii, quem toto pectore amplecteris & merito: " nam quiſquis de illo viro benigne cogitat, de mag- " na Dei miſericordia & de mirabilibus Dei mune- " ribus cogitat. Itaque, cum legiſſet petitionem " tuam, quâ deſiderare te indicaſti, ut hiſtoriam ſuam " tibi ſcriberet, & volebat facere propter benevolen- " tiam tuam, & nolebat propter verecundiam ſuam, " quem cum viderim inter amorem pudoremque " fluctuantem, onus ab illo in humeros meos tran- " ſtuli: nam hoc mihi etiam per epiſtolam juſſit. " Cito ergo, ſi Dominus adjuverit, totum Alypium " inferam præcordiis tuis: nam hoc ſum ego maxime " veritus, ne ille vereretur aperire omnia, quæ in " eum Dominus contulit, ne alicubi minus intelli- " genti (non enim abs te ſolo illa legerentur) non " divina munera conceſſa hominibus, ſed ſeipſum " prædicare videretur, & tu, qui noſti quomodo " hæc legas, propter aliorum cavendam infirmitatem, " fraternæ notitiæ debito fraudareris. —— This Bro- " ther has ſtill a farther claim to your Affection; for " he is related to the venerable, and truly bleſſed " Biſhop Alypius, whom you embrace with your whole " Heart, an deſervedly: for whoever thinks favou- " rably of him, reflects upon the great Mercy, and " the wonderful Gifts, of God. Therefore, when he " had read your Petition, in which you expreſſed your " Deſire, that he would write to you his own Hiſto- " ry, he was inclined to do it out of good Will to you, " but deterred from it by his own Modeſty; whom when " I ſaw fluctuating between Love and Modeſty, I tranſ- " ferred the Burthen from his Shoulders to my own; as he had deſired me by Letter to do. Speedily therefore, with God's Aſſiſtance, I ſhall infuſe all " Alypius into your Breaſt; for my greateſt Fear was, leaſt he ſhould conceal Part of the Favours beſtowed on him by God, out of a dread of appearing to the Ignorant (for you would not have been his only Rea- " der) rather to preach up himſelf, than the Divine " Gifts beſtowed on Men; and that, out of Regard " to the Weakneſs of others, you, who would have " rightly underſtood him, would be defrauded of the " Debt of Brotherly Information."

(2) It is the 32d.

ALYPIUS (FALTONIUS PROBUS) Brother of Q. Clodius Hermogenianus Olybrius (a), was Prefect of Rome in the Reign of the Emperor Theodoſius. Baronius proves it by ſome Inſcriptions (b). He adds, that there are ſeveral Letters from Symmachus to this Alypius [A]; he cites the Roman Martyrology, which ſays, that St Almachius was killed by the Gladiators [B] in the Prefecture of Alypius; Laſtly, he conjectures, I. That Alypius, Governor of Egypt, with whom John the Hermit had a Conference [C], is the ſame with Him, who is the Subject of this Article. II. That this Converſation with the Hermit converted Alypius. A learned Engliſhman conjectures, that the Martyr St Almachius is an imaginary Saint, and that the Title of the Almanack produced this wonderful Canonization [D].

(a) Demetrias, his Daughter, is very much praiſed by the Fathers.

(b) Baronius ad Ann. 395. n. 18.

[A] There are ſeveral Letters from Symmachus to this Alypius.] His Words are theſe: " Ad eundem " quoque Alypium complures extant Epiſtolæ Sym- " machi, deque eo, meminit in Epiſtola ad Flavi- " anum (1)." He cites the Eighty ſecond Letter of the ſecond Book of Symmachus. In my Edition, I find, at the Eighty ſecond, theſe Words; " Jampri- " dem Domino & fratri meo Alipio comitatum ſacrum " viſere atque adire cupienti. —— My Maſter and " Brother Alypius, deſirous of going to ſee and attend " the ſacred Proceſſion."

(1) Baronius ad Ann. 395. n. 18.

[B] St Almachius was killed by the Gladiators.] He endeavoured to ſuppreſs the Worſhip of falſe Gods, on the Day of the Octave of Chriſtmas, (which is the firſt Day of the Year) and it coſt him his Life. Theſe are the Words of the Martyrology, on the firſt of January, " Romæ S. Almachii martyris, qui, ju- " bente Alypio Urbis præfecto, cum diceret, hodie " Octavæ Dominici diei ſunt, ceſſate à ſuperſtitio- " nibus idolorum, & à ſacrificiis pollutis, à gladiato- " ribus occiſus eſt (2). —— St Almachius, Martyr at " Rome; who, at the Command of Alypius, Prefect " of the City, having ſaid, To Day is the Octave of " Chriſtmas; lay aſide your idolatrous Superſtitions, " and polluted Sacrifices; was thereupon ſlain by the " Gladiators." Theodoret, in the Twenty ſixth Chapter of the fifth Book of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, ſpeaks of a Monk, whoſe Name was Telemachus, who came from the utmoſt Parts of the Eaſt to Rome, to endeavour at the aboliſhing the Shews of the Gladiators. He had the Courage to catechiſe theſe People; but the Spectators were ſo offended at it, that they ſtoned him to Death. Honorius, hearing of it, cauſed him to be ranked among the Martyrs, and commanded theſe ſort of Games to be aboliſhed. Baronius (3) would reduce what you have juſt now read, and what I have cited out of the Martyrology, to one and the ſame Fact, and would willingly make us believe, that Theodoret called Him Telemachus, whom he ought to have called Almachius; that he placed in the Reign of Honorius what was done in that of Theodoſius, and that he imputed the Action of the Gladiators to the Spectators. At this rate Theodoret muſt be guilty of three Miſtakes.

(2) Ibid. n. 19.

(3) Baron. ad ann. 395. n. 20.

[C] Alypius —— with whom John the Hermit had a Conference.] Baronius cites hereupon a long Paſſage (4), by which we are given to underſtand, that Good Palladius took it very ill, that the Hermit ſhould leave him, to go and converſe with Alypius, Governor of the Province. His Reſentment hereupon inſpired him with ſome Contempt for the Hermit, and with a Reſolution to retire. He would have done ſo, if the Hermit had not ſent him Word to defer his Intentions a little while. Palladius perceived from hence, that the Man had a great Fund of Spirituality in him, and a very particular Talent of gueſſing at a Man's Thoughts. He ſtaid 'till the Governor was gone, and then the Hermit made his Excuſes.

(4) Pallad. in Luſiac. cap. 22. apud Lipom. tom. 3.

[D] The Title of the Almanack produced this wonderful Canonization.] They, who cannot procure the Engliſh Book, printed at London in 1688, entitled, The Enthuſiaſm of the Church of Rome, may conſult the eleventh Volume of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, at the One hundred thirty ninth Page. They will ſee there, that, according to the Conjecture of the Engliſh Author, " Some ignorant Monk, of the VIIth " or VIIIth Century, ſeeing at the beginning of " the Calender, S. Almanachum, written, by way of " abbreviation, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe " Times, S. Almâchum, took the Word, ſeldom " uſed in thoſe Times, for the Name of a Saint,

Digitized by Google

" gave it a Termination in us, and placed it on the " firſt Day of the Year. Ignorance and Chance had " no ſooner brought this new Saint into World, but he " found Martyrologiſts, who affirmed that he was kil- " led in the Amphitheatre of Rome in the Preſecture of " Alypius, by the Gladiators, whom he endeavoured " to hinder from fighting. No ancient Author men- " this holy Courage (5). Alcuinus * is the firſt, who " ſpeaks of it, but with ſome Doubt."

(5) Yet Theodoret aſcribes it to the Monk Telemachus. See Remark [B].

* De Divin. Offic. cap 4.

ALKINDUS. Look for ALCHINDUS.

ALLATIUS (LEO) Librarian of the Vatican, born in the Iſland of Chios, was one of the moſt famous Writers of the XVIIth Century. He was laborious, and indefatigable, greedy after Manuſcripts, endowed with a great Memory, very fit to collect Materials, and conſequently deſerving of the Place which he enjoyed; though he had no very great Penetration, nor a manner of arguing, which ſavoured of the good Logician. I omit the Employments which he had, before he was made the Pope's Librarian, nor have I examined, whether Moreri, who ſpeaks of him at large, is very exact. If I have any thing to ſay upon this Head, it ſhall be in the Remarks [A]. So that, omitting here what may be found in his Dictionary, I ſhall only touch upon ſome Particulars, which he has omitted. Allatius was very ſerviceable to the Gentlemen of Port-Royal, in the Diſpute they had with Mr Claude, about the Belief of the Greeks in regard to the Euchariſt. Mr Claude often calls him the great Author of Mr Arnaud, and gives him but an indifferent Character [B]. Mr Simon repreſents him as a Man of no Sincerity [C]. Never was a Latin by Birth more zealous againſt the ſchiſmatical Greeks, than Allatius, nor more devoted to the See of Rome. He never was married, nor in Eccleſiaſtical Orders; the Reaſon he gives for it deſerves to be known [D]. It would be difficult to find in the Hiſtory of Authors, a more remarkable Particular, than That, which relates to a Pen, which he uſed [E]. He publiſhed ſeveral Manuſcripts, ſeveral Tranſlations of Greek Authors and ſeveral Books of his own compoſing. The Liſt of them in Moreri's Dictionary does not diſtinguiſh

[A] If I have any thing to ſay upon this Head, it ſhall be in the Remarks.] I find in Lorenzo Craſſo (1), that Leone Allacci (ſo he calls him) was but nine Years of Age, when he was carried from the Iſland of Chios into Calabria, where he met with the Protection of a powerful Family (2). After ſome time, he was ſent to Rome, where he ſtudied claſſical Learning, Philoſophy, and Divinity, in the Grecian College. He was elected at Naples great Vicar to Bernard Juſtiniani, Biſhop of Anglona. He returned to his Native Country; but, finding nothing there agreeable to his Inclinations, he returned to Rome, where he ſtudied Phyſic under Julius Cæſar Lagalla, and was admitted Doctor in That Science. Afterwards he applied himſelf to Polite Literature, and taught Greek in the College of his Nation. The death of Gregory XV. deprived him of the Reward of the Commiſſion, which he had received, to tranſport the Library of the Elector Palatine to Rome (3). Some time after, he went into the Service of Cardinal Bichi, afterwards of Cardinal Francis Barberini, and at laſt had the Care of the Library of the Vatican from Pope Alexander VII. Lorenzo Craſſo ſays nothing more in the Book, which I have quoted. I add, that Allatius had been a long time Librarian to Cardinal Barberini.

(1) Lorenzo Craſſo Iſtoria de' Poeti Greci, pag. 306. See alſo his Elogii d'Huomini Letterati, Tom. 1. pag. 397. & ſeq.

(2) That of the Spinelli.

(3) Moreri places this in the Year 1621. but Heidelberg was not taken till 1622.

[B] Mr Claude —— gives him but an indifferent Character.] " Allatius was a Greek, who had left his " Religion to embrace the Romiſh; a Greek, whom " the Pope had made his Library-keeper, a Man the " moſt attached to the Intereſt of the Court of Rome, " a Man the moſt malicious, and moſt outrageous " againſt Perſons; a Man the moſt zealous againſt " the Greeks, who are called Schiſmatics, particu- " larly againſt Cyril, and, after all, a true Dealer in " Smoak (4). ——— His Zeal for the Court of " Rome appears in the very beginning of his Book, " De perpetua Conſenſione; for thus he ſpeaks in fa- " vour of the Pope *: The Roman Pontiff holds of " no one; he judges every one, and is judged of none; " Obedience is to be paid to him, though he governs " unjuſtly; he gives Laws without receiving any; he " alters them as he pleaſes, he creates Magiſtrates, " he determines Matters of Faith, he orders the great " Affairs of the Church, as he pleaſes. He cannot " err, if he would; for no Infidelity or Error can " come near him; and if an Angel ſhould ſay other- " wiſe, being inveſted as he is with the Authority " of Jeſus Chriſt, he cannot change. The ill Nature, " with which he treats thoſe, againſt whom he diſ- " putes, as Chytræus, Creygthon, the Archbiſhop of " Corfu, and others, whom he attacks out of Wan- " tonneſs, appears from the meer reading of his " Works; each Period honours them with ſome of " theſe fine Appellations: Fools, Lyars, Blockheads, " Rotten Muſhrooms, Infernal Mouths, Wicked, Im- " pudent, and ſuch like Terms †, which are not " the Marks of a Temper extreamly moderate. To " prove to us the Conformity of the Greek Church " with the Romiſh in Eſſentials, he lays it down as " a Principle, that we muſt acknowledge, as the true " Greek Church, no other Party, but that which " obeys the See of Rome; as for the other Greeks, " whom he calls Heretics and Schiſmatics, he fairly " maintains, that it would be right to reduce them " to obedience by Fire and Sword. That Heretics " ought to be proſcribed, exterminated, and puniſhed, " and, if they are obſtinate, put to death and burnt ‖. " They are his own Words." Had Moreri reaſon then to call him good Man? Is this contemptuous Elogy due to thoſe, who talk of nothing but penal Laws, Extirpation, and Fire and Sword, when the Queſtion is, How Heretics are to be dealt with?

(4) Claude's Anſwer to Mr Arnaud, Book 3. ch. 12. Tom. 1. pag. 452. Edit. 8vo.

* Allat. de Perpet. Conſ. lib. 1. c. 2.

† Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 15, 16, 17, 18. & adverſ. Creygth. paſſim.

‖ Allat. de Perpet. Conſ. lib. 2. c. 13. Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 11.

[C] Mr Simon repreſents him as a Man of no Sincerity.] The Deſign of the whole firſt Chapter of the Critical Hiſtory of the Levant, is to ſhew, that Leo Allatius had no Reaſon to be in a Paſſion with Caucas, Archbiſhop of Corfu; that Caucas has not imputed any Opinions and Practices to the Greeks, which they diſown; and that Allatius, to pleaſe Pope Urban VIII, who had at that time formed the Deſign of re-uniting the Greeks to the Church of Rome by ſoftning Methods, had abated of the Rigour of ſeveral of the Greek Opinions. This is plainly to inſinuate, that he wanted Sincerity; for if Caucas was in the right, he could not be contradicted, out of Complaiſance to the Pope, without ſacrificing Candour to Maxims of State.

[D] The Reaſon he gives for it deſerves to be known.] Pope Alexander VII. asked him one Day, why he did not take Orders. It is, anſwered he, becauſe I would be always ready to marry. Why then, replied the Pope, don't you marry? It is, replied Allatius, becauſe I would always be at liberty to take Orders (5). Thus he ſpent his whole Life in deliberating between a Pariſh and a Wife: Perhaps, at his Death, he repented, that he had not choſen one or other of them; but he might have repented thirty or forty Years ſucceſſively, if he had actually made his Choice.

(5) Mabillon Muſæum Ital. Tom. 1. pag. 61.

[E] A remarkable Particular relating to a Pen, which he uſed.] This Particularity comes from the ſame Hand with the foregoing, to wit, John Paſtricius, Allatius's good Friend, Heir of his Books, and distinguish these Three sorts of Works, nor does it comprehend all that Allatius published. There is more of Reading and Learning in his Productions, than of Wit and Judgment. He knew how to discover the Faults of those, against whom he wrote, but he did it with too much Sharpness, and after an insulting manner. This is chiefly to be seen in the Dissertations, which he published against Mr Creygthon (a), concerning the Council of Florence. His Genius and his Memory appear in the Digressions he made from one Subject to another in the same Volume. Mr Sallo was far from being his Admirer upon this Account [F]. Allatius died at Rome, in the Month of January, 1669 (b), being Eighty three Years old. He often wrote Greek Verses. He composed a Poem in Greek on the Birth of Lewis XIV, wherein Greece is introduced Speaking. This Poem was printed before his Book, de Perpetua Consensione, which he dedicated to that King. I forgot to observe, that the Gentlemen of Port-Royal did not fail to reply to Mr Claude, in Favour of Allatius [G].

Digitized by Google

(a) See the Journal des Scavans of Nov. 15. 1666.

(b) Henn. Witte, Diarium Biograph. Moreri places his Death in 1670.

and Principal of the College de propaganda fide. He told Mabillon (6), that Allatius, having made use of the same Pen (7) for forty Years in writing Greek, and loosing it at last, was ready to cry for Grief. He wrote very fast; for he transcribed in one Night the Diarium Romanorum Pontificum, which Hilarion Rancatus, a Cistertian Monk had lent him (8). Allatius was not permitted to publish it.

(6) Ibid.

(7) See the Article of LANCELOT an Olivetan Monk.

(8) Id. Mabillon. pag. 77.

[F] Mr Sallo was far from being his Admirer on this Account.] Having observed, that the chief Piece of one of Allatius's Works was a Complaint of the Virgin, he goes on thus: "This Complaint "was composed by Metaphrastes, from which Leo "Allatius ----- takes occasion to give us an Elo- "gium of Metaphrastes, written by Psellus. And, "because Metaphrastes's Name was Simeon, he takes "occasion likewise from hence to make a very long "Dissertation on the Lives and Works of great "Men, of the Name of Simeon. From the Simeons "he proceeds to the Simons, from those to the Si- "monides, and lastly to the Simonactides. This way "of writing is the Taste of Leo Allatius. For he "had before composed Dissertations on the Lives "and Works of some Authors, who had equivocal "Names, as That of George, Methodius, Nicetas, "Philo, and Psellus. This is a new invented Pro- "ject; at least we have nothing like it in the Works "of the Ancients (9)." Diogenes Laertius seldom forgets to mention, at the end of each Philosopher's Life, those who bore the same Name; and he cites Demetrius Magnes, who had wrote a Book, περὶ ὁμωνύμων ποιητῶν τε καὶ συγγραφέων (10). Of Poets, and Authors, of the same Name. See the Remark [H] of the Article APOLLONIUS TYANEUS. Nor is Allatius the Restorer of this Project: Meursius had published several Treatises of this Nature before him. See Mr Teissier, in his Catalogus Authorum Bibliothecarum, where he gives us a List of the Authors, who exercised their Pens on this Subject (11). He calls them Scriptores de Homonymis. According to Mr Sallo, Homonymi ought to be translated those who have Equivocal Names; but, by his Leave, This would be a wrong Translation. It was never said, that Princes of the same Name, as the Charles's, the Lewis's, the Henry's, had equivocal Names. Names of this Sort are such as may be taken in different Senses; such is their Species and their Use, both in Logic, and in common Speech. But, to return to Leo Allatius, I must observe, that he was very fit to draw up Lists or Catalogues. He made this appear when he published his Apes Urbanæ; it is a Book, which grows scarce, and is already very dear in Holland (12). It contains a List of all the learned Men, who flourished in Rome, from the Year 1630 to 1632, with a Catalogue of their Works. The Reason of the Title is taken from the Bees, which Pope Urban VIII. bore in his Coat of Arms. There is another List of Allatius, which is less known than this, the Title whereof is Dramaturgia. It relates to Dramatical Works, and their Authors. The Book, which he published at Rome, in the Year 1636, De Erroribus magnorum virorum in dicendo, contains several Remarks stollen from Claudius Du Verdier. Mr Morhof charges him with it (13).

(a) Journal des Sçavans, of Jan. 19. 1665.

(10) Diog. Laert. in Epimenide, lib. 1. n. 112.

(11) Teissier, Catalog. pag. 355.

(12) It is not to be met with in Bookſellers Shops; but ſometimes at Auctions.

(13) Morhof de Patavin. pag. 86. Polyhist. pag. 1, 9.

[G] The Gentlemen of Port Royal did not fail to reply to Mr Claude in Favour of Allatius.] First, they mention part of what Mr Claude says of him; and then they go on thus. "But, besides, that these empty "Reproaches carry an ill Face; that Allatius's "Writings give quite another Idea of him, and that "his Brethren * speak of him in a very different "manner, and cite him with Commendation; they "are likewise contrary to good Sense: for a Man "may be zealous or bitter against an Author, whom "he refutes, without being a Cheat, and a Forger "of false Passages, and false Stories; and there is no "Consequence from the one to the other. It is not "with the Vices, as it is with the Virtues of Men; "there is no Affinity between them; nay, they are "often contrary the one to the other; and Persons "may be Passionate, Violent, Flatterers, Interested, "without giving any occasion to believe, that the "Passages, which they cite, are suppositious. There "is yet less Reason to believe it of Allatius, than of "another, because some Books, which he cited, when "they were but in Manuscript, having been after- "wards printed, have justified his Faithfulness; and "because it appears, farther, that he always pretend- "ed to the Reputation of a learned Critic; and it is "well known, that such Persons are very far from "falsifying Authors." It is certain, that Mr Drelincourt cites him with Commendation, and makes use of his Doctrine concerning the Witch of Endor, who conjured up the Ghost of Samuel. He cites his Treatise De Engastrimytho, published in the Year 1630.

* Drelincourt Dialog. de la defcente aux enfers. pag. 200, &c. Note, That in my Edition, which is the second, you muſt turn to page 4th, and the following, for what concerns Leo Allatius.

ALMAIN (JAMES) Professor of Divinity at Paris, in the College of Navarre, flourished in the beginning of the XVIth Century. He was born at Sens, and acquired the Reputation of one of the most subtle Logicians, and best Schoolmen of the Times. The great Inclination he had for the Doctrine of Scotus, and that of Occam, and Gabriel Biel, shews the Character of his Genius. He taught Logic and Physics, before he was admitted into the House of Navarre, in the Year 1508, and published some Treatises on these two branches of Philosophy, in 1505, and 1508. He took his Doctor of Divinity's Degree in the Year 1511, and the Year following he explained the three Books of Sentences in the College of Navarre. He was employed at the same time to write for King Lewis XII against Pope Julius II, and to vindicate the Authority of the Councils against a Piece of Cardinal Cajetan. The Council of Pisa had sent that Cardinal's Book to the Faculty of Divinity of Paris to be confuted by them; they made choice of Almain for this Drudgery, and had no reason to repent of their choice. This Doctor died very young in the Year 1515. An Edition of all his Works was published [A] at [A] An Edition of all his Works was published.] Olivier Lugduneus took this pains, and added a Preface to it, wherein Almain is amply praised. The best of his Works are four moral Treatises. Expo- at Paris two Years after (a). They who pretend, that he was a Monk, are miſtaken [B].

Digitized by Google

(a) Launoius Hiſtor. Gymn. Navarr. p. 611.

ſitio circa deciſiones quæſtionum Magiſtri Gulielmi Occam de poteſtate ſummi Pontificis. De auctoritate Eccleſiæ & Conciliorum. Dictata ſuper ſententias Magiſtri Roberti Holcot (1).

(1) Launoius Hiſt. Gymn. Navarr. pag. 611.

[B] They who pretend that he was a Monk, are miſtaken.] Father Labbé (2) accuſes Geſner, and his Abbreviator Simler, of having falſly advanced this Fact; Moreri did not fail, in this point, to copy after Father Labbé. Mr de Launoy is more particular in his Accuſation againſt Geſner; he blames him for ſaying, in his Bibliotheque, that Almain was of the Order of the Franciſcans: He adds, that Poſſevin, in his Apparatus, makes him only a Monk (3). Father Labbé did not make uſe of this Diſtinction; he ſays that Almain was a Monk, according to Geſner; but that, according to others, he was of the Order of St Francis. I do not believe, that Geſner has ſaid what is imputed to him; for I have not been able to find any Paſſage in his Bibliotheque, which mentions Almain. I find indeed a Benedictin, whoſe Name was Almannus; but he makes him live in the Year 890. As for Simler, it is true he ſays, that James Almain, a Monk, wrote a Book againſt Cardinal Cajetan. Moreri was not acquainted with this Writer's Age; he flouriſh'd ſtill, ſays he, in the beginning of the XVIth Century. Say rather, that he did not begin to flouriſh 'till that time.

(2) De Script. Eccleſ. Tom. 1. pag. 438.

(3) Ibid. pag. 614.

ALPAIDE, a Concubine of Pepin, and Mother of Charles Martel. Some Authors ſay, without good Grounds, that Pepin married her, after he had divorced Plectrude [A]. It is a general Opinion, that Lambert, Biſhop of Liege, was never ſo much a Courtier, as to approve of Pepin's Amours with this Lady; and that Alpaide, enraged at the Liberty he took in cenſuring them, made Pepin conſent to the Deſign ſhe had formed againſt that Prelate's Life [B]. They add, that Dodon, Alpaide's Brother, executed this villanous Deſign, and that, having committed the Murder, he fell into a Diſtemper, which bred a prodigious Number of Worms in his Body, and obliged him to throw himſelf into the Maëſe (a). Lambert has been canonized: He was the only Prelate, they ſay, who durſt tell Pepin the Truth [C], for which he met with the Fate of St John the Baptiſt. His Morality was ſo refined, that he refuſed the Benediction, which was deſired of him at Table, for Alpaide's Glaſs [D]. This Lady retired at laſt into a Monaſtery (b), where ſhe died. A Cloiſter is commonly to this kind of Perſons, what Leghorn was formerly to Bankrupts.

(a) Mezerai, Abregé Chron. Tom. 1. pag. 171. ad ann. 707. Cordemoi, Hiſt. de Fr. Tom. 1. pag. 381.

(b) Moreri ſays, that this Monaſtery had been founded by Alpaide at Orp-le-grand in Brabant.

[A] Some Authors ſay, without good Grounds, that Pepin married her, after he had divorced Plectrude.] Mr de Cordemoi (1) obſerves, that they built only on the Authority of the ſecond Continuator of Fredegarius, who ſays that Pepin married Alpaide. "But "beſides that this Author, who wrote (as every one "knows) by the Order of Charles Martel's Brother "and Nephew, took care not to repreſent the Amours "of Pepin and Alpaide, otherwiſe than as a Marriage; "he does not ſay, that Plectrude was divorced: Nay, "there are ſeveral Acts remaining, which ſhew that "Plectrude was never ſeparated from Pepin; ſo that, "according to Eccleſiaſtical or Civil Laws, Alpaide "could not be look'd upon as his lawful Wife, and "if he married her, he had two Wives at once."

(1) Cordemoi's Hiſt. of France, Vol. 1. pag. 381.

[B] Enrag'd at the Liberty he took in cenſuring them - - - - - - - ſhe form'd a Deſign againſt that Prelate's Life.] We need not wonder, that the ſecond Continuator of Fredegarius ſhould ſay nothing of Lambert's Conduct, nor of the fatal Conſequences it was attended with. He could not touch upon it, without incurring the Diſpleaſure of Charles Martel's Relations, who made uſe of his Pen; and therefore his Silence is of no Weight: But the Author of the Geſta likewiſe ſays nothing of it (2). An Author, who liv'd in thoſe Times, ſays only, "That St Lambert "was killed by a Lord, whoſe Name was Dodon, "in revenge for the Death of two of his Relations, "whom the Servants of that holy Biſhop had ſlain, "without his Knowledge (3)." If we knew of what Party this Author was, whether he was for Charles Martel, or for Plectrude, whether he had any thing to hope for, or to fear, we might know how to judge of his Silence. Mr de Cordemoi adds, that it does not appear "by any Memoirs of that Time, either "that Dodon was the Brother of Alpaide, or that ſhe "induced him to kill St Lambert; that there are indeed ſome Expreſſions in the Martyrologies compos'd about that time, which ſhew, that this Violence had been done by Order from the Court, "and that, as Pepin was Maſter of it, thoſe, who "wrote afterwards, thought they ought to explain, "to the Diſadvantage of that Prince, and of Alpaide, "the conceal'd meaning of the Martyrologies (4)." The ſafeſt way, I think, is to place this in the Number of doubtful Facts. They, who tell us, that Lambert, Biſhop of Liege, was the only Perſon, who durſt reprimand Pepin, and ſpeak openly of his Bigamy as of a public Adultery, without ſuffering himſelf to be influenced either by the Promiſes, or the Threats, of Dodon, Alpaide's Brother (5), did not write 'till a long time after (6); which makes their Teſtimony leſs to be depended upon: Beſides, the Son of Alpaide was ſo formidable a Perſon, that nothing can be inferred from the Silence of cotemporary Writers.

(2) Ibid.

(3) Godeſcalc. in Vita S. Lamberti, cap. 7. apud Cordemoi, ibid.

(4) Cordemoi, ibid. pag. 382.

(5) Anſelm. Laodicenſ. Canonicus. Sigibert. Monachus Gemblacenſ. Nicolaus Laodic. Canonic. Veter. and others cited by Cordemoi, pag. 381.

[C] The only Prelate, who durſt tell Pepin the Truth.] An Author of an Hiſtorical Dictionary will have a thouſand Opportunities of obſerving, that there are no greater Flatterers of Princes than Churchmen. Their Sermons, their Prayers, their Speeches, their Epiſtles Dedicatory, are ſo full of extravagant Elogies, that the Condition they put an honeſt Hearer or Reader into, cannot be better repreſented, than by the Proverb, Date mihi peloim *. - - - - - Give me the Baſon. If it be ſaid that Pepin was no King; I anſwer, that he had the Key of Tongues and Pens, Rewards and Puniſhments in his Hands; he only wanted the Title of Sovereign; he had the Reality, and performed the Functions of it. Flatterers do not regard a meer Title: They adore him more devoutly, who has the Power without the Title, than him who has the Title without the Power.

(6) Cordemoi, p. 381.

* A Proverbial Saying of Thoſe, who, when any thing becomes ſo very troubleſome, as not to be any longer born, (for inſtance, a ſtupid or ſublime Harangue) call for a Baſon, or Pot, as if they were ſick, and wanted to diſcharge. See Suidas, and Eraſm. Adag.

[D] He refuſed the Benediction, which was deſired of him at Table, for Alpaide's Glaſs.] Let us ſee how a modern Hiſtorian relates the Matter. "Ad epulas "invitatur (B. Landebertus) à principe. Pippinus, "cæterique illuſtres viri qui aderant, ſcyphum quiſque ſuum ab Antiſtite benedici, aut, ut alii dicunt, "de manu ejus poculum accipere, pia ambitione cupiebant. Cum Alpais (nam & ipſa pleno convivio "intererat) ſcyphum ſuum à Landeberto ſignari optaret, indignabundus Epiſcopus palatio exceſſit, convivarum hilaritate confuſa (7). —— Lambert was "invited by the Prince to an Entertainment. Pepin, "and the reſt of his illuſtrious Gueſts, were pioufly "ambitious, that their Glaſſes might be bleſs'd by the "Prelate, or, as others ſay, to receive the Glaſs from "his Hand. But when Alpais (who was preſent at "this grand Feaſt) deſired, that her Glaſs likewiſe "might receive Lambert's Benediction, the Biſhop "left the Palace with Indignation, to the Interrup"tion of the Company's Mirth." Compare with this the Stories related in the new Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm (8).

(7) Hadrian. Valeſius Rerum Francicarum, lib. 33.

(8) Page 614. & ſeq.

ALSTEDIUS (JOHN HENRY) a German Divine of the Reformed Religion, was one of the moſt voluminous Writers of the XVIIth Century. He was an indefatigable Author, and one who answered his Anagram perfectly well (a). He was a long time Professor of Philosophy and Divinity at Herborn, in the County of Nassau, from whence he went into Transylvania, to be Professor at Alba-Julia (b), where he died in the Year 1638, being fifty Years of Age. He was one of the Fathers at the Synod of Dort. His chief Employment was to compose Methods, and to reduce the several Branches of Arts and Sciences into certain Systems. His Encyclopædia (c) found Favour with the Roman Catholics [A]; for it was reprinted at Lyons, and sold very well in France. Some are of Opinion, that one of his best Works is his Thesaurus Chronologicus, of which there are several Editions; others speak with Contempt of it. Vossius says nothing of it; he only mentions the Encyclopædia in general, and in particular the Treatise of Arithmetic (d). He acknowledges, that the Author had read much, and that his Learning was very extensive. They, who judge of him with the least Flattery, own that there are some good things in his Methods and Systems [B]. He did not persuade many People of what he endeavoured to prove in his Triumphus Biblicus, that the Materials and Principles of all Arts and Sciences may be fetched from the Scripture. It was impossible for him to publish so many Books, without making use of the Labours of others; but he borrowed too much from other Authors, whom he transcribed without any Scruple [C]. John Himmelius, a Divine of the Confession of Augsburg, and Divinity-Professor at Jena, is one of those who wrote against him [D]. Moreri was not acquainted with the Year of Alstedius's Death [E], and he had better have said nothing about it.

Digitized by Google

I must not omit, that he was a Millenarian. He published, in 1627, a Treatise De Mille Annis. He taught, that the Faithful shall reign, with JESUS CHRIST, upon Earth, a Thousand Years; after which will be the General Resurrection, and the last Judgment. He pretended, that This Reign would commence in the Year 1694. We are fully assured he was mistaken. His Son-in-law Bisterfeldius was of the same Opinion (e).

(a) The word sedulitas is precisely contained in Alstedius.

(b) Witte, Diar. Biogr. Tom. 1.

(c) It is in Folio, divided into 4 Tomes.

(d) Vossius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 326.

(e) Heidegg. Dissert. de Chiliasmo, pag. 652.

[A] His Encyclopædia found favour with the Roman Catholics.] Lorenzo Crasso places Alstedius among the great Men, whose Elogies he has published. It is very probable, that Moreri borrowed from thence the Incense, which he bestows upon Alstedius. I find the Reader is referred to a Work of Sorel (1), to be informed concerning this learned German. He must have been better known, and more esteemed than many others among the Roman Catholics. Father Lami, of the Oratory, is of Opinion, that Alstedius is almost the only one among all the Writers of Encyclopedias, and Systems of Sciences, who deserves to be read, and to keep his Rank in a choice Library (2). See the following Remark.

(1) Of the Perfection of a Christian, pag. 591. apud Konig, Bibl. p. 29.

(2) Dialogues on the Sciences, cited by Baillet, in his Jugements des Sçavans, Tom. 2. n. 269. p. 328.

[B] There are some good things in his Methods and Systems.] The following Quotation from Mr Baillet is borrowed by him from the anonymous German, who wrote the Bibliographia curiosa Historico-philologica. "Alstedius has indeed many good things; but "he is not exact enough in many Places: Nevertheless, upon his first Appearance, he was received by "the Public with great Applause, and he is of some "use to those, who, being destitute of other helps, "and not having the Authors, would acquire some "Knowledge of the Terms of each Profession and "Science. One cannot sufficiently praise his Patience "and Labour, and his Judgment and Choice of good "Authors, out of whom he made his Abridgments, "for they are not mere Scraps and unconnected Rhapsodies; but he lays down the Principles of Sciences and Arts with great Order, and endeavours to "be uniform every where, though some Pieces are "better than others, and some of them are of no "value, as his History, Chronology, &c. ------ "It must be confess'd, that he is often confus'd, by "endeavouring to be too clear; that he is too full "of Divisions and Subdivisions, and that he affects "a Method too much constrain'd (3)." Lorenzo Crasso says, that though there is much more of Labour, than Genius, in Alstedius's Works, yet they are esteemed, and that People admire his Industry, which gives him admittance into the Temple of Fame. "Con gloria del suo nome s'e ammirata la fatica fatta "nelle Storie, è nella Cronologia de' Tempi: le quali cose, quantunque in libri diversi di Scrittori illustri sacri e profani truovansi, è vi concorra in tale "raccoglimento piu sudore che ingegno, tuttavia l'ordine dato da Giovanni Errico alle sudette satiche "storiche è stato da gli huomini amatori delle anti-"chita, è dell' erudizioni assai commendato (4). ——

(3) Baillet, ubi supra.

(4) L. Crasso Elog. d'Huomini Letterati, p. 214.

"The great Pains he has taken in History and Chro-"nology, is much to the Reputation of his Name: "which Sciences, though they are to be met in seve-"ral Works of illustrious Authors, sacred and pro-"phane, and though more of Labour than Genius is "requisite in such Collections, nevertheless the Order "bestowed by John Henry, on the aboveseid Historical "Labours, has been sufficiently admired by the Lovers "of Antiquity and Learning."

[C] Whom he transcribed without any Scruple.] Read this Passage of Thomasius (5). Hunc in Paratitlis Theologicis quicquid de silentio sacrorum affert *, observo prope de verbo descripsisse è Casaubono †, quem nominari tamen etiam lectoris interat, ut sciret unde plura sibi haurienda forent. vereor autem ne quercum eandem alibi quoque excusserit, cum in ipso ad lectorem principio reperiam periodum unam alteramque dedicationis Casauboniæ. —— Whatever this Author advances, in his "Theological Titles, concerning the Silence of the Sa-"cred Writers, he has copied, I find, Word for Word "from Casaubon; whom it was the Reader's Interest "he should have nam'd, that he might know where to "have farther recourse. But I am afraid, he has "shaken the same Oak elsewhere; for, in the very be-"ginning of his Address to the Reader, I find a "Period or two Casaubon's Dedication.

(5) Thomasius de Plagio Literario, n. 354. pag. 155.

* Tit. Initiati, pag. 166, 167, 168.

† Exerc. 16. ad Baron. n. 43. p. 399.

[D] Himmelius —— is one of those, who wrote against him.] His Work is entituled Anti-Alstedius, sive examen Theologiæ Polemicæ Johannis Henrici Alstedii. Though this Remark should serve only to give the Title of one of Alstedius's best Works, it would not be altogether useless.

[E] Moreri was not acquainted with the Year of Alstedius's Death.] Alstedius, says he, died about the Year 1645, or 46; others say in the Year 1640, being the Fifty second Year of his Age. Two of the three Authors, whom he cites (6), say nothing of it. Lorenzo Crasso, who is the third, says only, that Alstedius published the four Tomes of his Encyclopædia, at the Age of Fifty two Years (7).

(6) Vossius & Zeiller.

(7) L. Crasso Elog. d'Huomini Letterati, Tom. 2. pag. 212.

ALTAEMPS (MARK) Son of a Sister of Pius IV, was one of the Cardinals, who presided in the Council of Trent. Wolfgang Altaemps, his Father, was a Count of the Empire in the Diocese of Constance. How splendid soever the Dignity of the Pope's Legate was in That Council, this Cardinal obtained it only by the Artifices of some ill affected Persons. The Borromeo's, related to the Pope in the same Degree with with him, desiring to remove him from Court, caused him to be sent to Trent (a), where he remained from the Month of January 1562, till about the Beginning of Spring 1563 [A]. The Pope recalled him, to raise Troops; for, hearing that the Dukes of Saxony and Wirtemberg, and the Landgrave of Hesse, were raising Forces, and that the Germans had a mind to plunder Rome, where they had found so great a Booty in the Year 1527; he was not willing to be surprized (b). This Cardinal was very much displeased with Pibrac's Speech. His Opinion was, that it ought to be strongly answered; and said that the Insolence of this Civilian ought to be restrained, who was accustomed to treat only with Persons of the meanest Rank (c). He was promoted to the Purple in the Year 1561, and, a little before his Legation, the Canons of Constance had chosen him for their Bishop. He had neither the Learning, nor Experience, requisite for presiding in a Council; but his Uncle, Pius IV, was not ignorant that the other Presidents would supply what was wanting in him (d), and would teach him the Intrigues of Oecumenical Councils. When That Pope sent him Nuncio to the Emperor Ferdinand in the Year 1560, he sent with him the famous Cornelius Musso, Bishop of Bitonto, as his Instructor (e). Altaemps was then Bishop of Cassano. That Family rose in Dignity afterwards; for we find a Duke of ALTAEMPS, who died in the Year 1620 (f). He was a Man of Learning; and, if I am not mistaken, it was He, who collected the Library, which was so long famous at Rome, under that Name, and which was not quite sold, when Father Mabillon travelled into Italy (g). This Duke of Altaemps's Name was John Angeli, and he published the Life of Pope Anicetus. Another Duke of ALTAEMPS, whose Name was Gaudentius, and who died in the Year 1677, was no less curious in Books, nor less learned. He published the Life of St Chrysostom, and the Persecuted Sanctity triumphant (b).

Digitized by Google

(a) See Amelot de la Houssaie, (who quotes a Letter of Mr de Lisle to the King, of the 5th of Dec. 1561.) in the Marginal Notes of his Version of Paolo's History of the Council of Trent, pag. 445.

(b) F. Paolo, lib. 7. pag. 648. of Amelot's Translation.

(c) Ibid. pag. 494.

(d) Pallavic. Hist. Concil. Trident. lib. 15. cap. 13. n. 10.

(e) Ibid. lib. 14. cap. 13.

(f) Witte, Diar. Biogr. Tom. 2. pag. 26.

(g) In 1688. See his Musæum Italicum, Tom. 1. pag. 78, 79.

(b) Witte, ib. pag. 116.

[A] Where he remained from the Month of January, 1562, 'till about the beginning of the Spring 1563.] Pallavicini reproved Father Paul for having said, that Cardinal Simonetta, and Cardinal Altaemps, were named the Pope's Legates both at one time, to be added to the Legates that were already named. He knew not, that Simonetta was honoured with the Legation of the Council, at the same time with Osius and Seripandus, several Months before Cardinal Altaemps was made their Colleague (1). He censures him for another thing; which is, his mentioning Osius and Seripandus, only when he is speaking of what happened a considerable time after their Legation. Such Faults are not very material; yet it cannot be thought wrong in a Censor, to take notice of them; since it is the Duty of an Historian to avoid them.

(1) Pallavic. Hist. Conc. Trid. l. 15. cap. 13. n. 11.

ALTENSTAIG (JOHN) Doctor of Divinity, lived in the XVIth Century. He was of Mindleheim, in Germany, and composed a Lexicon Theologicum, which is tolerably good [A].

[A] He composed a Lexicon Theologicum, which is tolerably good.] He dedicated it to the Bishop of Augsbourg, the first of October, 1517. Konig places the first Edition of it in 1519 (1). I never saw it; but I have met with the second, which is of Antwerp, for Peter Bellerus, in 1576, in Folio; with this Title; "Lexicon Theologicum continens Vocabulorum Descriptiones, Definitiones, & Interpretationes perutiles, Theologiæ Studiosis concinnatum. —— A Theological Lexicon, containing very useful Descriptions, Definitions, and Interpretations of Words, compiled for the Use of Students in Divinity."

(1) Konig. Bibl. p. 29.

ALTHAMERUS (ANDREW) a Lutheran Minister at Nuremberg, about the middle of the XVIth Century (a), published, not only some Works in Divinity [A], but likewise Notes on the Treatise of Tacitus, De Situ, Moribus, & Populis Germaniæ ——Of the Situation, Manners, and People of Germany. They were printed at Nuremberg in the Year 1529, in 4to (b), and at Amberg in the Year 1609, in 8vo (c); and they were inserted by Simon Schardius in the first Volume of the German Authors. He was so eager to reject the Doctrine of the Merit of Works, that he attacked the Apostle St James with the utmost Brutality (d). This gives us an Opportunity of examining a Passage of the Controversy between Grotius and Rivetus [B]. We shall see in this Disquisition, that our Althamerus assisted, in 1528, at the Conferences of Bern, which were the Forerunners of the Ecclesiastical Reformation in this Canton.

(a) Micræl. Hist. Eccles. pag. 734.

(b) Gesner, Biblioth. fol. 38. verso.

(c) Hertzil Biblioth. German.

(d) See Remark [B].

[A] Not only some Works in Divinity.] The Titles of them are; Conciliationes Locorum Scripturæ, quæ Specie tenus inter se pugnare videntur. Annotationes in D. Jacobi Epistolam. De Peccato Originis. De Sacramento Altaris. He composed likewise a Dictionary of the proper Names, which are to be met with in the Bible, Sylva Biblicorum Nominum, &c. This Work was printed at Basil, in 1535. The Conciliationes Locorum Scripturæ, was printed at Nuremberg, the same Year, and at Wittemberg, in the Year 1582. The Abridgment of Gesner takes notice of but these two Editions; but it is certain they were preceded by another, which appeared before the Year 1528 (1).

(1) Hospiniani Hist. Sacram. part. 2. pag. 84.

[B] An Opportunity of examining a Passage of the Controversy between Grotius and Rivetus.] The first Piece of this Part of their Dispute contains these Words (2): "Gaudeo D. Rivetum non accedere iis, "qui Jacobi Epistolam rejecerunt, quorum quidam "hoc amplius dixere, Mentiris Jacobe in caput "tuum; that is, I am pleased, that Rivetus does not "follow those, who reject the Epistles of St James, "among whom some go still farther, and in plain "Terms give St James the Lye." The second Piece is This: Rivetus demanded (3), Who are They, who talk in this manner? How many are They? and added, that, having searched among the Writings of the Jesuits, and other Controvertists, who eagerly collect Facts of this kind, whether the Protestants were ever reproached with a Blasphemy of this Nature, he had met with no such thing. The third Piece shews us, that Grotius mentioned no Author by Name, in his Reply to his Adversary (4), who had called upon him so expressly and warmly. This Silence made Rivetus conclude, that Grotius had no Author to alledge. Quod nunc Autores non indicet harum contumeliarum, ostendit se nullos habere (5). We find, by the fourth Piece, that Grotius, in rejoyning, cited the Words of Andrew Althamerus: "Is, qui Jacobum accusavit Mendacii, fuit Andreas "Althamerus

(2) Grotii Animadv. in Notas Riveti pag. 1029. Tom. 3. Oper. Riveti.

(3) Rivetii Examen Animadv. Grotii, pag. 1029. Tom. 3. Op. ejus.

(4) Grotii Votum pro Pace Eccles. ibid. pag. 1034.

(5) Rivetii Apologet. ibid. p. 1160.

Digitized by Google

" Althamerus (6). Liber editus est Argentorati, Anno " CIↃIↃXXVII. Verba ejus inter cætera sunt: Vult " nunc probare suam sententiam, sed directè contra scrip- " turam agit. Non possumus hic defendere Jacobum. Ci- " tat enim scripturas falso; & solus spiritui sancto, Legi, " Prophetis, Christo, Apostolisque omnibus, contradicit. " Testimonium ipsius vanum est. Uni ipsi testi non " esse credendum, supra annotavimus, præsertim cum " quo ipse Spiritus sanctus & tot testes veritatis dis- " sentiant. Credendum Multitudini. Paulus multo " dignius sanctiusque rem tractat. Si Abraham ex " operibus justificatus, habet quod glorietur, sed non " apud Deum; quid enim dicit scriptura? Abraham " credidit Deo, videlicet promissioni divinæ de semine; " & reputatum, scilicet quia credidit, illi ad justi- " tiam. Nonne quod ex filii immolatione justificatam " dicit, recte mentitus est in caput suum? Quinde- " cim enim annos ante immolatum Isaachum justifi- " catus fuit Abraham, etiam nondum nato Isaacho; " non ex circumcisione, neque filii immolatione, sed ex " sola Fide. Dicit enim scriptura, Credidit, &c. ut " nihil habet Jacobus ad quod refugiat. Nos Fidei " magistrum constituimus, & jam suis ipsissimis verbis " scimus, nescivisse quid sit Fides. Et in fine Libri; Ne " igitur succenseas nobis, Lector, si durius & vehementius " calamo quandoque in Autorem invecti sumus. Meretur " enim hoc Odium & hunc Spiritus vehementiam, dum " aliam à nobis perfectionem atque Justitiam conten- " dit, quam Fidei. —— He, who gave St James " the Lye, was Andrew Althamerus. His Book was " published at Strasbourg, in the Year 1527. His " Words, among others, are These. He then endea- " vours to confirm his Doctrine; but his Proof is " directly contrary to Scripture. We cannot here " vindicate St James. For he cites Scripture falsly, " and opposes his single Authority to That of the " Holy Ghost, the Law, the Prophets, Jesus Christ, " and all the Apostles. His Testimony is nothing. " I have shewn above, that his single Evidence is " not to be believed, especially when it clashes " with That of the Holy Ghost, and so many Wit- " nesses of the Truth. We must be governed by " Numbers. St Paul treats the Subject with greater " Dignity and Sanctity. For, if Abraham were ju- " stified by Works, he hath whereof to Glory, but " not before God. For what saith the Scripture? " Abraham believed God (to wit, the Divine Pro- " mise in relation to his Seed) and it was counted " to him (namely, his Faith) for Righteousness *. " Does not St James truly lie against his own Head, " in saying that he was justified by the offering up " of his Son? For Abraham was justified fifteen " Years before the intended Sacrifice of his Son " Isaac; even before Isaac was born; not by Cir- " cumcision, nor by the Sacrifice of his Son, but " by Faith alone. For the Scripture saith, He be- " lieved, &c. So that St James is left without Ex- " cuse. I formerly looked upon this Apostle as a " Rule of Faith; but am now convinced, from his " own Words, that he did not himself know what " Faith was. And at the end of his Book, Be not " angry with me, Reader, if I sometimes inveigh " too roughly and vehemently against this Author. " For he deserves these Reproaches, and this Indig- " nation of Mind, for requiring of us another kind " of Perfection and Justification than that of Faith."

(6) Grotii Defensio Apolog. Rivetiani, pag. 722. Opusc. Grotii Edit. Amstelod. apud Bleau, ann. 1679, in folio.

* Rom. iv. 2, 3.

The last Piece shall be, that Rivetus, finding at last an express Citation, answered (7), that it was insufficient; that Grotius had used the Plural Number; and that one is not many; unus non sunt multi. He condemns the Words of Althamerus; but he complains, that Grotius had not declared, that he was not a Calvinist. He proves, that He was a Lutheran; and charges him with having undertaken the Popish Cause, at the Conferences of Bern, and with having maintained the Doctrine of the Real Presence. " Qui " cum in disputatione Bernensi (8), quam secuta est " Reformatio Anni 1528, libera ei facta est dispu- " tandi copia, volens passus est se à parte Pontifi- " cia deligi, ut Oratoris munere in suggestu fun- " geretur, & carnalem Christi præsentiam in cœna " defenderet. —— At the Conference of Bern, which " was followed by the Reformation of the Year 1528, " tho' he had free Liberty of Disputation, yet he suf- " fered himself to be chosen by the Pope's Party, to " play the Orator in the Rostrum, and to defend the " corporeal Presence of Christ in the Eucharist." " His injurious Treatment of St James, concludes " Rivetus, does not in the least affect us. The whole " Disgrace of it recoils upon the Papists, and the " Lutherans, whose Cause he pleaded."

(7) Rivet. Grotian. Discuss. Διάλυσις, pag. 12. t. Oper. Tom. 3.

(8) He uses Hospinian's own Words, Hist. sacr. part. 2. p. 84. without citing them.

From what we have here produced, it is easy to judge; I. That Rivetus ingaged unnecessarily in an incidental Dispute. He might have passed by this Remark of Grotius, without any Prejudice to his Cause; and he might have been satisfied with demanding the Names of Those, who had the Boldness to treat an Apostle with such Indignity. II. That he was mistaken, in believing, that his Adversary could not name any such. III. That, by dint of importunity, he occasioned a Discovery of his own Ignorance in a Matter of Fact; the Knowledge of which might have been to the Credit of his Reading and his Library. IV. That he flies for Refuge to little Evasions, which only serve to prolong Disputes, and to multiply unnecessary Additions. It is certain, that, in common Speech, when we know that an Author has published any thing, it is very allowable to say, that Authors have advanced it. Nor are we obliged to produce more than one Witness; unless when we expressly say, that several Persons have cast such a Reproach. But this is not Grotius's manner of speaking; his Expression is indeterminate; quidam dixere, there are, who have said; or, some have said. He would have fully acquitted himself, tho' the Author, whom he cited, were not a Calvinist, but a Lutheran; and it is idle in Rivetus to alledge what passed in the Conferences of Bern. That is no Proof of Althamerus's being a Papist. We can only conclude from thence, that he was so opposite in Opinion to the Zuinglians, on the Doctrine of the Real Presence, that he made no Scruple of maintaing it, even in favour of Popery. If Rivetus was Self-content in this part of his Dispute, it is a Proof, that Controvertists know not how to distinguish between what is to the Purpose, and what is meer caviling.

ALTHUSIUS (John) a German Civilian, flourished near the End of the XVIth Century. He wrote a Book of Politics. Some Civilians of his Country are strangely angry with him, for maintaining, that the Sovereignty of States belongs to the People [A]. He wrote a Treatise De Jurisprudentia Romana, another De Civili Conversatione, another intituled Dicæologia, &c. I forgot to observe, in the former Editions,

[A] Some Civilians — are strangely angry with him for maintaining, that the Sovereignty of States belongs to the People.] Boeclerus maintains, that Althusius's Principle is only fit to break all the Bonds of Civil Society, and that his Work is so far from deserving to be recommended to Students, as is done by several Persons, that it rather deserves to be burnt. " Om- " nes reges nihil aliud esse quam Magistratus —— " Althusio inter solennia carmina placet, cujus Po- " litica non tradit sane, qui civitatis finis & felicitas " & tranquillitas obtineri debeat, sed quibus modis " omne vinculum societatis ac salutis civilis dissolvi " ac everti possit. Demagogica appelles merito; & " tamen, quia Jurisconsulti nomen præfert, & quæ- " dam subinde in ostentationem ejus scientiæ jacit, " commendari juventuti Academicæ audimus librum, " orco damnandum, judicio eorum qui venena à " cibis distinguere didicerunt (1). —— That all " Kings are nothing but Officers of the People —— " is Althusius's darling Principle; whose Book of Po- " litics is not designed to shew, how the End, the " Happiness, and Tranquility of a State is best to be " obtained, but in what manner every Tye of Society " and Civil Security may be dissolved, and overturned. " It may properly be called Democratical Politics; " and yet, because the Name of a Civilian is prefixed " to it, and there is here and there a pompous Dis- " play of that Science in it; the Book is, we hear, " recommended to the University Youth; though in the " Opinion of those, who have learned to distinguish " Poison

(1) Boecler. in Grotium de Jure Belli, lib. 1. cap. 3. n. 8. pag. 235.

Digitized by Google

Editions, that he was of the Proteſtant Religion; that, after having been Profeſſor of Law at Herborn, he had the Dignity of Syndic conferred upon him at Breme, and that the Jeſuits, in anſwering the Anti-Coton, placed him in the Liſt of thoſe Proteſtants, who have ſpoken diſreſpectfully of the Regal Power [B].

" Poiſon from wholeſome Food, it deſerves the ſevereſt " Cenſure." The learned Conringius's Opinion of it is as follows: " Fundamentum doctrinæ ſuæ politicæ " collocat in eo, quod ſumma Reip. cujuſvis jure " ſit penes ſolum populum: qui error peſtilens eſt, " & turbando orbi aptus (2). —— He lays the Foun- " dation of his Political Doctrine in this; that the " Sovereignty of every Republic is in the Hands of " the People; which is a contagious Error, and cal- " culated to diſturb the Repoſe of the World." Another German Writer expreſſes himſelf with more Force: " In claſſem iſtam, ſays he (3), referendi ſunt " illi politicorum qui majeſtatis πρῶτον ψεύδος " populum faciunt, inde politici populares; &, quia " jugulum omnium principum ac Regum petunt, " Monarchomachi dicti. Horum hominum nefanda " dogmata refertim habet Althuſius in ſua politica, " Vulcano publico edicto conſecranda. —— In this " Claſs we muſt rank thoſe Politicians, who make the " People the Source of all Majeſty; hence they are " called Popular Politicians; and, becauſe they would " cut the Throats all Princes and Kings, they are " called Anti-Royaliſts. Althuſius has made great " uſe of theſe Gentlemens wicked Doctrines in his " Politics; a Work, which deſerves to be publickly con- " demned to the Flames."

(2) Conring. de Civ. Prudent. c. 14.

(3) Meyer. in Analyſ. libri 3. Pollit. Ariſtot.

[B] The Jeſuits - - - - - placed him in the Liſt of thoſe Proteſtants, who have ſpoken diſrepectfully of the Regal Power.] I will give you the Words of Him, who preſented to the Queen-Mother an Apologetical Anſwer to the Anti-Coton; " After Hotto- " man, ſays he (4), let us add the Doctrines and expreſs Words of John Arthuſius (5), Doctor of " Law, in his Politics, methodically digeſted, and " printed at Herborn, in the Year 1603, in his Chapter of the Ephori; in which, to look no farther, " he aſſerts, among other things, that it is lawful " to dethrone a Tyrant, to take from him the Ad- " miniſtration of Affairs, with which he was in- " truſted; and even to put him to death, if no other " Remedy can be found, and to ſubſtitute another in " his Place." Althuſius's Words are theſe (6). " Ejuſmodi Tyrannum ab officio removere, adminiſtratione demandata privare, imo etiam, ſi aliter " contra vim ſe defendere non poſſunt, interficere, " & alium in ejus locum ſubſtituere, poſſunt."

(4) Réponſe. Apolog. à l'Anti coton p. 185, 180.

(5) It ſhould be Althuſius.

(6) Althuſii Politica methodicè digeſta, cap. 14.

ALTIERI. The Dictionary of Moreri mentions two Cardinals of this Name. The One died in the Year 1654; the Other was Pope Clement X. We may add to theſe two the Cardinal Altieri, who died at Rome, the 29th of June, 1698.

ALTILIUS (GABRIEL) born in the Kingdom of Naples, flouriſhed about the End of the XVth Century (a). He was chiefly eſteemed for his Latin Verſes, which ſhewed, that he cultivated polite Literature, and that he read the Ancients to great Advantage. This contributed to his Advancement in the Court of Ferdinand, King of Naples, which ſtill retained ſome thing of the good Taſte it had acquired in the Reign of King Alphonſus. He was choſen Preceptor to the young Prince Ferdinand [A]. It appears alſo, that he was employed in State-Affairs, and that he accompanied Jovian Pontanus to Rome, upon a Negotiation of Peace between King Ferdinand and Pope Innocent VIII (b). He had a great Share in the Friendſhip and Eſteem of Pontanus, as appears from the Writings of the latter (c). Sannazarius gave him likewiſe ſeveral Marks of his Eſteem in his Poems (d): Theſe two Authors are not the only Perſons, who have commended him [B]. One of Gabriel Altilius's fineſt Poems, is That, which he compoſed on the Marriage of Iſabella of Arragon [C]. One would ſcarce believe, that Latin Poetry raiſed him to the Prelature; but it is certain, that it greatly contributed to his obtaining the Biſhoprick of Policaſtro. Some find fault with him for neglecting the Muſes, after his Advancement, which had

(a) And not of the XIVth, as Moreri ſays.

(b) Pontanus Præf. Tractatus de Magnificentia.

(c) He wrote an Epitaph for Altilius, and dedicated to him his Treatiſe de Magnificentia. See likewiſe his Dialogue Ægidius, pag. 142.

(d) Eleg. 11. ver. 17. & Epigr. 7.

[A] He was choſen Preceptor to the young Prince Ferdinand.] This is what Paul Jovius meant, when he uſed this Expreſſion, junioris Ferdinandi regis (1). Ughelli makes uſe of it likewiſe (2). Toppi is of another Opinion: " Fu maeſtro, ſays he, di Re Ferdinando I. " d' Aragona, è Veſcovo di Policaſtro nel 1471 (3). " —— He was Preceptor of King Ferdinand I. of " Arragon, and Biſhop of Policaſtro, in 1471." I believe he is miſtaken. Ferdinand I. died in the Year 1494, being above ſeventy Years old: So that he muſt have been born about the Year 1424; and Altilius muſt have been his Preceptor about the Year 1440. The Preceptor of a King's Son is ſeldom very young; he muſt have had time to gain the Reputation of a Man of Learning: And doubtleſs King Alphonſus, who was himſelf learned, and ſurrounded with learned Men, would not have choſen Altilius, without full Proof of his Abilities. Upon this Suppoſition Altilius muſt have been thirty Years of Age, in 1440; but, at that time, he was ſcarce born. He lived but a little more than ſixty Years (4); and died in the Year 1501 (5).

(1) Jovius Elog. cap. 125.

(2) Ughelli Italia ſacra, Tom. 3. pag. 796.

(3) Toppi Bibliotheca Napoletana, pag. 101.

(4) Jovius in Elog. cap. 125.

(5) See below Citat. (17).

[B] Theſe two Authors are not the only Perſons, who have commended him.] Gyraldus mentions him greatly to his Advantage. Baſil Zanchius wrote ſeveral Verſes in praiſe of Altilius, which are to be found in the Delights of the Italian Poets. John Matthæus Toſcanus ſpeaks well of him both in Verſe and Proſe (6). But if any one is deſirous to ſee an Encomium upon his Wit and Diſpoſition of Mind, let him read Alexander ab Alexandro, who deſcribes at large the manner how he and ſome others were entertained by Altilius, when they went to wiſh him Joy of his Biſhoprick (7). He gave them a Supper more becoming his firſt Condition, that the Dignity of a Biſhop, with which he was then inveſted; he had not yet diſmiſt the Muſes, his firſt Miſtreſſes (ſuppoſing he ever diſmiſſed them); thus the Converſation turned upon ſome Verſes of Martial, which were ſung by a young Muſician.

(6) In Peplo Italiæ.

(7) Genial. dierum, lib. 5. cap. 1.

[C] One of Gabriel Altilius's fineſt Poems is That, which he compoſed on the Marriage of Iſabella of Arragon.] It was by This, and by his Elegies, that he acquired his Reputation. " Uſque adeo molliter ac " admirande in Elegis & Heroico carmine excelluit, " ſicuti ex Epithalamio Iſabellæ Aragoniæ perſpici " poteſt, ut Pontani atque Actii teſtimonio antiquis " vatibus æquaretur (8). —— He was ſo great a " Maſter of Elegiac and Heroic Poetry (as may be " ſeen by his Epithalamium of Iſabella of Arragon) " that, in the Opinion of Pontanus and Actius, he " was equal to the antient Poets." Julius Scaliger found too great a Profuſion of Thought and Expreſſion in his Epithalamium. His Opinion of it is this: " Gabriel Altilius Epithalamium cecinit longe opti- " mum, excellentiſſimum vero futurum, ſi ſibi ille " temperaſſet. Dum enim vult omnia dicere, affi- " cit auditorem aliquando faſtidio tanto, quanta in " aliis voluptate. Eſt enim nimius, quod vitium " illi genti eſt peculiare. Eſt enim totis illis Italiæ " tractibus perpetua loquendi fames (9). —— Gabriel " Altilius compoſed an excellent Epithalamium; which " however

(8) Jovius, ubi ſupra.

(9) Jul. Cæſar Scalig. Poetic. l. 6. pag. 736.

Digitized by Google

(*) See below the beginning of the Remark [D].

had been so serviceable to him [D]. They discover Ingratitude and Shamelessness (e) in the precipitate manner of his leaving them; and his Fault would seem unpardonable to them, had they not some Regard to the Excuses he might make, that Episcopacy required he should apply himself earnestly to the Study of Holy Writ. I shall endeavour to rectify what is said concerning the time of his Death (f). We find only the Epithalamium of Isabella of Arragon in the Collection of Gruterus, and in That of John Matthæus Tuscanus [E]. It is very probable that most of Altilius's other Verses are lost.

(f) See the End of Remark [D].

" however would have been much better, had he re-
" strained his Genius. For, by endeavouring to say
" every thing upon this Subject, he becomes as tedious
" to the Reader, as he is entertaining upon others.
" He is too diffuse; a Vice peculiar to his Nation;
" for in all that Tract of Italy they are never tired
" with talking." This is not very complaisant to the Neapolitans (10).

(10) See Remark [H] of the Article ALEXANDER AB ALEXANDRO, towards the End.

[D] Some find Fault with him for neglecting the Muses, —— which had been so serviceable to him.] 'Tis hard of Digestion, that a Bishop should be the Author of this Reproach, and that he should express it in such harsh Terms: " Is virtutis merito Policastri (ea
" urbs olim Buxentum fuit) antistes factus, à Musis,
" per quas profecerat, celeriter IMPUDENTERQUE
" discessit, MAGNO hercle INGRATI animi PIACULO,
" nisi ad spem non injustæ veniæ ob id culpa tege-
" retur, quod ad sacras literas nequaquam ordinis ob-
" litus tempestivè confugisset (11). —— Being raised,
" on Account of his Virtues, to the Bishoprick of Po-
" licastro (formerly Buxentum*), he quickly and*
" SHAMEFULLY deserted the Muses, his Benefactresses;
" Guilty, in this, of the HEINOUS CRIME of IN-
" GRATITUDE; unless he thought to screen himself
" from reproach, by pleading that, in consideration
" of his Order, he had opportunely applied himself to
" the Study of the Scriptures." See Mr Baillet's judicious Reflexions upon this (12). These four Verses of Latomus are not amiss.

(11) Paul Jovius, ubi supra

(12) Baillet Jugemens sur les Poet. Tom. 1. pag. 138. See also Tom. 3. pag. 82.

Audiit Altilius desertis transfuga Musis,
In quarum tabulis nobile nomen erat.
Sed quid peccavit, si demereatur, ut olim
Carminibus Phœbum, nunc pietate Deum?

Censors the Bard Altilius may accuse
Of base Desertion from his friendly Muse;
But where's the Crime,
If He, who in Apollo's Temple trod,
His Priest --- now serves in pious Prose his God?

Altilius would have been more to blame, if, after having obtained a Mitre by preaching, he had behaved like many others, who preach no more, after they are made Bishops. The reason is, because, to preserve this kind of Power, it is not necessary to continue the same Expedients, which are made use of to procure it (13). Paul Jovius is as unfortunate in Point of Fact. He pretends, that Altilius left off writing Verses, after his Promotion to a Bishoprick; and that the finest of his Poems is his Epithalamium of Isabella of Arragon (14). I make no doubt but this Isabella is she, who was contracted, the first of November 1472, to John Galeas Sforza, Duke of Milan. I cannot therefore persuade myself, that Altilius is guilty of the Desertion, with which he is charged. He was made a Bishop in 1471: now the best of his Poems was composed after this time: ought we therefore to complain that the Mitre made him abandon Parnassus? Observe, that He wrote this Epithalamium, not at the time of the Contract, but upon the Nuptials of Isabella of Arragon; that is, in the Year 1489 (15). This is proved by the first Lines of it.

(13) Sallust says, Imperium facile iis artibus retinetur, quibus initio partum est. ---- Power is easily kept up by the same Arts, by which it is at first obtained.

(14) Jovius in Elog. c. 125.

(15) Mr de la Monnoie communicated this Remark to me.

Purpureos jam læta sinus Tithonia Conjux
Extulerat, roseoque diem patefecerat Ortu,
Cœruleum tremulo percurrens lumine pontum,
Qui cupido sua vota viro DESPONSAQUE DUDUM
Connubia, OPTATOSQUE locos & gaudia ferret.

Aurora now, from Tithon rising gay,
Blush'd in the Rosy East, and gave the Day;
Whilst trembling Beams upon the Ocean play;
The Day, which to the Happy Bridegroom's Arms
Consigns the PROMIS'D Fair, with all her Charms.

By this we may convict the Abbot Ughelli of a gross Mistake; who says, that Altilius died in his Bishoprick of Policastro, in the Year 1484 (16). It may be proved, that he did not die 'till about the Year 1501; for Jovian Pontanus observes, in mentioning the News of his Death, that Sannazarius was upon the point of going into France with King Frederic (17).

(16) Ughelli Ital. sacr. p. 796.

(17) Jov. Pontan. in Dial. Ægidius p. 1471 1487. Mr de la Monnoie shewed me this.

[E] We find only the Epithalamium in the Collection of Gruterus, and That of J. M. Tuscanus.] I understand by this Collection the Work, entituled Deliciæ C C. Italorum Poëtarum, collectore Ranutio Ghero. The Collection of John Matthæus Tuscanus is entituled, Carmina illustrium poëtarum Italorum. This Author says, in his Peplum, that he had only read the Epithalamium, and some few Epigrams of Altilius. He, who procured a new Edition of Sannazarius's [*] Latin Poems, in 1689, and illustrated them with Notes, observes, that he does not remember to have seen any printed Pieces of Altilius, but the Epithalamium, and an Epigram; from whence he infers, that many of them are lost, since Paul Jovius mentions this Poet's Elogies, and Sannazarius ascribes some Odes to him (18). To repair this Loss in some measure, he has given us, in the Notes on Sannazarius, three or four Pieces of Altilius, which he had in Manuscript. Toppi mentions three Pieces of Altilius inserted " ne' fiori delle Rime de' Poëti
" illustri raccolti & ordinati da Girolamo Ruscelli,
" stampati in Venetia, nel 1558. in 8vo. —— In
" the Poetical Flowers of the celebrated Poets col-
" lected and disposed by William Ruscelli, and printed
" at Venice, in 1558, in 8vo." These three Pieces are, Gabrielis Altilii lamentatio, Ejusdem Epithalamium, Ejusdem Elegia.

(18) Notæ in Sannazar. pag. 184.

(19) Toppi, Biblioth. Napolet. pag. 102.

[*] [It was the late Mr Brockhusius. REM. CRIT.]

ALTINGIUS (HENRY) Professor of Divinity at Heidelberg, and at Groningen, was born at Embden, the 17th of February 1583. His Family had been a long time very considerable in Friesland. He was designed, from the Cradle, for an Office, wherein his Father had signalized himself [A], I mean the sacred Ministry. For this end

[A] An Office wherein his Father had signalized himself.] His Name was Menso Altingius; and he was the Grandson of another Menso, who was given in Hostage to the Duke of Guelderland by the States of Drent in the Year 1523. Another Menso Altingius, Great Grandfather to Him, who was given in Hostage, had been Counsellor to Reinold the Fat, Duke of Guelderland, and retired into the Country of Drent, in the Year 1361 (1). Menso Altingius, the Minister, was the first, who, with two others, preached the Reformation in the Territory of Groningen, about the Year 1566, during the Tyranny of the Duke of Alba, Sub ipsa Albani ducis grassante Tyrannide (2). He was also the first Minister, who preached in the great Church of Groningen, after the Reduction of that Place to the Power of the States-General, in the Year 1594. He served the Church of Embden thirty eight Years faithfully, and opposed, with great Courage, the Fury of the Anabaptists, and the Plots of the Ubiquitarians. He died, the seventh of October 1612, the same Day that his Son and Abraham Scultetus were in danger of being cast away on the Lake of Harlem. " Subita ac pro-
" cellosa coorta tempestate, naufragio ac submersioni
" proximi (Scultetus & Altingius) ægrè tandem,
" toto corpore madentes, salve tamen, divina cle-
" mentia

(1) Vita Jacobi Alting.

(2) I must acquaint the Reader, that the Duke of Alba did not arrive in the Low-Countries before 1567; and therefore the Author of Henry Altingius's Life has not been so exact in this Particular, as he should have been.

Digitized by Google

end he was sent very early to the Schools, and, after he had acquired Classical Learning, and gone thro' a Course of Philosophy at Groningen, he was sent into Germany in the Year 1602. He was three Years at Herborn, where he made so great a Progress under the famous Piscator, and under Matthias Martinius, and William Zepperus, that he obtained leave to teach Philosophy and Divinity. He was preparing to travel into Switzerland and France, when he was made Preceptor to three young Counts (a) who studied at Sedan, with the Electoral Prince Palatine. He entered upon this Employ, the beginning of September 1605. The Storm, which threatened the Duke of Boüillon from Henry IV, and which was attended with no Consequence, induced the Electoral Prince to leave Sedan, with these young Lords, in the Year 1606. Altingius followed them to Heidelberg, where he continued to instruct the three young Counts. He was also admitted to read some Geographical and Historical Lectures to the Electoral Prince, and became his sole Preceptor in the Year 1608. We may meet with Proofs of this in the Vatican Library [B]. He accompanied him to Sedan in this Quality, and instructed him in so accomplished a manner, that the young Prince, upon his Return to Heidelberg, in 1610, being interrogated on all Points of Religion before the Duke of Deux Ponts, Administrator of the Electorate, and several other Persons of Note, answered very pertinently, and in Latin. He was one of those, who was chosen to accompany the young Elector into England, in the Year 1612, where he became acquainted with George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury; Dr King, Bishop of London; and Dr Hakwell, Preceptor of the Prince of Wales. He had likewise the Honour to converse with King James. The Marriage of the Elector with the Princess of England being celebrated in London in the Month of February 1613 (b), Altingius went before with his former Pupils, and arrived at Heidelberg, the First of April. In the Month of August following, he was made Professor of Divinity Common Places; and, because he could not preside in the Disputes, without being Doctor of Divinity, he took that Degree in the Month of November, with the usual Ceremonies. In 1616, he had a laborious Office conferred upon him, which was the Direction of the Seminary, if I may be permitted so to call the College of Wisdom at Heidelberg. He was offered the Professorship, vacant by the Death of Coppenius, in the Year 1618, which was the second Professorship in the Faculty of Divinity; but he refused it, and procured it for Scultetus. He gave great Proofs of his Learning in the Synod of Dort, whither he was sent with two other Deputies of the Palatinate (c). It was at that time that the Degree of Doctor, which the University of Leyden had suffered to be extinct, was revived. Altingius solemnly created the Professor, John Polyander, Licentiate in Divinity, who afterwards received his Doctor's Degree from Scultetus, by which means he became invested with the Authority requisite for conferring the Degree of Doctor on his Colleagues. Altingius, no doubt, entertained great Expectations a little after his Return to Heidelberg. The Troubles of Bohemia gave a Crown to the Elector Palatine; but these happy Beginnings were soon attended with a dreadful Ruin. Tilly took Heidelberg by Assault, in the Month of September, 1622, and suffered all imaginable Disorders to be committed in it [C]. Altingius, having escaped the Fury of the Soldiers, as it were by Miracle [D], followed his Family, which he had sent some time

(a) The Counts of Nassau, Solms, and Hienberg.

(b) Konig does not allow him a proper time, when he says vixit anno 1613. His most flourishing State was not then arrived.

(c) Abraham Scultetus, and Paul Tussanus. The latter was deputed by the Ecclesiastical Senate, and the other two by the University.

(3) Vit. Hen. Altingii. " mentia in proximam ripam evaserunt (3). —— A " sudden and stormy Tempest arising, They (Scultetus " and Altingius) were in danger of being cast away " and drowned; but, at last, they providentially es- " caped, drenched and wet to the Skin, on the next " Shore." His Life, written at large by Ubbo Emmius, is among the Papers of his Heirs (4).

(4) Vit. Jacobi Alting.

[B] We may meet with Proofs of This in the Vatican Library.] The Exercises of the King of Bohemia, corrected by Altingius, are preserved there, and shewn to Travellers, as the Author of That Professor's Life informs us. He adds, that these Monuments deserve as much to be shewn to the Curious, as most Relicks which they see. " Hujus magisterii " ejus ne unquam apud posteros intestata queat esse " industria, vel Roma, quod miremur, faciet, quæ in " Bibliotheca Vaticana inter Heidelbergensia cimelia, " dicam an spolia, ostentat themata & exercitia styli " Regis Bohemiæ Altingii manu emendata, eruditis " peregrinatoribus minimeque superstitiosis visenda, " atque non minus credo, quàm pleræque ipsorum " reliquiæ ἀξιοθέατα, digna spectatu (5).

(5) Vita Hen. Altingii.

[C] Suffered all imaginable Disorders to be committed.] They plunder'd, they ravish'd, they kill'd, they tortur'd; in a Word, they committed every Outrage, which the Fury of Soldiers, animated by a false Zeal for Religion, is capable of. " Urbs —— impetu & " vi capta, omniaque dira exempla passa direptionis, " lanienæ, libidinis, quæ militaris licentia, victoris " insolentia, odium religionis, barbarorum Croatarum " feritas comminisci potuere, aut patrare —— Ea " nocte insomni & mœsta, inter lamenta & ejulatus, " quibus omnia undique perstrepebant, aut sequioris " sexus vim patientis, aut virorum ejuuleis subdito- " rum, ac per varia tormenta ac vulnere lenta citave " morte affectorum, &c. (6) —— The Town was taken " by Assault; and every dreadful Instance was per- " mitted, of Plunder, Butchery, and Lust, which the " Licentiousness of an Army, the Insolence of a Con- " queror, religious Hatred, and the Brutality of bar- " barous Croatians, could contrive or perpetrate. —— " In that sleepless and calamitous Night, amidst the " Cries and Groans, which were heard on all Sides, " either of violated Women, or Men suffering variety " of Tortures, some dying a quick, some a lingring " Death, &c." These are the usual Fruits of War; enough to make those tremble, who undertake to advise it, to prevent Evils, which, perhaps, may never happen, and which, at the worst, would often be less than those, which necessarily follow a Rupture. I shall have occasion, more than once, to remark the Anguish of Mind, to which great Commanders have been reduced, when their Consciences have reproached them with the Ravages they have occasioned.

(6) Ex Vita Henr. Alting.

[D] Having escaped the Fury of the Soldiers, as it were by Miracle.] The Circumstances of his Escape deserve to be related. He was in his Closet, when he heard that the Enemy, being Masters of the City, began to plunder it. He bolted his Door, and betook himself to Prayer. One of his Friends, accompanied by two Soldiers, came to him, and advised him to retire, by the Back-door, to the Chancellor's House, which was put under a strong Guard; Count Tilly intending to secure all the Papers, which were there. The time before to Heilbron. He met it at Schorndorf; where with much Difficulty he abode a few Months: for the Lutheran Miniſters put in practice the Doctrine of Non-Toleration againſt him [E]. In the Year 1623, he retired with his Family to Embden, and went from thence to wait upon the King of Bohemia at the Hague. This Prince retained him as Preceptor to his eldeſt Son (d), and would not permit him to ſerve the Church of Embden, which deſired him for their Miniſter, nor the Univerſity of Franeker, which offered him, in the Year 1625, the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity, vacant by the Death of Sibrandus Lubbertus. This Prince was prevailed upon, with great Difficulty, to give him leave, the next Year, to accept of a Profeſſorſhip of Divinty at Groningen. Altingius took Poſſeſſion of it, the ſixteenth of June 1627, and kept it 'till he died. It is true, that, in 1633, he was fully reſolved to leave Groningen for Leyden; but it was upon this Condition, that the States of Groningen ſhould conſent to it, which they refuſed to do. It is true likewiſe, that he liſtened to the Propoſals, which Prince Lewis Philip (e) made him in 1634, to come and re-eſtabliſh the Univerſity of Heidelberg, and the Churches of the Palatinate; and that he was already arrived at Francfort, through many Dangers; but this Deſign proved abortive by reaſon of the Battel of Norlingen, which the Imperialiſts won. He was obliged to return to Groningen through By-ways. It does not appear, that he had any Thoughts afterwards of removing to any other Place. The laſt Years of his Life were full of Trouble; Grief and Diſeaſes gave him great Uneaſineſs. He was ſo afflicted at the Death of his eldeſt Daughter in 1639, that he fell into an obſtinate Melancholy, which brought him into a Quartan-Ague, of which he was with great Difficulty cured, though not perfectly; for the Remains of it turned to a Lethargy in 1641. Scarce had the Phyſicians, by repeated Applications, removed this Diſtemper, when a domeſtic Affliction came upon him, which occaſioned his bodily Infirmities to return upon him ſtronger than ever. Altingius loſt his Wife in the Year 1643, and grieved ſo much for her, that he was no longer able to overcome his Melancholy. From this time to the Day of his Death his Infirmities

Digitized by Google

(d) He was cut-away in the Sea of Harlem, Jan. 1629.

(e) He was Adminiſtrator of the Palatinate, and, in 1633, forced to make Altingius Profeſſor of Divinity, and Eccleſiaſtical Senator.

continued

The Lieutenant Colonel of the Regiment of Hohenzollern guarded this Houſe: With this Battle-axe, ſaid he, I have killed ten Men this Day; Doctor Altingius ſhould ſoon be the eleventh, if I knew where he lies hid: Who are you? continued he, directing his Diſcourſe to the Doctor. Altingius was not ſo confounded, but he readily replied; I was Teacher in the College of Wiſdom; an Anſwer not the fartheſt from Truth. The Author of his Elogium compares this Anſwer to that, which St Athanaſius made, "Sanè "ille Vultus, ille Habitus, ille Sermo, is rerum ar- "ticulus, quemvis alium percellere poterat: at noſter "imperterritus, ſolerti tamen uſus reſponſo, nec "aperte ſe negavit Altingium, nec tamen intempeſtive "ſe prodidit, eadem fere qua olim in caſu ſimili S. A- "thanaſius dexteritate uſus, Ego, (inquit) Ludimagi- "ſter fui in Collegio Sapientiæ. —— In truth, ſuch "a Look, ſuch a Mein, and ſuch Language, might "have confounded any one elſe: But our Hero, undiſ- "may'd, returned, however, an artful Anſwer; nei- "ther poſitively denying that he was Altingius, nor "unſeaſonably betraying himſelf; in which he had re- "courſe to the ſame Artifice, which was put in practice, "in a like Caſe, by St Athanaſius. I was a School- "maſter, ſays he, in the College of Wiſdom." The Lieutenant Colonel promiſed to ſave him. The next Day the Jeſuits took Poſſeſſion of the Houſe, and ſent away this Officer ſo ſuddenly, that he had not time to enquire after his Teacher of the College of Wiſdom. Thus Altingius found himſelf in the Hands of the Jeſuits; but he hid himſelf in a Garret; and, by good Fortune, a Cook of the Electoral Court was employed by Count Tilly, whoſe Kitchen was in the Chancellor's Houſe. This Man privately convey'd Victuals to Altingius in the Garret, and even gave him an Opportunity of going to ſee what paſt at his own Houſe, attended by three Soldiers of the Bavarian Army for his Guard. Altingius found his Houſe in great Diſorder, and his Cloſet in the Power of a Captain; who told him, either in a bantering way, or out of Civility, that he gave him leave to carry away what Book he pleaſed. He declined the Offer, and only anſwered, that, if thoſe things belonged to him, he deſired God would give him a longer Poſſeſſion of them, than their firſt Maſter had. Altingius ran many Dangers in his return; and, after three Days, Tilly gave him leave to retire. I have read, ſomewhere, that, had not Altingius been afraid of being thought a Plagiary, he might have ſaved many Books of the Electoral Library; and that he had removed many of them to the College of Wiſdom; but I confeſs I do not underſtand this; I find a Contradiction in it. If he convey'd no Books out of the Electoral Library into his own Cloſet, for fear of being accounted a Plagiary; why do you ſay, that he carried away ſeveral of them to the College of Wiſdom, and that he might have ſaved many? Beſides, according to the Author of his Life, he was permitted only to carry away one Volume. Read the following Paſſage. "Hunc (Quin- "tilianum) & alios illius Bibliothecæ libros ſua manu "in Collegio Sapientiæ exceperat Henricus Altingius, "atque ex communi illo incendio Bavarico eripuiſſet, "niſi ſuis reculis timuiſſet, & ne plagiarius haberetur, "ſi antiquus liber in ejus ſupellectile reperiretur, ve- "ritus fuiſſet (7). —— Henry Altingius had picked "out this (Quintilian) and other Books of that Library, "with his own Hands, in the College of Wiſdom; "and might have ſaved them from that general Bava- "rian Conflagration, had he not been afraid of paſ- "ſing for a Plagiary, if the ancient Copy was found "in his Poſſeſſion."

(7) Lomeier de Bibliothe. pag. 278. I know not whether a Man may be called a Plagiary, who ſteals, not the Thoughts of an Author, but a Book or a Volume in kind, without publiſhing it in his own Name.

[E] The Lutheran Miniſters put in practice the Doctrine of Non-Toleration againſt him.] At the Requeſt of the Elect'reſs, he obtained leave of the Duke of Wirtemberg to reſide at Schorndorf. He continued there 'till the Month of February, which followed the Deſolation of the Palatinate. The Lutheran Miniſters murmured at his living there, and at the Permiſſion, which the Duke had given him; the Reaſon of their Diſcontent was, that Altingius was a Profeſſor of Heidelberg. "Ibi ad Februarium uſque hæſit, fa- "cultate hac per ſereniſſimam Electricem impetrata "à Duce Wirtembergico, cujus alias Miniſtri Lu- "therani, quaſi Ponti Axeni accolæ, aut aves Dio- "medeæ, quæ ſolos ſocios gratanter accipiunt, id ſe- "rebant ægerrime, non alia de cauſa quàm quod Al- "tingius Profeſſor eſſet Heidelbergenſis (8). ------ "He continued there 'till February, having obtained "leave from the Duke of Wirtemberg, by means of "the Serene Elect'reſs; which was taken ill by the "Lutheran Miniſters, for no other Reaſon, but becauſe "Altingius was Profeſſor at Heidelberg, reſembling "in this the People bordering on the Euxine Sea, or "Diomedes's Birds, who receive joyfully only their "Fellows." I believe they would have more ſtrictly obſerved the Laws of Hoſpitality towards a Merchant of the Palatinate, or towards a Calviniſt Profeſſor of a very remote Country, than towards a Profeſſor of Heidelberg. The Palatinate was near the Dutchy of Wirtemberg; the Profeſſors of Tubingen, and thoſe of Heidelberg, frequently attack'd each other in Diſputations, and Polemical Writings. Behold the Source of Theological and Profeſſorial Enmity! But after all, we cannot excuſe their ill Treatment of Altingius. He had eſcaped from the Popiſh Flames; the Injuries he had received from the com-

(8) Vita Altingii.

Digitized by Google

continued to increaſe. He died chriſtianly, and devoutly, on the Twenty fifth of Auguſt, 1644. He was a Man of great Merit. The Books he compoſed [F] are a Proof of his Learning, and his Application to the Diſcharge of the Academical Duties; and it is well known, that he employed his Abilities other ways, in ſerving his Neighbours. He went to ſee the King of Bohemia every Year, and reviewed the Studies of the Royal Family. He took a great deal of Pains in the Collections, which were made every where in the Proteſtant Countries for the Churches of Germany, and particularly for thoſe of the Palatinate. He was one of the three Commiſſioners for the Collections from England, and diſpoſed of the Alms of Lewis de Geer. I omit the two conſiderable Commiſſions he was charged with; one relating to the Reviſal, which was made at Leyden, of the new Dutch Tranſlation of the Scripture, and the other relating to the Viſitation of the County of Steinfurt. He had Colleagues in the firſt; but he was ſole Inſpector-General in the ſecond; the Count of Bentheim having ſent for him to make Inquiſition againſt Socinianiſm, which threatened his Country, and to regulate the Churches. Altingius's Elogy ſays, that he was not a quarrelſome Divine [G]; he did not ſpend his Time in trifling, inſignificant, Scruples; he was not fond of Novelty; he was zealous for the antient Doctrine; an Enemy to the Subtilties of the Schools; and relied only on the Scripture [H]. All Perſons of his Profeſſion ought to imitate his Conduct in the Management of their domeſtic Affairs [I]. They were ſpoken of no otherwiſe, than as being, in general, right. They afforded no other Topic for Converſation. He married at Heidelberg in the Year 1614, and had ſeven Children, of which one Daughter and two Sons ſurvived him. The eldeſt was Profeſſor of the Civil Law at Deventer (f). The following Article treats of the other.

(f) Taken from James Altingius's Life, among thoſe of the Profeſſors of Groningen, printed in Folio, in 1654.

mon Enemy, ſhould have ſerved as a powerful Recommendation of him; his Belief did not differ from that of Wirtemberg, but in things not eſſential. If Men muſt hate and perſecute each other for Religion, they ſhould wait, at leaſt, 'till they are like the People of Egypt, ſome in the Service of one God, and ſome in the Service of quite a different God.

> Inter finitimos vetus atque antiqua ſimultas,
> Immortale odium, & nunquam ſanabile Vulnus,
> Ardet adhuc Ombos, & Tentyra, ſummus utrinque
> Inde furor vulgo, quod numina vicinorum
> Odit uterque locus, quum ſolos credit habendos
> Eſſe deos, quos ipſe colit (9).

(9) Juvenal. Sat. xv. ver. 33.

> Ombus and Tentyr, neighb'ring Towns, of late
> Broke into Outrage of deep-feſter'd Hate.
> A Grudge in both, time out of mind, begun,
> And mutually bequeath'd from Sire to Son.
> Religious Spite, and pious Spleen, bred firſt
> This Quarrel, which ſo long the Bigots nurſt.
> Each calls the other's God a ſenſeleſs Stock,
> His own Divine; tho' from the ſelf-ſame Block
> One Carver fram'd them. TATE.

Thus we ſee, that the Promoters of Eccleſiaſtical Wars always ſuppoſe, that their religious Diſputes are of the greateſt Conſequence. It is a Gangrene, ſay they, it is undermining the Foundations of Religion.

[F] The Books he compos'd.] Thoſe, which have been publiſhed, are as follows. Notæ in Decadem problematum Johannes Behm, de glorioſo Dei & beatorum cœlo, Heidelbergæ, 1618. Loci communes cum didactici tum elenctici: Problemata tam theoretica quàm practica: Explicatio Catecheſeos Palatinæ cum vindiciis ab Arminianis & Socinianis, Amſtelodami, 1646, in 3 Volumes. Exegeſis Auguſtanæ Confeſſionis unà cum ſyllabo controverſiarum Lutheranarum, Amſtelodami, 1647. Methodus Theologiæ Didacticæ & Catechcticæ, Amſtelodami, 1650. Thoſe, which are not publiſhed, are more in Number, and ſome of them are imperfect: The Liſt of them is to be ſeen at the end of the Author's Life. I find there, that the Medulla Hiſtoriæ Prophanæ, publiſhed by Daniel Pareus, is a Work of our Altingius. It is a Plagiariſm, which has not been obſerved by Thomaſius, nor Mr Almeloveen (10). The Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Palatinate, from the Reformation down to the Adminiſtrator John Caſimir, is one of the moſt conſiderable among the Manuſcript Works of Altingius.

(10) He has publiſhed a Catalogue of the Plagiaries at the End of his Amœnitates Theologico-Philologicæ, Amſt. 1694.

[G] He was not a quarrelſome Divine.] I ſhall ſet down the very Words of his Hiſtorian. "Alienus "à jurgiis & vitilitigiis cuminiſectorum, ab iis diſtin- "ctiunculis & ineptiis Sophiſtarum, quibus myſteria "filutis potius implicantur quàm explicantur; à ſcru- "puloſitatibus præciſiſtarum, qui nodum quærunt in "ſcirpo, colant culicem, camelum deglutientes (11). (11) Vit. Jacobi Alting.
"------ He avoided all Quarrels and Diſputes about "Trifles, together with the idle Diſtinctions of the "Sophiſts, in which the Myſteries of Salvation are "rather taken for granted, than explained; likewiſe "the ſcrupulous Behaviour of the Fanatics, who carry "Religion to Superſtition, ſtrain out a Gnat, and ſwal- "low a Camel." The Sect of the Fanatics made a noiſe in Holland, about forty Years ago (12). It is very well characteriſed by theſe Words; they ſtrain out a Gnat, and ſwallow a Camel *; they open a Door to Diſputes, which ſerve only to furniſh the Prophane and Libertine with Arms. To go on; "Ab "omni denique καινωφονία & novatione in Theolo- "gicis, quaſi illud ſemper Tertulliani tenens, primum "quodque veriſſimum. —— Laſtly, he avoided all In- "novations in Divinity, adhering always to that Ma- "xim of Tertullian, The firſt is the trueſt." There is no doubt, but that the love of Novelty is a Plague, which, having thrown Univerſities and Synods into a Flame, ſhakes and diſorders a State, and ſometimes overthrows it: So that we cannot too much commend thoſe Profeſſors, who recommend to their Pupils, to avoid this Spirit of Innovation. I confeſs, the Care, which is taken to recommend the Obſervation of the ancient and commonly received Doctrine, ſeems to imply a Principle of Authority in the Church, which is conſtantly rejected by the Proteſtants, when they have occaſion to diſpute with the Roman Catholics. But this ought not to diſcourage any one from preventing Innovations; for if a Reaſon were never to be made uſe of, 'till it were free from all Difficulties, every thing would be at a ſtand. (12) I write this in 1698.

* See REM. CRIT. below.

[Give me leave to remark here, an Error in our Engliſh Verſion of this proverbial Saying. We render it ſtrain AT a Gnat, and ſwallow a Camel; whereas both the Greek Term διυλίζω, and the Latin Colo, ſignifie to STRAIN OUT any thing, out of a Cup, or drinking Veſſel, for inſtance, into which a Gnat or other Inſect may have fallen. REM. CRIT.]

[H] An Enemy to the Subtilties of the Schools, and relied only on the Scripture.] See what follows: "Theo- "logiam probabat ac tuebatur ſolidam ac maſculam, "non ex lacunis Scholaſticorum, etſi illarum inex- "pertus non eſſet, ſed ex fontibus Siloë & Scriptura- "rum derivatam; ut gloriæ ſibi duceret, ſe ab im- "peritis nonnullis ac naſutis Palæmonibus traduci, "tanquam Theologum Scripturarum & Biblicum (13). (13) Vita Altingii.
"—— He approved of, and maintained, a ſound and "manly Divinity, not derived from the ſtanding Pools "of the Schoolmen, though he was not unacquainted "with them, but from the running Brooks of Siloë, "and the Scriptures; inſomuch that he thought it an "Honour to be traduced by ignorant and ſcoffing Gram- "marians, as a Scriptural Bible-Divine."

[I] Perſons of his Profeſſion ought to imitate his Conduct, in the management of their domeſtic Affairs.] It was only known, that no one knew the Tranſacti-ons of his Family, farther than that all things were done decently, and according to the fear of God. " Hinc in familia ejus omnia semper pacata, omnia " ordinata, de qua hoc solum sciretur, quod à nemi- " ne sciretur quid in illa fieret, nisi quod piè, com- " posite, decenter omnia fieri neminem lateret (14)." This is much better than that whatever is said or done in a Minister's House should be the Subject of public Conversation. Such a Piece of News was talk'd of there this Morning, says one (15); last Night such a Reflexion of a News-Writer was controverted there, will another say; he may excuse himself as Adam did, says a third, and say, The Wife whom thou gavest me, made me do it. What! says a fourth, you only heard this Circumstance at that Place; I mistrust it; it is an ill Office of Intelligence: The Nympha loquax, who presides there, adds what she pleases to Relations: Give me none of her Glosses, or her Commentaries; I appeal to the Text, how uncertain soever it may be. It can be no wonder, that Altingius was so inconsolable after the Death of his Spouse, if it be true, as his Historian Relates, that he lived near thirty Years with her, without any Complaint or Quarrel. Cum ea per annos prope 30 fine rixa fine querela conjunctissime vixit (16). Few Persons can make this boast, and complain, that they are ignorant, whether the Effects of Reconciliation are as sweet in Marriage, as in Gallantry.

Digitized by Google

(14) Ibid.

(15) Compare with this the Remark [N] of the Art. GRUTERUS.

(16) Ibid.

Amantium iræ amoris redintegratio est (17).

Quarrels of Lovers only prove
New Fewel to the Fire of Love.

(17) Ter. Andr. Act. 3. Sc. 3. ver. 23.

ALTINGIUS (JAMES) Son of the preceding, was Professor of Divinity at Groningen. He was born at Heidelberg on the Twenty seventh of September 1618, during his Father's Deputation to the Synod of Dort. His Childhood was a perpetual change of Place [A]. He went thro' his Studies at Groningen with great Success; and, having a great Inclination to the Oriental Languages, he went to Embden, in the Year 1638, to study under Rabbi Gumprecht Ben-Abraham. He went into England, in the Year 1640; where he made himself known to the greatest Men: he preached there, and was admitted a Priest of the Church of England by the learned John Prideaux Bishop of Worcester. He had once resolved to pass his Life there; but he accepted the Hebrew Professorship, vacant by the Death of Gomarus, at Groningen. He was installed there, the thirteenth of January 1643, the same Day that Samuel Des Marets was installed in the Professorship of Divinity, which the same Gomarus had exercised. Altingius's Titles and Offices increased with Time; He was admitted Doctor of Philosophy, the Twenty first of October 1645; Academical Preacher in the Year 1647; and Doctor and Professor of Divinity in 1667. He travelled twice to Heidelberg; once in the Year 1651, and afterward in the Year 1662, and had received a thousand Marks of Esteem from the Elector Palatine Charles Lewis; who sollicited him several times to accept a Professorship of Divinity there; but he civilly declined it. He soon quarrelled with Samuel Des Marets, his Colleague, and it was almost impossible it should be otherwise; since their Method of teaching was quite different, nor did they agree in Principles on several Points. Altingius applied himself to the Scripture, without any Mixture of Scholastic Divinity; He was in the full Career of Glory; he still pressed forward, and wanted neither Wit nor Learning to support his Opinions. The first Lectures, which he read, at his own House, on the Catechism, drew so many Auditors, that, for want of Room in his Chamber, he was obliged to make use of the University Auditory. He had most of the Foreign Students on his side. His Colleague accustomed himself to the Distinctions and Method of the Schoolmen; he had been a long time famous; he published many Books, had a ready Wit, and great Learning; and the Students in Divinity of that Country applied themselves to him, as the surest way to obtain a Church; for all the Parishes were served by Ministers, who had studied according to his Method. This was more than sufficient to raise, and keep up a Division, tho' Temper were not concerned in it. Altingius had very great Obstacles to surmount. The Majority of Voices, and Authority of Age, were on his Adversary's side: Besides, Des Marets had an Advantage in his Favour, sufficient to arm all the World against his Antagonist, and to awaken the most venerable Prejudices; which was to represent Altingius as an Innovator; one who removed the sacred Boundaries, which our Fathers had so wisely placed on the Confines of Truth and Falshood. He set up for a publick Accuser; and imputed Thirty one Erroneous Propositions to James Altingius. The Curators of the University sent the Accuser's Writing, and the Answer of the Accused Person, to the Divines of Leyden, without giving the Parties notice of it, and desired them to give their Opinion upon it. The Judgment they gave deserves to be taken notice of [B]. Altingius was declared innocent of [A] His Childhood was a perpetual Change of Place.] For, at two Years of Age, he was sent to Christian Chytræus, Minister of Bretten. The Year following, his Mother was obliged, on account of the impending Siege of Heidelberg, to retire to Heilborn, notwithstanding her being with Child, and she carried him with her; from whence, at the end of the Year, they were obliged to retire to Schorndorf. " Se- " quente mox anno, propter imminentem Heidelbergæ " obsidionem, matre etiam comite, eaque tum gravidâ, " Hailbronnam, indeque exacto anno Schorndorfium " missus est (1)." His Father, Henry Altingius, afterwards brought his whole Family to Embden, through By-ways. From Embden he removed to Leyden, where he was Preceptor to the King of Bohemia. The Plague obliged him to go from Leyden to Honslaerdijk; lastly, he went from Honslaerdijk to Groningen, being invited thither to be Professor of Divinity, in the Year 1627. James Altingius was then nine Years of Age.

(1) Vita Jacobi Alting.

[B] The Judgment they gave deserves to be taken notice of.] I pretend not to take any part in the particular Affair here in question; and shall content myself with remarking, that, in general, one cannot forbear, on occasion of the like Disputes, to judge, as the Divines of Leyden did. They, who advance new Hypotheses, pique themselves too much upon maintaining them, to the prejudice of Peace, and of the Ecclesiastical and Academical Tranquillity. They may be as Orthodox as they please; but they have not of Hereſy; they only blamed his Imprudence in framing new Hypotheſes; on the other hand, Des Marets was declared to want Modeſty and Charity (a). The latter refuſed to acquieſce in this Judgment, and would not accept the Offer of Silence. He inſiſted upon having the Cauſe examined by the Conſiſtories, the Claſſes, and the Synods; but the Superiors would not conſent to it, and prohibited writing either for or againſt the Judgment of the Divines of Leyden: Thus Des Marets's Book, Audi & alteram partem, was ſuppreſſed. This Conteſt made a great Noiſe, and might have been attended with bad Conſequences, by the calling of Des Marets to the Univerſity of Leyden (b); but he died at Groningen (c) before he took Poſſeſſion of that Employ. He made a kind of Reconciliation on his Death-Bed [C]; I ſhall ſpeak of it in the Remarks. Altingius thought he had reaſon to complain, that he was play'd upon [D]; and was not eaſy after he was delivered from ſo formidable an Adverſary. The Clergy murmured continually againſt what they called Innovations [E]; but the Secular Power calm'd by it's Prudence theſe Synodal or Conſiſtorial Storms, and threatened to interdict thoſe, who ſhould revive the Quarrel of theſe two Champions in any Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembly. Altingius enjoyed but little Health during the three laſt Years of his Life; at length a continual Fever, which laſted but nine Days, took him out of the World on the Twentieth of Auguſt, 1679. He died piouſly, reſigning himſelf to the Will of God; and recommended the Edition of all his Works ſeveral times to his Couſin Menſo Altingius, Burgo-Maſter of Groningen.

Digitized by Google

(a) Cum Altingium ab omni Hæreſeos noti absolverent, in ipſo autem prudentiam in procudendis novè inventis, in Mareſio modeſtiam & charitatem requirerent. Vit. Joc. Altingii.

(b) Et rei miram habitura cataſtrophen, Mareſio quamquam ſene ad Theologiæ Profeſſionem Lugdunum in Batavis vocato. Ibid.

(c) In May 1673.

Prudence enough: They are guilty of Raſhneſs; for it is raſh Conduct to diſturb the public Peace, without great and urgent Neceſſity. They, who oppoſe a new Method of Teaching, betray too much Paſſion: I am apt to believe, that, ſometimes, they are not guided by any perſonal Conſiderations in their Proceedings; but they carry matters too far, they alarm the whole Church for trifles; they ſpread Apprehenſions among the People of a total Depravation of the Confeſſion of Faith, when there is yet no Attempt made againſt it. They are zealous, but neither moderate, nor charitable, nor equitable. Nay, they are as impudent, as their Adverſaries: They do not conſider, that a new Method, of which no notice appears to be taken, falls of itſelf; whereas, if it be zealouſly oppoſed, it degenerates into a Party. The new Methodiſt ſhall have ſome Relations in the Government, who will ſupport him with all their Intereſt; and thus you will ſoon ſee a Combination of the Civil and Canon Law, and the Factions of the Church and State, matched together. What may not one apprehend from ſuch a Conflict? How many Evils would Religion and the State avoid, if People were only contented to oppoſe Fundamental Innovations?

[C] A kind of Reconciliation on his Death-Bed.] A Miniſter of Groningen, ſeeing Des Marets paſt recovery, propoſed to him a Reconciliation between him and his Colleague; and, having his Conſent, went and propoſed the ſame thing to Altingius; who anſwered, that the Silence he had obſerved, notwithſtanding the Clamours, and the Writings of his Adverſary, was a Proof of his peaceable Diſpoſition; that he was always ready to accept of Peace on reaſonable Terms; but that he deſired Satisfaction for the Injuries, which had been publiſhed againſt his Honour; and that he did not ſee, how any one could deſire any Friendſhip with him, while he thought him to be ſuch a Perſon, as he had repreſented him. The Mediator went away, without propoſing any thing farther. A little while after, a Report was ſpread all over the Town, that Mr Altingius was ſo hard-hearted, as to refuſe to be reconciled to his dying Colleague: So true it is, that Town Reports are little conſiſtent with Truth. The Mediator returned with another Miniſter to Mr Altingius, and got a Formulary of Satisfaction from him. This Formulary did not pleaſe the ſick Perſon; and That, which the ſick Perſon dictated, did not pleaſe Altingius; more Goings and Comings were employed, than in the Capitulation of a Fortreſs. At laſt, the Alteration, which Altingius inſerted in the Formulary of Des Marets, being accepted, on condition, that Altingius ſhould accept what Des Marets ſhould add to it, that the Conditions might be equal on both Sides, they ſigned it; and this was all the Reconciliation. Note, that the Parties retracted only perſonal Injuries; as for doctrinal Accuſations, the Accuſer left them to the Judgment of the Church (2).

(2) Taken from a Letter of James Altingius, in the 5th Volume of his Works.

[D] Altingius thought he had reaſon to complain that he was play'd upon.] He founded his Complaint on the laſt Edition of Des Marets's Syſtem, in which he was very ill treated. He pretended, that his Adverſary was bound to ſuppreſs all Monuments of their Diſagreement; and that, ſince he had not ſuppreſs'd ſo outrageous a Libel, his Reconciliation was not ſincere. "Poſteaquam autem ad plures abiit (Mareſius) - - - - - "monitus fui ego (3) de Syſtematis novi perpetuis "annotationibus, quæ infandis maledictis cum in alios, "tum in me, conſtarent. Liber ille paucis ante mor- "tem ipſius diebus vendi quidem cœperat, ſed non- "dum in meas ædes fuerat illatus. - - - - - - - Curavi "ergo afferri, atque inde didici quantopere D. Mare- "ſius mihi illuſiſſet, quando in ſpeciem concordiam "redintegrari expetiit. Etenim quotieſcunque verum "illud eſt ac ſincerum votum, non tantum verbis "pax initur, ſed etiam abolentur omnia monumenta "prioris inimicitiæ. Tenera namque conſcientia ad "ſuam ipſius infamiam ſpectare retur, ſi, quod ipſa- "met damnavit, atque ex ſua memoria abolitum vo- "luit, univerſorum notitiæ ac Memoriæ infixum de- "derit, editis contumelioſis chartis per univerſum "orbem diſſeminatis. - - - - - - After the Deceaſe of "Des Marets, I was informed of the perpetual Com- "mentary of the New Syſtem, which was fraught with "unjuſt Aſperſions, both on others, and myſelf. The "Book indeed begun to be ſold a few Days before his "Death, but had not, as yet, come to my Hands. I "took Care to procure it, and was convinced by it, "how greatly Des Marets impoſed upon me, when he "appeared to ſollicit a Reconciliation. For, when ſuch "a Deſire is real and ſincere, a verbal Reconciliation "is not thought ſufficient, but all Remains of former "Enmity are aboliſhed. A tender Conſcience will "ſcruple to perpetuate and ſpread over the World, "by libellous Writings, what itſelf has condemned, "and would willingly forget." If I may be allowed to ſpeak my Opinion freely, it ſeems to me unreaſonable to expect that Des Marets ſhould ſuppreſs a whole large Volume; if he had, the Bookſeller ought certainly to have been indemnified; and thus the Expence of the Reconciliation would not have been a meer unſaying, a nollem factum; it would have been a pecuniary Loſs to the Family. The Queſtion was not concerning three or four Leaves only, but the whole Work, as Altingius himſelf acknowledged. "Cum in ipſius "eſſet poteſtate totum opus ſuppreſſiſſe, quæ unica "ſupererat in opere uſque quaque ſibi conformi emen- "datio (4). - - - - - - When it was in his own Power "to have ſuppreſs'd the whole Work; which was the "only Emendation left in a Work ſo uniform from Be- "ginning to End." It was enough, that he declared in a Writing under his Hand, that he retracted whatever he might have ſaid or publiſhed againſt his Adverſary's Reputation. "Ita ut indicta velit Cl. D. "Mareſius, ſi quæ in dictis & ſcriptis ipſius in famam "Cl. D. Altingii incurrere videantur (5)." With that alone he might die in form; *è morto canonicamente, as they ſay beyond the Alps.

(3) Alting. Tom. 5. Mantiſſæ, pag. 425.

(4) Id. ibid.

(5) Id. ibid.

* He died canonically.

[E] The Clergy murmur'd continually againſt what they called Innovations.] The following Words will inform us of the Matter. "Qualis fuerit utriuſque ante "mortem mutua reconciliatio, ipſiuſmet Autoris Epi- "ſtola, initio Mantiſſæ tomi quinti poſita, teſtatur. "Quieſcente

Digitized by Google

Groningen. His Requeſt was complied with ſome Years after his Death, by the Publication of Five Volumes in Folio [F]. He lived a ſingle Life, 'till he was almoſt Thirty Years of Age; at which time he grew weary of that State, and married [G]. He purpoſed, if he had lived longer, to have compoſed two Books, one in Latin, and the other in Dutch; the firſt was to have been An Apology for his Doctrine, and the other An Hiſtory of his Life, from the time of his Profeſſorſhip; by which means we ſhould have ſeen the Injuſtice which was done him (d), in creating him ſo many Troubles [H]. This is what I have extracted from his Life, prefixed to the Firſt Volume of his Works. If any one finds Miſtakes in this Article, I deſire him not to impute them to me, who have only faithfully reported what I find in the Book, which I have cited. I advertiſe once for all, that I will not warrant the Truth of ſuch Accounts. I conclude with this Remark; that Altingius was a Divine much attached to the Text of the Scripture, and to Cocceianiſm and Rabbiniſm. This latter Application expoſed him to a terrible Injury [I]. He preached well in three Languages, in German, Dutch, and Engliſh.

(d) Ex Vita Jacobi Altingii, in limine Operum, Edit. Amſt. 1687.

" Quieſcente Mareſio, non ſic tamen quieſcendum ſibi " duxerunt, qui ipſius partium fuerant. Nihil autem " adeo dediſſe operam videntur, quam ut via quaſi " eccleſiaſtica per Synodos, Claſſes, & quas dicimus " Correſpondentias, Altingii opinionibus obſiſterent. " Ita variis quidem fluctibus poſtea jactatus vir op- " timus, ſuæ autem ſententiæ tenaciſſimus, tandem " fere enatavit; ſiquidem quotieſcunque aliquid pro- " poneret Eccleſiaſticorum ordo, illud mox procerum " edicto vel conſulto rejectum eſt. Imo exauctora- " tionis etiam pœna in eos conſtituta, qui de contro- " verſiis Mareſio-Altingianis in cœtu aliquo Paſtorum " quidquam moverent. Ita factum ſæpius eſt, ut ge- " neralibus etiam verbis concepta gravamina de peri- (*) In Vita Jac. Alting. " culoſis novitatibus in ſpongiam incubuerint (6). - - - - " What kind of mutual Reconciliation was between them " before his Death, we learn from the Author's own " Epiſtle, at the beginning of the fifth Tome of the " Mantiſſa. Though Des Marets laid aſide his Re- " ſentment, thoſe of his Party did not ſo eaſily quit " theirs. But they had no other Aim, than to oppoſe " Altingius's Opinions, in an Eccleſiaſtical Way, by " Synods, Claſſes, and what we call Correſpondencies. " Thus this beſt of Men, but tenacious to the laſt of " his Opinions, after being toſſed with various Storms, " with much Difficulty at length ſwam aſhore; for, " whenever the Order of Eccleſiaſtics propoſed any " thing againſt him, it was immediately rejected by " the Authority of the Civil Power. Nay, the Penalty " of Deprivation was decreed againſt thoſe, who ſhould, " in any Aſſembly of Paſtors, revive the Mareſio-Al- " tingian Controverſy. Thus Complaints of dangerous " Novelties, though couched in general Terms, often " undergo the Spunge." Hence it appears, that James Altingius would have been in great Danger from the Divines, if he had not been protected by the Magiſtrate. It is certain that the Secular and Eccleſiaſtical Power ſtand in need of each other: The latter ſerves ſometimes as a Spur to the former, and the former as a Bridle to the latter.

—— —— —— alterius ſic
Altera poſcit opem res, & conjurat amice (7).

(7) Horat. de Arte Poet. ver. 430.

Thus mutually they need each others Aid.

ROSCOMMON.

[F] By the Publication of five Volumes in Folio.] The late Mr Bekker, then Miniſter at Amſterdam, who had been a Diſciple, and good Friend of the Author's, took a particular Care of this Edition. It was publiſhed at Amſterdam, in the Year 1687, and contains ſeveral kinds of Treatiſes, Analytical, Exegetical, Practical, Problematical, and Philoſophical, which witneſſes not only the laborious Life of James Altingius, but likewiſe his great Knowledge. His Diligence may be diſcovered in another Inſtance. Moſt learned Men become at length tired of writing Letters; but he never knew this Fault: He wrote Five thouſand Letters; but they publiſhed but few of them. " Loquuntur Epiſtolæ, quarum tam paucas " ex 5000 publicari potuiſſe, id equidem dolendum. (8) Vita Jacobi Alting. " Erat autem ad ſcribendas literas impiger (8). The bare Names of the Divines, with whom he correſponded, ſhew that he was no Voëtian.

[G] He lived a ſingle Life 'till he was almoſt thirty Years of Age —— and then married.] Vitam cœlibem ad annum ætatis trigeſimum fere perduxit, cujus tandem pertæſus junxit ſibi tori ſociam (9). Of eight Children, which God had given him, but three were living when he died; one whereof was a Phyſician, another an Advocate, and the third bore Arms. The firſt and the laſt died ſoon after their Father. (9) Ibid.

[H] The Injuſtice which was done him, in creating him ſo many Troubles.] They, who chooſe the Words of the Original, rather than my Abridgment, may here be ſatisfy'd. " Dixit inter alia (Altingius) ſi " Deus ſibi vitam vireſque concederet, ſtare ſibi ani- " mum duos libellos in lucem mittendi, alterum qui- " dem, quem orſus etiam eſt, quo ſe purgaret coram " Eccleſiâ ab heteredoxias & hæreſeos crimine ſibi in- " tentato, alterum verò quo hiſtoriam vitæ ſuæ pu- " blicæ panderet, ab eo tempore quando in Acade- " mia docere cœpiſſet; unde cuivis judicandum relin- " queret, quo jure qua injuria tantum ipſi moleſtia- " rum creatum fuiſſet. - - - - - - - Præ cæteris autem " conquerebatur à malevolorum inſidiis atque inimi- " citiis ſtetiſſe, quo minus ut vellet publico inſervire " potuiſſet (10). - - - - - - Altingius declared, among (10) Ibid. " other things, that, if God granted him Life and " Strength, he had determined to publiſh two Books; " one of them (which he had even begun) in Vindica- " tion of himſelf, before the Church, from the Charge " of Heterodoxy and Hereſy, which had been brought " againſt him; the other, the Hiſtory of his public " Life, from the time of his commencing Teacher in the " Univerſity; from whence every one might judge, " how juſtly, or unjuſtly, he had been involved in ſo " many Troubles. - - - - - - - But he particularly com- " plained, that the Treachery and Enmity of ill deſign- " ing Men, had prevented his being as ſerviceable to " the Public, as he could have wiſh'd." It is certainly a very melancholy Conſideration, that Civil Diſcord ſhould prevent ſo many excellent Operators from exerting their Abilities in the Service of their Community, and againſt foreign Enemies; againſt whom all the Forces of a Party ought conſtantly to be kept united. I do not ſpeak of the Scandal it occaſions; for, on the contrary, we ought to be ſcandaliz'd at the little Scandal it gives. Is it, becauſe to be properly diſguſted requires a Degree of Wit, to which few Perſons attain? Is it becauſe Cuſtom renders Men at length leſs ſenſible; ab aſſuetis non fit paſſio? Whatever the Cauſe of it may be, it is certain that People have an exceſſive Indulgence for thoſe, who keep up Diſcord, by violent, injurious, and cavilling Writings, under the falſe Pretence of Zeal. Nothing would more effectually correct the prevailing Itch in ſome People of libelling their Brethren by Book after Book, than for the World to ſhew they are offended in earneſt at ſuch a Conduct, and publickly to expreſs their Contempt and Indignation. But while we ſee them follow the Party, which knows how to make the moſt Noiſe and Buſtle, the Diſeaſe muſt be look'd upon as incurable.

IN WHAT the Scandal of Controverſy at preſent conſiſts.

[I] This latter Application expoſed him to a terrible Injury.] He was called a half Jew; one who differed from a Jew only in the Foreskin; in ſhort, one, who complained ſometimes of not being Circumciſed, and whoſe Foreskin was troubleſome to him. The Occaſion of theſe Abuſes was, his having maintained, that the Points of the Tetragamma are not proper to That Name, and that therefore the true Pronunciation of it is not known, and that we ought not to accuſe thoſe of Jewiſh Superſtition, who read it Adonaï. The Judgment paſſed upon this Opinion was as follows: " Impudentia eſt Grammaticorum " nonnullorum & filiorum Bicri negare ex ſuperſti- " tione Judaica oriri, quod id nomen aliter pronun- " cietur quam legitur - - - - Sed per nos homines ſemi- " Judæi doctrina, ſtudio, affectu, commercio, & qui ſolo

Digitized by Google

" fere pondere præputii, & quo interdum ſe gravari dolent, diſtant à recutitis, inſaniant ut libuerit—Veſtræ eſt impudentiæ, petulantiæ, & ſuperbiæ in primo gradu, quod auſitis dicam ſcribere imperitiæ & ignorantiæ tot illuſtribus Eccleſiæ viris vobis etiam longe doctioribus, quod id nominis enuncient & pronuncient uti ſcribitur (11). —— It is downright Impudence in certain Grammarians, and Sons of Bicri, to deny, that the Pronunciation of this Word differently from what it is read is owning to Jewiſh Superſtition - - - - But let theſe Men, who are Half-Jews in Doctrine, Study, Affection, and Commerce, and who differ from the Circumciſed almoſt only in the Weight of the Prepuce, with which they ſometimes complain of being burthened; let theſe Men, I ſay, be as mad as they pleaſe - - - - - Your Impudence, Saucineſs, and Pride, is of the higheſt Degree, in daring to charge with Unskilfulneſs and Ignorance ſo many Ornaments of the Church, whoſe Learning far exceeds your own, for uttering and pronouncing this Name as it wrote." Was this a ſufficient Reaſon for being ſo very angry? and have we not here an Example of what an Heathen Philoſopher judiciouſly remarked? " Crede mihi, levia ſunt, propter " quæ non leviter excandeſcimus, qualia quæ pueros " in rixam & jurgium concitant. Nihil ex his, quæ " tam triſtes agimus, ſerium eſt, nihil magnum. Inde, " inquam, vobis ira & infantia eſt, quod exigua " magno æſtimatis (12). —— Believe me, we fall into a violent Paſſion for meer Triſles; ſuch as ſet Children a fighting. None of thoſe things, which give us ſo much Uneaſineſs, are ſerious; none of them of Importance. From hence, I ſay, ariſes this childiſh Anger of your's, that you ſet a great Value upon things of little Moment." Could there be a ſeverer Cenſure, than this, of one who ſhould ſet his Apoſtacy to ſale, and ſhould only wait for the Solution of three or four ſmall Difficulties in order to turn Jew?

(11) Oper. Altingii Tom. 5. in Mantiſſa, pag. 420.

(12) Seneca de Ira, lib. 3. cap. 34.

AMABLE, a Prieſt of Riom in Auvergne, in the Vth Century, is praiſed by Gregory of Tours, as a Man admirable for his Holineſs, and who wrought many Miracles (a). It is ſaid he had Power over Serpents: Thus that Hiſtorian expreſſes himſelf; but he ſpeaks of another Particular, as an Eye-Witneſs. I have ſeen at his Sepulchre, ſays he, a Dæmoniac diſpoſſeſſed; I have ſeen a perjured Perſon there become as ſtiff as an Iron Bar, and, after confeſſing his Crime, become as free as before. When ſuch a Man as Gregory of Tours makes uſe of an it is ſaid, 'tis a ſign, that the thing is not very certain; nevertheleſs this Empire over Serpents has paſſed for the moſt unqueſtionable Fact among all that are attributed to St Amable. One would think it was his Lot, or, to ſpeak like a Mallebranchiſt (b), that God had eſtabliſhed him the occaſional Cauſe of the Cure of thoſe, who were bit by Serpents. A modern Author, tho' a Canon in the City, of which St Amable is Patron (c), confeſſes that he does not believe all the Miracles, which are reported of him in the Lives of the Saints of Auvergne, and in ſeveral other Legends (d); but declares on the other ſide, that he firmly believes That Saint had a Sovereign Power over Serpents, becauſe the wonderful Effects of it had been univerſally atteſted for the Space of 1300 Years [A]; and becauſe he had had the Happineſs of ſeeing ſome of them himſelf (e). He queſtions much the Truth of a certain Tradition, which prevailed at Riom concerning this Saint; to wit, that, when he went to Rome on foot, the Sun attended upon him as his Valet, and carried his Gloves and Cloak in the Air, like an Umbrello, during the great Heat, and kept off the Rain from him in bad Weather (f). This Tradition paſſeth for ſo certain in that Country, that they ſeldom draw St Amable's Picture, without his Gloves and his Cloak being ſupported in the Air by a Sun-Beam. Credat Judæus Appelles (g), ſays he, non ego. This is ſufficient, without any Reflexion of my own, to give to this Article the Form, which this Dictionary ſeems to require. A mere Relation of ſuch things is an Heap of Errors.

(a) Gregorius Turon. de Gloria Confeſſorum, cap. 33.

(b) See the Abbot Faydit's Supplement to the Diſſertation on the Sermon of St Polycarpe, pag. 30.

(c) Riom.

(d) Faydit, ubi ſupra. pag. 102.

(e) Ibid. p. 101.

(f) Ibid. p. 103.

(g) Thus he writes the Word. Horace, Sat. 5. lib. 1. gives it Apella, which is more agreeable to the Rules of Quantity.

[A] The wonderful Effects of it were univerſally atteſted for the Space of 1300 Years.] This Calculation does not agree exactly with what is ſaid in the following Page; that Gregory of Tours lived but about fifty or ſixty Years after St Amable. It is not neceſſary to prove, that the Words do not ſignify, that he was born fifty or ſixty Years after that Saint; it is plain enough that they import, that he was arrived to Manhood, when St Amable had been dead fifty or ſixty Years. According to this, the Death of this Saint ſhould fall about the beginning of the VIth Century; for Gregory of Tours lived but about Fifty two Years, and died in the Year 594 (1). Now if the Miracles of this Saint of Riom had been ſeen for the Space of 1300 Years, about the end of the XVIIth Century, he muſt have flouriſhed about the end of the IVth Century; and, upon this Suppoſition, it cannot be ſaid that a Man of twenty Years of Age in 562 lived fifty or ſixty Years after him.

(1) Fatler Labbé de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. p. 38. Moſt Authors place his Death in the Year 596.

AMAMA (SIXTINUS) Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue, in the Univerſity of Franeker, was a very learned Man. He was of Frieſland, and had been a Diſciple of Druſius [A]. The Univerſity of Leyden, which endeavours to procure the moſt famous Profeſſors of the neighbouring Univerſities, by offering them more conſiderable Advantages, endeavoured to draw him from the Univerſity of Franeker (a). It was to ſucceed Erpenius, who had been one of the moſt learned Men of his Age in the Oriental Languages. Amama did not abſolutely refuſe this Invitation, neither did he abſolutely accept of it; he conſented, upon condition of obtaining his Diſmiſſion from his Superiors of Frieſland. But they did not grant it (b), and no doubt they gave him ſuch additional Advantages, that he had no reaſon to repent his not being Profeſſor at Leyden. The firſt Book he publiſhed was a Specimen of a noble Deſign he had conceived. He had undertaken to cenſure the Vulgar Tranſlation, which the Council of Trent had declared authentic; and, before his whole Deſign was executed, he publiſhed a Criticiſm on the Verſion of the Pentateuch (c); Thus he commenced Author (d). He was preparing the Continuation of this Criticiſm, when he was called off

(a) In 1626.

(b) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Anti barbarus Biblicus.

(c) Cenſura Vulgatæ Latinæ Editionis Pentateuchi. Franck. 1620. in 4to.

(d) Te obſtetricante (ſays he to Gomarus) primus ille adole centiæ meæ fœtus in dias luminis oras prodiit. Sixt. Amama Antibarb. bibl. pag. 201. I believe he had already publiſhed, in 1618, a ſmall Treatiſe de Decimis Mo aicis of 9 Pages in 4to, which was reprinted at London in 1660.

[A] And had been a Diſciple of Druſius.] This is evident from ſeveral Paſſages of the Antibarbarus Biblicus. As for Sineſius, whoſe Diſciple they make him in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, I confeſs he is abſolutely unknown to me; and I queſtion much whether they ever heard of him in the United Provinces.

Digitized by Google

off to other Matters; I mean to collate the Dutch Verſion of the Scripture with the Originals, and the exacteſt Tranſlations. This Dutch Tranſlation had been made from Luther's German Verſion. He gave the Public an Account of his Labours, in a Work, which he publiſhed (e) at Amſterdam in the Vulgar Language, intituled Bybelſche Conferentié. This Work is taken notice of in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary [B]. This Care of collating was full Employment for Amama; inſomuch that the Publication of this Book, and of ſome Grammatical Pieces, prevented him a conſiderable time from applying himſelf to his Cenſure of the Vulgate (f). He reſumed this Work, upon hearing that Father Merſennus had undertaken to refute him, as to the Six firſt Chapters of Geneſis [C]. Leaving, then, every other Work, he applied himſelf to juſtify his Criticiſms againſt that Author. His Anſwer is one of the Pieces, of which the Anti-Barbarus Biblicus, which he publiſhed in 1628, is compoſed. The other Pieces are a Criticiſm on the Vulgate in relation to the Hiſtorical Books of the Old Teſtament, on Job, the Pſalms, and the Books of Solomon; with ſome particular Diſſertations. One of them is on the famous Paſſage of the Proverbs, The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his Way, wherein Amama ſhews, that they, who accuſed Druſius of favouring Arianiſm, were downright Calumniators. The Anti-Barbarus Biblicus was intended to conſiſt of Two Parts, each containing three Books. The Author publiſhed only the firſt. It was reprinted after his Death [D]; and the fourth Book was added to it, which contains the Cenſure of the Vulgar Tranſlation, on Iſaiah and Jeremiah. It is impoſſible to ward the Blows he gives to the Vulgate, and to anſwer the Reaſons, by which he ſhews the Neceſſity of conſulting the Originals. And indeed few learned Men of the Romiſh Communion will deny it; they only maintain (to ſave the Honour of the laſt Council) that they did not pretend to ſubmit the Originals to the Authority of the Vulgar Tranſlation. It is not the Queſtion here to examine, whether this can be ſaid in earneſt. Our Sixtinus ſo ſtrongly perſuaded to the Study of the Original Languages of the Bible, that ſome Synods, influenced by his Reaſons, ordered, that thenceforth no one ſhould be admitted a Miniſter, without at leaſt a moderate Skill in the Greek and Hebrew of the Bible [E]. I muſt not forget the Zeal he ſhewed in putting

(e) In 1623.

(f) Amama ubi ſupra, pag. 160.

[B] This Work is taken Notice of in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.] The Supplement ſays, that, according to Mr Simon, The deſign of Sixtinus Amama, in his Book, is to ſhew, that the Dutch Bible, which was read among the Proteſtants of the Low Countries, and had been tranſlated from the German of Luther, was full of Faults; this he ſhews very plainly, add they. To give the Reader fuller Information in this Matter, I ſhall ſet down the very Words of the Author, who is here cited. The Proteſtants of the Low Countries, ſays Mr Simon, in his Letter to Mr P. concerning the Inſpiration of the ſacred Books, Page 10. built their Reformation only on a Dutch Verſion, which was made from that of Luther; but at laſt —— they reſolved to ſet about a new Tranſlation. For this Purpoſe Sixtinus Amama compoſed a Book in Dutch, entituled Bybelſche Conferentié, wherein he ſhews at large, that it was neceſſary to publiſh a new Bible for the Dutch Churches. He ſays, that the Dutch Tranſlation, which they read in their Churches, and which had been taken from that of Luther, contained in certain Places more Faults than Verſes; and gives a great many Examples of it in that Work. At Page 11. Mr Simon has theſe Words ----- It is true that the Calviniſts of the Netherlands rejected their ancient Tranſlation, and compoſed a new one. But if they followed, in their new Tranſlation, the Method, which Sixtinus Amama propoſes in his Bybelſche Conferentié, it cannot be exact; for, to make his Reformation, he only follows Pagninus, Junius, and Tremellius, the Bible of Zurich, the French of Geneva, the German of Piſcator, the Spaniſh of Cyprian de Valera, the Italian of Diodati, the Engliſh of Geneva, and other new Tranſlations ------ which are all faulty.

[C] Father Merſennus had undertaken to refute him, as to the ſix firſt Chapters of Geneſis.] Rivetus informed him of it; otherwiſe he had run the Riſque of being unacquainted with it a long time: for he had never before heard of ſuch a Man as Father Merſennus. Theſe are his Words, in his Epiſtle Dedicatory (1). "Abſque te fuiſſet, Cl. Rivete, nomen Merſenni, qui VI. priorum Geneſeos capitum adverſus meas ſtricturas ſuſcepit patrocinium, etiamnum juxta cum ignariſſimis ignoraſſem. Tu primus mihi indicium, tu voluminis copiam feciſti, tu ad modeſtam & manſuetam replicationem hortamentis tuis me animaſti. —— Had it not been for you, Rivetus, I had known no more, than the moſt ignorant, of the Name of Merſennus, who has patronized the ſix firſt Chapters of Geneſis againſt my Strictures. You gave me the firſt Notice of, you procured me a Sight of, the Work, and you animated me by your Advice to a moderate and good-natured Reply." I wonder he did not inſert in his Antibarbarus the Prelude to his Anſwer, which he had publiſhed in the Year 1627, with this Title Epiſtola προοδευτικὸς ad Marinum Merſennum (2). Crenius has inſerted it in the third Part of his Animadverſiones (3).

(1) It is dated Dec. 27. 1626.

(2) See the Oxford Catalogue, where inſtead of Marinum, they have put Marſennum.

(3) Printed at Leyden in 1698.

[D] It was reprinted after his Death.] At Franeker, in 4to, in the Year 1656. Mr Baillet mentioned this Edition in his Anti's, at the Three hundred and fifteenth Page of the ſecond Tome. "I muſt not forget, ſays he, the Anti-Barbarus, which a Profeſſor of Hebrew of the Univerſity of Franeker, in Frieſland, whoſe Name is Sixtinus Amama, publiſhed on the Text of the Holy Scripture, in the Year 1656, in 4to, in the Town where he taught. —— The Work is intermixed with ſeveral ſmall Diſſertations and Diſcourſes, which ſpoil it's Oeconomy." Note, that they have inſerted in the new Edition of the Great Critics (4), his Criticiſm on the Vulgate of the Pentateuch, and his Notes on the Hiſtorical Books, on the Pſalms, Proverbs, and Eccleſiaſtes, which had never been printed.

(4) Publiſh'd in Holland, 1698. See Bibliotheca novorum librorum, for July and Aug. 1698. pag. 453.

[E] Some Synods, influenced by his Reaſons, ordered, that thenceforth no one ſhould be admitted a Miniſter without a moderate ſkill in the Greek and Hebrew of the Bible.] Theſe are the Words of the Act, which was paſſed upon this Account by the Synod of Frieſland, held at Harlingen in the Year 1624. "Decretum eſt, ut in poſterum Theologiæ Candidati quotquot ad examen Miniſterii Eccleſ. admitti deſiderabunt, præter teſtimonia Senatus Academici & Theologiæ Profeſſorum, exhibeant etiam teſtimonia Profeſſorum Ebrææ & Græcæ linguæ, quibus doceant ſe in prædictis linguis eos ſaltem progreſſus feciſſe, ut originalem Veteris Novique Teſtamenti textum mediocriter poſſint intelligere, utque in Claſſe iſta, cujus examini ſe offerunt, ejus quoque rei ſpecimen edere teneantur. —— It is decreed, that, for the future, whatever Candidates in Divinity ſhall deſire to be admitted to the Examination of the Miniſtry of the Church, beſides the Teſtimonials of the Univerſity Senate, and the Profeſſors of Divinity, ſhall produce likewiſe

"Theſe

Digitized by Google

putting a ſtop to a Vice, which prevailed as much in the Univerſity of Franeker, as in thoſe of Germany, I mean Drunkenneſs [F]. He made a warm Speech on this Subject in 1621. They were ſo well ſatisfied with him in Frieſland, that, after his Death, which happened in the Month of December 1629 (g), they were very liberal to his Children, as Nicholas Amama, one of them, teſtifies with great Acknowledgment, in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of a certain Book [G].

(g) Konig, who ſays he was living in 1630, and Father Maſſtaken.

rin, who ſuppoſes, Exercit. Biblic. part. 1. pag. 61, that he taught at Franeker, in 1633, are therefore

" Thoſe of the Hebrew and Greek Profeſſors, teſti-
" fying, that they have made ſuch a Progreſs at leaſt
" in the aforeſaid Tongues, as to have acquired a mo- " derate Skill in the Original Text of the Old and
" New Teſtament; and that they ſhall be obliged to " give a Specimen of their Abilities, in that Claſs,
" to whoſe Examination they offer themſelves." It appears, by the ſame Act, that it was the Supplex Paræneſis of Amama (5), ſome Copies of which had been diſtributed among the Aſſembly, which occaſioned the taking of this good Reſolution.

(5) It is a part of the Anti-barbarus Biblicus, and had been already printed twice.

[F] The Zeal he ſhewed in putting a Stop to —— Drunkenneſs.] We muſt not aſcribe the vigorous Reſolutions, which were taken againſt this Irregularity, principally to Sixtinus Amama; it is enough if we ſay that he contributed to it; and had he only harangued, and publickly congratulated thoſe, who reformed the Univerſity in this reſpect, he would merit great Praiſe. He acknowledges, that Ameſius, Profeſſor of Divinity, and Hachting, Profeſſor of Logic, having been admitted into the Academical Senate, and finding themſelves ſupported by the Rector of the Univerſity, undertook the Reformation of this Diſorder courageouſly, and with happy Succeſs. He congratulates them upon it, and dedicates his Speech de barbarie morum to them upon that account. The Reader will be pleaſed to ſee how he expreſſes himſelf, and the Difficulties which thoſe Reformers met with. " Ad
" primam occaſionem —— intrepidis & commaſ-
" culatis animis horrendas illas & feroces belluas
" Ebrietatem & Licentiam, quæ hic ſtabulabantur,
" ex Academia ejeciſtis, ac Chriſtianam diſciplinam,
" jam deſperatam, Deo ſupra quam à quoquam ſpe-
" rari potuiſſet benedicente, Academiæ redonaſtis.
" Cujus præclari & æterna gratitudine digniſſimi fa-
" cinoris, ſicuti invidiam apud diſſolutam & barba-
" ram juventutem ſuſtinuiſtis, & quaſi præpilatis haſtis
" objecti fuiſtis ſoli, ita & æquiſſimum cenſeo, ut
" vobis quoque præ aliis tam egregii operis gloria
" tranſcribatur (6). —— Upon the firſt Opportunity
" ---- with great Courage and Reſolution, you drove
" out of the Univerſity thoſe horrible and fierce Mon-
" ſters, Drunkenneſs and Licentiouſneſs, which had
" here ſtabled, and, by an extraordinary Aſſiſtance
" from Heaven, reſtored to the Univerſity That Chri-
" ſtian Diſcipline, which it deſpaired to recover. And
" as this glorious Exploit, ſo worthy of eternal Gra-
" titude, expoſed you to the Envy and rude Attacks
" of a diſſolute and barbarous Youth, ſo I think it
" but juſt, that the Honour of ſo excellent a Work ſhould
" be principally aſcribed to you." He gives a ſhocking Account of the Debauchery, which reigned in ſome Univerſities. All the new Comers lifted themſelves in the Service of Bacchus with certain Solemnities, and were obliged to ſwear by a St Stephen of Wood, that they would ſpend all their Money. If any one had more regard to the Oath, which he had taken to the Rector of the Univerſity, than to this pretended Bacchanalian Oath, he was ſo perſecuted by the debauched Scholars, that he was obliged either to leave the Univerſity, or to comply with the reſt. He added to his Speech ſome Fragments of Alſtedius's Complaints on the ſame Subject. Bellarmin deplores, with great Vehemence, in his twentieth Sermon, the Drunkenneſs, which prevailed in the Univerſity of Louvain (7).

(6) Sixt. Amama, in Præliminar. Anti-barbari Bibl.

[G] NICOLAS AMAMA —— teſtifies, with great Acknowledgment, in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of a certain Book.] It was printed in the Year 1651. It is an Octavo of Six hundred Pages, entituled, Diſſertationum marinarum decas, wherein there is much Reading; and the Author departs in many things from Ariſtotle's Opinions, without addicting himſelf to the new Philoſophy. He has innovated in the very Orthography.

(7) Amama obſerves this in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Speech de Ebrietate.

AMASÆUS (Romulus) Profeſſor of Greek and Latin at Bologne, in the XVIth Century [A], and Secretary to the Senate (a), diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his Learning, and his Employments. He was originally of Bologne, and born at Udine, in Frioul. Pope Paul III appointed him Preceptor to his Grandſon, Alexander Farneſe (b). He was afterwards employed in more important Affairs; he was deputed to the Emperor and to the Princes of the Empire, and to the Court of Poland. No Man of Learning appeared with greater Luſtre at the Court of Rome, under the Pontificate of Julius III. He was that Pope's Secretary. He gave Proofs of his Knowledge in the Greek Language by a Tranſlation of Pauſanias, and another of a Work of Xenophon (c). He compoſed likewiſe a Volume of Speeches, and a Work intituled Scholæ duæ de ratione inſtituendi. As for the two Pieces he had written, in which he made it appear, that the Latin Language is more beautiful than the Italian, they were never printed (d). Some ſay that he died in the Year 1558, being 69 Years old [B]. He left a Son, whoſe Name was Pompilius, and who did not degenerate; for he underſtood, and tranſlated, Greek. He was likewiſe Profeſſor of That Tongue at Bologne (e). I believe he tranſlated only (a) See Remark [B].

(b) And not his Nephew, as Du Rier renders the word Nepos of Thuanus.

(c) His Expedition of Cyrus the younger.

(d) Thuan. lib. 21. pag. 432. and the Additions of Mr Teiſſier.

(e) Bumaldus cited by Baillet, Jugem. des Sçavans, Tom. 4. pag. 400.

[A] AMASÆUS (Romulus) Profeſſor of Greek and Latin —— in the XVI*th Century.*] Moreri was not miſtaken in his Chronology: It ſhould not therefore have been altered, as it is, in the Dutch Edition, where, inſtead of the XVIth Century, they have put the XIVth. Three things wanted Correction in this Article, which ought not to have been paſſed over. I. It was too dry, and lean. II. It ſhould have been under AMASÆUS, not ROMULUS. III. It ſhould not have been ſaid, that Amaſæus tranſlated the Works of Xenophon, but that he tranſlated the ſeven Books, which Xenophon compoſed of the Expedition of Cyrus the Younger.

[B] Some ſay, that he died in the Year 1558, being Sixty nine Years old.] Thuanus is miſtaken in placing the Death of Romulus Amaſæus in the Year 1558. For this Romulus was dead from the Year 1552. We have a Proof of this in a Letter of Giovanni Antonio Serone, an intimate Friend of Romulus, dated the twentieth of October of That Year, and inſerted in the Collection of Turchi, pag. 257. This is what M. de la Monnoie did me the Favour to write to me. Beſides, if Amaſæus died in the Year 1558, there would be reaſon to ſay, that he lived Sixty nine Years; for the Day of his Birth is marked, in the Figures of Luke Gauric, on the Twenty fourth of June 1489 (1). I have met with three or four Particulars in This Work of Gauric, which I ſhall inſert here. Amaſæus was lean, very tall, bald, and had a ſmall Head. He was Secretary to the Senate of Bologne, and taught Eloquence in the ſame City, having a Salary of Three hundred Crowns per Annum. He taught afterwards at Rome in the Time of Paul III, having a Penſion of Six hundred Crowns, nutu Pauli III. ex lectura in urbe habebat 600 aureos. Thuanus was ignorant of this.

(1) Figures of Gauric, Folio 72. Edit. Venet. 1552.

[C] Tranſlated

Digitized by Google

only two Fragments of the sixth Book of Polybius [C]; in which he discovered a greater Capacity, than Perottus and Musculus did in translating That Author (f). Yet a learned Man accused him of omitting all the difficult Passages, and contenting himself with referring the Reader elsewhere, for the Interpretation of them (g). As for his Father, it is agreed, that he was a great Lover of Elegancy, and Perspicuity; he enlarged what was too concise, and contracted what was too diffuse; and cleared up obscure Passages (b). His Translation of Pausanias stood in need of Sylburgius's Revisal.

(f) This is Casaubon's Judgment, in Baillet, ibid.

(g) Huetius de claris Interpretr. pag. 122. Edit. Batav.

(b) This is Huetius's Judgment of him, ibid.

[C] Translated only two Fragments of the sixth Book of Polybius.] Pompilius Amasæus, having translated those Fragments, which treat of the Military Discipline of the Romans, explained them in a Commentary, which is among the Manuscripts of Thuanus's Library (2). This Manuscript is in Italian. The Author translated those Fragments both into Latin, and his Mother Tongue.

(2) Page 453.

AMASTRIS, Niece of the last Darius, and Wife of Dionysius Tyrant of Heraclea. Look for her History in the Article of That Dionysius. You will likewise find there the Town of AMASTRIS, built by this Princess.

AMBOISE (Francis d') a Parisian, deserves to be ranked among those, whom the Profession of Letters raised to worldly Honours. He was the Son of a Chirurgeon to Charles the Ninth, and was maintained, by the Liberality of That Prince, in the College of Navarre, whilst he pursued his Rhetorical and Philosophical Studies. He taught afterwards in That College; for we find, that, in 1572, he had already taught the second Class four Years. He was then made Procurator of the French Nation. He applied himself afterwards to the Civil Law, and became a very good Advocate in the Parliament of Paris; after which he had the Post of Chancellor in the Parliament of Brittany; lastly he was Master of the Requests (a), and Counsellor of State (b). He travelled into several remote Countries [A]. He published several pieces of French Poetry in his Youth, and some Latin Verses; which doubtless he did not think much to his Reputation, when he was advanced to Dignities; for they represent to us a Poet, who sent his Muse backwards and forwards, sometimes with Compliments of Condolance, at other times with Compliments of Congratulation; in a word, they give us the Idea of a Compliment-Bearer of Parnassus to the great Lords. You will see below the Titles of some Books of our Francis d'Amboise. They seem to me less fit to immortalize his Name, than the Pains he took in collecting the Manuscripts of Peter Abelard [C], and in adding an Apologetical Preface,

(a) Ex Michaele Thirioto in laudatione Hadriani Amboisii. See Launoi Hist. Gymnas. Navarr. pag. 799, 800. See also pag. 356.

(b) In the Edition of Abelard's Works he has the Title of Equitis Regis in sanctiore Consistorio Consiliarii, Baronis Chartræ, &c.

[A] He travelled into several remote Countries (1)] Du Verdier Vau-Privas remarks, that Francis d'Amboise made a Description of the Kingdom of Poland at Warsaw, when the Duke of Anjou, at present King of France, was elected King of Poland (2). This was one of his Expeditions. It cannot be determined by the Words, which I have cited, whether he went into Poland in the Retinue of the new King, or whether he was there, when the Duke of Anjou was elected. This latter Sense would be the only one, which ought to be given to these Words, if du Verdier Vau-Privas were an exact Writer. See Francis d'Amboise's Treatise of Devices, where we find (3), that, at the Time of that Election, he was in That Country at the House of the Bishop of Valence. This Treatise of Devices is a Posthumous Work. It was printed at Paris, for ADRIAN d'AMBOISE, the Author's Son. This Son published, the following Year, at Paris, a little Treatise of his own, entitled Moral Devices.

(1) La Croix du Main, Bibl. Franc. pag. 86.

(2) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 365.

(3) At Page 42.

[B] The Titles of some Books of our Francis d'Amboise.] Viz. An Elegy on the Death of Anne de Montmorency, Peer and Constable of France, with a Latin Panegyric, and a French Ode on the Disaster of France, in 1568 (4). A Panegyric on the Marriage of Henry of Lorrain, Duke of Guise, and Catherine of Cleves, Countess of Eu, in 1570 (5). The Tomb of Messire Giles Bourdin, the King's Attorney-General in the Parliament at Paris, being three Sonnets, an Elegy translated from the Latin of Antony Valet, and some Latin Hendeca-syllabic Verses, in 1570 (6). The Loves of Clio; in which there is a Poem intituled, The Desperadoes, or Amorous Eclogues, in 1572 (7). Comical Amours, containing several facetious Histories, and, among others, That, which he calls the Neapolitan Ladies, in 1584. The Neapolitan Ladies is a Translation of an Italian Comedy. He calls himself at the beginning of this Translation Thierry de Timophile G. Picard, and he takes the same Disguise in the Title of the Funeral Lamentations of certain Animals, which he translated from the Italian in 1576, and in the Title of the Familiar Dialogue of Young Ladies, which he published in 1583. La Croix du Maine, who informed me of this, says that this Author understood many Languages, and that he had published several Works in Latin. His Collection of Devices was published after his Death, in the Year 1620.

(4) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 365.

(5) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc p 87.

(6) Du Verdier, ubi supra.

(7) La Croix du Maine, pag. 87.

[C] The Pains he took in collecting the Manuscripts of Peter Abelard.] His Diligence in this deserved a publick Acknowledgment. We are indebted to him for a very good Edition of the Writings of that famous Logician. It contains I. The Letters, which passed between Abelard and Heloisa, to which is prefixed his own Account of his Misfortunes. II. The Letters which he wrote to other Persons; with those of St Bernard; the Abbot of Clugni, &c. concerning his Errors, his Condemnation, or his Death; and some Treatises, which one of his Disciples published for him. III. Some Dogmatical Treatises of Abelard; as his Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, That of the Apostle's Creed; That of St Athanasius's Creed; His Answer to some of Heloisa's Questions; a Commentary on St Paul's Epistle to the Romans. IV. Several Sermons on the principal Holidays. V. An Introduction to Theology, containing his Book of the Trinity. VI. The learned Notes of Andrew du Chesne on the History of Abelard's Calamities. There are besides some other Works of this Author, which are not printed. You may find the Titles of them in the Supplement of Father Oudin (8), with the Libraries where they are to be found. Francis d'Amboise procured a French Translation of the Rules, which Abelard prescribed to the Nuns of the Paraclet. His Apologetical Preface displeased several People, and it was the Opinion of some, that it occasioned the Proceedings of the Court of Rome against the Work, which he published. "And if, not long ago, the printed Works "of ABAJELARD were put in the expurgatory "Index of Rome, I believe the Fault is not so much "to be imputed to the Author, as to the Preface-"Writer, who, instead of cautioning the Reader a-"gainst such and such Passages of ABAJELARD, "undertook to defend them." They are the Words of the Author of the Antiquities of Melun, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris (9). It cannot be said, that he wrote the Life of Peter Abelard (10); he only

(8) Page 413.

(9) Sebastian Roüillard, pag. 350. His Book was printed at Paris 1628.

(10) Yet it is so said in the Catalogus Autorum Catalogorum &c. of Mr Teissier, pag. 290.

Digitized by Google

Preface, which is prefixed to the Edition of the Year 1616 [D]. This Preface informs me of a Particular, which I have not met with in the Hiſtory of the College of Navarre; to wit, that he publiſhed a ſmall Treatiſe of the Council, and a Preface to the Hiſtory of Gregory of Tours [E]; in which he vindicates that Hiſtorian from the Accuſations of Flacius Illyricus; but gives him up in relation to the two Dionyſius's, the Areopagite, and him of Corinth. He holds his Rank, under the fictitious Name of Thierry de Timophile, in the Liſt of Diſguiſed Authors, publiſhed by Mr Baillet. I have ſomething to add concerning the Edition of Peter Abelard's Works commonly aſcribed to our Francis d'Amboiſe [F].

CHARACTER of Abelard's Works.

only gave a ſhort Account of his principal Adventures. There are many Errors in that Account; this is not a proper Place to take notice of them: But, without departing from the true Subject of this Remark, I may very well ſay, that Francis d'Amboiſe did not procure to Peter Abelard all the Glory he intended him by the Edition of his Works. The Public did not find, in the Writings of That Author, that great Subtilty, and Force, which rendered him ſo Famous during his Life. Let us hear Sebaſtian Roüillard once more: "As to ABAYELARD's Writings, they "do not ſeem to me to anſwer the great Praiſes "and Encomiums beſtowed upon him by ſo many "eminent Authors. And therefore I am perſuaded, "that the Excellency of That Author conſiſted in "a ready Wit, an eloquent and copious Diſcourſe, "and a Philoſophical Genius, which rendered him "formidable and invincible in all kinds of Diſputation. As, in our time, we have ſeen two or three "Perſons, who acquired a great Eſteem by ſome "of theſe Perfections; and yet what they have printed has fallen very ſhort of what every one would "have expected from them (11)."

(11) Hiſt. of Melun. pag. 348.

(12) Launoius, Hiſt. Gymn. Navarr. p. 801.

[D] An Apologetical Preface, which is prefixed to the Edition of the Year 1616.] The Conveniency of Arithmetical Figures has likewiſe it's Inconveniencies. Printers commit a thouſand Faults in them, which Correctors overlook; this multiplies Beings extravagantly, and without any Neceſſity. We have an Example of it here. Some place this Edition of Abelard in the Year 1606 (12), others in the Year 1626 (13). No doubt This will induce ſome Authors to ſay, that Abelard's Works were printed three times in the Space of twenty Years; and, as ſome tell us they were printed in Folio in the Year 1616 (14), this is another way of multiplying the Editions without Neceſſity.

(13) Father Oudin. Supplem. de Script. Eccl. pag. 413.

(14) Spizelius Specim. Biblioth. Univerſal. Konig. Bibl. vet. & nov. Chriſtoph. Hendreich. Pandectæ Brandenburgicæ, initio.

[E] A Preface on the Hiſtory of Gregory of Tours.] I queſtion not but it is that, of which the Abbot de Marolles ſpeaks thus (15): "His Hiſtory of the French "(ſpeaking of Gregory of Tours) which is the fineſt of "all his Works, was formerly tranſlated by Claudius Bonnet, a Gentleman of Dauphiné (16), who "ſtiled himſelf Doctor of the Civil and Canon Law; "on which Mr Henry d'Amboiſe, Maſter of the Requeſts, made a pretty long Preface, addreſs'd to "Madame Henrietta de Belzac, Marchioneſs of Verneuil, which was printed at Paris, in 8vo, for "Claudius de la Tour, in 1610."

(15) Preface, on Gregor. Turonenſis.

(16) It is not to be found in Allard's Bibliotheque de Dauphiné.

[F] I have ſomething to add concerning the Edition of Peter Abelard's Works, commonly aſcribed to our Francis d'Amboiſe.] This Remark is not my own; I give it in the expreſs Terms of it's Author (17). "There are Copies of Abelard's Works, which carry "in their Title-page the Name of Mr d'Amboiſe; "but there are others, to which the Name of Andrew "du Cheſne is prefixed, with this Title; "Petri "Abælardi, Sancti Gildaſii in Brittannia Abbatis, & "Heloiſſæ conjugis ejus, quæ poſtmodum prima cœnobii Paraclitenſis Abbatiſſa fuit, Opera, nunc primum eruta ex M.SS. Codicibus, & in lucem edita, "ſtudio ac diligentia Andreæ Quercætani, Turonenſis, "Pariſiis, Nic. Buon, 1616, in 4to. ------- The "Works of Peter Abelard, Abbot of St Gildas, in "Brittany, and Eloiſa his Wife, afterwards firſt Abbeſs of the Convent of the Paraclet, now firſt publiſhed from the Manuſcripts, by Andrew du Cheſne of "Tours, Paris, N. Buon, 1616, in 4to." It is highly probable, that we are indebted to this famous Native of Tours for this Edition. In the Abſtract of "the Privilege, prefixed to the Copy, which bears "the Name of du Cheſne, we are expreſsly told, "that theſe Works were printed under the Care of "Andrew du Cheſne, edita Studio Andreæ Quercetani; whereas in the Copy, which bears the Name "of Amboiſe, the Privilege ſays not a Word of the "Perſon, who had the Care of collecting theſe "Works. Whence, if a Conjecture may be allowed, "we may infer, that, through ſome ſecret Motive, "which it was not thought proper to tranſmit to "Poſterity, du Cheſne made over the Credit of "this Work to Mr d'Amboiſe, who, at that time, "was in a Condition of being obliged to him for "ſuch a Sacrifice. However this be, the two Copies "of du Cheſne and d'Amboiſe, which I have ſeen, "are not in all reſpects alike; for inſtance, that of "du Cheſne begins with an Epiſtle Dedicatory, addreſs'd to Monſ. Benjamin Brichanteau, Biſhop of "Laon, and Abbot of St Genevieve. This Dedication is wanting in the pretended Edition of d'Amboiſe, as well as the Preface, which du Cheſne added; in which, after telling us, in general, who "Abelard and Eloiſa were, he gives an Account of "what he had done, to render this Edition of that "famous Logician as perfect as he could: He ſpeaks "reſpectfully of all thoſe, who had aſſiſted him with "their Manuſcripts; and acknowledges himſelf obliged to Mr d'Amboiſe for the Letters, and other "ſmall Pieces. After this Preface follow the Teſtmonia Veterum de Abælardo & Heloiſſa, which are "wanting likewiſe in the Copy of Mr d'Amboiſe. "The Edition of this Counſellor of State, on it's "Part, has an Apologetical Preface for Abelard, "which is wanting in du Cheſne's Edition. In every "thing elſe they are alike; and the two Copies anſwer "Page for Page. It will not, perhaps, be unneceſſary to inform the Public of this double Title, for "fear it ſhould occaſion hereafter another increaſe of "the Editions of Abelard, as has been already remarked."

(17) A Manuſcript Memoir communicated by Mr Lancelot one of the Under-Librarians of the Mazarine Library at Paris.

AMBOISE (ADRIAN d') younger Brother of the preceding, advanced himſelf no leſs than Francis; for he was made a Biſhop. He had his ſhare likewiſe in the Liberality of Charles IX; who maintained him a conſiderable time in the College of Navarre; and he met with the ſame Favour from Henry III. He was of the Houſe of Navarre (a), when, in 1579, he was choſen Rector of the Univerſity of Paris. During his Rectorſhip, the Univerſity petitioned the King for a Confirmation of their Privileges; and he was their Speaker, attended by a great number of Doctors. He took his Licentiate's Degree in Divinity, in the Year 1582, and was preconiſed * on that occaſion by Michael Thiriot, who, among other Encomiums, ſaid, that he was deſcended from a very noble Family [A]. He was the King's Preacher and Almoner, and

(a) Socius Navarricus, Fellow of the College of Navarre; Launoius, Hiſt. Gymn. Nav. p. 360.

* Preconiſer in French ſignifies to make a Report in the Pope's Conſiſtory, that the Party preſented to a Benefice is qualified for the ſame.

[A] Said he was deſcended from a very noble Family.] Nevertheleſs this Author mentions the Occupation of the Father, who was a Chirurgeon, in his Elogy of the Son. I borrow this Nevertheleſs from Monſ. de Launoi, for thus he expreſſes himſelf. "Attamen Thiriotus ait, Hadrianum fundatiſſima & no- "biliſſima ſatum eſſe familia. His enim verbis utitur: "Franciſcus primum in duorum inferiorum Navarræ "ſodalitiorum diſciplinam receptus eſt, & Caroli IX. "liberalitate ad Rhetoricas ac Philoſophicas inſtitutiones eruditus. Deinde humaniores literas ibidem "docuit, &c. (1) —— Nevertheleſs Thiriot ſays, "that

(1) Launoius Hiſt. Gymn. Navarr. pag. 799, 800.

Digitized by Google

and Great Master of the College of Navarre (b), when, in 1594, the University of Paris took an Oath of Allegiance to Henry the Great. About this time he obtained the Rectory of St Andrew at Paris; and, lastly, in the Year 1604, he was made Bishop of Treguier. He died the Twenty eighth of July 1616, and was buried in his Cathedral, (b) Id. pag. 371, 372.

" that Adrian was descended from a substantial and ho-
" nourable Family. For these are his Words. Francis
" was first initiated in the Studies of the two inferior
" Classes of the College of Navarre; and brought up,
" by the Liberality of Charles IX, to Rhetoric and
" Philosophy. Afterwards he taught Classical Learn-
" ing in the same Place." A very good Way to reconcile these two Authors, would be to say, that Nobilissima Familia does not signify what the French call a very noble Family, a Gentleman's Family; for if Thiriot understood his Latin so, he would not have expressed himself with Accuracy. Chirurgery is not the Profession of a Gentleman in France. If Monsr. de Launoi had understood it in the same Sense, he would have produced Proofs unnecessarily; nor would his Proofs have been of any Force. It is superfluous to prove that the Quality of Gentleman has been ascribed to any one, when it has been said in express Terms, that he was descended from a very noble Family, in the Sense in which the French understand this Phrase; and if, in proof of a Fact of this Evidence, any one should alledge the Quality of Fellow of a College, and that of Teacher of the second Class, which such an one had possessed in the College of Navarre, it is certain he would speak very inconsiderately. Such Proofs of Nobility were never admitted. Perhaps, then, not only Michael Thiriot, but also Monsr. de Launoi, took Nobilissima Familia for a considerable Family, and which had made a good Figure, and not for a noble Family. This must be carefully remembered in reading the Latin Elogies of Men of Letters; we should be mistaken, if we should take all those to be nobly descended, of whom it is said, nobili loco, nobili genere, nobili prosapia oriundi. I am not ignorant, that Francis d'Amboise styles himself Esquire, in the Edition of Abelard; but the most this proves, is, that his Father or himself were ennobled, but not at all that his Father was both a Chirurgeon, and a Gentleman. A Conjecture is just come into my Mind, which is at the Reader's Service; and that is, that perhaps, the Predecessors of Francis d'Amboise having been degraded, he obtained the Restoration of his Family. Nay, how do we know but he might descend from a Bastard of the illustrious Family of Amboise? This seems to be the most probable Conjecture; for he tells us, that he went to the Convent of the Paraclet, to collect what he could of the Works of Peter Abelard; and that he was very well received by the Abbess de la Rochefoucaut, whose Grandmother, by the Father's side, says he, Antoinette d'Amboise, Wife of the Lord de Barbesieux, Knight of the Order, was the only Daughter of Guy d'Amboise, and Grand-daughter and Heiress of Charles, Lord of Chaumont, Marshal of France: So that the whole Succession of that most ancient Family devolved upon her; and she transferred the Estate of the eldest Branch into the Family of la Rochefoucaut. Totam vetustissimam familiam crevit, & primogenita NOSTRA ad Rupifocaldos transtulit (2). It is very extraordinary, that the Son of a Chirurgeon of Charles IX should speak thus. Note, that we must not absolutely deny, that a Branch of the illustrious Family of Amboise remained in, or fell into, Obscurity. The Chirurgeon of Charles IX was, perhaps, of this Branch.

(2) Franc. Amboësius, Prefat. Apologet. in Oper. Abælardi.

[This Person's Family takes it for granted, at present, (but falsly) from a sameness of Name, that it is a Branch of the illustrious Family of d'Amboise; but we can positively affirm,

I. That JOHN d'AMBOISE, Father of Francis d'Amboise, was a Native of the Town of Doüay, in Flanders; that he was successively Chirurgeon to Francis I, Charles II, and Henry III; that he was naturalized by Letters of the Twenty ninth of January, in the Year 1566, being at that Time in quality of Valet de Chambre and Chirurgeon to Charles IX; that he died on the thirteenth of December, 1584; and that he was buried in the Church of St Jervase, at Paris, with Mary Fromager, his Wife, Daughter of John Fromager, sworn Chirurgeon to the Chatelet de Paris, and Chirurgeon to the King.

II. That FRANCIS d'AMBOISE, son of John, was Baron of Chartre on the Loire, and Lord of Hemeri and Vezeul, in Touraine, &c. Counsellor, then President of the Parliament of Bretange; Advocate General to the Grand Council, in the Year 1586; Master of the Requests, in 1597; and Counsellor to the Privy Council; afterwards Counsellor of State, in 1604; that he married, on the 15th of January, 1594, Margaret Cousinet, Daughter of a Notary of the Town of Meaux, who was still alive in the Year 1634; that, in the Month of July, of the Year 1589, King Henry III. created him a Knight, in Consideration of his Father's Services done to four of this Prince's Predecessors. A Copy of this Letter of Knight-hood is as follows.

Letters of Knight-hood; granted by King Henry III, in the Month of July, 1589, to FRANCIS d'AMBOISE, President of the Parliament of Bretagne.

" HENRY, by the Grace of God, King of " France and Poland, to all present, and to " come, greeting. Whereas it is just and reasonable,
" that Persons of eminent Virtue should be distinguish-
" ed by a Title and Degree of Honour suitable to their " Merit, that others may be encouraged thereby to " rise by their Virtue to the same, or greater Digni-
" ty and Exaltation; we give you to understand, that,
" being fully satisfied of the noble, commendable,
" and virtuous Deeds, Actions and Conduct, of our
" dear and well beloved Monsr. Francis d'Amboise,
" Lord of Vezeul, our Counsellor, and Advocate
" General in our Grand Council, and President of " our Parliament of Bretagne; in remembrance of " the Services, which his late Father shewed to four " Kings, our Predecessors, and to ourselves; and in " Consideration of the great, acceptable, and faithful
" Services, which the said d'Amboise has done to us,
" as well in the several Charges and Commissions,
" which he has had in this our Realm, and the " Journey which he took into Poland, at the time
" of our Election, as in the Exercise of his two " Functions, in two of our supreme Courts; and " which Services the said d'Amboise continues ordi-
" narily to perform near and about our Person, in se" veral and various Ways; and in Expectation of his
" farther and still greater Services; WE, being wil" ling to reward him in some measure, and to raise
" him to the Title and Degree of Honour, which his
" said Virtues and Actions deserve, that his own De-
" scendants, and other Persons of Honour and Vir-
" tue may be induced, by his Example, to be equally
" serviceable to us and our Crown; these and other " Reasons moving us thereto, we have made and cre" ated him A KNIGHT; and have honoured, and do
" honour him with this Title, in the Presence of se" veral Lords and Princes of our Blood, and other great
" and noble Personages of our Court, and have permit" ted him to enjoy, and for the future to assume, the " said Title of Knight, with all the Rights of Nobi-
" lity, Honours, Authorities, Privileges, Exemp-
" tions, Prerogatives, and Precedencies, in all ho-
" nourable Assemblies, as well in Courts of Justice,
" as elsewhere, where it shall be needful; in like " manner as is enjoy'd by other Knights, created
" as well by Our Hand, as by that of our Royal " Predecessors. In Consequence of which, we have " directed our trusty and well-beloved, the Bailiffs,
" Seneschals, Judges, or their Deputies, belonging to
" our Courts of Parliaments, and our well-beloved
" Justices, Officers, and Subjects, in their respective " Capacities, to cause, suffer, and permit, the said
" d'Amboise to enjoy fully and peaceably the said
" Rights of Knight-hood, Honours, Prerogatives,
" Privileges, Franchises, and Liberties, thereto be" longing, as is above declared, and as is customary
" upon the like Occasion. For such is our Pleasure;
" and to the Intent that this our present Gift and
" Grant may be, and remain for ever, in Force, to
" the Honour of the said d'Amboise, and his Succes-
" sors, and that there may be a perpetual Memo" rial

Digitized by Google

thedral, where his Epitaph beſtows great Commendations on him [B]. I know not whether he wrote any thing beſide a French Tragedy, entituled, Holophernes, which was printed in the Year 1580 (c).

(c) Launoius Hiſt. Gymn. Navarr. pag. 800.

" rial thereof, we have affixed our Seal to theſe Pre-
" ſents."

Given at Pontoiſe, in the Month of July, Anno Dom. 1589, in the ſixteenth Year of our Reign.

Signed HENRY, and on the Fold by the King, POTIER; and on the Side is written VISA CONTENTOR; ſigned COMBAND; and ſeal'd with the Great Seal of green Wax, with Strings of green and red Silk.

III. That ANTONY d'AMBOISE, his Son, Baron of Hémeri, &c. eſpouſed, on the twentieth of October, in the Year 1632, Anne de la Hiliére, Daughter of John Gabriel de la Hiliére, Governor of Amboiſe, and of Louiſa de Gaſt; and that, after having been Lieutenant of the Artillery, in 1634, then Camp-Maſter of the Regiment of Touraine, and Governor of the Town and Citadel of Trin in Piedmont, he died Lieutenant-General of the King's Armies.

IV. That CHARLES JULIUS d'AMBOISE, his Son, Camp-Maſter likewiſe of the Regiment of Touraine, eſpouſed, on the Twenty ſecond of September, 1672, Charlotte du Gaſt, his Couſin. And

V. That from this Marriage ſprang GILES-ANTONY d'AMBOISE, now living, and dwelling in the City of Amboiſe, in Touraine, where he eſpouſed, on the ſeventeenth of January, 1700, Paula Guichard, Daughter of the Mayor of the ſaid Town, by whom he has had one Son and two Daughters, all alive in 1716.

It is ſuppoſed, in a ſmall Book, entituled, Index Funereus Chirurgorum Pariſienſium ab Anno 1315 ad Annum 1714, printed at Trevoux, for Stephen Ganeau, in 1714, in 12mo, that Francis, Adrian, and James d'Amboiſe *, Sons of John, ſprang from the illuſtrious Houſe of Amboiſe †; and it is upon this falſe Suppoſition, that the only one at preſent remaining of the Poſterity of Francis d'Amboiſe aſſumes the Arms entire of this powerful Houſe.

Had the late Mr BAYLE, when he ſet about his Hiſtorical Dictionary, conſulted me, he might have treated with more exactneſs and certainty, than he has done, ſeveral Genealogical Facts, which he has advanced in his Work; which have never yet been ſet right, and which continue, in Oppoſition to Truth, in all the Editions, as yet publiſhed, of this excellent Work ‖. REM. CRIT.]

‖ Taken from a Memorandum, communicated by Mr d'Hozier in 1716.

[B] His Epitaph beſtows great Commendations on him.] I believe the Reader will be pleas'd to find it here. I take it from Monſ. de Launoi.

Amboeſi, pater eruditionum,
Argiva & Latia madens Minerva,
Paulina in Cathedra diſerte præco,
Idemque hæreſeos ſevere cenſor,
Priſcorum nova norma Epiſcoporum,
Antiſtes pie, pauperum patrone,
Cuſtos virginitatis atque amator,
Tu quocumque ieris, ſequeris agnum.

Capacious Soul, with Learning fraught,
From Stores of Greece and Latium brought,
Perſuaſive from the Preacher's Chair,
Cenſor of Hereſy ſevere;
By whoſe Example taught, we ſee,
What Biſhops were, and ought to be;
Prelate, with ev'ry Virtue crown'd,
Still to the Poor a Patron found;
Adorn'd with Chriſtian Piety;
Guardian and Friend of Chaſtity;
Where'er thou go'ſt, the Lamb ſhall be A Guide, divine Amboiſe, to Thee.

* JAMES d'AMBOISE, Brother of Francis, eſpouſed Mary Longis Daughter of Joſeph Longis, Procurator of the Parliament; he died the 5th of Aug. 1605; and was buried in the Church-Yard of St Nicolas in the Fields at Paris. He was the Father of Anne d'Amboiſe, his only Daughter, married to David de Mondezir, Governor of Fére in Picardy, afterwards Deputy-Governor of Verdun.

† JOHANNES d'AMBOISE, Pater, Caſteletti Chirurgus Regius, ex nobiliſſima Amboëſianorum gente oriundus, tres habuit filios, in ſuo quiſque ſtatu percelebres. ---------- FRANCISCUS, ſcilicet, ADRIANUS, & JACOBUS. Index funereus Chirurgorum Pariſienſium, pag. 22, 30, 32, &c.

AMBOISE (JAMES de) younger Brother of the foregoing, followed his Father's Profeſſion, and became very ſkillful in it; but, after he had ſufficiently diſtinguiſhed his Capacity in Chirurgery, he advanced ſome degrees higher, and became Doctor of Phyſic [A]. This Promotion fell out between the Year 1582, and 1597; for Pinæus declares, in the Book, which he wrote, in 1597, concerning the Tokens of Virginity, that at that time James d'Amboiſe was Doctor of Phyſic; but that he was only Maſter of Arts and Batchelor of Chirurgery, when, with great Dexterity, and in the Preſence of many great Maſters, he diſſected a Woman, who was hanged in the Year 1579 for deſtroying her Child (a). We know, farther, that he was nothing more than Chirurgeon in the Year 1582 (b), and that he was Licentiate in Phyſic, and the King's Phyſician in the Year 1594, when he was choſen Rector of the Univerſity of Paris (c). The Oath, which that Univerſity took to Henry the Great, and the Proceſs which they entered againſt the Jeſuits, fell out under his Rectorſhip. There are two Latin Speeches, which James d'Amboiſe made to the Parliament, in quality of Rector, on the 12th of May, and the 13th of July 1594; they are very ſevere againſt the Jeſuits. He had been a Member of the College of Navarre, before he was Rector (d).

(a) See Remark [A].

(b) Mich. Thiriot. Laud. Hadr. Amboëſii, 1584, apud Launoium, Hiſt. Gymn. Nav. pag. 799.

(c) Launoius, Hiſt. Gymn. Nav. pag. 368. See likewiſe the Apology for John Chaſtel, p. 194.

(d) Launoius, ibid.

[A] He advanc'd ſome Degrees higher, and became Doctor of Phyſic.] This appears from two Paſſages; one is of Thiriot (1); " Natu minimus paternam, " hoc eſt ulceribus medendi artem, amplexatus, mul- " tis ſalutarem manum feliciſſime præbet. —— The " youngeſt Son, embracing his Father's Profeſſion of " Chirurgery, has great Succeſs in the Cure of his Pa- " tients." The other of Pinæus (2); " Jacobus Amboſianus, in Artibus Magiſter, & in Chirurgia Bac- " calaureus, nunc autem in utraque Medicina Do- " ctor, & Medicus Regius. —— James Amboiſe, Ma- " ſter of Arts, and Batchelor of Chirurgery; now " Doctor of both Faculties, and Phyſician to the King." Monſ. de Launoi underſtands by this the Chirurgeon of Charles IX; but he is miſtaken.

(1) Apud Launoium, Hiſt. Gymn. Nav. pag. 799.

(2) Pinæus, de Virginit. Not 8, lib. 2. cap. 8.

AMBOISE (MICHAEL de) Eſquire, and Lord of Chevillon, lived in the XVIth Century. He gave himſelf in his Works a Nick-Name, or rather a Poetical one (a), which was no great Ornament to them, and did not prevent his falling, with his Numberleſs Poems, into the Obſcurity of Oblivion. He does not appear, any more than Francis d'Amboiſe, in the vaſt Collection of Mr Baillet: Yet he ſeems to have expected, that the Title of his Works would continue to excite the Curioſity of Readers a long time. One of his Books entituled, Amorous Epiſtles, Fancies, Complaints,

(a) L'Eſclave fortuné, The happy Slave.

Digitized by Google

plaints, Epitaphs, Thirty Four Roundo's, and Three Ballads, was printed at Paris in 1556. Another is entitled, The Encomium of the Tooth (b). The Counter Epiſtles of Ovid (c), that is, Letters compoſed in anſwer to thoſe, which the Heroines of Ovid wrote to their Huſbands or Gallants, ſeemed to promiſe great Entertainment; and yet they underwent the Fate of his other Poems; They are quite unknown. He undertook ſome Tranſlations; he turned four Satires of Juvenal (d) into French Verſe, the 10th Book of Ovid's Metamorphoſis, the Eclogues of Baptiſta Mantano (e), and the Italian Treatiſe of Antonio Phileremo Fregoſo, entituled, Ris de Democrite, & pleur d' Heraclite (Democritus's Laughter, and Heraclitus's Tears) (f). He wrote in Heroics A Lamentation for the Death of Meſſire William du Bellai, Lord of Langey (g), and the Standard of the Soldiery (h) in Proſe. See the Bibliotheque of du Verdier-Vau-Privas.

(b) Printed at Lyons, in 1537.

(c) Printed at Paris, in 1541.

(d) Printed at Paris, in 1543.

(e) Printed at Paris, in 1530.

(f) Printed at Paris, in 1547.

(g) Printed at Paris, in 1543. La Croix du Maine, Bibl. Franc. pag. 322.

(h) Printed at Paris, in 1543.

AMBROSIUS, General of the Order of CAMALDOLI. Look for CAMALDOLI.

AMELIA, a City of Italy. It was anciently called AMERIA. It is ſituated between the Tiber and the Nera. Cato ſays it was founded 964 Years before the War of Perſeus (a): So that, as this War began in the Year 581 of Rome, it ſhould follow, that Ameria was 383 Years older than Rome. Feſtus calls the Founder of this City Amirus. It appears from Inſcriptions, that it became one of thoſe Cities, which the Romans called Municipia. Cicero confirms this in his fine Oration in defence of Roſcius Amerinus. It acquired the Privileges of a Roman Colony under Auguſtus (b). It ſtands in a fruitful Soil; and the Hills, which ſurround it, are covered with fine Vineyards (c). It is not certain that the Vines of Ameria were formerly in great Eſteem. My View in this Article is only to rectify That of Moreri [A], and therefore I forbear enlarging upon it. Leander Albertus wants likewiſe to be ſet right [B].

(a) Apud Plinium, lib. 3. cap. 14.

(b) See Cluverius, Ital. Antiq. lib. 2. cap. 7.

(c) Leandri Alberti Deſcript. Ital. pag. 144.

[A] My View in this Article, is only to rectify that of Moreri.] I. No Author ſays, that Ameria was built at the time of the War of Perſeus. II. Pliny does not maintain, that it was built in 964, before that War. He only tells us, that Cato had ſaid ſo. III. Cicero did not plead for a Comedian, born in that Town; Roſcius Amerinus, for whom he pleaded, was different from Roſcius the Player, whoſe Cauſe he likewiſe undertook. IV. Theſe Words of Virgil, Atque Amerina parant lentæ retinacula viti (1).

——— ——— and twine
AMERIAN Twigs, to tie the ſtraggling Vine.
DRYDEN.

do not prove, that the Vines of Amelia were eſteemed in his time. This Verſe only implies, that in the Territory of that City there was found a great quantity of Boughs, as pliant as Ozier, which they make uſe of in dreſſing their Vineyards. " Virgas de quibus vi-" tes religantur: quæ virgæ abundant circa Amerinum " oppidum —— alii genus ſalicis dicunt, diſpari colo-" re à cætera ſalice: nam eſt rubra & ad connectendum " aptior, quia præter morem lenta eſt (2). —— Twigs, " with which Vines are tied; they are found in great " plenty about Ameria. —— Others ſay, it is a " kind of Willow, of a different Colour from other " Willows; for it is red, and fitter for tying, as " being uncommonly pliant."

(1) Virgil. Georg. lib. 1. ver. 265. This Verſe is very ill cited by Moreri, Atque Amerina parent lenta retinacula vita.

(2) Servius in Virgil. ibid.

[B] Leander Albertus wants likewiſe to be ſet right.] He makes Cato ſay, that Ameria was rebuilt above Nine hundred Years before the War of Perſeus, and that it was firſt built by the Vejentes, a People of Tuſcany, under the Conduct of Ameroë, Daughter of the Italian Atlas, and of Pleione. He ſuppoſes, that Pliny ſaid it was built Nine hundred ſixty four Years before the War of Perſeus, and repreſents Cato and Pliny as being of two different Opinions. Afterwards he endeavours to reconcile them; which he does in the following manner. " The Chronology of the " one, ſays he, agrees well enough with the Chrono-" logy of the other: Cato mentions above Nine hun-" dred Years before the War of Perſeus, and Pliny " ſpeaks of Nine hundred ſixty four Years before that " War: So that it is eaſy to reconcile them. Tho' " one of them uſes the Term Rebuilding, and the " other the Term Building, it muſt not be inferred " from thence, that they affirm contrary things; for " the Word condere, which Pliny makes uſe of, is " indifferently taken both for Founding and Repair-" ing." Theſe vain and chimerical Diſputes fall to the Ground, to the ſhame of their Author, as ſoon as Pliny is conſulted; for it appears, that he gives no Opinion of his own; and is contented to ſay, " Ame-" riam —— Cato ante Perſei bellum conditam annis " 964 prodidit (3). —— Cato gave out, that Ameria " was built Nine hundred ſixty four Years before the " War of Perſius."

(3) Plin. lib. 3. cap. 14. in fine.

AMELIUS, a Platonic Philoſopher, of the IIId Century, was of Tuſcany. His true Name was Gentilianus; and he preferred the Sirname of Amerius to That of Amelius. He was 24 Years a Diſciple of Plotinus at Rome, after which he retired to Apamea, a City of Syria, where he reſided, when Plotinus died. He adopted one Juſtin Heſychius, born in the ſame City (a). This doubtleſs occaſioned the Miſtake of Suidas, who ſaid that Amelius was of Apamea. He is not leſs miſtaken, when he affirms, that Porphyry was a Diſciple of Amelius [A]. What is certain is, that Amelius was (a) Porphyrius in Vita Plotini.

[A] Suidas —— is miſtaken, when he affirms, that Porphyry was a Diſciple of Amelius.] Porphyry himſelf tells us (1), that, when he began to be a Diſciple of Plotinus, Amelius had ſtudied eighteen Years under that Philoſopher. He adds, that he was Amelius's Fellow-Pupil ſix Years; after which they both departed from Rome, himſelf for Sicily, and Amelius for Apamea. They continued in the Places, to which they had retired, at leaſt 'till the Death of Plotinus. Now as Porphyry was then about Thirty eight Years of Age, and was in greater Reputation at Rome, than Amelius, it is improbable he ſhould be a Diſciple of the latter. Add to this, that Amelius, in dedicating to him his Apology for Plotinus, deſires him to excuſe and correct the Faults of it (2). Laſtly, the Silence of Porphyry is a very ſtrong Argument againſt Suidas. Porphyry mentions Amelius every Moment, in the Life of Plotinus; and would he not have ſaid ſomething of his having been the Scholar of ſuch a Maſter? Suidas might have been deceived by Theodoret, who calls Amelius the Head of Porphyry's School (3), that is, according to the Interpretation of Monſ. de Tillemont, of Plotinus's School, in which Porphyry ſtudied (4). And indeed Suidas ſays he was Porphyry's Maſter: (They are Monſ. de Tillemont's Words.) We may reckon likewiſe among his Diſciples Caſtricius Firmus,

(1) Porphyr. in Vita Plotini.

(2) Ibid.

(3) Theodor. Græcar. Affect. pag. 500.

(4) Tillem. Hiſt. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1084. printed at Bruſſels.

Digitized by Google

was very much esteemed by his Master, and that he returned This Esteem by a singular Veneration for Plotinus. When he began to study under This famous Philosopher, all he knew was what he had learned from one Lysimachus (b); but by his great Application, he soon surpassed all his Fellow Pupils. He retained Part of Numenius's Lectures by heart, having collected and transcribed most of 'em. He made likewise ample Collections of all that he had heard in the Philosophical Conferences; and out of these Collections he drew up an hundred Treatises, which he gave to his adopted Son. He had not yet ventured to produce any thing else, when Porphyry came to Rome (c); that is to say, after having profited by Plotinus's Instructions for the space of 18 Years. Afterwards he composed 40 Books against Zostrianus, one of those ancient Heretics, both in Philosophy, and Religion, who made such an horrible jumble of the Doctrines of the Gospel, and of the Philosophers. There arose a great number of these Heretics in Plotinus's time, which obliged him to declare War against them. He undertook the Defeat of the Gnostics, whilst Amelius opposed Zostrianus, and Porphyry attacked the pretended Revelations of Zoroaster. Amelius, having heard afterwards, that Plotinus was accused of adorning himself with the Spoils of Numenius, took Pen in Hand to justify his Master, and, in three days, wrote a Book, which he dedicated to Porphyry, and which the latter entituled, Of the difference between the Doctrine of Numenius and That of Plotinus. What I am going to say is sufficient to shew the Esteem, which Plotinus had for Amelius. Plotinus took no great pains to exert himself; upon which Account he generally left some doubts upon the Minds of his Hearers, and stood in need in some manner of being forced to shew the best side of his Doctrine. This made Porphyry propose several Objections to him in Writing, to prove that our Ideas are distinct from our Understanding (d). This Doctrine Father Mallebranche has revived in our days. Plotinus, having read these Objections, gave them Amelius to refute 'em. The Opponent replyed; Amelius rejoined; and at last Porpbyry, apprehending Plotinus Doctrine, approved it, and read his Retractation in a full Auditory. Longinus, whose Taste was so just, and whose Censures were so formidable, found indeed Amelius's Writings to be too verbose; but ranked him nevertheless among the few Philosophers, whose Works seemed to him worthy of Consideration [B]. He wrote a long Letter in answer to That, which he had received from Amelius, concerning Plotinus's Philosophy. Amelius was a Votary of Paganism, and a great Observer of new Moons and Feasts (e) [C]. In one of his Books he cites the beginning of St John's Gospel, in confirmation of Plato's Doctrine. Eusebius alledges this Passage (f), but not so fully as Theodoret (g) and St Cyril (h).

(b) He was a Stoic Philosopher.

(c) In 263.

(d) Διὸ καὶ ἀντιγράψας, προσήγαγον δεικνῦναι πειράμενος, ὅτι ἔξω τῆς ὑφέστηκε τὸ νόημα. Quapropter eum contra scribendo provocare tentavi, conatus ostendere ea quæ intelliguntur extra intellectum esse. Porphyr. in Vita Plot.

(e) Taken from Plotinus's Life, written by Porphyry.

(f) De Præpar. Evang. lib. 11. cap. 19.

(g) Græc. Affection. l.b. 2. pag. 500.

(h) In Julian. lib. 8.

Firmus, a Man —— who was very serviceable to Amelius. So that here is a modern Author, who falls into the Error of Suidas, and goes still farther; for it is plain from the Life of Plotinus, to which he refers us concerning Castricius, that it was in Plotinus's Lifetime that Castricius had so great an Inclination for Amelius at Rome. Now it is undeniable, that, whilst the latter was at Rome, he had no Disciples. He was Plotinus's Disciple, and did not set up Altar against Altar.

[B] Longinus - - - - - - ranked him among the few Philosophers, whose Works seemed to him worthy of Consideration.] The Number of them was so small, that it comprehended but two Authors, Plotinus and Amelius. The Reputation of the latter was upon this Account the greater; yet this did not prevent his Writings from losing, in a little time, their first Reputation. Eunapius places them in the same Category with those of two other Fellow-Students of Porphyry, and passes this Censure upon them all: Συγγράμματά γε αὐτῶν περισῴζεται, λόγῳ δὲ αὐτῶν ἐδὲ εἷς (5). Their Works indeed are extant, but their Reputation is nothing. He gives this as a Reason for it, that they were destitute of the Ornaments of Language, and meerly dogmatical.

(5) Eunap. in Vitis Sophistarum, pag. 20.

[C] A great Observer of New Moons and Feasts.] I am aware, that, instead of New Moons, it would be better to say, the first Days of the Month, as Marsilius Ficinus did (6), but I thought my Expression would be more easily understood. These are Porphyry's Words: Φιλοθύτης δὲ γεγονὼς τῷ Ἀμελίῳ, καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ κατὰ νουμηνίαν, καὶ τὰς ἑορτὰς ἐκπεριόντῳ (7). Amelius being fond of Sacrifices, and a religious Observer of new Moons and Feasts. After this let any one say, that Philosophers are impious Men? If they had been so, they would not have wrote so much in favour of Paganism; they would not have been the only Writers, whom the Christians had to oppose; for, as for the Priests and Sacrificators, they did not concern themselves with it; their Ignorance excused them from it.

(6) Per Calendas sacra faceret, says he.

(7) Porphyr. in Vita Plotini.

AMESIUS (William) an Englishman, and Professor of Divinity at Franeker, flourished in the XVIIth Century. He was concerned in the Arminian Controversy; and wrote several learned Books against That Sect [A]. He is one of the reformed Divines, who have treated Cases of Conscience most exactly and methodically. It is almost needless to observe, that he wrote against Bellarmin (a); for no one is ignorant, that in those times the Works of that Jesuit were refuted by the greatest part of the Protestant Controvertists. Amesius wrote a Book entituled, Medulla Theologiæ. He wrote likewise against the Socinians, and against Metaphysics, and in favour

(a) His Book is intituled, Bellarminus Enervatus.

[A] He wrote several learned Books against that Sect.] He begun the Controversy viva voce with Grevinchovius, Minister of Rotterdam; but, being prevented by frequent Interruptions from speaking his whole Mind, carried on the Dispute by Letters, and published what he had objected, and his Adversary's Replies. The Points in question were, The Redemption of Man by the Death of JESUS CHRIST, and Election grounded on the Fore-sight of Faith. Grevinchovius published another Edition of their Dispute at Rotterdam, in the Year 1615, in 4to. Amesius replied, in a Piece entitled, Rescriptio Scholastica & brevis, &c. He wrote a Book likewise under the Title of Coronis ad Collationem Hagiensem, in which he replied to the Answers, which the Arminians had made to the Objections of the Ministers of Holland.

Digitized by Google

favour of Puritanism, of which he was a strict Follower [B]. He published this last Work in England in 1610. I say nothing of his Lectures on the Psalms, nor of his Explication of the Epistles of St Peter. He did not die in the Year 1639, as Henningus Witte affirms in his Diarium Biographicum. The Epistle Dedicatory of his Lectures on the Psalms, in 1635, are a proof that he was then dead. We find in the same Epistle, that, after having been twelve years Professor at Franeker, he had obtained his Dismission, in order to be Professor at Rotterdam.

His Work, entituled, Anti Synodalia, contains some Remarks on the Scripta Synodalia of the Remonstrants. It was printed at Franeker in the Year 1629.

[B] He wrote —— in Favour of Puritanism, of which he was a strict Follower] You will find in the Preface, which I cite (1), some Extracts of the Book, which he published against Episcopacy, in the Year 1610, where you will see, that, in his Opinion, there were no good Men in England, but the Puritans. They distinguished themselves by their Aversion for Stage-Plays, Oaths, Dancing, Gaming, and Treats: The rest were only Gamesters, Drinkers, Swearers, and Children of Belial. There was no Medium between these two Extreams, either to suppress Episcopacy, or to bring back the Church of Rome from Hell. "Hi scil. soli inter Anglos viri " boni, simplices, quadrati: quos ex sceleristagio sit " cognoscere, quibus ex repudio spectaculorum, ju- " ramentorum, chorearum, alearum & commessatio- " num, inditum sit nomen Puritanorum: reliqui ve- " ro insignes aleatores, potatores strenui, religionis " officia sulque deque habentes, versati institores pa- " pistarum, ambitionibus pravis corrupti, juratores " impii, homines denique vani, injusti, turpes, & " omnes filii Belial. —— Adeoque vel è medio tol- " lendum ementitum hunc Episcoporum ordinem, vel " denuo Papam revocandum ab orco (2).

(1) Grevinchovii Præf. Dissertat. Theolog. de duabus Quæstionibus.

(2) Grev. ib. fol. * iii.

AMESTRIS, Wife of XERXES King of Persia. See the first Remark of the Article MASISTES.

AMYOT (JAMES) Bishop of Auxerre, and Great Almoner of France, was one of the most illustrious learned Men of the XVIth Century. He was born at Melun the Thirtieth of October 1514. His Father and Mother, who were good honest Folks, but of a very mean Condition [A], used all their Industry to maintain him at Paris, where he went thro' his School-Learning, and a Course of Philosophy, in the College of Cardinal le Moine. He had naturally a heavy Genius; but Labour and Application supplied this Defect. Having taken his Master of Arts Degree at 19 Years of Age, he continued to study under the Royal Professors, whom Francis I. had established. He heard James Tusanus, who explained the Greek Poets, Peter Danæus, who was Professor of Eloquence, and Orontius Finæus, who taught Mathematics. He left Paris at Twenty three Years of Age, to go to Bourges with the Sieur

[A] His Father and Mother —— were but of a very mean Condition.] Some say that Amyot's Father, was a Currier of Melun (1); according to others he made and sold Purses, and tagged Points (2); lastly, others say that he was a Butcher. I find three good Authorities for this latter Opinion, Thuanus (3), Papyrius Masso (4), and Brantome. I believe the Reader will not be displeased to see the Words of this last mentioned Author a little at length, for they contain another Particular, which deserves to be known, though it should be false. Brantome, having said, that Charles IX, in a Speech to the Parliament, said, with a courageous and threatning Boldness, "It is " your Business to obey my Ordinances, without dis- " puting or contesting them; for I know better, than " you, what is fit and expedient for the Good of my " Kingdom", Adds: "Being as yet beardless, he spoke " these Words before those old and wise Men, who " all wondered at such a bold and grave Speech; " which savoured more of a generous Courage, than " of the Lessons of his Preceptor, Mr Amyot; who " had nevertheless instructed him well, and whom " he greatly loved, and had given him very good " Benefices, and made him Bishop of Lizieux (5), " and called him always his Master; and sometimes, " in jest, reproached him with his Avarice, telling " him, that he lived only on Neats-Tongues; and " indeed he was a Butcher's Son of Melun, and might " well be fond of the Meat, which he had seen his " Father prepare. Setting aside his Avarice, he " was a Great and Learned Man, both in Greek " and Latin; witness the beautiful and elegant Tran- " slation he made of Plutarch; though some envious " Persons gave out, that he was not the sole Author " of it; but that he was assisted by a certain great " Man, well skilled in the Greek Tongue, who hap- " pened, luckily for him, to be confined in the Pri- " son of the Palace of Paris, and in Necessity; whom " he released and took into his Service;" and that " they two privately composed this Translation, " which Amyot afterwards published in his own " Name. But this is entirely false, for He alone " wrote it; and they, who were acquainted, and " conversed with him, can truly say, that he wanted " no Assistance in such a Work. To conclude, he " educated That brave King very well, and chiefly " in the Catholic Religion." Were I to call in question the three mean Professions, which are ascribed to our Amyot's Father, my reason would not be, because his Son has mentioned none of them in the Manuscript of his Life; He was contented to say, that he was born of Parents more virtuous than rich, parentibus honestis magis quam copiosis (6). This Reason has no Weight with me; for there are few great Men, of mean Extraction, who are not very willing to pass lightly over the Obscurity of their Birth: Particulars on that Subject are disagreeable to them. They will own in general, that they were not Men of Quality; but you must not expect that they should give you any Memoirs, in which you may read, that their Fathers were Butchers, Coblers, Sellers of tagged Points, or Matches; that they lived upon Alms in their Childhood, &c. They, who make such Confessions, and are willing they should be inserted in their Elogies, are so few, that, though it were true, that Amyot had begged for some time in the Streets of Paris, I should not be surprized, that he did not mention such a Particular in his Memoirs of his Life. I shall not therefore refute by his Silence what is related of his Beggary, and of his having been a Foot-Boy, and of his Abode in the Hospital of Orleans (7). It is true, I cannot reconcile this Silence with That part of his Will, wherein he leaves Twelve hundred Crowns to That Hospital, as an acknowledgement for the Charity, which he had met with there (8). It has been observed, that in his Works he never adds his Country's Name to his own, and that, during his prosperous Condition, he had very little Correspondence with the Place of his Birth (9). No doubt he was weak enough to be mortified at That City, and to fancy that his Correspondence with Melun would make People talk of the Meanness of his Birth. Yet I have read, that he advanced some Persons of his Family. "He died " invested with great Dignities, and worth above Two " hundred thousand Crowns, besides a great many " other means which he had of advancing his Re- " lations, some of which shared in his Liberality (10)."

(1) St Real, Of the Use of History, p. 74.

(2) Roulliard's Antiquities of Melun, pag. 605.

(3) Thuan. Histor. lib. 100. ad ann. 1591. pag. 405.

(4) Lanli filius erat, Meloduno oppido ortus, vir excellenti ingenio, Latineque & Græce doctissimus. Carolus Magistrum eum appellabat, inter jocos avaritiam obiciens & sordes, quod linguis bubulis uteretur. Papyr. Masso in Historia Vit. Caroli IX.

(5) This is a Mistake; he should have said Auxerre and not Lisieux.

(6) Roulliard, ubi supra.

(7) St Real, ubi supra, pag. 76.

(8) Id. pag. 75.

(9) Roulliard, ubi supra.

(10) They are la Popelinere's Words, pag. 250. of his Idea of History.

[B] He

Digitized by Google

Sieur Colin (a), who was poſſeſſed of the Abbey of St Ambroſe in that City [B]. At the Recommendation of this Abbot, a Secretary of State there (b) took Amyot into his Houſe to be Tutor to his Children. The Progreſs they made under him induced their Father to recommend him to the Princeſs Margaret, Ducheſs of Berry, only Siſter of Francis I. Upon this Recommendation Amyot was made public Lecturer in Greek and Latin, in the Univerſity of Bourges. He read two Lectures every day for ten Years, a Latin Lecture in the Morning, and a Greek one in the Afternoon. It was during that time that he tranſlated into French, The Loves of Theagenes and Chariclea (c). This Tranſlation pleaſed Francis the Firſt ſo well, that he ſoon provided the Author with a Benefice. He gave him the Abbey of Belloſane, which became vacant by the Death of Francis Vetablus [C]. That Prince died ſoon after; upon which Amyot thought it more for his Intereſt to go into Italy, in hopes of Preferment there, than to expect any thing from the Court of France. He went to Venice with Morvillier, whom Henry II. ſent on an Embaſſy thither. Morvillier employed him in ſome Affairs, and ſent him to carry the King's Letters to the Council of Trent, in 1551 [D]. Being recalled from his Embaſſy, Amyot refuſed to repaſs the Alps with him, and choſe rather to go to Rome, where he met with a very kind reception from the Biſhop of Mirepoix. He lodged about Two Years at his Houſe. It was then, that, examining the Manuſcripts of the Vatican, to which Romulus Amaſæus, who was the Keeper of That famous Library, gave him free Acceſs, he diſcovered, that Heliodorus, Biſhop of Trica, was the Author of the Loves of Theagenes. He met with a more correct and more perfect Manuſcript of This Work, than That which he had tranſlated, and was not wanting in taking proper Care to publiſh a better Edition. His learned Occupations did not take off his Thoughts from the Intereſt of his Fortune. He made his Court very dexterouſly to Cardinal de Tournon, and inſinuated himſelf ſo far into his Favour, that the Cardinal nominated him to the King, when That Prince, having recalled him to France, deſired him to recommend to him a good Preceptor for his Two Younger Sons (d). This was about the Year 1558. Thus Amyot became Preceptor to Two of Henry the Second's Sons. Whilſt he was in this Poſt, he finiſhed his Tranſlation of Plutarch's Lives, and dedicated it to That Prince (e): Afterwards he undertook a Tranſlation of Plutarch's Morals, and finiſhed it in the Reign of Charles IX, to whom he dedicated it. Charles IX. was his great Benefactor; He gave him the Abbey of St Cornelius of Compiegne, and made him Great Almoner of France, and Biſhop of Auxerre [E]; and, as the Dignity of Great Almoner,

(a) He was Reader of Lectures to Francis I.

(b) William Bouchetel, Sieur de Saſſy.

(c) This Book is uſually called Heliodorus's Ethiopic Hiſtory.

(d) They reigned ſucceſſively, under the Names of Charles IX. and Henry III.

(e) He began it in the Reign of Francis I. to whom he preſented ſome of Thoſe Lives written in a fair hand by Adam Charles, a Writing-Maſter of Paris, Roulliard's Antiquities of Melun, pag. 605.

[B] He left Paris —— to go to Bourges with the Sieur Colin, who was poſſeſs'd of the Abbey of St Ambroſe in That City.] Bullart, who generally follows the Antiquities of Melun, goes out of his way here, to inform us of a Particular very little known (11), which is, that Amyot turned Monk in the Abbey of St Ambroſe in the Town of Bourges. But that the Abbot, judging him worthy of a more conſpicuous Life, than that of a Cloyſter, brought him acquainted with the Sieur de Sacy Bouchetel. 'Tis pity he quotes no written Authority for a Particular ſo little known.

(11) Acad. des Sciences, Tom. 1. p. 166.

[C] He gave him the Abbey of Belloſane, which became vacant by the Death of Francis Vetablus.] This is altogether inconſiſtent with the Narrative of the Abbot de St Real. The Author will have it, that, in the Reign of Henry II, Amyot was ſtill in the Obſcurity of a ſmall Tutorſhip, in the Houſe of a Gentleman, who was a Friend of his, and that M. de l'Hoſpital, who did not know him, recommended him only on Account of a Greek Epigram, which was preſented to That Monarch (12). This muſt neceſſarily be falſe, if it be true, as the Manuſcript of Amyot's Life ſays, that this learned Man had been ſeveral Years Profeſſor at Bourges, before the Death of Francis I; and that his Works, which were preſented to That King, procured him a very good Abbey. Can any one believe, that M. de l'Hoſpital was unacquainted with a Frenchman, who had publiſhed, in 1549, at fartheſt (13), a Tranſlation of Heliodorus's Hiſtoria Æthiopica? How are we ſure, that Henry II. took a Journey to Bourges before the firſt Edition of That Tranſlation? Add, that the Manuſcript Life of Amyot makes him go into Italy ſoon after the Death of Francis I. Reconcile this if you can with the Abbot de St Real, who makes him a Tutor at Bourges at the Time of Henry the Second's Journey to That Town.

(12) S. Real, ubi ſupra, pag. 80.

(13) I expreſs myſelf thus, becauſe du Verdier Vau-Privas mentions an Edition of 1549. But this does not prove that it was the firſt.

[D] Morvillier —— ſent him to carry the King's Letters to the Council of Trent, in 1551.] It will be neceſſary to correct the Author, who ſupplies me with this Article (14), though he tells us, that he made uſe of a Life of Amyot, begun by himſelf, and finiſhed by his Secretary. We have a Letter of Amyot, which contains the Relation of his Journey to Trent. A few Days after this Journey, he wrote to Mr de Morvillier, Maſter of the Requeſts. Now he is ſo far from ſaying, that Mr de Morvillier, Ambaſſador of France at Venice, had ſent him to carry the King's Letters to the Council, that he declares in expreſs Terms, that he was choſen for That Buſineſs by Cardinal de Tournon, and by the Ambaſſador de Selve. This is a convincing Proof, that Morvillier was not Ambaſſador at Venice, at that time: and this appears ſtill plainer by Amyot's Letter; for it is directed to M. de Morvillier at Court. Obſerve well theſe Words of Amyot; Cardinal de Tournon, and the Ambaſſador de Selve, were pleaſed to pitch upon me to execute this Commiſſion, when ſuch a thing was the fartheſt from my Thoughts (15). —— It is obſervable, that not only I was not ſo much as mentioned in That Letter (16), but the worſt is, They had not ſo much as ſent a Copy of it, by which one might know the Contents of it. So that I never ſaw any Thing ſo ill managed (17). It was not then the King, who ſent him to proteſt in his Name againſt the Council; but it was Cardinal de Tournon, and the French Ambaſſador at Venice, who made choice of him to carry the King's Letter, and to read his Majeſty's Proteſtation Word for Word before the Aſſembly. He acquitted himſelf very well of this Commiſſion. You ſee what I aim at. The Abbot de St Real takes it for granted, that Amyot was Preceptor of the Children of France, before the Negotiation, which I have juſt now mentioned; and he ſuppoſes that Henry II. employed Him in that Buſineſs, becauſe he had experienced the Reality of the good Character which M. de l'Hoſpital had given of him, when he told the King, that Amyot deſerved to be Preceptor of the Children of France. All this is irrefragably confuted by Amyot's Letter to Morvillier. Correct, therefore, without Fear, this Falſhood, in de Sauſſai. "Cæterum Amyotus, adhuc Abbas, ad Concilium Tri-"dentinum ab Henrico II. miſſus fuit, negotiorum "magni momenti cauſa (18). —— But Amyot, yet "an Abbot, was diſpatched by Henry II. to the Coun-"cil of Trent upon Affairs of great Moment." Henry II. had no Part in this Tranſaction.

(14) Sebaſt. Roulliard's Antiquities of Melun.

(15) Inſtructions and Letters of the Moſt Chriſtian King, and other Papers relating to the Council of Trent.

(16) It is that, which the King wrote to the Fathers of the Council of Trent.

(17) Inſtructions and Letters, &c. pag. 23.

(18) Andr. Suaſſaius, de Scriptor. Eccleſ. n. 52.

[E] Made him Great Almoner of France, and Biſhop of Auxerre.] The firſt of theſe two Dignities was conferred

Digitized by Google

Almoner, and the Office of Curator of the Univerſity of Paris, were vacant at the ſame time, he preſented him to them both. Thuanus complains very much of this Plurality (f). Henry III. had perhaps yielded to the importunate Sollicitations of the Biſhop of St Flour, who had followed him into Poland, and earneſtly deſired the Dignity of Great Almoner; but the Ducheſs of Savoy, the King's Aunt, ſo ſtrongly recommended Amyot to him, when he paſſed through Turin, in his Return from Poland, that not only His Office was continued to him; but a new Luſtre was added to it, in his Favour: for when Henry III. made Amyot Commander of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt (g), he ordained that, in Conſideration of his Merits, all the Great Almoners of France ſhould, for the future, be, in virtue of their Office, Commanders of That Order. Amyot, in the midſt of his Dignities did not neglect his Studies; he carefully reviſed all his Tranſlations, and compared them with the Greek Text, and made many Alterations in them: in a word, he deſigned to publiſh a more perfect Edition, with the various Readings of the Manuſcripts; but he did not live to finiſh this Work. The Civil Wars and the rebellious Spirit of the People of his Dioceſe gave him a thouſand Diſquiets [G]: He was robbed, in his Return from the States of Blois, in 1589. He died the 6th of February 1593, in his 79th Year [H]. He had preached ſometimes on ſolemn Feſtival days. He made uſe of the Latin Tongue in compoſing his Sermons, though he ſpoke them in French. He had a very particular Cuſtom in Preaching; He turned the Door of the Pulpit towards the People, and ſat in the middle of it, on a great Chair. He attempted Poetry, but without Succeſs [I]. This is what I have extracted out (f) Thuan. de Vita ſua, lib. 5. pag. 1222.

(g) At the firſt Inſtitution of this Order, on the 31ſt of December, 1578.

ferred on Amyot, the ſixth of December, 1560, by Charles IX. at Orleans. Du Peyrat, who had peruſed the Regiſters of the Great Almoners of France, mentions this Date as extracted out of the Regiſters of Amyot (19). It is therefore matter of Fact. Now by this means above one half of the Hiſtory, which the Abbot de St Real relates concerning This Prelate's Fortune, comes to nothing. He ſays, that Amyot, in the Reign of his Pupils, Francis II. and Charles IX. had only the Abbey of Belloſane, with the Honour of having ſpoke the judicious and bold Proteſtation of Henry II. before the whole Council, and that his Fortune would probably have ſtopped there, had it not been for a lucky Chance, which raiſed him higher than ever he had hoped for, and which wonderfully ſhews the Spirit of the Court. This lucky Hit was This: It happened one Day, that, at That Prince's Table, Charles V. was praiſed for ſeveral things, but chiefly for having made his Preceptor a Pope. ----- This made ſuch an Impreſſion on Charles the Ninth's Mind, that he ſaid, that upon Occaſion he would do as much for his own. And, in fact, ſoon after the Place of Almoner of France became vacant, the King gave it to Amyot. All this falls to the Ground, when we conſult the Regiſters of this Great Office, in which we find the Poſt of Great Almoner conferred on Amyot, the ſecond Day of the Reign of Charles IX. Beſides, Francis II. was not a Diſciple of Amyot, but of Peter Danés. But to proceed; M. de St Real ſuppoſes, that the Queen-Mother, upon hearing what Charles IX. had done for his Preceptor, ſent for the latter into her Cloſet, where ſhe received him with theſe dreadful Words: "I have made the Guiſes and "the Chatillons, the Conſtables and the Chancellors, "the Kings of Navarre, and the Princes of Conde, "buckle to, and ſhall an inſignificant little Prieſt "pretend to oppoſe me." Notwithſtanding the Submiſſion of Amyot, the Concluſion was, That if he had the Office, he was not to live Twenty four Hours. The Abbot ſays afterwards, that Amyot abſconded, and that Charles IX. immediately gueſſing at the Occaſion of it, ----- fell into ſuch a Paſſion ---- that the Queen, who had much ado to govern him, and who feared him, as much as ſhe loved him, gave immediately Orders to look for Amyot. This is to ſuppoſe, that Charles IX. had been King, long before he gave this Office to his Preceptor. But nothing can be more falſe; He gave it him the next Day after his Acceſſion to the Crown, before Catherine de Medicis had taſted of the Regency, and had exerted her Power over ſo many Perſons. Every one knows how little Influence ſhe had in the Reign of Francis II. After all, I allow the Reflexions of M. de St Real, on this Occaſion, conſidered in themſelves, to be fine and ſolid. As for the Biſhoprick of Auxerre, it was not given to Amyot in the Year 1568, as du Peyrat affirms (20), but in the Year 1570 (21), after the Death of Cardinal Philibert Babou, who was poſſeſſed of it.

(19) Will. du Peyrat's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Court, or an Enquiry into the Antiquities of the Chapel and Oratory of the King of France, pag. 302.

(20) Hiſt. Eccleſ. de la Cour. pag. 431.

(21) There is therefore a Miſtake in the Table of Fra-Paolo's Tranſlation, where 'tis ſaid that Amyot went Ambaſſador to Rome, under the Name of Biſhop of Auxerre, in 1562. The Biſhop of Auxerre mentioned by Fra-Paolo was not James Amyot.

[F] All the Great Almoners of France were, for the future, to be, in Virtue of their Office, Commanders of That Order.] Another Author (22) gives this Account of it. "Henry III. in the Year 1578, inſti- "tuting the Order of the Holy Ghoſt, ordained, "in * Favour of Amyot, that the Great Almoner, "and his Succeſſors, ſhould be aſſociated in the ſame "Order with the Title of Commanders; who ne- "vertheleſs (ſay he) ſhall not be obliged to prove "their Nobility; which he added, to gratify the "ſaid Amyot, who was not of a noble Extraction, "but entered into the Temple of Honour through "that of Virtue." See in du Sauſſai (23), King Henry the Second's Anſwer to the Courtiers, who murmured at the Promotion of a Man of ſuch mean Birth. The ſame Author ſays, that Amyot drew up, with Skill and Learning, the Statutes and Litanies, or rather the Office of the Order; Hujus ſtatuta & horarias preces ſcite & ſcienter compoſuit.

(22) Will. du Peyrat, ubi ſupra, pag. 385.

* The Ordinance is to be found in the 18th Book of Henry's Code, Tit. 11. Of the Holy Ghoſt.

(23) Sauſ. de Script. Eccleſ. n. 52.

[G] The rebellious Spirit of the People of his Dioceſe gave him a Thouſand Diſquiets.] Thuanus makes a Remark, very diſadvantageous to the Memory of our Amyot; for he accuſes him of having forgot the Favours, which the two Princes, his Pupils, had heaped upon him, and of having too much indulged the Seditious and Factious Rage of the Inhabitants of Auxerre. The Love of Study, together with old Age, induced him to reſide upon his Dioceſe; and he had not the Courage to oppoſe the Torrent of Rebellion (24). Sebaſtian Roulliard does not ſpeak of him in this manner; but inſinuates that he was ill uſed for his Fidelity. "Afflictions, ſay he (25), overtook him, "when he left the States of Blois, in the Year 1589; "for, through the Fury of the Troubles, which grew "hot at that time, he was robbed and plundered "half-way in his return to Auxerre; and, being ar- "rived there, he met with great Vexation from the "Inhabitants, and even his Clergy. At laſt, things "were pacified by Degrees; ſo that he continued "his Reſidence, but daily complained, that the Loſs "of his Eſtate, and of the Conveniencies he enjoyed "before, deprived him of the Pleaſure of Study." Sammarthius owns indeed, that ſome ill Reports had been ſpread, but does not believe them to be true (26).

(24) Thuan. ubi ſupra.

(25) Roull. ubi ſupra. pag. 612.

(26) Sammarth. in Elog. p. 96.

[H] He died the ſixth of February 1593, in his Seventy ninth Year.] Thuanus applied himſelf to Perſons, very ill informed concerning Amyot, ſince they could neither tell him, when he died, nor at what Age. He ſays, in general, that Amyot, whoſe Death he places in the Month of July, 1591, was above ſixty Years of Age. Sammarthius places it in the Year 1592. "Triennio poſt Henricum tertium de- "teſtabili parricidarum coitione ſublatum è vivis ex- "ceſſit (27). —— He died three Years after the de- "teſtable Aſſaſſination of Henry III."

(27) Id. ib.

[I] He attempted Poetry, but without Succeſs.] Sebaſtian Roulliard, his Countryman, would doubtleſs have ſpared him on this Head, if it had been poſſible. Theſe are his Words: "As for the Latin "Poem, out of a Life of Amyot, begun by himself, and finished by his Secretary (b). His Translations are the best of his Compositions [K], though the Critics are not all favourable to him [L] upon this Account; some of whom tax him with Plagiarism [M]. Others have imputed Avarice to him [N]. The Abbot de St Real was acquainted with many curious Particulars, which are not in the Life of Amyot (i). They are to be seen in Moreri's Dictionary: Which is the Reason why I omit them, though I have no reason to question the Truth of them. If I have any Supplement, or Explication, to add to what I have said, I shall give them in the Remarks.

Digitized by Google

What Varillas relates concerning Amyot is full of Falshoods [O]. It stands in need of a Critical Examination; which may serve to disembroil the Chaos.

(b) It is in Latin, and has not been printed; but Sebastian Roulliard Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who read it, published an Abstract of it in his Antiquitez de Melun, pag. 605. I have taken this Article from that Abstract.

(i) See his Treatise of the Use of History. Mr Teissier has borrow'd from it whatever relates to Amyot, (always citing his Author) in his Additions to the Elogies taken from Thuanus, Tom. 2. pag. 152.

"Poem, which he wrote on the Coronation of King "Charles IX, it appears from thence that he had "read Horace very much; but he would have proved "a very indifferent Poet (28)." The Translation of Greek Verses into French, to which Amyot confined himself in his Plutarch, is frightful. Charles IX thought it very coarse, in which his Opinion was followed by many others (29). Roulliard alledges a pitiful excuse; "It is, says he, a Collection out of several Authors, "and of different Styles." His Opinion of Amyot's Prose is This. "In short, says he, in my Opinion "he was more happy in Translation, than in "Composition, either in French or Latin: for what "I have seen of the latter appears to me strangely "heavy and dull."

(28) Roul'iard's Antiquities of Melun, pag. 614.

(29) Id. ib.

[K] His Translations are the best of his Compositions.] The first was That of The Loves of Theagenes and Chariclea; but That of Plutarch procured him his chief Reputation.. He translated likewise the Pastorals of Longus (30), several Books of Diodorus Siculus, and some Greek Tragedies. The Duchess of Savoy, not finding in Plutarch the Life of Epaminondas, nor that of Scipio, desired him to compose them. He did so; but they were not published. The Preface was ready. Peter Matthieu saw it (31), and therefore we may believe that Amyot had put the last hand to That Work. It is said (32), that he was afraid to undertake a Translation of Philostratus, though King Henry III. had often desired him to set about it; but he excused himself, on the Impossibility; and, when that Prince, having seen the Version of Vigenere, said to Amyot, Well, Sir! you told me that Philostratus could not be translated; Amyot answered, that 'till then he had thought so.

(30) It is thus we must render the Longi Pœmenica of Thuanus, and not with du Ryer, The Poemenics of Longus.

(31) Bullart's Academy of Sciences, p. 108.

(32) Du Verdier Vau-Privas, Prosopograph. Tom. 3. p. 2572.

[L] The Critics are not all favourable to him.] Mr Baillet has happily collected the Praises bestowed upon Amyot's Translation of Plutarch (33). They are fine and greatly to his Credit. I add to them what I heard Mr Conrart say in the Year 1675, upon being told, that most of the Copies of Plutarch, translated by the Abbot Tallemant, had been lost in the burning of a Bookseller's Warehouse; The Loss, said he, will be easily born, whilst we have the Translation of Amyot, which contains the finest Turns of our Language, and the best Oeconomy of our Periods. Mr Baillet has not been less careful in collecting the Censures of That Work: He did not forget, that Thuanus commends This Translator's Elegancy in his Versions of Diodorus and Plutarch, more than his Faithfulness. Diodoro ac præcipue Plutarcho, licet majore plerumque elegantia quam fide, Gallice redditis (34). But he forgot another Passage of Thuanus, mentioned by Mr de Girac. This last Author shall be the only one, whose Words I shall alledge, as a kind of Supplement to Mr Baillet's fine Collection; "As for Epitimius, says he (35), who is killed in "Amyot, whereas in the Greek Text it is only his "Horse; I should rather think, that this famous In- "terpreter made use of Copies, different from those "at present, than say, as Thuanus does *, that his "Versions are much more Polite, than Faithful, and "that he was not so curious after Truth, as studious, "even to Affectation, of pleasing delicate Ears. I "know that a learned † and wise Civilian charges "him with not comprehending a fine Piece of An- "tiquity in relation to a Law of Solon; for, instead "of saying, that this Lawgiver had boasted some- "where in his Poems, that he had delivered the "Athenians from all the Debts they had contracted, "and taken away the Wisps of lighted Straw, or "Pennons ‖, which were fixed in many Places on "Mortgaged Lands; he had rendered it Removing the "Boundaries ‡, which before separated the Inheri- "tances of the whole Territory of Attica. I could "add several Remarks on many Passages, in which "good Amyot was mistaken; but I cannot commend "Mr de Meziriac, who  in a Discourse concerning "Translations, after having praised the Wit, Labour, "and Style of this Eloquent Translator in his Version "of Plutarch, pretends to shew that he has grossly mi- "staken the Sense of Plutarch in Two thousand Places."

(33) Jugem. des Sçavans, Tom. 4. p. 521. See also Sir Thomas Pope Blount, Censura celebr. Aut. pag. 521.

(34) Thuan. Hist. l. 100. pag. 405.

(35) Girac's Reply to Costar, § 51. pag. 438. Dutch Edit.

* Amiotus hic Poëmenica Longi, Heliodori Æthiopica, Diodori Siculi Historica, ac postremo Plutarchum in linguam nostram Gallicam de Græcis verterat, sed hunc majore elegantia quam fide, dum auribus nostris placere, quam de sensus veritate laborare, potius existimat. Thuan. de Vita sua, Lib. 5.

† L'Oiseau, de l'action hypotheque (Of Mortgaging) book 3. ποτηγόταϛ. Ὅτι τὴϛ τὸ προὔτοκειμενηϛ γῆϛ ὅρηϛ ἀνεῖλε πελλαχῆ Quod sustulit signa oppignoratis Terris passim affixa.

‡ Marks or Signals to distinguish mortgaged Lands.

[M] Some of whom tax him with Plagiarism.] We have seen (36), what Brantome says on this Subject. Let us now see what others have said concerning it. "I have heard M. Patin say, says Mr Colo- "mies (37), that he had it from the good Man "Lawrence Bochel (who caused the Decrees of the "Gallican Church, &c. to be printed) that Amyot "had translated Plutarch's Lives from an old Italian "Version in the King's Library, and that this was the "Cause of the Faults he had committed. I cannot "tell whether this Version be That, which Baptist "Alexander Jaconel of Rieti made from the Latin, "in the Year 1428, which is in the same Library." La Popeliniere censures Amyot for denying Turnebus the Honour which was due to him, in not informing the Public of the Assistance he had from him in understanding the difficult Passages (38). He pretends, that Turnebus sent him whole Passages turned into French, where Amyot was at a loss, and that several other learned Men assisted him with their good Advice (39).

(36) Above, in Remark [A].

(37) Colomies, Opuse. pag. 124. Edit. of Utrecht.

(38) Popelin's Compleat Idea of History, lib. 3. pag. 259.

(39) History of Historics, pag. 359.

[N] Others have imputed Avarice to him.] I have cited a long Passage of Brantome in the Remark [A], wherein Charles IX. taxes his Preceptor with this Fault. Another Book informs me, that Amyot, asking one Day a Benefice of a great Revenue, That Prince said to him, How now Master? you told me, that if you had a thousand Crowns a Year, you would be satisfied; I believe you have that and more. Sir, answered he, Appetite comes by eating; and yet he obtained what he desired (40). You may if you please look upon the Two hundred thousand Crowns, which he amassed, as an ambiguous Proof of his Avarice (41).

(40) Du Verdier's Prosopography, Tom. 3. pag. 2573.

(41) See Remark [A] at the end.

[O] What Varillas relates — is full of Falshoods.] He says, that, the Court of Francis I. stopping some Hours at the Castle of a Gentleman of Berry, Amyot, who was Preceptor in the Gentleman's House, "took "Occasion to present to his Majesty an Epigram "of four Greek Verses, which he had just composed. "The learned Persons, who followed his Majesty, "were so well pleased with the Epigram, that it "was thought improper to leave the Author of it "any longer in a Province so remote from Paris. "The King took him into his Service, and gave "him a considerable Pension (42). This whole Account is full of Transpositions of Circumstances; for we have seen (43), that the good Effect which some of Amyot's Greek Verses, presented to Henry II, produced, is attributed to Michael de l' Hospital. Varillas relates in another Book (44), that Amyot, Professor of the Greek Tongue at Bourges, made himself known to the Court by his Politeness in writing French, and that Bouchetel and Morvillier, Secretaries of State, recalled him at that time to Paris, and, having brought him back to the Communion of the Catholic Church, recommended him to Cardinal de Tournon, who procured him the Abbey of Bellosane, and the Commission of Secretary to the Ambassador at Venice, from whence he set out to execute the King's Orders at Trent, in the Year 1551. Thus this Historian refutes in one Book what he advances in another. He adds, that Amyot made a Speech before the Fathers of the Council: He gives the Substance of it, and quotes Amyot's Speech. But this Speech is a Chimera; Amyot only read the King's Protest. What Assurance is it to cite Manuscripts, which ne-

(42) Varillas's History of Heresy, lib. 10. pag. 310. Dutch Edit.

(43) In Remark [C].

(44) Varillas's History of Henry II. lib. 2. pag. 204.

Digitized by Google

ver were in Being? Varillas affirms, that, at the Age of ten Years, Amyot was found ſick on the Road to Paris lying near a Ditch, and that "a Gentleman going by - - - - - - ſet him upon his Horſe, and carried him to a Houſe, which was near; where he recovered, and was charitably furniſhed with ſixteen Pence for the Expences of his Journey home; which he afterwards repaid with Uſury, by leaving to the Heirs of his Benefactor Sixteen hundred Crowns a Year (45)." 'Tis ſaid in Amyot's Life, that he left Twelve hundred Crowns to the Hoſpital of Orleans (46). It was there that the Gentleman carried him; there he was cured; and there he received ſixteen Pence: It was to That Hoſpital that he left afterwards a Legacy of Twelve hundred Crowns, according to the Relation of Mr de St Real (47). Why does Varillas alter theſe Circumſtances, and exaggerate Amyot's Gratitude? Why does he by his Hyperboles convert a meer Legacy of Three thouſand ſix hundred Livres into a yearly Rent of Six thouſand two hundred Livres (48). He tells us, that "Amyot, being a Student, changed his Religion, and was inſtrumental in ſeducing his School-Fellows; 'till, being diſcovered, he fled to Bourges; where the ſame Volmar, who had inſtructed Calvin and Beza, procured him a Tutor's Place in the Houſe of the Abbot of St Ambroſe, whoſe Nephews were committed to his Care; and choſe him aſtwards for his Succeſſor in teaching Greek. Amyot was ſoon weary of teaching publickly." This Account cannot be reconciled with the Memoirs of Amyot's Life, publiſhed by Sebaſtian Roulliard. We find there, that he was about Twenty three Years of Age, when he went to Bourges with the Abbot of St Ambroſe, who perſuaded him to undertake That Journey (49), and therefore he went thither in the Year 1537. Now Volmar left Bourges in the Year 1535 (50), and conſequently it was not He, who introduced him to the Acquaintance of that Abbot. We find in the ſame Memoirs, that Amyot filled the Profeſſor's Place ten Years, and that he was often heard to ſay among his Friends, that he had a ſufficient Maintenance; that he had never enjoyed better Times than thoſe; and that he took great Delight in performing That Function, becauſe he was perfectly at his Eaſe (51). And therefore 'tis not true, that he was ſoon weary of teaching publickly. Varillas obſerves, that Bouchetel and Morvillier repreſented to him the Obſtacles, which his Hereſy threw in the Way of his Salvation, and of his Fortune, and that he profited by their Advice. Bouchetel knew him, then, to be a Calviniſt; but would he, in ſuch a Caſe, have made him Tutor to his Children, as he actually did (52)?

(45) Varillas, ibid. p. 203.

(46) See Remark [A].

(47) St Real, of the Uſe of Hiſtory, pag. 75.

(48) Varillas, ibid. pag. 204.

(49) Roulliard's Antiq. of Melun. p. 607.

(50) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Philoſoph. p. 233.

(51) Roulliard, ubi ſupra.

(52) Roulliard. ibid.

AMYRAUT (in Latin AMYRALDUS) (MOSES) Miniſter, and Profeſſor of Divinity, at Saumur, was one of the moſt illuſtrious Divines of France, in the XVIIth Century. He was of a good and ancient Family, which came originally from Orleans [A]; and he was born at Bourgueil, a ſmall Town of Touraine, in the Month of September, 1596. Having performed his Courſe of Philoſophy, he was ſent to Poitiers, to ſtudy the Civil Law; and applied himſelf to it with ſo much diligence, that he ſpent 14 Hours every day in Study. He became a Licentiate at the end of one Year (a), but proceeded no farther. Mr Bouchereau his Countryman, and Miniſter of Saumur, adviſed him to ſtudy Divinity. The reading of Calvin's Inſtitutions gave him an high Reliſh for this Advice; ſo that, having told his Father, who had his views in deſigning him for the Bar [B], that he paſſionately deſired to be a Miniſter, he obtained, though with much difficulty, the Conſent, which he deſired. He went to ſtudy at Saumur, under Cameron, who loved and eſteemed him in a particular manner; and he was for a conſiderable time a Student in Divinity. When he was admitted a Miniſter, he was preſented to the Church of St Aignan, in the Country of Maine, where having lived eighteen Months, he was invited to Saumur, to ſucceed Mr Daillé, who quitted his Poſt, to be Miniſter of Charenton (b). At the ſame time, that the Church of Saumur deſired to have him for their Miniſter, the Academical Council caſt their Eyes upon him for the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity. By this means the Church of Rouen and Tours, who at the ſame time requeſted him of the Synod, were diſappointed in their Hopes; for the National Synods had made a Regulation, that the Intereſt of the Univerſities ſhould be preferred to That of the Churches. His Admiſſion to the Profeſſorſhip in 1633, his Examination, which preceded it, and his Inaugural Theſis, de Sacerdotio Chriſti, procured him great Applauſe. Two other excellent Profeſſors were admitted with him, to wit, Lewis Cappel, and Joſhua de la Place: Thus the Univerſity of Saumur obtained, at one and the ſame time, Three Perſons who were extremely well qualified to make it flouriſh; for, beſides

(a) In 1616.

(b) We find in Mr Daillé's Life, that he was invited to Paris in 1626.

[A] Of a good and ancient Family, which came originally from Orleans.] His Great-Grand-father, Stephen L'Amyrault, was Echevin * of Orleans, when the Common Law was reformed there in 1509. The Verbal Proceſs of the Common Law proves this. It is pretended, that the firſt of the Family was one L'Amyrault, on whoſe Tomb is inſcribed the Year 1370; which is to be ſeen in the Church of St Pierre en Pont. His Epitaph ſays, that he came from Haguenaw, a Town of Alſace, being Captain of a Company of Reiſters †. This Family were Benefactors to the Convent and Church of the Minimes at Orleans, and, as ſuch, their Coat of Arms is to be ſeen upon the Glaſs Windows of the Church. Let me obſerve, by the way, that an Engliſhman of the Romiſh Communion has very ill latiniz'd the Name of Amyraut; for, inſtead of Amyraldus, he calls him Amurath. This would be but a ſmall Fault; if, by a cold and mean Alluſion, he had not added to it a very ridiculous Doubt. "Moſes quidam Amurath, ſays he (1), Miniſter Salmurienſis, homo ſaltem nomine (neſcio an & progenie) Judæo-Turca - - - - - One Moſes Amurath, Miniſter of Saumur, a Man, in Name at leaſt (if not by Birth) a Jew-Turk." In the following Pages he calls him Amyrath. The following Words of Father Bartolocci are very ſurprizing. "Moſes Amyraldus, ſays he (2), videtur Judæus Converſus ad fidem, ſcripſitque eruditiſſimam & Catholicam diſſertationem de Myſterio Trinitatis, deque vocibus, & phraſibus, quibus tam in ſcriptura, quam apud Patres explicatur. Pars IV. quæ eſt de Primordiis Revelationis Myſterii Trinitatis in veteri Teſtamento, habetur in libro Wagenſeilii inſcripto, Tela Ignea Satanæ, pag. 140. —— Moſes Amyraut ſeems to have been a Jew, converted to the Faith; he wrote a moſt Learned and Catholic Diſſertation on the Myſtery of the Trinity, and on the Words and Phraſes, by which it is explained, both in Scripture, and in the Writings of the Fathers. The fourth Part, which treats of the Beginning of the Revelation of the Myſtery of the Trinity, in the Old Teſtament, is to be found in a Book of Wagenſeilius, entitled, The Fiery Darts of Satan." Thus the moſt famous Authors are ſometimes unknown to one another. Father Bartolocci, not knowing Mr Amyraut, otherwiſe than by a Piece adopted by Mr Wagenſeil, took him in earneſt for a converted Jew.

[B] His Father, who had his Views in deſigning him for the Bar.] He intended him for the Office of Seneſchal, poſſeſſed by his Uncle, who had no Children.

[C] He

* A kind of Sheriff.

† The German Horſe, which came into France, during the Regency of Catherine de Medicis.

(1) In his Notes upon ſome Extracts of Edward Dering's Speeches. This was printed at London, in 1659, with a Piece intitled, Nuncius à mortuis, (News from the Dead) which is a Dialogue between the Ghoſts of Henry VIII. and Charles I.

(2) Bartol. Biblioth. Rabin. Tom. 4. pag. 66.

Digitized by Google

beſides their great Learning, there was a wonderful Sympathy between them; which produced a very uſeful and happy Agreement; a Circumſtance, which deſerves the greater Commendation, as it is rarely to be met with in Academic Land. Mr Amyraut was deputed to the National Synod of Charenton in the Year 1631. This Aſſembly choſe him to make a Speech to the King, and to repreſent to his Majeſty their Complaints concerning the Infractions of the Edicts. He was particularly charged to order it ſo, as not to deliver his Speech upon his Knees [C], as the Deputies of the laſt National Synod had done; and he managed the Affair with ſo much Dexterity and Reſolution, that he was at laſt admitted to his Audience according to the ancient Uſage, and according to the Deſire of the Aſſembly (c). This Deputation brought him acquainted with Cardinal de Richelieu, who was ſurprized to find ſo many Qualities in him, which did not ſavour of the Man of Study. Some time after he publiſhed a Piece, wherein he explained the Myſtery of Predeſtination and Grace, according to the Hypotheſis of Cameron [D]. This Piece raiſed a kind of Civil War among the Proteſtant Divines of France [E]. They, who diſliked this Hypotheſis, decried it as a Novelty, eſpecially when they ſaw the great du Moulin join them; who inceſſantly accuſed Mr Amyraut of oppoſing the Synod of Dort, and of favouring Arminianiſm. The Authority of this famous Divine, who had gained the Veneration

(c) The Speech, which he made to the King, is inſerted in the Mercure François for 1631.

[C] He was particularly charged to order it ſo, as not to deliver his Speech on his Knees.] Mr Amyraut was the Perſon, who repreſented the State of the Queſtion to the Synod; and who promiſed, at the ſame time, to make all poſſible Inſtances, if the Aſſembly gave him their Inſtructions about it. They charged him, then, to demand the Reſtoration of the Privilege, which the Miniſters had enjoy'd, of ſpeaking to his Majeſty ſtanding, as the Clergy of the Kingdom do. He went, accompanied by two Elders, to Monceaux, where the Court was; and, having applied to Monſ. de la Vrilliere, Secretary of State, he underſtood from him, that the King expected, that the Deputies of the Synod ſhould not addreſs him in any other Manner, than thoſe of the preceding Synod had done. There being always a Commiſſary on the part of the King in our Synods, he, who aſſiſted at that Time in the National Synod of Charenton, had notified to the King, what they had commiſſioned the Deputies to ask; and, the Court not thinking fit to grant their Requeſt, Monſ. de la Vrilliere was ordered to declare this Reſolution immediately to the Deputies. Mr Amyraut repreſented to him very dextrouſly, and, at the ſame time, very reſpectfully, the Reaſons of the Synod; and above a Fortnight paſſed without any Conceſſions on either Side. Cardinal de Richelieu, being informed of this Miniſter's Reſolution, deſired to confer with him on that Subject, and endeavoured to perſuade him not to inſiſt any longer upon it. He anſwered, and replied to all the moſt plauſible Reaſons alledged by the Cardinal; at laſt an Audience was granted, in the manner Mr Amyraut deſired. The Cardinal diſcourſed ſeveral times with him concerning the Complaints of the Proteſtants, and was mightily pleaſed with this Miniſter's Wit and Behaviour.

[D] He publiſhed a Piece, wherein he explained the Myſtery of Predeſtination, according the Hypotheſis of Cameron.] A Roman Catholic of Quality occaſioned this Piece. He had dined, with Mr Amyraut, at Bourgueil, at the Biſhop of Chartres', to whom this Miniſter was very well known (3). After Dinner, he turned the Converſation upon a Matter of Controverſy, and charged the Proteſtants with teaching very harſh Doctrines concerning Predeſtination. Mr Amyraut took up the Diſpute; and there enſued a kind of Controverſy, in a very civil way, between him and the Biſhop of Chartres, on this difficult Queſtion. The Evening being come, the Company parted; the next Day Mr Amyraut, in his return to Saumur, called upon the Perſon of Quality (4), as he had promiſed, and found him well affected to the Proteſtant Religion, but very unſatisfied with the Doctrine of Predeſtination, as Calvin had explained it. He removed his Scruples, as well as he could; and, in compliance with the Gentleman's Requeſt, who deſired him to write a Treatiſe, in which the Subject might be more fully diſcuſſed, than it could be in Converſation, he wrote and publiſhed (5) the Book, which I am ſpeaking of. This is what I find in my Manuſcript Memoirs. Mr Amyraut does not give this Reaſon for compoſing this Piece; he aſſigns another, which is very different (6).

(3) He was of the Houſe of Etampes Valençai, and was afterwards Archbiſhop of Rheims.

(4) At Pleſſis-Rideau.

(5) In 1634.

(6) Præfat. Speciminis Animadverſ. de Gratia Univerſ.

[E] A kind of Civil War among the Proteſtant Divines of France.] This Diſpute was conſiderable enough to furniſh out a large Article in the Eccleſiaſtical Annals of the Proteſtants. The Engliſh Author of a very curious Hiſtory of our Synods of France (7), can inform us of the Quarrels, which the Doctrine of Univerſal Grace raiſed there. I think it would be a cruel Reflexion, to ſay, that the firſt Movers of this Queſtion would have done it, though they had foreſeen all the Evils, which were to reſult from it: For where is the Uſe, the Cui bono of ſuch Diſputes? Will no Difficulty remain, provided the Hypotheſis of Cameron be admitted? Is it not true, on the contrary, that there never was a Remedy more palliative than that? Something farther is wanting to ſatisfy Reaſon; and if you ſtop here, you might as well have ſtaid where you was, and have ſtuck to Particulariſm. But granting, that Univerſaliſm has in ſome reſpects the Advantage, and furniſhes the beſt Anſwers to ſome Objections; is that ſufficient to counter-balance ſo many ſpiritual Crimes, which Factions draw after them, ſo many wicked Surmiſes, ſo many ſiniſter Interpretations, ſo many falſe Imputations, ſo much Animoſity, ſo many injurious Words, ſo many Libels, and ſo many other Confuſions, which attend upon ſuch a Theological War? If you believe, that Particulariſm damns People, you do well to refute it at any rate. I ſay the ſame to thoſe, who may take Univerſaliſm to be a damnable Hereſy. But, ſince, on either ſide, you do not pretend to refute a pernicious Opinion, diſpute no farther than is conſiſtent with the Public Peace; and be ſilent, when the Event ſhews you, that you divide Families, or that two Parties are forming. Continue not to rouze a thouſand Paſſions, which ought to be chained up, like ſo many wild Beaſts; and Wo be to you, if you are the Occaſion of their breaking their Chains. Thank Heaven, the Civil War of univerſal Grace, and ſome others, have not deſerved the Application, which was made, in my hearing, of ſome Verſes to ſchiſmatical Diſputes. The Preparations, and the auxiliary Troops of the two Leaders, were compared to theſe Decorations of the Stage.

(7) John Quick, a London Miniſter: His book, intituled, Synodicon in Gallia reformata, was printed in Fol. 1692.

A Reflexion on the Miſchiefs occaſioned by Theological Diſputes.

Aigles, Vautours, Serpens, Griffons,
Hippocentaures, & Typhons,
Des taureaux furieux, dont la gueule beante
Eût tranſi de frayeur le grand cheval d' Atlante,
Un char que des dragons étincelans d' éclairs
Promenoient en ſifflant par le vuide des airs,
Demogorgon encor à la triſte figure,
Et l' Horreur & la Mort s'y voyoient en peinture (8).

(8) See Æſchylus's Life, written by Tanaquil Faber.

Theatric Horrors ſtrike upon the Sight;
Eagles and Vultures on the Scene ariſe;
With hiſſing Serpents, winged Griffins join,
Typhons with Hippocentaurs; furious Bulls,
Whoſe gaping Mouths affright Atlanta's Horſe;
A Car, by fiery Dragons drawn through Air,
With Demogorgon, dreadful to behold;
And Death and Horror cloſe the pictur'd Scene.

Mr Amyraut had the Satisfaction to be reconciled to his moſt violent Oppoſers; and, tho' it be not neceſſary, that the Great ſhould always interpoſe in pacifying

Digitized by Google

ration of the People by many Books of Controverſy, made ſuch an Impreſſion upon ſeveral Miniſters, that, though Mr Amyraut had publiſhed a piece (d), in which he maintained, that Calvin had taught the Doctrine of Univerſal Grace, there appeared, in the National Synod of Alençon (e) ſeveral Deputies, charged with Inſtructions againſt Him; ſome of whom were ſo hot, that they talked of nothing but depoſing him [F]. The Deputies of the Provinces beyond the Loire were the moſt violent againſt him. Nevertheleſs the Aſſembly, having heard Mr Amyraut, who explained his Opinion in ſeveral Seſſions, and who ſolved the Difficulties, which were propoſed to him, honourably acquitted him, and enjoyned a Silence in reſpect to theſe Queſtions, which was not too well obſerved. Complaints were made againſt Mr Amyraut, in the National Synod of Charenton, in 1645, for having acted contrary to the Regulation, which impoſed this Silence; and He, in his turn, complained of ſome Violations of the ſame Regulations (f). The Aſſembly, by an holy Amneſty, ſuppreſſed theſe reciprocal Complaints, renewed the Injunctions of Silence, diſmiſt Mr Amyraut with Honour, and permitted him to oppoſe Foreigners, who ſhould write againſt him, in what manner the Synod of Anjou ſhould think proper. This Synod permitted him to publiſh an Anſwer to the three Volumes of Spanhemius concerning Univerſal Grace [G], which occaſioned many other Books (g). During the National Synod of the Year 1645, Mr Amyraut was deſired by the Aſſembly to enter into Conference with Mr de la Milletiere, in order to bring him over to His Opinion. The Conference continued ſeveral Days; but they did not come to a better Agreement in this oral Diſputation, than they had done in the Books, which they had already publiſhed againſt each other. The Doctrine of Mr de la Place concerning Original Sin was attacked in That Synod. Mr Amyraut, hearing of it, appeared before the Aſſembly, to plead the Cauſe of his Colleague, and ſhewed, in a long Diſcourſe, that the Doctrine complained of was not at all dangerous. This Action was not only extolled on account of the great Skill, with which the Doctrine of Mr de la Place was defended, but alſo becauſe Mr Amyraut's only aim was the Intereſt of his Colleague; for his own Opinion in that point was not That of Mr de la Place. If I add, that Mr Cappel diſſented from the common Opinion of the Proteſtants concerning the Antiquity of the Points of the Hebrew Text, I ſhall have mentioned all the Complaints, which were made againſt the Academy of Saumur. But, notwithſtanding theſe Complaints, a great Number of Students in Divinity reſorted thither; which viſibly decreaſed, after the death of theſe three illuſtrious Profeſſors (h). Mr Amyraut ſurvived his two Colleagues, and had time to publiſh a very great (d) Intituled A Specimen of Calvin's Doctrine.

(e) In 1637.

(f) Blondel, Actes authent. p. 36.

(g) Blondel, ibid. pag. 40, 41.

(h) They are the Authors of what is called Theſes Salmurienſes; a Work very much eſteemed.

Quarrels; yet the Prince of Tarentum imploy'd his good Offices in this Reconciliation, in the Year 1649. I know not whether the contending Parties gave him more trouble, than the Marſhals of France meet with from the Differences, which fall under their Cogniſance; however he ſucceeded in his Undertaking (9), and perhaps better than a Synod would have done. As to his Reconciliation with Mr du Moulin, it was brought about by Mr de Langle, Miniſter of Rouen. Upon the firſt Propoſal, Mr Amyraut joyfully conſented, and offered to make all the Advances. He wrote a Letter firſt; which Mr du Moulin anſwered very civilly. Theſe letters were publiſhed for the Edification of the Church. They are dated in the Year 1655. Mr Daillé has inſerted Mr du Moulin's Anſwer in one of his Books (10). Reaſon and Charity allow us to believe, that they, who made ſo much Noiſe, and raiſed ſo many Storms againſt a Doctrine, which they afterwards acknowledged to be harmleſs, and the Aſſerter of which ſeem'd at laſt, in their Opinion, a faithful Servant of God, did not die without being covered with Shame and Confuſion, at leaſt before the Throne of the Divine Majeſty, when they reflected on that mortifying Prepoſſeſſion, which had repreſented to them an innocent, inoffenſive, Hypotheſis, as a dangerous and ſhocking Doctrine. See what follows.

(9) He reconciled (in the Caſtle of Thouars, October 16. 1649) Mr Amyraut with Mr de Champvernou, Miniſter of Taillebourg, and with Mr Vincent, Miniſter of Rochelle. See the Actes Authentiques, by David Blondel, pag. 85. This Champvernou was called William Rivetus, and was the Brother of Andrew Rivetus, Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden.

(10) Vindiciæ Apologiæ, &c. pag. 418.

[F] Some of whom were ſo hot, that they talked of nothing but depoſing him.] Had they lived thirty or forty Years longer, they muſt have been greatly mortified; for, at laſt, that Doctrine, which they judged worthy of the moſt thundering Anathema's, was found to be that of the greateſt Men, who ſerved the reformed Churches of France. It was the Doctrine of Mr Meſtrezat, Mr le Faucheur, Mr Blondel, Mr Daillé, Mr Claudé, Mr du Boſc. The Particulariſts were ſoon obliged to acknowledge the Favourers of Univerſal Grace for their Brethren, and faithful Miniſters of JESUS CHRIST; and we have ſeen, that the French Miniſters, who fled into Holland, and who ſign'd a Formulary in the Synod of Rotterdam, in the Year 1686, were not obliged to make any Declaration, which reflected in the leaſt upon the Syſtem of Mr Amyraut (11). From whence, then, came the Clamour, which was raiſed at firſt againſt that Syſtem? Whence was it, that the ſame Doctrine was accounted at firſt a Monſter, and afterwards an innocent Thing? Muſt we not in this acknowledge the Finger of Original Sin, and the Influence of a thouſand dark Paſſions, which ought at laſt to produce in us, if we are of the Number of the Elect, a ſalutary and mortifying Humiliation? The worſt is, Men do not profit by what is paſt; every Generation betrays the ſame Symptoms, ſometimes in a greater, ſometimes in a leſs Degree. For we ſhall often have occaſion to ſay, when we ſee Caſes, Denunciations, Apologies, and Diſputations, take the Field, and whole Vollies of Books fly about;

(11) See Remark [M] of the Article Daillé.

Jamque faces & ſaxa volant—— (12).

Now Stones and Brands in rattling Vollies fly,
And all the Arms, which Fury can ſupply.
DRYDEN.

(12) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 154.

but let them alone; they will ſoon agree;

Hi motus animorum, atque hæc certamina tanta
Pulveris exigui jactu compreſſa quieſcunt (13).

Yet all theſe dreadful Deeds, this deadly Fray,
A caſt of ſcatter'd Duſt will ſoon allay,
And undecided leave the Fortune of the Day.
DRYDEN.

(13) Virgil. Georg. lib. 4. ver. 86.

But this cannot always be ſaid. Things are ſometimes carried to extremities: Res in nervum erumpit.

[G] This Synod permitted him to publiſh an Anſwer to Spanhemius's three Volumes concerning Univerſal Grace.] It is entituled, Specimen Animadverſionum in Exercitationes de Gratia Univerſali; and was printed at Saumur, in 1648, in 4to. It is not true, as is inſerted in the Melange Critique, Tom. I. pag. 129, that Mr Amyraut attack'd Spanhemius firſt, nor that his Work is againſt the Theſis of Spanhemius. It is againſt a Work of the latter, in three Volumes; who was likewiſe the Aggreſſor.

[H] He

Digitized by Google

great number of Books [H]. He wrote as readily as he ſpoke; and this is to ſaya great deal; for he had a ſurprizing Fluency of Tongue both in Latin and French, and as well in his Divinity Lectures, as in his Sermons. He knew the World; and could furniſh a great Variety of Matter for Converſation, in Points, which did not belong to his Profeſſion: And, doubtleſs, it was This, which contributed, as much, or more, than the Reputation of his Learning, to the Happineſs he enjoyed, all his Life, of being conſidered and reſpected by the great Men of the Contrary Religion. I have already obſerved, that Cardinal de Richelieu had a great Eſteem for him: I ſhall not add, that he communicated to him his Grand Deſign of re-uniting the two Churches [I]; for this would not be a ſufficient Proof of his great Regard for him; ſince the Cardinal had founded ſeveral Miniſters upon this Head, who were much inferior to Amyraut. The Marſhal de Breze [K], and the Marſhal de la Meilleraie [L], ought to be reckoned among the great Lords, who had a particular Eſteem for our Amyraut. Mr le Goux de la Berchere, firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Burgundy [M], and [H] He publiſhed a great Number of Book.] He publiſhed his Treatiſe of Religions in 1631. Five Years after he publiſhed ſix Sermons on the Nature, Extent, &c, of the Goſpel. He publiſhed ſeveral other Sermons at different Times. His Book concerning the Elevation of Faith, and Abaſement of Reaſon appeared in 1641. The Defence of Calvin in relation to the Doctrine of Abſolute Reprobation appeared in Latin the ſame Year, and in French in the Year 1644. He begun his Paraphraſes on the Scripture in 1644. The Epiſtle to the Romans was paraphraſed firſt; he then proceeded to the other Epiſtles, and concluded with the Goſpels; but he had the Prudence, as well as Calvin, not to meddle with St John's Revelation. For fear his Name ſhould hinder the Roman Catholics from reading his Paraphraſes, he did not prefix it. In 1647, he publiſhed an Apology for the Proteſtants, a Treatiſe of Free Will, and another De Seceſſione ab Eccleſia Romana, deque pace inter Evangelicos in negotio religionis conſtituenda. He treated more amply afterwards of the Re-union of the Calviniſts and Lutherans, in his Irenicon, printed in the Year 1662. His Book, Of the Calling of Paſtors, was publiſhed in 1649. He preached on that Subject before the Prince of Tarentum, during the holding of a Provincial Synod, of which he was Moderator. This Prince deſired that the Sermon might be printed, and that the Matter might be more amply treated; for it was a great Common-Place Topick among the Miſſionaries. For which Reaſon Mr Amyraut not only printed his Sermon, but publiſhed alſo a compleat Treatiſe on that important Controverſy, and dedicated the whole to the Prince of Tarentum. His Chriſtian Morality, in ſix Volumes in Octavo, the firſt of which was printed in the Year 1652, was the Product of the Converſation he had often had with Mr de Villarnoul, a Lord of extraordinary Merit, and one of the moſt learned Gentlemen of Europe, who was Heir, in this reſpect likewiſe, to Mr du Pleſſis Mornai, his Grandfather, by the Mother's Side. There are but few Subjects, on which Mr Amyraut did not write. He publiſhed a Treatiſe of Dreams; two Volumes concerning the Millenium, in which he refutes an Advocate of Paris, whoſe Name is Mr de Launai, who was a great Chiliaſt * (14); the Life of the brave la Noue, ſurnamed Bras de fer, i. e. Iron-Arm: and ſeveral other Works which I omit, or mention in the Sequel of this Article. He mounted likewiſe on Parnaſſus; for he wrote a Poem, entituled, St Stephen's Apology to his Judges. This Work was attack'd from a Quarter, which was the leſs to be dreaded for certain Reaſons; for the Attack was not made by the Poets, but by the Miſſionaries. They pretended, that the Author had ſpoken of the holy Sacrament of the Altar, with the utmoſt Irreverence; but he publiſhed a Piece in his Vindication, of which I can ſay nothing more to the purpoſe, that what Mr Daillé has ſaid of it. Let us hear him then. "As for St Stephen's Apology to his Judges, which you (15) make uſe of to convict us of having abuſed your Sacrament; if you and they, who are ſo much offended at it, had vouchſafed to read the Letter, which the Author has publiſhed in Vindication of himſelf, you, and they, would not have entertained ſo ill an Opinion of it; nay, you would perhaps have wondered at the Illuſion, which your Prejudices had produced in your Mind, in pretending, that what he has written againſt the Extravagancy of Pagan Idolatry, was meant of you and your Tranſubſtantiation (16)."

* Millenarian.

(14) See pag. 129, 130. of Tom. 1. of M. Ancillon's Melange Critique de Literature.

(15) He addreſſes himſelf to Father Adam.

(16) Daillé, Reply to two Books of Adam and de Cottiby, part 2. chap. 17. p. 108.

[I] Cardinal de Richelieu - - - - - - - - communicated to him his grand Deſign of re-uniting the two Churches.] The Jeſuit, who diſcourſed with Mr Amyraut upon this Subject, was Father Audebert. Mr de Villeneuve, who was, at that time, the King's Lieutenant at Saumur, having engaged them to dine together, and with ſo much Complaiſance for the Miniſter, that he gave him the upper Hand of the Jeſuit, and that no Grace was ſaid at his Table for that Time, contrived it ſo, after Dinner, that they had a private Conference. It is true, Mr Amyraut declared he muſt neceſſarily communicate to his Collegues the whole Subject of their Conference. The Jeſuit told him, that the King, and his Eminence, had ſent him to make Propoſals of Agreement in Matters of Religion; and then gave him to underſtand, that they would ſacrifice to Peace the Invocation of Creatures, Purgatory, and the Merit of Works; that the Pope's Power ſhould be limited, and that, if the Court of Rome ſhould refuſe to conſent to it, they would take occaſion from thence to create a Patriarch; that the Cup ſhould be given to the Laity; and that, perhaps, they might give up ſome other Points, if they found a ſincere Inclination in the Proteſtants to Peace and Re-union. But he declared, when Mr Amyraut mentioned the Doctrine of the Euchariſt, that they were determined to make no Alteration in that; upon which the other replied, that, if ſo, there was an end of the Affair. Their Converſation laſted about four Hours; the Jeſuit would have exacted Secrecy. But Mr Amyraut proteſted to him, that, according to the Declaration he had made at firſt to Mr de Villeneuve, he muſt communicate their Conference to his Collegues; but that he would anſwer for their Diſcretion. That very Evening he gave them an Account of the Conference, and made no ſcruple to ſpeak of it, upon Occaſion, after the Death of Cardinal de Richelieu, and Father Audebert.

[K] The Marſhal de Breze —— had a particular Eſteem for him.] He was Governor of Saumur, and never went thither, without ſending to deſire Mr Amyraut to come and viſit him. He often invited him to his Caſtle of Milly, where he commonly reſided; and, when he received the News of the Death of his Son, the Duke of Fronſac, Admiral of France, he would always have Mr Amyraut near him. He received ſeveral Viſits from him in his laſt Sickneſs, and even recommended himſelf to his Prayers, and deſired to be prayed for in the Proteſtant Church of Saumur. He died in the Caſtle of Milly, in 1650.

[L] The Marſhal de la Meilleraie —— had a particular Eſteem for him.] When he was a Proteſtant, he ſtudied with Mr Amyraut at Saumur. He always remembred his old Acquaintance, and, the Day after his coming to Saumur, when the Court was there, in 1652, he ſent to compliment this Miniſter; who did not fail to go and pay his Reſpects to him immediately; and he was received by him, as uſual, with a thouſand Marks of Eſteem. This Marſhal hearing of Mr Amyraut's laſt Sickneſs, ſent a Gentleman to ſee him, and to tell him, that if his Gout would have permitted him to bear the Motion of a Coach, he would have paid him a Viſit. He was at that time at his Caſtle of Montreuil-Bellai, four Leagues from Saumur.

[M] Mr le Goux de la Berchere —— firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Burgundy, &c.] He was exiled to Saumur, in the Year 1637, where he lived 'till the Year 1644. Being himſelf a Man of great Merit and Learning, he was fond of learned Men of

Digitized by Google

and the Intendants of the Province of Anjou [N], are of this Number; and we may add to them ſome Biſhops and Archbiſhops [O], and, above all, Cardinal Mazarine [P], whoſe Civilities to this Profeſſor were extraordinary. It is very probable he found Favour with this Cardinal, among other Reaſons, becauſe he declared openly for the Doctrine of the Obedience of Subjects to their Princes. His Declaration was of Uſe to the Court of France, during the Commotions, in which the Fortune of Cardinal Mazarine was ſo much toſſed; and, on ſeveral other occaſions, he ſhewed that it was his favourite Doctrine [Q], ſo far as to quarrel about it with a Miniſter of Rochelle all Religions. He ſoon deſired to be acquainted with Mr Amyraut, and found him ſo worthy of his Friendſhip, that they became very intimate. They ſaw each other commonly twice a Week; ſo that it is no wonder, if this Miniſter could ſupply ſome Memoirs for the Life of that Preſident. It is not neceſſary to obſerve, that Mr de la Bercbere died firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Grenoble, and that his Brother ſucceeded him: but it may be proper to remark, that the latter, deſiring to have his Brother's Life written, requeſted Mr Amyraut to communicate his Memoirs of the Particulars, which paſſed between them. Mr Amyraut ſent him, among other things, the Account of the Conference, which he had with Father Audebert; for, as ſoon as the Report was ſpread in Saumur, that he had a private Conference with that Jeſuit, Mr de la Bercbere deſired an Account of it from his own Mouth. Mr Amyraut recited a great part of it, and deſired him not to mention it. That part of his Memoirs was not made uſe of in the Life of Mr de la Bercbere, which was publiſhed. In 1648 he dedicated his Book, Of the Rights of Marriage, to that illuſtrious Magiſtrate, who was at that time firſt Preſident of Grenoble.

[N] The Intendants of the Province of Anjou.] He never failed to wait upon them, and they all returned him his Viſit, and ſhewed a great Reſpect for him. When he went, in 1658, to drink the Waters of Bourbon, he received many Civilities at Bourges, from Mr Mandat, Intendant of the Province. He might have lodged at that Intendant's Houſe, who deſired it. He dined, there, with the Archdeacon of Bourges and ſome other Clergymen.

[O] Biſhops and Archbiſhops] See what is ſaid above (17), concerning the Biſhop of Chartres. I add here, that, in the Year 1662, the Archbiſhop of Paris, Hardouin de Perefixe, being gone to Saumur, on a Vow, which the Queen-Mother had made to Our Lady des Ardilliers (18), ſent Word to Mr Amyraut, that he ſhould be very glad to ſee him. Mr Amyraut was very ready to pay him a Viſit, but he let him know that he would not ſtyle him My Lord. The Archbiſhop, agreeing to this, received two Viſits from this Miniſter, diſcourſed two Hours with him every time, and treated him very civilly. They talked, among other things, of Mr Daillé's Books, which the Prelate gave a good Character of, as to the Learning in them.

(17) In Remark [D].

(18) In the Church of the Fathers of the Oratory, at the End of a Suburb of Saumur.

[P] And above all Cardinal Mazarine.] He came to Saumur in 1642, ſome Days after the King and the Queen-Mother; and, hearing, that a Sermon of Mr Amyraut had been much talked of at the Queen's Table, he deſired the Count de Comminges to tell that Miniſter, that he ſhould be very glad to be acquainted with him. This Count was Governor of Saumur, and had a great Affection for Mr Amyraut: He promiſed him, that the Proteſtants ſhould meet on Sundays as uſual, though the King was in the City; but he told him, at the ſame time, that they muſt omit their Aſſemblies the three firſt Days after the King's Arrival. This Promiſe was performed. Mr Amyraut preached on the Sunday, upon theſe Words, Fear God, Honour the King, and was heard by many Perſons of the Court, who were very well ſatisfied with him, and ſpoke of his Sermon with Commendation, not only to the King, as ſoon as they came from Church, but likewiſe in the Evening, during the Queen's Supper. It was then, that Cardinal Mazarine heard of this Sermon, and was informed by Mr de Comminges of the Zeal, which Mr Amyraut, and all the Proteſtants of thoſe Parts, had expreſſed for the King's Service in the laſt Troubles. The Cardinal was ſo deſirous to ſee this Miniſter, that he ſent him word of it the very next Morning, by the Judge of the Provoſtſhip: So that Mr de Comminges, finding that he was not the firſt Meſſenger, ſaid to Mr Amyraut, ſmiling: I ſee, Sir, that we ſhall ſoon ſtand in need of your Interceſſion with his Eminence; which will convince you of the Uſefulneſs of the Invocation of Saints. The firſt Viſit was very ſhort; but Mr Amyraut was deſired to come again the next Morning at eight o'Clock. The Cardinal ſhewed him all manner of Reſpect, made him ſit near the Fire, talked with him about State-Affairs, gave him a particular Account of all the Efforts, which were uſed in Xaintonge, to bring over the Proteſtants to the Prince's Party, and deſired him to endeavour to make all thoſe Attempts uſeleſs. Mr Amyraut aſſured him, that there was nothing to fear from the Proteſtants of France, and that he would write to ſeveral Miniſters of Xaintonge, to the end that the Synod, which they were ſpeedily to hold, ſhould authentically teſtify their Fidelity. The thing was performed. Two Days after this Audience, the Cardinal, under pretence of ſeeing the Proteſtant College, and the Library of Mr du Pleſſis Mornay, had another Conference with Mr Amyraut, in that Miniſter's Cloſet. They converſed about the Edict of Nantes, and, upon Mr Amyraut's being asked, whether Henry IV. was under an Obligation of making it, and anſwering yes, but that, if it were a meer Favour at firſt, the Obſervation of it would be indiſpenſible at preſent; the Cardinal told him, he was in the right, and cited this Maxim of Law, quod initio fuit voluntatis, ex poſt facto fit neceſſitatis. i. e. What at firſt is Voluntary, becomes afterwards Neceſſary. The Reader will be pleaſed to find here, what Mr de Guitaut (19) ſaid to Madam de la Trimouille, in the Queen's Preſence. "His Eminence is with "the Miniſter Amyraut; they are both Eccleſiaſtics; "but I am ſure they will not talk of Religion; his "Eminence will not find his Account in it." During the five Weeks that the King was at Saumur, Mr Amyraut paid the Cardinal ſeveral Viſits, and was always kindly received by him; and, when he took his leave, his Eminence told him, that he might write to him directly, whenever he had any Requeſt to make, either for the Party in general, or for his own private Intereſts. He made no uſe of this Permiſſion, 'till after the Journey he took to Paris, about the end of the Year 1658. He ſaw his Eminence three or four times, who uſed him with great Civility. He ſpoke to him about the National Synod, the calling of which had been deſired ſo many Years. The Cardinal anſwered, that the Reaſons, which had prevented the granting of it, ſtill ſubſiſted, and deſired Mr Amyraut to write to him about it. He did himſelf the Honour to write twice to him upon this Affair. The Cardinal anſwered him with his own Hand; and afterwards, whenever he returned him an Anſwer, he made uſe of his Secretary's Pen, but ſigned Proprio pugno, with his own Hand.

(19) He was Captain of the Queen's Guard, and Uncle to M. de Comminges.

[Q] And, on ſeveral other Occaſions, he ſhewed, that it was his favourite Doctrine.] In the Apology, which he publiſhed for the Proteſtants, in the Year 1647, he excuſes their Civil Wars in France, as well as he can; but he declares, nevertheleſs, "That he will "not in any wiſe pretend to juſtify the taking up Arms "againſt one's Prince, upon any Occaſion whatever, "—— and that he always believed it much more a- "greeable to the Nature of the Goſpel, and the "Practice of the Ancient Church, to have recourſe "to no other Arms, than Patience, Tears, and "Prayers (20). - - - - - And every time, ſays he (21), "that I reflect upon the Hiſtory of our Fathers, I "cannot help ſenſibly regretting, that they did not "crown ſo many other fine Virtues, of which they "have left us Examples, with an Imitation of the "firſt Chriſtians, in that invincible Patience, which "they ſhewed under the Perſecutions of the Empe- "rors." A Latin Piece (22) which he publiſhed two Years after, ſhews how he maintained his Cauſe againſt the Complaints of a Miniſter of Rochelle, who would have done better not to have taken notice of Mr Amyraut's Book, than to have taken Offence at it. The Book entituled, Of the Sovereignty of Kings, publiſhed

(20) Apology for the Proteſtants, pag. 75.

(21) Ibid. pag. 76.

(22) Intituled, Adverſus Epiſtolæ Hiſtoricæ Criminationes Moſis Amyraldi Defenſio.

Digitized by Google

Rochelle (i): but this did not hinder him, at the ſame time, from declaring, that, in Caſes of Conſcience, a King is not to be obeyed [R]. I need not ſay, that he was much reſpected by the great Proteſtant Lords. This is ſufficiently evident of itſelf. He quarrelled with a Miniſter of Saumur, whoſe Name was Mr d'Huiſſeau, and did not meet with all the Satisfaction, which he expected, in the National Synod of Loudon (k). It is thought, that his great Reputation was prejudicial to him on this occaſion; like a great Tree, which ſhades the little ones, and whoſe Branches muſt therefore be lopped. Beſides, the Relations of thoſe, who had declared againſt the Doctrine of Univerſal Grace, favoured his Enemy as much as poſſible. He would, 'tis probable, have been one of thoſe, who ſat at the Table in This Synod [S]; to which he was deputed by his Province, if he had not been thought to be perſonally concerned in the Affairs of Mr d'Huiſſeau with the Church of Saumur. He died very chriſtianly on the Eighth of January 1664 (l), and was interred with all the Academical Ceremonies. He had a great Command of Mind in his laſt Sickneſs, which gave him an Opportunity of making ſeveral very edifying Diſcourſes, and of giving ſtrong Proofs of his Faith, in the Preſence of many Perſons of both Religions. Among his other Virtues, his Charity to the Poor ought to be obſerved. He gave them the Salary of his Miniſtry during the Ten laſt Years of his Life. He gave Alms without diſtinction of Catholics and Reformed: the Mendicant Friars, who applied to him, never went away with empty hands; and he recommended to Mr Hervart (m) the Recollects of Saumur, when they had recourſe to the King's Treaſury for rebuilding their Cloyſter, which was burnt: They thanked him for the good Effect of his Recommendation. He left but one Son, who was a very learned Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and who fled to the Hague, after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He had a Daughter, who died in 1645, Eighteen Months after her Marriage with Bernard de Harnont, who was afterwards the King's Advocate at Saumur. The Grief, which this Loſs threw his Wife into, induced him to write a Treatiſe of the State of the Faithful after Death; which he dedicated to her. It was printed the Year after. The Reader will be pleaſed to ſee here the Diſtich which Mr du Boſc wrote with his own hand under a Print of Mr Amyraut. It is an Alluſion to what the Jews have ſaid in praiſe of the famous Rabbi Moſes Maimonides.

(i) Philip Vincent.

(k) In 1659.

(l) Konig in his Biblioth. and Witte in his Diarium, place his Death (wrong) in 1665.

(m) He was Comptroller of the Finances.

A Moſe ad Moſem par Moſi non fuit ullus:
More, ore, & calamo, mirus uterque fuit.

From Moſes down to Moſes, none,
Among the Sons of Men,
With equal Luſtre ever ſhone,
In Manners, Tongue, and Pen.

It

publiſhed in 1650, on occaſion of the Tragical Death of Charles I. King of England, is a yet ſtronger Proof of Mr Amyraut's Opinion in relation to Subjects taking up Arms againſt their Prince. There was no room to be ſilent; for the Catholics inceſſantly imputed this Tragedy to the Presbyterian Party, and drew a thouſand odious Conſequences from it againſt the Proteſtants of France. Mr Amyraut thought proper not to leave the Injuſtice of theſe Reproaches unanſwered. During the Troubles of the laſt Minority, This Miniſter conſtantly exhorted the People, in his Sermons, to Obedience; and, being conſulted in what manner to behave, he anſwered, That the only way was to adhere to the Royal Party. It is probable that the Perſons, who conſulted him, were ſincere, and did not dive into the Artifice, which prevails in theſe kinds of Confuſions. Rebels ever pretend, that their Aim is only to remedy Abuſes, and drive away evil Counſellors from about their Maſter's Perſon. One muſt be very weak to be catched in this Trap, and to want the Opinion of a Caſuiſt. The Diſtinction of the Pope and the Holy See is not ſo groſs a Sophiſm. Laſtly, Mr Amyraut ſpoke his Thoughts fully in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Latin Paraphraſe on the Pſalms. It is there that he maintains and lays down, that, according to the true Principles of Chriſtianity, Subjects ought not to take up Arms againſt their Sovereigns. He declares openly for that which is called Paſſive Obedience. That Work was dedicated to Charles II. King of England, ſoon after That Prince's Reſtauration. The Author had made himſelf acquainted at Paris with one of that Prince's Chaplains, in the Year 1658. Two Years after, he expreſſed to him his Joy for the King's Reſtauration, and congratulated him on the Biſhoprick of Durham. He was anſwered, that the King thanked him. This encouraged Mr Amyraut to dedicate to him his Paraphraſe on the Pſalms, but not 'till he knew from the Biſhop of Durham, whether That Monarch would be pleaſed with it.

[R] That, in Caſes of Conſcience, a King is not to be obeyed.] This appeared, when the Seneſchal of Saumur notified to him an Arrêt of the Council of State, which ordered all the Proteſtants to put out Hangings before their Houſes on Corpus Chriſti Day. He communicated it to him, on the Eve of that Feaſt, and deſired him to order the Proteſtants to conform to it, for fear their Diſobedience ſhould excite the People againſt them. Mr Amyraut anſwered, that, on the contrary, he was going to exhort his Flock, to put out no Hangings, and that he would be the firſt, who ſhould refuſe it; That he had always preached up Obedience to the Superior Powers; but that he never meant it in ſuch things as concern the Conſcience. Leaving the Seneſchal, he went from Houſe to Houſe to exhort his Pariſhioners rather to ſuffer any thing, than to obey that Arrêt. The Seneſchal cauſed it to be publiſhed with Sound of Trumpet; the Conſiſtory met, thanked Mr Amyraut for his Conduct, and charged the Elders to take care that there ſhould be no Hangings put out. The King's Lieutenant refuſed to aſſiſt the Seneſchal, and prevented the Tumult, which began to be raiſed. The Arrêt was revoked ſome time after.

[S] He would, 'tis probable, have been one of thoſe, who ſat at the Table, in this Synod.] If all my Readers were French Proteſtants, this Remark would be unneceſſary, but it will not be ſo to other Readers. In our Synods of France there were commonly four Perſons, who formed what was called the Table. One of theſe four Perſons was the Preſident of the Company, and was called the Moderator, the other three were the Moderator's Aſſiſtant, the Secretary, and the Collector of the Acts.

[T] I

Digitized by Google

It was some Years after the Death of this Professor, that his Picture was engraved by his Son's Care (n).

(n) Taken from the Memoirs communicated by M. Amyraut the Son. Whatever is not founded upon publick Proofs, in the Remarks of this Article, is taken from Those Memoirs.

Some Particulars concerning Mr Amyraut are to be found in a Work entituled Melange Critique de Literature recueilli des Conversations de feu Mr Ancillon (o).—— A Critical Miscellany of Literature, collected from the Conversation of the late Mr Ancillon; by which it appears, among other things, that a Passage in a Letter of Mr Balzac (p), wherein the Author of an Apology is much praised, is to be understood of him. We find also there, that Patin esteemed him very much: But take notice, that what is disobliging in Patin's Letter does not relate to the Minister of Saumur. I shall take notice of this in a Remark, as also of some other trifling Mistakes [T].

(o) Printed at Basil in 1698.

(p) The first to Mr Conrart.

[T] I shall take Notice of it in a Remark, as also of some other trifling Mistakes.] Patin says, in his Hundred and thirteenth Letter of the first Edition (23), "That there was a Physician of Nyort, in 1663, "whose Name was Mr Luffand, who proposed to "publish an Apology for the Physicians, against those, "who accused them of trusting too much to Nature: "he says, that This Physician had principally in view "Mr Amyraut, a Minister of Saumur, who cast this "Reflexion upon them in the last Volume of his Christian Morality." - - - - He seems (24) not to be very well satisfied with Mr Amyraut on this Account; for he adds, "If Mr Amyraut will be pleased to give "himself the trouble to answer that Book, he is "one who can say fine Things upon the Occasion, "which Luffand is unacquainted with, and which "are not in his Book. I have suggested some "of them to him, says he, and among others, "fine Passages, and good Authorities; but he pays "no Regard to them." This plainly disgusted him; for he afterwards expresses himself thus: "And in-"deed he is in a Province, which is not far from "Gascony, where they are generally more vain than "learned, &c." I omit the rest of the Passage as it stands in Mr Ancillon, which is very disobliging; but I must inform my Readers, that the Person, so much abused by Patin, is the Physician of Nyort, and not the Divine, who makes the Subject of this Article. I must also acquaint them, that the Treatise of Religions against those who think them indifferent, is not Mr Amyraut's only Book, of which there have been two Editions (25). I am very certain, that the Apology for the Protestants was printed more than once; that the Treatise of Predestination, printed in 1634, was reprinted at Saumur in the Year 1658, with the Specimen of Calvin's Doctrine, and the Reply to Mr de la Milletiere, concerning his offer of a Friendly Conference to examine his Method for procuring a Reunion; that these two last Treatises had been published in the Year 1638, and that the Bookseller, who reprinted them in 1658, with the Treatise of Predestination, declares (26), that he republishes these three Books, because they were not to be met with. I am assured likewise, that eleven of Amyraut's Sermons on several Texts of Scripture were reprinted in the Year 1653; that the Life of la Noüe was reprinted at Leyden; that the Theses of This Professor, and those of his Colleagues, were reprinted at Geneva; and that his Treatise of the State of the Faithful after Death, was printed at London in English, and at Utrecht in Dutch.

(23) Melange Critique de Literature, Tom. 1. p. 133, 134.

(24) Patin, Letter 114. Edit. 1.

(25) As is affirmed by the Author of the Melange Critique, pag. 132. The first is in 1631. and the second in 16 2.

(26) In the Epistle dedicatory to the Students in Divinity.

AMYRUTZES (a), a Peripatetic Philosopher, born at Trebizond, was greatly esteemed in the Court of the Emperor David, his Master, and wrote in Favour of the Greeks against the Decisions of the Council of Florence (b); but he lost all his Reputation by his Apostacy. He was one of those, who accompanied the Emperor David to Constantinople, when Mahomet II. caused him to be brought thither, after the taking of Trebizond, in the Year 1461. This Philosopher, being gained over by the Promises of the Sultan, renounced Christianity, and turned Turk, with his Children; one of whom, under the Name of Mehemet-beg, translated several Books of the Christians into Arabic, by order of Mahomet II. This Prince gave Amyrutzes considerable Employments in the Seraglio, and conversed sometimes about Learning and Matters of Religion with Him, or with Mehemet-beg (c). According to Allatius's manner of Expression, one would be apt to take this Philosopher for Groom of the Stole * to the Emperor of Trebizond [A]. I must not forget to observe, that Amyrutzes did not then begin to be in Esteem with Princes, when the Emperor of Trebizond honoured him with his Affection; for he had been a long time greatly respected in the Court of Constantinople. He was one of the chief learned Persons, whom the Emperor John Paleologus consulted about his Journey into Italy (d), and he accompanied that Emperor in his Expedition (e), as he himself relates (f) in his Account of what had passed in the Council of Florence, and which he inscribed to Demetrius Governor of Napoli di Romania. He affirms, among other things, that the Patriarch of Constantinople was strangled during the Session of that Council, and that the Physicians attested the Fact (g).

(a) He is called, by mistake, Amyruta, in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(b) Leo Allatius de Perpet. Cons. lib. 3. cap. 3. pag. 935, & 1379.

(c) Guillet's Hist. of Mahomet II. Tom. 1. p. 441. & Tom. 2. p. 136.

* Protovestiarius.

(d) The Political History of Constantinople nam i tim before Bessarion, and Gemistius. See Allat. de Perpet. Consens. p. 883.

(e) This Emperor arrived at Venice, Feb 8. 1438.

(f) Apud Allatium, pag. 886.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 908.

[A] According to Allatius's manner of Expression, one would be apt to take him for Groom of the Stole to the Emperor.] Allatius, in the Nine hundred and thirty sixth Page of his Perpetuus consensus, speaks only by Conjecture of the Book, which this Amyrutzes composed against the Council of Florence; but, in the Additions, he tells us, that the Work itself was sent him from the Isle of Chio: Afterwards he says, that Dorotheus, Archbishop of Monembasa, discovers the Condition of this Person *, cujusnam conditionis vir iste fuerit. He inserts the Passage of Dorotheus in Greek and Latin. The Greek imports, that Mahomet caused the Emperor David, and some other Persons to embark for Constantinople, and among others τὸν σιλίσοφον Ἀμυρούτσην τὸν πρωτοβεστιάριον, Philosophum Amyrutzium Protovestiarium. Thus Allatius translates and Points. And therefore doubtless he believed, that Amyrutzes, and the Provestiarius, were one and the same Person, and that he understands of him the Sequel of the Passage of Dorotheus, which informs us, that this Person was first Cousin of Mahomet Bassa, that he had betrayed the Emperor David, and that, after the taking of Trebizond, he received great Honours from his Cousin, and from Sultan Mahomet; that he was Cunning, Tall, Well-shaped, a good Archer, and qualified for every thing. His Relation to Mahomet arose from his Mother's being Mahomet's Mother's Sister; these two Sisters were Daughters of Jagrus. I give no great Credit to this Account; for I find that Mr Guillet, citing the Turco-Græcia of Crusius, says, that the Name of the Protovestiarius (Groom of the Stole) of the Emperor of Trebizond was George; that he was of a graceful Mien, and had such great Skill in Archery, that he surpassed therein all the Greeks and Turks; that he was the Son of a Daughter of a Christian Prince, called Jagrus, who had married his other Daughter in Servia, where she had a Son, who was the Renegado

* In Synopsi Historiarum.

Digitized by Google

negado Machmut (1). I would willingly therefore place a Comma, in the Paſſage of Dorotheus, Ἀμυρήτην, in order to make This Philoſopher, and the Protoveſtiarius, whom Allatius confounds together, Two Perſons.

(1) Guillet, History of Mahomet II. Tom. 1. pag. 439.

AMMONIUS. Many Writers have been called by this Name. Athenæus cites two Works of a very different Nature, compoſed by an Author, whom he calls AMMONIUS. One of them treats of Altars and Sacrifices (a); the other of the Courtezans of Athens [A]. He does not poſitively ſay, that theſe two Books were wrote by the ſame Ammonius; neither does he ſay any thing, which intimates the contrary; beſides he makes no mention of the Author's Country, nor of the Age, in which he lived. We are informed by another Author, that he, who wrote the Book concerning Altars and Sacrifices, was a Native of Lampria (b) [B]. Suidas, ſuch as we have him at preſent, ſpeaks only of Ammonius Saccas: but, without doubt, he mentioned an Ammonius different from this; for what we find in his Dictionary cannot be applied to one and the ſame Perſon. It is impoſſible, that the ſame Ammonius ſhould have abjured the Chriſtian Faith, and have ſucceeded Ariſtarchus in the School of Alexandria, before the Reign of Auguſtus. Theſe are the two Particulars we find in Suidas concerning Ammonius. Was he ſo ignorant as to believe they were not inconſiſtent? I ſee no probability of it. One Author (c) conjectures, that there is an Hiatus in this Paſſage (d), and that Suidas might have ſpoken in this Hiatus of the Ammonius mentioned by Athenæus. If this were true, we muſt ſay, that the Treatiſe of Sacrifices and Altars, or that of the Courtezans of Athens, or both, were written by a Grammarian, who was Ariſtarchus's Succeſſor. The ſecond AMMONIUS, I propoſe to ſpeak of, is a Philoſopher of Egypt (e). Plutarch, whoſe Preceptor he was, makes frequent mention of him. See particularly the 70th and 385th Pages of his Moral Works in the Edition of Francfort 1620. But it is falſely pretended in Moreri's Dictionary, that he ſpeaks of him with Praiſe, particularly towards the end of the Life of Ariſtotle [C]. Moreri is not more ſucceſsful in his Account of AMMONIUS the Son of Hermeas [D]; to whom he attributes, among other Works, a Book compoſed in the Reign of Valentinian. That Ammonius was Son and Brother of a Philoſopher (f). The Learned believe, that he flouriſhed in the Reign of Anaſtaſius, in the beginning of the VIth Century; and that it is He who compoſed the Commentaries we have, under the Name of Ammonius, on ſome Treatiſes of Ariſtotle, and particularly on his Book de Interpretatione (g). The Author of this laſt Commentary ſays, at the beginning, that he was a Diſciple of Proclus. It is to him that ſome aſcribe the Life of Ariſtotle, which goes under the Name of Ammonius (h). He is the ſame, no doubt, who was refuted by Zacharias Mitylenenſis: See the Remark [H] of the following Article. He is likewiſe the ſame, of whom Jonſius (i) underſtands a Paſſage of Photius, in which he mentions One Ammonius, who took great Delight in explaining the old Poets, and making Critical Remarks on the Greek Language (k). This induces ſome to believe, that the Treatiſe Of the Difference of Greek Words ought to be aſcribed to him (l). But Mr Menage ſays, that Herennius Philo was the Author of it (m). The ſame Ammonius, to whom the abovementioned Paſſage of Photius relates, had an Aſs of a wonderful

(a) Athen. lib. 11. pag. 470.

(b) It was a Town in Attica.

(c) Jonſius, de Scriptor. Hiſtor. Philoſ. pag. 169. and in the Index.

(d) Geſner, in Biblioth. cites it without intimating, that he is ſenſible of the Abſurdity of it.

(e) Eunapius Procm. Vit. Soph.

(f) Suidas in Ἑρμείας. See (under the Article) the Article HERMIAS

(g) Voſſius de Philoſ. Sectis, p. 90. & 113. Labbé, de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. pag. 59.

(b) Jonſius, Hiſt. Philoſ. pag. 300.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Photii Biblioth. n. 242. pag. 1040.

(l) Jonſius, ubi ſupra.

(m) In Laërt. lib. 2. n. 5.

(1) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 567.

[A] Of the Courtezans of Athens (1).] They, who, in theſe latter times, have wrote Books entituled The Harlotry of Rome, or of ſome other great City, were not original Authors. Antiquity ſaw many Works of this Nature, which are happily loſt. Not one of them is come down to us.

[B] We are informed by another Author, that he who wrote the Book — was a Native of Lampria.] We are not indebted to Harpocration for this Information, as Mr Lloyd affirms, but to the Author of the Book De differentiis vocum. Voſſius, and ſeveral others, call him Ammonius. If Mr Lloyd had tranſlated Voſſius right, he would not have ſaid, Ammonius hiſtoricus ἐν τῷ περὶ βωμῶν καὶ θυσιῶν citatur ab Harpocratione in Ἀμαζώνιον, uti & in voce Ἑσχάρα. Ex quo etiam diſcimus Lamprienſem fuiſſe, ut Geſnerus falſo Alexandrinum vocet. — Ammonius the Hiſtorian, in his Treatiſe of Altars and Sacrifices, is cited by Harpocration under the Words Ἀμαζώνιον and Ἑσχάρα; who informs us likewiſe, that he was of Lampria; ſo that Geſner is miſtaken in ſaying that he was of Alexandria. This is one of the Faults of the Abbreviators, which I have ſo often mentioned. Voſſius, having ſaid, as far as the Word Ἑσχάρα, what I have juſt now quoted from Lloyd, adds ἐν πρώτῳ περὶ θυσιῶν ab Ammonio lib. de differ. voc. in Βωμός. Ubi & Λαμπρεὺς fuiſſe dicitur, ut Geſnerus falſo Alexandrinum vocet (2). Lloyd, being unwilling to tranſcribe the whole Paſſage of Voſſius, and having ſkipt a Line of it, fell into a great Miſtake; for it is not true, that Harpocration informs us, that Ammonius, whom he cites, was a Native of Lampria. If he had a mind to have omitted any part of it, he ſhould have left out the laſt Line, in which Voſſius tells an Untruth. Geſner does not ſay, that Ammonius, the Author of the Book concerning Sacrifices, was an Alexandrian. There is a third Paſſage of Harpocration (3), in which our Ammonius is cited; Ἀμμώνιος ἐν τετάρτῃ περὶ Βωμῶν γράφει ταῦτα; Ammonius in the fourth Book of Altars writes theſe things. The learned Mauſſac has thus corrected the Text of Harpocration; he puts Ϛωμῶν (Altars) inſtead of κώμων (Towns or Villages), becauſe no one ever ſaid that this Author wrote a Book, De oppidis vel pagis. Valeſius approves of this Correction (4). One might conjecture, that, ſince Ammonius wrote a Book concerning the Courtezans of Athens, he likewiſe compoſed one of Feaſts or Revellings, περὶ κώμων; upon which Suppoſition, there will be no occaſion to pretend, that, according to the common reading of Harpocration, the Book of Ammonius related to the Towns, or the People, of Attica: Yet Mauſſac's Correction appears to me highly probable. It appeared ſo to Voſſius, who mentions it as his own. Valeſius cites a Paſſage of the Scholiaſt upon Hermogenes, in which the Author of the Book concerning Altars is called Ammonius of Lampria (5).

(2) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Græcis, pag. 502.

(3) In Voce Βῶλος.

(4) Henr. Valeſius, Notis in Notas Mauſſaci, pag. 111.

(5) Ibid.

[C] It is falſly pretended in Moreri's Dictionary, that Plutarch ſpeaks of him with Praiſe, particularly towards the end of the Life of Ariſtotle.] This Life of Ariſtotle is a Chimera. Moreri ſhould have ſaid Themiſtocles, and not Ariſtotle. Now it is true, indeed, that Plutarch mentions Ammonius at the end of the Life of Themiſtocles; but it is not true, that he praiſes him. He ſpeaks neither well nor ill of him.

[D] Moreri is not more ſucceſsful in his Account of Ammonius the Son of Hermeas.] He has committed at leaſt three or four groſs Faults. I. He is ignorant, that Proclus flouriſhed in the Reign of Theodoſius the Younger, and a long time after; for, if he wonderful Taſte for Poetry; for he would abſtain from eating his Provender and ſuffer hunger, rather than interrupt his Attention, upon the reading of a Poem (n). The third AMMONIUS, of whom I intend to ſpeak, was a Poet, who lived in the Vth Century. He compoſed a Poem on the War with Gainas King of the Goths, and, upon his repeating it before the Emperor Theodoſius the younger, was greatly applauded (o). I propoſe to ſpeak, in ſeparate Articles, not only of ſome Moderns, who have born the Name of Ammonius, but likewiſe of an ancient Philoſopher, who has given greater Luſtre to it than all the reſt.

Digitized by Google

(n) Phot. Biblioth. n. 242. ex Damaſcio, in Vita Iſidori Philoſophi.

(o) Socrates, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 6. c. 6. & ex eo Nicephor. lib. 13. cap. 6.

(6) Proclus in the Reign of Julian; the ſecond Ammonius, his Diſciple, who wrote ſo well on Ariſtotle's Book of Interpretation, in the Reign of Valentinian. Rapin Compar. de Platon. & d' Ariſtote, pag. 391.

he had known it, would he have ſaid that Ammonius, Diſciple of Proclus, wrote a Book in the Reign of Valentinian? Would he have been ſuch a faithful Tranſcriber of Father Rapin's Errors (6)? II. What a ſtrange way is this of denoting Emperors? There were three of this Name; and the firſt muſt be underſtood to be meant, when we talk of Valentinian without any Addition. The firſt Valentinian died in the Year 375; judge then whether the Diſciple of Proclus could write in That Emperor's Reign. III. If Moreri had underſtood the Author, whom he followed, I mean Father Labbé, he would have learned, that Ammonius, the Diſciple of Proclus, and Son of Hermeas, flouriſhed in the Reign of the Emperor Anaſtaſius; who did not begin to reign 'till above thirty five Years after the Death of Valentinian III. IV. Father Labbé obſerves, that frequent mention is made of One Ammonius in the Catenæ of the Greek Fathers on St John's Goſpel, and other Books of the Scripture; and he believes, that Ammonius, the Son of Hermeas, is different from Him. Inſtead of this, Mr Moreri tells us, that ſome Authors aſcribe the Explication of the Greek Fathers on the Goſpel of St John to Ammonius, the Son of Hermeas.

AMMONIUS, ſirnamed Saccas [A], was one of the moſt famous Philoſophers of his Time. He flouriſhed about the beginning of the IIId Century. He was of Alexandria, and, as he was bred up in the Chriſtian Faith from his Infancy, he perſevered in it to the laſt, as his Works teſtify. Euſebius, who ſays this, accuſes Porphyry of a manifeſt Falſhood (a), in ſaying, that Ammonius renounced Chriſtianity, in which he had been educated, and embraced the public Religion, when he was of Age to philoſophize [B]. This great Philoſopher gave a wonderful Luſtre to the School of Alexandria, and put the Science, which he profeſſed, upon an honourable Foot. He found it miſerably depraved by the vain Subtilties of the Diſputants. We have ſeen, in Chriſtendom, what they are able to do; I ſay, we have ſeen it in the Controverſies of the Thomiſts and Scotiſts, and of the Realiſts and Nominaliſts. They all profeſſed to follow Ariſtotle, and yet they multiplied Diſputes in infinitum. What can we think, then, of the Diſputes, which prevailed in ancient times, when, the Philoſophers, being divided into ſeveral Sects, under different Heads, ſome condemned Plato, and others Ariſtotle, &c.? It was a Chaos of mere Chicanery, which diſhonoured the Profeſſion. The right way to reſtore the Science to it's former Credit was to baniſh all uſeleſs Diſputes, and to adhere to the Doctrines, in which Plato and his Diſciples were agreed. No doubt they were the moſt certain, and conſequently the moſt important, Doctrines. This was the Reaſon, why Ammonius thought himſelf particularly obliged to reconcile theſe two Heads of Sects [C], and to clear up the Miſunderſtanding, on which their pretended Oppoſitions were built; and it is difficult to expreſs the great Reputation he acquired by this manner of philoſophizing. He was extoll'd as a Perſon inſpired, as one taught by God [D]; and (a) Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. 6. cap. 19.

[A] AMMONIUS, ſirnamed Saccas.] Ammianus Marcellinus (1) and Suidas (2) witneſs, that he had this Sirname. It is generally believed, that, by his firſt Trade, he was a Carrier of Sacks, and Suidas is alledged in proof of it. Theſe are the Words of the learned Henry Valeſius: "Saccas videtur ex eo "dictus Ammonius, quod mercibus ex portu Alexandrino comportandis victum ſibi quæſiviſſet, cujuſmodi homines Saccarios antiqui vocabant; ut "videre eſt in Codice Th. tit. de Saccariis portus urbis Romæ. Suidas, φιλοπόνως, inquit, μαθητὴς "Ἀμμωνίου τοῦ παρῶν γενομένου σακκοφόρου (3). "—— Ammonius ſeems to have been ſirnamed Saccas, "becauſe he gained his Living by carrying Goods from the Port of Alexandria; which kind of Men were "called by the Ancients Saccarii; as may be ſeen in "Cod. Th. tit. Of the Saccarii of the Port of Rome. "Suidas ſays, Plotinus, a Diſciple of Ammonius, who "was originally a Sack-Bearer."

(1) Amm. Marcell. lib. 22. circa fin.

(2) Suidas in Ὠριγένης.

(3) Henr. Valeſ. in Amm. Marcell. lib. 22.

[B] A manifeſt Falſhood, in ſaying that Ammonius renounced Chriſtianity, - - - - when he was of Age to philoſophize.] Let us ſee the Original. "Ὅτε τοῦ φρονεῖν καὶ τῆς φιλοσοφίας ἤρξατο, εὐθὺς πρὸς τὴν κατὰ νόμους πολιτείαν μετέβαλετο (4). —— As ſoon as he was capable of thinking for himſelf, and had began to taſte Philoſophy, he exchanged his manner of Life for That which was agreeable to the Laws. Porphyry, in ſaying this, was animated by the Spirit, which I have mentioned in the Remark [E] of the Article ABULPHARAGIUS.

(4) Porphyr. lib. 3. adv. Chriſtianos, apud Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 6. c. 19.

[C] Thought himſelf particularly obliged to reconcile theſe two Heads of Sects.] We learn this from Hierocles, Author of a Book concerning Providence, of which we have ſome Extracts in the Bibliotheque of Photius. According to this Author, none but Men, governed by a Spirit of Contradiction, and an itching Deſire of Diſputation, or by their Prejudices, and the Darkneſs of their Minds, found any Diſagreement between the Doctrines of Plato and Ariſtotle. Τὺς μὲν ἑκόντας ἔριδι καὶ ἀπορίᾳ σῴας αὐτὺς παρασπάσαντας, τὺς δὲ καὶ παρὰ φύσιν καὶ ἀμαθίᾳ δεδουλωμένους (5). —— Some voluntarily giving themſelves up to Striſe and Madneſs, others enſlaved to Prejudice and Ignorance. The firſt of theſe kind of Diſputants were very numerous, before the Light of Ammonius came to enlighten the World. "Donec Ammonii aliquando ſapientia orbi illuxit, "quem etiam divinitus eductum appellari prædicat. "Hunc enim veterum philoſophorum opinionibus "perpurgatis, & reſectis quæ utrimque excreverant "nugis, in præcipuis quibuſque & maxime neceſſa"riis dogmatibus concordem eſſe Platonis & Ariſtote"lis ſententiam demonſtraſſe (6). —— 'Till at length "the Philoſophy of Ammonius ſhone upon the World, "who, he tells us, was called the Inſpired. For, ha"ving thoroughly purged the Doctrines of the old Phi"loſophers, and pared off every uſeleſs Excreſcence, "he demonſtrated, that Plato and Ariſtotle agreed "in the principal and moſt important Points."

(5) Photii Biblioth. n. 214. p. 549.

(6) Hierocl. apud Phot. ibid.

[D] He was extolled as a Perſon Inſpired, as One taught by God.] I have ſet down a Paſſage of Hierocles, wherein theſe Words are to be found Ὃν καὶ θεοδίδακτον ἐπικαλεῖσθαι ὑμνεῖ, who, he tells us, was called the INSPIRED. I ſhall add another, in which the ſame Author relates, that the Followers of Plato and Ariſtotle were ſo fond of perpetuating their Quarrels, that they corrupted the Text of theſe two great Philoſophers, to demonſtrate more eaſily the Oppoſition between them. This Diſorder, adds He, continued 'till the Time of Ammonius,

Digitized by Google

and whom a Divine Inſtinct had guided into this Path. Moreri and many others were ignorant of the true Foundation of this Elogy [E]. Others are no leſs miſtaken, when they ſay, that Ammonius taught his Diſciples the Myſteries of the Goſpel, under the Seal of Secrecy [F]. Some have confounded his Theological Works with thoſe of other Writers [G]; but at laſt they have been diſtinguiſhed. He had, among other Scholars, Plotinus and Origen. He died about the Year 230 (b). I believe we ought to nius, the Diſciple of the great God; for, being carried away by an Enthuſiaſm in ſearch of Philoſophical Truth, he dived into the bottom of both Sects, and reconciled them together, and gave his Hearers, particularly his learned Equals, Plotinus, Origen, and their Succeſſors, a Syſtem of Philoſophy free from Strife and Contention. Ἕως Ἀμμωνίῳ τῷ θεοδιδάκτῳ· ἑτοίμως γὰρ πρῶτον ἐνθουσιάσας πρὸς τὸ τῆς φιλοσοφίας ἀληθινὸν, καὶ τὰς τῶν πολλῶν δόξας ὑπεριδὼν, τὰς πλεῖστον ὀνειδούμενας, εἶδε καλῶς τὰ ἑκατέρας, καὶ συνήγαγεν εἰς ἕνα καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν νοῦν καὶ ἀσφαλῆ τὴν φιλοσοφίαν παραδέδωκε πᾶσι τοῖς αὐτῷ γνωρίμοις, μάλιστα δὲ τοῖς ἀρίστοις τῶν αὐτῷ συγγεγονότων Πλωτίνῳ καὶ Ὠριγένει καὶ τοῖς ἔξωθεν ἀπὸ τούτων (7). Usque ad divinitus edoctum Ammonium. Hic enim primus æſtu quodam raptus ad Philoſophiæ veritatem, multorumque opiniones, qui magnum dedecus Philoſophiæ attulerunt, contemnens, utramque ſectam probe calluit, & in concordiam adduxit, & à contentionibus liberam Philoſophiam tradidit omnibus ſuis auditoribus, & maxime doctiſſimis æqualibus ſuis Plotino & Origeni & ſucceſſoribus.

(b) According to Cave, Hiſtor. Liter. pag. 72.

(7) Hierocl. apud. Phot. n. 251. pag. 1381.

[E] Moreri and many others were ignorant of the true Foundation of this Elogy.] According to Mr Moreri, Ammonius " applied himſelf more particularly " to the Divine Philoſophy of JESUS CHRIST. " He acquired ſuch an Eſteem by it, that he was " looked upon as a Man, who had been particularly " inſtructed by God, and for that Reaſon he had " the Name of THEODIDACTUS given him." He is miſtaken: I ſhall not not conteſt with Ammonius his Theological Learning; but certainly, it was not upon that Account, that he was called Theodidactus. He was honoured with this Title on Account of his Philoſophical Lectures, which ſpoke only of Plato and Ariſtotle, but made no mention of JESUS CHRIST and the Goſpel. His Auditors were divided; ſome profeſſed Paganiſm, and others Chriſtianity; and therefore it was neceſſary he ſhould ſet aſide Matters of Religion, and chiefly thoſe, which related to Piety. Would Hierocles, who was a Pagan Philoſopher, have expreſſed himſelf in the manner he has done, if the Knowledge of the Goſpel had procured Ammonius the Elogy we are ſpeaking of? I can eaſily believe, that Ammonius was not accounted a Chriſtian among the Pagans, and that it is This, which moved Porphyry to ſay, that Ammonius renounced Chriſtianity, as ſoon as he was capable of philoſophizing. He was known to be a Chriſtian among his Brethren, and gave Proofs of his Faith in certain Writings, which were, in all likelihood, little known to the Pagans. Would Plotinus have followed Ammonius ſo long, if he had believed him to be an Enemy to the Eſtabliſhed Religion? The Chriſtians were not yet ſo conſiderable.

[F] Others are no leſs miſtaken, when they ſay, that Ammonius taught his Diſciples the Myſteries of the Goſpel, under the Seal of Secrecy.] I was ſurprized to find Father Labbé ſo greatly miſtaken in theſe Words. " Idem Porphyrius, ſays he (8) in vita Plo- " tini Platonicæ ſectæ Philoſophi, narrat Ammonium " Religionis Chriſtianæ arcana diſcipulis ſuis ſub ſi- " lentii religione communicaſſe, & Herennium, Ori- " genem atque Plotinum obſtrinxiſſe, cumque He- " rennius primus eam fregiſſet, nec Originem nec " Plotinum promiſſis ſtetiſſe. —— The ſame Porphy- " ry, in the Life of Plotinus, a Philoſopher of the " Platonic Sect, relates, that Ammonius communi- " cated the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion, to " his Diſciples, upon an Oath of Secrecy; which when " Herennius had firſt broken, neither Origen nor Plo- " tinus ſtood to their Promiſe." Here are two notorious Miſtakes: Firſt, it is not true, that Ammonius made his Diſciples ſwear not to impart to any one what they had learned of him. In the ſecond place, it is falſe, that Porphyry ſpeaks of any other Doctrines, but Thoſe of Philoſophy. All that he ſays may be reduced to this. Erennius, Origen, and Plotinus, had agreed not to make public the Leſſons they had been taught by Ammonius, and which appeared to them to be greatly laboured, and very refined. Plotinus kept his Word; but Erennius, having broke his, was ſoon imitated by Origen. This is not a proper place to ſhew, that this Origen is not He, who wrote ſo many Books, and who ſo greatly allegorized the Scripture; but, as great part of my Readers may not have a Plotinus at hand, I ſhall ſet down his own Words. Ἐρεννίῳ δὲ καὶ Ὠριγένει καὶ Πλωτίνῳ συνθηκῶν γονομένων μηδὲν ἐκκαλύπτειν τῶν Ἀμμωνίου δογμάτων ἃ δὴ ἐν ταῖς ἀκροάσεσιν αὐτοῖς ἀνεκεκάθαρτο, ἔμενε καὶ ὁ Πλωτῖνος, συνών μέν τισι τῶν φοιτώντων, τηρῶν δὲ ἀνέκπυστα τὰ παρὰ τοῦ Ἀμμωνίου δόγματα. Ἐρεννίου δὲ πρῶτα τὰς συνθήκας παραβάντος, Ὠριγένης μὲν ἠκολούθει τῷ φθάσαντι Ἐρεννίῳ (9). Cum vero Erennius & Origenes & Plotinus olim inter ſe conſtituiſſent, ne Ammonii dogmata ederent, quæ audita ab eo tanquam in primis purgata præcipue comprobaverant; Plotinus quidem ſtetit promiſſis, familiariter quidem nonnullos excipiens ſalutantes, inſtituta verò Ammonii ſecreta integraque conſervans. Erennius autem primus pacta diſſolvit, & Origenes anticipantem Erennium eſt deinde ſequutus." Another Cauſe of wonder is, that theſe two Faults of Father Labbé are to be found likewiſe in Lucas Holſtenius (10).

(8) Labbé de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. pag. 58.

(9) Porphyr. in Vita Plotini.

(10) Lucas Holſten. de Vita & Script. Porphyr. p. 28.

[G] Some have confounded his Theological Works with thoſe of other Writers.] St Jerom places Ammonius among the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, and aſcribes to him, among other Works, the Invention of the Goſpel-Canons (11), and adds, that Euſebius copied after this Model upon a like Deſign. If this were true, Euſebius would be a great Impoſtor, ſince he affirms in a Letter (12), wherein he explains the Nature and Uſe of his ten Canons on the Harmony of the Goſpels, that he invented them, on occaſion of a Book of Ammonius. This Book is entituled, Monoteſſaron, or Diateſſaron. It's Difference from the Goſpel-Canons conſiſts in this. " Theſe Canons are only In- " dexes of the Paſſages of the Goſpels, which are " continued in one, two, three, or four Evangeliſts; " whereas Ammonius's Harmony (the ſame with the " Diateſſaron or Monoteſſaron) contained the entire " Text of the four Evangeliſts, which Euſebius had " made uſe of in compiling his Canons; which re- " lated to this Harmony, and were in the Nature " of an Index to it (13)." 'Tis therefore a Miſtake to ſay, as Moreri does, that the Goſpel Canons, and the Harmony of the Goſpel, are the ſame thing. Victor, Biſhop of Capua; Zacharias, Biſhop of Chriſopolis, Trithemius, and ſeveral modern Authors, relying upon St Jerom's Authority, and not attending to the abovementioned Letter of Euſebius, ſay, that Ammonius invented the Goſpel-Canons. Here is another Confuſion. There are in the Bibliotheca Patrum two Harmonies of the four Goſpels. One of them was aſcribed to Tatian by Victor, Biſhop of Capua, who tranſlated it into Latin (14) about the Year 545, and added a Preface to it (15). Hence it came to paſs, that the other Harmony was aſcribed to Ammonius. But the Harmony, fathered upon Tatian by the Biſhop of Capua, cannot be That Author's, ſince it contains all the Genealogies of JESUS CHRIST mentioned by the Evangeliſts; whereas Tatian left out of his Harmony all the Paſſages of the Goſpels, which ſhew that JESUS CHRIST ſprung from David (16). On the other hand, the Harmony, aſcribed to Ammonius, wants theſe Paſſages (17). Sixtus Sienenſis, George Ederus, and ſeveral others have followed Victor's Error. But Zacharias, Biſhop of Chryſopolis, made it appear, above Five hundred Years ago, that Ammonius is the Author of That Harmony (18), which is Baronius's Opinion. We ought to take particular notice of a Circumſtance, which we learn from Father Oudin, viz. that the Harmony, to which Ammonius's Name is prefixed, which is in the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed in the Year 1575, and which has been tranſlated into Latin by Ottomarus Luſcinius, is neither Ammonius's, nor Tatian's

(11) Hieron. de Script. Eccl. c. 55.

(12) Ad Carpianum: It is prefixed, with the ten Canons de Conſonantia quatuor Evangeliorum, to the Greek Teſtament of Rob. Stephens, Paris 1550. See Father Labbé de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. p. 308. item pag. 58.

(13) Du Pin. Biblioth. Tom. 1. p. 120. Edit. Amſt.

(14) Oudin, Supplem. de Script. Eccl. pag. 15. Bellarmin. de Scriptor. Eccleſ. pag. 226.

(15) Labbé, de Script. Eccleſ. Tom. 1. pag. 57.

(16) Euſebius and Theodoret affirm this. See Labbé, ubi ſupra, p. 57.

(17) Cave, Hiſtor. Literar. p. 72.

(18) Comm. in eam Harmoniam, apud Labbé, ibid.

Digitized by Google

to distinguish him from the Peripatetic AMMONIUS [H], who was, according to Philostratus, the most learned, and the best read Man of his Age.

I find a very gross Mistake in one of the Commentators upon Boëthius. He says, Our Ammonius corrupted Plato's Doctrine about the Eternity of the World more than any one else: but nothing can be more false, than this Accusation [I].

Tatian's (19). We have lost Ammonius's Book, de consensu Mosis & Jesu. If we may believe Henry Valesius, all his other Books are also lost: Hujus Ammonii, quod sciam, hodie nihil extat, says he, in his Commentary upon the last Chapter of the Twenty second Book of Ammianus Marcellinus. Had he forgot the Harmony of the Gospels, which is to be found in the Bibliotheca Patrum, or did he believe that Ammonius was not the Author of it? Hadrian Valesius, having made no Observation upon this in the second Edition, plainly shews, that he is of his Brother's Opinion.

(19) Oudin, ubi supra.

[H] I believe we ought to distinguish him from the Peripatetic Ammonius.] A very learned Man seems not inclined to make this Distinction. "Hic esse videtur, says he (20), Ammonius Peripateticus Philosophus, quem πολυγραμματώτατον fuisse sæculi sui testatur Philostratus in Sophistæ Hippodromi vita, quo qui plura legisset neminem se vidisse. —— This seems to be the Peripatetic Philosopher Ammonius, who, according to Philostratus, in his Life of the Sophist Hippodromus, was a Man of the most extensive Reading he had ever met with." But if he had attended to the Words of Longinus, inserted in Plotinus's Life, he would have made no scruple to distinguish between these two Philosophers. Longinus observes, that some Philolophers composed Books, and others taught only viva voce. He mentions some of each of these two Classes; some are Platonists, others are Stoics or Peripatetics. He reckons Ammonius and Origen among those of the second Class, and says they followed Plato's Philosophy. He adds that he was acquainted with them, and that they surpassed all the Philosophers of their Time. Οἷς ἡμεῖς τὸ πλεῖσον τῆ χρόνῳ παρεσχόμεθα, ἀνδράσιν οὐκ ὀλίγῳ τῶν καθ' ἑαυτὰς εἰς σύνεσιν διενεγκοῦσι (21). Quibuscum nos diu versati sumus, viris profecto intervallo non parvo sui sæculi Philosophos intelligentia superantibus. Afterwards he names some Stoics, who belonged to the second Class of Philosophers, viz. of Those, who wrote nothing, or but very little. Lastly, he mentions two Peripatetics of the same Class, viz. Ammonius and Ptolemy, who exceeded all the learned Men of their Age in Philology: This he says particularly of Ammonius. Ἀμμωνίῳ καὶ Πτολεμαίῳ φιλολογώτατοι μὲν τῶν καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἄμφω γενόμενοι, καὶ μάλιστα ὁ Ἀμμώνιος. ὃ γάρ ἐστιν ὅσης ἐκείνῳ γεγονεν εἰς πολυμαθείαν παρασκευῆς (22). Ammonius atque Ptolemæus, disciplinarum ambo profecto maxime omnium suo tempore pleni, præsertim Ammonius: nullus enim ad disciplinarum illius copiam prope accessisse videtur. Here we have the Philosopher Ammonius mentioned by Philostratus; he is therefore a very different Person from Him, who taught Philosophy at Alexandria, and who was the Master of Plotinus and Origen. It appears from Longinus's Letter, that these learned Peripatetics wrote only some Poems and Orations. This great Critic supposes they did not intend those Pieces for Posterity; for, says he, if they had, they would have been more exact in their Compositions.

(20) Hadr. Valesius in Amm. Marcell. lib. 22. pag. 344. Edit. Folio.

(21) Longinus, apud Porphyr. in Vita Plotini.

(22) Id. ib.

[I] Nothing can be more false than this Accusation.] I shall set down the Words of the Commentator at large, that the Reader may the better understand his Error. "Nulla autem Platonis sententia est, quam fœdius corruperint, & obstinatius defenderint, veteres Platonis interpretes; seu quia eorum alii ita sentirent, seu ut Christianam fidem impugnarent. Eorum signifer Ammonius fuit, fidus aliquin ac illustris doctrinæ Platonicæ assertor; quem Zacharias dialogo, cui Ammonius titulus est, confutavit. Mox ejus discipuli, Plotinus passim libr. suis; & quod mirum est, ne à magistro dissentiret, fax illa fidei Origenes; cujus errorem S. Methodius lib. περὶ τῶν γενητῶν, ut est apud Photium, redarguit (23). —— There is no Doctrine of Plato, which has been more basely corrupted, and more obstinately defended, by the ancient Interpreters of Plato, than This; either because some of them really thought so, or with a view of opposing the Christian Faith. At the Head of these is Ammonius, in other Respects a Faithful and Illustrious Assertor of Platonism; whom Zacharias confuted in his Dialogue entituled Ammonius. Next to Him were His Disciples, Plotinus in several Parts of his Works, and, what is wonderful, That Luminary of Faith, Origen, who would not dissent from his Master; whose Error S. Methodius refutes in his Book περὶ τῶν γενητῶν, as it is in Photius." You see plainly, that he speaks of Ammonius, who was Origen's Master. Would he have been guilty of such an Oversight, if he had consulted the Originals, and if he had not cited the Treatise of Zacharias upon the Authority of others? For we read at the very beginning of That Treatise, that Ammonius, against whom it was written, was still living, and taught at Alexandria with great Ostentation, after he had been Proclus's Disciple at Athens. The Author, I mean Zacharias Bishop of Mitylene, lived in the VIth Century; for he assisted at the Council of Constantinople, in the Year 536; and therefore 'tis not true, that he confuted Origen's Master. But it is true, that the Philosopher Ammonius, whom he refuted, taught, that God and the World were, and would always be, Co-eternal. This Book of Zacharias was translated out of Greek into Latin by Genebrard, and inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum (24). Possevin observes, that Canisius censures Gesner, for saying, that Zacharias's Book de Mundi Æternitate was different from That, which is entituled Ammonius (25). This Censure would be very well grounded with respect to Simler, who abridged Gesner; but it is unjust with respect to Gesner himself, who says, in express Words, that the Dialogue, entituled Ammonius, seems to him to be the Same with the Treatise de Rerum Æternitate. I must observe, that I was surprized to find that a Heathen Philosopher was permitted to be a Professor at Alexandria, in the VIth Century, and to teach openly the Eternity of the World, in opposition to the Doctrine of the Christians. He was so far from concealing his Opinion, that he publickly maintained it in his Lectures, and no one could be ignorant that many of his Scholars imbibed This Doctrine. One of them (26), who was afterwards the chief Professor of Physic in That City, warmly maintained the same Opinion. This appears from the Treatise of Zacharias Mitylenensis.

(23) Renatus Vallinus, Not. ad lib. c. Boëtii de Consolat. Philosoph. pag. 96.

(24) It is in Vol. 9. of the Biblioth. Patrum, p. 331, &c. of the Paris Edition 1644.

(25) Possevin. Appar. Tom. 2. p. 552.

(26) His Name was Gessius. See the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 12. pag. 339.

AMMONIUS (ANDREW) born at Lucca, went to seek his Fortune in England, towards the beginning of the XVIth Century, and would probably have advanced himself there, if he had lived longer [A]. He applied himself to polite Literature, and

[A] Would probably have advanced himself there if he had lived longer.] This is not my own Conjecture; it is the Sentiment of Erasmus. "Periit, says he (1), & apud Gallos Faustus, & apud Britannos Andreas Ammonius, quorum alter diu regnavit Lutetiæ, alter ad summam dignitatem emersurus erat, si vita diuturnior contigisset. —— In France died Faustus, in England Andrew Ammonius; the former of whom flourished long at Paris; the latter would have risen to the highest Honours, had he enjoyed a longer Life." He gave this Judgment of him, not only whilst the Wound was fresh, that is, when, a little after the Death of Ammonius, Affliction prompted him to celebrate his Praise, but even when a considerable number of Years had effaced the first Impressions of Regret and Sorrow. "Quam multos, says he in a Letter, which he wrote in the Year 1524 (2), hic ex vetere sodalitio desidero. Primum Andream Ammonium Lucensem. Deum immortalem quanta ingenii dexteritate, quàm fideli memoria

(1) Erasm. Epist. 24. lib. 2. pag. 332. scripta anno 1518.

(2) Id. Ep. 5. lib. 23. p. 1210.

Digitized by Google

and Latin Poetry: His Merit, as an Author, ariſes chiefly from his Latin Verſes [B]. Eraſmus and He were intimate Friends, and maintained a conſtant Epiſtolary Correſpondence. Ammonius lodged ſome time with Sir Thomas More (a), and afterwards in St Thomas's Hoſpital (b), for he had not Money enough to hire, and keep, a Houſe. He declared to Eraſmus, that he repented of having left Rome, and that he was not very well pleaſed with his Condition in England (c). The Advice Eraſmus gave him was very conformable to the fraudulent Ways, which are neceſſary to be uſed in advancing ones ſelf in the World [C]; but we muſt ſuppoſe that Eraſmus gave it only in jeſt. He wrote very fine Iambic Verſes in his Praiſe, which ſhew, that Ammonius had a great many Perfections both of Body and Mind (d). But we muſt not rely much on Poëtical Elogies; Eraſmus's Proſe (which we ſhall produce in our Remarks) will be a greater Confirmation of the Worth of his Friend. Fortune becoming more favourable to Ammonius, He was made Secretary to King Henry VIII (e), and had likewiſe a public Character in the Court of That Monarch, conferred upon him by Pope Leo X (f). Had he not died before the Age of Forty Years, he might have been advanced higher. He was in the Army in the Year 1513 (g), when the Engliſh gained the Battel of the Spurs, and took Teroüenne and Tournay; he wrote Verſes on theſe Victories, as alſo on that which they obtained over James IV, King of Scotland. He died of the Sweating Sickneſs in England [D], in the Year 1517 [E]. One of the greateſt pieces

(a) Eraſm. Epiſt. 2. lib. 8. pag. 408.

(b) Id. Epiſt. 23. pag. 422.

(c) Id. Epiſt. 25. pag. 426. item Epiſt. 11. pag. 413.

(d) Id. Epiſt. 22. pag. 422.

(e) Balæus, apud Simlerum Epit. Geſneri.

(f) Andreas Ammonius tuæ Sanctitatis apud Anglos Nuncius literis ſignificabit. - - - - Andrew Ammonius, your Holineſs's Nuncio in England, will inform you by Letter. Eraſm. Ep. 6. lib. 2. pag. 104.

(g) Id. Epiſt. 40. lib. 8. pag. 434.

" memoria præditum! Tum animus quàm erat excelſus, quàm alienus à livore, quàm alienus à ſordibus! Hunc & ſuis dotibus & omni principum applauſu florentem, maximis rebus deſtinatum, ſubita mors intercepit, natu minorem annis quadraginta. Cujus equidem deceſſum non poſſum non dolere, quoties in mentem venit quàm mihi fuerit jucunda ejus familiaritas. —— How many of my old Acquaintance do I lament the Loſs of in this Place? Firſt, Andrew Ammonius of Lucca; a Man, bleſt with the Happieſt Genius, and moſt Faithful Memory. Then his Mind, how free was it from Envy, how remote from every thing Low and Sordid! This Illuſtrious Man, flouriſhing by his own Abilities, and the general Applauſe of the Great, and deſtined to the higheſt Honours, was taken off by a ſudden Death, before he was forty Years old. Whoſe Deceaſe I cannot but lament, when I recollect how happy I was in his Acquaintance and Converſation."

[B] His Merit, as an Author, ariſes chiefly from his Latin Verſes.] The Abridgment of Geſner's Bibliotheque gives us this Catalogue of Ammonius's Poems. Scotici conflictus Hiſtoria lib. 1. Bucolica, ſeu Eclogæ lib. 1. De rebus nibili lib. 1. Panegyricus quidam lib. 1. Epigrammata lib. 1. Poëmata diverſa lib. 1. Balæus is quoted for it. What is called here Panegyricus quidam is a Poem on the Victories, which the Engliſh obtained, in the Year 1513, at the Battel of the Spurs, at the taking of Teroüenne, Tournay, &c. Eraſmus gives his Opinion of this Poem in a Letter (3) which is dated on St Thomas's Day, 1510. This is an undeniable Proof, that ſometimes they have added the date of his Letters without any care; beſides they are miſplaced. The Anſwer precedes, ſometimes by ſeveral Pages, the Letter, which is the Subject of the Anſwer (4).

(3) The 20th of the 8th Book.

(4) See the Article CARMILIANUS.

[C] The Advice Eraſmus gave him was very conformable to the fraudulent ways, which are neceſſary to be uſed in advancing ones ſelf in the World.] " Be " aſhamed of nothing, ſaid he to him, interſere in " every one's Buſineſs;

Coudoyez un chacun, point du tout de quartier (5).

Elbow each one; no Quarter ever give.

" make your Intereſt the Rule of your Love and " Hatred; give nothing but to thoſe, who will return it with Uſury; be complaiſant to every one " in every thing; have two Strings to your Bow; " ſuborn ſome to invite you away; pretend you are " going, and ſeem to prepare for your Departure; " produce Letters, in which you are promiſed a thouſand Advantages." " Principio perfrica frontem, " ne quid uſquam pudeat. Deinde omnibus omnium " negociis te miſce, protrude quemcunque potes cubito. Neminem nec ames nec oderis ex animo, ſed " omnia tuo compendio metiare. Ad hunc ſcopum " omnis vitæ ratio ſpectet. Ne quid des, niſi unde " ſperes fœnus: aſſentare omnibus omnia. At iſta " vulgaria ſunt, inquis. Age quando ita vis, accipe " peculiare conſilium, ſed heus in aurem. Noſti τὴν " Βεττανικὴν ζηλοτυπίαν, hac in tuum bonum a-

(5) Moliere; in his Remerciment au Roi. The whole Paſſage is as follows: Jettez vous dans le foule, & tranchez du notable; Coudoyez un chacun, point du tout de Quartier; Preſſez, Pouſſez, Faites le Diable, Pour vous mettre le Premier.

" butere. Duabus ſedeto ſellis. Suborna diverſos " procos qui te ambiant. Minare & appara diſceſſum. " Oſtende literas quibus magnis pollicitis avocaris. " Subducito te nonnunquam, ut ſubtracta copia de" ſiderium acuat (6)." Alciatus made uſe of the laſt mentioned Artifice (7).

(6) Eraſm. Ep. 13. lib. 8. pag. 414.

[D] He died of the Sweating-Sickneſs in England.] Conſult the Hiſtory of the Divorce of Henry VIII. compoſed by Mr le Grand, and you will find there what kind of Sickneſs This was. It was called the " Sweat, becauſe People died Sweating. This kind " of Plague began to be felt the firſt time in 1486, " and was not known before. All the Remedies, which were uſed againſt it, were in vain, " and it carried off a great Number of People, before the Phyſicians knew how to treat it. It " was a Scourge, with which God was pleaſed at " firſt to puniſh the Engliſh alone. In what place " ſoever they were, they were attacked with it, " without it's having any Effect upon Strangers, with " whom they converſed (8)." Among the Proofs which Mr le Grand has produced (9), there are ſome Letters from the Biſhop of Bayonne, the French Ambaſſador in England, which ſpeak of this Diſeaſe. Anne Bullen was infected with it, as alſo that Ambaſſador. This Diſtemper had already infected, for ſome time, others beſides the Engliſh; for our Italian Ammonius died of it in the Year 1517, notwithſtanding the Hopes he had conceived of preſerving himſelf from it by his great Sobriety. Sir Thomas More wrote to Eraſmus about it in theſe Terms. " In his, (quod " tibi quoque dolori eſſe doleo) Andrea noſtro Ammonio, in quo & literæ & omnes boni magnam " fecere jacturam. Is valdè ſibi videbatur adverſus " contagionem victus moderatione munitus: qua factum putavit ut quum in nullum pene incideret " cujus non tota familia laboraverat, neminem adhuc " è ſuis id malum attigerit; id quod mihi & multis " præterea jactavit non admodum multis horis ante" quam extinctus eſt, nam hoc ſudore nemo niſi pri" mo die perit. Ego uxorque ac liberi adhuc intacti, " reliqua familia tota revaluit. Hoc tibi affirmo, mi" nus periculi in acie quàm in urbe eſſe (10). —— " Among Thoſe, who have died, is our Friend Andrew " Ammonius, in whoſe Death Learning and all good " Men have ſuffered a Loſs. He thought he had ſufficiently guarded againſt the Contagion by Sobriety " and Moderation in his Diet; which was the Reaſon, " as he thought, why none of his Domeſtics had been " viſited with the Diſtemper, at the ſame time that " he ſcarce met with any one, whoſe whole Family " was not afflicted with it. This he boaſted of to me " and ſeveral others not many Hours before he died; for This Sweat is not mortal after the firſt Day. " I and my Wife and Children have hitherto eſcaped; " and the reſt of my Family has recovered from it. " This I affirm to you, that there is leſs danger in " a Field of Battel, than in this City."

(8) Le Grand's Hiſtory of the Divorce of Henry VIII. He cites Goodwin.

(9) Ibid. Tom. 3. pa 137, 138.

(10) Morl Epiſt. 4. lib. 7. among thoſe of Eraſmus.

[E] He died in the Year 1517.] Sir Thomas More's Letter, from whence I have juſt now cited a long Paſſage, is dated the nineteenth of Auguſt, 1520. It ſeems, then, as if Ammonius did not die in the Year 1517: for how unlikely is it that Sir Thomas More ſhould pieces of Service he did Eraſmus, was his ſupplying him conſtantly with the beſt Wines at Cambridge [F]. He uſes an hyperbolical Expreſſion in one of his Letters, in which he ſays, that ſo many Heretics were daily burnt, that it raiſed the Price of Wood [G].

Digitized by Google

ſhould let three Years paſs without taking any notice of it to Eraſmus? I anſwer, that this Objection can be of no Force againſt the Letters, in which Eraſmus himſelf mentions the Death of Ammonius. He obſerves in the Twenty fourth Letter of the ſecond Book, and in the twentieth of the third Book, both dated in the Year 1518, that That Year was fatal to learned Men, as Muſurus, Paleottus, Fauſtus, Andrelius, and Ammonius. In the Thirty firſt Letter of the third Book, dated the ninth of September, 1517, he mentions Ammonius's Death (11). This Letter is dated right; for Eraſmus mentions the Departure of the King of Spain as a Piece of News. Now it is well known, that the King ſet ſail in the beginning of September, 1517. Let us ſay, then, that Baleus is miſtaken one whole Year, when he places the Death of Ammonius in the Year 1518 (12). Eraſmus might well ſay, in the Year 1518, that ſeveral great Men had died that Year. One of his Letters, in which he ſays ſo, is dated in March; when he ſaid this Year, he meant the ten or twelve preceding Months. This is confirmed by a Letter of Bombaſius (13), juſtly dated the ſixth of December, 1517, in which we find, that Muſurus died at Rome the laſt Autumn, and that Paleottus died eight Months before.

(11) Ammonii mortem acerbiſſimè fero.— I am greatly afflicted at the Death of Ammonius. pag. 198.

(12) Apud Simlerum Epit. Geſneri.

(13) The 23d of the 2d Book.

[F] His ſupplying him conſtantly with the beſt Wines at Cambridge.] The Letters of theſe Friends frequently mention the ſending of Wine; but the following Paſſage proves, that Eraſmus was not quite averſe to this Liquor, and that he rather choſe to ſtay in a Country infected with the Plague, than drink Water. " Simul atque Anglicum ſolum tetigi, ubi loco- " rum eſſes rogare cœpi, ſiquidem Cantabrigienſem " peſtem fugere te ſcripſiſti. Unus tandem Sixtinus " mihi dixit, te quidem Cantabrigiam ob peſtem re- " liquiſſe, & conceſſiſſe neſcio quo, ubi cum vini " penuria laborares, & eo carere gravius peſte duceres, " Cantabrigiam repetiiſſe, atque inibi te nunc eſſe. " O fortem Baſſarei commilitonem, qui in ſummo " periculo ducem deſerere noluerit (14). —— Upon " my firſt Arrival in England, I immediately enquired " the Place of your Abode; for you had informed me " by Letter, that you had left Cambridge for fear of " the Plague. Sixtinus at laſt told me, that you had " indeed left Cambridge for fear of the Plague, and " had retired I know not whither; but that, not meet- " ing with plenty of Wine, the want of which you e- " ſteemed worſe than the Plague itſelf, you were re- " turned to Cambridge; and that you continue to re- " ſide there. O valiant Fellow-Soldier of Baſſareus, " who in the greateſt Danger didſt refuſe to deſert " your Leader!" Thus Ammonius writes to Eraſmus.

(14) [Ammonius, Epiſt. ad Eraſm. inter Eraſmian.] Epiſt. 40. lib. 8.

[G] He uſes an hyperbolical Expreſſion in one of his Letters, in which he ſays, that ſo many Heretics were daily burnt, that it raiſed the Price of Wood.*] They were neither thoſe Papiſts, nor Proteſtants, who ran equal Hazard of being puniſhed in England, under King Henry VIII, after he had renounced the Pope's Supremacy, but another Set of Men; ſince the Letter, which mentions theſe Executions, is dated in the Month of November, 1511. The Flames could not extirpate their Opinions. Read this. " Lignorum " precium auctum eſſe non miror; multi quotidie " Hæretici holocauſtum nobis præbent, plures ta- " men ſuccreſcunt. Quin & Frater Germanus mei " Thomæ, ſtipes verius quam homo, ſectam (ſi diis " placet) & ipſe inſtituit, & diſcipulos habet (15). —— " I do not wonder, that the Price of Wood is enhanced; " for though every Day affords us Holocauſts of Here- " tics, yet more daily ſpring up. Even the Brother " of my Friend Sir Thomas More, a Stock rather " than a Man, is, forſooth, Author of a Sect, and " has his Followers."

(15) Ammonius, Epiſt. 8. lib. 8. inter Eraſmianas, pag. 410.

[* They were the Remains of the Wickliffites. See Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation. REM. CRIT.]

AMMONIUS (LIVINUS) (a) diſtinguiſhed himſelf among the Carthuſians in Flanders, not only by the Character of Procurator, with which he was honoured at Ghent, the Place of his Birth, but alſo by his Learning and Piety (b). Eraſmus had a great Eſteem for him; and it appears, by two Letters (c), which he wrote to him, that he thought he was free from the Prejudices and Paſſions of Perſons of his Rank [A]. Ammonius diſcovered to him the Uneaſineſs of his Situation, and the Reſolution he had taken to ſubmit to the Hardſhip of his Condition. We may eaſily conjecture, that he could have wiſhed for more leiſure to improve his Mind and Studies. But his Superiors were not pleaſed that he ſhould; they rather deſired that he might be ignorant, and attend only to the external Obſervances of their Order. However, he had the Credit of being an Author: The Titles of his Works are to be ſeen in Moreri; but there is no depending upon the Citation of Vander-Linden [B].

(a) Eraſmus calls him ſo. Valerius Andreas ſays Lævinus.

(b) Livinus Ammonius, vir eruditione juxta ac pietate inſignis. Eraſm. Epiſt. 23. lib. 28. pag. 2704.

(c) The ninety fourth of the twentieth Book, and the twentieth of the Twenty fifth.

[A] Eraſmus—thought he was free from the Prejudices and Paſſions of Perſons of his Rank.] If he had not, he would not have taken the Liberty of telling him, that, when he recollected what kind of Perſons the Monks were, he could not help thinking, that the Enemy of Mankind had a ſhare in the Inſtitution of Monaſteries; he added, that in thoſe Places the Ignorant acquire the greateſt Eſteem by placing their Merit in the exact Obſervation of outward Ceremonies. " Quum interdum mecum reputo, Ammoni " chariſſime, cujuſmodi ingenia premanter ac ſepeli- " antur in iſtis ceremoniis, interdum ſubit animum " cogitatio fortaſſis humana, iſtiuſmodi vitæ erga- " ſtula non ſine inſtinctu ſatanæ fuiſſe inſtituta. —— " Ac fere fit ut quo quiſque indoctior ſtupidiorque " eſt, hoc in iſto vitæ inſtituto pluris habeatur, tu- " midus fiducia ceremoniarum, & alieni ſpiritus ini- " quus æſtimator (1)."

[B] Upon the Citation of Vander Linden.] This Author did not write the Bibliotheca Belgica; he is there put for Valerius Andreas. It was the Bibliotheca Medicorum, which he compoſed.

(1) Eraſm. Epiſt. 20. lib. 25. pag. 1361.

AMPHARES, one of the Lacedemonian Ephori, was the chief Inſtrument in the Tragical Death of King Agis. We have obſerved in another Place (a), that, after the Re-eſtabliſhment of his Colleague Leonidas, This Prince took Sanctuary in a Temple. Amphares was one of thoſe, who familiarly viſited him there, and accompanied him, when he went from thence to the Bath, and back again to the Temple. As he was returning one day in this manner from the Bath, Amphares ſeized on him, and obliged him to appear before the Ephori, and give an account of his Conduct: He carried him by force to a Priſon; The Ephori, and their Aſſiſtants, immediately repaired thither to ſet in Judgment upon the King. He aſſured them, that he had no other Intention than to ſettle Affairs on the ſame foot as Lycurgus had left them, and that he ſhould never repent of ſo good a Deſign. Whereupon he was condemned to Death, and the Officers were commanded to conduct him to the Place

(a) In the Article AGIS.

Digitized by Google

Place of Execution (b). The Officers thought it so strange and unheard of a thing to lay violent Hands on the Person of a King, that they expressed an Abhorrence of their Orders (c), and Demochares, a Friend of Amphares, was obliged in Person to perform the Office. Agesistrata, the Mother of Agis, and her Mother Archidamia, came immediately to the Prison Doors, and requested, that This Prince might be permitted to plead his Cause before the People; which occasioned the Execution to be hastened. As soon as Agis was strangled, Amphares came out, and assured Agesistrata that no Injury should be offered to her Son, and that, if she pleased, she might go in and see him; the same Permission was granted to the Grand-mother; and both went into the Prison. Amphares caused Archidamia immediately to be hanged; and then ordered Agesistrata to be brought to the Place, where the Execution was performed. The first thing, which presented itself to the View of this Lady, was the dead Corps of her Son, extended on the Ground, and next that of her Mother yet hanging. She assisted the Executioners in taking her down, and laid her near the Body of Agis; then, kissing her Son, she cried out, That he had undone himself, and drawn them into these Misfortunes, by his too great Lenity. Amphares, hearing these Words, told her, That since she approved the Conduct of Agis, she should be treated like him. Agesistrata, without showing any Surprize, held out her Neck to the Executioner to be hanged, saying only, That she wished all Things might turn to the Good and Welfare of her Country (d). The People were incens'd at such an extraordinary Piece of Cruelty, and murmured at it; but it was attended with no farther Consequences. Then was verified the Truth of a Maxim, which may by applied on several Occasions, People clamour, and then are quiet. The strongest Inducement to Amphares to perpetrate this Crime, was the Desire of not returning what Agesistrata had lent him. Plutarch, from whom I have borrowed this Article, tells us what was said of the Execution of King Agis [A], which I set down according to my Promise (e).

(b) It was in the Prison itself, and was called Decas.

(c) Ἀποστρεφόμενοι καὶ φεύγοντες τὸ ἔργον, ὡς ἱερὸν θεμιτὸν ἀεὶ νενομισμένον βασιλέως σώματι τὰς χεῖρας προσφέρειν. Avertentes se & refugientes facinus ut nefarium & insolens, ut corpori regis quis admoveret manus. Plut. in Ag. &c. pag. 803, 804.

(d) Μονονοὺχὶ συνεύξηται ταῦτα τῇ Σπάρτῃ. Tantum sint hæc, inquit, ex usu reipublicæ Spartanæ. Id. pag. 804.

(e) Above, in the Article AGIS.

[A] What was said of the Execution of King Agis.] These three Executions did not put the People into such a Consternation, as prevented them from discovering that they were extreamly afflicted at them, and that they detested Leonidas and Amphares. It was thought, that nothing more cruel or abominable had ever been perpetrated at Lacedæmon, since the Dorians came and peopled Peloponnesus. For their very Enemies shewed always, in Battel, a great regard for the Persons of the Kings of Sparta; and, when they saw them approach, they turned aside from them, out of Veneration for their Majesty: And hence it was that, in so many Battels, which the Spartans fought with the other People of Greece, before the Reign of Philip, the Father of Alexander the Great, there was but one King of Sparta killed (1). The Messenians were not allowed to say, that Aristodemus had killed Theopompus, but only that he had wounded him. Agis is the first King of Lacedæmon, who was put to death in the City: A Prince, who had entertained a very noble Design, and most worthy of his Country, and at an Age, in which those who commit Errors are generally excused. His Friends blamed him with more Justice, than his Enemies; his Friends, I say, who upbraided him for being too good Natur'd, and for having saved Leonidas, and trusted too much to others. His Mother's Words are remarkable, Ἡ πολλή σε, ὦ παῖ, εὐλάβεια καὶ τὸ πρᾶον καὶ φιλάνθρωπον ἀπώλεσε μεθ' ἡμῶν. Your too great Moderation, Lenity, and good Nature, O my Son, have ruined you, together with us. This is what Plutarch informs us of, in the Life of Agis. I have related it without adding or omitting any thing. Let me subjoin this Observation, That, upon a careful reading of History, it will appear, that more Princes have been dethroned for being too Good, or too Weak, than for being too Wicked. The latter find more Strength in their own Wickedness against the Plots of their Enemies, than the former do in the Justice of their Cause, and the Fidelity of their People. See the Remark [F], of the Article of EDWARD IV.

(1) Viz. Cleombrotus, at the Battel of Leuctra.

AMPHIARAUS, one of the greatest Prophets of Paganism, was the Son of Oicles, and Great-Grand-Son of Melampus [A], who had received part of the Kingdom of Argos as a Reward for a considerable piece of Service, which he did to the Women of that Country (a). This Division of the Kingdom was a Source of Discord; the fatal Effects of which appeared in the Time of Adrastus, King of Argos, who found himself obliged to leave his Dominions, not being able to support himself against the Faction of Amphiaraus (b). The latter had caused Talaus, the Father of Adrastus, to be put to Death, and had seized on the Crown (c). This Quarrel was made up by the Marriage of Amphiaraus with Eriphyle, the Sister of Adrastus; upon which the latter was restored. I mention this in another place (d); not forgetting the new Contests, in which Eriphyle, being appointed Judge, declared in Favour of Adrastus, to the Prejudice of her Husband. The Trick, which she put upon

(a) See the Article MELAMPUS.

(b) Pindarus, Od. 9. Nemeor. pag. 608.

(c) See Benedictus's Commentary upon Pindar, ib. pag. 608, 603.

(d) In the Remark [F] of the Article ADRASTUS.

[A] And Great-Grand-Son of Melampus.] This is the Genealogy of Amphiaraus. His Father Oicles was the Son of Antiphates, Son of Melampus, Son of Amythaon, Son of Cretheus and Tyro, who was the Daughter of Salmoneus, whose Great-Grand-father, by his Father's side, was Deucalion (1). This you will find in Diodorus Siculus. If you consult Homer (2), he will carry you no farther than to Melampus, Father of Antiphates, Father of Oicles, Father of Amphiaraus. Each of these two Authors makes Melampus to be the Great-Grand-father of Amphiaraus; but he is only his Grand-father, in the Scholiast upon Æschylus; who reckons the Descent thus. Amphiaraus, the Son of Oicles, Son of Melampus, Son of Amythaon, Son of Cretheus, Son of Æolus, Son of Hellen, Son of Jupiter (3). Let us remember, that Hypermnestra (4), Daughter of Thestius (5), was the Mother of Amphiaraus, and that some Authors say he was the Son of Apollo (6). Note, That we read in Apollodorus, as also in the Scholiast upon Æschylus, that Cretheus was the Son of Æolus (7), and therefore he was the Brother of Salmoneus, and of Sysiphus, &c. Before he married his Niece Tyro, she had had Twins, Pelias and Neleus, by Neptune (8). He had three Sons by her, Æton, Amythaon, and Pheres (9). The eldest was the Father of Jason. Consult Apollodorus, who will inform you, that Amphiaraus was related to most of the illustrious Persons of Greece.

(1) Taken from Diodorus Siculus, lib. 4. cap. 70. pag. 257, 258.

(2) Homer. Odyss. lib. 15. pag. 460, 461.

(3) Schol. Æschyli in septem ad Thebas, v. 575.

(4) Pausan. lib. 2. pag. 63.

(5) Hygin. cap. 70.

(6) Id. ibid.

(7) Apollod. lib. 1. pag. 27, 45.

(8) Id. ibid. pag. 43.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 45.

[B] He

Digitized by Google

upon her Husband, at the Time of the Preparation for the Theban Expedition, was a villanous Action. Amphiaraus, discovering by his prophetic Spirit, that he should perish in this War, concealed himself, and refused to go; but his Wife, being bribed by a Present, discovered where he was (e). He was obliged, therefore, against his Will, to accompany the other Princes to the Expedition of Thebes; which proved unfortunate; and he perished in it after a very extraordinary Manner; for, the Earth being opened by a Thunder-bolt, he was swallowed up in the Abyss, with his Chariot [B]. They (f) who pretend, that this Misfortune happend to him the same Day

(e) See the Article ALCMÆON, Son of AMPHIARAUS.

(f) Charles Stephens, and Lloyd, in their Dictionaries. Oliverius upon Val. Max. lib. 8. sub. finem, and many others.

[B] He was swallowed up in the Abyss, with his Chariot.] Pindar and Apollodorus, are among those who say that a Thunder-bolt opened the Earth, and that it was a Stroke of Favour from Jupiter; for otherwise Amphiaraus would have had the Disgrace of being killed by Periclymenus, who pursued him.

- - - - ὁ δ' Αμφιάρηϊ σχίσεν κεραυνῷ παμβία
Ζεὺς τὰν βαθύστερνον χθόνα, κρύψεν δ' ἅμ' ἵπποις,
δυσὶ Περικλυμένου περὶν
νῶτα τυπέντα μαχατὰν
θυμὸν αἰσχυθῆμεν (10).

(10) Pindar. Nemeor. Od. 9. pag. 611, 612. See Apollodorus, lib. 3. pag. 193.

Jove saw Amphiarus' threatned Shame,
And darted from on high the missive Flame.
The Womb of Earth, disclosing at the Blow,
Alsorpt the Hero to the Shades below,
Quick with his Car descending; 'ere the Spear
Of Periclymenus, approaching near,
Had in his Back infix'd the Coward Wound,
And an inglorious Death the warlike Chief had found.

You find in this, and another Passage of the same Poet (11), that Amphiaraus and his Chariot fell both together into the Precipice. This is the most general Tradition (12): But others pretend, that he fell from his Chariot during the Battle, and that the Chariot was afterwards transported empty to another Place (13). Their Reason is, because the Temple of Amphiaraus was but a little distant from a certain Village, which was called Harma *, and which borrowed it's Name from his Chariot. They pretended, that the Temple was built where the Prophet died, and that the Village Harma was built where the Chariot was transported (14). Pausanias calls it a Town, and says expressly, that it was built, where it is pretended that the Earth had swallowed up Amphiaraus and his Chariot (15). This was the Pretension of the Tanagrians; for those of Thebes shewed another Place, situate on the great Road from Potniæ to Thebes, and encompassed with Columns, concerning which they related two pleasant Miracles. One was, that the Birds never perched on those Columes; the other, that no Beast touched the Grass, which grew in that Place (16). Stephen of Byzantium, in mentioning the Town of Harma, entirely contradicts the Tradition, and the very Author, whom he cites (17); for he asserts, that this Town was so called, because it was said, that Amphiaraus retreated thither in his Chariot, and that the Inhabitants would not deliver him up to those, who pursued him (18). Is not this to pretend, that he saved his Life, and to give the Lye to a great number of Authors, who tell us, that he was swallowed up in the Bowels of the Earth? The great Salmasius imagined, that there are wanting two or three Words in this Article of Stephens; namely, that, after mentioning the Chariot of Amphiaraus, he turned the Discourse to that of Adrastus; so that what relates to the Refusal of the Inhabitants, must be referred to the latter (19). This Conjecture is ingenious, and may be confirmed by a Passage of Strabo, where it is said, that the Inhabitants of Harma, in Bœotia, saved the Life of Adrastus, after his Chariot had been broke in that Place (20). The like Conjecture cannot be made in Favour of Eustathius. It must be affirmed, without any Hesitation, that, according to his Account (21), the Chief, whom the Inhabitants of Harma saved, was Amphiaraus, and not Adrastus.

(11) Id. Pind. Od. 6. Olymp. pag. 98.

(12) See Diodorus Siculus, lib. 4. cap. 68.

(13) Strabo lib. 9. pag. 2, 8.

* Ἅρμα, in Greek, signifies a Chariot.

(14) Id. ib.

(15) Pausan. lib. 9. pag. 296.

(16) Id. ib. pag. 288.

(17) He quotes the 9th Book of Pausanias.

(18) Steph. Byzantin. in voce Ἅρμα.

(19) See Berkelius's Notes upon this Passage of Steph. Byzant.

(20) Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 278.

(21) Eustathius, in Il. lib. 2. pag. 266.

Note, That Strabo has committed a Mistake, which Salmasius has not failed to censure. Ἐνταῦθα δὲ πε καὶ τὸ Ἀμφιαράσιον ἐστι τετιμημένον ποτὲ μαντεῖον, ὅπε φυγόντα τὸν, Ἀμφιάρεων, ὡς φησὶ Σοφοκλῆς,

Ἐδέξατο ῥαγεῖσα Θηβαία κόνις,
Αυλοῖσιν ὅπλοις, καὶ τετραρύμῳ δίφρῳ (22).

(22) Strabo, ibid. pag. 275.

Near which Place was the Oracle of Amphiaraus, formerly had in Veneration, where, according to Sophocles,

The Theban Earth, wide opening, swallowed down
The sinking Chief, his Chariot, and his Arms.

Strabo would prove, that the Oracle of Amphiaraus, in the Territory of Oropus, was situated in the same Place, where this Prophet was swallowed up by the Earth; and, as a Proof of this, he cites two Verses of Sophocles, which testify, that the Earth opened itself in the Territory of Thebes, to swallow up Amphiaraus and his Chariot. Salmasius censures this with a great deal of Reason (23). Isaac Vossius has taken Strabo's part; but, on this Occasion, he has made it appear, that too eager a Desire of finding Faults in the Writings of an Adversary is a dangerous guide. " Definat quoque mirari, says he (24), quod multi " Oropum urbem in regione sive agro Thebano col- " locarint. Recte enim hoc ab illis factum, cum " Oropus non sui juris, sed propia fuerit Thebano- " rum. Hoc manifeste Dicæarchus docet, ἢ δὲ πό- " λις τῶν Ὠρωπίων οἰκεία Θηβῶν ἐστι. - - - - - " Let him cease to wonder, that many place the City " Oropus in the Region or Territory of Thebes. For " this is rightly done by them, since Oropus is not " an independant Town, but under the Jurisdiction of " Thebes. This Dicæarchus plainly teaches; The " City of Oropus, says he, belongs to Thebes." In the first place, what is advanced by Dicæarchus, being taken in general Terms, and so as to suit to all Times, is not true. Oropus was a long time a Matter of Dispute between the Athenians and the Thebans. At last the former obtained a full Possession of it, after Philip of Macedon had taken the City of Thebes (25). In the second place, because Oropus belonged to the Thebans, it does not follow, that it was in the Territory of Thebes, in agro Thebano. An Author, quoted by Plutarch, affirms that the Town of Harma was built, where the Battel was fought between the Argives and Thebans, and where Amphiaraus was swallowed up (26). It is a Geographical Error; but much less ridiculous, than what the same Author relates, that, on the Day, which preceded the Battel, an Eagle carried away the Lance of Amphiaraus, while the Generals were at Dinner together, and, having carried it aloft, let it fall again: It took root in the Earth, and became a Tree. Τὸ δὲ παγὲν ἐν γῇ δάφνη ἐγένετο (27). Being fixed in the Earth, it became a Laurel. The following Words of the Scholiast upon Statius have been censured. " Civitas " in illo loco post est condita, in quo hiatus terræ " Amphiaraum recepit, quæ Amphiarma vocatur, ut " Homerus ait, quod illic curru, quem Græci ἅρμα " vocant, deciderit, in quo etiam Oraculum est, " quod Græcè Amphiaraon vocatur. - - - - - - A City " was afterwards built in the Place, where the open- " ing Earth swallowed up Amphiaraus, which, ac- " cording to Homer, is called Amphiarma, because " there he fell from his Chariot, called by the Greeks " ἅρμα; where likewise is an Oracle, called in Greek " Amphiaraon." Barthius (28) pretends, that this Scholiast alledges, improperly, the Testimony of Homer, since nothing like it is to be found in the Book of the Odyssey, where mention is made of Amphiaraus (29). He adds, that, perhaps, the Name of Homer crept in by the Error of the Copyists; and that, without this Supposition, we must say, that the Scholiast's Memory failed him; a Misfortune to which he is frequently subject, as well as others. " Vel alium " ergo autorem nominavit intruso nunc Homeri ti-

(23) Salmas. Exercit. Plin. pag. 167.

(24) Is. Vossius, in Pompon. Melam. pag. 152.

(25) Pausan. lib. 1. pag. 33. See in Pinedo's Notes upon Stephanus Byzantinus, voce Ὠρωπός, some Passages, which shew that this Town belonged to the Athenians.

(26) Trifimachus, lib. 3. de conditis urbibus, apud Plut. in Parallelis, pag. 307.

(27) Id. ib.

(28) Barthius, in Statii Theb. lib. 8. ver. 207. pag. 831. Tom. 2.

(29) Odyss. O. ver. 245.

Digitized by Google

Day the Army drew near Thebes, are miſtaken; for he did not die till the Day of the Retreat; and the Siege had continued for ſome time. This Tragical Adventure has been the Theme of many Writers; whence it has happened, that the Circumſtances have not been uniformly related. Several weak Reflexions have been made on this kind of Death [C]. It was believed, that Amphiaraus returned from Hell

" tulo Lutatius, vel errorem erravit nec ipſi inſoli-
" tum, nec aliis paris momenti auctoribus infrequen-
(30) Barthius, ubi ſupra. " tem (30)." This Criticiſm is not juſt; it ſhould have been applied another Way. Barthius ſhould have ſaid, in the firſt place, that the Town, built where Amphiaraus periſhed, was called Harma, and not Amphiarma: Secondly, that Homer has only mentioned it, without making any Etymological Remark.

(31) Homer. Iliad lib. 2. ver. 499. Ὅι τ' ἀμφ' Ἅρμ' ἐνέμοντο (31)

Or Harma, where Apollo's Prophet fell. POPE.

In the third place, that the Oracle of that Prophet was not at Harma.

I ſhall conclude this Remark with a Paſſage of Barthius, who informs us, that ſome have thought, that the Pagans alluded here to the Story of Korah and Abiram. " Placet non plane abſurdam conjectu-
" ram veteris adnotatoris proponere; per hunc caſum
" alludi à paganis ſcriptoribus ad vindictam divinam in
" Sacerdotes Hebræi populi, Datamum nimirum, &
" Abiramum, quos, non rite rebus ſacris miniſtran-
" tes, Deus Omnipotens coram omni illa gente vivos
" ad inferos per hiatum terræ ſubitum dejecerit. Ei
" rei reſpondere nonnihil etiam poſterius dicti voca-
" bulum; facile enim ex Abiramo gentilium deliria
" Amphiaraum feciſſe, quem, Iſraëlita gente jam eo
" loco remota, quo loco iſta abſorptio acciderit, con-
" fecraſſe poſtmodum, Satana inſtituente oraculum.
" Et inde cultum impii hominis aliorſum longe late-
" que propagatum (32). - - - - - - - I ſhall ſet before (32) Barth. in ſept. lib. Thebaid. Statii, ver. 784. p. 773. Tom. 3. " you the plauſible Conjecture of an old Annotator;
" namely, that the Pagan Writers, in this Event,
" alluded to the Divine Vengeance on the Hebrew
" Prieſts, Dathan and Abiram, whom, at the Com-
" mand of God, the Earth opening ſwallowed up alive,
" in the ſight of all the People, as a Puniſhment for
" their prophane Miniſtration of the Sacred Rites.
" And indeed the Name of the laſt mentioned in ſome
" manner confirms this Conjecture; it being eaſy for
" the wild Imaginations of the Gentiles, to convert
" Abiramus into Amphiaraus; and, as the People of " Iſrael were removed from that Place, where this
" ſwallowing-up happened, they afterwards deify'd
" this Perſon; the Devil at the ſame time inſtituting
" an Oracle to him. Thus the Worſhip of an otherwiſe
" impious Man was ſpread far and near."

[C] Several weak Reflexions have been made on this kind of Death.] Some have thought, that the Order of Nature was overturned by it; That Order, I mean, according to which the Parts of a Compound, when diſſolved, ought to return each to it's proper Place: For Example, when a Man dies, his Soul ought to fly up to Heaven, from whence it came; and his Body, taken from the Earth, ſhould return thither. Amphiaraus did not enjoy this Privilege; for the Earth ſwallowed him up, Body and Soul: She was not ſatisfied with reſuming what belonged to her; ſhe muſt needs detain likewiſe what ſhe had no right to. The Sooth-ſayer Theodamas ſeems to complain of this.

- - - - - liceat, precor, ordine belli
Pugnaces efflare animas, & reddere cœlo.
Ne rape tam ſubitis ſpirantia corpora buſtis,
Ne propera: veniemus enim quo limite cuncti
(33) Statius, Thebaid. lib. 8. ver. 323. Qua licet ire via (33).

Let us the common Fate of Battel ſhare;
O! let us breath our warlike Souls in Air;
Permit the Hero's Spirit, when he dies,
Aſcending to regain it's native Skies;
Nor bid our Chiefs thus immaturely go,
Alive and breathing, to the Shades below.
Forbear to haſten Life's approaching Date,
Nor thus anticipate the Hero's Fate.
Death, ſuited to their Lives, awaits the Brave,
And ſoon we all ſhall reach th' appointed Grave.

A Commentator ſays hereupon, " Iniquitas manifeſta
" Telluri hic exprobratur, qua animam Amphiarai cum
" corpore egerit deorſum (34) - - - - - - The Earth is (34) Barthius in Statium, Tom 3. pag. 862. " here charged with a manifeſt Act of Injuſtice, in " carrying downwards the Soul of Amphiaraus, toge-
" ther with his Body." He had juſt before mentioned an excellent Doctrine of Epicharmus. Man was made by an Union of two Parts; they ſeparate; and each returns from whence it came; the Earth to the Earth, and the Spirit on high: There is nothing amiſs in this. Καλῶς ἐν' Ἐπίχαρμος, συνεχρίσθη, φησὶ, καὶ διεχρίσθη, καὶ ἀπῆλθεν ὅθεν ἦλθε πάλιν, γᾶ μὲν εἰς γᾶν, πνεῦμα δὲ ἄνω. τῶν δὲ καλεπὸν οὐδὲν ἐν. Præclarè igitur Epicharmus, concretum, inquit, fuit, & diſcretum eſt, rediitque unde venerat, terra deorſum, Spiritus ſurſum. Quid ex his omnibus iniquum eſt? nihil (35). This Thought is to be met with in the Writings of ſeveral Pagan Authors (36), and even in the Verſes of Lucretius, as I have obſerved in another Place (37). This was at leaſt to have a general Notion of the Truth: But they, who imagined that the Soul of Amphiaraus did not enjoy the Liberty of re-uniting itſelf to it's Principle, were groſsly miſtaken. Although it had not been immaterial, but of the Nature of the Stars, it would eaſily have found the Means of remounting. The Poets, who ſaid, that he was yet alive, when he came into Hell, made the return of his Soul to the Celeſtial Regions more difficult; for it ſeems to be more eaſy to mount upwards, if the tendency that way begins but a little below the Surface of the Earth, than if we ſink to the Center of it, before we begin our Flight towards Heaven. But theſe Poetical Fancies are not ſerious enough to be regarded, and I fear my Readers will ſcarce excuſe me, if I inſert the following Lines.

(35) Plutarch. de Conſolat. pag. 112.

(36) See Barthius, who quotes many of them, in his Comment. upon Statius, Tom. 2. pag. 284.

(37) In the Remark [E] of the Article PRUDENTIUS.

—ecce alte præceps humus, ore profundo,
Diſſilit, inque vicem timuerunt ſidera, & umbræ.
Illum ingens haurit ſpecus, & tranſire parantes
Mergit equos: non arma manu, non frena remiſit;
Sicut erat, rectos defert in Tartara currus (38).

(38) Statius, Thebaid. lib. 7. v. 818.

- - - - - - when lo! the Ground,
Parting, diſclos'd it's opening Mouth profound.
Stars trembled at the Sight; Ghoſts fled diſmay'd,
And mutual Fear both Heav'n and Hell betray'd.
As o'er the Plain the rattling Car he drove,
And to o're-leap th' Abyſs his Horſes ſtrove,
Deep in Earth's Womb engulph'd the Hero fell,
And, arm'd, deſcended to the Shades of Hell.
Even in his Fall, he govern'd ſtill the Car,
And, ſinking, brandiſh'd ſtill the threat'ning Spear.

He was yet alive, when he firſt ſaw the Deſtinies; they did not cut the Thread of his Life, 'till after their ſurprize at ſeeing the Prophet in his Chariot, in the infernal Regions.

- - - - - - quin cominus ipſa
Fatorum deprenſa colus; viſoque pavente
Augure, tum demum rumpebant ſtamina Parcæ (39).

(39) Id. ib. lib. 8. v. 18.

His Thread of Life not yet it's Length had run;
The Wheel revolv'd, and ſtill the Parcæ ſpun.
When Pluto's Courts they ſaw the Augur tread,
Then firſt th' aſtoniſh'd Siſters cut the Thread.

It will be thought leſs ſtrange, that I obſerve the Contradiction, into which this Poet is fallen. He ſuppoſes, that Amphiaraus, a little before he was ſwallowed up, reſtored to Phœbus the Prophetic Enſigns, as things, which ought not to be carried down to Pluto's Kingdom.

Accipe commiſſum capiti decus, accipe laurus,
Quas Erebo deferre nefas (40).

(40) Id. ib. lib. 7. ver. 784.

Digitized by Google

Hell [D], and the Scene of his Resurrection has been described: he was placed among the Gods: Temples were consecrated to him: His Oracle was very famous [E]. The Games, which were instituted in Honour of him (b), made a great Noise. 'Tis

(b) See Benedictus upon Pindar. Od. 7. Olymp. pag. 143.

- - - - - - - - - - and now,
Receive these Lawrels, Phœbus, from my Brow.
To Death, thus crown'd, your Prophet must not go,
Nor bear these Honours to the Shades below.

In another place, he supposes, that Phœbus confessed, that his Prophet descended into Hell, with all the Ensigns of his Office:

- - - - - utinam indulgere precanti
Fata darent! en ipse mei (pudet) irritus arma
Cultoris, frondesque sacras, ad inania vidi
Tartara, & in memet versos descendere vultus (41).

(41) Id. ib. lib. 9. ver. 652.

O! that Apollo might have lent an Ear,
Propitious, to his dying Prophet's Prayer!
But Fate withstood: Unable to assist,
I saw descend to Hell my fav'rite Priest.
MY Laurels grac'd him, in that fatal Hour,
And all the sacred Ensigns of my Power.
In vain with supplicating Looks he pray'd;
In vain Apollo's Priest implor'd Apollo's Aid.

Barthius, who has taken notice of this Mistake, observes, that there are several of the same Nature in the Thebaid of this Poet. " Hoc genus plurima con-
" nivet magnanimus hic Vates; & duodecim tamen
" annorum limam referre vult suam Thebaidem (42).
" —— This lofty Poet has inadvertently let slip se-
" veral Errors of this kind; and yet he pretends,
" that his Thebaid carries the Polish of twelve
" Years."

(42) Barth. in Stat. Tom. 3. pag. 773.

[D] It was believed that Amphiaraus returned from Hell.] Some Authors affect to say, that he disappeared: Ἀμφιάρεω δὲ χανούσης τῆς γῆς ἐμπεσων εἰς τὸ χάσμα μετὰ τοῦ ἅρματος ἀφάνης ἐγένετο (43). Amphiaraus vero debiscente terra cadens in hiatum cum curru inconspicuus evasit. Apollodorus adds this Reason, because Jupiter had immortalized him. Ὁ δὲ σὺν τῷ ἅρματι --- ἐκρύφθη, καὶ Ζεὺς ἀθάνατον αὐτὸν ἐποίησεν. Is vero cum curru absorptus est, & postea nunquam visus: illum enim Jupiter immortalitate donavit (44). This was sufficient to induce the Hebraizers to say, that the Pagans alluded in him to the History of Enoch. Some other Authors are positive in the matter: They suppose that Amphiaraus died, and that he actually descended into Pluto's Kingdom; but that, afterwards, he re-ascended to the upper Regions; nay they marked the very place, where he ascended; which was a Fountain near the Temple, which the Inhabitants of Oropus (45) built in Honour of him. The Devotion paid to this Fountain was remarkable: No Sacrifices were offered there; the Water of it was not used, either in Purifications, or in washing of Hands; only those, who were healed of any Disease, by means of the Oracle, cast a piece of Gold or Silver into it. Ἔστι δὲ Ὠρωπίοις πηγὴ πλησίον τοῦ ναοῦ, ἣν Ἀμφιαράου καλοῦσιν, ὅτε θύοντες ὕδατι ἐς αὐτὴν, ἢ ἐπικαθαρσίοις ἢ χερνίβι χρῆσθαι νομίζοντες. Νόσου δὲ ἀνεσθείσης ἀνδρὶ μαντεύματι γινομένης, καθέσηκεν ἀργυρέην ἀφεῖναι καὶ χρυσοῦν ἐπίσημον ἐς τὴν πηγήν. Ταύτῃ γὰρ ἀνελθεῖν τὸν Ἀμφιάρεων λέγουσιν ἤδη θεόν (46). Est etiam apud Oropios fons templo proximus, quem Amphiarai nuncupant: ad quem neque divinam rem faciunt, neque aut ad lustrandum, aut ad manus lavandas, aqua ea uti fas putant: Solum, qui morbo oraculi monitu levati fuerint, signatum aurum argentumve more majorum in fontem abjiciunt. Hinc enim jam deum Amphiaraum ascendisse tradunt. Note, that the Resurrection of Amphiaraus was not universally believed, and that there were some, who ventured to deny it upon the Stage: Witness this Verse, quoted by Cicero.

(43) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 4.

(44) Apollodor. lib. 3. pag. 193.

(45) A Town situated between Attica and Bœotia.

(45) Pausan. lib. 1. p. 55.

Audisne hæc, Amphiarae sub terram abdite (47)?
From Earth's dark Womb, O Prophet, do'st thou hear?

(47) Cicero Tuscul. Quæst. l. 2. fub fin.

[E] Temples were consecrated to him: His Oracle was very famous.] The Inhabitants of Oropus were the first, who deified Amphiaraus. They built a Temple to him, twelve Stadia from their Town, in the place where the Earth opened and swallowed up him, and his Chariot (48). We have already seen (49), that there were divers Opinions about the true Situation of the Place, where he was swallowed up. However it be, all Greece joined with the Oropians (50), in the Apotheosis of this Prophet. They agreed, that the Oracle of this new God was to be consulted in the Temple, which they had built to him. Pausanias informs us, that a Collection of Oracles in Hexameter Verse contributed greatly to give the People an high Opinion of Amphiaraus; because the Author of this Collection inserted the Answer, which this Diviner had given, concerning the War of Thebes. This was much to his Reputation; for People were prejudiced with an Opinion, that, in former times, only Persons inspired by Apollo gave Answers viva voce; I mean, after the manner of an Oracle. Other Soothsayers were employed only in explaining the Presages of Birds, and Victims, or Dreams. But, whatever Advantage this gave our Amphiaraus over his Fellows, yet People were not persuaded, that his true Function was the same with that of the Divinity of Delphi; for they consulted him only to receive Answers from him by Dreams; which is a Proof, that, during his Life, he chiefly applied himself to the Interpretation of Dreams. This seems to me to be the Substance of Pausanias's Narrative (51). I do not find that Romulus Amasæus has rightly translated it; and I chuse to depend upon the Version of Vigenere, though not very exact. It is this. " Jophon Cnos-
" sien, l'un des interpretes des Oracles, publia ceux
" d'Amphiaraus, en vers hexametres, &c. i. e. Jophon
" of Cnossus, one of the Interpreters of Oracles, pub" lished those of Amphiaraus in Hexameter Verse;
" which had such an Influence upon the People,
" that they flocked to them on a sudden from " all Parts. For none of the Soothsayers, except " those, who formerly were inspired by the Enthu" siasm of Apollo, pronounced any Oracles, but " were all Interpreters of Dreams, or foretold things
" to come by the Flight of Birds, or by the En-
" trails of sacrificed Beasts. Whence it appears, that
" Amphiaraus addicted himself chiefly to the Interpre" tation of Dreams; which we infer from hence,
" that, after his Deification, he instituted this man-
" ner of Divination. And, in the first place, those,
" who go to his Oracle, must be well and duly puri-
" fied: Which Purgation or Cleansing consists in or" derly sacrificing to this God, and performing the " requisite Ceremonies as well towards him, as to" wards all the rest, whose Names are written there.
" After this, having offered a Sheep, they stretch the " Skin on the Ground, and sleep upon it, expecting
" the Answer to their Request, which they are to re-
" ceive in a Dream (52)." Philostratus informs us of some other Ceremonies, which were observed in that Place. " The Gods, says he (53), are wont to
" grant Oracles to those, who are sober; for there
" was once a Prophet in Greece, whose Name was " Amphiaraus. I believe, interrupted the King, you
" mean him, who was the Son of Iocles, who, in " his return from Thebes, was swallowed up by the " Earth. Him, and none else, answered Apollonius;
" who, to this Day, pronounces Oracles in the Athe-
" nian Territory, and sends to those, who require it
" of him, an Answer to their Demands by Dreams.
" But the Priests of the Place enjoin those, who come
" thither to consult him, to abstain a whole Day from " all manner of Flesh, and three Days from Wine, to
" the end that they may the better conceive and retain
" in their pure Thoughts the Reasons of the Things,
" which shall be declared to them in Dreams. If Wine
" were a proper means to cause Sleep, the sage Amphia-
" raus would, without doubt, have prescribed it to " the Dreamers; and would have enjoined them to " eat and drink to excess, before they descended into
" the most private Recesses of the Temple, where
" such Oracles were given." Observe, that Philostratus assures us, that, in the Time of Apollonius, the Oracle of Amphiaraus was still in Repute; and yet Plutarch confesses, that all the Oracles of Bœotia (54), (48) Pausan. ubi supra.

(49) In Remark [E].

(50) Pausan. ibid.

(51) Id. ib.

(52) Vigenere upon the Amphiaraus of Philostratus, p. 400. Tom. 1.

(53) Philostrati Vita Apollon. lib. 2. cap. 11. pag. 476. agreeable to the Translation of Vigenere.

(54) Plutarch. de Oraculorum defectu, pag. 411.

Digitized by Google

'Tis thought that he chiefly excelled in Divination by Dreams; but this was not all; for he was the Inventor likewise of Divination by Fire [F]. He conceived such an inveterate Hatred against his Wife, that he commanded the Children, whom he had by her, to kill her (i), as soon as their Age would permit. Great Praises have been bestowed upon him; and among others This, That he endeavoured to be an honest Man, among which he reckons this, were ceased (55). Let us lay no Stress upon Apollonius's placing this Oracle in Attica, and not, as Plutarch does, in Bœotia. They both mean the same Place; for the Country of Oropus being contested between the Athenians and the Thebans, the former pretending it belonged to Attica (56), and the latter, that it was part of Bœotia; hence it was, that some Authors tell us, that the Temple of Amphiaraus was in Bœotia, and others, that it was in Attica. Clemens Alexandrinus, objecting to the Pagans the Cessation of their Oracles, mentions That of Amphiaraus by Name (57); thus here is a second Evidence against the Hero of Philostratus. Let us remark by the Way, that he takes notice of it in another Place, which his Translator has perverted. It is this: Ἡ τὸν Ἀμφιάρεων τὸν σὺν τοῖς ἐπὶ Θήβας στρατεύσασι μιᾷ γενεᾷ τῆς Ἰλίου ἁλώσεως πρεσβύτερον φερόμενον. The Translator says Aut Amphiaraum, qui, cum septem qui adversus Thebas bellum gesserunt, fertur Troja capta una generatione fuisse posterior. He should have said prior (58). The Sense is; Or Amphiaraus, who, with the seven, who warred against Thebes, is said to have lived one Generation before the taking of Troy.

(i) This was executed by his Son Alcmæon. See his Article.

Herodotus can inform us, how much this Oracle was esteemed; for he says, that of all those, which Crœsus, King of Lydia, sent to consult, this alone, and That of Delphi, returned proper Answers, and received noble Gifts from that Monarch (59). I am surprized at what he observes, that the Presents, sent by Crœsus to the Oracle of Amphiaraus, were deposited in the Temple of Apollo Ismenius, in the City of Thebes (60). Why were they not consecrated in Amphiaraus's own Temple? Or why, in default of this, were they not rather carried to any other City, than Thebes, whose Inhabitants had incurred a Mark of Ignominy, with respect to this Oracle; for they were forbidden to sleep in the Temple of Amphiaraus; which was the only way to be informed of future Events in that Place? The Reason of this Prohibition was, that, Amphiaraus having offered the Thebans to be their Soothsayer, or their Fellow-Soldier, they made choice of the latter. You will find these Particulars in Herodotus (61), with so clear a Distinction between the Temple of Apollo Ismenius, and that of Amphiaraus, that I wonder how Barthius (62) could say, there was no Difference between them. Herodotus relates this, speaking of an European, who was sent by Mardonius, to consult the Oracles of Greece. He could not tell by what Dream Amphiaraus discovered to this General of the King of Persia the ill Fortune which attended him. Plutarch was better informed of it; for he relates the Dream (63). Some Authors say, that Amphiaraus appeared to those who consulted him. Ἀμφιάρεῳ μὲν γὰρ καὶ Τροφωνίῳ ἐν Βοιωτίᾳ καὶ Ἀμφιλοχῳ ἐν Αἰολίᾳ χρησμῳδοῦσί τε καὶ φαίνονται. ἕτοι δὲ πανταχῇ τῆς γῆς διαιτῶσιν ὥσπερ ἀστέρες περίπολοι (64). I believe they mean, that he appeared to them in a Dream. However it be, his Oracle was no less esteemed, than that of Delphi, or that of Dodona, or that of Jupiter Hammon. Valerius Maximus tells us this. "Eadem gens "summo consensu ad Amphiaraum decorandum in- "cubuit, locum, in quo humatus est, in formam con- "ditionemque templi redigendo, atque inde oracula "capi instituendo. Cujus cineres idem honoris pos- "sident, quod Pythicæ Cortinæ, quod aheno Do- "donæ, quod Hammonis fonti datur (65). - - - - - - "The same People were unanimous in honouring Am- "phiaraus, by building a Temple over the Place, where "he was buried, and ordering that he should be en- "quired of, as an Oracle. The same Honour was paid "to his Ashes, as to the Pythian Tripod, the Cauldron "of Dodona, and the Fountain of Jupiter Hammon." Cicero does not say so much; yet he speaks with Commendation of it. "Amphiaraum sic honoravit "fama Græciæ, deus ut haberetur, atque ut ab ejus "solo, in quo est humatus, oracula peterentur (66). "——Amphiaraus was so honoured by Greece, that "he was deified, and the Place, where he was buried, "became oracular."

(55) He extends that of Lebadia.

(56) See Pausanias, lib. 1. pag. 53. and Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 255.

(57) Clemens Alexandrin. in Protreptico, pag. 9.

(58) Id. Strom. lib. 1. p. 334. C. Barthius in Stat. Tom. 2. pag. 138. adopts the Fault of the Translator, and imputes it to Clemens Alexandrinus.

(59) Herodot. lib. 1. cap. 46. & seq.

(60) Id ib. cap. 52.

(61) Id. lib. 8. cap. 134.

(62) Barthius, ubi supra, pag. 137.

(63) Plutarch de Orac. defectu, pag. 412.

(64) Aristides Orat. in Æsculapiadas, apud Barthium, in Statium, pag. 138.

(65) Valer. Maximus, l. 8. sub fin.

(66) Cicero de Divinat. l. 1. cap 40.

Note, That there was at Corinth a Temple of Amphiaraus (67); but give no credit to Pomponius Mela (68), nor to Solinus (69), who say there was one at Rhamnus; for they are mistaken: It was not there, but near Oropus, as I have already observed, and as may be proved from Dicæarchus, Strabo, and Pausanias, &c. See Isaac Vossius, pag. 151 of his Commentary on Pomponius Mela.

(67) Paus. lib. 2. p. 65.

(68) Pomponius Mela, lib. 2. cap. 3.

(69) Solin. cap. 7.

[F] He chiefly excelled in Divination by Dreams - - - - - - for he was the Inventor likewise of Divination by Fire.] As to this Invention, I can only cite these Words of Pliny: "Aruspicium Delphus (in- "venit) ignispicia Amphiaraus, auspicia avium Tire- "sias Thebanus, interpretationem ostentorum & som- "niorum Amphictyon (70). —— Delphus was the "Inventor of Divination by the Entrails of Beasts, "Amphiaraus of that by Fire, Tiresias the Theban of "that of Birds, and Amphictyon of the Interpreta- "tion of Prodigies and Dreams." Statius makes no mention of this Particular; though he is pleased frequently to take notice of the Ability of Amphiaraus, in prophesying by several Methods. His Words are;

(70) Plinius, lib. 7. c. 56.

Quis mihi sidereos lapsus, mentemque siniſtri
Fulguris, aut cæsis saliat quod numen in extis,
Quando iter, unde moræ, quæ sævis utilis armis,
Quæ pacem magis hora velit, quis jam omne futurum
Proferet? aut cum quo volucres mea fata loquentur (71)?

Who now shall read the Omens of the Skies,
Or tell the Thunder's meaning, as it flies?
Who in the panting Entrails shall explore
What Heaven decrees, and read each lucky Hour;
For journeying which or best or worst is found;
When War or Peace shall with Success be crown'd?
Who, after him, Futurity shall scan,
And from the Birds enquire the Fate of Man?

(71) Statius, Thebaid l. 8. ver. 177.

Thus he expresses the Grief of the whole Army for the Death of this Prophet. He says, in another place:

- - - - - quantum subito diversus ab illo,
Qui tripodas lauruſque sequi, qui doctus in omni
Nube salutato volucrem cognoscere Phœbo (72).

How on a sudden chang'd from him, who late
Learn'd from the Tripod the Decrees of Fate;
Skillful (due Honours first to Phœbus paid)
The winged Oracles of Air to read!

(72) Id. ib. lib. 7. ver. 706.

I omit several other Passages of the same Nature; chusing rather to observe, that this Poet does not insist on the chief Character of this Prophet, which was to foretel by Dreams, as I have already observed (73). He was the first who abstained from Beans, as being prejudicial to this Science (74). Πρῶτος δὲ ἀπέσχετο κυάμων Ἀμφιάρεως διὰ τὴν δι' ὀνείρων μαντείαν. Amphiaraus primus abstinuit à fabis ob divinationem per somnia (75). It will not be improper to take notice, in this place, how he became a Prophet. "He went into a certain House, "as ignorant of Futurity as any one else; but the "next Day he came out of it perfectly qualified to be "a Prophet. The House was shut up from that "time, and was called Fatidica, The House of Pre- "diction." It had, with respect to Divination, the same Virtue, which the Poets ascribed to Parnassus, with respect to Poetry.

(73) In Remark [E].

(74) See Remark [I] of the Article PYTHAGORAS.

(75) Geoponic. lib. 2. apud Barthium, ubi supra, Tom. 2. pag. 137.

Nec in bicipiti somniasse Parnasso
Memini, ut sic derepente Poeta prodirem (76).

Nor on Parnassus (well I know it)
Slept I myself into a Poet.

(76) Persius, in Prologo.

It made a Man a Prophet in one Night; and it might then be said, that Good comes by sleeping. We learn this from a Passage of Pausanias; and that this Metamorphosis

Digitized by Google

Man, and not to appear ſo [G]. A noble Subject for Reflexions [H]. If I am not miſtaken, Metamorphoſis of Amphiaraus came to paſs at Phthia (77). Ὄπισθεν δὲ τῆς ἀγορᾶς, ἐστὶν οἶκος ὀνομαζόμενος ὑπὸ Φλιασίων μαντικός. ἐς τοῦτον Ἀμφιάρεως ἐλθὼν, καὶ τὴν νύκτα ἐγκαθακοιμηθεὶς, μαντεύσασθαι τούτῳ παρῆλθον, ὡς οἱ Φλιάσιοι φασιν, ἡξαθεος. τέως δὲ ἦν Ἀμφιάρεως τῷ ἐκείνων λόγῳ, ἰδιώτης τε καὶ ἐ μάντις. καὶ τὸ οἴκημα ἀπὸ τέτε συγκέκλεισαι τὸν πάντα ἤδη χρόνον. In poſtica fori parte domus eſt, quam Phliaſii Fatidicam nuncupant: in eam enim ingreſſus Amphiaraus (quemadmodum ipſi narrant Phliaſii) cum noctem unam obdormiſſet, ſtatim divinare cœpit, cum antè indoctus plane fuiſſet. Id cum ita eveniſſet, in reliquum omne tempus occluſæ illæ ædes fuerunt.

(77) A Town of Peloponneſus.

[G] Great Praiſes have been beſtowed upon him ------ that he endeavoured to be a Virtuous Man, and not to appear ſo.] Adraſtus, in his Complaint for the Death of Amphiaraus, declares, that he had loſt the Eye of his Army, both a Prophet, and a good Soldier.

Ποθέω σεῦτιάς
Ὀφθαλμὸν ἐμᾶς, ἀμφότερον,
Μαντίν τ' ἀγαθὸν
Καὶ δορὶ μάρναθαι (78).

(78) Pindar. Od. 6. Olymp. p. 99.

Deſidero exercitus oculum mei
Utrumque vatem bonum & ad pugnandum haſta.

Indeed he was a Diviner, not active in Mind alone; His Arm of Fleſh was formidable, and he excelled in bodily Exerciſes. It is ſaid that he made a terrible Slaughter of the Enemy the Day in which he died.

Ardet inexpleto ſævi mavortis amore,
Et fruitur dextra, atque anima flagrante ſuperbit.
Hic hominum caſus lenire & demere fatis
Jura frequens, quantum ſubito diverſus ab illo,
(80). - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Innumeram ferro plebem, ceu letifer annus,
Aut jubar adverſi grave ſideris, immolat umbris
Ipſe ſuis (81).

(80) What is wanting, here, has been cited in the foregoing Remark.

(81) Statius, Thebaid. lib. 7. ver. 703.

Inſatiate Love of Battle fires his Breaſt,
And his Soul's cruel Tranſport ſtands confeſt.
He triumphs in his own unconquer'd Might,
Exults in Slaughter, and enjoys the Fight.
He, who was wont to mitigate, of late,
The Woes of Mortals, and controul their Fate,
How on a ſudden chang'd, &c.
By his dire Sword, with Blood of thouſands red,
(So baleful Stars their murd'rous Influence ſhed),
To his own Ghoſt, e'er yet it ſunk to Hell,
Whole Hecatombs of human Victims fell.

In a Word, he was an Hero, as well as a Prophet; a Quality proper for one, who to Royalty joined the Knowledge of Futurity. Statius calls him the Royal Prophet.

Jamque erit ille dies, quo te quoque conſcia fati
Templa colant, reddatque tuus reſponſa ſacerdos,
Talia FATIDICO peragunt ſolennia REGI (82).

(82) Id. ib. l. 8. v. 206.

Altars and Temples ſoon ſhall riſe to Thee,
And Prieſts, thy own, reveal the Fates' Decree;
Such Rites be thine, as at his Votaries Hands
Even now the ſage PROPHETIC KING demands.

As for what concerns his Dexterity in the Exerciſes, in which the Greeks ſtrove ſo much to obtain the Victory, I need only obſerve, that our Amphiaraus obtained the Prize of the Race, and That of the Diſcus, in the Nemean Games, which the Generals celebrated in their March againſt the City of Thebes (83). Take notice of theſe Words of Steſichorus:

Θρώσκων μὲν γὰρ Ἀμφιάρεω
Ἄκοντι δὲ νίκασεν Μελέαγρος (84).

(83) Apollodor. lib. 3. pag. 189.

(84) Athen. lib. 4. c. 21. pag. 172.

Amphiaraus bore away the Prize in Vaulting, Meleager in throwing the Launce.

As to the rare Qualities of his Soul, ſee the eighth Book of the Thebaid, and the Tragedy of Æſchylus, entituled ἑπτὰ ἐπὶ Θήβας, ſeptem contra Thebas, out of which I ſhall produce a Paſſage in the Remark [I], and three fine Verſes in the following Remark. See likewiſe the Commendations beſtowed on his Modeſty, in a Fragment of the Emperor Julian (85).

(85) Pape 303, Of Julian's Works, Edit. Lipſ. 1696.

[H] A noble Subject for Reflexions] The Matter of Fact, according to Plutarch, is this. " Ariſtides " was never puffed up with any Honour which was " paid him, nor dejected and troubled at any Repulſe or Refuſal; being always of Opinion that a " good Citizen ought to offer himſelf Body and Soul " for the Service of his Country without hoping or " expecting the mercenary Hire either of Riches or " Glory. For which Reaſon it was, that, at the re- " cital of theſe Verſes of Æſchylus, on the Stage, in " Commendation of the old Augur Amphiaraus,

Οὐ γὰρ δοκεῖν ἄριστος, ἀλλ' εἶναι θέλει,
Βαθεῖαν ἄλοκα διὰ φρενὸς καρπίμου
Ἐξ ἧς τὰ κεδνὰ βλαστάνει βουλεύματα *.

* Æſchyl. Ἑπτὰ ἐπὶ Θήβας, ver. 598.

He aims at being juſt, not ſeeming ſo;
The Fruit of Virtue grows up in his Mind,
Whence ſage Advice and prudent Counſels ſpring;

" The Eyes of all the Spectators were immediately " turned on Ariſtides, as if the Elogium of this Virtue was particularly applicable to him. For he was " a moſt ſtrenuous Champion for Juſtice, nor was " ever induced to violate it, either by Favour and " Friendſhip, or by Hate and Reſentment (86)." This is the fineſt Encomium in the World. Amphiaraus was worthy of Admiration, if he deſerved it: Ariſtides, who ſeemed to deſerve it, is an incomparable Man.

(86) Plutarch. in Vit. Ariſt. pag. 320. Apophth. pag. 186. & de audiend. Poët. p. 32.

Let us make a few Reflexions on a Subject, which will afford an infinite Number, and obſerve, I. That if the Pagans did not practiſe true Virtue, at leaſt they perfectly underſtood it; for they praiſed thoſe, who, in doing a good Action, did not propoſe to themſelves either a pecuniary Intereſt, or public Applauſe; and they deſpiſed thoſe, whoſe End, in the Exerciſe of Virtue, was Reputation, Glory, or the Applauſe of their Neighbour. Be as diſintereſted as you pleaſe with reſpect to Riches and Employments; if you are not ſo, with reſpect to Praiſe, you ſtill act meanly; you are not recovered from the Diſeaſe of Self-love; you are only diſengaged from the groſſeſt Snares; you only wear finer Chains: In a word, you will find your Picture drawn in the Treatiſe of Mr Eſprit, concerning the Deceitfulneſs of human Virtues. Apply to all Virtues the excellent Rule, which Seneca has preſcribed concerning Liberality, and then they will be True; but, without That They will not be ſo. The Philoſopher anſwers this Objection, May not he, to whom I have done good, know of whom he has received it? " Quid ergo? ille neſciet à quo accepit? " Primum neſciat, ſi hoc ipſum beneficii pars " eſt: deinde multa alia faciam, multa tribuam, per " quæ intelligat & illius auctorem. Denique ille " neſciat accepiſſe ſe: ego ſciam me dediſſe. Parum " eſt inquis; parum, ſi fœnerare cogitas; ſed ſi dare " quo genere accipienti maxime profuturum erit, dabis, contentus eris te teſte. Alioquin non beneſacere delectat, ſed videri beneficiſſe. Volo, inquis, " ſciat: debitorem quæris. Volo utique ſciat: quid, ſi " illi utilius eſt neſcire? ſi honeſtius? ſi gratius? non in " aliam partem abibis? Volo ſciat: ita tu hominem " non ſervabis in tenebris? Non nego, quoties patitur res, percipiendum gaudium ex accipientis " voluntate: ſin adjuvari illum & oportet, & pudet; " ſi quod præſtamus, offendit, niſi abſconditur: beneficium in acta non mitto. Quidni? ego illi " non ſum indicaturus me dediſſe; cum inter prima " præcepta ac maxime neceſſaria ſit, ne unquam exprobrem, imo ne admoneam quidem? Hæc enim " beneficii inter duos lex eſt, alter ſtatim obliviſci " debet dati, alter accepti numquam (87). —— What! " Shall he not know to whom he is obliged? I anſwer, " firſt, no; if this very Ignorance be Part of the Be- " neſit. I will continue to be his Benefactor, I will " oblige him farther, 'till by repeated Services he " diſcovers the Author of them. Nay, let him not " even know, that he has received a Favour, ſo long " as

(87) Seneca de Benefic. lib. 2. c. 16.

Digitized by Google

mistaken, Apollodorus is the only Author, who has inserted him in the Catalogue of the Argonauts (k); for neither Apollonius, nor Hyginus, nor Valerius Flaccus, have done so. He is ranked among the wise Men, who have had the misfortune to be engaged in Undertakings directed by hot-head Men [I]. This is without doubt a very deplorable (k) Apollod. lib. 1. pag. 53.

" as I am conscious of having conferred one on him. This " is too little, you say. Too little indeed, if you propose to " lend out your Favours to Usury; but, if you will bestow " them in the manner most advantageous to the Receiver, " you will freely give them; you will be satisfied with " your own Consciousness. Otherwise you are not pleased " with being serviceable, but with appearing to be " so. Still you insist upon his knowing it. But, " What if it is more to his Advantage not to know " it, if it is more honourable, if it is more acceptable? " Will you not alter your Opinion? Still you persist. " Will you not even upon these Accounts keep him in " the Dark? I do not deny you the Pleasure, which " arises from the Disposition of the Receiver, when- " ever it is proper: but, if your Assistance be required, " where it is inconsistent with Decency to let it be " known; if the Service you do offends, unless it be con- " cealed; the Benefit must not be made public. Why " not? Shall I not let him know, that I am his Be- " nefactor, because it is one of the principal and most " necessary Precepts, that I must never reproach ano- " ther with, nor even hint at, the Favours I have " once conferred upon him? For This is a Law be- " tween the Giver and Receiver, that the former " ought immediately to forget, that he has bestowed, " the latter never, that he has received, a Benefit."

My second Reflexion is, That it seldom happens, that the Desire of Applause is the only End of those, who are not satisfied with the Testimony of their own Consciences. Observe the Persons, who aspire to these two Things; the one to be virtuous, and the other to appear so; and you will find, that the Ambition of the former is not contented with the Reality, nor That of the latter with the Appearance, of Virtue. The meer Steam of Incense does not satisfy their Desires; they wish for something more solid to attend it. Reputation alone seems to them a Reward too spiritual; they endeavour to incorporate it with the Conveniencies of Life: They soon make a Merit of the Praise and Approbations of the World to those, who have the Distribution of Honours and Employments, and then make use of this Credit, to enrich themselves, or to gratify all their Passions. The surest way therefore to preserve the Purity of the Soul, is to follow the Example of Amphiaraus and Aristides. Endeavour to be a virtuous Man; let That be your chief End; seek not to appear so, for such an Endeavour is attended with more dangerous Consequences, than you are aware of.

III. Socrates is reported to have said, " That the " shortest way of attaining to Virtue, was to endea- " vour to be such as one would desire to be thought." " Semper id egisti, ut qualis haberi velles talis esses: " quam viam ad gloriam proximam & quasi com- " pendiariam Socrates esse dicebat (88)." Socrates's own Words are; Συντομωτάτη τε καὶ ασφαλεστάτη καὶ καλλίστη ὁδός, ὦ κριτόβουλε, ὅτι ἂν βάλλη δοκεῖν ἀγαθὸς εἶναι, τοῦτο καὶ γενέσθαι ἀγαθὸν πειρᾶσαι (89). " Velim, O Critobule, scias " hanc esse brevissimam, securissimam, optimamque " ad hæc omnia viam, in quocunque volueris bonus " apparere, in eodem effici quoque bonus conari." So likewise Horace

Tu rectè vivis, si curas esse quod audis *.

This Advice is very judicious; for the Desire of appearing with Lustre, and of obtaining public Applause, is so strong and common, even among those, who have no great Inclination to be internally virtuous, that we may expect great Advancements in Virtue from him, who will endeavour to produce a perfect Conformity between the real State of his Soul, and the Opinion he would have others entertain of Him. But it must be confessed, that there is less disinterestedness in This way, than in That of Amphiaraus. " Seem to be an honest Man, and be so: enjoy " a fair Reputation, but deserve it; do not usurp " the Esteem of your Neighbour:" This is the Counsel of Socrates: He would not deprive any one of the Incense of Praise. Amphiaraus would have said, " Be an honest Man, and do not trouble yourself " whether it be known to others, or whether you are " praised for it.

IV. You will say, perhaps, that these two things generally go together, and that, if a good Reputation may be acquired by false Virtues, that is to say, by the Art of concealing a bad Heart under the Appearance of Honesty, it may be more certainly obtained by real Virtues. You will conclude from hence, that Amphiaraus, and others like him, valued themselves upon despising a thing, which they very well knew they could not want. I answer, that oftentimes it is easier to be an honest Man, than to be accounted so; and that there is no necessary Consequence from one of these things to the other, wherever you begin. To become a virtuous Man, you have nothing to do but to conquer your own Passions; but to appear so, you must conquer those of others, and triumph over them. You have cunning and violent Enemies, who spread many ill Reports of you: Those who hear them give Credit to them, and become new Spreaders of Calumny: If they are incredulous, they form Difficulties, by which they teach your Enemies how to propose their Calumnies after a more plausible manner. Sometimes you are ignorant of these Machinations; and, if you knew them, either wholly, or in part, can you go from place to place to justify yourself? If you are an honest Man, as I suppose you to be, are you able to discover the Contrivances of your Enemies, and the oblique ways of working upon the Minds of the Vulgar? Had you not rather leave the Vulgar in an Error, than spend all your Leisure in disputing the ground with Calumniators? Will your Vigilance be sufficient to remove the Impressions, which their Malignity has made upon credulous Men, who are infinitely more susceptible of Calumny, than of the best Reasons you can alledge in your Vindication?

You may see in the Remark [L] of the Article CÆSAR, that the same Commendation, which Æschylus bestows upon our Amphiaraus, was bestowed by Sallust upon CATO of Utica.

[I] He is ranked among the wise Men, who have had the Misfortune to be engaged in Undertakings directed by hot-headed Men.] It is of little Consequence, whether I myself, or another, furnish a Commentary on this Text. We are not here to consider Style, but Facts, and Sentiments. I shall therefore boldly produce the Old French of the Commentator on Philostratus (90). " Icy pouvons nous remarquer, " & appercevoir des eschantillons de nostre pauvrete " & misere, &c. i. e. Here we have an Instance of " our Wretchedness and Misery; since prudent and " good Men are obliged to suffer for the Folly of " those, who are inconsiderate and wicked. Is it " not strange, that Tideus, a hot-headed, peevish, " quarrelsome, and brainless Fool, a disturber of the " public Quiet, though a Stranger, and notwith- " standing all the Remonstrances, Predictions, and " Admonitions of the wisest Man of Greece, who was " also accounted a Prophet, should have a Voice in " the Council, and be so far credited, as to cause a " War to be undertaken, which was no way neces- " sary, and would turn to the Ruin and Destruction " of them all? Nay, those who oppose the same with " the most probable and best Reasons, must be Par- " takers of, and even have a great share in, the Danger " of these giddy-headed Men. So true it is, that bad " and pernicious Counsels have always prevailed over " good and wholesome ones! Wherefore, not without " Reason, or at Random, the Poet Æschylus, in the " Tragedy, entituled Septem contra Thebas, laments, " in the Person of Eteocles, the good and wise Am- " phiaraus, in this manner:

Φεῦ τῦ ξυναλλάσσοντος ὀργὴς βεβτοῖς
Δίκαιον ἄνδρα τοῖσι δυσσεβεστέροις.
Ἐν ταυτὶ πράγει δ' ἔσθ' ὁμιλίας κακῆς
Κάκιον, ὐδὲν καρπὸς ὐ κομιστέος.

" What an unhappy thing it is, says he, that a " good Man should be associated with impious and " wicked People! Certainly there is nothing worse " than bad Company; from whence no Good can " come

(88) Petrus Alcyonius, in Medice legato priore, circa finem.

(89) Xenophon. Memorab. l. 2. pag. 474. See also Plato, Epist. 4. pag. 1274. and Cicero, de Officiis, lib. 2. c. 12.

* Lib. 1. Epist. 16. See Postel on this Passage, in the Epistle Dedicatory to his Oriental History.

(90) Vigenere upon the Amphiaraus of Philostratus, p. 403, 404. of the first Vol. Edit in 4to.

Digitized by Google

deplorable Case, and is but too common. The manner, in which he comforted a Woman, who bewailed the Death of her Son, deserves a Remark [K]. I would willingly see the Particulars of the Action, which the Farmers of the Taxes * brought against his Priests [L]. I have shewn, in another place (l), the Invalidity of an Argument,

(l) In Remark [F] of the Article MELAMPUS.

* In French Les Partisans.

" come - - - - - This Soothsayer (I mean the Son " of Oicleus) a prudent, just, sincere, and devout " Man, a Foreteller of things to come, by keeping " Company with Men, wicked and presumptuous, " and deprived of all Sense and Reason, who endea- " vour to come against us with a great Army, (Ju- " piter permitting it to be so) shall be drawn in " with them to his final Perdition and Ruin." This is what Vigenere says. We must not imagine that Amphiaraus was in hopes, that the Errors of the Managers would be repaired by the Justice of the Cause (91). He was too understanding a Man to believe This: he knew that a just War stands as much in need of human Assistance, as an unjust one (92), and that, without being at least very near as powerful as the Defenders of Injustice, we shall generally come off by the worst. He is therefore justly alledged as an Example of the Sacrifice, which upon some Occasions we ought to make of our Lives or our Prudence to other Considerations. Read these Words of Cicero (93). " Valuit apud me plus pudor meus, " quam timor. Veritus sum deesse Pompeii saluti, " cum ille aliquando non defuisset meæ. Itaque, vel " officio, vel fama bonorum, vel pudore, victus, ut in " fabulis Amphiaraus, sic ego prudens & sciens ad " pestem ante oculos positam sum profectus. —— " Upon this Occasion, Shame had a greater Influence " on me than Fear. I was afraid of being wanting " to Pompey's Health, who once was not wanting to " mine. Therefore, being prevailed upon by Duty, or " Reputation, or Shame, like Amphiaraus in the Fable, " I ran prudently and knowingly into the midst of " a Plague, which was before my Eyes." To conclude; there is some Reason to upbraid this Prophet with the Imperfection of his Knowledge, and to rally him upon this Account. He foresaw, that, if he went to the War, he should be killed; but he did not foresee, that he should go, and that, notwithstanding his Precautions, he should be forced to engage in the Undertaking (94).

(91) The Thebans were wholly to blame in this War, and yet they came off victorious in the Battle.

(92) See Remark [C] of the Article BRUTUS (MARCUS).

(93) Cicero, Epist. 6. lib. 6. ad Familiar. p. 319.

(94) See the Commentary on the Life of Apollonius, translated into French by Vigenere, Book 2. chap. 11. p. 488.

[K] The manner in which he comforted a Woman - - - - - deserves a Remark.] Plutarch, having mentioned the Reasons, which ought to be employed in comforting those, who are afflicted at the untimely Death of their Children, adds (95): " And Amphia- " raus, in a Poem, seems to me to offer no impertinent Consolation to the Mother of Archemorus, " who was uncommonly afflicted for the Loss of her " Son, who died unexpectedly: For he says to her: " No Man was ever happy all his Life; he produces " Children upon the Earth; then buries them; at " last he dies himself; and Men always lament those, " whom they carry in their Coffins to their Grave, " in like manner as Ears of Corn grow out of the " Earth, and are afterwards cut down. Thus it must " be, that some, newly born, come into Being, and " others go out of it. Why then should Men grieve " for all this, which, according to the Course of Na- " ture, ought always to be so? It is never grievous " to suffer, or do, what cannot be avoided by Man. " In general, every one, whether in meditating by " himself, or in discoursing with others, should take " this for a Rule, that not the longest Life is the best, " but That, which is the most virtuous." Plutarch seems to me to have alledged this Passage improperly; for it doth not relate more to the Death of young People, than of others. I might observe likewise, that the Comparison drawn from Ears of Corn would be absurd, if the Design was to moderate an Affliction, grounded on the Youth of the Person, who is bewailed; for, according to the usual course of things, the Harvest of Corn is not 'till the time of gathering. As for the other Reasons of Amphiaraus, they are good enough; but there is nothing in them but what is common; nay, he concludes with a Maxim, which in one Sense is more apt to encrease Grief, than to cure it (96). We shall see presently how the Philosopher Carneades censured this Reasoning.

(95) Plutarch. de Consolatione ad Apollonium, p. 110, 111. Mr Bayle cites the French Version of Amyot; which therefore we follow.

Amyot has not justly rendered the Greek of Plutarch, ὁ παρὰ τῷ ποιητῇ Ἀμφιάρεως, by Amphiaraus, in a Poem *. This Version manifestly insinuates, that Amphiaraus wrote a Poem; but Plutarch means, that there was a Poet, who introduced Amphiaraus making use of those Reasons. It was Euripides. " Dicuntur " nonnulli in mœrore, quum de hac communi om- " nium conditione audivissent, ea lege nos esse na- " tos, ut nemo in perpetuum esse posset expers mali, " gravius etiam tulisse. Quo circa Carneades, ut vi- " deo nostrum scribere Antiochum, reprehendere " Chrysippum solebat laudantem Euripideum carmen " illud:

Nemo mortalis est, quem non attingat dolor,
Morbusque: multi sunt humandi liberi,
Rursus creandi, morsque est finita omnibus.
Quæ generi humano angorem nequicquam afferunt.
Reddenda est terræ terra (97). Tum vita omnibus
Metenda ut fruges, sic jubet necessitas.

(96) See Remark [E] of the Article FOULQUES.

* Amphiaraus, en un Poeme. Amiot.

(97) The Greek Verse mentioned by Plutarch, which answers this, is, οἷς γῆν φέροντες· τὴν δ' ἀναγκαίως ἔχει. Barthius in Statium, Tom. 3. p. 276. conjectures that it should be read, οἷς γῆν φέρουτες γῆν, κ' ἀναγκαίως ἔχει.

" Negabat genus hoc orationis quicquam omnino ad " levandam ægritudinem pertinere. Id enim ipsum " dolendum esse dicebat, quod in tam crudelem ne- " cessitatem incidissemus. Nam illam quidem oratio- " nem ex commemoratione alienorum malorum ad " malevolos consolandos esse accommodatam (98). — " It is said, that some Persons in Affliction, when " they have been put in mind of the common Fate of " all Men, that the Condition of our Birth is such, " that no Man can be perpetually exempt from Mi- " sery, instead of receiving Consolation, have thought " This an Aggravation of their Misfortunes. For which " reason Carneades, as Antiochus informs us, was " wont to reprove Chrysippus for commending these " Verses of Euripides;

No mortal lives, whom Grief does ne'er attack,
Or whom Diseases spare; our Children die;
Others are born; and Death attends us all.
No Anguish hence the human Breast should feel;
Earth must to Earth, and Dust to Dust, return;
And Life be gathered like maturest Fruits:
Such is th' inevitable Law of Fate.

(98) Cicero Tuscul. Quæst. l. 3. cap. 25.

" He denied that this way of speaking tended in the " least to mitigate Sorrow. For this very thing, he " said, was matter of Affliction, that we are obnoxi- " ous to so cruel a Necessity: For such a Consolation, " as arises from the Recollection of other Men's Mis- " fortunes, can administer Relief only to the Ill-na- " tured." Let us now produce the Answer to this Criticism of Carneades. " Mihi vero longe videtur " secus. Nam & necessitas ferendæ conditionis hu- " manæ quasi cum deo pugnare cohibet, admonet- " que esse hominem, quæ cogitatio magnopere luctum " levat: & enumeratio exemplorum, non ut animum " malevolum oblectet, affertur, sed ut ille, qui mœret, " ferendum sibi esse sentiat, quod videat multos mo- " deratè & tranquillè tulisse (99). —— I am of a very " different Opinion. For the Necessity of submitting " to the Condition of Humanity both restrains us from " fighting, as it were, against God, and admonishes " us, that we are Men; a Consideration which con- " tributes greatly to mitigate Affliction: Besides which, " the setting Examples before our Eyes is not intended " to gratify a malevolent Ill-natured Disposition, but " to convince the afflicted Person, that his Grief is " to be born, by shewing him that many have endured " the like with Patience, and Composure of Mind."

(99) Id. ib.

[L] The Action which the Farmers of the Taxes brought against his Priests.] Give me leave to apply this Application to those, who levy'd the Tribute of the Roman Republic in the Provinces. There was a Law, which exempted the Lands consecrated to the immortal Gods from all Taxes; upon which Amphiaraus's Priests pretended to this Exemption, and gument, by which they pretended to prove the Certainty of his Prophecies. He left ſeveral Children [M], one of which was the Founder of Tibur in Italy. Pliny makes this Remark in a Paſſage, wherein he relates ſeveral curious Particulars concerning the long Life of Trees.

Digitized by Google

and maintained, that the Lands, which belonged to that Deity, were not ſubject to any Taxes; and without doubt they pretended, that the Text of the Law was clear and expreſs in their Favour. The Farmers replied, that theſe Lands did not come within the Intent of the Law; ſince they were conſecrated to a dead Man, and that it was plain, that a Perſon, who is dead, is not one of the immortal Gods. This Argument, though ſuggeſted to them by Covetouſneſs, and not by a Zeal for Religion, which ſuch Men ſeldom regard, where their Intereſt is concerned, yet it was ſo demonſtrative, that they ought to have carried the Cauſe: But I believe they loſt it. It is pity all the Records of this Trial are not extant: All we know of it is this; "An Amphiaraus Deus erit "& Trophonius? Noſtri quidem publicani, cum eſſent agri in Bœotia deorum immortalium excepti "lege cenſoria, negabant immortales eſſe ullos, qui "aliquando homines fuiſſent (100) —— The Queſtion "was, whether Amphiaraus and Trophonius ſhould "be eſteemed as Gods. Our Publicans, allowing the "Cenſorial Law, by which the Lands in Bœotia, conſecrated to the immortal Gods, were exempt from "Taxation, denied thoſe to be Immortals, who had once "been Men." If they had been ſuffered to go on, they might have aſſeſs'd moſt of the Gods, and have ſubjected much conſecrated Ground to Taxes; for what Titles to Divinity or Immortality would have been Proof againſt their Exceptions? What would they not have obtained at the Tribunal of an Intendant, who ſhould have had Orders to favour their Proceedings? If Farmers of the public Revenues were ordered to make an Enquiry into falſe Worſhips, the Number of them would quickly decreaſe. But where would ſuch Inquiſitors be ſafe? We ſhall ſee in another place (101), how ſolid this Argument appeared to many Heathens; He is dead, therefore he ought not to be worſhipped as a God.

(100) Cicero de Nat. Deorum, lib. 3. pag. 631.

(101) In Remark [A] of the Article TROPHONIUS.

[M] He left ſeveral Children.] I have compoſed the Articles of ALCMÆON and AMPHILOCHUS, who were his Sons. I do not find that any Greek Author, now extant, mentions Tiburtus, who was likewiſe his Son; but they mention Eurydice, Demonaſſa, and Alcmena, Daughters of Amphiaraus and Eriphyle (102). Pliny ſpeaks of Tiburtus in this Manner: "Tiburtes originem multo ante urbem Romam "habent. Apud eos exſtant ilices tres, etiam Ti"burto conditore eorum vetuſtiores, apud quas inau"guratus traditur. Fuiſſe autem eum tradunt filium "Amphiarai, qui apud Thebas obierit una ætate ante "Iliacum bellum (103). —— The Tiburtes are more "ancient than the building of Rome. They ſhew "three Oaks, older than Tiburtus their Founder, "where Tradition ſays he was inaugurated. They tell "us he was the Son of Amphiaraus, who died in the "Expedition to Thebes, about an hundred Years be"fore the Trojan War." I fancy Pliny's Account of this Matter is not true: how could the three Oaks, under which Tiburtus, Founder of Tibur, and Son of Amphiaraus, was inaugurated, have remained 'till the Time of Veſpaſian? Note, that Solinus ſays, that Tiburtus was Grand-Son, and not Son of Amphiaraus. I ſhall ſet down his Words in the Article TIBUR.

(102) Pauſanias, lib. 5. pag. 165.

(103) Plinius, lib. 16. cap 44.

AMPHILOCHUS, the Son of Amphiaraus and Eriphyle (a), was a famous Soothſayer. He accompanied his Brother Alcmæon to the ſecond War of Thebes (b), and ſome ſay he aſſiſted him in the Murther of Eriphyle (c); but moſt Authors are of a different Opinion. The Altar, which was conſecrated, to him at Athens (d) contributed much leſs to the Glory of his Name, than the Oracle which he had at Mallus in Cilicia [A]. He and Mopſus founded That City after the Trojan War (e); afterwards they quarrelled, and kill'd each other in a Duel, as I have obſerved elſewhere (f). Some affirm, that Amphilochus was kill'd by Apollo (g). He was both a King and a Prophet (b), for he reigned at Argos. It is true he could not ſupport himſelf in That Kingdom, but left it in diſcontent, and built a City upon the Gulph of (a) Pauſan. lib. 5. pag. 165.

(b) Apollod. lib. 3. pag. 195.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 197.

(d) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 33.

(e) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 464. See alſo Cicero, de Divinat. lib. 1. c. 40.

(f) In the Article MOPSUS.

(g) Strabo, lib. 14.

(l) Cicero, ubi ſupra.

[A] The Oracle which he had at Mallus in Cilicia.] Pauſanias affirms, that, in his Time, there was no Oracle ſo much to be depended upon as this: From whence we may infer, that all the Pagan Oracles did not ceaſe upon the planting of Chriſtianity. Τῷ δὲ Ἀμφιλόχῳ καὶ παρ' Ἀθηναίοις ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ πόλει βωμός, καὶ Κιλικίας ἐν Μαλλῷ μαντεῖον ἀψευδέσταον τῶν ἐπ' ἐμοῦ (1). Amphilocho in ipſa urbe apud Athenienſes ara ſua eſt: in Ciliciæ vero urbe Malle ejuſdem oraculum quod omnium eſt quæ ætate mea extant minime falſax. The Anſwers of this Oracle were given by Dreams. Ἔστιν ἐν Μαλλῷ πόλει τῆς Κιλικίας Ἀμφιλόχου χρηστήριον, καὶ χρᾷ δι' ὀνειράτων (2). Eſt Malli, quod eſt oppidum Ciliciæ Oraculum Amphilochi, quod per ſomnia conſulentibus reſpondit. They, who conſulted it, paſſed the Night in the Temple, and what they dreamed was the Reſolution of their Queſtion. Dion Caſſius mentions a Picture, wherein Sextus Condianus cauſed the Anſwer, which he had received from this Oracle, in the Reign of Commodus, to be repreſented (3). The following Paſſage of Lucian, induces me to believe, that Amphilochus was accounted a great Prophet at that time. Ὅπου γὰρ ἐξ Αἰγύπτου ἐπανῆκον οἴκαδε, ἀκούων τὸ ἐν Μαλλῷ τοῦτο μαντεῖον ἐπιφανέσταόν τε καὶ ἀληθέσταον εἶναι, καὶ χρᾶν ἐναργῶς πρὸς ἕκαστα ἀποκρινόμενον, οἷς ἂν ἐγγράψας τις εἰς τὸ γραμματεῖον παρέδῳ τῷ προφήτῃ, καλῶς ἂν ἔχειν ἡγησάμην ἐν παράπλῳ παρελθεῖν τῇ χρησμῳδίᾳ, καί τι περὶ μελλόντων συμβουλεύσασθαι τῷ θεῷ (4). —— When I returned from Egypt, and was informed that the Oracle at Mallus was the plaineſt, and at the ſame time the trueſt, and that it's Anſwers were ſo clear, as to give a particular and diſtinct Solution of all Queſtions, which were propoſed to the Prophet, written on a ſcroll of Paper; I thought it would be right, as I ſailed by, to try the Oracle, and propoſe ſome Queſtions to this Divinity, concerning future Events. Take notice of the Circumſtance mentioned by Lucian, which is, that the Queſtions, to which an Anſwer was demanded of Amphilochus, were propoſed in Writing. Let no one ſay, that Lucian forged the Stories, which he relates in this Work; for this does not weaken our Proof; ſince it is certain he would not have ſaid, that this Oracle was famous, if it had never been conſulted for the ſpace of an hundred Years. Thus Mr Van Dale ſolves this Objection (5). He cites another Paſſage, taken out of the Hiſtory of the falſe Prophet Alexander, wherein Lucian teſtifies, that the Oracle at Mallus was famous. He might have quoted a third Paſſage, which I find ſo favourable to this Obſervation, that I will give it at length. Τὸν Τεφώνιον, ὦ Ζεῦ, καὶ ὁ μάλιστά με ἀποπνίγει, τὸν Ἀμφόλοχον. ὃς ἀναγῶς ἀνθρώπου, καὶ μητραλοίου υἱὸς ὤν, θεσπιῳδεῖ ὁ γεννατῶ ἐν Κιλικίᾳ, ψευδόμενῳ τὰ πολλὰ, καὶ γοητεύων τοῖν δυοῖν ὀβολοῖν ἕνεκα (6). — I am more angry, O Jupiter, with Amphilochus, than with Trophonius; for the former, though the Son of a Villain and a Parricide, yet is famous for prophecying in Cilicia, lying much, and playing the Wizzard for two Oboli. I ſhall examine hereafter what Lucian ſays, that Amphilochus was not the Son, but the Grand-ſon of Amphiaraus. In the mean time I ſhall obſerve, that the Oracle of Amphilochus was ſtill famous in Plutarch's Time. Ἔτι ἠκμαζεν ἐμοῦ παρόντος, καὶ τὸ Μόψου καὶ τὸ Ἀμφιλόχου μαντεῖον (7). Cum autem eſſem in Patria, florebant adhuc Mopſi & Amphilochi Oracula.

(1) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 33.

(2) Xiphilin. in Epitome Dionis, pag. 285, 286.

(3) Id. ib.

(4) Lucian. in Philopſeude, pag. 500. Tom. 2.

(5) VanDale, de Oraculis, pag. 98.

(6) Lucian. in Deor. concilio, p. 957. Tom. 2.

(7) Plut. de Oraculor. Defectu, p. 434. C.

[B] He

Digitized by Google

of Ambracia [B]. Livy has miſtaken him for another, in a Paſſage which I ſhall quote [C]. Moreri too is liable to Cenſure [D]. We muſt not confound our Sooth-ſayer with one Amphilochus, whom a Gooſe fell in Love with [E]. In the Remark below I ſhall give Pliny's, and other Authors, Account of this Matter.

[B] He left Argos in diſcontent, and built a City upon the Gulph of Ambracia.] We have this from a grave Hiſtorian. Ἄργος τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν καὶ Ἀμφιλοχίαν τὴν ἄλλην ἔκλισε μετὰ τὰ τρωϊκὰ δικαδε ἀναχωρήσας, καὶ ὑπ ἀρεσκόμενος τῇ ἐν Ἄργει καλασάσει Ἀμφίλοχος ὁ Ἀμφιάρεω, ἐν τῷ Ἀμπρακικῷ κόλπῳ, ὁμώνυμον τῇ ἑαυτ πολίδι Ἄργος ὀνομάσας. Καὶ ἦν ἡ πολις αὕτη μεγίστη τῆς Ἀμφιλοχίας, καὶ τὸς δυναλωτάτους εἶχεν ὑπήκόους (8). Amphilochus, the Son of Amphiaraus, returning home, after the Trojan War, and being diſſatisfied with the State of Affairs at Argos, founded Amphilochian Argos, and all the Region of Amphilochia, upon the Gulph of Ambracia, calling the City, after the Name of his native Town, Argos; which City was the largeſt and moſt powerful of the whole Amphilochian Territory. Strabo alledges this Teſtimony of Thucydides; but adds a Circumſtance to it; to wit, that Amphilochus, being diſſatisfied with the Government eſtabliſhed in Argos, went into Acarnania, where he took poſſeſſion of his Brother's Eſtate (9). Thucydides does not ſay this; and conſequently Strabo is in the wrong to aſcribe it to him. They, who pretend, that he follows the Opinion of Thucydides (10), are miſtaken; for he ſeems to prefer the Hiſtorian Ephorus, who ſaid, that the City of Amphilochian Argos was built by Alcmæon, and that it's Founder gave it the Name of his Brother. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν Ἀμβρακίαν τὸ Ἄργος ἔστι τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν κλίσμα Ἀλκμαίωνος καὶ τῶν παίδων (11). After Ambracia follows Amphilochian Argos, a City built by Alcmæon and his Sons. It cannot be ſaid, that Apollodorus has neither followed Thucydides, nor any other Writer, when he ſays that Amphilochus was the Son of Alcmæon (12); for he reports this only on the Credit of Euripides (13). Note, He obſerves, that this Amphilochus went, by the Advice of Apollo, to live at Amphilochian Argos.

I muſt take notice of a great Difference between Thucydides and Strabo. The one ſays, that Amphilochus, being returned to Argos, after the taking of Troy, and not finding Affairs in ſuch a Condition as he could have wiſhed, retired towards the Gulph of Ambracia, where he built a Town (14). The other tells us, that Amphilochus, having built Mallus in Cilicia, after the taking of Troy, returned to Argos, and being diſpleaſed with the poſture of Affairs there, went back into Cilicia, where he was killed, and buried (15). But there are other Difficulties ſtill. Euripides ſays, that Alcmæon, being mad, lay with Manto, the Daughter of Tireſias, by whom he had a Son and a Daughter; the Son was called Amphilochus, and the Daughter Tiſiphone (16). This Amphilochus, in Obedience to an Oracle, ſettled in Amphilochian Argos. We have ſeen (17), that Lucian ſays, that Amphilochus, whoſe Oracle was ſo famous at Mallus, was the Son of Alcmæon; others ſay that he was the Son of Amphiaraus. Amidſt all this Confuſion there are two ways to chooſe. One is, to ſay, that there was but one Amphilochus, whoſe Hiſtory has only been related by Piece-meal, that is, by Authors who have omitted part of his Adventures. The other is to aſſert, that there were two Amphilochus's, one the Son of Amphiaraus, and the other the Son of Alcmæon; and that Authors have ſometimes aſcribed to one what belonged to the other. I could eaſily believe that Amphilochus, whoſe Oracle was in Cilicia, was the Son of Amphiaraus; and that he, who ſettled in Acarnania, was the Son of Alcmæon. The City of Argos, in that Country, was built by Alcmæon and his Sons. Τὸ Ἄργος τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν κλίσμα Ἀλκμαίωνος καὶ τῶν παίδων (18). Argos Amphilochicum Urbs ab Alcmæone ejuſque liberis condita. This is my firſt Argument. Amphilochus, the Son of Alcmæon, was admoniſhed by the Oracle to go and reſide in this City of Argos (19). This is my ſecond Argument. Pauſanias obſerves, that the Poſterity of Melampus reigned in Argos, 'till Amphilochus, after the taking of Troy, retired into the Country, which was called, from his Name, Amphilochia (20). This is the Amphilochian Argos, and the adjacent Country. Now there are ſix Generations from Melampus to this Amphilochus; Ἀπὸ δὲ Μελάμποδος γενεαὶ τρεῖς καὶ ἄνδρες ἕξ μέχρις Ἀμφιλόχου τοῦ Ἀμφιαράου (21). A Melampode ſex per totidem ætates uſque ad Amphilochum Amphiarai filium; and therefore the latter cannot be the Son of Amphiaraus, as Pauſanias affirms, but of Alcmæon. And indeed Melampus was the Father of Antiphates, who was the Father of Oicles, who was the Father of Amphiaraus, who was the Father of Alcmæon, who was the Father of Amphilochus. If you end with Amphilochus, the ſecond Son of Amphiaraus, you will not find the ſix Deſcents which Pauſanias mentions. This is my third Argument.

[C] Livy has miſtaken him for another, &c.] He has miſtaken the Son for the Father, in theſe Words of the Forty fifth Book: "Oropum Atticæ, ubi pro "Deo vates Amphilochus colitur, templumque vetu-"ſtum eſt fontibus riviſque circa amœnum (22). —— "Oropus of Attica; where the Prophet Amphilochus "is worſhipped as a God, whoſe Temple is pleaſantly "ſituated amidſt Fountains and Rivulets." It is certain that the chief Deity of the Temple, which this Hiſtorian mentions, was Amphiaraus: he ſhould therefore have ſaid, ubi pro Deo vates Amphiaraus (not Amphilochus) colitur. Pauſanias, who made theſe things his particular Study, and had a Genius capable of Succeſs therein, is much more to be credited than Livy. Now he not only affirms, that the Inhabitants of Oropus built a Temple to the Sooth-ſayer Amphiaraus; but ſeems likewiſe to ſay, that Amphilochus had no ſhare in the Altar, which was divided into five Portions, each of which belonged to ſome Hero or God (23). Indeed we find in this Partition the Children of Amphilochus, but not Amphilochus himſelf. I confeſs, the Sequel of the Reaſoning might induce one to believe, that Pauſanias has not omitted him. I could willingly make a Correction in the Greek Text of this Author; I would read, καὶ τῷ παιδὸς Ἀμφιλόχῳ, & filio Amphilocho, and not καὶ τῶν παίδων Ἀμφιλόχῳ, & filiis Amphilochi; ſee the Margin (24). But, after all, this is no Proof, that Amphilochus was the God of the Temple of Oropus.

[D] Moreri too is liable to Cenſure] I. Amphilochus is not a certain Greek Captain, whom Homer mentions in his Odyſſey; for Homer only ſays, that Alcmæon and Amphilochus were the Sons of Amphiaraus (25). II. This being ſo, Moreri ſhould not have expreſſed himſelf in this manner, It is ſaid that he was the Son of Amphiaraus and of Eriphyle. He ſhould have had more Regard to the Authority of Homer; and no Author, ever ſo little acquainted with the Ancients, would have made uſe of an, It is ſaid, upon this Occaſion. III. Amphilochus, mentioned by Plutarch, is not different from the Amphilochus of Homer: It was the ſame, whoſe Oracle was conſulted at Mallus in Cilicia. IV. He ought not to have ſaid, that he carried the Oracle to one Theſpeſius of Solos (26). This is to metamorphoſe a God into a Meſſenger. V. He has omitted a Circumſtance, which ſhould have been expreſs'd, viz. That this Theſpeſius led a good Life after his Reſurrection. See Plutarch (27).

[E] One AMPHILOCHUS, whom a Gooſe fell in Love with.] Pliny's Account is this: "Quin "& fama amoris (anſeri) Ægii dilecta forma pueri "Olenii (28). —— It is reported that a Gooſe fell in "love with an Olenian Youth at Ægium." Thus Father Hardouin has corrected this Paſſage. In the other Editions it runs thus; Argis dilecta forma pueri nomine Oleni. Thus two Errors had crept into the Text of Pliny; one concerning the Place, where the Gooſe was in Love, and the other concerning the Name of the beloved Youth. This Adventure did not happen at Argos, but in the Town of Ægium (29). The Gooſe's Favourite was called Amphilochus, and not Olenus; but, becauſe he was born at Olenus, he had the Appellation of Olenius. A Paſſage of Ælian enabled Father Hardouin to correct the Paſſage of Pliny. Ἐν Αἰγείῳ τῆς Ἀχαΐας παιδὸς Ὠλενίου γέν ὄνομα Ἀμφιλόχῳ ἠράσθη χήν. Θεόφρας λέγει τοῦτο (30). At Ægium, a Town of Achaia, a Gooſe fell in love with a Youth of Olenus, named Amphilochus.

(8) Thucydides, lib. 2.

(9) Strabo, lib. 7. pag. 225.

(10) Berkelius, in Steph. Byzant. p. 124.

(11) Ephorus apud Strabonem, lib. 7. pag. 225.

(12) Yet Berkelius ſays ſo in his Notes on Steph. Byzant. p. 124.

(13) Apollodor lib. 3. pag. 201.

(14) Thucydid. lib. 2.

(15) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 484, 485.

(16) Euripides apud Apollodorum, l. 3. p. 201.

(17) In the preceding Remark, Citation (6).

(18) Strabo, lib. 7. pag. 225.

(19) Apollodorus, lib. 3. pag. 201.

(20) Pauſan. l. 2. pag. 60.

(21) Id. ib.

(22) Titus Livius, lib. 45. c. 27.

(23) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 33.

(24) Perhaps the Words of Pauſanias ſhould be rendered τοῖς, & ex filiis (Amphiarai) Amphilocho

(25) Homer. Odyſſ. l. 15. ver. 248.

(26) This Error has been corrected in the Dutch Editions.

(27) Plutarch de Sera numinis vindicta, pag. 563, & ſeq.

(28) Plinius lib. 10. cap. 22. p. 408.

(29) Situated in Achaia, near Sicyon. See Pauſanias lib. 7. p. 230.

(30) Ælian. Hiſt. Anim. lib. 6. c. 29. See Father Hardouin's Emendat. 21. in l. 10. Plinii, pag. 474.

Digitized by Google

chus. Theophraſtus relates this. Athenæus relates the ſame Story, and quotes Clearchus and Theophraſtus; but correct a Fault, which has crept into his Book. Read ἐν Ἀργείῳ, and not ἐν Ἀργείῳ. Were it not for this, it might be ſaid, that Father Hardouin is too bold in theſe Words, "Neque enim Argis ſed Ægii "prope Sicyonem res geſta narratur (31). —— The "Affair did not happen at Argos, but at Ægium "near Sicyon." Do we not find in the Tranſlation of Athenæus, apud Argivos puerum amavit amor, and in the Greek, ἐν Ἀργείῳ δὲ παιδὸς ἠράσθη χήν (32)? At Argos, a Goose fell in love with a Boy:

(31) Hardouin. in id.

(32) Athen. lib. 13. c. 8. pag. 606.

AMPHITRYON, the Son of Alcæus [A], Son of Perſeus, is leſs known by his Exploits, than by the Adventure of his Wife Alcmena, who afforded a Subject to the Comic Poets [B]. She was the Daughter of Electryon, King of Mycenæ. The Sons of Pterelaus had made an Incurſion into the Territories of This Prince, which proved fatal to them; for they all periſhed in it (a); but they had before deſtroyed all the Sons of Electryon (b). The latter, making the neceſſary Preparations to revenge the Death of his Sons, left his Kingdom and his Daughter Alcmena in the hands of Amphitryon, and made him promiſe, with an Oath, not to lie with his Daughter. They, who accompanied the Sons of Pterelaus, had brought the Flocks of Electryon into the Country of Elis. The Flocks were recovered by Amphitryon; but, in delivering them up to their Maſter, he had the Misfortune to be the innocent Cauſe of the Death of That unhappy Prince [C]. Upon this, being obliged to leave the Country of the Argians (c), he retired with Alcmena to Creon King of Thebes, and received from him the Ceremonies of Expiation. After this he made Preparations for a War againſt the Teleboës [D], in Revenge for the Death of Alcmena's Brothers; a Condition, which ſhe required of the Perſon, who deſired to marry her [E]. In order to engage Creon to follow him, he agreed to free him from a Fox, which did him a great deal of Miſchief: This he did by the Aſſiſtance of Cephalus, who lent him the Dog, which Procris had brought from the Iſle of Crete. Amphitryon, aſſiſted by ſeveral Nations, entred the Territories of Pterelaus, and ravaged them; but the great Succeſs of this War was owing to the Treachery of Cometha, the Daughter of Pterelaus. This Lady fell in Love with Amphitryon; for whoſe ſake ſhe plucked off the golden Lock of Hair from her Father's Head, on which his Life depended. The unhappy Father died immediately; and Amphitryon took poſſeſſion of all his Dominions. He cauſed Cometha to be put to death, and returned to Thebes, loaded with Booty. The firſt News, with which he was greeted, was, that He had ſpent the laſt Night with Alcmena, tho' he had good reaſon to be aſſured, that it was falſe. At laſt it was diſcovered, that Jupiter had play'd this Trick, by aſſuming the Shape of Amphitryon. The latter, without any Concern for the matter, lay with Alcmena, and made her an inſtance of Superfœtation, which has been quoted a thouſand times. She had already conceived Hercules, and became pregnant with another Son. But, to diſtinguiſh which was his own Son, and which was Jupiter's, he threw two Snakes on their Beds. Hercules was not afraid of them; but the other fled. There wanted no other Proof, to ſhew, that Hercules was not the Son of Amphitryon. It is ſaid, that Alcmena put an Ornament on her Head, which informed the World, that Jupiter had tripled

(a) Except one, who ſtaid behind to guard the Ships. Apollodor. lib. 2. pag. 97.

(b) Except Licymnius a Baſtard. Id. pag. 99.

(c) Theſe things are not true, as is ſaid in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, that Amphitryon ſucceeded Electryon.

[A] The Son of Alcæus.] Apollodorus ſays, that Hipponome, the Daughter of Menœceus, was the Mother of Amphitryon (1). Others make him the Son of Lyſidice, the Daughter of Pelops; and others ſay, that Laonome, the Daughter of Guneus, was his Mother (2). Note, that he was Uncle to his Wife; for his Siſter Anaxo was the Mother of Alcmena (3).

(1) Apollod. lib. 2. p. 97.

(2) Pauſan. lib. 8. pag. 248.

(3) Id. ib.

[B] Who afforded a Subject to the Comic Poets.] Amphitryon is one of the beſt of Plautus's Comedies, in the Opinion of Madam Dacier, who tranſlated it into French with excellent Notes. See the laſt Remarks of the Article TELEBOES. Moliere wrote a Comedy with the ſame Title; which is one of his beſt Pieces. He has borrowed many things from Plautus, but gives them a different turn: And, were a Compariſon between theſe two Pieces to decide the Controverſy, which has been raiſed of late Years, about the Superiority or Inferiority of the Ancients, I believe Mr Perrault would ſoon carry his Cauſe. There are many fine Turns in the Amphitryon of Moliere, which greatly exceed the Pleaſantry of the Latin Amphitryon. How many things in the Comedy of Plautus were neceſſary to be omitted, which would not have ſucceeded on the French Stage? How many Ornaments and Touches of a new Invention has Moliere been obliged to inſert in his Work, to procure it the Applauſe, which it has received? The bare Compariſon of the Prologue is ſufficient to adjudge the Advantage to the modern Author. Lucian has furniſhed the Subject, on which the Prologue of Moliere turns, but not the Thoughts. A good Judge will never ſay upon this Occaſion, that of a good Original he has made a bad Copy, applying the Words of Terence

Qui bene vertendo, & eas deſcribendo male, ex Græcis bonis Latinas fecit non bonas (4).

(4) Terent. Prol. Eunuch.

I beſeech the Reader not to take me wrong: I grant, not only that the Amphitryon of Plautus is one of his beſt Pieces, but alſo that it is moſt excellent in ſome Reſpects. It ſeems it was ſtill acted in the Time of Arnobius. "Ponit animos Jupiter, ſi Amphitryo "fuerit actus pronuntiatuſque Plautinus (5). —— "Jupiter lays by haughty Carriage, in the Repreſenta- "tion of the Amphitryon of Plautus." I wiſh we had the Amphitryon of Euripides, and the two Amphitryons of Archippus.

(5) Arnob. lib. 7. pag. 238.

[C] In delivering up the Flocks to their Maſter, he had the Misfortune to be the innocent Cauſe of the Death of that unhappy Prince.] The thing fell out thus: "Cum bos una aufugeret, in ipſam Amphi- "tryo tum quam manibus forte clavam geſtabat im- "miſit, quæ de bovis cornibus repulſa in Electryonis "caput reſiliens ipſum vita privavit (6). ------ "One of the Cows endeavouring to run away, Am- "phitryon threw a Club after it, which he hap- "pened to have in his Hand; which rebounding from "the Horns of the Cow daſhed againſt Electryon's "Head, and killed him." In the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary inſtead of a Club it is a Stone.

(6) Apollod. lib. 2. p. 99.

[D] He made Preparations for a War againſt the Teleboës.] I obſerve in another Place (7), who the Teleboës were, and wherein Apollodorus, whom I follow, differs from the Scholiaſt on Apollonius.

(7) In the Article TELEBOES.

[E] A Condition, which ſhe required of the Perſon, who deſired to marry her.] We ſhall ſee in the Article, to which I refer the Reader in the foregoing Remark, that Alcmena chiefly required, that the Death of her Father ſhould be revenged.

Digitized by Google

tripled the length of the Night, in order to careſs her the longer [F]. It is not true, that Amphitryon taught Men to mix Water with their Wine [G]. Alcmena ſurvived her Huſband (d). The Ruins of their Houſe were ſtill to be ſeen at Thebes, in the Time of Pauſanias (e). We muſt remember, that Amphitryon was born at Argos (f). Some Authors call him King of Thebes (g).

(d) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 39.

(e) Id. lib. 5. pag. 290.

(f) Plaut. Amphitr. in Prolog.

(g) Servius in Æneid. lib. 8. ver. 103.

[F] Put an Ornament on her Head, which informed the World, that Jupiter had tripled the Length of the Night, in order to careſs her the longer (8).] This is very ſingular. She might have been ſatisfied with ſeeing the Head of her Husband loaded with Horn-work and half Moons, which might have vied with the Towers of the Goddeſs Cybele.

(8) Apollod. lib. 2. p. 97.

----- qualis Berecynthia mater
Invehitur curru Phrygias turrita per urbes (9).

(9) Virgil. Æneid. l. 6. ver. 785.

High as the Mother of the Gods -------
Then, when in Pomp ſhe makes the Phrygian round,
With Golden Turrets on her Temples crown'd.
DRYDEN.

Why did ſhe wear three entire Moons on her Forehead?

------ parvoque Alcmena ſuperbit
Hercule, tergemina crinem circumdata Luna (10).

(10) Statius, Theb. lib. 6. ver. 288.

Proud of her Son, behold Alcmena wear
Three Moons, an Ornament to grace her Hair.

Moſt Interpreters underſtand theſe three Moons to be a Symbol of the three Nights, which Jupiter paſſed with her. A fine Trophy for poor Amphitryon! A noble Monument of the Safety of his Honour! Would ſhe have every one, who looked on her Head-dreſs, remember the triple Night, which her Charms had produced. Her Husband could not be well pleaſed with ſuch a Dreſs. I appeal to Moliere, who makes him approve the Reflexions of his Servant. Amphitryon's Friends being informed, that Jupiter was willing to make amends for the Injury, began to expreſs their Joy: But Soſia interrupted them.

Meſſieurs, voulez-vous bien ſuivre mon ſentiment?
Ne vous embarquez nullement,
Dans ces douceurs congratulantes:
C'eſt un mauvais embarquement,
Et d'une & d'autre part, pour un tel compliment,
Les phraſes ſont embarraſſantes.
Le grand Dieu Jupiter nous fait beaucoup d'honneur,
Et ſa bonté ſans doute eſt pour nous ſans ſeconde,
Il nous promet l'infaillible bonheur,
D'une fortune en mille biens feconde,
Et chez nous il doit naitre un fils d'un très-grand cœur;
Tout cela va le mieux du monde.
Mais enfin coupons aux diſcours,
Et que chacun chez ſoi doucement ſe retire.
Sur telles affaires toûjours
Le meilleur eſt de ne rien dire.

Gentlemen, will you pleaſe to follow my Advice? —— By no means embark in theſe Congratulations; 'tis a ſcurvy Venture: and both one ſide and t'other is at a loſs to find Expreſſions for ſuch a Compliment. The great God Jupiter does us abundance of Honour, and his Goodneſs towards us is, undoubtedly, not to be equalled; he promiſes us the certain Felicity of a Fortune, abounding with a thouſand Bleſſings; and in our Houſe ſhall be born a mighty ſtout-hearted Son. —— All this goes on the beſt that can be. But, in ſhort, let's cut the Diſcourſe off here, and let every Body go Home in Peace. In theſe kind of Affairs, 'tis always beſt to ſay nothing.

MOLIERE tranſlated by ſeveral Hands.

Amphitryon found this ſo reaſonable, that by his Silence, he gave entire conſent to it.

[G] It is not true, that Amphitryon taught Men to mix Water with their Wine.] If Athenæus may be believed, this Invention is another's (11). But this other's Name being Amphictyon, a learned Critic has confounded him with the Husband of Alcmena. I make no doubt, that the like Miſtakes often occaſion the various Opinions, which are to be found among Authors. Read Athenæus, and you will ſay that Amphictyon, King of Athens, invented the mixing of Water with Wine. Read Caſaubon and you will aſcribe this Secret to Amphitryon, King of Thebes. Whence it will happen, that ſome pretty good Compilers will form two Opinions: Some, will they ſay, aſcribe this Invention to Amphitryon, and others to Amphictyon. Caſaubon's Words are; "Quod mox de Amphitryonis (I make no Alteration in the Orthography of the Words) invento temperandi vinum ſequitur quo pertineat ſubobſcurum eſt. Spectat autem eo, ne quis miretur, quod poſtea dicit Homerum varia temperamenta vini habuiſſe nota, cum τὴς τῦ οἴνυ κρασέως inventor ſit Amphitryo, quem ante Iliaca Tempora Thebis regnaſſe nemo dubitat. (12). —— The Deſign of mentioning Amphitryon's Invention of tempering Wine is to prevent any one's being ſurprized, to find, that Homer was acquainted with the various ways of mixing Wine, ſince no one doubts, that Amphitryon, the Inventor, reigned at Thebes before the Trojan War."

(11) Athen. lib. 4. cap. 27. p. 179.

(12) Caſaub. in Athen. p. 323, 324.

ANABAPTISTS, a Sect, which ſprung up ſoon after the Riſe of Lutheraniſm. Nicolas Storch, Mark Stubner, and Thomas Munzer, gave birth to it, in the Year 1521. It was founded upon the Abuſe of a Doctrine, which they had read in a Book, publiſhed by Luther, in the Year 1520, De Libertate Chriſtianâ. This Propoſition, which they met with in it, A Chriſtian Man is Maſter of every thing, and is ſubject to no one, and which Luther intended in a very good Senſe [A], ſeemed to them

[A] It was founded upon the Abuſe of a Propoſition ------ which Luther intended in a very good Senſe.] Namely That, which he affixed to it, in explaining his meaning, when he perceived in what manner theſe People perverted his Expreſſions. "Quæ verba ſano ſenſu à Luthero —— Scripta & "prolixè ἐξηγήτες declarata, oppoſitoque aphoriſmo, eundem omnium ſervum eſſe, & omnibus "ſubjectum, expoſita, detorta fuere in ſenſum ſequiorem ab hominibus ſuæ pariter & alienæ quietis impatientibus (1). —— Which Words, written and "interpreted by Luther in a good Senſe, and explained "by the oppoſite Aphoriſm, The ſame is a Servant of All, and Subject to All, were perverted to a "worſe meaning by Men, impatient of their Own, "and the Peace of Others." His moſt zealous Adverſaries confeſſed, that he diſapproved of a ſeditious Behaviour, which ſeemed to be accidentally owing to his Doctrine. Father Maimbourg relates, that the Rebels, having ſent their public Declaration to Martin Luther, were diſappointed in their Expectation of it's receiving his Approbation (2); "For, adds "he, Luther perceiving that many accuſed him of "giving Occaſion to this Rebellion, by the Books "which he had written in the Vulgar Tongue, in "Defence of Evangelical Liberty, againſt the Tyranny of thoſe, who overlaid it by human Traditions, anſwered this Accuſation in a long Diſcourſe, in which he ſhews them, that the Scripture enjoins Obedience to Princes and Magiſtrates, "even though they ſhould abuſe the Power, "which God has intruſted them with; that they "ought to addreſs themſelves to God, and in "the mean time ſuffer with Patience, in Expecta"tion

(1) Frider. Spanhemius, de Origine, Progreſſu, Sectis, & Nominibus, Anabaptiſtarum, p. 196. I make uſe of the Edition inſerted in the Gangræna Theologiæ Anabaptiſticæ of Cloppenbourg.

(2) Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm, Book 1. pag. 114. Dutch Edit.

Digitized by Google

them calculated to influence the Vulgar. This they employ'd all their Industry in doing, each according to his Abilities. Storch, being wholly illiterate, boasted of Divine Inspiration. Stubner, who had Wit and Knowledge, looked out for crafty Explications of the Word of God. Munzer, who was bold and vehement, trusted to Assurance, and gave the Reins to the most restless and disorderly Passions. They were not satisfied with decrying the Ecclesiastical Tyranny of the Court of Rome, and the Authority of Consistories; they taught likewise, that the Power of Princes was meer Usurpation, and that, under the Gospel, Men ought to enjoy full and absolute Liberty. They re-baptized their Followers; and, the better to encourage this Practice, they taught that Infant-Baptism was invalid. As to the rest of their Tenets, they insisted much on strict Morality; they recommended Mortifications, Fasts, and a Simplicity of Dress; by which means they gained a prodigious number of Followers. After these successful Beginnings, Munzer became so rash, as loudly to exhort the People to resist Magistrates, and constrain Princes to divest themselves of their Authority. A Gospel of this kind was so pleasing to the Peasants of Germany, who were weary of their Masters Yoke, that they rose in several Places, and committed infinite Disorders. They were soon reduced, and great numbers put to death. Munzer, who had seduced them by his Pretences to Inspiration (a), was taken, and beheaded, in the Year 1525 (b). His Disciples, whom he had left in Switzerland, increased the Sect in that Country, and were the occasion of great Troubles; insomuch that the Magistrates were obliged to have recourse to the most severe penal Laws, to stop the Progress of Anabaptism. The same was necessary in several Towns of Germany, and other Places. The Protestant Clergy, it is true, were very diligent in refuting these Sectaries; but as this was found not effectual, the Magistrates interposed, and supplied this Defect by their Authority [B]. The Anabaptists

(a) See his Article.

(b) Moreri is mistaken in saying, that this Hæresiarch pretended, about the Year 1542, that the Holy Ghost revealed to him, &c.

" tion of his good Pleasure; and that the Way of " Arms, which they had taken up, would be the " Occasion of their Damnation, if they refused to " lay them down." We shall see in the Article MUNZER, that he rejected the Propositions of this Fanatic.

[B] The Protestant Clergy were very diligent in refuting these Sectaries; but —— the Magistrates interposed —— with their Authority.] It would have been difficult for the most violent Opposers of Lutheranism to conceive a more effectual way of stifling it in the Birth, than this Schism of Munzer and his Adherents. They preached up a Doctrine destructive of all Society, and they put it in practice with inconceivable Havock and Devastation. They had been united to Luther, and agreed with him in this, that Christianity ought to be reformed according to the pure Word of God (3). Thus the Resentment, conceived against Them, recoiled upon Him, and his Followers; and, when Men beheld the fatal Consequences, which the Enterprize of the Reformation had so soon produced, they were tempted to believe, that it was not the Work of God. This, no doubt greatly retarded the Progress of The Reform. We are not to wonder, that the Protestant Divines called it the Depths of Satan; and said, that the Enemy of our Salvation had made use of this Artifice to support his Kingdom against the new Apostles, which God had raised up against him (4). This Language is the natural Result of Theological Hypotheses. The Disputants of the Romish Party took Advantage of this Conjuncture with extraordinary Address, to cry down the Reformation, and to animate all the Powers against it. But the Reformers were not less vigilant to guard against the Odium, which their Enemies attempted to throw upon them. They exclaimed with all their Force against the Anabaptists; they refuted them by Writing; they engaged them in Disputation as much as possible. " Ut " labem istam sibi æque ac doctrinæ Evangelicæ ad- " sperſam abstersum irent, Heroes illi Dei causam " publicis scriptis sibi agendam censuêre. Quod inter a- " lios alacriter præstitere Lutherus, Melanchon, Zwing- " lius, Bullingerus, Menius, Regius, alii, & in seditiones " & seditiosos graviter invecti, subditos perduelles, de " suo erga potestates superiores officio ex Dei verbo " monendo, tribunitios istos concionatores perstrin- " gendo, & omnes ad quietam & debitam Principibus " suis reverentiam hortando, nihil reliqui fecere, ut im- " petum hominum ad scelera & cruces furibundis ani- " mis ruentium sufflaminarent. Lutherus vel impri- " mis concitatior non παραινετικὰ tantum scripta " contra seditiosos, verum etiam ϛηλιτευτικὰ emisit, " & peculiari libello contrà Latrones & Homicidas " Rusticos vulgato ipse classicum in illos cecinit, Prin- " cipes hortatus, ut vi & armis latrociniorum isto- " rum impetum sisterent, & eos ad quietem coge- " rent, qui persuaderi nollent (5). —— To wipe off " these Aspersions from themselves and the Doctrine " of the Gospel, these Heroes determined publickly to " write in Defence of the Cause of God. This was " readily undertaken, among others, by Luther, " Melancthon, Zwinglius, Bullinger, Menius, Re- " gius, &c. who inveighed strongly against Sedition " and the Seditious, admonishing rebellious Subjects, " from the Word of God, of their Duty towards " the higher Powers; reproving those turbulent Ha- " rangers of the Mob; and exhorting all to a peace- " able and due Reverence for their Princes: in short " they omitted nothing, which might restrain the Fury " of Persons, rushing on to Acts of Villany and Out- " rage. Luther in particular, more zealous than the " rest, published not only Exhortatory Writings, but " even Invectives against the Seditious; and, in a " singular Work against the rustic Robbers and Mur- " derers, sounded the Alarm against them, exhorting " Princes to repress by Force of Arms their violent " Proceedings, and oblige those to be quiet by Com- " pulsion, who refused to be so by Persuasion." The Minister, whose Latin I cite, mentions certain Towns, in which these Sectaries were confounded in Disputation; but the Burden of the Song is always, that at the last the Magistrates exerted their Authority. He tells us, that, at Zurich, the Heads of the Anabaptists, having disputed three times, to their Confusion, with Zwinglius (6), were condemned to Silence by a solemn Decree. " Senatus Tigurinus solenni " Edicto Pædobaptismum sancit, & Anabaptismi Do- " ctoribus silentium & quietem imperat (7). —— The " Senate of Zurich confirms Infant-Baptism by a " solemn Edict, and enjoins the Teachers of Anabap- " tism to be silent." Balthasar Hubmeyer, one of them, having promised to make a public Recantation, yet continuing to preach up his Errors, was compelled to abjure them, and then expelled the City (8). And, because this Sect encreased daily, in spight of all Obstacles, it was thought necessary to have recourse to the most violent Remedies. The Senate published an Edict, condemning to death the Anabaptist Teachers, and laying a severe Fine upon those, who gave them Reception. " Capitis pœna in Ana- " baptistarum Doctores decreta, & gravibus in eo- " rum receptatores mulctis (9)." This Decree was made in the Year 1530. Oecolampadus disputed at Basil with these Heretics, in the Years 1525, 1527, and 1529. He maintained his Cause with great Force of Reason, but could not surmount the Obstinacy of these People. For which Reason the Magistrates laid such Restraints upon them, that the Church recovered it's Peace. " Causæ quidem abundè satisfe- " cit;

(3) See Spanhem. ubi supra.

(4) See the Remark [KK] of the Article MAHOMET.

(5) Spanh. ubi supra, pag. 198.

(6) In January, March, and November, 1525.

(7) Spanh. ubi supra, pag. 202.

(8) Id. ib.

(9) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

Anabaptiſts made a conſiderable Progreſs in Moravia, and would have done ſo more, in ſpight of the Severity, with which they were oppoſed by the Secular Arm, had they not been divided into two Factions (c). No Town was more infeſted with theſe People, than That of Munſter [C]. Every one knows, that they became Maſters of it; and that John of Leyden, King of this New Jeruſalem, defended himſelf as long as he could; but that at length, the Town being taken, he was put to death in the Year 1536. The Anabaptiſts of Frieſland and Holland diſapproved, in many things, of the Conduct of their Brothers of Munſter; and yet they were the occaſion of great Troubles (d). One of their principal Chiefs was named Mennon. The moſt effectual Means that could be thought of were put in practice for the Extirpation of this Sect; but in vain (e). It ſtill ſubſiſts in the United Provinces. It is true, the principal Follies of the Sect have by degrees been worn off [D]: It no longer pretends to Enthuſiaſm;

(c) That of the Hutterians, and that of the Gabrieliſts.

(d) See Remark [D] of the Article PICARDS.

(e) Taken from a Diſſertation of Frider. Spanhem. the Father, De Origine, Progreſſu, Sectis & Nominib. Anabaptiſtarum; printed at Leyden. John Coppenbourg has inſerted it in his Gangræna Theologiæ Anabaptiſticæ, printed at Francfort in 1556, in 4to.

" cit; actoribus vero pervicacibus non item; ita in " prudentiſſimi ſenatus, & ſtrenui Gloriæ divinæ " vindicis, in Anabaptiſtarum ſectariis coërcendis au- " thoritate, Eccleſiæ Baſilienſis tranquillitati ſimul & " puritati conſulendum ibidem fuerit (10)." They were refuted at Bern, in a public Diſputation, in the Year 1527; yet they privately declared, that their own Reaſons ſtill appeared to them to be good. In order therefore to confirm the Triumph of Truth, another Diſputation was appointed; which laſted nine Days. The Acts of it were publiſhed. This had great Effect; but the rigorous Edicts of the Senate of Bern were incomparably more uſeful (11). Theſe ſeditious Perſons would have eſtabliſhed their ſafe Retreat at St Gal, had not the Magiſtrates baniſhed them from thence (12). It was there, that Thomas Schucker cut off his Brother's Head, in the Year 1527. He called together a numerous Aſſembly, and declared to the Company, that he perceived himſelf under the Influence of the Spirit of God. Upon which, he commanded his Brother to kneel down, and took a Sword. His Father, and Mother, and ſome others, demanded what he was about to do. Be ſatisfied, replied he, I will do nothing but what is revealed to me by our heavenly Father. The Company waited impatiently for the Event; when they ſaw him draw the Sword, and cut off his Brother's Head. He was puniſhed by the Magiſtrates as his Crime deſerved; but he ſhewed no Signs of Repentance, and declared upon the Scaffold, that he had only executed the Orders of God. You may imagine, that the Decrees of Baniſhment were repeated with greater Severity, upon ſuch an Inſtance of Fanaticiſm (13). At Straſbourg, there were both Diſputations, and rigorous Edicts, againſt this Sect (14). Melchior Hofman, one of it's Ringleaders, was confined there, and died in Priſon (15). The Sect ſpread itſelf over Moravia, Bohemia, Poland, Hungary, Auſtria, and Sileſia. Some of it's Heads were delivered over to the Executioner. Balthaſar Hubmeyer, being conducted to Vienna, was burnt there. This Execution paſſed with the Sect for a Martyrdom, and inflamed their Zeal.

(10) Spanhemius, ubi ſupra, pag. 203.

(11) Id. ib. p. 203, 204.

(12) Turbonem urbe ejecti fuere. Id. ib. pag. 204.

(13) Id. ib.

(14) Id. ib. pag. 205.

(15) Id. ib. pag. 212.

Add to this, that, upon their firſt Arrival in England, in the Year 1560, Queen Elizabeth, by a Proclamation, commanded them inſtantly to leave the Kingdom (17). The Elector Palatine drove them out of his Dominions, in the Year 1594. The Diets of Spire, in the Years 1529, and 1544, and That of Ausbourg, in the Year 1551, put out cruel and bloody Decrees againſt them (18). Philip II. ordered the Governeſs of the Netherlands to be very ſevere in puniſhing the Anabaptiſts (19). Conſult the Annals of this Sect, compoſed by Henry Ottius; you will there find an ample Recital of all the Edicts publiſhed againſt them in ſeveral Parts of Europe. What is ſometimes ſaid of Artillery, that it is the laſt Argument of Kings, Ratio ultima Regum, is applicable to penal Laws: they are the Ratio ultima of Divines, their moſt convincing Argument, their Achilles *, &c.

(17) Hornbeeck ſumma Controverſ. pag. 381.

(18) Id. ib.

(19) Id. ib. citing Strada's Hiſt. Belg. lib. 4.

* An invincible Argument is proverbially called Argumentum Achilleum. See the Article ACHILLES, Remark [L]. REM. CRIT.

[C] No Town was more infeſted with theſe People, than that of Munſter.] What paſſed in this Town, from the time that Anabaptiſm got footing in it, to the Death of John of Leyden, is one of the moſt memorable Events of the XVIth Century. We meet with an Account of it in ſeveral Books. See particularly the Letter, which was written to Eraſmus by Conrad Heresbachius (20), in the Year 1536, and which was printed at Amſterdam, in the Year 1637, cum Hypomnematis ac notis Theologicis, Hiſtoricis, ac Politicis, Theodori Strackii, Paſtoris Pudericenſis. See likewiſe Lambert Hortenſius's Book, De Tumultibus Anabaptiſtarum, That of John Wigand, De Anabaptiſmo Publicato, and the Relation of Henry Derpius, a Citizen of Munſter, publiſhed in the Year 1536.

(20) He was Governor of the Sons of the Duke of Cleves, and afterwards Counſellor to the Duke, and was at the Siege of Munſter.

[§ Mr BAYLE has omitted, through inadvertence I believe, a Latin Heroic Poem in two Books, compoſed by Herman Kerſenbrocck, recited by the Author in a full Aſſembly of the Univerſity of Cologne, and printed at Cologne in the Year 1445, in 8vo. This Piece is dedicated to the Biſhop of Munſter and Oſnabrug, Francis, Count of Waldeck; and the Title is, Belli Monaſterienſis contra Anabaptiſtica Monſtra Geſti brevis atque ſuccincta deſcriptio. REM. CRIT.]

[D] The principal Follies of this Sect have by Degrees been worn off.] It is upon this Account, that the Anabaptiſts of theſe times complain, that they are refuted in the ſame manner their Anceſtors were. An illuſtrious Divine of the Dutch Academy found himſelf expoſed to this Cenſure, in a Letter, which an Anabaptiſt publiſhed in Dutch; but he replied to the Author, that he did not pretend to impute all the Errors he had taken notice of to the Sect in general. " Has (Sectas) ut minime confundimus in " controverſiis ſingulis, ita nec notatos errores omnes " omnibus imputamus - - - - - minus voluimus imputa- " tos illis qui intra Waterlandorum dictas confeſſiones, " bona fide, procul fallaciis Mennoniticis, hærere ſeſe " profitentur. Abſit ut cuiquam invito & deprecanti " Hæreſim impingamus! Sed nec iſti aliorum apologiam ſuſcipiant, aut alios eſſe ac fuiſſe negent, " quos hic Elenchus ſub generali Enthuſiaſtarum & " Anabaptiſtarum nomine, ne neſciat Juventus noſtra, " coarguit. Factum tamen noviſſime, ut diximus " modo, à Rypenſi ſcriptore Epiſtolæ in modum Belgico ſermone mihi opponendæ. Qui errores hic " complures notatos dum à ſuis Waterlandis amolitur, " ſi modo verè & ſincerè, hoc ipſo non ſe aut ſuos " in talibus controverſiis peti, ſed familias alias ex " dicto grege, intelleXiſſe debuit. Fruſtra ergo eſt " omnis ipſius expoſtulatio, quaſi ignorem quid Rypenſes Anabaptiſtæ ſentiant, aut quaſi Lectoribus " meis imponam (21). —— As I do not confound " theſe ſeveral Sects in particular Controverſies, ſo " neither do I impute all the Errors, which I remark, " to All without Diſtinction - - - - - - much leſs would " I impute them to thoſe, who profeſs to adhere to " the aforeſaid Confeſſions of the Waterlandians, in " Sincerity, and free from the Fallacies of Mennon. " Far be it from me to fix Hereſy upon any Man a- " gainſt his Will, and againſt his expreſs Declara- " tion to the contrary. But let not ſuch Men under- " take the Defence of others, and deny that there are, " or ever were, ſuch others, as this Table, for the " Information of our Youth, reprehends under the ge- " neral Name of Enthuſiaſts and Anabaptiſts. Yet this " was lately done, as I obſerved before, by the Rypenſian Author of an Epiſtle againſt me in the " Dutch Language. Who, whilſt he endeavours to " vindicate his own Waterlandians from many Errors " here taken notice of, if indeed he does it with Truth " and Sincerity, might in this very Attempt have ſeen, " that neither himſelf nor his Friends were aimed at " in ſuch kind of Controverſies; which were levelled " againſt other Folds of the abovеſaid Flock. All his " Expoſtulation therefore, inſinuating that I am unac- " quainted with the Opinions of the Anabaptiſts of " Rypen, and that I impoſe upon my Readers, is no- " thing to the Purpoſe." Hornbeeck has been ſo juſt, as not to impute the Hereſies of particular Perſons to the Sect in general. " Hic quidem imprimis à " communibus illorum & ſingularibus cœtuum dogma- " tis ſecernenda ſunt propria aliqua doctorum ipſo- " rum (22). —— We muſt here diſtinguiſh between " the

(21) Frider. Spanhem. F. filius, in Elencho Controverſiarum pag. 87. Edit. Amſt. 1694.

(22) Hornbeeck ſumma Controv. pag. 189.

Digitized by Google

Enthuſiaſm; it does not oppoſe Magiſtrates; nor does it at preſent preach up an entire Freedom from all Subjection, a Community of Goods, and the like. It has been ſplit into a great Variety of Subdiviſions [E]; as muſt always happen to every Sect, which is not ſupported by Authority. It boaſts of a great number of Martyrs [F]: It's Martyrology is a large Volume in Folio. I believe no Author has repreſented this Sect with ſo much Juſtice, as George Caſſander [G]. The Proteſtant Divines

" the particular Opinions of ſome learned Men among " them, and the common and ſingular Tenets of the " Sect." He mentions two by Name, the Opinion of James Outreman, and That of Weke Walles. The former admits three Eſſences in the Deity, and pretends, that the Eſſence of the Father is confined to Heaven, and does not paſs this Boundary. The other teaches, that Judas was a good Man, and that he was ſaved; that he committed no Crime in betraying JESUS CHRIST; that the Prieſts and Scribes were no more guilty, in perſecuting our Lord even to Death; and that both the Thieves were ſaved. Outreman taught at Harlem in 1605. Walles taught in the Territory of Groningen, in 1673. He was baniſhed from the Province; and, as he retired into Frieſland, the Proteſtant Synod, which was held at Franeker, in the Year 1644, cauſed him to be expelled that Country.

[E] It has been ſplit into a great Variety of Subdiviſions.] I ſhould be afraid of tiring my Readers, were I to produce here the Catalogue of the ſeveral Anabaptiſt Sects: I ſhall content myſelf therefore with pointing out a Book, where the Curioſity of thoſe, who deſire to ſee this Liſt, may be ſatisfied. Conſult, then, the Preface to John Henry Ottius's Annals of Anabaptiſm.

[F] It boaſts of a great Number of Martyrs.] Could it only produce thoſe, who were put to Death for Attempts againſt the Government, it's bulky Martyrology would make but a ridiculous Figure; but it is certain, that ſeveral Anabaptiſts, who ſuffered Death courageouſly for their Opinions, had never any Intention of rebelling. Give me leave to cite an Evidence, which cannot be ſuſpected. It is that of a Writer, who has exerted his whole Force in refuting this Sect (23). He obſerves, that it's great Progreſs was owing to three Things. The firſt was, that it's Teachers deafened their Hearers with numberleſs Paſſages of Scripture: The ſecond, that they affected a great Appearance of Sanctity: The third, that their Followers diſcovered great Conſtancy in their Sufferings and Deaths. He ſhews, that not one of theſe three Particulars is a Mark of Orthodoxy. Concerning the laſt, he expreſſes himſelf thus. " The third Diſtinction, by which the Anabaptiſts ſeduce the Simple " and Wavering, is their Conſtancy in Sufferings and " Death. But this can never make their Anti-Chriſtian Doctrine good and wholeſome; ſince, according to St Cyprian, it is not the Puniſhment that " makes the Martyr, but the Cauſe, for which he " ſuffers. The Scripture (24) aſſures us, that thoſe only are truly Martyrs and Saints, who ſuffer for " Righteouſneſs, for Truth, and for the Name of " CHRIST. But the Anabaptiſts, which is to be " lamented, do not ſuffer for this Truth, but for a Doctrine of Anti-Chriſt. And ſurely Princes and Kings " do not take the proper Method to extirpate this " Sect, when they put to death theſe ignorant " Wretches, the greateſt part of whom have been ſeduced. They ſhould rather imitate the good Kings " Ezechias and Joſias, who extirpated all kinds of " Idolatry out of their Kingdom, and, as far as they " could, reformed the true Religion. Thus they " ſhould cauſe the true Apoſtolical Doctrine to be " publickly preached; and, when this done, I am of " Opinion, there would be no Occaſion for ſo much " Fire, to put to death theſe poor, ignorant, ſeduced, " People (25)." Afterwards he alledges Examples of Perſons, who have ſuffered courageouſly, though not in the Cauſe of Juſtice. He inſtances in the impenitent Thief, the Eſſenians, the Popiſh Martyrs, Arians, Mahometans, and the Philoſophers Zeno, and Socrates. But he gives not the leaſt Hint, that the Anabaptiſt Martyrs ſuffered Death for taking up Arms againſt the State, or ſtirring up the People to Rebellion. He repreſents their Martyrs, as weak, ignorant, People. See what is cited below, in relation to George Caſſander.

Obſerve, by the Way, that this Author refutes his Adverſaries, juſt as the Catholics refute the Proteſtants.

(23) Guy de Bres, Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Racine, Source & Fondement des Anabaptiſtes. This Book was printed in 1565.

(24) Matth. v. 11. 1 Pet. iv. 20. 2 Joh. iv. 3.

(25) Guy de Bres, ubi ſupra, p. 9.

" The firſt Mark, ſays he (26), by which they impoſe " upon ſo many People, is, when, without Senſe, " Judgment, or Reaſon, they quote numberleſs Texts " of Scripture at random, as if they fed upon the " Bible; whereas, generally ſpeaking, they know not " an Hawk from an Handſaw, according to the Proverb. However, the poor Wretches are at a ſtand, " and amazed at ſuch a Profuſion of Scripture; and " believe they have met with moſt learned Inſtructors. " But I beſeech theſe poor Wretches to conſider, " that there never was an Hereſy, which did not " make uſe of Scripture, by corrupting and perverting it, to ſupport it's Blaſphemies. The Knowledge of Scripture is not the Occaſion of Error " and Hereſy, but the contrary, according to Chriſt. " Do ye not therefore err, becauſe ye know not the " Scripture *? As to the ſecond Mark, by which " the Anabaptiſts ſeduce and ſubvert the Minds of " the Simple, namely, the Appearance of Sanctity," he proves by Examples, that it is often the Character of falſe Teachers. It is certain, that the Catholics had to reply to theſe three Difficulties, I. That the Proteſtants talk of nothing but the Bible, and are for ever citing it; II. That they condemn Dancing, Finery, frequenting Taverns, &c. III. That many among them die courageouſly for their Religion. They refute theſe Difficulties, juſt as the Proteſtant Author above-mentioned has refuted them. This is a farther Proof, how greatly prejudicial the Sect of the Anabaptiſts has been to the Proteſtants; who were obliged to refute it by Arguments, which were turned againſt themſelves by the Papiſts.

(26) Ibid. pag. 5.

* Mark xii. 24.

There are ſome Anabaptiſts, likewiſe, in the Martyrology of Geneva. Take notice, that they have publiſhed two Martyrologies, one at Haerlem, in the Year 1615, the other at Horn, in 1617. Theſe two Works diſcovered the Diſagreement between the Anabaptiſts; for thoſe of Horn cenſured (27) the Martyrology of Haerlem, as an unfair Work. In anſwer to this Cenſure (28), they had recourſe to Recrimination; they charged the Compilers of the Martyrology of Haerlem with inſerting Perſons, who had ſubſcribed the Confeſſion of the Reformed, in relation to the Article of the Incarnation of JESUS CHRIST (29). The principal Compiler of the Martyrology of Horn, was one James Outerman. The Preface to this Work is as injurious to the Lutherans and Calviniſts, as to the Papiſts: It accuſes them all of Tyranny (30).

(27) In the Preface to the Edition of 1626.

(28) They anſwered it in a Dutch Piece printed at Haerlem in 1630, and compoſed by Haris Alenſon.

[G] No Author has repreſented this Sect with ſo much Juſtice as George Caſſander.] He ſays, that the Mennonites diſcovered an honeſt Mind, a pious Mind; and that they erred from the Faith through a miſtaken Zeal, rather than an evil Diſpoſition; that they condemned the outrageous Behaviour of their Brethren of Munſter; that they taught, that the Kingdom of JESUS CHRIST was to be eſtabliſhed only by the Croſs: They deſerve therefore, adds he, to be pitied and inſtructed, rather than to be perſecuted; and he applies to them a fine Paſſage of St Auſtin. " Hujus, " quem dixi, Mennonis, cui nunc hic Theodoricus " ſucceſſit, Sectatores ferè ſunt omnes, qui per hæc " Belgicæ & Germaniæ inferioris loca huic Anabaptiſticæ Hæreſi affines deprehenduntur; in quibus " magna ex parte pii cujuſdam animi Argumenta cernas, qui, imperito quodam zelo incitati, errore " potius quam animi malitia à vero divinarum literarum ſenſu, & concordi totius Eccleſiæ conſenſu, " deſciverunt; quod ex eo perſpici poteſt, quod Monaſterienſibus & Batenburgicis furoribus, novam " quandam reſtitutionem regni Chriſti, quod in deletione impiorum per vim externam poſitum ſit, " meditantibus, acerrimè ſemper reſtiterunt, & in " ſola Cruce regni Chriſti inſtaurationem & propagationem conſiſtere docuerunt; quo fit, ut qui hujuſmodi ſunt, commiſeratione potius & emendatione " quam infectatione & perditione digni videantur. " His enim multo magis convenire videtur, quod de " Manichæis diſputans inquit Auguſtinus †. Quan- " quam

(29) Ottius's Annals, ad ann. 1615. num. 6. pag. 233.

(30) Id. ib. ann. 1626. num. 2. pag. 251.

† Contra Epiſtolam Fundamenti

Digitized by Google

Divines have zealouſly oppoſed It in the United Provinces, and have obtained at different Times ſeveral Edicts to reſtrain it [H]. Yet it continues to be tolerated there. They ſay that Mr van Beuning reaſoned one Day upon this Affair with Mr de Turenne [I] in a very ſtrong and lively manner. The Books, which have been wrote concerning

" quam Dominus per ſervos ſuos regna ſubvertat Er-
" roris, ipſos tamen homines, in quantum homines
" ſunt, emendandos eſſe potius quam perdendos ju-
" bet. —— Atque Utinam, qui atrociore in hoſce mi-
" ſeros ſunt animo, manſuetudinem & prudentiam
" hujus ſancti viri imitentur, qui in diſputatione ad-‖ Id. ibid. " verſus Manichæos —— his verbis eſt uſus ‖. Illi,
" inquit, in vos ſæviant, qui neſciunt cum quo labo-
" re verum inveniatur, & quam difficile caveantur
" Errores. Illi in vos ſæviant, qui neſciunt cum
" quanta difficultate ſanetur oculus interioris Hominis,
" ut poſſit intueri ſolem ſuum. Illi in vos ſæviant,
" qui neſciunt quibus ſuſpiriis & gemitibus fiat, ut ex
(31) G. Caſſander, Præfat. Tractat. de Baptiſmo Infantium. " quantulacunque parte poſſit intelligi Deus (31).—— " Almoſt all thoſe of Lower Germany, who lean to " the Anabaptiſt Hereſy, are followers of Mennon, " who is now ſucceeded by Theodoric; in which Peo- " ple you may, in general, diſcover Marks of a certain " pious Diſpoſition of Mind; who, carried away by a " Zeal, not according to Knowledge, have, erroneouſly, " not maliciouſly, departed from the true Senſe of the " Inſpired Writings, and the general Conſent of the " whole Church; which is evident from hence, in that " they always ſtrenuouſly oppoſed the raſh Attempts of " thoſe of Munſter, who were contriving a new ſort of " Eſtabliſhment of the Kingdom of CHRIST, which " conſiſted in deſtroying the Impious, by external Force; " and have always taught, that the Eſtabliſhment and " Propagation of CHRIST's Kingdom depended " ſolely upon the Croſs; whence it is, that ſuch Per- " ſons as theſe ſeem rather to merit Pity and Inſtruc- " tion, than Perſecution and Extirpation. And indeed " St Auſtin's Words, in his Controverſy with the Ma-
" nichæans, is more applicable to theſe People. Though " the Lord, ſays he, overthrows the Kingdom of Error " by his Servants, yet he commands that Men, con- " ſidered as Men, ſhould be inſtructed and ſet right, " not deſtroyed. —— And I heartily wiſh, that they, " who are ſo very angry with theſe poor Creatures, " would imitate the Temper and Prudence of this holy " Man, who, in his Controverſy with the Manichæ-
" ans, expreſſed himſelf thus. Let thoſe, ſays he, be " angry with you, who know not the Difficulty of com- " ing at Truth, and avoiding Error. Let thoſe be " angry with you, who know not the Difficulty of cu- " ring the Mind's Eye, and enabling it to bear the " Light of it's proper Sun. Let thoſe, I ſay, be angry " with you, who know not with what Groaning and " Pains the leaſt Knowledge of the Deity is acqui- " red." Thus our Author expreſſes himſelf in a Book, which he dedicated to the Duke of Cleves, in which he proves, that Infant Baptiſm was always allowed by the Primitive Church. He looked upon the univerſal Conſent of all Chriſtians for many Centuries, as ſo ſtrong, a Proof that a Doctrine is Apoſtolical, that he thought the Anabaptiſts could not be better refuted, than by the force of this Argument. He had experienced it's Virtue; for he tells us, that an Anabaptiſt Teacher, who was Priſoner in the Caſtle of Cleves, together with ſeveral of his Adherents, were converted, upon ſeeing this Collection of Teſtimonies, in proof of the Antiquity of Tradition in this Point. It was this, which induced Caſſander to publiſh his Work. Let me obſerve, that he had two Conferences with the Anabaptiſts, the firſt at Cologne, with one Matthias, in the Year 1556; the other with John Kremer, who was Priſoner in the County of Mark, in the Year 1558. I tranſpoſe the Method of the Writer I borrowed this from; for his Iterum is a Contradiction. " Georgius Caſſander, ſays he (32), bis (32) Hornbeeck, ſumma Controverſ. p. 394. " cum illis coram diſputavit, de quo inter ejus Opera fol.
" 1227: ſemel cum Johanne Kremer, a. CIↃ IↃ LVIII
" captivo in comitatu Marciæ, iterum, a. CIↃ IↃ LVI,
" cum Matthia aliquo, Coloniæ."

[H] The Proteſtant Divines have zealouſly oppoſed this Sect in the United Provinces, and have obtained ſeveral Edicts to reſtrain it.] They have often challenged the Anabaptiſts to Diſputation. The Synod of Horn paſſed an Act hereupon, and even had recourſe to the Authority of the Governor. " Eccleſiæ noſtræ
" ſemper bonum ac utile cenſuerunt, Adverſarios ad
" Diſputationem & Colloquia provocare. Synodus
" Hornana, a. CIↃ IↃ LXXX, & a. CIↃ IↃ LXXVI,
" implorata eum in finem Gubernatoris Theod. Son-
" noyi auctoritate — decernit provocandum, &c. (33)" Three or four Synods paſſed like Acts before the End of the XVIth Century (34). The Churches thought proper, in the Year 1599, to compoſe a Work, comprehending a Body of Anabaptiſt Controverſies. Arminius, Miniſter of Amſterdam, undertook it, and began it; but laid it aſide, when he was made Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden; and alledged the Reaſons, in the Synod of Alcmaer in 1605, why he could not go on with ſuch a Work. The Synod of Enchuyſe, in the Year 1624, employed two Miniſters to examine the Confeſſions of the Mennonites, and diſcuſs the Points in queſtion. One of them being left alone, in the Year 1626, demanded a new Partner; the Synod of Amſterdam, in 1628, appointed Doreſtaar to be his Aſſiſtant. They applied themſelves diligently to their Commiſſion, and publiſhed a very good Book, in Dutch, in the Year 1637. It is a Body of Anabaptiſt Controverſies; in which the Variations of this Sect are exactly diſtinguiſhed (35). The Author, who tells us theſe Particulars, obſerves, that the Churches, in Conjunction with the Secular Arm, took care, that this Sect ſhould not encreaſe; they ſtand Centinel, ſays he, to check it, if it produces new Branches, or attempts to exceed it's Bounds. Pro coërcendis aut noviter pullulantibus aut ſua pomæria extendentibus juxta cum Politicis Eccleſiæ vigilant (36). He adds, that the Synod of Frieſland is perpetually ſolliciting the States of that Province, to revive the Edict, which was publiſhed againſt the Anabaptiſts, in the Year 1598; and that they preſs the Execution of it, with regard to the new Aſſemblies, and new Places of Worſhip, which this Sect has ventured to ſet up. He adds farther, that it being diſcovered, that the Synod of the Anabaptiſts, held at Haerlem, in the Month of July, 1649, had ſet up ſeveral new Congregations, it behoved the Orthodox Paſtors to reſtrain, by ſome Means or other, theſe Innovations; and the rather, as they were authorized ſo to do, by an Edict of the Year 1651, by which their High Mightineſſes decree, that the Sects ſhould be reſtrained, and not ſuffered to ſpread. Sectas cohibendas & in ordinem redigendas, neque permittendum ut in plura loca quam hodie ſunt diffundantur (37). After the ſame manner, the Proteſtants, in France, were forbid all Places of religious Worſhip, which they could not prove they were in poſſeſſion of at the time of the Edicts. See Voëtius's Politica Eccleſiaſtica (38), in which he examines, whether this Sect ought to be tolerated; he diſtinguiſhes upon it; but, generally ſpeaking, he inclines moſt to the Negative.

(33) Id. ibi. Note, that he tranſpoſes the Order of Time: he places the Synod of 1576 after that of 1580.

(34) Id. ibi.

(35) Id. ibi. p. 395, 396.

(36) Id. ibi. pag. 391.

(37) Id. ibi. pag. 392.

(38) Book 4. Part 1. pag. 538.

[I] Mr van Beuning reaſoned one Day upon this Affair, with Mr de Turenne.] Mr de Turenne, being in a Coach with this Ambaſſador, expreſſed to him his diſlike at the Toleration, which the States General granted to all ſorts of Religions. I omit Mr van Beuning's Anſwer, with regard to the other Sects; and confine myſelf to that Part of it, which reſpects the Mennonites: " Why are you, ſays he, averſe to a To" leration of this Sect? They are very honeſt People,
" and the moſt eaſy in the World; they never aſpire
" to Employments; they thwart no Man's Ambition;
" they traverſe no Man's Views, by Competition or " Intrigues. It were to be wiſhed, that in every " Country half the People would make a Conſcience
" of aiming at Dignities; the other half would arrive
" at them with leſs Difficulty, and without employ-
" ing ſo many mean Arts, and unlawful Methods.
" We have no reaſon to apprehend the Rebellion of a
" Sect, one of whoſe Articles of Faith is, that it is " unlawful to bear Arms. How great a Security
" is it to a Sovereign, to know that his Subjects
" are reſtrained from mutinying by ſuch a Bridle,
" whatever Impoſts or Tallage are laid upon them?
" The Mennonites contribute their Share to the " Charges of the Government. This is ſufficient;
" with this we levy Troops, which are more uſe-
" ful to us, than theſe People would be, were they
" to enliſt themſelves. They edify us by the Simpli-

Digitized by Google

concerning this Sect, and againſt it's Tenets, are innumerable [K]. I muſt not omit, that they have not been able as yet to extinguiſh it in Switzerland, notwithſtanding the rigorous Methods made uſe of at different times (f). I ſhall produce ſome of the Reaſons alledged in Juſtification of their Severity [L]. The Dutch Edition

(f) See Stoupp. Relig. of Holl. Lett. 4. pag. 100, &c. But, principally, See Ottius's Annals of Anabaptiſm, print-d at Baſil, 16;2.

" city of their Manners; they apply themſelves to " Arts and Buſineſs, without ſquandring away their " own Patrimony, or the Wealth they acquire, in " Luxury and Vice. Other Communions behave " differently: Voluptuouſneſs, and the Expences of " Vanity, are in them a conſtant Source of Scandal, " and a weakening of the State. But they refuſe to " ſwear; a mighty matter indeed. The Authority " of the Tribunals receive, no Prejudice thereby. " Theſe People think themſelves as much obliged by " an Affirmation of the Truth, as they could be by " an Oath. All the uſe of adminiſtering an Oath " conſiſts in this, that the Perſon, who violates it, " is in fear of being the more ſeverely puniſhed by " God, and expoſes himſelf to Infamy, and even cor- " poral Puniſhment from Men. The Mennonites fear " the ſame Conſequences, if they violate their Af- " firmation; they are therefore bound by the ſame " Obligation with other Men."

[K] The Books, which have been wrote concerning this Sect, and againſt it's Doctrines, are innumerable.] I have pointed out ſome in the Remark [C]. Others are as follows. Herman Modæus wrote a Book de initiis Sectæ Anabaptiſticæ. Andrew Meſhovius wrote, in Latin, An Hiſtory of the Anabaptiſts. An anonymous Author publiſhed, in Dutch, The Anabaptiſtic Succeſſion, printed at Cologne, in the Year 1603. There is likewiſe a Book in Dutch, De Origine & Progreſſu Sectarum inter Anabaptiſtas. Mr Ottius, Profeſſor at Zurich, compiled the Annals of this Sect, down to the Year 1671. All theſe Works are taken notice of, either by Hornbeeck (39), or by Micrælius (40), or by Spanheim (41). I do not find, that they mention a Book, which Caſſander deſcribes after this manner. " De Origine vero hujus Anabaptiſticæ " Sectæ, ejuſque Progreſſu, & quæ ex hoc capite " monſtra quam varia & abſurda atque inter ſe pug- " nantia prodierunt, luculente, copioſè, ſummâque " cum fide ſcripſit Nicolaus Bleſdick, qui, quod ali- " quando hujuſmodi errore per imperitiam ætatis de- " ceptus fuerit, eo nunc inſtructior & vehementior " eſt in iis erroribus refellendis, id quod ei cum B. Au- " guſtino commune eſt (42). —— As to the Origin " and Progreſs of this Sect, with the various, abſurd, " and diſcordant Monſters, which it has produced, " they have been clearly, fully, and faithfully deſcribed, " by Nicolas Bleſdick, who, having been formerly de- " ceived by this Error, through the unskillfulneſs of " Youth, was the better qualified, and the more eager " to oppoſe it; a Circumſtance common to him with " St Auſtin." Hornbeeck mentions only an Hiſtory of David George, compoſed by Nicolas Bleſdick, Son-in-law of this David, and publiſhed by Revius (43). An Hiſtory of the Anabaptiſts, in French, was publiſhed at Amſterdam, in 1695, and one more ample in 1700. The Authors, who have wrote againſt them, are Zwinglius, Luther, Calvin, Melanchthon, Oecolampadius, Urbain Regius, Juſtus Menius, Bullinger, John Laſcus, Guy de Bres, Taffinus, Hunnius, Oſiander, Cloppenbourg, Spanheim, and ſeveral others, whom it would be tedious to recount (44). But I muſt not forget a Book called Babel, publiſhed in the Year 1621, by Herman Faukelius, Miniſter of Middelbourg, and one of the Fathers of the Synod of Dort. He ſhews, in this Work, the prodigious Variety of Opinions, which prevail among the Anabaptiſts. The latter appealed from him to a Confeſſion of Faith, which they publiſhed in the Year 1624, at Amſterdam. They made Reprizals; for they publiſhed a Babel of Pædobaptiſts (45). The Author of it was Antony Jacob (46). Obſerve, that, at firſt, they wrote but few Books; at length they produced ſeveral Authors, and publiſhed many Books, ſome Didactic or Hiſtorical, others Polemical. They printed, at Horn, in 1624, A Confeſſion of Faith, which they confirmed by Paſſages of Scripture, and other Authorities. At the end of twelve Years, they publiſhed another (47), to ſhew the Agreement of their Sentiments. There have appeared Apologies for their Confeſſions; likewiſe Catechiſms, and Manuals of Religion. They refute the Declaration of Zurich, in 1644. Abraham de David (48), one of them, publiſhed a Book, the ſame Year, againſt a Miniſter of Haerlem, named Bontemps, entituled, " Smegna Holandicum " contra maculas quas P. Bontemps Mennonitis ad- " ſperſit. —— The Dutch Soap againſt the Aſperſions, " which Peter Bontemps has thrown upon the Menno- " nites." The ſame Miniſter was attacked in other Works; in the Abſterſio Accuſationum gravium Petri Bontemps, facta per P. V. K. 1643; the Confutatio argumentorum quibus P. Bontemps probare conatur, Anabaptiſtas injurioſos eſſe in Deum & Homines, 1643; the Spongia ad abluendas Maculas Petri Bontemps contra certam Anabaptiſtarum Sectam; the Judici Henrici Lixivium contra ejuſdem maculas; and the Probatio Lixivii D. Bontemps ubi per G. V. V. fidei potiſſimum Authoris & Methodus agendi ſolicitatur (49).

(49) Il. ib.

[L] Some of the Reaſons alledged in juſtification of their Severity.] Let me produce here the Subſtance of a Letter, written the Twenty firſt of Auguſt, 1642, to Mr Hotten, Miniſter of the Walloon Church at Amſterdam, by Mr Breitinger, Dean of the Miniſters of the Church of Zurich. A War being kindled almoſt all over Europe, in 1622, the Magiſtrates of Zurich gave orders, that, conformably to the uſual Practice of all times, in the like Caſes, the People of that Canton ſhould be exerciſed to the Trade of Arms by Reviews. The Anabaptiſts refuſed to obey, and repreſented to thoſe, who were preparing to comply, that a War ought to be conſidered as a divine Chaſtiſement, and that the State was to be defended by a good Life, and not by taking up Arms. They intimated, that they ſhould chuſe to abandon their Country, their Wives, their Children, and all their Poſſeſſions, rather than repulſe the common Enemy by Arms. The good Subjects conceived ſuch Indignation at this, that they were for extirpating the whole Sect; but the Magiſtrates tried Expedients of a milder Nature. They employed the wiſeſt Heads of the Senate, to regulate with the moſt moderate Divines, what was to be done in this Conjuncture. This Committee began with recommending themſelves to the Prayers of the whole Church; after which they came to theſe Reſolutions; that nothing ſhould be omitted, which might ſeem proper to remove the ill-grounded Scruples of the Anabaptiſts; that none of them ſhould be condemned either to Death, or to the Gallies; and that nothing ſhould be done, which ſavoured of Cruelty, Precipitation, or Paſſion. After this, it was thought proper to confer with them; and they had their choice of three Places to aſſemble at, where they might hear what was to be propoſed to them. They met at an appointed Place; where the principal Points of the Chriſtian Faith were propoſed to them, both by Word of Mouth, and in Writing; all of which they admitted, except one, which related to Magiſtracy. The Senate, being informed of what paſſed in theſe Aſſemblies, ſent for ſome of their Heads. They appeared; they gave in their Reaſons, which were anſwered with Calmneſs; but nothing could influence them; yet they were diſmiſſed with a great deal of Clemency. They retired, however, as if they were afraid of ſome Deſign upon their Perſons; which they confeſſed the next Day, when they were asked why they ſhewed a Diſtruſt of the ſafe Conduct, which the Magiſtracy had granted them. This Mildneſs of the Government was diſpleaſing to many Perſons; however, it was reſolved to try moderate Methods ſtill farther. The principal Heads of the Anabaptiſts were called together; they were aſſured, that the uſual Oath upon theſe Occaſions ſhould be diſpenſed with, and that the Government would be ſatisfied with their Affirmation, or Negation; that they ſhould be excuſed from bearing Arms, provided they would contribute, by their Prayers, and other pious Means, to the public Good; and that, in requiring of them to be preſent at the Sermons of the Miniſters, they did not pretend to abridge them of the Liberty of diſapproving what they ſhould judge contrary to the Word of God; that they only deſired they would not paſs their Cenſures, 'till they had conferred either with their Paſtors, or with ſome other Eccleſiaſtical Perſon. They concluded with Promiſes of Protection, and pathetic Exhortations. But when

(30) In ſumma Controverſiarum.

(40) In Syntagma-e Hiſtor. Eccleſ.

(41) In Elencho Controverſiarum.

(42) G. Caſſander, Epiſt. Dedicat. Tractat. de Baptiſmo Infantium.

(43) Hornb. ſumma Controv. p. 373.

(44) Id. ib. pag. 394. and John Vaget, in the Theſis which he maintained at Wittenburg in 1688, de Secta Mennonitarum.

(45) Thoſe, who hold Infant-Baptiſm

(46) An Anabaptiſt Teacher, and Phyſician at Amſterdam.

(47) At Dort.

(48) He prefixes the three initial Letters G. V. V. i. e. Gerard Vryburg. Hottingeri. Biblioth. Theolog.

Digitized by Google

dition of Moreri distinguishes the Tenets, which are at present peculiar to the Anabaptists; for which reason I shall not give a particular Account of them. It is certain, that the Description, which the Sieur Moreri gives of this Sect, does not agree with the Time, in which he wrote; and I doubt a little, whether ever there was reason to charge them with two Doctrines, which he imputes to them [M]: one is, that they held, that a Woman was obliged to consent to the Passion of those, who desired to obtain her; the other is, that they condemned the Marriage of Persons, who did not adhere to their Sentiments. We must consider as a Legendary Tale what is reported by some Authors, that there have been Roman Catholics, who, upon becoming Anabaptists, have immediately been able to read, and discourse on Matters of Religion; but who, upon returning to Popery, have forgot every thing, and become as ignorant as before (g).

(g) Lindanus, Dial. 3. Dubitantii, & Thyræus de Dæmoniacis, cap. 21. apud Theoph. Raynaud. Theologiæ Natur. Dist. 4. n. 330. p. 404.

when they found, that these People persisted in their Opinion, they civilly entreated them to retire somewhere else; they gave them permission to carry away as much of their Effects, as was necessary for their Subsistance; they promised Restitution to those, who, being cured of their Errors, should return; and they declared, that the Children and Wives, who should renounce the Sect, and continue in the Country, should enjoy a suitable Portion of the Goods of their Fathers and Husbands. The Anabaptists replied, that the Earth is the Lord's, and not the Magistrate's, and rejected the Conditions. Then they had recourse to Mulcts and Fines; and, upon their refusal to pay them, and protesting against the Tyranny of these Proceedings, they confiscated their Estates. They now murmured more; they assembled by Night; they petitioned Heaven to repress the Madness of the Government by Plague, Famine, and such other Calamities. It was now absolutely necessary to have recourse to more effectual Remedies; several were imprisoned; most of whom made their escape (50) thro' a Breach, which they made in the Wall, and appeared no less turbulent than before: They were remanded to Prison; they were exhorted from time to time to submit, or willingly to quit the Country; they persisted to demand unconditional Liberty. They offered to give an account of their Doctrine before the whole People; this was denied them; but it was thought proper to offer them a Disputation in Writing, and even to propose to them the Points of Controversy: Their constant Answer was, that they could not defend themselves, whilst they were in Prison. Note, that those of them, who escaped, spread grievous Complaints every where, of the barbarous Treatment they pretended to have met with, during their Imprisonment.

(50) The Day after Rogation Sunday.

This Apology, you see, is founded upon that long Patience, which preceded so rigorous a Treatment; but there are other more particular Reasons, resulting from the Nature and Constitution of the Government of this Country. The Swiss do not repulse the Enemy with auxiliary or hired Troops, but by fighting every Man in Person; and one way of their Subsistance is the Permission they give, of levying Troops among them, for the Service of Strangers. It is therefore for the Interest of their Governors, that all their Subjects should be trained to Arms, and be fond of War. This is the Reason, why the Anabaptists were disagreeable to them; People who would neither wound nor kill any one, and who endeavoured to intimidate the most Warlike, by inspiring them with Scruples of Conscience, in relation to the effusion of human Blood, and the Passions inseparable from the Trade of Arms.

[M] I believe there never was reason to charge them with the two Doctrines, which Moreri imputes to them.] He learned from Prateolus, that, according to the Anabaptists, the Women were obliged to lend the Use of their Bodies to every Man, who demands it of them; and that the Men, in their turns, are obliged to satisfy the Desires of every Woman, who requires it. Dicunt postremo quamlibet mulierem obligatam esse ad coëundum cum quolibet viro eam petente, & contrà eodem vinculo adstringunt omnem virum ad tantundem reddendum cuilibet mulieri hoc ab illo petenti (52). Upon this Principle, there would be a natural Marriage between all Men, and all Women; I mean, that the Sexes would be mutually obliged, in point of Duty, to gratify each other upon Demand. The Duties, which St Paul lays down (53), which teach, that the Husband has not Power over his own Body, and that he ought to consider it as transferred to his Wife; and that she, in like manner, ought to consider the Power over her Body, as transferred to her Husband; those Duties, I say, so just and reasonable in the Marriage of one with one, would have no Bounds; they would extend to the Power of every Man over every Woman, and of every Woman over every Man; a Doctrine so extravagant, so villanous, so abominable, that it is difficult to conceive, that any Sect of the Anabaptists really taught it. The Laws of Nature would, upon this Foundation, be much more difficult to be fulfilled, than the Laws of the Gospel; and we might justly, upon this Account, renew the Complaint, It is a Yoke, which neither we, nor our Fathers, were able to bear. In a Word, it cannot be a Law of Nature; for Nature obliges us to nothing impossible (54). Beauty, and a tender Conscience, united under such a Law, would be a Weight, under which the most Vigorous and Robust would sink. The Handsome, and the Conscientious would have the most reason to complain. And observe, that the Doctrine of a Community of Wives, is much less shocking than this. That does not deprive us of the Liberty of refusing; it does not tie down the Conscience to an indispensible Compliance.

(52) Prateolus in Elencho Hæreseon.

(53) 1 Cor. vii. 4.

(54) Impossibili nemo tenetur.

Perhaps I shall not be mistaken, in conjecturing, that the Writers of Hæretical Catalogues, Prateolus's Originals, have forged this Chimæra, by giving a bad turn, through Ignorance or Malice, to one of the Consequences of the Doctrine of Equality of Condition. It is certain, that the Anabaptists, at first, taught this Equality; the Consequence of which was, that a young Lady, of a good Family, ought not to refuse Propositions of Marriage from the Son of a Peasant, and that a Gentleman ought not to decline the Courtship of a Country Girl. If our Catalogue-Writers built the absurd Doctrine, which they impute to the Anabaptists, upon this Foundation, are they less impertinent, than the Doctrine itself?

I am as little satisfied, that these Sectaries looked upon the Marriage of other Christians as unlawful; and that they confounded Bastards with the Children of married Persons; that they thought, for instance, that the Birth of Calvin was not less sullied, than that of Erasmus. But Mr Moreri did not look so nearly into the Matter; and, provided he could diffame Heretics, he was satisfied.

ANACREON, a Greek Poet, born at Teos, a Town of Ionia [A], flourished, when Polycrates reigned in Samos [B], and when Hipparchus enjoyed at Athens the Dominion

(1) Calvisius makes him say, that Anacreon flourished in the 72*th Olympiad, I don't find this in* Eusebius's Chronicon, published by Scaliger.

(2) Life of the Greek Poets.

[A] Teos a Town of Ionia.] In the Article TEOS I confute those, who say, that Anacreon was a Native of Teium, on the Euxine Sea.

[B] Flourished when Polycrates reigned in Samos.] I have not set down the Olympiad; for I think we need not be so very exact, in regard to a Person who lived Eighty five Years; and indeed those, who pretend to it, differ very much. Eusebius (1), who pitched upon the LXIId Olympiad, could not hinder Suidas from chusing the XXXIId, and Tanaquil Faber (2) from pitching upon the LXXIId. But I shall decide nothing as to Suidas; for his Text is certainly corrupted, and his Translators are unpardonable, for having suffered the horrid Blunder, which minion, which his Father Piſiſtratus had uſurped. This cannot be doubted of, if we read Plato and Herodotus; for we find in Plato, that Hipparchus invited Anacreon to come to Athens (a) [C]; and Herodotus ſays, that Anacreon was in the Chamber of Polycrates, when Audience was given to an Envoy of Oretes, Governor of Sardes (b) [D]. Cambyſes was then King of Perſia: This I obſerve, that my Readers may more readily apprehend the Time, in which Anacreon lived. This Poet had a delicate Genius; and there are inexpreſſible Graces, and Charms, in his Poetry: but he was too fond of Pleaſures; and of ſuch an amorous Complexion, that he muſt have Boys, as well as Girls [E]; and, beſides, he was addicted to drinking. Doubtleſs this laſt Fault made him very remakable at Athens; ſince his Statue, which was erected there, repreſented him as a drunken Man ſinging (c). If we had all his Poems, we ſhould find in them many Strokes of his voluptuous Humour [F]; but the few Remains we have of them ſufficiently prove it. There we is found in his Book, to paſs uncorrected. It is ſaid there, that Anacreon lived in the Time of Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos, in the LIId Olympiad; or, according to others, in the time of Cyrus and Cambyſes, in the XXVth Olympiad. It appears from Herodotus, that Polycrates and Cambyſes died much about the ſame time (3). Euſebius makes them Cotemporaries under the LXIIId Olympiad; and he is in the right: Therefore it is not true, that we ought to reckon Twenty ſeven Olympiads between theſe two, and bring back Cyrus from the LVth Olympiad, in which the Epoch of the Perſian Monarchy is generally fixed, to the XXVth. Voſſius makes Suidas ſay, that Anacreon lived in the LXIſt or LXIId Olympiad (4), which is not to be found in the printed Suidas. As for Tanaquil Faber, who pitched upon the LXXIId Olympiad for the exact time of the Life of Anacreon, it is eaſier to confute his Arguments, than to ſhew that our Poet did not live at that time. That Critic argues thus: Anacreon came to Athens in the time of Hipparchus: The latter had a Brother, whoſe Name was Hippias, who ſollicited Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes, to undertake the Expedition, which he made againſt the Athenians. This being ſo, ſays he, you ſee exactly the Year 489, before JESUS CHRIST, and the LXXIId Olympiad. I confeſs, that the Expedition of the Perſians againſt the Athenians, ſpoken of here, in which Darius was not in Perſon, though the Expreſſion of Tanaquil Faber implies that he was, belongs to the LXXIId Olympiad, and the Year 489 before JESUS CHRIST (5). But we muſt remember, that this pretended Expedition of Darius was not 'till twenty Years after that Hippias was expelled from Athens (6), and that his Expulſion was in the fourth Year after the Death of Hipparchus, and the eighteenth after the Death of Piſiſtratus; from whence it muſt be concluded, that Hipparchus had reigned fourteen or fifteen Years. It is therefore very poſſible, I. That he might have invited Anacreon to come to Athens thirty Years before Darius the Son of Hyſtaſpes complied with the Inſtigations of Hippias againſt the Athenians. II. That the Death of Anacreon might have fallen out ſome Years before the LXXIId, and the Four hundred and eighty ninth Year before JESUS CHRIST, which is ſo preciſely ſet down by Tanaquil Faber, as the time, in which Anacreon lived. I have another Remark to make. He wrote his Lives of the Greek Poets in 1659 (7). Now in his Anacreon, printed in 1660, he makes this Poet flouriſh Five hundred and fifty five Years, or thereabouts, before JESUS CHRIST; and he agrees with Suidas, that Anacreon might have lived in the LIId Olympiad, Since, ſays he, he lived very familiarly with Polycrates, who flouriſhed at the ſame time that Amaſis reigned in Egypt. This Critic has been therefore a little too inconſiſtent in his Chronology as to Anacreon. It can never be ſaid, without a Miſtake, of one, who might have flouriſhed in the LIId Olympiad, that he lived preciſely in the LXXIId Olympiad. Beſides, it is a wrong way of proving, that a Man might live in the LIId Olympiad, to alledge his Intimacy with Polycrates, who was Cotemporary with Amaſis: For the latter died at the end of the LXIVth Olympiad; and the former two Years after (8).

Digitized by Google

(a) Plato in Hippar-cho. Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 8. cap 2.

(b) Herodot. lib. 3. cap. 121. See alſo Pauſanias, lib. 1. p. 2.

(c) Pauſan. ibid. p. 23.

(3) Herod. lib. 3. cap. 120. & ſeq.

REMARKS on Tanaquil Faber.

(4) Voſſius, de Poet. Gr. pag. 22. Hofman ſays the ſame after him; but Moreri, who tranſcribes him likewiſe, ſays 60 inſtead of 61.

(5) See Calviſius.

(6) Petav. Ration. Temporum, lib. 3. cap. 2. & part. 2. lib. 3. c. 9.

(7) See the End of the Preface.

(8) See Calviſius.

[C] Hipparchus invited Anacreon to come to Athens.] I pretend not to cenſure Tanaquil Faber for ſaying, that "Hipparchus, the Son of Piſiſtratus (9), "ſent a Ship of fifty Oars to Teos, with very civil "and obliging Letters, in which he invited Anacreon to croſs the Ægean Sea, and make a Voyage "to Athens; aſſuring him that he would find there "ſome Admirers of his Virtue, who were good "Judges of the value of noble Compoſitions, and of "the Merit of excellent Perſons." I ſhall not cenſure theſe Words, on pretence that I find nothing in Plato but this; Ἐπ' Ἀναχρέοντα τὸν Τήϊον πεντηκόντορον ϛείλας ἐκόμισεν εἰς τὴν πόλιν (10). He cauſed Anacreon, born at Teos, to come to our City, by ſending a Veſſel of fifty Oars for him; nor on pretence that Ælian uſes the ſame general Expreſſion (11). For, beſides that Faber might have read, in Books unknown to me, the Particulars, which he relates; the Rules of Probability will allow, that Hipparchus wrote, or cauſed obliging Letters to be written, to Anacreon: and then we may adopt the Suppoſition of this Critic; I ſay, we may adopt it with the leſs ſcruple, becauſe a Narrative would generally be jejune and ungrateful, if the Originals were literally tranſlated. But I confeſs I cannot forbear cenſuring him, when he alledges Plato as his Author.

(9) Moreri and Hofman ſay Philoſtratus.

(10) Plato in Hippar-cho.

(11) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 8. c. 2.

[D] He was in the Chamber of Polycrates, when Audience was given to an Envoy of Oretes, Governor of Sardes.] This is all the Account Herodotus gives us of it; nevertheleſs I am very ſure, that Tanaquil Faber might ſay, as he did, That Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos, generally kept Anacreon near his Perſon, and would have him bear a ſhare both in his Buſineſs and Pleaſures. For, it being certain on the one hand, that Anacreon (12) was in great Favour with Polycrates, and on the other, that the chief Employment of this Tyrant (13) was his Diverſions, we run no great Riſque in believing Faber's Account. You know it (adds he); for 'tis not two Years ago ſince Herodotus was read at your Father's Table. This to me does not ſeem exact: ſince there is nothing in Herodotus, from whence we may reaſonably infer, that Anacreon had any concern in the Affairs of Polycrates. I am ſorry, that ſome Men of good Parts, and great Learning, ſhould believe, without examining the Matter, that Plato and Herodotus have ſaid all that this learned Critic has fathered upon them. They ſhould have diſtinguiſhed the Text from the Flouriſhes and Gloſſes of the Author, who quotes it.

(12) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 2. Ælian. ubi ſupra, l. 9. cap. 4. Strabo, l. 14.

(13) Athen. lib. 12. cap. 9, 10.

[E] Of ſuch an amorous Complexion, that he muſt have Boys, as well as Girls.] Beſides Bathyllus, and Smerdias, of whom more hereafter (14), he was in love with the fair Cleobulus. He had like to have killed him in the Arms of his Nurſe, by rudely joſtling her, as he reaſed one Day through the Streets, when he was in his Cups; and, not content with this, he abuſed the Child with railing Language (15). The Nurſe wiſhed, that he might one Day commend him more, than he had then abuſed him. Her Wiſhes were fulfilled; for Cleobulus grew to be a beautiful Youth; Anacreon fell in love with him, and wrote ſeveral Verſes in his Commendation (16). Behold a pretty kind of Puniſhment, and a Nurſe finely revenged!

(14) In Remark [G].

(15) Maximus Tyr. Orat. 11. circa init.

(16) Dion Chryſoſtom mentions ſome of them.

[F] Many Strokes of his voluptuous Humour.] The following Paſſages, among others, mention the general Theme of his Poetry. Ἄτοπος ὁ Ἀναχρέων, ὁ πᾶσαν αὐτῷ τὴν ποίησιν ἐξαρτήσας μέθης (17). Fooliſh Anacreon, whoſe Poetry turns upon nothing but Drinking. Ἀναχρέων ὁ Τήϊος πρῶτος μετὰ Σαπφὼ τὴν Λεσβίαν τὰ πολλὰ ὧν ἔγραψεν ἐρωτικὰ ποιήσας (18). Anacreon of Teos, who firſt, after Lesbian Sappho, ſpent the greateſt Part of his Poems in Love Matters. Let us hear what Horace ſays of the Amours of Anacreon;

(17) Athen. lib. 10. c. 7. pag. 429.

(18) Pauſanias, lib. 1. pag. 23.

Digitized by Google

we meet with his violent Paſſion for Bathyllus [G]; and if, as this ſort of Love was not then branded with Infamy, as it is among Chriſtians, he does not merit ſuch Deteſtation, as a Chriſtian Poet would in the like Caſe, the hardened Age he lived in ought to ſuffer for him: I mean, That the Reader ought to vent his Indignation againſt the Times, when it cannot diſcharge itſelf againſt particular Perſons. Anacreon, notwithſtanding his Debaucheries, lived Eighty five Years, if we may believe Lucian, who places him among the long-lived. It is ſaid, that he ſupported himſelf, at this great Age, by eating dry Grapes; and that a Grape-Stone, happening to ſtick in his Throat, choaked him. Valerius Maximus aſcribes ſo eaſy a Death to a particular Favour of the Gods [H]. No Author that I know of has remarked either the Time or Place of his Death [I], or decided what was his Father's Name [K]. There

Non aliter Samio dicunt arſiſſe Bathyllo
Anacreonta Teium,
Qui perſæpe cava teſtudine flevit amorem (19).

Thus ſoft Anacreon for Bathyllus burn'd,
And oft his Love he ſadly mourn'd;
He to his Harp did various Grief rehearſe,
And wept in an unpoliſh'd Verſe.

CREECH.

(19) Horat. Epod. 14. ver. 9.

See alſo Cicero in the fourth Book of his Tuſculan Queſtions, and Suidas.

[G] His violent Paſſion for Bathyllus.] This Inſtance refutes the exceſſive Charity of Ælian, who will not allow us to entertain any ill Suſpicion of our Poet's Love for Smerdias, one of Polycrates's Minions (20). What is moſt to be wondered at is, that Ælian goes upon this general Reaſon, that we ought not to accuſe Anacreon of Incontinency, and Intemperance. Μὴ γὰρ τις ἡμῖν διαβαλλέτω πρὸς Θεῶν τὸν Ποιητὴν τὸν Τήιον, μὴ δ' ἀκόλαστον εἶναι λεγέτω (21). I intreat that no one would ſlander the Teian Bard, or call him intemperate. Polycrates became furiouſly jealous, when he perceived, that our Poet had inſinuated himſelf very far into the good Graces of Smerdias, by the flattering Verſes he made on him; and his Jealouſy roſe ſo high, that he cauſed the Youth to be ſhaved (22). The Rival, apprehending very well the meaning of this, very complaiſantly wrote a Poem upon the Occaſion, in which he took care not to diſpleaſe Polycrates. They, who remember theſe four Verſes of Petronius,

Quod ſolum formæ decus eſt, cecidere capilli,
Vernanteſque comas triſtis abegit hyems.
Nunc umbra nudata ſua jam tempora mœrent,
Areaque * attritis ridet aduſta pilis.

* Area, Ulceris genus eſt in capite. Celſ. A Sore in the Head, which makes the Hair fall. REM. CRIT.

His Form's ſole Ornament, his Locks are ſhed;
Cropt are the ſpringing Honours of his Head,
And his vex'd Temples mourn their raviſh'd Shade.
Whilſt the gall'd Wound rejoices to be bare,
Free from the fretting Load of cumbrous Hair.

will conclude, from the Action of Polycrates, that he had rather his Minion ſhould loſe his Beauty, than find him unfaithful. Strabo obſerves, that Anacreon perpetually mentions this Tyrant of Samos in his Verſes; τούτῳ συνεζίωσεν Ἀνακρέων ὁ μελοποιὸς, καὶ δὴ καὶ πᾶσα ἡ ποίησις πλήρης ἐστὶ τῆς περὶ αὐτὸν μνήμης (23). Cum hoc vixit Anacreon Lyricus, & mentione ejus opplevit ſua carmina; from whence Voſſius had Reaſon to conclude, that it was no wonder he was beloved by him. "Polycrati, ſays he (24), carus "fuit. Quod mirum? cum verſibus ſuis cum cele- "braret? It ſhould be quid mirum? cum verſibus ſuis "eum celebraret? —— He was dear to Polycrates; "and no wonder, ſince he celebrated him in his Verſes." We ſhall ſee, in the Article BATHYLLUS, how Tanaquil Faber has juſtified the Amours of Anacreon.

(20) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 9. cap. 4.

(21) Id. ib.

(22) Id. ib. See alſo Athenæus, lib. 22. cap. 9.

(23) Strabo, lib. 14.

(24) Voſſ. de Poët. Græc. pag. 22.

[H] A Grape-Stone —— choaked him. Valerius Maximus aſcribes ſo eaſy a Death to a particular Favour of the Gods.] His Words are theſe: "Cui "quidem (Pindaro) crediderim eadem benignitate "Deorum & tantum poëticæ facundiæ, & tam pla- "cidum vitæ finem attributum; ſicut Anacreonti "quoque, quamvis ſtatum humanæ vitæ modum ſu- "pergreſſo; quem uvæ paſſæ ſucco tenues & exiles "virium reliquias foventem unius grani pertinacior "in aridis faucibus humor abſumpſit (25). —— This

(25) Valer. Max. lib. 9. cap. 12. See alſo Plin. l. 7. cap. 7.

"Poet (Pindar), in my Opinion, owed his great Genius
"for Poetry, and the eaſineſs of his Death, to the "ſame Kindneſs and Favour of the Gods; as was like-
"wiſe the Caſe of Anacreon, though he had exceeded
"the uſual Bounds of human Life; for, as he che-
"riſhed his little Remains of Strength with dried
"Grapes, the Stone of one, which he endeavoured in
"vain to ſwallow, was the cauſe of his Death."

[I] No Author that I know of has remarked the Time or Place of his Death.] It is true, Suidas ſays, that Anacreon, being driven from Teos, on account of the Revolt of Hiſtieus, retired to Abdera, in Thrace: But this does not imply, that he died there; we can only conjecture from it, with ſome Probability, that he did. And, indeed, Anacreon muſt have been very old at that time, ſince the Victories, which the Perſians obtained over the Favourers of the Revolt of Hiſtieus, are much later than the Death of Hipparchus, and fall under the LXXIſt Olympiad. It may be conjectured from this Paſſage of Suidas, that, after Anacreon had left Athens, whither Hipparchus had invited him, he retired to Teos; which makes it probable, that he retired alſo to Teos, after the Ruin of Polycrates; and that Hipparchus ſent him thither the Fifty-Oar'd Veſſel, as Tanaquil Faber aſſerts. We need not wonder, that Anacreon made choice of Abdera for his Retirement; it being a Town, which thoſe of Teos had built, after they had left their Habitations, when Harpagus, the Lieutenant of Cyrus, made himſelf Maſter of Ionia (26). Strabo does not ſpeak of their Tranſmigration in this manner; He only ſays, that the Teians, in the time of Anacreon, being unable to bear the Inſults of the Perſians, retired to Abdera (27). This may be the ſame Event, mentioned by Herodotus; for Harpagus invaded Ionia in the LIXth Olympiad, at which time Anacreon made ſome Figure in the World.

(26) Herod. lib. 1. cap. 168.

(27) Strabo, lib. 14.

[K] No Author has ------ decided what was his Father's Name.] Suidas mentions four Perſons, who have paſſed for the Father of Anacreon. If it be a Compliment to Homer, that ſeveral Towns contended for his Birth; it muſt be confeſſed, that this is a very poor one to Anacreon; for, in ſhort, it is a Proof of the Obſcurity of his Family, rather than any thing elſe. For had his Father been a noted Man in Teos, Authors would not ſo eaſily have loſt ſight of him, or have confounded him with others. Nevertheleſs I find, that Madam Dacier cites Plato to prove, That Anacreon was a Man of great Birth, and related to Solon, whoſe Father was of the ancient Family of King Codrus, and his Mother Couſin German to the Mother of Piſiſtratus (28). She pretends to prove this from a Paſſage in the Dialogue of Temperance, where ſhe finds, that the Father of Charmidas deſcended from the ancient Family of Dropidas, and of Anacreon, and Solon, which had been always diſtinguiſhed from others by their Beauty, Virtue, and Riches. Perſuaded as I am of the Learning of this Lady, I find myſelf reduced to believe one of theſe three things; either that her Plato is very different from mine; or that ſhe has not taken this Paſſage from the Original; or that ſhe has too cloſely followed the ill Tranſlation of Serranus. I find in my Plato nothing more, than that the paternal Family of Charmidas had been celebrated by Solon, Anacreon, and ſeveral other Poets, as being remarkably endowed with the Advantages of Beauty, Virtue, &c. Ἥ τε γὰρ πατρῶα ὑμῖν οἰκία ἡ Κεκρίδῶν καὶ ὑπὸ Ἀνακρέοντος καὶ ὑπὸ Σόλωνος καὶ ὑπ' ἄλλων πολλῶν Ποιητῶν ἐγκεκοσμημένη παραδέδοται ἡμῖν ὡς διαφέρουσα καλλεί τε καὶ ἀρετῇ καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ λεγομένῃ εὐδαιμονίᾳ. This is the Paſſage, as it ſtands in the Edition of Frankfort in 1602. That of Serranus differs Whether ANACREON was a Man of great Birth.

(28) Life of Anacreon.

Digitized by Google

There are ſeveral Tranſlations of his Poems [L]: But ſome Critics will not allow, that all the Verſes, which are at this day extant under his Name, are His (d). They, who have mentioned his Love for Sappho, have not regarded Chronology, as I ſhall prove in the Article of That Lady. It is ſaid that a Preſent of Money, which Polycrates ſent him, gave him ſo much diſturbance, that he could not ſleep for ſeveral Nights; and that he returned it to That Prince. This is not very probable, tho' Stobæus gives us Ariſtotle for his Voucher. Gyraldus cites only the Greek Collections of Arſenius in proof of it (e).

(d) Tanaquil. Faber, Notis in Anacreon. Madam Dacier bis Daughter, does not always agree with him in this. See her Preface to Anacreon.

(e) Gyrald. Hiſt. Poet. Dial. 9. pag. 471.

fers only in the Word ἐγκεκοσμιαμένη, which, by a Miſtake of the Printers of Frankfort, has been put inſtead of the ἐγκεκωμιασμένη of the Edition of Serranus; but Ficinus's Verſion is much better, though perhaps not ſo good as the following. "Nam, "quæ paternum vobis genus eſt, domus Critiæ filii "Dropidæ, tum ab Anacreonte, tum à Solone, mul- "tiſque aliis Poetis laudata nobis tradita fuit, ut "præcellens forma, virtute, cæteriſque quæ felicitatis "nomine veniunt.——For we find, that the Houſe of "Critias, the Son of Dropidas, from which you are "deſcended by the Father's ſide, was celebrated by "Anacreon, Solon, and many other Poets, as being "remarkable for Beauty, Virtue, and other Perfe- "ctions, which Happineſs includes." Serranus's Verſion is as follows. "Nam Paternum quidem Genus, "quod cum iſto Critia commune habes, à Dropida, "Anacreonte, Solone, & aliis multis celeberrimis "Poetis, deducitur, & vobis traditur, veluti robore "& virtute & alio omni genere felicitatis inſtructiſ- "ſimum. —— For your paternal Deſcent, which is "common to you with Critias, is derived from Dro- "pidas, Solon, and many famous Poets, and deſcends "to you adorned with Strength, Virtue, and every "kind of Happineſs." I omit obſerving, that one might be deſcended, by the Father's Side, from Solon and Anacreon, without Solon and Anacreon being related to each other. Every Perſon has two ſorts of paternal Relations, the Family of his Father's Father, and That of his Father's Mother.

[L] There are ſeveral Tranſlations of his Poems.] Thoſe, which Madam Dacier has mentioned, are as follows. The Reader will be pleaſed to ſee her Opinion of them. "It is a long time, ſays ſhe, ſince "Anacreon was tranſlated into French by Remi Bel- "leau; but, beſides that his Tranſlation is in Verſe, "and conſequently very unfaithful, it is in ſuch an "antiquated Style, that it is impoſſible to find any "Pleaſure in reading it. It was tranſlated into Ita- "lian ſome Years ſince; but the Tranſlator has no "more kept to the Greek, than Remi Belleau; ne- "vertheleſs his Tranſlation is pleaſing enough, tho' "it be ſometimes very different from the Senſe of "Anacreon, and though he takes every Moment ſo "great a Liberty, that it ought rather to be account- "ed a Paraphraſe, than a Tranſlation. The Latin "Verſion, part whereof was done by Henry Stephens, "and the other by Elias Andreas, which is gene- "rally uſed, ſeems to me to be the beſt; yet it is "not without Faults, and, being alſo in Verſe, it "is often very obſcure, and, in ſeveral Places, at- "tributes to Anacreon what he never thought of." This is what Madam Dacier ſays, in the Preface to her Anacreon, publiſhed at Paris, in the Year 1681, with the Greek Text on one ſide, and the Tranſlation in French Proſe on the other, and ſome Remarks on each Piece of Anacreon. Give me leave to add, that the Tranſlation of Remi Belleau appeared in the Year 1556. It has been ſaid, that Daurat was the true Author of the Tranſlation, which Henry Stephens aſcribed to himſelf. Colomies aſſures us, that Iſaac Voſſius told him, That he had an Anacreon in his Poſſeſſion, in which Scaliger had remarked with his own Hand, that Henry Stephens was not the Author of the Latin Verſion of the Odes of That Poet, but John Dorat (29). The Italian Tranſlation, which Madam Dacier ſpeaks of, is That of Bartholomew Corſini, which Mr Regnier des Marais cauſed to be printed, at Paris, in the Year 1672 (30). I do not wonder, that Madam Dacier takes no Notice of the Tranſlation of Anacreon done by a Youth, who is ſince become very famous under the Name of the Abbot de la TRAPPE; for I believe That Tranſlation was never printed. Mr Baillet informs us of many things relating to it. "He knew ſo well, "(ſays he (31), ſpeaking of Armand Bouthiller de "Rance) how to improve under his Maſters, by his "aſſiduity and Application to his Studies, that at "ten Years of Age, he underſtood the Greek Poets "very well, eſpecially Homer; and he had ſcarce at- "tained to the Age of twelve or thirteen Years, "when he publiſhed a new Edition of the Works "of Anacreon, with Greek Remarks, which were "admired by the Learned. This Edition appeared "in 8vo, at Paris, in the Year 1639; and Time "has not in the leaſt diminiſhed the Aſtoniſhment, "which theſe Remarks ſtill give to thoſe, who com- "pare them with the tender Age of the Author. "I ſay nothing of a French Tranſlation, which he "then compoſed of the ſame Poet; tho' it pleaſed "very much thoſe, who, at that time, were per- "fecting our Language, and ſhewed, that he could "write as politely in French, as he underſtood Greek "and Latin." Mr Baillet mentions neither the Place, nor the Year of the Impreſſion, and does not ſo much as ſay, in general, that the Work had been publiſhed; which makes me believe, that it had only appeared in Manuſcript. I am the more confirmed in this Thought, by finding, that Mr de Longe-Pierre ſays not a Word of this Tranſlation; though he takes notice, that Henry Stephens rendered the ſame ſame Odes of Anacreon into French Verſe, which he afterwards turned into Latin. He obſerves likewiſe, that Ronſard tranſlated many of them; he ſays this in the Preface to his Verſion. His Work was publiſhed in the Year 1684. The Greek (32) is on one ſide, and the French Tranſlation in Verſe on the other: And there are critical Remarks at the end of each Piece. Mr Regnier des Marais, perpetual Secretary to the French Academy, gave, in the Year 1693, a Verſion of Anacreon in Italian Verſe, with Remarks.

The following curious Supplement is taken Word for Word out of a Letter, which I have received from Mr de la Monnoie. "No care has been "taken, hitherto, to collect, and examine ſeveral "curious Particulars, concerning the Poems, which "are extant, of Anacreon. It has been ſaid, that "Henry Stephens firſt brought them to light; but, "Where or How, few Perſons know. He met with "the Ode Λέγουσιν αἱ γυναῖκες, on the Cover of "an old Book, as we read in Victorius, who inſerted "it in the ſeventeenth Chapter of the twentieth "Book of his Variæ Lectiones. 'Till then, nothing "had been ſeen of Anacreon, but what Aulus Gellius "and the Anthologia had preſerved. By chance two "Manuſcripts, containing ſeveral Pieces of this Poet, "fell into the Hands of the ſame Henry Stephens. "He was obliged for the firſt to John Clement, an "Engliſhman, Servant to Sir Thomas More; and he "brought the ſecond, after a long Journey, from "Italy into France. And, having carefully compared "the one with the other, he formed the Edition, "which he publiſhed, the firſt time, at Paris, in "the Year 1554. This Book met with a Reception "attended with different Opinions. Moſt of the "Learned looked upon it as an happy Diſcovery; "ſome diſtruſted it. Robertel, in his Diſſertation "concerning the Art of correcting Books, did not "acknowledge it to be genuine. Fulvius Urſinus "inſerted no other Poems of Anacreon in his Edi- "tion of the Greek Lyrics, but thoſe, which he "found mentioned by the ancient Authors, as ſuſ- "ſpecting the reſt. It were to be wiſhed, that the "two Manuſcripts, before mentioned, and which "are the only ones, which have been ſeen, had "been preſerved. But Henry Stephens, unhappily "falling into a kind of Diſtraction towards the latter "end of his Days, ſuffered them to periſh with ſe- "veral others, which he communicated to no one, not "ſo much as to his Son-in-law Caſaubon. He tran- "ſlated into French Verſe the ſame Odes of Anacreon, "which he rendered into Latin Verſe. Eas Anac- "reontis Odas, ſays he, in the Preface to his An- "notations upon the Paris Edition of Anacreon, in "4to, 1554, quas jam ante Gallicas feceram, in e- "liquot

(29) Colomies, Opuſc. pag. 108.

(30) See the Acta Erudit. 1693. pag. 236.

(31) Baillet, Enfans celebres, p. 359.

(32) See the Nouvelles de la Republiq; des Lettres, for Novem. 1684. Art. 8.

Digitized by Google

" liquot amicorum gratiam Latinè quoque aggreſſus " ſum vertere. What has been reported of Iſaac Voſ- " ſius, who ſaid, that he had an Anacreon in his " Poſſeſſion, wherein Scaliger had noted with his " own Hand, that John Dorat was the Author of the " Latin Tranſlation of this Poet, aſcribed to Henry " Stephens, ought not to be regarded. Either Voſ- " ſius was miſtaken, or Scaliger was miſinformed. " Henry Stephens, who was no Plagiary, was very " capable of making ſuch a Verſion as That; and, " if it had been Dorat's, he would not have failed " to have laid claim to it. It was from this that " Remi Belleau made his in French Verſe, which " perhaps appeared ſo fine to Henry Stephens, that, " after he had read it, he durſt not publiſh That, " which he had compoſed in the ſame Language. " Richard Renvoiſy, Maſter of the ſinging Boys of " the Holy Chapel at Dijon, made, according to " the Teſtimony of Antony du Verdier, page 34 of " his Bibliotheque, another French Verſion of the " Odes of Anacreon. In This probably du Verdier is " miſtaken. I take it to be the Verſion of Belleau, " which Renvoiſy ſet to Muſick in the Year 1558, " or 1559; which du Verdier himſelf gives us ſuf- " ficiently to underſtand, when, at Page 1222, he " quotes this Renvoiſy only as a Muſician. As for " the French Verſion of the ſame Poet, compoſed by " Mr Beuthillier de Rance, at the Age of twelve " or thirteen Years, it was never printed; and it " is very likely, that, if there was ſuch an one, " it was in Proſe, though the Authors, who have " mentioned it, do not poſitively ſay ſo."

(a) In Latin Taberna. Hence it is called Tabernas.

ANANIA (JOHN LAURENCE d') a Native of Taverna (a) in Calabria, lived about the End of the XVIth Century. He is Author of a Geographical Book in Italian, and a Latin Work, intituled, De Natura Dæmonum, which was printed at Venice, in the Year 1582, in 8*vo*. The other Work is intituled Coſmographia, overo l'univerſale Fabrica del Mondo——Coſmography, or the Univerſal Fabric of the World, and was printed at Venice, in the Year 1576, in 4*to* (b). Voſſius has omitted this Author in his Catalogue of Geographers.

(b) Baudrand Tom. 2. pag. 44 c. mentions only the Edition of Venice in 1584.

ANAXAGORAS, one of the moſt illuſtrious Philoſophers of Antiquity, was born at Clazomenæ, in Ionia, about the LXXth Olympiad, and was a Diſciple of Anaximenes. His noble Extraction, his Riches, and the Generoſity, which induced him to reſign his whole Patrimony to his Relations [A], made him very famous. He applied

[A] To reſign all his Patrimony to his Relations.] Before the Goſpel had taught Men to renounce the World and it's Riches, in order to make a ſwift Progreſs towards Perfection, ſome Philoſophers were ſenſible of this, and parted with their worldly Goods, to attend more freely to the Study of Wiſdom, and the Search of Truth. They believed, that the Cares of a Family, and an Inheritance, were Clogs, which hindered our Advancement towards the End moſt worthy of our Eſteem. Anaxagoras and Democritus (1), were of this Opinion. " Quid ergo, (ſays Cicero) (2), " aut Homero ad delectationem animi ac voluptatem, " aut cuiquam docto defuiſſe unquam arbitramur? " An ni ita ſe res haberet, Anaxagoras, aut hic ipſe " Democritus, agros & Patrimonia ſua relinquiſſent, " huic diſcendi quærendique divinæ delectationi toto " ſe animo dediſſent? —— What then can we think " wanting to compleat the Satisfaction and Pleaſure " of Homer, or any other learned Man? Without " this perfect Happineſs, would Anaxagoras, or this " Democritus, have reſigned their Poſſeſſions and Pa- " trimonies, and given themſelves up entirely to the " divine Pleaſure of acquiring Knowledge?" It was to ſuch a Renouncing of the World, that Anaxagoras thought himſelf indebted for his Learning, or, to uſe his own Expreſſion, for his Safety. " Quali porro " ſtudio Anaxagoram flagraſſe credimus? Qui, cum " è diutina peregrinatione patriam repetiiſſet, poſſeſ- " ſioneſque deſertas vidiſſet, " non eſſem," inquit " " ego ſalvus," niſi iſta periiſſent (3). —— How " eager after Knowledge muſt we ſuppoſe Anaxagoras " to have been; who, upon returning home, after a " long Abſence from his native Country, and ſeeing " his Poſſeſſions lying deſolate and in ruins, made uſe of " this Expreſſion, " Had not theſe periſhed, I myſelf " ſhould not have been ſafe." Socrates, with his uſual Irony, ſhews, that " the Sophiſts of his Time were " wiſer than Anaxagoras; for, inſtead of quitting " their Patrimonies, as he had done, they took a " great deal of pains to enrich themſelves, being " convinced of the Folly of the old Times, and per- " ſuaded, that the principal Wiſdom conſiſted in pro- " moting one's own Intereſt; that is to ſay, in the Art " of heaping up great Riches." Τύναντίον γὰρ Ἀναξαγόρα φασὶ συμβῆναι ἢ ὑμῖν. καλαλειφθέντων γὰρ αὐτῷ πολλῶν χρημάτων καλαμελῆσαι, καὶ ἀπολέσαι πάντα. ἔτως αὐτὸν ἀνόητα σοφίζεσθαι. λέγουσι δὲ καὶ περὶ ἄλλων τῶν παλαιῶν ἕτερα τοιαῦτα. τῦτο μὲν ἔν μοὶ δοκεῖς καλὸν τεκμήριον ἀποφαίνειν περὶ σοφίας τῶν νῦν πρὸς τῦς πρότερυς· καὶ πολλοῖς συνδοκεῖ, ὅτι τὸν σοφὸν αὐτὸν αὑτῷ μάλιστα δεῖ σωφρὸν εἶναι. τῦτο δ' ὅρος ἐστὶν ὅσ. ὃς ἂν πλεῖστον ἀργύριον εἰργάσηται (4). Cum Anaxagoras, contra ac vobis contigit, amplum patrimonium cum accepiſſet, neglexiſſe diſſipaſſeque dicatur, adeo ſtulte philoſophatus eſt: deque cæteris illorum temporum ſapientibus alia quædam hujuſmodi tradunt. Quapropter optimam hanc attuliſſe conjecturam videris, quod ſapientes noſtri ſuperioribus præſtant, multique in hoc conſentiunt; ſapientem in primis ſibi ipſi ſapere oportere. Hujus autem hæc eſt ſumma, ut argentum plurimum acquiratur. This puts me in mind of a Diſtinction which I have read in Ariſtotle. " We find, ſays he (5), that Anaxagoras, " and Thales, and ſuch like Philoſophers, were wiſe, " but not prudent Men, becauſe they were ignorant " of what was uſeful to them (6): They were ac- " quainted with abſtruſe, lofty, wonderful, and di- " vine Things; but they turned to no account; for " they diſregarded the good things, and Advantages " of this Life." This is the Senſe of a great many Men; they condemn all Employments, which do not tend to raiſe a Fortune. Whatever does not treat de pane lucrando, or is of no uſe, πρὸς τὰ ἀλφιτα, that is, in the vulgar Phraſe, to make the Pot boil (7), ſeems to them vain and ſuperfluous. Anaxagoras had quite another Notion. He abandoned his Lands to the Mercy of the Sheep, that he might apply himſelf wholly to Aſtronomy and Phyſic. Philo (8), Plutarch (9), Philoſtratus (10), Himerius (11), and Suidas, ſpeak of it. Democritus and Crates are ſeldom forgot upon this Occaſion. The Fathers of the Church likewiſe mention it (12): But St Chryſoſtom (13) declares, that the Conduct of theſe Philoſophers was mere Folly, and not a Contempt of Riches. The Devil, ſays he, has always been ſtudious to depreciate and defame God's Creatures, becauſe of the Incapacity of ſome Men to make a right uſe of their Money. This is paying the Heathens in their own Coin, who accounted all the Chriſtians, who parted with their Poſſeſſions, and retired into Solitudes, Fools and Madmen (14). Thus things are praiſed or blamed, according to the different Prejudices of Men. Obſerve, that Apollonius Tyanæus cenſured the Conduct of Anaxagoras, as the Action of a Philoſopher, who had more regard to the Advantage of the Beaſts, than that of Men (15). Vigenere has miſerably rendered the Paſſage of Apollonius: he makes him ſay, that Anaxagoras, giving himſelf up to the feeding of Camels, and white Cattle, employed his Philoſophy rather in the Service of the Brute Creation, than of Men. The Latin Verſion of Rhinuccinus is equally bad. Aiebat Clazemenium Anaxagoram gregibus & camelorum armentis nutriendis intentum pecorum gratia magis quam hominum philoſophatum eſſe.

(1) See Remark [B] of the Article DEMOCRITUS.

(2) Cicero, Tuſculan. lib. 5. circa finem.

(3) Valer. Maxim. l. 8. cap. 7. n. 6. in extern.

(4) Plato, in Hippia majore, (and not in Phædro, as Menage quotes it, in Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 6.) pag. 1246.

(5) Ariſt. Eudemi. r. lib. 5. cap. 7. pag. 184.

(6) Σοφὸς μὲν, φρονίμως δ' οὐ φασὶν εἶναι ὅταν ἴδωσιν ἀγνῶτας τὰ συμφέροντ' ἀνθρώποις. Sapientes quidem eſſe dicunt, prudentes vero nequaquam, cum videant eos quæ ſibi utilia ſint ignorare. Id. ibid.

(7) Pour faire bouillir la marmite.

(8) Philo de Vita contempl.

(9) I quote his Words in the Remark [B] of the Article DEMOCRITUS.

(10) Philoſtr. in Vita Apollon. lib. 1. c. 8.

(11) Himer. apud Phot. pag. 1088.

3. cap. 22. Origen. contra Celſum, lib. 2. (13) See his 7th Homily upon the Acts of the Apoſtles, pag. 67. Edit. Pariſ. 1636. (14) See Rutilius Numatianus, in his Itinerarium. (15) Philoſtr. in Vita Apollonii, l. 1. cap. 8.

(12) Lact. l.

Digitized by Google

applied himſelf wholly to the Study of Nature, without intermeddling in any public Affairs; which occaſioned ſome One to aſk him, whether he had no Concern at all for his Country. His Anſwer was admirable; nor could a Chriſtian Philoſopher have given a better; Yes, ſaid he, ſtretching his Hands towards Heaven, I have an extraordinary Concern for my Country (a). He was aſked, another time, To what End are you born? he replied, To contemplate the Sun, the Moon, and the Heavens (b). Accordingly he placed the ſupreme Good, or the End of Human Life, in Contemplation, and that Freedom of Condition, which it produces (c). He was but Twenty Years of Age, when he began to philoſophize at Athens (d). Some Authors ſay, He was the Firſt, who removed the School of Philoſophy thither, which had flouriſhed in Ionia from the Time of it's Founder Thales; which I ſhall examine in the Article of the Philoſopher ARCHELAUS. It is certain he had ſeveral Famous Diſciples at Athens, and particularly Pericles, and Euripides; and ſome add Themiſtocles and Socrates. But Chronology is againſt them as to Themiſtocles (e). There is ſcarce any thing, which gives us a greater Idea of his Ability, than the Nature of the Progreſs, which Pericles made under him; for he inſpired him with thoſe grave and majeſtic Manners, which enabled him to govern the Republic (f); he qualified him for that ſublime and victorious Eloquence, which made him ſo powerful (g); and he taught him to fear the Gods (b) without Superſtition. Add to this, that his Counſels aſſiſted him greatly in ſupporting the Weight of Government (i). He diſtinguiſhed himſelf by the Novelty and Singularity of his Doctrines. He taught, that there were Hills, Vallies, and Inhabitants in (a) Diogen. Laërt. l. 2. n. 6, 7.

(b) Id. ib. n. 10.

(c) Clem. Alexandrin. Strom. lib. 2. pag. 416.

(d) Diogen. Laërt. ibid. n. 7.

(e) Plutarch. in Themiſt. pag. 112.

(f) Id. in Pericle, pag. 154.

(g) See Remark [E] of the Article PERICLES, at the end.

(b) See Remarks [A] and [B] of the ſame Article.

(i) See Citation (19).

This Cenſure looks like a Cavil; for, to ſay nothing of the Profit, which public Paſturage bring to Men, is it not plain, that Anaxagoras had reaſon to believe, that thoſe Lands, which he forſook, would be cultivated by his Relations? The four Verſes in the Life of Virgil, which begin with Sic vos non vobis, contain a great Truth, which is, that the Care, which is taken of Sheep, Oxen, &c. redounds to the good of Men. Euſebius has been more juſt to Anaxagoras, than Apollonius Tyanæus; for he repreſents the abandoning of his Lands, as a greater Proof of his Attachment to Philoſophy, than all the other Philoſophers had ever given. Φασὶ γὰρ ὡς ἄρα τῶν μάλιστα παρὰ τὰς πρὸ αὐτοῦ ἐθαύμασε φυσιολογίαν· μᾶλλόν τον γέ τοι τὴν ἑαυτοῦ χώραν δι' αὐτὴν εἴασε (16). Et vero ſuperiores omnes quantum is Phyſiologiæ ſtudio ſuperarit, vel ex eo intelligi, quod agros ipſe ſuos magnitudine paſtionis uberrimos ejus amore reliquerit. I make uſe of the Vulgar Verſion, which is that of Francis Vigerus; but I obſerve, that it is faulty as to μᾶλλόν τον χώραν, which ought to be rendred agros ovibus depaſcendos, and not agros magnitudine paſtionis uberrimos.

(16) Euſeb. Præpar. Evang. lib. 14. cap. 14. pag. 750.

There remain ſtill ſome Remarks to be made on the Diſintereſtedneſs of Anaxagoras. He was one, who would have very well diſcharged the Duties of public Offices; for his Counſels were not only very ſerviceable to Him, who governed the Athenians, but even neceſſary (17); yet he always avoided interfering with the Government. He would never make uſe of the Authority and Credit of Pericles, to raiſe himſelf to Employs; but confined his Deſires to Philoſophical Speculations, being altogether free from all Ambition, which many other learned Men are incapable of ſubduing, even when they have not, as he had, an inſight into Affairs of State, or the Protection and Favour of thoſe in Authority. I queſtion not but Cicero had our Philoſopher particularly in view, when, ſpeaking of ſeveral great Men, he ſays, That it was a Misfortune to the Commonwealth, that they wholly applied themſelves to the Study of Nature. His Words are, "Eadem autem alii prudentia, ſed conſilio ad vitæ ſtudia diſpari, quietem atque otium ſequuti, ut Pythagoras, Democritus, Anaxagoras, à regendis civitatibus totos ſe ad cognitionem rerum tranſtulerunt; quæ vita propter tranquillitatem, & propter ipſius ſcientiæ ſuavitatem, qua nihil eſt hominibus jucundius, plures quàm utile fuit rebus publicis delectavit (18). —— With the ſame Prudence, but with a view to different Studies, others, ſeeking for Retirement and Eaſe, as Pythagoras, Democritus, and Anaxagoras, have quitted the Government of States, to give themſelves wholly up to the Study of Nature; a Life, which, on account of it's Tranquillity, and the Sweetneſs of Knowledge itſelf, has engaged more Perſons to embrace it, than the public Good can ſpare." He not only ſlighted all Honours, but was careleſs, even with regard to the Neceſſaries of Life. He conſidered not, how eaſy it was for him to heap up Riches, by the Credit and Friendſhip of Pericles; nor did he provide againſt the Wants of old Age. His Enquiries into the Secrets of Nature ſwallowed up all his other Paſſions. He found, at laſt, that his Contempt of Riches ought not to have been ſo great; for, in his old Age, he was reduced to Want, and, in this Neceſſity, he took up a calm Reſolution to ſtarve himſelf to death; but Pericles, having notice of it, prevented it. Let us hear Plutarch; "Pericles, ſays he (19), aſſiſted ſeveral poor "People with his Riches, and, among others, Anaxa-"goras; of whom it is related, that, Pericles being "ſo buſy, that he had no leiſure to think of him, "he found himſelf forſaken by every one in his old "Age, and, having muffled up his Head, laid him-"ſelf down with a Reſolution to die of Hunger. "Pericles, being informed thereof, went immedi-"ately to him in great Concern, and earneſtly en-"treated him to alter his Reſolution, and live, bewail-"ing, not Anaxagoras, but himſelf, that he ſhould "loſe ſuch a faithful and wiſe Counſellor in the Oc-"currences of public Affairs. Anaxagoras, upon this, "uncovered his Face, and ſaid to him; "They, "Pericles, who deſire the Light of a Lamp, put "Oil into it to keep it alive." Would you ſee another Proof of the little Ambition of this Philoſopher? They offered to pay to his Memory all the Honours he could deſire; but he rejected the Favour, and only deſired, that the Day of his Death might be a Play-day for School-Boys. Τὰς δ' ἰδομένας ἀφεῖς τιμὰς, ἠτήσατο τὴν ἡμέραν ἐκείνην καθ' ἣν ἂν τελευτήσῃ τοὺς παῖδας ἀφιέναι παίζειν σχολάζειν ἀπὸ τῶν μαθημάτων (20). Honoribus qui offerebantur recuſatis, poſtulavit ut ea qua deceſſiſſet è vivis die pueris ſcholarum vacatio & diſcendi concederetur. Was not this to wiſh, that his Death might be a Subject of Pleaſure to many, and not of Affliction; and that he had an extraordinary contempt for every thing, which flatters moſt the Vanity of Mortals?

(17) See below, Plutarch's Words, Citation (19).

(18) Cicero de Oratore, lib. 3. c. 15. (and not lib. 2. as Mr Menage quotes it in Diog. Laërt. p. 71. fol. 91. B.

(19) Plutarch. in Vit. Periclis, pag. 162.

(20) Id. in Præcept. Reip. gerendæ, p. 820. D. Diog. Laërtius, as appears by the Text of this Article, relates the Circumſtances ſomewhat differently.

I ſhall make two ſhort Reflexions on this Paſſage of the Life of Pericles. It informs us, that Anaxagoras was very well ſkilled in Politics, though he only made Profeſſion of ſpeculative Philoſophy. Why then ſhould we not believe, that he compoſed the Treatiſe de Regno, out of which Ælian alledges a Sentence (21)? Granting it to be the Work of another Anaxagoras, as Meurſius and Menage ſuppoſe (22), yet the Reaſon, which Menage gives for it, is not a good one (23): He himſelf would have been ſenſible of it, if he had recollected this Paſſage of Plutarch. This is my firſt Reflexion. The other is, that the old Age, aſcribed to our Philoſopher, does not agree with the Account of thoſe, who ſay, that he came to Athens at twenty Years of Age, and that he lived there thirty Years. He muſt then have received Pericles's Viſit, mentioned by Plutarch, at about fifty Years of Age. I ſhall conclude with a Paſſage of Ovid, which tells us, that the firſt Aſtronomers muſt needs have been free from Senſuality, and from the

(21) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 4. c. 14.

(22) See Kuhnius's Notes upon this Paſſage of Ælian.

(23) Alius igitur fuerit ab Anaxagora noſtro, &c. Menag. in Laërt. l. 2. n. 7. He draws this Conſequence from Anaxagoras's never applying himſelf to Affairs of Government.

Digitized by Google

in the Moon; and that the Sun was a fiery Mass of Matter [B], and bigger than Peloponnesus (k). He said, that Snow was black (l), for which he assigned a very poor reason; for he built his Notion, on the one Side, upon this, that Snow is condensed Water; and he supposed, on the other side, that black is the true Colour of Water (m). He believed, in general, that our Eyes are incapable of discerning the true Colour of Objects, and that our Senses deceive us; and that therefore it is the business of Reason, not of our Eyes, to judge of things (n). He held that the Heavens were made of Stone (o), and that it was the Swiftness of their Motion, which hindered them from falling (p). Others assure us, that he believed the Heavens to be of the Nature of Fire as to their Essence; and that the Stones of the Earth being snatched upwards, and set on fire, by the Rapidity of it's Revolution, became Stars (q); and that, at the beginning, Animals were formed out of the Earth, and a warm Moisture (r), and that afterwards they produced each other, the Males on the right side, and the Females on the left (s). He admitted as many sorts of Principles, as compound Bodies; for he supposed, that each kind of Body was made up of many similar Particles, which he called Homœomeriæ, by reason of this Conformity. But this led him to grant a thing, which perplexed his System; namely, that the Seeds, or Principles, of all Species, are to be found in each Individual. Moreri has misrepresented this Opinion [C]. Lucretius has well explained, and solidly refuted

(k) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 8.

(l) Cicero, Acad. Quæst. lib. 2. cap 23, & 31. Lactant. lib. 5. cap. 3.

(m) Sextus Empiricus, Pyrrhon. Hypotypos. lib. 1. c. 13.

(n) Id. adv. Mathem. l. 7. p. 133.

(o) See the beginning of the Remark [I].

(p) Diogen. Laërtius, lib. 2. n. 12.

(q) Plutarch. de Placitis Philosoph. lib. 2. c. 13.

(r) Diogen. Laërt. ibid. n. 12.

(s) Id. ibi. n. 9.

Care of attaining to Honours and Riches: Anaxagoras is a pregnant Instance of it.

Felices animos, quibus hæc cognoscere primis,
Inque domos superas scandere cura fuit!
Credibile est illos pariter vitiisque locisque
Altius humanis exseruisse caput.
Non Venus & vinum sublimia pectora fregit;
Officiumque fori, militiæve labor.
Nec levis ambitio, perfusaque gloria fuco;
Magnarumve fames sollicitavit opum.
Admovêre oculis distantia sidera nostris;
Ætheraque ingenio suppositâre suo.
Sic petitur cœlum: non ut ferat Ossan Olympus;
Summaque Peliacus sidera tangat apex.
Nos quoque sub ducibus cœlum metabimur illis,
Ponemusque suos ad stata signa dies (24).

(24) Ovid. Fast. lib. 1. ver. 297.

Thrice happy they, who first, with Souls refin'd,
To these Pursuits their generous Care confined;
Who, nobly spurning Earth's impure Abodes,
Assay'd to climb the Mansions of the Gods.
Such Breasts, sublime, Intemp'rance never broke;
Such ne'er submitted to Love's shameful Yoke.
Such fled the wrangling of the noisy Bar,
The hideous Din of Arms, and painful Toils of War;
Foes to Ambition, and her idle Lure,
From Thirst of Fame, from Thirst of Gold, secure.
Such Souls, examining the distant Skies,
Unveil'd it's hidden Lights to mortal Eyes.
Let huge Olympus lofty Ossa bear;
Let Pelion tow'r on Ossa high in Air;
Mountains on Mountains short of Heav'n must rise;
This only Ladder reaches to the Skies.
Led by these Guides, to measure Heav'n we try,
And to each Sign it's stated Days apply.

[B] He taught —— that the Sun was a fiery Mass of Matter.] I make use of this general Expression, because the Interpreters do not agree about the true Sense of these Words of Diogenes Laërtius; Τὸν ἥλιον μύδρον εἶναι διάπυρον (25). Some will have them to signify a Mass of burning Iron; others rather understand by them a flaming Stone; and others, a fiery Globe, neither of Iron nor Stone. Videtur mihi Anaxagoras, (thus speaks Casaubon) per μύδρον διάπυρον non tam lapidem aut ferrum, quàm globum quendam igneum, λιθώδη & βαρὺν, ut ait Plutarchus, intelligere voluisse (26). Most of those, who have mentioned this Doctrine of Anaxagoras, have adhered to the second Explication; which agrees perfectly with the Hypothesis of this Philosopher, as will appear hereafter (27). I begin with Xenophon's Words. Φάσκων δὲ τὸν ἥλιον λίθον διάπυρον εἶναι, καὶ τοῦτο ἠγνόει ὅτι λίθος μὲν ἐν πυρὶ ὢν ἔτι λάμπει, ἔτι πολὺν χρόνον ἀντέχει. ὁ δὲ ἥλιος τὸν πάντα χρόνον πάντων λαμπρότερος ὢν διαμένει (28). This is, according to Mr Charpentier's Translation, Saying also, That the Sun was only a fiery Stone, he did not consider, that a Stone does not shine in the Fire, neither can it continue long there, without being consumed; whereas the Sun continues always, and is an inexhaustible Source of Light. Plato shall be my second Evidence. He introduces Socrates, who, finding himself charged with saying, that the Sun was a Stone, and the Moon an Earth, answers, They take me for Anaxagoras, whose Books are full of such Discourses; and they fancy that I am so foolish as to teach young People these Absurdities: They would laugh at me, if I should ascribe to myself a Doctrine, contained in the Works of another Man, which are sold very cheap (29). I have only given a general Notion of the Words of Plato; and therefore I shall set down the very Words of that Philosopher, for the Satisfaction of those, who are not contented with the Substance of an Evidence. Ἀναξαγόρᾳ οἴει καλῇ γορείν ὦ φίλε Μέλητε. καὶ ὕτω καταφρονεῖς τῶνδε, καὶ οἴει αὐτὸς ἀπείρους γραμμάτων εἶναι, ὥστε οὐκ εἰδέναι ὅτι τ' Ἀναξαγόρᾳ βιβλία τῦ Κλαζομενίυ γέμει τούτων τῶν λόγων. καὶ δὴ καὶ οἱ νέοι ταῦτα παρ' ἐμοῦ μανθάνουσιν ἃ ἔξεσιν ἐνίοις, εἰ πάνυ πολλοῦ, δραχμῆς ἐκ τῆς ὀρχήσεως πεσαμένοις, Σωκράτυς καταγελᾶν, ἐαν πρόσποιῆται ἑαυτῦ εἶναι, ἄλλως τε καὶ ὄντως ἄτοπα ὄντα (30). Axaxagoram tu quidem, ô amice Melite, accusare tibi videris, atque ita hos parvi facis, existimans eos literarum ignaros esse, quasi nesciant libros Anaxagoræ Clazomenii ejusmodi opinionibus esse plenos. Juvenes vero hæc à me discant? quibus liceret interdum, etiam si multa sint, unius drachmæ pretio mentibus ex orchestra Socratem deridere, si sua esse fingeret, præsertim quum tam absurda sint. You will find in Plutarch, that Anaxagoras was condemned as an impious Man, for having said, that the Sun was a Stone (31). St Cyril of Alexandria (32), and St Austin (33), are to be reckoned among those, who have said, that, according to Anaxagoras, the Sun was a fiery Stone. Suidas renders μύδρον διάπυρον, in Diogenes Laërtius, by πύρινον λίθον. And therefore I wonder, that Mr Charpentier chose rather to say, that Anaxagoras maintained, that the Sun was only a fiery Mass of Iron (34).

(25) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 8.

(25) If. Casaub. in hunc I cum Diog. Laërtii.

(26) In Remark [I].

(28) Xenophon. Memorabil. l. 4.

(29) Τὸν μὲν ἥλιον, λίθον φησὶν εἶναι, τὴν δὲ σελήνην, γῆν. Solem quidem lapidem esse dicit, Lunam vero terram. Plato in Apologia Socratis, p. 21. A.

(30) Id. ibid.

(31) Plutarch. de Superstitione, pag. 169. E.

(32) Cyrillus lib 6. contra Julian.

(33) August. de Civitat. Dei, lib. 18. cap. 41.

(34) Charpentier's Life of Socrates, p. 7.

[C] Moreri has misrepresented this Opinion. Lucretius has well explained, and solidly confuted it.] I shall sum up, in this Remark, all the Mistakes of Moreri.

I. He supposes, that Anaxagoras taught, That the first Causes of Things had in them the Characters of the Parts; for, as Gold is composed of small Particles united together, so likewise this great World is composed of similar Particles, which make up the whole, and are the Primum Mobile of all things. What Nonsense! What Darkness! Did ever Heraclitus express himself so obscurely? To what purpose is the Example of Gold composed of small Particles united together? Does this belong to Gold, more than to any other compound Body? He should have added, that those little Particles, of which Gold is compounded, are also Gold themselves. This Anaxagoras taught: He believed, that a visible Bone was composed refuted it. This will give us an Opportunity of making some Reflexions on this Doctrine. What was most excellent in his System, was, that, whereas, till then, they had reasoned about the Formation of the World, by admitting only, on one side, unformed Matter, and, on the other, mere Chance, or a blind Fatality, which put it posed of several invisible Bones, and that the Blood, which we see, was composed of divers small Drops, each whereof was Blood; and therefore he called his Principles ὁμοιμερείας (35), similaritates. Read these Verses of Lucretius.

Digitized by Google

(35) Plutarch. de Placit. Philosoph. l. 1. c. 3. p. 876. Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 8.

Nunc & Anaxagoræ scrutemur Homœomerian,
Quam Græci memorant, nec nostrâ dicere linguâ
Concedit nobis patrii sermonis egestas.
Sed tamen ipsam rem facile est exponere verbis,
Principum rerum quam dicit Homœomerian.
Ossa videlicet è pauxillis atque minutis
Ossibus; sic & de pauxillis atque minutis
Visceribus viscus gigni; sanguenque creari
Sanguinis inter se multis coëuntibu' guttis;
Ex aurique putat micis consistere posse
Aurum; & de terris terram concrescere parvis;
Ignibus ex ignem; humorem ex humoribus esse.
Cætera consimili fingit ratione, putatque (36).

(36) Lucret. l. 1. v. 830.

Now let's examine with a curious Eye
Sage Anaxagoras' Philosophy,
By copious Greece term'd Homœomery.
For which our Latin Language, poor in Words,
Not one expressive single Voice affords.
Yet by an easy short Periphrasis
We plainly can discover what it is.
For this it means: That Bones of minute Bones,
That Flesh of Flesh, and Stones of little Stones,
That Nerves take other little Nerves for Food,
And Blood is made of little drops of Blood.
That Gold from parts of the same Nature rose,
That Earths do Earth, Fires Fire, Airs Air compose;
And so in all things else alike to those.

CREECH.

I will not repeat all the Arguments alledged by Lucretius against this Doctrine; I shall only insist on the first. He shews, that, upon this Hypothesis, the first Principles of things would be as corruptible as the most Compound Bodies themselves. This Consequence draws two great Inconveniencies after it; one is, that the Difference, which ought to be between Principles and Compounds, is not to be found in Anaxagoras's Hypothesis. The Difference I speak of is, that the first Principles (37) ought always to continue the same, how often soever Compound Bodies be destroyed. Compound Bodies alone are born, and die, and pass through a thousand Vicissitudes of Generation and Corruption; but Principles retain their Nature unchangeably under all the Forms, which are successively produced. Anaxagoras could not say this of HIS Principles; for (to give an Instance) if those of Flesh had the Nature of Flesh, they would be no less subject to Destruction, than a great Mass of Flesh; and so of the rest, for he admitted no indivisible Parts in Matter.

(37) Understand by This Word the Matter, or Subjectum ex quo.

Nec tamen esse ulla parte idem in rebus inane,
Concedit, neque corporibus finem esse secandis (38).

(38) Lucret. lib. 1. v. 843.

But he admits no void, he grants no least,
And therefore errs in that, with all the rest.

CREECH.

We shall see hereafter (39), whether he could have supposed, that Principles, being eternal and uncreated, ought to be Incorruptible. The other inconvenience is, that the Destruction of first Principles is the same with what is called Annihilation; for when they cease to be, they do not resolve themselves into other things, of which they are composed, since the Simplicity, which is peculiar to them, will not admit of any Composition. They perish therefore entirely, and are annihilated. Now the Light of Nature cannot conceive the Possibility of such a Change.

(39) In Remark [G].

At neque recidere ad nihilum res posse, neque autem
Crescere ex nihilo, testor res ante probatas (40).

(40) Lucret. ib. ver. 857.

But former Arguments have clearly taught,
That things nor perish to, nor rise from, nought.

CREECH.

The Destruction of Compound Bodies is not liable to this Difficulty; they subsist always in their Principles; for instance, Wood, when destroyed by Fire, ceases not to exist as Matter, or extended Substance. Thus there is a great Defect in the System of Anaxagoras: His Principles are composed of Matter and Form, and have not consequently the Simplicity and Immutability, which Order requires. This Defect could not be remedied, by supposing, that the Intelligence, which presides over Generations, never suffers them to be destroyed. Was it not a sufficient Inconveniency, that of their own Nature they were subject to Corruption, and could not be preserved from it but by a Privilege, or, rather, by a Miracle? I say nothing of their great Number, which is likewise a remarkable Defect; for it is essential to a good System, that an infinite number of Effects should flow from a very few Causes.

Lucretius was not aware of an Objection, which would have destroyed the very Foundation of Anaxagoras's Hypothesis. This Philosopher's Motive, in his Supposition of the Homœomeries, or Homogencitici, was, that no Being can be made out of Nothing, or reduced to nothing (41). Now if the Earth, for Example, was formed of Things, which were not Earth, it would be made of nothing; and if, having been Earth, it should cease to be Earth, it would be annihilated: It must then be formed of what is Earth, and, in that which is called Destruction or Corruption, it must needs be reduced to, or resolve itself into, Parts, which are Earth. According to this, there is no Generation, or Corruption, properly so called; no Birth, or Death. The production of an Herb is nothing else but the Assemblage of several small Herbs: The Destruction of a Tree is nothing but the Separation and Dispersion of several Trees. "We see, added "he (42), that the simplest Food, as Bread and Wa- "ter, is converted into Hair, Veins, Arteries, "Nerves, Bones, &c. there must be therefore little "Hairs, Veins, and Arteries, &c. which indeed our "Senses do not discover; but they are not invisible "to our Reason or Understanding." It is evident, that he went upon this false Supposition, to wit, that something would be made out of nothing, if the parts of Bread, which supply the Bones with Nourishment, had not the Nature of Bones, in the Bread itself. It is surprizing, that so great a Genius should reason in this manner. Could he not perceive, that a House is not made out of nothing, though it be built with Materials, which are not an House? Do not four Lines, none of which are squares, make a Square? Is it not enough, that they are placed in a certain manner? Is not a Doublet made of several Pieces of Cloth, none of which is a Doublet? Is there any Creation in this? Since, then, in artificial Things, the bare change of Figure, and situation of Parts, is sufficient to form a whole, which, as to it's Species and Properties, differs from each of it's Parts; could he not apprehend, that Nature, which infinitely exceeds human Art, can form Bones and Veins, without putting together Parts, which are already Bones and Veins; and that it need only work upon such Particles, as are capable of receiving such or such a Situation or Figure? By this means, without any Creation, properly so called, That, which was not Flesh, will become Flesh, &c. This is what Lucretius might have objected to our Anaxagoras; and by this he would have entirely destroyed his Hypothesis of the Homœomeriæ. I proceed to other Faults of Moriri (43).

(41) Plutarch. ubi supra. See also Aristot. Physicor. lib. 1. c. 4. pag. 256.

(42) Plut. ibid.

II. Anaxagoras, says he, was sirnamed Νοῦς, or the Mind, on account of the Subtilty of his Doctrine. Diogenes Laërtius says nothing of this Reason; he only tells us, that he had this Sirname given him, because he taught, that an intelligent Being had cleared up the

(43) I shall not take notice of his wrong Quotations. He quotes Plutarch, only in Vita Niciæ, (it should be Niciæ*) besides he mentions nothing of what* Plutarch says there; and there are other Tracts of Plutarch, which might have been more properly quoted.

Digitized by Google

it in order; he was the First, who supposed, that an Intelligence produced Motion in Matter,

Chaos (44). Timon (45), and Harpocration (46), say the same. I do not deny, that Plutarch mentions the Reason alledged by Moreri; but, since he alledges also That, which we find in Diogenes Laërtius (47), and which is the more probable one, Moreri should not have suppress'd it.

III. He falsely charges our Anaxagoras with having admitted of Atoms (48). This Error is so much the grosser, because he had before said, that Anaxagoras admitted of infinite Parts in all Bodies. These two Opinions destroy each other; for, though, generally speaking, the Atomic System may admit of an infinity of Corpuscles; yet it requires, that their Number should be determinate in each Body; since one of the Reasons of the Atomists, in their System, is, that they avoid the Absurdities of a Divisibility in infinitum, which necessarily follows from the Supposition, that each Body is composed of an infinite Number of Parts.

IV. It is not true, that Lucian feigns, that Jupiter struck Anaxagoras dead with a Thunder-bolt. We shall see, below, the Words of Lucian.

V. I know not upon what Foundation Moreri says, that Anaxagoras travelled into Egypt, where he learned the Secrets and Mysteries of the learned Men of that Country: I do not remember to have read this in any ancient Author. For I desire I may be allowed to place Theodoret among the Moderns, in this respect; Theodoret, I say, who mentions this Journey of Anaxagoras (50), but who is otherwise mistaken, in supposing this Philosopher to be cotemporary with Pythagoras. However, I shall have still reason to censure Moreri, since he has not quoted Theodoret, nor any Author, who mentions this Journey.

VI. He believed, that the Stars (they are Moreri's Words) had at first a confused Motion, which was afterwards regulated. This was not at all the Opinion of Anaxagoras. According to Diogenes Laërtius, he believed, that, at first, the Stars moved in such a manner, that the Heavens, being in the Form of a Vault, the Pole, which never sets, was vertical to the Earth, but that it inclined itself afterwards (51). By his leave, this was to have a very imperfect Knowledge of the Sphere. He was ignorant, that the North Pole, inclining to the Horizon of Ionia, and several other Countries, is no less vertical to the Earth, with respect to a certain Place, than it could be at the beginning. If Anaxagoras meant, that this Pole, being formerly in the Zenith of Ionia, afterwards declined towards the Horizon, he expressed himself very ill, and must have believed, that Ionia was formerly a very miserable and unhappy Country. Plutarch relates this somewhat differently. He says, that Anaxagoras believed, that, after the World was created, and the Earth had produced living Creatures, the Earth of itself (ἐκ τῆ αὐτομάτης) inclined towards the South; perhaps providentially (ἴσως ὑπὸ προνοίας) that there might be habitable and uninhabitable Parts, through excessive Cold, scorching Heat, and Temperature (52).

VII. It is not true, that Diogenes Laërtius mentions an Orator, whose Name was Anaxagoras, and who was Disciple of Socrates. He makes him a Disciple of Isocrates (53).

VIII. It is still falser, that our Anaxagoras taught, that the similar Parts were the Primum Mobile of all Things. We shall see, in the following Remark, that, according his Opinion, the first Mover was a Spirit, distinct from the Homœomeriæ. If Moreri had understood the Author of the Life of this Philosopher, he would not have fallen into this Mistake. Ἐκ τῶν ὁμοιομερῶν μικρῶν σωμάτων τὸ πᾶν συγκεκρίσθαι, καὶ νῦν μὲν ἀρχὴν κινήσεως (54). Ex parvis similium partium corporibus hoc totum esse compositum, MENTEMQUE INITIUM ESSE MOTUS.

IX. Moreri has misrepresented the Sense of the first part of this Greek of Diogenes Laërtius. All this great World, says he, is made up of similar Parts, which constitute the whole. I have already complained of the Nonsense of these Words; but I shall here consider them more fully, in order to shew, in what manner a Modern Writer ought to guard against Ambiguities, to which he is liable, when he forgets, that an Expression, which was clear to the Greeks, may be very obscure at present, unless expressed by a Periphrasis. I say this, without intending to justify good Diogenes Laërtius, who generally did not know what he said, when he abridged the Opinions of the Philosophers. I wish Moreri had expressed himself thus; The World is the Effect or Result of the Choice of small similar Parts. According to his own Expression, one would take the World to be an Whole, each of whose Parts has the same Name and Quality with all the rest (55). This is so false, that it is but opening one's Eyes, to be convinced of it. The very Blind may know it, and cannot be ignorant of it; for they know, that they are composed of Flesh and Bones; and that their Hair is not like their Nails. They, who have the least Tincture of School-Philosophy, know, that an Homogeneous Compound is That, whose Parts have the same Nature and Qualities with the Whole; and that an Heterogeneous Compound is That, whose Parts are not named as their whole is, and have not each the same common Properties. Water, Milk, Wine, Flesh, and Bones, are Homogeneous Compounds; for Instance, each drop of the Liquid, which composes a River, is called Water, and has the Essence of it. But it is quite otherwise with an Heterogeneous Compound; it's Parts have not it's Name, nor it's Nature; neither have they the Names and Qualities of each other. Such, for Example, is the Body of an Ox; it is composed of Blood, Flesh, and Bones, and of several other Parts, which have each their distinct Names and Qualities. This being so, no one can say, that the Universe is an Homogeneous Compound. Some of it's Parts are opake, and others transparent; some liquid, and others hard: Here is Earth; there Air and Water; here a Meadow, and there a Wood. Anaxagoras would have been more extravagant, than the most absurd Visionary that ever was put into a Mad-House, had he entertained any Doubts about it; and yet Moreri's Expressions plainly intimate, that he taught, that the Universe was Homogeneous; and therefore he falsely charges him with a shocking Absurdity. He should have made use of another Phrase to describe his Opinion, and pitched upon such Terms, as would not confound the collective Sense of the Word Whole, with the distributive (56). I will explain myself by an Example. Let us suppose, that all the Citizens of a great City are divided into ten Classes; and that those, who have Twenty thousand Livres are placed in the first, those, who have Fifteen thousand, in the next, and the rest accordingly. Now whoever should say, This Town is composed of Inhabitants equally Rich, must intend it only in a distributive Sense. His meaning must be, that the ten Parts, which constitute this People, are each of them composed of Men equally Rich; But his Thought would be involved in improper, obscure, and intricate Words; and, to make himself understood, he ought to add, That this equality of Riches is only to be found, in comparing the People of the same Class with each other; for if those of the tenth Class be compared with those of the first, there will be a great Inequality. This is the ill Office, which those do our Anaxagoras, who maintain, that he said, that the Universe was altogether composed of similar Parts: They make their Readers suspect, that he advanced a ridiculous Enigma; and, if the Writer does not explain himself by a that is to say, they are at a loss to understand him, and grow very angry with such an Author. To free them from such a Perplexity, I will endeavour to explain the Sentiment of this Philosopher.

AN EXPLICATION of the Doctrine of Anaxagoras.

His meaning seems to me to be, that the Intelligence, which formed the World, had, in infinite Matter, found infinite Kinds of minute Corpuscles, which resembled each other; but which by a confused Mixture were surrounded with other Corpuscles, or small Bodies, not of the same Nature. The Intelligence united the several Corpuscles of the same Species; and, by this means, formed here a Planet, there a Stone, in other places Water, Air, Wood, &c. This Action divided the Universe into several Masses of similar Parts; but in such a manner, that the Particles of one Mass did not resemble those of another. And, therefore, the Word All or Whole, must not be taken in a Collective, but in a Distributive Sense; otherwise you will have as much Reason to say, that the World is made of Dissimilar, as of Similar, Parts. Ludovicus Vives, having observed, that this Passage of St Austin,

(44) Diog. Laërt. lib. 3. n. 6.

(45) Timon Phliasius, in Sillis, apud Laërt. lib. 2. n. 6.

(46) Harpocrat. in voce Ἀναξαγόρας.

(47) Plutarch's Words may be seen in the Remark [D], Citation (62)

(48) See, above, the Verses of Lucretius, Citation (36).

(49) In the Remark [K], Citation (156).

(50) Theodoret. de Græc. Affect. Serm. 2. pag. 489.

(51) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 9.

(52) Plut. de Placit. Phil. lib. 2. cap. 8. pag. 887.

(53) Diog. Laërt. ibid. n. 15.

(54) Id. ib. n. 8.

(55) That is, according to Anaxagoras's Opinion.

(56) Mr Arnaud, in his Difficulties to Mr Steyaert, part 6. pag. 122, &c. makes some Observations on these two Senses of the Word WHOLE.

Digitized by Google

Matter, and reduced the Chaos into Form [D]. This was, without doubt, the true Reason, Anaxagoras —— dixit ex infinita materia quæ conſtaret diſſimilibus inter ſe particulis, &c. - - - - - Anaxagoras —— ſaid, that of infinite Matter, conſiſting of diſſimilar Particles, &c. —— was read in the old Manuſcripts, Similibus inter ſe particulis —— of ſimilar Particles —— adds, utrumque rectè —— both Readings are right.

As to the Objections, which Anaxagoras had to fear, I ſhall take ſome notice of them in the Remark [G].

[D] He was the firſt, who ſuppoſed that an Intelligence produced motion in Matter, and reduced the Chaos into Form.] Theſe are Facts well atteſted. Πρῶτος τῇ ὕλῃ νοῦν ἐπέστησεν, ἀφ' ἁμαυροτέρας τοῦ συγγράμματος, ὃ ἐστὶν ἁδέως καὶ μεγαλοφρόνως ἠρμηνευμένον. πάντα χρήματα ἦν ὁμοῦ, εἶτα νοῦς ἐλθὼν αὐτὰ διεκόσμησε (57). He was the firſt, who ſuperadded a MIND to Matter, expreſſing himſelf at the beginning of his Work, in this pleaſing and ſublime manner; "all Things were confuſed; afterwards an Intelligence, interpoſing, reduced "them into Form and Order." I thought it proper to begin with this Paſſage of Diogenes Laërtius, becauſe it contains Anaxagoras's own Words (58).

(57) Diogen. Laërt. in Anaxagora, init. lib. 2. n. 6.

Let us take a view of Ariſtotle's Remarks on this Subject. He condemns the Philoſophers, who, treating of the Principles of Things, ſtopped at the material, without ſearching for the efficient, Cauſe of Generation and Corruption. The material Cauſe, ſays he, never changes; Braſs does not convert itſelf into a Statue, nor Wood into a Bedſtead; there is another Principle of this Change. To ſearch after this Principle, is to aſcend to the firſt Mover. His Words are ſo remarkable, that it is proper to repeat them. Εἰ γὰρ ὅτι μάλιστα πᾶσα φθορὰ καὶ γένεσις ἐκ τινος, ὡς ἑνὸς ἢ καὶ πλειόνων ἐστὶν, διὰ τί τοῦτο συμβαίνει, καὶ τὶ τὸ αἴτιον; ἡ γὰρ ὑλὴ τόδε γε ὑποκείμενον αὐτὸ ποιεῖ μεταβάλλειν ἑαυτό. λέγω δ' οἷον, ὅτε τὸ ξύλον ὅτε ὁ χαλκὸς αἴτιον τοῦ μεταβάλλειν ἑκάτερον αὐτῶν. ὅδε ποιεῖ τὸ μὲν ξύλον κλίνην, ὁ δὲ χαλκὸς ἀνδριάντα, ἀλλ' ἕτερόν τι τῆς μεταβολῆς τὸ αἴτιον. τὸ δὲ τοῦτο ζητεῖν, ἐστὶ τὸ τὴν ἑτέραν ἀρχὴν ζητεῖν, ὡς ἂν ἡμεῖς φαίημεν, ὅθεν ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κινήσεως (59). Nam etſi quàm maxime omnis corruptio, & generatio ex aliquo ut ex uno aut ex pluribus ſit, cur hoc accidit, & quæ cauſa eſt? Non enim ipſum ſubjectum ſeſe mutari facit, utputa, dico quod neque lignum, neque æs cauſa eſt, ut utrumque eorum mutetur. Neque lignum quidem lectum, æs vero ſtatuam facit, ſed aliud quippiam mutationis cauſa eſt. Hoc autem quærere, aliud principium quærere eſt, perinde atque id, quod nos unde principium motus dicimus. He adds, I. That, when the Inſufficiency of the Elements came to be known, the Force of Truth obliged the Philoſophers to look for another Mover. II. That it is not probable, that Fire and Earth, &c. are the Cauſes of the beautiful State of certain Beings, and of the Generation of others; nor that thoſe ancient Philoſophers believed it. III. That it would be unreaſonable to attribute ſo grand an Effect to Chance and Fortune. Οὐδ' αὐτῷ αὐτομάτῳ καὶ τύχῃ τοσοῦτον ἐπιῤῥέψαι πρᾶγμα καλῶς ἔχει· Nec rurſus Caſui & Fortunæ tantam attribuere rem probè ſe habet (60). IV. That, for this Reaſon, Anaxagoras, who ſaid that there is a Spirit in Nature, as well as in Animals, which is the Author of the World, and of Order, ſeemed to be a Perſon of good Senſe, in compariſon of the Philoſophers his Predeceſſors, who were great Talkers about nothing. There is more Force in the Original, than in the Idea which I give of it. Thoſe, who are able to underſtand the Greek, which I am going to produce, will find my Confeſſion ſincere. Νοῦν δέ τις εἰπὼν εἶναι, καθάπερ ἐν τοῖς ζώοις καὶ ἐν τῇ φύσει τὸν αἴτιον καὶ τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ τῆς τάξεως πάσης, δοκεῖ νήφων ἐφάνη παρ' εἰκῆ λέγοντας τοὺς πρότερον. φανερῶς μὲν οὖν Ἀναξαγόραν ἴσμεν ἁψάμενον τούτων τῶν λόγων (61). Wherefore he, who ſaid, that an Intelligence, in Nature, as well as in Animals, produced the World, and the Order of Things, appeared a ſober Reaſoner, in compariſon of the vain Diſcourſes of the more ancient Philoſophers. We know, that Anaxagoras was the Perſon, who openly taught this Doctrine. If theſe Teſtimonies are expreſs, That of Plutarch is, perhaps, ſtill more ſo. Let us produce the Words of That Author. Ὃν (Ἀναξαγόραν) οἱ τοτ' ἄνθρωποι νῦν προσηγόρευον, εἴτε τὴν σύνεσιν αὐτοῦ μεγάλην εἰς φυσιολογίαν καὶ περιττὴν διαρανεῖσαν θαυμάσαντες, εἴθ' ὅτι τοῖς ὅλοις πρῶτος ὑ τύχην ὐδ' ἀνάγκην, διακοσμήσεως ἀρχὴν, ἀλλὰ νοῦν ἐπέστησεν καθαρὸν καὶ ἄκρατον, ἐμμεμιγμένοις πᾶσι τοῖς ἄλλοις, ἀποκρίνοντα τὰς ὁμοιομερείας (62). Who (Anaxagoras) was by his Cotemporaries ſtiled The Mind, either becauſe they admired his ſingular and excellent Penetration in Natural Philoſophy; or, becauſe he was the firſt, who did not aſcribe the Formation of the Univerſe to Chance or Fate, but to a ſimple and uncompounded Intelligence, which ſeparated the ſimilar Particles of Matter from all others, with which they were confuſed. This Paſſage is quoted by ſome Authors, as if it ought to be read ἐμμεμιγμένον, inſtead of ἐμμεμιγμένοις; but I chooſe to reject both theſe readings, and ſubſtitute ἐμμεμιγμένας. So the Author of the Latin Tranſlation ſuppoſes it ought to be read, Quem (Anaxagoram) illius temporis æquales Mentem appellavere, vel quod perſpicaciam ejus ſingularem excellentemque in Natura perſcrutanda admirarentur; vel quod univerſitatis, non Fortunam neque Fatum ordinatæ deſcriptionis Principium, ſed mentem princeps puram ac ſinceram præfecerit, cum omnibus aliis confuſas ſecernentem particulas ſimiles. Though Voſſius quotes this Paſſage in Greek, with the Word ἐμμεμιγμένον, yet he renders it as if it was ἐμμεμιγμένοις: This is his Tranſlation (63); Non fortunam neque fatum ordinatæ deſcriptionis principium, ſed mentem puram ac ſinceram præfecerit, ab aliis omnibus ADMIXTIS ſimiles particulas ſecernentem. Within a few Pages after, he makes uſe of the ſame Paſſage, to prove, that Anaxagoras taught, that God is entirely blended with Matter. Quare ex ejus ſententia opifex mundi Deus eſt, ut ex Plutarcho antea monitum, νοῦς καθαρὸς καὶ ἀκρατος ἐμμεμιγμένος πᾶσι, Mens pura ac ſincera omnibus permixta (64). I do not believe, that Plutarch intended any Mixture of the Divine Nature with the parts of Matter; this would be inconſiſtent with the Epithets καθαρὸς & ἀκρατος, which he had juſt before made uſe of, and by which he clearly ſhews, that Anaxagoras believed, that God is a pure and unmixed Spirit, diſtinct and ſeparate from Matter. His meaning, in my Opinion, is, that this Immaterial Spirit ſeparated the Homœomeriæ, or ſimilar Parts, which lay confuſed with all other Bodies. Thus we ſee how difficult it is for the moſt learned Men, ſuch as Voſſius was, to write much, and to be always upon their Guard: Their Attention frequently fails them, and they forget, in one Place, what they have ſaid in another: Nay, ſometimes what they ſay in the beginning of a Period does not perfectly agree with the Concluſion of it.

(62) Plut. in Pericle, pag. 154. B.

(63) Voſſius de Origine & Progreſſu Idololatriæ, lib. 1. c. 1. pag. 5.

(64) Id. ib. cap. 2. p. 12.

I have farther Reaſon to believe, that Plutarch meant what I attribute to him; for, beſides what I ſhall alledge out of Tertullian (65), I find in Ariſtotle, that Anaxagoras ſaid, that the Spirit, which had put Matter into Motion, was free from all Mixture. Πλὴν ἀρχήν γε τὸν νοῦν τίθεται μάλιστα πάντων. μόνον γοῦν φησὶν αὐτὸν τῶν ὄντων ἁπλοῦν εἶναι, καὶ ἀμιγῆ τε καὶ καθαρόν. ἀποδίδωσι δ' ἀμφω τῇ αὐτῇ ἀρχῇ, τό, τε γινώσκειν καὶ τὸ κινεῖν, λέγων νοῦν κινῆσαι τὸ πᾶν (66). He lays down an Intelligent Mind as the Principle of all Things; and ſays, that That alone, of all Things, is ſimple and unmixed, pure and uncompounded. And to this Principle he aſcribes two Properties, to wit, Knowledge and Motion; ſaying that the Mind put the Univerſe into Motion. This is more clearly expreſſed in the following Words. Φησὶ (Ἀναξαγόρας) δ' εἶναι μεμιγμένα πάντα, πλὴν τὸν νοῦν· τοῦτον δὲ ἀμιγῆ μόνον καὶ καθαρόν (67). Anaxagoras taught, that all things were compounded, except the Mind, but that This was unmixed and pure. The next is the Teſtimony of Plutarch; from which it manifeſtly appears, That Anaxagoras aſcribed to God the firſt Production of Motion and Order. Ὁ δὲ Ἀναξαγόρας φησὶν ὡς εἰσήκει καθ' ἀρχὰς τὰ σώματα, νοῦς δὲ αὐτὰ διεκόσμησε θεῖος, καὶ τὰς γενέσεις τῶν ὅλων ἐποίησεν. ὁ δὲ Πλάτων ἔχ ἑστηκότα ὑπέθετο τὰ πρῶτα σώματα, ἀτάκτως δὲ κινούμενα. διὸ καὶ θεὸς (φησὶν) ἐκισήσας ὡς τάξις ἀταξίας ἐστὶ βελτίων, διεκόσμησε ταῦ-

(65) In Remark [E].

(66) Ariſtot. de Anima, lib. 1. cap. 2. pag. 406. D. See alſo the 4th Chapter of the 3d Book p. 503. G. wherein we find, that Anaxagoras ſaid, that the Intelligence muſt be free from all Mixture, in order to be Maſter. Ἀμιγῆ εἶναι ἵνα κράτῃ τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶν ἵνα γνωρίσῃ. Non miſtum eſſe, ut ſuperet atque vincat, id eſt ut cognoſcat.

(67) Ariſtot. Metaphyſ. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(60) Id. ib. pag. 646. C.

(61) Id. ib.

(58) They are to be found likewiſe in Plutarch, de Placitis Philoſophor. lib. 1. c. 3. pag. 876. D.

(59) Ariſtot. Metaphyſ. lib. 1. cap. 3. pag. 645. H.

Digitized by Google

Reaſon, why this great Philoſopher was ſirnamed Νοῦς, that is to ſay, The Mind, of Underſtanding (u). But his Orthodoxy was not ſufficiently refin'd [E]; there remained ſtill τα (68). Anaxagoras taught, that, in the beginning, Matter was without Motion, and that the Mind of God put it in order, and gave riſe to every thing. Plato laid it down, that the firſt Bodies were not motionleſs, but that they moved irregularly. But God, ſays he, perceiving that Order was preferable to Confuſion, adjuſted them. You ſee here a remarkable Difference between Anaxagoras and Plato. The firſt ſuppoſes, that God found Matter at Reſt. The ſecond, on the contrary, that God found it in Motion. I am amazed at the Reflexion, which Plutarch makes upon theſe two Doctrines; it not only contains an horrible Impiety, but likewiſe a very groſs Contradiction. He had blamed the Philoſophers, who acknowledged but one Principle. He had ſaid (69), that "it is impoſſible, that Matter ſhould be the "ſole Principle of all things, and that an efficient "Cauſe muſt be added to it; for Silver alone is not "ſufficient to produce a Veſſel, unleſs there be a "Workman to make the Veſſel. The ſame may be "ſaid of Braſs, Wood, and of all other Materials." In the ſame Page he had commended Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which had united the ſimilar Particles; Τὰς μὲν ὁμοιομερείας ὕλην, τὸ δὲ ποιῶν αἴτιον τὸν νῦν τὰ πάντα διαταξάμενον (70). Homœomerias ſtatuit materiam, cauſam vero efficientem mentem quæ diſponeret univerſa; that is, for adding the efficient Cauſe to the paſſive Subject, and the Artificer to the Materials. Ἀποδεκτέος ἔτος ἐστὶν ὅτι τῇ ὕλῃ τὸν τεχνίτην παρεσύζευξεν (71). Hic Approbandus eſt, quod materiæ Artificem adjunxerit. What does he mean then, when, five Pages after, he cenſures Anaxagoras and Plato; the firſt for having attributed to God the Motion and Diſpoſition of Bodies, and the latter for having attributed to Him the ranging of them? Their common Error, ſays he, is in thinking, that God takes care of human Things, and that he has framed a World to that end. Κοινῶς ἓν ἁμαρτάνουσιν ἀμφότεροι, ὅτι τὸν θεὸν ἐποίησαν ἐπισρεφόμενον τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων, ἢ καὶ τύτε χάειν τὸν κόσμον κατασκευάζοντα (72). Communis ambobus hic eſt error, quod deum faciunt res humanas curantem, ac ea de cauſa mundum adornantem. After which, he lays down the moſt ſpecious Reaſons, which an Atheiſt can alledge, againſt thoſe, who attribute to God the Creation and Government of the World. How then? Does he approve of Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which was the firſt Mover of Matter, and the efficient Cauſe of the World; and does he blame him for taking this firſt Mover to be God? Can any one reaſon in a more pitiful and incoherent manner than he does? And, ſhould we ſuppoſe, that there is no Contradiction in this, muſt we not confeſs at leaſt, that he has confuted, in this Place, a great many other Paſſages in his Books, in which he ſuppoſes a Providence?

(u) See Remark [C] n. 2.

I ſhould be tedious, were I to ſet down all the Teſtimonies, which prove one or both of theſe Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneities. II. That he was the firſt Philoſopher, who advanced This Syſtem. Let it ſuffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Tertullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Euſebius (76), Themiſtius (77), St Auſtin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I ſhall not do the ſame with reſpect to Cicero; but I ſhall produce his Words; becauſe they furniſh a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, ſays "he (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene diſciplinam, "PRIMUS omnium rerum deſcriptionem & mo- "dum mentis infinitæ vi ac ratione deſignari ac "confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum "ſenſui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum "eſſe poſſe, neque ſenſum omnino, quo non ipſa na- "tura pulſa ſentiret. Deinde ſi mentem iſtam qua- "ſi animal aliquod eſſe voluit, erit aliquid interius "ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem in- "terius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. "Quod quoniam non placet, aperta ſimplexque mens "nulla re adjunctâ quæ ſentire poſſit, fugere intelli- "gentiæ noſtræ vim & notionem videtur. —— "Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet "of Anaximenes, was the FIRST, who held, that "the Diſpoſition and Order of all Things was planned "and effected by the Power and Underſtanding of an "infinite Mind. In which he is not aware, firſt, "that there can be no Motion joined with Senſe in "what is infinite, nor any Senſe at all, which can- "not affect it's Nature. In the next place, if he "would have this Mind to be a kind of Animal, there "will be ſomething more internal, from whence to de- "nominate this Animal. But what is there more in- "ternal than a Mind? It is therefore ſurrounded with "an external Body. Though you will not allow this, I "am of Opinion, that an unbodied, ſimple, Mind, unaſſi- "ſted by any thing, which may have Senſe, is beyond the "Force and Comprehenſion of our Underſtanding." It is ſomewhat ſurprizing, that Cicero ſhould ſay, that Anaxagoras was the firſt Philoſopher, who acknowledged ſuch a Doctrine, ſince he had before told us, that Thales (83) had acknowledged a Mind, or a God, who had formed all things out of Water. "Thales Mileſius, qui "primus de talibus rebus quæſivit, aquam dixit eſſe "initium rerum: deum autem, eam mentem, quæ "ex aqua cuncta fingeret (84). How could Cicero ſo ſoon forget his own Words? Can it be imagined, that he meant, that Thales only aſcribed to God the Power of converting Water into other Bodies; but that Anaxagoras made God the Author of the Order and noble Symmetry of the Parts of the World? This does not ſeem to me to be probable, and I ſhould rather ſuſpect that this Paſſage is corrupted. The Confuſion and Obſcurity, which is to be found in the following Words, may confirm this Conjecture. However it be, I would not have this Teſtimony of Cicero be oppoſed to thoſe of ſo many ancient and celebrated Writers, who unanimouſly affirm, that Anaxagoras was the firſt, who ſuperadded the efficient Cauſe to the material, that is to ſay, who acknowledged an Intelligence to be the Author of the Oeconomy, or Architecture, of the Univerſe. St Auſtin paid ſo little regard to this Teſtimony of Cicero, that, in the very Place, where he mentions the Opinion of the Philoſophers of the Ionian Sect, agreeably to that of Cicero in other Reſpects, he expreſsly contradicts him as to what concerns Thales. "Iſte autem Thales, ----- rerum naturam ſcru- "tatus, ſuaſque diſputationes literis mandans, eminuit "-----aquam ------ putavit rerum eſſe princi- "pium, & hinc omnia elementa mundi ipſumque "mundum, & quæ in eo gignuntur, exiſtere. NI- "HIL autem huic operi, quod, mundo conſiderato, "tam admirabile aſpicimus, EX DIVINA MEN- "TE præpoſuit (85). —— This Thales, examining "into the Nature of Things, and committing his Diſ- "putations to Writing, taught that Water was the "Principle of all Things; and that to This the ſeve- "ral Elements of the World, the World itſelf, and "all things in it, owed their Exiſtence. He ſuppoſed "NO DIVINE MIND to preſide over the won- "derful Works of the Creation." Obſerve, that Cicero himſelf, in another Book, denies, that Thales was the firſt, who taught the Doctrine we are ſpeaking of, and that he aſcribes it ſolely and abſolutely to the Philoſopher Anaxagoras. I ſhall ſet down his Words in the Remark [F].

The Jeſuit Leſcalopier (86) endeavours to reconcile this Contradiction, by ſuppoſing, that Anaxagoras was the firſt, who publiſhed this Doctrine; the Philoſophers, who lived before him, having only taught it in their Auditories. This is no very good Solution; for, ſince the Doctrines of the Predeceſſors of Anaxagoras were known, and wherein they differed from each other; I ſay, ſince this was known, tho' Anaxagoras was the firſt, who publiſhed Books, it might as well have been known what they taught concerning the efficient Cauſe of the World. As to the Objections againſt the Doctrine of this Philoſopher, contained in the above-cited Paſſage of Cicero, I refer you to St Auſtin, who confutes them ſolidly (87).

[E] His Orthodoxy was not ſufficiently refin'd.] Tertullian blames him for being inconſiſtent with himſelf; for, on the one hand, he ſaid, that God was a pure and ſimple Intelligence, and, on the other, he mixed and confounded him with the Soul. "Quam "Anaxagoræ turbata ſententia eſt! initium enim om- "nium commentatus animum, univerſitatis oſcillum "de

(68) Plutarch. de Placit. Philoſoph. l. 1. cap. 7. pag. 881. A.

(69) Id. ib. cap. 3. pag. 876.

(70) Id. ib.

(71) Id. ib.

(72) Id. ib. cap. 7. pag. 881. A.

(73) Plato, in Phædone, pag. 72.

(74) Tertull. de Anim.

(75) Clem. Alexandr. Stromat. l. 2. pag. 364.

(76) Euſeb. de Præpar. Evang. l. 14. cap. 14. pag. 750.

(77) Themiſt. Orat. 25.

(78) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei lib. 8. c. 2.

(79) I ſet down his Words at the end of Remark [F].

(80) Proclus in Timæum Platonis.

(81) Simplic. in Ariſtotel. de Phyſ. auſcult.

(82) Cicero, de Nat. Deorum, lib. 1. cap. 10, 11.

(83) He was the 4th Predeceſſor of Anaxagoras.

(84) Id. ib. pag. 36.

(85) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2. pag. 711.

(86) Leſcalop. in Cicer. de Nat. Deor. p. 40.

(87) See the 56th Letter of St Auſtin, pag. 2, 3, & ſeq.

Digitized by Google

still many Imperfections in it; which is less to be wondered at, than to find, that the Philosophers, who lived before him, were ignorant of the great Truth, which he discovered; a Truth so very plain, and so often sung by the Poets [F]. It will be proper

" de illius axe suspendens, purumque eum adfirmans, " & simplicem & incommiscibilem, hoc vel maxime " titulo segregat ab animæ commissione, & tamen " eundem alibi animæ addicit (88)." Aristotle had made this Remark before Tertullian. Ἀναξαγόρας δὲ ἧττον διασαφεῖ περὶ αὐτῶν. πολλαχῆ μὲν γὰρ τὸ αἴτιον τῶ καλῶς καὶ ὀρθῶς τὸν νῦν λέγει· ἑτέρωθι δὲ, τὸν νῦν εἶναι τὸν αὐτὸν τῇ ψυχῇ. ἐν ἅπασι γὰρ ὑπάρχειν αὐτὸν τοῖς ζώοις, καὶ μεγάλοις, καὶ μικροῖς, καὶ τιμίοις καὶ ἀτιμοτέροις. ὃ φαίνεται δὲ ὅ γε καλῶ φρονησιν λεγόμενον νῦς, πᾶσιν ὁμοίως ὑπάρχειν τοῖς ζώοις, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις πᾶσιν (89). But Anaxagoras is less explicit in this Matter; for, in many Places, he ascribes the Origin of Good and Right to a Mind; but, in other Places, he asserts the Soul itself to be a Mind; for he tells us, that there is a Mind in all Animals, both great and small, excellent and less excellent. But This Mind and Understanding, to which he ascribes Prudence, does not seem to be contained in all Animals alike, nor even in all Men. This Passage of Aristotle informs us, that Anaxagoras admitted of a Soul in Brutes, to which he gave the same Name of a Mind or Intelligence, which he had given to the first Mover of Matter, and the Director of the Fabric of the World. The same Aristotle observes, that " Anaxagoras ad- " mitted an Intelligence for the Production of Things, " only as a Θέος ἀπὸ μηχάνης; that is, he never " had recourse to it, but in Cases of necessity, " and when all other Reasons failed him." Ἀναξαγόρας τε γὰρ μηχανῇ χρῆται τῷ νῷ πρὸς τὴν κοσμοποιΐαν, καὶ ὅταν ἀπορήσῃ διὰ τίν' αἰτίαν ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἐστὶ τότε ἕλκει αὐτὸν. ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἄλλοις πάντα μᾶλλον αἰτιᾶται τῶν γινομένων ἢ νῦν (90). Nam & Anaxagoras tanquam machina utitur Intellectu ad mundi generationem. Et cum dubitat propter quam causam necessario est, tunc eum attrahit. In cæteris vero, magis cætera omnia, quam intellectum, causam eorum, quæ fiunt, ponit. This is, without doubt, the Foundation of an Observation, made by Clemens Alexandrinus, that Anaxagoras has not supported the Rights and Dignity of the Efficient Cause, whose Functions he attributed to a Mind; for he mentioned several Revolutions, which were made without the Knowledge or Co-operation of This Spirit. This, if I am not mistaken, is the true Sense of the Greek Words of that Father of the Church. Ἀναξαγόρας φρῶτῳ, say he, ἐπέστησε τὸν νῦν τοῖς πράγμασιν· ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἕτῳ ἐπήρκεσε τὴν ἀξίαν τὴν ποιητικὴν, δίνους τινας ἀνοήτους ἀναζωγράφων, σὺν τῇ τῦ νῦ ἀπραξίᾳ τε καὶ ἀνοίᾳ (91). Primus Anaxagoras mentem rebus adhibuit. Sed nec ille dignitatem servavit efficientem, nescio quas amentes describens revolutiones cum mentis ab agendo cessatione & amentia. Without doubt Eusebius copied this Passage, when, giving it another turn, he said, that Anaxagoras did not preserve safe and sound his Doctrine, which teaches, that all things were produced by an Intelligence. Λέγεται δὲ μηδὲ ἕτῳ σῶον φυλάξαι τὸ δόγμα. ἐπισήσαι μὲν γὰρ τὸν Νῦν τοῖς πᾶσι, ὑκότι δὲ καλῶ νῦν καὶ λογισμὸν τὴν περὶ τῶν ὅλων ἀποδῶναι τὴν φυσιολογίαν (92). But even he himself did not preserve his own Doctrine safe and sound. For he ascribed a Mind to All Things, in such a Manner, as to dispute concerning the Nature of Things inconsistently with the Rule of a Mind and Reason. Which he proves by this Argument, that Anaxagorus philosophized upon Nature, and explained it's Phænomena, without supposing such an Intelligence. I know it may be said, that Eusebius does not mean so; and that he only declares, that Anaxagoras assigned physical Reasons, which were contrary to good Sense. But three things convince me, that my Interpretation of Clemens Alexandrinus's and Eusebius's Words, is truer than This. In the first Place, it is no good Proof, that a Philosopher deserts or weakens the Hypothesis of a Providence, and of the universal Activity of God, to say, that he argues sometimes impertinently, foolishly, or irregularly. All the Sects of Philosophy among the Christians reproach each other after the same manner; and yet they do not accuse each other of Heterodoxy, with respect to the universal Interposition of God, the first Cause of all Beings. Therefore, if no other Complaint could be brought against Anaxagoras, but that, in explaining several Effects of Nature, he reasoned ill, and without Sense; it would have been unjust to reproach him with abandoning or spoiling the Hypothesis, in which he admitted of an Intelligence, which presided over the Production of the World. This Reproach therefore must have been grounded, not upon the impertinent Explications, which he gave, but upon what he advanced to the Prejudice and Exclusion of that Intelligence. In the second place, Eusebius alledges, as his Authority, a long Passage of Plato, which contains a Complaint, that Anaxagoras explained Things, without having Recourse to an Intelligence, or to the Causes of the Beauty and Order of the Universe; but that he stopped at the Air, the Æther, the Water, &c. as the Causes of Beings (93). Who does not perceive from hence, that 'tis very probable Eusebius meant the same Defect? In the third place, I observe, that Anaxagoras, as Plutarch informs us, taught, that certain things come to pass by Necessity, others by Destiny, others by Deliberation, others by Fortune, and others by Chance. Ἃ μὲν γὰρ εἶναι καθ' ἀνάγκην, ἃ δὲ καθ' εἱμαρμένην, ἃ δὲ καθὰ προαίρεσιν, ἃ δὲ καθὰ τύχην, ἃ δὲ καθὰ τὸ αὐτόματον (94). Fieri enim alia necessario, alia fato, alia instituto animi, alia forte fortuna, alia casu. There is no question, but that, in the detail of these inexplicable Distinctions, he robbed the Divine Intelligence of several Events; and that this was the Reason of the Complaint of Clemens Alexandrinus, copied by Eusebius.

I know not whether what Anaxagoras said of our Hands ought to be placed among his Errors. He asserted, that they have been the Cause of the Wisdom and Industry of Man. Plutarch takes him to task for this. " The contrary is true, says he (95), for " Man is not the wisest of Animals because he has " Hands; but, because he is naturally rational and " ingenious, he has obtained such Tools from Na- " ture." The Books of Anaxagoras are not extant; and therefore it cannot be decided, whether he gave occasion for this Censure; but I am apt to think he did not deserve it. His System engaged him to think quite otherwise in this Matter, than those Philosophers did, who attributed to Chance all the Beings, of which the World is composed. This impious Tenet induced them to maintain, that Organs were not given to Man for his Use, but that, finding them fit for certain Purposes, he employed them to such Uses. See the fourth Book of Lucretius (96).

Observe these Words of a Father of the Church: " Anaxagoras autem, qui & ATHEUS cognominatus " est, dogmatizavit facta animalia decidentibus è cœlo " in terram seminibus, quod & hi ipsi in matris suæ " transtulerunt semina, & esse hoc semen seipsos sa- " tim confitentes apud eos qui sensum habent, & ip- " sos esse quæ sunt Anaxagoræ IRRELIGIOSI se- " mina (97). But Anaxagoras, firnamed the ATHEIST, " taught, that Animals were formed of Seeds, which " fell from Heaven; which these Persons have trans- " ferred to the Seeds of their Mother, readily ac- " knowledging to Men of Sense, that this Seed is " Themselves, and that Themselves are IMPIOUS " Anaxagoras's Seeds." You see here, that Anaxagoras was firnamed the ATHEIST; and that St Irenæus treats him as an IMPIOUS Man. Vossius does not complain of this; he only says, That Justin Martyr, in his Exhortation to the Greeks, calls this Philosopher an Atheist; and he makes some Reflexions upon it (98). I meet with nothing like it in this Work of Justin Martyr; and I think Vossius had better have reserved his Excuses for St Irænеus. If Justin Martyr stands in need of them, it is only for having misrepresented the Doctrine of Anaxagoras. He suppresses the beautiful Part of it; and says nothing of the Intelligence, the first Mover, but only speaks of his Homœomeriæ (99).

[F] The Philosophers, who lived before him, were ignorant of the great Truth - - - - - so often sung by the Poets.] We might bring a Cloud of Witnesses in proof of this Fact, that Anaxagoras is the first Philosopher, who

(88) Tertull. de Anima.

(89) Aristot. de Anima, lib. 1. c. 2. pag. 478. G.

(90) Id. Metaphys. lib. 1. cap. 4. pag. 646. H.

(91) Clem. Alexandrin. Stromat. lib. 2. pag. 364.

(92) Euseb. Præpar. Evang. lib. 14. c. 14. p. 730.

(93) See Remark [R].

(94) Plut. de Placit. Philos. ph. l. 1. cap. ult. p. 884. See also the Passage quoted by Menage in Diog. Laert. lib. 2. n. 6. and taken from a Book falsly ascribed to Galen 'Tis the Φιλοσόφου ἱστορία.

(95) Plut. de Amicitia fraterna init. pag. 478.

(96) Lucret. lib. 4 ver. 821. & seq.

(97) Irenæus lib. 2. adv. Hæres. c. 13.

(98) Vossius de Orig. & Progr. idolol. lib. 1. cap. 1. pag. 5.

(99) Just. Martyr. Orat. ad Græcos, pag. 4.

Digitized by Google

per to examine, whether the Doctrine of the Homœomeriæ does not imply many Contradictions who aſcribed the Arrangement of Matter to the Wiſdom of a firſt Mover (100). Thales, Anaximander, and Anaximenes, who preceeded him in the School of Ionia, endeavoured to explain every thing without it. " Princeps Thales, unus è ſeptem, cui ſex reli-

" quos conceſſiſſe primas ferunt, ex aqua dixit con-
" ſtare omnia. At hoc Anaximandro populari &
" ſodali ſuo non perſuaſit. Is enim infinitatem na-
" turæ dixit eſſe è qua omnia gignerentur. Poſt ejus
" auditor Anaximenes infinitum aëra, ſed ea quæ ex
" eo orirentur definita: gigni autem terram, aquam,
" & ignem, tum ex his omnia. Anaxagoras mate-
" riam infinitam, ſed ex ea particulas ſimiles inter
" ſe minutas, eas primum confuſas, poſtea in ordi-
" nem adductas mente divina (101). —— Thales,
" one of the ſeven, whom they ſay the remaining ſix
" acknowledged as their Maſter, was the firſt, who " taught, that all Things were formed of Water. But " he could not convince his Countryman and Compa-
" nion Anaximander of this. For the latter held, that
" all things ſprung from an infinite Nature. After " him, his Scholar Anaximenes taught, that Air was
" infinite, but that thoſe things, which were produced
" from it, were finite; that Earth, Air, and Fire,
" were firſt produced; then all things out of theſe;
" Anaxagoras held the Infinity of Matter; but that
" it's minute ſimilar Parts, which were at firſt con-
" fuſed and blended together, were afterwards reduced
" into Order by a divine Mind." Who can forbear wondering, that ſuch great Men ſhould be guilty of ſuch groſs Ignorance? This Reflexion has not been neglected by the Jeſuit Pererius. " Ferunt primos
" Philoſophorum, ſays he (102), Pherecydem Syrum
" & Anaxagoram, illum quidem, immortalitatem
" animi noſtri, hunc autem, Deum, quem ipſe Men-
" tem vel Intellectum vocabat, eſſe mundi cunctarum-
" que rerum opificem, Græcos docuiſſe: ut permi-
" rum ſit, priores Philoſophos, qui hæc ignorarunt,
" ſapientum nomen, & honorem habuiſſe; & duas has
" res, quarum cognitio cunctis mortalibus optatiſſima
" eſt, & ad bene pieque vivendum maxime neceſſaria,
" tam ſerò ad Græcorum notitiam perveniſſe. ——
" The Chief of the Philoſophers, Pherecydes and A-
" naxagoras, are ſaid to have taught the Greeks,
" the one, that our Souls are immortal; the other,
" that God, whom he calls the Mind or Intelligence,
" created the World, and all things in it; whence
" it is very ſtrange, that the preceeding Philoſo-
" phers, who were ignorant of theſe things, were
" honoured with the Name of wiſe Men; and that
" theſe two Principles, the Knowledge of which is ſo
" highly beneficial to all Mankind, and ſo neceſſary
" to a good and pious Life, ſhould ſo late come to the " Knowledge of the Greeks." Father Thomaſſin has a remarkable Sentiment upon this Occaſion. " All
" the Poets, ſays he (103), who were the moſt ancient
" Philoſophers, and all the Sages of the fabulous
" Times, as they are called, not having mentioned,
" or celebrated, in their Writings, any other Cauſe,
" than the firſt and ſupreme Deity; how came it
" to paſs, that, preſently after, Thales, and his im" mediate Succeſſors, were ignorant of, or paſſed
" over in Silence, that which had employed all the " Sages, and every Age 'till then? It is therefore " probable, that theſe firſt Ionian Philoſophers, pre-
" ſuppoſing what was inconteſtable, and 'till then
" unconteſted, concerning the firſt efficient Cauſe of " all Things, treated only of ſecond Cauſes, which " were 'till then unknown, and had not been ſo much
" as enquired after. They were afraid, that, if they
" ſhould refer all particular Effects to God, Men
" would fall again into the old Cuſtom of neglecting
" to enquire into ſecond Cauſes, and reſting con-
" tented with the firſt. The ſame may be ſaid of " Angels. Homer, and the other ancient Poets or
" Philoſophers, made them the ſole Authors of all " Things, under God. The Diſciples of Thales, to " eſtabliſh the Power of corporeal or immediate
" Cauſes, omitted the mention of Angels. - - - - - -
" But, at laſt, Anaxagoras judged, that, in his time,
" the World was able to apprehend the Subordi-
" nation of corporeal Cauſes to angelical Subſtances,
" and of both to the Wiſdom and Power of God.
" - - - - - - It was purely on a Suppoſition of the " Truth of theſe Parts of Philoſophy, in which the " World had been ſufficiently inſtructed, that Thales
" and his Diſciples made no mention of Ethics, or " Metaphyſics; and with a View of engaging Mens
" Attention wholly in cultivating that Branch, which " 'till then was unknown. But, when it was per" ceived, that the Knowledge of ſecond Cauſes was " very uncertain, and that it was to be feared it would " make Men forget the Knowledge of God, of An" gels, and Morality, which was more conſtant, uſe-
" ful, and neceſſary, Anaxagoras, Socrates, and Plato,
" reſtored Theology and Morality to their ancient
" Luſtre and Credit."

This is a fine Sentiment; an ingenious Notion: But perhaps it has more of Brilliant than Solid; for we ſee, that Anaximenes, the Maſter of Anaxagoras, did not treat of Philoſophy, as one, who ſuppoſed, that the Exiſtence of God, in quality of the firſt Cauſe, was ſo well known, that there was no occaſion to mention it. He ſpoke of the Gods; but he was ſo far from conſidering them as Principles, that he maintained, that they themſelves owed their Exiſtence to the Principle, which he eſtabliſhed. " Qui " (Anaximenes) omnes rerum cauſas infinito aëri de-
" dit: nec deos negavit aut tacuit: non tamen ab
" ipſis aërem factum, ſed ipſos ex aëre ortos cre-
" didit (104). —— Who (Anaximenes) aſcribed the
" Cauſes of all Things to the infinite Air; nor did
" he deny the Gods, or was ſilent concerning them:
" yet he did not believe, that the Air was created
" by them, but that They were formed of the Air." Cicero attributes a like Opinion to Anaximander, Maſter of Anaximenes. " Anaximandri opinio eſt
" nativos eſſe deos, longis intervallis orientes, occi-
" denteſque, eoſque innumerabiles eſſe mundos. ——
" Anaximander was of Opinion, that the Gods were
" born and died; that they roſe and ſet at very di-
" ſtant Intervals; and that they were innumerable
" Worlds." Note, that the two Diſciples of Anaximenes (105) corrected the Hypotheſis of their Maſter; either by admitting an Intelligence diſtinct from Matter, and the Cauſe of the World; or by ſuppoſing, that the Air, the Principle of all Things, was a Principle, only as it was endowed with a Divine Spirit. The firſt of theſe two Suppoſitions is That of Anaxagoras; the other That of Diogenes Apollonius. " Diogenes quoque, Anaximenis alter auditor,
" aërem quidem dixit rerum eſſe materiam de qua
" omnia fierent, ſed eum eſſe compotem divinæ ra-
" tionis, ſine qua nihil ex eo fieri poſſet. (106). ——
" Diogenes likewiſe, the other Diſciple of Anaxi-
" menes, held, indeed, that the Air was the Prin-
" ciple of all Things; but that it was endowed with
" a divine Mind; without which it was incapable of
" producing any thing" All this contradicts Father Thomaſſin. The Queſtion is not concerning the Philoſophers, who only paſſed over in ſilence the Doctrine of the Exiſtence of God; the Queſtion relates to thoſe, who ſpoke of it; but in a manner quite contrary to That of the Poets, and of Anaxagoras. I add, that their Silence is a ſtrong Proof; for, in thoſe Times, the Philoſophers went back as far as the Chaos, and the firſt Origin of all Things (107).

Namque canebat, uti magnum per inane coacta
Semina terrarumque, animæque, mariſque, fuiſſent,
Et liquidi ſimul ignis; ut his exordia primis
Omnia, & ipſe tener mundi concreverit orbis *.

He ſung the ſecret Seeds of Nature's Frame;
How Seas, and Earth, and Air, and active Flame
Fell thro' the mighty Void, and in their Fall
Were blindly gather'd in this goodly Ball.

DRYDEN.

It was therefore neceſſary that they ſhould explain themſelves about the Nature of God, and exhauſt the whole Doctrine of firſt Principles; after which they might be permitted to account for the particular and conſtant Effects of Nature, without going back to the firſt Cauſe. At preſent the Philoſophers conſider only ſecond Cauſes, Matter, and Form, &c. But it is not, becauſe they ſuppoſe, that the Knowledge of God, as the firſt Cauſe, is ſufficiently eſtabliſhed. It is, becauſe they treat of it at large, in a part of their Courſes of Philoſophy, diſtinct from Phyſics

(100) See the Remark [D].

(101) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. lib. 4. cap. 37.

(102) Pererius, de communibus omnium rerum naturalium principiis, lib. 4. cap. 4. pag. 206.

(103) Thomaſſin's Method of ſtudying and teaching Philoſophy, Book 1. cap. 14. pag. 162, 163. See alſo pag. 165.

(104) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2. See alſo Cicero, lib. 1. de Nat. Deorum, pag. 38. where he ſays, Anaximenes aëra Deum ſtatuit, eumque gigni.

(105) Viz. Anaxagoras, & Diogenes Apolloniates.

(106) Auguſt. ubi ſupra. See alſo Cicero, ubi ſupra. where he ſays, Quid aër, quo Diogenes Apolloniates utitur Deo?

(107) See Cicero Tuſcul. 5. circa init.

* Virgil. Ecl. 6. verſ. 31.

Digitized by Google

Contradictions [G]. It ſeems to me to be full of them; and, in general, the Ideas of Phyſics (108). However, we may be ſure, that theſe ancient Philoſophers were not ignorant of what the Poets had ſaid of God. Why then did they not imitate them? Was it, becauſe they laid no great ſtreſs on Poems, in which they found ſo many Trifles, and ſo many popular Opinions, which were not proof againſt a philoſophical Enquiry (109)? Ariſtotle inſinuates this Reaſon (110). Did they judge of the Poets, as Socrates did, when he ſaid, that they reſembled Fanatics, and that, like them, they underſtood not what they advanced? Ἔσικεν ὄν αὖ καὶ περὶ τῶν ποιητῶν ἐν ὀλίγῳ τοῦτο, ὅτι οὐ σοφίᾳ ποιοῖεν, ἀλλὰ φύσει τινὶ, καὶ ἐνθουσιάζοντες, ὥσπερ οἱ θεομάντεις καὶ οἱ χρησμῳδοί. καὶ γὰρ οὗτοι λέγουσι μὲν πολλὰ καὶ καλὰ, ἴσασι δὲ οὐδὲν ὧν λέγουσι. τοιοῦτόν τί μοι ἐφάνησαν πάσχειν καὶ οἱ ποιηταὶ πεπονθότες (111). I ſoon diſcovered this in the Poets; namely that they were not directed by Wiſdom, but by a kind of natural Enthuſiaſm; not unlike thoſe, who propheſy by Inſpiration. For theſe indeed utter many excellent Things; but underſtand nothing of what they ſay. After the ſame manner the Poets appear to me to be affected. It is certain, that the moſt Orthodox Poets have greatly erred concerning the Nature of God; for Orpheus, who ſung, that God made Heaven, calls him only the Firſtborn of all Creatures, and ſays, that the Air was his Father, Πρωτόγονος Φαέθων πατρὶ μήκεος ἠέρος υἱός (112).

Primo-genitus Phaëton, Alti Aëris filius.

Diogenes Laërtius pretends, that Anaxagoras borrowed one of his Tenets from the Poet Linus (113), but it was not with reſpect to the Intelligence, the firſt Mover. Note, that Ariſtotle, in this Particular, makes a great Difference between Anaxagoras and Thales (114). I ſhall conclude with a fine Paſſage of Theodoret, from whence it appears, that the Philoſophers, who lived before Anaxagoras, were altogether ignorant of the firſt Cauſe. Ἀναξαγόρας - - - - τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ γεγενημένων φιλοσόφων οὐδὲν περαιτέρω τῶν ὁρωμένων νενοηκότων, πρῶτος νῦν ἔφησεν ἐφεστάναι τῷ κόσμῳ, καὶ τοῦτον εἰς τάξιν ἐκ τῆς ἀταξίας ἀγαγεῖν τὰ στοιχεῖα (115). Anaxagoras - - - - whereas the Philoſophers before him carried their Thoughts no higher than the Viſible Creation, was the FIRST, who taught, that an Intelligence preſided over the World, and reduced the Elements from Confuſion into Order.

[G] Whether the Doctrine of the Homœomeriæ does not imply many Contradictions.] I ſhall not make uſe of Ariſtotle's Arguments (116), however ſolid and refined they may be; and, if it appears that my Reflexions agree with his, it will be meerly accidental.

I. We have ſeen (117), why Anaxagoras taught, that every thing was compoſed of ſimilar Particles: This he aſſerted, to ſhew, that Bodies were not made out of nothing. Now, as the ſimpleſt Food may adminiſter Nouriſhment to all the Parts of an Animal, he was neceſſarily obliged to acknowledge, that the Graſs of a Meadow contains Bones, Nails, Horns, Blood, Fleſh, Skin, Hair, &c. It is not therefore compoſed of ſimilar Particles; it is rather a Collection of all kinds of Heterogeneities: To what purpoſe then was the Doctrine of the Homœomeriæ? Was he not obliged to depart from it in all particular Caſes, after having ſuppoſed it in general? What I have ſaid of Graſs, may be applied likewiſe to Milk, Wine, Water, Bread, and many other things. Is there any Body, which does not ſerve as Matter to ſeveral others, in the Changes, which are called Generation and Corruption? Therefore theſe firſt Principles both are, and are not, Homogeneous. They are Homogeneous, according to the Suppoſition of Anaxagoras; but in reality they are not ſo; for ſince compound Bodies, according to his Opinion, ought to be of the ſame Nature with their Principles, and are only a Mixture of diſſimilar Parts, it follows, that the Principles are Heterogeneous. I ſhall retouch this Argument in the Vth Paragraph.

II. Beſides, it will be found, that, upon this Suppoſition, Names have been wrong impoſed; for (to give an Inſtance of it) if the Blood of Animals was contained in the Herbage they have fed upon, it would better deſerve the Name of Blood, than that of Hay. Anaxagoras anſwered, that certain Particles being more numerous in a compound Body, or placed on the Surface, made it appear uniform, and procured it a ſpecific Name (118). Lucretius has refuted this Anſwer by the falſe Conſequences which ariſe from it. It would reſult from hence, ſays he, that, when Corn is bruiſed, ſome Particles of Blood may be drawn from it, or of ſome other Organs, of which our Body is compoſed. But this is contrary to Experience.

Linquitur hîc tenuis latitandi copia quædam;
Id quod Anaxagoras ſibi ſumit, ut omnibus omnes
Res putet immiſtas rebus latitare; ſed illud
Apparere unum, cujus ſint pluria mixta,
Et magis in promtu, primâque in fronte locata.
Quod tamen à verâ longe ratione repulſum eſt.
Conveniebat enim fruges quoque ſæpe minutas,
Robore cùm ſaxi franguntur, mittere ſignum
Sanguinis, aut aliûm, noſtro quæ corpore aluntur.
Conſimili ratione herbas quoque ſæpe decebat,
Et laticis dulces guttas, ſimilique ſapore,
Mittere, lanigeræ quali ſunt ubera lactis:
Scilicet & glebis terrarum ſæpe friatis
Herbarum genera, & fruges, frondeſque videri,
Diſpertita, ac in terris latitare minute:
Poſtremo in lignis cinerem fumumque videri,
Cum præfracta forent, igneſque latere minutos.
Quorum nil fieri quoniam manifeſta docet res,
Scire licet non eſſe in rebus res ita mixtas (119).

But there's a little Shift, a ſlight Excuſe,
Which Anaxagoras's Scholars uſe.
Tho' ſuch lie mix'd in All, That Part alone
Appears, That only to the Senſe is ſhown,
Which, in the Compoſition, does comprize
The greateſt Part, and on the Surface lies.
But this is falſe; or, through the weighty Mill,
From broken Corn wou'd bloody drops diſtil,
Or ſome ſuch Parts, as in our Bodies grow,
From Herbs and Flow'rs a milky juice would flow;
In broken Clods each ſearching Eye might ſee
Some lurking, ſcatter'd, Herb, or Leaf, or Tree;
And in cleft Wood, and broken Sticks, admire
Smoak, Aſhes, Flame, and little Sparks of Fire.
But, ſince, on ſtricteſt Search, no Parts appear,
We muſt not fondly fancy they are there.

CREECH.

This Confutation is not amiſs; for, in ſhort, mix ſeveral Sorts of Grain together as you pleaſe; take an hundred times more Wheat, than Barley; put as many Grains of Barley as you can in an Incloſure of Wheat; what will you get by it? Will you make People believe, that there is nothing but Wheat there? Will any one continue in this Error, even after your Heap is ſcattered? Will no Grain of Barley appear; Nothing can be more fooliſh, than ſuch an Aſſertion. Anaxagoras could not have ſolved this Objection, but by ſuppoſing, that each ſenſible Part of a Grain of Corn is ſo qualified, that the Heterogeneities are there in a leſs Number, and wrapt up in the Particles of Corn; and that this is the Reaſon why, when Corn is bruiſed between two Mill-Stones, we never diſcover the Heterogeneous Parts; but that, if we could proceed in the Diviſion as far as the inſenſible Particles, then the Blood, the Fleſh, the Bones, &c. would appear to Eyes finer than ours. In a word, he could not get clear of this Difficulty, but by the diviſibility of Matter in Infinitum; which is to imitate a Man, who, to avoid the thruſt of a Sword, throws himſelf headlong down a Precipice of an inconceivable Height. But I will inſiſt only on the Difficulties, which imply ſome kind of Contradiction.

III. I ſay, in third the place, that Anaxagoras ought to have ſuppoſed, that the ſimilar Particles are found, both in greater and leſſer Numbers, in Bread: In greater Numbers, becauſe the Compound is called Bread; in leſſer Numbers, becauſe a few Hours after the Bread

(108) In their Metaphyſics.

(109) As in Heſiod's Theogony; in which are ſo many abſurd things concerning the Gods; and even, as Lactantius complains, lib. 1. cap. 5. the Chaos is there repreſented as being more ancient than the Gods.

(110) Ariſt. Metaphyſ. lib. 3. c. 4. pag. 662. B.

(111) Plato in Apologia Socratis, p. 27. F.

(112) Lact. lib. 1. c. 5.

(113) Diog. Laërt. in Proœm. n. 4.

(114) Ariſt. de Anima, lib. 1. c. 2. pag. 479.

(115) Theodor. de Gr. Affect. Serm. 2. p. 489.

(116) See the 7th Chapter of the 1ſt Book of his Metaphyſics, and the 4th Chapter of the 1ſt Book of his Phyſics.

(117) In Remark [C].

(118) See Ariſtotle's Phyſics, lib. 1. cap. 4. pag. 456.

(119) Lucret. lib. 1. ver. 874.

Digitized by Google

of the Ancients, who have mentioned the Chaos, were no leſs confuſed than the Chaos itſelf.

is eat, it becomes Chyle, and diſcovers nothing in all it's ſenſible Particles, but the Qualities of Chyle. This Objection will be more eaſily apprehended, if Dough be compared with Corn, or Bread with Dough. It will appear, that this Philoſopher muſt have owned, that the Homogeneities are both more and leſs numerous in the ſame mixed Body; In Dough, for Inſtance; for, while it is Dough, it contains more Corpuſcles of Dough, than of any other Species of Body: But, when it is converted into Bread, it contains fewer Corpuſcles of Dough, than of Bread; and yet the Corpuſcles of Bread are only derived from Dough.

IV. Here follows another Contradiction. It is contradicting one's ſelf, to lay down an Hypotheſis, which involves on one ſide the ſame Inconvenience it removes on the other. This is the Misfortune of Anaxagoras's Syſtem. This Philoſopher, having ſuppoſed, that the Parts of Matter had eternally been in a State of Confuſion; that is to ſay, that the ſmalleſt Homogeneous Particles had been every where ſurrounded with Heterogenecus ones, ſuppoſed, that, at laſt, an intelligent Being put an end to This Diſorder, by ſeparating the ſimilar Particles from thoſe, which were diſſimilar. But He himſelf overthrew his own Suppoſition; being obliged to confeſs, that all the kinds of Homœomeriæ were blended together in all kinds of Bodies; and This even with reſpect to the inſenſible Particles. According to His Opinion, there is an Infinity of ſmall Bones, and little Drops of Blood, &c. in each Blade of Graſs, and in each Morſel of Bread: Every thing was mixed with every thing, ſince every thing was made of every thing. Διὸ φασὶ πᾶν ἐν παντὶ μεμίχθαι, διότι πᾶν ἐκ παντὸς ἑώρων γερόμενον (120). Qua propter inquiunt quodque in quolibet eſſe miſtum, quia quodlibet ex quovis oriri videbant. Ἀναξαγόρας μεμίχθαι πᾶν ἐν παντὶ φήσι (121). Anaxagoras omne in omni miſceri ait. Can there be a greater State of Confuſion? It was Plato's Opinion of it; for more than once he alledges the Doctrine of Anaxagoras as a Symbol of the Chaos. Κἂν εἰ συγκρίνοιτο μὲν πάντα, διακρίνοιτο δὲ μή, ταχὺ ἂν τὰ τῶ Ἀναξαγόρᾳ γεγονὸς εἴη, ὁμῶ πάντα χρήματα (122). Moreover, if all things were confuſed, and never ſeparated, Anaxagoras's Doctrine would preſently be verified, that all Things were together. He ſays, in another place, Τὸ τῦ Ἀναξαγόρᾳ ἂν πολύ ἦν, ὦ φίλε Πῶλε ---- ὁμῦ ἂν πάντα χρήματα ἐφύρετο ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ, ἀκρίτων τ' ὄντων τῶν τε ὑγιεινῶν καὶ ἰατρικῶν καὶ ὀψοποιητικῶν (123). That of Anaxargoras would come to paſs, Friend Polus. ---- All things would be blended together, Thoſe which relate to Medicine, and Health, and Thoſe which relate to Cookery. Menage tells us, that Luther called thoſe Divines Anaxagoriſts, who find every thing in every Text of Scripture. "Atque inde eſt, quod "Luthero Theologicus Anaxagoricus dicitur is, qui "quodlibet in quolibet loco ſcripturæ ſacræ invenire "poſſit (124).

(120) Ariſtot. Phyſic. lib. 1. c. 4. pag. 236. G.

(121) Id. Metaphyſ. lib. 3. c. 5. pag. 671. C.

(122) Plato, in Phædone, pag. 54.

(123) Id. in Gorgia, 317.

(124) Menage in Laert. lib. 2. pag. 73.

V. His firſt Principles were, and were not, ſuch: they were firſt Principles, according to his Suppoſition; and were not in reality ſo; ſince they were as much compounded and corruptible, as any other Body. He admitted of a Diviſibility in Infinitum; and therefore muſt have believed, that there is an Infinity of Corpuſcles in the leaſt Drop of Water; and conſequently that it contains as many of them, as the whole Earth. Beſides, this infinite number of Corpuſcles was an Heap of all kinds of Heterogeneities. It was not, then, more ſimple than a Tree; and, in this reſpect alone, it differed from mixed Bodies, that human Eyes could not diſcover the diſſimilar Parts, as they diſcover them in a Tree. Laſtly, the Intelligence, which moved Matter, could as eaſily have divided theſe pretended firſt Principles, as Fire divides Wood: They were, then, as periſhable as Wood; from whence it follows, that, if they exiſted in the Nature of things, it was not in quality of firſt Principles. Beſides, can any thing be more abſurd, than to lay down for Principles what has no Exiſtence at all? Now, according to the Hypotheſis of Anaxagoras, it is certain there were no Homœomeriæ in the Univerſe.

Let us examine an Anſwer, which he might have made: He might have ſuppoſed, that the Eſſence of the Homœomeriæ does not conſiſt in the Reſemblance of all their Parts, but in the Conformity, which is found, between the Contexture of the Heterogeneities of a ſmall Bone, for inſtance, and the Contexture of the Heterogeneities of any other Bone. He might have ſaid; "I do not pretend, that a Bone "of ten Inches, divided into an Hundred thouſand "Parts, or, which is the ſame thing in my Hypo-"theſis, into an Hundred thouſand Bones, does not "abſolutely contain any Particle, but what is ſimi-"lar to all the reſt; I own, that each of theſe ſmall "Bones is a Mixture of all kinds of Particles; it "contains Fleſh, it contains Blood and Membranes, "&c. But, becauſe theſe different Materials are "ranged according to the ſame Symmetry in each "of theſe ſmall Bones, I have reaſon to maintain, "that the Collection of an Hundred thouſand of theſe "ſmall Bones is an Homogeneous Compound, or an "Heap of Homœomeriæ; and, whereas I ſuppoſe, that "the Intelligence, which made the Choice of them, "found them ready made; I may very well aſſert, that "each of them, taken ſeparately, is incapable of De-"ſtruction; for they always exiſted of themſelves."

This Anſwer conſiſts of two Heads: one is the Explication of the Hypotheſis with reſpect to the Senſe of the Word Homœomeriæ; the other concerns the Incorruptibility of theſe Homœomeriæ. I am going to illuſtrate the firſt by an Example. Put all the Copies of the ſame Book, bound after the ſame manner, into a Library: it will be a Collection of Books, which are all alike; an Homogeneous Collection; not becauſe each of theſe Volumes is compoſed of Parts, which are perfectly alike; but becauſe the White and the Black, the Spaces, Letters, Accents, Points, Comma's, and the other Heterogeneous Parts, have the ſame Symmetry in one, as in all the reſt. Setting aſide this Explication of Anaxagoras, I ſhall only argue againſt the ſecond Part of his Anſwer.

VI. I ask him not, why the Intelligence, which he acknowledged, left the Homœomeriæ in Confuſion, from all Eternity; nor how It came to think ſo late of moving and uniting them; nor why he denies, that ſomething may be formed out of nothing; he, who confeſſes, that Motion had a beginning? Theſe three Objections, and ſome others, ſtrangely puzzle thoſe, who admit of a Matter, eternal, uncreated, and diſtinct from the divine Being; but, becauſe theſe Difficulties may be urged againſt other Philoſophers, as well as againſt Anaxagoras, it will not be proper to inſiſt upon them. I will only illuſtrate the laſt. It is certain, that the Production of a Quality, diſtinct from it's Subject, does not differ from a true Creation. This the modern Philoſophers (125), prove demonſtratively againſt the Ariſtotelians; who admit an Infinity of ſubſtantial and accidental Forms, diſtinct from Matter; for, ſince they are not compoſed of any pre-exiſtent Subject, it follows, that they are formed out of nothing. The beſt Anſwer, that the Followers of Ariſtotle can make, is to retort this Objection, and to ſay, that the Carteſians are obliged to acknowledge, that Motion cannot be produced, but by Creation. The Carteſians own this Conſequence; and attribute the Production of Motion only to God; and they ſay, that to put Matter in Motion, is to create it at every Moment, in different Places. Let us conclude from hence, that Anaxagoras, and ſeveral others, contradicted themſelves, when, on the one ſide, they would not acknowledge, that ſomething might be made out of nothing, and owned, on the other ſide, that Motion, or ſome other Modification, had a beginning in the eternal Chaos (126). But, waving this, I ſhall only inſiſt on the Difficulties, which relate particularly to Anaxagoras.

(125) See Gaſſendus Phyſ. § 1. lib. 7. c. 3.

(126) See Methodius, apud Phot. cod. 236. pag. 943.

VII. I alledge this Maxim againſt him: All things, which are diſtinct between themſelves, may be ſeparated or divided from each other; and from hence I conclude, that each Homœomery may be divided in infinitum; for it is compoſed of all Kinds of Principles jumbled together. And, therefore, ſince Motion is a neceſſary Principle of Diviſion, and God has produced Motion in Matter, it follows, that, by this moving Force, he might diſunite each part of the Univerſe, and break in pieces any Homœomery whatever, which you would take for an Unit. If it was an Epicurean Atom, a Body perfectly ſimple, ſingle, and free itself. I may venture to say, without an Hyperbole, that they are not just, and that these Philosophers free from all Composition, I own, that nothing could divide it: but Anaxagoras does not acknowledge any such Bodies, nor any Homœomery, be it ever so little, but what contains an Infinity of distinct Corpuscles, and even different from each other in their Qualities. It is therefore true, that what he calls first Principles are as subject to Destruction, as the most compounded Bodies; for instance, an Ox; this, I say, is very true, even though it be supposed, that the Homœomeriæ exist eternally of themselves; for it is sufficient, that an external Cause can make them pass from Motion to Rest; though it has not the Power of giving them Being, or of annihilating them. To recur to a Progress in infinitum, would be unnecessary upon this Occasion. It cannot be said, in answer to this Objection, that, the Homœomeriæ being composed of an Infinity of Corpuscles, those, which compose a small Bone, may be divided in infinitum, without ceasing to be a small Bone, and that they only become a smaller Bone, after each Division. This is no good Reply; for there are two things to be considered in each Homœomery: I. That it contains an Infinity of Particles; this is common to it with others. II. That the Particles are ranged after a certain Manner; this is peculiar to it; this is it's specific Form; it's Essence; by this it is either a little Bone, or a drop of Blood, rather than any other Species of the first Principles. And, therefore, in order to take from the Homœomery of a Bone it's Essence, and it's Species, it is sufficient to range the Particles, which compose the same, after another manner. Now, if it be admitted, that the Intelligence, which was the first Mover, could divide Bodies, and disentangle them from each other, it might also have divided the Corpuscles of each particular Homœomery, and given them another Combination; it would therefore change their Species, as Flower changes it's Species, when it is kneaded; that is, when it's Particles are jumbled and combined in a different manner.

Digitized by Google

I do not object to this Philosopher, That he acknowledged a Difference between the Parts of Matter, before they were put in Motion. This Objection always appeared to me very weak. I conceive very clearly, that a Division supposes a Distinction, and that an Iron Pin, fixed into a piece of Wood, and perfectly at Rest, is as different from the Wood, as if it moved together with the Wood.

VIII. I proceed to the last Objection. What would be the Consequence, if we should grant this Philosopher, That the same necessity, which causes Bodies to exist, causes them to exist distinct, in an infinite Number of Homœomeriæ; each of which must necessarily continue for ever entire; the Nature of things being such, that there must be fixed Bounds in each Species; as we usually say, there is a minimum quod sic (127), in each Species of living Bodies? Would not such a Concession be of great Service to the Hypothesis of Anaxagoras? Would it not allow him the Incorruptibility, and internal Immutability, of his first Principles? Would they not be so small a Bone, that, becoming less by the actual Division of their Parts, they would cease to be a Bone; and so with regard to other Species? And would it not signify, that natural Necessity made them Indivisible? I allow all this; but it is only avoiding one Inconvenience by another: I should still find this Fault with the System; that the Νῦς, or Intelligence, would come in, against all Rules, to undertake the easiest Task, after the most difficult was performed by a blind Necessity. It is incontestably true, that every Philosopher, who will give a good Account of the Order, which appears in the several parts of the Universe, must suppose an Intelligence as the Author of this beautiful Regularity. He need not fear, that reasonable Persons will reproach him with imitating certain Poets, who introduce a God, a Θεὸς ἀπὸ μηχανῆς, upon the Stage, to unravel Difficulties, which are not worth his Trouble. But if, after having supposed, that the Homœomeriæ were formed without the Direction of an intelligent Cause, he pretends, that such a Cause disentangled, and put them in order, he may be told, that he imitates such Poets, contrary to all Rules.

(127) That is a Degree of Smallness, below which An Animal, for instance, an Ant, could not be an Ant.

(128) Horat. de Art. Poet. ver. 191.

Nec Deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus
Inciderit (128).

Never presume to make a God appear,
But for a Business worthy of God.

ROSCOMMON.

To be sensible of the Force of this Objection, we need only observe, that it is much more difficult to make good Watches, than to separate them from a parcel of Medals and Shells, with which they are intermixed, and then to range and mix them after a better manner. A young Apprentice, a Child, could make this Choice, and produce this new Regulation. Every one will grant me, that the Formation of Men (129) is a Work, which requires more Direction and Ability, than the Art of ranging them according to Military Evolutions. The greatest part of modern Philosophers suppose, that the general Laws of Nature are sufficient to make a Fœtus grow, provided it has been well formed, and well organized, in the Seed; but they suppose, that the Animalcula, which are organized in the Seed, are the Work of a most wise and powerful Creator. They believe, therefore, that the principal Difficulty, which stands in need of the Direction of an Intelligence, consists in the first formation of an organized Machine; that is to say, in the forming those Animalcula, which they suppose to be in the Seed. To speak properly, each of these Animalcula is an Homœomeria of Anaxagoras. It is, therefore, more difficult to form Homœomeriæ, than to cause Animals to grow by the help of Nourishment. It is, therefore, in order to explain the Formation of the Homœomeriæ, that the Direction of an intelligent Being is chiefly requisite; for every Homœomeria is a certain Collection of infinite kinds of Bodies: And this Collection must be made according to certain Proportions and Situations: The Collection, necessary for the Homœomeria of a Bone, is different from that, which is necessary for the Homœomeria of Flesh; and, if you were not exactly to follow this Symmetry, you would not have the first Principles of Blood or Marrow, but those of some other Mixture. Now Anaxagoras did not suppose the Necessity of an Intelligence, towards the Formation of infinite Species of Homœomeriæ; each of which is a certain Conjunction of all kinds of Bodies, mixed together in such a manner, that those of one Species must prevail in Number, and be placed in one certain manner, rather than in any other, and that, in general, one Proportion and Symmetry must prevail more than another. He has therefore assigned a blind Necessity as the Cause of what was most difficult. And therefore he did not reason consequentially, when he believed an Intelligence to be necessary for what was less difficult. According to his Doctrine, the whole Function of the Intelligence consists in ranging what was confused, in moving what was at Rest, in separating such things as were mixed, and adorning those, which were destitute of Ornament. Ἀναξαγόρας - - - - ταῦτα παιδεύει, ἀρχὴ πάντων ὁ νοῦς, καὶ ὅτῳ διτῷ καὶ κύκλῳ τῶν ὅλων, καὶ παρέχει τάξιν τοῖς ἀτάκτοις, καὶ κίνησιν τοῖς ἀκινήτοις, καὶ διάκρισιν τοῖς μεμιγμένοις, καὶ κόσμον τοῖς ἀκόσμοις (130). Anaxagoras hæc docet. Mens omnium est initium, eaque causa & omnium domina est, & ordinem confusis præbet, & motionem immobilibus, & discrimen commixtis, & ornatum inornatis. He might have been attacked both in Front and Rear. He might have been told, You say both too much, and too little. If you believe, that Nature, without any Direction or Knowledge, formed all the Homœomeriæ, you must believe, that she could have moved, separated, and distributed them: And therefore your Intelligence is superfluous. But if you believe it necessary for the Separation and Distribution of these Homœomeriæ, you ought likewise to ascribe their Formation to it; you do not extend it's Influence wherever it is wanted. Thus one part of your System destroys the other: It is not made up of well sorted and well connected Pieces (131). If this Philosopher's Works were extant, or all those of Theophrastus (132), we might perhaps find, that he answered some of the Difficulties, which I have just now started; that he owned he was not satisfied with his own Hypothesis; and that he sunk under the weight of the Mysteries of Nature. He said, that every thing was surrounded with Darkness. Anaxagoras pronuntiat circumfusa esse tenebris Omnia (133). Several other Philosophers make the same

(129) I do not mean what Parents contribute towards it; I do not mean the Material, but the Efficient, Cause, which organizes the Fœtus, and forms this admirable Machine.

(130) Hermias in Philosoph. Irrisione. This Work of Hermias is to be found in the Bibliotheca Patrum, and at the end of Justin Martyr's Works, Paris, 1636, and Cologne, 1686.

(131) See a Passage of Aristotle in Remark [R].

(132) He wrote a Book περὶ τῶν Ἀναξαγόρᾳ δογμάτων, de Anaxagoræ decretis. See Laert. in Theophr. lib. 5. n. 42.

(133) Lact. lib. 3. c. 2. pag 217.

Digitized by Google

Philoſophers could not pretend, with any ſhew of Reaſon, that this ſtate of Confuſion ſubſiſted no longer [H]. It is related, that Anaxagoras foretold, that the Stone, which fell from Heaven into the River Ægos, and was preſerved and honoured as a holy Relick, would fall from the Body of the Sun [I]. Some other Predictions are likewiſe aſcribed to him (x). He applied himſelf very much to Geometry (y); and it was found, that, in Priſon, he wrote concerning the Quadrature of the Circle (z). His vaſt Genius was equal to every thing; the moſt difficult Phænomena of Nature, Comets, the Milky-way, Earthquakes, Winds, Thunder, Lightening (aa), the overflowing of the Nile (bb), Eclipſes, and ſuch like things, which he accounted for. All Theſe, together with his Aſtronomical and Geometrical Speculations, did not prevent his reading the Poems of Homer, with the attention of a Man, who was deſirous of making Diſcoveries, and improving Litterature. He was the firſt, who ſuppoſed them to be Moral Works, in which Virtue and Juſtice are explained by Allegorical Narrations (cc). The Circumſtances and Iſſue of the Action, which was brought againſt him at Athens for Impiety, are variouſly reported; ſome ſay, that he was condemned; others, (x) See Remark [I].

(y) Proclus Diadochus, lib. 2. in I. librum Euclidis.

(z) Plutarch. de Exilio, pag. 607.

(aa) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 9.

(bb) Diod. Sicul. lib. 1. cap. 38.

(cc) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 12.

Complaint; ſo far as to imagine, that the removal of the Darkneſs mentioned by Moſes, which was upon the Deep, before God created the Light (134), was only with reſpect to the corporeal Eye; for, ſay they, the Darkneſs of the Mind ſtill covers the Face of the Deep. The Light of Truth, concentered in this Abyſs, never emerges from it; it only ſends out a few Rays, which reach our Minds, after ſo many Reflexions and Refractions, and after having mixed their Brightneſs with ſo many obſcure Corpuſcles, in the dark Spaces, through which they paſs, that they are only proper to form falſe Images.

(134) See Geneſis I.

[H] They could not pretend, with any ſhew of Reaſon, that this State of Confuſion ſubſiſted no longer.] I had reſolved to make ſome Reflexions on this Subject; but ſince the foregoing Remarks, and thoſe which remain to be made, will ſufficiently, if not too much, enlarge this Article, I have altered my Reſolution, to avoid Prolixity. I ſhall not want an Opportunity of giving, in another Article, what I ſuppreſs here.

[I] Anaxagoras forctold, that the Stone —— would fall from the Body of the Sun.] This is related by Diogenes Laërtius (135); and Plutarch mentions this Prodigy in theſe Words: "Others fancied, that a "Stone, which ſeemed to fall from Heaven, was an "Omen of this great Overthrow (136). It was of "a vaſt bigneſs; and fell by the River Ægos. The "Peloponneſians eſteem it very much; and ſhew it "among their Curioſities to this Day. And it is ſaid, "that the Philoſopher Anaxagoras foretold, that one "of thoſe Bodies, which are fixed to the Vault of "Heaven, ſhould one day be looſened by a violent "Shock or Convulſion of the whole Machine, and fall "to the Earth. For he ſaid, that the Stars were not "in the very places, in which they were firſt formed; "ſeeing they were heavy Bodies, and of the Nature of "Stones; and that they ſhone by the Reflection of the "elementary Fire, and had been drawn up by force "and were kept there by the Impetuoſity and Vio"lence of the circular Motion of the Heavens; "having been placed there at the beginning of the "World, and hindered from falling upon the Earth, "when cold and heavy bodies were ſeparated from "the other ſubſtances of the Univerſe (137)." I have ſet down the whole Paſſage, that the Tradition of this Prodigy, and the Singularity of the Doctrine of Anaxagoras, may be ſeen at the ſame time. The Words of Pliny deſerve no leſs to be quoted. "Celebrant Græci, ſays he (138), Anaxagoram Clazomenium, Olympiadis ſeptuageſimæ octavæ ſecundo "anno, prædixiſſe cœleſtium literarum ſcientia, quibus diebus ſaxum caſurum eſſet è Sole. Idque factum interdiu in Thraciæ parte ad Ægos flumen. "Qui lapis etiam nunc oſtenditur, magnitudine vehis, colore aduſto, comete quoque illis noctibus flagrante. Quod ſiquis prædictum credat, ſimul fateatur neceſſe eſt, majoris miraculi divinitatem Anaxagoræ fuiſſe: ſolvique rerum naturæ intellectum, & confundi omnia, ſi aut ipſe Sol lapis eſſe, aut unquam lapidem in eo fuiſſe credatur: decidere tamen crebro, non erit dubium. In Abydi gymnaſio ex ea cauſa colitur hodieque, modicus quidem, ſed quem in medio terrarum caſurum idem Anaxagoras prædixiſſe narratur. Colitur & Caſſandriæ, quæ Potidæa vocitata eſt. —— The Greeks have a Tradition, that, in the ſecond Year of the Seventy eighth Olympiad, Anaxagoras of Clazomenæ foretold, by his Knowledge of the Heavens, at what time a Stone would fall from the Sun; which came to paſs in the Day-time, in a part of Thrace, by the River Ægos. This Stone is ſtill ſhewn, of the bigneſs of a Bar, and of a burnt Colour, and as having been attended with the Appearance of a Comet. But if any one really believes, that this Prodigy was foretold, he muſt own, at the ſame time, that the divine Knowledge of Anaxagoras, is the greater Miracle of the Two; and that the Knowledge of natural Cauſes is deſtroyed, and all things confuſed, if it be believed, either that the Sun is a Stone, or that there ever were Stones in it; though there would be no room to doubt of their frequent fall. Upon this Account a Stone is at preſent had in reverence by the School of Abydus; it's Size is but ſmall; but it is that, whoſe fall to the Earth was foretold by Anaxagoras. It is reverenced likewiſe at Caſſandria, now called Potidæa." By this you ſee, that Anaxagoras had more than once foretold the falling of theſe Stones, and that the Worſhip of them increaſed proportionably. Note, that Ammianus Marcellinus, and Tzetzes, make uſe of the Plural Number, in relation to the Prodigy of the River Ægos. They pretend, that Anaxagoras foretold, that Stones would fall from Heaven (139). Philoſtratus has expreſſed himſelf after the ſame manner. I ſhall ſet down his Words at length, becauſe they will afford Matter for Criticiſm. "Apollonius, then, would have "been unjuſtly charged with Impiety and Error, for "having foreſeen ſeveral things, and foretold others, "after the ſame manner as Socrates was fully informed of them by Spirits, before they came to paſs. "And Anaxagoras alſo; for who knows not, that, "once upon a time, being gone to the Olympic "Games, covered with a Cloak, as a Prediction that "it would Rain (140), though the Day was ſo clear "and ſerene, that there was no probability of it; yet "a little while after it rained violently? Having, another time, foretold that a Houſe would fall in a few "Days, it fell accordingly. Again, having foretold, "that the Day at Noon would in an Inſtant become "as dark as Night; and, another time, that great "Stones would fall from Heaven into the River "Ægos, it came ſo to paſs. Now, if it be acknowledged, that theſe Things, and others of the like "Nature, foreſeen by Anaxagoras, were only a Proof "of his very great Skill, how can they be imputed "to Apollonius as Art Magic (141)." Upon this a Commentator has made a very ridiculous Obſervation. "There are no Aſtrologers at preſent, tho' "ever ſo mean, who cannot do as much as Philoſtratus ſays Anaxagoras did, in foretelling Rain, "and the fall of a Stone from Heaven, and the "like (142)." What an Abſurdity is this! As great Fools as the Aſtrologers of our Days may be, they have not the Raſhneſs to foretel, that Stones will fall from Heaven. Our Almanack-makers, and our moſt renowned Calculators of Horoſcopes, are careful not to hazard their Reputation ſo ſhamefully. They know too well, that to foreſee ſuch Falls ſurpaſſes all their Skill. Pliny had reaſon to ſay, that the Prediction of Anaxagoras would have been a greater Miracle, than to ſee the Stone fall from the Body of the Sun (143). Obſerve, that there is an Interval of about ſixty Years between the Time of this Prediction, according to Pliny, and it's Accompliſhment, according to Plutarch. I have another Obſervation to make.

(135) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 10.

(136) Namely, The Deſtruction of the Athenian Fleet by Lyſander.

(137) Plutarch. in Lyſandro, pag. 439.

(138) Plin. lib. 2. c. 58.

(139) Amm. Marcellin. lib. 22. c 8. pag. 308. Tzetzes. chil. 2. ver. 892.

(140) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 10. Ælian. de Animal. l. 7. cap. 8. and Suidas, mention it likewiſe.

(141) Philoſtr. in Vita Apollonii, lib. 1. cap. 2.

(142) Artus Thomas, Sr. d'Embri, Annotations on the Life of Apollonius, Tom. 1. p. 91.

(143) See his Words above, Citat. (138).

Photius,

Digitized by Google

others, that he was acquitted [K]. Pericles, who protected him on this occasion, was suspected of Atheism, for having been instructed by such a Master. I have taken notice of this in another place (dd). Diogenes Laërtius, in reporting a witty Saying of Anaxagoras, (dd) In the Remarks [C] and [D] of the Article PERICLES.

Photius, in his Abstract of the Life of Apollonius, pretends, that Anaxagoras was accounted a great Prophet, for having foretold, by Magic, that it would rain (144). I cannot believe, that Photius so little understood Philostratus's Meaning; I ascribe this egregious Mistake to the ill State his Work has been put into by Transcribers. And I cannot sufficiently wonder, how the Translator (145) could resolve to let this Passage be printed. His Translation is a Series of such gross Impertinence, and monstrous Reasoning, and withal so expressly contrary to the Original of Philostratus, that we can comprehend nothing of his Conduct. Did he believe, that the Text of Photius was correct? He must, then, have dream't of something else. Did he believe his Readers would be so stupid as to think his Performance a good one? He was, then, strangely secure. I desire those, who are qualified for it, to examine this Passage of Photius; they will find such Wounds in it, as require the Dexterity of the ablest Hand; and perhaps they may heal them, by the Assistance of the Manuscripts, compared with the Text, of Philostratus.

(144) Phot. Biblioth. cod. 241. pag. 1017.

(145) Andr. Schottus.

[K] Some say that he was condemned, others that he was acquitted.] He was accused of Impiety, by Cleon, for having said, that the Sun was a Mass of inflamed Matter; and, notwithstanding Pericles's Protection, he was condemned to Banishment, and fined five Talents, as Sotion relates (146). But others say, that Thucydides informed against him, and accused him not only of Impiety, but of Treason likewise; and that the Accused was condemned to Death for Contumacy (147). Others relate, that he was in Prison, when Sentence of Death was pronounced against him. They add, that Pericles, addressing himself to the Judges, said, Do you find that he has committed any Crime? And, perceiving that none was imputed to him, he said, I am his Disciple; destroy him not, therefore, through Prejudice; believe me rather; and give him his Liberty. He obtained his Request; but the Accused took his Trial so much to heart, that he resolved to die (148). Others report, that he was brought before the Judges by Pericles; and that his Melancholy had reduced him so low, that he could scarce walk; insomuch that he was discharged; not on account of his Innocence, but because of the Compassion, which he excited (149). I have observed elsewhere (150), that Pericles found no better means of saving this Philosopher, than by causing him to leave Athens.

(146) Sotion, in Successionibus Philosophorum, apud Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 12.

(147) Satyrus, in Vitis apud Diogen. Laërt. ubi supra.

(148) Hermippus, in Vitis apud Diog. Laërt. ubi supra, n. 13.

(149) Hieronymus, in secundo libro Commentor. Varior. apud Diog. Laërt. ubi supra.

(150) In Remark [M] of the Article PERICLES.

Take notice of four Things. I. The Accusers of Anaxagoras (151) were Men of a Faction contrary to Pericles. It was not, therefore, out of Zeal for Religion, that they persecuted this Philosopher; but with a Design of supporting their Cabal, and weakening the Authority of Pericles, by maliciously causing the Suspicion of Irreligion to fall upon him. The most probable means of succeeding in this Design was to accuse Anaxagoras of Impiety. This is generally the first Inducement to this kind of Accusations; we want to be revenged of some one, or to remove an Obstacle to our Authority, and Fortune; we call the Passions of the People to our Assistance, and pretend, that the Honour of God is concerned in our Cause. II. It is not true, that the Accusers of Anaxagoras grounded their Accusation on his acknowledging, that the divine Intelligence created the World; they proceeded upon this, that, in saying the Sun was a Stone, he robbed it of it's Divinity; which was likewise the Foundation of his Sentence of Condemnation (152). And therefore Vossius is guilty of an Error in these Words. "Laërtii industria nobis ipsa "Anaxagoræ verba conservavit. Sunt autem hujusmodi: Πάντα χρήματα ἦν ὁμοῦ. εἶτα νοῦς ἐλθὼν αὐτὰ διεκόσμησε. Omnia simul erant: deinde accessit Mens, eaque composuit. Quàm apertè hic opificem ab opificio distinguit! Hoc ferre non potuere Athenienses, ac ἀθεότητα vel ἀσέβειαν vocarunt (153). —— We are obliged to the Care of Diogenes Laërtius, for preserving the very Words of Anaxagoras; they are these: All things were confused; afterwards an Intelligence, interposing, reduced them into Order. How plainly does he distinguish here between the Workmanship and the Artificer! The Athenians could not bear this; and charged him with Atheism or Impiety." Anaxagoras was not condemned merely for distinguishing between God, and his Works; but for not teaching, as the Poets did, that the Sun was both the Work of God, and itself a God: For, according to the Belief of the People, grounded upon the Writings of the Poets, the Sun was Apollo, the Son of Jupiter, and one of the great Deities. Vossius's Error is, as if one should say, That the Inquisition has condemned a Person to death, for teaching, that God alone, the Author, Preserver, and sovereign Lord of all things, deserves the supreme Worship, Λατρεία, and that no Creature in Paradice merits our Invocation, or the Worship Δουλεία. This Doctrine comprehends two Points; and a Man would be punished in Salamanca only for the second. Would not a Protestant be in the wrong to say, that such a Man was punished for maintaining the first Point? However, Eusebius had reason to think it strange, that Anaxagoras was in danger of being stoned, as an Atheist, notwithstanding his Orthodoxy as to the Existence of a God, the Author of this World; a Doctrine, which he was the first who taught, among the Greeks. Θαυμάσαι δ' ἔστιν ὡς ὅτῳ πρῶτῳ παρ' Ἕλλησι τὸν θεολογήσας τὸν τρόπον, δόξας Αθηναίοις ἄθεος εἶναι, ὅτι μὴ τὸν Ἥλιον ἐθεολόγησε, τὸν δὲ Ἥλιον ποιητὴν, μικρᾷ δεῖν καταλευσθεὶς ἔθανε (154). In quo sane permirum illud est, qui princeps apud Græcos eam Theologiæ rationem intulerat, eum Athenienſibus, quod non jam Solem, at Solis ipſius effectorem Deum ſtatueret, atheum eſſe viſum, ac propterea parum abfuiſſe, quin ab iis lapidibus necaretur. This, I say, is astonishing; for, in short, (which is my third Remark) it is scarce conceivable, that, in so learned a City as Athens, a Philosopher could not explain the Properties of the Stars by Physical Reasons, without running the risque of his Life. Is it not a deplorable thing for a Man to be more knowing than a superstitious Mob, conducted by senseless Men? To what purpose serves this Superiority of Genius and Knowledge among such a People? Is it not rather a Crime? Does it not expose a Man to a thousand Infamies and Dangers? And might we not enjoy the Conveniencies of Life much better, by following the Current of Ignorance and Superstition? Οἱ προσεσεσαμμένοι τὸ χρῖσμα κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπινον λόγῳ πεισθέντες τὰ πράγματα θεωρῆσαι καὶ ἐλέγξαι, ὡς ἀσεβεῖς καὶ περίεργοι εἰς δικαστήρια ἠχθησαν (155). The Philoſophers before CHRIST were dragged before Tribunals, as impious and officious Perſons, for endeavouring to ſpeculate upon, and explain, things, to the Underſtanding of Men. I observe, in the fourth Place, that we cannot but wonder, that so remarkable a Trial as That of Anaxagoras, in which Pericles, the chief Man of Athens, was so far concerned, was not better known to Historians. They mention it with a Thousand Variations; nay, some of them, in the principal Points, assert what others deny; which is not for the Honour of Antiquity.

(151) Cleon, or Thucydides. See Plutarch in the Life of Pericles, p. 170, & 155.

(152) See Josephus, l. 2. contra App. p. 1079. F. S. Cyril. lib. 2. contra Julian.

(153) Vossius de Orig. & Progr. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 1. p. 5.

(154) Euseb. Præpar. Evang. l. 14. cap. 14. pag. 750. C.

(155) Just. Martyr. Apol. 1. p. 48.

I must not omit a fine Passage of Lucian, in which he supposes, that the greatest of the Gods endeavoured to crush Anaxagoras to pieces, but that he missed him; and that the Thunder-bolt, being averted by Pericles, burnt a Temple, and was almost broken to pieces against a Rock. Δίκην δώσουσι ἐπειδὰν τὸν κέραυνον ἐπισκευάσω· καταξαίνεται γάρ αὐτῷ, καὶ ἀποσωμωμένοι εἰσὶ δύο ἀκτῖνες αἱ μέσαι, ὅτότε φιλοτιμότερον ἠκόντισα πρῶην ἐπὶ τὸν σοφιστὴν Ἀναξαγόραν, ὃς ἔπειθε τοὺς ὁμιλητὰς μηδὲ ὅλως εἶναί τινας ἡμᾶς τοὺς θεούς. ἀλλ' ἐκεῖνα μὲν διήμαρτον. ὑπερέσχε γὰρ αὐτῷ τὴν χεῖρα Περικλῆς. ὁ δὲ κεραυνὸς, εἰς τὸ ἀνάκειον παρασκήψας, ἐκεῖνό τε κατέφλεξε, καὶ αὐτὸς ὀλίγου δεῖν συνετρίβη παρὰ τὴν πέτραν (156). They ſhall ſmart for it, as ſoon as my Thunder is in Order. For two of it's largeſt Forks were bent and broken; when, not long ago, I darted it too eagerly at the Sophiſt Anaxagoras; who endeavoured to perſuade his Acquaintance, that there were no ſuch Folks, as we Gods. I miſſed my aim, it is true; for Pericles interpoſed with his Hand, and protected him; and the averted Bolt, falling on the Temple of Castor and Pollux, burnt it down,

(156) Lucian. in Timon. p. 65. Tom. 1. Operum.

Digitized by Google

Anaxagoras, has committed a Blunder in Chronology [L], which I wonder has been ſo long unobſerved. The Conſtancy of this Philoſopher on the News of his own Condemnation, and at That of the Death of his Sons, was wonderful [M]. He was very little concerned, whether he lived and died out of his own Country (ee); and he had a true Diſcernment of human Happineſs [N]. Some Authors pretend, that he was never ſeen to laugh, or even to ſmile (ff). Cicero aſcribes a remarkable Gravity to him; Maxima fuit & gravitatis & ingenii gloria (gg). He died at Lampſacus, where he had an honourable Burial, and a very glorious Epitaph; nay, they went ſo far as to build (ee) See Remark [M].

(ff) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 8. c. 13. Plutarch in the Life of Pericles.

(gg) Cicero, Quæſt. Academ. lib. 2. cap. 23.

down, and was itſelf almoſt broke in pieces againſt a Rock. Voſſius, who ſays only, that Jupiter darted his Thunder-bolt againſt this Philoſopher (157), occaſioned Moreri to ſay, that Anaxagoras was cruſhed to pieces by it. It was very natural to believe ſo; for we cannot eaſily conceive, that a Thunder-bolt, deſigned for the Death of any Perſon, ſhould not kill him. But this ſhould teach us to have recourſe to the Originals, and not to ſtop at modern Authors, who mention only ſuch Circumſtances of a Fact, as they have preſent Occaſion for. Voſſius, for Example, who had no occaſion, in this Place, to tell us, whether Jupiter ſucceeded or not, ſuppreſſed Lucian's Raillery. This Omiſſion led Moreri into a Snare, which he might have avoided, if he had but tranſlated the Latin of Voſſius. Why did he act the part of a Paraphraſt? Lambert Barleus, commenting on this Paſſage of Lucian, aſſerts, that Anaxagoras was accuſed of Atheiſm, on account of his Doctrine concerning the divine Intelligence, The firſt Mover, &c (158). This is an Untruth, which he borrowed from Voſſius, and which I have already confuted. He ſays, farther, that a Talent was promiſed as a Reward to any one, who ſhould kill this Philoſopher (159). This ſeems to me to confound Anaxagoras with the Atheiſt Diagoras. Laſtly, in point of Orthodoxy, he compares Anaxagoras with Lucian, and complains, that Juſtin Martyr ranks Lucian among the Atheiſts. "Anaxagoræ non abſimilis fuit Lucianus noſter, quem "immerito ἄθεον vocat Juſtinus Martyr, in oratione "contra Græcos (160). —— Our Lucian was not "unlike Anaxagoras, whom Juſtin Martyr, in his Oration againſt the Greeks, unjuſtly ſtiles The "Atheiſt." But his Compariſon is as falſe, as his Complaint; the Occaſion of his Error was as follows. He had read in Voſſius, "Lucianus, in Timone, ait "Jovem in Anaxagoræ caput - - - - - ſed Lucianum "quid dico? Ecce Juſtinus Martyr, oratione ad Græ"cos, eum ἄθεον vocat (161) - - - - - Lucian, in his "Timon, ſays, that Jupiter darted on the Head of "Anaxagoras —— but why do I mention Lucian? "Juſtin Martyr, in his Oration againſt the Greeks, "calls him an Atheiſt?" And he did not apprehend, that eum (him) relates to the Philoſopher Anaxagoras, and not to Lucian.

(157) Voſſius de Philoſ. ſectis, p. 27.

(158) Lambert. Barleus in Luciani Timon. pag. 62.

(159) Id. ib.

(160) Id. ib. pag. 63.

(161) Voſſius de Orig. & Progr. Idol. lib. 1. cap. 1. p. 5.

[L] Diogenes Laërtius, in reporting a witty Saying of Anaxagoras, has committed a Blunder in Chronology.] He ſays, that Anaxagoras, ſeeing the Tomb of Mauſolus, cried out, It is a Monument of the Converſion of Gold into Stone. I do not confine myſelf to a literal Tranſlation; but theſe are the Greek Terms: Τάφος πολυτελὴς λελιθωμένης ἐστὶν οὐσίας εἴδωλον (162). Monumentum pretioſum in lapides converſarum divitiarum imago eſt. We may ſuppoſe, that he really expreſſed himſelf thus, at the Sight of a ſumptuous Sepulchre; but it was not upon ſeeing That of Mauſolus; for his Death preceded the building of that Monument by ſeveral Olympiads. "Anaxagoras —— "Olymp. LXXXVIII. mortuus eſt. Mauſoli autem "ſepulchrum ante Olymp. CVII. conditum non eſt. "Aut igitur hæc verba Philoſophus ille non dixit: "aut alia certè occaſione dixit: Mauſoleum enim "nunquam vidit: quod ab Illuſtratoribus Laërtii nondum opinor obſervatum eſt. Verba ſunt Joannis "Pearſonii viri undecunque doctiſſimi, in libro de "epiſtolis Sancti Ignatii, pag. 9. ſecundæ partis; "quibus ego aſſentior. Id ipſum obſervatum à Giſberto Cupero in antiquis numiſmatibus explicatis "viro elegantiſſimi ingenii (163). —— Anaxagoras "died in the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad. But the Sepulchre of Mauſolus was not built 'till the CVIIth "Olympiad. Either, therefore, our Philoſopher did "not ſpeak theſe Words, or he ſpoke them on ſome other "Occaſion; for he never ſaw the Mauſoleum ; which "I think has never been obſerved by the Commentators "on Laërtius. They are the Words of John Pearſon, a "Man of great Learning, in his Book concerning the E-

(162) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 10.

(163) Menage, in Diogen. Laërt. p. 77. col. 2.

"piſtles of St Ignatius, p. 9. Part II. with which I agree. "The ſame Obſervation was made by That great Genius "Gisbert Cuperus, in his ancient Coins explained."

[M] The Conſtancy of this Philoſopher on the News of his own Condemnation, and at That of the Death of his Sons, was wonderful.] On the firſt News, he ſaid, Nature has long ago pronounced her Sentence as well againſt them (164), as againſt me; and on the ſecond, I knew very well, that I begot them mortal (165). Diogenes Laërtius intimates, that he loſt them all; and adds, that, according to Demetrius Phalereus, his Sons buried him with their own Hands (166); which would be a Contradiction among Authors. But it may be cleared up, by ſuppoſing, that, after he had ſhewed this Conſtancy, he had other Children; or that he gave this Anſwer, only upon hearing of the Death of one of his Sons. Cicero employs the ſingular Number. "Quem (Anaxagoram) ferunt "nunciata morte filii, dixiſſe, ſciebam me genuiſſe "mortalem (167). —— Who (Anaxagoras) is reported, upon hearing of the Death of his Son, to have ſaid, I knew that I begot him mortal." Valerius Maximus (168), Plutarch (169), and Simplicius (170), uſe the ſame Number; but Ælian obſerves, that Anaxagoras had only two Sons, and that he ſpoke theſe Words, upon hearing of the Death of both (171). Note, that he received this News, whilſt he was reading a Lecture in Philoſophy (172).

(164) That is, againſt his Judges.

(165) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 13.

(166) Id. ib.

(167) Cicero, Tuſcul. Quæſt. l. 3. fol. 261.

(168) Valer. Max. lib. 5. in fine.

(169) Plutarch Conſol. ad Apollon. p. 118. de cohib. Ira, p. 463. & de tranquill. Animi pag. 474.

(170) Simplic. in Epictet. Enchirid. c. 22.

(171) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 3. cap. 2.

(172) Plutarch. de Conſol. ad Apollon. p. 118. Ælian. ubi ſupra. Stobæus Serm. 103.

I ſhall inſert here his Anſwer to his Friends, who asked him, at Lampſacus, whether he deſired, after his Death, to be carried to Clazomenæ, where he was born. That is unneceſſary, ſaid he, the Infernal Road is as ſhort from one Place, as from another. Præclare Anaxagoras, qui quum Lampſaci moreretur, quærentibus amicis, velletne Clazomenas in patriam, ſi quid ei accidiſſet afferri, nihil neceſſe eſt, inquit, undique enim ad inferos tantundem viæ eſt (173). Diogenes Laërtius ſuppoſes, that he ſaid this to a Perſon, who was unwilling to die out of his own Country (174). I have often wondred, that the fine Sayings of the Ancients are ſo variouſly reported: I have enquired into the Reaſon of it; and the moſt probable ſeems to be this. Readers retain the Subſtance of a Fact better than the Circumſtances; and therefore, when they have a mind to relate it, they ſupply what they have forgotten in the beſt manner they can; and, as their Taſtes are different, it happens, that ſome ſupply one thing, and ſome another. I ſay nothing of the Supplements, which are deſignedly made to accommodate things better to the Subject in hand. They are artificial Variations, and proceed from Inſincerity: I ſay nothing of them. What I have ſaid of Readers, may be univerſally applied. We are ſtill more apt to falſify what we hear, than what we read.

(173) Cicero Tuſculan. Quæſt. l. 2. fol. 252. D.

(174) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 11.

[N] He had a true Diſcernment of human Happineſs.] He believed thoſe to be moſt happy, who ſeem leaſt to be ſo; and that we muſt not look, among the Rich and Great, for Perſons, who taſte true Happineſs; but among thoſe, who till a ſmall Parcel of Ground, or apply themſelves to the Sciences, without Ambition. Valerius Maximus will expreſs it better than I can. "Nec parum prudenter Anaxago"ras interroganti cuidam, quiſnam eſſet beatus: "Nemo, inquit, ex his quos tu felices exiſti"mas: ſed eum in illo numero reperies, qui à te "ex miſeris conſtare creditur. Non erit ille divi"tiis & honoribus abundans: ſed aut exigui ruris, "aut non ambitioſæ doctrinæ fidelis ac pertinax "cultor, in ſeceſſu quam in fronte beatior (175). "—— Anaxagoras, being asked, who was happy, re"plied, with great Prudence, none of thoſe, whom "you eſteem to be ſo, but He, whom you think to be "miſerable, will be found to be of the number. He "will not be one, who abounds with Riches and Ho"nours; but either one, who cultivates a ſmall Farm, or "is a true and conſtant Follower of unambitious Sciences, "happier in his Retirement, than he appears to be."

(175) Valer. Max. lib. 7. cap. 2. n. 9. in extern. pag. 604.

[O] He

Digitized by Google

build an Altar to Him [O]. A little before his Death, the Chief Persons of the City paid him a Visit; and asked him whether he had any Commands for them; to which he answered, That he only desired, that Children might be permitted to play, every Year, in the Month of his Death (bb). This was performed; and the Custom still continued in the Time of Diogenes Laërtius. It is said, that he lived Seventy two Years (ii). It is not certain, that he maintained the Doctrine of Predestination [P]. He is the first Philosopher *, who published Books [Q]. Socrates, who expected to be informed of certain Particulars by them, was dissatisfied with the Perusal of them: This was plainly his own Fault [R], as I shall shew in the Reflexions I have (bb) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2 n. 14. See Remark [A] towards the end.

(ii) Id. ib. n. 7.

* Id. ibid. n. 11.

[O] He had —— a very glorious Epitaph: Nay, they went so far as to build an Altar to him.] Ælian and Diogenes Laërtius have preserved this Epitaph; which consists of these two Verses.

Εὐθάδε πλεῖσον ἀληθείας ἐπὶ τέρμα περήσας
Οὐρανίη κόσμου κεῖται Ἀναξαγόρας (176).

(176) Diog. Laërt. l. 2. n. 15.

Entomb'd here Anaxagoras lies,
Who taught the Secret of the Skies.

There is as much Energy in this Distich as in these seven French Verses, which contain a like Encomium.

Descartes, dont tu vois icy la sepulture,
A dessille les yeux des aveugles mortels,
Et gardant le respect que l'on doit aux Autels,
Leur à du monde entier demontré la structure.
Son nom par mille ecrits se rendit glorieux,
Son esprit mesurant & la terre & les cieux
En penetra l' abime, & perca les nuages (177).

(177) Baillet's Life of Descartes, c. 2. p. 443.

Descartes, whose Ashes here are laid,
Dispell'd the Mists from mortal Eyes,
And, due respect to Altars paid,
The Structure shew'd of Earth and Skies.

A thousand Works his Name shall spread;
Who, measuring Nature's wond'rous Frame,
Div'd to Earth's deepest, central Bed,
And, soaring, reach'd the Ætherial Flame.

Diogenes Laërtius says nothing of Anaxagoras's Altar. But Ælian mentions it (178), and seems to say, that two were consecrated to him, one under the Name of The Intelligence, the other under That of Truth. But a very learned Critic (179), does not understand the Passage so; he says, it signifies, that, according to some, the Altar was dedicated to the Intelligence, and according to others, to Truth. Aristotle observes, that the Inhabitants of Lampsacus continued to honour Anaxagoras (180). We may observe, that, in St Austin's Time, the Authority of this Philosopher was still very considerable. "Quam (veritatem) si sensit "Anaxagoras, eamque Deum esse vidit, mentemque "appellavit, non solum nomen Anaxagoræ, quod "propter literatam vetustatem, omnes, ut militariter "loquar, literatiores libenter sufflant, nos doctos & "sapientes non facit, sed ne ipsa quidem ejus cog- "nitio, qua id verum esse cognovit (181). —— If "Anaxagoras was sensible of Truth, and saw that "it was God, and called it The Mind or Intelli- "gence; the Name of Anaxagoras, which the Learn- "ed, on account of it's literary Antiquity, willingly "blow up, to express myself in a military Phrase; "the Name of Anaxagoras, I say, does not only not "make us learned and wise; but even his Judgment, by "which he discovered it to be true, contributes no- "thing towards making us so."

(178) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 8. cap. 19.

(179) Kuhnius upon this Passage of Ælian.

(180) Arist. Rhetoricor. lib. 2. c. 23. pag. 445.

(181) August. Ep. 56. pag. 272.

[P] It is not certain, that he maintained the Doctrine of Predestination.] It is said, that he strenuously opposed this Doctrine (182), and confuted it in his Works; but Alexander Aphrodisiensis is the only Author, who asserts this; and he does it in such a manner, as to keep us in suspence; for he observes, that Anaxagoras confuted this Doctrine, by engaging in Controversy, and not out of a premeditated and previous Choice. It was necessary for him to oppose it, in order to maintain another Doctrine; that is, being sensible, that, without opposing it, he should be unable to answer those, who should attack That Doctrine, he wrote against Fate. Alexander Aphrodisiensis judiciously observes, that such a Circumstance renders the true Opinion of Anaxagoras doubtful. And, indeed, an Author will do any thing, in the Heat of a Dispute, to deprive his Adversaries of the Advantages, which they might draw from his Silence, or Confession. He will rather contradict himself, and affirm what he does not believe, than suffer his own Weapons to be turned against himself. However, read this Passage of Gabriel Naudé. "Obtulit se tandem Alexander ex Aphrodisiade *; "facemque in his tenebris versanti prætulit, quam- "quam eo scrupulo injecto, quod fide dignus Anaxa- "goras, dum istud assereret, minime fuerit, non "quod propositio ejusmodi vera non esset, verum "quia in alterius opinionis suæ defensionem, quam "suscipere cogebatur, non autem ex sola determina- "taque voluntate adversus fatum scribendi, illam "protulisset (183). —— At length Alexander A- "phrodisiensis appeared, and in some Measure cleared "up this Obscurity; tho' with this Difficulty in the "way, that Anaxagoras, in this Assertion, by no means "deserved Credit; not, because the Proposition, which "he laid down, was not true; but because he produced "it in Defence of another Opinion, which he was "obliged to support, and not through a fixed Intention "of writing against Fate." This Author had just said, that the Moderns, who assert, that Anaxagoras opposed Predestination, quote no ancient Author, who takes any notice of it. He had said likewise, that Diogenes Laërtius, Cicero, Galen, Plutarch, and Origen, are silent in this Matter.

* Lib. de Fato, cap 1. & lib. de Anima, cap. ult.

(183) Id. ib.

[Q] He is the first Philosopher, who published Books.] Diogenes Laërtius expressly asserts this. Πρῶτος δὲ Ἀναξαγόρας καὶ βιβλίον ἐξέδωκε συγγραφῆς (184). Anaxagoras was the first, who published a Book of his own Writing. But, as he seems to declare, in another Place, for Phavorinus, who said, that Alcmæon, the Disciple of Pythagoras, was the first, who wrote upon Physics (185), he renders his own Testimony very doubtful. Clemens Alexandrinus leaves the Matter undecided; he only says, that some ascribe to Alcmæon the first Work, which was published concerning Nature; and that others pretend, that Anaxagoras was the first, who gave the Public a Book (186). Both these Opinions would be false, if Thales had wrote Books, as St Austin asserts (187), and if the Greek Tradition, mentioned by Suidas (188), were true, viz. that the Philosopher Pherecydes was the first, who wrote Books. Note, that Aristotle observes, that the Writings of Anaxagoras were later than those of Empedocles, tho' the latter was younger than Anaxagoras (189).

(184) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 11.

(185) Id. lib. 8. n. 83.

(186) Clem. Alexand. Stromat. lib. 2. pag. 308.

(187) See above, Citat. (85).

[R] Socrates ------ was not satisfied with the perusal of them: This was plainly his own Fault.] I propose two things; an Abridgment of Socrates's Complaint, and afterwards some Reflexions upon it.

(188) Suidas in Ἐκαταῖος.

"Being informed, says he (190), that Anaxagoras "had laid down, in one of his Books, that an In- "telligence produces and governs all things (191), "I was well pleased with this kind of Cause; and "imagined, that the Consequence must be, that each "Being was circumstanced, and situated, after the "most excellent manner. I expected therefore, with "great Joy, to find, at last, in this Book of Anaxa- "goras, a Master, who should instruct me in the "Causes of every thing, and inform me, whether "the Earth be round or flat; and then give me the "Reason of his Determination; and, as I believed, "that this Reason would be grounded on the Idea "of the highest Perfection, I was in hopes he would "shew me, that the State, in which the Earth is, "is the best it could have; and that, if he placed "it in the Center, he would tell us, why This Si- "tuation is the best of all. I resolved to look for "no other Cause, provided he made This clear to "me;

(189) Arist. Metaphys. lib. 1. c 3. See hereupon Fonseca's Commentary, pag. 218.

(190) Plato in Phædone, pag. 72, & seq.

(191) Ὡς ἄρα νοῦς ἐστὶν ὁ διακοσμῶν τε καὶ πάντων αἴτιος. Mentem omnia exornare, omniumque causam esse. Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

I have to make on his Diſcourſe. One of the Reaſons, why he neglected Aſtronomy, was, becauſe Anaxagoras, who had extreamly applied himſelf to it, was very much miſtaken

" me; and only to enquire, with reſpect to the " Proportions of Swiftneſs and Revolution, &c. which " are found between the Sun, Moon, and other " Planets, what is the beſt Reaſon that can be aſ- " ſigned, why theſe Bodies, in Quality of Agents " and Patients, are what they are; for I could never " have imagined, that a Philoſopher, who ſays, that " an Intelligence governs all theſe Things, would " alledge any other Cauſe; but prove, that the State, " in which they are, is the beſt that can be. I be- " lieved likewiſe, that, having in this manner ex- " plained the particular Nature of each Body by ſuch " a Cauſe, he would, in general, explain their com- " mon Good. Full of this Hope, I applied myſelf " with the greateſt Eagerneſs to the reading of his " Writings, that I might ſpeedily know what is moſt " excellent, and what is wrong; but I found that " this Philoſopher does not employ an Intelligence, " nor any Cauſe of Arrangement; but refers all " Things to the Air, the Æther, the Water, and ſuch " other impertinent Subjects, as to their Original " (192). This is juſt as if any one, after having " ſaid, that whatever I do, I do by my Underſtand- " ing, ſhould afterwards account for all my parti- " cular Actions after this manner. Socrates ſits, be- " cauſe his Body is compoſed of Bones and Nerves, " which, by the Rules of Mechaniſm, are the Cauſe, " that he can bend his Limbs. He ſpeaks, becauſe the " Motion of his Tongue impels the Air, and con- " veys it's Impreſſion to the Ear, &c. Such an one " would forget the true Cauſe, to wit, that the " Athenians having judged it beſt to condemn me, " I thought it better for me to ſit down here; and " that it was more juſt, that I ſhould ſuffer the " Puniſhment, which they have ordained. Now, if " any one objects, that, without my Bones and " Nerves, &c. I cannot perform what I would, he " judges right; but if he pretends, that I perform " it, becauſe of my Bones and Nerves, &c. and not " thro' a Choice of what is beſt, ſince he ſuppoſes " that I act by my Underſtanding, his Diſcourſe is " very abſurd (193).

(192) Ὁρῶ ἄνδρα τῷ μὲν νῷ οὐδὲν χρώμενον, οὐδέ τινας αἰτίας ἐπαιτιώμενον εἰς τὸ διακοσμεῖν τὰ πράγματα, ἀέρας δὲ καὶ αἰθέρας καὶ ὕδατα αἰτιώμενον καὶ ἄλλα πολλὰ καὶ ἄτοπα. Hominem video mente nuſquam uti, ornatuſque rerum cauſas afferre nullas; Sed aëreas naturas & æthereas aqueaſque & talia multa abſurda pro rerum cauſis aſſignare. Id. ib. pag. 73. D.

You ſee plainly the Taſte of Socrates. He had forſaken the Study of Natural Philoſophy, and applied himſelf wholly to Moral; wherefore he required, that all Natural Things ſhould be explained by moral Reaſons, and by the Ideas of Order and Perfection. I dare aſſert, that he cenſured Anaxagoras improperly. Every Philoſopher, who has once ſuppoſed, that an Intelligence has moved Matter, and ranged the Parts of the Univerſe in order, is no longer obliged to have recourſe to This Cauſe, when he is to give a Reaſon for each Effect of Nature; his Buſineſs is to explain, by the Action and Re-action of Bodies, by the Qualities of the Elements, by the Configuration of the Parts of Matter, &c. the Vegetation of Plants, Meteors, Light, Gravity, Opacity, Fluidity, &c. Such is the Method of the Chriſtian Philoſophers, whatever Sect they are of. The Schoolmen have an Axiom, That a Philoſopher ought not to have recourſe to God, Non eſt Philoſophi recurrere ad Deum: They call this Recourſe the Sanctuary of Ignorance. And indeed what could you ſay more abſurd, in a Piece of Phyſics than this; Stones are hard, Fire is hot, and Cold freezes Rivers; becauſe God has ordered it ſo? The Carteſians themſelves, who make God not only the firſt Mover, but alſo the only, continual, and perpetual Mover of Matter, make no uſe of his Will and Actions in explaining the Effects of Fire, the Properties of the Loadſtone, Colours, Smells, &c. they only conſider the ſecond Cauſes, the Motion, Figure, and Situation of the Corpuſcles. So that if the Remark of Clemens Alexandrinus, mentioned above (194), was grounded only on this Diſcourſe of Socrates, it would be very unjuſt. To approve of it, we ſhould know, not that Anaxagoras explained many Things without mentioning the Divine Intelligence; but that he expreſsly excluded it, in explaining part of the Phænomena of Nature. Perhaps, he had ſaid in ſome Parts of his Writings, what his Diſciple Euripides afterwards ſaid, viz. that God concerns himſelf only with great Things, and leaves the leſſer to Chance: Τῶν ἄγαν γὰρ ἄπτεσθαι θεὸς, τὰ μικρὰ δ' εἰς τύχην ἀνεὶς ἐᾷ, καλῶς τὸν Εὐριπίδην (195). Summa procurat modo Deus, inque fortunam minora rejicit, ut ait Euripides. As if the World was like the Tribunal of the Prætors; de minimis non curat Prætor. We have obſerved above (196), that this Philoſopher attributed ſome Effects to Chance, and others to Neceſſity, &c. and that he only called the ſupreme Intelligence to his Aſſiſtance, when he could not make it appear, that Neceſſity had produced a Thing (197). It may be ſuppoſed, in general, that he had not fully explained his Syſtem, and that he had left many Parts of it ill connected. Ariſtotle intimates as much, when he ſpeaks of the firſt Philoſophers, who acknowledged two Cauſes, the Material, and the Efficient. He compared them to Men, who have not learned the Art of Fighting, and yet often wound their Enemies; which they do, without obſerving the Rules of That Art. In like manner theſe Philoſophers were not Maſters of their Subjects. Οὗτοι μὲν οὖν - - - - - δυεῖν αἰτίαιν ἐφήψαντο - - - - - τῆς τε ὕλης, καὶ τῆ ὄθεν ἡ κίνησις. ἀμυδρῶς μέν τοι καὶ οὐδὲν σαφῶς, ἀλλ' οἷον ἐν ταῖς μάχαις οἱ ἀγύμναστοι ποιοῦσι. καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι περιφερόμενοι τύπτουσι πολλαχοῦ καλὰς πληγάς. ἀλλ' οὔτε ἐκεῖνοι διὰ ἐπιστήμης, οὔτε οὗτοι ἔοικασιν εὖ ὅσοι λέγειν ἃ λέγουσι (198). Atque hi quidem - - - - duas cauſas - - - - - - attigerunt, materiam, & unde motus obſcure tamen, & non clarè: ſed quemadmodum inexercitati in prælio faciunt. Etenim illi circumeuntes, egregias plerumque plagas infligunt. Sed nec illi ex ſcientia, nec iſti videntur ſcire quid dicant. You will ſee in another Place (199), that there are ſome Things, which Anaxagoras did not explain, and which he would infallibly have admitted, if any one had made the Diſcovery to him; and, laſtly, that many fine Doctrines would reſult from his Principles, if they were cleared up and explained.

(193) Πολλὴ δὲ καὶ μακρὰ βαθυμία εἴη τῷ λέγω. Negligens admodum ac ſupina futura eſt hæc ejus oratio. Id. ib. pag. 74. A.

(194) In Remark [F] Citat. (91).

I ſhould not condemn Socrates for deſiring ſuch an Explication of the Univerſe, as he mentions; for what could be more excellent, or curious, than to know diſtinctly and particularly, why the Perfection of the Machine of the World required, that each Planet ſhould have the Figure, Magnitude, Situation, and Swiftneſs, which it has, and ſo of all the reſt? But this Science was not deſigned for Man; and it was very unjuſt to expect it from Anaxagoras. And unleſs we had the Idea, which God followed in creating the World, it will be impoſſible to give the Explications, which Socrates deſired. All that the greateſt Philoſophers can ſay, upon this Occaſion, amounts to this: That, ſince the Earth is round, and ſituated at ſuch a Diſtance from the Sun; This Figure and Situation were neceſſary to the Beauty and Symmetry of the Univerſe; the Author of this vaſt Machine having an infinite Intelligence, and Wiſdom. From hence we know, in general, that every thing is right in this Machine, and that there is no Defect in it: But, if we ſhould undertake to make it appear, Piece by Piece, that every thing is in the beſt State it could poſſibly be in, we ſhould infallibly aſſign very wrong Reaſons. We ſhould act like a Peaſant, who, having no Notion of a Clock, ſhould undertake to prove, that, the Wheel, which he ſees through a Chink, muſt neceſſarily be of ſuch a Thickneſs, and Bigneſs, and preciſely placed there; becauſe if it were leſs, thinner, and ſet in another Place, great Inconveniences would follow. He would judge of this Machine, as a blind Man doth of Colours, and without doubt he would be a wretched Reaſoner. The Philoſophers are not much better qualified to judge of the Machine of the World, than this Peaſant of a Clock. They know but a ſmall part of it, and are ignorant of the Model of the Artiſt, his Deſign, his Ends, and the reciprocal Relation of all the Parts. If you ſay, that the Earth muſt be round, that it may turn the eaſier on it's Axis, you may be anſwered, that it would be better if it were ſquare, that it might turn more ſlowly, and afford us longer Days. What could you reaſonably reply, if you were obliged to ſpecify the Inconveniencies the World would ſuffer, if Mercury were greater, or nearer the Earth? Would Sir Iſaac Newton, who has diſcovered ſo many Methematical and Mechanical Beauties in the Heavens, pretend to warrant, (195) Plutarch. in Reip. ger. præcept. pag. 811. D.

(196) In Remark [E] Citat. (94).

(197) Above, Citat. (97).

(198) Arift. Metaphyſ. lib. 1. c. 4. pag. 146. G.

(199) Id. ib. cap. 7. pag. 651. C.

WHY we cannot demonſtrate by particular Reaſons, that each Body in the the Univerſe is in the beſt State it could poſſibly be in.

Digitized by Google

mistaken in it [S]. What is observed concerning the Treatise, in which he reasoned about Eclipses, is very curious. You will find it at the End of the Remark [B] of the Article PERICLES. I must not forget, that Mount Mimas, near Clazomenæ, was the Place, from whence he viewed the Stars (kk). Much less should we forget, that the Strength and Sublimity of his Genius, his Labour, his Application, and his many Discoveries, led him only to Uncertainties; for he complained, that every thing was full of Darkness (ll). This was, perhaps, what obliged him to say, that all things consist in Opinion, and that Objects are such as we would have them, that is, such or such, according as they appear to us (mm). Tho' he taught, that the Soul of Man was an aërial Being (nn), yet he believed it to be immortal (oo). He honoured It more than the World; for he was one of those, who judged, that Heaven and Earth would perish (pp); and being asked, If the Mountains of Lampsacus should one day be part of the Sea, he answered, Yes, provided Time does not fail them (qq). I have observed, elsewhere (rr), what his Opinion was concerning the Souls of Beasts. 'Tis pity He was not a Friend of Democritus, and that these two great Men did not concert together their Hypotheses; the Defects of the one might have been supplied by the Perfections of the other; but there was no Intimacy between them. Anaxagoras bore Democritus a Grudge; because the Visit, which he offered to make him, was refused (ss). Servius, and Sidonius Apollinaris, were ignorant of his Opinions [T]. To avoid being too tedious in this Article, I have referred such Chronological Enquiries, as I have to propose, to another place (tt).

(ll) Philostr. in Vita Apollon. lib. 2. cap. 2.

(ll) See Remark [G] towards the end.

(mm) Aristot. Metaphys. lib. 3. cap. 5. pag. 672. G.

(nn) Theodor. de Gr. Affect. Serm. 5. p. 547.

(oo) Id. ib. pag. 548.

(pp) See the Jesuits of Coimbr. in Aristot. lib. 1. de Cœlo cap. 3. p. 65.

(qq) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 10.

(rr) In Remark [E] of the Article PEREIRA.

(ss) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 14.

(tt) To the Remark [A] of the Article of Archelaus the Philosopher.

warrant, that, if Things were not such, as he supposes them, as to Magnitude, Distances, and Velocities, the World would be an irregular Work, ill built, or ill contrived? Is not the Divine Understanding infinite? God has therefore the Ideas of an Infinity of Worlds, different from each other, all of them Beautiful, Regular, and Mathematical, to the last Degree. Do you think he could not, from an Earth of a square Figure, and nearer Saturn, draw such Uses, as would be equivalent to those of our Earth. Let us conclude, then, that Socrates ought not to have expected, that Anaxagoras should prove to him, by a Particular Deduction, that the present State of every thing is the best it can be. God only can prove it after this manner.

How should we perform what Socrates required, with regard to the Machine of the World; since we are at a loss to do it, with respect to the Machine of an Animal, after so many Dissections, and so many Lectures of Anatomy, which have taught us the Number, Situation, and Use, &c. of it's principal Organs? By what particular Reasons can it be proved, that the Perfection of Man, and That of the Universe, require, that our two Eyes be situated as they are, and that six Eyes, placed round the Head, would occasion a Disorder in our Body, and in the Universe? It may be reasonably pretended, that, in order to give a Man six Eyes round his Head, without departing from the general Laws of Mechanism, the other Organs must have been so altered, that Man's Body would have been framed after another Model, and would have been another kind of Machine: but no particular Reasons can be given for this; for all that you could say would be opposed with Objections as probable as your Proofs. We must stick to this general Reason: The Wisdom of the Artificer is infinite; therefore the Work is such as it ought to be; the Particulars are out of our reach; and they, who pretend to engage in a Detail of them, generally expose themselves to ridicule (200).

(200) See the Anatomical Discourses of W. Lami, a Physician of Paris.

We can prove, by this Discourse of Socrates, that he was not the Disciple of Anaxagoras; for, if he were, would he have stood in need of being informed, by one, who had read the Books of Anaxagoras, that, according to That Philosopher, a Divine Intelligence was the Cause of all things (201).

(201) See Plato in Phædone, pag. 72.

[S] Socrates neglected Astronomy ------ because Anaxagoras, who had extreamly applied himself to it, was very much mistaken in it.] That Socrates's Thoughts upon this Subject may more clearly appear, I shall set down at length the Words of his Historian. "He "was of Opinion, that some time should be spent "in Astronomy, in order to know what o' Clock "it is by the Stars; and in what Day of the Month, "and what Season of the Year, we are; to know "when a Centinel is to be relieved in the Night; "when it is proper to travel by Sea, and when "by Land; and this, he said, would easily be learned "by conversing with Seamen, or Night-Hunters. "But, to endeavour to dive farther, so far as to "know, what Planets are not in the same De-"clination; to aim at explaining all the diffe-"rent Motions of the Planets; and to know their "Distances from the Earth; in what time they per-"form their Revolutions; and what their Influences "are; was, what he very much dissuaded others "from; for these Sciences appeared to him quite "useless, not because he was ignorant of them, but "because they required the whole Man, and diverted "him from several other useful Occupations. In a "Word, he advised, not to search too curiously in-"to the admirable Art, with which the Gods have "disposed the Universe; because it is a Secret, which "the Mind of Man cannot comprehend. And the "Gods are displeased, that any one should endeavour "to discover, what they intend to conceal from us. "He believed, moreover, that there was Danger "of falling into Error in these high Speculations; "as Anaxagoras did, who boasted of being greatly "skilled in them. For, teaching, that the Sun "is the same thing with Fire, he did not con-"sider, that Fire does not dazzle the Eyes; but "that it is impossible to bear the Brightness of "the Sun (202)." I omit two other Reasons, alledged by the Historian, against this Doctrine of Anaxagoras. They are no better than the first, and deserve not so much Attention, as the Idea, which Socrates entertained of the Gods: He believed them to be very jealous of their Secrets, and much inclined to be displeased with those Men, whose Curiosity led them to enquire into them. Xenophon's Words are; Ὅλως δὲ τῶν ἐφημίων ἢ ἔκαζα ὁ Θεὸς μηχανᾶται, φρονίζειν γίγνεσθαι ἀπέτρεπεν· ὅτε γὰρ εὕρεσθαι ἀνθρώποις αὐτὰ ἐνόμιζεν εἶναι, ὅτε χαρίζεσθαι Θεοῖς ἂν ἡγεῖτο τὸν ζητοῦντα ἃ ἐκεῖνοι σαφηνίσαι οὐκ ἐβούλήθησαν (203). Ut una omnia complectar, cœlestium unumquodque quomodo Dii machinentur scrutari dehortabatur, neque enim hominibus facile esse adinvenire; neque Diis eos facere grata arbitrabatur, qui ea quærant, quæ ipsi Dii in promptu & manifesta esse noluerant.

(202) Xenophon, de Socrat. Memorab. lib. 4. pag. 384. & seq.

(203) Xenophon. ἀπομν. lib. 4. pag. 474.

Note, that Aristotle entertained a more Advantageous Opinion of the Deity; He does not deny, that, if God were capable of Jealousy, he would chiefly envy Man the Knowledge of the sublimest Sciences; but he denies what the Poets affirmed of the pretended Envy of the Gods. His Words are very remarkable. Εἰ δὲ λέξασί τι ὀι ποιηταὶ, καὶ πέφυκε φθονεῖν τὸ θεῖον, ἐπὶ τέτε συμβῆναι μάλιστα εἰκὸς, καὶ δυσυχεῖς εἶναι πάντας τὺς περισσύς. ἀλλ' ὅτε τὸ θεῖον φθονερὸν ἐνδέχεται εἶναι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν παροιμίαν πολλὰ ψεύδονται ἀοιδοί (204). But if, according to the Poets, the Divine Nature be capable of Jealousy, it is most probable it would be so in this Instance, and that all those would be unhappy, who aspired after Knowledge, which is above them (205). But neither is the Deity capable of Envy, and the Poets are Lyars to a Proverb.

(204) Arist. Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 2. pag. 644. E.

(205) Bessarion, in his Latin Translation, renders περισσὺς qui altiora se quærunt; Argyropilus renders it qui superflua quærunt. See Fonseca on this Passage, p. 130.

[T] Servius and Sidonius Apollinaris were ignorant of the Opinions of Anaxagoras.] The first affirms that he assigned Fire as the Principle of all things (206): This is to confound him with Heraclitus. The other pretends, that, like Thales, he asserted, that Water was the Principle of all Bodies, and that he superadded an Intelligence to this Principle.

(206) Servius in Virgil. Ecl. 6. ver. 31.

Digitized by Google

This is to rob him of his Doctrine of the Homœomeriæ. It was not unknown to Sidonius Apollinaris; but he aſcribed it, without Reaſon, to the Philoſopher Anaximander. He attributed likewiſe to him the παντοσπερμία, that is, that the Seeds of all things were every where: a Doctrine, which belonged to the Philoſopher Anaxagoras. It was likewiſe Democritus's Doctrine, as Ariſtotle has obſerved, in the fourth Chapter of the third Book of his Phyſics.

------- ſed rebus inutile ponit
Principium, dum credit aquis ſubſiſtere mundum.
Hujus diſcipuli verſa eſt ſententia, dicens,
Principiis propriis ſemper res quaſque creari,
Singula qui quoſdam fontes decrevit habere
Æternum irriguos, ac rerum ſemine plenos.
Hunc etiam ſequitur, qui gignere cuncta putabat
Hunc aërem, pariterque Deos ſic autumat ortos.
Quartus Anaxagoras Thaletica dogmata ſervat:
Sed divinum animum ſentit, qui fecerit orbem (207).

(207) Sidon. Apoll. Carm. 15. ver. 81. p. 151, 152.

An uſeleſs Principle to Things He (208) gives,
Who Water makes the World's Original.
A different Sentiment his Scholar held;
That all Things had their proper Principles;
Each Principle it's everlaſting Spring,
From whence the Seeds of all things ever flow'd.
Him follow'd That Philoſopher, who taught,
That this ſurrounding Air gave Nature birth,
And peopled Heaven itſelf with all it's Gods.
The fourth in order, Anaxagoras,
Subſcribed to Thales' Doctrine; yet acknowledg'd
A Mind Divine, Creatreſs of the World.

(208) i. e. Thales.

The learned Savaron has taken no Notice of theſe Miſtakes in his Remarks on this Poem of Sidonius Apollonaris.

ANAXANDRIDES, King of Lacedemon, the Son of Leo, was the only Man of his Country, who had two Wives at once (a). It was not ſo much his own Fault, as That of the Ephori, who would have obliged him to divorce his Wife, becauſe ſhe was barren, and to marry another, who might bring him Children: As he was very fond of his Wife (b), he proteſted, that he would never divorce her. The Ephori, finding him reſolute, propoſed to him to marry another Wife, without divorcing the firſt; and gave him to underſtand, that, if he refuſed, it would be the worſe for him. He accepted the ſecond Propoſal; but would not lodge his two Wives under the ſame Roof, but in ſeparate Houſes. His new Spouſe was ſoon delivered of Cleomenes: This good Fortune of Anaxandrides extended likewiſe to his firſt Wife: ſhe alſo proved with Child. The Domeſticks of the other Queen, being diſpleaſed at this, ſpread many ſcandalous Reports, and pretended it was but a Feint to deceive the World by a ſuppoſititious Child. Theſe Slanders had ſuch an Influence on the Ephori, that, when the time of her Delivery drew near, they placed Guards about the Queen (c), to prevent being deceived. It proved no Feint; for the Lady was delivered of a Boy, who was named Dorieüs. Some time after ſhe was delivered of Twins, one of which was the brave King Leonidas, who died ſo gloriouſly at the Streights of Thermopylæ; the other's Name was Cleombrotus (d). The Son of the ſecond Wife had ſcarce common Senſe; on the contrary Dorieüs ſurpaſſed his Equals in every thing. Nevertheleſs his Pretenſions, which were, that they ſhould pay more regard to Merit than Birthright, were rejected; and Cleomenes, notwithſtanding his Unworthineſs, ſucceeded to the Crown (e): the Laws of the Country required it, and were obſerved. Anaxandrides was more favoured by Fortune, than the Kings his Predeceſſors, with reſpect to the Tegeates; for the Lacedemonians began to conquer them in his Reign (f); I mean about the LXth Olympiad [A]. Plutarch has left us a Collection of the Apophthegms of Anaxandrides among thoſe of the Lacedemonians. The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is full of Miſtakes on this Head [B.]

(a) Pauſan. lib. 3. p. 84.

(b) She was the Daughter of Anaxandrides's Siſter.

(c) The words of Herodotus may be rendred ſo as to import, That They themſelves were the Queen's Inſpectors, or Guards.

(d) Some ſay, that Leonidas and Cleombrotus were born at different Times.

(e) Herodot. lib. 5. c. 39. & ſeq. See alſo Pauſan. lib. 3. p. 84.

(f) Pauſan. ibid. Herod. lib. 1. cap. 67.

[A] The Lacedemonians began to conquer the Tegeates about the LXth Olympiad.] Hiſtorians obſerve, that the Tegeates were not overcome by the Lacedemonians, 'till the latter had tranſported to their City the Bones of Oreſtes, who was buried at Tegea. This Tranſlation was made in the LVIIIth Olympiad. "Priſcorum autem teſtantur molem etiam "Oreſtis ſuprema, cujus oſſa Olympiade quinquage- "ſima & octava Tegeæ inventa à Spartanis Oraculo "monitis diſcimus impleſſe longitudinem cubitorum "ſeptem (1).—The Ancients inform us likewiſe of the "Stature of Oreſtes; whoſe Bones, which the Spartans, "by the Advice of the Oracle, found at Tegea, in the "LVIIIth Olympiad, were ſeven Cubits long." We know farther, that Cleomenes, the Son and Succeſſor of Anaxandrides, was exhorted to wage War againſt Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos (2), who died a miſerable Death, in the ſecond Year of the LXIVth Olympiad (3). I omit, that Cleomenes had reigned a conſiderable time, when the Succeſſors of Piſiſtratus were obliged to leave Athens, which happened about the LXVIIth Olympiad (4). Moreri ought not to have ſaid, That the Time, when Anaxandrides lived, is unknown, nor that the Ephori obliged him to divorce his firſt Wife, nor that the eldeſt Son of his firſt Wife was called Dorceus. He ſhould have called him Dorieüs. I ſay nothing of his Omiſſions, tho' they are not inconſiderable. I muſt not paſs over in Silence, that it is not difficult to reconcile Solinus and Herodotus, with reſpect to Chronology. Solinus places the Tranſlation of Oreſtes's Bones in the LVIIIth Olympiad. But, according to Herodotus (5), the Lacedemonians had already obtained ſeveral Advantages over the Tegeates, after this Tranſlation, when Cræſus courted their Alliance; which he did, before he made War with Cyrus; and his Expedition againſt Cyrus fell out at the end of the fifty ſixth Olympiad (6); how then can the Chronology of Solinus be reconciled with That of Herodotus? However it be, Moreri ought not to have ſaid, that the time, when Anaxandrides reigned, is unknown; for do we not find in Herodotus, that he reigned in the Days of Cræſus (7)?

(1) Solinus, cap. 1. p. 9.

(2) Plut. in Apoph. pag. 233. C.

(3) Calviſius, ad Ann. mundi 3428.

(4) Id. ib. ad Ann. mundi 3440.

(5) Lib. 1. cap. 68, 69.

(6) See Calviſius, ad Annum mundi 3398.

(7) Herodot. lib. 1. c. 67.

[B] The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is full of Miſtakes on this Head.] To the Three Faults of Moreri, which I have mention'd, I add thoſe of his Continuator. I. It is not true, that Anaxandrides was the Son of Eurycrates the Second: He was his Grandſon, (8) and the Son of Leo. II. It is not true, that Anaxandrides took the City of Tegea, before the Bones of Oreſtes were carried away from thence. It was not till after this Tranſlation, that Fortune ceas'd to favour the Tegeates. How then could their Capital City have been taken before the Removal of theſe Bones? Is not the taking of the Principal City the entire Ruin of ſuch little Republics? III. It is not true, that Glycas (9) made his Entry into Tegea in the Retinue of the Victorious Anaxandrides: He enter'd it, as People, in peaceable Times, do the Cities of their Neighbours. IV. It was not He, who found the Tomb of Oreſtes, and carried his Bones away; He only reported, at his Return to Lacedemon, that he believ'd

(8) Pauſan. lib. 3. p. 83.

(9) It ſhould be Lychas, as before.

Digitized by Google

believ'd, that the Sepulchre of Oreſtes was at a Blackſmith's in Tegea. For this Blackſmith had inform'd him, that, as he was digging a Well in the Court of his Houſe, he met with a Tomb of ſeven Cubits, and that it appeared, by the Bones, that the Perſon, for whom it was made, was of That Stature. Lychas concluded from hence, that it was the Tomb of Oreſtes, becauſe the Oracle had ſaid, that it ſhould be found at Tegea, in a Place, where two Winds were driven with Violence, and where a Repreſentation of a Fight, and Wounds upon Wounds, were to be ſeen. He applied all this to the Smith's Bellows, Hammer, and Anvil. He only conjectur'd this, and communicated it to his Superiors, who thereupon baniſhed a Criminal. This Man retired to Tegea, and hired of the Blackſmith the Place, where the Tomb of ſeven Cubits had been diſcover'd; and took away the Bones of Oreſtes, and brought them to Lacedemon. V. It is not true, that the Oracle had ſaid, That, in order to this Tranſlation, the Winds, the Striker, and the Stricken, were to be removed, with the Plague and Ruin of Men. Herodotus, who is quoted in the Supplement, ſays no ſuch Thing. VI. There was no occaſion to remove all theſe things, in order to find the Tomb of Oreſtes; for it was not under the Forge; but in a Court, where the Smith ſet himſelf to dig a Well. VII. The War did not ceaſe as ſoon as the Bones of this Prince were buried at Lacedemon. Herodotus ſays only, that from That time the Lacedemonians had the Advantage in all their Wars with the Inhabitants of Tegea. Ἀπὸ τούτου τοῦ χρόνου ὅκως ἐπεσρῶαλο ἀλλήλων πολλῷ καλυπτέρησι τῷ πολέμῳ ἐγίνουλο οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι (10). Quo ex tempore Lacedæmonii, quoties cum Tegeatibus congreſſi ſunt, ſuperiores extitere. VIII. And therefore it is not true, that the latter were wholly ſubdued by the Lacedemonians, as ſoon as the Bones of Oreſtes were buried in Lacedemon. IX. There was no occaſion to quote Plutarch; for he ſays nothing of what the Article imports.

(10) Herod. lib. 1. c. 68.

ANAXANDRIDES, a Comic Poet, a Native of Camirum [A], in the Iſle of Rhodes, flouriſhed about the CIſt Olympiad [B]. According to Suidas, he was the firſt, who brought upon the Stage Love-Adventures, and the Diſgrace, which attends young Ladies, who forfeit their Virginity (a). I can eaſily believe, that it was not till the Cth Olympiad, that they began to introduce upon the Stage a Character ſo difficult to ſupport as is That of ſuch young Ladies; but I cannot believe they deferred till that time intermixing Love in their Comedies. Anaxandrides was tall, and of a graceful Mien; he was very careful of his Hair, and dreſſed magnificently; he wore a purple Gown fringed with Gold (b). This Equipage did not ſuit with a Poet. He affected Pomp to ſuch a degree, that, on a day, when he was to read a Poem at Athens, he rode to the appointed Place, and recited part of the Piece on Horſeback. This Behaviour makes what is farther ſaid of him probable; viz. That he was extreamly diſguſted, whenever his Pieces did not obtain the Prize (c). He did not, like Others of his Profeſſion, reviſe and correct his Comedies, that they might enter the Liſts again with more Advantage. This capricious and moroſe Behaviour towards his Audiences occaſioned the Loſs of ſeveral fine Comedies of his Compoſition. But his Diſguſt muſt have often given way to paternal Affection; for he carried the Prize but ten times (e), and we find above twenty of his Plays quoted (ſee, in the Remark [C], the Reflexion of Athenæus); he compoſed Sixty five (f). The Athenians condemned him to be ſtarved to Death, for cenſuring their Government [D]. Perhaps the Comic Poet Alexandrides is only a Fault of the Tranſcriber; if ſo, we may ſubſtitute our Anaxandrides wherever we meet with the other [E].

(a) Πρῶτος ἔρωτας καὶ παρθένων φθορὰς εἰσήγαγεν. Primus amores, & ſtupra virginum introduxit in ſcænam. Suidas.

(b) Chamæleon Heracleotes, l. 6. de Comœdia apud Athen. lib. 9. pag. 374.

(c) Ὅτε γὰρ μὴ νικῴη λαμβάνων ἔδωκεν εἰς τὸν λιβανωτὸν κατατμῆσαι. When he was conquered, he gave his Plays to be torn to pieces, and to wrap up Frankincenſe with. Id. ib.

(e) Suidas.

(f) Idem.

(1) Camæleon Heracleotes, l. 6. de Comœdia, apud Athen. lib. 9. pag. 374.

[A] A Native of Camirum (1).] Suidas ſays ſo as well as Chamæleon; but he obſerves, that it was not the Opinion of all Authors. They were divided in their Sentiments concerning it; ſome of them would have Anaxandrides to be a Colophonian; others a Rhodian.

[B] He flouriſh'd about the CIſt Olympiad.] The anonymous Author of the Olympiads agrees, in this, with Suidas; and, as the latter obſerves, that Anaxandrides aſſiſted at the Games of King Philip of Macedon, he gives us a Matter of Fact, which fixes this Age of Anaxandrides. Beſides, it is well known, that this Poet abuſed Plato (2), and that ſome of his Comedies were cited by Ariſtotle (3). He muſt, therefore, have lived at the time mention'd by Suidas.

(2) Laërtius, in Platon. lib. 3. n. 26. Edit. 1692.

(3) Ariſtot. Rhetor. l. 3. cap. 12.

[C] See in the Remark the Reflexion of Athenæus.] Having quoted (4) a Verſe out of the Tereus of Anaxandrides, a Piece of no great Value, he takes an opportunity of mentioning what I have quoted from Chamæleon; after which, he asks, with an Air of Aſtoniſhment, how it came to paſs, that the Tereus, and ſuch other Pieces of the ſame Author, which had not come off with Victory, were preſerv'd? He might have found the Solution of this Difficulty in the very Words of Chamæleon; for they clearly intimate, that Anaxandrides did not vent the Spleen, he had conceived from the Judgment of the Spectators, againſt his own Pieces, till he was an old Man. He, therefore, ſpared ſeveral of his vanquiſh'd Comedies, before Old Age had ſour'd his Temper. Πολλὰ ἔχοντα κομψῶς τῶν δραμάτων ἠφάνιζε, δυσκολαίνων τοῖς θεαταῖς διὰ τὸ γῆρας (5). He deſtroy'd many excellent Performances, being exaſperated, through the peeviſhneſs of old Age, againſt the Spectators.

(4) Athen. l. 9. p. 373.

(5) Id. ib. pag. 374.

[D] The Athenians condemn'd him to be ſtarv'd to Death, for cenſuring their Government.] In one of his Comedies he has this Verſe,

Ἡ πόλις ἐβούλεθ' ἥ νόμων οὐδὲν μέλει,

that is,

The State will have it ſo; the State, which pays no regard to the Laws.

He only alter'd a ſingle Word in this Verſe of Euripides.

Ἡ φύσις ἐβούλεθ' ἥ νόμων οὐδὲν μέλει (6).

that is

Nature, which obſerves no Laws, will have it ſo.

(6) Euripid. ver. 295. inter incerta in Edit. Barneſii.

See Euſtratius, on the Tenth Chapter of the Sixth and Seventh Books of Ariſtotle's Morals. It is thought, that Ovid intended this Puniſhment of Anaxandrides, when he ſaid in his Poem, in Ibin. ver. 523.

Utque parum ſtabili qui carmine læſit Athenas,
Inviſus pereas deficiente cibo.

Depriv'd of Food, may ſtarving be thy Fate,
Like His, whoſe Satire laſh'd the Athenian State.

[E] We may ſubſtitute our Anaxandrides wherever we meet with the other.] This is the Opinion of Caſaubon (7). His Reaſon is, becauſe Suidas makes no mention of Alexandrides; and becauſe the ſame Piece (8), which he aſcrib'd to Alexandrides, in the Eleventh Book of Athenæus (9), is cited under the Name of Anaxandrides, in the Fourteenth Book (10). Caſaubon adds a Third Reaſon. Pollux, in the Sixth Chapter of the Ninth Book, quotes the Anchiſes of Alexandrides: Now it is certain, that Anaxandrides compos'd a Piece with this Name; Athenæus cites it in the 18th Chapter of his 6th Book (11). Meurſius is altogether of Caſaubon's Opinion. He will have the two or three Dramatic Pieces, which are aſcrib'd to Alexandrides.

(7) Caſaub. in Athen. l. 6. cap. 18. pag. 455.

(8) Entituled μελίλωτος.

(9) Cap. 2. pag. 460.

(10) Cap. 20. pag. 654.

(11) P. 263.

Digitized by Google

Alexandrides, in the Editions of Athenæus, to belong to Anaxandrides. And he aſcribes the Helena (12) and the Piſander (13), mention'd by Suidas, under the Name of Alexandrides, to Anaxandrides. See page 87. of his Treatiſe of the Iſle of Rhodes. Voſſius is of the ſame Opinion (14). So that, according to this Account, which is probable enough, there are Thirty Pieces of Anaxandrides quoted. His Theſeus, mention'd by Diogenes Laërtius (15), was unknown to Meurſius. There is the like Confuſion with reſpect to one ANAXANDRIDES of Delphos. The Scholiaſt upon Euripides cites him, (16) Ἀναξανδρίδης ὁ Δελφὸς, in relation to the Penalty, impos'd on Apollo, of ſerving Admetus for Wages, as a puniſhment for having kill'd the Serpent Python. Plutarch cites him, (17) Ἀλεξανδρίδης ὁ Δελφὸς, in relation to the Money, which Lyſander depoſited in the Temple of Delphos. He mentions elſewhere (18) an Anaxandrides, in ſpeaking of the Times, when the Prieſteſs of Delphos delivered her Oracles. At firſt ſhe delivered them but once a Year. A long time after, ſhe delivered them once a Month. It is very probable, that, in theſe two Places, Plutarch quotes the ſame Author, and that this Author is the ſame with Him, who is mention'd by the Scholiaſt upon Euripides. The Queſtion is, whether his Name be Alexandrides or Anaxandrides. Voſſius cannot tell what to think of it (19). Without doubt, The Work, mention'd in the Collection of Proverbs, publiſh'd by Andreas Schottus, from a Manuſcript of the Vatican, muſt be aſcrib'd to the ſame Anaxandrides. The Subject of the Work, mention'd in That Collection, relates to the Sacrileges committed in the Temple of Delphos, Περὶ τῶν συληθέντων ἐν Δελφοῖς ἀναθημάτων, de anathematis quæ ſacrilegio Delphis fuere ſublata; and was written by one, whoſe Name was Anaxandrides. He relates a Story, which occaſion'd the Greek Proverb, ἄκρον λάβε, καὶ μέσον ἕξεις, Take the upper Part, and you'll be ſure of the Middle. See Voſſius, pag. 320. de Hiſtoricis Græcis.

(12) Suidas in Ἀβίατερος.

(13) Id. in Ἀρισταγίτης.

(14) Voſſius de Poët. Gr. pag. 49.

(15) Diogen. Laërt. l. 3. n. 26.

(16) In Alceſtid. init.

(17) Plut. in Lyſandro, pag. 443.

(18) Id in Quæſt. Romanis, pag. 292.

(19) Voſſ. de Hiſt. Græc. pag. 502.

ANCHISES, a Trojan Prince, deſcended from Dardanus, and the Son of Capys (a), pleaſed Venus ſo much, that ſhe appeared to him in the Shape of a Nymph, in order to declare her Paſſion to him. She told him, that her Deſtiny obliged her to offer herſelf to him in Marriage; aſſuring him, that he ſhould find her a Virgin (b), and intreating him to preſent her to his Relations, that the Contract of Marriage might be ſpeedily drawn up. Anchiſes replied, like a briſk Man, that, ſince ſhe was no Goddeſs, nothing ſhould hinder him from enjoying her upon the Spot (c). She took him at his Word, and to Bed they went, &c. Towards Evening, Anchiſes fell aſleep, and, when he awaked, he perceived, that he had lain with a Goddeſs. He feared he ſhould not long ſurvive ſuch an Adventure [A]; but Venus revived his Spirits, and told him, ſhe ſhould have a Son by him, whoſe Name ſhould be Æneas; that ſhe would employ the Wood-Nymphs to nurſe the Child, 'till he was five Years of Age; and that, then, he ſhould be put into His Hands. She deſired him to beware of boaſting, that he had lain with Venus; and aſſured him, that if ever he ſhould be ſo indiſcreet, he would be Thunder-ſtruck by Jupiter (d). It is ſaid, that Anchiſes could

(a) Homer. Il. lib. 20. ver. 239.

(b) Ἀκειρήτην φιλότητος. Imperitam venerei congreſſûs. Hom. in Hymno Veneris.

(c) Πρὶν σῇ φιλότητι μιγῆναι αὐτίκα νῦν. Quo minus tibi in amore miſcear ſtatim nunc. Id ib.

(d) Id. ib.

[A] He fear'd he ſhould not long ſurvive ſuch an Adventure.] It was a Tradition, in thoſe Times, that Mortals, who lay with Goddeſſes, were not long liv'd. Wherefore Anchiſes, diſcovering his Adventure, ſupplicated Venus to have Compaſſion on him.

Ἀλλα σε τῷδε ζηνὸς γναζομαι αἰσὶν ὀχοιο
Μή με ζῶντ' ἀμενηνὸν ἐν ἀνθρώποισιν ἐάσῃς
Ναίειν· ἀλλ' ἐλεαίρ', ἐπεὶ ἠ βιοθάλμιος ἀνὴρ
Γίγνεται, ὅτε θεαῖς εὐναζέται ἀθανάτῃσι (1).

(1) Homer. in hymno Veneris pag. 348.

By Jove I beg, the Pow'r who gave thee Birth,
Let me not drag a wretched Life on Earth;
But, O! ſome pity ſhew; ſince ſhort the Date
(Such is th' irrevocable Will of Fate)
Of Him, who takes a Goddeſs to his Arms,
And boaſts th' Enjoyment of immortal Charms.

This Sentiment of the Antients appears, at firſt View, to be ill-grounded; for this intimate Union of Mortal with Immortal Beings, this Mixture, this Confuſion of Principles, ought to have been look'd upon as productive of Immortality, not as tending to ſhorten Life. Hence it is, that the moſt refined Cabala teaches, that the Elementary Inhabitants repair the Misfortune of their Deſtiny, which ſubjects them to Annihilation, by the Alliance, which they contract with Mankind——Thus a Nymph, or Sylphid, becomes immortal, and capable of the Beatitude, to which we aſpire, when ſhe is ſo happy as to be married to a Philoſopher: And a Gnome, or Sylphe, ceaſes to be mortal, as ſoon as he marries one of our Females (2). But if we conſider the Matter in all it's Lights, we ſhall find, that Anchiſes's Fear, and the Maxim he alledged, were founded upon a ſpecious Reaſon. According to the Notions of the Pagans, The Gods were jealous of their Superiority, and took great Care, that Men ſhould not forget their Inferiority: It was therefore their Buſineſs to exclude them from the Enjoyment of Goddeſſes, to make them underſtand, that ſuch dainty Morſels were not for Them. It was proper to threaten an exemplary Puniſhment, ſuch as a ſpeedy Death, if they preſumed to taſte a Pleaſure of this Nature, which the Gods reſerv'd for themſelves. It was requiſite to deter Mortals, not only from being ſo bold as to tempt a Goddeſs, but even from yielding to Declarations of Love made them by Goddeſſes, tho' under the Appearance and Diſguiſe of Women. Don't we ſee, that Human Laws puniſh with Death Servants, who debauch their Maſters Wives, or Daughters? 'Tis in vain for them to alledge in their Excuſe, that they have reſiſted repeated Sollicitations; and that ſo many Advances have been made them, and ſo many Threatnings denounc'd againſt them, that it was impoſſible for them to avoid the Snare; the Judge delivers them up to the Executioner, even upon a Suppoſition that their Excuſes are real and undeniable. The Gazettes have lately (3) inform'd us, that a Footman was hang'd at Paris for ſuch an Act. And, as, in ſome Caſes, the Publick Intereſt requires, that the Rigour of the Law ſhould go beyond Juſtice, becauſe an Injury done to a private Perſon (4) is leſs an Evil, politically ſpeaking, than the Publick Advantage, which accrues from it, is a Good; I do not believe, that Judges, animated with a rigorous Zeal for the Preſervation of Chaſtity in Families, would regard the Apology of a Servant, who ſhould alledge, that his Maſter's Daughter, or Wife, came to him in the Diſguiſe of a Servant-Maid, &c. It is neceſſary, that Lacqueys ſhould have no Pardon to hope for, even when they can plead Ignorance; becauſe ſuch Severity will keep them more upon their Guard, and make them look with Horror upon the pretended Advantage of being belov'd. It will ſerve them as a Precaution againſt Promiſes, Threats, and cunning Diſguiſes. If they could promiſe themſelves Impunity, in caſe they debauch'd a Lady in Diſguiſe, they would expect it in the Caſe of Simple Seduction; and, might they hope to go unpuniſhed, by pleading Sollicitation, they would quickly venture to turn Sollicitors themſelves, wherever they had the leaſt Hopes of Succeſs. It is neceſſary, therefore, to keep them in awe as much as poſſible; for a Maſter, who has no reaſon to believe, that his Servant will be ſo honeſt as to reſiſt all Sollicitation, can never be entirely free from Suſpicion. Now, as the Pagans look'd upon Men of the higheſt Rank to be more inferior to the Gods, than a Lacquey is to a Great Lord, we cannot wonder, that the Courts above expos'd Anchiſes to a ſevere Puniſhment, tho' he enjoy'd Venus under the Diſguiſe of a Woman.

(2) See the Comte de Gabalis, p. 54.

(3) I write this in 1698.

(4) See Tacitus, Annal. l. 14. c. 44.

[B] It

Digitized by Google

could not keep the Secret of his good Fortune [B]; and that it escaped him, as he was one day drinking with his Friends. Venus's Menace had it's Effect; he was struck with a Thunder-Bolt; but was not killed by it [C]. Some say he only lost his Sight by it [D]; others pretend, that the Wound could never be closed [E]. It is [B] It is said, that Anchises cou'd not keep the Secret of his good Fortune.] Yet Venus's Menace was very terrible.

Εἰ δέ κεν ἐξείπῃς καὶ ἐπεύξεαι ἄφρονι θυμῷ
Ἐν φιλότητι μιγῆναι ἐϋστεφάνῳ Κυθερείῃ,
Ζεύς σε χολωσάμενος βαλέει φολόεντι κεραυνῷ (5)

(5) Homer. in Hymn. Vener. sub finem.

But, indiscreet, should'st thou reveal my Love,
Thunder shall blast Thee from the Hand of Jove.

This Adventure is a Picture, which is often copied. Ladies of the highest Quality, who fall in Love with their Inferiors, are obliged to make all the Advances. They exact Secrecy, and threaten Indiscretion with terrible Punishment: And yet The Favourite, when he is a little heated with Wine, will be blabbing. Sometimes Vanity prompts him to say too much, even when he is sober. I shall quote some Authorities in relation to this Indiscretion of Anchises. "Fulminatus est Anchises, quia se cum Venere concubuisse jactabat." —— Anchises was thunder-struck for boasting, that he had lain with Venus." They are Servius's Words (6). Hyginus says, "Venus Anchisem Assaraci filium amasse, & cum eo concubuisse dicitur: Procreavit Æneam, eique præcepit ne id apud homines enunciaret. Quod Anchises inter sodales per vinum est elocutus. Ob id à Jove fulmine est ictus (7). —— "Venus is said to have fallen in Love with Anchises, the Son of Assaracus (8), and to have lain with him. She conceiv'd Æneas by him, and enjoyn'd him not to reveal it to Men. But Anchises in his Cups disclos'd the Secret to his Companions; for which Reason he was thunder-struck by Jupiter".

(6) Servius in Æneid. lib. 2. ver. 649.

(7) Hyg. cap. 94.

(8) Hyginus should have said that Capys was his Father, and not Assaracus, who was Capys's Father.

[C] He was struck with a Thunder-bolt, but was not kill'd by it.] Venus, discovering that Anchises had boasted of the Favours she had bestowed upon him, made her complaints to Jupiter, and obtain'd that he should be Thunder-struck: But, not being willing to destroy him, and knowing he could not recover from the Stroke of a Thunder-bolt, she took care to turn it aside. "Cum inter æquales exultaret Anchises, gloriatus traditur de concubitu Veneris, quod cum Jovi Venus questa esset, emeruit ut in Anchisem fulmina mitterentur. Sed Venus eum cum fulmine posse vidisset interimi, miserata juvenem in aliam partem detorsit. Anchises tamen afflatus igne cœlesti semper debilis vixit (9)." This is another Original, of which Copies have been taken in all Ages. The Fair are angry with an indiscreet Gallant, and are fond of making him sensible of his Fault; but They do not carry it too far; there is room left for Repentance.

(9) Servius in Æneid. lib. 2. ver. 649.

[D] He only lost his Sight by it.] Servius informs us, that Anchises's Sight was blasted by Lightning for boasting of the Favours he had received from Venus; Quod cum jactaret Anchises afflatus est fulmine, oculoque privatus est (10). The Singular Oculo must not make us think, that he lost but one Eye; for, in another Place (11), Servius makes use of the Authority of Theocritus to inform us, that it was a real Blindness.

(10) Servius upon these two Lines of the first Book of the Æneid; Tunc ille Æneas, quem Dardanio Anchisæ Alma Venus Phrygii genuit Simoentis ad undas?

[E] Others pretend, that the Wound could never be closed.] In Virgil, he complains only of a great Weakness, which the Thunder had occasioned in him.

Jampridem invisus divis & inutilis annos
Demoror, ex quo me divum pater atque hominum Rex
Fulminis adflavit ventis, & contigit igni (12).

(11) In Æneid. lib. 2. ver. 687.

'Tis long, since I, for my cœlestial Wife,
Loath'd by the Gods, have dragged a lingring Life;
Since ev'ry Hour and Moment I expire,
Blasted from Heav'n by Jove's avenging Fire.

(12) Virgil. Æn. lib. 2. ver. 647.

DRYDEN.

I wonder, that Scarron, whose Burlesque Paraphrase of this Passage of Virgil, shews that he was not ignorant of the Cause of this Misfortune, has not given it a more humorous Turn; the Subject, I think, was capable of being set in a very ludicrous Light, especially in the Hands of such a Poet. However, this is his Translation.

Vieil, cassé, mal propre à la guerre,
Je ne sers de rien sur la terre;
Spectre qui n'ai plus que la voix,
J'y suis un inutile poids.
Depuis le tems que de son foudre
Jupin me voulut mettre en poudre,
Depuis le tems qu'il m'effraya
Ce grand Dieu qui me giboya,
Par une vengeance secrette;
Mais je suis personne discrete,
Je n'en dirai point le sujet;
Suffit que j'aurois eu mon fait
Sans Venus qui sauva ma vie.
J'ay depuis eu cent fois envie
De m'aller pendre un beau matin,
Et finir mon chien de destin.

Crazy, and old, I curse my Birth,
An useless Load to Mother Earth;
Since Jove, to crush Anchises dead,
Darted his Thunder at my Head.
A secret Vengeance on me fell;
The Reason why ----- I must not tell ----
A Vengeance, which had been my end,
Had not Dame Venus stood my Friend.
An hundred times I have intended
This wretched Corps should be suspended;
And, hanging on some fatal Tree,
To end That Bitch, my Destiny.

If we compare together a Passage of Plutarch, and another of Dionysius Halicarnasseus, we shall prove, that the Thunderbolt inflicted a Wound, which never closed up. Plutarch says (13), that if Musk gives a good Scent to the most ragged Cloaths (14); on the other hand, an Ulcer makes the richest Garments stink. This is his Thought; but, whereas I make him speak in general, he instances particularly in Anchises. The Greek runs thus;

(13) Plutarch de Vitio & Virtute, Oper. moral. pag. 100.

Τῷ δ' Ἀγχίσῃ τὸ ῥάκος ἰχῶρα πονηρὸν ἐξεδίδου,
Μοτῷ καλασάζοντα βύσσινον φάρος.

(14) I keep to the Sense, not the Words, of Plutarch.

Now, since, according to the common Acceptation, the Word ῥάκος signifies Rags and Tatters; it is not probable, that it is the true reading of the Greek Text: Wherefore a learned Critic reads ἕλκος, a Wound, or an Ulcer, instead of ῥάκος (15). The Sense, then, is This; Anchises's Wound, oozing thro' the dressing, distained his Linnen Garment. It it not sufficient to know, that Plutarch quotes the Words of a Poet; we should know who he is (16). Meziriac will inform us of this; He found them in Dionysius Halicarnasseus (17), who quotes some Lines of Sophocles, the third whereof is the same which Plutarch quotes.

(15) Meziriac, Ovid's Epistles, p. 671.

(16) Ibid. pag. 670.

(17) Dion. Halicarn. lib. 1. c. 48.

Νῦν δ' ἐν πυλαισιν Αἰνείας ὁ τῆς θεᾶς
Πάρες' ἐπ' ὤμων πατέρ' ἔχων, κεραυνίᾳ
Μοῖ καλασάζοντα βύσσινον φάρος (18).

(18) These Verses of Sophocles are taken from his Laocoon.

Next the Son of Venus appeared at the Gates, carrying his Father on his Shoulders, whose Wound, caused by Thunder, still continued to stain his Linnen Garment.

Meziriac has corrected a Fault in the beginning of the third Verse of Sophocles; instead of νῦτα, as we read in all the Editions Dionysius Halicarnasseus, he has put μοῖ. In which there is nothing contrary to the Rules of Criticism. The comparing of Authors, who is said he lived to the Age of Eighty Years, and was buried on Mount Ida [F], where his Tomb was honoured by the Shepherds. This Opinion differs very much from That of Virgil; for, according to That Poet, the same Night that Troy was taken, Æneas took his Father upon his Shoulders [G], and carried him to a Place of Safety; nor did the old Man die, before the Trojans, who joined Æneas, arrived in Sicily, after innumerable Fatigues. This Affection of Æneas for his Father, and the Care he took to save the Penates, are the Foundation of the Character, which distinguishes him from other Heroes: This Character consists in Piety (e). Some say, that Anchises lived 'till his Son's Arrival in Italy, That Land of Promise, which the Destinies commanded him to go in search of, amidst a thousand Dangers (f). Cato, Dionysius Halicarnasseus, and Strabo, are of this Opinion. See the end of the Remark [F]. Lastly, the Love of Venus for Anchises was not a transient Passion; her first Lying-in did not satisfy her; she bore a second Son to Anchises, as Apollodorus tells us in the third Book of his Bibliotheca.

Digitized by Google

(e) Virgil often calls him Pius Æneas.

(f) See among other Passages the first Book of the Æneids, ver. 205, & 258.

who have, at different times, quoted the same Passage, often discovers the true Reading. Sylburgius, who revised the Latin Translation of Dionysius Halicarnasseus, done by Sigismund Gelenius, has not corrected the third Verse of Sophocles. Gelenius's Version of the three Lines is This;

Nunc in porta est Æneas Deæ filius,
Humeris bajulans Patrem fulminata
Terga amictum fluxa veste byssina.

Here is nothing of the suppurating Wound; besides, Anchises is represented as wounded in the Back; that is, the Translator has omitted what Sophocles said, and added what he did not say. If the ancient Writers were to return into the World, they would be amazed to find so many things in their Books, which they never dreamt of.

[F] He was buried on Mount Ida.] Eustathius relates this (19), but Pausanias is of a different Opinion. He says, that Æneas, going to Sicily, put into Laconia, and built there two Cities; and that Anchises, dying at the Foot of a Mountain in Arcadia, was buried there; for which Reason the Mountain was called Anchisia (20). Pausanias adds, That the Ruins of a Temple of Venus were seen near this Sepulchre of Anchises; and that the Inhabitants of Troy could no where shew the Tomb of This old Man. Stephen of Byzantium says, that Anchises was buried in a City of Thrace, built by Æneas (21); or rather, he quotes an old Scholiast, whose Name was Theon, who said so. Tzetzes is of the same Opinion; only he says, that This City was in Macedonia (22). Virgil carries the good Man as far as Sicily, where he makes him die; with this he concludes the long Story, which his Hero related to Queen Dido.

(19) Eustathius, in Iliad. l. 12.

(20) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 247.

(21) Steph. Byzant. in Ἄγκισα.

(22) In Lycophr.

Hinc Drepani me portus & illætabilis ora
Accipit. Hinc pelagi tot tempestatibus actus,
Heu genitorem, omnis curæ casusque levamen,
Amitto Anchisen. Hic me, pater optime, fessum
Deseris, heu tantis nequicquam erepte periclis (23).

(23) Virgil. Æn. lib. 3. ver. 707.

At length on Shore the weary Fleet arriv'd;
Which Drepanum's unhappy Port receiv'd.
Here, after endless Labours, often tost
By raging Storms, and driven on ev'ry Coast,
My dear, dear Father, spent with Age, I lost;
Ease of my Care, and Solace of my Pain,
Sav'd thro' a thousand Toils, but sav'd in vain.
DRYDEN.

Servius tells us, that Anchises's Tomb was on Mount Eryce near Drepanum (24). I have named three Writers, who say, that Anchises died in Italy. Cato (25), Dionysius Halicarnasseus (26), Strabo (27), are my Authorities.

(24) Serv. in Æn. lib. 1. ver. 570.

(25) Apud Servium ib.

[G] Took his Father upon his Shoulders.] The Words of Virgil are so excellent, that they deserve to be inserted in this place.

(26) Antiq. lib. 1. c. 64.

(27) Lib. 5. pag. 158.

Ergo age, chare pater, cervici imponere nostræ,
Ipse subibo humeris, nec me labor iste gravabit (28).
- - - - - - - - -
Hæc fatus, latos humeros subjectaque colla
Veste super, fulvique insternor pelle leonis,
Succedoque oneri. Dextræ se parvus Iülus
Implicuit, sequiturque patrem non passibus æquis
- - - - - - - - (29).
Nunc omnes terrent auræ: sonus excitat omnis
Suspensum, & pariter comitique onerique timentem (30).

(28) Virgil. Æn. lib. 2. ver. 707.

(29) Ibid. ver. 721.

(30) Ibid. ver. 728.

Haste, my dear Father, ('tis no time to wait)
And load my Shoulders with a willing Freight.
- - - - - - - - -
Thus, ordering all that Prudence could provide,
I cloath my Shoulders with a Lion's Hide,
And yellow Spoils; then on my bending Back
The welcome Load of my dear Father take:
While on my better Hand Anchises hung,
And with unequal Paces tript along.
- - - - - - - - -
At ev'ry Shadow I am seiz'd with Fear,
Not for myself, but for the Charge I bear.
DRYDEN.

The Poets have highly extolled this Action; and it deserved it. They say, that the Flames had a regard for Æneas, and that, for fear of hurting a Son, who shewed so great an Affection for his Father, they divided, and left a free Passage for him (31).

(31) See several Authorities for this in La Cerda's Commentary upon this Passage of Virgil.

ANCILLON (DAVID), Minister of the Reformed Church at Metz, was born in that Town (a), the Seventeenth of March, 1617. At Nine or Ten Years of Age, he studied in the College of the Jesuits, which was then the only One at Metz, where good Literature was taught (b); and from the very first he proved so hopeful a Youth, that the chief Persons of the Society neglected nothing to give him a Relish of their Religion, and make him one of their Order; but he vigorously opposed them; and from that time took up a Resolution to study Divinity (c). He was so indefatigable in his Studies (d), that it was often necessary to employ the paternal Authority to interrupt them; for he was excessively, and, if I may so say, intemperately studious (e). He took a Journey to Geneva, in the Year 1633 (f), where he went through a Course of Philosophy under Mr du Pan (g), and studied Divinity under the Professors Spanheim, Deodati, and Tronchin, who had a particular Love and Esteem for him (h). He left Geneva, in the Month of April 1641, and presented himself to the Synod of Charenton, to be admitted into the Ministry (i). His Examiners admired his Capacity, and the Ministers of Paris his Modesty (k); and the whole Assembly

(a) Discourse on the Life of Mr Ancillon, p. 6.

(b) Ib. p. 8.

(c) Ib. p. 9.

(d) Ib. p. 13.

(e) Ibid. p. 13, 14.

(f) Ibid. pag. 14.

(g) Ibid. p. 18.

(b) Ibid. pag. 20, 21.

(i) Ibid. pag. 31.

(k) Ibid. pag. 35.

Digitized by Google

ſembly was ſo well pleaſed with him, that they gave him the moſt conſiderable vacant Benefice (l); which was That of Meaux. He exerciſed his Miniſtry there, with all imaginable Satisfaction, 'till the Year 1653. He was tenderly beloved by his Flock; and He married very advantageouſly [A]. He acquired a great Reputation by his Learning, Eloquence, and Virtue; and the Roman Catholics themſelves had a particular Eſteem for him. He diſplay'd his fine Talents, with greater Luſtre and Succeſs, at Metz, where he was Miniſter from the Year 1653, 'till the Revocation of the Edict of Nantz in 1685. After this fatal Blow, he retired to Francfort (m), and, having preached in the French Church at Hanaw, the whole Congregation were ſo edified, that they immediately deſired a meeting of the Heads of each Family, to requeſt him to afford them his Miniſtry (n).—He agreed to the Propoſal, which was made to him by ſome Deputies, who obtained all that they deſired. He began to exerciſe his Miniſtry in That Church, at the end of the Year 1685 (o). We ſhall ſee, why he ſoon returned to Francfort [B]; where he would have taken up his Reſidence, had not the Condition of his Family, which was numerous, obliged him to go where he might ſettle them (p). He made choice of Berlin, and met with a very favourable Reception from his Electoral Highneſs of Brandenburg (q). He was made Miniſter of Berlin, and had the Satisfaction to ſee his eldeſt Son appointed Judge and Director of the French, who were in that City (r); and his other Son gratified with a Penſion, and maintained in the Univerſity of Francfort on the Oder, and at laſt Miniſter in Ordinary of the Capital (s). He had likewiſe the Satisfaction of ſeeing his Brother made Judge of the French, (l) Ibid. pag. 36.

(m) Ibid. pag. 352.

(n) Ibid. pag. 353.

(o) Ibid. pag. 354.

(p) Ibid. pag. 366.

(q) Ibid. pag. 372, & ſeq.

(r) Ibid. pag. 375.

(s) Ibid. pag. 397.

[A] He married very advantageouſly.] The manner how this Affair was managed is very curious. "The chief Heads of the Families at Meaux, being "ſenſible of the great Worth of their Miniſter, and "and hearing him often give out, that he would "return to Metz, to viſit his Father, and his Re"lations, whom he had not ſeen for ſeveral Years, "were afraid of loſing him. They ſought a thou"ſand Expedients to engage his longer Continuance "among them. The ſureſt way, they thought, "was to marry him to a rich Perſon, worthy of "him, and whoſe Eſtate lay in that Country, or in "the Neighbourhood. Some one recollected, that "he had heard ſay, that Mr Ancillon, having "preached one Sunday Morning at Charenton, met "with a general Applauſe; but that, above all others, "Mr Macaire, a venerable old Man, of an exem"plary Virtue and Piety, and who had a great Eſtate "in Paris, and about Meaux, beſtowed on him "a thouſand Benedictions, and Praiſes, and ſaid in "the hearing of many, who ſat near him at Church, "That he but one Daughter, his only Child, whom "he tenderly loved, but that, if That Gentleman, "meaning Mr Ancillon, ſhould come and demand her "of him in Marriage, I would give her to him "with all his Heart. They went to him, and asked "him, whether he continued in the ſame Mind. "He anſwered, that he did; and added new Teſti"monies of Eſteem and Affection for Mr Ancillon; "inſomuch, that the Marriage was concluded in the "Year 1649, and conſummated a little while after. "D. Mary Macaire, his Spouſe, was very young, "being but fourteen Years of Age. But, having, at "theſe tender Years, every growing Virtue, it will "appear, by the Sequel of this Diſcourſe, that ſhe "proved not only an Help to him in Piety, and "an agreeable Companion; but that he relied upon "her entirely in the Management of his domeſtic "Concerns (1).

(1) Diſcourſe on the Life of Mr Ancillon, pag. 75. & ſeq.

[B] He ſoon returned to Francfort.] His Sermons were ſoon the Subject of Converſation at Hanaw (2). "Several Perſons, who had left the French Congre"gation out of Diſcontent, returned to it again. "The Profeſſors of Divinity, the German and Dutch "Miniſters, were often his Hearers. The Count of "Hanaw himſelf, who had never been ſeen in that "Church, was pleaſed to come and hear Mr An"cillon: They came thither from the neighbouring "Places, and even from Francfort. ----- People, "who did not underſtand French, came thither in "Crouds, ſaying, it was a Pleaſure to them to ſee "him ſpeak. Inde iræ & lachrymæ. This Diſtinction "gave Jealouſy to the other two Miniſters: Nature, "diſordered by this Paſſion, forgot her Duty (3). "They took Umbrage at the Marks of Eſteem and "and Affection, which were ſhewn to this new Col"league; they were chagrin'd at it; and created him a "thouſand Diſquiets, to oblige him voluntarily to quit "a Poſt, from which they could not drive him. "The Virtue of Mr Ancillon was expoſed to a ſecond "Trial. For his two Relations (4), who had ſhewn "a great Readineſs to oblige him, and ſeemed to "wiſh they could turn Stones into Bread, for his "Comfort, all the Time he was in their City, as "a Stranger, began to ſhun him, when he had the "Direction of their Flock: They created him a thou"ſand Mortifications; and, if it had been in their "Power, they would willingly have turned Bread in"to Stones, to expel him; ſo burthenſome was he "grown to them. ------- This Conduct pro"duced two conſiderable Effects (5): One was, That "the Roman Catholics, and the Prophane, made it "a Subject of Raillery. The other, that it exaſpera"ted the People (6). Mr Ancillon was their Favo"rite, and, if he would have made uſe of it, might, "perhaps, have ſurmounted the Malice of his Ene"mies; but, as he was of Opinion, that a faithful "Paſtor ought not to eſtabliſh himſelf at the expence "of a Diviſion between the Flock, and their Mini"ſters, and as he had ever been an Enemy to Parties, "and exclaimed againſt Cabals and Factions, he would "take no Advantage of the Diſpoſition of the People "towards him, nor ſuffer them to ſtir in the Affair. "——— Having, therefore, tried whatever Charity "and Honeſty ſuggeſted to him, in Order to bring "theſe two Men to their Duty, he reſolv'd to leave "Hanaw; a Town, which he had looked upon as a "Place of Refuge, or a ſecure Harbour, after a "Storm; but which was now become a Field of "Battel, in which he muſt continually fight, and "where his Patience, which had already undergone "ſeveral great Trials, might at laſt be overcome; he "therefore determined to abandon it (7). —— He "left Hanaw, without Noiſe, when it was leaſt ex"pected; or rather, he ſuffered himſelf to be reſcu"ed out of the Hands of his Enemies, and of his "Friends (8). The former, holding him, as it were, "by one Hand, treated him ill; the latter, holding "him by the other, endeavoured to reſcue him from "Oppreſſion; and both were ready to come to an "Engagement, and try their Strength. To avoid "this Scandal, he ſacrificed his Intereſt to the Pub"lic Peace; he went away privately, leaſt his Friends, "by endeavouring to ſtop him, ſhould kindle a Fire, "lurking under the Aſhes, which he was willing to "extinguiſh."

(2) Ibid. pag. 354.

(3) Ibid. pag. 356.

(4) One of them had been married to Mr Ancillon's Siſter, and the other was actually married to his Niece. ibid. pag. 353.

(5) Ibid. pag. 357.

(6) Ibid. pag. 359.

(7) Ibid. pag. 360.

(8) Ibid. pag. 361.

A REMARK upon the Jealouſy of Eloquence.

I have obſerved, I think, elſewhere (9), that the Jealouſy of Eloquence is of all the moſt violent; the ſcandalous Diviſions it produces are but too frequently ſeen. The Reflexions, which may be made upon it, are only fit to be ſuppreſſed. The Subject is too nice, and too invidious. I ſhall only remark, without alluding to any particular Caſe, that, in this Affair, the People do not behave with due Prudence and Charity. They ſhould chuſe Paſtors of nearly equal Abilities; or, if one among them is remarkably ſuperior to his Colleagues, they ſhould not diſtinguiſh him in ſo particular a manner. They have no regard to human Weakneſs; they run in Crowds to the Sermons of one Preacher, and leave the Auditory of the reſt

(9) In the Remark [B] of the Article ATTICUS.

Digitized by Google

French, in the States of Brandenburg [C]; and Mr Cayart, his Son-in-law, Engineer to his Electoral Highneſs (t). He enjoyed theſe Comforts, and ſeveral others, 'till his Death, which he underwent with all the Sentiments of Piety of a true Miniſter of JESUS CHRIST, at Berlin, on the 3d of September 1692, being Seventy five Years of Age (u). I could have made this Article much longer than I have done; for the Book, out of which I have taken it, contains many Particulars: But it being a Work, which it will be more eaſy to conſult, than to procure this Dictionary, I thought it more adviſeable to refer the Reader to it, than to make too many Extracts from it (x). I ſhould take another Method, if I had only Manuſcript Memoirs. I ſhall inſiſt but upon two Particulars; one of which relates to the Library of the late Mr Ancillon, and his manner of ſtudying [D]; the other relates to the Books, which (t) Ibid. pag. 395.

(u) Ibid. pag. 487.

(x) It is intituled, A Diſcourſe on the Life of the late Mr Ancillon, and his laſt Moments. It was printed at Baſil in 1698, and contains 500 pages in 12mo.

reſt almoſt empty. They take ſo little Care to conceal their Preference, that their Imprudence may be accounted the chief Cauſe of the Diſcord. It is a Seed of Diſſenſion: wiſe Men are not ſo indiſcreet: All Auditors ſhould follow this Model; but, becauſe it can ſcarce be expected that the People will be ſo prudent, perhaps the beſt way would be, that thoſe, who proceed to Elections, ſhould avoid too great an Inequality of Talents, and conſider, that, in ſome Profeſſions, many Perſons approve of this Law of the Epheſians, Let no one among us excel; and, if any one has this Advantage, let him be rather any where elſe, than in our City (10). This Law was condemned by Heraclitus (11); but he was a Philoſopher. The following Remark was made by the Author of the Book, which I have often quoted. "Mr Ancillon, "ſays he (12), having none of the Faults, which "have been obſerved to be the uſual Cauſe of the "Diviſions, which happen among Miniſters of the "ſame Church, viz. I. A fond Conceit of one's own "Opinions, and a Deſire of ſpreading them; II. A "love of Eſteem and worldly Glory; III. A love of "Power; IV. A love of Intereſt; and having beſides a reſpect for Mr Ferry's old Age (13), and "his Merit, which was Proof againſt a great Number of Years, forced, as it were, that great Man "to remain conſtantly united to him."

(10) See the following Citation.

(11) Eſt apud Heraclitum phyſicum de principe Epheſiorum Hermodoro. Univerſos ait Epheſios eſſe morte mulctandos, quod quum civitate expellerent Hermodorum ita locuti ſunt: Nemo de nobis unus excellat, ſed, ſi q ita extiterit, alio in loco, et apud alios ſit. Cicero, Tuſcul. Quæſt. l. 5. fol. 278.

(12) Diſcourſe on the Life of Mr Ancillon, p. 93.

(13) He was Mr Ancillon's Collegue at Metz.

[C] He had the Satisfaction of ſeeing his Brother (14) made Judge of the French, in the States of Brandenburg.] "An Office, which he ſtill actually "exerciſes with Honour; but, as laborious as it is, "it does not ſo wholly engroſs his Time, as to prevent him from publiſhing ſeveral ſolid and judicious Pieces, in the Journals of Berlin, which ſhews "the Solidity, and vaſt Extent, of his Knowledge "and Learning (15)."

(14) He had been a famous Advocate at Metz.

(15) Diſcourſe, &c. pag. 102, 392, 393.

[D] The Library of the late Mr Ancillon, and his manner of Studying.] The Eſtate, which he gained by his Marriage, having put him in a Condition of "gratifying his favourite Paſſion (16), he bought "all the capital Books, which may be called the Pillars of a great Library; ſuch as the moſt curious "Bibles, either for the Editions or Notes; ſeveral "Dictionaries; the moſt excellent Commentaries on "the Scripture; the Works of the Fathers; Collections of Councils; Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories; and ſeveral others of the like Nature; all of the beſt "Editions (17). He obſerved this Maxim ever after, "and gave good Reaſons for it. An Account of "which would be too tedious; however, the Subſtance of them, in few Words, is this. He ſaid, "that the leſs the Eye is fatigued in reading a Book, "the more at liberty the Mind is to judge of it. "That, as the Beauties and Faults of it are more "eaſily perceived, when it is printed, than in Manuſcript; ſo the ſame Beauties and Faults are more "clearly ſeen, when it is printed in a fair Character, "and upon good Paper, than when it is printed on "bad Paper, or with a bad Letter. Having thus laid "a good Foundation for a Library, he increaſed it "with all the good Books, which came out afterwards. He had the Pleaſure of reading all the new "Books; for his Friends in Paris, Holland, England, "Germany, Switzerland, and Geneva, with whom he "kept a ſtrict Correſpondence, ſent them to him, "as ſoon as they were expoſed to Sale. The Opinion of thoſe, who ſay, that the firſt Editions are "the leaſt valuable, becauſe they are of no uſe, but "to make the Works of an Author appear in a fairer "Character, did not abate his Curioſity. He was "not ignorant, that the famous Mr Menage, Dean "of St Peter's, at Angers, in his Epiſtle Dedicatory "to his Etymologies of the French Tongue, ſpeaking "to Mr Du Puy, tells him, That he had formerly "learnt from him, that Mr Loyſel, a famous Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, uſed to ſay of firſt "Editions, That they only ſerve to make the Works "of an Author appear in a fairer Character; that it "was very probable this Judicious Gentleman ſaid "this of all ſorts of Books, but that it was more true "of Dictionaries, than of any other kind of Books. "He knew very well, that others were of Opinion, "that the firſt Editions of Books were only to be "looked upon as imperfect Eſſays, which Authors "propoſe to the Learned, to have their Opinion of "them. But this was no reſtraint to his Eagerneſs; "and, the Event teaching him afterwards, that he "ran no great riſque (18), he did not diſcontinue "it. And, indeed, we have ſeen, hitherto, but few "Authors, in this reſpect, like Cardinal du Perron, "who ſpared neither Pains nor Expence in his "Works, and who had them twice printed; the "firſt time, to diſtribute only a few Copies to particular Friends, on which they might make their "Obſervations; and the ſecond time, to give them "to the Public, ſuch as he at laſt determined to "publiſh them; and who, to prevent their being "publiſhed againſt his Will, after the firſt Manner, "cauſed them to be printed in his own Houſe, "where he ſet up a Printing-Preſs for that purpoſe."

(18) See below Cant. (29).

Mr Ancillon's Library was "very curious and "large; he increaſed it, daily, with all that appeared "new and valuable in the Republic of Letters; inſomuch, that, at laſt, it became one of the fineſt "of any private Man in the Kingdom. Foreigners "of Curioſity did not fail to ſee it, as they went "through the City of Metz; it being the greateſt "Rarity of that Town (19)." As ſoon as he ſaw the Catalogue of the pretended Heretical Books, drawn up by the Archbiſhop of Paris, in the Year 1685, he ſelected all the Books, "which were ordered to be "ſuppreſſed, which made up his Library in foreign "Countries (20); his own having been, as it were, "given up to be plundred, after the Revocation of "the Edict of Nantes. None would have remained, "if thoſe, which he concealed, had not eſcaped the "Greedineſs, with which the reſt were carried away. —— The Monks, and the Clergy of Metz, "and the adjacent Towns, had long coveted Mr Ancillon's Library (21); his forced and haſty De"parture ſupplied them with a fair Pretence to appropriate it to themſelves. Some propoſed to buy "it in the Groſs; others would have it ſold by Retail; but neither of them intended to pay for it; "they only deſired to get it into their Poſſeſſion. "The laſt Expedient was followed, as being more "proper to favour this unjuſt Deſign: A Crowd of "Eccleſiaſtics of all Orders came in, from all Parts, "to this noble and rich Library; which had been "Forty four Years in collecting, with Pleaſure and "Choice; and which conſiſted only of rare Books, "and worthy of the Curioſity of the moſt learned "Men: They made ſeveral Parcels of them, and, "going away, they gave Money to a young Girl, "of about twelve or thirteen Years of Age, who was "looking upon them, that they might ſay they had "paid the Price of them. In this manner Mr Ancillon ſaw his precious Collection diſperſed, which "he had made, and on which he had ſet his Affections, and, as we may ſay, his very Heart." Note, That the loſs of this Library was attended with the loſs of a vaſt Number of Letters, which were deſigned for the Preſs (22), and which Mr Ancillon

(16) He often ſaid, of himſelf, that he was Book-mad, ibid. pag. 105.

(17) Ib'd. pag. 77.

(19) Diſcourſe, &c. p. 102, 103.

(20) Ibid. pag. 328.

(21) Ibid. pag. 383.

(22) Ibid. pag. 342.

Digitized by Google

which he publiſhed [E]. As to the reſt, I ſhall obſerve, in general, that the Diſcourſe, which

(14) I read of the uſual Talk Monſieur, they called each other My Dear Attic. Ibid.

cillon had received from many learned Men. He deſigned chiefly to print thoſe, which Mr Daillé, his intimate Friend (14), had wrote to him. What a Loſs was this!

REFLECTION on the Fate of ſome Libraries, and the Indolence of thoſe, who wait for ſecond Editions.

This may afford copious Matter for Reflexion: For is it not a deplorable Conſideration, to think, that a ſingle Day may undo, what has been compleated with a thouſand Cares, and, at a vaſt Expence, during many Years? Is it not a melancholy Fate, to be expoſed to loſe, in a Moment, what has been a long time purchaſing, by innocent Means, and been treaſured up, as a perpetual Source of very lawful Pleaſure, and honeſt Inſtruction? To be deprived, in a Moment, of a vaſt Number of Volumes, which have been ſo carefully collected, and ſo much one's Delight, is it not an hard and cruel Deſtiny? If the Flames had devoured them, one could more eaſily bear the Loſs; but, without a ſpecial Grace of God, one cannot ſupport, that they ſhould become the Prey of an unjuſt Poſſeſſor, who is at no other Trouble, than that of tranſporting them to his own Houſe. The Triumvirate, which diſpoſſeſt of their Lands, thoſe, who had cultivated them, during their whole Life, and gave them to others, who had contributed nothing towards their Improvement, did not occaſion ſo ſenſible a Grief, as that of the Learned, who have ſeen their Libraries plundred, and fallen into the Hands of a Perſecutor, worthy of hatred, if he acted againſt his Conſcience, and deſerving of Pity, if his falſe Devotion perſuaded him, that it was a thing acceptable to God.

Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit,
Barbarus has ſegetes (25)?

(25) Virgil. Ecl. 1. ver. 71.

Did we for theſe Barbarians plant, and ſow?
On theſe, on theſe, our happy Fields beſtow?
DRYDEN.

This was the Complaint of thoſe good People of Italy, who found themſelves obliged to ſurrender their Patrimony to the Soldier of the Triumvirate.

- - - - en! queis conſevimus agros!
Inſere nunc, Melibœe pyros, pone ordine vites (26).

(26) Id. ib.

Now let me graft my Pears, and prune my Vine;
The Fruit is theirs, the Labour only mine.
DRYDEN.

- - - - vivi pervenimus advena noſtri,
Quod nunquam veriti ſumus, ut poſſeſſor agelli
Diceret, hæc mea ſunt, veteres migrate coloni (27).

(27) Idem, Ecl. 9. v. 2.

The Time is come, I never thought to ſee,
(Strange Revolution for my Farm and me)
When the grim Captain, in a ſurly tone,
Cries out, pack up, ye Raſcals, and be gone.
DRYDEN.

Mr Ancillon, and many others, might have adapted moſt of theſe Expreſſions to their Fortune. Perhaps it were better to have no Affections, than to ſet them on a Library; when, perhaps we may be reduced to addreſs it in this manner:

Nuper ſollicitum quæ mihi tædium,
Nunc deſiderium, curaque non levis (28).

(28) Horat. Od. 14. lib. 2. ver. 17.

O! lately, thou, my anxious Fear,
Now my ſad Loſs, and heavy Care!

But, if poſſible, let us forget the unhappy and fatal Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, which was attended with ſo many Acts of Injuſtice. Let us rather caſt our Eyes on Objects, which do not raiſe the Paſſions into a Ferment. Let us praiſe the good Taſte of this able Divine. He was for having the firſt Editions of Books, though it was very probable they would be reprinted, with Additions and Corrections (29). This was to underſtand things; this we may call Love of Books, and Eagerneſs after Inſtruction: But they, who can reſt ſatisfied without a Book, 'till it be reprinted, make it appear, that they are ſatisfied with their Ignorance, and that they had rather ſave a few Piſtoles, than acquire Inſtruction. I ſpeak of thoſe, (and the Number of them is very great) who are perſuaded, on the one ſide, that a new Book will afford them much Information; and who, though they are able to purchaſe it, defer the buying of it, becauſe they are told, that there will be publiſhed better, or cheaper, Editions. This Delay cannot be ſufficiently blamed: It is a ſhameful Neglect of Learning. Mr Bigot told me, one Day, that a Man of Roüen, who applied himſelf to the Study of Genealogies, would willingly have improved by the Works of Father Anſelm; and yet he did not purchaſe them; but waited for the ſecond Edition, which never came out; thus he died, without ſatisfying his Curioſity. Mr Bigot repreſented to him, ſeveral times, that it was better to have two Editions of a Book, than to deprive one's ſelf of the Advantage, which might accrue by reading the firſt; and that a Man judges wrong of the value of things, who preſers three or four Crowns to ſuch a Profit. They, who can afford it, ought to provide themſelves with the firſt Editions. I confeſs the foreign Editions of Books are not ſo expenſive: But are they faithful? Is there nothing altered in, or added to, them? Did not the Abbot de la Roque publickly complain (30), that the Printers of Holland had corrupted his Book? I have been aſſured, but a few Days ago, that the Hiſtory of Davila, and That of Strada, printed in the Netherlands, are not exactly the ſame with the Italian Editions; the Bookſellers of Flanders having ſuppreſſed, or altered, ſome things, out of Complaiſance to ſome illuſtrious Families. I may be told, that the Author often corrects his Faults in the ſecond Edition; I own it: But they are not always real Faults; they are Alterations, which he ſacrifices to prudential Reaſons, to his Repoſe, and to the Injuſtice of his too powerful Cenſurers. The ſecond Edition, which Mezerai publiſh'd, of his Chronological Abridgment, is the moſt correct; for he left out ſome Miſtakes; but he omitted likewiſe ſome Truths, which were ungrateful; and, for this Reaſon, the Curious endeavour to get the Edition in Quarto, which is the firſt; and pay a great Price for it. I ſay nothing of the Advantage of comparing Editions. It is ſo great, when an able Writer has carefully reviſed his Work, that his firſt Eſſay deſerves to be kept. All this will make you ſenſible, that Mr Ancillon knew very well what belonged to a Library.

(30) In a Preface to his Journal des Sçavans. See alſo the Remark [F] of the Article PELISSON, towards the end.

I proceed to his Method of Studying. "He ſpent "no time in vain and uſeleſs Studies. He read, "indeed, all ſorts of Books, even the ancient and "modern Romances. He believed, that there was "no Book, but what might be uſeful; and uſed to "repeat theſe Words, aſcribed to Virgil, Aurum ex "ſtercore Ennii colligo (31). —— I collect Gold out "of Ennius's Dung. We find, ſaid he ſometimes, "even in neglected Authors, very curious Particulars, "which are not to be met with elſewhere; and, if "it were only the Style, there is always ſomething "to be got by the reading of them. But he did not "apply his Mind to them; he made only impor- "tant Books, and ſerious Things, the principal Sub- "ject of his Studies. —— He made a very great Dif- "ference between the reading of Books, which, as "he himſelf ſaid, he only looked into, that he might "not be ignorant of any thing, and the reading of "thoſe, which were uſeful to his Profeſſion. He "read the firſt but once, and curſorily, perfunctoriè, "and, as the Latin Proverb ſays, ſicut canis ad Ni- "lum bibens & fugiens; but he read other Books "ſeveral times over, with Care and Application: "The firſt time, he ſaid, ſerved only to give him a "general Notion of the Subject, and the ſecond en- "abled him to obſerve the Beauties of it. Indexes, "which other great Men have called The Soul of "Books, were entirely uſeleſs to him, becauſe he "read them with Application, and oftener than once. "Beſides, he had a very happy Memory, and, par- "ticularly, a local one, of great uſe to Men of Let- "ters. He read them exactly, without omitting the "very Title, the Name of the Printer, or the Place, "and Year, of the Impreſſion: In his Opinion, "every thing was of ſome uſe. He marked his Books "with his Pen, as he read them, and placed in the Mar- "gin References to other Authors, who had treated

(31) Diſcourſe on the Life of Mr Ancillon, p. 107.

(29) He often found that this probable was without any Effect. See, above, Citat. (28).

Digitized by Google

which has been publiſhed, on his Life, repreſents him as a Perſon of extraordinary Merit. It is, properly ſpeaking, the Idea of an accompliſh'd Paſtor. He appears in it Learned, Eloquent, Wiſe, Pious, Modeſt, and Charitable; diſpenſing his Cenſures meekly, or rigorouſly, according to the Exigency of the Caſe; practiſing what he

" the ſame Subject, or had made uſe of Expreſ-
" ſions a-kin to what he read (32). —— Sometimes he " changed his Reading, which ſerved him inſtead of " Reſt †. He did not read every Book through;
" ſometimes he ſtudied the Subject thoroughly, and
" then conſulted Authors, who had treated of it; he " often met with the ſame thing in different Books,
" at which he was not diſguſted; on the contrary,
" he ſaid, they were ſo many new Strokes, which
" compleated the Idea he had conceived, and brought
" it to an entire Perfection. He had a great Table
" in the midle of his Chamber, which was common-
" ly full of Books, moſt of them open (33). The " famous Fra-Paolo, whom I have mentioned, ſtudied
" alſo in the ſame manner; and, as the exact and " faithful Author of his Life informs us, he never " left off, 'till he had ſeen all; that is to ſay, 'till he " had confronted Authors, Places, Times, and Opi" nions. He perſiſted in this Practice, that he might " have no more Occaſion to doubt, or think again
" on the ſame Subject; and that he might know what " to depend upon. Thus Mr Ancillon ſtudied ſome-
" times, and he has often been heard to give the " ſame Reaſons for it. As he read much, he found
" many things worth taking notice of; and, though
" he had an admirable Memory, he had Books, in " which he collected what he thought moſt conſider-
" able. He was not ignorant, that Govean, for Ex-
" ample, who would not have ſo much as an Ink-
" horn in his Study, Salmaſius, Menage, and ſeveral
" other great Men, have condemned Collections,
" and that, ſo far from thinking, that they facilita-
" ted the Acquiſition of Learning, on the contrary,
" they looked upon them as an Obſtacle, which in-
" terrupts the Courſe of Reading and Meditation,
" and deſtroys the Effect of them. But he was of " Opinion, that, ſince, thro' the Unhappineſs of the " preſent Age, it is not ſufficient to be Maſter of a
" Subject, and all the Reaſons, on which it is built,
" but it is neceſſary likewiſe to produce Authorities,
" and expreſs Texts; there was occaſion for a Book,
" which, like a Vein, or Stream of Water, may di-
" rect one to the Fountain Head, and the rather, be-
" cauſe, being to ſpeak in public before certain Peo-
" ple, who were rather his Spies, than his Hearers,
" and who often demanded of him Authorities and
" Proofs for what he advanced; it was in ſome
" ſort neceſſary to have a Repertory, to aſſiſt his Me" mory, and to prevent his looking a long time for
" what he wanted, according to the different Con-
" junctures he was in." Theſe Particulars may, I think, be of uſe to many Readers. I ſhall ſpeak below (34), of his conſtant Application to Study.

(32) Ibid. pag. 109.

† Πάντα μεταβολὴ εἴδως ἐστὶν ἀναπαύσεως.

(33) Ibid. pag. 111.

(34) In Remark [F].

[E] The Books he publiſh'd.] In the Year 1657, he publiſh'd a Book in Quarto at Sedan, wherein the whole Controverſy concerning Traditions is fully and ſolidly examined (35). 'Tis a faithful Relation of what paſſed in the Conference, which he had with Mr de Bedacier, Doctor of the Sorbonne, Biſhop of Auguſta, and Suffragan of the Biſhop of Metz (36). He diſputed with him, Firſt, in his own Houſe (37), in the Preſence of many Perſons, and afterwards at the Biſhop's Palace (38), before a Crowd of People. All the Articles were committed to writing, and ſign'd. " He maintain'd this Diſputation with Ho" nour, and finiſh'd it with Succeſs. Having anſwer'd,
" methodically, all the Objections, which were made
" to him, he repreſented, that He was likewiſe to
" propoſe his Arguments, in his Turn; but, as " he had given ſeveral Mortal Blows to Error, in " his Anſwer, it was fear'd he would utterly deſtroy
" it, if he was allowed to eſtabliſh what he preten-
" ded to be the Truth. Mr de Bedacier reſolv'd to " break up the Conference, and, in order to conceal
" the real Motive of his Conduct, he pretended, that,
" for the future, it would be better to carry on the " Diſpute in Writing, than by Word of Mouth;
" Nevertheleſs it was agreed, on both Sides, that
" neither Party ſhould cauſe the Acts of This Con" ference to be printed (39)". But there was a Monk, who publiſh'd ſpurious Acts of it (40). And whoſe Impudence was ſo great, that, though Mr Ancillon had obtain'd very great Honour in This Conference, he endeavour'd to perſuade the Publick, that it had prov'd fatal both to him and his Party, and that he had been entirely vanquiſh'd (41). This oblig'd Mr Ancillon to publiſh the Work I have mention'd. Hottinger commends it very much, in the 6th Chapter of the 3d Book of his Bibliothecarius Quadripartitus (42). Father Clivier, a Minime, and Provincial of his Order, undertook to confute this Work; in order to which, he compos'd a Book, intituled, Le Fort des Traditiones abbatu par les Maximes de Mr David Ancillon. —— The Fort (or ſtrong Hold) of Traditions demoliſh'd by the Maxims of Mr David Ancillon. Others wrote Satires againſt it; but all theſe Libels were unſucceſsful (43). The Roman Catholics themſelves adviſed Mr Ancillon not to anſwer them, as he had undertaken to do; they aſſur'd him, that He, and his Book, were ſo far ſuperior to theſe Hackney Writers, that it was beneath him to enter the Liſts with them (44). As ſoon as the Method of Cardinal Richelieu came out, " He wrote a large and excellent Anſwer
" to it. But he was inform'd, that Mr Mortel, Pro-
" feſſor at Montauban, had wrote one, which was
" juſt upon the Point of being publiſh'd; and that
" Mr Claudé, who had the ſame Deſign, had laid it
" aſide for the like Reaſon, as it now appears by the " Sixth Letter, in the Collection of his Letters, in " the Fifth Volume of his Poſthumous Works. He,
" therefore, ſuppreſs'd what he had wrote; and no-
" thing of it was made Publick, but a few Sheets,
" which contain'd an Anſwer to the 6th Chapter of
" That Method, or, to ſpeak more properly, an " Apology for Luther, Zuinglius, Calvin, and Be-
" za, which is the Title of it in the Edition of " Hanaw, 1666. Mr Ancillon wrote the Life of " William Farel; or, The Idea of a Faithful Mini-
" ſter of Chriſt. The famous Mr Conrart, who was " one of his intimate Friends, read, and approv'd
" of it, and with his own Hand wrote ſome Notes
" in the Margins of the Manuſcript. It was a
" Work, which deſerved to be publiſh'd; but he " could not be perſuaded by any means to give his
" Conſent to it; and his Refuſal occaſion'd a Copy,
" full of Errors, to be taken from it, which fell into
" the Hands of a Bookſeller in Holland, who put it
" to the Preſs, on the Reputation of the Author.
" Every one was ſurpriz'd to ſee ſuch a wretched
" Edition, as That was; and, if ever the ſame Book
" ſhould be printed from the Copy, reviſed by Mr
" Conrart, This Piece will appear ſo mangled, that " it will not eaſily be known again. Tho' Mr Ancillon
" had expounded ſome entire Books of the Holy
" Scripture, and committed all his Sermons to Writ-
" ing, he could never be perſuaded to print them ---
" (45) All of this kind, which was printed, is a Ser-
" mon, which he preach'd at Metz, on a Faſt-day:
" His Conſiſtory exerted ſome Authority over him,
" to force it out of his Hands, and caus'd it to be " printed at Paris in the Year 1676. This Ser-
" mon, was compos'd on the 18th and 19th Verſes
" of the third Chapter of St Paul's Epiſtle to the " Philippians, and is intitled, The Tears of St Paul.
" Laſtly, he wrote an excellent Anſwer to the Paſ-
" toral Advice, the Circular Letters, and the Me-
" thods, which the Clergy addreſs'd to the Re-
" formed of France, in the Year 1682; but he kept
" it cloſe in his Study, till, ſome conſiderable Perſons
" having oblig'd him to publiſh it, he ſent it to his " old Friend Mr Turretin, Profeſſor of Divinity at " Geneva, giving him full Liberty to diſpoſe of it,
" as he ſhould think fit; but it is probable, that the " Copy miſcarried, for it has been never heard of " ſince. Mr Ancillon had ſo little concern for his " own Works, that he never enquir'd after it; and " yet this was the Anſwer, which the Public ex" pected, and of which mention is made in the " Preface to a ſolid and judicious Book, intituled,
" Examen des Methodes, &c. in the Place, where it
" is ſaid, There will be publiſh'd an Anſwer by an " able Hand at Metz (46).

(35) Ibid. pag. 218.

(36) Ibid. p. 207, 208.

(37) Ibid. pag. 212.

(38) Ibid. pag. 213.

(39) Ibid. pag. 214.

(40) Ibid. pag. 217.

(41) Ibid. pag. 218.

(42) Ibid. pag. 220.

(43) Ibid.

(44) Ibid. pag. 221.

(45) Ibid. pag. 255.

(46) Ibid. pag. 258.

[F] He

Digitized by Google

(5) See, concerning the Absurdity of practising otherwise, Discourse, &c. p. 175, & seq.

he preached (5); wholly employ'd in the Discharge of his Ministry [F], without interfering, as many others do, with what belongs only to Laymen; or keeping his Doors open to Informers, and Newsmongers [G]. How learned his Conversation was [H],

[F] He was wholly employ'd in the discharge of his Ministry.] They, who devote themselves to the Pastoral Office, "Stand in need of all their time, to "study, labour, and to perform worthily the Duties "of their Calling; and, without doubt, this is the "reason, why the Sixth Canon, among those which "are call'd Apostolical, imports, that no Bishop, "Priest, or Deacon, shall meddle with Secular Mat-"ters, or engage in any Public Office; and that the "Sixth Canon, among those of Africa, forbids Per-"sons of This Character to take upon themselves the "Management of the Affairs, or Law-Suits, of other "People. The Loss of time, which is spent in these "Worldly Occupations, is not the least Motive of "these excellent Constitutions; but I believe they "are not the only Considerations, which occasion'd "them. Experience has made it appear, that the "Intrigues of the World, the Hurry of Business, "and the Ambition of making their Court to great "Persons, are three Rocks, which have always been, "and ever will be, fatal to them. They depart in-"sensibly from That Apostolical Simplicity, which "ought to be one of their chief Ornaments; they "learn the Maxims of the World; they accustom "themselves to it's Subtilties, and Artifices, and are "led insensibly to practise them (47)." The Minister, I am speaking of, shunn'd all these Rocks; he lov'd Study, Repose, and Retirement; and never embarrass'd himself with Worldly Affairs (48). "He "was appointed, by the Laws of his Country, and "against his Will, Guardian to his Brother and Si-"ster: But he left the Administration of the Estate, "and the Management of Affairs, to his Brother, "who, though under Age, was already a very able "Man ——So that, the Pupillage being ended by "the Majority of the Orphans, the Minor gave an "Account to his Guardian, and the Guardian, for "Form sake, did the like to his Minors; quite "contrary to the usual, natural, and common Cu-"stom. He absolutely renounced all Worldly Affairs, "and, like a true Anchoret, banish'd himself from "the Conversation of Men, and employ'd his whole "Thoughts on God, and his Church (49). He had "a very curious and large Library —— He was al-"ways to be found in it —— (50). He never went "out of his House, but in order to go to Church, or "to perform, elsewhere, some other Function of his "Office. He never left his Books, but upon this "Account; and, as if the Day were not long enough, "he spent part of the Night in Meditation, or Stu-"dy. Though he had several Country Houses, and "One had been purchas'd for him very near the City, "the more easily to engage him to spend a few Days, "or at least Hours, at it; yet he was never "seen there above three or four times, in two and "thirty Years, that he exercis'd his Ministry at Metz. "He was constantly in his Chamber, being a "Stranger to Jealousy, which makes other Men "pass so many uneasy Moments: In this manner he "liv'd peaceably at home, regardless of the Credit "which is got by frequent Visits, troublesome Cares, "and great Measures, which are exactly to be ob-"serv'd."

(47) Ibid. p. 95, 96.

(48) Ibid. pag. 100.

(49) Ibid. pag. 102.

(50) Ibid. pag. 103.

This is the Model, by which all Ministers of the Gospel should regulate their Lives. They have all, like Mary, chosen the good part (51); but some of them imitate Martha, who was careful and troubled about many things (52). They meddle with State Affairs; They enter into the Intrigues of the Town; They are inquisitive after all kinds of News; They traffick in them, and make use of them in making their court to their Superiors. Nay, They sometimes venture to suggest Advice, in regard to War, or Negotiations; and are not discouraged at the Contempt, which is artfully shewn for their idle Projects. They are often seen in the Anti-Chambers of Princes; and wait impatiently for an Opportunity of being introduced; not upon Matters of Conscience, but to ask a thousand Favours, to recommend their Children, their Relations, and their Friends, with respect to honourable and profitable Places. They have the first Intelligence of a Vacancy, and endeavour to get it fill'd up upon their Recommendation. They would deserve Commendation, if they employ'd their Credit only in procuring Bread to those, who want it; but they employ it chiefly in favour of those, who are already rich, and who wou'd not dare to have recourse to their Sollicitations, if they believ'd them to be true Ministers of JESUS CHRIST; for then they would expect a Censure; they would be afraid of being put in Mind of St Paul's Precept, that, provided we have Food and Raiment, we shou'd be therewith content (53). It is not the Duty of a Pastor to procure to his Flock a stronger Attachment to worldly Things; he should rather endeavour to draw them off from it, and combat their Covetousness and Ambition; and no doubt he would do so, were he himself free from the gnawing Cares of Vain-glory. But, because, in order to gratify his Passions, he wants to have the Offices of a Town in the Hands of Men, who may be obliged to him for them, and who, by way of Acknowledgment, or in hopes of new Favours, will always be ready to serve him, he uses his utmost endeavours to raise them; he commends their ambitious Views; and, to support himself in the Management of Affairs, he is obliged to be a Man of Intrigue, and to have his Emissaries every where. Such a Man stands in need of being threatned, as Bishops are sometimes, when they act against the Canons, which oblige them to Residence; and little thinks, that his Office is of such a Nature, that the utmost Human Ability is scarce sufficient for it. They, who consider this, will imitate Mr Ancillon, and not throw away so much time in Visits of Interest.

(51) Luke x. 42.

(52) Ibid. ver. 41.

(53) 1 Tim. vi. 8.

Forumque vitat, & superba civium
Potentiorum limina (54).

(54) Horat. Epod. Od. 2. ver. 7.

The Clamours of contentious Law,
And Court and State he wisely shuns,
Nor, brib'd with Hopes, nor dar'd with Awe,
To servile Salutations runs.

DRYDEN.

Note, that they, who do not imitate his Conduct, sometimes employ their Interest for Persons, who are distress'd in their Circumstances; but if you observe, you will find, that these Persons are serviceable Men, fit for any thing, and inclin'd to consecrate all their Leisure to the Passions of Him, whose Protection has procur'd it for them. He is their Deity;

------ Deus nobis hæc otia fecit;
Namque erit Ille mihi semper Deus; illius aram
Sæpe tener nostris ab ovilibus imbuet agnus (55).

(55) Virgil. Ecl. 1. v. 6.

These Blessings, Friend, a Deity bestow'd;
For never can I deem him less than God.
The tender Firstlings of my woolly Breed
Shall on his Holy Altar often bleed.

DRYDEN.

They acknowledge themselves his Creatures, and perform all the Duties, which This Character requires.

[G] His Doors were not open to Informers and Newsmongers.] "He neither loved Tales, nor "Tale-bearers; and laid it down as a Maxim, that "little Credit was to be given to them; saying, that "a Report is never so pure, but it relishes of the "Passions of him, who makes it; and that It is like "Water, which always retains the Quality of the "Veins of Earth, or Minerals, through which it "runs. He had, particularly, a vast Averfion to "those, who go into Houses to learn what passes "there, and to set People a talking, and then report "what they have, as it were, extorted from their "Mouths by Cunning and Artifice ---- (56). He "said, that it was very dangerous lightly to believe "what is said of others. He was upon his Guard "in this Respect (57). The House of such a Pastor "was far from being a Place of Resort for News-"Writers. I have consider'd this matter above, in "the Remark [H] of the Article ALTING

(56) Discourse on the Life of Mr Ancillon, p. 229.

(57) Ibid. pag. 230.

(HENRY)

Digitized by Google

was [H], cannot be better known, than from the Book mentioned in the Remark [G]. I shall, in another Place (z), examine some Particulars concerning a Print of Him. But I must not pass over in silence, That he was the Son of a Learned Civilian; that one of his Ancestors was formerly President au Mortier in one of the chief Sovereign Courts of France; and that Georgin ANCILLON, one of the Principal Members of the Church of Metz, was also one of the first Founders and Governors of it (aa).

(z) In Remark [F] of the Article FERRI.

(aa) Discourse, &c. pag. 7.

" (HENRY); and I shall farther consider it in the " Remark [N] of the Article GRUTERUS " (JANUS).

[H] How Learned his Conversation was.] The Work, from whence we have our Information, is intituled, Melange critique de Litterature, and was collected out of Mr Ancillon's Conversations (58). It was printed at Basil, in the Year 1698, in Two Volumes in Twelves, by the Care of Mr Ancillon the Advocate, eldest Son to This Minister, who had already distinguish'd himself in the Common-Wealth of Learning (59). I shall have frequent occasion to speak of this Miscellany; and if, sometimes, I do not find every thing in it so exact as it should be, I do not intend to prejudice, thereby, the Author or Publisher of these Pieces. It is much more surprizing, that the late Mr Ancillon, in speaking off-hand, should be so exact in many things, than strange, that his Memory fail'd him in some particulars. As to his Son, it was his Duty to deliver things as he had them from Mr Ancillon's Mouth. See what I have observed concerning the Menagiana (60); the Case here is the same. You may see, in the Preface to This Miscellany, why it was intituled Ancilloniana.

(58) See the Acta Eruditorum for June 1698. pag. 287.

(59) He published several Books; most of them anonymous.

(60) In Remark [A] of the Article MENAGE.

ANCRE (The Marechal d'). Look for CONCINI.

ANDLO (PETRUS AB), a fictitious Name, under which a Cartesian disguised himself, in order to write against the Dissertation De Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ surrepente, & vitando in rebus Theologicis & Fidei. Mr Des Marets, Professor of Divinity at Groningen, the Author of this Dissertation, published it in the Year 1670, to represent to the Protestant Churches the great Evils, which were to be feared, if the Opinions of Des Cartes were suffered to pass from the Schools of Philosophy to those of Divinity. Some Months after, there came out a Piece intituled, Petri ab Andlo Batavi Specimen Confutationis Dissertationis de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, &c. Never was any Confutation written in a more vehement Style. Des Marets was treated in it after the most disobliging manner. He quickly published an Apology, intituled, Vindiciæ posteriores Dissertationis de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, in which he loaded his Adversary with all kinds of Abuse. He treated him as a most impudent Socinian, a Spinozist, an impious and unchristian Man, and an Atheist. Petrus ab Andlo speedily published a Reply, intituled Animadversiones ad Vindicias Dissertationis, quam Samuel Maresius edidit, de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ. If he was passionate in his first Dissertation, he was still more so in his second; intermixing, nevertheless, as he had done at first, several Strokes of Raillery with his Anger. He positively denied, that he had any Acquaintance with Spinoza, that he had ever seen him, or that he approved his Opinions (a). Des Marets received this second Piece of Petrus ab Andlo, the Nineteenth of December 1670, and confuted it so speedily, that his Rejoinder was finished the Third of January following (b). It was intituled, Samuelis Maresii Clypeus Orthodoxiæ, sive Vindiciarum suarum priorum pro sua Dissertatione de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, &c. The Author declared, that he would write no more against so obscure an Author [A], but should be always ready to enter the Lists, in Defence of Truth, with a Learned, and Honest Adversary, who was not ashamed of his Name. He kept his Word; for he left the third Piece of Petrus ab Andlo unanswered; It was intituled, Specimina Bombomachiæ Samuelis Maresii se defendentis Clypeo Orthodoxiæ, seu vindiciis vindiciarum Dissertationis de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ. Thus ended this Controversy, which verified the Proverb, Nullum violentum durabile,——Nothing violent is of long Continuance; tho' it frequently proves false in a Paper-War [B]. Des Marets could never discover the true Name of his Adversary [C]. There appeared, in 1673, a small Book in 4to, intituled DANIELIS AB ANDLO, Petri filii, Κλήσορος ἀδελφῶν ἐλεγχόμενος, sive ad Clarissimi Theologi Samuelis Maresii Tractatum brevem de Studio Theologico Notæ breves.

(a) Spinozam nec novit Petrus, nec vidit, nec audivit, nec absurda eius dogmata probat. Animadv. ad Vindicias, pag. 7.

(b) Vindic. Vindiciarum Dissertat. sub fin.

Note, That there is a true ANDLO among Authors (c). He was a Native of Alsace, Doctor of the Canon Law, and Canon of Colmar (d). The two Books, which he wrote, De Imperio Romano, Regis & Augusti Inauguratione, &c. deque Officio & Potestate Electorum, &c. were published at Strasburg, with Notes, in the Year 1603, by Marquardus Freherus.

(c) Petrus de Andlo.

(d) Mich. Hertzius, Biblioth. German. n. 224.

[A] Declar'd he would write no more against so obscure an Author.] The Term he makes use of, is the same, which the Scripture uses against the Gods of the Gentiles, calling them Gods of Dung. " Animo non ulterius hanc serram cum hoc stercoreo homine reciprocandi (1) —— Having resolv'd to dispute no longer with this dirty Fellow". " In anteces sum me protestari nihil amplius mihi futurum negotii cum hoc hominis sterquilinio & infami nebulone quem pudet sui ipsus (2). —— I protested before-hand, that I would have nothing more to do with this Dunghil of a Man; this infamous Rascal, who is asham'd of being known.

(1) Maref. Vindic. Vindiciarum Dissertat. sub fin.

(2) Id. in Judicio de Theolog. Pacifica Wittichii sub fin.

[B] The Proverb nullum violentum durabile frequently proves false in a Paper-War.] I need not go far to find an Instance of what I say. The Quarrels between Des Marets and Voëtius were extremely violent, and continued near thirty Years, as long as the German War, which ended at the Peace of Munster.

[C] Des Marets could never discover the true Name of his Adversary.] All his Conjectures, and the Enquiries of his Friends, were to no purpose: So that, being weary of such an unsuccessful Chace, he resolved to leave his Adversary masked. Quis sit ille larvatus Petrus ab Andlo, Batavus —— ut nec hactenus conjectura assequi, nec amicorum diligentia rescire potui, potui, ita nolo amplius inquirere. —— Who this diſguiſed Petrus ab Andlo Batavus is —— as I could never yet gueſs, nor diſcover by the Diligence of my Friends, I reſolve to make no farther Enquiry after him. This is what he ſays, at the beginning of his Clypeus Orthodoxiæ. He had Friends every where, who, being more zealous than diſcreet, which is the uſual Character of thoſe, who are accounted the Flail of Innovators, made him believe, that there was a Miniſter in Zealand, whoſe Name was Petrus ab Andlo, married to the Daughter of Cocceius. He publiſhed this News; but, being informed, that the Son-in-law of Cocceius was called Anſelaer, he cauſed his Excuſes to be made to him. " Apud R. D. An-" ſelaer curavi me honeſtè excuſari, quod id mihi " exoidiſſet ex relatione honeſti cujuſdam R. viri, " etiam in Carteſianiſmum ----- pronioris, cui non " erat cur ultro aſſerenti fidem detractarem (3). —— " I took care to excuſe myſelf honourably to Anſelaer " for ſpreading a Report, the Truth of which I could not " queſtion, as it came from a Reverend and Honourable " Perſon, and one who was even inclined to Carte-" ſianiſm." He ſays ſomewhere (4), that there was a Report, that three Perſons had been concerned in the Defence of Wittichius, and that they had publiſhed their Work under the feigned Name of Petrus ab Andlo. We ſhall ſee, whether Mr Placcius, or Mr Baillet, will be more lucky, than I have been, in unmasking this Pſeudonymous Writer, whom I take to be Regnier Manſvelt, Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Utrecht.

Digitized by Google

(3) Vindic. Vindiciarum, pag. 6.

(4) In Judicio de Theol. Pacifica Wittichii.

ANDRADA (Diego de Payva d'), in Latin Andradius, a learned Portugueſe, born at Coimbra, ſignalized himſelf in the Council of Trent, whither King Sebaſtian ſent him, as one of his Divines (a). He preached before the Aſſembly, the ſecond Sunday after Eaſter, 1562. He was not contented with the Service he did, in explaining the Matters, about which he was conſulted; he employed his Pen likewiſe in Defence of the Canons of That Council. This he did in a Book, intituled, Orthodoxarum Explicationum Libri X (b). In which he particularly anſwers a Piece publiſhed by Chemnitius againſt the Doctrine of the Jeſuits [A], before the breaking up of the Council of Trent; and, as Chemnitius took this Opportunity to write a very large Book, which he intituled, Examen Concilii Tridentini; Andrada thought himſelf obliged to vindicate his firſt Piece againſt this learned Adverſary [B]. He, therefore, compoſed a Book, which his two Brothers publiſhed after his Death at Liſbon, in the Year 1578. It is intituled, Defenſio Tridentinæ Fidei Catholicæ, quinque Libris comprehenſa, adverſus Hæreticorum calumnias, & præſertim Martini Kemnitii. Theſe Works of Andrada have been printed ſeveral times (c), and yet they are ſo ſcarce at Paris, that Mr Pelliſſon could not meet with them in the Rue de St Jaques * [C]. There is ſcarce any Catholic Author, who has been more quoted by the Proteſtants,

(a) Palavic. Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, lib. 19. cap. 16. n. 7.

(b) Printed at Cologn in 1564. The firſt of theſe ten Books, which is an Apology for the Jeſuits, was printed in French, at Lyons, in 1565. Du Verdier. Bibl. Françoiſe, pag. 266.

(c) Ex Nicolai Antonii Bibliotheca Hiſpan. Tom. 1. pag. 236.

* St James's Street.

[A] A Piece publiſhed by Chemnitius againſt the Doctrine of the Jeſuits.] A Lutheran Miniſter, who wrote an Encomium upon Chemnitius, expreſſes himſelf thus; " Breve quidem, ſed nervoſum ſcriptum, " durante adhuc Concilio Tridentino, Jeſuitarum " Theologiæ oppoſuit, cujus opuſculi cum Andra-" dius Luſitanus in ſe ſuſcepiſſet refutationem, Chem-" nitio occaſionem ſubminiſtravit conſcribendi inſigne " illud ------ opus, quod Tridentini Concilii exa-" men nuncupavit (1). ------ During the Seſſion " of the Council of Trent, he wrote a ſhort, but ner-" vous, Piece againſt the Doctrine of the Jeſuits; which when Andradius the Portugueſe undertook " to refute, Chemnitius laid hold of the Opportu-" nity of writing That famous Work, which he called, " An Enquiry into the Council of Trent." To which I add a Paſſage of Eiſengreinius, becauſe it will give occaſion to a ſmall Remark. This Author pretends, that Andrada did Wonders againſt the Heretics, in his Orthodox Explications, and chiefly againſt Chemnitius: " Præſertim contra Martini Kemnitii " petulantem audaciam, qui Colonienſem cenſuram " quam à viris ſocietatis Jeſu compoſitam eſſe ait, " una cum ejuſdem ſanctiſſimæ Societatis vitæ ra-" tione temerè calumniandam ſuſcepit (2). —— Par-" ticularly againſt the inſolent Boldneſs of Martin " Chemnitius, who took upon him to abuſe the Cen-" ſure of Cologn, which he ſays was drawn up by the " Jeſuits, together with the manner of Life of the " Gentlemen of That venerable Society." Nicolas Antonio, having quoted this Paſſage, cenſures Eiſengreinius, for believing that Andrada was a Jeſuit. Hæc ille, ſays he, falſus, ſaltem in eo quod Andradam noſtrum unum ex Jeſuitico ſodalitio credidit. If this Cenſure be only grounded upon the Words, quoted by Don Antonio, I believe it to be falſe.

(1) Spizelius, in Templo Honoris pag. 4.

(2) In Catalogo Teſtium Veritatis, apud Nicol. Anton. Bibl. Hiſp. Tom. 1. pag 235.

[B] Thought himſelf obliged to vindicate his firſt Piece againſt this learned Adverſary.] This Epithet is due to Chemnitius; and, at the Bottom I ſay no more in his Favour, than Don Nicolas Antonio does. At firſt Sight, indeed, theſe Words of the Spaniſh Author, " Cui cum repoſuiſſet profligatiſſimus hæreticus " librum, in quo graviſſimas adverſus univerſalem " Eccleſiam contumelias intorquebat, deſcendere de-" nuo in campum ſibi opus eſſe Paiva vidit, ut im-" manem hoſtem totis viribus profligaret. —— This " abandoned Heretic having publiſhed a Reply, in " which he moſt ſcandalouſly abuſed the whole Church, " Payva thought himſelf obliged to enter the Liſts " once more, and exert his whole Strength in demo-" liſhing this Gigantic Adverſary." Theſe Words, I ſay, at firſt Sight, appear not very much to the Credit of Chemnitius; but, if they be well conſidered, they will be found to redound greatly to his Honour; for muſt it not be very pleaſing to a Man, to find himſelf repreſented as the Goliath, or the Polyphemus, of his Party, by thoſe of the contrary Side, when, beſides, he believes himſelf engaged in a good Cauſe?

[C] That Mr Pelliſſon could not meet with them in the Rue de St Jaques.] An Account of this Matter will not diſpleaſe the Curious. Mr Leibnitz, in his Remarks on the Reflexions on the Diſputes in Religion (3), alledged, among other things, that Andrada had compoſed a Work entituled, Explicationes Orthodoxæ de controverſis Religionis capitibus; in which he teaches in expreſs Terms, " That the Philoſophers, " who uſed all their Induſtry to come at the Know-" ledge of the true God, and to honour him reli-" giouſly, had That Faith, by which the Juſt live. " ----- That it would be the greateſt Cruelty in " the World (neque immanitas deterior ulla eſſe poteſt) " to condemn Men to eternal Torments, for wanting " a Faith, which they could not attain to (4)" Mr Pelliſſon immediately replied, " That he had " never met with This Author, and that, to ſatisfy " his Curioſity, he would enquire after his Book, " when he came to Paris (5)." Some time after he acquainted the Public, that he had carefully enquired after the Book of the Portugueſe Doctor, Payva Andradius; but he added, " It is no eaſy thing to " find it in Paris: It is unknown in the Rue de " St Jaques; nor is it to be met with in the moſt " voluminous Libraries; no, not in That of the Je-" ſuits; which is very remarkable, becauſe he wrote " in their Favour. At laſt, It has been found in " the Library of the Sorbonne. The Abbot Pirot, " a Perſon of Merit, if there be one this Day in " France, or elſewhere, and one of the moſt emi-" nent and illuſtrious Members of that Houſe, who " knew as little of the Author, as myſelf, has given " himſelf the Trouble to peruſe it at my Requeſt. " ----- This Writer has Merit, and is no dry or " jejune Scholaſtic, as ſo many others are; he diſ-" covers a more than ordinary Elegance, and Viva-" city; in a Word, he anſwers the Reputation, " which he bore in the Council of Trent (6)." It is ſurprizing,

(3) It is the Title of a Book of Mr Pelliſſon.

(4) See Mr Pelliſſon's Book, entituled, Of a Toleration of Religions, pag. 19. It was printed at Paris, in 1692.

(5) Ibid. pag. 71.

(6) Ibid. pag. 81.

Digitized by Google

Proteſtants, than He, becauſe he maintained ſome Opinions a little too extravagant, concerning the Salvation of the Pagan Philoſophers. He was a Preacher; His Sermons have been publiſhed in three Parts; the ſecond of which was tranſlated out of Portugueſe into Spaniſh, by Benedict de Alarcon (d). The Bibliotheque of the Spaniſh Writers does not mention all his Works [D]. Many Encomiums have been beſtow'd upon Andrada [E], which may be ſeen in the Remarks.

(d) Id. ib.

prizing, that a Book, ſo little known to the greateſt Bookſellers, and ſcarce to be found in the largeſt Libraries, ſhould be quoted by an hundred Authors, whoſe Collections are very ſmall. This, I ſay, is ſurprizing to thoſe, who are ignorant, that the Enquiry into the Council of Trent, by Chemnitius, is a very common Book, and that Dr Andradius is frequently quoted in it. An hundred other Authors have expreſſed them as poſitively as he has done on this Subject, as la Mothe la Vayer ſhews in one of his Books (7). How comes it, then, that they have not been quoted ſo often as Andradius, when the Queſtion was to excuſe Zuinglius, by way of Recrimination, or to object to the Papiſts, that they have leaned towards the Pelagian Hereſy? What, I ſay, can be the Reaſon of this, if I have not hinted at the true Cauſe of the frequent Quotations of Andradius?

(7) At the end of his Treatiſe concerning the Virtue of the Heathens.

[D] The Bibliotheque of the Spaniſh Writers does not mention all his Works.] The Book he wrote concerning the Pope's Authority, during the Council, in the Year 1562, is not to be found in it (8). The Pope's Legates, being very well pleaſed with This Work, ſent it to Cardinal Borromeo. The Court of Rome liked it extreamly, and the Pope very obligingly returned the Author Thanks. I believe this Work is the ſame with That, which is entituled, De Conciliorum Autoritate, the firſt Book of which has been quoted by Palavicini (9).

(8) Palavic. lib. 19. cap. 16. n. 7.

(9) Id. lib. 24. cap. 10. n. 17.

[E] Many Encomiums have been beſtowed upon Andrada.] You have already ſeen Mr Pelliſſon's Opinion of him. Oſorius, in his Preface to the Orthodox Explications of Andradius, aſcribes to him a great Wit, an eager Application, a Knowledge of Languages, and the Zeal and Eloquence of a good Preacher. Roſweide ſpeaks of him thus: "Ad Concilium Tri-"dentinum & profundiſſimi Theologi mentem, & "linguam eloquentiſſimi Oratoris, attulit (10). —— "He carried with him to the Council of Trent the "Underſtanding of a moſt profound Divine, and the "Eloquence of a conſummate Orator."

(10) In Lege Talionis Caſaubono retaliata, apud Nicol. Antonium, Tom. 1. pag. 236.

ANDREAS (JOHN), a famous Canoniſt of the XIVth Century, was the Son of a Prieſt [A], and was born at Mugello, near Florence. He was yet very young, when he went to ſtudy at Bologne (a); where he would have ſcarce been able to maintain himſelf, had he not met with a Tutor's Place; but, by the help of this Employment, he was in a Condition to apply himſelf, at his Eaſe, to the Study of the Canon Law, in which he made a great Progreſs, under the Profeſſor Gui de Baif (b). He had always a particular Reſpect for the Perſon, and Gloſſes, of this Profeſſor; He paid as great a Deference to his Gloſſes, as to the Text itſelf. He was beholden to him in a Particular, which we are, generally, more thankful for, than for Inſtruction. Gui de Baif, perceiving, that, for want of Money, he durſt not petition for his Doctor's Degree, put him upon demanding it, and obtained it for him gratis. Andreas himſelf confeſſes this (c). The ſame Gui encouraged him likewiſe to ſtand for a Profeſſorſhip; which was attended with all the Succeſs he could wiſh. Our Andreas, we find, was Profeſſor at Padua, about the Year 1330, and alſo at Piſa; but he was recalled to Bologne (d), where he acquired a greater Reputation, than any where elſe. We are told wonderful things concerning his auſtere Life [B]. He mortified

(a) Bononiam admodum adoleſcens venit, ubi ob paupertatem Pædagogum geſſit, Scarpetam filium Mainardi Ubaldini erudiendo. Volaterr. lib. 21.

(b) He is more known by the Name of Archidiaconus, which was that of the Eccleſiaſtical Dignity he was poſſeſſed of at Bologne. Doujatius Præn. Canon. pag. 602.

(c) In prim. Sexti Decretal. apud Doujat. ibid. pag. 603.

(d) Panzirol. de claris legum Interpret. lib. 3. cap. 19.

[A] Was the Son of a Prieſt.] All Authors agree, that the Father of John Andreas was a Prieſt, but not that he was ſo, when he begot this Child. "Patrem conſtat Presbyterum fuiſſe; an filium ante, "an poſt Sacerdotium genuerit, incertum. - - - - It "is certain, that his Father was a Prieſt, but un-"certain whether he begat his Son before, or after, "his Prieſthood." Thus Mr Doujat ſpeaks of him (1), after having read Panzirolus, who poſitively aſſerts, that John Andreas was born, before his Father was a Prieſt. "Is ex Andrea Presbytero, antequam Sacer-"dos fieret, & matre nomine Novella, genitus (2)." It is a Sign Mr Doujat laid no great Streſs on Panzirolus's Deciſion of the Matter; and for what Reaſon, I deſire to know, ſhould the latter be credited in it, rather than Volaterran, who has affirmed the quite contrary? "Joannes Andreas patre Andrea Preſ-"bytero & matre concubina natus, apud Mugellum "agri Florentini Oppidum, juris ſcientia virtutibuſ-"que aliis natalium pudorem contexit (3). —— John "Andreas, Son of John Andreas, a Prieſt, and his "Concubine, born at Mugello, near Florence, covered "the meanneſs of his Birth by his Knowledge of the "Law, and his other Virtues." He has expreſsly ſaid, that John Andreas was the Son of a Concubinary Prieſt; and no one will venture to affirm, that Novella was ever married to the Father of John Andreas. It is, therefore, paſt doubt, that our celebrated Canoniſt was, at leaſt, born, like Eraſmus, out of lawful Marriage, of a Father, who was a Prieſt. We muſt not imagine, that Forſter ſays he was not ordained a Prieſt, 'till after he had begot this Child. He only means, that the Father of John Andreas was a Prieſt, in the Place, where he was born. "Patre "Joanne Andrea, cive initio, deinde Presbytero "Mugellano, natus eſt (4). - - - - - - Son of John "Andreas, firſt a Citizen, afterwards a Prieſt, of "Mugello."

(1) Prænot. Canonic. pag. 604.

(2) De claris legum interpret. lib. 3. cap. 19. init.

(3) Volaterr. lib. 21. pag. 781.

(4) Forſt. Hiſtor. Juris Civil. lib. 3. cap. 26.

[B] We are told wonderful Things concerning his auſtere Life.] The following Commentary has been communicated to me (5): I make no Alteration in it. "What you obſerve concerning the auſtere Life "of John Andreas, is atteſted by good Authors. "But if the Story, which Poggius tells of him, in "his Facetiæ be true, there is Reaſon to believe, "that afterwards this Doctor degenerated very much "from his former Continence. Joannem Andream, "ſays Poggius, Doctorem Bononienſem, cujus fama "admodum vulgata eſt, ſubagitantem ancillam dome-"ſticam uxor deprehendit. Re inſueta ſtupefacta mu-"lier in virum verſa: ubi nunc, ait, Joannes, eſt "ſapientia veſtra? Ille nil amplius locutus, in vulva "iſtius, reſpondit: loco admodum ſapientiæ accommo-"dato." Perhaps the Tranſlation of theſe Words into French Verſe will not be unacceptable to the Reader.

(5) By Mr de la Mennoie.

Jean dit André, fameux docteur és loix,
Fut pris un jour au peché d'amourette:
Il accolloit une jeune ſoubrette.
Sa femme vint, fit un ſigne de croix.
Ho ho, dit-elle, eſt ce-vous? non je penſe;
Vous, dont par tout on vante la prudence.
Qu'eſt devenu cet eſprit ſi ſubtil?
Le bon André, pourſuivant ſon negoce,
Honteux pourtant: ma foi, repondit-il,
Prudence, eſprit, tout giſt dans cette foſſe.

In Engliſh, thus,

A learned

Digitized by Google

tified his Body with Fasting and Prayers, and slept every Night, for twenty Years together, on the hard Ground, wrapped in a Bear's Skin (e). He pretended, that he had obtained several things by his Prayers (f). He married a Woman called Milantia, whom he mentions sometimes in his Writings; and confesses, that he had learned several things of her; and, among others, that, if Names were to be sold, Fathers and Mothers ought to buy fine ones for their Children (g). I forgot to tell you, that his Mother's Name was Novella, and that he had a Daughter of the same Name, who was so learned, that she read Lectures for him [C], when he had no leisure to mount the Chair. It was out of Love to his Mother and Daughter, that he intituled his Commentary on the Decretals of Gregory IX, Novellæ (h). He had a Natural Son, whose Name was Banicontius, who published some Books [D]; and it is said, that, having lost him, he adopted John Calderini, a learned Canonist, and married him to his Daughter Novella [E]. He had another Daughter, whom he married to a celebrated Professor of the Canon Law at Bologne. Her Name was Betina; and she died at Padua, in the Year 1355 (i), whither her Husband had been invited, to accept of the like Professorship. Andreas died of the Plague at Bologne, in the Year 1348, after he had been Forty five Years Professor, and was buried in the Church

(e) Volaterr. lib. 21. pag. 781.

(f) Apud Panzirol. ubi supra.

(g) In cap. cum secundum, Extravag. de præbend.

(h) Panzirol. de claris Legum Interpret. lib. 3. cap. 19.

(i) His Epitaph is to be seen in Panzirolus, ubi supra.

A learned Canonist, of Fame,
(John Andreas was the Doctor's Name)
Once on a time in bed was laid,
Solacing it with Madam's Maid.
When Chance, That Sower of all Strife,
Brought in, curst Luck! the Doctor's Wife.
And is it you, the Lady cries?
Bless me, I scarce can trust my Eyes.
Inconstant Wretch, of shameless Brow!
Where is your boasted Wisdom now?
'Tis here, the Doctor, blushing, cries,
'Tis here, dear Wife! my Wisdom lies;
A proper Place (the Place he shows)
For wearied Wisdom to repose.

Since it is agreed, on all Hands, that John Andreas had a Bastard, this Story might be true at the bottom, and perhaps his Wife surprized him with the Mother of Banicontius: If it be so, we may place him in the List of the Menagiana (6).

(6) See the Remark [E] on the Article BRISEIS.

[C] His Daughter read Lectures for him.] I have met with this Particular, not in Forster, or Panzirolus, or Mr Doujat; but in the Cite des Dames, written by Christina de Pise. This Book was printed at Paris, in the Year 1536, and composed in the Reign of Charles VI. The following Passage is taken from it. "To speak of the late times, without quoting Ancient Histories, about sixty Years ago John Andreas, a noted Civilian at Bologne, did not think there was any harm in a Woman's having some Learning. For he took care, that his handsome Daughter Novella, whom he was very fond of, should be bred a Scholar; and so well versed was she in the Knowledge of the Law, that, when he had not leisure to read Lectures to his Scholars, he sent his Daughter Novella, to supply his Place in the Schools; and, to prevent her Beauty from diverting the Thoughts of the Auditors, a little Curtain was drawn before her. Thus she sometimes assisted her Father, who loved her so well, that, to preserve the Memory of her, he wrote a famous Book of Law, which he intituled Novella, it being the Name of his Daughter (7)." It is strange, that a Particular of this Nature, so singular and rare, should not be found in all the Authors, who mention John Andreas, or at least in most of them; and I confess this inclines me to doubt of the Truth of it. But, be that as it will, it may occasion a diverting Problem, viz. Whether this Lady promoted, or retarded, the Improvement of her Hearers, by hiding her handsome Face. An hundred things may be said pro and con. I am apt to think the Scholars would have amused themselves so much with her Beauty, as to be little attentive to her Lectures; but, on the other hand, what proceeds from a fine Mouth, is much more taking, and persuasive; and some Women, though charmed with the good Air and Mein of a Preacher, remember, nevertheless, what he says. What an ancient Poet says of Virtue, that it is more pleasing in a beautiful Body, Gratior & pulchro veniens in corpore virtus (8); may be applied to Learning. However it be, if the Daughter of the Professor, John Andreas, drew a Curtain between her and her Hearers, least the Darts of her Beauty should wound their Hearts, and interrupt their Attention, she made them a considerable Sacrifice, which they would willingly have dispensed with. They would, probably, have been very well pleased to see her; and she, on her part, would not have been displeased to be seen, had she not preferred their Improvement to her own Satisfaction. This is a probable and natural Account; since she was not one of those learned Women, who have reason to say, with Sappho,

Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit,
Ingenio formæ damna rependo meæ (9).

To me what Nature has in Charms deny'd,
Is well by Wit's more lasting Charms supply'd.
POPE.

(7) Cite de Dames de Christine de Pisa, part 2. cap. 38.

(8) Virgil, Æn. lib. 5. ver. 344.

(9) Ovidius Epist. Sapph. ver. 31.

[D] Banicontius, who published some Books] It was the Name of his Grandfather. The Books he published are, De privilegiis & immunitate Clericorum: De accusationibus & inquisitionibus: De appellationibus. This I find in Panzirolus.

[E] And married him to his Daughter Novella.] The ancient practice of Adoption would not have permitted such a Marriage (10): And perhaps the Adoption of Calderini is only to be understood in this Sense, that John Andreas made him his Son-in-law. It is said, that Calderini frequently consulted his Wife. Is conjugem velut eruditis parentibus (Milentia, the Wife of John Andreas, was a learned Woman) ortam prudentem nactus sæpe ob sapientiam consulere consueverat (11). But, if we may judge of other Points, in which he had recourse to this domestic Oracle, by that which Calderini has mentioned, we shall find nothing, which comes up to the Character Christina de Pise gives us of Novella; and most Women may be said to be as knowing, as she was. The Fact is this. "Calderini asked his Wife, one Day, whether "he, who gives an Invitation, ought to send to the "Persons invited, when the Hour of Eating is come: "She answered, that this ought to be done to Ladies and Strangers, but not to others, unless they "happen to be Persons of Importance." Francis Hotomanus tells us this Story in his ludicrous Way. Verum enimvero medius fidius, says he (12), nequaquam inficiandum aut dubitandum est quin mulieres concilium dare possint, quando quidem (ô dignam historiam & digito ligandam) refert Joh. Calderinus Canonist. famosissimus, quod semel consuluit suam uxorem, an convivator teneatur hora prandii mittere ad convivas, ut veniant; quæ sapienter & tanquam altera Sybilla respondit, ad fœminas & extraneos esse mittendum, qui se facile non ingerunt, sed non ad alios nisi essent graves personæ. Johan. Calderin. in c. ult. de renunt. & post eum Ægid. Bell. in c. quidam col. 3. vers. tertio quæro. eo. ti. & Panormit. in c. cum inter universal. in fin. de elect. & de hoc etiam per Collect. in cap. à crapula, Ext. de vit. & hon. cleric. & Bal. in proœm. Gregor. col. 5. vers. quære, quidam scholaris. What most inclines me to believe, that Calderini was married to a Daughter of John Andreas, is, that one John Calderini, who caused the Tomb of John Andreas to be repaired, in the Year 1501, calls him his fourth Grand-Father, his Atavus; and says, that one John Calderini was his

(10) Octaviam Claudius, antequam Neroni traderet, ne sororem is suam ducere videretur, Claudii & ipse filius adoptivus, in aliam familiam adoptandam dedit. ----- Claudius, before he gave Octavia in marriage to Nero, left it should seem as if he married his Sister, being himself the adopted Son of Claudius, caused her to be first adopted into another Family. Torrentius in Sueton. Claudii, cap. 3. ex Xiphil. & Zonara.

(11) Panzirol. lib. 3. cap. 21.

(12) Adversus Italogalliam Matharelli, pag. 214.

Digitized by Google

Church of the Dominicans. He wrote many Books [F]. Extravagant Commendations have been beſtowed upon him [G]; but he is ſaid to have been an egregious Plagiary [H]. We are told, that the exceſſive Smallneſs of his Stature made the Cardinals laugh heartily [I], at the Audience, which Boniface VIII, gave him in a full Conſiſtory. It is ſaid, that he foretold his Death a Year before it happened (k).

(k) Ex Panzirolo. ibid.

his third Grand-Father, his Abavus (13). I queſtion whether the Adoption of theſe latter Ages has laid down ſuch Degrees of Kindred, to the fifth Generation. And I ſcarce think, that, if Madamoiſelle de Gournai had left a Family, her Deſcendants would, at this Day, ſimply and abſolutely ſtile themſelves, in a public Inſcription, the Grand-Children, or Great-Grand-Children, of Michael de Montagne.

(13) See Panzir. lib. 3. cap. 19.

[F] He wrote many Books.] His firſt Work was a Gloſs on the ſixth Book of the Decretals. He was very young, when he compoſed it; afterwards he reviſed, and enlarged it. He wrote alſo ſome Gloſſes on the Clementines, and afterwards a Commentary on the Decretals, which he entituled Novellæ, for the Reaſon above-mentioned. He publiſhed a Commentary, In regulas Sexti, which he entituled Mercuriales; either becauſe he wrote it on Wedneſdays, or becauſe he inſerted his Wedneſdays Diſputations in it. He enlarged the Speculum of Durandus, in the Year 1347. I omit ſome other Treatiſes, which he publiſhed. It is pity he followed ſo cloſely the Method of the Pyrrhoniſts; for he very ſtrongly confirmed his own Opinion, when he thought proper; but this he very ſeldom did; he choſe rather to report the Sentiments of others, and to leave his Readers in the middle of a Controverſy (14).

(14) Ex Panzirolo, ubi ſupra.

[G] Extravagant Commendations have been beſtowed upon him.] In the Epitaph of his Daughter Betina, he is called Archidoctor Decretorum —— Arch-doctor of the Decretals; in his own Epitaph, he is ſtiled Rabbi Doctorum, lux, cenſor, normaque morum. —— The Rabbi of the Doctors, the Light, Cenſor, and Rule of Manners. It is reported, that Pope Boniface VIII. called him Lumen Mundi - - - - - - the Light of the World (15).

(15) Id. ib.

[H] He is ſaid to have been an egregious Plagiary.] Moſt of his Additions to the Speculum of Durandus were taken, Word for Word, out of a Work of Oldradus (16); inſomuch, that Baldus, who diſcovered it, could not forbear calling him a notorious Pilferer of other Men's Works, inſignis alienorum fur (17). This was the more inexcuſable, becauſe, in theſe very Additions, he proves Durandus to have been a great Plagiary (18). He is accuſed likewiſe of having ſtolen the Treatiſe De Sponſalibus ac Matrimoniis, compoſed by John Anguiſſola of Ceſena (19).

(16) Intituled Conſilia.

(17) Panzirol. de Clar. Leg. Interp. lib. 3. c. 19.

(18) See Thomaſius, de Plagio Literario, n. 359, 424.

(19) Panzirol. ubi ſupra. Doujatius Præn. Canon. p. 604.

[I] The exceſſive Smallneſs of his Stature made the Cardinals laugh heartily.] Some Decretals, they ſay, being ſuſpected of Falſity, the Univerſity of Bologne deputed James de Caſtello, a little ugly Man, to Boniface VIII. He came into the Conſiſtory, attended by a great many Perſons. The Pope received him very graciouſly; and, thinking that he was ſtill upon his Knees, ordered him, three times ſucceſſively, to riſe (20). The Deputy was ſo aſhamed, that he had not a Word to ſay. A Cardinal ſaid, That he was another Zaccheus; which raiſed a general Laugh. Many Writers affirm, that it was not Caſtello, but our Andreas, a Man of ſmall Stature, and very ugly, who met with this Adventure (21).

(20) See Remark [I] of the Article ALBERTUS (Magnus).

(21) Panzirol. ubi ſup.

ANDREAS (John), Author of a Book, intituled The Sect of Mahomet demoliſhed, was born a Mahometan, at Xativa, in the Kingdom of Valencia, and ſucceeded his Father in the Dignity of Alfaqui, in the ſame Town. He was converted to the Chriſtian Faith, by a Sermon, which he heard in the Great Church of Valencia, on the Day of the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin, in 1488 (a). He demanded Baptiſm, and, remembring the Call of St John and St Andrew, he obtained the Name of John-Andrew, or Andreas. "Having received Holy Orders (ſays he) (b), "and, from an Alfaqui, and Slave of Lucifer, become a Prieſt and Miniſter of "CHRIST, I began, like St Paul, to preach and publiſh the contrary to what I "had falſly believed and affirmed; and, by the Aſſiſtance of the moſt high Lord, "firſt converted, and led to Salvation, ſeveral Souls, among the unbelieving Moors, "who would otherwiſe have loſt them in Hell, under the Power of Lucifer. After "which I was invited by the moſt Catholic Princes, King Ferdinand and Queen "Iſabella, to come and preach to the Moors of the Kingdom of Granada, which "they had conquered. By my preaching, and the Will of God (who would have "it ſo) a prodigious Number of Moors renounced Mahomet, and were converted "to CHRIST. A little after I was created a Canon by their Bounty, and was "again invited by the moſt Chriſtian Queen Iſabella, to come into Arragon, and "endeavour the Converſion of the Moors of that Kingdom; who, to the great Con"tempt and Diſhonour of our crucified Saviour, and the Peril of the Chriſtian "Princes, perſevere to this day in their Error; but this moſt pious Intention of Her "Highneſs was prevented, by her Death, from taking Effect." He adds, that, to employ his leiſure Hours, he tranſlated, out of Arabic into the Language of Arragon, the whole Law of the Moors, to wit, The Koran, and it's Gloſſes, and the Five Books of Suna. He did This at the Command of Martin Garcia, Biſhop of Barcelona, and Inquiſitor of Arragon (c). After he had finiſhed this Undertaking, he wrote the Work, which I mentioned at the beginning [A]; and which has been thought tolerably good [B].

(a) The Preacher's Name was Marques Adelora.

(b) John Andreas's Preface to The Sect of Mahomet demoliſhed, fol. 3. verſo.

(c) Taken from the ſame Preface.

[A] The Work, which I mentioned at the Beginning.] I mean the Book, entituled, The Sect of Mahomet demoliſhed. It contains twelve Chapters; in which the Author has collected The fabulous Inventions, Impoſtures, Follies, Abſurdities, Inconſiſtencies, Impoſſibilities, Lies, and Contradictions, which the Impoſtor Mahomet, to deceive the ignorant People, ſcattered up and down in the Books of the Sect; particularly in The Koran; which, he tells us, was revealed to him, in one Night, by an Angel, in the City of Mecca; though, upon the other Occaſions, he affirmed, in Contradiction to himſelf, that he was twenty Years in compoſing it; which aforeſaid Work I have intituled, The Sect of Mahomet demoliſhed (1). He informs us (2), that he compoſed this Work, to the end, that Chriſtians, not only the Wiſe and Underſtanding, but the Simple and Ignorant likewiſe, may, on the one ſide, laugh at ſuch Follies and Abſurdities, and, on the other ſide, expreſs their Concern for the Blindneſs and Perdition of this People.

(1) John Andreas's Preface, fol. 4.

(2) Ibid.

This Work, which was firſt publiſhed in Spaniſh, has been tranſlated into ſeveral Languages; particularly into French, by Guy de la Boderi, from the Italian; and was publiſhed at Paris, for Martin le June, in the Year 1574, in 8vo.

[B] This Work —— has been thought tolerably good.] All the Writers againſt Mahometaniſm cite it frequently. Among others, ſee Hornbeeck in his Diſputatio de Muhammediſmo (3); Hottinger, in his Hiſtoria Orientalis, and Samuel Schultetus, in his Eccleſia Mahummedana breviter delineata.

(3) It is part of his Summa Controverſiarum.

[A] Where

Digitized by Google

ANDREAS (Tobias) Professor of History, and the Greek Tongue, at Groningen, was born at Braunfels, in the County of Solms, the Nineteenth of August 1604. His Father was Minister of the Count of Solms-Braunfels, and Overseer of the Churches dependant on That Count. His Mother was the Daughter of John Piscator, a famous Professor of Divinity at Herborn, in the County of Nassau. He went through his School-Learning at Herborn; and, then, studied Philosophy, in the same Place, under the Direction of Alstedius, and his Uncle Piscator (a); after which, he went to Bremen, where he lived seven Years [A]. He was one of the most constant Attendants on the Lectures of Gerard de Neuville, a Physician, and a Philosopher; and, as he aspired to the Office of Teaching publickly, he prepared himself for it, by reading private Lectures in Philosophy. He returned to his own Country in the Year 1628; and, after a short Stay, he went to Groningen, being invited thither by his good Patron Henry Altingius. He read there, for some time, private Lectures in all Parts of Philosophy: After which Altingius gave him his Children to instruct; and, when they had no longer occasion for a Tutor, he procured him the same Employment with a Prince Palatine; this continued three Years, which he spent partly at Leyden, and partly at the Hague, in the Court of the Prince of Orange. In the Year 1634, he was invited to Groningen, to succeed James Gebhardus, who had been Professor of History, and the Greek Tongue (b). He discharged the Duties of this Employ with an extraordinary Application, till his Death, which happened the Seventeenth of October 1676 (c). He had been Library-Keeper to the University, and a great Friend of Des Cartes [B]; which he testified, both during the Life [C], and after the Death, of that Illustrious Philosopher [D]. He wrote some Books in his Vindication, as will appear in the Remarks. He married the Daughter of a Swede (d), who, among other things, was famous for his Charity towards those, who suffered for the sake of the Gospel.

(a) Son of the Professor of Divinity.

(b) See the Lives of the Professors of Groningen, pag. 124.

(c) Witte, Diar. Biograph.

(d) Lewis de Geer.

[A] Where he lived seven Years.] My Reader ought not to have believed this, if the Author of the Lives of the Professors of Groningen had not been more exact in this Calculation, than he is, as to the time, when Tobias Andreas was at Herborn. It is strange, that a Corrector of the Press should overlook such Errors in the Space of five or six Lines, though the Avocations of the Author hindered him from perceiving them. You will find, in the Life of our Andreas, that he went to Herborn, in the Year CIↃ IↃ CXVII; that he studied five Years, there, in the Schools, and one Year in Philosophy, and that he pursued the same Studies at Bremen, for seven Years; and that, afterwards, having taken a turn home, he came to Groningen, in the Year CIↃ IↃ CXXVIII. There is nothing written in Cyphers; the Errrors, probably, were in the Copy. Paul Freberus has very innocently transcribed it (1), without perceiving any Error in the Calculation.

(1) Theatr. Virorum Illustr. pag. 1538.

[B] A great Friend of Des Cartes.] He heartily served him in his Law Suit with Martin Schoockius, Professor of Philosophy at Groningen. This Professor was prosecuted by Des Cartes for Scandal, in having publickly accused him of Atheism. Though Des Cartes had not seen our Andreas more than once in his Life, he recommended his Cause to him, perceiving, that he was very much in his Interest. The French Ambassador, Monsr. de la Thuillerie, and Des Cartes's Friends acted on one Hand (2); the Enemies of Voëtius, at Groningen, acted on the other; and by this means Des Cartes had Justice done him. His Accuser acknowledged his Innocence (3), and was thereupon acquitted; which was a scandalous Indulgence, and a bad Example: For, if they had made him suffer the Punishment of Retaliation, as he very well deserved, it would have restrained, in some measure, the boldness of those seditious Writers, who so readily, and so rashly, accuse so many honest Men of Atheism. "Des Cartes wrote, the Twenty sixth "of May, 1645, to Mr Andreas, to thank him for "his good Offices, and to desire him to return his "most humble thanks to the Judges. Seeing how "mildly his Adversary had been treated, though he "deserved to be punished as a Calumniator —— "he nevertheless acknowledged, that the Judges had "given him all the Satisfaction he desired, or could "lawfully pretend to. For, said he (4), to the Magistrates of Utrecht, private Persons have no right "to demand either the Death of their Enemies, or "that they should suffer in their Honour or Estates. "It is sufficient they are indemnified by the Judges. "Any thing farther does not concern them, but the "Public alone." The Text of my Remark necessarily obliging me to mention the good Offices done by Andreas to Des Cartes; I believed the Reader would be pleased to know, in general, the Issue of this Affair, without turning to another Page.

The excessive Indulgence towards him, who accused Des Cartes of Atheism.

(2) The Condemnation of Schoockius fell indirectly upon Voëtius.

(3) See the Life of Des Cartes by M. Baillet, Tom. 2. p. 252. & seq. ad annum 1645.

(4) Tom. 3. of his Letters pag. 17. ap. Baillet, ubi supra, pag. 257.

[C] Which he testified during the Life, &c.] We have just seen a Proof of this. I add, that he favoured Des Cartes's Disciples, and procured him as many Followers as he could. It was by his Advice, that Claubergius became a Cartesian (5); which was a glorious and useful Victory for the whole Party.

(5) Clauberg. Epist. Dedicat. Logicæ.

[D] And after the Death of that illustrious Philosopher.] He wrote in his Defence, against a Professor of Leyden, whose Name was Revius, and published a vigorous Reply, in the Year 1653, entituled, Methodi Cartesianæ assertio opposita Jacobii Revii - - - - Præf. Methodi Cartesianæ considerationi Theologicæ. The second Part of this Answer came out the following Year. He wrote also, in the Year 1653, against Mr Regius, in Vindication of the Remarks, which Des Cartes had made on a Programma, containing an Explication of the human Mind (6). He taught, in his own House, the Cartesian Philosophy, though his Profession did not require it of him, and even when Age had very much impaired his Strength. Mr Des Marets informed me of these Particulars, on account of a Swiss Student in Divinity, who durst not attend the Philosophical Lectures of Andreas, for fear it should be known in his own Country, and should prove an Obstacle to his Promotion to the Ministry. "Nec defuit unus ex illis, cujus nomini "parco, bene alias doctus, & in Philosophiam Car"tesianam valde propensus, qui, dum hic esset, pro"fessus est, non audere se frequentare Collegia Car"tesiana Cl. Tobiæ Andreæ (qui, Clinicus licet, "quod summopere doleo, Deumque veneror ut illi "suas vires restituat, ea solet habere in superpondium "suæ professionis, nec enim ad philosophiam, sed "ad linguam Græcam & Historias est vocatus) ne "hoc in sua patria resciretur, & suæ promotioni obes"set (7). —— Nor was there wanting one, among "them, whose Name I forbear to mention; a Man, "otherwise, of good Learning; who, during his abode "here, declared, that he durst not frequent the Car"tesian School of Tobias Andreas, lest it should be "known in his own Country, and hinder his Pro"motion; I mean the Cartesian School of That An"dreas; who, tho' almost Bed-rid (which I am very "much concerned for, and beg of God to restore him "to his Strength) yet continues to teach a Science, "over and above his Profession; which requires of him "a Knowledge of History, and the Greek Tongue, not "of Philosophy."

(6) This Piece is intituled, Brevis Replicatio brevi Explicationi Mentis Humanæ Dn. Henrici Regii repositæ.

(7) Maresius, in Judicio de Theologia pacifica Wittichii, printed in 1671.

Digitized by Google

ANDREINI (ISABELLA) born at Padua, was, towards the end of the XVIth and beginning of the XVIIth Century, one of the beſt Actreſſes of Italy. This was not the only Qualification, for which ſhe was admired; ſhe was likewiſe a compleat Poeteſs. This we learn, not only from the Praiſes, which many learned Men, and great Wits, have beſtowed upon her, (tho' this would be but a doubtful Proof) but alſo by the Works, which ſhe publiſhed. The Intenti (a) of Pavia thought it an Honour to them to admit her into their Society; and, to teſtify her Acknowledgment, ſhe never forgot, among her Titles, That of Academica Intenta; but, without doubt, ſhe looked upon it as an Honour done to her. Her Titles were, Iſabella Andreini, Comica Geloſa, Academica Intenta, detta l'Acceſa. In one thing ſhe excelled the moſt excellent Actreſſes; for ſhe was a beautiful Woman; ſo that, on the Stage, ſhe charmed, at once, the Eyes and Ears of the Audience [A]. Cardinal Cinthio Aldobrandini, Nephew to Clement VIII, had a great Eſteem for her, as appears by many Poems, which ſhe compoſed for him, and by the Epiſtle Dedicatory of her Works. She came into France, and was graciouſly received by their Majeſties, and Perſons of the firſt Quality at Court (b). She compoſed many Sonnets in their Praiſe, which are to be ſeen in the ſecond Part of her Poems. She died, at Lyons, the Tenth of June 1604, of a Miſcarriage, in the Forty ſecond Year of her Age. Her Huſband, Francis ANDREINI, buried her in the ſame City; and honoured her with an Epitaph [B], which imports that ſhe was very pious and chaſte. Since That, he diſcovered, how greatly he regretted [C], and eſteemed her. The Death of this excellent Actreſs ſet all Parnaſſus in Tears. Nothing but Funeral Elegies appeared, in Latin and Italian. Many of them were prefixed to her Poems, in the Edition of Milan, 1605. Nor did they forget the ingenious Inſcription, made in her Praiſe, whilſt ſhe was ſtill alive, by Erycius Puteanus, at that Time Profeſſor at Milan (c). Beſides her Sonnets, Madrigals, Songs, and Eclogues, there is a Paſtoral of her Compoſition, intituled Myrtilla. There are extant likewiſe ſome of her Letters, which were printed at Venice, in the Year 1610. She ſung well, and play'd admirably on ſeveral Inſtruments; ſhe was not ignorant of Philoſophy (d), and underſtood French and Spaniſh.

(a) Some Academicians of Pavia are called.

(b) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the ſecond Part of her Poems.

(c) See Remark [A].

(d) See the Verſes written in her Praiſe, prefixed to her Poems.

[A] She charmed, at once, the Eyes and Ears of the Audience.] This ſupplied Flatterers with many Thoughts. Theſe Words were wrote under her Picture, "Hoc Hiſtricæ eloquentiæ caput, lector admi- "raris? quid ſi auditor ſies? —— Do you admire, "Reader, this Head of Theatric Eloquence? What "would you have done, had you been her Hearer?" The Antitheſes and Witticiſms of Erycius Puteanus turn chiefly upon this.

Hanc vides, & hanc audis;
Tu diſputa, Argus eſſe malis, ut videas,
An Midas, ut audias.
Tantum enim ſermonem vultus,
Quantum ſermo vultum commendat.
Quorum alterutro æterna eſſe potuiſſet,
Cum vultum omnibus ſimulacris emendatiorem,
Et ſermonem omni Suada venuſtiorem poſſideat.

You ſee her; and you hear her;
Conſider now, whether you would be an Argus, to ſee,
Or a Midas, to hear.
For her Looks as much recommend her Voice,
As her Voice her Looks.
Either of which might have rendered her Immortal;
Since no Painting can equal the Charms of her Face;
No Muſic the Harmony of her Voice.

[B] Her Husband —— honoured her with an Epitaph.] If it be but to undeceive thoſe, who talk ſo much of the Rigour of the Church, in regard to the Burial of Players in Holy Ground, I ſhall copy the Epitaph of Iſabella Andreini, in which her Profeſſion, as an Actreſs, is mentioned next to her Hopes of the Reſurrection

D. O. M.

Iſabella Andreina, Patavina, mulier magnæ virtute prædita, honeſtatis ornamentum, maritaliſque pudicitiæ decus, ore facunda, mente fecunda, religioſa, pia, Muſis amica, & artis Scenicæ caput, hic reſurrectionem expectat.

Ob abortum obiit 4. Idus Junii 1604. annum agens 42.

Franciſcus Andreinus mœſtiſſimus poſuit.

Iſabella Andreini, of Pavia, a Lady remarkable for Virtue, Honour, and Conjugal Fidelity, Eloquent, and Ingenious; Religious, and Devout; A Friend to the Muſes, and Head of the Theatric Art; lies Here, in expectation of the Reſurrection.

She died of a Miſcarriage, June 10, 1604. Ætat. 42.

This Monument was erected by Francis Andreini, her afflicted Husband.

You will ſee, in the next Remark, how tenderly ſhe was beloved by her Husband Francis Andreini.

[C] Since That, he diſcover'd, how much he regretted her.] The Preface to his Bravure del Capitano Spavento, informs us, that he was born at Piſtoia, and that, whilſt he was among the Company of Comedians Geloſi, he took great delight in acting the Part of a Braggadocio, He took upon him the Title of Capitan Spavento da Vall' Inferna, Captain Bluff of the Infernal Vale; and left off perſonating the part of a Lover, in which he had chiefly ſignaliz'd himſelf: io laſciai di recitare la parte mia principale, laquelle era quella dell' innamorato. This Company of Players acquir'd a ſurprizing Reputation; which began to decay after the Death of Iſabella Andreini. Her Husband thought it beſt from a Player to turn Author; and, for the Subject of his Works, he made choice of That, in which he had diſtinguiſh'd himſelf on the Stage, I mean the Rhodomontades of a Captain Bluff. He publiſh'd ſome Dialogues, or Ragionamenti, in Proſe, with the Title above-mentioned. The 4th Edition, which I make uſe of, is of Venice, 1623, in Quarto; but, the Licence being dated in the Year 1607, the firſt Edition ought to be placed in That Year. The Complaints of the Shepherd Corinto alla defunta ſua Fillide (he calls her his Wife) & alla ſua Boſcareccia Sampogna, are prefixed to the Book. Never did Lover utter more tender Expreſſions, or complain more ſtrongly of the inexorable Rigor of Deſtiny. They are Andreini's Lamentation for the Death of his Iſabella; the following Words put it paſt doubt: "Finito che fu quel termine, e venuto meno il vi- "vere d' Iſabella mia dilettiſſima conſorte (la quale "fu lume e ſplendore di quella virtuoſa e honorata "compagnia) fui da molti amici miei conſigliato à "ſcrivere alcuna coſa e donarla alla ſtampa per laſciar "qualche memoria di me, e per ſeguitare l'honorato "grido della moglie mia, la quale haveva laſciato al

Digitized by Google

" mondo con tanta sua gloria e con tanto suo honore " il suo bellizzimo Canzoniero, la sua bellissima Mir- " tilla Favola Boscareccia, e il compendio delle sue " bellissime lettere (1). —— After the Death of my " dearest Consort Isabella (who was the Light and " Ornament of this ingenious and honourable Com- " pany); I was advised by many of my Friends to " write, or publish something, to perpetuate my Me- " mory, and to emulate the Reputation of my Wife, " who left behind her, so much to her Glory, " and so much to her Honour, her beautiful Col- " lection of Sonnets, her Pastoral of Myrtilla, and " the Abridgement of her beautiful Letters." There is one John Baptist ANDREINI, who wrote a Tragedy, entituled La Florinda; printed at Milan, in the Year 1606.

(1) Preface to the Capitano Spavento.

ANDRELINUS (P. Faustus) born at Forli, in Italy, was a long time Professor of Poetry in the University of Paris. Lewis XII. made him Poet Laureat (a). I know not, whether Queen Anne of Bretagne, or some other Queen, honoured him with her special Protection; but I am not ignorant, that Erasmus, who was intimately acquainted with him, says, that he was not only Laureat to the King, but to the Queen likewise [A]. He was not contented with Poetry; He wrote likewise some Moral, and Proverbial, Letters in Prose, which have been printed several times. They were printed at Strasburg, in the Year 1517, and again, from the second Revisal of the Author, in the Year 1519 (b). Beatus Rhenanus prefixed a Preface to them, in which he greatly commends them [B]. John Arboreus, a Divine of Paris, wrote a Commentary upon them. Most of his Poetry consists of Distichs; they have been printed, with a Commentary of Jodocus Badius Ascensius, being translated, Verse for Verse, into French by a Poet of Paris, whose Name was Stephen Privé (c). This Translation came out in 1604, and is only fit to bring the Original into Contempt. John Paradin had before turned (d) into French Tetrastics about an hundred Distichs, which Andrelinus inscribed to John Ruzé, Treasurer-General of the Finances of King Charles VIII, to return him Thanks for a large and honourable Pension, which that Prince caused to be paid him with extraordinary Care; and which did not deserve the Contempt this pleasant Poet designed to throw upon it, by leaving us room to think he was paid for his Verses by the Quarter, or the Hundred (e) [C]. The Poems of Andrelinus have been inserted in the first Volume of the Delights of the Italian Poets; tho' good Judges set no

(a) Faustus Andrelinus item, Poëta suavissimus, à Ludovico XII, Franciæ rege, laurea coronatus. Lean. Albert. Descript. Ital. pag. 478.

(b) Gesner. Biblioth. pag. 573.

(c) Baillet, Jugem. sur les Poetes, Tom. 3. p. 121.

(d) In 1545.

(e) Baillet, ibid. who quotes Colletet, p. 118, 125, 126. Art. Poët.

[A] Erasmus, who knew him very intimately, says, that he was not only Laureat to the King, but to the Queen likewise.] These are his Words. " Faustus " Andrelinus Forolivienſis, poëta non solum laureatus, " verum etiam regius, atque etiam, si diis placet, re- " gineus, vetus congerro meus, qui plus quam triginta " jam annos in celeberrima Parisiorum Academia poëti- " cen docet, in carmine quod de Pavimento Parisiensi " inscripsit, adagionem (Syracusana Mensa) in Anglos " derivavit, Mensa, inquiens, Britanna placet (1). " —— My old Friend, Faustus Andrelinus, of Forli, " Poet-Laureat both to the King and Queen, who has " taught Poetry more than thirty Years in the famous " University of Paris, in his Poem de Parisiensi Pavi- " mento, applies the Adage Syracusana Mensa * to " the English, saying, Give me a British Table". There are, among Erasmus's Letters (2), two or three Billets, which Andrelinus wrote to him, in such a Laconick Style, that Brutus's Letters, if compared with them, would pass for long ones. Erasmus, who answer'd him in the same Style, is somewhat more diffuse, when he desires him to promote the Sale of his Adagies (3); and when he describes the Pleasures of England, to induce him to take a Journey into that Country (4). I shall, by the way, take notice of an ill Custom, which prevails among Authors, of denoting the time, when they write, by such general Words only as, Nunc, jam, &c. whereas they ought precisely to mark the Year; for, besides that some Books take up an Author several Years, or are not publish'd till a long time after they are finish'd, are there not many printed several times? How, then, can a Reader know, at what time a Book was written, when he meets only with these Words, hoc anno, nunc, and the like? Erasmus speaks of Andrelinus as one, who was then alive, and had taught Poetry at Paris, for the space of 30 Years. This he says, in a Book printed in 1546; there is no Date to the Preface; but the Epistle Dedicatory is dated the 13th of August 1528. Wou'd not this induce one to believe, that Andrelinus was alive in the Year 1528? and must we not infer from hence, that the greatest Men, when they revise their Works for a new Edition, leave a great many things in them, which cease to be true? I have observed this Fault in the last Edition of the large History of Mezerai.

(1) Erasm. Adag. 68. cent. 2. chiliad. 2.

* A Syracusian Table. The People of Syracuse were remarkably luxurious.

(2) Lib. 5. pag. 316. Edit. Londinensis.

(3) Epist. 23. lib. 5. pag. 321.

(4) Epist. 10. lib. 5. pag. 315.

Authors censured, who use the indefinite Term Nunc. See Remark [B] of the Article Abulfeda, n. 4.

[B] Beatus Rhenanus —— greatly commends them.] These are Gesner's Words. " Beatus Rhenanus, in " præfatione, commendat has epistolas tanquam eru- " ditas, lepidas, & utiles; " etsi enim hic Author " (inquit) in nonnullis opusculis genuino poëtarum " more lasciviusculus sit, hic tamen integrum ac mo- " destum oratorem agit (5). —— Beatus Rhenanus, in " his Preface, commends these Epistles, as being learn- " ed, entertaining, and useful. For" " Tho' this Au- " thor (says he) like other Poets, is a little too obscene, " in some of his Works; yet here he assumes the per- " fect and modest Orator.

(5) Gesn. in Biblioth. fol. 573.

[C] By leaving us room to think, he was paid for his Verses by the Quarter or the Hundred.] M. Baillet proves it by these four Verses, translated from the Latin of Andrelinus, by Paradin (6).

(6) Judgm. of the Poets, Tom. 3. p. 122.

Croissez mes vers, soyez en plus grand nombre,
Car c'est aux frais & salaries du Roi.
Seure richesse, empeschant tout encombre,
Exige vers en copieux arroi.

A fresh Recruit, my Muse, of Numbers bring;
'Tis at a Monarch's sole Expence you sing.
The sure Reward, which bids each Care retire,
With copious Fewel feeds the Poet's Fire.

We meet with a remarkable Instance in the Tenth Eclogue of Andrelinus; I mean of a Poet, who, far from complaining of the Ingratitude of the Age, or finding fault with the Muses for not taking care to maintain those, who engage in their Service, acknowledges that he had a large Pension, and that, when he recited his Poem on the Conquest of Naples, before Charles VIII, that Prince presented him with a Bag of Money, which he had much a-do to carry upon his Shoulders.

Dum stupeo totus visu defixus in isto,
Jupiter ecce venit magno stipatus honore,
Ipse olim vultus inter nutritus agrestes.
Admiror primo aspectu; mox poplite flexo
Ante ipsum quæsita Jovem modulamina fundo;
Scilicet ut bello claram expugnavit aperto
Parthenopem, patrios victorque redivit in agros,
Quamvis Hesperio vetitus foret orbe regressus.
Nescio qua nostri captus dulcedine cantus
Ipse fuit, sulvi saccum donavit & æris;
Vix istis delatum humeris, cunctosque per annos
Pensio larga datur, qualem non lentus habebat
Tityrus umbrosis resonans sua gaudia sylvis.

Whilst on this Sight, with fixt Regard, I gaze,
See Jupiter in splendid Pomp appear;

Himself

Digitized by Google

no great Value on them [D]. His Death is placed in the Year 1518 [E]. The Letters, which he wrote, by way of Proverbs, were thought worthy of a new Impreſſion at Helmſtadt, in the Year 1662, after the Edition of Cologne of the Year 1509 (f). The Morals of this Author, tho' none of the beſt, were not taken notice of, becauſe he was an Ornament to the Univerſity of Paris. He was ſo happy, that the Liberty he took of offending the Divines brought him into no Trouble. Eraſmus informs us of theſe Particulars [F].

(f) Morhof. Polyhiſt. pag. 258.

Note, That I have left this whole Article, in this Edition, juſt as it ſtood in the firſt, tho' I have been informed, that it ſtood in need of Correction in ſeveral Places. I thought it would be more modeſt to give the Corrections, which have been ſince imparted to me, by themſelves [G]. You'll find them in the Remark [G].

Himſelf once converſant with Ruſtic Looks;
At firſt, in Admiration loſt, I ſtand;
Then, on my Knee, preſent the Verſe, required;
The Verſe, which paints Parthenope * deſtroy'd,
And from Heſperia † Charles's bleſt Return,
In vain forbidden, to his native Land.
Pleas'd with the Numbers, which his Conqueſts ſung,
A Load of Gold the generous Prince beſtow'd,
Too weighty for the ſinking Bard to bear;
A Penſion too, larger than what of old,
Reclin'd at Eaſe, gay Tityrus ‖ enjoy'd,
Courting his Muſe beneath the Beechen Shade.

* Naples.

† Italy.

‖ VIRGIL, under the Character of TITYRUS.

[In this Poem, Andrelinus ſays, that the Brand (the Stigmata) of Charles VIIIth's Victories, appeared ſtill imprinted on the Brows of the Italians. Brantome, who, inſtead of vera Stigmata, read vera Stemmata, makes this Poet ſay, that the Victories and warlike Actions of Charles VIII appeared on the Brows of the Italians, as ſo many Crowns or Laurels. See Brantome's Illuſtrious Frenchmen, Tom. 4. pag. 25. REM. CRIT.]

[D] Good Judges ſet no great Value on them.] Voſſius mentions three Authors, who abounded in Words without Meaning (7); the firſt is the Orator Anaximenes; the ſecond is Longolius, who was likewiſe an Orator, and the third is the Poet Andrelinus. As to the firſt he ſays, that Theocritus of Chios, ſeeing him about to make a Speech, cried out, A River of Words begins to flow with but a Drop of Senſe. Ἀρχεῖαι λέξεων μὲν ποτάμος, νᾶ δὲ σαλαγμός. He ſays, upon the Authority of Francis Luiſinus, that Conſtantin Laſcaris paſſed the ſame Judgment upon Longolius; and that Andrelinus was ſtill more liable to Cenſure, in whoſe Poems there was wanting but one Syllable, as Eraſmus very ingeniouſly obſerved. This Syllable was νᾶς, which ſignifies Senſe, Underſtanding, Wit. If I knew where this Paſſage of Eraſmus, ſo little agreeable to the great Compliments and Praiſes he beſtows upon Andrelinus (8), is to be found, I would inform the Reader. I make no doubt, that the Judgment, which Julius Scaliger paſſed on the Poet Fauſtus, relates to our Andrelinus, rather than Gerhardus Fauſtus. " Fauſti facilitas, ſays he (9), " viventis in ſcribendo ſecundo plauſu excepta eſt; " ſcholas tamen ſapit illa juniorum, à qua nihil aliud " quam hoc ipſum expectes. - - - - - The Knack of " Writing, which Fauſtus, when alive, was Maſter of, " was received with Favour and Applauſe; yet it ſa- " vours of the Schools of Youth; from which you can " expect nothing farther."

(7) Voſſ. Inſtitut. Poët. pag. 2.

(8) See the 23d Letter of the 6th Book of Eraſmus.

(9) Jul. Cæſ. Scalig. de Poetic. l. 6. pag. 736. See Baillet, ubi ſupra.

[E] His Death is placed in the Year 1518.] I ſhall not cite Konig's Bibliotheque, nor the Letters of the learned Reineſius to Dauminus (10). I can produce a cotemporary Writer, who, in a Letter, dated the ſixth of March, 1518, takes notice, that That Year had carried off ſeveral learned Men. " Hic annus " multos eximios viros tui ſimiles abſumpſit, Marcum " Muſurum Romæ, jam Archiepiſcopum deſignatum, " & ante hunc Palcotum Camillum, Lutetiæ Fau- " ſtum immortalitate dignum (11). —— Several great " Men, like yourſelf, have died this Year; particu- " larly, Marcus Muſurus, Archbiſhop Elect, at Rome, " and, before him, Palcotus Camillus; at Paris, Fau- " ſtus, worthy of Immortality." It cannot be concluded, from theſe Words, that Andrelinus died in the Year 1518; for it is certain, that Muſurus died in the Year 1517 (12).

(10) Pag 15.

(11) Eraſm. Epiſt. 20. l. 3. ad Petrum Barbirium. See alſo Epiſt. 24. lib. 2.

(12) See the Remarks on his Art.

[F] Eraſmus informs us of theſe Particulars.] The Reader will not be diſpleaſed to ſee the Original. " Pariſienſis Academiæ candorem ac civilitatem jam " olim ſum admiratus, quæ tot annos Fauſtum tulerit, " nec tulerit ſolum, verum etiam aluerit evexeritque. " Cum Fauſtum dico, multa tibi ſuccurrunt quæ no- " lim literis committere. Qua petulantia ſolitus eſt " ille in Theologorum ordinem debacchari? Quàm " non caſta erat illius profeſſio? Neque cuiquam ob- " ſcurum erat qualis eſſet vita. Tantum malorum " Galli doctrinæ hominis condonabant, quæ tamen " ultra mediocritatem non admodum erat progreſſa " (13). —— I have long wondered at the Good nature " and Courteſy of the Univerſity of Paris, which bore, " ſo many Years, with Fauſtus; and not only bore " with, but ſupported, and advanced, him. When " I mention Fauſtus, many things occur to you (14), " which I avoid committing to Writing. How viru- " lently was he wont to inveigh againſt the ſacred " Order? How far from Chaſt was his Profeſſion? " Nor was his manner of Life a Secret to any one. " The French, however, pardoned his bad Qualities, " in reſpect to his Learning, which yet did not very " far exceed the Bounds of Mediocrity." You may obſerve, that Eraſmus's Letters to Andrelinus, and thoſe he wrote to others concerning him, are written in a very different Strain. However, it cannot be denied, that he ſometimes commends him in his Letters to other Perſons (15).

(13) Eraſm. Epiſt. 20. lib. 21. pag. 1090.

(14) He writes to Ludovicus Vives.

[G] Give the Corrections, which have been imparted to me, by themſelves.] The following Remarks were communicated to me by Monſ. de la Monnoie. " I. Inſtead of P. Fauſtus, it ſhould be Publius Fau- " ſtus, at length; leaſt any one ſhould think that P. " ſignifies Petrus, Paulus, or ſome ſuch other Chri- " ſtian Name. It is probable, that Fauſtus aſſumed " the Name of Publius at Rome, in imitation of " thoſe Academicians, great Lovers of Antiquity, of " whom Pomponius Lætus was the Head. II. It ought " not to be ſaid, in a Dictionary, that Fauſtus was " only Profeſſor of Poetry in the Univerſity of Paris. " He taught, there, not only Poetry, but Rhetoric, " and the Doctrine of the Sphere, and even explain- " ed the Pſalms of David. III. It was at Rome, " long before the Reign of Lewis XII, that Fauſtus, " who was not then Twenty two Years of Age, car- " ried the Laurel (16). His Love Verſes divided " into four Books, entituled, Livia, which was his " Miſtreſs's Name, appeared ſo fine to the Roman Aca- " demy, that they adjudged him the Prize of the La- " tin Elegy; which was the Reaſon why, when he " printed his Livia in 4to, at Paris, in the Year " 1490, and his three Books of Elegies, four Years " after, in the ſame City, he ſtiled himſelf Poëta Lau- " reatus, and afterwards Regius, and Regineus, with " reſpect to Charles VIII, Lewis XII, and Queen " Anne. IV. To find the thirty Years that Fau- " ſtus was Profeſſor at Paris, we muſt ſuppoſe, that " Eraſmus made this Computation in the Year 1517. " By this means we go back as far as 1487, at which " Time, or thereabout, Fauſtus ſettled at Paris. This " Chronology is ſo much the more certain, becauſe " there was an Edition of Eraſmus's Adagies (17), in " 1517, which he mentions in the Chœnici ne infi- " deas. V. Fauſtus did not compoſe above two hun- " dred Diſtichs, and conſequently they were but " a very ſmall part of his Poems; for, beſides the " four Books of his Love Verſes, and the three Books " of Miſcellaneous Elegies, which I have mentioned, " there are twelve Eclogues of his writing, printed " in 8vo, in the Year 1546, in the Collection of " Thirty eight Bucolic Poets, publiſhed by Oporinus. " Fauſtus promiſed ſeveral other Pieces in Proſe and in " Verſe; Ten moral Satires; an hundred Epiſtles; and " the Chriſtian Advent; (which, perhaps, is the ſame " with what he calls, in another place, a Treatiſe of " the true Religion;) a Dialogue on the Sphere; and " Obſervations on the Latin Tongue."

(15) See Remark [E].

(16) This concerns Leander Albertus, whom I have quoted.

(17) Eraſmus's Fault, as I have obſerved in the Remark [A] lies in this, that he did not alter the Chronology, in the laſt Editions.

I ſhall

Digitized by Google

I ſhould certainly have ſupplied the Defects of my Article of ANDRELINUS, if I had had the Works of this Author; but, not being able to procure them, I was obliged to follow thoſe, who have mentioned him, without conſulting them; and thus the Blind lead the Blind. It is a great Misfortune, not to have all the neceſſary Books, in the Compoſition of ſuch a Dictionary, as this; but it is a Misfortune, I cannot avoid, in the Situation I am at preſent in.

ANDRINOPLE, or ADRIANOPLE, a City of Thrace. It owes it's Name to the Madneſs of the Emperor Hadrian. Moreri mentions this; but very confuſedly [A]. It has been ſaid, that this Town was built by Oreſtes, and bore his Name [B]. It was alſo called Uſcudama (a). The two Latin Verſes, quoted by Moreri, ſerve only to ſhew, that he was a careleſs Writer [C]. I omit what he further ſays of Andrinople: The Reader may have Recourſe to his Dictionary.

(a) See the Remark [C].

[A] Moreri mentions this; but very confuſedly.] Theſe are his Words. "Some Pagan Authors ſay, "that this Prince, having been cured there of a Dropſy, by invoking the mad Oreſtes, took delight in "beautifying this City." Theſe Pagan Authors are not Spartian, and Ammianus Marcellinus, the two cited by Moreri; and I am very much miſtaken, if we muſt not reduce them to Ælius Lampridius alone. Let us ſee then how the latter expreſſes himſelf. "Et "Oreſtam quidem urbem Adrianus ſuo nomini vindicari juſſit, eo tempore quo furore cœperat laborare, ut ex reſponſo quum ei dictum eſſet ut in "furioſi alicujus domum vel nomen irreperet. Nam "ex eo emolliſſe inſaniam ferunt, per quam multos "ſenatores occidi jufferat (1)." If we compare theſe Words with Thoſe of Moreri; we ſhall find him guilty of three, or four, groſs Miſtakes. I. It is not true, that Hadrian was cured in the City of Adrianople. II. It is not true, that his Diſtemper was a Dropſy. III. It is not true, that he recovered his Health, by invoking Oreſtes. IV. It is not true, that he took delight in beautifying This City, after his Recovery. Lampridius only ſays, "That Hadrian, being fallen "into a Phrenzy, commanded the City Oreſta to "be called by his Name, in Obedience to an Oracle, "which adviſed him to ſeize on the Houſe, or Name, "of ſome Mad-Man:" and we are told, that by this Means his Fits of Madneſs went off.

(1) Lamprid. in Antonino Heliogabalo, pag. 809.

[B] That it was founded by Oreſtes, and bore his Name.] I ſhall cite only Lampridius for this. "Et "Oreſtem quidem ferunt, ſays he (2), non unum "ſimulachrum Dianæ, nec uno in loco poſuiſſe, ſed "multa in multis. Poſteaquam ſe apud tria flumina "circa Hebrum ex reſponſo purificavit, etiam Oreſtam "condidit civitatem, quam ſæpe cruentari hominum "ſanguine neceſſe eſt. Et Oreſtam quidem urbem "Adrianus ſuo nomini vindicari juſſit, &c. - - - - - - "They ſay likewiſe, that Oreſtes erected, not one "Statue alone of Diana, or in one Place only, but "many in ſeveral. And after that, in Obedience "to the Oracle, he had purified himſelf at three "Streams, near Hebrus, he built, likewiſe, the Ci- "ty Oreſta, which muſt frequently be polluted with "human Blood. This City, Oreſta, Hadrian ordered "to be called by his own Name, &c." I have ſet down this Paſſage at length, to ſhew what City of Adrianople is here meant. The Emperor Hadrian gave his Name to ſeveral Towns at a great Diſtance from each other (3): But it is plain, that Lampridius meant That of Thrace; and that Oreſtes built it, where the Hebrus receives two other Rivers. Note, that Pinedo makes Lampridius ſay, that Heliogabalus built a Town near the Hebrus, which he called Oreſta; and that, afterwards, Hadrian gave it his own Name (4). This is an Inſtance of the uſual Diſtraction of Mind, from which the moſt learned Writers are not free.

(2) Id. ib.

(3) Quum titulos in operibus non amaret, multas civitates Adrianopolis appellavit, ut ipſam Carthaginem & Athenarum partem. Spartianus in Adriano cap. 20. See likewiſe Ortelius's Theſaurus Geographicus.

(4) Pinedo, in Steph. Byzant. pag. 211. n. 43.

[C] The two Latin Verſes, quoted by Moreri - - - - ſhew, that he was a careleſs Writer.] Theſe are his Words. "It is ſaid to have been built, firſt of all, by "Oreſtes, who called it Oreſta; which Name was afterwards changed into That of Uſcada or Uſcudama.

Tandemque Uſcudamæ mutato nomine priſco
Matricida ſuo de nomine dixit Oreſtam.

At length the Parricide Oreſtes, changing it's ancient Name Uſcudama, called it Oreſta, after his own Name.

Theſe two Verſes prove quite the contrary to what Moreri produces them for. They evidently prove, that Oreſtes found This Town with the Name Uſcudama; and that he afterwards changed it to his own. Ammianus Marcellinus, cited by Moreri, at Lib. 4. (5), informs us, in the fourth Chapter of the Twenty ſeventh Book, that Adrianople had been called Uſcudama. Poſt hanc Æmimontus Hadrianopolim habet, quæ dicebatur Uſcudama.

(5) The thirteen firſt Books of this Hiſtory are loſt.

ANDROMACHE, Wife of the Valiant Hector, was the Daughter of Æetion, King of Thebes in Cilicia (a). She was advantageouſly married on all accounts; for, beſides that her Huſband was accounted the Bulwark of his Country, and the greateſt Support of the Throne, he proved very kind to her; and they ſay, that ſhe was free from the Diſquiets, which commonly attend the Wives of Great Heroes; I mean, that he ever preſerved his Conjugal Fidelity towards her [A]. Euripides denies this; but, at the ſame Time, he informs us, that it did not in the leaſt diſturb the Happineſs of this Lady; her Diſpoſition being very eaſy and complaiſant in this reſpect

(a) Homer. Il. lib. 6. This Cilicia was not far from Troy.

[A] Hector - - - - - ever preſerved his conjugal Fidelity towards her.] Andromache, in ſome Verſes of Euripides, declares, that ſhe loves the very Miſtreſſes of her Husband, to pleaſe him, and that ſhe gave ſuck to his Baſtards (1). The Scholiaſt upon this ſays, that Anaxicrates gave out, that Hector left behind him two legitimate Sons (2), who eſcaped from the Hands of the Grecians, and a Baſtard (3), who was taken at Troy (4), but he pretends, that Euripides and Anaxicrates advance a Falſhood; and maintains againſt them, that Hector never had a Baſtard, and that it muſt be very inconſiderate to advance the contrary. Ovid repreſents Hector as a good Husband, who overlooked every thing, that was diſagreeable, in his Wife.

(1) Eurip. in Androm.

(2) Amphineus, and Scamandrius.

(3) Called Paläterus.

(4) Anaxicrat. Argolicor. lib. 2.

Felix Andromache, certo benè nupta marito!
Uxor ad exemplum fratris habenda ſui (5).

(5) Ovidius, in Epiſt. Oenon. ad Paridem, ver. 107.

Happy Andromache, who juſtly art
Poſſeſſed of a firm and loyal Heart.

A Faith like Hers Thou haſt beheld in me,
And Hector's Virtue ſhould have ſhined in Thee.
Mr J. COOPER.

Thus he makes OEnone, the Wife of Paris, expreſs herſelf. In another Place he ſays, that every one thought Andromache too tall; but that ſhe ſeemed to her Husband to be of a middle Stature.

Omnibus Andromache viſa eſt ſpatioſior æquo:
Unus, qui modicam diceret, Hector erat.

(6) Id. lib. 2. de Arte Amandi.

Colomies has rightly obſerved (7), that Mercerus, in his Notes on the fourth Book of Dictys Cretenſis, ſhould not have ſaid, That Antiquity knew nothing of Hector's loving any Woman beſide his Wife, or that he had Children beſides thoſe ſhe brought him. Mercerus had forgot the Hiſtorian Anaxicrates, and the Poet Euripides. But Colomies, who farther obſerves, that this Hiſtorian was unknown to Voſſius, ſhould have told us, that he had from Mezeriac the

(7) Bibl. choiſ. pag. 169.

Digitized by Google

ſpect [B]. The Death of Hector proved, therefore, a terrible Blow to Andromache; yet ſhe ſurvived it, as well as the Grief ſhe conceived, ſome time after, upon the taking of Troy, upon the Loſs of her dear Son Aſtyanax, who was thrown headlong from the Top of a Tower, and her own Slavery. She fell to the Lot of a Maſter, who, tho' of a fierce and bloody Diſpoſition, uſed her very kindly. Pyrrhus, the cruel Son of the cruel Achilles, proved gentle and tractable towards Andromache; ſhared his Bed with her [C], and made her Condition ſo happy, that the beautiful Hermione, whom he married ſome time after, grew very jealous at it (b). After the Death of This Prince, or even in his Life-time, Andromache married Helenus [D], the Son of Priam, her Fellow-Captive; and reigned with him in part of Epirus. She had Children by Pyrrhus [E], and one likewiſe by Helenus. Some Authors are of Opinion, that the Kings of Epirus down to That Pyrrhus, who made War with the Romans (c), deſcended from a Son of Pyrrhus and Andromache. This Princeſs had ſeven Brothers, who were ſlain by Achilles, together with their Father, in one and the ſame Day (d). An Author tells us, that ſhe accompanied Priam, when he went to beg of Achilles, that he would ſell him the dead Body of Hector (e); and that, to excite the greater Compaſſion, ſhe carried with her her two Sons, who were but Infants (f). She has been the Subject of many fine Tragedies both Ancient and Modern (b) Euripid. in Andromacha.

(c) See the Remark [E].

(d) Il. lib. 6. ver. 414, & ſeq.

(e) Dictys Cretenſis, lib. 3.

(f) Aſtyanacta quem nonnulli Scamandrum appellabant, & Laodamanta parvulos admodum filios præ ſe habens. - - - - Carrying with her Aſtyanax, whom ſome call Scamander, and Laodamus, as yet but Infants. Id. ibid.

Paſſages alledged by him, and that Mallincrot (8) mentions Anaxicrates, without ſaying any thing of the Work quoted by the Scholiaſt upon Euripides: He only ſays, that Strabo alledges the Authority of Anaxicrates, in ſpeaking of Arabia, in the fourteenth Book.

(8) Paralipom. de Hiſtor. Græcis, pag. 5.

[B] Her Diſpoſition was very eaſy and complaiſant in this Reſpect.] See the foregoing Remark. It does not appear from hence, that Andromache carried her Complaiſance ſo far, as Livia and Cromwell's Wife did. The latter, out of Ambition, favoured the amorous Intrigues of her Husband (9). Livia occaſionally acted the Part of a Bawd to Auguſtus, to keep up her Credit. "Circa libidines hæſit (Auguſtus) "poſtea quoque ut ferunt, ad vitiandas Virgines "promptior, quæ ſibi undique etiam ab uxore con- "quirerentur (10). - - - - - Auguſtus continued afterwards his Debaucheries, being fond of violating "young Women, whom even his Wife procured for "him from all Parts." Andromache propoſed only domeſtic Peace, by giving her Husband no Diſquiet.

(9) Letti's Life of Cromwell, in Monſ. de Beauval's Journal, 1692, pag. 499.

(10) Sueton. in Aug. cap. 71.

[C] Pyrrhus - - - - ſhared his Bed with her.] Virgil, in order to preſerve a Decorum, introduces Andromache grieving chiefly at This; for Æneas no ſooner asked her, whether Hector's Widow was married, but ſhe caſt down her Eyes, and told him, bluſhing, that ſhe was ſo againſt her Will; and that ſhe envied the Fate of Polyxena, whom Death had freed from the like Neceſſity. We are not obliged to underſtand this altogether in a literal Senſe.

Hectoris, Andromache, Pyrrhin' connubia ſervas?
Dejecit vultum, & demiſſa voce locuta eſt,
O felix una ante alias Priameïa Virgo,
Hoſtilem ad tumulum Trojæ ſub mœnibus altis
Juſſa mori, quæ ſortitus non pertulit ullos,
Nec victoris heri tetigit captiva cubile!
Nos, patria incenſa, diverſa per æquora vectæ
Stirpis Achilleæ faſtus, juvenemque ſuperbum,
Servitio enixæ tulimus, qui deinde ſecutus
Ledæam Hermionem Lacedæmonioſque Hymenæos,
Me famulam famuloque Heleno tranſmiſit habendam (11).

(11) Virg. Æneid. lib. 3. ver. 320.

Still are you Hector's, or is Hector fled,
And his Remembrance loſt in Pyrrhus' Bed?
With Eyes dejected, in a lowly Tone,
After a modeſt Pauſe ſhe thus begun.
Oh only happy Maid of Priam's Race,
Whom Death deliver'd from the Foe's Embrace!
Commanded on Achilles' Tomb to die;
Not forced, like us, to hard Captivity,
Or in a haughty Maſter's Arms to lie.
In Grecian Ships unhappy we were born;
Endur'd the Victor's Luſt, ſuſtain'd the Scorn.
Thus I ſubmitted to the lawleſs Pride
Of Pyrrhus, more a Handmaid, than a Bride.
Cloy'd with Poſſeſſion, he forſook my Bed,
And Helen's lovely Daughter ſought to wed.
Then Me to Trojan Helenus reſign'd,
And his two Slaves in equal Marriage joyn'd.
DRYDEN.

But we muſt do her Juſtice; ſhe is not repreſented as a Woman of an amorous Complexion. Tho' ſhe was a Mother, Ovid could ſcarce believe, that ſhe had lain with her Husband.

Nunquam ego te, Andromache, nec te, Tecmeſſa, rogarem,
Ut mea de vobis altera amica foret.
Credere vix videor, cum cogar credere partu,
Vos ego cum veſtris concubuiſſe viris (12).

(12) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. 3. ver. 529.

When youthful Heat, inſpir'd by female Charms,
Prompts me to take a Miſtreſs to my Arms;
Nor you, Andromache, ſhould gain my Voice,
Nor you, Tecmeſſa, be the Poet's Choice.
Scarce can I think ſuch cold and lifeleſs Dames
(But that the Fruit the ſure Embrace proclaims)
'Ere bleſt the Nuptial Bed, or burnt in Hymen's [Flames.

[D] Or even in his Life time.] I thought this Alternative neceſſary, becauſe Authors are not agreed about the Time, when Andromache married Helenus. We have juſt now ſeen, that, according to Virgil, this Marriage preceeded the Death of Pyrrhus. Juſtin is of the ſame Opinion (13). But, according to Servius, the only Reaſon for her becoming Helenus's Wife, was, that Pyrrhus ordered it ſo upon his Death-bed (14). Pauſanias likewiſe places their Nuptials after the Death of This Prince. Τοῦτῳ γὰρ Ἀνδρομάχη συνῴκησεν ἀποθανόντος ἐν Δελφοῖς Πύρρου (15). Huic enim Andromache nupſit, mortuo Delphis Pyrrho.

(13) Juſtin lib. 17. cap. 3.

(14) Servius in lib. 3. Æneid. ver. 519.

(15) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 10.

[E] She had Children by Pyrrhus.] Some compute, that ſhe had three Sons by him, viz. Moloſſus, Pielus, and Pergamus (16); or Pyrrhus, Moloſſus, and Æacides (17). Others mention only Moloſſus (18), from whom, according to Euripides (19), the Kings of Moloſſia deſcended. Pauſanias ſays, they ſprung from Pielus. As for Pergamus, the ſame Pauſanias informs us, that he went into Aſia; that his Mother Andromache followed him thither; and that he killed Atreus, Prince of Teutbrania, having fought with him in ſingle Combat for the Sovereignty; that he called the Town by his Name; and that his Tomb, and That of his Mother, were to be ſeen there. Servius, upon the Seventy ſecond Verſe of the ſixth Eclogue of Virgil, gives a very different Account of the whole Matter. As for the Son of Helenus, by Andromache, his Name was Ceſtrinus; and he went and ſettled, with a Company of Epirots, who willingly followed him, in a Province ſituated above the River Thyatis: This he did after his Father's Death, and when the Kingdom had been reſtored to Moloſſus, Son of Pyrrhus (20).

(16) Id. ib.

(17) Schol. Euripid. in Andromach.

(18) Servius in Æneid. lib. 3. ver. 319.

(19) In Andromach.

(20) Pauſan. lib. 1. p. 10.

[F] She

Digitized by Google

Modern [F]. Her lofty Stature was known to all Poſterity [G]. Her Dialogue with Hector, in the ſixth Book of the Iliad, is one of the beſt Paſſages of That Poem [H].

She was ſo careful of Hector's Horſes, that ſhe fed and watered them, before ſhe ſerved Him (g). Some have alledged this Example, to ſhew, that Women ought to condeſcend to the moſt ſervile Offices of a Family [I].

(g) Homer. Iliad. lib. 8. ver. 188.

[F] She has been the Subject of many fine Tragedies both ancient and modern.] That of Euripides is ſtill extant; and, if the Reader deſires to know what was the Succeſs of That, which was acted upon the French Stage at Paris, he need only read what Montfleury, a famous Player, ſays, in the Parnaſſus Reformed; to which he may add a Paſſage of a modern Poet. "If any one deſires to know what I died "of, (they are Montfleury's Words) he muſt not "ask, whether it was of a Fever, a Dropſy, or the "Gout: No, it was of Andromache - - - - I wiſh all "thoſe Writers of Tragedies, who invent theſe mur-"th'rous Paſſions, had to do, like Corneille, with "ſuch a Man as the Abbot d'Aubignac; they would "abate of their Fury. But what vexes me moſt, "is, that Andromache will grow more famous by "the Circumſtance of my Death; and that, for the "future, every Poet will want to have the Honour "of killing a Player once in his Life (21)." Add to this theſe few Verſes.

(21) Gueret's Parnaſſus Reformed, pag. 108, 109.

- - - - - - - Un Marquis
Enflé de ſon ſavoir chez les Dames aquis,
Ennemi du bon ſens qu' à grand bruit il attaque,
Va pleurer au Tartuffe & rire à l'Andromaque.

- - - - - - - A Marquis
Vain of Experience, gain'd among the Fair,
And Foe to Senſe, which rudely he attacks,
Shall, by inverted Rule, make Tartuff weep,
And paint Andromache a laughing Dame.

[G] Her lofty Stature was known to all Poſterity.] I have already produced two Verſes of Ovid upon this Subject, in the Remark [A]. Here are two more of the ſame Author.

Parva vehatur equo: quod erat LONGISSIMA, nunquam
Thebais Hectoreo nupta reſedit equo (22).

The Dapper only ſhou'd the Steed beſtride;
The Wife of Hector walk'd, too tall to ride.

(22) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. 3. ver. 777.

Martial refutes Ovid, as well in this Particular, as in what has been already cited. Theſe are his Words,

Maſturbabantur Phrygii poſt oſtia ſervi,
Hectoreo quoties ſederat uxor equo (23).

Behind the Doors the Phrygian Slaves were fired,
Oft as on Hector's Horſe his Conſort rode.

(23) Mart. Epigr. 105. lib. 11. ver. 13.

Juvenal was not ignorant of Andromache's Stature; for, ſpeaking of thoſe Ladies, who raiſed ſeveral Stories of Ornaments and Hair upon their Heads, he ſays, they reſembled ſo many Andromache's before, but appeared very little behind.

Tot premit ordinibus, tot adhuc compagibus altum
Ædificat caput. Andromachen à fronte videbis,
Poſt minor eſt (24).

With Curls on Curls they build her Head before,
And mount it with a formidable Tow'r.
*A Gianteſs * ſhe ſeems; but look behind,*
And there ſhe dwindles to the Pigmy kind.
DRYDEN.

(24) Juv. Sat. 6. ver. 500.

* An Andromache.

Thus the old Roman Ladies wore ſomething like our Top-Knots. Another Poet expreſſes himſelf in the following Manner,

- - - - - Celſæ procul aſpice frontis honores
Suggeſtumque comæ (25).

- - - - - behold the tow'ring Honours of her Head,
The riſing Mount of Hair. - - - - - -

(25) Stat. Silv. 2. lib. 2. ver. 113.

The Mother of the Gods, with her Towers upon her Head (26), would be nothing to our Ladies, if once they ſhould enlarge the Mode of their Top-Knots. See Mr Almeloveen's Amœnitates Theologico-Philologicæ, where you will find (27), a Collection of curious Learning about the Antiquity of Top-Knots. See alſo the Article Canaſte, and this Paſſage of Syneſius, Μέλλει γὰρ (28), ſpeaking of a Bride, καὶ εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν ἑβδόμην ταινιώσεσθαί τε καὶ πυργοφόρῳ καθάπερ ἡ Κύβελη περιελεύσεσθαι. She will be adorn'd with this Head-dreſs, theſe ſeven Days, and walk about, like Cybele, with Turrets on her Head. But, to return to Andromache, I muſt obſerve, that Dares Phrygius ſays, ſhe was endowed with many fine Qualities; and he does not forget her tall Stature, "Andromacham oculis claris, candidam, LONGAM, formoſam, modeſtam, ſapientem, pudicam, "blandam. - - - - - Andromache, Fine-Eyed, Fair, "TALL, Handſome, Modeſt, Wiſe, Chaſte, and "Good-natur'd."

(26) Qualis Berecynthia mater Invehitur curru Phrygias turrita per urbes. Virg. Æn. lib. 6. ver. 785.

(27) Pag. 106, &c.

(28) Syneſ. Epiſt. 3.

[H] Her Dialogue with Hector - - is one of the beſt Paſſages of That Poem.] This is the Judgment Mr Perrault paſſes upon it. He tranſlated This Dialogue into French Verſe, and read his Verſion to the French Academy, when the Abbot Fenelon was admitted into it (29). He firſt made a ſhort and ingenious Diſcourſe, in which he declared, that he believed Homer to be the moſt Excellent, the moſt Copious, and the fineſt Genius, Poetry ever knew; and that, in order to convince the Incredulous, that he honoured him according to his Merit, he had tranſlated This Part of the Iliad into French. He owns, that he has left out ſome Digreſſions, which ſeemed to him too languid. This is Homer's Fault; he is too talkative, and too downright; though otherwiſe a Writer of great Genius, and ſo full of noble Thoughts, that were he now alive, he would write an Epic Poem, free from all Deſects. He would not introduce Andromache, among other Complaints for the Death of her Husband, lamenting, that young Aſtyanax muſt no longer eat, upon his Father's Knees, the Fat and Marrow of Sheep. This is to paint after Nature, it muſt be confeſſed; but ſuch Simplicity is not allowable, at preſent, in Epic Poetry; it appears to us too Citizen-like; and only fit for Comedy. I believe our Counteſſes and Marchioneſſes would think they expreſſed themſelves too much like City Dames, ſhould they ſay, as the Queen of Carthage does in Virgil,

A REFLEXION on the Epic Poetry of the Ancients.

(29) On the Thirty firſt of March, 1663. This Verſion was printed in the firſt part of the Recueil de Pieces curieuſes, at the Hague, for Moetjens, 1694.

- - - - - - ſi quis mihi parvulus Aula
Luderet Æneas.

This Fault is not to be aſcribed to the ancient Poets, but to the time they lived in. Properly ſpeaking, the Queſtion is not, whether Men have better Parts now, than they had in former times; but whether we have better Notions of Perfection, and may apply to Homer what Horace ſays of another Poet.

- - - - - - - ſed ille,
Si foret hoc noſtrum fato dilapſus in ævum,
Detereret ſibi multa, recideret omne, quod ultra
Perfectum traheretur (30).

Yet did he now again new Life commence,
He wou'd correct; he wou'd retrench his Senſe,
And pare off all that was not Excellence.
CREECH.

(30) Horat. Sat. 10. lib. 1. ver. 67.

[I] Some have alledged this Example, to ſhew, that Women ought to condeſcend to the moſt ſervile Offices of a Family.] Read theſe Words of Tiraquellus (31). "Quæ loca Franciſcus Barbarus in ſuo libello de re "uxoria quem apud Gallos imprimendum primi omnium dedimus, ſolerter ſciteque annotavit, monens "his exemplis uxores ne res hujuſmodi contemnant "quas Andromache, &c. - - - - - & hoc quoque è noſtris commemoravit Jo. Lupus in rep. rubr. de don. inter vir. & uxor. & Bo. Curtil. in tract. nobilitatis, in 38. privilegio. —— Which Paſſages Franciſcus Barbarus, in his Treatiſe de re Uxoria, firſt publiſhed by me in France, wiſely diſtinguiſhed, putting Wives in mind, from theſe Examples, not to overlook thoſe things, which Andromache, &c. —— The ſame Remark has been made by our Countryman Jo. Lupus, in his Rep. Rubr. &c. and by Bo. Curtil. in his "Treatiſe

(31) Andr. Tiraquel. de Nobilit. cap. 20. n. 101. pag. 78.

Digitized by Google

" Treatiſe de Nobilitat. &c." Tiraquellus made no Reflexion upon this Circumſtance, viz. that Andromache's Husband was not firſt ſerved. Doubtleſs he thought this Example would prove too much; and that the Reader ought not to be entertained with ſuch a Notion.

ANDROMACHUS. I ſhall mention but ſix Perſons of this Name. The Firſt ANDROMACHUS, born in Sicily, was the Father of the Hiſtorian Timæus, and the Founder of Tauromenium, now called Taormina. He was a Man of Courage, and very rich. He gathered together (a) upon a riſing Ground, called Taurus, near Naxus, the Inhabitants of That Town, who had fled away, when the Tyrant Dionyſius deſtroyed it. He ſupported himſelf a long time in this Poſt; which was the Reaſon why he called it Tauromenium. The Fugitives of Naxus were very proſperous in this new Habitation; ſo that in a little time it became a very conſiderable Town (b). Andromachus received Timoleon into it, and permitted him to make it a Place of Arms. This Corinthian General came only to deliver Sicily from the Tyrants, who oppreſſed it. Andromachus was a profeſſed Enemy to Tyrants, and had a long time ſollicited the Corinthians to undertake the Deliverance of Sicily. He, therefore, and Timoleon, quickly reſolved to act in Concert, in order to reſtore the Public Liberty (c). The Second ANDROMACHUS ſerved under Alexander the Great, and was Governour of Cælo-Syria. The Samaritans burnt him alive; but Alexander puniſhed the Authors of this cruel Action according to their Deſerts (d). I find no other Andromachus in Quintus Curtius, tho' Moreri pretends there are many Perſons of this Name mentioned by That Hiſtorian. The Third ANDROMACHUS was Brother-in-law to Seleucus Callinicus King of Syria, and had a Son (e), who invaded the Provinces, ſituated on this ſide of Mount Taurus, and cauſed him to be proclaimed King, in the time of Antiochus the Great. This Andromachus was kept Priſoner a conſiderable time in Egypt. The Rhodians obtained his Liberty, not from Ptolemy Evergetes, as is ſaid in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, but from Ptolemy Philopator [A]. The Fourth ANDROMACHUS was a Traytor, who diſcovered to the Parthians all the Deſigns of Craſſus, and, being choſen as a Guide, led the Roman Army into a Place, where they could not avoid being cut to pieces. See Plutarch, pag. 562, of the Life of Craſſus. The Fifth ANDROMACHUS was Nero's Phyſician, who makes the Subject of the following Article. The Sixth ANDROMACHUS was a Sophiſt, who taught in Nicomedia under the Reign of Diocleſian; as we read in Suidas.

(a) In the CVth Olympiad, about the Year of Rome, 395.

(b) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 16. pag. 411.

(c) Plutarch. in Timoleonte, pag. 240. See alſo Diodorus Siculus, lib. 16.

(d) Curtius, lib. 4. cap. 9. Euſebius ad Olympiad. CXII.

(e) His Name was ACHÆUS. See his Article.

[A] The Rhodians obtained his Liberty, not from Ptolemy Evergetes —— but from Ptolemy Philopator.] The Fault of the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary will be manifeſt to any one, who conſiders, that, when the Rhodians obtained Andromachus's Liberty, his Son had been gone, two Years, over Mount Taurus, with Seleucus Ceraunus, King of Syria, to make War upon Attalus, King of Pergamus. Now this Expedition was undertaken the ſame Year, that Ptolemy Evergetes died, and was ſucceeded by Ptolemy Philopater (1). It was therefore Ptolemy Philopator, who ſet Andromachus at Liberty, to pleaſe the Rhodians, who wanted to deprive the City of Byzantium of the Favour of Achæus, and who thought, that the moſt effectual way to make a Friend of that Prince, was to procure the Liberty of his Father. See the Remark [A], of the Article ACHÆUS.

(1) See Calviſius ad ann. 3. Olympiadis CXXXIX.

ANDROMACHUS, a Native of the Iſle of Crete, and Phyſician to the Emperor Nero (a), is chiefly known by the Antidote, which he invented, by mixing the Fleſh of Vipers with Mithridate (b). This Antidote was called Theriace, on Account of this Mixture. We call it Treacle. Θηρίον ſignifies a Beaſt; but Phyſicians underſtand by Θηρία particularly venomous Beaſts (c). This Antidote baniſhed the uſe of Mithridate, which 'till then had been in great Eſteem (d). Andromachus wrote a Deſcription of his Antidote in Elegiac Verſe, and dedicated it to Nero (e). His Son, whoſe Name was ANDROMACHUS, wrote the like Deſcription in Proſe (f). Democrates did it in Iambic Verſe, in a Poem which he wrote concerning Antidotes (g). We read, in Galen, that Andromachus, the Father, wrote a Treatiſe De Medicamentis compoſitis ad adfectus externos (h), and that he was a Learned and an Eloquent Man (i). Erotian dedicated his Lexicon to him. I wonder how Meurſius could forget ſo famous a Phyſician, in his Liſt of the Illuſtrious Men of the Iſle of Crete, in the fourth Book of his Treatiſe of That Iſland. Some will have it, that this Phyſician was a good Aſtrologer [A].

(a) Galen. de Theriaca, ad Piſonem.

(b) Voſſius de Philoſophia, cap. 12. pag. 95.

(c) Galen de Ther. ad Pamphilianum.

(d) Voſſius ubi ſupra.

(e) Galen. lib. 1. de Antidotis. Tzetzes Chil. 12. n. 397. pag. 224.

(f) Galen. ibid.

(g) Id. de Theriaca ad Piſon.

(h) Apud Voſſium de Philoſoph. pag. 96.

(i) Lib. 1. de Antid. cap. 1.

[A] That this Phyſician was a good Aſtrologer.] I begin with Voſſius's Words. " Circa Olympiadem " CXI, (the Printer has left out a C; it ſhould be " CCXI) ac deinceps, nempe extremis Neronis tem- " poribus, & ſub Veſpaſiano, magnum ſibi decus " hac ſcientia peperit Andromachus, Cretenſis, qui " primus dicitur edidiſſe theoricas Planetarum. —— " About the CCXIth Olympiad, and afterwards, name- " ly, about the end of the Reign of Nero, and in that " of Veſpaſian, Andromachus, of Crete, acquired great " Reputation in this Science, who is ſaid to be the " firſt, who publiſhed Theories of the Planets." This is Voſſius's Text in the Hundred ſixty firſt Page of his Book, de Scientiis Mathematicis, to which he adds the following Commentary, according to his uſual Method. " Conſentiunt de eo Lucas Gauricus, " & Chriſtophorus Clavius, niſi quod Gauricus perpe- " ram Andronicum vocat, qui Clavio rectius Andro- " machus. Illum vide in Calendario Eccleſiaſtico *, " hunc Commentario † in Sphæram Joan. de Sacro- " boſco. —— Luke Gauric, and Chriſtopher Clavius, " agree in relation to this Perſon; except that Gauric, " by miſtake, called Him Andronicus, whom Clavius " rightly calls Andromachus. See the former in his " Eccleſiaſtical Calander, the latter in his Commen- " tary on the Sphere of John de Sacroboſco." I wonder Voſſius did not tell us, whether, or no, he believed this Andromachus, the Aſtrologer, to be the ſame, with him, who invented Treacle. The Time, wherein he places him, and the Country, he ſays he was born in, would induce one to think he means one and the ſame Andromachus. I am apt to believe, that

* Fol. 16. Edit. Venet. apud Juntas, ann. 1552.

† Commentar. in cap. 1. pag. 4.

Digitized by Google

that Voſſius's Silence in this matter was the Effect of Prudence: He wanted farther Information; and therefore would not venture to decide peremptorily. Moreri, a much bolder Author, affirms, that Andromachus, Nero's Phyſician, and Andromachus the Aſtrologer, the firſt who wrote concerning the Theory of the Planets, are one and the ſame Perſon. Andromachus, the Aſtrologer, ſeems to me to be a Chimera; for Mr Drelincourt, whom I never conſulted, without admiring his vaſt and accurate Learning, was pleaſed to acquaint me, among many other things, which I make uſe of in this Article, that the Words Inventor Theoricarum, in Clavius, ought to be read Inventor Theriacarum. This Correction utterly deſtroys the two Authorities alledged by Voſſius, as to what concerns the Theory of the Planets; one ſpeaks only of Andromachus, and the other aſcribes the Invention of Treacle alone to Andromachus. We have here a plain Inſtance of the Miſtakes of learned Men, occaſioned by the Errors of Printers and Tranſcribers. Blancanus places Andromachus among the Mathematicians: "Andromachus Cretenſis, quem Theoricarum inventorem facit Clavius (1). —— Andromachus of Crete, whom Clavius makes the Inventer of "Theories." The ſame may be ſaid of Voſſius. So that they, who pretend, that Andromachus was the firſt, who wrote concerning the Theory of the Planets, have no Ground for it, but a Falſe-Print, by which the Word Theriacarum has been changed into Theoricarum. Mr Drelincourt alledged this Reaſon, among others, for his Conjecture, viz. that the Epithet Inventor has nothing to do with the Theory of the Planets; which, beſides, was known before Nero's Reign; whereas Inventor, added to Theriacarum, is very properly applied to Andromachus. Perhaps the ſame kind of Miſtake of the Printers, or Tranſcribers, occaſioned our Andromachus to be taken for an Aſtrologer, by Clavius, or by the Author, whom Clavius, mediately, or immediately, followed. The Word Andromachus was, perhaps, printed inſtead of Andronicus, or ſome ſuch Name. Whence it was, that they, who knew, that one Andromachus, of Crete, was Nero's Phyſician, and the Inventer of Treacle, added theſe Titles and Encomiums to the Word Andromachus, in their Liſts of Aſtrologers.

(1) Blancan. in Mathem. Chronol. pag. 50.

ANDRONICUS, a Peripatetic Philoſopher, born in the Iſland of Rhodes, came to Rome, in the time of Pompey and Cicero [A]; where he laboured powerfully to raiſe the Credit of Ariſtotle, whoſe Works he brought into requeſt [B], after having regulated, and diſpoſed them after a better Method [C]. There was ſomething very ſingular in the Fate of theſe Writings, as I ſhall ſhew in another place (a). One cannot ſufficiently expreſs, what great Service Andronicus did to the Sect of the Peripatetics. Perhaps, It had never been ſo famous, if he had not taken a particular Care of the Works of it's Founder. Andronicus acquired a great Reputation by it (b). Some learned Men do not aſcribe to him the Paraphraſe upon Ariſtotle's

(a) In the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION.

(b) Quem cum acutum diligentemque Ariſtotelicorum librorum & judicem & reperitorem judicaverit antiquitas. Boëtius Præm. Libri de interpretat.

[A] Came to Rome in the Time of Pompey and Cicero.] This may be inferred from two Paſſages of Plutarch; one in the Life of Sylla (1), and the other in the Life of Lucullus (2). The firſt informs us of three things; I. That Sylla ſent, from Athens to Rome, Apellicon's Library, in which moſt of Ariſtotle's Works were to be found. II. That the Grammarian Tyrannion took many Books out of Sylla's Library. III. That Andronicus, the Rhodian, had Ariſtotle's Works from Tyrannion. We learn, from the ſecond Paſſage of Plutarch, that Tyrannion was taken by Lucullus, when Mithridates was defeated, and that Murena, having asked him of Lucullus, gave him his Freedom. We know, beſides, that this Grammarian enriched himſelf at Rome, and collected a large Library. Andronicus muſt, therefore, have been at Rome, at the time I have mentioned, ſince he had Ariſtotle's Works from Tyrannion. We ſhall ſee, in the Remark [C], whether Father Rapin is in the right, to ſay, that Andronicus did not come to Rome, 'till after the Death of Tyrannion.

(1) Pag. 468.

(2) Pag. 584.

[B] Whoſe Works he brought into requeſt.] This ſuppoſes they were before unknown at Rome; and I have reaſon to affirm it, ſince Cicero does; nay, Plutarch tells us, that they were little known to the Athenians, when Sylla ſeized on Apellicon's Books (3). Father Rapin has before obſerved, what I here ſuppoſe. "It was That Andronicus, ſays he (4), who brought "Ariſtotle into requeſt at the time, when Cicero was "raiſing himſelf, by his great Reputation, to the "moſt conſiderable Dignities of the Republic. —— "Cicero had heard of Ariſtotle in Greece. He was acquainted with part of his Merit, which was not "very well known at Rome; as appears from the "Surprize of Trebatius, who paid a Viſit to Cicero, "at his Country Seat of Tuſculum, and, going into "his Library with him, happened to light upon Ariſtotle's Topics, of which Cicero had a Copy. Trebatius asked him, what Book it was, and what "it treated of; for, though he was no ignorant "Man, he had never heard of Ariſtotle. Cicero told "him, That it was no wonder, ſince that Philoſopher "was known to very few (5)." I cannot forbear ſaying, that this agreeable Writer is not exact, in reporting this Paſſage of Cicero. This, I think, ought not to be aſcribed to Inadvertency; but to a Deſire of Brevity. It is an Inconvenience inſeparable from exact Writers; they cannot avoid a Prolixity, which tires the Reader; who is better pleaſed with an eaſy and ſhort Account of a thing, though not perfectly exact, than with a long one, though ever ſo accurate. Father Rapin, in order to give the Subſtance of Cicero's Paſſage, ſhould have ſaid, that Trebatius, turning over ſeveral Books in Cicero's Library, met with Ariſtotle's Topics; that, being ſurprized at the Title, he immediately asked Cicero what Book it was, and, being informed, deſired him to explain it to him; that Cicero adviſed him to read it himſelf, or to get it explained to him by an able Rhetorician; that Trebatius tried both theſe Methods without any Succeſs, being himſelf diſcouraged by the Obſcurity of the Book, and being told by the Rhetorician, that Ariſtotle was an Author unknown to him; that Cicero was not ſurprized at it, though ſuch an Ignorance appeared to him inexcuſable; and that, at the Requeſt of Trebatius, who was a learned Civilian, he wrote upon Ariſtotle's Topics (6). "Utrumque, ut à te audie- "bam, es expertus. Sed à libris te obſcuritas reje- "cit. Rhetor autem ille, magnus ut opinor, Ari- "ſtotelica ſe ignorare reſpondit. Quod quidem mi- "nime ſum admiratus, cum Philoſophum rhetori "non eſſe cognitum, qui ab ipſis Philoſophis præter "admodum paucos ignoretur. Quibus eo minus ig- "noſcendum eſt, quod non modo rebus iis quæ ab "illo dictæ & inventæ ſunt allici debuerunt; ſed di- "cendi quoque incredibili quadam cum copia, tum "etiam ſuavitate (7). —— You have, as you yourſelf "informed me, try'd both theſe Methods. But "the Obſcurity of the Books deterred you. Beſides "which, your Rhetorician, of great Fame, I think, "replied, that he knew nothing of Ariſtotle. Which "I was not at all ſurprized at; namely, that "a Rhetorician was unacquainted with this Philoſo- "pher, who is unknown to the Philoſophers themſelves, "a very few excepted. This they are the leſs to be forgi- "ven; ſince not only the Subject of his Writings, but even "the wonderful Copiouſneſs and Elegance of his Style, "ought to have engaged them to read him." To conceal nothing from the Reader, I muſt acquaint him, that Strabo informs us (8), that the Library-Keeper of Sylla permitted the Bookſellers to get Ariſtotle's Works tranſcribed; but that they made uſe of ignorant Tranſcribers, who, beſides, did not compare the Copies with the Originals; which occaſioned theſe Works to be publiſhed with abundance of Faults. This cannot be alledged in confutation of what I have ſaid; for I may anſwer, that Andronicus's Edition, being more correct, raiſed the Curioſity of the Learned, who made no account of the faulty Editions. See the Marginal Note (6).

(3) Οὕτω τότε σαφῶς γνωριζόμενα τοῖς πολλοῖς. Haud dum ſatis in vulgus noti. Plut. in Sylla, pag. 458.

(4) Rapin. Compariſon de Platon. & d'Ariſtot. pag. 374.

(5) Father Rapin quotes the following Words in the Margin. Quod quidem minime ſum admiratus cum Philoſophum Trebatio non eſſe cognitum, qui ab ipſis Philoſophis, præter admodum paucos, ignoretur. Cicero Topicor. init.

(6) He compoſed this Work, after Cæſar's Death; whence we may infer, that the Edition of Andronicus did not immediately make Ariſtotle's Works commonly known at Rome.

(7) Cicero init. Topicorum.

(8) Lib. 13. pag. 419.

[C] Diſpoſed them after a better Method.] Plutarch ſays, that Andronicus, having received Ariſtotle's and Theophraſtus's

Digitized by Google

Ariſtotles's Ethics [D]; others pretend he is the Author of it, and likewiſe of a ſmall Treatiſe on the Paſſions, publiſhed by David Hoeſchelius, in 1593. It is certain, that Andronicus was an Author; for Aulus Gellius, in a Chapter (c), wherein he mentions the two kinds of Leſſons, which Ariſtotle gave his Scholars, ſets down word for word a Letter of Alexander to Ariſtotle, and Ariſtotle's Anſwer; and informs us, that he met with theſe two Letters in a Work of the Philoſopher Andronicus. No one can ſay, whether this Work was the Paraphraſe upon the Categories, or That on The Phyſics. It is well known, that Andronicus paraphraſed thoſe two Treatiſes of Ariſtotle [E]. I am not of Opinion, that he was Strabo's Maſter [F].

(c) It is the fifth of the twentieth Book.

Theophraſtus's Books from Tyrannion, publiſhed them with Indexes. Παρ' αὐτῦ τὸν Ῥόδιον Ἀνδρόνικον εὐπορήσαντα τῶν ἀνεξεάφων εἰς μέσον θεῖναι, καὶ ἀναγράψαι τὰς νῦν φερομένας πίνακα (9). The following Paſſage of Porphyry may be added to this of Plutarch. Μιμησάμενος δ' Ἀπολλόδωρον τὸν Ἀθηναῖον, καὶ Ἀνδρόνικον τὸν Περιπατητικὸν, ὧν ὁ μὲν Ἐπιχαρμον τὸν κωμοδοσφαφον εἰς δέκα τόμυς φέρων συνήγαγε, ὁ δ' Ἀεισοτέλυς καὶ Θεοφράστυ βιβλία εἰς πραγματείας διεῖλε, τὰς οἰκείας ὑποθέσεις εἰς ταυτὸ συναγάγων. ὅτω δὲ καὶ ἐγώ (10). Imitatus Apollodorum Athenienſem & Andronicum Peripateticum, quorum ille Epicharmum Comicum in decem collegit tomos, iſte vero Ariſtotelis & Theophraſti libros in tractatus diſtribuit, proprias ſuppoſitiones in idem conducens; ſic & ego. I confeſs I do not very well underſtand the Greek Words, τὰς οἰκείας ὑποθέσεις εἰς ταυτὸ συναγάγων. Much leſs do I underſtand the Tranſlation, proprias ſuppoſitiones in idem conducens; but I think either of the two following Senſes may be allowed. Porphyry means, either that Andronicus collected into one Body all the Tracts, which belonged to the ſame Subject, or that he added a proper Summary to each Tract. The firſt Senſe ſeems to me the beſt, and agrees better with Plutarch, and the Compariſon, which Porphyry makes between Andronicus and himſelf; for Porphyry only prefixed Titles to the Writings of his Maſter Plotinus, and digeſted them into ſeveral Claſſes. I have not met with any Author, who ſays what I have read in Father Rapin; and, as he quotes only Plotinus, I know not, whether he had it from a Work, which I have not conſulted, or whether he paraphraſes Plotinus and Plutarch. However it be, theſe are his Words, which have been faithfully tranſcribed by Moreri. "After Tyrannion's Death, Andronicus, "the Rhodian, came to Rome, and, being ſenſible "of Ariſtotle's Worth, having been bred up in the "Lyceum, he bought thoſe Writings of Tyrannion's "Heirs, and examined them ſo carefully, that he "was, in a manner, the firſt Reſtorer of them, as "Porphyry affirms in Plotinus's Life. For he not "only reſtored what had been injured by length of "Time, and the Careleſneſs of thoſe, who were in "poſſeſſion of theſe Works, but took them out of "that ſtrange Confuſion they were in, and got them "tranſcribed (11)." The beginning of this Paſſage contradicts Plutarch, who affirms, that Andronicus had Ariſtotle's Works from Tyrannion himſelf. I confeſs, Plutarch is not ſo exact, but we may give up his Authority in Circumſtances; but, ſince we have no Author, who ſays, that Tyrannion's Heirs, and not Tyrannion himſelf, ſold to Andronicus the Writings of Ariſtotle; I think we had better adhere to Plutarch, ſince Chronology is not againſt him. See the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION. Some ſay, that Andronicus was the tenth Succeſſor of Ariſtotle, and that he flouriſhed in the CLXXXth Olympiad (12).

(9) Plutarch in Sylla, pag. 468.

(10) Porphyr. in vita Plotini.

(11) Rapin. Comparaiſon de Platon. & Ariſtot. pag. 373, 374.

(12) Ammonius apud Jonſium de Scriptor. Hiſt. Philoſ. pag. 60.

[D] Some learned Men do not aſcribe to him the Paraphraſe upon Ariſtotle's Ethics.] Daniel Heinſius, who tranſlated this Paraphraſe into Latin, plainly enough intimates, that he takes it to be the Work of this famous Peripatetic. He publiſhed it, in Greek and Latin, at Leyden, in the Year 1607, in 4to. It had never been printed before, either in Greek, or Latin. Many Errors crept into this Edition, which were corrected, at leaſt in part, in That of the Year 1617, in 8vo. Heinſius prefixed the Name of Andronicus Rhodius to the ſecond Edition. He was contented, in the firſt, to aſcribe this Work to an ancient Philoſopher, who was a famous Peripatetic. There is a Parentheſis in a Paſſage of Naudé, which may ſerve to vindicate him againſt Placcius. "Cui ſe Danielis Heinſii ------ diligentiâ ſocium "non ita pridem adjunxit Andronicus Rhodius (aut "potius Olympiodorus:) talem enim appellationem in "poſteriori editione conſulto ſortitus eſt, cum in priori "ab eodem Heinſio facta Lugduni Batavorum ſub "anonymi nomine latens ----- fuiſſet ----- avide "à cunctis receptus. ----- To whom Andronicus "Rhodius joined himſelf, by the Care of Daniel "Heinſius; (or rather Olympiodorus:) for this Ap- "pellation was purpoſely aſſumed in the latter Edi- "tion; ſince, in the former, publiſh'd by the ſame Hein- "ſius at Leyden, though without a Name, He was "eagerly received by the Public." They are Naudé's Words, in his Bibliographia politica; upon which Placcius makes this Remark: "Ubi lapſus memoriæ "ſit oportet, quod de Olympiodoro memorat, cum "ejus nullam unquam in alterutra editione mentio- "nem Heinſius fecerit (13). ----- Where his Me- "mory certainly fails him, as to what he ſays of "Olympiodorus; ſince Heinſius makes no mention "of him in either Edition." It appears from Naudé's Parentheſis, that the Words Andronicus Rhodius only, and not Olympiodorus, are to be referred to Heinſius. Meurſius does not doubt, that Andronicus is the Author of this Paraphraſe, and of the Treatiſe περὶ παθῶν, publiſhed by Hoeſchelius, from two Manuſcripts; one of which he received from Marcunius; the other was ſent to Sylburgius, from Spain, by Andrew Schottus (14). Voſſius aſcribes this laſt Work to one Andronicus, not ſo ancient, as He who makes the Subject of this Article (15). Reineſius is of Meurſius's Opinion (16); but Salmaſius aſſerts, that Andronicus Rhodius was not the Author of the Paraphraſe, tranſlated by Daniel Heinſius (17). They, ſays he, who firſt publiſhed this Para- phraſe, injudiciouſly aſcribed it to Andronicus; and he laughs at them for boaſting, that they had met with very good Proofs of it, in the ancient Interpreters of Ariſtotle (18). He ſhews, that the true Andronicus, in Aulus Gellius, explains Ariſtotle's ἐξωτερικὰ and ἀκροατικὰ differently from the Paraphraſt. Salmaſius enlarges very much upon this: and adds, that This Paraphraſt does not agree with Ariſtotle in many things (19). "In tam multis abit "à mente Ariſtotelis, ut Andronici eſſe genuinum "opus ſoli poſſint credere, qui nihil in literis his "vident. ----- He departs in ſo many things from "Ariſtotle's meaning, that They alone, who are whol- "ly unacquainted with theſe Studies, can poſſibly mi- "ſtake it for the Genuine Work of Andronicus." He cannot believe, that ſo great a Philoſopher as Andronicus would have miſpent his time ſo far as to paraphraſe a Book the moſt intelligible in the World. Quis credat tanti nominis Peripateticum otium ſuum occupaſſe in Ethicis Ariſtotelis paraphraſi elucidandis, quo libro nihil lucidius? This laſt Proof ſeems to me to be very weak.

(13) Placcius de Anonym. pag. 62.

(14) Meurſ. de Rhodo, lib. 2. cap. 5. pag. 88.

(15) Voſſ. de Philoſophia, cap. 5. pag. 36.

(16) Reineſ. Epiſt. ad Rupertum, pag. 312.

(17) Salmaſ. in Epictet. & Simplic. pag. 227.

(18) Ibid. pag. 228.

(19) Ibid. pag. 241.

[E] Andronicus paraphraſed thoſe two Treatiſes of Ariſtotle.] Simplicius witneſſes this in ſeveral Paſſages of his Commentaries. See Franciſcus Patricius (20).

(20) Diſcuſſionum Peripateticarum, Tom. 1. lib. 4. pag. 40, 41.

[F] I am not of Opinion, that he was Strabo's Maſter.] I know not, whether the Printers have omitted ſome Words, or Lines, in Reineſius's Copy, or whether Reineſius be the true Author of theſe Words, pag. 312 (21). Amaſiæ Magiſter (Andronicus Rhodius) Strabonis: hic lib. XIV. They mean, that Strabo ſays, in his fourteenth Book, that he was Andronicus Rhodius's Scholar at Amaſia. But it appears, that he was the Diſciple of the Grammarian Ariſtodemus at Nyſa (22), and of Xenarchus, the Peripatetic Philoſopher, in another Place (23). And, if I am not very much miſtaken, all that he ſays of Andronicus, in his 14th Book, is, That he was one of the illuſtrious Men of the Iſland of Rhodes (24); and I dare affirm, that he no where ſays, in his Writings, either that he was Andronicus's Scholar, or that Andronicus taught at Amaſia.

(21) Of his Letters to Rupert.

(22) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 447.

(23) Ibid. pag. 401.

(24) Pag. 451.

Digitized by Google

ANDRONICUS (MARCUS POMPILIUS) a Syrian, taught Grammar at Rome. His too great Application to the Study of Philoſophy [A] diſqualified him for performing the Part of a Grammarian as diligently, as he ought to have done; which occaſioned his School to be neglected. When he ſaw, that Antonius Gniphon, and even ſome Grammarians, inferior to himſelf, were yet preferred to him, he quitted his School, and retired to Cumæ, where he ſpent his time in writing Books. This Employment was no Relief to him in his wretched Condition. His great Poverty obliged him to ſell the Beſt of his Works at a very low Price [B]. This Work was ſuppreſſed; but Orbilius repurchaſed it, and publiſhed it under the Author's Name; at leaſt he pretended ſo to do. Andronicus followed the Sect of Epicurus, and lived in Cicero's time (a). Moreri has been guilty of many Errors in relation to this Perſon [C].

(a) Ex Suetonio de Illuſtrib. Grammaticis, cap. 8.

[A] His too great Application to the ſtudy of Philoſophy.] Suctonius makes uſe of very proper Terms. "Studio Epicureæ ſectæ deſidioſior in profeſſione "Grammaticæ habebatur, minuſque idoneus ad tuen- "dam ſcholam. - - - - - His Attachment to the Sect "of Epicurus was thought to have rendered him too "indolent for the Profeſſion of Grammar, and unfit "for the Care of a School." This ought to ſerve as a Leſſon to thoſe, who deſire to have a great many Scholars. They ought to apply themſelves entirely to their Profeſſion, or take care, at leaſt, that no one knows they follow other Studies. A Philologiſt, who ſets up for a Philoſopher, who is curious after Phyſical Experiments, and carefully examines, whether Des Cartes has been more ſucceſsful, than Gaſſendus, runs a great hazard of ſeeing his Claſs deſerted. A Phyſician, fond of Medals, Mathematics, and Genealogies, muſt not expect to have a great many Patients. And this was the Reaſon, why Dr Spon thought fit to acquaint the Public, that they would be very much miſtaken, if they thought, that he made the Study of Antiquity his principal Employ (1). He found, by Experience, that this Opinion was very prejudicial to him, in reſpect to his Practice, as a Phyſician. Beſides, it is certain, that a Profeſſor, who is known to write many Books, is not looked upon as a Man fit to improve his Scholars; and therefore they, who deſire to grow rich by teaching Youth, will not ſucceed in it, if they ſet up for Authors.

ADVICE to thoſe, who exerciſe any particular Profeſſion.

(1) See the Letter, which he wrote to the Author of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for January, 1685, Art. 5.

[B] Obliged him to ſell the beſt of his Works at a very low Price.] Suetonius calls it a ſmall Tract. Opuſculum, ſays he (2), Annalium Elenchorum. The Title, therefore, of this Work muſt have been Elenchi Annalium. Some Manuſcripts of Suetonius have the following Reading, Opuſculum ſuum Annalium Ennii elenchorum (3). Achilles Statius (4), and Voſſius (5), declare for this Reading; and I think they are in the right. Whatever Reading we follow, it appears, that Andronicus had cenſured an Annaliſt.

(2) Sueton. de Illuſtr. Gramm. cap. 8.

(3) See Caſaubon, upon this Paſſage of Suetonius.

(4) In Sueton. ibid.

(5) De Hiſtor. Lat. lib. pag. 47.

[C] Moreri has been guilty of many Errors, in relation to this Perſon.] I. He calls him Pompinius, inſtead of Pompilius. II. He falſly ſays, that Andronicus had been Preceptor to Julius Cæſar, and that Cicero, though a Prætor, was very well pleaſed to be one of his Hearers. III. He renders Annalium Elenchi, Annals digeſted into Tables. IV. He ſays, that ſome have aſcribed theſe Tables to Ennius. Thus he underſtands theſe Words of Voſſius, in quibuſdam tamen libris eſt annalium Ennii Elenchorum. V. He weakens Suetonius's Argument. That Hiſtorian mentions two Circumſtances, which plainly diſcover Andronicus's Poverty: One of them is taken from the Importance of what was ſold; viz, the beſt of the Author's Works; the other from the ſmall Price, at which it was ſold. Moreri thought he expreſſed the whole Senſe of Suetonius in theſe Words: He was ſo poor, that he was obliged, in order to ſupport himſelf, to ſell a ſmall Tract, which he had compoſed. How came he not to perceive, that he enervated, in a great Meaſure, the Proof of This Hiſtorian? The Reader will not be diſpleaſed to ſee what was the Occaſion of his ſecond Miſtake, which contains two or three notorious Falſhoods. He did not apprehend Voſſius's Argument. That Author was to prove, that Andronicus lived in the time of Siſenna, and Quadrigarius, and ſome others. He proves it by this Reaſon; becauſe Antonius Gniphon, and Andronicus, lived at the ſame time; and, becauſe Gniphon, as Suetonius relates, taught in the Houſe of Julius Cæſar, and had Cicero among his Hearers. He taught in Cæſar's Houſe, when Cæſar was but a Child. Cicero, who was Prætor, went to hear him: Here are two Circumſtances of Time, which Voſſius alledges out of Suetonius to fix the Age of Pompilius Andronicus; to which he adds another Particular, atteſted by Suetonius, viz. that Andronicus and Gniphon kept School at the ſame time. Moreri underſtands of Andronicus what Voſſius ſays of Gniphon. Beſides, he thought that the keeping of a School in a Perſon's Houſe meant only being Tutor to his Son.

ANDRONICUS, of Theſſalonica, was one of the Fugitive Greeks, who reſtored Learning in the Weſt, in the XVth Century. He paſſed for the beſt Profeſſor, next to Theodorus Gaza; and perhaps he exceeded him in the Knowledge of the Greek Tongue; for he had read all the Authors, who had wrote in that Language, and was a perfect Maſter of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy. He taught at Rome; and lodged in Cardinal Beſſarion's Houſe. His Salary was ſo inconſiderable, that Poverty obliged him to leave Rome. He went to Florence, where he was Profeſſor a conſiderable time, and had a great many Hearers; but, hoping to meet with better Fortune in France, he removed into That Country, and died there ſoon after, being very far advanced in Years. He had a bad Pronunciation; and regarded nothing but his Studies (a). Platina gives him the Character of being perfectly ſkilled in the Greek and Latin Tongues (b). I ſhall take notice, in the Remarks, of a Miſtake of Gabriel Naudé [A]. There

(b) Græcè & Latinâ linguâ apprimè eruditus Platina in Paneg. Beſſarionis.

(a) Taken from Volaterran. lib. 21. pag. 775.

[A] A Miſtake of Gabriel Naudé.] Having ſaid, that one Hermonymus of Sparta taught at Paris, he adds; Afterwards there arrived another, called Tranquillus Andronicus Dalmata, who was the laſt of thoſe, who came thither in the Reign of Lewis XI. (1). It is plain, that he confounds Andronicus of Theſſalonica with him, who is the Subject of the following Article. Moreri has committed the ſame Fault; and, by endeavouring to diſtinguiſh, he is become more embroiled. He will have it, that Tranquillus Andronicus, Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue at Paris, was not the ſame, who had a great Share in Cardinal Beſſarion's Friendſhip; and yet 'tis certain, that the Client of That Cardinal is the ſame with him, who was Profeſſor at Paris. Moreri ſhould not have called him Calixtus Andronicus, but Andronicus Caliſtus. Conſider theſe Words; which inform us, that he was related to the famous Theodorus Gaza. "Gaudeo equidem plurimum, they are Philelphus's Words, "in a Letter, which he wrote, from Milan to Gaza, "the Twenty firſt of January 1469, Eruditiſſimum "virum mihique amiciſſimum Andronicum Kalliſtum, "neceſſarium tuum, apud vos agere, id eſt in Mu- "ſarum & ſapientiæ domicilio, quem ut verbis meis "ſalvere jubeas abs te peto, meque τοῖς περὶ Βησ- "σαρίωνα τὸν δεσπότην commenda (2). - - - - I "am

(1) Naudé's Additions to the Hiſtory of Lewis XI, pag. 187.

(2) Philelph. Epiſtol. lib. 29. See alſo a Paſſage of the ſixteenth Book, and another of the ſeventeenth. Theſe Paſſages were pointed out to me, by Monſ. de la Monnoie.

Digitized by Google

There was, at the same time, another ANDRONICUS, a Native of Constantinople, who taught at Bologne [B].

" am overjoyed, that my dear Friend, and your " Relation, the learned Andronicus Callistus, is " with you, that is in the Residence of Philoso- " phy and the Muses; whom I desire you to com- " pliment in my Name; and commend me to Bessa- " rion's Family." This Andronicus Callistus was a Peripatetic, and wrote a Book de Physica scientia & fortuna, another de misera Constantinopoli, and some other Tracts mentioned by Father Labbé (3). Once more; Moreri should not have distinguished between him and the other, who taught at Paris; nor should he have said, that the latter was Professor at Basil. The Author of the Athenes ancienne & nouvelle places Antonicus among the learned Greeks, who came into Italy, about the middle of the fourteenth Century (4). He meant, doubtless, Andronicus, and put fourteenth instead of fifteenth.

(3) In his Nova Bibl. oth. Manusc. librar. I have this from Mon'. de la Monnoie, as also what is contained in the following Remark.

(4) Athen. Ancienne & Nouv. pag. 23, of the third Edition of Paris, 1676.

[B] There was, at the same time, another ANDRONICUS, a Native of Constantinople, who taught at Bologne] Philelphus commends him in several of his Letters. I shall transcribe but one Passage out of the first Letter of the Twenty fourth Book, dated the last of October, 1464. " Quare " non possum vos omnes, qui Bononiæ agitis, non " mirari plurimum, quod cum vobis viri doctissimè " eruditi copia data sit ad Græcam disciplinam pe- " nitus consequendam, malitis indocti esse quam " docti. Nunquam equidem discendi gratia trajecis- " sem in Græciam Constantinopolim, qua in urbe " septennium egi, si istiusmodi mihi Andronicus By- " zantius esset oblatus. ------ Wherefore I cannot " sufficiently wonder at all you, who live at Bologne, " who chuse to continue in Ignorance, when the Pre- " sence of one of the most learned Men puts it in your " Power to acquire a perfect Knowledge of the Greek " Tongue. For my own Part, I should never have " passed into Greece, as far as Constantinople, where " I resided seven Years, for the sake of learning it, " if it had been in my Power to have had Recourse, " at Home, to such a Byzantian Andronicus."

ANDRONICUS (TRANQUILLUS) born in Dalmatia, towards the end of the XVth Century, was about a Work, which he promised to publish [A]. He taught in the University of Leipsic, at the same time with Mosellan [B]. It will appear by my Remarks, that he was an Author (a). Erasmus wrote a Letter to him: It is the Tenth of the fourth Book.

(a) See the Remark [B].

[A] Was about a Work, which he promised to publish.] Paul Jovius having said, that the sad Condition Dalmatia had been reduced to, by the Turks, was an Obstacle to the Study of Literature; and that, therefore, he would not mention any learned Men of That Country, adds, unless Tranquillus Andronicus acquaints us with the Merit of his Countrymen. Let us produce the very Words of Paul Jovius. " Sic ut nemo dignus elogio compare- " at, nisi in Lucem studiosè producat cives suos " Tranquillus Andronicus, præclarus Ciceronis æmu- " lator, dum gravissimarum actionum ac Othomanicæ " legationis obscurorumque nobis itinerum Commen- " taria perscribit (1). —— Insomuch that there seems " to be no one worthy of an Elogy, unless Tranquillus " Andronicus, the famous modern Cicero, shall dis- " play the Merits of his Country-men, in his Commen- " taries on the important Transactions of the dark Em- " bassy to Turkey." This Passage intimates, that Andronicus took a Journey to Constantinople, either as Envoy, or in the Retinue of an Ambassador. Konig is not so reserved; he says positively, that Andronicus was deputed to Turkey, and wrote a Book concerning his Negotiation: Legationem ad Turcam obiit, eamque suis commentariis illustravit. Authors, who amplify what they quote, cannot be sufficiently censured for it. Jovius speaks only of a Work, which Andronicus was about; Konig converts it into a Book actually publish'd.

(1) Jovius in Elog. pag. 259.

[B] He taught in the University of Leipsic, at the same time with Mosellan.] This I find in Simler: Hic, says he (2), literas docuit Lipsiæ Pet. Mosellani tempore. He calls him Tranquillus Partheni Andronicus, Dalmata, and makes him the Author of a Speech, printed at Ausburg, in 1518, and at Vienna, in 1541. The Subject of this Speech is to exhort all the Princes of Germany to make War against the Turks. There is another Speech of his de Laudibus Eloquentiæ, and some Latin Verses (3). Du Verdier's Supplements mention a Dialogue of the same Author, entituled Sylla (4): The Interlocutors are Cæsar, Sylla, Pompey, and Minos. It was printed at Leipsic in 8vo. The Year of the Impression is not set down in Du Verdier's Supplements.

(2) Epitom. Biblioth. Gesneri, p. 806.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) Id. ibid.

ANGIOLELLO (JOHN MARIA), a Native of Vicenza, wrote an History of Mahomet II, in the Italian and Turkish Languages; which he dedicated to him. It was very well received by that haughty Sultan, who not only greatly caressed Angiolello, but gratified him likewise with a Reward. The Author had been an Eye-witness of what he related; for, being one of the Slaves of the young Sultan Mustapha, he followed him in the Expedition to Persia, in the Year 1573. I speak of the dreadful War, which Mahomet made, in Person, with near Two hundred thousand Men, in the States of Ussun-Cassan. We may well wonder, that Angiolello, who doubtless knew the Haughtiness of this Turkish Emperor, ventured to insert, in his History, the injurious Words, spoken by Ussun-Cassan against Mahomet; when, discovering his Army from a rising Ground, near the Euphrates, he reproached him with Illegitimacy. Perhaps Mahomet never knew, that these Reproaches were perpetuated in this History; for Princes are not acquainted with every thing, which is contained in Books dedicated to them. However it be, Angiolello's Work was kindly received, and well rewarded (a). They, who say, that he flourished in 1524 (b), are not exact; but what they add, that he wrote the Life of Ussun-Cassan, is more accurate. A Work of Giov. Mario Angiolello, della vita è de' fatti di Re di Persia, —— J. M. Angiolello, of the Life and Actions of the King of Persia, was printed at Venice, in 1553 (c). And I find in the Catalogue of Thuanus's Library (d), Relatione della vita è de' fatti del Signor Usuncassan, —— A Relation of the Life and Actions of Usuncassan, by our Angiolello. The Year, and the Place of the Impression, are omitted.

(a) See the History of Mahomet II, by Guillet, Tom. 2. pag. 210, 218, 234.

(b) Konig. Bibl. vet. & nova, voce Angelellus.

(c) See the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library.

(d) In the first Part, pag. 4[illegible].

ANGLUS (THOMAS) an English Priest, distinguished himself no less by the Singularity of his Opinions, than by a Multitude of small Books, which he published in the XVIIth Century. He was of a very good Family; which he took Care to acquaint the World with, in the Title-Pages of his Books [A]. He went by ſeveral Names [B]; and made ſome ſtay in moſt parts of Europe. He was Principal of a College at Liſbon, and Sub-Principal at Douay (a). Rome and Paris afforded him long Stations. He was a conſiderable time a Domeſtic of Sir Kenelm Digby's, for whoſe Opinions he had a very particular Value [C]. He reſolved to continue a Peripatetic, and to oppoſe the Lights, which Mr Des Cartes would have afforded him [D]. Nay, he undertook to clear up the moſt impenetrable Myſteries of Religion by Ariſtotle's Principles; and, in order to it, he diſcuſſed the Doctrines of Liberty, and Grace; in which he entangled himſelf; and, becauſe He gave free Scope to his private Opinions, he pleaſed neither the Moliniſts, nor the Janſeniſts. He was a Man of a penetrating and vaſt Genius; but he had not the Talent of diſtinguiſhing thoſe Ideas, which are proper to ſerve as a Rule and Foundation, or of clearing up Difficulties (b). There was ſomething Irregular in his Philoſophy and Theology. Some of his Works were cenſured at Rome by the Congregation of the Index, and by ſome Univerſities [E], elſewhere. He

Digitized by Google

(a) See the Book, entitled, Statera appenſi, pag. 52.

(b) See the Remark [D] in regard to his Objectivity.

[A] Which he often took care to acquaint the World with, in the Title-Pages of his Books.] For Inſtance, his three Dialogues De Mundo, printed at Paris in 1642, have theſe Words in the Title-Page, Authore Thoma Anglo, è generoſa Albionum in Oriente Trinobantum proſapia oriundo.

[B] He went by ſeveral Names.] Mr Baillet's Remark (1) on this Subject is This. "Sir Kenelm "Digby entertained the famous Thomas Anglus, an "Engliſh Gentleman, and a Catholic Prieſt, of one of "the moſt ancient Families in England. He had "an Iriſh Outſide, and lived in great, but voluntary, Poverty. His true Sirname was White; "which he diſguiſed ſometimes under That of Candidus, ſometimes That of Albius *; ſometimes "he called himſelf Bianchi, and ſometimes Richworth; but he is ſcarce known in France by any "other Name, than That of Thomas Anglus. - - - - "Des Cartes generally called him Mr Vitus." Thomas Anglus ſubſcribes himſelf, at the end of ſeveral Epiſtles Dedicatory, Thomas ex Albiis.

(1) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. p. 245. ad ann. 1644.

* Albius was an equivocal Word, as alluding to Albion, or Albus.

[C] For whoſe Opinions he had a very particular Value.] This is the Title of one of his Books, printed at Lyons, in 1646. Inſtitutionum Peripateticarum ad mentem ſummi viri clariſſimique Philoſophi KENELMI EQUITIS DIGBÆI. — Peripatetick Inſtitutions, according to the Opinions of the Great and Famous Philoſopher Sir Kenelm Digby. The Reaſon of this Title is to be ſeen in the Preface; "Quòd ad mentem ſummi viri & clariſſimi Philoſophi "Kenelmi Equitis Digbæi ſcriptas pronunciem, inde "eſt quod cum invidendo illo de animæ immortalitate libro totam naturæ compoſitionem à prima corporis ratione uſque ad inviſibiles animæ ſpiritualis "articulos deſſecuerit, & in omnium oculos intulerit, "alia quam ipſe præceſſerat incedere neque volui neque potui. Quicquid itaque de illo ſubjecto vides, "inde tranſlatum eſt. —— The Reaſon, why I "ſay, they are according to the Opinions of the "Great and Famous Philoſopher Sir Kenelm Digby, "is, becauſe, in that admirable Book, of the Immortality of the Soul, This Great Man having diſſected, "and explain'd, the whole Human Compoſition, from "the firſt OEconomy of the Body, to the inviſible "Conſtruction of the Spiritual Soul, I neither would, "nor could, tread in a different Path from him. "Whatever, therefore, you meet with, in relation to "this Subject, is borrowed from That Work". He acknowledged himſelf indebted to him, not only for his Philoſophical Knowledge, but likewiſe for his great Skill in Divinity, with reſpect to the greateſt Myſteries; as appears from his Book, intituled, "Quæſtio Theologica, quomodo ſecundum principia "Peripatetices Digbæanæ, five ſecundum rationem, "& abſtrahendo quantum materia patitur, authoritate, humani arbitrii libertas ſit explicanda, & "cum gratia efficaci concilianda (2). —— A "Theological Enquiry; How, according to the Principles of the Digbæan Peripateticiſm, or according "to Reaſon, and by abſtracting from the Paſſiveneſs of "Matter, Free-will is to be explain'd, and reconcil'd "with Effectual Grace." He publiſh'd, in 1652, his Inſtitutiones Theologicæ, ſuper fundamentis in Peripateticâ Digbæana jactis, extructæ.

(2) It is a Book in 12mo, without the Place, or the Year, of the Impreſſion. It appears, from the Preface, that the Author was, at that time, an old Man.

[D] And to oppoſe the Lights, which Mr Des Cartes would have afforded him.] Thomas Anglus (to have recourſe once more to M. Baillet.) (3) "was a Peri- "patetick, more extraordinary ſtill, than Sir Kenelm "Digby; and certainly he exceeded him in the Ob- "ſcurity of his Notions, and the Incomprehenſibility "of his Thoughts. He was, otherwiſe, one of "the moſt ſubtle Philoſophers of his time, and had "ſhaken off the Yoke of the Schools, which moſt "Peripatetics ſubmit to. Des Cartes —— conceiv'd "an high Eſteem for him, from the advantageous "Character given of him by Sir Kenelm Digby. He "willingly ſuffer'd Thomas Anglus to propoſe his Objections. The Nature of theſe Objections, and the "high Idea Sir Kenelm had given him of his Genius, made Des Cartes hope, that he would ſoon be "one of the Followers of his Philoſophy; but it "appear'd, by the Event, that he depended too "much on the Tractableneſs of Thomas Anglus. "Anglus puzzled his Brains with the knotty Queſtions concerning Predeſtination, Liberty, and "Grace, which began to make a noiſe in the Univerſities of Louvain and Paris. Being perſwaded, "that Des Cartes was not a Man appointed by God to "give him the Solution of theſe ſupernatural Difficulties; he choſe rather to have recourſe to the "Lights of Ariſtotle, in order diſpel this myſterious "Darkneſs. What he wrote concerning theſe Matters, by the help of Ariſtotle, is not unlike the Obſcurity of Oracles; which, perhaps, made him unintelligible to the Roman Congregation of the Index (4), and was the Reaſon, why the Jeſuits con- "ſider'd him as a ſavage Divine (5)". It will not be improper to take notice, in this Place, of his Anſwer to thoſe, who charg'd him with being an obſcure Writer: It will farther diſcover to us the Character of his Genius. "I value, myſelf, ſaid he, (6), upon "a Brevity, which becomes the Maſters and Diſpenſers of Sciences. If my Writings are obſcure, "it is the fault of the Divines, who give me no "Opportunity of explaining myſelf. In ſhort, either "the Learned underſtand, or do not underſtand, me: "If they underſtand me, and find me in an Error, "they may eaſily confute me: If they do not underſtand me, they have no reaſon to exclaim againſt my "Doctrine". This favours of one, who is extremely deſirous of being talk'd of; and concern'd, that he has not a ſufficient number of Adverſaries to excite the Attention of the Publick. Riſerunt aliqui hominem quod evidentiam jactet, cum tamen perobſcure ipſum ſcribere, quotquot eum legant, queritentur. Reſpondet ille, ſe brevitati ſcientiarum traditoribus aptæ ſtudere: Theologos in cauſa eſſe quod obſcura maneant ipſius ſcripta, dum ſeſe explicandi anſam præbere refugiunt. Addit vel doctos cum intelligere poſſe, unde &, ſi errores ſcribat, ipſum confutare in proclivi eſt; vel non intelligere, & ſic neque debere ipſi acclamitare; cùm peſſimus ſit animi morbus calumniari quod neſcis. This Dilemma is ſomewhat ſophiſtical.

(3) Decret. ſacr. congr. collect.

(4) Labbæo diſſus Theologaſter.

(5) Prefat. Staterae appenſæ.

(6) He publiſhed, in 1654, Sonus litui adverſus ſonum tubæ. Thomas Anglus had publiſh'd, in 1653, Sonus buccinæ, cum appendice adverſus mentem divinitus inſpiratam Innocentio X.

[E] Some of his Works were cenſur'd at Rome, by the Congregation of the Index, and by ſome Univerſities.] This Congregation, by a Decree of the 10th of June 1658, condemn'd theſe Four Treatiſes of Thomas Anglus; Inſtitutiones Peripateticæ; Appendix Theologica de origine mundi; Tabula ſuffragialis de terminandis fidei litibus ab Eccleſia Catholica fixa; Teſſeræ Romanæ evulgatio. The two laſt Pieces were publiſh'd againſt the famous Father Macedo, who, in a Paper War, was a perfect Knight-Errant; always ready to enter the Liſts. He attack'd Thomas Anglus (7), but, inſtead of replying to the Tabulæ ſuffragiales, and to the Teſſeræ Romanæ evulgatio, he made uſe of Intrigues, by which he cauſed theſe Pieces to be condemn'd by the Congregation of the Index (8). The

(7) Baillet, ubi ſupra.

(8) See the Preface to the Book, entituled, Statera appenſi, quoad filiuſ a ſequendæ facilitatem, printed at London, in 1661, in 12mo.

Digitized by Google

He held a very particular Opinion, in relation to the State of departed Souls, and the Easiness of obtaining Salvation. I know not in what Year he died: He was still living, when Charles the Second was restored to the Throne of England. I have seen some Works of His, written after the Marriage of That Prince with the Infanta of Portugal. He was no Friend to the Jesuits; and he would willingly have been thought worthy of their Resentment [F]. I have been told, that, in the beginning of the War between Charles the First, and the Parliament, he wrote an English Book, in Defence of Passive Obedience, according to the Doctrine of the Church of England.

The Divines of Douay censured Twenty two Propositions, extracted out of Thomas Anglus's Institutiones Sacræ.

He publish'd a Supplicatio postulativa Justitiæ, in Opposition to their Censure; wherein he complain'd, that they had been contented with an indeterminate Censure, attended with a respectivè, without particularizing each Proposition (9). He shews them, that they acted like prevaricating Divines. And, in truth, all simple People are by this means in danger of being mistaken, or of slandering their Neighbours. If you pronounce, in general, on Thirty Propositions, that they are respectively rash, dangerous, and heretical, may not any one take That to be heretical, which is only rash, and That, which is downright Heresy, to be only a rash Assertion? This Reflexion will appear more strong in the Words of an anonymous Writer, who seems to be a Man of Parts and Judgment. He speaks in the following manner concerning the Decree of the Inquisition, of the 7th of December 1690, against Thirty one Propositions. "I know not, Sir, "says the Prelate, addressing himself to the Doctor, "whether you have observ'd all the Address and "Art of the Censure. You are not ignorant how "these Gentlemen usually style Propositions; they "do not say, that Each of them, in particular, is "scandalous, or erroneous, &c. but they set them "all down, one after another, though there were Five "hundred, and then qualify these Propositions, thus "placed in a heap, as they think fit; adding a "respectivè at the end. So that private Divines are "left to guess which of these Propositions have been "condemn'd only as Scandalous, and which as Here-"tical, or in another Sense (10)". In the next Page a Counsellor of the Parliament is introduc'd expressing himself thus: "We should think it a Contempt "of Justice, and a just Cause of being laugh'd at, "and exposed to the Indignation of the Publick, "should we, when we give Judgment in a Cause, "set down, on one side, all the Heads of it, and all "the Claims of the Parties; and, on the other, the "different Decisions confusedly, and in a heap, with "a respectivè; by which means the Judgment, being "unintelligible, would occasion a thousand endless "Suits". See the Reflexions, made on the same Decree of Alexander VIII, by the Author of the Difficulties proposed to M. Steyaert (11). To return to Thomas Anglus; he raised several Doubts in relation to each Censure of the Divines of Douay; pretending, that, if they were not vindicated, it would redound to Their shame, and his own Glory (12). When Intrigue has a greater share in the Censure of a Book, than Reason, the censured Person seldom fails to get the better of his Censors. We need only remember the Letter written by M. Arnauld, in 1683, to the University of Douay.

I have something more to add, concerning the Censures past upon Thomas Anglus's Books. His Statera morum no sooner appear'd, but the Archbishop of Mechlen, and the Bishop of Antwerp, complained of it to the Internuncio at Brussels. A pragmatical Fellow went into England, to extort Subscriptions against the Doctrine of This Author (13), and it appears, that the Bishop of Chalcedon disapproved of the Treatise de medio animorum statu; and that a Report was spread, that he had publickly censured it (14). Father Baron observes, that the Sonitus buccinæ was censur'd, and that the Author maintains in it, that the Church has not the Power of determining, but only of giving her Testimony, concerning Tradition (15).

[F] He would willingly have been thought worthy of their Resentment.] This appears from the Preface, I have so often quoted (16). The Author of the Preface, and of the Book printed with it, is, perhaps, The same with Thomas Anglus. Perhaps he himself wrote against his Statera morum, as well to clear up some Difficulties, as to make the Publick take notice of a Book, which was in danger of being confounded with the Multitude of new Books. However it be, the Author of That Preface seems to be well acquainted with Anglus's Opinions, and well affected towards him. He expresses himself thus concerning the Jesuits. "Increbuerunt sæpiuscule "rumores comminatam esse doctam illam Societatem "se contra D. Albii Opera strictiuram calamum. "Hoc idem ab iis maxime exspectabant omnes, ut "quos præcipue ac pene unice scriptis suis lacessi-"verat. Attamen, sive ex motivis prudentialibus "suppressi sint libri illi jam scripti, sive nulli omnino "scripti fuerint, nihil dum editum est. Hic trium-"phat maxime D. Albius, & causam suam hoc dis-"cursu tueri solet; Minas illas, quas intendebant, "clamores, quibus ipsi passim obstrepebant, manifesta "esse indicia non defuisse voluntatem illum confu-"tandi: Neque eo genio esse PP. Societatis ut "quicquam fama sua charius habeant; unde eviden-"ter constare solam eis defuisse potentiam, postquam "ad tam insignem ignominiam propellendam adeo "tardi extiterint. —— It was frequently given "out, that This Learned Society had threatned to "draw their Pens against the Works of D. Albius. "This was generally expected from them, and for "this Reason in particular, because This Author had "principally, and almost solely, exerted himself against "the Jesuits in his Writings. But, whether the "Books, already written, were suppress'd for prudent-"tial Reasons, or whether none were ever written, "nothing as yet has been publish'd against him. In "this Albius chiefly triumphs; to this he appeals in "Defence of his Cause; that the Threatnings, which "they gave out, and the Clamour, which they every "where rais'd against him, were plain Proofs, that "they did not want the Will to confute him; that "their Reputation was the dearest Thing to the Society; "consequently, that they wanted only the Power; "since they enter'd the Lists so late in Defence of "themselves, against so strong an Attack upon their "Reputation." This Man, you see, who could not procure himself the Honour of being attack'd by the Jesuits, takes Advantage of their Silence, by imputing it to their Inability, not to their Insensibility.

(9) See the same Preface.

A Reflexion on Censures of Propositions, extracted from Books.

(10) Letter of an Abbot, to a Prelate of the Court of Rome, pag. 29. The Title-Page of my Edition has according to the Copy, printed at Toulouse, 1691.

(11) Difficul. à Steyaert Part 9. pag. 24).

(12) Præf. Stateræ. See Citation (8).

(13) In eâdem Præf. Stateræ.

(14) See the Epistle Dedicatory of Th. Anglus's Book, entituled, Vellicationis suæ de medio animarum statu Ratio, printed in the Year 1653.

(15) Baron. lib. 4. Apolog. pag. 144.

(16) Stateræ appendix. See Citation (8).

ANICIUS, a Roman Family. It was more Illustrious under the Christian Emperors, than in the time of the Republic, though it produced some Consuls before the Birth of Julius Cæsar. We read, in Pliny, of one Q. ANICIUS Prænestinus, who was made Curule Ædile in the Vth Century of Rome (a). L. ANICIUS Gallus was Prætor in the following Century; viz. in the Year 585, and was so successful in Illyricum, that, in a Month's Time, he conquered it, and took King Gentius Prisoner [A]. He obtained the Honour of a Triumph the Year following (b). One

(a) Plin. lib. 33. cap. 1.

(b) See Sigonius de Fastis Roman.

[A] In a Month's time he conquered Illyricum, &c.] This was the first time, that the End of a War was sooner heard of at Rome, than the beginning of it; and yet Anicius was obliged, in carrying it on, to take Scodra, a very strong Place. His Victory was so compleat, that the King of this Country fell into His

Digitized by Google

One of the Conſuls of the Year 593 was called L. ANICIUS Gallus. I find, under the firſt Emperors, but one ANICIUS Cerealis, who was nominated to the Conſulſhip in the Year of Rome 818 (c). He was engaged in a Plot againſt Nero; and killed himſelf in the Year of Rome 819. His Death was the leſs lamented, becauſe it was remember'd, that he had diſcovered to Caligula a Conſpiracy carried on againſt his Life (d). Many Perſons of this Family were raiſed to the Conſulſhip, after Diocleſian's Reign; and it had never been ſeen, that two Brothers were Conſuls at the ſame time, before the Year of CHRIST 395, when Probinus and Olybrius diſcharged this Office. They were the Sons of Probus, of whom I ſhall ſpeak in his proper Place, and deſcended from ANICIUS, the firſt Great Man of Rome, who turned Chriſtian [B]. The great Riches of this Family expoſed it to many Slanders, as I ſhall ſhew, in ſpeaking of Probus. The Benedictine Monks pretend, that the Founder of their Order was of the Family of the Anicii, and have publiſhed ſome Books, wherein they endeavour to prove, that the Auguſt Houſe of Auſtria likewiſe derives it's Pedigree from it. This Fable was confuted by Streinius, in a Book intituled Anti-Anicianus, which was never printed: the Manuſcript Copy is in the Emperor's Library (e). I ſhall take notice of a curious Particular in relation to the Subject of this Work [C].

(c) Tacit. Ann. lib. 15. cap. 74.

(d) Id. lib. 16. cap. 17.

(e) Lambecius, Commentar. Biblioth. Vindobon. Tom. 1. n 50.

his hands, together with his Mother, his Wife, his Children, his Brother, and all the chief Perſons of his Dominions; and he obtain'd a conſiderable Booty. This is Livy's Account of the matter: Anicius bello Illyrico intra triginta dies perfecto nuncium victoriæ Perpennam Romam miſit, & poſt dies paucos Gentium regem ipſum cum parente, conjuge, ac liberis, ac fratre, aliiſque principibus Illyricorum. Hoc unum bellum prius perpetratum, quam cæptum Romæ auditum eſt (1). "Hoc Bellum (ſays Florus) (2) ante finitum "eſt, quam geri Romæ nuntiaretur. —— This "War was at an end, before it was known at Rome, "that it was begun." Theſe Priſoners of Quality were only part of the Ornaments of the Triumph: The Wealth, and Spoils brought from Illyricum, and the Liberalities beſtowed upon the Soldiers, made it very conſiderable. The General was more applauded by his Army, than Paulus Æmilius, who had triumphed not long before, was by his. Lætior hunc triumphum eſt ſecutus miles, multiſque dux ipſe carminibus celebratus (3). Lloyd obſerves, that the Conſul of the Year 593 is the Son of Him, who conquered Gentius; but he quotes no Authority for it.

(1) Livius, lib. 44. cap. 32.

(2) Florus, lib. 2. cap. 13.

(3) Livius, lib. 45. cap. 43.

[B] ANICIUS, The firſt Great Man of Rome, who turned Chriſtian.] Theſe Words of Prudentius are the only Proof I can alledge for it:

> Fertur enim ante alios generoſus Anicius urbis
> Inluſtraſſe caput (4).

(4) Prudent. in Symm. lib. 1. ver. 553.

The Noble Anicius is reported to be the Firſt Ornament of the City.

Baronius conjectures, that this Poet meant Anicius Julianus, who was Conſul in the Year 322. Lloyd, being more poſitive, affirms, without quoting any Authority for it, that Anicius Julianus was the firſt Roman Senator, who embrac'd the Goſpel; and that this was the Reaſon why moſt of the Emperors, from that time, took the Sirname of Flavius, and moſt of the Senators That of Anicius. I ſhould be glad to ſee ſome Proofs of this. If Baronius's Conjecture be well grounded, Anicius Julianus may be compared to That French Lord, who procured himſelf to be the firſt baptiz'd in Imitation of Clovis, and took this Motto, God preſerve the firſt Chriſtian. 'Tis ſaid, that the Lords de Montmorency are deſcended from Him; for which Reaſon they ſtiled themſelves the firſt Chriſtian Barons.

[C] I ſhall take notice of a curious Particular, in relation to the Subject of this Work.] Mr Baillet is of Opinion, that Streinius's Manuſcript will never be printed, for two Reaſons: One is That mentioned by Lambecius, viz. that it is an imperfect Work; the Second, more important than the Firſt, and of which he took care to ſay nothing, is, that the "Anti-Anicianus does "not favour the Prejudices of the Vulgar, in the "hereditary Countries, nor the Notions of thoſe, "who, to make their Court to the Emperor, have "derived the Pedigree of the Houſe of Auſtria "from the Anicii of ancient Rome. —— The Author "undertook this Work, in Oppoſition to the Bene-"dictine Monks, who ſeem to be infatuated with "their being related to the Houſe of Auſtria, and "particularly to confute the Book of a Flemiſh Be-"nedictine, called Arnold Wion, who, by a Concate-"nation of extravagant Conceits, produced the two "Branches of the Roman Family Anicia, one, as the "Origin of the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, the "other of his Patriarch St Benedict (5)." Mr Baillet adds, that Streinius ſaid nothing of the Anicii, in his Book concerning the Roman Families, becauſe it was not one of the Families of the old Stock. He informs us, that "Lambeclus deſigned to anſwer "Streinius's Anti-Anicianus, in his Prologomena to the "Annals of Auſtria, which he promiſed." —— And that it ſeems, he "had choſen for the Ground and "Model of his Anſwer (6), the Book, which a Be-"nedictine Abbot, but of the Order of the Ciſtertians, "whoſe Name was John Seyfrid, publiſhed twelve "Years after Streinius's Death, under the Title of "Arbor Aniciana; but that, though Seyfrid had in-"tended to write againſt the Anti-Anicianus, it may "be ſaid, that Streinius would have been ſufficiently "revenged by Scioppius, who publiſhed, in the Year "1651, a ſmall Diſſertation, to ridicule this Seyfrid, "and thoſe of the ſame Stamp; at the very ſame "Time, that another Monk, called Bucelin, to in-"creaſe the Number of the Ridiculous, publiſhed his "Aquila Imperii Benedicta. Scioppius, (Mr Baillet "goes on) was not, upon this Occaſion, the ſlander-"ous and ſatirical Writer he uſually is; he appears "a faithful and zealous Servant of the Houſe of "Auſtria; a Counſellor to the Emperor, and the "King of Spain; engaged in the Intereſt of the "Princes of their Name, upon ſeveral Accounts; in-"finitely more learned, than theſe idle Dreamers; "and who had made himſelf formidable, in point of "falſe Genealogy, above forty Years before, by his "Scaliger Hypobolimæus. If, therefore, Scioppius, "though otherwiſe devoted to the Houſe of Au-"ſtria, thought himſelf obliged to oppoſe the Va-"nity and idle Fancies of theſe Monks, concerning "the Anician Genealogy; we may very well inſer "from hence, that their Inventions are not for the "Honour of the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, or "of St Benedict's Diſciples; and that Streinius's Anti-"Anicianus, muſt needs be a conſiderable Work. —— "Though Seyfrid gave out, that St Thomas was de-"ſcended from the illuſtrious Family of the Anicii; "it is not to be expected, that a French Dominican "will ever publiſh an Aquila Imperii Thomiſtica. "This is reſerved, perhaps, for ſome German, or "Spaniſh Dominican, a zealous Friend to the Houſe "of Auſtria." I deſire the Reader to conſider me, in this whole Matter, as a bare Tranſcriber.

(5) Tom. 2. of the Antis, n. 1584. pag. 228, & ſeq.

(6) Tom. 2. Comment. Biblioth. Vind. pag. 418, & ſeq.

ANNA, the Name of ſome Perſons, mentioned in the Scripture. The Mother of the Prophet Samuel was called ANNA or HANNAH. She was a very pious Woman, and very much beloved by her Huſband Elkanah. She was barren; and this Misfortune afflicted her the more ſenſibly, as it expoſed her to the Raillery and Inſults

Digitized by Google

Insults of the other Wife of Elkanah. She so importunately petitioned Heaven for a Son, that her Prayers were at length heard (a); for God gave her Samuel, and afterwards three Sons, and two Daughters (b). The Book of Tobit, an Apocryphal Book among the Protestants, mentions one ANNA, the Wife of Tobit, and Mother of Tobias. In St Luke's Gospel, we read of ANNA the Prophetess, Daughter of Phanuel (c). She was a very devout Woman, about Eighty four Years of Age, and had lived but Seven Years with her Husband. Baronius, who makes her a Cloyster'd Religious, is mistaken [A]. The Gospel mentions, likewise, a Man named ANNAS, who was High-Priest, among the Jews, in our Saviour's Time. His Son-in-law, Caïphas, had the same Dignity, when CHRIST was put to Death. As for SAINT ANNE, Mother of the Holy Virgin, and the most celebrated Lady of this Name, among the Roman Catholics, she is no where spoken of in the Scriptures, nor in the Writings of the Three first Centuries. St Epiphanius is the first, who mentions her; and yet the following Ages trumped up a long Legend concerning St Anne, as may be seen in the Article of S. JOACHIM, her Husband. I am surprized, that Erasmus met with but three Women of the Name of ANNA in ancient Books [B].

(a) 1 Sam. chap. i.

(b) Ibid. chap. ii. ver. 36.

(c) Luke chap. ii. ver. 22.

[A] Baronius, who makes her a Cloyster'd Religious, is mistaken.] These are his Words: "Quo- "modo autem Anna nunquam è templo discessisse "dicatur, ut merito eamdem S. Cyrillus * Hierosoly- "mitanus religiosissimam monialem appellet, con- "sule quæ superius dicta sunt de præsentatione Dei "genitricis in templo (1). - - - - - How Anna is said "never to have departed from the Temple, upon which "account St Cyril of Jerusalem justly calls her a most "devout Nun, consult what has been said, above, "concerning the Presentation of the Mother of God "in the Temple." Here are two things: I. Baronius takes in a literal Sense St Luke's Phrase, She departed not from the Temple (2). II. He thinks S. Cyril very much in the right in calling Anna a most religious Nun. But it is plain, that St Luke's Words ought not to be stretched beyond the Sense, which is commonly put upon such Expessions, when, to signify that a Man goes frequently to any Particular House, we say, That he never stirs from it, that he is there Night and Day. This is particularly said of your devout Ladies, who go to Church several times in a Day; we usually say, that they never stir from Church, that they are continually praying at Church. As to what concerns St Cyril, it is not true, that he calls the Prophetess Anna a Nun. The Latin Translator of That Father should have considered, that the Words ἀσκητής, ἀσκητρία, were used, not only to denote Monks and Nuns, but all those, likewise, who exactly practised religious Exercises. This is what the learned Casaubon clearly shewed against Baronius (3).

* Cateches. 10.

(1) Baron. in Annal. Eccles. Tom. I. ad ann. I. n. 41.

(2) Οὐκ ἀφίστατο ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ νηστείαις καὶ δεήσεσι λατρεύουσα νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας - - - She departed not from the Temple, but served God with Fasting and Prayers, Night and Day.

(3) Casaubon. Exercit. 2. n. 13.

[B] I am surprized, that Erasmus met with but three Women of the Name of Anna in ancient Books.] The first is Dido's Sister; she was called Perenna; and he says, she was placed among the Gods, on account of the extraordinary Affection she shew'd for her Sister. The Adventures of this Anna are so fully related in other Dictionaries, that I think it unnecessary to mention them. The second is Elkanah's Wife: It is sufficient Commendation of her, says he, to say, that, by the particular Favour of God, she brought forth, in her old Age, Samuel, who was a very pious Priest, and a most uncorrupt Judge. "Cu- "jus ad laudem abunde satis est, quod & anus, "& auspice Deo, Samuelem pepererit, non utique "sibi sed Deo quidem sacerdotem religiosissimum, "populo vero judicem incorruptissimum (4)." The third is the Mother of the Holy Virgin. He says, that this last Anna was greatly celebrated by Rhodolphus Agricola, and Baptista Mantuanus. Thus Erasmus is guilty of Errors both of Omission and Commission. How came he to forget Phanuel's Daughter, and Tobias's Mother? Where did he find, that Samuel's Mother was an old Woman? The sacred Writer says no such thing; but rather gives us to understand, that she was still young enough. Had she not five Children, after she had weaned Samuel? The same Historian makes her reply to the High Priest Eli, who charged her with Drunkenness, that she had drank neither Wine, nor Beer. Josephus, not thinking this Answer extraordinary enough, furnishes her with another, to wit, that she never drank any thing but Water. Mr Moreri chose to follow the Jewish Historian, rather than the Scripture. By the way, the Lady, to whom Erasmus wrote the Letter, which mentions these three Anna's, might very well deserve an Article: He calls her Anna Bersala Princeps Veriana. If I can discover her Family and Adventures, I here engage myself to take Notice of her.

(4) Erasm. Epist. 38. lib. 9. pag. 500.

Since the first Edition of this Work, I have made some Discoveries in relation to this Lady. See the Article BERSALA.

ANNAT (FRANCIS), Confessor to Lewis XIV, was a Native of Rovergue (a). He was born the fifth of February, 1590, admitted Jesuit in February 1607, and professed the fourth Vow, in the Year 1624. He taught Philosophy at Toulouse, for the space of six Years, and Divinity for the space of seven; and, having honourably discharged the Duties of those Places, he was invited to Rome, to exercise the Function of Censor-General of the Books published by the Society, and That of Theologist to the General of the Order. Being returned into his own Country, he was made Rector of the College of Montpellier, and afterwards of That of Toulouse. He assisted, as Deputy of his Province, at the eighth General Assembly of the Jesuits, held at Rome, in 1645, and gave so many Proofs of his Merit, that Father Vincent Carafa, General of the Jesuits, found no one better qualified to fill the Place of Assistant of France, which became vacant sixteen Months after. The ninth General Assembly gave him again the same Employment, under Francis Picolomini, General of the Society; after whose Death he was made Provincial of the Province of France. Whilst he was invested with this Dignity, he was chosen Confessor to Lewis XIV; and, after he had been sixteen Years in this Post, he was obliged to demand his Dismission, his great Age having very much impaired his Hearing. As the King was very well pleased with him, it was with Reluctance He granted his Request. Father Annat lived but four Months, after his leaving the Court, and died in the Maison Professé of Paris, the fourteenth of June, 1670. Father Sotuel, who supplies me with these Particulars, represents him as a Man endowed with great Virtues; as perfectly disinterested, modest, and humble; and exact in practising the

(a) Ruthenensis.

Digitized by Google

Obſervances and Diſcipline of his Order; as never employing his Intereſt for his own Advantage, or in order to raiſe his Family; and as expreſſing a great Zeal for Religion (b). He was the Flail of Heretics, (ſays Sotuel) (c) and particularly attacked, with incredible Zeal, the new Hereſy of the Janſeniſts; he left nothing unattempted to get their Hereſy condemned by the Pope, and reſtrained by the Authority of the Moſt Chriſtian King; beſides, he wrote with ſuch Force of Reaſon againſt it, that his Adverſaries have not been able to make any ſolid Reply. Some will not grant Father Sotuel this laſt Point; but as to what concerns the Diſintereſtedneſs of Father Annat, it will eaſily meet with Credit; for they, who would be informed, may know, that this Father Confeſſor never raiſed his Family. It is reported, that the King had been heard to ſay, that he did not know, whether Father Annat had any Relations (d). Some he had, who did not forget themſelves, and who paid him a Viſit at the Louvre; but they did not return with any Preferment. There are times, when the Greater and Leſſer Nepotiſm, are both in vogue; ſometimes the Leſſer Nepotiſm prevails, whilſt the Greater is ſuppreſs'd. In Father Annat's Time, the greater Nepotiſm was at it's Height (e); but the Leſſer, with regard to the Father Confeſſor's, was, in Paris, at it's loweſt Ebb. I make uſe of this Reſtriction, becauſe there are many other dignified Clergymen, who heap upon their Relations all the Preferments they can procure. Many, no doubt, followed the uſual Courſe, whilſt Father Annat gave no Encouragement to his greedy Relations of Roüergue. We may read, in the Amours du Palais Royal, that he deſired to lay down his Place [A], when Madam de la Valiere was taken into Favour. Were this true, it would be the fineſt Circumſtance of his Life, and the nobleſt Subject for Encomium, that the Life of a King's Confeſſor can afford. The Author of this Satire, who, according to the Nature of this kind of Works, made it his Buſineſs to give a malicious Turn to every Thing, was very ſenſible of this; and, therefore, took care, that the Reader ſhould find nothing commendable in it. A Satire of a much later Date has been handed about, which, beſides Father Annat's deſiring his Diſmiſſion, whether true or not, contains ſo many notorious Falſhoods [B], that it is hard to conceive how any Man can tell publick Lyes

(b) Biblioth. Scriptor. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 211.

(c) Hæreſium malleus, & nominatim Janſeniſtarum hæreſis oppugnator acerrimus. Ibid.

(d) Adeo ut dixiſſe aliquando perhibeatur ſua Majeſtas neſcire ſe an P. Annatus haberet aliquos ſanguine ſibi conjunctos. Ib.

(e) That of the Court of Rome.

(1) Intrigues of the Court. This Book made it's firſt Appearance about the Year 1665.

[A] We may read, in the Amours du Palais Royal (1), that he deſired to lay down his Place.] Here is the Paſſage. "Poor Father Annat went alſo to him, by "the Suggeſtion of the Queens, and pretended a "Deſire of quitting the Court, artfully inſinuating, "that it was on account of his Amours. The King "fell a laughing, and immediately granted him his "Diſmiſſion. The Father, finding himſelf taken at "his Word, would fain have accommodated the "Matter; but the King, laughing on, told him, "that, for the future, he would have no other Con"feſſor than the Rector of the Pariſh. It is difficult "to expreſs, how vexed the whole Society was at "his Indiſcretion." Upon this, I may be asked three Queſtions. I. Whether it be true, that Father Annat deſired to lay down his Place. II. Whether it was a mere Feint, and out of Complaiſance to the Queens. III. Whether he actually left the Court; or whether the Jeſuits made up the Matter. All I can ſay, in Anſwer to the firſt Queſtion, is, that I know nothing of the Matter, and that the Authority of a Satirift is of no Weight. I believe him, no farther than he proves what he advances. Writers of Hiſtory are diſpenſed from taking an Oath, and producing their Witneſſes (2); their Word is ſufficient to procure Credit to what they ſay; but as to Writers of Libels, it is a Favour, a piece of Civility, to believe them, even upon their Oath, confirmed by Witneſſes. I am ſtill more ignorant, as to the ſecond Queſtion: I do not pretend to dive into the Hearts of Men. And, as to the third, I only know what is publickly known, viz. that Father Annat was the French King's Confeſſor, without Interruption, 'till the Spring of the Year 1670.

(2) Quis unquam ab Hiſtorico juratores exegit? Seneca de morte Claudii init.

[B] A Satire of a much later Date (3), —— contains ſo many notorious Falſhoods, &c.] The Author of this Satire ſuppoſes, that Father La Chaize was very inſtrumental in moving the Pope to grant what the King deſired of him, and that Cardinal Mazarin, as an Acknowledgment for this Service, was very kind to him, recommended him to the King, and even got him admitted into the Council of Conſcience, which was properly to make him the Confeſſor's Coadjutor (4). The Year 1663 is ſet down in the Margin, for the Date of the Cardinal's firſt Marks of Favour, and the Year 1665, for the Admiſſion into the Council of Conſcience. What an Ignorance of modern Hiſtory is here? Who does not know, that Cardinal Mazarin died in 1661? The Author adds, that Father la Chaize ſupplanted Father Annat, by excuſing the King's Love for Madam de la Valiere, from the Infirmity of Human Nature, whilſt the Confeſſor teized the King every Day on that Account, and would never ſuffer him to reſt (5). He farther adds, that Madam de la Valiere, being informed of Father la Chaize's Maxims, deſired to have him for her Confeſſor, and propoſed it to him, by Mr de Montauzier (6); but, having afterwards diſcourſed with this Jeſuit, ſhe choſe rather to procure him Father Annat's Place; and, having ſpoke to the King about it, the Affair was concluded in a few Days; Father Annat, who denounced the dreadful Judgments of God, and deſired leave to retire, being taken at his Word (7). The Year 1667 is ſet down in the Margin. This is an unaccountable piece of Aſſurance; for it is notorious, that Father Annat did not take leave of the Court, 'till the Year 1670; and that a Jeſuit of Roüergue, called Father Ferrier, ſucceeded him in his place of Confeſſor to the King; and that Father la Chaize had not this Employ, 'till after the Death of Father Ferrier, who died the Twenty ninth of October 1674 (8). What do theſe Writers mean, when they publiſh ſuch groſs Falſhoods? Do they not perceive, that they act contrary to their main Deſign? For do they not prejudice the Reader againſt their Books, when they appear ſo ignorant of Things, which are publickly known, or ſo void of Shame, as boldly to publiſh evident Untruths? Do they approve the Maxims of thoſe, who preach up pious Frauds to a numerous Congregation, reaſoning with themſelves in this manner? For one Hearer, who will know that I am miſtaken, a thouſand will not diſcover it; a thouſand, therefore, will be edified by my Fraud; one only will be offended at it; the Miſchief, therefore, will be trifling, in compariſon of the Advantage, which will accrue from it: It is therefore a Point of Charity and Prudence to maintain ſuch a Falſhood before this numerous Aſſembly. I know not whether our Libellers argue in the ſame manner; but I am ſure they would ſucceed better in their Deſign, if they took more care to obſerve Chronology, and the Rules of Fiction. Eſt ars etiam maledicendi, ſays Scaliger (9), there is an Art of Slandering; they, who are ignorant of it, do not ſo much defame their Enemies, as ſhew how deſirous they are of defaming them. To conclude, I make this Remark, rather for the Advantage of the Public, than for the Intereſt of any private Perſon. It is fit, that, in our Age, we ſhould be able to judge of the Satires, which have been publiſhed within theſe thouſand Years; and that Poſterity ſhould know how to judge of thoſe, which appear in our

(3) Entituled, Hiſtory of Father la Chaize, a Jeſuit, and Confeſſor to Lewis XIV. Cologne, for Peter Marteau, 1693, in 12mo. The ſecond Part was printed two Years after.

(4) Pag. 106.

(5) Pag. 107.

(6) Pag. 108.

(7) Pag. 115.

(8) Ex Natan. Sotuelli Biblioth. Societ. pag. 449.

(9) Scaligerana 2. pag. 10.

SOME Thoughts concerning Satire.

Digitized by Google

Lyes with so little Caution. Father Annat wrote many Books [C], both in French and Latin. The Latin are much more in Esteem, than the French; because he was more capable of handling a Point of Divinity, according to the Dogmatical Method of the Schools, than of turning it according to the Genius of the Age he lived in. Nevertheless his French Works are very much commended in an Answer to the Lettres Provinciales (f). What I have said in general of the Nephews of this Father Confessor, ought not to prejudice any one against them; for One of them, who is General of the Fathers of the Christian Doctrine, is accounted a very learned Man, and has published a Latin Book of Divinity, which is very much esteemed. It is A Methodical Apparatus to Positive Divinity (g). You will meet with an Abstract of it in the Journal des Sçavans, of the Thirteenth of September, 1700.

(f) See the end of the Remark [C].

(g) Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres, for April, 1700. pag. 477.

our Days. In order to judge rightly of them, we must pay no regard to this Principle, It is not probable, that, if this thing were evidently false, any one would dare to publish it.

This will, no doubt, be the principal Use of this Remark: for, in short, the best grounded Reflexions or Censures will never be able to stop the Pens of this Species of Writers. Notwithstanding the Indignation of honest Men against the fabulous and satirical History of Father la Chaize, another Piece, much worse than this, appeared five Years after. It is, from beginning to end, an Heap of Falshoods and chimerical Adventures, related with the utmost Impudence, and in a Style stuffed with Obscenities. The Title of this fine Performance is as follows. Histoire des Intrigues amoureuses du P. Peters, &c. —— The History of the amorous Intrigues of Father Peters, a Jesuit, Confessor to James II, late King of England, containing his most private Adventures, and his true Character, and likewise the Counsels he gave to that Prince, concerning his Government. Cologne, for Peter Marteau, junior, 1698. As long as there are Persons, who take a Pleasure in purchasing this kind of Books, there will be Booksellers, who will be at the Charge of the Composition and Impression of them, and, consequently, base and mercenary Writers will never be wanting for such a Work. It is therefore an incurable Disease.

[C] Father Annat wrote many Books.] His Latin Treatises, published at several Times, were collected into three Volumes, in 4to, and printed at Paris, for Cramoisy, in 1666. The first contains a Work entituled De Scientia media contra novos ejus impugnatores, una cum exercitatione scholastica sub nomine Eugenii Philadelphi, & appendice ad Guilhelmum Camerarium. —— Of the middle Science, against it's new Opposers; together with a Scholastic Discourse, under the Name of Eugenius Philadelphus, and an Appendix to William Camerarius." The second contains a Piece entituled. Augustinus à Bajanis, hoc est Jansenianis, vindicatus. —— St Austin vindicated against the Jansenists." The following Treatises are in the third. Catholica disputatio de Ecclesia præsentis temporis. - - - - - De incoacta libertate contra novum Augustinum Iprensis Episcopi, Vincentium Lenem, Apologistam Jansenii & Commentatorem quinque propositionum. - - - - Informatio de quinque propositionibus ex Theologia Jansenii collectis, quas Episcopi Galliæ Romano Pontifici ad censuram obtulerunt. - - - - - Jansenius à Thomistis gratiæ per se ipsam efficacis desensoribus condemnatus. - - - - Cavilli Jansenianorum contra latam in ipso à sede Apostolica sententiam, seu confutatio libelli trium Columnarum (10). i. e. A Catholic Disputation concerning the present Church. - - - - - Of unrestrained Liberty, against the new Augustin of the Bishop of Ypres, Vincentius Lenes, Apologist for Jansenius, and Commentator on the five Propositions. - - - - - An Information concerning five Propositions collected from the Divinity of Jansenius, presented by the French Bishops to the Pope, for his Censure. - - - - Jansenius condemned by the Thomists, Defenders of the Notion of Grace efficacious of itself. - - - - - - - The Cavils of the Jansenists against the Sentence pronounced against them by the Apostolical See; or a Confutation of the Book of three Columns. Thus there are five Treatises in the three Volumes; to which are prefixed some Advertisements to the Readers, and some Notes on the Journal de Santi-amour. The following are the Titles of some of his French Works. An Answer to a Book entituled, la Theologie morale des Jesuites. - - - - An Answer to some Queries about Mr. Arnauld's first Letter. - - - - - The Fairness of the Jansenists in quoting their Authors. - - - - A Collection of several Falshoods, and Impostures, contained in the Journal of what passed in France, on Account of the Morality and Apology of the Casuists (11). Remedies against the Scruples, which hinder the subscribing the Formulary. - - - - - Remarks on the Conduct of the Jansenists in printing and publishing the New Testament, printed at Mons. - - - - - Jansenius's Doctrine contrary to the Holy Apostolic See, and to St Augustin. I omit the Titles of some other Books, which may be seen in Father Sotuel. But, let me observe, by the way, that He, and Alegambus his Predecessor, have forgot one thing, which should not have been omitted. They should have set down the Titles of Books in the Language the Author made use of, and then have translated them into Latin. It is a common thing to be disappointed, when we enquire after a Book, not by it's true Title, but by the Sense of it, when, perhaps, it is really in the Bookseller's Shop or Warehouse. To conclude, though Father Annat was a very old Man, at the time of the Dispute with the Jansenists about subscribing the Formulary, and the Version of Mons, he published several small Works, in 4to. He was not contented to use his Interest with the Prince, in order to serve the Cause, but defended it, likewise, with his Pen, to the last Drop of his Ink.

(10) It is in Father Sotuel Columnarum.

(11) The Clergy of Paris made an Apology for this Journal, in their eighth and ninth Writings.

I must not forget the Praises, bestowed upon him, in an Answer to the Lettres Provinciales of Mr Pascal, which was reprinted in Holland, in the Year 1696 (12). "As for the Jesuits, who ventured to "write against Pascal, what do you think of Father Annat, who is the Author of the Book, entituled, La bonne foy des Jansenistes, and to whom "the seventeenth and eighteenth Provincial Letters "are inscribed? Father Annat, answered Cleander, "was, in my Opinion, a Man of very good Parts: "The Jesuits published nothing better, than what "he wrote on the Points controverted at that Time. "This good Man (for I knew him to be such; and, "indeed he was Modesty itself) would have been "qualified for a Writer, even in French, if he had "but applied himself a little more to the Study "of our Language. He has some Strokes as elegant, as lively, and as agreeable, as any I ever met "with in other Authors. I am of your Opinion, "replied Eudoxus: And, not to mention his Virtue, "for which I have heard him commended even by "some of the contrary Party, I have besides observed in him an accurate Judgment, and sometimes such a Delicacy of Expression and Raillery, "as is seldom to be met with in a Scholastic Divine."

(12) Entretiens de Cleandre & d' Eudoxe, pag. 70, 80. Dutch Edition.

ANNIUS of Viterbo, a famous Impostor. See NANNIUS.

ANSELM, Archbishop of Canterbury, one of the most illustrious Prelates of his Times, died the Twenty first of April, 1109, in the Seventy sixth Year of his Age (a). He wished to have lived a little longer, to finish a Treatise on the Origin of the

(a) Cave's Historia Literaria Scriptorum Ecclesiast. pag. 627.

Digitized by Google

(b) He calls himself Monk. Peter Joseph. His Work was printed in 1698, in 12mo.

the Soul [A]. His Article is very long in Moreri's Dictionary; to which I refer the Reader. The Monks of Lerins, who placed this great Prelate in the Chronology of their Saints and famous Monks, are confuted by the Author (b) of a Book, intituled, The Monks travestied (c). We shall see, below, that he made use of an Argument for the Existence of a God, which Mr Des Cartes very much improved [B].

(c) Moines Travestis, Tom. 1. pag. 49.

[A] He wished - - - - - to have finished a Treatise on the Origin of the Soul.] This Wish of his made a Doctor of Louvain say, That the Doctrine of the Propagation of Souls subsisted to the end of the eleventh Century. These are his Words. "Imo "usque ad tempora S. Anselmi, hoc est Annum "Christi M. C. in Occidente durasse videtur hæc de "animarum traductione dubitatio. Nam cum paulo "post moriturus S. Pater decumberet, dixisse scribit "familiaris & convictor ejus Edinerus, Si Deus mallet "me adhuc inter vos saltem tam diu manere, donec "quæstionem, quam de animæ origine mente revolvo, "absolvere possem, gratiosus acciperem: eo quod nescio, "utrum aliquis eam, me defuncto, sit absoluturus (1). "- - - - - This doubtful Opinion concerning the Pro- "pagation of Souls; ex traduce, seems to have con- "tinued to the Time of St Anselm; i. e. to the "end of the eleventh Century. For Edinerus *, his "Acquaintance, and Companion, informs us, that "the Holy Father, on his Death-bed, said; I should "be thankful, if God would grant me a longer "Life; at least till I have finished the Question, "which employs my Thoughts, concerning the "Origin of the Soul; since I know not, whe-"ther, after my Decease, any one will undertake to "finish it." I have elsewhere (2) cited Thomas Bartholin, who has made a Reflexion on this Thought of Anselm.

(1) Libertus Fromondus Philosoph. Christ. de Anima, lib. 4. cap. 3. pag. 812.

* Ediner. in the Life of S. Anselm apud Surium, April 21.

(2) In the Remark [E], of the Article AVERROES.

[B] He made use of an Argument for the Existence of a God, which Mr Des Cartes very much improved.] The Catalogue, which Mr Baillet has given of the Authors, whom they say Mr Des Cartes pirated, contains these Words. "St Anselm likewise is placed "in the Number of the Ancients, to whom Mr Des "Cartes † was obliged for his Argument, in proof "of the Existence of a God; drawn from hence, "That a most perfect Being, or at least the most "perfect that we are able to conceive, implies Exi-"stence. The Argument is to be found in a Book, "which this Saint ‖ wrote against The Fool, in An-"swer to an anonymous Author, who had wrote "in Defence of The Fool, against an Argument, "which St Anselm had advanced in his Book, en-"tituled, Prosologion (3)." Observe, that Huetius remarks, that Thomas Aquinas refuted this Argument. "Celeris illa argumentatio - - - - - tota est Anselmi, "& in Prosologio, & in Apologetico contra Gau-"nilonem eandemque expositi Thomas Aquinas, "& refellit (4). - - - - - This famous Argument - - - "belongs solely to Anselm; both in his Prosologion, and "his Apologetic against Gaunilo; it has been explained "and refuted by Thomas Aquinas."

† Tom. 2. of his Letters, pag. 276, &c.

‖ Wilh. Leibnitz. Epist. MS. Tom. 3. Oper. Anselm. Edit. Colonien.

(3) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. pag. 536.

(4) Huetii Cens. Philos. Cartes. pag. 204.

ANSELM, a bare-footed Augustin, born at Paris, will be too often quoted in this Dictionary, and has supplied Mr Moreri with too many Materials, not to deserve a Place here. He died at Paris, the seventeenth of January, 1694, in his Sixty ninth Year. He passed fifty Years of this Time, free from all Monastical Offices, and applying himself wholly to the Duties of a religious Life, and the Writing of Books. He was preparing a second Edition of his Genealogical History of the House of France [A], and the great Officers of the Crown, with Corrections and Additions, which had employed him a long time. He had also undertaken a Work, which treats of the Royal Houses, and other most illustrious Families, of Europe, and had already put the finishing Hand to it (a). I know not what will become of his Manuscripts; but I wish they may be published.

(a) Mercure Galant, for the Month of January, 1694. See also the Journal des Sçavans, of the eighth of February, 1694, pag. 157.

[A] He was preparing a second Edition of his Genealogical History of the House of France, &c.] He published it, together with That of the great Officers of the Crown, in the Year 1674, in two Volumes in 4to. A large Work of his had already appeared, entituled, The Palace of Honour, or the Historical Genealogies of the Illustrious House of France, and of several noble Families of Europe. This Work was printed at Paris in the Year 1668. It contains an Abstract of several Particulars, relating to Heraldry, the Coronation of Kings, solemn Entries, Baptisms of the Children of France, Royal Funerals, Military Orders, &c. This large Volume was not so correct, as the two which followed it; though they all stand in need of a new Edition, Revised, Corrected, and Augmented. They have certainly been of great Use; and it is difficult to conceive the Pains this good Monk must needs have taken, to collect so many Names, so many Marriages, so many Births, and so many Dates. It is in vain to resist; where Nature strongly inclines to any one Thing, the Monk's Habit never cures a Man of it. Father Anselm was born with a Talent for tracing Genealogies. The little Relation such Matters have to That kind of Life, which he had vowed, did not alter the Bent of his Inclination. One of his Brethren, though not of the Barefooted Order, was perpetually running after Geographical Discoveries (1). This was his natural Inclination; the Habit of an Augustin did not change it.

(1) Father Lubin. He died at Paris, the seventh of May, 1695. See his Elogy in the Journal des Sçavans, March 28, 1695.

ANTESIGNANUS (PETER), born, if I mistake not, at Rabasteins [A], a small Town of Languedoc, in the Diocese of Albi, was one of the best Grammarians of the XVIth Century. He had his Employ so much at Heart, that he chose to render himself serviceable to Youth, by applying himself to the Explanation of those Things, which render the first Entry upon Study difficult, rather than aim at Honour, by the Explication of greater Difficulties [B]. He acquired Reputation enough to provoke

[A] Born, if I mistake not, at Rabasteins.] What induces me to believe so, is his writing himself Rapistagnensis at the beginning of his Works. I know no Town, which can better give this Appellation, than That of Rabasteins; which is called in Latin Rapistanum, or Rapistagnum (1). I take it for granted, that the Printers have committed an Error in the Place, where Papyrius Masson speaks of this Town. They have put Rupistagni incolis, instead of Rapistagni incolis (2). The three Radishes, which are the Arms of Rabasteins (3), persuade me, that Papyrius Masson, or the Printers, have put the Letter u for the Letter a.

(1) Catel affirms this in the 366*th Page of his* Memoirs of the History of Languedoc. Mr Baudrand mentions this Page of the Town under Rapistanum. (2) At the Four hundred ninetieth Descriptio Fluminum Galliæ, Edition of Paris, 1685. (3) Catel, ubi supra.

[B] He chose to render himself serviceable to Youth - - - - - rather than aim at Honour by the Explication of greater Difficulties.] Let him inform us of this Himself; and let us cite his own Words at length: They are Indications of a good Heart; and may perhaps be an useful Lesson to those ambitious Minds, who aim only at gaining the Applause of Those like themselves, but never study the Advantage of those, who stand most in need of Instruction. He had observed just before, that several learned Commentators had written on Terence; provoke the Lash of Envy [C]. What he publiſhed on Terence may convince us, that he was the moſt indefatigable Man in the World [D]. I believe he taught a conſiderable time at Lyons. The Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Terence is dated from thence, in Auguſt 1556 (a). He inſcribes it to three Brothers, whom he taught. His Greek Grammar has been reprinted ſeveral times. He underſtood Hebrew well enough to deſerve a Place in the Gallia Orientalis of Colomies (b); and yet he is forgotten in it.

Digitized by Google

(a) Idibus Auguſti.

(b) He wrote a Letter in this Language to Peter Coſtus, which has been printed. See Geſner's Epitomy.

and then adds, "Verum pueri novitii, ad quos maximè hujus laboris fructus pertinebat, vix ullum ex "accuratis & meditatis iſtorum commentationibus "emolumentum percipere potuerunt. Videntur enim "viri illi graves incubuiſſe in eam curam & cogitationem, quæ ſibi ſummam dignitatem & gloriam "eſſet allatura. Itaque ardua tantum & obſcuriora "interpretando explanaſſe contenti, minutiora cætera, "quorum doctrina & tractatio præcedere, vel certe "conjungi debuerat, leviter attigerunt: Ut Adoleſcentuli, qui his ſtudiis initiantur, ſe ad cognitionem hujus rei, quam ex communi quadam hominum opinione reconditiſſimam arbitrantur, deſperent poſſe pervenire. Ut igitur eos ab hujuſmodi deſperatione ad ſpem revocarem, ad minima iſta me demittere non recuſavi. Neque hic difficilia tantum enodavimus, ſed ne unam quidem totius Terentii ſyllabam reliquimus intactam, quam ad unguem non excuſſerimus, idque abſque ulla verborum pompa aut magnificentia, ſed nudis literarum notis, & methodo quam potuimus breviſſima & facilima. Doctrinæ opinionem affectent alii: Ego pro mea virili parte me puerorum & formandis & promovendis ſtudiis omnem meam operam addixiſſe aperte & ingenue fateor (4). - - - - But School-Boys, who have the beſt claim to the Fruit of theſe Labours; reaped ſcarce any Advantage from ſuch accurate and laboured Commentaries. For theſe great Men ſeemed to have ſtudied only their own Honour and Reputation. Upon which account, they were contented to explain the more difficult and abſtruſe Points, but paſſed lightly over thoſe of leſs Importance; the explaining and handling of which ought to preceed, or, at leaſt, accompany That of the others: inſomuch, that Boys, when they are initiated in theſe Studies, deſpair of acquiring the Knowledge of what, from the general Opinion, they are taught to look upon as very difficult and abſtruſe. In order, therefore, to remove this Deſpair, I have condeſcended to explain the moſt trifling Paſſages. I have, here, not only cleared up what was difficult; but have left not a Syllable of Terence untouched, or not fully examined; and That without a pompous Shew of Words; but by ſimple literal Marks, and as briefly as poſſible. Let others affect the Reputation of Learning; I freely own, My whole Care has been to form and promote the Studies of Youth." Compare with this the following excellent Paſſage of Eraſmus. They relate to the Pains he had taken in enlarging a Dictionary. "Scimus "hoc laboris genus eſſe minime glorioſum, præſertim "quum pauci reputant quot autores ſint excutiendi, "ut voces aliquot ab aliis præteritas ſeligas. Verum "hoc plus debetur illis gratiæ qui publicæ utilitatis "gratia non detrectant ingloriam ac moleſtiæ plenam "induſtriam (5). - - - - I know very well that there "is little Reputation to be gained by this kind of "Labour; eſpecially ſince ſo few conſider, how many "Authors are to be turned over, in order to ſelect "certain Words omitted by others. But, for this very "Reaſon, They deſerve the greater Thanks, who, for "the ſake of publick Utility, do not decline an inglorious and troubleſome Task."

(4) Petrus Anteſignanus, Epiſt. Dedicator. Terentii init.

(5) Eraſmi præfatione in Lexicon. It is the 21ſt Letter of the 28th Book, pag. 1702. See, likewiſe, the end of the firſt Chapter of the 18th Book of Pliny's Natural Hiſtory.

[C] He acquired Reputation enough to provoke the Laſh of Envy.] This he inſinuates by a Common-Place Topic, which is ſeldom omitted in Epiſtles Dedicatory. He ſays, that They, to whom he dedicated his Terence, ſeemed to him the propereſt Perſons to ſcreen him from the Attacks of his Enemies. "Digni maximè atque idonei videbamini, qui noſtra "à morſu malevolorum fortiter & induſtrie tutari "poſſetis (6)." There are few Compliments falſer than this. Critics have no regard to the Dignity or Capacity of the Perſon, to whom a Book is dedicated. The Sieur des Accords ridicules, wittily enough, the Hopes grounded on the ſuppoſed Protection of thoſe, to whom Books are dedicated (7). D'Aubigny found the Reflexions of this Author ſo juſt, that, after giving them a new Turn, he adopted them for his own (8).

(6) Anteſign. Epiſt. Dedicat. Terentii.

(7) See the Preface to the Bigarrures de des Accords.

(8) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Confeſſion of Sanci.

[D] What he publiſhed on Terence may convince us, that he was the moſt indefatigable Man in the World.] He publiſhed the Comedies of this Poet three ſeveral Ways: Firſt, he publiſhed them with ſhort Notes, and Contents at the Head of each Scene, marking the Accents of all the Words of above two Syllables; and ſetting down the Meaſure, and way of ſcanning each Verſe, by it's Side. In the ſecond Place, he publiſhed them with the Annotations of almoſt all the Authors, who have written on Terence. Laſtly, he publiſhed them with new marginal Notes, and with a French Tranſlation, and Paraphraſe, on the three Comedies. He included every thing in the Tranſlation, which was not in expreſs Terms in the Original, between Crotchets; he marked all the References from the Tranſlation to the Paraphraſe with Letters. The variæ lectiones have each their Parentheſes, and Notes of Reference. This is ſufficient to ſhew, that our Author was extreamly laborious. Note, that, in the two laſt Impreſſions of his Terence, he inſerted all that was contained in the firſt. Matthieu Bonhomme, a Bookſeller of Lyons, was the Perſon he employed in this tripple Edition. The King's Licence is dated in 1556. The indefatigable Pains of the Author appears no leſs in his Treatiſe intituled, Thematis verborum inveſtigandi ratio, and in his Praxis Præceptorum Linguæ Græcæ. They are to be found in divers Greek Grammars.

ANTHERMUS, a Sculptor, and Native of the Iſle of Chios, was the Son of Miciades, and Grandſon of Malas, who had both been Sculptors. He left two Sons, who were of the ſame Profeſſion; the Name of the one was Bupalus, and That of the other Athenis [A]. It was againſt Them that Hipponax wrote ſome very ſatirical Verſes, in revenge for the ridiculous Repreſentation they had made of his Deformity (a). I ſpeak of this, more at large, in the Article of That Poet. See likewiſe the Article BUPALUS.

(a) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

[A] The name of the one was Bupalus, and that of the other was Athenis.] So Suidas calls him (1): In the Editions of Pliny, he was call'd Anthermus; But Father Hardouïn has ſtruck out this Word, and put Athenis in the room of it. See the Remarks [C] and [E] of the Article HIPPONAX. The Dictionaries of Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Moreri, and Hofman, call him Anthermus, in ſpite of Suidas.

(1) In Ἱππωνακ.

ANTINOE, or ANTINOPOLIS [A], a Town in Egypt, on the Nile

[A] ANTINOPOLIS.] Mr Baudrand ſays, twice in the ſame Page, that Stephen of Byzantium calls it ſo. I have not found it ſo, either in the Edition of Pinedo, or in that of Berkelius: I find in both of them, nothing more, than that the City Ἀντινόεια, Antinoia, was likewiſe call'd Adrianopolis. Mr Moreri was not aware, that the latter Name, and Adrianople, are not different; he gives them as if they were.

[B] A

Digitized by Google

Nile [B], and built, or repaired, by the Emperor Hadrian, in Honour of Antinous. If we may believe an Author of the IVth Century (a), it was once the Metropolis of Thebais. The ſame Author adds, that it was ſo populous, that, in his Time, it contained twelve Monaſteries of Women (b). Ammianus Marcellinus mentions it as one of the three moſt celebrated Towns of all Thebais (c). It is not true, that Leo Africanus ſaid it was called Anthios [C]. See the Remark [D] of the Article ANTINOUS; you will meet with ſome Particulars there concerning this City.

(a) Palladius, Hiſtor. Lauſiac. cap. 47. apud Triſtan. Comment. Hiſtor. Tom. 1. pag. 541.

(b) Id. cap. 137. apud eundem ib.

(c) Amm. Marcell. lib. 22. cap. 16.

[B] A Town in Egypt, on the Nile.] Dion Caſſius poſitively aſſerts, that Adrian caus'd it to be built in the ſame Place, where Antinous died. Ὡς καὶ πόλιν ἐν τῷ χωρίῳ ἐν ᾧ τοῦτ' ἔπαθε, συνοικίσαι καὶ ὀνομάσαι ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. Ut urbem in eo loco, in quo ille obiiſſet, reſtitutam ex eo nominari voluerit (1). He had ſaid, that, according to Adrian's Relation, this unhappy Youth fell into the Nile. Since Adrian, then, would have the World believe, that Antinous was drown'd in this River; we muſt conclude, that the Town, which he dedicated to this Favourite, was built on the Banks of the Nile, and near the Place, where he ſaid the young Man was loſt. Pauſanias expreſsly remarks, that This Town ſtood on the Nile; Ἐπὶ τῷ Νείλῳ πόλις Αἰγυπτίων ἐστὶν ἐπώνυμος Ἀντίνοος (2). In Ægypto apud Nilum urbs de Antinoi nomine eſt appellata. From hence we may conclude, that the Ruins, which are ſeen Ten Leagues from the Nile, as Moreri ſays, are not Thoſe of Antinopolis. At the ſame time, likewiſe, this concludes more ſtrongly againſt the Ruins of the Town, which Mr Baudrand has ſituated Forty Nine Leagues from the Nile.

(1) Xiphil. in Adriano.

(2) Pauſan. lib. 8. pag. 244.

[C] It is not true, that Leo Africanus ſaid, It was call'd Anthios.] This is another of Mr Baudrand's Miſtakes. I believe I ſhall not judge amiſs, if I aſcribe his Miſtake to the Liberty ſome take of paraphraſing Authors, whom they make uſe of. Conſider well theſe words of Ortelius; "Anthios ho- "die dici ex Joannis Leonis Africæ deſcriptione "deprehenditur: —— It appears from John Leo's "Deſcription of Africa, that it is at preſent call'd "Anthios". Compare them with theſe of Mr Baudrand, "Nunc in ruinis jacet, Anthios dicta teſte "Leone Africano; —— It now lies in Ruins, "having been call'd Anthios, according to Leo A- "fricanus." You will perceive, that if this latter Writer had ſcrupulouſly confin'd himſelf to the Terms of the former, he had not made ſuch a Slip. Ortelius might have diſputed the Point, by wreſting Leo Africanus's Words to his own Purpoſe; but Mr Baudrand cannot have recourſe to Applications or Conjectures; it is incumbent upon him to ſhew, that Leo has poſitively ſaid, that the Ancient City of Antinoe is called at preſent Anthios. Now this can never be made out; for Leo Africanus ſays only, that Anthios was built by the Romans on the River Nile, on the ſide of Aſia; and that ſeveral Latin Inſcriptions in Marble are yet to be ſeen there (3). He ſpeaks of it as a very beautiful City, rendered conſiderable by the Induſtry, and good Diſpoſition, of the Inhabitants; ſo far is he from being able to quote him as a Proof, that it is now quite ruin'd. Mr Baudrand adds, that it lies Forty Nine Leagues Eaſtward from the Nile. It is not, then, the Anthios of Leo Africanus. Mr Moreri deducts Thirty Nine of theſe Leagues; It's Ruins, he ſays, are to be ſeen Ten Leagues from the Nile. We have prov'd, in the preceeding Remark, that Antinopolis ſtood upon This River.

(3) Leo African. Deſcript. Africæ, lib. 8. fol 360.

ANTINOUS, Minion of the Emperor Adrian, was a Native of Bythyne, in Bythinia (a). We meet with nothing concerning his Family. His Beauty inflamed the Heart of Adrian in ſuch a manner, that a more unbridled or extravagant Paſſion, than That of the Emperor for this young Man, has ſcarce been known. It never broke out ſo furiouſly, as after the Death of Antinous; for there were no Divine Honours, which Adrian thought too ſublime for this Object of his Love [A]. Some ſay, that Antinous had given him the higheſt Inſtance of Affection, that is, had died for him [B]. Others affirm, that he drowned himſelf in the Nile, during the Stay which Adrian made in Egypt, about the CXXIId Year of the Chriſtian Æra. However it be, the Emperor mourned for him with the moſt effeminate Grief (b), and ordered Temples and Altars to be erected to him; which was performed with all the

(a) This City was alſo called Claudiopolis. Xiphilin. in Adriano.

(b) Mulierbriter flevit, Spartian. pag. 135.

[A] There were no Divine Honours, which Adrian thought too ſublime for this Object of his Love.] I inſiſt not on the great Number of Statues, or Repreſentations, which he caus'd to be made of him, almoſt in every Part of the World (1). I appeal to the Temples, which he order'd to be built to him; to the Prieſts, which he appointed him, and to the Sacred Games (2), and Myſteries, conſecrated in Honour of him (3). Pauſanias obſerves, that, by the particular Care of this Emperor, the Worſhip of Antinous was ſettled at Mantinea, becauſe Antinous's Country was a Colony of it (4). Games were celebrated there every five Years, in honour of this Favourite; but the Myſteries conſecrated to him were celebrated every Year. They, who build upon this, that there were Prieſts of Antinous, who aſſum'd the Title of Prophets; they, I ſay, who build upon this, and thence conclude that he had an Oracle, ſeek for Myſteries where there are none (5). Theſe Prophets were only the Prieſts of Antinous, in That particular Town, which bore his Name in Egypt, and which was the Mother Church, and Center of this New Religion (7). Now, in the Colleges of the Egyptian Prieſts, They were call'd Prophets, who were in the Nature of Deans, or Superiors. See the Proofs of this, which the Learned Henricus Valeſius furniſhes, in his Annotations on Euſebius (8). There is an Inſcription preſerv'd, in which Antinous is placed on the ſame Throne with the Egyptian Gods, σύνθρονον τῶν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ θεῶν (9). The Dignity of an Aſſeſſor to the Gods was much inferior to This. I ſhall not diſſemble, what the Philoſopher Celſus inſiſts on, that the Egyptians would never ſuffer Antinous to be compar'd with Jupiter and Apollo (10). Origen maintains the contrary; but I confeſs he advances it without any Proof; or I do not underſtand his Reaſoning.

(1) Xiphil. in Adrian.

(2) Hegeſippus, apud Euſebium Hiſtor. Eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 8.

(3) Pauſanias, lib. 8. pag. 244.

(4) Ibid.

(5) See Caſaubon, and Salmaſius, upon Spartian, in the Life of Adrian, pag. 137, 143.

(7) See Hegeſippus, apud Euſebium, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 8.

(8) See the Remark [D].

(9) See Spanhem. de Numiſm. pag. 657.

(10) Apud Origen. lib. 3. pag. 133.

[B] Some ſay —— that Antinous —— died for him.] Adrian did not ſay ſo much; But Dion has no regard to the Hiſtory of That Emperor, where he had read, that Antinous fell into the River Nile, and was drown'd. He delivers it as a conſtant Truth, that a certain Magic Operation, on which Adrian was employ'd, requir'd, that ſome one ſhould voluntarily lay down his Life, and that Antinous accepted the Condition. The Abbreviator Xiphilin, probably, has robb'd us of ſome Circumſtances, which might clear up this Myſtery a little; for it is not to be imagin'd, that Dion Caſſius ſhould report a Circumſtance of this Nature in ſo conciſe, or rather ſo maim'd, a Manner. However it be, we cannot infer from the Narration of Xiphilin, that Antinous laid down his Life, to ſave, or prolong, That of Adrian. We ſhould rather conclude, that he ſubmitted to Death, that the Augurs, by inſpecting his Entrails, might be enabled to diſcover That Point of Futurity, which the Emperor ſearched for. Nor let it be alledged, after one of our Antiquaries (11), "That, had the Emperor been only curious to con- "ſult the Entrails of ſome Youth, in a Point of Di- "vination, there had been no Neceſſity of mak- "ing the Experiment on Him, whom he loved of "all Men living: There were Youths enough, be- "beſides him, of exquiſite Beauty, in That great Em- "pire

(11) Triſtan, Comment. Hiſtor. Tom. 1. pag. 542.

Digitized by Google

the Diligence, which might be expected from a Nation accuſtomed of old to the groſſeſt Flatteries [C]. He would fain have perſuaded the People, that Antinous delivered Oracles; and ſome were publiſhed in his Name; but it was generally believed, that Adrian had forged them (c). He cauſed the Town, in which his Favourite died, to be rebuilt, and called it after his Name [D]. He was overjoy'd, when they told him, that a new Star had appeared in the Heavens, ſuppoſed to be the Soul of Antinous [E]; and he himſelf was wont to ſay, that he had ſeen the Star of Antinous

(c) See the Remark [D], towards the end.

(12) He ought not to have expreſſed himſelf doubtfully in this Point. See Apuleius, Apolog. pag. 301.

" pire (had Beauty been material (12)) who might " have ſerv'd for this Infamous Myſtery." Let not this, I ſay, be alledged; for this Writer was himſelf apprized of the Invalidity of this reaſon, when he added theſe Words immediately after; But, perhaps, "The " Secret of the Necromantic Art required, that He " alone, as being his beſt beloved, ſhould be ſacri- " ficed, to make the Ceremony more efficacious." He ſhould have added the Words of Dion, that it was neceſſary the Victim ſhould be a voluntary one. Now, Other Youths, whom the Emperor might have deſign'd for this Sacrifice, would not voluntarily have ſubmitted to it. Do you not think it was neceſſary to uſe extreme Violence towards thoſe beautiful Youths, whom Heliogabalus delivered to his Magicians? " Cœdit & humanas hoſtias, lectis ad hoc pueris no- " bilibus & decoris per omnem Italiam patrimis & " matrimis, credo ut major eſſet utrique parenti do- " lor. Omne denique magorum genus aderat illi, " operabaturque quotidie hortante illo, & gratias diis " agente quod amicos eorum inveniſſet, quum inſpice- " ret exta puerilia, & excuteret hoſtias ad ritum gen- " tilem ſuum (13). —— He ſacrificed, likewiſe, hu- " man Victims, ſelecting for this purpoſe noble and " beautiful Youths, whoſe Fathers and Mothers were ſtill " living; I ſuppoſe, that both Parents might feel the " greater Affliction. Laſtly, he was attended by all " ſorts of Magicians, whom he daily employ'd, re- " turning the Gods Thanks, that he had met with " their Friends, when he inſpected the Entrails of " the Children, and examin'd the Victims after his " own Pagan Rites". The Magic of thoſe Ages requir'd Victims of this kind; and St Juſtin obſerves, that it made choice of Youths of unſpotted Chaſtity. Νεκυομαντεῖαι μὲν γὰρ καὶ αἱ ἀδιαφθόρων παιδῶν ἐποπτεύσεις. Necyomantiæ ipſæ & incorruptorum puerorum ſpeculariæ inſpectiones (14). Antinous would, in this reſpect, have been very unfit. To return to Adrian, I think we muſt ſuppoſe, I. That the Neceſſity was extremely preſſing, which made him conſent to the ſacrificing of his Favourite. II. That the Deſire of avoiding Death was to him a ſtronger Motive, than the Curioſity of diving into Futurity: I chuſe therefore to follow Aurelius Victor, rather than Xiphilin. Aurelius Victor expreſſes himſelf thus, " Quæ quidem alii pia volunt religioſaque, " quippe Hadriano cupiente fatum producere, cum " voluntarium ad vicem magi propoſciſſent, cunctis " retractantibus Antinoum objeciſſe ſe referunt (15)". —— " Others look upon it as a pious and religious " Act; for, Hadrian being deſirous of ſeeing into Futu- " rity, and the Magicians requiring a voluntary Sa- " crifice for this Purpoſe, when all others declin'd it, " Antinous, they ſay, offer'd himſelf." Add, if you pleaſe, theſe Words of Spartian. " De quo (An- " tinoo) varia fama eſt, aliis cum devotum pro Ha- " driano aſſerentibus (16). —— Concerning whom " (Antinous) there are various Reports, ſome affirming " that he devoted himſelf for Hadrian".

(13) Lampridius in vita Heliogab. cap. 8.

(14) Juſtin. in Apologia, pag. 65. See Salmaſius on Spartian, in Adriano, pag. 136. and Apuleius in Apologia, pag. 301.

(15) Aurel. Victor. in Cæſaribus.

(16) Spart. pag. 135.

[C] Accuſtom'd to the groſſeſt Flatteries.] Among the Inſtances of baſe Complaiſance for the Paſſions of Adrian, Caſaubon reckons what the Poet Pancrates did (17). He ſhewed Adrian, as a Miracle, the Lotos Flower, which is not unlike a Roſe, telling him it ought to be named the Antinoian, and that it grew on the very Spot, which had been ſprinkled with the Blood of a Lyon, which He, the Emperor, had kill'd in Hunting. The Emperor was ſo pleaſed with this Diſcourſe, that he ordered Pancrates a Penſion in the Muſæum of Alexandria (18). Athenæus does not explain the Reaſon, why the Poet would have this Flower called after Antinous; but we may eaſily conjecture, that Pancrates's Deſign in it was to do honour to the Name of This Favourite. I imagined for ſome time, that this Paſſage of Athenæus had been the Occaſion of a Miſtake of Mr Moreri's, which I have mention'd at the End of this Article: But I alter'd my Opinion, upon Reading theſe Words of a Modern Author. Adrian —— gave the Name of this wretch (Antinous) to a City of Egypt —— as he had alſo given it to a Planet, to a Flower, to Temples, to Sacrifices, to Oracles, to Solemn Games; in ſhort, he made a God of him (19). They, who compare this Paſſage with the Antinous of Moreri, will be able to judge whether That Writer knew how to make uſe of the Books he conſulted.

(17) Caſaub. in Spart. Vit. Adr. pag. 137.

(18) Athen. lib. 15. cap. 6. pag. 677.

(19) Triſtan. Comment. Hiſtor. Tom. 1. pag. 541.

[D] He caus'd the Town, in which his Favourite died, to be rebuilt, &c.] I have followed the Tranſlator of Xiphilin, who ſpeaks only of a City repaired; though Xiphilin makes uſe of the Word σανοικισαι. Others, not examining the Text ſo cloſely, ſay, that Adrian built a Town, which bore the Name of Antinous. Πόλιν ἔκτισεν ἐπώνυμον Ἀντίνου (20). Urbem condidit Antinoo cognominem. It was ſituated in Thebais, and was anciently called Beſa, which was alſo the Name of the particular Deity adored there. Caſaubon affirms this (21), and obſerves, that the Egyptians, leaving the new Name to the Greeks, continued to call it Beza; but ſome, joining together the old and new Name, call'd it Bezantinous. Helladius, who was born there, did ſo (22). Let us not forget, that Antinous's Tomb was to be ſeen there. St Epiphanius informs us of it in theſe Words: Ὡς ὁ Ἀντίνοος ὁ ἐν Ἀντίνοῃ κεκηδευμένος ὑπὸ Ἀδριανοῦ κατεστάγη (23). After this manner Antinous, being buried by Hadrian in the City of his Name, was rank'd among the Gods. We learn from Origen, that Miracles were ſaid to be wrought in This Temple of Antinous (24). It is there Salmaſius places the pretended Oracle of This falſe and ridiculous Divinity. " Licet in multis Græciæ urbibus tem- " pla & ſacerdotes habuerit Antinous, præcipue ta- " men eum coluiſſe videntur Ægyptii, in ea urbe, " quæ ab ipſo nomen accepit; nam ibi ſepultus eſt, " ibi Oracula per eum reddi credebantur, ibi & pro- " phetas habuit (25). —— Tho' Antinous had Temples " and Prieſts in many Cities of Greece, yet the " Ægyptians ſeem to have been the principal Worſhip- " pers of Him, in that City, which had it's Name " from Him; for There he was buried; There Oracles " were thought to be deliver'd by Him; and There " he had his Prophets." What relates to the Oracle is atteſted by Origen (26), if the Paſſage be read as Salmaſius has quoted it; Πνεῖν θεῖλαῖον ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἀντίνου πνοὴ (27). See alſo Scaliger on Euſebius, n. 2135, where his Quotation differs from That of Salmaſius; tho' Spencer vindicates the latter Reading, in the Forty fourth Page of his Annotations on Origen againſt Celſus. What induc'd me to call it a pretended Oracle, was this: I recollected theſe Words of Spartian: " Et Græci quidem, volente Adriano, " eum conſecraverunt, oracula per eum dari aſſeren- " tes, quæ Adrianus ipſe compoſuiſſe jactatur (28). " —The Greeks, to pleaſe Adrian, deified Him, affirm- " ing that he gave Oracles, which Adrian himſelf is " ſaid to have compoſed.

(20) Hegeſippus apud Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 8. See alſo Amm. Marcellin. lib. 22. cap. 16.

(21) Caſaub. in Spart. Vit. Adriani. 138.

(22) Apud. Photium, Biblioth. pag. 1596.

(23) Epiph. in Ancorato, n. 108.

(24) Origen adverſus Celſum, lib. 3. pag. 132.

(25) Salmaſ. in Spart. vit. Adriani, pag. 143.

(26) Origen. ubi ſupra.

(27) Salmaſ. in Spartian. ubi ſupra.

(28) Spart. in Adriano. pag. 137.

[E] A New Star, — ſuppoſed to be the Soul of Antinous.] The like Flattery had been practiſed before, in Favour of Julius Cæſar. " Ludis quos primo " conſecratos ei hæres Auguſtus edebat, ſtella crinita " per ſeptem dies continuos fulſit, exoriens circa un- " decimam horam, creditumque eſt animam eſſe Cæ- " ſaris in Cœlum recepti, & hac de cauſſa ſimulacro " ejus in vertice additur Stella (29). —— At the firſt " Celebration of the Games, conſecrated to him by Au- " guſtus, a Comet appeared for ſeven Days ſucceſſive- " ly, riſing about the eleventh Hour; and it was " thought to be the Soul of Cæſar receiv'd into the " Heavens; for which Reaſon a Star is plac'd on the " Head of his Statue." Ovid concludes his Metamorphoſes by That of Cæſar's Soul into a Star.

(29) Sueton. in Cæſare, cap. 88. See the Penſees Diverſes ſur les Cometes, pag. 219.

Vix ea fatus erat, media cum ſede Senatus
Conſtitit alma Venus nulli cernenda, ſuique
Cæſaris eripuit membris, nec in aëra ſolvi

Paſſa

Digitized by Google

Antinous (d). What is moſt ſurprizing in all this, is, not the prophane Complaiſance for this Prince's Weakneſs, which in private was a Jeſt (e); but that the Worſhip of this new Deity ſhould ſubſiſt a long time after his Death, and be ſtill in vogue in the Reign of Valentinian (f), when there was no longer occaſion to flatter this Prince, or to fear the ſpecial Edict, ordaining this Worſhip (g). So that the Adoration of Antinous ſubſiſted entirely on a ridiculous Fondneſs in People for every thing, which they find eſtabliſhed. The Fathers of the Church made their Advantage of this fooliſh Superſtition, to expoſe the Vanity of the Pagan Religion. It was eaſy to trace this new Divinity to the Source, and thence bring the Original of all the reſt into ſuſpicion. People talked very differently of Antinous, according to the Differences of the Times; when they addreſſed themſelves to Antoninus Pius, the adopted Son and Heir of Adrian, or to Marcus Aurelius, adopted by Antoninus Pius, according to the Intention of Adrian, they were not ſo imprudent, as to hint at the infamous Cauſe of his Deification. They touched upon that String with the gentleſt Hand (h). But Tertullian, who lived at a greater Diſtance from thoſe Times, and under Emperors, who had not the ſame Intereſt in the Affair, obſerved no Meaſures. Prudentius has pleaſantly obſerved, that Adrian's Minion was raiſed to an higher Station than Jupiter's [F]; for Antinous ſat down to Table, while Ganymede fill'd the Liquor. The former might have ſaid, (d) Xiphilin. in Adriano.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Triſtan, Comment. Hiſtoriq. pag. 543.

(g) St Athanaſius againſt the Gentiles, and Theodoret in the 7to holy Diſcourſe, apud Triſtan ubi ſupra, ſay, there was an expreſs Edict of Adrian, enjoining the Worſhip of Antinous.

(h) Juſtin Martyr Apolog. ad Anton. Pium. Athenagoras ad Marcum Imper.

——— mediis videor diſcumbere in aſtris
Cum Jove, & Iliaca porrectum ſumere dextra
Immortale merum (i).

(i) Statius Silv. 2. lib. 4.

Methinks amidſt the Stars reclin'd I lye
With Jove, th' Imperial Maſter of the Sky;
There from the Hand of the fair Trojan Boy
The Cup receive, and quaff immortal Joy.

The Children of this World have, in all Ages, made their Court more exactly to the Gods of the Earth, than to Thoſe of Heaven. I cannot imagine, why Mr Moreri ſays, that Adrian believed, that Antinous was changed into a Flower, and into a Temple (k), and even ordered an Altar to be raiſed to him. Is not this ſuppoſing, that he built no Temples in Honour of him? And is this any truer, than the metamorphoſing him into a Flower?

(k) See the Remark [C].

Paſſa recentem animam, cœleſtibus intulit aſtris.
Dumque tulit, lumen capere atque igneſcere ſenſit,
Emiſitque ſinu. Luna volat altius illa,
Flammiferumque trahens ſpatioſo limite crinem
Stella micat *.

* Ovid. Metam. lib. 15. ver. 843.

This ſpoke; the Goddeſs to the Senate flew;
Where, her fair Form conceal'd from mortal View,
Her Cæſar's Heavenly Part ſhe made her Care,
Nor left the recent Soul to waſte to Air;
But bore it upwards to it's native Skies:
Glowing with new-born Fires ſhe ſaw it riſe;
Forth-ſpringing from her Boſom up it flew,
And, kindling, as it ſoar'd, a Comet grew:
Above the Lunar Sphere it took it's Flight,
And ſhot behind it a long Trail of Light.

WELSTED.

The Greek Poets had long before employed the ſame Thought in Favour of Berenice's Hair: The Emperor Adrian was too learned to be ignorant of it. Yet he reliſhed the Flattery, though deſtitute of the Charms of Novelty. What could they be thinking of, who placed this Darling in the loweſt Region of the Heavens? Some there were, who raiſed him no higher than the Orb of the Moon. Πῶς ὁ τεθνεὼς Ἀντίνοος μεμάκιον ἐν τῇ σελήνῃ ὠφεῖον καθίδρυται (30). —— How came the young Antinous, when he died, to be placed near the Moon?

(30) Tatian. Orat. contra Græcos, pag. 149.

[F] Prudentius has pleaſantly obſerved, that Adrian's Minion was raiſed to an higher Station, than Jupiter's.] His Verſes deſerve to be more correctly cited, than the Sieurs Triſtan, in his Hiſtorical Commentaries on the Medals of the Roman Emperors (31), and Moreri, in his Hiſtorical Dictionary, have given them. I tranſcribe them from the Edition of Nicolas Heinſius.

(31) Pag. 542.

Quid loquar Antinoum cœleſti in ſede locatum?
Illum delicias nunc Divi Principis; illum
Purpureo in gremio ſpoliatum ſorte virili,
Hadrianique Dei Ganymedem; non cyathos dis
Porgere, ſed medio recubantem cum Jove fulcro
Nectaris ambroſii ſacrum potare lyæum,
Cumque ſuo in templis vota exaudire marito (32)?

(32) Prudent. contra Symmach. lib. 1.

Why ſhou'd I mention Fair Antinous,
The Royal Lover's Minion, and Delight;
Rank'd, with His Maſter, now, amidſt the Gods,
His other Ganymede; yet not, like Him,
The Cup to fill; but, near great Jove reclin'd,
To quaff Ambroſial Nectar with the Gods,
And, jointly with his Maſter, hear the Vows,
Which Mortals at their Altars humbly pay?

ANTIPATER, an Idumean by Nation [A], illuſtrious for his Birth

[A] An Idumean by Nation.] Euſebius makes him an Aſcalonite (1). "A Band of Robbers, ſays he, "who had plundered a Temple near Aſcalon, carried "Antipater with the reſt of the Booty into Idumea, "where he lived a long time; his Father not having "wherewithal to redeem him." What I ſhall obſerve in the following Remark confutes this Story. Photius ſeems to me to deſerve Cenſure upon this Occaſion. In giving the Extract of Joſephus, he affirms, that Herod was the Son of Antipater, who had ſerved in the Temple of Aſcalon, Ὁ τοῦ Ἀντιπάτρου τοῦ Ἀσκαλωνίτου τοῦ ἱεροδούλου (2). He did not find this in Joſephus; and yet what Reader queſtions, whether every thing cited by Photius be in the Books he refers to? He, elſewhere, ſays (3), that Antipater was an Idumean, of the City of Aſcalon, and a great Enemy to Hircanus, on account of the Love he bore to Ariſtobulus. This laſt Fault ought not to be imputed to Photius; for all his following Diſcourſe ſhews, that he makes Antipater and Hircanus good Friends.

(1) Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 1. cap. 6, 7. ex Africano.

(2) Phot. Bibl. n. 76. pag. 168.

(3) Id. n. 238. pag. 969.

Digitized by Google

Birth [B], his Riches, and his good Senſe, artfully made his Advantage of the Confuſions, into which the Differences betwixt Hircanus and Ariſtobulus had thrown Judea. Theſe were two Brothers, who diſputed the High-Prieſthood. Antipater warmly eſpouſed Hircanus's Intereſt, and engaged Aretas, King of the Arabians, in it, and, afterwards, Pompey, the Roman General; in ſuch a manner, that Hircanus got the better (a). Antipater had the ſole Management of Affairs under his Government, and always turned them to the Advantage of the Romans, whenever an Opportunity offered. This made the Roman Generals, Scaurus, Gabinus, and Caſſius, honour him with ſeveral important Commiſſions, and pay a great deference to his Councils (b). He did Julius Cæſar a ſingular Piece of Service, in the War of Alexandria, by ſupplying him with Proviſions and Troops, and aſſiſting him couragiouſly in Perſon. Inſomuch, that, beſides great Commendations, he obtained from Julius Cæſar the Freedom of a Citizen of Rome, and the Adminiſtration of Judea (c). The Complaints of Antigonus (d) prevailed nothing againſt him; his Application to Buſineſs, and his great Abilities, gained him ſuch an high Eſteem, that he was little leſs honoured, than if he had been formally inveſted with the Royal Authority (e). The manner, in which he ſeemed to guard againſt any Reverſe of Fortune, by giving one of his Sons the Government of Jeruſalem, and another That of Galilee, with the Command of Troops, created a juſt Suſpicion of his deſigning to have no Superior, either in Name, or Effect. A Jew, named Malchus, ſuſpecting this, reſolved to prevent the Evil, and, finding no better way, than That of ſending Antipater out of the World, he poiſoned him (f). By this Act he became guilty of the blackeſt Ingratitude; for the Perſon, whom he deſtroyed, had loaded him with Benefits, and had, beſides, ſaved his Life (g). Among other Children, Antipater left the famous Herod, who was afterwards King of Judea (b).

(a) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 2. & ſeq.

(b) Ibid. cap. 9. & ſeq.

(c) Ibid. cap. 14, 15.

(d) He was the Son of Ariſtobulus.

(e) Ibid. cap. 17.

(f) Ib. cap. 19.

(g) Ibid. cap. 18.

(b) His Wife, called Cypris, was of a great Family in Arabia. Joſeph. de Bell. Jud. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Friends. They, who publiſhed this Author, muſt ſhare in the Blame as to this Point; but he alone is anſwerable for the other Fault. Aſcalon was not a Town of Idumea; and, after all, Joſephus does not ſay, that Antipater was of Aſcalon. Now Photius gives it as an Extract from Joſephus.

[B] Illuſtrious for his Birth.] His Father, whoſe Name was likewiſe Antipater, was Governor of Idumea under Alexander Janneus, King of Judea. Euſebius calls him Herod, and makes him a Servant in a Temple; and ſo poor, that he was not able to redeem his Son, who was fallen into the Hands of Robbers. Τοῦτον δὲ Ἡρῴδου τινὲς Ἀσκαλονίτου τῶν περὶ τὸν νεὼ τῆ Ἀπόλλωνος ἱεροδούλων καλουμένων γεγονέναι (4). Huic vero Herodem quemdam Aſcalonitam unum ex numero ſervorum templi Apollinis quod Aſcalone eſt patrem fuiſſe. But the Learned make no doubt, that both Euſebius and Africanus, whom he copies, have followed falſe Memoirs in this Point; and that more Credit ought to be given to Joſephus, who affirms, that King Alexander, and his Queen, gave the Government of Idumea to Antipater, who, by many Preſents, obtained the Friendſhip of the Arabs, and That of the Inhabitants of Gaza and Aſcalon (5). Joſephus, ſpeaking in another Place of Antipater, the Son, obſerves, that he was the moſt conſiderable Perſon of Idumea, as well for the Antiquity of his Family, as for his Riches (6). Hegeſippus ſays of the ſame Antipater, that he was famous in his own Country for his Anceſtors (7). It has ever been common to debaſe the Birth of thoſe, whom Fortune raiſes to the higheſt Dignities (8). By the way, the Ambiguity of a Paſſage in Joſephus has made ſome imagine, that Herod's Grandfather's Name was not Antipater, but Antipas.

(4) Euſeb. l. 1. cap. 6. Vide ibi Valeſium.

(5) Joſeph. Antiquit. lib. 14. cap. 2.

(6) Id. de bello Judaïco, lib. 1. cap. 5.

(7) De Excid. lib. 1. cap. 14.

(8) See the Remark [A] of the Article TOUCHET.

ANTONY, a Roman Family, in Latin, Antonia, deſcended, according to an old Tradition, from Anton, the Son of Hercules (a), produced two Branches: The one a Patrician, with the Sirname of Merenda; the other a Plebeian, without almoſt any kind of Sirname. It does not appear, that the Patrician Branch laſted long, or produced any other Perſons, mentioned in Hiſtory, except T. ANTONIUS MERENDA, and Q. ANTONIUS MERENDA. The firſt was one of the Decemvirate, abrogated on account of the tyrannical Cruelty of Appius Claudius, in the Year of Rome 304; and one of thoſe, who went into a voluntary Exile, and whoſe Goods were confiſcated, after the Trial of Appius Claudius, and Sp. Oppius (b). The latter was a Military Tribune in the Year of Rome 333 (c). But the Plebeian Branch continued a long time, and made a great Figure in Rome [A]; for, beſides that it could boaſt of having twice enjoyed the Poſt of Captain-General of the Cavalry, Six times the Conſulſhip, Once the Cenſorſhip, and Thrice the Honour of a Triumph (d); It ſaw itſelf, in the Perſon of Marc Antony, the Triumvir, Miſtreſs of Half the Empire. We ſhall proceed to particular Articles of the chief Men of this Ancient Family [B].

(a) Plutarch. in Marc. Antonio, pag. 917.

(b) Livius, lib. 3. pag. 88.

(c) Id. lib. 4. pag. 128.

(d) See Glandorp Onomaſt. pag. 66.

[A] The Plebeian Branch continued a long Time, and made a conſiderable Figure in Rome.] We muſt not forget, that Marc Antony the Orator, who died in the Year 667, was the firſt, who brought the Honours of the Conſulate, the Triumph, and Cenſureſhip into This Family.

[B] Of This ancient Family.] They, who have moſt Reading, moſt Collections, and moſt Materials for a Library, fall, ſometimes, into ſtrange Overſights. Father Vavaſſor is an Inſtance of this, in his excellent Treatiſe of the Burleſque Stile, when he cenſures Photius, for having believed, that Antonius Diogenes, Author of a Romance, flouriſhed not long after the Death of Alexander. Οὐ λίαν πόρρω τῶν χρόνων τῆ βασιλέως Ἀλεξάνδρου (1). Non ita diu poſt Alexandri Magni tempora floruiſſe. He alledges ſeveral Reaſons againſt this; among which he thinks this the ſtrongeſt, That the Family Antonia was not, then, in being; and that the Name was not ſo much as known. Neque, quod graviſſimum eſt, tum nata gens Antonia, aut facta vox, aut audita temporibus illis (2). Than which nothing is more falſe. We have produced, on the Credit of Livy, one Titus Antonius, a Decemvir, in the Year of Rome 304; and, about thirty Years after, one Quintus Antonius, who was a Military Tribune. We find, in the ſame Livy, one Marcus Antonius, appointed Maſter of the Horſe by the Dictator Cornelius Rufinus, in the Year 421. Now it is certain, that Alexander died in the Year 430. I do not alledge the Tradition, recorded by Plutarch; I might juſtly be anſwered, that Anton, Son of Hercules, was no more the Stem of the Antony's in Italy, than Cocceius Nerva was the Stem of the Houſe of Coſſe in France.

(1) Photius, n. 67. pag. 364.

(2) Vavaſſor, de ludrica Dictione, 148.

ANTONY

ANTONY (MARC) the Orator, was the greateſt Ornament of his Family. At his Entrance on Public Buſineſs, he diſtinguiſhed himſelf in a manner, which deſerves to be related. He had obtained the Quæſtorſhip of the Province of Aſia, and was already arrived at Brunduſium, to take ſhipping there, in order to go and take Poſſeſſion of his Office, when his Friends informed him, that he was accuſed of Inceſt before the Prætor Caſſius, the moſt rigid Judge in the World; whoſe Tribunal was termed the Rock of the accuſed. Marc Antony might have pleaded a Privilege, which forbad the receiving Accuſations againſt thoſe, who were abſent in the Service of the Republic; but he choſe to juſtify himſelf in Form, and returned to Rome, ſtood his Trial, and was acquitted with Honour (a). Sicily fell to him during his Prætorſhip; and he gave chace to the Pirates, who infeſted thoſe Coaſts. He was made Conſul, with A. Poſthumius Albinus, in the Year of Rome 653, and courageouſly and happily ſuppreſſed the turbulent Attempts of Sextus Titus, Tribune of the People. Some time after, he was made Proconſul of Cilicia, and performed ſo many great Actions in this Poſt, that he obtained the Honour of a Triumph. We muſt not forget, that, to improve his wonderful Talent of Eloquence, he would in ſome manner become the Diſciple of the moſt noted Orators of Athens and Rhodes, in his Paſſage to Cilicia, and his Return to Rome. He afterwards exerciſed the Office of Cenſor, with great Glory; having gained his Cauſe before the People, againſt Marcus Duronius, who had entered an Accuſation of Bribery againſt him, in Revenge for his expelling him out of the Senate; which this wiſe Cenſor thought he deſerved; becauſe, while Tribune of the People, he repealed a Law, reſtraining the immoderate Expences of Feaſts (b). He was one of the beſt Orators That ever pleaded in Rome; and, as Cicero, a proper Judge in theſe Matters, ſays, he was an Inſtance, that Italy could boaſt of equalling Greece in the Art of Speaking well. Among other Perſons, he defended Marcus Aquilius, and ſo moved the Judges by the Tears he ſhed (c), and the Scars he ſhewed on his Client's Breaſt, that he gained his Cauſe. The Character of his Eloquence, and his Actions, may be ſeen at large in the Books I quote (d). He never publiſhed any of his Pleadings [A]; leaſt he ſhould be convicted of ſpeaking in one Cauſe, contrary to what he might have alledged in another. The Morality of the Bar thought it no Scandal, in thoſe Days, for a Pleader to contradict himſelf in Favour of his Client. The Precaution of this Advocate is neceſſary to Perſons of his Profeſſion [B]; and yet is not always ſufficient

(a) Valer. Maxim. lib. 3. cap. 7. n. 9. who mentions (lib. 6. cap. 8.) the Conſtancy of a Slave of this Marc Antony, in denying that his Maſter was guilty.

(b) Glandorpius, ubi ſupra, pag. 68. ex Epit. Liv. Cicer. &c.

(c) Cicero de Orat. lib. 2. cap. 47. & in Verr. 5.

(d) Id. in Bruto, & de Orat. c. 37.

[A] He never publiſhed any of his Pleadings.] This Fact, and the Reaſon of it, deſerve to be confirmed by Proofs. Cicero and Valerius Maximus ſhall be my Vouchers. Let us hear Cicero firſt: "Hominem ingenioſum M. Antonium aiunt ſolitum eſſe "dicere, idcirco ſe nullam unquam orationem ſcripſiſſe, "ut ſi quid aliquando non opus eſſet ab ſe eſſe dictum, "poſſet ſe negare dixiſſe (1). ----- The ingenious "Orator, Marc Antony, they tell us, was wont to "ſay, that his Reaſon for never publiſhing any of his "Orations, was, that, whenever it was proper he "ſhould not have ſaid a Thing, he might deny that "he had ſaid it." Valerius Maximus's Words are: "Jam M. Antonio remittendum conſitium eſt, qui "idcirco ſe aiebat nullam orationem ſcripſiſſe, ut ſi "quid ſuperiore judicio actum ei, quem poſtea de"fenſurus eſſet, nociturum foret, non dictum à ſe "affirmare poſſet: qui facti vix pudentis tolerabilem "cauſſam habuit, pro periclitantium enim capite non "ſolum eloquentia ſua uti, ſed etiam verecundia abu"ti, erat paratus (2). — Marc Antony is to be excuſed "from Cenſure; who ſaid, that he, therefore, publiſhed "no Orations, that, if what he had pleaded in a fore"going Cauſe ſhould appear to be prejudicial to a "ſubſequent Client, he might deny his own Words. "Thus he aſſigned a tolerable Reaſon for an Action, "otherwiſe ſcarce honourable; for he was ready, not "only to employ his Eloquence, but even to ſacrifice his "Modeſty, in Defence of the Diſtreſt." No Critic, I think, can be ſo unreaſonable, as to maintain, that I tranſlate the Word ſcribere wrong. Every Reader of common Senſe will perceive, that Marc Antony never meant to ſay, that he pleaded Extempore; that he never drew up his Pleadings in Writing; for, if this had been his Meaning, he would have aſſigned an impertinent Reaſon for his Conduct; ſince his only Intention was to prevent any one's turning his own Weapons againſt him. Now this he might equally have done, whether he wrote down his Pleadings, or not, provided he did not publiſh them. A Manuſcript, which is locked up, can never convict an Orator, at the Bar, of having formerly maintained an Opinion quite contrary to what he advances at preſent. He may deny it, with the ſame Aſſurance, as if he had pleaded Extempore; without any Fear of being condemned to produce the Original of his Plea; there are many ways of guarding againſt This. We may conclude, then, that the preſent Queſtion is not, whether he wrote, or did not write down, his Pleadings, but whether he publiſhed them, or not. Were it neceſſary to offer Proofs in ſo clear a Caſe, I could ſoon produce two very ſtrong ones. The firſt ſhould be taken from a Paſſage in Cicero, where Brutus complains, that Marc Antony, the Orator, had publiſhed but one very ſmall Book. "Vellem aliquid Antonio præter illum de ratione "dicendi ſane exilem libellum - - - - - - libuiſſet "ſcribere (3). ---- I could wiſh, that Antony had "thought fit to publiſh ſomething more, than That very "ſmall Treatiſe of the Art of Speaking." Here, you ſee, he makes uſe of the Word ſcribere. The ſecond might be taken from That Oration of Cicero, in which the Fact in Queſtion is mentioned; for Cicero, intending to ſhew, that Marc Antony's Precaution was not ſo effectual as he imagined, repreſents, not that an Advocate is obliged to produce the Original of his Pleas; but, that there are Auditors, who remember, a long time after, what they have heard a Lawyer advance. "Perinde quaſi quid à nobis dictum aut actum ſit id niſi "literis mandaverimus hominum memoria non com"prehendatur (4). —— As though the not commit"ting to Writing, what we have formerly advanced "in our Pleadings, would prevent it's being retained "in the Memory of others."

(1) Cicero in Oratione pro Cluentio. cap. 50.

(2) Valer. Maxim. lib. 7. cap. 13. n. 5.

(3) Cicero in Bruto, cap. 44.

(4) Cicero, in Orat. pro Cluentio.

[B] The Precaution of this Advocate is neceſſary to Perſons of his Profeſſion.] I remember, in a Letter, which was publiſhed in the Year 1685, an Enquiry into the Cauſes of the Contradictions of Authors (5). The Lawyers are there brought upon the Stage; and what is ſaid, on their Article, is as follows. "It is "ſometimes diverting enough to hear the ſame "Lawyer plead, in one and the ſame Week, for a "Husband againſt his Wife, and for a Wife againſt "her Husband. If he has a fruitful Imagination, he "dwells altogether, in his firſt Plea, upon the Power "of Husbands; he grounds his Arguments on Nature, "on Reaſon, on the Word of God, and on Cuſtom. "He quotes the Scriptures; he quotes the Fathers; "the Civilians, and the Writers of Travels. He "declaims againſt Women, and dwells only on gene"ral Propoſitions. Two Days after, the Scene "changes; he entertains other Thoughts, quite con"trary to the former. He calls the Husband's Au"thority, Uſurpation; he runs over the Holy Scrip"tures,

(5) The ſecond of the new Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm.

A REFLEXION on the Contradictions to be found in Authors.

Digitized by Google

ſufficient to ſave their Honour [C]. He ever affected not to paſs for a learned Man

" tures, the Code, Phyſic, Hiſtory, and the Moral " Law, in favour of Women, ſtill haranguing on " general Principles; for a vehement Spirit thinks it " proves nothing, unleſs it affirms and denies, with- " out Exception; and conſequently, if obliged to " maintain oppoſite Intereſts, muſt neceſſarily con- " tradict itſelf." It muſt be owned, that a Lawyer, who has publickly pleaded with all the Fire of Imagination, for the Privileges of Women, may be confuted with all imaginable Eaſe, the next time he pleads for the Privileges of Men. It is but referring him to his own Minutes. Our Orator, Marc Antony, would fain have avoided this great Inconveniency, and have enjoyed the Privilege of contradicting himſelf, by maintaining one thing to Day, and another to Morrow, according as the Intereſt of his Clients required. It would be eaſy to ſhew, that Lawyers are not the only Perſons, who make uſe of this Practice; Polemic Divines do the ſame, according to the different Tenets of thoſe they have to deal with (6). Bellarmin, in diſputing againſt the Enthuſiaſts, maintains, that the Scripture abounds with Characters of it's being Divine; but inſiſts, againſt the Proteſtants, that it is obſcure, and ſtands in need of the Authority of the Church (7). A certain Miniſter, whom I forbear to name, maintains, againſt thoſe of the Romiſh Church, that the Scriptures every where ſhine with Characters of Divinity; but, writing againſt Mr Pajon, he ſpeaks another Language (8). This Privilege ought to be left wholly to Poets and Orators. " In " different Places, they ſay very different Things, as it " beſt ſuits their Purpoſe. Nos Poëtarum more, uti ſe " res dederit, ita vel populi, vel eruditorum hominum " ſententiam noſtro quodam jure ſequimur, atque ali- " as, ſi ſit opus, aliter de eadem dicimus, ſays the " excellent Monſignor della Caſa, Archbiſhop of Bene- " vento, in one of his Letters to Victorius. And " Euſtathius has obſerved, on the eighteenth Verſe " of the ſecond Book of the Odyſſey, and on the " Two hundred and forty third of the twelfth of the " Iliad, that Homer has ſaid things in theſe Places, " concerning Auguries, quite contrary to what he " ſaid elſewhere; which he calls ἀμφοτερόγλωσσον. " Thus, in the firſt Parts of my Poems, which I " have juſt now quoted, I have ſaid, that an old " Poet is a wretched thing, becauſe it ſuited to " my purpoſe; but this does not hinder me from ſay- " ing the quite contrary elſewhere, if occaſion re- " quires (9)." How do I love this Sincerity! and how ſhould I be overjoyed to find it in Bellarmin, or the Miniſter; but it is not to be expected. We ſhall hear Cicero preſently on the Right of Lawyers, with regard to the Privilege of contradicting themſelves: See the Remarks [H] and [I] of the Article BALDUS.

(6) See Remark [M] of the Article ADAM (JOHN).

(7) See the Efforts, which the Jeſuit Mulhuſius makes in the Auctarium Primum Specuſi Miſeriarum Parei, to reconcile this Contradiction. See the Remark [D] of the Article BELLARMIN.

(8) See the Supplement to the Philoſophical Commentary, and pag. 207 and 216 of Mr Saurin's Anſwer to This Commentary.

(9) It is Mr Menage, who ſpeaks, in the Anti-Baillet, Tom. 2. p. 174, 175.

[C] This Precaution —— is not always ſufficient to ſave their Honour.] We have ſeen (10), how Cicero has obſerved, that the good Memory of their Hearers is to be dreaded by Lawyers, who contradict themſelves (11). If he had given Examples of this, he might better have made it appear, that the Precautions of Marc Antony were inſignificant. But it muſt be own'd, that what he adds is ſufficient to juſtify the Conduct of That Orator. It is this: Marcus Brutus, pleading againſt L. Plancius, who was defended by L. Craſſus, got two of his Friends to ſtand up in Court, and read certain Paſſages in an audible Voice, which he had ſelected out of two Speeches of L. Craſſus; ſome raiſing the Authority of the Senate very high, the others depreſſing it. This diſconcerted the Orator a little, and put him upon excuſing himſelf, from the Difference of Times, and Cauſes, which had extorted from him theſe contradictory Maxims (12). " Ego vero, ſays Cice- " ro (13), in illo genere libentius cum multorum " tum hominis eloquentiſſimi & ſapientiſſimi L. Craſ- " ſi autoritatem ſequor, qui quum L. Plancium de- " fenderet accuſante M. Bruto, homine in dicendo " vehementi & callido, quum Brutus duobus recita- " torious conſtitutis ex duabus ejus orationibus ca- " pita alterna inter ſe contraria recitanda curaſſet, " quod in diſſuaſione rogationis ejus, quæ contra Co- " loniam Narbonenſem ferebatur, quantum poteſt " de autoritate Senatus detrahit; in ſuaſione legis Ser- " viliæ Summis ornat Senatum laudibus, & multa in " Equites Romanos quum ex ea oratione aſperius dicta " recitaſſet, quo animi illorum Judicum in Craſſum " incenderentur; aliquantum eſſe commotus dicitur. " Itaque in reſpondendo primum expoſuit utriuſque " rationem temporis, ut oratio ex re & cauſa ha- " bita videretur. - - - - - For my own Part, I willingly " follow, in This, the Authority of many Others, as " alſo of the moſt eloquent and wiſe L. Craſſus; who, " having undertaken the Defence of L. Plancius, a- " gainſt the Accuſation of M. Brutus, a vehement " and artful Speaker; and Brutus having procured " two Perſons to repeat alternately Paſſages out of " two of his Orations, which were contradictory to " each other; for, on the one ſide, in his Oration " againſt the Law, which was propoſed againſt the " Colony of Narbo, he detracts as much as poſſible " from the Authority of the Senate; whereas, in " That for the Servilian Law, he highly extols the " Senate; and Brutus having recited out of That Ora- " tion ſome Reflexions on the Roman Knights, in or- " der to exaſperate the Minds of the Judges againſt " L. Craſſus; he is ſaid, upon this Occaſion, to have " been a little at a Loſs. In his Reply, therefore, " he ſets forth the different junctures of " Time; that what he had ſaid might appear to reſult " from the particular Circumſtances of each Cauſe." Cicero diſapproved of the Conduct of L. Craſſus on this Occaſion; Cicero, I ſay, who was once in the ſame Circumſtances; his Adverſaries having repeated a Paſſage, in one of his Orations, quite contrary to an Argument he was then upon. He anſwered, That what they had repeated did not contain his true Sentiments; and that what a Man offers, as an Advocate, ought not to be conſidered, as if ſpoken by him in quality of a Witneſs; that it is the Language of the Cauſe, and not of the Orator. This is plain enough; they muſt ſpeak according to the Intereſt of their Cauſe, and the Conjuncture of Time, and not according to their private Opinions. " Ego ſi quid ejuſmodi dixi, ne- " que cognitum commemoravi, neque pro teſtimonio " dixi: & illa oratio potius temporis mei quam ju- " dicii & autoritatis fuit. - - - - - Errat vehementer " ſi quis in orationibus noſtris quas in judiciis habui- " mus autoritates noſtras conſignatas ſe habere arbi- " tratur. Omnes enim illæ orationes cauſarum & " temporum ſunt, non hominum ipſorum aut pa- " tronorum. Nam ſi cauſæ ipſæ pro ſe loqui poſ- " ſent, nemo adhiberet oratorem: nunc adhibemur ut " ea dicamus, non quæ noſtra autoritate conſtituan- " tur, ſed quæ ex re ipſa cauſaque dicantur (14). " If I, indeed, ſaid any thing of this kind, I neither " offered it as of my own Knowledge, nor in quality of " an Evidence; it was rather the Language of the Junc- " ture of Time, than of my own Judgment and Authority. " It is a great Miſtake in any one, to look upon the " Orations, which I have ſpoken in ſeveral Cauſes, as " ſo many written Opinions under my own Hand. They " are all the Language of the particular Cauſe and Time, " not of the Orator himſelf. For could Cauſes ſpeak " for themſelves, no one would have recourſe to an " Orator; and it is our Buſineſs to ſpeak, not our " own Determination of the matter, but what the par- " ticular Cauſe, we are engaged in, requires." Add to this the Words, which Cicero puts in the Mouth of the Orator Marc Antony. " Oratoris omnis actio " opinionibus non ſcientia continetur, nam & apud eos " dicimus qui neſciunt, & ea dicimus quæ neſcimus " ipſi: ita & illi alias aliud iiſdem de rebus & ſentiunt & " judicant, & nos contrarias ſæpe cauſas dicimus, non " modo ut Craſſus contra me dicat aliquando; aut ego " contra Craſſum, quum alterutri neceſſe ſit falſum di- " cere, ſed etiam ut uterque noſtrum eadem de re alias " aliud defendat, quum plus uno verum eſſe non " poſſit. Ut igitur in ejuſmodi re quæ mendacio nixa " ſit, quæ ad ſcientiam non ſæpe perveniat, quæ " opiniones hominum & ſæpe errores aucupetur, " ita dicam (15). - - - - - The whole Buſineſs of Ora- " tory conſiſts in Opinion, not in Knowledge; for we " ſpeak, not only before the Ignorant, but in Caſes, " where we ourſelves are ignorant. Therefore both " our Hearers think and judge of the ſame things dif- " ferently at different Times; and we ourſelves often " patronize oppoſite Cauſes; inſomuch that not only " Craſſus ſometimes ſpeaks againſt me, and I againſt " Craſſus, in Cauſes, where we are both obliged to " ſpeak againſt our Opinions; but even that we both " take different Sides of the Queſtion, in relation " to

(10) See Cicero Orat. pro Cluentio, cap. 50, &c. and de Oratore, c. 55. how he was reverenced on Brutus, by bringing three Readers into Court.

(11) It is not leſs to be feared by Pretors, who, far from contradicting themſelves, repeat from time to time, and almoſt word for word, the ſame Sermon.

(12) See Cicero Orat. pro Cluentio, cap. 51.

(13) Cicero Orat. pro Cluentio, cap. 51.

(14) Idem, ibid. c. 50.

(15) Idem, de Oratore, lib. 2. cap. 7.

Digitized by Google

Man [D]. His Modesty, and other good Qualities, made him no less beloved by a great Number of Illustrious Persons, than his Eloquence gained him the Admiration of the whole World. He perished unfortunately in the bloody Confusions occasioned by Marius and Cinna. He was discovered in the Place, where he had concealed himself, and Soldiers were immediately sent to kill him. His Address mollified them; nor had any of them Brutality enough to kill him, except their Commander, who had not heard his Discourse, but entered his Chamber in great Anger, that his Men had not executed their Orders (e). His Head was expofed on the Chair of the Orators, pro rostris (f); a Place he had formerly adorned with Triumphal Spoils. This happened in the Year of Rome 667. He left two Sons, of whom I am going to speak.

(e) Plutarch. in Mario, pag. 431. Valer. Max. lib. 8. c. 9.

(f) Cicero, de Oratore, lib. 3. c. 3.

" to the same Cause, upon different Occasions; when " but one side can possibly be right. In this Matter, " therefore, which depends upon Falshood, which seldom " comes up to Science, and which catches at the Opi- " nions, and often the Errors, of Men, &c." I assure myself, that the greatest Part of my Readers will be so pleased to find, that these two great Orators held such Principles, and so well knew the Foible of their Profession, that they will pardon whatever may savour too much of Digression in this Remark. Note, that these Principles subsist still.

Compare the Pleadings of Mr Erard against Madam Mazarin with the Answer to the Factum of This Lady. In particular read these Words of the Answer. Mr Erard represented to Madam Mazarin the Occurrences of the then Times, in such a manner as she herself must have considered them. It is true, Time and different Events make us think and speak differently.

[D] He ever affected not to pass for a learned Man.] If I am not mistaken, this was more through Policy than Modesty. He saw himself already established in the Reputation of a great Orator. And might he not imagine, that he should be still more admired, if it was believed, that he ow'd his Eloquence to his Genius alone, and not to a long Application to the Study of Greek Authors? He had a farther meaning in it; he believed his Rhetoric would have more Influence on the People, if they took it for the meer Production of Nature, than if they looked upon it as the Result of Art. For People are apt to distrust Those, who are practised in all the Tricks of their Profession. As for the Judges, Marc Antony believed, that nothing would influence them more in his favour, than to make them believe, that he spoke unprepared, and carefully to conceal from them those fine Touches of Rhetoric, which are generally employed to set off a Cause. And yet, at the bottom, he was a learned Man, and acquainted with all the best Authors among the Greeks. Let us prove this by some Passages of Cicero. " Magna nobis pueris, Quinte " frater, si memoria tenes, opinio fuit, L. Crassum " non plus attigisse doctrinæ quam quantum prima " illa puerili institutione potuisset, M. autem Anto- " nium omnino omnis eruditionis expertem atque " ignarum fuisse - - - - Quum nos - - - - ea discere- " mus quæ Crasso placerent, & ab his doctoribus " quibus ille uteretur erudiremur, etiam illud sæpe " intelleximus - - - - - illum & Græcè sic loqui, nul- " lam ut nosse aliam linguam videretur, & doctoribus " nostris ea ponere in percontando, eaque ipsum omni " in sermone tractare, ut nihil esse ei novum nihil " inauditum videretur. De Antonio vero quanquam " sæpe ex humanissimo viro patruo nostro acceperа- " mus, quemadmodum ille vel Athenis vel Rhodi " se doctissimorum hominum sermonibus dedidisset, " tamen ipse adolescentulus, quantum illius ineuntis " ætatis meæ patiebatur pudor, multa ex eo sæpe " quæsivi. Non erit profecto tibi quod scribo hoc " novum (nam jam tum ex me audiebas) mihi illum " ex multis variisque sermonibus nullius rei, quæ " quidem esset in his artibus de quibus aliquid existi- " mare possem, rudem aut ignarum esse visum. Sed " fuit hoc in utroque eorum, ut Crassus non tam " existimari vellet non didicisse quam illa despicere, " & nostrorum hominum in omni genere pruden- " tiam Græcis anteferre. Antonius autem probabi- " liorem hoc populo orationem fore censebat suam, " si omnino didicisse nunquam putaretur. Atque ita " uterque se graviorem fore, si alter contemnere, al- " ter ne nosse quidem Græcos, videretur. - - - - If " you remember, Brother Quintus, it was a prevail- " ing Opinion, when we were Boys, that Lucius Cras- " sus had attained to no greater Degree of Learning, " than what he had gained at School; but that Marc " Antony was entirely ignorant, and void of all Eru- " dition. But, when we applied our selves to Cras- " sus's favourite Studies, and were instructed by such " Preceptors, as he had made use of, we had frequent " Opportunities of being convinced, that he spoke the " Greek Language as well, as if he had never known " any other; that he had put such Questions to our " Preceptors, and handled such Points in every thing " he said, that he seemed to be familiarly acquainted " with the whole Circle of Science. As for Antony; " though I had often learned from That Best natured " of Men, my Uncle, his attachment to the Conver- " sation of the learnedest Men at Athens, or Rhodes, " yet, as far as the Modesty of Youth would permit, " I often applied myself to him for Instruction. And " what I now assure you of, is no new thing to you " (for I then declared to you the same), that, in the " many and various Conversations I had with him, " he appeared to me to be perfectly skilled in every " Science, of which I could then form any Judg- " ment. But this was peculiar to them both; that " Crassus desired not so much to decline the Reputation " of Learning, as to appear to despise it, and to " prefer our own native Skill to That of the Greeks; " and that Antony thought his Words would have " the more Weight with the People, if they believed he " had never been instructed; both of them thus aiming " at Success, the one by appearing to despise, the " other to be quite ignorant of, the Greek Learning." Thus the second Book de Oratore begins. Add to this what he there says of himself (16), that he read the Greek Writers only by way of Amusement; and that the Books of the Philosophers were quite unintelligible to him. " Verbum prorsus nullum intel- " ligo, ita sunt anguſtis & concisis disputationibus " illigati;" that, in this Respect he had nothing to say to the Poets, whose Language was not human; and that he confined himself to the Historians, or Orators, who condescended to the Understandings of of the half-learned; Videantur voluisse esse nobis, qui non sumus eruditissimi, familiares. In what follows, it is not Cicero, who speaks, but Marc Antony, who, among other things, expresses himself thus: " Ego " ista studia non improbo, moderata modo sint: opi- " nionem istorum studiorum & suspicionem artificii " apud eos qui res judicent oratori adversariam esse " arbitror; imminuit enim & oratoris autoritatem, " & orationis fidem (17). —— I do not disapprove of " these Studies, provided they are followed with Mode- " ration; but I am of Opinion, that to be famed for them, " and to be suspected of Artifice by the Judges, is pre- " judical to an Orator, for it lessens his own Autho- " rity, and the Weight of what he says." Here he gives the Reason of That Conduct, which Cicero ascribes to him; " Erat memoria summa, nulla medita- " tionis suspicio, imparatus semper aggredi ad dicen- " dum videbatur, sed ita erat paratus, ut judices illo " dicente nonnunquam viderentur non satis parati ad " cavendum fuisse (18). - - - - - He had a happy Me- " mory; was never suspected of Premeditation, and " seemed, whenever he began to speak, to be unpre- " pared; yet was he in reality so much so, that the " Judges always seemed sufficiently prepared by what " he was saying to give their Opinions." I remember, on this Occasion, a Remark of Mr Daillé, on the Difference between acting the Orator, and being one (19). This Remark is very just.

(16) Id. cap. 14. See I know cap. 19.

(17) Id. de Oratore, lib. 2. cap. 37.

(18) Id. in Bruto, c. 37.

(19) Daillé, Reponse au P. Adam, 3. part. p. 156.

ANTONY (Marc), Eldest Son of the foregoing, had the Sirname of Creticus (a). He never rose higher than the Prætorship; but he exercised this Office with a more

(a) Plut. in Antonio, init. p. 915.

Digitized by Google

a more extenſive Power than uſual; his Commiſſion to convoy Corn to Rome giving him a Command over the Seas (b). This Prerogative he obtained by the Favour of the Conſul Cotta (c), and by the Faction of Cethegus (d); nor did any Party murmur at it, as they certainly would have done, if he had been a Perſon of more Merit [A]. It is ſaid, that he ſuffered himſelf to be inſtigated by evil Counſels, to commit Extortions in the Provinces; and, indeed, he was guilty of many (e). Thoſe of Sicily have been repreſented in a few Words by Cicero (f). The War of Crete, the good Succeſs of which he thought ſo certain, that he had provided fewer Arms on board his Fleet, than Chains to bind the conquered (g), having miſcarry'd, he fell ſick, and died of Grief. He was unable to ſupport the cutting Reflexions, which aroſe in his Mind, when he remember'd, that the Enemy, having taken ſeveral of his Ships, had hung up the Roman Soldiers at the Yard-Arm, and had ſailed up and down with this Spectacle, triumphing inſolently over the Republic in a thouſand Places. He had three Sons by Julia, his ſecond Wife [B], to wit, Marcus Antonius, Caius Antonius, and Lucius Antonius (h), of whom we ſhall ſpeak hereafter.

I ſhall have ſome Errors to correct [C], and perhaps the Encomium Plutarch beſtows on Antony will be one [D].

(b) Paterculus, lib. 2. cap. 31.

(c) I ſhall examine, under the Article CETHEGUS, whether Cotta was Conſul when M. Antony received this Commiſſion.

(d) Aſconius Pedianus in Orat. Cicer. contra Verrem, pag. 113.

(e) Aſcon. Ped. ubi ſupra.

(f) Cicero, Orat. 1. in Verrem, cap. 01. See likewiſe Orat. 2. c. 3.

(g) Florus, lib. 3. cap. 7.

(h) Glandorp. Onomaſt. p. 73.

[A] If he had been a Perſon of more Merit.] Velleius Paterculus ſupplies me with this Thought, in that Part of his Hiſtory, where he relates, that Pompey, about two Years after, obtained a Commiſſion, which rendered him Maſter of almoſt all the World. This Commiſſion was not granted him without Oppoſition; whereas nothing had been ſaid againſt the Decrees, which had truſted the like Power in the Hands of Marc Antony. The Reaſon was, that they did not judge the latter capable of rendring himſelf formidable; but Pompey's Merit was looked upon as dangerous to the Public Liberty. "Idem hoc "ante biennium in M. Antonii prætura decretum "erat; ſed interdum perſonæ, ut exemplo nocet, ita "invidiam auget aut levat. In Antonio homines "æquo animo paſſi erant; raro enim invidetur eorum honoribus, quorum vis non timetur. Contra "in iis homines extraordinaria reformidant, qui ea "ſuo arbitrio aut depoſituri aut retenturi videntur, "& modum in voluntate habent (1). - - - - - The "ſame thing was decreed two Years before in the "Prætorſhip of Marc Antony; but there is ſomething in the different Characters of Men, which "increaſes or diminiſhes the Odium of a Thing. In "the Caſe of Antony, the People were very well "ſatisfied; for we ſeldom envy thoſe Men Honours, "whoſe Power we are not afraid of; whereas any "extraordinary Degree of Advancement alarms us in "Thoſe, who, we think, can reſign, or keep, their Authority juſt as they pleaſe, and whoſe only Reſtraint "is their Will." This is a fair Text for the Compilers of Political Commentaries: I leave it to them almoſt entire, and content myſelf with this ſmall Obſervation. It is thought a juſt ground of Complaint, that the ſame Qualities, which ſhould recommend a Man to great Offices, prevent his obtaining them. George de Monte Mayor uſed to ſay, Eſtamos à tiempo, que mererer la coſa es principal parte para no alcancarla. That is, (and they are the very Words of the Preſident du Vair,) Nothing, in theſe times, hinders good Men from riſing to Riches and Honours, ſo much, as their deſerving them (2). This Complaint is often too well grounded; but there are certain Caſes, in which it is not quite ſo juſt; for, in order to deſerve an Office, it is not ſufficient to have the neceſſary Qualifications for the honourable diſcharge of it; but it is farther requiſite, that thoſe Qualites be not mixed with certain Vices, which prompt a Man to make an ill Uſe of the Glory, which redounds from the Diſcharge of this Office, with Capacity and Succeſs. To ſpeak properly, a Mixture of theſe Vices may render thoſe unworthy of an Office, who, conſidered with regard to their great Accompliſhments, might be the moſt deſerving of any. It is not, therefore, always an Act of Injuſtice to refuſe an Office to one, who is moſt capable of diſcharging it; it may be a reaſonable Precaution, a Point of neceſſary Prudence; eſpecially in Republics. Eminent Qualities inſpire Men with Ambition. Give thoſe who poſſeſs them Opportunities of doing their Country conſiderable Service; and you kindle the Fire of this Ambition more and more; the Glory they acquire, by worthily diſcharging an important Truſt, inſpires them with Thoughts of making an ill uſe of their Reputation, and ſhews them, that it is not impoſſible to climb a Step higher. They try their Fortune, aſpire ſometimes to the Sovereignty, and, whether they ſucceed or no, occaſion a thouſand Diſorders, which might have been avoided, by beſtowing ſuch Offices upon Perſons of moderate Merit.

(1) Vell. Paterc. lib. 2. cap. 31.

(2) See Peter Matthieu at the end of the Preface to the Hiſtory of the Peace.

[B] Julia, his ſecond Wife.] She was the Daughter of Julius Cæſar, who was Conſul in the Year of Rome 664; and Siſter of another Julius Cæſar, who was Conſul in the Year 690. Her Virtue and Merit equalled her to the moſt illuſtrious Ladies of her Time. Ταῖς ἀρίσαις τοῖς καὶ σωφρονεσάταις ἐνάμιλλον. Cum præſtantiſſimis & pudiciſſimis illius memoriæ matronis comparanda (3). She was not the happieſt in Husbands; for, after the Death of Marcus Antonius Creticus, ſhe married Publius Cornelius Lentulus, who was an Accomplice in Catiline's Conſpiracy, and one of thoſe, who was put to Death for it. What ſhe did to ſave her Brother Lucius Cæſar, deſerves Admiration (4). He was proſcribed in the Time of the Triumvirat, and hid himſelf in her Houſe. The Soldiers went thither to ſearch for him, to put him to death; but ſhe placed herſelf at the Door, and declared they ſhould never paſs, 'till they had killed her; ſhe, who had brought that Marc Antony into the World, whoſe Orders they were now to execute. This made them retire (5). The Name of our Antony's firſt Wife was Numitoria: She was Daughter of Quintus Numitorius Pullus. She is called the Daughter of a Traytor, in Cicero's Philippics (6).

(3) Plut. in M. Anton. init. p. 916.

(4) Id. ib.

(5) Plut. in M. Anton. pag. 924.

(6) Taken from Glandorp. pag. 74, 75.

[C] Some Errors to correct.] Thyſius, Profeſſor of Oratory in the Academy of Leyden, has made a Remark, which might give us an ill Opinion of his Learning. It relates to theſe Words of Lactantius. "De Neptuni ſorte manifeſtum eſt, cujus regnum "tale fuiſſe dicimus quale M. Antonii fuit infinitum "illud imperium, cui totius oræ maritimæ poteſtatem "Senatus decreverat, ut prædones perſequeretur ac "mare omne pacaret (7). —— What Neptune's Share "was, is very plain; whoſe Empire appears to have "been like the extenſive Authority of Marc Antony, "who, by a Decree of the Senate, had the Command "of the whole Sea-Coaſt, in order to extirpate the "Pirates, who infeſted it, and ſecure the Navigation." Thyſius pretends, that, inſtead of Antonii, we ought to read Pompeii, which is the reading of the beſt Manuſcripts; and upon this he obſerves, that Pompey was called Neptune, and that ſeveral of his Statues were adorned with the Enſigns of That Deity. He is miſtaken: There is no doubt but Lactantius, who was perfectly Maſter of Cicero, had an Eye to the following Paſſage of the fourth Oration againſt Verres: "Poſtquam Marci Antonii infinitum "illud imperium ſenſerant (8). — After they had felt "the long continuance of Marc Antony's Authority;" or to theſe Words of the following Oration: "Ita ſe in "iſto infinito imperio Marcum Antonium geſſiſſe, ut, "&c. (9) —— Marc Antony behaved himſelf ſo ill "in the long Power he enjoyed, that, &c." One of Voſſius's Sons might have ſpared the Profeſſor of Leyden this falſe Note; for, in a Book, which was printed thirteen Years before the Lactantius of Thyſius, he obſerves, that Thomaſius was very much in the wrong to put Pompeii, inſtead of Antonii, in his Edition of Lactantius; and proves it by the Authority of Cicero, and Paterculus (10). I add, that he believes Florus meant the ſame Antony, when he ſays, "Quum ille

(7) Laſtan. lib. 1. cap. 11. pag. 34.

(8) Cicero Orat. 2. in Verrem, cap. 3.

(9) Id. Orat. 3. in Verrem, cap. 91.

(10) Gerardus Voſſius Not. in Vell. Paterculum, pag. 55. Edit. 1639. he cites Cicero Verrina 1, but he ſhould have cited Verrina 2 and 3, dd. II.

"(Pompeius)

Digitized by Google

" (Pompeius) res in Aſia gerens eo quoque præfectum " miſiſſet Antonium, in alienа Provincia inclitus fuit " (11). —— When Pompey, who commanded in Aſia, " had ſent thither his Lieutenant Antony, he was fa- " mous in Another's Province." He ſhews, that Florus has confounded this Antony with Octavius, who, as Plutarch (12) and Dion (13) ſay, was ſent by Pompey to the Iſland of Crete, when Metellus commanded there. There is more ground for this, than for his ſaying, that the Sirname of Criticus, given in Plutarch to Marc Antony, muſt be corrected by That of Creticus. I know not what Edition of Plutarch he made uſe of; but I find Κρητικὸς in the Francfort Edition, 1620, and in That of Paris, 1624. I wiſh he had taken the trouble to examine a Chronological Error, which appears to be in Paterculus. This Hiſtorian affirms, that there paſſed but two Years between the Command, which was given to Marc Antony, and That, which was given to Pompey; and yet Aſconius Pedianus affirms, that Marc Antony obtained it by the Favour of a Conſul, called Cotta. I enlarge upon this Difficulty in the Article CETHEGUS.

(11) Florus, lib. 3. cap. 7. and not cap. 8. as Gerard Voſſ. cites him.

(12) Plut. in Pompeio.

(13) Dion. lib. 36.

[D] The Encomium, Plutarch gives our Antony, will be one.] " He was a worthy, good, Man, ſays Plu- " tarch (14), and particularly remarkable for his Libera- " lity. He was not very rich, and withal diverted from " the Exerciſe of his good Nature by his Wife. One " Day a Friend of his, who ſtood in need of Money, " came to borrow ſome of him. But Antony, having " none to lend, ordered his Servant to fill a Silver " Baſon with Water, and bring it. The Servant " obeying his Commands, he took the Baſon, and " lathering his Face, as if he was going to ſhave " himſelf, he ſent away the Servant upon another " Errand, and gave his Friend the Baſon, deſiring " him to make what uſe he pleaſed of it. Next Morn- " ing, the whole Family was in an Uproar, and great " Enquiry made after the Baſon. But Antony, ſeeing " his Wife in a great Paſſion, and reſolved to put all " her Servants to the Queſtion, acknowledged what " he had done, and begged her Pardon." Ὡμολό- ſησε συγγνωμην ἔχειν ἀνθρώπος (15). Petita venia id quod erat confeſſus eſt. Plutarch does not juſtly repreſent the Character of this Man; he calls him Liberal; whereas he ſhould have made him Prodigal: Salluſt was not deceived in him. " Marcus Anto- " nius perdundæ pecuniæ genitus, vacuuſque curis " niſi inſtantibus (16). —— Marc Antony, born to " be a Spendthrift, and careleſs of every thing but the " Preſent." It muſt not be diſſembled, that Cicero denies, what was commonly ſaid of this Marc Antony; to wit, that he neither kept an Account of what he received, nor of what he expended. " Audimus " aliquem tabulas nunquam confeciſſe: Quæ eſt opi- " nio hominum de Antonio falſa, nam fecit diligen- " tiſſime (17) —— We hear, that ſuch an one never " kept any Accounts. This was generally reported of " Antony; but falſely; for he kept them very care- " fully."

(14) Plut. in M. Antonio init. pag. 915, 916.

(15) Id. ib. pag. 916. A.

(16) Salluſt. in Fragm. Hiſtor. lib. 3. pag. 446.

(17) Cicero, Orat. 1. in Verrem. cap. 23.

ANTONY (CAIUS) Brother of the foregoing, was a Perſon of irregular Conduct; inſomuch, that his Elder Brother, and He, were much more the worthy Uncle and Father of the Triumvir, than worthy Sons of Him, who gave them Life. This Caius Antony bore Arms under Sylla, in the War againſt Mithridates, and committed many Extortions in Achaia; which, with other matters of Blame alledged againſt him, was the Cauſe, that the Cenſors afterwards expelled him the Senate. Nevertheleſs he was choſen Conſul, in preference to Catiline, one of his Competitors; but with much leſs Honour, than Cicero; who, notwithſtanding all the Plots, which Caius Antony and Catiline laid to exclude him, was declared Conſul with unanimous Conſent; whereas Caius Antony carried it, but by a few Voices, againſt Catiline (a). It was in this Conſulate, that Catiline's Conſpiracy was diſcovered, againſt which Cicero acted with great Zeal. His Colleague had the Command of the Army, which was ſent againſt Catiline, and obtained a compleat Victory by his Lieutenant Petreius: For, as for himſelf, either a feigned, or a real, Sickneſs hindered him from being perſonally in the Battel. Dion ſays, that it was pretended; and that Antony, fearing Catiline would diſcover ſome very important Secrets againſt him, would not command in Perſon (b). After the Victory, he led his Troops into Macedonia, and was beaten by the Dardanians. He governed That Province three Years, with ſo much Violence, and ſo many Exactions, that the Senate, diſpleaſed at his Conduct, ſent him a Succeſſor. Upon his Return to Rome, He was accuſed by Marcus Cælius; and, tho' Cicero undertook his Defence, yet he was convicted and baniſhed. Some ſay he paſſed Fifteen Years in the Iſland of Cephalonia; and that his Nephew, Marc Antony, who was very powerful in Rome, after the Aſſaſſins of Julius Cæſar had left it, recalled him from his Exile [A]. He died ſome Years after, full of Days and Troubles, and left only one Daughter, whom he ſaw repudiated, a little after her Marriage, by her Huſband Marc Antony, the Triumvir, on Suſpicion of an Intrigue with Dolabella (c).

(a) Aſconius Pedianus in Orationem Ciceronis in toga candida, contra Anton. & Catilin. in fin. pag. 158.

(b) Dion. lib. 37. ad annum Romæ 692.

(c) See the Remark [G], of the Article FULVIA, and Glandorp. Onomaſtic. pag. 75, 76.

[A] His Nephew Marc Antony, —— recalled him from his Exile.] There are ſome Difficulties, in relation to the Time of his Re-call, which ſhall be examined in the Remark [H], of the Article of FULVIA.

ANTONY (MARC) One of the Triumvirs, generally known by the bare Name of Marc Antony, was Grandſon of Marc Antony the Orator, and Son of Marcus Antonius Creticus. Mr Moreri is very full on this Article, and therefore I ſhall take no notice of him. The Miſtakes I have collected, on this Head, may find a place in the Article FULVIA, or elſewhere. All that I ſhall obſerve here of this Triumvir is, that he publiſhed a Treatiſe concerning his own Drunkenneſs [A].

[A] He publiſhed a Treatiſe concerning his own Drunkenneſs.] This is a Fact, which modern Writers make no mention of; it is, however, a remarkable one, and to be found in Pliny. " Tergilla Ci- " ceroni M. F. binos congios ſimul haurire ſolitum " ipſi objicit; Marcoque Agrippæ à temulento ſcy- " phum impactum: Etenim hæc ſunt Ebrietatis " opera. Sed nimirum hanc gloriam auferre Cicero " voluit interfectori patris ſui M. Antonio. Is enim " ante eum avidiſſime apprehenderat hanc palmam, " edito etiam volumine de ſuâ Ebrietate: Quo patro- " cinari ſibi auſus, approbavit planè (ut equidem ar- " bitror) quanta mala per temulentiam orbi terrarum " intuluiſſet. Exiguo tempore ante Prælium Actia- " cum id volumen evomuit, quo facile intelligatur " ebrius jam ſanguine Civium, & tanto magis eum " ſitiens (1). —— Tergilla objects to Cicero, the Son " of Marcus Cicero, that he was wont to drink off two " Gallons at once; and to Marcus Agrippa, that a " drunken Fellow threw a Glaſs at his Head. Theſe " are

(1) Plin. lib. 14. ſub fin. cap. ult.

Digitized by Google

" are the Works of Drunkenneſs. Cicero ſeems to " have diſputed the Prize of Intemperance with his " Father's Murtherer Marc Antony; who, before " him, had been very ambitious of it; having even " publiſhed a Treatiſe on his own Drunkenneſs; in " which, daring to undertake it's Defence, he plainly " juſtifies all the Miſchiefs, which the World had " ſuffered by His Drunkenneſs. He vomited forth his " Treatiſe, a little before the Battle of Actium; " which plainly ſhews, that he was drunk with the " Blood of Citizens, and, for that reaſon, the more " thirſty after it." I wonder Plutarch ſhould take no notice of this Piece of Singularity, and that Suetonius ſhould not mention it.

ANTONY (Caius) Brother of the foregoing, ſerved under Julius Cæſar, in the War againſt Pompey, and was forced to ſurrender himſelf, with the Troops he commanded in Illyria, for want of Proviſions (a). After the Death of Cæſar, and during his own Prætorſhip, and the Conſulate of his Brother Marc Antony, he was ſent into Macedonia with the Decree of the Senate, which gave Marc Antony the Government of That Province. But, whatever Diſpatch he could make, he was prevented by Brutus, and even fell into his Hands (b). At firſt Brutus treated him honourably, and allowed him the Enſigns of his Prætorſhip; but, when he perceived, that he endeavoured to corrupt the Army, he put him under an Arreſt; and afterwards put him to death, when he was informed of the Proſcriptions of the Triumvirate, the Murther of D. Brutus, That of Cicero, &c. Marc Antony, having got Hortenſius into his Power, after the Battle of Philippi, ſacrificed him to the Manes of his Brother. Cicero mentions C. Antony, ſometimes, in his Philippics, but always to his Diſadvantage (c).

(a) Glandorp. pag. 80, ex Cæſare, Lucani Pharſ. lib. 4. Eutropio.

(b) He was taken by Hortenſius, who delivered him up to Brutus.

(c) Glandorp. ex Plutarch. in M. Antonio, &c.

ANTONY (Lucius) Brother of the preceeding, had all the Vices of his Brother, the Triumvir, but none of his good Qualities: However he did not want Courage. He was Tribune of the People, in the Year of Cæſar's Death, while his Brother Marc was Conſul, and his Brother Caius Prætor. He was Conſul, Himſelf, in the Year of Rome 713, and triumphed the firſt Day of his Conſulſhip over a People of the Alps, whom he pretended he had conquered; tho' he had really done nothing worthy of a Triumph, nor exerciſed any Command in their Country. But Fulvia, the Wife of M. Antony, and Mother-in-law of Octavius Cæſar, who then governed all in Rome, procured him, by her ſole Credit, this Honour. This imperious Woman, deſiring to be revenged on Octavius, for repudiating her Daughter, excited Lucius Antony to take up Arms againſt him, under pretence of protecting the Inhabitants of Campania, whoſe Lands were aſſigned to the Soldiers. The Troops, he had aſſembled, being introduced into Rome, by Night, He drove out Lepidus one of the Triumvirs; and harangued the People, declaring, That, according to his Brother's Intention, he deſigned to aboliſh the Triumvirate. This Promiſe filled the City with Joy. He was declared Imperator, and marched againſt Octavius Cæſar; but, not daring to keep the Field, he retreated to Perouſa, where he defended himſelf, 'till the want of Proviſions obliged him to ſurrender. Octavius gave him his Liberty; but what became of him after, is not known (a).

(a) Glandorp. Onomaſt. pag. 81, ex Dione, &c.

ANTONY (Marcus Julius) Son of the Triumvir, and Fulvia, found ſo much Favour with Auguſtus, after the Conqueſt of Egypt, that, by degrees, he was advanced to Employs, and at laſt to the Conſulate, in the Year of Rome 744. He married Marcella, the Daughter of Octavia; and, being by this means become Son-in-law of Auguſtus's Siſter, for whom That Prince had a great Eſteem, he was the Firſt Favourite after Agrippa, the Son-in-law of Auguſtus, and the Sons of the Empreſs. But he proved ungrateful to his Benefactor, and was one of the firſt, who debauched his Daughter Julia; which, together with ſome Suſpicions of a Conſpiracy, occaſioned his being condemned to death. Some Hiſtorians ſay, that he killed himſelf to prevent the Infamy of his Sentence (a). He had ſtudied under the Grammarian L. Craſſitius (b), and compoſed a Poem of Twelve Books in Heroic Verſe (c), and ſome Treatiſes in Proſe. It is to Him, that Horace addreſſes the ſecond Ode of his fourth Book. He left one Son very young, whoſe Name was L. Julius Antony. The Emperor baniſhed this Youth to Marſeilles, under the ſpecious Pretence of keeping him to his Studies. He ordered him very ſingular Funeral Honours; for he procured a Decree of the Senate, that his Bones ſhould be repoſited in Octavius's Tomb (d). This was the End of That Ancient and Powerful Family Antonia, of which Tacitus ſays, that it had been always Illuſtrious, but Unfortunate; Multa claritudine generis, ſed improſpera (e). We ſhall now ſum up all Mr Moreri's Errors concerning this Family [A].

(a) Vell. Paterculus, lib. 2. cap. 100.

(b) Sueton. de Illuſtr. Gramm. cap. 18.

(c) Entituled, Diomedeæ. Vetus interpres Horat. in Od. 2. lib. 4.

(d) Tacit. Annal. lib. 4. cap. 44.

(e) Id. ib. Tacitus ſays this on occaſion of the Death of L. Julius Antonius, which happened in the Year of Rome 778.

[A] We ſhall now ſum up all Mr Moreri's Errors concerning this Family.] I. He ought not to have mentioned this Family under the Letter M, on account of Marc Antony: Both He, and his Family, ought to ſtand under the Letter A. II. He ought not to have ſaid, That the Family of the Antonii was famous among the Nobles of Rome; for it is plain, that, by this way of ſpeaking, he intended to diſtinguiſh it from the Plebeian Families: now this diſtinction is falſe. The Tribuneſhip of the People alone, with which Marc Antony was inveſted, at the beginning of the War between Cæſar and Pompey, proves demonſtrably, that the Antonian Family was Plebeian; for he was made Tribune of the People, without being adopted by a Plebeian; there was no Neceſſity for his imitating Clodius, who, to qualify himſelf for the Office of Tribune, had recourſe to ſuch an Adoption (1). I confeſs the Antonii were at firſt Patricians. This appears from the Dignities of the Decemvirate, and the Military Tribuneſhip, conferred upon them, before the Plebeian Families

(1) Cicero, Orat. pro Domo ſua ad Pontifices, cap. 13.

Digitized by Google

Families were admitted to the first Dignities of the Republic. But, whether it were, that the Antonii, who appeared with so much Splendor in the seventh Century of Rome, did not descend from the same Branch with those, who bore the Sirname of Merenda, or whether it were, that they passed, we know not how, from the Rank of Patricians to That of Plebeians, as has happened to some other Families; it is certain, that their House was Plebeian in the Days of Marc Antony, the Orator, who first began to raise it. III. It is gross Ignorance to say, that this House was divided into two Branches, the Merenda's, and the Marc's. The Word Marc is the Prænomen, which serves only to distinguish Persons: That, which distinguished the several Branches, was called the Cognomen, and held the third Place, as Cæsar, Scipio, &c. (2). IV. It is not certain, that Q. Antonius Merenda, Military Tribune about the Three hundred thirty second Year of Rome, was the Son of T. Antonius Merenda, Decemvir in the Year 303. V. It is false, that Livy makes mention of M. Antonius Merenda, Master of the Horse, under the Dictatorship of P. Cornelius. He calls him only M. Antonius. VI. Marcus Antonius Creticus was not killed in a Duel. Asconius Pedianus leaves no room for Doubt in this matter. "Indicto, says he, Cretensibus bello male re "gesta ibidem periit (3). —— He died, after meeting with ill Success in the Cretan War." VII. Instead of saying, that Marc Antony, the Orator, never wrote down any of his Orations; he should have said, that he never published any (4). VIII. His Answer to those, who asked him the reason of it, is misrepresented; he did not reply, that he would not furnish those with Arms, who might be inclined to convict him of having expressed himself amiss; he was in no pain for his Words or Phrases; I mean, of being reproached with Barbarisms, or Offences against the Rules of Grammar; yet this is what Mr Moreri means; as all must own, who understand what an Author means. But Marc Antony's Fear was, lest his Works should convict him of blowing Hot and Cold with the same Breath, and of having confuted, four Years before, what he was then advancing in his Plea. Consult the Remarks [B] and [C] of the Article ANTONY (Marc) the Orator; where I have fully displayed the Reasons, why Lawyers contradict themselves, and maintain one thing to day, and the quite contrary to morrow, according to the different Interests of their Clients. IX. Besides, the Answer, which Mr Moreri ascribes to him, is absurd; for one may write down a Plea, without furnishing the Critics with Arms, provided it be not made public. X. M. Aquilius was not condemned upon M. Antony's undertaking his Cause. XI. The Judges did not confess, That He, who had so often exposed his Life for the Good of the Republic, ought not to lose it so dishonourably. Had Mr Moreri known, that Aquilius could, at the worst, have been condemned only to Banishment (5), he would not have given his Style the Colours of Oratory. XII. What a confused way of speaking is it, to say, That Marc Antony was Consul, Censor in the Year of Rome 626, with A. Posthumius in 657, with L. Valerius, &c. There is something worse in it, than a confused Style: Falsehoods are not wanting. Marc Antony was Consul, with A. Posthumius Albinus, in the Year 655, and Censor, with L. Valerius Flaccus, in the Year 657 (6).

(2) Caius Julius Cæsar. Publius Cornelius Scipio.

(3) Asc. Pedian. in Cicer. Divinat. pag. 17. Edit. Lugd. in 12mo. He says, in Verrem de Præt. urb. pag. 87. Cretæ mortuus.

(4) See, above, the Remark [A], of the Article ANTONY the Orator.

(5) Quum mihi M. Aquilius in civitate retinendus esset. It is Marc Antony, who speaks, apud Ciceronem, lib. 2. de Orat. cap. 45.

(6) Plin. lib. 8. cap. 7. Sigonius & Calvisius place this Consulate in the Year 654, and the Censorship two Years after.

(a) She was Sister to Augustus.

ANTONIA, Eldest Daughter of Marc Antony [A], and Octavia (a), was a Lady, whose Virtue and Beauty made her the Object of Admiration (b). She was married to Drusus, the Son of Livia, and Brother of Tiberius, by whom she had several Children (c), of which but Three survived Drusus, to wit, Germanicus, Claudius, who was Emperor, and Livilla, who was Tiberius's Son's Wife. Antonia, yet young and beautiful in her Widow-hood, was courted by several Persons, but refused them all; an Example of Continency [B], so much the more to be admired, as she lived in a Court exceedingly corrupt. Tiberius, whose humour was so stern, had yet a great Regard for this Lady; which shews, that to her Chastity she knew how to join other Virtues, unknown to the chaste Agrippina, her Daughter-in-law; I mean Mildness and Prudence. It was Antonia, who discovered to Tiberius Sejanus's Conspiracy

(b) Σεμνότητι καὶ κάλλει περιβόητον. Cultitate & forma inclytam. Plutarch. in Anton. pag. 955. E.

(c) Sueton. in Claud. cap. 1.

(1) Germanicus, C. Cæsaris pater, Drusi & minoris Antoniæ filius.---Germanicus, the Father of Caius Cæsar, and Son of the younger Antonia. Suet. in Calig. cap. 1. See likewise in Claud. cap. 1. Ex Antonia majore patrem Neronis procreavit (Domitius).---Domitius begot the Father of Nero on Antonia the elder. Id. in Nerone, cap. 5.

(2) Plutarch. in Marc. Anton. pag. 955.

(3) Lipsius in Tacit. Ann. lib. 12.

(4) Gland. Onomast. pag. 87.

[A] Eldest Daughter of Marc Antony] Suetonius and Plutarch are against me; the first expressly, and in downright Terms (1); the second after an implicit manner: For he only speaks of the Marriage of one of the two Antonia's with Domitius, before he mentions the other's Marriage with Drusus (2). Now, since Suetonius wrote after Tacitus, and sometimes seems to refute him; would it not be better to give Him the preference, and to suppose, that he took the contrary side, only because he was convinced of Tacitus's Error? Besides, are the Words of Plutarch of no weight? Let every one judge as he pleases; for my own Part, I have followed Tacitus, without pretending to contest the matter with those, who choose to follow Suetonius. There are two Passages of Tacitus, one in the Forty fourth Chapter of the fourth Book of his Annals, the other in the Sixty fourth Chapter of the twelfth Book of the same Annals, where the Wife of Domitius is called Antonia Minor. - - - Antonia the Younger. I find, that Lipsius declares for neither side (3), and that Glandorpius prefers That of Tacitus to That of Suetonius (4). There is a Reason on Tacitus's side, though not conclusive. It may be supposed, that Drusus, who, in quality of a Powerful Empress's Son, was one of the greatest Matches of Rome, married the eldest of the two Sisters; but, in answer to this, it may be said, that His Antonia was a perfect Beauty. Now this is a Right of Eldership more to the Taste of a young Prince, (nor is it necessary to be a young Prince to have this Taste) than That, which is only founded on the greater Number of Years. It is probable, that Drusus, as he was the greater Match, had his Choice; and, no doubt, he chose the handsomest of the two, whether the elder, or the younger, Sister.

[B] Antonia, yet young and beautiful in her Widowhood, - - - - was an Example of Continency.] What is said of her Husband, in relation to his conjugal Fidelity, is yet more surprizing. "Drusum etiam "Germanicum, eximiam Claudiæ familiæ gloriam, "patriæque rarum ornamentum, & quod super omnia est operum suorum pro habitu ætatis magnitudine vitrico pariter ac fratri Augustis, duobus reipublicæ divinis oculis, mirifice respondentem, constitit usum Veneris intra conjugis charitatem clausum "tenuisse (5). - - - It was certain, that Drusus Germanicus, the singular Glory of the Claudian Family, and uncommon Ornament of his Country, and, what is beyond all, as famous for Great Actions, in proportion to his Years, as the Augusti, his Father-in-Law, and Brother, the two divine Eyes of the Republic, confined his Desires wholly to conjugal Endearments (6)." It is remarkable enough, that, in Augustus's Court, the Emperor's Son-in-law should be contented with one Dish, like a Citizen; and it signifies little to say, that Antonia was so young and fair, that Drusus knew not where to please himself better. How many Princes, great Lords, and other Persons are there, with whom this Reason is of no force? But to return to Antonia, Valerius Maximus continues his Discourse in this manner. "Antonia quoque fœmina, laudibus virilem familiæ suæ claritatem supergressa, amorem "mariti egregia fide pensavit; quæ post ejus excessum "forma & ætate florens cubiculum socrus pro conjugio habuit, in eodemque toro alterius adolescentiæ vigor extinctus est, alterius viduitatis experientia consenuit. - - - - - The Lady Antonia, a greater Ornament to her Family than the Males it produced, repaid her Husband's Love with a remarkable Constance; for, after his Decease, though still in the Flower of her Youth and Beauty, she was wedded only to the Chamber of her Mother-in-law; and, in the same Bed, the one's Vigour of Youth expired, the other's Experience of Widow-hood grew old."

(5) Valer. Maxim. lib. 4. cap. 3.

(6) See the Verses in Remark [G].

Digitized by Google

Conſpiracy [C]; nor was This Prince ungrateful, after a Service of ſuch Importance (d). Pliny mentions a very particular Quality of Antonia, which is that ſhe never ſpit (e). He tells us likewiſe, that ſhe had a Fiſh, which ſhe was very fond of, and which ſhe adorned with Ear-rings; a Curioſity, which drew many Viſitors to her Country Seat (f). This Lady was unhappy in her Family. Germanicus, her Son, had indeed all the good Qualities, which could be deſired in the Preſumptive Heir of the Empire, and was the Darling and Delight of all the Roman People; but this only ſerved to heighten Antonia's Affliction, when a ſudden Death bereaved her of This Young Prince. This diſconſolate Mother was not able to walk as a Mourner, when Germanicus's Funeral was ſolemnized [D]. Her other Son was ſo diſagreeable, and ſo brutiſh, in her Eyes, that ſhe was wont to call him Monſter, Rough-Draught of a Man, &c. [E] and made him the Standard of Compariſon, whenever ſhe would repreſent an arrant Blockhead. Her Daughter was a Monſter of another kind; ſhe made an Attempt on the Honour and Life of her Huſband, and executed it; for ſhe was convicted of Adultery, and of poiſoning her Huſband. Her own Mother was the Secular Arm, to which ſhe was delivered; who ſhut her up in a Chamber, where ſhe was ſtarved to Death [F]. The Children of Germanicus, whom Antonia brought up in her Houſe, gave her no ſmall Trouble. She watched their Conduct; but her Vigilance ſerved only to make her an Eye-Witneſs of their enormous Crimes. One Day, ſhe ſurprized Caligula with his Siſter (g). This Wretch had not yet aſſumed the Toga Virilis; and yet was guilty of Capital Inceſt. Upon his Acceſſion to the Empire, he decreed all the Honours to his Grandmother Antonia, which the Senate had decreed Livia (h); but this was only a Start; for he ſhewed her no Reſpect afterwards, and even refuſed her a Private Audience. Theſe Affronts threw her into a Melancholy, which occaſioned her Death; and it was even ſaid, that he haſtened the (d) Joſephus Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 8. pag. 632. C.

(e) Plin. lib. 7. cap. 19.

(f) In eadem villa (apud Baulos in parte Baiana) Antonia Druſi, muræna quam diligebat inaures addidit: cujus propter famam nonnulli Baulos videre concurrerunt. Plin. lib. 5. cap. 55.

(g) Ex his (ſcriptis) Druſillam vitiaſſe virginem prætextatus adhuc creditur: atque etiam in concubitu ejus quondam deprehenſus ab avia Antonia, apud quam ſimul educabantur. Sueton. in Calig. cap. 24.

(h) Id. ib. cap. 15. See alſo Dion. lib. 59.

"old." Antonia's Chaſtity found Panegyriſts in Judea. Joſephus deſerves to be heard: he informs us, that Auguſtus ſollicited this Lady to marry again; but ſhe perſiſted in the contrary Reſolution, and preſerved an unſpotted Reputation in her Widow-hood. The Uncommonneſs of her Conducts was This. We ſee great Ladies enough, who live ſeparate from their Husbands, or do not marry a ſecond Time, though courted to it; but do they live without Reproach? Do they give no occaſion to cenſure their Conduct? Here lies the Difficulty, Hoc opus, hic labor eſt. Some ſcandalous Talkers will ſay, there are Thoſe, who practiſe the Maxim, which Luther is ſaid to have taught Husbands. Si nolit Uxor, ſaid he, veniat Ancilla. - - - - If your Wife won't, call your Maid. This is turning the Tables, and underſtanding Luther's Expreſſion wrong; which was, ſi nolit, ſi deſit maritus, veniat famulus. - - - If you have no Husband, or if he refuſes to comply, call your Servant. The Words of Joſephus are as follows: Τιμία δ' ἦν Ἀντωνία Τιβερίῳ εἰς τὰ πάντα συγγενείας τε ἀξιώματι, ἀρέτῃ τῆ σώφρονι· νέα γὰρ χηρεύειν παρέμεινεν γάμῳ τε ἀπεῖπεν τῷ πρὸς ἕτερον, καίπερ τὸν Σεβαστὸν κελεύσαντι τινὶ γαμεῖσθαι, καὶ λοιδωρεῖν ἀπηλλαγμένον διεσώσατο αὐτῆς τὸν βίον (7). Antonia was greatly reſpected by Tiberius, either becauſe ſhe was related to him, as having been the Wife of his Brother Druſus; or on account of her Continency; for, though ſhe was a very young Widow, ſhe refuſed to marry again, notwithſtanding the Importunity of Auguſtus; and in this State of Life ſhe preſerved an unblemiſhed Reputation.

(7) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 8. pag. 632. C.

[C] It was Antonia, who diſcovered Sejanus's Conſpiracy.] Tacitus was probably well informed of this Fact; but, unhappily, That Part of his Annals is loſt. If I am not miſtaken, Joſephus is the only Hiſtorian, who relates what ſhare Antonia had in diſcovering this Conſpiracy. He deſerves Credit, becauſe the Intimacy of Berenice, and That of her Son Agrippa, with This Lady, and the good Offices ſhe did Agrippa, made her known in Judea, and induced the Jewiſh Hiſtorian to inform himſelf exactly of what concerned her. Let us believe, then, on his Teſtimony, that Antonia was no ſooner informed of Sejanus's Plot, than ſhe wrote all the Circumſtances of it exactly to Tiberius, who was then in the Iſland of Caprea, whither ſhe diſpatched one of her moſt faithful Domeſtics with her Letter. This Prince's Conſideration for her increaſed greatly after ſo eminent a Piece of Service. Ὁ δὲ μαθὼν τόντε Σηιανὸν κλεῖνε καὶ τὰς συνεπιβάλας, τήντε Ἀντωνίαν καὶ πρὶν ἀξιολόγως ἄγων τιμιωτέραν τε ὑπελάμβανε κατὰ τοῖς πᾶσι πιθανήν (8). Tiberius, being informed of it, put to Death Sejanus and his Abettors, and had, for the future, a ſtill greater reliance on Antonia, whom before he greatly eſteemed. I ſhall ſhew in another Place (9), that Xiphilinus occaſionally obſerves, that Antonia informed Tiberius of certain Matters concerning Sejanus.

(8) Id. ibid.

(9) In the Article VESPASIAN, Remark [T].

[D] This diſconſolate Mother was not able to walk as a Mourner, when Germanicus's Funeral was ſolemnized.] Let us ſee how Tacitus relates the Matter, and the Picture he gives of her in his Reflexions. "Tiberius atque Auguſta publico abſtinuere, inferius "Majeſtate ſua rati ſi palam lamentarentur, an ne "omnium oculis vultum eorum ſcrutantibus falſi intel"ligerentur. Matrem Antoniam non apud auctores "rerum, non diurna actorum ſcriptura, reperio ullo "inſigni officio functam, cum ſuper Agrippinam, "& Druſum & Claudium, cæteri quoque conſan"guinei nominatim perſcripti ſint; ſeu valetudine "præpediebatur, ſeu victus luctu animus magnitu"dinem mali perferre vitu non toleravit. Facilius "crediderim Tiberio & Auguſta, qui domo non ex"cedebant, cohibitam, ut par mœror & matris exem"plo avia quoque & patruus attineri viderentur (10). "- - - - - - Tiberius and Auguſta would not appear "publickly, thinking it beneath their Majeſty to "mourn openly; or, perhaps, leaſt the Eyes of the "People, examining their Looks, ſhould diſcover their "Diſſimulation. I do not find, in any Hiſtorians, or "Journaliſts, that Antonia, the Mother, performed "any remarkable Part of the Solemnity, tho', beſides "Agrippina, Druſus, and Claudius, the reſt of his "Kindred are mentioned by Name; whether it were, "that Sickneſs prevented her, or that her Mind, over"come with Grief, could not ſupport the Greatneſs of her "Misfortune in public View. I rather believe ſhe was "hindered by Tiberius and Auguſta, who went not out of "their Houſe, that the Uncle and Grandmother might be "thought to be equally afflicted with the Mother."

(10) Tacit. Annal. lib. 3. ad ann. 773. i. e. A. D. 20.

[E] She was wont to call him Monſter, &c.] This Suetonius informs us of. "Mater Antonia portentum "eum hominis dictitabat, nec abſolutum à natura, "ſed tantum inchoatum! ac ſi quem ſocordiæ ar"gueret, ſtultiorem aiebat filio ſuo Claudio (11). "- - - - - - His Mother Antonia uſed to call him a "Monſter of a Man, not finiſhed by Nature, but on"ly begun! and, whenever ſhe would reproach any "one with Stupidity, ſhe was wont to ſay, he was a "greater Fool, than her Son Claudius." By this we may judge ſhe was a Woman of Wit and Senſe; for your ordinary Women ſeldom diſcover, that their Children are ſtupid; or, if they do, they are not overforward, to excuſe themſelves, and repreſent them as Changlings, or half-formed Productions.

(11) Suet. in Claudio, cap. 3.

[F] She ſhut her up in a Chamber, where ſhe was ſtarved to Death.] This is another Proof, that ſhe was a Woman of Spirit, who loved her Children

Digitized by Google

the Effects of her Melancholy by Poiſon [G]. He paid no Honours to the Deceaſed, nor aſſiſted at her Funeral (i). Probably the Temple of Antonia, which Pliny alone mentions, took it's Name from this Princeſs (H). She did not live to ſee the Misfortunes of her Grand-Daughter Antonia, whom Mr Moreri has mentioned, but not without a Miſtake [I].

(i) Sueton. in Caligula, cap. 23.

no longer, than they were an Honour to her; and preferred the Greatneſs of a Roman Soul to the tender Sentiments of Nature. There were two Traditions concerning the Death of Livilla; One, that Tiberius cauſed her to be put to Death; The other, that he pardoned her for the ſake of Antonia; but that Antonia condemned her to be ſtarved to Death (12).

(12) Dion. lib. 58.

[G] Caligula - - - - - haſtened the Effects of her Melancholy by Poiſon.] Suetonius and Dion agree in this Point. "Per iſtiuſmodi indignitates & tædia "cauſſa extitit mortis, dato tamen, ut quidam pu- "tant, & veneno (13). - - - - By theſe Affronts and "Vexations he was the Cauſe of her Death; not "without a Suſpicion of having haſtened it by Poiſon." Dion ſays nothing of Poiſon; he only tells us, that this inhuman Wretch, not being able to bear the Reproaches of his Grandmother, obliged her to put an end to her Life (14). I cannot find in what Year this illuſtrious Lady died; but, ſince it was in the Reign of Caligula, I think her Death may be placed in the Year of Rome 792. That of her Husband happened in the Year 744. We may give a near gueſs at her Age, when ſhe became a Widow, and how long ſhe lived; for ſhe muſt have been born in the Year of Rome 714; ſince her Mother Octavia, who married Marc Antony in 713 (15), was delivered of a Daughter, upon his return from Greece, the Year following (16). The Poem entituled Conſolatio ad Liviam Auguſtam de morte Druſi Neronis (17), repreſents Antonia as very diſconſolate, and gives her great Encomiums. We are there informed, as alſo in Valerius Maximus, of Druſus's Conſtancy, and that his laſt Words called upon his dear Wife:

(13) Sueton. in Calig. cap. 23.

(14) Dion. lib. 59. See alſo Sueton. in Calig. cap. 29.

(15) Calviſius ad ann. mundi 3910.

(16) Plut. in Antonio, pag. 930. E. See alſo pag. 931. D.

(17) It is printed with Ovid's Works, and many take it to be his.

Quid referam de te, digniſſima conjuge Druſo,
Atque eadem Druſi digna parente nurus?
Par bene compoſitum, juvenum fortiſſimus alter,
Altera tam forti mutua cura viro.
Fœmina tu princeps, tu filia Cæſaris: illi
Nec minor es magni conjuge viſa Jovis.
Tu conceſſus amor, tu ſolus & ultimus illi,
Tu requies feſſo grata laboris eras.
Te moriens per verba noviſſima queſtus abeſſe,
Et mota in nomen frigida lingua tuum.

How ſhall the Muſe in feeble Numbers raiſe
Her Voice, illuſtrious Lady, to Thy Praiſe?
A Conſort, equal to great Druſus's Worth!
A Daughter, worthy Her, who gave thy Druſus Birth!
United Hearts in Love! Conſenting Pair!
The braveſt Warriour HE, and SHE the loveliest Fair!
A Princeſs born, great Cæſar gave Thee Life;
To him not leſs, than Jove's imperial Wife.
The ſacred Tie conſign'd you to His Arms;
And His were All Antonia's blooming Charms.
From Fair to Fair He never learnt to rove;
Thine was his firſt, and Thine his lateſt, Love.
On thy ſoft Boſom he repos'd from Care,
Forgot each Toil and Labour of the War.
His deareſt Wife employ'd his lateſt Breath;
Thy Abſence was his only Pang in Death.
Dying, his falt'ring Tongue's uncertain Aim
Call'd on his Wife, and half pronounced Thy Name.

[H] Probably the Temple of Antonia, which Pliny alone mentions, took it's Name from This Princeſs.] He ſpeaks of it in the Catalogue of Apelles's Paintings; "Ejuſdem, ſays he, arbitrantur manu eſſe & "in Antoniæ templo Herculem averſum: ut, quod "eſt difficillimum, faciem ejus oſtendat verius pictu- "ra, quam promittat (18). - - - The Hercules averted, "in the Temple of Antonia, is thought to be by the "ſame Hand; that, what was moſt difficult, the "Picture might more truly repreſent his Face, than "promiſe it." A very learned Commentator (19) ſays, upon this Paſſage, That he does not know, whether this Temple belonged to the elder, or the younger Antonia, nor in what Part of the City it ſtood. "Cujus illud Antoniæ fuerit, majoris, minoriſve, "quove Urbis ſitu conditum fuerit, incompertum.

(18) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10. pag. 213.

(19) Father Hardouin.

"Utraque Antonii Triumviri filia, Major Germanici "& Claudii Cæſaris parens: Neronis avia. - - - - - "To which of the Antonia's, the elder, or the younger, "it was dedicated, and in what City it was built, "is uncertain. Both the Antonia's were Daughters "of the Triumvir; the elder, the Mother of Ger- "manicus and Claudius Cæſar: Grandmother of "Nero." This is to prefer the Opinion of Tacitus to That of Suetonius (20), and giving the elder to Druſus: but, on the other hand, I know not what to make of the Words, Neronis avia. I ſuſpect the Printer has, at leaſt, forgot the Epithet minor; for, by ſubſtituting this Word, we find, that Father Hardouin has ſaid ſomething of both the Antonia's; of the elder, that ſhe was the Mother of Germanicus, and the Emperor Claudius; and of the younger, that ſhe was Nero's Grandmother. If no ſuch Word be ſupplied, there is a manifeſt Error in this Place, ſince the Mother of Germanicus was not Nero's Grandmother. To have recourſe to the Adoption of Nero, by Claudius, would be an ill ſhift. In another place (21), this Commentator has preferred the Opinion of Suetonius to That of Tacitus.

(20) See, above, the Remark [A].

(21) In Plin. lib. 7. cap. 19. Tom. 2. pag. 38.

[I] Antonia, whom Mr Moreri has mentioned, but not without a Miſtake.] She was Daughter of the Emperor Claudius, by Ælia Petina; but born before her Father was Emperor. He married her firſt to Cneus Pompeius Magnus (22), and afterwards to Fauſtus Sylla. She ſaw both her Husbands die a violent Death. The former was put to Death, by order of the Emperor Claudius (23); the latter was maſſacred, at Marſeilles, by Ruffians, whom Nero had ſent thither for that purpoſe (24). She refuſed to marry this Prince, who would have taken her to Wife, after the Death of Pompey (25). Nero put her to Death, upon pretence, that ſhe was concerned in a Conſpiracy; I believe it was That of Piſo. An Hiſtorian pretends, that Piſo was to have carried Antonia into the Camp of the Prætorian Guards (26). Tacitus mentions it, without thinking it very probable (27). He thinks it unlikely, that Antonia ſhould have expoſed herſelf to ſo great Hazard, without the Hopes of becoming Piſo's Wife. Now there was no room to expect this; for Piſo was known to be a moſt uxorious Husband. But Tacitus does not ſtop here; he ſubjoins a Reſtriction, according to his Cuſtom; unleſs, ſays he, we ſuppoſe, that the Deſire of Rule in Women is, of all others, the moſt violent. By this he reſtores the Probability to Pliny's Account, which he had been labouring to deſtroy. Antonia might have believed, that Piſo would repudiate his dear Wife, to open a way to the Throne, by marrying the Daughter of the Emperor Claudius. "Interim Piſo apud ædem "Cereris opperiretur, unde cum præfectus Fenius & "cæteri accitum ferrent in caſtra, comitante Antonia "Claudii Cæſaris filia, ad eliciendum vulgi favorem, "quod C. Plinius memorat. Nobis quoquo modo tra- "ditum non occultare in animo fuit, quamvis abſur- "dum videretur, aut inani ſpei Antoniam nomen & "periculum commodaviſſe, aut Piſonem notum a- "more uxoris alii matrimonio ſe obſtrinxiſſe: niſi ſi "cupido dominandi cunctis affectibus flagrantior eſt "(28). —— In the mean time Piſo was to wait at "the Temple of Ceres, from whence the Præfect Fe- "nius, and the reſt, were to conduct him to the Camp, "accompanied by Antonia, the Daughter of Claudius "Cæſar, in order to gain the Vulgar to their Party, "as C. Plinius informs us. I reſolved not to ſtiffle "this Tradition, true or falſe; though I cannot but "think it abſurd, either that Antonia ſhould run the "hazard of lending her Name to ſo vain an Enterprize, "or that Piſo, who was remarkable for conjugal Fi- "delity, ſhould engage himſelf to marry another; un- "leſs the Deſire of Rule be the ſtrongeſt Affection of "the Mind." Moreri's Faults are, I. That Tacitus calls Antonia's ſecond Husband Cornelius Salvus, whereas he calls him Cornelius Sulla (29). II. That Antonia lived a long time a Widow. Her Husband Sylla was killed in the Year 815. Piſo's Conſpiracy broke out in 818. Poppæa died the ſame Year: It is

(22) He reſtored to him this Surname, which Caligula had taken from him. Dion. lib. 60.

(23) Sueton. in Claud. cap. 27.

(24) Tacit. Ann. lib. 14. cap. 57.

(25) Sueton. in Ner. cap. 35.

(26) Plinius, apud Tacitum Ann. lib. 15. cap. 53.

(27) Tacit. Annal. lib. 20. cap. 53.

(28) Tacit. Annal. lib. 15. cap. 53.

(29) Annal. lib. 13. cap. 23, (and not cap. 5. as in Moreri) and 47. Moreri is miſtaken in citing lib. 14. cap. 16. He ſhould have cited lib. 14. cap. 57. nor has he cited all the Places, which he ought to have cited.

Digitized by Google

is very probable, that Antonia was courted ſoon after; and that her Refuſal cauſed Nero to revive the Proceedings againſt her in particular. Be it as it will, her Widowhood could not be very long, ſince Nero, who cauſed her to be put to Death, died in the Year 821. In the third Place, the Authors, quoted by Mr Moreri, do not ſay, that Nero obliged Antonia to kill herſelf.

ANTONIA, Younger Siſter of the preceeding, as well by the Father, as the Mother's Side, will furniſh but a ſmall Article. I meet with nothing farther concerning her, than that ſhe was the Wife of Lucius Domitius Ænobarbus, and that this Marriage produced one Son and two Daughters; the Son, whoſe Name was Cneus Domitius, was Father to the Emperor Nero. We ſhall ſpeak of the Daughters under the Word DOMITIA; and ſhew, that Mr Moreri is miſtaken, in ſaying, that One of them married Galba.

ANTONIANO (Silvio) a Cardinal, and a learned Man, raiſed himſelf by his Merit from a very low Condition; He was of mean Birth, and his Parents ſo far from being able to breed him a Scholar, that they themſelves ſtood in need of the Charity of others. Some ſay he was illegitimate; but Joſeph Caſtalion, who wrote his Life, has proved the contrary (a). Be That as it will, he was born at Rome, in the Year 1540 [A]. He made ſo quick and ſurprizing a Progreſs in his Studies, that one can ſcarce credit the Accounts of it. At Ten Years of Age, he made Verſes [B] on any Subject, which was propoſed to him; which were ſo good, and ſo finely turn'd, tho' made extemporè, that other Wits could not have compoſed the like without much Time and Pains. The Trial was one day made at the Cardinal of Piſa's Table, at an Entertainment, which he gave to ſeveral other Cardinals. Alexander Farneſe, taking a Noſegay, gave it to the young Scholar, bidding him preſent it to That Perſon of the Company, who ſhould be the next Pope. The Youth preſented it to the Cardinal de Medicis, and ſpoke his Elogy in Verſe. This Cardinal, who was afterwards Pope Pius IV, fancied the Company play'd upon him, and that the Poetry had been prepared before-hand, with much Art, with a Deſign of making a Jeſt of him; upon which he ſeemed to take it amiſs; but they ſolemnly proteſted to him, that it was made extemporè, and deſired he would try the Boy himſelf on any other Subject: He did ſo, and was convinced of the extraordinary Abilities of the Youth; who enlarged, off-hand, on a Subject, which was propoſed to him, in very elegant Verſe [C]. The Duke of Ferrara, coming to Rome, to congratulate Marcellus II, on his Elevation to the Pontificat, was ſo charmed with Antoniano's Wit, that he carried him with him to Ferrara [D], where he appointed him excellent Maſters to inſtruct him in all the Sciences. He was taken from thence by Pope Pius IV; who, remembring the Adventure of the Noſe-gay, and being now in St Peter's Chair, enquired what was become of the young Poet. Finding where he was,

(a) Scripſit Sylvii Card. Antoniani vitam, cuem tum rationibus tum publicarum tabularum teſtimoniis ab eorum calumniis vindicare conatus eſt, qui illum à parente minus juſta uxore genitum aſſerebant. Nicius Erythraus. Pinacoth I. pag. 167.

[A] He was born at Rome, in the Year 1540.] Nicius Erythræus makes him to be born at Rome: Romæ, humili loco — ortus (1); but Toppi makes him a Native of Caſtelli, in the Abruzzo, and gives us an Inſcription, made by Mutius Panza, in which he is ſaid to be Caſtellorum oppido oriundus (2). This may only ſignify, that his Father was of this Place. However it be, I collect from Father Oldoïni (3), that he was born in the Year 1540, becauſe he tells us, that he died, Auguſt 16, 1603. Nicius Erythræus does not ſet down the Year of the Century, in which he died, but only, that he died in his grand Climacteric. Monſ. de la Rochepozaï, in his Nomenclator Cardinalium, places his Death on the ſixteenth of Auguſt, 1604. I have choſen to follow Father Oldoïni.

(1) N. Erythr. Pinac. I.

(2) Toppi, Biblioth. Napolet. pag. 233.

(3) Oldoini Athen. Roman. pag. 625.

[B] At ten Years of age he made Verſes.] Father Strada, who, with much Politeneſs, has inſerted the Relation of this Adventure in one of his Orations, ſays, that Antoniano was not quite twelve Years of Age (4).

(4) Fam. Strada, Prolus. Acad. 3. fin. 2.

[C] Who enlarged, off-hand, on a Subject, which was propoſed to him, in very elegant Verſe.] Father Strada informs us, that, while the Cardinal de Medicis was conſidering what Subject he ſhould propoſe, the Clock ſtruck; upon which he deſired him to make Verſes on a Clock. The Author has preſerved thoſe, which he ſuppoſes Antoniano made on the Spot; and adds, that the Cardinal of Trent preſented him with a Chain.

[D] The Duke — carried him with him to Ferrara.] Antoniano ſpoke ſome Orations there, which have been printed (5), with thoſe, which he pronounced at Rome; this inclines me to believe, that he was Profeſſor at Ferrara. Nicius Erythræus ſays only, that Antoniano taught the Sciences there; Why does he not tell us which they were? The fear of being too tedious is no juſt Reaſon for ſuppreſſing ſuch Particulars. I have not yet had an Opportunity of conſulting the Life of this Cardinal, compoſed by Joſeph Caſtalio; which, no doubt, informs us upon what account he was at Ferrara, and in what Year he died, with many other Particulars. Much leſs can I procure a Book, which Mr Conrart ſent to Mr de Balzac. The Subject was Italian Diſcourſes of the Philoſophical Orator (6). Mr de Balzac deſpiſed them: "I allow, ſays he (7), that the Elogium of Cardinal "Doſſat, and Cardinal Silvio Antoniano are not amiſs, "and that the Author has happily enough imitated "the Parallels of Plutarch's Lives. His long Inve- "ctive againſt Nobility is the higheſt ſtrain of his "Wit: I have obſerved ſeveral fine Strokes in it, "and ſomething of his own Invention, beſides what "he has borrowed from others, and particularly from "Caius Marius's Speech in the Jugurthine War. "However, I am of Opinion, that, without injuring "his Subject, he might have ſhortened his Digreſ- "ſion. This Common-place Topic, which he has "ſpun out to ſuch a length, and which he has ſo "artfully, and ſo pompouſly diſplayed, ought only "to have been touched upon by the Bye. Beſides, "that he made himſelf powerful and dangerous Ene- "mies by it. For it muſt needs be a great Offence "to the polite World, to prove, that it is no Crime "to be the Son of an Artiſt, or Ruſtic."

"Jerom Ruſcelli, in the ſeventh Chapter of his "Rimario, ſpeaks Wonders of the Talent of our Sil- "vio Antoniano, whom, by miſtake, he calls Antonio, "for extempore Poetry. He mentions a Trial, which "was made of it at Venice, in the Preſence of the "Queen of Poland *, Cardinal Trivulcio, and the "Cardinal of Ausburgh. Antoniano was not then "above Sixteen. The Princes of Eſte detained him "at Ferrara, where he read public Lectures, as the "ſame Ruſcelli informs us, in the place quoted." I have this from Mr de la Monnoie."

(5) By the Care of Joſeph Caſtalio, in 1610.

(6) See the Diſſertations at the end of the Chriſtian Socrates, pag. 10.

(7) Ibid. 47.

* Bonna Sforza, who in 1555, quitted Poland to retire to Bari in Italy.

[E] What

Digitized by Google

was, he sent for him to Rome, and gave him an honourable Post in his Palace. He afterwards made him Professor of Humanity in the Roman College. Antoniano exercised This Office with so much Reputation, that, on the Day, when he began to explain the Oration pro Marco Marcello, he had not only a great Croud of People for his Auditors, but likewise Twenty five Cardinals. He afterwards became Rector of the same College; and, upon the Death of Pius IV, the Spirit of Devotion seizing him, he followed Philip de Neri, and accepted of the Office of Secretary to the Sacred College, offered him by Pius V. He exercised this Employ Twenty five Years, and obtained by it the Reputation of an honest and able Officer. He refused the Bishopric, which Gregory XIV would have given him, but not the Post of Secretary to the Briefs, which was offered him by Clement VIII, who made him also his Chamberlain, and afterward Cardinal. It is reported, that Cardinal Alexander de Montalto, who had behaved a little haughtily towards Antoniano, seeing him promoted to the Purple, said, that, for the future, he would never despise a Man in a Cassock and little Band, how low an Object soever he might seem, since, possibly, the Person, whom he had despised, might become not only his Equal, but even his Master. Antoniano killed himself by dint of Study; he spent whole Nights in it; which brought a Distemper upon him, of which he died, in the Sixty third Year of his Age. He wrote with so much Ease, that he had never occasion to make any Rasure; and it is said, that he preserved his Virginity all his Life (b). See, in one of the Remarks, what relates to his Works [E].

(b) Ex Iano Nicio Erythræo, Pinacoth. 1. pag. 36.

Cardinal Bentivoglio will furnish me with a large Supplement to this Article [F]. I find, that Antoniano was one of the Disputants on the Question concerning the Precedency of Patriarchs [G].

[E] What relates to his Works.] We have of his, De Christiana puerorum educatione —— Dissertatio de obscuritate Solis in morte Christi —— De Successione Apostolica —— De Stylo Ecclesiastico, seu de conscribenda Ecclesiastica historia —— De Primatu S. Petri —— Lucubrationes in Rhetoricam Aristotelis & in Orationes Ciceronis. —— i. e. Of the Christian Education of Youth —— A Dissertation on the Darkness of the Sun at the Crucifixion —— Of Apostolical Succession —— Of the Ecclesiastical Style, or of writing Ecclesiastical History —— Of the Primacy of St Peter —— Lucubrations on Aristotle's Rhetoric, and Cicero's Orations. —— Several pieces of Verses, some Sermons, Notes and Prefaces on the Romance of Achilles Statius, and on the Terence of Gabriel Faernus (8), several Letters, &c. He is said to have had a hand in the Catechism of the Council of Trent (9). As for his Letters, they are Apostolical Briefs, which he composed while he was Secretary; I shall take notice of them in the following Remark. They are reckoned among the Letters, which the Writers of Anecdotes should make their Extracts from (10). The other Sources are the Letters of the Cardinals Bembo and Sadolet, Those of Peter Martyr, &c. Note, that his Book De Christiana puerorum educatione, composed in Italian, at the Request of Cardinal Charles Borromeo, was printed at Verona, by the Care of Augustin Valerio, Bishop of the Place, and Cardinal (11).

(8) Nomenclat. Cardinal pag. 178.

(9) See Colomies Bibl. choisi. pag. 36.

(10) Varillas's Preface to the Anecdotes of Florence.

(11) Possevin. Apparat. Sacr. Tom. 2. pag. 405. 443.

[F] Cardinal Bentivoglio will furnish me with a large Supplement to this Article.] He says, it was still uncertain, whether Antoniano was born at Rome; but that there was no doubt of his having been educated there from his Infancy (12). He was placed, by Pope Pius IV, in the Service of Cardinal Borromeo, That Pope's Nephew; he was This Cardinal's Secretary for Latin Dispatches; He attended him to Milan, and returned with him to Rome. He was made Secretary of the Sacred College; and discharged the Duties of That Post to Admiration. He was admitted to the strictest Intimacy with Clement VIII; whose Briefs he composed with so much Eloquence, that That Pope had no reason to envy Leo X. the Sadolet's and the Bembo's. He inserted Passages of Scripture in them with great Judgment; for which he was blamed by too rigid a Censor; who said, that it made several of the Pope's Letters savour more of a Monastery, than of the Court of Rome, and represented rather the Person of a Preacher, than that of a Sovereing Pontiff. Che percio alcuni di loro, sappessero più di Claustro regolare, che di corte Ecclesiastica, è representassero quasi la persona d'un predicatore, che un Pontifice (13). He laughed at this Criticism, and answered, That, if he took the Matter right, there were not too many Scripture-Phrases in the Letters, which he composed; that, on the contrary, he thought they were not sufficiently filled with them, considering the Quality of the Person, who spake in them, which was That of a Sovereign Pastor of the Church; considering farther, likewise, that they were not prophane Letters, in which a Luxuriancy of Thought and Expression, after the Style of temporal Sovereigns, ought to reign. Anzi che a lui pareva, che più tosto mancassaro in questa parte, havuto riguardo all' essere i Brevi Apostolici scritti dal supremo Pastor della Chiesa, e non lettere profane, che havessero a lussu reggiare con sensi, & parole tratte dalle Secretario de Principi temporali (14). He adds, that the Briefs of Sadolet, and Those of Bembo, did not keep up the decorum, which the Pontifical Dignity required; and that, in some of his Briefs, Bembo, by an Affectation of Latinity, savours, not only of Prophaneness, and a worldly Spirit, but even of Paganism. Antoniano was, in his last Sickness, visited by Clement VIII, and received from him the Apostolical Benediction. He was naturally modest, of a pleasant Conversation, and a Prudence, which the Court-Spirit had not vitiated (15). He assisted in several Conclaves, and discoursed concerning them with singular Satisfaction; not without making solid Reflexions on the Vanity of human Things. Men, said he, perplex themselves with a thousand Cares, to compass their Ends, but the Providence of God almost always discovers it's Ascendant. Per occasione d'essere stato Secretario del Sacro Collegio tant'anni, s'era trovato egli in molti conclavi, e di quei successi discorreva con gusto particolare, e monstrava specialemente in quanti modi vi si affaticasse l'industria humana, ed in quanti vi apparisse, e vi prevalisse ordinariamente la providenza Divina (16). Without doubt he meant to say, that the best concerted Intrigues, and those, which have exercised the Thoughts most, are frustrated, in Conclaves, by unforeseen Accidents. If by this he would insinuate, that the secret Springs of Providence are more particularly discoverable in Those Assemblies, where Popes are elected, he was mistaken; for we see, that, in all the Courts of the World, the Success of the most prudent Politics depends upon I know not what fortuitous Incidents; which may convince us of the Truth of the Proverb, Man proposes, but God disposes.

(12) Bentivoglio, Memorie overo diario, capitolo 7. pag. 103. Edit. Amstel. 1648.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 111.

(14) Id. ibi. pag. 112.

(15) Id ib. pag. 113.

(16) Id. ib. pag 157.

[G] Was one of the Disputants in the Question concerning the Precedency of Patriarchs.] Read this Passage, taken from a Letter, which le Paranda wrote to Rome, the eleventh of December, 1589. "La "causa della precedenza Patriarcale non è ancor "venuta à fine, & si tratta tuttavia nella Congre- "gatione delle Ceremonie. Si scrive, & le scritture "vanno per manus, & si come dissi già il parer della "Congregatione è contra la pretenza de gli Arcives- "covi, & de Patriarchi. Solamente l'Antoniano "sostien questa parte, & scrive, & stà saldo. Sarà "un brau' huomo, se farà tanto che basti, havendo "da contrastar con Monsignor Illustrissimo Gosual- "do (17).

Digitized by Google

(17) Lettere de Gio. Franceſco Peranda, prima parte, pag. 224. Edit. Venet. 1604.

" do (17). - - - - - The Queſtion concerning the Pre-
" cedency of Patriarchs is not yet determined, and con-
" tinues to be diſcuſſed in the Congregation of Cere- " mony. They write, and their Works are in every " one's Hands. And they ſay the Opinion of the Con-
" gregation is againſt the Pretenſions of the Arch-
" biſhops and Patriarchs. Antoniano alone under-
" takes their Defence, and writes, and makes a Stand.
" He will be a brave Man, if he can ſupport his
" Cauſe againſt the moſt illuſtrious Lord Goſual-
" do."

ANTONIO (NICOLAS) Knight of the Order of St James, and Canon of Seville, has done great Honour to the Spaniſh Nation by the Bibliotheque of Spaniſh Writers, which he publiſhed at Rome, in two Volumes, in Folio, in the Year 1672. It is a very good Work in it's kind [A]. And, perhaps, no One has ſucceeded better in Collections of this kind, than Don Nicolas Antonio. He was born at Seville, in the Year 1617, of a Father, whom King Philip IV made Preſident of the Admiralty, eſtabliſhed in That City in the Year 1626. Having ſtudied School-Learning, Philoſophy, and Theology, in his own Country, he went to ſtudy the Law at Salamanca, and applied himſelf chiefly to the Lectures of Franciſco Ramos del Manzano, who was afterwards One of the King's Counſellors, and Preceptor to Charles II. We cannot form a better Judgment of the Progreſs he made, than from the many Projects he had conceived for the Advancement of Literature, and the manner, in which he executed part of them, notwithſtanding the unavoidable interruption of Affairs, in an Employment, which he had at Rome; being Agent-General for the King, his Maſter, and, beſides, concerned in Special Commiſſions, from the Inquiſition of Spain, the Vice-Roys of Naples and Sicily, and the Governour of Milan, to negotiate their Affairs at the Court of Rome. The Plan of the Bibliotheque of the Spaniſh Writers conſiſts of two Parts. The firſt comprehends all the Authors of That Nation, who lived before the End of the XVth Century; the other Thoſe, who lived after the End of That Century. This latter Part, being ready ſooner than the firſt, was publiſhed before it. It appeared at Rome, as I have already ſaid, in two Volumes in Folio, in the Year 1672. I cannot tell whether the Author had leiſure enough to put the laſt Hand to the other Part, and to a ſecond Deſign, no leſs laborious. He was employ'd upon a Work under the following Title; Trophæum Hiſtorico-Eccleſiaſticum Deo veritati erectum, ex manubiis Pſeudo-Hiſtoricorum, qui Flavii Lucii Dextri, M. Maximi, Helecæ, Braulionis, Luitprandi, & Juliani nomine circumferuntur; hoc eſt, vindiciæ veræ atque dudum notæ Hiſpanarum rerum Hiſtoriæ, Germanarum noſtræ gentis laudum, non ex Germano-Fuldenſibus Chronicis, emendicatarum in libertatem & puritatem plena Aſſertio.——An Hiſtorico-Eccleſiaſtical Trophy erected to the God of Truth from the Spoils of the Pſeudo-Hiſtorians, handed about under the Names of Flavius Lucius Dexter, M. Maximus, Helecas, Braulio, Luitprand, and Julian; that is, The True and Well-known Hiſtory of the Spaniſh Affairs vindicated, and the Genuine Virtues of our People, not meanly borrowed from the German Chronicles of Fuld, but reſtored to their Liberty and Purity. He had reaſon to ſay, that it was not only a Work of vaſt Extent, but attended likewiſe with dangerous Conſequences (a). For where are Thoſe, who are willing to be undeceived as to Fables, which for a long time have flattered the Vanity of their Nation? To what do not they expoſe themſelves, who venture to ſtem the Torrent of a Tradition equally fabulous and glorious (b)? Every one knows the Clamour of the Provençals upon Mr de Launoi's attempting to cure them of their Errors in relation to Mary Magdalen and Lazarus. Perhaps Don Nicolas Antonio did not preſume to meddle with certain pious Fables [B], as being very ſenſible of the Obſtinacy of his Countrymen on this Head, and the untractable Temper of the Inquiſition. He inſinuates,

(a) Immenſæ molis, ac forſan invidæ, opus.

(b) See the Remark [D], at the end.

A THOUGHT on the Indexes of Books.

(1) See the advantageous Character given of it by Mr Baillet, Tom. 2. of his Jugemens des Sçavans, n. 128. The Journal des Sçavans, of July 6, 1676, gives us a wretched Article on this excellent Work.

[A] The Bibliotheque of Spaniſh Writers - - - - - is a very good Book in it's kind (1).] I have quoted Mr Baillet, who has given a Detail of his Excellencies. He has, not without Reaſon, praiſed the very Tables of the Book; for they are in a very good Method, and very uſeful. The Author has wrote a ſhort Preface to it, which ſhews his good Taſte and Judgment. He there introduces the Saying of a Spaniſh Writer, " Indicem libri ab Autore, librum " ipſum à quovis alio conficiendum eſſe. - - - - The " Index of a Book ſhould be the Author's own; the " Book itſelf may be wrote by any one elſe." The contrary is practiſed at preſent; Authors leave the trouble of compoſing Alphabetical Tables to others; and it muſt be owned, that they, who are not laborious, and whoſe Talent lies in a great Warmth of Imagination, are in the right to let others compoſe the Indexes of their Works; but a Man of Judgment, and Labour, will ſucceed, in making Tables to his own Writings, much better than a Stranger. There are many Pieces of good Advice to be given in regard to the Compoſition of theſe Tables; nor are they miſtaken, who look upon them as the Soul of Books.

[B] He did not preſume to meddle with certain pious Fables.] Perhaps I am miſtaken; for Mr Baillet ſpeaks thus of them; " His Criticiſm is very " juſt and ſolid in ſeveral Places; particularly in what " relates to the fabulous Traditions of the firſt Catechiſts, who planted the Faith in Spain, and of " thoſe falſe Hiſtorians, whom Impoſture brought " forth, for the Deluſion of the Spaniards, and on " whom our Author has promiſed a particular Cri- " ticiſm (2)." This would have made me more peremptory, had I not found another Remark ſubjoined to theſe Words of Mr Baillet; " However, " there is room to ſuſpect him of too much Indulgence " for certain vulgar Opinions, which are exploded " by Critics of the beſt Taſte." Be this as it will, there is no doubt but he would have deſtroyed the Authority of all the ſuppoſed Authors mentioned in his Title (3); nor would he have been the firſt, who had employed his Pen to this Purpoſe; for read the following Extract from ſome Sheets of the Abbot de la Roque; " For an Age paſt, they " have had the boldneſs to write (ſpeaking of Spain) " and publiſh falſe Chronicles, to impoſe upon the " Credulity of the Learned, or the Simple; which, " far from diminiſhing, increaſes the Glory of the " Marquis d'Agropoli, who has ſo juſtly ridiculed " and exploded Dexter, the oldeſt of theſe falſe " Chroniclers, in his Diſſertationes Eccleſiaſticas por " el honor de los antiquos tutelares contra las ficcio- " nes modernas, printed at Sarragoſſa in 1677 (4).

(2) Baillet, Jugem. des Sçavans, Tom. 2. pag. 134.

(3) See the Remark [D], at the end.

(4) Journ. des Sçavans, of the 13th of January, 1687. pag. 11. See the end of the Remark [D].

[C] The

Digitized by Google

insinuates, that he had formed the Design of several other Works. But let us not omit That, which he published at Antwerp, in the Year 1659, De Exilio, sive de Pœna Exilii Exulumque Conditione & Juribus; in folio (c).——Of Banishment, or of the Punishment of Exile, and the Condition and Rights of the Exiled, in Folio.

(c) Taken from his Bibliotheca Hispanica, Tom. 2. pag. 118, 119.

Thus much I had said of Don Nicolas Antonio, in the first Edition. Since That Time, I have been informed, that, being returned to Seville, after having studied the Law at Salamanca, he shut himself up in the Royal Monastery of Benedictines, where he laboured several Years on the Spanish Bibliotheque, and, for that purpose, made use of the Books of Benedictus de la Serna, who was, at that time, Abbot of It, and Dean of the Faculty of Theology of Salamanca; That, in the Year 1659, he was sent to Rome by King Philip IV, to take care of the Affairs of the Kingdom, as Agent-General (d): That the Cardinal of Arragon, Ambassador at Rome, obtained for him, of Pope Alexander VII, a Canonship in the Church of Seville, the Revenue whereof he employed in Alms and Books; That he collected above Thirty thousand Volumes with it; insomuch that his Library fell short of none, but the Vatican; That, by this Assistance, together with continual Labour, and indefatigable Application, he finished his Bibliotheque of Spain in four Volumes in Folio (e)——That, after he had caused the two first Volumes to be printed, he was recalled to Madrid by King Charles II, to take on him the Office of Counsellor of the Crusado, which he discharged with great Integrity till his Death, which happened in 1684.——That he left no other Estate, besides the vast Library, which he had transported from Rome to Madrid; on the contrary, that his Executorship was clogged with Debts; that his two Brothers, who are Canons of Salamanca, and his two Nephews, were not able to get his Bibliotheque of Spain printed, but sent it to Monsieur the Cardinal d'Aguirre, who was so generous as to be at the Expence of the Impression himself [C], and committed the Care of it to Monsieur Marti, his Library-Keeper, who added some Notes in his Eminency's Name. I have just seen a little Book, in which I find, that the Jesuits have complained of this Work of Don Nicholas Antonio [D].

(d) Journ. des Sçavans, of the tenth of June, 1697, pag. 420. Edit. Holl.

(e) Ib. pag. 421, 422.

[C] The Cardinal d'Aguirre, ----- was so generous, as to be at the Expence of the Impression himself.] He was the Author's old Friend, and had studied with him in the University of Salamanca. The Republic of Letters is extreamly obliged to him for the Expence he was at in printing such a Book, which contains two Volumes in Folio. They were printed at Rome, and appeared in 1696. You will find good Extracts from them in the Journal de Sçavans (5), and in That of Leipsic (6). The Title of the Work is This: "Bibliotheca Hispana vetus, sive Hispanorum qui usquam unquamve scripto aliquid consignaverunt, Notitia, complectens scriptores omnes qui ab Octaviani Augusti Imperio usque ad annum M D floruerunt. Auctore Nicolao Antonio, Hispalensi Jurisconsulto, Ordinis S. Jacobi Equite, Patriæ Ecclesiæ Canonico, regiorum negotiorum in Urbe & Romanâ curiâ Procuratore generali, demum Matriti consiliario Regio. Opus Posthumum. Nunc primum prodit jussu & expensis Eminentissimi & Reverendissimi Domini D. Josephi Saenz Cardinalis de Aguirre. ----- A Dictionary of ancient Spanish Authors, or Memoirs of all those in Spain, who have ever, or any where, committed any Thing to writing; comprehending all the Writers, who have flourished from the Reign of Octavian Augustus down to the Year M D. By Nicolas Antonio, Civilian of Salamanca, and Knight of the Order of St James; Canon of Seville, Agent-General for the King and the Inquisition, and lastly the King's Counsellor at Madrid. A Posthumous Work; now first published by Order, and at the Expence, of the most Eminent and Reverend Lord, D. Joseph Saenz, Cardinal of Aguirre."

(5) Of the Months of June and July, 1697.

(6) Acta Erudit. Lipsi. Mens. Jun. & Jul. 1697.

[D] The Jesuits have complained of this Work of Don Nicolas Antonio] A Pamphlet (7) entituled Calumnia convicta, seu Epistola familiaris Cleandri ad clarissimum & eruditissimum virum Evaristum, super Memoriali nuper porrecto, Hispano idiomate, ad Regem Catholicum à Patre Joanne de Palazol Soc. Jesu, nomine & jussu Thyrsi Gonzales ejusdem Soc. Generalis Præpositi. ----- Calumny convicted; or a familiar Epistle from Cleander to the most famous and learned Evaristus, concerning a Memorial, in Spanish, lately presented to the Catholic King, by Father John de Palazol, a Jesuit, by Order of Thyrsus Gonzales, General of the Order; dated from Dilingen, the Twenty fifth of June 1698, informs me, that the Jesuits have represented to the King of Spain, that one of the five Propositions of Jansenius has been recommended as Catholic in the Work of Don Nicolas Antonio. They pretend to be unwilling to attack the Cardinal d'Aguirre, who was at the Expence of printing this Work; but it is easy to see that they attack him indirectly. They suppose, that some Jansenist has, in this Place, corrupted the Text of Antonio. The whole Affair is This: Our Author acknowledges this Proposition of Prudentius, Bishop of Troyes, for Catholic; "That the Blood of Jesus Christ was shed "for all Believers; but not for those, who never have "believed; who do not now believe; and who never "will believe." Quod sanguis Christi effusus sit pro omnibus credentibus, sed non pro iis qui nunquam crediderunt, nec credunt, nec credituri sunt. The Author of the Pamphlet shews, that this Proposition might have been considered as Catholic; and that therefore there was no manner of Reason to suspect the Faith of Don Nicolas Antonio, or That of the Cardinal d'Aguirre. Note, that his Eminence has declared boldly against the looser Casuists (8); and that this is supposed to be the Reason of the ill Offices the Jesuits endeavour to do him.

(7) Of twenty seven Pages in 12mo.

(8) See the several Extracts from his Books, in the Memorial of a Jansenist, which I shall cite in the Article BELLARMIN, Remark [H].

It is probable, this will not be the only Complaint brought to the Tribunals against these two Volumes of the Bibliotheque of Spain. I have not yet seen them, and I question whether there be a Copy of them in the United Provinces (9); but I am assured, that the Author has declared loudly against the pretended Luitprand, and against Higuera, who brought him to light; and has fallen foul on Aubert of Seville, on the Chronicles of Dexter, on Maximus, on Julian, &c. A Spanish Jesuit (10) remarks this, in a Work he has published, in favour of his Brethren, at Antwerp, Compilers of the Acta Sanctorum. It is there I have met with some Passages of Don Nicolas Antonio on this Subject. But, since the Marquis d'Agropoli, Grandee of Spain by a double Title, could not combat these fabulous Historians, without exposing himself to a vexatious Information before the Inquisition (11), as a Writer, who betrayed the Honour of his Country; I cannot suppose the Monks of That Country will ever suffer the Memory of our Nicolas Antonio to rest.

(9) I write this the 8th of February, 1699.

(10) Anton. Xaramilius, in Apologia pro Veritate This Work, translated out of Spanish into Latin, by the Jesuit Pet. Cant, was printed at Antwerp, An. 1698.

(11) See the Article VESPASIAN, Remark [D].

APAFI (Michael) Prince of Transylvania, was promoted to this Principality in the Year 1661, without his thinking of it. Ali Bassa, having forced Kimin Janos to quit Transylvania, was apprehensive he should not be able to hinder him from returning, and making his Party superior by the help of the Imperial Troops. He resolved, therefore, to set up a Prince in opposition to him, who should be elected by the States of the Country, under the Protection of the Porte. To this end, he demanded of the Deputies of the Towns of Tranſylvania, whether there were not ſome great Tranſylvanian Lord, in the Towns, which had ſubmitted to his Arms, worthy of the Principality (a)? They named to him Michael Apafi, who kept himſelf at that time in his Caſtle of Ebeſtfalve, and had not yet forgot the long Troubles he had ſuffered among the Tartars, from whence he was but lately releaſed, by paying a great Ranſom. Ali ſent for him, without diſcovering his Deſign. Apafi believed it was to put him to Death [A], but durſt not refuſe to go with the Guard, which was ſent for him. His Wife, who was near the time of her Lying-in, was in a mortal Fright, and gave him over for loſt. Before he had paſſed his own Eſtate, News was brought him, that his Wife was happily delivered of a Son; he knew not whether he ought to rejoice or grieve, at the News: but the Turks, who guarded him, and no doubt knew Ali Baſſa's Intentions better than he, told him, It preſaged a happy Principality to him. Ali received him very honourably, and a few Days after procured him to be elected Prince of Tranſylvania. He managed it ſo, that the Election appeared to be legal; for he cauſed as many of the Nobility of Tranſylvania to come into his Army, as he could; and told them he wiſhed that They, together with the Deputies of the Cities, would elect a Prince; and promiſed, in the Sultan's Name, to confer the Enſigns of the Principality upon whomſoever they ſhould elect (b). Thus Michael Apafi became Prince of Tranſylvania, without any Intrigues, on his part, or Expectation of it [B]. He was of Noble Birth [C] indeed, but of a quiet Diſpoſition; beſides that, his long Impriſonment in Crim-Tartary had inſpired him with great Humility. Kimin Janos, who expected Wonders from his Conjunction with the Imperialiſts, commanded by the Count Montecuculi, found himſelf diſappointed; for, as ſoon as Montecuculi was informed of the Condition of the Ottoman Forces, he thought it more convenient to return to Hungary, than hazard a Battle. This Retreat gave the Turks an opportunity of making great Ravages, and obtaining a Victory in Tranſylvania, which coſt Kimin Janos his Life, in January 1662 [D]. His

Digitized by Google

(a) Joannes Betlenius, Rerum Tranſylvaniæ, lib. 3. pag. 248.

(b) Ex eodem Betleno, pag. 248, 249.

[A] Apafi believ'd it was to put him to Death.] I give more Credit to this, than to Thoſe, who ſay he was an ambitious Man. I quote an Author, who was well informed; for he lived at that Time, and had Employments in Tranſylvania, which gave him Opportunities of knowing the bottom of all Tranſactions (1). Now he relates very ingenuouſly, that Apafi was made Prince of Tranſylvania, without contributing any thing to it himſelf; and affirms, that he was not an ambitious Man. However, it is a very pardonable Miſtake to ſay, that Apafi had certain Qualities, which rendred him worthy of a Principality, and an AMBITION withal proportionable to the GREATNESS of his Soul (2): For, generally, thoſe who are raiſed to Elective Principalities, in the midſt of Troubles, ſtirred up by their Competitors, are Men of very aſpiring Minds. A French Author, who has publiſhed an Hiſtory of the Troubles in Hungary, is far from repreſenting Michael Apafi as a Prince, who endeavoured to aggrandize himſelf; for, when he ſpeaks of the Reſolution taken by the Hungarian Proteſtants, to confederate themſelves with thoſe of Tranſylvania, to maintain their Liberty of Conſcience by the Sword; he adds theſe Words, "The Prin-" ceſs, who was a Woman of a turbulent Spirit, and " extreamly attached to the Errors of Calvin, ſolli-" cited this Confederacy very powerfully; whilſt her " more peaceable Husband employed himſelf only in " Hunting, and in the Converſation of the Learn-" ed (3)"

(1) The Titles, which he gives himſelf, at the beginning of his Hiſtory of Tranſylvania, printed at Amſterdam, 1664, in 12mo, are theſe. Joannes Betlenius, Comes Comitatus Albenſis, regni Tranſylvaniæ Conſiliarius, Cancellarius, ac ſedis Siculicalis Udvarhely Capitaneus ſupremus, &c.

(2) Ricaut's Hiſtory of Mahomet IV. pag. 292.

(3) Hiſtory of the Troubles of Hungary, Book 2. An. 1668, pag. 75, of the Edition of Amſterdam, 1686.

[B] Thus Michael Apafi became Prince of Tranſylvania, without any Intrigues, on his Part, or Expectation of it.] Of this I have already ſpoken in the foregoing Remark. It remains only, that I point out certain Authors, who ſeem not to have been well informed of the manner of his Election. One of them ſpeaks thus; "In the beginning of the Year " 1663, Kimin Janos was defeated, and loſt his " Life. ----- The Turks, finding no more Reſi-" ſtance, made themſelves Maſters of all Tranſylvania, " except the Places poſſeſſed by the Imperialiſts. Mi-" chael Apafi, who had been elected in the Room " of Kimin Janos, deſired a Peace with the Turks; " and, accordingly, Hali Baſſa entered into a Trea-" ty with the Baron de Grez (4)." This Diſcourſe plainly imports, I. That Apafi was at War with the Turks, as ſoon as he was placed on the Throne of Tranſylvania. II. That he was not elected before the Death of Kimin Janos, and conſequently not 'till the Year 1663. All This is falſe. He was elected in the Year 1661, during the Life of Kimin Janos, and at the Recommendation of Ali Baſſa; and Kimin Janos was killed in the Month of January 1662. The Author of the Life of Count Tekeli relates (5), by Hear-ſay only, that Michael Apafi was raiſed, by the Turks, to the Principality of Tranſylvania, on his promiſing a larger Tribute. Away with this Promiſe to the ſame Place with His other Competitors, who addreſſed themſelves to the Grand Signior, as the miſinformed Mr Moreri tells us.

(4) Ib. lib. 1. pag. 41.

(5) Pag. 18. of the Edition of 1694.

[C] He was of noble Birth.] Let us hear the Author, whom I have already cited more than once. " Hic (Michael Apafi) erat ex antiquiſſima magnatum " Familia ortus, pius, ſed tam natura, quam propter " diuturnas Carceris Crimenſis moleſtias, plus juſto de-" miſſus ac lenis, ut adepto etiam Principatu nimiæ à " pleriſque lenitatis inſimularetur (6). - - - This Prince " (Michael Apafi) was of a noble and ancient Family; a " pious Man, but, both by Nature, and from the long " Troubles of his Impriſonment in Crim-Tartary, of " too humble and mild a Diſpoſition; inſomuch, that, " even after he was raiſed to the Principality, he " was reproached by ſome with too much Lenity." Theſe Words, ex antiquiſſima magnatum Familia, ſufficiently confute Mr Moreri, who ſays, that Michael Abaffi was a Magiſtrate's Son of Hermanſtadt, the chief City of Tranſylvania. It was certainly on the Credit of His Dictionary, that the Author of the Hiſtorical Mercury affirmed the ſame thing (7).

(6) Betlenius, pag. 247.

(7) Month of March, 1690, pag. 490.

[D] Which coſt Kimin Janos his Life, in January 1662.] I have already confuted Him, who ſaid it was in the beginning of the Year 1663. There is another ſtill to be confuted. Sir P. Ricaut pretends, that Kimin Janos, having been defeated near Clauſemburgh, reſolved, ſome time after, to try his Fortune a ſecond time: That he gave the Turks Battle, at ſome Diſtance from Presburg; that the Succeſs was a long time doubtful; but that, at laſt, he was forced to yield to Numbers, and, in the Flight, was thrown off his Horſe by his own Men, and trod to Death. This Hiſtorian remarks, that the Turks killed, and took Priſoners, Fifty thouſand Chriſtians, in the Battle of Clauſemburgh; and that, a little before, they declined fighting, becauſe the Emperor's Troops, and thoſe of Kimin Janos, were ſuperior to theirs in Number (8). I find nothing of this in my Tranſylvanian Author. He informs me, on the contrary, that Montecuculi, and Kimin Janos, being advanced beyond Clauſemburgh, were informed, that Ali Baſſa's Army was four times ſtronger than theirs, inſomuch that Montecuculi declared to Kimin Janos, that, conſidering the ill Condition their Infantry was in, by reaſon

(8) Ricaut's Hiſtory of Mahomet IV. pag. 292, 293, Ann. 1662.

Digitized by Google

His Son endeavoured to ſupport his Pretenſions; but his Efforts were unſucceſsful. Apafi was obliged to join his Forces with thoſe of the Turks, to recover the Places, which the Emperor had poſſeſſed himſelf of in Tranſylvania. The Imperial Garriſon of Clauſemburgh defended itſelf ſo long, that the Turks and Michael Apafi were obliged to raiſe the Siege with Diſgrace (c). Treaties were ſet on foot for the Evacuation of theſe Places, but without any Effect; they were forced to come to open War at laſt (d). The Turks were ſucceſsful in 1663; but, the Year following, they loſt the famous Battle of St Godard; after which the Grand Vizier conſented to a Truce of Twenty Years. In the Year 1664, Apafi treated with the Imperial Garriſons of Clauſemburgh and Zatmar, who delivered up thoſe two Towns to him (e). He lived under the Protection of the Porte, and wholly independant on the Court of Vienna, during the Truce between the two Empires. At firſt he favoured the Malecontents of Hungary, without breaking with the Emperor; but at laſt engaged in an open War for them, and publiſhed his Reaſons, in a Latin Manifeſto, addreſſed to all the Chriſtian Powers [E]. The Turks broke with the Emperor, in the Year 1683, and entered Hungary with a formidable Army, which penetrated as far as Vienna, with all imaginable Eaſe. But theſe happy Beginnings were followed by a dreadful Reverſe. The Grand Vizier raiſed the Siege of Vienna; and from that time there followed nothing but Loſs upon Loſs, and Misfortune upon Misfortune, on the Ottoman ſide. Tranſylvania fell a Prey to the Imperial Troops; and Apafi, inſtead of aſſerting the Liberties of Hungary, was the Cauſe of This Kingdom's loſing That Shadow of Liberty, which remained to it [F]; for it is now no longer elective, but looked upon as a conquered Country, and, accordingly, is erected into an Hereditary Kingdom. Apafi died at Weiſſemburgh towards the end of (c) The Governor was called David Rettani. He was a Venetian, and a good Engineer. Vianoli Hiſt. Veneta, Tom. 2. pag. 669.

(d) Ex Betlenio, Hiſt. Rer. Tranſylvan.

(e) Buno, Not. in Phil. Cluverii introduct. Geograph. pag. 281.

ſon of the ſcarcity of Proviſions, which they had ſuffered, he could not hazard his Imperial Majeſty's Troops (9). Kimin Janos, being driven to deſpair, could hardly refrain from Tears at this Declaration (10); and was forced to return with Montecuculi into Hungary. He fought no other Battle, but That, in which he was killed; nor did he fight it near Preſburgh, in Hungary, but in the Plains of Tranſylvania, on the Twenty third of January, 1662, near a Village called Hetur (11). The Hiſtorian obſerves, that about Five thouſand Men of Montecuculi's Army periſhed by Famine and Sickneſs (12). This Circumſtance, joined to that which is obſerved above, weakens the Credit of what Sir P. Ricaut ſays, viz. that the Emperor's Forces, and thoſe of Kimin Janos, united, formed ſo fair and numerous an Army, that one would have thought, they were deſigned not only to defend the Frontiers of Chriſtendom, but even to diſpute the Empire of the World with the Ottomans (13). How can this be, if the Ottoman Army was four times ſtronger? But how can this Victory of the Turks, near Clauſemburgh, which coſt the Chriſtians Fifty thouſand Men, be credited; how, I ſay, when there is not a Syllable of it to be found in the Hiſtory of Tranſylvania? Have the Turks their Gazetteers at Conſtantinople, who vie with the Chriſtians in framing imaginary Victories?

(9) Betlenius, pag. 251.

(10) Id. pag. 252.

(11) Id. pag. 284, 281.

(12) Id. pag. 254.

(13) Ricaut. ubi ſupra, pag. 291.

[E] And publiſhed his Reaſons, in a Latin Manifeſto, addreſſed to all the Chriſtian Powers.] I have a Copy of it by me, printed in the Year 1682, after the Copy of Tranſylvania. But, as there is no date to the Manifeſto of Michael Apafi, and as my Edition does not remark the Time of the Publication of That of Tranſylvania, I dare not affirm, that this Prince declared War in 1682; for I find, in the Life of Count Tekeli (14), that, in 1681, Apafi joined him with an Army of Tranſylvanians, and that they both undertook the Siege of Zatmar. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Troubles of Hungary ſpeaks of That Siege under the ſame Year (15), and informs us, that Michael Apafi made himſelf Maſter of the Town (16); but that, not being able to reduce the Citadel, he retreated, and loſt his Baggage in the Retreat (17); that it was difficult to penetrate into the Cauſe of this Diſgrace (18); that ſome attributed it to a miſunderſtanding between Count Tekeli, and Teleki, who commanded the Tranſylvanian Troops at That Siege; that the latter was accuſed of making uſe of bad Powder, which took no effect; and that, according to others, Prince Apafi would not take the Town himſelf, on ſome Advice he had received, that the Grand Signior expected he ſhould put the Place into his Hands; that it is certain, however, that the Baſſa, who command the Turks at That Siege, ſent long Memorials to Conſtantinople againſt this Prince, which obliged him to return into his own Country, for fear ſome change of Affairs ſhould happen there in his Abſence. Thus this Hiſtorian reports the Tittle-tattle of Coffee-houſe Politicians. The Hiſtorical and Political Mercury has faithfully copied him (19).

(14) Pag. 104.

(15) In the Edition of Amſterdam, in 1686, the Year 1680 is marked on the Top of the Page. This Error may deceive thoſe who do not examine it nearly.

(16) Book 8. pag. 30.

(17) Pag. 39.

(18) Pag. 32.

(19) Month of May, 1690. pag. 492; but he places the Siege of Zatmar in 1680.

[F] Was the Cauſe of this Kingdom's loſing That Shadow of Liberty, which remained to it.] It would be unjuſt to accuſe Apafi of Imprudence on this account; for never had any one a better proſpect of good Succeſs. The Forces of the Malecontents, alone, had kept the Imperial Troops in play, 'till that time. What might not reaſonably be expected, then, from the extraordinary Preparations of the Grand Signior, who had promiſed Wonders and Mountains to Tekeli? But, by one of thoſe fatal Conjunctures, by which the Providence of God interpoſes, from time to time, to confound the beſt grounded human Hopes, it happened, that Apafi not only performed nothing in favour of the Liberty of Hungary, but enſlaved likewiſe his own Country. Sic erat in fatis. It ſo happened, that, inſtead of weakening the Houſe of Auſtria, he raiſed it from it's drooping Condition; he put it in a capacity of reſuming it's Superiority; he ratified it's Claim to the Crown of Hungary; and made the Turkiſh Dominions an inexhauſtible Fund of good News, for the Confederacy, formed againſt France, during the courſe of the War. Muſt it, therefore, be ſaid, that Apafi was a hot-headed, raſh, Man (20)? By no means, unleſs all be ſtiled ſo, who cannot foreſee Events the moſt contrary to Appearances. Would not the beſt Politicians have warranted, that France would have puſhed the Affair on the one ſide, whilſt the Turks acted on the other? Who could ever have perſuaded himſelf, that ſhe would continue in Inaction for ſix ſucceſſive Years, in the midſt of the moſt favourable Opportunities of aggrandizing herſelf, than ever Nation had? Apafi, Tekeli, and their Adherents, are very excuſable, in not being able to conjecture, that the French would chuſe to wage War with the Edict of Nants, rather than with the Houſe of Auſtria.

WHETHER the ill Succeſs of Apafi's Attempt ought to be looked upon as the Effect of Imprudence.

(20) See the Remark [G], of the Article KOTTEL RUS.

What I have ſaid, in relation to the good News, which comes daily to us from Turky (21), is no Secret. Our Gazetteers, and other News-writers, give us ſcarce any Accounts from that Country, but ſuch as are proper to inſpire us with Joy. The Murmurs of the People, their Miſery, their Vows for Peace; Diſſenſions in the Divan; a Grand Vizier ſtrangled; formidable Factions; Plagues; Fires at Conſtantinople; Rebellions in Ægypt, Arabia, and Syria; and an hundred things of this Nature, which come by the Couriers from Germany, ſometimes of one kind, ſometimes of another; are not theſe fine Tidings? How many compleat Victories, how many Towns taken, how many Parties defeated, and how

(21) I wrote this in 1694.

Digitized by Google

of April 1690 [G]. The Turks endeavoured to set up Tekeli in his room; but he had not the good Luck to improve to the best Advantage an Incursion he had made into That Country (f). The Presence of Prince Lewis of Baden melted him like Snow before the Sun, if I may use the Expression; nor has he, from That time to the time of my writing this (g), given any disturbance to the new Titular Prince of Transylvania, the Son of Michael Apafi.

(f) During the Campaign of 1690.

(g) In the Month of February, 1699.

many successful Incursions into the Enemy's Country, have we not had reason to publish in Summer; and what hopes of Peace have not been given in Winter? Even the raising the Siege of Belgrade, in 1693, is represented as an happy Event; since the Imperial Troops had executed their chief Design, which was to hinder the Ottomans from making an Inroad into Transylvania. I heard a Person say, soon after the Reduction of Ireland, that it would have been well to have prolonged the War there, that there might be a sure Fund of new Advantages, both in the East and in the West.

[G] Apafi died at Weissemburgh, towards the end of April, 1690.] The News-writers differed in the Circumstances of his Death. Some said he died suddenly, in the Assembly of the States of Transylvania (22); others, that he died after a long Sickness (23); but all agree, that he died at Weissemburgh (24).

(22) Paris Gazette, of the 20th of May, 1690.

(23) Mercure Historique, for the Month of May, 1690. pag. 490.

(24) The Life of Count Tekeli says, at Alba Julia, the same as Weissembourg. Life of Count Tekeli, pag. 263.

APÉLLES, one of the most famous Painters of Antiquity, was a Native of the Isle of Coos [A], and flourished in the Days of Alexander [B]. He was highly esteemed by This Prince, and the only Person, who was permitted to draw his Picture. He obtained, likewise, another singular Mark of his Favour; for Alexander, having sent one of his Mistresses to sit to him for her Picture, and being informed, that Apelles was fallen in Love with her, bestowed Her upon him [C]. There is room to question, whether Apelles abused the Good-Nature of this Great Monarch, as is pretended [D]. He was, probably, too good a Courtier, not to know, that a Speech,

[A] Was an Native of the Isle of Coos.] I find but two Authors, who say so; and one of them must be supposed not to have written what most Editions make him say; but that, instead of these Words, "Apelles eo usque Olympiade CXII provectus ut "plura solus prope quam cæteri omnes contulerit, he "made use of these," "Apelles Cous Olympiade "CXII picturæ plura solus prope quam cæteri om-"nes contulit (1). — Apelles of Coos, in the CXIIth "Olympiad, contributed, alone, more than all the "rest, to the Improvement of Painting." Turnebus was of Opinion, that it ought to be read Apelles Cous, and not Apelles eo usque. His Supposition has been confirmed by the Manuscript of the Vatican (2), by Those of the King's Library, and by That of Mr Colbert (3). The other Evidence is Ovid, who says,

(1) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10.

(2) See Carlo Dati, in his Apostilles on the Life of Apelles, pag. 104.

(3) See P. Hardouin on Pliny, Tom. 5. pag. 264.

Ut Venus Artificis labor est & gloria Coi,
Æquoreo madidas quæ premit imbre comas (4).

Thus Venus, rising from her watry Bed,
Immortaliz'd the Coan Artist's Hand.

(4) Ovid. de Ponto, lib. 4. Eleg. 1. ver. 29.

We shall produce in the Remark [I], another Passage of this Poet, where some read Coïs, and others Cous. The great number of Authors, who give Apelles another Country, induced le Mazzoni to defend Ovid's Cause; but, instead of Coi, he pretends that the Poet wrote it Choi (5). Three Authors of good Credit make Apelles a Native of Ephesus (6). Suidas makes him a Native of Colophon, and adds, that the City of Ephesus adopted him.

(5) Difesa di Dante, lib. 3. cap. 16. apud Carol Dati, ubi supra, pag. 103.

(6) Strabo, lib. 14. Lucianus, de Calumn. Ælian. Hist. Anim. lib. 4. cap. 50. See also Tzetzes Chil. 8. hist. 197. ver. 193.

[B] Flourished in the Days of Alexander.] It cannot be denied, that he was at the height of his Reputation, when That Prince began the Conquest of Asia, that is, in the CIst Olympiad. His Adventures at the Court of Egypt makes it appear, that he survived Alexander. It is a Mistake, then, to say, with Majoragius, that he was a Pupil of Zeuxes; the Distance of above One hundred and twenty Years between the LXXXIVth Olympiad, in which Zeuxes flourished (7), and the Reign of the first Ptolomy, will not allow it. Carlo Dati is the Person, who has taken notice of Majoragius's Mistake. He says, "Non so con qual fondamento Marcanto-"nio Majoraggio nel Comento sopra l'Orat di Cicer. "a 11. dicesse che Apelle fosse scolare di Zeusi, "quando tra l'uno e l'altro corse l'eta d'un nomo (8). "- - - - - I know not upon what Foundation Marcan-"tonius Majoragius, in his Commentary on an O-"ration of Cicero, makes Apelles the Scholar of "Zeuxes, since there passed a Century between them." His Adventure in the Court of Egypt was this: Apelles had not the good Fortune to be beloved by Ptolomy in the Court of Alexandria. A Storm happened to force him into That Port, in the Reign of this King. A Roguish Fellow, who had a Mind to play him a scurvy Trick, came, and told him, the King invited him to Dinner. Apelles waited on him, and, observing the King to be very angry, excused himself, by letting him know, that he came by his Order. The King desired he would tell him, who it was that invited him; but That was impossible; for the Person, who had imposed upon him, was not then in the Room. Apelles, upon this, began to draw his Face upon the Wall with a bit of Charcoal, and Ptolomy knew him by the very first Lines. "Non fuerat "ei gratia in comitatu Alexandri cum Ptolemæo, "quo regnante Alexandriam vi tempestatis expulsus, "subornato fraude æmulorum plano regio invitatus, "ad Regis cœnam venit, indignantique Ptolemæo & "vocatores suos ostendenti ut diceret à quo eorum "invitatus esset, arrepto carbone exstincto e foculo "imaginem in pariete delineavit, agnoscente vultum "plani rege ex inchoato protinus (9)."

(7) See the Remark [A] of the Article ZEUXES.

(8) Carlo Dati, Postille sopra vita d'Apelle, pag. 105.

(9) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10.

[C] Being informed, that Apelles was fallen in Love with her, bestowed her upon him.] Pliny relates the Story after this manner; "Alexander ei "honorem clarissimo præbuit exemplo, namque cum "dilectam sibi è pallacis suis præcipue, nomine Cam-"paspen, nudam pingi ob admirationem formæ ab "Apelle jussisset, eumque tum pari captum amore "sensisset, dono eam dedit. Magnus animo, major "imperio sui: nec minor hoc facto, quam victoria "aliqua; quippe se vicit, nec torum tantum suum, "sed etiam affectum donavit Artifici; ne dilectæ "quidem respectu motus, ut, quæ modo regis fuisset, "nunc pictoris esset. Sunt qui Venerem Anadyo-"menen illo pictam exemplari putant (10). - - - - - "Alexander honoured him after a very remarkable "Manner; for, perceiving that he had fallen in "love with his favourite Concubine, Campaspe, whom, "through Admiration of her Beauty, he had com-"manded him to draw naked, he gave her to him. "Great as he was in Mind, he was still greater by "this Command over himself; an Action This, as much "to his Honour as the greatest Victory; for he con-"quered himself; nor did he resign his Bed alone, "but even his Love, to the Artist; regardless of his "Favourite's Lot, who, from being the Mistress of "a King, was now to become a Painter's. Some think "the Venus Anadyomene was drawn from this Ori-"ginal." Ælian relates the same Story; but gives this Mistress of Alexander the Name of Pancaste (11). The Article of This Prince shall contain a Remark on this Subject (12); we shall shew, that a Man, who could give the fairest of his Concubines to be drawn stark naked, does not deserve the Encomiums of Continent and Chaste, which have been lavished on him.

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 12. cap. 34.

[D] There is room to question, whether Apelles abused the Good-Nature of this great Monarch, as is pretended.] Pliny may tell us if he pleases, that Apelles rendered himself agreeable to this Prince by his Polite-

(12) See the Remarks [H] and [I] of the Article MACEDONIA.

Digitized by Google

Speech, ſo little reſpectful, as That, which is attributed to him, muſt diſpleaſe. The Anſwer he gave, in relation to Lais, is no Recommendation of his Manners [E]. There has been much Talk of his Picture of Calumny; but ſcarce any one has obſerved the Blunders, which have been committed in relating the Fact, which was the occaſion of this Picture [F]. The Treatiſe, in which Lucian mentions this, is an excellent

neſs and Complaiſance; but he will ſcarce perſuade thoſe, who know Alexander, that a Painter could ſay to him with Impunity, Say no more; the very Boys, who grind my Colours, laugh at you. "Fuit & comitas illi, "propter quam gratior Alexandro Magno erat fre- "quenter in Officinam ventitanti. - - - - - Sed in Of- "ficinâ imperitè multa differenti ſilentium comiter "ſuadebat, rideri eum dicens a pueris qui colores te- "rerent. Tantum erat auctoritati juris in Regem "alioqui iracundum (13). - - - - He had a Politeneſs (13) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10. "of Behaviour, which ingratiated him the more with "Alexander the Great, who frequently viſited him "in his Painting-Room. - - - - - - Where Alexander "happening one Day to betray his Ignorance, Apelles, "in an obliging way, deſired him to ſay no more, telling "him the very Boys, who ground his Colours, made "a jeſt of him; ſo much Liberty did he take with a "King, otherwiſe of a paſſionate Diſpoſition." It is not to be ſuppoſed, that Apelles could think ſo harſh an Expreſſion, after what manner ſoever ſpoken, would be well taken. Nor is it to be imagined, that Alexander, who had been ſo well educated, and had ſo good a Genius, could talk ſo impertinently of Painting, as to deſerve to be laughed at by the meaneſt Apprentice. This is the Opinion of the Learned Freinſhemius: "Non crediderim in officina "imperitè multa diſſerentem ab Apelle mordaci dicte- "rio repreſſum fuiſſe. Nam id neque majeſtati tanti "regis, neque modeſtiæ pictoris, hominis non ſtu- "pidi nec indocti, conveniſſet; & Alexander, libera- "libus ſtudiis ab extrema ætate imbutus, etiam de "artibus quas non calleret haud inepte judicare di- "dicerat (14)." As for Megabyzes, Prieſt of Diana (15), it would be no ſuch wonder, if Apelles had given Him this Advice. And, if we may believe Plutarch, it was He, who was cenſured in this manner by Apelles: Can't you ſee, ſaid he to him, that, while you was ſilent, Theſe Boys, who mix the Oker, looked upon you with Reſpect, on account of the Gold and Purple of your Garments, but that they laughed, when they heard you ſpeak of an Art you did not underſtand (16). Another Author ſays, that it was Zeuxes, who ſpoke thus to Megabyzes (17). I could more eaſily believe the Liberty, which it is ſaid Apelles took with Alexander, on another Occaſion. Alexander, viewing his own Picture, which Apelles had juſt finiſhed, ſeemed not to admire it as it deſerved. A little while after, a Horſe was led by, who neighed at the ſight of the Horſe in the ſame Piece. Sir, ſaid Apelles to Alexander, one would think this Horſe was a better Judge of Painting, than your Majeſty (18). But, to give my Thoughts freely, it is all too harſh, too groſs, and too brutiſh, to be aſcribed to a Painter, repreſented, in all other Inſtances, as a modeſt, complaiſant, and polite Perſon. A Man muſt either be on the foot of a Jeſter at Court, or be ſuch a whimſical, untoward, Humouriſt, as your great Artiſts ſometimes are: I ſay, we muſt have recourſe to one of theſe two Suppoſitions, to believe, what is ſaid of Apelles, not only with regard to Alexander, but even with regard to Megabyzes, reſpected on account of his Gold and Purple. Apelles's Diſcourſe to Alexander, on Occaſion of the Horſe's neighing, is not ſo harſh in the Tranſlations of ſome learned Men, as in the Original; but this Softning does them but little Honour: It is a Blunder; it is groſs Ignorance. Let us produce the Greek: Ἀλέξανδρῳ θεασάμενῳ τὴν ἐν Ἐφέσῳ εἰκόνα ἑαυτῆς τὴν ὑπὸ Ἀπελλοῦ γραφεῖσαν οὐκ ἐπῄνεσε καλὰ τὴν ἀξίαν τοῦ γράμματος. εἰσαχθέντος δὲ τοῦ ἵππου καὶ χρεμετίσαντος πρὸς τὸν ἵππον τὸν ἐν τῇ εἰκόνι ὡς πρὸς ἀληθινὸν καὶ ἐκεῖνον, Ὦ βασιλεῦ (εἶπεν ὁ Ἀπελλῆς) ἀλλ' ὅγε ἵππος ἔοικέ σε γραφικώτερος εἶναι καὶ καλὰ πολύ (19). Alexander, ſeeing his own Picture at Epheſus, drawn by Apelles, did not commend the Painting as it deſerved; but an Horſe being brought, and neighing to the Horſe in the Picture, as to a real one; O King (ſaid Apelles*) This Horſe ſeems to be a much better Judge of Painting, than you.* Eraſmus repreſents the Fact thus: "Apud "Epheſum quum Alexander conſpectam effigiem ſui "corporis ad vivum magna arte expreſſam admira- "retur, atque interim fortè equus eductus picto in "eadem tabula equo adhinniret, deceptus imitatione, "Apelles, equus, inquit, O Rex, multo melius ex- "preſſus eſt quam tu (20). - - - - - As Alexander (20) In Apophthegm. "was admiring his own Picture, at Epheſus, drawn "to the Life with great Art, an Horſe, happening "to be brought out, neighed to the Horſe in the "Picture, being deceived by the Reſemblance; upon "which Apelles ſaid, your Horſe, O King, is better "drawn than you." I omit ſome Circumſtances, which Eraſmus adds, without having found them in Ælian. I only obſerve the Reflexion he puts in the Mouth of the Painter; Sir, I have ſucceeded better in painting your Horſe, than your Majeſty. This is not the Senſe of the Greek; a learned Critic has ſhewed, that the Word γραφικὸς ſignifies one, who underſtands Painting; and has by This convicted Cælius Rhodiginus, and Eraſmus, of miſrepreſenting the Story (21). I wonder Pliny was ignorant of This; He, who takes ſome Notice of the neighing of the Horſe. See, below, the Remark [K]. (21) Paulus Leopardus Emendationum, lib. 12. cap. 4.

[E] The Anſwer he gave, in relation to Lais, is no Recommendation of his Manners.] She was yet a tender Maid, when Apelles, ſeeing her returning Home from the Fountain, and admiring her Beauty, prevailed upon her to go with him where he pleaſed. He brought her to an Entertainment, where he was to meet ſome of his Friends; they laughed at him for bringing with him, inſtead of a Courtezan, a meer Girl: Don't trouble your Heads about that, replied he; I will manage her ſo, that, before three Years are at an end, ſhe ſhall have all her Paces to perfection. Χλευσάντων δὲ αὐτὸν τῶν ἑταίρων ὅτι ἀνθ' ἑταίρας παρθένον εἰς τὸ συμπόσιον ἀγάγοι, μὴ θαυμάσητε, εἶπεν, ἐγὼ γὰρ αὐτὴν εἰς μέλλησαν ἀπόλαυσιν μετ' ὀλίγον πριεῖαι καλὴν δείξω (22). Irriſus (22) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 588. autem à familiaribus, quod meretricis loco virginem adduxiſſet, nolite mirari, inquit, mihi etenim non toto opus erit triennio ut eam ad futuræ voluptatis uſum pulchrè doctam inſtitutamque reddere valeam. Would not one think the Converſation was concerning an unmanaged Colt, which, in the Hands of an excellent Horſeman, would quickly learn all his Airs and Paces? The Reflexion on the Corruption of Thoſe Ages inſpires Horror. The Friends of Apelles ſeem even to have ſurpaſſed him in Debauchery (23). Lais became one of the moſt famous Courtezans of the Age ſhe lived in. The Painters viſited her to take the Model of a fine Neck (24). Apelles no doubt copied from the ſame Original. "Nemini dubium "eſſe poteſt quin hanc ipſam quoque Laidem ſibi "veluti in contubernium adſciverit Apelles, quo vi- "vam emendatiſſimæ formæ imaginem ab animali "exemplo in tabulas ſuas transfunderet (25). - - - - "Apelles, no doubt, kept this very Lais with him "in his Houſe, that he might copy the Reſemblance "of a moſt perfect Beauty from a living Original." (23) Richelet, in his Dictionary, under the Word Pucelage, obſerves, that a Maidenhead is called the Ragoût of Sots. (24) Athen. ubi ſupra. (25) Junius in Catalogo Artificum, in Apelle, pag. 19.

[F] Scarce any one has obſerved the Blunders, which have been committed in relating the matter of Fact, which was the Occaſion of This Picture] See how Lucian relates it. The Painter Antiphilus, not being able to bear the Favour, which Apelles enjoyed with King Ptolomy, accuſed him of being an Accomplice in the Conſpiracy of Theodotus, Governor of Phœnicia. He aſſerted, that Apelles had been ſeen at Dinner with Theodotus, and whiſpered him in the Ear all the while. He afterwards told the King, that the City of Tyre had revolted, and that Peluſium was taken, through Apelles's means. Yet it was plain, that the Accuſed had never been at Tyre, nor had ever known Theodotus, but under the general Quality of Governor of Phœnicia. Ptolomy was in ſuch a Rage, that, without examining the matter, he was very near putting Apelles to death. He conſidered neither the Accuſer, nor the Accuſed. The former, through Spight and Emulation, might well be ſuſpected of plotting the Ruin of an innocent Perſon; the latter was too inconſiderable a Perſon, to be capable of ſuch Attempts; though a Senſe of the Obligations he was under to Ptolomy had not been ſufficient

(14) Freinſhem Supplem. in Curtium, lib. 2. cap. 6.

(15) Several of the learned think, that Megabyzes was a Name appropriated to the Prieſt of Diana. Others underſtand by Megabyzes, in this Place, a great Lord of Perſia.

(16) De diſcrim. Adulat. & Amici, pag. 58. & de Tranquill. Animi, p 472, 472.

(17) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 2. Freinſhemius ubi ſupra, cites him as having attributed this to Apelles.

(18) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 3.

(19) Id. ib.

Digitized by Google

excellent Piece (a). Apelles's Maſter-piece was the Picture of Venus, riſing out of the Sea [G]. Some Authors tell us, that the Miſtreſs, whom Alexander gave him, ſat to him, when he drew this Piece; others, that the Courtezan Phryne was the Original. They tell us of another Picture of Venus, which he had begun, and which would have ſurpaſſed the firſt, if Death had not prevented him from finiſhing it [H]. Mr Moreri has miſtaken one of theſe Pictures for the other [I], and has miſrepreſented ſufficient to ſtifle in him all ill Deſigns. The Prince did not conſider this. He never enquired, whether Apelles had ever been at Tyre; he only ſtormed and ſwore; and, if one of the Conſpirators had not diſcovered the Wickedneſs of Antiphilus, the Accuſed had infallibly been put to death. But, when Ptolomy was ſatisfied of the Accuſer's Crime, he condemned him to be Apelles's Slave, and gave the latter an hundred Talents. It was upon this Occaſion, that Apelles drew the fine Picture of Calumny, which Lucian has deſcribed. It is Pity he did not perceive the monſtrous Anachroniſm he is guilty of in this Relation; for Theodotus's Conſpiracy fell out in the Reign of Ptolomy Philopater; which did not commence 'till an hundred Years after the Death of Alexander (26). Judge then, whether Apelles could be alive at that time. One of theſe two Poſitions muſt be laid down; either that Lucian ſpeaks of a different Apelles from him, who was ſo much eſteemed by Alexander; or he confounds ſome Plot, hatched in the Reign of Ptolomy Philadelphus, with the Conſpiracy of Theodotus. There being no Author, who can give us any Light concerning a Conſpiracy, in which Calumny had involved our Painter; it will be Labour in vain to trace Lucian's Error to it's Source. Let us conſider only, whether he had any other Apelles in view beſides Him, who is the Subject of this Article. Now This I cannot conceive; for any one, who knew how to write, would have taken care, in mentioning a Painter, who had nothing in common, beſides his Name, with the great and incomparable Apelles, not to call him ſimply Apelles. He would have apprized the Reader, that he did not mean the great Apelles. Now Lucian gives no hint of this; on the contrary, all he ſays leads us in a direct Line to the great Apelles; this, then, is the Perſon, whom he means. I know, that a learned Man lays a Streſs upon the Epithet Epheſian, Ἀπελλῆς ὁ Ἐφέσιος. "Ad diſtinctionem illius Apellis, qui ſub Alexandro & Ptolomæo Lagi vixit maximi nominis & artis, Coi Patriâ. Hic autem Patria Colophonius; verum θέσει, id eſt adoptione, teſte Suida, Pamphili Amphipolitæ diſcipulus (27). ------ To diſtinguiſh him from That Apelles, of great Fame and Art, a Coan by Birth, who lived in the Time of Alexander, and Ptolomy the Son of Lagus. Whereas This was a Colophonian; but, by Adoption, according to Suidas, a Diſciple of Pamphilus of Amphipolis." But I find, that others likewiſe have given this Epithet to the great Apelles (28). Beſides which, I can appeal to the Reaſon contained in the Paſſage I have cited; for if Lucian could give this Epithet to His Apelles, becauſe adopted by the Inhabitants of Epheſus, tho' born at Colophon; I can alledge, that he gave it to the great Apelles, born in the Iſland of Coos, but undoubtedly a Citizen of Epheſus. Is it probable, a Man of his Fame ſhould ſettle in That City (where Alexander ſaw, and became intimate with, him) without obtaining all the Privileges of a Citizen? But I have another Proof: Tollius allows, that Lucian means the ſame Apelles with Suidas; now Suidas ſpeaks only of the great Apelles. This I prove, I. Becauſe he mentions but one Apelles. Would he have omitted the Great and Illuſtrious, to mention only the Obſcure and Unknown? II. Becauſe he gives his Apelles the Quality of a Diſciple of Pamphilus of Amphipolis, a Quality, which Pliny likewiſe aſcribes to the great Apelles (29). So that Lucian's Error is evident; and I am ſurpriſed, that neither John Baptiſt Adriani (30), nor Carlo Dati (31), nor Francis Junius (32), nor ſo many other celebrated Authors, who have ſpoken of this Treatiſe of Lucian, ſhould perceive it, but ſhould take this Relation to be a real Adventure of the great Apelles. Tollius very well knew, that the Crime, of which Apelles was accuſed, had relation to the Reign of Ptolomy Philopater; but he was not aware, that Lucian was deceived; he rather ſuppoſed, that Lucian had another Apelles in view, who was Cotemporary with Antiphilus, and Diſciple of Pamphilus. I cannot

(a) It's Title is, Περὶ τῦ μὴ ῥᾳδίως πιστεύειν διαβολῇ. Of not lightly believing Calumny.

(26) See Polybius in his fourth and fifth Books. He ſpeaks of it at large.

(27) Jacobus Tollius, notis in Lucian. de Calumnia.

(28) Strabo, Ælian. Tzetzes.

(29) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10. & init. cap. 11. Carlo Dati, pag. 105. & P. Hardouin in Plin. Tom. 5. pag. 205, ſay, that Plutarch, in the Life of Aratus, makes Apelles the Diſciple of Pamphilus: But this is an ambiguous Teſtimony. Plutarch, in another place, makes him rather the Diſciple of Melanthus.

(30) In a Letter at the beginning of the third Volume of Vaſari.

(31) Poſtille on the Life of Apelles.

(32) In Catalogo Artificum, in Apelle.

ſay, in what time Antiphilus lived, nor Cteſidemus, whoſe Diſciple he was (33); but it is plain, according to Pliny, that Pamphilus flouriſhed in the Time of Philip, the Father of Alexander the Great (34).

(33) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10. pag. 222.

(34) Ibid. pag. 206.

[G] Apelles's Maſter-Piece was the Picture of Venus, riſing out of the Sea.] Auguſtus dedicated it to the Temple of Julius Cæſar. The lower Parts of it had been ſpoiled; and no Hand was able to mend it; Time deſtroyed the reſt; and then Nero cauſed another Venus to be drawn by Dorotheus, which he ſubſtituted in the room of That of Apelles. "Venerem "exeuntem e mari Divus Auguſtus dicavit in delu- "bro patris Cæſaris, quæ Anadyomene vocatur, ver- "ſibus Græcis tali opere dum laudatur victo, ſed "illuſtrato: hujus inferiorem partem corruptam qui "reficeret non potuit reperiri. Verum ipſa injuria "ceſſit in gloriam artificis. Conſenuit hæc tabula "carie, aliamque pro ea Nero principatu ſubſtituit "ſuo." Theſe are Pliny's own Words, in the tenth Chapter of his Thirty fifth Book. I have recited the Paſſage, in the Remark [C], where he ſays that Alexander's Miſtreſs was the Original, from which this Venus was drawn. The Article PHRYNE will inform us of a Tradition different from this.

[H] Death ---- prevented him from finiſhing it.] If Calcagnini could have been prevailed with to give the Teſtimony of ancient Authors, rather than advance things of his own Head, he would not have affirmed, that Apelles voluntarily left his Venus Anadyomene imperfect; the Reaſon, ſays he, of this Conduct was, that Apelles deſpaired of finiſhing it with the ſame Perfection he had begun it. "Sed O me "multo Apelle incautiorem! ille enim tanta felici- "tate Veneris emergentis partes ſuperiores expreſſit, "ut diffiſus penicillo reliquas poſſe abſolvere deſpe- "raverit, atque ita in admirationem poſteritatis tabu- "lam inchoatam reliquerit (35). ----- But much "more incautious I, than Apelles! for He had ſo "happily expreſſed the upper Parts of Venus riſing "from the Sea, that, diſtruſting his Pencil, he de- "ſpaired of finiſhing the reſt; and thus left an un- "finiſhed Piece for Poſterity to wonder at." Carlo Dati, who accuſes this Author of advancing ſeveral things, without acknowledging from whence he borrows them, produces two other Examples of it. It is certain, that the Words of Pliny convict Calcagnini of Falſhood, as I am going to ſhew. "Apelles inchoave- "rat aliam Venerem Cois ſuperaturus etiam ſuam illam "priorem. Invidit mors peracta parte, nec qui ſucce- "deret operi ad præſcripta lineamenta inventus eſt "(36). --- Apelles had begun another Venus at Coos, "intending it ſhould excel the former. But Death "obliged him to leave it imperfect; nor was any one "capable of filling up the Outlines of the Work." Cicero ſays plainly, in two Places of his Works, that Apelles left That Venus imperfect (37).

(35) Calcagnini, lib. 13. pag. 357. apud Carolum Dati, pag. 145.

(36) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10. pag. 222.

(37) Epiſt. 9. ad Famil. lib. 1. & de Offic. lib. 3. cap. 2.

[I] Mr Moreri has miſtaken one of theſe Pictures for the other.] Thus he expreſſes himſelf: The fineſt of all Apelles's Pieces were two Pictures of Venus, one of which, where ſhe was drawn riſing out of the Sea, was called Anadyomene; the other was That, which he drew for Thoſe of the Iſland of Coos, mentioned by Ovid in theſe Words.

Si nunquam Venerem Cois pinxiſſet Apelles,
Merſa ſub æquoreis illa lateret aquis.

He quotes Ovid in Sent. He ſhould have cited the third Book de arte Amandi. You are to know, that Apelles did not finiſh the ſecond of theſe Pictures; Pliny affirms this expreſsly (38). What Probability is there, that Ovid, having two Pictures of Venus to alledge, the one finiſhed, the other not, ſhould omit That, and ſpeak only of This? To act thus is to be ignorant of the common Laws of Reaſoning. Beſides the ſecond Verſe is a plain Alluſion to the Venus Anadyomene, that is, Riſing out the of Sea. He ſpeaks, therefore, of the firſt Picture. We know, that the firſt Venus was drawn in this Poſture; but (38) See the preceding Remark.

Digitized by Google

ſented what relates to his Picture of a Horſe [K]. No Buſineſs was of ſuch Importance, as to oblige Apelles to paſs a ſingle Day without handling his Pencil; which gave riſe to a famous Proverb [L]. The Books, which this great Painter compoſed on the Art of Painting, are loſt (b). It is not known where, or when, he died. One of his chief Excellencies was That of hitting a Likeneſs to a wonder; inſomuch that Phyſiognomiſts could form a Judgment, from his Portraits, with as much Certainty, as we know nothing of the Poſture of the ſecond. I add, that, if theſe two Verſes of Ovid fell from his Pen, as they here repreſented, he was a bad Reaſoner. They muſt be corrected thus, to become a reaſonable Proof of what goes before.

(b) Voluminibus etiam editis quæ doctrinam eam continent. - - - Having likewiſe publiſhed Books containing the Principles of this Art. Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10.

Si Venerem Cois nuſquam poſuiſſet Apelles,
Merſa ſub æquoreis illa jaceret aquis.

Had not the Coan Artiſt - - - - - -
Drawn Venus, riſing, beauteous, from the Main,
Beneath the Waves the Goddeſs ſtill had lain.

The niceſt Critics chooſe to read Coïs inſtead of Cois. I believe they are in the right; though it is plain, that Apelles drew his Venus Anadyomene for the Inhabitants of the Iſland of Coos; for Auguſtus had it from them, and remitted them in conſideration of it the Sum of an hundred Talents of the Tribute, which they were indebted to his Exchequer. They kept this Venus, and the Antigonus by the ſame Hand, in the Temple of Æſculapius. "Lacter promon-
" torium eſt Coæ inſulæ, in cujus ſuburbio eſt ædes
" Æſculapii nobilitata Antigono Apellis - - - - - con-
" ſpiciebatur ibidem quoque ejuſdem artificis Venus (39) Junius in Catalogo Artificum, in Apelle, pag. 22. " Anadiomene (39). Ἡ νῦν ἀνάκειται τῷ θεῷ
" Καίσαρι ἐν Ῥώμῃ, τὸ Σεβαστὸ ἀναθέντος τῷ
" πατρὶ τὴν ἀρχηγέτιν τὺ γένους ἑαυτῦ. Φασὶ
" δὲ τοῖς Κώοις ἀντὶ τῆς γραφῆς ἑκατὸν ταλάν-
" των ἀφεθῆναι γενέσθαι τὸ προσαχθὲν φόρυ
(40) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 452. " (40). Quæ nunc dedicata eſt divo Cæſari, Au-
" guſto conſecrante patri generis ſui patronam. Aiunt
" Cois pro pictura fuiſſe remiſſa centum talenta de
" imperati tributi ſumma. - - - - Lacter is a Promon-
" tory of the Iſland Coos, in the Suburb of which " is a Temple of Æſculapius, famous for the Anti-
" gonus of Apelles - - - - - the Venus Anadyomene
" likewiſe of the ſame Artiſt was to be ſeen there.
" It is now dedicated to Julius Cæſar, Auguſtus con-
" ſecrating the Patroneſs of his Family to his Father.
" The Coans, they ſay, were remitted the Sum of an
" hundred Talents of the demanded Tribute, in con-
" ſideration of this Picture." Pliny might eaſily be ignorant, that the Venus Anadyomene was drawn for the Iſle of Coos; no wonder then he ſhould ſay, that Apelles's ſecond Venus was deſigned for Them.

WHETHER there were two Venus's of Apelles.

I ſhall here propoſe a Doubt, which occurs to my Thoughts on this Occaſion: I cannot but think Pliny multiplies Beings without Neceſſity, when he tells us of a Venus Anadyomene, and of another Venus, which was begun for the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Coos. The Reaſon of my Scruple is, that the firſt Venus was perfect only in the upper Parts of the Picture; Pliny himſelf informs us of this, and adds, that no Painter durſt attempt to repair the Injury it had ſuffered (41). Now he never finiſhed the other Venus; and no Painter had the Courage to ſupply what was wanting. This the ſame Pliny informs us of (42). I believe he is the only Author, who makes this Remark concerning two Venus's of Apelles, defective in the ſame Parts. Others ſay this only of the Venus of Apelles in general; and, whenever they mention this Venus, they place her in the Iſle of Coos (43); now we have ſeen, that Auguſtus fetched the Venus Anadyomene from thence (44). Pliny, then, it is probable, has not been over-exact in this matter. I appeal to thoſe, who will take the Pains to examine this ſmall Doubt of mine.

(41) Plin. lib. 35. pag. 212.

(42) Ibid.

(43) See Cicero de Offic. lib. 3. cap. 2. de Nat. Deor. lib. 1. in Verrem Orat. 9.

(44) Ex Strab. lib. 14. pag. 452.

[K] Moreri - - - - has miſrepreſented what relates to his Picture of an Horſe.] Ancient Authors, ſays Mr Moreri, have ſpoken with great Eſteem of an Horſe, drawn ſo to the Life by Apelles, that the Mares neighed at the ſight of it. I believe no Writer has ſaid this. What Pliny informs us of, as to this Matter, is as follows. "Eſt & equus ejus, ſive ſuit,
" pictus in certamine: quod judicium ad mutas qua-
" drupedes provocavit ab hominibus. Namque am-
" bitu æmulos prævalere ſentiens ſingulorum pictu-
" ras inductis equis oſtendit: Apellis tantum equo
" adhinnivere, idque & poſtea ſemper illius experi-
" mentum artis oſtentatur (45)." The meaning of which is, That Apelles, vying with ſome others, who ſhould paint a Horſe moſt to the Life, and diſtruſting the Integrity of the Judges, choſe to commit his Cauſe to the Deciſion of brute Beaſts. Horſes, accordingly, were led by, who neighed only at Apelles's Piece. Some think (46), that the Story in Ælian (47), is only a Corruption of this; and that what paſt between Apelles, and the Judges of the Prize, when This Painter preferred the Judgment of a Horſe to theirs, was what gave occaſion to the Report of his ſaying to Alexander; Your Horſe underſtands Painting, better than you. Others think they are two different Adventures (48). For my part, I have already given my own little Opinion; which is, that the Story, vouched by Ælian, ought to be looked upon as a meer Fable. Pliny's Silence, where ſo fair an Opportunity preſented of ſpeaking his Thoughts, confirms me in this Opinion. Would Pliny have been ſilent concerning the Horſe, which neighed at Apelles's Door, in the Preſence of Alexander, and concerning the Inference, which Apelles drew from it; Would Pliny, I ſay, have been ſilent on ſuch a Fact, when he relates the other Adventure, in which Apelles appealed, from the Judgment of the Arbitrators, to That of Horſes? Carlo Dati has obſerved, that, in neither of theſe Caſes, Apelles ſpoke like an able Painter, ſince he ſuppoſed, that the more Knowledge a Perſon had, the more he would miſtake the Repreſentation for the Object itſelf. But we muſt have a care how we apply this Cenſure to the Adventure, which Pliny relates; for Apelles did not prefer the Judgment of Horſes to That of Men, otherwiſe than as he perceived that the Intrigues of his Rivals had corrupted the Judges (49). The Remark of Carlo Dati is very juſt at the bottom. It is eaſier to deceive Thoſe, who do not underſtand Painting, than Thoſe, who do. He quotes John Paul Lomazzo (50): And, after him, we might quote Mr Perrault, who has well refuted the Conſequences, drawn, in favour of the ancient Painters, from their having deceived both Men and Beaſts (51).

(45) Lib. 35. pag. 213.

(46) Scheffer. in Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 3.

(47) See the Remark [D].

(48) Carlo Dati, pag. 128.

(49) Ibid. pag. 129.

(50) Lib. 3. cap. 1. della Pittura.

(51) Parallel of the Ancients and Moderns. Dialog. 2. pag. 136.

[L] Which gave riſe to a famous Proverb] Pliny informs us of it; "Apelli fuit alioqui perpetua con-
" ſuetudo nunquam tam occupatam diem agendi, ut
" non lineam ducendo exerceret artem, quod ab eo
" in proverbium venit (52). - - - - - It was an in-
" violable Rule with Apelles never to paſs a Day
" without exerciſing his Art, at leaſt by one Stroke
" of his Penſil; which paſſed from him into a Pro-
" verb." Carlo Dati (53) obſerves upon this, that Salmaſius, in ſupport of this Proverb, quotes the following Line, as a Verſe of Horace,

Nulla dies abeat, quin linea ducta ſuperſit.

Let no Day paſs, without drawing at leaſt one Line.

Which is neither Horace's, nor any other ancient Poet's. He adds, that it has been often the Fate of this Author to truſt too much to his Memory. " Non laſcero d'auvertire in queſto luogo che Claudio
" Salmaſio grandiſſimo Critico dell' eta noſtra, nelle
" Diſſertaz. Pliniane ſopra Solino p. 5. in confirma-
" zione di queſto proverbio, fidandoſi troppo della
" memoria, come bene ſpeſſo egli fece, cita un ver-
" ſo d'Orazio —— il quale non è (ch' io ſappia) ne
" d'Orazio ne d'altro poëta latino antico, ma forſe
" uno di quei verſi proverbiali che vanno per le bocche
" de gli uomini ſenza ſapernene l'autore. —— I ſhall
" not omit to apprize the Reader, in this Place, that
" Claudius Salmaſius, a very great Critic of our Age,
" in his Exercitationes Plinianæ on Solinus, pag. 5,
" cites, in Confirmation of this Proverb, and depending
" too much, as he very often does, on his Memory, a
" Verſe of Horace - - - - - which (to the beſt of my " Knowledge) is neither Horace's, nor any other an-

(52) Lib. 35. cap. 10. pag. 208.

(53) Carlo Dati, Poſtille ſopra la vita d'Apelle. P. Hardouin makes the ſame Remark. See his Pliny, Tom. 5. pag. 208.

cient

Digitized by Google

as if they had been Originals [M]. Witneſs what he did at the Court of Egypt (c).

(c) See the Remark [B].

" cient Latin Poet's; but, perhaps, one of thoſe prover-
" bial Verſes, which are in every one's Mouth, with-
" out the Author's being known."

[M] Inſomuch that Phyſiognomiſts could form a Judgment, from his Portraits, with as much Certainty, as if they had been Originals.] The Grammarian Apion tells a Story, to this purpoſe, ſo highly improbable, that one could ſcarce look upon it otherwiſe than as a Fable, though a more credible Author, than this grand Romancer, had affirmed it. Let us be content with Pliny's hiſtorical Account of the Matter. " Ima-
" ginem adeo ſimilitudinis indiſcretæ pinxit, ut (in-
" credibile dictu) Apion Grammaticus ſcriptum reli-
" querit, quemdam ex facie hominum addivinantem
" (quos metopoſcopos vocant) ex eis dixiſſe aut fu-
" turæ mortis annos aut præteritæ (54). - - - - - He
" painted ſo to the Life, that a certain Phyſiognomiſt,
" according to the incredible Relation of Apion the
" Grammarian, was wont to pronounce, from his Por-
" traits, the Year of the Perſon's Death, either paſſed
" or to come." Pliny himſelf cannot conceive, how any Perſon ſhould tell, at the ſight of a Picture, though ever ſo like the Original, at what Age the Perſon ſo painted died, or was to die. The Diviner, no doubt, enquired, whether the Perſon was dead or alive.

(54) Plin. ubi ſupra, pag. 210.

APELLES, an excellent Tragedian, under Caligula, gained the Emperor's Favour by the moſt infamous Means; but, when the Flower of his Youth was paſt, he turned Player (a); and ſtill ſupported himſelf ſo well in this Emperor's good Graces, who would never be without him, not even in Public (b), that he was at laſt admitted into the Number of his Counſellors (c). As they were one day ſtanding near the Statue of Jupiter, Caligula aſked him, Which of the Two do you think the greateſt, Jupiter, or I? And, becauſe Apelles did not anſwer him ſo readily, as he expected, he fell into a violent Paſſion, and ordered him to be whipt unmercifully; ſaying, in a jeſting way, that Apelles had an agreeable Voice, even in a plaintive Tone [A]. Some affirm, that he ordered him to be laid in Irons, and turned from time to time on a Wheel.

(a) Philo. Legat. ad Cajum. pag. 1021.

(b) Dion. lib. 69. pag. 643.

(c) Philo. ibid.

[A] Caligula - - - - - ſaid - - - - - that he had an agreeable Voice, even in a plaintive Tone] Suetonius is my Author. Inter varios jocos, cum aſſiſtens ſimulacro Jovis Apellem Tragœdum conſuluiſſet, uter illi major videretur, cunctantem flagellis diſcidit, collaudens ſubinde vocem deprecantis, quaſi etiam in gemitu prædulcem (1).

(1) Sueton. in Calig. cap. 33.

APELLICON, who bought Ariſtotle's Library. See the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION.

APICIUS. There were three Apicii, at Rome, famous for their Gluttony. The firſt lived before the Change of the Republic; the ſecond under Auguſtus, and Tiberius; and the laſt under Trajan. Athenæus means the firſt Apicius, when, having ſaid, on the Teſtimony of Poſidonius, that, at Rome, they preſerved the Memory of one Apicius, who had ſurpaſſed all Men in Gluttony, he adds, that it was the ſame Apicius, who had been the Cauſe of Rutilius's Exile (a). We know, that Poſidonius flouriſhed in the Time of Pompey, and that Rutilius was baniſhed about the Year of Rome 660. The ſecond Apicius was the moſt famous of the three. Athenæus places him under Tiberius, and ſays, that he laid out prodigious Sums on his Belly; and that there were ſeveral ſorts of Cakes, which bore his Name (b). It is He, whom Seneca ſpeaks of, in his Ninety fifth Letter, and in the Eleventh Chapter of his Book de Vita Beata, and in the Treatiſe de Conſolatione, which he wrote to his Mother Helvia, under the Emperor Claudius. We find, in the laſt of theſe Works, that This Apicius lived in Seneca's time, and kept, as it were, a School of Gluttony, in Rome; that he had conſumed two Millions and a half in good Chear; and that, finding himſelf much in Debt, he at laſt bethought himſelf of examining into the Condition of his Eſtate; and, finding that he had but 250000 Livres left, he poiſoned himſelf, as fearing he ſhould ſtarve with ſuch a Sum. Dion, who calls him M. Gabius Apicius, relates the ſame thing (c), and adds a Particular, which is to be found likewiſe in the firſt Chapter of the fourth Book of Tacitus's Annals; viz. That Sejanus, in his Youth, had proſtituted himſelf to him. Pliny calls him M. Apicius, and often mentions the Ragoûts, which he invented (d); Nepotum omnium altiſſimus gurges. A Book was written on the Subject of his Gluttony, which is cited by Athenæus (e). It is not to be doubted, but that This is the Apicius of Juvenal, Martial, and Lampridius, &c. [A]. The third Apicius lived in Trajan's Time. He had an admirable

(a) Athen. lib. 4. pag. 168.

(b) Id. lib. 1. pag. 7.

(c) Lib. 57.

(d) Lib. 8. cap. 51. lib. 9. cap. 18. lib. 10. cap. 48. lib. 19. cap. 8.

(e) Apion was the Author of it. Athen. lib. 7.

[A] This is the Apicius of Juvenal, Martial, and Lampridius, &c.] I have theſe Words of Juvenal in view.

- - - - - - - multa videmus,
Quæ miſer, & frugi non fecit Apicius - - - - (1).

Now even Apicius frugal ſeems and poor,
Outdone by Luxury, unknown before.

Revd. Mr R. DUKE.

(1) Juven. Sat. 4. ver. 23.

And Theſe two Verſes of Martial;

Ipſe quoque ad cœnam gaudebat Apicius ire;
Cum cœnaret, erat triſtior ille, domi (2).

Apicius, when invited to a Feaſt,
Was gay, and chearful, as the merrieſt Gueſt;
But, uninvited, when at home he dined,
The gloomieſt Mortal, ſurly, and unkind.

(2) Mart. Epigr. 29. lib. 2. See likewiſe Epig. 73. lib. 10.

And That Paſſage of Lampridius, where we read, that the Emperor Heliogabalus often eat Peacocks and Nightingales Tongues, in imitation of Apicius. Comedit ſæpius ad imitationem Apicii calcanea camelorum, & triſtas

Digitized by Google

rable Receipt for preſerving of Oyſters; this appeared, when he ſent ſome to Trajan into Parthia; They were ſtill freſh, when Trajan received them (f). The Name of Apicius was for a long time given to ſeveral Diſhes, and made a kind of Sect among the Cooks. We have a Treatiſe de Re Culinaria, under the Name of Caelius Apicius, which ſome Critics judge to be very ancient, though they do not take it to be compoſed by either of theſe three Apicii (g). Some chuſe to call the Author of this Book Apicius Caelius. A learned Dane is of this Number, who aſcribes this Work to Him, who ſent the Oyſters to the Emperor Trajan. This Book was found, by Albanus Torinus, in the Iſland of Maguelone, near Montpellier, who publiſhed it, Twelve Years after, at Baſil [B]. It had been found elſewhere, near an hundred Years before, by Enoch d'Aſcoli, in the time of Pope Nicolas V (b). There was in the Title-Page M. Cæcilius Apicius. Voſſius (i) is of Opinion, that the Author's Name was M. Caelius, or M. Cæcilius; and that he intituled his Work, Apicius, becauſe it treated of Cookery. In the Remarks of Caſaubon on Athenæus, there are ſome Particulars relating to our Apicius

(f) Athen. lib. 1. p. 7.

(g) Borrichius, Cogit. de variis Linguæ Lat. Ætatibus, pag. 18.

(b) Platina in Vita Nicolai V.

(i) Voſſ. de Analogia, lib. 1. c. 14. pag. 55.

& criſtas vivis gallinaceis demptas, linguas pavonum, & luſciniarum (3). There is another Paſſage in Juvenal, in which Apicius ſignifies, in general, one who it very expenſive in eating.

(3) Lamprid. in Heliogabalo, c. 19. pag. 835. See likewiſe cap. 18. pag. 827. & cap. 24. p. 857.

- - - - quid enim majore cachinno
Excipitur vulgi quam pauper Apicius (4) ?

(4) Juven. Sat. 11. ver. 2.

- - - - what greater Jeſts,
Than begging Gluttons, or than Beggar's Feaſts ?
CONGREVE.

It is childiſh, then, in ſome Commentators, to underſtand, here, either the Apicius of the firſt Book of Athenæus (5), or Him of the fourth Satire of Juvenal (6).

(5) Bernardus Autumnus upon this Paſſage of Juvenal.

(6) Farnaby upon the ſame.

[B] This Book was found, by Albanus Torinus, in the Iſland of Maguelone, near Montpellier, who publiſhed it twelve Years after, at Baſil.] He procured it to be printed in 4to, in the Year 1541, and added to it the Treatiſe of Paul Ægineta, de facultatibus alimentorum, which he had tranſlated, and the ten Books of Platina, de tuenda valetudine, de natura rerum, & popinæ ſcientia. He tells us, in his Preface, that, having made a Journey to the Iſland of Maguelone, twelve Years before, with Will. Pelliſſier (7), he had there ſeen a Manuſcript, in which he found, by tracing the Characters, the Title of CAELII APITII DE RE CULINARIA LIBRI X. He was very well pleaſed with this Diſcovery, and procured an exact Copy to be taken of the Work: He immediately found, that it was the Production of an ancient Author. But, the Manuſcript being in great Diſorder, he thought it neceſſary, before he ſent it to the Preſs, to collate it with the Copy of Venice; for which he waited a long time. At length it was ſent him; but he found it more imperfect, than That of Maguelone. He would have given up all Thoughts of printing this Work, if ſome Men of Learning had not obliged him, by their Complaints, and Importunity, to publiſh it. The ſame Year there was a ſecond Edition of it, in 8vo, publiſhed at Lyons, by Sebaſtian Gryphius. It was publiſhed at Zurich, in the Year 1542, in 4to, with the Notes and Corrections of Gabriel Humelbergius. I do not think Geſner or Simler deſerve Cenſure, for ſaying, that the ſame Work was printed at Venice, before Albanus Torinus brought it to light. It is pretended, they did not rightly underſtand the Expreſſions of this Torinus. In Bibl. Simlero-Geſneriana dicuntur Apicii libri primum excuſi Venetiis, quod acceptum eſt ex male intellectis Torini verbis in dedicatione. His Expreſſions are theſe: " Premendum plane cenſebam, donec melioris alicu- " jus exemplaris fieret copia, quod acceperam eſſe " annis ab hinc plus minus quinquaginta Venetiis ex- " preſſum (9). - - - - - - I thought it ought to be ſup- " preſſed, 'till I could procure a more correct Copy, " ſuch an one as I am informed was printed at Venice, " about fifty Years ago." Though it does not appear, with the utmoſt clearneſs, from theſe Words, that they relate to an Impreſſion of the Work, yet it is excuſable to underſtand them ſo. And, in Fact, a certain Bibliographer affirms, that Apicius was printed at Venice, in the Year 1503, in 4to. apud Johan. de Cereto de Tridino (10). The Heirs of Andrew Wechel had ſome Thoughts of reprinting this Work: Pignorius offered them a fair Manuſcript of it by Velſerus (11). But it did not go forward. There was an Apicius, in the Library of the Dukes of Urbin, the Characters whereof are like thoſe of the Florentine Pandects. It is, at preſent, in the Vatican. Gudius compared it with the Edition of Lyons (12). By the way, Albanus Torinus has been ſeverely cenſured for pretending to diſcover the true Air and Taſte of Antiquity in this Author. " Olfaciebam ſtatim autorem " eſſe vetuſtiſſimum, & obſopoeum, qui de re popi- " nali, lingua coquinaria, egregie præter cæteros " ſcripſiſſet, & qui obſonia delicatius, quam pro ea " ætate qua glandibus veſcerenter homines, confeciſ- " ſet (13). - - - - - - I immediately diſcovered, that he " was a very ancient Author, and Maſter of the Art " of Cookery, who had excelled all others in writing " concerning Eatables, in the Style of the Kitchen; " and one who had a nicer Hand at dreſſing a Dinner, " than could be expected in that Age, when Men lived " upon Acorns." Latinus Latinius affirms, that a Man muſt be very ſtupid to paſs ſuch a Judgment, and that this pretended Apicius is a meer Fool, and a Barbarian; ſome of whoſe Diſhes, and Sauces are only fit to fetch the Skin off one's Mouth, and offend the Stomach. " In Latini Latinii Bibl. Profana, ubi " quædam illius viri docti in Apicium obſervationes " leguntur, ad verba Editoris, ubi in præfat. ait ſe " ſtatim olfeciſſe autorem eſſe vetuſtiſſimum, hæc no- " ta occurrit: Quam vereor ne tuæ nares obeſiores " fuerint; Quid enim vetuſtatis redolere poſſunt verba " ſemibarbara & ab eo florenti ſeculo prorſus aliena ? " Ego vero, ut quod ſentio paucis expediam, commentum " puto eſſe hominis otioſiſſimi, qui cum illudere poſteris " ejuſdem naris facile ſibi eſſe perſuaſiſſet, mentito no- " mine Apicium credidit venditare poſſe. Sed paſſim oc- " curruunt, quibus pœne manifeſto prodit ſeipſum autor " ineptus, barbarus, & nullius in ea arte ingenii, aut " guſtus, qui ea interdum conjungat ad ſaporis gra- " tiam, quæ uſu docente omnes ſcimus ſummam palato " moleſtiam, nauſeamque ſtomacho, creare ſolere (14). " —— In Latinus Latinius's Bibliotheca Profana, " where are ſome of this learned Man's Obſervations " on Apicius, we meet with the following Remark on " the Editor's Words, in his Preface, where he ſays, " that he immediately ſmelt him out to be a very " ancient Author. How afraid am I, that your " ſmelling is not very good? For what ſavour of " Antiquity is there in Words ſo barbarous, and " quite foreign to the Style of that flouriſhing Age. " To give my own Opinion briefly, I look upon it " to be the Invention of ſome one, who had no- " thing elſe to do; who, believing he might eaſily " impoſe upon Perſons of the ſame Taſte in future " Times, thought it would go off under the borrowed " Name of Apicius. But there are numberleſs Paſ- " ſages, which diſcover the Author's Ignorance, Bar- " bariſm, and want of Genius and Taſte, in often " joining thoſe things together, by way of Reliſh, " which we all know, by Experience, are trouble- " ſome to the Palate, and nauſeous to the Stomach." This Judgment of Latinius is not amiſs. Iſaac Grangæus had better have conformed to it, than pretended, that the ten Books de Re Coquinaria, which go under the Name of Apicius, were written by our ſecond Apicius (15). I confeſs, the Scholiaſt of Juvenal obſerves, that this Apicius wrote a Treatiſe of Cookery (16). I own, likewiſe, that Iſidorus of Seville attributes a like Work to the ſame Apicius. " Coquinæ apparatum Apicius quidam primus compo- " ſuit, qui in eo abſumptis bonis morte voluntaria " periit (17). ——— One Apicius was the firſt, who " wrote a Treatiſe of Cookery, and who, having ſpent " his Fortune in eating, killed himſelf." But the Te-

(12) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, in Biblioth. Lat. Append.

(13) Alban. Torinus, in Epiſt. Dedic.

(14) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, ubi ſupra, in Append. p. 179.

(15) Iſaacus Grangæus in Juvenal. Sat. 4. ver. 23.

(16) Auctor præcipiendarum cænarum, qui ſcripſit de juſcellis: fuit enim exemplum gulæ. Vetus Seb liaſt. in Juven. Sat. 4. ver. 23.

(17) Iſidor. Hiſpalenſ. Orig. l. 20. cap. 4. apud Joh. Alb. Fabric. Bibl. Lat. pag. 132.

(8) Joh. Albertus Fabricius in Bibliotheca Latina, pag. 130. Edit. Hamburg. 1697.

(9) Albanus Torinus in Epiſt. Dedicat.

(10) Merckl inus in Lindenio renovato, p 85.

(11) See the Letters of Reineſius to Daumius, pag. 109.

Digitized by Google

Apicius (k). I have discovered some Mistakes, on this head, in different Authors (C), which I shall throw together in one single Remark.

(k) Casaub. in Athen. lib. 1 c. 6. & lib. 4. cap. 19.

stimony of these two Writers is not sufficient to counterpoise the Silence of so many Authors, more worthy of Credit, and who have had unavoidable Opportunities of quoting this Book of Apicius. Be it as it will, we are obliged, by all the Laws of just Criticism, to conclude, that, if ever any such Work had been extant, That, which Albanus Torinus published, was not It.

[C] I have discovered some Mistakes, on this Head, in different Authors.] I begin with Mr Moreri; he should not have said, either that the Apicius, mentioned by Seneca, wrote a Book concerning the Delicacy of Eating, or that he hanged himself in Despair, when he found he had spent his whole Estate. Mr Moreri quotes Seneca, lib. de Consol. This is too indeterminate, since we have three Treatises of this Philosopher, entituled, De Consolatione. He should have cited That, which he addressed to his Mother. It appears from thence, that Apicius poisoned himself, upon looking over his Accounts, and finding, that he had but the Sum of Two hundred fifty thousand Livres left, all his Debts paid (18). " Ære alie-
" no oppressus rationes suas tunc primum coactus in-
" spexit. Superfuturum sibi sestertium centies com-
" putavit, &, velut in ultima fame victurus, si se-
" stertio centies vixisset, veneno vitam finivit. Quan-
" ta luxuria erat, cui sestertium centies egestas fuit
" (19)! ——— Oppressed with Debts, he was drove " to the Necessity of looking into his Accounts. Upon a
" Computation, he found he should have but One hundred " thousand Sesterti * left; and, as if he would have
" been driven to the last Extremity of Want, if obliged
" to live upon only this Sum, he ended his Days by
" Poison. What Luxury was That, which accounted
" an Hundred thousand Sestertii meer Poverty!" Martial wrote the following Epigram upon this Subject.

(18) I make use of the Computation of Lipsius on Tacit. Ann. lib. 4. c. 1.

(19) Seneca de Consolat. ad Helviam, cap. 10.

* About 50,000 l. Sterling.

Dederas, Apici, bis tricenties ventri,
Sed adhuc supererat centies tibi laxum.
Hoc tu gravatus, ne famem & sitim ferres,
Summa venenum potione duxisti.
Nil est, Apici, tibi gulosius factum (20).

(20) Martial. Epigr. 22. lib. 3.

You expended, O Apicius, in eating and drinking, Six hundred thousand Sesterces; yet an Hundred thousand still remained. Uneasy at this, and to avoid Hunger and Thirst, you took Poison. This last Draught, O Apicius, was the most extravagant you ever took.

Not to follow the Author one quotes, as to the particular kind of Death, is a slight Fault; but it is leaving out all the Marvellous of this History, to suppress the Sums this Prodigal had remaining. The Quotation from Athenæus, lib. 11, is entirely wrong. Lastly, Mr Moreri ought to have known, that there were three Apicii, and not have confined himself to one. Charles Stephens pretends, that the Apicius, mentioned by Seneca (21), hanged himself; and that he had published a Book de Gulæ Irritamentis, which is to this Day in every one's Hand. No good Critic believes, that the Work, which we have de re Culinaria, belongs to this Apicius, whom Seneca mentions (22). Be that as it will, this was the Foundation of Mr Moreri's Mistake. He found there, that Apicius hanged himself; and that he wrote a Book of the Delicacy of Eating. He ought to have learned from the same place, that Apicius had Two hundred and fifty thousand Francs left; for it is a Fact, which Charles Stephens has not omitted. Lloyd has followed Charles Stephens in every thing, except saying, that the Work, de Gulæ Irritamentis, is, to this Day in every one's Hands. He has enlarged this Article considerably, by copying what Lipsius has observed concerning the three Apicii. But he did not know, that the Passage of Suidas, concerning the Oysters sent to Trajan into Parthia, is to be found in Athenæus. The Memories of the greatest Men often fail them. Lipsius quotes Athenæus twice in relation to the Apicii, but forgets a third Passage of the same Author, as remarkable, at least, as either of the other two (23). If he had consulted it, he would not have suspected, that the Word Trajan was corrupted in Suidas. Hofman has done little more than copy Lloyd; only he has cited more Passages. His Quotations are not always the truest; for Example, he quotes Seneca de Consolatione ad Albin. & de Consol. ad Elbiam, as if they were two different Pieces. Casaubon (24), makes Athenæus say, that several kind of Cakes bore the Name of the first Apicius; but it is certain, that Athenæus says this of the second Apicius; of Him, who lived in the time of the Emperor Tiberius (25); Ἐγένετο καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς Τιβερίου χρόνους ἀνήρ τις Ἀπικιὸς, πολυσιώταλος, τρυφητὴς, ἀφ' ἧς πολλὰ γένη πολλὰ Ἀπίκια ὀνομάζεται. Tiberii sæculo vixit Apicius, vir ditissimus, luxu solutus, à quo complura placentarum genera Apicia nominant. DALECHAMP has left an Error in the Translation of Athenæus, which might easily have been perceived. It is in the fourth Book, page 168. Athenæus, having repeated what Posidonius had said concerning the first Apicius, a Man infamous for his Gluttony, adds, Περὶ δὲ Ἀπικίου τοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ ἀφωνίᾳ διαφορᾷ ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις εἰρήκαμεν; which signifies, that, from the beginning, he meant the Apicius, who was also famous for his Gluttony. The Latin Translation, therefore, is false. Antea nos quoque istius Apicii ob immodicum luxum famosi meminimus. I say this is doubly false; for it does not come up to the Force of the Greek Words, and imputes a Lye to Athenæus. It is not true, that Athenæus had before spoken of the Apicius, whom Posidonius had mentioned. Dalechamp observes, that Athenæus spoke, in his third Book, of the Apicius now in question, at the beginning of the seventh Page (26). I believe this is false. I say nothing of his citing Cælius, lib. 5. cap. 30 (27). He means Coelius Rhodiginus, whose fifth Book has but fourteen Chaapters: He should have cited the eleventh Chapter of the ninth Book (28). This Author says several things, there, of Apicius; but if he falsifies, every where else, what he quotes, as he does here a Passage of Athenæus, unhappy for Those, who take things upon trust from him. Athenæus, according to Him, relates, that Apicius, enquiring diligently after a particular kind of Lobsters in Alexandria, was informed, that very large ones were taken on the Coast of Libya: He immediately set sail thither; and, finding he was sent on a Fool's Errand, he cursed the Country, and resolved never to return thither. Athenæus relates no such thing; he only says, that Apicius eat a kind of Water-Locusts at Minturnæ in Campania, which were larger than the Lobsters of Alexandria; and, being informed, that there were some in Africa of an exceeding Largeness, he sailed thither without Delay, and under great Inconveniencies. The Fishermen, being informed of his Arrival, came and brought him the largest they had taken; and, being assured from them, that there were no larger, he returned to Minturnæ, without ever setting Foot on Shore in Africa (29).

(21) Charles Stephens cites, In libro de Consolatione ad Albinam. Casaubon in Athen. pag. 23. cites the same.

(22) See Remark [B] towards the End.

(23) It is That of the first Book, pag. 7.

(24) In Athen. p. 23.

(25) Athen. pag. 7.

(26) Dalechamp. Not. in Athen. pag. 706.

(27) Id. ib.

(28) I do not deny, that the first Edition of Rhodiginus was divided into Books and Chapters, after a different manner from That generally made use of at present.

The modern Author, whom I have cited, was mistaken in saying, that the Manuscript of Apicius was found in the Island of Maguelone, by Enoch d'Ascoli, in the Pontificate of Nicolas V. He relies on the Authority of Leander Albertus, and on That of Philip of Bergamo. " Ut tradit, says he (30), Leander Alber-
" tus Bononiensis in Descriptione Italiæ, pag. 267,
" & Philippus Bergomas in Chronici continuatione,
" qui M. Cæcilium appellat. —— As we read in Le-
" ander Albertus's Description of Italy, pag. 267;
" and Philip of Bergamo's Chronicle continued, who
" calls him M. Cæcilius." But neither of these Authors mention the Island of Maguelone; and it is certain, that the Manuscript was found, in That Place, only by Albanus Torinus, in the Year 1529. Philip of Bergamo, without any mention of the Place, says only, that, in the time of Nicolas V, Enoch d'Ascoli found these two Books, Porphyrion on Horace, and M. Cæcilius Apicius. This he says, under the Year 1454. Herman Buschius agrees with him, as to the time. These are the Words of Leander Albertus: " Cujus (Enochi Asculani) industria M. Cælius Api-
" tius, & Pomponius Porphyrio in Horatium, circa
" Nicolaum V. Pontif. inventi ac è tenebris in lucem
" vindicati sunt (31). —— By whose (Enoch d'As-
" coli's) Care M. Cælius Apitius, and Pomponius
" Porphyrion upon Horace, were found, and brought
" to light, about the time of Pope Nicolas V." Volaterran affirms, that Suidas says, Marcus Apicius composed a Book De Gula. Robert Stephens, a great Copier of Volaterran, affirms the same in his Eluci-

(29) Athen. lib. 1. p. 7.

(30) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, Biblioth. Lat. pag. 129.

(31) Leand. Albert. in Descript. Ital. p. 404.

Digitized by Google

darium Poëticum. They have been both cenſured: "Vellem locum indicaſſet, ſays our Modern (32), hoc "enim apud Suidam non reperio. —— I wiſh they "had pointed out the Place; for I find no ſuch thing "in Suidas."

(32) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, ubi ſupra, pag. 132.

APIANUS (PETRUS), a German Mathematician, in the XVIth Century. I ſhall add but one Thing to what Mr Moreri has ſaid of him; which is, that he is accuſed of having been a Plagiary from Roiaumont [A].

[A] Of having been a Plagiary from Roiaumont.] They, who would ſwell the Liſts of Plagiaries, already publiſhed, may, if they pleaſe, make uſe of this Paſſage of G. B. Benedetti. "Hæc omnia tradita fuerunt & ſcriptis mandata ab antiquis, & à "recentioribus uſurpata, ut facile deprehendi poteſt "in Eraſmo Oſualdo, qui omnem fere ſui primi "mobilis rationem à Petro Apiano deſumpſit; Petrus verò Apianus hæc eadem cum multis aliis Poſitionibus à Monte Regio accipiens ſibi ipſi aſcripſit (1). —— All theſe things were delivered, and committed to Writing, by the Ancients; and have been uſurped by the Moderns; as may eaſily be ſeen in Eraſmus Oſſualdus, who borrowed the whole Scheme of his Primum Mobile from Petrus Apianus; who borrowed it, with many other Propoſitions, from Roiaumont."

(1) Joh. Baptiſta Benedictus, de Gnomonum umbrarumque ſolarium uſu, cap. 2. fol. 2.

APION, a famous Grammarian, and Native of Oaſis, in Egypt [A], exerciſed his Profeſſion at Rome, in the Reign of the Emperor Tiberius (a). No one can deny, that he was a Learned Man [B]; and that he had, with great Diligence, traced thoſe Paths of Antiquity, which are the leaſt known, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf for the Exactneſs, and Variety of his Knowledge: But he had all the Pride of a thorough-paced Pedant [C]; and ſpent his Time in Queſtions of great Difficulty, and little Importance [D]. The Emperor Tiberius was no Stranger to the Failings of This

(a) Suidas in Ἀπίων.

[A] APION, a famous Grammarian, and Native of Oaſis, in Egypt.] I cannot conceive why, in Moreri's Dictionary, they give us this Grammarian under two Articles, firſt under the Name of Apian, and afterwards under That of Appion, without apprizing us, that they are but one Perſon. I believe no Men of Learning ever called him Apian; and I am certain, that they, who pretend to Exactneſs, never call him Appion. Their Reaſon is, becauſe his Name was borrowed from Apis, an Egyptian Divinity; and not from Appia, a Roman Family (1). His Country is ſtrangely miſ-ſpelled by Moreri; who has changed it into Oſias. The Supplement has rectified it. Suidas obſerves, that Heliconius had ſaid, that Apion was of the Iſle of Crete; but doubtleſs he was of Oaſis, ſince Joſephus affirms it; and accuſes him of abjuring his Country, in order to paſs for an Alexandrian (2). This Accuſation of Joſephus would have been of no weight, though he had not exaggerated, and dreſſed it up in ſuch a multitude of Words. For Apion, in calling himſelf an Alexandrian, after he had been made free of the City of Alexandria, did no more, than what ſeveral other renowned Profeſſors had practiſed before. The Sirname of Pliſtonices, which was appropiated to him (3), had an Import very much to his Advantage (4); but it is not known, for what Reaſon they gave him this Appellation. Suidas will have him the Son of a Perſon, whoſe Name was Pliſtonices. Ἀπίων ὁ Πλειστονίκης. But, in this Caſe, the Sirname imports nothing in his Praiſe. Others ſay, that his Father's Name was Poſidonius, Ἀπίων ὁ Ποσειδωνίου (5). It is not impoſſible, that the Tranſcribers might have changed Πλειστονίκης into Ποσειδωνίου.

(1) Voſſius de Hiſt. Græc. pag. 531.

(2) Joſeph. contra Apionem, lib. 2.

(3) Plinius, lib. 37. cap. 5. Aul. Gellius, lib. 5. cap. 14. & lib. 6. cap. 7.

(4) Ἀπίων ὁ γραμματικὸς ὁ Πλειστονίκης ἐπικληθείς. Apion the Grammarian, who was ſirnamed Πλειστονίκης that is, often a Conqueror. Clem. Alexandr. Strom. lib. 1. pag. 320.

(5) Jul. Africanus apud Euſebium. Præp. Evan. lib. 10. cap. 10. pag. 490. Juſtin. Admonit. ad Græcos, pag. 9.

[B] No one can deny, that he was a learned Man.] Tatian ſtiles him a Man of great Renown, ἀνὴρ δοκιμώτατος (6). Aulus Gellius ſpeaks of him after the ſame manner. "Literis homo multis præditus, "rerumque Græcarum plurima atque varia ſcientia "fuit: ejus libri non incelebres feruntur, quibus omniam ferme quæ mirifica in Ægypto viſuntur audiunturque hiſtoria comprehenditur (7). —— He was a Man of great Learning; and had an extenſive Knowledge in Greek Affairs. His Books are well eſteemed, in which is contained an Account of almoſt every thing wonderful and curious in Egypt." So much for his Learning; what follows, diſcovers his talkative and confident Behaviour; "facile atque alacri facundia fuit (8). —— He was of a ready and forward Elocution." But let us not incroach on the following Remark.

(6) Tatian, apud Euſeb. Præpar. lib. 10. cap. 11. pag. 493. D.

(7) Aul. Gell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

(8) Id. lib. 6. cap. 7.

(9) Id lib. 5. cap. 14.

[C] He had all the Pride of a thorough-paced Pedant.] Aulus Gellius repreſents him as an errant Braggadocio. "In his quæ audiviſſe vel legiſſe ſeſe dicit, "fortaſſe à vitio ſtudioque oſtentationis ſit loquacior. "Eſt enim ſane in prædicandis doctrinis ſuis venditator (9). —— Concerning thoſe Things, which he pretends to have heard or read, he is more than commonly talkative; perhaps through the Vice and Deſire of Oſtentation. For, in recommending his own Opinions, he is a perfect Tradeſman." Apion boaſted, with the utmoſt Aſſurance, that he beſtowed Immortality on thoſe, to whom he dedicated his Works. Never was a Prediction or Promiſe, more falſe. Not one of his Books has withſtood the Injuries of Time; and, if other Authors had not informed us who he was, his Name and Perſon had been unknown at this Day: He did nothing, then, in favour of thoſe, whoſe Names he placed in the Front of his Works. Let us cite the entire Paſſage from Pliny. "Apion quidam Grammaticus, hic "quem Tiberius Cæſar cymbalum mundi vocabat, "quum publicæ famæ tympanum potius videri poſſet, immortalitate donari à ſe ſcripſit, ad quos aliqua componebat (10). —— One Apion, a Grammarian, he whom Tiberius Cæſar was wont to call the Cymbal of the World, though he rather ſeems to have been the Drum of public Fame, pretended, that he conferred Immortality on thoſe, to whom he dedicated any Compoſition." Mr de Tillemont owns, that he does not underſtand what Pliny means to ſay of our Apion in this Paſſage (11): And I would make the ſame Confeſſion, rather than take up with the Explication given by the Supplement to Moreri. He boaſted, they are the Words of the Supplement, that he immortalized thoſe, to whom he dedicated any of his Works. Which made the Emperor Tiberius call him the Cymbal of the World: Whereupon Pliny ſays, that he ought rather to be called the Drum of the World, becauſe he always gave a diſagreeable Sound. But firſt, It is not true, that Pliny any where ſays, that the Emperor called him Cymbalum Mundi, becauſe he ſet ſuch a Value on his Dedications. In the ſecond Place, Pliny does not ſay, that he rather deſerved to be called the Drum of the World; he makes uſe of the Phraſe Publicæ Famæ Tympanum, which has a particular Force, to repreſent this Perſon as a kind of Public Crier, who, by beat of Drum, or ſound of Trumpet, publiſhes to all the Inhabitants of a City, what every one is to be informed of. In the third Place, Pliny does not ſay, that, becauſe Apion gave but an unpleaſant Sound, he deſerved the Appellation of Tympanum, rather than Cymbalum. Who told the Continuator of Moreri, that the Cymbal is more pleaſing than the Drum?

(10) Plin. in Præfatione Natur. Hiſtoriæ.

(11) Tillemont's Hiſtory of the Emperors, Tom. 1. pag. 776.

ERRORS of the Supplement to Moreri. See alſo Remark [E].

[D] And ſpent his Time in Queſtions of great Difficulty, and little Importance.] Jul. Africanus calls him the Buſieſt of all Grammarians; or one, who carried his Enquiries to the utmoſt Scrupulouſneſs and Nicety; περιεργότατον γραμματικῶν (12). According to Suidas, he obtained the Sirname of Μόχθος. The Word ſignifies Toil, and has more Force, in this Place, than Μοχθηρὸς, Laborious, or Importunate; which, according to the Conjecture of a learned Man (13), might have crept into Suidas, inſtead of Μόχθος. Didymus, who is ſirnamed Καλκέντερος (14), that

(12) Jul. African. apud. Euſebium, Præp. Evang. lib. 10. cap. 10.

(13) Tillemont, ubi ſupra.

Digitized by Google

This Wit: For, though perhaps we do not understand all that this Prince meant (b), yet we may easily perceive, that he took Apion for a Romancer, who stunned the World with too loud an Ostentation of his Learning. This Person was Chief of the Embassy, which the People of Alexandria sent to Caligula, to complain against the Jews, who were settled in their City, and with whom they were at great variance. He set out for Rome, together with two other Deputies. The Jews, on their part, deputed Three (c) of their Body to Caligula to justify their Conduct. Philo was Chief of the Embassy. Apion, animated by That Hatred, which the Egyptians had born, time out of mind, to the Jewish Nation, accused them of various Crimes; and insisted chiefly on those, which he knew would most exasperate Caligula against them; namely, That the Jews refused to consecrate Images to him [E], and to swear by his Name; while all the other Subjects of the Empire dedicated Temples and Altars to him (d). One of Apion's Principal Pieces was That Of the Antiquities of Egypt. It was doubtless in this Book, that he gave so ample an Account of the Pyramids, that Pliny thought him worthy to be ranked among the Twelve Authors, who have treated on this Subject (e). He spoke very disobligingly of the Jews in the same Book; nor was he satisfyed with treating them ill on every Occasion, which offered in his Antiquities of Egypt; he wrote a Book expressly against them (f). Josephus thought himself obliged to confute the malicious Calumnies, with which this Author had loaded them [F]. Apion was not alive, when this Answer

(b) See Remark [C].

(c) According to Josephus, Antiq. l. 18. cap. 10. for Philo, pag. 1043, says that the Jewish Deputies were three in Number.

(d) Joseph. Antiquit. lib. 18. cap. 10.

(e) Plin. lib. 36. cap 12. See also lib. 37. cap. 5.

(f) Justin. Paren. ad Græcos, p. 9. Clem. Alex. Stromat. l. 1. pag. 320.

(14), that is to say, The Man with Entrails of Brass, had, in the Person of Apion, a Disciple, who was his perfect Imitator. Apion, as laborious as his Master, had, like him, a Surname, which expressed this Temper. I think the Disciple had no better Taste, than his Master, in the Choice of his Subjects. Didymus composed Treatises on the Place of Homer's Birth, on the True Mother of Æneas, and on the Manners of Anacreon and Sappho (15). His Disciple was so earnestly intent upon tracing Homer's Country and Family, that he had recourse to Magic, to discover them. He thought he had made a wonderful Discovery, when he found, that the two first Letters of the Iliad, considered numerically, amounted to Forty eight; on this Foundation, he affirmed, that Homer deferred, 'till he had finished both his Poems, writing the first Line of the Iliad; and then pitched upon a Word to begin with, the two first Letters of which denoted, that both Poems, together, contained Forty eight Books. This savours strongly of the Mysteries of the Cabalists. This Man, who was so violent an Enemy of the Jews, gave naturally enough into their Dreams, in regard to the mysterious Position of Letters. Be that as it will, let us produce Proofs of the Facts here advanced. "Quæ- "rat aliquis quæ sint mentiti veteres magi, cum "adolescentibus nobis Apion Grammaticus prodide- "rit cynocephaliam herbam, quæ in Ægypto voca- "retur Osyrites, divinam & contra omnia veneficia: "sed si tota erueretur, statim eum qui eruisset, mori: "seque evocasse umbras ad percontandum Homerum "quanam patria, quibusque parentibus genitus esset, "non tamen ausus profiteri, quid sibi respondisse "diceret (16). - - - - - - Let any one enquire, if he "pleases, after the Fictions of the ancient Magici-"ans; when, in our own Memory, the Grammarian "Apion pretended, that the Dog's-head Flower, called "in Egypt Osyrites, had a divine Virtue, even a- "gainst all kinds of Sorcery; but, that, if it was "wholly rooted up, the Person, who pulled it out of "the Ground, would immediately die; and that he "had summon'd the Shades, to enquire of Homer, "where he was born, and who were his Parents; "but that he did not dare to reveal the Answer he "had received." It appears, by this Passage, that Apion himself boasted in his Writings, that he had had recourse to Magic, for a Conference with Homer; and that he made a Secret of the Answers, which were made to his Demands. This savours a little of the Mountebank. Pliny's Opinion of this Person is very plain. Seneca had no great Esteem for him. "Api- "on, Grammaticus, says he (17), qui sub C. Cæsare to- "ta circumlatus est Græcia (18), & in nomen Homeri "ab omnibus civitatibus adoptatus, aiebat, Homerum, "utraque materia consummata, & Odyssea & Iliade, "principium adjecisse operi suo quo bellum Troja- "num complexus est. Hujus rei argumentum af- "ferebat, quod duas literas (19) in primo versu po- "suisset ex industria librorum suorum numerum con- "tinentes (20). - - - - - Apion, the Grammarian, "who, in the Time of Caius Cæsar, travelled up and "down Greece, and was adopted in every City, as ano- "ther Homer, pretended, that Homer, after having "finished both his Poems, the Iliad, and the Odyssey, "added the first Line to That Work, which comprehend- "ed the Trojan War. The Reason he gave for this "was, because there are two Letters designedly placed "in the first Verse, which denote the Number of the "Books." We learn from these Words, that this Grammarian won the Hearts of all Greece; since they received him in all their Cities as a second Homer, or as Homer himself risen from the Dead. A Man of Learning, and at the same time of Impudence and Pride, imposes upon great Numbers of People by his ostentatious Talk.

(11) Amm. Marcellin lib. 22. cap. ult. pag. 344.

(12) Seneca Epist. 88. pag. 361.

(16) Plinius, lib. 30. c. p. 2. sub. fin.

(17) Seneca, Epist. 88.

(18) The Manuscript of Lipsius, on these Words of Seneca, approves this reading, and pretends that Apion was a Mountebank and a Jack-pudding. Agyrta fuit & circulator.

(19) The first Word of the Iliad is Μηνιν. The Letter μ stands for 40, the Letter ν for 8.

(20) Compare with this Plutarch. Sympos. lib. 9. cap. 3. pag. 739.

[E] The Jews refused to consecrate Images to him.] This was the chief Accusation, as Josephus particularly relates, in the Place cited by the Continuator of Moreri: And, as They were the Jews of Alexandria, whom Apion had Orders to accuse, it is plain the Question was not what the Jews of Jerusalem did, or did not do. And yet, if we may believe our Continuator, this was in reality the Case; nor was it the City of Alexandria, which remonstrated against the Jews, but Caligula himself, who complained, that they would not admit his Statue into the Temple of God. It is true, this Emperor used his utmost Endeavours to have his Statue placed in the Temple of Jerusalem (21); but it is equally true, that neither Philo's Embassy, nor This of Apion, relates to this Fact. Philo, when he so particularly relates the Complaints, and the Questions of Caligula, makes no mention of this Statue in the Temple (22). Caligula complains, in general, that the Jews were the only People, who refused to honour him as a God. Apion had already put him out of Temper on this Subject, that he might prevent his doing them Justice in the main Dispute. The Matter in hand related properly to the Privileges, which the Jews ought to have enjoyed in Alexandria: Their Cause was good, and they would have gained it before unprejudiced Judges. But what does Apion do? He gives the Cause a different Turn; he renders the Jews odious to Caligula; he has recourse to Accusations of Impiety, and amuses the Court with captious Points. Thus false Zealots act, at this very Day, to support themselves in a most unjust Authority over Conscience, as well as all other Concerns. This can never be too often repeated.

(21) Philo de legat.

(22) Ib. pag. 1041, & seq.

[F] Josephus thought himself obliged to confute the malicious Calumnies, with which this Author had loaded them.] Mr Moreri's Continuator commits another Blunder in this Place. This, says he, induced Josephus, afterwards, to write the Life and Errors of Apion. It is not true, that Josephus wrote the Life of this Grammarian; and it is speaking very inaccurately to say, that he wrote his Errors. These Words naturally suggest this Thought; that Josephus wrote a Book of Controversy against Apion's Heresies. The Truth is; Being informed, that several Critics had risen up against his Jewish Antiquities, not to condemn the Form, or Stile, of it, but to accuse him of a thousand Fables devised for the Advantage of his Nation; He wrote an Apology; in which swer was written; for the Author makes a Reflexion in it on the Manner of his Death. He affirms, that, after this Man had scoffed so much at the Jewish Ceremonies, not considering, that his injurious Treatment of the Jews in some Manner reflected on the Ancient Laws of the Egyptians (g), he found himself seized with a Distemper, which required Incisions in his Natural Parts, and that, notwithstanding this Remedy, he died in extreme Torture (h). He boasted, that he had called up the Soul of Homer, to enquire the Place of That Poet's Birth, and his Family (i). The Titles of Four or Five of his Books are preserved [G].

Digitized by Google

(g) Among others That of Circumcision.

(h) Joseph. lib. 2. contra Apion fub fin.

(i) See Remark [D].

It is not true, that Apion relates, that Euphranor, intending to paint Jupiter, went to Athens to consult a Professor, who read Homer to his Scholars; and that This Painter drew an admirable Portrait of That God from the Description, which this Poet gives of Jupiter, in the first Book of the Iliad (k). This Error, which fell from Father Rapin, in the First Edition of his Reflexions on Poetry, was unmercifully censured by Vavasſor the Jesuit [H].

(k) Rapin. Reflex. sur la Poëtique n. 28. pag. 77. Edit. 1674.

which he replied to these Censures, and the Calumnies, which were published against the Jews. Half the Apology does not relate to Apion, though it is generally quoted, as if it were all against him. It is cited by Origen, under the Title, De Antiquitate gentis Judaicæ (23). - - - - Of the Antiquity of the Jewish Nation.

(23) Origen. contra Celsum.

[G] The Titles of four or five of his Books are preserved.] I have mentioned his Antiquities of Egypt, divided into five Books (24), as also his Treatise against the Jews. I add, that he composed a Treatise De Luxu Apicii (25), - - - - Of the Luxury of Apicius; another De Lingua Romana (26), - - - - Of the Latin Tongue; and another De Disciplina Metallica (27), - - - - Of the Knowledge of Metals. Suidas ascribes an History to him; wherein he treated of all Nations, ἔγραψεν ἱστορίαν κατ' ἔθνος, scripsit historiam de singulis gentibus. The famous History of the Lyon of Androcles is known only from the Relation of Apion, who speaks of it as an Eye-Witness. Aulus Gellius relates it after him (28). He is indebted to him for another Observation, to wit, the Reason why the Ancients wore a Ring on the Finger next to the little Finger of the left Hand. Apion gave a Reason for it, taken from some Anatomical Discoveries made in Egypt (29).

(24) Tatianus apud Euseb. Præp. pag. 493.

(25) Athen. lib. 7. pag. 294.

(26) Id. lib. 15. pag. 680.

(27) Plinius in Indice, lib. 35.

(28) Aul. Gell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

(29) Id. lib. 20. cap. 10.

[H] This Error, which fell from Father Rapin - - - - - - was unmercifully censured by Vavasſor the Jesuit.] He first relates the Fact, and then adds: "Guess, Reader, at the pleasant Blunder of the Reflector, through a Mistake of two Words of this "Commentator (30). Whereas I had said, as soon "as he came out of the Professor's School, he drew "the Picture of Jupiter; our Reflector, to express "these Words of Eustathius, καὶ ἀπιὼν ἔγραψεν, "& egressus pinxit, translated them, as Apion, the "Grammarian, wrote. Where the good Man was "much overseen; and was not aware, either that "the Participle ἀπιών is not Ἀπίων, as That Gram-"marian calls himself; or that the Verb ἔγραψεν "signifies in this Place, he painted, as γράφων & "γράφει are taken in the very same Sense before, "or, lastly, that ἀπιὼν, cum discessisset, answers to "the preceeding Verb παρῆν, adstitit. After all; "if the Reflector had himself seen this Passage of "Eustathius, I wonder he should thus misunder-"stand it, and if he took this Interpretation "from some other, I am yet more astonished, "that he should pretend to have read Eustathius, so "carefully noting a Passage, which he had never "seen (31).

(30) What is Eustathius.

(31) Remarques sur les nouvelles reflexions touchant la Poëtique, pag. 56, 57.

APOLLINARIS (CAIUS SULPITIUS), a very learned Grammarian, and a Native of Carthage [A], lived in the IId Century under the Antonines. He had for his Successor, in the Professorship of Grammar, Helvius Pertinax, who had been his Disciple, and was afterwards Emperor (a). He is supposed to be the Author of the Verses, which are prefixed to Terence's Comedies [B], and contain the Summary of them. There is extant an Epigram, which he composed on the Order Virgil gave to burn his Æneid [C]. Aulus Gellius, who had studied under him, mentions him often with Commendation [D]. I advise the Reader particularly to consult what he has said

(a) Jul Capitolinus in Pertinace, cap. 1.

[A] A Native of Carthage.] I have not met with any ancient Author, who informs me of this; I say it meerly on the Authority of some modern Authors, who have published Collections of Epigrams, or Catalecta of the ancient Poets.

[B] He is supposed to be the Author of the Verses, which are prefixed to Terence's Comedies.] I have read, in a Letter of Petrus Crinitus (1), that Politian had observed, that these Verses ought not to be ascribed to Terence, as is generally believed, but to Sulpitius Apollinaris. He adds, that, in a very ancient Manuscript of Terence, was to be read this Inscription in Capital Letters over the Summaries, G. SULPICI APOLLINARIS PERIOCHA. This Inscription has been of great Weight with the several Editors of Terence. Mr de Tillemont refers us to Sethus Calvisius concerning these Summaries (2). It is true, Calvisius mentions them under the Year 163. But he cites Suidas; and I much question, whether he ought to have done so. Mr de Tillemont is not in Fault, if we do not believe there are extant two Pieces more of Apollinaris. He * left some Letters, says he, and a Writing †, in which he reprimands another Grammarian, whose Name was Cæsellius Vindex.

(1) It is among those of Politian, the 22d of the 12th Book, Edition of Paris, 1526, in 4to.

(2) Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 589.

* Gellius, lib. 15. cap. 5.

† Id. lib. 2. cap. 16.

[C] There is extant an Epigram, which he composed on the Order Virgil gave to burn his Æneid.] It is but a single Distich; and is This:

Infelix alio cecidit prope Pergamon igne,
Et pœne est alio Troja cremata rogo.

Troy almost perish'd in a second Flame.

These Verses make us regret the Loss of others. Versus habemus ejus aliquos de Æneide Maronis, qui deperditorum accendunt sitim (3). These are the Jesuit Brietius's Words. I wonder he does not mention the Summaries of Terence; and more, that Vossius says nothing of our Poet. I confess, he speaks of an Apollinaris, whom Gyraldus has reckoned among the Latin Poets. But, since This Apollinaris lived in Martial's Time (4), it is plain he is different from our Grammarian. Besides, all who are Lovers of Poetry are not Poets: So that we have Reason to oppose Gyraldus, in giving the Title of Poet to the Apollinaris of Martial, on account of the Pleasure this Apollinaris took in Martial's Poetry. "Eum in poëtis "memorat Lilius, sed non sat firmo argumento; "nec enim, si delectaretur epigrammatis, eo & ipse "fuerit Poëta (5). - - - - - Lilius Gyraldus ranks him "among the Poets; but his Reason is not a sufficient "one; for it does not follow, that, because he was fond "of Epigrams, he was therefore a Poet."

(3) Brietius de Poët. Lat. pag. 42.

(4) He addresses to him the 25th Epigram of the 7th Book.

(5) Vossius de Poët. Lat. pag. 50.

[D] Aulus Gellius - - - - mentions him often with Commendation (6)]. He calls him virum præstanti literarum scientia (7), - - - A Man of remarkable Learning; Hominem memoriæ nostræ doctissimum (8), - - - The most learned Man of our Times; Virum eleganti scientia ornatum (9), - - - - A Man of polite Learning; Virum in memoria nostra præter alios doctum (10), - - - - A Man superior in Learning to all whom we remember. See the thirteenth Chapter of his twelfth Book. He

(6) Aul. Gell. Noctes Atticæ. lib. 6. cap. 6, & lib. 13. cap. 16, & lib. 20, cap. 6.

(7) Lib. 6, cap. 17.

(8) Lib. 13, cap. 16.

(9) Lib. 16, cap. 5.

(10) Lib. 18, cap. 4.

Digitized by Google

ſaid of him in the fourth Chapter of the eighteenth Book: He will there ſee the true Picture of a Pretender to Learning; and the genteel manner, in which Apollinaris ridiculed one of this Character [E].

He aſcribes to him another good Quality, no leſs valuable than Learning: Namely, that Apollinaris had not That pedantic Stiffneſs, which makes ſome cenſure thoſe magiſterially, who take the Liberty of giving their Opinion in Matters, which, perhaps, they do not thoroughly underſtand. For his Part, He gently admoniſhed People of their Errors. Aulus Gellius gives a remarkable Inſtance of it. For Apollinaris, though he had had ever ſo little of the Pedant, yet might have uſed the ſharpeſt Cenſure on an Occaſion, wherein Aulus Gellius repreſents him as behaving with his uſual Moderation. It was demanded, in his Preſence, who a certain Cato Nepos was, whoſe Name appeared in the Title Page of a Book. A young Scholar took up the Queſtion, and undertook to anſwer it, but was quite miſtaken. It was an Affront to the Profeſſorial Majeſty, for a young Man to pretend to anſwer a Queſtion in the Preſence of a Profeſſor of Grammar, without firſt allowing the Grammarian to give his Opinion; this Pertneſs was unpardonable; however Apollinaris would not ſet the young Man right, 'till he had firſt commended him in the civileſt Manner. "Tum Apollinaris, ut mos ejus in "reprehendendo fuit, placide admodum leniterque, "laudo, inquit, te, mi fili, quod in tantula ætate "etiamſi hunc M Catonem, de quo nunc quæritur, "quis fuerit ignores, auditiuncula tamen quadam de "Catonis familia aſperſus es (11). - - - - Then Apolli- "naris, after his uſual manner of Reproof, with great "Mildneſs and Candor, replied, I commend you, my "Son, that, at theſe tender Years, though you are ig- "norant who This M. Cato is, whom we are now "enquiring after, you yet ſeem to have ſome little "Knowledge of the Family of Cato."

(11) Aul. Gell. lib. 13, cap. 18.

[E] The true Picture of a Pretender to Learning, and the genteel Manner, in which Apollinaris ridiculed one of this Character.] This Pretender boaſted in a Bookſeller's Shop, that he was the only Man alive, who underſtood Salluſt; "For, ſays he, I do "not ſtop at the Bark, or Surface of his Thoughts, "but deſcend to the very Pith and Quinteſſence "of them" Neque primam tantum cutem ac ſpeciem ſententiarum, ſed ſanguinem quoque ipſum ac medullam verborum ejus eruere atque introſpicere penitus prædicaret. Apollinaris, aſſuming the Ironical Manner of Socrates (12), addreſt himſelf to my Gentleman with an Air of Reſpect, and cleſt himſelf, that he had ſo opportunely met with an Oracle, to conſult, on a Paſſage of Salluſt, the Senſe of which he had been asked the Day before, but was not able to give it. He deſired to know, what Difference Salluſt made between Stolidior and Vanior, when he ſaid, Cn. Lentulus - - - - - perincertum ſtolidior an vanior (13). Our Pretender anſwered, with a ſcornful Air, that he might propoſe theſe Trifles to others; and that he did not give himſelf the Trouble to examine things which were univerſally known. By this he plainly diſcovered his Ignorance with regard to the Queſtion propoſed; but, finding himſelf cloſe preſſed, and that the Company began to ſneer at him, he took his Leave, pretending he had Buſineſs elſewhere. Afterwards Apollinaris explained this Paſſage of Salluſt; and ſhewed, that vanus ſignified a Knave, and ſtolidus a Clown. Aulus Gellius's Words deſerve to be repeated; they paint this Scene very juſtly. "Tum ille rictu oris labiarumque ductu contemni "à ſe oſtendens & rem de qua quæreretur, & ho- "minem ipſum qui quæreret; Priſcorum, inquit, & "remotorum ego verborum medullas & ſanguinem, "ſicuti dixi, perſpicere & elicere ſoleo, non illorum "quæ procultata vulgo & protrita ſunt. Ipſo illo "quippe Cn. Lentulo ſtolidior eſt & vanior, qui ig- "norat ejuſdem eſſe vanitatem & ſtoliditatem. - - - - "Then He, drawing his Mouth into a contemptuous "Smile, and pretending to deſpiſe both the Queſtion "and the Perſon, who asked it, replied; I make it "my Buſineſs, as I have already told you, to enquire "into the inmoſt meaning of obſolete and remote Ex- "preſſions, not of Thoſe, which are in every one's "Mouth. He muſt be more fooliſh and empty than "This Cneius Lentulus himſelf, who knows not, that "the ſame Perſon was both fooliſh and empty."

(12) Jactatorem quempiam & venditatorem Salluſtianæ lectionis irriſit illuſitque genere illo facetiſſimæ diſſimulationis, qua Socrates ad Sophiſtas utebatur. Gell. lib. 18, cap. 4.

(13) Salluſtius, Hiſtor. lib. 12.

